"What I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XX DECEMBER 8, 1917 NUMBER 15

A Sure Foundation

JOHN B. WILLIS

How frequently the spirit of restful confidence finds expression in the psalmist's references to God as a "rock," as the immovable basis of faith, assurance, and joy! In all the exigencies of temptation and distress this fact is ever recognized as the one sure thing, the eternal refuge. Thus we find him saying: "My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. He only is my rock and my salvation." This also recalls the Master's words to Peter respecting that apostle's recognition of the Christ,—"Upon this rock I will build my church."

This Scripture concept of the basis of faith was recalled recently by one while standing in the presence of the famous Woolworth Building in New York. The vastness of its towering sweep at once prompted wonderment how any foundation could have been devised which would prove equal to the support of such an enormous structure. Then he was told how a great gulf had been excavated in the earth, until the mighty ledge upon whose shoulders even the Himalayas would prove but a feather's weight, was uncovered, and that upon this there was built a great steel and concrete substructure, which is unburdened even by so enormous a load, because the planet itself is supporting it.

That the architect was wise in thus looking to the beginnings of such an undertaking, goes without saying, and this common sense procedure is particularly wise with respect to the building of Christian faith. By way of its emphasis Jesus told the familiar story of the man who, digging deep, laid the foundation for his house upon a rock, and no teaching of Christian Science is more sane and significant than its insistence upon this course. Mrs. Eddy's supreme appeal to mankind might be said to be of the nature of a searching inquiry respecting the fundamental truths of being, respecting the nature of God and His universe, and man. The faith which Christian Science erects in human consciousness proves stable and permanent, because it removes the ignorance and unverified tradition which material belief has left upon practically every stretch of "good solid sense;" and having thus reached the rock of demonstrable truth, it proceeds to raise thereon a reflex of that building of God which is "eternal in the heavens."

When one is brought face to face with the sense of a great world tragedy like that of to-day, when hope is well-nigh overwhelmed by the surging tides of conflicting religious belief, or when called to conquer an assertedly incurable disease,—then it is that men feel the imperative need of an immovable foundation for thought. They then with the psalmist exclaim, "My heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God;" and in such an hour happy indeed is the Christian Scientist who has proven for himself the presence and availability of that eternal truth the understanding of which crowned Christ Jesus "with the glory of a sublime success, an everlasting victory" (Science and Health, p. 45), even in the very midst of mortal conflict.

Before the paths of scientific thought have become so familiar to the Christian Scientist that his feet can follow them even in the dark, and in the situations which are occasionally precipitated when one meets with those to whom the teachings of the Bible make no appeal, we sometimes come upon yet other foundations for thought. For instance, the initial affirmation of Descartes' philosophy, "I think; therefore I am," will not be questioned by the average man or woman.

Now the greatness of human thought, the premises and logical processes by which men are able to determine the orbit of a hundred year period comet, or map out with startling exactness the location of the shadow of an eclipse which is to take place a half century hence; the wondrous constructive and prophetic flight of the imagination, which suggests the order of a truly creative activity and power,—all this marvelous mental achievement must be reckoned as an effect, and, by the universally honored law of sufficient reason, it demands an adequate explanation. There is no escape from this requirement; but when one posits an adequate explanation for these thought manifestations, he has come upon that which is unsearchable in wisdom and power. He has come upon the Christian's God, though he may call it the unknowable. When the confessedly atheistic physical scientist acknowledges the discovery of the absolutely inscrutable and the infinitely intelligent at every point in the universe,—and this despite his unbelief,—he certainly is not far removed, did he but know it, from the acceptance of the teachings of Christ Jesus, and the teaching of Christian Science that "all is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation" (Science and Health, p. 468).

Thus for all those who are sane and willing to think, who do not assume a trifling, make-believe attitude toward serious things, and who are amenable to a logically progressive search for a satisfying interpretation of mental experiences, —for all such an ascending way may be found out of the deepest bogs of unbelief, the darkest confusions of mental mesmerism. However he may think of "the ultimate," it is practically impossible for any man to make up his mind that the supreme nature-ruling intelligence is malevolent, and in so far as he refuses to do this he can be hospitable to the teaching of the Master that God, the foundation and explanation of all real being, is Love; and in his efforts to account for that hateful thing called evil he must look elsewhere than to the source of good. Though not thought of by the many, it is easily seen that there is and can be no darkness in light, no error in truth, and no evil in good, however much they seem to be blended in human experience, that is, according to material evidence.

The clear diagnosis of mental conditions, the right perception of the status in which one may find himself or another in a given moment of experience, and the tactful wisdom with which one so addresses and satisfies floundering human sense as to be able to get it out of the mud in which it has mired itself,—this determines the happy outcome of many a struggle, and establishes the victim of mental vagrancy or illogic upon that firm foundation from which his feet may not again be moved. It is thus that the demonstrated truth, in the consciousness of the good and wise, may become a rock of refuge in a storm-swept land; and thus to minister to the mentally distressed is one of the very great privileges of every true Christian Scientist.

Our Choice

LOUISA E. BELL

EACH must choose for himself whether he will serve Principle or person; no one can take this all-important step for another. One may unhesitatingly take the side of Principle; another, less confident but with equal desire to do right, may ask himself, Who am I, that I should be able to decide this great thing? But to remain stationary is impossible. Shall we go forward? Yes; and so the start is made.

For a time all goes well, and the worker in Christian Science makes some progress, as in faithfully helping others he comes to see the wonderful help he is getting himself. So far it has been easy to keep to the straight and narrow way. There has not been much to meet, and one is inclined to slacken his watch, when suddenly the path seems obstructed and doubts and fears seem to be turning him aside. Such an experience may cause us to wonder if the choice we made was right; or, if right, whether we have understanding enough to go forward. At this point thought turns to the children of Israel, and the beautiful description given by Mrs. Eddy on page 566 of Science and Health of their guidance through the Red Sea and the wilderness, and we see that only by pressing on, and following our Leader as she herself followed Christ, can we hope to reach the promised land.

The Israelites were tempted to complain bitterly of the hardships experienced on their way to deliverance, even to express the wish to return to Egyptian bondage; but in spite of their murmurings against him, Moses patiently and trustingly kept turning their thought away from personality and corporeal sense to reliance on God, bidding them, in the face of seemingly overwhelming danger, to "stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." With this and many other examples of steadfast resolve to encourage us, we can but choose to go forward. Then we realize with gratitude that the seeming obstruction, with its necessary overcoming, has strengthened and encouraged us for better work, as we have gained more faith in God's guidance and a greater sense of the divine ever presence and protection.

In every experience, no matter how dark the way may appear, an earnest search in the Bible, together with Science and Health and the Church Manual, will enlighten us and point the way; and willingness to follow where Truth leads brings us sure reward. As a member of a Christian Science church one will have frequent opportunities to make a right choice, for each must be a working member, feeling responsible for the conduct of the various church activities, and as coworkers sharing alike the successes and the mistakes, the correcting of which may necessitate some retracing of steps taken, to be followed by more consecrated work.

Much clearing away of the débris of mortal belief has to be done before there can be a fit site on which to build our church. Personality and love of popularity would form an unsafe foundation, for these engender party feeling and strife, and lend themselves to personal influence, so that the fact is lost sight of that Mrs. Eddy teaches her followers to impersonalize good as well as evil. These conditions seem ever ready to use any channels available, and if one is not awake to the subtlety of the error, to exalt him in his own and others' opinion till he is blinded in his judgment, hears and sees only from a personal standpoint, ignores all rules, and fails to recognize the deception to which he is being subjected.

It may be well to consider whether we are making real progress. If so, no words are needed to make it known. In the Church Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 6) Mrs. Eddy says of a member of The Mother Church, "By his works he shall be judged,—and justified or condemned." Let us beware of being set on a pedestal ourselves, or of setting others thereon, for from such a point one may sadly misjudge and even persecute others under the cloak of doing our cause a service. Should such a case present itself, here is another opportunity of making our choice as to the step to be taken. Can we, striving to be Christian Scientists, betray the truth? In Science and Health we read (p. 47), "The traitor's price was thirty pieces of silver and the smiles of the Pharisees." In Luke's gospel we find these words of Jesus: "Ye shall be betrayed both by parents, and brethren, and kinsfolks, and friends; and some of you shall they cause to be put to death. . . . But there shall not an hair of your head perish."

Every problem will be solved if our choice is made to follow the golden rule and our Leader's teachings. It is no mere human sense of love that can accomplish this great endeavor and gain the blessing which Mrs. Eddy so unselfishly earned for the benefit of all mankind. It is not the sacrifice of any good thing that will earn it; it is just the reflection of divine Love, and the mercy of which Jesus spoke when he said, "If ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless." Though we may reflect as yet only a fraction of this love, God's gift to His creation, let us take the tithe we do possess of love, compassion, justice, and gratitude into the storehouse, remembering the promise in Malachi: "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

The Image of God

DUNCAN SINCLAIR

MOST people are familiar with these words from the first chapter of Genesis: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." It is questionable, however, if very many have realized or perhaps even endeavored to grasp their meaning. God has been so undefined to them that they have rarely stopped to consider the nature of His image; the material sense of themselves and of things has bulked so large with them as to have obscured, temporarily at least, the import of the quotation. But there it stands, one of the most inspired utterances ever made to mankind, a bright star of truth shining resplendent over the darkened world of materialism.

Mrs. Eddy writes, "Infinite Mind is the creator, and creation is the infinite image or idea emanating from this Mind" (Science and Health, p. 256). Christian Science takes for granted the existence of God as infinite Mind; or, to put it differently, spiritual sense reveals the fact of God's existence as infinite Mind or Spirit. Now, since God is infinite, He is the only cause or creator; and not only so, but creation must be the complete expression of Himself. The view generally held by mankind is that God, whom they admit to be spiritual, created a universe of a material nature, that is, a universe with unspiritual qualities, nonintelligent, and controlled by so-called material or nonspiritual laws. It must be apparent that such a view separates God from His creation, because it cannot be held that infinite intelligence can cooperate with that which purports to be its opposite. This theory of creation Christian Science shows to be utterly wrong and to be based on entirely false beliefs about the nature of God. Christian Science says that in considering the question of creation, the nature of God should never be lost sight of, in order that correct conclusions may be reached.

In arriving at correct conclusions about creation much help is derived from the use of the symbol. The word image is frequently used in Christian Science to illustrate the true sense of creation. And what is an image in the ordinary use of the term? If an object is set before a plane mirror, an image is seen as if it were in the mirror. The image appears to reproduce the object exactly; and if the latter is moved, the image moves with it. In fact the image enables one to know what the object is like even when the object itself is invisible. But let the object be removed from before the mirror and the image vanishes. The image owes its presence entirely to that of the object. That is precisely how it is with God's creation. Creation is the image of God, infinite Mind. It is an exact reproduction of Mind and includes Mind's ideas. It shows forth all the qualities of Mind, the creative Principle.

The quotation given from Genesis implies that man is "the image of God;" hence man must be identical with creation. Thus the wonderful spiritual fact becomes known that the real man images, not in a limited degree but completely, the divine Mind. When this is discerned, the problem which stands to be solved by humanity becomes evident. It is to throw off the sense of limitation which material sense has imposed upon humanity, to overcome the belief that man is confined within a tabernacle of clay, the victim of material environment. Christian Science teaches how human beings must face the problem by affirming with persistency and with spiritual understanding the truth about spiritual man. They have to keep before them the truth conveyed in Mrs. Eddy's words: "Immortal man was and is God's image or idea, even the infinite expression of infinite Mind, and immortal man is coexistent and coeternal with that Mind" (Science and Health, p. 336). If men fail to understand what God is, and what man is as God's image, how can they hope to master the materialism which is the oppressor, how can they hope for the final overthrow of the false beliefs of evil and disease? Man, God's spiritual idea, is perfect, because he is the complete image of God.

Once when Jesus was speaking with the disciple band about the things of Spirit, Philip said unto him, "Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us." The Master's reply came unhesitatingly, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." By these words he carried his hearers away from the concept of a being like unto themselves, to the fact that human beings obtain a knowledge of God by the contemplation of God's image, spiritual man. Jesus the Christ had been with them for three years. They had watched him as he destroyed the false belief of sin and healed the erroneous belief of disease through his understanding of divine Principle. They had observed the marvelous consistency of his life, his deeds of kindness, his obedience, his love for the childlike thought, his sublime purity, his constant denunciation of evil in all its forms. They had been taught by him that Spirit is supreme and that matter is mortal illusion. What was it of which they were really conscious? The image of God. And in that image, so perfect, Christ Jesus told them they had seen the Father. So it will always be. God, the Father, who is imaged by man, will continue to be revealed to humanity through all the reflected attributes and qualities of His divine nature.

Christian Science reveals, then, that material man, so called, is not the image of God; that spiritual man alone is His perfect image. It shows that it is not God's image which suffers, sins, and dies, but the false sense of man, the material concept of man, the "inverted likeness." Nothing can be clearer than the way Mrs. Eddy puts it: "What, then, is the material personality which suffers, sins, and dies? It is not man, the image and likeness of God, but man's counterfeit, the inverted likeness, the unlikeness called sin, sickness, and death" (Science and Health, p. 285). The image of God, perfect spiritual man, can never be destroyed. Man is eternal because he is the perfect, spiritual creation of God.

"The disciple whom Jesus loved"

LUCIA C. COULSON

As students of Christian Science we may well desire to gain as clear an insight as is possible into the character of the man who from among all others gained for himself that wondrous title, "The disciple whom Jesus loved." Well may we ask what was the quality of thought which won for him the right to such a title, what the human character of the one to whom Jesus intrusted his dearest earthly charge—his mother.

In reading the gospels, and especially the gospel of John, with a view to solving this question, the writer was struck by two things: the humility and the simplicity which this apostle expresses. He never names himself in his own gospel, and in studying both it and his epistles we get a mental picture of gentleness, stillness, and an all-embracing love such as no other writings give us; yet there is no hint of weakness in this portrait. If we turn to the thunders of the Apocalypse, and to the drama of Calvary, when the only male disciple who followed in that hour of desertion was John, we shall see that it is the woman nature—the feminine qualities of Mind—whose foot is upon the serpent's head.

Startling too is the simplicity of John's utterance. From the metaphysical standpoint no other of the gospels approaches that of John, and yet, compared with the brilliant dialectics of Paul it reads, as do his epistles, almost like the speech of a little child, repeating again and again the simple, beautiful truths in simple, beautiful language. Tradition relates of this beloved disciple that when he was of a great age and came seldom among the people, on the few occasions when he spoke to them he repeated only these words: "Little children, love one another." Crowds thronged around him to see him and hear him preach, and some of them were offended at "the simplicity that is in Christ." The carnal mind wanted more sensation, the intellectual thought wanted a more intricate rehearsal of metaphysics; so, according to tradition, they asked him to say more, but he replied, "It is enough, it is what the Master taught: little children, love one another." And surely as they felt the influence of that love filled consciousness they must have departed warmed and filled and satisfied.

What then are the Johannine qualities of thought which Jesus loved, the qualities which gained the vision of the Apocalypse, and which, according to tradition, overcame death? Are they not the childlike qualities for which the world is hungering and thirsting to-day, and for want of which it lies now, in its hour of travail, torn and bleeding? Are they not love and humility—the charity which "suffereth long, and is kind," which is not quick to seek redress or to assert its rights, but will yield its opinions, though never its sense of Principle?

On page 567 of Science and Health our Leader puts it very clearly when she says, "The Gabriel of His presence has no contests." There are Michaels and there are Gabriels, and both are needed; but it is not Michael the fighter that prevails soonest. It is "the Gabriel of His presence" against whom, as our Leader continues, "the dragon warreth not long, for he is killed by the divine Principle." Mrs. Eddy also tells us, "The beast bowed before the Lamb: it was supposed to have fought the manhood of God, that Jesus represented; but it fell before the womanhood of God, that presented the highest ideal of Love" (Christian Healing, p. 10). In the light of the Scriptures we see that it was this divine womanhood which John reflected, which drew Jesus to him, even as he was drawn to Jesus in that close affection of which we gain a glimpse at the Last Supper, when we read that he leaned on Jesus' breast.

We, in this age, through our Leader's discovery of the truth of being in Christian Science, are privileged to discern and reflect the motherhood of God, and this it is which brings to our doors the fallen and the needy, the sad and the suffering, in whose presence the heavy burdens fall and the secret fears come out from under cover, and the sinner is not afraid to speak, for he knows that his nakedness will be "clothed upon." Oh, may each one who is called to the practice of Christian Science strive, and strive without ceasing, to understand this secret, that we may reflect in our ministry the qualities that Jesus loved!

Daniel and King Darius

HORACE C. JENKINS

DANIEL'S experiences in the den of lions have held the interest of mankind for centuries; but when understood in the light which Christian Science sheds upon them, they are seen to be surcharged with possibilities for present day achievement and demonstration. For instance, a recent study of the account brought to the writer's thought the attitude of King Darius. Caught in the trap of mortal mind's demand for a consistent adherence to its own statutes and decrees, the king "was sore displeased with himself, and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him." His regret over the mistake was evidently sincere, for we read that he "laboured till the going down of the sun to deliver him."

Like all the so-called laws of mortal mind, this decree became operative only when consented to by that which is acknowledged as having authority. Strangely enough, while the king had power "to establish a royal statute, and to make a firm decree," he might not annul it. His efforts to do so were met by the argument, based on firmly intrenched belief, that the law of the Medes and Persians "altereth not." The king consequently found himself in the pitiable condition of one who has become convinced that his illness is an incurable one. But then,—just as so often happens now,—when the extremity of human ingenuity had been reached, there dawned a faint gleam of hope in God. Immediately following the statement, "Then the king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions," we read, "Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee."

These words of Darius have the ring of sincerity and conviction, yet he was apparently so unused to placing his trust in God that he experienced little of the calmness and peace of mind which come to those who abide in spiritual consciousness. After a sleepless night of fasting he "arose very early in the morning, and went in haste unto the den of lions," to learn the news about Daniel. His wavering hope seems to have been inspired by Daniel's steadfast reliance upon God, for he asks, "O Daniel, servant of the living God, is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?" The king's joy on hearing Daniel's reply and his accompanying explanation of his deliverance was at once expressed in the complete destruction of Daniel's enemies, and in a decree written to "all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth," exhorting them to turn unreservedly to "the God of Daniel: for he is the living God."

Every Wednesday evening Christian Science churches are crowded by those who, as was King Darius, are eager to learn at first hand the results of the application of divine law to human affairs. Their questioning attitude almost frames itself in the king's words: "Is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the lions" of sickness, hatred, passion, and sin?

What if Daniel had not answered? What if we tremble before the lion of selfish depreciation of our own proofs, and do not answer? Daniel did not relate to the king the experiences of some one else, nor did he wait for another to tell of a demonstration that might be considered greater than his. It is the wonderful privilege of each one to-day to reassure his friends, as did Daniel: "My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions' mouths, that they have not hurt me: forasmuch as before him innocency was found in me." Surely no one boasts of complete immunity; yet the testimonies show clearly that the deliverance is in proportion to the rejection of mortal ways of thinking, though they be as old as the laws of the Medes and Persians, and the substitution therefor of scientifically Christian thinking,—the veritable demonstration of the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."

How beautifully simple and clear are the words of Mrs. Eddy on page 514 of Science and Health: "Understanding the control which Love held over all, Daniel felt safe in the lions' den;" and also on page 243: "The divine Love, which made harmless the poisonous viper, which delivered men from the boiling oil, from the fiery furnace, from the jaws of the lion, can heal the sick in every age and triumph over sin and death." Sometimes our experiences would seem to make us think that we are in the lions' den. But, thanks to the unselfish work and love of our Leader, we may all learn so to understand God's laws governing and guarding His perfect creation, that here and now we can open our eyes and behold his angel, who "hath shut the lions' mouths." Thus will our grateful testimony to the healing and reforming power of Christian Science reach an ever widening circle of our fellow men, and they in turn will carry the good news of "the living God" to "all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth."

"Thy kingdom come"

MARY LEONA RUSH

A CHRISTIAN SCIENCE practitioner was once working with a patient whose life for several years had been embittered by the seeming mistake of another. After striving for some time to eradicate the sense of bitterness and resentment, the practitioner looked the patient in the face and quietly asked, "Did these terrible things to which you refer ever happen in the kingdom of God, the realm of Love?" It was a master stroke of Truth, and resulted in almost instantaneous healing of the patient who had struggled for years over this problem. Nor was this all, for the new line of thought awakened proved to be the means of quickening her and cleansing her consciousness from mental sluggishness and apathy in many different ways.

How prone we are to hold on to a certain few of our past experiences, and how loath to acknowledge their unreality, even after this has been proven. If we think we are still suffering from their effects, then we need to go a little farther back and ask ourselves if the discords ever really existed in the kingdom of Love; and if they did not, have we any business, even for a moment, to cast a backward glance toward what in reality never existed? Emphatically no. That point being settled, we should turn our whole attention to the new future, as it is illumined for us by Christian Science.

Let us take the Father's hand and trustingly explore a little of this new-found place that looks so inviting to us. He has made us many promises about it, and as fast as we have taken Him at His word we have proven them to be true. Think what a privilege we have of living in this kingdom of Love, and we have divine authority to shut the door in the face of every would-be intruder. Through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy we learn how to detect quickly the impostors of wrong thought, and in following our Leader's counsel, "Beloved Christian Scientists, keep your minds so filled with Truth and Love, that sin, disease, and death cannot enter them" (Miscellany, p. 210), we establish ourselves in our rightful place in this new kingdom. We also fall into line with St. Paul's counsel to forget "those things which are behind."

And what of those who realize that they are already dwelling there? We used to be told that we must pass through the portal called death before we could hope to enter into the glory prepared for us; but Christian Scientists know better, for large numbers of them, all over the world, have already found and entered into this dear kingdom of Love, and are dwelling there in such happiness and contentment that the world looks on amazed. It does not understand it, but it feels the warm touch of the compassionate Christ-love which is being reflected daily and hourly by loyal Christian Scientists. On page 312 of "Miscellaneous Writings" our Leader says, "Oh, may the love that is talked, be felt." Let us watch that we do not wrap ourselves about in self-righteousness and delude ourselves into thinking we are very scientific, when perhaps there are those all around us who are starving for love. Should we not give it to them in a way they can understand, meanwhile knowing in our own hearts that it is the pure, unselfed Christ-love which we are bringing into their lives? Thus both we and they will come to know what it means to be dwellers in this kingdom of Love.

How may we most successfully help others to gain this great blessing which means so much to us? It is all so simple and so easy, for it is God "that giveth the increase," and when this is once an established fact in our consciousness then let us proceed to practice faithfully the golden rule and do unto others as we would have them do unto us. The one great need of the world to-day is love, and that need never was so great as at the present time. In view of this fact let us as loyal Christian Scientists consecrate ourselves anew to the service of the Master, and go to work in the vineyard of our Lord with renewed zeal, and so speed the day when all shall gather from the four corners of the earth to dwell together in righteousness and peace in God's kingdom, the kingdom of Love.

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in Pocatello (Idaho) Tribune]

My comment has been requested on a letter appearing in the Pocatello Tribune, in which a medical doctor made a verbal assault on Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. It merely rehashed certain perversions of half truths and certain entire falsehoods which have been put forward and refuted times without number. Not truthful when first offered for public acceptance, nor truthful in any of their various forms, such falsehoods and perversions of half truths have not become truthful by repetition, but they have become more and more discreditable to the persons who continue such wanton vilification. The same stuff, in the past as in the present instance, has been pressed upon the public, not by fair or disinterested persons, but by professional opponents whose bias was and is a sufficient reason why their accusations should be examined most cautiously.

The conclusive comment on the letter in question is that evil speaking against such a person as Mary Baker Eddy is annulled by the incontestable good she has done. Christ Jesus laid down the final rule for testing all prophets or teachers of religion in the words, "Ye shall know them by their fruits." Now everybody knows, and even the most callous opponents do not deny, that Christian Science has been and is a wonderful and effective influence for good in the lives of a great multitude of people. In view of this fact Mrs. Eddy made a pertinent and sufficient reply to her accusers when she said, "He who first brings to humanity some great good, must have gained its height beforehand, to be able to lift others toward it" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 338).

The writer of the letter in question was rash enough to make in your columns the public imputation that the adherents of Christian Science cannot produce sworn testimony that it has cured organic disease. A rasher challenge could hardly be imagined. The fact is that Christian Scientists have produced testimony of the kind described whenever an occasion for doing so has arisen. The last three of such occasions arose in 1916, and the evidence then adduced proved such healings beyond question.

In February, 1916, at Toronto, during a hearing before the Royal Medical Commission of Ontario, Christian Scientists filed some twenty-five statutory declarations made in accordance with the Canadian Evidence Act, which related the healing by Christian Science of organic diseases. The medical schools and societies of Ontario were represented by counsel at this hearing, and the testimonies were announced and filed subject to examination and investigation. The same commission held later two sessions at which the same interests were represented by counsel, but no question was raised as to the testimonies of Christian Science healing which had been introduced and were on file.

In October, 1916, before the Industrial Accident Commission of California, sworn testimony was given by several witnesses of the healing by Christian Science of a man named George Wright, who was injured by a collision of fire apparatus at Long Beach, California, on May 2, 1916. After this accident he was taken to a hospital and examined by three physicians. They found him paralyzed on one side, unconscious, and "becoming syncopic." His injuries included fracture of the skull, hemorrhage in the skull, fracture of the jaw, fracture of two or three ribs, one of which probably penetrated a lung, besides several severe wounds and contusions. The doctors also informed the commissioner of public safety of the city of Long Beach that the injured man had little or no chance for recovery. When his mother was informed of these injuries and of the medical opinion regarding them, she dismissed the doctors and employed only the services of nurses and Christian Science practitioners, with the result that the injured man was up and around after twenty-four hours. He remained in the hospital one week, and at the time of the hearing before the Industrial Accident Commission, less than six months later, he was spoken of as completely recovered.

In November, 1916, at Lawton, Oklahoma, during a trial in the district court of that state, several witnesses testified under oath to their healing by Christian Science of such diseases as commonly call for the services of physicians and frequently require the services of funeral directors. For instance, a witness named R. L. Roberts testified that he was healed by Christian Science of cancer of the stomach. He was treated by several physicians, and the last one, a specialist, advised him to return to his family and quit spending his money, because nothing could be done for him. It was at this extreme point that he turned to Christian Science and was healed within three months.

The statement that Christian Science is doing all it can to bring the medical profession into disrepute is nearer true than the other parts of the letter in question; yet it is a very incomplete and shortsighted statement. The fact is that Christian Science is simply pure and unadulterated Christianity; hence its basis and tendency are purely spiritual. For this reason it necessarily works against material belief, which is the present basis of medical practice. This is not to say, however, that Christian Science aims to bring disrepute upon the medical profession. Such is not the case, and the members of this profession who vilify Mrs. Eddy are doing much more than Christian Science to bring the medical profession into disrepute. The members of that honorable profession would do well to accept her proposal (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 81): "Let each society of practitioners, the matter-physicians and the metaphysicians, agree to disagree, and then patiently wait on God to decide, as surely He will, which is the true system of medicine."

[B. W. Oppenheim in Idaho Falls (Idaho) Post]

Christian Science must be accomplishing its healing mission in your community, else why should a medical doctor pay for three and a half columns in which to abuse it and vilify its Founder? It is related in Acts that one Demetrius, who manufactured silver shrines for Diana, calling his craftsmen together and pointing out that their occupation depended upon the worship of Diana, proceeded to abuse Paul and his followers. Is our medical friend, like Demetrius, fearful of his livelihood because Christian Scientists refuse to worship at the shrine of what he terms "the omnipresent germ?"

"No mystery to-day surrounds the life story of Mary Baker Eddy," writes Sibyl Wilbur, in prefacing her biography of Mrs. Eddy, a book which is accessible in any public library. The biographer continues: "Her birth, her ancestry for two hundred years, her education, her social development, and her individual service to the world have been scrutinized with the strong search-lights of both love and criticism. Every event of her long career has been established by unimpeachable records and testimony. It is no longer possible to invent fiction concerning the environment in which she was born and reared or the acts which made up her life." Every one of the doctor's calumnies on Mrs. Eddy's life and work is wholly untrue or distorted, and has long since been shown so to be.

Not for the purpose of enhancing her own fame, but solely to bring blessing to mankind, Mrs. Eddy established the Christian Science church with its many activities, and lived to see her work grow to world-wide proportions. No one can successfully deny that she and her followers have done an immense amount of good for mankind. Is it for this good work that her memory is thus subjected to abuse? Envy cannot discolor or calumny obliterate the luster of her character, nor can malice and selfishness belittle the greatness of her achievement. The church which she labored so unselfishly to establish is continuing to bring to all mankind the message of hope and peace which her spirituality reinterpreted for mankind. Such results could not flow from witchcraft and chicanery.

The doctor's injunction to his readers to beware and think twice before believing in Christian Science is unnecessary. No one is asked to believe it against his will. No one has embraced Christian Science unthinkingly. Its appeal is to those who do think. Its ranks are filled with those who have thought well and thoroughly, whose investigation has convinced them that its professional critics are not free from prejudice and self-interest, who have enlisted in its service only after becoming convinced that such criticism as the doctor levels at it is unfounded.

[Peter V. Ross in Berkeley (Cal.) Gazette]

There seems to be an almost irresistible tendency in some quarters to refer to Christian Science in such a way as to intimate that it is not truly scientific, and to try to confuse it with suggestion, hypnotism, and other questionable mental practices. Intimations of this sort occasionally come even from writers and speakers who apparently are disposed to be fair and impartial. It is therefore not surprising that the lecturer whose discourse on the relation of alcoholism to crime appeared in the Gazette, should, in digressing from his subject, have said: "I hope I am broad-minded enough to admit good in the upbuilding influence of so-called Christian Science, for I have in mind several royal fellows who have been led into correct ways of thinking through suggestion and mental science."

The human mind has ever been disinclined to concede that Christianity is scientific. Even when Jesus was performing the cures which have been the hope of humanity as well as the wonder of the world, the Pharisees declared, "He casteth out devils through the prince of the devils." Discerning the real significance of the Master's ministry, Mrs. Eddy has stated, and her statements are fast being accepted today as the truth, "Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe. He plunged beneath the material surface of things, and found the spiritual cause;" and again, "If Christianity is not scientific, and Science is not of God, then there is no invariable law, and truth becomes an accident" (Science and Health, pp. 313, 342).

Probably no one at this date would accuse Jesus of having invoked suggestion, hypnotism, legerdemain, or any other occult power. Rather it is becoming more and more apparent to thinking people that the Master, in healing the sick and setting at naught supposed material laws, was invoking and putting into practice an ever present, ever operative, and all-powerful spiritual law, which if not apparent to others of his time was fully understood and utilized by himself. More than this, it is now dawning upon human thought, through the study of Christian Science, that this law is available to all persons and at all times, in accordance with the Naza-rene's statements, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also;" and "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." It is the privilege of every one to accept and prove this, or to doubt and reject it; but neither rejection nor acceptance will alter the established fact that Christianity is scientific, and that Mrs. Eddy was perfectly accurate in the use of language when she styled her discovery Christian Science.

After all that has been said and written to show that Christian Science and suggestion are entirely unlike each other, and in the presence of the almost countless good works that have been wrought in the name of the former, it is remarkable that people can still be found ready to believe that the two are one and the same. Suggestion is closely related to hypnotism and mesmerism. It consists in bringing the power of one human mind to operate upon another. It is nothing more or less than the domination of one person's mentality by another person, who may be supposed to have a stronger mind or greater will power. No argument is necessary to convince any thoughtful person of the dangers attendant upon such practice, both to the individual who exerts this pernicious influence and to the one who submits to it.

Christian Science regards disease as a state or condition of consciousness, and it heals disease by effecting a change in consciousness, whereby the illusion of sickness, harbored by the human mind, passes away into its native nothingness. But the practitioner accomplishes the transformation, not by the power of his own mind or will, but through the action of the truth which he understands and applies to the false or mistaken belief of sickness. To use Mrs. Eddy's words (Christian Science Sentinel, Sept. 1, 1917): "It is the healer's understanding of the operation of the divine Principle, and his application thereof, which heals the sick, just as it is one's understanding of the principle of mathematics which enables him to demonstrate its rules."

[Rose A. Lilly in Muskegon (Mich.) Chronicle]

The attitude of Christian Science on the subject of prayer seems to have given excuse for considerable comment by our critic. The sentence in full on page 6 of Science and Health from which he quoted only a part, thereby grossly misrepresenting the sense intended to be conveyed, reads as follows: "To suppose that God forgives or punishes sin according as His mercy is sought or unsought, is to misunderstand Love and to make prayer the safety-valve for wrong-doing." In other words, as Mrs. Eddy says in a preceding paragraph on the same page, "Calling on Him [God] to forgive our work badly done or left undone, implies the vain supposition that we have nothing to do but to ask pardon, and that afterwards we shall be free to repeat the offence."

There are probably no religionists whose thoughts are given over to prayer so much as the Christian Scientists. The stress laid upon prayer in the teachings of Christian Science is shown by the fact that the entire first chapter in its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," is devoted to this subject. It should not be taken for granted that Christian Science prayer is any the less sincere or effectual simply because it differs from the generally accepted form of supplication. Quite to the contrary, in its point of difference probably lies its effectiveness in the scientific healing of the sick, which doubtless accounts for the attention and sometimes antagonism it attracts from other religionists whose prayers, though sincere, have failed to accomplish these results.

That Christian Science does heal the sick, our critic to the contrary notwithstanding, is testified to by hundreds and thousands of good people who have been raised from couches of pain and invalidism to lives of usefulness through its ministrations. The Congressional Record of January 5 and 6, 1915, contains accounts of fifty-seven cases of healing by Christian Science, supported by sworn testimony, covering thirty-six diseases, among which are tuberculosis, cancer, tumor, double curvature of the spine, locomotor ataxia, blindness, deafness, drink and drug habits, and so on. There is so much evidence on every hand of Christian Science healing that the gentleman's remarks on this subject are quite without excuse. Another point on which he should have informed himself before misinforming his hearers is the part taken by Christian Scientists in the war. It is a well-known fact that Christian Scientists have given most liberally for war relief work. It was reported in the Christian Science Sentinel of June 9, 1917, that up to May 31 the treasurer of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, had received $310,739.40 for war relief work, $264,474.74 of which had already been disbursed, and this work is going on unabated.

[Robert S. Ross in New York (N. Y.) Globe]

For the enlightenment of one whose letter entitled "Transcendental Thinking" appeared in a recent issue, permit me to state that Christianity as Jesus taught it and as Mrs. Eddy teaches it in Science and Health, is not a religion of nonresistance. The world believes that unless resistance is physical or humanly mental, it is not resistance at all. This is the doctrine of fighting fire with fire, referred to by Jesus as a "house divided against itself." Christian Science, on the other hand, declares that if the one and only cause or Principle of the universe, including man, is good, the only possible logical conclusion is that all the power there is proceeds from good, and that consequently evil appears to have power only because mankind have been educated to believe in and rely upon what is obviously a supposition. Jesus referred to evil as "a liar, and the father of it;" in other words, an illusion, a waking dream, from which the human mind needs to be aroused by the truth of being. In Romans Paul admonishes us not to be overcome by evil, but to overcome evil through the individual understanding of the allness of good. This is Christian Science.

"What of the night?"

LIEUT. COL. ROBERT E. KEY

THE sleeper wakes—
And though the night be long,
It is awakening makes
The morning song
So delicate and dear,
To human ear.

New courage take;
And out of earth and ease
Awake! awake!
To love and labor
With the angel throng
Who fly their banner
From the folds of dawn,
Proclaiming peace
And happiness new-born.
A glad, sweet prelude
Of the life to be;
Striking deep chords
Toward eternity.

Philosophy of Gratitude

IF men only knew the increasing blessings which gratitude brings, they would more earnestly cultivate it. Gratitude values blessings received, and induces more. In the parable of the pounds the other servants questioned the ethics of their lord in rewarding the servant who had so used his pound as to gain ten. He gave to this successful one the unused pound thrown back by the unprofitable servant. They seemed to think he ought not to have done this. "Lord, he hath ten pounds," they said. But the lord made answer, "Unto every one which hath shall be given." The same thought is enlarged in the eighth chapter of Luke: "Take heed therefore how ye hear: for whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have."

Here is the philosophy of gratitude. No man can receive more of real good unless he appreciates what he has; that is, he will not be receptive to increasing good without some opening of the door by gratitude. Selfishness is the shutting of the door to real good, and it closes the door so as to keep within all sorts of discontent and dissatisfaction. No friend can be friendly enough to satisfy the selfish heart of the ungrateful one whom he benefits, for though he receive the benefit he will discount every act of good will and put sour interpretation upon every genial motive until gratitude begins to operate. But when gratitude develops, little kindnesses become great blessings, and the geniality of another makes genial the accepting heart. Such a one reckons up his blessings daily, and thanks God for daily bread. When a gift is given to the thankful child, gratitude and happiness seem to combine as one, and the donor is blessed, not so much by verbal thanks as by being able to cause joy.

Appreciation, then, encourages benevolence; and as benevolence blesses the benevolent, so gratitude may be the encourager of good will among men. The Christian Scientists know more about gratitude than any people on earth, because their grateful feelings have arisen in response to God's goodness proved to them. If they are helped by a practitioner, they are grateful to him, of course, and they are deeply grateful to the Discoverer of Christian Science, whose teaching made possible the help given to them by their helper. And yet as both helper and teacher reveal God as Savior and healer, the continually arising gratitude is really an unceasing prayer of thankfulness to Principle. Then since every glad and grateful recognition of Principle constitutes a receiving, it becomes understood how "unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance."

When a man says, "I have nothing to be grateful for," he, if he maintain that belief, condemns himself to imprisonment in the belief. Like one incarcerated within cruel walls, who cannot enjoy the broad fields or the green wood, sunrise glory or evening glow, he is shut off from such joy as Paul expressed in ability to be "as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

It is interesting to note that gratitude brings purification. If the one-talent man could have been purified from his cynicism and discontent, he might have done well with the talent intrusted to him for use. He imagined evil in his heart about his lord, and so excused his effortless inertia. Cherishing a soured disposition, he justified it, and the good he had was of course hidden,—it was buried in the earth, but not as grain to grow up and increase; it was really dead to use and service, whereas love would have put it to use and rendered service with it, and the gratitude would have been a spring of love. Every one can begin to purify thought by gratitude; he can estimate his blessings and thank God, not forgetting his benefits, and so he shall receive more and more.

Waiting for the Waters to Subside

WHEN the world is covered by the fierce waves of error, humanity while it struggles waits for the waters to subside. At such times thought turns constantly to measures for the draining off of the inundating waters, in order that all life may not vanish from the face of the earth. Now we are told in Scripture that "a river went out of Eden to water the garden; and from thence it was parted, and became into four heads." Then why not let the waters of this river of Eden drive away the floods of error when they invade human consciousness, and let them water the soil of that consciousness with truth?

Mrs. Eddy in the Glossary of Science and Health has defined the meaning of the names of the four heads into which the great river was parted. The first one mentioned in the Bible is Pison, defined on page 593 of our textbook as "the love of the good and beautiful, and their immortality." Here is mentioned that trait of character which instinctively reaches out for truth, a fundamental quality which can be used as a channel for replenishing the earth as the waters of error subside. The great river of glory flowing through the consciousness of the spiritual man has on its surface and in its depth the love of the good and beautiful.

Another channel through which the sweet waters of salvation may be made to drive away the bitter floods of error is represented by the river Gihon, defined in the Glossary of Science and Health (p. 587) as "the rights of woman acknowledged morally, civilly, and socially." These rights are being crudely set forth by the advancing tide of woman suffrage beating back the mesmerism of strong drink and the exploitation of the weak through legislative methods. The higher hope, however, is found in the rights of Mrs. Eddy being established and maintained as the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science and as the Leader of the Christian Science movement. The rights of her copyright in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other works constitute a priceless inheritance whereby the whole world is blessed with the healing Christ, Truth. The third river channel, Hiddekel, is defined (p. 588) as "Divine Science understood and acknowledged." Only the spiritually minded who have ascended above the belief of sin or sickness, above the belief of mortal mind as having any reality or of matter as having any power, know the truth symbolized by Hiddekel. This understanding is the only gateway to heaven on earth.

The mental acknowledgment that God is an ever present living power flooding the universe with spiritual light, cleansing the blackness of night from off the waters of truth, is like the anchor of love, which holds by an unbreakable chain the rights of the righteous man. There is no dragging of this anchor over the muddy beds of mortal mind, for the real anchorage has the rock bed of spiritual understanding. The undercurrents are purity, the flood tide is spiritual peace. The incoming and outgoing tide is the perpetual flow of harmony, advancing into the heart of man, then receding only to flow freshly in again with greater power.

The sea of confusion with its arguments of fear advancing and receding is represented in the Apocalypse as having passed away. This type of sea gives indecision full sway and carries its victim on its bosom in despair, uncertainty, and darkness. But Christian Science is the beacon light sending out its protecting and healing rays, searching for the wanderer who seeks the truth and penetrating the darkness to save those who desire to be saved.

Then comes Euphrates as the fourth channel through which the waters of life may flow to supersede the floods of death: "Divine Science encompassing the universe and man," as defined in part on page 585 of the Glossary of Science and Health. The circle is complete, the truth has reached all parts of God's creation. The false sea has disappeared and man no longer waits for the waters of error to subside; for the real sea of harmony is that into which the net is cast and found to be filled with a multitude of fish, and which contains the fish in whose mouth is the piece of money which pays the tax,—the sea of spiritual substance. Then resounds the psalmist's joyous declaration: "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein. For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods."

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

"The home of Love"

No one would deny that the love of home is deeply implanted in human consciousness and that it persists in spite of many disappointments. We are all apt to think that a home means a house, when instead it really is a spiritual shelter to which the heart's deepest desire goes out. Alas, that we should so often miss the mental way to it, misled it may be in earth's darkness by the false lights which ever lead astray. This reminds us of our Leader's words in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 84), "The discipline of the flesh is designed to turn one, like a weary traveller, to the home of Love."

We may remember too that the patriarchs did not realize in outward form their concept of home, for they lived in tents and moved from place to place; but we read in the epistle to the Hebrews that Abraham "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God," and this is surely a hint of what we should do in looking for a home. The real home is in Mind, and while we are advancing toward its realization we cannot do better than cultivate the qualities which alone can make the quest worth while. If we happen to have places of abode and yet fail to realize in them our ideal of home, it is very evident that something unlike God must be cast out in order that what is needed to express the divine Mind may reign therein and that Love may be its light at all times. In his "Sesame and Lilies" Ruskin says: "This is the true nature of home—it is the place of Peace; the shelter, not only from all injury, but from all terror, doubt, and division. In so far as it is not this, it is not home . . . it is then only a part of that outer world which you have roofed over, and lighted fire in."

It is deeply touching to read that our Master had not where to lay his head; yet we find him, when on the cross, making provision for his mother so that she would not be a homeless wanderer, and we read that John, the beloved disciple, in obedience to Jesus' request, took Mary from that very hour to his own home. We find in this transaction a wonderful hint of true values, for there were doubtless those among the disciples who were possessed of greater riches than was this poor fisherman; but where could Mary have been cared for so tenderly as in the home of the disciple who is known throughout Christendom to-day as the one who above all others of the Master's followers understood and expressed the Love which is Life indeed.

We may well ponder our Leader's words: "Pure humanity, friendship, home, the interchange of love, bring to earth a foretaste of heaven. They unite terrestrial and celestial joys, and crown them with blessings infinite" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 100). Only in God, the ever present Mind, can we find the true home, and bring beauty and permanence to it through our understanding of the divine law and nature. It is well to remember the oft quoted axiom, "Order is Heaven's first law," for without orderliness we can have no real home. The spiritual must be first in all things. Its demands must never be lost sight of, and when the things of the world are brought into obedience to divine Principle harmony will be the necessary and invariable result. If "justice and judgment" are the habitation of God's throne, as we read in the Bible, they should rule in our homes, for otherwise these can have no stability and the false foundations of pride, selfishness, and dishonesty must go down before the demands of Truth.

In olden times the baronial castle was meant to be at once home, stronghold, and sanctuary; yet all these words really mean the same thing. The Christian Scientist's home should have walls strong enough to shut out fear, sickness, and sin, and like the walls of the heavenly city they should rest upon the foundations which are impregnable even in the midst of the awful cataclysms of mortal experience.

We need hardly remind ourselves that the light of the true home can come from no material source, but must be forever the light of Truth and Love, else all is darkness. Our Master said, speaking for the Christ-idea, "I am the light of the world," and the ever present Christ, brought so near to us in Christian Science, is surely the light of every home where the infinite power of Truth and Love is recognized and declared.

Current Notes

MT. CLEMENS, MICH.—During the year ending October 31 the Christian Science Society has placed racks for holding literature in the railroad station, ticket office, and in the jail. Twenty hotels were supplied with one month's free subscription to The Christian Science Monitor. The Moni- tor is also furnished the Y. M. C. A. of Camp Selfridge Aviation Field; also one copy of Science and Health. The following periodicals were distributed: 468 Sentinels, 112 Journals, 758 Monitors, 12 Herolds, 61 Quarterlies, 305 pamphlets, 3 Hymnals.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—When reports were received from Washington announcing the establishment of military camps, it became apparent that over thirty thousand men would be located around the bay and forty thousand more at Menlo Park. The Presidio was rapidly filling with regular troops, and arrangements were made for the housing and accommodation of sixteen thousand men there.

Fourth and Sixth Churches of Christ, Scientist, were directly responsible for the distribution of our literature in the Presidio and the military establishments around the bay. Neither church felt it could do this work alone. At as early a date as possible the presidents of the churches of San Francisco met in conference and looked over the ground. It was then decided to open a reading room for the Army and Navy. A store was chosen, a lease was signed, two temporary librarians were appointed, and although everything was not quite ready, the rooms were opened August 9. It was not expected by the workers that large numbers of men would flock in, but gradually the interested ones found the place, and up to date, October 1, more than three hundred men have come to the rooms. The very fact that the literature is sought, read, purchased, and carried away each day by growing numbers is sufficient proof of the value of the work in this district.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, Third Street and Ormsby Avenue, last year built the foundation of their church, but due to several causes the completion of the structure, which will cost two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, was postponed. However, the basement was partly completed and a small superstructure was erected in order that the building might serve its purpose temporarily. It has been used ever since then and is still in use as a place of worship.

Recently the architect was instructed to proceed with the work in a manner which would deprive the members of the church as little as possible of the use of the temporary structure for services, and as a result a plan was evolved by which the walls are being erected around the temporary structure, which is still being used as a house of worship. The building, it is expected, will be completed by the middle of next summer.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Lectures

CHICAGO, ILL. (Fifteenth Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Charles H. Hale, who said in part:—

We are to-day living in the most remarkable epoch of the world's history since the advent of Jesus the Christ. Never has there been a time when all the seeming powers of evil have made such a persistent and concerted effort to gain the ascendancy over good. Surrounded on every side by the evidences of hatred, lust for power, sin, sickness, and death, the Christian Scientist is grateful that he is found worthy to participate in the struggle to obtain man's freedom—freedom not only from the slavery of sin and unjust laws but also from the unjust bondage of sickness. On page 450 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we find these words: "The Christian Scientist has enlisted to lessen evil, disease, and death; and he will overcome them by understanding their nothingness and the allness of God, or good." This statement of our Leader clearly and pointedly sets forth the work of a Christian Scientist, and also the Principle which he applies to attain the goal for which he strives.

OMAHA, NEB. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Lester B. McCoun, who said in part:—

When Jesus said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away," he did not mean that his preaching and works would be remembered only, but he meant that the power of Spirit introduced to human consciousness by demonstration of the divine nature would abide and eventually unfold there as Truth, God. In this eternal, unchanging activity of Spirit he recognized the absolute law of God, and this is Christian Science. If we utilize this law to overcome sin, sickness, and death as Jesus did, we know what God is, for we see God manifested here and now to the same extent that we acknowledge and obey His law.

LONDON, ENG. (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Llewelyn Roberts, who said in part:—

The idea that Christian Science is a new religion is a misapprehension. In no sense is this correct. Christian Science is a rule of life which, if followed, brings to humanity that peace which the world cannot give. The world, caught in meshes of its own weaving, is faced with social and other problems which hitherto it has conspicuously failed to solve. It has failed partly because of its profound belief in limitation,—limitation which Christian Science shows to be wholly of human origin, never of divine. For centuries the world has endeavored and failed to heal disease by material means. It continues in its endeavors and failures because it ignores the teachings and works of Jesus of Nazareth, the practical meaning of which Mrs. Eddy has revealed to mankind.

MITCHELL, S. DAK. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. W. R. Ronald, who said in part:—

Everybody wants to be well; everybody wants to be free; everybody wants to be happy. The writers of the Declaration of Independence recognized this when they proclaimed the right of every individual to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. But it is one thing to proclaim a truth and quite another to demonstrate it; and so, even under a worthy government, men have still known weariness and failure and heartbreak, have languished upon beds of sickness, have uttered in agony of mind and body that world-old cry of despair, "Is there no balm in Gilead?"

Christian Scientists believe that they have found this balm; but they have not found it in matter. Christian Science teaches that the solution of every problem, the remedy for every disease, the solace for every sorrow, is to know God.—The Mitchell Republican.

LOS ANGELES, CAL. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Theodore A. Chelson, who said in part:—

On page 96 of Science and Health our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, has said: "This material world is even now becoming the arena for conflicting forces. On one side there will be discord and dismay; on the other side there will be Science and peace." The prophetic nature of this utterance is daily becoming more and more apparent, and our hearts should overflow with gratitude to the one who has made it possible for us to have Science and peace, so that we may endure to the end.

HANFORD, CAL. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by C. S. Older, who said in part:—

People are prone to regard Christian Science as a new doctrine or creed, some new teaching which has been evolved from other creeds of the modern age. However, when one begins the study of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, in connection with the study of the Bible, he is at once impressed with the fact that Christian Science is but a modern and practical interpretation of the teachings of Christ Jesus.—Hanford Sentinel.

EAST AURORA, N. Y. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Miss Alice Charlesworth, who said in part:—

Jesus said: "He that walketh in darkness knoweth not whither he goeth." "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." The heart's desire of humanity is to know Him "whom to know aright is Life eternal" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii), and to be delivered from the darkness of materiality,—sin, sickness, weakness, weariness, want, and woe. We learn in Christian Science that the satisfying of this desire is a present possibility here and now.

CHICAGO, ILL. (Fifth Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Oscar J. Duke, who said in part:—

Christian Science is essentially a religion of demonstration. On page 86 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy says: "There is but one way of doing good, and that is to do it! There is but one way of being good, and that is to be good!" Christian Science does not operate for you or me through mystery or miracle to gain for us an unmerited reward, but it does bless the prodigal the moment he turns from the husks of materiality and is willing to serve God. It teaches us how to do good and how to be good, not through blind faith or human will, but through a better understanding of what God is and of what man is as His image and likeness.

CLEVELAND, OHIO (Fifth Church).—Dr. Walter Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Harry E. Duer, who said in part:—

Christian Science promises much and it fulfills its promises. In place of sickness, disease, suffering, discord, sorrow, and fear, it offers health, joy, peace, comfort, courage, confidence. It takes away the unknown God who sends misery, pestilence, and death upon His disobedient and defenseless children and reveals a tender, loving Father-Mother God, who knows nothing of disaster or strife or war, who is always at hand and ever ready to protect and maintain in perfect harmony those who know Him.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Robert R. Pratt, who said in part:—

All through the Bible are promises,—wonderful promises of health, strength, happiness, peace. Christian Science is proving that we are able to bring these promises into our individual experience in proportion to our right understanding of God.

Testimonies of Healing

About three years ago our son, a boy of seventeen, made application for insurance, but to our surprise was refused. The doctor said the boy would never pass the examination, and that by the time he was twenty-five years of age he would be in a very bad condition. He stated that he was puzzled because of the lad's fine physical condition in every way but one. To satisfy the man who wrote the insurance he told us he would make another examination a week from that day. My son and I went home full of faith in the power of Truth to heal. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 476): "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick." We studied this all the week and went back at the appointed time. After the second examination the doctor was so surprised he did not know what to say, for he could find no trace of the disease. The boy had to go through two more examinations to satisfy the company, but after the third examination the doctor pronounced him in first-class condition.

I shall never forget the experience I had when we went for the second examination. My son had just gone into the office for the test, and I tried to lift my thought to God and know no fear. When the thought came to me that the boy was in the presence of the great Physician, that He alone was the judge, and that He knew only His perfect child, it all seemed so clear, so real to me, that I knew the healing was complete. I was indeed grateful for the experience, which had a wonderful effect on the boy. It seemed to change his whole nature, for he expressed so much more love and good will.

I have two daughters, and they too love Christian Science. I know the children can never get away from the influence of this teaching and the peace it gives. If they neglect to study often, they become hungry and go back to their books again. We have had convincing proofs of the healing power of Christian Science, many times instantaneous healings, and I am trying to send out only the thought that uplifts all mankind. It is with a grateful heart that I send this testimony.

JESSIE M. GILMORE, Chicago, Ill.

Here is the testimony of a few demonstrations which took place while I was at the front. When war broke out, I started on the second day of the mobilization to join up with the sixty-ninth light infantry regiment. I was full of trust, knowing that in the kingdom of God there was no war and that no evil could touch me. One day I was told off to patrol duty with three of my comrades. We were to reconnoiter a farm, and were going under cover of a corn field, when suddenly the enemy hidden in a ravine fired on us. We were a few meters from them, and my companions thought they were done for, but I remained calm, having the ninety-first psalm always present in my thought. We lay flat in the corn, and while the balls spattered all around us I declared the truth, and we came safely through this terrible experience.

During the retreat we were sent into the department of the Oise to stop the German advance on Paris. When at L——— we were ordered to hold on as long as possible; and we defended the position all day long under terrible artillery fire. When we had to retire, it was too late, for we were surrounded on all sides. We were much afraid that the whole regiment would be captured, but God was watching over us, and by what seemed a miracle we succeeded in getting out of the circle surrounding us. Then I heard several of my comrades say, "It is incredible; there must be some one or something protecting our regiment."

My best demonstration took place during the famous battle of the Marne. We were at a place on the road to M——— and were ordered to go toward another place, which was then occupied by the enemy. But we had to go a distance of four kilometers in open country, exposed to the fire of the enemy's great howitzers. We had to crawl all the way, on our stomachs. All of a sudden a shell fell and burst just where my squad was. Terrible cries were heard, and several of my comrades were wounded, while others were killed, and I was thrown to the other side of the road without a scratch, not knowing how it ever happened.

The next day we had to resist the enemy for twelve consecutive hours under the fire of artillery, for the order was that we should be killed rather than retreat; no shelter was available, and what a massacre it was! With this passage of the ninety-first psalm always before my thought: "There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling," I worked without ceasing. A piece of shell struck me near the heart, but when it struck it had lost all its force and had no power to hurt me.

Before closing, I will add a more recent experience which occurred at the time of the battle of the Somme. One of my comrades and I went to visit the cemetery of the little village where we were staying, to see if among the unfortunate soldiers lying there, there was not one whom we knew. After a few moments I said to my friend: "This is not very cheerful; let us go away. I do not care to stay here any longer." We left the place, and we had not been gone five minutes, when a shell fell into the cemetery just where we had been standing, demolishing all the graves and making an enormous hole. Again I recognized God's protection.

VICTOR BLONDIS, Boulogne sur Seine, France.

In March, 1912, it seemed as though I had reached the end of all conscious effort to go on living. Mentally I felt exhausted. I had come to the place where I hoped some providence, divine or otherwise, would end my seemingly useless struggles, for I was utterly depressed and discouraged. Financially I was spending somewhat more than I could earn, in spite of daily efforts exerted from early morning to late evening and often into the night. At this time my wife was trying to gain enough strength to undergo an operation, and our baby was to be operated on as soon as the weather moderated.

It was at this point of utter hopelessness that I was driven to try Christian Science, not for myself, but simply because I hated to see my little girl go through what my wife had three times undergone at the hospital. I had always persecuted Christian Scientists, thinking them a menace to society, and it was in rather a patronizing manner that I informed a Christian Scientist that if Christian Science healed my child, then I would look into it. The reply that I would have to straighten out my own mental house, angered me. For a week I was resentful. Then as the time for my baby's operation drew nearer, in desperation I borrowed a copy of Science and Health and began to read it, when almost immediately I commenced to feel more hopeful. I attended a Wednesday evening meeting, and during silent prayer it seemed as though I had been washed clean of all cares and fears. I felt so happy and so grateful that it was with difficulty I resisted the impulse to get up and testify that same evening.

Within a week my material affairs had straightened out and improved immeasurably. Happiness returned, and best of all, the necessity for my child's operation disappeared. By reading and studying Science and Health my wife was delivered from the necessity of undergoing another operation. That March, five years ago, marked the turning point in the lives of the members of our family. I date all my present happiness from the moment I ceased to persecute Christian Science and turned to it for help. God has since blessed us in manifold ways, and I am grateful not only for many physical healings, but for mental peace and moral regeneration. Christian Science healed me instantaneously of the tobacco habit.

I am thankful to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who stood so sturdily for the demonstration of the truth which makes us free. I rejoice for her spiritual consecration and steadfastness, which enabled her to stand, when she was the only Christian Scientist in the world, so that we might have this scientific Christian understanding which meets our every need.

REMINGTON SCHUYLER, New York, N. Y.

When the precious gift of Christian Science was brought to me about five years ago, I was very much opposed to it. Having been in a training school for nurses for two years I thought the doctrine very harmful. The birth of my baby had left me with an organic disorder which made it impossible for me to walk without pain, and a noted surgeon had told me that an operation was the only thing that would eradicate the trouble. Having undergone three operations I felt that I could not go through the experience again, and as a last resort I began to read Science and Health. One day I determined to give Christian Science a just trial, so I threw away all my medicine and every surgical appliance in the house, and a few days after that I realized that I was healed. I am now able to walk ten miles or more, and have become a normal woman.

We have had many healings during these years, but I am most grateful that each day I may know more of God's love for all His children. I have a great sense of love and gratitude toward Mrs. Eddy, and toward all who have aided me in obtaining a better understanding of God.

ANNA SCHUYLER.

In the summer of 1916 Christian Science healed me of a painful intestinal disorder, seemingly caused by the extreme heat. As I had been able to overcome colds through my own understanding soon after coming to Christian Science, over four years ago, I thought I could work this out also; but as the trouble did not seem to yield and I lost rapidly in weight and could not sleep or eat, I asked a practitioner for help. The conditions, however, became aggravated, and the effort to hide the suffering as much as possible on account of opposition to Christian Science made it almost unbearable. Only by constantly declaring the truth could I perform my household duties. Though I knew that evil was not power, and could therefore, as a result of right thinking, vanish at any time, I could not help thinking of a friend who had the same trouble as that from which I was suffering and had to go through an operation. I can hardly believe it to-day, but when the pain became so severe, I wanted to have an operation or to pass on. I knew all this was wrong thinking, but I was physically so weak I did not care.

After three weeks of absent treatment I asked the practitioner to come to me, because I could not stand the pain any longer. This loving child of God, who I knew had worked for me most faithfully, came, though she was very busy with other patients, and stayed with me all the afternoon. Calmly she listened to the error I was talking and finally asked if I could hold on a little longer. This was not the answer I wanted to hear, but her firm trust and confidence in God began to awaken me from this awful dream. Before she left she said, "You certainly have had your forty days of wilderness." Though the conditions did not seem to change, I was again able to follow our Leader's admonition, "Look away from the body into Truth and Love, the Principle of all happiness, harmony, and immortality" (Science and Health, p. 261). On the second day the healing came, and with it the peace which the world cannot give. This was another proof of the ever presence of Love. My heart was filled with joy and gratitude, and the fervent desire to do some good to others, the only way we can express our gratitude to Him "who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."

When I began the study of Christian Science there were symptoms of heart trouble, but I was so interested in the new study that I forgot all about this, and after a few months, when I thought of the trouble, it was gone. Sensitiveness was slower to yield. I thought this was more of a refined fault, but Science soon taught me that it was mere selfishness, and so I tried hard to get rid of it. The most stubborn false belief was homesickness; but I am also free from this bondage. I learned to love this country, and to find my real and eternal home "in the secret place of the most High."

Last spring I had the desire to take class instruction. Seeking divine guidance, I was most wonderfully guided in my choice of a teacher. The lessons proved to be very inspiring and helpful in every direction. I feel deeply thankful for our beautiful church services, our literature, and all the sources which help us to grow in grace, wisdom, and understanding. To our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, I feel more indebted every day, because only through her teachings are we able to find our way from sense to Soul.

I feel that I must contribute my testimony of what Christian Science has done for me. Ten years ago I was taken violently ill with appendicitis, and though every attention from the most skilled physicians was given me, they felt I must go. I was not a Christian Scientist at the time, though much interested in Mrs. Eddy's teaching through the talk of a friend, who was then a practitioner in Los Angeles, California. I felt that this truth applied could save my life, so I asked a friend to write to this practitioner and request treatment, and this was done. Even when seemingly unconscious I held to the thought that God is All-in-all, and at the very hour in which treatment was being given me in that far-away city I was healed and told those around my bed that God had healed me. I have never had the least return of the trouble, but have had many other proofs of God's wonderful care and love. I am thankful to dear Mrs. Eddy, who has through her great love and patience been enabled to lead us into God's beautiful light.

It is with great joy that I give this testimony. For some years I was what is termed a man of the world, with the result that I gradually found myself in bondage to the drink habit and its evil attendants, ill health and misery. Several times I tried through will power to give up using liquor, but went back to it with worse effects, until finally I lost my position. I was on the point of being separated from my loving wife and children, when one day a fellow worker where I had been employed spoke to me of Christian Science and what it had done for him and for others.

At first I felt antagonistic, thinking it to be some new idea and of no use to me, as I had not much use for religions of the present day; but I was advised to consult a Christian Science practitioner, and after the first conversation with her I accepted treatment. Then I borrowed Science and Health and began to study the Lesson-Sermon. I particularly wish to emphasize the fact that with the first treatment the desire for intoxicating liquor left me absolutely, and I was aroused to a sense of happiness and given new life. I felt that I had one Father,—Love, Truth, Life,—and that I was the child of God right now instead of at some future time. I am now a Bible student, and am striving as well as I know how to follow in our Master's footsteps. I am very grateful to God, also to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for this grand truth, as well as for all kindness shown to me by Christian Scientists.

CHARLES D. HARRICKS, Melbourne, Australia.

[Translated from the German]

I herewith testify to the fact that a year and a half ago I was healed of gallstones and kidney trouble through Christian Science. I was also freed from pain in the joints. My condition was very serious, and all medical efforts had failed. When, therefore, a well-known physician whom I consulted last, and in whom I had utmost confidence, wrapped himself in silence and directed me to another physician, saying that I needed constant medical supervision, I grew desperate. In my need Christian Science appeared as the saving angel, and in three weeks' time I was completely healed. Although my husband had no faith in this teaching when I started to have treatment, he let me have my own way; but when he beheld the results he could hardly recover from his astonishment and began to take an interest in the subject.

Christian Science has become the light that illumines our path, and has proved a great help to us in every circumstance, because we are able to apply its teachings everywhere and at any time. Especially in these days it is being shown to us that with the light of Truth we may remain untouched by either discord or any seeming lack. For all these blessings we are grateful to God, and thankful to our noble Leader, as well as to our dear helpers in Science, and our endeavor is to prove our gratitude by our actions.

For several years I suffered greatly from muscular rheumatism, which at frequent intervals was so severe I could not use my leg. I had resort to all the material remedies prescribed for such cases, but without obtaining satisfactory relief. While experiencing one of the most severe attacks, I began to read Science and Health, and became so interested and absorbed in its teachings that my thought was entirely diverted from the suffering. After reading the book about an hour I discovered that the trouble had entirely disappeared, but I feared to move my leg lest the awful suffering should return. Desiring to enter another room, I prepared myself to hop as usual on one foot, but when I arose I found it possible to place my full weight on the afflicted leg without the least inconvenience or twinge of pain. This healing occurred in 1906, and the ailment has never returned. I have not taken any medicine since.

In 1914 I was overcome by an attack of neuralgia of the kidneys, and what I suffered for about two hours could not be expressed in words. I thought my time to pass on had surely come, and that unless I got quick relief in some way I would go insane; yet I can endure as much pain without complaining as the ordinary person. A telephone message was sent to a Christian Science practitioner, and within half an hour after she received the message I fell into a sound sleep and awoke half an hour later entirely free from pain. There has never been a return of the trouble.

I thank God for revealing to us the truth through Mrs. Eddy, who was His unselfish, faithful, and obedient servant and our loving friend and teacher.

F. M. REYNOLDS, Kittanning, Pa.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I give my testimony in the hope that it may help some one. Christian Science found me almost a wreck physically and mentally. After the loss of a dear one it seemed as if I could not become reconciled to the separation, but I have since learned that in God's kingdom there is no separation.

Of the many benefits received in Christian Science the one for which I am most grateful is the laying off of glasses, after having worn them for twenty years. Doctors had operated on my eyes five times, and had said that even with glasses I must use them very little; but since then I have learned that sight is spiritual. It is now three years since the glasses were laid aside, and I use my eyes constantly without any inconvenience.

I am grateful for the physical healings, but the spiritual uplift, peace, and harmony that Science has brought into our home mean much more. I only hope to live in such a way that I may prove my love and gratitude for this teaching.

EDYCE M. RICH, Alameda, Cal.

I wish to add my testimony to the many recorded to the credit of the divine Principle underlying Christian Science and the healing work connected therewith. In the month of June, 1915, after having gradually failed in health for several years, I was obliged to give up my work as a locomotive engineer, and my condition grew steadily worse during the summer and fall of that year, despite all the doctors could do for me. They diagnosed the case as hardening of the arteries, rheumatism, kidney trouble, and enlarged prostate. Severe pain was experienced continually, and I was unable even to raise my head from the pillow without help. My feet, ankles, and legs swelled to an abnormal size, and things finally got so bad that one of the doctors informed my family that in his opinion I could not live more than ten days at the most.

At the request of my family I then consented to try Christian Science as a last resort. A practitioner was called on for help and medicines were put aside. Almost from the first I could see an improvement, and four days after treatment was started I was amazed to find that the swelling had left my feet, ankles, and legs altogether, and that I was able to get out of bed without any trouble. One of the doctors who had been on the case, when informed by a member of my family that the swelling had gone down, stated that it happened frequently in cases of this kind, but that in a day or two the swelling would return worse than ever. However, it did not return, and I advanced so rapidly under the care of divine Love that two weeks after beginning to take Christian Science treatment I walked down town and back, a distance of over two miles, and experienced no ill effects whatever. Inside of another week I felt better than I had for several years.

One of the beneficial effects experienced during my course of treatment was the complete cure of two ruptures, enabling me to dispense with trusses that I had been obliged to wear for some time. For this healing, and for many others that have taken place in my family, as well as for the spiritual uplift Christian Science brings, I am truly grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who gave to the world this life-bringing truth.

WILLIAM BRITCHER, Ashtabula, Ohio.

It is now some time since I became interested in Christian Science. I suffered from stomach, kidney, and liver troubles, also rheumatism, and often from sore throat and severe headache. Added to this I was said to be neurasthenic. I had many grave problems to meet in my own thought, and am indeed grateful that the truth came to me in that cloudy time of my life. Most of the conditions were quickly healed by treatment from a dear friend. With this friend I at once began to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and though I knew but little English I could understand it by myself, knowing that if this was the truth it could not be hidden from me. I was thus able through my understanding of the divine Principle to overcome little by little those grave problems which faced me.

My last child, a boy, was born while I was under Christian Science treatment, and I was up and about in thirty-six hours with no complications whatever. At the birth of my other children my convalescence lasted three weeks, and I never really recovered my health under methods then employed.

Soon after coming into Christian Science I felt the desire to help others, and this I did with good results. Later I became a member of the branch church where I was then residing, and filled several offices, for which I was deeply grateful. I also have had the privilege of taking class instruction and am still working for the cause.

The Christian Science literature has been a great help to me. My deep appreciation of the Monitor cannot be sufficiently expressed. It is a need met through our dear Leader's foresight, and is certainly helping, educating, uplifting humanity by its tone, and through its international interest bringing the true brotherhood of man more to light. I am also most grateful to all my good friends who through their love and patience have helped me into a fuller comprehension of eternal good and the true individuality of man.

MADAME GERMAINE ECCARD, Paris, France.

I wish to express my deep thankfulness to God for Christian Science, and my gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for showing us how to use what Love has so abundantly provided for all who are willing to follow the teachings and example of our Master. I was healed of tuberculosis nearly eight years ago, after having been told by some of the most prominent medical men in this country that unless I lived in a certain climate I would pass on. After a few treatments in Christian Science I was healed. I have had many wonderful healings since then, but am even more grateful for the mental help received each day. I am learning to love more, to be kinder and more unselfish, and am trying to let my light so shine that every one may see what Christian Science can do and is doing for me as well as for many others.—VIRGINIA MCKENZIE WILLEY, Hastings on Hudson, N. Y.

I am grateful to say I have been healed of very bad corns under both feet, which were painful all the time, whether I walked or not. At last I wrote to a Christian Science practitioner in Scotland for absent treatment, and from the day treatment was started no more pain was felt. In a few weeks the corns came out unaided, all but the biggest, which came out about a week later. I am very grateful for this wonderful healing, which has also been a great spiritual uplift for me, as it has shown me clearly that nothing is impossible to God.

Christian Science has also been a great help to me during my school life, and I realize I cannot get on without it.

MARY GERTRUDE SHAW, Bexhill-on-Sea, England.

The above testimony, written by my daughter, I can faithfully corroborate. This case of healing has been a wonderful help to us all, and we hope it may be of benefit to others. It was indeed a surgical operation performed by Truth. I also wish to testify that our boy was healed of warts which had been growing on his hands for three years and were a great disfigurement. His healing dated from the time he heard a testimony given by a lady whose boy had been healed of the same trouble through Christian Science. The warts started to fade away that evening, and in ten days had vanished, leaving smooth scars which gradually disappeared.

I cannot neglect this opportunity to express my gratitude for Christian Science and what it is doing for us all as a family, and also for the periodicals, including The Christian Science Monitor. They always seem to meet our needs.

FLORENCE M. A. SHAW.

I want to tell all the lame people in this world of my healing. When I came in touch with Christian Science I was a hopeless paralytic, pronounced incurable by physicians, also specialists in such diseases. The malady came upon me in Montana in the Rocky Mountains, and the best advice I was able to obtain was to get to a low altitude as quickly as possible, where I might last several years. To impress the seriousness of my condition upon me one physician said, "You are liable to topple over at any time, no matter where you go."

My state of mind can readily be imagined when I was told by an old friend who had become interested in Christian Science that through Science I could be healed. I began the study of Science and Health, and within six months was healed without direct treatments for the disease. I know the healing is permanent, for it took place fifteen years ago; I also know positively that the truth as taught in Christian Science was my redeemer, as it has been ever since, for which I am certainly grateful.

E. H. SCHROEDER, Ponderay, Idaho.

When I was thirty-six years old I had a nervous breakdown, followed by weakness and sleeplessness. This condition lasted twenty-six years. There never was any relief gained from the means which the doctors employed. I also underwent an operation, but was unable to do any kind of work or to be about till God's love healed me. I had one week's treatment in Christian Science and began the study of Science and Health, and I shall never cease that study. Paul says in his first epistle to the Thessalonians, "Pray without ceasing." I am especially grateful for the English-German edition of Science and Health and have no words to express my gratitude for Christian Science.

[Rev. P. Gavan Duffy as quoted in The Living Church]

It is quite beside the mark for anyone to fall back upon the stock cry of most Christian apologists, that the power of healing the sick was given to the church only for a time, when "signs and wonders" were needed to convince and convert the people. The average Christian of to-day has long since come to the conclusion that that form of apology is simply one invented to cover the church's faithlessness. . . . Never was there a time when "signs and wonders" were more necessary in the Christian world than to-day. That the power to heal is with the church, is manifest to all who will see; and if only we had that essential,—a corporate faith restored instead of faithlessness,—that strange, mysterious, silent influence which is now a sort of pull one experiences rather than defines (the result of corporate faithlessness) in restricting the results of the faithful few, I verily believe we should have in its place an immense, immeasurable spiritual force at work that would mean a speedy return of the day when the church met and triumphed over physical as well as moral ills.

[American Lutheran Survey]

It is the possession and exercise of the Christian religion which is most needed for the welfare of church and state in the world to-day. One of the most pitiable results of the present world confusion is that which is manifested in the extremes to which professing Christians have allowed themselves to be driven. Every such instance is but an evidence of a break between an individual and his Christian religion. All passion and bitterness and disposition toward wholesale condemnation of those who differ from one's own views or feelings is an evidence of the need of the Christian religion as a stabilizer. Those who have best preserved their emotional, intellectual, and moral equilibrium, in this period of stress, have been those who have been most genuinely Christian.

[Dr. K. C. Anderson in The Christian Commonwealth]

The true Adam is not any person who lived at the commencement of the race, in any Eden of earth; the real Adam is found within the soul itself, and the so-called history of the fall is something that happens within the soul likewise. These all denote spiritual processes that take place within the soul of every individual, and are thus endlessly repeated. They are eternal facts, not historical facts. What an immense assumption it is that it was a fact of science which the story of the fall was designed to teach!

What Is a Sentinel?

The Christian Science Sentinel was founded by Mary Baker Eddy, 1898, under the title of The Christian Science Weekly. Mrs. Eddy stated that the Sentinel was published in response to a demand for "a speedier means of communicating with the Field than our monthly Journal affords."

Plainly a sentinel is a watch or guard against surprise or attack by an enemy.

Jesus said (Mark 13:37), "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch."

Speaking of naming the Christian Science Sentinel, whose motto is the above quoted saying of Jesus, Mrs. Eddy says, "The second I entitled Sentinel, intended to hold guard over Truth, Life, and Love" (Miscellany, p. 353).

A good soldier never feels greater responsibility than when the preservation of his army from surprise attack is placed in his hands as a sentinel. A good soldier respects and obeys the challenge of his sentinel, gives the countersign before attempting to pass him.

Confident repose comes to the army which knows that it has faithful and alert sentinels

The sentinel is to his army and his cause what his own concept of duty makes of him.

Although divinely ordained and established as the result of spiritual inspiration, The Christian Science Sentinel remains a true Sentinel to each subscriber, reader, and editor only as its inspired designation is individually understood, and its alertness and fidelity are thereby perpetually maintained.

Do we promptly obey the challenge of the sentinel? Have we the countersign? Are we willing to take our turn on the sentinel's station? Then are we equally faithful in guarding against attack and helping our Sentinel do so? Do we understand the Sentinel metaphysically?

Are we doing all we can to put out more Sentinels to "hold guard over Truth, Life, and Love"?

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission is afforded through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, at nominal postage, periodicals offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen. The printed notice on the front of this issue signed by the Postmaster-General explains this simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to send periodicals regularly as desired, either to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at the training cantonments, or for any other purpose of general distribution.

Getting One's Bearings

SAMUEL GREENWOOD

THE beginner in Christian Science sometimes encounters a sense of bewilderment when trying to adjust his new view of things to the conditions that still largely make up his environment. He feels at a loss how to steer his course scientifically between the truth that Mind is infinite, hence All, and the continued presence and demand of material conditions in daily experience. Where, he asks, does one rightly stand in respect to the fact of man's essential spirituality while he is obliged to conform in large measure to the ways of the flesh? Or how can he consistently affirm his status as a child of God while his present consciousness seems so interminably distant from its practical realization?

When the truth that in reality all things are spiritual first dawns upon one's perception, the undisciplined impulse is apt to apply that fact in all its fullness to human experience, until one discovers the immense distance yet to be traversed between his first infantile perception of Truth and his final demonstration of pure spiritual consciousness. Although in divine revelation man is seen to be the image and likeness of God, human sense does not recognize man thus, and the attempt to relate that deduction of absolute Science to frail mortals may frequently be fraught with disappointment.

The transformation of mankind from material belief through spiritual understanding is not consummated in a moment. Old things do not pass away suddenly from one's cognizance; but to the spiritually awakening man they continue in experience only as conditions whose falsity is recognized and acknowledged, but which must be outgrown through maturer understanding and demonstration. One of the first lessons for the student is the meaning of the word growth in relation to his salvation. The human perception of spiritual truth is at first feeble, and should be allowed to take root and grow and develop without being exposed to the danger of a violent and thoughtless uprooting of the tares growing alongside. As this growth goes on without hindrance from human will or desire, old things will drop away of themselves through the ripening of spiritual experience, and thought will adjust itself to Truth's higher demands in harmonious sequence.

The overzealous impetuousness that would reach for the end at the beginning, or the superconscientiousness that is perpetually disturbed because so much of earth seems to remain in consciousness, will learn through patient experience to distinguish between the absolute Truth and material belief, and so be willing to work steadily toward the realization of the spiritual ideal. It will be remembered that Jesus did not pray for his disciples to be taken out of the world, but that they might be kept from its evil; and this defines the proper position of every Christian Scientist in relation to present circumstances and environment. A student should not expect to adopt a more radical attitude toward earthly conditions than did the Master.

Christian Science does not encourage its students to think that they will be translated by some mysterious process into spiritual beings, or that they will be immediately transported into the realm of spiritual consciousness; for although perfect spiritualization of thought is the ultimate object of one's work, its accomplishment requires the putting off of all sin and materiality. The purpose of Christianity is to enable mankind to work out their salvation; that is, to correct their false sense of being by gaining a knowledge of the truth, not in the sense of accepting a theory, but of reforming the human sense of life. And this process of working out of error is naturally taking place in the very midst of error and in presence of its delusions and false appearances.

A belief in Christian Science, therefore, does not remove one from contact with and participation in the events of mortal existence, but as its teachings are understood and assimilated human thought becomes more spiritual, and this process of regeneration will go on as rapidly as mortals are prepared to give up their false concepts. Since Christian Scientists have not yet ascended above a material sense of things, it need disturb no one that their environment still appears to be material, or that they see themselves and others in a material investiture, and take part in the ordinary routine of human beings.

What if one's daily round of living seems far removed from his ideal; there is no need for discouragement if he is faithful to the truth so far as his present apprehension makes practical. Our Leader encouragingly assures us, "God requires perfection, but not until the battle between Spirit and flesh is fought and the victory won" (Science and Health, p. 254). And while St. Paul urges us to "put off the old man,"—that is, the carnal or material sense,—he disclaims any pretension that he himself had "already attained;" neither should we allow ourselves to be worried by the tempter on the score of our imperfections, so long as we are conscientiously doing our best to correct them. The tormenting self-condemnation over unspiritual conditions that still remain, or because the affairs of this world continue to claim our attention, proceeds from the same spirit of evil that would have persuaded Jesus to cast himself from the pinnacle of the temple in order to prove his spirituality.

Christian Scientists do not profess to have entirely separated themselves from the so-called material world, but there is that taking place in their consciousness which assures them that they are not of it. They acknowledge the great truth of man's spiritual existence and divine sonship as applicable here and now in meeting their daily problems, and find that they rise higher each time they overcome evil on that basis. They affirm the absolute truth that man is God's reflection, in order to keep their mental vision clear and their expectation turned in the right direction, and are persuaded that this course is consistent with Jesus' instructions. Their position is much as the apostle's must have been when he wrote to the Corinthians, "All things are your's," although the evidence of that spiritual possession was not fully apparent. And so the Christian Scientist keeps before him the truth of things as they really are, not as they seem to a false sense to be; and he strives to keep his thought pure while mingling in worldly affairs.

"An improved belief," writes Mrs. Eddy, "is one step out of error, and aids in taking the next step" (Science and Health, p. 296); and this improvement of human conditions, rather than a willful attempt to abandon them, would indicate the order of wisdom. As this improvement takes place and the next and successive steps are taken, human thought becomes prepared to give up the material for the spiritual, until it finally develops the capacity to apprehend being as wholly spiritual, and thus emerges from finite sense into understanding of infinite possibilities.

Christian Scientists do not claim to be perfect as human beings, but they are nevertheless learning more and more to see through the deceptions of material sense, and to find the real and eternal in "the things which are not seen." They are therefore finding their rightful position, not only in relation to unseen realities, but to the things that are temporal. They are learning, in all humbleness of mind, to draw the line of demarcation between what is real and what is only apparent, to talk of error without believing it, and to look at the phenomena of false sense without fear. If, like the apostle, they daily "press toward the mark," they also can rest undismayed in the certainty of ultimate attainment.

Designating the Way

CHARLES C. BUTTERWORTH, 2D

OUR revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, says, "Love inspires, illumines, designates, and leads the way" (Science and Health, p. 454). To those who stand at some beclouded turning point in their course, seeking vainly to make out the import of the signpost by the roadside, or it may be having no such visible indication at all, this statement will come with special force. They will remember that perhaps at one time during a journey along some country road they relied upon a neighboring farmer's boy to direct them to their destination, trusting to his familiarity with the road and his good will to guide them aright.

Across from our house a new railroad bridge is being built, so that the street may be cut through under the railroad and continue its way on the other side. Before this excavation was made, and while yet the railroad bank divided the two sections of the street, it was a continual source of perplexity to strangers how to get to the other side of the tracks. As a matter of fact, a detour of some two blocks was necessary; many times, therefore, we were called upon to inform people just how they could get to their journey's end. One night, I remember, a man was told that if he could feel his way through the bridge supports and the piles of material which were there incidental to the building of the bridge, he would save himself the otherwise inevitable detour. Nevertheless, the longer way was also duly explained; whereupon the man set out, and presumably, either by the short route or the long, reached his destination.

In the book of Job we read concerning God, "He knoweth the way that I take." Whether we take the shorter, and oftimes the more rugged way, or the longer and easier one, divine Principle gives us unmistakable instructions, if we ask for them in the same spirit of trust which we use toward our fellow men. If human kindness will not suffer a stranger to be turned out of his way, but will, according to its knowledge, direct him explicitly and carefully, how much surer, how much clearer, wiser, and simpler must be the designations of an altogether loving and wise Father, the divine Principle of man's being!

More than this, we are told that Love not only designates, but leads the way. There will hardly be found among men many who are kind enough to conduct personally the inquiring stranger out of his difficulty. Yet this is what God is continually doing through His envoys, His messengers or angels, which, as Mrs. Eddy explains on page 581 of Science and Health, are "God's thoughts passing to man; spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect."

It is much as if we were bound for the house of a friend, toiling along past many puzzling crossroads only to be fronted now and again with some barrier that seems to block our pathway. While we are looking about us in disconcerted impatience, we see a child coming toward us, and we ask him if he can tell us how we may get to the house of our friend. Suppose he answers, "Yes, indeed; I am his son, and he sent me out to see that you do not miss your way." Will we follow this divine idea? Will we follow him, as it were, down under the railroad bridge, in and out among the supports and buttresses, between the puddles and the obstructing timbers, even if it be night? Or will we look instead at the black shadows, at the holes where there are no holes, at the apparently clear spaces where there are really hindrances, and plead to be taken around by the longer path? Then may the divine idea well say to us, as did the Master, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Then may we at length conclude more wisely to undertake without misgivings the forward journey.

This Christ-idea, this divine guide, brings spiritual illumination; is always with us, "even unto the end of the world," as Jesus said. The Comforter never leaves us alone. This Wayshower, manifested to an earlier age by Jesus the Christ, is again revealing the true way through the Science of the Christ, or Christian Science. This may to us seem as a child, yet undeveloped in its might among us, who comes to show us the most direct path to the Father's house. The guidance of Truth and Love is definite and plain; it "inspires, illumines, designates, and leads the way." Concerning this designating of the way, the Discoverer of this Science, Mrs. Eddy, has written (Science and Health, p. 242), "The finger-posts of divine Science show the way our Master trod, and require of Christians the proof which he gave, instead of mere profession."

"Children of light"

ISABEL HILLIER

THE parable of the unjust steward is one of the most imperative calls to wakefulness that our Master gave us. None knew better than he how the belief of evil, counterfeiting the eternal activity of Truth, unceasingly throws out its spurious suggestions, sweeping the unwary into a sea of difficulties which could easily have been avoided by greater watchfulness. In this parable is shown a worldling whose one aim is to insure his own safety. To this end he bends every effort, sinks every minor consideration, and throws himself into his work with an energy and a careful regard for every detail worthy of a better cause.

The point of the story evidently is not what the steward did, but the manner in which he did it; and the lesson taught was that the children of this world show more energy and wisdom in their efforts to attain a desired end than do the "children of light," whose one desire should be to make themselves friends by means of which, when all material aid fails, they may be received into the "everlasting habitations" of

Soul. To dwell in these habitations means to be eternally conscious of good, never tempted to believe in the assumed reality of evil, never discouraged when we see no apparent result of our work, never moved by appearances, but so steadfast in our certainty of Truth's power that nothing can move us.

Even the crossing of the Red Sea was not an instantaneous demonstration. When the Israelites saw that the Egyptians were following them, their need appeared to be desperate, and Moses' unwavering courage and complete confidence in God's omnipotence was tested through the long night of waiting until the light of morning showed the waters driven back by the strong east wind which had been doing the work that was necessary before the dry land could be seen. The wonderful protection of the God on whom they relied was, however, proved in the position of the guiding pillar, which was giving light to those who were patiently trusting their great deliverer, while causing the enemy to be plunged into a cloud of darkness, typifying their own mental state, which made it impossible for them to advance.

It was because Moses proved himself to be a true child of Light by his unswerving loyalty to Principle, that the passage of the Red Sea will always remain one of the most thrilling incidents in the history of the Jews. As we read it in the light of Christian Science we are uplifted with a sense of the grandeur and beauty of Moses' complete trust in God; and yet every day brings to us opportunities to prove our own devotion to Truth, and the same power is here with us today, so that the present is filled with possibilities of great victories. "Can time undo what once was true?" Then for what are we waiting? We shall never do the great things if we fail in the small details. It is the privilege of every Christian Scientist to assist in establishing the kingdom of heaven here and now, and the work of the individual is to correct and heal in his own consciousness everything that contradicts the truth regarding God and man.

To correct everything means to be alert to discern all forms of suggestion, not just energetic enough to get rid of the conditions that cause us personal discomfort. The "greater works" are waiting to be done, and the moment we set our faces in the right direction we shall, like the Israelites, feel a "strong east wind" blowing and drying up the waters of error of which we have had such deadly fear. Then, too, the "pillar of fire" will shine upon our consciousness, showing up the latent beliefs of which we have not before been conscious, but which have been producing their effects, and will continue to do so until they are destroyed. We cannot bring into our individual experience what we do not accept as true; and although we may argue that we had never heard of certain forms of error before they attacked us, the belief was surely latent in our consciousness or the appearance could not have been produced. To be alert does not mean to be in a condition of anxious watching. On the contrary, the consciousness that most surely and quickly destroys erroneous suggestion is that which is continually lifted up in thankfulness for the beauty and wholeness of life as spiritually understood. Error in trying to attack such a consciousness does not even reach the door of thought; it shrivels on the way to it.

Each individual has the right to claim that he has a place in the kingdom of heaven; this is an eternal and unalterable fact. In the proportion that we realize this truth, we shall bring it into our experience and begin to see the new heaven and the new earth in which there is no evil, no disease. No Christian Science practitioner has ever had a real disease to cope with; there never has been and never will be such a thing as disease in God's kingdom. When a patient comes for treatment and says that he is suffering from consumption, the practitioner knows that what has to be destroyed is what the patient thinks about the suggestion of disease. Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 119), "The nature of the individual, more stubborn than the circumstance, will always be found arguing for itself,—its habits, tastes, and indulgences;" and it is these habits, tastes, and indulgences that have to be reversed and changed into channels for Truth. So, then, to be truly children of light means that we must take a radical position at every point, knowing that the more spiritual we are in our thinking, the more wisdom we shall show in meeting the material conditions on the human plane.

Conservatism and Progress

HELEN W. BANNON

PROFESSOR HINTON'S book, "The Fourth Dimension," reads more like a satire than a scientific treatise. In discussing the dimensions of space, illustrated by geometrical symbols, the author begins with the point,—a mere speck, incapable of movement. Then two hypothetical creatures are successively introduced, one able to move forward and backward on a straight line from which it can never deviate; the other capable, besides, of movements to the right hand or to the left. It can also trace an angle, a square, or a circle, always, however, keeping to the horizontal. These two resemble each other in being satisfied with existing conditions and unable to conceive of any other. " 'I am monarch of all I survey,' and outside me there is nothing!" Such is their conviction. The next being that comes on the scene is no longer confined to a dead level. He has scaled the perpendicular and risen to higher planes. He can follow the outline of a cube and move in all directions. New possibilities have opened up to him; he has reached the fourth dimension.

Now these dimensions have nothing to do with Christian Science, of which Mrs. Eddy says, "It is the infinite calculus defining the line, plane, space, and fourth dimension of Spirit" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 22); but they serve to illustrate certain conditions of the human mind frequently met with. Through the illumination of divine Science we apprehend them as differing states of consciousness. "In my Father's house are many mansions," said Christ Jesus to his disciples; and he added, "I go to prepare a place for you." And this place will be determined for each individual in the degree of his spiritual attainment. It means watchfulness, prayer, and sacrifice; it may even be the giving up of beliefs once held sacred by tradition and from association. To some this process is as painful as the plucking out of an eye or the cutting off of hand or foot. Others, unused to thinking for themselves, resent being disturbed, and are satisfied with the stereotyped and conventional.

The great Teacher, by his preaching and mighty works, sought to rouse the Jews of his day from their blindness; but he was generally misunderstood and scoffed at, and, as we read in the epistle to the Hebrews, his followers "were made a gazingstock." "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life," was his sad admission; and he wept because of their density.

Mrs. Eddy, as the first Christian Scientist, could speak from experience, and she wrote on page 97 of Science and Health, "Earth has no repayment for the persecutions which attend a new step in Christianity;" she also tells us on page 343 that "without this cross-bearing, one might not be able to say with the apostle, 'None of these things move me.'" After her recovery, through the Christ-cure, from an accident pronounced fatal by her doctors, her earnest prayer was that she might also be allowed to impart to her fellow men this same truth which had healed her; and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," was written to awaken them from the delusive dreams of sense, from the inertia of materialism. Signs are not wanting that the world is more ready now than it ever has been for this great awakening. The "stream of tendency" is ever onward and upward; mankind have progressed, and they are no longer earthbound, but, steering their aircraft,—those symbols of still greater powers to come,—they have defied the law of gravity and soared far above the clouds.

Christ Jesus saw in prophetic vision a time of great tribulation coming like a snare upon the whole earth, and compared it to the days of Noah, when all flesh was corrupt, but the ark, with all inside it, was borne upon the flood, till it rested safely on the highest mountains. Now that this time of trouble and desolation seems to have come, the world of to-day, as foretold, is asleep, immersed in material interests and pursuits; but to those keeping watch these words of our Master are encouraging: "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."

The signs that Christ, Truth, is coming near to humanity are everywhere. Is not the gospel of the kingdom, the glad tidings, preached the whole world over? The angel, with foot planted on sea and land, is holding in his hand "the little book," and saying, "Take it, and eat it up;" in other words, read it, assimilate it, digest it. The ark of Christian Science is afloat, and all who seek its shelter will ride triumphantly the sea of error, and be landed on celestial heights.

Identity

EDWARD EARLE DANIELL

ONE is often sorely tempted to accept the evidence of the senses when after a clear declaration of the truth of being one's problem seems no nearer a right solution; yet it is only by sustained confidence in the certain and scientific action of Truth that the answer is perceived. An experience of the writer's several years ago which clearly illustrates this point has ever been a source of encouragement to him.

At that time I was employed in the interest of our daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor, and one day a bank note for a year's subscription to our paper, with a slip containing the name and address of the person to whom the paper was to be sent, was handed me. The note and address slip were put in a pocket with other memoranda to be attended to the following morning. The next day, however, the money and slip were missing, and after a careful search at home and in the office, the conclusion was reached that the papers must have been pulled from the pocket while I was getting out my car fare. For a moment the fear of loss became acute; there was nothing by which to identify the money, and the name slip would mean nothing to anyone finding it. Then like a flash came these words from page 477 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy: "Identity is the reflection of Spirit, the reflection in multifarious forms of the living Principle, Love." As an immediate proof of this the name of the subscriber came to my thought. I then asked the one who had handed me the subscription if she could recall the address. This was done, thus satisfying me that an understanding of spiritual identity was the first need.

With some of my own money the subscription was sent in, and for the next few weeks whenever the sense of loss would present itself it was met with a firm denial. The truth had been declared, and it was true. As that which was lost represented humanly a sense of substance, it was seen that its identity was in spiritual reflection, and that dishonesty could not hide or displace any idea of Truth. Then one day, in rummaging through a letter file in a lower drawer of my desk, the bill and address slip were found folded together, although I had no remembrance of having had the file open for a long time back.

Some time later I met a friend who was distracted over the loss of her hand bag. About to go on a vacation, she had left home for her place of business laden with suit case, umbrella, and bag; but on arriving at the office she discovered that the bag containing keys, rings, and money was gone. I told her of my experience and what the statement from the textbook had meant to me. She asked me to help her, and with a promise to do so, I left. The thought came at once that the truth had been declared in relating my own experience, and that since it was the truth, there was nothing further to do than to stand firm.

Later in the morning a telephone message brought the information that there had been no development in the case, but that two advertisements of the loss had been inserted in a daily newspaper in the name of the young lady's landlord. As she had a check to cover expenses she was advised to go on her vacation, for the case was met, notwithstanding material evidence to the contrary. Not until more than a month later did we meet again, and the finding of the bag was related to a grateful and humble listener,—humbled before this second proof of the omnipotence of ever present Truth.

The landlord had received a reply to the first advertisement and found the bag in the possession of a shoe cobbler just around the corner from the young lady's apartment. He gave up the bag minus five dollars, which, as he informed the remonstrating landlord, was his just reward. The second appearance of the advertisement brought another reply to the perplexed landlord. An appointment with the man who made this answer revealed the fact that he had discovered the bag on the step of the apartment and, being in a hurry, had left it at the most convenient place, the cobbler's, with the direction to give it to whoever might inquire for it. The exorbitant reward was recovered and the real finder justly rewarded.

These two incidents but serve to illustrate the simple and scientific action of Truth, bringing to light in human consciousness the perfection of divine Mind with its healing, protecting power. We need only "declare the decree," as the psalmist says, and abide in the understanding of Truth's omnipotence.

True Peace

CHANCELLOR L. JENKS

THE cry of the whole world is for peace; and peace would be ours to-day but for the world's ignorance of the nature of peace. Jesus said to his disciples, "My peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." The peace for which the world is longing is the false peace which mortal sense gives, not that which Christ Jesus gave. All war arises from a belief in separation from God, good. Peace results from the understanding that man is inseparable from the Father. It is the result, also, of the understanding of infinite supply, available equally for all.

War is the logical outcome of a belief in man as material, as war aims to destroy material men, and as many as possible. The war spirit gloats over the casualty lists. Peace is the result of understanding that man is not material, but spiritual. On page 329 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "If men understood their real spiritual source to be all blessedness, they would struggle for recourse to the spiritual and be at peace." The peace which the world gives is often only the silence and torpor which follow exhaustion, defeat, or death, the fruit of crushing victory on the one side and disastrous surrender on the other. Then it is the people cry "Peace, peace," when there is no peace.

Peace is more than cessation of hostilities, whether enforced or voluntary. It is the understanding that good is universal, that Love does not vest all power in a special group of men and inflict upon the rest of mankind only the burden of subservience. Good which is not universal is only evil masquerading as good. It is a two-edged sword which wounds even the hands that wield it. What is destroying autocracy to-day? It is not democracy, the champion of the universality of rights and opportunities. Autocracy is being destroyed by autocracy. It holds within itself the seed of its own annihilation. It is the dying belief in the possibility of a restricted blessing, a limited good.

In giving Christian Science to the world Mrs. Eddy declared that the time for thinkers had come. (See Science and Health, Pref., p. vii.) To-day on the material plane all civilization hangs in the balance. The death struggle of matter with matter threatens the destruction of matter, even before mankind has learned what life really is. Error is impotent to help itself. Truth alone can bring surcease to the nations.

Where can Truth be found? In this holocaust of death, where may we discover the tree of life whose leaves are for the healing of the nations? In Christian Science alone. Only those who have an understanding of the real man's oneness with the Father can apply this eternal truth to the raging error which seems to engulf the world. Christian Scientists have a great mission, a great opportunity, a great responsibility. Enough of truth has already come to them through Christian Science to revolutionize the world; but to be effective the truth must be applied, and this is the task of Christian Scientists.

Every one who has taken the name of Christian Scientist has done so because he has again and again seen error vanish before Truth. The greater the error, the more of a lie it is. The greater the lie, the weaker it is before Truth. Let every Christian Scientist gird on the armor of Truth. Let there be no slackers in this warfare. If the forces of Christian Science be coordinated in a united attack upon this gigantic lie which has falsely donned the habiliments of reality, the might of Truth will eliminate war from human consciousness and give to the world its rightful heritage of enduring peace.

Thy Word Is a Light

KATHRINE SCOBEY PUTNAM

THE day began all gray, with clouds about Us everywhere. Then soft, warm showers fell
Upon the thirsting earth, till ev'ry dell
Had water stored to put to flight the drought.
Came then the April sun resplendent out,
Its cheering, vivifying word to tell
To birds and flow'rs and all on earth that dwell,
Till skies, clear blue, put dark and gray to rout.
My day began all gray with doubts and fears:
But when I turned, O Love, in prayer to Thee,
Stilled was my aching heart and dried my tears,
And in Thy Word, all I sought longingly.
My sun it is, and darkest skies it clears;
Calm hope it brings, and sweet humility.

Selected Articles

["Age"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 3, 1917]

The mistakes of the human race originate, quite commonly, in ignorance of Principle. Mrs. Eddy puts this altogether admirably in a well-known passage, on page 397 of Science and Health, when she writes, "By not perceiving vital metaphysical points, not seeing how mortal mind affects the body,—acting beneficially or injuriously on the health, as well as on the morals and the happiness of mortals,—we are misled in our conclusions and methods. We throw the mental influence on the wrong side, thereby actually injuring those whom we mean to bless." Now it is the very simplicity of a discovery that often indicates its greatness. A falling apple in his garden at Woolsthorpe gave the secret of gravity to Sir Isaac Newton. A kettle steaming on a fire supplied Watt with the idea of the steam engine. The reading of a verse in the Bible revealed to Mrs. Eddy the grandest scientific fact in the world, and enabled her to rediscover the secret of Christian healing.

Out of this first discovery of Mrs. Eddy's came many others, equally simple, equally practical, and equally scientific; and not the least simple, and yet profound, is that given on page 246 of Science and Health: "Never record ages. Chronological data are no part of the vast forever. Time-tables of birth and death are so many conspiracies against manhood and womanhood." So simple and so obviously scientific a piece of advice would, it might have been imagined, have been acted upon by every one who read it. But the name of the human mind is Naaman. It is ever ready to do some startling or dramatic thing in the name of Truth, but it draws the line at the simple or commonplace. "But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and said, Behold, I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper." There you have the Naaman instinct in the human mind, which expects truth to be proclaimed through a megaphone, and cannot hear the still, small voice. To it, "Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel?" And so it will dip itself in the Abana of the philosophy of the unreality of matter, and the Pharpar of the omnipotence of divine Mind, whilst it ignores contemptuously the Jordan of an omitted birthday celebration.

Now it is an axiom of Christian Science that all causation is mental, and that matter is simply a state of the human mind. Sickness then is a result of sickly-mindedness, just as health is of healthy-mindedness, at all events on a specific point. If, then, thinking perpetually of sickness, and making mental pictures of sickness, produces a sick body, and it usually does, is it not obvious that watching the passage of years and counting birthdays must produce the impressions of old age? The man who steadily adds year to year is just as steadily insisting on the reality of matter as the man who adds field to field. No man can say, I am twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, without becoming so, and these statements limit, of very necessity, his belief in eternal life in the exact ratio of his belief in them. This is the immediate and inevitable effect of the keeping of birthdays, and it explains, in one way, those words of Mrs. Eddy's, on page 247 of Science and Health: "The acute belief of physical life comes on at a remote period, and is not so disastrous as the chronic belief." It is not the sudden or acute temptation to believe a lie that produces the bad result; it is the chronic sapping of a man's belief in good, the chronic strengthening of his belief in the power of evil and the reality of matter that weakens his power of resistance until the collapse comes. Therefore, undoubtedly, was it that the apostle James wrote: "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded."

In precisely the same way the man who wishes to overcome the paralyzing belief of age is not likely to do so in a moment. It has been hammered into him, year after year, by his parents, by his associates, and by the state, until the whole method has become one perpetual, though unconscious, conspiracy against his life, from the effects of which he can only escape by drawing nigh to God, to good. His parents begin it, out of the love of their hearts, with birthday cakes, and birthday presents, and birthday parties; so long as they live, indeed, they never leave off reminding him annually that he is getting older. Custom, especially custom in the guise of good, is a terrible conspirator. How to break this custom, how to put an end to the loving but hideously mistaken efforts of relations is a problem in itself. But it is a problem which has to be solved, unless parents wish to injure, possibly irreparably, those whom most they love. If they fail to solve the problem, and the failure comes largely because they will not subject themselves to the unpleasantness of making the stand, because they will not face the criticism of grandparents and aunts, to say nothing of the small sorrows of the children themselves, then, as Mrs. Eddy writes, in the passage already quoted, they "throw the mental influence on the wrong side, thereby actually injuring those whom" they "mean to bless."

There is not the very least doubt that the longer a habit endures the harder it seems to overcome. To tell a man of eighty that he is not eighty is absolute nonsense to him, unless you can show him what life really is. As likely as not he will tell you that the Bible says that "the days of our years are threescore years and ten." At the same time the psalmist was speaking of his own days, and not of the days of Jared and Methuselah, so that the days of the Davidic, or any other era, are not be regarded as the standard of human length of days, and never would have been had not Christendom mesmerized itself for years with the fetish of verbal inspiration. But the truth is that the business of Christendom is not to compete with Methuselah, but to walk in the footsteps of the Christ. The years of Enoch's father were "nine hundred sixty and two," those of his son "nine hundred sixty and nine." But Enoch's own years were only "three hundred sixty and five," and Enoch overcame death. Centuries later Christ Jesus, when the years of men had been reduced to threescore and ten, overcame death in thirty-three years, which is practically the same proportion as the years of Enoch to those of Jared and Methuselah.

The object of human life then, so far as it can be said to have an object, is neither length of days nor fewness of days! It is to learn more of the Christ; in other words, as Paul wrote to the church at Colosse, to put off the old man with his deeds, and to put on the new man, which is the Christ. Now this it is certain can never be done by dwelling on birthdays, which are milestones on the road from the cradle to the grave. The keeping of birthdays, in fact, impresses the materiality of life upon a man in one of the most insidious of ways. A man has to forget birthdays in remembering Principle, to which time is unknown. The exact number of years which a man scientifically requires, is the number it takes him scientifically to demonstrate the unreality of matter and the allness of Principle, by walking in the footsteps of the Christ, Truth.

[Robert S. Ross in Buffalo (N. Y.) Express]

In a recent issue, one signing himself "L. B." invites Christian Scientists to answer these questions: "What is the difference between mere mortals, if we are all sons of God, and the one and only Son of God? How can you separate Jesus from Christ?" Replying thereto, permit me to state that according to the Scriptures God is Spirit. Spirit is the opposite of matter, and admitting that God made all that was made, we cannot avoid concluding that the universe, including man, is in reality not material, but spiritual.

In view of this, materialists will have a difficult time accounting for a material universe and material man. One thing is certain, however, and that is that they cannot reasonably blame these on God. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy is perfectly consistent in its teaching that the material universe and material man are not real, but represent a false material sense of the spiritual or real universe including man. To admit that mortals are the children of God is equivalent to admitting that material imperfection is identical with its opposite,—Spirit, or perfect Principle. Jesus did not claim that as a human being he was the Son of God. On the contrary, he spoke of himself as "a man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God."

It was this truth, or spiritual understanding, transcending the testimony of the so-called material senses, that enabled Jesus of Nazareth so marvelously to arouse himself and others from the belief in matter—with its sin, sickness, and death—that he became known as Jesus the Christ. That Jesus illustrated the Christ, or Truth, and believed it to be possible for others to follow his example, is evident from his own words; for he not only exhorted his followers to do the works that he did, but he went so far as to say, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Truth is demonstrable. This is the touchstone by which sincere seekers for Truth can unfailingly differentiate between true Christianity and mere belief.

[John M. Tutt in West Plains (Mo.) Quill]

The Quill published extracts from an attack on Christian Science delivered in West Plains by a revivalist of the latter-day school of evangelism. "No faith need be kept with a heretic," said the ecclesiasts to John Huss, and burned him at the stake. "No regard for truth need be observed in dealing with Christian Science," is the attitude of the dogmatist of to-day, and to that he religiously adheres. Even as his prototype applied the torch to John Huss' funeral pyre at Prague, so the self-appointed critic of Christian Science goes up and down the land uttering aspersions against Mary Baker Eddy and the religion she founded.

Now Christian Scientists ask nothing more than to be fairly dealt with. Is that too much to expect at the hands of a minister of the gospel of Truth? The truth is, that through the understanding of Christian Science multiplying hosts are emerging from the valley of decision, rejoicing in the new-found liberty of the sons of God. These bodily saved and spiritually regenerated individuals are not mental or moral incompetents, but rather representative citizens in any community; they are your friends, neighbors, relatives, perchance. Many of them were devoted Bible students,—all are now. Many were exemplary Christians,—all are striving to be. Many have literally returned from going down into the pit, restored to health and usefulness through the healing power of Christ as revealed in Christian Science. Not one item of destructiveness, not a downward tendency, can truthfully be accredited to the writings of Mrs. Eddy. Contrariwise, her loyal students in their lives exemplify the constructive character of Christian Science. Healing the sick, reforming the sinner, elevating the race—such are the fruits by which this Christian denomination has the right to be known.

Why should any regard Christian Science as a heresy? Thoughtful reading of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, will convince anyone of fair mind that the essentials of the Scriptural scheme of salvation are all included therein. True, some of the ordinances are shorn of materialism, but these are none the less truly, because spiritually, observed. Said Paul, "The letter killeth." The real issue, then, between the Church of Christ, Scientist, and the other Christian denominations amounts to this: Shall the church return to the healing of the sick as taught and practiced by Jesus, and by his followers for three hundred years after his earthly ministry closed?

The Christian Science church was founded upon a basis of the spiritual healing of physical ills as well as of the overcoming of sin. The world will finally know Christianity by its ability to heal and to save, and meanwhile no amount of persecution, misrepresentation, or deliberate fabrication can stay the progress of that institution which has whole-heartedly accepted for practice all the commands of the Master.

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in The Miami (Fla.) Metropolis]

Whether The Christian Science Monitor has lost much of its former excellence since the entrance of this country into the war, as The Miami Metropolis has asserted, must be a matter of individual opinion, yet the further comment that The Christian Science Monitor has become a British newspaper can hardly be true, unless there is a substantial disagreement between the United States and the United Kingdom with regard to the war.

From the beginning of the war until the United States entered it, the Monitor spoke from the common viewpoint of nations who desired to maintain neutrality in spite of the German government's continual violation of neutral rights. Since the United States entered the war, The Christian Science Monitor has spoken from the common viewpoint of the several nations which have felt obliged to defend universal rights by force of arms. In this situation the Monitor has not become British any more than it has become French, but it has, with at least a fair degree of consistency, spoken as "an international daily newspaper," whose location is in this country and whose voice is lifted in behalf of right against wrong throughout the realm of human affairs.

