Not long ago I received abundant evidence of God's protection and love as revealed to us through the study of Christian Science. One Sunday evening, after the church service, as my wife and I were crossing a main thoroughfare, which was very dark owing to the lighting restrictions now in force, I suddenly realized that a heavy motor-cycle, with side car attached, was bearing down upon us at a rapid rate. I made an effort to push my wife out of the way and the next moment was struck down.

Even while falling I declared aloud that God is Mind, realizing that as Mind is All, matter has no power to harm any of God's children. I attempted to rise, but was again knocked down. The machine came to a standstill, and I was trying to regain my feet once more when I was again bowled over through another machine running into the back of the first one. After this I was able to get up, and a feeling of great rejoicing at once flooded my consciousness, while a voice seemed to whisper, "My presence shall go with thee." I went over to my wife, a few yards away, and found her in the care of some Scientist friends whom we had just left.

There were two doctors near by, and several people in the crowd wanted us to go or be taken to them, but our friends assured them that we did not require doctors, and a few minutes afterward we were able to withdraw quietly and walk home. Although my clothes were covered with mud and both my coats were cut through at the same place, I was practically unhurt, with the exception of three or four bruises and two small cuts. The next morning I was able to go to business as usual, and after the following Wednesday evening service was feeling perfectly well.

When I first heard of Christian Science several years ago, I quickly lost all desire for tobacco and intoxicants, and before I had read twenty-five pages of Science and Health an internal complaint had been healed. For the physical healing one is grateful, but we are taught in Christian Science that it is "the spirit that quickeneth," and I am profoundly thankful for the ever increasing sense of God's presence and power that Christian Science is giving me. Truly does the Bible say, "The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms."

WILLIAM ROSS, Richmond, England.

Deep gratitude impels me to add my testimony to that of my husband. In the above mentioned accident I was rendered unconscious, but with my waking thought I felt that I was surrounded by Truth. The glory and peace of that waking thought was to my sense divine. With the loving help of our Christian Science friends I was able to walk quietly and peacefully home. I asked one of them to give me a treatment, with the result that I had a perfect night's rest. The next day I arose about noon, and at half past two was attending to my duties at the church as usual. After the second day I felt not the slightest sign of anything having happened.

Words but poorly express what we feel for the joy and peace that have come into our lives and home since we have taken up the study of Christian Science, which has indeed revealed to us a God who is Love. As we go on with this glorious study we more fully realize the truth of our Master's words, "Your joy no man taketh from you."

✧ JOSEPHA ROSS.

Never a day passes but thought mounts in gratitude to God, the giver of all good, for the glimpses gained of His love and goodness through Christian Science. The realization that I am not sharing these blessings with others impels me to tell of a wonderful healing experienced some time ago.

One Sunday after the morning service I went to the home of a friend for luncheon, and remained there until late in the afternoon. The return to my own home involved a car ride of about an hour and a change of cars. As I stood on the curb near my friend's house, waiting for the car, I suddenly became conscious of a peculiar and very disagreeable sensation around the body under the arms. After we had boarded the car the difficulty increased so rapidly that I was unable to reply to the question of the friend who was with me as to what was the matter. It required a great effort to make the change of cars, and the suffering and difficulty in breathing became acute. Vivid pictures of the trouble touching the heart, of sudden death, the grief of my family, and so on, were presented.

All this time I had been striving to realize God's love and presence with me, and there was one thing I was able to remember. It was the spiritual interpretation of the first statement of the Lord's Prayer: "Our Father-Mother God, all-harmonious" (Science and Health, p. 16). I clung persistently to this, knowing that if God is the only power, and is all harmonious, then my birthright must be harmony, and I could not be deprived of it. Suddenly the suffering ceased, the crushing sense of oppression lifted, and I was free. I did not gradually grow better, but was wholly well within a few minutes. There was no after effect, no weakness or soreness. I left the car and walked to my home with a sense of joy and deep gratitude to God for Christian Science. I am grateful to be able to say that the healing is permanent and that there has been no return of any of the conditions. This was truly a wonderful healing. Besides this I have been healed of a badly injured ankle, walking in four hours so that those about me knew nothing of the trouble. An alarming internal condition also has disappeared.

Recently, when reading some verses of the old English poet Chaucer, I found the word "soothfastness" (truthfastness), and at once it seemed to name the quality possessed by our beloved Leader. I am deeply, lovingly grateful to her for that truthfastness and what it has done for humanity.

MARION SEATON CALLAHAN, Seattle, Wash.

I would like to express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me. Some time ago my arm became quite useless, causing me much suffering and many sleepless nights. I asked for help in Science from a member of the family, and soon regained the use of the arm. Six months later the trouble appeared again, and this time I determined to do my own Science work, with the result that I was absent only one day from my duties and by the end of a fortnight was quite well.

I have also had much help when taking examinations. I was asked to enter for a difficult examination at rather short notice; but I took on the work. The first two or three days I became discouraged, and the thought presented itself that it was impossible for me to do the work; but on top of this came the true thought that God worked with me to do the will of wisdom, and that as the idea of God I reflected the one intelligence, which does not fail. With this understanding the examination was successfully passed.

Though sometimes things appear to go the wrong way and very little progress is apparent, yet I have had such grand help from Christian Science that I am very thankful to Mrs. Eddy for showing us this truth.

AGNES E. ANDERSON, Melbourne, Australia.

When I first attended a Christian Science meeting about twenty-five years ago, I was very much in need of healing—physically, morally, and spiritually. I called on a practitioner the next day, and treatment was given me. Although I was helped temporarily, there was still much room for improvement; but I realized that I must do my own work and learn to think and live differently. One day the thought presented itself to me that if God is Mind and man is the reflection of that Mind, then I could not be sickly or sinful, because God or Mind is never sick or sinful. This has helped me to know that I must think good instead of bad thoughts, and healthy instead of sickly thoughts, and as a result there has been a marked degree of improvement, so that today I am perfectly well.

For the past two years I have been practically without pain. Recently I was healed through Christian Science treatment of a severe attack of erysipelas, and since this healing I have felt better and stronger than ever before. To say I am grateful for this is the least I can do. I realize that I must ever live it in my daily life.

FRED E. SCHROEDER, Cincinnati, Ohio.

From Our Exchanges

[The Watchman-Examiner]

The general idea of a God somewhere who made the world and turned it over to the operation of its own laws and forces, is proving to give neither safety nor satisfaction. There is a craving for a God who is near at hand and who can care for and help. By the thunders of the cannon, by the horrors of battle fields in France and ruined homes in Belgium, by the crash of falling monarchies, and now by the possibilities of peril and death in our own land, God is calling to men, and they are hearing His voice and listening for His message. That message must not fail them.

If ever there has been need for the clear setting forth of the things of God, the emphatic assertion that these are the really important things, and the urgent and insistent pressing of the divine claims and repetitions of the divine invitation, it is now. So far from diverting the pulpit from its real function or lessening its spiritual appeal, the war and the conditions arising from it should intensify its zeal and give it a new eagerness and zest in proclaiming Jesus Christ as the only hope of a lost world, and it will be inexpressibly sad if the minister—if any minister—shall fail to see this and shall miss the special and peculiar opportunities open to him in these sad and trying days.

[The Methodist Recorder]

There are people who need to remind themselves that Christianity means a good deal more than paying twenty shillings in the pound. We may pride ourselves upon our conscientiousness, forgetting that conscience often needs a tonic. It was in a moment of the clearest insight, when Isaiah saw the glory of God, that he saw himself unclean and undone. And all self-examination, if it is to be in the least effective, must be done in the light of the glory of God as we have seen it in the face of Jesus Christ. "Thy word," said the psalmist, "is a lamp unto my feet." We must measure ourselves, not against our neighbors or our own ideals, but against the word of God and the experience of the saints. The day is coming when what we are will be disentangled from what we seem.

[New-Church Messenger]

When it is clearly understood that Christianity is identified only with the saving work of the Lord—the healing of the nations, the establishment of the new Jerusalem on earth—and never with the work of destruction or law-breaking, then there will be less confusion of thought on this subject. To preserve the good or the rights of humanity, however, it may be necessary to restrain the forces of evil at work in the world. This forcible restraint of evil may be called negative Christian work, or an "evil use." The seeds of true Christianity may be formed in the stress and strain of war, but the fruits of Christianity can appear only in deeds of justice and mercy, and never in the carnage of war. In other words, Christianity is not in killing, but in saving life.

[The Sunday School Times]

"There's a reason" for everything God does. God is not an autocrat who rules His universe with a blind imperialism. This fact is not altered because of men's inability to understand God and His ways. Naaman was not in a class by himself when he undertook to question God's way of curing him of leprosy by decreeing the dip into the muddy waters of the Jordan.

[Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.Litt., in The Christian Commonwealth]

Unless all signs fail, we are on the eve of a new estimate of religion, its history, meaning, and uses; and this reappraisal will show that it is less a thing in itself than a way of living, —a tie that unites diversities, an insight that lights up our tangled human life, an inspiration that exalts while it applies truth to life. There was a time, not so long ago, when those who did not agree as to some dogma or rite refused to walk together. Happily that day is passing, never to return. There is a clearer vision of what the religion of Jesus was in the beginning, and what it is now and evermore,—the read of the loving heart; not a system of dogma, but a spirit in the life. Slowly we are learning that if we use different words, we are really saying the same thing; that when we know each other, and walk together in the way of humility, faith, and prayer, we are united and strengthened with a sense of fraternity; and that the great common interests overshadow conflicting notions and opinions.

[The Congregationalist]

We are entering, in this country, upon a time of storm and stress. If days like these have in them great opportunities for the religious man, they also have great peril. He is confronted by the danger that in "action's storm" he may loose his hold upon the inner world. We shall not emerge from these days as we enter them. When they are ended we shall be either much richer or much poorer in our inner life than we are at present. Our hold upon the world of the spirit cannot remain just what it now is; this proving of our faith will either strengthen that hold or weaken it.

[The Continent]

Let prayer ascend mightily that God shall have His way in the world, and thereunto that it may please Him to accept and guide the sincere intent of those who would dedicate their lives and fortunes only to such toils as serve humanity and perpetuate justice. So shall our sovereign God, all wise and all loving, destroy the wrong and give victory to the right, not according to our estimates of wrong and right, but as He sees both in the light of His eternal wisdom—blessing both Germany and the United States and all nations besides with the fulfilment of His will.

[The Methodist Times]

In our judgment, the first call upon the church of Christ after the war will be the promotion of unity. This governing aim, as we apprehend it, includes three elements: the union of the churches, the fostering of spiritual unity, without which churches cannot come together, and the establishment of complete harmony between the spiritual and the social interests of life. This last has to do with social reconstruction and with the spiritual principles upon which it should rest.

[Rev. James I. Vance in Record of Christian Work]

The Bible, the mercy seat, the cross, and human brotherhood,—these are the dynamic forces by which Christianity operates in the world, and their progress can no more be checked than a sunrise; and where they are in control we see the resurrection and the life!

[The Christian Intelligencer]

War has never been regarded as an ally of the ideal of the brotherhood of man, but we are now witnessing the strange conjunction in that we are undertaking a war born not of passion or selfish ambition, but a war in the interest of Christian idealism.

The United States Supreme Court has ordered to be reargued the antitrust suits against the United States Steel Corporation, the International Harvester, the United Shoe Machinery Company, and the Lehigh Valley and Reading Railroads and their affiliated coal companies. The steel corporation suit was instituted in 1911 in New Jersey, and was dismissed by the district court four years later. The corporation in its brief admitted controlling about 40 per cent of the domestic and about 90 per cent of the American export trade, but defended itself as a "good combination." The suit against the Harvester company was filed in 1912. Its dissolution was asked mainly on the ground of its size and inherent power. It was also the contention of this corporation that it is a "good" combination, but the lower court sustained the Government and ordered dissolution. The suit against the United Shoe Machinery Company was filed in 1911 and the lower court dismissed the petition. The two cases against the Lehigh Valley Railroad and the Reading Railroad charge them with monopolies in anthracite coal along their lines. Both roads are accused not only of violating the Sherman act, but also of violating the commodities clause. In both cases the Government lost virtually all contentions in the lower courts.

A million dollar paper plant, with a capacity of one hundred tons of pulp and paper a day, will be opened at Bogalusa, La., Oct. 1, where waste products of the lumber mills of the Great Southern Lumber Company will be converted into paper products. One paper plant there is already turning out thirty-five tons a day, using as its material small pieces of wood not large enough to make lumber. Of this waste material an average of six cords to the acre is produced. The lumber interests cut fifty acres of lumber each day, giving an average of three hundred cords of waste wood every twenty-four hours. Plans for milling the stumps are also being made, tests having shown pine stumps to be full of valuable products. While the cost of converting the stumps is considered prohibitive, officials of the company have declared that they would be glad to "break even" on the venture, because it would clear the land and do away with the otherwise useless stumps at the same time.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has recently issued a report of over two hundred pages on the Père Marquette Company and the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton Railroad Company. It is clear that the former road has been greatly crippled and the latter practically wrecked by "high finance." At the conclusion of their report the commissioners say: "This sordid tale has been told without adjectives. The facts speak for themselves, and they have been given in all their nakedness, without other comment than such as would serve to tie them to other facts, also of record. . . . Can the like of what has befallen these two roads be made impossible hereafter? Perhaps not entirely, so long as financial circles continue complaisant toward financial exploitations which prove successful. . . . It would, in our opinion, render such exploitation more difficult if the issuance and marketing of all securities of common carriers were subject to Federal regulation."

The Oregon and California land cases recently decided by the United States Supreme Court involved the grant many years ago of some 2,500,000 acres of public land to the Oregon and California Railroad, which passed to the Southern Pacific system. These lands are now valued at about $50,000,000. They were granted by Congress to the company on condition that they might be sold in tracts not exceeding 160 acres each to actual settlers, and at the maximum price of $2.50 an acre. It is alleged that some of the lands were sold at as high a price as $40 an acre and that as much as 45,000 acres went to a single purchaser. Under authority of a resolution by Congress a suit was begun by the Department of Justice, which has now, after a varied course, been finally decided against the railway.

The only source of power which can be used to free Italy from her dependence upon imports of foreign coal is the mechanical energy to be obtained by harnessing streams and torrents and transforming it into electrical energy for transmission to a great part of the country. Some of this work has already been done. French engineers have estimated that Italy could develop 5,000,000 horse-power from its streams and torrents, and some Italian engineers have estimated the total, developed and undeveloped, at 4,000,000. There has already been developed 800,000 horse-power. To replace the energy at present obtained from imported coal used in railways and industries would require about 1,150,000 horse-power.

The Government telephones in Manitoba, Canada, cleared $528,076 over expenses in the fiscal year ended Nov. 30, 1916. There are now 48,000 telephones in the province, or 9.7 per 100 of the population. Winnipeg has seven exchanges, all of which are equipped with the latest devices. The Government owned system is a paying investment for the people, as subscribers are getting telephone service practically at cost. New central office buildings are in course of construction in Brandon, Dauphin, and other points in the province.

The Massachusetts Senate has sustained Governor McCall's veto of the bill to allow the Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission to make an initial expenditure of $50,000 toward preserving localities in the vicinity of Plymouth, Mass., in connection with the celebration in 1920 of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at that place. The Governor said that while the bill in question provides for only an initial expenditure of $50,000 this year, the project calls for the erection of a memorial hall at an estimated cost of $600,000, and this sum, together with other improvements named, including a pageant, would bring the total to $1,884,300. The ultimate cost of the proposition is problematical, he said.

The Government of Chile has adopted measures to encourage the domestic raising of chinchillas. All persons who desire to raise them will be leased Government land and will be permitted to capture animals under the annual authorization of the minister of industries and public works. In September of each year the forest, fish, and game inspection service will take stock of the chinchillas at each establishment, and will certify as to the number of skins that may be exported. Statistics show that two hundred and sixty-seven dozen of these skins were exported from Chile in 1915, valued at $18,819.

The fiber division of the Bureau of Agriculture of the Philippine Government has issued a statement that the campaign carried on by the bureau for some time, for the purpose of inducing the growers to produce a better grade of Manila hemp, has resulted in an increase of considerable importance in all grades of fiber purchased by American manufacturers. A similar improvement has been made in the quality and quantity of maguey fiber.

Drainage projects in Crittenden, Cross, and St. Francis counties in Arkansas have recently been completed, and 55,000 acres of swamp land are made available for farming. The main ditch is ten miles long with sixty miles of laterals, while the total length of the canals is 100 miles. About one fourth of the acreage was originally covered by small lakes. The entire tract is now tillable and offers good home sites.

Cork bark is gathered from various parts of Spain and made into manufactured articles. Under normal conditions 90 per cent of cork goods is exported, and the exports are valued at some $8,000,000 annually. Since the war the industry has suffered greatly, communication with former markets by sea having been interrupted, free transit by Switzerland prohibited, and storage taxes in France high.

Secretary of Commerce Redfield has approved the recommendation of Dr. H. M. Smith, commissioner of fisheries, that the fish hatchery at San Marcos, Texas, be closed on account of the failure of the Texas legislature to enact the necessary laws for the successful operation of the hatchery.

A committee has been appointed by the Argentine Government to prepare a plan for a campaign against the locust pest in that country. Locusts did a very appreciable amount of damage to the cereal crops in certain sections of the republic last season.

The American Society of Peru has been organized at Lima with the object of fostering the friendly and commercial relations existing between the United States and Peru.

The city of Madras, British India, with 518,660 inhabitants, of whom 4100 are Europeans, has 100 miles of macadam road and 200 miles of gravel road.

Data recently published show the area seeded in wheat, barley, oats, and rye in Spain for 1917 to be over seventeen and a half million acres.

This year's Cuban sugar crop will be approximately 2,800,000 tons, according to an official statement issued by the Cuban Government in Havana.

"What I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH" Jesus

Vol. XIX June 16, 1917 No. 42

Undismayed

LOUISE KNIGHT WHEATLEY

WHEN to a waiting nation there came the news that it was actually involved in a situation from which it had so long and earnestly sought to be delivered, to at least one Christian Scientist, and perhaps to many, the first agonizing cry was: "Are our prayers of no avail? Are all these declarations of truth which have been on the lips of unnumbered multitudes during these past months proved impotent? After every mental effort has been made to avoid participation in this world wide struggle, is error to triumph after all?"

In the first place, have our prayers failed? It is true that the answer has not come in the way which most of us perhaps expected,—but is that not usually the case? Prayer which outlines a specific result is not prayer at all, as Christian Science understands it. Suppose we honestly analyze the nature of our past prayers in this connection, and see just what we were really asking. Did we pray that God's will might be done, in His own time and way, that His Word might "enrich the affections of all mankind, and govern them" (Manual, Art. VIII, Sect. 4), or did we just pray for peace? That which is called peace, however, is sometimes only mortal mind's soothing-syrup, lulling us into convenient slumber. Jesus could have had that kind of peace had he desired it, but no one ever roused such turmoil and fury in the carnal mind as did he, simply because no one ever so continually disturbed that false sense of peace which those around him were expressing.

The "nations in commotion" of today are only manifesting that same unrest and perturbance which accompanies an experience, be it with an individual or an aggregation of individuals, when the old is giving place to the new. Because there is a turning and an overturning such as has never before been witnessed in human history, is it necessarily a time to be dismayed? Rather is it not a time to look beyond the material evidences of the passing moment to discern that which all the world will see later on, when the cannon's thunder has ceased and the smoke has cleared away, namely, that Truth is awakening every nation on earth from its long dream of oppression. Are our prayers, then, unanswered? No. The only thing which has failed is our misguided zeal in thinking that our limited, finite view of the situation was sufficiently clear to warrant us in advising the infinite intelligence.

Were Jesus' prayers ever unanswered? Never. That was because he knew how to pray. Even when he hung upon the cross he did not outline his answer; he did not ask to be delivered. Suppose every Christian Scientist on earth today had been there at that time; might they not have prayed just as earnestly that he should not be crucified as we have been praying that there should be no war? Unless they were unusually good Christian Scientists they would probably have done that very thing; yet if those prayers had been answered, Jesus would have failed to make his supreme demonstration.

Mrs. Eddy asks, "Was it just for Jesus to suffer?" To this she answers, "No; but it was inevitable, for not otherwise could he show us the way and the power of Truth" (Science and Health, p. 40). Is it just for millions of human beings to be pitted against one another in deadly combat? No; but there are times when it seems inevitable. There are things more precious than human life, as Jesus proved. If there had been no Calvary, there could have been no resurrection morning. Then let his followers today take courage. Let us see in the conditions with which we are confronted not the sad witness of unanswered prayer, but rather the evidence that the "former things" of John's prophetic vision are already beginning to pass away. Instead of dwelling on the horrors of the present, let us look ahead, with that clear sighted, optimistic faith which Christian Science teaches, to see what the folded wings of the future may be holding for us all.

Already we can rejoice to recall what has been done among our brothers in the great nation so recently delivered from autocracy. In the superheated crucible of the present turmoil there has melted away in a single night that which would ordinarily have been consumed only in the slow process of the centuries. Suppose our prayer for peace had been granted a year ago. It is not impossible that millions of our fellow beings would have settled hopelessly back again into another generation of apathy. Deplorable as the destruction of human life and property may be, that which is called "war" is destroying much more; it is destroying time honored institutions,—injustice, tyranny, despotism, mental domination, and the might which calls itself right. This is not a battle of the nations; it is the world wide Armageddon wherein the false and spurious perish, seethed in the melting-pot of purifying fires.

From the ashes of it all what phœnix may arise no one today can foretell. We can glimpse, however, some of the many changes which must inevitably come when "the tumult and the shouting die." In the first place, it is not unreasonable to hope that the awfulness, the far reaching effect of the present struggle, will so entirely impress the world that all nations shall agree to disarm permanently, thus adding to the world's producers millions of men who in the past have been consumers only. Thus the incredible sums of money expended in their maintenance would go for the betterment rather than for the destruction of mankind.

Then, too, the present experience presents opportunities hitherto unknown for the leveling of caste, the laying aside of old feuds and grievances, the forgetting of past differences of opinion, and the submergence of self-interest, self-aggrandizement, graft, greed, and political chicanery in the desire to be loyal citizens first of all. Labor and capital will find a more common ground, woman will take her rightful place in the world's economics, prohibition will receive an impetus, national resources and industries as yet unknown will be developed by reason of the exigency of the moment, and the pride of mammon will be laid low as rich and poor march side by side.

But best of all and above all is the fact that a world confronted by a problem so vast as this must begin to think as never before. The religion of their fathers is thought good enough for most people in times of sunshine; but when the rains descend and the floods come and beat upon the house, —the consciousness,—that is the real testing time. If it is built upon a rock, upon Truth, it stands; but if it rests merely upon theory, tradition, ecclesiasticism, dogma, blind belief, ignorance, or superstition, it will crumble into dust at our feet. There is a new religion springing up in the trenches,—call it by whatever name you please. Men are asking of their own hearts questions which will no longer be silenced by the old evasive answer, "It is not for us to know." In times of stress the heart is no longer satisfied to accept the eastern poet's dull philosophy that it is enough because "He knows about it all,—He knows!—He knows!" We as God's children have a right to know also; and under such conditions thought is attuned as never before to hear the "still small voice" of Truth bringing the answer to our questioning. In the midnight hush before the morning's fray many a man has found beneath alien skies the God whom he had failed to find at home, the God who had been near him all the time,—just waiting.

Is not all this worth while? Is there, indeed, anything in the world which can be compared to finding God, a God not "received by tradition from your fathers," but one whom we may know and love and understand, a God who is working out His own wise purposes in His own wise way? Then let us not be dismayed, even in the very presence of the worst that mortal mind can do. Let us read in the signs of the times a prophecy of better things to come. Let us watch with hope and courage for the dawn. The day-star will surely arise upon that longed for morning when universal and permanent peace shall reign, not because the nations of the earth are slumbering in stupefying self-satisfaction, but because they are at last awake.

Church-going

GUSTAVUS S. PAINE

CHURCH-GOING from a metaphysical standpoint is much more than mere attendance at some form of public worship. On page 583 of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy has pointed out that "church" is "the structure of Truth and Love; whatever rests upon and proceeds from divine Principle." True church-going, therefore, must be a whole-hearted turning to that which spiritually manifests divine Principle. In other words, daily and hourly activity in accordance with Principle may be said to be practical church-going.

The real man in the image and likeness of God is of course always acting in accordance with Principle and thus experiencing the unlimited blessing of membership in the true church. The human counterfeit, otherwise known as mortal man, needs however to turn away from so-called material causes and impulses to the one true cause, God, and His qualities. In proportion as this turning goes on sincerely, human imperfections necessarily give way before the actuality of the divine nature. Thus each one may prove for himself that genuine church-going does redeem and heal.

Among the infinite qualities proceeding from Principle and therefore constituting the true church are activity, order, strength, sureness, and rejoicing. Divine intelligence is conscious only of these and other right qualities. It is demonstrable that this divine consciousness is, that man expresses this consciousness now, and that it includes no negative element, no element of destruction; hence as human thought recognizes this divine consciousness and its expression, God and real man, the fear, weakness, inactivity or overactivity, disorder, and pain—all destructive elements—of the hypothetical mortal consciousness fade away in the presence of the activity, order, strength, sureness, and rejoicing of the divine reality. In this way human thought may go to the true church daily. The wholeness of the orderly activity of the divine consciousness is indeed health. That is why the daily turning in thought to the right concept of church, or in other words ceaseless prayer, is healing. In so far as one is serving Principle in his every activity and thus evincing constantly the qualities of the true church, he is proving that going to church metaphysically is the one way of busying one's self which is really worth while.

Just as the sentence already quoted from Science and Health gives the absolute metaphysical idea of church, so Mrs. Eddy's next sentence on the same page brings out the highest human concept of that idea. She says, "The church is that institution, which affords proof of its utility and is found elevating the race, rousing the dormant understanding from material beliefs to the apprehension of spiritual ideas and the demonstration of divine Science, thereby casting out devils, or error, and healing the sick."

Spiritual church-going day by day and hour by hour is the best possible preparation for attendance at church services on Sundays and Wednesdays. Since the Christian Science church service is the exemplification of just such preparation, it actually serves both God and man. The proof of the utility of the Christian Science church is that it is healing the sick, whether physically, morally, financially, or mentally, by turning the thought of both its regular attendants and those who casually wander for the first time into its services toward the completeness of divine Principle.

The Christian Science church service is simply a means for giving out the truth. Its purpose, like that of the various other means which Mrs. Eddy established, is to give to the stranger and the Christian Scientist alike a clearer and more practical conception of God and His image and likeness. It succeeds in this purpose just in proportion as those in attendance go to give rather than merely to get. If all, including those conducting what are called the services, were to go to church just to get something, what would there be to get? When, on the other hand, all go to give of their intelligent appreciation of Principle, the blessing for all is boundless. In other words, the Christian Science service requires intelligent listening as well as intelligent reading, speaking, and singing. Even the truth read from the Bible and the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, would not be enough alone for a service without intelligent attention given to that truth.

But how, it may be asked, is the novice to know how to listen intelligently? How is one to know how to think rightly before and at and after a Christian Science service? The answer is that as we sincerely go to church to serve God and not to hear some one read or speak or sing, divine intelligence shows us how to think. It is possible for one at the very start of his interest in Christian Science to know that he is going to church to listen to the voice of God rather than to see or hear human personality. It is also possible for such a one to know that the word of God expressed is whole and therefore healing.

The very attempt to know the spiritual wholeness or unity of the church service is prayer; and the recognition that this wholeness is for the healing of all who turn their thought in that direction is prayer for the congregation. This mental giving is indeed simple, requiring only unselfish alertness in church-going. It is the reason for the radiant happiness of the sincere church-goer in Christian Science and for the practical value of regular attendance at the Christian Science church services. The constant replacing of the limited personal sense of service with the genuine expression of that infinite Life which is God, is spiritual giving, and should constitute our thinking always.

Only unselfed love can make it true of the church-goers in Christian Science that, in the words of the elder in Revelation, "these are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."

A Distinction

CHARLES F. HACKETT

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE makes a distinction between evil and the knowledge of evil which is of much importance in the solving of human problems. In the second chapter of Genesis it was not a tree of good and evil whose fruit was forbidden, but "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." In commenting on the text just quoted Mrs. Eddy says, "It was not against evil, but against knowing evil, that God forewarned" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 367).

The reason for making this distinction becomes clear in the light of the teaching of Christian Science, which shows that God, good, is All-in-all, having all power, presence, and knowledge; whence it necessarily follows that evil is without entity or existence, and is therefore nothing. The only way to destroy evil is on this basis,—the basis of its nothingness. To admit that evil is unreal or false is to admit all there is of it. Because evil seems to be real and present in human experience, it is a great help to know that it is false and unreal; but this alone does not destroy it. Because God, good, is All, however, and evil is nothing, it is the so-called knowledge of evil, or the belief in evil, which must be destroyed. This is not a distinction without a difference, for it is one of the essential differences between Christian Science and other systems of healing and reform. It might even be said that it marks the difference between the successful and the unsuccessful effort to demonstrate the truth.

Having accepted the scientific fact of the allness and all-inclusiveness of God, good, and the consequent nothingness of evil, how is the seeming presence of evil in human thought to be destroyed? In other words, how are we to stop knowing evil, when it seems so interwoven with good in our thought processes and is made so apparent through the five bodily senses? Through the study of the Science of being—the earnest and prayerful effort to know the true nature of God and man—spiritual sense is quickened, and spiritual ideas, which are in the nature of revelations, begin to unfold. These revelations, separating as they do good from evil in human thought, lead to affirmations and denials with respect to particular conditions, in the effort to hold fast that which is good and to reject that which is false. It needs to be clearly seen that these affirmations and denials are necessary only because of our imperfect knowledge, and that they are needed to bring thought into harmony with Truth.

There has been more or less discussion as to the relative importance of affirmation and denial, some laying emphasis on one and some on the other. There may be grave danger of making a reality of evil to human sense by sheer denial of error, and on the other hand there may be just as grave a danger of overlooking error through sheer assertion of truth. When we come to realize, however, that both affirmation and denial follow spiritual perception, perplexity on this point vanishes, and we see the great importance of studying the Science of being apart from its application to particular human problems, in order that the subsequent applications may be effective.

On page 259 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "The Christlike understanding of scientific being and divine healing includes a perfect Principle and idea,—perfect God and perfect man,—as the basis of thought and demonstration." How can we think and demonstrate truth without giving earnest heed to its basis? The unfolding of spiritual ideas brings a sense of dominion, enabling one to speak (affirm and deny) with authority. The spiritualization of thought which follows this scientific activity means less material thinking, less knowing of evil, less of fear, hate, confusion, and suffering, and more true knowing, more love, health, and harmony.

The capacity to discern error in our own thought and in the thought of others, as well as the power to destroy it, is increased by this effort not to know evil. This may seem paradoxical, but the purer one's thought, the more one habitually strives to know good only, the more acute that one becomes in detecting and rejecting false beliefs and suggestions. A mar or defacement stands out clearly on a clean white surface. The most subtle phases of intentional and unintentional evil cannot hide from the purified consciousness. This scientific correction of thought, with the consequent destruction of the knowledge of evil, will go on until man in God's image is fully revealed. Then there will be no need of argument, no need of assertions and denials, for true consciousness will be found to be self-evident and self-existent good. Then for each of us the Bible prophecy will be fulfilled, "Thou shalt not see evil any more."

"Let the nations be glad and sing for joy"

DAISETTE D. S. MC KENZIE

WITHIN the last few weeks the great curtain of the world's stage has risen upon a scene so thrilling that it may be said to have few rivals in history. Perhaps no people as a class are more grateful than are Christian Scientists to behold its enactment, because they feel and know its spiritual promise for mankind.

At last the two great English speaking peoples of the earth stand heart to heart and hand in hand. In her prophetic poem entitled "The United States to Great Britain" (Poems, p. 10), Mrs. Eddy has spoken of this union as the bridal "betokened from above." It is the beginning of the federation of the world, the opening chord of an unending symphony. No earnest man or woman can read with undimmed eyes the record of the deeply impressive service held in the historic St. Paul's Cathedral in London, when England solemnized this union of hearts. The official heads of the nation and a vast concourse of her people, with representatives from many other countries, filled the cathedral to its farthest recesses. The singing of the hymns by thousands of voices, supported by the choir, by the great organ, by trumpets and drums, and filled with the spirit of the hour, was said to be unforgettable.

The hymn which begins,—

> O God, our help in ages past,
> Our hope for years to come,

the national anthems of the two countries, the "Battle Hymn of the Republic,"—all rose from thousands of voices in solemn praise, and then before the benediction was pronounced a hymn was sung whose appropriateness bore the mark of inspiration in its choice. The earnest lines breathe the longing for the brotherhood of man which was in every heart on this occasion:—

Through the night of doubt and sorrow
Onward moves our pilgrim band,
Singing songs of expectation,
Marching to the promised land.
Clear before us through the darkness
Gleams and burns our guiding light:
Brother clasps the hand of brother,
Stepping fearless through the night.

On page 575 of Science and Health our beloved Leader, in describing the holy city, says: "It is indeed a city of the Spirit, fair, royal, and square. Northward, its gates open to the North Star, the Word, the polar magnet of Revelation; eastward, to the star seen by the Wisemen of the Orient, who followed it to the manger of Jesus; southward, to the genial tropics, with the Southern Cross in the skies,—the Cross of Calvary, which binds human society into solemn union; westward, to the grand realization of the Golden Shore of Love and the Peaceful Sea of Harmony."

The wonderful meaning here given to the Cross of Calvary, as binding "human society into solemn union," will fill our hearts with joy and humility as we join with the whole world in the closing stanza of the hymn:—

Onward therefore, pilgrim brothers!
Forward, with the cross our aid!
Bear its shame, and fight its battle,
Till we rest beneath its shade!
Soon shall come the great awaking;
Soon the rending of the tomb;
Then, the scattering of all shadows,
And the end of toil and gloom!

"As the dew"

JOY E. R. ZINT

WHAT more adequate simile could be used to express the invigorating, refreshing effect of the consciousness of God's presence with His people, than the assurance given through Hosea, "I will be as the dew unto Israel." It is one of the many promises of which mankind is beholding the fulfilment in this age in the health giving, joy reviving influence of Christian Science.

Metaphysically speaking, we may say that like the flowers in our gardens our heads are sometimes drooping and our hearts are weary because the slothful south wind has lulled us into inactivity. Perhaps we have lapsed into a state of mental lethargy; or the sharp east wind of criticism has cut and lashed us till thought is filled with self-pity; or possibly a cold north wind of condemnation has chilled us into believing that we are shut out from the sunshine of divine Love. Under all these circumstances it were well to recall Hosea's promise. On the other hand, it may have been the wind of waywardness and self-will which has urged us into unrighteous zeal; but from whatever direction the tendency has come, however blistering has been the heat of the day, in the quiet of evening comes the dew of the divine presence and we are refreshed. The gardens tended by Love are gladdened.

In the Glossary of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy thus defines evening: "Mistiness of mortal thought; weariness of mortal mind; obscured views; peace and rest" (p. 586). In physical nature the evening must be clear and still in order that the dew may form on the blossom; so, metaphysically considered, if the winds of error are blowing about clouds of discontent or discouragement, no dew will form. The dew does not rise, it does not fall, but it is made manifest, just as the abiding presence of God is never withdrawn; yet as mortals we must become conscious of His presence in manifest health and happiness.

In the garden of thought the beds must be made straight and true, and only unmixed seed be planted. Then if in time of drought another worker generously waters some of our sowing, we can joyfully say with Paul, "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." There must also be joy in our work, as well as patience and love. There should be no self-condemnation because some seeds sprout more slowly than others; though some products of our gardens ripen so quickly that there is time for several crops from the same soil in one season, others require all summer and until late fall to come to maturity.

Aside from the more pleasurable task of planting, we are confronted by the constant need for uprooting the weeds of mortal belief,—the malice, envy, and strife,—for without this process the seedlings of truth may be smothered for lack of light and room for development. Our Master said, "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up," and in this rooting up process we need to remember that the task must begin now, and that it must be accepted lovingly. It often seems easier to turn another's thought to Truth than to be loving and patient in working out our own salvation. It is no more Christianly scientific for us to depreciate our ability to think aright or to do whatever service God calls us to do (which ability is ours only by reflection of divine intelligence), than it is to believe that we are independent workers or creators.

Long ago the angel Gabriel assured the virgin mother that "with God nothing shall be impossible." The first requisite on our part is that all our accomplishment shall be for the glory of God, and not for the exaltation of self. The consistent effort to "do all to the glory of God" brings vigor, humility, and gladness into daily living, and if our efforts seem to cause us to suffer "for righteousness' sake," we can rejoice in our Master's assurance, "Blessed art thou," and find comfort in our Leader's gentle benediction, found on page 291 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "The dew of heaven will fall gently on the hearts and lives of all who are found worthy to suffer for righteousness,—and have taught the truth which is energizing, refreshing, and consecrating mankind."

"The recipe for beauty"

FLORENCE DAVIS KELLER

"THE recipe for beauty," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 247 of Science and Health, "is to have less illusion and more Soul, to retreat from the belief of pain or pleasure in the body into the unchanging calm and glorious freedom of spiritual harmony."

The question What is beauty? like Pilate's question of olden time, has aroused much comment and controversy among those who in reasoning from the basis of the carnal mind, or mind in matter, think of beauty as a material quality. From the artist's point of view a descriptive definition of beauty that has any approach to completeness would not only give the conditions which an object would have to satisfy in order to express beauty, but would have to make clear how, why, and whence came beauty into being. In other words, an answer to the question must give an explanation of the qualities of beauty as well as its reason for being.

It is generally understood that the appreciation of beauty is a perception of certain qualities, and one writer has said that we may search the whole world over to find the beautiful, but except we carry it with us we shall not find it. It is seen, then, that the definition of beauty as well as the definition of truth, must be sought in the realm of metaphysics; for to regard the quality of beauty as belonging to a material object is a survival of the primitive tendency to look for the quality of intelligence in non-intelligent matter.

Digitized by Google

By consulting different authorities it is found that beauty —that is to say, the human sense of beauty—consists in symmetry, in order, in proportion, in harmony, in unified variety, in the relation of the whole to the parts, in fitness for a purpose, in perfection, in truth. Then it is evident that beauty must express an idea or be a manifestation of thought; it must give out a message, and must therefore depend for its being upon the idea which it expresses. Our Leader in defining beauty in all its reality says, "It is Love which paints the petal with myriad hues, glances in the warm sunbeam, arches the cloud with the bow of beauty, blazons the night with starry gems, and covers earth with loveliness" (Science and Health, p. 247).

To be serviceable in the work of redeeming mankind from sin and suffering, beauty must be an expression or message of infinite good, a symbol of purity and harmony, ever indicating the all governing Principle, Love. It should typify holiness, or wholeness, oneness with God, the source of all spiritual harmony.

As a manifestation of good, beauty is radiant with life, positive with truth, redolent with love, and such must be the beauty sung by the psalmist, who said, "Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness." What is the "beauty of holiness" but life replete with a satisfying knowledge of divine Love, overcoming evil with good and finding manifestation in the graces of Spirit? With the unfolding understanding of truth comes the apprehension and appreciation of beauty and the ability to express it.

Even as the artist seeks the model which will best aid him in delineating his ideals, then works perseveringly to express his inspiration in a form suitable to convey his message, so must the student of Christian Science discern his spiritual model, the Christ-idea, and study it continually until it shall find expression in God's own way. Thoughts of love, faith, hope, meekness, goodness, gentleness, childlike trust in the Father, honesty, uprightness,—all these reflect health and beauty on the body, while their opposites, which are always negative and self-destructive, delineate discord and sickness.

That the Christian Science "recipe for beauty" is practical and available, unnumbered thousands give grateful testimony, while loving hearts, wholesome activity, and happy faces attest to a glimpse of that "unchanging calm and glorious freedom." What painting, what wondrous tapestry, what sculptured story can compare with the beauty of a life redeemed from suffering or sin! As the truth is lovingly presented, fear and anxiety give place to confidence and trust. A revelation of the joys of Soul changes sorrow into rejoicing; dull despair disappears in the light of hope; and morbid stagnation is vanquished by the health giving activity of right thinking. Under divine influence slavery to false appetites is overcome by conscious dominion, and a belief in decrepitude is changed to expectation of progressive growth in spiritual understanding.

Thus every wrong condition finds the right thought or savior in the truth of Christian Science, interpreting and portraying the saying of Job, "Yet in my flesh shall I see God." This retreat from the beliefs of the flesh to the facts of Spirit, healing all discord, proclaims God's ways in the "beauty of holiness," as humanity discerns through unfoldment the wondrous beauty of God's spiritual and harmonious creation.

Selected Articles

[Samuel Greenwood in The Colonist, Victoria, British Columbia]

A writer in The Colonist approves the classification of Christian Science as a "false religion," on the ground that it, among other religions, regards works instead of belief as the all important thing in one's religion. Your correspondent surely does not wish to take the position implied in her quoted article, that if a man believes in a particular creed or doctrine it makes no difference what his acts are. Such a theory would certainly please the sensual nature of mortals, but it could never uplift the human race or give a man the moral strength to overcome sinful temptation.

The fact is, that however much you theorize, you cannot dissociate a man's honest belief from its effect upon his life; for what one accepts as actually true will naturally and necessarily influence and decide his acts. This was enunciated by St. Paul with inexorable logic when he declared, in substance, that his faith was made evident in his works, which implies, conversely, that if one's works do not give evidence of faith in God, the faith is not there. For example, one who has faith in the multiplication table will make use of it, whereas one who has no faith in it will leave it alone. In like manner, if a man has faith that Christ Jesus taught the truth, he will, if he loves that truth, obey it; and there you have the faith and works that are and always will be inseparable.

The assumption that a man's works do not count so long as he acknowledges a belief in Christ, is directly at variance with our Lord's teachings, in which he repeatedly states what Christians should do; for instance, in the Sermon on the Mount. Had all Christendom performed the works therein enjoined, the world would not now be witnessing the spectacle of so-called Christian nations engaged in slaughtering each other and plunging humanity into such unspeakable misery.

On the connection between belief and works, the Master himself went so far as to say, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." And if further confirmation were needed, it may be found in his scathing denouncement of a purely theoretical belief, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Your correspondent should tread lightly in calling another person's religion false, and least of all on the astonishing pretext that it calls for consistency between belief and conduct as essential to a true Christian life. St. John with delightful simplicity and finality sweeps away all doctrinal or creedal distinctions between human beings in their individual relation to God, when he says, "Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous."

[W. Stuart Booth in Trinidad (Col.) Picketwire]

All Christian believers must admit that Jesus did his works in accordance with and because of the will or law of God, "with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." It must inevitably follow, then, that God's will or law is unchanging, and obedience to this law will produce the works today that were wrought by Jesus and his followers in the early Christian era, even as he promised, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."

The claim recently made by a Trinidad clergyman, that the power of healing by prayer has been given to but a select few, is refuted both by the Scriptures and by secular history. The Bible statement that "God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him," was verified by the Christians in Rome and elsewhere, who, according to Gibbon, healed the sick and even raised the dead by prayer. This continued until the time of Constantine, through whose influence the Christian church became darkened spiritually by allowing dogmas to displace deeds and material ritual to take precedence over spiritual righteousness. From that time until 1866, when Mrs. Eddy discovered Christian Science, but comparatively few instances of healing by prayer are recorded. One such was Wesley, the founder of Methodism, whose faith in Spirit resulted in his healing without the use of any material agency.

The statement that Christian Science healing is merely the action of human will or suggestion reveals an utter lack of understanding of Christian Science teaching and practice. On page 206 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes: "Will-power is capable of all evil. It can never heal the sick, for it is the prayer of the unrighteous; while the exercise of the sentiments—hope, faith, love—is the prayer of the righteous. This prayer, governed by Science instead of the senses, heals the sick." Jesus demonstrated that the divine law which healed sickness operated simultaneously to destroy sin, and Christian Science, being the reinstatement of primitive Christianity, is manifested not only in the healing of disease but more especially in its reforming, uplifting, and spiritualizing influence in the lives of its adherents.

[George R. Lowe in The Chatham (Ontario) News]

The gentleman who presented a paper on Christian Science before the Chatham Ministerial Association recently, reckoned without his host. Christian Science is based on the fact that there is a demonstrable Principle of healing, as manifested by the words of Christ Jesus, who said: "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise."

Christian Science recognizes God as the Father, whose personality is infinite, and there is none besides Him. Man is the spiritual likeness of this infinite Mind, therefore man's individuality is spiritual. St. Paul wrote, "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God." Righteousness being real, its opposite must be unreal, though seeming to be real to the mistaken human sense which indulges it. Sin, sickness, and death are not creations of God, who pronounced good all that He made. They are not in divine Mind, and we are enjoined to have the Mind of Christ. In the measure in which we accept the divine Mind as the only Mind, we put off the carnal mind with its sickness and sin.

[George C. Eames in Portland (Maine) Sunday Press]

In the report of the mothers' meeting at the Exposition Building, the statement is credited to the evangelist that "Eddyism is atheism." If by this he means that Christian Science is atheism, then it would appear that he has gained a knowledge of its teachings from some other source than the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, for from beginning to end this book unfolds to the reader "the one Supreme Being, self-existent and eternal," as the Standard dictionary defines God. Those who have formerly been members of other churches, testify that in Christian Science they have found what their ministers had failed to give them,—an understanding of God that is proving "a very present help in trouble." One of the tenets subscribed to by every one who unites with the Christian Science church is: "We acknowledge and adore one supreme and infinite God. We acknowledge His Son, one Christ; the Holy Ghost or divine Comforter; and man in God's image and likeness" (Science and Health, p. 497).

The evangelist also states that Christian Science depersonalizes God. If he had studied the above mentioned text-book, he would have found on page 116 the following statement: "If the term personality, as applied to God, means infinite personality, then God is infinite Person,—in the sense of infinite personality, but not in the lower sense. An infinite Mind in a finite form is an absolute impossibility." As there is but one God, there can be but one infinite Person. It will be seen that instead of depersonalizing God, Christian Science attributes to Him a higher sense of personality than does scholastic theology, which in holding the theory of three persons in one, cannot conceive of them as infinite. There cannot be three infinites.

[Frederick R. Rhodes in Todmorden (England) Advertiser]

Our critic stated that "our Lord expected other people would be able to do what he did." That is just what all true students of Christian Science are earnestly trying to learn to do, and it would seem rather doubtful criticism to upbraid the followers of the great Physician and Wayshower for not adopting medical remedies when their Teacher never administered any remedy but the power of ever present Truth and Love. Christian Science does not teach that all medical practice is "perfectly useless," but recognizes that in ordinary experience humanity owes a deep debt of gratitude to this practice for the loving ministrations and physical comforts given through its means.

Physical relief is, however, the sole object of medical treatment; and as our critic states that "many of the doctors who were doing this were men who were not religious themselves, and did not profess to treat people religiously at all," the healing was not in accord with that of Jesus, who on several occasions told his patients to "sin no more," showing that the real sense of healing must be the result of a purification of thought, and not merely the removal of a physical manifestation. Christian Science, therefore, recognizes medical treatment from a purely material standpoint, while seeing the absolute impossibility of trying to mix it with metaphysical or real spiritual healing, which is Christian Science. On page 89 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says: "When patients are under material medical treatment, it is advisable in most cases that Scientists do not treat them, or interfere with materia medica."

If we accept the critic's statement that the "doctors had lately been pointing out that the emotions of the mind do affect the body," and we define emotion as "feeling of joy, grief, fear, hate, love, and so on," then logically we can come into possession of real harmony only as we exchange our sense of mind for that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," which in turn determines our real feelings, or consciousness of existence.

[Lloyd B. Coate in Zanesville (Ohio) Signal]

An evangelist is reported as saying, "There is only one class of people that deny sin is here—the Christian Scientists." Christian Science teaches that sin is not of God, and therefore has no right to be classified as real; nor does it express the nature and character of God, and for this reason should be denied and cast out of consciousness. Christian Scientists classify as real all that God creates, and as unreal all that seems to mortal sense to exist, yet is the very opposite of that Mind which was manifest in Christ Jesus. The man who does wrong and indulges in sin is being deceived, for sin is a delusion, being the opposite of infinite good. Faith in the reality of evil and sin will not save us. Jesus came to teach mankind to have faith in God, and that it is through the power of infinite good that he is to be saved.

Christian Scientists do not ignore the claim of sin and sickness, but deal with it in a Christianly scientific manner, as Jesus dealt with it. (See Science and Health, p. 460.) The sinner can receive no encouragement in Christian Science for wrong doing. Christian Science most emphatically teaches that so long as sin continues, suffering will continue. The sinner must repent, and turn away from the belief that sin is a reality and confers a pleasure. He must handle it as Jesus did,—as a lie and a liar,—and no longer be deceived by it, but find refuge in God, infinite good. (Note Science and Health, p. 339.)

This critic also makes the assertion that Mrs. Eddy's teaching does away with the atonement. In her text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy devotes a chapter of thirty-eight pages to this question. On page 18 she says: "Atonement is the exemplification of man's unity with God, whereby man reflects divine Truth, Life, and Love. Jesus of Nazareth taught and demonstrated man's oneness with the Father, and for this we owe him endless homage. . . . The atonement of Christ reconciles man to God, not God to man."

[John L. Rendall in Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Republican]

Those who best know what Christian Science teaches are convinced that it is essentially Christian in its premise, its practice, and its ultimate results. It is accomplishing so much by way of good for humanity that it ill becomes those who profess to be interested in the uplift of humanity to antagonize, belittle, or disparage its teachings.

What is needed today is less theorizing and more by way of practical demonstration of the good which has always been possible through the religion taught by Christ Jesus. The Christian Scientist is too busy in his efforts to work out his own salvation—and to the extent of his ability to help his fellow man—to spend any time in denouncing the religious viewpoint of another.

[Robert S. Ross in Auburn (N. Y.) Advertiser-Journal]

A local evangelist is credited with the following statement: "The Christian Scientist and the Unitarian rob Jesus Christ of his deity, and hence man is robbed of the possibility of salvation." If Jesus believed himself to be God, he must have indicated it in his teaching. It would therefore be interesting to have the critic point out a single passage in the gospels to warrant the commonly accepted view that Jesus was Deity.

That Jesus did not believe himself to be God is indicated by his own words. At times he referred to God as his Father, and to himself as the Son. At the feast of dedication in Jerusalem certain of the Jews sought to stone him. When Jesus asked for what cause, they cried: "For blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God." Answering them, Jesus did not deny that he was a man, but he did deny that he was God, in the words, "I said, I am the Son of God."

Jesus' sayings indicated that it was the birthright of every man to stand in the same relation to God in which he stood, for he referred to others as the sons or children of God, and assured his followers that where he was, they might be also, by living the Christ-life and becoming at-one with God. The spiritual origin of Jesus gave him a clearer understanding of the Christ than that possessed by other men, but he gave God, not himself, credit for the works that he did, indicating that his demonstrations were the result of the operation of spiritual law based on divine Principle, which he understood.

"Jesus of Nazareth," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 313 of Science and Health, "was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe." She has pointed out very clearly that what Jesus did all men can do, in the degree that they let that Mind be in them that was in him. The belief that Jesus is God leads mortals to worship his personality; but the understanding that he is "the way" whereby Christ, Truth, may be understood and demonstrated, awakens them to the necessity of following his mighty example. "He that believeth on me" (understands my teachings), said Jesus, "the works that I do shall he do also."

[Thorwald Siegfried in Friday Harbor (Wash.) Journal]

The chief error which our critic's letter reveals is a consistent failure to distinguish between cleanliness and medicine. Cleanliness which is not satisfied with merely washing the outside of the platter, but which insists as well on cleanliness of thought and motive, is doing much for the health of the world; and Christian Scientists, whose prime activity includes the promotion of that cleanliness, do not use medicine at all. If we were wholly clean we would be both healthy and holy, and the inefficiency of medicine to make us healthy is revealed in the fact that it does not pretend to make us holy. No drug has yet been devised that is capable of removing or is designed to remove from the human mind lusts and fears, from which all diseases are generated, and it is a safe statement that no such drug will ever be discovered, because matter is incapable of producing any permanent effect upon the human mind, to which it owes its very existence.

[Gustavus S. Paine in Reno (Nev.) Gazette]

I should like to state for the benefit of readers of the Gazette that no true Christian Scientist tries to force his religion upon any one, not even upon members of his own family. Mrs. Eddy teaches on page 5 of "Unity of Good," "Let us respect the rights of conscience and the liberty of the sons of God, so letting our 'moderation be known to all men.'" Thus, though a Christian Scientist's religion is indeed his whole life just in so far as he expresses divine intelligence in his every activity, genuine living in accordance with Christian Science is ever kindly, sane, tolerant of the differing points of view of others, and includes no element of fanaticism. The very basis of Christian Science is that intelligence governs.

Readers in Branch Churches

A QUESTION having arisen in some branch churches in regard to the eligibility for reelection to the office of reader of persons who have served for three years in that office, and this question having been referred to The Christian Science Board of Directors for decision, they make the following statement, to wit:—

There is no by-law of The Mother Church which regulates the tenure of office or the eligibility for reelection of readers in the branch churches, but as our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, in the articles "Words for the Wise" and "Afterglow" (Miscellany, p. 250), has spoken definitely on this subject, there should be no difficulty in deciding what is the best course to be pursued in such matters. It seems clear to us that the intent of these articles was to recommend that no person should fill the office of reader longer than three years. It also seems clear to us that the election as either first or second reader (even after an interval) of one who has served as reader for a total period of three years or more, would not be in keeping with the spirit of this recommendation.

A Double Deliverance

THERE is scarcely a Wednesday evening meeting held in a Christian Science church but that one or more persons who have been healed of diseases which to mortal sense are considered extremely dangerous, make the statement that, great as is their gratitude for the physical healing which they experienced, they are still more grateful for the spiritual uplift which accompanied their healing from sickness. To the person who believes that Christian Science is merely a variant of the old style family doctor, and that its only purpose is the curing of aches and pains, this is doubtless an incomprehensible statement. If he has come to the meeting solely through a desire to know whether Christian Science can heal him of his physical sufferings, he may even think that he is being trifled with when something quite apart from ordinary experience is put above freedom from pain.

To such a one sickness seems very real and very burdensome, and he has probably been taught that to regain his health is the one important thing; that almost any sacrifice he might make would not be too great a price to pay for the boon of surcease from pain and anguish. Even if this sacrifice should involve selfishness and possibly sin,—though of course he would be loath to admit this latter statement,—in the desperation which accompanies great physical distress even the outwardly and intentionally good are sometimes unconsciously influenced to cut a sharp corner. "Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life," was evil's claim when it sought the overthrow of "a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil;" and many a good man and woman today might succumb under the stress to which Job was subjected, though it is to be remembered that despite his manifold afflictions "in all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly."

Later on, if this person is healed in Christian Science, he too finds that the healing of sin and sickness is a coordinate process, and that "man's genuine selfhood is recognizable only in what is good and true" (Science and Health, p. 294). He then realizes that to secure and maintain good health he must also maintain good morals, and that only through the understanding of God which he has acquired in Christian Science, and the practice of its rules, can he be sure of maintaining the sound morals and righteousness which will keep him in health and holiness. In other words, it is necessary for a man to be guided by divine Principle in all his affairs, if he would be "every whit whole,"—if he would reach the perfection of living.

Were Christian Scientists to express gratitude only for the healing of sickness, they would leave much of the good work of this religion without acknowledgment, because they would fail to impress upon their hearers the all important fact that "Jesus healed sickness and sin by one and the same metaphysical process" (Science and Health, p. 210), and that Christian Science is doing the same work in the same way. The distinguishing feature of Christian Science is that it heals both sickness and sin, not by material means,—not by drugs, surgery, or suggestion,—but by the understanding of God which posits Him as the creator of that only which is good and pure and holy. To have learned that both sickness and sin are not real because not consistent with God and His creation is to have learned a great fundamental truth,—the secret of perfect and sinless being; and to the extent that Christian Scientists have learned this they are justified in bearing testimony to the spiritual and uplifting effects of Christian Science.

Mrs. Eddy writes on page 46 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "The leading self-evident proposition of Christian Science is: good being real, evil, good's opposite, is unreal. This truism needs only to be tested scientifically to be found true, and adapted to destroy the appearance of evil to an extent beyond the power of any doctrine previously entertained." Because Christian Scientists have tested scientifically the spiritually regenerating power of Christian Science, they can truthfully say that their chief gratitude is for this phase of its work.

Sure Sustenance

THE questions asked in Jesus' day, "What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" are being much repeated at the present time; but it is doubtful whether there is any more reason for anxiety in this direction today than there has been for the last hundred years. Christ Jesus did not promise the world of his time any better material conditions in order to allay their fears, but he did say that if they made the kingdom of God and His righteousness their first consideration, all their human needs would be supplied; and unnumbered thousands who have learned through Christian Science to apply his teachings, have proved this statement true.

Less than fifty years ago great fear was expressed that in the course of a few years all the known material sources of light would be exhausted,—the whale which supplied oil, and other creatures as well,—and then the discovery that oil could be taken from "the flinty rock" served in some measure to allay the fears for this one thing. Soon, however, there were plenty of alarmists to say that the supply of this oil was very limited and would soon be exhausted, also the coal which provided both light and heat; but even in this respect many surprises have come to mankind, until now it is not thought very wise or far sighted to predict the exhaustion of anything which we need. The student of Christian Science knows, however, that material things at best are limited, and that it is worse than uncertain to anchor our faith to them; but he at the same time knows that as we let go of our belief in materiality and reliance upon it, with the desire and purpose to acquaint ourselves with God and His rich provision for the needs of all His children, our daily bread comes in no uncertain way, though it must come through the channel of uplifted faith and understanding.

The difficulty with mortals is that they want to be supplied in their own way,—not in God's way, which is infinitely wise and good. The children of Israel while in Egyptian bondage clamored loudly for freedom, and thought they desired it more than aught else; but when they were lifted above this condition, they were unwilling to endure the discipline of the wilderness. The manna which came as type and symbol of the living bread was despised, and when the quails came to the camp, the people ate until the surfeited sense was unable to rise above that which was dragging it down, and many perished.

Christian Scientists need, above all else, to watch and pray for the upliftment and purification of the whole human race, and to be thankful for the spiritual strength which enables them to work on faithfully toward the solution of the human problem which is to bring unnumbered blessings, not to themselves alone, but to all mankind. On page 307 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says: "God gives you His spiritual ideas, and in turn, they give you daily supplies." We surely do not desire to be behind the prophets of olden time in our faith in the divine supply. Habakkuk declared that although vine and fig tree should fail, and flocks and herds should be cut off, yet he would rejoice in the God of his salvation, knowing that in God was his strength. Even those who are not acquainted with Mrs. Eddy's teachings are insisting that people can do without a great deal in the material way which they formerly deemed necessary, and for the reason that human freedom is a far weightier consideration than the gratification of the senses in any direction.

This viewpoint is of course different from that of the Christian Scientist, who simply rests in the assurance that our heavenly Father will give us all that we need; and our deepest need, now and always, is the fuller understanding of God which enables us to grow strong and healthful, as did Daniel and his companions, who, although a king's dainties were pressed upon them in the Babylonian palace, refused all but the simplest fare. They too were seeking freedom, not merely for themselves, but for their race; and although they had to pass through the severest ordeals, they proved fully in the most crucial moments the impotence of error and the almightiness of divine Truth and Love. Shall we today look for less, when the kingdom of God has drawn so nigh to us through the revelation of divine Science?

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

Unmasking Hypnotism

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE serves notice upon the world that evil in its totality is now uncovered. The day that Mrs. Eddy discovered God to be the only cause, evil of every nature was doomed. It can no longer hide, pretend, or deceive. No one need be subject to it except voluntarily. Nothing remains to be said about it which Mrs. Eddy has not already said in her writings. She has been willing to take the lamp of Truth into the dark chambers of thought, and finally expose its intent, expectancy, modes, and methods.

When, therefore, the world war suddenly burst upon unprepared nations, those who were careful students of Mrs. Eddy's writings felt themselves at once forewarned and forearmed against the supposititious forces which had brought on this furious chemicalization and which expected to profit by it. In so far as Christian Scientists have been faithful to their Leader's teachings, they have not allowed themselves to be distracted by the merely material horrors of this war. They have observed the deploying of hidden mental forces behind the visible battle front. They detected at once that the war was being waged mentally, consciously on the one side, ignorantly on the other, and they have never for a moment been in doubt as to which side presented the lesser evil.

Christian Science, which unmasks the hidden batteries of occultism firing hypnotically upon a defenseless world, showed conclusively that there was intentional method in an apparent madness. It was also apparent that the clamor of peace at any price, which was designed to catch the self-righteous, reposed upon a metaphysical fallacy; namely, upon the supposition that life resides in matter and therefore that to save matter saves life. This theory followed to its logical conclusion would have forbidden Jesus to sacrifice his sense of life in matter upon the cross. Calvary proves the theory of peace at any price to be anti-Christian, though that theory may parade itself in the very vestments of theology.

The student of Christian Science who is himself striving to lay down his own sense of life in matter, is the last person in the world to try to prevent any one else from doing the same. Like Paul the Christian Scientist is learning to "die daily." He is fighting metaphysically for the highest possible ideal, and using spiritual weapons. The military recruit is willing to die physically for the best ideal he has, and to use the weapons he knows of. Who is nearer the kingdom of heaven, the recruit or the peace theorist? He who will not lay down his life can never find it. He is debarred from heaven.

During the last three years the observant Christian Scientist has detected the modus operandi of occultism in manipulating not only men but nations, democracies as well as autocracies. It may seem simpler to control the government of the few than of the many, but Christian Science uncovers the regrettable fact that the crowd can be hypnotized as well as the individual, and that the mob can be induced to lynch by mental suggestion quite as dexterously as the autocrat to tyrannize. The conduct of this world war has laid bare what seem to be otherwise inexplicable blunders on the part of those nations whose desire was nearer Principle than person.

The nations today need to be warned of these mass plays of occultism designed to cause groups of people to fall blindly into shameful treacheries, to goad the ignorant into frenzy, to incite rebellion behind the battle lines, to stifle higher living, intelligence, and good under the weight of animal greed, to disrupt the economic forces of nations and leave them a prey to the mental robber. The scientifically Christian prayer of the righteous alone can turn these artificial curses into blessings and turn back these shameful manipulations upon themselves, for Christian Science alone is competent to unmask animal magnetism, mesmerism, or hypnotism, and their allies, priestcraft and materia medica, and to protect the nations with the true understanding of Life, Truth, and Love.

We read in Revelation that "the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Of this tree Mrs. Eddy writes on page 406 of Science and Health that it "is typical of man's divine Principle, which is equal to every emergency." Obedience to Principle will therefore protect the nations today and prepare them for their healing. The hour has sounded when the words used by Mrs. Eddy on page 441 in a typical trial scene must come true: "We further recommend that Materia Medica adopt Christian Science and that Health-laws, Mesmerism, Hypnotism, Oriental Witchcraft, and Esoteric Magic be publicly executed at the hands of our sheriff, Progress."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BILLINGS, MONT.—During the year the following literature was distributed: 3435 Sentinels, 267 Journals, 24 Heralds, 8313 Monitors, 75 Quarterlies, 703 pamphlets, 1030 lectures. Racks for the distribution of literature were placed in the Chamber of Commerce Building, Union Depot, El Niblo Hotel, Grand Hotel, Northern Hotel, City Hall, Yegen Brothers Store, and Hart-Albin Rest Room. There was an increase of 45 per cent in the literature distribution during the first month the racks were in place, and the last three months of 1916 showed an increase of more than 100 per cent over the first month. While the Midland Empire Fair was held a booth was maintained by the distribution committee and the following literature was distributed: 350 Sentinels, 24 Journals, 700 Monitors. The county jail has been visited once each week, and literature distributed to the occupants, who were glad to receive it.

The number of yearly subscriptions used for the distribution work are as follows: Sentinel, 10; Journal, 16; Herold, 1; Monitor, 2. Subscriptions for the Monitor are being sent to the Polytechnic Institute, Y. M. C. A., the county jail, El Niblo Hotel, and the library. The Journal is sent to the Northern Hotel and the library. The library also receives the Sentinel. Two copies of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, one copy of "Miscellaneous Writings," and two Christian Science Hymnals were placed in the library. Six copies of Science and Health (one German edition) were given out during the year.

Literature Distribution Committee.

RHODE ISLAND.—Through the offer of the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, twenty-four copies daily of The Christian Science Monitor were sent to the Rhode Island troops during the time they were stationed at El Paso, Texas. Correspondence with the commanding officer in connection with this matter showed his keen appreciation. Full reports of four lectures given under the auspices of First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Providence, were printed in a local newspaper, and forty-five hundred copies were circulated. In addition to this, copies of the Monitor and the Sentinel have been given to members of our legislature during their term.—Committee on Publication.

PAINESVILLE, OHIO.—The new edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, just completed, was opened for the first time to the public on Sunday [May 6].

The Lectures

Announcement

The new Lecture Circular is now ready and is being mailed to the clerks of all the churches and societies advertised in The Christian Science Journal. It contains a number of important changes, and should be studied carefully by all officers, committees, and ushers interested in the proper handling of the lecture arrangements. It is intended to have a sufficient number placed in the hands of each clerk to supply all the officers of the church.

If engagements for the entire lecture year can be made before the first of August, the lecturers can arrange their routes more satisfactorily to all concerned. In no instance should a clerk correspond with more than one lecturer at a time, for the same engagement.

Attention is especially directed to an article entitled "Giving a Lecture" by William R. Rathvon, in the Christian Science Sentinel for June 9.

Letters and telegrams sent to the addresses given above will be duly forwarded. Use these addresses, unless for a special occasion a different address is given.

WESTMOUNT, P. Q., CANADA (First Church).—William R. Rathvon, lecturer; introduced by H. B. Stairs, who said in part:—

In the incident recorded in the twenty-first chapter of St. John's gospel, where shortly after Jesus' resurrection he appeared to his disciples on the shore of the sea of Tiberias, the Scriptural account goes on to say: "Then Jesus saith unto them, Children, have ye any meat? They answered him, No. And he said unto them, Cast the net on the right side of the ship, and ye shall find. They cast therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes." Those who have entered upon the study of Christian Science sincerely and truthfully, have learned that there is an unlimited supply of health, plenty, and of all good things right at hand now for all of God's children, if they will but reach out in the right way and take them, and they have learned also in some degree how this is to be done.

KANKAKEE, ILL. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by O. B. Englisch, who said in part:—

Christian Science promises much to afflicted humanity. It promises health to the sick, happiness to those who are in misery, joy to the sorrowing, strength and courage to the weak and fearful, and peace of mind to those who are distressed. Not only this, but it shows how these blessings may be attained by the individual, and how they may be attained here and now. These promises are being fulfilled today in countless instances and in every corner of the globe, and it is their fulfilment in health, happiness, and peace of mind to suffering humanity that is bringing the whole world to the door of Christian Science.

MANSFIELD, OHIO (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by E. G. Robinson, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a subject which is occupying much of the thought of the religious world today. It is a healing system, consisting not merely of the curing of bodily ills but of the healing of graver mental errors. In fact, we are told that it requires more effort to get rid of pride, selfishness, sensuousness, self-pity, and the like, than it does to cure the so-called bodily diseases. All Christian Scientists have at some time or in some way been healed of something, and with that healing there has come into their lives joy, health, love, prosperity; and they are grateful. This meeting today is a manifestation of their gratitude. They desire to pass on to their friends and neighbors—to you—a knowledge of that wonderful thing which has brought such a large measure of satisfaction to them.—Mansfield News.

MT. VERNON, WASH. (Society).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Prof. William A. Ness, who said in part:—

The lecturer will bring to you the message that is gradually transforming a black and bitter world into a world worth living in. I feel confident that this message, received and acted upon, will make Mt. Vernon a brighter spot. In the first chapter of Genesis we read: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them. . . . And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." You see we were started out all right. Since then we have seemingly gone astray, for things have not seemed altogether good for several ages past. Does this mean that God's perfect creation was a failure? Our senses say yes. Christian Science testifies no, and demonstrates that God's world is still "very good."

LONDON, ENGLAND (Third Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by F. New, who said in part:—

There must have been times, during the present inharmonious conditions through which the nations of the world are passing, when the thought has come to many that there must be something wrong somewhere or this condition of affairs could not exist, since it is contrary to the Bible teaching that "God is love" and man is His image and likeness. It would seem from this that we should turn to the Bible to find out what is amiss. Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Free! What a thought for all! What is truth? Christian Science teaches what the truth is about God and man,—that God is Spirit, and that man as His image and likeness is spiritual, not material. Therefore it is our thought of man and nations that requires changing and must be set right. Christian Science shows us how to think aright.

TRENTON, N. J. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Major Nelson B. Gaskill, who said in part:—

The one topic of permanent interest is God. Whatever may engage the attention of men through varying periods of time, changing and giving place in constant succession, the foundation of the business of living is the effort to establish a working relation between man and his conception of God. Somewhere in our consciousness is a recognition of the possibility of a law whose operation is altogether just. Somewhere we have cognized the possible operation of a rule of conduct which is always fair. Somewhere we recognize the existence of all that is good. Still we are conscious of many flaws and defects in the apparent scheme of things. But by that same process we assert the existence of a greater system in which there is no flaw.

We are constantly at work to solve the problem of the relation between man and God, for this ideal of perfection is our conception of God, and in the solution of the problem we use many devices. "God hath made man upright," said the Preacher; "but they have sought out many inventions." I understand it to be the purpose of Christian Science, the effort of every Christian Scientist, to discard these inventions of men and look only to the discovery of the man as God made him, in His own image, as the solution of the problem.

Testimonies of Healing

In 1907 Christian Science was offered to a loved one who was about to undergo an operation, but it was not accepted. While waiting for the outcome of this ordeal I partly read the book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which had so lovingly been placed in the home. My experience has helped me never to condemn any one who reads this wonderful book and fails to grasp its message, for while I had no criticism to make, it was a closed book to me. It seemed to require the sorrow and grief of losing this loved one, together with repeated financial losses, lack of supply, and physical ailments, to prepare the soil into which the seed of truth was to be dropped.

About six months after this experience, when courage, hope, strength, as well as material methods and remedies, were all failing me, when I would go about my housework a while and then be obliged to lie down a while, I found myself wishing for this book. I even made a special trip to my mother's home to see if it were still there, only to find it had been returned. Afterward I could see how divine Love answers our every right desire, for not many hours after this a neighbor brought me her copy of Science and Health, saying she heard I was not well and thought I might like to read it.

This time every word was a living message, and with tears of joy and humiliation I realized the ever-presence of the Christ. I wondered, was invigorated, thrilled. The Bible, which I had not used for years, was brought out and searched. I had found nothing so interesting as this teaching in all my life, and knew it was that for which I had always been longing. All sense of fatigue, discouragement, weariness, and weakness was a thing of the past.

Knowing that the neighbor who had loaned me the book was reluctant to part with it for any length of time, I felt it must be returned, so my husband, seeing how interested and helped I seemed to be, bought me a copy, also a large print Bible. The glory of this study and knowledge has never ceased. My husband one day asked me if I was ever going to finish the book, and I replied "Never." If I had suddenly come into great material possessions I could not have rejoiced more, for I knew it was the "pearl of great price." My untempered zeal in presenting the truth to all my loved ones brought me many a struggle, however, and I went through deep waters until sufficiently disciplined by Truth to learn to be wise as a serpent and gentle as a dove. While no other member of my family has openly accepted this teaching, I have found that Christian Science has met every need for myself and my two children. It has helped me in my music and school work, as well as in the home and public work, by enlarging my capacities and enabling me to meet "every adverse circumstance as its master" (Science and Health, p. 419).

At the time this truth found me I was suffering from an aggravated bowel disorder and stomach worms, also a trouble with my head which created a great fear of losing my reason. All this has vanished. I wish every mother could understand the difference between trying to raise a child with and without this knowledge. Our younger child, now seven years old, has never tasted medicine, and the elder (now twelve) has not done so since I learned to apply the truth. Both have been healed of measles. I have also had many beautiful proofs that God is the source of supply, though this lesson seemed harder to grasp than some.

I am very grateful for the Christian training which the study of our periodicals affords us, and for the privilege of having this rich legacy brought to my children through the Sunday school and other channels. I am indeed thankful to God for this precious gift of Christian Science, and for the pure life of her who was appointed to voice His word.

FLORA TOUVÉ HARRIS, Centralia, Ill.

The year before we became interested in Christian Science my husband was seriously ill and confined to his bed for over two months. In the anxiety and distress of those weeks of almost constant fear of the worst, I developed a physical trouble of the nature of which I was at first unaware. We thought that it was only a run-down condition, and that a few weeks of rest and quiet would restore me to my normal state of health; therefore as soon as my husband was able to attend to business I took our two little children and went into the country. I remained there several weeks, but at the end of that time was no better, in fact was growing steadily worse, and so I finally decided to consult a physician. Three physicians agreed that if I ever would be well again I must submit to an operation; but about this time one of my friends passed away as the result of an operation, leaving a husband and two small children, and fearing that my fate would be the same I refused to be operated upon.

I was in despair, and soon my mental condition was even worse than the physical. The rebellion, the self-pity, the desire to live and be well because of my children, caused a constant conflict and turmoil. One day I realized I could not live very long in such a condition, and resolved to become more cheerful for the sake of my family. A few days after this I heard of Christian Science, and a little later began to read Science and Health. Almost immediately my mental condition was changed; I seemed to grasp first of all that God is Love, and that it was not His will I should be sick or die. A few weeks later every symptom of the physical trouble vanished and I was better than ever before in my life. Some time after my healing an acquaintance told me that one of my physicians had said it was impossible for me to be cured without an operation, but that if I were well in twelve or fifteen years he would believe I was cured. My healing took place twenty years ago, and not a symptom of the trouble has ever returned.

While I was in great need of healing for my physical condition, this was nothing compared with the barrenness of my spiritual concept, so naturally I am most thankful to God for Christian Science as a religion. My gratitude to Mrs. Eddy is inexpressible. Her wisdom in establishing all the avenues through which her followers can obtain a knowledge of Christian Science is marvelous. I wish also to express my gratitude for all the periodicals, which no Christian Scientist can afford to be without; they are the missionaries for our cause.—AMELIA S. KORFHAGE, New Albany, Ind.

It is with feelings of intense gratitude that I send this testimony of my healing in Christian Science. For fifteen years I suffered from heart attacks, which constantly handicapped me in my work as a nurse. Eight years ago I was told by a doctor that I must not attempt to do active nursing, as night work or lifting a patient would be impossible. From that time until I came to Christian Science these attacks came on after fatigue or strain of any sort. In August, 1912, I was very ill and felt I could not keep on in any ordinary way much longer. My sister, who had been a student of Christian Science for some time, was anxious for me to have treatment, but I was much annoyed at this and said I was quite sure religion could not cure what the doctors had said was incurable. To avoid further argument I said I would like to consult a heart specialist who had seen me four years before, and if he gave no better report I would then try Christian Science.

We came to London, and the specialist gave me no hope of a cure. I then told my sister I would see a Christian Science practitioner, though quite sure it would do no good. I was so full of antagonism that I was not conscious of any benefit from the first treatment, but the loving thought of the practitioner was stronger than my opposition and I promised to go again the following day. I soon realized that the teaching of Christian Science was quite different from what it had seemed to be, and gradually my antagonism broke down. After five weeks' treatment I found myself able to do more than I had attempted for years. At first I waited for the pain that used to be experienced after any exertion, but it did not come. Since my healing I have had a severe attack of influenza, but through the help of the practitioner it was overcome in five days, and with no effect on the heart, whereas in the old days there was always the fear that it would not stand the strain.

Words are inadequate to express my thankfulness for the teaching of this beautiful truth, and my prayer is that I may be faithful to its Principle, and be able to help others.

DORA HALLET-BAKER, London, England.

Eleven years ago, while I was in Denver, hoping the climate would be beneficial to my son, who was suffering from a bronchial trouble, Christian Science was brought to my notice. I was very skeptical and did not accept it at once for the child, but finally called on a practitioner. My son had taken about ten treatments when I was called home, as my people thought I was suffering from a mental disorder. I, however, kept in close touch with the practitioner, though my husband clung to material remedies for the boy. After struggling along for about seven months, we were asked to take the child from school. My husband took him to a physician for a final examination, but came home very much discouraged, and then consented to Christian Science treatment. The practitioner was notified, and in less than a week the child was completely healed.

Words cannot express my gratitude for this healing and for the protection which was mine during this trial. But of all the blessings which I have received since being a student of Christian Science, the greatest is this: Christian Science has taught me to know that God is; that He is Love, divine Principle, and that the truth is applicable to every discordant condition which may present itself. Other physical disturbances, such as acute lung trouble, scarlet rash, headaches, stomach disorders, diphtheria, and colds, have all been overcome in our home by applying Christian Science as the only remedy. My daily prayer is for growth in grace and understanding, and we are having constant proof of the healing power of Truth.

LUTIE ZOECKLER, Davenport, Iowa.

I have given my testimony in our local church quite often, and have now awakened to the fact that the publication of it may be helpful to the larger field reached through the Sentinel. Seven years ago I left Omaha, Neb., for Denver, Col., as I thought to advance along business lines. On arriving there I found myself a very sick man, and went to see a doctor. From childhood I had been under a belief of inherited diseases, among them diabetes, from which three of my uncles had passed on and to which my father succumbed after a surgical operation. Besides this I suffered from chronic stomach disorder, to which was added heart trouble due to excessive smoking, also a combination of other ailments, fears, superstitions, and so on.

I never had much faith in doctors and medicine, because seven operations to which my mother submitted had left her worse than ever. Consequently, when I failed to improve after having electrical treatments and taking large quantities of medicine, and was then told about Christian Science and asked to attend a Wednesday evening meeting, I went to it. At the reading room the following day I began the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, but failed to understand it, partly because I was not sufficiently familiar with the English language.

The year following, having returned to Omaha, Neb., not any better and not caring much about anything or anybody, yet still being interested in Christian Science, I attended a lecture, and then took up the study in earnest. With the help of a practitioner I soon began to improve slowly but steadily, and now am free from all the diseases named, also from the tobacco and drink habits, and from a skin disease manifested on my hands. Christian Science also quickly dispelled the sense of sorrow over the passing on of my father. Having been accorded the privilege of class instruction, I now rejoice in a clearer understanding of this wonderful truth revealed to us by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. Another blessing that has come to me is that a brother, and my only near relative in the United States, has been able to understand Christian Science and be benefited by it.

My life has been completely changed since coming into Science. Ideals of former years have returned, and the realization of these has become a present possibility. Keen disappointments have been obliterated, because divine Love is now the ruler, and in fulfilling the law of Love I find life and peace. To live closer to God every day and to help in spreading this new-old truth is now my great desire.

A. S. WILLEBERG, Omaha, Neb.

Christian Science is the most wonderful study in the world. Since my introduction to it a few years ago I have had many proofs of healing. A severe attack of toothache caused me to go to a dentist for an opinion. After examination he said that the tooth was badly decayed, and that my gums should be treated for pyorrhea. At that time I was using a dentifrice which is supposed to be a remedy for that disease, but I never used it again.

Soon after leaving the dentist I telephoned to a Christian Science practitioner, told her the verdict, and asked for treatment. She gave me two absent treatments. Later, as the tooth seemed to be chalky near the gum, I went to the dentist to have it filled. When he examined that side of my mouth, however, he said there were no cavities. I then called his attention to the tooth which three months before had ached and had been pronounced a good germ collector. He looked at it and found it all right. Perhaps my expression seemed doubtful, for he asked me what I thought was the trouble with it. I then called his attention to its chalky appearance, saying I thought it needed filling, but when he had removed a little tartar I saw that the tooth was whole. The next day my sister had occasion to go to him for treatment for diseased gums, and he told her that the disease was pyorrhea, adding, "Your sister has not a sign of it." Recently I had him examine my teeth again, and he said there were no cavities and that my gums were healthy.

I am grateful for this proof that God, good, is all-power, but more grateful that fear has been removed and that human thoughtlessness has been supplanted by thought. I want also to express my gratitude for our text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Since the first time the practitioner read the Lesson-Sermon with me, the Bible has been a new book. Spiritual law is unfolding to me through the reading of the Bible together with Science and Health, and through practising the law as it unfolds. For this I am even more thankful than for the physical healing.

I am profoundly thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her wonderful revelation to this age and for the Christian Science literature.

[Translated from the German]

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude for Christian Science and for the wonderful healing which I have experienced in the case of my nine months old baby. The little one had influenza and inflammation of the lungs, and all medical means seemed unavailing. Upon hearing of Christian Science I asked for help, and after three or four treatments the child was much better. Two weeks later he had completely recovered and was running about as well and bright as before. Thanks be to God for the help received through Christian Science in the case of my dear child!

During the past few years I have thought little of a physical disorder which existed prior to the time I began the study of Christian Science, until I desired to take up work which required a physical examination. An appointment was made with the physician who had attended me since birth, and who had treated me for this trouble but without giving me permanent relief. After much thumping, sounding, and listening on his part, I asked the condition of my heart and lungs. The reply was that I could pass normally with the exception of an eye condition, which has improved greatly since it first appeared. The healing was the outcome of daily study of the Lesson-Sermons and the reading of Christian Science literature.

I have experienced many healings since taking up Christian Science, as it has been applied to every problem,—physical, mental, and financial. One of the many blessings is the overcoming of indecision and condemnation. As I was an only child, selfishness and self-will had to be overcome, and I have learned that success is gained through the realization of guidance by Principle and not through the human will.

It has been my privilege to be connected with the distribution of Christian Science literature, and I am very grateful for the help and pleasure experienced from this work. Mrs. Eddy states in Science and Health (p. 296), "Either here or hereafter, suffering or Science must destroy all illusions regarding life and mind, and regenerate material sense and self." I am very glad to have found this truth so early in life that I may omit the suffering and work out my problems through Christian Science.

I am thankful to God and grateful to our Leader for the many joys and the spiritual uplift I have experienced through the study of Christian Science.

I feel ready to give to the world the testimony of my healing through Christian Science. During the year 1914 my health was very poor, and it became worse every day. After consulting one of our best physicians, and also a specialist, who could not diagnose the case, the only thing left for me was to submit to an operation, in order that the doctors might explore. I was operated on, but received little relief; indeed, I was on the operating table several times. On three occasions I was taken to the hospital, to remain there for several weeks, and many times it seemed as if my life was fast slipping away. When brought home I suffered more than I care to relate. The doctor was very capable and was doing all he could. My faith in him was great, but when I called for him to come and do something for me, as my suffering was terrible, he came only to tell me that the disease was organic, in an advanced stage, and considered incurable by all physicians.

That night I was worse, and a friend who had talked to me of Christian Science asked if she might call a practitioner. I gave my consent and the practitioner came. For the first time in eight months I slept through the night, and to my surprise the next morning I raised myself on my elbow without pain; I sat up, and then stood up, and the words seemed to come to me, "You are healed." Never before had I experienced such happiness. My husband had been carrying me upstairs, but then I walked, "leaning on the sustaining infinite" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii). From that moment I knew God was the only physician, and the Christ, Truth, made me physically and spiritually whole. During the following year I had many hard places to go over, owing to my run-down condition, but I gained rapidly, and my healing was a beautiful demonstration of the power of Truth, for to mortal sense I was at death's door.

Words can never express my gratitude for the understanding that I can turn to God at all times and under all circumstances. I also wish to express the tender love I have for our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving to the world "the Comforter," through "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," in which thousands of weary wanderers have found the living Christ.

ORELL GUJER, Minneapolis, Minn.

Christian Science has healed me of conditions said to be due to bad blood, of chronic bowel trouble of years' standing which drugs would not heal, of the fear of appendicitis, of a tendency to catch cold easily, of the drink and tobacco habits, and of wrong moral conditions. Words cannot describe the wonderful benefits I have received, but I am truly thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy and to all who have helped me.—WILLIAM F. LARNE, Seattle, Wash.

We came into Christian Science almost eight years ago through the healing of our baby, who was at that time thirteen months old, from what the doctors pronounced a malignant condition of the liver, adding that they had never witnessed or read of such a case in so young a child. For several months she had "suffered many things of many physicians," and at last, when it seemed as though the end was near, with no hope whatever of her recovery, we decided to give Christian Science a trial.

A practitioner labored most lovingly day and night to bring to us the realization of God as the only Life. The healing was not instantaneous, but for five months the child improved a little each day, until she was completely healed. I never gave up to discouragement, but was thankful to God that each day she was just a little better than the day before. This child is now almost nine years old, is strong and healthy, and goes to school every day. Three months after this healing occurred my four children were taken with the measles in a very bad form. For two days the baby was entirely blind, but through the aid of the practitioner the children were completely healed in three or four days.

Since this time we have had many proofs of the healing power of Christian Science. Whooping-cough in a severe form was overcome in two days, influenza in three treatments, and a bad attack of heart trouble yielded to the truth in an hour and a half. In the fall of 1915 my son, then thirteen years old, was run over by an autotruck, and for three or four days suffered very much. He had Christian Science treatment, and in three weeks was back in school, running and romping with the other boys.

Christian Science is our only physician, and it certainly meets every need. For all these wonderful healings our hearts go out in gratitude to our Leader, who labored so unselfishly to bring this beautiful truth to mankind.

ELLA HAYNES, Bloomington, Ill.

Some time ago my little girl was attacked with acute pain in the right ear, and an abscess appeared to form under the ear, causing her intense suffering. I did not seem able to meet the case, so a Christian Science practitioner treated my daughter. She was helped from the first, and after three treatments the abscess broke, giving the child complete relief. The discharge continued for several days and then ceased. The healing was permanent, as there has been no return of the trouble.

For this healing, and for many other blessings I have received in Christian Science, I am deeply grateful.

MRS. F. C. GOODWIN, Fresno, Cal.

I would like to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. For two years I had suffered agonies with what was termed an abscess in the head. The attacks would last three and four weeks at a time, and I would be confined to my bed with two physicians in attendance, besides trained nurses. I had to be treated twice a day in the intervals of the attacks. A serious operation was necessary, according to the final decision of the specialists, but they promised no relief after it.

One day I met my brother, who is a Christian Scientist, in New York, and he asked me to go to the office of a friend and practitioner. I did so, and when speaking to this practitioner I felt that he had something I did not have, but needed. The next day I was seized with one of the worst attacks I ever had, but I arose and went to New York to the practitioner's office. I was in great distress, and all I said to him was, "I want to be healed and I know I can be healed." He said, "If you feel that way about it you will be healed." While he treated me the discharge of pus stopped, the pain ceased, and I knew I was healed,—as if I had been cleansed and made whole. I walked out of that office a well woman, and have never had any return of this trouble.

That experience occurred over two years ago. I am deeply thankful to God for this healing, and for the spiritual uplift, also for the literature and for the revealing of this blessed truth through our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

MARY ANDRESEN NELSON, Orange, N. J.

I am very thankful for what Christian Science has done for me. When the truth came to me I was suffering from stomach disorder which doctors had failed to cure. After two weeks' treatment in Science I was perfectly healed, and there has been no return of the trouble. Hemorrhoids left without special treatment. I am greatly interested in Christian Science literature, especially the Sentinel.

From Our Exchanges

[Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.Litt., in The Christian Commonwealth]

One can imagine the ribald jests of the Roman soldiers set to guard a grave, and their scorn of such an ignoble duty. The first night passed, and nothing happened. The second night, and no one came near the tomb. The next night—and then! History has its secrets. Many details remain hidden and dark. But the tomb was empty; Jesus' broken-hearted friends met him, talked with him, and knew him amid unveilings as lovely as they were real—in the morning light in the garden, in a closed room, by the lake at dawn. "That which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be . . . So also is the resurrection." After this manner Jesus returned, and if we knew the higher laws of God no doubt it would be as natural as the growth of a flower. Why should it be deemed a thing incredible that out of the heart of the race having a genius for religion, as the Greeks had a genius for art, the crowning revelation should have come? Aspiration is not mocked forever! We live in a universe of lengthening vistas and lifting skies! The mercy of God is not mute, and He hath given an answer, overwhelming, to the most pathetic and moving of all cries!

How can we make this reality real to ourselves in this far off day, in this new and strange age in which we live? Truly, if man is immortal at all, he is immortal now. Immortality does not concern the future alone, or chiefly, but the life that now is, where it is needed to give amplitude and victorious confidence amid the vicissitudes of time. Of that fact the resurrection is a revelation, in that it brought not only immortality but life to light as a thing diviner and more wonderful than we ever yet have dreamed. Hints of this are given us in every great life.

[Rev. Edward Shillito, M.A., in The Christian World]

The prevailing mood of the hour is one of bewilderment. It seems as though every ancient problem and dilemma has come to life again, and there are many new ones. The facts of the world situations are beyond our grasp; even if these were told to us, as they are not told, we should not be able to relate them or group them. But at the very time when the political data are baffling there are intellectual and spiritual problems which clamor for our attention. "Pavements are up in every street;" church and state alike are in need of the best attention we can give; there are perplexities whichever way we turn. If we move inward we discover that the human personality itself is a battle field for which hostile forces contend. If we think of the state we are baffled by the problems which arise out of the war. And if we think internationally we are still more dazed. Yet somehow we are conscious that if we could only group and relate these problems we might find them one, with one answer.

[The Christian Advocate]

Today is the moment of supreme spiritual opportunity. There are those who contend that Christianity has come into collapse through this frightful war—but that is the enemy view of the situation, and is not in keeping with the facts. This, however, is true, that the war presents to Christianity a colossal opportunity for spiritual service. Men and women throughout the land are growing more thoughtful. There is a sure and undisguised turning toward spiritual things. God is becoming very real to an increasing number of people, and the fellowship of Jesus Christ is making its irresistible appeal as an experience to be desired and a possession to be cherished.

[The Universalist Leader]

Every Christian must be opposed to war on general principles. It is a wicked and unintelligent way to try to solve any problem, because it involves such immeasurable suffering and sacrifice, and, of itself, settles nothing but the superior material strength of the victor. But we are still wicked and unintelligent. Conditions are still as they are and not as they ought to be. We are face to face with a "condition, not a theory."

Some of us had dreamed a few years ago that the possibility of another great war between great nations had passed forever, when, behold, in a moment the world is plunged into the greatest war in the history of mankind, and the nations of largest Christian culture are the leaders in the conflict! The storm is upon us, and it is folly to hide our heads in the sand and think to escape it. And today our own country is in it. We must face the fact, and act as seems best; and this statement is not entirely prudential. Between what is best and what is right there can be no choice for the Christian; he is to choose the right.

[Rev. W. H. Heap in The Methodist Times]

The strangest thing I know about the Son of God is that he would rather be called the Son of man than anything else. You cannot read the New Testament without realizing that men never felt restraint at the presence of Christ. They knew that he knew how bad they were, and therefore that he could also realize how good they might become. Christ never recognized "an outsider" in any company. Somehow or other within the church we have got to get rid of that accursed sense of respectability which besets us, so that it may be the most natural thing in the world that some poor wretch who is sin stricken and devil ridden should come to us as if he were coming home for help and comfort and healing. Christ's idea of religion is that it should be a daily walking and talking with God.

[The Watchman-Examiner]

Above and beyond everything else the pulpit must hold true to its own distinctive spiritual function. It is set for the preaching of "Jesus Christ, and him crucified," and its commission is not vacated nor its message changed by the fact that war is upon us. Indeed, by that very fact are both commission and message emphasized and made at once more imperative and more effective. The preacher has an opportunity now that does not always open to him, and that he must be quick to seize and wise to use. These are challenging and sobering times, and men are more inclined than usual to consider serious things. Many theories of life are breaking down in the testing.

[Zion's Herald]

Life is a continual process of getting ready. At no time can a Christian safely abandon that attitude of watchful alacrity or intelligent preparation. But the best way to make sure that one will do his duty tomorrow and the day after is to do it today. We are our own moral fathers, so to speak, and our choices and actions today condition the men that we shall be in time to come.

[Unitarian Word and Work]

Jesus at his best spake as never man spake; but even his vast generalizations may become of practical value to the world only as the martyr dies for an ideal and the soldier for a prophetic cause.

The Government of Nicaragua has promulgated a new land law, by which native Nicaraguan heads of families may acquire free homesteads and other persons may purchase lands at very low prices. According to the text of this law the Government will reserve for public use a certain zone of land on the coast of Nicaragua, on navigable rivers and lakes, and on the frontier adjoining Honduras. Any native Nicaraguan who is the head of a family may acquire a homestead of 50 hectares of land (123.5 acres) without payment, provided the homesteader lives on the land five years, builds a house on it, and cultivates at least a quarter of it. This privilege will apply to squatters who have already built homes and cultivated land in the territory covered by this law. Homesteads may not be sold, mortgaged, leased, or transferred. Foreigners as well as natives may take up claims on agricultural lands to the extent of 350 hectares, and on stock raising lands up to 700 hectares. At the expiration of five years the agricultural settler must pay $1.28 a hectare for arable land, and $2 a hectare for irrigated land. The stock raiser will pay 80 cents a hectare for mountainous or tableland covered with natural pasture. One half of the purchase price must be paid in cash and the other half may be paid in Government bonds. The cash receipts are to be used for educational purposes.

An American firm has enlisted the aid of the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in obtaining five young men for service in Russia. These men must be between twenty-two and twenty-eight years of age, neither engaged nor married, having a knowledge of some language besides English as an indication of their ability to acquire foreign languages, and they must furnish suitable references. They will spend two summers and one winter traveling in Russia and studying the methods of operation in Russian establishments. They will be paid an annual salary of approximately $1500, plus traveling and living expenses. The request is for one who has been employed in oil well operations or oil manufacture; one who has a good general working knowledge of macadamized roads, dirt roads, and their care; one who has spent time since leaving college in mining or metallurgy; one who was brought up on a farm and who has studied agriculture and dairy farming; one who has been employed in a steel plant or large foundry and who has some idea of machine tools. Letters of the applicants, which must contain full information and be addressed to file No. 7131, will be transmitted by the bureau to the firm making the inquiry.

The sample fair at Lyons, France, will undoubtedly become a permanent institution and take its place as one of the great trade fairs of the world. The second fair confirmed the success of the one held last year by trebling the number of exhibitors and recording actual sales aggregating millions of dollars. The many and varied demands of the buyers in attendance emphasized the importance of the foreign trade that will come after the war. While the opening date was set for March 1, it was not until March 18, owing to the many handicaps imposed by the war and inadequate transportation, that the fair was officially opened, and it closed April 1. There was a total of 1312 exhibitors at the fair of 1916, while the official register showed a total of 3159 exhibitors for this year. The next fair will be held during the first two weeks of March, 1918. More attention will be paid to concentration, and the booths, which this year stretched along the great quays of the Rhone for a distance of six miles, will be grouped at two points.

South American markets for fruit from the United States have grown steadily since the war started, but the greatest increase was in the period preceding the war, 1913-14, so that the purchases of the orchard products have a more enduring basis than that induced by the present conditions of commerce. A report of an investigation of this subject which has been published by the United States Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce emphasizes quality as an important feature. In both Brazil and Argentina the American apple is supreme in the better class of trade, as it is in all parts of the world, and its sale is limited only by the number of people who are able to pay the rather high prices asked for it. The American pear is especially well liked in Brazil, and sells well also in Argentina. The two countries now take 80,000 barrels of American apples and 65,000 boxes of American pears each year.

The cultivation of sugar cane is one of the oldest industries in the state of Sao Paulo, Brazil, and fifty years ago the exportation of cane sugar was of greater importance than that of coffee, while in 1825 it represented 50 per cent of the exportation of the state. The planters, however, gradually found the production of coffee more profitable. Also, as most of the state lies in a hilly and mountainous plateau, the climatic conditions necessary to the production of sugar are not so favorable in Sao Paulo as in some other parts of the republic possessing greater heat, greater humidity, lower temperature, and whose topography is such as to permit of the use of machinery in the fields. In recent years, however, the industry has again come into importance.

During the month of April the first of several tests of tile walls was made by the United States Bureau of Standards. While previously various commercial tests of the load carrying capacity of tile walls had been made, in the present case the work is part of a large investigation which is being made at the suggestion of the tile manufacturers and of the committee on hollow tile of the American Society for Testing Materials. About fifty walls of various heights and thicknesses will be made. Those tested during the month were 12 feet high, 4 feet long, and either 12 or 6 inches thick. The tests of the walls were very satisfactory in every case, very high loads being obtained and the material showing excellent deportment.

To overcome the threatened menace to the important silkworm industry in the department of the Ardèche, France, the general council of the department has requested that the necessary laborers required be provided by permissions of leave from the army, and that rapid transportation to the spinning mills be assured for the fresh cocoons that are especially perishable; also that the mills be furnished with sufficient coal to operate and properly prepare the cocoons that otherwise could not be purchased from the producers.

The members of the Southern Cypress Manufacturers Association in convention at New Orleans, La., were strongly opposed to any tendency to exploit the war situation or to treat the trade unfairly by unwarranted inflation of prices. They laid emphasis upon the wisdom of a conservative policy. Although car shortage and large purchases of lumber by the Government are making conditions abnormal, fair and staple values will not be discontinued on this account.

The coke producers of the United States, it is declared, evidently recognize the fact that the day of the beehive oven is passing, and that after the present abnormal condition is over most coke will be made in by-product ovens. This conclusion is drawn from a study of the situation by the United States Geological Survey, which has made a report on the beehive coke production in 1916.

A broom manufacturer of Louisiana, in view of the almost prohibitive prices of broom corn straw, has started to use palmetto fiber as a substitute, and is producing brooms at half their present high cost. The supply of material is practically inexhaustible in the lowlands all over the state. The fiber is tough and of an attractive pea-green color.

In Denmark state loans secured by mortgages on property are made to farmers. They run for long terms and bear a low rate of interest, 4½ to 5 per cent. During 1916, 565 farmers borrowed sums totaling $1,000,000. Since the inauguration of these loans in 1899, there have been 8200 made, amounting to $11,000,000.

The present railway mileage of Peru, less than 2000 miles in operation, is mostly under the control of the Peruvian Corporation, financed with British capital, incorporated in 1890 in the interests of the holders of the external debt of Peru.

Pageants depicting history in and about the region at the foot of Lake Michigan were recently given at Port Chester, Ind., among the Indiana sand dunes, in the interest of the movement to save the dunes for a national park.

For the ten months ending with April, 1917, exports of the United States amounted to $5,167,000,000, and the imports for the same period amounted to $2,072,000,000.

The declared exports to the United States from the Bradford consular district of England during the three months ended March 31 amounted to $1,315,017.

Fine copper shipped during 1916 from Chile amounted to 71,340 tons.

The Second Coming of Christ

FRANK H. SPRAGUE

PERHAPS none of our Master's recorded utterances have led to greater speculation than have the series of word pictures in the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth chapters of Matthew, which deal with the coming of the Son of man. Knowing that he would soon be parted from his students, and realizing how imperfectly they grasped the vital issue of Spirit versus matter which he had striven unremittingly to bring home to their understanding, the great Teacher rose to the occasion with a burst of prophetic eloquence which swept the horizon of material concepts and unmasked the claim of mortal existence in all its hideousness.

Jesus, taking his text from the disciples' worldly observations concerning the magnificence of the temple buildings, first opened their eyes to the appalling catastrophe which was about to overtake "Israel after the flesh" because of the spiritual blindness of its leaders. Then, passing to broader phases of the subject, he depicted in the glowing imagery of oriental metaphor events which were destined to transpire on a grander scale at the reappearing to human apprehension of Christ, defined by Mrs. Eddy as "the divine manifestation of God, which comes to the flesh to destroy incarnate error" (Science and Health, p. 583). We may well imagine his hearers' astonishment when he whom they had learned to know as "The Prince of Peace" associated the coming of the Christ with scenes of turbulence and disaster of the most terrible description. What logical connection could there be between occurrences so diametrically opposite in their nature?

In response to the disciples' query as to the sign of his coming and "the end of the world," the Master in a series of illuminating parables foretold the doom of matter. Unlike the two other Greek words translated "world" in the New Testament, one of which denotes the physical earth and the other the order of the universe, the word used in this instance conveys, as its derivation implies, a sense of duration, and it is sometimes rendered "age." From the standpoint of ordinary theological interpretation, the meaning of these parables seems more or less vague and mystical. Christian Science, however, furnishes the key to our Lord's treatment of the subject in the startling disclosure that the matter-world, so obviously real to the physical senses, is a perverted image of God's creation, a suppositional order fathered by the mesmerism of corporeal sense, and it has therefore neither Principle, reality, nor permanence. In this drama of unreality the material belief of tranquillity passes for true peace, which is spiritual, until corporeal sense, urged to the limit of self-deception by the judgment of Truth, experiences a reaction in the aggravation of peace disturbing beliefs.

Metaphysically understood, "the end of the world," or "the consummation of the age" (Revised Version, marginal rendering), signifies the passing of this suppositional, false concept of existence and all that it implies in the way of a material environment. Even the early Christians, however, found it difficult to get over the notion that somehow and at some time the human Jesus was to return to earth,—and this in spite of the fact that the great demonstrator of spiritual being disappeared from the earthly scene by degrees, as his waning sense of corporeality rendered him less tangible to material consciousness; for, according to the record, he was seen on occasions by certain of his discerning students after the world had ceased to recognize his presence, and later, under extraordinary circumstances, by Paul and John, who in moments of rare spiritual exaltation caught glimpses of his true identity.

The author of the epistle to the Hebrews explains the second coming of Christ in this significant passage: "Unto them that look for him [the risen Christ as revealed to spiritual sense] shall he appear the second time without sin [hamartia, error, the beliefs which constitute the flesh] unto salvation." It was not Jesus, the Galilean Prophet, then, but the invisible, impersonal Christ which he manifested that was to reappear to human consciousness,—to the spiritually receptive thought as the Comforter, but to corporeal sense as a messenger of destruction.

As the Wayshower made his demonstration step by step over the beliefs of the flesh, until he was prepared to leave the earthly dream behind, so every mortal must "put on immortality" by forsaking corporeality for the reflection of Spirit which constitutes man. The belief of life as conceived in sensation and developed on the basis of sensation, blinds mortals to Christ, the ideal man. The offspring of "the will of the flesh," dwelling within the realm of sensation, fulfil the educated beliefs of sensational existence even to the culmination of those beliefs in death. In the words of the apostle John: "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever."

Because he is so drugged with the beliefs of ignorance and apathy mortal man does not realize the necessity of escaping from the mesmerism of the senses until the situation becomes intolerable. It sometimes requires a terrific shock to rouse the dreamer to the point where he cries out in sheer desperation, "What must I do to be saved?" In many instances a tragedy of the senses is the means of stripping off the mask of material illusions most unexpectedly and bringing mortals face to face with the spiritual facts of being. Christ Jesus did not mince matters in dividing between the reality and the dream. He was a "one idea" reformer in that he kept his thought constantly in focus on the issue between Spirit and the flesh. His platform was summed up in the brief sentence, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."

Never has mortal mind experienced such a general and thorough shaking up as is taking place today, and never before have channels for the word of Truth opened up with such amazing rapidity and in such unforeseen directions. The traditional order is suffering radical changes, and material calculations are being upset at every turn. The very belief of material law and order which has served to give a degree of stability to human concepts and institutions is beginning to disclose its inherent lawlessness and disorderliness in sinister ways. The suppositional forces of mortal mind are passing beyond the bounds of self-control and restraint and spending their counterfeit potentialities in self-annihilation. The inwardness of the fleshly mind is coming out in diabolical exhibitions of hate, cruelty, treachery, sensuality, as Truth brings latent forms of evil to the surface and compels error to show its hand. "Wars and rumors of wars" bear witness to the chaos of sensuous beliefs as the spiritual issue is forced upon mankind.

Mrs. Eddy says: "The breaking up of material beliefs may seem to be famine and pestilence, want and woe, sin, sickness, and death, which assume new phases until their nothingness appears. These disturbances will continue until the end of error, when all discord will be swallowed up in spiritual Truth" (Science and Health, p. 96). In this crisis the student whose thought has been instructed in the letter of Christian Science and who has grasped something of its spirit, is prepared, like the five wise virgins in the parable, for the coming of the bridegroom; while the individual who is engrossed in the pursuit of sense-illusions is all at sea and at the mercy of crumbling beliefs. As in "the days of Noe," the reaction comes as a thunderbolt to the unprepared world of the senses, intoxicated with the lusts of the flesh, "eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage."

Great opportunities bring great responsibilities. The scientifically Christian thought which is responsible in the last analysis for the precipitation of the issue, must be alert to take advantage of each new development and carry the spiritualizing work forward to its consummation, to the point where all materiality shall disappear and time be lost in eternity. "Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing."

The Circle

JESSIE B. RICHMOND

In God's great school which we call the universe, or nature, there are countless objects forever teaching those who have eyes to see and ears to hear, the wondrous lore of wisdom, Truth, and Love. To the Wisemen, our Leader tells us on page 121 of Science and Health, "earth and heaven were bright, and bird and blossom were glad in God's perennial and happy sunshine, golden with Truth. So we have goodness and beauty to gladden the heart." Again, on page 326 we read, "All nature teaches God's love to man."

Preeminent among these natural objects, which in Christian Science are seen as ideas in divine Mind, are the flowers. Their beauty of color, their form and fragrance, are a constant joy to us. Noting their refinement, their variety, their grace, delicacy, and beauty, we do not wonder that Jesus pointed his hearers to the lilies of the field, bidding them consider how they grew, and that our Leader is said to have answered a question about dress with the counsel to dress as gayly as the flowers and be as modest. The structure of the flowers, while of extraordinary variation, tends ever to the circular in shape. Most flowers are round, with a clearly defined center. Think, for example, of the wild or the cultivated rose, the dahlia, clematis, primrose, lily, daisy. In each the beauty of form consists largely of a perfect circle, indicated in many cases rather than plainly presented.

A circle, the dictionary tells us, is a plane figure comprehended by a single curved line called its circumference, every part of which is equally distant from a point within it called the center. A circle further means a ring, a round body, an orb or sphere. "He that sitteth upon the circle of the earth" was the prophet's way of making clear to the Israelitish seekers for Truth the magnitude and all embracing nature of Elohim, the great "I AM." Readers of Mrs. Eddy's writings will be familiar with her use of the circle or sphere as a type of real being, symbolizing infinity without beginning or end, while the straight line with beginning and end is the type of finity. The circle illustrates the nature of self-existent good; the straight line, that of a temporary and limited material sense. The circle means immortality, the straight line mortality.

Thus the lesson of the circle learned through Christian Science delivers those who "through fear of death" are all "their lifetime subject to bondage." Fear of extinction is in belief a prolific source of both sin and sickness. The choice of a ring as a gift to express unchanging affection, shows that mortals have always had a glimmering sense of the nature of eternal good. As there is no end to the ring, so love is undying, for there is no end to eternal Truth and Love. It follows that there can be no end to Truth's expression, man. Recognizing this, we find on returning to nature's lore that the evergreen is a better type of man's nature than the deciduous tree, the fir or laurel rather than the oak. The perennial flowers, springing up season after season like the daisy, come nearer the reality of things than annuals like the short lived poppy.

A practical lesson to be learned from the circle is that a sphere is one and indivisible. Each part of its circumference is essential and necessary, each to all and all to each. Every point on the circumference has exactly the same relation to the center. So Truth and Love are available to all alike. Take away the tiniest part, and you no longer have a circle; so let the humblest student of Christian Science take courage. Let him do with his whole heart his share of the work, which is always just to demonstrate Principle by doing the day's tasks as "unto the Lord." "Usefulness," our Leader says on page 8 of the Message to The Mother Church for 1900, "is doing rightly by yourself and others." Let him remember that he has that to do which no other can do for him, a necessary portion of that all of good whereby man, reflecting the divine Mind, glorifies His name as Life, Truth, and Love. In the circle we have the pledge and promise of man's eternal unity with God and of man's unity with man.

God, Spirit, not only is the center, but He is the circumference of all being, and governs the universe and man. With this fact as the structural basis of the thought and life of man, the result is harmony. Humanity can be freed from bondage to a false ego, round which thought formerly revolved, turning its gaze from self to Principle, and from self-centered to God-centered thinking and living. Personal sense is replaced by spiritual discernment, and a foe to our peace and progress has been routed and expelled from consciousness. To center thought on God and on the spiritual laws emanating from divine Mind, instead of narrowing one's conceptions, widens them continually. Spirit, being infinite, must have an infinite expression. Viewed thus, Spirit is recognized according to the Bible prophecy that God must be seen as Alpha and Omega (the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet). The lessons of the circle include the eternality, perfection, and infinity of divine Principle, God, and of the spiritual idea,—the real or ideal man.

There is something very restful and satisfying in the thought of the unchanging perfection of the circle. It furnishes a clear example of an idea in Mind. How many circles are there? There is in reality but one circle, with an infinity of manifestation. So there is one Spirit, manifested in an infinity of right ideas. As the circle is present wherever there is a consciousness to know it, so Spirit is omnipresent and has a universal expression. As a circle is infinitely adaptable, perfect alike in the tiniest and hugest coin or sphere, so Principle adapts itself to every man's need. It meets the simple questionings of the little child as promptly and satisfactorily as the most complex national or international problems. No one is afraid of losing his concept of the circle; neither need he fear to lose his understanding of Principle. Yet if one materializes the circle into money, all is reversed, and there is fear of loss, or greed of gain, till a right concept of money is arrived at as human activity expressed in mutual service, hence character, and in the final analysis, love.

At Scottish social gatherings it is a pretty custom to gather at the close of the evening in a circle round the room, and hand in hand to sing "Auld Lang Syne." In this quaint old ceremony the memory of past love and loyalty is seen to be an inspiration to faith and hope in the continuance and development of that unity. So shall all men be united in the knowledge and love of Spirit, and the straight line of finity give place to the glorious reality of eternal being, and all men be truly brothers because children of the one Father-Mother. No longer at war, they are forever one in "Love's shining circle,"—a coronet of stars for the brow of the spiritual idea as seen in John's revelation of the woman God-crowned.

Metaphysical Work

JOHN N. VAN PATTEN

An alert distribution committee in a Christian Science branch church, appreciating the fact that an increasing human activity and a larger output of literature was not entirely an evidence of progress, decided to hold a meeting for the purpose of awakening thought to better metaphysical work along the line of literature distribution. The officers of the church were invited to participate, and to one of them, whose ability as a speaker was only mediocre, the opportunity took on the aspect of an impending calamity. To him the query, What can you do to take part in the meeting? loomed up as decidedly unanswerable; but the argument finally obtained that the members of the committee, as they were directly in touch with the problems and were actually doing the work, would naturally be expected to conduct the meeting and bring the metaphysical message to those outside the ranks of active workers, and who need only be alert and receptive to the good to be unfolded.

In this instance the mental work which would necessarily have to be done for the meeting appeared in a new-old light, and it was seen that through this work one would be participating as really and potentially as the most scientific or fluent speaker who might address the committee. It was obvious that as the metaphysical sense should precede all action, it was the most important consideration either in or out of the meeting, and further, that when the human activity unfolded, the only hope of performing it correctly and achieving the proper result depended entirely upon the preliminary mental effort.

Mrs. Eddy says, "The demands of God appeal to thought only" (Science and Health, p. 182). How hopeless it is to expect divine aid in the most trivial or important, the newest or most commonplace task, without obeying this mental demand before rendering unto Cæsar the human action which mortal mind declares to be necessary. While the mental demand of distribution committee work was being considered, thought reverted to an earlier search for an understanding of metaphysics, and a review of the first steps served to quicken and renew a consciousness which had evidently been lulled into a sense of routine work, thereby losing the perspicacity which characterizes true spiritual realization.

Two questions, What is the true metaphysics which Christian Science unfolds? and How is it applied? led to a careful study of over two hundred references in Mrs. Eddy's writings where either the word metaphysics or one of its derivatives is used. The answer to the first question was found on page 69 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "Divine metaphysics is that which treats of the existence of God, His essence, relations, and attributes." The search for the modus operandi was rewarded in our Leader's statement on page 269 of Science and Health: "Metaphysics resolves things into thoughts, and exchanges the objects of sense for the ideas of Soul." The practice of metaphysics was therefore wholly a mental operation, in which every human expression had to be resolved into spiritual thought, an idea of Soul, real consciousness. Then it was plain that before any distribution work could be expressed as a human activity it must be translated into terms of thought and the spiritual idea discerned which the material action symbolized.

Often the query would arise, Why do all this preliminary work? Why not mark and mail this paper, put this periodical in the free distribution box, or pass out this piece of literature at the church door, and let it go at that? It was quickly seen, however, that if through apathy or carelessness this work should be attempted on anything but a truly metaphysical basis, it would involve a surrender to the control of mortal mind. This so-called mind is constantly and insistently claiming material creation, development, government, and eventually destruction for every spiritual idea in the universe, and unless every concept is grounded on the rock of Truth it will be swept into the vortex of material action, to be rescued and rehabilitated only through the inevitable suffering which follows wrong work.

The gospel has never been preached and the sick have never been healed through discussing ways and means of material action, or by any merely human activity. Mankind has been doing such things in varying forms ever since error claimed, "Ye shall be as gods," and has only succeeded in getting farther away from man in God's image and likeness and steeping itself in greater theological misery as a result. Vicarious metaphysical church work, where the individual performs the mechanical duties and leaves the mental to those who are faithful to the vision, never rewards its followers with the consciousness of Truth and Love which constitutes both church and heaven. It does however bring a cross which is even greater than that of the hardened sinner, for he at least imagines that he is enjoying himself during the process of treasuring up "wrath against the day of wrath;" while the mental sluggard has been miserably unsuccessful in the endeavor to console himself with a self-righteous sense of sacrifice for the time and energy bestowed.

In our Wednesday evening meetings the statement is often made that words cannot express the gratitude which is felt; and this is as it should be. Words never can; but there is also the necessity that our deeds measure up to the standard of divine metaphysics, or we are likely to be discovered in the same predicament as Martha. She was apparently doing a very creditable and necessary duty, but in giving material activity precedence over the spiritual idea she merited the rebuke for being "careful," which means "full of care, anxious," according to Webster, and "troubled about many things." Such a mental condition was not only unfit to minister to the Christ, but it actually demanded that the spiritual idea take its part, condemn metaphysics, and remand a spiritualized human consciousness to the treadmill of material action; hence Jesus' uncovering of the error and his affirmation of the better part.

Let us therefore resolve these "many things" into thoughts, and consider that the time has come to do "things" by right thinking, no longer relying upon material action to consummate even the least of our present experiences, but demonstrating man's real being and his dominion through obedience to the "still small voice" of Truth.

Passing Along Our Periodicals

ETTA V. FRIEND

One condition which seems to be quite prevalent today is the holding on to our copies of the Christian Science periodicals after they have been read. When we have read an article which has been helpful the tendency is to hoard it, as if there were a limited supply of good and we would be unable to get more. This tendency is true in regard to all our literature, but particularly so with respect to the Journal. The underlying cause of this condition is a fear which should be destroyed. We must know that there is an infinite supply from which to draw, and that God, divine Mind, is continually using innumerable channels to send us helpful thoughts which will meet all our needs.

Progress is the rule in Christian Science; we cannot go backward. Every Scientist will agree with this statement. Why then is it not used in regard to our periodicals? We receive these daily, weekly, or monthly, and each is intended to meet the need of the time when it is received. We should not need to go back to literature that is several months old; we must progress and take the new with its messages of healing. When our periodicals have been carefully read and thoroughly digested, it is time to pass them along. Occasionally, however, there is a particular article which one would like to retain for future reference, and to fill this need the Publishing Society frequently reprints such articles and issues them in the form of pamphlets.

The following experience of a Christian Scientist in regard to the retaining of periodicals may be helpful. This Scientist had always kept her literature and had saved those articles which were helpful to her. It was brought to her attention that this was unnecessary and that she ought to pass on her copies. A short time later an article appeared which seemed to meet her need, but after having read it thoroughly she decided to pass it along, and a day or two afterward did so. Later an article appeared in the Monitor which to her seemed even better than the first, but she passed it along. The next Journal contained an article which she thought was the best of all. This experience healed her of hoarding up literature, for she had proved the truth of our Leader's words, "Giving does not impoverish us in the service of our Maker, neither does withholding enrich us" (Science and Health, p. 79).

In the writer's work on the theater distribution committee she finds a greater demand proportionately for Journals than for the other periodicals, so that it becomes necessary at times to purchase copies for distribution. While this is gladly done, there would be no occasion for it if the members and regular attendants would all bring to the church the copies which they have read and can spare. It is however essential that this literature be brought as soon as possible after it has been read, as the demand for recent literature is very great.

Mrs. Eddy has written in the Manual of The Mother Church that God "supplies within the wide channels of The Mother Church dutiful and sufficient occupation for all its members" (Art. VIII, Sect. 15). This occupation may not consist of service on a committee, but it surely may be that of passing along our periodicals so as to enable the committees to do their work. This may indeed be an essential part of our duty to the church. We should remember that it is through the distribution of literature that so many of our fellow men are receiving the truth, and that they are being healed through reading the periodicals. In our own committee we heard of a beautiful case of healing, that of an acrobat whose muscles had become rigid during his act. While reading the Christian Science literature which had been placed in the rack he was instantaneously healed, so that he was able to go on with his act at the next performance. Let us then do our part in this work, for we know not how much good we are accomplishing. In the words of a well known hymn, "Ceasing to give, we cease to have."

"Take time to be holy"

EDITH AZALIA ADAMS BAILEY

There is "a time to every purpose under the heaven," the wise man tells us. An old hymn admonishes us to "take time to be holy," and this is surely worth thoughtful consideration. One of the arguments of mortal mind which is put forth as an excuse for the non-performance of various deeds and duties is that one has no time for them. We are prone to postpone until a more convenient season the disagreeable task for which we have not time enough. We leave undone simple duties with the same apology. In a mad rush in this material world, struggling to gain and maintain place and power, mankind lets slip the dearer, more spiritual treasures for this same inadequate reason, which is no reason, namely, lack of time. Friends are estranged, the finer side of nature coarsened, the dear ones who are really loved grow distant, often for the seeming want of more time to maintain the gentle amenities of friendship.

There is nevertheless time in which to do all that is worth doing. On page 238 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "People with mental work before them have no time for gossip about false law or testimony." The difficulty is in eliminating whatever is unworthy. We must take time for this, and "take time to be holy." When we do, the mists of error burn away before the "Sun of righteousness," and we are enabled to see everything in its true perspective. Selfishness is then broken down. We are glad to give time to help others to bear their burdens, in loving counsel to those who seek it, and in rich companionship with those of high ideals and aspirations, blessing each other with the interchange of spiritual ideas that grow out of valuable experiences.

Sorrow is forgotten in holy work. The time we formerly spent in vain regrets over past mistakes, in longing to have back again the human manifestation of those gone on to another state of consciousness, is now dedicated to joyful contemplation and demonstration of the truth that makes us free. Sin disappears as we reach the higher ground of spiritual consciousness. As we cultivate the fruits of the Spirit we uproot and cast out the weeds and unfruitful vines of error and false belief. We cease to have the sense of pleasure we once had in wrong doing; rather, we gain such a degree of satisfaction in right doing that it supplants any other sense. We cannot lose anything real or true, so whatever of false sense we may have had is replaced by the true.

Sickness becomes an unknown quantity when we are so busy thinking of the good and pure and true that thoughts of illness and disease can find no lodgment in our consciousness. If they seem to do so at any time, we have only to claim the perfect state of being which belongs to all God's children. Clinging steadfastly to God in the endeavor to realize the truth, we are enabled to prove anew the unvariableness of God as the divine Principle of being.

Digitized by Google

This requires time; a devotion to Truth free from interference by any other claim; a fuller realization of and a more nearly perfect obedience to the First Commandment. We must start with the letter of Christian Science as laid down in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and read and study the Bible and this text-book with care and thought, for which time is necessary. We must also strive to acquire the spirit of healing love which lives and breathes throughout the accounts of the life and teachings of Christ Jesus, as given in the New Testament. With this "Key," which interprets that life and those teachings in a scientific, practical way, it is possible for us to apply the same divine Principle in our own lives, whatever the conditions may seem to be, with similar results.

All this must be done gradually. It takes time; yet the work is worthy in itself, even if there were no further consideration. In the twenty-second chapter of Revelation we read: "My reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." The results are indeed satisfactory when we work sincerely, so we must "take time to be holy." "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," said Jesus. Our feet will turn instinctively in the direction in which we look most often, our energies bend to the carrying out of the purpose to which we devote most time,—toward holiness if we "take time to be holy." Our Leader says (Science and Health, p. 11), "If we desire holiness above all else, we shall sacrifice everything for it."

Our Little Ones

EVA LATHAM

Our beloved Leader has often assured us that little children may be taught the practical application of the great verities of Christian Science, and the following incident is an illustration of the truth of her words.

One day a Christian Scientist was sitting on a bench in a park with a little child about two years of age, watching some workmen who were adjusting wires on a telephone pole. To the little one this was evidently a hazardous undertaking, for she watched the process with a troubled countenance. Finally she turned anxiously to the Scientist and said questioningly, "Man fall?" The Scientist smiled reassuringly and shook her head, and with a relieved expression the little one continued to watch the workmen. Presently with a happy smile she turned again to the Scientist and said, "Man God's child; man can't fall." Incidents like this prove that we cannot begin at too early an age to destroy the thoughts of fear which, if entertained by children, are sure to furnish a foundation for discord of some kind.

On page 9 of "Pulpit and Press" Mrs. Eddy says, "Ah, children, you are the bulwarks of freedom, the cement of society, the hope of our race!" The Sunday school gives us the opportunity to work for and with these Scientists for the future, and we cannot too highly value the privilege of guiding their first uncertain footsteps along the path which leads ever onward, upward, and away from material sense to the realities of the Life which is without beginning and without end. The writer can look back to the solution of many personal problems through an earnest, honest desire, during an experience of eighteen years in Christian Science Sunday school work, to point the right way to children.

While none of us have as yet attained to the clear vision of the Christ, we do have the plain, simple instruction as set forth in Section 3 of Article XX of the Church Manual, which the most humble and even those least equipped from an intellectual viewpoint can easily follow and begin to build for eternity.

Selected Articles

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Derby (England) Express]

A communication from one signing himself "A Scientific Christian" refers to Christian Science in such a manner as to call for a reply.

What is a scientific Christian? I find that a Christian is defined as "one who believes or professes or is assumed to believe in Jesus Christ and the truth as taught by him;" and "scientific" means "evincing science or systematic knowledge." Therefore a scientific Christian is one who evinces a scientific or systematic knowledge of the truth as taught by Jesus the Christ. Now our Master said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." We presume, therefore, that your correspondent has this knowledge and is able to demonstrate it. We expect he heals the sick by the same method by which Jesus healed them, and reforms the sinner by the same process.

Mrs. Eddy discovered that the so-called miracles of the prophets, Christ Jesus, his disciples, and the early Christians, were performed by their understanding of the spiritual laws of divine Principle. She proved conclusively that the power which enabled the people of 900 B.C. to multiply oil and meal, raise the dead, and make iron float, was the same which enabled Christ Jesus to multiply loaves and fishes, raise the dead, and walk on the water, and is the same which in 1900 A.D. is enabling Christian Scientists to heal the sick. We are told in the general epistle of James that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Could anything be plainer, or a greater inducement to find out what is this prayer of faith?

Christian Science is quite capable of healing all manner of disease, and is doing so daily, in many cases where all other methods have failed. When mankind appeals to God first, instead of as a last resort, sickness will diminish and finally disappear through the spiritual understanding that He is an ever present help in time of trouble. Christian Science is hastening the day in which humanity will really understand the meaning of Jesus' words, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Then the so-called laws of hereditary disease will be annulled, for the people will understand that, as the commandment says, it is only to those who hate God that the visitation of the iniquities of the fathers pass to the children. However, Ezekiel foresaw the day when even this condition would be removed, and expressed himself thus: "What mean ye, that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel, saying, The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge? As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel."

[Thorwald Siegfried in The Kent (Wash.) Advertiser]

It is to be especially regretted that any one writing on behalf of the labor unions should give expression to a false concept of Christian Science, for the simple reason that Christian Science is the greatest force toward absolute justice between employer and employee in the world today. On page 226 of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy refers to Christian Science as "the voice of the herald of this new crusade" that "sounded the keynote of universal freedom, asking a fuller acknowledgment of the rights of man as a Son of God;" and on page 340 she points out that obedience to the First Commandment annihilates "whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political, and religious codes." That the practice of Christian Science is consistent with this teaching is evidenced by the well known fact that everywhere Christian Scientists are found in the forefront of those who labor for the betterment of all mankind.

[S. T. Downs in Danville (Ind.) Gazette]

In the city of Danville and vicinity many proofs have been given of the efficacy of Christian Science to heal the sick and reform the sinner, and it is doubtful if there is a community within the bounds of civilization of which this same thing could not be said. It is universally true also that those denominated Christian Scientists are intelligent, law abiding citizens; or, as it is more often expressed, Christian Science has been embraced by many of our best people.

Since the followers of Mrs. Eddy are numbered by the millions, and consist of thinking, responsible people to whom Christian Science has brought better morals, better health, and a higher citizenship, is it reasonable to suppose that they are deluded in the manner that our revivalist critic would have us believe? Is it reasonable to suppose that many physicians would abandon their practice, that a large number of ministers would give up the ministry in the older churches, and professional men sacrifice public careers to devote their lives to the promulgation of Christian Science, if the statements made by this impassioned speaker were true? Is it reasonable to suppose that multitudes of our best people have given themselves over to the furtherance of a movement that would be wholly unworthy of them? I want to answer with a very definite no.

Such attacks by the clergy are always followed by a goodly portion of people wanting to know the actual facts, and when they realize that the critic employs methods that are unbelievable in a Christian minister, they pursue their investigation to the point of knowing to a certainty that Mrs. Eddy is one of the world's greatest benefactors, and that she is so regarded by thinking and well informed people in all walks of life; also that Christian Science is, to state it moderately, in the front ranks of the leading movements for the uplift of mankind.

[H. S. Hughes, Jr., in La Crosse (Wis.) Tribune]

Our critic takes exception to Mrs. Eddy's repudiation of miracles as supernatural, a position evidently adopted by scholasticism to hide the inability to perform them. Mrs. Eddy says, "Christian marvels (and marvel is the simple meaning of the Greek word rendered miracle in the New Testament) will be misunderstood and misused by many, until the glorious Principle of these marvels is gained" (Science and Health, p. 474). She claims that the works of Jesus were divinely natural, therefore possible to every man, woman, and child who follows him understandingly, and like the Master she fortified her teaching by demonstration.

"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy is indeed a "Key to the Scriptures," unlocking its rich treasures of Spirit. Like the Master's teachings, it is inspired by Spirit and requires spiritual understanding to interpret it; for is it not "the spirit that quickeneth"? To the truth seekers—and in their ranks are ministers as well as laymen—whom creed and profession have turned empty away, there are no inconsistencies in this text-book, when studied daily in connection with the Bible; and he only who is proving this is competent to judge.

It is gratifying to recognize that our friend can see that "Christian Scientists teach one great truth, the doctrine of love." On the other hand, it is to be regretted that he cannot see and that the churches have not fully awakened to the understanding that in reality Love is the only doctrine, as it was the doctrine that Christ Jesus taught, preached, and practised, and the doctrine that the beloved disciple St. John spoke of when he said, "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love."

This Christian Science doctrine of love quickens the follower spiritually, develops him morally, heals him physically, and in fact is his all-in-all. It is reviving Christianity to the standard set by the Master after his resurrection and before his ascension, as recorded by St. Mark: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

[Lloyd B. Coate in Zanesville (Ohio) Signal]

An evangelist again assails what he thinks Christian Science to be. Christian Scientists are not seeking to force their religious views upon any one. Most people who turn to it have failed to obtain help from physicians and are dissatisfied with the general religious teachings. They longed for greater spirituality, and Christian Science has met this great need.

This critic seems to think that Christian Science is of the devil. Jesus came teaching a gospel that both healed the sick and reformed the sinner, and he proved his teaching to be true. Because he taught a practical Christianity he was accused of doing his healing work through Beelzebub. Christian Scientists preach and teach the same gospel. Jesus said, "If they have called the master of the house Beelzebub, how much more shall they call them of his household?"

Christian Science is leading mankind to God and planting their feet more firmly upon the rock, Christ. If Christian Science is of the devil, it could not lead mankind to God. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy is being understood by hundreds of thousands, who testify that its teaching brings surcease from sorrow, also peace, health, and happiness. A teaching that is based upon the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount cannot bring both blessing and cursing. Christian Science is bringing untold blessings to mankind, and therefore could not possibly damn or injure any one as this critic avers.

Mrs. Eddy devotes a chapter to Prayer in her text-book. This chapter has been the means of enabling many people better to comprehend Jesus' teaching in regard to prayer, and signs of healing have followed, even as the Master promised.

[Peter V. Ross in Humboldt Times, Eureka, Cal.]

In his address on "Modern Views of the Bible," published in the columns of your paper, a certain clergyman refers to Christian Science as "based upon the traditional view of the Bible." Then he adds by way of illustration that the traditional view warrants the conclusion that "the earth cannot be round, for the Bible speaks of its four corners. Evolution cannot be true, for the Bible says the earth was made in six days."

Christian Science takes no such view of the Scriptures. It recognizes that the Bible abounds in allegory, metaphor, and imagery, which in themselves are not intended to state facts, but which are employed as vehicles to convey spiritual truths that do not lend themselves readily to the ordinary forms of direct expression.

In the opening chapters of Genesis, for example, Christian Science does not see a creation literally begun and finished within a week, but it sees in the first chapter, and in the first five verses of the second, an allegorical representation of spiritual creation, and in the remainder of the second chapter an allegorical representation of false, material creation. The two are flatly contradictory if taken literally; yet both are true in the sense that the first portrays, allegorically, the real creation, while the second likewise portrays by way of contrast the false or unreal belief of creation. The vital truth to be discerned from this portrayal is that all which God created is good. A knowledge of this fact rules evil in all its forms out of the universe, and classifies the pretensions of evil as a false, material sense of creation.

What the clergyman styles the "traditional view of the Bible," and what he calls the "modern view," are after all of little consequence in the face of the question, What is the spiritual meaning or signification of the Scriptures? for, as Mrs. Eddy says, "the one important interpretation of Scripture is the spiritual" (Science and Health, p. 320). This must be true when it is considered that the creator is Spirit and His creation therefore necessarily spiritual. "The things of the Spirit of God," declares Paul, "are spiritually discerned." The Bible cannot be understood through any material view or interpretation, and it is because Christian Scientists have abandoned the attempt to do so and are endeavoring to understand the Bible spiritually, that they are beginning to lay hold of its promises and make its teachings a tremendous power for good in bringing relief to suffering humanity. On page 241 of Science and Health we read, "Take away the spiritual signification of Scripture, and that compilation can do no more for mortals than can moonbeams to melt a river of ice."

[W. Stuart Booth in Morgan County Republican, Brush, Col.]

The truth about Christian Science is not learned through criticism or denunciation. Although it is less than forty-two years since the first edition of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," was published by Mrs. Eddy, this new-old teaching has spread around the entire world, and is exerting a vital influence for good in the individual and community life wherever it is known. The fact that many of its adherents have been drawn from other churches, as well as from the ranks of infidelity and atheism, may account somewhat for the unfriendly attitude of some members of the clergy, who seem to have forgotten the advice offered by Gamaliel to the priests who were incensed by the healing and teaching of the disciples. This "doctor of the law" counseled the members of the clergy of that time, "Refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

Christian Science is simply the restatement of primitive Christianity; its teachings are in complete accord with those of the Master, and its practice is the fulfilment of his promise, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." It is significant that when Jesus was inquired of by John the Baptist if he were the Messiah, his healings were referred to even more than his teaching, for Jesus realized that since all true teaching must be susceptible of proof, such evidence would be of more value to John than mere argument or assertion.

The statement that there is nothing in Christian Science, no matter how often or how vehemently repeated, falls flat in the face of its accomplished Christian works, for by it not only are the sick healed and the sorrowing comforted, but men are freed from evil habits, sinners are reformed, and a broader, truer sense of love and justice is brought out in daily living. Our Master, when furnishing a gage by which to measure Christian discipleship, spoke not of creeds or doctrinal dogmas, but said simply, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

[Carl E. Herring in Central City (Neb.) Republican]

In the thirteenth chapter of Matthew is given an account of Jesus' return to his own country, and how the people scoffed at his wisdom and his healing power; then follows that remarkable statement: "And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief."

To the writer it has been an unsolved mystery why certain classes of people so eagerly hope that Christian Science is not true. They wish it so ardently that they are willing to pay for imported talent to tell them that it is not true. They buy and read literature that misrepresents Christian Science, and close their eyes against all authentic literature for fear the "delusion" they hug will prove indeed to be a delusion. Surely if some gentle soul should visit your city and offer to bring you health and happiness, you might doubt that one's ability to do it, but you would not unchain the dogs or splinter your pulpits in denunciation of the generous offer.

Suppose you never had read the New Testament, and some one had told you that in the four gospels you would find the directions left by Jesus for healing the sick and reforming the sinner. As you sat with the Bible in your hand ready to open it, would you wish that this was so, or would you hope that it was false and that Jesus left no such direction? This is what would happen. If you wished that it was true you would open the Bible and read all that Jesus said and did until you satisfied yourself as to whether it was true or not. If you wished that it was false you would not open the Bible, but would put it out of sight and send for an evangelist who would pound on the pulpit and tell you what you wished to hear,—that it was false,—and would sell you books and pamphlets that said it was false; and after it was all over you would not know what Jesus said or did, but only what the evangelist said and did. Christian Science is the gentle soul that is walking through your streets today.

Love's Guidance

MINNA MATHISON

Supernal guide, into Thy way
The seeking heart is ever led,
Nourished by Truth's immortal bread,
As Israel's band of old were fed
From day to trusting day.

The foe shall then press hard in vain,—
The waves are cleft at Thy command,
A wall of strength on either hand;
Forward we go on solid land,
And error counts its slain.

Oh, may we tune our hearts to hear
The voice that speaks from bush and cloud,—
The voice of Truth that calls aloud,
Or whispers, when the head is bowed,
To the receptive ear.

Father of lights, our guardian be,
Our guide along the mounting way,
Our comfort through the brightening day;
And, bathed in Truth's effulgent ray,
We shall rejoice in Thee.

"Thy neighbor as thyself"

In his parable of the good Samaritan our Master enjoined the practice of mercy as necessary to the fulfilling of the command, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." It will be remembered that it was related in answer to the lawyer's quite natural question, in his desire to justify himself, "And who is my neighbor?" Nor must it be forgotten how strong in that age were the traditions of caste, creed, and nationality, traditions which Jesus rebuked and swept aside in this instance even as when he gave of the water of life to the woman of this same despised race of Samaritans and healed the daughter of the Canaanite woman. Thus did he exemplify the great truth which Mrs. Eddy declares on page 13 of Science and Health, namely, that "Love is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals."

In these days of widespread human suffering, therefore, this parable of the good Samaritan is of marked significance to those who in their ministry to mankind are endeavoring to follow the Master; in other words, to be Christians. It is to be noted that Jesus did not even require that the man who had been wounded and the man who finally succored him should be of the same race or of the same religious belief; neither did he require that the healing of the wounded man should be by the same method which he himself would have employed in similar circumstances. Evidently the one thing which Jesus wished to impress upon his questioner was that the Samaritan had expressed the quality of mercy and neighborliness; that he had given what he could in the way of assistance, apparently without hesitation, although he too might have "passed by on the other side" as had the priest and the Levite, and without inquiry as to the return that might be made to him in the future, and that in doing this he had fulfilled the law of loving his neighbor as himself.

The opportunity for all mankind to fulfil this same law has not been taken away by the war that is now in progress; rather is it accentuated by the increasing needs of so large a part of humanity. That Christian Scientists have borne a generous share in providing food and shelter for the destitute and distressed, is shown by the fact that through the war relief fund over three hundred thousand dollars has been distributed in their behalf by committees of The Mother Church or through other reliable avenues of dissemination. But, gracious and generous as the giving has been, this does not close the account, for the relief work must not pause while the need continues, and so long as this is the case we are sure that Christian Scientists will exercise that mercy and compassion which are so much a part of the practice of their religion.

On page 518 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "The rich in spirit help the poor in one grand brotherhood, all having the same Principle, or Father; and blessed is that man who seeth his brother's need and supplieth it, seeking his own in another's good." The beneficiaries of the war relief fund have been of many countries and many nationalities, nor has its ministry been confined to Christian Scientists. That it has been deeply appreciated is shown by the letters of gratitude for the help extended which have already been published in these columns. The calls for giving are many and varied these days, and each urges itself upon our attention, but the peculiar function of this fund has been to aid those left helpless and dependent because of the exigencies of war, and whose distresses otherwise would have gone unrelieved. Such conditions can but make strong appeal to hearts overflowing with loving compassion, and it is unquestionable that the need is still great. Let us remember too the blessing that attended the widow's mite, and that prompt giving is doubly blessed.

Gifts

VIRGIL makes the hero of the .Eneid say, Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes,—"I fear the Greeks even bearing gifts." Mortal mind has been very apt to attach some sort of suspicion to gifts, and frequently to pervert their meaning into bribes; and perhaps the more costly the gift the greater the distrust. It was Mary's grateful, unstinted outpouring from the alabaster box which laid bare Judas' greed and made him attempt to rebuke what he wished to believe was extravagance on the part of the woman, instead of recognizing in her act a high order of noble economy. Christian Science makes ever more clear to its students that the value of a gift resides not in its size, but in the motive which accompanies it. The widow's mite meant wealth to the temple, but the charities of a Dives might have meant poverty.

In fact the psychology of the human mind, which availeth nothing without the corrective of the divine Mind, lays bare strange anomalies in the realm of riches. It is possible for a human being, a church, or a nation to be obsessed by the desire to make a display; to attempt to gild the lily, to overload, to overdecorate and overdo; to oppress the public with an artificial, meretricious pretense of wealth that palls. This is to write one's self down as poor. It is a habit which is founded upon the belief that wealth is material and substance is matter. This results in a painful effort to talk wealth while believing in poverty. The moment an individual, church, or nation has reached the scientific perception that riches are spiritual, the straining after effect ceases, because wealth is recognized as the universal gift of an infinite Father-Mother God.

The belief of personal possessions is also a bar to the giving of real gifts. It is akin to the belief of personal control, and needs to be uprooted as thoroughly as the latter. Since all good comes from God, all men have an equal source of supply. All are alike depositors in a bank with an unlimited supply; they can draw upon it indefinitely and not rob the bank or rob any other depositor. True riches are to be found "where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal;" namely, in the realm of Mind. Paradoxical as it may seem, riches can only be gained by being willing to surrender them. "Who steals my purse steals trash," the great dramatist makes one of his characters say; i.e., he who robs me of matter takes from me that which has no value, for it is a false belief. Many a man has not awakened to true riches until deprived of the material counterfeit, until the veil is torn aside and reality revealed.

There is danger of pauperization through the sense of personal possession. He who thinks he is the owner of what God has made may seem temporarily rich, but must be spiritually lacking. Christian Scientists are taught these scientifically self-evident truths, but need to be warned constantly of the danger of impoverishment either through the fear of giving or of the unwillingness to give. When Christian Scientists were few and raised their thousands in response to their Leader's call to build The Mother Church edifice, they surprised the world, but they also saved themselves from being impoverished. When Christian Scientists were many and raised nearly two millions for the extension to The Mother Church, by their much giving they broke the law which argued that they could not receive. Hence, if we would not perish in the swamp of selfishness, let us give, and give again, and keep on giving.

Mrs. Eddy spent her life making gifts, and expressed much gratitude for whatever she received in return for her unbounded generosity. She early felt and taught that the greatest gift of all is love. In a message to The Mother Church are the following words, to be found on page 123 of Miscellany: "Our unity and progress are proverbial, and this church's gifts to me are beyond comparison—they have become a wonder! To me, however, love is the greater marvel, so I must continue to prize love even more than the gifts which would express it."

Wisdom

THROUGHOUT the Scriptures we find many references to wisdom, and it is most unequivocally stated that no other possession of humanity equals it in value. We frequently find the word in conjunction with understanding, and a careful study of this subject shows that wisdom may be regarded as the ripe product of spiritual understanding. We also find that wisdom is differentiated from knowledge, which, Paul tells us, "shall vanish away," whereas the wisdom which is based upon the understanding of God and His law abides eternally. In the Old Testament we read that wisdom guided Moses in all his work, and the artificers who wrought for the tabernacle in the early days were said to be filled with wisdom and understanding. Again, when we come to the time of Solomon we are told that he was preeminent in this respect, and the book of Proverbs, which it seems was prepared during his reign, places a value upon wisdom above aught else. The ruby, which was regarded as the most valuable of all gems, suffered by comparison with wisdom; indeed, those who desired wisdom were bidden to sacrifice all things in order to gain it.

In Mrs. Eddy's teachings we find great emphasis laid upon wisdom and understanding; and those who are striving to work out their problems in accordance with her teachings know that if they fail to attain the desired results in any direction, it is because they have not yet gained that wisdom which comes from God. Respecting this Mrs. Eddy says, "Know thyself, and God will supply the wisdom and the occasion for a victory over evil" (Science and Health, p. 571). One very important step toward the attainment of wisdom is here pointed out; and while all think they are willing to know God, they are not so willing to know themselves and thus reach victory over evil of every sort. Even in our human affairs it is easy to trace discord and failure to the lack of wisdom; and we should never forget that if we lack wisdom the promise is that if we turn to God, divine Mind, He is ready to supply the sincere seeker, giving "to all men liberally, and upbraideth not."

St. Paul makes clear the distinction between the so-called wisdom of this world, which he says is "foolishness with God," and the wisdom which is of God and which is a quality of the divine nature. He also makes it clear that the healing work which he accomplished was the result of his attainment in this respect, when he says that his work was "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." To the Christian Scientist this subject is of the most vital importance, because at each step of the way divine wisdom must be sought; for otherwise there will be the need of retracing our footsteps, possibly with regret for the needless mistakes made, and finding again that which might have been ours all the time. In Proverbs we read: "I wisdom dwell with prudence . . . Counsel is mine," and it is surely well worth while to seek until we find it.

In all our experiences we shall be greatly helped by pondering deeply our Leader's words on page 321 of Science and Health, when she tells of Moses' preparation for his great life work of liberating his people and preparing them to receive the divine law which has come down through all the ages as a true protection to humanity. Mrs. Eddy points out how Moses was taught by an object lesson to deal fearlessly with the error which sought to obstruct his progress. When his rod was thrown down and he saw it as a serpent, he was terrified, but, our Leader says, "wisdom bade him come back and handle the serpent, and then Moses' fear departed." In this we too shall find the way to go steadily forward toward the spiritual goal which of old was called the promised land; and as we advance toward it in true obedience to the demands of Science, we shall hear, as did St. John, the words which echo throughout the universe, "Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever."

War Relief Fund

As shown by the Treasurer's report at the annual meeting, the major part of the war relief fund has already been forwarded for distribution. The need still continues, and contributions sent to Adam H. Dickey, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass., will be promptly acknowledged.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

NEVADA.—Much of the increased friendliness of the Nevada newspapers toward Christian Science during the year from Nov. 1, 1915, to Oct. 31, 1916, has been due to The Christian Science Monitor. Wherever the Monitor has been regularly exchanged with or occasionally sent to the local editors, many items have been reprinted, often with kindly comments. More than sixty such items have been reprinted during the year in more than fifteen of the few Nevada papers. During the preceding year the number of items so reprinted was only nineteen. Many of the newspapers, moreover, have obtained material and inspiration for editorials and special articles from the Monitor. In this way the influence of this paper for good is constantly broadening in Nevada. All the distribution of authorized Christian Science literature, in fact, is helping in the healing work by enlarging the thought of the community, including that of the Christian Scientists themselves.

There have been 2801 letters received and sent during the year, and Christian Science literature has been distributed in the following amounts: 6295 Sentinels, 859 Journals, 119 Heralds, 29,990 Monitors, 1148 lectures, 711 pamphlets, and 624 miscellaneous pieces, making a sum total of 39,746.

Street, near Morgan Street. The church was organized at a meeting of the members of the society last night [May 2]. It is to be incorporated, and plans are now under consideration for the construction of a new edifice.—Buffalo Courier.

North Yakima, Wash.—This morning [May 23] the deals were completed which have been pending between First Church of Christ, Scientist, and the Woman's Club for the sale to the club of the property on North Third Street, opposite the Public Library, and the purchase by the church of the two lots at the northeast corner of Naches and A Streets. The Woman's Club paid $4875 in cash for the church property, and the church paid $5800 in cash for the Coffin property, assuming the assessments and taxes thereon. The church has leased its former property from the club until Oct. 1, and services will be continued there until that date. A building committee has been appointed, and a local architect has been employed to draw preliminary plans for the church building.—North Yakima Republic.

Huntington Park, Cal.—Favorable progress in the perfecting of plans and the arrangements for actual construction work on the edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, at Irvington and Rugby Avenues, was reported yesterday [May 28]. The edifice is to be located on a lot 100 by 150 feet. The seating capacity of the auditorium will be four hundred, but that can be practically doubled by an ingenious arrangement of the Sunday school and reading rooms, as well as the balcony in the second story. These can all be made into one big auditorium. When completed the edifice will represent an expenditure of fourteen thousand dollars, exclusive of the cost of the pipe organ.

Fort Dodge, Iowa.—The contract for the erection of an edifice for First Church of Christ, Scientist, has been let. The excavation of the property, corner of Sixth Avenue North and Twelfth Street started about June 1. The cost of the new structure is estimated at twenty-five thousand dollars, and the building will be finished about Jan. 1, 1918.

Lead, S. Dak.—The Christian Scientists are moving into their new home at 509 West Main Street today [May 4]. About a month ago they purchased this property, which is considered one of the best locations in town, and have thoroughly remodeled the building, thus transforming it into a most artistic and comfortable church.—Lead Call.

The Lectures

Marquette, Mich. (First Church).—William R. Rathvon, lecturer; introduced by J. M. Longyear, who said in part:—

In these strenuous times it is well to consider the signboard at the railway crossing which reads, "Stop, Look, Listen." The world is asking, Has civilization collapsed? Has Christianity failed? Is there a Christian civilization? If so, what is it? Are there any Christians, and where are they? I am optimist enough to believe that great good is coming to humanity after all the turmoil and strife which causes mankind to ask these questions, and I believe that the lecturer this evening will tell us of a real, practical Christianity which may be used by all and for all mankind, on which may be built a permanent peace and a lasting civilization.—The Mining Journal.

Memphis, Tenn. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Daisy B. Norred, who said in part:—

As the works of Jesus and his apostles were the fulfilling of the prophecy given by the prophets, so the works of Christian Science today are the fulfilling of the prophecy given by Jesus and his apostles. Then we have St. Paul's prophecy to the Ephesians, "That in the ages to come he [God] might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us." These prophecies have found their expression or fulfilment in this age through a noble woman, Mrs. Eddy, who experienced this same divine influence, searched the Scriptures, and recognized in the lives of the prophets, of Jesus and his apostles, an underlying law which she knew to be the law of God that heals the sick. To her discovery of this law of God she wisely and fittingly gave the name Christian Science.

Bellingham, Wash. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by C. A. Swartz, who said in part:—

The one thought underlying all human activity is the desire for happiness. The wish to gain that state of existence predominates in the heart of all mankind. It is looked for and sought for in various ways,—in some great achievement of human endeavor, in power and influence, in the possession of great wealth. But alas, it will be found that this is but temporary and that "all is vanity." After all these human endeavors for happiness in things that are merely temporal, the weary wanderer, the tired heart, turns for relief to the only true source, things divine.

Many different churches, sects, and cults have been organized to point the way to happiness. Some fifty years ago the revered Leader of the Christian Scientists discovered that the true way to health and happiness consists in living in harmony with absolute good, God, and named her discovery Christian Science. The great truths it teaches are attested by the many men and women who as a result of its teachings enjoy better health and are happier.

The Bellingham Herald.

Pasadena, Cal. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Seymour W. Condon, who said in part:—

The fundamental teachings of Christian Science are not new. They are as old as the Christian era. They are fundamentals of true Christianity itself. Had the followers of the Master remained true to his teachings and practice there would have been no necessity for what is known as the Christian Science movement. As it is, this movement is one of the most remarkable and significant of our time. Possibly it is the most remarkable of them all, proving that those teachings of Christianity's Founder which have been neglected or repudiated by the religious world are the ones to which humanity is turning in time of need. Christian Science is meeting the demand for a practical, "applied" Christianity that shall stand in the world the acid test of utility. Christian Science is a religion to live by,—a religion of real consecration and service, yet full of peace, optimism, and joy. Jesus certainly never intended that his teachings should be made a sepulcher for either the energy or the joy of life.

Logan, Utah (Society).—Bliss Knapp, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Lois C. Hayball, who said in part:—

Today as never before the world needs a clearer idea of spiritual things. In order to obtain a clearer perception we must start with a clear concept of God. For centuries men have believed God the creator of both good and evil, and that these two forces were constantly warring in His creation, bringing untold misery to men in every age. Christian Science begins by declaring that God is infinite good, and that man as a child of God inherits the right to freedom, health, happiness, and holiness.

ALTON, ILL. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by F. L. Norton, who said in part:—

Christian Science rightly defines God. This Science of Christ is not a talking religion. It does not seek to solve the world's problems by discussing them. It has no controversy with other religions. Its rapid growth and recognition throughout the world are due not to arguments or sermons, but rather to demonstration. Christian Science insists upon this conclusive proof; it demonstrates every step of the way. A lecture on Christian Science is an occasional thing, while the constant daily program is demonstration. The adherents of this Science are hourly demonstrating Truth, even as our divine Master demonstrated his union with God by healing the sick and replacing discord with harmony.

MONTROSE, COL. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Martha Ripley, who said in part:—

We are all one in our desire for the truth. Christian Science, the law of God understood and demonstrated, is proving to the satisfaction of all who seek it that Truth is found, and found at the feet of the living, ever present Christ. Why not, when he told his watchful disciples, "Lo, I am with you alway"? What this living Christ was to the sick, the sinful, the sorrowing, the dying, when Jesus was here, he is to us today.

Through this spiritual understanding of God and the relation we bear to this loving Father-Mother, Christianity is found to be scientific, and can be proven in our daily lives. Some one has called Christian Science the business man's religion, because it clears his vision, removes anxiety, and strengthens his ability to meet the needs of the hour. It brings sunshine and love into the home, peace and comfort to the burdened ones of the earth.—Montrose Press.

CINCINNATI, OHIO (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by W. S. Sterrett, who said in part:—

We feel that your presence indicates your appreciation of the privilege of hearing authorized statements made in reference to a Science that in the last fifty years has girdled the globe and brought hope, health, joy, and peace to men and women of every country. The seemingly miraculous growth of Christian Science is not to be wondered at if we remember the rule established by Christ Jesus when he said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." This growth has been the result of its accomplishments,—its fruits.

BOWLING GREEN, KY. (Society).—Bicknell Young, lecturer; introduced by Circuit Judge McKenzie Moss, who said in part:—

We all agree as to the saving mission of Jesus. We believe in the efficacy of the atonement. We all believe that man's salvation depends upon faith in him and following after him. But Christian Scientists believe also that his command to heal the sick was intended for all of his followers; that it is an imperative duty, which must be obeyed if one would be a true follower. As far as I know, no other Christian denomination entertains such a belief. This I am persuaded is the fundamental difference between Christian Scientists and other Christians. And whatever may be my own belief, or yours, on this point, the world is coming to a recognition of the fact that this religion—not a new religion, but a new expression of an old religion—is having a tremendous influence in the moral and spiritual progress of the human race. One must blind his eyes to the evidence of his own senses to fail to observe that this religion gives to a devout believer a quality of spiritual repose which is unusual and very much to be desired. Whether I am able or not to accept the tenets of this religion, I confess my utter inability to ignore the indisputable proof, brought in many instances to my own intimate knowledge, that under its benign agency wrecked and wretched men have been reclaimed and redeemed, the lame have been made to walk and the blind to see.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Campbell MacCulloch, who said in part:—

We are constantly being told by observers that we are living in an intensely practical age, and that the gospel of efficiency demands that everything shall justify its existence by rendering definite results on the penalty of being forced aside to give place to something else that will guarantee these results.

When Christian Science was discovered by Mrs. Eddy in 1866 it was placed at once upon a thoroughly practical foundation, if I may say so. Mrs. Eddy antedated the efficiency movement by applying it to her own religious discovery, and demanding that the only test of a man's religion should be the efficiency test established by Jesus of Nazareth when he said, "These signs shall follow them that believe; . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." It is this very practicality that has placed Christian Science in the forefront of all religious movements; it is this proffer of proof first and theory afterward which has given it an impetus that makes it the spiritual wonder of the world.

RIDGEWOOD, N. J. (First Church).—Clarence W. Chadwick, lecturer; introduced by Harry S. Marx, who said in part:—

We are hearing a great deal about enlisting. On page 450 of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says, "The Christian Scientist has enlisted to lessen evil, disease, and death." To lessen evil the United States recently entered the great war. To lessen disease and death has been the endeavor of humanity for centuries. The Christian Scientist therefore stands shoulder to shoulder with all those who, to the best of their ability and as their conscience leads them, are striving to lessen evil, disease, and death.

Christian Scientists do not believe that Christianity is a failure, but if the teachings of Christianity are not lived, then failure is sure to follow. Really to believe is to understand. Christian Science teaches that the works of Jesus were the result of the application of an unchanging, unfailing, divine law which is operative today as it was in Jesus' time, and this law may be applied by every one in the proportion that he attains the purity of thought and the consciousness of good which Jesus possessed.

Testimonies of Healing

[Translated from the French]

I owe Christian Science a great debt of gratitude for all it has done for me since I became acquainted with its teachings. For many years I suffered with a stomach trouble accompanied with violent pain in the back, and every now and then I was under the care of physicians at cliniques. At intervals the trouble became so aggravated that I had to stay in bed for months, this being the only way in which I was able to retain a little food. The last physician whom I consulted prescribed the use of a stomach pump as the only means which in his opinion would bring relief, though a cure could not be effected thereby. He informed me that I would have to make use of this device for the rest of my life.

I had been applying this treatment for several months without obtaining anything like satisfactory results, when I made the acquaintance of a Christian Scientist, who told me of the great message which Christian Science is bringing to mankind. This was in 1910. I immediately felt that my needs would be met as much with regard to my physical condition as to the religious beliefs to which I subscribed, as these more particularly had ceased to bring me the needed comfort. I asked this person to give me treatment, and in taking this step I abandoned all material means, as the truth which had just been brought to my knowledge had made me lose all faith in them. Inside of a week my health improved considerably, and within a month I was completely restored. Although I did not know the English language, I asked the person who had treated me so kindly to secure for me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Next I bought an English-French dictionary, with the help of which I succeeded in reading this precious book. Since then—this was six years ago— I have felt better both mentally and physically than at any time before. I have often had the opportunity at home of proving what I understood of Truth by doing healing work.

In the little mountain village where I stayed with my parents until the fall of 1915, there were others besides myself who had had the privilege of knowing the truth and of experiencing its beneficent effects. At this time there is a small group of people there who, without any knowledge of the English language and without any higher education, have succeeded with the help of a dictionary in studying every day part of the Lesson-Sermon, and who have been enabled to demonstrate the truth in their homes. This proves that Christian Science is within the reach of all who really desire to know the truth and to make it their own.

The first sentence in the Preface of our text-book, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, today is big with blessings," has become a truth of which I make daily use. I have a feeling of deep respect and gratitude toward our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and I am thankful for the consecrated work of the one who put into my hands the book Science and Health, which opens to us the doors of life and immortality. Verily, God is Love.

J. Baudet-Amiguet, Lausanne, Switzerland.

One of my little girls said to me not long ago, after reading some of the testimonies in our periodicals: "Mother, why don't we write a testimony? Christian Science has done so much for us." And I thought, Why, indeed!

Christian Science came to me a number of years ago, when I was greatly in need of help and guidance, both physical and mental, and it met my need wonderfully. Through the years that followed, though at times almost resenting what seemed the hard sayings of Science, I was never able to get very far away from the gleam of understanding I had of its teachings. Looking back I can see now how divine Love was guiding, and can truly say I am thankful for all the varied and many times seemingly bitter experiences through which I passed.

I was not brought up a Christian, but the reading of Science and Health gave me a God in whom I could believe. It gave me the Bible, and taught me how and why its truths were for me in the present as well as for a people in the remote past. If Christian Science had done nothing else for me but this, I should feel that I owed our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, an endless debt of gratitude; but for many years it has been my only religion and my only physician. My two children do not know by experience what medicine means, and are daily learning how to put into practice the lessons learned in Sunday school. We have had many opportunities of proving the efficacy of Christian Science as a "very present help in trouble."

One experience was particularly helpful to me. Just before and during the Christmas holidays one year, the children had the measles, and Science brought them out of it quickly, both being up and at play in a day or two. The weather was dark and gloomy, and one day the older girl was discovered, after two hours of reading in a dark corner, by a member of the family not interested in Science. The fear of injury to the eyes was voiced, and next morning the child's eyes were in what seemed a serious condition. This did not readily yield, and the child herself seemed to be in a frenzy of fear.

On New Year's day, which was Friday, the symptoms seemed aggravated, and after bathing the child's face and eyes with warm water, I turned away with the feeling that I had reached the limit of my understanding. I went into a room by myself and presently, as clearly as if spoken, came the words, "Perfect love casteth out fear." The whole dismal picture dropped from my thought instantly, and I went upstairs light-heartedly to prepare to accept an invitation for the day which I previously had no thought of accepting. On my return that evening the child's eyes were marvelously improved,—almost normal in fact,—and the following week she went to school with not a trace of the trouble. There has never been the slightest return of the condition. This is but one of the many experiences that have helped us, because through them we learn how to trust and to prove the nearness and allness of divine Love.

I would like to express my grateful appreciation of the loyal workers at headquarters, those who are laboring so faithfully that the truth discovered by Mrs. Eddy may be preserved and given to us in all its purity in our literature, including our beloved periodicals, the Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor.—Maud P. Miller, Modesto, Cal.

Over five years ago I became interested in Christian Science through the healing of one of our children after he had been given up by the attending physicians, all of whom said he could not live longer than two hours. Christian Science treatment was then lovingly given, with the result that our little boy had entirely recovered and was playing in his crib within this time. As I was totally ignorant in regard to the teachings of Christian Science and its healing power, this healing seemed to me miraculous.

A desire to know more of the methods of this truth made me take up the study of the text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. We discarded the use of medicine in any form, and have since then depended entirely on Christian Science in time of need. Physical, mental, and financial troubles have all been overcome through the understanding and practice of the truth.

Some of our trials would to outsiders seem to require the exercise of a great deal of faith, but we knew the all-power of Truth and the ever-presence of divine Love. In the summer of 1913 our youngest boy was attacked by a cat and severely bitten in the hands and face. Blood-poisoning set in, and as I had seen the child attacked and the condition of the animal, a great fear seemed to darken my thought; but with the loving help of a practitioner this fear was overcome, and the healing of the child was accomplished in a short time.

One day our little girl fell from a height of seven feet, striking her head on a stone pavement, and was seemingly very badly injured. I took her up, and through the realization that God is Life and everywhere present, as taught in Christian Science, this little girl was saved for us. Within a week the protruding parts of the skull were back in place, and the little girl is now the reflection of health and happiness.

I myself have been healed of an attack of heart failure. I was seized in the night, following some days of strenuous physical exertion, and for several hours the condition was very serious; but there was no thought of yielding to fear or of giving up to error, and with the faithful help of a practitioner normal circulation and the manifestation of Life, Truth, and Love were established. Peace and healing came, and a quiet sleep followed.

When I realize what Christian Science has done for us and for our family of four children, my heart never ceases to express love and gratitude for this revelation of the truth, which indeed makes free.

ANNA B. PELLIKAN, Jersey City, N. J.

I wish to corroborate my wife's testimony, and to say that I am more grateful than words can express for these healings, and for the peace and happiness which have come into our home through Christian Science. I am truly thankful to God, and grateful to our revered Leader for this saving truth.—JOHN PELLIKAN.

[Translated from the German]

This testimony is given with a sense of deep gratitude for the blessings received through Christian Science. This religion was presented to me as a means of helping a dear relative, but I rejected it, for while I thought that it was a beautiful teaching, I was unwilling to leave my old church, which I loved. Some time later I went through very sad experiences, and while in a state of utter discouragement and depression I was again approached with Christian Science by the same dear acquaintance. This time I saw the good that was coming.

I attended the meetings and began to study Science and Health in English, which at that time was the only way possible. I tried my best to make headway, out of love for the relative, who could do nothing for himself as he was in a sanitarium. I never thought of myself, although I was ailing considerably and there were faults to be eradicated, but as a result of my honest endeavor and selfless love the troubles almost all dropped away from me. How great was my joy whenever I attained to a clearer realization of Science! This joy, together with gratitude, makes everything so bright and beautiful, and helps us to go onward even in the darkest hours.

Through the reading of our text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I have been healed of neurasthenia, of stone in the kidneys, of bowel complaint of years' standing, and of severe attacks of illness to which I used to be subject every winter and which I dreaded. Since I have had Christian Science I have known no sick-bed. Whenever an error has tried to assert itself, I have always been able to overcome it through the understanding of the perfect nature of God's creation and of its inseparable unity with the divine Principle of good.

Being well has meant a great deal to me, as I was left alone years ago and have had to attend to my vocation daily; but the spiritual uplift which I experienced through the study of Christian Science means still more to me. To know that we have nothing to fear, that we are always hid in divine Love, is wonderful indeed. That God, good, fills all space, and that evil has no power and is but an illusion, a false belief which can never touch our true being,—this recognition has given me peace and rest. Whereas formerly I was dissatisfied with life, tired of all its disappointments, and used to take the gloomiest view of things, now I am a happy and contented woman.

When the war broke out, Christian Science proved a great help to me. Our work in a large office came to a standstill, and I was discharged with my coworkers. I did not worry, as I had learned that God is our only source of supply, and that His means of supply are inexhaustible. I remained perfectly calm in the midst of the excitement and realized that we are already cared for by divine Love. Help came very soon in that an occupation was found for us all, to which we adjusted ourselves. We returned to our former positions long ago and are doing much better than formerly. This clearly showed me the truth of the words in Science and Health, "Whatever blesses one blesses all" (p. 206).

I am very grateful, in view of the consequences of this terrible war, for the recognition that the true man, God's idea, is unimpaired and perfect, since God alone is his life. I most gratefully remember the steadfast love and care of our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who worked with so much consecration and self-sacrifice in order to be able to bring mankind this great blessing. Bravely and firmly she has stood against a material world, and in full recognition of the all-power and ever-presence of God she proved the truth of the saying, "One with God is a majority," for which we cannot be too grateful to her. It shall be my endeavor to grow steadily in the understanding of Christian Science and to walk in the way thus pointed out.

JOHANNA HOHMANN, Berlin, Germany.

In October, 1915, I arrived in this country with my husband, feeling very homesick and lonesome and knowing not one word of English; but divine Love guided us to the house of a Christian Science family, where we were told about this religion with its wonderful healing power. On Thanksgiving day we attended our first Christian Science service and were much impressed, so started to study the text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. As my health was very poor, I asked for help from my new friend, who was a practitioner. It was much work for her to make me understand what I needed to know, but the declaring of the one Mind brought my first demonstration. I learned the language easily and only by means of studying Science and Health.

From this time on I had blessing after blessing. The homesickness left me, and I was healed of severe headaches, a general nervous condition, and colds. These wonderful demonstrations encouraged me to tell my friend about another trouble, as I had some hope that it would be possible to heal this too. Before I left Switzerland I had lost the greater part of my wonderful hair. I tried everything possible ordered by different doctors, and had electrical applications, but all was without results,—the rest of the hair was falling out very rapidly and I had to wear a wig. The afternoon I told my friend about this, she gave me a treatment and told me to be sure that nothing can be lost, that God's idea is complete. The result of the Christian Science treatment was really surprising, wonderful. It was in January, 1916, that treatment was started, and in August the new hair was about ten inches long and quite thick. It was truly a wonderful demonstration, and I know that what God doeth is done forever.

I am most thankful for all these blessings which have come to me through Christian Science. I thank God for the life and teaching of our Master, Christ Jesus, and for Mrs. Eddy's loving work in revealing through our text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," this wonderful Christ-teaching to this age.

Milly Hutton, New York, N. Y.

I am also deeply grateful for Christian Science, and can truly testify to the statements made by my wife. Through her wonderful healing I was led to begin the study of Christian Science, and today I would not be without it. I have had many physical healings, for which I am most grateful, but there are no words to express my gratitude for the spiritual uplift that came to me through reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

Christian Science has changed my life entirely; it has helped me a lot in business, and has made a better husband of me. I am sincerely trying to make further progress in the understanding of this wonderful truth, which was so lovingly shown to us by our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

Edward J. Hutton.

I have a great desire to tell of my thankfulness for Christian Science and for all it has done and is doing for me. It was fear and distress of mind that brought me into Christian Science. I had help for this; and very quickly, yet gently, the healing came. Through study and a great longing to know more I have been healed of every sickly thought and habit, for I had previously been greatly shackled with semiinvalid ways as a result of having been in bed for five months from nervous breakdown. When I was allowed to get up, most of my time was spent in inaction, under numberless rules of what I must not do. Now I can do everything and am strong and well.

I have also been greatly helped in so-called pyorrhea, a condition of the gums which needed constant care. I am daily more and more thankful for these many healings, but realize that they would mean little without the spiritual uplift, the wonderful joy in life which makes me so full of thankfulness to God and of gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy. For the knowledge that God is "the same yesterday, and today, and forever," by which we are enabled to help others, I am earnestly grateful.

Elsa H. Ward, Bournemouth, England.

So much good has come to me through the Christian Science periodicals that I desire to give my testimony, hoping in this way to scatter farther the seeds of hope, joy, and courage. Several years ago, on a Wednesday morning, my daughter and I were engaged in some mirthful exercises when she accidentally scraped my eyeball with her finger nail, causing great pain. I declared the truth as revealed through the teaching of Christian Science and tried to attend to some morning duties, but the pain became so severe that in less than half an hour I had to retire to a darkened room. The eye was swollen and inflamed, and I was unable to read, but I clung firmly to the truth that had on many other occasions proved sufficient to meet my every need.

The error which tried all that day to gain a place in my consciousness was that I would not be able to go to church that night and perform my duty as first reader, but I met the suggestion every time with the truth that I could do anything that was right and good for me to do, and thus fear and discouragement were kept out. About six o'clock that evening a lady who lived next door came in, and on seeing me immediately asked what was the trouble. After being told she remarked that a brother had an eye injured in the same manner, and partial blindness resulted. I however had no fear of such results, for Christ Jesus the Wayshower said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and after a few moments of silent prayer I found myself free,—free from pain, inflammation, scars, or blindness. I went to church that evening and performed my duties without any inconvenience. My eye is as natural and good in every respect as before.

I cannot find words with which to express my thankfulness to God for such deliverance and healing, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for making the way so plain that none need err therein.

Bertha M. Bell, Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, Canada.

I can fully verify the testimony of my wife, for I know that nothing but the knowledge of Truth as taught by Christian Science was resorted to, and with such harmonious results as to make us feel deeply grateful for the understanding of Christian Science, which never fails us in overcoming every problem that arises from time to time in our experience.—W. J. Bell.

I would like to express my gratitude for the many blessings I have received in Christian Science. About eleven years ago physicians gave up all hope for me, and advised me not to take any more medicine, as no medicine on earth could help me, for I was in the last stages of lung trouble. Besides this I was almost blind.

When Christian Science was recommended to me I had no faith in it, but finally through suffering I was led to seek a practitioner and ask for treatment. My healing was slow, as I did not study as I should have done; but now I do all the housework for a family of five. For ten years I have relied on Christian Science for myself and children. It has met our needs at all times, and we have had many experiences of instantaneous healing. A few years ago I had the privilege of class instruction. I am also very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for revealing this beautiful truth to us, and for the Christian Science periodicals.

Nannie Duchemin, Colfax, Wash.

For some years I was a sufferer from stomach trouble, and finally submitted to two operations. I was in the hospital about to undergo a third, when a conversation with a friend led me to try Christian Science. I left the hospital and called a practitioner to help me, also read and studied Science and Health. Though the pain at times seemed more than I could bear, it was finally overcome and I was completely healed. Before having treatment in Christian Science I had to wear a bandage to keep the stomach in place, but it was left off one morning and has never been worn since.

I am glad that this truth has come into my life, and know that it is God, divine Love, who has made me whole. Truth is to me as the sunshine to the flowers. I am thankful to God for my regeneration, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving Christian Science to the world, as well as to all those who have helped me to gain some understanding of it.

E. H. Brown, Santa Barbara, Cal.

Words cannot express my gratitude for the comfort and peace which has come to me through reading Science and Health, which I esteem above any worldly possession. Besides numerous other errors, an unpleasant disposition has been overcome. As a child I had a high temper and was very stubborn, always blaming some one else or my surroundings when things went wrong. My mother tried to break me of this habit, but to no avail. Not until I came into Christian Science did I realize that it was my own mental home which needed to be cleansed from wrong thinking and the habit of taking offense. When I applied the truth and stood "porter at the door of thought," as our Leader so wisely counsels us on page 392 of Science and Health, the temper soon yielded and eventually was overcome.

I am now happier and freer than ever before, but long for a better understanding of the truth and to reflect more of that Love which is universal. I look forward to the time when we shall all know the truth that makes free.

Rose Segesseman, Amazonia, Mo.

As the testimonies of others have aided me, so may mine in turn lead some weary seeker of the truth into the light of divine Love. I had never been very strong, and suffered from severe bilious attacks and headaches supposed to be caused by my eyes; but these ailments have passed into their native nothingness, and I have had little trouble since my entry into Christian Science nearly ten years ago.

It has been my good fortune to have had class instruction and also to work in the Sunday school, all of which has greatly helped me in the understanding of my relationship to God. During my high school course I was absent very little as compared with my old record, and Science made my school work much easier, for I learned that there is one Mind, intelligence, and that one divine and all powerful.

I am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her discovery of Christian Science, and only hope that I may aid in furthering her good work in its growth and perpetuity.

Mrs. C. A. Shadbolt, Red Cloud, Neb.

Because I enjoy reading the testimonies in the Sentinel I wish to send mine for publication so that others may know of the help I have received through Christian Science. Over five years ago I was healed of what the doctor pronounced Bright's disease. It would be difficult to name all the benefits received since then, but I will mention a few. At the birth of our baby I had treatment with good results. He is now over three years old and has never had any medicine. When he was ten months old he was very sick for a day and night, but a practitioner treated him and in less than an hour the fever dropped and he was free.

One of the greatest blessings that has come to me is the overcoming of the desire for snuff. I have been entirely free from it for five years. Not long ago I was protected in a runaway by holding to the thought that God is all power and ever present and will take care of His children. For all these blessings, and more, I am indeed grateful.

Mrs. A. M. Howell, Mount Olive, N. C.

[George H. Gilbert, Ph.D., D.D., in The Biblical World]

We have the great and comforting assurance that the distinctive greatness of Jesus presupposes no elements that are not present in some degree in every human spirit. That greatness is the goal set before his followers, not in mockery, as essentially unattainable by them, but in divine hope and confidence. This goal they are ever to approach, and in approaching they find redemption and peace. What Jesus experienced of God and love, we may experience in some measure, and through that experience we come consciously into spiritual life. The greatness of Jesus is a prophecy of the ultimate greatness of humanity. It is not a fact to make man despair, but to breathe into him an undying inspiration.

[The Watchman-Examiner]

The days upon which we have fallen cannot fail to make special and extraordinary demands upon the pulpit. The church must stand for love of and devotion to country. There must be no possibility of doubt on this point even in the mind of her most inveterate and envenomed critic. Least of all must her chief medium of expression, her mouthpiece, be silent or speak with uncertain sound. The minister can never be a partizan, but he must always be a patriot. He cannot use his pulpit for political propaganda, but he must use it for a prophet's promulgation of God's high truth in its bearing upon national as well as individual life and affairs. This is true of any time and of all times.

[Western Christian Advocate]

In presenting its claims Christianity proves to be more than a creed and a ritual. It becomes a life, which at the last analysis proves to be a collection of related experiences. It claims that a man ought to get results in his life from his religious faith, and such results as will be amenable to reason and investigation. The world persists in asking, Will your creed work in every-day life, will your faith show tangible results in supporting high resolution in behalf of upright living? The claim of the followers of Christ is that his religion produces experience that furnishes evidences worthy of the closest and most searching investigation, and that on this rock Christianity stands or falls.

[The Christian Intelligencer]

Just as Christianity has furnished the world with the high ideals which loom up so radiant against the dark background of a world struggle, so it alone is responsible for whatever steps of progress the war has enabled humanity to take. Similarly, also, Christianity points the way of deliverance to a war stricken world. It alone provides the basis of an understanding which will make possible a cessation of hostilities. Christianity alone is rich in those principles of life which will promote the spirit of love and good will and which will exorcise the demon of hatred.

[The Congregationalist]

It is always hard for the prophets of justice and the apostles of love to work hand in hand; but neither ever brings in the kingdom without the other. Justice without love is cold; love without justice is sentimental. Never was there a greater need than now that these two great groups of persons who are trying to mediate the character of God to the modern world should see eye to eye. Each attribute alone is imperfect; together they define the duty of the religious man who would reveal God to his world.

[Rev. William H. Bown in The Living Church]

The great desire of mankind is for happiness, and we cannot make much of a success on any plane unless we are happy in our task. The Christ offers us blessedness rather than happiness, a well-spring of joy within, not dependent on conditions or on what happens. Nay, even adverse circumstances are made to minister to that joy through our using them to suffer with the Christ and so rise with him. Does the world need anything more than it does guidance into true joy amid the sundry and manifold changes of the world? That means that we must go through the same experience the first disciples went through: dying to carnal notions of life and rising to the spiritual plane. It means that the pentecostal gift must take the things of Christ and show them unto us; nay, that the whole experience of the Christ —birth, life, death, resurrection, ascension—must be reproduced in us.

[Rev. W. E. Orchard, D.D., in The Christian Commonwealth]

If we are persuaded of the moral freedom of character, then there is no more useful and necessary task than the occasional examination of ourselves, the deliberate taking of an impression, and the endeavor to estimate whether our character is of the right type, and whether it is being so molded that there lies ever before us still greater approximation to perfection. To beg off self-examination as being unnatural and morbid, liable to lead either to pride or despair, is only a concealed excuse. For we exercise ourselves in this way continuously where others are concerned, and with the most microscopical and meticulous care.

Our powers of detecting the flaws and defects of character in others are highly developed; they would recommend many of us for the post of recording angel. In a momentary glance we take in the inconsistencies of which another is probably unaware; we blame him for moral weaknesses for which he would find plenty of excuse; if we ever appraise virtues or excellences, we do not neglect to point out how far they fall short of perfection or are overshadowed by faults that make them worthless.

Since this wonderful faculty of criticism is rarely of any value as far as others are concerned, for we make little attempt to change them, it is obvious that it must have been given us for some other purpose; and that surely was to turn upon ourselves with the same severity and care. If we had spent a tenth of our time upon self-examination that we have spent upon the criticism of others, they would have less fault to find with us today.

[Zion's Herald]

Every man knows in his inmost soul that he can choose the better part, and that that higher life is to be found in vital connection with Christ. Selfishness is natural, but it is not necessary. It is easy to be a prodigal, but it is equally possible to become a son whom his father delighteth to honor. The conditions of life are daily setting before us good and evil. What will we of either? None can force us one way or the other against our choice. And if the election by us of God and heaven and the society of the redeemed be not conscious and resolute and continuous, we are really making a choice of evil, and throwing in our lot with the enemies of God, and so with the foes of man.

[The Universalist Leader]

It is strange, almost inconceivable, that men should call in question the integrity of God, and yet that is what is being done constantly by those who would shape His nature to fit their own theological scheme.

Items of Interest

A statement relating to the Federal Government supervision in Australia of company promotion and the increase of capital by existing companies was issued by the Prime Minister's Department on April 20. It shows that 86 per cent of the applications for the raising of capital required was granted, while 8 per cent was not proceeded with by the applicants. The statement adds that many companies would have been floated but for the restrictions, the promoters preferring not to face the Government criticism. The intention of the regulations was mainly to provide against the speculative element in the formation of new companies, and to insure, as far as practicable, that capital raised should be for the extension of manufacturing and producing concerns in the Commonwealth. Company promotion, except for bona fide objects, has been restricted. Particular attention has also been given to the nationality of all shareholders of all companies requiring extension of capital.

It is claimed by a person in Melbourne, Australia, that by a newly discovered process, even with the present crude equipment, sole leather can be tanned in seven days, sheepskins in one hour, ordinary hides in from one to six hours (according to weight), calfskins in six hours, and fur skins, such as rabbit and the like, in three days. The process plumps the leather as little or as much as is desired until the maximum is reached, and increases the strength as much as 500 per cent over normal. The durability of the leather is also said to be increased, and leather ropes and buckets in use in Australian mines for the past sixty years, the leather of which was tanned by practically the same method, are offered as proof of the claim. The New York district office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is in receipt of samples of this leather, which will be on exhibition later at various district offices.

It is estimated that there are 3000 hand looms in Changsha, China, all engaged in the manufacture of cotton piece-goods, fancy and plain, known to the trade as nankeens. These looms are small wooden ones with little or no iron about them, manufactured for the most part locally, although some are imported from Shanghai or Japan. They are scattered in small groups about the city, sometimes singly, sometimes in groups of as many as fifty.

From these looms two kinds of cloth are produced, a figured cloth and a white shirting. Weavers are paid by piece work. Those who work on the figured cloth weave from fifty-eight to sixty English feet a day, and for this receive thirteen cents. An experienced operative is able to produce three pieces (about one hundred and five English feet) of white shirting a day, and for this he is paid eleven or twelve cents, including rice money. Some of the weaving establishments have special looms for the manufacture of toweling. A weaver can complete fourteen towels in a day, earning approximately twelve cents, less three cents for his rice.

The Government of Nicaragua has made a contract for the establishment of various industries. This contract specifies that 60 per cent of the shares of the development company shall be placed with Nicaraguan citizens. The proposed industries are the cultivation of sugar cane, oranges, bananas, and all kinds of tropical fruit; the cultivation of textile fibers and the installation of factories for utilizing the fibers; the establishment of sawmills; the raising of live stock and the manufacture of cheese and butter; the establishment of tanneries; the canning of fish from the Gulf of Fonseca and other waters; the manufacture of salt; the manufacture of paper from wood pulp or bagasse. The development company also proposes to construct railroads, and the Government will grant free admission of the materials required for this purpose.

Marshall Field & Company, of Chicago, are having a town site laid out near Martinsville, Va., where the corporation is planning to establish extensive facilities for manufacturing textile products. Contracts have been awarded for textile machinery and plans for mills are being drawn. The concern plans to develop 2000 acres of land for an industrial city, including mills for manufacturing cotton cloth and various textile specialties. The company has invested about three million dollars for buildings, machinery, mill villages, public service utilities, and so forth, at Spray, Draper, and Leaksville, N. C., in eight mills having a total of 117,000 spindles, with 2455 looms. Reports have it that $1,000,000 will be expended for the Martinsville development.

The quantity of platinum in the United States is estimated by the United States Geological survey at 1,000,000 troy ounces, besides which there are over 400,000 ounces of other metals of the platinum group, principally palladium, iridium, and rhodium. In 1916 the crude platinum mined in Colombia, South America (25,000 ounces), was refined in the United States, and 28,088 ounces of metals of the platinum group were recovered by American refiners from all sources, foreign and domestic, of which 24,518 ounces were platinum. Apparently the normal requirements of platinum in the United States call for 165,000 ounces annually.

The Venezuelan island of Margarita, which Germany has denied having attempted to get as a submarine base, lies off the north coast of South America, says a bulletin issued by the National Geographic Society. It is separated from the Venezuelan peninsula of Araya by a channel 12 miles wide, has an area of 440 square miles, with a length of 45 miles and a width varying from a few feet to 20 miles. Maize, sugar, coffee, cotton, and live stock are the leading products of the island, while fishing and the making of salt are the chief industries of the 40,000 inhabitants. The women plait coarse straw hats, which are sold all over Venezuela.

The New Zealand hemp industry has been prosperous during the last year. In the year ended Feb. 28 there were 150,339 bales graded, prices ranging from $236 to $240 a ton. The industry is largely centered in the southern portion of North Island, where some of the best fiber in New Zealand is grown. At a point a little north of Wellington an area of 2100 acres is devoted to the cultivation of hemp. The fibers from these plants average from six to seven feet in length and are of very fine quality.

The Miaoerhkou iron mine, says the Manchurian News, is owned by the Penchihu Colliery & Mining Company, and furnishes ore for use by the company's smelting furnace, located a little more than twenty-five miles away. The mineral bed is quite extensive, though the bulk of it consists of what is known as "poor ore," containing only 30 to 40 per cent of iron. It is interspersed at places with "rich ore," containing 60 to 70 per cent. The quantity of the rich ore is thought to be considerable.

A firm interested in copper mining has reported the discovery in the Tchernaef district of Central Asia of extensive deposits of copper ores with a reported richness of 20 to 60 per cent of metal; and in the neighborhood of Tchimgan, sixty miles from Tashkend, Central Asia, gold deposits are reported to have been accidentally discovered. It is asserted that the assays have disclosed a high percentage of metal in the ores and washings that have been recovered.

Russia supplies practically the whole of the world's consumption of licorice. The exports in 1913, the latest normal year, were 62,209,077 pounds, valued at $965,681. Most of this came to the United States. The production is carried on in the Ural Province, in the steppe country on the eastern side of the Ural Mountains, in the Transcaspian region, and in Transcaucasia and the adjoining districts of Asia Minor.

There are 2213 miles of main roads open for traffic in Jamaica, and most of these are macadamized highways, which are always kept in good repair. As one of the direct results of good roads the importation of motor vehicles has increased with great rapidity during recent years. The latest official census gives a total of 833 cars and trucks, 70 motor cycles, and 15 traction engines in the island.

A simple high vacuum pump, recently developed at the United States Bureau of Standards, has some very useful applications. It can be built entirely of glass by a reasonably skilful glass blower and requires for its operation only a Bunsen burner and a water aspirator, although it is capable of giving vacua down to better than 0.001 millimeter pressure.

Notwithstanding the scarcity of labor and the many transportation difficulties due to the war, exports in 1916 to the United States from the Grenoble district of France were fairly well maintained, especially in shelled walnuts. The shipments were, in shell, 1,761,550 pounds; shelled, 2,395,506 pounds.

More than half of Sweden is covered with forests, and about 15 per cent is within the Arctic Circle. The country has a thrifty population, large deposits of excellent iron ore, abundant timber, extensive water power, considerable areas suited to agriculture, and natural shipping facilities.

Inertia

BERTHA V. ZEREGA

If asked to define the term inertia, the majority of people would promptly reply, "Inaction," and leave the subject there. The writer shared this popular misconception until one day, while conversing with some college boys who were amusing themselves with the seemingly childish diversion of spinning a top, she was surprised to have one of them ask her if this were not a beautiful example of inertia.

Glancing at the almost perfect illustration of perpetual motion she replied to this seemingly absurd inquiry, "Why, that is not an example of inertia!" Whereupon one of the students recited the following definition, which he said he had lately committed to memory for a physics test: "Inertia is that property of a body which tends to make it remain in that state of rest or motion in which it lies, and if in motion, to continue in a straight line unless deviated by an outside force." The seeming inconsistency of the question was then dispelled through the explanation that if the top were not gradually stopped by the friction of the atmosphere in which it revolved, the law of inertia would cause it to remain forever in that humming rhythm of perpetual motion.

What an excellent example of mortal mind and its attitude toward itself and its problems! thought the writer, while pondering the lesson learned. From a metaphysical standpoint the comparison is unmistakable; for how determined the carnal mind is to have its own way, and how persistently it holds to "that state of rest or motion in which it lies"—its self-centered mental indolence or its misdirected energy—until deviated by the "outside force" of correct spiritual thinking, and so awakened to yield obedience to "the mind of Christ." Sin, disease, and death, fleshly beliefs of pain or pleasure, all inharmonious convictions of whatever nature, are but different phases of the inertia of mortal mind, which because of its tenacious obstinacy and fear tends to continue indefinitely in the "straight line" of sense-limitation, or "in the direct line of matter," as Mrs. Eddy expresses it on page 189 of Science and Health, unless scientifically arrested in this course of inevitable self-destruction and compelled by the truth to abandon its erroneous method of procedure.

Has not a determined, overanxious effort to dislodge mortal mind from its inertia of sense-gratification and indifference to spiritual things often been the means of bringing about a rude severance, for the time at least, of the slight metaphysical connection between the individual and the Science of man's being which interest, perhaps in a demonstration of healing, had created? With this experience there comes to many of us the tardy realization that the only successful way ever to lead the human mind out of its lethargy of spiritual ignorance and self-indulgent motives is the gentle Christ-method of individual ascension in thought above earthly desires, and reflection of the divine nature,—an uplifted mental attitude which Jesus declared would scientifically "draw all men" unto us,—unto our knowledge of the truth.

A question which in this connection immediately presents itself is: Since physical science recognizes the existence of a property called inertia, which insistently remains quiescent or active as the case may be, and which is exhibited in all the phases of mortal mind phenomena, what is the spiritual opposite of this propensity? In other words, what aspect of reality, or what operation of divine Principle, the source of all action and creative power, of all concord and tranquillity, is thus cleverly counterfeited? What is it but Love, the essential nature and character of God, which is so all inclusive that it comprises in its expression all the attributes of the divine Mind, as sunlight contains within its radiance all the colors of the rainbow?

Love continues uninterruptedly and persistently to manifest the life giving, compassionate activity of spiritual law which heals and regenerates all those who turn wholeheartedly to the truth for deliverance from evil. There is no "outside force" greater or more powerful than Love, for nothing can reverse or deviate the Love which is God from the direct course of impartially seeking to bless and sustain in perfect completeness every idea included in His spiritual creation. On page 208 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says, "This unbroken motion of the law of divine Love gives, to the weary and heavy-laden, rest." This healing energy, or divine inertia, Love, omnipotent to reverse, deviate, and arrest all forms of error in their supposed action and inaction, is irresistible in its spiritual attraction to "draw all men" unto the comprehension of their God-given birthright of dominion,—their rightful inheritance of "the riches of his [God's] grace."

Jesus the Christ so thoroughly understood the capacity and power of divine Love to counteract the destructive tendencies of every material counterfeit, the sensual, self-willed instincts of the carnal mind, that he entrenched himself and taught his disciples to rely constantly on the unfailing operation of this law of spiritual light, Life, and Truth. Through absolute dependence upon this divine "outside force" or energy, he controlled persistent phases of disease, calmed tempestuous elements, neutralized the poisonous effects of malice, condemnation, and revenge, reversed the mesmeric arguments of limitation and loss, and conquered "the last enemy," death, for others and then for himself. He knew that no matter to what extent these material conditions manifested the evidence of excessive action or stagnation, his knowledge and application of the "unbroken motion of the law of divine Love," the irresistible activity of divine Principle, operating as a spiritual force outside of material sense perception, could and would deviate these phases of error from their prescribed courses and destroy their harmful intents. Continuing in the "straight line" of obedient, courageous adherence to his spiritual consciousness of being, the Christ-idea, and keeping to the narrow way of complete self-renunciation and purity, he glorified his Father by conquering the obstinate resistance or inertia of the carnal mind, thereby giving rest to the "weary and heavy-laden."

When through our grateful receptivity and intelligent application of the truth we endeavor to express each day more of that love which is a reflection of the divine, we individually earn the privilege of becoming the medium through which the law of divine Love operates to cast out all manner of discord from the hearts and lives of men. This love, so much needed to spiritualize our work for the uplift of suffering humanity, permeates our affections and aims as we willingly renounce the self-seeking ambitions of the world; as we substitute constructive spiritual thinking for personal opinion, and as we actively cultivate the loving qualities of kindness, forbearance, meekness, charity.

Knowing the subtlety of error's disguise, it is well for us to weigh our motives prayerfully before putting them into action, to see whether we are yielding to the counterfeit inertia of mortal mind which would tend to make us "remain in that state of rest or motion" (mental apathy or the activity of evil) in which we may be tempted to indulge. By steadfastly clinging to the fact that "Mind is the source of all movement, and there is no inertia to retard or check its perpetual and harmonious action" (Science and Health, p. 283), we are guided into the haven of right decisions, into the realm of Truth, where spiritual understanding—the unvarying, all powerful inertia of divine Principle, Love—reigns supreme.

Equilibrium

WILLIAM E. BROWN

OFTEN it has been said, and indeed truly, that the progress of Christian Science is much hampered by the wisdomless zeal of many of its most earnest advocates. There seems to be a stage in neophytic growth where there is considerable danger of temporarily losing one's equilibrium. During this period overzeal shows itself in extravagant statement, talking in the wrong place and at the wrong time, and much time and effort are consumed in endeavoring to push others into the kingdom of heaven whether they wish to go or not. Again, the perception of an ideal, coupled with the determination to bring it instantly into human experience, regardless of inopportunity and the means and ways of human environment, is a condition which ultimates in what the world terms fanaticism. Wisely foreseeing such loss of equilibrium, Mrs. Eddy writes: "The neophyte in Christian Science acts like a diseased physique,—being too fast or too slow. He is inclined to do either too much or too little" (Retrospection and Introspection, p. 78).

Abnormal growth of this nature also frequently manifests itself in an erroneous conclusion that human ways and means for advancement are of no consequence, and the subsequent lack of interest evidences a loss of balance which does not favorably impress the onlooker. Forgetting that every thought must be brought into captivity to Christ, and that all legitimate human activities must be purified and improved by Christian influence, the beginner may conclude, for example, to take no interest in politics, and may not even take the trouble to cast his ballot on election day. Now politics, or the science of government, is perhaps the most important of all secular institutions. Through wise and just legislation people are permitted to live their lives (under proper provisions) as they deem best. They are at liberty to worship God after the dictates of their own conscience and adopt any and all methods which they believe will enhance their health, happiness, and prosperity. Many of these rights and privileges, however, may be denied by unjust laws, and it is self-evident that better legislation waits for better legislators.

To neglect an opportunity of this kind is not only to fall short of being a good citizen, but negatively may aid in the election of unprincipled and biased lawmakers through whom special interests of various kinds may abrogate personal rights and privileges now enjoyed. Many of the human activities, subject to Christian Science influence, can be made important factors in the working out from sense to Soul. On page 288 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says, "Wisdom in human action begins with what is nearest right under the circumstances, and thence achieves the absolute." We must be as "wise as serpents," so that we may take advantage of and utilize every important factor in human economy, to the end that human concepts may first be improved through better belief and then replaced by divine ideas.

Let us consider for a moment in this light the prohibition movement which is sweeping over the world. Every one knows that prohibition legislation is not a panacea for the evils of alcohol, but it certainly goes without saying that such legislation will usher in a better belief. Less poverty, disease, crime, and unhappiness are some of the results which follow legislation of this kind. It has been declared that fully one half or more of the drinking indulged in arises from the convenience of the saloon or other sources of supply. So it is through a long line of human endeavor. If we are wise we shall not ignore remedial measures simply because they are not capable of wholly exterminating the evils combated, but we shall rejoice in every opportunity to improve human conditions, and thus to create a state of consciousness which will make possible the recognition of the great truth of being as set forth in Christian Science.

Educating Our Children

MOLLIE O. WALDRON

WHEN I became a student of Christian Science, I realized almost from the beginning the necessity of giving a part of each day regularly to the study of the Bible and of our Leader's writings. I also began to help my little daughter study her Sunday school lesson, and to explain to her as well as I could the simpler meanings of the truth taught; but we did not have any regularity about this work.

After a few years had passed by in this way, I awakened to the fact that since systematic work was necessary for my spiritual growth it was just as necessary for hers. It also came to me very clearly that as she had regular hours for her meals, for her music, and for her school lessons, why should she not have a regular time for her study of the Science of life? I had often made the statement to her that Christian Science was the most important thing in the world—then why not impress this fact upon her by requiring her to start the day with this work?

We began by taking fifteen minutes each morning, just before she went to school, for our study period. This gave her time enough to read one section of the lesson, two pages of Science and Health, and a few minutes for mental work in Christian Science. Rarely indeed was anything ever allowed to interfere with this daily work. Each year as my daughter's spiritual understanding has grown, she has increased the time given to her Science work, until now after four years she spends one hour daily with her books,—one half hour before breakfast, and the other before going to sleep at night,—this work being recognized as the most important of her studies.

The fruits of this plan of study have been so good that I am writing this little article with the hope that it may help some one, even as I have been helped by the experiences of others. Our Leader says that "a mother is the strongest educator, either for or against crime" (Science and Health, p. 236). In what way can we mothers better educate our children than by putting God's Word into their hands and seeing to it that they read it, letting divine Truth do the needed work in the child's consciousness, as it most assuredly will.

I have often heard it said that it is wrong to force children to study Christian Science, for by so doing they may grow to dislike it. To my thought this is such a foolish argument of error that I wonder any one could be beguiled by it. Children naturally love the truth, and the very words of truth and love which they would put into their thoughts each day would protect them and antidote the suggestions of error. The more a pure, unbiased thought knows of divine Truth and Love, the more it desires to know.

Let us consider a simple illustration along this line. What would be thought of an educator who had found a perfect text-book of mathematics but hesitated to make his pupils study it for fear they would grow to dislike mathematics? Should he not rather rejoice to put the book into the hands of his pupils, even if he were compelled to make them study it daily, knowing that only by such faithful work could they ever master the problems of the science of numbers. Doubtless there might come many days in which the child would not feel like doing his mental work aright. Most of us adults have days when the deadly inertia of mortal mind and its hatred for spiritual things would seek to keep us from our daily communion with God. But if we are honest and sincere we do not listen to this tempter, knowing through bitter experience, perhaps, the danger of such a course.

Then if there should come to us the foolish argument that it is wrong to make our children study God's Word, let us ask ourselves these questions: What do I myself do in regard to Science work? Why should I be kinder to myself than to the little ones in my keeping? In Science and Health we read, "Good demands of man every hour, in which to work out the problem of being" (p. 261). Should we not then, reflecting this good to our children, demand that they begin to make this demonstration, accepting the wise man's saying, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it."

Perfect Reflection

RUTH INGRAHAM

One day two little girls filled a garden with their cries of delight over a new game,—that of chasing a reflected sunbeam. The first appearance of the sunbeam set them to wondering, an excited rush to capture it followed, but not until they had played with it for some time did they note any connection between its quick going and coming and the manipulation of a small mirror in the hands of some one who was standing by. The glass was then given them, and great fun they had turning the bright reflection upon each other, illuming the roses which grew on the shady side of the porch, or flashing light into obscure corners where startled little creatures which love the dark suddenly scrambled for a safer hiding place. Occasionally the bright spot would disappear, greatly to the mystification of the small experimenters until they discovered the secret, namely, that the mirror must always be held in the sun.

There are few things sweeter than the innocent gaiety and happiness of little children, yet to the writer this scene typified something even sweeter and more enduring. It reminded her that we become conscious of light when it falls upon some object which reflects it. A ray of sunshine entering a darkened room is perceived only at the point where it strikes the opposite wall, unless dust motes or dancing insects cross its path. The sun's clear light flooded the garden where these two little ones played; they were surrounded by it, enveloped in it; unconsciously they depended upon it every moment. Yet until a medium for its more brilliant, concentrated, and perfect reflection was put into their hands its presence and possibilities were largely unrealized. On page 510 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Light is a symbol of Mind, of Life, Truth, and Love, and not a vitalizing property of matter."

Light is therefore a symbol of that Love and intelligence which governs the universe, filling all space to the exclusion of whatever is unlike God. We are surrounded by this Love, live by it, are utterly dependent upon its illuminating power and guidance, yet while in a state of spiritual ignorance we do this without realization or appreciation. It might be said that we absorb instead of reflect it. When a thought is found pure enough to reflect this celestial light, whether in our own consciousness or that of another, we cognize it in a new way, marvel at it, rejoice in it, consciously utilize it.

This figure explains "the effectual fervent prayer" of Christian Science, and is as applicable to absent as to present treatment. The mirror did not have to be taken into the dark corners in order that they should be lighted up; indeed, its efficacy was instantly lost when it was out of line with the sun. Its far thrown reflection revealed what had before been hidden, showing what needed to be removed and making more fair that which was already beautiful. So is the clear, bright reflection of Truth sent forth undimmed from the receptive thought of the Christian Scientist. It can cross a world of shadows and penetrate the darkest recesses of the troubled consciousness which calls for aid, revealing therein both what requires correction and what is beautiful though lost to sight.

According to the law of physics, "the angle of reflection equals the angle of incidence;" that is to say, light is thrown from a reflecting surface at the same angle as that at which it strikes the surface. This being true, when the light is received at a right angle it is directly reflected back,—a phenomenon often witnessed in the blazing windows of houses at sunrise and sunset and in the dazzling brightness of a body of water at midday. Here, then, are other types and symbols. We find that the most perfect reflector presents a clear, smooth surface to the light; that it must remain ever in the light to retain its character of reflector; that its ability to reflect is increased in proportion as it is in a position to receive directly the rays of light. And assuming that we desire the reflected light to reach a certain object or point, the reflector must be so adjusted as to maintain the relation between that object or point and the source of light.

While material symbols must be taken at their worth and cannot be accepted as exact spiritual guides, they are nevertheless helpful as illustrations and acceptable in the realm of simile and comparison. Thus we may infer that the thought of one who would perform the sacred office of light bringer to another—and all have this office to fill who have learned even in a degree their relation to the one source of all true light—must necessarily remain in right relationship with God, divine Mind. The thought should be as clear and as even as possible, and ever in line with the light of Truth, direct in its contact, free to perceive and adapt itself to the needs of the individual case.

He who said "I am the light of the world," gave all the glory to God. A dewdrop gleaming and glowing in the morning sun is a well-nigh perfect type of spiritual reflection. It is filled with the light which outlines and reveals it, making it a jewel of surpassing beauty; yet it both transmits and reflects all the light it receives. So in Science the idea of God, a creation of pure Spirit, luminous, translucent, presents no obstruction to the divine attributes of wisdom, beauty, glory, power, and love, but being filled with these yet gives them wholly back again. Science teaches reflection, not absorption. As partakers of the divine nature and essence, in our true being we must forever reflect to one another the very fulness of God.

The Christian Science Monitor

HUGH J. BARNES

SOME few years ago it was my joy and privilege, while staying in Boston, to get the Monitor daily at the newsstand, fresh from the presses. I learned to love and appreciate its clean message of good news, and also to grasp something of its universality, for many times there were interesting items regarding my home country, Australia, which proved very comforting to me while in the midst of the ways and customs of a different clime. Upon returning to my native land I found to my surprise that comparatively few realized the blessing to be had from a daily reading of this newspaper.

The problem with many seems to be this: The Monitor is sent to Australia in quantities of from ten to twenty issues in one mail, and according to mortal sense of time the papers are some weeks old when they reach there. As the first desire of the senses is for the latest news, it seems well-nigh impossible to read, together with local dailies, the Monitors somewhat in order of date before the next batch comes along. It is therefore claimed, according to sense-testimony, that there is insufficient time to read them properly, and on occasions I have seen them untouched until the pile has become so large that the possibility of their performing the important work with which they are charged seemed to become less and less hopeful, and eventually error would argue the uselessness of attempting to read them at all. In this way the testimony of the senses would tend to hinder the work of the literature all the time. These and many other suggestions were encountered by the writer, and on one or two occasions through a seeming combination of circumstances he was entirely cut off from a regular supply of the Monitor, until he fully realized that it was the subtlety of error trying to hinder the good already experienced.

In thinking the matter over I could see that it was possible to read the issues systematically, and so determined to arrange them upon arrival in their consecutive order, and, beginning with the earliest date, read one each day, as well as the local daily, sometimes reading little and sometimes more, as the opportunities of the day offered. And so, without the belief of time, and consequently with no sense of confusion or hurry, I daily find ample food for thought and direction of thought on many questions, world wide in scope and interest, which are by no means settled when the paper reaches its readers; that is, when thought opens the pages of the Monitor to receive the message.

Just here a few of the useful points of the Monitor may be interesting. "A newspaper edited and published by the Christian Scientists has become a necessity," Mrs. Eddy wrote in 1883 (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 4). She adds that "further enlightenment is necessary for the age, and a periodical devoted to this work seems alone adequate to meet the requirement." The Christian Science Journal, established at this date, gave out, so far as its pages could do so, the message of healing by spiritual means alone, and later came the Sentinel and Herold. A Christian Science periodical naturally must embody many of the high qualities of which Mrs. Eddy wrote from time to time. On page 195 of Science and Health we read: "Academics of the right sort are requisite. Observation, invention, study, and original thought are expansive and should promote the growth of mortal mind out of itself, out of all that is mortal."

If we read The Christian Science Monitor as our Leader has requested us to do, we shall find that it fulfils this requirement. A recent experience proved this. The desire for a better knowledge of the history of different peoples and the ideals of humanity in general was becoming more clearly pronounced, so much so that it was arranged to take an extended course of lectures on these subjects; but after attending the first lecture it was realized that the Monitor contained the same information, and even more. Moreover, it was seen that the desire for a greater understanding of world problems was the result of the education gained from the reading of that paper; therefore that what had brought out the desire would surely fulfil it. With so much of good in store we surely cannot afford to leave the valuable pages of the Monitor untouched or lightly scanned.

Purified Desires

LOUISE C. MARTIN

PRAYER is the mental process by which the human consciousness seeks access to and aid from a power beyond itself. The mainspring of prayer is desire; and the quality of the desire determines the character of the prayer and its answer. In view of this, the important point is not only how we pray, but why we pray. When our hearts go out in prayer, what desires are impelling us? What motives are inciting us? To ascertain this requires constant vigilance and frequent heart searchings,—a continual separating between spiritual motives and material ones. So subtle is the carnal mind, so constant are its efforts to beguile us, that unless we are sober and watchful we shall find that the cravings of the carnal mind, the fleshly desires, have crept in while we slept.

Pure, spiritual longing, then, is the seed of true prayer, the seed that must be nurtured and cherished until it springs up and unfolds into deeds. This tender seedling must be watered with consecration, guarded with watchfulness, and protected from the thorns which Jesus said were "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in." Right here some one may ask, "What of the daily needs,—food, clothing, shelter,—the needs which press so insistently upon us: should not one take account of these in his prayers?" Indeed, these things form such an integral part of human experience that they cannot be ignored, and Christian Science deals wisely with this question.

Mrs. Eddy answers the query in the following sentence, to be found on page 307 in "Miscellaneous Writings": "God gives you His spiritual ideas," she writes, "and in turn, they give you daily supplies." Despite the transcendentalism which this statement implies, it is nevertheless demonstrably and invariably true, and is in exact agreement with Jesus' saying, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." From this it follows that our great need is to gain spiritual ideas; then the needed material supply will follow in turn. Therefore the intent which should inspire all prayer is the desire to gain more and more of the spiritual ideas which are included in real being.

So prone is the human mind to incline to the side of matter, that alertness is ever necessary. It is the "Yea, yea," to all thoughts which speed us Godward and away from self, and the "Nay, nay," to all sordid suggestions of evil which would bind us to materiality and mortality. Alertness is symbolized by the flaming sword which turns every way, whose flame consumes all the wrong desires which appear at the gateway of consciousness. The untiring exercise of this spiritual perception spares us many a painful experience. The constant adjustment of thought to the standard of divine Principle is the practical application of the Scriptural counsel, "Pray without ceasing."

Thus the seedlings of pure desire, protected with wisdom and watchfulness and nurtured with self-forgetfulness and universal love, will gain vigor and sweetness, until they blossom into words and deeds of kindness, truthfulness, justice, obedience, patience, forgiveness, expressed in healing and regeneration. Jesus' three years' ministry was but the fruitage of his boyhood prayers, which were inspired by the holy desire to be about his Father's business. Mrs. Eddy's spiritual interpretation of the Master's life of prayer, and her consequent demonstration of it in giving Christian Science to the world, was the full blown flower of prayer which unfolded from the seed of heavenly desire.

What form or expression our desires shall assume in their fulfilment is not ours to say. "Thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly," said the Master. Then can we not trust our heart yearnings to infinite Mind, divine Love? Can we not leave their fulfilling to His unerring direction, supreme wisdom, and ever operative law of love? Nothing can retard the activity of the divine will or blot out its perfect manifestation. God recognizes lofty desires and aims. He molds them with the hand of spiritual power. He unfolds them in beauty and harmony. He blesses them "for his name's sake." If our motives are worthy of the Father's recognition, we may be sure we are not asking amiss, and know with certainty that our prayer will bring forth fruit in its season.

Walls of Salvation and Gates of Praise

LYDIA B. MC KINLEY-HAY

O YE who are stones in the temple of God,
Who much of the way have so faithfully trod,
What dost thou think when there enters its gates
One called a sinner, whom every one hates,—
To purity stranger, to thanksgiving dumb,—
Dost thou hold out thy hand, though so late he doth come?
Dost say the kind word, for he needeth it much,
Or dost thou give praise that thou art not as such?
Dost think in this temple, by thee cleansed each day,
That he has no place—should be out of the way?
Rejecting the brother with swift condemnation,—
What thou shouldst remember is praise and salvation!

And ye who are laboring the sinner to save,
Who, loyal and loving, are humble and brave,
Say, what dost thou think when within hallowed walls
Thou sittest, the while Love's behest ever calls
For tributes of praise to His goodness and care,
Which saveth from sin, from disease, and the snare?
Dost e'er feel disheartened—the way seems so long,
Reward seems to loiter, and silent is song?
Remember the joy 'tis to save and to heal;
Teach the fallen to rise and the proud one to kneel.
Rejoice! Then defer not thy voice to upraise,
Unite in Love's temple salvation and praise!

[Samuel Greenwood in The British Columbian, New Westminster, B. C., Canada]

In the face of Mrs. Eddy's well known achievements it is a literal begging of the question to call her a confused thinker, or so to characterize her writings. The learned as well as the unlearned have found these writings illuminating and practically helpful, even to the extent of lifting them out of discordant moral and physical conditions. As Christian Science accepts the Scriptural teaching that God is infinite Spirit, and that His creation, government, and law are consequently spiritual, the attempt to make Christian Science correspond with prevailing theories might well result in confusion.

The assertion that Christian Science has displaced the gospel of Christ is disproved by the fact that its adherents accept Christ not only as their Redeemer but as their Physician. That Mrs. Eddy founded "a great organization" and called it a church, can scarcely be used as an argument against her. In the churches of this organization the truth is preached every Sunday that God is All-in-all, that there is none beside Him, and that Christ redeems men from both sickness and sin.

[Carl E. Herring in Geneva (Neb.) Signal]

An evangelist at the Methodist church is reported to have said, "Who ever heard Christian Science preach repentance?" The answer is, Everybody who ever heard anything about Christian Science. Of course Christian Scientists do not revive the superstitions of the dark ages or resort to evangelistic methods, but it can hardly be said they are not reforming the lives of men and women and bringing peace where before was turmoil. If by repentance is meant "to cease to love and practise sin," then Christian Science is full of the call to repentance.

The old idea of repentance was for one to confess to a lot of crimes he never committed, carefully avoiding the thing that was keeping him out of the kingdom of heaven. The fact is that Christian Science teachings differ from other religions in placing emphasis upon the necessity of ceasing to practise sin.

Mrs. Eddy puts this strongly on page 19 of Science and Health, where she says, "If the sinner continues to pray and repent, sin and be sorry, he has little part in the atonement." And again on page 291 she says, "The suppositions that sin is pardoned while unforsaken, that happiness can be genuine in the midst of sin, that the so-called death of the body frees from sin, and that God's pardon is aught but the destruction of sin,—these are grave mistakes."

[John L. Rendall in Monroe County News, Albia, Iowa]

Our critic seriously objects to Mrs. Eddy's interpretations of the teachings of Christ and states: "The teachings of Christ are self-explanatory. They are intelligible today. Whenever God wants men to understand certain revealed things, He makes them so clear that man can understand them." In view of this statement it seems strange to the ordinary observer that there are about one hundred and fifty-seven Christian denominations, each of them based upon a different interpretation of the Bible teachings. Every Christian denomination is quite insistent in its stand that it is right and that all others are lacking in some respects.

There is therefore need of an interpretation of Scripture which is practical, logical, satisfactory, and demonstrable, upon which these varying theories may unite in the demonstration of the exact Science of Christianity as Jesus taught it. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy has given this interpretation, which is being proven to the complete satisfaction of hundreds of thousands of people of at least average intelligence and spiritual attainment. On page 320 of the above mentioned book Mrs. Eddy states, "The one important interpretation of Scripture is the spiritual."

[E. L. Webb in Ulster Guardian, Belfast, Ireland]

I have read with interest the column entitled "Talks for a Quiet Hour." While I appreciate the fair manner in which the writer has endeavored to set forth very briefly the faith of Christian Science, still with your permission I would like to point out, in case some of your readers might take from the remarks that Christian Science is similar in its teachings to Hinduism or what is called "mental science," that it differs fundamentally from these and has nothing whatever in common with their methods.

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says (p. 126): "I have found nothing in ancient or in modern systems on which to found my own, except the teachings and demonstrations of our great Master and the lives of prophets and apostles. The Bible has been my only authority." Christian Science teaches that the human mind is not a healer, because it is a mind imbued with a belief in both good and evil and of life and intelligence in matter, and that disease or sin is manifest in the body through this mind. Therefore in order to heal scientifically the healing must come through the divine Mind, which is "of purer eyes than to behold evil;" and in proportion as the Christian Science practitioner divests himself of his belief in human will-power, or the carnal mind, which Paul tells us is "enmity against God," true healing follows.

We do not deny that the human will can produce certain phenomena which to the casual observer may look similar to the results brought about through the understanding that God is the only power. We have an instance in the life of Moses when the magicians counterfeited the wonders brought about by Moses' spiritual understanding, but your readers will also remember the sequel. Christ Jesus said: "I can of mine own self do nothing;" "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." He recognized that disease came as a result of the carnal mind, and repudiated the accusation that he cast out evil by a greater evil in these words: "How can Satan cast out Satan?" "But if I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you."

[Frederick H. Eley in Santa Ana (Cal.) Register]

For a number of years I have been interested in the relationship of Christ's teachings to the doctrines founded on these teachings according to the regular orthodox churches. It seems to me that somehow these doctrines, as usually understood, are lacking in some way from what might be expected from the New Testament accounts of Christ's work and teaching while on earth. Possibly the chief of these doctrines is that relating to the understanding of sickness and other inharmonious conditions of the human body. Until recently, and even today, sickness has been looked upon as a kind of natural process which we must put up with as best we may; indeed it is looked upon as a kind of blessing in disguise. Doubtless such results have been accomplished through sickness, but does it necessarily follow that the sickness was for that purpose?

In every age there have been exhibitions of physical healing apart from the recognized method of the physician, most of them being in connection with some religious system. Notably is this true in the case of the methods of Christ. Is it really consistent to think that Christ—the one who is held up as the great example for all the world—would have taught, demonstrated, and enjoined upon mankind a healing and saving method which was effective in the first century but impracticable and impossible at the present time?

We are forced to admit, if we reason logically, that the law which would work once and oftener, would always work if properly invoked. The law of mathematics is a fixed law; any problem worked out by that law brings right results. If we fail to get the right answer every time, the fault is not with the law but with our working out of that law; the mistake is ours. We follow this truth in practical affairs, but when we come to matters spiritual we fail to apply the same common sense. If that law worked with Christ and with his early followers, why should it not work today, and always, when properly applied? It is not enough to be told that the day of miracles is past. Every day proves the fallacy of such a belief. Ever since the foundation of the earth the law of Hertzian waves has been operative, but only recently has it been discovered that we can send messages without the use of wires. Electricity was a force from the beginning, but we were in ignorance of it until Franklin stumbled upon the discovery of this great force.

We admit theoretically that God is good, omnipotent, omnipresent, infinite, and then try to help Him out by material means, which at once proves that we are not willing to stand by our beliefs. Had God created drugs and given them healing power, it seems perfectly reasonable to suppose that Christ, who came to show us the way of life, would have used them himself and recommended them to others. His own success in healing proves that he fully understood a healing art which had no recourse to material means.

That this system of healing was not intended to end with Christ is easily proved by his own words, and also by many cases of healing recorded by his disciples and some of his followers who were not his personal students. Most of the books of the New Testament were written many years after the personal ministry of Jesus, and contain nothing to indicate that the practice of this healing had ceased.

[W. Stuart Booth in Pueblo (Col.) Chieftain]

The confusion regarding the teachings of Christian Science evidenced by a recent contributor would be dispelled by sincere, unbiased study of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," wherein Mrs. Eddy makes plain all controverted points, and does this by taking the Bible as her sole authority. The basis of all Christian Science teaching and practice is that God, good, is Spirit; that "all things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made;" that "God created man in his own image," therefore man is spiritual, not material. Christ Jesus expressed this clearly in the words, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing."

Our Master's attitude toward disease and all evil is shown by the fact that he overcame them by his knowledge of the truth. After healing one who for eighteen years "was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself," he said that Satan had bound her, and Jesus spoke of Satan as "a liar," and the father of lies. From this it is evident that to Jesus evil was not true, but a falsity. Mrs. Eddy's words on page 230 of Science and Health agree perfectly with this position of the Master: "If sickness is real, it belongs to immortality; if true, it is a part of Truth. Would you attempt with drugs, or without, to destroy a quality or condition of Truth? But if sickness and sin are illusions, the awakening from this mortal dream, or illusion, will bring us into health, holiness, and immortality. This awakening is the forever coming of Christ, the advanced appearing of Truth, which casts out error and heals the sick. This is the salvation which comes through God, the divine Principle, Love, as demonstrated by Jesus."

We are counseled by Paul, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus," and it is certain that in the degree this is heeded mankind will realize the divine power, peace, and protection so perfectly exemplified in the life of Jesus.

[Thorwald Siegfried in The News, Port Angeles, Wash.]

It is evident from an article in The News that "Uncle Dave" completely misunderstood the teaching of Christian Science as given at a lecture which he recently attended in your city. To claim that Mrs. Eddy's writings repeat the thoughts that have been expressed by others, except as found in the Bible, is simply to claim that she is not the Discoverer of Christian Science—a claim which every Christian Scientist knows to be false. It is expressly stated by "Uncle Dave" that the difference between Mrs. Eddy and the authors he names is that Mrs. Eddy's writings refer to the Bible and the others do not. This should completely differentiate her writings from the others, because there is nothing in literature which even approximates the spiritual insight coupled with the power to overcome all manner of disease and discord that is in the Bible, except the writings of the Discoverer of Christian Science. On page 110 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science text-book, Mrs. Eddy herself has stated, "In following these leadings of scientific revelation, the Bible was my only text-book."

[Robert S. Ross in Buffalo (N. Y.) Express]

Writing in the Express, a critic asks, "How, please, does Mrs. Eddy know that Spirit never created matter or that God could create nothing without using His own essence as the material?" We answer, for the simple reason that because God is Spirit, His creation must be and is spiritual. Spirit can no more create its opposite, matter, than light can produce darkness or good produce evil. Jesus said: "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Even so every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit." Translating Jesus' words into modern English, they would read, "Like produces like."

Farther along the same critic asks, "How does Mrs. Eddy know that mind and matter are so opposite that both cannot be real?" We answer that because God is Spirit, changeless and indestructible, matter, Spirit's diametrical opposite, must reasonably and necessarily be both changeable and destructible. Now we know that nothing which is subject to change and decay is real; therefore we conclude that Spirit alone is real, because Spirit alone is eternal. If Spirit, God, is omnipresent, reason and revelation tell us that matter is nowhere present, for two things cannot occupy the same space at the same time.

According to the latest conclusion of materialists, the electron or ether void is fundamental; therefore matter is now believed to be an aggregation of ether voids called electrons. Physicists have come to this conclusion through reason supplemented by experiments. Not so very long ago Mr. Balfour went so far as to say that physicists were explaining matter by explaining it away. It is only a question of time when the world will be compelled to admit that Mrs. Eddy's teaching about matter is the correct one, namely, that matter is simply mortal belief objectified. On page 220 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes, "Mortal mind produces its own phenomena, and then charges them to something else,—like a kitten glancing into the mirror at itself and thinking it sees another kitten."

Christian Science will agree with the critic when he declares that mortal mind came from "the bottomless pit," error, darkness, ignorance. The sooner, therefore, that matter and all that has the mark of error is cast into the pit (reduced to nothingness) by the understanding of the truth, the better. The critic can best aid in this undertaking by working with those who are definitely accomplishing the destruction of matter and evil, instead of criticizing them from a safe distance because they are not doing it in the way he believes it should be done.

[Editorial in Owensmouth (Cal.) Gazette]

"State religion" and "state medicine" are both detrimental to the cause of true liberty, and tend to violate the constitutional right of every American citizen to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Every human being should be free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience—else we are not a free people. Likewise each person should be free in case of illness to employ the method of treatment which suits him best. A serious menace to California is the attempt being made by the American Medical Association to entrench the allopathic school of physicians as the only legalized practitioners in the state. An unjust feature of the workingmen's compensation law is that it compels people, in order to receive benefit, to accept treatment from "old school" physicians. Tens of thousands of the most intelligent people in the state are advocates of various forms of drugless healing, and they should have the privilege of choosing their own physician—else we are not a free people. Coercion in matters of religion and medicine is obnoxious to the American ideals of liberty! If the churches and the medicos can show the people something which will increase happiness and improve health, no legislation will be required to enforce its acceptance—every one will want it.

Dawn

MABEL HYDE

'Mid mists and shadows, sinister and gray,
Encompassed sore, and often led astray
By phantom fears that hide the narrow way,
We wait the dawn.

Behind the veil that seems so closely spread,
Above the path our faltering footsteps tread,
Beyond the valley that is shunned in dread,
There shines the dawn.

Attune our ears that we may hear aright,
Strengthen our hearts that we may bravely fight,
Open our eyes to meet that wondrous light,—
The light of dawn.

Then when the night is spent and faith soars high,
Knowing that Love is All and hate a lie,
We shall upraise a glad, triumphant cry,—
"Now is the dawn!"

Harmonious Government

So generally helpful is the following letter, written to one of the branches of The Mother Church by The Christian Science Board of Directors, that we are glad to share it with our readers:—

Dear Friends:—Replying to your letter of June 18th, Christian Science churches which have had a rapid and successful growth are occasionally faced with the necessity of meeting certain arguments of ambitious mortal mind expressed in the form of veiled attacks on The Mother Church by-laws in the name of "democracy." In such instances it is usual for every effort to be made to force some particular definition of democracy upon the members regardless of their desires, and to "suggest" to the thought of the young students and those who have not yet become analytical thinkers, that there is something wrong with the plan of government of the Christian Science church.

It should be remembered at all times that Mrs. Eddy's mission as Founder of Christian Science was no less divinely directed than was her mission as Discoverer. The plan of government set forth in the by-laws of The Mother Church represents her demonstration as Founder. This government is the essence of impersonality and acts automatically and without friction to those individuals and organizations which have caught a glimpse of the spiritual meaning of "church" in Christian Science and are bringing forth in some measure the demonstration of their vision.

It is a part of the mission of Christian Science to give a new definition of "government" to the world. It is the destiny of Christian Science to show to the world that mankind cannot be deprived of their right of representation unless they be deprived of their right to think. It was, of course, the attainment of harmonious government through the inexorable law of right thinking which constituted Mrs. Eddy's vision of the church triumphant.

The by-laws of The Mother Church, and the Board of Directors whom Mrs. Eddy has made responsible for their enforcement, can have no conflict or friction with Christian Science churches or with individual Christian Scientists when loyalty to Principle, honesty of purpose, and selfless devotion to the cause are controlling motives.

As Christian Scientists rise in consciousness from the plane of material thought to an enlarged understanding of the power of spiritual scientific right thinking, they see that government in Christian Science is based upon individual spiritual responsibility. The government of The Mother Church and its branches approaches the fulfilment of the spiritual ideal which Mrs. Eddy foresaw and described, in the exact proportion that Christian Scientists recognize and demonstrate their individual responsibility for reflecting the divine government of Mind.

We believe that —— Church of —— is capable through demonstration of establishing and maintaining a normal and right sense of government, and that its members will accept and demonstrate the truth of Mrs. Eddy's statement on page 230 of Miscellany: "I am sure, that each Rule and By-law in this Manual will increase the spirituality of him who obeys it, invigorate his capacity to heal the sick, to comfort such as mourn, and to awaken the sinner."

Sincerely yours,

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

"He doeth the works"

HE who was the greatest of all teachers, who overcame all material law, even that of death and the grave, yet humbly said, "I can of mine own self do nothing;" and again, "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." How unlike to this humility, this recognition and acknowledgment of divine omnipotence and wisdom, is that common trait of mortal mind which impels men and women to forget the source whence all of good which has come into their experience has been poured forth, and to establish in them the belief that they themselves have furnished the motive power for all that has seemed worth while in their affairs.

No matter how cleverly it may be disguised, this trait still bears the earmarks of that subtle tempter in the garden of Eden with its seductive implication, "Ye shall be as gods." If mortals achieve success in any line of endeavor, that success seems to them entirely their own. If they acquire wealth, their own ability is responsible. If they have maintained their health, this has been due to their own foresight and care, and so on to the end of the chapter the dominant thought is one of personal achievement. It does not seem to occur to them that there is a guiding and governing Principle which is the source of all real success, and that the seeming success which has been achieved without regard to or reliance upon this Principle is but the fulfilling of a belief which may be likened to the gathering of Dead Sea fruit, which turns to ashes in the hand that grasps it.

Mrs. Eddy has summarized all this in the terse yet comprehensive statement that "success in error is defeat in Truth" (Science and Health, p. 239). Through these words she turns the thoughts of Christian Scientists to the real source of all that is good and beneficent in human experience. She shows how necessary it is, if they are to accomplish anything worth while, that they have in them that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," because "no wisdom is wise but His wisdom; no truth is true, no love is lovely, no life is Life but the divine; no good is, but the good God bestows" (Science and Health, p. 275).

This is of course another way of saying, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me;" and to the extent that this command is obeyed, and only to this extent, is mankind ushered into the kingdom of heaven. Students of Mrs. Eddy's writings cannot fail to be impressed with her utter dependence upon God in all that she accomplished, and her thankfulness to Him for all the good that He bestows. Happy may that student be who achieves in his demonstration of Christian Science even a modicum of what she accomplished, yet with what Christlike humility she writes of herself, "Today, though rejoicing in some progress, she still finds herself a willing disciple at the heavenly gate, waiting for the Mind of Christ" (Science and Health, Pref., p. ix). In this our Leader has set an example for Christian Scientists, and in her frequent use of the words thank, thanks, thankful, thankfulness, grateful, gratitude, gratefully, and others of similar import, they can see her recognition of the divine impulse of all her work.

Every Christian Scientist must at times become retrospective in order to realize fully the measure of thankfulness which he owes to God, divine Mind, for the many blessings that have come to him; and in giving thanks for these he will not fail in gratitude to the one through whose labor and achievement he has found his way to the open fount from which flows all good. Those who have exchanged sickness and misery for health and happiness, want and woe for plenty and comfort, sin for holiness, through the ministrations of Christian Science, are heavily indebted to God for these blessings, and to His messenger for pointing out the way. Let them, therefore, devote some time each day to contemplation of these blessings, to full recognition of their divine source, and to adequate expressions of thankfulness and gratitude for the good that has been bestowed upon them. To do this will raise them to a higher plane of Christianity and a greater usefulness to all mankind.

"Haste toward harmony"

PEOPLE in general are acquainted with the proverb "Haste makes waste," and its sentiment is undoubtedly true on the plane of material activity. We however find in Science and Health a different concept of activity to that usually held by mortals, in Mrs. Eddy's definition of the word Gad (Jacob's son): "Science; spiritual being understood; haste toward harmony" (Science and Health, p. 586). Even in studying this definition we may with profit think upon the proverb already cited, and see whether there is any danger of mistaken methods in our efforts to realize harmony,—efforts made in forgetfulness of the promise, "I the Lord will hasten it in his time."

Students of the Bible are not unacquainted with the many warnings given therein, especially in the book of Proverbs, against haste with its attendant evils on the part of those who desire material riches; and it may safely be said that these warnings may also be applied to those who desire personal possessions of any kind, and who seek to attain them by the frenzied efforts put forth by human will-power. Christian Science plainly teaches that no good thing is withheld from any of God's children. It therefore rests with us to understand and demonstrate what it means to be a child of God; and in doing this we must get rid of everything which is unlike the perfect Father.

It is very apparent that the prodigal son thought he was making haste toward happiness when he left his father's house on a quest for pleasure; but a false concept led him, as it will lead every one, into the path which ever leads swiftly downward toward misery if not despair. Happily for humanity, however, there is no pathway so steep that it cannot be retraced by the one in whose heart man's spiritual instincts are stirring, and who remembers with humility and gratitude the goodness of the Father, even though that Father may be little understood. We are not told how heavily weighted were the feet of the prodigal on his first returning steps, but we read in Jesus' wonderful parable that when his father saw him coming back he ran toward him; and can we doubt for a moment that the repentant son hastened to the embrace of his father's love? All that follows exemplifies in a wonderful way Mrs. Eddy's definition of Gad, for after the first glimpse of "spiritual being understood" there was undoubted "haste toward harmony."

In the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy we find a solemn warning against those who fail to acknowledge to themselves or others the infinite goodness of God. The passage reads: "Because thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies . . . in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things." The enemies may not necessarily be literal hunger or nakedness, but some other phases of mortal belief,—sickness, sin, and fear,—which have come upon those who did not gladly and quickly recognize and acknowledge the rich provision of divine Love. If we are not quickly approaching the desired harmony of being, we need to know that error has no power to hold us in bondage; for Jeremiah in a wonderful way voices the divine purpose in these words: "Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth. . . . And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity."

In guarding against the waste which a false sense of haste involves, it must be clear that no mere desire for physical health or a desire to outstrip another can do anything toward our real advancement. At the same time it is well for us to measure ofttimes our own progress to see whether increasing spirituality is accelerating our progress, thus bringing us nearer and nearer to the realization of the divine fatherhood with all the blessings which this implies, so that each day is marked by joyful service, and its close by a sense of the renewed strength which comes from all true effort. Over all should be the fuller realization of divine Science which not only promises but ensures the harmony that all desire.

Inspiration of Woman

WHEN Goethe in the Chorus Mysticus of his Faust Epilogue penned the words Das Ewig-Weibliche zieht uns hinan (the eternal womanly draweth us on, or upward), he reached the zenith of his career and that of his race. Had the world been ready to maintain this elevation of the true concept of woman it need not have lapsed back into male domination or into world war. But Goethe's momentary illumination was not founded upon the rock of spiritual understanding, and so it faded, and a woman discovered and founded the Science which has placed "the eternal womanly" in the ascendant, never again to descend into subjection. Mrs. Eddy has pointed out on page 508 of Science and Health that "the Mind or intelligence of production names the female gender last in the ascending order of creation. The intelligent individual idea, be it male or female, rising from the lesser to the greater, unfolds the infinitude of Love."

What the world needs today beyond everything is the inspiration and spiritual intuition of woman, expressed in man. This inspiration cannot be kept under and suppressed any more than you can suppress the sunshine. Pressed by war the nations are today willing to admit woman to the plow, into the ammunition factory and to the driver's seat; tomorrow they will clamor, not so much for her work as for her inspiration in their council chambers,—for her spiritual intuition, which divinely guided makes harmless the venomous serpent. Woman's hour is man's hour. Free men do not begrudge the rise of free women, although autocrats and hierarchs and their complementary bondwomen read the handwriting on the wall and sullenly await their doom. The bondwoman who insists upon man's incompleteness creates a male tyrant for herself and places the whip in his hand. This perversion of the highest likes to suffer and wishes others to do likewise. It ends by finding pleasure in misery and cruelty, and intoxicated by the interplay of the carnal mind upon human affairs finally assumes the rôle of betraying others in order to benefit self.

The early Christian movement, though founded upon a man's teaching and practice of truth, drew largely upon woman for protection and encouragement and for that divine compassion without which neither the sinner can be saved nor the sick healed. The faithful Marys were indispensable to Jesus' earthly career and to his demonstration of victory over death. Paul, who by previous training was doubtless little inclined to appreciate the importance of woman's influence, gives special mention to a number of women workers in his epistles. The writers of the Bible had no hesitation in exposing the methods of the bondwoman, but they were duly appreciative of the value of the free woman. With touching respect the beloved disciple writes his second epistle to a certain "elect lady and her children, whom I love in the truth; and not I only, but also all they that have known the truth."

Today Christian Science, discovered and founded by a woman, is teaching the world the indispensable nature of woman's guidance. A large majority of practitioners and teachers and readers in this movement are women. Their constant assiduous application, indicating joy and spontaneity, provides a never ceasing love currency; their growing wisdom and experience fits them to take the helm of state, to instruct, to leaven the lump.

Safety demands that masculine methods, so well known and hence so easily forestalled by the carnal mind, should be supplemented by woman's intuition. The world already knows ad nauseam the mistakes that males make. It cannot resist the reflection of truth originating in the Mother who is Love. With the resurrection of woman comes the new Jerusalem, the heavenly state of consciousness which cannot suffer. The veil of the temple of a one-sided ecclesiasticism is being rent from top to bottom, and many of "the saints which slept" are rising again. Why make a demigod out of the male when Mrs. Eddy states so clearly in Science and Health: "Gender is mental, not material." "Man and woman as coexistent and eternal with God forever reflect, in glorified quality, the infinite Father-Mother God" (pp. 508, 516). Goethe's fatherland, reviving his message of "the eternal womanly," will learn compassion once more and grow through the unfolding of love as well as truth into a motherland.

"Cheerfully met"

OUT of a multitude of letters which bear eloquent witness that the increase in prices of the periodicals is being "cheerfully met," we take the following brief extracts:—

"The increased price with the accompanying declaration that the present standard of excellence is to be maintained, should result in an increased circulation of the papers already subscribed for and an increased subscription as well. It will undoubtedly cause the subscribers to have an increased appreciation of the paper's worth to them and the world at large and should double the number of the readers of the paper."

"I am writing this as an expression of my unreserved approval of your action in advancing the price of the Christian Science periodicals. Referring to present prevailing conditions along this line of commercial activity, I do not hesitate to express my conviction that it would have been manifest injustice to our high class publications to have done otherwise. Surely you have no excuses to make, no apologies to offer for this action on your part. It will be heartily endorsed by all true Christian Scientists throughout the field."

"I sent fifty cents last month for the renewal of my Quarterly. Since then I see that the price is one dollar, and for all my order was in before the raise of price, I wish to pay the extra fifty cents. I feel that I owe it to the Quarterly, as I was healed this last February of a broken arm, while doing my lesson."

"The directors of this branch of The Mother Church desire to express their grateful appreciation of your action in raising the subscription prices to the periodicals, in preference to reducing their size or using an inferior quality of paper. Our periodicals have always been distinctive in every way, and your determination to keep them so will be an inspiration to Christian Scientists everywhere. We pledge our heartiest efforts to the end that this necessary action on your part may cause no decrease in the number of subscriptions in this community."

"Loyal Christian Scientists will not be dismayed or intimidated one moment over the advanced prices of our periodicals. I for one know that there is in reality no financial equivalent for the fine articles that bring to us fresh inspiration and courage to press toward the high calling in divine Science unto which every one of us is called. How many times do our hearts go out in gratitude to God for your ever faithful fulfilment of our revered Leader's requirements of our workers at headquarters. I have taken each precious periodical as it was born, beginning with our Journal, and that too when almost impossibilities had to be overcome."

"The call to realize more fully and clearly the nature and inexhaustibility of supply, just when the country is being pushed into the realization that like other democracies we must be ready for self-sacrifice and devotion, will help us to meet the personal and world problems with firmer faith and understanding. Perhaps we, who have quick access only to the yellow sheets of a neighboring city and a clean but rather skim-milk-and-watery little local paper, appreciate most keenly our Monitor. The cry 'Stale news!' counts for nothing, since so much of it is news that we get in no other way. Moreover, the local paper often prints a meager account of something which has been given us at length in a Monitor coming to us in the morning mail!"

"Your announcement of increased prices for our literature will I am sure find most ready response from the workers in the field. The demonstration so far has been one of the Publishing Society. Now it is the turn of the individual to realize the source of supply, and I feel certain you will not find us wanting. May I take this opportunity to thank you for the splendid articles appearing in the Journal, Sentinel, and Monitor. They give one new inspiration and make the road from sense to Soul a more beautiful one."

"May I express to you my gratitude and appreciation of the fact that you have seen fit to raise the subscription price of the periodicals? To me it is only another proof of progress and of the truth of Mrs. Eddy's statement in Science and Health that 'the time for thinkers has come' (Pref., p. vii); and resisting the apathy that would resist greater financial effort, we shall progress and be blessed. The literature is worth to me the greatest effort I could make."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

NORTHUMBERLAND, ENGLAND.—The attitude of the press has been quite friendly to Christian Science. Editors are glad to receive our literature, and the educational value of it is evidenced by the good reports many of the newspapers have given of the lectures and by other friendly references to Christian Science. The literature distributed during the year in the county, which includes that done by the literature distribution committees of Newcastle church and Whitley Bay society, has been as follows: 2214 Sentinels, 442 Journals, 11,980 Monitors, 517 pamphlets and miscellaneous pieces, making a sum total of 15,153. The various gifts from the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy have been of great value, first, toward the expenses of general distribution done by the literature distribution committees; second, in providing free of cost large quantities of literature for distribution to soldiers' camps, war hospitals, and other places used by the military, the numbers distributed in this way over and above the figures already given being: 1293 Sentinels, 472 Journals, 16,417 Monitors, and 368 pamphlets, or a total of 18,550 pieces; third, in providing public libraries with authorized Christian Science literature.

Committee on Publication.

TEXARKANA, TEXAS.—The Christian Science Society has purchased the old J. F. Smith residence, 612 Walnut Street, and is having plans prepared contemplating the remodeling of the building to make it suitable for the uses of the society. The lot is 75 by 140 feet, and is beautifully situated in a delightful neighborhood.—The Texarkanian.