[The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 3, 1917]

Clarence T. McFarland of 162 Newbury Street, Boston, has been chosen as the architect for the buildings that are to be erected in Brookline by The Christian Science Benevolent Association. Frank H. Anderson of Chicago has been appointed to receive bids from contractors for the erection of the buildings and to supervise their construction. He has opened an office at 236 Huntington Avenue, Boston.

Announcement was made by The Christian Science Board of Directors in October, 1916, that a new department of the organized work of Christian Science had been instituted, to be known as The Christian Science Benevolent Association. Preparations are now under way for the first four of a group of buildings which are to be erected on the twenty-acre tract of land on Single Tree Hill, Brookline, donated for this purpose by Mrs. John M. Longyear.

Benevolent Funds of The Mother Church

"Inclosed please find draft for thirty-one dollars and sixteen cents ($31.16), which is the collection taken in the local church on Sunday, July 29, for the War Relief fund. I am sure I can speak for each one in saying we are sending this with love and a feeling of gratitude that we can do even this little 'bit' to help those dear ones across the sea who need it so much; and especially thankful that we have this channel through which to reach them."

"I am at a loss how adequately to express to you my surprise and pleasure, much less my deep gratitude, when receiving the present of fifty francs, for never before have I received such a great gift from strangers. Will the esteemed relief committee please accept my sincerest thanks for their good will. Next to God, I thank all the donors most sincerely."

"I have to-day received the nice sum of money, and thank the esteemed committee and all the generous donors with all my heart. I cannot thank God enough for this noble gift. Your relief money has helped me out of many a strait in these difficult times. How often has want appeared at my door before I received your present! God has helped me again. He does not forsake us. Since I have turned to Christian Science I have had peace and quiet. Our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, must have been a pious and God-fearing woman, whom God had appointed to bring, through her great love, blessings and peace to so many people. What a noble and rich heritage she has left us! We cannot be too grateful to God and to this noble benefactress."

"I thank God that He has heard my prayer and my call for help. In the midst of the greatest sorrow God has let His light shine upon us. I am deeply grateful for the help received. May God bless and protect all the donors."

"I consider it my duty to convey to you my sincerest thanks for the loving gifts from The Mother Church in Boston extended to me through your relief committee. I am very grateful for the beautiful proofs of divine Love which I have received through Christian Science. In the present dearth I can, with a family of five children, hardly make both ends meet, and that in spite of my hard work as a hand weaver. My heartfelt thanks go out to all the donors."

"Inclosed please find a check for £2 2s. in payment of my per capita tax, and the balance, which you will kindly place to the general fund. Each year increases my debt of gratitude and reverence to our Leader. Had it not been for her marvelous work for the world, these days of storm and trial would have been unbearable."

"At the last meeting of the members of our Students' Association, it was the unanimous vote to send the amount of the inclosed check, two hundred dollars, to our Christian Science Benevolent Association. This is in evidence of our love and loyalty to our revered Leader, our cause, and the present Board of Directors of The Mother Church."

"Inclosed find five dollars which I am sending to the Real Estate fund. I am indeed thankful to have this privilege. Christian Science is everything to me. Words cannot express what it has meant to me, and I am indeed grateful to Mrs. Eddy for bringing to the world this truth about God which is a daily help to all."

Ministering Messengers

THE Bible records relate how Dothan was beset, and Elisha's servant, who could see the besieging army encircling his master's refuge, became fearful. Then the prophet prayed for the young man. He did not pray for a change in the conditions, but only that his eyes might be opened. There was then a demonstration of enlightenment, and when the young man saw aright, behold, the mountain was filled with a protecting host which to his understanding were the horses and chariots of God. Moreover, the invading host became blind, and so the men were helpless, though still possessing armor and weapons, horses and chariots, and all the material beliefs whereby they had sought to induce fear and submission. Elisha knew that the heavenly legions were nigh and available, even as Daniel did, who found starved and raging wild beasts harmless because of the presence of an angel of God.

It is of interest to every one to know how to receive the ministry of angels, and the method for making oneself ready is simply illustrated in the life of Jesus. When he had consecrated himself in baptism to divine work, immediately he had to meet all the arguments of the world, the flesh, and the devil which combinedly war against spiritual intuition and metaphysical demonstration. These temptations came as thoughts pretending to be true, visions pretending to be real, promises pretending that good could come from an earthly and evil source.

Never was it more clearly shown how the Bible is a chart guiding into right channels of thought than by the way Jesus became master and secured liberation both from temptations and tempter by the clear statements of truth quoted from Holy Writ. Then it followed that the devil left him, and "angels came and ministered unto him." For our encouragement Mrs. Eddy has written (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 204), "When the good fight is fought, error yields up its weapons and kisses the feet of Love, while white-winged peace sings to the heart a song of angels."

When Jesus conquered temptation, nothing unusual had to come into existence. He was enlightened by the light of Love, and the facts became known to him—that was all. The occurrence is in accord with what the textbook says (Science and Health, p. 503): "Divine Science, the Word of God, saith to the darkness upon the face of error, 'God is All-in-all,' and the light of ever-present Love illumines the universe. Hence the eternal wonder,—that infinite space is peopled with God's ideas, reflecting Him in countless spiritual forms."

How then shall we be delivered from the fiction and enjoy the fact? Shakespeare says:—

> O hateful error, melancholy's child!
> Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
> The things that are not.

How then may we really know that "the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal"? How shall we so endure temptation as to open our lives by victory to fellowship with God's divine messages, so as to find true for ourselves what they did of whom it was said, "The angel of his presence saved them"?

There is no royal way, of course. No one by using servants or slaves, money or human power, can build the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." No mortal man may command the angels, howsoever great he may be. But God dwelleth with the meek, the humble and the contrite, and in such a house the angels are welcome. Let us be reassured by the words of our Leader (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 152): "May meekness, mercy, and love dwell forever in the hearts of those who worship in this tabernacle . . . Thus founded upon the rock of Christ, when storm and tempest beat against this sure foundation, you, safely sheltered in the strong tower of hope, faith, and Love, are God's nestlings; and He will hide you in His feathers till the storm has passed. Into His haven of Soul there enters no element of earth to cast out angels, to silence the right intuition which guides you safely home."

Temples

WE are all familiar with the thought of temples as expressed in human experience past and present, although we perhaps have not often paused to realize that a temple points to something above and beyond the material structure; that rightly understood it symbolizes a spiritual idea which is imperfectly understood if recognized at all by mankind. Too often has a splendid temple called forth little except pride and personal satisfaction, as for instance where Jesus' disciples called his attention to the temple at Jerusalem which, as they said, was "adorned with goodly stones and gifts." His only comment apparently was this: "As for these things which ye behold, the days will come, in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down."

To the more spiritual thought of that time, or indeed of any time, a temple was a place in which to worship God, and we find St. Paul seizing upon this thought and applying it to the human embodiment. In the sixth chapter of I Corinthians he gives a severe rebuke to moral impurity and asks, "Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ?" and then he goes on to say, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God . . . therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." This was undoubtedly taking a long step forward on the part of those who had been accustomed to think of themselves and others largely as the votaries of sensual pleasure, and it seems that even after they began to accept Christianity, possibly after they had felt its healing influence, they were yet enticed by the evil tendencies of the flesh, which really means of mortal mind. How wonderful then it must have been for them to think even of their bodies as temples for divine service into which nothing impure could enter and from which consequently nothing impure could go forth. Alas for it, that this lofty ideal of consecration has so been lost sight of throughout the centuries until the present hour, when through the healing ministry of Christian Science its appeal is even more insistent than at any time in the past.

The faithful student of Christian Science does not allow his thought to linger long about the body, because he has learned the deep import of our Leader's words on page 261 of Science and Health: "Look away from the body into Truth and Love, the Principle of all happiness, harmony, and immortality." In most cases the healing influence of divine Truth has been proved to him through bodily healing, although as he advances he learns that the healing and purification of thought is responsible for this. Nevertheless, to himself and others the evidence appears to be changed bodily conditions, and for this he is rightly thankful. It may be, however, that too seldom do we think of ourselves and others in the way which St. Paul points out and which he again expresses in his second epistle to the Corinthians where he says: "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." What follows is a rousing appeal against impurity of every sort, so that the followers of Christ Jesus may indeed show themselves to be sons and daughters of God, manifesting the health, holiness, and happiness which are the reward of divine service.

In the Glossary of Science and Health (p. 595) the word temple is thus defined: "Body; the idea of Life, substance, and intelligence; the superstructure of Truth; the shrine of Love; a material superstructure, where mortals congregate for worship." There are besides this numerous deeply significant references to temple in Science and Health, also in our Leader's other writings, all of them lifting thought above sensuality and mortality. When the human body is spoken of, the reader's thought is directed away from its supposed sensations of pleasure or pain to spiritual reality. This enables the student to obey in ever larger measure the Master's command to take no thought for the body, obedience to which enlarges the outlook so that one may behold the universal temple of Spirit which knows no limits.

Thought thus unconfined breathes deep in the pure atmosphere of Truth and Love and in time is enabled to apprehend more clearly the meaning of John's apocalyptic vision in which we read, respecting the holy city, "I saw no temple therein." Ere this great vision can be fully realized all tears must be wiped away, and sin, disease, and death blotted out by the understanding of divine reality; each day's experience giving abundant opportunity for the divine service which consecrates existence and glorifies it with the unending consciousness of God with us, the light and Life of all being.

One Cause

To rejoice in the scientifically Christian conviction that there is but one cause, and that God, good, is that cause, is to possess the scepter of spiritual dominion which destroys sorrow, sickness, and sin. The bereaved, the diseased, those bound by the ignorance which is sin, are all suffering from the belief that there is more than one cause. Death itself is but a supposition that another power besides God can dispute the life of man with Him. The oneness of all spiritual causation underlies the whole of the Hebrew theology out of which came the Christian. "The Lord our God is one Lord" is the Hebrew declaration of independence from the seeming power of evil. Jesus completed man's emancipation when he declared, "I and my Father are one," but this statement was not scientifically explained until Mrs. Eddy showed that man in God's image and likeness is one with the Father-Mother in quality, expressing the divine attributes. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 85 of Science and Health: "The great Teacher knew both cause and effect, knew that truth communicates itself but never imparts error." To-day the spiritually minded have within their mental reach, ready to be demonstrated in overcoming evil, the comforting, provable assurance that God, as the one and only cause, neither sends nor knows evil.

Of this one cause it can be definitely stated that "his mercy endureth forever." In that superb outburst of glorious assurance, known as the one hundred and thirty-sixth psalm, eyery verse ends with this powerful note of mercy. His reward is ever with Him. God is described as good, "the God of gods," "the Lord of lords," the doer of wonders, the creator of heaven and earth, of the sun, moon, and stars, the destroyer of evil, the rescuer of Israel, that is, of that state of consciousness which is receptive of spiritual teaching, who leads man through the loneliness and doubts of the wilderness, brushes aside the kings of earth, the seemingly powerful beliefs of materiality, and provides an undying heritage for His redeemed. After Nehemiah with great spiritual endurance and divine guidance had been able to rebuild the wall of Jerusalem, a solemn act of repentance was performed by the children of Israel, and the Levites rehearsed God's endless forbearance in spite of their repeated backslidings: "Nevertheless for thy great mercies' sake thou didst not utterly consume them, nor forsake them; for thou art a gracious and merciful God."

When, therefore, the patient discloses his trouble to the Christian Science practitioner, he uncovers his fears, and these repose upon his ignorance of the eternal fact that God is the only cause and that He is merciful. Moreover, this one cause is Mind. Herein lies the solution of the questioning which comes to every aspiring Christian who has wondered how God could be ever powerful and yet invisible. Mind cannot be seen, nor for that matter can power of any kind be visible to material sense. But Mind can be everywhere present and operate as cause unseen. This one God who is ever merciful is, therefore, to be approached mentally or spiritually, through the avenues of divine logic and fundamental reasoning which are effective in healing sin and sickness, because they transcend personal sense. If there is no causation in matter, physical law, or mortal mind, then there can be no effects from such supposititious cause. The whole phantasmagoria of material existence is seen to be mere illusion, based upon no cause, deriving its sanction from no authority, performing its gyrations in a vicious circle having neither sanction nor force in fact.

Glorious then is the peace which comes to the troubled consciousness which recognizes that the only cause being infinitely good, all the effects of this cause are equally good; that the reality of being can never be tinctured with the least discoloration of evil; that no cause really exists which could have produced a mental or bodily hurt. No loss can be sustained in reality, no injury inflicted, no sickness implanted, no sin suggested, and no death can ensue unless there is at least the pretence of a cause. But since God has within Himself no elements out of which such disasters could arise, they cannot be real effects proceeding from a real cause and must be mistaken beliefs only, to be corrected by the spiritual understanding of the one cause.

Mrs. Eddy sums up the whole problem of causation on page 24 of "Retrospection and Introspection," when she writes of her great discovery in the following terms: "The discovery came to pass in this way. During twenty years prior to my discovery I had been trying to trace all physical effects to a mental cause; and in the latter part of 1866 I gained the scientific certainty that all causation was Mind, and every effect a mental phenomenon." Out of this realization came the "scientific statement of being" found on page 468 of Science and Health.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States and of its allies who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

Christian Science War Relief Committee,
236 Huntington Avenue, Room 319,
Boston, U.S.A.

Notice to Subscribers in Canada

Some Canadian subscribers to the Christian Science periodicals are making the mistake of placing a one-cent stamp on the notice of the United States Postmaster-General and sending them to the Canadian post office for transmission to soldiers at the front in Europe. The Canadian postal department is not forwarding these periodicals, but sending them to the dead letter office. It would be well therefore for Canadian subscribers to note that this ruling of A. G. Burleson, Postmaster-General for the United States, is effective in the United States only.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

ANTIOCH, CAL.—Early in the year 1910 six Christian Scientists began to read the Lesson-Sermon at the residence of one of their number. Through the work accomplished by this little company the number gradually increased, so that in the fall of 1910 it became necessary to secure larger quarters, and Union Hall was rented for midweek and Sunday meetings. In July, 1911, a society was organized with a charter membership of fifteen, and in 1912 a building lot was purchased on the corner of Fifth and D Streets. On March 12, 1915, the temporary chapel now occupied was begun on the rear of the lot, leaving room for a main church building when such is needed. This chapel was completed and the first meeting held there on April 4 following. The seating capacity is about one hundred.—Antioch Ledger.

NEBRASKA.—The Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy are still supplying public libraries with our Leader's writings as well as with the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society. During the year, thirty-seven libraries in the state received books and literature from this source. Committees of churches and societies have distributed, so far as reported, Christian Science literature as follows: Sentinels, 20,318; Journals, 939; Heralds, 3215; Monitors, 49,860; miscellaneous, 7544. From the office of the committee on publication the following distributions have been made: Sentinels, 2278; Journals, 46; Heralds, 336; Monitors, 10,104, exclusive of special war service. Total copies from all sources reported, 94,746.

The Lectures

LONDON, ENGLAND (Eighth Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Walter Alvey, who said in part:—

There are thousands to-day whose needs are not satisfied. Wanderers in the wilderness of doubt and darkness, they are hungering and thirsting for something that so-called orthodox creeds and doctrines cannot give them. They desire to believe in a God who is all-wise, all-powerful, and all-loving, but they cannot reconcile the existence of such a Deity with the terrible evils and calamities which have overtaken mankind. The cry of their heart is the cry of Job, "O that I knew where I might find him!"

To this cry Christian Scientists would gladly and quickly respond, leading these seekers to the knowledge which in their own case has been so helpful, so uplifting, so consoling; for Christian Science declares, as does the Bible, that God is All, and that He is good, and that man is His image and likeness. It maintains these great facts, in the face of all material evidence to the contrary, not only by the unanswerable logic of its reasoning but by practical proofs in the reformation of the sinner and the healing of the sick. It accepts with full faith the promises of our Lord and Master, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." This is the way that Jesus himself marked out for us—the way of knowledge and practice, of understanding and demonstration; and every student of Christian Science who is treading that way humbly and faithfully is proving for himself and others the truth of these promises, is gaining to an ever increasing extent freedom from the bondage of the material senses, from fear and inharmony of every description, from sin and sickness and sorrow.

MONTCLAIR, N. J. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Guy Gaylor Clark, who said in part:—

Christian Science teaches and eventually proves to us that nothing can be "too good to be true" because the creator of all that is "saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Therefore Christian Science also declares of all evil that it is too bad to be true, for without God, good, "was not any thing made that was made." Christian Science has not, however, abandoned the struggle against the false claims of evil and is daily proving the unreality of evil, not by overlooking, but by overcoming its claims. It is eliminating sorrow, sickness, and sin from human consciousness by one and the same metaphysical process, and is thereby demonstrating that Christianity is scientific and unwaveringly true.

GUTHRIE, OKLA. (First Church).—Dr. Francis J. Fluno, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. C. C. Smith, who said in part:—

Down the centuries, mankind has ever been yearning for deliverance from the fetters of sin, sickness, and sorrow; yet Christ Jesus plainly said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" and as a result of this knowing he healed all manner of disease and every form of sin. Mrs. Eddy revealed the same truth to this day and age through her discovery of Christian Science, the law of God, and many thousands bear grateful testimony to the benefits received. Christian Science is proving abundantly that true science is Christian, and true Christianity is scientific.

TACOMA, WASH. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by G. Roy Eastman, who said in part:—

The purpose of a Christian Science lecture is to benefit all mankind by clear statements of the truth about God and man, and the world to-day has need of this understanding as never before. Jesus said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," but preceding this promise of freedom was the condition, "If ye continue in my word." Christian Science is the word of God to this age.

Truth transcends the material senses, and is therefore a revelation. It is not something to be stored up in temples of flesh. Truth is infinite, therefore ever present; that which should be known and realized. Then it is not something to be suggested, or transferred, or manipulated. Truth is no respecter of persons, and does not operate for selfish or inferior motives, since what blesses one must, in absolute Science, bless all.

This healing and saving power is eternal and ever operative, and is to be utilized by humanity as it was by Jesus, according to the need. Flesh and blood, however, does not constitute the brotherhood of man—but a common understanding of God as divine Principle does this. This fact understood is the foundation of spiritual healing as Jesus taught it.—The Tacoma Tribune.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y. (Society).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by A. H. Richardson, who said in part:—

Although discovered only about fifty years ago by Mary Baker Eddy, a New England woman of wonderful spiritual insight, Christian Science as a restatement of Christ's Christianity links the period and works of the Master with to-day. Of the eternality of the Christ, Truth, we have the Master's own statement as recorded in John, "Before Abraham was, I am;" in other words, the working Principle of Christian Science is as old as "the Ancient of days," for it is the power of God coming to man through the understanding of the Christ. The growth of the Christian Science movement during this brief interval of fifty years, from the discovery of one woman to a religious activity of world-wide influence, marks the practical success as applied to all human affairs of religion that not only preaches the gospel but heals the sick —that saves from sorrow, sickness, and sin.

HARROGATE, ENGLAND (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Charles W. Swift, who said in part:—

Throughout the world's history, as we know it, the struggle for liberty has been unceasing in individuals as well as in nations, and in every heart to-day there is a yearning for freedom from evil circumstance, sin, sickness, disease, and death. This inherent desire for liberty has caused the noblest men and women of every race to seek means whereby humanity could be uplifted so as to realize that freedom lies along the path of right endeavor. Thus it is that the reformers who have most clearly recognized that obedience to Principle, as demonstrated by Jesus of Nazareth, was the only way by which real freedom could be gained, are the reformers who have been of the greatest service to mankind. Such a reformer was Mary Baker Eddy. She revealed to the world the present possibility of Christlike obedience to Principle in the affairs of nations as well as of individuals. Opportunities are constantly being presented to each one of us to show our obedience to Principle in every activity of our daily lives, and as it is realized that this is the way of salvation for all mankind, we shall all desire to do our share in bringing into human experience the liberty of the children of God.—The Harrogate Herald.

HELENA, ARK. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by the Hon. Skipwith W. Adams, who said in part:—

Although my knowledge is very limited, I believe I understand somewhat the basic truths upon which Christian Science is founded. All Christians, I think, have read and have had some little faith in the command of Jesus to his disciples, "As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." But it has been left to our friends the Christian Scientists to seek literally to carry out this divine injunction. Likewise all of us Christians have felt in our hearts that "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need" (Science and Health, p. 494). But I am convinced that the Christian Scientists alone, as a church, have made this belief a living, vitalizing force in their lives.

The Helena World.

LOS ANGELES, CAL. (Second Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Elizabeth Esgen, who said in part:—

What is the truth about life? Is man inevitably bound to the seemingly endless tragedy of sin and disease, destruction and death? Every man is assailed by these questions, with an intense longing for satisfying knowledge concerning them. President Wilson has recently cited the Bible to our noble army of soldiers for the answer to their deepest problems. "Search the scriptures," said Jesus the Christ, designated by Mrs. Eddy as the "most scientific man that ever trod the globe" (Science and Health, p. 313). Christian Scientists can truly aver that we have found the reasonable and provable answer to our fearful human questionings in the Bible, as it is elucidated in our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," written by our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy.

IOLA, KAN. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by F. W. Frevert, who said in part:—

We are told in the Bible that God is Love, and Christian Science is demonstrating this truth to countless thousands in nearly all countries of the world through the healing of sin and disease. Never in the history of the world has there been greater need of a knowledge and a more perfect understanding of God than at the present time. In these days of great stress and disquiet Christian Science has indeed a message of peace, love, and good will to men.

Testimonies of Healing

The lines I am penning to-day are the grateful testimony of one whose life has been transformed by Christian Science, and to whom a new concept of God has been revealed. I have received so many blessings from this teaching that I long to see it spread everywhere. My childhood and my youth were not, however, devoid of religion. I am the daughter of a Protestant minister and was brought up without any undue formalism in a deeply religious home. I was myself a believer, but later, when I reached the age when one thinks for oneself, many doubts came to me, many questions rose up to confront me and remained unanswered. I had given up reading the Bible, as I did not understand it, and I seldom prayed, being under the impression that I did not know how to pray.

At length trials came to me, long and very painful, and in my distress I asked God why He allowed those who had not done anything deserving misfortune to go on suffering. Nothing, however, touched my trust in God, which in spite of all remained intact, deep and vital; so when nearly two years ago I heard Christian Science mentioned for the first time, I at once had the impression that that which I had long been expecting had been sent to me.

I was at this time working beyond my strength at hospital work, further complicated by my own personal duties. I was depressed by the sadness of the war, and was on the way to becoming a nervous wreck. The immediate effect of the appearing of Christian Science in my life was to quiet entirely my mental distress and to remove the extreme and painful sense of physical fatigue which haunted me. This happened even before I had begun to study, since all I knew of this religion was what I had been able to glean from a few talks with some one who had been ill but was healed, and the reading of three pamphlets translated into French.

Shortly after this I went to see an earnest Christian Scientist who ever since has been my friend. She has helped me effectually over all hard places, and has also directed me kindly under difficult circumstances. Thanks to her help many errors have already disappeared to make place for truth. Thanks also to her, I have been able to know better the admirable Founder of Christian Science, of whom I was ignorant owing to my not knowing English.

As I belonged to the healthy class I was not able to furnish the spectacle of a sudden and miraculous healing, but tenacious and troublesome woes have disappeared; painful disorders from cold and damp, to which I was subject during six months of every year, have ceased to trouble me, whereas various sorts of baths had been of no avail. Finally, great physical strength, endurance, and balance have been given me, such as I had never known before. I work with joy, with eagerness, at all which seems to me good and useful, and am never hindered by fatigue, for my strength is always equal to my ever increasing tasks.

But the moral healing I owe to Christian Science is much greater and more precious than the physical healing. I was sad, troubled, anxious, and Christian Science has brought me joy, peace, and trust; I was a prey to doubt, and it has given me sure convictions; I was attacked by fear of every kind, about myself and about those I love, but this truth has reassured me and shown me that naught can touch those who with a firm hope seek their refuge in God.

All through my life I tried honestly to get rid of my faults and of my bad feelings, of my unkindness, but always without avail. That which I was not able to attain through the human will was attained through Truth, and the enemy is now fleeing and is being conquered. Christian Science is with me always, even in the smallest details of daily life, and obstacles, worries, and difficulties disappear as darkness before light, through the faith and trust it gives us.

I am only at the beginning of my luminous path; other joys, other wonders, are awaiting me farther along the road, and my firm hope cannot be disappointed. At every step forward in this new way, at every victory over evil, my thought goes to our beloved and revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, who has taught me to know God and His Christ. She remains ever present among her followers, and the results of her fruitful sacrifice are multiplying from day to day. My voice will not cease from proclaiming all my life long the gratitude which fills my heart.

MADELAINE PORTRON, Deux-Sèvres, France.

The testimonies of benefits received through the teachings of Christian Science, as they appear in the Sentinel and the Journal, become more and more a rebuke to me, because I have so long withheld my own. Sickness and evil seemed very real to me always, and experiences strengthened belief in their power and presence, so that even when a young girl and fairly well myself, the misery of the world seemed a terrible thing, for which one could do so little. Then came marriage and motherhood and the failure of my own strength and courage, one sick spell after another, and all sorts of diseased conditions. For a few years I followed the beaten path of medical methods. One physician after another told me that I could never be well and strong, till it became a settled conviction and I tried to make the best of it. Drugs had little effect, yet there were times when something had to be done and we knew of nothing better.

I cannot remember a time when I was not interested in spiritual things; as a child I loved the Sunday school and committed to memory many verses from the Bible, which later on were very helpful in demonstrating Christian Science. As sickness and trouble grew more oppressive, I turned more to the Bible and thought much about Jesus' words and works, wondering why we could not heal as he did and contending that our religion was lacking in some way, else it would heal disease. There came a time when I emptied out my medicine bottles and threw them as far as I could, because I had been poisoned through a mistake and was without any faith in drugs.

The loss of our one child had added the last drop seemingly to a bitter cup. Then my husband's health failed and my thought was turned more from self in caring for him. After discarding all drugs for myself, I seemed for two years before hearing of Christian Science to gain a firmer tone somehow, and my physical condition improved considerably; but always there was the seeming lack of strength, fear of consequences, and carefulness. I was worn out with the long illness and later by the death of my husband, but another year passed before I heard of Christian Science, though I now know I had caught a glimpse of the truth "in the quiet sanctuary of earnest longings" (Science and Health, p. 15) and had been helped by it. After hearing of a case of healing in our neighborhood, spoken of as faith cure, I was interested. I finally heard the name Christian Science, but three months passed before it penetrated the cloak of "resignation" in which I had wrapped myself.

It was in a little country church one Sunday morning, when feeling such a sense of exhaustion as made me wish I dare lie down on the hard floor, that the decision was made to try Christian Science at once. This stimulating thought dispelled the sense of weakness for the time being, and I never felt it again, for my whole life was changed in a moment, during my first talk with one who knew God aright. From that time on I felt perfectly free, and so fearless that I reveled in the hardest things I could find to do, and there was no fear of consequences. Diseased organs were healed and every function became normal; sleep returned, and that first night was one not yet forgotten. Whereas before I had lain awake till early morning or slept with troubled dreams, that night I slept from the moment my head was on the pillow till morning. I felt perfectly well, full of life and energy; I kept busy continually and never tired, a condition altogether new to me.

Soon after hearing of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy I purchased a copy, and before the first reading was finished I was able to prove the truth for others. After over thirty years I can say that Christian Science has kept me so perfectly that I have never been off duty for one whole day. There have been temptations plenty, uphill struggles, fearfully hard places, but above and through the thick clouds there have been glorious glimpses of reality.—HARRIET E. WERNER, Stanton, Neb.

I wish to express deep gratitude for what Christian Science has done and is doing for me. I heard of it first in 1908, when in great mental anguish, at a time when long and earnest prayer seemed unavailing and there was no possible relief anywhere. The friend who at my request told me of Christian Science, answered all my questions patiently and to my entire satisfaction. In a few minutes I found what I had longed for all my life, namely, a practical religion, with a God who was near at hand at all times, whom I could understand and learn to know, and not merely believe in.

Never shall I forget the joy of that hour and of the months that followed. My friends declared I looked ten years younger, and I felt like "a new creature;" the "old things" had indeed passed away. My whole outlook on life entirely changed, for from the first I never had a doubt that Christian Science was indeed the truth taught by Christ Jesus, the Christ-method of healing I had so often longed for but could not comprehend. In the nine years since then this sense of joy has never left me. Though the way has often seemed rugged and uphill, my experiences have been but stepping-stones to a higher understanding of the divine Principle which saves and heals.

Through the study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I have had numerous beautiful healings, both physical, mental, and moral, so that from being frequently depressed, nervous, and generally delicate, I am now cheerful, strong, and healthy. I have seen diphtheria, measles, severe colds, and many other ailments quickly overcome, the first two with one treatment, through knowing that nothing is impossible to God; but far beyond this is the better understanding of God as our Father-Mother, ever present Love. I am daily proving that good alone governs, is the only power, the only activity.

In 1914 I had the great privilege of class instruction. For the strength and confidence and innumerable blessings gained thereby, I can never be sufficiently grateful. I rejoice to know the truth which frees us from all that is unlike God, which gives us "the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." I am grateful too for the Christian Science literature, together with Mrs. Eddy's writings, which are my daily guide and support in the journey from sense to Soul. Through the study of these the Bible has become a new book to me.

Words can never express my thankfulness to God for the rich benefits I have received, nor to that noble, unselfish woman, Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. I love God's work more than all else, and my daily prayer is that in helping others as I have been helped, I may do my part in bringing the kingdom of heaven on earth.—MARY GREENTREE, Cosham, Hants, England.

Like many other people I was literally forced into Christian Science by ill health. Stomach trouble of seven years' standing refused to yield to medical treatment, and I was sentenced to a life of diet and distress, when Christian Science freed me. Naturally I wanted to learn more about that power which had accomplished in a short time what medicine had failed to do in years, and so I became a student of Mrs. Eddy's teachings.

Two years ago, and not long after my healing, I became interested in the advertising business. The firm which I serve decided to create a local advertising department to help its sales in New England, and although I had had no previous experience except that of a salesman, I was asked to take charge of this department and develop it. My first impulse was to purchase and read all the books on advertising which I could find, and thus acquaint myself with this new work, but so many of these contained conflicting statements that the effect was confusing. As I reflected upon this sense of confusion the thought came to me that here was a wonderful opportunity to put into practice the teachings of Christian Science as found in our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

Since I had had no previous experience and there was nothing to unlearn, the work was fairly easy. Each activity of my work was preceded by a prayer for light, for a consciousness of the truth, for a clear reflection of the one Mind. At times mortal mind would come with its offers of deceit and hypnotism and would point out how these things could greatly advance my work, but these arguments crumbled into nothingness when tested with the acid of Truth.

It was not until last June that I had a chance to measure the understanding of Truth that had come to me against a material standard, when I went to the convention of advertising men. After listening to the reading of numerous papers and talking with many men well up in the business, I came home filled with amazement and joy, for I not only thought as they did along the lines of constructive and good advertising but was able to give out ideas which were new even to them. Only two years ago I knew nothing about the advertising business; clearly, then, what I have done has been accomplished through the reflection of the one governing intelligence.—WILLARD HALL, Brookline, Mass.

When I began to think about religion and the teachings of the established churches, I drifted away from church and religion and for many years was what is known as an agnostic. Some eight years ago my wife, having heard considerable about Christian Science, requested me to attend a Wednesday evening meeting with her. I did so, but told her after the meeting that I thought Christian Science one of the biggest delusions I ever heard of. After that evening we gave the subject no further thought.

About two years subsequent to this occurrence I began to be ailing, and suffered from stomach and bowel trouble, auto-intoxication, sleeplessness, and kidney trouble (for which a truss was worn). Several doctors were consulted and I took the medicine they prescribed, but received very little help. I was also examined by a specialist, and when he got through I had more ailments than before. About that time several cases of healing through Christian Science were brought to my notice, and I concluded that if these people had been healed by it there was no reason why I too could not be cured. I applied to a practitioner for help, attended the services at the church, and began to study Science and Health with great interest, with the result that soon all the ailments, except the kidney trouble, began to disappear. The practitioner frequently advised me that there was no necessity for my continuing to wear a truss, but every time it was left off for a day or two I imagined that I could not get along without it; so finally, in order to get away from the temptation to wear the support, I burned it. That was over three years ago, and since then I have been free from kidney trouble also.

For all these benefits I am sincerely thankful, also for having found in Christian Science, through the guidance of Mrs. Eddy, that truth for which I searched in vain during many years.—CHRISTIAN MEIER, Chicago, Ill.

[Translated from the German]

My heart is full of gratitude; and I am moved by a sense of deep love to God in giving this testimony of the many blessings and benefits received through Christian Science at a time when I was experiencing untold misery. I feel utterly incapable of giving adequate expression to my innermost gratitude.

When the war broke out my worry and misery began, as I lost my position and was left alone, without means of support and without relatives who might have cared for me. To this misfortune was added another: I fell in such a way that as a result I had to spend several weeks at the hospital, and during the following few months could only move along with difficulty and pain, using a stick. This, added to the worry concerning my livelihood, led to a nervous breakdown. The trembling of my hands was such that I could not carry either cup or spoon to my mouth.

I was in such a state of despair that I began seriously to doubt the existence of God; but the all-loving Father had compassion upon me, and in my greatest need a helper was sent in the person of a Christian Scientist. Up to that time I had never heard of Christian Science and its glorious teachings. This Scientist lovingly took care of me, read to me from the Bible with elucidations from Science and Health, and then recommended me to an older practitioner. Both ladies devoted their attention to me in the most loving way, and I was not only completely restored in four months' time, but Christian Scientists readily furnished me with the means by which I have been able to subsist until this day.

I am filled with deep gratitude to God for having brought everything to pass so wonderfully, and for enabling me to see the truth, to which I shall hold fast all my life, and in which I desire to live and have my being. I also remember our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, with deep gratitude and reverence. Christian Science has made a better woman of me, and my daily prayer is that I may gain a better understanding of its teachings, that good only may be expressed through me. I have regained peace and sing praises unto the Lord.

FRAU AGNES MIX-HOLDER EGGER, Dresden, Germany.

More than twenty years ago Christian Science healed me of an affection of the head and spine of such an extreme nature that one physician had told me if I did not have an operation I would probably lose my mind. The pain at times was almost unendurable, and I had tried several schools of medicine with little or no relief.

About four years previous to this I had taken Christian Science treatment for some minor ailment and had been cured, but I was not sufficiently interested to look into the subject, and soon returned to medicine, with the above result. Many times my thoughts turned toward Christian Science, and at last in my dire need I sought a practitioner and was healed in a few treatments. Two or three times since then some of the old symptoms have tried to assert themselves, but they have always been cast out by the application of the truth. I have learned that in order to attain health and happiness I must supplant thoughts of hate with those of love, and good will must take the place of criticism; while for thoughts of envy and jealousy I must substitute those of gratitude and thankfulness. Discouragement, idleness, apathy, procrastination, and disorder must give way to courage, perseverance, alertness, system, and order. Thus in a measure I have learned what our Leader meant when she said that "the human self must be evangelized" (Science and Health, p. 254). When this rule is followed I find I can demonstrate for myself and others the Principle which casts out disease and sin.

In my immediate family many diseases have been overcome by this mighty truth. A cough of about eight years' standing, which had grown to be most serious, yielded in two or three treatments. A child in the last stages of diphtheria was restored to health when seemingly she had but a short time to live. Colds, rheumatism, poisoning, tonsillitis, bowel trouble, and many other discordant conditions have faded into nothingness through the application of an understanding of this wonderful Principle. My experience has proved to me beyond a doubt that Christian Science does heal sickness, sorrow, and sin. I was a singer and had suffered untold agonies from what is commonly termed the artistic temperament, so not the least part of my healing was the finding that this particular idiosyncrasy does not belong to man.

To our beloved and revered Leader my heart daily sings pæans of praise and gratitude that she, through her great gift to humanity, has taught us to know and love God and our fellow man.—MINNIE CRUDUP VESEY, New York, N. Y.

I wish to acknowledge the benefits I have received from the study of Christian Science. I was healed of the habit of profanity by attending one Wednesday evening meeting. The next morning I started to swear at something, but a "still small voice" whispered in my ear, saying that if I were going over there to church I could not do that, and from that day to this profanity has grated on my ears. I have also learned to hate less and to love more. Through my slight understanding of the truth I have been able to overcome colds, headache, and influenza. My eyesight has all my life been poor, and when a boy ten years of age I used glasses that a normal person seventy to seventy-five years of age would use. While my eyes to-day are not perfect, they are better than they have ever been.

I give this testimony trusting and hoping that it may help some poor wanderer in the wilderness. I think this world is under obligations to Mrs. Eddy, more than it can ever pay.

MANLY T. CLOSE, Denver, Col.

When I think of the blessings I have received through Christian Science, I feel impelled to give my testimony as the best way to express my gratitude and by so doing help some one else. For thirty-five years I had suffered from what is known as inflammatory rheumatism, and when I came into Christian Science I was using crutches. After traveling from one state to another under the orders of the doctors, growing worse all the time, I was told that nothing could be done for me. Shortly after this I was advised by a friend to try Christian Science, and on heeding this advice was healed instantaneously and permanently.

This healing occurred twenty-three years ago, and since then a very bad rupture has been overcome. I am well and hearty. Although past seventy-seven years of age I have been motoring all over southern California this summer, and drove the car myself. This is not all, however, for I find the moral uplift above everything. I am very grateful that I have all of Mrs. Eddy's works and am a subscriber to the regular Christian Science literature; in fact I read little else. I am truly thankful for my many blessings.

About five years ago I turned to Christian Science for physical healing. At that time I was suffering from what two physicians called intercostal neuralgia. The physician under whose care I had been for about eight months and who stands high in his profession said he had given me everything he knew of that was applicable to the case in the line of medicine, and could offer me no encouragement that I would ever be permanently cured. Acting on his advice I then tried other kinds of treatment, but received little benefit. Christian Science was very highly recommended to me, and so I turned to that. With the first treatment I received help and when I had been under treatment five weeks the pain all disappeared.

Since that time I have relied wholly on Christian Science and have always received help. The Bible was a book which I had never read, but in connection with the Christian Science textbook it has become the most interesting of all books to me. I know the promises there are meant for us to-day. It is my wish to be more obedient to the teachings of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and to be worthy to be called a Christian Scientist.

ELIZABETH M. STEPHENSON, New Bedford, Mass.

For the past thirteen years Christian Science has been my only source of help in all difficulties. During that time I have experienced numerous healings. Realizing what it means in this day to live sixteen years without resort to medicine, I am filled with a deep sense of gratitude for the benefits received from this truth.

An attack of influenza last winter was so effectually overcome in twenty-four hours that I was able to attend an entertainment on a wet, snowy night immediately following this experience. Among the errors that are daily being overcome are ingratitude and dissatisfaction. Nothing ever seemed good enough for me or pleased me. Now I am learning that everything good comes from God, who is the source of all supply, and is therefore all that one could possibly desire. Hence gratitude is more constantly my condition of thought, and existence is proportionably happier. The constant overcoming of ill temper, lack of love, criticism, egotism, envy, and fear of every sort, is cause for rejoicing, as it has turned life from something to be continually disappointed in, to that for which to be grateful, since each day we acquire more of the understanding which purifies.

I am deeply appreciative of Mrs. Eddy's untiring work on behalf of humanity, resulting in the wonderful discovery which is such a continual blessing to mankind.

MARGUERITE B. KIMBALL, Pittsburgh, Pa.

With a heart full of gratitude to God and to the Founder of Christian Science, as well as with the desire to obey the golden rule, I give this testimony of the healing power of Christian Science as it has been demonstrated in our home.

In the fall of 1913 my wife was declared insane by our physician, who had certainly done all that he could for her. After an examination she was consigned to the state hospital at Hastings, Nebraska, in which state we were then living. While there she received treatment from nerve specialists, but without any apparent improvement, and at the end of a year was declared incurable. On the advice of a friend who had seen proofs of the power of Christian Science to heal, I then engaged a practitioner to treat my wife. After about a month's treatment my wife wrote to me for the first time since she was taken away; and her letters continued to come and to show gradual improvement, until the spring of 1915, when we considered her completely healed and I was permitted to bring her home. She has resumed the care of our two little children, and is as capable as anyone to care for and to help establish our home.

Words cannot express the joy that has come to us with this demonstration, and it is our earnest desire to grow in the knowledge of Christ and to be able to help others as we have been helped.—E. H. SPENCER, Wray, Col.

There has long been a desire in my heart to express my gratitude for the many blessings which have come to me and mine through Christian Science. Through the reading of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, my eyes were straightened and my sight became normal. One eye was crossed, and I had worn glasses since childhood in the hope that the muscles of the eye would be strengthened thereby, but to no avail.

I have had many beautiful demonstrations of physical healing, but this experience seemed most wonderful to me. I find that when the rules of Christian Science are rightly applied in daily life, it becomes very apparent that divine Love does meet and supply our every need. How comforting to know that Love never faileth and that we can prove this! Far more to us than the physical healing is the spiritual unfoldment. Science and Health is truly a "Key to the Scriptures," for it has made us love and understand the Bible in its spiritual light.

We are so grateful for the Lesson-Sermons, for all the Christian Science literature, and to the loving workers in our Publishing House. Our thankfulness goes out to God for His loving-kindness and tender mercies, and our gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for her pure and unselfish devotion to the work of uplifting mankind.

INISE L. VANSYCKLE, Laguna Beach, Cal.

This testimony is given in gratitude for the many blessings which have come to me through Christian Science. I have experienced many healings, but one for which I am particularly grateful was from ivy poisoning, since from early childhood I had each year suffered with this ailment. About fourteen years ago I was healed of a very severe attack by reading Science and Health, and the healing was so complete that the susceptibility has not returned in the slightest degree. I also was subject to bunions, and one gathered and broke regularly for three winters; but this trouble has also been entirely overcome.

I am thankful for the privilege of class instruction, which has given me more knowledge of Christian Science, so that I may help myself and others; also grateful for the Christian Science literature, and for the Lesson-Sermons, which give us daily food.—AMY EATON KEEVER, Aberdeen, S. Dak.

[The Christian Intelligencer]

If all God's people were clearly marked off from the rest of men by true Christian idealism, and if their lives approximated more and more "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," how different the status of current events might have been! What a power in the world the church would have been in these latter days! Our eyes are not blind to all that the aggregate Christian life means to the world to-day. But the awful sway of the essential spirit of the world as seen in its consummate product in a world at war, and the utter carnality attending it all, must give us solemn pause as we reflect what an opportunity was lost when the command to be separate was overborne by the love of this world prevalent in the church of the living God.

[Charles Stelzle in The Continent]

Men have sometimes made the distinction between "secular" work and "religious" work, but Jesus never made such a distinction. To him all work was sacred. Even before he performed a miracle or had begun his career as a preacher, Jesus had this testimony from his heavenly Father: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Jesus had pleased God while a carpenter. His daily tasks were sacred tasks. The swinging of a hammer or the pushing of a saw in the doing of a job for a neighbor, surely was to him as though it were done for God.

[The Sunday School Times]

Our Christianity must be approved by men as well as by God. There are, indeed, times when in order to please God we must incur the displeasure of men; but in many things it is a fair test of our religion to ask whether men as well as God can commend it. Some Christians have brought their religion and even their Lord into disrepute by glaring failures in matters in which their unsaved neighbors were doing better than they.

[Dr. K. C. Anderson in The Christian Commonwealth]

The truth is, that what the Christianity of our day is suffering from is a radical defect in its method of interpretation, the historical sense in which the doctrines are taught; and the great task before the churches is to convert the material and therefore false interpretation into a spiritual one; to lift the Christian faith from the material to the spiritual level, and thus, without discarding one single doctrine as untrue, to make all new.

"Who can afford it"

"It shall be the privilege and duty of every member, who can afford it, to subscribe for the periodicals which are the organs of this Church."—Article VIII, Section 14, Church Manual, by Mary Baker Eddy.

Convincing evidence that Mrs. Eddy always employed the most correct English possible is invariably obtainable through a reliable dictionary interpretation of her words.

For example, Webster's International Dictionary defines the word AFFORD as meaning "to forward towards an end; to incur, stand, or bear without serious detriment (as to financial condition, health, reputation, etc.)." And its principal synonym GIVE means "to open;" "to look;" "to give away or abandon one's self."

How simply, how easily, how trustingly one can "abandon one's self" is revealed in the following extract from a letter recently received by The Christian Science Publishing Society:

> "In the month of December, 1915, my subscription for the periodicals had expired, and at that time my thought on supply had not been met, and my human needs seemed many, with no money apparently to meet them; but through my seeming financial problem it was my foremost desire to be obedient to The Mother Church Manual, to support the organs of the church, and with that guidance I took my stand and renewed my subscriptions, and I am so grateful to say that since that time my every need has been abundantly met."

Like the widow of Zarephath, who furnished Elijah a cake before she made one for herself, the faith of this Christian Scientist was blessed by the proof that "the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail" (I Kings 17:16), because she understood whence her help came.

Thousands of other Christian Scientists, in all parts of the world, have likewise proved that their appreciation of the "privilege" added so much joy to the "duty," and so enlarged their understanding of substance, that they were able not only to "afford" the Christian Science periodicals, but to rise into the demonstration of dominion over other important questions of supply as well.

Opportunity to pass the blessing along to others is afforded through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, at nominal postage, Christian Science literature offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen. The printed notice on the front of this issue signed by the Postmaster-General explains this simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to send periodicals regularly as desired, either to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at the training cantonments, or for any other purpose of general distribution.

Feet of Brass

[Editorial in The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 1, 1917]

IT is about time that the world began to take stock of its position in the great war, and to consider many things which it is only just becoming possible for it to discern, as the days pass giving rise to a clearer perception of what the whole struggle means. Fifty years ago what has happened to-day could not have occurred. The vastness of the world, that is to say, would have reduced the struggle to the dimensions of a comparatively local one, with the result that it would have ended in some sort of a stalemate, such as the peace of Ryswick; some sort of an obvious temporization, such as the peace of Amiens; or else a victorious peace, like the peace of Utrecht. In any case all that would have happened would have been that some country or countries would have gone down for the moment, probably only to recover themselves, and more furiously to renew the combat years later, as France did when she answered the treaty of Utrecht with the armies of Marshal Saxe or those of Napoleon the Great. Or possibly some great power would have sunk into the ranks of the minor powers, as Spain did after Trafalgar; whilst some minor power would have sprung into the ranks of the great powers, as Prussia did at the conclusion of the Seven Years' War.

All this has been changed by what is known as the shrinkage of the world, by the intimate interdependence which has been forced upon nations through the development of communications. Only a hundred years ago if Lord Nelson, in the Mediterranean, had wished to communicate with the Admiralty, in London, a quick frigate would have been the best means at his disposal. To-day the wireless poles on the top of the Admiralty carry their messages into the Mediterranean. In those days, too, the United States was a country apart, largely self-contained, and not particularly interested in European politics. But to-day all this is changed. A modern liner can cross from New York to Liverpool quicker than, a century ago, the ordinary frigate could count on making the passage from Boston to Charleston, whilst the enormous volume of the trade issuing from the ports of the republic has knit the relations of the republic and Europe more closely together than those of many European nations. Therefore, though, in the year 1914, the philosophers proved wrong in their prophecies that the interdependence of nations would prevent war, the very facts on which they based their calculations operated to draw all nations into the war.

Now the mistake which the philosophers made was this: they looked on all war as like so many of the wars of the past, war for trade, war for territory, or war provoked by personal antagonisms. What they never calculated on was a war between human tendencies. They never seemed, that is to say, to have dreamed that the characteristics of one body of nations could manifest themselves in a form which would so threaten the ideals of another body of nations as to make a struggle between liberty and autocracy a possibility. President Wilson put his finger on the exact cause of the struggle of to-day, when he declared that there was no room for the tendencies which were bound to develop from the acceptance and study of German "Kultur" in a world in which the tendencies of republicanism and democracy were struggling to make themselves dominant. The pistol shot at Serajevo, that is to say, was no more the cause of the war of to-day than the lighted match of a drunken marine was the cause of the blowing up of L'Orient in Aboukir Bay. If the mental tendencies of Europe had not been approaching a condition which rendered Armageddon inevitable, Serbian assassins might have fired pistol shots all day at the powder barrels in the Balkans, just as, if drunkenness had not been a prevalent condition in the navies of the Eighteenth Century, no lighted match would have been thrust into a cask of ratafia.

When, however, the mental tendencies expressing democracy and "Kultur" met, a struggle began which could only end in a gradual absorption of all countries according to the development of their national characteristics. Nations, that is to say, like Bulgaria and Turkey, which had put their necks completely under the yoke of autocratic rulership, were swept by the fears and demands of their rulers into the camp of autocracy. Nations like France, Italy, and the United Kingdom, in which the democratic idea was dominant, were bound to take sides not in the least with the autocracy of Russia, but with the comparative harmlessness of Russian autocracy when compared with the tremendous organism of German "Kultur." For a time other nations were able to keep out. For a time some people in the United States thanked Providence for having so favored their country that it was enabled to remain a spectator of the struggle. But supposing Providence kept the United States out of the early stages of the struggle, it is equally certain that the omnipotence of Providence must have involved the United States in the later stages of the struggle, and, therefore, that there ought to be the same thankfulness for the one as for the other. And this involves a deep metaphysical argument which the world does not altogether comprehend.

Had the allied nations been completely right themselves, could it have been maintained, for a moment, that there were no elements of weakness in them, the war would have been quickly over, and the Central Powers would have been defeated. But Armageddon does not come about through the passions of kings either of countries or of commerce, but through the national passions which nations develop in themselves. So long, if an example is desirable, as the children of Israel held to the pure standard of monotheism, set up for them by the prophets, they were invincible, but as they adopted the national vices of the peoples whom they conquered, they reduced themselves to the level of those conquered peoples, with the result that, in future struggles, the greater animal became the victor. Any nation to-day which really knew enough of the omnipotence of Principle could protect itself without warfare, but when a nation does not know enough to do this, there comes the appeal to the sword, and when that appeal takes place, what is really occurring is something which Mrs. Julia Ward Howe expresses so perfectly in the "Battle Hymn of the Republic." It is the sifting out of the hearts of men before the judgment seat of Principle. In other words, Armageddon is not fought for the conquest of one nation by another nation, though the victory of the nation nearest right is inevitable. What it is fought for is the destruction, in the individual consciousness of every nation, of that which is opposed to Principle. What this means has been very wonderfully expressed by Mrs. Eddy in a paragraph on page 6 of her book, Science and Health: "To cause suffering as the result of sin, is the means of destroying sin. Every supposed pleasure in sin will furnish more than its equivalent of pain, until belief in material life and sin is destroyed. To reach heaven, the harmony of being, we must understand the divine Principle of being."

What this means, then, as it applies to Armageddon is surely this: that Armageddon is not the struggle for the victory of one nation over another, though the victory of the nation nearest right is certain to occur, but that it is the inevitable result of the influence of false appetites and of the acceptance of wrong ideals, which, in the very nature of their own inharmony, are bound to produce a condition of manifest inharmony, in order that, through their destruction, adherence to purer conceptions and spiritual ideals may be achieved. It is in the perception of this, then, that there is seen "the glory of the coming of the Lord;" it is in the proclamation of this, then, that is heard the "trumpet that shall never call retreat;" and it is in the understanding that true freedom is freedom from the fetters of materiality, which is leading men to-day to leave their homes and their countries, and to risk death in the trenches, so as to give the world this freedom.

In the book of Revelation the writer describes how he saw "in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man," and this man, he declares, had "his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace." This image of the feet of brass has always been regarded as expressing the power of Truth, of Principle, to crush and scorch evil under its feet, for evil which is not voluntarily surrendered has to be lost through suffering. The feet of brass are surely trampling through the battlefield of Armageddon to-day, causing men to lay down through suffering those animal beliefs they clung so tenaciously to in days of sensual ease. For what is being crushed in the battle is not nations or people, but the material instincts which are hiding Principle from men.

One Governing Intelligence

AVERY BROWN

At an annual meeting of The Mother Church one of its officers in the course of his report urged the constant recognition by Christian Scientists of the fact that there is in reality only one director of The Mother Church activities; meaning, of course, that divine Principle is the one intelligence upon which the movement is dependent for guidance. The understanding that there is one divine intelligence is very helpful in any situation in which a human being may be placed, and may assist especially in arriving at a correct conception of how the Christian Science movement is advanced. The rapid development of the cause early made it necessary for the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy, to place the church affairs in the hands of a responsible governing body. Hence she instituted The Christian Science Board of Directors, doubtless having observed that this system of efficient management of large affairs had been tested out with conspicuous success in the modern business world.

The Christian Science cause, however, having as its object the bringing of true salvation, or demonstrable Christianity, to the whole world, is not to be thought of in the same category as an ordinary business corporation formed for gain. While the policy of a business firm may vary according to the changing views of its management, Christian Science is based upon a demonstrable Principle, upon God Himself, and includes within itself every rule needed for its demonstration. In other words, there is one perfect intelligence to be exemplified in Christian Science, the divine Principle, or Mind, and the followers of Principle, whatever their position or problem may be, have only to square their actions with this supreme governing intelligence to be in accord with all other correct demonstrators of Principle. On page 265 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says: "Diverse opinions in Science are stultifying. All must have one Principle and the same rule; and all who follow the Principle and rule have but one opinion of it."

The knowing that there is one intelligence and not several, simplifies what may appear to be complicated problems. In the early days of Christian Science there was a tendency among its adherents to appeal to and rely upon persons for guidance, whereas to-day it is noted that there has been a marked change with respect to such reliance. In cases where advice is now sought from The Christian Science Board of Directors it has been observed that the inquiry comes with a more scientifically grounded assurance that the problem has its answer in Principle, the giver of "every good gift and every perfect gift;" and that it is the reflection of one intelligence, and not any sense of personal direction, which correctly solves the difficulty. Such individual understanding of spiritual intelligence, needless to say, has resulted more and more in the demonstration by the field of problems which it formerly seemed wise to refer for official consideration. Thus the field and the workers directly involved have been immeasurably benefited by their direct dependence upon the one intelligence, divine Principle. Such progress can only add to the working knowledge of Christian Science and promote the growth of spiritual understanding.

The one divine intelligence, understood and recognized, brings harmony and efficiency into all business, family, and social relations, just as surely as it does into church affairs. Who has not felt, in the press of modern business, the cross currents of the belief in many directing minds? And who that has experienced the healing power of Christian Science in a physical way, perhaps, has not also had all sense of confusion and cross-fire removed from his thought and his work by the quiet realization of one Mind, one intelligence, whispering with authority the words "Peace, be still"? Oftentimes the visit of the business man during his noon hour to one of those oases in the desert of the city business district,—the Christian Science reading rooms,—and his attention to the Christian Science literature found there, has been the means of bringing to his disturbed consciousness the spiritual understanding that is safety and peace. This is nothing else than the demonstration of the one supreme intelligence whose power is spiritual law, the rock against which the currents of mortal belief dash their supposed force in vain.

The understanding of one divine intelligence, or Mind, makes the Christian Science home the type of harmony on earth. It clears up misunderstandings, wipes out past scores which have haunted the present, and changes the entire human outlook from a material to a spiritual basis. The right knowing that follows some measure of understanding of this one intelligence simply makes impossible the differences that humanity has been taught to regard as inevitable, because it is then comprehended that there is a higher ruler than the so-called human mind, even the divine Mind, from whom emanates all law; and obedience to this law brings harmony, and never harm to anyone.

Even so, in the wider social relations of the world, the abiding knowledge of one intelligence, one Mind, allays suspicion, prevents jealousy, and obliterates the causes of war and strife. World war itself could not eventuate if all mankind really understood the one Mind and accepted only that one. "One infinite God, good," Mrs. Eddy declares in that well-known passage on page 340 of Science and Health, "unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars; fulfils the Scripture, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself;' annihilates pagan and Christian idolatry,—whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political, and religious codes; equalizes the sexes; annuls the curse on man, and leaves nothing that can sin, suffer, be punished or destroyed."

A Mother's Experience

ELSA H. SCHREIBER

SINCE I am only one of the thousands of mothers who have been called upon to part with their sons in the recent sweeping selective draft, my experience has no doubt been duplicated in many homes in the United States of America. All thought or talk of war had been studiously shut out of our home circle for many years. As long ago as the Boer War I remember patting my boy's curly head and thinking that he would never see war, for the world was surely growing better year by year. I had such a safe feeling.

The years rolled by and all education was carried on always with a peaceful future in mind. The events of the past few years have been piling up ever more formidably, until we find ourselves swept into the maelstrom of the world war. I wakened one morning to know that my boy, now a strong man, came into the first quota of the selective draft. Here was a task for a Christian Science mother that required "prayer and fasting," a complete readjustment of a lifetime of thinking and living. As I look back to those days of struggle, a great sense of thankfulness fills me, that I had learned through the teachings of Christian Science to work things out according to God's law.

First of all the sense of personal ownership had to be disposed of. The boy never did belong to me, for God is the only Father-Mother of us all. The sense of separation was the next deep water that had to be crossed. With God as his Father-Mother, where could he go but in his Father's kingdom where all is well! At this place in my mental adjustment the Lord's Prayer with the spiritual interpretation as given by Mrs. Eddy on pages 16 and 17 of Science and Health gave me untold solace and comfort, and the "grace for to-day" was forthcoming. Thoughts of self-pity and fear of the future were faced and put to rout, and by the time the hour of parting arrived the chasm of fear and separation was bridged and a feeling of safety and calm prevailed.

When I realized that all thoughts of sorrow and longing on my part would only place a burden on the one who had the larger task to perform, an unselfed mother-love made it possible to discipline all such thinking out of consciousness. Only thoughts of courage and strength must go forth as guardian angels. Suffice it to say, that the training of many years of thinking right, as we are taught in Christian Science, stood the test in this hour of need; for there were no tears shed, no sorrowful longings at the parting, and there has been no further temptation in that line.

Through this experience the familiar and comforting quotation from the Christian Science textbook (Science and Health, p. 494) that is inscribed on the walls of so many of our churches, "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need," has assumed a new and prophetic meaning to me, and I know that the unseen spiritual power which has sustained us hitherto is equal to any human emergency.

Christian Science in the Home

MRS. BLYTHE KYSOR

THE value of Christian Science literature is that it spiritualizes and instructs its readers in a way no other literature could possibly do. The depth, vivacity, and charm of Mrs. Eddy's writings sets a high standard for Christian Scientists, both at home and abroad. In the Glossary of Science and Health (p. 582) Mrs. Eddy thus begins her definition of children: "The spiritual thoughts and representatives of Life, Truth, and Love." Children, then, spiritually understood, are not limited in intelligence, wisdom, obedience. Instead of worrying over the children and fearing for them, parents would be better employed in seeking to know them as God's ideas, manifesting divine qualities, cared for by divine wisdom. If the Father provides for His creation, as we are told, will He not feed and clothe the children? Most assuredly, if we eliminate from our own thought the pernicious beliefs about children and parenthood which, though ages old, are not true.

One of these beliefs is that children have inherited tendencies and qualities from their ancestors which must be overcome. If we want to help them, it would seem the better way to prove the unreality of various inherited manifestations and to know that the priority of mortal beliefs makes them neither real nor true. If they are no part of the real creation, they are not true now, and never were true; therefore they can have no real manifestation. Backwardness, forwardness, naughtiness, and laziness in children are only arguments of the serpent, or evil. They are no part of God's creation; therefore they should be denied and cast out.

Children have a right to be freed from the fears and anxieties which are so often felt and voiced for them, and parents too have a right to be freed from these anxieties, for they are not legitimate. Indeed, these fears may be a form of error which tends to paralyze proper and useful activity along broader lines. An experienced educator states that "the constant presence of a nurse after a certain age is bad for the child, and the constant direction to do this or that stultifies it." It is emphasized in the book here quoted that independence of character and personal resourcefulness are what is needed in the social world, hence the individual should be freed from despotism and tyranny, be he child or adult.

The belief of personal domination must be overcome in each individual's own consciousness and in his home, before freedom can be expressed and perfected in the aggregations of individuals called nations. Despotism is an innate tendency of mortal mind; it does not belong to the select few. When despotism is expressed dynastically we condemn it most heartily. We say that the individual units should be taught and given the opportunity for self-government. The way to do this, and the only way, is mental, spiritual. Principle, law, constitutes government. It is self-enforcing; it governs the minutiæ of the universe. Principle in reality governs the home, and remembering Mrs. Eddy's definition of children given above, it is evident that primarily divine Principle governs children. Parents should, of course, reflect this government, as should also the home and family. Perfect peace is the result of knowing the absolute truth about children and parents, homes and nations, in which is no tyranny, despotism, autocracy. These facts, understood logically, scientifically, and spiritually by individuals, actually become visible in bettered conditions all around. On page 102 of Science and Health we read that Christian Science "pre-eminently promotes affection and virtue in families and therefore in the community."

Though a mother's life seems restricted it is not, for she can be overcoming mortal beliefs all day long in her own home. She can overcome the sense of irritation, worry, fear, loneliness, weariness, discouragement; she can rejoice, pray, love; she can be grateful, active, and obedient at all times. No Christian Scientist can do more than know the truth about God and man and overcome false beliefs, be he teacher, reader, or practitioner. Christian Science practice is prayer and the pursuit of religious convictions. It can therefore be carried on where we are and at the present moment. Order is just as much order if expressed in a home as it is when expressed in the planets; gentleness is just as acceptable in a home as it was when Jesus was healing the sick; Truth is just as true when applied to the care of a family as when applied to the sick and the sinning.

A man sometimes seems bowed down with business cares and worries so that he cannot enjoy his family with the zest of earlier days. He does not have to believe this. He can resolutely refuse to be bowed down; he can once more know the freedom and joy, the uncomplicated simplicity of his boyhood. We are bidden to cast our burden on the Lord. Remembering this, remembering that man's birthright is happiness and not care, will make of a father an interesting companion. The many verses in the Bible, especially in Psalms, and the words of Jesus about rejoicing, should be taken seriously, if the phrase may be permitted; and it is possible to do this. Men can and should rejoice. It is just as much a man's duty to be happy as it is to be good. In fact the road to happiness is goodness.

Men do not need to submit to the oppressive belief of many cares, or of worry on account of their work. Work is in reality a divine idea. Such being the case, work exists free, joyous, ordered, never partaking too much or too little of the nature of Principle. Therefore if there seems to be monotony, sordidness, or drudgery connected with work, these are improper attributes,—indeed impossible attributes of a divine idea,—and need not be either believed in or expressed. There is in reality no such thing as overwork, stoppage of work, or lack of work. In the ratio that perverted concepts of work are disbelieved and denied will they disappear, and the proper sense of work as the perpetual activity of right ideas, always harmonious, will appear.

Unfoldment is a continuously operative law of God, and applies to the universe, including the children. Why not leave the unfolding process to divine Love, drop some of the daily drudgeries and anxieties about the home and family, and enjoy the beautiful, pure, unspoiled companionship which is offered parents by their children? Why not develop a healthy companionship with the children, which is delightful beyond words, and break down the seeming differences in years and viewpoints? These differences in viewpoints are not fixed and impassable obstacles. They can be lessened and will finally disappear. All human beings in their progressive apprehension of the Science of the universe converge in regard to fundamental truths. This convergence of thought, of course, is evidenced visibly in human relationships. Let us stop and consider that age itself is a mode of mortal thought merely, based on a belief in the reality and passage of human events and of time. Eternity knows naught of time, and as men's thoughts come into tune with the eternal Mind, the consciousness of the flight of time will grow less acute.

A realization that divine Love cares for and protects all, can come to those who faithfully study and live the truths given to the world in the Bible and our Leader's writings, and this will bring freedom from much useless and harmful bondage, awaken a higher and better conception of duty in parents and children, and result in normal, happy relationships in families and in nations.

The Secret Place

JOSEPH G. ALDEN

WHEN Herod ordered the slaughter of the Bethlehem children he was foiled in his attempt to destroy the child Jesus by a warning imparted to Joseph in a vision, which caused him to take the babe and his mother secretly into Egypt. Joseph was not the first of his race to avail himself of an asylum in Egypt. Abraham had gone there generations before to escape the famine in his own land. Another Joseph had found refuge there from the enmity of his brothers and had richly repaid the protection of an alien land in the time of great necessity. Jacob, too, had found peace and plenty in Egypt when his own country was in want. Thus when danger threatened the life of the child of prophecy, Joseph, awakened by an intuitive sense of peril, sought safety in Pharaoh's dominion until the danger was passed.

Herod's terrible edict was prompted by fear. Apprised by the wise men of the birth of one who was to be "King of the Jews," he sensed an eventual loss of his own power, and so took the customary Roman method of exterminating opposition in its incipiency. His gross materialism could conceive only of a kingdom founded on physical force and sustained by a superior soldiery; it could not possibly know a kingdom born of Truth and ruled by Love, established upon the earth by a divine representative who was to wear for the time the humble livery of a carpenter's son. Out of such a consciousness as that of Herod, calloused by sensualism and ruled by selfishness, could proceed nothing but fear and envy, and these human propensities dictated the order for the slaughter of the innocents.

Cæsar's representative did not of course know that it was an utter impossibility for him to kill this "King of the Jews," who was not a human personality, but a divine idea. Neither he nor his soldiers could even come where it was; the spiritual idea was not discernible to their material view. Herod could strike out against it in blind fury, but he accomplished merely the destruction of some of his own future tax-paying subjects. He only succeeded, as evil always does, in administering a self-injury. Herod is an outstanding expression of an animal type which, inflamed with fear and envy, seeks ever the destruction of the Christ-idea, but only succeeds in inflicting damage and loss upon itself. The Christ is always safe against such attacks, since human malice and hate can never come into that divine presence or gain ingress to "the secret place of the most High," where God's idea dwells. For that reason Herod of Judea could not accomplish the evil end he sought, and neither can the Herods of to-day bring extermination or injury to the Christ-child, the royal idea of divine sonship, born into individual human consciousness.

The human babe Jesus, who was to reveal the Christ so completely to mankind, was safe from Herod's hate, but the faith of Joseph had not yet risen to that high perception, so it was necessary for him to guard against possible harm by removing his young charge to a place of greater safety. Just so it is necessary to-day for the consciousness into which the Christ-idea is born to guard with zealous care this idea and remove it to the secret place where Herod's emissaries cannot come, to that place of refuge where Herod has neither jurisdiction nor authority.

The time of Joseph's exile was not long, and at Herod's death he returned in safety to his native land. When his consciousness had risen to behold the true character of Mary's son, the indestructibility of the Christ, Truth, and the infallibility of divine protection, he could return to his own place to dwell in peace and security. No successor of Herod, though he were to match Cæsar himself in might and ingenuity, could again cause him to flee before human hatred, and no false sense could hide from him the true nature of the divine idea.

On page 565 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has well described the coincidence of Jesus and the Christ: "The impersonation of the spiritual idea had a brief history in the earthly life of our Master; but 'of his kingdom there shall be no end,' for Christ, God's idea, will eventually rule all nations and peoples—imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science." When human perception has been purified to perceive this divine appearing, the swaddling clothes of the Bethlehem babe are seen to be the vestments of an imperial son, and the manger of lowly birth becomes transformed into a throne of supreme authority. No Herod of mortal sense, though endued with high temporal power and possessed of diabolical cunning, can bring eclipse to that royal vision or find his way into "the secret place of the most High."

Bethlehem

GEORGIA WILDE

BETHLEHEM, O Bethlehem,
We've journeyed long and far!
In our sad hearts new hopes arise,
In deep of night, our weary eyes
Search now the purple of thy skies
To find again thy Star!

The promised Star, O Bethlehem,
That hovers o'er our King!
A coronation from on high;
A pageant splendor from the sky;
A light the Wise are guided by
To where the angels sing.

They sing for us, O Bethlehem,
On this thy holy night!
They sing as little David sang
Where love and hope and peace to man,
The lilies of His presence, sprang
Along the starry light!

Bethlehem, O Bethlehem!
As princes did of yore
We cast our jewels at His feet,
Our scepters, crowns, our ointments sweet;
Renunciation make complete
To worship and adore!

[Carl E. Herring in Omaha (Neb.) Bee]

Time was, and not so very long ago, when varying opinions meant bitterness and enmity. The world generally is learning better, and Christian Science is doing much toward fostering the better way. The churches are learning to lay aside the spirit of rivalry and exist for the community rather than the community for the church. In this spirit Christian Science is offering to the sick and despondent its remedy, and offering it to those who have failed to find cure and rest in the place where Christian Science finds them.

And thus in the same spirit do Christian Scientists regard physicians, forgetting not that while they cannot work together at the same bedside, the physician has brought to the world the highest form of sincere desire for the good of humanity, and has done much, very much, for the alleviation of suffering, improvement of methods of living and sanitation. We would not if we could, put one straw in the way of any of the heroic efforts physicians are making for mankind to ward off pestilence and lighten the terrors of war. Christian Science does ask, and has the right to ask, a fair field in which to demonstrate its fitness to survive, and with this rests content to leave the issue at the bar of public opinion.

We cannot all at once gain the absolute, and inasmuch as the world each day presses its demands upon us, we must meet the issue as it comes, in a practical way and with the highest understanding that we have acquired. For this reason, while deploring the necessity for war and looking forward to the time when the brotherhood of man shall be established in fact as well as in name, Christian Scientists have bowed to the urgent need, lest a worse thing come upon us, and have contributed of their labor and money without stint in every call that has been made upon our patriotism. Their men are at the front and in the recruiting camps. Their women are working shoulder to shoulder with the patriotic women of every other religion or no religion. Their publications, which reach every corner of the civilized world, have upheld the war movement in no uncertain terms.

All this entitles Christian Scientists to no especial credit, for every good citizen is doing the same, but is said to disabuse the minds of your readers of the false notion that, because Christian Science has before it the ideal of a perfect state, its adherents are not willing to join hand and heart with every sincere soul, of whatever profession, race, or religion, in the cause of humanity and in the amelioration of suffering, poverty, oppression, and tyranny, looking forward to the better time when the world shall have learned its lesson; for on page 276 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "When the divine precepts are understood, they unfold the foundation of fellowship, in which one mind is not at war with another, but all have one Spirit, God, one intelligent source, in accordance with the Scriptural command: 'Let this Mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus.' "

In a recent review of a book there are some misleading references to Christian Science. This book does not set forth the teachings of Christian Science, but quite to the contrary, it misrepresents them.

For instance, Christian Science does not teach, as might be inferred from this review, that each "human being" has the power within himself to cure his ills. Christian Scientists do not claim for themselves any power apart from God, but are humble disciples of Christ Jesus, recognizing their utter inability to do the healing works except as they have in them the Mind of Christ. This religion is the Science of Christianity taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus over nineteen hundred years ago, and its healing is accomplished in the same manner as were the so-called miracles of the Nazarene, not only without resort to recognized material methods but without human will power or suggestion.

On the subject of mental healing Mrs. Eddy says on page x of the Preface to the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "The first edition of Science and Health was published in 1875. Various books on mental healing have since been issued, most of them incorrect in theory and filled with plagiarisms from Science and Health. They regard the human mind as a healing agent, whereas this mind is not a factor in the Principle of Christian Science."

From the foregoing it will readily be seen that Christian Science does not teach that "everything desired may be attained;" nor does its practice assist in the indulgence of the various whims and fancies of the human mind. "The Science of mental practice," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 410 of Science and Health, "is susceptible of no misuse. Selfishness does not appear in the practice of Truth or Christian Science." In reiterating the assurance of the Master, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," Christian Science does not overlook the vital fact that to abide in the Christ includes the complete relinquishment of human, selfish desires, and its conscientious adherents rejoice in the humble sentiment expressed by this holiest of men: "Not my will, but thine, be done."

[George C. Eames in Lewiston (Maine) Journal]

In a recent communication a correspondent has criticized what he believes to be Christian Science, but his conceptions of the subject are so far from the truth that some explanation is due your readers. His first mistaken concept, deduced from an unfinished quotation from page xi of the Preface of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, is that the primary object of Christian Science is to obtain health, whereas had he finished the paragraph he would have seen that "the physical healing of Christian Science" follows as a natural result from the reformation of the human consciousness. To quote the entire paragraph: "The physical healing of Christian Science results now, as in Jesus' time, from the operation of divine Principle, before which sin and disease lose their reality in human consciousness and disappear as naturally and as necessarily as darkness gives place to light and sin to reformation. Now, as then, these mighty works are not supernatural, but supremely natural. They are the sign of Immanuel, or 'God with us,'—a divine influence ever present in human consciousness and repeating itself, coming now as was promised aforetime,

> To preach deliverance to the captives [of sense],
> And recovering of sight to the blind,
> To set at liberty them that are bruised."

Our critic says that the advocates of Christian Science deny that sickness or disease ever existed. Christian Science does not deny that the beliefs of sin, disease, and death are held by the human mind, so called, but it does deny that they have any place in the infinite divine Mind, and that man in God's image can possess these errors. If this teaching seems inconsistent to our critic, it is because he does not see the distinction made by Christian Science between sinning, mortal man and man created in God's likeness. The truth of this teaching may best be proved by something practical,—the many cases of healing in our midst,—while it may be observed that the thought which opposes this teaching has never been known to heal a case. Jesus said, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Our critic says, "Christ, the author of Christianity, died," and that "the followers of Christ died." He also says, "Every death of a Christian Scientist is a silent but unanswerable witness that Christian Science teaching is itself an error." To continue this line of reasoning, our critic must also conclude that he who said, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die," was likewise in error. The teachings of Jesus on the subject of healing are too well known to require any defense by me, but it can be said that Christian Scientists, in the exercise of their religion, display a greater resemblance to the Christianity taught by Jesus than those of other sects who criticize it. Neither Mrs. Eddy nor any of her followers ever claimed that they would not pass through "the valley of the shadow of death." On page 427 of the Christian Science textbook Mrs. Eddy writes: "If man is never to overcome death, why do the Scriptures say, 'The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death'? The tenor of the Word shows that we shall obtain the victory over death in proportion as we overcome sin." Again on page 348 of the same book she says: "I have never supposed the world would immediately witness the full fruitage of Christian Science, or that sin, disease, and death would not be believed for an indefinite time; but this I do aver, that, as a result of teaching Christian Science, ethics and temperance have received an impulse, health has been restored, and longevity increased. If such are the present fruits, what will the harvest be, when this Science is more generally understood?"

[Lloyd B. Coate in Springfield (Ohio) Sun]

In a recent issue Assistant Attorney-General Johnson is reported as saying to the suffragists that they had a Christian Science case,—"they only think they have one." We regret that so learned a man does not have a more intelligent concept of Christian Science. Such statements do not give a correct impression of this teaching. Christian Science classifies as real all that God made, all that expresses His nature and character, all that is eternal; it classifies as unreal all that He did not make,—sin, sickness, and death. It denies that sin, sickness, and death have any reality or any abiding place in the divine Mind, but it does not deny or claim that these conditions do not seem real to human experience. Christian Scientists heal the sick in the same way Christ Jesus taught and demonstrated,—by recognizing the supremacy of Spirit over every law of matter. Every instance of the healing of sin and disease through Christian Science is proof that these conditions have no origin in God.

[From The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 6, 1917]

Provision for the extension of the Christian Science Park, maintained by the Board of Directors of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, in front of The Mother Church, is made in the proposed transfer of Norway Street, between Falmouth Street and Huntington Avenue, by the city of Boston to the church in exchange for a compensating amount of land to make possible the extension of Dalton Street to Huntington Avenue. Mayor Curley has directed that the Board of Street Commissioners proceed with the transaction, which was recommended by The Mother Church.

Digitized by Google

This change in the street layout will make it possible to plan an adequate administration building for the activities of the Christian Science movement now centered about the park. The executive offices of the church long ago outgrew their former quarters and for some time have been scattered, at great inconvenience to the work, through four different buildings.

According to the plans, The Mother Church will raze its buildings from 203 to 217 Huntington Avenue, and add this land with that now used as a part of Norway Street, to the Park. The buildings on the opposite side of Norway Street in this vicinity will be razed and an administration building erected in their place. By the change Dalton Street will become a continuous thoroughfare with Cumberland Street on the easterly side of Huntington Avenue, connecting indirectly with Boylston Street and Massachusetts Avenue.

By the arrangement The Christian Science Board of Directors agrees to pay one half of the cost of the street and improvement, provided that amount does not exceed $5000. It is estimated that the expense to the city will not exceed $4000.

John L. Bates, former Governor of Massachusetts, representing The Christian Science Board of Directors, explained the proposed improvements to the Board of Street Commissioners of Boston, and Frank A. Goodwin, acting chairman, sent this communication to the Mayor:—

"As a result of your request, I have examined the suggestions of former Gov. John L. Bates, representing The Christian Science Board of Directors, regarding developments in the neighborhood of the Christian Science church, and report as follows:—

"At present a part of Norway Street extends from Falmouth Street to Huntington Avenue and all the property abutting on said part of the street and for some distance in either direction is owned by the clients of Mr. Bates.

"It is suggested that this part of the street be destroyed and conveyed or be permitted to revert to the abutting owners, and in return an equal amount of land be conveyed to the city to make possible the extension of Dalton Street to Huntington Avenue.

"Dalton is the only parallel street to Massachusetts Avenue in this vicinity, and acts as an outlet for Scotia Street, Belvidere Street, St. Germain Street, and Dundee Street, connecting with Boylston Street and Massachusetts Avenue. From the standpoint of public convenience, the proposed extension of Dalton Street would give a better connection with Huntington Avenue than Norway Street, particularly as it would make a continuous thoroughfare with Cumberland Street, on the easterly side of Huntington Avenue.

"In connection with the proposed change, the large buildings, 203 to 217 Huntington Avenue, are to be torn down and the land added to the private park now maintained by The Christian Science Board of Directors, and the buildings on the opposite side of Norway Street are to be destroyed and an administration building to be erected in their place.

"The Christian Science Board of Directors agrees to pay as its share on the street and improvement one half the cost if that amount is not more than $5000. It is estimated that the street expense to the city will not be more than $4000.

"This would seem to be a very advantageous offer to the city."

In reply to the foregoing report, Mayor Curley has replied as follows:—

"Replying to your communication received, I beg to state that, in my opinion, it would be advisable to accept the recommendations made by the Hon. John L. Bates."

Benevolent Funds of The Mother Church

"On behalf of the members of this church [Brisbane, Australia], I have much pleasure in inclosing herewith check for $59.03, being a contribution to the Real Estate and Benevolent Association funds, to be allotted as you deem advisable. We are grateful for the privilege afforded us to contribute to these funds and cooperate with you in the advancement of the great cause of Christian Science. Check for $36.45 is also inclosed, being a contribution to the War Relief fund."

"I beg to extend to you my heartfelt gratitude for the kindness and compassion which you have expressed toward me. The help has come at a propitious moment. You have been kind enough to help me in my distress, and I do not know how to express my gratitude. I and my children pray that you may be rewarded with many blessings."

"Second Church of Christ, Scientist, of Los Angeles, Cal., herewith sends its check for fifteen hundred dollars on its pledge of ten thousand dollars to the Benevolent Association and Real Estate funds."

"The inclosed check for $31.50 is a gift from a group of Scientists with whom I am associated. We have been working for about two years at Jenkins, Kentucky, a modern coal mining town, and have been greatly helped in our journey from sense to Soul. Please apply this to the three objects for which funds have been established,—Benevolent Association fund, Real Estate fund, War Relief fund,—and one subscription, six months, to Le Héraut de Christian Science."

"At a recent meeting First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Oregon City, Oregon, decided upon a systematic plan, whereby one collection each month will be devoted to the funds maintained by The Mother Church,—the War Relief, Real Estate, and Benevolent Association funds. We are inclosing two drafts, one for fifty dollars from the church and another for three dollars from the Sunday school. We wish to express our gratitude for the privilege of cooperating with the Board of Directors of The Mother Church in this work. It is gratifying to know that our War Relief fund is being handled with wisdom and discretion by those who are lovingly giving their efforts in this cause."

"At the annual association meeting it was unanimously voted to take a collection as a further expression of interest in and desire to assist the Christian Science Benevolent Association and Real Estate funds, realizing more and more how important it is that these funds be made complete. Although most of the members have previously contributed through their various churches, they are sending the inclosed check of three hundred and thirty-one dollars with the full expectation of continuing their contributions from time to time, as long as there seems a need."

"At the association meeting the proposal was unanimously and lovingly indorsed that we participate in the privilege of contributing to the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and also to the Real Estate fund. Therefore, with this action, we inclose check for two hundred dollars, and we know and are sure that this great activity, together with all others of The Mother Church and its Board of Directors, has our hearty and loving support, and cooperation with our gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for the many channels provided for us in Christian Science to bless humanity."

Mother and Child

SPEAKING humanly Mrs. Eddy says in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 253): "A mother's love touches the heart of God, and should it not appeal to human sympathy?" Then rising to metaphysical meanings she continues: "Do the children of this period dream of the spiritual Mother's sore travail, through the long night, that has opened their eyes to the light of Christian Science?"

Mary of Nazareth, when the days of purification required by the Mosaic law were accomplished, brought her child to the temple "to present him to the Lord," and thither at the right time came Simeon led by Spirit; for it was "revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ." He prophesied of the child in words at which the mother marveled as he blessed God, saying, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation . . . a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel."

He declared that the child would be "for a sign which shall be spoken against," and to the mother said, "Yea, a sword shall pierce through thy own soul also." Mother and child—the sword and the cross—agony and sacrifice to human sense; here is the mystery whereby heaven is being reached to-day by mothers and sons who count not their own lives dear unto themselves, but are making sacrifice for the salvation of the world. And how is heaven brought nigh? Because in metaphysics sword and cross means purification and resurrection, victory and ascension.

The Bethlehem babe had been welcomed by the shepherds who heard the heavenly host choiring celestial joy; adored by the wise men star-guided to his lowly couch; welcomed also with prophetic words by Simeon the seer and Anna the prophetess, yet he must be hurriedly carried on his mother's palpitant breast away from murderous Herod to the safety of ancient Egypt. Thence returning he grew up until once again he came to the temple to become at twelve years of age a son of the law, and there he found his work, saying to his questioning mother, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

Did Mary question further about his work as a man, his teaching, his healing? Did she value his courage? Surely, for she herself had courage,—she stood by the cross. Then came the triumph, the exultation of the resurrection, and the meaning of many things made known by the victory over death. But the world knew not how to keep this faith once delivered unto the saints.

So once again, in the fullness of time, the spiritual idea appeared as a star, shall we say, when Mary Baker Eddy found her healing. Thus she wrote in "Christ and Christmas":—

O'er the grim night of chaos shone
One lone, brave star.

Did this star lead her to seek and find the divine Principle whereof the healing was evidence and so become Discoverer of Christian Science, the second appearing or presence of the healing Christ? This at least she wrote concerning Christmas (Miscellany, p. 262): "I celebrate Christmas with my soul, my spiritual sense, and so commemorate the entrance into human understanding of the Christ conceived of Spirit, of God and not of a woman—as the birth of Truth, the dawn of divine Love breaking upon the gloom of matter and evil with the glory of infinite being."

This spiritual idea which when understood is to rule all the nations with absolute righteousness, had to be by the Discoverer cared for, even as a child is nurtured. There was the sword, too, and also the cross—the world's unbelief, and outpouring of hate, the venom of the dragon. No doubt her own words sung themselves in her heart like a constant prayer to Mind: "Keep thou my child on upward wing to-night." Also a day came when she changed the last line of this poem (Poems, pp. 4, 5), which had only expressed hope in speaking of "far off rest," to the peaceful certainty implied in the words, "And mother finds her home and heav'nly rest." Then had come the time when it was as if the child, the spiritual idea, was helping the one who had with mother-like devotion cared for it. One of the closing stanzas of the poem "Christ and Christmas" by Mrs. Eddy reads:—

For Christian Science brings to view
The great I Am,—
Omniscient power,—gleaming through Mind, mother, man.

The Star in the West

WHEN Jesus was born, certain wise men came to search for him in Jerusalem. They had "seen his star in the east," —but they traveled west. Thus was started that Westward Ho! of spiritual progress which has carried Christianity steadily forward until the setting sun has become the rising sun, and East and West are united in one eternal day. Westward from Palestine did the advancing thought of humanity take its way, by states and stages across Europe to the Atlantic Ocean. At the water's edge the advancing host made sail and landed on the Western Hemisphere to further the gospel announced to the wise men and the shepherds, and on the American continent came the discovery of Christian Science by Mary Baker Eddy. "The star of Bethlehem is the star of Boston," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 320 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "high in the zenith of Truth's domain, that looketh down on the long night of human beliefs, to pierce the darkness and melt into dawn." To uphold the star of Bethlehem and Boston is to uphold the standard of the flag of righteousness. The star in the East has become the star in the West.

In the Western world the star and the eagle symbolize the most exalted ideals of men. As the eagle perched upon a rock looks out, penetrating the distant view with a shining, alert, and keen eye, so does the star gleam out of the dark night and brighten the highway. The tireless flight of the eagle typifies the aspiration of man for freedom, whereby his superior qualities rise above the lower elements and he soars into the upper airs of God which are free from the inharmonies of the flesh. This spiritual soaring brings the blessing contained in the psalmist's words, "Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's."

The star in the West guides the men who are upholding the starry standard of freedom with the spiritual sight of the eagle soaring overhead, guiding the higher motives of men to the goal of one country, God's country; one land, heaven on earth; one sea, the heavenly sea of harmony; one man, God's image and likeness; one God, unchangeable Principle, governing the universe. The star in the West also records the discovery of Christian Science and the labors of love of its Founder, Mary Baker Eddy. It typifies the purity of her motive, the brilliancy of her diction, the clearness of her logic. It sets forth the jewel nature of her gift to the world, and points to a new world of regenerated lives. In "Christ and Christmas" we read:—

> Thus olden faith's pale star now blends
> In seven-hued white!
> Life, without birth and without end,
> Emitting light!

The star in the West is the twinkling star in the twilight which guides the faithful shepherd of to-day into the spiritual light where there is no night, revealing the scientific method of how to be born anew, ushering in the Christ to the consciousness which is spiritually receptive. This star also clarifies the true organization of Church, explaining what The Mother Church stands for, and marks the inspired interpretation of the Scriptures with the piercing-eyed perception of spiritual influence. It is the day-star from on high guiding the brave above the cross to the crown of rejoicing. Christian Scientists are the people who are receptive to that Christian healing of sin, sickness, and death, which has been restored to humanity by their beloved Leader. Those who have received the benefits of the healing star have the opportunity to be like twinkling stars radiating this healing power throughout all the earth, and to be the stars shining in God's firmament, eternal harmony. In the book of Daniel we read, "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

This blessed star, preeminent for beauty, is also powerfully practical. It is science and demonstration in one, teaching and proof. It not only draws the wise men from the East to the West but also directs them to spread their gifts before the mother and child. It calls for active participation in lighting the world with the rays of God's mercy; for the love of light is the love of might directed by spiritual understanding. Its "Glory to God in the highest" is to-day an actual reliance within man's consciousness, for in the heights is the transfigured man who knows only God and obeys Him. The glorified man shines resplendent in the universe of Spirit, on whose brow sits the starry gem of the diadem of love in a brilliant crown of righteousness.

Thus at length the city which "lieth foursquare" opens its gates "westward, to the grand realization of the Golden Shore of Love and the Peaceful Sea of Harmony" (Science and Health, p. 575). The star in the East and the star in the West, the star of Bethlehem and the star of Boston, are welding the world in one, in the perfect unity of God's universe.

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

Children

IN the forty-fifth psalm we have a wonderful presentation of the spiritual idea, which marks a strong contrast between mortal concepts and that which is conceived of Spirit. The psalmist tells us that he is "inditing a good matter," and he surely is. He says of the ideal man: "Thou art fairer than the children of men: grace is poured into thy lips: therefore God hath blessed thee for ever." He then goes on to point out the spiritual weapons used by this divine idea, and tells of the prosperity which abides continually with him because of "truth and meekness and righteousness," and of the gladness which is his because he loves righteousness and hates wickedness.

Christian Scientists who are parents know the vital importance of instructing their children in the Scriptures at home, in addition to all that is done for them in the Sunday school. In the Old Testament we find constant admonitions to parents to teach their children the ever presence and all-power of God, and above all else the necessity for obedience to His law. Here it is well to remember that even a thorough acquaintance with the law of God without obedience thereto would be of no avail, nay, it might even beget self-righteousness and vanity, mental conditions against which both adults and children need to guard themselves. It matters not whether we are dealing with sin or sickness, the question is not how much we know about the truth which destroys it but how much of this truth we are demonstrating, and we cannot too often remind the children of this.

We sometimes hear the argument that it is undesirable to tell children about evil, and it may be said that this need never be done if obedience to right were insisted upon by parents and teachers at every step of the way; nevertheless, if unwillingness to obey the divine law presents itself either in the home or in the Sunday school it must be fearlessly met and destroyed by the understanding of Truth. On page 235 of Miscellany Mrs. Eddy deals with this subject in a short article called "Inconsistency," and she illustrates the necessity for uncovering error by a reference to mathematics and presents this question from the standpoint of a mother. "Can I teach my child the correct numeration of numbers and never name a cipher?" This our wise Leader answers by saying, "Knowing that she cannot do this in mathematics, she should know that it cannot be done in metaphysics, and so she should definitely name the error, uncover it, and teach truth scientifically."

The experiences of the present day make it very clear that nothing less than obedience to divine law can save the world, and the perfect obedience needed is impossible without purity and spirituality. Christian Scientists discover this fact in their efforts to heal themselves and others, and they thus learn that what applies in an individual case is no less applicable in dealing with world problems. It would be considered both wicked and cruel to send children out into the cold without sufficient clothing, or to neglect their human needs in any other way, but what of the more serious question of sending them out into the midst of the mortal beliefs of impurity, dishonesty, and selfishness and never teaching them the need of spiritual protection, without which they are never safe, but with which, thank God, they are as safe as was Daniel in the den of lions.

To declare the truth for children without demanding obedience to it, might make them moral weaklings, which would be the case if they were never taught to take their part in the duties of the home and thus get ready for taking their share in the larger problems which include all mankind. It is now very generally admitted that the hard experiences of the present time will have the effect of bringing out a stronger and more self-denying type of manhood and womanhood, and the children should not be allowed to shirk their part in the needed preparation for the service of God and humanity which is even to-day offering such glorious opportunities for rising above everything that would limit and cramp the unfoldment of humanity into the divine likeness. Above all else moral purity is needed, its light shining so clear and bright in the home and community, and even on the battlefields, that those who see it will turn away with loathing from moral uncleanness, whether expressed in thought, word, or deed. Nothing finer can be found in poetry than Tennyson's words which tell us of the knight whose > strength was as the strength of ten

> Because his heart was pure.

In helping our children to gird on their spiritual armor we can never do better than direct their thought to the ideal man expressed through Christ Jesus. We read of his perfect obedience to divine law from his boyhood up, and because of this we need not wonder that when he stilled the storm on the Sea of Galilee the astonished fishermen remarked that even the winds and waves obeyed him. He had early learned what it meant to be master of himself, and so all Christendom to-day honors him as the one most worthy to be called Master and Teacher.

In his epistle to the Ephesians St. Paul says: "Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right. . . . That it may be well with thee, and thou mayest live long on the earth." Then he points out the duties of parents and immediately follows with the demand for all to put on "the whole armour of God," that thus they may be prepared to "stand" at all times. Because of our great love for children we surely cannot fail in doing our very best for them, which means arming them with the truth which is a certain defense at all times and under all circumstances.

Current Notes

HELENA, MONT.—The first unit of the Christian Science church edifice in this city is completed, and services will be held there for the first time next Sunday [Oct. 28]. It is located at the corner of Sixth Avenue and Rodney Street and has a seating capacity of one hundred and seventy-five. Owing to the expense entailed and present building conditions, it was decided to build only the Sunday school unit this year. Work was begun about July 1, and has cost close to ten thousand dollars. The funds that have been provided by voluntary subscriptions from those who have been benefited by Christian Science, according to one of the congregation, are more than sufficient to pay all indebtedness incurred, and as soon as the contracts have been completed and the building is formally accepted, it will stand free from debt. First Church of Christ, Scientist, which was organized in the spring of 1900, has held its services in the Unitarian church for several years.—Helena Independent.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.—Last Sunday [Nov. 11] services were held at Camp Kearny under the direction of the Christian Science churches of San Diego. At this first service held in Y. M. C. A. hut No. 3, at least two hundred soldiers were present. Arrangements have been completed to hold these services every Sunday morning at nine o'clock. Headquarters have been established at 137 Broadway, Spreckels Theater Building, by the Army and Navy committee of the Christian Science churches in San Diego, acting for the Christian Science churches and societies of southern California.—San Diego Union.

NEILLSVILLE, WIS.—Last Sunday [Nov. 11] the Christian Science Society dedicated its new church home. Two services were held, and the offerings, which amounted to fifty dollars, were donated to the War Relief fund. The building cost approximately seventy-five hundred dollars.

The Neillsville Times.

GALVESTON, TEXAS.—Without formal ceremony the services of First Church of Christ, Scientist, were held yesterday [Oct. 7] in the new church edifice at Twenty-seventh Street and Avenue O. The church was constructed at a cost of about forty-five thousand dollars. It is a two-story structure, the first floor containing the Sunday school room and reception hall, and the second floor the auditorium. The grounds will be made into a lawn beautified with flowers and shrubbery.—The Galveston News.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.—On the site of the old structure a new edifice to meet the needs of the rapidly growing congregation of First Church of Christ, Scientist, is being erected. The Sunday school is designed to accommodate about five hundred children, and the auditorium has a seating capacity of five hundred.—New Rochelle Star.

The Lectures

SANTA CRUZ, CAL. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Blanche Anderson Rittenhouse, who said in part:—

Many times in the past five years has memory brought before me a certain familiar and well-loved scene. It is the advanced research room of a great university, and around its long table, strewn with maps and documents, is gathered a group of earnest workers—teachers of history, economics, and sociology—many of them bearing distinguished names in the great world of scholarship.

Many topics were discussed around that table, but the question which arose spontaneously to the lips at the close of every debate, in every attempt to formulate a law or enunciate a principle, sounded simple enough: "Is there, can there be, a science of history?" It was very far from being either simple or academic, for in reality it means this: Is this life of man on the earth governed by any discoverable law? In all his varied activities can we discern any central Principle which explains his past or governs his future? But however far the question was pressed, however eager or impassioned the debate, in the end all leaned back, beaten and baffled, to acknowledge that of all the creatures in this world, man, who alone can conceive of law—the beneficence of law—cannot govern his own life by law and is the helpless product of chance and circumstance. It was a reluctant and very sorrowful admission; for to declare that there is no Principle governing this life of ours is to declare that there is no God—an admission that confounds the thought of man in its very utterance and shuts every door of hope and deliverance in his face.

A Judean peasant had practically demonstrated the existence of such a law two thousand years before; and at the very time of which I speak a devout New England woman was stating that law again in the very terms of the scientific method, and was invoking the final test of that method—practical demonstration; but she did not come in the line of the schools. They could not "hear" her words, and so they asked of her the same question that was asked of the great Wayshower twenty centuries before: "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth?"

Speaking not only for myself but for a great multitude of others, I would express my joy that I have lived to hear that law stated again and to see it actually demonstrated in my own experience. It has transformed the path of life from a blind alley against which the baffled thought beat itself in vain to a clear highway, whereon it may advance to fair and fruitful and harmonious living.—Santa Cruz Sentinel.

VINITA, OKLA. (Society).—Clarence W. Chadwick, lecturer; introduced by F. S. E. Amos, editor of the Leader, who said in part:—

When I received my first diploma from a little Methodist college in Texas the seal stamped upon it bore this device: Omnia probate; bonum tenete—"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." This statement from the New Testament is one which the passing years accent for me and for every other student of this institution left to ponder over it.

Christian Science is a religion which appeals with especial force to thinking people, to those of inquiring mind. It is a religion which warms the hearts of those who love truth and righteousness. We know that those who know most about it and practice it most faithfully have found the path which leads to peace.

YORK, ENGLAND (Society).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Arthur E. Jennings, who said in part:—

The Master's loving invitation and appeal, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me," promises the same help and comfort to-day that it did two thousand years ago. To learn of him is to come to the knowledge of the truth, to the understanding of the power of the Christ. That this same truth is in operation to-day is evident to Christian Scientists who have proved it in the healing of the sick and reforming of the sinner. As a result of the study of the Bible in the light of this truth and of the practice of Christian Science, they have found that the same law governs them which governed the lives of Noah, Abraham, Moses, Jacob, Joseph, David, Samuel, and the prophets, and they have found that this truth is the Science which the Master and all his true followers have demonstrated. The injunction to heal the sick and reform the sinner by spiritual means was given to all mankind, and it is possible for every one to have the Mind of Christ who will learn to think after Christ.

ADRIAN, MICH. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Jerome N. Moran, who said in part:—

I think I am safe in saying that the teaching of all Christian denominations is that God is omnipotent and omnipresent, and that we enter into the kingdom of heaven through drawing nearer day by day to the standard set by the Master for us to follow; and when this has been reached "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." This is all in harmony with the teaching of Christian Science. All that Christian Science claims to do is to lift this teaching out of theory into practice.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Capt. James T. Piggott, Past Commander of the Department of West Virginia G. A. R., who said in part:—

We learn from the Scriptures that when Jesus of Nazareth came preaching the gospel of the kingdom of heaven, the people failed to comprehend his teaching. However, he succeeded in gathering around him a few persons from the humble walks of life, who after a time were able to comprehend in a measure the truths which he taught. Among other things he taught that certain signs would follow them that believed, or understood, his doctrines, and among these signs were the restoring of sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, feet to the lame, and life to the dead. But the masses of the people misapprehended his teachings and misconstrued his healing works, or proofs of his gospel, attributing his demonstrations to "Beelzebub the prince of the devils." The same doctrines and proofs are now being proclaimed by Christian Scientists; and many, as in Jesus' time, misapprehend the teachings and misconstrue the demonstrations, attributing the healing of the sick to other causes.

NORFOLK, VA. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by William Clair Johnson, who said in part:—

Most of us are searching for happiness in some form or other, but how few of us understand what it is that constitutes real happiness; how few of us are willing to admit that what we think will make us happy, perhaps is not what will satisfy us at all. We read in the gospel of Matthew, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Christian Scientists are proving that in proportion as their fervent prayer is to know more about God, and as they practice what they already know, in that proportion will their daily needs be met.

NORWICH, CONN. (Society).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Edward L. Root, who said in part:—

It is recorded in the gospel of St. John that after having given final instruction, admonition, and counsel to his followers just previous to his crucifixion, Jesus said he had yet many things to tell them, but they could not bear them at that time. He promised, however, that after his going away he would send them the Comforter, whom he designated "the Spirit of truth." This Comforter, he promised, should teach them all things, bring all things which he had told them to their remembrance, and guide them "into all truth." In the Science of Christianity revealed to this age by Mrs. Eddy, Christian Scientists recognize the fulfillment of Jesus' promise. They give as a reason for the hope that is in them their healing of sickness and sin through the understanding of this "Spirit of truth," and rejoice that they are enabled, as St. Paul has said, "to comfort them which are in any trouble," by the same comfort wherewith they themselves "are comforted of God."

MILFORD, N. H. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Homer F. Chase, who said in part:—

Christian Science comes to this age to bring to man's thought the reality of spiritual things, the presence and all-power of spiritual law, proving that in the degree the individual puts his daily life in tune with this law of Spirit, in that same degree will good come to him, to the end that the sweet harmonies of life may be experienced.

Testimonies of Healing

I had never heard much about Christian Science until June, 1916, when my sister, who had just returned from California, came to visit me. Several years before, feeling that I could not stand city life any longer, I went to the country, expecting to find health and happiness. I married into a family of God-loving and hard working people, and my husband and I lived on a farm. All seemed serene, but the health and happiness I thought would follow did not. Headaches and bowel trouble of many years' standing continued, and rheumatism set in. I took medicine every day and visited doctors from time to time. Normally my disposition was lively and pleasant, but I was becoming intolerant and faultfinding. Getting more unhappy and discordant, I besought my friends to help me overcome my faults; but they knew not how, for they were in the same mental condition as I was, believing that God sent all things, good and bad, for a wise purpose.

Then my dear sister arrived with the message of Christian Science, and a glorious spiritual uplift followed as I gained some understanding of it. I wanted to give it to every one, but to my amazement with but few exceptions all were offended. Early in July an attack of rheumatism came on, and for a few days the suffering was intense. My husband urged me to have a doctor, but I would not. Instead of leaning on God, however, I was using will power and of course getting worse. On Sunday my husband had to dress me, and though at first I felt I could not go to church I finally decided to do so, though the nearest Christian Science church is over twenty-five miles away. I will not dwell on the agony endured before arriving at the little church. It was communion Sunday, and such love and peace reigned there that during the reading of Science and Health with its wonderful messages of truth all pain left me.

Not only has my healing been permanent, but other discordant conditions have been overcome through Christian Science. The muscles of my leg became contracted and finally snapped, so that I was unable to walk, and was also in great pain, until a dear friend gave me a Christian Science treatment, after which I began to walk at once. The leg remained discolored and swollen for two weeks, but there was no more pain. A growth developed in my breast; but although my mother had passed on from such a condition and I had a latent fear that the same would happen to me, when this growth appeared I had no fear of it. At the time I was in a worried, jealous, and discordant condition, due to family and business troubles, so my prayer was for relief from that state of mind. After treating myself as taught by our beloved Leader in Science and Health, the discordant mental condition was overcome, and in a few weeks the growth also disappeared. I am very grateful for the many blessings I have received through the application of Christian Science.

Several years before coming into Christian Science I attended regularly a Bible class, but I never understood the Bible until I received the key through Christian Science. I always thought a Christian meant a Gentile who believed in Jesus, but now I know one is a Christian only to the extent that he does the works commanded by Christ Jesus. This testimony is given with the hope that it may benefit some one, and with deep gratitude to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, to whom the world owes everlasting gratitude for Science and Health with its true interpretation of the Bible, which enables us to know that God is an ever present help in trouble. I am grateful for the church services and literature, and pray daily that I may progress, and thereby express more of that Mind which was in Christ Jesus. My heart is filled with thankfulness to God for sending us Mrs. Eddy with the promised Comforter, divine Science.—CHRISTINE PLUSCH, Catskill, N. Y.

Christian Science was first brought to my notice about thirteen years ago through the healing of my wife of acute lung trouble. While willing to admit that she had been healed, and that almost instantaneously, I was prone to believe the healing had come from some other source than divine Mind.

During the next few years my wife steadfastly endeavored to gain a clearer understanding of Christian Science through the study of the Bible, together with the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," but I, not yet knowing the richness of the great treasures God had in store for me, simply lay idle. Then dawned that happy day in which our baby boy came to dwell with us, and as I now fully recognize, came through the tender protection of divine Love. When he was about a year and a half old, a change in my work necessitated our moving to a town some distance away, and soon after our arrival there the little fellow contracted a severe case of membranous croup. Being unaware of the fact that, as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 494 of Science and Health, "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need," I began to seek relief for him through material remedies.

My wife held firmly to the thought that Christian Science was the only remedy, but finally consented that I try the medicine I had purchased at the drug store. Here I learned my first important lesson in Christian Science, namely, "No man can serve two masters;" for almost immediately with the application of the medicine the little fellow became dangerously ill. At this juncture my wife declared she would have the assistance of a practitioner even if she had to go many miles for it, but she soon located one only a short distance from the hotel where we were stopping. Our hearts were filled with joy when, soon after the practitioner began to treat the boy, what seemed to be choking him was expelled from his throat and he began at once to improve. In a short time he was restored to perfect health, and to-day, although only four years old, he is able to make many of his own demonstrations.

Since this healing I have been striving to realize each day that "now are we the sons of God." I am deeply grateful for the many blessings gained through the study and application of Christian Science, and to Mrs. Eddy, whose untiring efforts gave to us this blessed truth.

A. T. MALONE, Perry, Iowa.

I am very thankful for Christian Science and for the many blessings that have come to my husband and myself through its teaching. Some years ago a very dear friend who was visiting in our home told me of its healing power and what a wonderful help it had been to her. I was having, to mortal sense, a very unpleasant experience from an eruption on my hands, and shall never forget in what a sweet way she asked me why I did not see a Christian Science practitioner, since most everything else had been tried. After her departure some weeks passed before I decided to do this; then I asked for help and in a week was healed.

Time passed and again I went to a practitioner for physical healing alone; then four years ago I really wanted to find peace, and I have most truly found a religion that can be lived each day. For the many healings that have been ours, I am grateful, but I am most thankful for the spiritual uplift and the understanding that God gives only good. I am always glad to be able to say to mankind as did Peter, "Such as I have give I thee," and I realize more fully each day that I have much to give. It is such happiness to have that peace "which passeth all understanding." For our literature, the reading rooms, and the services I am grateful, and it is a privilege to attend the lectures, but I am more thankful than I can find words to express for Mrs. Eddy's ability to make us understand the promises given us in the Bible. I hope to be worthy of being called a Christian Scientist.—WINNIE PHILLIPS STEVENS, Ypsilanti, Mich.

It is with the deepest gratitude to God that I acknowledge the many blessings which have been conferred upon my wife, my children, and myself through Christian Science, as the result of the loving help of a practitioner and the study of Science and Health.

My wife and I have both been cured of lung trouble, and I have also been healed of hemorrhage of the bowels,—a disorder of years' duration. Our youngest child has been healed of infantile paralysis, and our eldest of various illnesses. Christian Science is my standby in business life, and has been the means of my overcoming many difficulties in connection with my work. Our gratitude is indeed great to Mrs. Eddy for her wonderful book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."—ALBERT E. KEARNEY, Hurstville, New South Wales, Australia.

I wish to set down in words, as well as I can, my unbounded gratitude for Christian Science, that gift of God which was presented to me as a healing law about nine years ago, and which has continued to bless and benefit me in increasing measure since that time. I am a professional violinist. In the early part of 1907 I was seized, in the midst of a busy season, with some kind of rheumatic trouble. Together with this a severe inflammation developed in the left hand, amounting to an infection within the joint at the base of the thumb. For over three months daily visits were made to one of the best physicians in this city. I had all sorts of electric, X-ray, and drug treatments, and also submitted to an operation, but there was little improvement. The doctor told me that even though I should recover, I would be liable to a return of the trouble and my usefulness as a musician would be impaired.

I had a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which a friend had given me about a year before, and during the long nights when the pain kept me awake I would read it. One afternoon on leaving the doctor's office I decided it was useless to continue with him and resolved to go to a Christian Science practitioner. The next day I attended Sunday service in one of the Christian Science churches of Chicago, and was so uplifted by what was read there that my entire thought was changed. It seemed almost as if a voice whispered in my ear that I was surely going to be well and happy and whole like the people who were sitting around me. I went home, stripped the bandages from my hand, washed away the applications, and from that time commenced to improve.

Within a few days a lady telephoned to me that a new Christian Science church was being formed in this city, and she wanted to engage me to play, as they had no organ. I told her of my condition, but she assured me that I could take the engagement. I held this position for four years, until the congregation secured their own edifice and an organ. In two weeks my hand was completely restored, and I have not had a return of the trouble. Technical command of my instrument was also fully restored. Six months later, through reading Science and Health, I was also freed from the bondage of the cigarette habit, after having smoked for fifteen years.

I rejoice and praise God that I know something of Christian Science. It is blessing me daily in my profession and is showing me how to go. It has opened my understanding so that I can comprehend the Scriptures, and it has given me happiness and peace. Words can but poorly express my gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, whose untiring effort brought the truth to me and to all men. I also feel that I owe profound thankfulness to the master Scientist, Jesus the Christ, and to our loving Father-Mother God.

LEON MARX, Chicago, Ill.