NEW YORK.—Christian Science Society of Columbia University is planning for at least two testimony meetings during the summer session, on July 17 and August 7 at 7:45 p.m. These meetings are open to all members of the university, faculty, officers, and students, and to all who ever have been members of the university.

CHICAGO, ILL.—The members of Thirteenth Church of Christ, Scientist, are rejoicing in the completion of their beautiful building at 10317 Longwood Drive. Since Christmas the congregation has been using the Sunday school room in the basement for all services; meanwhile the finishing of the auditorium has been going on rapidly. On April 22 a service for the formal opening of the church was held.

Weekly Review.

FRESNO, CAL.—The main auditorium of the Christian Science church was used for the first time for service yesterday morning [May 6]. It will seat nine hundred and eighty-seven people. The basement contains a Sunday school room with a seating capacity of six hundred.—Fresno Herald.

The Lectures

SAN QUENTIN PRISON, CAL. (auspices San Francisco Churches).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. James Hamilton Morton.

A Christian Science lecture was given for the first time in the history of San Quentin Prison, in Assembly Hall, on April 21, 1917. The speaker was greeted by an attentive and responsive audience of between six and seven hundred prisoners. The lecture was most favorably received by all who heard it, and there have been numerous requests as well as the hope frequently expressed by the men that they may have the pleasure of hearing other members of the board of lectureship of The Mother Church. A more attentive audience it would have been hard to find anywhere. It was remarkable to see the interest shown, and to learn of the desire expressed by so many of the men to learn something more of Christian Science.

SEATTLE, WASH. (First Church).—Bliss Knapp, lecturer; introduced by Miss Adan McFarlane, who said in part:—

"And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." The world is in its present condition because of the false belief that once upon a time man ate of the fruit of "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." Man can be healed of this false belief through finding the tree of life, whose leaves "were for the healing of the nations." The nations of the world are today sick,—sick of envy, jealousy, hatred, intolerance, animality; later on they will be sick because of sorrow, regret, separation, and loss.

The nation that commits a great wrong must be healed, and the nation which sees a great wrong as a reality must also be healed; therefore the whole world needs the healing. This can be accomplished only through the truth contained in the teachings of Christian Science, for Christian Science is the only religion in the world that teaches the reality of the allness of God, Life, Love, and the unreality of sin, disease, and death. This healing must continue until the true brotherhood of man is manifested and there is but one country, and that country the whole earth.

North End News.

MEMPHIS, TENN. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Walter M. Browne, who said in part:—

Is there a woman here whose life has been a burden of sickness, sorrow, and despair, who has done all that flesh and blood could do for the health and happiness of herself and loved ones, but whose hopes and ambitions for their prosperity have been shattered? Are your efforts constantly beset with discouragement and fear in the unequal battle with the world; and would you like to hear of a way to be released from these ills? Then to you Christian Science comes today overflowing with the gifts of God's love, with its strong arms outstretched ready to help you, and waiting for you to turn to it, that you may learn through its teachings how to displace human sorrow with the joys of Spirit, and how to overcome discouragement and fear with an absolute faith in God as the only power.

Is there a man here who has traveled up and down the broad road of materialism and sin, who through indulgence in passions and false appetites has brought upon himself many pangs of suffering and ceaseless woes, until he has finally come to realize the utter folly of such a course and his urgent need of a strength above his own to free him from this bondage? To you also Christian Science comes with the saving strength of the almighty God, to encourage and sustain you, to renew your depressed hopes, and to unclasp the deadly grip of sin which has so long deceived you and cheated you of your manhood.

ABERDEEN, WASH. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Miss Elsie Mary Marion, who said in part:—

Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Christian Science gives a demonstrable understanding of God, and this understanding is the truth that makes us free. Christian Science teaches us to think correctly about God, man, and the universe, thus freeing us from envy, hatred, malice, strife, fear, and discords of every nature, and bringing health, joy, love, harmony, freedom, and peace into our lives.

Testimonies of Healing

A number of years ago I took up the study of Christian Science, and of the many blessings that have come to me through this truth there is one for which I feel especially grateful. My eldest son, when about eight years old, was stricken with what is called epilepsy in a very severe form. I stood alone in Christian Science in the town where I was living at that time, and my relatives were very antagonistic. I worked for the child to the best of my understanding of Science, but he grew worse, and I seemed indeed to be in a dark place. Great fear and belief in the so-called laws of heredity were held over him, but the saying that "man's extremity is God's opportunity" was proven true.

A letter was received from a lady in a neighboring city, a stranger to me, asking me to visit her. She wrote that she had heard I was alone in Science, and thought I would enjoy meeting some one who was also trying to be a Christian Scientist. I cannot tell how much happiness this loving letter brought me; it seemed as though a door had opened in a solid wall. I joyfully accepted the invitation, asking if I might take my little son with me. I shall never forget the day that I went; it seems to me one of the happiest of my life. I told my new friend my trouble and asked for help. After supper she took me for a drive around the city, but left my little boy with a young lady who was staying with her. His bedtime was eight o'clock, and the most severe attacks of this trouble always came when I was putting him to bed, and always reminded me of the boy that Jesus' disciples could not heal. When it came near eight o'clock I was filled with fear and begged to be taken to him, but the lady talked to me and the fear was overcome. When we returned to the house about nine o'clock, we found the child sleeping peacefully. He has never had another attack of this trouble and is now thirty years old. After such a wonderful demonstration, can any one doubt that God is Love and that His faithful servants reflect that Love?

I am striving each day to be worthy to be called a true Christian Scientist. I have raised a family with no other help than the Bible and the Christian Science literature which our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, has given to the world. Some of my children have married and are raising families, and they also use this truth as their only remedy.

One Saturday in August, 1914, our son was brought home from an outing suffering greatly. A physician was called, and after an examination he pronounced the trouble pleurisy. On the following Monday he said the boy had acute lung trouble, and the next day declared there was no chance of recovery. Wednesday morning we called up the same physician again, and also another one. They came about eleven o'clock, and after examining the patient said he had meningitis and there was no hope for him. At two o'clock in the afternoon we called them again, as conditions were still more serious. This time they said he would not last more than two hours, as he had congestion of the brain. He became cold to his knees and his finger nails turned blue. We rubbed him with stimulants for an hour or more, but with no effect, so we gave up all hope.

Our daughter, who knew something of Christian Science, insisted that we try that; so we called up a practitioner, who began giving our son absent treatment. In only a few minutes we saw color coming into his face, and in about half an hour he regained consciousness. He spoke to his sister and knew all the rest of us. The practitioner came to the house and explained the healing, saying that it was of God and not of man, and then gave a present treatment. Our son had been in a high fever from the first, and had been out of his head nearly all the time. He had not eaten anything except a little milk for five days. On this same Wednesday night, at about two o'clock, he wanted to get up, but his brother would not let him, so I was called and went to him. He got up, and after I had dressed him we went into the dining room, where he sat in a chair for about ten minutes and drank some grape juice. He then went back to bed and rested fairly well the rest of the night. In the morning he ate a hearty breakfast. Friday he was out of doors, and on Monday he went down town. From that time on he has been in the best of health.

We have had other experiences of healing through Christian Science. Our granddaughter could eat hardly anything, owing to stomach trouble. She had a few treatments and has since been in the best of health, and eats anything she wants. Our daughter had a carbuncle under each armpit. She came from Seattle to be treated by the same practitioner and was healed in three days' treatment. I had rheumatism in my knees so bad that I could hardly get up and down, but was healed in a few days by reading Science and Health. Our little boy, ten years old, through the understanding gained by attending the Christian Science Sunday school, has had several demonstrations. He looks to God for all his help.

God does answer our prayers, and we are thankful to Him and praise Him for the healing power He has given us through Christian Science. We cannot half express our gratitude for Christian Science, but we are studying every day to get a deeper understanding of Truth.

EZRA B. WAGNER, Olympia, Wash.

Our little boy, aged five, was taken suddenly sick in July, 1916, in the middle of the night, and as there was no way to obtain help from a practitioner I had to do my own Science work. In the morning, however, the child was not any better, so I telephoned to a practitioner, who treated him that day, but he still grew worse. Great fear crept in, and my husband, who does not believe much in Science, called a doctor, who said the boy had an upset stomach together with a very high fever, and left two prescriptions. I did not get these filled, but after he went told my husband I was going to continue Christian Science treatment. For two more days the boy grew worse, and that night he had two convulsions. When morning came he seemed no better; the fever was very high, the bowels did not move, and there was a nervous condition which affected him so that he was unable to sleep. My husband telephoned again for the doctor, but for some reason he did not come. At seven o'clock that night I decided to change practitioners, so telephoned to one nearer us. She said she would treat the boy right away, and if at ten he was no better, she would come at once. When ten o'clock came I was able to tell her she would not have to come that night, as the child was much better. The next morning she came to the house and gave a present treatment.

That afternoon after a short nap my boy awoke, crying for me. I went to him and was about to pick him up when I discovered that his entire left side was paralyzed. I can hardly tell what happened; but I walked the floor, declaring the truth, and when I laid him down about five minutes later he was free. The next day I dressed the child with difficulty, as he appeared to be sore to the touch, and when he attempted to walk he was unable to do so. Each day, however, proved the power of God, and each day there was a big improvement, though he had to learn to walk again.

About a week afterward, as I was talking to my son, the door opened suddenly and the doctor came in. He said some one had made a complaint, saying the child had infantile paralysis and we were trying to cure it with Christian Science. He told the boy to get up and walk, so that he could see how he was, and my heart was filled with joy when I saw the child get up and walk across the floor, so nearly perfect that the doctor could not say anything.

It is needless to say the demonstration was almost complete; the condition of the bowels, the voice which was almost gone, the use of the left leg, the trouble with the lungs and heart, and the nervous condition have all been overcome, and not one drop of medicine passed his lips. We owe it all to the understanding of God, as taught in Christian Science. The boy is now perfectly well, and able to run as fast and play as long as he did before his illness. I am very grateful for this wonderful healing, and for the knowledge I have gained through the study of Science.

Just after Christmas the same child was healed of acute lung trouble. This healing was not so quick as the first, owing to the fact that there was great opposition to Science treatment and the doctor was called; but I had taken a firm stand, and even after all the medical laws had been put upon my child, I still clung to the truth. Just when the condition was at its height my husband gave his consent to Science treatment and the doctor was told it would not be necessary for him to call any more. Seven days afterward the boy was up and around, playing. This was a complete healing; the child was not even convalescent. Through this healing I have experienced a most wonderful growth in Christian Science, and am learning to apply the truth in my daily life and to know that "progress is the law of God" (Science and Health, p. 233). No words can ever express my thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy.

[Translated from the German]

Gratefully I would add my testimony to the healing power of Truth. A short time ago our little girl sustained a severe burn on the arm, causing her to scream with pain, and the skin came off. I immediately telephoned to a Christian Science practitioner for help, with the result that the pain stopped immediately and the child was able to sleep. The same night she even lay on the injured arm.

Through this instance of healing, as well as through many others, I have learned to appreciate and to understand more and more Mrs. Eddy's glorious teachings, and my endeavor is to assimilate more of the truth which they contain, while giving thanks unto God for having been led into the right way.—Frau E. Wampfler, Wimmis, Ct. Bern, Switzerland.

I wish to give my testimony of what Christian Science has done for me, mentally, morally, physically, and spiritually. It has given me comfort, endurance, satisfaction, and assurance; has healed me of false appetites, an impatient and irritable disposition said to be due to physical conditions, and of many other tendencies characteristic of mortal mind. I have been healed of a severe case of chronic bronchitis considered hereditary, of liver trouble and bowel disorder. The very strongest medicine had been used for the last difficulty but had come to be almost non-effective. Stomach trouble, rheumatism, extreme nervousness, bladder trouble, and other physical conditions have also yielded to the power of Truth. I had tried physicians of different schools, also all kinds of medicines, as well as change of climate.

The last physical examination and diagnosis that I underwent was merely to satisfy a sister-in-law who felt that her physician would be able to benefit me. He told her that my condition was serious and my recovery doubtful; that I had a serious catarrhal condition of the whole system, added to the other troubles. Although thinking my condition hopeless, I turned to Christian Science for healing, and in a little less than two weeks almost all these diseases were gone, and today I am in perfect health. A case of blood-poisoning with very high fever was overcome in just a short time.

Spiritually I have been brought closer to God, have an uplifted, purer sense of righteousness and of what it means to be a Christian than I ever had before I knew of Christian Science. While I am indeed appreciative and grateful for relief from physical suffering, I am more grateful for the spiritual regeneration and revelation that I have found in Christian Science. I am striving daily to assimilate more of the Christ-spirit, that I may be able to do these works.

Bonnie Caraway, Sherman, Texas.

My expression of gratitude for the saving and healing power of Truth revealed through Science and Health can no longer be withheld. I want to express my thankfulness to God for Mrs. Eddy's teaching, and for the wonderful peace I am obtaining through the study of her wisely arranged Lesson-Sermons. Since I started to search Christian Science literature in connection with the Bible, my life has been transformed in every way. In two treatments I was healed of a lung affection with the most alarming symptoms; and constant pain in the back was overcome through the study of Science and Health. Fatigue and minor ailments began to vanish as the truth dawned in me, and this also taught me to be more loving and forbearing to my fellow men. The tobacco habit of thirty years' standing was overcome, and through the understanding of divine Love a mental house cleaning was achieved which made me a happy man.

The study of divine Truth and Love has enlarged my mental capacity and put me on better footing financially. Most of all, I rejoice that I have found our heavenly Father to be All-in-all, and have learned to trust Him and depend on Him. Harmony has been realized in our home, and for all these blessings I strive to show my thankfulness by endeavoring to be a real Christian Scientist.

Richard Heidrich, Los Angeles, Cal.

With deep gratitude I testify to what Christian Science has done for me. For many years I suffered from what is called gastritis. In 1904 I had a serious attack of gastric trouble, and from that time until Christian Science came to me in 1910, I was constantly breaking down in health and never perfectly well. Now I am a strong, healthy woman, rarely having any disturbance which is not almost instantly overcome by the understanding gained through the study of Christian Science.

When I first read the Sentinel I thought it all beautiful and the testimonies impressed me very much, but I soon found we needed Science and Health, and so my husband borrowed a copy from the Christian Science Society in this town. I shall never forget the joy which came to me in reading the opening words of the Preface, "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, today is big with blessings." My husband and I read the book together, and we most certainly have found the study of Christian Science "big with blessings." When faithfully applied it has proved adequate to overcome all difficulties, whether mental, physical, or financial.

After about two years I had what seemed to me then a very dark time, but it really only brought bigger blessings. It would be impossible to enumerate the many benefits springing from this experience, but one I should like to mention is class teaching. This step was opened up for me in a wonderful way, and the instruction received has proved of inestimable value in helping me always to turn from the human sense of things to the divine, encouraging me to put into practice the great truths contained in the text-book, and in all things to lean only on "the sustaining infinite."

I am grateful to God, who has given us the blessing through Christ Jesus, and now again through divine Science, made so plain for us by our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy. I am thankful for the church services, and for all the literature which comes to us as "a never ebbing sea." I hope to go on and work for others in the same loving way that I have been helped.

CLARA STUART BRISCOE, High Wycombe, Bucks, England.

Christian Science has changed my entire life and made it well worth living. Until I learned of this healing truth I was ill a great deal of the time. I had tried various kinds of treatment, but was still sick and very much discouraged. Through the healing of a friend I became interested enough in Christian Science to want to try it for myself, and soon after that, when a minor case of sickness came on, instead of going to the doctor I went to a Christian Science practitioner. The healing experienced in that one treatment seemed wonderful to me.

Shortly afterward I had a severe attack of rheumatism, so that I was almost helpless and in constant pain. I sent for a practitioner and asked for treatment, and while at the time the healing seemed slow to me, as it took three or four months, still it was thorough. About eight years have passed and there has never been a return of the trouble. I am very grateful for the physical healing, but more so for the clear, impersonal help received, for I gained during this experience a new understanding of Life, a broader sense of Love, a fuller realization of the necessity of working out our own salvation here and now, and the understanding in a larger degree of how to do this in Christian Science.

Christian Science has been the only remedy in our home since this healing, and we have proved many times that it not only heals physically, but is a very definite, practical religion, one that can be applied to every phase of human living. I am very grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy; grateful that she was good enough and pure enough to discover this Christ-teaching and give it to a hungering world in a practical, usable form.

R. ETELKA HOLT, Wheaton, Ill.

With a heart full of gratitude to God I testify to the wonderful healing power of Christian Science. Nearly seven years ago, when suffering from a nervous breakdown in its worst form, I began the study of Christian Science. I had been told by my physician and nurse that these breakdowns would occur every few years, and realized that I must try something different. On the advice of my mother, who had been healed of neuritis through Christian Science a few years previous, I discharged the doctor and nurse and called for help in Science. My healing was very slow, as there were many wrong thoughts to be overcome; but my condition improved from the first, and through the loving help of practitioners and friends I was entirely healed.

An organic trouble which physicians said only an operation could relieve disappeared, also severe headaches, a continuous pain in my right side, and many minor ailments; but I am most grateful for the spiritual uplift, which has changed my entire viewpoint of life. Where once material pleasures constituted my chief delight, I find now that I am happiest when trying to conform my actions and thinking to the teachings of our text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I feel I can show my gratitude only by putting this truth into daily practice.

ALICE FERGUSON FORBES, Omaha, Neb.

It is with gratitude for physical healing and for other blessings received through Christian Science that I give my testimony. I suffered from muscular rheumatism, and in 1911 was discharged from a hospital a physical wreck, so to speak, after getting no permanent benefit, although doctors and nurses had done all in their power to relieve my suffering.

At this time a friend told me of Christian Science, and I attended a Wednesday evening meeting and heard a number of testimonies of healing. A practitioner was asked to take my case, but I did not realize I was healed until one day when she told me to go up some stairs. It seemed an impossible thing to do; however, she said she was knowing the truth for me, and I went up the stairs and came down. I continued to progress, and rejoice to say I have used no drugs since becoming interested in Christian Science almost five years ago. I have been able to make many demonstrations for myself and also to help others.

I am indeed grateful for the healing, but more so for the understanding of God as Love, who does not wish His children to suffer. Words cannot express my thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy and to all who have been the means of bringing the truth to me and to the world.

R. T. LINDSAY, Watts, Cal.

I wish to thank God, divine Principle, for the privilege of attending the services in The Mother Church for over a year. I did not come to Science for the healing, but for the beautiful religion, which teaches us to love our enemies and to do unto others as we wish to be done by. This Science of Christianity, as taught by our revered and inspired Leader, never fails to help and heal, to comfort the sorrowing, and to alleviate all suffering. It has been an ever present guide in bringing up my two children, who hardly know what medicine is. Many childish ailments have been overcome quickly without the aid of a physician.

At the time of the declaration of war in Europe it did not seem right to keep the children here in an atmosphere of such trouble, so preparations were made for the journey to the United States. All the loving help that was given by Scientists was greatly appreciated, and we were protected in a marvelous way throughout the trip. There was a good deal of fear expressed at the time in crossing the ocean, but spiritual food was given me when I found in one of our periodicals just what I needed to overcome fear. This demonstration helped me to be brave and to aid others. There was joy and happiness felt when other Christian Scientists were discovered aboard the steamer. Words fail to express one's deep gratitude for this beautiful religion.

MRS. W. S. DALLIBA, Paris, France.

I became interested in Christian Science through a Scientist who came to live near my home over six years ago. She was very kind to me, and loaned me an extra copy of Science and Health, together with some Sentinels. Although greatly in need of help, I did not seem quite ready to trust Science to heal me; but after all material means had failed, as they soon did, I turned to it, and was healed in about six weeks. Stomach trouble of eight years' standing, bowel disorder, neuralgia, and many minor ills disappeared. It is now over five years since my healing, and during this time Truth has met every need. My husband became interested in Christian Science through my healing, and was freed from an organic trouble for which tapping had been resorted to.

Some time later my daughter became afflicted with canker sores. The cankers had eaten deeply into the flesh, but she was entirely healed in four days through absent treatment. God has certainly done wonderful things for me, and I am most grateful that through our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, this great truth has again become manifest to a suffering world.—BERTHA RICHMOND, Oswego, N. Y.

The understanding of God that is gained each day through the study of Christian Science means everything to me. Divine Love certainly does "meet every human need" (Science and Health, p. 494), but not until we resign our human hopes and fears to God's wisdom; and I have proven that this is the only road to happiness.

Although brought up in Science, I did not begin to study it earnestly until about five years ago. Many difficulties have been overcome, but the overcoming of mental disturbances has meant more to me than all else, and I have found that peace of mind comes to us if we lean on the divine Mind. God's law applied is the great and only preventive of sickness and all other forms of inharmony. My desire is to be of some use to my brother man.

NEVA CHILBERG, Los Angeles, Cal.

It is with great joy that I express my gratitude for the blessings experienced through Christian Science. After witnessing the healing of my daughter I realized that this must be the same truth which Jesus taught and practised, and I at once took up its study. When about ten years of age I received a bad rupture, and wore a truss continually for nearly sixty years. I am now able to get along without it and can do all kinds of work, such as spading and hoeing. I have also been healed of bowel trouble of many years' standing.

I am truly thankful to God for the physical healing, and for the understanding of the Bible which comes from the study of our text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I feel that my unbounded gratitude can be expressed only in daily activity for the cause of Christian Science.—W. H. CROSS, Milwaukie, Ore.

It is seven years since I first took up the study of Christian Science, and in a short time was convinced that I had found a religion which would be a constant help in my daily life. After reading Science and Health for six months, in connection with the study of the Bible, I was healed of imperfect eyesight after having worn glasses for twelve years. Christian Science has been my only help and comfort in time of great tribulation. It is also teaching me to be less critical and more loving and compassionate.

My daily prayer and most earnest desire is to grow in the understanding of this great truth, and to learn that "good is my God, and my God is good. Love is my God, and my God is Love" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 206). Words fail to express my thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science and all that it has done and is doing for me.—FANNIE A. FARGO, Pittsburgh, Pa.

From Our Exchanges

[The Christian Work]

Inspired words are always finding utterance, and he whose ears are trained well will hear them. They are not all uttered ex cathedra, nor from pulpits or chancels; they may be spoken within the walls of the humblest conventicle or by a Salvationist corporal on a street corner. We often find what strongly approves itself to us as the message of the Spirit in the columns of daily newspapers, or on the pages of magazines, or in stray leaflets or pamphlets, or in the more matured discourse of printed books. There it is that the heavenly influence diffuses itself through the channels of our human intercourse, mingling its light with our shadows, its truth with our traditions and guesses, and giving us as much as we are able to take of its great revelations.

We are thinking now, however, more of what the Spirit is saying to the world and to the church in the events that are taking place, in things that are being done. It is quite as true of the divine as of the human methods of communication that "actions speak louder than words." It is by what He does more than by what He says that the Spirit of all truth makes known His will to men. There are certain great movements now going forward which signalize the presence of God among men in impressive ways and convey intimations of His will. These movements have to do with the Christian churches, and indicate a conviction of some of them that the time has come for a pretty radical reconstruction in their life. This conviction is, we think, largely the product of this fiendish war. The war has brought to some of them, and will, we hope, bring to more of them, a startling revelation of their own weakness.

[The Bishop of Albany in The Living Church]

There is widespread discontent today,—and I am not speaking here of those mutterings and threatenings which have come from the less privileged members of the social order. These must be considered, and no one can doubt that a stable democracy demands that government must be exercised for the best interests of all the people without special regard to classes of any sort.

The discontent which I have in mind is that which is awakening in the hearts of those who have enjoyed privileges and who are truly desirous of knowing where they ought to stand in the process by which a new world must solve the problem of social righteousness. I am not thinking of those who seek protection against that which may assail their personal interests, but rather of those who feel the responsibility of playing their due part in establishing a civilization which shall endure because it shall rest upon justice and regard for the rights of all.

[The Advance]

Religion to be effective and meet every emergency must cultivate a spirit which loves God and righteousness and obeys the truth for the sake of God and duty. Only as religion rises to this level can our righteousness exceed that of the scribes. It is better for a man to live decently for fear of hell than to live indecently and to have no fear. But no man ever got very far into the Christian life on the motive of fear. It is better for a man to do right for the hope of heaven than not to do right at all. But the hope of heaven may be a mere bribe. It can never reach the profounder depths of human life nor stir the springs of the noblest human endeavor. Only he who loves the right and does it with his whole heart can be in any highest sense a follower of Jesus.

[Dr. Lyman Abbott in The Outlook]

The church and its ministers for nineteen centuries have been praying: "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." They should preach as they have prayed. Too long have we been trying to prepare men on earth for a kingdom in heaven. If we would follow our Master's example and manifest our Master's spirit, we must inspire men to build a kingdom of heaven upon the earth. He who urges the ministers to preach the gospel is quite right, but he who does not know that the gospel is the glad tidings that a deliverer has come, and who does not summon followers to unite with him in establishing upon the earth a kingdom of righteousness and peace and joy in holiness of spirit, needs to begin afresh the study of his New Testament. The object of the church is not to show men how when they die they can escape from a world given over to paganism; it is to inspire men with a resolve to transform a pagan world in which the princes exercise dominion over the people, into a kingdom of God in which the people exercise dominion over the princes.

[Zion's Herald]

The really great physician looks beyond immediate cases of illness to the ideal condition when disease and suffering in the world will be minimized by better methods of living. A doctor who always entered the sick room with a smile on his lips was asked how he could meet so many grievous conditions and not lose his equilibrium. He answered, "I always look upon disease from a curative standpoint." Hope is the nerve of ministry to the body as well as to the soul. This curative attitude expresses the mind of the Christ, whose purpose is to abolish the evil conditions out of which sickness and suffering come; for the cure intended is not simply of an individual here or there immediately, but of society at long range and finally. Neither sin primarily, nor ill health inferentially, are a priori necessary. So long as the world is as it is, both will plague humanity; but the world is not to remain as it is now—if only all Christians will with redoubled zeal exert themselves to bring in the sooner the coming "day of the Lord."

[New-Church Messenger]

Democracy must come through the recognition of the law of service inspired by a love of righteousness and common aims and achievements working in harmony for the good of all. This new and comprehensive democracy in men and their governments is not by any means ideal. It will come gradually, as judgment and justice inspire the hearts of men and they are prepared to accept and practise the truths of the second coming in the teachings of the Lord Christ Jesus. The world war cannot have any other result than to hasten this consummation.

[Prin. D. L. Ritchie in The Christian World]

Men grow and religions advance by the constant challenge of a moral ideal. It is the gleaming peak flushed with the glow of a rushing dawn that calls forth effort and keeps the soul in the sublime mood of faith.

Such an ideal works most powerfully when it is incarnate in a person. That is one of the many reasons why Christianity has the preeminence among the religions of the world. Its Founder was its ideal. He himself was what he taught; he did what he commanded. There is, therefore, a true sense in which the faith is comprehended in his simple and sublime "Follow me." Christ, what he was and what he wrought, is Christianity. He is at once the ideal and by his resurrection the moral motive power that energizes men to pursue it.

Items of Interest

At Whitby, on the Yorkshire coast of England between the Humber and the Tyne, the manufacture of jet ornaments has been carried on for many centuries. From about 1850 to 1880 was the most flourishing period. Some fifteen hundred men and boys were employed, but changes of fashion and the competition of German-made glass imitations of jet had almost put an end to the industry before the war. The war has revived the trade, though the number of men now employed at Whitby is not large. It has likewise stopped the importation of jet from Spain and correspondingly extended its mining at Whitby, where the supplies are believed to be practically inexhaustible. Jet is a substance apparently allied to anthracite, and is also mined in Spain in the province of Asturias, in France in the department of the Aude, and in Germany in Wurttemberg.

A decree signed by the President of Brazil on May 9 authorizes the secretary of the treasury to issue an additional 20,000,000 milreis ($4,800,000 United States gold) of treasury notes in accordance with the law of Aug. 28, 1915, which sanctioned a total issue of 350,000,000 milreis for liquidating the compromises of the treasury prior to 1915, meeting the deficits of the budget, providing aid and preventive measures against drought, and assisting the bank of Brazil with funds at 3 per cent to develop its operations of discount and rediscount, etc. Of the total amount authorized, notes to the value of 815,000,000 milreis have been issued. With this latest issue the amount of paper money in circulation in Brazil now reaches the total of 1,157,527,725 milreis, or $277,806,650.

All paper mills in the United States will be placed under Government control during the war, and a request be made that the Canadian Government take the same action, if a recommendation made to the Senate by the Federal Trade Commission is carried out. It is estimated by the commission that paper manufacturers during 1916 received over seventeen million five hundred thousand dollars in excess profits and that paper during 1917 will cost $35,000,000 more to the consumer than last year. "The news print paper situation is very serious," says the report, "not only to the consumers of paper, but to the public generally and to the Government of the United States, which is itself a large consumer of paper. The commission has reason to believe that this situation will be still more aggravated and serious in the ensuing months."

The clove, which is an important industrial product of the Sultanate of Zanzibar (including the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba) was not indigenous to the country, but was introduced from abroad. It is stated on good authority that Zanzibar is the source of over 90 per cent of the world's supply of cloves, the balance being furnished by the Molucca Islands of the Dutch East Indies and by the French island of Madagascar. The value of this product to the Arab planters of Zanzibar averages roughly two million five hundred thousand dollars annually, the production varying widely from year to year. Cloves are the dried unexpanded flower buds of the clove tree. The corolla forms a ball on the top between the four teeth of the calyx, and the stalk is the immature ovary. The balls are at first green, then turn yellow, and finally bright pink or scarlet, and when in this last stage they are ready to be picked.

The Bureau of Fisheries, Department of Commerce, has for some time, in correspondence and in personal interviews, been advocating the use of the meat of whales, porpoises, dolphins, and other cetaceans for human food. Whales and porpoises are mammals, like cattle and sheep, and their flesh is "meat," not "fish." In texture and appearance it resembles beef, though the color is darker red, and the flavor is closer to that meat than to any other. It is devoid of all fishy taste. During May an enterprising whaling company, it is reported, placed fresh whale meat on the market in Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Ore. The product met with a ready sale at ten cents a pound and was immediately placed on the menus of the hotels and restaurants under its proper name.

The Buenos Aires press announces that the great dry dock at Puerto Militar, near Bahia Blanca, Argentina, the largest in South America, is completed and has been successfully tested. Actual construction was begun the latter part of 1911. The total cost of construction, including the building of 1500 meters of berthing dock to replace an old stone breakwater, is estimated to have been $6,606,959, not including, however, the cost of the machinery installed, which was $632,075. The principal dimensions of the new dock are: length, 600 feet available over the bed; depth over entrance bottom, 32 feet; width at entrance at base, 115 feet; width at entrance at top, 120 feet.

A system of Chinese shorthand has been invented by K. V. Dzung, a native of Shanghai, according to advices received by the Presbytarian Board of Foreign Missions. The system contains thirty-nine signs, of which fifteen are vowels and twenty-four are consonants, and these represent every Chinese character, while a speed equal to that of most English systems can be attained. Mr. Dzung says the course can be mastered as readily as any, and can be used in conjunction with the newly invented Chinese typewriter.

There is said to be at present a strong sentiment among the bankers and business men of Nottingham, England, and that vicinity, in favor of the decimalization of the British currency, and all available information indicates that this sentiment is general throughout the country. The agitation of this question began as far back as 1880, when the Decimal Coinage Association was formed, and since that time there has been a steady accession to the ranks of those who favor a change in the currency system.

Thousands of acres of swamp lands in the Carolinas, Florida, Mississippi, and Louisiana are being drained of stagnant waters that have long made them seemingly useless, and converted into plantations, groves, and orchards. According to the United States Geological Survey there are 80,000,000 acres of good land in the United States which is more or less covered with water. Most of this land lies in the South, where vast drainage projects are under way. There are nearly twenty-five companies at work draining swamps not far from New Orleans, and some of the swamp tracts there cover upward of 250,000 acres. The Mississippi Valley swamps contain 20,000,000 acres of rich soil, which the great river, depositing about 400,000,000 tons of sediment each year, has carried down.

The following subjects were to come before the extra session of the Chilean Congress that convened at Santiago May 9: Merchant marine, public health, national police, the establishment of a national department of agriculture, the employment of specialists for the purpose of introducing the iron and steel industry into Chile, and also a specialist in ceramics for a like purpose, the regulation of the exportation of wheat and other cereals, and several other matters.

Another new shipyard is to be erected on the Delaware River by the South Jersey Shipbuilding Company. The plant is to be constructed on Morris River, near its junction with the Delaware at Leesburg, N. J., and according to officials of the company it will build wooden schooners of a standard type having a capacity of about eighteen hundred tons.

Within a short time active construction will start on a new bridge over the Connecticut River, between Springfield and West Springfield, Mass., provided the findings of the special bridge commission, which have just been filed with the Massachusetts supreme court, are approved. At present prices the cost of the bridge is estimated at $2,500,000.

The annual report of the department of public works of the Madras Presidency, British India, for 1915-16 states that nineteen estimates for water supply schemes, with a total value of $986,926, and six drainage schemes with a value of $474,322, were examined in the technical section of the chief engineer's office.

So satisfactory have been the results in Tripoli and Cirenaica in northern Africa from the eucalyptus and acacia trees set out in 1912 that the Italian Government has given orders for the planting of 50,000 more eucalyptus trees there this year. The new plantings will probably be along the railways.

The English language is the medium for much of the business correspondence in Siam, and it seems probable that the literature in that language will become the most popular, for it is now taught in many of the public and other schools throughout the kingdom.

An effort has been made by the South Australian Government to attract young men with ability into the Forestry Department, in order to develop timber industries of the central state of the Commonwealth, and a comprehensive scheme has been devised.

The sum of 250,000 pesos (about $112,500) is to be spent by the Government of Salvador in the construction of new school buildings throughout that country.

Unity of Divine Law

SAMUEL GREENWOOD

God's law in its applicability to mankind was interpreted by Moses in what is known as the Ten Commandments, which were designed to cover the various phases of human experience and to help mortals overcome their tendencies to sin. Jesus embodied "the law and the prophets," all the religious teaching that preceded him, in two commandments: the first enjoining supreme love for God, and the second, its corollary, love for the neighbor. In Christian Science God's law is understood to mean His allness. Writing on this subject on page 30 of "No and Yes" Mrs. Eddy says, "God's law is in three words, 'I am All;' and this perfect law is ever present to rebuke any claim of another law." God is a "jealous God" in that His infinitude permits nothing to exist apart from or unlike Himself, so that the human acknowledgment of aught besides Him is a direct infringement of divine law.

Because the law of righteousness as presented in the Hebrew Decalogue was seemingly divided into separate parts, mortals have conceived the notion that they can choose which of these parts they shall observe, which means that they have the moral liberty partly to obey good and partly to obey evil. Many Christians have gone even farther in believing that they can obey the first command of Jesus and love God with the whole heart, while they disobey the second, which requires them to love their neighbor. This view was uncompromisingly rebuked in the statement found in the epistle of James, that an offense against the law in one point makes one guilty of all. An examination of the Ten Commandments from the spiritual viewpoint of Christian Science shows that all are included in the first, the succeeding nine serving to exemplify its varied application to human life and conduct.

The evil in human thought is therefore the belief that men have power to transgress the law of God, but this belief is not an intelligence or a person. In supposition it is a counterfeit of good, asserting itself in qualities, activities, and presence opposite to the divine. It is consequently indivisible in its spirit and effect, as indicated in the apostle's statement just quoted. Honesty, mercy, justice, love, and the like are not separate virtues acting independently of each other, but the varied expressions of the operation of one divine Principle; while their human opposites are but different phases of the one belief in evil. If a mortal identifies himself with any one of the category of errors, accepting it as a rule of thought and conduct, he virtually admits them all, and joins himself to the whole intent and spirit of evil. One could not, for instance, give himself over to dishonesty and separate himself from contact with its evil source, or escape the defilement of association with other forms of iniquity.

To the human sense men seem to be naturally partly good and partly bad, but such a combination does not express the ideal man whom God created. A Christian will never reach heaven by being partly good and partly bad, for that would mean that he is a perpetual lawbreaker. It is impossible to divide one's loyalty and service between what he knows are opposites, and be sincere about it; nor are there any means by which evil can be rendered harmless or inactive while one limits his acceptance of good. No argument can make it honest to invoke the power of God for the destruction of one form of error, while wishing to leave the remainder undisturbed. As the ancient Israelites experienced a loss of divine favor and protection whenever they partook of the idolatries of the land they were subduing, or preserved for their personal use aught of what was doomed for destruction, so the pilgrims of today, Israelites in a larger sense, journeying toward the understanding and demonstration of Truth, cannot enjoy the fulness of God's blessing while making compromises with error, or while attempting to preserve from destruction some cherished indulgence. The whole consciousness must be unreservedly thrown open to the inflow of purifying truth if one would be wholly a Christian Scientist.

Let a student attempt to heal mentally on the basis that evil need not be altogether denied or forsaken, and what authority will he have for expelling the disease? Or let him take the attitude of admitting the infinity of Spirit as a metaphysical theory to be used in giving a treatment, but holding to some of the things of material sense as too good to be outgrown, and how far will he progress in spiritual understanding? Choosing to express the qualities of good which demand the least sacrifice, and indulging those phases of evil which offer the most satisfaction in a material way, may content the indifferent student when conditions are apparently harmonious, but what aid or protection can such a position afford in time of storm and stress?

The unity of God's law is such that it must be kept intact; it cannot be kept at one point and broken at another. A man who is sincerely honest must express in some degree the whole nature of good. Love is never found in company with impatience or unkindness, nor can one be patient and kind without being loving. All the attributes of God, having the same Principle, are inseparable in their nature and effect. Conversely the same holds true of their counterfeits: one element of evil runs through all the qualities and activities of the carnal mind. All the expressions of good combine as one in the manifestation of divine Love, while the errors that oppose the sovereignty of God in man are but links in the chain of hate, binding mortals to sin and suffering.

Because of its very infinitude divine Love must be reflected impartially. It is the infirmity of human selfishness which claims to love one and hate another, but the love which is godlike cannot be thus divided. Though we loved ninety-nine persons and yet hated the hundredth, our love for the ninety-nine would not protect us from the effects of our hatred for the one, for in so doing we break the whole law of Love. Right doing in any direction is praiseworthy and acceptable, but our righteousness will not save us from condemnation if in some directions we are unfaithful to God.

The illusion of evil waits to invade human consciousness whenever the way is open, and it cares not what that way may be. One may comfort himself that another's malicious thought is harmless if it meets no response in his own thought, and that is true; but what if he is consenting to some other form of sin? Evil does not stop to examine the names on the mental avenues into consciousness. It does not stay out because it finds no enmity there, if some other door is open to it. Evil always finds admittance at the point of our weakest defense, described in Scripture as "the sin which doth so easily beset us." Discouragement, ambition, pride, apathy, self-justification, mental idleness, and other poorly defended points, if we are not alert to keep the whole law, may provide the open door for evil to enter and work its mischief.

It is sometimes asked why so many good Christians have been subject to disease and suffering, but it should be remembered that to believe that evil exists at all as a reality, transgresses what Jesus called "the first of all the commandments." Popular religious teaching sanctions the belief that there is a power apart from God operating against His children, and this keeps the door wide open to fear, disease, and death. The law of God is the ever present truth that there is nothing besides Him; that apart from good, from divine Love, there is no power, intelligence, substance, joy, consciousness, or life. There can be no permanent safety or goodness except in keeping this law unbroken.

Training the Child

VIVIAN M. KUENZLI

With each succeeding year the writer has had occasion to feel more and more grateful for having been given the teaching of Christian Science to meet the problems of daily living. Especially in working among the children in the home and the Sunday school has she felt much joy for the helps along the road furnished through the wise forethought of our dear Leader and the loving, unselfish work carried on continually through The Christian Science Publishing Society.

On page 61 of Science and Health our Leader asks this pertinent question: "Is not the propagation of the human species a greater responsibility, a more solemn charge, than the culture of your garden or the raising of stock to increase your flocks and herds?" If the parents who are studying Christian Science were awake to the great blessing and inestimable value of our daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor, along this line alone, there would be fewer homes without this pure and uplifting educator. If there were any truth in the suggestion that we ourselves have not the time to read it, still there are the children to be considered, and the pages devoted to them are well worth the interested attention of older children as well. In our own home we found that when there was another sort of newspaper lying about, the children were quite likely to pick it up to read or to look at the pictures, and after much prayerful thought we decided that we did not want them given such mental food as is contained in most of the daily papers. Then the question arose, If it is not good for the child to think on such accounts of crime and disease, why should it be good for us? So we discontinued the use of other dailies in favor of our own,—"the full grain in the ear."

Many times the question is asked regarding the method of teaching a child to be obedient, and we know that it must always be by example; that is, by the earnest daily effort of the parent to learn obedience to Principle, as we are taught through Science and Health and our Church Manual, not forgetting that our Leader sounds the positive note on page 236 of our text-book when she says: "Children should obey their parents; insubordination is an evil, blighting the buddings of self-government. Parents should teach their children at the earliest possible period the truths of health and holiness." Again, on page 51 of "Miscellaneous Writings," she has given us a more complete statement regarding the question of governing the child.

Through several years the writer prayed earnestly to be guided aright in the training of the young, and her experience may be of value to others who are working along the same line, although we know that each individual is guided by Truth as he or she comprehends it, and we are warned on the first Sunday of each month by the reading of the by-law from our Church Manual regarding the danger of being influenced erroneously. During the first year of this study, having heard the statement made that man is governed by divine Love, and lacking the ability to make it practical in my own case, I naturally failed with the child. I found that insubordination was increasing rather than diminishing under my efforts to apply the truth in love, as I then understood the word; so I reasoned with myself that it certainly was an evil to have a disobedient child.

We know that Christian Scientists are naturally looked to as expressing higher and better hopes in all ways, and while it is sorrowfully true that the use of the rod is to be regretted, I saw clearly that there were human footsteps to be taken in many directions before I could demonstrate this perfect system of child training. I felt that even if it were through the use of the rod, the child must be taught obedience, if I was to be obedient to the Scriptural rule. Other mothers may be able to follow a better and higher plan, but this is the record of one mother, written in the hope that it may be of some help at least, for of all evils it would seem that a disobedient, disrespectful, impertinent child should receive our earliest attention.

In searching our text-book for helps I found on page 142 the following: "As in Jesus' time, so today, tyranny and pride need to be whipped out of the temple, and humility and divine Science to be welcomed in." Remembering that Paul tells us we are the temple of God, I found myself more willing that tyranny and pride should be whipped out, after finding just how much of the desire to have the child obedient was inspired by these two human qualities of thought,—the desire to dominate and false pride. After this it was easier for the child and myself to work together for that Mind to be in us "which was also in Christ Jesus," because we were each trying to learn obedience to the one Mind through the inspired teaching of Christian Science, which presents the knowledge of God as comprehensible and practical. Then, if it seemed to become necessary to resort to corporal punishment, through our failure to apply what we had learned of truth, it was a matter of equal regret to each of us, and of resolving to be more watchful in the future—a very poignant sense of failure having to be overcome in each instance.

Through the succeeding years it has been a great joy to see that some progress has been made; that while there is still much to be wished and worked for in the growth of every member of the household, the fact that each member is striving for greater unity and helpfulness toward each other and toward all who come within their circle of thought, has proven beyond the shadow of a doubt the practicability of Christian Science as applied to the problems of home life in every particular.

With reference to the question of amusements, it is quite clear that no sane parent would hesitate to refuse to give a child a dose of what is called poison, no matter how attractive it might seem, nor how the child might cry and coax for it, or demand it. It should therefore not be thought unscientific to refuse with the same degree of firmness to indulge children in forming tastes for amusements or entertainments where they will hear and see differing degrees of evil, disease, depravity, and degradation manifested. We are learning how necessary it is to yield implicit obedience to the loving exhortation of Paul, "Whatsoever things are of good report . . . think on these things;" and can we do this by continually allowing thought to be replenished with erroneous pictures, suggestions, and surroundings? If we are not watchful, we may find that through our uncertainty or weakness we are occupying the unenviable position of neither entering the kingdom ourselves nor allowing those dearest to us to enter.

There is no doubtful tone to be found in our text-book, and we are inexcusable if we ignore or shirk our duty of progress along this as well as every other line of right living. Knowing that most of us were educated from childhood to have more faith in the power of evil than in that of good, because of having it presented to us continually in various guises, should we not be diligent in the effort to spare our children the result of partaking of this forbidden knowledge of good and evil from which we have suffered so much? Though this may call for the sacrifice of some beliefs of pleasure, we know that the pleasures as well as the pains of sense must and will be outgrown as we realize more and more the truth of the psalmist's words, "At thy right hand there are pleasures for ever more,"—pleasures which result from right thinking.

Surely, then, we may face our "greater responsibility" and "more solemn charge" with gladness and gratitude for the able and competent helper found in the Monitor, presenting as it does amusements, occupations, pictures, poems, stories, anecdotes,—a newspaper which can be handed to the child in its entirety, with absolute assurance of its purity of expression along every line. Christian Scientists should prove their gratitude for this expression of our Leader's loving thought for the welfare of mankind by making use of their daily paper more fully, and by frequently reminding one another of this added proof of God's affluence.

Spiritual Perception

JOHN M. DEAN

PERHAPS the most comforting thing connected with Christian Science is the assurance it gives of God's never failing provision for His children. God does not create new and special things to fit some peculiar need either of the universe or of the individual. We are told in Genesis that God's creation was "finished," and certainly the finished handiwork of the all wise creator requires neither additions nor embellishments. Also, in Ecclesiastes the wise man tells us that "the thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun." The inexhaustible supply in the storehouse of divine Love is ours, but until this fact is recognized and utilized it will be of no more value than a sealed book or a hidden mine. God's blessings are available to His children only in the degree of their recognition of God as Spirit and of His universe as spiritual.

That which is true always was, is now, and always will be. Neither God nor His creation can change. Nothing changes except our concept of things. On page 68 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Christian Science presents unfoldment, not accretion," and on page 507 she tells us that "creation is ever appearing, and must ever continue to appear from the nature of its inexhaustible source." Human conceptions are always as material as the thought which forms them; hence the real, spiritual creation is apprehended only as mortals put off a material method of thinking. Mortal mind has assumed to set up a modus of its own, in which the only creation it can cognize is as fickle and unstable as mortal mind itself, and thus to this false thought there is constant mutation or change in everything.

Truth is none the less true because it is not demonstrated to mortal sense. The science of numbers is as old as Mind, yet even our little knowledge of history easily spans the time when few, if any, were able to demonstrate it in any appreciable degree. Mathematics would be none the less based upon a fixed law if no problem had ever been solved according to its rules, and if the figures which give it expression had never been invented. A failure to demonstrate any phase of truth proves nothing except the weakness and ignorance of the flesh. Christian Science would be true if it had never reformed a sinner or healed a case of sickness. The failure of mortals to perceive things in no wise affects the things themselves. The ancients might have had all the so-called modern inventions if they had only known enough. The component parts of these were always available, but men have not always known how to make use of them. Thus it becomes plain that nothing, however beneficent, is of any value until it is appropriated and set to work.

Spiritual recognition of things which always existed involves the destruction of nothing but wrong concepts, and wrong concepts can be destroyed only as they are replaced by right ideas. In this process nothing can be hurt and nothing can be lost. The education of a child calls for the destruction of nothing except ignorance, and thus education may be defined merely as the displacement of ignorance by understanding. Ignorance may be described as darkness, and education as the light which dispels the darkness. Thus it is seen that ignorance is not an entity, for if it could properly be classed as such the education of one individual would merely drive his ignorance to some other individual, and the sum total of ignorance would always be the same. Likewise, when ignorance of spiritual things is displaced by a right and perfect understanding, nothing happens except that the point of view is changed.

When this is understood it must be clear that Christian Science is a discovery, and not an invention. Christian Science claims to be nothing but Truth itself revealed and made manifest, and Truth is synonymous with God. The complete saving power of divine Truth was lost to men almost as completely as though it had no existence, until there came upon the scene a woman who was spiritual enough to perceive it, wise enough to define it, and brave enough to offer it to a none too friendly world. Like the medieval prisoner, humanity was languishing in a hopeless dungeon, ignorant of the fact that the door was not really locked and needed but to be pushed open in order that light and liberty might come and come at once.

Spiritual or physical healing comes only in the degree of our recognition of man's perfectibility, and it cannot come otherwise, whether the process involves minutes or years. A complete transformation of thought must precede one's final perception of harmony, or heaven, as is made plain by Mrs. Eddy's statement that "mortal mind must change all its conceptions of life, substance, and intelligence, before it can reach the immortality of Mind and its ideas" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 218).

Every day should bring unfoldment, and each unfoldment will make possible a still greater measure of understanding, or spiritual perception. It is our privilege to enjoy a continuous revelation of the infinite wonders of God's law and God's universe, which have been obscured from view by wrong thinking, but even an occasional ascent into the mount of transfiguration will present new views of old things which can never be obliterated.

At present the universe of Spirit is but faintly comprehended, "For now," as Paul says, "we see through a glass, darkly;" but he also says, "When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." Man in the image and likeness of God never fell, but this real man is seen only as the Adam-man is put off. The perfect is seen only as we unsee the imperfect. The musician never masters harmonious expression by holding discord as a part of music. John says, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," but this sonship becomes apparent only in proportion to our individual demonstration of that eternal fact.

"While they are yet speaking"

MABEL W. DUNHAM

THERE is a quotation from Mrs. Browning which has many times brought to the writer's thought instances when guidance and healing had come through listening to and discerning those silent messengers of Truth which without her study of Christian Science would have been overlooked as meaningless. In one of her poems Mrs. Browning says,—

> Earth's crammed with heaven,
> And every common bush afire with God;
> But only he who sees, takes off his shoes.

The writer was gratefully reminded by this of a recent experience, which came at an hour when help was most needed. It not only lighted her path to instant healing, but led to the removing of the shoes of material thinking. For several weeks she had been working on a problem which seemed baffling. There had been faithful application of the truth as taught in Christian Science, yet without apparent results; instead, what seemed an aggravation of conditions manifested itself. As she sat sadly pondering upon her seeming inability to cope with the situation, and wondering what could be withholding rightful harmony, the telephone rang. She took down the receiver and answered, but there was no response. Again the telephone rang, and again she answered, only to find that silence reigned.

This happened five or six times, and then it occurred to her to apply the truth earnestly and to know that there was no obstruction or interference which could interrupt the perfect activity or prevent rightful communication between any of God's ideas. Instantly the prompting came to look over the instrument in her hand and see that all was right there. Upon investigation she found that one of the cords attached to the receiver had slipped from its position. She replaced the small metal piece, and at once heard a clear, sweet voice saying, "I can hear her, Central, but she evidently does not hear me." Instantly there flashed upon her with a joyful certainty the thought that even so does God hear the call of His child, and that He answers, even though at times we do not seem to hear.

With grateful heart she sat down at the close of the conversation to think about this experience which had so evident a meaning for her. The Bible verse came to her, "Before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear;" and she realized that if we do not hear the answer which is always given, it is because there is hidden in human consciousness some clogging belief of separation from the Father-Mother God, a mental state perhaps undetected and unrecognized until revealed by Truth.

As she continued in silent prayer, listening for "a still small voice" and seeking to bring "all the tithes into the storehouse," every thought to the touchstone of Truth, she realized that the same Mind which uncovered the seeming obstruction in the one case would remove it in the other. Then there dawned upon her awakened sense the realization that the only obstruction which remained was the belief that the inharmonious condition had real existence. This recalls Mrs. Eddy's words on page 339 of Science and Health, "You conquer error by denying its verity." Thereupon the burdened sense vanished, a great peace enveloped her, and she knew that all was well. She went about her work rejoicing, taking each needful step that she would have taken had she already witnessed the healing.

That afternoon the adjustment took place, every barrier was broken down, and the promise in Isaiah proven, "I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron." The memory of this experience has remained a precious guiding star, never to be forgotten, bringing fresh meaning to the oft proved words, "While they are yet speaking, I will hear."

Casting Out Evils

MARY A. DAGGETT

THE familiar motto on the Christian Science text-book, "Heal the sick, raise the dead, cleanse the lepers, cast out demons," is a reminder that this entire command of Jesus is in force today as much as in the day when it was spoken. The belief has however been more or less prevalent that it is impossible for us now to obey these commands. It has, moreover, been believed by some that none are possessed of devils at the present time; but Christian Science is exposing the demon beliefs of today, and bringing to light the Christ-power to cast them out. It is showing that evil beliefs, besetting sins, bad habits, and even other human traits and customs not generally regarded as sinful, often grow so strong as to dominate or possess a person, and become devils indeed, as those who come in contact with the individuals can testify.

It is recorded in the book of Acts that many people listened to Simon the sorcerer, because for a "long time he had bewitched them with sorceries." Then the true Christian preaching of Philip the apostle caused these "unclean spirits" to cry out and come out of their victims. Incidentally, even the sorcerer recognized the power of Truth, and was finally led to ask the disciples to pray for him. This is a significant fact for us to meditate upon. In Isaiah we read: "The Lord shall smite Egypt: he shall smite and heal it: and they shall return even to the Lord, and he shall be intreated of them, and shall heal them." We thus see that there are at least two ways in which people may become possessed of devils; one by self-mesmerism, and the other by being mesmerized or "bewitched" by another.

In the gospels we read that Jesus of Nazareth cast out devils. One possessed of a legion of devils recognized the Christ-power, and voluntarily came to be healed. All Bible students are familiar with the story of this glorious healing. Others besought Jesus to leave them, and not to "torment" them before the time, for his very presence rebuked the evil and caused the beginning of its destruction in suffering. Jesus cast out seven devils—words which express the sum total of all evil—from Mary Magdalene, who was afterward the first to behold the risen Christ. She felt from the beginning his wonderful spiritual attraction; she saw the beauty and power of the spiritual idea of Love, and this turned her in loathing from her sins. Jesus doubtless saw her spiritual possibilities and upward tendencies, and also that she was able to perceive the nothingness of error and to rise above it.

Digitized by Google

It is sometimes asked how Jesus' command to his followers to cast out devils is to be obeyed. Christian Science answers that it can be accomplished through spiritual power alone. According to Jesus' own words on one occasion, "This kind goeth not out but by prayer and fasting." In proportion as one has subdued his own mortal will and belief in materiality, is he able to control and cast out the same errors in another. The qualities which enable one to obey the Master's command are fearlessness, scientific self-control, spiritual insight, love.

As an animal through instinct detects fear in a human being, so an insane person, or one possessed of a devil, detects fear in another and acts accordingly. He therefore seeks to take possession of the situation and torment or injure his victim. On the other hand, a calm, fearless thought is superior to error; it has real spiritual power, and is recognized to be master of the situation. Another human will tends to antagonize and stir up the evil spirit without controlling it. Only the spiritualized thought, disciplined through self-conquest, has dominion, and the power of spiritual love casts out the devil.

A most encouraging fact is that Christian Science is preventive as well as curative. Surely Jesus knew that right thinking and Christian living would prevent any one from becoming possessed of devils, and those disciples whose spiritual growth enabled them to cast out devils must have understood this fact in some degree; but so little was then known of spiritual law and its demonstration, that the law of healing and of prevention had not appeared. We read in Science and Health that although marvelous cures were performed, yet the science of those cures was not yet understood.

We may well rejoice today that we have the exact Science, the perfect Principle and rules, not only for healing, but for preventing all manner of disease and evil. By applying these rules, checking material tendencies, and cultivating spiritual aspirations, we shall never harbor devils in our own consciousness, and the use of the same rules will prevent our becoming victims of hypnotism or mental malpractice of any kind. To use our revered Leader's words on page 242 of Science and Health, "In patient obedience to a patient God, let us labor to dissolve with the universal solvent of Love the adamant of error,—self-will, self-justification, and self-love,—which wars against spirituality and is the law of sin and death."

The Comforter

EUGENIA M. FOSBERY

Cease thy repining, O my heart!
"Be still, for I am here,"—
The voice of Christ yet echoing
Rebukes the selfish tear.
God's presence doth enfold us all,
And Love no sorrow knows,
For from that Word of life revealed
The stream of healing flows.

Then hush the cry disconsolate:
Nor time, nor space, nor loss
Can e'er God's children separate,
But from our love the dross
Of self is purged in Truth's pure light;
The Father holds us in His care,
The while He sees His children all—
Sees all both "here" and "there."

When will clericals learn that it is no part of the religion of Christ Jesus to attack—in the pulpit or out of it—the sincere religious convictions of their neighbors whose understanding of the Nazarene's teachings differs from their own?

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Tonbridge (England) Free Press]

In an interesting report of an address on Christian Science we are glad to see a clergyman dealing with this subject in a fair, open minded way; we are glad he has recognized "the immense amount of good in its teaching." A closer study of Mrs. Eddy's works will reveal that she really lays much more stress on the overcoming of sin than of sickness. On page 2 of "Rudimental Divine Science" she writes: "Healing physical sickness is the smallest part of Christian Science. It is only the bugle-call to thought and action, in the higher range of infinite goodness. The emphatic purpose of Christian Science is the healing of sin; and this task, sometimes, may be harder than the cure of disease; because, while mortals love to sin, they do not love to be sick."

While delivering his address the clergyman asked: "If God is All-in-all, whence and how came mortal mind and its delusion of disease, sin, evil, death?" On page 465 of Science and Health God is defined as "incorporeal, divine, supreme, infinite Mind, Spirit, Soul, Principle, Life, Truth, Love." From this it follows that man and the universe, as the expression of God, must be spiritual, like producing like. This fact is revealed to the human consciousness by the Holy Spirit, the "Spirit of truth" spoken of by Jesus, which will lead into all truth. Now the Greek word for sin means "not shooting straight, to miss the mark," so that, since God is infinite, All-in-all, to believe in anything apart from God is to sin, or to miss the mark. It is a mistake, just as much as it is to believe that two and two make five.

In mathematics one knows that the belief that two and two make five is not a reality; yet it has to be reckoned with occasionally and corrected in human experience by the understanding of the principle governing the conservation of numbers. In precisely the same way, while sin and disease are no part of God or His perfect creation and are therefore unreal, they have to be dealt with in human experience and overcome by a spiritual understanding of the eternal facts of being. Our Master has given us a definition of evil in the words, "He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." Nevertheless he invariably proved the unreality of evil by overcoming it in every form.

Above all else, and unquestionably to a degree not approached by any other religious denomination, Christian Science finds its authority in a strict and spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures from beginning to end. Bible teaching constitutes the warp and woof of Christian Science, and at no point do its teachings differ from the spiritual import of Holy Writ.

The wonderful and unparalleled growth of Christian Science is due not only to the fact that its teachings differ from those of dogmatic scholasticism, but to the fact that it offers present proof of its teachings by "signs following," in place of mere speculative promises for the future. Christian Science is proving itself to be the truth by proving the Bible true. Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and in no unequivocal terms did he point out what those fruits are. He said that all who believe on him shall do the works that he did,—that they shall preach the gospel, heal the sick, and raise the dead. Those are the fruits which he taught are evidences of a correct understanding of Truth. In its earnest endeavor to follow all the commands of the Master, rather than merely the one to preach the gospel (which, by the way, cannot be effectually done if one has not the understanding to heal the sick), should Christian Science be subjected to the vilification and anathemas of those who have not perceived their full duty to God and refuse to accept the whole gospel of the Christ?

Christian Science, more than any other contemporaneous denomination, places implicit faith and confidence in God,—in His power to heal the sick today as readily as He did two thousand years ago when Jesus walked the hills of Galilee. No influence has come into the world since the time of Jesus that has done so much toward the evangelization of mankind, that has so stimulated a deep and understanding interest in the Bible, that has so enthroned the almighty God and His Christ, that has so effectually and finally overcome the sins of the world in the lives of its adherents as has Christian Science. One of the most potent factors today against sin and the terrible effects thereof is Christian Science.

[From the New Bedford (Mass.) Times]

The statement attributed to the Rev. Dr. Cortland Myers, pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston, that the Christian Science church was losing members and that the sale of The Mother Church was planned, brought an emphatic denial of any such conditions from Clifford P. Smith, head of the publication committees of the church. Mr. Smith, in a statement to the International News Service, said:—

"Referring to the statement published, to the effect that the Christian Science denomination was fast losing in membership and that it had become necessary to sell The Mother Church, in Boston, it is false and utterly without foundation. The percentage of increase in membership, as reported in the annual business meeting in June of this year, was greater than in any previous year. During many years the membership has shown a steady and consistent gain. No sale of The Mother Church has ever been contemplated. On the contrary, during the past year it has acquired property immediately adjoining the church and publishing house amounting in value to over one million dollars in order to meet the increase needed for expansion."

[Robert S. Ross in Buffalo (N. Y.) Express]

Christian Science, or Christ's Christianity, differentiates between the temporal and the eternal, the material and the spiritual, the mortal and the immortal. Thus, when on page 388 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes that "food does not affect the absolute Life of man," she does not refer to human so-called life, but to the spiritual, absolute Life of the ideal man, God's image and likeness. Nobody would think of administering food to a lifeless body. In order for a body to appear to need food, the material sense of existence called the human consciousness must be present, proving that the demand for food does not emanate from the body itself, but from the age-long inherited human belief in so-called material existence, wherein matter is appealed to to support matter.

Matter has no real intelligence to help or to harm. In proof of this, the greatest scientist that ever lived said, "There is nothing from without a man, that entering into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, those are they that defile the man." In other words, food is beneficial or harmful only in proportion to one's belief in its power for good or evil. No consistent student of the New Testament will deny that the teaching of Christianity exhorts mortals to overcome the tendency to lean on the broken reed of matter for life and happiness. Because of the reluctance of mortals to heed the divine command, however, the process of putting off the "old man" must necessarily be a gradual one. Ultimately it will be seen that the "bread of life" (spiritual understanding) is the only real sustenance of man. In this, as in everything else, the Christianity of Jesus and the Christianity of Science and Health are in complete accord.

[W. Stuart Booth in Loveland (Col.) Herald]

During the past forty years, since Mrs. Eddy first published the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," tomes of sermons have been preached and tons of paper printed in opposition to its teachings by those whose concepts of Christianity are expressed in creeds, and who have felt the rebuke of Christian Scientists' methods of proving their faith, so concisely stated by James in the words, "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works."

In one of these censorious publications recently circulated in Loveland it was acknowledged not only that Christian Science heals the sick, but also that "its teachings appeal to a very intelligent, well to do class of people, of considerable mental independence." The critic's thought, however, has evidently been so biased by his theological training that he cannot accept anything not bearing his own particular hallmark, for he attributes Christian Science healing to human will instead of the divine will. This reveals his utter misconception of Christian Science teaching and practice, wherein the human will, which is capable of both good and evil, must give place to the will of God, good, which is of course capable of good only. Although Jesus said, as he went about healing the sick, that he came not to do his own will, but the will of God, he was accused of casting out devils by Beelzebub, which was simply the oriental way of saying that he healed by means of human will or hypnotism.

[Aaron E. Brandt in The News, Harrisburg, Pa.]

The recognition and understanding of the fact that God never violates His laws, that despite some one's misguided faith and mistaken zeal they never cease to operate, and that they are perfect and enduring, established "in truth and uprightness," as the psalmist says, places mankind in an intelligent and absolutely right mental attitude toward evil in all its phases. It shows that the seeming existence of the latter is due to a lack of spiritual intelligence, that it is of mankind's own suppositional making,—that is, not of God's making, who is the only real creator,—and that it must be corrected from this standpoint as the only solution of the problem of salvation from evil in all its forms.

Mrs. Eddy says: "It would be contrary to our highest ideas of God to suppose Him capable of first arranging law and causation so as to bring about certain evil results, and then punishing the helpless victims of His volition for doing what they could not avoid doing. Good is not, cannot be, the author of experimental sins. God, good, can no more produce sickness than goodness can cause evil and health occasion disease" (Science and Health, p. 230). In the book of Ecclesiastes we learn that the wisdom of the preacher found "that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions." The Scriptures further show that God made all good, and that "whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him." It is plain, therefore, that to reach a state of uprightness the human consciousness must undo and eliminate its own so-called inventions, made contrary to the laws of God.

Digitized by Google

With reference to the "digestive processes in man," which the editor declares are governed by definite laws of the creator, Christian Science shows that every law of God is spiritual and universal, the same to every individual, like a rule in mathematics that changes not; while human invention includes a so-called hygienic law which is said to control health and digestion, varying not only with every generation, or faster, as the medical schools change their opinions, which are accepted in turn by those who believe them, but varying also in almost every individual. In Christian Science it is learned that an understanding of spiritual law enables thought to be removed from the body and digestive processes, and to follow Jesus' wise counsel to "take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink," and thus allow digestion of food to go on naturally and easily, with no discomfort whatever.

The study of Christian Science gives an understanding of that Mind which Paul said was in Christ Jesus, as distinguished from that which the apostle called the "carnal mind," at enmity with God and responsible for all evil. The latter is the author of evil and works through suggestion, while the former, to the extent that it is understood, gives a faith not based on matter or material means, but an understanding faith, which intelligently protects him who has it, and his body, from disease, contagion, and the fear of any evil power, since by purity of mind the consciousness of evil and the source of its activity is eliminated, and approaches that of Him who Habakkuk said was "of purer eyes than to behold evil." The Scriptures are explicit in teaching that when evil is seen as a reality, or as a creation of God, or as a part of man, it is the eye which sees it thus that needs purifying, as in the case of the mote and the beam.

If the views expressed here seem to be extreme and beyond human comprehension and practical application, let it be remembered that because the laws of God, Truth, are as absolute, invariable, and exacting as the rules of mathematics, the salvation of mankind cannot be worked out in disobedience thereto; that they are being taught in Christian Science, and rapidly apprehended by mankind throughout the world, as proven by the healing, to their lasting gratitude, of many thousands formerly considered incurable.

[B. W. Oppenheim in Star-Mirror, Moscow, Idaho]

The evangelist who by printed handbills, over his signature, circulated in Moscow during a series of revivals in his church, linked the Christian Scientist in a class with the "adulterer, the seducer, the unclean, the murderer, the drunkard, the thief, the godless," and other criminal and sinful offenders, has gone so far beyond the limits of propriety and truth that not even his priestly office can protect him from the accusation of having stated that which he could not but know to be untrue.

He must have known, for he has the means of knowing, that the Christian Scientists in his own community are law abiding people. This is true of Christian Scientists not only in his own community, but in every community throughout the world. Christian Scientists are engaged in worshiping God according to the dictates of their own consciences, and are by law entitled to freedom from such slanderous reviling. No minister of the gospel is commissioned by any power, human or divine, to bear false witness against them, little as he may agree with their doctrine.

It is not true that the designations used by this man apply to Christian Scientists in any sense or at all; nor can any sophistical definition of sin place Christian Scientists and the offenders mentioned in the same class together; nor do the teachings of Christian Science tend toward the commission of crime or the upholding of sin. On the contrary, the whole teaching of Christian Science and the constant effort of its followers is toward purity, morality, sobriety, the uncovering of crime, the overcoming of sin, and the healing of disease and suffering. Christian Science is based on the teaching and practice of Jesus the Christ. Its example is the risen Saviour, who overcame every form of sin and discord, even death, and who admonished his followers to attain unto the perfection of the Father which is in heaven.

Christian Science does not come with a message of frightfulness, asking man to "get right with God" through fear of "spending eternity in hell." Its message is one of freedom from his bondage to the sinner, of healing to the sufferer, and of peace to the sorrowful, of good will toward all mankind. It brings glad tidings of hope to man, and offers the present fulfilment of God's promise of health and peace on earth to all who accept and practise its simple Christian rules.

[Ellis O. Jones in Life, New York, N. Y.]

When revolutions occur it is man's laws only, not God's, that are affected. This is because man's laws are not laws at all, but merely attempts to establish something as law. God's laws, on the other hand, are not subject to revolution. They are made right in the beginning, and are unchangeable. Man's only connection with them is to discover them, apply them, and conform to them. No nation or community could be so ignorant as to try to start a revolution against the law of gravitation, but revolutions will continue to occur so long as men set down their opinions in a formal way and try to dignify them with the name of law.

Resurrection

MARY LLOYD MC CONNEL

"WHO shall roll us away the stone?"
They asked in dread,
As at the darksome sepulcher
They sought their dead.

But when they reached the tomb the stone
Was rolled from sight,
And in its place with joy they saw
Life's radiant light.

Thus to our saddened sense does death
Seem real and near,
When bidding us give up e'en those
We hold most dear.

Yet at this hour which darkest seems,
Still may we prove,
Like women of the olden time,
Our Father's love.

For then in truth the heavy stone
Burdening our heart
Is rolled away, and sense of loss
Love bids depart.

Then with the rising of the sun,
Upon new morn,
Lo, Spirit speaks, and brings to us
A faith new born.

War Relief Fund

THE war relief fund of The Mother Church will be continued during the period of the war. The contributions to this fund have now amounted to over $325,000, and much more can be used to great advantage. Amounts forwarded from this fund reach those in the war stricken countries without any deductions for cost of administration or for other purposes. The far reaching humanitarian results obtained in this work are only limited by the amounts at the disposal of the committees.

Christian Scientists as individual citizens should decide for themselves the question of sending additional contributions to the National Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Boy Scouts of America, and other organizations which have been founded from worthy motives and are rendering special and efficient service connected with war relief. It seems wise, however, for The Mother Church as an organization to concentrate its efforts on its own war relief fund.

"Judge righteous judgment"

A MAXIM well known to business men is that the man who is to succeed in selling his wares must give his attention to presenting their merits rather than to dwelling upon the faults, or alleged faults, of his competitor or his competitor's goods. There is much in this homely maxim which should appeal to the Christian Scientist who is called upon to talk or write about, or in behalf of, his religion. Of course it should be noted in passing that Christian Science and Christian Scientists are not in competition with any person or any system, and to this extent the maxim we have quoted is not in point, but it does point a moral or a rule of conduct which may well be observed.

That Christian Science is able to reform the sinful and heal the sick is not in the slightest degree due to defects, or alleged defects, in other forms of religion or other systems of healing. Its accomplishments are entirely due to its inherent truth and the applicability of this truth to the understanding and needs of humanity. This would be true irrespective of the success or non-success of other religions and other systems, therefore there is no need for Christian Scientists to indulge in comparisons to the would-be disadvantage of others. The real benefit that they can confer upon the world is not by tearing down what others have done or are doing, but by themselves building up a right understanding of the teachings of Christian Science and what these teachings are doing for mankind. In Mrs. Eddy's writings she clearly points out the need for Christian character, Christian tolerance, and Christian forbearance, and in the Manual of The Mother Church there is especial admonition to members of her church on this point. Section 26 of Article VIII reads as follows: "A member of this Church shall not publish, nor cause to be published, an article that is uncharitable or impertinent toward religion, medicine, the courts, or the laws of our land."

The record of Christian Science for fifty years is such that it does not require invidious comparison with the work of others in order that it may shine with increased luster. The works of this religion stand out as the demonstration of a divine Principle which is ever applicable, and these works are sufficient endorsement of its reason for existence. To say that others are not doing the works which the followers of this religion are doing, is simply to beg the question. What the person inquiring about Christian Science wishes to know is whether it heals the sick, gives comfort to the sorrowing, and brings the sinful to repentance by destroying the desire to sin. To answer these questions by decrying the efforts of other systems and pronouncing them of no value, would not carry conviction to the inquirer. On the contrary the testimony of one or more reliable persons that they had received the benefits craved by the inquirer, would carry conviction.

When Jesus was questioned as to his Messiahship he did not denounce or belittle the efforts of the patriarchs and prophets who had preceded him, but quietly and Christianly called attention to the works which John's messengers had witnessed, and calmly rested his case upon the evidence which he was able to submit as to his own powers and his own correlation of teachings and works. If he had confined his efforts to convince these messengers to a denunciation of the failures of the prophets of Baal, the wickedness of the high priests, the hypocrisy of the Pharisees, or the materiality of the religion which surrounded him, he would have utterly failed in establishing his own position or the truth of his teachings.

The fact is that a very large majority of Christian people are trying to find their way to salvation from both sickness and sin, and no one knows better than do they the heartburnings and discouragements of failure and hope deferred. What they need to know is that they can rise from these conditions to newness of life through the healing and regenerating power of Truth and Love. To help them to this knowledge is the work of Christian Science, and the supreme question is whether Christian Science is in fact doing the work which it claims to do. Our Master said, "By their fruits ye shall know them," and it is only as Christian Scientists show these fruits that the world can be convinced. To rail at the failures of others simply leaves the great question unanswered, and adds to this negative attitude the offense of uncharitableness. Far better and wiser is it that words and deeds should be in accord with our Leader's teaching on page 444 of Science and Health: "Students are advised by the author to be charitable and kind, not only toward differing forms of religion and medicine, but to those who hold these differing opinions. Let us be faithful in pointing the way through Christ, as we understand it, but let us also be careful always to 'judge righteous judgment,' and never to condemn rashly."

Commercial Warfare

GREED and fear at work in commerce produce warfare, and non-combatants are the principal sufferers. Such warfare is but a phase of the general confusion in human consciousness as to real values. Were it understood by all that reality is wholly spiritual, the fierce struggle for material things would cease and abundance would be as ever present as is God Himself. The need of the hour is the readjustment of values by Christian Science.

In the world war of today, therefore, the moment has arrived when the mere military conflict is being sharpened a hundredfold by hunger based upon the belief that this can only be appeased by matter. The struggle for matter brings brute instincts to the surface, and the force of physical explosions on the battle field is supplemented by the tension and strain of mental manifestation at home. The world wide problem of high cost of living argues that perhaps man's body will not be sufficiently clothed and fed. The solution of this is found on page 62 of Science and Health: "The divine Mind, which forms the bud and blossom, will care for the human body, even as it clothes the lily; but let no mortal interfere with God's government by thrusting in the laws of erring, human concepts."

Fear is the wickedest thrust at God's government. It tries to create confusion in the minds of men, doling out arguments by the hour, so that the filibustering habit may retard the spontaneity which would be expressed by divine intelligence. A thousand arguments of fear may present themselves, but the mind that is filled with trust in God cannot be disturbed or influenced. "For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways," we read in the Scriptures. Without the heavenly Father's knowledge not a sparrow falleth; by Him even the hairs of the head are numbered. How can there be any doubt that God is capable of taking care of His own!

Out of this chaos will arise the orderly feeding and clothing of nations through the teaching and practice of Christian Science. The recognition of one Principle operating in behalf of all men, scatters the fear of scarcity, supplies human needs, extracts the sting of greed, and showers the brotherhood of man with benefits. Why? Because an all powerful, impartial God, who never faileth, is an inexhaustible source and is Principle. It is the very nature of Principle never to fail. We read in the Scriptures, "Love never faileth" (Rev. Ver.). Then Principle and Love are both clothed with the characteristic of never failing, and things equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Under the greatest pressure, when the cupboard and purse are empty, the infinite hand will provide when rightly appealed to.

God then will not let His creation starve and suffer. The bread of life will become more important to man than material bread. The worst form of starvation that man can experience is to deprive himself of spiritual thinking. This places him under the laws of the world, which are illegitimate with reference to the law of God. The mushroom growth of the self-important individual fades to nothingness in Christian Science under the hallowed awakening to a spiritual consciousness of man and the universe. Out of His infinite superabundance God pours forth His replies to prayer, His response to human need, and men and nations trusting in Principle and rejoicing in Love are fed and clothed as were the five thousand through the spiritual understanding of Christ Jesus.

Let all Christian Scientists make a practical application of the great gift of the Christ-science which has come to them through Mrs. Eddy. Let them give freely of the divine assurance that ever active Principle operating as law and defined equally as Love does not fail. Then will the clamor for special privileges and the push and pull of preferment cease, the expectancy of extra profits subside, the delusion of materialism spend itself, and commercial warfare be seen as a foolish performance, purporting to mock the ever flowing affluence of our God.

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

Divine Judgment

IN the second chapter of Isaiah's prophecy we find a declaration of truth which is of intense significance to the student of Christian Science at the present hour. It reads: "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." As these words are pondered the troubled human sense looks over the world's great battle field and asks how long it must be before this prophecy is merged into fulfilment. Most of us are acquainted with the words themselves, but perhaps we have failed to notice the statement which immediately precedes them and which declares that God will teach us of His ways and that "out of Zion shall go forth the law." Then the prophecy goes on that God "shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people;" and until this spiritual fact is gladly accepted in human consciousness we shall look in vain for the end of war and the reign of righteousness and peace.

On page 281 of Miscellany Mrs. Eddy says, "War will end when nations are ripe for progress." This brings us back to Isaiah's statement that God "shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people." Personal sense might tell us that we individually could decide what nations and peoples most needed the divine judgment and the divine rebuke, whereas we should each of us turn toward the light of divine Truth and gladly welcome its illumination and the consequent rebuke as to our own thinking. If we have harbored a false concept of peace in our individual lives, and have sought to evade the demands of divine justice, we need to be thoroughly aroused to the vital issues of the present time in order that the weight of our influence shall inevitably and invariably be on the side of righteousness and right. In the twentieth chapter of Revelation we have a vivid picture of the divine judgment,—God seated upon the throne with men and nations arraigned before Him, and we read, "They were judged every man according to their works."

Some people object to Christian Science on the ground that it deals so constantly with the individual, and they complain that Christian Scientists do not express the interest in world problems, foreign or domestic, which they think all should do. Here it may be said that Scientists are not lacking in this interest, but they agree with the apostle, who declared that judgment must "begin at the house of God," which to Christian Scientists means that the divine idea operating through their consciousness must make everything right therein before they are ready to recognize and express the righteous judgments of Truth. As they study their Leader's writings and demonstrate the truth therein taught, they become fully aware that righteousness, whether expressed by themselves or others, is the only power in the world; and they also know that the correction of all false or even mistaken views of human conditions must come to themselves in the first place as the rebuke of Spirit, dispelling all mortal illusions and revealing the divine harmony which has never in reality given place to discord of any sort.

It therefore remains for us to become better acquainted with the truth of being, to do what the prophet said many people should do when this truth had entered human consciousness with its healing power. The passage reads, "Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths." Those who truly desire righteousness are ready to be taught God's ways, and this means that when they have learned them and have accepted the divine rebuke which dispels all false concepts, then love will take the place of hate, and the nations shall learn war no more. In one of our hymns (Hymnal, p. 7) we read:—

Kingdoms and thrones to God belong;
Crown Him, ye nations, in your song;
His wondrous name and power rehearse;
His honors shall enrich your verse.

Proclaim Him King, pronounce Him blest;
He's your defense, your joy, your rest;
When terrors rise, and nations faint,
God is the strength of every saint.

Appreciation of Privileges

"I AM writing to express my gratitude for the recent move made by the Publishing Society to increase the prices on our periodicals. It seems fitting that the Christian Scientists should assist in bearing the burden so long carried by our Publishing Society alone. I am also grateful that these prices are universal. Our periodicals are well worth the new rates, and I shall endeavor to bring this out to all subscribers through our reading room."

"We have just finished reading the announcement in the Sentinel of the increased prices to be charged for the periodicals. We are prompted to write this letter as students and rank and file workers to assure you that we shall esteem it a privilege to renew our subscriptions to the periodicals as they fall due. This is a vital hour calling for action. It is because of the thought that activity should be expressed by students individually and collectively, this brief communication of gratitude is sent."

"I read with much satisfaction that the selling price of Christian Science literature has been advanced, so that the figures may in some degree symbolize the notable rise to a higher level of spiritual unfoldment so manifest in the quality of thought that finds expression in our periodicals today. These publications, manifesting as they do the actuality of spiritual ideas, can be nothing less than a continuous expression of Truth. Loyal to the highest ideals of Truth, they equip mentality to express Truth; and who can set a price on Truth?"

"Just a word about the advance in price for our publications. More than six months ago a friend who is connected with a daily newspaper published in this city, and one who is competent to judge, said to me that he could not understand how The Christian Science Monitor could be sold at the price it was offered; saying that the quality of the paper used and everything in its makeup is first class, hence at the present price of things it was surely selling for less than cost. I am confident all will cheerfully meet the advance because it is right, and besides 'our Father is rich;' He it is that gives us the means—the right idea—to purchase and distribute our messengers of good will to man."

"The Christian Science publications are priceless, and I want to pay what is necessary to bring them forth unhampered by any limitation the world may impose."

"After reading the first editorial in the Sentinel of June 2, I felt I wished to pay a balance on what I paid on my subscriptions in early spring. This has not been asked of me materially, but spiritually I deem it my part in the work—I want to help the Publishing Society in its glorious work for all mankind."

"As I have taken out annual subscriptions for the Journal and Sentinel only one month ago and paid for the Monitor until Oct. 1, the thought that I have acquired this literature as a bargain disturbs me, feeling that the spiritual gifts presented in those columns can never be fully paid for with money. I therefore beg to send you the enclosed three dollars difference between former subscription prices and new ones beginning July 1."

"May I take a little of your time to express to you my appreciation of this forward step taken in advancing the price of our periodicals? It seems such a wonderfully fine way for us in the field at large to help spread this gospel of peace. I am always so grateful for all of our periodicals. I cannot imagine what the world would be like just now without the Monitor. I have learned to wait five days for my Monitor, and thereby saved many an unnecessary disturbed hour."

"We cannot estimate the value of our publications in dollars and cents we all know. For that reason I am glad to respond to the prices which the changed conditions now make necessary, thereby helping to keep the good news before the famished world."

"Enclosed please find money order for two dollars and fifty cents, to be added to my subscription for the Christian Science Journal, Sentinel, and Quarterly, as I see by the Sentinel the periodicals are increased in price. As I have already sent four dollars and fifty cents for renewal of same, hope this may be satisfactory."

"I note with pleasure the change in the prices of our periodicals, notice of which is given in today's copy of the Christian Science Sentinel. I feel that I shall enjoy these periodicals more, knowing I have paid the price that they will be the greater part of the year of my subscription. Please permit me to pay the difference."

"Thank you for your editorial in June 2d Sentinel, 'Of inestimable value.' Surely divine Love is calling us higher,—for a greater love and faith to look to divine Principle for abundant supply to meet every need. This advance in price for our periodicals finds a meaning in what Mrs. Eddy has said in 'Christian Healing,' page 1: 'Heaven's favors are formidable: they are calls to higher duties, not discharge from care.'"

"The announcement in the Sentinel of advance in rates of our publications appeals to me as timely, and one that should have the earnest consideration and hearty approval of every Christian Scientist. It awakened my own thought to a comparison of the former rates with those of other publications of more or less universal circulation, and I, for one, wish to testify that I had not before appreciated to what an extent your subscribers had been getting 'all the best of it.' Even though it may seem in one way to make it harder for some to continue steadfast, if we look at it from one viewpoint, what we have saved from low rates in the past will go a long way toward paying the difference in price from now on."

The Lectures

GARDEN CITY, KAN. (Society).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Emma Oldfield, who said in part:—

A French writer has said, "The ceaseless unrest of this weary world is the unvoiced cry for God." The mission of Christian Science is to give to the world a better understanding of God, that we may acquaint ourselves with Him and be at peace. A gentle, tender woman, Mrs. Eddy, in her Message to The Mother Church for 1902, said, "Our heavenly Father never destined mortals who seek for a better country to wander on the shores of time disappointed travelers" (p. 11). Through her consecrated life and her love for humanity she has established through The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass., a board of lectureship, and one of its members will speak to us tonight.

NORRISTOWN, PA. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Emma C. Kirk, who said in part:—

When Jesus was tempted of the devil in the wilderness and commanded to turn stones into bread, he said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." In Paul's epistle to Timothy he says, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." As Christian Scientists we too are trying to divide this word and apply it to every problem,—to poverty, sin, disease, and death.

OREGON CITY, ORE. (First Church).—Bliss Knapp, lecturer; introduced by Senator Walter A. Dimick, who said in part:—

Jesus the Christ said in his Sermon on the Mount: "Blessed are ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." This utterance was applicable to Mrs. Eddy. When her discovery was made known to the world, she was reviled, she was persecuted, she was sworn against falsely; yet she rejoiced and was "exceeding glad," she redoubled her efforts, she pushed onward and forward to tell her new message to the world, and great was her reward in heaven, harmony.

What has been the result? From a little gathering in Massachusetts this religion of Christian Science has grown and spread with a strength and rapidity heretofore unknown to the religious world. In a half century it has practically encircled the whole world; its growth has been phenomenal. The day is fast disappearing when its followers are criticized and called freak religionists. Its doctrine of truth, love, and harmony is fast winning the hearts of mankind. It has stamped out sin; it has relieved suffering; it has changed the lives of men and women, and has lifted them out of despondency and want into peace, happiness, and prosperity. It is recognized by thinkers as a genuine, permanent religion. The Master said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." The same is true of Christian Scientists,—by their acts, their lives, and their examples we know that they derive from their religion only that which is good.—Enterprise.

BROOKLYN, N. Y. (First and Second Churches).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by George Millard Davison, who said in part:—

Dwelling as we do in a world where we seem to be surrounded by much sorrow and woe, we often think that if we could see Jesus and feel his healing presence, we would find balm for all our bruises. An angel once brought the message, "Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy;" and today we are repeating this message to you. The age of healing did not pass away when Jesus and his disciples finished their earthly ministry. Christian healing continued for over two centuries, after which it gradually fell into disuse. Then it lay dormant for ages, till at last Mrs. Eddy's pure life and perfect consecration enabled her, through earnest work and deep spiritual understanding, to discover and again make available for us the Principle of divine healing.

CHICAGO, ILL. (joint lecture).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Milton B. Marks, who said in part:—

The one thing needful in our lives is divine guidance, and Mrs. Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has used these simple but inspired words about God: "He . . . guides every event of our careers" (Unity of Good, p. 3). It matters not whether one's problem seems to be a sick body, a bad moral condition, a domestic tangle, a load of sorrow, or a discouraging business outlook, infinite Mind, God, knows the one right solution for it, and we have the promise that "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

PASCO, WASH. (Society).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Josephine Cooper, who said in part:—

The heart of humanity is hungering for something it has not yet attained; it is reaching out for something that will satisfy its longings. We are all united in one common desire, namely, to gain happiness. We are all desirous of getting that which will comfort us when in sorrow, heal our diseases, enable us to forsake our sins and to overcome our weaknesses, for that in short which will meet our every need. We all admit that such a possession is worth striving for; that it is indeed, to use the psalmist's words, "more to be desired . . . than gold, yea, than much fine gold." Christian Science shows us that these blessings may be obtained, and that the way to obtain them is to know God better.

Testimonies of Healing

Freely I have received, freely I would give. Christian Science found me in total darkness, materially speaking. I was suffering from nervous exhaustion, sleeplessness, gastritis, and imperfect circulation. My mental condition was wretched, my eyesight very poor, my hearing much impaired. In addition I had a rupture of twenty years' standing, and suffered from night sweats, fallen arches, and other ailments. One day in June, 1915, a Christian Scientist gave me a little pamphlet, which I read before retiring. That night I slept like a child, the first peaceful sleep I had enjoyed in a long time.

Three weeks later, while in Springfield, Mass., my right hand became inoculated with what a physician pronounced blood-poisoning in a severe form. I suffered dreadfully from fear, and requested my wife to write to my sister at Columbus, Ohio, who had taken up the study of Christian Science, and ask her to mail me some literature. She lovingly sent half a dozen Sentinels, and I began to read them at once. The first copy fairly staggered me, but upon reading several others the clouds broke, and I realized that nothing was impossible to God. Each day when the physician called he was dumbfounded at my improvement and could not understand it. I continued to read the truth, and at the end of two weeks the doctor pronounced me healed. As I bade him good-by he said I was most fortunate. I told him that I was a believer in Christian Science, but he said it made no difference. To prove what a difference it did make I immediately began to suffer from a relapse, and it was thought I would pass on. The family insisted on a physician, although I had no fear and did not want one; but when my wife telephoned for one she found that he was out.

In the mean time my sister had gone to a Christian Science practitioner, who gave me an absent treatment. At that moment I was perfectly healed, and immediately arose from my bed and dressed. In my great joy I forgot my truss, and the next morning upon arising I threw it into the stove. I laid aside my glasses, threw away my arch supports, together with all medicine, and with them went other erroneous beliefs. To me it seemed as though everything had been written on a blackboard and then erased,—as though gentle hands had taken me out of a deep, dark pit and set me in the sunshine, where I have been ever since.

My wife was at first much opposed to Christian Science, but now God is our refuge, our only physician. Our child was the second to go to church. I knew that I had but one duty to perform, and that was to try to keep the weeds out of my garden and leave the rest to God. Several months thereafter, while I was away from home, the little one said, "Mother, let's go to church; I know the way." That proves the purity of a child.

The joy, peace, health, and spiritual uplift that have come to us make us feel that we are living in a new world. I pray daily for an understanding heart, that I may be able to help my brother by giving him "a cup of cold water." I want to prove my gratitude by my life,—not in words, but in works.—Frederick H. Seibert, Columbus, Ohio.

Sincerely and lovingly I wish to state that my husband has been born again,—has been transformed,—and that baby and I have received many blessings from Christian Science. I was healed of what was termed a chronic bowel trouble of over ten years' standing. For these many blessings I lack words to express fittingly my gratitude to God and to Christian Science.—Kathryn F. Seibert.

After studying Christian Science for over four years and receiving many blessings therefrom, I wish to express my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. When Christian Science found me I was suffering from a complication of diseases, seemingly the result of several surgical operations; in fact my health from childhood was very poor and I was continually ailing. After thirty years of suffering and misery, and with such a fear of insanity that I often planned to commit suicide but was always afraid to do so, the doctors called me a nervous wreck.

This was my condition when one day a lady who had moved into the next house talked with me of Christian Science. She asked if I believed in God, and when I answered yes, she inquired why I did not ask Him to make me well. Then she told me I could be healed by Christian Science. I thanked her, and presently these words came to me: "Nearer, my God, to Thee." Off came my glasses and a bandage I was wearing on my head. All the while I kept repeating "Nearer, my God, to Thee."

It was a very hot day, but I forgot the heat as well as the pain, and started a fire in the range, so that when my husband came home there was a nice supper for him. He had such a look of surprise when he saw me, and finally asked me if the doctor had called. When I replied in the negative he said, "I know; it is Christian Science." He felt it in the home atmosphere. Before supper was over I became sleepy, something very strange for me after years of sleepless nights, and I was asleep in a few minutes after retiring. At seven o'clock next morning I awakened greatly refreshed; and such a sense of calm was over me!

That day my husband bought me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and then the feast began. I read and reread daily for months, and began to attend the Christian Science services. For a year this first glimpse of the truth upheld me, then one day I became very ill and had to call a practitioner. I have many times rejoiced over this trial, for through it I learned how to put into practice this truth that makes free. Much purifying took place and the shackles of material bondage were loosened.

I am sure the windows of heaven have been opened and I have received blessings more than there is room to contain, for I have been healed. I am truly thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy and to those who have so lovingly helped me on my journey from sense to Soul.

Clara J. Simon, Fairview, Ore.

A few years ago a gentleman arose at a Wednesday evening meeting and said that a person who attended the testimony meetings week after week and did not express his gratitude for benefits received, was like a sponge which soaked up water and gave nothing in return. I have many times thought of those words, especially after reading the testimonies in the Sentinel and Journal and deriving much good from them, so I desire to do my part in writing to the Sentinel, which is the surest means of reaching those who have helped me.

Christian Science came into our home some eighteen years ago, when a sister was restored from a life of invalidism to happiness and usefulness. To mortal sense she was helpless with what is known as St. Vitus' dance. She could hardly walk across the floor without falling, and could scarcely feed herself at the table. It was a pitiful case, which the doctors pronounced hopeless. After two weeks of treatment there was a radical change in her appearance, and at the end of a year she was almost her normal self. Today she owes her rugged health to Christian Science. This healing seemed almost a miracle, and we became much interested in the study of Science and Health.

Through the realization of the allness of God I have been brought out of several serious illnesses, among them diphtheria, and typhoid fever in its worst form. I have also been healed of headaches, which had been "a thorn in the flesh" for several years. I am grateful for these healings, but more so for the wonderful improvement in disposition, as irritableness, impatience, and an ungovernable temper have practically gone out of my life.

A wonderful demonstration was made in a time of danger. We were visiting among the hills in South Dakota, and in making a drive of eighty-five miles by automobile to get to the railroad we came to a divide. The slope of the hill was covered with ice, and snow had drifted over the road, leaving barely room enough for the car to travel. To the left was a cañon twenty or more feet deep, and the driver made the remark, "I do not believe we will make that hill!" The brakes refused to work, and all efforts to stop the car proved useless. We commenced to slide down the hill, gaining in speed as we went. A great deal of fear began to be manifested by the others (who were not Scientists), but I had at once begun to use my understanding of Science and was fearless.

The thought came to me clearly that divine Mind governs the universe, and that fear could not hinder God's work. We went over a five foot embankment and then in an instant had jumped nine feet into a draw; but the car stood upright, with the engine still puffing away, and not a spring, bolt, or any part of the car was injured. For a second not a word was spoken by any of the party, and then the driver said: "It's a miracle! Why the car didn't turn over I can't understand!" For this proof of God's care and protection I am most thankful. I am striving each day to be worthy of the name Christian Scientist.

Lillian M. Truitt, Alliance, Neb.

On June 9, 1914, I was a physical, mental, and moral wreck from the continued use of alcohol. With the exception of a few months I had been a hard drinker for over seventeen years. On three occasions I had been treated in hospitals for alcoholism, and having what doctors would call a strong constitution and wonderful vitality, I had been able to recover somewhat from the effects of this terrible habit, but only to succumb again and again. Gradually my strength became weakened, and with my will-power gone I was no longer able to control my appetite or actions, so that for months previous to the above date I failed in many ways, and my promises to relatives or friends were no longer sacred.

When I did not expect to live twenty-four hours I decided to go to a Christian Science practitioner, more to please my mother and at her request than from any hope of help. For several years she had tried to interest me in Christian Science, but I had no idea of what divine Love really was and my concept of God at that time did not appeal to me. Upon my visit to the practitioner I was instantaneously healed of an aggravated case of kidney disease, heart trouble, and other ailments common to a drunkard. Best of all, the few kind words and the advice given me aroused a new interest in life. I read and studied earnestly the literature given to me, and that night slept as I had not done for years.

I continued treatment for the liquor habit, and nineteen days later, while reading an article in an old copy of the Sentinel, I suddenly realized that all desire for drink was gone, and I threw away the supply of liquor I had on hand. For hours I walked the streets with joy and happiness singing in my heart, because for some reason I knew that I was free forever from this terrible habit. I returned to my home city and continued to read and study, and also attended the services of the local Christian Science church regularly. Since boyhood I had been a slave to tobacco, but this habit left me suddenly, nearly four months after my healing of the liquor habit, and I have had no desire for the weed since then.

It is hard to express in words my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for the blessings Christian Science has brought to me; but the physical healing is as nothing compared to the spiritual understanding of this beautiful truth and the knowledge that God is Love. I am thankful for the literature, which is a great help to me daily, weekly, and monthly, as is also the faithful study of the Lesson-Sermon.—A. Eugene Fosdick, Kansas City, Mo.

When I first heard of Christian Science I was a physical wreck, having suffered from stomach trouble for nine years. The best medical men treated me, but could not give me relief. The stomach pump was used twice daily for four months, but even this did not do me any good. Then a lady spoke to me about Christian Science, but I did not feel I could listen to it. A few days later I was taken very much worse, and she came and had another talk with me. I went to the service the next day, and the following day the stomach pump and my many medicines were put away. I asked for help in Christian Science, and treatment was given me for ten days; then I tried to work out my own salvation, but not without many struggles. In four months, however, I was healed, and since then have been able to eat any kind of food, whereas before I could not take even light food without great pain.

I am grateful for this healing, but above all for the spiritual understanding of God, which has brought great joy into my life. The Bible is a treasure to me now, where it used to be a puzzle. I am grateful for the truth Mrs. Eddy has given us, also thankful to our heavenly Father, the giver of all good.—Clara Abbott, Hull, England.

I would like to express my gratitude for the many blessings that have come to me through the study and application of Christian Science. One of the wrong beliefs destroyed for me when first taking up the study of this teaching was the lack of strength to do my housework. When I began to study Christian Science the care of three small rooms was very burdensome and I was always tired. One day I picked up Science and Health and turned to page 385, where I observed a marginal heading which read, "Honest toil has no penalty." Just opposite was the statement, "Whatever it is your duty to do, you can do without harm to yourself." I did not read any farther, but studied those lines, and I could clearly see that all my life I had been believing a lie. I was instantly freed from that false belief and have been able to do any work presented to me with seldom any sense of fatigue. I now have a house of seven large rooms, take care of it myself, and have time to devote to others. I feel very grateful for the proof of Jesus' statement, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

We have had many proofs of the power of Truth in our home. God is our only physician, and I can truly say that divine Love meets every need. I am very grateful for all our literature, especially for the Lesson-Sermons. My little daughter, eleven years old, finds the study of the lesson each morning a great help in her school work. When any discord arises we have only to turn to the lesson and we always find the answer to our problem. She was healed of nasal growths through the truth she gained in the Sunday school. One day while out skating with a playmate she fell, striking the lower part of the spine on the cement walk, and a lady told her she had better go right home, as such falls were very serious. The child tried to deny the false law and continued to play for a short time, but the pain became so severe that she started home. When she reached the house she could hardly walk, her legs seeming to be stiff, and she could not sit down or rise without assistance. I was very busy, so told her to study the Lesson-Sermon through and then I would work with her if she needed any help. When about half through the lesson she came to a word she could not pronounce. Having recently bought a new self-pronouncing Bible for her, I told her to go into the other room and get it, for it would give her the correct pronunciation. In her joy at remembering she owned such a Bible, she ran into the room after it, and I saw at once that she was healed. When she came back she too had discovered the truth, and there was no further pain or stiffness.

For these physical healings I am grateful, but far more so for the better understanding of God, man, and of man's relationship to God. Christian Science is teaching me to love my neighbor as myself, and I am truly thankful to God and grateful to our revered Leader for even my slight understanding of it.—Anna L. Wills, Los Angeles, Cal.

[Translated from the German]

It is with a grateful heart that I testify to the quick healing through Christian Science of our fourteen year old daughter of scarlet fever and a serious throat condition. She did not feel well one morning, but as I was very much taken up with household duties during the day, I gave her scant attention. In the evening, however, it became apparent that she had high fever. As we had been adherents of Christian Science for years, it was our conviction that true healing comes through divine Love alone. I then took up work for her in Christian Science.

The third day was a Wednesday, and I attended the evening meeting, but upon my return found the child in a very serious condition. For a moment it seemed as if I would be overcome by fear, but the beautiful words which I had heard at the service gave me new strength and enabled me to declare the truth with conviction. To my great joy I became aware of an immediate improvement in the child's condition, and there was decided progress during the following days. Owing to her absence from school, however, the teacher asked for a medical certificate, and I had to send for a physician. He stated that the case was scarlet-diphtheria. We did not apply the medical prescriptions, however, but continued to declare the truth, with the result that after a few days the child was completely healed of the disease.

We are most deeply grateful to God for this healing, but more especially for having been led to know this truth which frees us from all disharmony and all bodily ills. We also feel greatly indebted to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for revealing to us anew this glorious Christ-teaching, and our endeavor is to gain more understanding of this truth.

Frau Anna Mai, Altona a.E., Germany.

I would join my mother in giving thanks for the wonderful blessings which I have had the privilege of experiencing through the power of divine Love in so large a measure. For several years I suffered with an inflamed condition which manifested itself especially on the fingers, and the trouble would often grow so severe that work of any kind seemed impossible, while the pain was almost unbearable; but through declaring the truth this form of error was eliminated. It has also been my privilege to experience in my vocation the fact that divine Truth and Love delivers us from all evil which may lift itself against us.

I thank God from the depths of my heart for having been led to Christian Science, and my most sincere desire is that I may grow in grace. I also wish to thank Mrs. Eddy for the glorious teaching which enables us to know God as Truth, Life, and Love.—Elsa Mai.

It is about nine years since I became interested in Christian Science. One morning while I was driving into the city accompanied by my daughter, who had been healed in Christian Science, the following incident occurred. It had been raining the previous day, and the roadway was covered with ice, so that the smooth shod pony was able to obtain a footing only with great difficulty. I gave expression to my fear that the pony would surely go down, but instantly my daughter quoted Mrs. Eddy's words on page 392 of Science and Health, "Admitting only such conclusions as you wish realized in bodily results, you will control yourself harmoniously." She added that if I did not wish the pony to fall down I should hold fast to the opposite thought and declare the truth at all times, whatever the condition. This rebuke, so plainly logical and practical, awakened and clinched an interest in Mrs. Eddy's writings, but it was three years before I had courage enough to dispense with the service of a doctor.

For three years I was troubled with severe pain, which would confine me to bed from two to four days before relief came. The doctor said he thought these attacks were due to gall-stones, but he qualified his opinion by adding that I did not appear to have pain enough for him to be sure of his diagnosis, a point with which I was in entire disagreement. The last attack occurred about six years ago, when I asked my daughter for help in Christian Science, and the trouble was overcome in one treatment. A practising physician to whom I afterward related my experience in detail, said that the attacks must have been due to kidney or bladder trouble, rather than to gall-stones. I have also been healed of other ailments. It is with gratitude that I add my testimony to the thousands which have been published in the Christian Science periodicals.

A. S. Fobes, Shanghai, China.

I wish to express gratitude for the many blessings received in my home through Christian Science. My husband and I have been helped mentally, morally, physically, financially, and spiritually. During our first two years in Science we were not so faithful as we should have been, because we did not understand the demands of this truth. I am indeed thankful to God that I have since then received a clearer understanding of this beautiful truth taught by Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health.

My husband being generous and open-hearted had always made many friends, and from boyhood good fortune followed him, but he never realized whence his supply came. To mortal sense we were both happy with this material abundance. I was however jealous, haughty, and extravagant, and my husband became extravagant, intemperate, and self-indulgent, until error seemed to have a firm hold upon him. He forgot his happy home, his wife, and his many good friends, and found pleasures only in material ways. After having tried all material means to meet this error, as a last resort we went back to Christian Science.

Much patience was needed on the part of the practitioner, as erroneous suggestions found us often off guard and made us lose heart. It was only through listening to the voice that inspired us to do our best that we kept up our courage. Then trouble began in my husband's business, and lawsuits were threatening. This time error again led him to choose material means to drown his sorrow; but he soon remembered that all that God made and sustains is "good" and "very good," harmonious and eternal. He left the false friends and came home more humble than ever, ready to repent and to atone for his wrong doing.

We have since learned the true sense of economy and its relation to time as well as money. The desire for material abundance has ceased, and we both know now whence our supply comes. My husband is no longer enslaved to error and sin, and with it all went the drink habit. I was healed of the errors which had beset me, and have learned to love everybody, even my enemies. We have had a number of physical healings, for which we are very grateful, but the spiritual uplift appeals most to us.

Words are inadequate to express our thankfulness to God, the giver of all good gifts, and we are truly grateful for Christian Science.

LILLIAN K. SCHUMACHER, Indianapolis, Ind.

It affords me much joy to be able to add my expression of gratitude to my wife's testimony. I have had many proofs of the truth of Christian Science, and am daily striving to live nearer the Christ-life, so as to reflect God more truly each day. I am indeed thankful to God for the truth that made me free.—ALEX J. SCHUMACHER.

About five years ago I was instantaneously healed through Christian Science of chronic throat trouble. When the practitioner came to the house I lay on a bed of pain and suffering, and when she left I was able to dress and go for a walk with her. The fever had gone and the inflammation had subsided. The power of God was proven again at the birth of my two little ones. My children have never had a drop of medicine, and they have been healed of colds, bowel trouble, and croup. Many other discordant conditions have been overcome with the understanding of God and man's relationship to Him, as taught in Christian Science.

The Scriptures declare, "Perfect love casteth out fear;" and when I look over the past I am exceedingly grateful for this understanding of "perfect love" and the destruction of many fears. I am grateful for the Christian Science literature,—every article I read helps me, as does the daily study of the Lesson-Sermons,—also for the privilege of being counted among the Christian Scientists. My prayer is that I may ever live a life worthy of the name Christian Scientist, for only in that way can I show my gratitude to God, and to His Son; also to our Leader, who labored for mankind to make Jesus' teachings practical in this age.

Over five years ago I was healed through Christian Science of the tobacco habit, profanity, and many small ailments. Later a severe stomach trouble was overcome. For all this I give my heartfelt thanks to God, with gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science.—O. LARSON, Everett, Wash.

I can testify that all my husband's statements are true. I was healed in Christian Science of a bad case of pleurisy, and for this healing I am very thankful.—MRS. O. LARSON.

From Our Exchanges

[John Abner Marquis, D.D., LL.D., in The Christian Work]

"Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God." There is an appeal to the church in the world situation just now which gives peculiar point to the advice of the text. It is a situation the church has never faced before, and can only be met when we are armed with the whole armor of God.

In the first place the church has a special opportunity to be of use to the world, and that is her business. The world is hungry and suffering for an army armed with something else than dynamite, guns, and poisonous gas. It needs vastly more than the ministry of consolation, deep and pathetic as the cry for that is. The demand is for the church militant. The call is to the active side of our religion. The spiritual forces of the world cannot remain quiescent while the material forces are pushing mankind to destruction. This is no time for the church to live a sheltered life. Its place is on the field and at the front, where work is to be done and battles are to be fought. Its whole fighting and working strength must be mobilized and put under discipline.

The church is not a Micawber waiting for something to turn up. The test of her claim to leadership is in the way she reacts when struck by a crisis, such as is staggering the world at this hour. What Christ was his church must be, and some one has characterized him as "the greatest fighter the world has ever seen." He was in opposition to nearly everything that obtained in both the church and state of his day, and he yielded not an inch. He fought with strange weapons for that time, and they are almost as strange to us,—the weapons of the soul,—and he conquered with them. The world has not yet learned what it is the supreme opportunity of the church to teach it, viz., that the armor of God, the weapons of the Christ, are the only ones that really conquer. In everything that makes for real victory they are as superior to the weapons of the flesh as the machine gun is to the bow and arrow.

[The Christian Intelligencer]

A man's attitude toward life is determined ultimately by his belief concerning God. What kind of a being do you believe God to be?—that is the fundamental question of our lives. To say there are mysteries of majesty, power, wisdom, and holiness in Him that we cannot understand, is only saying that He is infinitely greater than we; but that within all these unknowable elements of His life there is a character that works through them, and that determines His relation to the world, we may understand.

[Western Christian Advocate]

Why an increasing insistence on prayer life? Are we praying less? Are we neglecting spiritual devotions? Do we give sufficient time to talk with Christ, that he may commune with us and that we may hear his voice? A restless man cannot be devotional. This is a restless age. The hurrying man cannot find time to talk with God. This is a hurrying and bustling life. A driven man cannot step aside from the pressure upon him and quietly talk his troubles over with his great burden bearer. This is a hard driven world. Men are neglecting prayer. Not that they are careless, but because they are pushed for time, for thought, and are preoccupied. And yet we must pray. Christianity is maintained by a life of prayer. The soul's salvation is secured and its future determined by prayer. Without prayer we are lost in the maze of material reality and the visions of our ideals flee away.

[Rev. Clyde McGee in The Reminder]

A living faith can be kept only by reinterpreting it in the face of new needs and fresh problems. It can be kept only as it flings out its defiant challenge to indifference and doubt and denial. We can keep faith only as we refuse to submit to a lazy habit of mind that welcomes every excuse offered for inaction. We must not tolerate agnosticism's easy affirmation of regretful ignorance and the dismissal of great problems of human responsibility by a respectful but withal a dismal "I do not know." We can keep our faith from dissolving into the thin air of uncertainty only through positive decision backed up with unflagging loyalty. Faith as a great and growing confidence in God is, after all, the greatest possession of the human soul, and to keep it strong and vital and commanding requires the exercise of the finest powers man possesses.

[Rev. T. Rhondda Williams in The Christian World]

The better time for humanity will surely come only when the nations of the earth shall have a fuller knowledge of each other's lives and an open channel for the communication of the best from each to each; that the special gift of one may be the enrichment of the others, and the fulness of the one the complement of the other, that all together may realize the unified harmonious life of nations as members in the great family of God. For such a time every lover of his kind must strive.

[The Pacific Baptist]

Only the Holy Spirit can impart all needed instruction in religious matters. A man must have a Spirit-filled mind before he can discern the things of the Spirit. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them, because they are spiritually judged." A spiritual rebirth is necessary before a man can even see the kingdom of God. No man can call Jesus "Lord" with true apprehension except the Spirit guide him; it is a revelation from the Father, and not the wisdom of flesh and blood, that enables Peter to say that Jesus is "the Christ, the Son of the living God."

[The Universalist Leader]

Today we want the man of faith, who faces the facts of life with a smiling countenance, because his hand is in God's hand and he knows that things are coming out all right, and he is going to do his part in making them come out right. He does not worry about the things of time, because his life is set to the standards of eternity; he does not worry about earth, because he has brought into earth a vision of heaven; he does not worry about men, because he sees the God in them.

[Dean Inge of St. Paul's in The Guardian]

We cannot see God until the image of God in which we were made has been converted by a life of service and devotion into a likeness of God stamped upon our souls. Until we are like Him we cannot see Him as He is. Most of us, I think, have had glimpses of what this vision may be. Prayer at times draws the veil aside, or at least shows us the light behind the curtain.

[Rev. W. E. Orchard, D.D., in The Christian Commonwealth]

It is the hour of temptation that tests what we really are. It is not our best moments, but our worst, that we have to calculate on. The fair day does not prove the seaworthiness of a boat, but the sudden storm. Trouble or adversity shows how much religion there really is in us; the breaking point is the only safe test of the strength of a chain.

Items of Interest

The selling by manufacturers of large consignments direct to chain stores, mail order houses, and department stores at prices normally charged the wholesaler and at which the manufacturer cannot profitably sell the individual small retailer, was denounced as unfair competition, according to a committee report to the recent "Liberty Convention" of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association at Chicago. The report asserts: "The tendency to eliminate the small man is, therefore, toward monopoly, and under the present conditions this tendency will soon become an accelerated movement which will sweep thousands of American retailers to eventual ruin, at the same time injuring the jobber, who is their only practical source of supply for other than locally produced goods. It now remains to be seen whether the Government will permit a far more gigantic monopoly than any which have preceded it to be built up with ever increasing rapidity and to obtain control of the first necessity of life."

A bank, known as the Industrial and Commercial Bank (Ltd.), has been organized under the laws of Hongkong with a capital of $1,000,000 Hongkong currency. The plans of the company contemplate ultimate capitalization of as much as $50,000,000 and the establishing of branches and agencies all over China, with a view of affording Chinese commerce and industry modern banking facilities, which are lacking in interior districts at present. The enterprise is being promoted by Chinese who have had American university and commercial training. To a considerable extent the capital of the new concern has been raised by popular subscription.

The most important new industry developed in Venice, Italy, the past year is that of spinning glass for commercial uses. The spun glass is marketed in three forms,—hanks of spun glass thread of straight fiber, called cotone di vetro (glass cotton), masses of spun glass curled fiber, called lano di vetro (glass wool), and either of the above qualities pressed into sheets or pads from one quarter to one half inch in thickness and resembling white felt pads. At present this product is used principally for insulation, and especially for making separators for accumulators of electricity; but the glass wool would serve admirably for making artificial hair, wigs, perukes, dolls' hair, and for other purposes, and in the pad form it serves as a hygienic filter.

The legislature of California at its last session passed an act providing for the purchase by the state of 10,000 acres of improved land, and its subdivision into small tracts upon which those of small means may settle under favorable conditions, it having been determined by thorough investigation that, because of the high price of land and for other reasons, successful farming has come to be a matter of large investment, and that the whole agricultural situation has therefore come to be attended with unsound social and economic conditions.

The 10,000 acres will be purchased by the state, buildings will be constructed thereon, and the land laid out in small tracts and sold at a reasonable price on easy terms. Purchasers are given forty years within which to repay loans.

Until the recent discovery of an apparently high grade of coal in the Patagonian region it was supposed that Argentina lacked commercially valuable deposits. In La Rioja, San Juan, and Mendoza the mines are isolated and their output is of low quality, containing a large proportion of ash. Samples of the coal recently found at Santa Cruz, however, indicate contents of volatile matter, fixed coal, and ash that will bear comparison with the best European fuel. In the chalky ground where this was extracted the seam was several meters thick; and if the deposits are of sufficient size their exploitation will not be handicapped by difficulty of transport, for the cordillera is not far from the Atlantic coast and the seams may extend even farther in that direction.

Kansas on July 1 adopted the "manager" plan for handling her institutions. This will do away with many boards. The institutions which come under the new board include the University of Kansas, Lawrence; Agricultural College, Manhattan; Normal School, Emporia; Western Normal School, Hays; Pittsburg Manual Training Normal School, Pittsburg; State Penitentiary, Lansing; Reformatory for Young Men, Hutchinson; Industrial School for Boys, Topeka; Industrial School for Girls, Beloit; Orphans Home, Atchison; Industrial and Education Institute, Topeka (for negroes); Western University, Quindaro (for negroes), and eight other institutions.

A bill to bring about more uniformity in the incorporation of limited companies (corporations) has recently had its second reading in the Ottawa House of Commons. At present in Canada incorporation can be had by letters patent or by registration. The result is much confusion and uncertainty as to the rights and powers in one province of a corporation incorporated by another province, or even incorporated under the prevailing Dominion companies.

The Horticultural Club of Trinidad, West Indies, has arranged to have loaves of bread baked from banana flour prepared at local bakeries and offered for sale in order that the people may have an opportunity to know that a most palatable bread can be made from banana flour. At a recent meeting of this club samples of banana flour and bread were exhibited. The process of making the flour is as follows: Full grown green bananas should be selected. Peel, slice, and dry quickly, preferably on a galvanized sheet, then grind in an ordinary corn mill. From sixty-three pounds of green bananas sixteen and a half pounds of flour can be obtained. The bread is made from two parts of banana flour and one part of wheat flour.

There were 112 concerns in the United States in 1916 engaged in the manufacture of 262,558,661 pounds of oil from peanuts, mustard seed, kapok seed, rape seed, sunflower seed, soya beans, walnuts, corn, copra, palm kernels, and olives. The movement to grow soya beans, peanuts, and other oil bearing seeds and nuts other than cottonseed for the manufacture of oil has received a great impetus, and there will probably be several hundred establishments engaged in crushing the crops grown in 1917.

Arrangements are being made to place a tablet upon Chawton Cottage, near Alton, Hants, England, where all the works of Jane Austen were written. The event will take place on July 18, which marks the centenary of her passing away. William D. Howells is one of the American representatives of the committee in charge of this work.

Preliminary statistics issued by the Bureau of the Census give the quantity of cottonseed received at mills in the United States during the period from Aug. 1, 1916, to May 31, 1917, as 4,461,402 tons, the amount crushed during the period as 4,369,760 tons, and the amount on hand at the mills on May 31 as 105,971 tons.

Negroes in the United States, numbering 10,000,000, have a taxable wealth of about $500,000,000, according to the secretary of the National Negro Business League, who made public the figures in a recent appeal to the race for the purchase of Liberty bonds.

Exports of mine products from Venezuela for the first half of 1916 included 782 kilos of gold dust, valued at $362,484; 638 kilos of gold bricks, $326,186; 1600 tons of magnesite, $3088; 8435 tons of copper ore, $184,532; and 16,686 tons of asphalt, $112,631.

According to a bulletin just issued by the Canton Chamber of Commerce for the year ended April 30, exports from that Chinese port, in bales of 112 pounds, were: of raw silk, 51,971; of waste silk, 31,546; of pierced cocoons, 6951.

The woodland areas of South Africa were formerly of wide extent, but have been greatly reduced through cutting, the clearing of land, and by fires, until now the principal acreage is in the Government reservations.

The wheat acreage in India is reported as 32,962,000 acres, an increase of 9 per cent over the figures for this time last year. The total yield is estimated at 9,929,000 tons, or an increase of 17 per cent.

The production of olives in Spain during 1916 amounted to 1,146,599 metric tons of 2204.6 pounds each. Of the 1916 crop 1,110,153 tons of olives went to the oil presses, yielding 307,115 tons of oil.

A Dublin publication gives the number of emigrants embarking at Irish ports during 1916, with the intention of settling permanently elsewhere, as 7866, the smallest number ever recorded.

A Study of Self

ROBERT NALL

In pursuance of its divine mission Christian Science is teaching the imperative necessity for the uncovering and destruction of mortality's self. Why this is so becomes apparent as one advances in spiritual knowledge; but frequently this is assented to with reluctance. Its full meaning can only be grasped concurrently with an acceptance of Mrs. Eddy's statement that "mortal existence is a state of self-deception and not the truth of being" (Science and Health, p. 403). The human mind in its crude and unawakened condition sees in this a bland denial of what is to it an obvious fact, namely, that there can be nothing more real than mortal existence, and that therefore it is an integral part of one's real self until it is dropped with the dissolution of the body and merged into a higher state of existence.

In common with other erroneous beliefs, Christian Science overturns this by demonstrable evidence. It leaves no room for dualism. There are in reality not two existences nor two selfhoods, any more than there are two truths or two minds or two worlds. It is true, as our Leader found, that in expounding Christian Science to the unenlightened thought it is necessary to use language which seems to imply a dual existence and a dual self; but he who essays to explain the Science of Mind-healing will wisely and clearly insist that there is but one Life, and that spiritual, just as there is but one God, and one man, who can possess no other life than that which is the reflection of God. Indeed there could be no such thing as metaphysical healing if the theory of duality were admitted, for it would involve the acceptance of a belief in the equality of existence and power of Spirit and matter, also of good and evil; hence there would be no harmonious basis upon which to work.

We are bound to acknowledge, therefore, if we are to solve human problems in the most Scriptural, scientific, and effectual way, that we must give up every belief in mortal selfhood as a factor in attaining the desired goal. If there is any hesitation here, or any attempt to temporize with what is one of the great hindrances to healing, then assuredly it is time to awake to our mental condition. To make any concession to the claims of mortal sense is to endanger one's peace and retard one's progress; it is to surrender a stronghold and thus let in the enemy like a flood.

The Christian Scientist who is earnest in his desire to be loyal to Truth as the first consideration, is always passing through a period of mental displacement. The belief in mortal or material selfhood becomes first restless, then contentious and strategical, resisting strongly the prospect of its overthrow and capitulating only when its utter impotency is exposed. We sometimes speak of abandonment of old beliefs, but it is rather that, being the embodiment of error, darkness, and ignorance, they are dispersed with the entrance of the light of spiritual truth. Yet there must be a conscious act of surrender, an act which synchronizes with that repentance which is ever the prerequisite for communion with God, without which our spiritual nature cannot be nourished. It follows, therefore, as God is ever waiting to welcome and bless us,—thus doing His part in helping man to his spiritual heritage,—that if we do our part,—are prepared to consecrate all to Him,—the greater will be our advancement toward the apprehension of true or spiritual selfhood. To do this every student hears the call to a steadfast adherence to the teachings of the Master as spiritually interpreted in Science and Health. Here we shall learn that the self-denial which is indispensable to Christliness is ever accompanied by some knowledge of the self which is the image and likeness of God. Knowing this, our Leader makes the emphatic declaration that the "human self must be evangelized" (Science and Health, p. 254).

To verify this it is only requisite to apply the test of common experience—one's own, in fact—and see how this human or mortal self, which dwells in a firm belief of life and intelligence in matter and of matter's potency, has ever been a misguide, leading one into mental, moral, and physical quagmires where hope was blighted and the Christianity of Christ Jesus pictured as an impossible ideal. Hence if we are wise there is only one thing to do, and that is to seek to be so taught of God, to look to Him who is ever revealing Himself to His children, that the perfect concept of man may be formed in our consciousness. Is it not in this way that thought is uplifted to the realization, not as a mere fleeting impression, but as a permanent perception of the truth, that divine creation could not and does not include a fleshly man or a mortal selfhood; and that the man we all must know sometime is the man who is above corporeality and can have no existence separate from infinite Mind?

Now, if we are willing to be divinely taught to rely, as the Master did, wholly upon the Father, we shall soon learn how impotent as so-called mortal beings we are. "I can of mine own self do nothing," he said. If we would be like him,—and the only hope of humanity lies in following in his steps and obeying his precepts,—we must resolve more and more to rise above the thraldom of material self, pray that this self may be purified and regenerated, and recognize the benignant process, under the inspiration of Truth, by which every mortal illusion is destroyed and every dependence upon the human self is abandoned.

There are sincere and loyal students of Christian Science who have long sought to attain to this, yet they express disappointment that the material self seems always to be so real, persistently beclouding the prospect and obstructing spiritual growth. It is well for such to remember that it is possible, while conscientiously seeking to redeem the time by patient continuance in well doing, to be frustrating growth by entertaining a spirit of self-condemnation. To speak on the one hand of the necessity for destroying self, and on the other to say that self-condemnation is an evil, seems like a paradox. But the Bible is full of paradoxes, and there is not one which is not a fruitful source of spiritual illumination. The self for which the Christian Scientist has no use, the self which he will come to unknow, is blameworthy; but the self which is his real being, which is the reflection of infinite light and Love, is the self which he should spiritually know and foster.

Self-condemnation, to use the term in its general acceptation, is often an excuse for mental laziness, or is the manifestation of a spurious humility which betokens a failure to understand even the rudiments of Christian Science. It is too often the product of a morbid introspection that thinks all one's troubles are centered in the flesh or matter, and would seek a remedy in the hopeless effort to improve the flesh by mortification or asceticism. But he who would find life in Christian Science has no occasion to cover himself with sackcloth and ashes or to cultivate a servile attitude. Rather should he recognize his divine sonship, and know that the clearer becomes his consciousness of this sonship in Truth, the more will he realize that he is endowed with that spiritual perception which becomes to him a power, enabling him to detect the line of demarcation which separates impersonal good from a belief in personal evil,—man's real selfhood from that belief in self which can have no part or lot in the spiritual man.

The steps that lead to this are outlined every week in the Lesson-Sermon. There can be no room for discouragement or doubt or fear in the minds of those who are diligent students of these lessons. If the advance in understanding and demonstration seems to be painful and slow, may it not be that we are not letting divine Love enrich us and strengthen us as much as we should do. We may be unconsciously shutting ourselves within our belief of material selfhood, this little microcosm of erroneous concepts and mental darkness, and never hearing the angel voices that are bidding us, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Would we know the true self? Then we must seek it in the good and the true; in all purity; in holiness of life; in hungering and thirsting after righteousness; in self-abnegation; in the constant accentuation of "harmony in word and deed," which, as our Leader says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 206), is a sign manual of the "real Christian Scientist."

Pictures

AMANDA COLBATH

Pictures, both material and mental, play a far greater part in the human experience than we are conscious of. No home is so humble but that on entering it one will see the thought of the inmates expressed by the pictures on their walls. There is also one picture which we are daily presenting to the world, however unconsciously, and that is our face. It registers either the degree of the sunshine of Spirit which we are reflecting or the extent to which we are dwelling in the chill atmosphere of fear and doubt.

In reading the articles on moving pictures which appear in current newspapers and magazines, we may note that each scene is rehearsed many times before the picture is actually taken. It is also true of individuals that when sitting before a camera they are careful to present a good appearance, so that the picture produced will be as free as possible from defect in outline and expression.

We know that a camera records everything before it, though a mistake made while acting may, in the interest attaching to the scene, pass unnoticed by an audience. Just so it is with the mental camera; we are always before this camera, and it is taking down our thoughts and producing mental pictures that go out either to bless or to ban mankind. Then how important it is that we practise right thinking, until our thoughts change the staging of these pictures from sin, sickness, sorrow, and discord, into peace, harmony, health, and happiness.

A young student of Christian Science once passed through severe trials in the city where she resided, covering a period of several years. Later, having occasion to leave that city, she desired to efface from her memory as nearly as possible all unpleasant experiences. In endeavoring to do this the whole past seemed to be blotted out, so that, although she was seemingly clear in her work, she could not readily remember even the names of individuals with whom she had formerly been associated. This condition became very annoying, and some thought as to the possibility of remedying it was given to it from time to time.

One day while reasoning out the situation from a Christian Science point of view, and knowing that she could not be deprived of anything which it was beneficial to remember, this passage from the fourteenth chapter of John came to her: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Then instantly followed the thought that only good could be brought to remembrance, and a picture of the past came up before her like a panorama.

The picture was so vivid that many scenes were recalled which heretofore had seemed to be entirely forgotten; in fact all the normal experiences of the past came to mind, thus eliminating the sense of time and evolution, and destroying all desire to live over even the pleasant part of her life, for she could see it as a mental whole. This view of the past was not obtained, however, until all the error of the past had been given up as a reality and therefore could not appear in this picture, because nothing remains of error when it has been destroyed by Truth. Thus the joy which comes from having dominion over the past was attained, and with this new possession things past, present, and future began to unfold.

An artist may have in his thought a complete picture, one that has come to him intuitively, but the moment he attempts to reproduce it by putting it on canvas, it seems to come under the law of evolution,—a little appearing each day. When one perceives the spiritual fact regarding anything, the temptation often comes to be impatient, or even discouraged, because all which is discerned does not at once appear in outward manifestation. But if that one will remember our Leader's words on page 165 of "Miscellaneous Writings," it will do a great deal to quiet these suggestions of the human mind. Here she has written: "The secret stores of wisdom must be discovered, their treasures reproduced and given to the world, before man can truthfully conclude that he has been found in the order, mode, and virgin origin of man according to divine Science, which alone demonstrates the divine Principle and spiritual idea of being."

In the book of Deuteronomy we read: "And the Lord said unto him [Moses], This is the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed: I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither." These words spoken to Moses would seem inexplicable from a human point of view. He was more spiritually minded than were the people he had led out of Egypt, and yet he was debarred from entering the land of Canaan while they were permitted to enjoy it. But one should keep in mind that God said, "I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes."

At this point it may be helpful to read the definition of eyes as given on page 586 of Science and Health, namely, "Spiritual discernment,—not material but mental." While entrance to the land of Canaan was a privilege to the children of Israel, it would only have delayed the work of Moses, as he did not need to go through all the detail which the experience of entering this land involved. Through his advanced spiritual understanding he already understood all that the experience would otherwise have unfolded to him; therefore he could not have profited by passing through it.

On page 513 of Science and Health we read: "To material sense, this divine universe is dim and distant, gray in the somber hues of twilight; but anon the veil is lifted, and the scene shifts into light." When the human consciousness becomes a reflection of the divine nature, the divine creation will appear to the spiritualized thought. Time is not in the revelation but in the human mind, and the preparation of human consciousness to take in this view will lift the veil spoken of in the above quotation and the scene will shift "into light."

The "eternal now"

WALTER E. YOUNG

Among the many illuminations of the Scriptures which have come to us through the teachings of Christian Science, none perhaps is more potent for good in human affairs than the spiritual light gained from a metaphysical understanding of Paul's words in his second epistle to the Corinthians, where he says, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation."

The human mind is all too prone to hark back to the past or to look with foreboding into the anticipated future, thereby to its own detriment allowing its attention to be diverted from the all important and only real issue, that of the immediate conscious moment, the "eternal now." The student of Christian Science readily perceives that behind all this fear and mental torment involved in looking back or anxiously peering ahead, is the fundamental mortal belief of time; in fact, it may be said that the whole gamut of mortal experience is indissolubly bound up with and in a large measure is the direct effect of the erroneous belief that time is a fixed, irrevocable law, governing man and the universe by a code of innumerable limitations. Thus it may be learned that time, scientifically defined, is but mortal limitation.

Many a burden has been rolled away from human consciousness when the knowledge of God's ever-presence as available now, even in the midst of the seeming clouds of doubt, despair, sickness, or discouragement, has been grasped and made immediate use of. As we progress in Christian Science we learn more and more that effective work is accomplished in the degree of our ability to reject instantly the suggestions of evil which would assail us, and know without parley or compromise evil's proven unreality. This instant rejection and denial of evil in all its phases of pretense and subtlety, if born of the understanding that the divine consciousness is the only existence there really is or can be, will meet the assertions of evil at the point of extinction, and the "eternal now" of infinite, omnipresent good will be demonstrated.

An experience of the writer while visiting a large European city some years ago may be helpful in showing the desirability of lifting thought quickly and completely out of the belief of time, place, or circumstance, into a consciousness of the "now" of our actual existence as ideas in and of divine Mind. A problem which had seemingly baffled solution, began to assume larger proportions as one day found the writer in the center of a very busy thoroughfare of the city. The difficulties of the situation loomed up so dark in thought, and self-consciousness with all its attendant deceptions appeared so insistent, that dejection and despair threatened to take possession; but right there, at the height of the turmoil within and without, quickly came the inspiration to face the error squarely—to analyze and lay bare its deceptive nature.

Then came the "still small voice" of Truth, which seemed to say clearly and confidently, "You do not exist in all this—your true self, God's likeness, is in the divine consciousness here and now." Instantly there followed a clarity of thought and vision which made it possible to see that the only trouble there could ever be was the wrong thinking which had been allowed to accumulate in consciousness, and which was now seen as utterly unreal and therefore without power to disturb or discourage. The mental chains forged by fear were broken, the burden was lifted and the way made clear for a right solution of the problem, which began to unfold from that hour.

At the same moment there came a spontaneous acknowledgment of gratitude and joy for the knowledge of Christian Science that had made possible such instant freedom and happiness. In the twenty-second chapter of Job we may read this definite promise and assurance: "Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee."

"They shall not hurt nor destroy"

EDITH MAUDE ELLIS

On five different occasions the words in the prophecy of Isaiah, "They shall not hurt nor destroy," and the similar ones spoken by the Master to his disciples, "Nothing shall by any means hurt you," helped me to prove the powerlessness of a wasp's sting to cause any discord. The following experience may prove helpful to parents who have a fear of such things for their children.

I had been making jam, and on finishing gave the preserving pan to my three year old daughter, who always looked forward to a pleasant half hour with the pan and a spoon after jam making. In a few minutes some wasps began to show serious intentions of sharing the booty with the child. At first she strongly objected, but I explained to her that the wasps loved the jam just as much as she did, and that she must either give up the pleasure of scraping the pan at all, or else be unselfish and let the wasps have their share also, as it was impossible to keep them off. I assured her that if she could remember that she was God's child and so could not and would not be harmed, because Love was all around her, she would reflect love and could have quite a happy time. Then I left her in the garden to work out the problem for herself, and proceeded to do other work in the house.

Half an hour later I went out to the garden, and the little one called to me, "I am loving the wasps all the time, mama, and there's plenty for us all." They were swarming around her, and her attitude of love and fearlessness toward them caused a prayer of gratitude to go up from my heart. Here we may remember the words immediately preceding the text already quoted from Isaiah, "The sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den."

At dinner shortly afterward the same little girl inadvertently put her hand on a wasp which was on the table, and immediately called out that something had pricked her. The other children exclaimed that she was stung. As I declared the truth for her and told them to do the same, I saw the picture of the morning, and with another great wave of gratitude remembered Mrs. Eddy's statement that even "the serpent of God's creating is neither subtle nor poisonous" (Science and Health, p. 515), and knew that the sting could in no wise hurt her. I tucked her up for her midday sleep, and as I kissed her she murmured, "Love will take the white spot away." When she awoke all trace of the spot was gone and there had been no pain at all.

That night, as my eldest girl laid her head on her pillow, a wasp stung her. The baby was just saying "the scientific statement of being" (Science and Health, p. 468) to her daddy before going to sleep, and as her sister ran in to tell her father about the sting, they all joined in declaring the truth. In this instance too there was no pain whatever. Twice again during the season the little one was stung, and each time she quaintly said, "Love's tooken the sting all away!" On the fifth occasion I was stung, and once more the truth made free and there was no pain.

I could not help realizing that if only we would trust the promises of our loving Father-Mother God, given in an infinite variety of ways and through an infinite variety of channels, as my little girl had trusted my word, how soon we should be dwelling in the spiritual altitude mentioned by the prophet, and proving for ourselves and for the whole world that "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord."

"Work out your own salvation"

HENRIETTA G. LAWS

PAUL said, "Work out your own salvation," and he added, "For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Many of us are, however, trying to work out not only our own salvation but endeavoring to help some one else as well. When we begin the study of Christian Science we learn in a new way that God is good, and that He cares for us all as no human being ever can. All that is necessary is to know the truth and be willing to let God lead us. We shall then be guided to the mental plane where there is no sin, sickness, sorrow, or want of any kind.

It sometimes happens that on our journey upward we stop to question God's ability or willingness to care for us, and we hinder our progress by wondering why others seem to have an easier time in reaching happiness than we have. Their healing comes more quickly than ours, or perhaps they have less difficulty in demonstrating control over financial problems. The writer is here reminded of two travelers climbing a mountain, and both anxious to reach the summit for the sake of the grand outlook which awaits them there. They have the same guide, who assures them he will take them safely to the top,—carry them over the rugged places without harm. They start on the journey, and are making good progress, when they come to a steep and dangerous looking place. One traveler feels secure in the hands of the guide and is taken safely on his way. The other looks at the rugged path and is filled with fear; he forgets about the guide, and begins to wonder how he will ever get by this treacherous looking place.

At this point the hesitating one observes the other traveler; he wonders how he reached the higher point so quickly, and questions why the ascent is so much easier for him. All the while the guide is assuring him that he will carry him safely over, but the frightened traveler will not listen. He is unaware that his whole attention is centered upon his fellow traveler instead of upon the guide, and yet he can never ascend until he is willing to trust the latter, do as he bids him, and meanwhile rejoice that the upward journey has been easy for his companion, knowing that it is not in reality any more difficult for himself.

So it is with us in our work in Christian Science. God is our guide, and we start to climb from the belief of life in matter to the understanding of Spirit, God. For a while all goes well, and then we come to a problem which is hard to solve; perhaps it is a financial one. We stop to wonder why our fellow worker is not having difficulty over this same question. Why is it that he seems to have plenty, and has not had to struggle to realize his supply in the way that we have? Our whole attention is centered upon wondering why the path seems so smooth for one while it looks so rugged for another.

All the while our guide is urging us to press on and be cared for, but we do not listen; consequently we are at a standstill in our work when we should be going steadily forward. How much more quickly we would make our demonstrations if we but listened to the voice of Truth and were willing to be led wherever God might take us, confident that we would be helped over the rough places without harm. Christian Science makes it clear that "whatever blesses one blesses all" (Science and Health, p. 206); that if the road is smooth for one, it is just as smooth for another. Let us not waste time, then, in thinking how hard or how easy it is for others. Our aim should be to place ourselves in God's care; He will do the rest.

In that wonderful "allegory" by Mrs. Eddy in "Miscellaneous Writings," we read on page 328: "He alone ascends the hill of Christian Science who follows the Wayshower, the spiritual presence and idea of God. Whatever obstructs the way,—causing to stumble, fall, or faint, those mortals who are striving to enter the path,—divine Love will remove; and uplift the fallen and strengthen the weak."

Knowing and Loving

RICHARD DEENER

WHEN the writer was led to take up the study of Christian Science, the need of help seemed so urgent and real, the lack of anything practical in all that he had ever before investigated in a religious way seemed so apparent, that once the truth was found he simply lived with the Bible and Science and Health day and night. Every word was as a jewel, every thought as a sunbeam leading like a kindly light to the source of all good. Since then, while still young in the study of Christian Science, by striving to know, to enter into the right understanding, he has had many glorious proofs of the power of Truth.

Our family was driven out of Mexico by the revolution, but in the midst of seeming distress we found the truth. After practising medicine for more than fifteen years, I sold my surgical instruments to buy Mrs. Eddy's works, thus beating my spears into pruning-hooks, as it were. One of the first lessons learned in Christian Science was the necessity of understanding love as a foundation in building our house of Truth, the realization that "Love alone can impart the limitless idea of infinite Mind," as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 510 of Science and Health. I had no enemies except evil and its brood, there was no one in all the world that I hated; but on the other hand, there was no one outside my own family that I loved except in a very passive kind of way, and it did not seem to me that I really loved any one as Christ Jesus commanded us to love. What did it mean to love, anyway? How was one to know how to love? What was it to love every creature that God had made in the way God would have us love? These questions were in my thought all the time as I sought to know the truth about love in order to be obedient to Truth.

While going down the street toward the outskirts of the town one day in this state of yearning, I prayed with earnest desire that divine Love would show me what love is,—how to love my fellow man, and how to know that I really did love him. Glancing across the street I saw an elderly lady, seemingly walking with great difficulty. The burden of false beliefs was resting unlovingly upon her, and "hard times" seemed written in material evidence all over the bent form. The thought came that if she only knew the truth about God and herself, as it is revealed through Christian Science, if she only knew what it means to be God's child, and that this child is never bent or sorrowful or suffering or lacking any good thing, how happy she would be.

Then it was that my heart seemed to fill to overflowing with love for this woman as the child of God, and the truth came to me like a voice from heaven: To know the truth about one's fellow man is to love him in God's way; and this is love. My prayer was answered, my longing satisfied. Thus the Scripture was fulfilled, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" and to be free from every wrong thought about a brother not only enables us to know ourselves but makes him lovable to us as God's child always is.

Is it any wonder that we love Mrs. Eddy more and more as the great truth of Life and Love is unfolded in our consciousness?

Perfect Reflection

ANNE MAY LILLY

In its setting of pine woods and daisy studded meadows the tiny lake gleamed blue as a sapphire. The green branches that drooped over its banks, even the grasses that fringed the water's edge, as well as the darting flight of the swallows, were all pictured upon its smooth surface, and no rough and turbulent waves marred the perfection of each picture. Moreover, the water was as pure and limpid as crystal, allowing one to see plainly all that lay on its sandy bottom; and it was this very lack of color in itself which gave to the lake its greatest charm,—the power to reflect the beautiful tint of the skies above.

To those familiar with the revelation of Christian Science that man and the universe eternally reflect God, Spirit, and are therefore spiritual and perfect, any attempt to draw a parable from the scene above referred to may seem superfluous. One point, however, stood out so forcibly to the writer that a brief elaboration thereof may not be amiss. It was this: that it was the stillness and purity of its waters which enabled the lake to present a well-nigh perfect reflection of the beauty above. Had the waters been angry, troubled, or discolored, the reflection would have been marred and its beauty and faithfulness destroyed. So with the human thought turbulent and stormy through the endeavor to gain place, power, and happiness for the false mortal self, and rendered impure by materiality, but few gleams of reality shine forth to bless a weary world. On page 91 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy refers to this condition and the remedy therefor as follows: "Absorbed in material selfhood we discern and reflect but faintly the substance of Life or Mind. The denial of material selfhood aids the discernment of man's spiritual and eternal individuality, and destroys the erroneous knowledge gained from matter or through what are termed the material senses." This truth held constantly in thought makes all things new.

What higher goal can be striven for than to attain that selfless purity of thought which knows not a single selfish or material longing, and makes no claim for recognition or honor for itself, but aspires only to show forth the infinite tenderness of our Father-Mother God, that all men may know Him and be at peace. As we think of these things a wave of gratitude must go forth to the brave and faithful Leader who pointed and led the way to this high service.

Selected Articles

[From an editorial in The Janesville (Minn.) Argus]

Elsewhere in this issue appears a very calm and temperate article forwarded by Rollin E. Smith of Minneapolis, chairman of the Christian Science committee on publication for Minnesota. Attention is called to this article, with the urgent request that it be read without prejudice. It is utterly devoid of the spirit of intolerance, such as characterized the sermons that called it forth, and is so surpassingly fair and liberal as to commend it even to the most captious critic. We admit it readily and freely to our columns in the interests of fair play, not only to the church that has been misrepresented, but to the many who have found comfort and solace in that cult when others have failed to satisfy them. In all fairness this is their privilege and their right. And they have the right, in conformity to the principles of civil and religious liberty, to exercise their preferences as to worship in any manner they may choose, without becoming the objects of ridicule and derision and without being subjected to the humiliation that inevitably is the sequence of pulpit discourses that are based upon misinformation, prejudice, and intolerance.

We learn that a clergyman, not content with delivering five discourses aimed at Christian Science, is occasionally throwing criticisms at the Christian Science church and its followers in his other sermons. We here wish to enter protest against that sort of thing. We will not pretend to assume that he has not the right to attack other forms of worship, but we do assume, and we know, that in so doing he not only belittles himself as a minister, but that in the minds of very many people, both in the church and out, he has lowered his own standing and dignity as a minister and brought odium upon the profession he is supposed to represent.

It is not so much the misstatements relative to Christian Science that were characteristic of this clergyman's sermons, as the fact that through his discourses he failed to give credit to the Founder of Christian Science for honesty and sincerity. When he represented in his discourses that Mrs. Eddy's writings were from the standpoint of relative rather than absolute truth, a material life basis rather than a spiritual life basis, from the physical rather than the metaphysical, he committed a very grave offense. If he understood the basis of Mrs. Eddy's writings his discourses were a clear deception; if he did not, it does not speak well of his pretensions in speaking upon the subject. Fairness on his part would have prompted an explanation. But as there was no explanation given, rather than to consider him dishonest the only rational conclusion is charitably to assume that he did not know.

[Frederick R. Rhodes in Colne Valley (England) Guardian]

In the columns of the Guardian, under the heading "Dearth of Doctors," there was a reference made to Christian Science which would leave the reader with the erroneous impression that the teachings of Christian Science deal merely with the question of therapeutics. On page 150 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes, "The mission of Christian Science now, as in the time of its earlier demonstration, is not primarily one of physical healing;" but the healing of disease through the better understanding of God and His availability in all times of need, is the sign following and the practical evidence of, as Mrs. Eddy further writes, "the Christ-power to take away the sins of the world."

The great Physician gave humanity the only genuine recipe for healing the sick and regenerating the sinner in his promise, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Christian Science is showing its students how to seek first the truth, or man's relationship to his Father-Mother God; and as a natural result, whatever is needed for the restoration of real harmony in the individual human consciousness is added.

The writer states that "faith is faltering and does not always remove mountains." This would necessarily be so, because faith that is faltering is not faith at all, and therefore could not accomplish anything. Our Master said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." Surely, then, every Christian is expected to believe and accept such a definite statement, and the countless thousands who express their gratitude for practical proofs of healing every Wednesday evening at the meetings of the Christian Science churches and societies throughout the world, show that the healing and saving Christ is indeed with us, "even unto the end of the world."

[Henry Van Arsdale in San Diego (Cal.) Union]

The feasibility, and even the desirability, of Christian healing is occasionally assailed, and its possibility questioned and denied by clergymen, to the surprise of the student of the Bible, who finds the Scriptures replete with instances of healing, together with the testimony of those healed and the spiritual method by which the cure was wrought.

Recently the pulpit of a church in your city was given over to an attempt to show that it was useless to rely on the power of God in sickness, although this church, in common with all others, subscribes to the omnipotence of God; that is to say, it asserts as a fundamental belief that there is no power but God. By what sort of logic, then, a clergyman can deny the availability of what is defined to be all-power and retain his Christianity seems remarkable; and more especially so because the situation caused by sickness is usually the greatest crisis God's children face. If the power of God as expressed in His love is ever to be realized in human experience, that power and love should then be available; any denial of it should come from some source other than a Christian clergyman.

The world has known but one physician who healed every case he undertook,—Jesus the Christ. The Christian religion, if it has a basis at all, is predicated upon what he said and did; for his teachings are in line with and a completion of the spiritual meaning of the Old Testament. In sending forth the twelve disciples, and later the seventy, Jesus impressed upon them the necessity of healing the sick as well as preaching the gospel. His own work exemplified both of these ministries. No amount of sophistry or confessed inability to follow the Master's command can minimize this fact. The theology which Jesus preached always healed, and always will heal. His words and his deeds are inseparable. He never limited the fruits of his theology in any manner, nor circumscribed them to his own brief sojourn on earth, but insisted that his followers should bring forth the same.

Jesus not only said that what he did his followers can do, but he made the healing and other works the standard of his mission. Witness his reply to the disciples of John the Baptist. No one was more familiar with the age-long Messianic hope of his race than was John. Not only did Jesus know this, but it was common knowledge. At this time all Palestine was afire with the old-time prophetic zeal and fervor. The one important question was, Is this man Jesus the expected one, or an impostor? How simple the answer! When the men sent by John came to Jesus to inquire if he were the expected one, "in that same hour he [Jesus] cured many of their infirmities." Then Jesus said to these men, "Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard."

The sick man on a bed of pain longs for the compassionate voice of Jesus, "Come unto me," and he has a right to expect the Christian church to show him the way. The affirmative, positive, and dynamic position of Christian Science in relation to the words and works of the Master, the Christ, is the basis of its success. This will be shared by doing the works of Jesus, never by denying them.

[Willis D. McKinstry in The Republican, Eldorado, Kan.]

Because the evangelist now holding services in your city takes exceptions to Mrs. Eddy's view of hell, he classifies her as an unbeliever. The Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, makes clear a scientific and demonstrable knowledge of God and of the life and demonstration of His Son, Christ Jesus. Every page of this wonderful book forcefully emphasizes Holy Writ in declaring the allness and ever-presence of God, thereby making it possible for mankind to make use of that first and great commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," which when spiritually understood meets every human need.

The Scriptures declare that "God is love;" they further record that He is the one and only creator, and that which He made is "very good." Using this spiritual fact as the basis of reasoning, and adhering to the law of cause and effect, it is impossible to reach the conclusion that God, infinite Love, created a hell. The term hell but signifies the wrong doing of mortals—the mistakes of men; it is the manifestation of an evil condition for which God is not responsible and which does not exist as an entity. This hell does not constitute a place or locality where one may go or be sent. Its presence is wholly mental. The hell of wrong thinking results in the hell of wrong doing, and the hell of wrong doing produces the hell of torment and suffering for the evil thinker.

While Christian Science teaches the unreality of sin, it also shows quite plainly that those who indulge in evil doing cannot escape its penalty; sin always punishes the sinner. Christian Science does not ignore or offer any excuse for sin, but emphatically declares that evil must be corrected, which correction is the forgiveness of the sin. Just so long as the sin is indulged the hell is at hand. The teaching and demonstration of Christian Science is fulfilling the hope of Christianity by making it possible for those who are in bondage to disease and sin to awaken from the dream of sense into a realization of the perfection, beauty, and indestructibleness of the glorious works of God.

[Marie Hartman in De Amsterdammer, Amsterdam, Holland]

Christian Science acknowledges God, the "great First Cause" and creator of all, as eternal Truth, and considers as absolutely true in man only that which is the expression of the Father. It teaches how we can become more conscious of the divine reflected in ourselves and in our fellow man, and how obedience to God in thought and in deed brings salvation from all evil. It opens our consciousness to the voice of Truth, which although continually speaking to all often remains unheard, because humanity for ages has given more heed to the testimony of the physical senses, that picture a universe in which, besides the omnipotent God, good, a second power seems to exist, interfering with God's government of the universe and annulling His supremacy; for it really amounts to this, although we may try to cloak it under the most plausible arguments.

Christian Science teaches that all God's ideas are protected in His omnipotence and therefore are eternal. For this reason that which lacks the divine sanction possesses no intrinsic power, although through ignorance humanity has always bowed to it. When by letting the spirit of Truth dwell in him man learns to understand and demonstrate the allness of God, then Christ, Truth, the impersonal Saviour, is come to him, and will guide him into the perfect liberty of the children of God.

Not only in a far-off future, but here and now, does the understanding and demonstration of Truth bring salvation from all evil, from sin and anguish as well as from bodily suffering. The last may perhaps seem strange to some readers, because they have not yet grown familiar with the idea that everything which happens in the body, yea, the whole so-called material body itself, is the expression of one's more or less conscious thinking. Christian Science healing is not the result of bringing thought-power to bear upon matter, but of communion with God, of listening to unchanging, ever blessing Truth, which lifts mankind out of wrong thinking and awakens them to the divine idea.

[Aaron E. Brandt in The Greensburg (Pa.) Record]

The statement accredited to an evangelist in a recent issue gives one the impression that he felt called upon to say something startling against Christian Science in defense of his generally repudiated doctrine of a personal devil, and whether it had an intelligent meaning or not did not matter. It is safe to say, without serious risk of mistake, that neither the evangelist nor any of his auditors knew what he meant, and the statement could have no meaning as applied to Christian Science. Christian Science was discovered by Mrs. Eddy in 1866, through a revelation of Truth which came to her while reading the Bible and instantaneously restored her to perfect health from a condition believed fatal by her friends. Mrs. Eddy afterward made known her discovery to the world, and it is proving itself to be the greatest blessing that has ever come to mankind, having healed many thousands of hopeless invalidism and of so-called incurable diseases by revealing the truth contained in the Scriptures.

Christian Scientists do not, as claimed by the evangelist, find it necessary to deny the virgin birth of Jesus, or the cross, in order to remove a wart from the index finger. Far from denying what is good or true in the Scriptures, they can and do affirm the truth of the Bible and the teaching of the Master by the very works which Christ Jesus said should "follow them that believe." There is no better way of affirming such truth.

These works are not wrought, however, and cannot be so wrought, through a belief of a "personal devil." It is necessary to have an understanding of what the word devil means. When understood, the devil or evil can be cast out as Jesus directed his followers to do. On pages 190 and 191 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says: "The meaning of the term 'devil' needs yet to be learned. Its definition as an individual is too limited and contradictory. . . . It could not have been a person that our great Master cast out of another person; therefore the devil herein referred to was an impersonal evil, or whatever worketh ill. . . . In Mark, ninth chapter and thirty-eighth verse, it reads: 'Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name.' Here is an assertion indicating the existence of more than one devil . . . By no possible interpretation can this passage mean several individuals cast out of another individual no bigger than themselves. The term, being here employed in its plural number, destroys all consistent supposition of the existence of one personal devil. Again, our text [Luke xi. 14] refers to the devil as dumb; but the original devil was a great talker."

A careful study of the writings of Mrs. Eddy in connection with the Scriptures will reveal such a light of spiritual truth as to remove all doubts concerning the nature of devil or impersonal evil, as well as define many other terms used in the Scriptures, from the understanding of which much good is derived, as well as help in the Christian's warfare against evil. Christian Science, when understood, is found wholly beneficent, meriting no condemnation whatsoever.

[Thorwald Siegfried in Wenatchee (Wash.) World]

It may properly be said that the aversion for drugs and material remedies in Christian Science practice is merely an inevitable corollary to the teachings of the Bible and of Science and Health that God is indeed infinite and all powerful. The human mind has quibbled much over the denial by Christian Science that there is any virtue in material medicine or material pleasure, notwithstanding that the belief in the former is one of the procuring causes of all disease, as belief in the latter is the greatest source of sin. And yet this position is the only tenable one if it be admitted that there is a God and He is infinite. Far from being an idle speculation, this is the most vital of all facts, and Christian Science demonstrates it to be true by healing the hopeless sick and the hardened sinner, where material medicine and material theology fail.

Many physicians have abandoned their old systems of healing and have taken up the practice of Christian Science. Even among doctors who still practise medicine there are many who recognize the great value of Christian Science as a curative agent and habitually direct patients to it when they have found themselves unable to heal them. Still another class is neither adopting Christian Science nor sending patients to it, but is willing that Christian Science and material medicine work side by side and that both be judged on their merits.

[Robert S. Ross in Utica (N. Y.) Press]

The attack upon Christian Science by a clergyman is the more regrettable because Christian Science is the renascence of the religious system which Jesus of Nazareth established about two thousand years ago and upon which the creeds of all Christian denominations claim to be based, despite the radical differences that distinguish them and despite their failure to meet Christianity's most imperative requirement, namely, the healing of the sick by spiritual means. Any sincere student can prove to his entire satisfaction by demonstration that the Christianity of Jesus and the Christianity of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy are one and the same. Therefore an attack upon Christian Science amounts to an attack on Christ's Christianity.

It is not lack of preaching that is responsible for the world's seeming indifference to Christianity, but lack of practice. If professed Christians pray to God that the brotherhood of man may be established on earth, and forthwith erect barriers against its coming by violating the golden rule, they have only themselves to blame for the non-appearance of that happy day. The Christian Science text-book points out with invincible logic that a Christian cannot possibly be measured by his belief in a particular creed or dogma, but by his ability to be Christlike in his daily life. Deeds alone determine who is worthy to be called Christian, for Jesus said of his followers, "Ye shall know them by their fruits."

Military Service Act

In connection with the recent registration of those subject to military service in the United States, it is learned that in a considerable number of cases Christian Scientists have claimed exemption in three ways: (1) as practitioners; (2) as readers; (3) as conscientious objectors. The question of enlistment seems to be so very personal and individual that it must be worked out by each one on the basis of his own demonstration, but in view of the approaching draft and in response to many inquiries it is believed that the following analysis of the Military Service Act may be helpful to those concerned.

The pertinent parts of the Military Service Act are as follows: "Regular or duly ordained ministers of religion . . . shall be exempt from the selective draft herein prescribed; and nothing in this Act shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing, and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organizations, but no person so exempted shall be exempted from service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be noncombatant." "Students who at the time of the approval of this Act are preparing for the ministry in recognized theological or divinity schools" are equally exempt with ministers. Another exempt class is "persons engaged in industries, including agriculture, found to be necessary to . . . the maintenance of national interest during the emergency." Still another is "those in a status with respect to persons dependent on them for support which renders their exclusion or discharge advisable."

Taking this Act as a whole, it might be said that those practitioners whose cards appear in The Christian Science Journal might be regarded as exempt, but that only a very liberal interpretation of the Act would exempt other practitioners, or readers. In this connection it might be said that all Christian Scientists should be ministers, but no class is set apart in the manner called "regular." It should be said also that a Christian Scientist could not claim exemption as a conscientious objector, without misrepresenting Christian Science, for in the church tenets or platform of the Christian Science church no specific reference is made to participation in war.

The allowance of claims for exemption will be in the judgment or discretion of local exemption boards, subject to the right of appeal to similar boards of higher authority, and the question of exemption from military service is one to be worked out between the individual and the exemption board. A Christian Scientist is a true patriot because he is learning what patriotism is, and his real helpfulness to his country and to his fellow men of all nations increases in proportion to his understanding of Christian Science.

Speaking on this subject our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, tells us (Miscellany, p. 277), "But if our nation's rights or honor were seized, every citizen would be a soldier and woman would be armed with power girt for the hour."

"The spiritual ultimate"

Mrs. Eddy has pointed out that the passage from sense to Soul is a progressive experience. On this journey it is not always possible for the human pilgrim to choose between good and evil at every turn, rather at times the problem presented to him is to choose between a greater and a lesser evil. Of course he has chosen good as his ultimate goal, and while his every effort must be in this direction, yet frequently the ways which are open to him are not such as immediately to lead him to his journey's end. On page 28 of "Retrospection and Introspection" our Leader has written: "I had learned that thought must be spiritualized, in order to apprehend Spirit. It must become honest, unselfish, and pure, in order to have the least understanding of God in divine Science." On page 485 of Science and Health this thought is again expressed in these words: "Emerge gently from matter into Spirit. Think not to thwart the spiritual ultimate of all things, but come naturally into Spirit through better health and morals and as the result of spiritual growth."

Not only does this counsel apply to individual demonstration, but it also applies to the growth of peoples and nations. Take, for instance, the growth of those nations which have achieved democracy and freedom in any appreciable degree. In all these nations it has been necessary for some one first to be inspired with the ideal of liberty, and then to educate others into a perception of this ideal. Later, as this education has progressed, it has been possible to take a step in advance; as, for instance, the abolition of African slavery in the United States a half century ago. This was of course but a step toward the ideal visioned by our forefathers in the exalted declaration that "all men are created equal," because other phases of the same question still remain to be adjusted; for instance, the relations of capital and labor, or more definitely, the relations of employer and employee. This is a world wide question, and a definite step toward its solution will be taken only when thought has been sufficiently spiritualized to perceive a better and more righteous way than at present prevails.

Another world question of immediate importance which is in course of settlement is that known as the liquor question, or prohibition; and it is because there has been a continuous spiritualization of thought on this question that progress has been made toward the abolition of the traffic. What Christian Science has contributed to the cause of temperance has done much toward the right settlement of this question, because through its ministry thousands of men have been permanently healed of the disease of intemperance and its early symptoms of moderate and social drinking. This is verified by the testimonies given at the Wednesday evening meetings and through the Sentinel and Journal.

In all permanent reforms there must first be a cessation of the desire to do wrong, and this must be for right's sake. In Christian Science the first step is the understanding of the allness of God and the nothingness of evil, the reality of righteousness and the unreality of unrighteousness, an entire willingness to be and do good and to eschew evil. The mission of Christian Science is to lead mankind to such an understanding and realization of the omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence of God, good, as will forever banish evil from human experience. In the mean time it is the duty of all who have seen the light to let their influence be felt through precept and example, supporting every step that is a step in advance even if it does not immediately reach the ultimate good which must ever be our goal.

The movement for the abolition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor is making definite progress at this time, and it will not be long, we hope, until its object has been attained. In the mean time it would be foolish to reject any measure looking to reform simply because it does not abolish the liquor traffic as a whole and on the instant. It is well to be thankful for what has already been accomplished, and to keep well in view the fact that depraved appetites are "destroyed only by Mind's mastery of the body" (Science and Health, p. 406), and by example make this truth known to those who are yet in darkness on the subject. Ultimately Truth must and will be triumphant, and knowing this we may well be patient and compassionate.

ARCHIBALD MCLELLAN.

What Is Our Desire?

ALL Christian people are agreed that the Psalms are profoundly spiritual in their appeal to humanity, and that they get at the heart of things, "piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit," and discerning "the thoughts and intents of the heart," to quote from the epistle to the Hebrews. In the 112th psalm we are told that the man who delights greatly in God's commandments "shall not be afraid of evil tidings." As if to emphasize this thought, the psalmist goes on, "His heart is established, he shall not be afraid, until he see his desire upon his enemies." From the mortal standpoint this last statement would seem to imply that the righteous man was looking for the destruction of those who were believed to be his enemies, but in Christian Science we learn that there must abide in our desire no single element of hatred toward any one, for there can be no heaven where hatred dwells.

Again and again did Christ Jesus say, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you;" and he also said that his teachings were not intended to set aside the law or the prophets, but rather to fulfil them. We do not question that Jesus brought to humanity a much higher sense of divine law than had ever before been attained, because he says that those of the olden time declared it would be right to love one's neighbor and hate one's enemy; but he at once lifted thought to the spiritual understanding of one God, one Mind, one infinite Father, whose children are all like Him who is good and always good. It therefore rests with us, if we would be true Christian Scientists, to look Jesus' high demand squarely in the face, and to seek the understanding of spiritual law which will enable us to demonstrate it through the illumination of our entire consciousness. Students of Christian Science are acquainted with Mrs. Eddy's illuminating article "Love Your Enemies," which begins on page 8 of "Miscellaneous Writings;" and on page 273 of the same book she writes, "God bless my enemies, as well as the better part of mankind, and gather all my students, in the bonds of love and perfectness, into one grand family of Christ's followers."

All Christian Scientists know that our desires are wrought into the very fiber of our human consciousness, and that they help to mold our destinies; indeed, our Leader tells us on page 1 of Science and Health that "desire is prayer." This being recognized, we cannot too often analyze our desires respecting all things, and see wherein they fail to come up to the Christ-standard, which is ever the standard of divine Love. George Macdonald tells in a most interesting way of a little lad who had been cruelly beaten by a brutal man, and how a young fellow who became acquainted with the circumstance spoke of the man in the very bitterest condemnation. His mother, a devout old woman, said to him, "Laddie, the Master told us we should love our enemies." To this her son replied that the man was not his enemy, and in this way he seemed to claim warrant for hating the offender; but the mother, much wiser than the youth, said, "He is the enemy of all the world, and of himsel' maist of all."

Few of us would like to be convicted of holding hatred over a personal enemy, but we might seek to justify ourselves on the ground that one who was injuring the defenseless richly deserved our condemnation and possibly our hatred; yet even here we may well recall again the Master's words, "But I say unto you, Love your enemies." Material sense tells us at once that this is an impossible thing, and so it is to material sense; but to spiritual sense it is the only possible thing, and so we read with a solemn sense of our present slow attainment these words in Paul's epistle to the Romans: "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." Here again we may ask ourselves what our desire is respecting this vengeance, whether it is merely a desire to see a wrong-doer suffer, or whether it is the glorified desire which reaches out with high faith for the fulfilment of the promise that every knee will bow before the demands of divine Love, and that every tongue will confess that God, good, is the only power.

"Women and children first"

THIS rule of the sea declares a home truth which is everywhere in order. It points to the supreme value which must be set upon the qualities of womanhood and childhood. The gallant attempt of seamen to give their lives for the rescue of those they have been taught should come first, arouses a great respect in the hearts of mankind. In bravely helping to lift high into immortality a deep regard for women and children, the sailors are helping the woman, as it is declared of the earth in the Apocalypse. Mrs. Eddy had seen this when she wrote on page 570 of Science and Health: "In this age the earth will help the woman; the spiritual idea will be understood. Those ready for the blessing you impart will give thanks. The waters will be pacified, and Christ will command the wave."

The surging resistance of hatred to truth sometimes seems like the mighty waves of the deep, but a noble thought, a kindly act, the mental touch of the Christ-spirit pours "the oil of gladness" upon this dark belief, and then the true concept of the mighty waves of the sea is seen to be that which upholds, sustains, and delivers, instead of that which destroys. Is there a more touching scene than a mother and her babe in distress at sea? The appalling waves of fear, rolling mountains high, are checked by the calm of "Peace, be still," when the Principle of Christian Science is understood and applied. God has put into the heart of man the necessary courage, strength, and endurance to brave the elements in fulfilling his duty, and to stand at his post, whatever harmful circumstances seem to prevail. This gallantry is the knighthood of the sea.

Some day the real man will be revealed to this human good man as clothed with the enduring gentle love of the womanly qualities characterizing the real woman. In this way the garden of Eden will be restored, and Paradise, which has been but a vague apparition, will be rightly understood. All can be spiritual emperors, warriors, and knights. The spiritual power of man is the real emperor. The real warrior with his mighty trust in God, to whom, as Jesus declared, "all things are possible," goes forth with his sling, recognizing error as error and God as God, thus making the earth safe for the people to dwell upon.

The real knight is the gentle-man, the noble, compassionate type of manhood who has learned to love, perhaps through suffering, by the mental battles over self and what the seeming world has placed upon him. Here lies real safety, in knowing man's true manhood. Many a rugged pathway may be necessary to subdue the animal nature inherent in mortal man, his tendencies to selfishness, materiality, cruelty, brutality, greed, and dishonesty. But the highway of right endeavor is lined with mile-stones marked "Women and children first." It teaches the lesson: Make way for the qualities of compassion, fidelity, protection, joy, and spontaneity. This way of safety means the safety of manhood. The mother's love is the safest place where a child abides, and man will define this love to be his safest place when he has learned the truth to find, even taking years to unwind in the Father-Mother Mind. In Zechariah's vision of the restored Jerusalem there was special mention of the children, for we read, "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof."

In all the safety devices of human ingenuity there never has been greater safety than is provided by the protecting love of the ever present power of God. Mrs. Eddy has bestowed the understanding of this protecting power as her supreme gift to the world. In man's direst extremity this power will rescue him from the depth of the sea, from the bomb explosion, from the caved-in mine, and from the wounded aeroplane dashing through the air. Women and children with safety first can best be efficiently expressed by having God first, thus losing one's sense of life in saving others.

More Appreciation

"Having read your announcement of new prices for our periodicals in the current issue of the Sentinel, I beg to express to you my sincere gratitude for the privilege of having the Christian Science Journal, Sentinel, Monitor, Quarterly, and Der Herold at any price. For several years they have brought to me messages of joy and peace and are the channels for a constantly increasing spiritual understanding that is indeed Life itself. Through trying to be obedient to the countless inspirations that their messages contain, I am gaining a provable understanding of God's law and am learning that the sweetest thing on earth is to, in a measure, obey our Master's injunction to 'let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.' All are learning to glorify our Father—to know that divine Love is all-power, all-presence, all-knowledge, and I am very grateful!"

"I note your article 'New Prices for Our Periodicals' in the Christian Science Sentinel of June 2. I do not feel that it is an increased price for the periodicals, but only an increased opportunity to express our gratitude in a tangible way for what these periodicals have done and are doing for the world. It also gives us an opportunity to prove those words of our revered Leader on page 79 of Science and Health, 'Giving does not impoverish us in the service of our Maker, neither does withholding enrich us.' We cannot estimate the value of these periodicals in dollars and cents, for the good they are accomplishing cannot 'be valued with pure gold.' I am grateful for this opportunity to tell you something of what these papers mean to me, and I am sure I am only one of thousands whose gratitude for the privilege of receiving them is unbounded."

"The action taken in regard to the price of the literature will bring its own reward. At the time the price of the Sentinel was raised from three cents to five cents, the question was asked, 'Why did Mrs. Eddy do this?' The reply was, 'My dear, we never question anything our dear Leader may do.' This loving loyalty brought home a lesson to one who has since been striving for that loyal obedience in response to any message from the Publishing Society which knows the reason for taking this step is sufficient of itself. Please accept my gratitude—the sending out of this word is another proof of supply, consequently a blow to the belief of limitation."

"You may be sure of the loyal cooperation in this field with any changes it may prove necessary to make in prices. We know Love will provide for every channel and no one can lack for any good thing. This call to higher proofs will awaken us to the real treasurers. It may mean a smaller order here, but this need not mean retrogression, only a wiser use of our literature."

"I cheerfully give the advanced price for the Sentinel and Journal and consider these periodicals cheap at that. They are invaluable. And daily I thank God for our dear Leader, who had the courage to establish, with all its wonderful activities, The Mother Church. I am intensely grateful for all the faithful workers at headquarters."

"Permit me to congratulate you on the action of the board in raising the prices of the publications so that they will meet the advance in cost of production. This expresses not my sentiment alone, but that expressed by a number who have mentioned the matter, among them a poor girl who said that it might postpone the time when she could have some of the publications; but I do not think that it will even do that. 'Not how cheap, but how good' are the authorized publications, means much to the movement."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, will hold its initial services in the new church building tomorrow [June 10]. The edifice has just been completed at an approximate cost of twenty-five thousand dollars. Work on the structure has been under way for the past eight months, ground having been broken on Oct. 10, 1916. The corner stone was laid at six o'clock on the morning of Tuesday, May 8, of this year. The large Sunday school room seats two hundred pupils. The balcony seats approximately one hundred and fifty people, and the seating capacity of the auditorium, when the Sunday school room, various class rooms, and the parlor are thrown into one, is about eight hundred.—San Bernardino Sun.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.—Supreme Court Justice J. A. Young has granted an order that the application of First Church of Christ, Scientist, be granted, and leave is given to execute a declaration of trust giving real estate in White Plains, and that the money to be received from the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, under the declaration of trust, amounting to $7398, be devoted to the building of a new church for $26,500.—Port Chester Item.

TRINIDAD, COL.—Sunday, June 3, marked another epoch in the progress of the Christian Science movement in this city, when the beautiful new structure of the Christian Scientists on Pine Street was dedicated with appropriate ceremony. This church had its inception about eight years ago, when a small number of people interested in the work met in a private home. The meetings were held in private homes for two months, and then in November, 1909, Castle Hall was secured as the meeting place. In the summer of 1910 the place of meeting was changed to Odd Fellows Hall, and in August, 1910, Christian Science Society was organized.

The next year the meeting place was changed to the Elks Hall, and in the latter part of 1912 the organization moved to 109 West First Street, where a reading room was established and services were held more regularly.

As the congregation grew it became necessary to secure larger quarters, and in July, 1916, ground was broken for the new building. The corner stone of the church was laid Sept. 26. The building was practically completed and the first services were held in the auditorium Feb. 18 last. It is now finished in every detail, and the dedication marks the success of eight years of steady growth and effort.

FRANKLIN, PA.—The dedication of the edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, took place on Sunday, May 27. This church was organized in January, 1899, and a charter was granted by the state in April of the same year. The lot at the corner of Elk and South Park Streets, on which stood an old stone house, was purchased in March, 1903, for six thousand dollars, and the house was remodeled into an edifice suitable for a church and a reading room. A small membership has struggled to overcome the sense of limitation, and is accordingly grateful for this proof of healing by divine Principle.

QUINCY, MASS.—The first service in the new edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, on Greenleaf Street, will be held this morning [June 3]. The auditorium is 82 feet long, 43 feet wide, and 24 feet high. It has no balcony, but will seat about four hundred people. The Sunday school room below is a well lighted apartment, 40 by 65 feet.

The Boston Sunday Globe.

BUHL, IDAHO.—On Thursday, May 31, the Christian Science Society opened a free reading room on Eleventh Avenue, on a plot of ground recently purchased. The room is of bungalow style, and is 16 by 24 feet. A building fund has been started.

The Lectures

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Stella Atkins, who said in part:—

It is more widely known today than it was a few years ago, that Christian Science heals the sick. Jesus said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." And his works were healing the sick, saving the sinner, preaching the gospel. This promise was not made for a limited period of time nor to a selected few, but to those who believed on Jesus throughout all ages. Jesus also said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." We who have received in part the fruits of Christian Science find them good, and we learn that in proportion to our understanding and application of the Principle and rule of this Science of Christianity to our daily experiences, there will be brought into our lives more happiness, peace, joy, health, an increased ability to do good, and a greater love for God and our fellow man.

MILWAUKEE, WIS. (Second Church).—Bliss Knapp, lecturer; introduced by B. F. West, who said in part:—

In our perplexity at the never ending discords of human existence we may well turn for guidance and light to the most successful demonstrator of good the world has ever known—Jesus of Nazareth. All history fails to record a life more successful in resisting evil than his. He gave ample evidence of this in the healing of the sick, in the raising of the dead, and in the control of all discordant conditions. All history fails to record a more sublime courage and self-sacrifice than his voluntary acceptance of the crucifixion in order that he might prove the superiority of the spiritual over the material, of good over evil, of love over hate, and of life over death. All history fails to record a greater reward than that which came to Jesus in the demonstration of his immortality and absolute dominion. Yet in the words of St. Paul: "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds," evil beliefs strongly entrenched in human consciousness.

All this being true, may we not reasonably expect light on the great problem of human existence through the study of Jesus' life and works and obedience to his precepts? The successful resistance of evil by spiritual means may not be understood in the least by the nations of the world as a whole, but we as individuals may know it and practise it; and in the end the individuals make up the nation and the balance will be on the side of good.

VALPARAISO, IND. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mayor P. L. Sisson, who said in part:—

I know but little of Christian Science; enough, however, to satisfy me of the legitimacy of its purpose, the efficiency of its practice, and the sincerity of its professors. In substituting study for theory, knowledge for fear, demonstration for desire, it appeals to the intelligence of all unprejudiced persons, and into many darkened and desolate hearts it has brought sunshine, hope, and happiness. It has no quarrel with other religions, no criticism of different beliefs, no yardstick rule by which to determine the divine relationship of any particular individual. It simply points the way for thought and action, by which each through acquiring the mastery of himself may not only better meet and solve his own problems, but through his efforts become a beneficent friend of all mankind. It at least merits a most careful investigation, and like all other institutions must stand or fall according to its worth.

MONROE, LA. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by G. G. Weaks, who said in part:—

As our country throbs with patriotism and hastens to preparedness, it is well to remember that patriotism is a worthy sentiment only when love of country does not signify either a love of locality or love of personality, and is commendable only when the word country typifies an ideal. We citizens of the United States believe that our patriotism is a worthy sentiment, because we believe that our government most nearly approaches the government of God, wherein the test of citizenship is brotherhood and the law is love.

We Christian Scientists believe in preparedness; not only the kind necessary to "make the world safe for democracy" as President Wilson has said, but we believe in its larger meaning too,—preparedness for true citizenship, or citizenship in that kingdom without end of days or boundary lines, being a dual allegiance not prohibited by any human government.—The Monroe News-Star.

Testimonies of Healing

It is with a grateful heart that I try to tell of the blessings received from Christian Science. In the year 1913 I was stricken with organic heart disease and dropsy. My body was swollen all out of proportion and I had such smothering spells that I could not sleep, and feared I would pass on in one of them. After taking medicine for many weeks without benefit, I lost faith in doctors. I was gradually growing worse, and finally was on the verge of giving up my work, which is that of an engineer.

At this time, however, being advised to try Christian Science, I called on a practitioner, with very little faith that I would receive any help but with the thought that it was my only chance. As I did not improve I changed practitioners, and at my first call on the second practitioner the fear left me. I was informed that I had something to do myself, so I purchased a copy of Science and Health and was shown how to study the Lesson-Sermon. At once my interest was awakened and I began to think of health and perfection in place of disease. I became so interested in reading the Bible and Science and Health that they were my constant companions.

Daily I have taken Science and Health with me to my work, and daily I have come to know more of God and the real man. I have grown into health and happiness, and in spite of the fact that being an engineer I have been compelled to work in a temperature of from 112 to 120 degrees, I have never lost a day since turning to Christian Science. I had been on a diet for some time, afraid to eat most things, but since taking Science treatment I have been able to eat without any discomfort anything that my wife sets before me. My health is as good now as it ever was. At the time I became ill with heart disease two of my neighbors were taken sick with the same trouble, followed by the same symptoms. They were both under the care of physicians and sent to the hospital, and have both passed on since that time.

I am thankful to God that I have been healed not only of so-called organic heart disease but of an ungovernable temper and hate, and that now I have learned to love my neighbor as myself. For all of these blessings I am very grateful.—J. A. Heagle, Chicago, Ill.

I am very glad to tell of some of the wonderful demonstrations we have had through Christian Science. With the help of a practitioner I have been healed of severe headaches of about twenty-five years' standing, and of female trouble. My husband also was healed of lumbago with a few treatments. In the fall of 1915 he got a toothpick in his throat, and after it had been there four days he thought he would have to go to a doctor to have it taken out. When Christian Science was recommended to him, he was willing to try it, so he had two absent treatments and the toothpick disappeared.

While hunting rabbits in December, 1915, our son, aged fifteen, was accidentally shot by a companion who stood not six feet away, and the full charge went into his right temple. They were about a quarter of a mile from the house, and the boy walked half way home, then my husband and another man carried him the rest of the way. He wanted Christian Science help, so I called a practitioner over the long distance telephone, and she treated him. We thought the wound would have to be cleaned, so we called a doctor, but it was several hours before he came. Although the lad had lost much blood he was conscious all the time, and he felt no pain while the wound was being cleaned. The doctor said it was wonderful, as he always had to administer an anesthetic in such cases. Ninety shot were taken out. We were told that the boy should eat and drink very little, as he was vomiting so much, but when the practitioner came all discordant conditions vanished. Two days later my son and I accompanied the practitioner home and attended a Wednesday evening service. We know he owes his life to Christian Science.

Our little girl has been healed of colds and coughs through the power of Truth. We have indeed had many blessings since coming into Christian Science, for which we are very grateful. We are thankful for the Christian Science literature, which is such a help to every one. My thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy cannot be expressed in words, but I hope to prove my sincerity by my daily life.

Mrs. Frank Klentz, Lorenzo, Neb.

Gratitude is always the keynote of the testimonies given by students of Christian Science, but more especially of those of us whom it has lifted from a state of hopeless invalidism to strength and happiness. I am one who has special reason to be thankful that Christian Science came into my life when it did.

When I was thirteen years of age I fell downstairs and very severely injured my back, so that for the next seven years I never knew what it was to be free from pain, and a part of the time was able to walk only a few steps. My back was badly twisted and my whole system suffered. I always had heart trouble, and this took on a more acute form and became so serious that some of the attacks would render me unconscious for quite a while. I had all kinds of treatment,—in fact everything was done for me that offered any relief,—and was laced up in all sorts of fashions, in the hope that my back could be straightened and that I would be able to do something. I would receive temporary relief, but the old suffering always returned.

My parents were rather strict church members and I had been brought up in their belief. During all my illness I tried to reconcile myself to the thought that a God of love had brought me into the world to suffer and to be a burden to myself and family, but I could not do so and began to reach out for something else. I read Science and Health along with other reading, but failed to realize that the truth was for me. It was all very beautiful, but I did not think it could cure a crooked back. Eight years ago, while I was in a sanitarium, Christian Science was again brought to my attention, and I asked for help, with the result that after a few weeks' treatment I was completely cured. I am just as well and strong now as any man, and have had absolutely no recurrence of the old trouble. Unless one has experienced such a healing, has been lifted from a life of pain to one of happiness, he cannot appreciate my gratitude. This is only one of many healings that I have experienced in Christian Science.

I am proving the truth of Mrs. Eddy's words in Science and Health (Pref., p. vii), "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, today is big with blessings."

Howard G. Selden, Akron, Ohio.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude for the health, peace, and happiness which Christian Science has brought to me. I was healed through the reading of the text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, of so-called organic heart trouble, when all else had failed to give relief; also severe headaches, throat trouble, rheumatism, and many minor ills have been overcome through the study of the aforesaid book, together with the Bible.

Christian Science has taken from me the sense of separation, and healed deep grief caused by the passing on of children. Nothing but the great love and peace which Christian Science brings could have helped me to bear this terrible loss. Now I know that in God, Spirit, there is no separation. My sons join me in expressing gratitude for the Sunday school, and for demonstrations too numerous to mention, for one of which we are particularly grateful, as it proved the protecting power of Christian Science.

My youngest son, then aged eleven, when returning from school one day, attempted to mount a van when the horse was trotting. He was thrown back, his head striking the curb, and one wheel of the van passed over the abdomen. He came running into the house as he usually does, and had not the driver of the van, together with a police officer, called at the same time, I should not have known about the accident, as the boy did not show any fear or agitation. When questioned as to what had happened, he told me that as the wheel was passing over his body he declared that there are no accidents in divine Love.

To me this was a most beautiful experience, for the whole of that morning I had been kept closely in touch with divine Love, and in going over the Lesson-Sermon seemed impelled to study the passage on page 495 of Science and Health beginning: "When the illusion of sickness or sin tempts you, cling steadfastly to God and His idea. Allow nothing but His likeness to abide in your thought." I knew there was some reason for my being impelled to keep thought so close to Truth, as we are taught always to do if we would be worthy of the name Christian Scientist, and the beautiful way in which the boy was protected gave the explanation.

For the Christian Science literature, which is a source of continual help, I am also most grateful. My one desire is to know more of God's infinite love to man and to be able and worthy to help my fellow pilgrims in the journey from sense to Soul.—Lily E. Mason, Liverpool, England.

Words cannot express my gratitude for the good which has come into my life through Christian Science. A few years ago I was stricken down with nervous exhaustion and gradually became worse, until life seemed not worth the living. Various doctors treated me, but no benefit was received. Later my husband took me to Spokane, Wash., for an operation, but I came home no better; in fact was even worse than before. As a last resort he sent me to the coast, thinking the change would benefit me, and while there I had treatment from a specialist, but grew worse.

I was staying with a sister who is interested in Christian Science, and attended church with her. After hearing a lecture I decided to try Christian Science. Next day my sister called a practitioner, and through her loving efforts to show me the truth I was entirely healed after about ten days. I have also been able, even with the slight understanding of the truth which I have, to help my son when ailments have arisen.

While I am truly thankful to God for my healing, I am more grateful for the knowledge that He is still able to heal the sick as in Jesus' time. It helps me so much in my everyday life. If at times to mortal sense the way looks dark, Truth whispers that "all things work together for good to them that love God." My greatest desire is to live my thankfulness, that every one may see my good works and praise our Father in heaven.—Maude Powers, Kalispell, Mont.

I wish to corroborate my sister's account of her healing, which seemed a very miracle of old repeated. It was in November, 1913, that she was stricken down with nervous exhaustion, accompanied by some physical ailments. After doctoring for a couple of months without relief, she underwent a slight operation, but instead of improving she grew worse, and when she arrived in Portland, on March 4, 1914, she seemed in a deplorable condition. Her days were spent in weeping and longing for death, her nights in sleepless suffering.

After hearing a Christian Science lecture and being much impressed by what she heard, she asked for Christian Science treatment. There seemed to be no change in her condition for about ten days, and then two days before Easter she came away after having treatment with a light and happy feeling, such as she had never hoped to experience again, and all traces of physical distress were gone. That evening she laughed and sang and was her old self again. She soon gained in weight, the haggard look left her face, and when she returned home about two weeks later she immediately resumed her household duties. She has been well and happy ever since, and Science and Health is her daily companion.

I have benefited wonderfully, both physically and mentally, since my sister's healing, and feel the deepest love and thankfulness to God, and gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her years of unselfish labor in giving to the world this great truth in the comprehensive way in which it is presented in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

Mabel E. Bratager, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Christian Science came to me when I was in the depths of despair and after all material means had failed. It brought me out of chaos and darkness into the sunshine of Truth and Love. I was suffering from a severe nervous breakdown, and only those who have had a similar malady can understand the intense mental distress and bodily suffering that those two words imply. Among the many benefits I have derived is the almost instantaneous healing of acute lung trouble. With the aid of a practitioner I was relieved at once, and up in three days. Chronic bowel disorder also has been overcome.

My husband has accepted Science, and both he and my little daughter have received many benefits. Our home life is harmonious and free from fear. For all these blessings I am extremely grateful, and my desire is to help others who are now struggling along the same stony path which I have traveled, and to turn them into the straight and narrow one which our beloved Leader has shown us in Science and Health.—Mrs. Peyton M. Harbold, Owensmouth, Cal.

For several years before coming into Christian Science I had suffered from a complication of diseases, including stomach trouble and other discordant conditions. Several physicians did all they could for me, but I received no permanent benefit. In the autumn of 1913 I was suddenly taken seriously ill. A physician was called and a drug administered to relieve my suffering. The following day another physician was called in consultation, but not much hope of my recovery was given to the family. I remained at home for about a month, and was then taken to a hospital and operated on. My condition was found to be more alarming than had been expected, and all hope of my recovery was given up. I remained in the hospital for several weeks, and a second operation was decided on in the hope that it would relieve me. Some weeks later I was removed to my home, and a few weeks afterward was taken to the home of a relative in the country, both of these moves being made on a stretcher. Another physician was called, and still another, who accepted the case very reluctantly, saying that he did not think he could help me.

I seemed to improve for a short time, then grew worse again. Another consultation and another operation followed; but I did not get any better. One of the physicians then told me that he had communicated with the St. Louis surgeon who had treated me before, and that, as another operation was advised, I had better return to the hospital. I returned to St. Louis and underwent a series of operations. During the time that had elapsed between the first operation and the last one a bad hernia had developed, and I was told I would have to be operated on again before I would be able to walk. Being advised to return to the country, I went to Palmyra, Mo. By this time I had a well developed case of tuberculosis, and as my father had passed on a few years before with this disease, I felt that the best thing I could hope for was an early death.

While I was in this frame of mind some Christian Science literature was sent to me, and I began to read it just to have something to occupy my mind a part of the time and to get away from the thought that I must soon be separated from my family. In the next few weeks I gained a little strength, and by keeping myself tightly bandaged was able to walk for a short distance. One day, while looking over the list of practitioners in the Journal, I found the name of one located only a few miles distant, and I decided to go to see her. I received my first treatment on Saturday evening, and the following day walked several blocks and attended my first Christian Science service. I remained in Hannibal until the following Thursday, when I returned to my home.

Since that time Christian Science has been my only physician and I have not been confined to the bed for a single day. That was early in the summer of 1914. By the end of that year I was able to take up light work, and in June, 1915, returned to St. Louis to go to work. The only work which presented itself was that of laborer in a machine shop, and although I had never done that kind of work before, I accepted the position. While error manifested itself in many forms, I held fast to the truth that God was my strength, and in so doing was able to hold that position until a better one came to me. In less than two months I was offered a position as manager of a subdivision for one of the largest concerns in the country. Although I knew nothing of the business when I accepted the position, I have found God to be an ever present help in business as well as in sickness.

To say that I am thankful for these blessings is insufficient. I can indeed say with Job, "I know that my redeemer liveth." I also wish to express my appreciation of the truth as taught by Mrs. Eddy. I am well, and have no symptom of my former troubles.—O. S. Norton, Wellston, Mo.

I am very thankful to God for Christian Science, the knowledge of the ever present Christ. Within the last year I have had two proofs of the efficacy of mental surgery. While trying to open a door which stuck, I hurt my hand; but the pain passed and I thought no more of the incident until a few days afterward, when it was evident that a bone was out of place. I went to a practitioner and asked for help, then tried to know the truth which Jesus declared would make us free. About a month afterward I noticed that the bone had gone back into place, and the hand was indeed "restored whole, like as the other."

The other healing was that of a sprained ankle. I fell from a trolley car, and in falling my left foot doubled under me. I was picked up unconscious, and the first thing I heard when consciousness returned was some one saying, "Of course she's hurt; she's terribly hurt." This I immediately denied, both mentally and audibly. I was then carried to a bench, when the sense of faintness again overcame me, owing to the intense pain in the foot. Mentally declaring the truth that there are no accidents in Mind, I was able with my husband's help to reach a pavilion on the board walk, where I sat waiting until my husband could secure a room for us at a hotel. As I tried to realize the all-power and all-presence of God, I raised my eyes and saw before me on a window the words "Christian Science Reading Room." I thought, "Oh, if I could only get there and get help!" When my husband returned for me I did with his assistance manage to get up the stairs to the reading room, where I met with prompt and loving help. The pain lessened during treatment, and next morning I attended church service. I had two more treatments, and in ten days could walk without limping. The healing in both cases has been permanent.

Edith St. John Walling, Belleville, N. J.

Christian Science has taught me in a very practical way that God is Love, and I thank God for the peace and joy that comes to my consciousness when the presence of Love is felt. To know that divine Love is the only power, and cannot give or send anything which is unlike Love, has been a revelation to me. As this truth becomes more clear, many of the old doctrinal beliefs are dropping away, also hate, fear, and discouragement. Trials and difficulties of all kinds, including many physical ailments, among them severe ear trouble, chronic stomach and bowel disorder, and minor ills, have been overcome.

While there is a deep sense of gratitude for the physical benefit, it does not compare with the understanding of God and of man's relationship to Him, which makes us more compassionate, loving, and just to our brother man. One special blessing I would like to mention, for it has meant much to my growth, and that is the privilege of assisting in church work. This has enabled me to see that the harvest is ripe and truly plenteous, and that the work is broadening in every sense. I have found it necessary always to let the light shine before men. I shall feel very grateful if these few words help some stranger who is seeking a God who is Love and an ever present help.—Gertrude E. Miller, Baltimore, Md.

[Translated from the German]

An overwhelming sense of gratitude impels me to tell of the blessings which my family and I have received through Christian Science. Two years ago our twelve year old daughter became afflicted with a scrofulous disease which manifested itself in a most alarming fashion on her eyes, nose, and mouth. Despite the best and most careful medical attention, the trouble would not yield, but rather increased to such an extent that the physician predicted total blindness. He thought this might possibly be avoided by immediate treatment in a clinic, but gave us little hope in that direction.

The sorrow of my husband and myself at the thought of our child's sad fate was unspeakably great, but "man's extremity is God's opportunity." Having heard of Christian Science through acquaintances, I applied to a practitioner for treatment, which was taken up very readily, and we were given explanations of the subject. The result was wonderful indeed, and we were filled with joy and gratitude to be witnesses to the ever present help of divine Love. It became possible for the child to lay aside the bandage which she had been wearing for weeks, and she was able to go out of doors. About three or four weeks later her healing was complete. The girl's vision now is better than ever before, and her complexion is perfectly clear. The trouble has not manifested itself again. May this testimony contribute toward proving to sorrow-stricken humanity that Christ, Truth, which delivereth from sin, disease, and death today and forever, is working in our midst. I am also mindful of that noble woman, Mrs. Eddy, who through faith and consecration to divine Principle was enabled to reveal this truth to us anew.

FRAU ROSA HALLER, Aalen, Württemberg, Germany.

It was about nine years ago that I first became interested in Christian Science, though not for physical help, but because the teaching seemed to be what I had long wished for. I had always regarded myself as a Christian, but still was not satisfied (having been taught that God sends suffering to bring us closer to Him), and life was such a puzzle. When I learned of an all-loving God, who knows only good, and of evil as having no power except what we give it, there followed the conviction that this was the truth. Since then I have been able to prove it, having been healed of many physical ills, as well as of constant worry over my own affairs and those of every member of the family. I have also been helped through great sorrows.

Several years ago, when our little girl was born, we had to have a doctor, and I became so filled with medical thought that my strong faith in Christian Science waned. Fear so filled me that I hardly knew what to believe for several months, until, through the faithful work of a practitioner, the realization came that I was trying to serve two masters. I then put all my trust in God and depended entirely upon spiritual help, and the reward came, for the confidence and peace returned and there was a rapid gain in every way. Since this experience I have read and studied all the more, in order never to be tempted again to stray from the way of Truth, although it has only been during the past two years that I have been able to demonstrate over the thought that a practitioner had to be called on whenever anything seemed to go wrong. Words cannot express my gratitude for the spiritual growth that has enabled me to do my own mental work, for through the study and practice of this beautiful truth there has resulted protection for myself and family from many physical troubles and from discords of all kinds. I am truly thankful to God for His loving protection and guidance, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her unselfish labors.

LUE REPPY SEXTON, Ventura, Cal.

Christian Science has been my only remedy since childhood, and when faithfully applied its results have been sure and immediate. During recent years I have to a great extent been able to overcome mental laziness, which had been a stumbling-block, and I find now that all physical difficulties are relieved more quickly and are many times prevented by a prompt realization of the truth.

One experience has caused me to be very grateful, because it demonstrated with positive proof the efficacy of Christian Science and came to me as balm to a disturbed state of consciousness. For eight days the bowels were totally inactive, but during that time I had no fear and felt no ill effects, because of the systematic declaration of God's allness and ever-presence. On the ninth day the stubbornness yielded; perfect and painless action was manifested, and has continued normal ever since. This is one of innumerable physical healings which have proved the power of divine Love as Christian Science teaches, but the greatest joy comes in the realization of sinful beliefs overcome and a growing ability to know God better. Each successive day brings greater cause for gratitude to Christian Science and to Mrs. Eddy, who has shown us how to draw near to God.

From Our Exchanges

[The Guardian]

Heaven, where Christ is, is not far away from earth. It is merely that he was received out of our sight, not out of our neighborhood. That which received him was but a cloud, a passing mist upon the hilltop, the most intangible of things. When it lifted he was no longer seen. That was all. The slightest possible veil hides him from our eyes, in the church and in the common ways of life. St. Mark (or some equally authoritative writer) tells us how the disciples, after momentarily gazing up into the sky in futile fashion, went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them just as if nothing had happened to make any difference in the reality of his presence—as indeed nothing had. And St. Matthew gives, as Christ's very last word, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

[A correspondent in The London (England) Times]

What we need now is not a new religion, but a Christianity that will grow naturally in our minds as it grow in men's minds in the time of the early church, a Christianity that will seem to be in the future as well as in the past, that will not need to be preserved from decay by a conscious and artificial effort.

The mass of men have certainly lost faith, and how are they to regain it? What is the most essential part of faith which they can accept to begin with, and which, if accepted and acted upon, will grow in their minds and lead them on to essential Christianity? It is, we suggest, this: that man, if he forgets himself in the love of that which is not himself, whether it be other men or some great cause or some noble art or science, does gain a power from a source outside himself which is not human at all, which is not even of nature, as we know it. That is the Christian doctrine of love extended and applied to all high, disinterested passion, and it is a doctrine which any man may test for himself. But those who believe it, even in its vaguest form, will be led on to test it; and if it be true they will be more and more confirmed in it by their testing of it, more and more aware of this power, and that it comes to them from a source altogether beyond their knowledge.

Now those who really believe in Christianity will believe also that by beginning with this article of faith and by living according to it, men will find more and more of Christianity to be true; they will more and more understand what it means and what part of the old statements of it belongs to the past. What is needed is a real working faith which can be opposed to the real unfaith of our time. The real unfaith of our time is that man is utterly molded by circumstances, molded by his struggle for life, and that there is no escape for him from the universal pressure of this struggle. That unfaith cannot be met by mere dogmatic statements about God and what He commands us to do.

[Zion's Herald]

The disciples forsook Jesus and fled in the time of his greatest need. Have not many today? Have not many lost their sense of moral values—Christian theologians and teachers of youth upholding the ruthless warfare, defending the breaking of treaties, arguing the rightness of it all? It is enough to dishearten the stoutest. True, and yet after all the Christ is left. It is that which is not Christian that has broken down. He himself still rises above the ruins, to remind men of a better day, to point them to the "more excellent way."

[The Christian Work]

We are not of those who think that the moral condition of Europe previous to July, 1914, was better than it has been since, all the horror and anguish of the last two years notwithstanding. All the evil passion that has shown itself in these terrible years was in men's hearts before, and was bound to break forth soon or late. It is precisely because of what the war has taught us that we seek to turn to God with renewed heart and will, to learn, if we can, wherein we have transgressed, and how it comes to pass that after nineteen centuries of the gospel of Christ the nations that profess his holy name should be locked together in the most terrific struggle to destroy each other of which history has any record.

Is it not that civilization itself has ceased to be God-conscious? We have forgotten how to worship; we have left God out of account, or almost so, in our schemes for betterment, individual and social. We have been feverishly engaged in exploiting the resources of the natural world, and covetously competing with each other in so doing, while forgetting our prior allegiance to the spiritual. We have been so busy, so preoccupied with the external things of life, that we have forgotten to ask what life itself is for and to what end it should be lived. We have made an end of that which is only a means; we have forgotten, if we ever knew, that the material is only of value as the vehicle and instrument of the spiritual, and as such should be consistently viewed and employed.

[Lyman Abbott in The Outlook]

Read and reread the life of Christ. Familiarize yourself with his teachings and his spirit. Do not ask yourself whether you have obeyed his teachings. Do not ask yourself whether you possess his spirit. Forget yourself. Forget the things that are past. Put your thoughts on the future. When life questions come up, ask yourself, What would Christ do were he in my place? Endeavor to do what Christ would approve. Endeavor! You will not always succeed. You will sometimes misinterpret his teachings. You will sometimes misunderstand his spirit. You will sometimes misapply those teachings and that spirit to the facts before you. You will sometimes even forget to ask the question altogether. But go on. "Look up, not down; out, not in; forward, not backward; and lend a hand." Forget yourself; concentrate all your thoughts upon your life work.

[The Christian Intelligencer]

For the Christian a clear statement of Christ concerning the requirements of the kingdom is final. His word must always be authoritative. Nothing need be added to what he taught about the kingdom of heaven, for it was his purpose to give full knowledge of what he thoroughly knew, of what he himself instituted. We can only unfold what is involved in his words. All our ingenious philosophies and all our painstaking science cannot add one jot or tittle to the truth Christ taught concerning the necessities of the spiritual life. In that realm he must always be our supreme and sufficient authority.

[Very Rev. Hensley Henson, D.D., Dean of Durham, in The Church Family Newspaper]

In following the guidance which unfolds itself in history, the church moves forward to that supreme consummation which the prophetic vision of St. Paul beheld when he dwelt with reverent enthusiasm on the glory of Christ, the reconciler and Redeemer of mankind. As did Jew and Gentile in the past, so Catholic and Protestant in the future shall finally meet in a common devotion to him.

Sixty per cent of Canada's land area below the sixtieth parallel of latitude is non-agricultural and for the most part available for growing trees. In 1916 the exports of products from wood amounted to approximately one hundred million dollars. According to the census of 1911 the capital invested in timber and remanufactures amounted to $259,889,715 in 4999 establishments. In addition, the paper and printing trades accounted for an invested capital of $62,677,612 in 773 establishments. The annual normal consumption of railway ties is estimated at 20,000,000. The woods in order of their importance are jack pine, eastern cedar, Douglas fir, hemlock, tamarack, western larch, and minor species. The hardwoods are birch and maple. In 1915 the lumber cut in 3239 mills totaled 3,842,676,000 feet, valued at $16,919,806. The logging waste left in the woods is placed at 25 per cent of the original tree, and sawmill waste amounts to 40 per cent of the original tree, so that finished lumber represents 30 to 35 per cent of the tree. Slabs, edgings, and trimmings are represented at 15 to 17 per cent of the tree. Sawdust is accounted for at 11 per cent, while bark is represented as about 10 per cent.

Upon recommendation of the secretary of the interior President Wilson has created by proclamation the Verendrye National Monument near Sanith, N. Dak. This reservation, which embraces 253 acres, surrounds a lofty eminence locally known as Crowhigh Butte. It rises from the left bank of the Missouri River at Old Crossing, one of the most important fords of the Missouri, over which hunters, trappers, and explorers have passed from the earliest times. The significance of this monument is that it marks the first recorded visit of white men to the vast territory which includes North Dakota. Verendrye, a French explorer, starting from the north shore of Lake Superior, passed to the west and southwest into the unknown regions of the great plains and Rocky Mountains about 1740, sixty years before the Lewis and Clark expedition. The creation of the Verendrye National Monument follows the historical precedent set by the creation of the Cabrillo National Monument at the spot where the Spanish navigator Cabrillo first sighted the coast of California in 1542, and of the Sieur de Monts National Monument at the spot where Champlain first sighted the coast of Maine in 1609.

In a recent issue of the Bordeaux Colonial et Maritime the following information appeared: "It may be useful to know that a new process for the preparation of alfa fiber, replacing the cruder and more inefficient method of dessication by combing and pounding, has opened a new and productive avenue to the utilization of this fiber. This new process consists in the removal of the gum from the plant and the elimination of the resinous matters, which application results in making the fiber smooth and silky, and in a condition to be readily dyed. In addition, the alfa fiber thus obtained has the much desired quality for rope yarn in general, of being unaffected by rotting or decaying while in water, and this feature makes it more durable and thus preferable to jute or hemp. This same process makes it possible to obtain from the alfa a by-product similar to tow and having all the appearance of wool. It can be easily reeled or carded and used in the manufacture of bagging, cordage, and the like."

Announcement of the arrival in Paris of Henry S. Graves, chief of the United States Forest Service, has led the Department of Agriculture to explain that he has gone abroad to make arrangements for the work which the forest regiment of the American army engineers will undertake in France in connection with the military operations of the allied forces. He has not been assigned to any command, but is acting under instructions, it is stated, to proceed to France in order to learn on the ground in advance just what conditions will need to be met, what equipment will be called for, and how extensively the services of American lumbermen can be utilized to advantage.

Making its first report in the form of a bulletin, a special committee appointed by the Jacksonville Real Estate Board to investigate the feasibility of a large cooperative warehouse for storing, curing, grading, and marketing the sweet potato crop of Florida, is advocating the erection of cooperative warehouses and of plants for the manufacture of by-products as well. The report sets forth that the sweet potato can be grown in the state with approximately little labor, and that it yields an enormous crop. It adds that there is a waste of 30 per cent of the entire crop under present conditions, all of which could be conserved through curing, drying, and storing.

There is now being erected at Mongkoksui, in the mainland portion of Hongkong, a tannery which promises to be an important factor in the leather situation of the far East, particularly in southern Asia. The concern has been organized under Hongkong laws with a capital of $5,000,000 Hongkong currency. The plant is to be of the latest modern pattern in every respect. It is being constructed under the supervision of a Chinese tannery expert who has served an apprenticeship in the business in various parts of Europe and the United States. It will have a capacity of 3000 cowhides and 100,000 sheep and goat skins a week. The concern proposes to tan all grades and varieties of leather.

In the revolution that is taking place, the Russian church, according to a statement by a member of the American Mission to Russia, is making more rapid progress toward adjusting itself to new conditions than the state is. It has practically been separated from the state and is now managing its own affairs. More changes were made in the Russian church during the month of May than had been made in two centuries before. The process has been one of democratization; every priest has had to have his position confirmed by a vote from the people of his parish. Twelve bishops have been dismissed, including the Bishop of Petrograd, and new bishops have been installed only after election by congregations. The physical property of the churches has been transferred from the state and is to be administered by the congregations, the clergy and bishops occupying themselves solely with theological affairs.

A California plant which manufactures cement is making potash as a by-product. Because of its success it is understood that other cement plants in the United States are now installing devices for the same purpose. The potash is made from dust collected by the Cottrell system. This requires two operations, one to collect the dust and the other to separate the potash by leaching. The amount of potash going to waste annually through cement stacks in the United States amounts, it is stated, to 50,000 tons, with a present market value of about ten million dollars.

Upon the recommendation of the secretary of the interior and the secretary of agriculture, President Wilson on June 30 signed a proclamation excluding certain areas from the Palisade National Forest in Idaho and Wyoming. The lands will become subject to homestead entry only on and after nine o'clock of the morning of Sept. 11, and to settlement and other forms of disposition on and after Sept. 18, 1917. About 5000 acres in Idaho, in Fremont and Bonneville counties, and 2200 acres in Wyoming, in Lincoln county, will be restored under the proclamation.

The United Railways of Yucatan, which some time ago were taken over by the government of that state from their private owners and the name changed to the Constitutionalist Railways of Yucatan, have been merged into the National Railways of Mexico. This system of railways not only covers the peninsula of Yucatan, but extends to the city of Campeche, in the state of that name, and has a total length of about five hundred and thirty miles.

The threshers and farmers of Kansas have been taking particular pains to see that every grain of wheat is saved. It is estimated that not less than ten million bushels of perfectly good wheat was wasted in Kansas in 1916 by carelessness in the adjustment of the threshing machines and in handling the grain. All winter there have been machines at work in many sections of Kansas threshing out old straw stacks, the high price of wheat making this work very profitable.

The Du Pont Company of Delaware, manufacturers of powder, are to enter the coal tar dye industry at once, officials of the company announce, adding that the plans include the manufacture of synthetic dyestuffs and kindred products. It has been an open secret that the company had been investigating the dye situation even before the war. The Du Pont plants are already turning out the basics and intermediates from which coal tar or aniline dyes are made.

Kansas raised 4,301,068 bushels of potatoes last year. This year the state will, it is estimated, raise close to ten or twelve million bushels.

The Canadian Government railway system comprises 4068 miles of railroad.

The Tenth Commandment

FRANK BELL

STUDENTS of the Christian Science text-book find many proofs that Science and Health is indeed a "Key to the Scriptures." Take as an example the commandment "Thou shalt not covet." From the ordinary point of view no good reason appears why mere wishing—at worst seemingly but an idle waste of time and thought—should be classified as one of the cardinal offenses, such as idolatry, murder, theft, adultery, perjury, and the like. Makers of human systems of law, who have readily appropriated most of the other Thou-shalt-nots of the Decalogue, have discerned no reason for setting up covetousness as a crime. Scholastic theology generally ignores it.

To the Christian Scientist, however, the tenth commandment instead of being a "dead letter" is full of vital meaning. "I wish for" is seen to be the equivalent of "I have not," which is but another way of saying "God does not provide for my need," or in a degree that "God is not." Covetous wishing involves, therefore, an attitude of thought which is in effect an affirmation of lack, a denial of the all-presence and providence of God, good; hence virtually it is a form of sin. The covetous thinker is contributing to instead of reducing the sum total of mistaken human belief in the actuality of a defective creation, an incompetent creator.

The invalid whose only conscious mental activity with regard to his case is a wish to be well, but whose trust is in mindless matter to effect the healing, is violating the tenth commandment. The impoverished one whose desire for happiness is measurable only in terms of money, is violating the tenth commandment. The would-be exponent of Christian Science who seeks to "perform the sudden cures of which it is capable," while disregardful that "this can be done only by taking up the cross and following Christ in the daily life" (Science and Health, p. 179), is likewise violating the tenth commandment.

"Thou shalt not covet" well deserves its place in these ten vital injunctions to mankind by reason not only of the quality but of the quantity of the offense involved. Violators of the commandments against murder, theft, and lying are more or less exceptional, but the temptation to indulge covetous wishes would seem to be confronting human thought at every turn, and to require unceasing watchfulness on the part of those who would not yield to the subtle suggestion that no harm can come from just a little idle day-dreaming about some things they would like to have.

Not infrequently the covetous wish has spurred endeavor to the acquirement of the thing wished for. Sometimes the world calls this success, but even the world is aware in a vague sort of way that much which is termed success does not meet the test of genuine joy of achievement or rightful possession. One reason for this is that covetous wishing is the expression of a state of erroneous thinking characterized chiefly by a sense of lack of good, and that unless corrected this false sense will continue to produce covetous wishes on a steadily enlarging scale. Thus the individual who once believed a million dollars would gratify his every desire, finds on gaining the million that his wants meanwhile have developed so that ten millions would not suffice, and he is relatively as poor as before. It is the familiar, age-old story of the futility of trying to heal thoughts with things.

"Thou shalt not covet" is in no sense directed against right desire. But desire that is right can be only for "unfoldment, not accretion" (Science and Health, p. 68). "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them," said the Master. A yearning for clearer apprehension of the good at hand is not a covetous wish. It is based on faith in the infinitude of good and is animated by a loving purpose to bring that infinitude to light for the benefit not of one or of a few, but of all. One may know a right desire by its selflessness.

Right desire, then, may always be substituted for a covetous wish, and it is in fact an infallible antidote therefor. A covetous wish is after all only a mortal mind counterfeit of man's natural aspiration toward good. If such a wish be, for instance, for a larger supply of material things for the mere sake of the things, the remedy is in a right desire to prove the fact of the allness of good for the sake of the fact, or rather of that which the fact implies, namely, the inherent perfection of divine Love and the manifestations thereof. All things needful are the direct fruits of this correctly based and rightly directed mental action, as is being proved in the daily affairs of countless thousands who are learning to observe the tenth commandment in the light of Christian Science.

"Hold thought steadfastly to the enduring, the good, and the true, and you will bring these into your experience proportionably to their occupancy of your thoughts," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 261 of Science and Health. As students of Christian Science learn to do this more and more consistently, they find less and less occasion to wish covetously for anything that is their neighbor's.

Divine Mind Constructive

FLORENCE E. B. DONALDSON

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE states clearly and definitely that infinite Mind is always constructive. It affirms that God, the only cause and creator, being omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent good, could not possess a single element of destruction. With unshakable logic it sweeps away the false foundations of human belief in two opposing powers combining as one, and declares that good is positive, eternal, and unchanging, while evil is negative, temporal, and self-destructive. The human mind claims that God creates and destroys in varying mood and for different reasons; that He repents, that is, changes His thought toward His children and the works of His hands; that in short the divine Mind may suddenly blot out or destroy or impair that which He created.

The material senses can know nothing of the eternally constructive work of divine Mind. Their testimony would present God as a destroyer; but spiritual sense understands Him as divine Principle, Love, and therefore as changeless good. Mortal mind simulates the powers of the one infinite Mind and aspires to reach heaven, and thus escape the necessity to destroy itself and all its false concepts. Until very recently it was believed by physicists that matter when reduced to its lowest limits, or atoms, was indestructible. The progress of physical science has changed this belief, and the origin of the atom has been discovered to be in ions, electrons, or electrical vibration.

With the growing knowledge of Christian Science the nothingness of matter and the false claims of mortal mind regarding it are becoming more apparent. In her metaphysical definition of Babel given in the Glossary of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes: "The higher false knowledge builds on the basis of evidence obtained from the five corporeal senses, the more confusion ensues, and the more certain is the downfall of its structure" (p. 581). Mind's ideas, on the contrary, not only are indestructible, but they are also ineradicable. Spiritual creation as revealed in the first chapter of Genesis can never be less perfect or entire than it has always been in the divine consciousness, and the only need is that the human consciousness should grasp this eternal truth and yield up its false beliefs and fears to that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," and through which it can alone learn to reflect Mind's constructiveness.

It is on this basis that Christian Science demonstrates the healing power of Mind. The action of Truth is to build up, to renew, to make good, and to eliminate all that is unlike good, until the true image and likeness, or God's man, becomes apparent to human consciousness and shuts out the old man with his deeds. Hatred, jealousy, self-seeking, mad ambition, may claim power to cause the death and destruction of mankind, but mortal mind can destroy nothing but its own sinful and material beliefs. Eternal life is better understood, through the very excess of evil's false claim, as the illusion of death becomes more clearly seen. Victory must always lie with that which is real and true and eternal.

The constructive character of Christian Science work is seen in its regenerative effect on those who strive honestly to follow its teaching and to fulfil its demands. Jesus likened the building up of righteousness (right thinking) in human consciousness, on the firm foundation of Truth, to the house built on the rock, and pointed out the impossibility of such a structure being overthrown by even the most disturbing elements of the carnal mind. That which claimed to be able to stand on false foundations was speedily washed away by the raging elements of fear and sin. Evil can only be successfully resisted in the strength of Truth. In other words, the needlessness of fear is understood only by those who have learned to recognize and to rely on the all-protecting power of infinite, ever present Love as divine Mind, the creative, constructive Principle of all that is.

Christian Science enables its students to demonstrate the constructive qualities of Truth and Love. On page 402 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says with prophetic insight: "The time approaches when mortal mind will forsake its corporeal, structural, and material basis, when immortal Mind and its formations will be apprehended in Science, and material beliefs will not interfere with spiritual facts. Man is indestructible and eternal." Even a faint realization of the truth that there is no destructive thought in infinite Mind lifts a load of fear from the oppressed heart. Spiritual creation, as recorded in the Scriptures, includes nothing but that which is eternally perfect, and incapable of being touched with the false manifestation of discord and decay.

The human mind, counterfeiting all that God created, argues that evil, the negation of good, is equally real and no less powerful, and that therefore it is to be accepted and feared. It mocks the eternal activity of good and points to its supposititious opposite. It sees the blight on bud and blossom, the heat that scorches and dries up, the cold that kills, the electric current that harms the innocent, the fury of the elements, the ravages of disease, the sin that poisons and corrupts. In short, it holds that the daily round of life brings with it so many dangers and temptations that the chances of avoidance of them are always against each one of us.

Christian Science reverses all this dreary thinking. Its Discoverer and Founder, Mrs. Eddy, was able to penetrate the mists of error, to see the underlying perfection of all that is real, and the omnipresence of good. On page 428 of Science and Health she writes, "We should consecrate existence, not 'to the unknown God' whom we 'ignorantly worship,' but to the eternal builder, the everlasting Father, to the Life which mortal sense cannot impair nor mortal belief destroy." Thus it was that our Leader and her students began to reconstruct the walls of the temple of Truth, to read again with clearer vision the revealed Word, to set themselves to obey God's commands and to do His will.

Children and Science

JOHN A. DEADRICH

In the book of the prophecy of Isaiah we find the declaration that "a little child shall lead them;" and every faithful student of Christian Science is striving for that same absolute trust in and reliance on God as our heavenly Father which is shown by the little child toward its earthly parents. Today the Christian Science Sunday school is doing a great work for the little ones, and both parent and teacher should constantly bear in mind that the child thought, which so readily takes in the truths taught in Christian Science, expects nothing less than their practice by parent and teacher. The following experience will illustrate the writer's meaning.

About nineteen years ago Christian Science came into our home when it was very much needed, bringing us health, peace, and happiness, together with an earnest desire to live the truths it taught and to have the children grow up in that faith. We lived in a small town where there were no other Scientists, and of course there was no Christian Science Sunday school for the children to attend; so the Lesson-Sermon and other passages from the Bible and Science and Health, also The Christian Science Journal, were read aloud each day to the children. Owing to the limited understanding which we ourselves had of this truth, it was thought that the children were too young to understand much of it, and regret was expressed that they could not attend a Christian Science Sunday school; but we were soon to learn a lesson which destroyed this erroneous thought.

A trip had to be made to the nearest railroad town for lumber and other materials, also for a new harness and a new buggy. The two older boys, aged about eight and five respectively, accompanied the writer, the buggy horse being tied behind the wagon. Our purchases made, we started for home, with the boys in the new buggy. We drove until night and then camped by the roadside, all fully enjoying it. During the night, however, a terrific sand storm set in. We were up early next morning, but the horses were restless and the buggy horse refused to be harnessed. I motioned to the boys to leave the horse alone (it was impossible at times to hear one speak, on account of the storm), and after the team was hitched to the farm wagon an effort was made to harness him, but without success. An examination showed that the new harness had hurt the horse's back.

Being very young in Science at that time, the testimony of the material senses was taken at its face value, and the responsibility of everything seeming to rest on personality, the boys were told that we would lead the horse, leaving the harness and buggy by the roadside until we could send a man with another horse after them, for if we proceeded that way we were very apt to have an accident. The boys were sitting in the buggy, quite unafraid, when the older one suddenly said in a clear, firm tone, "Papa, 'accidents are unknown to God'" (Science and Health, p. 424). The look on the boys' faces seemed to say: What is the matter? Weren't those words true when you read them to us? And if true, then why this anxiety? Never were the words "I beg your pardon" uttered by the writer with more sincerity than on this occasion to those two little boys, and instantly there came to his thought the declaration above quoted: "A little child shall lead them."

Thought was at once turned from the evidence of the material senses to God, and His omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence were declared. The harness was properly adjusted and the horse hitched to the buggy, the lines were given to the boys, who accepted them without comment or sign of fear, and the temptation to tell them to be careful, or even to look back at them myself, was put aside and God's presence realized. Needless to say, the trip home was made without accident. About noon the wind ceased, the sun shone brightly, and upon our arrival this experience was told to the wife and mother, and gratitude expressed for God's goodness. We resolved that henceforth Christian Science should not only be read and talked about, but lived, God being our helper.

Many years have passed since then, and often when the belief in sorrow or accident seemed very real this experience has come to our memory, enabling us to turn our gaze toward God, Spirit, and His universe, which is governed every moment by the perfect law of Love.

"Love thy neighbor"

ETHEL M. MC CANDLESS

When Abram and Lot separated in the land of Canaan, after finding that they could no longer dwell together in peace and harmony, Abram's attitude was expressed in these words: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren." On page 444 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy quotes these words, and adds, "Immortals, or God's children in divine Science, are one harmonious family; but mortals, or the 'children of men' in material sense, are discordant and ofttimes false brethren." The story in Genesis shows that Abram's faith and love were put to the test many times; and through the centuries the same problem has confronted all mankind, for human nature is the same today as it was when Abram and Lot tended their flocks and herds in the land of Canaan.

Now it is a comparatively easy matter to say to our brother, Let there be no strife between me and thee, but how to put it into practice is what this world needs to know. The Mosaic law with its "Thou shalt not" did not solve the problem, though it supplied a certain need at the time it was given; but gradually there unfolded to human consciousness a higher sense of love, until it burst forth and was manifested in the teachings and life of Christ Jesus. He gave to the world a new commandment in these words: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." It however remained for Mrs. Eddy, in Christian Science, to show us how to do this.

Before we can love our neighbor and live at peace with him, we must know who and what he is. We cannot obey the command "Love thy neighbor as thyself" so long as we believe that both self and the neighbor are material and mortal, capable of hating as well as loving. In order to find out the truth about ourselves, we must begin with God the Father, "of whom are all things," and as we learn more of the nature and attributes of the Father, our true selfhood will unfold; then we shall see not only ourselves aright, but also our brother.

A certain Christian Scientist had an experience along this line which may prove helpful to others. Soon after moving into a new home she discovered that she had a most disagreeable neighbor with troublesome, disobedient children. Instead of knowing the truth about the situation, she listened to the suggestions which thronged her consciousness, and was in a constant state of discord, alternating between disgust and despair. After trying for some time to solve the problem from a purely human standpoint and making no headway, there being no common ground on which they could meet, it came to her one day that this must be worked out scientifically. For a long time she had been declaring that in God she lived, moved, and had her being, and if this were true about herself, then it must be so about her neighbor. It would be impossible therefore for her to have an undesirable neighbor, for nothing of that nature could enter God's presence.

As she worked along this line, conditions began to improve; more harmony was manifested, and one day a sign "For Sale" appeared on the neighbor's house. This was very gratifying and a cause for much rejoicing, she thought, and she rested on her oars, so to speak. In a short time a buyer appeared, one who would have been a most desirable neighbor, and the outcome was anxiously awaited. Now while both parties were apparently ready, one to sell and the other to purchase, still the deal was not closed, and after a few days the sign was taken down. The Scientist saw that something was wrong and that there was yet work to be done. She was truly desirous of doing right, and very humbly did she petition the Father to show her the way. The light came almost immediately, and such a revealing! Away back in a dark corner of her consciousness she found lurking a desire to put her neighbor out of his home. She had all unconsciously outlined her demonstration.

Then as she waited, truly repentant, and humbly asked to be led aright, she recalled the story of the good Samaritan. She saw herself as the priest and the Levite, passing by "on the other side," drawing the robes of self-righteousness and bigotry about her. But as she worked and prayed, the tatters of pharisaism began to fall away, and, behold! the Samaritan appeared, bringing the oil of charity, and the wine which our Leader defines as "inspiration; understanding" (Science and Health, p. 598). Very tenderly and lovingly did she take this human concept, which had been beaten and robbed by the mortal beliefs of ignorance, envy, and hate, to the inn of spiritual consciousness, and there she left it with the host, our all-loving and merciful Father, who is "no respecter of persons." The joy and peace which followed this experience cannot be told in words, for to the Scientist it was a foretaste of heaven.

Shortly after this an opportunity came for the neighbor to take charge of a small business which not only enabled him to make the payments on his home, which he was about to lose, but which employed the family most of the day, thereby bringing peace and quiet to the Scientist. From that time on good will reigned where before had been hatred and strife. The Scientist was enabled to help them in many ways, and harmonious relations were established. She was learning to love her neighbor as herself, and thereby proving the blessedness of fulfilling the golden rule and doing mentally unto another as she herself would be done by.

Experience

NINA SEYMOUR KEAY

THE knowledge that all is Mind, and that matter is but a false picture in the so-called human mind, brings the question of experience into a very different light. Experience as we were accustomed to regard it meant a succession of emotions, actions, and events, governed, if at all, by some force or influence outside of our personal control or knowledge. In the light of Christian Science experience is a question of human consciousness solely, and since our consciousness means our thinking, it is governed largely by our own voluntary choice. Therefore, instead of regarding our experiences as influencing our thinking, we learn that primarily our thinking influences our experience in every detail.

It may be objected that we get in our experience events which we have not consciously shaped in thought, but this is explained by the fact that a considerable part of our thinking is mechanical and follows automatically and undetected the lines of habit or memory, or succumbs equally undetected to mental pictures of evil suggested by the experiences, words, or thoughts of others. We walk, eat, and do many such things which we know to be directly controlled by thought, and yet at the time we are not conscious of any specific thinking in connection with these acts. In the same way we accept and act upon countless habits of thought which produce woeful results, often to our great surprise. Christ Jesus gave a much needed warning when he said, "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

The inert, mechanical part of our thinking can only be corrected by attaining greater mental alertness and vigor; by doing enough real constructive thinking to keep our minds "so filled with Truth and Love, that sin, disease, and death cannot enter them," as our Leader enjoins on page 210 of Miscellany. Once it is fully realized, however, that all existence is wholly mental, and that nothing can be experienced except mentally, it is obvious that by keeping control over our thoughts we must necessarily control our experiences; that is, that it is not possible to experience what we refuse to entertain in our consciousness. We may seem to be the helpless victims of injustice, ingratitude, or misfortune, and we may even assure ourselves and others that we do not believe in these wrong conditions; but the inexorable logic of Christian Science points out that if we were not believing in them they could not be there, since our consciousness is the only sphere of action they can have, and "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

The evil belief may not be flaunting itself openly under its real name, however; perhaps it is masquerading as "self-will, self-justification, and self-love," which Mrs. Eddy describes as the "adamant of error" (Science and Health, p. 242); or it may be undetected fear, or a reluctance to part with a false point of view, or it may be that noxious weed self-pity. Belief in some form of it there must be, if an evil is being manifested in experience, so that we cannot take refuge in blaming circumstances or the wrong-doing of others. All that the wrong-doing of others can do is to tempt us to believe in it and thereby share it. If we refuse to do so, it has no power to hurt us and must eventually fade out of our experience.

We must follow the advice of the apostle Paul, therefore, and "prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Christian Science makes this possible by revealing the nature and origin of good as God, the divine Mind. No mere human opinions, merely personal wishes, or standards based upon sentiment or superstition, can pass as good to the earnest Christian Scientist striving to be governed by the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." That which believes in evil and regards life and happiness as at the mercy of material circumstances is not the divine Mind, but human ignorance. Spiritual thinking alone is good thinking.

The wise man declared that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he." Then, since a human being is simply what he thinks, and not what other people think about him, it is the right of all to shape their characters, and hence their experience, in accord with their highest desires. "Hold thought steadfastly to the enduring, the good, and the true," Mrs. Eddy counsels on page 261 of Science and Health, "and you will bring these into your experience proportionably to their occupancy of your thoughts."

In the Courts of God's House

WILLIAM W. DAVIS

"YE that stand in the house of the Lord," the psalmist writes, "in the courts of the house of our God, praise the Lord." We find in Science and Health, as a part of the definition of church, the following: "The structure of Truth and Love; whatever rests upon and proceeds from divine Principle" (p. 583). Some one has said that the church is the highest visible manifestation of good in a community. When therefore we accept the appointment of usher in The Mother Church, we should ask ourselves whether we realize often enough, and as earnestly as we might, the great privilege extended to us of assisting in the manifestation of this good, so that we ourselves, as well as the community, may derive the highest benefit.

To receive the many blessings and benefits which we have so wonderful an opportunity to appropriate, to draw nearer to divine Principle and to come closer together in brotherly love, should be our object in accepting service. We should rejoice and praise God for the privilege of taking part in the church service and for the opportunity extended to us of serving good. There are many blessed ways of manifesting good, but that of serving, of being of service to God, to mankind, to the Principle taught us by our beloved Leader, through activity in our church work, is the very highest form of expressing our appreciation and loyalty, our gratitude, our love and devotion.

Service as an usher in a Christian Science church offers so wonderful an opportunity for doing good that it should lift one high above the drudgery of daily life and thought. It should be so appreciated by those chosen thus to serve that it becomes the fulfilment of a cherished hope and ideal. To serve God by standing at the very door of the church to welcome the stranger and the wanderer who is looking for the peace of God, requires consecration of the highest kind. It means that we must be prepared to offer ourselves as standard bearers of Christian Science throughout every hour; that we must so express Truth and Love that we shall be worthy examples to those who are looking for a better and truer sense of life; that we must keep close watch over our thoughts and our actions, so that we may reflect God, infinite good, always.

We are told by our beloved Leader to "watch, work, and pray" (Science and Health, p. 367), and we find on the cover of the Christian Science Sentinel these words of Jesus: "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch." As ushers we are watchmen as well. A watchman guards that which is entrusted to his care. Then the usher must guard his own thoughts, that he may be obedient to the rules and by-laws of The Mother Church, that he may manifest the attributes of divine Mind, and that he may give his best service. Ushers must manifest loyalty, faithfulness, and brotherly love in their daily living as well as in the church work, so that they may reflect harmony at all times. It is not enough to profess belief in spiritual qualities,—we must show them in our works; and much more are these required of us after we accept service in the church than before. We have become standard bearers of Truth; therefore our lives should always be consecrated to the cause of Truth, and we should work for a larger and better demonstration of the teachings of Christian Science.

Loyalty, and willingness to serve, stamp one as a true follower of our Master and Wayshower, Christ Jesus, and these qualities should be so spontaneous as to be a part of our real selfhood, of the man made in the image and likeness of God. It is not enough that we as members of the church shall attend service for the purpose of listening to the Lesson-Sermon as read from the desk; ours is much more than mere attendance. We are a part of the service, a part of a perfect whole; and in order that we may adequately bear our part in this perfect harmony and in the healing work of the service, we must come with our thoughts attuned to the divine Mind, come prepared to take our part in the service just as much as do the readers, the soloist, and the organist. We must reflect unity, harmony, love, and strength, and we cannot do this if we come in a hurried, haphazard way, or merely because we have nothing better to do.

There is nothing better that Christian Scientists can do than devote their time to some Christian Science work, and we must not let error tempt us away from our service to God. All sorts of excuses will make themselves heard; manifold invitations will be extended to use in pursuit of worldly pleasures the time that should be devoted to service, but we must be awake to the error that would keep us always doing the things that we should not and leaving undone the things we should do.

One of the most important messages that we should heed is that of making sure that our work as ushers is impartial; that it is metaphysical and not physical. Nothing will detract more from the real Christianity of our duties than will a show of personality, even though it may be unconscious. We should so conduct ourselves as to be channels for the expression of Truth and Love, and so do our work that the members of the congregation will not be conscious of any personal officiousness, but rather that divine Love directs the work of the ushers.

Furthermore, we who are about God's business should be bound together by the strongest ties of brotherly love. God's business is the expression of righteous activity, of joyful service and honest endeavor, and should be accompanied by brotherly love and the spiritual idea of harmony and truth. Wherever we are sent, let us accept our work as God's business, and know that every post of duty is necessary and important in His service. The station to which we may be assigned, wherever it may be, calls for love of and devotion to the cause, and our part is to be performed faithfully and joyfully, with hearts full of gratitude that we have been called to assist in this great work of redemption,—the saving of mankind from sin, disease, and death. To the end that we may be better fitted for the work that we have to do, and be aided in our journey from sense to Soul, we must seek a closer relationship with God, a relationship which will mean for us salvation.

[Rollin E. Smith in Montevideo (Minn.) Commercial]

In the chapter on Genesis in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy distinguishes between the spiritual thought and the material. On page 520, writing of the second chapter of Genesis, she says of verses 4 and 5, "Here is the emphatic declaration that God creates all through Mind, not through matter." On the next page she says of verse 6, "The Science and truth of the divine creation have been presented in the verses already considered, and now the opposite error, a material view of creation, is to be set forth." It is in the material view of creation that "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground." Mrs. Eddy continues: "The second chapter of Genesis contains a statement of this material view of God and the universe, a statement which is the exact opposite of scientific truth as before recorded. The history of error or matter, if veritable, would set aside the omnipotence of Spirit; but it is the false history in contradistinction to the true."

The book of Genesis, when accepted literally, prevents spiritual development, for one's idea of God is of a Supreme Being who deals with matter, and one's idea of man is that he is wholly material. "I cannot believe in a science that teaches that 'man is incapable of sin' [Science and Health, p. 475]," writes our critic. The distinction between mortal man and the real man, who cannot sin, is plainly made throughout the authorized literature of Christian Science, and it is easily understood as well as easily followed. Moreover, this distinction is to be found in the Bible, particularly in the teachings of Christ Jesus, Paul, and John. Here is where Mrs. Eddy found it; and other writers, either with or without her aid, have also noticed it.

In reality man does not sin, sicken, or die, but is coexistent with God as His image or reflection; but in mortal belief men need to be saved from these evils and from all evil. Thus Jesus declared, speaking of God, "He is not a God of the dead, but of the living: for all live unto him." Yet the Master also said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Although Paul said, speaking of God, "In him we live, and move, and have our being," yet he also spoke of an "old man" to be "put off."

John made the same distinction emphatically. In his writings the reality of man's being and the human need of achieving it were plainly declared. For instance, in the first epistle of John we read, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God;" also, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." Yet the same writer said in the same letter, "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." Such apparent contradictions disappear when account is taken of the Scriptural distinction between God's man and what is called a mortal.

The first mistake made by our critic is his classification of Christian Science as a mere human philosophy. Now Christian Science, as the name implies, is a Science rather than a philosophy, the Science of being, taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus nineteen hundred years ago. The gentleman takes exception to Mrs. Eddy's use of certain synonyms for God. These synonyms, namely, Mind, Spirit, Soul, Principle, Life, Truth, and Love, are either specifically used by the Scriptural writers or their use is warranted by the teachings of the Scriptures. These names for Deity, however, should not be confounded with the words which are descriptive merely of attributes of God, such as mercy, justice, goodness. It is true that Christian Science teaches that "no material things exist." Christian Science rejects the real existence of matter and material things on the basis of the allness of Spirit. Since God is Spirit, the only cause and creator, the entire universe must be, in its real nature, spiritual and not material. Christian Science teaches that Mind and its manifestation is the only real existence, and hence that a matter universe is an impossibility in Science.

Our critic presents an appeal for the acceptance of the testimony of the physical senses. He argues, "Our senses witness to us the substantial existence of our bodies and of the external world." He concludes, therefore, that a material universe and physical man are realities because the material senses bear witness to their existence. Now, to those same material senses the earth on which we live is flat, and the sun rises and sets; and to one looking down a railroad track the rails some distance away seem to meet; but to our enlightened understanding the earth is not flat, the sun does not rise and set, and the rails do not meet as the physical sense of sight declares. As a matter of fact, the seeming meeting of the rails is not a condition external to consciousness, but is an experience within consciousness due to the finiteness of the human sense of sight.

[Avery Coonley in Sterling (Ill.) Gazette]

Christian Science does not say that there is no sin, in the sense that there is no problem of sin. It says there is no reality to sin; that God created all that was made, "and, behold, it was very good." Sin is no part of that good creation. It says, moreover: "The way to escape the misery of sin is to cease sinning. There is no other way" (Science and Health, p. 327). If any one is led to turn to Christian Science in the false hope of being permitted to continue in sin unmolested, he is promptly disillusioned and does not stay long enough to be counted among its large and growing following.

The evangelist's characterization of Christian Science as a "false religion," because its interpretation of some of the teachings of the Bible differs from his own, has nothing to sustain it but an opinion. The question as to whether a religion is true or false should be decided, for the Christian at least, by whether or not it does the works which Christ Jesus promised should follow "them that believe." Among these was Christian healing. With the unparalleled record of healing works which Christian Science has to its credit, in addition to the redemption of the sinner and the comforting of the sorrowing, it does not shrink from the test.

[Lloyd B. Conte in Sandusky (Ohio) Star-Journal]

The attack on Christian Science reported in a recent issue reminds one of the persecution of Jesus of Nazareth by the religious leaders in his day. What had Jesus done that they were so enraged and wanted to kill him? Was it not because he came teaching a more spiritual doctrine, and proved his faith by his works?

Mrs. Eddy brought to this age a message of great spirituality, and has so taught the gospel of Christ Jesus that signs of healing the sick have followed even as the Master promised. That day has passed for an intelligent man to refer to Christian Science as a sham religion, or to assert that Christian Science does not heal the sick. Hundreds of thousands of men and women in our country have been healed through Christian Science of almost all kinds of disease, and they include ministers, physicians, bankers, business men, judges, attorneys, and many in the common walk of life. This healing work is going on daily, and as a result new organizations have sprung into existence on an average of more than one a week for ten consecutive years. Christian Science is bringing surcease from sorrow; it is reforming the drunkard; it is leading men and women out of infidelity and atheism and giving them an intelligent, demonstrable understanding of God. Through Christian Science people are led to read and love the Bible, and a greater desire is awakened to follow in the footsteps of Christ Jesus. The earnest seeker after truth need not go outside of your own city to find evidence of the good that Christian Science is doing in the world.

The beneficiaries of Christian Science never found fault with Mrs. Eddy's price for class instruction, nor with the price of her books. The effort to defame the character of Mrs. Eddy and to misrepresent and pervert her teachings will fail, for if Christian Science had not been founded upon the rock Christ Jesus, it would have perished long ago.

[E. L. Webb in Belfast (Ireland) News-Letter]

In a column of a recent issue, entitled "Powers of Darkness," these words appear: "The Christian Scientist seeks to have his sickness cured by power from the depth of the unseen." This "unseen" is described as the "vast ghost-haunted world." As this statement would convey an erroneous impression as to what Christian Science healing really is, may I be allowed to point out that God alone is appealed to as the healer in Christian Science treatment. On page 228 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy we read: "There is no power apart from God. Omnipotence has all-power, and to acknowledge any other power is to dishonor God. The humble Nazarene overthrew the supposition that sin, sickness, and death have power. He proved them powerless."

When Christ Jesus sent out his disciples to heal the sick and cast out devils he said to them: "As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." To Christian Scientists the "kingdom of heaven" is the unseen world, unseen to the material senses, but nevertheless "at hand," and becoming more and more clearly seen to the human thought, spiritually illumined through a demonstrable understanding of the Scriptures, which understanding is being gained through the study of Christian Science. In this kingdom man is found to be in the image and likeness of God, and it is in proportion as the true understanding of God and man is gained by the Christian Scientist that the seeming powers of darkness (under which heading Christian Science classifies sin and sickness) are being proved to be no more real than darkness, which is but "the absence of light" (Science and Health, p. 215), without origin, intelligence, or entity, for "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all."

[Judge Samuel W. Greene in Henderson (Ky.) Gleaner]

In a reported sermon a clergyman makes an unwarranted and unfair attack on Christian Science and Christian Scientists. Christian Scientists are a peace-loving, God-loving, and man-loving company, who are trying to help and serve. Of this any fair-minded man or community may soon become aware upon a little investigation. Christian Scientists are making an effort to heal and to save men from sin, disease, and death. They come with blessings, not curses; they come with love and truth, not sword and fire; they come in the spirit of the lowly Nazarene, not as an avenging monster; they seek to build up, not to tear down.

In the newspapers of the same date as this clergyman's sermon, I read of several deaths in the community from surgical operations and from well known diseases, but no one attaches any blame to the surgeons and doctors in attendance. Doubtless they all tried to save their patients, and they deserve only praise for their unselfish efforts. When a patient under Christian Science treatment dies the world should be equally charitable. The critic could with little effort find in Henderson or in any city of this country a number of instances where so-called fatal and chronic diseases have been healed by Christian Science treatment, but he chooses rather to influence the minds of an overwrought audience with the pathetic story of one Christian Science failure. The gravestones in abundance whitening the landscape in all parts of the world are mute witnesses to medical failures, and yet the world justly loves and honors its unselfish and painstaking physicians. Even Jesus' own disciples were unable to heal some of the cases brought to them.

Thousands of men and women the world over love and honor Mrs. Eddy for her discovery of Christian Science and her spiritual interpretation of the holy Scriptures, and every Christian Scientist daily reads and studies the Bible. Neither Mrs. Eddy nor Christian Science has taught any such silly twaddle as that narrated by the clergyman. Epithets and unrefined abuse do not constitute argument, and the fair-minded, thinking people among the critic's hearers will not be misled thereby.

Christian Scientists have only sympathy and love for this critic, and we reverently and lovingly recommend for his consideration the sixth tenet of Christian Science found on page 497 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which is as follows: "And we solemnly promise to watch, and pray for that Mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus; to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and to be merciful, just, and pure."