[Translated from the German]

It is with a heart grateful to God, the omnipresent and all-loving One, and also to our noble Leader, Mrs. Eddy, through whom the understanding of God as the only power has been made possible for us, that I wish to testify to the many blessings which I have received through Christian Science. It was not through illness that I was led to a knowledge of this truth and its blessed activities; it was the "still small voice" which brought the joyous message that God is Love and good only, and that He is the only power.

I was a seeker after God, but the God of the Old Testament had remained a stranger to me, as I failed to see in Him anything but the punishing avenger; but words such as, "Love your enemies;" "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" "He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone," awakened in me a deep yearning to know more of this greatest of all men who ever lived on earth. I then heard of Christian Science, and a sacred peace came into my heart. I felt secure under God's protection, and in the happy thought that no evil could come nigh me if I remained "under the shadow of the Almighty." Of this I have had innumerable proofs both in a physical and in a mental way, and I would like to make special mention of one demonstration by way of acknowledgment of my indebtedness and in order to show my dear fellow beings how close at hand is the help divine, if we but remain conscious of this fact.

Before the war I used to ride on horseback almost daily, and one morning rode out despite the fact that there had been a heavy rain during the night. Having been given a new attendant, I felt somewhat uneasy, and this condition was communicated to the horse; still I went on riding cheerfully. After a while I put my horse in full gallop, regardless of the fact that I was on wet clay soil. The horse slipped and fell, and I fell to the ground head foremost. I heard the screams of two ladies who had been walking in my direction, but in falling realized that I was always God's child, that divine Love was protecting me, hence I could not come to harm; and so it proved to be. I got up at once without aid, shook the dirt off my suit, and walked toward the ladies who were covering their faces with their hands. According to their sense of things, I was being dragged from under the horse. I asked them to calm themselves and to be assured that, thanks be to God, I was unhurt. They scarcely believed this to be possible, as the fall which they had witnessed had appeared to them a fatal one. In confirmation of my words and of the fact that I was unharmed, I took my horse by the bridle and walked back with them, filled with humility and gratitude for God's omnipresent power.

I used to suffer with colds of all kinds, but this tendency has entirely disappeared, as I do not any more ascribe power to the atmosphere, but look to God, the creator of all good. Although I am still going through trials of one kind or another, and dark hours occasionally seem to hold sway over me, I value even these experiences, for they have strengthened me in my trust that God leadeth everything toward good and that His love is an inexhaustible source of supply for our needs.

My heart is full of gratitude to God for all the help and the blessings which have come to me, and which I am receiving daily and shall continue to receive. My most sincere desire is to make steady progress on the way which leadeth unto Truth, and to grow in the understanding of God's omnipotence, wisdom, and love.

JENNY GOLDSTEIN, Posen, Germany.

I wish to express my gratitude for the understanding of Truth and Love that has come to this age through the study and practice of Christian Science. I did not come to it for physical healing, but for a knowledge of God, good, which the material sciences could not give. I was hungering and thirsting and found the living water. I had no understanding of Christian Science when I first attended a Sunday service, but I received so much good from hearing the Lesson-Sermon that I was healed of a chronic disease from which I had suffered since childhood. Then I began to study for myself. Words cannot express my joy at finding this truth that heals all our diseases. My prayer is that I may give and love more, and be more active in serving the cause of Christian Science.—GRACE A. DIEHL, Columbus, Ohio.

Every day seems to increase my thankfulness for Christian Science, and makes me appreciate more its practical, helpful teaching, which I can apply to all my problems, big or little, domestic, social, and business. Christian Science makes religion a joyful service, not one of intimidation. It does not threaten with pains and penalties or rob one of a single legitimate pleasure. The word science used to seem to me unsuitable as applied to religion, but I now understand that no word could be more appropriate. Its meaning according to the dictionary is "exact knowledge," and it is that more exact knowledge of God, divine Principle, and of man in His image and likeness, which has brought harmony and happiness into my life in such large measure.

No words can ever adequately express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy. Just as the word science is happy in the connection I have just mentioned, so is the title "Key to the Scriptures" applicable to Science and Health. To me it has converted the Bible, which I am ashamed to admit had become dry as dust through superficial reading and long neglect, into a book full of beautiful teaching. Now I read it daily and always gladly, and it is continually yielding fresh truths and more beautiful meanings, inspiring me with higher ideals of life and living, and helping me, in some measure at any rate, to demonstrate them in daily life.

It is five years since Christian Science came to me and my household, and we have had innumerable proofs of its power to heal physical troubles. In all this time I have been only two or three days away from business on account of sickness. During the last three years I have gone through a period of exceptional difficulty in my business affairs, and though at first I was tempted to believe that it would be impossible for me to cope with it, I was soon able to realize that divine Mind rules, governs, and supports us in all righteous effort. Since then I have had very little difficulty in carrying on my business, in spite of the fact that I am over threescore years of age and was preparing before the war, after a strenuous business life of more than forty years, to transfer some of my more active duties and enjoy more leisure. That I have been able to do so much, and that I feel perfectly "fit" and well, is beyond doubt due to Christian Science.

With a very full and grateful heart I can say, "I will sing of the mercies of the Lord for ever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness to all generations."

HENRY ERNEST HOLLIS, Glasgow, Scotland.

Nine years ago I turned to Christian Science for physical healing, after spending the greater part of my life in sickness and intense suffering, all the time possessing a discordant, unhappy condition of thought. From childhood I had suffered from headaches, which became more severe and frequent as I grew older. Another ailment caused periodical attacks of such severe pain that it was usually necessary to call a physician to administer an opiate. I doctored and used nearly every material remedy of which I knew, trying to get relief from these two difficulties which were producing other physical inharmonies. Finally I resorted to an operation, hoping this might bring the desired help, but was again disappointed; however, I continued to use material remedies to get the temporary relief, for I never expected to be well.

Two years after marriage my attention was brought to Christian Science, and I decided to try it at once for physical healing. Two weeks after treatment was begun one of these severe attacks of pain came on, and having turned from material remedies I hardly knew what to do or how to endure the pain. When a friend came in and offered to telephone a Christian Science practitioner I gladly consented, and in less than five minutes after treatment was requested the pain ceased, and I have not had another attack since. In less than five minutes Christian Science had healed a difficulty from which I had suffered and for which I had sought help in material ways all my life. The minor ailments disappeared one by one, but the headaches were not overcome until I had purged from my consciousness such errors as resentment, criticism, judging, sensitiveness, and the various assertions of self. As these long-standing errors were uprooted and gradually expelled, the physical condition became proportionably better, until at last I was free. Through this cleansing of the mentality and its physical effects, I learned how completely our mental condition governs the body; also that it is necessary to keep our thoughts loving, kind, and holy if we would have healthy bodies.

While very grateful for freedom from these ills, I am even more thankful for the spiritual understanding and the great peace and uplift of mind which have come as a result of reading and studying our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. I knew nothing of Christian Science as a religion when I turned to it, but for three years previously had been seeking and hungering for something which would satisfy the heart in a religious way. When it was suggested that I try Christian Science for physical healing I did so without even a thought that it had anything for me beyond this. Before I had finished reading the first page of our textbook, such a wonderful peace filled my consciousness that I realized at once I had at last found that satisfaction for which I had been longing, and ever since that day Science and Health has been my nearest and dearest companion. It has opened up a new life to me, and through its inspiring pages I have learned about God, and man in His image and likeness. Its teachings have brought health, peace, harmony, and the desire to serve God and do what I can toward advancing His truth.

Christian Science has healed my husband of the smoking habit of over thirty years' standing, and has regenerated him mentally and spiritually. It has also healed him instantaneously of ptomaine poisoning and of many minor ills.

My heart is filled with gratitude to God, and with thankfulness to our revered Leader for the blessings and the spiritual enlightenment going out to all the world through the teachings of Christian Science.

DONNA WELSH, Minneapolis, Minn.

I wish to testify to the great blessing that Christian Science has been to me and to my husband. All my life, over fifty years, I have been seeking for the truth and I have found it in Christian Science, which was first brought to my attention as worth studying in 1910. At that time I met a friend who had always been an invalid and was astonished at the change in her. She told me that Christian Science had brought this about, and very kindly gave me some copies of the Sentinel. I had a friend who was sick, and I thought Christian Science was just what she needed, but after studying it a little while I found it was what I myself, as well as all mankind, needed.

Since then we have had no doctor and used no medicine, although my husband has been so ill that neighbors thought he would not get better. In February, 1915, he was in such a condition that I felt only Christian Science could save him. For four days he was not right mentally, though he got up and dressed every day. On the fourth day he was clear in his thought, and we were thankful. We had no practitioner, as we are not near one. He has been away from work on account of sickness only one day this year, whereas he used to be at home every few months for a short rest. We have found such true friends through Christian Science. Words cannot express our thankfulness to God for this great blessing, and we hope to prove our gratitude by our deeds.—MRS. E. ECKERSALL, Heywood, near Manchester, England.

[Translated from the German]

In the year 1913 I was severely tried in the school of life. Illnesses, accidents, and the loss of a dear child had caused a physical and mental breakdown. Besides these, I passed through a very difficult childbirth which brought me to the edge of the grave. The baby too I had to sacrifice. But "man's extremity is God's opportunity;" so on the fourth day, when my sufferings were particularly severe, and when, owing to high fever, the condition seemed dangerous, I asked a dear friend for Christian Science treatment, which was readily given. I was quickly and completely healed and felt like a new person, strong and well. The physician, as well as all my acquaintances, were greatly astonished. I should like to point out that the medicine prescribed for me at the time of the crisis was never taken, because I was looking for help in another direction. I thank God with all my heart that we have found the truth which is an ever present help in trouble.

My son also had a wonderful healing. He suffered severely from the supposed effects of contact with poison ivy. His head and body were terribly swollen. For two days he was literally blind and suffered great pain. We at once telephoned to a Christian Science practitioner, and in ten days, having received four absent treatments, the child was completely healed. Two Sundays following this experience, while at Sunday school, he discarded his glasses. This was four years ago, and ever since that time he has been in good health. Besides this, pleurisy, measles, influenza, injuries, and many other ills have been healed in our family through this truth. Hatred, envy, and melancholy have disappeared from my consciousness, and sorrow has been overcome for me through the realization that there is no separation in Spirit.

I am filled with deep gratitude and appreciation to our Leader for having made known to us a world filled with the presence of divine Love. It is my sincere desire to live so as to be worthy of the name Christian Scientist, and to help others as I have been helped.

There is nothing for which I am more grateful to Christian Science than the help it has been in the raising of my children—for the health, happiness, peace, and love it has brought into our home. When I first heard of Christian Science I thought I should be glad to investigate it for myself, but did not suppose I would trust my children to it. One night, however, a Christian Science practitioner happened to be in the house when my little daughter, then about four years of age, awakened with a severe attack of the croup. She had been subject to these attacks since babyhood and a physician had always been called, but the practitioner assured me the child would be all right, and she was. In about fifteen minutes she was sleeping soundly, perfectly healed, and she never had another attack. This was all the proof I needed. From that day to this Christian Science has been our only physician, and it has never failed to heal when gratitude and love have opened the way.

Several years later this same daughter had trouble with her eyes and finally became totally blind in one eye, according to the verdict of the oculist to whom she was taken in compliance with the wishes of her grandparents, who were not Scientists. Christian Science treatment was immediately begun and in a few months the eyes were healed, except for a slight scar on one of the eyeballs. This, too, afterward disappeared, and she has used her eyes constantly ever since, often until late at night with her college work, without the least inconvenience.

I am very grateful for the Sunday school and the working knowledge of Christian Science the children have gained there. It has been such a help and protection to them. Much gratitude is also felt for the literature which comes into our home daily with its healing message. Christian Science has lifted me out of the darkness into light, and my earnest desire is to radiate this light to others struggling under the burden of sorrow and sin. My thankfulness goes out to God, and my gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has shown us the way, and to those dear friends who have helped me on my journey from sense to Soul.

MARY DENNY ELLIOTT, Pasadena, Cal.

I wish to testify to the wonderful healing of my son's eyes through Christian Science. He had a serious defect in the lens of the eye, which three of the best oculists in Europe said could never be cured, and which would necessitate his wearing glasses all his life. After being in Science about two months, he was able to do without the glasses and has never needed to use them since. His sight is now normal, and he never suffers from either his eyes or his head, as he did so often before.

M. EBERHARD-HINSHELWOOD, Lausanne, Switzerland.

From Our Exchanges

[Rev. John Gardner, D.D., in Record of Christian Work]

It is a wondrous thing that a good and sanctified personality should be as the sunrise to human hearts. It is a tragic thing that men and women in association with the Divine should treat it as common clay. Is that our failure? Are you and I also incapable of appreciating the man who lives next door? Is it possible that if Christ were back again in Northfield we might be walking with him and talking to him and yet estimate him as but a carpenter—just a somewhat eccentric man? Is that possible in this present age? Is that the secret, I wonder, of the impotence of society and the impotence of the church of God? I fear me sometimes that it is so.

[Dr. K. C. Anderson in The Christian Commonwealth]

The coming faith will not be a new faith. There is no such thing as a new theology in that sense. It will be the old faith reinterpreted. I have no quarrel with the old faith, except this: that it has been wrongly interpreted—in a literal and unspiritual way. What is needed is that it be interpreted in an inner and spiritual way. A great many people in these days think that they do not believe in Christianity, when the real truth is that they do not believe in the literal and historical interpretations which Christianity has received at the hands of the official churches of Christendom.

[Rev. William H. Bown in The Living Church]

We cannot close our eyes to the fact that what we need most in our Christian life is the spirit of unreserved consecration to God; the willingness to do according to our opportunities and capacity for service, and the deep consciousness that every act of love and obedience tells in the ultimate result.

[T. Rhondda Williams in The Christian World]

We need to have a great sense of the future, of the possibilities of the human race, of the divine heights which it may reach; and then we need to consecrate ourselves to its forward movement, and use all our experience of God as dynamic, and gather all the wisdom we can for practical direction.

[Shailer Mathews in The Constructive Quarterly]

A successful democracy must rely upon contagious spiritual idealism rather than upon force.

French Translation of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy

In conformity to the rules established by Mary Baker Eddy for making and publishing translations of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" has been translated into the French language, and is now published with the English text opposite the French translation, and is ready for delivery.

This edition is printed on fine paper and bound in cloth similar to the cover used on the English editions. Price, one to five copies, $3.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $3.25 each. It is also printed on Oxford India Bible paper, and bound in the same style as the regular pocket edition of Science and Health. Price, one to five copies, $5.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $5.25 each. The quantity price will be made on six or more books of the French translation, including the two styles of bindings.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This small volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, and which will occupy the minimum space and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

Orders for this edition are now being filled in rotation.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

New Pamphlets

"Christian Science: Pure Metaphysics," a lecture by Dr. Francis J. Fluno, printed in English only; also "Christian Science: Its Teachings, Methods, and Works," by Judge Septimus J. Hanna, printed in Swedish with alternate pages in English, are now on sale at five cents a copy.

Vest Pocket Pamphlet

The article "Possession," by Adam H. Dickey, has been reprinted in a pamphlet, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at four cents a copy.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Currency should be sent by registered letter only.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

What Is a Herald?

Der Herold der Christian Science was founded, 1903, by Mary Baker Eddy, to give German speaking people articles on Christian Science in their own language. Commencing with January, 1918, Der Herold will appear with English text opposite the pages in German. On the same date identical articles will appear as a new periodical, entitled Le Héraut de Christian Science, having alternate pages in French and English.

In days of old, the function of a herald, according to Webster, was "to proclaim war or peace, . . . bear messages to or from rulers or commanders, . . . make solemn announcements, etc."

In the present day of Christian Science, the purpose of a herald (Der Herold der Christian Science and Le Héraut de Christian Science) is, according to Mary Baker Eddy, on page 353 of "First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," "to proclaim the universal activity and availability of Truth."

Thousands of Christian Scientists, whether able to read German or not, have found Der Herold der Christian Science effective for individual use and through Literature Distribution Committees for distribution to German speaking friends; and the love thus manifested has been more than rewarded by some vision of what this periodical is able to do in conveying its messages of healing to mankind.

When Der Herold der Christian Science appears in January with English text opposite the German, and Le Héraut de Christian Science appears the same month with English text opposite the French, enlarged opportunities will be presented for participation in the work of circulating these periodicals for the purpose of proclaiming "the universal activity and availability of Truth" throughout the world.

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission is afforded through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, at nominal postage, periodicals offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen. The printed notice on the front cover of The Christian Science Journal and the Christian Science Sentinel signed by the Postmaster-General explains this simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to send periodicals regularly as desired, either to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at the training cantonments, or for any other purpose of general distribution.

High Ideals

BERTHA V. ZEREGA

"OUR ideals form our characters," Mrs. Eddy says on page 3 of "The People's Idea of God." The quality of our work is invariably gauged by the character of our idealism; whatever ideals we are entertaining in the seclusion of our inmost thoughts are embodied with unfailing exactness in the scope, quality, and efficiency with which we handle every appointed task. Some one has very aptly said that "character is simply habit long continued," and unquestionably the character of our work is expressive of and wholly dependent upon the habit of our thinking, of our self-culture, self-discipline, and above all of the ideals which we are making our own.

This is illustrated by contrasting the work in any line of the amateur with that of the professional. The amateur, however sincere he may be in his desire to produce good results, seldom attains the perfection and freedom of execution which is arrived at by the professional, because the amateur does not as a rule devote the time and labor which perfection of detail and thorough mastery of a subject demand. The professional, on the other hand, willingly makes great personal sacrifices of both time and effort toward the accomplishment of his ideal, and as a result of much self-instruction so happily conceals the mechanics of his vocation that he loses himself in his message and therefore is able to endow his work with a nobility of purpose and breadth of vision which is quite out of the range of the novice whose ideals are less universal and impartial.

Many people have a limited and an erroneous sense of the term professional, supposing that it implies artificiality, and that it is consequently an undesirable asset in the work of the layman. Artificiality, however, is due either to insincerity or to technical ignorance of the medium in which one is working, and this latter cause is responsible for much of the artificiality of the inexperienced amateur worker, who on account of his lack of training is deprived of the stimulating advantages of self-criticism. The professional is generally his own sternest critic; he knows the intrinsic value of perfect work, and judges his achievements according to this fixed standard of excellence. The work of the true professional is devoid of artificiality, since it is the finished product of the combined qualities of sincerity, unselfish devotion to a high ideal, application, experience, skill, and simplicity.

Nothing is more inexcusably unscientific—in the sense of departing from the practical idealism set forth in Christian Science—than mediocre work, for mediocrity wears the stamp of the tyro, of unideal and superficial standards; and nothing short of faultless work should be the aim of the Christian Scientist who is striving to prove the possibility of attaining perfection along every line of endeavor, both for himself and for others. In the fourth chapter of Hebrews Paul says, "Let us hold fast our profession,"—and what is our profession as Christian Scientists but the intelligent utilization of our understanding of divine Principle, Life, Truth, and Love, in every least detail of our daily living?

Only through entire consecration of thought and ambition to a high ideal may we acceptably follow in the footsteps of the Master and develop the spiritual capacity to accomplish the instantaneous healing work which he did. As we are controlled by this illuminating ideal, we find that the smallest task becomes one of great possibilities, and, if well done, proves itself to be a spiritual link in an unbroken chain of progressive experiences for individual growth. So instead of belittling the work of the moment or chafing under some enforced labor, let us love and cultivate it for its hidden treasures of divine unfoldment, remembering that our reward is with us, since work well done—that is, perfect work—scatters blessings collectively as well as individually, and that greater work is before us, because faithful, competent service inevitably leads to greater responsibilities and more advanced problems.

In assuming the duties of a church office, either as reader, trustee, or member of a committee, how important it is to realize that we are intrusted with the sacred obligation of demonstrating perfection as attainable and practical in our specific work for the cause of Christian Science. This high ideal can be accomplished only as we resolutely reject the suggestion that mediocre, amateur, and hence personal work is "good enough," and acknowledge as our standard only the work which is adequate in requirement, increasingly measuring up to perfection in construction, technique, and spiritual interpretation,—as we exchange the human concept of our particular work for the divine idea which already exists complete and perfect in Mind.

That this spiritual conception can be brought into manifestation only through prayerful, intelligent preparation and serious application of all rules involved in the legitimate requirements of our work, is obvious. Teachableness, that rare quality which only "the meek in heart" (Science and Health, p. 33) possess, since the childlike thought alone willingly admits its deficiencies and eagerly seeks the true way, is perhaps the most valuable characteristic in the realization of high ideals; for unless we are aware of our defects in relation to the requirements of a given piece of work, we have no incentive for progressive, consecrated study and practice of the appropriate methods demanded by our perfect ideal.

When we make it our sacred business to excel our best efforts, striving to achieve perfection through a scientific, spiritual grasp of the universal aspect of our work in its relation to the cause of Christian Science, seeking to enrich our labor with a purer, truer, and simpler love for God and for our neighbor, then does our work become healing work, inspiring and transforming in its mission, whatever its specific routine. As thought is purged of self, pride, mental apathy, and worldly affections, and we devote our lives to this art of proving in our practical experience the priceless value of high ideals, all service becomes holy work and every distinctive task some new phase of "our profession." page 2 of the Message to The Mother Church for 1902 our Leader says, "To live and let live, without clamor for distinction or recognition; to wait on divine Love; to write truth first on the tablet of one's own heart,—this is the sanity and perfection of living, and my human ideal."

"Thine only son"

DELAVAN ROSS MOORE

IN the twenty-second chapter of Genesis it is recorded that God tempted Abraham and commanded him to take Isaac, his only son, and offer him for a burnt offering. At the crucial moment an angel of the Lord stayed the hand of the patriarch and forbade the consummation of the act on the ground that his fidelity could no longer be questioned, in that he had not withheld even this supreme sacrifice.

To the Christian Scientist this incident constitutes an interesting and instructive lesson. A superficial and literal reading is, of course, unsatisfactory, and such reading would miss the great lesson; indeed, any interpretation which varies from the scientific understanding of God and the divine idea must needs be rejected by the student of Christian Science. Abraham had been commanded, it will be remembered, to get out from his country and from among his kindred unto a land that God was to show him. Considered historically, this country was Chaldea, the land of superstition, stargazing, necromancy, and idolatry; metaphysically, it was the consciousness of so-called mortal mind, the false belief of life in matter,—polytheistic confusion. The land which the patriarch sought is plainly the realm of Soul, of reality, "a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

It is evident from the many incidents of Abraham's career, as recorded in the book of Genesis, that this true and enlightened understanding was not reached in a moment, but was necessarily a product of spiritual growth. Its analogy is found in the lives of truth seekers throughout all ages, as witness Moses, who abode forty years in the desert of Midian, slowly unfolding into the consciousness of eternal realities as he recognized the utter emptiness of the "wisdom of the Egyptians;" and then for forty other years this same Moses, by virtue of his enlightened understanding of the truth of being, leading a nation out of mental bondage into spiritual freedom. In Abraham's case this pilgrimage from material beliefs to spiritual understanding may be said to be summed up in the narrative of the sacrificial offering up of Isaac.

When God called to Abraham he answered, "Behold, here I am." Here I am in the consciousness of material selfhood,—albeit manifesting a willingness to follow the voice of Truth and to walk by faith as a first requisite to progress. Then came the command, "Take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of." Now modern research reveals the fact that this mountain to which Abraham was directed was, according to tradition, the very spot upon which in later centuries the great temple was built.

On page 595 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy defines temple as "the idea of Life, substance, and intelligence; the superstructure of Truth; the shrine of Love." On page 594 of the same book we find the definition of son to be: "The Son of God, the Messiah or Christ. The son of man, the offspring of the flesh." Is it not plain, then, that Abraham was to enter into the temple, the consciousness and understanding of Life, Truth, and Love, and there sacrifice his false, material concept of man, the offspring of the flesh? That which the human mind held as substance must be offered as a "burnt offering;" that is, the belief of life in matter must be purged and purified in the fires of divine Truth, thus revealing the eternal fact of the allness of Life.

This, then, was the divine command in obedience to which Abraham began that journey to mount Moriah. It is recorded that "on the third day Abraham lifted up his eyes, and saw the place afar off." By reference again to the chapter entitled Glossary in Science and Health, it will be seen that on page 586 Mrs. Eddy defines eyes as "spiritual discernment,—not material but mental." This dim perception of Truth that dawned upon Abraham's consciousness "on the third day," typifies the pilgrimage from sense to Soul. In other words, Abraham is here shown as a type of the race, unfolding into spiritual understanding.

Abraham having now attained this unfoldment, which may be said to prefigure the atonement, the angel of the Lord called to him "out of heaven," the consciousness of absolute Truth. Then answered Abraham, "Here am I," but with a clearer understanding of the eternal, infinite I AM, who is God, omnipotent Life; and with this attainment, or atonement, Abraham knew the very truth of his being, the perfect spiritual idea, expression, reflection, of Life divine. He knew too that the son of man, the offspring of the flesh, was a human misconception of the divine idea. In the infinite light of spiritual understanding he beheld man as the son of the Most High, the reflection of Life, one with the Father. He knew, furthermore, that none could lay his hand upon God's idea, and that the destruction of the belief in matter was not the destruction of immortal, indestructible Life.

Now, in the fullness of spiritual enlightenment, the angel of the Lord, the messenger of Truth, called again to Abraham and revealed unto him that man, as the idea of God, is eternally blessed and infinitely multiplied, and is found possessing "the gate of his enemies" in the recognition of his dominion over all error. And surely God's promise is true. The divine idea is revealed throughout eternity. It has shone as a pillar of fire to benighted humanity in every age, and its light, revealed anew in Christian Science, is surely blessing all the nations of the earth through the understanding that Life is God, Spirit, infinite and eternal.

Sunday School Teaching

DAISY CYNTHIA WOOD

To exemplify in thought, word, and deed the highest sense of perfection attainable to the human understanding, and to strive to bring to fulfillment such promise in the pupils, is the mission of the Christian Science Sunday school teacher. "Be ye therefore perfect" should be the illumined motto ever before the teacher's thought. No insincerity, no careless exposition of Principle, no slovenly statements of truth are permissible. No personal control, partiality, or self-aggrandizement can obtain, else the teaching would be "as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

The child-thought expects practice and example to follow precept. Its pure faith has not acquired the more mature and needful tempering of charity and forgiveness for human shortcomings. The receptive thought of the child receives mental impressions more readily than it does word pictures. If, then, the thought of a teacher is impure, unloving, selfish, or self-willed, the child-thought will feel that something is wrong, and the result will be apparently unexplainable restlessness, lack of interest, willful perversity. No practitioner can heal a disease which he holds as real in his own thought; neither can a pure, happy expression of goodness and spirituality be brought out in the pupils if the teacher's own thought is not pure. Only as thought is lifted above materiality, freed from all sensuality and hate, can the teacher hope or expect to lead the pupils' thought to the joy of obedience to divine Love.

Could anyone conceive of a child being contrary, stubborn, or self-willed in the presence of Jesus? No! Why? Because Jesus' whole thought was that of tender mother-love, so perfect in its infinite compassion that not only could it still the stormy sea, but it could imbue, transfuse, and transform every receptive thought, stilling the tempests of mortal mind with the calm consciousness of peace, telling of the ever present Christ.

The mission of the Sunday school teacher is then to approach the work with as much of that Christly love as one is able to discern and demonstrate. The need is to express the spirit of the truth taught, with devout meekness, humility, and obedience. This exalted mental sense establishes between the teacher and the pupils a wholesome, friendly basis of work. It constitutes oneness of thought and unity of purpose. All have come together as those who are walking in the light, to give and to receive of each one's highest understanding of God and man. The recognition and maintenance of this mental attitude banishes all fear, reticence, and self-consciousness. It bases the work on confidence and trust, and opens wide the gates of faith and receptivity. Discipline then becomes a question of Spirit's supremacy, and obedience the spontaneous result.

Speaking of the great Teacher, Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 31): "First in the list of Christian duties, he taught his followers the healing power of Truth and Love." This essential point of distinction between Christian Science and other forms of religion needs careful explanation in the Sunday school. Many children enter the Christian Science Sunday school who alone carry the seed of truth into homes where it might not otherwise enter for an indefinite period; therefore this seed borne in thought should carry with it a realization of its fruit bearing. In every step the child needs to become aware of the healing results of the instruction given, through its practical application in daily experiences.

To teach the fundamentals of Christian Science merely as abstract truths without giving to the child simple illustrations of the spiritual import as well as the demonstrable value of those truths is to leave the thought in confusion. The teacher's requirement is to have so practical a working knowledge of Christian Science that the profound simplicity of the truth may be ever clearly expressed. The more experienced and devoutly consecrated to divine Science is the teacher, the more easily will be brought to the pupil the simple God-knowledge with its own inherent power, rather than the complicated, intricate speculations of the human mind. The mission of the teacher is so to inspire the child's thought at each lesson with the spirit of loving service to God and man, that the happiness so obtained, and the victories won over wrong thinking and doing, will establish a sense of harmony, the reign of righteousness, the kingdom of heaven, as ever present. Thus will the children be led to feel the greater blessing to them of attendance at a Christian Science Sunday school rather than the sense of regret that they do not have picnics, festivals, and the like, such as they hear of from children in other Sunday schools. So will be eclipsed the desire for mere idle pleasure-seeking, which brings no such happy results as healing.

Our Leader's exalted hope of fulfillment from the Sunday school children can, perhaps, best be expressed in her tender words from "Pulpit and Press" (p. 9): "Ah, children, you are the bulwarks of freedom, the cement of society, the hope of our race!" Sacred indeed is the mission of the Christian Science Sunday school teacher. Noble endeavor, consecrated love, sanctified living, alone can fit one for this high calling. Putting on "the bond of perfectness," may each one called to this joyous service in the vineyard of our Lord, obey our Leader's admonition (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 93), "Beloved students, so teach that posterity shall call you blessed, and the heart of history shall be made glad!"

How We Spent Christmas Day

MARIAN E. MARTIN

In the prophecy of Isaiah we read: "Before they call, I will answer;" and again, "For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rereward." Christmas day is our Thanksgiving day in the Christian Science churches of Australia, and to get a clearer understanding for the Thanksgiving service the writer had spent a good deal of time in the study of Mrs. Eddy's writings, especially the articles regarding Christmas in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany."

Arrangements had been made to go to the mountains with some friends after the meeting for a quiet study of Christian Science; but when everything was packed an urgent message came from a son asking for treatment for his mother, whose family had also arranged to spend Christmas in the country. The question which then had to be considered was whether to carry out the first intention, for which the special study had been made, or to go to the sufferer, who was several miles out of town. A Thanksgiving meeting had not been missed for eight years; yet, remembering that the call came from one who knew very little of Christian Science, it was decided to forgo the service and to visit the family.

Meanwhile the son had thought he ought to make sure of what his mother really wanted, and had therefore called in a doctor, who diagnosed the complaint as peritonitis and appendicitis. The doctor would not handle the case and ordered the patient sent to the hospital for an operation, adding, "If it is not too late." The son then started off to the telephone to report what the doctor had said, and was met on the road by the Christian Scientist whom he was seeking. This surely was the fulfillment of the promise, "Before they call, I will answer."

Our Leader tells us on page 260 of Miscellany: "Science is divine; it hath no partnership with human means and ends, no half-way stations. Nothing conditional or material belongs to it." The mother was asked to decide for herself whether she would have an operation or Christian Science treatment. She then asked those present if they would be afraid to stand by her with Christian Science. It was explained to her that Christian Science revealed the ever present Christ, the second coming for which all Christians were looking, and this satisfied her. In turning again to our dear Leader's words we read (Miscellany, p. 257): "To-day the watchful shepherd shouts his welcome over the new cradle of an old truth. This truth has traversed night, through gloom to glory, from cradle to crown. . . . To-day the Christ is, more than ever before, 'the way, the truth, and the life,'—'which lighteth every man that cometh into the world,' healing all sorrow, sickness, and sin."

This truth was demonstrated, for when the song of thanksgiving went up in the church, there was a decided improvement in the condition of the one who had called for treatment. At two o'clock in the afternoon she sat up in a chair while her bed was made more comfortable, and in a few days she was about as usual. On page 351 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "It was the living, palpitating presence of Christ, Truth, which healed the sick."

No one felt that in giving up the trip anything had been missed, for all concerned had been taken up on the mountain, and this experience would undoubtedly help to work out their salvation. The study which had been undertaken for Christmas day, although not carried out according to the plan first thought of, meant much in the way of guidance for the needed treatment, and was a preparation for an emergency in which there was no time for study. Again were recalled the words from Isaiah: "For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the Lord will go before you; and the God of Israel will be your rereward."

Smiting the Enemy

GUSTAVUS S. PAINE

IT is recorded in the book of Joshua that as the children of Israel journeyed toward the promised land, even long after they had passed through the Red Sea and later through the waters of the Jordan, after they had been fed by manna and after they had taken Jericho, even then one enemy after another appeared to block their progress. To many this particular portion of the Scriptures has seemed dry and unimportant; but to the Christian Scientist, considering the spiritual idea of which the material history is only a counterfeit, the account is a revelation of encouragement. For what did the children of Israel, under the leadership of Joshua, do in each case as the enemy presented itself? The record says laconically that they smote it "with the edge of the sword."

Barbarous material warfare such as this is of course the very reverse of true spiritual warfare. The ruthless killing of people and the razing of towns rests upon the mistaken supposition that one group of human beings is the enemy of another group. As a matter of fact the enemy is never a person or a group of persons, but always a wrong condition of thought. It is therefore to be defeated with vigorous right thinking, followed by right doing, which is true spiritual smiting and the only final solution for any seeming difficulty. Through much tribulation the children of Israel of to-day must ultimately see this in order to attain a satisfactory peace. In the meantime the Christian Scientist keeps his balance mentally in the midst of human warfare, and does his part in bringing that warfare to a close by substituting for it the true method, which will bring a sure victory for Principle.

As Mrs. Eddy says in the beautiful article "Love Your Enemies" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 8), "Simply count your enemy to be that which defiles, defaces, and dethrones the Christ-image that you should reflect." Wrong thinking, originating in the supposition that there can be a power apart from good, is the one enemy which in our experience claims to defile, deface, and dethrone the Christ-image with the suggestion of disease, sin, limitation, hatred, greed, and evil of every sort. Fortunately, however, this enemy is supposititious, and a supposition of the opposite of the one infinite God, who is all there really is, must be an impossibility.

What if awakened humanity, in striving earnestly to be guided and governed by Principle, seems to encounter at every forward step suggestions of an opposite to the allness of good? These suggestions are but the Makkedahs, Eglons, and Debirs to be smitten instantly and joyously with the only effective weapon there is, the incisive understanding of Truth with which Jesus unerringly separated the false from the true, the "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," as Paul declares. On page 30 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy says, "As the pioneer of Christian Science I stood alone in this conflict, endeavoring to smite error with the falchion of Truth." Here the homely old verb "smite" connotes the vigor and thoroughness necessary to our work, which she further indicates when she continues: "The rare bequests of Christian Science are costly, and they have won fields of battle from which the dainty borrower would have fled. Ceaseless toil, self-renunciation, and love, have cleared its pathway."

The swordlike "word of God" we know expresses the activity of the divine Mind. The divine consciousness must always be active. It therefore rests with us to choose what we are to accept as real. If we accept that which says, "I am conscious of pain, of lack, of human hatred, or even of limited understanding," we have surrendered to the enemy. If on the other hand we recognize that such a suggestion is not of God, divine Mind, who being the infinite All includes all true consciousness, all true supply, all true and vigorous activity, all true understanding, we smite the enemy with the "word of God." The acceptance of this ever present activity is the reflection of Truth, which smites once and for all the suggestion that any form of inaction can be real.

Of course in the last analysis there really has never been any enemy to smite. The edge of the world, from which navigators a thousand years ago were afraid they would fall into space if they ventured too far out over the ocean, never existed. Nobody ever did fall off. Yet for hundreds of years this supposition, this nothingness claiming to be something, seemed a very real enemy to mankind, limiting the whole world's thought and action. When, however, it was smitten through fearless reliance upon intelligence, it was proved to have been a phantom.

It is this knowledge of the utter illusiveness of the enemy, because of the allness of God and His activity, that enables the Christian Scientist to continue his daily warfare with enthusiasm. Whether his work be the healing of the sick metaphysically, harvesting in the fields, training in a military camp, or day by day repelling and overcoming the defects that suggest themselves as his own, he knows that really the divine consciousness and its infinitely varied and vigorous manifestation is present in spite of the seeming, just as the sun shines on untouched by transitory earth clouds. The daily work of smiting the enemy thus resolves itself finally into a recognition that divine Love is manifesting itself now and forever in joy, strength, harmony, peace, and every other right mental quality, and is the remedy for every conceivable phase of error.

The Receptive Thought

ALMA LUTZ

WHILE the writer was reading the gospel narrative of the birth of Jesus these questions presented themselves: Why were the shepherds, diligently guarding their flocks under the silent stars, the only ones who heard the joyous song of the angels? Why did the wise men of the East see the star and search for the child Jesus? Why did not the revelation come to the representatives of the church, to the rabbis or the scribes, to some nobleman, or to any other man or woman of the country? To the consciousness most free from material thought, Truth is most readily revealed. The rabbis and the scribes were steeped in the dogma and ritual of the Jewish faith. The noblemen were lost in the materialism of Herod's court. The influence of the corrupt government and court life reached the people and burdened their consciousness with erroneous thoughts.

Far from the life of the cities, in the hills of Judea, under the starry skies, were the shepherds. Perhaps with them still lingered the spirit of the Ten Commandments and an understanding of the teachings of the prophets. Their life in the open, fraught with innumerable dangers, led them to look beyond themselves to the supreme power for strength. Their care for the sheep filled them with a tenderness and love which made them reach out toward God, who is Love. To minds such as these the angels came and told of the birth of Jesus, "the human herald of Christ, Truth" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii). There remained another step to be taken, and the shepherds were ready for that step. They had heard the message of the angelic host, and they had faith enough to leave their work to investigate. They even made haste to find the babe whose coming meant so much to mankind. Are we always ready to leave our habitual round of duty and pleasure to seek out the Christ, although we too have faintly heard the message of the angels?

In the East there were wise men who, we may believe, were well versed in the scholastic learning of their day. They had studied the heavens, and in the movements of the stars had sought supernatural wisdom; but with all their learning they were dissatisfied—it could not solve for them the problems of life or the riddle of the universe. They looked beyond and above for something better, and perhaps in the long night watches, as they gazed at the stars, they felt with David that "the heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork." Looking beyond and above material learning, reaching out toward the one Mind, they saw the star, and guided by it they left their work and journeyed to Jerusalem. There for a time seeking guidance from a material source, they lost sight of the star, but on leaving the city and looking higher for guidance, they saw it again, and rejoicing "with exceeding great joy" were led to the manger.

May we not learn a lesson from the wise men? We too, leaving behind us all purely material learning, may bring our gifts to the altar. We all have gifts to bring, gifts of service, gifts of our very best. After we have found the Christ, we too may depart into our own country "another way," and there in our own corner of the world, in our own environment, demonstrate the truth, the Christ-idea.

Forgetting

FREDERICK S. CAMPBELL

O TROUBLED heart, regretful of past years
And stain of sin, so long to goodness blind,
A message here for thee, to dry thy tears.
'Tis this: Forget those things which are behind.

O restless heart, resentful of past wrongs,
Pained by injustice and the deed unkind,
To thee this word of Love divine belongs;
Thou too forget those things which are behind.

Dost say, Forget I cannot? Then hear this:
My Father knows no wrong. In that pure Mind
No thought of evil comes, in realm of bliss
No past. Forget those things which are behind.

Can aught be true that He, free from all taint,

["Government"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 9, 1917]

Individuals unite in their efforts to protect their civic and religious rights, and these efforts result in governments of state and church. According to the ideals entertained will the quality of the governments be, for the latter can rise no higher than the understanding of the individuals who form them. True government expresses Principle, but if a concept of God is entertained which is incompatible with Principle, the quality of government will straightway be lowered. Mrs. Eddy has pointed this out unmistakably on page 94 of Science and Health: "The eastern empires and nations owe their false government to the misconceptions of Deity there prevalent. Tyranny, intolerance, and bloodshed, wherever found, arise from the belief that the infinite is formed after the pattern of mortal personality, passion, and impulse."

How can the consecrated Christian Scientist best support his government? Is it not true that he must do this by upholding constantly the right idea of government in thought and deed? To protect the weak, to correct public mistakes, to instruct the citizen in ways of helpfulness, to safeguard religious liberty and the right of all men to choose the method of healing in which they have confidence, to insure justice, and to beautify existence,—these are some of the duties and privileges of good government. As humanity grows more honest and learns the lesson of unselfish cooperation, government is enabled to develop further activities, but it must ever repose upon the one cause, upon God, as its sure foundation. Therefore, the study of the nature of God elucidates the basis of true government and makes obedience scientific and gratitude natural. In proportion as men gain a clearer understanding of God, they can pray for their own countries under arms without wishing evil to enemy countries, and their prayers can produce repentance where it is needed and alertness where mesmerism has induced sleep.

Mortal fears, mysticism, spiritism and spying, hypnotism and electricity used for transmitting evil messages, hasten a human government to its own destruction. The same destruction will attend the methods of persons who use their official authority to play a game of "hold up" for financial rewards, mentally blindfolding the unwary private citizen and sandbagging him with threats, to hold him at their mercy. Such criminal "hold ups," whether exercised through so-called business investments, food supplies, or public works, imperil the rights of rich and poor alike. Ignorant people are sometimes tied to individuals who bleed them of their well-earned savings by the lure of "get-rich-quick" schemes.

Christian Science opens the eyes of the blind and gives spiritual perception, so that the reward of honest labor cannot be caught in a dishonest trap, set by pernicious greed. Christian Science reveals a hunger and thirst after righteousness so intense on the part of the heavenly minded that it may almost be called a spiritual greed, whereby a man lays hold on divine realities and adds them to his kingdom of God within. This is the true desire, the counterfeit of which, known as human will power, beats the timid to their knees and robs the innocent investor.

There can be no compromise with error. Human governments are called upon to protect their citizens against fraudulent organizations in the same manner as Christian Science saves men from the deceptive beliefs of sin, sickness, and death. As we read on page 225 of Science and Health: "What is it that binds man with iron shackles to sin, sickness, and death? Whatever enslaves man is opposed to the divine government. Truth makes man free." When governed by Christian Science a man is a better citizen and in better health, more genuinely successful in the business world, and more alert to the machinations of the agents of evil sent to sow discontent with good government and to implant satisfaction with corrupt government. Christian Science quickly exposes the disseminator of false news, and teaches its followers to be wide-eyed, not to take the bait offered by the enemy, nor to mistake for solid ground the surface of the bog which is designed to bury the innocent in the mire of mystery.

At this time, especially, Christian Science warns the spiritually awakened against maneuvers for a false peace, based on careful calculations of human weakness and plans prearranged according to national idiosyncrasies. This mental strategy of a premature peace has a double purpose, to preserve the vanishing vestiges of autocracy and to create a back fire which would destroy the good efforts of those who uphold liberty. Such intrigues find support from the régime of the greedy, who use as their ammunition against true government the familiar "pull" of personal control, and sell themselves promptly for a mess of pottage. Thus the worst elements of a community may hold the keys of a healthy, righteous city in their hands, exacting tribute from the defenseless and instituting a reign of terror.

Here the Christian Scientist can intervene in behalf of honest government, both local, state, and national, by bringing the Christian ideal before the world as a purifier in all things. Well-meant pacificist sentiment is used by a clever enemy to halt the advance of soldiers marching to victory, and pacificism acts the part of treason. Mere human goodness in ages past has ever played into the hands of occultism, and to-day would sacrifice brave comrades through the shocking assistance of would-be idealists. The pretended peace is rejected in order that the real peace of righteous government may prevail, where God dwells and man is free to talk and walk with Him. The army of the Lord loses not one single member of the heavenly host. It counts them over correctly and finds no one missing, no one gone astray, but rather one always added at every counting, namely the one whose form is "like unto the Son of God." This divine victory makes it clear that the enemy has blundered and fallen into its own trap. Therefore let the call of Mrs. Eddy go forth among men and nations, as found on page 393 of Science and Health: "Be firm in your understanding that the divine Mind governs, and that in Science man reflects God's government."

[Lloyd B. Coate in Canton (Ohio) News]

A recent issue reports a clergyman as condemning Christian Science as heresy. There was a time when heresy was considered a crime in most European countries and was punishable by law. Punishment for heresy was common in mediæval times and was practiced by the first colonists in America. To the Roman Catholic any teaching contrary to the teaching of his church would be heresy; to the Protestant any opinion contrary to the accepted interpretation of the Scripture is a heresy. Does not this show the need of exercising charity rather than condemning others? Even the apostle Paul was called a heretic. He says, "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets."

This critic condemns Christian Science as heresy because its followers believe God to be divine Principle. When Christian Scientists use the term divine Principle for God, they mean identically the same as Jesus taught when he prayed to "our Father which art in heaven." If this critic believes God to be a big, corporeal man, then Christian Science differs from such a concept of God. Christian Scientists adopt Jesus' definition of God as "Spirit," and believe that He can only be worshiped "in spirit and in truth," as the Master taught. They also accept John's definition of God as Love.

Hundreds of thousands of men and women throughout our land, and in other lands, have been healed of disease through Christian Science. Among the number may be included ministers, physicians, judges, attorneys, business men, and many in the common walks of life. While the physical healing or relief from suffering is not a thing to be despised, yet the spiritual awakening that Christian Science brings is that which is most highly valued. Christian Science is reclaiming the infidel and reforming the drunkard; it increases one's faith in God; it arouses an interest in and love for the Bible; it awakens a greater desire to follow in the footsteps of Christ Jesus. The great Master taught that judgment should be rendered according to the fruit the tree yields. A teaching that is leading mankind to Christianity cannot be opposed thereto.

[Virgil H. Clymer in Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal]

On several occasions recently the public has noticed in "The Voice of the People" the linking of two teachings with Christian Science in a way likely to give the reader the erroneous impression that all three are alike. Now comes another writer repeating that mistake and making an effort to persuade some one that Christian Science differs from the teachings of Jesus. It cannot be stated too emphatically that Christian Science is based absolutely on the truths of the Bible as interpreted and demonstrated by Jesus; hence it necessarily differs from all the religions, teachings, or philosophies unlike the truth he taught.

Honest, sincere people may entertain their own theories, and theologians may advance man-made arguments, but what Jesus really taught must be proved, not by theories or theological dogma, but by the method he established, i.e., the healing of both sin and disease. He entered into no theological argument with the messengers from John the Baptist, but pointed to his healing works as proof of the Messiahship. Christian Science also points to its healing works as proof that it is identical with Jesus' teaching. "By their fruits ye shall know them." That Jesus' indivisible command to preach and heal was not meant for a limited time or territory is evidenced by the historical fact that for three hundred years after the crucifixion Christians healed the sick by spiritual means. There was an "undivided garment" (Science and Health, p. 142) until a material interpretation of the Bible crept into the early church.

Christian Science interprets the Bible spiritually, and its world-wide, everyday healing of all manner of sin, sickness, sorrow, and discord, as Jesus and his followers healed them, proves that its interpretation of the Christ-teaching is the correct one, and that it is the restoration of primitive Christianity. On page 25 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy, in referring to her great discovery, says: "The Bible was my textbook. It answered my questions as to how I was healed; but the Scriptures had to me a new meaning, a new tongue. Their spiritual signification appeared; and I apprehended for the first time, in their spiritual meaning, Jesus' teaching and demonstration, and the Principle and rule of spiritual Science and metaphysical healing,—in a word, Christian Science."

[The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 10, 1917]

Speedy action was taken by the Christian Science organization in Boston to provide relief for Halifax people who are in distress on account of the explosion of the munitions ship and the resulting fire. Efforts to send aid on Saturday were at first hampered by reason of the fact that there was no through train available at the time when a party could be made ready to start. Agents of The Christian Science Board of Directors were able, however, to make arrangements with the Boston & Maine Railroad for a special train, which left this city Saturday evening, saving many hours in getting the needed aid to its destination.

Meanwhile, in Boston, special arrangements were made for special collections in The Mother Church, and also in many of the branch churches in other cities, and the Comforts Forwarding Committee took charge of the gathering of clothing and supplies, and the forwarding of them to Halifax.

Besides $10,000 in cash and letters of credit, the representatives of the Directors took first aid in the form of warm clothing, food, and other necessary articles to be distributed among the sufferers at Halifax.

On board the special train, as representatives of the Board of Directors were: Ralph E. Parker, Mrs. Edith W. Parker, Charles H. Welch, William Bradford Turner, R. Howard Cooley, and Dr. Frank C. Colby.

When it became known that a train had been arranged for by the Directors, City Hall officials telephoned saying that certain others wished to send along some of the city's doctors and supplies, and this was quickly arranged. The Red Cross officials also asked for opportunity to send along some of their material, so that the special train of the Christian Scientists actually carried thirty or forty others interested in giving aid or in reaching Halifax at the earliest possible moment.

The special collection taken at the services in The Mother Church on Sunday, which is but a preliminary one, as no proper notice had been given, amounted to $4,693.04. Also, if further relief is necessary, the Directors are prepared to send nurses, etc. Collections taken in Christian Science branch churches are yet to be reported and made available.

A message was received in The Mother Church from Jennie B. Stevens, representing Christian Scientists in Halifax, reading as follows: "Gratefully report all our people safe and well."

[The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 11, 1917]

Additional contributions have swelled the amount of the Halifax relief collection, taken at the Sunday services of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, so that the total amount now reported by the treasurer, Bliss Knapp, is $8320.80. Mr. Knapp says that it is not yet possible to make a complete statement as to the total.

[The Morning Chronicle, Halifax, N. S., Dec. 11, 1917]

Boston, the Mecca of so many Nova Scotians for two generations past, was in the field as soon as if it had been a city in its nearest sister state, and from the time when the first relief train was started down to the present hour has added gift to gift. The last train to arrive [up to 4 a.m. Monday] was sent by The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, bringing supplies of every sort. A committee of five, appointed by the church, was in charge of the train, and has established headquarters in the Masonic Hall. Mr. R. E. Parker is in charge, and the committee is already at work cooperating with the other relief committees.

Benevolent Funds of The Mother Church

"I inclose a check for fifty dollars as a contribution for the Halifax Relief fund. I see by the Monitor that the need is still great, and am grateful to have the chance to share a small amount with those in need."

"Having learned that the Board of Directors of The Mother Church has sent funds to the Halifax sufferers, this Church of Christ, Scientist, in its desire to cooperate with the Board of Directors in this work, took a special collection to-day for this purpose. We take pleasure in inclosing herewith our check for $963.60 to be used as the Board of Directors may deem best in ameliorating the conditions in Halifax."

"I inclose one dollar for the Halifax Relief fund. It is very small, but I wanted to add this to the collection taken Sunday, for which I was not prepared. I am so grateful to the Directors of The Mother Church for their beautiful and generous response to the cry for help for Halifax. It is an inspiration to me to work better."

"I herein inclose a money order to the amount of five dollars as a contribution to the War Relief fund from a soldier who received treatment from a Christian Science practitioner who chose not to collect any money for the healing, which was quickly brought about. I have gained much from this treatment."

"Inclosed please find a draft on Boston in your favor for twenty-five dollars, which sum I should be glad if you would place to the Real Estate fund as a small token of gratitude from my brother, who is an officer, and myself. He was shot in the knee within a few miles of Bagdad, and very shortly afterward had a wonderful experience in escaping unscathed from a high explosive shell which burst within a few feet of him. He was taken to India under medical treatment and hopes to return to his company very shortly. I have been in constant correspondence with him, and this explains the reason of the joint expression of gratitude for his preservation."

"I am inclosing herewith five dollars in currency as a small contribution to the Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. I believe God will use this bit of 'love currency' (Miscellany, p. 14) to further His own reign of 'peace and joy and power' (Poems, p. 4),—the reign which will ultimately annihilate the pretended dominion of error."

"I have received the money which you have, with such great kindness, sent me through the esteemed committee, and consider it my duty to express to you my sincere gratitude and to tell you how much I have been benefited from this gift, coming as it did in times so critical that the low wages of a woman are not sufficient to supply all the wants of a family of five persons, among whom are my old parents. May God reward you for all the good you are doing in needy families like mine, who are deprived of all means of support."

"I have received your very kind letter, with check inclosed, and return herewith the formal receipt for same. Your prompt and very generous remittance is indeed of real assistance to us, and just when needed most. My wife and I are truly grateful to you, and to The Mother Church, for providing such help."

"Herewith I inclose the receipt for the check received this morning. I cannot explain to you my gratitude or what the money means to me. It is indeed a silver lining to a very dark cloud."

The Second Coming

THIS season and the thoughts mankind have been cherishing make it a suitable time to recall Mrs. Eddy's words (Miscellany, p. 122): "Beloved brethren, another Christmas has come and gone. Has it enabled us to know more of the healing Christ that saves from sickness and sin? Are we still searching diligently to find where the young child lies, and are we satisfied to know that our sense of Truth is not demoralized, finitized, cribbed, or cradled, but has risen to grasp the spiritual idea unenvironed by materiality?"

The disciples of Jesus made slow gains in understanding, but at last it seemed to dawn upon them that the kingdom of God would mean the presence and rule of the Christ, and the ending of earthly injustice and human animalism; so they asked of their Master, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Warning them of the crowding deceptions of the eras to come, of misleading prophets, even of "false Christs" aiming to "deceive the very elect," he bade them no longer look for a Christ who could be "here" or "there." "If they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth: behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." He who fulfilled the expectation of the prophet Isaiah, and, coming as the messenger of God, was "despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows," because he "carried our sorrows," looked forth and forward to the era when the spiritual idea would come as light; when the kingdom of God would be present with no outward show, except that men would cease to say "Lo here! or, lo there!" because they would find within consciousness divine enlightenment, and recognize Sonship with God.

Paul when he speaks to the Corinthians of their "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" uses in this one instance the same word that John uses when he speaks of "the Revelation of Jesus Christ;" but elsewhere when he speaks of Christ's coming the word means presence, as when he foretells the ending of the mystery of iniquity, saying, "Then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." Here again is the victory of light proclaimed, and from this figure we are able to understand what Mrs. Eddy says in "A Christmas Sermon" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 165): "The last appearing of Truth will be a wholly spiritual idea of God and of man, without the fetters of the flesh, or corporeality. This infinite idea of infinity will be, is, as eternal as its divine Principle. The daystar of this appearing is the light of Christian Science—the Science which rends the veil of the flesh from top to bottom. The light of this revelation leaves nothing that is material; neither darkness, doubt, disease, nor death."

This appearing, presence, power, or revelation of Truth is felt throughout the whole world because the spiritual idea whenever manifested must act as leaven, reaching even minds which recognize it not and cannot name the influence which blesses them. It is an era of overturning, and in it all things change. Common men are ennobled by the spirit that is within them, while those reckoned great in times past now reveal inadequacy for present tasks. The actual poor are "making many rich" by spiritual graces, and the formerly rich are seeking, out of newly discovered poverty, for true riches which will endure. Death, war and disaster, cruelty and hate, come menacingly before men, but they, having a new courage derived from a source unseen, look upon these things now without fear, so that evil finds its scepter only a bauble after all, and foresees the decay of its power and rule in the earth. Hence its great malice because its time is short. But why is it that men fear its threatenings less and less, and are unimpressed by the legions claiming to be able to kill the body? Is it not because love of honor and truth, devotion to the visible right and to the unseen ideal, genuine sacrifice and a holy consecration, have lifted men to a mount of vision where amid clouds they gain glimpses of the glory of God? This glory Christian Science is revealing as "open vision" to those who are demonstrating the Christ-spirit. In the Christmas Sermon already quoted it is said: "Like the leaven that a certain woman hid in three measures of meal, the Science of God and the spiritual idea, named in this century Christian Science, is leavening the lump of human thought, until the whole shall be leavened and all materialism disappear."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

The Christ Yoke

IN the closing verses of the eleventh chapter of Matthew we find a wonderful sermon which has appealed to Christian people in all the centuries since the words were uttered by the master Christian. Here we have presented to us the thought of burdens and heavy labor, also that which all desire, namely, rest. We have besides the thought of a yoke, which has always been closely associated with burden bearing, but the Master's words were undoubtedly intended to dispel all gloom with the truth which he made practical in the overcoming of sickness, sin, and sorrow at every step of the way. Service is demanded of all men, whether high or low, and it is surely of the utmost importance that we discover how we can most effectively serve, how we can accomplish the utmost good and thus reap a harvest of gladness and real gain.

There is no denying that all mortals are held down by a sense of the heavy burdens which are inseparable from the material beliefs of existence. These do not press so heavily in youth, but as the years go on the false sense of pleasure becomes a burden, as it so often leads to pain and always to disappointment. Then there is the belief that man is separated from God and is dependent upon himself rather than upon his heavenly Father for all that he needs, and this is perhaps the heaviest burden of all. We need hardly wonder that Longfellow says in his "Goblet of Life":—

> Let our unceasing, earnest prayer
> Be, too, for light,—for strength to bear
> Our portion of the weight of care,
> That crushes into dumb despair
> One half the human race.

Now there is nothing uncertain or equivocal about the statements of Christ Jesus to which reference has been made. He was doing the will of the Father, and although he was opposed at every turn by the religionists of his time he did not hesitate to bid all those who were heavy laden to come unto him and assume his yoke, and he promised that thus they would find rest. Professor Drummond says that unfortunately many have been "driven forever away from the kingdom of God" by a mistaken sense of what the Master here uttered, and he adds, "Men speak of the yoke of Christ as if it were a slavery, and look upon those who wear it as objects of compassion." Students of Christian Science know of course that the burdens of which we would fain be rid were never imposed by divine Love nor through the Christ-teaching. We certainly cannot think of getting rid of any burdens by imposing them upon others, for the Scripture says, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall sustain thee."

Jesus did not say that he would take away our legitimate obligations, but he did say that we could find rest even while carrying them by taking his yoke upon us. It is perfectly clear that this points to a mental process, because he immediately says, "and learn of me;" for thus, he adds, we shall find rest. That our Leader understood and deeply appreciated the value of his teaching is made clear in these words on page 374 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "To him who brought a great light to all ages, and named his burdens light, homage is indeed due,—but is bankrupt." When Christian Science came to most of us it lifted a great burden in the form of sickness and which was heavily weighted with fears of all sorts. For a time there was a marvelous sense of freedom; but with added experience there came a fresh demand to take our part in the bettering of human conditions by doing our utmost toward the establishment of God's kingdom on earth, and strange as it may seem there are some who have not far passed the parting of the ways who object to taking upon themselves the Christ yoke and the burden of service. The Master does not say that we shall have nothing to do when we are enlisted as his faithful followers, but he gives us this assurance: "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

What if we are called upon to rouse ourselves at an early hour each morning and through study of the Bible and Science and Health to have the yoke adjusted so that all the labor of the day may be easy and even restful to us. Without this yoke, many complain of the irksomeness and hardness of daily duty, but when it is gladly put on, each hour brings added strength, and, what is more, added joy in the doing of whatever is necessary and right. Sometimes we may be carrying false burdens of pride, quite forgetful that the Christ yoke can never be used to carry anything of this sort, for the Master says, "I am meek and lowly in heart," and we must be the same if we are to wear his yoke and find rest in all we do.

One of the most important statements in this beautiful passage is the command, "Learn of me." Men have spent years and have even gone to distant lands in order that they might dive more deeply into the study of disease and disease tendencies, and this for the purpose of attempting to cure the ills of humanity; but not so did our Master teach those who were willing to learn of him. We find that the humble fishermen who received their tuition from him went out at his bidding to heal all manner of sickness and all manner of disease, and even to raise the dead. It matters not that for long centuries men had forgotten that they could learn of Christ and could heal the sick in the way our Master and his disciples did, for again the light has dawned, and through Mrs. Eddy's inspired teachings we discover how we may assume the Christ yoke and do our part. On page 262 of "Miscellaneous Writings" our dear Leader says, "With all the homage beneath the skies, yet were our burdens heavy but for the Christ-love that makes them light and renders the yoke easy."

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

The Glad New Year

ON New Year's morning of 1910 Mrs. Eddy wrote the following verses extemporaneously, as they are now to be found on page 354 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany":—

I

O blessings infinite!
O glad New Year!
Sweet sign and substance
Of God's presence here.

II

Give us not only angels' songs
But Science vast, to which belongs
The tongue of angels
And the song of songs.

At the opening of a new year many resolutions are made to turn over a new leaf in life's history and begin anew, sometimes breaking bad habits or consecrating oneself to be better. If these determinations are not accompanied by spiritual understanding, disappointments occur, discouragement creeps in, and hope is seen fading away. Perhaps before the year is half over the would-be resolution is forgotten. Now, a correct analysis of right desires can well bring about the reward of right doing. Good desires have spiritual power if allowed to bask in the sunshine of Principle. Christian Science shows the way in which the understanding of God's perfect child—and in reality there is no bad child, since God created His ideas out of good and made them good—can overcome the beliefs of material creation.

To perpetually peer into darkness never gives one the benefit of light, nor understanding of it. So thinking material thoughts and watching material manifestations never throws any light upon the subject of Spirit, for the spiritual light is thus practically hindered from carrying on its health-giving process of cleaning up the dusty, dingy mentality filled with ignorance. Being ignorant of God is darkness or the lack of light. The real self-analysis searches within to find the hidden goal, the kingdom of heaven. This brings out the man of right desires, a determined, spiritual character, firm and bold in divine conviction that God is more to him than a material soul, because the real soul is spiritual sense and substance and only abides in God.

All can have spiritual answers to their resolutions of right desires. The solution is worked out by Principle. The unchangeable love of God opens the sweet petals of the rose, and so does this same love open the thoughts of the heart into life-giving glories. The eternal wonders are just the natural thoughts of God. These come to man as man draws nearer to God in his constant relationship to that which should be his closest companion, divine Love. The settled purpose of the spiritually minded to see God and live in Him and His holy creation brings the glad New Year to human consciousness as the millennium, the eternity of living glory, where no human taint enters nor dims the grand effulgence of God's resplendent bliss.

In rising to spiritual heights and letting the fetters of material thinking fall off, the seeming reality of error is dissolved, leaving only the reality of spiritual thinking, and thus mankind is eventually freed from sin, sickness, and death. To separate thought from material outlining is the struggle over self. The material elements scream to be heard, but the right-minded has no ear tuned for matter, and learns to obey God and His spiritual laws. The explanation of God, man, and the universe, as given in Science and Health, brings to man the power of right resolutions. It shows the footsteps leading to God, and causes the clarion call to resound around the world, to health, freedom, and glorious victory over the flesh. Then becomes verified Mrs. Eddy's explanation of immortality as found on page 598 of the Glossary of Science and Health under the definition of the word Year: "One moment of divine consciousness, or the spiritual understanding of Life and Love, is a foretaste of eternity. This exalted view, obtained and retained when the Science of being is understood, would bridge over with life discerned spiritually the interval of death, and man would be in the full consciousness of his immortality and eternal harmony, where sin, sickness, and death are unknown. Time is a mortal thought, the divisor of which is the solar year. Eternity is God's measurement of Soul-filled years."

The fixed purpose of God is to give His Word, which heals and saves and gathers all unto His bosom of loving care. The many experiences of mortals repeating sickness, sin, and death until tired and worn of using human will leads them at last to accept the divine will, and thus man enters into his eternal glory, into the glad New Year of endless joy. This gives the glorious song the angels sing, the scientific reign of Christian Science.

Current Notes

COLORADO.—That the attitude of the press of Colorado is generally favorable is evidenced by the fact that during the six months previous to November 1, 1917, seven full reports of Christian Science lectures have been printed, together with a number of synopses of various lengths. The Christian Science Monitor has been quoted frequently by many of the Colorado papers, and due credit given. The favorable attitude of the press is without doubt largely due to the leavening influence of the Monitor, and an appreciation of this fact on the part of Christian Scientists will result in according the larger and truer support which this channel for good deserves. During the past half year eleven letters for publication were written by the committee on publication, all of which were accepted and published, one by a medical journal.—Committee on Publication.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—An addition of distinction to Little Rock's already large number of magnificent church buildings will be the new edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, which will be erected at an early date on the site of the present chapel, Twentieth and Louisiana Streets. It will cost approximately twenty-five thousand dollars and will occupy the site of the present frame chapel. As soon as arrangements are made for the holding of services at another place, the work of tearing down the old building will be started. It is expected that the new edifice will be completed in about ten months, or possibly a year. The present chapel has become too small to accommodate the members of the church, as it has a seating capacity of only two hundred persons. The new structure will have a seating capacity of six hundred. It will be 44 feet in width and 110 feet in length.—Arkansas Democrat.

CALIFORNIA.—During the past year newspapers in southern California published eighty full reports of Christian Science lectures. About 150,000 copies of these were distributed, in addition to regular circulation. From November 1, 1916, to October 6, 1917, the committee on publication distributed 6900 Sentinels, 1600 Journals, 300 Heralds, 49,500 Monitors, 1200 pamphlets, 47,000 copies of newspapers containing lectures, corrections, and favorable articles. There were many hundreds of reprints from the Monitor, and the influence for good of our daily paper cannot be overestimated. Public libraries were supplied through the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy with 341 copies of our Leader's writings and 304 subscriptions to our periodicals.—Committee on Publication.

CHICAGO, ILL.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, is celebrating the twentieth anniversary of its dedication. In November, 1897, this church, at 4017 Drexel Boulevard, was dedicated, having been built and paid for within a year. The opening exercises were attended by fifteen hundred persons. In twenty years the church has seen fifteen other Christian Science churches spring up in the city.

Chicago Journal.

RHODE ISLAND.—Five articles have been written during the year in reply to adverse criticisms of Christian Science, four of which were accepted and published by the press. Acting under the offer of the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy and in cooperation with the active and earnest library committees of First Churches of Christ, Scientist, of Providence and Newport, the committee on publication has supplied practically every lending library of the state with some of the works of Mary Baker Eddy, as well as some of our periodicals. It is of much interest to note in this connection that our periodicals have been placed in the Y. M. C. A. Army and Navy camps at Newport, and a complete set of Mrs. Eddy's works has been placed in the recently completed Y. M. C. A. camp of the U. S. Naval Reserve Force.—Committee on Publication.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL.—A beautiful church, costing thirty thousand dollars, is to be built by the members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, on their property at Micheltorena and Anacapa Streets. The present building will be moved to the rear of the lot and used as a Sunday school. The growth of the Sunday school has resulted in plans for the larger building, which will have a seating capacity of about nine hundred.—Santa Barbara News.

The Lectures

BOSTON, MASS. (The Mother Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

The whole burden of admonition in the gospels and writings of the apostles is to the effect that spiritual truth is real and permanent. Our perception of that truth must come by way of instruction and study, which require us to differentiate between mere theories of Christianity and the Science of it. There need not, however, be any perturbation of thought on this account, for nothing that is truly righteous in Christian doctrine will be lightly spoken of here, nor will any Christian belief that deserves to be cherished as an ideal of life or that can offer hope or encouragement to men and women in the toil and struggle of existence, be slightingly set aside as unworthy of their attention. On the contrary, you will find that Christian hope is here exalted to its rightful throne, where Truth, demonstrated step by step, exchanges hope for faith and in turn faith for understanding, giving to mankind a religious foundation that cannot be shaken.

EXETER, N. H. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Ralph E. Meros, who said in part:—

For many years I ridiculed Christian Science, because of the absurd things Christian Scientists were said to believe. I did not question whether my informants had any real understanding of the subject, but went forth immediately repeating the things I had heard, just as if they were true. However, as I came in contact with those who were studying and trying to practice the teachings of Christian Science, I found they had a conception of life that made them happier and healthier, more hopeful and more helpful, than any other people I met. As the fruit was good, I decided that the seed must have been good. I am not a member of the Christian Science church, but respect it and heartily commend its teachings to your earnest consideration.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COL.—William D. Kilpatrick delivered two lectures for First Church of Christ, Scientist. On the first evening he was introduced by Arthur A. Hubbard, who said in part:—

For those with an open mind Christian Science is seen to be the fulfillment of the promises of the Bible and the repetition of the works of Jesus. Through the study of the Bible in connection with the Christian Science textbook one gains a clearer conception of God and of man's relation to Him. As this conception grows clearer, discords and inharmonies disappear, and thus is revealed the present possibility of achieving that peace which passeth understanding.

On the second evening the lecturer was introduced by O. K. Johnson, who said in part:—

The seeming turmoil and confusion in the world to-day is but the amplification of a mortal's thought unillumined by the Science of being which the Master taught and practiced and which he knew so well would give true harmony and peace. In proportion as you and I as individuals turn away from the "earth, earthy," and experience a practical awareness of the Love which is God; in proportion as you and I are able to rise above the clouds of mortal sense and reflect the effulgence of divine Being in the calm of the new birth, even as the crystal purity of a raindrop clinging to the chalice of the refreshened flower draws within itself the borrowed light of the beneficent sun after the thunderstorm has passed, just in this proportion will we behold ourselves channels for good within the unity of the grand brotherhood of overcoming, and experience right here and now the kingdom of heaven all about and within us.

MONTREAL, CANADA (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Edgar J. Cleaver, who said in part:—

That eminent thirteenth century scholar, known in ecclesiastical history as St. Thomas Aquinas, declared that the only science was theology. A somewhat similar declaration was made a few days ago by a twentieth century scholar of this city, Professor MacNaughton, who referred to "the Bible's wholesome truths and doctrines" as "the only knowledge worth while." These two statements coincide with that memorable declaration of the master Christian: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." It is therefore being more and more generally conceded that the essential requirement of this age is a fuller understanding of the Science of Christianity.

Christian Science has so well stood the test of inquiry and investigation in the past fifty years, that its adherents to-day number many hundreds of thousands, and it is recognized as a great religious movement in regard to which no thinking individual can afford to remain entirely ignorant.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Second Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Warren C. Klein, who said in part:—

Many people are inquiring into the secret of the success of Mrs. Eddy's beneficent labor. It is to be found in the simple fact that she possessed a pure, generous, steadfast, and loving heart. This sentiment resolves itself into a quality of thought known as spiritual love, a mighty asset to anyone who possesses it. David sang of it; Paul preached of it; Christ Jesus proved its power better than any other individual, and said in substance that no one can fulfill the law without it. Mrs. Eddy rediscovered its real nature and potency, its ever presence, its coincidence with Deity, and in a truly scientific way stated its Principle and rule of demonstration. Mankind is fast recognizing and understanding this scientific religion of spiritual love, and at this time is coming into agreement with Mrs. Eddy's statement on page 258 of Miscellany, "Nothing is worthy the name of religion save one lowly offering—love."

Testimonies of Healing

In January, 1906, I turned to Christian Science for healing. For five years I had been suffering acutely from a serious kidney trouble, as well as from a great number of other physical ills. The lungs were declared to be the only organs of the body which were in a normal condition. The doctors said there was no hope of a cure; that so long as I lived I must suffer. I do not remember ever being free from heart trouble, and in 1893 the doctors said I was suffering from organic heart disease. My life had become a great misery to me. The only recreation left was reading, so when my eyes became very weak and painful, I did indeed feel that God had "forgotten to be gracious." Every material means was tried, but only a little temporary help was received and my condition grew steadily worse. Christian Science had been proposed to me on different occasions during four years, but it was the one thing I was unwilling to try, and when I finally turned to it, giving up all material remedies and methods, I seemed to make very little progress. I used to search the Sentinels for testimonies of slow healing.

I see now that self-righteousness was the cloud which hindered my recognition and realization of man's oneness with Truth and Love. I had never been what the world calls wicked, and I did not see that sarcasm, scorn, contempt, harsh criticism and condemnation of my neighbors, were breaking the commands "Thou shalt not kill" and "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour;" or that these errors effectually shut out harmony and the privilege of loving God supremely and my neighbor as myself. I was slow to learn that physical conditions are only effects of the human mind, the manifestation of belief; as we read in Matthew, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man; but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man."

I was, however, earnestly searching for a right understanding, and the teachings of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, awakened in me a sincere desire for rightness, for purity and honesty of thought. The recognition of God as the only source of life gradually dawned. Thus I was freed from disease and have remained so these many years. My eyes were most beautifully and quickly healed. As my desire to express love in the only true way becomes more earnest, strength, activity, and happiness are proportionately manifested.

I am grateful for this spiritual awakening, of which, though I did not know it, I stood more in need than of physical healing. It was the story of the publican and the Pharisee once more enacted. God is "no respecter of persons," but the publican's true humility opened to him the door of Life and the Pharisee's self-righteousness was the cloud hiding from him ever present harmony. My husband and my son have both been healed of serious illness, and Christian Science has been our only helper and remedy for eleven years. Our hearts are filled with gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of this grand truth, and to God for "his wonderful works to the children of men."

EMILY SHEPPARD, Leeds, England.

In 1911 I was suffering from what was pronounced a condition of tuberculosis. For six months I had been following carefully the best medical advice without any improvement. I was a graduate nurse and had had a number of months' work with two of the most famed surgeons in the country, so that when I procured the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, from the public library, it was with no thought of healing but merely with a desire to know the basis of Christian Science work. I am indeed thankful to God for that leading. In a few weeks, through the better understanding of God which the reading of the textbook had given me, I was absolutely healed. To satisfy some members of my family who were still fearful for me, I returned to my former physician for another examination. After examining me very carefully he said in some astonishment that I was well and that he could not understand it.

Since that time I have married, and I have two children. The understanding of God as Love, omnipotent, omnipresent, has been a wonderful protection to us. People comment on the fact that we have had none of the so-called children's diseases to combat, and I am daily grateful for being able to realize the protection of right thinking. In my own experience, sorrow and fear and sickness have one by one been overcome, and I am indeed thankful to God for His wonderful goodness to the children of men, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her God-given discernment of this blessed truth.

During the past six years I have experienced better health than ever before, and greater freedom in every way. Christian Science is indeed the most precious of all possessions, and to know the truth as taught by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, is to experience joy and peace such as one has never known before.—FLORENCE J. FANEUF, Williamsport, Pa.

Contrasting the present with the past in my experience, I find that there has been clearly exemplified the truth of that loving admonition of Jesus to Nicodemus, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Surely there can be no darkness within the range of human comprehension so dense as that of the mentality which knows not God. About twenty years ago, while in this state of mind and suffering from severe bodily afflictions, I reluctantly consented to try Christian Science for the healing desired, and which I had failed to obtain elsewhere.

The spiritual awakening was almost immediate, and the marvel of that new light dawning in my consciousness during those first few weeks opened up a new world of thought, transformed me mentally, morally, and physically into an entirely different sort of man. I was literally born again; the points of view from which life had been previously contemplated were entirely changed and all things seemed to have been made new. I was completely healed of the desire for tobacco and liquor, the use of which had been habitual for more than twenty years; of a lung trouble which had afflicted me from early boyhood; of a stomach trouble; of chronic bowel disorder, and of the excessive use of profanity. Not one of these discordant conditions has ever returned.

During the nineteen years since then my wife and I have followed the path of Truth together gratefully and joyfully as earnest, diligent students of Christian Science and workers in the church. There has been a steady climb up the mount of understanding, a constant unfoldment of spiritual thoughts in consciousness. During these years I feel that we have never faltered in desire or effort to be true and loyal in our allegiance to the inspired cause established by our revered Leader, but there have been steps taken hastily or in excess of zeal which were dearly paid for. Christian Science has been the greatest influence for good, the highest incentive to better living, loving, and learning, that ever came into our lives. It has been our sole dependence in every time of need, and we truly feel that everything we possess we owe to its teachings and practice.

Our experience has been overflowing with blessings which have come straight from God in answer to prayer. Our daughters, who have never taken medicine, radiate good health, robust strength, and happiness. My gratitude goes out in daily thankfulness to our loving Father for Christian Science, for every branch of its activities so wisely inaugurated by Mrs. Eddy, and for the countless blessings which through them have come to me and mine, and to all mankind.—WILLARD P. HEATH, St. Louis, Mo.

[Translated from the German]

It is with a thankful heart that I wish to testify to the great blessings which Christian Science has brought into my life. It was in 1907 that I fell and injured my wrist, the pain being so severe that I almost lost consciousness and was unable to rise. As the accident occurred in my store, a customer stepped forward and helped me to get up. The arm and hand appeared to be very much swollen, so he spoke to me in a way which was apt to induce fear, saying that I would be unable to work for at least six months, that he had gone through the same experience years before, and that his arm had remained without strength since. I sought to deny this erroneous belief for myself, but immediately requested the assistance of a practitioner, as the pain was severe. I did nothing in a material way beyond binding my hand on a splint to keep it from moving unnecessarily. After the first treatments the pain grew decidedly less, and three weeks later I was able to resume all my work.

I was very happy and grateful not to be condemned to such a long period of inactivity. Spirit, God, was the healer, and the truth declared offset the dictum of mortal sense. I have had similar experiences during the last nine years in various other instances. I have experienced healing in a case of fracture of the rib, of poisoning through food, of inflammation of the lungs, of a disease of the eye, and of other discords. The understanding of God which I have gained through Christian Science has brought me a greater peace of mind, a happy sense, and a greater appreciation of life. Mrs. Eddy through her works has shown me the way to these things.

FRAU H. HILDEBRANDT, Charlottenburg, Germany.

It is with gratitude that I testify to the help Christian Science has been to me. I suffered from catarrh of the head and stomach; several doctors treated me for this ailment and I took drugs for five years, but with little relief. When an acute attack of heart trouble added to my suffering I turned to Christian Science and was healed in four weeks. A short time ago, while I was splitting some cordwood, a small piece of steel from the wedge flew up and struck one of my eyes. I again sought help from a practitioner and was entirely healed in five days. The piece of steel came out the second day after the accident. I am very thankful not only for the physical healing received through Christian Science but for a better understanding of the Bible.

W. H. COLE, Forest Grove, Ore.

It is five years since my first two healings through Christian Science, and they were brought about through the understanding of my little niece, nine years of age. One was the overcoming of the effect of a severe burn on the hand; the other was the healing of seasickness, from which I have never since suffered, no matter what the weather has been. I was so impressed by these experiences that I wanted to study Christian Science, for I was not satisfied in the old thought. From the time I started to study, errors of all kinds began to come to the surface to be destroyed, and I am so grateful that they are being overcome. I could not exist without Christian Science.

I have been healed of corns, nervousness, toothache, headache, chronic bowel trouble, temper, resentment for seeming wrongs, the sense of hate, and various other errors. Each day I find myself on higher ground. The harder the problem the harder I work, and I find as each problem is solved that I am just that much nearer God. Every trial has made me want God more and the world less. Words cannot express what Christian Science is to me. It has done wonders for me, and what it has done for me it will do for others who honestly seek Truth.

I am indeed grateful for all that the practitioners have done for me and for others. I am thankful to God for giving us Mrs. Eddy, and grateful to our Leader for giving the world Christian Science. Words cannot express my gratitude for the privilege of church membership. Our God surely is the God of salvation.

JOSEPHINE H. SHAW, Minneapolis, Minn.

I have been a reader of the Sentinel for over four years, and wish to add my testimony of gratitude for the privilege of having such a companion in my home. Before studying Christian Science I never read the Bible, as I could not understand it; now I study it daily with the Lesson-Sermons, and am more than grateful for the understanding of the Scriptures gained with the light thrown on them by the passages from our textbook.

A little over a year ago I went through a great trial when my mother passed on, and for the help received at that time through Christian Science I cannot express my gratefulness. I am striving daily to follow Christ's example, that I may be able some day to give the peace to others that was given me.

MRS. O. L. SIEBER, Jr., Dallas, Texas.

A little over two years ago I was a most miserable and disheartened creature. For ten years I had suffered terribly from stomach and bowel trouble, and though I had undergone an operation there was little change. Then my eyes became so badly affected that the regular prescribed glasses gave no relief and I wore black glasses almost constantly. Three specialists were attending me at this time and my case was diagnosed as distended stomach; in fact, all the internal organs were said to be far below normal position and I wore various kinds of supports, besides spending many hours each day in a reclining position.

I had often heard of Christian Science, but not really understanding it, had thought it mere superstition and felt an intense antagonism toward it. Religion had always been one of my deepest interests in life, and though I had this awful sense of hatred toward Christian Science, there were many times when I rebelled at the thought that it was the will of God for me to suffer so and to be so utterly helpless and useless in life. One day in June, 1914, I was so desperate I spent most of the day in prayer that if there was any way out I would be shown so I could follow it, for I could not face the rest of my life in this condition.

That very evening we called on a dear friend, who had been ill, and were much astonished to hear of his healing through Christian Science. At once my old antagonism arose, but this friend explained that God is the only healer and that Christian Science simply explains the divine laws by which man is brought into health, and harmony with God. This seemed very reasonable and logical to me, and was so different from what I had judged Christian Science to be. Then suddenly an awakening came to me. It dawned upon me that perhaps this was the answer to my prayer, and I determined to investigate Christian Science thoroughly for a month at least, to see if it could possibly be the truth. I began immediately to study Science and Health and received several treatments.

I can never fully describe the hope, the joy, and the spiritual uplift which came to me as I began to understand the spiritual truths in the Bible, as explained in Science and Health. Many physical ills disappeared in a few days, others lasted much longer, but I knew I had at last found the truth, and that as I allowed only good and true thoughts in my consciousness the old fears and doubts and their physical manifestations would leave me. We have had many other demonstrations in our family, such as the overcoming of catarrhal trouble of many years' standing, headaches, colds, severe burns, the effects of poison ivy, and the solving of financial problems. The physical freedom alone is of untold value, but it is the freedom of thought in learning to know God aright for which I feel most grateful. Before studying Christian Science we had to board, and even then I spent many hours each day lying down; now I am keeping house and leading an active life. I have never yet found words that could begin to express my deep gratitude for the wonderful change that Christian Science has brought into my life.

My gratitude is simply unbounded toward Mary Baker Eddy,—the true spiritual interpreter of Christ's wonderful message to the world,—and my greatest desire now is to spread this good news.

IDA LUCKE WILBUR, Baltimore, Md.

It is my privilege to offer this testimony of my healing through Christian Science of what is called sick headache. The attacks grew frequent and were preceded by days of physical depression. Material diagnosis and treatment offered temporary but never permanent relief. Christian Science treatment gradually removed the violent symptoms, and is now delivering me from the supposititious underlying causes of disease; namely, fear, ignorance, immorality, ingratitude, selfishness, and similar sins.

The beneficent effects of the activity of Truth and Love are felt in many phases of experience not included in the common definition of physical healing, but understood in Christian Science under the general term of health. I refer to gradual deliverance from poverty of mind, body, and estate, demonstrated in a capacity for clearer, broader, deeper thinking, enlarged and quickened sympathy for man and nature, awakened patriotism, stimulated interest in science and art,—in a word, actual regeneration, the new birth which goes on daily and hourly in Christian Science. This beautiful experience is the direct result of the regular study of the Bible and of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, also of the authorized literature, together with the help of a practitioner at times. The church services, the reading rooms, and the lectures always prove very helpful.

I feel that I owe great reverence and gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science. Her writings have explained and vitalized the words and deeds of Jesus the Christ, and of the prophets and apostles. Her life is a sublime example of nobility, high courage, and accomplishment in demonstration of her philosophy. The Science which she established is lifting humanity out of sin and disease, and will finally lead mankind into the fullness of the stature of the perfect man.

It was in March, 1912, that I gave Christian Science the first serious thought; previous to that I did not consider it worthy of notice, as I had been in bondage to medicine from childhood. While I am not very far advanced in the study of Christian Science, my desire is to impart to others what I do know. It enables me to say now what I could not say for sixty-five years of my life,—that I am without a single physical ailment.

My healing came about in this way. The winter of 1911-12 was one of continuous anxiety and unrest. In January my home was broken up for the second time from loss of companionship, so the first week in March found me mentally, physically, and financially sick. For thirty-five years I had depended on material remedies to digest my food. Many specialists had diagnosed my case as a complication of ailments, which were numerous and distressing. I had thoroughly and patiently tried many kinds of treatment, but only temporary relief was received. For years my diet had been carefully restricted until it had finally become very limited.

Up to the day before I resorted to Christian Science I was taking medicine daily, besides an opiate at night to induce sleep. A friend mentioned Christian Science to me, and although I had thought it little short of fanaticism, the next day I called on a practitioner, with the result that my healing of all the above mentioned troubles was almost instantaneous, and I have never taken a drop of medicine since. I ate a hearty supper that night, slept perfectly, and have been eating three meals a day ever since. Chronic bowel trouble was relieved at the same time, and although I had been a smoker for fifty years, to my surprise I soon lost the desire to smoke. All my life I had been subject to violent colds, losing weeks from business on account of them, but I have not lost a day in five years. Rheumatism used to give me much trouble, but I have been free from that ailment too, yet have paid no attention to exposure that I used to avoid on account of it.

When five years old I had the misfortune to be left with a rupture which was considered incurable by material means. At twenty years of age I had to resort to a truss made especially for me, and eight years before turning to Christian Science I underwent a serious operation, which helped temporarily, but within six months the trouble assumed a more aggravated form. Three years previous to taking up Science I had the worst attack of my life, and had to resort to hypodermic injections to get relief from the severe pain. When I first went to the Christian Science practitioner I did not mention this trouble. As it had been an everyday handicap through life and pronounced incurable from childhood I did not expect any relief. Many months after my first treatment, on telling the practitioner how well I felt and that I had only this one ailment left, to my surprise I was told that the condition would be taken care of and that I could throw away the support. I thought this was impossible, but in a few months I did throw it away. Now I am able to lift anything that it is necessary for me to lift, with perfect ease and comfort.

Although seventy-three years of age, I have made a full hand on the farm since April 1, owing to scarcity of labor, and work from five o'clock in the morning to eight or nine in the evening. I never had the physical endurance at any time of life that I have had this last summer. I am truly thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science.—A. M. CARR, Salem, Ohio.

In November, 1913, my two boys, then aged ten and twelve years, finding conditions inharmonious in the Sunday school which they had always attended, asked if they might make a change. Knowing a little about Christian Science, I placed them in the Sunday school of The Mother Church, at the same time beginning the study of Christian Science myself. I shall never cease to be grateful that we were led to make this change, for the privilege of Sunday school instruction there has proven a great blessing. The clearer understanding of God and of man's relation to Him, the knowledge that wherever we may be divine Love is always protecting us, has brought great peace and joy. All physical ills have been overcome, some through the loving help of practitioners, others through the reading of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

Words cannot express my sincere gratitude for all that Christian Science means to us.

PAULINE W. EATON, Allston, Mass.

Many years ago I was healed of nervous prostration through Christian Science, and since then have had many wonderful healings; but the following proof of God's protecting care has been the most wonderful to me. For years I was in bondage to the thought held over me that I was alone in the world, with no income and dependent on relatives who were not interested in Christian Science. I rebelled, resented, and resisted imposition and injustice, until at last "error, urged to its final limits" (Science and Health, p. 476), was destroyed. With the understanding of the truth which I knew I possessed as a Christian Scientist, I trusted absolutely in God, kept my own counsel, and with His law to guide me walked firmly on. A place was found that met my every need, and since then there has been a constant unfolding of Love's bounty. I am proving that abundance is mine, for God is its source.

The spiritual understanding which is being gained every day is more than all else to me, and my gratitude to God, also my thankfulness to Mrs. Eddy, who taught us the way, cannot be expressed in words. Only by obeying God's commands can I pay my debt to Principle and show my appreciation for the blessing which I have in Christian Science.

With deep thankfulness to God and gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I testify herewith to the many blessings which have come to our family through the power of Truth. When the doctors said they could do nothing for our little girl but operate for catarrh of the head and nose, I asked a Christian Science practitioner to treat her, and as a result of absent treatment, in a very short time we could notice a great change. Her breath became as sweet as a babe's and she no longer breathed through her mouth. The healing was surely perfect without the aid of a knife, and for this I was thankful.

My son also, aged eleven, had a wonderful healing. He had been complaining of a tooth hurting him, and he came home one morning from school with quite a lump on his neck. Next day I took him to the dentist who looked at the swelling and said he did not think it was caused by the tooth. He called in a physician from the next room who said that it was not caused by the boy's tooth at all and we had better have it lanced right away or it might cause him serious trouble. Instead of having it lanced, however, I telephoned for a practitioner to give the boy absent treatment, and inside of two weeks the swelling had gone down. I at once sent him back to have the tooth filled. The dentist looked at him and felt all around on his neck and finally called in the doctor again. They both seemed dumfounded that the swelling had disappeared so quickly without lancing. I am indeed thankful we have found the right way at last to put our trust in God at all times.

OLIVE BEADLE, Vancouver, Wash.

I should like to tell of a very wonderful healing which was experienced in our home. Our eldest son, nine years old, came home from school with a very severe headache and a high fever. He began to get stiff about the legs and back, and had to be carried upstairs. That night I treated him as we are taught to do in Science and Health, but he apparently grew worse, so we called a practitioner, with the result that the case was healed instantaneously.

Next morning all the inflammation had been brought to the surface of the body in a heavy rash. The child was very weak and thin, but gradually improved, and in three days the stiffness was entirely gone. He was out in a week and was as active as usual, but I did not send him to school for about a month. The ailment had been diagnosed by a medical nurse as infantile paralysis.

My other little boy when three years old, was terribly burned about the chest, stomach, and legs. When his clothes were removed, all the skin came off, but he was healed through Christian Science, and—what was most wonderful—not a particle of skin had to be grafted on. All the children have been healed of scarlet fever in its worst form.

I am grateful to know that power belongs to God. Christian Science is everything to me.

Christian Science was not taken up by me for physical healing, but because I was greatly impressed with its teachings of love and harmony. Shortly after becoming interested in it, our boy, then twelve years old, was saved from asphyxiation through the understanding of God's allness. In the small hours of the morning we were awakened by a noise, but paid no attention to it. Possibly half an hour later a similar noise was heard, and thinking it came from our son's room, we arose and on entering his room found the lad lying unconscious on the floor, overcome with gas fumes from a defective furnace. We at once declared the truth with the result that he soon regained consciousness and by noon was ready to attend school. The way in which we were awakened was indeed a proof of God's protecting care and omnipresence.

Words alone can never express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the foregoing demonstration and for many more proofs of the power of Truth that have been received by me and mine, both physical and financial. My sincere desire is that I may daily grow in grace and understanding, reflecting love and goodness at all times, so that others may wish to seek this beautiful religion of Truth and Love which, when found, will surely prove their greatest treasure.

From Our Exchanges

[The Pacific Baptist]

Religion in its essence is eternal. Our conception of it suffers change. Its onward movements mark the growth of thought, and fashion into symmetry and strength the character of nations, as of men. Its retrogressions are the heralds of decay, telling of coming darkness, beneath whose blight all virtues die and in which vice and error thrive. In all the ebb and flow there has been, on the whole, a forward movement. The old fancies have vanished and been forgotten. The new thoughts have graven themselves deeply upon the consciousness of men, and wrought changes of the utmost importance to the world.

[Miss A. Maude Royden in The Christian Commonwealth]

God has sent us His Son, and to some of us it seems certain, and perhaps nothing else just now does seem certain, that this Jesus of Nazareth has the key of life; that the problems which baffle us he saw through; that the defeat which seems to us the end he could make into a victory; that where we falter and stumble he trod securely and certainly; that though life was incredibly hard to him it was not obscure. He understood the heart of man; he understood the laws of life; he raises the sick; he forgives the sinner; he is afraid of no man on earth, because he knows what we do not know; he has the key of heaven and hell; he understands life as we do not understand it.

[Rev. James Percival Huget, D.D., in The Advance]

There is an emphasis our day greatly needs, the emphasis of the connection between moral purpose and the spiritual life. It is accepted in doctrine and established in fact that a genuine religious experience will affect moral life and conduct. James, in his blunt and searching epistle, declares again and again that there must be a connection between real religion and conduct. He urges us to be "doers of the word, and not hearers only."

[American Lutheran Survey]

If the war shall serve in some degree to separate the sheep from the goats, the palpably hypocritical from the honest followers of Christ, at least so far as human eyes can see and human ears can hear, it will have served the church inadvertently. For a congregation composed of ten honest, spiritually minded Christians is of infinitely larger potency for good than one of a thousand members whose Christianity is a mere conventionality, a cloak for rank hypocrisy.

"What Is a Monitor?"

The Christian Science Monitor, founded by Mary Baker Eddy November 25, 1908, made its initial appearance as an eight-page daily newspaper. In nine years it has not only doubled its original size in number of pages, but its influence and reputation have circled the globe. Those who know the Monitor frankly regard it as the greatest daily newspaper the world has ever seen.

It is related by those familiar with the details attending the foundation of The Christian Science Monitor that after Mrs. Eddy had given instructions to The Christian Science Publishing Society to establish a daily newspaper, she turned to her Bible for confirmation of her decision and opened it to these words:

"Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people."—Isaiah 62:10.

From the hour of its first issue, The Christian Science Monitor has been casting up the highway by recording and interpreting world events according to the highest known standards of journalism; and has gathered out the stones and prepared the way for the people so effectively that it is a great power among the influences whereby humanity is becoming better every day.

That is the reason Christianly scientific right thinkers and progressive and unprejudiced patriots and humanitarians throughout the world accept its standard and bear earnest witness to the Monitor's far-reaching influence for increased individual and national righteousness.

Hence the readers of the Monitor who are rising in thought from the self-saving to the world-saving stage of demonstration read the "signs of these times" and require no arguments in order to understand the mission of The Christian Science Monitor.

This precious gift to humanity, coming through the inspired understanding of Mary Baker Eddy, is daily adding to its power and prestige because it is step by step fulfilling the ideal upon which it was founded.

Achievement

THORWALD SIEGFRIED

ONE Christian Scientist asked another: "What shall I do about this business matter that drags so; shall I just keep on holding the right thought about it every day and be content with that?" This phraseology might, in certain cases, give one notice that the particular difficulty rested on the belief that the human mind is able to create some "good thought," the holding of which is sufficient to help or heal. This inquirer, however, had glimpsed more than once the allness of the divine Mind, and the consequent inability of the human mind to help in any way except to abdicate in favor of Truth; and his question revealed a subtle mistake.

The answer to the question came instantly in a metaphor. Supposing the Christian Scientist were a well-digger; it is plain that no matter how long he drilled or dug, how arduous his labor, how superficially artistic or fanciful his handiwork, all would avail nothing unless he dug deep enough to reach the water. Shallow wells often collect seepage waters, and these are sometimes sufficient for certain purposes, though more often laden with objectionable material carried from the surface; but for gushing and pure water only wells that reach the right stratum will suffice.

The same is true about the human problems which we bring to Christian Science for solution. There is a spiritual truth that answers every human question, which, when discerned, proves that God's perfection always existed even where the human sense of lack and doubt seemed to be. There is no power that can delay the manifestation of harmony when the divine fact is known, because the whole problem and all its factors are in and of consciousness, wherein cause and effect, Mind and idea, are not separated by time, space, or matter. It is essential, however, that we work our way through the seeming obstructions and actually reach a knowledge of the divine fact, just as the diggers or drillers of wells must pierce the capstone or clay that covers the gushing waters. Whether it is done in an instant or after arduous labor, the process is the same, and the results are no less useful or permanent because quickly achieved.

Achievement is really the very acme of Christian Science, from a human point of view, constituting the only proof which humanity accepts of its absolute declaration, in the words of Mrs. Eddy on page 475 of Science and Health: "Man is spiritual and perfect; and because he is spiritual and perfect, he must be so understood in Christian Science. . . . A mortal sinner is not God's man." No blind repetition of a set of words as a formula, however correct in form; no long-continued dwelling on merely superficial truths that barely prick the crust of belief; no self-satisfied assurance that we have done the same things that healed us last year, is sufficient to combat in our own thoughts the various allurements of evil in the guise of good which we meet every hour. Nothing less than the constant endeavor to view every problem from the standpoint of infinite Truth brings invariable results; and when we work on from that position there is no surprise in it when the healing—the proof of the unfathomable benevolence of God—comes instantly.

The irresistible immediacy of the work of Christ Jesus rested on nothing less than his constant recourse to the absolute facts about everything in thought. Even when he was resting by the well of Sychar, and no one was there to seek healing of him, the coming of the Samaritan woman to draw water immediately brought from him the declaration that "God is a Spirit," this after he had said, "Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." The woman's material reliances cropped out in her observation that he could draw no water because the well was deep, but to him the material circumstances were but details of a metaphor in which water, as Mrs. Eddy says, "symbolizes the elements of Mind" (Science and Health, p. 507), and in which material obstructions are seen to be mythical.

The character of Christ Jesus as Savior does not rest on the mere intellectual beauty of the teaching illustrated by the incident just referred to; and although in the record of it the incident is not coupled with any act of physical healing, it stands, nevertheless, as a scientific explanation of the process by which his works were accomplished. Thus, in the fifth chapter of Luke there is recorded an incident in which Simon Peter's views of fishing are contrasted with those of the Master, as the Samaritan woman's views of the well of water were, except that the comparison was in one case by practice and in the other by precept. After teaching the multitude on shore from Simon's boat, Jesus' command to Simon was, "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught." Simon protested that they had toiled all night in vain, but nevertheless obeyed, as he said, "at thy word." On the same lake, with the same net, from the same boat, the same men who the night before had caught nothing to still the sense of material lack, now, when acting at the command of Christ Jesus, caught such a number of fishes that the boats began to sink. Obedience was the instrument that pierced for them the seeming adamant of false belief and revealed that abundance, of fishes as of water, which was never hidden from the great Teacher.

Results, then, must follow knowledge; and mortal sense must acknowledge the facts when the awakened consciousness perceives them. It is not that works, any more than mere intellectualism, can justify mortal man; but definite spiritual understanding invariably produces right results, and therefore we are justified in expecting them to indicate the presence of that on which they rest, as viewed by human sense. We are entitled also to expect, and we do in fact experience, the instantaneous appearance of healing proportionate to our humility, obedience, and insight, with an abundance of good measure besides as reward for unflagging kindness, unlimited patience and compassion. Spiritually real facts, prayerful understanding, and instantaneous healing are the great steps in the practice of Christian Science, and they admit of no delay, no time element, nothing inconsistent with that Scripturally important word, "Now!"

The exercise of the formative and protective functions of The Mother Church, enabling humanity to make practical use of the facts about God and the real man, makes it the one Christian agency on earth which embodies the "Now" element in Christianity, which constantly insists on the immediate rejection of every erroneous thing. Its edifices stand as symbols of these functions, and as such are appreciable to a sense to which spiritual things seem nebulous. In speaking of their symbolism, on page 6 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," Mrs. Eddy refers to "the speed, beauty, and achievements of goodness." It is goodness, or God-like-ness, on which we must depend for the willingness and ability to see quickly the health, abundance, and holiness of Spirit. When we do we shall see the futility of our material strivings, not only through the sufferings of poverty and disease but, like the disciples and the draught of fishes just referred to, through the abundance born of obedience to the Christ; and when that spiritual abundance is manifested, our further experience will also be like that of the disciples of whom we read, "And when they had brought their ships to land, they forsook all, and followed him."

Waiting for the Unreal to Disappear

BLANCHE ANDERSON RITTENHOUSE

TO the beginner in Christian Science nothing is perhaps more disconcerting than its insistence upon the use of exact terms and upon the correct use of every term. Turning away unsatisfied from his former concept of spiritual life which has consisted either of a vague intellectual assent to a man-made creed, or of an emotional faith in a far-off God, he finds himself called upon to study a Science whose terms must all be clearly and precisely defined and whose rules must be strictly obeyed. He hears much about Principle and its law, and he may even be tempted to feel that he is making a very hard exchange for the old concept of a personal "Father in heaven."

Like the child who has learned to play "by ear," and who is suddenly put under the strict discipline of regular musical training, he finds all his little ideas and accomplishments of the past subject to a merciless overhauling and correcting, while his concept of the Principle of harmony is too meager to give him much comfort or inspiration. It is a bleak period, attended by much questioning, and calling for much patient mental work, often without clearly apparent results; one that calls for the most loving consideration from those who have themselves passed through this experience and have learned how much of heartening warmth and true compassion lies within this inexorable law of Truth. Mrs. Eddy understood this when she wrote: "To mortal sense Science seems at first obscure, abstract, and dark; but a bright promise crowns its brow. When understood, it is Truth's prism and praise" (Science and Health, p. 558). The child goes on through the discipline of musical training to a knowledge and skill no longer dependent upon his "ear" or mere personal taste, but founded upon the great laws of harmony—laws which confer upon him a freedom and joy totally unknown to his lawless and undisciplined earlier work.

So, too, the beginner in Christian Science goes on, if he is faithful, to a concept of God and of his own relationship to God which is founded, not upon mere human opinion, but upon spiritual laws that are to him no longer cold and obscure, but "as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." Under the law of unvarying good he comes into a freedom and efficiency and joy in thought and action totally unknown to his earlier years of dependence upon a finite conception of God and man. An experience which was very helpful to the writer may be helpful to some one else. She was just a beginner and was struggling with an acute sense of physical discord. She had faithfully declared the truth, and was striving to know that divine Love had never sent this suffering upon her; that it was only the unreal product of false belief, hence had no power over her. But this work seemed to produce no result, and her need seemed great. She felt very desolate as she reflected that there was no use in beseeching God to help her (as she would once have done), since, according to her new outlook, He did not know evil or pain. It was a dark hour to her troubled human sense, but Love never fails its child, and at last she looked up, and cried out in all sincerity: "Dear Lord, I have declared the truth about this the very best I know how—but it is still there."

Then, at last, she was ready to quit her human struggling and really listen to the Truth whose allness she had been declaring with her lips. That last phrase struck sharply upon her attention. What was it that was "still there?" She had been declaring that evil was unreal, did not exist. Was she waiting for an unreality to disappear? If it was not really there, how could it go away? Then and there she had to decide whether the statements she had been making were mere theory to her, or a demonstrable truth which she was ready to act upon. She had invoked a God who expressed Himself in unvarying law, and she must comply with the conditions of that law if she expected to benefit by its activity. Had she seen a mirage, she would not have sat there looking at it and demanding that it should disappear. She would have been so sure of its unreality that its seeming presence could not have disturbed her, or have had any power whatever over her. Could she not throw herself as unreservedly upon divine Truth and let God deliver her, even though the discord seemed to be "still there"?

For some time she sat there, very still, questioning herself silently but intently, and when at last she came back to some perception of her material surroundings, it was to the startled realization that there had not been any sense of pain during that time. Later, the sense of pain tried to reassert itself, but she found to her inexpressible joy that it had no more power over her.

So did one beginner learn the difference between declaration and realization, between mere theoretical assent and active, exact obedience to Truth. She was very far from understanding all the significance of that experience at the time; but, as the years have gone on and she has been called upon to apply to a multitude of new experiences what she then learned, she has seen with growing clearness and awe that the voice which called her so inexorably that day to the "full stature" of scientific thinking was the voice of our Father in heaven, of a Love so divine that it will not give its child any mere external result, but insists that through obedience to the law of his being he shall gain the power to demonstrate a harmony which cannot be affected by any false testimony.

The great artist through his unvarying obedience to the laws of harmony has gained the power, not simply to "play a piece," but to express with freedom and joy the deep, unspoken thoughts of the heart. So the beginner in Christian Science goes on to learn that the law of Truth which once seemed so exacting and inexorable is not any mere arbitrary commandment of a personal God, but is the very law of man's being, the very source and fountain of his strength, and that obedience to it will lead to the perfect expression of his true selfhood as the child of God. Secure within its blessed shelter, he turns away ever more surely and serenely from contemplation of the evil, even though it claim to be "still there," until at last it fades out of his consciousness as completely as any other mirage of mortal sense—finding no place for itself in the mentality that is demonstrating man's unity with God by obedience to His law.

"Chemicalization"

GEOFFREY WILKINSON

IT is by no means an uncommon experience with Christian Scientists to feel that although they are pursuing the study of Christian Science they are seemingly becoming more and more full of faults and less and less agreeable in disposition than they were before. Sometimes this appearance will manifest itself to none but themselves, and sometimes it will be apparent to others. It may therefore be helpful to consider what this experience means, how much it amounts to, and how it is to be dealt with.

It is safe to say that until the individual comes in touch with Christian Science, which goes to the very bottom of mental action, the carnal, or, as Mrs. Eddy has termed it, the mortal mind, goes on its way more or less undisturbed. No system except Christian Science regards it as other than real, that is to say, God-created, or at any rate God-permitted; and though orthodox theology strives to eliminate its more admittedly vicious phases, it regards its less aggressive tendencies as not only real but right. Suddenly, into this placid mill pond of self-satisfaction the rock of Christian Science is hurled, with its declaration that God is infinite Mind, therefore there is but one Mind, and that Mind by its very infinity, spirituality, and goodness not only contains no element of matter or evil but has no consciousness of any such things; hence that matter and evil have neither intelligence nor power nor reality, while the mind that seems conscious of them is itself a falsity. This, it will be seen, is in strict accord with the teaching of the Founder of Christianity, when he said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing," and with his statement regarding the devil, or personified evil, that he "abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him;" though the world has refused to take these sayings absolutely.

In some cases the human mind, discouraged by the apparent failure of belief in an existence apart from God, is ready enough to abandon its previous belief in itself; in other cases it makes a stubborn fight for its own claim to existence, for although it is glad to be deprived of its more uncomfortable features, such as sickness, sorrow, and fear, it is by no means so ready for the root and branch destruction demanded by Christian Science. It is in such cases that one observes the phenomenon described by Mrs. Eddy as chemicalization. "What I term chemicalization," she writes on page 401 of Science and Health, "is the upheaval produced when immortal Truth is destroying erroneous mortal belief. Mental chemicalization brings sin and sickness to the surface, forcing impurities to pass away, as is the case with a fermenting fluid."

Sometimes chemicalization appears to be spasmodic, in other cases chronic; but whether it is chronic or spasmodic the root of the trouble will be found to be the self-assertive action of the human will, in other words, of a mind claiming to exist apart from God. On page 345 of Science and Health, after quoting Paul's words, "For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself," Mrs. Eddy writes: "This thought of human, material nothingness, which Science inculcates, enrages the carnal mind and is the main cause of the carnal mind's antagonism." It is well that those who are experiencing this mental upheaval should recognize at the start that the belief in a mind separate from God is doomed, and that the sooner they exchange the human for the divine, the old man for the new, the happier they will be and the happier they can make those with whom they come in contact. They will have to do this sometime, so why not now? "Now," said Paul, "is the day of salvation."

It is just here that the importance of Jesus' admonition to deny oneself comes in. The ordinary acceptation of the phrase, like the ordinary acceptation of so many of the Master's commands, has been very mild,—not at all in keeping with the strong significance of the Greek word used for deny. Was not Jesus' whole life a denial of mortal selfhood and an affirmation of the spiritual selfhood, the Christ, the reflection of God? "I can of mine own self do nothing," he said on one occasion; and on another, "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." Denying oneself meant to Jesus the denial of mortal, material selfhood; and if one heeds the Master's admonition and denies himself daily, he will find that the human will with all its aggressiveness and insufficiency is losing its seeming influence, and that the divine Mind with all its power and peace is governing. Our Leader says, "Perfect and infinite Mind enthroned is heaven" (Science and Health, p. 266). Is there any reason why we should not enter in?

Let us then strive to realize that there is no mortal, material selfhood at all: that man is the reflection of Mind,—of Life, Truth, and Love. That is really all the "me" or "you" there is, and this true selfhood is coexistent and coeternal with God. As the human will abandons its claim to power it will be seen that what appeared to be retrogression was really increased moral sensitiveness, throwing into stronger relief faults and traits which before seemed normal; the sense of going back, if unwillingly, when one was really going forward, will disappear; the unlovely elements of character which the searchlight of Truth has brought to the surface will be removed; and a sense of peace and progress will be experienced.