[Aaron E. Brandt in Warren (Pa.) Times]

A lady evangelist delivered a sermon against Christian Science, as reported in the Times, and when referring to the man who was stripped, wounded, and left half dead on the road leading from Jerusalem to Jericho, as related by Jesus in the story of the good Samaritan, said that "Christian Scientists would tell us that this man wasn't sick, that there was nothing wrong with him, but Jesus said he 'fell among thieves,' who 'wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead.' Which will you take, Jesus or Christian Science?"

Permit me to say that if the evangelist had taken the trouble to get an understanding of Christian Science she would not have found any occasion to ask such a question, or try to make it appear that there is anything in Christian Science contrary to Jesus' word and teaching. If she intended to base her statement on an inference drawn by her from the fact that Christian Science teaches sickness and disease to be unreal, her conclusion as applied to the man in question, or to the human sense of things generally, is wholly unwarranted. Christian Science shows that sickness and disease, as well as wounds, are unreal to spiritual sense, as Jesus proved again and again in destroying them instantly; but this by no means warrants the statement made by the evangelist.

Again, if the evangelist has reference to a statement appearing in the text-book of Christian Science that "man is never sick, for Mind is not sick and matter cannot be" (Science and Health, p. 393), her statement is again entirely wrong, for here Mrs. Eddy refers to divine Mind, and man made in the image and likeness of that Mind, or God. Jesus never said that the man found lying wounded along the road to Jericho was such likeness. Spiritual man, to whom Mrs. Eddy refers in her statement, is never sick because he never sins. We read in the first epistle of John, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." Sickness being the result of sin, it is plain that this man cannot be sick, nor is he imperfect in any other sense.

Mrs. Eddy correctly recognizes the distinction drawn in the Bible between man made in the image and likeness of God, who is spiritual and perfect, and "the sinning race of Adam" (Science and Health, p. 345), which from the beginning was "conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity," and in her many writings she gives a scientific explanation of the distinction.

[George R. Lowe in The Ottawa (Ontario) Citizen]

In a report of a sermon, given in the Citizen, it is said that the pastor objected to Christian Science as discrediting the evidence of one's senses. Every attempt at a scientific or philosophical explanation of things aims to correct the evidence of the material senses to some degree. The parallel rails of the railway track seem to meet in the distance. Sky and tree tops seem to mingle. The sun seems to rise and set. Matter seems to be solid substance, yet it can be resolved into what modern physicists term electrons,—invisible forces. So learned a man as the Rt. Hon. Arthur J. Balfour declared years ago that matter is explained by being explained away.

It is unwise to try to put science, philosophy, theology, therapeutics, in separate water-tight compartments. Life is a unity, and must be interpreted spiritually. Spiritual understanding and practice promote health and longevity. Open-minded investigation proves that Christian Science heals all manner of diseases.

Christian Science is not derived from Bishop Berkeley's idealism but from that of Christ Jesus, who said: "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." He taught that God is Spirit; and so the real man, God's likeness, must be spiritual. Therefore, although to the material senses man seems to die, yet Jesus taught that it is life eternal to know God and His Christ. If we are to know life as real and eternal, we reason that the opposite of life is temporal and unreal. So Paul boldly declares that Christ Jesus abolished death, and that the things that are unseen are eternal. On page 269 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has written: "The testimony of the material senses is neither absolute nor divine. I therefore plant myself unreservedly on the teachings of Jesus, of his apostles, of the prophets, and on the testimony of the Science of Mind."

[Robert S. Ross in Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle]

Recently, in reply to the question "Do you consider Christian Science a religion?" a clergyman is credited by the Eagle with saying, "It is fanaticism." Whether or not Christian Science is what its adherents claim it to be, is a question that any honest investigator can decide for himself. Christian Science is based upon divine Principle, and is demonstrated according to rule. The student who discerns this Principle and thinks and acts according to its rules, can prove to his entire satisfaction that the healing taught in Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy and the healing taught by Jesus of Nazareth are one and the same.

If the critic were aware that by referring to Christian Science as "fanaticism" he is at the same time referring to the very Christianity which all avowed Christians should be practising as well as preaching, no doubt he would cease his denunciations. Mankind, particularly leaders of public thought, cannot afford to be uninformed or misinformed regarding that which has reinstated primitive Christian healing.

Economic Administration

When Jesus blessed and brake the few loaves and fishes and fed a multitude with what had seemed sufficient for the needs of only a small family, he did much more than simply to satisfy the hunger of those who had assembled to hear him expound the word of God. Through this marvelous act of divine multiplication he taught them that God was able to supply their needs even to the uttermost, and in doing this he plainly recognized that they believed their hunger could be relieved only through the eating of food such as they were accustomed to. He did not attempt to satisfy them by telling them not to give way to their sense of hunger, but he actually supplied them with the food which they craved, and in such abundance that they were unable to consume it all. Furthermore, he taught them a lesson in economy which in modern times has too oft been unheeded, when he bade the disciples "gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost."

That the world is now urgently in need of a greater supply of food than it has on hand is one of the strongest beliefs of mankind today, and that this condition cannot be relieved except by the actual production of a greater quantity of foodstuffs, together with the elimination of all wastage of food, is likewise strongly impressed on the minds of all. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 254 of Science and Health, "To stop eating, drinking, or being clothed materially before the spiritual facts of existence are gained step by step, is not legitimate." Christian Scientists will recognize, therefore, that until they have completely demonstrated as did Christ Jesus that "man shall not live by bread alone," it is incumbent upon them to do their share toward meeting their own needs and the needs of their fellow men by making the best possible use of what food is now available.

Webster defines economy as "thrifty and careful administration; management without loss or waste; as, a housekeeper accustomed to economy, but not to parsimony." He also defines the word economize as "to manage with economy; to use with prudence or frugality. . . . To utilize to the best advantage." It is in the sense of these definitions that the people of the United States are now urged by the President to practise economy in their daily living. Out of the abundance of their supply it is said that the wastage of food in American families is appalling, and that in normal times the cost of living has been largely increased by the uneconomic methods of both distributer and consumer.

At the present time the President has been vested with authority which it is hoped will insure to both producer and consumer fair prices,—a reasonable profit to the one, and to the other an ample supply for all actual needs. To the producer and to the middleman who would unduly increase prices, appeals have been made which should fully awaken them to see the wrong and the suffering that such action on their part would produce, and it is believed that this appeal to fair dealing and patriotism will not be unheeded. The real conservation of food and the control of prices must however rest largely in the hands of the consumer, and it is to them that the most urgent appeals have been and will continue to be made. Every pound of food carelessly or ignorantly wasted or overeaten will be a pound needlessly taken from the general supply and will do its share toward furnishing a reason for an advance in prices, thus making more difficult the problems of those of limited means.

A true concept of brotherliness, and of the duty of men one to another, should make all mankind careful of the rights of their neighbors; and to those who have seen the light, as Christian Scientists have, there should be no need for any extra appeal for fair and compassionate dealing in a matter of this kind. Christian Scientists will not add to the burdens of their less fortunate neighbors either by cupidity or knowingly by careless or ignorant wastefulness; therefore the appeal that is made to them is to manifest righteousness and intelligence in connection with this whole problem.

Archibald McLellan.

Drafting for Service

Drafting for service becomes necessary when humanity lacks sufficient inspiration to volunteer. It becomes advisable when certain elements of the population are eager to have others serve at the front while they themselves remain in safety behind the lines. A desire to preserve self while others sacrifice self ultimates in spiritual death, but Christian Science can save the victims of this would-be mental assassination.

Drafting under these circumstances, therefore, amounts to a human contrivance for bringing the recalcitrant and traitorous, as well as the ignorant desirous of ease in the flesh, from under cover and forcing them to march with the righteous until the lesson of loyalty and fidelity to Truth is learned. More than this, drafting operates to detach those who are really willing to volunteer from the aggressive mental malpractice which seeks to make them unwilling. Mrs. Eddy on page 158 of "Miscellaneous Writings" exhorts her followers in these words: "All God's servants are minute men and women." In her Message of 1901 she writes: "The Christian Scientist has enlisted to lessen sin, disease, and death, and he overcomes them through Christ, Truth, teaching him that they cannot overcome us. The resistance to Christian Science weakens in proportion as one understands it and demonstrates the Science of Christianity" (p. 15).

God drafts His own, thus detaching them from the ties of the flesh. It is necessary for man inwardly to volunteer as a soldier of God, though God has already selected the real man from the beginning as His child who is exempt from sin, disease, and death. This man of God fears no floods, no fire, no gas, nor any of the various forms of destruction invented by the boasted efficiency of mortal mind. The soldier who carries with him the understanding of God's man can no more be touched by explosive or poison than the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace, or Daniel in the lions' den, David facing the highest efficiency of the art of metallurgy of his day in the sword of Goliath, or Paul protecting himself from the viper's sting could suffer harm.

Furthermore, the soldier who is drafted into service and is guided by the divine Mind is protected against all arguments of mortal mind impurity, whether it be in water, in earth, or of the flesh. The greatest temptation, apparently innocently put, can be uncovered by Principle, which is Mind. Thence springs the intelligence needed to penetrate the mask of hypocrisy, subtlety, and even the seeming sublimity of earthly bliss. A sweet morsel may have in its center the worst form of diabolism, but Christian Science enables the soldier of God to reverse the so-called poisonous action of ignorant or malicious evil intent. A victory won over self is equivalent to the glad progress of climbing the mount of transfiguration.

"God is no respecter of persons," and drafting the available material of a nation has this advantage, that it follows in a measure the divine method. Moses leading the children of Israel out of Egypt and across the desert found volunteering humanly inadequate, and the Ten Commandments arose from necessity. When the Israelites settled in the land of Canaan they were not spiritually advanced enough to take possession and govern themselves on a voluntary plan, "preferring one another" under the divine Mind, and so a whole body of religious and social law was supplied to them. Nevertheless, although even today humanity clamors for rules and regulations and needs to be drafted in order to do its duty, the time is coming under the teaching of Christian Science when each individual, community, or nation will have learned the supreme lesson of volunteering to do right. In that day the head of a nation will express a national want and eager hands will furnish the necessary supply; labor, thought, money, and service will flow into the open treasury.

Today God is drafting the nations into His final warfare against evil. He is taking them under His protection, away from the manipulation of pretended and pretentious powers which have arrogated to themselves the control of the world. In the words of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic,"—

> He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
> He is sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat.

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

Do We Need to be Helped?

THE question is occasionally raised by those outside Christian Science, and even by those who are somewhat interested, why a sick person should go to a fellow being for help; and the argument is on this wise: Is not God just as willing to hear and answer the prayers of one person as another? To this it may be answered that there can be no doubt whatever as to the divine impartiality; the only question is to what extent the needy one is prepared to avail himself of the blessing which God is ever ready to bestow. It is very comforting to know that by the great spiritual illumination which has come to humanity through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, unnumbered thousands have been healed without the help of any person, and this is full proof of the correctness of the Master's words so often quoted by Christian Scientists: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The knowing of the truth about God and man really constitutes healing in Christian Science, but very many are apparently unable to reach this consummation without the aid of another's understanding. We never think of questioning this in respect to any other line of study. It would be quite possible for every schoolboy to work his way through the various lines of knowledge which are deemed essential on the human plane, but it has been found a good and wise thing for school teachers to help their pupils until they are able to do their own work and to find actual delight in solving the problems which at first seemed so difficult to them.

We may all learn a valuable lesson with respect to the healing of the sick if we read the story of the washing of the disciples' feet, as given in John's gospel. We read that after the supper Jesus "girded himself" for service, and "began to wash the disciples' feet." We are told, however, that Peter objected when it came to his turn, but the Master responded in these deeply significant words: "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." It seems that Peter continued to object, but Jesus followed up his instruction by saying, "If I [Christ, Truth] wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." The Master added: "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you."

It is deeply interesting to note the significance of Jesus' question to his disciples on this occasion: "Know ye what I have done to you?"—a question which all professing Christians should ask themselves. As understood in Christian Science, it means that he had made known to them the power of divine Truth and Love to heal the suffering human sense and to cleanse the understanding from material belief, so that faith and hope should rest on pure spirituality. It is well known that more than one Christian denomination has maintained the symbolic rite of washing the feet as well as baptism and the Lord's Supper, but there is no reason to suppose that this observance was intended to bring to the human consciousness a fresh recognition of the truth which sets free from sin, sickness, and death. To the Christian Scientist the question, "Know ye what I have done to you?" brings forth a glad recognition of the Master's healing work, and is a constant reminder that what our Lord did for the disciples in his day we should in loving obedience to his direct command be ready to do for each other. If any one should like Peter refuse to accept the needed aid, it were well to ponder our Leader's words on page 420 of Science and Health: "If students do not readily heal themselves, they should early call an experienced Christian Scientist to aid them. If they are unwilling to do this for themselves, they need only to know that error cannot produce this unnatural reluctance."

Here it is well to remember that true Christian Science treatment does not produce dependence upon another's personality, but uplifts thought and cleanses the understanding so that the one who receives help can work for himself as never before, and through his healing prove to the world the ceaseless activity of the divine law which heals and saves.

Joy in Giving

"I enclose herewith post-office order for one dollar ($1), the same to be applied to the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. While this is only a small portion in showing my love for the cause, I am a widow seventy-eight years old and have no income, but I want to do a little something anyway. I do not feel that I could ever begin to pay out in money the good I have received."

"Prompted by the article 'Looking Forward,' which appeared in the Sentinel of Dec. 2, 1916, a collection was taken up among the members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, Berlin, Germany, at a special meeting on the 26th of February, for the benefit of the Christian Science Benevolent Association in Boston. The collection amounted to marks 790, which we gave over to the War Relief fund, to be reckoned up with Mr. Dickey. We do not wish to neglect to express to you our deepest thanks for the above-mentioned article, and also for the opportunity it gave us to help in the establishment of a new work for the welfare of mankind."

"As I left the house this morning, I remarked to my wife that I was going to send all I could—fifty cents—to the Benevolent Association fund. She took fifty cents from her own little household treasury and said, 'Send this with it.' So here it is. We are trying to drown our sense of the smallness of the dollar in our consciousness of our Father's wealth. Though we seem unable to help much now, we gratefully appreciate the clear service the Board is rendering the cause."

"It is my agreeable duty to voice the deep appreciation of many here in Petrograd, Russia, of the editorial 'Looking Forward' which lately appeared in the Christian Science Sentinel. It is our joy and privilege to respond to the invitation extended by the Board of Directors of The Mother Church to the whole field of Christian Scientists to cooperate in still further extending the channels of usefulness, by sending you our first donation of $308, to be equally divided between the two funds named in the article."

"Enclosed herewith please find draft for $110, the amount of the first of three collections to be taken by First Church of Christ, Scientist, La Porte, Ind., and devoted to the fund of the Christian Science Benevolent Association. We are grateful indeed for this opportunity to share in the activity of this newly opened channel of usefulness for The Mother Church. May we take this occasion to convey an expression of our love for and loyalty to the cause of Christian Science, and our allegiance to the Board of Directors of The Mother Church."

"The enclosed draft for $250, on behalf of the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, is remitted as a token of deep gratitude for many benefits received by those interested in Christian Science in Egypt and the Sudan. Although the sum collected is not large, it represents contributions from towns and villages, from fertile valleys and desert places, from outlying oases and the distant Sudan. It is comprised of many donations, ranging from 2s 6d upward, and has been subscribed to by officers and soldiers, as well as by residents. It is a great privilege that we have been permitted to join with others in contributing to the fund, and in this way to assist in furthering the cause we all have so deeply at heart."

"I have been instructed by the members of our little community here to forward you the enclosed draft for $115, as a contribution to the Real Estate fund, announcement of which was made in the Sentinel of Dec. 2. Although those interested in Christian Science in Egypt and the Sudan have not as yet found an opportunity to organize a church or society, since May last services have been regularly held in private houses, and the above sum represents approximately the balance in hand of a fund derived from collections and donations, after paying for expenses connected with the meetings and the distribution of Christian Science literature to troops in the near East. It had been our intention to treat the sum thus collected as a means of arranging for a public room, when this should become necessary in the course of the development of the movement in Egypt. As this opportunity of making immediate use of it has, however, been presented, we gladly offer it in grateful recognition of many benefits received by us as a result of a growing understanding of the Science of being."

"Teachers and pupils of the Christian Science Sunday school in Zurich are very grateful for the opportunity to prove their appreciation of the joy and help the teachings our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, are giving to them, in sending you the collection made for this purpose, to be used for the Christian Science Benevolent Association. It is a small mite ($20), but given with joy and the loving desire to cooperate, for we feel that though oceans, countries, and language seem to separate us, we Christian Scientists never needed so to be and never were united more closely in purpose and aim."

"At the annual meeting of First Church of Christ, Scientist, Halifax, Nova Scotia, it was unanimously resolved that a fund be opened for the purpose of contributing to the Benevolent Association fund of The Mother Church. In forwarding you our first instalment of $50 toward this fund, we wish to express our appreciation of the privilege that is afforded the field of cooperating in this work, gratefully acknowledging our indebtedness to Christian Science and with renewed loyalty to the Directors of The Mother Church."

"This additional contribution of $1001 is sent from the treasury of First Church of Christ, Scientist, Detroit, Mich., $500.50 to be applied to the Benevolent Association fund and $500.50 to the Real Estate fund. Our hearts are filled with gratitude for the unfoldment in thought and the externalized expression of our church edifice, and we want you to feel that we are standing with you in your larger work."

"Enclosed please find check for $125 from the Christian Science Society of Lima, Peru, and please use it for the Christian Science Benevolent Association. It is not a big sum, but it represents any amount of good wishes and godspeed to the new departure for the good of our cause. It is very gratifying to read how magnificently the churches are responding to the call."

"Second Church of Christ, Scientist, Minneapolis, Minn., takes pleasure in enclosing herewith check for $5000, to apply on our pledge to The Mother Church of $25,000 for the Christian Science Benevolent Association and the Real Estate funds. We are sending this with the joy that is always ours when we are privileged to share with The Mother Church in carrying out any of the plans and purposes of our revered Leader."

"It is my pleasure to advise you that First Church of Christ, Scientist, San Antonio, Texas, pledges $2000 to the Benevolent Association fund, to be applied by the Board of Directors either to the sanitarium or for the purchase of real estate, as they see fit, the money to be forwarded as obtained. I am enclosing herewith check for $250 as the first instalment. We are immeasurably grateful for the privilege accorded the field to help in this grand work, and it is our intention after completion of payment for our new church edifice, which we hope to consummate shortly, to express our gratitude by substantially increasing our pledge."

"Enclosed I am sending you, in behalf of First Church of Christ, Scientist, The Hague, Holland, a check for $149.70 for the Christian Science Benevolent Association. We are so happy we are able to add our mite toward furthering your plans. It is but a little sum, but given in great love. You will excuse our sending it rather late. We were advised not to send it before, owing to circumstances."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND.—During the year 1916 there were distributed by the literature distribution committee a total of 11,448 pieces of literature: 7380 Monitors, 2473 pamphlets in French, English, German, and Russian, and the rest miscellaneous. The distribution was made among hotels, pensions, banks, tourist agencies, consulates, association des commis, clubs, postmen's clubs, reading rooms, Academy of Sports, university libraries, leading cafés and restaurants; salons of hairdressers, tailors, dressmakers; American Express Company, women's restaurants, governess agencies, students' clubs, registry offices, and Kursaal; interned officers' and soldiers' pensions, Swiss Soldiers' Ambulance Corps, and interned civilians and civilians in outlying lands, camps of prisoners in Germany, Austria, and Turkey. The interest in Christian Science literature is growing, and the Monitor is well read and appreciated. It must be taken into consideration that the literature is not in the language of the land. The lending library is well visited. Since being started two years ago it has received gifts of books from the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy, and a new request for more copies of the German edition of Science and Health has been forwarded.

SANTA PAULA, CAL.—The church edifice of the Christian Science Society was dedicated Sunday afternoon [April 15] at three o'clock. The cost of the property was a little over three thousand dollars. The seating capacity is eighty. The first meetings of Christian Scientists in Santa Paula were held at a private residence on North Mill Street from May to July, 1911. From July to September, 1911, meetings were held in the Universalist Church, mostly on Sunday evenings. Then the I. O. O. F. Hall was rented for services. On July 2, 1912, the Christian Science Society was organized with a membership of twenty-two, and on May 21, 1916, the society was reorganized as a corporation under the state laws. The first meeting in the new church was held Sept. 13, 1914.—Santa Paula Chronicle.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.—A permit has been issued for First Church of Christ, Scientist, to excavate on its present site for the new edifice to be erected soon. Plans were filed some time ago for the alteration and enlargement of the building on Locust Avenue. It is proposed to move the present building back, raise it about ten feet, and put a new brick building in front of and under it. The excavation for which the permit is issued is to measure 50 by 143 feet.

New Rochelle Standard.

LITTLETON, N. H.—The Christian Science Society is making plans for the erection of a new church building in the near future, and to that end has bought a lot on Pleasant Street, adjacent to the Ranlett property. The lot has a frontage of about 90 feet and a depth of 241 feet. The building will probably be put up some time within the coming year.—The Courier.

The Lectures

DES MOINES, IOWA (First Church).—Dr. Francis J. Fluno, lecturer; introduced by J. Latimer Davis, who said in part:—

The one individual in whom the perfect concept of God was manifested was the Nazarene, Jesus the Christ. So thoroughly did he understand God that he overcame for himself and others every discord which presented itself, even to the overcoming of "the last enemy," death. And knowing what was in man, he said with unhesitating confidence, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." The fulfilment of this prophetic word of the Master was witnessed in the lives of his apostles and of the early Christians for some three hundred years after Jesus withdrew himself from the earth, and the sick were healed and the dead raised to life. But thereafter the clear vision seemed again to become obscured, and mankind drifted back into the former bondage to the discords of human experience.

There arose another individual, however, in our own time, in whom the seeing eye and the hearing ear were so clearly manifested that she was suddenly raised from a bed of suffering and pain, where she had been laid as the result of an accident considered by those in attendance to be hopeless of cure if not fatal in its effect. That individual was Mrs. Eddy. With a desire to give to the world the benefit of her discovery, she spent years of tireless effort in further study and in proving out the Science of her discovery. The results of her demonstrations are given in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," a volume prized today by unnumbered thousands for the healing and freedom which the practical application of its teaching brings to them.

Des Moines Capital.

LONDON, ENGLAND (Second Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Harry B. Silver, who said in part:—

Christian Science is reiterating the Master's compassionate statement, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." There are few who do not need comforting in some way or other, and when in their hour of trial men and women turn to Christian Science, as numbers are doing, with an honest desire to understand its teachings, they quickly realize how the promise of Jesus to send another Comforter is being fulfilled today.

JANESVILLE, WIS. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Leo H. Atwood, who said in part:—

Jesus came to teach the world about God, and the Christian religions of today are based upon the record of his ministry as found in the books of the New Testament. Is it strange, then, that if Christ Jesus was the true Wayshower, the record of his life work should be taken for what it is? The gospels are overflowing with works of healing, and there is rarely a chapter that does not tell of some instantaneous healing of disease or death. When John the Baptist sent his disciples to Jesus to inquire if he were the Christ, or if they should look for another, he answered: "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." Does it seem reasonable that the major part of Jesus' life work should be ignored and ruled out of his church? Mrs. Eddy was not content to accept the general interpretation of the Bible, and as a result of many years of inspired study has left to the world the Science of Christianity, Christian Science.

SACRAMENTO, CAL. (Second Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Jennie S. Clifton, who said in part:—

The constant cry of mankind throughout all time has been for health, happiness, peace, and progress. Christian Science, discovered and founded by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, is proving to the world that perfect health, genuine happiness, permanent peace, true progress, are to be found only through the spiritual understanding of God; and those today who have obtained this spiritual understanding, even in a small degree, are testifying of being healed mentally, physically, and morally.—Sacramento Union.

Testimonies of Healing

When Christian Science found me I was in the depths of despondency through sorrow and lack caused by long illnesses of myself and other members of my family. I had been ill for several years, and had spent a lot of money on doctors and medicine without getting any help. The church in which I was brought up taught what is called the doctrine of "free salvation," but I was also taught that you had to bear sickness and pain as best you might, since it was God's will that you should have them. When these troubles came, I found that my religion was of no practical value to me; consequently I grew despondent and gradually came to have only one desire, which was that I might pass on to the next world, where (as I then thought) I would get rid of all my troubles.

It was just then that Christian Science came to me, and I found that the doctrine of free salvation could be applied to sickness and all kinds of discords; that the same remedy which healed sin also healed sickness. At first I did not believe this, and said it was too good to be true. I went, however, to a Wednesday evening meeting, and was astonished beyond measure at what I heard there. The speakers seemed to me to speak in a new tongue, and because they evidently understood what they were talking about, I was forced to believe that there must be some truth in what they said. I therefore asked for Christian Science treatment, and soon found myself so much better in health, so much happier and nearer God, that I knew I had found the truth; but it took me some time to assimilate it.

I studied and prayed earnestly, yet could not demonstrate this truth for myself as I wanted to do. Then I stopped striving and prayed to be shown the error which was keeping me from demonstrating the healing power, and my prayer was answered, as every earnest prayer is. I was shown very clearly that nothing could get into a mind already full (see Science and Health, p. 201), and that in mortal belief I was so full of self-knowledge, self-will, and pride, that there was no room for the truth. Then I saw that if I really wanted to know the truth I would have to get rid of these errors; and though it was far from easy to pull up by the roots beliefs which were of life-long growth, after I had gone through this purifying process I found myself much better able to understand Christian Science.

Shortly after this experience I awoke early one morning with a severe bilious headache. I had been troubled with these headaches all my life; they were supposed to be hereditary and usually lasted about three days. This time there came to me the assurance that sickness is unreal, and in about an hour I was able to get up and read Science and Health. In a few hours more I was able to take food and go out, completely healed. It seemed to me such a wonderful and beautiful thing to be able to demonstrate Truth's healing power for myself.

I feel so thankful that through the life and teachings of a spiritually-minded woman the veil has been lifted from our eyes, and that every one who is willing to work for it may demonstrate this truth. I have been healed of many other ailments, including neurasthenia, and have been freed from a tendency to take cold easily which resulted in attacks of illness every winter. A pain in my side which for three years had made walking a misery, has been overcome; also a belief of lack and sorrow.

As all Christian Scientists know, however, the most wonderful things that Christian Science does for us and the things for which we are most profoundly grateful, are those connected with our inner life,—experiences of burdens lifted and benefits received of which we can talk very little in private and not at all in public. For all the blessings gained through the knowledge of the all-power and infinite love of God as taught in Christian Science, I would give to God all the glory and to Mrs. Eddy the credit and gratitude which are her due.—Eleanor B. Paterson, Edinburgh, Scotland.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I acknowledge God's goodness to me, for when divine Truth lifted the dark clouds that had been hanging over me for years, all became as bright and beautiful as if a new world had been revealed. Sorrow was changed to gladness, and then as never before I understood God's love and power.

To mortal sense I had been a great sufferer for over fifteen years, and a complication of diseases was fast dragging me down. As the years passed by I continued to grow worse; then the crisis came. I was confined to my bed, and for weeks was kept under the influence of an opiate. The doctors decided that only an operation would save my life, but after it was performed the pain continued to increase. After two weeks more of this terrible suffering I was operated on again, this time for fistula; but when I recovered sufficiently to leave my bed, the old troubles for which I was operated on first soon returned. Later, I submitted to another operation; then the doctors told me I could never be cured of bowel disorder as the case was of too long duration, and stomach trouble was getting more severe every day, so that I ate only the lightest of food. After my return from the hospital I was again confined to my bed for months.

Here is where Christian Science found me. When the medical profession had nothing more to offer and the last spark of hope was dead, I heard the trumpet call of Truth and saw the walls of error fade into nothingness, for Love's brightness illumined the darkness. My heart overflows with thankfulness to God for having sent to us this understanding of the healing truth through our dear Leader. To Mrs. Eddy we owe an endless debt of gratitude for her devotion and faithfulness in this her labor of love. The dear people who came to our home bringing the glad tidings of great joy were strangers to me, but they knew God, and freely as they had received did they give of their understanding of this healing truth. They told me that God did not create sickness and did not afflict His children, and that if I would ask, believing, I would be healed. They gave me the address of a practitioner and I wrote to her asking for treatment.

When the answer to my letter came telling me to stop taking medicine and put my trust in God, I did so. The medicine was thrown out, all applications were given up, and those beautiful words "Put your trust in God" never left me night or day. As a result, His ever-presence in which I was trusting delivered me from bondage to the belief in sickness and sorrow. My healing came soon, and the spiritual awakening was the sweetest experience of my life.

Arminda M. Conrad, Hastings, Neb.

During the month of June, 1910, an abscess formed on the ball of my right eye. I delayed several days before seeing a physician, until the pain became intense, then called on a specialist, who stated that only an operation within twenty-four hours could save the eye, as I had delayed so long; also that I would have to remain away from business thirty days. My wife, however, asked me to try Christian Science, and I said I would try anything, as I was in such terrible pain and must have relief very soon. A practitioner was called and remained with me about an hour. Within five minutes after going to bed I fell asleep, and awoke in the morning free from pain. My wife could hardly believe me when I told her there was no pain whatever. There has been no return of the trouble since, now over six years.

For several years prior to this healing I had not attended any church, and looking upon this blessing merely as a piece of good fortune, I continued the same life as before, without taking any interest in Christian Science. In November, 1913, while visiting in San Diego, Cal., I had an attack of what is called hay-fever, together with asthma. As I had been subject to the latter condition, and my father and an elder brother had been sufferers from it for many years, I was very uneasy, being convinced that doctors knew no cure for it. In my distress I made an appointment with a Christian Science practitioner, and on entering her office that evening told her that while I wanted relief from these ailments, they were in fact the least of my troubles. I had been using whisky excessively for some years, although never being what is commonly called drunk. Again and again I had resolved to break loose from this habit, but every morning found me craving for the stimulant. I told the practitioner how I had sold out my business at a sacrifice, with the hope that when I was removed from certain influences I might be able to overcome or forget the desire, but to no avail, as it haunted me in every waking hour.

I was in the Scientist's office for about an hour, and hope never to forget the feeling which possessed me when I was alone on the street in the cool night air. My head seemed cool, my thoughts more clear and at ease, my footsteps lighter and quicker; I was happier than ever before in my life, and knew beyond peradventure that I was a free man. It gives me more pleasure than I am able to state in words that from that day to this, over three years, I have been entirely free from the desire for liquor. Daily I try to be thankful to God for this healing, and I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her devotion to mankind. My gratitude also goes out to many other Christian Scientists for the loving and encouraging thoughts expressed to me since I took up the study of Christian Science.

C. H. Strother, New York, N. Y.

With a heart full of gratitude to God I gladly testify to the benefits received through the study of Christian Science. From infancy I suffered from serious throat trouble and was under the doctor's care continually. At the age of nineteen the crisis came, and medicine failed entirely. Then Christian Science was recommended to me, and a friend called a practitioner, who gave me a treatment. In half an hour I was perfectly healed. Many years have passed and there has been no return of the trouble.

I have also been healed of headaches said to be inherited, of seasickness, and of many internal troubles. Fear in its most violent forms has been overcome, and I am indeed grateful to have found a God who is Love, ever present, omnipotent, and supreme. Some of the discordant conditions have been slow to yield to the touch of Truth, but this has enabled me to learn more of true religion, and of my relationship to God and mankind. For over seventeen years now Christian Science has been our only remedy. In a family of four children it has met quickly all needs. The physical healing has indeed been wonderful, but it is a small part of what Christian Science really means to me.

The peace, contentment, and joy which this blessed truth gives, fills me with thankfulness to God for the truth revealed by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. I am grateful to all who have helped me gain a better understanding of God, also for all our periodicals, which are as beacon-lights in times of distress. For all these and many other evidences of God's goodness I am truly grateful.

I am pleased to state that after fifteen years there has been no return in any way of conditions healed through this blessed truth. Christian Science, understandingly applied, has met all our needs; in fact it is the only remedy we ever think of in our home.

Mary K. Totten, Medicine Hat, Alta., Canada.

In gratitude for blessings that have come to us through Christian Science I wish to add my testimony to the many others given in our periodicals. Last winter our daughter, eight years old, had an attack of cold and influenza. Christian Science treatment was given her, and she was getting along nicely, indeed was just about well, when about four o'clock one morning she awoke with her nose bleeding so freely that it seemed necessary to call for help. She was much better in a few minutes, but the trouble seemed to keep coming back every little while. She was treated for this several times during the day, and we kept on reading and working in Science, and by seven o'clock that night she was healed. There were no bad after effects from the loss of so much blood, and the child was able to attend school as usual the next week. This was a proof to us that God is our life.

I was healed of a badly injured ankle in one treatment, and our ten year old son has been healed of croup and colds. Christian Science has been a great help to us in every way, and I am thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us this truth which makes us free.

Mrs. Thomas Emerson, Kewanee, Ill.

With the countless numbers who are today acknowledging the wonderful blessings that have come to them through the study and application of Christian Science, I too feel deeply grateful that my feet were directed into the straight and narrow path, for all that I am I owe to this teaching. My desire is daily so to live as to receive more of the spiritual unfoldment.

We read in St. John that Jesus said to Martha on one occasion, "Said I not unto thee, that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" Surely I too have seen the glory of God, for we have had a number of beautiful demonstrations in our home. I am grateful for the loving help which we received during a time of sorrow, and also for the manifestation of the sustaining strength and power of God, good, at the birth of our baby boy, which was practically without pain. I sat up the next morning, and the third morning walked to the dining room, remaining up most all day. The following morning I dressed the baby and began to take regular care of him, and the eighth day resumed charge of my household duties.

For all these proofs of God's loving care I am deeply grateful; also thankful to those who have helped me in many ways along this journey from sense to Soul.

Mrs. V. L. Martin, Porterville, Cal.

[Translated from the German]

It is with a heart full of gratitude that I wish to testify to the great help and the blessings which have come to me through Christian Science. Eight years ago I had to give up my work on account of severe pain in the back. I was taken to a local hospital, where an X-ray examination was made and the case stated to be dislocation and softening of the spine. Various means of relief were tried at the hospital and the physicians did their best to help me. I was put into a mechanical contrivance and remained in this helpless condition for four years. My limbs then became stiff.

At that time some one called my attention to Christian Science, and the reading of the Herold and other writings bearing on the subject brought me courage and the hope that I too might experience help thereby. It soon became possible for me to be stretched out without the use of the contrivance, and later I moved to a private home. As the recognition of the truth slowly dawned upon me, many errors came to the surface, such as a severe purulent inflammation of the throat, swollen feet, and other troubles. After I left the hospital I was more free to devote myself to the study of Christian Science, and my condition improved slowly. I got up and tried to walk on crutches, and for this progress I felt very grateful indeed. One day I had a caller who made me feel still more encouraged, and when she left I felt the desire to accompany her a distance. I was not a little surprised upon finding that I was able to walk quite a distance, just with the help of a stick. From then on I used only the stick and took a walk almost daily. Things kept improving, and now I can easily walk two hours.

About a year ago I became able to take up my work again, with the assurance that He who began the work in me would also complete it. I had lain stretched out for six years and a half, and my disease was declared to be incurable by several physicians, but Truth is powerful and can overcome all error. When on one occasion the inflammation of the throat manifested itself again it was made to yield much more quickly; that is, with one treatment. Divine Love heals all my diseases and bestows upon me His grace and loving-kindness. Since becoming acquainted with Christian Science I see everything in a different light and am a much happier man. I thank God for His wondrous love, and am grateful for Mrs. Eddy, who has shown us the way out of disease to health, out of lack to fulness.

Ernst Stähli, Waldau near Bern, Switzerland.

With gratitude for having been able to realize God's omnipotence in regard to a painless childbirth, I feel I must give my testimony. One morning in April, 1916, I awoke with the "scientific statement of being" (Science and Health, p. 468) in my thoughts. My husband called in a neighbor while he himself went for a Science practitioner. He had a mile and a half to go to town, so I realized God's omnipresence as well as I could in the mean time, and experienced no discordant feeling. In an hour my husband and the practitioner arrived, and very soon the baby was born, a fine big boy. A little later I ate a good breakfast and then got up. I was outdoors on the third day, and the day following ate dinner at a friend's house. Previous to the birth of the child I had no discordant days.

I had studied this glorious truth a year and eight months before this demonstration of the power of Truth. Words are feeble to express my thankfulness to God for sending such a noble, spiritual woman to reveal again the truth, and that beautiful hymn "Make channels for the streams of love" (Hymnal, p. 89) has shown me a way of expressing true gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and the divine Principle of all.—Mary B. McLeod, Hillyard, Wash.

In 1901, when I had been making two years' college work fit into one year, Christian Science was brought to my attention through the help it gave my mother, who had been an invalid for several years. During the examinations for graduation I applied to a practitioner for help, and was graduated from college with a satisfactory record. Christian Science has solved every problem that has come into my experience, and I would not like to think of what my life would be without it.

I am very grateful for the clear, loyal teaching which came during class instruction, and for the blessing of teaching in the Sunday school. Before coming into Science I knew little about the Bible. Now it is my privilege to study the Bible Lessons more thoroughly, and I praise God for giving to this age our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, whose wonderful work for humanity has indeed unlocked the Scriptures.

Josephine Pinkham, New York, N. Y.

Over eighteen years ago I first heard of Christian Science. I had come to Detroit with the determination to lead a better life and get away from old comrades. At that time I was a wreck, physically and financially. For years I had suffered from stomach trouble, for which almost everything had been tried, but I was no better, on the contrary was worse.

I was then led to go where I heard of this Christ-teaching. It is needless to say I was hungry and that I was fed. I went to work for a Christian Scientist, and he told me of his healing in Christian Science, and said I could be cured also. I was given Science and Health to read, and in three months had gained considerably in weight and was much better physically. I had not taken treatment from a practitioner, but all my spare time in working hours and evenings was devoted to the reading of Science and Health.

Last year I had great reason for gratitude when I paid a visit to the city I left so many years ago in such a miserable condition. As I went around calling on different people I had known, it was difficult for them to believe their eyes when they saw me looking so well. I also had the pleasure of visiting The Mother Church, as well as the Publishing House, and it has been an inspiration to me to work harder to overcome all discord and to live more of this truth.

I am grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for all our literature, and to the dear ones who first told me of this Christ-teaching; also that I am able to impart to others in some measure words of courage and hope. I am more grateful for the spiritual healing than for anything else, and hope to continue to grow more like the perfect man, created in the image of God our Father.

William H. Hunter, Detroit, Mich.

I was indeed a weary pilgrim, wandering hungry and athirst in the desert, when a messenger of this Christ-teaching presented Christian Science to me. I had no home, no father and no mother, and knew nothing about God as an ever present help; but I had studied our text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, only a very short time when I learned I had a Father-Mother God and a home in divine Mind.

The first Wednesday evening meeting I attended was in Kansas City, Mo., some ten years ago, in an auditorium in which there were more than a thousand people. I knew but one person in that great audience with whom I might speak, but before leaving the church that evening I had met many men and women, each one with a loving, helpful thought for me. Surely they had left the ninety and nine and gone out into the wilderness to find the lost one; and having found that one, reflected the light and warmth of divine Love.

The next morning I went to see a practitioner. I was such an unhappy mortal, as I seemed to be under a load of heartaches. When the practitioner had listened to me a few moments she said, "I will speak to you in the language of our Master, 'Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.'" I am glad to testify to the wonderful transformation that has taken place in my life through the healing and saving truth as taught in Science and Health. My heart goes out in unbounded thankfulness to God for sending me to this practitioner, who was instrumental in planting my feet upon the solid rock of Truth and starting me on the journey from sense to Soul. To those who are hungering and thirsting for spiritual food, and who have exhausted their faith in material conceptions as to God and man, I want to say from my own experience that there never was a place so dark but that into it the light has shone with its peace and joy, and as I try to stand in it day by day, it removes the shadows of physical and mental discord with glimpses of infinite Love and harmony.

The incense of purest love and gratitude is rising all over our land, and on foreign shores, to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her wonderful life work as the author of Science and Health, as the expounder of the changeless creed of redemption from the letter that killeth to the spirit that giveth life, as the interpreter of the mysteries of existence, as the discoverer of exalted conceptions of God and His creation, as the gentle and wise follower of the meek and lowly Nazarene.

CLARA OWEN NELSON, Chicago, Ill.

I have long wished to express my heartfelt gratitude for the loving protection, peace, and joy that Christian Science has given me and is affording me here in France. It has proved in many practical ways that God is our guide and protector, and has enabled me to enjoy a sense of that "peace of God, which passeth all understanding." The understanding of Christian Science makes the ninety-first psalm a real protective power, and I feel the true meaning of those beautiful words: "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee," and their correlative interpretation in Science and Health (p. 494), "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need." This consciousness of the divine presence has proved a very practical help to me while under heavy shell fire, and although many fragments have fallen all around me, I have never been touched.

My thankfulness to God, also my gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving us this glorious truth, is unspeakable, because I realize quite well I could never have gone through the strain of these last twelve months without its help. I am earnestly looking forward to the day when I shall be able to give my verbal testimony concerning the above glorious experience.

It is a happy privilege to acknowledge the many blessings received through Christian Science. Since childhood I had suffered from a serious throat trouble, and as I grew older one lung was said to be affected. With the loving help of a Christian Science practitioner these conditions have been entirely overcome. I have also been healed of bowel disorder and nervousness. In a case of childbirth every discordant material law was annulled.

I am very grateful for these experiences of healing, but more especially for the great help which comes from knowing the truth about God and man, as taught in Christian Science. The literature is a great help, as are also the Lesson-Sermons, by the study of which we are able to realize God's loving care and protection every minute of the day.

From Our Exchanges

[Henry E. Jacobs in American Lutheran Survey]

Properly speaking, the law is God's immutable and inflexible rule of right, prescribing what God would have us be, do, and omit to do. As the declaration of God's will, it is an absolute standard, which is never arbitrary or capricious, but is the true and unvarying expression of God's own nature. The ultimate standard of right and wrong, therefore, is nothing less than the moral attributes of God, His holiness, justice, truth, and love. Man reaches moral perfection only when what exists in God infinitely is realized in man with the limitation only of man's finite nature,—I Peter, i. 15, 16. This is what is meant by the "image of God," in which man was created, and for the restoration of which, in its perfection, the agencies of divine grace are active. As sin is to be otherwise and to do otherwise than God wishes us to be or do, so the image of God is restored only when in all respects man has become what God wishes him to be, viz., when he corresponds with the divine ideal.

[The Christian Work]

Christ's ministry was a ministry of healing. He was forever healing the bodies and souls of men. The early church, conceiving itself as the vicar of Christ in the world, and therefore bound to continue his whole work, undertook this task of healing the sick and maimed. . . . How far the church ought to assume the work of healing we are not prepared to say. But it ought, if it is to be Christ's representative, to see that every weak, sickly, suffering child or man has all the healing this world offers put at its disposal. . . . Surely Christ taught that what God appropriated was health and joy and strength. The church is still remiss here and has let narrow sects steal its gospel. But every church should proclaim that prayer mightily helps healing, and every church should forever proclaim those greatest words in the Old Testament: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

[The Archbishop of York in The Guardian]

If the church is to be the witness of Christ as the true center of human fellowship it must itself unfold the spirit of fellowship in its own life. Beyond all question, it was meant by him to be a body exhibiting in the world a sociable and brotherly spirit which would both rebuke and heal the discords and divisions of men. But equally beyond question a church divided and busy with its own controversies will not be heard, and will have no title to be heard if it seeks to proclaim a gospel of fellowship. The fact that the world is ready and waiting for such a gospel lays upon the whole church the paramount duty of making every effort to recover its own unity.

[Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.Litt., in The Christian Commonwealth]

Jesus did not argue for immortality; he unveiled the value of life. By his faithfulness he confirmed the faith of humanity. Religion is the realization of the value of life. And this is especially true of the religion of Jesus, albeit he never used the word religion, so far as we have record, but always the word life instead—as if to say that religion and life are one or neither is of any worth. His gospel is a disclosure of the deepest reality of God through the highest nature of man. In him our humanity found its revealer, its vindicator, its incomparable Teacher and Redeemer.

[Right Rev. C. H. Brent, D.D., in The Church Family Newspaper]

The watchword of the churches must be "Unity." Either churches must justify their claim to be the favored or exclusive residence of God by exhibiting in their works a holiness or a superiority nowhere apparent, or else they must admit the favor of God toward other churches of lesser pretensions. A large part of the public has already served notice on the churches that, unless we observe the elementary principles of peaceableness and fairness and fellowship, they will go on without us. God defend us from the day when the sheep of Christ's flock turn upon the shepherds because of the shepherds' littleness and inability to be true leaders. But I see a vision. I see a great movement, a movement not of man but of God, coming sweeping through this world of ours and gathering into its embrace all true-hearted men. I see a united church,—a church worthy of the residence of Jesus Christ among men,—a church which will bring holiness and power to all the people of God. That is the end of the vision, and that is the supreme thing to which we must commit ourselves today as Christian men.

[William Porcher Du Bose, M.A., S.T.D., in The Constructive Quarterly]

Christ shows us in himself the necessity, the possibility, and the final realization or actuality of the perfect law of liberty or righteousness. He makes it ours, not in fact (that would be bringing it all the way down to ourselves, to our possible present level of achievement or attainment) but in faith; that makes it our infinite and eternal end and aim, our everlasting standard and measure. That is what evermore we should be bringing ourself, our family, our community, our country, our world more and more, nearer and nearer, up to. If the process were really always going on, it could never stop, inasmuch as infinity or eternity could never be reached. Faith, hope, love, are principles of never ending movement, action, progress. There is need for their presence and operation in the one only direction of glory to God, peace on earth, good will in all to all, in every spot of our hearts and of the earth today.

[E. Herman in The Christian]

Vision comes to the prophet who has first "inquired and searched diligently," and it is only as he keeps the things he has seen, and ponders them in his heart, that he can utter his message. No life that has been truly offered to God but has its moments of soaring vision and flashing insight. That these rare and golden moments are followed by so many leaden hours, is due solely to the emptiness and distraction of mind which neither prepares for the vision nor utilizes it when it comes. There is enough of inspiration and dynamic in the humblest life to give it apostolic efficacy.

[The Methodist Times]

In every case there has been preparation for the man and the movement which have taken the church unawares; only the preparation has been so deep and wide and gradual that men have failed to recognize it, till the great result was reached, which revealed the processes out of which it was born. We have our own belief about the near future of religion. The new spiritual movement will, we think, center around the word unity,—the unity of Christians, the unity of life in which the sacred and the secular, the spiritual and the social, shall be combined as never before. We are not, however, concerned with our own expectation, for we, like others, shall be surprised by the magnificence of God. What we are concerned to say is, that "the Lord is a God of judgment [one who has his own counsel, and his own way of giving effect to it]: blessed are all they that wait for him."

The Republic of Costa Rica has an area of 18,400 square miles and a population officially estimated at 411,312. Agriculture is the principal industry, and bananas and coffee are the chief exports. Electricity, derived from water power in the highlands, is widely used for propelling machinery, lighting, and domestic purposes, and there are said to be more kilowatts per capita than in the United States. Two railroads connect San José with the Atlantic port of Limon and the Pacific port of Punta Arenas. The products of Costa Rica are diversified on account of climatic conditions. The soil is generally fertile. The seasons are variable; the Pacific side of the divide has dry weather from December to May and rains the rest of the year, but the Atlantic side has no distinctly wet or dry season.

To meet any possible coal shortage in the West next winter, more extensive use of fuel wood from the national forests is urged by the Government's foresters. The supervisors of the 153 national forests will afford all possible facilities to local residents wishing to obtain cordwood, which settlers may obtain free for their home use, and which is sold at low rates to persons cutting and hauling in order to sell to others. During the last fiscal year more than thirty thousand permits for the free use of national forest timber, mainly in the form of fuel wood, were taken out by local residents. The amount of timber involved approximated two hundred and fifty thousand cords.

The United States secretary of commerce announces the appearance of a publication of the Coast and Geodetic Survey entitled "The Use of Mean Sea Level as the Datum for Elevations." The pamphlet discusses the desirability of having a single plane for the whole country to which all elevations would be referred,—the mean sea level. For a number of years the Coast and Geodetic Survey has been extending a network of elevations of high accuracy inland from the coasts, with the elevations of its monuments all referred to mean sea level. The publication of the present report is to encourage the adoption and use of mean sea level as the datum for elevations by all civil engineers and surveyors.

The Uruguayan Government seeks to encourage tree planting, and the National Nursery at Toledo has supplied trees at a very low cost. In compliance with a recent decree, the nursery will in the future donate large numbers of trees. The decree provides that proprietors possessing up to 100 hectares (247 acres) of land will be supplied gratuitously with 100 trees and that the nursery can distribute 200,000 trees every year in this way. The nursery will also donate in 1917 100,000 and in the following years 200,000 trees to rural municipalities, schools, police farms, and other institutions.

A revenue measure from which substantial returns are expected, introduced in the New Brunswick parliament, proposed to tax the wild or uncultivated lands of the province one and two cents an acre. It is estimated that the extent of this area is not less than 4,000,000 acres, and hitherto owners of wild lands have not been asked to pay anything to the public revenues. As finally passed the bill carried an amendment to meet objections to the provision which required a corporation to pay at the rate of two cents while a partnership paid at the rate of only one cent.

The department of university extension of the Massachusetts State Board of Education is offering class work in French conversation for the soldiers in the armories and encampments in Massachusetts. The opportunity is open equally to the non-residents who will arrive later at the great encampment in Ayer as well as to national guardsmen in their armories or camps and regular army soldiers in their forts. The state will pay the cost of the instruction, except for a charge of one dollar for special lesson papers used for the first course of twenty lessons.

The total area of the Philippines, including in all 3141 islands, islets, and reefs, has been reported by the Manila Observatory to be 119,542 square miles, or 30,961,500 hectares (one hectare equals 2.471 acres). The area under cultivation in the six principal crops and three minor ones in the year ended June 30, 1916, was only 8.5 per cent of the whole area of the islands. Rice was grown on 1,140,829 hectares, abaca Manila hemp on 500,317, corn on 432,766, coconuts on 275,769, sugar cane on 179,761, tobacco on 58,913, and maguey on 30,804.

About 3,700,000 acres in Spain are devoted to the cultivation of olives, and the value of the fruit and oil is estimated at $40,000,000 a year. The olive flourishes in all the Mediterranean provinces and is cultivated more or less extensively throughout the peninsula as well as in the Balearic Islands. Large quantities of olives are raised in the valley of the Guadalquivir and more than half the entire crop is from Andalusia.

The automobile road from Cody, Wyo., into the Yellowstone National Park is now cleared for travel and for the big auto stages, which this year replace in the Yellowstone transportation service the stage coaches formerly used. This scenic highway leads through the Shoshone Cañon and over the Sylvan Pass, and permits en route a view of the great Shoshone irrigation dam built by the United States Reclamation Service.

The banana crop of 1916 from the Port Limon district of Costa Rica numbered 4,753,898 stems. About two thirds of the bananas raised were exported to the United States and one third to the United Kingdom. In addition to this number more than 2,000,000 were shipped from the Sixaola district. The most important new industry of the district and of the entire country is sugar. In 1912, none was exported; in 1916, more than 6,000,000 pounds was exported to the United States.

Chile's state railways produced larger net revenues in the calendar year 1916 than in any other twelvemonth during the history of Government ownership except that of 1915. The total railway mileage in operation Dec. 31, 1916, including all state owned and privately operated lines, was 6014 miles. The privately operated railways in Chile represented an investment of about $92,000,000.

According to a recent return, Canada's timber resources are the third largest in the world. The Dominion has a supply of from 500,000,000,000 to 800,000,000,000 feet, board measure, covering an area approximately of 250,000,000 acres. This estimate only refers to saw timber and does not take into account material suitable for pulp wood, fire wood, and poles.

The Syndicate of Silk Manufacturers at Lyons, France, has created and sent to the silk trade generally a new "shade card," with an explanatory letter. The card is the common work of all the syndicates of the silk federation—dyers, buyers, silk merchants, importers, and pattern makers.

According to the report of the Brazilian minister of finances, the net profits of the Government steamship line, the Lloyd Brazileiro, for the year 1916, were $3,928,119, of which $2,852,860 was derived from the operations of the line, and the balance as a subsidy from the Brazilian Government.

Figures compiled by the Chilean statistical office give the estimated population of the country at the end of 1916 at 3,870,022. The city of Santiago leads with 406,495 inhabitants, followed by Valparaiso with 207,008; Concepcion, 70,817; Antofagasta, 60,297; and Iquique, 46,216.

Present indications are that the sugar crop in Formosa, which is reported by all authorities as the largest in the history of the island and actually in excess of the optimistic estimates made several months ago, will be about four hundred and forty thousand short tons.

It has recently been announced that the value of the herring and mackerel caught by the fishing fleet of the French Channel ports during the season from Nov. 10, 1916, to Jan. 25, 1917, was $947,051.

The total number of vessels entering and clearing at Hongkong during the year 1916 was 642,794 of 36,381,457 tons. Of this shipping, 48,350 vessels of 22,308,311 tons engaged in the foreign trade.

In 1916, an exceptional year for Spanish grape growing, the production was 8,958,150 metric tons. The total area devoted to vineyards was 3,173,404 acres.

The natural resources of the commonwealth of Australia include rich deposits of gold, silver, copper, iron, manganese, tin, lead, zinc, wolfram, opal, and coal.

According to the weekly reports the production of the oil fields in Argentina continues to increase, being now over six thousand tons.

The value of the products of Spanish metallurgical industries in 1915 was more than sixty-six million dollars.

The output of sugar in Java, Malay Archipelago, for the year 1916 amounted to 1,795,751 short tons.

The Word Made Flesh

EZRA W. PALMER

STUDENTS of Christian Science quickly learn the vast difference between spiritual reality and the belief in matter and mortality. To them reality means God and His ideas, the universe of Mind, the domain of pure reason and unerring logic. One begins to see, as he studies Christian Science, that he had previously been dwelling in a world of human hypotheses and unproved hazy assumptions based upon the supposed reality of matter, and that the human mind unaided is totally inadequate to know the genuine universe beyond its ken of vision. Just as a person who had always dwelt in darkness would have no accurate conception of the glory of light or of what it reveals, so the human mind has of itself no knowledge of spiritual reality.

Throughout the ages Christians have rightly given due glory and honor to Christ Jesus for his unparalleled work for humanity in leading men to know and to worship the true God. When this work is rightly understood, as it is through the study of Christian Science, we find that Jesus bridged the vast distance between divine Science and human beliefs, and through his deeds and words proved the things of Spirit in such a clear, definite manner that despite their blind, mortal limitations men could understand the nature of Spirit and thus gain a grasp of divine reality. As men followed this light in the darkness which "comprehended it not," they were enabled to rise to the full consciousness of Life as God, Spirit, and recognize man as His perfect reflection.

The first nineteen verses of the opening chapter of John's gospel show how the transition of human thought from mortal beliefs to a demonstrable knowledge of God was made possible, and it is stated in words that have purified and inspired human thought for hundreds of years. "The Word was with God, and the Word was God," said the beloved disciple. Then came "the true Light," reflected by Jesus the Christ, who by reason of his sinless conception and sonship with God not only knew the nature of God but could present and demonstrate the word of God in a manner that mortals could appreciate and understand. We are told in the twelfth verse of this chapter that to those who received him, "gave he power to become the sons of God;" in other words, they who perceived the Word, the Christ, were likewise led to recognize the eternal fact of divine Science, namely, that man is spiritual, the immortal creation of Spirit and not the offspring of matter or mortal conception.

When this grasp of the fundamental truth of God and His universe is acquired, men are ready for the next step as described by the apostle,—"The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us;" that is, they experience here and now the glorious blessings of the spiritual understanding of God which heals the mortal body of every disease and destroys sin of every nature. They see that man, even while yet in the belief of the flesh, lives in the consciousness of the ever-presence of infinite Spirit, divine Love. Job saw this regeneration to be possible when he declared, "In my flesh shall I see God." John likewise saw this vision of the divine reality of God and His universe as "the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven," which destroys all evil, sorrow, and death, and brings to man the conscious recognition of harmony, the kingdom of God which is "within you."

All Bible students are familiar with the results of the Word made flesh,—how Jesus healed the sick, freed the sinner, and raised the dead; how his disciples, the apostles, did similar works on the basis of the supremacy and ever-presence of God, infinite Mind. Happy would it have been for all future generations if the early Christians had continued loyal to this vision supernal of the Christ-power over the flesh, healing the ills of mortals. But history records the sad fact that they were not—their gaze turned aside from the things of Spirit. "The cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches," began to occupy their thoughts, until at the end of the third century the Word manifest in the flesh was no longer seen and the healing power of God was no longer demonstrated. During long centuries religion was largely a matter of creeds and forms, and history was saddened by cruel persecutions, as men through pride of personal power sought to force their own perverted opinions of God on other religionists of different views.

But the Word made manifest to men through prophet, apostle, and Christ Jesus, could never be wholly lost. The providence of God preserved the Scriptures throughout the centuries that followed. Through study of the Holy Scriptures, and "through divine revelation, reason, and demonstration" (Science and Health, p. 109), Mrs. Eddy was enabled to pierce with the eye of faith this darkness of human belief, and to discern again the metaphysical teachings of Jesus and his apostles which bridged the great gulf between human belief and the divine Science of Mind. As a result the Word was again made flesh, and we who call ourselves Christian Scientists are privileged, as were the early Christians, to behold and demonstrate the glory of the Christ, Truth, healing the sick and the sinning and revealing the divine ever-presence.

Through the wisdom of our Leader many avenues have been opened whereby this healing Word can reach the thought of the world. We have the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's inspired writings; we have our literature for individual inspiration and for distribution; we have our church services, reading rooms, lectures, publication committees, and practitioners, all in orderly coordination; and as a result of all these activities thousands are redeemed from sickness to health, from sin to holiness, from sorrow to happiness. More recently a new avenue for demonstrating the Christ-healing, a new unfoldment of the Word made flesh, has been opened for us, and the field has received with joy this new activity, the Benevolent Association, planned by our Leader and provided for us through the earnest thought and labors of The Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church. The response of Christian Scientists to the call to assist in the work of love in this new field of labor, "white already to harvest," has been hearty and generous, exemplifying the increasing unity of purpose of Christian Scientists to do here and now the will of the Father.

This new avenue for bringing to a sorrowing world true spiritual healing, also brings to Christian Scientists the added assurance that the divine Word made flesh, as manifested to the world through Christian Science, will ultimately reach through every ramification of human thought, vitalizing and regenerating with health, love, protection, infinite tenderness and compassion, every downcast mortal, until the whole human family is redeemed, when the words of Isaiah will be exemplified: "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Gratitude

ELIZABETH DUMBRILLE

THERE is perhaps no virtue so undeveloped in the human race as gratitude; yet we find today an ever awakening impulse on the part of those who are being roused from the apathy of mortal sense and its dreams, to a deeper, more conscientious expression of gratitude to our heavenly Father. This is called forth by the gift to mankind of a plain and practicable understanding of divine law as applied to every ill "that flesh is heir to," through the teaching of Christian Science as revealed to the present age in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

From the Latin gratus, meaning "thankful," comes our beautiful English word gratitude. Its very formation and appearance when written bears with it a sweetness and bigness which causes us to search for it among the beautiful blossoms of the tree of life, to see how much of this precious fruit can be gathered and laid upon the altar of divine Love. Christian Scientists as a people are learning to be grateful. Each day finds the earnest, honest effort expressed in word and deed, bringing with it the peace "which passeth all understanding" and that much looked for rest for the children of God.

In the seventeenth chapter of Luke we read that as Jesus was passing through Samaria and Galilee on his way to Jerusalem, in one of the villages along the way he was met by ten men, all lepers, who had undoubtedly heard of the wonderful works of the Nazarene and in their great extremity had longed for his coming. How they must have watched, vying with each other in their joyful expectation of being freed from their bitter bondage. The text says that they "stood afar off," and cried aloud, "Jesus, Master, have mercy on us." How tenderly and compassionately he listened, and how quickly he responded! The perfect man, the free, pure, glorious idea of the omnipotent One, was all he could behold. Following their instant obedience to his command, "Go show yourselves unto the priests," while yet on the way they were cleansed.

Those of us who have been raised from the couch of pain, who have been healed of disease, sin, failure, and despair, know somewhat of the gladness which must have possessed them, and yet the story goes on to say that only one of the ten recognized the fact that he was healed. In deep gratitude this one fell at the feet of the Master and glorified God. Then Jesus looking about him remarked: "Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine? There are not found that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger." Then Jesus bade the man arise and go his way; his faith had made him whole.

How is the question "Where are the nine?" answered at our Wednesday evening testimony meetings? These meetings were instituted by our revered Leader to afford an opportunity whereby Christian Scientists may publicly and "with a loud voice" acknowledge their cleansing and healing and thus glorify God. There are hungry and thirsty ones who wander into our fold to hear and to be fed, and shall we let them go away wondering "Where are the nine?" The members of a Christian Science church should feel the individual responsibility of supplying the need of the stranger, and each of them should know that neither pride, fear, nor indifference can cause him to withhold that expression of gratitude which will lead the stranger to seek the bread of life.

How often we find ourselves expressing the different types of ingratitude found among the nine! Some who have received the healing and blessing come weekly, monthly, or yearly to this "feast of Love," but are content to let others voice their praise and gratitude. They even feel a sense of satisfaction that the expression has been given, while they themselves settle back comfortably and listen. Others apparently say to themselves: "Oh, well, one of us has gone back and told of his healing, so I need not do so. God will know that I am grateful." Another who has been freed from his burden is too busy showing himself to the priests to remember about his healing, and continues on in the same old way. Still another, listening to the voice of the tempter, says, "I am afraid;" and the golden moments slip by until the bridegroom comes and finds all such without the "oil of gladness," or the sense of gratitude, and the door of opportunity is shut.

As we study this story we find it was the one who "turned back" and "glorified God" to whom Jesus said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole;" so we have reason to believe that in the end the tenth leper was the only one who was completely healed. Let us not, then, be as the nine, but rather like that one whose faith removed the mountains of fear and disease. Let us bring "all the tithes into the storehouse," and let us bring them often, so that we may join with St. Paul in his deep sense of gratitude to God as the bountiful giver of all good and say, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

Proofs of Healing

FERDINAND E. EASTMAN

IF all Christians, no matter what particular denomination they favor, could have some substantial proof of the correctness of their religion and test it by healing the sick as Jesus commanded his followers to do,—let their faith be known by its works,—the doubters would unquestionably be silenced, and a great many of the articles on the future of the Christian church would never be written.

Christian Science is doing these very things for its followers; and while some people may still doubt its efficacy to heal the sick, at the same time there is so much evidence easily available to prove it that it can be truthfully said it is only ignorance which causes any to doubt the ability of Christian Science to heal. Not only does it heal the sick, but even those who say they are not ready to believe this are willing to admit that it creates optimists, that it does away with worry, and that it does not busy itself with other people's religion or affairs,—conditions which ordinary healing methods would be at a loss to remedy or remove.

When first beginning the study of Christian Science, the writer had an experience which seems worth recording. The study was taken up after the healing of a severe eye trouble, when glasses which had been worn for twenty years were laid aside. One of the first to inquire about the missing glasses was an active worker in one of the other churches. Upon being told that Christian Science had done the work, he remarked that he was not only glad to hear of the healing, but also glad to hear of the manner in which it had been accomplished. He added that he had been an active worker in the church for years, but had never experienced any radical change of thought—he had been brought up in the church and always thought as he had been taught. He asked if this could be the case in Christian Science, and was told that it could not, as Christian Science would make a very great change in one's thought.

On the way home that evening this gentleman introduced me to a friend as one who had just had a wonderful experience in Christian Science. Upon hearing this the friend said he thought that Mrs. Eddy had established a very fine idealistic religion, though he doubted its practicability, hastening to add that he did not care to argue about it. At once my friend replied: "No; you could not argue with this man about Christian Science. There would be no argument with him, as he has had the experience—he knows."

This was true; but how often do we realize it, and how seldom would we be told this by a member of some other church! Yet it is but one of the many reasons for the hope that is in us, and one which we should ever stand ready to declare to any who care to hear. How often we repeat the Master's words, "Ye shall know the truth," and then wonder just how "the truth" applies to the condition of our thought at the time, too often expecting to set the time and manner of Truth's appearing, without stopping to consider that there is but one Truth, one God, and that He is the only cause. It is by knowing that divine Truth will heal all discordant conditions, even if we do not set the exact time and manner of such healing ourselves, that we may rejoice "in the proof of healing," as expressed by Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health (p. 569).

Two friends were discussing Christian Science, when one remarked that he thought there were things which some people did not care to give up and which kept them from identifying themselves with this religion. As no other objection to it was offered, it may be safely concluded that this statement was partially, if not wholly, true. It is a very common occurrence to hear or read of those who have been freed from bad habits of all kinds by Christian Science, and assuming that such habits might come under the head of things to "give up," it may be of some use to those holding this opinion to know that such habits do not, strictly speaking, have to be given up in Christian Science, but that they take care of themselves as the students progress in the study and application of its teachings.

That Christian Science will destroy bad habits of all kinds is generally known to be true, and the testimonies to this effect are heard so often as to be taken almost as a matter of course; but quite often they are heard by those who think that they are deriving pleasure from the use of liquor, tobacco, or whatever the indulgence may be, and that the giving up of these things would deprive them of that much pleasure, even though they might not doubt the efficacy of Christian Science to overcome the habits. To such the healing truth might not be welcome, especially if applied to their pet habits; but here it should be made plain that while Christian Science takes away the desire for these things, it always leaves something which is much better in its stead, so that no real pleasure is lost, but something is gained, together with the knowledge that the so-called pleasure was in reality no pleasure at all.

It was some time after taking up the study of Christian Science before the writer was rid of the habit of smoking. Other things appeared easier or more necessary to dispense with; in fact this particular indulgence hardly seemed of enough importance to call for any effort to do without it. Even after concluding that there was no good in the habit, it still seemed to be something which would be missed if done away with; but that this was a mistake had to be learned by experience. There came a time when there was no desire for tobacco, and then it was learned that the habit had not only been destroyed, but without the struggle which had been so much dreaded and without missing the so-called pleasure. There was no desire for tobacco left; therefore no pleasure had been taken away, but there was a sense of great relief at the freedom experienced. In other words, the healing leaves one just where he was in this respect before the false appetites were formed, with the exception that he has had the spiritual experience from which he gained such an understanding of Truth that he does not care to form such habits again.

Divine Protection

ELSIE R. SARGEANT

When my son was about five years old we were living in one of the suburbs of New York City, and he spent most of his time out in the fields about the house, running around in barefoot sandals. Many times in those five years he had run through patches of so-called poison ivy with no fear, and consequently with no bad results. One day, however, while I was busy about the house, he came to me very much disturbed because a little friend with whom he had gone off to gather wild cherries had told him that he must go right home, as he had walked through some poison ivy and would be poisoned. I reminded him of the many times he had done that same thing, and that he had never suffered from it, and told him to run on and play and forget all his fears.

It was not long before he was back again, in tears, telling me that his friend had said, "You must be poisoned, because you walked right in the poison ivy; and you simply have to be." By this time the child was manifesting all the signs of a severe case of poisoning, and it seemed right to deny, then and there, this law which mortal thought was holding over him so strongly, and the fear which it had developed. I therefore stopped my work, and we sat down together to reason about it from the standpoint of Christian Science.

The little fellow was very fond of the wild things of the fields, and at home of the domestic animals, which he loved very much, especially a cat with her family of kittens. We talked about all these things, how they wandered about in the fields and grass, and did not stop when they came to the ivy, but went right through it without fear, and that he knew they were never poisoned. We talked about the ants and caterpillars and grasshoppers, and all the other wild things in which he was interested, and found that none of them were afraid,—that God protects all His creatures and does not put things in the fields to harm them. Before we had gone this far all the tears were dried, and the attempts to scratch the irritated parts were over. We both saw plainly that God would no more poison a little boy than He would a little kitten, and the child was ready to go out to play without ever again suffering an instant from poison, and with absolutely no sign of it on his legs, which but a few moments before had been quite swollen and inflamed.

This was a very helpful experience to me, and I feel that I would like to share it with others, for it was such a plain example of how mortal laws can be forced upon us, if we are not awake and alert enough to protect our thought against their intruding fears. In the eight years since that experience we have often used it as a reminder that we do not have to sit back and calmly submit to man-made laws, and it has helped to smooth out many a rough place.

In Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "There is but one primal cause. Therefore there can be no effect from any other cause, and there can be no reality in aught which does not proceed from this great and only cause" (p. 207). The above is just one little example of this great truth which our revered Leader has given us through her life work, and for which I here express my gratitude.

Heavenly Joy

CHARLES H. RING

To many the statement made by St. Paul in his second letter to the Corinthians, "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake," is "an hard saying." Any attempt to understand and emulate this attitude of St. Paul from the basis of belief in the reality of both good and evil, both Spirit and matter, must prove abortive, and may lead to hypocrisy and self-seeking martyrdom. No matter how earnestly one may believe such experiences to be God sent, and therefore for the best; no matter how fervently he may pray, "Not my will, but thine, be done," he will find it difficult to say honestly that he takes pleasure in them.

Jesus warned his disciples that in the world they would have tribulation, and Mrs. Eddy states that "Jesus spares us not one individual experience, if we follow his commands faithfully" (Science and Health, p. 26). Inasmuch as the trials enumerated above unquestionably face us in the world, it is plain that whatever will enable one truly to "take pleasure" in them, as did St. Paul, is a priceless boon. That the teachings of Christian Science, understood and demonstrated, enable one to do this, has been abundantly proven in the life of our revered Leader, and may be proven by her every faithful follower.

The teaching of Christian Science that God is infinite Spirit, Mind, and man His infinite idea, discloses the falsity of every claim of matter and evil to existence and power. The student of Christian Science learns that the divine demand, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," implies that the consciousness which is man must be and is as free from evil and material belief as the consciousness which is God. In illustrating this likeness of man to God, Mrs. Eddy says: "Now compare man before the mirror to his divine Principle, God. Call the mirror divine Science, and call man the reflection. Then note how true, according to Christian Science, is the reflection to its original. As the reflection of yourself appears in the mirror, so you, being spiritual, are the reflection of God" (Science and Health, p. 515).

As the perfect bliss of this true relationship begins to dawn upon the student, and as he learns that the arguments of matter and evil presented to his consciousness as barriers to this bliss are essentially false, he joyfully goes about their overcoming. It is the realization of the necessity for this overcoming, of the nature of what is to be overcome, and of the present reward in overcoming, which enables the student of Christian Science to "take pleasure in infirmities," especially as he realizes that his efforts in this direction bring blessings not only to himself but to others.

Going back to the illustration of the mirror, it is plain that any attempt to erase the image would be futile. Obviously the only effect of such an attempt would be to polish the mirror and so bring out the reflection more clearly. So it is in the progress of a Christian Scientist in his demonstration of spiritual consciousness. Man's real identity as the spiritual idea of God must forever remain intact, and every effort of supposititious evil to eliminate this idea from consciousness only impels the idea to rise higher in demonstration. No matter in what guise evil presents itself, it is always reducible to the one lie, and as such is demonstrably false.

The Christian Scientist will then, when confronted by evil's arguments, confidently, rejoicingly, and gratefully deny the reality and power of evil on the basis of God's allness. Through each such experience he will reach a larger realization of the infinity of good, the omnipotence of Truth, the immortality of Life, the omniscience of Mind, the inexhaustibleness of substance, the omniaction of Principle, the omnipresence of Love.

Could there be aught but blessing, then, in any such experience, and may it not always be met honestly and with gratitude? Truly the Christian Scientist today may rejoice as St. Paul rejoiced, and so hopefully continue until he can ultimately say with the Master, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me."

Love Is Supply

EMMA E. HOLEM

That divine Love is the real source of supply, is proved many times every day by honest and willing seekers after Truth. When we look at money, we are apt to think it has power and is our supply, when in reality it has no power and is not our supply. If we fail to realize this, then we make the belief in money our master; but when we know that God and not any human being is the source from which all our needs are met, we see this false master disappearing.

In my own efforts to grasp the truth of being I found it was no easy task to prove God's allness. Many dark hours were spent in reaching out for His loving help, but I always remembered Jesus' words about the man who had put his hand to the plow, and pressed on. At one time I was away from home and without my trunk for nearly three weeks, during which time I realized in a degree the nothingness of material possessions. At different times I was without money for days. My true supply came as good friends (God's ideas) sent to us lectures and helpful letters. Then there was the reading-room, where I could go undisturbed and, with the psalmist, "lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help."

One day I was nearly eleven miles away from home and had only one cent; but I began to rejoice in God, and turning my face toward Jerusalem, as did Daniel, I started home. After walking the entire distance, I realized that I was nearer my Father's house than I ever had been before. In my efforts to find the kingdom within I also saw what the trouble had been with me,—that it was laziness, love of ease, and lack of love for my neighbor. When I became mentally active and began to express love to those about me, I began to reap a harvest of love. I learned that God's supply comes to us in activity, right thinking, joy, peace, dominion, righteousness, love. When we really desire truth above all else, we shall give up everything for it, and it will surely come to us. The suffering we may have to meet in our journey only purifies us and makes us fit for the kingdom where nothing can enter "that defileth . . . or maketh a lie." The understanding and demonstration of Love is ever God's loaf, and we can truly pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."

When we learn to love, we have all needed supply. In "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says, "May God give unto us all that loving sense of gratitude which delights in the opportunity to cancel accounts" (p. 131). We may have to cancel the accounts of hate, love of ease, worldly pleasures, apathy, lethargy, and many other phases of error that keep us from realizing the divine supply, but as through divine Love we are freed from error's myriad forms, we become better laborers in the vineyard. Then can we say with the psalmist, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want."

Subtle Errors

CORINNE C. SANDERSON

RECENTLY two experiences have made plain to me the subtle ways of error. For two years an unpleasant physical condition had been a trial to my daughter. I had assured her that it was not at all necessary; that Science, as Mrs. Eddy says, "removes properly whatever is offensive" (Science and Health, p. 463). I had declared the truth for her both audibly and mentally, but the condition seemed to persist. Not long ago, however, she told me that the demonstration had been made, so I was interested to know how it had been brought about. She then told me that at one time she had seen a certain preparation advertised for that ailment, and had wished she had a bottle of it. A short while before, a sample bottle had been given to her, and as she realized that to use it would be contrary to our understanding of Christian Science practice, she had thrown it away. As a result of this rejection of material means the ailment disappeared.

Another experience, or rather two of them on the same line, came with colds. My eldest son awoke one morning with a croupy cough and a sore throat, and expressed a desire to remain at home from school. After the rest had gone we repeated the Lord's Prayer, our usual remedy, and at noon he went to school free from the ailment. Shortly afterward the next son awoke with the same symptoms, and I told him how quickly we had met the other case (we never mention these things in the family until they are over). We applied the same remedy, but the condition did not change. At the end of a week I questioned him as to the reason, and his answer was, "How can I get over it without any cough drops?" Then he added, "Yesterday Johnny gave me a couple and they did not cure it." "Of course not," I said. "Cough drops are just candy, and they don't cure anything." As I did not have time to stay with him just then, I told him to say "Our Father" through by himself. After a while he came to me and asked, "What does 'the glory' mean?" I told him, "It means that when we are healed we give God the glory,—acknowledge that He healed us, and not say that a cough drop did it." He was healed.

As we have relied upon Science for over twelve years, it had not occurred to me that my children were thinking of material remedies, and it was made very plain why so much good Science work seemingly brings no results. It also explained to me why our demonstration over chapped hands had been so slow. A young lady who lived with us for several years was in the habit of using a cold cream for that trouble, and our girls had associated her remedy with that condition, and this belief had not been handled and destroyed. On page 412 of Science and Health our Leader says: "The power of Christian Science and divine Love is omnipotent. It is indeed adequate to unclasp the hold and to destroy disease, sin, and death."

Selected Articles

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in Philadelphia (Pa.) Press]

The article in a recent issue on Calvin A. Frye, who was for many years secretary to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, was composed in large part of exaggerations and fictions. The viewpoint from which it was written can be made perfectly plain by contrasting Mrs. Eddy's former residence, "Pleasant View," with the description thereof in that article.

The house which Mrs. Eddy occupied on the edge of Concord, N. H., was, in fact, an unpretentious frame dwelling that probably cost less than seven thousand dollars. The grounds were spacious and beautiful, but the house was neither so large nor so costly as several others at Concord, and it could be duplicated in any town in New Hampshire. Yet the article in question depicted it as "one of the great residences of the Granite State," a "stately pile of granite" with a "marble gateway." The fact is that Mrs. Eddy's residence in New Hampshire was extraordinary only by reason of the distinguished person who inhabited it.

What the same article contained about Mr. Frye called for a discount of about the same per cent. The simple and evident facts are that he was a secretary and a servant to Mrs. Eddy just as other men and women were her secretaries and servants. He no more had charge of her affairs than they had. She intrusted him or another with whatever service she needed, according to their abilities and her convenience. She had no use for a mystery and never furnished occasion for hatching one.

Mrs. Eddy was the only Leader of the Christian Science movement, and to this work she gave her undivided attention. Instead of being "practically unable to take more than a passive interest in life," after she removed to Newton, Mass., she was mentally clear and active to the very day, three years later, when she passed from this life. She had said of President McKinley, "Through a momentary mist he beheld the dawn" (Miscellany, p. 290); and it was remarked by those who saw the form she left behind, that the final expression of her features was plainly that of peace and power. It was after she removed to Massachusetts that Mrs. Eddy started and established The Christian Science Monitor.

After Mrs. Eddy passed on, Mr. Frye retired from active duty. The only function or office he had or held in the last six years was that of President of The Mother Church, an honorary position given annually to different members. His election to this office had no other or different significance than had the election to it of a score of other men. In the very nature of things, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science can have no successor.

[Avery Coonley in Ottawa (Ill.) Republican-Times]

In your department called "Health and Happiness," appears a communication which is headed "A Christian Science Sufferer." This title is misleading, for the writer is evidently not a Christian Scientist, as is shown by the fact that she is depending on medical treatment and desires an operation. The fact that her father is a Christian Scientist does not make her one. Neither religion nor faith can be inherited. Therefore to call her a Christian Scientist for the purpose of condemning Christian Science is unfair.

The communication is from a young lady who periodically has great pain, for which she takes morphine. She reports having been treated by various physicians without benefit. They recommend an operation, which she says her father will not permit, and gives as the reason that he is a Christian Scientist. There is no way of locating the persons so as to ascertain the facts, but the reason given (that he is a Christian Scientist) is no reason for such refusal. The young lady is of age, and according to Science teachings should be allowed to make her own decision.

Christian Scientists are taught to give the utmost freedom to every individual to select what treatment he shall have. For instance, on page 443 of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says: "If patients fail to experience the healing power of Christian Science, and think they can be benefited by certain ordinary physical methods of medical treatment, then the Mind-physician should give up such cases, and leave invalids free to resort to whatever other systems they fancy will afford relief."

Not only is there nothing in the tenets of Christian Science to warrant refusal of an operation to any one who wants it, but the young woman's statement furnishes facts to indicate a probability that this was not the father's reason for opposing the operation, as she shows that he did not prevent her from resorting to medical treatment, since she speaks of having "gone to different doctors, who treated me, but it seems to be of no use." Therefore a reasonable assumption is that he had some other reason for opposing the operation,—possibly disastrous experiences with internal surgery. However that may be, Christian Science furnishes no reason for the refusal.

Please note that the indignant denunciations of the physician who edits the department are beside the mark so far as they are directed at Christian Science, because in the first place the father withheld nothing on account of a "tenet" of Christian Science; secondly, the daughter was not denied medical treatment, for she was treated by several doctors; and thirdly, Christian Scientists do not give morphine and doctors do, so if blame attaches to that it must lie where it belongs.

[John L. Rendall in Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Republican]

Our critic states, "Christian Science stands opposed to the Bible." On the contrary, this religious teaching is based absolutely upon the Bible. That it does honor and respect the Bible is attested by the fact that the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy are the only preachers of this denomination. Every Christian Scientist is urged to become an earnest student of the Bible, and the first tenet of the Christian Science faith, as given on page 497 of Science and Health, is as follows: "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life."

Christian Science does not deny a single fundamental teaching of Christianity as Jesus taught it. It does, however, deny the validity and accuracy of the man-made formulations which pass current as articles of Christian faith; but that is quite different. It is this sort of denial, combined with the affirmation of that which is valid and true in the Christian religion, which gives Christian Science its essential value as a practical religious teaching.

Our critic blandly states, "No true Christian Scientist can ever get to heaven." If one is really a "true Christian Scientist," he does not need to "get to heaven." He has already, in some measure, brought heaven to his own consciousness, in conformity with Jesus' statement: "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Some day these so-called evangelists will learn the utter futility of attacks upon Christian Science and the good Christian people who constitute its followers. They will then see that their efforts have been misdirected; that instead of fighting evil they have been antagonizing the greatest factor in the destruction of evil known to humanity today. That many Christian ministers have already seen and acknowledged this is one of the hopeful "signs of the times."

[George R. Lowe in Peterboro (Ontario) Review]

It is important to observe that Christian Science is not a supplanter of Christianity, and that Mrs. Eddy was ever a faithful disciple of Christ Jesus,—in her own words, "a willing disciple at the heavenly gate, waiting for the Mind of Christ" (Science and Health, Pref., p. ix).

It is much to be desired that Christian Science be recognized for what it is,—not a creed, nor merely a denominational name, but the Science of Christianity. If it were not scientific Christianity, the supreme quest of Christendom should be to discover the principle, science, and demonstrable rules utilized by Christ Jesus. Mrs. Eddy, after years of prayerful search and study, discovered this Science by divine revelation, proved it by demonstration of healing, taught it to others, published it, and founded its institutions, and the past half century bears accumulative witness that it is properly named Christian Science.

[Robert S. Ross in Jamestown (N. Y.) Post]

Christ Jesus said that certain signs would follow the efforts of those who understood his teachings. Among these signs he included the healing of the sick by spiritual means. Jesus knew that "faith without works is dead;" therefore he insisted upon demonstration as the only worthy evidence of one's right to be accounted a Christian. It is possible for any sincere student to prove by demonstration that the Christianity of Jesus and the Christianity of Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy are one and the same. Jesus, as a person, is no longer with us, but God, the divine Principle of Jesus' teaching, has never been absent.

If, according to the dictum of an evangelist, Christian Scientists are "deluded" for presuming to depend upon their religion to heal sickness as well as to destroy sin, they are glad to be found in the blessed company of the Founder of Christianity, who healed sickness and overcame sin by the same metaphysical process.

[Lloyd B. Coate in McConnellsville (Ohio) Herald]

If by the deity of Christ our critic means that the man Jesus was God, then Christian Science differs from such a theory, which is contrary to the Master's own statement, for he said he was the "Son of God." If Jesus had been God, it would have been foolish for him to teach us to pray to "our Father which art in heaven." On the other hand, Jesus being the Son of God it was perfectly natural that he should teach us to pray to the only true and living God. In the Scriptural account of the transfiguration, God called Jesus His "beloved Son." Christian Scientists thus honor Jesus the Christ, but they do not deify him, for such a course would be contrary to the Scriptures.

No class of people could or do believe more strongly in the atonement of Christ than do Christian Scientists. They believe that the redeeming power is not in material blood or matter. Jesus said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." When Simon Peter discerned the Christ, Jesus at once informed him that spiritual discernment was not revealed by flesh and blood, but that God had revealed this understanding to him. Mrs. Eddy's views are in accord with this spiritual thought of the Master. She says that Jesus' "true flesh and blood were his Life; and they truly eat his flesh and drink his blood, who partake of that divine Life" (Science and Health, p. 25). This explains how we are to have redemption through Jesus' blood.

[Thorwald Siegfried in The North End News, Seattle, Wash.]

I am sure it will be a service to your readers to point out that the statement made in your columns, that "there are numbers of people who try mind-healing and find no benefit from it," is merely another way of saying that there is wrong mental practice as well as right mental practice. This was perfectly indicated in the experience of Christ Jesus, who was accused of healing by Beelzebub, mortal mind or suggestion, when in truth he healed by the "Spirit of truth" and by the "finger of God."

It should be obvious that no person has ever failed to receive benefit from right mental practice, because this consists in successfully striving to know the truth. It consists in the utmost self-abnegation and prayerful recognition of God's omnipresence. This spiritual activity cannot result in anything but elevated human experience, approaching the complete salvation of humanity.

That there is wrong mental practice abroad is equally evident. Do we not see announcements of so-called business colleges and correspondence courses designed to teach sales people to sell goods by suggestion or hypnotism? Do we not have a host of people who still believe that the practice of Christian Science consists of the exercise of the human will, or the domination of one human mind over another, when in fact that is the very opposite of Christian Science?

Charlatanism is always to be regretted and eschewed wherever found, and the honest seeker for truth is never deceived into believing that anything prompted by wrong motives can take the place of eternal truth; on the contrary, he knows instinctively that wrong methods produce evil always and good never. Mrs. Eddy has given the keynote of mental practice on page 410 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," where she says: "The Science of mental practice is susceptible of no misuse. Selfishness does not appear in the practice of Truth or Christian Science."

[H. L. Eddison in The Bournemouth (England) Echo]

With reference to the letter of "A Mere Clergyman," headed "The Recent Christian Science Lecture," may I point out that the teachings of Christian Science as to the nature of mind and of matter, being based on the gospels, are spiritual. These teachings are epitomized in the words of Christ Jesus: "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." In the understanding and practical application of that profound statement lies all that Christian Science has to offer to the world today. In the Palestine of long ago human ignorance as to mind and matter did not prevent the Master from defining life eternal as knowledge of the only true God and of His Christ. Why then should a similar ignorance in modern schools of research deter Christians from reiterating this definition and striving to prove it, as Jesus did, with "signs following"?

Should not the words and works of him who claimed to be the "light of the world" be the accepted standard of all his disciples? Undisturbed by the failure or achievement of mere human wisdom, remembering that "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God," Christian Scientists endeavor to obey the unequivocal command, "Heal the sick." Humbly and thankfully they declare, as Jesus did, "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." Now, as then, the Father's works need no material agent, no hypnotic influence, no speculative theory, to sustain them. True health is holiness; and that "intimately vital relation of religion to health" referred to by your correspondent is established in the perpetual application of the fact that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, teaches mankind how to use the truth that overcame sin, disease, and death on the hills of Galilee nineteen hundred years ago. On page 289 of her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" she writes: "The belief that life and sensation are in the body should be overcome by the understanding of what constitutes man as the image of God. Then Spirit will have overcome the flesh."

[S. T. Downs in Valparaiso (Ind.) Vidette]

As a part of his discussion that "there is no new thing under the sun," in the baccalaureate sermon reported in your paper recently, a clergyman said, "Christian Science harks back to Berkeley, farther back to India, farther back to the realms of the past." This is not the first time that clergymen and other opponents of Christian Science have tried to claim that its teachings are derived from the philosophy of the person named, or from some other philosopher, or that it is taken from some of the Hindu philosophies, while the fact is that Christian Science is based directly on the teachings of Christ Jesus. It will be seen, then, that our critic was partially right when he said that Christian Science is not new, but was very much mistaken when he attempted to account for its origin.

The first religious tenet of Christian Science, as found on page 497 of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, reads: "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life," and any one who will study this book dispassionately will find that this is exactly true. Christian Science is demonstrably the religion established by the Master; and that it is all its name implies may be determined by testing it with the test given by the Master, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

In all parts of the world and among all classes of people Christian Science is healing the sick, reforming the sinner, and making the world better; and since it is doing this in exactly the way that Christ Jesus commanded, we are perfectly right in our insistence that it is the highest form of Christianity. Its critics may try to detract from it in every conceivable way, but the fact is that Christian Science is marching gloriously on in its mission of uplifting humanity through preaching the gospel and healing the sick, exactly as did primitive Christianity.

"Thy will be done"

ADELA V. SCRIMGEOUR

"Thy will be done." No more the heart-wrung sigh,
Or resignation's uncomplaining tear;
No more we yield—watching our earth hopes die—
Sad thanks to God, and own His chastening dear.

"Thy will be done." A higher, holier song
Is ours who strive His loving law to know:
A song of praise for triumph over wrong,
A cry of victory over human woe!

Archibald McLellan, C.S.B.

When at any time the shadows of mortal belief fall across our path, we cannot do better than turn for comfort to the divine word as given in the Scriptures and again declared to the present age through our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. In her sermon read at the dedication of the original Mother Church in January, 1895, we find these words: "When the light of one friendship after another passes from earth to heaven, we kindle in place thereof the glow of some deathless reality. Memory, faithful to goodness, holds in her secret chambers those characters of holiest sort, bravest to endure, firmest to suffer, soonest to renounce" (Pulpit and Press, p. 5).

These words are of deep import to us at this hour, when we have been called upon to part with a beloved brother and fellow worker, Archibald McLellan, C.S.B., who since June, 1902, has been editor of The Christian Science Journal and Christian Science Sentinel, and also of Der Herold der Christian Science since it was established in April, 1903. In addition to his arduous duties as editor, Mr. McLellan has also been a Director of The Mother Church since Feb. 7, 1903. In proof of the high regard in which he was held by Mrs. Eddy, she selected him as one of the Board of Trustees to take charge of her property when she wished to be relieved from the increasing demands upon her time; and still later, after Mrs. Eddy passed on, he was appointed by the Judge of the Probate Court of Merrimack County, New Hampshire, at Concord, as one of the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy.

Those who had the privilege of a close acquaintance with Mr. McLellan know that these various offices connected with the Christian Science movement were filled by him with ability as well as fidelity; and through his faithful services he earned the love and gratitude of Christian Scientists throughout the entire field. If we are in any wise tempted to be sorrowful when one of our friends passes from mortal sight, we have but to remember the Master's words, "If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." Again he said, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Christian Science makes these words very real to us, and so in the face of material evidence we yet refuse to accept death, and instead look away from all mortal conditions to the man of God's creating, who lives because God is his Life.

Christian Scientists do not shrink from the fact that they are sharers in the great world conflict, and that they must stand for their faith in the reality of good with all that Life implies to them. Each day's experience but helps them to realize more fully that the establishment of God's kingdom on earth is alone worthy of our highest hope and endeavor.

Attainment

In the crises of life we are apt to pause and ask ourselves how much we have attained that is worth while, and in doing so we sometimes find that many things which we at one time deemed of great value had become of little consequence in the struggle for that which was of deeper importance. St. Paul presents this view of the case when he says that the things which he once considered gain to himself, he came to count as "loss for Christ." To this he adds that he indeed counted all things but loss "for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus," that he might be found in him by experiencing "the power of his resurrection," even through fellowship with his sufferings, to which he added, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead."

At that early day of Christian history all the faithful followers of the Master were striving to attain to victory over death, and for this they had the high warrant of their Master's teaching and example. He never offered them anything less than eternal life, and yet he showed that the realization of this life in its fulness was dependent entirely upon spiritual understanding and demonstration. Since that day, sad to tell, professing Christians have not thought it necessary to strive for this attainment of which Paul speaks, but have submitted to the belief in death, even holding it to be of divine appointment and the only pathway to heaven; but Christian Science has brought to the world a far different concept of man's high destiny and the consequent demands upon him of divine law. There is indeed nothing more anomalous in the domain of religion than the submission to sickness and death which so largely characterizes professed Christians, yet the Master's teaching ever was toward the attainment of dominion over all evil, death included.

Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 428), "The great spiritual fact must be brought out that man is, not shall be, perfect and immortal." To this she adds, "The evidence of man's immortality will become more apparent, as material beliefs are given up and the immortal facts of being are admitted." It is undeniable that much has already been accomplished in this way through a half century of Christian Science teaching and demonstration. Otherwise hopeless suffering has been overcome by the truth of being as revealed in Christian Science, and what is even more important, the seeming hopelessness of sin has vanished in the great light of divine Truth and Love.

We therefore press on as did St. Paul, understanding better each day his wise counsel that we should forget "those things which are behind," and "press toward the mark," for thus alone can we recognize and fulfil the divine purpose and learn what it means to live. With the apostle we may in all humility say, "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect;" but like him we can press on toward the mark, and the goal of a Christian Scientist is that so clearly defined by the Master in his Sermon on the Mount, when he said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

When the Master pressed the idea of man's immortality upon the Jews, they said to him, "Abraham is dead, and the prophets; and thou sayest, If a man keep my saying, he shall never taste of death;" but the great Teacher would not abate one jot or tittle of the truth because of this argument that Abraham and the prophets, who had realized some measure of Truth's power, were not able to prove to the human senses the full import of immortality, and we cannot do better than to keep close to the Master's teachings as illumined for us in Christian Science. Our work is to overcome everything which is unlike God and which He never made, and each day should be marked for us by the progress that really counts for ourselves and for humanity. It is this which lifts us above all sense of sorrow, and recalls anew Jesus' words to Mary at the tomb: "Why weepest thou?" His message then and ever is the message of life and joy, and it is given out in obedience to the divine command to comfort all that mourn.

Red Cross Society

EVERY human contrivance for betterment is susceptible of abuse unless divinely guided. Even the humanitarian institutions wherein brotherly love seeks an outlet need careful watching lest wolves in sheep's clothing creep into the fold and slaughter the lambs of innocent desire. The ideal for which each righteous institution stands must be protected against deliberate perversion, against exploitation at the hands of the unscrupulous, and against those gusts of sympathetic mesmerism which mental manipulators try to create for their own advantage.

The work of the Red Cross Society is exposed to cross-currents of this kind. It is the outcome of a noble idea, it is instinct with divine compassion. The mention of it at once opens hearts and purses. Material religion and material medicine might in some instances like to divide among themselves the spoils of this popularity. But their efforts in this direction, if successful, might eventually slay the right idea of true benevolence underlying the Red Cross.

Miss Clara Barton was the founder of the Red Cross Society in the United States, and she linked this society to the International Committee in Geneva, Switzerland. The symbol of the Red Cross is the reverse of the Swiss flag, which consists of a white cross on a red ground. That Miss Barton's sense of religion and medicine was even then materialized seems improbable, judging from a glowing tribute which she gave to Mrs. Eddy and the teachings of Christian Science.

In an interview printed in the New York American of Jan. 6, 1908, Miss Barton said: "While I have not studied deeply enough the great religion founded by Mrs. Eddy to consider myself a Christian Scientist, I can say that I look upon Christian Science, as I understand it, as the most ideally beautiful yet the most practical and comforting of beliefs. It is doing more in the world today, and will continue to as more people become cognizant of the beauty of its teachings, than any other one influence for good. Mrs. Eddy should have the respect, admiration, and love of the whole Nation, for she is its greatest woman." It is interesting to know that Miss Barton later became more and more interested in Christian Science, so that this founder of the Red Cross Society found herself growing into a full agreement with the teaching and practice of Christian Science.

In acknowledgment of Miss Barton's glowing tribute Mrs. Eddy replied in words which may be found on pages 296 and 297 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany." There she said in part: "Now if Miss Barton were not a venerable soldier, patriot, philanthropist, moralist, and stateswoman, I should shrink from such salient praise. But in consideration of all that Miss Barton really is, and knowing that she can bear the blows which may follow said description of her soul-visit, I will say, Amen, so be it."

Christian Scientists have a duty toward the Red Cross Society. It is in danger of being swept into the orbit of reactionary interests, or of being monopolized by would-be powers that cannot progress in the Science of healing the sick and the sinner because they are dragging false material beliefs at their heels. Christian Scientists are working out the benevolent ideal for which the Red Cross really stands, an ideal which should ever be at work, in times of peace as well as in times of war. They are humanitarians, possessing the precious pearl of spiritual understanding which is an ever present help. The world needs their compassion and joy. It is crying out for the liberty which they can make available to the distressed by realizing the unreality of all evil. Let them help to keep this human ideal of benevolence under divine control, let them see Spirit coming to the flesh and healing it, let their thought illumine with the radiance of imperishable joy every sick-bed whether under cover of a tent or a roof, let them render again unto mankind the activity of a living faith which reveals God at hand, in peace and war, and man benevolently replacing the cross with the crown.

Copyright Law Was Violated

IN the United States District Court at Chicago, Ill., a decree in favor of The Christian Science Publishing Society was entered by Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, last Saturday, with the consent of the defendants, finding and adjudging The Art Masters Society, Eugene F. MacDonald, Jr., and others, had infringed certain copyrights owned by The Christian Science Publishing Society, upon the picture of Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

The action was instituted in the Federal Court at Chicago by The Christian Science Publishing Society as complainant, alleging that the defendants were printing, manufacturing, and selling what purported to be an imitation painting designated by defendants as "oil kraft" pictures of Mrs. Eddy, which infringed upon copyrights owned by The Christian Science Publishing Society.

All the allegations of the complainant, together with its rights and ownership of the copyrights, were fully sustained by the decree, and the defendants, The Art Masters Society and others, were perpetually enjoined from printing, manufacturing, and selling any infringing pictures of Mrs. Eddy. The infringing pictures and plates were thereupon surrendered to the complainant and destroyed.

More Appreciation

"I AM instructed by our board to write and assure the Publishing Society, through you, of our deep appreciation of the good which the Christian Science literature has brought us; and to assure you further that the increased rates which you have found it necessary to put into effect will be willingly accepted, we feel confident, by this section of the field, and will not curtail in any measure the activities of our distribution committee in their efforts to extend the circulation of our periodical literature."

"When I renewed my subscription to the Monitor I thought it right to do so at the old price, but since the 1st of July is drawing near the thought has come to me that I would be reading it at the former price for almost a year. Seeing the wrongness of this I enclose check for $4 to correct this error, which you will kindly add to the $5 sent June 7."

"I have never in my experience in Christian Science realized as I do today the privilege of being a registered Christian Science practitioner, and though I have always been grateful for our literature, I appreciate it many times more and will extend an even more hearty and effectual support to our periodicals than before the new prices."

"Every one who speaks about the change of the price of our literature is filled with the sense that it is a just price and that we never can pay for the value received."

"I wish to express my joy and sincere gratitude for the privilege I have had in being a subscriber to the Christian Science periodicals, and today when I received the June 2 Sentinel, announcing the increased amount for subscriptions, I realized more fully what the literature means to me, for the price of subscription is such a small part compared to the blessings the periodicals bring into my life, and I realize that money could not buy the peace and joy that have been mine through the study of these articles. With an earnest desire to more faithfully and promptly distribute the periodicals, so that others may share with me these messages of Love."

"Upon receipt of my Sentinel of June 30 I was happy to read the extracts of letters under the heading 'Cheerfully Met'; but I find that not one of the extracts expresses the thought that meant my healing when I read in the Sentinel of June 2 of the raise in prices of our periodicals. Perhaps not uncommon to many was the argument which suggested itself to me of fear that some might not be able to meet the raise, perhaps myself included. I realized, however, that this argument needed to be met quickly and by each individual, and in reading the next four lines I found the healing: 'The above rates include postage and will be the universal price by mail throughout the world for each periodical.' One 'Universal price . . . throughout the world,'—what could be bigger and grander? What could speak more of the unity of good and of brotherly love, and what could serve more to unite the world in its support of our periodicals, than that all are paying a price that enables all to have them at the same price?

"I certainly am grateful that you were led to increase the price and not decrease the value, and that the whole world pays one 'universal price'; and here let me express to you some of my gratitude (for words fail to express it all) for the high standard of the periodicals, and the inestimable value to me of every one of the good articles which demonstration gives us through these periodicals."

"This branch of The Mother Church, in business session assembled, voted to express its sincere appreciation to you for your progressive and fearless step in making a necessary advance in the price of our periodicals. We regard this action as an opportunity for the field to break the law of limitation by increased giving, and we pledge ourselves to renewed effort in behalf of an increased circulation of these messengers of Truth."

"The increased cost of our periodicals fills me with joy—not only as an evidence that our cause moves steadily on under God's guidance, but also that the opportunity is ours to prove the truth of our Leader's words: 'Love is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals' (Science and Health, p. 13). Our literature has always been easily worth the new price and this is cause for continuous gratitude, but beyond this, I rejoice that it is possible at this time to take the immense step that makes the price universal."

"I should like to express my appreciation of the action you have taken in increasing the price of the periodicals. It was with joy that I first learned of this fact and the thought came to me,—'It is God that giveth the increase.' The Christian Science periodicals are governed by the law of production, and certainly the spiritual blessings contained therein are increasing year by year. Through an article in the Journal about ten years ago, I was more fully awakened to Truth. I then purchased a copy of The Christian Science Quarterly and began the study of the Lesson-Sermons. By reading an article published in the Monitor I found my place in the human activities of the world when everything in a financial way had been swept away."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

COLORADO.—A general survey of conditions to May 1 shows continued and steady progress of the Christian Science movement throughout Colorado. This progress is to be noted in the improved attitude of the public thought as much perhaps as in the spiritual growth of the Christian Scientists and its resultant outward manifestations. The church at Trinidad and the society at Rocky Ford completed and dedicated their church edifices during the past six months. A better understanding of our literature, its nature and purpose, is being gained, and this is bringing forth increased and more efficient activity in the distribution work. It has been the privilege of this office to render assistance to that end. It is significant that a larger and truer appreciation of the distribution work is accompanied by improved conditions in other church activities.

Since the first of last November 494 Sentinels, 22 Journals, 6 Heralds, and 2845 Monitors have been distributed through this office, and in addition several subscriptions and renewals of periodicals and copies of Mrs. Eddy's writings have been furnished to institutions not otherwise provided. Other distribution activities included 1310 copies of Colorado newspapers containing Christian Science lectures, letters written by the committee on publication, and articles of legislative interest; 648 circular letters and 433 copies of Senator Works' speech. The Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy are donating Christian Science literature to public libraries, libraries of universities, colleges, and normal schools, also to federal and state prisons and reformatories, upon condition that the libraries will accept such literature, properly catalogue it, and make it available to all who have access to these libraries. By this means, during the past six months four additional libraries have been furnished with books, and there have been 84 subscriptions and renewals of periodicals.—Committee on Publication.

FAR ROCKAWAY, N. Y.—Literature distributed from April, 1916, through February, 1917, was as follows: 4 copies of Science and Health, 1 Concordance to Science and Health, 1705 Sentinels, 254 Journals, 124 Heralds, 14,731 Monitors, 99 Quarterlies, 185 pamphlets, and 600 newspapers containing lecture reports and reprinted articles from our periodicals. This literature has been placed in public libraries, country and social clubs, barber shops, post offices, coast guard stations, lumber yard and sawmill, restaurants, hair dressing parlors, fire houses, police stations, hotels and boarding houses, railway stations, dental offices, telephone companies, express offices, the local court house, private schools, and embroidery works. Many expressions of appreciation have come to us, and there has been an increase of attendance at our services.

HAMMOND, IND.—The sale to the Christian Science Society of the First Presbyterian church building on South Hohman Street, recently partially destroyed by fire, has been completed.—Lake County Times.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—For the past four years the Churches of Christ, Scientist, of Los Angeles, through their literature distribution committee, have maintained a Christian Science Monitor booth at the pure food show, and this year's experience was no exception to the rule of an ever increasing interest in and appreciation of the Monitor, our other periodicals, and the writings of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy. lowing is the number of Christian Science periodicals and pamphlets distributed during the thirteen days of the exhibition: 404 Sentinels, 105 Journals, 11 Heralds, 3831 Monitors, and 1437 pamphlets in English and in foreign languages in about equal numbers, making in all 5788 pieces.

The Lectures

BUTTE, MONT. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler lecturer; introduced by J. B. Patterson, who said in part:—

The world as a rule is skeptical of anything new, whether in science, politics, or religion. Christian Science is nothing new, nor do its followers claim it to be. As a matter of fact its teachings are as old as time itself and were taught and practised by Jesus and his disciples. Mrs. Eddy, however, in 1866 discovered the Principle upon which true healing is based and named her discovery Christian Science, and in turn gave it to the world that it might cheer, bless, purify, and heal. The results speak for themselves, as tens of thousands willingly testify to the efficacy of Christian Science in reforming the sinner, in giving comfort to the sorrowing, and in healing the sick.

There are probably no people who believe more thoroughly in the Bible or who spend more time in reading it than do Christian Scientists. The study and practice of Christian Science makes for better citizenship, makes the human family happier and more contented; and why should they be otherwise than joyful when they realize that God can be depended upon to help them in every extremity?

The Butte Miner.

CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND (Society).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Eric W. Carr, who said in part:—

You have been invited to this lecture because we are confident that in Christian Science we have a message to give which will be of the greatest value and the greatest help; for Christian Science brings a message of hope, a message of comfort, and a message of love,—such a message as has never been known since the days of our great Master, Christ Jesus. Now I suppose in the history of the human race there never was a time of greater need than this, and yet if we turn to the gospels we find that Jesus there speaks of just such a time when he says, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Now Christian Science shows you how to look and where to look, for Christian Science gives us such a practical and loving concept of God that it is our privilege to know Him aright; and it is this right knowledge and understanding which brings peace of mind something akin to that true peace which we are told "passeth all understanding."

CHICAGO, ILL. (Fifth Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Oscar J. Duke, who said in part:—

It is recorded in the gospel of St. John that after having given final instruction, admonition, and counsel to his followers just previous to his crucifixion, Jesus said he had yet many things to tell them, but that they could not bear them at that time. He promised, however, that after his going away he would send them a Comforter, whom he designated "the Spirit of truth." This Comforter, he promised, should teach them all things, bring all things which he had told them to their remembrance, and guide them "into all truth." In the Science of Christianity revealed to this age by Mrs. Eddy, Christian Scientists recognize the fulfilment of Jesus' promise. As a reason for the hope that is in them they find that they are healed of sickness and sin through the understanding of this "Spirit of truth," and rejoice that they are enabled, as St. Paul has said, to comfort others with the same comfort wherewith they themselves are comforted of God.

LIVINGSTON, MONT. (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by the Hon. O. M. Harvey, who said in part:—

I am not a member of that body known as Christian Scientists, and am acquainted with their doctrines only in a general sense; but I do know that they constitute a large part of the good citizenship of this country, that they are identified with and actively engaged in the various works and enterprises that have for their objects the betterment of the conditions of human life and the emphasizing of those things worth while to men. I know that they inculcate an abiding faith, an exalting hope, and a world-wide charity. If we are to employ the criterion of judgment given us by the lowly Nazarene, "By their fruits ye shall know them," a standard that has its basis firmly fixed in science and philosophy as in the religion of his followers, then we shall give to them and their doctrines a most charitable consideration.

The Livingston Enterprise.

LODI, CAL. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Ursula E. Haydon, who said in part:—

When Jesus the Christ was here among men, he extended to all this loving invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." He also said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Now again, after centuries of doubt and belief, the Christ, through Christian Science, is extending to all earth's weary ones this same loving invitation; and thousands upon thousands are, through the study of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, finding their freedom,—freedom from sin and sickness, want and woe.—The Lodi Sentinel.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. (Societies of Harvard University and Radcliffe College).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Dr. John M. Brewer, of the department of education, who said in part:—

Never since Christian Science was discovered in 1866 has the college student had more need for guidance. The problems of ordinary living are serious enough to impel one to seek divine help in their solution. How much more, in such times as these, must one realize that of himself he can do nothing. Christian Science is furnishing this guidance to thousands of individuals, in home, farm, office, and school; in business, travel, and public life; on battleship and in the trenches. Christian Science has frequently been misconceived by those who have looked at it through the glasses of human philosophy, empirical science, and ephemeral history. One purpose of this lecture is to aid honest seekers for truth in sweeping away their misconceptions, so that they may avail themselves of the guidance of Christian Science in meeting the problems and duties of this strenuous day.

Testimonies of Healing

More and more I realize the need of constant spiritual preparedness on the part of every earnest seeker after Truth, which is indeed our "shield and buckler." Especially is this true in my own case, located as I am in a hospital town containing a state hospital for the insane, a noted surgical hospital, and also one of the largest clinic buildings in the world, into which pours, from practically every train, sick, suffering humanity, vainly searching for health.

Several years ago I too was a hopeless, wretched invalid, going to bed each night with the prayer that I might never waken. A hospital operation, and the kind ministrations of husband, children, and physicians, had been impotent to heal me. My ailments were legion, and I was sometimes tempted to believe them more formidable than the seven devils which Jesus cast out. At this juncture Christian Science again came into my life, a dear sister having tried to interest me in it two years prior to this; but the seed had fallen on stony ground. While in Minneapolis in July, 1908, I went with a friend to a Christian Science Wednesday evening meeting and listened to the testimonies of healing. The bright faces were a revelation to me, and I said, "Oh, could I ever hope to have a face like that?" The loving affirmative answer I doubted; however, as there was nothing to lose and everything to gain, I decided to see if Christian Science as a healing agency could do what medicine, massage, electricity, and so on, had utterly failed to do.

My satchel full of medicine was emptied, and in less than three days, through the help of a practitioner, I was healed of a chronic bowel trouble which had been pronounced incurable by the last attending physician. In less than a month I could sit down naturally, whereas for two years I had been obliged to use an inflated rubber cushion. I immediately began to eat, having been practically starved; extreme nervous troubles soon lessened, and medical laws began to weaken. Had I been a doubting Thomas looking for a sign, I could not have doubted after the first month.

Other ailments were more stubborn, requiring the help of a practitioner for many months; and here let me say that my greatest progress was made under absent treatments. In my case it was "precept upon precept; line upon line;" there were downfallings and stronger uprisings, until today I rejoice in the fact that I have been wonderfully blessed and healed, and am stronger and better than ever before.

I praise our Father-Mother God for daily progress, and am grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for this wonderful Science. The Christian Science literature is as an anchor to us here, holding us more firmly grounded in right thinking. The Lesson-Sermons call for daily study and application.

ALMA PARKER LYMAN, Rochester, Minn.

Gratitude prompts me to submit my testimony of much good derived from Christian Science, hoping the benefits obtained by me may bring light to others seeking it. After resorting to medicine for years, I turned to Christian Science ten years ago for relief from a difficulty which some doctors said was organic, while others called it functional. A specialist advised an operation, but as he could not promise a cure I decided to try everything else first.

I had become thoroughly disheartened, for I feared that I would never be well. Then a friend spoke to me of Christian Science, telling me of remarkable cases of healing by means of the application of its teachings. I knew nothing of it, but was willing to give it a trial, just as I would try any other remedy that might be recommended. After a week's treatment I was healed, but it took many years of earnest study to gain complete mastery over fear and to erase the mental picture of the years of suffering.

I am glad it was necessary for me to do my own Science work, for it forced me to overcome many erroneous thoughts, such as hate, fear, doubt, resentment,—the last especially holding me in bondage through an extended period,—until they were finally conquered. I have found that only in proportion as these have been given up have I found freedom and peace. For six years I had worn glasses constantly, and had been told they would always be necessary; but they were laid aside almost ten years ago without any inconvenience or strain.

Quite recently, when in a serious railroad wreck, I had no fear whatever, but instead was conscious of a wonderful sense of protection. I had retired with a sense of God's care as promised in Proverbs: "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths," and had immediately fallen asleep. I awakened with a start at about three o'clock in the morning, and my first thought was, "God is the only power." Then came another jolt, and I could feel the train swerving. It seemed as though we might be going into a ditch, but I held to the thought that God is the only power, and suddenly the train stopped and I knew we were safe. The coach I was in was badly damaged, and the engine was demolished. The engineer told me his escape was a miracle, as was the escape from injury of all the passengers. This experience proved the truth of Mrs. Eddy's words in the Preface of Science and Health (p. vii), "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, today is big with blessings."

I am indeed grateful for the many physical healings received, but they seem small in comparison with the spiritual uplift and the understanding of God gained through my study of Christian Science in connection with the Bible.

From early childhood I was afflicted with a serious eye trouble. Nine years ago, at the age of fifteen, I had what the physicians pronounced trachoma, and was treated by leading eye specialists in Austin and San Antonio, Texas, but only temporary relief resulted. In October, 1914, my right eye became inflamed and the lid was badly swollen, granulated, and very painful. I called on a prominent eye specialist in this city, who pronounced the trouble very serious, and told me to put on dark glasses, wear a shield over my eyes, and stay in a darkened room. Several times each week I went to his office for treatment, besides using three kinds of medicine every three hours at home; but the eye continued to grow worse.

The doctor finally told me a serious complication had set in, affecting the ball of the eye, and he held out no hope of its ever being cured. An uncle who is a physician in a near-by town, held a consultation with him and afterward told my husband the trouble could never be cured. This made me most despondent, as I had been constantly under the specialist's care for almost two months, and was anxious to spend the holidays with my parents in a distant city. Both doctors, however, said it would not do to leave off treatment long enough to make the visit.

Thoroughly disheartened, I hardly knew what to do, but friends who realized the seriousness of my trouble urged me to try Christian Science. This seemed to be my only hope, so I went to a practitioner for treatment. She had me give up all medicine, discard the dark glasses, and read, write, and embroider as much as I wished. After a few treatments my eye was almost well, and I went away on the holiday visit. Five absent treatments were given me, and at the expiration of a month, when I returned home, the eye was entirely well and even stronger than the other. The specialist who had treated me, after carefully examining the eye, pronounced it well, as did my uncle, the physician who was called in consultation. I have had no return of the trouble, and my experience has seemed a marvelous demonstration to the many friends here who knew of my suffering and the serious condition before Christian Science treatment was begun. Words cannot express my gratitude for this healing.—Mrs. J. E. Bock, Houston, Texas.

I gladly testify to the above healing of my wife, and to other blessings we both have received through Christian Science, for which we are very thankful.—J. E. Bock.

[Translated from the German]

In 1908, as a result of a cold, I was taken with a rheumatic affection in the left side of the body. Failure on my part to give this condition proper attention led to its developing into a chronic trouble, which in 1910 manifested itself so severely that I became incapacitated for work. I was laid up the greater part of the time, and had a hypodermic administered once in a while, which relieved me of the pain temporarily. At the end of January, 1911, I seemed to be restored. In May, however, there was a relapse, and the symptoms this time manifested themselves far more acutely. My condition grew so serious that it became difficult for me to walk even a few minutes with the aid of a stick.

A cure at a watering place and massage seemed to help, but in September I had another severe relapse, this time accompanied by cramps in the left leg and in the muscles of the back. Even my physician was astonished at the intensity and malignant nature of the trouble. An X-ray examination and the consultation of two other physicians confirmed the correctness of the first diagnosis. As the many remedies used in such cases held out no promise of a cure, but at best only relief, I turned to Christian Science and asked a practitioner with whom I was acquainted for treatment, which was taken up, the immediate effect being that I was able to sleep without an opiate. A few days later I went out feeling entirely able to work, and since then have steadily attended to my professional duties. In the beginning of 1912 I had two relapses, which however were overcome after a short period of treatment without interruption of my duties. I am enjoying as good health as in former times, and I gratefully acknowledge the physical benefits received through Christian Science, as well as its effects in other directions which I have had the privilege of observing.

Six years ago a friend made me a present of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, but as I knew nothing of Christian Science the book did not appeal to me. I thought it would take a higher education than mine to understand its Principle, and I laid the book aside. Some three months later I met with an accident, falling from a high stairway to the ground and striking on my head. Then I had a feeling I wanted to read Science and Health, as I suffered great distress in the back of my neck and head. I opened the book at the testimonies, and became so interested that I read many hours at a time. The more I read, the greater was my desire to understand this beautiful healing truth and to know as others did that God is all-power; that He is Life and Love, and that there is no power beside Him which can and will heal all our mortal illusions.

Through the fall I lost my hearing, and for a time was so deaf that I could not hear the clock tick even when it was held close to my ear; but through the work of a faithful Christian Science practitioner and my own declaration of the truth I suddenly heard the clock ticking, and joy and gratitude went up from my heart to our Father-Mother God for leading me into the knowledge of how to work out my salvation here on earth. I had never before found the Bible interesting, because I did not understand it, but through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy I have learned to love it. God's promises are comforting to me, and the more I read of them the more I love God, and my neighbor as myself.

From the first of my entering into the knowledge of this beautiful truth I had a longing to help those in distress, and through this earnest desire to do good Truth has helped me not only to overcome ailments in myself, but also to be a blessing to others. My heart is overflowing with gratitude for the spiritual light given us through the teachings of Mrs. Eddy, who, having consecrated her life wholly to God, divine Love, was inspired to give His wisdom to the world.

Mrs. S. Long, Oakland, Cal.

For the many blessings that have come to me through the study of Christian Science I wish to express my gratitude. After many years spent in a fruitless search for a satisfying religion, in 1907 I sent for a copy of Science and Health. Minor physical troubles at once began to leave me, as though to lead to higher demonstrations of the divine Principle. Since then all the old ailments have been overcome, financial problems have been mastered, and the spiritual uplift has brought with it the peace that passeth understanding.

When my husband, who was not interested in Christian Science, passed on, leaving me without an income and with a mortgaged home, by never doubting, never planning, but just knowing the truth, I was provided for. Divine Love supplied the need,—an income and a home free from mortgage. There is no separation in Truth, for we are one in Him in whom "we live, and move, and have our being." Christian Science has taught me to see my children as God's ideas; to let the heavenly Father plan for them, for God doeth all things well. I praise God unceasingly for this revelation of Truth which has come through our beloved Leader, and my one desire is to live the truth I love.

Amelia M. McLean, Washington, D. C.

I find myself unable to express even a part of the wonderful happiness, freedom, and courage that have come to me through the study and application of Christian Science. As my mother has said, we did not take up the study for physical ills, although every ailment that has made its appearance has been overcome through an understanding of the truth.