"A bruised reed"

HEPHZIBAH HALL WILDING

IN the forty-second chapter of Isaiah we find some of the clearest and strongest statements of the qualities, characteristics, and work of the Christ that are to be found among the many beautiful prophetic passages of this book; and since studying Christian Science this chapter has become to the writer one of the most loved and most helpful portions of the Scriptures. The appreciation of it has brought an understanding of the patience, tenderness, compassion, and mercifulness, as well as the strength, discernment, wisdom, and foresight, which surely belong to the one whose name is "Wonderful," and which must be expressed and manifested by those seeking to be obedient to the teachings of Christ Jesus, who knew himself to be the Son of God and was the perfect expression of these qualities of divine Mind.

Many times the words, "A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench," have brought a great sense of tenderness and patience with those who seem to have but a lukewarm interest in Christian Science, even after having experienced much benefit mentally and physically. The overcoming of one's egotism, which would have judged and condemned such slow seekers of Truth, has helped the discernment of the error of thought that was keeping the patient satisfied with so little, when the rich abundance of Love is ever waiting to pour itself into human lives. And then has come a great joy from knowing that the tiniest spark of truth can through patient, loving work be gently fanned into such a flame as will eventually consume all the dross of human thought, and purify its gold.

At other times the words, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth," have been an inspiration in overcoming the temptation to discouragement and depression, whether caused by failure to prove the power of Truth or through any other condition. On page 496 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Hold perpetually this thought,—that it is the spiritual idea, the Holy Ghost and Christ, which enables you to demonstrate, with scientific certainty, the rule of healing, based upon its divine Principle, Love, underlying, overlying, and encompassing all true being." When one has turned the light of Truth upon oneself humbly to see what is needed in the way of rooting out in one's own mentality, the promise in Isaiah brings great rejoicing.

"He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth,"—until the perfect separation of error from Truth has been made. Then follows the wonderful promise to the servant upheld by divine power and a statement of the healing work to be accomplished. Surely we are singing a new song of gladness because of the inspired woman whose faithful study and loving expression of these divine qualities in her life gave her the key wherewith she has unlocked the spiritual understanding of the Scriptures for all mankind, so that to us also is the privilege given "to open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house."

The Christ-healing in Prophecy

SARAH BEATRICE SLOTE

PURE prophecy is an absolute statement of the law of God, the result of thought reaching out to and becoming inspired with the vision of perfection in communion with God. Prophecy has always been regarded by men with more or less awe, as something quite out of what is considered the natural order of things; but when the prophecy of the Bible in connection with the Christ-idea is considered, the statements are found to be direct declarations of absolute truth, and when studied with understanding, in the light of the spiritual interpretation given the Scriptures by Mrs. Eddy, their healing influence amounts to veritable treatment.

The earlier prophets of the Bible discerned God's perfection, and though at times they themselves demonstrated the truth with marvelous results, according to their power of vision, they realized the incontrovertible fact that an age would come in which the truth could and would be demonstrated continuously and in its entirety. They were inspired to see that the Christ-idea would be manifest in the flesh by one who would demonstrate the truth in its fullness; not partially, nor intermittently, but steadily and without flaw. They could not do less than make these absolute statements and declare that such a one would spring from the highest and best of the human race and reveal the perfection of God. They did not define personality, but asserted the truth, leaving results to God, the divine healer; just as the Christian Science practitioner affirms the absoluteness of Truth in giving a treatment, even to an unreceptive thought.

Application of the truth to the solving of a problem has the immediate effect of clearing up confused human mentality. Men must needs declare it continuously, and even though their spiritual vision be great, strive patiently with human obliquity, as did the Son of God when he came to humanity, knowing that the revealed truth will not fail of expression in the ripened hour. No one, however, can tell what shall be the form of another's development; one can only declare and understand that Mind is expressed; and none can measure the far-reaching power of pure thought.

The living truth has been demonstrated in human existence, and its workings lie in human consciousness; the act is only the outward manifestation of the inward victory won. Man, divinely guided by an understanding of Truth, conquers the mortal and carries to completion the purposes of God. As thought lifts itself from the physical to the spiritual and inspirational, it cannot help but declare with the prophet, "A king shall reign in righteousness."

Jesus was destined to fulfill prophecy, and the declarations of the earlier prophets, foretelling the coming of the Christ, were so many aids to the success of his mission. He was the confirmation of the truth of prophecy, and the expectation foretold and connected with Jesus' birth was confirmed by the works without which his birth would have been of no special value. This proves that the characteristic evidence of sonship is in the works, comprising the combined offices of revelation and demonstration. To Jesus, perceiving the value of his mission to the world, the shadow of temptation in mortal ambition, material possessions, place, and power, faded out before the divine office of fulfilling prophecy.

No one can read the prophecies of the coming of the Messiah without being conscious of the healing power contained in these clear outpourings of infinite good, defining the office, mission, and qualities of the Christ,—the sacrifice and long-suffering as well as the loving compassion of the one who was to demonstrate the sacred office. Isaiah, more than any other at that day, compassed the idea of the Messiah, and presented most clearly the full and rounded perfection of the Christ. In the appearing of the Christ the prophet brings to us the idea of spiritual light, then shows relief from oppression and affliction and from the confusion of war; the perfect idea of spiritual supremacy, of balance, which relieves men of personal responsibility, in that man reflects the government of the eternal, supreme, self-existent, and self-governed Being. The wisdom, might, and surpassing peace of the Father is shown; and the growth of the spiritual idea in human consciousness, exercising judgment not after the flesh, and the justice of the one perfect consciousness is foretold.

Understanding, obedience, intelligence, charity, and the quickening power of purity are illustrated in the conquering of wolves and other beasts by the lamb, culminating in the glorious rest of spiritual unity and harmony. The waters of mortal mind are parted so that God's chosen may go over in safety. Again, a picture is presented of the "unlabored motion of the divine energy" (Science and Health, p. 445) in the appearing of the Christ: "Behold my servant, whom I uphold. . . . He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. . . . He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth,"—to the completion of his redemptive mission, which shall bring release of men from the prison house of sin, sickness, and death, to the onward march of a healed and ransomed humanity.

A picture is presented of the visage marred in battle, of the faithful servant exalted and extolled, of the purifying of the nations. Isaiah declares the Christly office of consolation and its message of hope; old images changed and renewed with beauty, joy, and gratitude. In the light of the Christ-spirit men shall replace the ruins of the old ways with new and spiritual structures, each man becoming a priest of God and finding the law of compensation in the blossoming of the spirit. The prophet Micah inspires to spiritual activity in the Christ-mission, which results in the restoration of God's kingdom, declaring our perfect protection in God, saying, "He shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord."

The Christ-idea and its mission is so fully described in the Old Testament and so fully exemplified in the New, that in the light of Mrs. Eddy's interpretation it would seem as if men must reach out with open arms for the benefits of the Christly government. St. John declared later the coming of the Christ-idea, as revealed through the woman consciousness. As is plain to be seen, evil will fight against the establishment of God's kingdom, as witness the prophetic turning and overturning of Daniel. St. John tells of the terrific battle to be waged in human consciousness by the dragon, and the ultimate victory of the woman; he also prophesies of the spiritual idea which eventually must govern all men, a definite declaration realized to-day when at last mortals can dimly perceive that the human personality is not a leader, but that man's unity with God is realized through the understanding of the true man as the son of God.

So with the examples of Christliness, one sees above all the human agony the spiritual conquest; that with God's messengers it is ever a song of victory and triumph, never a question of defeat, and that the power lies in the largeness of the spiritual vision, the grandeur and simplicity of attaining to communion with divine Mind, and not in the extent of material possessions. The true vision is, one might say, automatically applied, and in this vision "one on God's side is a majority."

No Discord in Mind

CASSIUS M. LOOMIS

Look out upon the arch of heaven at morn;
Behold the starry galaxy at night.
Think ye that countless worlds as yet unborn
From other suns will glean their share of light?
Gaze ye upon the full-orbed day,
And then, O mortals, would ye say
That God is less than Love? that aught we see,
Reflecting Mind, will ever cease to be?

Though wars prevail and hearts in anguish bleed;
Though empires crumble in the ebb and flow;
Though thousands fall before the world is freed,
What priceless truth must we forever know?
Just this: our God supreme, who sees
The sparrow's fall upon the forest leas,
Is endless Life; hence man, from death made free,
Is heir-elect to all eternity.

Beyond, above, and back of all that seems
So real to-day, so boundless and immense,
Exists the realm of Spirit. Mortal dreams
Do vanish quickly and to human sense
Truth's revelation comes and wakes
Us gently as the morning breaks;
For never, never shall we know or find
One note of discord in the realm of Mind.

["'The sons of God'"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Sept. 26, 1917]

To the human sense, burdened as it is with the beliefs of the flesh, it seems impossible to accept seriously the beloved disciple's declaration that "now are we the sons of God." Salvation from the burdens of materiality will never be won, however, while the belief obtains that the sons of God are at present undiscoverable because of the actuality of material existence. Humanity needs only to be willing to accept this Scriptural statement as to the real status of man, and immediately there unfolds the great possibility of beginning at once to demonstrate the truth of spiritual existence.

John could not have made this statement concerning man had he depended upon material sense alone. If, then, while he was walking as other human beings walk in the flesh, he discerned, through spiritual sense, the true nature of man, it is reasonable to suppose that others who follow the teaching of the Master as John did, may also discern, through the same spiritual sense, the truth concerning man. Those individuals who discern this truth and are obedient to the heavenly vision, may begin to put it to a practical test in their immediate experience. The "old man," or the belief of material existence, will then be seen to lose its power to oppress, or, in other words, the material belief that life is in matter will begin to disappear in just the ratio of a man's understanding of spiritual man.

If it be true that "now are we the sons of God," it is sufficiently clear that man has always been spiritual, and that he will never be otherwise. The discovery of this spiritual fact does not bring anything new into existence. It only indicates that the beliefs of materiality which had hitherto veiled the spiritual fact are losing their power to deceive. Mortal man, who is cognizant of existence only as it is perceived through the physical senses, is not, obviously, the child of God. Nothing mortal or material can be depended upon for any assistance in finding the truth of man in the likeness of God. Spiritual sense can, however, be trusted to dispel the illusion of material sense, so that the true man may begin to appear. "It doth not yet appear," John continued, "what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."

Now it is only the unreal mortal mind that disputes the present immortality and perfection of man. It perceives, in its blind way, that the demonstration of spiritual man would mean the destruction of Spirit's opposite. It is just this opposition of material sense to the facts of Science, however, that accounts for the continued sufferings of the human family, and it is this material sense which must and can be overcome. Neither sickness nor sin is real, nor do they form any part of the experience of spiritual man. "What, then," Mrs. Eddy asks on page 285 of Science and Health, "is the material personality which suffers, sins, and dies?" She answers her own question by saying, "It is not man, the image and likeness of God, but man's counterfeit, the inverted likeness, the unlikeness called sin, sickness, and death."

If, then, this material existence, with all it includes of suffering, sorrow, and death, is unreal, the awakening to its unreality makes escape from the illusion possible. The mere acknowledgment of the unreality of mortal mind and its manifestation, matter, is not all that is required, however, to emerge from the illusion into the eternal reality and harmony of existence in the likeness of God. This statement must be demonstrated, and it can be demonstrated at every point, beginning with the first or the simplest difficulty that confronts any human being.

The unreality of evil and error, that is, of mortal man, can only be proved through the scientific understanding of the allness of God. The declaration of the perfection of God and of His reflection, man, can mean nothing if it does not mean the complete denial of all that constitutes the so-called material man. This declaration requires the constant endeavor to overcome everything that is material, and therefore unreal. While this is the most tremendous task in which the human being can be engaged, it is a task which every one can accomplish through the help of spiritual understanding; and it is, moreover, the only way to find the harmony of real being.

Because man's spiritual sonship is the fact, and the human selfhood is the counterfeit, the struggle between the real and the unreal is not interminable. Every one may be truly encouraged by the knowledge that as his understanding of God increases, and he is faithful in applying his understanding from day to day in overcoming the beliefs of evil, he is actually engaged in proving man's present spiritual sonship. John declared concerning those who perceive the Christ, or Truth, "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." Explaining this Scripture, Mrs. Eddy writes on page 182 of "Miscellaneous Writings": " 'As many as received him;' that is, as many as perceive man's actual existence in and of his divine Principle, receive the Truth of existence; and these have no other God, no other Mind, no other origin; therefore, in time they lose their false sense of existence, and find their adoption with the Father; to wit, the redemption of the body. Through divine Science man gains the power to become the son of God, to recognize his perfect and eternal estate."

This is certainly what Jesus meant when he said, "Call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven." He himself demonstrated all that the assertion of spiritual sonship implies, and he indicated that none is exempted from taking all of the steps needful in overcoming the false claims of material existence. His knowledge of God as Father enabled him to reflect God's power and to prove man's dominion over all so-called material laws. Tempest, want, time, distance, disease, were to him so many manifestations of the false belief that man is born of the flesh and is subject to its limitations; and he overcame them all through the opposite understanding that man in the image of God reflects Him in every quality. It is in just this way that "the spiritualization of our sense of man," as Mrs. Eddy says on page 185 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "opens the gates of paradise that the so-called material senses would close, and reveals man infinitely blessed, upright, pure, and free; having no need of statistics by which to learn his origin and age, or to measure his manhood, or to know how much of a man he ever has been: for, 'as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God.' "

[Aaron E. Brandt in Altoona (Pa.) Mirror]

The statement which appeared in a recent issue to the effect that Christian Science is close kin to theosophy and that much of the latter was copied from Mrs. Eddy, although made by an evangelist, is not true by any means. None of the varying teachings of theosophy, from its earliest tracing as found in the Sanskrit Upanishads to the most modern work on the subject, agree with Christian Science; therefore they could not have been borrowed from Mrs. Eddy, as alleged. Certain phrases and sentences may seem similar to the uninformed, but their meaning is very different. God is said to be infinite and absolute, according to theosophic teaching, but He is also said to be the source of both matter and spirit, which is quite contrary to Christian Science. Again, spirit is said to "evolve into matter, and matter to evolve the spirit." Christian Science, on the other hand, teaches that God, Spirit, is All-in-all, and that matter consists merely of human concepts, so devoid of intelligence, so unstable in character, and so totally wanting in spiritual qualities, that it could not have been evolved from an unchangeable, intelligent, spiritual source, and must therefore be unreal.

Many other differences could be noted. The best authority on the subject says that there is no identity, nor even similarity, between Christian Science and theosophy. This variance does not, however, give Christian Scientists a desire either to harm the theosophists or to misrepresent their teaching, and the tolerant spirit of the latter toward others, particularly noted in a recent event when they refused to join clergymen in a crusade of misrepresentation against Christian Science and its Founder, might well be emulated by all clergymen.

When our critic further alludes to Christian Science as being kin to paganism, it should be remembered that Christian Science fulfills the command of the Founder of Christianity not only to preach the gospel but to heal the sick, and thus proves its Christianity by its works. The time has gone by when clergymen can attack Christian Science without belittling their own standing as Christian exemplars.

[Henry Van Arsdale in The Sun, San Diego, Cal.]

A lecture recently delivered in San Diego brought out the fact that Christian Science teaches that the basic truths of Christianity, such as the omnipotence, goodness, love, and help of God, are available to man through prayer to meet the untoward circumstances and vicissitudes of human existence, including sickness. The medical doctor now president of the San Diego board of health, in a letter to The Sun, takes exception to this teaching, apparently not seeing, and perhaps not caring, that what he has written is an attack on the fundamentals of Christianity; for he says, speaking of disease, "Praying is here of no avail."

Now the Bible is replete with instances to the contrary, as every student can evidence. The Christian hope has always been that the promises might be fulfilled sometime, but unfortunately the expectation has placed that time in the future. Christian Science teaches and proves that the time is now, in the present. The Bible states the promises in plain terms, repeated in varying phraseology by many writers over a period of many centuries. Notwithstanding the statement of the head of the city's board of health, that reliance on the Scripture belongs to the "days of superstitious belief" and is the "result of sectarian dogmatism or ignorance," there is but one question for the public, to whom the letter is addressed, to consider,—Are these promises of the Bible true? Space allows a repetition of but two of the hundreds of promises: "He sent his word, and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions;" "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

The outward measure of one's right to be called a Christian is belief in the Bible; the measure of one's understanding of Christianity is the ability to apply the spiritual truths of the Bible. Jesus said he came to testify of the truth, and that the truth would free those who knew it. He commanded those who followed him to heal the sick, stating that the works he did they could do also, and that healing would always accompany his followers. Our doctor critic prefers to separate himself from the Christianity which Jesus and the spiritual minds that preceded him knew and taught and wrought; but I am persuaded he will carry but few with him. In passing, it may be stated that the necessity, availability, and effectiveness of prayer is taught as a matter of doctrine by Jewish, Protestant, Roman, and Greek denominations.

The board of health doctor contends that "God created some very destructive germs, and He also created other germs to either neutralize the evil of the disease germs or actually destroy them;" that "God also created what in legal medicine are called 'fauna of death,' which are instrumental in perfecting our return to dust after our demise, when our usefulness is ended;" and that God created "pests carrying infection and endowed them with their criminal instincts." These three quotations from the doctor's letter are repeated here merely as a side light on the estimate of one advocate of "legal medicine" as to the wisdom of the Infinite. As state medicine is the goal of the germ theorists and advocates of serum therapy, we have here an additional reason why Christian men and women should oppose it, as they would oppose state religion.

It is well known that physicians differ greatly as to whether or not germs are the cause or the result of disease, and as to the value of the vaccines and serums now used so widely; to say nothing of the high percentage of mistaken diagnoses. If I thought the editor would allow the space I could give instances. Amid the medley of methods, what is the public to do? The doctor himself gives an excellent hint when he says, "Primitive man did not harbor germs, nor does the nomad harbor them at this day." This is exactly what an increasingly large part of the public has suspected—that the farther we get away from "legal medicine" and the "advances of modern medicine" in combating supposititious germs, and the like, the less sickness there is and will be. Certainly less fear will be instilled in human consciousness. Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 203), "If God were understood instead of being merely believed, this understanding would establish health." Let the sick and despairing also rely on Jesus' words, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent;" and by devoting themselves to the understanding of God they will quickly find that the abundant and eternal life promised can be realized here and now.

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in The Springfield (Mass.) Union]

Christian Scientists have noticed, with no little surprise, that The Springfield Union has allowed a doctor of divinity to speak through its columns of Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in terms of personal vilification such as are usually put beyond the bounds of decency. Probably the editor was not prepared to find such matter in the copy of a reverend gentleman who was announced to speak in the name of justice for aged persons who have ministered to the spiritual needs of men. Truly, there should be no reason to expect that a preacher speaking in favor of a fund for decrepit ministers might take advantage of such an occasion for a verbal assault on the leader of another denomination.

The fact is, however, that some members of the ministerial profession are liable to this weakness; and it is an even more curious fact that this particular minister represents a denomination whose bishops are explicitly ordained to "heal the sick." Surely he would do well to approach Christian Science as a learner, and become able to obey this Christian command, instead of speaking against Mrs. Eddy, who could and did heal the sick and was the means of restoring the understanding and practice of Christian healing to the world.

Benevolent Funds of The Mother Church

"At the annual meeting of our association a collection was taken,—the amount inclosed herewith,—to be applied to the fund of The Christian Science Benevolent Association, as an expression of love and gratitude for the consecrated work of our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. The loyalty and gratitude of the association is also extended to the Directors of The Mother Church, in appreciation of their obedience and wisdom in carrying out this desire of our Leader."

"A little four year old boy commenced of his own accord to put coins, as he received them, into a little leather purse which had been given him. At the end of about ten days, he took the purse and its contents to the Christian Science Sunday school of which he is a pupil and asked that it be sent to France to help the little French children. His mother was advised to send the money direct to you, and she has asked me to do this for her. Herewith you will find a money order for the amount in the purse to date. He has already begun to work for more."

"I want to send a small contribution to the War Relief fund. My son has fallen in the great struggle for liberty and humanity. He was my all, and I rejoice that he had the courage to work and die that the earth might be made better for the generations yet unborn to live in. His was a glorious end for a glorious cause. I inclose my check for ten dollars which I hope will help some in your noble work, with best wishes for its great success."

"I inclose a check for one hundred dollars for the Christian Science War Relief fund. I send it with a heart full of gratitude and thanksgiving for all the love and protection I have received since my first gleam of understanding of the Principle of Christian Science. It is indeed the 'pearl of great price' and any help sent through its channels will feed the hungry heart as well as the body. My daily prayer is to be worthy of membership in The Mother Church."

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of the check sent me on behalf of the Christian Science church of Boston, and I ask you to convey to the central committee my thanks for the benevolent work they have undertaken for the benefit of those injured by the war. I am most grateful to the benevolent institution of The Mother Church War Relief fund, which comes generously to the aid of those who are suffering in silence, and I desire my thanks to be conveyed to those to whom they are so richly due."

"I beg you kindly to express our deepest gratitude to the Christian Science committee. Please tell the members of the committee that to-day, through their exceeding kindness, an unhappy mother and her poor daughter have had a ray of joy in their great unending sorrow. I appealed to you for help, because I had read in the 'Nuovo Giornale' of the existence of your committee. I repeated my appeal when cruel destiny took from us our only comfort and support."

A New Heart

IT is probable that throughout Christendom and in all Jewry the deliverance of Jerusalem has caused men to study with care Ezekiel's thirty-sixth chapter. The promise expressed indirectly in connection with the prophet's earlier vision is here made direct and universal with the authorization, "Thus saith the Lord God." This is the promise: "A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. And I will put my spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them."

It became part of the tradition of Israel how Pharaoh and the Egyptians had hardened their hearts, and so had gone on to destruction; yet, despite this warning, we find generation after generation of the Israelites falling into idolatry, and as distinctly becoming unresponsive to the word of God as the Egyptians had been. Concerning this condition the proverb was, "Happy is the man that feareth alway: but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief."

We find our Master very compassionate and patient with the unfaith and cold-heartedness of his followers. Mark records their surprise over the demonstration when he walked the waves and made the storm a calm. He explained their unawakened condition on the ground that "they considered not the miracle of the loaves: for their heart was hardened." Again, when Jesus warned his disciples against the leaven of false doctrine they as literalists reasoned, saying: "It is because we have no bread;" to which he replied: "Why reason ye, because ye have no bread? perceive ye not yet, neither understand? have ye your heart yet hardened?" He was kindly asking them why they were so little impressed by the spiritual and unable to respond to Principle, which to him was all-important.

Paul, quoting from a psalm of his people, credits its inspiration to divine Mind, saying: "As the Holy Ghost saith, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts . . . But exhort one another daily, while it is called To day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." The heart hardened is unsusceptible to spiritual influences because deceived by sin. But the new heart will surely mean a consciousness expressing the influences of Spirit that heal and bless, a consciousness of good which no mesmerism of evil can invade. It must be a new understanding of life itself, fulfilling the promise of Science and Health on page 264, "When we realize that Life is Spirit, never in nor of matter, this understanding will expand into self-completeness, finding all in God, good, and needing no other consciousness."

Can we find a better term for this new heart given by God than by naming it the Christ-spirit? Made alive by this, we recognize old things to have passed away, and find a renewing as of dawn brightening a valley, or spring reviving a whole countryside, or a prophet's vision enlightening a world, whereby joy and vivifying life and brotherly love enrich us. Lacking these, how dark and cold and hateful can be the experiences of men. Mrs. Eddy speaks of herself as knowing both the old and the new, but she has become the revelator by whom all in the world may know and rejoice in the new,—may rejoice in dawn, and spring, and enlightenment. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 178) our Leader says: "In the flesh, we are as a partition wall between the old and the new, between the old religion in which we have been educated, and the new, living, impersonal Christ-thought that has been given to the world to-day."

At this time, when much is said of new year, new hope, new resolutions, is it not well to desire a new heart, a new warmth of love? Where power, control, and rule center in personal will, or human mind, there is found a heart of stone, as history shows. Others besides Machiavelli have taught that the prince must absolve himself from all compassion; and a long line of princes in church and state have illustrated this. Hence the time is nigh for men to look away from the dynastic helper, "the son of man, in whom there is no help," and to turn to Principle itself, divine Love, which invites mankind, saying, "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth."

Paul and Barnabas quoted the prophecy concerning the Messiah, "I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth." Christian Science is showing the fulfillment in continuity of this prophecy, because it shows how men everywhere may be enlightened and saved, and teaches them how to have "a new heart," or the Christ-spirit, to-day. The author of Science and Health, on page 141 of this textbook, thus unfolds the possibilities before us all: "In healing the sick and sinning, Jesus elaborated the fact that the healing effect followed the understanding of the divine Principle and of the Christ-spirit which governed the corporeal Jesus. For this Principle there is no dynasty, no ecclesiastical monopoly. Its only crowned head is immortal sovereignty. Its only priest is the spiritualized man. The Bible declares that all believers are made 'kings and priests unto God.' "

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

The Real Friend

ALL need a friend whether they want one or not. The Christ within is that friend, the "strongest deliverer, friend of the friendless," as Mrs. Eddy states in her hymn on page 399 of "Miscellaneous Writings." The rich and the poor alike cannot be really happy without this friend. Jesus was a friend of the publicans and sinners. He said: "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." The great love which Jesus expressed for all humanity made him the friend of one and all. Like Abraham he was also the friend of God, and this close friendship gave him authority to turn away from and deny all human ties. His loyalty, his activity, his perseverance, his obedience to God made him spiritually attractive to all those who were seeking the Christ, Truth, the Way-shower to the kingdom of heaven on earth. Jesus being the friend of humanity laid down his life to save the world, and in doing this he found his real life in the ascension. His oneness with God is promised to all who believe on the word of Truth and live it. As we read in Proverbs: "A man that hath friends must shew himself friendly: and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother."

The real friend expresses big-hearted, mellow fellowship, does not give or take offence, preserves the ever loving gaze which is without destructive criticism but is looking for the Christ-child, recognizes the kingdom of heaven on earth, and upholds, uplifts, and is ready to fight with the two-edged sword of right thinking as well as to still the fears of the fearful. As friend meets friend in a higher understanding of friendship there comes the feeling that the Christ, Truth, moves and uses his own in unfolding God's work. The real friend tenderly calms the mother's anxiety over her children by guiding her thought to the fact that Father-Mother God is her protecting friend as well as the friend of her children. Little children sometimes make friends of the ugliest types of humanity, and often a hardened nature has been softened by their gentle, loving, trusting appeal.

The one who feels friendless learns through Christian Science how to become a friend, thus adding to himself a host of friends; for Christian Scientists all over the world become the friends of mankind in so far as they live the Christ love. The loyal friend stands the test of friendship in the hour of trial when error would falsify in order to separate or the evil intender would malign in order to erect a wall of hatred. On page 80 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy writes, "There are no greater miracles known to earth than perfection and an unbroken friendship." Such a miracle is clothed in righteousness, carrying out the eternal demand of God to be perfect in love, forgiving, forbearing, enduring. The constancy of a holy friendship is like the trust of little children in their heavenly Father to work out all problems in the unfolding of divine goodness.

The so-called human good friend has many times hindered the complete solution of a problem because handled by human sympathy and fears he has outlined the solution according to human opinion instead of divine Principle. Such attempts to help by fearful friends are mesmeric. This hypnotic sympathy is the administered hypnotic poison, the result being the direct opposite of the wish.

The real friend is the Christ, Truth, expressing love to every creature, leaving all to the glory of God. Mrs. Eddy served equally friends and enemies, giving the race her revelation in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Her ordination of the Bible and Science and Health as the pastor of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, has given to every student of Christian Science two constant companions, two inseparable, faithful friends. Finally, on page 204 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," she has established the test of real and lasting friendship in these words: "It is only by looking heavenward that mutual friendships such as ours can begin and never end."

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

Jerusalem

RECENT events lead one to think much upon Jerusalem past and present, and to recall the psalmist's words: "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee." Christian Scientists have learned to think with reverence upon that which is sacred to others, especially if it has an uplifting influence. Jerusalem has, however, peculiar claims upon all professed Christians,—indeed it may be said to be the cradle of their faith,—and did not the master Christian love that city so deeply that he wept over it, foreseeing its sorrows and its long night of travail, and said: "If thou hadst known . . . the things which belong unto thy peace! but now they are hid from thine eyes"?

On page 13 of Miscellany Mrs. Eddy, in referring to a book which had been sent her, says that according to its statements "the church of Jerusalem seems to prefigure The Mother Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston." She goes on to say that the members of The Mother Church had just pledged themselves to give a large amount of money wherewith to extend the edifice which outwardly represented their faith, and that they were to build "an ample temple dedicate to God, to Him 'who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction.'" We cannot doubt that these words of the psalmist, quoted by our Leader, must have been known by many who worshiped in Solomon's temple; and in the hundred and eighteenth psalm we have an account of one who was drawing nigh unto the gates of death, when he called upon God and was delivered. It would also seem that he went up to the temple to tell, in the presence of all the people, what God had done for him, and it is evident that his reference to "the stone which the builders refused" points to the healing power of Truth.

A student of Christian Science would naturally say that it is passing strange that the healing which came from the recognition of God's power and presence should ever have been lost sight of by humanity, which has needed it so sorely. Is it not, however, even more strange that the wonderful work done by Christ Jesus, when all forms of disease were healed, the lepers cleansed, the blind given their sight, and even the dead raised, should ever have been lost sight of? In Matthew's gospel we read that shortly before the crucifixion Jesus went into the temple and healed those who came to him for aid, although his work was challenged by the chief priests and elders who demanded his authority for it. They were blind to the things which belonged to their peace,—to the peace of all the world either in that day or this,—but we may well wonder why those who call themselves the Master's followers could ever have lost sight of the truth which he declared to be the foundation of his ministry.

In the book of Acts we find that the Master undoubtedly made provision for the carrying on of the healing work, and we read of the wonderful healing of a lame man who asked alms of Peter and John as they were entering the temple by the Beautiful Gate. To the student of Christian Science this account is not only inspiring but is divinely natural, for it proves beyond question the understanding of the spiritual law which is the source of all health and harmony,—"the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," to quote St. Paul.

There are many Christian people who never forget their deep indebtedness to the spiritual thinkers of the Hebrew people,—to Moses and the prophets, as well as those who at a later day gave their lives to the work of maintaining and perpetuating Jesus' teachings. Many and fervent have been the prayers offered for the restoration of Jerusalem, with all that this implies, and there are surely none who at this hour rejoice more deeply over the prospect of a glorious future for the Jewish people than do Christian Scientists. One who rejoices over this fulfillment of prophecy writes, "I cannot help wondering how many of the men entering the city were carrying the new-old gospel," meaning by this the healing message of Christian Science. This recalls again the words of the Master spoken at the time when the outlook for Jerusalem seemed dark indeed: "Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." To the Christian Scientist this would mean, Blessed be he that cometh in the name of divine justice and judgment, of Truth and Love, of the absolute Principle that can never fail, and which will "set judgment in the earth."

Again do our hearts respond to the words of Isaiah's prophecy: "Awake, awake; . . . put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city." Following this comes the declaration which means so much to Christian Scientists,—"The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God."

Lecture in The Mother Church

The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts, announces a free lecture on Christian Science by William W. Porter, a member of the Christian Science board of lectureship, in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets, Back Bay, Monday evening, January 14, 1918, at eight o'clock. The public is cordially invited.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

Christian Science War Relief Committee,
236 Huntington Avenue, Boston, U.S.A.

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday School, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The corner stone of First Church of Christ, Scientist, at Third Street and Ormsby Avenue, was laid yesterday morning at seven o'clock. About sixty persons were present. In the stone was placed a copper box containing a Bible, a copy of Science and Health, and extracts from the publications of The Christian Science Publishing Society of Boston. The services ended with the recitation of the Lord's Prayer.—Courier-Journal.

SAN DIEGO, CAL.—Headquarters have been established at 137 Broadway, in the Spreckels Theater Building, by the Army and Navy committee of the Christian Science churches in San Diego. A room has been attractively furnished with comfortable furniture for the "convenience of all men in uniform." The room is maintained by the Christian Science churches and societies of southern California. Stationery is provided without charge, and there is free telephone service. It is emphasized that the room is for every member of the army, navy, and marine corps who cares to use it, whether a Christian Scientist or not.

For those who are interested, there is free literature concerning Christian Science. Last Saturday [Nov. 10] fully one hundred and fifty men took advantage of the opportunity offered for a place to write letters home. The room is open from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m., daily, and on Wednesdays, Saturdays, and Sundays until 10:30 p. m. Many men use the room while waiting for a train to take them back to Camp Kearny, as it is only about five or ten minutes' walk from the Santa Fe station.—San Diego Union.

HARRISBURG, PA.—Christian Scientists in the city held their first service in their new Sunday school building, Front and Woodbine Streets, yesterday morning [Nov. 29]. The edifice was formally opened by this service, which was one of thanksgiving and praise. The church was crowded with interested auditors. The large gallery and the lobby were packed with people, and others were turned away for want of room.

The new structure is known as the Sunday school building. A larger edifice will shortly be erected to the west of this one, facing on Front Street. The two buildings will be connected. The present building is one of the most beautiful church structures in the city. The material is a blue-gray stone.—The Telegraph.

BANGOR, MAINE.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, has purchased the Pitman lot on French Street and will erect a handsome church home there in the near future. The purchase price was forty-five hundred dollars and was paid in cash. The lot is 143 by 115 feet. The edifice will stand on an eminence commanding an excellent view of the city. First Church of Christ, Scientist, was started in Bangor approximately twenty years ago, and the members have been anxious for a church home of their own for some years.

The Lectures

VENICE, CAL. (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Julius C. Barthel, who said in part:—

Through the Bible we learn that Jesus came nearly two thousand years ago to teach the religion of Life and Love, and he said among other things, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." God's love was with him then, just as it is with us now, for do we not read in the first epistle of John, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," which gives us the assurance that divine Principle, Life, Truth, and Love, is ever with us? The world is eager to know the truth, and Christian Science brings its message based upon the teachings of Jesus of Nazareth.

WEST ROXBURY, MASS. (auspices The Mother Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Elisha B. Seeley, who said in part:—

It is stated on page 162 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the textbook of Christian Science, that "the effect of this Science is to stir the human mind to a change of base, on which it may yield to the harmony of the divine Mind." It is also stated in the fourth chapter of Matthew, that after overcoming the various temptations of the devil, experiences referred to as the forty days in the wilderness, "from that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The word repent as it is used in this instance means "Change your mind," and this important step must as necessarily be taken to-day as then, if mankind would exchange the discords of sin, sickness, and suffering for that sense of life which is characterized as the "kingdom of heaven," or, as Mrs. Eddy expresses it, "reign of harmony" (Science and Health, p. 592). Christian Science has come to this age to represent the spiritual idea of existence as imparted through the teaching of Jesus and his followers.

GLASGOW, SCOTLAND (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Miss Ellen Graham, who said in part:—

An ancient prophet once wrote: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." To-day Christian Science renews that loving invitation and offers to the world the priceless understanding of Truth. In the Preface to Science and Health (p. vii) Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science, has written, "The time for thinkers has come;" and men everywhere are waking up to recognize the fact that it is necessary to understand, and not merely to believe, something about the source of life and happiness. Christian Science meets this need of mankind and affords an explanation of God, or Life, which every man can understand and prove for himself.

FLUSHING, N. Y. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by William C. Calkins, Jr., who said in part:—

A little over fifty years ago a wonderful, deep thinking, farseeing New England woman made a discovery of such vital and far-reaching consequence that it has changed the thoughts and lives of millions of people. The name of this woman was Mary Baker Eddy and her discovery was Christian Science. The underlying thought of Christian Science is really very simple—it is this: that the teaching of Christ Jesus was not confined to his time and his people. For hundreds of years it has been the custom of Christian people to turn to the Scripture for comfort in their hour of trouble; Mrs. Eddy did this, but instead of finding temporary comfort, she found health, happiness, and freedom from the bondage that has bound humanity for centuries. Having made this discovery, and having incontrovertibly proved it to be true, she dedicated her life to the sacred duty of spreading this new understanding of Truth all over the world.

WHEATON, ILL. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Herbert S. Gilbert, who said in part:—

As Christian Scientists, we believe in the same God as do other Christian denominations. We believe, as they do, that God is supreme; but we go farther and put into practice our belief that sin, disease, and discord are not a part of God's creation, and that the false belief about them is destroyed through a better understanding of the operation of divine Principle. We are Christian Scientists as we separate ourselves from these false beliefs, the mists of material thinking; and we are realizing more and more that man does not have to die before he can enter the kingdom of heaven.

FOREST GROVE, ORE. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Joseph A. Wiles, who said in part:—

When Jesus was instructing his disciples for their life work, he said, "I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you," implying that it was requisite for them to think well of their fellow man in order to bring into operation the healing power he taught and demonstrated. And again he said, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Thus he taught the religion which raised humanity from the belief of sin, sickness, and death nineteen hundred years ago, and which is again brought to light by Mary Baker Eddy, who has given to the world to-day "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Hundreds have been healed through the study of this book and through putting into practice the lessons she taught, thus following in Christ's way. She states (Science and Health, p. 495), "God will heal the sick through man, whenever man is governed by God."

Testimonies of Healing

As a Christian minister I always felt that I owed obedience to God, allegiance to Christ Jesus, and the best of service to my fellow men; yet some years ago I became somewhat dissatisfied and ill, so much so that I went West to a farm in North Dakota for recuperation and a change of work. While there, in 1910, my daughter received from an aunt in Canada a gift subscription to The Christian Science Monitor. We all became interested in reading it, and the daily Christian Science article therein especially appealed to us.

In the spring of 1911 we procured a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. My wife was the first to read it, and she had merely begun when she was healed of a disorder which for eight years had resisted hygiene and medicine. I did not read it until the following winter, owing to lack of time, but when I did, this unique book revived my whole being and Christian ambition. It presented to me afresh the gospel truths, and awakened my understanding of the spiritual, eternal demands of God and of His Christ, my duty to Him and to the world. All at once it dawned upon me that I must set out again for a place in the active ministry, somewhere, anywhere. I supplied a few pulpits during many months, and then divine Providence led me to Boston into the work of another denomination. For three years I worked with diligence and joy as pastor of the French Evangelical (Congregational) Church.

All this while the religious tenets of Christian Science were before me as something worthy of attention and meditation, and they finally became for me a matter of faith, life, and thanksgiving. I believed in Christian Science and its practice of healing through the power of God. I was also experiencing God's help and guidance in my affairs and realizing as never before the control which Truth and Love hold over all. Moreover, in Boston we had found and gladly seized the opportunity of attending the services and also lectures at The Mother Church, so that we gently grew in the knowledge of Christian Science, though we had as yet no relation with Christian Scientists.

One Sunday, in November, 1915, a young lady visited my church and she proved to be God sent. She was a Christian Scientist, and her message roused me to the fact that the time had arrived for me and mine to declare for Christian Science, its spiritual viewpoint and wonderful works. I felt the call to a higher ministry, the demonstration of divine Principle in accordance with God's unerring directions, as revealed in the Old and the New Testament and in the Christian Science textbook. I had seen the truth and the good of Christian Science, felt it more and more along the years, and also the great need of it everywhere. I knew that God's might, which has its way in manifold avenues, had it amazingly in this field; therefore I made known my sober resolve, and tendered my resignation. With deep regret, I felt bound to sever my connection with the French congregation, the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society, and also the Presbyterian fellowship. I loved them all, wished them all to prosper, but now could only serve them as a humble Christian Scientist.

In January, 1916, I was relieved, and left my work, salary, and friends for Christ's sake, with the promise: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it." I had no fear, knowing that God is Love and with Him I could and would overcome the world. With faith, expectation, and gladness, I set out on my new course, and in the following June, with my wife and daughter, I was admitted to membership in The Mother Church. Every day adds to our progress, happiness, and peace.

As Mrs. Eddy so well states on page 1 of Science and Health, "No loss can occur from trusting God with our desires, that they may be moulded and exalted before they take form in words and in deeds." We daily give thanks to God for our better understanding of Him and our advance toward Him. We are deeply grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her life, for the Christian Science textbook, for her other writings, and for our periodicals; and we are also grateful to her faithful followers for the church services and lectures, and to the Board of Directors, the trustees, and other officers for their daily loving concern and care.

Happy, healthy, and blessed, we love Christian Science, Christian Scientists, and all the rest of mankind evermore, striving to fulfill the law of Christian Science, which is Love divine.—GUILLAUME E. CHARLES, Boston, U.S.A.

In reading other people's testimonies I have been greatly helped, and therefore feel that I would like, in gratitude to our heavenly Father, to say what Christian Science has done for me, with the hope that whoever reads my experience may find the peace, joy, and happiness which is mine to-day.

It is now about three years since this glorious truth found me. Up to that time I had lived the life of a man of the world, till I was in such a wretched state that life seemed not worth living, and I did not care for God or man. It was a case with me of man's extremity being God's opportunity, and so through the truth of Christian Science I was lifted out of hell into heaven here and now. I found in this truth a practical religion which one can live every day, and these words of the Master have indeed been proven true to me: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

I am thankful for the way in which financial and other troubles have been overcome. I have been healed of a condition which was said to be incurable, and no words can adequately express my gratitude for the moral healing of a licentious life. The Bible, a book I never looked at before, is to-day my best friend, and it is beautiful to see how "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy opens up the spiritual truths to be found in this wonderful book. I have also learned in Christian Science how to help others.

I have proved that we receive a large return for all that we do for others, also to some extent the loving words of our Master, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." In my own consciousness I am, thanks to the great privilege of class instruction, realizing more and more each day the meaning of those words of our blessed Master, "The kingdom of God is within you," and I am trying to show my gratitude by expressing this kingship in daily living.—E. G. PORTER, London, England.

I feel that it would be wrong longer to delay in giving my testimony of what God has done for me through Christian Science. The last week of November, 1899, I was stricken with what the doctor called flux, severe rectal trouble, and was suffering from other organic disorders, including an abnormal growth. For three of the eight weeks that I was confined to my bed I suffered untold agony. The physician visited me twice daily and told my daughters that nothing more could be done for me, but if I had strength to hold out until the medicine could take effect I might get better, although I would never be well. He finally said a surgical operation was necessary, but I resolved never to submit to such an ordeal. When I was taken sick one of my daughters was in a town of an adjoining county, and while there was invited to the home of a Christian Science practitioner. This Scientist talked to her about Christian Science and awakened her interest in it. As I was considered dangerously sick a telegram was sent to my daughter asking her to come home. During the dreary weeks that followed, she spoke often of this Christian Scientist who healed through the power of Truth; but we could not understand how it was done. When I felt that my strength was almost gone, I cried out, "O God, help me, for I cannot bear this suffering any longer." I believed that God would help and He certainly did, for I lay two days conscious but comparatively easy. When the doctor saw I was better he insisted on a surgical operation, but I refused to submit to one.

Soon after this we turned to Christian Science and absent treatment was given me for a few days. Then at the practitioner's request my daughters got me ready and I went to his home, and as he told them to do, they left me in God's care. I was with the practitioner and his good wife during the first week of February, 1900, and in that time was healed of the rectal trouble, of rheumatism in the left foot, feeble action of the heart, severe stomach disorder, an internal organic trouble from which I had suffered for twenty years, and the abnormal growth. On the fifth day after my arrival at the home of the practitioner I put on my shoe, and there has been no return of the lameness.

I had long believed that God would heal sickness if we only knew how to pray for the healing. The spiritual uplift which Christian Science has brought to me and to my family of four has been a great blessing, all having been greatly benefited. I feel deeply grateful to our revered Leader for the spiritual light she has given to us, a higher idea of "Immanuel," and for the Christian Science periodicals, which are so helpful. Most of all I am thankful to God for the wonderful healing, and for our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," given to us through the inspired thought of Mrs. Eddy, for it shows us the way to God, Life, Truth, and Love.

MRS. MARY J. GRISWOLD, Greensburg, Ind.

With a deep sense of gratitude I confirm my mother's testimony. She has only told briefly of her great afflictions and of her beautiful healing through Christian Science. Words cannot express the joy and gratitude her children felt when she returned from the home of the Christian Science practitioner well and happy. We as a family can say that Christian Science is the most wonderful thing that ever came into our lives, for it is the light that reveals the truth of God. We have all received healing and spiritual uplift.

MISS EDITH S. GRISWOLD.

The study of Christian Science was not in my case taken up for the healing of physical ills, but to satisfy a craving for something higher and better than anything I knew. I always had this longing, which was largely manifested in an insatiable desire to learn; and about the only book I ever had access to that was left unread was the one book which could have given me the knowledge I craved, namely, the Bible. Up to six years ago the only reading I ever gave the Bible was prompted solely by a sense of duty—and needless to say, nothing was gained from such reading.

Until about eight years ago I had thought that with the possession of the material things one desired plus human knowledge and the love of family and friends, happiness and peace of mind could be had; but at this time it became plain to me that something more was needed. The thought persisted that if we grown-ups only had a wonderful all-wise parent to tell us what to do and when to do it as parents tell their children, how happy I for one would be to do his bidding, and thereby be relieved of the responsibility of making my own decisions, which as often as not, regardless of right desire, seemed to end far short of my hope. In no way did I associate this hope with the God I had been taught about or had read about. It seemed to me there must be a rule to do everything by, and that good results would be assured in proportion to our fidelity in following it; but there seemed no such rule to live by, and no such surety of happy results.

For about two years this desire for something sure was a wish only. During this time I was looking for the wisdom which guides and governs, but I was not looking in the right direction. One evening while a friend was talking with me, she asked me why I was not connected with some church. In answer I said that I could not conscientiously subscribe to the creed of any church I knew. While I had always appreciated the influence of the church, loved its services and found inspiration in them, felt calmed and uplifted by its sacred quiet, deeply stirred by its music, there was no church that I knew whose members did not fall far short of its teachings.

My friend's remark lingered in my memory. I too wanted to know why I was not a church member, and felt that by searching the Bible I would find what I longed to know. That surely was the right source of information—and for the first time in my life I began to search the Scriptures. For months I did little else; and no reading was ever so absorbing, so joyously uplifting, so perfectly satisfying. I read often all day and until two or three o'clock in the morning, and when I awoke, eagerly began again. The entire Bible was read with new eyes; the many healings throughout the New Testament appealed to me more strongly than can be expressed, for they were proofs of God's power. The promise made, that all which goes to make up human woe could be dispelled by this same power if we but obey the Master's teaching, impressed me as being the very sweetest assurance I have ever known.

From the little I had heard of the Christian Science church it seemed the one to go to, and I went with a friend, six years ago, to a Wednesday evening meeting. What I heard there was in direct line and consistent with the many healings recounted in the Bible, and this same evening a copy of the Sentinel was purchased, this being the beginning of my reading of Christian Science literature. I found that its beautiful teachings were, as these Wednesday evening testimonies evidenced, making the lives of its followers happier and healthier, and the Bible surely gave many promises that this result would follow upon obedience to God. I felt as though I had been ushered into a new world, as indeed I had; and the beauties of this new world have been daily unfolding ever since. I have found my something sure, my all-wise Father, my rule to live by, and the most joyous thing about it is, that it is not just for me and mine, nor for thee and thine, but for all.

Extreme nervousness, facial neuralgia of ten years' standing, an abscess, a case of hiccoughs which had been constant for eighteen hours, a crochet hook embedded three-quarters of an inch in the flesh, a wasp sting, the fear of insects and reptiles, extreme grief when leaving members of my family, even for brief absences, were all overcome. These healings in our family came about through my own understanding of Truth's power, without the aid of a practitioner. The two first mentioned came as a result of the reading of the Bible and the Christian Science Sentinel before there was any thought of applying the power of Truth to solve my own problems.

These are not by any means all of the good results a changed conception of God and His children has brought to me and mine. Let no one doubt that Christian Science does bring healing to a sick body or mind and joy to a sorrowing heart. We all will find much more than we ever dreamed of hoping for. My debt to Christian Science for what it has done for us and for what it is doing for the world can only be paid by daily work in God's vineyard.

MRS. HATTIE J. BONNELL, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Christian Science has brought me peace that passes all understanding and has lifted me from the slough of human misery and despondency to an understanding of life that is making all things new. It has transformed my character, sweetened my disposition, elevated my morals, wiped out burdensome habits, and carried me through an ordeal that might have cost me life or liberty. It has healed me of jealousy, given me a better understanding of my fellow man, broadened my conception of all things, and enabled me to perform my work with ease. Besides all this, an ailment pronounced incurable by the medical doctors has been overcome through Christian Science, although the healing was slow, extending through ten or twelve years. On several occasions the end seemed near, and my striving for the freedom we are promised, at times seemed hopeless. The light however came, and my health is better now than it was for many years.

My heart is filled with gratitude for all these heaven-bestowed blessings. I feel that the work is only begun, but my constant prayer is for more light and a better understanding of the truth that makes free. Every moment of my life is a song of praise and gratitude to our heavenly Father, to Christ Jesus, and to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer of Christian Science.

I wish to testify to the healing power of Truth as taught in Science and Health. Four years ago I came into Christian Science, after being blessed with the healing of what was called incipient tuberculosis. My home was in Chicago, and we had one of the best doctors there. He ordered me to go West, and I did so seven years ago, living in Colorado and Wyoming, but the climate did not seem to do me much good; in fact, I got worse and a bad cough manifested itself. It did not make any difference how cold the weather was, at night the perspiration was extreme. I have a sister in Chicago who is a Christian Scientist, and my wife finally said she would write to her for help. Having reached a stage where I saw that medicine could not help me, I consented, and in about four days, just time for the letter to get there, the cough left me, never to return. I am thankful for the healing, but most of all for the spiritual uplift which the reading of Science and Health gives to me and to every one who reads it seeking the truth.

My wife is also interested in Christian Science, and we go over the Lesson-Sermon every day. I wish to reiterate that I am thankful to God for all these blessings, and grateful to our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for giving to poor humanity her wonderful book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," wherein we are taught to pray aright.—E. B. VOGEL, Attalia, Wash.

I am glad to write the following testimony in grateful acknowledgment of what Christian Science has done for me. Eleven years ago I became interested in this teaching through the healing of my little brother, who for three or four years had been subject to spasms. My parents had tried various methods of cure without benefit to the boy. It seemed as though a great cloud was lifted from our home as soon as Christian Science treatment was given, for my brother was healed. The result of this healing was a marked change in his disposition. He soon asked to go to the Christian Science Sunday school and in time my other brother, my sister, and I followed him; indeed, it has been true in our family that "a little child shall lead them."

Christian Science has been a great help to me in school work. Fear of failure in the study of geometry was overcome through the understanding that God is Mind and an ever present help. Among other things I have been healed of stomach trouble, catarrh, and headaches. The headaches did not entirely disappear until about six years ago, but each attack caused me to rely more on Christian Science. Sometimes freedom came through realizing the truth of the Lesson-Sermon, and at one time the truth in one of our hymns brought healing and spiritual uplift. Each experience meant spiritual growth, which was more valuable than the physical healing.

The testimonies in our periodicals have been very helpful to me; coming voluntarily as they do they are spontaneous expressions of gratitude voicing truth and bringing healing. I wish to take this opportunity to express my gratitude for the Monitor. When I try to realize what it means to supply people all over the world with our literature, I know that it is Mind with its infinite power that is doing it all.

MISS HELEN EMERSON, Minneapolis, Minn.

In recognition of the many blessings received from Christian Science, I submit the following testimony. During the greater part of my young manhood days I was subjected to many disagreeable afflictions, which came from the belief of an affected brain, supposed to be the result of an accident which occurred when I was a boy. The climax was reached about eight years ago, when I began to lose hold upon human existence. I was a patient in four or five hospitals in New York City, and had three examinations by the X-rays, which showed what was described by medical doctors as inflammation bordering the cells of the brain.

While in this condition, realizing that I was fast losing ground, I decided to leave myself in God's care. Shortly afterward a neighbor asked me to try Christian Science, and the next day I had treatment. After being treated daily for several weeks, it dawned upon me that I was healed. Since that time, five years ago, I have been able to attend to my business without one day's absence on account of illness.

Christian Science has proved to be the greatest friend and comforter I can have, and my earnest prayer is that I may so reflect its teachings in my thoughts that my doings will evidence the efficacy of this great truth in the regeneration of mankind.—CHARLES WELFORD, Brooklyn, N. Y.

I feel it my duty as well as a privilege to tell of some of the blessings I have received through Christian Science. I was healed first of a great nervous strain and breakdown, so severe in its nature that I could not bear to be with people. Influenza and heart trouble have also been overcome, as well as discontent and loneliness. My husband was healed of the smoking habit. I am very grateful for two healings which took place in the past year, both of the same nature.

Digitized by Google

Last June I awoke one morning feeling very ill. Being alone and unable to telephone for help I tried to overcome the trouble myself, but it grew so severe that I could not read or think. When my husband, who is not a Christian Scientist, came home, he said he was going for a doctor, but I told him not to do so. Then Christian Science treatment was asked for and in about three days I was entirely well. The same trouble seemed to present itself again in November, but was overcome by the power of Truth.

I want to express my gratitude for Christian Science. I am so glad to learn that God is not the sender of mortal discords; that He is Love, and that no matter what we may do or may not do, divine Love never changes. Our part is simply to keep close to God.

MRS. ELSIE O. KREAR, Pittsburgh, Pa.

During the six years that I have been studying Christian Science I have experienced many wonderful healings. For five years I had been suffering from so-called adhesions of the stomach, liver, and bowels, and had undergone nine operations; but each time the trouble returned it was more serious than before, and physicians pronounced my case to be beyond medical or surgical assistance.

At this point the truth found me, seemingly in the depths both mentally and physically. To-day, through my understanding of the Principle of Christian Science, as revealed in our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I am enjoying health, peace, and supply. My little daughter was healed of malignant scarlet fever, so pronounced by the physician called to diagnose the case. Paralysis of the heel and toes followed, but was entirely overcome by Christian Science treatment.

I cannot adequately express my thankfulness to God for this wonderful truth, or my gratitude to our beloved Leader, who was able to discover and give it to the world. It is with a sincere desire to share the numerous blessings which Christian Science has unfolded to me that I send this testimony of the Christ-healing.

MRS. GERTRUDE S. WADE, Kingsville, Ontario, Canada.

In July, 1916, Christian Science was brought to our notice in such a way as to lead us to investigate it, and since becoming interested in it I have given up the use of liquor and tobacco. I have also been almost instantly healed of a severe attack of chills, accompanied by terrible pain in my side. I lay awake all night in great fear and not daring to move for pain, but next morning with the aid of a practitioner I was healed. I was able to be up and about the same day, a new man. Besides this, I have been freed from a bad cough, which for about ten years was a great trouble to me; indeed, it was so severe at times that my nerves were all shattered.

For these and many other blessings I am truly grateful. My one wish is that I may become more and more conscious of man's relation to God through the understanding of the truth given to us by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, to whom I and my family are deeply grateful for this beautiful teaching.—KARL RINDSLAND, Milwaukee, Wis.

About four years ago I became interested in Christian Science through reading the Sentinel, a few numbers of which had been sent to me by a friend who had been healed of an abnormal growth. Soon after that a copy of Science and Health was secured, and I realized that it was the very thing for which I had been searching during many years.

In the winter of 1915 I had a very severe attack of influenza, but knowing that God is a "very present help in trouble" I declared the truth to the best of my understanding, and in twenty-four hours, when I sat down with the Bible to read over its promises, instantly all pain and sense of discord left me. The healing was complete and there has never been a return of the trouble. This is only one of the many benefits received. Severe headaches, irregular heart action, biliousness, poor circulation, and chilblains have been overcome, often with one treatment.

I am grateful for the sense of peace and assurance which has come into my consciousness, also for the spiritual understanding of the Bible gained through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and other books by Mrs. Eddy. I am also thankful to our heavenly Father for His mercies to the children of men. The literature sent out by The Christian Science Publishing Society is a source of inspiration to me day by day.

MRS. NELLIE M. HALL, Globe, Ariz.

Gratitude impels me to write of a beautiful experience which we have recently had in our family as the result of the healing power of Truth as demonstrated in Christian Science. During the years since we have been acquainted with this beautiful teaching, we have had numerous blessings, which I acknowledge with joy and gratitude; but it is that recent experience which especially impels me to give this testimony and voice my thankfulness.

A few weeks ago my husband had a sudden and severe attack of bronchitis, accompanied by fever and general exhaustion, so that he was unable to do any kind of work. With his consent we at once met this error with the truth as taught in Science and Health, and treatment was also given by a Christian Science practitioner. Then it became evident again what trust in God and the power of Truth can do. The catarrh loosened and a surprisingly quick healing took place. Within five days my husband was completely well. In a similar case two years ago, when he was a member of a sick fund association, he had to call in a doctor, and it was three weeks before he was well again.

For this wonderful proof of the ever presence of divine Love and for the healing power of Christian Science I am deeply grateful.—MRS. GLADE, Bern, Switzerland.

It is both an agreeable duty and my great desire briefly to testify to my boundless gratitude for the many blessings which have come to me through the teachings of Christian Science. I have now been serving twenty-eight months and have never been ill or wounded. Neither the great battles on the west front nor the climate of the Balkans, especially that of Macedonia with its many dangers, has caused me any bodily harm. In spite of wearing wet clothes for days, especially in winter time, I have never had even a cold. I have of late felt considerably better and stronger, both morally and physically, than I ever did before. Hardly a day passes that I do not experience fresh proofs of ever present, all-inclusive divine Love as revealed to us in the teachings of Christian Science.

The Christian Science literature is to me a spiritual recreation, and with it I have been able to shorten many a dreary night in a profitable manner. It is only by making it my duty to enter deeper, through constant application, into the study of Christian Science that I am able to express my great joy and gratitude.

Non-com. Officer KARL GLADE. (At the front.)

[Unitarian Word and Work]

Jealousies, suspicions, and sectarian antagonisms have caused no end of mischief, and if Protestantism were always so to remain it is doubtful if we should be justified in celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of Luther's audacious enterprise; but we do not believe that Protestantism will always be distinguished by its multiplicity of internal differences. Underneath these differences it is now being seen that there is such a thing as "unity of the Spirit."

[The Continent]

The thing that needs to be said to-day is the thing that has always needed to be said. As the voices accumulate, the message has its increasing possibility of power. Not so far back as the record of human existence goes has there been any radical change in the elements of a right human relationship. From the earliest recorded days till now men have needed the same relation to God. The voices of to-day ought to be clearer and more convincing than those of the earlier day, but what they have to say will have the sanction of the earlier voices and of the history that has intervened. When men turn to Moses and the prophets to learn what was their message, it proves to be at heart just the message which these times need. It has never been heeded, but it has proved itself exactly in the measure in which it has been given its opportunity.

[Pacific Christian Advocate]

Men and women will respond to the transparency of a person or a church which has paid the price of trampling pride in the dust that it might be right with God. And for many of us the road to rightness with God will not be found until we have followed the equally steep trail of getting right with our fellows.

[Rev. T. Rhondda Williams in The Christian World]

It is quite true that Paul uses certain points in the soldier's career and in the waging of war as illustrations to explain his own aims and methods in the conduct of the Christian campaign. But he is very careful to show that the war he is engaged in and the weapons he employs are very different from those of the world. He no sooner uses the phrase "the whole armour of God" than he proceeds to explain it item by item in a spiritual sense. And does he not very specially point out that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds"?

French Translation of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy

In conformity to the rules established by Mary Baker Eddy for making and publishing translations of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" has been translated into the French language, and is now published with the English text opposite the French translation, and is ready for delivery.

This edition is printed on fine paper and bound in cloth similar to the cover used on the English editions. Price, one to five copies, $3.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $3.25 each. It is also printed on Oxford India Bible paper, and bound in the same style as the regular pocket edition of Science and Health. Price, one to five copies, $5.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $5.25 each. The quantity price will be made on six or more books of the French translation, including the two styles of bindings.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This small volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, and which will occupy the minimum space and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

Orders for this edition are now being filled in rotation.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

New Pamphlets

The following pamphlets are now on sale at five cents a copy:

"Christian Science: Pure Metaphysics," a lecture by Dr. Francis J. Fluno, printed in English only.

"Christian Science: Its Teachings, Methods, and Works," a lecture by Judge Septimus J. Hanna. Printed in Swedish with alternate pages in English.

"Christian Science: The Christianity of Jesus," a lecture by Mrs. Sue Harper Mims. Printed in Swedish with alternate pages in English.

Vest Pocket Pamphlet

The article "Possession," by Adam H. Dickey, has been reprinted in a pamphlet, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at four cents a copy.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Currency should be sent by registered letter only.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

The Manual of The Mother Church

The Manual of The Mother Church by Mary Baker Eddy is a handbook for the information and guidance of every member of The Mother Church. It contains the organic law of the Church of Christ, Scientist. It also contains the Tenets of The Mother Church, an explanation of the origin of the Church By-laws, a historical sketch, the names of Church officers, and an appendix containing essential information for every active Christian Scientist.

Mrs. Eddy has interpreted and analyzed for Christian Scientists the purpose of the Church By-laws in two principal statements—"Mental Digestion" (The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, p. 229), and in a letter to The Christian Science Board of Directors (Christian Science Sentinel of August 22, 1914). Every Christian Scientist who sees that the extension of the religion of Christian Science is the most vital necessity in the world to-day, requires an intimate familiarity with the Church Manual.

The By-laws of The Mother Church constitute a record of the answers to Mrs. Eddy's prayers for the guidance and direction of this great movement which she founded and which is rapidly encircling the globe.

The natural inclination and desire of a Christian Scientist is to own, study, and understand the revealed law of the Church of Christ, Scientist, and gain a realization of the vital necessity for its rules and admonitions.

> "Of this I am sure, that each Rule and By-law in this Manual will increase the spirituality of him who obeys it, invigorate his capacity to heal the sick, to comfort such as mourn, and to awaken the sinner."—Mary Baker Eddy in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," page 230.

The Manual may be read, borrowed, or purchased at any Christian Science Reading Room in the world.

"What I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XX JANUARY 12, 1918 NUMBER 20

Just Recompense

WILLIAM R. RATHVON

JESUS' miracles were also lessons. They were educative as well as physically beneficial. They are for all time and every nation. The healing of the ten lepers, like the parable of the ten talents, conveys lessons needed by the men and women of to-day as well as by the wayfarer on the dusty roads of Samaria or Judea twenty centuries ago. On page 591 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy defines a miracle as "that which is divinely natural, but must be learned humanly." In his miracles Jesus incorporated many lessons which had to be learned humanly,—lessons in faith, in courage, in justice, in service, in timeliness, in self-control and self-denial, in order, in thoroughness, in unselfishness, in cooperation, in gratitude and love. These lessons teach things that practitioner and patient alike need to know and need to remember. They point to qualities the business man needs to cultivate. They offer solutions to many of the problems which appear in the daily work of every student of Christian Science.

Take for example the question of just recompense for benefits received. Jesus' miracles always benefited some one, and his beneficiaries were expected to make just recompense either in service, sacrifice, or honest endeavor. He discerned what was needful for them to do and told them plainly just what was their part in making the demonstration complete. Never was it to be a one-sided affair. Something for nothing is the creed of greed but not of justice. That which costs little is valued little. Many things of great value cannot be appraised in dollars and cents, and a Christian Science treatment is one of these; hence it should never be looked upon by patient or practitioner as a trifling affair. It should always have too much of God, good, reflected in it to be lightly regarded.

Those whom the Master helped were expected to cooperate with him in the way he indicated. He exacted from them something they could do. In some cases it was easy to do, in others it was the thing difficult, as, for instance, when he admonished the young man healed of blindness to return home and say nothing to anyone about his healing, as we read in the eighth chapter of Mark. To have given a sum of money would have been much easier for one who was bubbling over with joy, and with eagerness to shout his story from the housetops; but silence was his part in the transaction, a part he could perform, and which no one could perform for him. It is easily conceivable that in this instance the great Practitioner saw that the patient's overactive tongue needed to be controlled, his tales of symptoms and ailments needed to remain untold, and perhaps his inclination to boast needed to be checked, so he was given the prescription, "Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town."

This keeping silent was perhaps the most difficult thing the former blind man could do, but it was not an impossible thing, and in the degree that he earnestly tried to obey he profited by the effort. In several other places in the Scriptures we are told that Jesus required silence, the closed lips, as the offering he expected from those who were healed. The inclination to talk not wisely but too much has not weakened with the passing of centuries. The untiring tongue brings unnecessary trouble to-day as it did when Jesus told the cleansed leper to let his wholeness speak for itself without words. The unspoken argument of health where disease was lately clamoring often convinces people where words only antagonize.

But while the control of an unruly tongue was the recompense the Master would expect from one patient, another might be told to do more talking instead of less. The recompenses Jesus required, the services he indicated, show his discernment of individual needs. He prescribed differently for different patients. The fisherman was to throw out a hook or to cast a net; the paralytic was to take up his bed; the outcast was to show himself to the priest; the licentious to sin no more, and so on. The performance of these tasks involved much more than mere physical compliance. In differing degree it called for faith, courage, obedience, self-denial, and other qualities which aid one's realization of the allness of God and the nothingness of evil. Jesus' practice was eclectic. He had the entire pharmacopœia of Mind to draw upon, and his discernment of individual needs was infallible; hence his mental diagnoses never had to be revised or corrected. He never experimented; he knew.

The Christian Science practitioner of to-day, contending with beliefs of limitation often self-imposed, may be at a loss to know what form of just recompense he should propose to the patient who is willing to help in making a demonstration of harmony. Often, too, he may be reluctant to ask or receive anything for the healing work done. This may be because he has not yet learned that the one who comes to him with a belief to be healed has a part in the demonstration. The patient under Christian Science treatment is not like the subject on the operating table of the surgeon, an inert physical mass to be vivified and restored by the skill and knowledge of the practitioner. Rather is he an active partner with certain duties to perform in a transaction that has far-reaching effects upon his well-being. To deprive him of the opportunity to do this work for himself by working with the practitioner tends to limit both the patient and the treatment. It is not, however, always a lack of understanding which causes the student to shrink from the question of recompense. It may be pride, or timidity, or a false sense of sympathy which argues with him to take the easier way and say nothing about recompense. When he yields to this argument he ignores one of the fundamental teachings of Jesus' miracles.

The common practice to-day of paying a sum of money for each treatment given, though necessary when possible, is not always adequate. When not possible from the patient's point of view, some other form of recompense should be advanced. A large part of the work of the Christian Science practitioner is done for those of little means, who may be quite willing to do their part but have nothing with which to do it, as they believe. But there is always something they can do which partakes of true service, and the wise practitioner is he who studies each case to determine what this is. The well-established custom of having the patient read each day a given number of pages of the Bible and Science and Health is commendable, but reading the printed page without reducing its substance to daily living does not carry one very far. Merely to swallow a given amount of food each day without digesting it does not give strength. Perfunctory reading of the best of books may not always cause mental indigestion, but it rarely makes mental muscle.

There are, however, many other courses that may be profitably prescribed. The subjection of impeditive temperamental tendencies offers a wide field for the patient who would help himself while being helped. For one there may be an unruly tongue to be bridled, for another a fiery temper to be extinguished. Here is one timid and self-depreciatory; there another who is self-assertive and domineering. To reverse each condition is worth many an hour of earnest endeavor. Who is there that does not need more of gratitude and less of faultfinding, and where can be found one who loves too much? More of gratitude and more of love are remedies every patient needs to take regularly.

For each patient who comes to our doors bringing a false belief to be healed there is to be found something he can do and which needs to be done to make his treatment what it should be, a partnership affair to which both partners are contributing to attain a common end, that the kingdom of harmony may be established among men as among angels, on earth as in heaven.

The Enduring Word

ISABELLE PATRICK

JESUS said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." With every Christian Science treatment these words should be fulfilled, for until the thoughts of a material earth and a material heaven do pass from our consciousness, scientific healing cannot be realized. It is the absolute knowledge of God, without a taint of materiality, that heals; it is dwelling in consciousness "in the secret place of the most High," that reaches out in love toward the needy one and lifts thought into the new heaven and the new earth where spiritual harmony reigns.

Jesus also declared that if he were to be lifted up from the earth, he would draw all men unto him. If his thoughts were lifted so high that only the real universe appeared,—that only one power, the power of God, harmonious and eternal, appeared,—then he would be lifted so far above material belief that he would make his wonderful demonstration over death and the grave; ascend even higher in thought,—to his Father and our Father, to his God and our God,—and through this understanding draw all who followed him in word and in deed up to Christ, Truth, so wonderfully revealed to us in this age through "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

The more we understand God and His idea, the more grateful we are to the dear Leader who went through the Red Sea and the wilderness of mortal beliefs to show us how to be lifted up out of sensuality and sin into "the glorious liberty of the children of God." All of us have the wrestling with the fleshly thought, until we are lifted so far above it that we can truly say with the Master, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Then follows transformation, through putting off the "old man with his deeds," and his beliefs, and putting on the "new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."

We each have our own salvation to work out, and no matter how loving, patient, and kind a practitioner may be, the time comes when we must all think and work for ourselves. When fear seems to overwhelm us, we can ask for a hand to guide us across some deep, dark chasm, but once on the other side we must again go forward, working, watching, and praying so earnestly that when the next fear seems to loom up in our path we may know of a surety that Love is leading us; that we look not at the things which are seen, and which seem to be, but at the things which are not seen by mortal sense, yet truly are the real and eternal. On page 369 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "In proportion as matter loses to human sense all entity as man, in that proportion does man become its master."

God gave man dominion over all the earth, and as we claim this dominion and lose our belief in material sensation, we see how the word of God is sure and strong to deliver us always, even before we call. As we by studying the Bible and Science and Health learn more and more how to pray, we receive more and more of Love's supply of all good, because we learn how to pray the true prayer and we do not ask amiss.

The Thorn Road

MARY F. MECREDY

ONE of the most familiar Bible texts, and one whose literal interpretation, or rather misinterpretation, has plunged many a suffering mortal into smoldering resentment toward God and the universe in general, is the passage, "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." Explained in the light of Christian Science, however, this text becomes a great comfort to the faithful pilgrim plodding through the quicksands of matter "toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

We read in Habakkuk that God is of too pure eyes to behold evil, and that He cannot look upon iniquity. Such being the case, it is evident that he whom God loves and whom He receives is free from every taint of evil, else God could not look upon him at all. To be received of God, then, we must be conscious of the real man's spiritual perfection. How can the realization of man's true nature be brought about? The advice of the apostle Paul is, "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh."

Let us analyze this advice. We live in a mental world; we see and experience the objectification of our own thoughts, and so long as these thoughts are of matter, we are conscious of a material world only. If, therefore, we would walk in the Spirit, our minds must be transformed from beliefs of flesh to thoughts of Spirit. But, as we read in the epistle to the Galatians, "the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other,"—naturally, since the carnal mind itself is the product of sin. As a consequence, because of our love of the flesh, and because of the mental apathy resultant from habitual reliance upon the evidences of the senses, the wrenching of our thought free from its props in matter is no easy task; in fact, it is because we resist the demands of God to rise out of the flesh that we bring upon ourselves chastisement by His rod. This chastisement is, however, by no means the punishment of a capricious God, but the purifying process through which we are turned from faith in matter to trust in God,—through which we put off the material man and put on the man of God.

The misinterpretation of the text previously quoted is a natural result of the common misconception of God and of man's relationship to Him. Regarding God from a mortal standpoint, considering life as merely the span of human existence, one naturally looks upon the chastening of the Lord in the same way that he looks upon inexplicable punishment from a human parent—he receives it with resentment or with passive submission to the inevitable. Either method leads him into a blind alley spiritually. Christian Science, on the other hand, assuming as its Principle a perfect God, the only cause and creator, and defining life as the knowledge or consciousness of God, teaches us to look through the affliction of the moment to the goal which lies beyond, and enables us to rejoice in tribulation, since, as Mrs. Eddy tells us (Unity of Good, p. 55), " 'the way,' in the flesh, is the suffering which leads out of the flesh" and up to the throne of God.

From a Christianly scientific standpoint, we may look upon our life problems as being similar to a problem in mathematics. Our Principle is the one infinite Mind,—Life, Truth, Love,—God; our method of solution, the elimination of all belief in mortal existence through the application of the truth; our result, the son of God. Now there are two ways of approaching a problem in mathematics. One may work with his eye on the answer, or he may solve his problem by constantly applying the rules and leaving the answer to take care of itself. Needless to say, the first plan soon leads to grief. Mathematics demands a cumulative knowledge of its basic law; consequently the pupil cannot progress very far under the first method without finding himself confronted by so many processes between him and his answer that knowing the answer is of little value. He must perforce return to the beginning and learn the preliminaries before he is equipped to continue successfully with advanced work. The second method, the one which must be pursued to obtain a scientific mastery of the fundamentals of even elementary mathematics, builds on a correct foundation. It depends solely on the application of a given principle, and in so far as this is faithfully and accurately applied it brings the correct answer.

Turning to our life problem, we notice that the answer to be obtained is spiritual. Every time we set up for ourselves a finite answer, we are not only working by the first or erroneous method, but we have to turn away from our Principle to visualize this material result. Even by the second method there may seem to be many pitfalls. Fortunately, however, we have a check on each stage of our work, since, regardless of what the immediate phase of the problem may be, we know that the correct answer to each step is harmony. If instead of harmony discord of any kind is present, we know that somewhere we have wandered from our Principle, and that we must therefore retrace our steps till the error is uncovered and corrected. "Through toil, struggle, and sorrow, what do mortals attain?" asks Mrs. Eddy. She immediately answers, "They give up their belief in perishable life and happiness; the mortal and material return to dust, and the immortal is reached" (Science and Health, p. 536). In other words, through constant realization of the one Mind, God, the false witnesses of the carnal mind are erased from consciousness, and that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus" is manifested.

"Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth," says the Scripture. It is not by accident that those whom St. John describes in the Apocalypse as standing before the throne of God are they "which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." The mortal biographies of all who have assisted in blazing the trail for the spiritual progress of humanity show that these spiritual seers have gained through suffering the clarity of vision which enabled them to penetrate the enveloping darkness of carnality and to behold the ever radiant light of eternal Truth. Let us learn from this that no matter how heavy the weight of sin, disease, hatred, injustice, sorrow, or lack which seems to be oppressing us, we must turn from it toward that light which "shineth in darkness," the light of Spirit which reveals God's man that neither sins nor suffers. Then let us "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

"It is he that hath made us"

JESSIE C. E. KIRBY

THESE words from the one hundredth psalm,—"It is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves,"—with the jubilant note of confident rejoicing over the everlasting mercy and goodness of God, whose "truth endureth to all generations," come as a reproof to those who are struggling with that false sense which so insistently claims to be "ourselves;" while echoing down the ages comes Pilate's question, "What is truth?" The answer to this question is most clearly given in our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 472): "All reality is in God and His creation, harmonious and eternal. That which He creates is good, and He makes all that is made. Therefore the only reality of sin, sickness, or death is the awful fact that unrealities seem real to human, erring belief, until God strips off their disguise."

"He makes all that is made." What, then, is this man we ourselves attempt to make, this being with whose personality most of us busy ourselves from the cradle to the grave? To this Christian Science answers: Nothing but the illusion of material sense, which, like the monster in Frankenstein (that strange story of the human-made man), breaks away from and passes beyond the control of its maker, while, grown to gigantic proportions, it sweeps aside or tramples underfoot all that would oppose its progress. What a pitiful sight is this material man, the ignorant slave of his own false beliefs, as he moves wearily on toward a saddened old age! How dreary the outlook as time passes! How aches and pains and limitations accumulate with advancing years, thinks this victim of his own false beliefs, and then sighing miserably he says: "I must not forget that I am growing old. My age is nearing the allotted span of human existence, and this being so, I must necessarily have something the matter with me; indeed, I am fortunate that it is no worse, and I cannot expect to be even as well as I am now if I go on living much longer." And so, ceaselessly accumulating and making a reality of the delusive evidence of the material senses, he sinks into an old age which Shakespeare pitilessly describes as "second childishness and mere oblivion." Such is the man "we ourselves" make.

Contrast this picture painted by erring mortal mind with that of one who realizes in some degree the beautiful truth that God made us; of one who makes a daily practice of realizing to the best of his ability that man as God's likeness is not material but spiritual. Claiming perfection as the only reality, he fears neither sin, sickness, death, nor any form of limitation, because he knows that they are none of them true; for him there is only one reality, and that is God, good. Thus he goes serenely on, conscious of a God-given dominion over all sense of error, all fear of the whispered suggestions of mortal mind as to the reality of old age and decay, to the realization of the truth of our Leader's inspired teachings as to the real man's possibilities.

How deep should be our gratitude to her who has made it possible for us to lead a useful and happy existence, when, but for the truth revealed through her, we should be living in daily terror of the "last enemy." Truly have we cause to thank God and to "enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise." Truly "the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations."

True Prayer

WILLIAM LLOYD

WHEN we first hear of Christian Science healing, we are apt to receive it with wonder and doubt, and when upon further inquiry we are told that this healing is the result of prayer, our wonder and doubt are little lessened; but when we go still farther and take up the study of Christian Science and find what constitutes true prayer, both wonder and doubt vanish. What a wonderful thing true prayer is, and how divinely natural that it should result in healing all manner of disease, sin, and sorrow. How good it is to know in what true prayer consists, so that we may strive to reach its certain goal instead of groping vainly as we did before a knowledge of it dawned on us. Then there is the blessed comfort of knowing that while thus striving we do not have to await our answer until we attain it in its fullness, for we rest in the joyful certainty that just in proportion as we come to understand true prayer, just in that measure will our prayer be answered. Yes, answered many times more than our feeble and imperfect realization deserves!

What constitutes true prayer? Among its essentials is sincerity; and to be sincere means that we really and truly desire what we pray for. True desire requires honesty; and to be honest with God necessitates obedience, calls upon us to live in accordance with His law, so that our lives may be pure, true, unselfish, loving. Sincerity can in fact be evidenced only by our lives. Then there is gratitude,—real and true thankfulness for what we have already received, with rejoicing, praising and blessing God. Another element is faith, and this means that we really and truly expect to receive what we ask for. It is the same kind of faith, exercised in the same degree, as that of a gardener when he plants his seeds; he has an absolute assurance that he is about to see the result of his work. Next comes understanding,—a knowledge of God and of man's relation to Him; a full acceptance and realization of the Father's all-power and ever presence, and of man's real, spiritual, and inviolate existence in, by, and of Him.

Another essential to true prayer is fearlessness, going to God with such full assurance of His all-power and loving care that fear vanishes. Next comes perseverance. We must continue to work steadfastly, and if our prayer is not answered immediately, we should not let discouragement enter, but courageously examine ourselves and our prayer to find what essential is lacking; for we may be certain that it is a lack in ourselves or our prayer, and not in God. This brings us to humility. We humbly come to God in prayer, knowing that even as Jesus could do nothing of himself, neither can we. Last but not least is repentance, true sorrow for past misdeeds and evil thoughts. True sorrow of course carries with it reformation, for if we are truly sorry for having done or thought wrongly, we cease to err. And all this is in secret, just between our loving Father-Mother God and ourselves. We at length cease to wonder that true prayer is answered, when we find what true prayer is. A prayer that combines sincerity in desire and life, gratitude, faith, understanding, fearlessness, perseverance, humility, repentance and reformation, must necessarily be answered, because it brings us to the atonement,—renders us at-one with our creator, the Principle of the universe.

All this is set forth much more beautifully than the writer can express it, on page 16 of Science and Health, where we read: "Only as we rise above all material sensuousness and sin, can we reach the heaven-born aspiration and spiritual consciousness, which is indicated in the Lord's Prayer and which instantaneously heals the sick." As I studied this passage one night the question came to me, Did you ever experience any such healing? And the answer sprang to my lips, I certainly did. Recollection came like an inrushing flood,—a scene of some seventeen years ago. I had lain six weeks in bed with one of the worst cases of chills and fever, I was daily growing weaker and more emaciated; the suffering came like clockwork, regularly every other day, and lasted the whole day. One morning a Christian Science practitioner, who had lovingly journeyed many miles for the purpose, entered my room as the chills were well under way. Silently he sat beside me, and within ten minutes chills and fever were gone, never to return.

Do I thank God for the privilege of living in this age? I certainly do; but with the thankfulness there is a great and growing sense of responsibility, for the question reiterates itself, Are you awake to the fact that you are living in an age when men can understand God? that the Bible is now an open book that all may read and understand through its key, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy? Great is this blessing, and it is within the grasp of all; but great also is the responsibility, for, as the Master said, "unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required."

Perception Which Heals

REV. ANDREW J. GRAHAM

INTERPRETED literally and historically a passage of Scripture has no more power to bring peace and health to sick and sinning mortals than has a quotation from Homer's Iliad or Cæsar's Commentaries. All Scripture must be perceived spiritually and in the present tense, and as applicable and available here and now for rebuke, warning, instruction, pardon, peace, health, and harmony.

In the one hundred and fourteenth psalm we read, "When Israel went out of Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange language; Judah was his sanctuary, and Israel his dominion." It is generally admitted that these words record a historic fact; that is, that the descendants of Jacob had been delivered from Egyptian bondage and had started on their journey to the promised land in Palestine. But they hold much more, for the lines have a spiritual, metaphysical meaning compared with which the historical and literal is but as the husk. Mrs. Eddy says on page 547 of Science and Health: "The Scriptures are very sacred. Our aim must be to have them understood spiritually, for only by this understanding can truth be gained. . . . It is this spiritual perception of Scripture, which lifts humanity out of disease and death and inspires faith."

Christian Scientists have inherited a marvelous aid to gaining the spiritual perception of Scripture. Mrs. Eddy has given them in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" a chapter entitled Glossary, in which one hundred and twenty-five words, most of which occur frequently in the Bible and Science and Health, are defined. In speaking of this chapter she says, "It contains the metaphysical interpretation of Bible terms, giving their spiritual sense, which is also their original meaning" (p. 579). In her various works our Leader gives other definitions which the student of Christian Science may remember with profit. For instance, on page 578 of Science and Health "house" is defined as "consciousness." The psalm already quoted has at least four words whose spiritual meaning, as given by Mrs. Eddy, substituted for the material sense, invests the whole passage with life and makes that life ours in our pilgrimage day by day from sense to Soul.

The importance of being familiar with Glossary words in connection with the study of the Lesson-Sermon is indicated by the fact that in The Christian Science Quarterly for the second three months of 1917 the responsive readings and the citations from the Bible and Science and Health contain in round numbers twenty-five hundred Glossary words, while the preceding Quarterly employed about three thousand. This is exclusive of the terms "in" and "you." Very often, when to the student's sense the Lesson-Sermon does not seem to yield up its spiritual treasures readily, a study of the Glossary words found in the lesson will open the fountain of truth by giving that spiritual perception of Scripture which, as Mrs. Eddy has told us in the first passage quoted, "lifts humanity out of disease and death and inspires faith."

Enduring Work

AGNES F. CHALMERS

"Blessed is he," the world's wise Master taught,
"Whoe'er shall not offended be in me."
He who reveres what other hands have wrought,
Is truly born of God. Unfettered, free,
Is one who is offended not! Earth's way
Grows brighter for this pilgrim till Truth's day
Of wakefulness is gained. Yea, richly blest
Is his reward in active work. The best
Of God's good gifts are his who knows no scorn,
Nor casts a stone at good which hath been born
Through others' consecration.

"Blessed is he whoe'er shall not offended be in me."
Such was our Master's teaching. E'en this hour
These words reveal the wondrous peace and power
Of loving one another, here and now;
By following this precept even thou
And I may still be blest. Through Christ's dear name,
Revering each man's daily work the same
As ours, we are offended not; and find
The truth which opens eyes that once were blind,
And causes all the deaf to hear. God's ways
Are higher than our ways. To Him be praise
For all the good another one may give,
Without offense, that each man's work may live.

"Blessed is he" whose trust is never torn
Nor crushed by want, disease, nor death, nor sin;
Who knows that God's idea ne'er was born
And never dies, since man now dwells within Eternal Life. Whose praise ascends to good
For all a brother's hands have wrought to-day.
"Blessed is he,"—whose heart hath understood
All that another one may do or say.
"Blessed is he," the world's wise Master taught,
"Whoe'er shall not offended be in me."
He who reveres what other hands have wrought,
Doth know indeed the truth which makes men free.

["Scientific Versus Plain Speaking"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 19, 1917]

When Jesus received word from Mary and Martha that their brother Lazarus was sick, he abode two days still in the place where he was and then said to his disciples, "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep." And the disciples said, "Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well." "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead."

The disciples should have been familiar with the Old Testament use of the words asleep and awake for death and life. When Elisha sent his servant, Gehazi, to lay his staff on the face of the dead son of the Shunammite woman, the servant did as he was bidden, but returned to say, "The child is not awaked." If the disciples did not understand such language it was no wonder the people generally could not comprehend when Jesus said concerning the daughter of Jairus, "Weep not; she is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead."

It would seem, however, that after the lapse of nineteen centuries the Christian world, at least, with all the study that has been given to the sayings of Jesus, would have been better prepared to receive the scientific statement of Truth. But when, pursuant to years of study and devotion to Scriptural research, Mary Baker Eddy, with the courage of her convictions, challenged the world in her "scientific statement of being," on page 468 of Science and Health, which begins: "There is no life, truth, intelligence, nor substance in matter. All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all," the world generally laughed in derision. Only a few followers zealously took up her words and in daily conversation, and in public meetings as well, talked of the unreality of matter, the claims and beliefs of sickness, and the illusions of sin and death.

Perhaps it is with a zeal more in accord with knowledge that the Christian Scientists to-day use, in public testimonies at least, the plain language, that all may understand. Mrs. Eddy counsels us not to cast pearls before the unprepared thought, and on page 460 of Science and Health says: "If Christian healing is abused by mere smatterers in Science, it becomes a tedious mischief-maker. Instead of scientifically effecting a cure, it starts a petty crossfire over every cripple and invalid, buffeting them with the superficial and cold assertion, 'Nothing ails you.' "

That the habitual use of scientific language in the individual's thinking is a necessity at all times is easily proved. Suppose, per contra, that Jesus had stood before the woman bowed together and crippled for eighteen years, and had said: "Look at this woman. She is all bent and crippled. Anyone can see that she is a helpless wreck and cannot lift herself up. Why! She has been that way for eighteen years." Can anyone think that with such ideas in his mind Jesus could have called her to him and healed her? Or suppose that when he stood before Jairus' daughter, as she lay dead to mortal view, he had said: "Don't you see that this girl is dead? Of course she is dead. I heartily sympathize with your weeping and wailing." Could Jesus then have taken her by the hand and said, "Arise"?

When Jesus entered into a certain city, a man full of leprosy, seeing him, fell upon his face and besought him, saying, "If thou wilt, thou canst make me clean." Suppose, now, that Jesus had said to the leper: "You are full of a contagious disease. Why do you come near? You should stand far off, and, as the Levitical health law requires, cry out,

'Unclean, unclean!' to all passers-by, so as to save them from possible contamination with your loathsomeness." Does such thinking comport at all with Jesus' deed and word as he deliberately put forth his hand and touched the leper, saying, "I will: be thou clean"? Is it not evident that, understanding all that the carnal mind (always at enmity toward God) claims, Jesus knew they must be met by the Word which is Truth and heals? Do not his own statements confirm the Christian Science use of language when he spoke of the woman "whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years" and later defined this devil as a liar?

To a woman who was asking dismissal from a so-called orthodox church in order to seek admission to a Christian Science church, her pastor's final injunction was, "Well, be sure you do not lose your truthfulness and sympathy." But a lack of either of these qualities of Christian character could never rightly belong to Jesus or his disciples, and would never be merited by Christian Scientists if they conformed to the teaching given by Mrs. Eddy's interpretation of the Scriptures. On page 93 of "Retrospection and Introspection" she says: "St. Paul said to the Athenians, 'For in Him we live, and move, and have our being.' This statement is in substance identical with my own: 'There is no life, truth, substance, nor intelligence in matter.' It is quite clear that as yet this grandest verity has not been fully demonstrated, but it is nevertheless true." And on page 95 of the same volume she quotes in exhortation to her followers the lines of another author:—

"Ask God to give thee skill
In comfort's art:
That thou may'st consecrated be
And set apart
Unto a life of sympathy.
For heavy is the weight of ill
In every heart;
And comforters are needed much
Of Christlike touch.
—A. E. HAMILTON."

A Christianly scientific statement of the wholeness of man—spiritual man made in God's image—is neither untruthful, unsympathetic, nor absurd; but is the language in terms of which every Christian must think if he has in him the Mind that was in Christ Jesus, and goes forth preaching, as did the first disciples, "the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

[Samuel Greenwood in The Times, Victoria, British Columbia]

The kindly spirit in which the speaker at Christ Church Cathedral touched upon the subject of Christian Science, as reported in The Times, will be appreciated by Christian Scientists. Since Christian Science differs to some extent from the doctrines of his own church, it is but natural that he should not agree entirely with its teachings, as he understands them, nor advocate their acceptance by his congregation.

It is a matter of regret, however, that in quoting from Mrs. Eddy the speaker was not careful to give the correct text. No such passage appears in Mrs. Eddy's writings as that given in quotation marks in your report of the sermon. The correct quotation regarding the Trinity is as follows (Science and Health, p. 256): "The theory of three persons in one God (that is, a personal Trinity or Tri-unity) suggests polytheism, rather than the one ever-present I AM. 'Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God is one Lord.'" The rest of the quotation given in your report is apparently an attempt to combine certain phrases taken from various portions of Science and Health as if they formed one consecutive paragraph. Even if correctly worded, this method is not just to an author, nor to the subject treated.

The impression given, that Christian Science places Jesus on the same level as the rest of humanity, is not correct. Jesus was the Son of God more than all others, in that he partook most of the divine nature and was able to demonstrate man's oneness with the Father. When human beings reach the same exalted perception and understanding of God, they will have the same right that he did to call themselves the sons of God. St. John declared of himself and all Christians, "Now are we the sons of God," though he was careful to point out that this divine sonship is not yet appreciable, in its fullness, to the human sense. Jesus himself taught that his Father is also our Father, else why the prayer that is repeated in every church in Christendom? Those who accept the Lord's Prayer as expressing the true relationship between God and man must also acknowledge the tie of brotherhood existing between the Master and all who truly love God.

Again, Christian Science does not teach that "sin is illusion" to the sinner, but quite the contrary. It plainly shows that the sinner must suffer for his sins until they are destroyed through repentance and reformation. In a general sense, sin is the acceptance of the supposition that something exists besides God and His creation, and this supposition carried out in practice constitutes the evil that is in the world. If it were otherwise, the sinner would have no hope of escape from sin, for one could not dispose of his sins if they were the actualities of his being. St. Paul evidently had this in mind when he enjoined the Ephesians to put off "the old man," for this advice would be suicidal if the "man of sin" were the real man. Adam and Eve have been universally condemned because they yielded to the serpent's argument and consented to know evil as well as good; but they could not have helped doing this if evil had been present there as a reality to be known. It is surely the privilege of the Christian to know that nothing can be real which does not come from God.

Christian Science teaches that all is Mind, because God is Mind, and is infinite. It is not reasonably conceivable that a material universe could exist independently of Mind; and if Mind created the universe, it must necessarily partake of the nature of Mind, and consequently be mental. Christian Scientists regard matter as a phenomenon of the human mind, not as something existing by itself, else it would be self-existent. If matter could influence Mind without Mind's consent, it would be absolute, a condition that would confirm the argument of the materialist that all is matter. There is no alternative, as Mrs. Eddy clearly points out, but to accept the statement that all is matter, or that all is Mind; and the choice is tremendously important.

Apparently our critic is not familiar with the tenets of the Christian Science church as given on page 497 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, or he would not have made the statement that "Christian Science presents a theory by which the evils of a sin-cursed earth are done away with without a Savior." One of these tenets reads as follows: "We acknowledge Jesus' atonement as the evidence of divine, efficacious Love, unfolding man's unity with God through Christ Jesus the Way-shower; and we acknowledge that man is saved through Christ, through Truth, Life, and Love as demonstrated by the Galilean Prophet in healing the sick and overcoming sin and death."

The claim of the gentleman that Christian Science is a revival of the doctrines of spiritualism and pantheism is not unlike the accusation of the Pharisees that Jesus cast out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of devils, and indicates either a willful desire to misrepresent or gross ignorance of the subject on which he undertakes to enlighten his hearers. That Christian Science is the selfsame truth taught and demonstrated by Jesus of Nazareth over nineteen centuries ago is proved by the fact that it is in large measure accomplishing, in the manner he directed, the works that he did and commanded his followers to do,—destroying sin, healing the sick, comforting those that mourn, bringing to humanity the world over relief from all its suffering, poverty, want, and woe. In answer to the inquiry from John the Baptist, "Art thou he that should come? or look we for another?" Jesus simply said, "Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached." And so to-day Christian Science points to its work in proof of its divine authority.

[W. Stuart Booth in The Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Col.]

A sorry spectacle is presented when a preacher so far forgets the example and precept of Jesus as to assail the one class of Christians who are endeavoring to obey the dual, inseparable, and irrevocable command of the Master to preach the gospel and heal the sick. For such a one to speak of Christian Science as the masterpiece of Satan, as was advertised, only serves to reveal an ignorance of Christian Science, combined with sectarian prejudice, such as to render any man incompetent either to judge or to advise on the subject.

As a matter of fact, both the teaching and the practice of Christian Science are based wholly on the Bible, and the results of its application in the lives of men verify its claims. Christ Jesus did not say that his followers should be known by their doctrine, but by their deeds, "their fruits;" and that Christian Science is being widely accepted shows that mankind prefers Christian demonstration to dead dogmas.

On page 355 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes: "The statement that the teachings of Christian Science in this work are 'absolutely false, and the most egregious fallacies ever offered for acceptance,' is an opinion wholly due to a misapprehension both of the divine Principle and practice of Christian Science and to a consequent inability to demonstrate this Science. Without this understanding, no one is capable of impartial or correct criticism, because demonstration and spiritual understanding are God's immortal keynotes, proved to be such by our Master and evidenced by the sick who are cured and by the sinners who are reformed."

The Christian Science teaching regarding prayer and atonement may not coincide with that of scholastic theology, but it is thoroughly satisfying to those who have accepted and applied it, for thereby prayer has been found efficacious in meeting every human need, and atonement has been proved to be vital in man's present day experience.

[Robert G. Steel in Muskegon (Mich.) Chronicle]

One who admits that he is mixed as to his concept of the nature of God and His attributes, as does the correspondent in a recent issue, is hardly justified in criticizing the religious views of others. Christian Science teaches that God is Spirit, Love; that He is infinite, good, omnipotent, omnipresent, and omniscient; and this teaching is certainly in strict accord with the Scriptures. The Bible informs us that God made all that was made, that He called it very good, and that His creation was finished. In the record given in the first chapter of Genesis no mention is made of the creation of evil, and it is inconceivable that an infinitely good God could either make or cognize evil in any form. There being no other power but God's power, evil in all its phases must be nothing but the illusion of the human mind and must be dealt with on that basis. Mary Baker Eddy, on page 140 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," says: "The Christian Science God is universal, eternal, divine Love, which changeth not and causeth no evil, disease, nor death."

Christian Science makes the same distinction as does the Bible between mortal or human thoughts and God's thoughts; between the beliefs of what Paul in his epistle to the Romans calls the carnal or fleshly mind, and the infinite intelligence of divine Mind. Jesus calls attention to this same difference when in John's gospel he says: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." Mrs. Eddy in Science and Health makes this clear where she says (p. 259), "Mortal thought transmits its own images, and forms its offspring after human illusions;" and (p. 297), "Until belief becomes faith, and faith becomes spiritual understanding, human thought has little relation to the actual or divine."

In proportion as we apprehend God as Spirit, and the spiritual nature of the universe, including man, we are able to realize the nothingness of evil and to cast it out. Christian Scientists all over the civilized world are daily proving their correct understanding of this spiritual nature of God, and man in His image and likeness, by successfully healing the sick, casting out evil, destroying false appetites, and regenerating the sinful. These are the signs which Christ Jesus said would follow all them that believed.

[Robert S. Ross in Rochester (N. Y.) Post Express]

A book reviewed entitled "Health First: The Fine Art of Living," contained several references to Christian Science that call for correction.

Christian Science and mental suggestion have positively nothing in common, asseverations of outsiders to the contrary notwithstanding. The Christian Scientist heals the sick by knowing the unreality of sickness, on the basis that evil has no reality because perfection underlies all that is real. The mental suggestionist, on the other hand, tries to heal by persuading his patients to admit they are well even though both he and they firmly believe in the reality of sickness. Mental suggestion may sometimes appear to heal the sick; but, obviously, the ailment is liable to reappear at any time because of the patient's abiding belief in the power of evil.

"If half the attention given to hygiene were given to the study of Christian Science and to the spiritualization of thought," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 382 of Science and Health, "this alone would usher in the millennium." Some day the medical profession will learn that health cannot be realized by studying disease, any more than good money can be recognized by studying the spurious.

Let critics of Christian Science bear in mind that the one practitioner who ever healed both sickness and sin without failure was Jesus of Nazareth, and that he accomplished this without physical diagnosis or prognosis, and without the use of drugs or surgery. It is evident, therefore, that medicine will never be scientific until it forsakes matter as the basis of practice and adopts Christian Science.

Heralds of the Dawn

The questioning and longing search of mankind is well expressed by Job, "Where is the way where light dwelleth?" Some who give up the longing after light and the search for it are described by Jeremiah as saying, "There is no hope: but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart." Then it happens precisely as Jesus declared, "For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetousness, wickedness, deceit, lasciviousness, an evil eye, blasphemy, pride, foolishness: all these evil things come from within, and defile the man." So because of not seeking the light, because of dwelling in the darkness, the inhabitants of the earth strike out against one another, fearing disaster, indulging enmity, losing their peace, and finding no comfort in life.

One thing only will set men right and bring deliverance from the confusion due to the evil dreams in the darkness, and that is enlightenment translated into activity by those who "walk in the light." In other words, the "way where light dwelleth" is the way of the Wayshower who said, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Some people may sadly say: All this we know; these words we have heard before; but that coming took place centuries ago, and the pleasant memory of that long gone event furnishes us now with our anniversary Christmas feast. But why should not they who thus speak turn from the annual memorial to the constant fact of the coming or presence of the Christ which the Prophet of Nazareth indicated should be wide-spreading enlightenment. Here are his words: "For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall also the Son of man be in his day."

The Christian Science movement shows that the night is waning and the times of ignorance, confusion, superstition, uncertainty, and dreams are ending, because in this movement the presence of the light has been made manifest by processes of redemption. Men are being rescued from the tyranny of the prince of darkness, and from slavery to all the works of darkness; and are learning to walk as free men in the light because the children of God, who is light, are free.

Christian Science, as taught by Mrs. Eddy through her book Science and Health, brings to the mind of the student salvation from sin and discord, just as the clear and quiet daylight brings correction for the terrifying visions of the night. It puts out of operation the imaginations of the evil heart and enables one not merely to hope for good but to have actual faith in good and so to love Principle and its manifestation. It reveals thoughts which will unite men, destroying all the fears that perplex and divide. This expectation is well set forth on page 276 of Science and Health as follows: "When the divine precepts are understood, they unfold the foundation of fellowship, in which one mind is not at war with another, but all have one Spirit, God, one intelligent source, in accordance with the Scriptural command: 'Let this Mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus.' Man and his Maker are correlated in divine Science, and real consciousness is cognizant only of the things of God."

With this year two quiet heralds of the dawn come out into the world. They are commissioned to bear witness concerning the good which has been accomplished by Christian Science and to disclose results of the teaching given by its textbook. Each one conveys its message in a language different from that in which Science and Health appeared, as well as in English; but as Science and Health is also translated into these two languages, the student may thus investigate scientific teaching and practical results together, using the periodical to supplement the textbook.

These Heralds of Christian Science are messengers of hope for the world. Their records of healing and purification enable the reader to recognize how "the night is far spent, the day is at hand," because they tell of that wide work of redemption which shall eventually include "all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues."

Prior to a herald's appearing the crowd may stand inert and uncomprehending, but when once the proclamation has been made every man must choose his side. One thinks of the old hymn

> The Son of Man goes forth to war,
> A golden crown to gain;
> His blood-red banner streams afar—
> Who follows in his train?

Who follows? That is the question to-day, just as of old the call went forth, "Who is on the Lord's side?" Who follows the Christ to-day? Who refuses to listen to the coaxing and seductive lies of Antichrist? Who stands with Principle?

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

Outpouring

IN one of his discourses, as found in the twentieth chapter of Acts, Paul reminds his listeners of these words of Christ Jesus: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Students of the Bible are all familiar with this passage, and it is interesting to note how it relates itself to the promise found in Malachi: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." The dominant thought here is of course the divine outpouring of blessing, but it at once faces us with the fact that humanity must prepare itself to receive the divine blessing, else it comes not. Mrs. Eddy asks on page 2 of Science and Health, "Shall we plead for more at the open fount, which is pouring forth more than we accept?" It is very evident that we must enlarge our capacity for receiving the divine blessing, by emptying out of the human storehouse the material sense of substance and of good.

Recent experiences have shown very clearly that human thought is undergoing a very great change with respect to readiness in supplying quickly and adequately the needs of others, and it is no vain boast to say that the understanding of divine Science goes forth as light into the world to show how this can best be done. Time was when much pleading was needed in order to bring about the willingness to supply the needs even of those who were, according to mortal sense, most grievously afflicted, but at the present hour the wonderful and beautiful thing is the quick response which waits for no argument but follows the example of the good Samaritan, who poured oil and wine into the wounds of the man who was not even his fellow countryman or coreligionist, and did not stop with the loving service of the hour but expressed a willingness to do more on his return journey if the need so required.

In our Master's wonderful discourse on what is usually called the last judgment we find that the severest sentence was not pronounced upon the poor and the ignorant, who in most cases sin because they do not know enough of Truth to lay hold upon the blessedness of true living. Rather did the condemnation fall upon those who were respectable and religious and who presumably were in every way able to minister to the needs of others, yet failed to do so. The picture drawn is of men arraigned before the bar of divine justice, men who pleaded with their judge that they had never neglected an opportunity to show their loyalty to the Christ, but the decision of Truth came in these words: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

Some years ago Christian Scientists were criticized because it was believed that they were not kindly or sympathetic, but this was only a misconception of Mrs. Eddy's teachings and also of their results. It is quite true that in the early days of the Christian Science movement it was necessary to lay its foundations deep and broad in the understanding of spiritual reality, and this also meant that Christian Scientists not only had to demonstrate a better and more spiritual method of healing their own ills than they had formerly known, but that they must also understand how better to minister to the needs of humanity, whatever form the need assumed. No one could very well deny that the old methods of charity giving were most inefficient, and often hurt those who needed to be helped, but as time went on and students of Christian Science began to understand man's infinite capacities and limitless possibilities as the child of God, they were better prepared to lengthen the cords of their tabernacle and strengthen its stakes, to use the Scripture phrasing; in other words, to help others to come into the shelter of the Father's house of many mansions which leaves no poor wanderer outside if only he is ready to come in.

In the prophecy of Isaiah we discover a fine discrimination between the right sense of giving and the wrong, and all the time the prophet is pointing us away from material beliefs to spiritual foundations, and as a result of the advance of humanity toward spiritual understanding truer estimates of all things are reached. Thus he says: "The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful." To this he adds, "But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand." Then he tells of the days of darkness, of woes and destruction such as may be found to-day on the trail of a nation's invaders, but all at once comes light in the darkness, with a distinct promise that the Spirit shall be "poured upon us from on high," and we are left with no uncertain sense as to how this is to be brought about, for we are told that the peace and harmony to be established must come from righteousness.

The student of Christian Science can never forget that all the good which he essays to do springs from his understanding of divine Principle, and however his effort may be expressed it is really a part of the Christ ministry which is to-day healing all the woes of humanity. On page 199 of "Miscellaneous Writings" our revered Leader says: "The marvellous healing-power of goodness is the outflowing life of Christianity," and as we become more and more conscious of this our every thought goes out with blessings to those around us, and at the same time opens wide channels in our own consciousness through which the outpouring of infinite Love comes to make our lives rich indeed toward God.

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

Grandeur of Man's Nature

HUMANITY is first awakened by its glimpse of man's true nature. Prevalent religious belief has so long harped upon the theme of the miserable sinner, that the teaching of man's perfection as the son of God seems presumptuous. The best of people are tempted to recoil before the spiritual fact. Even John's immortal declaration, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," was placed upon the shelf of scholastic theology until Christian Science returned it to its rightful place in the Sunday service. Christian Scientists have learned the necessity and privilege of identifying man with the image and likeness of God. They recognize that no words in any material language can do full credit to the nobility, symmetry, beauty, power, loveliness, and grandeur of man's nature. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 269 of Science and Health: "Human philosophy has made God manlike. Christian Science makes man Godlike."

The Christ nature is the grandeur of man's nature. Restored to its noble consciousness is the grandeur of that nature in which man sees his image as God's likeness. Pending the jurisdiction of mortal mind, mortal man is hedged about by the bristling, prickling points of critical admonitions as pointedly given as the porcupine's needles. Says the one who is trying to work out another's problem, If that other one were not so and so, certain things beneficial would happen; yet, if this very adviser and counselor were placed in the same position, there would no doubt be as big a battle to be fought,—perhaps a greater one, for self-righteousness might be heaped upon the situation. Jesus uttered a warning which reads: "Whosoever shall say, Thou fool, shall be in danger of hell fire." We read elsewhere in Scripture, "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." Evidently the quality which produces this class of persons belongs to the accuser who does not leave the regeneration of his fellow men to God. Therefore the one condemned may disappoint the self-righteous one by proving himself to have a greater nature. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 103 of Miscellany: "Infinite perfection is unfolded as man attains the stature of man in Christ Jesus by means of the Science which Jesus taught and practised. Alluding to this divine method, the Psalmist said: 'Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?' "

More love and more forgiveness and patience are required. As a result of his choosing God the righteous man is lifted into a higher realm whither the sinister motives of his unrepentant fellow man cannot reach, and God places on his brow the diadem of safety, the sovereignty of the sacred, secret place of divine Science. This Science foretells the eternal harmony and joy of everlasting bliss, refutes the argument that man ever fell from his high estate, and proves that the argument about fallen man is simply the false concept about the serpent. By putting the adroit idea of the real serpent back into the garden of Eden, man becomes unfallen and the apple is displaced by the fruit of the Spirit, with an uncursed man and woman forever with God in the eternal Paradise of the spiritual riches of heaven. Of this fulfillment Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 171): "Through discernment of the spiritual opposite of materiality, even the way through Christ, Truth, man will reopen with the key of divine Science the gates of Paradise which human beliefs have closed, and will find himself unfallen, upright, pure, and free, not needing to consult almanacs for the probabilities either of his life or of the weather, not needing to study brainology to learn how much of a man he is."

This glorified manner of God's appearing and approval sounds the great Amen with the diapason of harmony. It rings throughout eternity unchanging, undying, but unfolding the eternal glories. The living God is forever inseparable from His creation. The universe expresses the eternal love of Love where hate cannot canker the beauty and holiness of the Lord's work. The oneness and completeness of the one and only original universe of God has no counterfeit, no opposite to attract the thoughts of the real man. The statement so often heard, "He is too good to live," is corrected by Mrs. Eddy's words about Christ Jesus on page 70 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "He was too good to die; for goodness is immortal." God sometimes uses the lesser to bring about the greater good. The reference to the thief on the cross brought out the great, grand nature of Jesus. How the promise of Paradise resuscitated the mind of the thief when he called to Jesus to be saved!

The unity of the great qualities of Father-Mother God is expressed in the kind of man God created. We read on page 249 of Science and Health, "Let the 'male and female' of God's creating appear." God is good in His omnipotent blessings in bestowing upon the real man's nature the essence of love, kindness, gentleness, and spiritual power.

Current Notes

VIRGINIA.—During the time from January 1 to October 31, 1917, inclusive the distribution committees of Virginia have distributed 17,186 Sentinels, 2633 Journals, 215 Heralds, 69,182 Monitors, 2050 pamphlets, and 1784 papers containing lectures and favorable articles on Christian Science.

GENEVA, ILL.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, opened its new church edifice on Sunday, November 25, 1917, holding two services, at which the history of the progress of the church was read.

As early as 1894 a few people of Geneva, who had felt the healing and uplifting power of Christian Science, began the study of it, and in 1897 they decided to form a church organization and hold Sunday services for the study of the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, not only that they might gain a better understanding of this wonderful healing truth, but that those meetings might be the avenue through which others might find health and peace. So First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Geneva, was established. It soon outgrew its first meeting place, and a hall was leased; then other and larger halls were necessary, until the time came when it seemed right to have a home of its own.

ZANESVILLE, OHIO.—As in the form of worship of the organized body, simplicity is the keynote in the new home of First Church of Christ, Scientist, South Seventh Street. The first service will be held there Sunday morning [Nov. 4], and everything is practically in readiness for it. The service in no way takes on a dedicatory form. The church is located on the site of the old Schultz home, South Seventh Street, which has been used in part to form the structure. The church proper will seat between one hundred and fifty and one hundred and sixty worshipers, facilities being arranged so that this capacity may be increased as desired. The approximate cost of the structure is given at twelve thousand dollars, and of this amount nothing has been raised by appeal to the public, the funds being secured by freewill offerings of the members.

The Christian Scientists began services in this city in 1900, meeting then in the Richards Block. Meeting places have since been held in the old Scott home on North Sixth Street, the Schultz Block, and lastly Memorial Hall Building. The church was organized in 1905 and chartered in 1914.—The Zanesville Signal.

The Lectures

OIL CITY, PA. (Society).—Dr. Francis J. Fluno, lecturer; introduced by Max Kurth, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a religion of Love which teaches its followers all that is good, wholesome, and true. It shows the insufficiency of merely believing, and rationally explains —by demonstration—that ours is the privilege to possess and enjoy a truth over which time can have no influence, and which is in strict accord with the demand to preach the gospel, to heal the sick, and to cast out devils.

TIFFIN, OHIO (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Miss Floy Walker, who said in part:—

From the beginning of mortal history down to the present time men and women have sought means and laws which might be brought to bear upon the problems of human experience in a manner that would eliminate discord and establish harmony. Among these seekers came one whose clear spiritual insight enabled her to discern that God is infinite, omnipresent Truth, and that His inexorable law of good, understood and applied to human thinking, demonstrates in human experience that declaration of Christ Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

This revelation of divine Principle and its availability which came to Mrs. Eddy has been given to the world in Christian Science. Through the understanding of this Science thousands are being freed from the bondage of sin and disease and are proving the truth of St. Paul's statement, "Behold, now is the day of salvation."

MEDICINE HAT, ALBERTA, CANADA (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Peter B. Biggins, who said in part:—

We are all deeply interested just now in the sufficiency of the world's food supply. There is another subject which is of vital interest to us all, and that is the supply of spiritual food. Whichever way we turn we find that the heart of humanity is crying aloud for the living bread. In the midst of the present world-wide struggle for freedom we can observe a great spiritual awakening. Big reforms are being wrought out in politics and in religion, also in social and economic conditions, "but the end is not yet." Our one great need is a higher understanding of the Christ.

As we read in the gospels of the life of Jesus of Nazareth we find that he was continually imparting this bread of Life to those who were ready and willing to receive it. The ever present Christ is still saying to the hungering heart, "I am the living bread which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live for ever." So we have the opportunity here and now, everywhere and always, to partake of this living bread. Our lecturer's message will give us much food for thought, and help to expand our spiritual understanding.

Los Angeles, Cal. (Society, Van Nuys).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by L. P. Mitchell, editor of the Owensmouth Gazette, who said in part:—

Never before in the history of the human race has there been such an awakening along spiritual lines, such a sincere desire to know more of the truth which, in the language of Scripture, makes free. Large numbers of people to-day are earnestly striving to heed Jesus' admonition, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." In order to meet this growing desire for the truth, many sects have sprung into existence, but nothing meets the human need as Christian Science is doing. Its beneficent influence is rapidly spreading over the earth, reforming the sinner, healing the sick—in short, meeting in God's way all the problems of mortal existence.

Roseburg, Ore. (Society).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Frank Lilburn, who said in part:—

All humanity desires happiness; all want peace and freedom. It is for these ends we are engaged in this great world war. We want peace and freedom above all things, but we also crave a spiritual peace and freedom from all discord within our own lives. This is a time for serious consideration and careful thought. We may have freedom in politics, in government, or in science, but not in religion so long as we are content to follow the old traditional paths of man made creeds and doctrines. We want to know what Life is, what God is, and Christian Science is opening the understanding and showing mankind how to apply the rules of Principle as laid down by Jesus in healing the sick, reforming the sinner, and bringing to all the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding."—The News.

New Bedford, Mass. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. David P. Valley, who said in part:—

Christian Scientists are called a happy people, and so they are. Paul, in his epistle to the Philippians, says, "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice." And that is the secret of the happiness of Christian Scientists. They are rejoicing in the Lord, rejoicing in a better and more practical understanding of God and of man's relationship to Him.

Our Master has been called "a man of sorrows," but he who was the highest earthly representative of God, whose knowledge of God was so complete that the sick were healed, the sinners cleansed, and the dead raised instantaneously, left this message for us in St. John's gospel: "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full;" also, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." And again he said, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." It is this overcoming of the world that brings peace.

Jesus also said, "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." Christian Science is this Comforter, and by living in obedience to its teachings we can claim the rich inheritance of joy and peace promised by our Master.

Testimonies of Healing

In deep thankfulness to God and gratitude to Mrs. Eddy I give this testimony to the many benefits received from Christian Science, in the hope that others may be guided to find this great truth. It is now six years since this teaching was brought to me. I had been practically an invalid for many years, suffering from many complaints, the worst of which seemed to be heart trouble. After an attack of malarial fever the doctor said the disease had affected the heart and that he could do no more for me. Then a kind friend suggested that I try Christian Science and lent me some Sentinels, which I read with pleasure and hope, the testimonies convincing me of the truth contained in Christian Science, and that the healing works done by Christ Jesus are still possible to-day.

I procured the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and read it eagerly. During the first reading several ailments disappeared, among them being stomach trouble from which I had suffered much and long, and I became happier, life taking on a brighter outlook. After reading this wonderful book for a week or so I applied to a practitioner in Johannesburg for help, had a fortnight's absent treatment, and began at once to feel an improvement. The doctor, when recommending a change, had said I must not on any account go to Johannesburg as the high veldt would do me harm, but after the fortnight's treatment in Christian Science I visited some friends there, staying a month and gaining in health every day. This fortnight's treatment did more good for me than all the medicines taken for years before. I then took up the regular study of Christian Science, reading little but its literature and the Lesson-Sermon. The heart attacks became fewer and farther between, until they disappeared altogether. I was quite healed and a well woman in three months, being able to help myself, which we learn to do from the study of Science and Health.

Since then I have had many proofs of the healing power of Truth and have often overcome some physical trouble myself by persistently declaring the truth as we are taught to do in Mrs. Eddy's writings. During those six years I have taken no medicine of any sort, but have depended on Truth alone. Three and a half years ago I sprained my ankle badly by falling with a rickety chair while getting books from a high cupboard, and again since then, but both times Truth was the healer; the second time there was not even a bruise. The first time I walked without inconvenience three days afterward; in fact, I was not laid up at all, but was able to continue my household duties as usual by steadfastly declaring the truth.

A few days before Christmas, 1916, I had what I think was a wonderful demonstration of the power of Truth over error. In the morning, when I was combing my hair, I dropped the comb, and, stooping, tried to pick it up, but found I could not, for my hand and arm seemed dead to the shoulder. This numbness crept all over me, so that after the first few minutes I could not speak. As soon as I saw what was wrong I said the "scientific statement of being" (Science and Health, p. 468), and then did my best to realize the power of God to overcome evil. I repeated over and over again as long as I could that God is the only power and presence, and that nothing unlike God has power or is present. Gradually all fear left me, and the numbness passed away until nothing of it was left except in my right hand, the first part affected, and I was able to speak. I was alone at the time, my husband being out of the house, and perhaps it was better so, as I was able to declare the truth more clearly while alone with God.

We found out later that some poisonous insect had stung me on the hand, which later became much swollen and inflamed. As there was still much fear in the family, we sent for treatment in Christian Science as soon as we could, to the same practitioner who had treated me for the heart trouble. I soon felt relief, but the hand was some time in getting right again. I am quite sure if it had not been for even my small understanding of the truth, to which I clung with all my might in that hour of need, I should have been much worse and perhaps rendered helpless for a long time.

I was a church member for many years, but the older I got the less satisfaction I found in creed and dogma, and when healed in Christian Science of heart trouble, besides many other ills, I withdrew from this membership and became a member of The Mother Church in Boston. In this town there is no Christian Science church, and there are only a very few who, like myself, are doing the best they can to become worthy Christian Scientists. We quite depend on the Christian Science literature and Mrs. Eddy's writings, for which we are very grateful. This testimony does not express one half of what I feel, for words are inadequate to do that, but if I can give a portion of the help I have gained from the testimonies of others, then it will not be in vain.

I never from the very first had any doubt of the truth of Christian Science. It appealed to me at once. I have always had great faith in prayer, and in Science and Health we are taught the right way to pray. Since coming into Christian Science I am a changed woman; from a miserable, weak, and ailing invalid I have become a happy, healthy, and active woman. Many faults have been overcome, and though others remain I have hope of overcoming all through the continued study of this truth, in which we learn to know the only true God.—Mrs. C. M. Hambidge, Barberton, Transvaal, South Africa.

The above testimony by my wife is quite true, and I must express my gratitude for the benefits she has received. I also have been assisted many times by my slight knowledge of this practical religion.—Tom R. Hambidge.

During the time that I have been a student of Christian Science, whenever this teaching has been applied with all sincerity and an understanding of God as Supreme Being and of man's relation to Him, it has never failed. I wish to mention one special demonstration, hoping it may be of some benefit to those seeking the truth.

My daughter was taken seriously ill at school one afternoon, and being unable to get home, she crossed the street to the home of a friend, who is a prominent physician. When she did not return at the usual time I called over the telephone to know the reason, and the physician informed me that she was very ill with a serious throat trouble, that he had made a test and she should be treated with antitoxin. I told him to bring her home, that I could take care of her, and was unwilling to have him use the drug. He consented, saying he would make a second test.

I immediately called a Christian Science practitioner, stated the case, and asked for treatment. When the physician called me to the telephone about nine o'clock, after making the second test in the presence of another doctor, he said they found the child suffering so from the throat trouble that he felt it his duty to insist that I let him use the antitoxin. To this I objected, and told him that I could take care of the child and would let him know about her in the morning. I talked to the practitioner again that evening.

In the morning the child was normal, but remembering the health laws I notified the health officer. Very soon the city physician called, and after examining my daughter's throat stated in substance that she was healed and I could let the neighbors in, as there was no longer any danger. She was healed in twenty-four hours, and no one in school, the house to which she went, or my own family was infected.

When I decided to rely on Christian Science I had such a clear vision of God and of His perfect child that all fear left me and I knew my daughter was healed. My experiences have been many and varied, and I am grateful for the peace that has come with each one and for the courage to acknowledge God as the only power.

I have greatly desired to be able to give a complete testimony with unreserved gratitude for the many blessings which I and my dear relatives have received through several years' study of Christian Science, the religion of Truth, Love, and Life. Like so many of my fellow men, I was in possession of a well-preserved Bible, which would be taken out at serious times, and I was satisfied, according to the concept of God which I then entertained, that by attending religious services, by giving thanks and offering prayers,—though this was not of daily occurrence,—as well as by participating in the activities of our church, I was on the whole fulfilling my duties as a Christian. Fortunately I was to be shown my mistake, and this while trying to find a method of cure for a so-called nervous trouble which caused me mental suffering.

As president of a nature cure society, as an active supporter of a drugless system of cure, and a believer in hygienic gymnastics and other material means of help, I believed I was able to improve myself and others. This was not the case, however, and when the enterprise turned out to be a failure from a business point of view, with more difficulties and disappointments following, I went on groping, in search for a perfect means of bringing help to sufferers. In the meanwhile my sister-in-law, who was visiting at our home and seeking relief from heart trouble, had Christian Science brought to her attention and was given copies of the Herold by dear acquaintances, besides receiving treatment from a practitioner.

Upon my return home from the place where I spent my vacation, I found these copies of the Herold, which had been laid aside, and the contents appealed to me so strongly that I communicated immediately with faithful adherents of this wonderful teaching. I attended the Sunday services and the testimony meetings, subscribed to the Herold, and secured a copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. For my part I found and accepted in these teachings what my sister-in-law, excellent person though she surely is, was unwilling to follow up, from purely religious considerations, as she thought. I am happy to be able to say that, thanks to the assistance of a practitioner and an ideal friendship in Christian Science with several families near by, I have been healed in both mind and body, and have indeed learned that "it is the spirit that quickeneth."

My dear wife, and my seventy-eight year old mother, who have most cheerfully joined me in the daily reading of the Lesson-Sermons, have received help from Christian Science in cases which to sense seemed very serious, as well as in a good many other ways. My dear mother was healed in a comparatively short time, through treatment from a Christian Science practitioner, of asthmatic trouble considered serious, as well as of a seemingly stubborn inflammation of the leg, and my dear wife of a sense of fatigue and other ills of long standing.

Last year, when about to start on a tour in the Alps with a heavy knapsack, I inadvertently slipped at the terminal station and fell forward in such a way as to strike my cheek bone on the rail. My companion immediately put material remedies at my disposal, for which I thanked him; but I declined to use them, and instead made my demonstration, proving the nothingness of this error. The practice of Christian Science, to be successful, must arouse us from self-satisfaction and push self into the background, in order that we may be able to be more and more active in behalf of our fellow beings as well as of our so-called enemies. Like Paul I would say, "I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark."

It would take too long to tell of the many benefits which have been experienced in our own case as well as in that of relatives, friends, acquaintances, and supposed antagonists, and it would hardly be possible to find the fitting words to express my profound gratitude for the good will and love which Mrs. Eddy has shown to all mankind, and for her faithful adherence to our Master's commands: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." "Heal the sick." I give many thanks to God, the source of all being, for this all-inclusive work of salvation, founded upon the rock of spiritual truth and love.—J. BACHOFEN-HOTTINGER, Schlossberg, Rüti, Switzerland.

With a heart full of love and gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me and mine, I send this testimony, hoping it will help some weary seeker after Truth. I did not come to it for physical healing, as at that time—eight years ago—my health was all that could be desired, but I was led to study it through my husband's healing of what was called tuberculosis. When all material means had failed, and he had been given up by the physicians, he reluctantly turned to Christian Science as a last resort. After one week's treatment he began to improve, and in about three months was healed. To me this was a wonderful healing. Several years later he was healed of deep sorrow. One Sunday morning as he was about to step to the desk to read the Sunday service in our church, a dear member of the family passed on, and it was at this time that the announcement came to him, when a substitute reader could not be called. He knew that the problem had to be worked out then and there, and through the understanding of the Bible and of Science and Health the demonstration was made.

We had been interested in the study of Christian Science for about two years when I was suddenly attacked with bladder trouble. The suffering was intense, and although I asked my husband to help me, the attacks came oftener and were increasingly severe, until one day when a member of the family said that gallstones might be the trouble. When this was uncovered the healing was instantaneous. Only once did the ailment manifest itself again, and that was several years later, when it was soon overcome. Our little girl was quickly healed of whooping cough and measles, and has never missed a day of school on account of illness, although nearly seventeen years of age. Every problem that comes up is worked out through the understanding and application of the truth.

My husband and I have both had class instruction, and for this wonderful privilege I shall never cease to be grateful. My heart overflows with gratitude that there was found in Mrs. Eddy one pure enough and unselfish enough to bring this healing truth to a waiting world. I hope so to live that my deeds will express my gratitude—words cannot do so.—Mrs. Martha C. Wurz, Los Gatos, Cal.

When the truth about God, man, and the spiritual creation came to my notice, I was a man of the world, so to speak, a habitual user of tobacco, addicted to vulgarity and all evil speaking, unconsciously using profane language without any provocation whatever. I was also on the verge of becoming a confirmed drunkard, having remained in this mental state so many years that these conditions of carnality had become apparently inevitable.

In August, 1906, I began reading Science and Health. At first my mental attitude was that of skepticism, but through mere curiosity I continued to read, and when barely half way through the book the light of this beautiful truth began to dawn upon my clouded consciousness, and the mist of old "mortal night" began to vanish into its native nothingness. By the time I had finished it the former conditions of mortal thought that had bound me in outer darkness had disappeared. The words of the Master, "I am the resurrection, and the life," were clearer and dearer to me than ever before, for, in the language of the apostle Paul, "to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." I had been dead, lo! these many years, although in the body, but the Word which in the beginning was with God, and which was God, had spoken to me through Christ, Truth, and had cleansed me from all these immoral conditions of carnal-mindedness, except the one most subtle tempter calling itself the liquor habit. This was later completely overcome through the understanding of Truth, leaving me free from all former temptations.

To say that I am grateful for Christian Science is but inadequately to express my gratitude. I am thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this truth and for what it has done and is doing for me, and mine, and all.

In 1888, while Mrs. Eddy was in Chicago, one of her students asked me to hear her lecture, saying I would be healed of so-called fatal lung disease from which I was suffering; but I did not go. The result was that I spent twelve years in bondage to this trouble, and the mental and physical conditions caused much suffering.

Then in January, 1900, I fell downstairs, sustaining internal injuries as well as injuring my spine. During the year which followed I was under the constant care of physicians. Operations were advised, but I would not consent to them, for on account of a weak heart and a frail body I felt I would not live through them. Several times a day I fainted from pain and every morning an attendant had to work over me, as my body would become numb during the night. I shook as though I had the palsy and to make matters worse my memory began to fail.

One day a friend, a Christian Science practitioner, came to see me and said there was only one thing which would help me. I replied that I knew it, but I meant suicide and she meant Christian Science. When ready to leave she told me where she could be found in case I wanted her during the next half hour. A few moments after she left I was about to faint, and a young lady who was with me asked me to see this friend. Then it was as though a voice said to me, "You can try Christian Science, and if it does not help, you can try the other; but if you try the other, you cannot try Christian Science." Strength was given me to make my decision. I had lost my voice, so the young lady told the practitioner that I wanted treatment.

The next two weeks were a blank to me. At the end of that time I believed I was dying, but after a few minutes of calm thinking I realized I did not have an ache or a pain. When I called the practitioner and told her this, she replied that she knew I was healed and was waiting for me to realize it. Some weeks passed before it dawned upon me that my lungs were also healed. Much doubt was expressed by some of my friends as to my complete recovery, so I took out an endowment policy in an insurance company. A year later another was taken out, proving that the physicians could not find a trace of the old trouble.

During the many years of illness I had sought for a religion which would comfort and sustain me, and I had attended churches of all denominations, only to be convinced that they were not teaching the truth as Jesus taught it. When I accepted Christian Science for healing I also found the religion for which I was looking.

I have had many other experiences of healing during the past sixteen years. Christian Science has comforted me in sorrow, shielded me from danger, protected me in accidents, supplied me in the hour of need. Is it any wonder that I am thankful to God for giving us our revered Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, and grateful for her untiring and noble labor in making plain the path of Christ Jesus the Wayshower? Also for her wisdom in establishing the many avenues whereby we can gain more knowledge of this wonderful truth?

Miss Ida Foedish, Chicago, Ill.

It is more than eight years since Christian Science awakened me to the truth about God and man, and so effected a wonderful work in my life, healing me of nervous prostration, or as physicians pronounced it, neurasthenia. Old theology had preached the goodness of God, but Christian Science demonstrably revealed that goodness and gave me the inevitable correlative, that God's image, man, reflects that goodness. This revelation of man led me out of old fears and destructive beliefs into newness of life in Christ Jesus.

Several months after the physical healing a further awakening came with the realization that after years of weary struggle to find satisfaction in my religious experience, Christian Science had supplied me with such an abundance of wholesome spiritual food that I was feasting on it in perfect content every moment. A deep and lasting gratitude followed closely upon this joyful discovery, the fruitage of which was further healing for myself and others. The truth of our Leader's statement, "Since God is All, there is no room for His unlikeness" (Science and Health, p. 339), has been a beacon light, enabling me to hold more firmly to the absolute Science of being. The spirit of gratitude for what Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has done for mankind is quickening my daily life in thought and action, and this in turn leads to a more intelligent appreciation of God and His Christ.

Miss Edith A. Watts, Chicago, Ill.

For about twenty years it seemed necessary for me to wear a support for a weakness resulting from internal injuries. Nine years ago I underwent several operations, but when the time came for me to leave the hospital—after five weeks in bed—the surgeon told me I would still have to wear the girdle.

Soon after becoming interested in Christian Science I felt that I ought to be able to discard the material support, and did so, for I felt that God is our only support, and knew that "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need" (Science and Health, p. 494). I was often beset with fears that perhaps my old sufferings would return, and twice I put the support on again for a few hours. I kept it in my dresser drawer, fearing I might need it. About a year ago I suffered a great deal of pain, and constantly the thought came to me that it might be the result of discarding the girdle. I did not put it on, however, but worked for myself, as we learn to do in Christian Science, trying, as Mrs. Eddy tells us, to "cling steadfastly to God and His idea" (Science and Health, p. 495), and the pain soon left me. That evening I opened my Bible, looking for some thought to help me to help another, and my eyes fell upon a passage that described my experience so completely, and the message was so evidently for me, that I took the support from its hiding place and destroyed it.

During the past year I have felt no need to return to a material support. I have done more work in the house and have been in better health than for a long time. I spent four weeks at the shore, bathing almost every day in the surf, when heretofore I never went into the ocean without this girdle. We are more and more interested in Science and its teachings every day.

For this and many minor healings through Christian Science, and for the wonderful light the study of our textbook has thrown upon the Bible, I am truly grateful.

Mrs. Susie Peddock Schell, Maplewood, N. J.

In March, 1913, I was healed through Christian Science after having been a great sufferer from headaches since I was twelve years old. I had tried doctors, electric treatments, and everything I had heard of, but nothing did me any good. The attacks occurred every week, and sometimes twice a week, and I was unable to attend to my work, as I would have to lie down or go to bed and stay there from one to three days, until I was better.

A sister-in-law kept urging me to try Christian Science, saying she knew it would cure me, and finally I did so. I went to a practitioner and asked for help, and have not had a headache since. I certainly cannot express in words my thankfulness for the help received from Christian Science. It has been my only physician ever since my healing.

Mrs. Cora Darling, Prosper, Minn.

I wish to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me and mine. I became interested in this teaching through my daughter's instantaneous healing of ptomaine poisoning, acute stomach trouble, and extreme nervousness. The physicians had done all they knew how to do, and as a last resort blistered her back to remove the poison, but this also failed. My wife and I feared the worst, but at this extreme moment Christian Science was presented to us. Our daughter did not want anything to do with it, having been prejudiced by the wrong statements of others, but after several days of extreme suffering she asked to try it, and was healed. She also laid off glasses which had been worn for ten years. That was several years ago.

As for myself, I was healed of influenza in twelve hours, whereas before, I would suffer once or twice each winter from two to eight weeks with it. Stomach trouble and nervousness have also been overcome. The tobacco and drink habits of long standing went in two treatments. While chopping kindling a piece of wood struck me in the eye, cutting the pupil. The bleeding and severe pain caused a great deal of fear, but my wife telephoned to a practitioner for help and the pain left immediately. By the next morning there was no trace of the accident. Glasses have been laid aside after wearing them for seven years.

I am truly grateful for these physical healings, but they are not to be compared with the moral healing and spiritual uplift which comes with a right concept of God, and of man in His image and likeness. I have read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy twelve times from cover to cover, each day awakening to some truth taught therein. In Proverbs we read, "With all thy getting get understanding," and it surely is worth striving for, because of the health, peace, and happiness it brings. Last year my wife and I had the privilege of class instruction, which has enabled us to do most of our own Science work and to help others.

I am thankful to God, who revealed this truth to one who was humble and pure enough to receive it, and willing to practice and give it to the suffering world. I am also grateful to all who have helped me to see this truth.

Otto C. Knieling, Dayton, Ohio.

It is now seven years since I took up the study of Christian Science, and it would be impossible to express my gratitude in words for the many blessings that have come to me. I was healed of quinsy, from which I suffered for over eighteen years, also of severe headaches and liver trouble which were supposed to be hereditary, and of many other ills. Fear has likewise been overcome, but the spiritual regeneration means more than all else. By gaining the right concept of God I have learned to realize that my legitimate birthright is health, happiness, and peace, and to the extent that I live according to God's law I am kept well and happy.

I wish to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, as well as to all those who have so lovingly helped me to understand this healing truth which makes men free.—Mrs. Elizabeth Knieling.

"To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings" is the opening sentence of the Preface to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. It is out of gratitude, and in the hope of helping somebody, that I testify to my experience of the truth of the above assertion.

In the year 1906 Christian Science was first brought into our home. About two months later I suffered from an attack of ulceration of the stomach. I had been subject to these attacks for over ten years and had been told never to be without certain drugs, but within three days, without the use of material remedies, simply through reading the Christian Science textbook and trying to apply what I read, the trouble was completely overcome, and I had been able to carry on my ordinary occupation during the whole time it lasted. With the attack previous to this I was laid up for three weeks in spite of every kindness and medical attention. Through the help of a practitioner I was healed of a broken collar bone within ten days of the accident, and of a broken nose almost instantaneously. Colds, rheumatism, and influenza have also been overcome.

For these and for many other demonstrations of the power of divine Truth to heal, which I and my family have experienced, and for the whole change in my outlook on life, my thoughts go out in loving gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, through whose courage and love the teaching of Christian Science was given to humanity for the salvation of the world.

From Our Exchanges

[Rev. Robert W. Shaw in The Biblical World]

All the talks of church union have been along the lines of doctrine or of economic necessity. We have been tied to our creeds and presuppositions so closely that we have hardly dared think that union of the churches could really come about. It is quite possible, it seems to me, that what needs to be done, and what men have refused to do, God is going to do through this war. Unless the narrowness of sectarianism goes, another fellowship of some sort, broad enough for all whose lives are patterned after Christ's pattern but who may not be exact or dogmatic in their statements, will come. How I do not know, but it will come. We do not for a moment think that the church is going to pass away, but she will have to cast aside the graveclothes of conservatism and ecclesiasticism and return once more to the important facts of life and the vital facts of the gospel of Jesus, or God will raise up another people to carry out His will.

[Robert F. Horton, M.A., D.D., in The Christian Work]

When I put the question, "Why does not God stop the war?" I have to answer it thus: For the very same reason that He lets me take my course, so wayward and faulty, and does not visit upon me my sins, which have injured me and injured others and outraged Him. The same God that spares me spares Europe when it runs mad; spares and waits when one nation specially enters upon a course of insanity. He does not stop it abruptly; He does not intervene; the plan has to work itself out; the judgment is sure but it lingers; the war is made by men, and men must bear the results of that war they have made, and, unhappily, the innocent people who do their best at all times to prevent war must in this sad world suffer with the guilty who produce it. No one escapes the great crime of humanity; we all come under the terrific burden of the guilt of the race and the sins of our fellow men.

[The Methodist Recorder]

Faith is not the closing of our eyes to circumstances which seem to forbid the answer to our prayer. Faith sees the difficulties, but does not linger upon them because its vision sweeps a wider horizon; doubt sees the difficulties and, lingering upon them, does not see beyond them, and so limits prayer. Faith fixes its gaze upon God, and in its sweep sees whatever lies between, sees as Abraham saw his difficulties, but does not allow them to blot out the vision of God.

French Translation of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy

In conformity to the rules established by Mary Baker Eddy for making and publishing translations of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" has been translated into the French language, and is now published with the English text opposite the French translation, and is ready for delivery.

This edition is printed on fine paper and bound in cloth similar to the cover used on the English editions. Price, one to five copies, $3.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $3.25 each. It is also printed on Oxford India Bible paper, and bound in the same style as the regular pocket edition of Science and Health. Price, one to five copies, $5.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $5.25 each. The quantity price will be made on six or more books of the French translation, including the two styles of bindings.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This small volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, and which will occupy the minimum space and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

Orders for this edition are now being filled in rotation.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

New Pamphlets

The following pamphlets are now on sale at five cents a copy:

"Christian Science: Its Teachings, Methods, and Works," a lecture by Judge Septimus J. Hanna. Printed in Swedish with alternate pages in English.

"Christian Science: The Christianity of Jesus," a lecture by Mrs. Sue Harper Mims. Printed in Swedish with alternate pages in English.

"Christian Science Healing Not Medical Practice." By Judge Clifford P. Smith. Printed in English only.

Vest Pocket Pamphlet

The article "Possession," by Adam H. Dickey, has been reprinted in a pamphlet, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at four cents a copy.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Currency should be sent by registered letter only.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

"The Life of Mary Baker Eddy"

One of the most difficult of all literary adventures is to write, or obtain to read, an adequate biography.

At the best, biographies are but the expressions of another's concept of a life, and the more metaphysical that life the harder it is for a writer to conceive, the more difficult to express in language the actual truth regarding one whose greatness is in goodness.

In "Retrospection and Introspection" Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, gives a few points touching her earthly experience, but very little of her human history.

To meet this need, Sibyl Wilbur, in 1907, wrote "The Life of Mary Baker Eddy," noting in the introduction that "all statements of facts made in this narrative are founded on reliable evidence, town registers, church books, and court records."

This work, brought up to 1911, and now published by The Christian Science Publishing Society, is available for perusal or purchase at all Christian Science reading rooms.

It clearly, sympathetically, and correctly sets forth the essential and interesting events in Mrs. Eddy's life history.

Every one who reads this book with an open thought increases his understanding of Christian Science, by gaining a right view of the Discoverer and Founder, for, as Mrs. Eddy says of Paul (page 560 of Science and Health), to misunderstand him "was to be ignorant of the divine idea he taught."

"What I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XX JANUARY 19, 1918 NUMBER 21

Prayer

ROBERT RAMSEY, M.B.

IN the present age the tendency of the ordinary man to make an honest and unprejudiced investigation of human beliefs, is one of the signs that the time is ripe for a more democratic sense of religion. Time was when only a few initiated ones dared to think upon religious questions; now the complaint is that these questions cannot be answered by anyone. In Christian Science, however, the seeker finds nothing and nobody to stand between God and himself. It is a case of every man being able to understand for himself, although at first this freedom from personal guidance may be accompanied by a feeling of loss,—the fledgling is sometimes afraid to fly, though perfectly able to do so. The altered concept of God brought by Christian Science necessitates an altered concept of God's creation; for a new concept is unfolded for every false sense taken away. Until the new concept of things is grasped, however, young Scientists, like the disciples, are apt still to cling to personality sufficiently to ask, "Teach us to pray."

It is probable that formerly prayer was merely a request for finite good, or a fearful petition that what was possessed might not be taken away, offered perhaps with a willful blindness to the fact that some equally good petitioner might be making an opposite request. The first real concept of prayer dawns when one perceives that it is not the request, but the desire or motive at the back of it, which is the prayer. This point is made quite clear on the very first page of Science and Health, where Mrs. Eddy says, "Desire is prayer." The sentiment that desire is prayer has been voiced for years,—one well-known hymn saying, "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire,"—but Christian Science is very insistent that words alone do not necessarily convey an understanding of the proposition involved. The same hymn contains a further scientific truth about prayer where it says, "Prayer is the Christian's vital breath;" yet this has been passed over as poetic fantasy, nothing more. If, however, prayer is true desire, then prayer is man's vital breath, for without desire mankind would die, desire being the motive power of human life.

The apostle says we should pray always, and this, like every scientific truth, is a law of guidance out of ignorance, just as the attainment of scientific truth is the cure for ignorance, and is the only legitimate desire. The quality of the human life, therefore, or state of progress out of ignorance, depends upon the quality of the desire. Looked at from the human point of view this statement may be questioned. The thought may arise: "I desire health and I do not have it, wealth and I do not get it; therefore my life does not correspond with my desires."

This reasoning is as sensible as that of a child who might say, "I desire to do my sums correctly, but I do not get them right; therefore I do not agree with mathematics." In a sense the child does not agree with mathematics, and in the same sense the man who is sick does not agree with health; but neither event proves failure in the science of mathematics or the Science of being. Desire for an answer will not make a sum come right; but let the child desire knowledge and do all in his power to advance in accord with that desire, then he can be assured that the day will come when he will easily do the sum correctly. Similarly, let a man desire the knowledge of man's true being as God's idea, and let him do all in his power to advance with that desire, then to him will be added health, wealth, and even life for evermore.

It is therefore provable that it is the quality of the desire or prayer which is the important thing. If eternal in its nature, such as the desire to know God, eternal life must be the result; if mortal in its nature, such as the desire for finite good and fear of finite evil, death must be the result. The scientific relation of prayer to eternal Life was confirmed by Jesus when he said: "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." To know Jesus Christ is to recognize the effect of the understanding of God as omnipotent, infinite good in its application to the human problem. This recognition makes it impossible to acknowledge or desire any other power, for desire follows the belief in power. As an example, suppose a man comes to Christian Science wishing to overcome a tendency to outbursts of anger. What needs to be removed is the belief that anger has power; for the tendency to be angry follows this man's acceptance of the belief that anger can control him, or that he, by being angry, can control or affect some one else. A belief in the power of anger is associated with the general belief in human power, which in itself is merely the failure to recognize God as omnipotent.

Conversely, the scientific recognition of the all-power of God brings to the human consciousness the recognition of the impotence of so-called human power. In the case of the man taken as our example, the conscious recognition that anger can produce no result because God is the only power, would heal him of his outbursts of anger. It does not matter, so far as the immediate healing is concerned, whether this recognition, or prayer, is the result of his own work or the outcome of the work of a practitioner, for the belief in the power of anger is a false belief, never part of any man's real consciousness. The work cannot, however, be done entirely by the practitioner. In Matthew's gospel we are told that when Jesus was in his own country "he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." The man desiring to overcome his anger may not be willing to lay down his claim to human power, and when faced with this proposition may, like the young man whose case is also recorded by Matthew, go away sorrowful. If, however, the patient accepts the all-power of God, and does his best to gain a practical knowledge of it, he will make his proof by gaining healing. Thus healing is the proof that the statement of God's all-power has come into human life as a practical thing, and shows that prayer and its answer are correlated in divine Science.

Scientific desire must therefore be based on the recognition of the all-power of God as expressed by Jesus when he said, "Not my will, but thine, be done." This incident in Jesus' career has been taken by many to mean that Jesus was willing to submit to death as a divine decree. Read scientifically, however, it is clear that even if Jesus' human will, or sense testimony, pointed to death as inevitable, his understanding of God pointed to eternal life; hence Jesus' prayer was not a prayer of resignation to death, but a prayer of declaration of the all-power of God.

Every desire other than the desire to know and do God's will may be classed as a belief in human will power, the "my will" which Jesus so effectively disowned. This appeal to will power is the prayer of the ungodly. It is the desire for personal good, a "wicked and adulterous generation" seeking after a sign. Now although Jesus condemned the seeking after a sign, he promised that those seeking the divine will would have the sign added. It is not wrong, therefore, to receive that which to finite sense is good, but it is wrong to attempt to force the manifestation through the human will, which is the result when a mortal tries to gain good in any other way than through divine power.

On page 206 of Science and Health we read, "The power of the human will should be exercised only in subordination to Truth." This at first looks as if the human will were finding support, but a little thought makes the matter quite clear; for there is in reality no human will. That which is called will power is merely a false sense of power apart from God, and is condemned. Suppose, for instance, a man believes that he is suffering from a real illness and then tries by his human will to make himself believe that he is well, hoping that by doing this he may become better; he is then believing in the power of the human will. On the other hand, if a man feels ill and even appears to be ill, but, knowing scientifically that God's creation is perfect, contends for the truth of health with all his might and main, then, just to the extent that he scientifically understands the truth for which he is contending, he is subordinating human will to Truth. He is doing all he can to advance his desire to know God, the source of health, and is fulfilling the second condition of prayer, as defined by Jesus: "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

Heaven's Artillery

ANNIE JONES ATKIN

A VERY impressive event took place in our city recently when our field artillery passed through on their way to a training camp. About half an hour before the arrival of the trains all the church bells rang and all the whistles blew. I was at the station to meet my son, and five minutes before the first troop train arrived the school children had appeared marching. Five hundred American flags were waving and a thousand people were singing when the train pulled in. The windows were filled with smiling faces, appreciative of the demonstration.

Greetings were being exchanged on all sides, when down the platform appeared a tall, graceful elderly lady carrying a bundle of green and blue, her face radiant with smiles. At every window she passed, eager hands were extended to grasp some portion of this bundle. Nearer she came, and to our delight it was seen to be copies of The Christian Science Journal and the Christian Science Sentinel that she was distributing.

My thoughts at once flew to three large boxes of literature I had hoarded up for about ten years; the other Scientists also saw and grasped the opportunity, and in a short time the entire collection was at the station, where a distribution was made to every troop train which passed through that morning. The dear sister who had taken the initiative said, "Every boy wanted a paper but one; he seemed unhappy. I gave him a flower and a smile, then he seemed happier."

There were over five hundred copies of the Journal, Sentinel, and Monitor distributed that morning. I have often wondered why I kept these publications so long, but they were at last put to good use. As the trains pulled out it seemed to me that they had just stopped to be loaded with heaven's artillery.

Obedience and Healing

W. STUART BOOTH

THE spiritual illumination shed by Christian Science upon the life of our Master shows us that in no thought, word, or act was he superficial. In each account of healing wrought by him, in addition to the proof and encouragement afforded thereby may be found inspiring lessons, discernible to all who, breaking away from the trammels of old theological and materialistic training, will look deeper through the clear lens of spiritual understanding.

The story of the healing of the ten lepers, of whom but one returned to give thanks, has always served to bestir appreciation and gratitude, but to the careful student yet other rich and helpful lessons are revealed. In nearly every case of healing wrought by Jesus it is to be noted that he bade the patient do something, and the healing which followed ready obedience to the command of wisdom must have been dependent thereupon. To the ten lepers he simply said, "Go shew yourselves unto the priests," and they obeyed without question, although the suggestion might easily have come to them to wait until they were healed before going to the priests; but no, we read that they obeyed the spiritual demand, and "as they went, they were cleansed."

It can be seen that these men might have delayed the realization of their healing by listening to the suggestions of doubt and fear, based on material sense testimony, which would have urged them to wait beside the road until the healing was made manifest before they went to the priests. Waiting beside the road had not brought them healing, and will never bring healing to anyone. We are told that when the children of Israel were facing the Red Sea the Lord said unto Moses, "Wherefore criest thou unto me? speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." As the children of Israel were obedient to the divine voice speaking through Moses and bidding them go forward, they thus obtained their deliverance. Similarly, these ten were obedient to Christ Jesus, and "as they went, they were cleansed."

The Master believed in rendering unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and thus he was obeying the rabbinical law of purification in sending these men to the Levitical priests. Similarly, Christian Scientists are under explicit instruction from our Leader to follow Jesus' example by obeying the laws relating to quarantine and in reporting to the proper authorities the diseases designated by them as contagious.

As we look still more deeply into these verses of Scripture we find that a casual reading will not serve to open for us the richer treasures of Truth deposited therein. Perhaps the greatest spiritual treasure to be gained and the most inspiring lesson to be learned from this account of healing is unlocked to us by the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." On page 141 Mrs. Eddy says, "In healing the sick and sinning, Jesus elaborated the fact that the healing effect followed the understanding of the divine Principle and of the Christ-spirit which governed the corporeal Jesus." She adds, regarding Principle, "Its only priest is the spiritualized man."

This scientific idea of priesthood shows us that Jesus' command to the lepers, in its highest and spiritual sense, was not merely to direct them to a person clad in clerical robes, but rather to turn them to the perception of their own true, spiritual selfhood, and so discover themselves to be as man has ever been, whole, pure, and free. It was this perception of man which enabled the Master to unsee, and thus heal, the leprous condition, even as Mrs. Eddy so clearly writes on page 476 of Science and Health: "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick." We further read in Scripture how of the ten cleansed but one "turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God," doing this even before he showed himself to the priest. This one responded more quickly to Jesus' perception of Spirit and spiritual man, and it was this which the Master recognized in pronouncing him already whole.

Many people of to-day are enslaved by such leprous conditions of thought as fear, selfishness, envy, passion, hatred, or other blighting beliefs, which perhaps have been externalized on the body as disease. Their hope of deliverance, which may have become indeed forlorn, is rekindled when it is learned that the healing and saving Christ, perceived by Abraham, Moses, and the prophets, and so perfectly manifested by Christ Jesus, is again finding expression through Christian Science. Turning away from mortal man to God, from matter to Spirit, they are bidden, as were the ten lepers, to arise from their false consciousness and show themselves to the spiritual idea of man, or, as Mrs. Eddy puts it (Science and Health, p. 476), "earnestly seek the spiritual status of man, which is outside of all material selfhood."

Obeying this divine behest, men are finding to-day as of yore that as they go on their way of right, spiritual thinking they are healed. Well it is for those who early learn that their need and desire is not physical ease, but spiritual understanding; and such will not be found among the nine, but among those who turn back to throw themselves at the feet of Christ in true humility and gratitude, and glorify God.

Giving Wisely

J. LOUISE CARTER

THE true Christian Scientist, recognizing the unreality of evil and the actuality of good, feels an ever increasing sense of gratitude to our much loved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the mental peace which he is experiencing to-day in spite of the turmoil of suppositions with which he is surrounded. It would seem that he need make but little change in his customary manner of living, while yet conforming to that new order of things which is expected from all who would be of use to their fellow men. Consistent obedience to "God's Requirement," as quoted from the Manual (Section 5 of Article XXIV) by The Christian Science Board of Directors in their special article entitled "Food Conservation," in the Sentinel of October 20, has already brought about that simplicity in daily life which, while it brooks neither extravagance nor waste, at the same time loves to share with all mankind.

Since the dawn of the understanding of Jesus' words, "Freely ye have received, freely give," the Christian Scientist has practiced the fine art of giving wisely, until it has become second nature to desire to aid in any good work. The old habit of giving grudgingly or perfunctorily has disappeared, and deep down in his consciousness he knows, through demonstration, that it is far more blessed to give, in the spirit of brotherly love, than it is to receive. The time and thought spent in the study and practice of this truth has been a preparation for healing the sick and suffering; and could there be any better "first aid" than an instant application of the understanding of Life, Truth, and Love, with its ever operative and unsurpassed power to quiet fear, thus initiating that healing of both mind and body so essential to man's well-being, whether in his home or at the front? The constant postponement of the consummation of some cherished plan, that during the interim a brother may in some way be relieved, is a training toward that attitude of thought which is ever ready to take up the duty nearest at hand, or that one which seems at the moment of first importance.

Long ago our Leader uncovered to a doubting and oft-times antagonized world the activity of the submerged forces of the human mind, known as mesmerism, hypnotism, or malicious animal magnetism, which the Scriptures designate as those things which "the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark." She unfolded as their remedy the lofty ideals and purposes of a Christianity which is not overcome of evil, which by scientific demonstration overcomes evil with good, the all-might of God; and she added for our comfort (Science and Health, p. 375), "All unscientific mental practice is erroneous and powerless, and should be understood and so rendered fruitless."

To-day we may take courage, and when we are called upon to economize by avoiding waste, to deprive ourselves of some of the luxuries of present day living, to give generously of ourselves, our time, thought, and money, or to comfort the sorrowing and minister to the wounded, we find that Truth's motto, Semper paratus (see Science and Health, p. 458), is our motto, and that Christian Science has already prepared us to fulfill the request of our country, the demand of humanity, that we shall show forth in ourselves, and expect from others, some slight approach toward the selflessness of ideal citizenship.

And is not this country deserving of all that we can give and do for it? Not merely because it is our country, but because it is here, in this land of the truest freedom, where woman has been liberated from many of the old binding and cramping customs, that the truth which makes free from evil, disease, and death was first discovered, and the vineyard thereof planted and watered by her whose work still blesses, and will eventually and eternally bless all nations and peoples.

Serving in Business

A. WARENDORFF

ONCE, when Mary and Joseph sought the boy Jesus and found him in the temple, he said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" This simple question has a profound lesson for the man or woman in the business world; it can indeed be made so practical in the individual's career that continuous activity will become a pleasure instead of a hardship. Such has been the writer's experience. At one time, before he knew of Christian Science, business seemed a monotonous drudgery, and each day the thought would come, What is the use of it all? Suppose we make a little more or a little less, what good is it? Since studying

Digitized by Google

Christian Science, however, an entirely different viewpoint has been reached. In fact, the change is so radical that one not having some understanding of Christian metaphysics would scarcely believe it possible.

Very recently a gentleman who sought help in Christian Science said that he thought it sacrilegious to ask God to help him in his business. It was explained to him that Christian Science teaches that to be in business means to have the opportunity to reflect God, divine Mind, in all the minutiæ of daily affairs. He was shown this statement by our revered Leader on page 40 of Science and Health: "It is sad that the phrase divine service has come so generally to mean public worship instead of daily deeds."

A study of the human experience of Jesus will show that his life was spent in serving his fellow man. Can anyone imagine that this pure man, while working as a carpenter, stooped to practice greed or dishonesty? Can we not see him protecting his fellow beings in every dealing? And did not Mrs. Eddy dedicate her life to serving her fellow man? Her thought is beautifully expressed in the last stanza of her poem "Christ My Refuge" (Poems, p. 12):—

> My prayer, some daily good to do
> To Thine, for Thee;
> An offering pure of Love, whereto
> God leadeth me.

This is the only satisfactory thought about business: to do good to all. During an especially busy season recently an immense amount of joy was experienced by holding steadfastly to the thought of service rather than remuneration. The proprietor said to his helpers: "Let us be more watchful about getting our goods into first-class shape and ready to sell, so that those who get them will have much pleasure from them. Let us not bother so much about the selling end; that will adjust itself." This advice was heeded, and the result was a perfect demonstration of the equality of supply and demand.

One often hears the statement, "Competition is the life of trade." Christian Science would revise this statement and make it, Cooperation is the life of trade. When the world awakes to the metaphysical meaning of these words from the forty-first chapter of Isaiah, "They helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage," business will no longer seem a drudgery, but a pleasure. There are seasons in every line of business when there seems to be an unusually heavy demand on the strength of the business man. On these occasions he will experience much help if he will turn to page 119 of Science and Health and study the passage: "As astronomy reverses the human perception of the movement of the solar system, so Christian Science reverses the seeming relation of Soul and body and makes body tributary to Mind. Thus it is with man, who is but the humble servant of the restful Mind, though it seems otherwise to finite sense."

Suppose a customer tells a confectioner, "I have a little friend going to camp to-day and would like to send him some of your wares to make him happy." According to Christian Science this kindly thought is, like all good, from God, and is finding a human expression through words. The Christian Science viewpoint gained and applied makes business a real pleasure; if it is not, there is something that needs correction. The more active a Scientist is, the happier he is. If some one tells him he has a headache, or that he is suffering from overwork, it is his business to know that divine Mind governs man and that matter has no sensation, because God is All. This is being about our Father's business.

One does not need to have a practitioner's office in order to think metaphysically. The thanks of one who has been helped in truth will bring more joy than the biggest sale. When we truly learn in Christian Science how to love our fellow man, then will we be constantly alert to protect him, and that is the only business worth while. We shall be following the command of our Master, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Principle the True Guide

ESTELLE T. M. CRANE

AN article which appeared in the Sentinel some time ago, on the overcoming of fear in operating an automobile, appealed especially to two students of Christian Science. It awakened them to a higher recognition of man's freedom and dominion in the truth, and when the time came for them to have a machine of their own they were able to take a couple of lessons in driving it and to start on a long trip homeward without any sense of fear. Desiring to be guided by Principle in this new experience, and realizing that in order to do so they must be steadfastly conscious that Mind, infinite intelligence, created man in His own image and likeness, and that man reflects and is directed by this one intelligence, they knew that their every thought must be one of good. It was seen that any discordant happening could only result from error of thought, from neglecting to watch that their thoughts should express the ever active intelligence of divine Principle, Love.

The one difficulty encountered on that trip, like each one experienced since then, in the thousands of miles covered in traveling through fifteen different states, was the result of following human will instead of divine Mind. Though almost nothing was known of mechanics, this first problem was solved when the sense of impatience accompanying it was replaced by a sudden realization of Love's tenderness, as, after the opening words of our Leader's hymn, "Shepherd, show me how to go," the words of the twenty-third psalm flashed into the thought of one of these students, and the intelligence required was immediately manifested through the right action of the other one.

On a later trip, during a flood season in the South, this same failure to listen to divine guidance brought a severe lesson, for the car, including business satchels and money, as well as personal luggage, had to be abandoned in the middle of a rising river. After the first thoughts of fear and reproach had been quieted and the sense of Love's omnipotence was again bringing a comforting message, the work which meant the overcoming of all the obstacles connected with this apparently serious problem was begun. Through knowing, as taught in Christian Science, that God's ideas cannot lose anything which rightfully belongs to them, for they are held safely in His eternal possession as the manifestation of Mind, and since the car and its contents had a place in this manifestation, being seemingly necessary to the convenience of these travelers, the fear of loss was overcome and a feeling of peace took its place.

After climbing a muddy hill in the rain, these students found that two men engaged in working on a house near the road, the only house within several miles, had heard the machine go by and were on their way to warn the passengers. Through the students' realization that Love's children reflect only love, that each one is in reality a channel for love and is glad to help his brother, these men became the friends to help their fellow men in their need. For several hours much mental work had to be done to realize that "God is our refuge and strength," and that man reflects the strength of God, of Life; that his health is in Mind and cannot be disturbed by seeming material conditions.

Finally the car was out of the water, and with more faith in good than in evil these students were able to start the engine, despite all material laws in regard to it, and to take the eighteen mile ride to the nearest town with a deep feeling of gratitude and humility. One held the wheel, the other did the mental work, and it was a safe and triumphant trip, a surprise to all except these two, who learned from it a higher lesson in their journey in truth. Before retiring that night one of them opened the Bible and Science and Health and received this message from page 319 of the textbook, "Having faith in the divine Principle of health and spiritually understanding God, sustains man under all circumstances," and reading it aloud, went to rest in perfect security. The morning brought only exaltation, for both felt an even higher sense of freedom and joy, and the seeming hardships of the previous day's experience were "as a thing of nought."

On a more recent trip material beliefs were again overcome through lifting thought to the omnipotence of Truth. Although unable to have needed repairs made to the motor, and in spite of all dubious prophecies in regard to the trip, these Scientists started for a town which it was necessary to reach that night. While traveling over the first few miles the week's Lesson-Sermon was read aloud, and as the one who was driving listened to these words from the Bible: "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low," she knew that she had received her answer to the day's problem. Determining to keep in thought the truth that man lives and moves in Mind, and so reflects intelligent and unceasing activity; that Mind is Love which makes the way perfect, she was guided to do the right thing as each valley was traversed, and each mountain was ascended and descended in perfect harmony. The desired destination was reached in good time, and that day's journey proved one of the best, for it also carried these students farther along the great highway where Principle is acknowledged as the only power, the only guide, and the only intelligence.

God's Day

LIEUT. COL. ROBERT E. KEY

WHEN trembling chords of human hopes
Are silent on the harp of time,
In such a moment Love evokes
The melody of Life divine.
Not "here," or "there," beclouds the way,
Nor time agone, nor years to be,
But noon in God's eternal day,
And freedom for humanity!

The sepulchers of sin and shame
Are lit with Truth's all-conquering light;
The deaf and blind, the sick and lame,
No longer dream of starless night,
But forward, with a voice of praise,
They seek the Father and His ways.

Man's consciousness can never dwell
In shade of death or vale of woe,
For praise and gratitude dispel
The mists of earth which come and go,
And with a note divinely clear
Destroy the elements of fear.

["Self-denial"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 17, 1917]

Self-denial is the denial of self. That, it may be remarked, is a self-evident proposition: which is true; but what is by no means so evident is the construction to be placed on the word. To the man in the street self-denial is a very simple business. It is merely denying oneself some gratification or even apparent necessity which it is within one's power to enjoy. But that is only the most superficial way of looking at the matter. And it is surely very far from what Christ Jesus intended, when he said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Now the Greek word which in the first and second gospels is translated deny means much more than this. It means to deny utterly. And when a human being denies himself utterly, it means just what Mrs. Eddy meant when she wrote, on page 242 of Science and Health: "Denial of the claims of matter is a great step towards the joys of Spirit, towards human freedom and the final triumph over the body."

Now when a man denies himself utterly it is obvious that he cannot deny that which is real. Therefore what he is denying cannot possibly be the spiritual reality, made in the image and likeness of God, Spirit. It must be the material counterfeit made, in the words of Paul, of the earth, earthy. Thus, consequently, a man who utterly denies his material selfhood, takes up his cross in his struggle with the flesh, until such a time as he, walking in the footsteps of the Christ, in other words living in every thought, and word, and deed in obedience to Principle, succeeds in laying off his sense of a material body, in the tomb of material belief, and emerging conscious only of his true selfhood, which is the Son of God, or the Christ. This is man in the image and likeness of God, as invisible to the material gaze as the Christ became to that of the disciples in the mountain in Galilee.

If, then, a man denies himself utterly, he denies incidentally the lusts of the flesh. Now it is not impossible for a man to turn from evil to good in a moment, but it is entirely outside human experience. Even Jesus did not complete his life work in that way: indeed, had he done so, his example might have been lost. Hour by hour, day by day, he fought his way through the temptations, and hour by hour, and day by day, the material man vanished before the manifestation of the Christ. "No man," Christ Jesus himself said, "cometh unto the Father, but by me." No man, to put it a little differently, demonstrates his true at-one-ment with Principle except through an understanding of and an obedience to the Christ, Truth. Mrs. Eddy puts this quite perfectly, on page 369 of Science and Health, when she writes, "In proportion as matter loses to human sense all entity as man, in that proportion does man become its master. He enters into a diviner sense of the facts, and comprehends the theology of Jesus as demonstrated in healing the sick, raising the dead, and walking over the wave."

It is clear, then, that the demonstration of the teaching of Christ Jesus lies in that gradual conquest of the flesh, comprehended in its utter denial as a reality, a demonstration which can be proved to be absolutely scientific by means of those miracles, as the world terms them, which were demanded by Jesus himself, when he declared, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Now Jesus healed the sick, raised the dead, and walked on the wave, because he had so persistently and so utterly denied himself, repudiated his own supposititious materiality, that he had proved to himself the utter unreality of all matter. Mankind cannot, however, any more turn from evil to good in a moment, than Polycarp could from good to evil. It has, it would seem, to begin with little things, but it had better begin at once. "We must begin, however," says Mrs. Eddy, on page 429 of Science and Health, "with the more simple demonstrations of control, and the sooner we begin the better."

It is in this way that the necessity for the exercise of ordinary self-denial comes in. It is ridiculous to suppose that any person can hope utterly to deny the flesh whilst gratifying what appear to be even harmless appetites. There is, of course, scientifically no such thing as a harmless appetite. The leaf plays its part in the life of a tree equally with the tap root. And if a man cannot cut the tap root of animality right off, cannot, that is to say, turn from evil to good in a moment, he can at least begin to pluck off the leaves; begin, as Mrs. Eddy says, "with the more simple demonstrations of control."

Take, for instance, a simple lust of the flesh like tobacco. A man, when he first hears of Christian Science, cannot understand why he should give up smoking, and yet the very hold smoking has upon him is the strongest possible reason why he should gain his freedom from so powerful a material appetite. But, comes the common retort, defiant of the mildest logic, Why should a man give up smoking rather than eating? Well, for the simplest of reasons. For the reason that if a man starved himself he would die. And it is nearer Principle to demonstrate physical life than physical death. At the same time, in order to live it is not necessary to drink champagne nor beer, nor to eat pâté de foie gras nor green turtle. Therefore the sooner people learn to eliminate the sensuous element in anything, the better for their chance of demonstrating the unreality of matter.

The question of smoking does not, however, end here. The individual's knowledge of Christian Science is in exact proportion to his measure of scientific demonstration. Now all demonstration is based upon an ability to prove the unreality of matter. What chance, then, has a man enslaved by tobacco of proving his disbelief in, or his understanding of, the unreality of matter? Let him lay aside a pipe or a cigar to convince a patient verbally or mentally of the unreality of nicotine poisoning, and then consider the volume of his success. Every one knows that it is the belief in pleasure in matter, and not of pain in matter, that manacles the world in its efforts to free itself from matter. Let a man indulge himself in the peculiarly vivid sensuousness of the pleasure of smoking, with all its narcotic restfulness, and then let him set himself to prove to his neighbor or to himself that there is no reality or pleasure in matter, and he will begin to discover that it may be said of those who indulge the flesh while denying the flesh, "Verily I say unto you, They have their reward."

[H. S. Hughes, Jr., in Evening Wisconsin, Milwaukee, Wis.]

The cautious manner in which our ministerial friend handled the subject of mental healing before a meeting of the Methodist clergymen at the Y. M. C. A., fails to conceal the motive back of the remarks, which, it is plain, was to discredit the work that is being done by Christian Scientists. It is gratifying to recognize that he admits that functional diseases yield to metaphysical treatment. If a conscientious investigation were made, he would be convinced that organic diseases yield with equal readiness to metaphysical treatment, as is proven by thousands of authentic cases of healing recorded and accessible. This assertion can be verified by any person sufficiently interested to attend the Christian Science Wednesday evening meetings (held all over the world), where testimonies can be heard from the lips of those who have been lifted from bondage pronounced organic and incurable by creditable physicians.

The instances of healing by material applications, as reported in the Scriptures and referred to in this clergyman's remarks, are insignificant compared to the many cases which were healed without the use of material means, and do not in any manner disprove the efficiency of metaphysical treatment, as practiced by the master Christian, to heal diseases of all kinds. To-day the same works are being repeated by those having a demonstrable understanding of Christian Science, which is God's law made practical.

In speaking of the mission of Christian Science Mrs. Eddy, its Discoverer and Founder, writes on page 107 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" as follows: "Through Christian Science, religion and medicine are inspired with a diviner nature and essence; fresh pinions are given to faith and understanding, and thoughts acquaint themselves intelligently with God." These words, conscientiously and thoughtfully pondered by the earnest seeker for truth, would be helpful in assisting him to determine to his own satisfaction what the real mission of Christian Science is with reference to both religion and medicine.

[Warren O. Evans, in Woonsocket (R. I.) Call]

If the remarks of a certain minister at the recent meeting of the Franklin Grange were as reported, they certainly need correction in so far as they referred to Christian Science. Classifying Christian Science with theosophy and spiritism, it is stated that the speaker "spoke at length of his experiences as a student of these cults, especially Christian Science." To associate Christian Science with such philosophy indicates clearly that our friend has been a very poor student of Christian Science; for it is not difficult for one who has caught even a mere glimpse of the fundamentals of Christian Science to see that it has nothing in common with such teachings.

Christian Science is based absolutely upon the teachings of Christ Jesus. To be sure, Christian Science does represent "the seeking of mankind for an understanding of the inner meaning of events," and the beauty of it all is that Christian Science furnishes this understanding, as every true Christian Scientist has realized. But to say that the Founder and followers of Christian Science have "only a partial knowledge of what is taught and understood in the established Christian churches," is absurd. By "established Christian churches," it is presumed that the speaker referred to the Christian churches which were established prior to the establishment of the Christian Science church in 1879, for certainly the Christian Science church is recognized by all well-informed people as an established Christian church in the fullest sense.

Furthermore, instead of Christian Scientists having "only a partial knowledge of what is taught and understood" in the Christian churches, it was because of a lack in the knowledge and understanding offered them that they were obliged to leave their former associations in order to enter into a fuller and more complete understanding of the teachings and works of the great Master. That their step was a progressive and reasonable one is proved by the test which Jesus gave: "By their fruits ye shall know them." The "fruits" of Christian Science speak for themselves.

From experience the writer knows what all this means.

Uniting with the Baptist church at an early age, for more than twenty years he was an active member of that church and dearly loved it. It was only when a great sorrow came into his experience and his church could not give him the understanding of the "why" and the "when" and the "where" that he found the answer to all his questions in Christian Science, and a satisfying and demonstrable understanding of what was formerly only "partial."

Christian Scientists have nothing but love for their former church; they have simply taken an advance step in what they have proved to be the better way. In one of her published works, known as "Christian Science versus Pantheism," Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has given this loving counsel on page 13: "Love all Christian churches for the gospel's sake; and be exceedingly glad that the churches are united in purpose, if not in method, to close the war between flesh and Spirit, and to fight the good fight till God's will be witnessed and done on earth as in heaven."

The News despatch, giving a Calgary [Alberta] clergyman's condemnation of Mrs. Eddy, reads like an echo of those dark ages when the thumbscrew and the rack and the fagot were the reward of men and women who dared to be true to their religious convictions. In the present instance it seems well-nigh past belief that one who has set himself apart for the profession of a Christian minister could work himself into such a state of mind as to glory in the eternal suffering of even the veriest sinner; and how much more in the case of a gentle woman whose only cause of condemnation was that she dared to follow the Master in demonstration rather than in man-made doctrines, and taught others to do likewise.

The following morning one of the Calgary daily newspapers felt it necessary to voice an editorial protest, and a member of the same denomination as the speaker publicly apologized, concluding his letter thus: "May the good Lord speedily deliver us from preachers of this type."

With all the charity possible one cannot help feeling that one who allows a sense of vindictiveness toward a fellow religionist to run riot in a Christian pulpit, has passed the point where he can claim to be a benefactor of mankind and is approaching perilously close to the point of becoming an actual enemy to human welfare. Such utterances as that attributed to this speaker are not designed to lift the thought of his hearers nearer to God, nor to fit them to become followers of the great Teacher, who said, "Love your enemies." To quote from the editorial mentioned in the preceding paragraph: "The gospel preached to us on Sunday night is strange to most of us. It is not the gospel of love that most of us associate with the life and message of the Man of Nazareth."

As every well-informed person knows, Mrs. Eddy was preeminently a good woman, the larger part of whose life on earth was unstintedly given to the alleviation of human suffering and the Christianization of mankind. This fact is so generally acknowledged, even by those who do not agree with her religious views, that it requires no argument or protestation. Mrs. Eddy's work has brought blessing to thousands upon thousands of human beings, not only in physical healing but in moral regeneration and spiritual enlightenment. If these are things for which God condemns man to hell, then the Scriptures will have to be rewritten and the divine plan for human redemption be revised.

Well did Jesus ask the Jews, "For which of those works do ye stone me?" And well may Christian Scientists ask concerning their Leader: For which of her good works is her name maligned and traduced? Mrs. Eddy never claimed to be a prophet, but she was one of God's messengers to humanity, whose good work is bearing fruit in every corner of the globe. When Balaam's aid was invoked to curse the Israelites he asked, "How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed?"

You report a former Jewish rabbi as saying at the recent conference at Bible School Park that he became interested in Christian Science and served as a reader for a Christian Science congregation, but that he never gave up Judaism. In reply thereto permit me to state that there is a vast difference between the God of Judaism and the God of Christian Science. The Scriptures point out the inevitable result of trying to worship two masters and of trying to put new wine into old bottles. If, therefore, the former rabbi failed to grasp the Christian Science point of view and reap the blessings that unfailingly follow, the cause is not hard to discern.

Jesus taught that his real blood was the life that he lived, and Mrs. Eddy teaches in Science and Health that they truly drink his blood who strive to emulate him. In the twenty-fourth psalm we read: "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." This illustrates as clearly as anything can the Christian Science view of atonement. Any other interpretation would appear to be unreasonable and unscientific.

[Carl E. Herring in Nebraska State Journal, Lincoln, Neb.]

A correspondent issues a challenge to debate the question as to the Biblical authority of the Christian Science religion. The invitation is courteously declined, and I am sure he will not take offense if we point out that this form of issuing a challenge is only a refinement of the old "wager of battle," in which the guilt or innocence of the accused was determined at the point of a lance or by the resisting power of a steel helmet. It is but a varied form of gladiatorial contest, in which even with the most good-natured opponents and reflecting audiences the spirit of rivalry is sure to spring up and judgments be formed in heat, when the subject is one which demands that it be weighed in the cloister of one's own spiritual consciousness, as far as possible from the turmoil of the public forum.

That Christian Science rests upon Biblical authority we sincerely believe, but Christian Scientists are engaged in no crusade to convince the world of that fact. They are sincerely desirous that the world shall know and participate in the blessing that has come to them through Christian Science, but whatever efforts they may make in this direction are inspired by gratitude, and gratitude cannot be a party to a controversy, nor can it engage in any proceeding that would even have a tendency to excite animosities. They believe that the spiritual healing of sickness and sin was taught by the precepts and example of Jesus, and thus believing they endeavor not only to obey his commands, but as well to find the Mind of the Christ.

We believe that our friend who issued the challenge will agree that a religion which is entitled to survive will do so through the example of the regenerated lives of its adherents, rather than through any form of propaganda that has in it any element of compulsion or overpersuasion.

himself, repudiated his own supposititious materiality, that he had proved to himself the utter unreality of all matter. Mankind cannot, however, any more turn from evil to good in a moment, than Polycarp could from good to evil. It has, it would seem, to begin with little things, but it had better begin at once. "We must begin, however," says Mrs. Eddy, on page 429 of Science and Health, "with the more simple demonstrations of control, and the sooner we begin the better."

It is in this way that the necessity for the exercise of ordinary self-denial comes in. It is ridiculous to suppose that any person can hope utterly to deny the flesh whilst gratifying what appear to be even harmless appetites. There is, of course, scientifically no such thing as a harmless appetite. The leaf plays its part in the life of a tree equally with the tap root. And if a man cannot cut the tap root of animality right off, cannot, that is to say, turn from evil to good in a moment, he can at least begin to pluck off the leaves; begin, as Mrs. Eddy says, "with the more simple demonstrations of control."

Take, for instance, a simple lust of the flesh like tobacco. A man, when he first hears of Christian Science, cannot understand why he should give up smoking, and yet the very hold smoking has upon him is the strongest possible reason why he should gain his freedom from so powerful a material appetite. But, comes the common retort, defiant of the mildest logic, Why should a man give up smoking rather than eating? Well, for the simplest of reasons. For the reason that if a man starved himself he would die. And it is nearer Principle to demonstrate physical life than physical death. At the same time, in order to live it is not necessary to drink champagne nor beer, nor to eat pâté de foie gras nor green turtle. Therefore the sooner people learn to eliminate the sensuous element in anything, the better for their chance of demonstrating the unreality of matter.

The question of smoking does not, however, end here. The individual's knowledge of Christian Science is in exact proportion to his measure of scientific demonstration. Now all demonstration is based upon an ability to prove the unreality of matter. What chance, then, has a man enslaved by tobacco of proving his disbelief in, or his understanding of, the unreality of matter? Let him lay aside a pipe or a cigar to convince a patient verbally or mentally of the unreality of nicotine poisoning, and then consider the volume of his success. Every one knows that it is the belief in pleasure in matter, and not of pain in matter, that manacles the world in its efforts to free itself from matter. Let a man indulge himself in the peculiarly vivid sensuousness of the pleasure of smoking, with all its narcotic restfulness, and then let him set himself to prove to his neighbor or to himself that there is no reality or pleasure in matter, and he will begin to discover that it may be said of those who indulge the flesh while denying the flesh, "Verily I say unto you, They have their reward."

The cautious manner in which our ministerial friend handled the subject of mental healing before a meeting of the Methodist clergymen at the Y. M. C. A., fails to conceal the motive back of the remarks, which, it is plain, was to discredit the work that is being done by Christian Scientists. It is gratifying to recognize that he admits that functional diseases yield to metaphysical treatment. If a conscientious investigation were made, he would be convinced that organic diseases yield with equal readiness to metaphysical treatment, as is proven by thousands of authentic cases of healing recorded and accessible. This assertion can be verified by any person sufficiently interested to attend the Christian Science Wednesday evening meetings (held all over the world), where testimonies can be heard from the lips of those who have been lifted from bondage pronounced organic and incurable by creditable physicians.

The instances of healing by material applications, as reported in the Scriptures and referred to in this clergyman's remarks, are insignificant compared to the many cases which were healed without the use of material means, and do not in any manner disprove the efficiency of metaphysical treatment, as practiced by the master Christian, to heal diseases of all kinds. To-day the same works are being repeated by those having a demonstrable understanding of Christian Science, which is God's law made practical.

In speaking of the mission of Christian Science Mrs. Eddy, its Discoverer and Founder, writes on page 107 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" as follows: "Through Christian Science, religion and medicine are inspired with a diviner nature and essence; fresh pinions are given to faith and understanding, and thoughts acquaint themselves intelligently with God." These words, conscientiously and thoughtfully pondered by the earnest seeker for truth, would be helpful in assisting him to determine to his own satisfaction what the real mission of Christian Science is with reference to both religion and medicine.

If the remarks of a certain minister at the recent meeting of the Franklin Grange were as reported, they certainly need correction in so far as they referred to Christian Science. Classifying Christian Science with theosophy and spiritism, it is stated that the speaker "spoke at length of his experiences as a student of these cults, especially Christian Science." To associate Christian Science with such philosophy indicates clearly that our friend has been a very poor student of Christian Science; for it is not difficult for one who has caught even a mere glimpse of the fundamentals of Christian Science to see that it has nothing in common with such teachings.

Christian Science is based absolutely upon the teachings of Christ Jesus. ## The Courage of the Peacemaker

WHO was the most courageous but the one who was also most meek, who could say, "Learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls"? If we learn of him we shall know how to be truly brave.

Christ Jesus was the peacemaker in that he faced enmity and revealed its impotence by unfolding "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding." He could have avoided death by being a pacifist, by not cleansing the temple, by not contending with false teaching, by not declaring unpleasant but necessary truth; but by fighting the battle through for righteousness he both conquered the sin that sought to slay him and overcame death itself. It is by the threat and fear of death that wrong seeks to hold man in bondage, and he who would save life by serving wrong is the one who really loses it; whereas the Master's promise is perpetual, "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it."

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 459) Mrs. Eddy gives an unusual picture when she says, "Committing the bare process of mental healing to frail mortals, untaught and unrestrained by Christian Science, is like putting a sharp knife into the hands of a blind man or a raging maniac, and turning him loose in the crowded streets of a city." The making of peace in such a case requires the elimination of either motive or power to hurt, or of both; and the peacemaker will need courage to stand between those whom he would befriend and their danger. In the case of the insanely willful man with a sharp knife and governed by the prepossession that he should injure right and left those whom he thinks to be in his way, it is not enough to take the pacifist's view regarding the dangerous man, that it is his weapon and a man has the right to do what he wills with his own. Yielding to the personal will of the one in error may be merely cowardice, but nobly brave is he who risks his life to establish the peace of righteousness for others.

The rationalistic view of Christianity declares it to be invented by the weak, as the religion of slaves whereby their tortures may be mitigated on the theory that as their oppressors accept Christianity they will be kinder to their slaves. Rational philosophy, of course, holds itself superior to Christianity. Believing that some men are personal superiors and masters over others, it looks upon mercy as neither more nor less than weakness, having no place therefore in the character of its strong men. As against the merciless strong there are those who make a virtue of submission, and their meekness is nonresistance to evil. It is, however, by meekness before God, not by meek submission to the devil, that men realize the beatitude and "inherit the earth." On the other hand he "shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy," just as certainly as the beatitude is true, "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy."

Let us consider also that other beatitude which says, "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." It should be easy to see that no cowardice nor compromise can be meant, no condonation of evil, no nonresistance to the devil, but rather such resistance as was exhibited by Christ Jesus, causing the devil to depart from him. When the pacifist Peter argued for the avoidance of conflict with evil, we are told that the Master "turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offence unto me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Our Master went to the full measure of bravery, following his own standard which he had set down in his farewell address to his disciples, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Even though it appeared that they who could kill the body had power to deny Principle, he faced their denial and murderous claim, and behold, he brought forever to light God's "Fear not," so that God's children may forever know that they who kill the body have after that no more that they can do. Therefore it is that they who hold to Principle, even to going through death, can hear the trumpet word of the true peacemaker saying, "To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Many in the world are understanding what it means to lay down their lives for their friends. Let us be glad for all the heroes of faith who have fought and do fight for the triumph of good, not counting their own lives dear unto themselves. Are not they the true peacemakers? Therefore, as we estimate the blessings bought for us by noble lives, self-sacrificed in the contest with evil and in establishing the triumph of righteousness, let us remember how "blessed are the peacemakers."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

Pacifism Analyzed

A FALSE peace is to the nations like a falling star to a traveler seeking a guiding light. The real pacification of the world can only be accomplished by following the true star of divine Science, the light of the world which points to Principle. Pacifism may be defined as fear of war. It may argue that war is savage, the pastime of the bloodthirsty, and by advocating peace may pose as being above war and the custodian of high ideals. Yet this state of mind does not heal the world's woes, but rather makes a covering for the perpetration of further crimes upon humanity by ruthless exploiters of the weak.

Pacifism seeks ease, but finds dis-ease; dreads to hurt, but by inaction produces a worse hurt. Under the pretense of maintaining the brotherhood of man it keeps the door open for the unscrupulous to incite fratricidal wars. Proselyting pacifism, quite unexpectedly to its own believers, breaks the way for the propaganda of hate to insinuate itself unobserved among the innocent. The pacifist with the desire of being a peace-maker practically becomes a peace-breaker. On page 233 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," Mrs. Eddy writes: "The Scriptures say, 'They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace' (Jeremiah 6:14), thus taking the name of God in vain. Ignorance of self is the most stubborn belief to overcome, for apathy, dishonesty, sin, follow in its train."

An outward peace may mask a mental volcano. The habit of smoothing over difficulties instead of correcting errors leaves a smoldering fire to smudge up the atmosphere and thus darken the whole situation. Better the flashes of fire which refine and eventually make for perfect peace than the unconfessed and hidden hate and grievance which poison the system. God requires us to work for the world, to battle for the freedom of the universal brother, not to sit at ease and look on with indifference at the slaughter of defenseless women and children. Jesus said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword." The sword of Spirit is two-edged,—when it goes forward it destroys conspicuous error, and in returning clears away any subtle, lurking error. The swing of the two-edged sword cuts both ways. The sword of demonstration is mightier than the pen which writes down mere doctrine, but the pen that is used powerfully to waken consciousness out of its selfish stupor is an instrument of God. Then the pen and the sword become one in purpose and power.

True heroism, courage, and self-sacrifice are expressed in deeds, not in mere words. The mask of pacifism is torn off by the right instinct of those who hold liberty more sacred than their own skins. The excuses of drowsy pacifism against meeting the enemy cannot becloud a nation's mentality with a mesmeric mist when Christian Scientists courageously handle error as they have been taught by their Leader. When national honor is threatened and the attempt is made to deprive the people of liberty it is rendering a poor service indeed to call war a calamity. What would we have to-day had not our forefathers paved the way for liberty? A greater liberty is to come whereby peace will be permanently established in the hearts of mankind by the understanding that death has no sting and Life is God. The belief of life in matter will no longer be idolized by the votaries of a false peace, and the love of ease will no longer act as a betraying Judas. In the book of Job we are given a very simple recipe for peace: "Acquaint now thyself with him [God], and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee."

Experience proves that the sentimental outpourings of pacifism do not help to end wars, but rather tend to hinder a nation's whole-hearted support of the brave soldiers who have taken the field. When the issue is clear between Principle and materialism the whole armor of God should be donned. There should be no flinching, no hesitating, but the banner of Love floating high above the fumes of hate should be carried joyfully to victory. In due time the eagle of righteous warfare will make way for the dove of peace. If the counsel of pacifism were followed, the dove would precede the eagle and thus be foully slain by the arrows of the enemy before its blessed mission could be accomplished.

God is the power which strengthens the ranks, lifts the fallen braves, gives the blessings of self-conquest, and brings the kingdom of heaven on earth. He holds the universe in the hollow of His hand and governs man. A peace of human contriving actuated by fear or self-interest is a bad peace, but when humanity has learned to let the outlining of good peace be traced by the Eternal One war will be no more. As Mrs. Eddy has stated on page 204 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "When the good fight is fought, error yields up its weapons and kisses the feet of Love, while white-winged peace sings to the heart a song of angels."

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

A Day's Journey

IN olden times it was customary to speak of the distance between one place and another as a day's journey, or it might be three days' journey. This of course meant the progress made by an individual or even a large number of persons traveling on foot. In modern times we are accustomed to speak of a day's work, but in either case we think of actual progress made in a given direction. In the book of Job we have a gloomy outline of human possibilities which culminates in this sad pronouncement: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble." Little wonder that the text goes on to speak of mortal man as one whose only outlook is to "accomplish, as an hireling, his day."

A modern hymn writer gives a higher tone to hope when she speaks of each stage of our earthly journey as "a day's march nearer home;" and it is surely well to learn how we can make every day count for so much that there will be no sorrowful retracing of steps and no barren regrets for wasted opportunities. In the second epistle of Peter we read: "Beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." The psalmist also says of God, "For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand." We cannot deny that it is our high privilege as children of the perfect Father to spend all our days with Him, and thus in applying the spiritual law of progression to make one day accomplish more for our own welfare and that of all mankind than a thousand days, yes, or even a thousand years.

Mrs. Eddy gives us an explanation of the passage quoted from the second epistle of Peter when she says (Science and Health, p. 504): "The rays of infinite Truth, when gathered into the focus of ideas, bring light instantaneously, whereas a thousand years of human doctrines, hypotheses, and vague conjectures emit no such effulgence." While under a stressful sense of present human conditions we may often ask ourselves when the long dark night will end; and as we turn to the words of Christ Jesus for illumination we find that the same query was addressed to him, but his only reply was, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." We should not, however, forget that he added, "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

Studied in the light of Christian Science the Master's words respecting the day and hour of complete deliverance from all evil seem to mean that long centuries of mortal belief might go on with little result toward the establishment of God's kingdom on the plane of human consciousness until men begin to lay hold upon the truth with a vital purpose and realize that no true progress is made except as we are "with the Lord,"—one in desire and purpose with infinite Mind, the divine Principle of all real being. Our Master said distinctly that the evil days would be shortened "for the elect's sake," for that otherwise "there should no flesh be saved." We also find in the Apocalypse the assuring promise that there would be a sudden disappearing of all evil; that in "one hour" the divine judgment would uncover and destroy the iniquitous claim of a mind separate from God, which has long held the nations captive through the hypnotic arguments of material power and splendor.

Distribution of Literature

ALTHOUGH primarily independent units, Christian Science churches and societies located in the same community may properly cooperate in the distribution of Christian Science literature in such a manner as to avoid duplication and increase the effectiveness of their work.

No previous statement made by this Board has been intended to discourage or interfere with joint literature distribution.

The Courage of the Peacemaker

WHO was the most courageous but the one who was also most meek, who could say, "Learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls"? If we learn of him we shall know how to be truly brave.

Christ Jesus was the peacemaker in that he faced enmity and revealed its impotence by unfolding "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding." He could have avoided death by being a pacifist, by not cleansing the temple, by not contending with false teaching, by not declaring unpleasant but necessary truth; but by fighting the battle through for righteousness he both conquered the sin that sought to slay him and overcame death itself. It is by the threat and fear of death that wrong seeks to hold man in bondage, and he who would save life by serving wrong is the one who really loses it; whereas the Master's promise is perpetual, "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it."

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 459) Mrs. Eddy gives an unusual picture when she says, "Committing the bare process of mental healing to frail mortals, untaught and unrestrained by Christian Science, is like putting a sharp knife into the hands of a blind man or a raging maniac, and turning him loose in the crowded streets of a city." The making of peace in such a case requires the elimination of either motive or power to hurt, or of both; and the peacemaker will need courage to stand between those whom he would befriend and their danger. In the case of the insanely willful man with a sharp knife and governed by the prepossession that he should injure right and left those whom he thinks to be in his way, it is not enough to take the pacifist's view regarding the dangerous man, that it is his weapon and a man has the right to do what he wills with his own. Yielding to the personal will of the one in error may be merely cowardice, but nobly brave is he who risks his life to establish the peace of righteousness for others.

The rationalistic view of Christianity declares it to be invented by the weak, as the religion of slaves whereby their tortures may be mitigated on the theory that as their oppressors accept Christianity they will be kinder to their slaves. Rational philosophy, of course, holds itself superior to Christianity. Believing that some men are personal superiors and masters over others, it looks upon mercy as neither more nor less than weakness, having no place therefore in the character of its strong men. As against the merciless strong there are those who make a virtue of submission, and their meekness is nonresistance to evil. It is, however, by meekness before God, not by meek submission to the devil, that men realize the beatitude and "inherit the earth." On the other hand he "shall have judgment without mercy, that hath shewed no mercy," just as certainly as the beatitude is true, "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy."

Let us consider also that other beatitude which says, "Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God." It should be easy to see that no cowardice nor compromise can be meant, no condonation of evil, no nonresistance to the devil, but rather such resistance as was exhibited by Christ Jesus, causing the devil to depart from him. When the pacifist Peter argued for the avoidance of conflict with evil, we are told that the Master "turned, and said unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan: thou art an offence unto me: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men." Our Master went to the full measure of bravery, following his own standard which he had set down in his farewell address to his disciples, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends." Even though it appeared that they who could kill the body had power to deny Principle, he faced their denial and murderous claim, and behold, he brought forever to light God's "Fear not," so that God's children may forever know that they who kill the body have after that no more that they can do. Therefore it is that they who hold to Principle, even to going through death, can hear the trumpet word of the true peacemaker saying, "To day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Many in the world are understanding what it means to lay down their lives for their friends. Let us be glad for all the heroes of faith who have fought and do fight for the triumph of good, not counting their own lives dear unto themselves. Are not they the true peacemakers? Therefore, as we estimate the blessings bought for us by noble lives, self-sacrificed in the contest with evil and in establishing the triumph of righteousness, let us remember how "blessed are the peacemakers."

Pacifism Analyzed

A FALSE peace is to the nations like a falling star to a traveler seeking a guiding light. The real pacification of the world can only be accomplished by following the true star of divine Science, the light of the world which points to Principle. Pacifism may be defined as fear of war. It may argue that war is savage, the pastime of the bloodthirsty, and by advocating peace may pose as being above war and the custodian of high ideals. Yet this state of mind does not heal the world's woes, but rather makes a covering for the perpetration of further crimes upon humanity by ruthless exploiters of the weak.

Pacifism seeks ease, but finds dis-ease; dreads to hurt, but by inaction produces a worse hurt. Under the pretense of maintaining the brotherhood of man it keeps the door open for the unscrupulous to incite fratricidal wars. Proselyting pacifism, quite unexpectedly to its own believers, breaks the way for the propaganda of hate to insinuate itself unobserved among the innocent. The pacifist with the desire of being a peace-maker practically becomes a peace-breaker. On page 233 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," Mrs. Eddy writes: "The Scriptures say, 'They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace' (Jeremiah 6:14), thus taking the name of God in vain. Ignorance of self is the most stubborn belief to overcome, for apathy, dishonesty, sin, follow in its train."

An outward peace may mask a mental volcano. The habit of smoothing over difficulties instead of correcting errors leaves a smoldering fire to smudge up the atmosphere and thus darken the whole situation. Better the flashes of fire which refine and eventually make for perfect peace than the unconfessed and hidden hate and grievance which poison the system. God requires us to work for the world, to battle for the freedom of the universal brother, not to sit at ease and look on with indifference at the slaughter of defenseless women and children. Jesus said, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword." The sword of Spirit is two-edged,—when it goes forward it destroys conspicuous error, and in returning clears away any subtle, lurking error. The swing of the two-edged sword cuts both ways. The sword of demonstration is mightier than the pen which writes down mere doctrine, but the pen that is used powerfully to waken consciousness out of its selfish stupor is an instrument of God. Then the pen and the sword become one in purpose and power.

True heroism, courage, and self-sacrifice are expressed in deeds, not in mere words. The mask of pacifism is torn off by the right instinct of those who hold liberty more sacred than their own skins. The excuses of drowsy pacifism against meeting the enemy cannot becloud a nation's mentality with a mesmeric mist when Christian Scientists courageously handle error as they have been taught by their Leader. When national honor is threatened and the attempt is made to deprive the people of liberty it is rendering a poor service indeed to call war a calamity. What would we have to-day had not our forefathers paved the way for liberty? A greater liberty is to come whereby peace will be permanently established in the hearts of mankind by the understanding that death has no sting and Life is God. The belief of life in matter will no longer be idolized by the votaries of a false peace, and the love of ease will no longer act as a betraying Judas. In the book of Job we are given a very simple recipe for peace: "Acquaint now thyself with him [God], and be at peace: thereby good shall come unto thee."

Experience proves that the sentimental outpourings of pacifism do not help to end wars, but rather tend to hinder a nation's whole-hearted support of the brave soldiers who have taken the field. When the issue is clear between Principle and materialism the whole armor of God should be donned. There should be no flinching, no hesitating, but the banner of Love floating high above the fumes of hate should be carried joyfully to victory. In due time the eagle of righteous warfare will make way for the dove of peace. If the counsel of pacifism were followed, the dove would precede the eagle and thus be foully slain by the arrows of the enemy before its blessed mission could be accomplished.

God is the power which strengthens the ranks, lifts the fallen braves, gives the blessings of self-conquest, and brings the kingdom of heaven on earth. He holds the universe in the hollow of His hand and governs man. A peace of human contriving actuated by fear or self-interest is a bad peace, but when humanity has learned to let the outlining of good peace be traced by the Eternal One war will be no more. As Mrs. Eddy has stated on page 204 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "When the good fight is fought, error yields up its weapons and kisses the feet of Love, while white-winged peace sings to the heart a song of angels."

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

A Day's Journey

IN olden times it was customary to speak of the distance between one place and another as a day's journey, or it might be three days' journey. This of course meant the progress made by an individual or even a large number of persons traveling on foot. In modern times we are accustomed to speak of a day's work, but in either case we think of actual progress made in a given direction. In the book of Job we have a gloomy outline of human possibilities which culminates in this sad pronouncement: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble." Little wonder that the text goes on to speak of mortal man as one whose only outlook is to "accomplish, as an hireling, his day."

A modern hymn writer gives a higher tone to hope when she speaks of each stage of our earthly journey as "a day's march nearer home;" and it is surely well to learn how we can make every day count for so much that there will be no sorrowful retracing of steps and no barren regrets for wasted opportunities. In the second epistle of Peter we read: "Beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." The psalmist also says of God, "For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand." We cannot deny that it is our high privilege as children of the perfect Father to spend all our days with Him, and thus in applying the spiritual law of progression to make one day accomplish more for our own welfare and that of all mankind than a thousand days, yes, or even a thousand years.

Mrs. Eddy gives us an explanation of the passage quoted from the second epistle of Peter when she says (Science and Health, p. 504): "The rays of infinite Truth, when gathered into the focus of ideas, bring light instantaneously, whereas a thousand years of human doctrines, hypotheses, and vague conjectures emit no such effulgence." While under a stressful sense of present human conditions we may often ask ourselves when the long dark night will end; and as we turn to the words of Christ Jesus for illumination we find that the same query was addressed to him, but his only reply was, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only." We should not, however, forget that he added, "Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

Studied in the light of Christian Science the Master's words respecting the day and hour of complete deliverance from all evil seem to mean that long centuries of mortal belief might go on with little result toward the establishment of God's kingdom on the plane of human consciousness until men begin to lay hold upon the truth with a vital purpose and realize that no true progress is made except as we are "with the Lord,"—one in desire and purpose with infinite Mind, the divine Principle of all real being. Our Master said distinctly that the evil days would be shortened "for the elect's sake," for that otherwise "there should no flesh be saved." We also find in the Apocalypse the assuring promise that there would be a sudden disappearing of all evil; that in "one hour" the divine judgment would uncover and destroy the iniquitous claim of a mind separate from God, which has long held the nations captive through the hypnotic arguments of material power and splendor.

Digitized by Google

Here we must often remind ourselves that this glorious consummation is never a question of time or of anything which can be accomplished by the human mind, but that it depends wholly upon the spiritualization of thought which will enable us to see God unceasingly and to desire above all else to be with Him,—one in desire and effort with Truth and Love. Because of the vastness of the problem involved it is surely well for us to ponder ofttimes these words of our revered Leader on page 5 of "Unity of Good": "Every one should be encouraged not to accept any personal opinion on so great a matter, but to seek the divine Science of this question of Truth by following upward individual convictions, undisturbed by the frightened sense of any need of attempting to solve every Life-problem in a day." This does not, however, mean that there is any indefiniteness about the goal to be reached, and no one who is wise would allow himself to become apathetic concerning his duty to God and to humanity when the need for the highest Christian effort is so great.

The call of Truth forever is: "To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." To-day, if some intrenched belief of error, selfishness, self-will, appetite, or passion, is fearlessly faced and overcome, who knows how great may be the influence of this spiritual victory toward the triumph of right over wrong the whole world over. Whether taken as a day's work or a day's journey, it leads up to the spiritual height from which St. John heard these words: "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

Current Notes

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—The edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, located at 1366 South Alvarado Street, was dedicated on Sunday, November 25. It is the custom with churches of the Christian Science denomination not to dedicate their buildings until they are free from debt, and Christian Scientists of this city are rejoicing that the building of First Church has been completed and paid for in such a short space of time.

The first Christian Science society of Los Angeles was formed in 1892. In 1895 this society was incorporated as a Church of Christ, Scientist, and in 1898 reorganized under the name of First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Los Angeles. The first Christian Science church building in the city was erected by this organization in 1901 on West Seventeenth Street. The present church building and ground cost one hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars; its seating capacity is about twelve hundred.

BATH, MAINE.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, has secured the use of Odd Fellows Hall, 109 Front Street, for the purpose of holding their regular Sunday morning services and Wednesday evening meetings. The removal from the Knights of Pythias Hall in the Y. M. C. A. building, where the church has been holding services for the past thirteen years, was occasioned by the closing up of that building on account of the scarcity of coal.

GREEN BAY, WIS.—The dedication services of First Church of Christ, Scientist, were held yesterday [Nov. 25] at the church edifice, Monroe Avenue and Cherry Street. The church was finished and the opening service held several years ago, but in accordance with the rule of all Christian Science churches it was not dedicated until entirely free from debt.—Green Bay Press-Gazette.

APPLETON, WIS.—The dedication of the edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, 687 Franklin Street, took place Sunday, November 18.

The Lectures

CHICAGO, ILL. (Ninth Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Martha Cohn, who said in part:—

Throughout the whole world to-day there is a great yearning for peace. Men are seeking above and beyond things material as they never sought before. Why? Because the mighty problems that shake the world to-day have not been solved; the evils that have beset human existence for ages have not been alleviated. Physical sciences, materia medica, the various theological creeds and doctrines, have not opened the door to freedom, nor have they brought to mankind the much desired peace. And yet our great Master said: "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

Christian Science occupies a unique position in the world to-day in that it differs wholly from all other systems or philosophies. Christian Science reestablishes the healing and redemptive Christianity of Jesus the Christ. It is indeed the promised Comforter. It is the dove that bears to all nations the olive branch of peace.

LONG BEACH, CAL. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Inez Simpson, who said in part:—

To one who does not understand the teachings of Christian Science (and I speak from past experience), it seems mysterious and mystical, and, looked at from a material standpoint, impossible; but when once understood, it is so simple that a child can demonstrate it. Christ Jesus proved to the world, more conclusively than anything else has ever been proven, the power of spiritual thought over every material condition. Through the practical teachings of the Christ, as revealed to us through Christian Science, we are enabled to realize the ever presence of God—that "now are we the sons of God," "joint-heirs with Christ." It is our inheritance and birthright, more precious than gold and silver.

RICHMOND, VA. (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Benjamin F. Chandler, who said in part:—

Epitomizing human experience, Job said: "Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble." His great need, then, is for a way to escape these troubles. In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy has written (p. 134): "Man-made doctrines are waning. They have not waxed strong in times of trouble." This may be because the very best that "man-made doctrines" have had to offer has been a hope,—a hope that somewhere, sometime, we may escape from the ills "that flesh is heir to," but not here or now. Christ Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" from which we may deduce that that which does free is the truth. As Christian Science frees from sin and disease of every kind here and now, and has freed thousands during the last half century, just as Jesus said the truth would do, may not Christian Science justly claim to be the truth to which he referred?

LA PORTE, IND. (First Church).—Clarence W. Chadwick, lecturer; introduced by Hobart M. Cable, who said in part:—

In this remarkable period of the world's history, one of the most notable developments has been the progress of Christian Science, not alone as a religion but especially as a means of healing. Jesus instructed the disciples in many things when they were about to go forth, but particular emphasis was given the point of healing: "And as ye go preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give."

Was ever a declaration more positive? Does it not carry with it a conviction of spirituality, of relief and freedom to humanity suffering in sickness and sin? And Christian Scientists to-day are putting into actual practice the very things enjoined upon the disciples by Jesus. The earnest seekers of this healing truth may find this haven of health and harmony, for Christian Science is world-wide as a religion and its churches and societies are in every land.

The La Porte Herald.

ORANGE, N. J. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Samuel J. Macdonald, who said in part:—

We read in the Gospel according to St. Luke how our Savior, in one of his discourses, made use of the story of a woman who had lost a piece of silver. After telling of her loss and of her vigorous and thorough search for the missing piece, our Savior proceeds: "And when she hath found it, she calleth her friends and her neighbours together, saying, Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost."

The members of this church are like that woman. They had, every single one of them, lost man's dearest possession, the knowledge of the only true God and of Jesus Christ whom He has sent. Their loss was manifested in many evidences of discord,—in sorrow, disease, lack, limitation, misery, bodily uncomeliness, unlovely environment; but, by the grace and mercy of God, and through the consecration and courage of a noble woman, Mary Baker Eddy, they have found that which was lost. They have regained, in some measure, the knowledge "of our Lord, and of his Christ," and in consequence their joy now knows no bounds. The inharmonies which during long and weary years appeared to encircle and imprison them have yielded to the omnipotent and invincible harmony of Truth and Love, which has brought with it the peace and joy which no man taketh from them.

HURON, S. DAK. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Leah S. Robins, who said in part:—

Christian Science is not a new religion; it is the same truth which Jesus taught and practiced on the shores of Galilee and the hills of Judea. The world is still asking, "What is truth?" and the answer is found in Christian Science. Hundreds of thousands of people are daily offering thanks to the Giver of all good for freedom from the bondage of sickness and sin,—freedom attained through an understanding of this teaching. Because Christian Science is the best thing on earth to-day, we wish all mankind to enjoy its blessings.

Testimonies of Healing

This testimony is written in gratitude for the many blessings which have come to me through Christian Science, and with the hope that it may encourage some of the many earnest seekers for the truth. My good health for the past eleven years is due to the understanding of God gained through the daily study of the Bible and the Christian Science literature. Prior to the time, eighteen and a half years ago, when my parents started to study and apply Mrs. Eddy's teachings, I was continually ailing. Although my condition improved after that, I had to have treatment from a practitioner periodically for several years.

For perhaps six years I labored under the delusion that I could not grasp the method whereby the healing was accomplished, and yet, when placed in situations where I could not reach a practitioner, I found that I could prove the truth for myself. Though anxious to learn about the healing and to experience it, I did not fully realize the need of systematic study, and there were constantly recurring periods of several days when I would fail to read any of the literature. I thank God that this mesmeric belief has been broken. Now my uppermost desire is to devote my life to the study of Christian Science and to the practice of Christian healing as therein revealed.

My healings have been numerous, but as a clearer understanding of the Scriptures is gained, I have less to overcome in a physical way and harmony is instantly realized more often. Had it not been for Christian Science I would probably not be living to-day, for eleven years ago I came near passing on as the result of a virulent attack of typhoid fever which it was thought my abnormally weak constitution at that time could not withstand, but I was healed without drugs through the application of the power of Mind, God. Upon regaining consciousness I was permitted to start eating regular meals, although I could barely lift my hand to my mouth and my frame was terribly wasted. The fever delirium was broken in a week, but was followed by a heavy sleep or coma from which I was not finally roused for ten or twelve days more. According to the health laws of the region where I then resided, a disease such as typhoid must be reported to the board of health. Although we did not desire a doctor's visit, the practitioner complied with the law and a health officer was called. After looking me over he told the trained nurse in attendance that he did not believe I could pull through, and on learning that my parents were having Christian Science treatment for me he reported my condition as hopeless.

In order more fully to comply with the law, the practitioner permitted an allopathic physician to accompany her about once a week, and the diagnosis was thus confirmed by two practicing allopathic doctors, a man and a woman. This latter physician, like an ever increasing number of the profession, was favorable toward Christian Science and was desirous of witnessing a representative healing. On calling one day and seeing my food, she became much disturbed at the flagrant disregard of so-called medical law, for I was eating all the things that make up a hearty dinner. Noticing the doctor's exclamation, the practitioner firmly assured her that I was in God's loving care, not in the hands of man, and that I had been eating such food for several days with no bad effects. As the result of witnessing my own and my younger brother's healing of this disease, for he was stricken just after I was but recovered his strength more quickly, this doctor deserted her medical practice of more than twenty-five years' standing and took up the study of Christian Science with the purpose of learning to practice Christian healing. I was away from school less than ten weeks, while my brother was away barely six.

I am indeed thankful to God, as revealed in Christian Science, for this liberation as well as for the many other healings experienced and witnessed, but the logical and acceptable explanation of daily living means far more to me. Spiritual understanding is the great asset gained by studying this Science of being as taught in Science and Health, and this is something the world cannot give or take away. I am grateful for membership in The Mother Church as well as in a branch church. When in college, I found the Christian Science society of the university to be an immeasurable aid. There would have been much lacking in my college experience without that constructive association. Moreover, I am deeply thankful that I was led by divine Love to attend a university where there was such an organization, and for the privilege of graduate membership in that society. The great love and reverence I feel for Mrs. Eddy is the product of the many blessings experienced as a result of putting her teachings into practice.

Lastly, I am thankful for having learned the import of our Leader's words on page 3 of Science and Health: "Gratitude is much more than a verbal expression of thanks. Action expresses more gratitude than speech." I realize that I need to reflect good both in thought and in deed in order effectively to show what I feel.

EDWARD EVERETT HAND, Jr., Brooklyn, N. Y.

About four years ago I heard for the first time of Christian Science. From a sense of duty rather than out of interest I read the Herold which was given to me at the time. Soon, however, I came across a statement which made me keenly interested. It read, "You need believe only what you can prove for yourself." No blind belief, therefore, was asked. I then studied all the Christian Science literature available in the German language, and while doing so a weakness of the eyes of many years' standing disappeared. Previously I was never able to read in artificial light, but now I read through half the night. The many references to the English works convinced me that the German translations constituted but a small part of the Christian Science literature, and I thereupon began to translate for myself one after another of Mrs. Eddy's works. At first things went very slowly, for I had to look up in the dictionary hundreds of words. I now possess all the books by our Leader and subscribe to all the Christian Science periodicals and read them all.

I was recompensed for my efforts in still another manner. A skin disease which was considered hereditary and incurable disappeared, never to return. Many more or less serious illnesses and inharmonies were overcome through Christian Science. One particular case I should like to mention. A short time ago my eldest son had a severe attack of appendicitis. None of the family asked for a doctor, although the symptoms were alarming. I myself was strengthened by the encouraging thought that however small my understanding of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God might be, it was sufficient to solve my problem; and this proved to be the case.

After three days the boy was out of bed, but he seemed so very thin, pale, and weak that I had to support him. This condition lasted until the following day. A conversation about food made me look into this question more closely, and when I spoke with the patient about there being no record in the Bible of a long convalescence, his appearance changed and the weakness disappeared so quickly that on the following day he was able to go out on his bicycle, and two days after that he was doing manual work.

Words can express but faintly my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me and mine. My greatest desire is to follow more and more the counsel contained in the Bible, "With all thy getting get understanding."

MRS. I. GERTSCH, Steffisburg, Kt. Bern, Switzerland.

Five years ago, when Christian Science was brought to our home, I was healed of nervousness, after having been under a physician's care for three years or more without any result. My husband was freed from lumbago in a short time through Christian Science, and our eldest daughter, then twelve years old, was healed of St. Vitus's dance in its worst form. For about three months she had been in such a condition that she could not attend school. Our son turned on a high pressure steam hose and his face was severely scalded, but he was healed through Christian Science in less than two weeks and no marks were left. Our little girl was healed of convulsions in two treatments, and our little boy of toothache in one treatment. Many other ailments have been overcome through the power of Truth. The birth of my baby under Christian Science treatment was to me a most wonderful experience. We are very thankful to God and to Jesus the Christ for showing us the way, also grateful to Mrs. Eddy for revealing this beautiful truth to us.

MRS. ELIZABETH GOHS, Chicago, Ill.

I wish to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. In 1910 I was taken out of school on account of nervous trouble which seemingly was very serious. I was unable to walk or talk. This condition seemed to get worse instead of better, but we had Christian Science treatment and kept faithfully at work. At the end of about five months I was healed. We are very grateful for this wonderful proof of God's presence and power. It taught us not to be discouraged even if the healing seems slow.

I am a member of the Christian Science church, and also attend the Sunday school. I am indeed very grateful for all the wonderful blessings received.

MISS MARION ADELAIDE MCCORMICK, Saginaw, Mich.

With heartfelt gratitude I give my testimony of what Christian Science has done for me and mine during the past six years. After our first baby came I was left in very poor health. I lived in misery for half a year, suffering from headache and stomach trouble, and was then asked by a relative to try Christian Science. I went to a practitioner merely for physical relief, and after the first treatment came away knowing I would be helped. The next morning upon arising I felt as if a load had been lifted from my shoulders, but did not realize that I had experienced instantaneous healing. Fear still held me in bondage to the thought that these conditions might return, so I took three weeks' absent treatment and was a well woman.

I secured the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and read it through hurriedly, expecting to find some formula for the healing process, but was disappointed. The practitioner told me that I had soared to the mountain top, but must go back and climb slowly, until I gained the understanding of God's omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience. I became discouraged many times when the path would seem dark and I could not see my way clearly, but at those times I would turn to the testimonies in the Sentinel and gain courage to press on.

The Christian Science periodicals have been a great help and they are like daily manna to me. I have had many beautiful demonstrations of God's love and care, for my children and myself and also for animals. Medicine has not been used for the children or myself since coming into Christian Science. A few weeks after my first healing my eldest daughter was healed of a bowel disorder through the little understanding I had then gained of the truth, and she has never had a return of the trouble.

One day my husband came home from a trip suffering from influenza, and to material sense he was very sick. In the old way of thinking, this ailment is supposed to be contagious, and two days afterward both little girls and myself were not able to raise our heads. About three o'clock in the afternoon I realized that we need not submit to this bondage, as we had broken none of God's laws and God governs man and the universe. All sense of pain left and we arose. By evening we were in a normal condition, and I am grateful to say that not one of us has had an attack of this trouble during the last four years, whereas I had been subject to a siege of it every winter.

I have had the privilege of becoming a member of The Mother Church, and my desire is to be a true Christian Scientist. There are still many things to overcome, but I know that if I hold steadfastly to the truth all will be changed. For the benefits received and for my knowledge of Christian Science, I am deeply thankful to God and most grateful to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has prepared the way for us. I also take this opportunity to thank the friends who have so lovingly helped me on my journey from sense to Soul.

MRS. ELINORA F. BERNICK, Hawarden, Sask., Canada.

I wish to express my deep gratitude for many blessings received through Christian Science. From the time I was old enough to think for myself, I never believed in the existence of a Supreme Being, for I could not believe that a good God would create such a world as this; but, seeing that the results of religion were good, I attended an orthodox church for about twenty-three years, and read the Bible all through in the hope that some day the mystery of life and the hereafter would be revealed to me. I could not, however, grasp the spiritual meaning of the Bible, and so got no nearer to the truth. As time passed I found no real satisfaction in life, and questioned the use of living and striving to make the world better for a future generation who like us would end in dust.

A friend remarked to me one day that Christian Scientists not merely believe their religion to be true but know it to be so. I had been ignorantly prejudiced against Christian Science and its Founder, but now, despairing of learning the truth in any other way, I borrowed a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, and studied it carefully. Before I had read half through the book, the true concept of God was revealed to me; I was absolutely assured that a God who is Love does exist, that man is His spiritual child, and that life is everlasting. Many statements in the textbook seemed hard to understand, but gradually with continued study the light became clearer, and I now have the blessed assurance that "there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed."

I am very grateful for the Christian Science lectures and literature, which are wonderfully helpful, also for the loving help and encouragement given me by older students of Christian Science. Many selfish habits have been overcome. I used to worry a great deal about the health of the family, and much good has resulted since my fear of sickness was removed. A sense of financial lack was beautifully overcome through the understanding that in God's perfect creation there is no lack. When I ceased to plan and applied the truth, the need was quickly supplied.

Through Christian Science I have lost all fear of old age and death, and for the last three years Truth has been my only medicine. Words can never express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done and is doing for me and for all mankind.—Miss Emily Maud Saunders, Portland, Ore.

Each day brings fresh occasion for gratitude that Christian Science has come into my life. I have experienced physical healing many times. Weak ankles, sleeplessness, a broken arm that had remained practically useless for many years despite the untiring efforts of physicians, besides poisoning and burns,—all have yielded to the application of the truth, and I am grateful. Strange as it may seem, however, the physical healings did not mean much to me till I realized that they were proofs of the presence now of the God "who healeth all thy diseases." It was to learn of this God that I then began to study the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and I am even more grateful for the understanding of God that has come to me than for relief from physical ills. There have been times when the storms encountered seemed almost more than I could withstand, yet always peace has come after the storm, and on looking back I could see gain even when outwardly there had seemed only loss.

Those of us who do not have the privilege of church attendance are daily grateful to our Leader for the loving thought which reached out to plan blessings for one and all. The Monitor, the Journal, the Sentinel, and the Quarterly come to us regularly with help for all our needs. I wish to express my gratitude to all who make the periodicals possible for us. Class instruction too has meant much to me.

Mrs. Jennie Gar Fones Grant, La Pryor, Texas.

On page 14 of Science and Health our Leader says: "Become conscious for a single moment that Life and intelligence are purely spiritual,—neither in nor of matter,—and the body will then utter no complaints. If suffering from a belief in sickness, you will find yourself suddenly well." Recently I had occasion to experience the truth of this statement. For upward of ten days I had, to mortal sense, been suffering greatly from an attack of stomach trouble. Accompanying it was a hard, dry cough, which strained my head terribly each time I coughed. I had borne this attack so long that I had begun to see crooked, that is, in a mental way. To me the whole world was wrong; every one in it was wrong; even Christian Science was wrong.

One Sunday, after I had been at home about an hour from the morning service at church, the thought came to me to read over the next Sunday's Lesson-Sermon, and from the beginning I became so absorbed in it as to be entirely unconscious of my surroundings. Every line seemed to be a prayer for me. On finishing I moved about the house attending to my duties with this wonderful lesson in mind, till a neighbor called. When I turned from the door on seeing her out, I realized for the first time that my body had ceased its complaints. This thought startled me at first; then a feeling of awe passed over me,—I had received a benediction. The next sensation was one of joy that I had experienced a healing. Then, in the twinkling of an eye, all was changed. The world was all right; every one in it was all right; Christian Science was all that it claimed. I was myself once more.

I have been a student of Christian Science a little over two years; but in this time have had illuminations and demonstrations enough to know that Mrs. Eddy has indeed found and given to the world in Science and Health the "Key to the Scriptures," with its healing agency.

Mrs. N. F. Wilson, Lansdowne, Pa.

I have always loved our Wednesday evening testimony meetings, and have been helped much by testimonies given there, consequently I have realized that necessary as it is to tell others at these meetings of the reason of the hope that is in us, it is also necessary to send our testimonies to the Sentinel or Journal.