Christian Science is surely the door into life. I consider now that I am truly beginning to live, for to live is to be conscious of God, and I am just beginning to learn to carry that consciousness of our heavenly Father throughout the hours and moments of the day. It is such a privilege to rise each morning, partake of the real food,—the spiritual food that is prepared for us in our Lesson-Sermons,—and put on the armor of God. Thus equipped we are ready to start the day; not as we used to do with doubt and fear, but with the true sense of what constitutes a real day,—looking forward to an unfoldment of good, with the priceless opportunity of making each action accord with the divine, of reflecting God's goodness, mercy, intelligence, joy, peace, and love.

One thing for which I am most deeply grateful is that I have been so situated as to make it necessary for me to study; otherwise I might have been much longer in learning how very important it is to study to be approved of the Lord. I am grateful for the trials, for the hardships, and for the mental anguish that have led me to grow; for the times when I have had to go direct to the Father for comfort, advice, and strength. My life must attest my gratitude, and my desire is that I may daily become a better transparency for the truth.—Alice A. McLean.

I am very grateful for my knowledge of Christian Science. I was healed through the power of Truth of chronic stomach trouble and creeping paralysis, after having been pronounced incurable by some of the best physicians. I am grateful not only for this healing, but also for the understanding of the Bible and the opening up of the Scriptures. With the understanding our Lesson-Sermon gives to us the Bible has become a new and beloved book. I am thankful to God for our revered Leader, who has given us the truth in our literature. I know that an honest perusal of her book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," can lift us out of physical ills and other discordant conditions.

Evelyn G. Fleming, Kearney, Neb.

Becoming conscious one day that I was getting bald-headed, I decided to buy a hair tonic which a friend had recommended for overcoming the trouble. I had the mixture made and carefully applied a goodly quantity of it to my head, not only on the bald spot but all over, thinking that if it was good it would do the hair good also. I went to sleep, only to be awakened with the most unbearable stinging pains. On investigating I found my head blistered, and wherever the drug was applied I lost what hair I had left. The druggist had made a mistake in preparing the tonic. I was bald for nearly two years, and it was very trying to my pride.

When my wife became interested in Christian Science the practitioner invited us to attend services one Sunday morning, but I declined, saying my head looked too bad to go to church. She quietly answered that I might find something there to help me. I went to church, and enjoyed the service so much that I decided to have treatment for my head. As a result, in less than a week my head was covered with fine white hair. Christian Science treatment restored my hair, and I am now trying to gain an understanding of this healing power. I thank God for the many blessings He has given us, and am more than grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the abundance of literature she has prepared for our use.

I am very thankful for the help which Christian Science brings to me daily, though I did not take it up for the sake of the physical healing, but because it appeared so very reasonable when first presented to me. I have been healed of several minor ailments, including colds, coughs, loss of voice, toothache, headaches, a wart, deafness in one ear, and severe pains. Christian Science is also a great help in my work as a school teacher. I have now been several years in my present situation, and have not had to miss one half day, which proves to me the protecting power of Christian Science. It also helps me with the children.

I often find that the boys who have been considered the most troublesome have proved to be among the best in my class. One instance is that of a boy who was often sent up to the master for punishment. He had been forbidden to go with the other boys when they went out to the woodwork school, and had to go by himself later. When I began to give lessons in his class, just at first it was hard to get on with him, but I tried to help him in some work in which he was backward, and he soon yielded. He is now among the best in the class in behavior, and I have heard from his mother that he told her he always felt as though he could be good when I was taking the class. He is good with the other teachers too, and so far as I know has not been sent up to the master for a long time.

Before coming into Christian Science I tried hard to become converted. One evening after a mission service I went into the inquiry room and struggled to gain that ecstatic feeling which I believed must be associated with conversion. No change of feeling came, however, and I went away disappointed. Through Christian Science I have now learned that conversion is not a sudden change of feeling, but a mental transformation, a putting on of the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," and that happiness comes in proportion to our faithfulness in doing this.

I am very grateful for the deeper understanding of the Bible which has come to me through study of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I am especially grateful for the unfolding of the true meaning of Jesus' mission to mankind, and also for the wonderfully helpful articles in the Christian Science periodicals.

Emily Ada Ashcroft, Milmer, Nuneaton, England.

It is with much gratitude that I add my testimony to the thousands of others given to show the healing power of Christian Science. Bowel trouble and neuralgia of thirty years' standing have been overcome, business problems have been solved, and I have been able to help my children and neighbors. I have experienced a spiritual uplift that is permanent, and while I am thankful to Mrs. Eddy, I am even more thankful to our heavenly Father, who guided me to Christian Science.—Mrs. B. Letcher, Chicago, Ill.

On Aug. 19, 1912, we were expecting some friends to spend the week end with us, and I did not know how I was going to entertain them, as I had been suffering extremely from a stomach trouble, fainting away until life seemed hardly worth the struggle. I therefore telephoned to a lady who I knew was a Christian Science practitioner, and asked if I might go over to see her, as I wanted some help. I did not know what treatment was, and only expected help for two or three days. The practitioner talked about the Bible and of its wonderful promises, which I believed as far as I understood them, for I had always considered myself a pretty good Christian. Incidentally, I may say that Christian Science took this conceit out of me, for which I am most grateful.

The practitioner treated me, and I had to admit that I felt better. Since then I have come to know and have proved that God heals every discordant condition. I have been healed of stomach disorder of years' standing, also of eye trouble, nervousness, a great sense of separation as well as lack of supply, and have proved that God is Love, Life, Truth. I am most grateful for the knowledge of God as ever present rather than afar off, and to know that He does answer prayer if we are obedient to the divine law.

My love for God cannot be expressed in words, or my gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who was so pure that she could show the way in this age to a practical religion which is provable to those who seek.

JESSIE D. MURDEN, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Over six years ago I was healed in one Christian Science treatment of a serious nervous trouble from which I had suffered for five years. Almost every remedy known to the medical profession had been tried, and I had been relieved at times, but the awful fear that this trouble would return was never destroyed until I was healed in Christian Science. Since that time I have had many beautiful demonstrations in the overcoming of sorrow and pain. During the summer of 1915 my left leg was fractured. Although it was considered a bad break, I did not suffer any pain and was able to be around and use the leg fully three weeks before the surgeon thought it would be possible. This demonstration was made with the help of a faithful practitioner.

These are only two out of the many blessings which I have experienced. I am most grateful for the help Christian Science is to me in the daily life of the home. There is not an hour in the day when this wonderful truth does not help us work out some problem. I send this testimony with the thought that it may help some one from darkness into light.

W. BELLE RODGERS, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada.

For the past twelve years Christian Science has met our every need and has been the means of overcoming typhoid fever, measles, whooping-cough, chicken-pox, abscess in the ear, and in fact every ill that has presented itself. At the time of the birth of our two children the understanding of Truth brought peace and harmony. When our first little girl was born the attending physician held out no hope for the recovery of either the child or myself, it being called a case of poisoning and convulsions; but through the aid of Christian Science harmony was quickly restored, so that both the child and myself were well and strong in a short time. She is now seven years old and has never taken medicine, as Science has met her every need.

To say that we are grateful for these many blessings hardly expresses our gratitude, and I feel that the only way to prove it is to live the truth in our daily lives and aid others to gain an understanding of Truth by which they also may be helped. I am deeply thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy and to all those who have helped me to see the truth.—HENRIETTA C. HILLEBRANDT, San Francisco, Cal.

I have been interested in Christian Science about five years, and have had many proofs of the healing power of Truth. Severe colds, stomach trouble, bowel disorder, and a great many other ailments have been overcome. About a year and a half ago I was obliged to leave my place of business on a Thursday afternoon on account of severe pain in my right leg. I tried to realize the truth about it, but on Friday morning the leg was swollen and inflamed from the ankle to the knee, and I could hardly walk. I had no fear, however, knowing that God, Life, would take care of me. A practitioner was asked for treatment, and I stayed home from work Friday and Saturday, hobbling about the house on a cane.

On Sunday morning I went to church perfectly healed. For all this I am indeed thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy. I am also very grateful for the Christian Science literature; it has helped me to solve many problems which before coming into Science seemed almost impossible of solution.—O. A. NESSLER, Chicago, Ill.

From Our Exchanges

[The Congregationalist and Christian World]

There is nothing old-fashioned or out of date in the thoughts and words of Jesus. We can with no difficulty at all imagine him as partaker or spectator in many of the outdoor pleasures, as well as in the outdoor work of our own time. What parables he would have seen in golf or tennis or baseball! What he would have said to the modern fishermen coming home having caught nothing; how he would have enjoyed the sea in fishing boat or boat of pleasure; how he would have breathed deep in the first quiet minutes on the mountain top after the long climb up through woods and over ledges, and taken his place in the talk and story telling round the camp fire; what an observer of the life of bird and beast and of the beauty of the flowers he would have been,—all these lie well within the range of our imagination.

[American Lutheran Survey]

Every one who thinks knows for a certainty that there is a deeper meaning, a greater purpose for humanity, than that which appears in the quarrels of kings and in the contests of armies. He knows that there is a something deeper down beneath it all than the conflict between the passions and the ambitions of any of the groups of a passing generation. His very knowledge that there is a philosophy in history, and that current events never indicate more than the moving of tides, makes him know that there is underneath this great conflict of nations a purpose for humanity as a whole which does not appear to the casual view of ordinary vision. Once in a while those who are seeking for that deeper and greater something are thrilled by its near approach and by the glimpses which they catch of it.

[The Christian Work]

The failure to do the duty of the day assumes various pernicious forms. In one man it takes the shape of regretful and debilitating reminiscence. His heart is in the "good old days." He remembers, or persuades himself he remembers, what life used to be when he was young. Life was worth living then. There was something to be done and room to do it. Things are different now. Life is too crowded, too vulgar, too complex. Poetry is gone, chivalry is out of date, heroism is impossible. The individual is lost in the mass. The world has passed out of hand. It is now "every man for himself," and no room is left for service. This man is blinded by memory.

Another is blinded by forecast. He believes there is work to be done, somewhere; he believes he is the man to do it, some time; but he waits his opportunity. His dream of great deeds fills him with enthusiasm, but he must bide his time. His years are slipping silently and swiftly away, and still that highly improbable opportunity of an almost impossible heroism draws no nearer. It matters not. He keeps a lookout toward the heroism and dreams much of high deeds to be wrought, but meanwhile the distant light which fills his eye blinds him to a thousand duties at his feet. Some men, of course, do nothing for their age because they mean their age to do everything for them. But others, again, are deliberately useless because of a settled and cynical unbelief in the value of unselfish work, or of work for the mending of the world.

Thus from one cause or another men are apt to overlook or underrate the present task. They are dreamers, idlers, pessimists; in some cases pietists, who despise the world's problems even while they live by the world's problem-making labor.

[Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.Litt., in The Christian Commonwealth]

St. Paul saw that if we dig deep enough into the nature of man, down below race, rank, sex, and social condition, below the débris of sin and the sediments of sensuality, we find that the foundation element of humanity is the image of Christ in the soul. Dim it may be, blurred by evil, and overlaid by many a foul and slimy thing, but it is there as the deepest reality. The profoundest fact about humanity is not that it is Jew or Gentile, English or American, bond or free, male or female, but that Christ is in all. For St. Paul, a Hebrew of the Hebrews, trained in the exclusiveness of his race, this truth was the sovereign mystery, hidden from the foundation of the world—and at last made manifest in Christ. Hitherto he had thought the Hebrews the only people for whom God had any purpose, and when he saw that purpose, as it unfolded, extending to all races and clans, it filled him with inextinguishable wonder. Yet he followed the truth as it is in Jesus even against his old prejudices, and against the narrow teachers of his day who tried to limit the gospel—in many keys and tones making plea for a universal Christ as the Saviour of a universal humanity.

[Rev. John Malick in The Christian Register]

Religion says that the universe has a heart, that it is a heart of love, and that to live in this love is our high privilege. When one feels this he has entered the kingdom which drives no one but invites all, whomsoever will.

Is it true that we as a church demonstrate to the world that men seek the church for its insurance features alone? Is the spiritual life so barren that there is nothing to reach, only things to escape? Is it true that, ceasing to fear, we have arrived? The most desolate spiritual country is that in which one finds himself just outside the walls of the city of destruction and before he turns around and sees that he is on the borderland of another country, which he has not entered yet, the country which pays tribute to the celestial city and its King. Many find themselves in this barren country today; they have ceased to fear, and they see no vision as yet, and urge that there is none to see. Like Pilgrim, they find themselves standing still because "I know not whither to go."

[Western Christian Advocate]

There is only one road that leads to the heavenly kingdom; that is the highway whereon the righteous travel with certainty, knowing that the end is peace and great joy. Moreover, the city of our soul's desire as the dwelling of the great King, eternal and immortal, has many gates of approach. Men in almost every mood and possessing every possible temperament may find a wicket gate for their entrance. Indeed, whatever sin of disposition or circumstance may carry a man away from God and separate him from the gates of light, if he turns in his downward course, or seeks to check his feet on the path of self-estrangement, at once a gate to the heavenly city appears before his sight.

[Zion's Herald]

The only reason why our belief in the regnancy of Jesus is liable to be shaken is that we look too much on the outward and the seeming, or take counsel of our own fears rather than with the promises of God. It is our faith in the overruling by Jesus that gives us strength and confidence amid the storm and the stress. Many things are not now going his way, but his way shall prevail at last. By degrees God is bringing the world into subjection to Himself, through Christ. Is it safe to doubt that? Is there anything else it is possible to believe?

Plans for cutting a ship canal across Scotland, connecting the North Sea and the Atlantic Ocean by a voyage of a little more than sixty miles, are advocated. The canal would reduce the distance from Glasgow to important points as follows: to Leith, 485 miles; to London, 253 miles; to Hamburg, 312 miles. The saving between various points would be: Liverpool and Leith, 400 miles; Leith and Belfast, 377 miles; Liverpool and the Elbe, 288 miles; Glasgow and Antwerp, 290 miles. Two rival routes for the canal are being discussed. One would follow an existing barge canal. The other would start from Alloa on the Forth and make directly for Loch Lomond across land which is never more than fifty feet above sea level.

In the case of the semibituminous coal operators and companies in Virginia and West Virginia, on trial charged with violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, the jury on July 12 brought in a verdict of not guilty for all the defendants. It deliberated twenty-three hours and a half before reaching the verdict which freed forty-one operators and sixty-nine corporations from the Government's charges. The trial began June 18, when the charges included sixty-four individuals and 108 corporations; but as the trial progressed indictments against a number of the defendants were dismissed.

Iowa led the United States in 1916 in the number of motor cars registered in proportion to the population. That state had one car for every eleven persons. California was second, with one car to every twelve inhabitants; Nebraska and South Dakota had one for every thirteen; Arkansas one for every 116. The average for the United States is one car for every twenty-nine persons. The New England states averaged one car to about every twenty-seven persons. The prosperous corn belt states showed a fairly uniform distribution of cars.

By a contract just executed between the secretary of the interior and the representative of the Imperial Laguna Canal Company of southern California, a tract of arid land comprising from 120,000 to 200,000 acres adjoining the Imperial Valley, is to be irrigated by means of an all-American canal some thirty miles in length. The water is to be taken from the Laguna Dam of the Yuma reclamation project on the Colorado River at Yuma, Ariz. The contract has been so drawn as to protect the interests of the public and to insure the feasibility of the project before connection with the Government dam is permitted.

The possibility of utilizing the enormous quantities of sawdust and other refuse now burned by the sawmills of Victoria, B. C., by converting the materials into gas, oils, tar, and charcoal through destructive distillation, is to be investigated at once by city officials. It is said that experiments recently conducted by chemistry departments of the University of Washington at Seattle and the University of British Columbia at Vancouver show that out of one cord of wood there can be obtained 40 gallons of tar, 20 gallons of oil, 80 pounds of acetate of lime, and 900 pounds of charcoal.

The civil engineer of the Railway Board, Imperial Taiwan Railways of the Government General of Formosa, Japan, was recently sent to the United States to study American methods of dealing with railroad problems, with special reference to maintenance of way. His Government's object in sending him was primarily in connection with the contemplated replacing of Japan's 8000 mile system of narrow gage railroads, as soon after the war as the nation's coffers will permit, with standard gage tracks and equipment.

The greatest telescope in the world, constructed at Fore River, Mass., is nearly ready for use. The 9000 pound lens, completed after six years of labor, has been moved without accident to the Mt. Wilson Solar Observatory near Pasadena, Cal. The rough cast of the lens was made in France in 1905 and was shipped to California in 1909. The grinding was begun in 1911 and completed in 1917. The lens is 13 inches thick and 100 inches in diameter. The cost of producing the lens alone for this telescope will be $50,000.

The Dominion Government is expending $30,000,000 for a new ocean terminal at Halifax, Canada's "Gateway to Europe." It went into service in part for the first time recently. When finally completed it will occupy a mile and a half of the water-front, and it is claimed that twenty-seven ocean liners of the largest type may dock at one time. The depth of water alongside the pier at low title is 45 feet. At the upper part of the harbor a new concrete pier was completed last winter at a cost of $1,250,000.

The blowing in of the large new furnace of the Cambria Steel Company at Johnstown, Pa., at the Franklin plant, signalized a world achievement; for the furnace, which cost over a million and a half dollars, was finished in fifty-seven days,—a record time, as the No. 9 furnace took eighty-five days to build. Over eight hundred men were engaged on the work day and night until completed. The furnace has a capacity of over five thousand tons a day.

That half a billion dollars was wasted in the United States last year through the inefficient use of coal, is the statement of Van H. Manning, director of the United States Bureau of Mines. He says that "last year the United States mined 600,000,000 tons of coal, the greatest production ever witnessed in the world, and of this amount we wasted 150,000,000 tons, or 25 per cent, through inefficient use."

The Swiss sample fair was held at Basel, Switzerland, April 15 to 29, 1917, and was, according to official report, a success from a commercial standpoint. Business transactions amounting in round numbers to 20,000,000 francs were concluded. The attendance for the two weeks totaled 300,000. Only products manufactured exclusively in Switzerland were placed on exhibition, as on account of the war it had been decided not to hold an international fair.

The Textile Mercury of Manchester, England, states that "a new method of preparing ramie has been proposed, namely, by retting based on bacterial action; and it is claimed, according to the Colonial Journal, that it has a great future. The International Institute of Agriculture states that retting takes from forty-eight to sixty hours and is a perfect success, on the stalks and the strips as well as on the derived product called China-grass."

The occupation of Peking by the republican forces, following the surrender at Fung Tai of the monarchist army of 10,000 men, indicates the complete restoration of the republic. Chang Hsun, who led the revolt of the imperialists, has taken refuge in the Dutch Legation in order to obtain safe conduct out of the country. The attempt to restore the Manchu dynasty thus failed at the end of three weeks.

First mortgage loans to farmers at 5 per cent, represented by charters to 230 farm loan associations approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board to July 1, amount to $11,661,905. The average amount asked by each association was slightly in excess of fifty thousand dollars. The average number of farmers in the associations was eighteen, making the average loan about twenty-five hundred dollars.

Investigations by the division industrial supervisor for the province of Pangasinan have been made a basis for the assertion that enough coconut husks are annually wasted in the Philippines to make coir mats with a wholesale value of $22,500,000. These husks are usually thrown into the rivers and allowed to float out to sea, or they are burned or allowed to rot on the ground.

During May a notable development of the railroad facilities in Piedmont, Italy, was instituted in the electrification of the Turin-Pinerolo line, this section covering a popular route from Turin to the smaller towns and villages in the foot-hills of the Alps.

The building and loan associations, or cooperative banks of the United States, holding their quarter century anniversary meeting in Boston last week, represented 3,568,312 members or shareholders, and assets of $1,696,707,041.

The estimate of the area under sesame in British India and the crop yield in 1916-17, is 5,015,000 acres and 493,000 tons, respectively. This area is about equal in size to Massachusetts or New Jersey.

New Jersey peaches will this season, it is estimated, break all crop records of recent years. The New England crop is expected to reach 1,000,000 baskets.

The rice fields of Spain comprised 100,393 acres in 1916 and yielded 241,708 tons of rice. These fields are mostly in Valencia and Tarragona.

The total exports of crude rubber from Para and Manaos, Brazil, during May, 1917, amounted to 9,219,605 pounds.

From Jan. 1 to April 30 the exports of beans from Brazil have attained a total of 77,378,463 pounds, valued at $3,866,540.

Scientific Teaching in the Sunday School

LUCY HAYS REYNOLDS

SCIENTIFICALLY speaking, Christian instruction consists not alone of a correct statement of the letter; it must always be accompanied by the impartation of spiritualized consciousness. The Sunday school teacher can no more teach scientifically without depending upon the Christ-idea, than the practitioner can heal without this dependence. To suppose that Christian Science can be learned after the manner in which the learning of the schools is acquired is a grave mistake. We cannot gain any true understanding of Christian Science through merely reading and studying Science and Health; it is through the perpetual effort to live in accord with its teachings, and to apply them, that one attains a spiritual understanding and is able to impart to others the grand truths of Science.

Do we not by our very presence exhale the mental essence of our lives, regardless of spoken or unspoken words? Do we not impart the quality of the consciousness in which we are dwelling? If we are in a state of worry, sadness, resentment, or any kind of friction, we can hardly escape breathing it into the mental atmosphere of those around us, unless in our struggle against it we are bringing enough good to bear upon the error to counteract its hidden activities. On the other hand, if we are dwelling in a state of uplifted consciousness,—in faith, joy, and peace,—we shall impart a spiritual aroma that awakens receptivity, calls forth hidden spirituality, and brings out the very best in the pupil.

As Christian Scientists we are daily striving to take on this Christly essence and to surrender all that is mortal. To the degree that we succeed, we consciously and unconsciously impart the same spiritual aroma that healed the woman who touched the Master's garment. Without this spirit, no matter how clearly we may state the letter of Science, we have only the essence of human nature to impart, which though humanly worthy has not the power to heal or to inspire. Greatly do we need that rarefaction of thought which awakens the consciousness of every child to the presence and power of the Holy Ghost. That we dwell in a spiritualized state of consciousness is even more important than that we bring out the lesson, for the latter will unfold naturally and spontaneously when we get material sense out of the way. If the teacher but realizes the presence of the Christ-idea in his own consciousness, discouragement and self-depreciation will not tempt him, for he will depend upon this Christly presence to feed the children with all its simplicity and joy.

Realizing the great truth with which he is entrusted, the Sunday school teacher often finds it difficult to overcome a sense of personal responsibility. He may perceive theoretically the scientific truth that, since the one intelligence is omnipresent, true instruction consists of the orderly unfoldment of spiritual ideas, and yet find himself making hard work of his teaching and feeling dissatisfied with the results. He thinks, perchance, that some personal problem stands in the way of his manifesting the Christ-consciousness, and condemning himself he may plan to resign; yet these very problems, instead of serving as an excuse for not teaching, can be made opportunities for blessing his work. The unselfed desire to overcome his own difficulties for the sake of the children, brings him a higher incentive and gives Christly quality to his work. How earnestly the Master prayed for his disciples by praying for his own spirituality, when he said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." We cannot too faithfully apply that seventeenth chapter of John in our Sunday school work.

When we gain the vision of what we are to impart, it will be simply and naturally unfolded. Divine Truth imparts itself to human consciousness as easily as a flower gives forth its perfume, when human sense with all its mistaken efforts gets out of the way. When in time of need some thought flashes across one's mind and he is suddenly uplifted by its beauty and wonder, then to share it with others involves no effort. We tell it so joyously, so easily, that we forget all about ourselves. So in our teaching it is not a case of working laboriously to reduce the lesson to a nutshell to be pressed into the children's mentality; it is just "to tell the old, old story" as the divine ideas unfold. If we have actually seen the city that "lieth foursquare," we can talk about it freely and our faces will shine with its reflected glory. And how easily the children catch its contagious beauty and forget to be restless or mischievous in looking upon the picture we strive to interpret for them! How often after looking upon nature's beauties we forget ourselves in telling our friends about them, until they too enter into our "fulness of joy," whereas if we had tried to impress them with this beauty our efforts would have proved a failure.

When we ourselves are quickened and inspired by the glory and majesty of spiritual truth, the children will at once respond and become obedient to it. Then they will not care whether they are placed in this class or that, with their friends or with strangers; all these things become incidental, and the spiritual thought presented in the lesson is dominant.

All this is very well, one may say, but how are we to keep thought thus centered upon the spiritual teaching of the lesson, while surrounded by playful, restless children? In answering this question one is reminded of the musician who attended a church where the choir was singing out of tune. Just as he was about to leave because of the discord, he heard one voice singing in tune so sweetly, so tenderly, that he stopped to listen, and soon forgot all else, until a little later he realized that the other singers had also heard this voice and had caught the tune. Keeping our thought upon the spiritual idea rather than upon the children, we too will keep the tune until we are no longer troubled by their impulsiveness or mischief. From a material standpoint children are "sensual and mortal beliefs" (Science and Health, p. 583). We do not want our attention to be taken up with this particular kind of belief so much as with the Christ-idea which we are seeking to convey.

Scientific instruction is a matter of drawing out rather than of pouring in, for then the child's individuality has opportunity for unfoldment, and he may bring out far more than either he or the teacher realized he had to give. Sometimes, especially in the younger classes, much of our work seems to be mere repetition, and perhaps the children may complain of being kept so long upon the beatitudes and commandments. But if we realize that with every day's growth these beatitudes and commandments become new to us through unfoldment, we can show the pupils how they may discern the spiritual interpretation for themselves. Each repetition may be given from a higher plane of apprehension. Constantly seeking for spiritual unfoldment in our work, we shall rise from the academic to the inspirational; we shall break down the mental barriers that would shut off the child-consciousness from its rightful visions, and open up the way for it to hear the voice of Truth as clearly as did the child Samuel, and as did our Leader in her childhood.

Summing it up from a metaphysical standpoint, what a blessing the Sunday school work is to us all! We may feel that it makes many demands upon us and that we are doing it for the sake of the cause rather than for ourselves, but are we not really receiving "good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over"? The opportunity to fulfil these words of the Master is ours: "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward."

Awake in the Night

SAMUEL JOHNSTONE MACDONALD

WHEN a student of Christian Science with thought controlled by Truth and Love awakens in the night, angels come and minister unto him. These angels, as Mrs. Eddy explains on page 581 of Science and Health, are "God's thoughts passing to man; spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect; the inspiration of goodness, purity, and immortality, counteracting all evil, sensuality, and mortality." Through their gentle ministrations what before was believed to be insomnia is driven away and in its place come blessedness and joy and peace. The student learns through these loving, angelic lessons how to prove the truth of the psalmist's calm and confident declaration, "I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness."

The likeness of Life, Truth, and Love reveals itself in wondrous glimpses, and by patient growth in the spiritual understanding of "precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little," the individual human being is gradually transformed by the renewing of his mind, until he begins to reflect more clearly that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." He learns by degrees the truth of the statement on page 123 of Science and Health, that divine Science "resolves things into thoughts, and replaces the objects of material sense with spiritual ideas." He also learns to be patient, to lose belief in the necessity of haste, and to understand that the only wise way is to be content to "emerge gently from matter into Spirit" (p. 485).

For many years before being healed in Christian Science the writer was greatly troubled with what is known as insomnia. Lying awake for hours at night, a seemingly endless phantasmagoria of cares, regrets, fears, resentments, and retaliations, with all their evil retinue, would harass and torture the fevered sense. Not the least of the blessings and joys brought into consciousness by the sweet ministrations of Christian Science was the assurance of peaceful and restful sleep. It became a never ceasing wonder that without the aid of sedatives or soporifics one might lie down in peace, and sleep the balmy sleep of childhood. Then, while the joy and peace continued to abide, the first incredulous wonder passed away.

A period of study and of growth followed, which fully and joyously occupied consciousness until it was realized that the former things had passed away, and it was not even remembered any more that there had been a belief which took form as sleeplessness. If the student awakened at all in the night, it was only to the consciousness of peace and blessedness, and not to any alarm or dread of the return of the old and gruesome beliefs. But one night a mental suggestion claimed the floor and argued thus: "You claim to be healed of insomnia, but why? Are you not awake now, and have you not been awake for a long time? And are you not in the habit of lying awake at night? You may call it what you like and try to deceive yourself, but I maintain that it is still sleeplessness. Be honest, and own up like a man that it is insomnia and that you are not healed."

The only way to deal with error in any form is to face it squarely, without fear and without evasion; so this issue had to be met and decided without hesitation or equivocation. Is one unhealed if that one still awakens and lies awake in the night? The test is to be found not in the mere bare fact of wakefulness, but in the state of the consciousness which is awake. If the latter is characterized and burdened by fear, anxiety, remorse, and their attendant train, then truly healing is still deferred; but if, on the other hand, the awakening is to a realization that "the Lord God omnipotent reigneth;" that His reign is harmony, perfect, infinite, and eternal; and that Life, Truth, and Love are the only presence, present everywhere and present now, then indeed is the ghost of fear laid forever, the healing is perfect and complete; and then is brought to pass the saying that is written, "The kingdom of God is within you."

Gratitude to Mrs. Eddy

FLORENCE CLERIHEW BOYD

To the student of Christian Science it seems strange that any one should object to Christian Scientists expressing their gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, whether publicly or privately, though many can recall their own former impatience with such expressions. The writer had had many blessings from Truth before she was really grateful to the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. Gratitude came as the result of an experience which occurred in the first year's study of Mrs. Eddy's teachings.

The writer's baby had been taken seriously ill, and as the father was several hundred miles away, this added to the mother's sense of human responsibility. The efforts to realize the truth of being were earnest and sincere, but for six days the little one seemed to be growing steadily worse. During this time the mother had held the child in her arms night and day. Any attempt to lay her in her crib resulted in such moans that the human sense of love was stirred and the child was immediately gathered into the mother's arms. All efforts to study the daily Bible Lesson were futile, because it seemed impossible to hold both the child and the lesson books.

On the seventh day the evidence of illness was greater than it had been at any time before. The mother felt that she needed to know spiritual reality so well that her fear would be destroyed and she would rise above this evidence. All day she repeated Mrs. Eddy's words, "Enable us to know,—as in heaven, so on earth,—God is omnipotent, supreme" (Science and Health, p. 17), and prayed, "O God, enable me to know!" When at ten o'clock that night the baby slept, the mother laid the child in the crib and ran for her Quarterly, Bible, and Science and Health, then sat down, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, to feed on the bread of life. In the spiritual refreshment which followed there came "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding," and she was indeed enabled to know that "God is omnipotent, supreme." It was not necessary to look at the sleeping babe for evidence of improvement; it was not necessary to watch for the disappearance of the various symptoms which had characterized the illness. The calm of spiritual understanding had come, bringing the knowledge of God's presence and power.

Long after others of the household were asleep, the student lay awake, thanking God for Christian Science. Then her thought turned in gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, whose loving and unselfish labors had made this healing possible. She realized that her former Christian training had not enabled her in such a crisis as this to know God's power. Even her months of study and demonstration of Christian Science had not been enough. She needed to have clearly put before her the facts of life, so that she might be uplifted to perceive Christ, Truth. She had needed to study more deeply the Word of God; she had needed Science and Health itself.

Then she thought of Mrs. Eddy, for whom no one had written Science and Health, who had had no one to unlock the Bible for her, to explain the Master's words and works, who had not had the cheering testimonies in the Sentinel and Journal to encourage her in her demonstrations, but who had trod her pathway alone with God. What must have been our brave Leader's experience in those early days?

Remembering her own seven days of struggle, remembering how the darkness had been dispelled by the light which had been held aloft for her, the writer found herself flooded with gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, who had toiled and suffered that the world might be spared suffering, whose work had been done for her individually, as well as for all the world. Thinking on these things, she knew that never could she be separated from her Leader, never could she forget to be grateful that Mrs. Eddy had not worked for herself alone, but that her love had reached out to bless all mankind.

ESTHER B. MC LAUGHLIN

At a recent exhibition of motor boats a group of people were intently watching a special demonstration. Curious to know what could be holding their attention, a bystander glanced over the intervening heads and saw the prow of a miniature ship lurching violently from side to side, roughly simulating the behavior of a slender craft in a rolling sea. At that moment the man who seemed to be in charge stepped up and touched a button. In an instant the boat came to a standstill. The onlookers were all attention, some faces expressing credulity, and some skepticism, but all were intent on what was to happen.

The demonstrator, pointing to a piece of mechanism which consisted largely of a fly-wheel in the body of the boat, proceeded to tell his audience that he would show them how the boat would act when the gyroscope was in action. He explained that when the power was on this wheel would revolve very rapidly on its bearings, and the counter-force thus produced would neutralize that which was causing the boat to roll, thereby holding the craft in an upright position. He went on to say that the gyroscope did not need a counter-force to keep itself upright. Then he turned on the current. The looks of skepticism faded into expressions of wonder. Instead of the unruly rolling motion of a moment before, there was the boat upright and perfectly steady.

The analogy between the purpose of the gyroscope and that of Christian Science has appeared to at least one Christian Scientist as being very striking. As the action of the gyroscope absorbs the shock of the ocean waves, so the action of divine Mind, as understood in Christian Science, neutralizes the seeming force of error. As it is physically impossible for the waves to upset the gyroscope in action, so is it mentally impossible for error to unbalance the idea of divine Mind. A so-called material force cannot upset a spiritual condition. On page 306 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Undisturbed amid the jarring testimony of the material senses, Science, still enthroned, is unfolding to mortals the immutable, harmonious, divine Principle,—is unfolding Life and the universe, ever present and eternal."

How often in the busy life of a big city, or in some sharp and sudden catastrophe, have we all passed through crises when the thunderbolts of error seemed to be crashing all about us! At these times instinctively we have reached out—vaguely perhaps—for something to steady us, for the world has seemed to be reeling about us. Will-power and reliance on personality are but feeble props, soon swept from under us by the tide of seemingly overwhelming trouble. A correct understanding of the Science of being, however, will enable us to bear the onslaughts of error without a tremor. When these periods of stress come upon the working Christian Scientist, he too instinctively reaches out, not gropingly but with certainty, and lays hold upon the Christ, Truth, the saving idea of God. The understanding of Christian Science is his mental gyroscope. The realization that God's man is neither in nor of matter, but wholly spiritual, is sufficient to carry him safely through the most trying experience. This quick adjustment is entirely mental. The human sense has but steadied itself with the realization that the source of poise is divine Mind.

The sense of balance in the human body is supposed by some material scientists to be governed by the mechanism of the inner ear and to be intimately associated with the sense of sight. Such theories, however, are unsupported by conclusive evidence and therefore must go down before the fact that balance is purely a quality of Mind. On material scales only things possessing the like quality of weight can truly balance; and on the mental scales Mind must balance its equivalent, Mind. Since God is Mind and God is infinite, Mind is infinite; therefore there can be nothing to counterbalance divine intelligence and there can be nothing to upset or unbalance its state of perfect poise. The understanding of this fact is our mental gyroscope, which neutralizes the seeming force called evil by destroying it; and against it "the waves of sin, sorrow, and death beat in vain" (Science and Health, p. 203).

When an individual is said to be "mentally unbalanced," he is under the claim that matter can overbalance Mind, which is manifestly an absurdity, since Mind and matter have no common properties. Mind does not contain matter; neither does matter contain Mind. The equivalent of matter is an indefinable illusion, nothing; but the equivalent of Mind is substance, intelligence. The fact that lack of proper co-ordination in the physical members of the body is pointed out as a symptom of the so-called "unbalanced mind," is an unwitting admission on the part of alienists that poise is mental, not physical. As witness of this, observe the awkward movements of the erroneously styled "self-conscious" individual, the person who believes himself, for the time being at least, a separate entity. The only real self is God; and man's selfhood is His reflection.

On page 414 of our text-book we are told by our Leader that insanity yields more readily than other diseases to "the salutary action of truth," and that the arguments to be used in curing it are no different than those used in healing other false beliefs. Should we not then take courage in handling this enemy of social peace? Christian Scientists, with their understanding of Mind, should be the most normal of all people; for they know that the perfect balance of infinite Mind is unchanging and eternal.

The question as to what disposition is to be made of "unbalanced minds" is one that is coming forward aggressively in our civic consciousness. A sanity commission's recent report in one of the most populous states in the Union, if accepted as true, would be alarming but for the fact that we know Christian Science is at work, neutralizing the erroneous beliefs in mortal mind, purifying and steadying thought, and thereby helping all mankind.

Talking with God

THORWALD SIEGFRIED

Mortals will talk with God more when they are less busy talking to others or listening to themselves. The Bible plainly declares that God talks with man. It is recorded in the Revelation of St. John that upon opening the seventh seal, there was "silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." Mrs. Eddy states that "if people would confine their talk to subjects that are profitable," such silences "would happen very frequently on earth" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 339). What is true of the spoken word in this regard is also true of unspoken thoughts; if these thoughts are erroneous, they may occupy our attention and exclude angels from our consciousness, just as their audible counterparts seem to do. Mrs. Eddy has also pointed out that "if we observe our mental processes, we shall find that we are perpetually arguing with ourselves" (Unity of Good, p. 21). This mortal clatter of argument, self-justification, and fear is what hides from us the continuous and sustaining utterances of divine Truth.

Whenever one finds his moments of thought filled with the useless speculations and arguments of mortal mind, he has a perfect remedy, and one which removes mountains of error, in substituting communion with the divine Mind for the aimless whirl of counterfeit thinking. Nevertheless, as Paul points out, "he that cometh to God must believe that he is," because obviously no one will address himself to God unless he is quite certain of His presence. The experiment of making this substitution of the divine for the human brings peace as its reward, and also uncovers the reason for previous discords in our lives. Suppose the student of Christian Science is offered two similar positions for employment, in which the selection of the better one seems both a matter of consequence and of uncertainty. He may be tempted to question whether he had better take this or that, whether he had better act as though the new position would be a success or a failure, and whether there may be hidden factors rendering either or both less desirable than they seem to be. This line of thinking is far removed from spiritual assurance, and it leads to confusion; it illustrates the perpetual dialogue which mortal mind holds with itself.

Now let the perplexed one take his problem to God in prayer and note the change. Understanding that God is not a magnified human being, but is infinite Spirit, Mind, intelligence, and that therefore communion with Him must be mental and consist in knowing the truth, he alters the pattern of his thinking, and must of necessity address God in terms of affirmation, confidence, and victory. The obvious impropriety of asking the infinite Mind a question based upon doubt, forbids even the framing of such an inquiry. The seeker for help will know first that there is no separation between God and His idea, man; then, that man's real business, and his only business, is to express godlike qualities, and that what seems to be a change of occupation merely calls for a clearer perception of the eternal fact about the only business any man ever had. It finally becomes clear to him that whatever is true about the conditions before him is perfectly known to God, and that trusting one's problem entirely to this perfect Mind for solution is the best means for finding in God "a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Here may follow the peace which comes from knowing that with every human question there lies the divine answer; and when the earnest seeker breaks forth with a grateful "Father, I thank thee," he will know by inspiration from wisdom itself just what choice to make.

Suppose the problem concerns a whole industry and is prompted by overwhelming present demands for its products. Here, again, to rely on the various mortal opinions about the business would be only to lead sooner or later to failure. Whatever is true and helpful in the business is protected by omnipotent wisdom; even the familiar illustration of a fish immersed in the ocean suffers the limitations of all material symbols in its inability to portray fully the intimacy between the creator and His creation; that is to say, between Mind and idea. The former is the very essence of the latter, rendering the latter no less immortal, invincible, or invulnerable than the former. This intimacy is of the nature of understanding; human conversation bears but a faint resemblance to the depth of its penetration and the clarity of its revelations, and he who experiences it talks with God as definitely as he may believe that he talks with any human being.

The recognition of these facts about all human problems and the people concerned with them will prevent attempted expansion of what should be restricted and restriction of what should be expanded. Such recognition will inevitably banish the confused arguments about the problem so universal in mortal thought, and will promote a communion between the Christian Scientist and divine Principle, based on absolute truth, that will lead to glorified adoration in the one and changeless benediction from the other.

"Tired children"

TRUMAN H. RICE

On page 322 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "The sharp experiences of belief in the supposititious life of matter, as well as our disappointments and ceaseless woes, turn us like tired children to the arms of divine Love."

The answer to the question, How is it that so many theatrical people take up Christian Science? is simple enough. Like the "tired children" of whom Mrs. Eddy speaks, often sick and discouraged besides, they accept the truth as a thirsty plant drinks in water. After being thrust about the world, they usually appreciate a loving thought whenever it is offered. And what a blessing is brought to these people, hungering after righteousness, when unselfish love takes the place of jealousy and self-seeking! Christian Science makes it easier for them to bear absence from home and family, knowing that space cannot divide those whose thoughts are united in Truth.

It is no unusual thing in these days to hear, over or through a dressing room partition, the words of our revered Leader being read from Science and Health,—words of comfort and assurance that make one forget the noise of fitting stage paraphernalia and the sounds from the orchestra. Those in the profession who are studying Christian Science benefit much by the loving and helpful answers given by Scientists to their sometimes rather challenging questions. If we happen to visit a small town where there is a church or society with but a few members, we have only to think how at one time Christian Science was known by one loving woman alone, and how happy she would have been could she have had just a few such loyal and loving students.

In the theatrical world one is often led to notice in the building of a theater the careless construction of dressing rooms. An apparently beautiful theater may have only a miserable basement for the performers to dress in; but those who have accepted Christian Science do not allow the dampness and dirt to mar their happiness, remembering that God is ever present, and that in the divine ever-presence there is "fulness of joy." We find that it is "giving" which brings us close to the "living" of the truth. We give more attention than heretofore to our room, where Christian Science books are in sight, so that one who sees what is being studied may also see a spotless room. These little things often help to plant the seed in a hungry heart.

Even the materialist hardly expects a Christian Science student to go from imperfection to perfection at one leap. In proportion as we are helping ourselves and the world in right living and giving, and doing our part in teaching all mankind how to be happy today, the past becomes a closed book, and a doubtful future is put aside for this great eternal now. There is one real business, and that is the Father's business; and to be always about this business is to live the truth. We also learn that there is great pleasure in helping others to see that their health and happiness are of God.

Let the reader try to imagine a troubled mortal, drifting around the globe in search of happiness, seeking for an "unknown God" to heal his sickness, poverty, and sin, all the while praying to God but at the same time using drugs and every material system to aid Him. It was in such a dark hour as this that Mrs. Eddy's book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" was carelessly opened for the first time by the writer, and the words, "There is no power apart from God" (p. 228), were read. Closing the book, he pondered this thought-awakening statement. If the only power is God, whence comes this seeming power to abuse men, to mislead them and make them miserable? Whence comes the seeming power of bad habits, hate, and selfishness? Seeing the unreality of evil from that time on, and treasuring up the loving thoughts which were gathered here and there from the study of the Lesson-Sermons, from attendance at the lectures and the church services, the student has accumulated a wonderful store of spiritual blessing, and Mrs. Eddy's declaration quoted above, "There is no power apart from God," has indeed been proven.

It does not appear miraculous when musicians demonstrate musical harmony, for they study harmony, not discord. Neither should harmonious life appear miraculous when demonstrated by Christian Scientists, since they study all-harmonious Life, Truth, and Love. The true Scientist takes his problem to God, and after leaving it in the Father's hands he never fears or doubts, but knows a way will be shown for him to master every phase of error.

Here the writer would express thankfulness for the help so often found through the Christian Science periodicals. In so doing he is conscious of expressing gratitude to our beloved Leader, who first planted this heavenly vineyard and has instructed us to keep it watered and tended.

The Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, is used by Christian Scientists as a commentary on the Bible. Many of them were led to the study of Science and Health after having failed to get relief through material remedies from sickness which in certain cases had afflicted them for long periods of time; and many have been healed of bodily troubles, as well as of defects of character, through reading this book understandingly. While they have been studying it they have found the Bible becoming more and more an open book to them, and a mine of spiritual knowledge. In fact, Mrs. Eddy's discovery of Christian Science and her subsequent elucidation of the divine Principle which heals, were due to her devoted study of the Bible. This she acknowledges on page 110 of Science and Health, where she says, "The Bible was my only text-book."

Christian Science is concerned with Life and Life's activities, and with the destruction of the belief in death entertained by mortals. It was Paul who declared to the Corinthian church, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Now in Christian Science every deduction which is made is logically drawn from the absolute truth about God. God is infinite Life. In infinite Life there cannot possibly exist that which claims to be the very opposite of Life, what mortals call death. Christian Science holds that reality alone originates in God and is sustained by spiritual law, and that reality must in consequence alone possess the qualities of the divine nature. Evil, disease, and death are unreal because they have no divine cause, God being infinite good. Christian Science therefore declares them to be false beliefs of mortal mind, of the "carnal mind," which Paul said "is enmity against God." It is these errors of belief which perish, or which truth destroys. Christ Jesus healed, through his spiritual understanding of truth or reality, all manner of sickness and sin, and raised into active life again those who had fallen into the deep sleep of death. He knew that every phase of evil was a lie against the truth, against the spiritual fact of the omnipresence of God, good.

The word devil stands for the personified sense of evil. It was among many names used by Eastern peoples to typify evil, the lie against good; and Jesus very definitely emphasized its false nature when he said to the boastful Jews of his day: "Ye are of your father the devil . . . He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." The false sense of things alone can perish; and this false sense of things is the carnal, material, or sensuous mentality frequently designated by the word soul in the Bible, in contradistinction to spiritual sense, which is the spiritual understanding of the omnipresence and omnipotence of good.

The effort of a public speaker to besmirch the character of a good Christian woman and hold up to ridicule the church she founded, reminds one of the persecution of Jesus of Nazareth by the religious leaders in his day. The Master was indicted on several counts. They hurled vile epithets at him, accusing him of being a winebibber and a glutton. They accused him of doing his works through Beelzebub. They hounded him as a criminal, and finally succeeded in nailing him to the cross. What had Jesus done that the religious leaders were so enraged and wanted to kill him? Was it not because he came teaching a more spiritual doctrine, and proved his faith by his works? When the people would no longer listen to his words, Jesus pleaded with them to consider his works of healing.

Mrs. Eddy brought to this age a message of great spirituality, and has so taught the gospel of Christ Jesus that signs of healing the sick have followed, even as the Master promised. That day has passed for an intelligent man to refer to Christian Science as a sham religion, or to assert that Christian Science does not heal the sick. Hundreds of thousands of men and women in our country have been healed through Christian Science of almost all kinds of disease, and they include ministers, physicians, bankers, business men, judges, attorneys, and many in the common walk of life. This healing work is going on daily.

Not only does Christian Science heal disease, but it also heals sin. It is bringing surcease from sorrow; it is reforming the drunkard; it is leading men and women out of infidelity and atheism and giving them an intelligent, demonstrable understanding of God. Through Christian Science people are led to read and to love the Bible, and a greater desire is awakened to follow in the footsteps of Christ Jesus. The earnest seeker after truth need not go outside of his own city to find evidence of the good that Christian Science is doing in the world. The apostle James wrote, "Show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works."

The effort to defame the character of Mrs. Eddy and to misrepresent and pervert her teachings will fail, for if Christian Science had not been founded upon the rock, Christ, it would have perished long ago. It would scarcely be possible to gain a true estimate of the life of Jesus or of Paul by listening to lectures by men who hated both Jesus and Paul. To gain a correct estimate of Jesus' life one should read the record left by Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, men who loved Jesus' teachings. No one can ever gain an intelligent, unbiased estimate of the life of Mrs. Eddy by listening to lectures by her enemies.

Christian Scientists do not endeavor to isolate themselves, nor do they endeavor to avoid contact with the rest of humanity; on the contrary, Christian Science is becoming universally known as the one religion which its adherents take into and apply to every human activity every day and every hour. It is, therefore, not as a means of achieving or maintaining a splendid isolation that Christian Scientists wish to have the clear distinction between their religion and others preserved, but rather as a means of avoiding confusion in the public thought as to what Christian Science really is.

Confusion is peculiarly likely to result if the statement goes unchallenged that Christian Science and New Thought are similar, because the latter "affirms the omnipotence, omniscience, and omnipresence of God," and is "affirmative from beginning to end." There is just enough superficial similarity in the mere form of words between such a statement and the declaration of truth as taught in Christian Science, that the unwary may be ensnared by them; and it may fairly be pointed out that the allness of God, considering now merely the form of words, is a doctrine that is held by the most outspoken pantheism, on the one hand, and by the purest monotheism, Christian Science, on the other, not to enumerate varying shades of belief that lie between.

Whether any system that affirms the allness of God is teaching, wholly or partially, a pantheistic doctrine of confusion, or whether it is teaching pure monotheism as Christian Science does, may be clearly seen not only in what it affirms but also, and from a human viewpoint often more definitely, in what it denies. Thus we understand better what Christ Jesus meant by the statement that Spirit gives life, because of the annexed denial, "The flesh profiteth nothing." We know better that all true action is of God, because Christ Jesus coupled with a statement of his obedience to divine Spirit a denial that he could do anything of himself. Likewise, when Balak sought out Balaam and wished him to exercise hypnotic power against the children of Israel in the desert, the latter found himself powerless; in the book of Numbers we have a graphic account of his effort to explain the futility of Balak's desire to him, and it is instructive to note what emphasis Balaam laid upon a denial of Balak's misconceptions, as the best means of setting him right. Thus he said, "God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent . . . He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel . . . Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel." These denials cleared the ground, so to speak, for an intelligible affirmation of God's all-inclusiveness in the words, "He hath blessed; and I cannot reverse it."

It is not unusual to find that those laboring under a misapprehension of the true nature of Christian Science will aver their willingness to accept its affirmations and a hearty unwillingness to accept its denials. By this they should be warned that their concept of Christian Science needs correction; like the Bible, the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, couples denial of the specific error with the enunciation of truth. The text-book is woven in a seamless web, and is without contradiction or inconsistency, either within itself and its terms or in truth. On page 468 of that book Mrs. Eddy has given the world the "scientific statement of being." By it one can readily test the similarity alleged to exist between other systems of teaching and Christian Science. The statement contains the affirmation, "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all." Many are willing to accept that portion of it who are unwilling for the present to subscribe to the preceding denial, "There is no life, truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter." Without the latter the former may be degraded to the use of attributing matter, sin, disease, and death, to the divine Mind, God, and thereby corrupting into shallow pantheism a teaching which, if consistently put into practice uncontaminated by materialism, will lead the world into the light of pure monotheism.

[W. Stuart Booth in Larimer County Democrat, Fort Collins, Col.]

It is now forty-two years since Mrs. Eddy first published "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Its teachings have been verified abundantly in the healing of all manner of disease, as well as in the reformation from sinful habits and appetites, and in the spiritual awakening testified to so often by its beneficiaries. Any honest seeker for light on this subject will have no difficulty in finding proof that the Christian Science healing of today is no more limited to hysteria than was the Science of Christianity when practised by Christ Jesus and his early followers.

Because it is human nature to attempt the explanation of all things from one's own personal viewpoint, it is not surprising that this writer should have voiced his misconception by speaking of Christian Science as "mental chloroform." As Paul has said, "The natural [or as Weymouth translates it, unspiritual] man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Instead of being a mental sedative Christian Science, because it is based wholly and solely upon the Bible and is consistent therewith in both precept and practice, is the most powerful spiritual stimulant the world has known since the first century of the Christian era.

The statement that the cure wrought by Christian Science "may be quite scientific, but it is no more divine than a doctor's prescription," is quite on a par with that made by the opponents of Jesus when they attempted to discredit his healing works by attributing them to "Beelzebub the prince of the devils." The Pharisees who said that, blinded as they were to spiritual truth by their material conceptions, no doubt believed what they claimed, but their false sense of things affected the truth of the Science of Christianity not at all. And similar misstatements about Christian Science, although repeated continually, have not and can not hinder its growth, for Christian Science is the message of God to this age, and as such is meeting every need of men.

The writings of Mrs. Eddy confirm the statement that "no cult or combination ever got a corner on any of God's gifts to men," for on page 12 of Science and Health we read: "In divine Science, where prayers are mental, all may avail themselves of God as 'a very present help in trouble.' Love is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals;" and on page 140: "The Christian Science God is universal, eternal, divine Love, which changeth not and causeth no evil, disease, nor death."

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Stewartry Observer, Dalbeattie, Scotland]

In the report of a recent sermon there is a reference to Christian Science which needs correction. The preacher said: "Rarely, indeed, do we find a minister of today preaching the necessity for Jesus' death as the redemption price for the sins of the world. Why is this? Some would answer that they have become Christian Scientists and no longer believe that there is such a thing as death; and that hence they could not believe that Jesus died for sins." Christian Science teaches, in conformity with the Bible, that death is the result of sin. On page 472 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes: "The only reality of sin, sickness, or death is the awful fact that unrealities seem real to human, erring belief, until God strips off their disguise. They are not true, because they are not of God."

According to both Matthew and Mark, Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God before he was crucified. The crucifixion could not therefore be included in his gospel (good news) of the kingdom of God. The real cross which Jesus bore, and which every follower of our Master must also bear till he has overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil is, as Mrs. Eddy writes on page 50 of Science and Health, "the world's hatred of Truth and Love." Christian Science teaches how to overcome sin and its effects through the spiritual understanding of Life, Truth, and Love.

[Peter V. Ross in Porterville (Cal.) Recorder]

It is historically true that during the first three centuries not only the apostles, but Christians generally, healed the sick as Jesus healed them, that is, by prayer and spiritual means only. Christian Science is simply bringing to light and applying to human ills the Principle whereby Jesus and the early Christians wrought their works of healing, and is proving that the Principle has lost none of its efficacy with the lapse of centuries, but can be invoked at any time by any person in proportion to his understanding of and consecration to the Master's teachings.

Our clerical critic declares that Christian Science is not "a whole gospel." Yet this is precisely what Christian Science is, inasmuch as it obeys not only the Master's injunction to preach the gospel but also his command to heal the sick. If Christian Science differentiated healing from preaching and practised only the latter, it might justly be regarded as "a partial gospel;" but such is not the case, as every one knows. The language of Mrs. Eddy on page 142 of Science and Health is most apposite in this connection: "Anciently the followers of Christ, or Truth, measured Christianity by its power over sickness, sin, and death; but modern religions generally omit all but one of these powers,—the power over sin. We must seek the undivided garment, the whole Christ, as our first proof of Christianity, for Christ, Truth, alone can furnish us with absolute evidence."

The clergyman seems to regard Christian Science as a partial gospel because it relies on prayer alone and makes no use of medicine. Can he point to any case where Jesus resorted to medicine or mingled it with prayer? Can he refer to any therapeutic system, based either upon medicine alone or upon a mixture of medicine and prayer, that has made any approach to infallibility or that gives any assurance of successfully coping with human suffering? Then why should he argue that Christian Scientists ought to abandon healing through prayer alone, especially when he knows, or at least might know upon the most cursory investigation, that Christian Science is effecting cures where the composite method which he advocates has proved a failure?

The clerical critic objects that in the Christian Science churches there is no personal preaching, but simply reading from the Bible and Science and Health. The people who make up the congregation, however, raise no objection to this form of service; it holds their attention and lifts their thought to that point where sickness and sensualism begin to fade from consciousness and lose their reality. Healing of both disease and sin is continually going on at Christian Science services. This is a practical refutation of any argument in favor of personal preaching. In fact, as Mrs. Eddy says, "the error of the ages is preaching without practice" (Science and Health, p. 241).

The clergyman contends vigorously for the reality of matter and for the reliability of the physical senses. He says that if matter is not real, he does not see how we can know anything about God. A most remarkable statement this, for any one who believes the Bible doctrine that God is incorporeal Spirit, Mind, Life, Love, and moreover is all-presence and all-power, will wonder where there is any space for matter to fill or any function for it to perform. He will have no difficulty in accepting the Christian Science teaching that matter is not real substance, but rather a false concept of real substance, held and believed in by the human mind as though it were actual. Every one must admit that we do not see things as they are. The five corporeal senses are the glass through which we see darkly. By reliance on them the human mind takes a distorted or perverted view of all things, and this perversion or distortion constitutes matter. The belief that matter is real substance shuts out the true idea of Deity, and is the cause of all sin, sickness, and sorrow.

It is very true, as the clergyman intimates, that Christian Science regards disease as a state of thought or consciousness, not a physical fact, and hence that cures are accomplished through a correction of thought and a change in consciousness. This transformation of mind is brought about by application of the truth that disease, however real it may seem to human sense, has no actual existence or presence, but is an illusory belief only. Any one who will apply himself to the study of Christian Science may prove the truth of these statements.

Editorial

Notice

By unanimous action the following changes in the personnel of the officers of The Mother Church and of The Christian Science Publishing Society are announced:—

Edward A. Merritt, C.S.B., has been elected a member of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

William P. McKenzie, C.S.B., has been elected Editor of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, and Der Herold der Christian Science.

John R. Watts, C.S., has been elected Manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society to succeed Mr. Ogden.

David B. Ogden, C.S.B., and Lamont Rowlands, C.S., have been elected Trustees of The Christian Science Publishing Society to succeed Mr. McKenzie and Mr. Merritt respectively.

Mr. Merritt is a native of Marquette, Mich. He became interested in Christian Science in 1887 and is a graduate of the 1901 Normal Class of the Massachusetts Metaphysical College. For five years Mr. Merritt served as committee on publication for Ohio, and his other activities have included those of practitioner, reader, teacher, member of the Board of Lectureship, Trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, and President of The Mother Church. Mr. Merritt has also been identified with large business interests in Cleveland during these years.

Mr. McKenzie became a member of The Mother Church in October, 1894, and served as an Executive Member for a number of years. He has also served as a practitioner, reader, teacher, member of the Bible Lesson Committee, Trustee of The Christian Science Publishing Society, member of the Board of Lectureship and President of The Mother Church. He is a graduate of the last Normal Class of the Massachusetts Metaphysical College taught by Mrs. Eddy in 1898. Prior to his active interest in Christian Science Mr. McKenzie was engaged in educational work and the ministry.

Mr. Watts is a native of Louisville, Ky. He became interested in Christian Science in 1908. Since 1913 Mr. Watts has been associated with The Christian Science Publishing Society and for some time past has served as assistant to the Manager. He is a graduate of the University of Louisville with the degree of LL.B., and practised law in the courts of Kentucky, New York, Massachusetts, and in the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. Ogden, a native of Milwaukee, Wis., began the study of Christian Science in 1888, while a student at Griswold College, Davenport, Iowa. He is a graduate of the 1907 Normal Class of the Massachusetts Metaphysical College. He was one of the organizers of First Church of Christ, Scientist, Tacoma, Wash.; served as reader for First Church of Christ, Scientist, Portland, Ore.; as committee on publication for Oregon, and in January, 1908, he was elected Manager of The Christian Science Publishing Society and has continued in that capacity during the past nine years. Mr. Ogden was a civil engineer by profession and for fourteen years was United States assistant engineer in charge of Government river and harbor work.

Mr. Rowlands is a native of Michigan. He became interested in Christian Science about fourteen years ago, and joined The Mother Church in 1905. In addition to his long experience as executive in charge of large industrial interests, with headquarters in Chicago, he has been continuously active as a working Christian Scientist, having devoted a portion of his time to the practice and also having served in branch churches as a reader and a director.

Go Forward

Those who fear danger halt and hesitate, and in hesitance is danger. In the place where they ought to be, no danger is; but if they pause where they should not be, the safety that awaits them they do not make their own. The Israelites in their exodus from the land of bondage camped by the shores of the Red Sea. A mountain ridge fenced them on the second of three sides. So they were hemmed in and helpless, as they thought, when the word came that Pharaoh's army, with chariots and horsemen, was marching amid dust-clouds from the side of the desert to take them in a cul de sac. Supine and inert the people stood, ready prey for the bow and spear of the warriors. Their politicians began to complain and clamor, and to show how badly everything had been done. Moses tried to reassure the people that the evil prophecies would not be fulfilled, for the claim the people made was that it would have been much better to have continued to serve the Egyptians than thus to die in the wilderness.

Then came the word of the Lord to Moses: "Wherefore criest thou unto me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." The army was behind, the mountain wall beside, the sea in front; yet to go forward into the very wave was the safe way and the only way out of danger,—the only way to the expected land. This land of promise, with its rich pastures and bee-haunted flowers,—"a land flowing with milk and honey,"—would be forever unreached were there no going forward.

Likewise in life, all worth-while attainments are for those who watch and work. The backward child is simply one who has not gone forward. The complainant asking pity is pitiable only because the blessing he should have had he did not march forward to possess. The invalid dallies with symptoms and feelings, and lies prostrate instead of having courage to obey Truth, which says, Rise and walk. The prodigal waits to go on caring for the swine a little longer, indecisive as to arising from the husk-strewed earth and beginning the journey to his father's house. The politician bemists himself with sound and fury of words, so that there may seem to be activity but no progress, much sound of the hammer but nothing actually builded. Meanwhile life and liberty, hope and inspiration, humanity and divinity, are calling mankind to go forward.

To what end shall we make this progress? If we must go forward, whereto? Surely to one goal, and that is to know God. Mrs. Eddy has stated this succinctly in Science and Health (p. 496): "We all must learn that Life is God." Short of this goal we may entertain many erroneous beliefs about life. We may even be as the coward, and die many deaths through our fears and false beliefs; yet actually die man cannot, God being Life, and man the expression of infinite Mind, which is Life.

Are we as Christian Scientists really satisfied that we have in prospect not merely a land of Canaan worth an exodus from Egypt, worth a Red Sea crossing, worth a wilderness journey, but—what is more wonderful by far—the opportunity to know what Life eternally is? If we are, we shall not continue indecisive and inert, like the blind man waiting for some one to take him by the hand. We shall not wait, blaming some one else for the fact that we have not advanced in the understanding of supreme good and perfect Mind. We shall not cater to the fleshly mind a little longer, like the sluggard who caters to sleep, till one knows his case by the broken vineyard walls overgrown with nettles. We shall be courageous in accepting Truth, which, as Mrs. Eddy says, "regenerates this fleshly mind and feeds thought with the bread of Life" (Science and Health, p. 222).

We must remember that thinking rules the world, and that wrong thinking needs to be corrected. In this correction, when one begins with himself, he finds that prayer is potency whereby honest desire reaches high heaven. The duty of all those who understand is very clearly set forth in our textbook, where on page 96 Mrs. Eddy says, regarding conditions we now seem to be facing, "During this final conflict, wicked minds will endeavor to find means by which to accomplish more evil; but those who discern Christian Science will hold crime in check." What is the great crime of the era but that mental suggestion whereby men call evil good; and being led to misunderstand good, call it evil? It is quite true that Jesus, when sending his disciples to face and fight the error of that time, said, "Be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves;" but this does not mean that we are to whisper our sentiments lest any one hear and be offended, nor that with desire to be innocuous we become quite inert.

Genuine Christian Scientists are and must continue to be thinkers. They begin with one Mind, and bring to manifestation the order and harmony which springs from infinite intelligence. What if "the rulers of the darkness of this world" do object to the speaking of the truth which will dispossess them of their control over human beings? The Christian Scientist must speak the word of God, and that word is, "Let there be light."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

The Science of Liberty

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE has come into the world giving humanity real liberty. It came through that inspired woman, Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. Liberty is the natural gift of God. Paul said, "I was free born," and the statement meant much to him from the standpoint of his Roman citizenship; but a freedom far transcending any national classification rewards the spiritually-minded in every land through Christian Science. Jesus pointed the way to liberty for man when he said, "Ye must be born again." The hidebound beliefs of scholasticism are being broken up for the simple seeker for truth who recognizes in Christian Science the advent of the glorious liberty of the sons of God.

The heart of man has been craving for liberty throughout all ages. A certain quality of liberty is expressed by the birds soaring in the air and by the flowers unfolding in sunshine and dew. Years upon years have been devoted to the cause of liberty by man. No tyranny of church or state has ever been able to maintain itself permanently against this urgent desire. The material sciences of government, political economy, and social relations have again and again been convulsed and overturned by the irresistible determination of humanity to be free. That such revolutions have not resulted in finally settled conditions is due to the fact that the science of liberty was unknown until the discovery of Christian Science.

Christian Science gives liberty and true science to all the material sciences, breaking the limitations imposed upon them by false belief. Astronomy, physics, chemistry, mechanics, anatomy, medicine, conceived by the mind of man as material, in reality have their spiritual counterparts as true sciences through the law of God, which knows no limitation. Time also, as a factor in the arts and sciences, disappears when the work is done under the love and joyousness of God. The world of music as long as it is materialized in thought cannot know the full harmonies which are found only in the exact Science of God and in the free action of inspiration.

Genius is the quality which enables men to transcend material rule. It breaks the bounds of the world and becomes a law unto itself in obeying the law of God. Thus genius, instead of being abnormal or spasmodic, is really natural with God and scientific according to spiritual understanding. Genius is quickly recognized by the heart and head of mankind, even though its spiritual basis escapes human ken. The very eccentricities of genius may be the counterfeits of spiritual qualities, or of those unrecognized divine qualities which prove man's real origin in God.

Christian Science, being the Science of Mind, gives liberty to the human mind, but only in so far as that mind is a willing tool of the divine. Mere intellectualism, or the so-called science of psychology, confining itself to the dissection of the human mind's vagaries, fetters mind instead of giving it liberty. No form of tyranny can equal in remorselessness the subtler, supposed high potencies of mortal mind activity, generally grouped under the heading of occultism. The individual who seeks for liberty under the various isms which preach liberated thought will presently find himself bereft of all liberty to think and do good. The divine Science of Mind ushers man into the eternity of liberty. Within the compassionate folds of its mantle only protection is found, never punishment or penalty. Humanity may safely intrust itself to that Mind which is both Principle and Love.

Among the nations of the world the United States of America stands preeminently for liberty. Its motto is, "In God we trust," and at the entrance of the harbor of its greatest city stands a statue of Liberty, the love-gift of another liberty-loving nation. Its foundation of religious liberty and its love of freedom have attracted kindred thoughts from all over the world. This is the home land of Christian Science, the cradle of that complete liberty which comes as the result of spiritual understanding of God, and now reigns all over the world, healing, saving, and comforting. The eagle of inspiration hovers over the world today as a guardian of liberty, making freemen out of the slaves of fear. Mrs. Eddy says on page 227 of Science and Health: "Christian Science raises the standard of liberty and cries: 'Follow me! Escape from the bondage of sickness, sin, and death!' Jesus marked out the way. Citizens of the world, accept the 'glorious liberty of the children of God,' and be free! This is your divine right."

What God Hath Joined Together

STUDENTS of Christian Science cannot do better than to study ofttimes their Leader's statements regarding the value of the Bible as these appear throughout her writings. It is both cheering and inspiring to note the high estimate which Mrs. Eddy places upon the Scriptures, and in Section 1 of Article IV of the Manual we learn that in order to become a member of The Mother Church one must use "for self-instruction in Christian Science" the Bible and Science and

Digitized by Google

Health. In Section 1 of Article XIV we find that Mrs. Eddy ordained the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" as "Pastor over The Mother Church;" and we surely cannot hold this Pastor in too great reverence, nor seek counsel therefrom too often.

In reading the Bible we find that Christ Jesus was a close student of the Scriptures. In his tremendous and decisive struggle in the wilderness, as given in the first three gospels, we find that he used the word of truth from the older Scriptures as each specific temptation presented itself; and through his understanding of this word the victory was gained. We are told that he used a statement from the ninety-first psalm respecting the ministry of angels, and again that at the close of the temptation the devil left him and "angels came and ministered unto him." It goes without saying that our Master did not depend upon the mere letter which "killeth," but upon the spiritual sense of the Word, which is always demonstrable. In the fourth chapter of Luke we are told that when he read from the prophecy of Isaiah he declared that this Scripture was being fulfilled in their midst, and that the truth therein contained could heal disease of every sort; and his ministry gave ample proof that the word of God is endowed with infinite power.

From Science and Health and all of our Leader's other writings we discover that she too was a close student of the Scriptures. On page 168 of "Miscellaneous Writings" we find extracts from a sermon given by her in Hawthorne Hall many years ago from the text, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." In this sermon she gave a strong tribute to the value of the Bible when she declared that she had found within its pages "all the divine Science" which she was preaching. Perhaps the most significant statement in this connection is as follows: "Whenever her thoughts had wandered into the bypaths of ancient philosophies or pagan literatures, her spiritual insight had been darkened thereby, till she was God-driven back to the inspired pages." She also said that her long years of invalidism resulted from "the misinterpretation of the Word" which had been given her in her early days, and which was not removed until the truth of being dawned upon her. With this divine revelation the Scriptures were illumined, and "physical rejuvenation" and "uplifting of spirit" was the result.

This has also been the happy experience of unnumbered thousands who have found the truth of being and the truth of the Bible through Mrs. Eddy's teachings, and that, too, without the prolonged efforts which marked the path of the way-shower in this age. The Bible is indeed our great treasure-house, and it should be our joy to read it daily in the light of Christian Science and to teach it to our children, being assured that in no other way can we help them to lay the foundations of health, harmony, holiness, and prosperity, than through a deep acquaintance with the word of God, as found in the Bible and in Science and Health.

It is well to know that what God hath joined together the belief of mortal mind cannot put asunder. There are those outside of Christian Science who would argue that the Bible is sufficient for all human need, but such a belief would tend to shut out that which was so clearly promised by the Master himself, who declared: "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." To this he added that a further revelation would come in the fulness of time, and that the "Spirit of truth" would bring to their remembrance all that he had taught. Those who are healed in Christian Science know that it is indeed the promised Comforter which heals and blesses humanity and glorifies our great Master.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Services (during July and August): 10:45 a.m.; Sunday School, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post-office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The La Porte homestead, one of the old landmarks of Tremont, is to make way for a church edifice in the near future. The property is located at the northwest corner of Echo Place and Anthony Avenue, and consists of a plot 100 by 95 feet, now occupied by the La Porte residence of Revolutionary fame. Sixth Church of Christ, Scientist, has purchased the property for the purpose of erecting a place of worship there.—New York Herald.

KEOKUK, IOWA.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, has purchased the property at 616 High Street, and is remodeling it for church purposes. The first service will be held June 17. The property is one of the best known of the old residences of Keokuk, having been formerly the home of Judge Mooar.—Gate City and Constitution-Democrat.

LOWELL, MASS.—Ground has been broken at the corner of Nesmith and Andover Streets for the new edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, and the work will be pushed ahead as rapidly as building material can be secured. The lower part of the structure will be completed within a few months, according to the contractor.—Lowell Sun.

The Lectures

EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by T. P. Laird, who said in part: —

It is just fifteen years ago since the first lecture on Christian Science was given in Edinburgh, and that was also the first in Scotland. I remember it well, for it was my privilege on that occasion to introduce the lecturer. Christian Science was in its infancy in this country at that time, and there were many misconceptions and misunderstandings about it; but thanks largely to lectures on this subject, these have to a great extent been removed. Much, however, has still to be done to bring home to the world what Christian Science really stands for and how convincing and satisfying it is as a religion. In such a time as this of warfare and stress Christian Science is meeting the needs of many by giving them a guiding Principle in their lives; and when readjustment comes, after this war is over and peace is again with us, when there will be many wounds to heal and blanks to fill, I am sure Christian Science with its healing message for all the world will be sought after and welcomed in a way it has never been before.

MELROSE, MASS. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by John C. F. Slayton, who said in part:—

It is indeed a wonderful discovery made by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, that the Principle, or spiritual law, which animated the man Christ Jesus, is as available and practical today as nineteen centuries ago. To say that there is a Science of Christianity, scientific and true in its every relation to human needs, is to make a statement which if susceptible of demonstration is of greater value to mankind than anything which the human mind could conceive. St. Paul says, "I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision." If we desire a greater breadth of vision, a broader usefulness, and a greater freedom from all that is unlike good, then let us listen to the voice of Truth, and the truth shall indeed make us free.—The Melrose News.

CLEVELAND, OHIO (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Salem A. Hart, Jr., who said in part:—

Christian Science was discovered and its wonderful truth brought to light by Mary Baker Eddy in 1866. In our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy has given to the world a writing which has probably done more for humanity than any other book ever written except the Bible. By its aid we are enabled to read the Bible with spiritual understanding, and thus our right relationship to God is revealed to us. The Science of Mind which Mrs. Eddy taught in Science and Health is the science of knowing the truth. Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It is the great primitive truth revealed to man in the beginning that we desire to find, and we should therefore devote all our energy to remove the mutilated and perverted philosophies that obstruct the passage to the great arcana of light and truth.

KANSAS CITY, MO. (First Church).—Bicknell Young, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Eldred H. Warner, who said in part:—

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 497) Mary Baker Eddy, our beloved Leader, states, "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life." Now Christian Science is so called because it embraces a practical, systematic, and positive method for applying the truth taught by Jesus the Christ to the every-day problems of humanity. Today it is a matter of vital importance to each and every one to gain a higher, more spiritual understanding of God and man. Harmony and peace and right thinking will enable us to bring into our experience the fuller vision of that peace "which passeth all understanding," and in turn will leaven the whole world; for the basis of right thinking is love,—love for God and love for man. When this understanding is faithfully applied it will eliminate all false beliefs of warfare with the flesh and with autocracy.

WILMETTE, ILL. (First Church).—William R. Rathvon, lecturer; introduced by Hugh Stuart Campbell, who said in part:—

Early in the first century the apostle James wrote to the faithful: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him." And then he added this comforting message: "And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." Nineteen centuries passed, and then a great spiritual light began to shine in a world of darkness and doubt; for a consecrated Christian woman, Mary Baker Eddy, gave to humanity her great discovery of the truth of being, founded on the correct interpretation of the Scriptures, a discovery which she named Christian Science.

Christian Science today says to all mankind: Is any sick among you? Is any impoverished? Is any weary and heavy laden? Then is salvation near. For, behold! through a correct application and practice of its teachings the prayer of earnest desire is answered, and in a most practical manner, for the deaf hear, the blind see, the lame walk, and to the receptive thought the gospel of healing, reformation, and regeneration is preached.—The Lake Shore News.

KALAMAZOO, MICH. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Helen Snow, who said in part:—

Christianity has clung to its conception of a God who fully and freely pardons our sins, but who for some mysterious reason refuses to aid His children in times of sickness or other physical distress. It has remained for a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, in an hour of extreme physical need to make the discovery, and then publish the glad tidings that there has never been a moment when God has been other than the same loving Father who forgiveth all our iniquities, healeth all our diseases, and to whom His children may go for aid in every hour of need. Surely the world needs this comforting message.

TELLURIDE, COL. (Society).—Ezra H. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Lillian C. Kenyon, who said in part:—

Mrs. Eddy says, "Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe" (Science and Health, p. 313). He went daily about his Father's business, preaching the gospel and healing the sick. He commanded his followers to do likewise, saying, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" also, "Heal the sick," and "These signs shall follow them that believe." The world has always been ready enough to do the preaching, but it has drawn the line at the healing. Now the command to preach the gospel is no more imperative than the command to heal the sick, and if it is right to do or attempt a part of the work which Jesus commanded, is it not right to do or attempt all of such works?—Telluride Journal.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Asyth L. Hawk, who said in part:—

Valuable treasures are hidden in many of the Bible passages, but owing to a lack of understanding of how to make them practicable for present day needs they have remained dormant for centuries. Christian Science has turned the light of Truth on these passages and brought forth the fruits, including that of healing the sick by the word of God. Through "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy has unlocked to mortals the way whereby the word of God heals the sick as well as the sinning.

Testimonies of Healing

Early in 1916 I joined the army, and I did so without fear for my future welfare, feeling confident that God, whom I had so often proved to be my best friend in all kinds of trouble, would be my help and protection, for I knew that He was both willing and able to do all that was necessary for me. In due course I found myself in the trenches in France, and the help I had from God while there will never be forgotten. He was my help in every trial and difficulty. His loving hand was there to guide and take care of me, and I found that the greater my need, the greater was His help and care.

In common with the rest of the soldiers I soon found myself very verminous because of the almost total lack of washing facilities and having to sleep in dirty barns and the like. I knew that all things are possible to God, and after using my knowledge of Christian Science on this problem, I gradually became cleaner, until one day I was quite free from these pests, despite the fact that I still had on my old dirty clothes and was living under the same conditions. From that time, until leaving France, I was quite free from this trouble.

August found me taking part in the battle of the Somme. I was severely wounded, being hit on the head by a large bomb, which burst with terrific force just as it touched my head. After a few moments I tried to walk to get assistance, but was unable to do so, and lay where I fell, with all the fighting and bombarding going on around me. I kept lapsing into unconsciousness and getting weaker, and presently was dimly aware that I was slowly dying. There and then I called on God for His help as best I could, and after a little while felt that the danger was over. Feeling calmer and stronger and more certain that I should live, I calmly went to sleep, though the fighting was still in progress. When I awoke darkness had set in and the fighting was not so intense, and a few moments later I was placed on a stretcher and carried away; then by easy stages was sent to a hospital in England.

While in the hospital my condition was several times very grave, and on one occasion I suddenly became so ill that the doctor decided it was necessary to perform an operation at once. As I was not expected to recover, my parents were telegraphed for; but when they arrived next day the operation had been successfully performed and I was already on the way to recovery. I must give all credit and thanks to the doctors and nurses who attended to me while I was so ill and who did all they could for me, but I know that through that critical time God alone was the supreme power, who upheld and saved me when for the second time I stood within the shadow of death.

When I came from France I was quite deaf in one ear and the hearing in the other was very much affected. I was examined by various doctors and specialists, who said I would always be deaf and that they could do no more for me; but today my hearing is almost as good as ever. The defect is very slight and I know I shall get a perfect healing. It was expected that I would lose the use of one of my arms and that my neck would be crippled, but I have the full use of my arm, and my neck is perfectly normal. For the fact that I am physically and mentally whole, that no limbs are missing, and that I am not disfigured in any way, I give praise and thanks to God alone, who so wonderfully stood between me and utter destruction.

All my soldier chums and those who know anything of the force of the bomb with which I was hit, express their surprise that I was not blown to pieces. I can truthfully say that this terrible war has no terrors for the man who has a correct understanding of God, and I know from experience that with this understanding I can trust Him always, and if I do my share He will never fail me. Christian Science alone has given me my understanding of what God is, and without reserve I can say it is my greatest possession. I am full of gratitude for all that God has been to me, and hope that this testimony will enable all who read it to understand better that, no matter what our need is, God is always equal to it.

Edwin Albert Garner, Moseley, Birmingham, England.

I want to express my gratitude for the healing which I received through Christian Science. In 1904 I had an attack of typhoid fever, and after that the symptoms returned about the same time every year. Each attack left me with less power of resistance, and so undermined my health that after caring for my father during an illness of three months I did not seem able to gain any ground. Four different physicians had been consulted, but their help was only temporary, some diagnosing the trouble as malaria and saying I could not hope ever to get entirely well.

In 1909 my heart appeared to be affected, and I again consulted one of the physicians. After a thorough examination he said the kidneys were affected and the blood pressure was above normal. He advised me to eat very little; in fact almost to starve myself. In the spring of 1911 I became so much worse that my husband decided to close our home and send me to Canada for the summer, hoping the change would benefit me, and then to the South to spend a couple of years there, as one physician had advised.

I went to Canada in June, but grew so much worse that I returned to my home city in August. My condition gradually became worse after my return, and I could not eat or sleep. In October I began to have night sweats and to suffer from chills and fever every day. I lost flesh rapidly, and my eyesight, which had always been good, failed me. Realizing that I could not live very long, as the physician was not helping me at all, I wrote to my husband (who was out of the city) that I would never be able to go South with him. Just then a friend advised me to try Christian Science, and I acted on her advice. I saw a practitioner that same day, and the second day after my first treatment the night sweats and chills and fever stopped, and I began to eat and sleep and gain in weight. After one week's treatment I was perfectly well.

That was over four years ago and I am still in perfect health. Since my healing in Science I have been thoroughly examined by a first-class physician in the South, who measured my blood pressure and said it was normal and that I was a well woman. I am very thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for revealing this beautiful truth of the Christ-healing. I am grateful too for the spiritual uplift received since studying Christian Science.

Louise Scott, Lakewood, Ohio.

Five years before I learned of Christian Science the doctor told me to try a change of climate, as he said I had contracted lung trouble from living in contact with a case, and was also believed to have inherited it from my father. The doctor said this change would not cure me, but it might prolong my life for a while. I was willing to do anything in order to be spared to take care of my little boy, so I went from Wisconsin to Washington and was gone a year, but came back no better, although I had been under medical treatment all the time.

Digitized by Google

A few weeks after returning to Wisconsin I was told of a doctor in Chicago and went to see him; but in the mean time a severe form of asthma had set in, and after a lengthy examination the doctor diagnosed the case as lung trouble, chronic bronchitis, catarrh of the stomach, enlargement of the heart, an abnormal growth, hardening of the arteries, and very low vitality. He treated me several months, and finally said the only thing that could do me any good was a warm climate. After coming to California I tried other methods of cure and endured treatments that are terrible to think about. Then I began to hear quite often of Christian Science and was asked to try that. Thinking it was a faith-cure, I did not pay any attention to what was said about it, but after a time suffering drove me to try it. I did not expect to receive any good, but wanted to have the satisfaction of having tried everything.

When I went to the Christian Science practitioner the first time, I could only speak a few words and could not sit up straight in a chair, but at the end of two hours I could breathe quite easily and sit up all right. I rode home,—about six blocks,—and helped to get supper on the table. My health is now better than it ever was, my home is happier than I ever believed a home could be, and I am a better and truer neighbor, a better wife and mother. The truth I have learned about God has given me new life, and there is a song in my heart all day.

My family depend on Christian Science and are working to learn more about it, for each one has felt its healing power. My youngest boy was riding a bicycle on the boulevard one day when he was run over by an automobile, and the bicycle was broken and twisted all out of shape. The automobile had five people in it, but although both wheels passed over my son, there was only a little bruise on the knee where it struck on the hard pavement as he fell. When the car stopped he was already on his feet, but the owner of the automobile brought him home. The boy told us what had happened, then went upstairs and changed his clothes. He was fifteen years of age when this happened, and had been attending the Christian Science Sunday school for four years.

I am very grateful for the Christian Science literature, for the church services, Sunday schools, and reading-rooms; there is healing in them all. I cannot find words to express my gratitude for Mrs. Eddy, who has made this possible for us; I can only thank God for it all.

PRUDENCE RAWSON, Monrovia, Cal.

When Christian Science was first brought to my notice I was in a deplorable condition. While I did not accept its ministrations without considerable opposition, an improvement was soon noticeable. I had suffered two very severe breakdowns. The first occurred in the autumn of 1896 and was diagnosed as nervous dyspepsia. My stomach and nervous system suddenly became so completely deranged as to make me unfit for my regular work, and for more than eight months I was compelled to be practically idle. When recovered sufficiently to resume my vocation, medicine and stimulants were employed to keep me going, and as time went on the quantities of both were constantly increased.

In 1906 another collapse came. This time an internal abscess was said to be the outstanding cause, but a general complication of ailments was in evidence. I was operated on for the abscess and that particular affliction was removed, but the others seemed if anything to become worse. Although the wounds healed, my general health did not improve. I tried a number of different schools of medicine and modes of healing, and went from one doctor to another, but got weaker all the time.

Finally a young doctor, who admitted that my condition baffled him, took me to a member of the faculty of a medical college in Philadelphia, a man who had the reputation of being one of the best diagnosticians in America. He looked me over, and among other things, such as ruined stomach, nervous breakdown, affected kidneys, hardened spleen, and rheumatism, told me I had as bad a case of diseased liver as he had ever encountered, and gave me six weeks as the limit of remaining lifetime. He spoke thus frankly because I had told him I wanted the absolute truth in his opinion.

Immediately after I left his office, Christian Science was recommended to me by one who knew his verdict. A practitioner was sought and treatments were begun. Results seemed to come rather slowly, but I think this was due to my own hard-headedness, as I had always been a very worldly and material man. This gradually melted away, until all the ailments were overcome, as well as a number of bad habits, including the use of liquor and tobacco, both of which I had used regularly and in large quantities for years.

Along with the physical healing and moral regeneration came a desire for spiritual understanding, and I turned to the study of the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's writings with sincere interest. I thank God that I continued in these studies with most satisfactory results, and my one dominant wish is that I may daily grow in the glorious truth of Christian Science.

HOWARD WALL, New York, N. Y.

With a feeling of deep thankfulness to God, and of gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I would like to give my testimony of what this blessed truth has done for me and mine. In Science and Health we read, "When the illusion of sickness or sin tempts you, cling steadfastly to God and His idea" (p. 495). Innumerable times I had read these words, but I did not comprehend their full meaning until a testing time came.

My eldest son was stricken with a severe attack of a malignant throat disease, and although treatment was given by a Christian Science practitioner, the boy seemingly grew worse, and I was unable to overcome a great sense of fear. After several hours the practitioner was again told of the conditions, and we asked if a physician should be called to diagnose the case, although we had had a previous experience with this disease and recognized the symptoms. The practitioner told us to wait until morning, and said he would continue the treatment. About an hour later there was a discharge from the throat, and when I went into the room again my heart overflowed with gratitude. Although I could not see much change in the boy's condition, yet such a sense of peace, joy, and thanksgiving came to me that I was unable to speak. It was then that I realized what true gratitude is.

At this same time our baby (not quite two years of age) was also ill, but not with the same trouble. The morning following the demonstration for the elder boy a physician was called to diagnose the baby's case, and he said the little one had a severe attack of bronchitis. I then asked him to examine the elder boy, and after doing so very thoroughly he said the lad had certainly been very sick, but all he had then was tonsilitis. Mentally I gave thanks to God, for I knew the demonstration had been made during the long hours of the night through the understanding of the faithful practitioner.

The baby's healing was seemingly slow, but I know it was on account of my great sense of fear. A dear friend kept reminding me that I must love God best of all, and this brought the First Commandment to my thought; but I could not bear to lay the child down even for an instant, although I realized that I was giving more power to a material body than to God. On the fourth day the condition became very serious. I was unable to reach the practitioner, so I took the baby in my arms and walked back and forth for an hour or more, realizing the truth as best I could. At last, when I was seemingly exhausted, I held him up and declared, with the realization that I was speaking the truth, that I loved God best of all. Then I laid him down and left him for half an hour, during which time he slept peacefully. When he awoke he was much better and asked for a drink. He improved from that time on, and though weak and unable to walk, these conditions were overcome in a few days.

Soon after this a large abscess appeared on the elder boy's neck, and his father took him to a physician, who said that there was great danger of blood-poisoning. Just for an instant, when I was told what the doctor had said, I again became fearful, but the thought came to me that God never fails. The power of Truth had been proven to me so beautifully on these former occasions, how could I doubt now? As soon as I could I telephoned to the practitioner, telling him what had been said, and he told me he would take up treatment immediately. In about an hour the abscess broke and discharged very freely.

How I love the words, "Cling steadfastly to God and His idea," for if we had not done so, how different this testing time might have been. How thankful I feel to God for this deliverance, and how grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who has shown us the way.—Ida M. Jack, Chicago, Ill.

[Translated from the German]

It is with a sense of deep gratitude that I wish to tell of the benefits received through Christian Science. Being stricken with a severe attack of illness, I asked a practitioner for help. She took up treatment absently, with the result that I was quickly freed. With a few more treatments a trying internal trouble disappeared. I had been afflicted with this trouble for years, and in the physician's opinion it could be removed only by an operation.

For this healing I am very grateful indeed, but still more so for the spiritual growth made possible by the recognition that God is all-encompassing Love, ever present good. It has brought into my life health, joy, peace, and has taught me that all good is here for us, and that what we have to do is to gain a better understanding of Christian Science. We praise God, and are grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving us this wonderful teaching.

Helene Dziabas, Berlin-Steglitz, Germany.

I have gained so much help from reading the testimonies of thanksgiving and gratitude in these pages that I would like to give my own experience. In Psalms we read, "He sent his word, and healed them," and I have proven that Christian Science is this word that heals. Not very long ago I was more afraid of a piece of pie than of almost anything. Eating to me was something to be dreaded, as I believed the food I ate would cause much suffering, and as a consequence it did. For over fifteen years I tried everything the doctors recommended, including travel, mineral springs, baths, and so on. As a last resort I tried the stomach pump, but did not experience any relief. The doctors said there was no medicine that could possibly help me.

Finally, acting on the loving advice of a friend, I asked for Christian Science treatment, and with the disappearing of the stomach trouble, malaria, colds, and headaches were overcome. The smoking habit of over twenty years' standing was completely destroyed, also much fear. For these physical healings I am very thankful. Through the study of the Bible, Science and Health, and the authorized literature issued by The Christian Science Publishing Society, so much wrong thinking and discord have been overcome and so much love and happiness and comfort have come into my consciousness, that I am indeed genuinely grateful for all that Christian Science has done and is doing for me and for all mankind.—Frank L. Grannis, Los Angeles, Cal.

I am very happy to verify the testimony of my husband. I would like to add that our little daughter, nine years of age, has never known any other kind of treatment than Science, and that I also have received much help and many blessings.—Laura Johnston Grannis.

[Translated from the French]

Although young in Science, I cannot help testifying to all the blessings which my mother and I have received since we became earnest students of Mrs. Eddy's teachings. May this testimony encourage others to do likewise. I had always been a delicate child and subject to frequent attacks of throat trouble, for which I was under the constant care of experienced physicians. Though not very painful, this trouble caused me to be confined to my room for weeks every winter, and this meant an interruption of my studies. The last time my throat became affected Christian Science treatment was given me, with the result that the ailment was overcome in three days. This was such a convincing proof of the divine power that my mother did not hesitate to have Christian Science treatment given me for my left foot, which had been diseased for a year and a half.

The diagnoses of the two specialists whom I consulted were contradictory. The second physician was positive in declaring that the trouble was a disease of the skin, which would grow worse steadily unless I had a thorough treatment during a considerable length of time. He performed a minor operation which relieved me temporarily; then the trouble manifested itself again and in a more distressing form. Thanks to Christian Science, my foot was entirely healed with a few treatments, and now I do not experience the slightest difficulty in walking.

It is not only for these wonderful healings that I am grateful, but for the tremendous mental support which Christian Science has been to my mother and myself in so many instances. We are sincerely grateful, for we have learned that God is an ever present help, and that He never fails us in hours of distress. My gratitude goes out to Mrs. Eddy, for the truth which she has revealed to the world has led us into the way shown by Christ Jesus.

Lily Place, Geneva, Switzerland.

Such a beautiful illustration of God's way of caring for His children was experienced recently that I relate it, believing it may prove helpful to others. In seeking a satisfactory adjustment of certain property, for fully nine months all available material methods were tried to no effect. It seemed impossible to realize in any way from it. During this time the text-book of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, was obtained, and thereafter was studied daily, together with the Bible.

Coming one day across the passage in Proverbs: "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths," it occurred to us to drop all our planning and outlining, and to know that because God is All, only good could result. Once this decision was made, peace reigned. About a month later, by following the dictates of Principle, even when seemingly not wholly agreeable to mortal sense, the immediate result proved that God was guiding. Having moved to this residence, the first few hours of our occupancy revealed conditions which, had we not been there to discover and remedy them, would have caused serious inconvenience to any incoming tenants.

While working in the yard one morning and gratefully communing with God, the only power, I suddenly felt that I should stop working and prepare for visitors on their way to look at the property. I obeyed this very distinct command, and in about an hour I greeted two people who had searched almost the entire city for just what we had to offer. They had been directed to our place by what to material sense would seem an accident, but we know it was the divine law of harmony in its universal operation. Arrangements were soon completed and were more satisfactory to both parties than either of us had anticipated.

At another time my arm was burned by hitting the side of the oven, but instantly came the assurance that man is spiritual, and all thought of the burn was immediately banished. I felt no pain and continued with my housework, not noticing my arm until later when dressing; then I saw that a large circular spot had been rather deeply burned. Instead of blistering, it hardened over, then quickly healed, and the scar soon disappeared. It seemed marvelous that so severe a burn could by the right understanding of man's true being be rendered entirely painless.

We are very grateful for Christian Science, which we find an all satisfying, practical religion.

MARCIA E. GAIER, Everett, Wash.

I write this testimony with thankfulness to God and gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the wonderful peace, harmony, and health I have gained through Christian Science. Several years ago I was sick, lonely, and discouraged, but thanks be to our Saviour, who sent the Comforter which brings peace to all mankind, I have been healed of all my ailments,—bowel disorder, stomach trouble, and headaches,—which seemed so real to me. I am thankful to God for the spiritual uplift that Christian Science has brought to me.

Dawn

ELISABETH RICHARDS

OH, joy is mine! the day at last is breaking,
The night far spent proclaims the dawn is near;
The clouds of mortal sense their leave are taking,
And perfect Love is casting out all fear.
The morning star shines high above the meadows,
And one glad ray of light has just begun
To drive away dark shapes and fearful shadows
That disappear before the rising sun.

With chart in hand I walk the gleaming highway,
Striving with steady step the goal to win,
Yet watch with care to shun each tempting byway
That would lead back to mortal sense or sin.
And if before me looms some dark temptation,
I look within my chart, and there I read—
"But thou shalt call thy walls Salvation,
And thy gates Praise." Oh, joy indeed!

From Our Exchanges

[Pres. William Arnold Shanklin in Zion's Herald]

The war has brought a new sense of the reality of spiritual values. Names matter not at all. It is the revealing of God in men that matters. Christ came not to destroy but to fulfil. It is the spirit of the more abundant life. This is a day of judgment. It is not Christianity that has failed, but the dreams of our materialistic civilization; these are tested and found wanting. What we have been largely living on in Christendom for centuries is a combination of faith and force, a worship of God and mammon. In individual souls Christianity has flourished and borne fruit, but for the ills of the world itself it is an almost untried catholicon. Our civilization has ceased to be God-conscious. We have been so busy, so preoccupied with the external things of life, that we have forgotten what life itself is for, and to what end it shall be lived. We have forgotten that the material is only of value as the instrument of the spiritual. When this truth is acknowledged, men will see the face of God.

Though the struggle of law and equity and freedom against anarchy and injustice and slavery is age long, and though the former has seemingly been vanquished in many a fight, presently democracy will be triumphant, building up the kingdom on earth as it is in heaven. "The impulse of democracy is identical with the ceaseless effort of human nature itself." Self-sacrifice, not self-assertion, the giving of love, not the claiming of power—that is the redeeming thought of the world.

[The Bishop of Peterborough in The Record]

Movement! Is that what we may look for after the war? Movement in the right direction along all the main roads of life? Or are we to be content with the kind of "progress" which preceded the catastrophe? The war is a just punishment for many sins; that is, it is the logical and inevitable consequence of many habits of thought and action into which we had drifted. No habit was more foolish, and for none has the nemesis been more severe, than that of pretending that all movement was progress; that so long as "civilization" increased, the moral and the spiritual might be left to look after itself; that in spite of several inconvenient factors in the situation we were all "progressives" along the best of all possible roads; and that if only life was sufficiently easy and comfortable the destination would undoubtedly be reached. We have been cured of all that. If we have not, we are incurable. But it has taken the fire, the wind, and the earthquake to do it. For we persistently refused to listen to the "still small voice."

[The Jewish Chronicle]

The religious consciousness is the angel which God sends before us to keep us by the way of life, to whose voice we are bidden to listen, for God's name is in him. Conscience is a seed of God's planting; it is the voice of God speaking to us in nature, in history, in individual experiences. But the growth of this divine seed needs to be tended by human care; its development is largely dependent upon ourselves. We can nurture this seed, we can strengthen the authority of conscience within us by our own efforts.

[The Continent]

Refusal to be true to what one knows to be the truth always makes one cowardly in spirit. Denying reality strikes at the roots of character. If this is God's universe, then acting as though it could be disregarded in the interest of personal desires puts one in the worst possible relation to it.

[American Lutheran Survey]

The purest social order is determined by spiritual standards, and by spiritual standards only. And in none but the purest social order can the doctrine of human equality be held with consistency. On this basis, in harmony with the teaching of the Scriptures, all men are essentially equal. In such an order no ground is found for castes or classes in the ordinary social use of those terms. No man is so mean that he merits the contempt of his fellows, nor is any one so good that he merits the adoration of others. By those who have the correct view of human merit, all men are held to be unworthy, and, by the grace of God, all have with them the possibility of perfection. This fundamental conception of human equality excludes the exercise of pride and selfishness, and guarantees to all men equal opportunity for the acceptance of divine grace, for the development of whatever gifts they are endowed with, and for equal privilege in the enjoyment of all the good that they are capable of receiving.

[Prof. John G. Hill, Ph.D., in California Christian Advocate]

The piety of the prophets gripped the very innermost soul. Those men gave and urged worship in very truth and spirit. Following a life of piety meant to them that they were to be entirely loyal to Jehovah's will, to be righteous in social life, to be fair and honest in trade, to be humane and honorable, to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God. Set forms, stated hours, prescribed fasts, observed feasts, and all the pious machinery they held to be meaningless noise unless the very spirit of life itself was true and genuine. Life with them was sound to the heart. Life in toto was sacred, and not given moments or certain postures, or staged days and seasons. There was with the prophets a continuous life in God with which they were content. Therefore they lived in His abiding presence and beheld His glory. It called for constant spiritual renewal at life's center. "For mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."

[Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.Litt., in The Christian Commonwealth]

More and more we are coming to judge our fellows and ourselves in the light of our coming heredity from God, and in that light our social deformities are revealed. Already there are motives at work, in the new idea of society, which promise to direct the vast attainments of learning, invention, and industry toward the alleviation of human sufferings, the training of human wills in virtue, and the beautifying of human character. Other way there is none, and never did it seem more practical than it does today.

[The Biblical World]

The church must do its work in the midst of a nation at war. There is no alternative that does not smack of treason. What then is the duty of the church?

First of all it is to remember that it is a church and not a military institution. Its pastors must remain spiritual leaders. Its members must be champions of the spiritual life. To forget this fundamental duty is poor patriotism and poorer religion.

It is the duty of the church to fill men's hearts with confidence in spiritual things. Ministers are not medicine men of civilization, beating the tom-toms of selfish nationalism, heralding an American God and an American gospel. The nation must be heartened in its sacrifices by interpretations of the divine will. We are on God's side so long as we fight to preserve the precious heritage of the spiritual forces in history, liberty, democracy, and human rights.

Items of Interest

The United States secretary of the interior announces that during the month of June nearly 600,000 acres of lands included in withdrawals prior to that time were classified and restored to unrestricted entry. The restorations were chiefly in Montana and California. He also announces that during the same month approximately 813,200 acres were designated under the enlarged homestead act, through which the entryman may acquire a homestead of 320 acres. If the settler has already filed on 160 acres under the original homestead law, under this act he may acquire an additional 160 acres.

During the past four years there have been examined, classified, and restored to unrestricted entry nearly 25,000,000 acres of land, while during the same period only a little more than 5,000,000 acres have been withdrawn. The result has been a reduction of the reserved lands from 75,672,851 acres on March 4, 1913, to 56,470,213 acres on June 30, 1917. During the same period somewhat less than 91,500,000 acres have been classified as non-irrigable and designated for entry under the enlarged homestead act.

Recent political changes have converted into national property the Siberian lands that were under the control of the imperial cabinet, including some of the most fertile agricultural and richest mineral districts of Siberia. They consist of the Altai district of western Siberia and the Nerchinsk district in the province of Transbaikalia. The total area of the Altai district is 175,078 square miles, of which 99,140 square miles have been allocated to the towns, peasants, freehold settlers, and native tribes, on perpetual lease or other terms. The total population settled on these lands is estimated at 3,000,000. The Nerchinsk district of Transbaikalia has an area of 101,250 square miles and includes important mineral districts of the upper Amur River, as well as some of the best agricultural lands in eastern Siberia.

The minister of public works in Ontario, Canada, announces that the provincial Government will take over and maintain as a provincial highway that portion of the Kingston Road running between Toronto and Oshawa, this being its first step toward the establishment of a provincial highway system. The Government will assume 70 per cent of the cost of maintenance, and the municipalities benefited will pay the remaining 30 per cent. This portion of the Kingston Road forms the first link in the chain of good roads that within the next few years will extend from one end of the province to the other.

A new scheme for training officers for the British mercantile marine is to come into operation in the autumn. The Clayesmore estate at Pangbourne has been bought with the idea of opening a college upon it which shall be to the mercantile marine what Osborne is to the navy. The cadets will spend two years at the college, and will then be drafted into sailing ships for a year's training at sea. In their fourth year those who qualify for the royal naval reserve will be appointed to ships in the royal navy for another year's training.

Receipts from the United States national forests in the fiscal year ended June 30 exceeded those for 1916 by more than $600,000, and totaled over $3,450,000. The cost of operating the forests was about $4,000,000. The increase, according to the forestry officials, came chiefly from a more active timber business and from the higher fees charged for grazing, although practically every form of use of the forests was greater than ever before and nearly every revenue-producing activity contributed to the gain.

According to tentative plans agreed upon by engineers of the two countries, the proposed tunnel under the English Channel, connecting France and England, will be thirty-three miles long and will lie within the impervious stratum of the lower gray chalk. There will be two independent circular tunnels connected at intervals. The amount of excavated material is calculated at 140,000,000 cubic feet, and the cost is estimated at about $2,500,000 a mile. The depth of the water over the line of the tunnel is about 165 feet.

A writer in The World's Work says that an estimate by one of America's foremost specialists in growing the seed crop of garden peas in Idaho and Montana places the total annual yield at 1,500,000 bushels, and he adds the following significant phrase: "I believe that when this announcement is made there will be many, even among seedsmen, who will consider this a romance, pure and simple." Yet he is convinced that his figures are conservative, both as to the 75,000 acres devoted to peas and the yield mentioned.

The important legislative measures adopted in Uruguay in 1915 and 1916 included an act providing for Government control of the telegraph, telephone, and postal services; the eight-hour day for laborers; the workmen's compensation law; taxes on advertising; and the bank inspection law. Bills now pending propose the inspection of corporations, regulation of the work of women and children, old age pensions, and an arbitration convention with Brazil.

In 1867 there were in Canada only 2278 miles of railway, with not a single mile of steel north of Lake Superior and over the Rockies to the Pacific. Now three transcontinental lines link the East and the West with branches in every direction. The Canadian Government owns and operates 4111 miles of railway. The 2278 miles have increased to 37,434 miles, giving Canada more railway mileage per capita than any other country in the world. She has invested $800,000,000 toward this end.

Since Jan. 1, 1917, the New Mexico state land office, in charge of lands granted to the state by Congress, has sold a total of 332,000 acres of these lands, in tracts ranging from 40 to 40,000 acres, for $2,151,360. The sales thus far this year bring the total to 1,036,000 acres. The state remains in possession of somewhat more than 11,000,000 acres, constituting an area larger than the combined area of Maryland and Connecticut.

Savannah, Ga., became the sixth city in the United States producing refined sugar when the Savannah Sugar Refining Corporation, a $2,000,000 concern, started melting sugar a few days ago. The large plant is located on the Savannah River eight miles from the city, and its capacity is 1,000,000 pounds of sugar a day. The refinery is planning to erect an industrial city which will eventually house 10,000 workmen and their families.

The sample fair held in Lyons, France, March 1 to 20, 1916, was not an exhibition for the public generally, but a collection of samples upon which buyers could base orders for future delivery, after the manner of the famous fairs in Leipzig, Germany. No goods were delivered during the progress of the fair. Booths were erected along the extensive quays of the Rhone and Saone Rivers and were rented to exhibitors at moderate fees.

United States official returns show that in the first eleven months of the fiscal year exports of agricultural products amounted to $1,353,000,000. An estimated division would be: cotton $515,500,000, meat and dairy products $325,000,000, and the principal breadstuffs $493,000,000; the balance being made up by cottonseed oil and a few minor products.

It is estimated that the yield of Egyptian cotton in the Salt River Valley, Ariz., this year will be approximately 8500 bales of 500 pounds each. At the estimated price of fifty cents a pound this would bring to the growers a revenue of $2,125,000. The entire crop is under irrigation and will produce abundantly.

Argentina has enacted a law to keep the price of sugar to the consumer within reasonable bounds by permitting the importation of specified quantities at a low rate of duty and with an undertaking on the part of the importing firms to place the sugar on the market at not above a fixed wholesale price.

According to the third general memorandum on the 1916-17 wheat crop of India, there are 33,040,000 acres in wheat, or an increase of about 10 per cent over last year. The total yield is estimated at 10,160,000 tons for this year, a gain of practically 19 per cent.

Aroostook County, Maine, is said to have 110,000 acres in potatoes this year. At the 1916 average of yield this should, with normal weather conditions, produce 22,000,000 bushels.

The banana crop in Jamaica, which for the past two seasons has been of negligible quantity because of the hurricanes, bids fair to be as large as ever this year.

The exports of manganese ore from Brazil in 1914 amounted to 183,680 tons, representing a value of $1,880,453.

India's sea-borne exports of native tea in the year ended March 31, 1917, amounted to 291,402,608 pounds.

It is estimated that the currant crop of Greece will be about one hundred and sixty thousand tons.

In 1916 there were 9108 acres sown to canary seed in Spain, and the yield was 3237 tons.

Zacchæus

MYRTLE STRODE JACKSON

BRIEF but wonderfully interesting is the incident recorded in the nineteenth chapter of St. Luke, which tells how Zacchæus, "chief among the publicans," wanted to see Jesus as he passed on his way to Jerusalem, but was kept back and hidden in the crowd because he was "little of stature." Refusing to be deterred from his purpose by this, Zacchæus ran on ahead and climbed a sycamore tree, that he might be able to see Jesus—"who he was." As the Master passed by, he looked up into the tree and said to him, "Zacchæus, make haste, and come down; for today I must abide at thy house." We may imagine that Zacchæus was well-nigh overwhelmed with surprise and joy, and the incident closes with the Master's benediction to him and his whole household,—"forsomuch as he also is a son of Abraham."

Now this story of Zacchæus is simply a straightforward human record, and may not contain as much spiritual meaning as the parable of the sower, for instance, which is important for the types of mortal thought presented in the metaphysical explanation of the sowing of the seed of Truth. It might even be straining at the gnats of pedantry to attach definite metaphysical significance to every little detail of it; nevertheless the story opens out a train of thought which is not without comfort, enlightenment, and even inspiration, for are there not many who feel themselves to be "little of stature" in more ways than one?

Many singularly sweet natures settle down in the back ways of life's city with the profound conviction that they have little of human endowments,—but few talents, few accomplishments, and no gifts worth mentioning. They are more or less content to drag through dull, uneventful days of work and drudgery, and remain in a dwarfed and stunted condition, shrinking from all intimations of development and progress with a frightened cry of "Oh, but I couldn't do that! I shouldn't know how to!" Others may feel they possess greater capacities, but that they are limited and restricted by their environment. The crowd of mortal thought, education, custom, and obligation presses them down and forces them into the narrow ruts and grooves of convention and conservatism.

To most of us the portly forms of ecclesiasticism, the gigantic shoulders of medical law, the towering heads of material schools and physical sciences, the spreading garments of social caste, the angry shoving and pushing of commercialism, the nodding plumes of pride and position,—all combine to blot out the vision of the Christ. We feel "little of stature," crushed back from all that is spiritual and perfect. Even one as rich in our day in talents as Zacchæus was rich in money in his, wrote,—

> This life is full of numbness and of balk,
> Of haltingness and baffled shortcoming,
> Of promise unfulfilled, of everything
> That is puffed vanity and empty talk.

Evidently the need under all these difficulties is to begin to climb into a higher altitude of thought. Zacchæus, running before and climbing the sycamore tree, suggests the possibility of our climbing the tree of life, grasping hold of the branches of the true knowledge of God, and so rising above the crowd of mortal opinions that at last we stand poised in the free air of Spirit, supported by the firm growth of scientific understanding and in the shadow of those leaves of healing which are for all nations. It is of small account then that we are "little of stature" as the world measures men. The desire to rise, the effort to climb, brings the swift and sure recompense. In the new, clear atmosphere of Soul, the message of the Christ-idea rings out to us, "Today I must abide at thy house."

On page 128 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy speaks of the power of Spirit to enable mankind to "exceed their ordinary capacity," and on page 445 she enjoins those who teach Christian Science to "unfold the latent energies and capacities for good" in their students. This unfolding of good in the human mind results in itself in a climbing process, just as growth causes the flower to spring upward. The infinite nature of good is the seed within itself, which is bound to develop and grow in whatever heart it finds lodgment. Jesus said, "As the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself."

The world today is filled with giant shapes,—financial loans, labor unions, international alliances, democracy, woman suffrage, armies "with banners," great fleets,—these appearing in terms of billions, continents, hemispheres. Through the vast crowds that throng the world's highways, the Christ-idea—the spiritual sense of man—rides today to the new Jerusalem, defined by Mrs. Eddy as "divine Science; the spiritual facts and harmony of the universe" (Science and Health, p. 592). The individual, as he pores over world events in all their stupendous magnitude of compound size and strength, be he printer or prince, preacher, practitioner, or president, feels himself "little of stature," and that he can scarcely come to the highest concept of truth for the press. And yet each one has a right to see, a right to know; moreover, it is an imperative duty for every Christian in the world today both to see and think the truth on every subject, as only by right, clear-visioned thinking can right actions take place,—actions which shall sweep away the tyrannies and sufferings of past years and bring God's kingdom upon earth.

We must not allow ourselves to feel that we are too small to count; that it is of no importance how much or how little we know or just how we think. If each unit of an army believed that his presence would not affect the great battle, and crept into a hedge or went to sleep behind a wall, his side would be incapable of even defending its position, let alone any chance of its ever being able completely to rout the enemy. Our right thoughts at this hour should be a mighty army battling for the supremacy of good and secure in the certainty of ultimate and speedy victory.

Listening to arguments down in the crowd is no way of seeing the Christ. The serpent of the garden of Eden has today many throats through which to pervert all facts to its own evil ends. It cries self-love in the name of peace, bondage in the name of brotherhood, anarchy in the name of freedom, isolation in the name of universality; indeed, its lies are plentiful as the stones of the road. We need to keep the dust of corporeal sense from our eyes, shut out the din of malicious suggestions from our ears.

We must climb high in the knowledge of justice, law, honesty, truth, self-sacrifice, love, even up into the hills of holiness, there to behold the idea of the one perfect Mind. We must take our stand with Christ, Truth, in the clear discernment between right and wrong; and then the truth of all conditions will abide in our consciousness forever.

Even death, the "last enemy" (and in death are included the qualities of evil of which it is constituted,—envy, hate, greed, lust, treachery, and the like), will yield to the ascending power of good in human consciousness. Our Master's exit from this material dream was by way of ascension into the atmosphere of pure spiritual thinking, and his command to the woman who first discerned him in the resurrection hour was, "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God."

A Ray of Light

CHARLES F. KRAFT

As one stops to consider the many viewpoints from which Mrs. Eddy has striven throughout her writings to bring to mankind a better understanding of God and His creation, he cannot fail to note the wonderful simplicity of her explanations. The human mind is however slow to grasp more than an infinitesimal part of the depths of meaning which these explanations convey.

It was years after commencing a study of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, when the writer began to see something of the depth of meaning to be found in the following statements: "As a drop of water is one with the ocean, a ray of light one with the sun, even so God and man, Father and son, are one in being;" and "Man is not God, but like a ray of light which comes from the sun, man, the outcome of God, reflects God" (pp. 361, 250). In the light of these words a careful analysis of the relationship existing between the ray of light and the sun brought then and there a clearer realization of the real man's relation to God, and of his birthright of dominion, which can never be taken away.

It was readily seen that the ray of sunlight, however regarded, is neither self-created nor self-sustained. All the power, light, and warmth it possesses is in and of the sun. It has in it nothing which is not in the sun; and what is more, it cannot be deprived of a single quality which the sun has. It could neither be changed nor destroyed without changing or destroying that quality of the sun, for as the sun's reflection it is of the same nature as the sun; in fact, the sun is its very life. The ray is not the sun, but it has always coexisted with the sun, and will continue to do so, so long as the sun exists.

At this point some one may be saying, Yes, I believe all this is true of spiritual man, but what has it to do with this mortal seeming? On page 516 of Science and Health we read: "The sunlight . . . glances into the prison-cell, glides into the sick-chamber, brightens the flower, beautifies the landscape, blesses the earth." Suppose, by way of illustration, one should assume that a ray of light, finding itself in an undesirable place, should become confused and begin to question something after this fashion: How did I get in here? And why am I in this place? I never asked to be brought here. Oh, how I wish I were out of here! But where would I be if I did get out, and what will be the outcome when I do leave here, for doubtless I shall escape sometime.

Thus the ray might continue to chafe under the bondage of its narrow limits, never realizing that at that very moment its light was coming direct from the sun into the prison-cell or the sick-chamber. If at this point, however, the truth of the situation should dawn upon it, what an awakening there would be! What more natural than for it to exclaim joyously: Why, here I have been fretting, believing myself to be only a little streak of light in this dark room, and all this while the light I reflect has been coming right from the sun into this place. Of course I am not the sun, but as its reflection I can neither be changed nor destroyed. Oh, now I know why I am here! It is simply that I may bring all I can of the sun's light into this gloomy place. And as the ray brings in more and more of the light and warmth of the sun, the gloom and chill diminish and finally disappear.

As human thought awakens to know what man really is, it is seen that no matter how undesirable one's environments may seem to be, the true purpose of being is to reflect God's loving-kindness, purity, truth, and in fact nothing less than every attribute of the infinite good which is our life. As the limits of the prison-cell or the sick-chamber are no part of the ray of light which comes into them, so these mortal limitations never become a part of the real man. In the language of Paul we can say, "If our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens;" for "in him we live, and move, and have our being."

Doubtless there are many more lessons to be gleaned from the ray of light, but these have been to the writer as the rungs of a ladder reaching from earth to heaven, affording nearer and clearer views of God, and of man in His likeness. Gratitude for clearer views of the true purpose of man's being is best seen in the measure of good which one reflects; and as the light and warmth of divine Love floods one's consciousness, not himself alone, but all who are embraced in his thought come under the healing touch of divine Truth.

Ending Wars

ROSEMARY BAUM HACKETT

On page 565 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy thus interprets the warfare between the woman and the dragon, as described in the Apocalypse: "After the stars sang together and all was primeval harmony, the material lie made war upon the spiritual idea; but this only impelled the idea to rise to the zenith of demonstration, destroying sin, sickness, and death, and to be caught up unto God,—to be found in its divine Principle."

When the true idea of God and man dawns upon thought through the activity of Christian Science, it glorifies individual consciousness with glimpses of "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The man of God's creating becomes a real and living presence, and the heart overflows with the joy of recognizing the verity of spiritual existence. For a time these views of reality make easy the task of denying and rejecting evil's suppositional claim to place and power. God's goodness and its reflection is seen to be the one substantial fact of man's experience. Later, however, the lie of life in matter begins to uncover its nature as enmity against God, by seeming to resist and reverse in human consciousness the unfolding of the true idea of good. The soldier of Christ discovers that if he is to remain loyal to his calling and master this falsity with "the sword of the Spirit," he must open his eyes to behold as nothing every one of its snares and entanglements, together with its more aggressive delusions of mortal mind.

In the early stages of this warfare the temptation to make something out of nothing is particularly strong. The mortal concept of man, the seeming reflection of mortal mind, appears like a very real person, whether claiming to be one's self or another. Hate, fear, sleep, seem in many instances to usurp the throne of Love, and mental integrity to become the prey of malicious suggestion. Mortals are seen viewing each other through a mist of distrust and misunderstanding which magnifies human faultiness, or else bewitched by a glamour of personality into calling evil good. To recognize that these abnormal mental conditions are being induced and fostered by malicious hypnotism seems temporarily to make them more appalling. Evil appears in consciousness as something that has intelligence to conceive plots and power to execute them, as something that is identified with person, race, or nation, with class or with organization, and all the beliefs of human courage, personal righteousness, and instinctive faith in good seem powerless to defend mankind from the encroachments of the "great red dragon."

It is at this point that the student of Christian Science begins to understand how perfectly Mrs. Eddy has in her writings forewarned and forearmed all who faithfully apply what she teaches. He perceives the importance of realizing the impersonal nature of the conflict between the spiritual idea and the material lie, and also of proving first of all in his own consciousness the supreme power of the spiritual idea. It becomes increasingly evident that by regarding evil as a reality in the consciousness of fellow mortals, whether in fearing, condemning, or condoning it, he is giving evil place and power in his own experience. "Line upon line" the lesson must be learned that there is no place for evil anywhere, because God is everywhere present.

So, while mortal mind continues to expose its own corruption, the Christian Scientist reaches the point of giving thanks because he is learning to understand the inviolability of the divine Mind. Each day unfolds a clearer recognition that God's reflection is here and is real, even as God Himself is here and is real, and that evil is as powerless to harm the reflection as it is to harm the divine Principle producing and sustaining the reflection. The failure of so-called human wisdom and goodness to meet and master the suggestions of malicious animal magnetism, points the way to a more complete dependence upon God's goodness and that spiritual understanding which is reflected only as mortals give up the belief that evil, whatever guise it may assume, has either place or power. God's reflection, His universal idea, must inevitably triumph over all the hypothetical plots of the material lie; therefore it must inevitably triumph in the experience of each individual, each group of individuals.