Eleven years ago I was a woman without hope, and after a severe breakdown was told by the doctor that I ought to be glad I was suffering from heart trouble, as it was such a clean disease. I was not glad, but was bitterly resentful and terribly unhappy. I did not want to die, and although I did not ascribe my suffering to the Almighty directly, I felt that somehow I was very badly treated. Things went from bad to worse, and at last there was supposed to be no hope of recovery. During all the physical suffering my mental state was worse. I tried to read the Bible, but obtained no relief. I then decided to have no more medical treatment, so dismissed doctors and nurses, and daily was carried into the garden that I might die there, for I had no hope.

We all prayed for help, however, and the prayer was answered. I rose from the couch after some days and went about, still depressed and miserable. A loving sister took me out driving, and a friend whom we visited told me of Christian Science and gave me some copies of the Sentinel to read. I read them and then wondered where I could find a practitioner, for all the testimonies spoke of treatment. A few days later, at another friend's house, a practitioner was pointed out to me, and I asked her for help. From the first treatment I was better, though not healed at that time, as I expected to be; still I never despaired. I knew I had found the truth which sets free, and the joy of knowing that all Christ's sayings were true, was enough for me.

I had always loved the New Testament and its teachings, but never had appreciated the Old Testament, feeling that I could not love a God of wrath who sent suffering and sickness. Now I read the pages of the Old Testament, rejoicing in the promises which are being fulfilled daily, and in the knowledge that our Father loves all His children, cares for and protects them, from the least to the greatest.

The blessings we have had through Christian Science are countless, and as a hymn says, "the half has never been told." Sickness in many forms has been overcome by the truth that makes free. My youngest daughter broke her arm, but it was never in a sling. From the first treatment there was no more pain; on the third day she could move the arm and there was no trace of injury, except slight discoloration. She carried a plate in her injured hand the night of the accident. Both my daughters were healed in a very short while of mushroom poisoning. We were all healed of measles in less than a week, and all fear of infection for others was overcome. It was a particularly bad form of the ailment, but only two were in bed one day; the others were not confined to bed at all.

I am strong and well and can do all that I wish, so with great joy and thankfulness I send this token of gratitude to God for His goodness in sending to this age a messenger to help poor humanity in its struggle against sin, sickness, and death. I wish also to say how grateful I am for the wisdom of our dear Leader in giving to the world such helpful literature as the Journal, Sentinel, and, last but not least, the Monitor. I always enjoy giving out the Monitor because it reaches those who are not prepared to read the other periodicals. As a family we are very fond of animals, and we are so glad that we can help them.

I have had wonderful protection from injury when meeting with accidents; I fell from the top of a tramcar down the stairs, and was saved by a policeman catching me before I reached the ground. A short time ago I was thrown out of a wagon, which passed over me, but no bones were broken. When falling I knew that divine Love was protecting me. I was also able to help the friend who was with me, and she was uninjured.

This testimony would be incomplete without an expression of my deep appreciation and love for the great work of our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, whom I loved from the first day I read Science and Health. As a family our blessings have been many, and our desire is to help others in the same loving way in which we have been helped.—Mrs. Phyllis B. Lys, Johannesburg, Transvaal, South Africa.

I wish to indorse all my wife has said, and to add my testimony. In 1896, during some dark days in this country, my wife and two little daughters had to leave as refugees in an overcrowded train, which was smashed up at Glencoe, in Natal. This left my wife an utter wreck, and for years it taxed all my resources to try to get her restored to health. Many doctors prescribed for her and operated on her, but it always ended in her being ordered away to Europe to undergo more special treatment, with the same result, that for a few months she remained in fair health, then a relapse was sure to set in, as her heart was pronounced affected and she could not live at this high altitude. When we had tried everything that the medical profession could do for her, we were divinely led to Christian Science. It took us some time to understand what this teaching really is, and what it required of us. I can never forget the beautiful change and blessings that came. From a home under the shadow of pain and sorrow we stepped to one of peace, joy, and happiness, and my wife has never been forced to leave here on account of the effect of the altitude on her health.

We have been students of Christian Science for nearly twelve years, and every day brings fresh joys into my life. A daughter's broken arm and many minor ailments in our home have all been healed through the power of Truth, and on no occasion have we used medicine or called in a doctor. Words are but poor means of expressing what I would like to convey; I can only strive to show my gratitude by living the life of a student of Christian Science, and by returning in work what I have received in blessings. I am grateful for our literature, and can never express my thanks to God for Mrs. Eddy's untiring work and the blessing of Christian Science.—R. V. Godfray Lys.

With a heart overflowing with thankfulness to God I write this testimony of my healing of stomach trouble and bowel disorder through Christian Science. Many other ailments too have disappeared like a mist before the sun. Medicine had been taken almost daily for years, without benefit, but when I first heard of the healing work being done through Christian Science, I turned a deaf ear. Finally a daughter in Texas was healed of serious troubles through the power of Truth, and she said I could be healed too. It did not seem possible that one so ill could be helped in such a short time, but with treatment from a practitioner I was healed in two days, and the happiness that came to me cannot be expressed in words. My hearing too has been restored. There was a bunion on the joint of my big toe, which gave me a lot of trouble in winter, but I was instantly healed of this two years ago through the realization of the truth expressed in Mrs. Eddy's statement on page 393 of Science and Health, "Have no fear that matter can ache, swell, and be inflamed as the result of a law of any kind, when it is self-evident that matter can have no pain nor inflammation."

I am thankful for Christian Science, which has taught me that God heals all our diseases, and grateful for what Mrs. Eddy has done for all the human family through her writings. The articles in the periodicals have been a great help to me, and my desire is that I may be the means of helping some one in need. My daily prayer is that the true light of God may guide and direct me in all I do.

Mrs. D. W. Stoner, Vesper, Kan.

I wish to relate a healing which occurred about three years ago, during the winter season. A cold settled in my system and later a lump formed in my left side in the region of the pleura. I could not account for this and spoke of it to a friend who explained that it was due to an abscess, and that under medical treatment such cases nearly always prove fatal. Not long after this the growth seemed to break and disappear, but my body became stiff and fear crept in. I however applied the truth to the best of my understanding and in a few days was fully recovered.

For this healing and many others that have come to me and mine I am sincerely grateful. I have been interested in Christian Science eleven years and with little aid from practitioners have been able to overcome the various ills that seem to beset humanity. My son is eleven years old and has had nothing but Christian Science treatment. Every ailment which children of his age seem subject to has been overcome through the power of Truth. I am most grateful for all the blessings that we have received, but most of all for the spiritual understanding that is gained in Christian Science. I wish to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Bolus, Detroit, Mich.

With love to God and gratitude to Mrs. Eddy I send this testimony of some of the blessings that have come to me through the study of Christian Science. Over four years ago I was stricken with what the doctors called paralysis, which resulted in my left arm hanging helpless at my side. I tried physicians of three different states, and underwent their treatments without benefit, until eventually each one declared the case hopeless. Then Christian Science was mentioned to me by one who had been reared an orthodox Jewess, and who is now my wife. She was not at the time interested in Christian Science, but has become so since my healing.

Although living in Iowa, I had absent treatment from a practitioner in Cincinnati and was completely healed in ten days. At the same time glasses were discarded after I had used them for six years, and a severe case of blood poisoning was overcome in five days. The smoking habit was the last to yield. One day, however, I felt that I really desired to be healed and asked for help, and in three days I was completely freed. My daily prayer is to know more of this truth.—Gus Hansen, Cincinnati, Ohio.

[The Methodist Times]

Faith was the means of bringing the sufferer out of his self-centered helplessness into the fellowship of those resources of divine love and power which went to restore the health, fulfill the harmony, and renew the power of the whole personality. It is more than probable that this ideal was not always completely realized in those who received healing at the hands of Christ. The process of healing by faith, though sufficient for the immediate result, was not always completely carried to the highest point and made lasting there. Yet this completeness of spiritual restoration is of the essence of our Lord's aim throughout his healing ministry. In other words, his own formula, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you," is intended to include bodily well-being through healing, as well as all the other gifts of God's providence. Hence, all our Lord's healing is redemptive, and conversely all his redemption is healing. He makes men whole.

[The Christian Commonwealth]

The word "God" denotes the growing ideal of the race; and from the nature of the case it can never be a realized ideal. To conceive of such a God is to make an idol of Him; for all idols are not made of wood or stone or some kind of metal; they are made out of the thoughts and fancies of men, wrought sometimes by the hands of ignorance and fear, and these have been the most hideous of them all. The word "God" can never, therefore, have a clear, definite, and fixed meaning—one that has the same meaning to-day as a thousand years ago; the same to the child as to the man, to the ignorant and superstitious as to the wise and learned. Its meaning to the individual varies with every enlargement of his knowledge, and to the race with every step of its advancing civilization.

[Rev. J. C. Harris in The Christian Commonwealth]

Every doctrine, however obscure it may seem, had its rise in some deep experience of the human soul. Creeds do not come out of books, but out of the hearts of men; they are not invented by theologians, nor finally settled by councils, but they evolve from the dreams and hopes, the thoughts and sorrows, the ideals and visions of the men who read the riddles of nature, who explore the seas, and weigh the stars, and bear the burdens, and make the maps. Revelation is not a past event but a perpetual process.

"A cup of cold water"

Of all the opportunities ever opened up for the distribution of Christian Science literature to mankind, none has exceeded that being presented at the present hour.

Eager for that which comforts, sustains, and protects, soldiers need just that "cup of cold water in Christ's name" (Science and Health, p. 570) which Christian Science extends.

The Postmaster-General of the United States has provided the channel, and a one-cent stamp over the official notice on the front cover of The Christian Science Journal and Christian Science Sentinel (re-mailed in the United States only) makes it possible for these periodicals to reach the soldiers at the front and at army and navy camps with directness.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to send periodicals regularly as desired, either to soldiers or sailors at the front, or at training cantonments.

Any effort to make our periodicals active and useful will prove true the statement of Science and Health (p. 570), "Those ready for the blessing you impart will give thanks. The waters will be pacified, and Christ will command the wave."

VOLUME XX JANUARY 26, 1918 NUMBER 22

Waiting Hours

LOUISE KNIGHT WHEATLEY

TO be waiting for something seems to be the common lot of humanity. If anyone doubts this, he has only to look into the deepest recesses of his own heart and see what he finds there. If he is like most of us, he will see that for a long time he has been waiting for something to happen, or to cease happening; for some one to do something, or to stop doing something; for something to come, or something to go; for something, somehow, somewhere, to change so that things will be a little different from what they now are. It may be an open secret in which all sympathetically share; it may be unguessed even by his closest friends; it may be unacknowledged even to himself; yet there it lies, in his daily thought, that delayed, hoped-for something for which he is longing, alone with God.

In this journey from the bondage of material beliefs into light and freedom we are fellow travelers, in all states and stages of spiritual advancement. Some are going rapidly, some are going slowly, all are making some progress; but to most of us there comes a time, sooner or later, when the path ahead suddenly grows so dark and uncertain that all we can seem to do is just to stand still and hold fast to the Father's hand. Such moments, indeed, are trying in a rare degree, for there are but few who have learned the sublime truth of the poet's statement, "They also serve who only stand and wait." Mortal mind does not like to wait; in fact, it heartily objects to waiting. Tenacious of its cherished plans, ungrateful for correction, and resentful of delay, it wants what it wants immediately; and failing to receive it, it indulges in impatience, fretfulness, and rebellion. Yet waiting is a really wonderful thing to him who has so risen above the mists of self-pity, self-condemnation, and self-righteousness that he can discern the lesson it brings.

Having to wait and learning to wait are two very different things. All of us have to wait, more or less, and we do it more or less gracefully according to our various dispositions and the amount we possess of what is generally called "human endurance;" but it is only the truly great who have learned to wait, whose vision has become so purified that they have been able to scale the lonely heights whereon is gathered this rare edelweiss of human experience. To such, these waiting hours seem only like gracious resting places in the day's journey, where they may turn aside for the moment, to refresh themselves with clearer glimpses of the all-wise purposes of God, and to acknowledge joyously the guidance of unerring Mind, the power of unalterable Truth, and the presence of ministering Love.

She who had learned the lesson of patience as but one other before her ever learned it, once wrote (Poems, p. 4):—

> O gentle presence, peace and joy and power;
> O Life divine, that owns each waiting hour.

Then if it is Life, or God, that owns these hours, as well as all other hours in our lives, how can they be fraught with anything but peace and joy? The aspect surely changes as we think of this,—that right there, in the midst of the fear and the trembling, is God only. When all is over, and we are safely on our way again, how sweet it is to look back upon some fertile, green oasis in the desert sand, and realize that it was not error, after all, which was holding us there in its relentless grasp, but rather the gently compelling hand of Love, bidding us pause for the reason that we could not safely go on until we had learned our lesson.

Would all this seem to imply that the eternal now of divine Mind is not an ever present and demonstrable fact? Not at all. It only means that, to human sense, our every thought has not yet been brought into obedience to the law of Christ. It only means that by patient, untiring, ceaseless endeavor we must strive so to reconstruct our thinking that each erroneous human concept shall be replaced in our consciousness by the perfect spiritual idea, of which it is but the poor counterfeit. This is not always the work of a moment, nor of a day. Just how soon it will be completed no one knows, "neither the Son, but the Father." We only know that if we persevere, the time will surely come when the last flimsy tatters of false belief will be swept away forever by the glorious, life-giving winds of Truth.

There is always the right time for every right thing,—let us never lose sight of that; but the right thing done at a wrong time may easily become the wrong thing. Let us not lose sight of that either. Then, in view of all this, how would it do to leave the selecting of that time to God? Mrs. Eddy once wrote (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 117): "According to my calendar, God's time and mortals' differ. The neophyte is inclined to be too fast or too slow . . . God is the fountain of light, and He illumines one's way when one is obedient. The disobedient make their moves before God makes His, or make them too late to follow Him." Is it not possible that we have, perhaps all unconsciously, been deciding on the move which we think God ought to make, and then wondering why He keeps us waiting so long before He makes it? Let us analyze our thought, and see how much we may have been outlining in regard to this problem of ours which seems so stubborn. How much have we been figuring in our own minds that a certain thing must happen before the desired end can be attained, that this person must do this, or that person must do something else, before our problem can be "worked out"?

Prayer which outlines a specific modus operandi is not prayer at all, as it is understood in Christian Science. Suppose we stop watching for such and such a thing to happen, and begin to realize that in God's perfect universe nothing ever needs to happen to bring about harmony, because harmony is already an established fact. We do not need to change something, or do something, or get something, in order to make man perfect, for he is so already, by divine decree. The mountain lake needs no outside assistance in order to reflect the beauties of sky and cloud and wooded slope. All that needs to "happen" is that it shall be still.

Our Leader says (Science and Health, p. 454), "Wait patiently for divine Love to move upon the waters of mortal mind, and form the perfect concept." This quietness, however, which waits patiently on Love, is by no means synonymous with that mental laziness which placidly folds its hands and lapses into helpless lethargy. There is passive waiting, and waiting which is intensively active. A drowsy summer noonday, with motionless shadows, and cattle standing idly under the shade of trees whereon no leaf is stirring, may well be called a type of passive waiting. It looks for nothing, desires nothing, expects nothing; it is still simply because there is nothing in particular to move it. Quite different is the stillness of the man who sits upon some mountain peak at break of day and watches for the sunrise. He waits for something which he knows is coming. Not a sound mars the perfect silence, not a leaf moves, not a bird note, as yet, is heard; the lonely figure itself is motionless; yet the whole air teems with the breathless hush of joyous expectancy.

Copyright, 1918, by The Christian Science Publishing Society, Falmouth and St. Paul Streets, Boston, Massachusetts. Entered at Boston post office as second-class matter

Shall we not watch for the coming of the Christ, Truth, with the same unfaltering trust with which the mountain climber watches for the sunrise? Dark clouds may yet infold us, and the night may indeed have seemed to be without a star. If we wait, however, as does he, in quietness and confidence, a little bird note of hope will, after a while, break the stillness, the leaves will begin to flutter, and a faint flush will presently transform the clouds into rosy beauty as one by one they softly roll away to make room for the glories of the rising sun.

Lessons from an Iceberg

VIOLET KER SEYMER

THE temptation to search for the origin of evil is a besetting suggestion of the carnal mind. The statement in Genesis that "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good," and the further statement by St. John that "without him [God] was not any thing made that was made," reveal beyond question that it is unchristian to seek for any origin apart from God, good. In answer to the inquiry, What is the remedy for evil? it may be said that evil is nothing but a lie, entertained, hence the needful remedy is truth alone. Our Master said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The student who allowed his thoughts to be diverted from the study of spiritual causation into a quest after the origin of evil would be plucking the forbidden fruit, rather than seeking the tree of Life.

"Spiritual causation," our Leader tells us (Science and Health, p. 170), "is the one question to be considered, for more than all others spiritual causation relates to human progress." Through repudiating as unreal that which has no spiritual causation, namely, sin and sickness, the student will soon express better health and a purer consciousness. This improvement will be in proportion as the true seeking after God has replaced the former fruitless search after suppositional evil. Who could profitably make a study of darkness? Night ensues each time this planet turns from the steadfast sun; yet darkness has no starting point. Mortals, likewise, turn toward those densely material studies which only obscure thought by deflecting it from God, the one source of true enlightenment. Only the firm declaration that evil is without causation can rid humanity of evil's seeming effects.

Perhaps we can learn a few simple lessons from an iceberg, and apply these when error chills us into the belief of icebound reserve and suffering. That immense mass, solid though it may seem, is powerless to hinder its own dissolution, when it drifts toward the sun's beneficent rays. Taken as a phenomenon of mortal thought, the iceberg surely has not the same permanence and individuality which we see indicated in birds, trees, flowers. An iceberg as a frozen mass of water resulting from the absence of the warm rays of the sun could not have been formed had those rays been present. With each returning spring the floating monster breaks away from its bleak moorings and is carefully given a wide berth by the watchful mariner, but as it floats into more genial latitudes, can it long resist the melting rays of the sun which each day causes it to steadily disappear?

What is the end of this pretentious mass? Complete dissolution, when the place which once knew it knows it no more. Similarly does Truth cause the disappearance of sickness and sin, provided we do our part in drawing nearer to divine Love in thought, and leave those arctic regions of belief in which error seeks to imprison humanity. We must abide in right thinking, by continually knowing and proving that divine Mind fits us for this task and rewards its accomplishment. Beliefs of hatred and jealousy, fear and disease, sensuality and sorrow, are but negative conditions, devoid of Mind, substance, or intelligence. Then let us admit spiritual light into these sunless recesses of mortal thought and reflect the Love which alone melts away hardness, pride, and suffering. No iceberg ever chills the sun; no hatred ever touches divine Love. The action of divine Mind brings to light God's reflection in all who apply their knowledge of Principle scientifically and honestly.

Mortal thought is apt to become morbid, introspective, and circumscribed. It needs to be dealt with as the good housewife deals with dampness; she unbars the shutters of a darkened room, throws open the windows, and invites in the abundant air and sunshine. Do pride, sensitiveness, reserve, and shyness keep our shutters barred? Are moral cowardice, dishonesty, and procrastination among the robbers which would deprive us of sunlight? Why should we consent to periods of loneliness, and unkind criticism of others, since this state of belief obviously cheats us of joy and useful activity? Perhaps a restricted, loveless childhood is answerable for much of our present aloofness and apparent helplessness; then let us waste no further time, for enough has been lost already. Let us be honest and active, and not make yesterday the scapegoat for to-day's idleness and gloom, else we should always be time's debtors. Did not our Master say, "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof"?

Now that Christian Science has revealed the scientific way of release and the positive duty of joyfulness, let us blot out false memories in order better to reflect spiritual reality; let us have done with hesitancy, with self-condemnation or self-justification, and resolve to express the harmony and supremacy of divine Principle, Love, in our daily lives. This will melt the iceberg! Then we shall find compensation, and the redemption of the past, in the golden opportunities of to-day, and we shall find ourselves enjoying the rays of God's sunshine, which is always cloudless and forever with us. If we are holding aloof from our fellows, we are probably hiding from God, hiding from the best we know. It is only as thought rises that we can forgive and forget seeming injuries, awaken out of nightmares, emerge consciously into the spiritual atmosphere of Love, and be ever ready to help, and, what sometimes seems even more difficult, lovingly accept the help of others. Whatever error of belief chills and hardens an individual is inevitably felt by those around him, if they do not yet understand how to guard against the seeming influence. On the other hand, that which blesses and melts away hardness in one, heals also the other near by who is being similarly tempted. The mortal tendency to ruminate and brood over error is seldom recognized as plain selfishness.

To commit some error, and then to hug the error, is to make two mistakes instead of one. It is the colliding rather than the dissolving of icebergs. Let us strive to reflect love enough to melt away all pent-up suffering, our own or another's, and let us not hesitate to take the problem to some faithful worker should our present understanding of Christian Science seem too feeble to cope with it. Let us not hibernate in the dark, thereby prolonging the "winter of our discontent," when at every moment the true metaphysician can impersonalize the whole thing before our eyes, reveal the truth about it, and send us on our way rejoicing. God's way is the way of enlightenment and freedom; it points to the open doorway through which all may pass out of their dark corners into the sunlight. On page 516 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says, "Love, redolent with unselfishness, bathes all in beauty and light."

In Confidence

W. K. PRIMROSE

A CERTAIN gentleman once described another to the writer as the shrewdest lawyer the speaker had ever met. The reason given for this characterization was that one could go to him for advice on any subject, and he would never afterward refer to the matter, not even to ask if his advice had been taken. The family lawyer, with the exception perhaps of the doctor, is the person who receives more confidences than any other, and the capacity to retain and hold them as sacred frequently does more to earn the respect of his clients than even professional skill. The Christian Science practitioner will, however, probably receive more confidences than even the family lawyer, and too careful attention cannot be given to the first paragraph of Section 22 of Article VIII of our Church Manual, either by members of The Mother Church or by any Christian Scientist.

To the lawyer and the doctor evil is a reality, and the secret of the client or patient, whatever has been revealed in confidence, though hidden is not forgotten. On the other hand, the Christian Scientist is learning that evil is unreal, and he regards the troubles told to him in confidence as untrue and as never having had any real existence. Immediately or ultimately, therefore, they vanish into their native nothingness—because being understood as unreal they have no abiding quality.

The genuine Christian Science practitioner would not allow himself to be tempted into discussing or even mentioning any of his cases unless he was compelled to do so by an inquiry of a relative or friend of the patient. Experience has shown that too often even these "friends" question from curiosity, and sometimes to expose the faults and failings of another or a desire to steady the ark. The admonition from the Manual already referred to, namely, "Members of this Church shall hold in sacred confidence all private communications made to them by their patients; also such information as may come to them by reason of their relation of practitioner to patient," may perhaps at first sight seem to apply only to the practitioner, but surely it can be applied also to our everyday dealings with friends and neighbors, and more especially to what takes place at our church meetings.

It is the duty of every Christian Scientist to love his neighbor as himself, and a careful study of this section will show that it is but one other loving injunction to keep ever before us the perfect man; and can we show love for our neighbor better than by doing this? Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 476): "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick."

"The infinite calculus"

KATHARINE P. BORLAND

THE responsive reading in church one Sunday morning, telling of the feeding of the five thousand in the wilderness, so illumined the writer's thought that with a little study later, a place was revealed where tired human reason could stop and rest. On this occasion Jesus bade his disciples to come "apart" from the busy throng and "rest a while." Perhaps we can reach the very place in thought where Jesus fed the multitude, and demonstrated for that time and all time an unlabored process of right reasoning,—through revelation instead of calculation. Compassion, one meaning of which as given by Webster is "fellowship in feeling," stirred the heart of the loving Master, and from this unselfed love, flowing from the fount of Love, abundance unlimited and universal poured forth, to feed forever all who "hunger and thirst after righteousness."

What was the process? What was it that soared above all material reasoning and grasped in understanding the Principle of the universe and made it manifest as a proposition which when demonstrated would multiply five loaves and a few fishes into food for thousands? Mrs. Eddy says, "Material substances or mundane formations, astronomical calculations, and all the paraphernalia of speculative theories, based on the hypothesis of material law or life and intelligence resident in matter, will ultimately vanish, swallowed up in the infinite calculus of Spirit" (Science and Health, p. 209). Having learned through revelation and not through letters, Jesus' mentality, free from "speculative theories" and at-one with the Father, knew the Principle before which the material science of numbers vanished, and he drew his deductions from "the infinite calculus," the oneness of God and His idea.

Realizing that God feeds and clothes His own idea, "the only begotten of the Father," Jesus scientifically drew the conclusion, and demonstrated it in fact, that the infinite One feeds and clothes all. Enough for one is enough for all, and the five loaves and few fishes were abundance and over for one. "In the scientific relation of God to man," Mrs. Eddy tells us (Science and Health, p. 206), "we find that whatever blesses one blesses all, as Jesus showed with the loaves and the fishes,—Spirit, not matter, being the source of supply."

What wonder was it that Jesus knew this law so well that he could prove it, and the wonder grows that one in this age could so have the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," as our beloved Leader had, to discover this same Principle and rule and reduce it to a science, that all mankind might learn that reflection and not limitation is man's inheritance. Jesus' knowledge came through obedience, for he said: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." Elijah based his demonstration on this same law in supplying the widow of Zarephath with meal that wasted not and oil that did not fail.

There are no favorites, no outcasts, no rich, and no poor in God's family. God's perfect idea, "the only begotten Son," constitutes His household, reflecting His glory and perfection. Speaking as the ever present Christ, our Master said, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Rest indeed, from ceaseless striving and the poverty of material reasoning,—rest in the rich abundance of Spirit!

Mental Surgery

HILDA BERESFORD

IN "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 9) our Leader says, "The spiritual power of a scientific, right thought, without a direct effort, an audible or even a mental argument, has oftentimes healed inveterate diseases." I am very happy to be able to testify to the truth of that remarkable statement, having been healed of cancer through Christian Science.

Some years ago I called on an eminent specialist to have a medical diagnosis. The examination showed that there was a very large growth, which had caused the affected organ to become almost twice its normal size. The physician did not express an opinion as to whether it was a malignant growth, but advised me to return to him in six weeks and go to a nursing home to be operated on. When I left his consulting room that afternoon, it was clear to me and had been before then, that humanly speaking the condition was a matter of life and death; but I had no fear, that having been overcome before I called for the diagnosis. What I had to decide there and then was whether I should undergo the operation for the sake of my family or trust to Christian Science treatment.

Looking back over the two or three years since Christian Science had first been brought to my notice, and remembering how it had helped me when all human power had failed, I had no hesitation in deciding to trust myself to God's power, as revealed and demonstrated in Christian Science. I was sure that God could and would take care of His child, and so I surrendered to Him completely.

The practitioner who had helped me from time to time was away just then, and this seemed to point to the fact that I was to do my own work, and thus prove in a practical way whether I had gained a correct understanding of Christian Science. I did not know how to cope with this particular case, being very inexperienced at the time, but I knew that I would be shown; and so I was. That evening this thought came to me: "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up;" and this thought brought about my healing. I saw the metaphysical truth very clearly; more clearly still I realized that in spiritual consciousness error had never had a foothold. So plainly did I see this that the healing began at once, as I could tell by the great upheaval which was taking place.

This upheaval did not alarm me in the least,—in spite of the fact that the specialist had said I was to report to him the moment there were any fresh developments. I understood from previous experience that Truth was at work in my consciousness, and that it was bound to conquer. After a while the pain gradually diminished, and at the end of the six weeks there was no pain at all. I returned to the specialist as arranged, and the examination showed that the growth was considerably reduced and the inflammation entirely gone. He remarked about my improved appearance, saying that I looked radiant, though the conditions had not yet entirely responded. I called again some months later for a final examination, and this time he said there was no trace of the growth left.

This experience was to me a most wonderful proof of God's love and care, and showed me that nothing is impossible in Christian Science. I was deeply grateful to have been spared so much suffering. Having arranged for another interview with the specialist, I asked him at that time to tell me frankly whether the symptoms manifested at the first examination were those of a malignant growth, and he admitted that they were. I then asked how he accounted for the fact that the healing had come about without an operation and without the use of any material remedy, and his reply was that it was an act of divine power. Of course he knew from the start that I was a Christian Scientist, and he had frequently discussed Christian Science with me in a fair, open-minded way.

Many indeed and great are the blessings that have come to me and mine through the sacred ministrations of Christian Science, but among the physical benefits I think I feel most grateful for this experience, because we hear so much nowadays of operations, and it is most comforting and reassuring to know that they are no longer necessary, now that Christian Science is here. When I see the suffering on all sides among those who do not share these blessings with us, my heart goes out in deepest praise and gratitude to God that He has given to this age the priceless pearl of Christian healing; and that one gentle woman was found loving enough, faithful enough, and dauntless enough to stand alone with God against a world of opposition, in order to bring this healing truth to a suffering world, thereby fulfilling the promise in Revelation, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ,"—the healing power of Truth and Love.

Love's Protecting Power

FLORA L. WINTER

MANY are the instances of God's loving care in the experiences of Christian Scientists. It delivers them from sickness, sorrow, and disasters, and is the means of prevention of these various things. Ofttimes we have passed through dangers not knowing they were dangers until afterward, and then we have realized how unceasingly God cares for us. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." This verse from the ninety-first psalm was most convincingly proved to me recently in an experience through which I passed. It has left such a feeling of gratitude for even the slight knowledge I have of Christian Science that I wish to pass it on to others.

One Sunday I listened to a solo sung in our church which contained these words:—

We are safe in Love's protection.

this song made a very uplifting and lasting impression upon me and I found myself going over it frequently. On the next Wednesday morning my little daughter and I started on a long motor trip, which had been anticipated with much pleasure. My husband was to join us in the afternoon, and although we had one severe thunderstorm after another all day, I did not feel afraid but felt secure in Love's protection. We were detained at our first stopping place because the train on which my husband was to arrive was delayed, so we remained over night and started early next morning, taking every possible precaution, as we had been warned of the slippery condition of the roads over the mountains ahead of us. I began my mental work for the protection of us all, as soon as we started. We had been gone an hour and a half when the unexpected happened. Just after we had passed the first group of mountains and were on a comparatively straight stretch of road, I saw that something was wrong with the car and that the chauffeur had lost control of it. I immediately declared God's allness, and that not one of us could be harmed, although to the senses it looked as though we would be dashed to pieces.

We went off the road about fifty feet, the right wheel striking a telegraph pole with such force that we were turned completely around while the chauffeur was thrown out on the opposite side. The telegraph pole was badly twisted, the wires were disconnected, and the cross bars torn off, but except for a slight shock to all and two slight cuts on the chauffeur's head, which did not disable him or cause him any suffering, we were unharmed. At first I was tempted to feel dismayed. Indeed our condition seemed hopeless, for we were eighteen miles from the nearest station, and to proceed or extricate ourselves from the difficulty seemed impossible; but I knew even then, and I have known ever since, that God was taking care of us, that He had never forsaken us. It was proved to us in a short time how wonderfully God's law always operates.

Practical assistance came to us almost at once, in a way we least expected, and inside of two hours the car was on trucks, drawn by mules, on its way back over the mountains eighteen miles to the nearest station to be shipped home. However, to our surprise we found that the car could be repaired in this small place, thus eliminating the shipping.

Before the car left, my daughter and I were taken on East by a kind gentleman. This enabled us to reach our destination that night. Our need was met at every step of the way without planning and without any sense of annoyance. Everything was adjusted for us, and I had a keener sense of the meaning of Jesus' statement, "I can of mine own self do nothing." I went on my way feeling very happy, uplifted, and thankful for the loving care so manifested, rejoicing in the added proof of God's allness and error's nothingness. My husband joined us the following day and the purpose for which we made the journey was not thwarted by any sense of loss, nor were we deprived of anything good, but were very happy during our entire stay.

Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 66), "Trials are proofs of God's care." Christian Science has given us a practical, demonstrable religion with which to meet these trials, one that enables us to solve the problems which arise each day. Surely God controls every situation and His "hand is not shortened, that it cannot save."

Light

GERTRUDE E. BALLARD

WITH vision of a seer, glad and free,
The artist casts bright halos, as he paints,
Around the heads of fair and holy saints,
That humankind their holiness may see.
So Raphael made circles clear and white,
And Fra Angelico, great rounds of gold;
Murillo, softened radiance,—gentle, bold;
All knew the truth that holiness means Light.

How humankind makes visible its thought!
One man is seen as mortal, one as saint.
Our work it is to know that God has wrought
All good in all: in thought let each one paint
His brother man with halo lasting, bright;
For everywhere shines God's eternal light.

["Treatment That Is Prayer"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 15, 1917]

Accompanying the growing appreciation of the effectiveness and availability of Christian Science healing, is an increasingly insistent inquiry as to what is Christian Science treatment, or what are the means through which are accomplished the remarkable results experienced by adherents of this teaching. That Christian Science treatment is prayer, is a frequent answer to this inquiry, and a correct one; but to the inquirer it presents another word that must be defined. Treatment that the world generally relies upon is not related to prayer. Prayer as it is commonly conceived and practiced has not proved an effective means for the treatment of human ills. It is apparent then that the conventional use of either term does not describe Christian Science practice or explain its results.

It is from the standpoint of treatment that most seekers approach Christian Science, but it is from the standpoint of prayer that they come to understand it. So far as the words are differentiated in Science, prayer is the expression of the truth in terms of God, and treatment is the expression of the truth in terms of man. When the scientific unity of God and man is realized, then the synonymity of the words is understood. Since it is fundamental in Science that man cannot be separated from God, the demonstration of this teaching requires that prayer and treatment be understood and applied as synonymous spiritual terms.

It is in terms of prayer more than of treatment that Christian Science is explained in its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy. "Prayer" is the title of the first chapter of this book, and it is marvelous how logically and comprehensively this infinite theme is developed in the brief space of sixteen pages. Any earnest, intelligent study of this chapter will reveal something of the availability and power of spiritual prayer. The reader may ponder it more deeply, and appreciate more of its application, if he remembers, while he reads, that this prayer is the treatment through which Christian Science does the works that approximate the Christlike standard of practical effectiveness in dealing with human ills.

A full statement of this treatment is contained in Chapter XII of Science and Health, and its theme is, "Christian Science Practice." The chapter begins with a repetition of Luke's account of the anointing of Jesus by a woman, who some suppose was Mary Magdalene. The whole action of the woman, as described, was practical, exalted prayer, and the transformation and healing that it brought about show its efficacy as treatment. This woman came to Jesus and, disregarding the condemnation and opposition of the onlookers, poured out her precious ointment, which was conclusive proof of her love of good and her appreciation of it as immediate and sufficient help. Every seeker for spiritual healing has need for the same gratitude and love to overcome the conventions and obstacles that seem to separate him from the Christ, or Truth.

The account of this event in the fourteenth chapter of Mark quotes Jesus to the effect that this act of the woman should be known wherever the gospel is preached. The prophecy is being fulfilled, and it is explicable on the basis that her deed is a type of spiritual prayer.

The treatment that Christ Jesus used in this case is similar enough, both in method and results, to that of his other healing works to give weight to the scientific fact that divine Principle underlies all he did. Accurate statement and demonstration of Principle, then, must be Christian Science, or demonstrable understanding of the theory and practice of Christ's teaching. A requisite of scientific treatment is adherence to the fact that man is spiritual, the idea of God, and, therefore, is perfect, contrary to the human estimate of man. Mrs. Eddy says, on page 476 of Science and Health: "When speaking of God's children, not the children of men, Jesus said, 'The kingdom of God is within you;' that is, Truth and Love reign in the real man, showing that man in God's image is unfallen and eternal. Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick." We find an example of such scientific treatment in this gospel story of a magdalen, if we realize that instead of seeing an outcast, which those about him seemed to see, Jesus' spiritual perception beheld the pure likeness of Spirit. The record does not indicate that he undertook to present this fact in words, but his silent realization of it was able, apparently, to reveal to human sense an exalted character instead of a debased one.

The climax of the incident was the Savior's declaration: "Her sins, which are many, are forgiven; for she loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little." This indicates that love is the essence of prayer. The potency of scientific prayer is clearly illustrated in the transformation of Mary Magdalene, which is described in the Bible as the casting out of seven devils. All the works of the Master disclose the utility and dominion of divine Love which, through spiritual understanding, destroys sin, disease, and death as light dispels darkness. Mrs. Eddy repeatedly declares that God is Love, and that it is Love that heals and liberates. On page 113 of her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," she affirms, "The vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love."

Christian Science proves that such unselfish seeking for good as the magdalen's reveals the allness of good and the nothingness of evil. This includes the treatment of all evil, including disease, as Christian Science holds that Jesus treated it, by dismissing it as a mistake, a falsity, without cause or entity from the standpoint of spiritual being, and letting the evidence of evil disappear. The present demonstration of this Science shows that no element of the healing power of Love has been lost. It proves that the opportunity and duty of manifesting an understanding of the presence and power of infinite Love is always at hand, and is as certain now to evoke healing as it was when Jesus dwelt in Bethany.

[Frederick R. Rhodes in The Halifax (England) Courier]

In a reference to Christian Science a writer mistakenly couples it with several isms, which are then all referred to as "doubtful things." One of the principal definitions of the word "doubtful" is given as "being uncertain;" and no one with even a small knowledge of the teachings and practice of Christian Science could either call it a "doubtful thing," or classify it with spiritualism, theosophy, or fatalism. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 129 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "Animal magnetism, hypnotism, spiritualism, theosophy, agnosticism, pantheism, and infidelity are antagonistic to true being and fatal to its demonstration; and so are some other systems."

Our Master told his followers that the best proof of the efficacy of any teaching concerning true being was a consideration of the fruits which followed that teaching. The indisputable fact that a vast army of men, women, and children scattered all over the civilized world have been brought back from the jaws of a physical death or the mouth of a mental hell, is the best reply to any destructive criticism. It would seem a pity that anyone with the right to adopt such a pseudonym as the critic, should have either the time or the inclination to traduce the teaching of those who, although differing in method, have proved to the world by the "signs following" the success of their earnest efforts on behalf of all mankind. It would be well for the "Son of the Manse" to ponder over the words of the Wayshower for all true Christians, "He that is not against us is for us," uttered upon an occasion when John ventured to criticize the action of one who "followeth not with us."

It seems rather incongruous that, after asserting that "faith in Christ must be cleared of its subtle theological aroma and brought home in a practical and really helpful fashion," our brother should designate as "doubtful" the very channel through which this true consciousness is most assuredly being given to the world.

[Samuel Greenwood in The Colonist, Victoria, B. C., Canada]

Christian Science does not deny that sin exists as a human experience, as even a superficial reading of its literature would disclose. The Christian Science movement, with its churches and other activities literally encircling the globe, exists for the sole purpose of helping men to overcome sin. Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 327): "The way to escape the misery of sin is to cease sinning. There is no other way. Sin is the image of the beast to be effaced by the sweat of agony." Also in the tenets of the Christian Science church we read: "We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal. But the belief in sin is punished so long as the belief lasts" (Science and Health, p. 497). And again on page 339, "A sinner can receive no encouragement from the fact that Science demonstrates the unreality of evil, for the sinner would make a reality of sin,—would make that real which is unreal, and thus heap up 'wrath against the day of wrath.' He is joining in a conspiracy against himself . . . Only those, who repent of sin and forsake the unreal, can fully understand the unreality of evil."

These quotations, which could be continued indefinitely if space permitted, are sufficient to show on what false grounds our critic assumes to judge Christian Science. According to his philosophy, evil will exist throughout eternity, although we have been taught to believe that God is omnipresent, and that in His "presence is fulness of joy." It is self-evident that the eternal presence of evil would make universal peace eternally impossible. It was Christ Jesus who said of the devil, "There is no truth in him," and he spent his life on earth in making good his statement. Christian Scientists will surely be pardoned for preferring the views of the Founder of Christianity.

The charge that Christian Scientists repudiate the authority of Christ Jesus is rather unfortunate, because it is well known that Christian Science accepts this authority to the fullest extent, even to the literal acceptance of the unreality of evil as given in John 8: 44, and of his teaching that healing the sick is an inseparable part of Christianity. When this speaker accepts the Master's authority as fully as do Christian Scientists, he will have some show of excuse for making comparisons; certainly not before.

The speaker's statement that Christian Science cannot be reconciled with the New Testament means nothing more than that he cannot reconcile it with what the New Testament means to him, which is as far as he can truthfully go, and which is a vastly different proposition. Mrs. Eddy does not say or imply that "the crucifixion was a fraud," as anyone can discover for himself by reading her writings. Jesus submitted to the ordeal of the cross to prove for all mankind and for all time that the man whom God creates cannot die. If such a possibility could exist, if it were ever possible for the image, reflection, of God to sink into sin and death, the perfection and immortality of man would be a myth, and mortals would be left without hope; hence the immense significance to Christian Scientists of the crucifixion and resurrection, in that Jesus' experience demonstrated the inseparability of God and man, which after all is said and done offers the only basis for human salvation. This is the real atonement.

[W. Stuart Booth in Larimer County Democrat, Fort Collins, Col.]

Christ Jesus was misunderstood, misrepresented, and maligned, all because his hearers endeavored to judge his absolutely spiritual precepts and practice from a premise of material hypotheses and doctrinal beliefs. Christian Science, which is simply the restatement of primitive Christianity and the renewal of the Christ-healing, is similarly misunderstood and misrepresented to-day, and for exactly the same reason. Paul in writing of this said, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

The claim that Christian Science healing is the result of human will power is but an echo of the assertion made two thousand years ago that the healings of the master Christian were by Beelzebub. On page 144 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says: "Human will-power is not Science. Human will belongs to the so-called material senses, and its use is to be condemned. Willing the sick to recover is not the metaphysical practice of Christian Science, but is sheer animal magnetism. Human will-power may infringe the rights of man. It produces evil continually, and is not a factor in the realism of being. Truth, and not corporeal will, is the divine power which says to disease, 'Peace, be still.'" For Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The spiritual radicalism of truth expressed by Christian Science has aroused much opposition, but this stirring of human thought has served to prepare the soil for the reception of the truth as taught and practiced in Christian Science. Its wonderful accomplishments in healing and reformation have served to silence much criticism, and honest investigation invariably results in the recognition that through Christian Science the promises of the Bible are capable of present day application rather than mere post-mortem fulfillment.

Jesus and his followers during the first three centuries of the Christian era reformed the sinner and healed the sick by their religion, but those who are now following that worthy example are accounted heretics by some who have endeavored to justify the division of the command to preach the gospel and heal the sick. Christ Jesus, in voicing that dual command as well as the promise, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," attached no time or other limit thereto, for all that he said and did was based on the immutability of God and God's universal, ever operative law of harmony and perfection. Mrs. Eddy has stated this clearly in the Preface to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. xi): "The physical healing of Christian Science results now, as in Jesus' time, from the operation of divine Principle, before which sin and disease lose their reality in human consciousness and disappear as naturally and as necessarily as darkness gives place to light and sin to reformation."

Christian Science, pointing to its Christly results, replies to its critics in the words of the Bible, "Shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works," and, "For which of those works do ye stone me?"

Benevolent Funds of The Mother Church

"You will be interested to learn that the San Francisco churches announced from the desk last Wednesday evening that contributions would be received for the relief of the Halifax sufferers. In response to this announcement $1231.70 was donated by the members of the various congregations. On the Saturday morning following, the committee on publication wired this amount."

"This is the day set apart by our President for national thanksgiving. We are most grateful for the privilege of helping our fellow man, and give thanks to the Father-Mother God for all His tender mercies, blessings, and supply, which has been bountiful. We inclose, as a freewill offering, our 'mite,' to be devoted to the War Relief fund."

"We truly desire once more to express our deep gratitude for the help given us from the American committee. We were touched by so much kindness, especially as the help came just at the moment when we needed it."

"We are so very grateful to all the Christian Science friends for passing on supply to us at such a time. We both found it so difficult in the beginning to get away from the sense of separation and lack of supply, but we held on through the maze of mortal seeming, and after demonstrating far beyond anything I could possibly outline in working out my own problem, I had the pleasure of being at home with my wife and children at the time your splendid supply came through to us, and together we were able to realize how much our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, had done for us in establishing a demonstrable religion, thereby proving to all of us the ever presence of divine Love. Words would utterly fail to express how much we owe to all of you dear friends in working so splendidly to assist us in just the right, sensible way, and we humbly, lovingly, simply, acknowledge the great help you are to us, and know that the only way to repay is to love one another with the love wherewith He hath loved us."

"Inclosed please find a money order for five dollars. Kindly use this as you see best, for either the Real Estate fund or the Benevolent Association fund. I have delayed sending a contribution until I could send a larger sum, and I realize that if the Christian Scientists who have only a mite to send had waited as I have done, the fund would not increase very rapidly, so I am taking advantage of the eternal now, as I realize we can put off attending to very necessary things until we forget them entirely."

"It is with gratitude and love to God, whom Christian Science has revealed to me as divine Principle, Love, that I send this little offering to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund."

The Strength of Kindliness

ONE who was a visitor to this continent from another shore, who came and went several times, on one of his visits confessed that the one thing impressive about the free people of the United States was their great kindliness. It is, of course, not strange that in their own land a free people should develop comradeship among themselves, and so be ready with kindness for the stranger, as if accepting him also for a comrade. Kindness is possible always where there is confidence, and confidence is the sure result of gaining a sense of Principle. Moses at the fortieth year of his leadership said, "Ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's."

Has not any man capacity for friendship of whom it can be said: "Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous. . . . He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord"? Where better than in free countries may light arise; and where more wonderfully has it arisen, than in the land where Christian Science was discovered and first proclaimed? If the ancient promise to Jacob was that he "shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid;" and if the word of the Master was, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid," how much more should foglike fear be dispelled where the monotheism of Israel and the saving power of Christianity are united in Christian Science, unfolding Principle and its demonstration. Let fear, the mother of hate, be entirely abolished, and the admonition, "Love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous," hardly needs to be spoken, because such action will be spontaneous.

A people kind and friendly is also very tolerant. The mind conscious of rectitude is unsuspicious, and to the scheming wicked all this seems weakness; but evildoers should not deceive themselves too easily or too long with such a belief, for freedom implies courage and love means strength. Should there be a refugee coming hither from a land of which it could be said, "Her princes within her are roaring lions; her judges are evening wolves," and should he, because of the new surroundings of geniality and peace, think to raven as a cowardly wolf among sheep, soon he will find that the hand giving the firm clasp in friendship has likewise strength against jaws and claws.

Wherein is this strength? It is not in the mere resistance of evil by evil in its own way of acting, thereby doubling the potency of the evil believed in. It is by drawing strength from Principle that men of right become men of might, and they find strength commensurate with their certainty that God and goodness are one. Kindliness is the expression of assurance that all is well. Mrs. Eddy gives us reassurance when she says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 113): "Divine Love is our hope, strength, and shield. We have nothing to fear when Love is at the helm of thought, but everything to enjoy on earth and in heaven."

Isaiah said: "Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in. . . . Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." In agreement with this, Mrs. Eddy in her Message "Christian Science versus Pantheism" (p. 14) says: "Pray for the prosperity of our country, and for her victory under arms; that justice, mercy, and peace continue to characterize her government, and that they shall rule all nations."

When a nation will endure the wastage of war, not to make gain for itself, but just that oppression may end in the world, and the world become a better place to live in, then is enacted among nations what occurs in a family when a grown brother protects a younger from injustice, that the little one may have his right to grow up also into manhood. We may quote one more sentence from the Message already referred to: "Great occasion have we to rejoice that our nation, which fed her starving foe,—already murdering her peaceful seamen and destroying millions of her money,—will be as formidable in war as she has been compassionate in peace."

Soldiers and Devoutness

WE are at this time being constantly reminded of our obligations to those on land and sea who are rendering such heroic service in defense of civilization, which in its truer sense means Christianity. It goes without saying that we would none of us shirk in any wise the payment of this debt; hence we need to know how we can best meet it, and as Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 1), "No loss can occur from trusting God with our desires, that they may be moulded and exalted before they take form in words and in deeds."

Students of Christian Science can never think of the men who are serving the country, whether in camp or on the battlefield, as other than the highest type of men, whose deepest needs and desires are moral and spiritual, in brief, as our brothers. If any who accept the gospel teachings question this statement they may recall Matthew's account of the centurion who came to Jesus and asked him to heal his servant who was desperately ill. We are told that when Jesus offered to go with him, the centurion spoke of his own unworthiness to have the Master enter his home, but he did not stop at this, for he added, "Speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed." We read that Jesus marveled and said to those about him, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." Nor is this all, for we are told that at Jesus' crucifixion, the centurion who stood by the cross said, "Truly this was the Son of God,"—a remarkable confession when we remember that it took Simon Peter long association with Jesus to reach this conviction and to voice his recognition of the truth it declares.

From a careful study of the book of Acts we find that Peter and also Paul brought the Christ-teaching to a number of soldiers. In the tenth chapter we read of a centurion stationed at Cæsarea and belonging to the Italian band: "A devout man, and one that feared God with all his house." We read that, in seeking further illumination from the Mind that governs the universe, he was led to send for the apostle Peter, who was then at Joppa, and his two household servants who were sent to Peter were accompanied by "a devout soldier." In this chapter we read of Peter's missionary work in Cæsarea, and here we find his inspired declaration that "God is no respecter of persons." This was followed by testimony concerning the healing work of Christ Jesus, and we need not wonder at that which follows, namely, "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word."

Later, Paul was sent as a prisoner to Cæsarea and lived in the garrison for about two years, carrying forward the missionary work which had been begun by Peter, and preparing the men with whom he was associated for becoming soldiers of Christ, and ready to carry the word of Truth to all parts of the world. When Paul appealed against the injustice which had kept him so long a prisoner although uncondemned, he was sent for trial to Rome in charge of another centurion named Julius, and while we do not read that this man was converted to Christianity, yet it is good to be told that he "courteously entreated Paul, and gave him liberty to go unto his friends to refresh himself."

It is thrilling to read of that voyage which ended in shipwreck, but in spite of this, through Paul's prayers, not one life was lost, and during their enforced stay at the island of Melita, Paul resumed his healing work, which brought supplies to himself and those with him for their further journey to Rome. Here we find that Paul was again closely associated with soldiers, and although he lived in his own hired house and was at liberty to see those who wished to talk with him he was closely guarded by soldiers from Nero's household. As those men were changed from time to time, they carried with them to the palace the Christ-teaching, and doubtless did wonders in helping to establish Christianity throughout Europe.

History has little that is good to tell us concerning the imperial household, much indeed that is too terrible to write about, but in spite of mortal belief with all its deadly tendencies we find that Truth was doing its mighty work there through the soldiers who had been with Paul. At the close of his epistle to the Philippians we find this astonishing statement: "All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cæsar's [Nero's] household." From this we learn that even there the fruits of Spirit were springing up and replacing the "murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like," which characterized the paganism of that day, with the "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance," which characterize man as God made him and as God knows him, whether he be on the human plane soldier or civilian. We cannot too often recall our revered Leader's words in her Communion Message to The Mother Church in 1898 (Christian Science versus Pantheism, p. 14): "In your peaceful homes remember our brave soldiers, whether in camp or in battle. Oh, may their love of country, and their faithful service thereof, be unto them life-preservers! May the divine Love succor and protect them."

Perfect Peace

THE conscientious onlooker viewing the world's war asks himself the question, What can I do to help establish peace? The old saying worn threadbare by tradition, "Charity begins at home," can be promptly applied to the answer of his question. What of his own state of mind? What of his motives and methods? In order to learn the meaning of perfect peace it is necessary to possess the Mother love within as well as the Father power. By tireless thoughtfulness for others, by ever readiness to help the race, by leaving self behind in being reborn, and healing the mind of sin by applying the divine Mind, true service to humanity can be established upon the right basis.

The atmosphere of war should force the righteous through a baptism of fire to establish the right ideas which heal hate, tyranny, and greed, and thus pave the way for perfect peace. Turning to God and learning of Him will eventually bring this desired boon; as Isaiah says, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee."

Parents, relatives, and friends look upon their beloved ones going off to war with a sad pride and unconscious shock of fear if there are no spiritual ideas leading thought to God. The uncertainty of the future seems to make war more real to them. Christian Science at such an hour leaves the problem in God's loving protection, assuring those who are left behind that their mental work daily given will act as the armor of heaven to their dear ones at the front; and that the experiences of the latter can be made to work out better characters through the test of courage and endurance.

Real religion grows all the stronger by use. Mere church-going and formal prayers, without spiritual living, mock the peace of God. Perfect peace is God-made and God-given. This fact when understood by mankind will some day balance the world, but at present the crust of world traditions and world power is breaking with the explosions of evil. Let there be no panic when the evil-minded send forth their propaganda of fear; rather let there be a quiet trust in God which will reassure the timid. Let fatalism fall amid the débris of creed and dogma; for circumstances call for a live religion, demonstrable by deeds of healing. Perfect peace implies perfect unity. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 22 of "Pulpit and Press": "When the doctrinal barriers between the churches are broken, and the bonds of peace are cemented by spiritual understanding and Love, there will be unity of spirit, and the healing power of Christ will prevail. Then shall Zion have put on her most beautiful garments, and her waste places budded and blossomed as the rose."

Blind chance cannot follow the Christian soldier. Perils by land and sea are not dependent upon bad luck. Man is really always under a lucky star, the star of his true being, the light of God. There is no haphazard manner of living. The outline of life is God-created and patterned after Himself. Man has the power of God to fulfill the Scriptures by loving his brother as himself and resisting the devil. The divine purpose cannot be thwarted by any evil circumstances, for God clears the way for good results. Mrs. Eddy's writings open to all mankind the understanding of real peace and love, and those who live by her teachings need hold no anxiety over the absent ones, since they have learned by true prayer to establish perfect peace within and without. God is then recognized to be Father-Mother of His own, and the Scripture is fulfilled, "For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways."

Yes, there is real and perfect peace. The "secret place of the most High" is the abiding place of this peace. Real peace cannot be found in secret places where matter dwells, for material, mortal elements produce discord, and real peace is mental. Many human efforts have endeavored in vain to find a habitation for peace. Hermits who betake themselves out of the material world in the hope of finding peace often acquire an unrest which finds vent in a souring of their dispositions and keeps off the loving-kindnesses of people. Nor can real peace be created by political strategy. The camouflage of a human invention of peace only plunges the evil-minded deeper into the abyss of mental darkness, because they assume that their deceits have been successful. Perfect peace must be founded upon Principle. In the quiet sanctuary of spiritual understanding, in the sublime, eternal bliss of God's love, dwells the dove of peace, and there live the pure-minded who are filled with Christ's fellowship.

Current Notes

SANTA BARBARA, CAL.—Plans and specifications for the new edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, will be completed, it is expected, within the next week or ten days [Dec. 20]. During the past few years the congregation has been growing very steadily, until to-day the Christian Science church represents one of the large denominations of the city. The growth of the Sunday school has been particularly gratifying, and to provide both a substantial and an adequate auditorium and Sunday school quarters the new church building is being planned.

It will occupy the site of the present structure, which will be moved to the back of the lot. While no authoritative statement has been made as to the probable cost, it is expected the new edifice will represent an outlay of between thirty thousand and fifty thousand dollars.

Santa Barbara News.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—The dedication services of First Church of Christ, Scientist, were held November 25. It was a day of joy and thanksgiving to all those who had worked and waited for this event. As an expression of gratitude, the total collections of the day are to be given to the War Relief fund of The Mother Church.

The land was purchased in March, 1907, and on January 28, 1910, ground was broken for the new edifice. Provision was made for a seating capacity of six hundred and fifty, and eight months later, on September 11, 1910, the opening services were held.

GREAT LAKES, ILL.—Christian Science services are being held at the United States Naval Training Station at Great Lakes every Sunday morning. In the neighborhood of eighteen thousand young men are quartered in the various camps. Three near-by Christian Science churches, at Waukegan, Wilmette, and Evanston, alternate in conducting the services, which are held at ten o'clock Sunday mornings in Room 3 of Instruction Hall.

The Lectures

BOSTON, MASS. (The Mother Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

In this hour of human history, when the chaff is being sifted, and will undoubtedly through the unspeakably trying experiences of the times be more and more sifted from the true grain of individual and national character, Christian Science, a demonstrable, scientific religion, based upon the divine Principle of being, stands manifesting the calmness and strength that ever appertain to pure Christianity. From the fields, shops, mines, and shipyards, where the demands are such that men and women must show the greatest industry and energy; from the ships and trenches where boundless fortitude and courage are demanded of the soldiers and sailors, come a constantly increasing flood of testimonials gratefully acknowledging added ability and strength gained by many of these men and women through demonstrating Christianity, rather than merely believing in it.

That Christian Science heals diseases which have formerly been considered incurable is no longer an open question, but this is not all of its beneficent mission. It binds up the broken-hearted, and so from the home and fireside, among all classes of society, may be heard the ever ascending and ever increasing song of thanksgiving for Christian Science and all the blessings of its comforting assurance, especially given to those who are called upon to part with father, son, or brother answering the call of patriotism and duty.

Naturally people are asking more and more to be correctly informed as to this Science of Christianity which is doing so much in a practical Christian way to meet the great needs of the hour. There is no more intimate and satisfactory way to learn what is true about Christian Science and something of what it teaches and demonstrates than to attend and attentively follow a Christian Science lecture. Thereby one may hear of the divine Principle and rule which constituted the mighty power that Jesus exercised over sin and disease and death, so that the way of health and safety, proved abundantly in his career and promised to all mankind in every age, is no longer a hidden secret. Those who are seeking this way will here learn how to find it, and those who have already entered upon it will be sustained and strengthened.—The Christian Science Monitor.

ALHAMBRA, CAL. (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Margaret W. Dyer, who said in part:—

Never since history began has the world been in greater need of salvation, never has man been in greater need of a knowledge of God, than to-day. There are many, many thousands who have testified that Christian Science has given them an understanding of God that has healed them and others of fear, discouragement, poverty, sickness, and sin. We do not doubt that it was the truth which Christ Jesus gave to the world; because he did the "works,"—he gave proof that what he knew about God opened the eyes of the blind, cleansed the lepers, and raised the dead. To-day Christian Science is demonstrating to a weary and sin-burdened world that it is the truth, the Christ, the knowledge of God which regenerates and heals; that it is the way of salvation and peace.

SEBASTOPOL, CAL. (Society).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Peter V. Ross, who said in part:—

A great change is coming over religious thought in these days. In times past people saw in Christianity little more than a means for attaining happiness in a world to come. To-day people begin to see that Christianity, when scientifically understood, affords on this plane of existence a remedy for the ills and difficulties which make up so large a part of human experience.

In former times it was supposed that the process whereby Christ Jesus healed the sick and performed other wonderful works was shrouded in mystery and past finding out. Now it is being revealed that that process was based upon a science which can be understood and applied in this age as certainly as when the Master mingled with mortals among the hills of Galilee or walked with them along the streets of Jerusalem. There is nothing strange in this revelation, for did not Jesus himself say that those who believed or understood him could do what he did? Mrs. Eddy took this promise seriously, turned to the Bible to discover the science which the Master practiced, and having discovered it, presented it to the world in such a way that all who choose to investigate may understand.

HARVEY, ILL. (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by the Rev. Mr. Hammond, who said in part:—

We have gathered here from a desire to receive light on the subject of Christian Science. We sometimes conceive the thought that we know a great deal on a great many subjects; and it is only when we enter into a study of the movement of our day that we begin to realize how ignorant we are. Unfortunately we are but children of habit, not only habits of action, but habits of thought. We are children with sect ideas and petty prejudices, and are willing to accept of our knowledge second hand. We oftentimes close our minds because of our preconceptions of the things that have come to us, without looking into these questions for ourselves.

If our ideas are false, the sooner we are rid of them the better. If we are in possession of the truth we need not be afraid of any light which may be brought upon the theories that we hold.—The Harvey Tribune.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. (Harvard Society).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Bliss Knapp, who said in part:—

As university men, and especially Harvard men, you will concede more and more the demands of truth. Indeed, the word truth has been emblazoned on the Harvard shield to be raised as the standard of Harvard thinking. Those of you who are students in this great university, are searching out the meaning of the word truth. Following the line of least resistance, and influenced largely by the thought of the world, you may be inclined to think of matter as the basis of truth. Your search after truth, therefore, may lead you to confine the scope of your activities to the realm of matter.

We learn in Christian Science that absolute Truth is essentially mental. Speaking of that unchangeable Mind which is absolute Truth, Job once declared, "He is in one mind," and Moses declared of God that He is "a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." Starting from the viewpoint of absolute Truth, Mrs. Eddy presented a pure Science that admits of no approximation, a Science which corrects the errors of every human problem, establishing the truth about health and purity and life.

Cambridge Tribune.

BROOKLYN, N. Y. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Joseph M. Thomas, who said in part:—

Never before in the history of the world has there been a greater need for spiritual understanding in the affairs of men and nations than at this particular time,—an understanding of God that lifts thought above the clamor of these trying times and establishes in consciousness the true brotherhood of man. This better understanding of God and man has been given to us, in a measure, through the study of Christian Science, and we rejoice that with it we can pray with a greater fervency than ever before and with a greater assurance that our prayers will be answered. This larger understanding of God and man is not the exclusive property of a certain favored people, but is, through the revelation of Christian Science, available here and everywhere for all mankind.

On page 113 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy has written, "The vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love;" and on page 13 of the same book she says, "Love is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals. It is the open fount which cries, 'Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters.' " Therefore Christian Science, which emphasizes love for God and man, is impartial and universal in its application to the needs of men.

Our hearts are full of gratitude to God as we write of the wonderful protection that our youngest son, five years old, experienced recently. When dinner time came, the boy did not appear, but no fear was felt for his safety until the meal was over and we started a search for him. By four o'clock that afternoon there were a number engaged in trying to locate our boy and his playmate, when one of the men happened to remember that he had seen the two boys playing near a cave in a sand bank close to the other boy's home. Two or three of the men hastened to the bank and found that a large overhanging shelf of clay and sand had given way. Shovels were secured, and after digging a short time our boy's hand was uncovered and he was taken out. He was able to answer when spoken to. The other little boy was uncovered a few minutes later, but he had passed on. His family know nothing of Christian Science.

Our boy was carried home, and the first thing we asked him was to declare that God was his Life, and a few other statements of truth, as taught in Christian Science, and he replied that he had said a lot of truth while he was in that hole. While he was sore and bruised for a day or two, he was able to eat his meals the next day, and was not long in fully recovering from his experience. The Sanders County Ledger, on September 20, had a lengthy account of the accident, in which was this comment: "That both little lives were not taken is considered little short of a miracle and is the cause of deepest gratitude on the part of parents and friends of the boy who escaped." The wonder of the community is how he could be completely covered for a period of about five hours and live through it all, but as Mrs. Eddy says in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 215), "Whatever is governed by God, is never for an instant deprived of the light and might of intelligence and Life."

We are thankful to God for the truth as taught in Christian Science, and to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of this practical religion, which is able to heal and save to the uttermost.

Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Near, Thompson Falls, Mont.

In gratitude for Christian Science and what it has done for me I should like to write some words of thanks. I was brought up in the evangelical reformed religion, which is held to be based strictly on the Bible, but I found its teaching contradictory and there seemed no logic in all our human existence. From childhood I suffered from many diseases, and being like one without hope in this world, I thought the best thing for me would be to die. I, however, began to seek for the truth in books and in other religious congregations.

In this state of mind, I found Christian Science in the beginning of 1910. I can never describe or forget the wonderful illumination which came to me with the revelation of Truth. The scientific comprehension of God as Love enraptured my sense with overwhelming bliss. I felt myself in a consciousness of heaven, here and now, in which is no sin, disease, nor death. Then this light of spiritual understanding began to destroy the shadows of sick beliefs, and I was healed of a stomach trouble which had distressed me with its pains half my life. I was also cured of anæmia, neuralgia, and other ailments. These "signs following" were indeed cause for rejoicing, but what made me most happy was the recognition of having a life purpose as God's own child and to know how to love my neighbor as myself.

After about two years the stomach trouble returned as a result of fear because of my changed manner of living. I worked very hard as taught by Christian Science, and with the realization of divine Mind in which all action is harmonious and good, the trouble disappeared in fifteen days. Now I do not even catch cold, and when discord seems to appear, harmony rules in a short time through the application of divine law, the law of Life, Truth, and Love.

I am truly grateful for Christian Science, for all Mrs. Eddy's books, the periodicals, and all else in connection with it. The Christian Science literature is to me an inexhaustible source of joy and exaltation, thanks to the busy workers in Boston.

Miss Anna Katharine Leuzinger, Petrograd, Russia.

Though interested in Christian Science only two years, I feel that I have sadly procrastinated in not sending to the field my acknowledgment of a few of my blessings at least, for it would take too much space to enumerate all those which have come to me since I turned to Truth for help. The dear friend who first brought the subject to my attention was so determined I should know its real meaning that although I scoffed at the idea of help from such a source, eventually, through the very great kindness of an absent practitioner, I was gently led to see the allness of God and that nothing is impossible with Him. In a few weeks' treatment I was entirely healed of nervous exhaustion from which I had suffered for ten years, having had, during that time, seven doctors in consultation, none of whom was able to give me any relief.

While I was being treated by the practitioner for a sense of lack, having faced many material losses in the past two years, I was also overjoyed to find I had no more need for glasses, which I had been compelled to wear for twenty-three years. When in California four years ago I had been forced to consult a specialist, who informed me that my eyes were in such a condition I would never be able to take off glasses except upon retiring at night, which seemed all too true, for I many times tried going without them, only to suffer intensely for hours afterward. He also said I would require to have the lenses changed every two years. Instead of all this I am able to sew all day long, and use my eyes in any and every way necessary.

For these healings I shall never cease to be grateful, though the spiritual uplift and right concept of God far exceed all other blessings and give strength and courage to meet the daily requirements. My gratitude goes out to our wonderful Leader, who labored so long and patiently that all suffering humanity should know the truth that frees from all discords and gives us a brighter, healthier, and happier outlook on life.

Mrs. Emily L. McVittie, Victoria, B. C., Canada.

"God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." The foregoing statement from the first epistle of John was to me for many years a meaningless though well-sounding phrase, without any possibility of practical application. It seemed impossible to dwell in love while being cognizant of the many forms of discord which sooner or later threaten every human being. Many other Scriptural phrases from Genesis to Revelation were relegated to the class of humanly useless expressions, until finally the Bible seemed a self-contradictory, mystifying record of inconsistencies, and therefore of no practical use, other than possibly to support a blind faith in a far-off God. The temptation to abandon all belief in God was not entertained; I chose rather to continue my search for a God whom I could conscientiously worship as omnipotent, omnipresent, and omniscient, yet who was not the author of the suffering which seemed to abound everywhere.

I had heard of Christian Science some eight years prior to this, but being much prejudiced, I gathered from the first discussion of the subject with a non-Scientist that it was merely another ism based wholly on mental science and arbitrarily linked to the operations of God. Nevertheless, the feature of healing, which I did not doubt, impressed me as worthy of consideration, and I concluded that later on I might look into the subject for the purpose of securing information only, in connection with my interest in the general subject of psychology.

Time went on without any further thought being given the matter, until I found myself harboring all sorts of beliefs which led to sin and sickness, and clinging to habits which threatened to disrupt my home and business life, without any definite means of relief. At this point I became much impressed with the eighth chapter of Romans, and this, together with the record of the healing works performed by Jesus, caused me to look into Christian Science. I was in a very unsettled condition of thought, when, during a luncheon period of one hour, I visited a Christian Science reading room, but on returning to my office I realized that I had seen the light—that I had found God; a God who is Love, and in whom "is no darkness at all," a God who is of "purer eyes than to behold evil" and cannot "look on iniquity."

I visited the reading room regularly and soon purchased a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Before reading it half through, I discarded glasses which had been worn for about six years, under the belief, based on a specialist's diagnosis, that I could never get along without them. The Bible had by this time become a treasure house where an inexhaustible supply of spiritual food was to be found. The book of mystery had become one of spiritual guidance, leading me into an active understanding of the allness of God as Spirit. My earnest seeking had resulted in finding the "pearl of great price," and there was cause for much rejoicing, but the letter more than the spirit was unconsciously emphasized in my affairs, and, not using the "talent," I suddenly found myself almost completely enveloped by a dark and surging sea with but a gleam of light to give me hope.

Neurasthenia, accompanied by severe self-condemnation, presented a gigantic problem, and for a time the struggle appeared to be hopeless, but with the assistance of practitioners and by clinging steadfastly to the "Rock of Ages," I was gradually lifted from the depths into the light of day. With Paul I can now say that I rejoice in tribulation, for through this wilderness experience I have gained such an understanding of God as will sustain me in all things, regardless of how dark and threatening the storm of human belief may appear. I know that I have experienced that transformation referred to by Paul when he said, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind," and the spiritual uplift is beyond description. Periodical headaches, believed to be hereditary; serious stomach trouble; chronic bowel disorder; nervousness, with all its attendant forms of impatience toward my family and my business associates; influenza, colds, and inflammation, all have been overcome, while business difficulties and other problems have been solved, through the application of the knowledge obtained in reading the Bible and the Christian Science textbook.

My wife has become an earnest student of Christian Science, and she also has experienced many beautiful healings during the three years in which we as a family have relied solely on the great Physician, Christ, Truth. Our two children have been wonderfully healed and protected, and today I am grateful beyond words for the new home atmosphere, for the interpretation of the words of our Master, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you," and for the joyous liberty in the truth, attendant upon the acceptance of the loving invitation, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."—ARTHUR J. PERROW, Westfield, N. J.

I am very glad to confirm my husband's statement of his healing. He has truly "put off the old man with his deeds" and has "put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." The acceptance of divine Truth as the healing power and only source of strength and comfort has made our home full of joy and peace. I am daily more grateful for my understanding of the Christ, Truth.—MRS. GLADYS M. PERROW.

The greatest blessing that has come into my life is Christian Science. I have had many blessings and feel very grateful for them, but my gratitude for this truth knows no bounds, and words can never express it. I turned to this teaching because I was weary and worn and sad. Such a condition of mind was in need of healing, and I found it in reading Mrs. Eddy's book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." The world to me had long been a huge puzzle. All its sorrow and sin and sickness I could not unravel. I thought if I could only die it would all be explained to me, and longed earnestly for that day. Christian Science has shown me that Life alone can explain life with its many problems. What a relief that has been to me only those who have been helped through this healing truth can understand fully. It came as a great revelation to me that my life "is hid with Christ in God," and is not in the flesh. That startled me out of my dream of life in matter and made me study deeply the things of God. I soon saw that the human mind with all its stupid beliefs had to be regenerated and I had to grow into the Mind that was in Christ Jesus. That, I find, is the work of eternity, and a work of joy as one experiences the peace which the world cannot give and the world cannot take away. To God I owe endless gratitude for the wonderful revelation of the truth given to this age through Mrs. Eddy's teachings. My daily prayer is that I may be used to help others as I have been helped.

MRS. GEORGE D. INNES, Rusholme, Manchester, England.

Eighteen years ago Christian Science came to me. One doctor had said that an operation might benefit me, while another said he could do nothing more for me and gave me no hope; but right here Christian Science intervened, and I was healed of nervous prostration, also of a spinal trouble which was very painful, besides many other disorders. I was out of bed the first day after treatment, although I had been confined to it for six weeks. I would indeed be hard-hearted if I were not thankful to God for this freedom, and grateful to our beloved Leader for showing us how to know the truth and be free. Before coming into Christian Science I was always sick, never knowing a well day. Now friends and neighbors marvel at the amount of work I do.

I am so grateful for what our literature is doing; it certainly is one of our greatest preachers, for the gospel to a great extent is being sent forth through it. It is such a relief to take up a copy of one of our periodicals and know that everything printed therein is good and is true. The peace and comfort that Christian Science has brought to me cannot be written on paper, but, as our dear Leader says, we must let our lives attest our sincerity.

We are told that "man's extremity is God's opportunity." I was to undergo an operation, but a week before the date fixed for it a neighbor handed me a copy of the Herold, with the remark that possibly I might find something in it that would comfort me. I read with great astonishment the testimonies of healing, and there was one which referred to a case similar to mine. I said to my neighbor I knew I would be healed because I had confidence in God. The next day I went to a Christian Science practitioner whose name was found in the Herold. Treatment was lovingly given me, and I cannot express in words the awakening to life which I experienced. After seven treatments I was completely healed of bowel disorder for which I had doctored two and a half years and which had caused me a great deal of suffering, also of acute stomach trouble, liver complaint, hemorrhoids, and nervousness.

My husband and my child too have experienced wonderful healings. Through the little understanding I have of Christian Science and my great confidence in our Father-Mother God my child was healed of an attack of paralysis in an hour and a half. I must add that the ninety-first psalm has been a great help to me. In it we read: "His truth shall be thy shield and buckler. Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night . . . nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness. . . . A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee." Where can error or pestilence find room when God, good, fills all space! My realization of the truth of these words was so clear that all symptoms of the disease vanished into their nothingness. The light of Truth shone around us. At another time my husband complained of a strain in his side. We took the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and together went through a lesson outlined in the Christian Science Quarterly, and when we had finished, my husband was healed.

I could write of many more blessings. The illumination of the Christ-teaching and the understanding of God are the true friends and the wealth of mankind. They mean our daily supply. I am deeply grateful to God and my fellow men who have helped me to search the deep things of God. I am also very thankful for our daily paper; in fact for all the Christian Science literature. It is very edifying. I acknowledge the great love of our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has enabled us to do good through the power of divine Truth, and am happy to have been accepted as a member of Third Church of Christ, Scientist, Philadelphia.

MRS. ELISABETH LAUMER, Philadelphia, Pa.

I would like to give testimony through the Sentinel of the good that Christian Science has brought to me after many years of suffering. After undergoing three operations with the hope that I would be made well,—the doctors having all said I should be a new woman,—I did not seem any better, although I continued to have medical treatment for months after the last operation. One day the kind doctor said he would like to have me go to another specialist, but on my way home from his office I met a friend who asked me why I did not try Christian Science. At first I refused to listen, but she was so loving that I said I would try anything that would do me any good so as not to have to go to another doctor. I had lost all faith in everybody and everything, and also believed that God brought disease and suffering. My talk with a Christian Science practitioner convinced me that I was wrong in thinking as I did, and I promised to do differently. I gave up all medicine, and from that day began to feel better, to see everybody and everything in a different light. I can look back over the last three and a half years and know that most of my troubles had been brought on from worry.

I am thankful to God for the love and happiness that have come to me through Christian Science, also grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this wonderful healing truth.

MRS. MARGARET J. WESTWOOD, Waltham, Mass.

Often have I wanted to relate the benefits derived from the study of Christian Science, and tell of the peace and contentment that have come to me through its influence; but I have hesitated, as there has been no special physical healing in my case, although many minor troubles have disappeared. I once heard some one say that every healing in Christian Science is wonderful, that through it we have touched the hem of Christ's garment and consequently have drawn nearer God.

On looking back some eight or nine years, I realize that my whole life has been changed; it has truly been regenerated. After all, it is the little things that go to make up one's individual experience, and it is this day-by-day overcoming and fulfilling which mean so much to the student of Christian Science. It is putting off the old man and putting on the new for which he is patiently working. My outlook on life has become enlarged and enlightened; much fear, worry, and doubt have disappeared, and I know that with increased spiritual understanding I shall grow into a yet higher sense of life and usefulness.

Christian Science appealed to me from the first, although I had been very well satisfied with the religious faith of my childhood; the first chapter, on Prayer, in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" almost convinced me. I had never given the deeper questions of life much thought, but the first few pages of this book far surpassed anything I had ever read or heard about God, and it seemed to me that this was indeed the only way to worship and honor our heavenly Father. I therefore kept on reading, although there was much I did not understand, and at times I doubted whether one could live such a beautiful and trustful life. I remember being greatly disturbed shortly afterward; time-honored beliefs were slipping away, and I experienced a sense of helplessness. It seemed as if this book was turning things upside down; and so it was. The teachings of the past were being reversed, lifted from the material to the spiritual; my little world was being shaken, and the words of one of the prophets clearly came to me, "I will overturn, overturn, overturn, . . . until he come whose right it is." After that there was no more doubt; I knew this was the truth, and began to look forward to the time when I too could call myself a Christian Scientist, little realizing then all that the name includes. There have been trials as well as rejoicings along the way, but there has remained one comforting thought, that I was growing nearer God, and at least trying to follow in the way of Christ Jesus.

I feel deeply grateful for the life of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who so lived and loved that we might again have this new-old truth; for her wisdom and clear foresight in leading the way for all those who would follow; but our appreciation of her life work can best be expressed in deeds, in active and watchful service.

I am also grateful to the faithful staff of workers who so well provide for our periodicals, meeting the needs of those who far and near are desirous of knowing more of the truth. The Sentinel and the Journal have often come with a message of light when nothing else had met the need. The testimonies have proved most helpful; indeed, my own troubles have often disappeared while rejoicing with another in his victory over some phase of error.

The Monitor with its clear, clean, and cheerful pages is ever welcome. This paper has been a veritable education to me; it has broadened the mental horizon and truly interested me in the affairs of the world, whereas before I was so wrapped up in my own self and surroundings, and in a false sense of patriotism, that what our brothers were accomplishing on "the other side" interested me little. Now I know that all progress and enlightenment the world over is God working in the midst of us; and as Mrs. Eddy has written (Science and Health, p. 256), "Progress takes off human shackles."

Sometimes when we allow our thoughts to dwell on the strife and contention among mortals, and think of the great cleansing work to be done, we may lose heart, but only for a moment, for our Leader has well provided for any such discouraging thoughts; her writings are full of encouragement and admonition. My heart is full of love and gratitude for this blessed truth; it is truly the fountain of living waters of which all may drink and be satisfied.

Mrs. Susan B. Grant, Ancon, Canal Zone.

Mrs. Eddy defines angels as "God's thoughts passing to man" (Science and Health, p. 581). This was beautifully proven to me some time ago. In the house where I lived two persons passed on with influenza. This gave me much concern, with the consequent result that I was seized with the same symptoms, and although I worked diligently for a week, as we are taught to do in Christian Science, the condition seemed to get worse, so it was deemed advisable to call for help from a practitioner. I was attending to my regular duties the best I could under the circumstances, but was so ill that I told the practitioner I would have to go home and go to bed. She, however, assured me that this was not necessary, that whatever my duties were I was about my Father's business, and with this assurance I again resumed work. Within an hour the thought came to me, "He sent his word, and healed them." Needless to say, I was better in a short time, and in two days was perfectly healed.

This experience meant very much indeed to me. It made me realize more fully the ever presence of God and His constant care and protection, regardless of the seemingly insurmountable difficulties which present themselves in our daily lives. Christian Science is the greatest thing that ever came into my life, and words are inadequate to express my gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer of this wonderful truth and Founder of this great movement.—M. J. McWilliams, Baltimore, Md.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me during the past few years that I send my testimony. When Christian Science found me I was in the depths of despair. We moved into quarters at Fort Wayne, Indiana, and there I found a copy of the Sentinel and also of the Journal. What I read in them was a revelation to me and gave me hope. I went to see a practitioner, and through her patient and untiring efforts many discordant conditions have been overcome for me.

I am grateful for this healing and for our textbook, which is certainly a "Key to the Scriptures." Before taking up the study of Science and Health I never even read the Bible, but now it is studied every day. My daily prayer is that I may be able to help others as I have been helped along the way.

Mrs. Jessie Hough Rucker, Fort Snelling, Minn.

Twenty-one years ago the Christ, Truth, was brought to my consciousness, and as a result these have been years of peace and contentment, and life has been worth living. I am indeed thankful to God that I live in this period in which the truth given to the world by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, is now so widely known. For eight years prior to coming into Christian Science I suffered from conditions named by the doctors neuralgia and catarrh of the stomach and bowels. Every material remedy of which we knew had been put to the test and found wanting. My prayer for years had been to know and do the will of God, so when Christian Science was brought to my attention in my extremity, a few minutes of conversation convinced me that my prayer was being answered. The unfoldment to me of God as the giver of good only, brought back to my thought my childhood sense of God and that the Christ-healing was for all time. From that time new hope and courage were born in my consciousness, and I began to read the Scriptures from a very different standpoint.

Soon after this time I moved from the farm where I had been living to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where I was a stranger in a strange city. There were then very few people interested in Christian Science in that locality, but my desire for truth opened the way, and after three months some one loaned me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." In a few hours of study I realized that my suffering had disappeared, and it has never returned. Since then I have had daily proofs of God's presence and His power to overcome evil with good. I have been able to overcome ptomaine poisoning, also severe headaches, in a very few minutes.

I am indeed grateful for Christian Science literature and the privilege of attending church services. Many benefits have been received from the testimonies given at our Wednesday evening meetings. I am also deeply grateful for spiritual understanding, even in a small measure, for it has enabled me to be of some help to my fellow man.

Mrs. Keziah M. Brown, Omaha, Neb.

It is with a sense of deep gratitude and thankfulness that I write this testimony. I am the mother of three little children, and each day brings forth greater joy for the understanding of Christian Science, which has enabled me to know God, who is Love, and to think of my little ones as His perfect ideas. The sense of peace and security which this knowledge brings is beyond expression.

To Mrs. Eddy, whose perfect understanding of the truth has enabled all mankind to partake of this rich legacy, we owe endless homage. My daily prayer is to live the life of a true Christian Scientist.

Mrs. Alice Gillelen, Los Angeles, Cal.

From the Press

[Rev. Joseph Fort Newton, D.Litt., in The Christian Commonwealth]

There is, first of all, the law of faith—faith in God, faith in life, faith in man; faith in the love of God and His nearness, in the infinite value of the soul and its eternal life. For Jesus the great, deep, tender word Father best told the truth about God, and his attitude toward man was only the other side of his vision of God. The two were so interwoven in his faith that he never thought of them apart—God and man and their eternal life together being the theme of his gospel. No one on this earth has ever believed in man as Jesus believed in him. He saw in each human soul the possibility of eternal development. He trusted man, expected great things of him, even commanding him to be perfect as God his Father is perfect.

[The Living Church]

Man can discover very much of the will of God simply by knowing the nature and the attributes of God. God is just; hence, God's will is that justice should prevail on the earth. God is good; hence, God's will is that goodness shall prevail. God is merciful; hence, God's will is that mercy shall prevail. God is love; hence, God's will is that love shall sweep through all the earth and include in its scope every child of man. Whatever happens as a result of injustice, or wickedness, or the reverse of mercy, or hate, is not the will of God. God is not so inscrutable but that these deductions are certainly true. They may be reached by processes of the human mind, but they are processes that the human mind knows to be accurate. Up to the extreme limits of the human mind, man is conscious that things fundamental in human reasoning are true.

Without charity all your good ideas, all your schemes for the reconstruction of society, will profit you nothing. Democracy itself is ultimately an affair of the charity that never faileth. The true aim of democracy is to establish the spirit of good fellowship, to make it the law of life for the community, to introduce it into the relations of all classes and all parties and all churches in the state. Short of that, democracy lacks the power which would give effect to its ideals. The greatest of all reforms at the present moment, at any moment, would be to bring the spirit of good fellowship into the life of the people.

The Rendezvous of Good

The Christian Science Monitor provides a place for the forces of good to mobilize.

It is not necessary for the moment for all of the "millions of unprejudiced minds" (Science and Health, p. 570) and all Christian Scientists to agree in detail upon all subjects, in order to work together toward the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth.

The earth is being torn by Armageddon, the great conflict between the positive forces of good and the negative forces of evil.

The fields of grain must first be saved from the destroyer before there can be need of final winnowing of the grain.

In the crucial hour the world is coming to recognize the uplifted standard of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, an international daily newspaper, founded by Mary Baker Eddy in 1908.

The Monitor is standing firmly with democracy against autocracy, with abstinence and sobriety against license and insobriety, with the cause of equality for the sexes and against the forces which seek to perpetuate the disfranchisement of woman, with the cause of medical and religious freedom and against the reactionary elements of organized medicine and proscriptive religion.

The world requires the help of Christian Science. This help will be extended with far greater effectiveness by studying the world through the lens of the MONITOR and by increasing the distribution of the MONITOR throughout the world.

LIFE

MARY BAKER EDDY

[This sermon, the manuscript of which is in possession of The Christian Science Board of Directors, was prepared by Mrs. Eddy, evidently for oral delivery, over thirty-five years ago, hence its literary style differs somewhat from that of her later writings.

In order to preserve to the fullest extent the power and originality of this important statement, the text of the original manuscript is printed below exactly as written. Punctuation has been added, Scriptural references verified, and capitalization made in accordance with Mrs. Eddy's rules. A few words which had been omitted are supplied within brackets, and in two cases where the reader is referred to Science and Health, obvious omissions in the manuscript have been supplied with the authorization of the Christian Science textbook.—EDITOR]

John 14:6. I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.

1st. What is the "I" referred to in the text?

2d. Is Life both matter and Spirit?

3d. What is Life?

4th. What is death, and what is the condition of man after death?

1st. The "I" referred to in the text is not a person, it is a Principle. It is not a man, it is God. Jesus said, "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself." Jesus was a man; he first became obvious to the personal senses as a babe whose infant wailings blent with the bleating of the goat and the lowing of the kine, in a remote Judean province. In Josephus' time there were several individuals by the name of Jesus—[the fleshly]* Jesus was not Christ; Christ was but another name for God, and it was an honorary title bestowed on Jesus for his great goodness. In the original texts the term God took its origin from the word good,—hence the term Christ Jesus, a good man.

In the passage "I am the way, the truth, and the life," the "I" alluded to is God—the divine Principle of the man Jesus and was that which guided his way in Science. To this divine intelligence the different periods have affixed the terms Deity, Jehovah, Christ, and God. These terms should be understood to express God as divine substance and intelligence that belong not to man neither to a person; but are an infinite Principle. The gross materialism at the commencement of the Christian era, required a very spiritual man to teach a divine Principle and to show by his own demonstration what this Principle is and the results of understanding it.

Jesus was the man for the age; he could best explain Life as God, but his rules and their illustration were misinterpreted. The God-Principle of the man was not understood; had it been, they must have admitted that Jesus' demonstration proved his Principle, and his Principle explained his demonstration. Truth and Life understood cast out error, heal the sick, raise the dead, and this demonstration brings to light the Truth of Life and the Life of Truth. One fact in Jesus' history is clearly apparent, namely, that his Principle, rule, and method of healing were Mind not matter, that he required not drugs, dogma, or doctrine to aid his work.

He only insisted on making the fount pure to make the streams pure; he argued that mind must first be right to set the body right, that we should know the Principle of man, and better understand God—yea, that we should have the Science of Life, for without it the demonstration of Life or Truth can never be made. Science demands a healthy mind and a healthy body,—and mind healthy because it is imbued with Truth, and the body healthy because it is governed by this mind. The entire tenor of Jesus' teachings were first to set thought right with the Truth of being; 2d, To learn how to govern the body by this Truth; 3d, To govern the body by it. Believing that God is a person, hinders the understanding of this divine Principle and its demonstration. We cannot demonstrate a person, therefore a person is not the power that heals the sick in Science; we can ask a person to doctor our sicknesses and to forgive our sins, and that is all we can do, but we can do more than that with a Principle, we can work it ourselves to this result, and following its divine rule, with [it] we can destroy sickness, sin, and death, and this in accordance with the Scripture, "Work out your own salvation . . . For it is God which worketh in you." Truth destroys error even as light destroys darkness. Sin, sickness, and death are error; they are beliefs and this fact found out will at length destroy them. Truth evolves life as a result of itself, for Truth is immortal, and the truth of Life would destroy death. But this understanding comes slowly; even to learn that matter has no sensation is quite a task, although this simple proposition is self-evident.

In the text, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me," we naturally ask, What is this way referred to? The way to harmony and the demonstration thereof is through the understanding of its Principle by which we can produce the harmony. A person believed in is insufficient,—the way, therefore, for this is Science and no man cometh to the Father, that is, can understand the Principle of being except through Science. Through Science alone can we learn Life and demonstrate our understanding of it with Life and not death.

The Scriptures tell us that, "Perfect love casteth out fear," but this first commandment is our very last resort; we are even taught to fear God, when it is Science to so love goodness that we possess the power of good to heal and save. If we understood God, we should have no cause to fear Him; we should know that He never punished a man for doing good; never made a law to produce softening of the brain because of overmuch humanity, or perfect love, and the fear of such a law and the consequences thereof, would be cast out by a correct idea of God. We may talk to you of metaphysics, its divine Principle, rule, and application, once every week, but this gives you little insight into the Life through which we learned metaphysics and through [which] you must learn it. This weekly service, however, may point the way like a milestone,—that is all. The apostle says, "How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent?" Paul knew that a theoretical drill, and the grinding of scholastic mills, are not the preparation for a moral teacher. He knew that inspiration cometh from Truth, from the Spirit, and not the letter. A child God-driven is more capable of uttering Truth in its sweet simplicity and the power of Love than a merely manufactured theologian; hence the Scripture, "Out of the mouth of babes . . . thou hast perfected praise." We all shall know when Truth is at work in Science, for it will heal our sicknesses and stop our sins. In the exact proportion that we understand Truth will it heal us mind and body, and in the proportion that we adopt error will it produce sin, sickness, and death.

2d. Is Life both matter and Spirit? Life is so considered; even the Scriptures referred to it thus in the dark ages of burnt offerings and sacrifices. See Genesis 9:4, "But flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat." But this was ritualism, a materialistic religion which deluged the earth with blood. In the gospel of the more spiritual Christianity, we learn Life oppositely. In Romans 8:6 we read, "For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Isaiah 38:16, "O Lord, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit." Romans 8:2, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." II Timothy, ". . . Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

Our conceptions of Life as Spirit come of Science, and they exalt the aims, consecrate the motives, and purify the affections; but our conceptions of life as matter debase, subjugate, and make mortal. The only evidence we have of material life is furnished by the five personal senses, and what are these senses, but matter? Nerves and brains are as directly matter as a shoe-string, or a jelly. Through optics, olfactory, or tympanum, we can obtain not the slightest sense of Deity; we can neither see, hear, taste, nor smell Life, therefore it is self-evident that Life dwells not in that through which it is impossible to gain the least idea of Life.

Anatomy would have it that blood and nerves inform us correctly regarding a man's life, when it is plain that Life is Spirit, and that matter can take no cognizance of Spirit. Again, we say nerves recognize life and life is organic, but how can nerves feel or recognize life more than a stone or any form of matter can feel it or take cognizance of it? The only life the personal senses recognize is through mortal mind and a belief of structure that accident may destroy according to another belief. Life is Spirit and never matter, nor can it be structural, since it is infinite. Again we say, nerves recognize life as beginning and ending, even from the fading flower to the falling world, from the death of the grass to the death of a man. But while nerves are thus falsely testifying of life and death, something is ever saying, "I live, I am, and what is more I am learning that Life is Mind and not matter, and that Mind forms its own ideals of all things; that mortal mind peoples the vegetable, animal, and mineral kingdoms with creations of its own, giving to each and all its own mortal outline, form, and color, while the formations of immortal Mind or God are indestructible, harmonious, and eternal."

The side of nature which seems to the senses matter is but the veil that hides the reality of being; the visible universe is but the picture of the mind's ideas, the expression of thoughts, the hieroglyphic record of the art and meditation of Deity. In the words of Starr King, "There is not a planet that wheels a tiny circle around its controlling flame, not a sun that sheds its steady radiance upon the dark depths of neighboring space, not a comet that rushes through its excentric track, not a constellation among all that hang like fantastic chandeliers upon the dome of heaven, that is not the visible statement of a conception which dwells in the Omnipotent Mind. It is through the silent command of Mind that the morning light bursts like a wave of glory over the orderly universe."

3d. The materialist feels the ground to be solid beneath his feet, but the Scientist feels with more certainty the solidity of Truth. The eternal permanent side of things is unseen by the senses. A man may have just as much life as he pleases, if he goes to work right. By understanding life we accumulate it even as the muscles grow by use; we have just as much life as we have of Truth, goodness, virtue, etc. What is Life? It is Spirit. What is Spirit? God. What is God? Mind,—unerring, infinite, and eternal Mind. But is God the life driven like an insensible nail in and out of matter? Does matter master Life, God, and Life, God, have nothing to say for itself? Do we ask the consent or refusal of Mind to be born a babe, or to die an old, decrepit man? Is not the protest or acquiescence of mind on such important events heeded less than the whine of a dog at your door? But Science does not thus reckon the prerogatives of Mind; rather hath it crowned Mind with Life, might, majesty, and immortality.

I am not a Pantheist to believe that God is in matter, when the less material a man is, the nearer he is to Spirit, God, and when divested of all matter, and never until then, this divine Principle will enfold him in bliss and glory. Health, life, and morals will never reach their maximum until we relinquish the belief that matter has aught to do with Life. In physics we say, life is imprisoned within its own formations, that life is subject to germination, growth, maturity, and decay; but here the ancient question presents itself, Which is first, the egg or the bird? the flower or the seed? If the egg is first, whence came the egg, and if the bird is first, what is the origin of the bird? If there were no flower, whence came its seed, for you say without the seed there can be no flower; although the Scripture informs us He made every plant before it was in the ground. Mind, and Mind only, is the creator. Science impresses deeply the lesson that there is a causal power and stability in the world of Mind, and its creations, of which the material is only the transitory show; everything we touch or see is but the shape and color of a thought that lies behind. We learn in metaphysics that life is in the thought instead of the thing it has expressed, and that this thought hath immortality only in proportion to its correctness; that Life never enters its own formations, for Life is infinite; that Mind never enters the limits of its own thoughts, for Life and Mind are one.

I am glad there is but one God, but one Life, and this one is shadowed forth in order, beauty, and goodness. I am glad that evil hath no life or immortality, that mortal pain-giving sources are but the things of belief, dreams and not realities, the vagaries of the mortal, and not the immortal thought; and that this shall sometime be learned and the body be free as the pinions of a bird, and every sense of weakness or of pain shall disappear.

4th. What is death and what is the condition of man after death? This question* has met with its reply in the foregoing answers to other questions, but if metaphysics are made more apparent by a treatise on death, by dealing with nothing as if it were something, we will allude briefly to this unexplored mystery of sense. Do we need a more impressive revelation of the fact that Truth and thought alone are permanent, than the bare conception of the death of matter? For we know there is in reality no death, that Mind cannot die, and all that is eternal is Mind and its ideals. But the age may not be ready to accept this fact, it never is ready to accept at first the first facts of a Principle. But for all this, we must repeat the facts all the same, until they are understood. The pains and pleasures of the body are but beliefs entertained by mortal thoughts, for matter can neither suffer nor enjoy. If mind says, I am happy, the result will be happiness, and vice versa, for nothing can talk above mind. The clay cannot reply to the potter, Why hast thou made me thus? Matter cannot say, I am weak; I am sick; I am wretched; I am dying, or I am dead. True, erring or mortal belief can say this of what it names matter, but matter cannot say it. Matter is as much alive when we call it dead as it ever was; and as dead when we call it alive.

There is no death, mind cannot die, and matter has no life, hence there is nothing left for death to claim. Paul saw this and said, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law." He regarded the pangs of death as merely a mortal belief, a suffering of the thought, and not of the body, and that mortal thought had made this law of suffering.

Some loving heart hath said, Shall we know each other there?—and where is that radiant shore, shall we not seek it and weep no more? Since ever we investigated metaphysics and traversed in freedom the realm of Mind, we have been careful not to overrate our discoveries, or to state what we had not first understood. We have not demonstrated the actual state of man's existence beyond the limits of the observation of our senses, and only as we reason from deduction is it possible to define this state. Any hypothesis beyond this conclusion, presupposing the condition of the departed is fully understood, is a vain conjecture, unsupported by reason or revelation.

From facts apparent to the understanding and gathered from the Science of Soul we know that man is immortal, and that the shadow we call death is but a phase of mortal belief. No change has been wrought when we say, "My friend has just died;" that friend is saying in the full consciousness of existence and with its same surroundings,—"I never died. It was but a dream I had; for life is going on with me the same as before. I am not spirit; yet I am as much flesh and bones as I ever were [was]; the only change to me is, I cannot communicate with my friends,—and why? Because they do not understand me now. They call me spirit, but I am not; they say I died, but I did not; they do not know what I am, where I am, or what I am pursuing. I shall not be spirit until I lose all limits; they have lost their evidences of me through their personal senses, because they have said I changed, I died; their mistaken views of life have parted us; their belief that life ended with me, or took upon itself a new form, has prevented their understanding the reality of my present existence,—hence our separation through these opposite beliefs and our opposite conditions as the result thereof. Further communication between us is impossible, until their belief changes through the footsteps that mine has done and becomes like mine. This change will be named death, but that is their belief of it, not ours who have rent the veil that hides the mystery of a moment."

Yes, we shall know each other there; we shall love and be loved; we shall never lose our identity, but find it more and more in its order, beauty, and goodness. Men claim to know that pain is a fact, although it is unseen; they need to know that peace and bliss are greater facts and that this world is the veil of brighter glory that lies beyond it.

So flit before memory the different stages and states of existence, the error gradually disappearing and Truth coming to be understood. Let us rejoice that Life like an opening bud is unfolding to our consciousness the bliss of being, for Thine are all holy things, O Life, strong and divinely free, bearing the bereaved the gifts of wisdom and of chastened love; still brooding o'er them with a dovelike wing, immortally endowed for liberty. Patiently wait all ye who have parted from some earth-idol, remember that naught but broken music flows from joy that is sublunary, but hope hath its higher goal. We shall know each other there. A happier oracle, a clearer understanding, an unwavering light will friendship then become. Life's fuller music will give forth rejoicing tones when heart meets heart, where all lovely gifts and pure are laid upon befitting shrines. Joy hath a living fount, a bliss forever. The heart hath vainly sighed, What shall the future be? This is the future: heaven will be thine, but when its Life shall come no man knoweth, not "the son but the Father." Our sins are not forgiven [until forsaken],* here or hereafter; for every sin there is a just measure of misery, and death cannot advance our joy, nor make us wiser, better, or more pure. The Science of all being must be learned ere this is won. Bliss is not the boon of one brief moment. After the veil has dropped, we have to learn the same as now our way to heaven, by slow and solemn footsteps, for no man cometh to the Father but through Truth and Love.

Heredity

JANE HALSEY

UNDOUBTEDLY there is nothing that strikes more of a sense of terror or hopelessness to the human heart than the thought that one is the victim of some hereditary condition, for the relief of which all human skill has proved of no avail. Such a thought carries with it a keen sense of injustice; and this is supported by the conviction that every one is entitled to be started off in this world normally equipped, having the moral, intellectual, and physical qualities necessary to combat the difficulties and solve the problems that human existence presents.

When such a one decides in his heart that Christian Science is the truth, and chooses, come what may, to adhere steadfastly to its teachings, he gains somewhat the meaning of Mrs. Eddy's words, so wonderfully given in her illustrated poem, "Christ and Christmas,"— and with courage reads the apocalyptic promise, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

O'er the grim night of chaos shone
One lone, brave star,—

The wonder, the awe, the new-found joy, which spring from the knowledge that one can be freed from the bondage of hereditary beliefs, awaken a true sense of humility; and this sense challenges the mortal law of arrogance and egotism, which claims to bring forth such deformity without knowledge or consent on the part of the victim. Thus the struggle begins, and the arguments and fears which ever seek to separate man from his true birthright, are silenced only in proportion as man steadfastly loves the good and true, thus proving his trustworthiness by honest desire and effort. At this stage of development the words by Mrs. Eddy on page 35 of "No and Yes" come like balm to the human heart: "When human struggles cease, and mortals yield lovingly to the purpose of divine Love, there will be no more sickness, sorrow, sin, and death."

The student of Christian Science, when confronted with the law of heredity, may be tempted to draw a distinct line between what the whole world has labeled incurable or hopeless ills and the general or minor ills or conditions; and unless he is careful, is apt to overlook the great blessing which the scientific solution of his problem contains, in giving him a deeper understanding of man's being. This, coupled with a thorough knowledge of the letter of Christian Science, builds a foundation of solid masonry against which the storms may beat but without avail. He is gaining a sense of the Love which is so true that it chastens while it refines and heals. All of the time that reformation is being proved through thorough regeneration, the student of Christian Science learns that as long as sin of any kind is hidden he is a victim to it; and with its uncovering and destruction comes a sense of true freedom gained in no other way, for then alone is evil proved nothing.

The journey thus begun is fraught with joy; and as one's love deepens into gratitude and spiritual understanding he learns that man is subject only to the law of God, good; and the morning star shines on, revealing the fact that what seemed a direful and hopeless existence, is really teeming with wonderful blessings. Thus it is proved that error can only destroy itself, and never for one moment interferes with the operation of the law of good. Then can we rejoice in Paul's saying, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

During the process of healing it is learned that as one ascends the mountain path the view becomes clear and full of beauty, for the false way of thinking and living is eliminated, and replaced with a true sense of intelligence and life, where freedom reigns.

CARRO A. BIRD

SOME time ago the writer was staying at a home high up on the side of one of a group of mountains completely surrounding a broad valley. One beautiful afternoon there was heard the sound of distant thunder, which gradually drew nearer, accompanied by fast moving, heavy clouds that seemed to come from all sides and soon settled down into the valley, leaving the mountain tops clear. We could see vivid flashes of lightning cut the clouds below us, and the thunder increased in volume until the air seemed filled with its reverberations, as the mountains caught up the sound. The lowlands of the valley were entirely hidden from our view by dense clouds, but during practically the entire storm the sun was visible on the heights and the upper sky was clear.

This experience stands out to the writer as a symbol of the imperative need to abide "in the secret place of the most High," far above the clouds of mortal strife, in order to be always ready to recognize error for the nothingness that it is and be freed from its claims. Though we know, as the Scriptures teach, that "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all," and that "in him we live, and move, and have our being," yet error by its very nature—deception—seeks to terrify us at times by its appeal through the physical senses, and would have us think it real. It would cloud our consciousness, and have us believe that it has power, at least for the moment, to stop the activity of light and hinder its destruction of the darkness of mortal belief.

The activity of divine intelligence, Love, is constant; but if we allow any belief of sentient matter to intrude itself between God and our consciousness, we shall then be in the position of those in the valley during the storm. If, however, we possess that spiritual understanding which divides the light from the darkness, the true from the seeming, we have only to rise above the storm of human sense in order to see it for what it is,—nothing; and this can always be accomplished by changing our viewpoint from the material to the spiritual,—the real.

The light of truth on the mountain top of scientific understanding can never be obscured by the storm in the valley of discouragement, doubt, or fear; and we can each one here and now realize the reign of harmony, knowing, as Mrs. Eddy makes clear in Section 1 of Article VIII of the Manual, that "in Science, divine Love alone governs man."

Our Heavenly Father

FLORENCE W. SAUNDERS

THE teacher was comparatively young in the study of Christian Science, and when she was given charge of a class in the Sunday school, she was at first filled with fear, for she knew something of the child mind and its capacity for asking questions, and she was aware of her own lack of knowledge. She, however, accepted the task willingly, knowing that we are never asked to perform a service which we cannot fulfill when we realize that man is the infinite reflection of infinite Mind. As the months passed she found that her ability to answer the questions which were put to her corresponded to the amount of preparation she gave to the lesson beforehand; to the study of the letter and the earnestness of her prayer for light, which unfolded to her the spirit, and also to the handling of the belief of error which, like Herod of old, would seek to injure the young child.

The class was a group of little girls, and one morning this remark was made: "I don't see how you can say that God is our Father and yet that He isn't a person." The distinction was clear in the teacher's mind, but how was she to put it into the simple phraseology which the child thought could grasp? There was a moment of realization that man is possessed here and now of everything he needs, and that this included intelligence; then the needed illustration came.

"Supposing," the teacher said, "there lived a man on your street who was the father of several children. You all knew him, and often heard the remark made about him, 'He's such a good father.' Now let us see what makes him a good father. Of course he must be fine looking." The children thought about this for a moment, each child evidently having some particular person in mind. Doubt and uncertainty was displayed, but this vanished, and all agreed that good looks had nothing to do with being a good father. Several of the children knew instances where good fathers were even homely. Then the teacher said, "But he must always be handsomely dressed and wear nothing but the finest clothes." Again the children found on thinking it over that this did not matter either. They knew rich fathers and also poor fathers who were good. The teacher kept on, at each step removing the mortal mind qualities of a human personality. The father could be homely, could wear common clothes, could be lame, blind, or deaf even, and still be, humanly speaking, "good."

Digitized by Google

Then what constituted a "good" father? Quickly the childish answers came. He must be kind to his children, must love them and care for them, give them a house to live in, warm clothes to wear, and food to eat. He must care for them in every way and all the time. "Supposing," the teacher continued, "this father were called away to do some work far off in another land, where he could not take the children, and where the children could not see him, but he still continued to care for them and provide for all their needs. He still provided a home for them, with food to eat and plenty of warm clothing. Supposing they did not see him for years, until they almost forgot what he looked like. Would they think they had not any father because they could not see him?" The denial came quickly. They would know they had a father because he still took care of them, and they would keep on loving him just the same.

It was easy then to draw the comparison between the earthly father's love and that of our heavenly Father-Mother God, and to see that it was not necessary for us to behold a corporeal God in order to love Him and to partake of His bounteous love and care. It was pointed out that the divine Father-Mother God had no favorite child upon whom He bestowed special gifts or favors. He treated all His children alike, each child receiving the same measure of abundance, as expressed by the father in the parable of the prodigal son, "Son, . . . all that I have is thine." Again it was pointed out that this was Jesus' mission,—to show how limitless was the Father's love for all His children; and the Master showed it by proofs which all could see and understand if they possessed the seeing eye and the hearing ear. He showed by healing the sick and raising the dead that the heavenly Father never meant His children to be sick and die; he showed by feeding the multitude from five loaves and two fishes that there was no need of God's children ever being hungry, and he healed their sense of lack by his beautiful words concerning the fowls of the air and the lilies of the field.

The thought of teacher and children alike was uplifted until God was seen, as our Leader says on page 48 of "Unity of Good," "as the affectionate Father and Mother of all He creates," not needing to be seen with human eyes. Besides this, a glimpse was caught of the real man, and the qualities which endured were seen to be those which Paul designates as the "fruit of the Spirit,"—"love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance,"—and of which he says, "Against such there is no law."

Now

SAMUEL JOHNSTONE MACDONALD

Now has in time's pretense no part.
Now is the dawn within the heart
Of truer consciousness of Life,
Which quickens love, expelling strife.
Now is a vivifying ray
Reflecting the eternal day.
Now is of God a concept clear,
Revealing Him as ever near.

Now is the golden, glowing thought
Whereby a clearer light is brought;
In which there first is understood
God's tender Father-motherhood.
Now is Christ risen, the perfect heir
To glories which we too may share:
Now we may follow where he trod,
And prove ourselves the sons of God.

Selected Articles

["The Kingdom of God"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., March 23, 1917]

The idea of some future state where compensation would be made for the ills of this world, and where virtue would find its perfect reward, has been common to most races, but in early times it undoubtedly found its most vivid expression amongst the Hebrews and those nations contiguous to them. The "Garden of Eden," which was evidently their earliest conception of heaven, is but one of many allegorical expressions of this idea, having its equivalent in the "mountains of God," the "gardens of God," and so on, found in various old oriental religions and myths, and one of the great works of the long-expected Messianic Priest was to be the reopening of the gates of Paradise, and the removal of the sword which guarded it. Amongst the Jews, too, it is evident from Paul's writings that the idea of a series of heavens, of which the Seventh was the completion, was held as an article of faith.

This being so, it is the more remarkable that Jesus in his teaching was able to lift the idea of the kingdom of heaven so completely away from, and above, the generally accepted theories. His parables describing the kingdom of heaven as a grain of mustard seed, the pearl of great price, a net bringing in all manner of fish, could not by any stretch of imagination be interpreted in terms of locality or place; they could only refer to an idea, or a state of consciousness, and he finally emphasized this by stating directly that the kingdom of God was not something to be found or observed physically, "for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you."

It seems strange, and yet it is unfortunately true, that later centuries, down to modern times, have lost sight of the spiritual and metaphysical understanding of heaven and have fallen back on the old Judaic superstitions made concrete to western minds largely by the pictorial art of mediæval monks. Until fifty years ago, at any rate, the common idea about heaven was that it was a mysterious region "above the deep blue sky," where good people were to congregate after death; and, while the equally material notion of a sulphurous hell has given place to a more general recognition that hell is a state of remorse and mental suffering, it would be hard to say what the general idea of heaven is to-day. That a tremendous uncertainty exists about it is only too evident from the despairing efforts of those who try to find consolation and hope from anywhere, and from any kind of teaching.

The Christian Science textbook has a great deal to say on the subject of heaven, or the kingdom of God, and in varied ways, but one of the first points to be noted and remembered is that Mrs. Eddy in her exegesis of Scripture always takes the spiritual or metaphysical standpoint. The very foundation of Christian Science teaching is that God is Mind, or Spirit, and that the kingdom of God, or heaven, is a state of consciousness, or spiritual state. On page 291 of Science and Health we read: "Heaven is not a locality, but a divine state of Mind in which all the manifestations of Mind are harmonious and immortal, because sin is not there and man is found having no righteousness of his own, but in possession of 'the mind of the Lord,' as the Scripture says." And again, on page 242: "There is but one way to heaven, harmony, and Christ in divine Science shows us this way. It is to know no other reality—to have no other consciousness of life—than good, God and His reflection, and to rise superior to the so-called pain and pleasure of the senses." All through Mrs. Eddy's writings are to be found statements that heaven is not to be gained by dying, but solely by living, living a Christly life, thinking and acting in obedience to spiritual law, spiritual demands, until all materiality shall have yielded to spiritual enlightenment. The last pages of Science and Health are devoted to an examination of John's vision of a new heaven and a new earth, and elucidate reasonably and logically what he was trying to express through symbols of that conscious recognition of being as good only, where matter with its concomitants, sin, disease, sorrow, and death, must be forever eliminated.

Such a state of consciousness does not require death as a preliminary; in fact, it obliterates death, and reveals life as an eternal, progressive development. Is not this the meaning of Jesus' words when he spoke of the Son of man who not only "came down from heaven," but "which is in heaven"? To the enlightened consciousness of Jesus, with his complete control over all material conditions, even death itself, heaven was evidently where he dwelt continually. When John's disciples asked Jesus where he dwelt, he said, "Come and see," and they went "and abode with him that day," that is, in the state of consciousness where God was actually present in demonstration, no matter where the locality was, a tent, or a cave, or a housetop. That must have been heaven indeed! Many a student of Christian Science has had a glimpse of that heavenly state when some difficult or dangerous material condition has yielded to the word of God, and they have seen that the tabernacle of God is even here and now really with man. As Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 576): "This kingdom of God 'is within you,'— is within reach of man's consciousness here, and the spiritual idea reveals it. In divine Science, man possesses this recognition of harmony consciously in proportion to his understanding of God."

[Carl E. Herring in Omaha (Neb.) Bee]

A critic makes the very common mistake of confusing Christian Science with Christian Scientists. While we have no apology to make for the outward showing which has been made by those who have publicly acknowledged their faith in Christian Science, yet it will be at once conceded that no one could stand sponsor for all the acts of omission or commission of every one claiming to be a Christian Scientist. Christian Science never fails, but its adherents are sometimes quite human, and it would be manifestly unfair to let the failure of one individual upset our settled convictions.

The assertion that some persons are in their graves because they relied upon Christian Science and refused to seek "other aid," assumes the "other aid" to be an exact science, and, materially, there is no such thing. The medical fraternity do the best they can, but they do not guarantee results, and the more learned they are in the profession, the less dogmatic is their assertion. Christian Science is in existence to-day because "other aid" has not met the needs of humanity.

Spirit is used by Mrs. Eddy as a synonym for God. Spirit, God, is omnipotent and omnipresent. Man is the reflection of infinite Spirit. This postulate does not seem to demand . . . that we must recognize evil as a component part of man. While, as suggested, we will "refrain from controversy," yet it would seem probable that our critic finds the Bible as foolish as "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Is it not so? Paul says, "Where is the wise? . . . where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?"

Now, for one who repudiates the Bible, who understands so little of Christian Science as not to know that absent treatments are legitimate and proper if one employs a practitioner, who seeks to discredit Christian Science on account of every shortcoming or failure of the practitioner, and regards the evidence of the senses as superior to spiritual understanding,—for such a one there is but one alternative, and that is to forgo any effort to be healed in Christian Science, while we, as Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 454), "wait patiently for divine Love to move upon the waters of mortal mind, and form the perfect concept."

[Editorial in Stockton (Cal.) Mail]

The pastor of Stockton's largest evangelical church intimated from the pulpit last Sunday that the press of Stockton was discriminatory in this: it published pages for a church devoted to the gospel of health and little for other churches.

The reverend gentleman needs to be set right. The lectures to which he refers are published because the organization behind them makes business arrangements to have them published as information. Just as the committee pays for a hall or any other adjunct of publicity, so it recognizes the value of printer's ink in reaching the masses. But this is only one point in the matter. If the critic of the press will read those lectures closely, he will find that they are devoted to an affirmation of what the denomination believes,—that there is no mention, much less any ridicule or abuse, of the faith of any dissenter. Moreover, the Mail always is glad to publish, generously, news for any and all churches, without question or charge.

The practice of bringing lecturers into a city to attack the faith of other people is intolerance of the worst kind. One is tempted to say that it is unchristian. Where men and women have benefited in mind and body and heart by some particular interpretation of Scripture, it is utterly unkind to wound and antagonize them. The world is full of trouble and affliction. Anything that lightens a burden or soothes a troubled mind is worthy of a place among the helpful forces of humanity. It is unfortunate that so many of our evangelical brethren go around belaboring other sects, instead of touching the daily needs of men by practical helpfulness.

[Samuel Greenwood in Victoria (B. C.) Times]

A speaker at the "tabernacle" is reported as saying that if the devil were taken out of Christian Science it would wither and perish. This statement would unquestionably indicate, to any well-informed person, a lamentable unacquaintance, at least, with Christian Science. It might be stated here that many clergymen of different denominations, whose record and standing are quite as good as the present speaker's, have publicly approved of the influence of Christian Science as a factor for good. It is an ascertainable fact, and one that is widely admitted, that Christian Scientists are, as a class, as earnestly devoted to the cause of Christianity, in all that the term implies, as are the members of other churches. It is therefore evident that neither the spirit of truth nor the spirit of Christian charity inspires utterances like the one credited to this speaker.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the teachings of Christian Science improve the character and lives of those who practice them; and if this means that the devil animates the Christian Science movement, as this speaker would imply, it must be the same devil that the Jews charged Jesus with possessing, since the influence in both cases is the same. It has not generally been supposed that the devil works so assiduously to make human beings more genuinely good and loving, and to uplift mankind, nor have the churches so taught; hence the conclusion is inevitable, either that this gentleman is spreading a false report, or that the devil, after all, is not so black as he has been painted.

We have the authority of Christ Jesus himself that good fruit cannot be gathered from a corrupt tree; also the testimony of the apostle that "he that doeth righteousness is righteous;" and this authority and testimony will be accepted by most Christians in preference to that insistent dogmatism which would brand as false whatever presumes to differ from it.

If the preacher at the tabernacle has a saving gospel to preach, by all means let him preach it; but he may as well learn now as later that mortals are not saved from sin by slandering other churches, nor by bearing false witness against one's neighbor, that is, by making false statements about a religion that affords help and comfort to thousands of God-fearing men and women.

[From an editorial in Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram]

Instead of using their building fund to enlarge and beautify the church, the members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, have instructed their treasurer to purchase Liberty Bonds with the three thousand dollar building fund. The improvements will be delayed.

This is decidedly what we call real Americanism. How much more religious an act was that than to have put the money into improvements of the church building! How admirably does it follow the injunction: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." The immediate duty of Americans, of whatever denomination, is to support the righteous war into which their country has been drawn. Every free institution, which this country guarantees to its citizens, including the precious heritage of religious freedom, is involved in this war. And the success of the war is dependent upon the successful financing of the war expense by the people of the nation. Which then is more religious? To beautify and enlarge the house of worship or to render practical and effective service to God's righteousness? "Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?" Are not righteous service and religion itself more than the edifice dedicated to them?

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in The Tribune, New York, N. Y.]

The gentleman who criticized The Christian Science Monitor in your issue of August 14 for its editorial comment on a public statement made by Cardinal Begin, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Quebec, ignored the point and reason of the comment which furnished the occasion for his letter. He accused The Christian Science Monitor in these words: "It is so democratic that it would deny to minorities the right to debate." "It finds fault with Cardinal Begin because he debates the question of conscription ante factum."

It was quite evident, however, from Cardinal Begin's published statement, that he claimed, not the right to debate, but the right to pass superior and final judgment on a bill pending in the Canadian parliament. He spoke of the conscription bill then pending as "a menace which causes the Canadian clergy the worst apprehensions," and as "a serious blow to the rights of the church of Christ, independent in its domain." Cardinal Begin even said more particularly: "If we judge by the very rude knowledge revealed by certain speeches made in the Commons, one may indeed fear that some legislators, so little enlightened, and maybe also somewhat ill-willed, may not make a choice that we would approve; and here is what legitimatizes all the fears." The comment of The Christian Science Monitor on these utterances was that they put the judgment of the cardinal or his church above the decision of the Canadian House of Commons. Surely this was fair comment, and comment which did not touch the right of debate.

Funds of The Mother Church

War Relief

"The ten dollars which I inclose with this letter represents my entire savings, and I would like to have you use it to send copies of Science and Health or some of our beloved Christian Science papers over to our soldiers in France. I am fourteen years old to-day, so you see I am too young to go over myself, but I wish I could. Since I can't go I want to make this birthday gift to the soldiers, and I want you to please use it where it will do most good."

"I feel compelled to voice my feelings and to express my gratitude for the beautiful gift of thirty francs. I could hardly believe that I should receive this present. This week it was doubly welcome. The proverb that 'man's extremity is God's opportunity' is true after all. Always the thought came to me to tell the Lord and He would help, and this brought me comfort. May God bless all the good and generous people."

"Permit me to express to you my sincerest thanks for the help that twice already has been afforded me through the War Relief fund. Being one of those affected very much by the war, this help has been of great value to me in my financial problems. I would also speak of the many benefits which I have received through Christian Science and for which I am very grateful. I appreciate the literature in these dark times. It is for me an inexhaustible fountain of life, strength, and encouragement."

"Will the Christian Science relief committee please accept my sincerest thanks for the gift sent me. It is a great blessing to me, since my scant earnings are by far insufficient to meet my needs. I feel very happy for having received this valuable gift. Since I have gained a small understanding of the beautiful teachings of Christian Science I am able to accommodate myself much better. I am so much quieter and happier, and also learn to understand better the words of the Bible."

Real Estate

"At the meeting of the members of this church, it was unanimously decided to subscribe the sum of two thousand dollars to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund, the said amount to be obtained from the collections taken on the first Sunday of each month and advanced as collected. A deep sense of gratitude was expressed by all for the privilege of assisting in this great work."

The Christian Science Benevolent Association

"With the greatest joy I have ever known in the giving of money I am inclosing a check for The Christian Science Benevolent Association. I can see in this grand work the unfolding of God's plan, a need I have many times longed for. I know God will perfect and ever bless and prosper the blessed cause of Christian Science, with its various channels of teaching good."

Rejoicing in Protection Adequate

Joy is the great antagonist of that mental malpractice by which the overserious may be threatened at times, with which the wicked may agree, and to which the fearful may yield. The glad heart always has splendid resisting power against its assaults. To be full of joy is to have a defense impregnable. At the rebuilding of Jerusalem this was brought out by Nehemiah, who besought the people not to mourn, "neither be ye sorry," he said; "for the joy of the Lord is your strength." At the institution of Christianity, its Founder said to his disciples, "Your joy no man taketh from you."

The basis of this joy is the assurance we have as to the being and character of God, and the settled peace and certainty as to His goodness. Christian Science develops in man the joy of this certainty, and our Leader says (Science and Health, p. 419), "Never fear the mental malpractitioner, the mental assassin, who, in attempting to rule mankind, tramples upon the divine Principle of metaphysics, for God is the only power."

The mental manipulator referred to may be anyone who for the time being is actuated by a determination to "rule or ruin" others, and his influence is measured by the favor or fear with which his efforts are regarded. He may gather into a band those who are like-minded, and make them cooperative in his evil plot or scheme, but over every such effort hangs the verdict of the law, "Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished." If the evil worker cannot influence another into confederacy in evil by persuasion, he will try to produce acquiescence through fear; and emboldened by his belief that there is no God, he will claim to be an evil power able to produce suffering and death. It is clear enough, however, that darkness has no power over light, since even a little candle shineth far. So likewise even a momentary vision of the light of God brings illumination, and with it assurance that the works of darkness are not to be feared,—from which enlightenment and assurance comes a secret and sacred joy, an exultance in the omnipotence of good. It is the business of the Christian Scientist to increase and maintain this joy; then obedience becomes spontaneous to the admonition of our Leader (Science and Health, p. 442), "Christian Scientists, be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake."

Christ Jesus, in that most loving address wherein he set forth the safety of the branches which abide in the vine, said, "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." It was the characteristic of the Son to attribute all power to the Father and to do nothing of himself. When man gains the Christ-spirit he then ascribes all power to God, that is to good—hence his joy, which cannot be invaded or destroyed. His peace of mind enables him to say, "I will fear no evil: for thou art with me." Mrs. Eddy says clearly that "Christian Science translates Mind, God, to mortals" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 22). She continues, "It shows the impossibility of transmitting human ills, or evil, from one individual to another; that all true thoughts revolve in God's orbits: they come from God and return to Him,—and untruths belong not to His creation, therefore these are null and void."

The conclusion then is that we do well if we "rejoice evermore;" also that it is unwise to whisper and wonder, to imagine and guess what occult evil may be able to do, just as if we thought there was no God. Let us be wise, for it is the fool who "hath said in his heart, There is no God." Real joy is the cure for such folly; for the joyous heart finds cause for thanking and loving God hour by hour. This gladness brings companionship with the Christ, the divine Truth which overcomes the world. Spiritual joy unfolding divine Life, overcomes the flesh and the ills to which it is heir. Joy revealing God as Love shows how "the accuser of our brethren is cast down," and enables us to hear the "loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ."

WILLIAM P. McKENZIE.

Salvation of the World

SALVATION is to be found in the ever present understanding of God. Christian Science has come to this age to save the world, to show mankind the way of salvation. The brilliant glow of the day with the Lord is to be found in the spiritual creation. "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" exclaimed the prophet. Nothing can stay God's hand, the hand that uplifts and saves all those who are looking to Him for salvation. On page 291 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes: "Universal salvation rests on progression and probation, and is unattainable without them. Heaven is not a locality, but a divine state of Mind in which all the manifestations of Mind are harmonious and immortal, because sin is not there and man is found having no righteousness of his own, but in possession of 'the mind of the Lord,' as the Scripture says."

The oppressed may be more oppressed before they learn that to know God is real freedom and to believe in the false man is damnation. When man becomes acquainted with his real self, the godlike child, he will learn to obey only spiritual laws and so gain spiritual health and spiritual peace,—not for one instant being enticed by the human luring arguments which have been worn threadbare by human tradition. If an individual fights with hate, making enemies in thought, this means fighting with revenge and material weapons. Jesus said to Peter, "Put up thy sword," but the sword of love wielded without hate gives man the power of David with the sling,—the use of material weapons with spiritual understanding, dominion over matter, not subjection. The promises of health based upon compliance with some dictum of don't-do-this or that, all make man a slave to fear if he obeys through fear or ignorance. The loving counsel of spiritual understanding is the right way out of these laws of fear. This loving counsel may bring comfort to one individual and discomfort to another, since every problem in Christian Science is worked out from the individual viewpoint. It is not the material manifestation but the unseen power of God which counts in the growth of every Christian Scientist. The reflection naturally comes, as the joy within brings the outward smile. We read in Psalms: "For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people: he will beautify the meek with salvation."

In reality man is a permanent immortal being never experiencing sin, sickness, and death. God is the divine Principle of all that exists, but matter is excluded from this real existence as a false belief concerning the truth. Man never came from material laws. Humanity will not ascend until it realizes that the Son came down from heaven, harmony, and was never in matter. Humanity will not walk the water until it knows that man was always above material law. Erroneous judging and condemning will continue as long as those who seem to sit in the seat of the righteous overlook man's genuine perfection.

Then what is the process of salvation but to brush away the veil which interposes itself so as to hide reality from human eyes? Salvation does not create a new world or a new man, but simply reveals the truth about them. It does not promise toil and tribulation in return for spiritual endeavor. It does not call upon the spiritual-minded to renounce their joy, their affection, activity, spontaneity, merriment, and freedom. The salvation brought by Christian Science enhances the quality of all these attributes of true manhood and reveals their divine origin.

Unlike the preachments of scholastic theology the teachings of Christian Science set forth no mere theory, but explain a living Christ. As we read in Scripture, "And all flesh shall see the salvation of God." The knocking of the Christ on the door of human consciousness grows louder and more imperative as the self-destruction of error goes on apace. To-day we are witnessing the screaming, thundering workings of evil let loose only to come to a final destruction. This permits a clearing up of mortal mind débris and leaves the divine effulgence shining through the darkness and clearing the mists away. The demands of Spirit will not be gainsaid. The light of imperishable glory pierces ever farther into the gloom of the false creation, exposing its nothingness, and revealing the power, majesty, and permanence of the new and true kingdom of heaven, the reign of unbroken gladness.

To sum up then this all-glorious subject of salvation of the world, we have Mrs. Eddy's definition in the Glossary of the Christian Science textbook (p. 593): "SALVATION. Life, Truth, and Love understood and demonstrated as supreme over all; sin, sickness, and death destroyed."

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

"The children's bread"

AT this period we are hearing a great deal about food, and it is agreed upon all hands that although older people may have to deny themselves many things in a material way, yet the need that children shall have the right sort of food and plenty of it in their earlier years is insisted upon by all who have the good of humanity at heart. It is also true that for many years sincere efforts have been made to safeguard the moral welfare of children, and with this purpose Christian Scientists are heartily in sympathy, although they may differ in some respects from others as to how this can best be done. While Christian Scientists who are parents are careful to provide for the needs of their children in the best way possible, they accept without any reserve our Master's words, and know that children no less than adults must be taught to seek "first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," being sure the accompanying promise, that all other things will be "added," will unfailingly be fulfilled.

Those who have studied the character and needs of children would readily admit that their deepest need is love, and this is brought out in the spiritual sense of the Lord's Prayer as found on page 17 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," namely, "Give us grace for to-day; feed the famished affections." A loveless childhood is indeed one of the saddest experiences of a lifetime, and yet there are some children who themselves express so much of love that others are instinctively drawn to them, and so they do not wholly miss the love which means far more in the unfoldment of character than does anything else.

In Paul's epistle to Titus we find him exhorting mothers to love their children and to be "discreet, chaste, keepers at home, . . . that the word of God be not blasphemed." Although we live in a so-called Christian age this sound counsel may well be thoughtfully pondered by all of us, for the time surely makes great demands upon us which can only be met through entire spiritualization of thought. It is therefore of the utmost importance that children be prepared for the working out of their share of the tremendous problems which are facing all mankind, that the narrowness and selfishness of mere materialism may give place to the unfoldment of man's divinely bestowed capacities and possibilities. If the children are fed with Truth they will not grow up mental or moral weaklings, but will be ready to face fearlessly and effectively their share of the world's work, and to reflect to others the love which has been bestowed upon themselves. On page 61 of "Retrospection and Introspection" our revered Leader says: "Posterity will have the right to demand that Christian Science be stated and demonstrated in its godliness and grandeur,—that however little be taught or learned, that little shall be right. Let there be milk for babes, but let not the milk be adulterated."

It is not always recognized as it should be that because divine Love is infinitely wise, its reflection in human experience must also express wisdom, else the desire to be loving to our children will fail of the divine purpose. Throughout the Scriptures obedience to divine law is constantly insisted upon, and nowhere is disobedience so unlovely as when it is manifested by children. When our Master set a little child in the midst of his disciples as an object lesson, he undoubtedly pointed to the ideal child, whose loveliness is enhanced by a sweet spirit of obedience to all that is right, or, as Christian Scientists would say, to divine Principle. We must not forget that children are peculiarly susceptible to mental influences, and so we must do our utmost to guard them against the evil tendencies of mortal mind, which if unchecked would wreck the world, and which Paul refers to in his epistle to the Ephesians as "the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience."

In Mark's gospel we read of a woman who came to the Master humbly begging help for her afflicted daughter. In response to her request Jesus said, "Let the children first be filled," and then he added, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it unto the dogs." The "children's bread" in this case was the truth which heals spiritually as well as physically, and although the woman was regarded as a heathen by the bystanders she rose at once to the altitude of true childhood; nor was her plea denied, for the loving Master pronounced her daughter whole, and she found this to be true when she returned to her home.

We read in the twenty-first chapter of John that when Jesus was partaking of that memorable meal, soon after his resurrection, and when he required of Simon Peter an acknowledgment of his love and loyalty, he said in response to Peter's affirmation thereof, "Feed my lambs." There are those outside of Christian Science who would deny to us the right and privilege of supplying the children with bread in the way that Jesus did the Syrophenician woman, but if our faithfulness is accompanied by genuine love and meekness in all we do, whether in the home or in our more public service, we shall win our way and prove to the world by the strong and pure characters of parents and children alike what it means to live by the bread "which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world."

Lecture in The Mother Church

The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts, announces a free public lecture on Christian Science by Paul Stark Seeley, a member of the Christian Science board of lectureship, in the church edifice, Falmouth, Norway, and St. Paul Streets, Back Bay, Friday evening, February 8, 1918, at eight o'clock. The public is cordially invited.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

Christian Science War Relief Committee,

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday School, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a. m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

COVINA, CAL.—The new church edifice for the Christian Scientists of Covina and valley, which is being erected at the corner of Center and Third Streets, will cost over nine thousand dollars. It will contain one of the best planned auditoriums in the valley. A date for its occupancy has not yet been set, but it will probably be used for regular services early in 1918.—Covina Argus.

VIRGINIA.—Such newspapers as have been scrutinized for this office seem inclined to be fair to Christian Science. There were one hundred and eighty-two articles copied from The Christian Science Monitor, and seven other favorable articles were published, including five corrections furnished by this office. The notice of Mrs. Eddy's Memorial was printed by nine newspapers. There were reported but eight adverse articles in the newspapers, and five of them were written by the same man—three of the five being printed in his own paper, which refused to accept corrections. Three papers courteously granted space for corrections from this office, and two replies were written to cover the articles published by the critical editor and were printed by a contemporary paper in his own city. This editor subsequently sold his paper and returned to the evangelistic field. There are a number of denominational periodicals published in this state, and several of them are most unfair in their attitude toward Christian Science, printing eighteen adverse articles and references. Where the articles warranted, a reply was prepared and submitted, but publication was refused in every instance. No pulpit attacks have been reported.

The Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy have donated books and periodicals to twenty-four public libraries and institutions coming within the scope of their offer, during the past year. Through the generosity of Christian Scientists in Chicago, who furnished the necessary funds, this field has been enabled to offer free copies of the pocket editions of Mrs. Eddy's writings to the men in the army and navy. The offer was made through the reading rooms at Hampton, Norfolk, and Richmond, and from April to October, 1917, forty-seven copies of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and fourteen copies of the other writings have been donated. The men were most grateful for the books, and the field deeply appreciates the kindness of those who, by their loving generosity, have made this activity possible.

Committee on Publication.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to Nov. 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,

The Lectures

COALINGA, CAL. (Society).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. O. H. Knox, who said in part:—

It is recorded in the Bible that Jesus of Nazareth said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He proved that this truth, when applied as he taught, would free mankind from sin, sickness, and even death. His followers also proved this for themselves and others for almost three centuries after the crucifixion. After that time the healing influence was lost, until about fifty years ago a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, rediscovered this truth which Jesus taught, and named her discovery Christian Science. She proved through her own healing and by healing others that this truth will heal the sick now and in every age, just as it did nineteen hundred years ago. She also learned, through demonstrating this truth, to know that, as David tells us, God is "a very present help in trouble," a God close at hand and not far off.—Coalinga Record.

HALIFAX, ENGLAND (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Miss Ethel E. Gee, who said in part:—

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, are these words (p. 390): "It is our ignorance of God, the divine Principle, which produces apparent discord, and the right understanding of Him restores harmony." The people who have unreservedly turned to Christian Science for help and guidance testify that there comes into their consciousness such an understanding of God as was not deemed possible before. These people so learn the meaning of God's omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience, that God is all to them, and in a constantly increasing measure they let this fact govern them. They reason all things out from the basis of the allness of God, and arrive at harmony. They have the harmony of heaven within, and are conscious of man's God-given dominion over that which is without, whether it be sickness or sin, sorrow or poverty. Christian Science is indeed a sovereign panacea; and it puts into the heart of him who lives it a great compassion for all humanity, a compassion such as Jesus felt, when he fed the multitude, healed the lepers, restored sight to the blind.

LAKEWOOD, OHIO (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Leslie P. Strong, who said in part:—

In that wonderful book, the Bible, we find these words: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." I think I can safely say that to the average individual that promise has not a very deep significance. To the Christian Scientist the word trouble includes all human discord—all sin, all sickness, all business perplexities, any phase of human experience that is not harmonious. Why is it that the people of the world cannot make that promise an active factor in their lives? The Christian Scientist, answering that question out of his own experience, would say that it is due to man's ignorance of God, to his false concept of both God and man. He would say that he has found that in proportion as he gained an understanding of God as explained in Christian Science, in that proportion has God become to him a living reality, an ever present help.

To those hungry for truth, to those looking for something better than a material sense of life has to offer, Christian Science comes with a message of love and encouragement.

HAVERHILL, MASS. (Second Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Richard C. Harrison, who said in part:—

On page 21 of "Miscellaneous Writings" by Mary Baker Eddy, the Founder of Christian Science, we find the following: "Christian Science begins with the First Commandment of the Hebrew Decalogue, 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me.'" Farther on Mrs. Eddy writes: "Our Master said, 'The works that I do shall ye do also;' and, 'The kingdom of God is within you.'" We have these wonderful promises; and to know that the kingdom of God is within us is to realize that we have health, peace, love, and in fact all good.

OTSEGO, MICH. (Society).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. F. W. Hadden, who said in part:—

Christian Science is the revelation of the Christ, Truth, to this age. To the weary and heavy laden it brings rest; to the sorrowing, comfort; to those burdened with the belief of lack, the assurance that the Father's supply is boundless; and to the suffering it brings health. The keynote of Christian Science is love—love to God and men. It teaches that there is one infinite Mind, God, and that man is the reflection of that Mind.

Testimonies of Healing

Christian Science first came to my notice when I was a child of twelve years, through the restoration of two relatives from invalidism to perfect health. Some of the teachings were then grasped and retained, and several years later, because of a scalp disease which had apparently developed, treatment was taken up for me. As the disease was not overcome within a week or two (and I am not surprised now that it was not, as the physical appearance was constantly watched by my family), material remedies were again used and temporary relief was obtained. I really wanted Christian Science to heal me, for I had always been of a deeply religious nature and daily studied my Bible, but family opinion prevailed. Some of the seeds of truth sown then by the practitioner were, however, to bear fruit later.

After two strenuous years in college my health broke down. Much was suffered in silence in the hope that my small understanding of Christian Science would meet the need, but as it was not sufficient I was obliged to have medical treatment, which caused me great mental distress. For several months I could not walk. Finally I decided to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," even though I had medical treatment, for I knew this reading would bring some peace of mind. Many theories presented in my college work had seemingly put me at sea. One day I read a testimony in the textbook by a woman who had been healed of an illness of twenty years' standing, and knowing that what God had done for her could be done for me, I took my stand for Christian Science. An awful struggle ensued, although I read day and night, often being compelled by the constant pain to arise during the night and read and declare the truth until relief came. But God gave me the strength and courage to endure to the end, even though the aid of anyone with greater understanding could not then be had because of family opposition. Physical strength returned with increased knowledge of what spiritual strength means.

I did not return to school that fall, but divine Love led me to a brother's home in Seattle where Christian Science was the only physician, and there I could give most of my time for nine months to the study, with the loving help of a practitioner for six weeks, who then told me that the rest of the work was mine. The scalp trouble was overcome, and my hair grew longer and thicker than ever before. The complete healing was slow, but this caused me to seek "first" the kingdom of God, knowing that in due time the other things would be added, after the turbulent waters of mortal mind had been cleansed of all the impurities of wrong thinking.

In the fall my college work was resumed, with constant reliance upon divine Love in every way, and it was completed with honors. Especially is gratitude due for the help received in examinations, in allaying fear and helping me to solve problems. The knowledge that our true supply is spiritual was demonstrated when a very desirable position in the high school of my home town was obtained, and Christian Science has been a constant help in teaching as in everything else. I do not like to think of what the past five years would have been without it. Not only has this healing truth helped me mentally, physically, and financially, but it has aided also in the overcoming of sorrow and faults of disposition; in the unraveling and smoothing out of complicated human relations which seemed almost insurmountable. By laying aside all sense of human will, harmony and reconciliation have been brought about.

An expression of gratitude is due to all who have contributed to our periodicals, for their message often meets a present need. As words are inadequate to express my appreciation for the lonely vigils kept by our revered Leader that others might share the benefits of the truth God revealed to her, it can best be expressed in daily deeds, and a "faithful follower I would be."

To any laboring under a sense of discouragement or slow healing, I should like to say that no matter what the need, faithful endeavor will be rewarded, for the Master's promise reads, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and no limit is placed upon its fulfillment.

Miss Eleanor Taylor Morse, Detroit, Mich.

Seven years ago I had yet to learn that man's estate is that of joint-heir with Christ, his heritage harmony, light, and life. I did not know that Mind, not matter, governs man; hence error had bound me. For ten years I had suffered from chronic stomach trouble accompanied by a severe bowel disorder and extreme lassitude. After taking food I would become so uncomfortable and suffer such pain that in order to obtain relief it would be necessary to remove the food from the stomach by artificial means. I had changed from one doctor to another, taking their medicines and trying various diets, and finally sought a change of climate, but without relief; instead I gradually grew worse. Through the influence of a friend I was induced to try Christian Science, and although I had very little faith in it, a few weeks later I was eating anything I desired. Since then I have had no trouble with the stomach whatever. The demonstration was so wonderful that I became a student of this teaching at once. What Christian Science has done for me it will do for others.

Truly, as our beloved Leader has said (Science and Health, p. 494), "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need."

Charles H. Rutherford, Jerome, Ariz.

It is seven years since I took up the study of Christian Science, and it is my duty and privilege to tell of the many blessings received since studying this truth. I have been healed of headache, toothache, colds, soreness, severe pain in my sides, and many other ailments. One experience I would like to mention in particular is the help experienced when my little girl was born. The birth certainly proved the powerlessness of all mortal laws. I had a Christian Science practitioner and nurse with me. A physician was called, and after making an examination said it was necessary that I be taken to a hospital and operated on. The practitioner, however, asked him to give her a little more time in which to do her work, and to this he very kindly consented. After waiting for some little while he made another examination and said there had been some progress. Later he said a wonderful progress had been made and that an operation was not necessary, as the baby would be born naturally. It was not a painless birth, yet there was such an assured feeling all the while. I was perfectly convinced that God would not desert me when seemingly I needed Him most, and I knew that nothing is impossible with God. The child is now over three years old and attends the Christian Science Sunday school. I shall never forget the loyalty of the practitioner throughout this experience, how firm she stood at her post, never wavering for a moment. Through her understanding I was wonderfully helped and healed. I was so uplifted and protected that not once did the thought of fear enter my consciousness.

When I first took up the study of Christian Science it was the physical healing that interested me most, as I felt at that time it was what I needed most; but after studying for some time I began to realize that the spiritual understanding of the Scriptures was the great need, and this I am getting as I study the Bible together with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." It is for this understanding that I am most grateful, for I can say with the Scriptures: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold . . . all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her."

My father was a minister of an orthodox church, my mother a member of the same denomination. They taught me to read the Bible, and I did so much of the time, as I was kept out of school a great deal owing to my physical condition. The healing work of Jesus and his followers always encouraged me with the thought that I could be healed. At that time I had never heard of Christian Science, but since studying this teaching, one by one the ailments are leaving me. I am very grateful for the understanding of Truth that I have gained through this study, for it is now sufficient to overcome a good many ailments for myself and others.

My younger sister was healed through the power of Truth after medicine had failed to do her any good, and the doctors said there was little, if any, hope for her recovery. My mother too has been helped wonderfully. My sister, my mother, and I have all had the privilege of class instruction, which has proven a great help to us. For these and many other blessings I owe my deepest gratitude to divine Love and to Christian Science.

Mrs. Carrie Hobbs Williams, Portland, Ore.

In the year 1906 some dear friends, knowing my need, talked to me a little about Christian Science, and finally invited me to attend a lecture. I did so, but although I listened and it sounded good, I was in agony; it seemed as though I could not wait for the end, I was in such a nervous state. I stayed, however, till the close, and for this I was very grateful, as my healing took place that very night. I had been under the doctor's care, and was taking local treatments for bowel trouble, from which I had suffered since childhood, and as I grew older it became worse. After returning home from the lecture my whole thought seemed changed; I felt different,—I felt there was a God I had never been taught about, a God who really did help people and would help me. The medicine which I always prepared so as to have it ready on my return, if I were going out in the evening, I swallowed as usual, but although it had never been distasteful, this time it seemed awful and I could not understand why. It was the last I ever took; I have taken no medicine in the past ten years.

Two years before this a copy of the Journal had been left in my home, but I did not like to have anyone see it, so I had tucked it away out of sight. The day after the lecture, that old Journal came to my mind, and I was not long in getting it. No longer did it seem a mystery. I could really understand it a little, and after I had read it from cover to cover, my friends loaned me a copy of the Christian Science textbook. Before I had finished reading it I was made "every whit whole," and my health has been good ever since. I can plainly see there is a right time for each and every one to come into the understanding of Christian Science. I am indeed grateful for this healing and for the many other demonstrations we have had. I am grateful that this teaching makes one want to be good and to do good.

One's gratitude to God is best expressed in helping others to the blessings we ourselves partake of, and I am sure my testimony will help some one. I was as one traveling along in darkness. I used to read the Bible, but could not understand a great many things therein, and was always asking why this or that should be, and doubting in general about it all. About two years ago a friend brought Christian Science to my notice, and since then, while reading the Lesson-Sermon and practicing what I read, the Bible has become an ever present help in trouble. I am able to understand a great many things which before I could not account for.

About this time my children were taken ill. One had an ear trouble which was of long standing and very annoying, and the doctor could not cure her. He gave box after box of ointment, but as soon as one place healed up the trouble would break out somewhere else. I then decided to ask my friend to help us, and in a short time the baby was completely healed. Another little girl developed whooping cough, but that disappeared in like manner, and several childish complaints which prove trying to any mother have been overcome. I am very thankful to God that my eyes have been opened to the truth which never fails if we remain firm and faithful to God. My little boy, aged ten, and I were taken with a sore throat, so that we could not even swallow liquid, but we were both healed in less than twenty-four hours.

Sometimes even now I find myself doubting again, but when I get the Bible and read with the understanding gained from a study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" I always feel myself more firmly established on the rock that cannot be moved. Greater than all the physical blessings is the peace of mind that follows the true understanding of Christian Science.

Mrs. Cecilia M. Tyler, Wellington, Somerset, England.

Christian Science came into my life after all material supports had failed. My illness was the culmination of wrong living and thinking from early boyhood. When a child I was constantly harassed by haunting fears. I was afraid of everything, even afraid to go to sleep, and night after night I would sit up for fear that I would pass on while asleep. Naturally this state of mind led to the taking of much medicine, and as the years passed I found temporary relief in drinking, until finally I became addicted to this habit and also to the excessive use of tobacco.

At the age of thirty-one I was a complete wreck. I had sought out many physicians but had found no relief. The specialist last consulted told me that I must devote my entire time for at least a year and a half to following the instructions in his treatment, but after several months of faithful compliance with his instructions I found myself gradually getting worse. At this time Christian Science was recommended to me, and after consultation with my wife, and with the feeling that it could do no harm anyway, a practitioner was called to my bedside to give me treatment. I slept very well that night for the first time in many years. This at the time seemed remarkable, for I had been in the habit of taking medicine at frequent intervals during the night. In the morning I realized to a degree the meaning of Jesus' command, "Ye must be born again," for in my heart there was a bright ray of hope, and the light of a new dawn illumined my consciousness. From that hour until now, years later, I have constantly improved mentally, morally, physically, financially, and spiritually. There has never been a desire to drink or smoke, and I can truly say I have experienced the truth of Mrs. Eddy's statement on page 407 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that "Christian Science is the sovereign panacea."

My case was diagnosed by numerous physicians and with differing opinions, so that I would not profess to name from a medical point of view my divers troubles, but I am convinced that I would not have recovered under any material method of treatment. The full measure of peace and happiness that has come into my life through the understanding of Christian Science, in addition to all the other benefits, is surely just cause for a feeling of much gratitude that I have been permitted to experience its beneficent influence.

In July, 1914, a friend loaned me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and with the first reading I was convinced that it was the truth. At that time I was not in need of physical healing, but since October of the same year God has been my only physician. I have proved the truth of our Leader's statement on page 261 of our textbook, "Hold thought steadfastly to the enduring, the good, and the true, and you will bring these into your experience proportionably to their occupancy of your thoughts."

Colds, headaches, quinsy, and a chronic bowel disorder have been overcome. While I am very thankful for the physical healings, they do not compare with the spiritual understanding of the Bible gained through the teachings of Christian Science. Many blessings have come to me through our periodicals, and my gratitude extends to all the contributors as well as to all the faithful workers, who are following our Leader's commands. My desire is that I may live in conformity with the teachings of Christian Science,—to overcome evil with good and to reflect Love always.

Nearly twelve years ago I became interested in Christian Science through one of my teachers in school. At the age of sixteen I had decided that there was no God, and for several years lived in a state of doubt and unhappiness. When told that God is infinite intelligence I was interested and began to attend the Christian Science church. In the years that have followed I have had many healings. Colds which had become chronic and continued all summer as well as all winter have now entirely disappeared. From babyhood I suffered severely off and on with stomach disorder, and after I had been interested in Christian Science about five years this trouble returned in a very acute form. The healing was slow, but the acute attacks have been overcome, and while formerly I suffered constant discomfort, now even a slight attack is a rare occurrence and yields quickly to the truth. I was healed of a severe attack of influenza in one day, and two weeks later erysipelas was overcome in four days' treatment. The tendency to take cold was destroyed through my own understanding of the truth, but in the other cases I had help from practitioners.

I never knew the meaning of the word gratitude before becoming interested in Christian Science, and I was forced to learn how to be grateful. I have also had wonderful help along financial lines. Above all else I have learned to know and to trust God, and I am certainly thankful to our heavenly Father for the love and harmony that have come into my life through Christian Science. It has taught me the meaning of that wonderful verse from the forty-first chapter of Isaiah: "Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

Mrs. Marguerite Hillery Williamson, Watsonville, Cal.

It affords me great joy to tell of the healing which I have experienced through Christian Science. I was taken very ill with what the doctors called paralysis and high blood pressure, and was dizzy most of the time. The doctor attended me for over four months, but I kept getting worse. Thanks be to God, the giver of all good, I was healed when I thought the end had come. My wife asked a friend, a Christian Scientist, if she would treat me. Within an hour I began to improve, and I am better now than I have been for twenty-five years. I used to suffer terribly from severe headaches, but now have none of them.

I am learning day by day that God is "a very present help in trouble," and I feel like saying with the psalmist, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." My prayer is that my life may attest my sincerity, as well as my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy.

Peter Boyer, Tillsonburg, Ontario, Canada.

The desire to acknowledge some of the benefits received through Christian Science and to do all in my power to show my gratitude is the reason for this testimony. Prior to my mother's healing through the power of Truth, which took place when I was fourteen years old, I was subject to frequent sick spells, and was often out of school for weeks at a time. After we began the study of the Bible and of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and attended the Christian Science church, my general health became normal, and whenever any phase of disease presented itself it was promptly banished by Christian Science treatment. A seemingly severe attack of quinsy was overcome in three days. At various times burns and bruises have been entirely relieved by the instant denial that matter can have sensation. On one occasion I was wonderfully protected from acid burns. Though the fluid passed over the greater part of both hands, the only result was a very slight dryness of the skin which lasted but a few minutes.

At the time of my marriage my husband was not interested in Christian Science, though not prejudiced in any way. He has since become interested, and has received help both through the work of practitioners and through his own study and application of the truth. All the problems of daily living have been harmoniously solved when we have been willing to be guided by Truth. Previous to the birth of our little boy I suffered no inconvenience or pain, and very little severe pain was experienced when he was born. The child was fifteen months old before he had a sick day and then came a seemingly severe trial; but through the faithful, loving work of a practitioner he was brought out and is now his active, happy self again. Our gratitude for this healing is profound.

Great as is our indebtedness to Christian Science for the physical benefits we have received, it is the fact that Christian Science is a spiritual guide by which we can work out our salvation for which we are most grateful. It is daily teaching us to overcome temper, self-pity, self-righteousness, and a sense of lack, and to be honest and loving with our fellow man. We are grateful for our publications and to Mrs. Eddy for the consecration and purity that enabled her to bring the truth to light again.

God having done great things for me, I feel it my duty to give His name full praise. From childhood I suffered from stomach and bowel trouble, as well as severe headaches, although medicine was resorted to constantly. One night three years ago I was taken very ill, and after being examined by two of the best physicians in the state was told I had appendicitis. As I was then almost sixty-one years of age my children thought I would not survive an operation, so I consulted a friend who had been healed through Christian Science after the doctors had said they could do no more for her. As soon as I was able to do so I went seventy-five miles to see the same practitioner. He gave me one treatment, and I returned home the same day after eating a good meal with no bad effect. I have not suffered from stomach or bowel trouble since. In less than three weeks I was free from appendicitis, in perfect health, and feeling younger than at twenty-five years of age.

I had worn glasses thirty-three years, but laid them aside and have never needed them since. I was healed in this wonderful way without having the least understanding of the truth, but I read faithfully as the practitioner told me to do and gradually the meaning became clear. My husband was healed of chronic sciatica in six days and has never had a return of it. He was also healed of a throat trouble of long standing, although the doctors told him he would have to be operated on before he could get relief.

We praise God daily for these proofs of Love's ever presence, and for the broader, saner view of life that has been shown us through Mrs. Eddy's teachings. Instead of the old-time doubt of all things worth while, such as ultimate good, eternal Life, and peace, our lives are for the most part one happy round of love, hope, and faith.

MRS. FANNY F. PEARSON, Conrad, Mont.

So deep is my gratitude and so numerous are my blessings, as a result of the study and application of the truth as taught in Christian Science, that I avail myself of every opportunity of passing on the wonderful story to others, knowing that if but one is encouraged thereby the word has not been spoken in vain. Seven years ago, when I began the investigation of this religion, I was unhappy, discouraged, in debt, devoid of spiritual inclination, critical, of an intemperate disposition, and facing an operation for a physical trouble which had bound me for fifteen years. Up to this time I did not know what it was to go through a day without pain or an ache of some kind. I had given up the use of medicine several years previous, having proven to my satisfaction that drugs are without power. I tried other methods of treatment, but with the result that my condition grew worse. Parents, relatives, and physicians did all in their power to make life cheerful and livable for me.

When I knew that an operation was the last resort, I gave up all hope, feeling sure that the end would come with the operation. This I resented bitterly. I reasoned that there should be a way out,—that I was young and ought not to die; but death would be preferable to a life of suffering. A friend of my father's who had been benefited by Christian Science, brought me the first news of this healing truth, and from him I learned of a practitioner, to whom I applied for help. I shall always remember with joy the loving words she spoke, telling me that I could be helped. Within three days all pain was gone. I had one week's treatment, and at the end of five weeks was completely healed of this trouble and free from any fear of a relapse. The practitioner showed me how to study the Lesson-Sermon, and from that day to this I have made a practice of never omitting this important part of the day's work and pleasure.

A chronic throat trouble, neuralgia, bowel disorder, typhoid fever, malarial fever, dislocated rib, ptomaine poisoning, were overcome through Christian Science within the first eighteen months of my investigation of this subject. The way has not always been ablaze with glory. There have been testing times—periods of waiting in which it was necessary to "let patience have her perfect work," struggles with human will, contention with selfishness, striving with self-pity. At no time, however, has there been a desire to turn back, but added strength has come with every trial. A love and knowledge of the Bible, spiritual discernment, a better understanding of God and of man's relation to Him, a life of freedom, usefulness, and happiness are the inestimable blessings which I enjoy to-day, because there was one woman, Mrs. Eddy, who was pure, loving, and patient enough to give the world in a book called "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" a simple, demonstrable teaching, whereby life can be made to us more abundant.

I am daily striving to be more loving, more obedient, and more prayerful,—that I may truly deserve the name Christian Scientist. I thank God that I live in the same age in which this beautiful truth is taught, and am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the wise provision of literature. I shall never cease to remember with joy the kindness of practitioners and friends who have ever been ready to help me onward and upward.

In the year 1904 I found myself unable to attend to my home duties on account of a strain caused by lifting a heavy weight. For several weeks I was under a physician's care, but there was no improvement in my condition. A dear neighbor who had been healed of rheumatism urged me to try Christian Science, and reluctantly I yielded. After the first treatment I was relieved of all inharmony, and I have not had a return of the trouble since. I am always glad to tell what Christian Science has done for me, with the hope that some one may be helped, even as I was. It is now over nineteen years since then, and I have had no return of either of the above complaints.

From the Press

[From Collier's Weekly, December 22, 1917]

By our effort in the prosecution of this war we are attaining temperance. From the time war was declared, the arrests for drunkenness in the city of New York steadily decreased until in August they reached the unprecedentedly low figure of 969 for the entire month. The psychopathic ward of Bellevue has had fewer patients in the last six months than during any similar period in its history. In November, 1917, the Kings County Hospital was sheltering less than half its accustomed quota of alcoholic patients.

[From The Batley Reporter, Batley, Yorkshire, England]

The Rev. Harold Anson, M.A., of Manchester, on Thursday delivered an address at the Dewsbury Parish Church on "Religion and Bodily Health." He observed that God is always fighting the spirit of evil,—whom the Jews called Satan,—that was responsible for disease as it was responsible for sin. The ministry of healing as practiced by Christ and the apostles and the saints in pre-Reformation days has been revived in these days by the Christian Science church. Revived interest in the study of the influence of the mind on the body had given rise, amongst other things, to the modern mental practice in regard to the treatment of soldiers suffering from shell shock. . . . As Christians it was up to them to see that the ministry of healing the body by faith was revived. He was a member of a small Guild of Health, which, although only at the very beginning of its investigations, was able to quote many cases of people who had been told by doctors that they could do nothing for them, and who had been restored to health through faith, devotion, and living near to God.

[From The Daily Post, Ventura, Cal., quoting a letter from Italy]

"The executive in charge of the Christian Science fund sent over from America . . . has done splendid work among the war sufferers. I accompany her often among the poor homes, and let me tell you of one fine piece of work. She bought one hundred kilos of wool and we have given it out to the poor women to be made into articles for the soldiers. . . . We have already completed about three hundred pairs of socks and one hundred jackets, and the work is still going on. Every Monday we meet the women in the Christian Science rooms, pay them for the completed work, weigh and give out more wool."

No Delay in Mind

American periodicals of general circulation are quite commonly inserting a display notice reading about as follows:

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

IF your copy of _____ does not reach you promptly, do not assume that it has gone astray. Railway traffic at the present time is so congested that even mail trains are subject to almost inevitable delays. Even if your copy is a day overdue, wait a little longer before you write to us. It will probably arrive safely.

Of course the Christian Science periodicals are carried by these same mail trains and Christian Scientists are no less willing than other citizens to contribute convenience to the national war needs if it seems necessary to do so.

Christian Scientists, however, have the privilege of knowing that, as Mrs. Eddy says,

> "Mind is the source of all movement, and there is no inertia to retard or check its perpetual and harmonious action" (Science and Health, p. 283).

This truth demonstrated will bring Christian Scientists their periodicals "on time" as the world judges it, or will enable them to see that the truths contained therein are timely and not in the least "delayed" whenever received.

VOLUME XX FEBRUARY 9, 1918 NUMBER 24

Man's Kinship to God

HON. CLARENCE A. BUSKIRK

MRS. EDDY defines man as "the compound idea of infinite Spirit; the spiritual image and likeness of God; the full representation of Mind" (Science and Health, p. 591). In the material world, or on the plane of human belief, man is regarded as the only being that manifests the possession of self-consciousness in the exercise of thought, volition, and the like. Mountains, seas, rocks,—all that is usually classified as inorganic,—and all that is usually classified as the organic life of the vegetable and animal kingdoms, except man, are differentiated by their want of self-conscious thinking. It is true that a few animals manifest an intelligence which appears at first glance to be analogous to that of man; but it is, so far as we can judge, essentially different, lacking such important characteristics as codes and ideals for the higher standards of moral conduct, religious beliefs, and hopes and aspirations concerning future existence.

God, infinite Mind, the "I AM THAT I AM" of the Mosaic record, is One, and the only One. Man is the individualized representation of the omnific Being, and as God's idea is apart from all materiality. Man's close kinship to the invisible "I AM" is shown in many ways; for example, individual man recognizes and identifies himself as a self-conscious thinking being, thus identifying himself, however, not because of his visibility to physical sense, but solely by means of his perception as a spiritual, intellectual being—this kinship being admitted by all the world's great writers. As Descartes pointed out, man knows himself to be, only because he knows that he thinks. He thus recognizes himself to be a self-conscious thinking being.

This view of man is corroborated wholly, not partially, when we rationally consider all the evidence from the standpoint of Christian Science. For example, the overcoming of sin, sickness, and the like by the Christ method can alone be sufficiently explained on the basis of the existence of God as Spirit, of man as a spiritual being, and of consequent intimate divine relations between God and man under the infinite divine government. Mrs. Eddy says, "Principle and its idea, man, are coexistent and eternal" (Science and Health, p. 520). The great Teacher declared, "The kingdom of God is within you."

The work of overcoming the false presentments of sin, sickness, and the other inharmonies which seem to belong to human existence, in the days of Jesus and his early followers and in the modern ministry of Christian Science, has not yet included the full fruition of what shall be done by man as "the full representation of Mind," but we have the inspiring promise of Jesus: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my Father."

When we consider man as "the full representation of Mind," we are surely justified in expecting that his potential dominion over the whole phenomenon of matter, in the due course of human progress, will be fully manifested through the understanding of divine Science. It is a useful as well as a glorious prophetic glimpse into the future of mankind's destiny; it broadens, uplifts, brightens, and dignifies immeasurably every perspective of our possibilities, and thus serves to arouse and strengthen our more or less dormant aspirations to realize and express godlikeness.

"The kingdom of God is within you;" why then should it be reckoned impossible for any true follower of our Master to walk the waves, to do all that Jesus did, and even greater works, according to his promise. Why should anyone presume to measure with the little yardstick of present human achievement and knowledge the potential powers of man as "the full representation of Mind," having the kingdom of God within him?

Think what the last fifty years have witnessed! And think of the besotted human selfishness and ignorance which still seek to obstruct and delay human unfoldment into man's God-bestowed sovereignty. Let us ponder well this passage from Thomas Carlyle: "All things which we see or work with in this earth, especially we ourselves and all persons, are as a kind of vesture or sensuous appearance: under all there lies, as the essence of them, . . . 'the Divine Idea of the World;' this is the reality which 'lies at the bottom of all appearance.' "

Here some one may ask: What of the volcanoes which bury cities like Pompeii? What of tidal waves drowning vast multitudes of men, women, and children? What of drifting icebergs sinking ships at sea? What of forest and other destructive fires constantly ravaging various parts of the earth? How are these things to be reconciled with the absolute supremacy of divine goodness?

These questions are the recurrence of the old problem termed "the problem of good and evil." It has engaged the perplexed attention of thinkers in every generation. The attempts to solve the seeming riddle have been many, and some of them quite specious. But all of them which rested on the assumption that the phenomenon of evil represents reality and truth are necessarily fallacious, because they would involve a self-contradiction in the divine nature and government. The Christian Science thesis that every presentment of evil is capable of being overcome because no phenomenon of evil belongs to the truth and reality of being, affords the only solution of the problem which is possible. It must, however, be borne in mind that this solution does not work itself out, but must be worked out more and more by each man through his understanding of man's potentiality as revealed in Christian Science.

Jesus said that the Father and he were one, and again he said that the Father was greater than he. The quart of water and the lake which contains it are one, but the lake is greater than the quart of water. And the words of Jesus apply to every man as God's idea, because man, according to the Bible and reason, is the manifestation of God. The destiny of man as the representation of the invisible "I AM" enables us to glimpse vistas of humanity's future usefulness and dignity which may well-nigh dazzle us. But till mortal belief is overcome it must continue to be a destiny of struggle, of pain and sorrow. We may shrink before the prospect, but we also may greatly rejoice over the participation by spiritualized human sense in the divine work of redemption.

We may well think of what has been achieved during the last fifty years in the Christ way of delivering our fellows and ourselves from the terrible bondage of sin, fear, sickness, and suffering! Think what a source of gratitude and joy, of high incentive, to every one who is not sunk in sordid selfishness! Think how the future is already thickly budding with the glorious promise of man recognized and understood as God's idea!

Time

RACHEL M. PARSONS

THE writer has often sought to grasp something of what Mrs. Eddy means by the word eternity. The natural inclination of mortals is to picture time as going on and on for indefinite ages—and thought reels before this picture.

As an illustration of this, in the study of astronomy we deal with enormous extents of time, with thousands and millions of years. We know, for instance, that the stars are all moving at immense speed through space in many different directions, but that they are so distant they appear to be motionless. As far back as records go, the constellations have appeared to the observer to be unchanged; yet to the astronomer those few thousand years to the days of the ancient Egyptians or the Chinese records are as nothing, and by means of his calculations he reasons about a time far ahead, when the appearance of the sky will be completely changed, and when we ourselves and our sun will have changed our positions, too. All this is so far off that the mere number of years conveys very little to us. And yet the astronomer goes farther than this and deals with the evolution of stars, planets, nebulæ, all taking up even greater extents of time, and with the formation, growth, and extinction of worlds.

Yet these great measurements of time do not really give us any idea of eternity. It is overwhelming to be expected to think clearly about what will happen millions of years ahead, or what happened an equally long time ago; yet after all we are still dealing with time, with finite measurements, and we read in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 468), "Time is no part of eternity." Now it seems to the writer that we shall never grasp the thought of eternity by thinking of it as an enormously long time, because it is not finite time, measured in days and years, at all. It is rather by losing the sense of passing time that we shall learn more of eternity; by filling our minds, our lives, so full of the activities of Truth that the thought of passing time does not intrude to distract us with its beliefs of limitation, of material growth and decay.

To the human mind it is at first distinctly difficult to think of activity of development as taking place apart from the passing of time. Every action in our lives, everything we do or think, is more or less associated in our minds with the thought of time. How are we to realize that we are always expressing the activity of Mind, and yet not associate this activity with the passing of time? We know that there is no stagnation in eternity. Mind is forever active.

Who does not know what it is to be so interested, so engrossed in one's work, in reading, in listening to a lecture, perhaps, that all sense of time is lost? Suddenly one looks at the clock and finds that the hands seem almost to have jumped forward. There has actually been no sense of the passing of time, or at all events very little such sense. It is of course largely the habit of looking back or of looking ahead too much that emphasizes to us the passing of time. When thoroughly engrossed in any subject we do not look backward to think what happened say half an hour ago; we are so interested in the unfoldment of ideas to us that we live only in the present. We mentally welcome each new idea that is given us, and we are so absorbed in following the train of the argument, in growing and understanding, that there is often no sense of passing time. Yet, although we have little or no thought of time, there is order, method, sequence of ideas, progress. It does not matter in the least what is happening to the clock, or whether it has taken us half an hour or one hour to grasp certain ideas.

The order, the sequence of ideas, are there; and thus in our lives, as we overcome the sense of time, as we are less bound down by its limitations, we shall not lose anything,—we shall not for example be late for a train,—because the unfoldment of ideas goes on and the order and sequence of our lives will be maintained and in fact much better maintained than before. We know that the days mentioned in the book of Genesis are not intended to signify periods of time, but the successive revelations of Truth.

At the moment, this subject is of especial importance. The world is asking how long the present conditions will last, and it is for us as Christian Scientists so to rise above the thought of the passing of time that we can shorten its apparent duration for the rest of the world, and thus accelerate the appearing of Truth. For as we free our own thoughts as far as we can from the belief of time we shall help to free the whole world from this mesmerism also, and we shall be conscious only of the appearing of good, of the forever coming of the Christ.

We shall then fulfill the words of Jesus, "For the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." It is in shortening the apparent duration of time rather than in lengthening it that the thought of eternity will be grasped. It is error that is finite and that must come to an end, and as we rise above the limitation of time, the apparent existence of error will be shortened and the kingdom of Truth will be forever apparent.

There Is No Evil

GRAY MONTGOMERY

POETS and dramatists, for the sake of picturesque imagery, have depicted in various ways their concepts of a mighty personal devil. In "Paradise Lost" Milton has written:—

> Incensed with indignation, Satan stood
> Unterrified, and like a comet burned,
> That fires the length of Ophiuchus huge
> In the artick sky, and from his horrid hair
> Shakes pestilence and war.

Scholastic theology, in teaching that evil is sent or at least permitted to exist by Deity, has in combating evil found itself in the dilemma of warring against the expressed will and purpose of God. It has never been able to give a satisfactory explanation of why Christ Jesus denounced the devil as a liar, and furthermore went about destroying evil in all its forms, if the devil or evil were created by God.

Christian Scientists are not influenced, either by the siren songs of poets or by false theological beliefs, into accepting the erroneous concepts of mortal mind. They recognize evil as the opposite of good, the suppositional absence of God. Evil is thus seen to be wholly unreal, nothingness itself. Even Rousseau, the famous French philosopher, recognized that God could not possibly be the author of evil, or be responsible for it. He writes: "Inquire no longer, then, who is the author of evil. Behold him in yourself. There exists no other evil in nature than what you either do or suffer, and you are equally the author of both. . . . Take away our fatal improvements—take away, in short, everything that is the work of man—and all that remains is good." The Preacher recognized the vanity and nothingness of evil in his declaration, "Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions."

Christian Science makes it clear that the devil, or evil, is merely a lie about the truth; it is the false belief that there is another mind besides the one infinite Mind, or God. This carnal mind is wholly wicked, being a belief of life in matter from which spring all delusions and illusions. This mist of error has seemed so to take possession of mankind as to obsess them with all manner of fearful and sinful thinking, which in turn brings about disastrous results.

Clinging to the false belief that mind is in matter, mortals are in a most unhappy state,—tempest tossed on the treacherous and ever changing sea of human opinions, without rudder or compass, left to the mercy of false emotions and self-destructive passions. But Christian Science, with the life-saving ship of spiritual understanding, comes to the rescue, moving steadfastly over the angry billows of error. Never can this ship be wrecked or lost, and it will save all who are not too drunken with human mesmerism to be unwilling to abandon their own helpless craft for the refuge and security it offers. It will bring them safely into the haven of Soul, where human will has no place and where evil is unknown.

Christian Science teaches us that we have the power to think right and to do right. A man can successfully resist that which is only a lie, hence without power, through the power of infinite Spirit. The voice of Soul will always silence the voice of material sense. It is clear that, humanly speaking, a man is just what he holds in his thought. When thinking evil and doing evil he is certainly not expressing or reflecting God. When, however, a man is thinking good, he is reflecting God.

The material body being merely the product of mortal thought, it is clear that the body must of necessity be normal, well and strong, when right thoughts are held. If a man could constantly think only right thoughts and consequently live a wholly righteous life, ascension above materiality would take place. Such a man would have demonstrated his real spiritual self or identity as God's idea. The belief in a material self would have been put off and the Christ-idea attained. Christ Jesus completed this demonstration, and he taught that every demonstration which he made could also be made by those who would think and live as he did; who would thus attain the Christ-mind, wholly free from error.

Christian Scientists are making a modest beginning in repeating the works of the Savior. They have been shown the straight and narrow way out of matter and into Spirit, out of mortality and into immortality, out of hell and into heaven. They know that evil never becomes good, that matter never becomes Spirit, for these are always opposites. The presence of good banishes all evil, the presence of Spirit causes matter to disappear, just as the presence of light removes darkness. Mortal man disappears and immortal man appears just in proportion as the right understanding of God is gained. Spiritual understanding gives enlightenment to human consciousness, causing the darkness of the mortal belief in evil to fade away.

Christian Scientists are learning how to think aright, how to banish false beliefs with right ideas. They know that the sure way into the truth of being is through the destruction of ignorance, sin, and fear by right spiritual education,—by substituting love for fear, by exchanging wrong thoughts for good thoughts, by filling their minds with thoughts of God, good, divine Love and Truth. They have learned that evil is not power, that it has seeming power only to that man who believes evil to be real. Evil is impotent to that man who disagrees with it, who knows that evil is only a lie, an illusion, an error of mortal sense, on the ground that God, good, is All-in-all, the only Mind, who sends no evil, permits no evil, and knows no evil.

The writings of our beloved Leader make it plain that we do not need to fear evil; that there is nothing in or about evil to be afraid of. Mrs. Eddy tells us, "You conquer error by denying its verity" (Science and Health, p. 339), and directs us to overcome error by reversing its false statements. On page 20 of "Unity of Good" she writes: "Try this process, dear inquirer, and so reach that perfect Love which 'casteth out fear,' and then see if this Love does not destroy in you all hate and the sense of evil. You will awake to the perception of God as All-in-all. You will find yourself losing the knowledge and the operation of sin, proportionably as you realize the divine infinitude and believe that He can see nothing outside of His own focal distance."

We should not ignore evil, but surely we need not clothe it with the unreal robes of superstition. Rather should we disrobe evil of its vile garments (the belief of pleasure in sin), and then we will see it as merely a hypnotic belief, which is annihilated by the word of Truth, the prayer of understanding, the recognition that God is perfect, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, and that God's universe, including man, is wholly perfect and spiritual, wholly like God.

Spiritual Protection

MABEL K. DIXON

IT has been said that to have our interests along any line spiritually protected, those interests must be the result of spiritual thinking. An occasional declaration to the effect that what we are engaged in is primarily spiritual is not sufficient; there must be the constant knowing that it is true, and the constant mental protection of this fact from the doubts and fears of human belief about it. What is this spiritual thinking that is to be our protection from evil under every circumstance of human experience? Is it not the knowing of the spiritual fact about each condition that presents itself? Is it not to dwell "in the secret place of the most High," and is not the protection which this gives the abiding "under the shadow of the Almighty"? Abiding in the thought of God! Could there be a safer place?

We are told throughout the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" that we are given spiritual power wherewith to be defended from every shaft of error. Our spiritual armor must, however, be worn constantly, for in the stress and emergency of daily encounter with the foe—"the terror by night," "the arrow that flieth by day," "the destruction that wasteth at noonday"—there is no time to look up our armor and don it before the enemy can deal us some blows that could never have reached us had our armor been on.

The experience of a business woman, who is a Christian Scientist, in one of our large cities, furnishes a practical illustration of this spiritual protection. Returning from work at night at a later hour than usual, and on a street where there were few pedestrians, she was stopped by a man who persisted that she recognize him as some one whom she had previously met. In the hollow of her arm she held a package of Christian Science literature and her shopping bag, but there was no attempt to take her purse. If the man's thought had been to rob her he did not attempt it. The daily effort to know that substance is spiritual had lifted her above the belief that the contents of a purse are substance, and thereby his thought was turned away from it as anything to be desired or taken. Both were blessed in that the man was prevented from doing a dishonest act and the woman was protected from being the victim of dishonesty. If, on the other hand, a thought of immorality was trying to reach her, it found, as did the lions with Daniel, nothing to attract animality; the daily endeavor to reflect more and more of the purity of divine Mind was as a mantle of protection around her. And if, as came to her thought, there was the mortal belief of insanity, the daily trying to know that there is but one Mind had become so habitual that the false belief in a mind apart from God, a mind which could be insane or harmful, no longer caused the intense fear it once did. There being no fear manifested, there was nothing for such a belief to think it could harm.

In a quiet, kind voice the woman assured the man that he was mistaken, that he really did not know who she was, and he finally loosened his hold on her and she was allowed to go on. Without a quickened step or a backward glance she proceeded on her way, realizing with deep thankfulness that through the teaching of Christian Science spiritual thinking had indeed been her protection. This experience made her more careful of the armor which is tested on every occasion that it is used.

Later, when human sense insisted that there was one who was trying to get her position away from her, and that the belief of age, so dominant in the commercial world, was against her, she had to turn completely away from the seeming reality of the situation to the spiritual fact concerning it, which was that the ideas of divine Mind never conflict with one another; that as an idea of that Mind she could not be thought of in connection with age or incapacity, but only as reflecting ever increasing intelligence and ability, and that the only position there is in reality is the place one has in divine Mind, and this is unassailable. She realized that if she was in her right place spiritually, that is, knew herself as spiritual; in her right place mentally, that is, was mentally protecting and sustaining her knowledge of herself as spiritual; if she was doing her right work, which was reflecting Truth and Love, this would unfold to her her right place and right work, and she would be thus spiritually protected in the performance of it.

When we realize that so-called organized evil, or evil by any name, seeking to operate through the beliefs of mortals, has no way of reaching the citadel of spiritual thinking, hence cannot touch those abiding there, and that there is no avenue through which it can find an entrance, we are safe. As to the commercial vulture,—with a belief about man living by bread alone, and about blood being the life of man, for which he will give all that he possesses,—he simply preys on those who believe as he believes, and through the medium of their fear engendered by this belief he carries on his business. To the spiritual thinker who knows that Life is God, Spirit, and that man in His image is spiritual, and is nourished and sustained by "every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God,"—by every spiritual truth that God reveals to him,—to such a thinker there is no fear of the vulture, for to those who stand by spiritual facts no need is ever left unsupplied.

Then what of our duty to our brothers, who through beliefs of greed, ambition, injustice, and hate have helped to precipitate the awful carnage of a world-wide war,—these brothers who know so little of spiritual thinking and its protective power? Then what of the brothers who are realizing that human methods and human ways are of no avail, and who are looking on with a dawning hope in their weary eyes as they see right thinking steadily bringing the whole problem up out of the material depths into the mental realm, resolving it into terms of liberty, freedom, and the human rights of man, whose roots are deeply embedded in the spiritual fact of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man?

Shall we not don our spiritual armor and stand shoulder to shoulder with these brothers? And as they look out through the window of material sense and behold the host encompassing us and say, "Alas, . . . how shall we do?" we can answer confidently, "Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Like the prophet of old we can pray to the Lord to open their eyes that they may see. And even as the young man's eyes were opened in answer to Elisha's prayer, and he saw the heavenly host camped round about them, so will our brothers' eyes be opened to discern the protection of the one Mind, which is gathering within its compassionate care not only our own loved country, but all the nations of the earth.

Progressive Work

CLARA STOCKWELL MC CORD

WE insist upon children learning the first processes of arithmetic thoroughly and accurately, because they will be used in solving every problem afterward, on and up through the most abstruse calculations; and so it is in the Science of Christianity. There, too, certain fundamental lessons must be mastered; they must become such a part of our mental equipment that we can use them as it were unconsciously. When the writer was a beginner in Christian Science she learned some lessons from a comparatively brief experience that have been of great value and of almost daily usefulness ever since, and she hopes that others may be helped by a recital of them.

I was suffering from a physical disorder which was supposed to be hereditary in the family through several generations, and which always meant two or three days' incapacity with each recurrence of the trouble. After I became interested in Christian Science I was able to overcome a number of ailments, but this particular one I thought to be beyond my reach. When it occurred to me on the first day of this attack to call for help, error at once began to argue that I was too sick to go to the telephone; that it was so troublesome to get a response over the long distance line; that the annoyance therefrom would cause an aggravation of suffering; and back of all this was "a fear that Mind is helpless to defend the life of man and incompetent to control it," as Mrs. Eddy says on page 377 of Science and Health.

Then all at once I felt that the thing for me to do was to trust in God. I at once made my way to the telephone, but for some reason was unable to make the operator hear me. I rang again and repeatedly called for "long distance," only to hear an emphatic voice at the other end of the line say, "I can't hear you." So I gave up and turned away, expecting disastrous results from the nervous strain, but instead found that I was completely healed. Rising cautiously from my chair I went out and walked around in the yard, almost dazed from the suddenness of the revelation. It seemed to me that my troubles were all over; that if Christian Science could perform such a miracle as this, I would in future only have to know that the thing for me to do was to trust in God, and I would be healed. Later, however, it dawned upon me that it was my complete childlike self-surrender to trust in the power of good which had brought the immediate relief. My thoughts were not then fixed on physical healing; they were uplifted toward God.

"Progress," Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 233 of Science and Health, "is the law of God, whose law demands of us only what we can certainly fulfil." No doubt if the repeating of the same words had again healed me I would have been satisfied to go on using them indefinitely, and thus would have failed of that advance in understanding which is so essential. It is to be feared that most of us would be content to keep on solving the easy problems, so we have to be forced to work our way through what seem the more difficult ones, and sometimes these mean standing firm, holding thought unwaveringly to the truth, even when our efforts seem to bring no response. "Who is among you," we read in Isaiah, "that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God."

Many years ago heavy and repeated summer rains filled our usually lovely Wabash River till like Jordan of old it overflowed all its banks, and people from miles around flocked to see it. I, among the number, witnessed there an incident seemingly so trivial in itself that I have often wondered why it remained so vividly and persistently in my memory; but since it has helped me in not a few dark places to learn the lessons of Science, the reason has been made plain to me. Two or three men stepped into a boat and attempted to row up the stream against the swift current, but the boat refused to move; again and again they applied the oars, with no result as far as could be seen; but as they persisted it began to yield, and soon they were moving steadily through the turbulent water. Thus I learned another lesson of great importance—that when our efforts seem to be of no avail, when the error seems to yield not at all, if we but persist we shall win. We must realize that every sincere effort will have an effect that is never lost. "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void," is the promise, "but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it."

These truths, then, seemed to me to be of fundamental importance,—that we must progress, and that we must never be discouraged. In divine Science there is no such thing as failure. When the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel went onward in their journeys; but if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till it was taken up, waiting patiently for spiritual illumination; but "whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed."

"Light"

MARGUERITE MONIS HAWKSLEY

LIGHT, wondrous light, across the evening sky,
Aglow on yonder hill!
Light in my heart, for God is here and nigh.
I will be still.

I will be still and know that God is Light,
Though darkness comes and seems to hide the sun,
I will be glad through every seeming night,
And wait for morning and the words—Well done!

Selected Articles

["'Earth's stupid rest'"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 7, 1917]

One of the first evidences of spiritual awakening is often a revulsion against the stupidity of much ordinary human experience. This revulsion need not, however, be accompanied by any sense of despondency at the prospect of ever replacing such stupidity with intelligent alertness. The true revulsion is the vigorous movement of divine intelligence which sweeps all torpor before its infinite vitality.

Even when human thought, conceiving prosperity as a condition in which there is nothing much to do, has slipped into the narrowest rut of mere eating and sleeping, clothes-buying and gossip, sensuous enjoyment and utter vacancy, such a state must be but temporary. The unfoldment of Spirit can and does permeate and finally destroy every phase of human belief, from the intellectual to the obtuse, from the eccentrically overstrenuous to the totally inert. A castle of indolence itself has to fall sooner or later before the expression of Principle.

In one of her best known and best loved hymns (Poems, p. 14) Mrs. Eddy declares:—

Thou wilt bind the stubborn will,
Wound the callous breast,
Make self-righteousness be still,
Break earth's stupid rest.

It is indeed the Christ, the infinitely energetic idea, which breaks earth's stupidity with the understanding of what Life really is. The actual presence of this idea, replacing the obstinacy of human will with the constancy of spiritual desires, superseding material insensibility with sensitiveness only to good, supplanting ignorant conceit with reliance upon the one I AM, healing the sick completely and permanently, is revealed to the world to-day through Christian Science.

First of all, the one turning to Christian Science must be active. The understanding of divine Mind which Christian Science confers, includes the knowledge of the perfection of man, who is the idea of Mind, and shows that man is whole and well. To apprehend this makes a man alert to check any belief in disease as a necessity as well as any belief in the inevitableness of age or failing powers. He becomes active at all points and is not content to fall under the spell of physical infirmity. Activity is a fundamental requirement of Principle. Mrs. Eddy says on page 373 of Science and Health, "If we are Christians on all moral questions, but are in darkness as to the physical exemption which Christianity includes, then we must have more faith in God on this subject and be more alive to His promises."

"For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword," says the apostle Paul. Hence the appearing of the Christ, or Truth, to-day, as of old, necessarily stirs up thought to spiritual animation. Active dependence upon Principle transmutes even the daily routine with Mind's infinite variety. It operates likewise to lighten with divine intelligence the very countenances which hitherto may have seemed of the dullest. The "calm, broad, thoughtless aspect" of Thomson's "comely, full-spread porter" himself would not long resist the inspiration of the divine Mind. Through this inspiration all mankind must sooner or later become what Pharaoh, in throwing open the land of Goshen for Joseph's father and brethren, called "men of activity," men of manifest ability.

This activity, of course, cannot be merely physical. The mad dash hither and thither of the motorist is often an extreme phase of earth's stupidity. What one needs to know, whether one be motoring, hoeing potatoes, overcoming what may seem physical disease, or sweeping the floors is that the action of Mind is all the action there is. It is the belief in existence as material that claims to mesmerize thought into numb lethargy. The essence of veritable existence is spiritual consciousness. In the one true consciousness which is God, action is ever right and harmonious. This consciousness and its expression is all that is really substantial or tangible. The only enduring health, alertness, satisfaction, or accomplishment of any sort comes from the consciousness of right activity. As Mrs. Eddy says on page 3 of "Rudimental Divine Science": "Jesus' healing was spiritual in its nature, method, and design. He wrought the cure of disease through the divine Mind, which gives all true volition, impulse, and action; and destroys the mental error made manifest physically, and establishes the opposite manifestation of Truth upon the body in harmony and health."

Since the discovery of Christian Science, the breaking of earth's torpor has been immensely accelerated. The understanding which it imparts of spiritual man in the image and likeness of God is the agent in the shattering process. Whenever we encounter the suggestions of stupidity, let us, therefore, instead of ignoring them helplessly and hopelessly, turn our attention forthwith to this true understanding of man's relation to God which is already arousing mankind from its long lethargy. There is no condition so chronic, so acute, or so overwhelming in any way that it cannot vanish before the understanding of Principle.

In the process nothing is really destroyed or injured in the slightest degree, for certainly nothing is annihilated or hurt in the awakening of a human being from a nightmare. The seeming lack of order or action is simply corrected just as a mistake in mathematics is rectified. Rest which is genuine because it is the ever alert and untiring action of immortal Mind takes the place of any stupidly mistaken sense of rest. Knowing this and seeing the divine Life continuously dissipating earth's spuriousness, giving strength in place of infirmity, perfection for seeming imperfection, we prove perpetually the truth of what Mrs. Eddy says in another of her poems (Poems, p. 79):—

The centuries break, the earth-bound wake,
God's glorified!
Who doth His will—His likeness still—
Is satisfied.

[Carl E. Herring in Omaha (Neb.) Bee]

Our critic arrives at the conclusion that Christian Science cures diseases, but that Christian Scientists do not know how it is done. The patience of the editor and the good nature of the public are rapidly bringing us to many points of agreement. The writer cheerfully admits that he is but skirting the edges of the tremendous philosophy contained in Christian Science. Referring to herself, Mrs. Eddy, the author of Science and Health, said: "To-day, though rejoicing in some progress, she still finds herself a willing disciple at the heavenly gate, waiting for the Mind of Christ" (Pref., p. ix). If then we are agreed that Christian Science heals, we have laid well the foundation for further progress.

If matter possesses the inherent reality sufficient to enjoy itself or have pain, it would then seem logical to apply some other matter to induce the pleasure or stop the pain; but if disease is error induced by wrong thought, the remedy should be directed toward correcting the thought, and this constitutes a Christian Science treatment. Our critic admits some of the healings of Jesus and denies others. This is not meeting the issue. The question is, Did Jesus establish the principle of spiritual healings? If he did not, the case is closed; if he did, mistakes and failures are no more to be recorded than is the failure of the schoolboy to work his sums. Christian Science accepts the gospel record of the healings performed by Jesus in their entirety, not only for the evidential fact, but as a precedent and guide for Christian healing for all manner of diseases.

[Samuel Greenwood in The Week, Victoria, B. C., Canada]

In view of certain recent attempts to bring discredit upon Christian Science by a misrepresentation of its teachings, some passing comments from the standpoint of a Christian Scientist may be of interest to your readers. Ever since the publication of its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, in 1875, Christian Science has been out in the open, and has met with every form of attack, from mere ridicule to direct malice. It is not the least argument in its favor that with all this it has gone serenely on with its good work, until it includes in its activities practically every part of the globe.

Christian Science has not departed from the teachings of Jesus or of his apostles, but it has followed the premise of the all-power of God to its logical conclusion, and has demonstrated how this makes Christianity practical for mortals. Popular systems of theology, on the other hand, have conformed their doctrines to human opinions, or largely so, and have admitted the claims of materialism to their premises. It is this materialism in Christianity, if I may use that combination, which has in large measure nullified the usefulness of the church, and which now antagonizes Christian Science. If Christian Science is to be condemned, it might be pertinent to ask why other Christian religions pass uncensured, since their declaration of faith includes the same fundamental truths upon which Christian Science, or the Science of Christianity, is based?

Christian Science does not ignore matter as a phenomenon of the human mind, and therefore as a factor in present human experience, but it does not regard it as something spiritually created or as having any divine control over man. Christian Science deals with matter as a condition of thought to be outgrown or superseded through a better understanding of the truth of spiritual being. The fact that there appears to be material substance all about us, and that we ourselves seem to be part of it, does not prove anything more than that human thought has yet but a feeble apprehension of spiritual reality. This lack of understanding does not imply that the supremacy of Spirit and spiritual law is not the truth, but simply that mortals in their ignorance and sensualism do not use that truth in their own behalf. If it is not true that the flesh, or matter, is to be overcome or put aside for the spiritual fact about man, then what is? Is it true that mankind must continue forever bound to those sensuous conditions which cause and include all human misery?

If Christianity is true there must be a point in human experience when we are to begin putting off the "old man." Jesus' demonstration of Christianity lifted him above material sense entirely; then in obedience to his teaching and example, Christians should also be rising above materiality. If not, in what other direction should they go? Christian Science teaches that as one understands more of God he naturally gravitates toward spirituality and away from sensualism and sin.

Christian Science teaches the omnipotence of God, without any modification whatever. The admission that evil is a self-existent power and intelligence certainly does not benefit mankind. It holds out no promise of freedom, no hint of eternal peace. The acceptance of evil as a real power must necessarily perpetuate its conditions, while the rejection of evil opens the way for its overcoming, opens the way by which men may become conscious of the kingdom of God within.

[Albert F. Gilmore in The Knickerbocker Press, Albany, N. Y.]

In a sermon, a clergyman is reported to have made certain statements regarding the teachings of Christian Science which are wholly misleading in their tendency. Overlooking the lack of propriety in denominating as a "modern nostrum" a religion which has a constantly increasing number of followers in every civilized country of the world grateful for release from sin and suffering, it should be pointed out that Christian Science does not, as this gentleman implies, teach the use of human will as a factor in healing. On page 144 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy states: "Human will belongs to the so-called material senses, and its use is to be condemned. Willing the sick to recover is not the metaphysical practice of Christian Science, but is sheer animal magnetism."

Christian Science quite agrees that "the principal mission of Jesus to this world was not to cure men's bodies." That freedom from ills of the flesh is gained and that discords of every kind and name are overcome and healed as a natural consequence of the gaining of that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," a multitude of followers bear grateful witness. Christian Scientists joyfully accept Jesus as the Wayshower who came "to point out the way of Truth and Life" (Science and Health, p. 30), to demonstrate man's freedom from sin, disease, sorrow, in short from every discordant condition, regarding as his primary purpose the demonstration of his divine Principle rather than the healing of the body.

Instead of "exalting the body above the soul," Christian Science definitely states (Science and Health, p. 383): "The Christian Scientist takes the best care of his body when he leaves it most out of his thought, and, like the Apostle Paul, is 'willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.'"

[Engel Krefting in Morgenposten, Christiania, Norway]

In Morgenposten, under the heading, "Thought-transference and Imagination," appears a review of the book "To Influence and to be Influenced." From page 12 of this book the critic quotes a sentence which reads: "A modern religious society, the Church of Christ, Scientist, rests wholly on consistent suggestion and self-suggestion." If the author by this sentence intends to enlighten the general public on what foundation Christian Science rests, he could hardly have chosen an explanation more erroneous and misleading.

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes (p. 72), "Not personal intercommunion but divine law is the communicator of truth, health, and harmony to earth and humanity." With these words the Discoverer of Christian Science informs the readers that this teaching is wholly separated from suggestion and self-suggestion. Christian Science recognizes that God, or Spirit, is the "sustaining infinite" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii), which imparts its hallowing influence directly to that consciousness which has left the broad way of suggestion and self-suggestion and has chosen to go in through the narrow gate of divine law. This choice leads the truth seekers into the narrow way of obedience which Christ Jesus trod and consistently followed, with the result that he received power to drive out suggestion and self-suggestion, or the work of the devil, both for himself and for others. The Master's life and blessed, triumphant career is the foundation on which the Christian Science organization is built.

Christian Scientists endeavor to have that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," for only through this Mind can they prove themselves to be consistent and worthy followers of the Christian Science teaching.

"Please find inclosed check for twenty-five dollars to be divided between The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund."

"The inclosed check for $1043.91 is the entire collection of the church and Sunday school on Sunday, December 30. This amount is sent to be applied to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and to the Real Estate fund, or, at your discretion, to either of these funds."

"My gratitude for the spiritual guidance I have received through the teachings of our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, prompts the sending of this check. It is my desire that you should use this check in whatever way it may do the most good. In a recent experience for which I am very, very grateful, it has been demonstrated to me that divine Love meets the human need."

"Inclosed please find bank draft for the amount of $27.70. This sum is to be divided between The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund."

"Inclosed please find money order for one pound to be divided equally between the Real Estate fund and The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, which it gives me the greatest pleasure to contribute."

"Inclosed you will find three dollars, one dollar for the Real Estate fund, the rest for The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. I am sorry I cannot send more, but knowing the truth makes me thankful to send this little."

"It is with a grateful heart that I wish to testify to the help I had through the War Relief fund. At the head of a girls' school, empty since the war, I was in great distress, and I have been generously helped by the gift from the War Relief fund, which was for me a veritable blessing. At the same time I also gained more strength and faith to go on in the dark days."

"Inclosed please find our check for one thousand dollars to apply on our pledge to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund. You may apply the entire amount to either fund or divide it between these funds as you deem best."

"Inclosed please find check for five hundred dollars to be applied on our pledge to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and to the Real Estate fund."

"Please accept check for one hundred dollars, part payment of our pledge of five hundred dollars. Please divide this equally between the Real Estate fund and The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. We are thankful that we are privileged to contribute to this fund."

Truth Is Formidable

TIMES of trial are testing times, for then falsity is urging its claims to the utmost. The human mind is swayed by its arguments, confused by its excitements, perturbed by its threats, allured by its promises, and at times would gladly give it the verdict. But let us never be confused as to the issue; truth will have the verdict. Falsity wastes itself away by its contradictions, while our understanding of truth grows ever stronger by the affirmations and demonstrations which support it.

While truth is thus marching on to its inevitable victory it is attacked on all sides. Its adherents seem to have to meet hosts of adversaries who far outnumber them. Furthermore, the adversaries claim to be clever, and those who stand for truth will sometimes admit that claim with a weary sigh, when they should never sigh nor be discouraged, but joyfully turn to Principle, or Truth itself, and find healing from every weariness and sense of discouragement. Here is the unfailing remedy for those who find that error in its braggart boasting, or by means of its poisonous subtlety, is claiming dominion over them. Indeed, there is no other remedy, as our Leader clearly shows in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 380), where she says, "Nothing but the power of Truth can prevent the fear of error, and prove man's dominion over error."

Truth is formidable to error because it puts error out of action. The lies and deceptions which have tormented the human race are a great host, yet as the ages go by they are judged, and they pass under condemnation into nothingness; while truth, consistent and undivided, marches on. Very truly could the apostle say, "We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth." But to work wisely we must know how to overcome error with truth, how to enlighten those who stumble in darkness. In Christian Science we are content to work with individual questioners and seekers, even as our Master did, and the vast import of this is brought out by James, who says: "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

This work of salvation is exact because it is scientific, and does not connect in any way with the mesmeric action of fear and sentiment, inducing dread of punishment and desire for a sensual paradise. It is Truth that saves,—Principle, not the doctrines of men. Hence men can be delivered from delusions of every kind, and find a clear way Godward, despite error's false claims and poisonous deceptions, its stealth, and fraud, and boasting. This deliverance is not achieved through ignorance of the devices of evil, but by such knowledge as keeps one unvictimized, and by such inspiration as makes him victorious. Mrs. Eddy clearly says (Science and Health, p. 252), "A knowledge of error and of its operations must precede that understanding of Truth which destroys error, until the entire mortal, material error finally disappears, and the eternal verity, man created by and of Spirit, is understood and recognized as the true likeness of his Maker."

Whoever will know Truth and its power must be honest. It is not enough to have a belief of being good, for it is among the personally good that the stealthy mesmerist works to produce division of opinion. The wolf in the night tries to scatter the flock, that he may slay the sheep as they wander confused. So do the human enemies of man, as wolves in sheep's clothing, first try to divide and scatter; then they will, if they can, devour trust, confidence, good will, kindness, fellowship, because if the flock should remain united in love, and obediently trust the shepherd's care, it would be safe. But against the truly honest man the mesmerist and the spy work vainly. The honest man will not accept any inducement of theirs to separate himself from Principle, for his God is "a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." The servant of Antichrist anywhere is afraid of the honest man everywhere, because every such thinker menaces his power, which is based on deceit. Mrs. Eddy says: "Only the action of Truth, Life, and Love can give harmony. Whatever teaches man to have other laws and to acknowledge other powers than the divine Mind, is anti-Christian" (Science and Health, p. 169). The Christian Scientist is so named because he is pro-Christian. Let him, then, in his honesty rely upon Truth, and be certain that it is formidable against error and will prove victorious in all the earth.

Faith, Hope, and Love

ONE of the most beautiful passages in Paul's writings is to be found in the fifth chapter of his epistle to the Romans, which reads thus: "Hope maketh not ashamed; because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." This epistle has a good deal to say about faith and hope, and in his first epistle to the Corinthians he tells us that as mortals "we see through a glass, darkly." He does not, however, stop at this but shows the glorious outlook which was sustaining him all the way when he says of the period of fuller unfoldment, "Then shall I know even as also I am known." From this he goes on to tell us of the qualities which sustain us on our way to this goal, namely, "faith, hope, charity," the last being translated as love in the Revised Version. We sometimes hear of those who are without hope, which means that they are without God, but happily many such find their healing in Christian Science and go by the way of hope, faith, and love to the complete realization of God's allness and the real man's likeness to our heavenly Father.

In her memorable address to her college association in 1895, Mrs. Eddy pointed out the aggressive and delusive phases of error which would hold humanity back from the realization of man's divine heritage, then she added: "Thank God! this evil can be resisted by true Christianity. Divine Love is our hope, strength, and shield. We have nothing to fear when Love is at the helm of thought, but everything to enjoy on earth and in heaven" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 113). As we go back to Paul's words already quoted and relate them to those of our revered Leader, they awaken in us a deep desire for the hope that maketh not ashamed and that the love of God may be shed abroad in our hearts. It is very clear to students of Christian Science that in order to realize this in its fullness we must understand what is meant by the Holy Ghost,—the divine influence promised by our Master, who said that after his departure "the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 55): "This Comforter I understand to be Divine Science."

In the book of Proverbs we read that "hope deferred maketh the heart sick." This, however, was not the hope which lays hold upon faith and love, but instead depends upon material evidence, which always disappoints. Because man is a spiritual being, he can only be really satisfied by spiritual things. All Christian people acknowledge the need of faith, and more faith, and yet strange to say many are ashamed to admit that their hope of healing or of any good thing rests solely upon God. Now the kind of hope of which Paul writes makes no one ashamed, because the love of God takes possession of the heart and transforms the whole nature through divine Science, and brings with this transformation the healing of the human mind and body.

Many have to endure what seems almost worse tribulation than sickness and suffering when their first attempts to reach out for divine aid are mocked by those who call themselves Christian people; nor is this all, for the time is not long past when threats of prosecution were added to persecution, and all because the suffering one had come to place his entire hope upon the love of God as his Savior. Christian Science, however, lifts one above the fear of this mortal influence and reminds us, to quote Paul again, that we "are saved by hope:" but the apostle makes it clear that hope is only a transitional stage because, he adds, what a man sees he no longer hopes for, and then he lifts thought to that inspiring passage which is so often quoted by Christian Scientists, namely, "All things work together for good to them that love God."

A deeply spiritual writer tells of one who was passing through a long struggle with seeming misfortune and whose only fear was that his faith might fail. Jesus foresaw the possibility of this on the part of some of his disciples, and so he said to Simon Peter, "I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not." The student of Christian Science knows what the prayer of understanding, the prayer of divine Science, means, knows that it lays hold upon omnipotence and that it enlarges and uplifts both hope and faith until the unfolding sense of love dispels all the darkness of mortal belief and reveals the healing power of divine Truth and Love.

As we ponder Paul's words in the chapter first quoted, we see that there is no cause for regret if tribulations come; for did not the apostle say that he gloried in these? and so may we if we keep close to our divine Principle; for out of the tribulation, the testing time, will come patience and the experience which is of real value in all we do, for no matter what the human experience may seem, faith, hope, and love can never be shaken by the winds or waves of mortal belief.

Herod Circumvented

AN interpretative study of the Bible which is designed to be of assistance in our own time must necessarily treat the characters therein depicted as types. There are Herods to-day, walking and talking and ruling others. They need to be known to be made harmless. When the contest is on between the spiritual idea and its supposititious opposite, then Herod steps upon the scene to try to murder the right lest it dethrone him from his rule of wrong. As a type, Herod represents the pitiless tyranny of a one-sided humanity, which seeks to slay all the male children because it desires to destroy all power except its own, and has no perception that the female child can ever grow to exercise power. His ruthless reign of mere physical might despises the qualities of love, tenderness, and compassion manifested by the Christ and seeks to perpetuate his tyranny through brute force.

Herod was interested in the tale of the wise men solely because they spoke of the Messiah as the "King of the Jews," not because his birth was heralded by a star of spiritual rejoicing. Baffled by the silence of the wise men he let his murderous frenzy hurl itself upon the youngest of the little children of Bethlehem and "the coasts thereof," while the child Jesus was carried by his parents in safety into the land of Egypt. It is sometimes necessary, in order to baffle the mental assassin, to withdraw into the sheltering twilight of the unexpected place. Herod does not typify the subtler serpentine propensities of educated evil, his is rather the heavy hand of hate and fear grasping its prey in order to crush a supposed competitor. Then when the exquisite beauty of the Christ, Truth, is unfolded to the Christian Scientist, and its effulgent glory penetrates the veil of his human consciousness, there is a duty to perform. The revelation of Truth must be protected, for the star shines above it and might betray it to an avaricious Herod hearing the report of the wise men. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 565 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Led on by the grossest element of mortal mind, Herod decreed the death of every male child in order that the man Jesus, the masculine representative of the spiritual idea, might never hold sway and deprive Herod of his crown. The impersonation of the spiritual idea had a brief history in the earthly life of our Master; but 'of his kingdom there shall be no end,' for Christ, God's idea, will eventually rule all nations and peoples—imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science."

The prospect of real peace is revealed as dependent upon the reign of "Christ, God's idea." This peace can become a part of every one's experience now who accepts the Christ, Truth. It is to be earned individually until such time as the collective consciousness willingly submits to the blessed rule of divine Science. For the present much protection against would-be Herods is necessary until the nations are ready to take this step. The spiritually minded are upon the watchtowers of Jerusalem guarding the city against the surprises of mortal mind's ruthless warfare; they forewarn the Marys and Josephs of to-day of the need for fleeing into Egypt with their precious charges, the right ideas which are born to them of spiritual travail.

The lesson of this necessary protection is not easily learned, for the righteous are not suspicious of their brethren. Nevertheless, experience proves that the inventor wisely hides his invention from curious and perhaps dishonest eyes until it is protected by patent. The author and artist do not scatter their ideas broadcast until they are incorporated in book or painting or sculpture. The musician does not hesitate to copyright the melodies and harmonies which come to him for safekeeping. In strictly spiritual matters wisdom quickly teaches the metaphysical mistake of casting pearls before swine, before the unprepared and unrepentant thought. Jesus said to the man he had healed, "See thou tell no man." Thus speak not indiscriminately of the advent of the Christ, Truth, to your consciousness, repeat not unwisely, "Unto us a son is given." Every healing experience treads on holy ground. "Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not" with your law and gospel, but first of all go unto "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." Confide your secret joy to those who are prepared to understand it by their instinctive worship of the one God, not to those who through race and ecclesiastical tradition are predisposed to worship gods many and to scoff at Spirit while enthroning matter. To keep oneself on the housetop, proclaiming one's particular problem, is to become a target for error and retard individual growth. To hide the Christ-idea in Egypt is necessary at times, lest greed and envy in trying to destroy this idea seek to slay the human who is anointed with the Christ. God's way is the safe way, and the Christ-idea unfolds its petals of supreme glory under God's protection.

Having eluded the crude brutalities of the Herods by a flight into Egypt, the time also comes when it is advisable to safeguard the young child from the subtler sorceries of Egypt itself and to return into Judea unheralded and unnoticed. Our best actions should be unknown except to the doer. Then they cannot be betrayed to Herod unintentionally by friends or intentionally by foes. In the secret tabernacle of divine protection the young child can grow in grace and wisdom till the time of public ministry has arrived.

Among the Churches

MONTANA.—During the last year three cards announcing church services have been added to the list in The Christian Science Journal. This is indicative of the growth of the movement in this state. There are a great many calls for Christian Science treatment in towns where there are no practitioners. Ten free subscriptions to the Monitor were placed in the Glacier National Park hotels and chalets during the park season. Eight subscriptions to the Monitor are being donated to the state prison, at Deer Lodge. Daily copies of the Monitor are being supplied to the Y. M. C. A. reading tables at Fort William Henry Harrison. This office supplied the Montana Soldiers' Home at Columbia Falls with a renewal subscription to the Sentinel and the Journal; also, a renewal subscription to the Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor to the U. S. S. Montana. Two subscriptions to the Quarterly were supplied the state prison, one to the women's department and one to the men's department. Nine copies of "The Life of Mary Baker Eddy," by Sibyl Wilbur, have been donated to ministers in the various cities of this state.

There has been a final disposition made of the Bozeman court cases. Litigation covering a period of nearly four years was brought to a close by a dismissal. On March 2, 1914, three Christian Science practitioners, residing in Gallatin and Park Counties, were charged by the county attorney for Gallatin County with practicing medicine without a certificate. The defense filed a demurrer, which was sustained. The state then appealed the cases. They were finally dismissed by the Attorney-General.

Committee on Publication.

TOPEKA, KAN.—Regular subscriptions for the Monitor are sent to ten places. At the City Library are to be found the Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor; also the Journal at Pelletier's Rest Room, Warren M. Crosby and Crosby Brothers. Twenty Monitors are distributed by carrier each day to various public places in the city, and nineteen boxes are being supplied when necessary. The soldiers were given literature while quartered here, and the day the Battery entrained for Fort Sill, Sentinels and Monitors were distributed. When the train pulled out the Christian Science literature was waved to those left behind. A recent copy of the magazine issued by the Boys Industrial School shows an article copied from the Monitor.

SAN RAFAEL, CAL.—The Christian Scientists have decided to build a new church edifice in San Rafael for the use of their growing congregation. It will cost about eight thousand dollars and have a seating capacity of fully five hundred people. Work on the building will probably begin in the early spring. About a year ago a lot was purchased and paid for. This lot is on Fifth Street, directly opposite F Street, in the heart of the residence district of the city.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to Nov. 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

The Lectures

DENISON, TEXAS (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Judge J. W. Hassell, who said in part:—

It is the spirit of this age to judge men not by their professions but by their deeds; to lift the mask from the face and look upon the features that it hides; to tear the form from every creed and inquire for its vital truths. Everywhere, in the social, economic, and religious life of the country, men and women are asserting the right of individual freedom and showing the courage to investigate though they may not agree; and this fact is attested to-night by the presence here of this magnificent audience.

I met the lecturer but a few minutes ago, but in that time I have learned that he is an educated, intelligent gentleman. He is here as the accredited representative of a great church; great not merely because of its membership, but because the individuals who compose that membership (and I believe I have as wide an acquaintance with them as anyone not a member of their church) are representative in intelligence, in citizenship, and in high ideals.

MEXICO, MO. (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by W. L. Kent, who said in part:—

All the Christian world is agreed that the Bible is the Word of God; that it brings to the world God's message to mankind; that it unfolds who and what God is and what man is and his relation to God. Christian Scientists have proven that the Christian religion is demonstrable—that when its teachings are understood and properly applied sickness is healed, discord is destroyed, and peace and harmony prevail to-day as when Jesus was on earth.—Intelligencer.

Testimonies of Healing

I wish to express thanksgiving for all that Christian Science has done for me and to rejoice with others for its bountiful blessings. It was brought to me at a time when I was physically well, but in discord with religion and very unhappy. My friend told me in a few words about Christian Science and I accepted it at once; it seemed to me a wonderful yet simple truth. Then came a time when I understood that Christian Science must be earnestly studied in order to be demonstrated, and I studied it as we do mathematics, by solving problems and destroying all sorts of error. Beliefs of poverty and of limitation were overcome, and I have had a wonderful demonstration that man really lives only in obedience to God's spiritual law.

A great help was Christian Science to me in times of sickness. When one of my children seemed to have measles, this error was destroyed in one day and the other child did not become ill, although it was not separated from the sick child. The most wonderful sense of divine protection, of the presence of Love, that I have had was at the birth of my last child. All the time I had treatment from a kind practitioner because I was in a bad condition and had great fear. This brought to the surface all sorts of error, heart and lung trouble, weakness, cough, and many other ills, which were overcome through Christian Science treatment. At last the truth about man as God's child and as ever under His protection seemed so clear to me that the birth was very harmonious and without any sense of pain. I was out of bed and began my duties the third day.

Christian Science had helped me and shown me the way to true happiness and health. We are all very well, I, my husband, and our children, and very happy. We feel no want; God has supplied us from His fullness. My desire now is to know more and to get a larger understanding of this beautiful truth, that I may be a channel through which others may receive the light.—Mrs. Marie Legsdin, Riga, Russia.

To say I am grateful to Christian Science for what it has done for me would not do justice to my sense of thankfulness for this new-old truth which has set me free. I came to Christian Science because I needed help. The doctor told my husband that a surgical operation was the only thing which would save my life. My daughter then heard of Christian Science, and a friend gave her a copy of the Journal. I was so sick I did not know my husband or children. I had prayed that God would spare me to see my daughter who was away, but when she came home I did not know her. I was not able to retain even water on my stomach, and thought I could not live the day out. At this point a Christian Science practitioner was called in, and she had been with me only a short time when I took a glass of water and kept it down. The third day I went out on the porch, and the fourth day I was downstairs. I am well and happy now, in perfect health, and am a member of the Christian Science church here. I am truly grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this healing truth. It has been my only remedy for four years and has met my every need.

Mrs. Carrie Whitten, Bremerton, Wash.

With a deep sense of heartfelt gratitude I send my testimony, in the hope that it may help some one who is seeking to learn of the truth. Before I became interested in Christian Science, eight years ago, I was of a very morbid and unhappy disposition. Life seemed dark and gloomy and filled with many disappointments. When I began to study the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, together with the periodicals, I was lifted out of this wilderness of ignorance and fear and soon began to learn what it means to be God's child, therefore only health, happiness, and freedom could be manifested. When seemingly trying experiences have arisen, I have always found there was some erroneous thinking to be uncovered and destroyed. Resentment, criticism, self-pity, and self-will have had to be met and conquered. As I have gained a broader sense of love for others and let love rule my thinking, I have gained more of the spiritual understanding and have been enabled to realize more harmony and peace. I am so glad to know that only the qualities of good can have room in my mental home and govern my thoughts.

I wish to express my gratitude for all of the Christian Science literature, for the lectures and our church services. These are an ever increasing source of help, inspiration, healing, and love. I am also grateful to the dear friends who have so kindly helped me to learn more of the Christ-healing. It is my aim and earnest desire to strive to live daily my gratitude for Christian Science by reflecting and radiating more love, and to become a channel for good. I am thankful to God and to His messenger, Mrs. Eddy, who has revealed to mankind this demonstrable truth.

Miss Barbara Kyner Vinson, Washington, D. C.

It is over twelve years since I first tried Christian Science, and its healing efficacy has been demonstrated many times. One of the earliest effects was the overcoming of profanity. Some time later, one evening about dark, I stepped on a large nail, which penetrated my foot, but with the help of my good wife we were able to realize enough of the truth to overcome the pain and soreness so that I attended to my duties the following day. After over two years of study of Christian Science I was still an inveterate tobacco user. I engaged a practitioner to help free me from that habit, but without the desired effect. At the end of two weeks the practitioner said it was of no use for him to treat me; that I knew enough of the truth to handle the case myself. Being thrown on my own resources I studied more faithfully the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and as soon as I became conscious that man, created in the image and likeness of God, is not required to serve any relentless master, the habit was overcome. That was in November, 1905, and I have not used tobacco since.

Not long ago I asked my son, a boy of fourteen years, to drive the goats in, as it was nearly dark. Not hearing the bells as soon as I expected I went out to ascertain the cause. Before I found out, it was very dark and the goats had strayed nearly a mile away up on a mountain that has a perpendicular cliff. When I discovered them the boy was driving them toward home along the bottom of this cliff, which was safe enough in daylight except where some gullies have been washed down. Just as I let him know that I had come, a large goat attacked him as he was trying to cross one of these gullies. He called to me that he was falling and the goat was butting him, but it was so dark I could not get to him or see where he was. Then the thought came to me that God was able and willing to take care of my son on the face of that cliff in the dark as well as anywhere else, and I had nothing to fear. In a moment the boy called that he was all right and the goat had gone along with the rest. We got them home without any more trouble.

The foregoing are only a few of the benefits I have received from Christian Science. The seemingly small helps and comforts one receives daily from the teaching of Christian Science are a wonderful blessing, but it is difficult to tell of them so that others can understand why we are so thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for what little understanding we have of the great truths taught in the Bible.—P. H. VRADENBURG, Mountain Ranch, Cal.

I can truthfully verify the above testimony of healing written by my husband. We have had many other proofs of God's loving care, and while grateful for the physical blessings we are most grateful for the spiritual harmony and peace of mind which the study of Christian Science has brought us.—MRS. JULIET B. C. VRADENBURG.

In gratitude for the great help received through Christian Science and with much joy I submit the following testimony. I was healed of a dislocated ankle in two absent treatments, and through this healing was led to search the Scriptures in connection with Science and Health in order to understand God. Three weeks later the house in which I was rooming was almost destroyed by fire. When roused at two o'clock in the morning by the fire department, I knew that God did not make destructive fires and that He is all. Nothing in my room was damaged, and I was unhurt, while others were severely burned, and every ceiling and floor was burned through except mine. A little later deafness of three years' standing disappeared while I was being treated for pain in the head resulting from a fall.

Afterward, in two weeks' treatment, I was healed of a so-called fibroid tumor after having had it for six years. Christian Science has lifted me out of unhappiness into happiness and health, and has made me a better woman. Through the understanding of this truth I have secured more comfortable positions, and am a better employee as well as a better neighbor, friend, sister, and daughter.

I am indeed grateful for my many blessings and for the confirmation of the words of Jesus the Christ, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

MRS. EUNICE LEWIS COX, St. Paul, Minn.

In looking back over ten years of suffering and distress due to stomach trouble, I rejoice in having been freed from bondage through a knowledge of God's goodness, as revealed in Christian Science. I was healed of this ailment in about three weeks, and since then ear trouble of eighteen years' standing has been overcome. I am striving daily to know more of God's allness. I am indeed grateful for Christian Science and to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has so lovingly shown us the way.

MRS. ELLA BERRY, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Through Christian Science treatment I have been healed of severe chronic headaches, to which I was subject for a number of years. I could never find relief through drugs; but through absent treatment from a Christian Science practitioner I was instantly healed of one of the first attacks I had after becoming interested in this teaching. After this I always had Christian Science treatment, and in every case was quickly healed. It has now been two years since I had one of these headaches, whereas I used to have one and sometimes two nearly every week.

I did not become interested in Christian Science because of the physical healing, but because I found it to be a practical religion that meets every need. For a number of years I had been in a state of great mental unrest, seeking truth constantly and finding nothing that would satisfy. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy came to me as a glorious revelation. It answered every question satisfactorily and opened up wonderful vistas of thought. It brought a sense of peace and relief that cannot be described. I am sincerely grateful for Christian Science.

MRS. JOSEPHINE B. AUSTIN, Portland, Ore.

It is now about six years since I was healed through Christian Science of a severe case of ear trouble. The ear would discharge when I lay down at night, and sometimes during the day while at work. A sense of pain would occasionally accompany the discharge. As I had heard of Christian Science a short time before, and as a similar case had been brought to my attention in which the patient was having medical treatment with not very bright prospects, I was urged by my parents to consult a practitioner, and did so. Through the loving and patient work of the practitioner and careful study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was healed.

Other needs have been fully met through the application of the truth, but most wonderful is the spiritual uplift and regeneration, also a broader outlook upon life as a result of the healing. I am indeed very grateful for Christian Science.

GEORGE HOWARD OTT, Philadelphia, Pa.

Christian Science has been in our home for more than twenty years, but I did not take it up as a study until a little over four years ago. I received a beautiful healing just about that time; it was not by any means the first one, but it was the first to be brought about partly through my own understanding of the truth. In stepping into the bathtub I slipped and my side struck the side of the tub with such force that I was rendered unconscious. My arm hung over the tub, and this kept me from falling into the water. I do not know how long I was in that position, but when I recovered consciousness my voice was almost gone. I held to the truth and finished my bath, but after getting out of the tub I found that my right arm seemed paralyzed. I suffered terrible pain, but managed to get to the telephone (as there was no one with me in my apartment at the hotel) and called the office girl, who also was interested in Christian Science. She was very much frightened when she saw me, but I asked her not to hold any thought of fear but to remain quiet and help me dress.

A friend then took me home to my mother in a machine, but I had a convulsion by the time we reached there. My mother asked if we should send for a physician, but I said we had had so many healings through the power of Truth that we ought to be able to work out this problem also with our understanding of the allness of God. She was pleased to hear this from me, so began to work for me, and at nine o'clock in the evening I went to sleep and slept all night, not even changing my position. The bowel and bladder action seemed paralyzed, but Christian Science treatment was taken up for that condition and it was overcome instantaneously. The following Tuesday I felt so well that I decided to surprise my mother by going downstairs for lunch, but at the foot of the stairs I was taken with another convulsion. My mother was alone and thought I was passing on, but she held firmly to the truth and in about twenty minutes I was able to use my arm for the first time. I was then taken back to bed and remained there until Friday. My voice had come back and was more natural by that time, and the following Sunday found me again at the hotel where I was employed as a checker, and doing my work with very little uneasiness. In about four months complete healing was realized, except for a cough which I seemed to contract from the fall. This did not go for another month.