Dwelling with increasing persistence upon this fact of the present universality of good and its reflection, the Christian Scientist finds himself able to view with comparative serenity the contortions of the material lie. Is not the activity of the spiritual idea already present, though the lie seems rampant? And cannot this fact be proved by consecrated endeavor? To love God understandingly means loving one's neighbors—a whole universe of neighbors—as one's self. It includes disproving for one's neighbors as for one's self the suggestion that evil has power to hypnotize them or to inhibit the reflected activity of good in their thought. With the unfolding of this idea of brotherhood and mutual mental protection, the arguments of self-righteousness, false judgment, lust, hatred, tyranny, apathy, lose the appearance of reality and grow beautifully less. The warfare between spiritual ideas and material illusions is being accomplished in conformity with the law of God, and the belief of strife among brethren is being destroyed in the place where ultimately all evil beliefs must be destroyed—the individual consciousness.

So each faithful Christian Scientist is privileged at this present time to hear the angel message of "on earth peace, good will toward men," as interpreted by Mrs. Eddy on page 340 of Science and Health, "One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars."

Sunday School Training

J. L. MOTHERSHEAD, JR.

In our Leader's writings the requirements of Truth are very definitely stated, and they are gradually coming to human consciousness with a demand for fulfilment which should and must be met. One of these commands, for that is what it in reality is, is found in the Manual of The Mother Church in regard to the teaching in the Sunday school. In Section 3 of Article XX Mrs. Eddy says, "The instruction given by the children's teachers must not deviate from the absolute Christian Science contained in their text-book." This seems a very simple and right demand, and most of us would say without a moment's thought that this is just what is being done. When, however, this demand is frankly faced, and the teacher realizes that Mrs. Eddy used the word "absolute" with thorough understanding of its meaning and with definite purpose, an entirely different light is thrown upon it. Every teacher may with good effect ask himself if he really does teach the children only absolute Christian Science and does not introduce materiality a great deal.

We all know there is a vast difference between the spiritual and the material as distinguished in Christian Science. Science and Health has many absolute statements of truth, as well as those which present human conditions. A statement which expresses the truth of man's being is absolute. Other statements refer to material existence, which as a matter of fact is not existence at all, but rather a false sense of the one and only existence, which is spiritual. Our Leader makes this very plain when she says, "For right reasoning there should be but one fact before the thought, namely, spiritual existence" (Science and Health, p. 492). This leaves us no loophole: either we are giving the children right reasoning, or we are not; there is no half way position. Whenever the belief of material sense comes into our teaching as in anywise real, we are being governed by incorrect reasoning, ignorance, and disobedience.

As we face this fact a thousand and one excuses may flood our thought, but they are only arguments of mortal mind, not reasons governing right action. One says that the children would not know what we were talking about; another, that they have to live in the world as they find it, and so must be helped to see the material condition, as that is what they have to meet at this time. A close examination of any excuse exposes the fact that it is a belief of this argument of dual existence which we ourselves have accepted as a basis of our thinking. This thought came to the writer very clearly while teaching in the Sunday school, and he endeavored to follow it. The results were wonderful, and the reward of increased interest on the part of the scholars amply paid for the effort. Some who had seemed to have only a slight interest began to grasp points in the Lesson, and to bring to the class results of their work in healing and also in their increased capacity for school work; others had been able to help members of their family, and all had derived much good. We cannot too continuously and faithfully keep the spiritual fact before the children, and show that it is this which both uncovers and destroys error.

The truth is here, and the responsibility is ours of teaching it rightly to our own children and to those who come to us for enlightenment. Jesus trusted the child thought and told us that of such is the kingdom of heaven. The question is put to us plainly: Are we so afraid of absolute truth that we are going to adulterate it with human hypotheses and mortal beliefs, until it is a powerless dogma, or are we going to give the children the truth as directed by our Leader, and leave the result with God?

"Get understanding"

JESSIE C. E. KIRBY

ONE of the questions most frequently asked by the beginner in Christian Science is, "What can I do to help?" adding: "I do so want to go out and do something for Christian Science. I would give anything if only I could be of some use." As this desire is both right and natural, it sometimes seems hard to the student that there appears to be no very obvious way in which the proffered help can be utilized. Here the wise man's counsel, "Get understanding," may well be heeded.

The awakened sense of one who has just caught his first glimpse of this glorious truth so overflows with love and gratitude that he longs to be up and doing, and is filled with a keen desire to share his spiritual possessions with those around him,—be they dear and loving friends, or even strangers. He is, however, lovingly told that he must first learn to live Christian Science himself before he can help others; that not until his own plot is fairly free of weeds can he help to clear his neighbor's garden. He is also told that it is not by running out and offering, but by just remaining where he is and doing the insignificant, old-time tasks, but doing them in a new way because he is doing them to the honor and glory of God, that he is going to be made useful.

This is not what the beginner had planned, however, and again he is gently told that it is not for him to outline how he will work or what he will do; and then he very likely gives way to a feeling of discouragement. The old landmarks are already fast fading in the distance, the old tastes and desires so soon appear futile and empty, and he feels that it would be so easy to give up everything and go out into a new world, a world illumined by the light of Truth and Love, there to preach this gospel of healing and gladden the hearts of all around.

Filled with the knowledge that man can claim his heritage of health and happiness here and now, the student hastens to impart the glad tidings to others; but he soon shrinks abashed before the indifferent look, the unreceptive thought, sometimes even the unkind words of those he approaches with his priceless offering of love. Somewhat saddened, he learns that having ascended the mountain he must come down into the valley; earnestly work for and most surely win, through faithful bearing of the cross, the crown which awaits him that overcometh. Perhaps his heart sinks within him, and he asks if after all there is so much to be thankful for in this new-old truth which has come to him. He even wonders if he shall turn back and just drift as of yore. Is it worth while going on? he queries.

As he ponders this, the searcher for truth sees very clearly that to turn back is impossible; that once having put his hand to the plow he must perforce go on. Like Peter of old he knows he cannot go away, for if he did, to whom would he go? Then, if he is earnest and honest he realizes that it is indeed splendidly worth while, for it is just the little things that matter; and gradually he grows into the understanding that every false belief overcome in his own consciousness will some day help another's need. Paul said, "I die daily;" and it is just this daily dying to all belief in the reality of matter and the flesh, this daily dying to the belief that there is any life, truth, or intelligence apart from God, which enables him to make a reality of the stupendous fact that man as God's idea is spiritual.

Seeing the nothingness of matter and mortal mind, the student endeavors to detach all sense of imperfection from his brother, knowing that evil cannot come nigh the spiritual man, who is perfect even as our Father in heaven is perfect. In short, as the truth unfolds to his awakened consciousness he endeavors to live Christian Science every moment of the day, and while carefully avoiding discussions about it with those who imagine themselves opposed to it, he gradually learns to reverse all statements of error.

Thus almost imperceptibly under the healing and regenerating power of Truth does the student gain his desire and become indeed able to help, for to what heights may a consciousness regenerated and redeemed by divine Love not rise, as it turns to the Father knowingly declaring, "I can of mine own self do nothing," and daily strives to obey the command, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Our Leader says: "Self-denial, sincerity, Christianity, and persistence alone win the prize, as they usually do in every department of life" (Science and Health, p. 462). Thus alone can pure and unselfed love win its reward.

Science and Peace

JEANETTE L. NADEL

To the beginner in the study of Christian Science there often comes the sweet assurance that he is entering upon a blessed, peaceful state of existence. This is indeed true in the spiritual sense, but if one is simply looking forward to a life of ease in matter, he is apt to be rudely awakened. Christian Science by no means promises us peace or satisfaction in material belief; rather does it awaken us to become dissatisfied with materiality, and teaches us how we should actively combat error. The sluggish, apathetic sense of existence, which cries "Peace, peace; when there is no peace," is the greatest enemy to true peace.

To this condition of mortal experience Jesus said, "I came not to send peace, but a sword." Later, however, speaking of peace in its true sense, he said: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." To the peace of mortal mind Jesus was clearly a disturbing element, and it was said of him, "He stirreth up the people." It is the false sense of peace that cries out: "Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us?"

Mortals who have embraced the false sense of peace are severely rebuked by our Leader. On page 211 of Miscellany she says of such, "They are sticklers for a false, convenient peace, straining at gnats and swallowing camels." Christian Science does not assure us that we shall escape trying ordeals, any more than does the teacher promise her pupils that they will be exempt from examinations and the demand for unceasing progress; rather does she help them to gain the understanding which will carry them through these trying periods. The examination is not given as a punishment, but simply to test them, in order that they may advance, if ready for promotion.

In Isaiah we read, "When thou passest through the waters,

Digitized by Google

I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee." This promise was made to Israel, beloved of the Lord. They were not to be spared the purifying effects of the fiery ordeal, or the cleansing power of the waters of affliction, but the promise was that the Christ, Truth, would be with them and show them the powerlessness of evil.

In like manner Christian Science teaches us that while we may not escape the testing time, for, as Paul says, "the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is," we can by consecrated effort gain an understanding of Truth which will sustain us in every trial, until ascending thought shows us the unreality of all forms of error and we no longer fear or recognize any power in them. This, then, is the true or perfect peace which can be calm in the midst of seeming trials. This is the peace which comes when we refuse to be troubled or fearful at any aspect of error, the peace which Jesus left to his disciples. In Isaiah we read: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee."

"Keeping at it"

ANNA W. HOLLEBAUGH

In a school reader in use many years ago was a story the moral of which has long held deep significance to one who used the book. The illustration accompanying the story showed a little boy shoveling through a deep snow drift with a small fire shovel. Standing by him was a man scornfully saying to the little fellow: "Why don't you get a spoon to shovel with? How do you expect to get through that snow drift with that thing?" The answer came quickly, "By keeping at it, that's how."

By constant, patient endeavor, by keeping at it, is found the secret of success in all our human endeavors to accomplish anything of importance to ourselves and others. It is one way of expressing the constant activity of Mind or Spirit, that activity which is ever finding expression in all creation—never because of matter, but rather in spite of matter, since, as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 279 of Science and Health, "Spirit and matter can neither coexist nor cooperate."

An illustration of this may be found in the tree and its shadow on the ground. When the wind blows through the branches the shadow appears to dance on the grass. But is the action in the shadow itself? Is it not simply a response to the action already expressed by the movement of the wind through the tree, since even when it is cloudy and there is no shadow the movement goes on the same as in the sunshine? Hence the folly of watching the shadow to see how much action there is in matter, or how much harmony or discord is in evidence. Rather should we seek to recognize the many proofs of the presence and power of Mind.

The mortal tendency to make spasmodic efforts or to work only when discord seems uppermost is not the method by which one really advances; but by constant and untiring activity we shall eventually work through the deepest drift of sense-testimony which might seem to cover up or obscure all that is harmonious and beautiful. Even though we have not yet the larger understanding which comes only through scientific experience, if we diligently and faithfully use what we have, looking steadfastly to Principle instead of to person, we need never be dismayed at any circumstance which is seemingly confronting us, for we certainly shall succeed, since it is the Father that worketh in us, "both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

Selected Articles

[From an editorial in The Grand Rapids (Mich.) News]

The News refused to run the advertisement for the lecture, "The Case against Christian Science," because it would not lend itself to a secular disturbance at this time. It would rather that its readers go to their own churches and pray for their own souls and the souls of those who will soon commit their fate to the mercy of the Almighty in a struggle that Christianity might live. It would rather encourage them to go to a Red Cross meeting, to a Young Men's Christian Association rally, or discuss within the sanctity of the home ways and means of buying a Liberty bond.

It does seem to us, heathen as we are, or have been accused of being, that the Grand Rapids Ministers' Conference could find a more constructive occupation at this time than to speculate in theological beliefs. We need more "pro" and less "anti." We need more pro-Americanism, pro-charity, pro-benevolence, pro-tolerance, pro-forbearance, and pro-Christianity, and less "anti" this and that. Practically all the religious denominations represented by the ministers' conference have existed during the period leading up to this war. It would seem that their combined influence could not avert it. Christian Science is a comparatively new religious thought. Why condemn it before it has at least had the opportunity of affiliating itself with the ecclesiastical failures of the past?

You wonder, reverend gentlemen, why your benches are empty. It is because there is too much "anti" in your doctrines and not enough of the charity of Christ Jesus. You can't get followers in these days by everlastingly telling them the other fellow is wrong. It is a rule in trade known to shrewd traders, that it doesn't pay to knock the other fellow's goods. And you are dealing with the same brand of human nature on Sunday morning that the employer and the employee deal with six days in the week. You can't go to a working man and abuse his employer and expect him always to believe you. It goes against the human grain.

Don't crowd the mourners, gentlemen. More especially, don't crowd the mourners who cling to the belief that there is more in a smile than there is in a frown. We repeat, we don't know anything about the Christian Science faith, but most of the estimable men and women who we know are followers of its doctrines, meet us with a smile. A smile is a precious thing these days; and it will be more precious in the days to come. Let them believe what they will; we doubt that the good Lord will split hairs when in the final summons we stand before that great tribunal from whose judgment there is no appeal. We doubt we shall lose our place before the throne simply because we did not understand form in worship. If you want to expose, expose the weaknesses in our hearts that make for indolence, ignorance, and intolerance. Help us find the adder of distrust. Help us to be patient and forbearing. Help us to love one another. And don't crowd the mourners.

[Charles M. Shaw in Accrington (England) Observer]

In a recent letter a clergyman states, "I no more think that Jesus' miracles of healing summon me to thrust myself between my fellows and their medical advisers than I think that Jesus' miracle of the loaves summons me to thrust myself between my fellows and the bakers and fishmongers." This is an astonishing statement, seeing that while Jesus commissioned his followers to preach the gospel and heal the sick he did not commission them to go about dispensing loaves and fishes. However, it serves to emphasize the difference between its author and the Christian Scientists. He rejects the idea of any obligation resting upon the Christian church to heal the sick. Christian Science accepts that obligation to the full, and does so on the ground of the teaching and practice of Jesus and the apostles, and also on the ground of the nature of the evils to be dealt with. In doing so it finds itself in opposition to what is called orthodoxy; but as orthodoxy has not succeeded in satisfying the needs and aspirations of men, largely because it has swept aside the plain commands of Jesus with their far reaching personal and social obligations in favor of dogmas and institutions, there is no need to apologize for that opposition.

Mrs. Eddy accepted these commands of Jesus and their patent obligations. She took the view that Christianity, as a purely spiritual truth and force, is the divinely appointed means of delivering mankind from every ill. In arriving at this conclusion she did not rely upon human opinion; but it is remarkable how much support is to be found among scholars of universally admitted repute. In saying this I do not imply that any of those men supported the teaching as a whole, but I assert with confidence that it is possible to find support from a variety of eminent authorities for each of the fundamental positions of Christian Science.

For example, Harnack states, in opposition to the belief that the healing work of Jesus was subordinate and temporary, that it was an essential part of his mission and is bound up with the very conception of the gospel as the coming of the kingdom of God. In his work "Luke the Physician" he says, referring to the evangelist, "His medical profession seems to have led him to Christianity, for he embraced that religion in the conviction that by its means and by quite new methods he would be enabled to heal diseases and to drive out evil spirits, and above all to become an effectual physician of the soul." Both Harnack and Gibbon are at-one in describing the power to heal disease possessed by the primitive church as one of the chief factors accounting for its triumph, during the first three centuries, over the adverse conditions which beset it.

But Mrs. Eddy based her view of the church's obligation to heal the sick not alone upon the obvious interpretation of the gospels but also upon the nature and cause of disease, which she held to be a material manifestation of erroneous and sinful beliefs of the human mind. Matthew Arnold's opinion on this subject confirms in a measure Mrs. Eddy's view. In his "Literature and Dogma" he says: "To what extent or in how many cases what is called illness is due to moral springs having been used amiss, whether by being overused or by not being used sufficiently, we hardly at all know, and we too little inquire. Certainly it is due to this very much more than we commonly think. . . . The bringer of light and happiness, the calmer and pacifier or invigorator and stimulator, is one of the chiefest of doctors. Such a doctor was Jesus; such an operator by an efficacious and real though little observed and little employed agency; . . . but it is not, therefore, as popular religion fancies, thaumaturgy; it is not what people are fond of calling the supernatural, but what is better called the non-natural. It is, on the contrary, . . . eminently natural; but it is above common low-pitched nature, it is a line of nature not yet mastered or followed out."

Mrs. Eddy did however master and follow out this line of nature. In her recognition that discord and disease sprang from the human mind and that the effectual antidote was divine Mind, or the Holy Spirit, she discovered the method and secret of Jesus, and the healings wrought by Christian Science have demonstrated the truth of her claim.

It would be, however, a complete misconception of Christian Science to suppose it to be a method of so disciplining the human mind as to secure good health; an effort, say, to substitute by will-power calm and confidence for anxiety. Christian Scientists know too well the futility as well as the spiritual danger of such methods. Based upon the knowledge of God as Mind or Spirit, and of man as His reflection, therefore as spiritual, theirs is the Scriptural method of eliminating progressively the human self and will, substituting for them—or at least striving to bring them into oneness with—the divine Mind or will, so that the latter is enthroned in human consciousness and produces those fruits of the Spirit which tend to health as well as to the establishment of a constant mental resistance to the claims of the physical senses.

In his book "The Teaching of Paul in Terms of the Present Day," Sir W. M. Ramsay has much that tends to confirm this teaching. He says: "The consciousness of God in the human mind, present there as continuously and completely as possible, is the condition of the higher life and the true end of human nature. Man attains toward this end by living it and making it real in his character; as he learns to swim by swimming, so he learns to realize God, be conscious of God, know God, by doing so and being so. . . . If he attempts to do right and to be righteous through himself and his own power, he is thereby forgetting God; his consciousness of God is interrupted through his own senseless exaltation of himself into the place of God."

Such is the true at-one-ment Christian Science recognizes,—not a mere theory, but a divine organic oneness to be wrought out in thought and deed. It is for this that the Christian Science movement stands and will continue to stand, because vast numbers of men and women see in it a great instrument for coping with the as yet unrelieved suffering, sorrow, harsh materialism, and sin which blight human existence.

[W. D. Hinchsliff in Sapulpa (Okla.) Herald]

In the Herald of recent date an evangelist in his mistaken zeal went out of his way to attack a religion that is based on all the commands and teachings of the master Christian, Christ Jesus, and of the prophets and apostles, as recorded throughout the Scriptures. The statement that he is not attacking a Christian religion when attacking Christian Science is without proof or reason. In classing Christian Science with Spiritualism, Mormonism, Dowieism, and other isms, he shows that he is not awake to the truth of the matter.

The truth is that Christian Science is doing the works that the Master said should be the badge of the true Christian, that is, healing the sick, reforming the sinner, lifting up the fallen, and freeing mankind from the burdens imposed by a false sense of life and God. It is scientific because it is exact, and is based on absolute law, the law that was voiced in the Sermon on the Mount by the greatest and most successful preacher and physician the world has ever known.

Instead of Christian Science denying the fundamental teachings of the gospel of Christ Jesus, as the preacher asserted, it is elucidating and explaining them in the most practical manner. It is awakening the world to the beauty and utility of the Scriptures by explaining them so as to make available the treasures of Truth and Love that have been hidden from the world by material thinking and living. Christian Science is awakening the world to the beauty and practicability of the spiritual concept, and to the great good that is in store for every earnest seeker after Truth.

Our critic states, "Christian Science says there is no death." Christian Science takes the position that Jesus did when he said in the eighth chapter of John, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death." Christian Science teaches that the real man, the man of God's creation, is as indestructible as God Himself, because he is God's image or reflection.

There is no question but that Christian Science differs from the religious views of many. It is not on that account any the less true. The most practical answer to the criticisms of the preacher is the noble work that is the outcome of the practice of Christian Science. Christian Science must stand on its merits, and its adherents are perfectly willing that it should, for this is the supreme test. Christian Scientists know from experience the good that comes through the understanding gained from the teachings of Christian Science. It is not guesswork with them; hence the futility of trying to persuade them to go back to outgrown and discarded conditions.

[Marie Hartman in Protestantenblad voor Brielle, Holland]

Christian Science is a religious system which by means of the Bible unfolds God as the all-embracing Being, as eternal Life, absolute Truth, never failing and ever present Love, with whom all power rests. His laws establish His kingdom, —the government of good,—and cannot call into being in man aught but purity, peace, and harmony.

Learning thus to know God, He—Spirit, Mind—becomes more and more the great reality and actuality; and in thought and in deed man will gradually obey and serve God more than the illusions of unenlightened human thinking, or, as Mrs. Eddy says, the mortal mind. From ignorance as to what really is power, mankind have for ages submitted themselves to all sorts of beliefs and illusions which can be traced back to faith in a power and cause separate from God, and as a result of this error, a life in and of matter. Thus mankind have sanctioned these erroneous beliefs and have given them a power which otherwise they would not possess.

Christian Science calls attention to the fact that in many places in the Bible we read how a knowledge of God freed man from those false concepts and in so doing saved him from sin, sickness, and distress. In his words and works Jesus has so clearly revealed the Father that any one who tries to follow his teaching and to let that Mind be in him "which was also in Christ Jesus," can prove this in the healing of sin and sickness (not only of what usually are called mental diseases). As he is putting off the old man,—the wrong thinking,—the signs of his faith in and his knowledge of God will follow as the great Wayshower has promised. These signs, which are often called miracles, according to Christian Science are not supernatural, but divinely natural; they are no violation, but rather the confirmation of the highest laws.

[Lloyd B. Coate in Wooster (Ohio) News]

A clergyman is reported as saying that Christian Scientists exalt the Founder of their religion instead of Christ Jesus. It is true that Christian Scientists love Mrs. Eddy, but they do not exalt her above the Founder of Christianity. This would be contrary to Mrs. Eddy's own teaching. One cannot think of a devout Lutheran not having profound respect for Martin Luther, or of a Methodist not loving Wesley. Christian Scientists are deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, for it has been through her teaching that they have gained a more intelligent understanding of God, and of His Son, Christ Jesus. Her teaching has been the means of awakening a greater interest in and love for the Bible. In addition to this, hundreds of thousands of people have been healed of suffering, sorrow, worry, and trouble, and their lives transformed through this ministry.

It is not possible for any body of Christians to honor more highly and to have greater love for Jesus the Christ than do Christian Scientists. Christian Science teaches that we best prove our love by practising what Jesus taught.

[B. W. Oppenheim in Lewiston (Idaho) Tribune]

It is true that Mrs. Eddy founded a great religious movement, but her leadership, the result of her life work, does not deserve the appellation of "autocratic." Hers was a leadership of spiritual ideas, and not the personal domination of one human mind over another. She was the consistent exponent of God's government of man, and of man's sole allegiance to God, particularly including obedience to His commandments. No teaching so persistently advocates democracy in its truest sense as does Christian Science, recognizing as it does man's inalienable right of self-government. On page 106 of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy states as a part of a discussion of this subject, "Man is properly self-governed only when he is guided rightly and governed by his Maker, divine Truth and Love."

[M. J. Badenach in The News, Perth, Western Australia]

In the article entitled "The Doctor" Christian Science is included among various mental methods of treating disease which rely wholly upon the influence of the human mind. In order to correct any misapprehension which would result from such classification, I would make the unqualified statement that the human mind is not a factor in Christian Science healing. The divine Mind, God, is the only healer in Christian Science.

Christian Science is unique. It rests wholly upon Spirit, God, and resting upon Spirit, it is spiritual in its nature, Christly in its method, merciful in its design. Christian Science, through the omnipresence and omnipotence of Life, Truth, and Love, is perpetually proving itself adequate to bring health to the sick, pardon to the sinner, comfort to the sorrowing; and who is there today who has no need of the Comforter? To utilize the Principle of Christian Science is to bring into operation the law of divine Mind, the law of whose perfection and continuous activity David wrote. It was this law of God, good, upon which Jesus relied with such absolute confidence when he healed the blind man, straightened the crooked woman, raised Jairus' daughter; the law which he knew would remain inviolate all down the centuries, when he gave the commands to heal the sick and preach the gospel.

It was this law that Mrs. Eddy discovered in 1866 while reading Matthew's account of Jesus healing the man sick of the palsy, and she was instantaneously healed of the effects of "an injury caused by an accident, and pronounced fatal by the physicians" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 24). Do we wonder that love and gratitude should have so flooded her thought that she spent three years in searching the Scriptures in order that she might find the rule for demonstrating the Principle of divine healing? Do we wonder that, having found the rule and proved it practical in every phase of human experience, mental, moral, physical, she labored indefatigably to establish simple and effective methods for disseminating her good news—the gospel of right thinking? The magnitude of her work amazes even those who have grown up in close touch with it.

A Ship Going to Tarshish

ONE of the apostles designates himself "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ;" and he closes his letter with the words, "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." A lady once said, "I like to read about Peter in the Bible, because he is so human." It is encouraging to recognize that Peter had his temptation, his fall, his repentance and restitution, and that nothing he had been through injured his status as an apostle, because his experience only made him do what he had advised others to do,—"grow in grace." The struggle he had we recognize in ourselves, and may feel encouraged because he triumphed over fear and impulsiveness, and became even as a rock through well based understanding.

Some people like Jonah also because he was "so human." He is faced with a tremendous duty, and what does he do but try to avoid it! Do we not all know this temptation to "flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord"? Happily we learn from the prophet's experience that the ship will be no refuge, nor even safe transport away from duty, if to go to Nineveh is duty. One who had done a fine bit of brave work was complimented on the easy way in which it had been done. "Did you think that?" he said. "Why, I was swallowing my heart every few minutes." He was the sort of man who would go direct to Nineveh and preach coûte qu'il coûte; but of course he had to grow first, and it is in the process of the growth of courage that all are interested.

God's call continually seems to come to us as not suiting our inclinations. The child at play called to duty is not unfilial, nor actually disobedient at heart, but he thinks the parent has such poor judgment in interrupting his occupation. So, too, when the adult has laid out a plan of life, saying, To this city I shall go, and buy and sell, and get gain, and there abide, and build, and prosper, and a sharp call comes to give up ease and regularity, to travel the thirsty desert or cross the chill mountain range, to suffer hunger and endure the despite and ingratitude of men,—that which is weak, what we call the flesh, cries out. Then we have to turn to the promises of God, and we say, "My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever," and we actually do find that God comforts the heart only when the duty is taken up.

Many a Christian Science practitioner knows the temptation which came to Jonah. He would like to take an aeroplane for Tarshish and sail off out of the window when Nineveh comes into his office in the form of a robust sinner who needs to be rebuked and corrected. But is it not satisfactory to know about actual Nineveh the city,—that from neither king, captain, nor citizen had the prophet anything to fear? Why? Because he had nothing to do of himself; whatever was done, the message of God did it. Poor Jonah could have done nothing by himself. Mrs. Eddy says in the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 459), "Any attempt to heal mortals with erring mortal mind, instead of resting on the omnipotence of the divine Mind, must prove abortive." God's message, however, is never abortive. Concerning the word which is uttered by Mind, the assurance is, "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

Sometimes, instead of being called to a vast task like that of preaching to the great city Nineveh, one is called to what might seem a minor duty,—as, for instance, when a parent is called upon to correct a fault in a child, but fears displeasure and the discomforting sense of temporary alienation; but if he sidestep his duty, he is sure to have much more discomfort than is involved in the genuine kindness which expresses itself in correction of the fault.

We have our great example of bravery in facing a world of error in the case of the Leader of this great movement. Mrs. Eddy says in her "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 222), "I shall not forget the cost of investigating, for this age, the methods and power of error." She tells of her reluctance in having to explore the mystery of iniquity and in having to disclose its subtle ways of harming mankind, and declares, "I was saying all the time, 'Come not thou into the secret'—but at length took up the research according to God's command." Mrs. Eddy declared the truth to the world; and already, as in Nineveh, there is the evidence of repentance and spiritual longing. Soon may it be said of the world, "God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way."

Why We Should Work

WE have often heard a great deal said about the dignity of labor, but the present world stress is bringing mere opinion to the proof and making a demand upon all alike, whether rich or poor, for what St. Paul has named "reasonable service." In the Old Testament we find many warnings against slothfulness, and in Ezekiel we read that the iniquity of Sodom was "pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness,"—a fair characterization of many nations of the present day before the great world struggle came to arouse them from their sleep. True it is that the foundations of this great country were never laid in slothfulness, but in strenuous and purposeful toil and with the thought of God never lost sight of. It can hardly be claimed, however, that the high ideals of the earlier day have been maintained as material riches have multiplied in the land.

While the world's thinkers have contended for the dignity of labor, few have been willing to prove their consistency by themselves doing whatever they were called upon to do toward the betterment of human conditions, and perhaps we none of us appreciate rightly the true significance of work until we ponder deeply the words of Christ Jesus, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." To the Christian Scientist this would mean that the divine Mind is unceasingly active, and that all of Mind's ideas must share in this life-giving activity. On the human plane many toil on almost hopelessly, because they have not yet learned what it means to work with the Father and for the establishment of His kingdom on earth. When they really know what this means their work becomes a positive joy, bringing with it its own reward; and when efficiency and humility go hand in hand, there can be no question as to the steady advance of the worker.

The scholar who does his best in working through the primary rules of arithmetic cannot be held back; and in the ratio of his ability he must rise in the ranks of mathematicians and possibly find a high place in one of the professions. Christian Science shows that when we work from the standpoint of Principle, or divine intelligence, and trust Truth absolutely, we are taken care of and our work is never in vain. We all need, however, to get rid of the mortal elements which tend to mar character and to neutralize even honest effort. If one's thought of success is material and is narrowed down to self, results will always be disappointing; but if we learn what it means to work spiritually, as did

Christ Jesus, and because the Father worketh, no effort can ever seem toilsome, much less disappointing.

On page 223 of Science and Health our Leader says, "Peals that should startle the slumbering thought from its erroneous dream are partially unheeded." It cannot be denied that indolence is a marked characteristic of the mortal dream. Mortals are unwilling to make the efforts needed to grasp spiritual truth, and thus to realize perfect healing; and in many cases they are hopelessly indolent even where admitted human necessities are called for. That this indolence has no justification under divine law is very evident when we study the Master's words in the parable of the talents. We read there that the highest commendation as well as the richest reward came to the faithful servants; but in the case of the one who argued for fear and buried in the earth the talent which had been given him, the verdict of Truth declared him to be a "wicked and slothful servant;" while the Master declared, "For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance." This teaching, because it rests upon divine Principle, is applicable to all human conditions from the least to the greatest.

We may well rejoice that this great nation is being aroused to put forth new energies in every direction, and our best hope should be that the spiritual activity which purifies, exalts, and strengthens may never be lost sight of; for if it is kept well in view all good things will be "added unto" those who express it. St. Paul, who commends brotherly love, gives us this fine motto: "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."

Making Excuses

THE dilatory type of mind becomes expert in making excuses. It is willing to expend as much time and labor in contriving reasons for evading right action as would be necessary to put right action into operation. Therefore the saying has arisen among the worldly wise, If you want something done, ask the busy man to do it. The evil mental manipulator, who believes he is well acquainted with the idiosyncrasies of the human mind, finds the excuse-making habit ready made in minds many. When the Christian Scientist hears the unmistakable "still small voice" of inspiration calling for action, it is the custom of this supposititious serpent mind to argue delay through the avenues of selfishness, conceit, indolence, apprehension, and the like. The golden moment passes, the call remains unanswered, and humanity continues to suffer instead of being saved and rejoicing.

In national crises the same supposititious serpent mind, fresh from lying to Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, winds its way among the legislative, administrative, and judicial minds many of human government, and plants the seeds of suggestion from which come broods of excuses. Individuals once loved for their humanitarianism are then heard to use arguments which would prolong war. Worshipers of system at the expense of spiritual understanding search for minute flaws while instantaneous action is imperative. The pitiful aspect of this making of national excuses is that its victims are unaware of the occult influence which seeks to turn them into traitors and place in their hands the "thirty pieces of silver." Hence arise poor governments in which everybody's business is nobody's business, poor railroads, poor bridges and highways extravagantly paid for, food supplies monopolized, and strikes designed to create internal disorders so that nations may not fulfil their external obligations to liberty and justice. Concerning those who oppose the necessary uncovering of these secret manipulations Mrs. Eddy writes on page 211 of Miscellany: "They are sticklers for a false, convenient peace, straining at gnats and swallowing camels. The unseen wrong to individuals and society they are too cowardly, too ignorant, or too wicked to uncover, and excuse themselves by denying that this evil exists."

The homely motto "Do it now," and the no less serviceable reminder "God first," are valuable antidotes for the poison and paralysis of procrastination. It is only distrust of God which induces humanity to excuse its own limitations. An unclouded perception of God's power and of man's relationship to Him saves humanity from denying the truth of the First Commandment and becoming disobedient. This habit of making excuses leads to the greatest insecurity, for the human recalcitrant keeps himself outside the compassionate watchfulness of divine protection.

Mortal man is prone to try to release himself from obligation to God, forgetting that his very indebtedness to God is the necessary consequence of God's benign care. Racial, economic, and religious arguments make many apologies for themselves, but their solution is readily reached in Christian Science. In order to cause men of all nations to fraternize, a godlike character must be reached. Selfishness is fratricidal and asks the question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Mortal mind is not only a murderer but a fraud, killing through treachery.

When the finger of criticism is pointed at you, do you through fear accept it, or do you challenge it as a sentinel would an intruder? Let other people think as they want. What concerns you is what you are thinking. If they have not sufficient spiritual understanding to think spiritual thoughts, you should be willing to excuse them and let them be what they want to be, or think what they want to think. Are you on the divine side or on the mortal side in working out your problem of existence? Mrs. Eddy offered no excuses for her life-work. She glorified God and that was sufficient. On page 280 of Science and Health she writes: "The only excuse for entertaining human opinions and rejecting the Science of being is our mortal ignorance of Spirit, —ignorance which yields only to the understanding of divine Science, the understanding by which we enter into the kingdom of Truth on earth and learn that Spirit is infinite and supreme."

The War Relief Fund

"AT this opportunity I would like to express my gratitude to the Christian Scientists in America for all the love and kindness shown to their European brothers in this time by helping them financially. I am one of those who have been helped twice by the local committee [Zürich, Switzerland], having received fifty francs each time. Especially I have been touched by the tactful way in which the ladies of the committee presented the money to me. In the mean time divine Love has provided for me, so that for the present I need no help. I am very grateful to have been led to Christian Science, and it is my sincere desire to express in my daily life the teachings of Christian Science."

"Enclosed you will find a New York draft for the sum of one thousand dollars. Please divide this equally between our three funds, namely, War Relief, Benevolent Association, and the Real Estate. May this do its part in operating as the widow's mite to multiply the loaves and fishes on foreign shores, unfold and strengthen the wings of the Benevolent Association, and thus establish our real estate, here and now."

Digitized by Google

"I enclose a check for five hundred dollars, one hundred of which is to go to the Benevolent Association fund, and one hundred to the Real Estate fund. The balance of three hundred dollars please apply to the War Relief fund, or, if the Directors deem it best, the whole amount may be applied to the War Relief fund. This check is part of a fund which we had been saving for an automobile, an equal amount having been sent to the Red Cross fund last week. The children, who have been raised in a Christian Science Sunday school, know only joy in giving up their anticipated outings."

"May I express in my letter a little of the gratitude I feel for The Mother Church War Relief fund. In this time of need the fund has greatly helped my mother and me, and if it had not been for the love and practical help we have obtained from the fund, it would have seemed an impossibility at present to pay our per capita tax. As it is, we are not only able to do so, and not to feel any strain in so doing, but also to know that we are but just experiencing a little of the demonstration of 'Immanuel,' or 'God with us.' I know now more than ever what our dear Leader means in her spiritual interpretation of the Lord's Prayer [Science and Health, p. 16], in the section 'Give us this day our daily bread,' where she says, 'Give us grace for today; feed the famished affections.' Our Leader's interpretation of that prayer has helped me a great deal since entering upon my present sphere of duty, as have the whole of her works and the daily lesson. I have the privilege of having my lesson to myself in camp instead of attending church parade, and I very much appreciate it."

"Enclosed please find a small contribution to the War Relief fund. I can appreciate to a great degree the unusual privilege that is accorded us in being able to send money through this channel, not only because it is free from the usual expense in collecting and dispensing, but for the fact that every dollar going through this channel is accompanied with the 'word of God,' and that means healing to the recipient."

"I desire very much to thank earnestly the kind Christian Scientists who have taken part in the generous help extended to those of us who are suffering from unprecedented conditions owing to the war. It is impossible to say fully what a relief this help is to me, or how as a mother I am filled with gratitude for an answered faith that God is leading and sustaining us at each useful step of the way, however steep that way may appear. My husband and I both send our whole-hearted thanks to you all."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

El Centro, Cal.—Papers have been passed completing negotiations whereby El Centro Christian Science Society has acquired the property at the northeast corner of Olive and Seventh Streets. This lot is 120 by 140 feet, and is diagonally across the street from the property of the Woman's Ten Thousand Club and two blocks from the Barbara Worth Hotel.

Chicago, Ill.—Another Christian Science church has completed its building and it opens its doors today [June 17]. Ninth Church of Christ, Scientist, at Sixty-second Street and Woodlawn Avenue, is the ninth of the sixteen Christian Science churches in Chicago to achieve its own edifice. The building seats fifteen hundred people and with organ and furnishings will cost in the neighborhood of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars. The auditorium is 94 feet wide by 106 feet long.

Chicago Examiner.

Arkansas City, Kan.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, held its dedication services yesterday [May 27] in the new edifice, located at the corner of A Street and Chestnut Avenue. The auditorium seats two hundred and twenty-five people. The building was completed in July, 1916, at a cost of thirteen thousand dollars, and the first service was held there during the month.—Arkansas City Traveler.

San Francisco, Cal.—The work at San Quentin Prison is supported by all the Christian Science churches in San Francisco, financially, with one church annually taking complete charge and directing the work, which consists of services, literature mailing (including road camps and the state farm), and personal interviews with the men, also the securing of positions for those leaving the institution.

Honolulu, Hawaii.—The Christian Science church today [June 4] took out a building permit for the erection of a new church at Kewalo Street and Wilder Avenue, to cost $59,400. The building is to be 122 by 76 feet.

Wheaton, Ill.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, held opening services in the new edifice, corner of Main and Center Streets, Sunday, July 1.—Wheaton Illinoian.

The Lectures

Sewickley, Pa. (Society).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Roy A. Mather, who said in part:—

At times the true light has appeared in human consciousness with great effulgence. It was in the consciousness of Enoch when "he pleased God" and was translated; was discerned by Moses, figuratively set forth in the burning bush; was seen by Elijah when he transcended the limitations of mortal existence. It was manifested throughout the whole career of Jesus of Nazareth. The star of Bethlehem symbolized its coming, and it was seen in the wonderful illumination of the child at twelve when he was found sitting among the doctors; it protected Jesus from temptation in the wilderness and was seen in the transfiguration. It was that light through which Jesus taught the necessity of the brotherhood of man, through which he healed the sins of the world and its consequent sickness. That light was also manifested in the resurrection. Christian Science has come to this age again greatly manifesting that light which essays to teach men to have in them the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus;" the Mind which again teaches the necessity of the brotherly love of all mankind, which again heals the sick and the sinning through prayerful metaphysics.

Oneonta, N. Y. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Elmer Clute, who said in part:—

Centuries ago, when John sent his disciples to Jesus asking, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Jesus replied, "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." Today the question is being asked, "Is Christian

Digitized by Google

Science Christian, Christlike?" From thousands of grateful lives comes this answer: "Sin, disease, and death are being destroyed; health, holiness, and immortality are being realized; and the truth about God, man, and the universe is being expressed." Christian Scientists understand that the command of Jesus to preach the gospel and heal the sick was to remain forever intact, and that when the gospel is fully preached it heals all manner of disease.

LETCHWORTH, ENGLAND (Society).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by K. F. Knudsen, president of the Norwegian Chamber of Commerce, who said in part:—

Everybody can see that all the troubles of the world are due to lack of mutual understanding between individuals and nations; and many of us have come to the conclusion that all our troubles, including sickness and sorrow, are due to lack of understanding. A good many years ago I was told that a practising physician of my acquaintance had abandoned materia medica and adopted the practice of Christian Science. My only comment was that I was sorry, and thought it objectionable that any one should deliberately withdraw from the service of humanity the knowledge gained from the study of medicine.

Now if I had heard that this physician had gained some knowledge about our physical bodies enabling him to supersede the use of medicine, I should have been very much pleased. Instead, I allowed my prejudice against anything called a religion to rule my thoughts. I was proud to call myself an agnostic, forgetting that the word ignoramus is the exact equivalent; but the word ignoramus would not have been so flattering to my pride. The tyranny which churches had in the past exercised over men's thinking, had associated in my mind a skeptical attitude toward anything called religion with freedom of thought and scientific thought. I was not ready to see that any mental attitude which disregards moral and spiritual forces and banishes troublesome questions as to the whence and why of existence, is neither scientific nor Christian.

Then came the moment when hopeless illness made its appearance in my home. At this time I found all my skepticism, and all that is called intellect, of small avail. I rebelled against the injustice of the medical verdict and was ready to study Christian Science. That was twelve years ago, and since then Christian Science has been our only physician.

When the Hebrews of old returned from captivity it is recorded that Ezra "read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading." This is what Christian Science does for mankind.

TOLEDO, OHIO (Second Church).—William R. Rathvon, lecturer; introduced by W. G. Manning, who said in part:—

In the year 1875 there came from the printing press a book written by a woman. It was a wonderful work, original, unique, logical. Men marveled as they read it. It found in the Scriptures a fundamental command which the Christian churches for centuries had passed unheeded, the injunction to heal the sick. It took the Bible truths and applied them to the needs of humanity. It made clear to earnest seekers for health and righteousness how to follow the path which leads from the plane of sensuous experience to the higher level of spiritual understanding. That book was "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. The growth of Christian Science, which is one of the wonders of our time, is causing hundreds of thousands of thinking men and women to observe with no small interest the fruitage of this new-old religion, a religion that is declaring a God at hand, and is reiterating to this age those wonderful words of Christ Jesus when he said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

INDEPENDENCE, MO. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Cora Izzard, who said in part:—

Nearly two thousand years ago, in the little town of Bethlehem of Judæa, a babe was born, and prophecy said that his name should be called "Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace," and at his birth angels sang the song "On earth peace, good will toward men." Today as we witness the mighty world struggle, those outside of Christian Science can see no peace, and they wonder if prophecy prophesied in vain and why the angels sang. But in "the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger," how many beheld "The Prince of Peace"? When the heavenly host sang forth its wondrous song, how many heard it? Only three wise men, who journeyed far, following a star, and found him. Only a few shepherds abiding in the field heard the song.

Down through all these ages The Prince of Peace has reigned, but we knew it not. Down through all these centuries there has been peace on earth, but we found it not. We knew not where to find it until in our own age one came who was wise enough to behold the guiding star, and good enough to point it out to others, so that all might find their way to the abiding place of The Prince of Peace. We were deaf to the angels' voices until one came who was pure enough to hear them and who told us what angels are. And now, since Mary Baker Eddy gave to the world her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," we know that peace is to be found in Mind, and that we may ever hear the angels' voices if we have a receptive thought.

CLEVELAND, OHIO (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Roland L. Strauss, who said in part:—

A gathering such as we have here this evening is significant of what is occurring with all classes of people the world over, —it means that mankind is searching for a more practical religion. This is strangely true, despite the fact that Jesus proved over nineteen centuries ago that the Christianity which he taught and practised was capable of meeting and did meet every phase of human discord. Through the understanding of the Christ, Truth, Christian Scientists are daily proving the power of God by healing the sick, redeeming the sinner, and freeing man from all manner of discord. Thus they are fulfilling the doctrine of the Master, who once said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

Testimonies of Healing

About eight years ago I began the study of Christian Science. When a small child I had a severe attack of scarlet fever, and after that never knew a well day, being afflicted with a weak heart, chronic stomach and bowel trouble, and many other ailments. I also had frequent attacks of headache, often being confined to the bed for several days at a time.

When I began to study Christian Science I gave no thought to my own state of health, but read with the sole purpose of helping one dear to me. I did not realize that I had been healed until one day I awoke to the fact that I, who had been a slave to medicine, had not taken a material remedy for two weeks. All symptoms of stomach and bowel trouble and all indications of a weak heart had utterly vanished. I had been eating heartily of whatever was set before me, taking no thought of my food. I have never been troubled with the least symptoms of those disorders since, and many other ailments dropped away from me one by one as I continued to study Christian Science.

One thing that had caused me much suffering was varicose veins, and although some of the scars are still apparent I never suffer from this trouble. Most of my healings have come as the result of a clearer understanding of the great goodness and power of God, and of man's relation to Him, gained through the study of Mrs. Eddy's writings. I would like to mention one healing that has caused friends who are dear to me to see that it was due to the power of Truth and to begin to seek it for themselves.

One evening I had a severe attack of illness supposedly caused by poisoning, and in a short time seemed very near death, as there were muscular spasms and I was all but unconscious. I however clung to these words of the Master in regard to those who believe: "If they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them," also to the beautiful promises in the ninety-first psalm. My friends telephoned to a Christian Science practitioner for help, and in fifteen minutes after she had received the message the muscles relaxed and I began to experience relief from the intense suffering.

I am very grateful for the physical healings, but more so for the spiritual uplift,—the healing from sin and the purification of thought and character which is still going on as I grow more and more obedient to the teachings of Christian Science. The Bible instead of being full of contradictions, as it once seemed to me, has become the book of Life and the Word of God, for I have found that Science and Health is indeed a "Key to the Scriptures."

I thank God for His great goodness, and I am more grateful to Mrs. Eddy than words can express for the unselfed love which she felt for the world and which enabled her to give us this truth that makes free.

Several years ago my two little children accompanied the maid to a dentist's office, and while she was in the chair they played on a window seat on a level with the sill. The two year old boy pushed too hard upon the screen, which gave way, and he fell about fifteen feet to a cement sidewalk below. When the maid called me up and told me what had happened, it flashed through my mind that a short time previous I had declared the truth against any evil befalling the children. I stood firm upon my declaration, and calling a practitioner told her of the accident and the work done. I then went for the boy, who had been carried into a drug store, where the dentist and a physician were examining him. Upon completing the examination the physician told me that apparently no bones were broken, though the boy gave no sign of being conscious. He said he would tell me how to care for the child that night, but I assured him I knew what to do and then carried the boy home. In spite of his father's fears, he was around the next day, and rode over in a cart to that same drug store. The only sign of his fall was a large patch of skin missing from his temple, where he had struck.

Some time later an older daughter who was having a course in emergencies in school, catechized me as to what I would do in case one of the children were to take a dose of poison. I told her that we had a better cure than the antidotes she mentioned, and I mentally declared the promise given by the Master, "If they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them." We were having some decorating done at the time, and the next evening this same girl found the baby eating a piece of white lead putty. She brought it to me and wanted to know if it was poison. Immediately I remembered having declared the truth and felt no fear, but when I found the baby in a high fever in the night, I telephoned to a practitioner, who said to call her up again in an hour. In the mean time my husband remarked, "You know that lead causes convulsions." I had not known, but when I called the practitioner the second time I told her of his fear. Before another hour the child was less feverish, and we went to sleep. In the morning he was as well as ever.

At another time, seeing a touring car slow down to let my two year old child cross the street, I declared protection for my family from accidents. The next day our daughter, while roller skating with two other girls, was bumped into by an automobile, which was going slowly, and was dragged twenty feet across the car tracks. When the automobile came to a standstill she crawled out from behind. She refused a ride home, and stopped to help one of her friends who had fainted at the sight of the accident. Three men who were near by considered her escape nothing less than a miracle.

These and many other incidents have shown me the value of watchfulness and prayer, so that as I look forward and see where error might enter, I lock the door beforehand. The farther I go upon the Science road, the more I realize the debt of gratitude we owe our Leader for blazing the trail for us. She seems to have had in some form each of the problems that come to us, and yet she reached the heights,—and we can too! This is our "reasonable service." Words are a poor medium with which to express my gratitude for the "key" which has made the Scriptures an ever present help in time of trouble.—Corinne C. Sanderson, Wilmette, Ill.

During the past eight and a half years I have had many proofs of the omnipotence and ever-presence of God, and my desire is to acknowledge the peace and comfort which I have found, mentally and physically. I was considered an unusually delicate child, and fainting spells were an almost daily occurrence. We moved to the West, but I continued to be a tired, sad child, unable to romp and play as other children did, all ills of the flesh seeming to find an abiding place in me. Conditions became no better even with womanhood and changes of climate.

For many years I seemed to hear the words, "There is One above all others who can heal you," and I searched until I found Christian Science. I had always felt the desire for more scientific Christianity, and this teaching dawned upon my consciousness as a bright light, proving to me the all-power and protecting ever-presence of divine Love. So-called hereditary headaches and rheumatism, locomotor ataxia, weaknesses of many years' standing, the third acute attack of appendicitis, and many minor ailments have been proven unreal. I have experienced many instantaneous healings, and am today a healthy, happy woman, having found the truth which Jesus said would make us free.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude for Christian Science, for our revered Leader and her untiring loving efforts in leaving us our helpful literature, and for our teachers, from one of whom I received class instruction seven years ago. Christian Science has made God's Word my daily bread, and the Bible is a beautiful new book to me,—a remedy at hand for every ill, whether mental or physical. God has been the only physician in our home during these years, giving peace and comfort in all sorrow and distress, and proving the truth of the beautiful words, "I am the Lord that healeth thee."—Minnie S. Berry, Alliance, Neb.

I wish to certify to the truth of my wife's statement in regard to the benefits received by her through Christian Science. I wish to say further that during the last eight years our son has been healed of severe attacks of typhoid fever, acute lung trouble, and appendicitis, in a very short time, and I myself was healed of a severe case of blood-poisoning a year ago, when people who saw me declared that I could not live more than a few days. During the last eight years, since we have found Christian Science, we have not called a physician for any member of the family, while prior to that time he was a frequent visitor in our home.

With gratitude I send this testimony of what Christian Science has done for me and for my family. In March, 1910, I had what the doctor pronounced rheumatic gout, and was under his care for six weeks without relief. Then a friend who came to see me said that Christian Science would heal me. She sent me some literature, in which I read how people were healed by reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and then loaned me a copy of the text-book. I was healed in three weeks through reading this book, and my healing has been permanent. We have had many other demonstrations in our family. Headache, earache, burns, whooping-cough, and chicken-pox have been overcome.

I am grateful to all who have helped me to understand the truth, and for the spiritual uplift. This testimony is my thanksgiving to God for His faithful servant, Mrs. Eddy, who has brought to light the eternal truth of the Bible, thus giving us a correct concept of God and of man.

[Translated from the German]

In the beginning of July, 1916, I had a severe attack of neuralgia in the head. The pain would set in during the night and often last until morning, with nausea and vomiting upon my getting up. I worked against this trouble along the lines of Christian Science, and, thanks be to God, was able to perform my duties every day; but about a week later I experienced attacks of such severity that had I not known of the healing power of Truth I would have summoned a physician during the night. Instead, I asked a Christian Science practitioner for help the next morning. Very soon after she started treatment I felt relieved, and when about eleven o'clock at night a call came to assist in a case of confinement, as I am a midwife, I was able to go without either fear or pain, but with the assurance that God was my help. Disturbances occurred during the following fortnight, but they were less violent and of shorter duration. Although very much engaged professionally at that time, I was able to attend to my daily duties besides.

I thank God for having been led to find the truth, for it has been my shield and buckler. I have had the privilege of experiencing many times, in my own case as well as with relatives, that God is our ever present help. Last winter my little eight year old nephew was taken ill. Soon fever and cough set in, and after nine o'clock the little fellow became very much frightened, as he felt he was choking. I asked for treatment that evening, and in less than an hour he quietly fell asleep. He slept all night without coughing once, and in the morning went to school. This boy at the age of four, when I took him into my home, was afflicted with chronic catarrh of the bowels, but through Christian Science was completely healed of this annoying and very painful trouble. Thus I would say in the words of the psalmist: "In God I will praise his word, in God I have put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me."

In 1903 I heard of a physical healing through the ministration of Christian Science. At that time I was not yet twenty-one, was in good health, and not interested in religious study. During the four years that followed I made a desultory study of Mrs. Eddy's writings and attended the services at Christian Science churches with some regularity at first. A number of practically instantaneous healings occurred during this time; among them were relief from hemorrhoids which I had experienced periodically since early childhood, and the overcoming of influenza, "pink eye," and some minor ailments. There had been no apparent spiritual awakening, however, and it was not until the spring of 1908 that I found myself face to face with a problem which promised to be stubborn.

Never before had I known what it was to have to seek employment, and although I was skilled and accustomed to good wages, there seemed for the first time no demand for the service I could give, and no place to seek an opportunity. At last I had to turn to God, Principle, to find not only employment but myself; to affirm and demonstrate that "in Science man is the offspring of Spirit," and that because of his origin he does not have to "pass through material conditions prior to reaching intelligence" (Science and Health, p. 63). Through a number of circumstances unnecessary to relate, but proving conclusively that the result came not from man but from God, employment was found. What is of far greater importance to me, there also came an earnest desire to study the writings of Mrs. Eddy in connection with the Bible, and to subscribe for and read the authorized periodicals. An interesting feature of this experience was that others involved with me, although not interested in Christian Science, were benefited by the work done, and these benefits have been as permanent as in my own case.

Since that time there have been numerous opportunities to prove the efficacy of Christian Science in all manner of circumstances. A badly bruised ankle and an injured eye were quickly healed. Health and strength have been retained, although at times many of the alleged laws of matter have necessarily been violated. The temptation to rely upon material means for relief of any physical indisposition disappeared after my first experience, and the understanding that God is omnipresent and omnipotent has been sufficient in every instance.

The mere expression of gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, unless accompanied by proof of sincerity and consecrated living, is barren. Truly has her unselfed love and devotion to God, and to our Wayshower, Christ Jesus, made it possible for me to understand them, and thus to become more useful to myself and others. I know that only in this usefulness can I really prove my sincerity.

The testimonies in our periodicals have so often helped me that I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science. About five years before becoming interested in this teaching I injured the forefinger of my left hand, and it became quite useless, doctors telling me that the vitality was destroyed. After reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy for about a fortnight, I noticed that I was using this finger with the same efficiency as before the accident, although I had not thought of it in connection with Christian Science healing. Sleeplessness, also various nervous troubles, including neuritis, disappeared so quietly that it was not until I heard a testimony given one Wednesday evening of a similar healing that I realized the knowledge of the truth as taught in Christian Science had made me free.

I am indeed grateful for the physical healing, and for the help Christian Science is in overcoming all the small inharmonies of every-day life, but words cannot express my deep thankfulness for the rest and calm which entered my consciousness with the first wonderful revelation of the truth which our text-book contains. Whereas I was formerly very unhappy and restless, Christian Science has brought me greater happiness and peace than I ever thought possible. My old religious beliefs had failed to satisfy me, but now God's infinite love meets my every need.

I would like to take this opportunity of thanking the Publishing Society for all the literature, which is such a wonderful help in these times. I know I can best show my gratitude to God, who through Mrs. Eddy has shown us this way of salvation, by the full and glad surrender of self, and by daily striving to let the incoming of the pure Christ-consciousness eliminate all that is unlike good.

MARY C. RICHARDS, St. Margaret's-on-Thames, England.

Never having read a testimony in the Sentinel from this little summer resort in the Rocky Mountains, I wish to send this tribute of joy and appreciation for what Christian Science has done for me and mine. I did not come into Science through any physical healing, but was divinely led to attend the services one Sunday morning, and was so impressed with what I heard that I immediately took up the study, and for five years this truth has been gradually unfolding to me.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I tell of what divine Love has done for us. In 1913 my son, while unloading ice from a refrigerator car, caught his arm in the elevator, breaking the bone, dislocating the arm, and cutting the wrist terribly. The company immediately called a doctor, who brought the boy home. After setting the break and pulling the dislocation into place, then bandaging the cut, he said blood-poisoning was very likely to develop, and also made the remark that the boy would not be able to work again for six months or longer. After the doctor had gone the pain became unbearable and caused the boy to have cramps and sickness in the stomach. I at once asked for help in Christian Science from a practitioner, and inside of fifteen minutes the patient was asleep. From that time on there was no pain, and the boy did not lose a night's rest. The ninth day the doctor pronounced the arm healed. He also stated that it was the most perfect healing he had ever seen, and called in several men to see it, as I had told him we were having Christian Science treatment.

I have been healed in one treatment of appendicitis, also of bowel trouble, headaches, and aching feet. Glasses, which the oculist said would have to be worn all my life, have been laid aside. For all these blessings I feel thankful to God, and am grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has prepared the way for us through her teachings, so that all who will may learn of this truth which sets free.

INEZ A. BAILLIE, Glenwood Springs, Col.

Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It was God, who is omnipotent, that saved me from an early grave. I never had known good health, and when about the age of twenty had to be fitted with glasses. At first they were used only for reading, but a few years later they had to be worn constantly. About twenty years after I first began to wear them my eyes failed so fast that it became necessary to have the lenses changed two or three times a year, and although I had always had the best specialists obtainable, the point was reached where they could not help me. At the same time my general health failed so rapidly that I thought I would lose my sight and reason too.

I lost all faith in doctors and medicine and resolved not to take any more drugs. A short time before this I had heard of Christian Science. Though I knew nothing of what it really was, I wrote to a friend who was a Christian Scientist and asked her if she thought Science could heal my eyes. She replied that she knew it could, and that seemed to me the best news I had ever heard,—indeed it seemed too good to be true. The aid of a Christian Science practitioner was soon sought and treatments were begun. Three days later the thought suddenly came to me that if my eyes were healed I did not need glasses; so they were immediately taken off, and to my joy I could read as well as if I had never worn them. I have not used them since, and my sight is perfect.

For years I had rheumatism, and before coming into Science could not walk very far without suffering; besides I was always so tired that I could hardly drag myself around. After my eyes were healed I again sought the help of a practitioner, and in one week was healed. The Bible promise that they that wait on the Lord "shall run, and not be weary," has been literally fulfilled in me. Since beginning the study of Christian Science many lesser ailments and discords have been overcome. The greatest progress is made when I study the Lesson-Sermons faithfully.

I thank God daily for my blessings, and for knowing the truth that makes free. I am indeed grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving us this truth, and in such form that all can avail themselves of its teachings and prove their worth.—MRS. W. J. FLICK, Aurora, Ore.

Perhaps others may be benefited by the following account of an experience which convinced me that as we give power to evil through fear or hate, thus making it real to our own consciousness, we reap in disturbed physical conditions the results of the evil thoughts sown by mortal mind.

One Saturday about four years ago, while waiting for a car one morning, I entered a near-by store, where I found several acquaintances. I was asked to give an opinion about an article which was being read aloud, relating to a certain person, and venturing to say a few words I soon had a warm argument in hand. I expressed condemnation of the one under discussion, besides entertaining resentful feelings toward the man who had inveigled me into the argument, and while in this disturbed mental state noticed my car coming and hastened toward it. When about to board it I wrenched my ankle. The pain was intense, and caused me to complain bitterly against the street car company's defective switch tracks; however, I limped slowly and painfully into the car and rode to the loop. I then tried to reach a Christian Science practitioner near by, and after waiting for some time without finding the one I wished, I returned to my boarding place and read the Bible and Science and Health. The pain was overcome to some extent, but the ankle remained quite swollen and discolored.

As the weather was cold I did not go out for two days. Then I borrowed a cane, and although unable to lace my shoe on account of the swollen and painful condition of the foot, I boarded the street car and went straight to see a Christian Scientist. I related my experience, and he gave me a treatment. As a result I was then and there freed from pain, and after thanking the Scientist for his help I arranged my shoe laces and hurriedly left the office, even forgetting the borrowed cane. A week or ten days after the above treatment I met this friend on the street, and told him that the foot was healed when I left his office, but that it was still discolored. He replied, "If you will quit thinking black thoughts, your foot will quickly become white." I followed his advice, and on retiring that night, to my great delight I found that the discoloration had disappeared.

I am grateful to Christian Science for health, protection, and an abundance of good, and to its Discoverer, Mrs. Eddy, whose consecrated purity, self-denial, and self-sacrifice "has brought the Light again" (Hymnal, p. 98).

[Translated from the French]

Ten years ago, when I came back from Canada to France, my own country, a friend who met me in Paris asked if my fortune was made. I told him that it had not come in the way I expected, but that I had found a treasure and was ready to share it with him. Then I told him of Christian Science. He said that it seemed very good, and he would look into it more fully when he had time. My own relatives did not see the good or the need of Christian Science at once, but after some time my mother was healed through it of the fear she had of eating certain kinds of food, having had liver complaint for years. When the fear was gone this trouble ceased to manifest itself. Then my mother and sisters took up the study of Christian Science in earnest, and the benefits came with it. My sister was healed of a chronic ailment, my brother-in-law of rheumatism; and through the truth as taught in Christian Science we have been able to overcome quickly any disease which has tried to assert itself.

For several years we held the Christian Science services in German at my home on Sunday, but for the last two years we have held them in French. This means more work, as we have to translate Science and Health by sight at the services. Christian Science is to us the "pearl of great price," and a very present help and comfort, especially at this time. Although the war has affected us all financially, yet I must say that we have been able to help our brothers and sisters more than at any time, proving what Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 206): "In the scientific relation of God to man, we find that whatever blesses one blesses all, as Jesus showed with the loaves and the fishes,—Spirit, not matter, being the source of supply." Can any one wonder that we are grateful to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science, which teaches us to love God more and our neighbors as ourselves?

From Our Exchanges

[The Christian Intelligencer]

It is the one great duty of the church, its privilege, the supreme opportunity in its history, to prove its faith in the Lord's truth, to utter his message in the face of all antagonism, to hold aloft above the world's strife and battle his grand ideal of love fulfilled in brotherhood. For years past the interest of the modern world in social conditions and the questions arising from them has been a challenge to the church to turn upon them the light of this law of Christ; and Christian scholars have unfolded the rich content of social truth that lay enwrapped in the teaching of the Master. Today as never before the church and the Christian are called to defend this truth against the boldest foe it has ever met, and confidently to claim its pertinence to the uttermost human association, to make it the law for the world. The church should be the training camp for the officers of this kingdom of love.

[Rev. John A. Patten in The Christian World]

Ah, how faithless we had become in recent years! We thought that the gospel had lost its charm—that its music had no delight for the ears of the younger generation. In a desperation truly pathetic we talked a great deal about "restating the truth in terms of modern thought." That is a laudable ambition—a thing that must be done. But that did not touch the heart of the trouble—our lost sense of God. Now, upon the battle fields of Europe, God has spoken again in the burning language of love, and the men who need that love so much are responding to its appeal. Our new religious teachers may very well be the men who come back from the war, testifying to God's grace in every hour of need—our new prophets, those lads of ours who upon many a field of battle have had their vision of the crucified Lord.

[California Christian Advocate]

The complacency of some of our American citizens in this world's crisis in assuming that America can selfishly continue its prosperity and peace without paying its part of the cost, and of that small group of religious people who stand "gazing up into heaven," expecting that some great world-wide miracle shall be performed to save them the cost of sacrifice and service, is very hard to be borne. The time has come when every American pulpit should give no uncertain sound. He who is disqualified by blindness from birth or lack of information or cowardice should resign his pulpit. The minister is a prophet of God. His duty is to preach righteousness, which is to be maintained at any cost, even unto life itself.

[American Lutheran Survey]

The primary and all-including mission of the church is to minister to the spiritual needs of men through the preaching of the Word; and instead of the present condition making the strict observance of this mission less important, it only emphasizes its importance in order that men who are driven almost wholly to the consideration of secular things may have their attention redirected to the spiritual.

[New-Church Messenger]

Men of the civilized world are now, by growing enlightenment under the Lord's providence, bringing more consciously to mind and view a desire for His kingdom to come upon earth. And it is perhaps through the trials and temptations of universal war, the destruction and woe of natural and complacent satisfactions, that we can at least begin to build the walls of that kingdom upon our earthly plane of life.

[Rev. Canon W. E. Reginald Morrow, M.A., in The Record]

The fact of a divided Christendom is such a barrier to real progress. It is such a waste of energy, and has its roots in selfishness; for if the spirit of genuine love were to permeate all denominations a way would have been found long ago out of the tangled mass of churches and sects, each toiling in rolling its own stone along and frequently colliding with and therefore abusing the other. If the war is teaching us anything it is teaching us this lesson: that the world will never progress until there is more unity among the nations.

There is a new nationalism that is arising out of the war of the nations. It is a nationalism in which the brotherhood of man and the service of humanity shall be the dominant factors. It is the world vision of nations, which are recognizing that they cannot exist without each other, and therefore their first business is to seek a common ground whereon they may build for a future, in which the good of humanity shall be placed before their own national ideals. Now in precisely the same way men are realizing the absolute necessity of uniting the different sections of the Christian church in order that the resultant blessing may be poured forth upon humanity, and all the world shall be brought into saving relationship with Christ, who is the center of each individual life, his hopes and aspirations. The greatest blot upon Christendom in the past has been that each section of the Christian church has sought to impress its own tenets and practices on all the others, with the result that collisions have frequently occurred.

[Miss A. Maude Royden in The Christian Commonwealth]

Do you not sometimes wonder if those who come back to us maimed or blind or shattered, in the long years to come will be able always to feel that it was worth while? To die —that is one thing. To come back the wreck of a man, and live through all the long years after the war—will they be able, do you think, always to feel that it was worth while? Only if they see of the travail of their souls, and are satisfied. Only if the new world is so fair that no one can doubt that it was worth that sacrifice.

[Rev. Frederick R. Griffin in The Christian Register]

The nations are learning that their spiritual forces are best employed not when they become an adjunct of the government or the army, but when they direct the one and sustain the other. Never was the uncompromising spirit of religion more needed to save the people from the pride and lust of kings and to organize and give power to the democratic spirit. The end which all right-minded men and women desire is neither peace nor war, but a just organization of the world.

[Zion's Herald]

Every soundly converted Christian man is exhorted to stir up the gift of God that is in him. But how shall he do it? Not simply by commanding himself to be stirred up, but by coming into contact with eternal truths, glowing ideals, and the holy examples, notably of Christ the Redeemer and guide, and secondarily of pious men and women of all ages who have left on record some instructive commentary on God's Word or who have lived under the very shadow of His throne. It is only great things that will make a man great, and only by the contemplation of supernal realities will a human soul be stirred out of its unspiritual contentment and its lethargy of recurring self-indulgence to live a high and holy life as Christ lived it. The gift of God can be stimulated in any man only by the inspiration of the Most High. It is the heavenly vision that makes us great and renders us socially effective.

The modern banking system of Japan dates from the promulgation in 1872 of the national banking regulations, which were modeled on the national bank act of the United States. Ten years later the privilege of issuing notes was taken away from the national banks and given to the newly created Bank of Japan. By 1899 national banks had ceased to exist as such, their places having been taken by banks organized under special acts. There are 664 savings banks in the country, organized under regulations promulgated in 1893. These, as well as the ordinary banks, of which there are 1423, are under the control of the minister of finance. They are not very large individually, owing principally to the popularity of the postal savings bank operated by the imperial Government.

Huge silos for the storage of wheat will probably be erected in each of the four wheat states of the commonwealth of Australia, as a result of the recommendation of the new wheat storage commission appointed at the end of May. The two great problems which Australia has been facing have been, in the words of the prime minister: "First, the securing of additional freight by every possible means, putting existing freight to the very best use by the more expeditious loading, discharging, and dispatching of vessels; and, secondly, the provision for preserving in good order and condition such products as could not be marketed owing to want of freight."

The growth of the butter industry has been one of the most remarkable features in connection with the economic development of Siberia. This industry originated with the opening of the railway as far as the River Ob in the year 1894. Previous to this the only kind of butter shipped from Siberia was the so-called potted butter; that is, butter melted down, salted, and resolidified. The butter producing area follows the track of the Trans-Siberian Railway and extends from the European Russian border to the town of Atchinsk. The most southerly point is Semipalatinsk, and the most northerly the town of Tara, on the Irtish River. Within this region there are approximately 3500 dairies and butter factories.

From 1912 to June 30, 1917, building permits were issued in Honolulu, Hawaii, aggregating $10,125,061. The board of supervisors for the city and county of Honolulu plan to spend a million dollars in the next two years on road construction on the island of Oahu. Much of the road building will be of permanent concrete construction, and includes a portion of the belt road around the island of Oahu. There are now approximately 474 miles of roads in the city and county of Honolulu, of which 234 are within the limits of the city proper.

Canada claims to have the largest herd of buffalo on the American continent, confined in the new national reserve near Wainwright, a small city some hundred odd miles east of Edmonton, Alberta. The animals have a splendid range, something in the neighborhood of one hundred and sixty-five square miles, which is enclosed by a wire fence eight feet high and over seventy miles long. The price paid by the Dominion Government to Michael Pablo, an Indian, for 600 head of buffalo, was $200,000.

The importation of jute gunny bags and gold leaf is a measure of the native prosperity of Indo-China. In a general way the importation of gunny bags varies with the exportation of rice. Gold leaf is imported from Hongkong and China and manufactured into various articles of jewelry, which are the chief form of native personal property, and the amount brought in is an indication of local purchasing power during the year. The receipts in 1916 were about $1,300,000.

Much attention has been attracted to the discovery of a large deposit of cinnabar ore in the mountains near Candelaria, situated a short distance from the Rio Grande, about seventy-five miles southwest of Alpine, Texas. Promising prospects have been taken up, and it is expected that there will be extensive development operations inaugurated, including the establishment of one or more quicksilver furnaces.

Oregon's new Columbia Highway extends through a land of almost unparalleled beauty from Astoria to The Dalles, a distance of some two hundred miles. Throughout this entire distance no billboards are allowed to appear to mar in any way the beauty of the countryside or to interfere with the traveler's appreciation of the scenery. Billboard men themselves are in sympathy with this exclusion.

In 1911 an Italian resident of Eritrea discovered near the boundary line between that colony and Abyssinia an extensive deposit of potash salts. It is said to resemble those at Stassfurt, Germany. The operating company estimates that there are available at least 850,000 tons of the salt deposit, averaging not less than 55 per cent potash. There are hot springs that add steadily to the deposit.

Uruguay, the smallest of the South American countries, ranks fourth in the value of its foreign commerce, closely following Argentina, Brazil, and Chile. With the Atlantic Ocean on the east and south and a navigable river on the west, Uruguay's shipping contact with the world has developed its resources to an unusual extent. In 1916 the country claimed 1,378,808 inhabitants.

Closer cooperation between Congress and the executive departments is proposed in a bill introduced in Congress by Senator McLean of Connecticut. By its terms, cabinet officers would be seated in Congress with the right to participate in debate on matters affecting their respective departments. They would also be subject to interpellation on Mondays and Thursdays in the House of Representatives and on Tuesdays and Fridays in the Senate.

The prospective crop of peanuts is 70,000,000 bushels for the whole South. Georgia's acreage has jumped in one year from 100,000 to 420,000 acres. The increase in Texas has more than doubled last year's acreage, and that state has 600,000 acres planted for this year's crop. From less than 1,250,000 acres the acreage of the entire South has become 2,000,000 acres.

First, second, and third class postmasters, says The World's Work, are "presidential officers;" that is, they must be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Under Mr. Wilson's executive order, examinations for these places will now be held by the Civil Service Commission, which will prepare "eligible lists." In future the President will make his appointments from these lists.

The apple crop in the state of Tasmania, Australia, for the present season is the smallest in recent years. Last year nearly 2,000,000 bushel cases were shipped to England and to other states of Australia, while this year's exports will not be much over 1,000,000 cases, of which about 150,000 cases were sent to England.

Most of the lumber used in Argentina is imported, the larger part from the United States. The predominating domestic timber is the quebracho, which is used extensively for the manufacture of tanning extracts, for railroad ties, and for telegraph and fence posts. The lumber from abroad is used for construction work.

A new "evergreen" highway is being mapped out by the secretary of state and the president of the Highway Association of the state of Washington. The proposed highway will lead across the state, through Idaho, Utah, and Arizona to El Paso, Texas.

The tenth fair of Paris was open from May 16 to May 31, 1917, and was patronized by about eighteen hundred exhibiting firms. The long esplanade in front of the Invalides was changed into a sort of miniature town divided into streets, each denoting a trade.

The mileage of railways in Australia is increasing more slowly during these war years than in normal times. For the year ended June 30, 1916, Government lines open for traffic increased by 676 miles.

During 1916 the national telegraph lines of Guatemala were extended to a total length of 6847 kilometers; the telephone lines to 821 kilometers. There are now 252 telegraph offices and 102 telephone stations.

The total number of sugar mills in Cuba during the year 1916-17 was 201. Of these, 68 are owned and operated by citizens of the United States. The crop will yield about 2,800,000 tons.

The total income derived from Chinese railways during 1916 amounted to $30,997,471, an increase of $2,415,800 compared with 1915. The total expenditure incurred was $14,839,614.

The total increase of savings accounts in the different banks of New Zealand, including the post-office savings bank, for the three years ended March 31, 1917, amounted to $99,162,730.

The rivers and harbors bill, carrying an appropriation of $27,954,000, passed the Senate on July 26 by a vote of 50 to 11. It passed the House of Representatives on June 27.

Capitol Heights, Md., adjoining the District of Columbia, voted on July 9 to raise all local revenue by taxation of land values only.

Oregon at a recent special election authorized a six million dollar bond issue for good roads.

The Incorruptible

DUNCAN SINCLAIR

THERE was no uncertainty in Paul's mind when he wrote to the Corinthian church, "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." Paul recognized the possibility of the achievement; and undoubtedly he knew the Science of the method whereby it could be wrought. Christ Jesus had taught it to his followers; and, what is of far greater significance, had demonstrated that it was possible for him to overcome the belief of material life and intelligence,—to overcome that which is the corruptible by rising into the consciousness of man as spiritual and therefore incorruptible.

The teaching of Jesus was based entirely on his knowledge of God. Everything he told men about God was the absolute truth; and it was his spiritual understanding of the eternal, of reality, of the incorruptible, which enabled him to destroy the false belief of material law in the minds of the sick and the sinning who came to him, thereby restoring them to health and purity. Christian Science gives mankind the clearest understanding of God in accordance with the teachings of Jesus, and shows exactly what the incorruptible is, and consequently what is meant by the corruptible.

Throughout her writings Mrs. Eddy speaks of God as Mind; and since God is infinite, Mind is infinite. All that really exists is therefore the manifestation of Mind. Because Mind is infinite, Mind is eternal; so that all that is real or the manifestation of Mind is eternal or incorruptible. How does Mind manifest itself? In one way only, in ideas. What exists, then, as reality or the incorruptible is the divine Mind and Mind's ideas. These ideas are spiritual, and they reflect the qualities of perfect Mind and are altogether good. On page 88 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes, "Ideas are spiritual, harmonious, and eternal," and then she goes on immediately thereafter to expose the counterfeit of these ideas in the words, "Beliefs proceed from the so-called material senses, which at one time are supposed to be substance-matter and at another are called spirits." Here the distinction is drawn between the real ideas of God and the false belief of material substance.

But, it may be asked, is not this a contradiction of human experience? Are not ideas far less tangible than matter, than that which the physical senses tell men about? Christian Science replies, If God be infinite Mind, as He is, everything must be explained in accordance with this spiritual fact. Suppose one thinks about so-called matter a little. Is it not the case that the human mind always associates corruption with matter? Does not the flower of the garden fade? does not the grass of the field wither? do not minerals crumble and fall into dust? do not men themselves vanish as a dream? Wherever material sense seems to be, there also abound the illusions of decay, corruption, and death.

Material belief is the counterfeit of spiritual understanding; and material belief always ultimates in corruption, whereas spiritual reality is eternal or incorruptible. There can never be any compromise between the spiritual ideas of Mind and the false concept of them called matter. The incorruptible is distinct in its permanency; the so-called corruptible has the blur of unreality always surrounding it. On page 279 of Science and Health are these words: "Ideas are tangible and real to immortal consciousness, and they have the advantage of being eternal. Spirit and matter can neither coexist nor cooperate, and one can no more create the other than Truth can create error, or vice versa."

The question naturally arises, How may men put on the incorruptible? The only way it can be done is through spiritual understanding. The human body, all the objects which material sense seeks to make real to men, are purely mental concepts, counterfeiting the real and incorruptible spiritual ideas of Mind. These false concepts or beliefs are destroyed by the knowledge of the ideas which they seem to counterfeit; and the obtaining of this knowledge is the highest duty of mankind. It means that men have to "pray without ceasing." They have to keep before them continually the facts of spiritual being, remembering that these constitute the only real consciousness. In proportion as they do so, they are putting off the old man and coming into the possession of man's true selfhood.

In the absolute sense there is no such thing as corruption. Corruption has no place in perfect Mind; and that is why it is unreal. It is utterly false and precisely analogous to all other fallacies. Suppose one thinks, by way of illustration, of the difference between what the human mind recognizes as an idea and a material concept of it. Take a circle as representing "good, the self-existent and eternal individuality or Mind" (Science and Health, p. 282). It is incorruptible even to human sense. But a material circle (so called) will decay as will all other material things. All counterfeits perish, but the ideas of Mind are incorruptible.

Man is the spiritual idea of God. Spiritual man is therefore eternal, incorruptible. The material concept of man which holds him as resident in matter and under the domination of matter will be destroyed; and as this false concept goes, the incorruptible nature of man will be revealed. Every time a human being experiences the healing power of Truth, he is realizing something of the incorruptible nature of spiritual man. And when the last material belief shall have been destroyed, the perfection of the spiritual universe, including individual spiritual man, will have been realized.

Our Beloved Leader

GRAY MONTGOMERY

CHRISTIAN SCIENTISTS love, honor, and revere their Leader, Mrs. Eddy, because in the face of the most bitter opposition, ridicule, and persecution, confronted with the most complex and confusing problems, she never faltered in her righteous stand for Truth. Steadfastly relying upon infinite Mind for guidance, strength, understanding, and spiritual vision, she cherished the tiny spark of infinite Truth which at first dawned upon her consciousness, until finally, as the result of her faithfulness and consecrated labors, it became a great light, dispelling with its radiant beams the darkness of materiality, sin, disease, and death.

In her elucidation of Christian Science Mrs. Eddy recognized that she was only the human channel through which Truth could be unfolded and made manifest to humanity. She wrote: "It was not myself, but the divine power of Truth and Love, infinitely above me, which dictated 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures.' I have been learning the higher meaning of this book since writing it" (Miscellany, p. 114). Scholars, poets, statesmen, philosophers, philanthropists, the great men and women of this age as well as multitudes from the ordinary walks of life, have found in Mrs. Eddy's writings such a clear and satisfying explanation of the Christ-method of healing that they have been enabled to make use of this scientific mental process in the solving of their manifold daily problems. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" the subject of God's healing power is so clearly and fully explained that simply through the study of this text-book the healing light of Truth has entered many a consciousness, clearing away the clouds of doubt, fear, and all erroneous thinking, thereby bringing surcease of sorrow, sickness, sin, and suffering.

Edgar Allan Poe has written: "The demands of Truth are severe. She has no sympathy with myrtles. It is but making her a flaunting paradox, to wreathe her in gems and flowers." This, however, can never be said of the truth as portrayed by Mrs. Eddy, for she has clothed her thought in strong, forceful, and practical language. Although filled with poetic imagery, her writings portray the truth in a way possible only to one inspired to tell the things of God's kingdom. Her skill was greater than was ever dreamed of by the poet, for through her writings, all aglow with divine tenderness, she has impressed upon the thought of this age the healing and saving power of God, infinite Mind. Mrs. Eddy taught her followers that in order to understand Truth they must demonstrate it in daily thoughts and deeds. "Truth is revealed," she writes on page 174 of Science and Health. "It needs only to be practised." Ever a student of her own writings, she directed her followers to fix their gaze not upon her human personality but upon the teachings of Truth.

The influence of Mrs. Eddy's writings has already extended into nearly every avenue of human activity. This beneficent influence has given to mankind a demonstrable religion of healing works. It has corrected many doctrinal mistakes. It has awakened an active interest in the daily study of the Bible. It has reconciled many seeming contradictions in the Scriptures. Many former agnostics and atheists, as well as many professing Christians and Jews, have become so far enlightened through the study of Christian Science that they now know God as infinite Mind, as divine Love, the perfect Principle of all real being, and the real man as God's image and likeness,—as His reflection or divine idea. It is quenching sin and consequent suffering by showing that true joy, real satisfaction, is never material, but is wholly spiritual and indestructible, because it comes from God. The victims of animality and sin are learning through the study of Mrs. Eddy's writings how they can gain freedom from their false appetites, from their false desires, and from their fears by replacing their erroneous thoughts with right thoughts and right desires through the true understanding, acceptance, and realization of God as the one and only Mind, all powerful, infinite, and ever present.

Exemplifying the goodness and grandeur of a life consecrated to divine Love, Mrs. Eddy has been enabled through her writings and teachings to turn many to right thinking and right living, "to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; . . . to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness," as we read in the prophecy of Isaiah.

Is it any wonder that Christian Scientists today, as during the time of her pilgrimage with us on earth, speak of Mrs. Eddy as "our beloved Leader"! Her leadership is beyond all question. Though her human personality is no longer with us, her writings and teachings still lead us in the paths of Truth. Through these Mrs. Eddy will continue to lead humanity out of sin, discord, and disease until ultimately all mankind will be saved, will be led into the kingdom of heaven, the consciousness of divine harmony, where evil is unknown.

Liberation

LIDA S. STONE

A VERY helpful article in one of our periodicals struck a chord of feeling, bringing sweet (one definition of sweet is melodious) renewal of my own experience when our Leader gave us the mid-week testimony meetings. As far back as I can remember I was conscious of an extreme condition of timidity, a painful reluctance to advance without looking to another to supply the initiative. Brought up in a religious belief which observed its collected prayers, rites, and ceremonials with awe and regarded a departure from them as an impossibility, I myself became less and less able to act with the freedom which I admired in others.

In the years of faithful adherence to this chilling belief I was always ill, with no hope beyond the fears and sufferings of an invalid, until Christian Science shone upon my weary self and chased the shadows away. My emergence from continual haunting fear into confidence, courage, and strength was the natural result of my changed concept of God, and it led me naturally out of the old church with no feeling but that of peace and joy,—joy that at last I had a God who would answer all the puzzling questions which my "spiritual advisers," earnest and sincere as they were, always dismissed by saying, "That is a mystery you cannot know now."

In the invalid period to which I refer there was an exaggerated fear of people, so it need hardly be said that I could not have addressed a number of people, much less could I have given an experience such as is heard in our Wednesday evening meetings. Besides this, my ritualistic education admitted of no such "irregular" proceeding. The many blessings which the healing Christ was daily bringing to me filled my thought with songs of gratitude and a desire to follow obediently in the way our beloved Leader indicated. One of the early opportunities to prove my sincerity came when our Leader gave to the field the testimony meetings with this inspired and inspiring message: "Make broader your bounds for blessing the people. . . . Learn to forget what you should not remember, viz., self, and live for the good you do. Be meek; let your mottoes for these meetings be, Who shall be least, and servant; and 'Little children, love one another'" (Journal, Vol. XIII, p. 41).

Blessed words! Gratitude first; then personal sense, as I realized that obedience to this call was for me as much as if I were the only Scientist on earth. If one has an enemy to face it is never wise to delay the action which will defeat it, for the suggestions of personal belief will weaken endeavor until excuses for not acting in obedience to Principle seem real excuses. On page 341 of "Miscellaneous Writings" we have invaluable instruction on the "evil of inaction and delay." In my experience the gentle voice of Love asked, "Do you really want to help broaden the bounds for blessing the people?" and roused my sense to a willing response. Then came the question, "Are you afraid to follow the leading of her whom God has chosen to give the message of His love? Does she ever lead toward self or into harm?" and there was only one answer to both these questions. Again, as if to test thoroughly my sincerity, came the further query, "Do you wish to be deprived of the blessing which obedience always brings?" this followed by "Will you do your part?" which brought the questioning to a complete finish.

When the practical application came, in rising to testify to the healing truth, I was ready, though to be sure for a time the fiercely beating heart and dry throat would have tied my tongue and held me to my seat if I had accepted their testimony. The value of every such experience lies in the conquering of that so-called self whose complexities of fears and sufferings and dangers have seemed so real that they appear inevitable and all enfolding. When we learn in the actual conquering of these falsities that they do not hold us, we know that it is the law of Mind which has annulled the belief of a selfhood apart from good.

It is possible that one might freely acknowledge Mrs. Eddy to be the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and yet fail to appreciate that this includes the discovery of all the ways and means whereby Science is unfolded and established in human consciousness, until, as the apostle Paul says, "we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." A full estimate, so far as we are able to make it, of what it cost our beloved Leader to point out the way, will make us indeed eager to search for and obey individually, no matter how much of self must be abnegated, the commands which will make us Christian Scientists in deed and in truth. The answer of our Leader to a student who emphasized the above to her was, "It takes hold of foundations and touches the need of this hour." We ought to set a close watch lest the enemy of spiritual advancement dull the thought and cause us to excuse ourselves from obeying with joyful willingness that which in blessing one blesses all.

INEZ KOCH

How often does the student of Christian Science join the psalmist in saying, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits"! Is not this truly an admonition to count the many blessings bestowed on us by the Father's loving hand?

How little we knew about these blessings before we learned through Christian Science that "gratitude and love should abide in every heart each day of all the years" (Church Manual, Art. XVII, Sect. 2). When clouds of discouragement or a sense of lack would hide from us the ever-presence of divine Love, is it not a sure remedy to count our blessings? How sad and hopeless seemed the road when we knew not how to stretch out the helping hand and provide the healing touch which has been revealed to us through the teachings of Christian Science! Is not every dark place made light, and are not hungry hearts fed and our brothers' needs met through the application of the divine Principle? What cause for gratitude!

The writer remembers a little incident which seemed to bring a ray of sunshine and happiness. One hot day in the train she and two other Christian Scientists found themselves in a compartment with a little boy who apparently was traveling by himself. A second glance showed that his eyes were swollen and inflamed, and he looked unhappy; so the truth was promptly realized that all is infinite Mind, divine Love, and that neither suffering nor unhappiness can exist in the presence of divine Love. Then, forgetting all about the little boy, she picked up her paper and began to read, when suddenly she became aware of something being pushed along the seat toward her. On looking up she found a little hand stretching out a box of sweets, and when she took a piece, with a surprised and delighted "Thank you!" a happy smile spread over the little fellow's face. Next he offered his precious sweets to her two companions.

It seemed no small thing for the little fellow to give up so much of his portion of candy, but it was just as though he wanted to show gratitude for something, even if he did not himself know what it was. The writer noticed, however, that the inflammation of the eyes had disappeared, and a little thanksgiving was returned for this proof of the efficacy of spiritual understanding. Jesus bade us let our light shine; and a clear realization of God's ever-presence, even though it does not take form as a treatment, will dispel the darkness of fear and doubt.

As the three friends left the compartment, the little boy helped them to carry out their heavy luggage, and a happy and friendly "Good-by" closed an incident which to the writer recalled Mrs. Eddy's words, sent many years ago to the editor of a paper called the Item (Poems, p. 38) expressing the hope—

The Loving Message

MATTIE TROY CLENDINEN

THANKSGIVING day, 1916, marked the twenty-seventh anniversary of the home-coming of a mother who had left her loved ones and gone to a city about two hundred miles distant, in search of some means to alleviate her suffering of both mind and body. She had come back bringing into the writer's girlhood home Christian Science, the wonderful message of Truth. Our mother felt she had indeed found the "pearl of great price," and although it was a stranger within our gates, we took it in, little knowing the blessings it was holding in store for us through all the years to come.

Every member of the household accepted this message without a doubt as to its truth. We beheld with wonder and joy the beautiful demonstrations over discord, both mental and physical, wrought through the application of the slight understanding of divine Truth possessed by our mother. Surely at that time it could be said by her, God's grace is all sufficient. Well does the writer recall the words of our Leader so often voiced by this dear one, "Let not the flesh, but the Spirit, be represented in me" (Science and Health, p. 33), and it has taken all these years for her to be able to comprehend even in a measure the depth of meaning contained therein, words so necessary for us to understand and live before we can do the work required in Christian Science. Only through much prayer, watchfulness, self-denial, and humility has she been able to help others as she has been helped through this truth.

From the time this message came into the home to the present, the writer has found Christian Science to be her all-sufficient help, carrying her over the rough places in safety. We know it is just and right for man to manifest freedom from all physical discord, for did not Jesus come healing the sick? But he also came to cast out sin, and what he did we are to do. Our Leader tells us that the healing of disease is only the bugle call to come up higher. (See Rudimental Divine Science, p. 2.) The mottoes hanging before our mental gaze on the right hand and on the left should bear these inspiring words of Paul, so often pondered by us: "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ" (to see nothing but the perfect man expressed in those with whom we come in contact); "Henceforth know we no man after the flesh" (fleshly mind); "Come out from among them [all material beliefs], and be ye separate."

We cannot pray too often, "Let not the flesh, but the Spirit, be represented in me." Oh, that we may really and truly become as little children, just take our Father at His word, and if we are prone to look on the dark side of things (and the dark side is never real) or to see evil instead of good in those around us, let us awake and be quick to look within; for if all is right within, all will be right without.

In connection with this search within let us read the article entitled "Love Your Enemies," beginning on page 8 of "Miscellaneous Writings," and all resentful thoughts will sink away into their native nothingness. In some cases these may be accompanied on their departure by a slight tinge of hate, envy, jealousy, or self-will, hidden away in the smooth folds of self-righteousness, and we become conscious of the presence of more love than we had known, for the reflection of Love is ours by right. We may have let go the loving nature which belongs to every child of God, and accepted as ours that unloving disposition which is the carnal mind's image and of which Jesus said, "Ye are of your father the devil." If we have wandered, let us arise as did the prodigal, determined to feed no more on husks (discordant mortal thoughts), but to return to our Father's house, and claim our rightful heritage of love and truth.

Witnessing to the Truth

J. THOMAS MUMFORD

"WHAT sayest thou of thyself?" was the question propounded to John, the forerunner of Jesus the Christ, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to discover who the Baptist was. He was on the witness stand, so gave his great testimony concerning that prophet whose shoe's latchet he counted himself "not worthy to unloose." Christ Jesus has had his witnesses in the past, and especially during the last fifty years thousands of his true followers in Christian Science have verified his work as they did in the first three centuries of the Christian era.

Because of my gratitude for the benefits received through Christian Science, and for the good it may do others who are seeking for that "true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world," I too desire to add my experience. Although a minister in the Congregational denomination for over twenty years, during that time I was constantly disturbed by the thought that I was not receiving the blessings which justified the life, teachings, and purpose of "the Son of God" in my behalf. Surely there must be something somewhere which I had not discovered, and for this reason was spiritually poor when I should have been gloriously "rich toward God."

Having resigned my pastorate on account of a bronchial ailment, and entered business, I began to investigate various new theories with the hope of finding relief,—not from physical ills, even though the ministry was given up because of them, but rather to find something to fill the aching void which seemed to be growing larger in my consciousness from day to day. In these inquiries, which were carried on with an honest desire to know the truth, I thought I was making some progress, but now I know that they were only stepping-stones to higher things, as I discovered later in Christian Science. I wanted to be led by divine light, not by human opinions; not by the advice of friends and loved ones, nor yet by the church which I loved because of long and intimate fellowship. The truth was what I desired above every other thing in the world. I hungered and thirsted for it, and said with Job, "Oh that I might have my request; and that God would grant me the thing that I long for!"

This prayer, uttered in the right spirit, is as sure to be answered as that God is,—nothing can prevent God's child from coming into the full light of a conscious unity and fellowship with God. Thus every day I was being led toward His "holy hill" of elevated spiritual vision, where I could see old things passing away and all things becoming new. Gradually the old heaven and the old earth passed away, and in my consciousness the new heaven and the new earth, "wherein dwelleth righteousness," appeared. "And there was no more sea,"—no element of discord, nothing to cause fear, pain, sickness, or death. With the removal by divine Love of all cause for sorrow, the tears were wiped from my eyes. The psalmist says, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

This has been my experience in Christian Science. It has answered every question that perplexed me for years. It has dispelled the darkness by showing that "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." It has shown me how I may love God, by revealing who and what He is, so that others may see Him as the One "altogether lovely." Truth has opened the way so I can love my neighbor as myself, by showing me my neighbor as the perfect man made in the image and likeness of God. It has shown me that divine Science is a remedy for every discordant condition, and that to apply one's understanding of its Principle is to bring to mankind the consciousness of "on earth peace, good will toward men."

Many of my friends who were opposed to Christian Science and expressed themselves as antagonistic to the course I had taken, have since sought and found relief in the same glorious truth. They too have found in Science "ways of pleasantness" as they journey from sense to Soul. I became a member of The Mother Church in 1911, and feel great comfort in this conscious spiritual association, for it is a spiritual church, founded on Truth and Love, and rests upon divine Principle. (See Science and Health, p. 583.)

It seems to me that the greatest blessing which can come to any one is the consciousness of the fact that God's presence is an absolute reality in the daily experience of man, and that we do not have to die to be in heaven. Christ Jesus said he was in heaven, even while to human sense he was in the flesh, because heaven means harmony and at-one-ment with God, good. This is what it means to have our citizenship in heaven, "to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord," while doing the Master's business on earth. We read in Revelation that "the tabernacle of God is with men," and that He does in very deed dwell among them. Christian Science has brought this into the present and makes it the verity of this day and hour.

I have witnessed many demonstrations of the power of Mind over sin, disease, and discord, but the greatest is the transformation in my own consciousness,—the spiritual uplift, the longing it has satisfied, and the blessed assurance it gives that friends, loved ones, all, shall finally be brought into this fellowship, and "there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." As time is of no consequence to God in the working out of these great verities, our advancement is sure and certain. On page 485 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "Emerge gently from matter into Spirit. Think not to thwart the spiritual ultimate of all things, but come naturally into Spirit through better health and morals and as the result of spiritual growth."

I am most grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this great discovery. The world is surely rising up and calling her blessed, and will continue to do so for all time. I am thankful, too, to all who have assisted me in becoming better acquainted with the great truths of Christian Science, and desire to do what I can to help others find the way that means so much to me. In Isaiah we read a description of the Christian Science way: "And an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there."

Promises Fulfilled

CALISTA A. HOLBECK

In the book of Psalms we read: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases." The writer was very much impressed as well as sustained by these words while laboring under a sense of depression and sickness which did not yield readily to treatment.

As I was living in a hotel apartment in the city and unable to get out into the busy street, there was a longing within for the freedom of the outdoors, and a desire to live where I might enjoy the green grass, the trees and flowers,—the things I loved so much. In due time divine Love opened the way and led me to a place beautiful as to environment and association. With harmonious surroundings and the loving help of a Christian Science practitioner, together with my own study and application of the truth of being as taught in Science and Health, I soon gained strength and courage to add to my daily duties the joy of caring for the lawn and flower garden.

One morning when the sun seemed to shine more brightly than usual, I was watering the garden and drinking in the sparkling beauty of it all, when a rainbow with all its gorgeous coloring presented itself before me. Immediately my thought turned to the signification or symbolism of the rainbow as spoken of in the Scriptures—the bow which typifies an unending covenant between God and man. While pondering over this promise, there came to my receptive thought another promise given to God's children, the passage from the psalm already referred to. I then and there realized that if one of God's promises is true all of them are, and that in due time His promise would be fulfilled to my struggling, waiting sense.

Every morning I had the same beautiful lesson before me,—my bow of promise, telling me of "the everlasting covenant," and the roses, geraniums, and poppies nodding their heads in thankfulness for their refreshing shower. On page 240 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "The floral apostles are hieroglyphs of Deity." Thus the flowers in my garden, reflecting back their gratitude in perfume and unfolding beauty which were a joy to the whole household, taught me the lesson of daily systematic work and patience, for soon I too came forth refreshed and healed, because my mental garden had been weeded and watered in accordance with the law of Truth and Love.

Selected Articles

[Samuel Greenwood in The Colonist, Victoria, B. C., Canada]

Christian Science presents points of disagreement with what has been called orthodox religion, and also with what might be called orthodox philosophy. Mrs. Eddy made no attempt to reconcile her interpretation of Scriptural teaching with prevailing theories and doctrines; and although Christian Science was not stated as something new, in the sense that the truth about God has always existed, it was so hopelessly different from the religious thought of the age that it was necessary to establish a new organization through which to present its teachings and their demonstration.

Christian Science is not "disruptive" either in purpose or in practice, except as it is successful in overcoming evil. The Christian Science church was organized, not for the sake of adding a new denomination to Christendom, but—since the older churches would not receive it—for the sake of religious freedom. Christian Science is not inimical to anything that is good and useful, or that is helping human beings to live better lives, by whatever name it may be called.

Accepting the Scriptural declaration that God is the only creator, Christian Science teaches most unequivocally that evil has no place in His creation and is not a quality pertaining to His children, but is only humanly supposed, accepted, and obeyed. Satan is referred to in Scripture as a deceiver, which, given its impersonal definition, would mean that evil is a deception. Jesus saw it, not as the truth, but as a lie, and he destroyed it as that which has no right to exist. Even the laws of our land teach that men should not make evil so real as to obey it, that is, give it power over them. The argument of a correspondent, that because Christian Science teaches the unreality of evil, mortals have no need of a savior, is no more logical than to assume that because there is no truth or reality in mistakes about mathematics, mortals have no need of schools in which to be taught the correct use of numbers.

The fact that the Christian Science movement exists for the sole purpose of helping humanity to overcome evil, shows that it does not deny the presence of sin as a state of error in human consciousness. But error, as every one knows, cannot be corrected by believing it to be real, but by an understanding of the truth, and this is all that differentiates Christian Science from other methods of dealing with sin. The question is one that calls not for argument but for an efficient remedy.

The charge that Christian Science is pantheism because it teaches the infinity of Spirit, disproves itself, for it is self-evident that the infinite cannot be contained. The New Standard dictionary gives "Mind" as one of the definitions of God, and there can be nothing greater than infinite Mind. The argument that God exists in nature would make God less than nature, less than His own expression. In Christian Science matter is regarded as but a temporary phenomenon of human thought, as that which appears because of human ignorance of the real nature of God as Spirit or Mind, but which will disappear as this ignorance is overcome.

While the Bible teaches that "God created the heaven and the earth," it also teaches that what is seen as a material heaven and earth is to pass away, and that there is to be "a new heaven and a new earth." We are also taught that "whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever;" hence the logical conclusion that the real universe is not that which is to pass away, but that which is to appear as "new," that is, new to human apprehension. If the present sense of heaven and earth as consisting of matter were the reality of God's creation, it would not need to pass away, nor would the new sense of heaven and earth as spiritual need to appear. The passing away of matter as a false sense would not rob creation of its beauty and joy, but would rather unfold the beauty and joy of being everlasting, and not, as now humanly conceived, subject to decay.

Digitized by Google

[Frederick R. Rhodes in Bradford (England) Telegraph]

Under the caption "The Cross of Christ" a critic states that "Christian Scientists no longer believe that there is such a thing as death, and hence they could not believe that Jesus died for sins."

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "Death will occur on the next plane of existence as on this, until the spiritual understanding of Life is reached" (p. 77). Numerous references might be quoted to show that so long as life is looked at from a material standpoint we shall be called upon to face the question of death; but if we are going to prove the words of St. Paul, "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death," we must begin to recognize God, Spirit, as the only creator, and man as a spiritual and not a material being.

It is sufficient answer to the latter half of the criticism to quote Mrs. Eddy's own words: "Our Master fully and finally demonstrated divine Science in his victory over death and the grave. Jesus' deed was for the enlightenment of men and for the salvation of the whole world from sin, sickness, and death" (Science and Health, p. 45). The best answer to all criticism is the result obtained from the application of the subject under consideration, and proof may be seen in most cities and towns that through the correct teaching of Christian Science many have found God such a present help that they are able to echo the words, "Whereas I was blind, now I see."

Through Christian Science the sick are being healed, the drunkard is reformed, the atheist and infidel are being led to God. Hundreds of thousands of people gladly testify that Christian Science has increased their faith in the true and living God; it has aroused an interest in and love for the Bible, and awakened a greater desire to follow in the footsteps of Christ Jesus. A teaching that is accomplishing so much good in the world cannot be a masterpiece of Satan. Such accusations are akin to those brought against the Master when he was accused of doing his works through Beelzebub. Christ Jesus said, "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. . . . Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

[Rollin E. Smith in The Argus, Janesville, Wis.]

Our critic asked, "Why, if Christian Science was a revelation, did Mrs. Eddy revise the text-book, 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures'?" Probably the meaning of the word revelation confused our critic, for the word does not necessarily mean a sudden inspiration. Taking the dictionary definition, it means an act or process; and as process takes place a step at a time, so the writing of Science and Health was perfected a step at a time.

"The book 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures' is the Christian Science Bible," declared our critic. This is not true, for Christian Scientists use for their study and in church service the same Bible used by all orthodox denominations. Science and Health is the text-book of Christian Science, and does not take the place of the Bible in any respect. The gentleman is quoted as having said that Christian Science is not growing. If the Christian Science movement is not growing, why is there so much and such persistent opposition to it by the ministers?

"If it were not for the healing part of Christian Science, the cult would die in six months," declared our critic. One might ask, in reply to this, how much progress the teachings of Jesus would have made if he had not accompanied them with healing. "Christian Science is based on selfishness, and has no sympathy with suffering and sorrow," our critic is quoted as having said. As Christian Science heals sickness, selfishness, suffering, and sorrow, as thousands of authentic testimonies declare, it is difficult to see how any one can have such a view of this religion. The statement requires no further denial than to say that by its fruits Christian Science is known.

[Anna Rasch in Jarlsberg and Larvik (Norway) Amtstidende]

In an article entitled "How Nervousness Can Be Healed" it is maintained that "suggestion, belief, is the supporting and operative power" in Christian Science healing.

Mental suggestion is synonymous with hypnotism, and is the control of one human mind over another. Suggestion is spoken of in the Bible as sorcery, the casting out of devils by Beelzebub. When Jesus was charged with this method he said he cast out devils "with the finger of God," and in Matthew's gospel he is recorded as saying, "If I cast out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you." Christian Science is wholly founded upon the teaching and life of Jesus, and can heal only through the spiritual understanding of the unchangeable law of God. Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Suggestion does not lead to freedom, but to bondage. Christian Science teaches that it is the human mortal mind which is the cause of pain and fear, and these evils can be healed only through the understanding of the omnipotence and omnipresence of divine Mind. In the first epistle of John we read, "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear."

A Christian Science practitioner wishes to talk to his patient in order to explain to him what Christian Science is and to teach him how to help himself. Christian Science treatment is a help to self-help. As far as the treatment is concerned, it makes no difference whether the patient is present or absent, and the absent patient does not know when the treatment takes place. Jesus has himself indicated this method in the healing of the centurion's servant and the daughter of the woman of Canaan.

[B. W. Oppenheim in Wardner and Kellogg (Idaho) News]

My attention has been called to an article entitled, "Osborn on Isms and Science," in which Christian Science is erroneously classed with Spiritualism, Theosophy, and Buddhism, and all are defined as "doctrines of the devil." Whatever may be the effect of the teaching of Spiritualism, Theosophy, and Buddhism, permit me to say that the evangelist is entirely mistaken in classing Christian Science with them, or any of them, in any particular. The gentleman's dictum that Christian Science is of the devil does not make it so. I have no doubt that his mental concept of what Christian Science is, is a fearsome picture; but any one who investigates without prejudice the results upon men of the study and practice of Christian Science, will be convinced that the works wrought by it are good only. Christian Science is based upon the life and teaching of Jesus the Christ, and no doctrine so founded can be classed as devilish.

While the gentleman may not agree with the theory and practice of Christian Science, he can find nothing in its teaching or in the lives of its adherents which will warrant his statement. Christian Science comes to suffering humanity with a message of peace and healing. It brings to man a realization of his godlikeness, permitting him to claim the full heritage of the children of God, freedom from suffering and discord of every kind. It inculcates morality, purity, reverence, brotherly love, health. These doctrines are not of the devil. They bring man to a sense of his at-one-ment with God exemplified by Jesus, who so proved his divine relationship to God that he overcame every form of sin and disease and even death. His atonement does not relieve us from the necessity of proving individually our at-one-ment with God, but showed us the way to do it.

Christian Science does not deny the atonement of Jesus, but Mrs. Eddy with keen spiritual insight has interpreted its true meaning and shown its practical application to the lives of each of us.

[Carl E. Herring in Bloomfield (Neb.) Monitor]

Christian Science is an orderly arrangement for efficient service of truths that have always existed. The moment you claim reality for evil you are in a worse dilemma than in claiming reality or eternality for matter.

Do you doubt that God is the only cause and creator? Do you regard the First Commandment? Then if evil is real, God must be its creator. If not, you must have other gods creating evil. Why is it necessary to ascribe reality to evil any more than to darkness, which is only the absence of light? Is there any such thing as two and two being five? Yet you have seen this combination of figures many times on the blackboard, and you can if you wish fill the board with it; but no matter how many times you reproduce the error, it will not change the fact that two and two are four.

[William D. Kilpatrick in Grand Rapids (Mich.) Herald]

The facetious reference to the attitude of Christian Science on the subject of sin made by an itinerant evangelist temporarily holding meetings in your city, and reported in the Herald, might have been of some moment and account as a part of his sermon had there been any truth in it. The fact that Christian Science has done more and is doing more toward the destruction of sin and its terrible effects than any other contemporaneous religious denomination, hardly bears out the gentleman's aspersion that Christian Science ignores or condones sin.

The Christian Scientist does not ignore sin, but he recognizes it as not a creation of God, and hence as unreal in the sight of God. Jesus cast out sin through the recognition and understanding of sin as unreal and not of God, and that is the only way whereby mankind will ever be able to free themselves from sin and its effects. The lives, the characters, and the earnest Christian endeavor of Christian Scientists clearly tell the story of Christian Science in its relation to sin.

[John L. Rendall in Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Republican and Times]

Christian Science, which is among those religious beliefs to which our critic objects, is neither a fad nor an ism, but on the contrary is a well established religious teaching, adhered to by hundreds of thousands of respected citizens of this and other lands. In his attack upon Christian Science our critic makes statements concerning its teaching which are either intentionally or carelessly misleading; statements which are untenable, without excuse or justification.

It might be fair to assume that a "saved" Christian Scientist is one who has some degree of realization of his indestructible relationship with God. He is conscious of certain positive changes in his thought processes which have resulted in greatly improved conditions, physical, mental, moral, and spiritual. To be saved, in any right sense of the term, means much more than mere emotionalism, more than the ecstatic mesmerism of quasi-religious fervor; it means and includes that condition of spiritual understanding which enables its possessor to demonstrate the verity of Jesus' teachings, healing the sick and reforming the sinner.

Our critic states: "Christian Science stands opposed to the Bible." On the contrary, this religious teaching is based absolutely upon the Bible; it has not one single excuse for its existence other than conformity therewith. That it does honor and respect the Scriptures is attested by the fact that the Bible and the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, are the only preachers of the denomination. Christian Science does not deny one single fundamental teaching of Christianity as Jesus taught it. It does, however, deny the validity and accuracy of the man-made formulations which pass current as "articles of Christian faith;" but that is quite different. It is this sort of denial, combined with the affirmation of that which is valid and true in the Christian religion, which gives Christian Science its essential value as a practical religious teaching.

Our critic blandly states, "No true Christian Scientist can ever get to heaven." If one is really a true Christian Scientist, he does not need to get to heaven. He has already, in some measure, brought heaven to his own consciousness, in conformity with Jesus' statement: "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Some day these so-called evangelists will learn the utter futility of attacks upon Christian Science and the good Christian people who constitute its followers. They will then see that their efforts have been misdirected; that instead of fighting evil they have been antagonizing the greatest factor in the destruction of evil known to humanity today. That many Christian ministers have already seen and acknowledged this, is one of the hopeful "signs of the times."

The Invitation

MARGARET MORRISON

Art thou weary of the struggle?
Come and rest a while
In the place of Truth's protection,
Come and feel the benediction
Of God's gracious smile.

Thou wilt find the yoke still easy,
And the burden light;
Come and heed the gentle pleading,
Learn the lesson that is leading
Out of error's night.

Hear the call, O heavy laden,
All that are oppressed;
Leave thy sickness, sin, and sorrow;
Come, wait not until tomorrow:
Truth will give thee rest.

Rest so quiet, deep, inspiring,
It will waken you
To a present, sure salvation,
To life-giving transformation—
Come, and find Love true!

"The brook in the way"

In speaking about the messenger of God and his experiences, the psalmist says, "He shall drink of the brook in the way." The human mind seeks a literal and personal interpretation of prophecy. Consequently an endeavor has been made to show that Jesus, on the night of the arrest, when he was being hustled by the crowd of disorderly officials, halted at a brook which had to be crossed, and that he drank of its flowing stream. But of course the psalmist had something more universal in mind than such an incident as this.

The writers of Scripture, having themselves received a vision of divine truth and order, were constantly endeavoring to express this through the medium of human language and imagery. Nothing is so well known in the Orient as the traveled paths or ways, beaten hard by the passage of many feet, so that one would expect the imagery of the way to be continually used. There will be a right way which will take a man from starting point to destination, but if he should wander to right or left, and so turn in a wrong direction, he may get into many complications. A word that is very frequently used in regard to wrong doing is exactly applicable to this. When we say that a man is "in error," what we really mean is that he has erred or wandered out of the right way. Sometimes those who are satisfied with themselves express great severity against those who, as they say, are in error; and yet what does the ordinary kind of citizen do to one who has missed his way? Is it not the usual and natural thing to feel satisfaction in guiding aright the man who has wandered? One does not usually desire further to mislead him or to condemn him for being in the wrong way, so long as it is evident that he is seeking the right way.

We seem to be dependent upon one another a good deal for guidance, and yet this is of course only a temporary condition. When we find what we are seeking, it will be metaphysical guidance which will enable us, without human aid, to follow the right course. This is very clearly brought out in Isaiah: "Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left." With such divine guidance error, or wandering out of the right way, becomes as unnatural to the metaphysician as to a good mathematician it is unnatural to wander from the line of correct reasoning and make mistakes in figuring.

Any one who is walking in the right way will of course have to meet seductions and temptations, because it must be admitted that the majority of mankind express a preference for "ways that are vain." To a great many it seems a vain thing to serve the Lord. The feasting idolaters have little sympathy for the abstemious Hebrew children, but in the test of the fiery furnace they who are in the right way are preserved. In that experience, and in the experience of Daniel, who was likewise severely tested, there could hardly be a clearer proof of the promise, "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." The good worker must not expect this peace too soon, because it comes in proportion as he recognizes the fact that he has no enemies, being so entirely filled and satisfied with the friendship of God that "neither foes nor loving friends" can in any way hurt him.

The great satisfaction which comes to a life obedient to divine Mind, is the growing sense of order. It has become one of our proverbs to say that "order is heaven's first law." Disorder seems to go with the fractious mind, with a sense of annoyance because of the deeds, misdeeds, or negligences of others. We have all met officials whose mouths had achieved a permanent twist because of their continual faultfinding with all those in the line of office above and below them. Conscious of disorder within and without, they seem to have no means or vision whereby even to make their own lives orderly, or to gain even a hint of the government of Principle. This good thing we have often observed, that when Christian Science comes to a man in the right way, the first thing he does is to begin setting his own affairs in order. By and by he gets more and more comfort in walking the upward way, and there is sure to come a time when he will understand the meaning of the statement, "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord: and he delighteth in his way." It is this joy of assurance expressed by those who are in the right way, and who are content with God's ordering of their affairs, which people continually observe and which causes them both to wonder at and to admire what they are pleased to call the optimism of Christian Scientists. But optimism is a faint word: it is used generally as if it expressed a silly hope for better things which those who were in the true knowledge of conditions—as they suppose—recognized to be futile and pitiable. There is very much more than optimism in Christian Science, however, because it does not deal with faint hope and futile vision but brings out in the lives of individuals the heavenly order which perfect intelligence designs.

In her "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy has an interesting article entitled "The Way." She shows metaphysically the various stages of progress. The first stage is self-knowledge; this is followed by humility, and the finale is love. It is in the secluded valley of humility that one finds "the brook in the way." Just as divine Love provides us with daily bread, and as we are guarded by daily protection and have our daily prayer for all the world, so in our own lives, if we are walking in the way we have daily refreshment, because this brook flows by the way. Our Master knew it when he said, "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." The quality of its refreshment is expressed in the words of the psalmist, "I delight to do thy will, O my God."

William P. McKenzie.

Loyalty to God

Loyalty to mortal belief breaks the divine plan. The more conscientious humanity remains to its own limited enactments, to the laws of the world, the more certainly will it fail to reach spiritual life. There is no salvation in conformity to the commonly accepted conventions of society. There may be mortal ease for a time in such conforming, but stagnation and inevitable death closes the vista of this view. Every one must meet the test of loyalty to God as opposed to submission to mortal mind. Which shall it be? "Ye cannot serve God and mammon," said Jesus, but he went much farther in his demand than the world can possibly go, for he substituted for the prescribed human relationship a divine sense of relationship between God and man and man and man.

"While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren stood without, desiring to speak with him. Then one said unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee. But he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother."

Loyalty to God therefore involves what may seem to be disloyalty to mere human arrangements, but it proves to be the most salutary as well as the most lasting of arrangements. "The world first" is the motto of the conventional religionist, and this latter point of view if pursued to its logical conclusion would banish spiritual inspiration and make prayer superfluous. A practical Christian must necessarily go counter to the world's beliefs about everything. He may wish to temporize at times, to mitigate the shock of his obedience to God rather than to mortal mind, but he cannot continue to do this and grow heavenward. Disobedience to spiritual inspiration brings either stagnation or open rebellion. In no case can the world save those who trust it for help.

Mrs. Eddy put the case clearly when on page 50 of "Retrospection and Introspection" she thus explained loyalty: "By loyalty in students I mean this,—allegiance to God, subordination of the human to the divine, steadfast justice, and strict adherence to divine Truth and Love." The task of adjusting our lives to this supreme standard of loyalty involves far more than appears on the surface. "Allegiance to God" permits of no secondary claim upon man. Learning to do everything as unto the Lord, we learn to walk and talk with God, to receive and obey His message. "Subordination of the human to the divine" requires a persistent rejection of the dictates of the flesh or of fear, of the devil or personified error, and is equivalent to obedience to spiritual intuition, inspiration, and understanding, thus upholding the First Commandment. The humdrum routine of slavish subservience to current opinion leads first to slow decay, and then to loss of spiritual light.

Loyalty to a dominant will is a misconception of true loyalty. Loyalty to family pride may bring about a tainted strain. Loyalty to God breaks the inherited beliefs inflicted on the human race by false education. Frequently boys will be loyal to a culprit, thinking they are befriending him; whereas loyalty to Principle would have freed him.

All the nations of the world need to learn loyalty to the ideal of God's government. This will free them from the petty grievances of localism, and statesmen should be far-sighted spiritual prophets who can keep their thought loyal to Principle, even when it comes to the details of raising taxes, purchasing ships and food, or caring for the immigrants attracted by the power of liberty. Loyalty to God gives man freedom for mental activity, and protection against dishonesty, distrust, discontent, and disdain. To the secret allurements of personal gain, or to the disguised suggestions of disloyalty, the individual clothed in loyalty to God replies with power and perspicacity, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

Rest

THERE is perhaps nothing which mortals so often crave as that which they call rest; and as the burdens of false belief multiply, they sometimes cry out, as did Job, that they might find this rest even in the grave. Not so, however, did our Master teach, for in the very midst of his most strenuous experiences, when he was holding aloft the torch of Truth, and when the carnal mind was doing its utmost to extinguish its brave light,—even then did he say, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

From this utterance we learn that there is nothing wrong about our desiring and seeking rest. On the contrary, it would be wrong if we did not do so; but unless we have a true—that is, a spiritual—concept of rest, it will only disappoint us, and will make it seem that no good thing is attainable. On page 519 of Science and Health our revered Leader says: "God rests in action. . . . The highest and sweetest rest, even from a human standpoint, is in holy work." The mortal concept of rest really implies stagnation, hence it has no relation whatever to life, which must be expressed through perfect activity.

Work in Christian Science always means renewed strength, and we have many hints of this even on the human plane. No one would venture to argue that an indolent person could ever become strong either mentally or physically, because it is undeniable that the constant and rightful exercise of our divinely bestowed faculties is what develops the human mind and body and makes every good attainment possible. As we rise to the highest spiritual understanding of life and its possibilities, the true idea of rest will grow upon us, and we shall find ourselves able to apply the Master's teachings along this line, as well as those of our Leader given in Science and Health and her other writings. We shall find that as we drop the old mistaken concept of man's possibilities, which assumed that strength was so limited that its exercise for a short time was apt to leave one exhausted, we shall be ready to see the truth which is its opposite.

Above, beyond, and beneath the human concept lies the great fact of infinite Mind, the source of infinite strength and infinite possibilities. When therefore we are called upon to do more than we feel to be humanly possible, we shall find it wise to rise to the altitude described by Paul when he said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." The amazing and beautiful thing is that we shall not only find ourselves unwearied by the unusual effort, but we shall have proved this truth voiced by Isaiah: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength." The boundless depths of divine Love and law are ours as God's ideas, and we have but to forsake the mortal sense and find rest therein. Prophets and poets have in varying degree glimpsed the truer meaning of rest, and so we find Mrs. Browning saying:—

> I smiled to think God's greatness flowed around our incompleteness,— > Round our restlessness, His rest.

Professor Drummond tells of two artists who each painted a picture to illustrate his conception of rest. It seems that one pictured "a still, lone lake among the far-off mountains. The second threw on his canvas a thundering waterfall, with a fragile birch tree bending over the foam; at the fork of a branch, almost wet with the cataract's spray, a robin sat on its nest. The first was only Stagnation; the last was Rest." To this Mr. Drummond adds that "in Rest there are always two elements—tranquillity and energy." It is hardly necessary to add that these are inseparable from the Christian Science concept of rest, but we must never fail to relate them to the spiritual fact that man as God's idea reflects all good. The activity and the rest alike belong to him as the idea of infinite Mind, and weariness is no more possible to him than to the all-Father. It is therefore our privilege at all times to respond to the loving invitation, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest."

The War Relief Fund

"I BECAME acquainted with a woman who was bending under her load of troubles. Before the war her husband had a small business (electrical supplies) and the wife had a boarding house. They lived comfortably until in 1914, when the war started; then misery began. She was in debt and even lacked the absolute necessities, her husband being at the frontier (he had been obliged to do service three times in the interval of one year). She received only a small subsidy for herself and her child from the city, just enough not to perish from starvation. The small subsidy which she received from the city passed almost entirely into the hands of the creditors. She was saving on her own bread to pay off these debts, but as the cost of living was advancing week after week she did not accomplish much. I then asked for aid on her behalf from the War Relief committee in Zürich. The sum of three hundred francs was given her to pay off the most urgent debts. This was a fortune falling from heaven for the poor woman. She could never have dreamed of such a solution. This money, given to her by Love, was for her the beginning of a new life. The oppressing fears were lifted, and one can truthfully say that blessings were showered upon the family. The wife and mother is completely transformed. She is very happy to have regained her strength, so that now she is able to do her washing and housework. She is freed of her asthmatic trouble, so that there is no need of an operation, and often I have the pleasure to look into that face, now so full of light, and to hear her say: 'How happy I am! How happy I am! What would we be if you had not told us about Christian Science!' These plain words from the lips of this woman show what is taking place in her. I am happier than I can express that I have been able to help in this transformation. It is indeed a coming out of the darkness into the light."

"We wish to express our deep gratitude for the allowance out of The Mother Church War Relief fund. Again we could see that, as Mrs. Eddy has written on page 494 of Science and Health, 'Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need.' The amount is so helpful to us and it came just in time. We cannot express in words how grateful we are to Mrs. Eddy and for what she has done for mankind. During so many years we have had numerous wonderful healings, but we feel especially grateful to have this beautiful teaching in this time. Sometimes it seems to be hard enough for us to hold to the spiritual reality, but the realization of divine Love as ever present gives us strength to hold fast to the truth and to cling to the never ending supply from the divine source of all good."

"We, members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Chicago, are very grateful for the aid that is being given through the War Relief fund of The Mother Church to those suffering from the devastation following this world struggle, and for the loving service of those who are administering the fund. Enclosed please find a check for $1413.68, a contribution to the War Relief fund from our members at a recent special collection for that purpose."

"I had the opportunity to meet an engineer, a specialist for automobiles and aeroplanes. He was financially as well as morally oppressed. I told him about Christian Science, trying to bring some light into this darkness, but he could not understand me, as he was completely hypnotized by the horror of the situation. All doors seemed closed to him. His wife then took a position as secretary at a salary insufficient to support them in view of the constantly increasing cost of living. There was a great need for Science, and I applied my understanding to the best of my ability. After two or three demonstrations the man began to take interest in what I told him. The wife observed that her employer became more considerate toward her, so this pressure was lifted. She felt the operation of the unseen power of Love and harmony, and with that light the husband gained a little courage. He again started to look for work, and after about a week was engaged on trial. This new place was in another district, so he had to take the train every morning and have his meals out, an expense he was unable to bear. His clothing was in such a condition that he could hardly present himself in his new position. This greatly troubled him, so I presented the situation to the War Relief committee in Zürich, who very kindly gave him the sum of two hundred and fifty francs to meet his most urgent needs.

"What a joy to be able to tell these people about such a happy solution of their problem! Love had always provided for all their needs; they had only to establish their connection with this inexhaustible source of supply. They could not understand it, but felt that the spell of seeming misfortune was broken and that a new way was open for them. The man, an agnostic and unbeliever, who could see only the material side of things, began to think and to make an effort to understand this great change that had come to them. Before he had worked one month in his new position he was definitely engaged. The family then moved near the place where the factory was, and with tears in her eyes the wife told me that for years she had not seen her husband so full of joy, so satisfied, and so free from care and pessimism. They have now left, taking with them into their new life a quantity of Christian Science literature. The relief work is fulfilling its purpose wonderfully. Blessed are those that have responded to this call of Love! Happy those who see their brother's need and supply it. Thanks to all the givers toward this work of brotherhood and love."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

CHICAGO, ILL.—Eleventh Church of Christ, Scientist, opened the new church edifice on the northwest corner of Logan Boulevard and Mozart Street on Sunday, July 1. The building covers an area of 90 feet in width by 120 feet in depth on a lot 95 by 125 feet, and the auditorium has a full seating capacity of fifteen hundred. The land was purchased June 21, 1914, ground was broken April 5, 1916, and the following July 6 the corner stone was laid. The approximate cost of the lot and building, including the organ and all furnishings, will be one hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars.—The Jeffersonian.

SOUTH SANTA ANITA, CAL.—Dedication of the edifice of the Christian Science Society took place June 3. It is on a lot 120 by 356 feet in area and its seating capacity is about four hundred. The total cost of lot and building was about sixty-five hundred dollars.

SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.—Operations have commenced toward clearing away the old foundation and putting in the new one on the lot at the corner of Phoenix and Pearl Streets, purchased a year ago by First Church of Christ, Scientist, of this city. The cost will not exceed sixty-one hundred dollars. Ever since the first Christian Science meeting, held seventeen years ago in a private home, the members of the local church have looked forward to the time when they should have a building of their own. French's Hall, Zeedyk's Hall, and the Scott Club Building have successively accommodated them, and they expect their next move will be into their new church, which will be ready by Oct. 1. The lot is one of the most favorable in the city for a church building, and some of the near-by property holders have offered liberal contributions toward the improvement of the corner. This corner has figured prominently in the early history of our city.

South Haven Tribune-Messenger.

El Reno, Okla.—Wednesday evening [July 11] marked a joyful occasion in the history of First Church of Christ, Scientist, of this city, when the congregation enjoyed their fine new edifice for the first time. The building, together with furnishings, cost about five thousand dollars.

The Lectures

Brighton, England (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Edward Castellain, who said in part:—

When in the year 1866 her purity of thought and love for humanity enabled that noble woman, Mary Baker Eddy, to discover the long hidden meanings of the Master's teachings and to explain for us that Christ-teaching which brought healing and salvation to the world nineteen centuries ago, she named her discovery Christian Science; and very rightly so, for it constitutes the scientific and therefore the absolute or true explanation of Christianity. Since then Christian Science has spread to every quarter of the globe, and many hundreds of thousands of its students have proved for themselves that Christian Science is the truth which makes man free from sin and disease. The very essence of Christian Science is its doctrine of Love.

Erie, Pa. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Ray E. Miner, who said in part:—

On page 224 of the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we read: "In the record of nineteen centuries, there are sects many but not enough Christianity. . . . A higher and more practical Christianity, demonstrating justice and meeting the needs of mortals in sickness and in health, stands at the door of this age, knocking for admission." That Christian Science is practical, and is meeting all of the human and spiritual needs of mankind, is evidenced by the many who have heeded the knocking of this truth at the door of their consciousness, and let in the sunlight of Life and Love which brings health and happiness for all mankind.

The Erie Despatch.

Woburn, Mass. (First Church).—Dr. Francis J. Fluno, lecturer; introduced by Harry A. T. Dow, who said in part:—

No one can deny that Christian Science is gaining adherents in ever increasing numbers. Those who have made a careful study of the teachings of Mary Baker Eddy, as contained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the text-book of Christian Science, and have embraced her teachings, affirm that they have found a demonstrable religion, a system of faith and practice which is efficacious in every-day life, and which is available to every man, woman, and child. The results of the practice of this religion, named Christian Science, are improved health and morals, an optimistic view of the solution of every problem, whether it be individual, national, or international, and a peace of mind which was promised by the Master when he said: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you."—Woburn Times.

Oswego, N. Y. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Fred Yould, who said in part:—

That the Sermon on the Mount preached and its rules constantly demonstrated by Jesus is the foundation of true religion and all moral codes, will be denied by none, and that it is the religion of Love all will surely agree. But looking out upon humanity today, the question may present itself to many, Has Love failed? Christian Scientists at least answer No, by proving daily, in casting out sin, healing the sick, comforting the sorrowing, and overcoming hate, that a proper understanding of God, whom St. John designated as Love, and of man in the image and likeness of God, who of necessity must reflect Love, is again establishing primitive Christianity, and proving that this Christ Science, or Christian Science, will ultimate in the revelation to all human consciousness of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Chicago, Ill. (Thirteenth Church).—Bliss Knapp, lecturer; introduced by Dr. Elgin MaWhinney, who said in part:—

These are testing times for men and women everywhere. At no period in the history of the human race have the teachings of the Christ been so deeply needed as today. Our generation has boasted of its scholarship, its ethics, its philosophy, its philanthropy, its science, its medical discoveries, its religious achievements, and yet there never was a time when lust and avarice, envy and hatred, jealousy and revenge, disease and misery, pain and sorrow, were more prevalent or more deeply felt than in our own day.

The question is being asked by a tempest-tossed humanity, If the mission of the Christ is to bring salvation to the whole world, why has it not saved us from these things? Christian Science answers this question by boldly declaring that the mission, message, and work of Jesus the Christ have been misunderstood. The fundamental teachings of Christian Science rest upon the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount, and thousands of individuals are daily rejoicing in the proof that these teachings, when understood, save to the uttermost.

Testimonies of Healing

I feel the time has come when I must give a written testimony of the great blessings that have come to me through Christian Science. Life's problem was a difficult one for me to solve, for according to mortal sense I was born deformed, both hips being dislocated, with consequent curvature of the spine. I never could reconcile the teaching that God was a loving Father with the statement that He would deliberately deform a little child for some unknown good purpose.

In 1901 my physical condition grew much worse. Contraction of the muscles set in, followed by softening of the bone, and for the greater part of six years I was either stretched on my back or trying to walk with crutches or a stick. Nearly four of those years I spent in a nursing home, where I underwent seven operations; but in spite of all the skill and kindness of the doctors, in spite of all the love and care bestowed on me, I left there in 1907 with the possibility of having to return for still another operation. Varicose veins, lung trouble, and water on the knee were among the things now added to the original trouble, until I was so physically and mentally weary that I used to long to pass away in my sleep.

Here Christian Science found me, bringing the glorious teaching that God is indeed Love; that He had not sent this suffering, and that as none of it was of His creation it had no reality. Gradually, through the loving help and teaching given me, I began to get a truer concept of God, and as I grew in understanding my healing came. I had been condemned never to play tennis again, but just to be able to get up and down stairs like other people, for by this time one leg was so much shorter than the other that I had to have a two-inch extension on the heel of one boot. Now I not only am able to play tennis, but when necessary can do quite useful housework. I am able to walk greater distances than ever before in my life, can swim, and once again can ride a bicycle.

Perhaps no one who has not been condemned to the life of an invalid can quite understand the joy of being of some use in the world. For the physical healings I am indeed grateful, but they are as nothing when compared to the great spiritual joy that has come to me, and my gratitude for the privilege of bringing this healing truth to others is unbounded. For over four years I have been able to work, and day by day the joy increases. The Bible, which I only read from a sense of duty and which I never understood, is now a source of happiness and enlightenment. Words fail, but I hope by my life to express my gratitude, and from my heart I thank God for Christian Science.

E. Mary Sutcliffe, Bournemouth, England.

Six years ago through reading the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" enough understanding was gained to realize that Christian Science is indeed the truth, and both my husband and myself have since read all the literature and clung to Christian Science, which meets our every need. We think our progress has been due to the fact that we purchased the text-book at the very beginning of our investigation and very early subscribed for all the literature. We paid almost our last money for Science and Health and bought the periodicals at the reading room and news stand till we felt we could subscribe by the year.

We have had many positive proofs that the truth as taught in Christian Science does heal. I was instantaneously healed of a badly injured ankle which had previously been weak, and it has never given any trouble since. For years I had to wear glasses, but the need for them was instantaneously overcome. Though I now use my eyes more than ever, the healing was so complete that there is not even the feeling of weariness in the eyes after long and close use. One treatment given by a practitioner completely restored the hearing in one of my husband's ears, though he had been unable to hear for a long time with that ear. For several winters he could not get about at his work for weeks together, because of severe attacks of rheumatism which kept him in a chair much of the time, but after studying Christian Science he was entirely healed and has had no return of these attacks.

One of our great blessings was the overcoming of financial difficulties. We found ourselves so hopelessly involved that we wondered how we would ever get out of it. When the climax came, the whole matter was settled satisfactorily to all concerned through the application of the truth,—the knowing of the allness of God and therefore His constant protecting care, and the power of divine law demonstrating this fact under all circumstances. Beyond all pleasures and joys I find that the daily study of the Lesson-Sermon and the literature satisfies. Each application of what is thus gained brings an added blessing.

The greatest and most wonderful blessing is that we found this beautiful truth. My thankfulness to God is beyond expression, and I feel deep gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, and to all who have helped us at any time.

I came into Christian Science for physical healing, after having suffered for many years from gall-stones, rheumatism, and other ailments. Everything possible in a material way had been tried, and at last two operations were performed. While I was lying at the hospital, given up by the attending physicians, the thought came to me of a healing of which I had heard and which had been brought about through Christian Science treatment. I felt that if I could only understand how this healing was accomplished, I also would be healed. I therefore called for a Christian Science practitioner, and absent treatment was given me.

In four weeks I left the hospital on a stretcher, but for four months was not able to lift my head from the pillow, as my suffering was more intense after the operation than before, the attacks occurring with greater frequency. All this time, however, I studied the Lesson-Sermons and earnestly tried to understand Christian Science. I continued to take treatment, with the result that rheumatism and many other ailments were overcome, but the gall-stones, from which I so desired to be free, were the last to yield.

My family and friends had ceased to look for my recovery, and I suffered so much it seemed as if it would be a relief to die. One Sunday morning my daughter was reading the lesson on "Matter" to me, and more to please her than myself I was listening, when these words seemed to rouse me: "The divine Mind, which forms the bud and blossom, will care for the human body, even as it clothes the lily; but let no mortal interfere with God's government by thrusting in the laws of erring, human concepts" (Science and Health, p. 62).

I asked my daughter to read the passage over and over again. Then I began to wonder how I was interfering with God's government, as I was beginning to see that in some way I must be doing this; for otherwise I would be free like the "bud and blossom." Jesus' assurance that the Father cares for His children, and that they are of more value than many sparrows, also seemed very clear to me. There and then I saw how the Father would care for me if I would only stop interfering with His government. Thinking thus I fell asleep, and awoke with the realization that I was healed,—made "every whit whole."

I have had many struggles, but God has never failed me. In our family we have experienced numerous proofs of God's loving care. About a year after I came into Science some gunpowder exploded in the face of our youngest boy, about six years old at the time, burning off his hair, eyebrows, and eyelashes, and leaving his face like one big blister. A practitioner came and gave him treatment, and about fifteen minutes after she arrived the boy fell asleep. About ten days later the scab came off his face, leaving it perfect in every way. He had no pain after that one treatment.

I am indeed grateful for these and many other proofs of God's loving care, but above all for the unfolding of the truth; and I give thanks to our beloved Leader, who so wonderfully and unselfishly has pointed out the way to suffering humanity by her writings and by her example and precept.

Twenty-three years ago I was an infidel. For twenty years I had denied all that Christians hold most sacred. During those years I became acquainted with sickness, disease, and suffering of all kinds. My only hope was in the doctors, and I took great quantities of their drugs, but they failed to heal me. Two of the ailments were stomach disorder and malignant ulcers on the tongue, pronounced incurable by reputable physicians. My weight became greatly reduced, and the tongue was growing worse all the time; in fact when Christian Science was presented to me by a friend, I was making arrangements to go to a noted specialist in Chicago to have my tongue removed.

Besides these two serious troubles I had been suffering for years from nasal catarrh, irregular heart action, ever recurring fever, and a throat affection. In my extremity I was willing to try anything that offered a hope of saving my tongue, so the advice of a friend was followed and a Christian Science practitioner was called. In a few treatments I was healed of all my troubles, and found myself perfectly well. This healing took place in Omaha in June, 1893, and since then I have not taken a drop of medicine, and have not ceased to enjoy perfect health. I have been eating and drinking anything set before me, and nothing has ever hurt me. My weight has increased, and not one of the ailments has returned.

Can any one wonder that after such proofs of the healing power of Truth I became a firm believer in Christian Science? Best of all, the Bible has become a very dear friend and guide through the help of that wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and Mrs. Eddy's other inspired writings. I am indeed thankful to God for what Christian Science has done for me, and my one great desire is to know more of the blessed truth which the Master has said shall make us free.—EMILE E. CHARPIOT, Portland, Ore.

When our baby was fourteen months old she was taken with a severe cold, which later developed into acute lung trouble. Under the care of a physician she was apparently cured in about three weeks, but caught cold again and kept getting worse. The doctor told us she had congestion of the lungs, and at last a swelling formed back of the ear. The doctor said the congestion had settled there, and that if a specialist could not break it up an operation on her head would be necessary. One night we thought she was going to pass on, so we decided to try Christian Science. She was treated by a practitioner and was almost instantly healed. The fever went down and never returned. She had treatment the two following days, but more to remove my fear than for anything else, as she was perfectly well.

Christian Science has freed me from fear, made my life more pleasant and harmonious, made me a better wife and mother, and taught me to look to God for all my needs. For these and many other blessings I offer this testimony, with the thought that it may help some other mother who through fear and lack of knowledge may be holding back herself and her child from the everlasting good and help of Christian Science.—MAUDE E. DEMING, San Diego, Cal.

I can testify to the accuracy and truth of the above statements, and have had many proofs of the efficacy of Christian Science in my own daily life and business.—R. W. DEMING.

I wish to take this opportunity to express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for the many blessings received through a slight understanding of Christian Science. This teaching was in my family for a number of years, but it did not seem to mean anything to me, beyond being a remedy for a few minor physical ailments.

I had the mistaken opinion that I must be religiously inclined, or rather spiritually minded, before I would love this truth as Christian Scientists around me did, and I waited, hopelessly of course, for a change in my consciousness which never came. A few years ago a very unhappy experience awoke me to the realization that it was doing me no good to wait and bemoan the fact that this truth had not come to me, but that I must seek and actually utilize it every moment of my life in order to make it my own and derive any lasting benefit. This was not an easy matter by any means at first, but finally I really learned to love to study the Bible and Science and Health, a thing which I had thought impossible.

Today, whether there are any outward manifestations of this regeneration or not, I know that within there is a greater peace than I have ever known, and a wonderful knowledge that I am on the right road; that I have a Principle whereby every day I am enabled to meet and destroy, as unreal, every suggestion of evil, such as self-pity, fear, envy, unhappiness, and, last but not least, lack of love. These have not been entirely overcome, but I have the assurance that as I learn more of this truth these false beliefs will become less real and will finally be destroyed. I am indeed thankful to God for this great truth.—HELEN M. TRACHT, Fort Worth, Texas.

Seven years ago I was to material sense a wreck, both mentally and physically, suffering from what is called a nervous breakdown, which had been brought about by financial losses and a weakened physical condition. Christian Science had been recommended to me by several of my friends, and although I had no idea what it was, in my extremity I was willing to try anything which could extend hope to me. On a Wednesday evening I visited a Christian Science church, and was wonderfully impressed with that first service within the beautiful structure filled with peace and love.

As a result, I asked for treatment from a Christian Science practitioner, and afterward purchased a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which I read and studied. My health soon became normal, and the desire for tobacco left me without the slightest effort on my part. Harmony was restored in my business affairs, and I was able to dispose of my interests and turn my attention to something more in accordance with my new mode of thinking. I had learned one lesson in this new effort,—that of obedience. I have traveled extensively, but have never found anything to compare with the peace of mind to be found in Christian Science. Especially at this time, when the world is living in discord and strife, do I express my gratitude to God, who fills all space, to the living presence of the Christ-power calming the waves of human sense, and to Mrs. Eddy, the noble woman who discerned the "signs of the times" and was able to give to the world a message of Truth, before which, as she tells us on page 577 of Science and Health, "mighty potentates and dynasties will lay down their honors."—SIDNEY JOSEPH EUSON, Chicago, Ill.

[Translated from the German]

It is with a sense of deep gratitude that I would testify to the many blessings which I have received through Christian Science. From early girlhood I was constantly suffering, partly from hereditary troubles, according to the physicians' statement. When I reached the age of fourteen all these ailments, among them anemia, a weak back, and stomach trouble, seemed to come to a climax; indeed I may say that there seemed to be no part of my body which was not affected. I was told that God had sent these things to try me; but I thought this very unjust, especially as I had no home and was obliged to earn my living.

When I got to be twenty-one my condition was such that I almost despaired; but in a very strange manner I came to hold a position where I was told about Christian Science and given the Herold to read. At first my attitude was one of incredulity. Then mental anguish and sorrow were added to my other troubles, and I wanted to put an end to my life, as I was tired of it all. But at the last moment, like a ray of light the thought of Christian Science made me turn back to give this teaching a trial. The understanding dawned upon me but slowly, and severe experiences always seemed to be necessary to make me advance toward the light. A few months later opportunity was afforded me to communicate with a Christian Science practitioner, who explained the truth to me and gave me her loving attention. My troubles disappeared in the degree that I understood, and I was enabled to help others, this in turn being a benefit to myself. I pray God that He may fit me to overcome all the disharmonies which at times present themselves, and that I may express genuine love toward all, thus to be indeed a good Christian Scientist.

LOUISE WENGER, Geneva, Switzerland.

It has been a year and a half since I became interested in Christian Science, and we received a great blessing at that time. In February we had parted with a dear baby girl ten months old. I wanted to have Science treatment for her, but did not seem able to turn from my nurse and doctor. About five weeks later another little girl, then about two years old, seemed to be going with the same trouble, as both children had started to cough about the same time in September. The doctor said nothing but fresh air would do the child any good, so I took her home, feeling as though all hope were gone, for the rest of the family did not want Science.

In a few days the child was so ill we had to call the doctor. I followed his directions carefully, but at noon one day my mother said, "I think she is going just the way the baby did." I replied that I thought so too, and she then said, "Let's try Science." I was very glad to hear those words, and immediately called up a practitioner in Boulder, about twelve miles from where we then lived. I turned from the telephone with a much lighter heart than I had had for a good many weeks, for I was assured of God's all-power. In twenty-four hours the cough was gone, and in four days the child was well. Toothache has been quickly overcome for her, and a hip trouble resulting from a fall. This had happened on Friday, and every little while she would say that it hurt her to walk. On Sunday afternoon the hip gave her a good deal of trouble, and in the night she cried out when she moved. The next morning she could not get out of bed, so I called a practitioner, who told me I might have a surgeon examine her unless the demonstration was instantaneous. I had gone to a neighbor's house to telephone, and when I got home the little girl had walked out to the kitchen and by night was dancing around. She is now almost five years of age and is the healthiest child in the neighborhood. She took cold when she had the measles a short time ago, and had croup, but it was overcome in a very short time. She was not in bed one day with the measles.

We are very grateful for Christian Science. I shall always turn to God for all my help.

I wish to express my gratitude for the many blessings that have come to me since I was healed of typhoid fever through Christian Science. Had not Science found me when it did, I am sure I would not be here today. While having treatment for this ailment I had an acute attack of bowel trouble. My daughter telephoned to the practitioner for help, and in two minutes after giving the message I had complete relief, without experiencing any pain.

At times since my healing I have needed the help of a practitioner to keep me in the right path, and I am deeply grateful for the loving guidance given me through the understanding of the truth. Problems that would loom up suddenly, and would assume to one young in Science immense proportions, when looked at in the clear light of truth have proved to be stepping stones to a higher understanding of the omnipotence of God.

I am deeply grateful for the many blessings that divine Love has bestowed on me through Christian Science.

ROSA O. MACLEOD, San Diego, Cal.

I desire to make known the great good that has come to me through Christian Science. A number of years ago I had a physical collapse while doing hospital duty, and it incapacitated me from further duty for several years. During that time I tried various kinds of treatment, and also a strenuous course in dieting, but there did not seem to be any improvement and I was thoroughly discouraged. Finally, however, I improved enough to resume my duties as nurse.

Christian Science was first brought to my attention when I was attending a patient in a family of which some members were Scientists. I never gave it any serious thought, but noticed particularly the harmony that prevailed amid the most trying circumstances. When a second collapse came I faced the situation, and found that I had not the slightest confidence in medicine, and felt that other methods might relieve but did not cure. I therefore decided to give Christian Science a fair trial and be obedient to anything that was required of me, so made an appointment with a practitioner. I took treatment for three weeks and felt that there had been some improvement, but I decided to stop treatment and investigate the Christ-cure for myself. A copy of Science and Health was purchased, and I began to study it faithfully, with the result that I have been in excellent health nearly ever since; in fact, I have been doing strenuous duty the past eight years with only one vacation.

I cannot express in words the gratitude I feel toward Mrs. Eddy for giving this wonderful Christ-cure to the world, so that we can understand to a degree the true meaning of the Master's words, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also."

MARGARET J. MATHESON, Lansdowne Station, Nova Scotia.

Frequently the statement is made that Christian Science may perhaps be beneficial to nervous, hysterical women; therefore I am glad to bear testimony to the fact that it is adaptable to the needs of every person, regardless of sex or calling. Even the business man may take it into all his commercial transactions, knowing full well that if he has anything therein which does not measure up to the required standards of Truth and Love, Christian Science will show him how to eliminate these objectionable features. My family and I have much to be thankful for because of our understanding of divine Principle, because we find ourselves able thereby to overcome many ills, many annoyances which at other periods were decidedly disagreeable, and we try to live our gratitude for the blessings we enjoy.

Through my understanding of the Principle of Christian Science I have been able to overcome the belief in impaired vision, for which I wore glasses more than fifteen years. The work I am now doing is fully as exacting as any done before my healing, and I am able to accomplish more and do it with a greater degree of certainty than when I had artificial aid to enable me to see. The healing came with the removal of my doubt as to the healing power of divine Love.

For the blessings that have come to me through the study and application of Christian Science I am deeply grateful. Many physical ailments have been overcome, among them stomach and bowel troubles, and glasses which I had worn for eight years have been laid aside. Even more gratitude is felt, however, for the spiritual and moral uplift, and for the better understanding of God and of man's relation to Him.

I am grateful for the Bible, for "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, for all the authorized literature, and for the loving help of friends who have so unselfishly aided me on the way. My earnest desire is to understand and express more of the truth each day, and thereby show deeper thankfulness to God.

[Written for the Sentinel]

Love's with Thee

CHARLES C. SANDELIN

IN error's night, o'ercast with fear,
When tossed on earth's tempestuous sea,
When seemed no hope of succor near—
A voice said gently, Love's with thee!

I felt Love's healing touch, and lo!
The darkness fled, calm was the sea,
And, filled with wondrous bliss, did know
'Twas true—this message—Love's with thee!

O wanderer on this mortal sphere,
Though lone thy lot may seem to be,
Pause and Truth's sweet assurance hear:
Thou art Love's child and Love's with thee!

From Our Exchanges

[The Congregationalist and Christian World]

Ex-President Eliot of Harvard University was right when he said at the recent dinner of the alumni of Andover Theological Seminary that one cause of the war was the failure of the churches to put before the world an adequate conception of God. It is true that those who profess to believe in Him, whether they call themselves Roman Catholic or Jewish or Protestant, have not succeeded in making His existence so real and His will for His children so clear and commanding as to enable them to live together without resorting to arms for the composing of their differences. If a sense of the majesty, righteousness, and love of God had pervaded mankind generally, war would have been an impossibility. But already one effect of the war has been the discovery of God on the part of many who did not know Him before, and the rediscovery of Him by those who have had only a formal or traditional knowledge of Him.

[Miss A. Maude Royden in The Christian Commonwealth]

Is it perhaps possible that out of the very anguish and darkness of war, out of the very depth of our economic misery, our industrial struggle, our international strife, we, who cannot live without God, who dare not, who cannot face life, if these terrific physical forces are all—may it not be that out of the very heart of this misery we shall be shocked into a realization of the greatness of the soul of man, and these still greater spiritual powers which dominate the physical world? Greater works than these shall ye do, said he who healed the sick and raised the dead. His promise no more fails than do his laws. It is we who have failed, it is we who turned our backs upon the truth in fear. But greater works than these shall ye do. "Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends."

Out of the heart of physical conflict, in the face of physical forces so terrible that we who live here at home cannot even imagine their potentiality for destruction; out of the very sense of helplessness in the presence of so vast a conflict, out of the crushing burden laid upon our spirits by the vast and complex structure of modern civilization, shall we not take courage indeed to affirm the greatness of the spiritual law? And shall we not apply ourselves to the understanding of that law with the same courage and the same confidence, the same certainty in the unfailing operation of God's love, as became us when we studied the laws of science? If we had studied the law of God in the light of Christ's love and in the hearts of one another, in the operation of the laws of science and in the movements of the human spirit, with a passionate love of truth, with unflinching sincerity of purpose, with courage and with assurance, by now what should we not have attained? It is not yet too late.

[The Christian Work]

A good laugh is a safety-valve. When we become so intense that we cannot argue without getting mad, we ought to go aside and laugh at ourselves, and then come back and try it again. The comic is a part of human life. We have no right to censor it out of our daily existence simply because the nations happen to be at war. The very reason that the world is dark is an argument that somebody should laugh. The world would be unendurable if there were no one in it any longer capable of laughing. If we wish to live through this war we must use everything that is within us—and one of those things is our sense of humor.

Digitized by Google

[The Independent]

The war is clarifying ideas and stimulating the moral sincerities. These reactions are generally recognized. What is quite as important, it is disposing for good and all of a lot of useless mental baggage, a great store of hypocrisies, and a multitude of presumptions and policies which we knew or suspected were rubbish or worse, but which in the easy years of peace we did not bestir ourselves to do away with. A war brings us to a right apprehension of these things, as moving brings us to a right appraisal of household accumulations which we are too lazy or too sentimental to assort sanely under ordinary circumstances.

Organized society after this war will be a more intelligent affair and a much more sincere affair, as well as a far more effective machine for promoting human well-being, than it has been hitherto. Privilege will have to go. Excess profits will have to go. Individualism that disregards the rights and interests of fellow men will have to go. Slacking, wasting, and obstructing will have to go. Anarchism and a systematic protection of malefactors will have to go. The world will be neither nationalistic only nor internationalistic only. It will be neither socialistic nor individualistic only. It will be a practical, relatively sincere and relatively intelligent world, pretty carefully scrutinizing every proposition and trying out plans on their merits.

[The Christian Register]

No one can wholly discern the nature and extent of the religious and ecclesiastical changes that are impending, and it is futile to indulge in guesswork. It is, however, possible to assert that while the churches appear to be steadily falling behind in public respect, religion has never been so vital in the life of the nations. The Christianity of the future is not going to be the Christianity of the past. While there may be interludes of reaction, the movement of religious life will be forward and not backward. The men who come home from the war will not be the men who went out. They have responded to an appeal which has opened wide horizons before them. They have been carried beyond all the trivialities of sacerdotalism to certain central convictions about life and destiny. They have discovered that it is not very important how long a man lives or when he dies, but very important how he lives and in what spirit he dies. They have learned to judge men and events by new standards. They have discovered a type of moral fidelity, a spirit of fraternity and of sacrifice, an outlook toward things unseen, which they know to be good and which at the bottom they own to be religious.

[Pacific Christian Advocate]

It is a knowledge of the truth which is a condition of intellectual emancipation. Ignorance, prejudice, tradition, and pharisaism bind the mental powers and shut out the guiding light of reason. This bondage is within, and every person must write his own great proclamation of deliverance. Truth can no more be freely handed to the mind than fruit can be given to the tree. It must be assimilated and yield its fruits out of an enriched nature. Bigotry and negation are exorcised only by the magic of appropriated truth.

[Peter Ainslee, D.D., LL.D., in The Constructive Quarterly]

Forms and ceremonies are not religion, but belong in the realm of formal Christianity, and are governed frequently by tastes and traditions and have no more right to separate brethren than the choice of food on the table has to break up the peace of a family. Theologies are not religion, for they change with the centuries in their attempt to explain religion, and have no more right to separate brethren than theories of commerce have to break up human friendship.

Items of Interest

The country wide desire for economy, together with the present high cost of pig tin, says Commerce Reports, has led to many inquiries regarding the possibility of utilizing old tin cans. The following facts are presented for the information of those interested:—

Tin cans may be utilized in several ways. First, they may be "detinned," the products from this process being steel scrap (used in open hearth furnaces), tetrachloride of tin (used in the silk dyeing industry), pig tin (used in making tin plate), Babbitt metal and solder, and solder ashes (refined into solder); second, friction top cans may be cleansed and reused in the household; third, the caps may be removed from used cans, which may then be filled with paints, chemicals, etc., and new caps applied. There are at least two detinning companies in this country that utilize old tin cans. The two companies purchase tin plate scrap from can makers and others and old tin cans from junk dealers and community organizations. From 10 to 25 per cent of their capacity is devoted to old tin cans. The cans are bought by the ton in carload lots at a fixed price, and are ordinarily divided into three classes: unused, empty, and unrusted tin cans not exceeding the one-gallon size; used, empty, and unrusted not exceeding the one-gallon size; used, empty, and unrusted exceeding the one-gallon size, but not exceeding the five-gallon size.

Careful search for ways in which to use profitably the seemingly inexhaustible supply of palmetto in Florida, southern Georgia, and other southern states has resulted in the inauguration of an industry that may make the United States independent of the Mexican sisal industry in the manufacture of binder twine. A machine has been invented that spins the fiber out of the palmetto leaves and twists it into binder twine. It has been found possible to use the palmetto to some extent in broom making and for a number of other products. Carpeting made of it was found not only superior to the wire grass rugs now on the markets but much cheaper, and it affords also a cheap fiber to be used in cotton bagging.

About 85 per cent of the peppermint grown in Japan is raised in the Hokkaido. This district, together with Okayama and Hiroshima prefectures, produces practically all of the Japanese crop. The preliminary steps in the manufacture of menthol are carried out by the farmers themselves, with the aid of stills of a simple design. The peppermint plants after being dried are placed in the stills, where they undergo a process of steaming. The resulting vapors are condensed, and deposited as crude peppermint oil. This crude peppermint is shipped to Yokohama and Kobe, where factories are equipped to subject it to a process of fractional distillation to obtain the full content of menthol. The residue of oil is further refined to the standards of purity required in the trade, and is known as peppermint oil.

Work upon the electrification through the Cascade Mountains of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway is now in progress, and it will be only a short time before the St. Paul's second great electrified zone will be in operation. The St. Paul management will spend several million dollars in the work of duplicating in the Cascades the efficiencies in operation and maintenance it has already achieved in the Rockies. The Cascade electrification, from Othello, Wash., to Seattle and Tacoma, will add 211 miles to the electric lines, making a total of 651 miles in all under operation from power generated from mountain water.

In 1915 there were 139 establishments in Chile turning out paper and paper products of one kind or another. Three of them made paper and cardboard, two wrapping paper, two cardboard, seven paper boxes, three blank books, four paper sacks, and one serpentinas, while ninety-nine did a general printing and binding business, six binding alone, and twelve lithographing. The annual consumption of paper and paper products by Chile is about $3,800,000, of which some $3,000,000 is imported and $800,000 manufactured in the country.

The Lake Margaret hydroelectric power scheme in Tasmania is to be developed by the Mount Lyell Company, so as to make available 8000 horse power additional to the present installation, involving a cost of about $344,200, the aggregate expenditure in this connection being approximately $1,117,800. At the request of the Tasmanian Government the company has investigated a scheme for generating electrical energy on the King River. The results indicate that it "appears economically feasible" to install a 30,000 horse power plant.

During work necessitated by the displacement of the rails along the Rome-Naples line, about two kilometers from the station at Rome, the discovery has been made of a buried building in the shape of a basilica with three naves, divided by pillars with arches. The walls, vaulting, pillars, and apse are covered with fine reliefs in white stucco, representing scenes from mythology, ornamental motifs, and so forth. Arrangements have been made for the complete excavation of the building, which is to be made accessible to visitors.

The appeals of the Federal Department of Agriculture to farmers to practice conservation and economy on a much closer scale than usual have borne fruit in the wheat growing districts of the West. During the spring and summer a number of threshing outfits, usually idle, have been working on western straw stacks, with considerable profit. It is estimated by experts that millions of bushels of wheat have been left in these old stacks through careless threshing methods.

"With the completion of the Government railroad into the coal fields of Matanuska, Alaska, and the shipment of coal from that region by the United States Government, is seen the possibility of supplying the Pacific coast with Alaskan coal at a rate that should have important bearing upon the solution of the fuel question of the Far West," says an agent of the Alaskan Engineering Commission.

Government operation of motor truck routes between country districts and the big cities, with a view to the conservation of foods and reduction of the cost of living, is proposed in a bill accepted by the United States Senate on recommendation of the postmaster-general. The plan is to conduct a series of experiments between now and spring, and to report the results to Congress.

The August crop report issued by the United States Department of Agriculture shows the corn prospects improved to the extent of 67,000,000 bushels during July, indicating a total production of 3,191,000,000 bushels. Wheat, however, shows a decrease of 25,000,000 bushels. Wheat production, winter wheat and spring wheat combined, now is forecast at 653,000,000 bushels.

Denmark's telegraph and telephone systems are owned by the state. For 1916 their earnings approximated $1,800,000; of this sum the telegraph system took in $1,175,000, and the telephones the remainder. Maintenance, salaries, and so forth, totaled $1,170,000, leaving a net profit to the state of about 18 per cent on the capital invested.

A steamer direct from Trinidad, British West Indies, to France recently took the largest single cargo of cocoa that has ever been exported from the island, amounting to 42,752 bags, valued at $1,266,560. The actual shipments of Trinidad cocoa have amounted for the first six months of 1917 to 55,070,093 pounds.

Judge Booth of the United States district court at Minneapolis, Minn., has handed down a final decree enjoining the Northwestern Lumbermen's Association from issuing black lists and following other alleged practices which would restrain lumber manufacturers and wholesalers from selling direct to consumers.

In May, June, and July of this year 22,000 people entered the Yosemite National Park in California, and of these 12,000 made up families and small groups of friends coming in their own cars and independent in their movements of stage schedules and railway stops.

March 1, 1918, has been designated as the opening day for the third sample fair at Lyons, France. Already 500 applications for stands have been received, and 1000 new booths have been ordered to take care of the additional exhibitors that are expected.

Forty-three public schools were opened in Guatemala in 1916, making the total number 1942. Expenditures for education reached $170,871, and the enrollment totaled 67,152.

The Japanese Government is shortly to put into practice a system of inspecting and standardizing the quality of the principal exports from the country.

It is generally understood that Manchuria's annual production of soya beans is between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 tons.

In 1910 the farming land of the United States had a value of $28,475,674,169.

Waiting Patiently on God

SAMUEL GREENWOOD

THE value of patience lies in the fact that permanent success in any line of human endeavor cannot be achieved without it. Human consciousness, imprisoned in its beliefs of matter and evil and seeking a way of escape, finds that these errors cannot be lightly brushed aside, even after their unreal nature has been recognized and acknowledged. "It is easier to desire Truth," Mrs. Eddy declares, "than to rid one's self of error" (Science and Health, p. 322). It is a simple matter to wish for freedom from sin, but quite another thing to stop sinning; yet to "rid one's self of error" and to stop sinning is the indispensable price of human salvation. False theories, ignorance, and superstition, which oppress and enslave mankind, give up their control only before a positive and applied knowledge of the truth, expressed in orderly and progressive accomplishment. To become impatient at the delay, even though a genuine effort is being made to demonstrate Christian Science, betrays a lack of comprehension of the real situation, and only tends to increase or to prolong one's difficulties.

Those who understand Christian Science sufficiently to see that the human problem is mental, know that the way of escape from error lies through mental betterment, to be effected by the constant thinking of better thoughts and the doing of better things, up to the point of possessing the Mind that was in Christ Jesus. "Love is not hasty to deliver us from temptation," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 22 of Science and Health, "for Love means that we shall be tried and purified." It is not that Love is not waiting at this moment to welcome us into heavenly consciousness, but that human thought and desire must first be purified before that consciousness can be wholly attained. Whether the process of purification shall be slow or fast, rests with mortals themselves. Most of us honestly long for the delights of heaven, but shrink from the pangs of purification, until we learn from experience that there is no other road leading into God's kingdom.

The injunction to wait patiently on the Lord is not intended to excuse or encourage tardiness in one's Christian practice, but rather to rebuke that headlong quality of mortals known as will-power, which would impel them to climb up some other way into the realm of harmony rather than enter through the door of obedience to Principle. Although the attempt to invade the heavenly kingdom by force may sometimes bring a temporary sense of success, there is always a return to the original starting-point, because of the absence of true spiritual impulsion. This method is essentially that of the carnal mind, which has no higher concept of reformation than the overcoming of error with error.

The Christian who has grown to discern the Science of Christianity knows that his salvation cannot be worked out vicariously, but that he must pay the uttermost farthing; that is, he must meet the demand for perfection until the last vestige of error has been put out of his consciousness. He also knows there is no possible favoritism in Science, no easier way for one than for another, but that each individual possesses the ability to meet in their proper order all of God's demands. This knowledge should show him that there is no place in the practice of Christian Science for disappointment or discouragement, which are but synonyms for impatience; and impatience is but another word for self-will, for that which would reach out for the reward before it has been earned.

Patience has been defined as "unflinching, undaunted perseverance;" as unfaltering constancy in the pursuit of a desired end. It is a quality of the love that "never faileth," that "is not easily provoked," and that goes on its way unruffled by opposition and undismayed by seeming failure. This does not mean that we should be heedless of opposition or callous to failure, but rather that we should be unwavering in our efforts to approach the perfect standard and unfaltering in our faith in the Principle of our work. Then to wait patiently on God does not in any sense imply a lessening of our spiritual activity or a release from individual responsibility, but a constant devotion to the divine ideal, a steadfast abiding in the mental attitude where it is possible for God to reach us.

The waiting enjoined upon us as Christian disciples is not an idle tarrying until God is ready to bless us, for He is that always. It is the unwearied watching for His appearing; it is the waiting referred to by Jesus as having our lamps trimmed and burning, ever ready to begin our service for the bridegroom. The opposite state is illustrated by those who slumbered and slept, thinking that all they had to do was to wait. Jesus was obviously describing mental conditions, and his parable of the wise and the foolish virgins implies that to maintain the right attitude toward God calls for constant watchfulness and activity. Their lamps were to be kept not only trimmed but burning. God does not keep us waiting a moment beyond our fitness to be blessed; but this fitness is not gained by going to sleep or by idly waiting for something to be done for us, but by remaining awake and rousing ourselves to the necessity of overcoming all that is not like God.

The mental attitude which waits patiently on God may be likened to the perseverance of the sculptor in chipping away the marble until his perfect concept is wrought out, or to the clearing away of the accumulated débris which hides some art treasure of the past. Patient waiting, far from being patient idleness, means patient purification, the clearing away of false beliefs, waiting only for God's image to appear. It is persevering in our warfare against error, not patiently doing nothing. Without this continuous activity in preparing the way for God, one's waiting would have no virtue or reward. "Now," says the apostle, "are we the sons of God," although, as he goes on to say, this divine sonship "doth not yet appear;" but it is for this appearing that we are working and waiting,—waiting, that is, in unfaltering confidence that the perfect man, the son of God, will appear in due season if we faint not.

In the life-work of Mrs. Eddy Christian Scientists may find an example of patient waiting upon God they would do well to emulate. In the Preface to Science and Health (p. ix) Mrs. Eddy with characteristic humility says, "To-day, though rejoicing in some progress, she still finds herself a willing disciple at the heavenly gate, waiting for the Mind of Christ." That hers was no inactive waiting was evidenced by her incessant labors for the upbuilding and prosperity of the Christian Science movement, and through it for the welfare of all mankind. If we are likewise waiting "at the heavenly gate,"—waiting not for ease or selfish gain but for the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," our days will likewise be characterized by loving activity, and by that patience which yields not to discouragement, but which is full of faith and accomplishment.

Purifying Processes

IDA S. KOHL

If to a body of perfectly pure water a drop of impurity were added, in that proportion the water would be impure. The effect of one drop could not be detected at a glance, but if one were to keep adding impurities the water would soon be unfit for any purpose. Water may, however, be restored to its original purity either through filtering or the use of chemicals, or by the activities of nature. The chemical process is illustrated by the methods used in cities where the water supply is taken from other sources than artesian wells. The third process is expressed in the fact that running water purifies itself. The restoration to its original purity through either of these processes proves that the actual constituent parts of the water were never changed by the seeming addition of impurities. The combination of two parts hydrogen and one part oxygen, which constitutes water, was never anything but water; nor can this combination ever be changed, no matter how much impurity is apparently added to the water. As an illustration this fact may be taken into the realm of thought, although all material illustrations fall short in a measure when used to convey spiritual ideas.

True thought, which passes from God to man, is composed of all the good and spiritual qualities of the divine nature, and this constitutes man. The material sense of life has seemed to add to man all kinds of impurities,—mortal qualities,—and when we look at what human sense portrays, we say it is a very wicked man, whereas the man—the only man there is, who is made in the likeness of God, and exists for the purpose of expressing God—is never wicked. Nothing can be added to man, who is complete in God. The belief is that error, the error of believing in the reality of evil, is allowed to grow in human thought through self-indulgence from childhood on into manhood, and if mortal qualities predominate we eventually have a mortal morally unfit for good society, hastening on to physical and mental doom.

The same processes which serve for the purification of water may be applied likewise to thought. On page 162 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy states that "the effect of this Science is to stir the human mind to a change of base, on which it may yield to the harmony of the divine Mind." This purification is brought about as human thought is awakened to behold the truth of being through the realization of the spiritual facts in regard to God and man. Many students of Christian Science are apt to think and speak of chemicalization as though it were a thing to be dreaded, or shunned as something causing suffering and confusion. A study of the references to this subject in our Leader's writings, however, unfolds a much higher meaning and purpose, for they bring out the fact that chemicalization should not aggravate disease; that it is a process which eliminates disease and shows that the spiritualization of thought is going on.

The selfhood which human sense has seemed to add to man is not to be made perfect in this purifying process, any more than the impurities of the water are to be made pure. It is to be left behind, let go of, as thought grasps the spiritual facts of being. This awakening to the spiritual sense of life, followed by obedience to God's demands, baptizes us with the purity of the Christ and leads up to the spiritual love which is the consciousness of good only. This process of purification is Science. The psalmist says, "The words of the Lord are pure words: as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times."

The other process is a cleansing through the activities of suffering. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 362) we read: "Truth is won through Science or suffering: O vain mortals! which shall it be?" This idea of suffering from human error seems to be the process of purification which most mortals choose, perhaps unconsciously, because of the innate belief that man is mortal, but certainly ignorantly. When two ways are opened to an individual, a choice can be made; it therefore rests with him whether he will choose the way of Science, which is the way of awakening to righteousness and the willing abandonment of error, or the way of human experience, which is the way of suffering that leads out of the flesh and forces the abandonment of error. If the former way is chosen, a thorough study of Mrs. Eddy's writings, together with the Lesson-Sermons and the literature issued by The Christian Science Publishing Society, will reveal the operation of the divine Principle of Christian Science. From such an awakening there will unfold the discernment of the perfect creation, which will furnish the basis for thought and action that is untouched and undisturbed by any phase of evil.

On the other hand, as running water purifies itself, so through the experiences of suffering is human thought purified. This process is less scientific, because human thought must eventually awaken to God before error can be put off. Since this is true, why not choose the way of Life, Truth, and Love in the first place? Perfection is the one and only demand of divine Love on man, for this includes in itself all other demands of good. As this is acknowledged, thought is being led away from the belief that there are so many demands on one's time and thought, for this often leads one to the committal of acts which are dishonest, because of the belief that man's needs are material. God's demand for perfection must be met, and it can be met in the human consciousness only as each hour finds us with a greater consecration of thought to the recognition of spiritual facts. Though God demands perfection of us, He supplies the ability, capacity, and power to comply with His demand. That is why we can declare that man is perfect now as a spiritual being, because this requires a forgetting of self on the human part and gives God's law a chance to operate and His will to be done "in earth, as it is in heaven."

All mortals need purification from the demands of this belief in a self apart from God, and it is theirs to choose the process,—whether it shall be through spiritual ascendency, which is Science, or through suffering. In Miscellany (p. 161) our Leader says: "Lest human reason becloud spiritual understanding, say not in thy heart: Sickness is possible because one's thought and conduct do not afford a sufficient defense against it. Trust in God, and 'He shall direct thy paths.'" Such perfect trust in God's government and guidance certainly lifts thought above all theories about man into the consciousness of perfection and harmony as the only reality. It inculcates a charity for ourselves and for others which waits patiently for purification from error of every sort.

"Sanctified through the truth"

THEODORE STANGER

ALL professed Christians, be they Christian Scientists or members of other churches, acknowledge Christ Jesus to be the Saviour of the world. There is, however, a great difference of opinion as to the nature of salvation. The question is, How did Christ Jesus save us, and from what did he save us? The Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, has answered this question in a way which satisfies reason and increases our love for and gratitude to the Master.

It goes without saying that an ambassador to a foreign country is better qualified to state the nature of his mission than any one else in that country. May we not then attach the greatest importance to the words of Christ Jesus, God's ambassador extraordinary to mankind, when he explained why he came to this earth? At a time when he assuredly spoke with the greatest deliberation, standing before Pilate in the judgment chamber, he said, "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth."

Was ever a mission more clearly stated? "That I should bear witness unto the truth." Nor was this the only time when he explained the object of his appearance on this plane of consciousness. Again and again he represented himself as the truth bearer to mankind. For instance, he said to the Pharisees: "Ye seek to kill me, a man that hath told you the truth . . . And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?" He lost no opportunity to impress upon his hearers the necessity of gaining an understanding of the truth to which he bore witness, notably in those oft quoted words, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He continually proved the liberating power of the truth by healing the sick, raising the dead, and leading the sinners to repentance.

Now if the truth to which Jesus bore witness makes men free, what is it that holds us in bondage? Is it not truth's opposite, the untruth or the lie? Here it may be asked, What lie? to which we answer, The lie about God and His creation or manifestation. This lie represents God as resembling a human being, greatly enlarged in proportions and power, subject to human faults, such as anger, jealousy, changeableness; a God who sends sickness, want, and woe to His children, or at least permits them to be sent, and assigns to everlasting torture those who have not repented before the change called death takes place. In view of such a concept of God, Jesus' injunction, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect," has appeared to many earnest Christians like a hollow mockery. And is it not plain that "man's inhumanity to man" is largely due to his effort to pattern after the wrong concept of God?

How different was the God whom the Master knew! By word and deed he presented Him as the all wise and all loving Father, possessing no qualities or attributes which a good Christian should not express in his daily life. "Love your enemies, . . . that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven," was his injunction. And the beloved John, who seems to have grasped the deeper meaning of the Master's teaching better than any other of the disciples, declared that God is Love. Can we not hear these words as a Leitmotiv all through the Sermon on the Mount?

Jesus did not, however, as Mrs. Eddy emphasizes very strongly, represent God as an indulgent parent who winks at His children's faults. He taught that a man shall reap as he has sown; but punishment meant to him not an act of retribution, but a means to compel reform, the suffering to cease when it has destroyed the love of sin. To one whom he had healed he said, "Sin no more, lest a worse thing come unto thee," indicating clearly that suffering is the result of sin and can only be overcome by overcoming the sin.

In interpreting the mission of Jesus Mrs. Eddy did not brush aside the statement of St. John that "the blood of Jesus Christ . . . cleanseth us from all sin." In "No and Yes" she says, "This blood of Jesus is everything to human hope and faith" (p. 35). Her interpretation of the apostle's words differs, however, from the one generally accepted, in that it is entirely free from materialism, mysticism, and emotionalism. The statement that one has been cleansed by the blood of Jesus can only signify one of two things. Either it means that one has gained forgiveness of sin and purification through firmly believing and fervently acknowledging that Jesus, because of his sinlessness, was chosen to appease by the shedding of his blood the anger of God toward the rest of His children; or else it means that through an earnest effort to know the truth and to live it one has experienced the liberating power of the truth, and is deeply appreciative of the greatness of the Master's love, which made him willing to go even to the extent of shedding his blood in the carrying out of his mission. Which of these interpretations is the more reasonable? Which comes nearer to Jesus' own statements as to why he came into the world?

Mrs. Eddy has presented this subject so clearly and logically in her writings that Christian Scientists sometimes wonder why they did not see it that way all along. In "No and Yes" she says: "Shedding human blood brought to light the efficacy of divine Life and Love and its power over death." "It was not to appease the wrath of God, but to show the allness of Love and the nothingness of hate, sin, and death, that Jesus suffered. He lived that we also might live. He suffered, to show mortals the awful price paid by sin, and how to avoid paying it. He atoned for the terrible unreality of a supposed existence apart from God" (pp. 33, 35).

When Philip requested of the Master, "Show us the Father," the reply was, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Had he not manifested, reflected, or expressed the true nature of God in every thought, word, and deed? And had he not thereby brought to light the real man, "which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness"? But the Master's faithful work avails us nothing if we neglect to follow his example.

In that wonderful prayer recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, Jesus said, "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." Thus he clearly indicated, as he did in many other instances, that he considered himself the Wayshower out of wrong conditions resulting from humanity's acceptance of that which is not true. Christian Scientists have the same task before them. They realize that they must know the truth, daily learn more of the truth, in order to receive its blessings. As the truth dawns upon their consciousness they learn that, since God is Spirit, the real man and the real universe must be spiritual, reflecting the unchanging perfection and harmony of their divine source. Christian Scientists understand the gradual apprehension and the demonstration of these great facts of being to be the process of sanctification through the truth—of purification from that to which lying material sense bears witness; namely, sin, sickness, want, and woe. The most tenacious falsehood which the Master refuted is death; and by first refuting the lesser falsehoods, as he did, we also shall finally refute for ourselves the greatest one—shall destroy "the last enemy."

"Remember the sabbath day"

ANNE ARCHBOLD MILLER

THE First Commandment is said to include the other nine commandments in its eight short, teeming words. The writer experienced no difficulty in placing all except the fourth commandment at unity with the first; but whenever the fourth commandment came up for study and unfoldment, especially in Sunday school work, its highest significance seemed veiled from vision, and an almost discouraged sense of limitation fettered a clearer perception of its teachings. Never for an instant did it appear that this commandment held less significance or spiritual value than the rest, but only that limited vision seemed to fall short of penetrating its treasure.

One of these days when the fourth commandment came up in the Sunday school to be discussed the following Sabbath, an aggravated sense of dissatisfaction in its limited interpretation to the teacher appeared, simultaneously to be overthrown. This sense doubtless sprang from the fact that the class in which the commandment was to be unfolded was exceedingly alert and receptive to clear, demonstrable statements of truth. A great longing for light to make more vital the unfoldment of the commandment, brought the realization that "the preparations of the heart in man . . . is from the Lord;" that no strained human effort or anxious desire could dispel the darkness; that only the light of Truth could dispel it, and that without strain or anxiety. A realization of ever present light followed, of that light in which "is no darkness at all." Ah, how many times the willingness to cry, "Let there be light," has burst resisting bands of material limitation and found itself at-one with the response, "And there was light"! The greater light which dawned upon her consciousness at that time has made the fourth commandment vital in the writer's experience ever since.

"Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy." Sabbath, the seventh day,—the day of fulness, completion; the day in which God rested from His finished creative work and called it "very good;" the day which God blessed and sanctified. Hence the Sabbath is a holiday, a holy day, and Mrs. Eddy defines day as "the irradiance of Life; light, the spiritual idea of Truth and Love" (Science and Health, p. 584). Then to "remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy," is an admonition to be ever mindful of God's finished and "very good" creation; to keep unmarred by material beliefs and limitations "the irradiance of Life," the "spiritual idea of Truth and Love." In other words, to make God and His idea our only consciousness; to have no other gods before the one God.

To accentuate the word "keep" is helpful in bringing out this significance. Just as we are taught that in climbing a mountain we ascend more rapidly as we keep our gaze fixed upon the summit, than by anxiously watching the thorny path which leads upward, Mrs. Eddy says of her own experience, "The discoverer of Christian Science finds the path less difficult when she has the high goal always before her thoughts, than when she counts her footsteps in endeavoring to reach it" (Science and Health, p. 426). The six days in which we are admonished to labor and do all our work are but the testing time, the wilderness experience, in which we must keep thought fixed upon the promised land. Our sons, our daughters, our men servants, our maid servants, our cattle, the stranger within our gates, would merely include all material beliefs. Our thought offspring, thought servants,—thoughts over which we hold seeming dominion,—strange thoughts that would enter into our gates, must all be held in obedience to Christ, Truth, through keeping our gaze fixed upon the perfection of being.

God's work is done and is all inclusive. The Sabbath day, the day of rest, is established. In it there is no work for material belief to do, only to remember to keep it forever holy; for God, the All-in-all, has blessed and hallowed it. The six days of our labor will partake of the Sabbath rest in proportion as we keep holy the Sabbath day, as we keep thought steadfastly fixed on realities supernal, nor permit it to be mesmerized and hampered by the seeming experiences of our six days of labor. Let the Sabbath day shine through and glorify our days of labor! Our Master broke down the traditionary Sabbath in healing and in working the works of God on that day as on all days, in direct opposition to pharisaical doctrines. There was no time when he did not remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; no time when he ceased perceiving God's finished and perfect creation and in manifesting the healing power of his spiritualized vision.

The application of the commandment to the hallowing of the Sabbath day has been brought out so comprehensively in our periodicals, and with such high spiritual significance, that it would seem unnecessary to touch upon it; yet if in this interpretation the writer is but repeating a vision long since glimpsed by others, she knows that they will rejoice that the fourth commandment has become to her more vital and demonstrable, and that the keeping of the Sabbath holy is to her now an affirmation of the forever perfection of being, which bears the fruits of a purified consciousness.

Truth in Advertising

OLIVER GALE

THE object of The Christian Science Monitor, as stated by Mrs. Eddy in the leading editorial of the first issue of the paper, is "to spread undivided the Science that operates unspent," and "to injure no man, but to bless all mankind" (Miscellany, p. 353). This purpose clearly includes all of the Monitor's activities as a newspaper. Its advertising, no less than its news, its editorials, and its "features," must bless all mankind. For it to benefit the advertiser, or the reader, or the paper itself, merely, or all three of these, is not enough.

The manner and degree in which the Monitor blesses all mankind through its office of advertising may not perhaps be clear upon first consideration. Mortal mind, as it expresses itself in modern business, is apt to regard advertising solely as a peculiarly efficient device for making money. Its commonly accepted purpose is to create and develop a profitable demand for something that is to be sold. Such a view of advertising is seen to be false, when we reflect upon this thought of demand and discern what lies beneath it. The thought of demand is based upon a belief of lack; but there is in reality no lack, for supply is infinite. Hence there can be in reality no demand, for every supposititious demand is already met. "Your Father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye ask him," said Jesus.

Digitized by Google

This false view of advertising follows naturally from the failure to understand what business truly is; from the erroneous concept of business as a means of livelihood. True business is the Father's business. It is the reflection in man's activity of divine Mind's activity, demonstrating in human experience Mind's infinite supply. And true advertising, the handmaid of true business, is the activity of divine Mind, intelligence, operating in human consciousness to direct man to his supply, to inform him where and how his needs are already met. Thus advertising finds its true expression as a great, kindly, vital human service. The omission of advertising from the Monitor, therefore, not only would have left it incomplete, to mortal sense, as a newspaper, but would have meant neglect of an opportunity to work out in the field of business a demonstration of truth and love which should bless all mankind.

The Monitor introduces the healing influence of truth into advertising. To gain admittance to its columns announcements not only must be truthful, but must tell the truth conservatively. Articles or businesses advertised must be worthy of support. Exaggerations of value, false or misleading statements, are searchingly excluded. Nothing that seeks to exploit the public or to take advantage of credulity or to impose upon confidence is accepted. The right is reserved to reject any advertisement or to alter its wording. Advertiser, reader, and the publication are thus protected from misrepresentations.

The practice of adhering to Truth and Principle in Monitor advertising is bringing healing. By demonstrating to advertisers and publishers everywhere that such advertising pays best, it is breaking down the influence of their former lack of faith in themselves and in their public, and is freeing them from fear. The reform in advertising ideals and methods now proceeding throughout the business world, under the slogan "Truth in Advertising," is to be definitely traced to the influence and inspiration of the example set by The Christian Science Monitor. Thus all mankind is being blessed.

Every Christian Scientist may have a conscious part in this healing of the nations. True advertising, as an activity of divine Mind, leading mankind to the needed supply, is made complete only by the reflection in human consciousness of this divine activity. Support of Monitor advertising, therefore, is not to be regarded as a duty owed to it as a Christian Science publication, or as a means for satisfying individual needs, but should be understood and utilized as another opportunity afforded by Christian Science to aid in the universal demonstration of the truth which shall bless all mankind.

Ever-presence

GLADYS MAY CARNEY

I NEED Love's healing cup, earth's thirst to quell;
Truth's strong, sure staff upon my upward way;
To hear Thy voice, with cheering tones to tell
There is no night in God's eternal day.

I need Love's arm about me, midst the press;
O'er all Thy smile to banish every care;
To clasp Thy hand, in close pressed tenderness—
For God is Love—and God is everywhere.

I need Thy touch, telling that Thou art near;
Thy presence, when the shadows heavy fall;
And most of all, when gone are those held dear,
None else but Thee—for Thou art All-in-all!

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in Kingston (Jamaica) Chronicle]

It was a wise Englishman of broad sympathies who said, "No one must judge any religion by the picture drawn of it by an antagonist." The wisdom of this saying was instanced in Kingston last month by what a medical opponent said about Christian Science, as reported in the Chronicle. The propriety of an attack on a religion which heals the sick, made by a district medical officer introduced by a bishop, may be the subject of different opinions; but it can be safely said that such an undertaking calls for more authentic information and more fairness than was displayed on the occasion in question.

Christian Science has become the religion of a steadily increasing body of earnest and intelligent people to be found wherever the English language is spoken and to some extent in other countries. They have adopted it as the true interpretation of the words and works of Christ Jesus. It has been proved to them by convincing observation and experience. It has stood the Master's test of all religions, "Ye shall know them by their fruits."

Christian Science not only has conferred inestimable benefits on its adherents, but has exerted a wholesome influence on the entire mass of human thought. That it has wrought beneficial changes in the theory and practice of medicine has been admitted by more than one representative of the medical profession. That it has wrought profound changes in the religious thought of mankind has been admitted scantily by members of the clerical profession; but this fact can be clearly proved by comparing the teachings of Christian Science with the trend and change of religious thought since 1875, when the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, was first published.

What Jesus taught is permanent,—"Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Indeed, when his words are understood the material sense of heaven and earth disappear, and, as John plainly said, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ." But no creed, doctrine, or dogma that does not rest spiritually, evidently, and practically on his teaching, including his example, can endure. Hence Christian Science, the restoration of original Christianity, is gaining recognition in spite of opposition.

[George C. Palmer in The Phoenix, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada]

I am sure there is no lack of desire to be fair, but our critic's attitude is that of Moses, who would deliver the Israelites by slaying the Egyptians, thereby landing himself in a desert for forty years until he could learn to do God's work in God's way. To "encourage family prayer" as one of his "remedies" to combat another body of Christians who are at least as earnest as our critic, we frankly admit is not the purpose of prayer as understood in Christian Science.

The critic's statement that "in Christian Science God is not a person," convinces us that more than a hasty glance at the subject is advisable, for his conclusion is diametrically opposed to fact. In Mrs. Eddy's Message to The Mother Church for 1901 we read, "He [God] is the infinite Person;" and again, "We believe in God as the infinite Person; but lose all conceivable idea of Him as a finite Person with an infinite Mind" (pp. 4, 6). Christian Science denies the idea of anthropomorphism, or a limited, finite God possessing the characteristics of mortal man. On page 116 of Science and

Health Mrs. Eddy says, "If the term personality, as applied to God, means infinite personality, then God is infinite Person,—in the sense of infinite personality, but not in the lower sense."

The statement that Christian Scientists regard God as "a principle" is as misleading as is the first statement. The Standard dictionary gives the following definition of the word principle: "A source or cause from which a thing proceeds; a power that acts continuously or uniformly; a permanent or fundamental cause that naturally or necessarily produces certain results . . . a moving cause, force, or power by which being manifests itself." Our critic's use of the indefinite article before the word principle spoils his whole conception of the subject, for according to Christian Science "God is One,—not one of a series, but one alone and without an equal;" and again, "He [God] is divine Principle" (Science and Health, pp. 117, 331).

For the sake of our city with its thousands who will not go near any church, may I suggest that even if we are at the moment unable to agree altogether on the Scriptures, we at least may say with Abraham: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren." This perhaps more nearly approaches God's method of eradicating the false, for God is Love.

[W. Stuart Booth in Larimer County Democrat, Ft. Collins, Col.]

When one attempts to explain any teaching it is always well to make sure that the correct understanding has first been gained; otherwise one is quite liable to be misled into making erroneous statements, as was done in two articles dealing with Christian Science which appeared in a recent issue of the Democrat.

That Christ Jesus was a scientific Christian cannot be denied, for by being a perfect Christian he was absolutely scientific, because he possessed and acted in accord with the exact knowledge of God and His immutable laws of perfection and harmony. This resulted in the destruction by him of imperfection, disease, sin, discords of every sort, and even of death, designated by Paul as the "last enemy" to be destroyed. A most explicit definition of a Christian and of Christianly scientific practice was given by Jesus when he said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." No less plain is his promise, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." It is interesting here to note that Webster's dictionary, in defining Christian Science, states that it teaches "that sin, sickness, and death will be destroyed by a full understanding of the divine Principle of Jesus' teaching and healing." From this it will be seen that it is not a mere "belief in Christianity that produces scientific results," but rather the scientific or exact knowledge of God, infinite Truth, which is gained only as Paul's injunction to "let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus," is obeyed.

Surely this is not "oriental occultism," the power of mind over matter, nor the action of the human will, all of which are foreign to Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy in writing of these notions, which are sometimes confused with Christian Science by the uninformed, says on page 185 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that "such theories have no relationship to Christian Science, which rests on the conception of God as the only Life, substance, and intelligence, and excludes the human mind as a spiritual factor in the healing work."

This confusion of Christian Science healing with hypnotism and will-power is evidently what led to the misstatement that Christian Science should be labeled "mental chloroform." The refutation of this depends not upon mere verbal denial, but upon the personal experiences of great numbers of respected citizens who have been healed of diseases of every name and nature by the knowledge of the truth as taught by Christian Science, which knowledge has also, and primarily, served to awaken them spiritually.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Streatham (England) News]

Our critic is reported to have dealt with "the failure of Christian Science to accord deity to Christ as a person of the Godhead, only regarding him as a divine teacher." The teaching of Christian Science with regard to the Trinity is perfectly straightforward. It solves all the mystery and leaves the student with a clear, concise, and reasonable exposition of one of the most difficult problems ever put forward by scholastic theology. The report proceeds as follows: "Having strongly condemned the fantastic theory of non-materiality, he [the critic] concluded by quoting the usual verse from I Timothy, "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called."

One wonders if this critic has ever read any of the definitions which some of our greatest natural scientists have given of matter. Huxley said, "If the hypothetical substance of mind is possessed of energy, I, for my part, am unable to see how it is to be discriminated from the hypothetical substance of matter." If our critic will carefully read the sixth chapter of I Timothy, he will see that St. Paul was exhorting Timothy to adhere to the science or knowledge taught by Christ Jesus, which was Christian Science, and that any other science was falsely so called.

[Lloyd B. Coate in Newark (Ohio) American Tribune]

If the sermon is correctly reported in the Tribune, the evangelist insinuates that Christian Scientists build upon Mrs. Eddy instead of Christ Jesus. Nothing could be farther from the truth. If he had been familiar with her writings he would never have made such a remark, for he would have known that Mrs. Eddy's teachings increase one's faith in the true and living God, and teach that mankind can only be saved "through Christ, through Truth, Life, and Love as demonstrated by the Galilean Prophet in healing the sick and overcoming sin and death" (Science and Health, p. 497).

Christian Science is awakening a greater interest in and love for the Bible; it is reforming the drunkard; it is reclaiming the infidel; it is bringing surcease from sorrow. Not only is Christian Science reforming the sinner, but hundreds of thousands bear testimony that it has healed them of disease after material remedies had failed to do so, and these include ministers, physicians, judges, attorneys, bankers, business men, and many in the common walk of life.

[S. T. Downs in Goshen (Ind.) News-Times]

Our critic's apparent disagreement with Mrs. Eddy's statements to the effect that the great Master and his immediate followers practised Christian Science, and his statement that "her theories were far fetched and did not at all interpret what was said in the Bible," could be nothing more than mere opinion. Christian Scientists accord to him the full right to his own opinion, of course, but they understand that it is not justified by facts.

Since Christian Science is based directly on the teachings of Christ Jesus as recorded in the Bible, it naturally follows that Christian Science is not new, and that it has full Scriptural authority. Jesus gave to the world the unqualified test by which a true follower can be determined, when he said, "By their fruits ye shall know them." According to the last chapter of Mark, the Master commanded his followers to preach the gospel, and stated clearly that the healing of the sick should be one of the signs following the preaching of the true gospel.

Christian Science calls the attention of all fair-minded people to the fact that it has healed all manner of disease, it has relieved all manner of suffering, and it is making the world better; while its critics, who go to such lengths in an attempt to detract from it, do not even try to perform the works that the great Master said should "follow them that believe." The logical conclusion, according to the test given by Jesus, is that Christian Science teaching and practice must be the same as that of our great Wayshower.

[W. D. Kilpatrick in Sault Ste. Marie (Mich.) News]

First and last Christian Science is strictly Scriptural; it is founded on the Bible from cover to cover, and its purpose, like that of the Bible, is to educate mankind into the fuller understanding of God and His creation, that the commands of the Master may be emulated today as they were for some centuries after the time of Jesus. The healing of the sick, the casting out of sin, and the overcoming of all human inharmonies, such as unhappiness, poverty, sorrow, and the like, were the fruits of spiritual understanding evidenced by the demonstrations of the early Christians; and these same proofs of spiritual understanding would have remained for all time had it not been for the demoralizing influence of sin, materiality, and creedal teachings which gradually crept into the church and usurped the place of spiritual understanding and demonstration.

Christian Science is the restoration of the pure teachings of the Bible and of the Master, whereby the works of Jesus are today being repeated to the comfort and happiness of a mighty throng of devout worshipers of the Christ. It not only relies implicitly on the Bible for its authority, but it goes farther and declares that we should not only believe the Bible, but also prove it to be true by doing the works which we are told many times therein would bear evidence of our understanding of its spiritual import and purpose. There is nothing in the teachings of Jesus, or of the entire Bible for that matter, which makes it obligatory for the followers of Christ to preach the gospel and not heal the sick and the sinning. The command to heal the sick as Jesus did is just as imperative as the command to preach the gospel; and if one's lack of understanding precludes him from performing those works which Jesus did, that should in no wise give license for vituperative and unseemly antagonism toward those who have accepted the whole gospel of the Christ instead of merely a part of it—and the least part at that.

No teaching since the time of Jesus has honored and enthroned the almighty God as has Christian Science, which teaches that God is omnipotent and omnipresent, and that through a proper understanding of Him man is enabled to do the many works that Jesus said he should do. Perfect God, and perfect man as the child of God, is the foundation upon which Christian Science teachings are based; and with this basis of perfection always before them Christian Scientists are today repeating many of the works of the Master. There is no known disease which Christian Science has not successfully overcome and healed; and while spiritual understanding and individual purity are the goals toward which Christian Scientists are daily striving, yet they rejoice in an ever increasing army of healthy, happy, and hopeful folk in all parts of the world as evidence of the truth of Christian Science teachings.

Christian Science proclaims God as the only cause and creator, and teaches, as does the Bible, that all that God created is good, and that there is no cause or reality aside from God and His creation. Jesus taught and proved conclusively in his many wonderful works the utter unreality of matter and its so-called laws, and to those works Christian Science points in substantiation of the statement made by its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, on page 468 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science text-book, that "Spirit is the real and eternal; matter is the unreal and temporal." Jesus said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing;" and he proved that through an intelligent understanding of the allness of God and His creation the manifestations of sin, sickness, and all physical inharmony may be successfully, scientifically, and certainly overcome.

[From Cedar Rapids (Iowa) Republican]

In the California school nurse and doctor campaign a doctor has coined a phrase that will serve as a slogan in many similar campaigns. It is this: "It is the school that is public, not the child." Do you catch the meaning of that? its significance? The child is not the property of the public. It cannot be disposed of at will. It cannot be examined and treated without the consent of the parents or the guardians. In sending the child to school the parents or guardians have not surrendered any rights in that child. They have not given it entirely to the public for this or that faddist to do with as he pleases.

The doctor who coined that phrase is the president of the board of education at Long Beach, near Los Angeles. The campaign in which he made this statement is one in opposition to the legislation that is now pending at Sacramento, under which it is proposed to install public doctors and nurses in all the schools of the state. This legislation proposes "physical education for both sexes" and "daily inspection of all pupils." The children are to be at the mercy of the nurses and the doctors paid for by public moneys. If such employees, such nurses and doctors, were always efficient and even intelligent, it might not be so bad. But think of what kind of people would often be elected to office or selected under ordinary conditions. Are the parents to have no more rights over their own children? Are these rights to be surrendered to political office holders in the schools?

This doctor says that at Long Beach they had at one time a "high salaried school physician," and the attendance at the schools fell off rapidly, many parents, all parents of delicacy, refusing to submit their children to the attentions of a physician, except a physician of their own choosing. When the doctor was abolished, as he was, the school attendance immediately increased again. There are many things that may properly be done through the schools for the improvement of the health of the children. But these ultra modern ideas of doing with children what nurses and doctors may see fit, without the knowledge of the parents, is a preposterous and unwarranted invasion of the personal rights and liberties of the people. It is not every nurse or every doctor that people want fooling around their children. And as for these public lectures on health to mere children, it is easily seen that these may be overdone. It is better for children to hear less about sickness and disease and more about health and happiness.

Put Yourselves to the Proof

When nesting time is over and the young have grown, there comes for the parent birds the anxious time when they must induce the fledglings to make a test of their own ability to fly. Some of them destroy the comfortable shelter the babes have known so long, even "as an eagle stirreth up her nest" to force the eaglets to test the supporting power of the unseen air. In the nest the little creatures are helpless and limited, the mere recipients of bounty. When they learn to fly they become birds with individuality, and power, and self-control. Almost every one, at times when enlargement of life awaits him, feels a reluctance to launch out and enter upon what to him seem unknown seas. The patient is reluctant to give up the ministry of the practitioner, the pupil is fearful when he sees that he must himself practise according to the guidance given him by his teacher,—must think for himself, and not take the easy way of asking questions and expecting another to find an answer.

In the thirteenth chapter of II Corinthians the writer says: "Prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" The meaning of the word reprobate is clarified by Jeremiah's description of the wicked: "Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them." What is meant is, that they are dross, to be thrown away as useless. With such material, as the prophet says, "the founder melteth in vain." On the other hand, where there is pure metal, the work of the molder is successful. One thing Christian Science establishes, and that is the individuality of man. It makes him understand divine Principle, wherein and whereby man is complete. So we have in the right-thinking man rounded character, ordered conduct, and certain aim.

In heathen orgies individuality is completely lost; all the distinguishing characteristics of goodness are wiped away, and the urgings of morality are choked. The counterpart is seen in civilized countries when a crowd goes on a lynching. The hydra-headed mob is like a great beast. It has many moving parts, but it has one intent, one lust. Bestiality presides and morality subsides, and with Caliban-like mind the horrid organism proceeds to break the sixth commandment with fiendish delight in its utter godlessness. In some idolatrous procession where the people march to the place of sacrifice, actually propelled, as it were, by drumbeat and sistrum clash, can any man express conscience if he thinks the murderous rites to be wrong; or any woman of kind heart cry out against the cruelty? The idolatrous people are all drunk with the mesmerism, and know not how to protest. Likewise in some group of men in politics, the unjust scheme decided upon goes forward, and the timid conscience is overridden and the honest heart trampled upon. The fearful heart believes that to express righteousness is to invite ruin, and is timidly acquiescent.

Christian Science, by discovering his true individuality, redeems man, places him above fear, makes him of quick understanding, so that he is sensitive to righteousness. In the wrong condition of thought, whether it be a heathen idol or a human personality that is worshiped, initiative is destroyed, of course; but with Principle to guide, right intuition is restored to man and righteous demonstration shows forth in his life. Without Principle mere person is as helpless as the supposed atom in the organism; but the individual is not helpless, for he moves as a star in a galaxy. Yea, more, while the morning stars seem to sing the harmony of their motion, individuals as the sons and daughters of God shout for joy.

Come, then, ye people of the earth, frenzied by idolatrous rites, swayed by partisan desires, victimized by statecraft, carried down into blankness of life through fear, turned from manhood to bestiality through mesmerism,—and learn to be free by knowing God. Christian Science does restore the intuition. It enables us exactly to fulfill what John spoke about when he said, "We know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding [or intuition], that we may know him that is true, and we are in him that is true, even in his Son Jesus Christ. This is the true God and eternal life. Little children, keep yourselves from idols."

William P. McKenzie.

Concepts

In the prophecy of Isaiah we read this declaration: "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord." We thus have pointed out to us a great difference between what Mrs. Eddy calls "the human material concept," which she says is unreal, and "the divine concept or idea," which she says is spiritually real. To this she adds: "One is false, while the other is true. One is temporal, but the other is eternal" (Retrospection and Introspection, p. 68). Outside of Christian Science we fail to find this distinction made even by religious people. It is quite true that they make an entire separation between God and man, even between Christ Jesus and humanity; but the popular sense of man does not rise above the mortal material concept which has beginning and end and which is subject to sin, sickness, and death.

In turning again to the fifty-fifth chapter of Isaiah, already quoted, we find that when the divine idea is recognized and takes its place in human consciousness, it is expressed through the Word, which accomplishes the divine purpose and prospers in the doing of it. The result of this on the human plane is set forth as follows: "Ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands." It is therefore surely well worth our while to reach out for the divine idea in all our activities, that it may wholly govern our thoughts and enable us to hold a purely spiritual concept of God, man, and the universe.

The difference between an idea itself and the human concept of it, has always been recognized by the world's greatest thinkers, even although they have not presented their views in a spiritual and practical way as did Mrs. Eddy in all her writings; therefore their statements along this line were of no avail in restoring harmony where sickness and suffering seemed to prevail, or indeed in overcoming any of the discords of mortal experience. Professor Fiske wisely and wittily gave his views on this subject when he declared that spiritual ideas as humanly presented only expressed as much of truth as the individual had perceived. Thus he remarked that in Paul's writings we have a "Paulate of truth," and that the modern writer might give us a Brownate of truth or a Smithate of truth.

This putting of it may call forth a smile, but if we take a deeper view of the subject we shall find it expressed by our Leader on page 460 of Science and Health, where she says, "When the Science of Mind was a fresh revelation to the author, she had to impart, while teaching its grand facts, the hue of spiritual ideas from her own spiritual condition." This is further explained in these words of the Master: "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." We thus find the clear distinction between Principle and idea which Mrs. Eddy has maintained in all her writings, but this by no means separates man from God; rather does it lift humanity above all mortal concepts and show the way to the realization of dominion over everything which is unlike God. It also reveals the path of true progress, wherein we shall not need to retrace our steps.

On the human plane we may behold the glittering splendor of a mountain top, and we may quickly pass in thought the intervening hills and valleys and rest a while on the lofty elevation. Again, the human sense may gaze entranced upon a scene of nature's radiant beauty, but only a great artist can even measurably reproduce his concept of this on canvas and with long and painstaking effort. Similarly the human sense must put off its material beliefs and limitations in order to reflect the divine idea, which far transcends the human concept of it. We are however cheered in our efforts to do this, knowing that God knows all good to be possible, and we have Scriptural authority for it that He works in us "to will and to do of his good pleasure." John tells us that "whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world," and thus we have presented to us the victory of the spiritual idea over all things, which is, as Paul puts it, "Christ in you, the hope of glory."

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

Work and Play

THE common saying, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," may sound too frivolous to apply to spiritual problems, but the kernel contained in this saying is strictly metaphysical and Christian. Evil desires above all else to be taken seriously, but Christian Science has uncovered evil's essentially foolish nature by showing it to be error. It is not possible logically to continue to give evil the importance which it ascribes to itself, when it is understood to be a mere mistake, an illusion or delusion about the truth and not the truth itself. Hence it follows that as individuals approach nearer to God they labor less in the overcoming of error, and their work more nearly resembles play. This may astound the conventional religionist, but then the world can never be saved by listening to the opinions of that religionist. His stagnant falsities must be rejected and the living realities of the Christ, Truth, accepted.

If sin, sickness, and death are ever to be finally overcome, they must constantly become less serious to the human consciousness, until they seem so preposterous and unnatural that they no longer impose upon their would-be victims. When all evil is uncovered as a senseless imposition, spiritual progress will be more rapid. The long faces and sour speeches of false theology, its superstitions, its half lights and gloomy corners, are already condemned. Now comes the full radiance of spiritual freedom, which brushes away the cobwebs with the breeze of truth.

The seemingly tiring details of work may be made to serve us, when we have a joyous concept of the work itself. Turning work into play takes out the sting of seriousness and weariness. Singing at our work, we break up the material laws of work and gain the spiritual sense of resting in activity. It is possible even to take one's pleasures so seriously as to turn them into painful duties. Now the performing of duty for duty's sake is one of the most profitless and depressing of earthly occupations. It has no touch of heaven and cannot lead upward. At best it is a process of marking time until the light can penetrate, but many a valiant one snared in the net of mere duty has wasted his life in sadness, when a bold stroke of deliverance would have enabled him to perform the duty and treat it as play. Here the clock conspires with false conscientiousness, making human beings slaves of time instead of free men living in eternity. Millions of people begin and end their occupations solely as the clock dictates and become veritable timepieces. The drudgery and grind of the world are appalling, because they are wholly unnecessary when man is governed by Mind. While humanity, in subjection to the beliefs of mortal mind, labors to produce all it needs for food, clothing, and shelter, truth as revealed by Christian Science explains a state of harmony in which man and his activities are wholly mental.

The promise of unlabored living greets man as he rises Spiritward. Even the tilling of the soil is capable of becoming play when it is spiritually recognized that manual labor is only an expression of thought, and that right thinking will make it light where it was once heavy, and playful where it seemed toilsome. Mrs. Eddy on page 545 of Science and Health thus translates the tilling of the soil metaphysically: "The condemnation of mortals to till the ground means this, —that mortals should so improve material belief by thought tending spiritually upward as to destroy materiality;" and again, on page 537, she says, "Error tills its own barren soil and buries itself in the ground, since ground and dust stand for nothingness."

Certain it is that the child thought left to its natural spontaneity turns work into play, finds in the sunbeams delightful playfellows, and turns naturally to the lilies of the field and the birds of the air for companions. Of the latter we read that they neither toil nor spin, but that their heavenly Father takes care of them. The time is ripe for man to reach the heavenly estate wherein God is recognized as the working Principle and man plays at his work because God careth for him.

War Relief Fund

[Translated from the German]

"WITH a heart filled with gratitude I am sending you the receipt, and beg to express to you my sincere thanks for the trouble you have taken. The gift has indeed helped me out of the embarrassment, and the promise, 'Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee,' has again been fulfilled. Next to God, I am thankful to all the givers. I shall also endeavor to be a real Christian Scientist, for the more I read the more I feel that much is lacking as yet; but I hope that in this way I shall realize more and more clearly God's presence."

"Please receive my sincere thanks for your kind gift. Be assured that it was not given to an unworthy one. This dreadful war has brought me so much into arrears that I am very grateful to the Christian Science relief committee for this help in the hour of need, especially because of my children. Let me also thank you for the Christmas surprise which I received from Christian Science through a lady. May God's goodness reward you a thousand times."

"With a feeling of deep gratitude to God and to my fellow men, I take up the pen to express to the Christian Science relief committee the heartfelt thanks of our whole family for their help in these hard times. May God's blessing be upon all the donors."

"My sincerest thanks to the Christian Science relief committee for the sum which they kindly sent me. How much good it does one to receive, in this time of stress, such loving help. God always finds new ways and means to bless, through good people who gladly care for the poor and protect them in the hour of need. We cannot be too grateful to God for the blessings He bestows upon us. They are the greatest incentive to leading a life pleasing to Him."

"I beg to state that I was very pleased to receive, through the blessed work of The Mother Church in Boston, the sum of thirty francs. For this gift I am deeply grateful. It means a great relief to me in providing my family (I have five children) with food and clothing. Please be assured that all of this loving gift is being spent in the right way, and may God reward the donors."

"Just a short note to inform you that we have duly received the money and the groceries, and to express our deepest thanks for the gift. May God bless you. I want to tell you how glad I am for having been led to Christian Science, for I now have much more faith in God than before. I also greatly enjoy the Christian Science literature, and as soon as my husband has a position we shall subscribe ourselves. Again, our heartfelt thanks to all the givers."

"Words fail us to express the pleasure and gratitude which the sending of your gift has caused us. We constantly knew that 'man's extremity is God's opportunity,' a truth which has again been confirmed in our case. The children too thank the benefactors from the bottom of their hearts. Their joy was great at hearing that we shall again be able to buy bread. We all thank you sincerely for the gift received."

"It is with great pleasure and sincere thanks to God that I received your help. Many thanks to the esteemed committee. This has been to me a new proof that God supplies every need. Above all things, I am grateful for having found God and for having learned to pray aright and to thank Him for my health and peace of mind."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

PETALUMA, CAL.—The Christian Science Society is now the owner of the Show property on the corner of B and Sixth Streets. Yesterday [June 15] the society paid over the remainder of the fifty-five hundred dollars and secured the deed to the property. The old house, which was formerly the home of the Show family, is to be eventually torn down and the lot cleared for the new building which will be erected.

Petaluma Courier.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.—The McIntyre residence property at the southwest corner of Pine Avenue and Park Place changed hands yesterday afternoon [July 6] when a deed was filed conveying the property to First Church of Christ, Scientist. The consideration is understood to have been approximately ten thousand dollars. The lot is 66 by 132 feet. It is the purpose of the Christian Scientists to remove the present dwelling and build on the lot a modern church some time within the next year.—Niagara Falls Gazette.

BRACKNELL, ENGLAND.—In the early part of the year 1910 the Christian Science Society purchased a plot of ground with a frontage of 50 feet on the main London road, and a depth of 150 feet. On this land was erected a building which comprised a suitable hall for the Sunday services, a library, reading room, and readers' room, together with a cycle house and other outbuildings. The total cost of land and building was about one thousand pounds, and the whole was paid for and dedicated in December, 1910. Since that time the cause of Christian Science has continued to make progress in Bracknell, and as the present structure is no longer adequate to house the Sunday school, an adjoining plot of land of similar size has been bought. On this it has been decided to build a Sunday school, library, and reading rooms; and plans have been provisionally approved by the building committee and board, to be carried out at an approximate cost of twelve hundred pounds; but owing to the scarcity of labor and material the minister of munitions has forbidden the erection of the building until after the war.

TULSA, OKLA.—It is expected that ground will be broken this week [July 30] for the construction of an edifice for First Church of Christ, Scientist. The building, which will be erected at a cost of approximately sixty thousand dollars, will stand at the northwest corner of Eleventh Street and Boulder Avenue in the midst of a high-class residential section. Three years ago the church purchased a tapering piece of ground at this intersection, fronting 108 feet on Boulder Avenue and with a width of 48 feet at the rear. Last spring an additional purchase of 50 feet was made, giving the property a frontage of 158 feet on Boulder Avenue. Upon this ground a building 80 by 84 feet in foundation measure will be constructed. The auditorium will seat seven hundred persons.—The Tulsa Democrat.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Plans are being prepared for an edifice for Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist. The lot upon which it will be built fronts 190 feet on East 105th Street and 170 feet on the north side of Fairmount Avenue, N.E. The auditorium will be 68 by 130 feet and will seat twelve hundred persons.

The edifice of Second Church of Christ, Scientist, is being erected at the southeast corner of East 77th Street and Euclid Avenue.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

OTTAWA, ILL.—Sunday, July 8, members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, dedicated the chapel on Lafayette Street, which was erected in 1907, first meetings being held there on July 7 of that year. The building cost in the neighborhood of eight thousand dollars, while it occupies real estate valued at three thousand dollars.

The Lectures

HARRISBURG, PA. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Roy E. Bignall, who said in part:—

The coming of Jesus the Christ was in accord with the promise of the prophets; but creeds, ritualism, and a material sense of things blinded the people of that day to the majesty and might of divine Truth, as expressed through the Master, and it was almost lost to the world. However, those who did discern the teachings of Jesus, and prayerfully and faithfully followed his commands, were delivered from sin and sickness, and entered into an understanding of the truth which conferred happiness, holiness, and more abundant life.

LA GRANGE, ILL. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Robert C. Bryant, who said in part:—

One of the great differences between Christian Science and other forms of religious teaching is that whereas most other religions are largely concerned in teaching us how to get to heaven when we die, Christian Science is entirely concerned in teaching us how to get to heaven while we live. Heaven, as we understand it, is not a place but a condition. When we have wisdom, health, happiness, peace, joy, and dominion we have heaven, irrespective of place and time. This is what Christian Science is bringing into thousands upon thousands of human lives in all parts of the world today,—not all at once, as some people seem to suppose it should do, but little by little, as we study its teachings and learn to apply them. And surely this is what Christianity is intended to do, to destroy sin and evil and establish the kingdom of God, or good, on earth. This is what Christ Jesus announced as his mission, and this is what he taught and demonstrated during his life among men.

PORTLAND, ORE. (Second Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by John C. Stanton, who said in part:—

The great, the crying need of mankind, since time began, has been for regeneration. Throughout the Old Testament this prayer-cry is voiced over and over again. Jesus came to answer it and to show us the way. He said, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." For centuries materiality has stood in the way of clearly understanding and proving to be true this and other statements made by Jesus. In fact, these words of truth came almost to be regarded as impractical and impossible of application to present-day needs.

In an age of wonderful discovery and achievement the greatest single event, the one surpassing all others in importance to mankind, is the discovery of the absolute truth about God and man, the Science of Christianity, or Christian Science. It was given to Mary Baker Eddy to find the key with which to open the treasures of the Bible, and it now remains for each of us to unlock the Scriptures with this key, and to enter into the significance and understanding of Jesus' life-giving declarations.

DARLINGTON, ENGLAND (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Thomas Jennings, who said in part:—

As the name denotes, Christian Science is the exact, workable knowledge which was the basis of the life and works of Jesus the Christ. It is clear that Jesus healed sickness, sin, and death by knowing how, and he thereby brought to earth the most important manifestation of liberty ever vouchsafed to humanity. The struggle of mankind for liberty has been unceasing. The world is today engaged in a stern struggle for liberty, and in this fierce combat our nation has looked earnestly to the great nation in the West to join us in making the issue for liberty unmistakably sure, and we have not looked in vain.

Christian Science came from America. Discovered in 1866 by a gentle and unassuming woman, Mrs. Eddy, it has crossed the ocean to enable us to attain the priceless freedom from mankind's common and inveterate enemies,—sin, sickness, and death. To know Mrs. Eddy through her works is to love and revere her. She spent the most fruitful years of her life in earnest, well-directed, and self-sacrificing efforts to extend universally the beneficent knowledge of Christian Science.

LAKEWOOD, OHIO (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Fred C. Stevenson, who said in part:—

Christian Science is teaching us to think deeply of life and its problems, to think God's thoughts, good thoughts, for where good thoughts abound there God is, and no individual can escape the penalty due for wrong thinking. Only as we learn what it means to put off the "old man with his deeds" can we attain that Mind which was in Christ Jesus. Mrs. Eddy says on page 270 of Science and Health: "Mortals think wickedly; consequently they are wicked. They think sickly thoughts, and so become sick. If sin makes sinners, Truth and Love alone can unmake them."

RIVERTON, N. J. (First Church).—William R. Rathvon, lecturer; introduced by George A. Rhoades, who said in part:—

Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, did not create any new religion, nor did she establish any creed, but she did discover that the miracles performed by Jesus and his disciples were the result of the practical application of the truth, spiritual law, and of reliance upon the one infinite God, divine Spirit. Spirituality is not fanaticism; neither is it emotional, but it is perfectly consistent with sound reasoning.

ALAMOSA, COL. (Society).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Albert L. Moses, who said in part: —

I feel perfectly certain that as an outsider I voice the thought and express the sentiments of a very numerous class of persons who have been unable fully to accept this as their own personal religion, and demonstrate its truth in their daily lives, when I say that the evidence of Christian Science having been the means of bringing health and happiness to thousands upon thousands of people is so overwhelming as to be conclusive to the unprejudiced mind. I am equally sure that when I say that in my opinion this faith has had a generally uplifting tendency among all those who have really accepted it, and has made them not only healthier and happier but better men and better women, better and more prosperous citizens, I but give voice to an opinion shared by thousands who are not numbered among the ranks of the Christian Scientists.—Alamosa Courier.

Testimonies of Healing

It is over six years since I became interested in Christian Science, and I feel it a privilege as well as a duty to testify to the many benefits received through its ministry during that time. At my first turning to it I was suffering from general debility, but my condition quickly improved through the help of a Christian Science practitioner and I was soon in normal health again, and so continued for some years, during which time colds, influenza, and other discordant conditions were quickly overcome through the power of Truth. I was also healed of injuries received on the football field.

In August, 1915, I received a compound fracture of the thigh in the eastern theater of the European war. Two days elapsed before I reached a hospital, during which time septic poisoning was said to have set in and my case became very serious. The surgeon who examined me said the bone was crushed to pieces and suggested amputation; but I would not consent to this, as I had already written to a Christian Science practitioner in Dublin, Ireland, and knew that help would come before long. I was not disappointed, for I soon began to improve. The bone united, but the wound continued to discharge and I was detained in the hospital fifteen months, during which time I was operated on for the removal of splinters and foreign bodies which had been bound up in the wound.

It gives me pleasure to state here that nothing could have exceeded the care and kindness received at the hands of the surgical and nursing staffs during the long period spent in the hospital; but this human kindness and the methods employed were insufficient, for the wound remained unhealed, and in the end I asked to be discharged from the hospital rather than submit to any further surgical treatment. This was consented to, as all available beds were required. In less than two weeks after leaving, the wound was completely healed and has so remained. A surgeon who has since examined the leg says the result is most satisfactory.

During my stay in the hospital there were many visitors who came to speak a word of cheer to the wounded and otherwise contribute to their comfort. Many of these visitors, as well as others, assured me that I would always suffer pain in the injured part during frosty weather. I have, however, just emerged from the longest and severest winter known to the present generation without having a twinge of pain in it. I know that this result is due to Christian Science and feel deeply grateful for it.

JOHN GRANT, Ballygowan, County Down, Ireland.

I would like to add my testimony to the many already given, that it may help some seeker for Truth. I had been sick since childhood, and the law of heredity was held over me, as my parents were sickly. My mother had chronic stomach trouble and chronic inflammation of the joints, and my father had neuralgia, rheumatism, and heart disease, with which he passed on when I was eight years old. I was supposed to have inherited all these ailments, and besides all this I had St. Vitus' dance four times between the ages of nine and fourteen, and had only a year and a half of schooling on account of my delicate condition.

Following the birth of my first boy, attacks of internal inflammation caused the greatest suffering yet endured, and during the next two years they occurred every few months. One of the doctors said this trouble was originally caused by a fall when I was seven years old, and that the inflammation had become chronic and could never be healed. After being treated by many different doctors and specialists, I was told that conditions were very serious and I must undergo an operation. I got ready for it three or four times, but they were afraid to give me an anesthetic on account of my heart. For eleven years more life dragged on, and then a severe attack of pleurisy left me with a cough. Besides this stomach trouble set in, my foot swelled up and turned black from rheumatism, and I had one attack of neuralgia after another.

I knew nothing of Christian Science, but on my way to church one Sunday morning "the still small voice" whispered to me as I was passing a Christian Science church, and I went in. After the service I asked to have a book loaned me, and was given a copy of Science and Health. By the time I had finished the first chapter the cough was gone; when half way through the book I was free from stomach trouble, rheumatism, and neuralgia. There was a seeming return of these conditions, but they were permanently overcome in a few weeks through the help of a practitioner. I have studied the Lesson-Sermons faithfully during the past two years and a half, and every one of the ailments has disappeared. I am grateful for the physical healing, but words cannot express my gratitude for the spiritual uplift.

Those of us who have come into Christian Science through a gradual absorption and understanding of the truth, and not for physical healing, often overlook the importance of subsequent physical healings, until a crisis in our thought forces us to awaken to the truth. As a child I had been taught to rely implicitly on material remedies, and the family doctor was highly regarded in our home; yet as time went on the belief in doctors waned. God had always seemed very near to me, though I regarded Him as a personality; but my heart yearned after the truth, and gradually I evolved a philosophy which was a jumble of the false and the true.

Through the inspiring example of a Christian Scientist my husband became interested in Christian Science, and when we had read Science and Health we realized the spiritual truth it revealed. Yet I know now that at first this truth was only intellectually perceived, for there was no practical demonstration; in fact my outlook upon life was very worldly. There came times when it was necessary to rely on Christian Science treatment, and though I rose to the occasion I seemed to fall back when victory over the physical condition was gained. I realize now that I often inwardly discredited Christian Science with the cure, wondering if the ailment would not have "overcome itself."

Finally, with the birth of our third child I came, through the loving guidance of the practitioner, into a fuller knowledge of Christian Science. Then came the real test of my understanding, when, after the birth of my baby, which was a beautiful demonstration in itself, the persistent claim of bowel trouble had to be overcome. My mother had brought me up with the belief that this was a most serious ill, but Christian Science had taught me that all such ills are unreal. A mental struggle ensued, while like Jacob I wrestled in the night. I recalled many so-called physical laws, and even pictured myself spoken of as the "victim of Christian Science treatment." Then, in the darkest hour before the dawn, the full significance of certain beautiful passages in Science and Health was realized, and all that I knew of Science rose up to cope with the error. Mentally the false claim was faced as "a liar from the beginning" (Science and Health, p. 296), and it shrank away into its native nothingness.

Then followed the physical healing. Still I had to learn the ever present helpfulness of Christian Science through further demonstration before the victory was complete, for the trouble returned in a degree. How easy it is to forget that every act of impatience, every wrong thought, no matter how trifling, must be paid for to the "uttermost farthing." While we have good health, happy homes, financial sufficiency, we often forget that we must be deeply and humbly grateful for these things. I am sincerely grateful for every test that has come to me in Science, for each one has departed with a blessing, and my gratitude to God for Mrs. Eddy's teaching is unbounded.—Genevieve Olson, Coronado, Cal.

[Translated from the French]

It was at the end of July, 1916, when following a cold bath I was taken with a severe headache, chills, and great weakness. I tried my best to make use of my slight knowledge of Christian Science, but when my condition became worse I had to ask my aunt for help. I grew so weak that it was impossible for me to walk or even talk. High fever set in; I coughed and was unable to sleep. While I had no pain after my aunt started treating me, my physical appearance caused anxiety among those with whom I came in contact, hence I avoided seeing my friends.

Things seemed to be getting worse in this respect, so much so indeed that several members of the family became frightened and wished to call a physician. I had, however, great faith in the truth of Christian Science, and on the day when to material sense my condition seemed worst, God certainly proved to be nearest. Despite the consternation among my relatives when they saw me have two hemorrhages, and my poor mother believing that she must call upon a Scientist friend for help, I realized the fact that Principle is the same for all, and from that day on all disharmony yielded, and then vanished like a bad dream. My strength and appetite returned, the cough disappeared, and my friends who had believed me to be at the worst wondered at the quick recovery which, as we knew, was due to the prayerful efforts of my aunt, whom I helped to the best of my ability by reading Christian Science literature with her.

We are most deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who has left us this beautiful truth as a heritage. Verily the flesh is naught, and Spirit is all.

Louise Batt, Cloyes sur le Loir, France.

Some few years ago, desiring something higher and better than I had been experiencing in life, i.e., desiring God, and after searching I knew not for what, I picked up the volume "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I had read but a chapter or two when I knew I had found that for which I had been longing and looking.

I had read the book through, and had started to read it again, when my reading was interrupted by evil habits coming to the surface and seemingly compelling me to obey their dictates. For some time I drank, smoked, and chewed to excess, forgetting apparently that Christian Science was the truth and could heal me. Finally, however, awakening to the situation and realizing that if I did not wish to continue in this downward path to ruin I had better cease traveling the evil way, I went to a Christian Science practitioner for treatment. Immediately the desire for drinking and smoking left me, and the desire for chewing went shortly afterward. I have never since indulged these habits, nor have I had any desire so to do.

At the time I went to the Christian Science practitioner I was heavily in debt. My first thought was that the only way I could progress under this load was to take advantage of the bankruptcy act; but the thought of taking this measure was abhorrent to me, and the practitioner assured me that God could take care of my every need, if I would but trust Him. Divine Love did take care of me, so that my every need was met naturally and rationally, and a few years afterward I rejoiced in entire freedom from debt.

Since this experience I have had many proofs of God's goodness and power in the overcoming of disease and other inharmonies. I rejoice over the spiritual regeneration that I am experiencing, and know that through Christian Science I have found God. I love and revere Mrs. Eddy. I am more grateful for Christian Science than mere words are capable of expressing, but I hope by living and working aright to express in some measure the thankfulness that my heart feels.—Frederick A. Bangs, Chicago, Ill.

Four years ago Christian Science found me most miserable, physically and mentally. We had suffered severe financial loss in the summer, and in January a little boy was born, only to pass away in seven weeks. This, added to everything else, seemed more than I could bear, and I lost all desire to live. Having no hope in medicine, I turned to Christian Science. Before I had studied three weeks our little daughter became very ill. She lay in a stupor and had a high fever. My husband was bitterly opposed to Science, so he employed two of our best physicians, who said they had never seen anything like it and could not say what ailed her. Then man's extremity proved to be God's opportunity, for my husband told me to try a Christian Science practitioner, and in two treatments the child was entirely healed.

I have never used a drop of medicine since. A severe case of whooping-cough, in which the nose bled profusely and there was almost continual vomiting, was overcome in two weeks. We have learned that divine Love never fails, but meets every need. We have had many other beautiful healings, for all of which I am very grateful, but best of all I have come to love and understand the Bible, which had been a closed book to me. Although my husband seemed to be against me, from the first I was happy, feeling sure that some day he too would find this joy. I had only a few years to wait to realize my hope, and now we both turn to God for everything,—in our business, social, and home life,—and when we do our part we always find results.

I am indeed thankful to God for these many blessings, and for Mrs. Eddy, who has given us this wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

[Translated from the German]

I gratefully avail myself of the opportunity to tell of the relief experienced in a very peculiar case. In December, 1915, I had a tooth extracted while under the influence of gas. Upon coming out of the stupor I was taken with severe coughing for which there seemed to be no explanation. Thinking that it was caused by the gas I gave the matter no attention at first; but it grew worse with every day, and at times was accompanied by loss of blood; in fact I grew so miserable that it became impossible for me to do my housework, and I was prepared for the worst.

In my distress I resorted to Christian Science, and with the help of a practitioner gradually succeeded in overcoming the sense of fear and in gaining a measure of understanding of Mrs. Eddy's teaching. My patience was put to a hard test, and more than once I was tempted to take medical advice, but finally my steadfastness was richly rewarded. After suffering fully six months, I was seized one night with violent coughing; but I prayed fervently to God, with the strong conviction that from Him alone help could come, and behold, of a sudden out came the tooth which the dentist had inadvertently dropped down my throat six months previous. My joy was indescribable, and I gave solemn thanks for this evident proof of God's goodness and omnipotence. Within a short time I was fully restored, and have enjoyed the best of health since.

There have often been striking proofs of the blessed workings of Christian Science in my family, and I am most deeply grateful to God for them; also to Mrs. Eddy, through whom we have been shown this wondrous way of Truth.

With a grateful heart I would tell of the healing and regenerating power of infinite Mind as revealed in Christian Science. I was recently uplifted by the realization of the presence and activity of the spiritual idea, or Christ, and the realization stood out so plain and clear in consciousness that I never shall forget it. There was a sense of mental depression occasioned by the passing on of a loved one, and this seeming separation clouded my thought until the omnipresence of the loving Father was realized.

I have also been healed of a condition of impaired eyesight, so aggravated that I could not read the street car signs while standing on the sidewalk. Rheumatism was overcome in four treatments. Previously the attacks had lasted as many weeks under medical treatment before I had any relief. Ptomaine poisoning was healed instantaneously.

About two years ago a growth appeared on my face near the right temple. At first I thought it was a freckle and paid no attention to it. Then it commenced to enlarge and become inflamed, so that it was noticeable, and my friends constantly reminded me of it. I became very fearful, and the more fear I manifested the faster the growth developed. At this point I sought help from a practitioner, and in less than ten days not even a scar was visible. There have been other conditions in our home which have as readily yielded to the almighty force of Truth. These have taught me to remove the doubting "Why?" from my thinking and to realize the omnipotence of God as the first and only cause.

I am thankful to God for the regenerating, uplifting, and sustaining power of Truth, to Christ Jesus the Wayshower, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for making it possible for us to avail ourselves of this help.

HENRY SHANNON STRIGHT, Los Angeles, Cal.

Almost seven years ago Christian Science found us in the wilderness of sorrow and fear. One very dear to me was in great need of help from some source other than the various physicians and cures to which we had been hopelessly clinging for fifteen years. We were directed to a Christian Science practitioner, and the need was met with an instantaneous healing. The practitioner advised us to purchase "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, a book we had never before heard mentioned, and it has proved to be the best investment we ever made. Through an earnest study of this text-book I was first healed of fear, then of periodical headaches, biliousness, and intestinal indigestion.

While I had been a church member for twenty years, my faith was mere belief, and I found no consolation or spiritual enlightenment until I began to study the Bible in connection with Science and Health. I am most thankful to God for having led me to investigate this present-day Truth-cure. My heart is filled with gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the spiritual lessons taught in Christian Science, whereby my faith has changed from belief to spiritual understanding, my fear into confidence, and my sorrow into joy unspeakable. This truth is more to my husband and myself today than ever before, and is sustaining us in working out a problem that is most near our hearts,—the giving of our only son, who has just finished his preparation to enter the legal profession, into the hands of our Government to do his bit for his country.—MARY C. HOLDEN, Jackson, Miss.

My gratitude to God for blessings received through Christian Science prompts me to give testimony thereto, with the hope that I may thus help some other person. For more than ten years prior to January, 1910, I had been addicted to drink, and was ill mentally, physically, and morally. I took all known medical and sanitarium treatments for several years, but found no permanent cure. After it appeared that there was no hope for me, my attending physician advised me to try Christian Science, saying that some of his patients had been helped by it. I thought this advice absurd, but consented to give it a fair trial. I therefore visited a Christian Science practitioner, and since the first treatment I have had no desire whatever for strong drink.

This healing, which occurred seven years ago, was a blessing to me and gave joy to many others. At the time I was healed of alcoholism I was also cleansed and healed otherwise in mind and body, and I have been healthy, happy, and prosperous since that day. The knowledge of God and of Christ Jesus, when once understood through Christian Science, will lift one spiritually and protect him abundantly in all respects. I am thankful to God for Christian Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy.—J. B. HOLDEN.

I wish to express my deep gratitude for Christian Science and for the many blessings received therefrom. It came into my life when all material means had failed. I had been in very poor health for years, although I had tried many physicians; in fact I tried everything we heard of in the effort to regain my health, but all to no avail.

I turned to Christian Science as a last resort and my healing came very slowly; but by holding to the truth, with the help of loving practitioners, I have been healed of many diseases. I am particularly grateful for the healing of extreme nervousness, which seemed to me one of the worst troubles I had. Sleeplessness was also overcome, and inflammation of the eyes disappeared in a very short time.

I am grateful for the privilege of being in the Sunday school, as it has helped me to grow more in the understanding of Truth, and I have received many blessings in the work. All that I am I owe to Christian Science.

IDA BELLE ILIFF, Peoria, Ill.

Christian Science came to me at a time when material means had failed to cure me and when the doctor declared that I was beyond the help of medicine. He pronounced the trouble tubercular disease in a most severe form, and told my parents to let me have whatever I wished, as I could not live more than six months.

It was then that I began to study Christian Science. My healing was slow, for I was in bed four and a half years; but now that the battle has been fought and the victory won I can see the wisdom of sticking to the truth, instead of going back to material remedies as I was tempted to do many times. I am now entirely free from this trouble, and one leg, which was almost two inches shorter than the other owing to this disease, has been restored to its normal length through the activities of Truth. The hip was deformed, and the doctor had said that should I ever get up again I would be a cripple. This hip is nevertheless as normal as the other, and a diseased bone was removed from it without material means, working its way from the hip to the thigh. I have also been healed of dropsy, which is supposed to be a sure sign of the end in a case like mine, and of ingrowing toe-nails after they had been operated on twice unsuccessfully.

Christian Science is all in all to me, because it is practicable in every walk of life. To those whose healing seems slow I would say, Hold fast to the truth of being, no matter what the seeming, for "in due season," as the apostle says, "we shall reap, if we faint not."

CLARA ELIZABETH H. GREENWOOD, Accrington, England.

It is with a grateful heart that I add my testimony to the many which are given by those who have found this wonderful healing truth and have been helped by it. One evening several years ago I was taken suddenly and quite seriously ill. In the morning a physician was called and the case was diagnosed as appendicitis. He said I must be taken to the hospital at once for an operation. To make sure, however, another doctor was called, and he agreed to every statement the first physician had made.

At one o'clock that same afternoon I was taken to the hospital, and the following morning I was operated on for what I was afterward told was a very bad case of gangrenous appendicitis. For a few days I seemed to be getting along nicely, then complications set in and I became much worse. The conditions were very alarming and a third physician was called. All the doctors said they could do nothing more for me, and that I would not live till morning. I was perfectly conscious, and having a friend in the city who had spoken of Christian Science to me, I asked them to telephone to her and say that if Science could do anything for me to have it done that night. My friend immediately called a practitioner and treatment was begun. The most serious symptoms disappeared at once, and I realized at that moment the power and presence of God. For many days I remained very ill, but I suffered no pain at all except on being moved. My healing was slow, but I gained steadily until I became perfectly well.

Prior to this time I had worn glasses for more than twelve years; now they too are a thing of the past. I am also free from a bowel trouble of many years' standing. It is not alone in the physical healing that I rejoice, but in the spiritual regeneration,—that peace of mind which means so much to me. I want my daily life to attest my sincerity, also my thankfulness to God and gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy.—LAURA A. FOWLER THOMPSON, San Francisco, Cal.

I thank our heavenly Father for Christian Science and what it has done for me. For the past nine years this truth has been a balm for every ill. In gratitude for all the benefits received I am trying from day to day to live nearer God, and to practise right thinking, as Jesus did; it is indeed the way to health and holiness. Our blessed Master said, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." It is worth striving for, and it brings peace and joy.

My heart goes out to Mrs. Eddy, God's messenger, for bringing this blessed truth to a sin-sick world. I am over seventy years of age. I always read the Bible before coming into Christian Science, but did not understand it as I do now. I trust the time will come when all the dear ones will know the truth, for the truth will make them free. I am experiencing each day more proofs of God's loving-kindness.

From Our Exchanges

[Rev. George Jackson in The Methodist Recorder]

All real religions, a great writer has said, are at bottom an attempt to make the universe and its ways by some means intelligible to us; but the fear that sometimes haunts our minds is lest our religion should not prove equal to the strain which today is putting upon it. These things that are happening all about us—can faith interpret them? Can it rationalize them? Can it do anything with them? Or must it submit to be trampled to death under the iron hoof of the hard, brute facts of life? And that which tries us most is the seeming silence and passiveness of God. By day and by night we say, "O God, hear us." Yet still there is no voice, nor any answer, nor any that regardeth, unless indeed it be the taunt of some modern mocker—He is musing, or He is gone aside, or He is on a journey, or peradventure He sleepeth and must be awaked. . . .

One thing at least is clear: for so great a need we need a great gospel. The day has gone now for little, fiddling recipes. You cannot cure earthquakes with pills; you cannot put out Vesuvius with a garden hose, and a need like the need of today is not to be met by anything in the gospel that is secondary or inferential. If Christianity can do anything for us, if it can make room for us in our straits, it can do it only by virtue of that in it which is deepest and most central. We may go about saying to men and women, "Let not your heart be troubled;" but if we stop there, if we cannot go on and say with Jesus, and say it too with the kind of conviction that begets conviction, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me," we had better hold our peace; our rope is too short for the depth of man's need. And perhaps one of the good things amid the many evil things for which this war is responsible, is the way in which it is driving us all back to the things that matter most.

[Miss A. Maude Royden in The Christian Commonwealth]

You with your particular character and your gifts, and your surroundings, whatever they are, wherever you are working and living, there is the place which God has given you to turn into the kingdom of heaven; and if you cannot do it, how should the world do it? Shall we not try this great experiment, each of us with the world in our hands, each of us with our own character the key to our own problems, each of us with all God behind him, and all the power in the universe to help him? When we have each found the solution of our own problem, we shall have solved the problem of the world. Our magnificent and horrible modern civilization is after all only what has been made by human beings like ourselves. Do not let us be paralyzed by the enormous character of our problem. Let us not say (as we used to say before the war) "It is all so difficult, it is all so complicated," and then remain paralyzed by the difficulty and the complication.

[Rev. F. S. Guy Warman, D.D., in The Church Family Newspaper]

We need the courage of witness. We have been content to live in the light; we must learn to spread it. The church of Christ is in the public eye today, and the public is not hostile, it is only critical. Our common task is that of witness. Disunion must go, for where the witness is not agreed it carries no conviction. It is witness to a faith,—faith in the Father who loves and cares, in the Son who loves and died, in the Spirit who loves and empowers. With lip and life we must proclaim the old evangel. Men will measure the truth of our witness by our urgency in it.

Digitized by Google

[Rev. S. A. Alexander in The Guardian]

The development of the church is that real development of which it has been said, "It is not leaving things behind as on a road, but drawing life from them as from a root." Its progress is, or should be, that true progress which preserves all that is good in what is old, while it moves on to something more that is good in what is new. If men ask, as they do ask today, for more adaptability and elasticity in the church and its worship, for a more intelligent and sympathetic handling of the problems of the times, for more confidence in its own mission, and a deeper loyalty to what is really vital in its message, and a more fearless faith in going out to meet the "things which must be hereafter," they are asking for things which the church can easily give and ought to give.

St. John does not regard the church as a tender plant which the first breath of a new discovery can uproot or the first rumor of new knowledge can wither; it is the immortal tree of life, whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. He remembers who it was that said that the gates of hell should not prevail against it. He believes in it because he believes in Jesus Christ. It is immortal because he is the Son of God. It stands far above the shifting tides of change and circumstance because it shares the glorious vitality of one whose eyes were as a flame of fire, and on whose head were many crowns. The apostle teaches us the lesson of faith and hope and confidence and trust. We know that the church must change, as it has changed in the past, for it is human and imperfect.

[Peter Ainslee, D.D., LL.D., in The Constructive Quarterly]

To him [Christ Jesus] has been committed the conquest of this world until God shall become all in all. The material achievements of genius, which in this day appear to hold priority over spiritual matters, are absolutely secondary to the purposes of God's program in Christ.

From the fact of Christ his church was established on the day of Pentecost, and its purpose is to redeem mankind from sin and train the race into the holiness of God. It is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone," and it was he who affirmed that "the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." Its history marks the beginning of the ministry of the Holy Spirit on earth, just as the birth in the Bethlehem manger marked the beginning of the earthly life of our Lord.

Jesus promised that the Comforter, whom he called at one time "the Spirit of truth" and at another time "the Holy Spirit," would come and would remain with his disciples, convicting the world "of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment," and taking up his residence in the bodies of believers, he would sanctify them by his holy power, so that the apostle, writing to the Thessalonians, said, "Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

[Zion's Herald]

On one occasion our Lord asked concerning a coin brought to him for inspection, "Whose is this image and superscription?" They said unto him, "Cæsar's." In effect the same sort of question may be asked of any man. What is the image impressed upon his heart; what superscription, for good or evil, does his surface life carry? On the humble soul Jesus Christ stamps his blessed spiritual image, thus making it his own. But that it is Christ's own must be made manifest to the world by some sort of confession which amounts to an expression of the inward grace in outgoing efficacy.