We have had healings of every description in our family, and some very beautiful experiences for which words are inadequate to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy.—Mrs. B. M. Altzweig, St. Louis, Mo.

To say I am grateful for Christian Science and what it has done for me and for my children does not half express my thankfulness to God and to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. It was by divine power that I was led to this wonderful truth through the healing of my sister, who was practically an invalid for nearly seven years, but is now well and helping in the work of Christian Science. It is close upon six years since I began the study of this teaching, and I have had many proofs of Truth's healing power. The children have been healed of whooping cough, measles, and many other ailments through the understanding of God and of His idea as spiritual and perfect. I used to have great faith in the doctors and in medicine, but since coming into Christian Science we have not had any drugs in our home.

I am proving that the understanding of divine Love does meet our every need when faithfully applied. One little boy has been born to us since we came into Christian Science. I had no doctor at the time of his birth and was up and about my duties after the third day. He has never had a drop of medicine, but is a fine, healthy child. For the physical healing I am very thankful, but more so for the spiritual uplift and the light which our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, has thrown on the Bible; also for the Lesson-Sermons and all the Christian Science literature.—Mrs. Sarah Alice Williamson, Scarborough, England.

I am glad to testify to the truth of the above statement made by my sister; also to my own healing in 1908. I have not been in bed half a day since. Christian Science has met my every need, and I am more grateful than mere words can express. It is in deeds we serve the Master.

I have so much enjoyed the reading of the testimonies published in the Journal and Sentinel that I feel I cannot show my gratitude more than by telling others what this truth has done and is doing for me and for my family. Twelve years ago my mother was benefited so greatly by Christian Science that I became interested, and through the reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" I was able to lay aside glasses which had been worn during school hours for about a year. Now I have no trouble with my eyes, although I often do fancy work at night, and read a great deal.

Through my own understanding and with a few treatments from a practitioner, goiter of long standing was overcome. For these and many more healings I am most grateful, and it is such a blessing to have this truth to teach our little boy. While there are problems to work out each day, we know that, as Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 143 of Miscellany, "when these things cease to bless they will cease to occur." I am very thankful to God for Christian Science and to Jesus for his example, as well as grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her unselfed love in giving this teaching to the world. May these few words help some other seeker for Truth.—Mrs. Nelle Hunter Kimball, Scollard, Alberta, Canada.

In the early morning hours of a cold February morning in 1910, after a restless night of coughing and a battle with self as to probable consequences, I arose, dressed to catch a five o'clock train, and was soon on my way to spend the day with the first Christian Scientist I ever met. Having become very sensitive about my condition (I had been confined to bed almost continuously for two months) I was much surprised, as well as grateful, that this Scientist, upon being introduced, made no comment or inquiry as to my looks or health. I shall never forget that glorious day! The law of heredity was broken for me; man as God's image was revealed, and the uselessness of flannels to preserve God's child was made clear. The healing was instantaneous, and needless to say the flannel jacket was laid aside. In the past seven years I have had but few colds and they have been readily dispelled through treatment or my own study of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, whereas before I never passed a winter without many colds and much coughing, and often the summers brought the same.

Several members of my family have also been helped numerous times through Christian Science. I am grateful for our literature, and to all who have helped me to come nearer Truth.—Mrs. Will Vaughan, McHenry, Ky.

For some time I have had a desire to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done and is doing for me, and I hope that this experience will help some one who is looking for relief from suffering, and who longs for something better than the false sense of life in matter affords. For about seven years Christian Science has met my needs in the way of physical healing. I have been healed of colds, influenza, and throat trouble of a very painful nature; and glasses worn from childhood have been laid aside almost from the beginning of my study of this saving truth.

About three years ago a very painful condition was overcome; I suppose it would be called inflammatory rheumatism. During this attack, which lasted for about three weeks, I was grateful for the help of a Christian Science practitioner and nurse. I sang hymns or read them by the hour, and when there seemed to be an acute sense of suffering I always received help from the work of the practitioner. I am grateful for the mental uplift and the peace which came to me through this experience, and for the knowledge that Christian Science does heal so-called physical ills. Our Leader says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 265), "The pains of sense are salutary, if they wrench away false pleasurable beliefs and transplant the affections from sense to Soul, where the creations of God are good, 'rejoicing the heart.' "

I know that Christian Science overcomes financial troubles. At the close of one Saturday afternoon I was entirely without money and in need of bread, but through the understanding of the truth gained from the study of the textbook I was able to meet this need, and had money over and above that to give toward the distribution work. Jesus said, "Man shall not live by bread alone," and our Leader writes (Science and Health, p. 35), "Our bread, 'which cometh down from heaven,' is Truth."

I am thankful to God for my understanding of Christian Science, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for having made known to us this truth, which is an ever present help. I am grateful for a better understanding of the Bible which this study and practice has brought to me; also for the fellowship of faithful Christian Scientists everywhere and for the understanding which enables me to help others "by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God."

Miss Cora Glore, Las Vegas, Nev.

After having received for about four years the benefits of divine Love through Christian Science, I feel it to be my duty to let others profit by my experience. At a moment when all seemed darkest I came to this great truth. I had called for a physician, but not being able to reach him, I sent for a relative who was a Christian Science nurse. Not once did I think of asking her for treatment, but my thought was, that being a nurse she might be able to give me some advice. As she was a Christian Scientist, however, she thought I wanted help in Science and started treatment while coming to the house. When she arrived she found me much relieved. About one year after this healing I laid aside glasses, which I had worn for almost twenty years, although the oculist said I should never try to do anything without them. I am able to see better now than I ever did while wearing glasses.

One year later my husband came down with a serious throat trouble and was healed in about three days. He was also able to overcome the smoking habit just four months after his first healing. Our children have been healed of various ailments, such as measles, fever, and headache, and no physician has entered our house since we took up Christian Science. We are all very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us this wonderful truth.

Mrs. Flora Poppert, Hawkins, Wis.

All the above statements made by my wife I hereby verify as being authentic. In connection with the above statement I can honestly say that my financial affairs have improved wonderfully in the last two years through the correct application of the teachings of divine Love as given in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Our children are being brought up in Christian Science, although there is not a Christian Science church in our town. We look forward to the literature every week with anticipation, and are very thankful for the same. We are grateful to Mrs. Eddy, our Leader, for the rediscovery of the Christ-teaching as demonstrated by Jesus and his followers.

Charles A. Poppert.

It affords me great pleasure to tell what God has done for me through Christian Science. About two years ago I was healed of rheumatism after suffering from it for several years. Often my hands and shoulders were so lame I could not dress myself; then the ailment settled in the left ankle. A cough and a throat affection were added to my burdens. I took up Christian Science as a last resort, but before seeing the practitioner I went to the physician once more to make sure that I had not neglected anything in a material way. He told me that he could do nothing for the rheumatism, but gave me a drug that would help me temporarily, although if I took too much of it I would be worse off than with the rheumatism.

I did not take the drug, but next day went to see a Christian Science practitioner. We talked about an hour and a half, and when I left she said she would do what she could for me that night. I went away disappointed, unable to see that I had gained anything from the treatment. The practitioner, however, had given me the little book "Unity of Good," which I read on reaching home, and was convinced that this was the work of God. The next morning all the pain had disappeared; the rheumatism, cough, and throat affection, all were gone. To me this healing was most wonderful. I have also been able to lay aside glasses after wearing them four years, and through the understanding gained by reading the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," have overcome many ills for myself, as well as for my son, who has had three attacks of fever.

I am most grateful for Christian Science and to Mrs. Eddy for giving this truth to the world.

Mrs. Lula H. Barte, Cristobal, Canal Zone.

That material, human laws are rendered null and void by the laws of God has been proved to me. My six-year-old boy one Thursday began to vomit and to complain of headache. I read to him from Science and Health, but the following morning his whole body, with the exception of the face, was covered with red spots, and at night he had high fever and was delirious. When my husband saw him he said it seemed like scarlet fever, so I telephoned to a Christian Science practitioner, who took up treatment at once. When on Friday the boy began to complain of his throat and could no longer swallow, I became very fearful. I therefore called upon the practitioner, who told me that I should not watch the boy's body, but place him entirely under God's care, under the care of infinite Love, who was able to do more for him than I. This I promised to do, and my fear was gone. My son then improved visibly. He began to eat a little and was up and playing part of the day. By Monday nearly all signs of the illness had disappeared. My little girl, aged nine, was in no wise affected, although she and the boy were always together.

My husband, too, has been helped wonderfully in Christian Science, and these facts prove that with God nothing is impossible. For these and many other demonstrations, also for the understanding of the truth that I have gained, I am very grateful to God and thank Mrs. Eddy from the bottom of my heart.—Mrs. Louise Jacob, Chicago, Ill.

I did not come into Christian Science for physical relief, but for spiritual regeneration and for that peace which passeth understanding. I have found this teaching a wonderful comfort under all conditions, mental as well as physical. Through the understanding and application of the truth I have been healed of a malignant growth which appeared some years ago. It was seemingly harmless at first, but about three years ago it became very troublesome, causing great pain. It finally broke and became offensive in the extreme. I was able to overcome a great sense of fear by knowing that nothing is impossible with God, and after about one month's treatment the healing seemed complete. A year later the trouble reappeared, but I have been entirely healed through the realization of the truth of our Leader's statement, "A spiritual idea has not a single element of error, and this truth removes properly whatever is offensive" (Science and Health, p. 463). For this and for many other demonstrations of the power of Truth to heal, among them the overcoming of neuritis and congestion of the lungs, as well as the solving of many troublesome problems, I am grateful beyond words.

Mrs. Mary A. Davidson, Lancaster, Ohio.

From the Press

[Rev. Geoffrey Gordon, M.A., C.F., in The Daily Graphic, London, Eng.]

The writer of the article "A Word to the Churches," is surely right when he says that the reconstruction of the future depends upon character, and the development of character is the churches' duty and the churches' opportunity.

When he states that the first step will be a genuine move toward unity, he may or may not be right. Great changes must come, but it is too soon to predict the form that they will take. Out here men are living an altogether abnormal life, and though it is true that their minds are more open than they were to the need of religious changes, it is probable that on few of us has any fixed or final impression as yet been made. It is, however, vital to remember that the church is made up of the whole body of her members, and not of the clergy only. When we think of the future work of the church we must look for leadership to those, clergy and laity alike, who out here have faced reality and will surely be impatient of unrealities at home, . . . but the hope of the future lies in the soldiers who have seen God in the fellowship and sacrifice of war.

[The Universalist Leader]

It will needs be a liberal religion which meets the wants of the exceptional age approaching, after the war. Men who have been face to face with death in the trenches, and women who have lost husbands and sons, are not going to be interested in the intricacies of the old theology; they are going to want help, simple and direct, and immediate. They are not going to ask for speculations about the future, but will want to know: What about the loved one who went out of this life in the awful cataclysm of battle with no word of warning? He who gave his life a sacrifice for others—what has become of him? There is going to be a great opportunity for a liberal religion—which is really liberal.

[The Christian Work]

Justice is not the little thing that men take it to be; and when we know it in its largeness, in its fullness, we shall find that it includes mercy. The reason why we must have many virtues is that we make each virtue far too small. There is in reality only one virtue. Perfect justice would include all the virtues. To be perfectly just, even to the worst wrongdoer, you must love him; you must neglect nothing that would elicit any possibility of right that may still remain in his life. Nothing less than this is just to him.

What Is Business?

That man's true business constitutes right thinking and may be expressed in all the activities of life, was indicated by Jesus, even from childhood. He was only twelve years of age when he said to his questioning mother, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"

His actions always interpreted business to mean righteous control of everything that came within the scope of his daily duties—spiritual mastery, dominion.

He was the complete master of supply, able to pay the arduous taxes of the day by the simple understanding of Mind, as witness the finding of the tribute money in the fish's mouth.

He was the complete master of production, as witness the feeding of the multitudes with a few loaves and fishes and the salvage of fragments remaining, immensely greater in quantity than what seemed to human sense to be his original capital stock.

Mrs. Eddy made complete success of her undertakings, which the world acknowledges whether it understands and concedes her spiritual genius or not.

Mrs. Eddy presented to Christian Scientists a concept of what good business is and what bad business needs for its correction, in the activities of the Christian Science organization.

The study of the Bible and Science and Health and the practical application of their teachings to everyday affairs; subscribing to and distributing the Christian Science periodicals; healing the sick and extending the gospel of Christian Science, were quite evidently in her opinion the "Father's business."

One who is devoted to seeking "first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," will inevitably bring into evidence the spiritual control of all business in a better demonstration of supply, production, finance, transportation, organization, or any human activity in which he may be engaged.

This evidence will be unmistakable to the world's sense in proportion as the student's spiritual understanding approaches obedience to Principle.

VOLUME XX FEBRUARY 16, 1918 NUMBER 25

Enrolled for Service

M. ETHEL WHITCOMB

OUR eyes are constantly resting, in these days of war, upon the words "Enrolled for Service." Who is not quickened each time he sees them, and who does not realize that this is the only true attitude for man, in war or peace? Jesus taught that the highest place of honor was that of the servant. He said, "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." How much sorrow and disease would be banished from earth if all men recognized the servant's true place, and that we all should be ready to minister,—not to be served, but to serve. The man who believes that he can live for himself and attend only to his own petty interests, has no more touched real manhood than has the babe, who dreams in his cradle, wakes only to play with his rattle, then falls asleep and dreams again.

Mrs. Eddy, the Leader of the Christian Science movement, was humanity's truest servant since the days of the Master. Like him, she spent every hour in tender ministry, and to those who had ears to hear she said in her Message to The Mother Church for 1902 (p. 3), "The only true ambition is to serve God and to help the race." A holy purpose is health giving, animating, invigorating, and illuminating. The time must come to each heart when it will recognize the truth expressed in the words of a familiar hymn (Hymnal, p. 135):—

> Self-entwined, its strength sinks low.
> It can only live in loving,
> And by serving love will grow.

Then service becomes his privilege, his joy, that which brings to him the vision of the Christ. The redeemed consciousness rises to service with a song. It need not be reminded that it is its duty to serve; it does so as naturally and spontaneously as the lark, mounting upward, fills the air with exuberant praise.

The man who thinks that he is ready to serve, but wants to do something of his own planning, something, perhaps, that will bring him into notice, is self-deceived. So also is the man who thinks he lacks opportunities to serve. Every one has abundant opportunities. It is axiomatic that "they also serve who only stand and wait." They indeed serve who stand equipped and ready, waiting in inspired willingness to follow where Truth leads. Mrs. Eddy lived in this spiritual attitude. On page 158 of "Miscellaneous Writings" she wrote: "All God's servants are minute men and women. As of old, I stand with sandals on and staff in hand, waiting for the watchword and the revelation of what, how, whither."

One must first see that his work, whatever its nature, is mental, not material, and must be lifted up until it becomes to him divine service. Who would ever be irritated or discordant in his work if he looked upon it as service to God? The thing that his hands are making may crumble, but the pure thought in which the work is done can never perish; it lives on and helps to purify the mentality of the world. One whose thought is imbued with the holy desire to serve, finds some one to cheer or uplift from the morning to the evening, for the light of Love which ever burns in his consciousness draws to it those who are in darkness. He is never helpless, but always helpful; never disabled, but always enabled; never faithless, but always faithful. You can recognize immediately the man who has enrolled in God's service, for there is a brightness in his eye and a quickness in his step. He always has something helpful for you. He obeys the instruction of Paul, "The servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." He is always gentle, and while "apt to teach," is ready to learn from others. In meekness and love he helps those who oppose themselves to good. He has enlisted to correct each material concept that presents itself, whether sin, sorrow, or disease, with spiritual facts; therefore, one can no more irritate him or hurt his feelings, and so prevent him from reflecting the sunshine of his Father's love, than one can hinder the peaceful river from mirroring the radiance of the rising sun.

Not recognizing the vital need of enrolling for service, he who yearns for healing through Christian Science may say, "When I am healed I will be willing to serve others, but I must think of my own needs first." You mistake, dear seeker. One who desires help through Christian Science must do more than seek good for himself alone. He who begins the study of Christian Science inspired by the Christly motive to become prepared to impart to others the truth that heals, will himself receive the healing balm of Love as surely as will the upturned lily the crystal dewdrop. He who can earnestly say with the Master, "I am among you as he that serveth," has begun his ascent up the mount of revelation.

Most important admonition is given to the true servant in Paul's epistle to the Romans: "We should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." Unless performed with newness of inspiration, newness of joy, no work is rightly done. Duty can never be old to the illumined servant. He greets each day with new love for God and man. With newness of purpose he is ever striving to be a more intelligent worker, and is therefore refreshed and renewed with the vigor of youth.

In times of war we hear much said of the slacker. A slacker is not alone one who is not ready to serve his country. He also is a slacker who becomes so intoxicated by desire for ease in the flesh, so deafened by self-indulgence, that he does not hear the cries of those imprisoned by the enemies, sin and disease, and is not doing all that is possible to fit himself through spiritual living to aid in their release. But, thank God, the hour strikes when the slothful slacker awakes from the mesmeric sleep induced by the belief that he can live for himself alone; and he then yearns to be of use to others. For the first time he touches life, and perceives its wondrous glories stretching out before him. He hears, as did Isaiah, the voice of God saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" And in humility and joy he answers, "Here am I; send me." Then Christian Science equips him with spiritual understanding, clothes him with the whole armor of God; places upon him the "breastplate of righteousness," gives him the "shield of faith," and the "sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." As one more added he now takes his place in the ranks of brotherhood, ready to march forward at the command of Principle,—"the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith."

The man or woman who thus lays self upon the altar to answer the call of God, has made no real sacrifice, for far greater joy than ever before is his. Through this obedience he identifies himself with infinite good and becomes allied with eternal power. His thoughts, illumined by the brightness of God's glory, reflect the healing Christ.

One is never so secure, never so truly in unison with Life eternal, as when demonstrating the highest good for humanity. Mrs. Eddy knew this, and from her own experience wrote in her Message for 1901 (p. 1), "You can never lack God's outstretched arm so long as you are in His service." The loving servant of humanity is the only one who is really safe, for through the pure desire to be used by God he rises where the shafts of material sense come not, and he can feel the arms of Love infolding and protecting him. He abides in the "high tower" of the psalmist, which is open to all who ascend the path of unselfed service, and hears the benediction, "I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first."

Until every heart burns with a desire to uplift and bless, and every thought is enrolled for service, the voice of Spirit will continue to resound in the chambers of consciousness, calling:—

Rise and enroll thyself in service for thy King!
Thy brothers need thee. Go! in triumph sing.
Serve with a steadfast heart and loyal hand
Till Truth's eternal voice is heard in every land.

Drifting

CLARENCE W. CHADWICK

THREE East Indians had fallen asleep in an empty harbor boat, and during the night hours their frail craft had broken away from its moorings and was slowly drifting out to sea. For nearly three days they were without food or drink, or anything with which to propel their skiff. The outlook was not propitious, and each hour found them farther from their starting point. What they were thinking may readily be surmised by those who have passed through similar experiences. On the morning of the third day they saw approaching them what proved to be a large ocean liner whose watchful officers had already detected the drifting craft and were deflecting the course of the steamer to render any needful assistance. In a very short time the three men were taken aboard and cared for in true sailor style, while their empty craft was left to the mercy of the sea. A day later they were safely landed at the first port of call only a few hundred miles from their home.

The position in which these men found themselves is but typical of that of every mortal before Truth, as revealed through Christian Science, comes to his rescue and ministers to his physical and mental needs. Whether he realizes it or not he has fallen asleep in the belief of life, substance, and intelligence in matter, and is slowly drifting farther and farther away from his true home. He is sound asleep in the senses, seeing what he believes and believing what he sees, oblivious of the danger he is in. The waves of error beat heavily against his rudderless craft, but he sleeps on until through hunger and starvation, when he feels that God has forsaken him, he cries out in earnest for "the bread of life." Then it is, through trials and tribulations, that he begins to awaken from earth's fearsome dream to find out that God never forsook him, but is ever ready to welcome each sheep that strays from the fold. What a beautiful proof of this do we find portrayed in the parable of the prodigal son! Every mortal born into the dream of sense, whether the child of king or peasant, has strayed far from man's real home, has drifted far out upon the boisterous sea of human belief, only to be rescued at last by the all-loving Father who is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance," and awaken to spiritual understanding.

Christian Science is welcoming the return of the wanderer,—and how? By healing sickness and sin, "uplifting the human understanding, buried in a false sense of being" (No and Yes, p. 37). What sort of welcome would have been extended to the prodigal son had the father withheld the healing balm of Truth and Love? This, however, he did not do, but put upon him "the best robe," typifying the garment of righteousness, or purity of thinking. This garment brings moral and physical healing to all who suffer it to be "put on." This is the garment that Christian Science is supplying to all who consent to wear it. Some, like the elder brother, may allow jealousy and other selfish qualities to control them, and so render themselves unworthy of God's bounty, but sooner or later even these will hear the loving pleading of the Father, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." Where love and compassion are, there the Christ-idea is being allowed to enter and influence individual consciousness. Where self-righteousness, bigotry, and unmercifulness reign, there Christ, Truth, is debarred entrance.

How long the day dream of mortal existence will continue, no man knoweth, but we do know that multitudes are already awakening, and that every individual who finds himself rescued from the belief that man lives, moves, and has his being in matter or corporeality, has made it that much easier for another to experience the same freedom of mind and body. The law of omnipresent Love is unceasingly active to shorten the drifting period of human existence, but the so-called mind of the flesh is enmity against the ministrations of divine Love and cries out in disapproval of every loving effort to prove its so-called dominion over mortals either unlawful or unreal. It is a false education which is responsible for this seeming tenacity of mortal existence to hold its own in opposition to the law of Love. A sinful mortal who yet believes that mortality is God-created, cannot be blamed for believing that mortal existence is lawful and normal, and it is only when this dream existence becomes a sea of tempestuous human concepts that the mortal begins seriously to question the validity of material sense, and to cry out for help. It is then he comprehends the significance of the Master's statement that he came not to send peace but a sword to the resisting concepts of the human mind.

Does a theology which teaches belief in a God who knows evil and permits it, and in a real man that is born to sin and to die; which upholds in unmistakable terms the continuity and reality of matter or evil,—does such a theology help to arouse mortals from the deep sleep of Adam? Does it not rather perpetuate this dream sense by failing to come to its rescue with the authoritative and assuring words, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light"?

There is a heavy responsibility to be shouldered somewhere, and professing Christians may well stop and ponder the part they are playing, whether it tends to shorten the dream of life in matter or not. All who have not been rescued by the ship of Truth and are not proving their heartfelt gratitude by living in conformity to the law of Love which makes healing and overcoming a present possibility and necessity, are certainly drifting out to sea in a frail bark which is liable at any moment to be engulfed by the surging waves of error and sin; and who knows what the experience may be which is to bring the necessary awakening? These are they who are "dead in trespasses and sins," and they will not experience the quickening of the Spirit until they awaken to the truth of our Leader's words on page 403 of Science and Health, "You command the situation if you understand that mortal existence is a state of self-deception and not the truth of being."

A Right Viewpoint

KATHERINE PUFFER

IN determining the rightness of any human action this sentence is most helpful: "Whatever holds human thought in line with unselfed love, receives directly the divine power" (Science and Health, p. 192). As students of Christian Science we know that right human action has back of it the impulsion of divine Mind and expresses the activity of divine law. The recognition of this truth is most helpful in deciding what attitude should be taken toward an important question confronting the American people, including Christian Scientists; namely, the problem of the conservation of certain kinds of food.

Although as a human effort conservation is right, yet it will not accomplish its purpose unless it is undertaken by Christian Scientists with the consciousness that Mind governs, and in recognition of the fact that the power of right purpose lies in the operation of divine Mind acting through the mental qualities of unity, cooperation, obedience, and self-surrender. We need always to remember that right human endeavor is in no way a departure from spiritual knowing, but is rather the outcome of this knowing. Mrs. Eddy says of Jesus (Science and Health, p. 54), "Through the magnitude of his human life, he demonstrated the divine Life." In deciding upon a course of action regarding a question which involves others, much inspiration can be gained in turning to Jesus' life and works. Many times we catch gleams of divinity manifested through his simplest acts, wherein is shown his great humanity as well as his ability to maintain the right point of view, while making a concession to the human demand. This was the case when he paid tribute to Cæsar and when he turned the water into wine at the marriage feast. His conformity to the demand of human need was, however, always made the opportunity for a demonstration of Mind as substance.

There is much for us to ponder in the account of Jesus walking on the water. As related by Mark he had just made the wonderful demonstration of feeding the multitude, and from this experience had gone forth and walked on the water. The disciples were in a boat "toiling in rowing," and the sea was rough. Jesus was walking past them when they cried out in their fear, and then was shown his marvelous humanity in his willingness to go back and get into the boat with them. His must have been a wonderful consciousness of Mind as substance. That he did not come down from this exalted state of thought in doing the thing which relieved their fear—namely, getting into the boat with them—is evidenced in the statement which, according to John, closes the narrative, "Immediately the ship was at the land whither they went."

Is there not a lesson for Christian Scientists in this simple story that is peculiarly applicable to this present hour and its needs? What though we get into the boat of human endeavor with those who have not had the privilege of learning the spiritual facts of life, as have students of Mrs. Eddy's works. We need not lose the point of view gained through our study and demonstration of the truth of being; rather will this right knowing lift others to a higher viewpoint and quiet fear with faith. Knowing too the power of good which is thus being brought into human experience, we may rightly expect that the boat will come more quickly to land, for there is no troubled sea separating Mind and its ideas, no toilsome rowing when one knows that the rightness of his effort makes him at-one with divine law.

In uniting with and loyally supporting the nation's effort to conserve material food we shall most assuredly find our opportunities increased to give the "bread of life" to a spiritually hungry world and to respond more fully to our Leader's call which she makes to us in Miscellaneous Writings (p. 207) at the close of a wonderful message: "Drink with me the living waters of the spirit of my life-purpose,—to impress humanity with the genuine recognition of practical, operative Christian Science." Our unselfed love will be expressive of divine power, and looking from a right point of view we shall see the beacon light that shines with ever broadening rays upon a materially darkened world.

True Happiness

WILLIAM BEARD

HAPPINESS might be generally defined as the state of being happy. What is it to be happy? Mortal sense tells us that to be happy we must realize some fond ambition in relation to health, wealth, power, place, or environment; but does the realization of these or any one of them bring real happiness? We might truthfully answer no; for we have evidence on every hand that those who possess one, two, or even all of these so-called requisites, are sometimes most miserable. Why? Because there is really nothing in these things, either individually or collectively, that can bring happiness, unless we have some understanding of their real source and origin.

One might possess all the wealth of the world, and with it power, yet still be unhappy or have a sense of ill health. Why? Because an individual in possession of these things and ignorant of man's spiritual origin may be selfish, narrow, bigoted, and jealous. Such a man does not wish to share his good fortune with all mankind. His idea of happiness is solely self-centered. It must be gained at the expense of all else in the world. In other words, his idea of happiness is that it can be gained only by self-satisfaction. Yet he is not happy; he is filled with fear at all times,—afraid that somebody or something is trying to deprive him of some portion of his worldly possessions, that his power may be wrested from him at any moment, that he may lose his health or position through the machination of some unseen force.

What then is true happiness? Mrs. Eddy answers this question thus: "Happiness is spiritual, born of Truth and Love. It is unselfish; therefore it cannot exist alone, but requires all mankind to share it" (Science and Health, p. 57). If happiness is spiritual, it must proceed from Spirit, not matter. Proceeding from Spirit, which we are taught is God, good, then it is and must be universal; if it is universal it must then be shared by all mankind, as our Leader says.

Digitized by Google

We are told by the apostle Paul that the fruits of the Spirit are "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance;" and "against such there is no law." Then to be truly happy not only the individual but all mankind must share in these blessings. Each one of us as the idea of God must know that each and every other idea of God individually and collectively possesses in the same degree all of these divine attributes. No one is supplied with any part of good to the detriment of another, but all of God's ideas have now all the good there is, and as a result no one of them can want or lack anything. No one of them has any desire to deprive another of any part of that which is his, because each and every one has all there is and could not possess or want more. This realization of the allness of good destroys the possibility of the existence of envy, jealousy, covetousness, resentfulness, and selfishness of all sorts, and establishes the universal law of Love as ever present and all-powerful.

Is there anything imaginable which could bring this true happiness to all mankind sooner and more effectively than the universal law of Love? Imagine, if you can, every individual in the world manifesting this law,—where would such things as war, pestilence, famine, avarice, greed, the strife for place and power, and kindred evils, be? They would vanish into their "native nothingness like dew before the morning sunshine" (Science and Health, p. 365), and in their stead would reign joy, happiness, and that peace "which passeth all understanding." This would indeed be true happiness.

The Coming of the Christ

ELIZABETH A. M. COWAN

CHRISTIAN people everywhere are apt to assume that if they had been alive when Jesus was on earth they would have been among his followers. Even in the time of Jesus, however, the recognition of the Christ came only to a very limited number of those who were brought into contact with Jesus. On the other hand the Christ-idea had come in much earlier ages to individuals who had never seen the personal Jesus. The real interest of the Bible history lies in the glimpses it affords of the spiritual idea unfolding itself in the consciousness of individuals, and in this way reaching out to and molding the thought of a nation.

Thus divine Truth came to Abraham as he sat at his door at noonday. An exalted idea of life appeared to him, which his receptive thought, already prepared for the revelation, at once went out to meet, and, bowing himself with his material beliefs of age and material law to the ground, in meekness he entertained the angel—the spiritual sense of being. Man's sonship with God was then revealed to him, and the son of man was lifted up in his consciousness. It was an angel or message from God that showed this to him. At the same time the spiritual idea of man dawned in some faint degree on the consciousness of Sarah also. She "heard" the message, and when later it returned to and took form in her consciousness, Isaac, the child of promise, was born. The birth of Isaac was not a miracle, but a link in the chain of scientific demonstration. It was part of the gospel "preached before" unto Abraham, as Paul tells us in Galatians. To some extent it may have prepared the thought of the children of Israel to understand the birth of Jesus the Christ; to some extent it may lead our own thought also toward that more spiritual understanding of man which we celebrate on Christmas day.

It came to Moses in that great revelation of the burning bush, when he perceived the indestructible nature of the spiritual idea which the fires of earth had no power to touch. Through this experience Moses was led to the perception of the spiritual nature of reality. God became to him the "I AM," the only true being, and thenceforth he devoted his life to the work of emancipating the struggling desires for good from the bondage of material sense, and of uplifting the spiritual idea to its true place in human consciousness, where it became the leader and deliverer of men. For Moses, as for every man, it was no light task to identify himself with the spiritual idea in such a degree as to lose sight of his mortal selfhood with all its idiosyncrasies and limitations, but Moses was able to perceive that when this seeming sacrifice of self had been accomplished, the service of God would be no longer in the valley but from the mountain top of spiritual vision and dominion. Thus he became for all time the forerunner and embodiment of that "worship of God in Spirit instead of matter" (Science and Health, p. 200) which began with the law and was perfected through Christ Jesus in the gospel.

It came to Balaam, in spite of mortal prejudice and resistance, in a spiritual perception of the nation he had supposed to be his enemy. He must have beheld man as God beholds him when he said, "From the top of the rocks I see him," and knew that the Almighty had "not beheld iniquity" in man, the perfect child of His creation, as we read in Numbers. It came much later to the wise men at Bethlehem when they entered into the house, or consciousness, of Truth, and thus faintly perceived the divine idea of sonship and in the same moment the true idea of motherhood. It came to the woman of Samaria when her longing thought went out in search of the Christ that was to come. In that same instant the Christ-presence was revealed to her, when Jesus said, "I that speak unto thee am he;" and she recognized the spiritual idea as the revelator to whom were known all things. Straightway leaving her old life behind her she went her way into the city and thus became the messenger to others of the Christ who is "the Saviour of the world."

In the life of our Lord himself the Christ-idea was ever present. When surrounded by the multitude it was to the true idea that he turned. Refusing to acknowledge any mortal as his brother, in every spiritual idea that did the will of God he found the mental companionship he desired. When the Pharisees brought to him one whom they sought to condemn, the clear recognition of Jesus that only that which was perfectly pure had power to cast out evil ("He that is without sin among you") caused the self-righteous and condemnatory thought of the Pharisees to be self-seen, and beginning at the ripest and continuing until the demonstration was complete, each error thus corrected was expelled from consciousness. Jesus then having ascended in thought to that plane where no error of belief existed, "saw none but the woman,"—accuser and accused had alike vanished, for Love had cast out the belief of sin.

When asked to go to the house of the nobleman whose son was dying, it was the absolute truth of the word of Life that Jesus spoke which, entering into the man's consciousness, revealed to him the spiritual fact of being expressed in the words, "Thy son liveth." This was the coming of the Christ to the nobleman's house. Similarly when called to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, it was the clear understanding of the parentage of Spirit—the real father and the mother of the damsel—that Jesus took with him to this demonstration, which silenced the tumult of the senses and enabled the Christ to enter into that place in consciousness where lodged the belief of a life that lived and died in matter. "And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, I say unto thee, arise. And straightway the damsel arose, and walked." The human consciousness, touched by the divine idea, arose, and the damsel walked.

This vision of the Christ in all its healing and saving power came again many centuries later to the Discoverer of Christian Science, when she perceived that "through spiritual sense only, man comprehends and loves Deity" (Science and Health, p. 481) and wrote the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." When Mrs. Eddy discovered this great fact of revelation and drew the line of understanding between Spirit and matter, the real and the seeming, she held out the key not only to the Scriptures but to all existence. So it comes about that Christian Scientists to-day, reading the Bible in the light of spiritual understanding, are enabled to make the experiences of earlier days their own, not historically by a mere effort of the imagination, but spiritually, as they were originally known. They understand what Mrs. Eddy meant when she wrote on page 271 of Science and Health, "Christ's Christianity is the chain of scientific being reappearing in all ages, maintaining its obvious correspondence with the Scriptures and uniting all periods in the design of God." The men who went through experiences kindred to our own are our brothers in a very real sense to-day, undivided by time or space, both of which are unknown in the realm of spiritual understanding. Thus it is that when Christ appears, eternity dawns, and the kingdom of heaven on earth is revealed.

"Watch"

SAMUEL JOHNSTONE MACDONALD

A SERPENT stole its sinuous way
Into the bed where sleeping lay,
By slumber bound, a drowsy wight,
From serpent's fang defenseless quite.
But nay, unfailing, sure defense
Is in divine omnipotence:
God's angels always are arrayed
To give His children instant aid.

The serpent's fang was seeking aim
Where speediest it might inflame
The sleeper's dull and dormant sense,
And venom fill its full pretense.
It poised an instant o'er his heart,
Ere yet it loosed its deadly dart,
When lo, a flash, and, ere it passed,
His hand had gripped the serpent fast.

The timely flash, brief but benign,
Revealed the serpent's fell design,
And roused the sleeping one to grasp
And crush all seeming from the asp.
Thus faith's clear eye, undimmed by doubt,
Sees angel legions camped about
God's every child, that naught of ill
May mock, gainsay, or thwart God's will.

'Tis God, and God alone, reveals
What sleep from sense somnolent seals.
'Tis God, and God alone, gives grace
The evil fearlessly to face.
He only can our help upraise,
To Him alone be grateful praise.
May we ne'er seek His praise to share:
Be this our wakeful, steadfast prayer.

Selected Articles

["The Sins of the Fathers"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Nov. 30, 1917]

One of the most persistent characteristics of the human mind, and one that it clings to with great affection, is the tendency to dwell upon whatever it believes to be of evil portent. At the same time, modern civilization, with its multitudinous superstitions about the operations of an evil power, and proud of its own superiority, has really hardly risen above the level of the "dark ages."

This being the case, it is not to be wondered at that the fatal doctrine of an heredity of evil has taken such hold upon human thought, backed up as it is by its confidence in the existence of medical and physical law. It is quite usual to hear of some unfortunate individual being condemned by general opinion to an inheritance of sin and disease because his father and his grandfather were said to have been so before him, and so nothing else can be expected. In such a case there does not seem to be much attempt, even on the part of people of religious convictions, to lift thought to the contemplation of a God who could free mankind from such an inheritance of evil. On the contrary, one is referred to the twentieth chapter of Exodus as an indisputable proof that God visits the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation, but the qualifying clause "of them that hate me" is generally left out, while the promise which immediately follows, that God would show "mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments," is apparently considered to have no relation to the subject at all.

In the eighteenth chapter of Ezekiel this question of heredity is very fully discussed from the opening statement that in Israel they shall no longer use the proverb, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge," to the closing declaration: "For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God: wherefore turn yourselves, and live ye."

That the prophet in this discourse attributes the disaster and death which he sees to be the portion of the wicked, to sin, that is, to a mental or moral cause and not to a physical one, is indisputable, as is also the fact that he states unequivocally that when the sin is abandoned, and the mental state is healed, the physical condition must be proportionately improved; "he shall surely live, he shall not die," he proclaims.

The question put by the disciples to Jesus about the blind man, "Who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?" shows that the belief in this chain of cause and effect had persisted down to their day, but their surprise and the incredulity of their religious teachers when the man was healed, showed equally plainly that the understanding of the life-giving power of good had been lost, swallowed up in the general mesmerism of materiality.

The textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, from the first page to the last, iterates and reiterates the fact that not only are the promises of the Scriptures demonstrably true and universal in their application, but also that in proportion as a man understands the Principle which underlies these promises, he is freed from the terrible bondage of fear which the claims of a false education have fastened upon him. "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death," said St. Paul, and it is the mission of Christian Science to teach men how to avail themselves of this law.

Digitized by Google

On page 256 of the textbook we read: "Progress takes off human shackles. The finite must yield to the infinite. Advancing to a higher plane of action, thought rises from the material sense to the spiritual, from the scholastic to the inspirational, and from the mortal to the immortal. All things are created spiritually. Mind, not matter, is the creator. Love, the divine Principle, is the Father and Mother of the universe, including man."

To accept God as Father-Mother, that is, in other words, to accept Spirit as the only cause and source of being, is virtually to admit that there is no matter. The world generally, and the theological world specifically, has tried to accept both Spirit and matter as cause, existing simultaneously, though operating in different spheres of activity, and the chaotic state of the world to-day is ample evidence of the unsoundness of this position. The world of natural science has seen that such a theory is logically untenable and so has, with a very few exceptions, resorted to the standpoint that all is matter.

To follow out this line of argument, to accept Spirit as the Alpha and Omega of being, at once snaps the chain which has bound humanity to physical law, and leads directly into the freedom which results, as Jesus said, from knowing the truth. Fortified by this knowledge, no longer need we live in terror of some inherited evil which may pounce upon us when least expected, for if we acknowledge God as our Father, or origin, we see that we have a resort to the operation of His law and power. As the wise man said, "The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe." Mrs. Eddy has expressed it differently on page 427 of the textbook, where she says, "Immortal Mind, governing all, must be acknowledged as supreme in the physical realm, so-called, as well as in the spiritual."

To know that even in the tangle of human experience we can find the thread which will lead us out of the labyrinth into the "liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free" is a knowledge worth working for, and it was to give this knowledge to the world that Mrs. Eddy endured the hatred of the carnal mind. Nothing daunted, she pursued her way, sure that God was with her, until to-day thousands upon thousands of people rise up and call her blessed for having shown them the way out of an heredity of fear and despair into their rightful inheritance as the children of the one Father-Mother God, and the sins of the fathers vanish into their native nothingness.

[Lloyd B. Coate in Coshocton (Ohio) Times-Age]

Christian Science teaches that in the divine Mind there can be no sin, nothing impure. God's thoughts are real and eternal, and if He were conscious of evil or sin, then evil and sin would be eternal. The prophet Habakkuk declares that God is "of purer eyes than to behold evil."

Mrs. Eddy states (Science and Health, p. 71): "Nothing is real and eternal,—nothing is Spirit,—but God and His idea. Evil has no reality. It is neither person, place, nor thing, but is simply a belief, an illusion of material sense." For God to know evil would belittle His omnipotence, and for man to believe that evil has power to rule him, to make him a thief or a drunkard, is to lose sight of the true idea of God. Omnipotent good, God, cannot create man capable of evil. Christian Science differentiates between God's man, His own image and likeness, and a sinful mortal. It teaches that all God made is good, and is eternal, and that He did not make sin, sickness, and mortality. It teaches that a mortal or sinful man is the expression or reflection of the carnal mind, which Paul declares is enmity against God, Spirit. It classifies as unreal all that seems real to material sense. It does not deny that to the human sense, matter, sin, sickness, and death seem real. These conditions will continue to appear real until God is better understood.

Our critic seems to think that Christian Science is responsible for the death of many children. In this connection it is interesting to refer to a statement published in a New York paper. On December 18, 1911, the New York World published a statement showing that there were 1715 deaths from diphtheria in that city in 1910 under medical treatment and only one under Christian Science treatment. The article further stated, "The report of the board of health also shows that 27,111 children under the age of fifteen years died from all causes under medical treatment in the city of New York last year, as against thirty-two who are shown by the published list to have died under Christian Science treatment in the United States in thirteen years." If medical treatment is so sure, how are we to account for children dying under the care of physicians?

[Warren O. Evans in The Providence (R.I.) Visitor]

The article headed "About Quacks," in a recent issue of your paper, in quoting certain statements of a physician as they appeared in an issue of America, after mentioning certain questionable methods of treating disease, states that "even Christian Science and homeopathy are profound wisdom in comparison to their vagaries." That no doubt is true, although Christian Science is not in any way associated with homeopathy. But when farther on in the article reference is made to the success of Christian Science in the healing of disease and an attempt is made to explain the unparalleled growth of Christian Science, the writer seems to get things fairly well mixed up.

Massage does not in any way enter into the treatment of a Christian Scientist; nor is the faith of the patient in the ability of the practitioner a factor in the healing process. True Christian Science healing, which is understood by an authorized Christian Science practitioner, is based entirely upon the teachings of Christ Jesus, and is the operation of divine law—a law as fixed as what the world is pleased to call astronomical law. It is that truth to which Jesus referred, the application of which determines one's discipleship: "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The word mother is never used in speaking of Mrs. Eddy; and was used only by those who were closely associated with her in her great work, and in the same sense as one would use the word father or brother.

[Violet Hay in Cape Times, Capetown, South Africa]

In your account of the Diocesan Conference in to-day's Cape Times it was a pleasure to read the report of Canon Herford's thoughtful paper, and the words—gentle, just, and constructive—of His Grace the Archbishop, also of the Dean of Capetown. The latter's proposition is a splendid one, namely, that "the best way of meeting Christian Science is by going one better than the Christian Scientists themselves." That, I take it, would be to demonstrate better, quicker, more perfect healing of sin, sickness, and suffering than Christian Scientists have yet accomplished, and this would be grand. God is the only source of healing in Christian Science, so it would be impossible to "draw from a purer source," but if we were all agreed to turn to that one infinite source alone, not only for our spiritual needs but also for our health and happiness, then we would all be working together, with one ideal. This spiritual unity would be a bright prospect for the thousands of people who have loved their old church, who still love and respect all that is good in it as well as out of it, and who call themselves Christian Scientists today because they have found that Christian Science has shown them in their hour of need how to avail themselves of Christ's teachings in a way that has enabled them, more than ever before, to realize and experience, spiritually, morally, physically, the healing power and presence of the God who is Love.

It is sad to have to strike a jarring note by referring to the remarks made by a reverend gentleman who admits that he has not even read the Christian Science textbook, yet makes sweeping misstatements, culminating in an outrageous misquotation. May I be allowed to say positively that nowhere in Mrs. Eddy's writings, nor in any other Christian Science literature, is to be found any statement inferring that Christian Science teaches any possible present or future abolition of morality. On the contrary, Christian Science demands and upholds the highest possible standard of morality. The things which count are the truth, the honesty of purpose, the spiritual impetus that lie behind speech and action. Mere words, whether in favor or abuse of Christian Science, will neither draw people to it nor frighten them away from it.

If this clergyman thinks it his duty to warn his followers continually against the unchristianity of Christian Science, it is up to him to prove to those followers his own faith by his works, and show that his way of following Christ is a better way than that of Christian Scientists—that his thoughts are more Christlike, that he manifests more of the Christ-spirit, and that his prayers and spiritual communings are more efficacious in healing the sick and sinful—more potent to lift their heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Watford (England) Post and Echo]

A speaker in addressing a conference in Buck's Assembly recently, made, according to report, the following remark on Christian Science: "One bad effect produced by Christian Science was the loss of a sense of reality which left them in a very morbid state, and that condition had a very bad effect upon the health of mind and body." The reverse of this is true. Christian Science explains reality intelligently, as no other religion does. It promotes love, joy, peace, and happiness in the individual and in the community. It heals the sick and sinning, and enables the student to gain such a practical understanding of God as infinite divine Love, as to be able to prove this, according to his understanding, in his daily life.

If there is one thing that is generally admitted, even by the critics of Christian Science, it is that Christian Scientists are a very happy body of people. "They always seem to see the bright side of things," is a very common remark about them. This is true, for they have found in Christian Science a reasonable and practical method of solving every problem that may arise.

Christian Science is the teaching of Jesus put into practice. The world has got to acknowledge that the way of the Master is the only right way out of the bondage of sin, disease, and death. The cry goes up, How long will humanity experiment with every way but the right one in trying to find a solace for its woes? The unprecedented growth of Christian Science is not to be wondered at, since it is meeting the world's great need in overcoming sorrow, sickness, and sin.

Halifax Relief

"Please extend our heartfelt thanks to the Board of Directors of The Mother Church for the inspiration which their prompt action affecting the need in Halifax has given us. The inclosed check is a spontaneous contribution from our members of the church and Sunday school."

War Relief

"Please find inclosed a check for ten dollars, of which please give five dollars to the War Relief fund, and the remaining five divide between The Christian Science Benevolent Association and Real Estate funds as you desire. It is a great joy to give what one has to causes such as these."

"The inclosed draft for $19.81, balance in my savings account, is my contribution to the War Relief fund, The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, and the Real Estate fund. At present I am in the Naval service—a yeoman attached to the Office of Aid for Information."

"I have received your kind letter and the gift, as well as the pamphlet. I can hardly say how much I was impressed by your kindness. I find that your gift is truly an answer to my prayer."

"Please accept my sincerest thanks for your most kind present from the Christian Science committee. Please express my thanks to all concerned. I am impressed by the Christian love which is shown me in this great need, and also by the most kind and tactful way the present was given me. In these times, when lack of love is manifested in this war such as we have never seen, a ray of divine Love is shining from America into the darkness on earth through Christian Science, blessing, illuminating, and comforting. May Mrs. Eddy's great work be made known more widely and bring mankind into their right mind."

Real Estate

"Inclosed please find check for twenty-five dollars to be divided and used as wisdom may direct, either for purchase of real estate or for the building fund. I am grateful for this opportunity of giving to the cause of Christian Science. I was never so happy, so prosperous, and never grew so rapidly in the understanding of Truth as when I was donating liberally to The Mother Church Building fund and the Publishing House fund, and I shall endeavor to contribute to the funds of The Mother Church as divine Love provides means for me to do so."

The Christian Science Benevolent Association

"I take great pleasure in sending the small amount now available instead of waiting for a larger amount as I have been doing, in this manner putting into circulation the law which governs supply. I am deeply interested in the work of The Christian Science Benevolent Association."

"I inclose two dollars toward The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, and only wish it were two thousand dollars, as I feel so grateful for this wonderful light that has come to me and mine through this beautiful truth revealed to us by our revered Leader. I indeed feel there is nothing I would not do to try and shed this same radiance into some other lives."

Value of Righteous Thinkers

THERE is something dramatic in Abraham's endeavor to discover how far the saving influence of the righteous would be effective. Informed as to the impending destruction of the licentious cities of the plain, in one of which his nephew Lot then lived, he interceded with the divine messenger, having large hopes as to the number of righteous men that might be in these cities. His intercession is related with all the leisureliness of the oriental tale. "Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city: wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein?" The answer to his question was that should there be in Sodom fifty righteous all the place would be spared for their sakes. Beginning to doubt his first vision of the possibilities, Abraham said, "Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous," and was again reassured. Next he made his proposal that there might only be forty, lessened it to thirty, then to twenty, and at last to ten, and the final reassurance was, "I will not destroy it for ten's sake."

Abraham evidently gave Lot credit for larger influence than he achieved. In the record given by Peter the cities of Sodom and Gomorrha are said to be in their overthrow "an ensample unto those that after should live ungodly," from which overthrow there was delivered "just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked: for that righteous man dwelling among them, in seeing and hearing, vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds." Nevertheless he was so involved by domestic ties that he never thought of removing until under the urgency of the divine messengers it became not a question of removing but of escaping with his life.

If Lot had been able to teach but a small group to be righteous thinkers, for the sake of ten of them destruction might have been averted, but he was a maker of concessions and his evilly minded neighbors pressed in upon him, determined to dishonor even his angelic guests until they intervened and "smote the men that were at the door of the house with blindness, both small and great: so that they wearied themselves to find the door." When Abraham in the early morning viewed the plain, there was smoke as from a furnace where the cities had been, but though the cities were destroyed "God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow."

Some students of history have gone so far as to aver that the world was ripe for destruction and would have perished by its own corruption and cruelty but for the appearance of Christianity. Even though men were as brute beasts and dishonored the messengers of salvation, the Master whom they crucified, and his apostles whom they martyred, and the long list of heroes of faith "of whom the world was not worthy," constituted the leaven whereby the world perished not. Jesus testified of himself: "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world," and John his disciple explained this when he said, "God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him."

Although men in the name of Christianity have made too much of dogmas and too little of deeds, the Christian era has expressed continuously something of the saving power of Christian thinking. But materialism expressed in false philosophy has ever sought to undermine the influence of true Christianity. Jesus declared that the men of his time made God's commandments ineffectual by their tradition, and quoted Isaiah's saying as descriptive: "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." In the nineteenth century the human mind reached the point of declaring that the "commandments of men" should be considered infallible. About the same time arose also a doctrine of men that the state should also have its infallibility in that, as it had no conscience itself, it should be entirely freed from all restraint of such conscientious scruples as guide honest and kindly men. It was to be as a weapon of iron, resistless against the warm life and soft flesh of all who might stand in its way. Although Christendom had agreed to the commandments from Sinai as giving God's guidance, and the sixth, seventh, and eighth commandments of that code were especially for the protection of society, materialism laid its plans for action in violation of all three rules; hence to save the world again from destruction it was requisite that true thinking should antidote the destroying mesmerism, and that once again should be proclaimed "our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father."

Just at the right time, contemporaneous with the need, Christian Science was discovered by Mary Baker Eddy, and became the spiritual leaven whereby it became possible to realize the plan of its Discoverer "to organize a church designed to commemorate the word and works of our Master, which should reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing" (Manual, p. 17). This healing is not mere physical comfort, but also that "healing of the mind" which we all need. Healing in Christian Science ultimates in redemption from sin; that is, deliverance from the thinking of Sodoma. It teaches men to think from the basis of one Mind, the intelligence infinite which is also Love inexhaustible. It shows the way to salvation, defined in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 593) as "Life, Truth, and Love understood and demonstrated as supreme over all; sin, sickness, and death destroyed."

Tranquillity

AFTER Nebuchadnezzar had related his dream to Daniel and the latter had interpreted it, he added the following words of warning: "Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity." Nebuchadnezzar did not earn tranquillity at that time by following this advice, but he earned it later through experience. Christian Scientists are given the opportunity to enjoy true tranquillity through Science instead of suffering. So often the active human mind misses the mark of tranquillity through selfishness. To take possession of one's real self is practically to dispossess oneself of the false self and to find oneness and tranquillity with God. Man is individualized, reflecting spiritual activity, and the realization of this gives quietness and peace to troubled humanity. In Isaiah we read,

Digitized by Google

"In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." This tranquil quality instills into man the hardy robustness of spiritual endurance correcting the pressure of aggressive mental suggestion. True tranquillity breaks the back of scholastic theology by revealing the smile and joy of the real creation of God, wiping out the false and bad creation of mortal mind which contains sin, sickness, and death.

What a parody on God's work it is when the material creation is held up as the reality! The latter is decay, corruption, and sorrow; from its seeming very beginning it was a curse. But the real creation of life in the universe has a divine origin, everything worth while partaking of the value of God Himself, since it is made up of His qualities. Spiritual understanding shining through the misty veil of mortal beliefs reveals the heavenly atmosphere of reality, causes man to rouse himself from his sleepy, inherited traditions, the false education of his fathers. He can then stand forth firmly in answer to God's call, "Now is the day of salvation," fill a place in the ranks of Christian soldiers, and dare to master animal courage with spiritual courage.

The quiet, honest efforts of metaphysical thinking by Christian Scientists during these war times will be doing their big bit toward proving that Love is the master of hate. No one can righteously win a battle with hate or resentment in his heart. The steady, clear gaze of right thinking shot at the enemy who harbors malicious motives will disarm that enemy and unload every gun of error. Mrs. Eddy on page 378 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" calls attention to the power of righteous fearlessness over the animal nature when she writes: "A man's gaze, fastened fearlessly on a ferocious beast, often causes the beast to retreat in terror." The tranquillity given by spiritual understanding acts as a righteous assurance that all is well when divine Mind is allowed to outline and govern man and the universe. The world belongs to God, and let every Christian Scientist at this hour daily leave the world in God's care. The supreme power of divine Love clears away all evil, permitting the flood tide of spiritual healing to flow over the world and lift the fallen by revealing man's rightful image,—the true spiritual reflection of his Maker.

The opposite of spiritual tranquillity is the malicious selfishness of mortal mind. The placid countenance of self-satisfaction generally hides subtle active arguments of evil. The evildoer who seems so tranquil and successful is the mushroom growth of human invention. Nothing is too low to be used as the instrument of this false tranquillity in its vile onslaught. This evil is finally mastered by itself in self-destruction, for God knows no evil to punish. In the final combat between matter and Spirit, Spirit remains as it was in the beginning, perfect and eternal in glory, while the matter mist fades into its nothingness.

In thanking Mrs. Eddy for "The Prayer for Peace" which she sent to the members of The Mother Church in 1905 requesting them to pray "for the amicable settlement of the war between Russia and Japan," the then Clerk of the church wrote in part, as found on page 280 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany": "We acknowledge with rejoicing the receipt of your message, which again gives assurance of your watchful care and guidance in our behalf and of your loving solicitude for the welfare of the nations and the peaceful tranquillity of the race." In the peaceful, quiet calm of right thinking, spiritual thoughts flow in and out to the world like the great tide of Love coming continually from our heavenly Father-Mother God who seeth all His children as the beloved of His tender care. The shepherd who saves the babe lamb from the wolves illustrates the divine protection of God. Mortal mind growls and howls to be heard like so many hungry wolves, yet the shepherd represents the power which destroys the devil, the beastly nature, so that the lamb may lie down with the wolf in the perfect tranquillity of divine Love. Christian Scientists can rejoice that there is no real world of hate containing the seeming power of destruction, for the real world is a world of love containing all that is good.

A Confession of Faith

WE sometimes hear it said that the healing work of Christ Jesus was accomplished without a moment's delay, as when light is brought into a dark room and the darkness vanishes. This is undoubtedly true of all healing which results from the understanding of spiritual law, but with the illumination comes a demand for a new sort of activity on the part of the one healed. Nothing of value can be accomplished in darkness, either on the mental or on the physical plane, and so, before the divine creation can be made manifest, the mandate "Let there be light," must be uttered and responded to.

When Jesus healed the man who had been blind from his birth the man's illumination began at once and lighted for him the pathway of revelation. His astuteness was more than a match for the learned Pharisees who thought to frighten him by saying that he had been healed by a sinner, but the erstwhile blind man stoutly affirmed that God did not hear sinners, and he added, "If this man were not of God, he could do nothing." His crowning argument was, however, "Whereas I was blind, now I see."

To the student of Christian Science the deepest interest awakened by this touching story is the demand of the Master for a confession of faith from the man, after he had so bravely parried the attacks of the Pharisees. The record reads: "Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" The man was not asked if he believed on God,—that was assumed; but Jesus' question elicited the pathetic response, "Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him?" Well was it for this man that he was then able to see, not with physical sense but with spiritual vision, the representative of divine Sonship, as one who could give full proof of man's birthright of dominion, not in creed or dogma, but, to use Mrs. Eddy's words (Science and Health, p. 135), "in demonstration of Truth, as must be the case in the cycles of divine light." The next step was this man's full and free acknowledgment of the Son of God,—his credo which to-day thrills with its simple appeal those who have themselves been healed by the ever present Christ as revealed in Christian Science. Like the blind man they too must advance step by step into the full understanding of the Son of God. John, who was no doubt present at the time of the blind man's healing, has this to say in his first epistle: "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself . . . He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

Here be it remembered, the Master taught that life is eternal, and this fact was the basis of all his wonderful demonstrations over sin and disease and was exemplified in his own victory over death and the grave. He knew that man as the child of God is not subject to evil in any form, nor is his life limited to the short span allotted to him by mortal belief. At the very beginning of his glorious ministry Christ Jesus declared, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly," and in John's epistle we read that God sent His Son into the world "that we might live through him."

The student of Christian Science is sometimes charged with irreverence because he seeks to trace his own likeness to our Father in heaven, in claiming the spiritual qualities which express that likeness. Too long has the belief held mankind that God is a corporeal being and that man's likeness to God is a physical likeness, that it is quite proper to claim this, but altogether wrong to hold it as a likeness to what might be termed the Christ-nature. Christian Science, however, teaches without any reserve that the fleshly man is not the likeness of God. On page 161 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says, "To the senses, Jesus was the son of man: in Science, man is the son of God." No demonstration in the way of healing which is worth while can be made on any other basis than this, namely, the spiritual nature of man and his likeness to God. Too long has scholastic theology separated man from God and regarded man as a poor, miserable sinner, but this was never the Master's teaching.

John, who perhaps more than any other New Testament writer has made known to us the spiritual depths of Jesus' teaching, has this to say: "Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world." In order to realize the full force of this inspired declaration and prove its truth in the healing of sickness and the overcoming of sin, we need to throw off the false sense of man as something other than the child of God, and yet all of the New Testament writers insist upon this very thing. The old man with his deeds, which are but the outcome of his false beliefs, must be put off that the Christ-man may appear, and when man as God's idea is revealed we shall see that he is not blind to the omnipotence of Truth and Love, and that he carries no weight of ancestral sins or disabilities, but claims the heritage of him who is born of God in that he "sinneth not," for he daily proves that through his understanding of Truth the wicked one "toucheth him not." Again and again does the apostle plead that we may believe on the name of the Son of God, which to the student of Christian Science means that we should understand the nature of the child of God and make it manifest daily and hourly in all we say and do.

Notice

The Christian Science Publishing Society has been requested to announce that on account of the increased activity of the Christian Scientists' Comforts Forwarding Committee, it has been found necessary to secure larger quarters. A large storeroom at 328 Boylston Street, Boston, has been rented and the headquarters of the Committee will hereafter be at that address.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

Among the Churches

Current Notes

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist, is under construction at the northeast corner of East 105th Street and Fairmount Avenue N. E. An auditorium, 68 by 130 feet in size, will, with the balcony, provide seating capacity for approximately fifteen hundred persons. The Sunday school will contain forty-seven classrooms, an auditorium 32 by 80 feet in size, and will accommodate from eight hundred to one thousand pupils. The building will cost approximately three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The church property has a frontage of 190 feet on East 105th Street and a depth of 170 feet on Fairmount Avenue. The new edifice of Second Church of Christ, Scientist, Euclid Avenue and East 77th Street, is nearing completion, while the lot for First Church of Christ, Scientist, has been staked off on Euclid Avenue at the easterly entrance of Wade Park.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

RICHMOND HILL, N. Y.—At a corporate meeting of First Church of Christ, Scientist, held October 8, it was unanimously decided to abandon plans for extensive alterations on the present church structure and, instead, to remodel the building standing on the land adjoining the church property on the rear and facing Chestnut Street. The remodeling is about complete, giving an auditorium which will seat one hundred or more, and will be used for Sunday school, also for Wednesday evening meetings.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.—The beautiful building of First Church of Christ, Scientist, corner of Avenue D and Fifth Street, was dedicated Sunday morning [Jan. 13]. The church has a seating capacity of eight hundred, while the Sunday school auditorium on the lower floor will accommodate four hundred and fifty. The reinforced concrete, fireproof building, complete with the organ, represents an outlay of approximately thirty-eight thousand dollars, while the land upon which it stands is valued at twenty thousand dollars.—San Antonio Light.

PASADENA, CAL.—At the Tournament of Roses on New Year's day First Church of Christ, Scientist, maintained a large tent for the free use of the public. During the day it was visited by more than thirty-four hundred visitors and a large amount of Christian Science literature was distributed.

OKMULGEE, OKLA.—With simple but impressive ceremony the edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, was dedicated Sunday morning [Dec. 2].

Okmulgee Democrat.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to Nov. 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,

The Lectures

CHICAGO, ILL. (Fourteenth Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Eugene M. Bornhoft, who said in part:—

In the seventeenth chapter of Matthew we read that a certain man kneeled down to the Master, saying: "Lord, have mercy on my son: for he is lunatick, and sore vexed: for ofttimes he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water . . . And Jesus rebuked the devil; and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour." To the disciples who looked on in amazement, Jesus said, "If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you." Relative to such faith, Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in one of her writings entitled "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 9) says, "The spiritual power of a scientific, right thought, without a direct effort, an audible or even a mental argument, has oftentimes healed inveterate diseases."

My friends, I am a living witness to the truth of these statements. From experience I can say that the wonderful healing power demonstrated by Jesus is applicable to-day. Just about fourteen years ago, through the application of scientific right thinking about God and man as taught in Christian Science, I was released from the Illinois Northern Hospital for the Insane, where, a few months prior, the doctors had pronounced the case incurable, and said that the end was nigh. And so, instead of a dead lunatic in Elgin in 1903, we have a live, wide-awake, prosperous business man in Chicago in 1917.

BEDFORD, ENGLAND (Society).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Major Parker, who said in part:—

One of the good results of the war has been the awakening in the consciousness of many people of a stronger desire to look more to the spiritual than to the material for help and guidance in times of trouble, sorrow, and suffering. Many people are now looking for something higher than matter and a material sense of things to bring them relief and comfort. There is a prophecy in the Bible which has a bearing on this condition of thought. The words are these: "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free,"—that is, free from all discordant conditions. If these words are true, the remedy must lie in our gaining a knowledge of the truth. It is then of vital importance to us all to find the answer to the great question put by Pilate to our Lord, "What is truth?"

We Christian Scientists know we have found it in the teachings of Christ Jesus, as interpreted by Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, and the author of its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

MERIDEN, CONN. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Sidney J. Roby, who said in part:—

There is a short statement which is made at the opening of every regular service in all Christian Science churches. It is this: "The Bible and the Christian Science textbook are our only preachers" (The Christian Science Quarterly). This phrase might be called the keynote of Christian Science. It is an announcement that its adherents have found the study of the Bible, with the aid of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, a sufficient guide to health and harmony. It is in this way that our individual needs are cared for, and in many hundreds of churches throughout our land and all over the world both men and women gladly testify to the enduring value of the help received. It is natural that those whose lives have been broadened and sweetened by these means should wish to place before their friends as plainly and logically as possible the evidence that a working knowledge of God is ours and theirs by inheritance.

Testimonies of Healing

With a deep sense of gratitude I give this testimony of what Christian Science has done for me. It is about two years since I came into the true, spiritual understanding of Christian Science, and was healed of neuritis, chronic bowel disorder, bronchial trouble, and nervous breakdown, with absolute loss of courage. One day, while I was sitting in my room wondering what I could do, the thought came to me, Why not dispense with all material remedies and go to reading a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which had been laid away for several years. I at once got the book and began to read it, with the result that there was immediate relief, and in a few weeks I was a perfectly well, happy woman.

I wish I could find words to tell just what the true understanding of Christian Science has meant to me, and the joy of being perfectly well and able to work again. I had thought that I could never again do the work which I had been doing. For thirty years I had been constantly trying to please the public and felt that I had given all my strength in doing so; and to find that strength renewed and that I was just as able to work as ever was wonderful. I cannot be grateful enough for this healing and for the spiritual uplift which came with this realization of the truth that makes free, and for the happiness that comes each day from knowing how to do something for the Master.

I thank God with all my heart and am grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, that she made it possible for us to have the understanding of this beautiful truth and apply it to all our needs. I am so grateful for the help received from our Sentinel and Journal and for the helpful testimonies given at our Wednesday evening meetings. Words cannot express the joy which comes to me in being able to help others out of the belief of inharmony and sickness. I feel that I cannot be thankful enough for this beautiful religion which makes happiness and freedom for all mankind.—Miss Alice L. Manatt, Grinnell, Iowa.

For a long time I have thought it my duty to tell of the many blessings that have come to me through Christian Science. One Sunday morning, over eight years ago, my husband and I started for church not knowing what one we would attend, but on the way we decided to go to the Christian Science church, as we had never done so and we had a few friends who went there. I did not seem to get anything from the reading, but there was something about that simple service held in a little hall in the business part of the town which appealed to me. A month later my husband gave me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and I immediately began to read the Lesson-Sermon every week, but not every day at first. I have never attended any other church since, for after reading the chapter on Prayer, I knew that this was the religion for me. Many trials have come into my life since then which would have been unbearable without Christian Science, but I have had perfect harmony demonstrated in my home life with the aid of a patient and loving practitioner, who helped me to see the perfect man and gave me a higher concept of man as God's image. Where discord had once been, there is now love and peace. This has meant more than the physical healings. With the help of this practitioner I was able to sell a business which I no longer wanted to continue, and the demonstration was made, proving that in God's kingdom we all have our right place.

I have had many physical healings, and to me even the so-called small things are wonderful proofs of God's care and love. A few years ago, before I had any understanding in Christian Science, I had an abscess in my ear which lasted more than a week and was very painful. Recently this same discord presented itself. As the old thought was vivid in my mind, I asked for help and the trouble was overcome. In a few hours all trace of soreness had left my ear.

Christian Science has changed my outlook on life and made me more charitable, more forgiving. Truly divine Love has met and is meeting all my needs.

Mrs. Neva A. Deffler, Chicago, Ill.

Before coming into Christian Science about nine years ago, I could not see anything bright before me in a physical way. In all the years from childhood I had suffered from stomach trouble, sick headache, and bowel disorder. I had tried everything physicians could offer, but only found temporary relief. This condition had blighted much of my happiness as a child and threatened to do the same in womanhood. Christian Science was presented to me several times, but the "good news" fell on dull ears, until my little daughter who had been in the Christian Science Sunday school a little more than a year expressed a desire to be taken to a practitioner, as she was not very well. Needless to say, I was the one for whom the work needed to be done. Treatment was begun, and I started to read the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, with the result that I was instantaneously healed of the bowel disorder. The headaches grew less severe and finally disappeared. The stomach trouble was the last to yield, but belief in heredity, as well as criticism, condemnation, hate, and many other thoughts which were not conducive to health, had to be destroyed with the understanding and application of God's perfect law of love and harmony, the same law which Jesus so thoroughly understood that he was able to raise Lazarus from the dead and give sight to the blind.

For years I was a member of an orthodox church and thought I knew God, but after studying the Christian Science textbook in connection with the Bible, I found I was constantly breaking the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." I believed in gods many. I believed matter governed me instead of God, Spirit, Mind; I believed food could both give me strength and make me suffer. I cannot express enough gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for the definition of God as given in the Glossary of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 587), and for the healing articles that come to us through the pages of the Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor, just at the right time, when we seem to need them most.

Now I am well and happy and daily trying to give of this truth that has been so freely given to me. All these blessings have come to me by knowing God as revealed to me in Christian Science.

Mrs. Helena C. Keasey, Grand Rapids, Mich.

It is with deep joy and heartfelt gratitude that I give thanks for all Christian Science has done for me and mine. For years an unwilling victim of the false appetite for strong drink, and a slave to the use of tobacco in different forms, I had resorted to famous "cures," attended private sanatoriums, used all the will power at my command, and had so-called home treatments for the cure of the liquor habit, but to no avail. With the failure of material means my plight seemed desperate. I was indeed like one "having no hope, and without God in the world;" however, I was a worshiper at the shrine of material medicine.

In this extremity Christian Science came, bringing light and a sure and quick deliverance, besides almost simultaneous healing of many bodily ills,—an unhealed sore of years' standing, constitutional liver and spleen trouble, rheumatism, catarrh, and a complication of malarial fever and sewer-gas poisoning contracted in early youth. As chaff before the flames, these and other discords vanished under "the fervent heat of Truth and Love" (Science and Health, p. 565), leaving me as one purified. Medicine I have not touched for many years.

Truly I can sing with the psalmist: "I will extol thee, O Lord; for thou hast lifted me up, . . . thou hast healed me. O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave."

ROBERT M. HORTON, Battle Mountain, Nev.

I should indeed be ungrateful longer to withhold my testimony of the wonderful benefits received through the understanding of God and of man's relation to Him as revealed in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Christian Science has been the only physician in our home for fifteen years, and has surely proven to be an ever present help. During this time it has never failed to meet our every need, mental, physical, and financial. The demonstrations which have been made are too numerous to mention, but among the healings accomplished was the overcoming of extreme mental depression and intense morbidness. A structural defect of the eyes was overcome, and glasses which had been worn for twelve years were laid aside, as the result of attending a Wednesday evening testimony meeting. Severe colds, rheumatism, toothache, sprains, and burns have quickly yielded to the power of Truth. Christian Science has also proven a wonderful preventive of suffering in time of accident and trouble.

I wish to express the deepest gratitude for our periodicals; I never open one of these without finding just what meets my need for the day. For my knowledge of this great truth, which brings to us that peace "which passeth all understanding," I am indeed thankful.

MRS. EVELYN S. GOULD, San Francisco, Cal.

About three years ago I began the study of the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I was suffering from a complication of diseases, some of which the doctors who were attending me pronounced incurable; others, they said, might be cured by an operation, but such an operation at my age, which was seventy years, would be very uncertain in its results, so they refused to take the case. With this information I was completely discouraged and gave up all hope of ever being any better. I had been suffering for about ten months with a very bad leg, and about eight months of that time I was unable to stand on my foot, the doctor being unable to give me any relief from pain except by the use of drugs. For about five months I sat in a reclining chair all day and part of the night.

While in this condition a lady whom I had not seen for some years heard of my trouble and called to see me. She asked why I did not try Christian Science, saying that it had healed her, and that it would cure me. I told her to get a practitioner for me, which she did, and I began treatment, but with very little faith that it would help me, for I thought that if the doctors could not help me, nothing else would; but to my surprise, very soon the pain was about gone, and I was able to get around a little with crutches. The wound soon healed, and for several months I have been able to get around without any material aid and with very little inconvenience. I have also been healed completely of one ailment which the doctors said could be cured only by an operation; also of the drink habit and of the swearing habit. Heart trouble which used to cause great fear at times has been very much lessened, so that the fear from that source is nearly gone. I can truly say that I believe if it had not been for what I have learned from the Bible and our textbook I would not be here to-day. While there are other discords yet to be overcome, I know that by earnest prayer and obedience to the will of God, I shall know the truth and be free.

For all these blessings I am unable to find words to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy. I thank God for the practitioner who has been so kind and patient in explaining this teaching to me, and for the many friends who have been so helpful. My prayer is that I may do each day some good for my fellow man. I give this testimony with the hope that if there is any brother similarly afflicted, he will not get discouraged in well-doing.—J. SHOOK, Chicago, Ill.

In April, 1914, a friend asked me to try Christian Science. I was suffering from catarrh of the head and had an annoying cough, such as usually accompanies tubercular trouble. The cough disappeared within a short while after treatment was applied for, but the catarrh did not yield for some time. I studied Christian Science and had many beautiful demonstrations before this ailment was overcome. For more than two years prior to my coming into Christian Science for help I could not breathe through my nostrils. Everything that could be thought of, or which was recommended to me, had been tried without any relief, but, thanks be to God, through the study of this healing truth I have learned that life is not dependent upon one's nostrils. I was also healed of weak eyes for which I had worn glasses more than six years. This healing came through the study and application of the teachings of the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

In November, 1913, I took charge of an office which seemingly was in a very bad condition, but when Christian Science was applied the results were wonderful. Words are inadequate to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to our beloved Leader for what this teaching has done and is doing for me. The Bible is a new book; in fact, many things have become beautiful since I have learned that God is All-in-all.

Through Christian Science our six-year-old boy has been healed of toothache, earache, a bowel disorder which had troubled him from babyhood, measles, and other ailments. I too have many blessings for which to be grateful. I was healed in one treatment of an attack of what two physicians in former instances had diagnosed as appendicitis, and influenza has been overcome in one treatment. Many other physical disturbances have yielded to the truth. At the birth of a baby boy I relied entirely upon Christian Science, and I am very grateful for the help received at that time. I know too that I am not so fearful as formerly.

Above all I am grateful for the knowledge of God and of man's relation to Him that is gradually being unfolded to me. Before Christian Science came into my experience I had absolutely no desire to know anything about God. Words cannot now express my gratitude that this beautiful truth has come to me. I am very thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy.

As to the efficacy of Christian Science, I know there is no problem too great or too small to be worked out by the realization of the perfect man made in the image of God, good. Recently, after a little trip into the mountains, an eruption appeared on my face and threatened to spread. It also gave me much discomfort. I treated myself as best I knew how, but fear seemed to keep back the healing and I saw that I must call for help. I went to a practitioner, and in one treatment the condition was overcome; but in a few days it returned, apparently much worse than before. I knew then it was not due to poison oak, but to some fear, ignorance, or sin which was being manifested, and through careful work on my part, with the help of a practitioner, it came to me that I had not been truly honest with a dear friend. I humbly and gratefully righted this and then the demonstration was made. Again I rejoiced in our Leader's words (Science and Health, p. 494), "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need." I am grateful for this experience, as it brought me closer to God.

I am indeed thankful for all the blessings Christian Science has brought and is bringing to me each day.

MRS. HETTIE C. FOOR, Santa Monica, Cal.

I should like to show my gratitude by adding my testimony of what Christian Science has done for me to the many that have appeared in the Sentinel and Journal, and by this means to return thanks for all the help I have received through this teaching and for all our periodicals. I did not come to it for physical healing, but because I wanted more than the churches seemed able to give. I have, however, been healed of bad headaches and many minor ailments. Up to nine years ago I was taking medicine nearly every day of my life, but when I first read the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I could not help saying to myself that this book contained the truth. There and then I realized that looking to drugs or any material thing for help was having other gods, so from that day I have relied on the healing power of divine Mind to cure any false beliefs that have tried to take hold of me, and have always found it efficacious.

I am most grateful for the spiritual healing, which has shown me that God is Love and that the good He bestows is the activity of right thinking, which casteth out fear. I am also rejoicing in the knowledge that I have a Father-Mother God close at hand, ever present, and when I turn to God in any difficulty I never turn in vain. My desire is to live this truth more and more every day, thereby giving glory to God and showing in a small way my gratitude for the life of Mrs. Eddy.—MISS LINA HARRY, Cornwall, England.

For some time I have felt that I should add my testimony of gratitude to God for Christian Science, more especially as it was through reading of another's experience that I was induced to seek relief through this truth. From childhood I was considered very delicate and my life was a series of physical difficulties, until, a few years before I became interested in Christian Science, it had become a hopeless search for health. I had run the gamut of material remedies, baths, electric treatments, travel, diet, and so on; indeed, in the words of Scripture, I "had suffered many things of many physicians . . . and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse." A serious surgical operation for an internal growth was declared to be the only means of relief, but I felt I would not survive this, as my physician did not give much hope because of my debilitated condition, said to be due to chronic catarrh of the stomach and nervous trouble.

In my despair I prayed to God for relief or death, and I know my prayer was heard, for at that time a testimony of healing through Christian Science came under my notice and I decided at once to investigate this teaching. Upon inquiry I found there was a church in this city, and on attending service I was met with much kindness. I briefly explained the object of my visit and was introduced to a gentleman who lived near us, who advised me to purchase a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and consented to give me treatment. I secured the book and read it continually, and the truth it contains filled a great void in my life. I had never accepted any other religion because of the doctrines of predestination, eternal punishment, and that God causes or permits evil. I felt such joy and peace in this revelation of God as Mind and as infinite good that I no longer noticed my physical condition, and when a few days later the neighbor who had taken an interest inquired as to my health, it suddenly dawned on me that I was healed. Needless to say I was fully convinced and accepted Christian Science as the truth. A few weeks after this, through my realization of the truth, my mother was healed in one treatment of a fractured limb from which she had suffered for nearly two months. All material help had failed her and poisoning had set in.

I am sincerely grateful for my first experiences in healing, for they have encouraged me to know, as Mrs. Eddy says on page 11 of "Unity of Good," that "Jesus required neither cycles of time nor thought in order to mature fitness for perfection and its possibilities." While my physical healing was complete, there have been many problems to work out and deep-rooted false beliefs to overcome, and this has required constant study of the Bible and of Mrs. Eddy's writings. I am most grateful to our Leader for our literature and for all the activities of the Christian Science church.

After mature deliberation and a reasonable lapse of time it seems fitting that I should give my testimony to the glorious results of learning the Christ-way as rediscovered by Mrs. Eddy. A few years ago I was just a common man as to habits, that is, I smoked and chewed tobacco and took a drink sometimes, as so many do; therefore it may be readily understood that I did not take up Christian Science with any thought of reformation. I began to read the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," solely for information, as I had read many other religious works, but I soon got the surprise of my life—I could not chew tobacco any more, and was at a loss to know why.

Soon afterward I read that people had been healed by reading this book. Not believing this possible, I laid the book aside for a time, but could not banish it from my thought. Then it came to me, Why do so many urge others to read the Bible? If that is good, perhaps this is also; so I began to read the textbook again and soon I could not smoke the pipe any more, nor take a drink either. Still I smoked cigars and seemed to enjoy them greatly, using from seven to ten a day. I had been attending a Christian Science church for quite a while, and joined the church without a clear understanding that it was not expected its members would smoke. Then I saw that it would not do to be a church member and smoke too. That evening I said that in the morning I would go to the church officers and ask to have my name taken off the books until such time as I was entirely healed of this habit also. I slept better that night than I had for a long time, and in the morning, as my custom was, I lighted a cigar, but I could not smoke it. It seemed to make me as much trouble as it would a child who had never used tobacco. After breakfast I tried another of a different sort, but it was the same, and from that day to this the smell of tobacco has been offensive to me.

For years I had been a great sufferer from rheumatism, hemorrhoids, and hemorrhages, of all of which I was healed, and my drugs were thrown away. When I moved to a milder climate, with many winter rains, I thought I would likely have rheumatism again, and so I did, but relying on Christian Science I called up a practitioner and after a few treatments normal conditions were restored. I have been wonderfully saved from the effects of several bad falls. I am now stronger, and can do more hard work than I was able to do for several years before taking up Christian Science. Up to this time I have never had one moment's desire or longing for tobacco, or to drink any intoxicant, and no return of piles and bleeding.

Hosts of my friends know how grateful I am and how I like to testify, in the church or out of it, to the great blessings which have come to me through the efforts and understanding of that wonderful woman, our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy.—HIRAM L. JOSLIN, Fayetteville, Ark.

I first investigated Christian Science out of curiosity. I had always been religiously inclined and a student of the Bible, but there were many things in it I could not understand and others did not explain to me satisfactorily. I went to a friend who was a Christian Science practitioner and asked her about these things, and when she explained them to me I knew that here was the truth for which I had been searching. Then I attended the Christian Science Sunday school and began the study of the authorized literature. I had a few treatments and was healed of stomach trouble, of frequent nervous headaches, and was able to lay aside glasses which had been worn for several years. That was six years ago, and the healing has been permanent. For this I am very grateful, but I am more grateful for the understanding that the Bible is true and that its teachings are applicable to every human need.

MISS ETTA N. SCHAEFFER, Washington, D. C.

I have been greatly helped in my study of Christian Science by reading the testimonies in the Sentinel, and I offer this testimony in the hope that it may help somebody in similar circumstances. For about six years I have depended upon Christian Science in times of need, and I have had many healings. I was instantly healed when threatened with acute lung trouble, and at the same time was freed from sickness and a great many fears which one may have prior to childbirth. My baby was born under Christian Science treatment with a practitioner and a doctor in attendance. Everything was harmonious and I had very little pain. I had no after difficulties and ate and slept normally during the whole time. This child is nearly three years old and he does not know the taste of medicine of any kind. He was recently wonderfully brought out of an attack of croup. He awoke late in the evening and had great difficulty in breathing. A practitioner was called and absent treatment given, with the result that in a short time the child was comfortable and even playful. He was put to bed and slept all night.

I have many blessings for which to be very grateful. My husband has been healed of rheumatism, and headaches and colds have been quickly overcome for him. I am now completely free from a difficulty that had troubled me occasionally since childhood. From a condition of not being able to walk except by leaning on the furniture and dragging one foot behind me, I am able to go anywhere. I depended absolutely on God; He comforted me through many a sleepless night, and now I am able to sleep all night and scarcely know what it is to lie awake. I am very grateful for this healing and comforting truth.

MRS. NAN M. RUTLEDGE, South Portland, Maine.

I wish to express my gratitude for all the blessings received through Christian Science. I had stomach trouble from childhood and had used every drug that was heard of, but received only temporary relief. Since coming into Christian Science about three years ago I have not taken a drop of medicine. I have also been healed in a few days of several hard colds. For these healings I am deeply grateful, but more so for the better understanding of the Bible.

HOWARD M. BLACKWOOD, Traverse City, Mich.

I feel that the time has come for me to make a just acknowledgment of what this healing truth has done for me and mine. When Christian Science found me I had everything to make me happy and contented, but as the physicians had pronounced sentence upon me for a physical ill, I felt as though I had no hope. After one treatment I was fully convinced that Christian Science was the truth, and even though the symptoms seemed aggravated, I continued to study harder. It was a long while before I received a demonstration of physical healing, but during the time, I refused medicine or any material remedy, and the spiritual understanding I gained was wonderful, for peace, joy, and happiness were restored.

After the birth of my baby boy I realized that my faith must be known by my works, and I will tell of an experience we had, hoping it will help some one. During his second summer, dysentery started one afternoon, accompanied by high fever. I called for help in Christian Science and the fever disappeared instantly, but the other condition continued. I felt perfectly satisfied that normal action would be restored, but fear overtook my husband, who is not a Christian Scientist, and he called a doctor. The baby was under the physician's care for two weeks, but there was no improvement, and the last two days conditions were worse. I refused to care for the case any longer under medical treatment, so my husband asked me to try Christian Science again. That was Saturday; on Sunday the dysentery was checked and Monday the healing was complete. We both received a good lesson from that experience. We learned how to resist error, and have never had a desire to call a doctor since.

Words fail to express my gratitude for all the blessings received. My desire is to know the truth and realize the nothingness of error in our daily life. I love and reverence Mrs. Eddy, who gave to mankind this wonderful truth, and through the Bible and her works I am learning to trust in God.—MRS. ELLA M. MONAHAN, South Pasadena, Cal.

[The Christian Advocate]

The search in the files of European diplomacy for adequate reasons for this fearful war has failed to yield altogether satisfactory results. The resort to distorted and deluded interpretations of apocalyptic scripture on the part of some pious souls has produced chagrin. The easy way in which others throw the whole wretched matter back upon God and say, "It had to be," opens the way to absurdity and ridicule.

But why? That is the question that will not down, and that oppresses the hearts and depresses the spirits of multitudes of good men and women in all the world, and especially in the lands that are involved in this dreadful debacle of civilization. . . . It is hardly fair to pile up against God the vast accumulation of responsibility that clearly belongs at the door of men who profess to be the children of God and followers of Jesus Christ, while furnishing to the world the surest evidence that they are neither.

[Canon M. Linton Smith, D.S.O., in The Daily Graphic, London, England]

Amid all the discussion of schemes of reconstruction after the war there is a great danger of overlooking the essential spade work of building up the individual character; and your call to the churches to rise to such a task is very justifiable; they do not seem to have risen to the heights of their opportunity during the war; nor can there be much doubt that the existing divisions and rivalries between sect and sect, and party and party, are one of the most serious obstacles to such an advance.

There can be no question that men who have served at the front will be very intolerant of partisanship and sectarian rivalry when they return; and if the religious impression which has undoubtedly been made on many of them by life under war conditions is to be preserved and deepened, Christian folk at home will have to learn, not indeed to agree, save on one point, and that is, to agree to differ in charity, and to cooperate one with another to a far greater extent than is general at present. . . . What should be aimed at, in my opinion, is the development of a truly Christian spirit in the relations between the different Christian bodies, the attempt to understand one another's point of view, and the deliberate resolve to abstain from provocative language or action. Such a course of action on the part of the churches would steadily increase their influence.

From the Housetops

Christian Scientists have no doubt noted in periodicals of general circulation advertisements of The Christian Science Monitor as shown in facsimile above.

Similar advertisements are also being published in all the daily newspapers of Washington, D.C.

The total circulation of all the periodicals being used for this advertising is over 15,000,000 copies per issue.

Thus is the Christian Science movement obeying the injunction of the Master (Matt. 10: 27): "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops."

From all sections commendation of this step is being expressed, for Christian Scientists realize, perhaps as never before, this hour demands the healing of the world rather than to "pass by on the other side."

VOLUME XX FEBRUARY 23, 1918 NUMBER 26

"Who did sin?"

LOUIS A. GREGORY

WE are told in the ninth chapter of the gospel of John how Jesus healed a man who had been blind from his birth. The disciples asked, "Master, who did sin, this man, or his parents, that he was born blind?" To this Jesus answered, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."

In the light of Christian Science this is one of the most helpful of the gospel narratives, in showing that from the standpoint of Principle, sin and disease are not real, may not rightfully be attributed to anyone, are neither cause nor effect, and that the abandonment of a material viewpoint for the spiritual heals disease and banishes evil. In explaining that it is only in human belief that sickness and evil seem to exist, Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 218), "What renders both sin and sickness difficult of cure is, that the human mind is the sinner." This statement is a categorical answer to the age-repeated inquiry of the disciples, "Who did sin?" The human mind pleads guilty to being a sinner, and Christian Science proves that it is the sinner. On page 512 the main indictment reads as follows: "Ignorant of the origin and operations of mortal mind,—that is, ignorant of itself,—this so-called mind puts forth its own qualities, and claims God as their author; albeit God is ignorant of the existence of both this mortal mentality, so-called, and its claim, for the claim usurps the deific prerogatives and is an attempted infringement on infinity." Logic and Scriptural authority agree that this basic sin of attributing to God responsibility for evil is a characteristic of the carnal mind.

One of the beliefs of the human mind is that God caused the man in question to be blind in order that Jesus might show his God-given power to heal. This is a radical departure from the Christ-teaching that God is unchanging Love; but conventional religion often goes still farther in its opposition to scientific spiritual healing. It denies that divine Truth heals now as it once did; and it even finds fault with those who rely upon God alone for their healing. Because it conceives of God as causing or recognizing disease, its prayers do not heal. Then it imputes to God the responsibility for such unanswered prayer for healing, saying in effect that although God still causes men to be blind or sick, He has ceased to heal them. For healing, it recommends the medical doctor and material methods. To explain a case of congenital blindness in conformity with such a theory would require a transformation of Jesus' statement into something like the following: Neither did this man sin, nor his parents, but God made him blind that the power of the doctor, surgeon, or drug should be manifested in him.

Certainly it was not the affliction of the man who was born blind that was the work of God, but the very opposite,—the healing of it. Jesus proved this conclusively, for after saying, "I must work the works of him that sent me," he proceeded at once to heal the man. God does not both afflict and heal, for, as the Scriptures declare, His gifts are invariably perfect; no fountain yields both salt water and fresh, and a good tree does not "bear evil fruit." Our Master taught insistently that God is the loving Father of man. The imputation that He causes or permits His children to be blind or sick presents a travesty of fatherhood.

Some Bible passages seem to imply that God sends disease or evil; others say that He will not afflict, that He is too pure to behold evil, and much more to the same effect. There is an apparent conflict between these two lines of statement, unless it is true that the passages which are interpreted as making God the author of sin and disease merely show such an estimate of Him to be wrong and a source of bad results. To attribute evil to God, even when it is supposed that good is eventually to come from it, is sin, and is known by such fruits as the confusing conclusion that divinely ordained disease continues, but that spiritual healing has ceased. Such a doctrine is adhered to by those who have accepted it as common religious belief, but have never analyzed it. When the error is pointed out, they generally see it and are no longer deceived. This indicates that it is the mortal or human mind that is the sinner.

Christian Science proves that the one usually considered the sinner is the victim and not the cause of sin. This agrees with the words of Paul: "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" It follows, then, that to overcome evil one should understand that the person is the servant or victim, and through Truth should proceed against the carnal mind which claims to be the master of men. This doctrine does not condone evil, nor does it encourage sin. It makes clear the odiousness of all sinful indulgence and shows that reliance upon evil is exactly like reliance upon any other mistake or error, —sure to fail and certain to disappoint every expectation of benefit that is attached to it. It shows that the person victimized seems temporarily deprived of his right of exercising his choice between good and evil, and is the deluded or abject slave of a false sense of things.

Coupled with the mistaken human theory that man is either a sinner directly or the son of a sinner, is the erroneous belief and appearance that he can be hopelessly, incurably blind or ill. Jesus took issue squarely with these errors. His explanation of the man's blindness, "that the works of God should be made manifest in him," was followed by the demonstration to human sense that man really is the son of God, or the reflection of God, as Christian Science states; for Jesus' spiritual estimate of man healed the blind man, and proved that it is only false, human belief which is either a blind man or a sinner.

The prophet Jeremiah asks in substance who it is that creates what God does not, and asserts that both good and evil do not proceed from God. This, and the Master's answer first quoted, correlate with the Christian Science teaching that evil is without origin or reality, hence it cannot be satisfactorily explained or analyzed. The only profitable consideration of it is that which disposes of all claims of presence or power for it. If Christian Science were to teach that evil is real, then to say that mortal mind is the source of evil would be to find a new name and reaffirmed power and presence for the one devil. Christian Science, on the contrary, consistently teaches that good is real, and that evil, its opposite, is unreal; so mortal mind is the supposititious cause of that only which does not exist,—is the mythical father of falsehood.

As mortal mind is the sinner, so divine Mind, which is a synonym for God, is the savior. Man is saved from sin, disease, or evil to the extent that he eschews the human mind and conforms to divine Mind. To put off belief in the man that is sick, sinning, and dying, is to put off the mentality which alone conceives of these conditions; and to put on the new man, in God's likeness, is to demonstrate the infinitude of the one Mind, God.

"Be ye stedfast"

CATHARINE SEVERENS

THERE came recently to the writer, together with a deep sense of gratitude for the spiritual growth of a friend through very trying circumstances, a realization of how great, in human experience, is the need of faithfulness on the part of each individual. This friend had quietly and steadfastly held her ground through shock after shock, in situations which to human sense would seem almost unendurable. Because she was rooted and grounded in the conviction that Christian Science is the truth, and that it must triumph in the downfall of all the error which seemed to be so fiercely attempting to destroy her peace of mind and rob her of all comfort in life, she came through unscathed, a finer, nobler woman than before, presenting to all who knew her the proof that divine Love had been equal to her every emergency. To one of her friends, at least, the remembrance of this experience has been an inspiration along the pathway of endeavor.

While it is undeniably true that the problem of salvation is wrought out alone with God in the individual consciousness, and while no true Christian Scientist would add to the burden of a fellow worker by condemning him if he had been overborne by the temptation to recede from his highest standard of work in an hour of great mental or physical stress, yet this receding, this concession to the belief in a power apart from God, necessarily places the burden of proof more insistently upon every other Christian Scientist in the community,—nay, even in the world. On the other hand, the steadfastness of one brave heart in some trying hour bears an unceasing weight of influence for encouragement and hope to his struggling neighbor, even as Christ's clarion note of divine reassurance rings down the ages with its promise of fulfillment. "Be of good cheer," said he whose faith and understanding had vanquished every earthly torment; "I have overcome the world." He labored, not for his own personal comfort, nor for his own glory, but that he might impress the omnipotence and goodness of God upon the darkened thought of a material age,—that through his great love for mankind he might reflect the glory of that divine Love which is the savior and redeemer of the world. On that momentous night in Gethsemane one mighty longing dominated his thought: "For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth . . . that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

Could such absolute self-abnegation go unrewarded or fail of its divine fruition? Then let us too feel the necessity of the spiritual obligation on us through our very awakening to the truth in Christian Science, and even if we seem to lose sight of the inevitable loss to ourselves which must follow our yielding to the stress of discouragement and failure, let us pause even a moment longer to realize that our standing in this hour may bring a priceless encouragement to others whose need is great,—perhaps far greater than ours. With this thought of love and consecration to sustain us, let us hold out our cup of cold water, the inspiration of our purest effort, in blessing and example.

Who of us to-day, accepting as our natural right this precious gift of the knowledge of Christian Science, can half appreciate the spiritual intrepidity of our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, the animus of whose life work was "to impress humanity with the genuine recognition of practical, operative Christian Science" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 207), and who also, with a deep yearning over a starving world, held her face to the light, knowing herself to be divinely driven to give of the marvelous inspiration which had flooded her whole being? There must have been hours when the tremendous responsibility almost overwhelmed her; and yet by God's grace she stood and labored unceasingly until she had planted the seed of deliverance and watched it bear fruit. Then even if it should seem we can no longer stand, let us not surrender to the temptation to yield one iota from the position we hold as armor-bearers of the Most High, for very love of those who come after us and who have such sore need of our best work, doubting not that every brave effort, every undaunted stand for Principle, shall bear its weight in the redemption of a world,—that by our letting our light shine, more waiting hearts may glorify our Father which is in heaven. As it is expressed in one of our loved hymns in the Christian Science Hymnal (p. 120):—

By thy trustful, calm endeavor,
Guiding, cheering, like the sun,
Earth-bound hearts thou shalt deliver;
Oh, for their sake,—press thou on!

Reflection

MARION MAY DOUÈT

TO those with eyes to see, the experiences of everyday life are full of beautiful lessons. The following incident is related in the hope that it may be helpful to some one. A woman was once walking the floor of her room, thinking, and as she walked her eye fell on a beam of light lying across the carpet. She stood still to see whence it came, because it did not lie in the direction in which the sun's rays came through the window. At first she could not find the seeming source of the light and she continued to walk. Then it was seen that as her form came in front of a certain piece of furniture in the room the ray of light disappeared. It was a dark, mahogany chiffonier, a thing which very evidently had no light in itself, yet there it was, reflecting the sun's rays and apparently giving out light. The lesson was clear, and was at once applied to the relationship between God and man as explained in Christian Science. We have no light in ourselves, no power of ourselves,—no more than had that mahogany chiffonier,—but as we reflect the light of infinite Truth and Love, there seems to radiate from us light and joy to brighten the lives of others, who in turn will be led to see that all light comes from the one infinite source.

Jesus said, "I can of mine own self do nothing," but he also realized his infinite ability to reflect God when he said, "I and my Father are one." On page 259 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says:

Digitized by Google

"The divine nature was best expressed in Christ Jesus, who threw upon mortals the truer reflection of God and lifted their lives higher than their poor thought-models would allow,—thoughts which presented man as fallen, sick, sinning, and dying." Jesus was the Wayshower, and like him we must learn to recognize man's at-one-ment with the Father, and so throw "upon mortals the truer reflection of God."

The Pattern Seen in the Mount

ALBERT FIELD GILMORE, M.A.

FROM a block of dry hard wood the Swiss wood carver, with a patience prompted by his great love for the work, fashions a likeness that is almost perfect of some favorite hero or object,—perchance his well-beloved William Tell after the figure of a stalwart mountaineer, or it may be a graceful chamois, a noble St. Bernard dog, or a wreath of his national flower, the snow-grown edelweiss from the heights of his native mountains. Whatever the subject may be, in the beginning his sturdy strokes cut away large chips and the block rapidly assumes the shape of the model. As the work advances, however, and the finer details of structure are entered upon, progress becomes slower and slower, the strokes lighter and lighter, the tools more and more delicate, until perhaps hours are spent bringing out some feature so minute as to be scarcely perceptible to the casual observer, yet quite necessary if the likeness is adequately to represent the model. Now the results of this artist's labors and the degree of his success depend upon the selection of a proper model, his ability to produce a true likeness of that model, and the devotion and patience with which he applies himself to the task. The true artist sees mentally the exact image of his subject, and his work is to bring this out by removing from the block, piece by piece, bit by bit, all that hides it, until the perfect figure stands revealed.

Every human being is an artist engaged in reproducing a model of some sort, worthy or unworthy, high or low, good or bad, which he holds in consciousness; and, as in the case of the wood carver, his success depends upon both his selection of the right model and its reproduction with the utmost fidelity to detail. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 248), "We must form perfect models in thought and look at them continually, or we shall never carve them out in grand and noble lives."

The Christian Scientist selects as his model the pattern seen in the mount, the Christ-idea beheld by Moses and exemplified and demonstrated in its fullness in the teaching and deeds of the greatest of all artists, the master workman, the patient and lowly Nazarene. With this perfect model before him, the earnest worker sets about its revelation by removing from consciousness whatever misrepresents the Christ-image. If his labor be assiduous, and performed with patience and humility, the work goes forward rapidly, being manifested in purified thoughts and unselfishness, and expressed in good deeds and loving ministrations. The grosser material beliefs in the form of bad habits, appetites, and passions, are the first to fall away under the compelling strokes of Truth. Dishonesty, envy, hatred, malice, and all their evil train give way to temperance, honesty, affection, meekness, faith, and hope, as the perfection of the Christ-image is approached.

As progress is made, the necessity may arise for more loving attention to detail in order to uncover and remove the subtler phases of error which are prone to hide themselves, deep set in the dark recesses of mortal thought. It often requires the utmost humility and consecration, with constant turning to the perfect model, so that pride, selfishness, self-will, and self-love may be consigned to their proper place, the chip pile of useless material which marks the effort of a really good workman. "Precept upon precept; line upon line, . . . here a little, and there a little," is the order of progress in this regeneration of human consciousness, the laborer always sustained and inspired by Jesus' unprecedented and unparalleled success in expressing the Christ-image. The wage of this workman is not deferred "until the morning." Day by day is the reward received, not in the plaudits or approbation of the multitude; not in worldly honors and material gain, which spell but the lust of the flesh and the pride of life, but in the serenity, peace, and assurance which inevitably mark the upward journey toward the goal of right desire.

In this case the wage is exactly commensurate with the labor, never more, never less than just and adequate compensation; for with every false concept removed, a true idea, a phase of reality, is revealed. It is also individual: one cannot confiscate the spiritual treasure of his fellow worker, cannot profit by the wage of another, except from the emulation of a worthy example. Every one must develop his own model, must do his own work, reveal for himself the Christ-image, according to the pattern seen in the mount, "till we all come . . . unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Wisdom

SADIE KIEKINTVELD

IN the book of Proverbs we read, "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom." It is very evident that this wisdom which we are so urgently advised to seek after cannot be the wisdom of this world, which at best is mere prudence and caution dictated by selfish desire,—the "every man for himself" policy,—and which at its worst is "earthly, sensual, devilish."

The Old Testament sage exhorts us to buy wisdom, "and sell it not," while a New Testament writer tells us to ask it of God, who "giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." The mistake nearly all of us make is to ask of men and then receive more upbraiding than wisdom, or at most advice and human opinion, which, however well meant and however well suited to the giver, may not fit the receiver. Methods, like clothes, have to be suited to the individual. There are no two human experiences exactly alike, and what has been a good plan for one might mean misery and failure for another. Only divine Love can adjust each life to the perfect balance and proportion it should have.

The epistle of James gives a very thorough analysis of heavenly wisdom. To begin with, it is pure, and then peace-loving. This does not mean that it is wise to be a slacker. Those who have gained the securest foundation of purity are needed where this concept is most vigorously assailed, that their right thinking may protect their comrades and hold them up to a higher moral standard. The peace most to be desired is a peace of mind which may best be found by those who are willing to fight if necessary to protect the weak and oppressed and defend a high ideal. The desire for self-preservation which would make one shirk danger and sacrifice and let the burden fall on others, is the wisdom of this world. It is not, however, necessary to develop harsh and vengeful qualities, for the apostle goes on to tell us that wisdom is gentle, and it was prophesied of old that true greatness should come through gentleness. Though it seems necessary to use force when no other argument will be listened to, we know that in the end it will be found that, as our Leader has said in Science and Health (p. 225), "Love is the liberator."

Gentleness is always closely associated with humility, and humility is one of the component parts of true wisdom, for it looks to God as its source. Wisdom is not synonymous with knowledge or education, though these should be useful adjuncts and not the breeders of conceit. The phrase "easy to be intreated" is otherwise given as "open to conviction." This presents another view of the apostle's meaning. He certainly did not imply that it was wise to be wavering and halting in one's opinions, for he is the very person who so thoroughly condemns a vacillating and irresolute frame of mind. The whole passage indeed gives us the idea of the meek and teachable mentality which is ever ready to see new light and to guide its course in conformity therewith.

"Mercy and good fruits" are also a part of wisdom, something we all need to remember now that cruelty and hate are causing such havoc and the sufferings of the oppressed call out for the good deeds of mankind. The wisdom that comes from above is not cold and calculating; it is generous and spontaneous. There is no sordid bartering for gain, but a gladness in giving. Alice Cary in her beautiful little poem "Love's Wisdom," in speaking of Mary's gift of the precious ointment, says,—

> The wisest fears, that bar
> The soul from generous deeds, the yeas and nays
> Dictated by a selfish wisdom, are > Never so wise as love's unwisest ways.

The apostle reaches the climax when he tells us that heavenly wisdom is impartial and sincere. Nothing so distinctly separates it from its counterfeit, worldly wisdom, as these two qualities, for the latter is very largely a compound of partiality and hypocrisy. Are not the false ideals which now threaten the world under the guise of autocracy and diplomacy the outcome of partiality and hypocrisy? Is not the ideal underlying democracy that of the brotherhood of man, where there is "neither Jew nor Greek, . . . bond nor free, . . . male nor female"? Are not the struggles of the present day but efforts to demonstrate these fundamental spiritual ideals?

Amid the clamor of battle there is growing up a higher ideal of brotherhood, and even while evil rages and lifts its impotent voice the Christian warrior may hear the angel voices singing in his heart the glorious appearing of the Christ-ideal,—peace on earth; to men good will.

Daily Prayer

BURTON H. WADE

THE beginner in Christian Science, having been healed of some dread disease, or lifted out of the depths of despair through the application of the healing Word, usually finds himself inquiring as to the cause of his changed condition. He may have some difficulty in understanding at once that this has been brought about through prayer, since all his life, perhaps, he himself may have been praying for divine aid, but without avail, so far as present conditions are concerned. Would it not appear, then, that it is the misconception of mortals as to what God is that stands in the way or hinders the answer to prayer?

All Christendom believes that a supreme power—a first cause—governs the universe, and it quite agrees in calling this supreme power, or cause, God. There is therefore practical unanimity in the belief that God is, but when we come to inquire as to what God is, we find a wide difference of opinion. For ages there has prevailed in the minds of mortals a belief that God is a corporeal being, possessing a capacity for anger, revenge, and destruction, one who answers or ignores the petitions of mortals somewhat as a human father might grant or refuse the request of a child. Yet all the world believes in prayer of some kind, and also believes that some prayers are answered.

Daily prayer is daily food to the heart hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and such prayer has sustained man throughout all time, but petitions addressed to an unknown God are hardly conducive to the apprehension of a supreme confidence that prayer is heard or answered. Jesus taught his disciples how to pray, and he taught them one prayer. "But thou, when thou prayest," he said, "enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Mrs. Eddy says on page 14 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "The Lord's Prayer is the prayer of Soul, not of material sense."

Christian Science teaches that God is Soul, Spirit, Mind, divine Principle, and that man and the universe are spiritual; that anything unlike Spirit, Mind, was not made by God, and therefore is not in or of this spiritual universe of God's creating, but is a projection or phenomenon of the physical senses, which Mrs. Eddy has named mortal mind. Again she says (Science and Health, p. 484): "The physical universe expresses the conscious and unconscious thoughts of mortals. Physical force and mortal mind are one." It must be obvious, then, that if the so-called physical realm, or universe, is wholly outside and apart from the spiritual universe, the kingdom of God, it must be necessary to find some way or method of approaching God other than through the material senses which make up this physical realm. Mortal mind is the blending of that so-called physical force which apprehends only material conditions and things, and is what the apostle Paul designated the carnal mind, which, he said, "is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."

Jesus' prayer at the tomb of Lazarus, "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always," indicated a consciousness vibrant with the understanding of God's allness and of man's unity with Him, so that he could say with confidence, "Lazarus, come forth." This understanding constituted his sonship, the at-one-ment between Father and son, Principle and idea, and as the son of God he never doubted that he had dominion and power; he exercised that dominion and power to the glory of God, and never in the interest of, or through, material sense.

But some one says: "You do not expect mortals to reach that state of consciousness here on this plane, do you?" Why not? Jesus said, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." And Abram, though advancing years testified to old age, heard the voice of Truth saying, "I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect." So long as mortals listen to the material senses, with their false testimony of discord and decay, perfection will never be reached, nor will they be able to realize God as Spirit, and man and the universe as entirely spiritual. On page 49 of "Unity of Good" Mrs. Eddy has written, "Through the eternal reality of existence I reach, in thought, a glorified consciousness of the only living God and the genuine man." From this it would appear that true prayer can be realized only through a consciousness so purified by the spirit of Truth, the Christ, that it recognizes man, not as fallen, sick, and dying, as material sense beholds him, but as Christ Jesus beheld him, as the true idea of God, spiritual, perfect, and eternally coexistent with God.

In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy has written a whole chapter on prayer, which is the most lucid and inspiring statement on this subject that has ever been made. Yet the first reading of this chapter was a disappointment to the writer. He had hoped to find some formulated prayer, some mighty appeal that would enable him to approach "the throne of grace" and be received with more favor than his own petitions had yet obtained; instead, it seemed to take away the only God he had, which was a vague sense of a God like unto some great potentate enthroned with pomp and splendor in a far-off somewhere. But further diligent study of the Bible and our textbook completely dispelled this false material concept, and there appeared in its stead the Christian Science concept of God as divine Principle, Love.

Petitions directed to a corporeal savior, however fervently or eloquently uttered, can reach no higher than the material sense of the individual uttering them, and cannot change the purpose of an omnipotent God. Therefore, formulated prayer uttered with the expectation of gaining the attention of this divine Mind, God, in the hope of inducing Him to change His plans in our behalf, must be "vain repetitions." In the Manual of The Mother Church, is a section designated "Daily Prayer" (Art. VIII, Sect. 4), containing within its scope a comprehension of the kingdom of God, the possible elimination from human consciousness of all evil, and the establishment of the reign of Mind, the government of divine Love, here on earth. This is the only formulated prayer in all of Mrs. Eddy's voluminous writings, yet she admonished her students to follow Paul's counsel, "Pray without ceasing," to watch and work, and strive continually to obliterate self in realizing the omnipotence of divine Love.

Our Leader's whole life was a prayer, and its fragrance remains to bless all the world. No one individual has done so much for the uplift of the human race, since the writing of the gospels, as has Mrs. Eddy. Although the world is slow to acknowledge this greatness, yet there is a continually growing recognition of the wonderful adaptability of her teachings to the solving of human needs. The discovery of Christian Science brought with it a knowledge of the scientific relation of God and man, and the divine mission of the Christ. An apprehension of these makes prayer simple, Christianly scientific, and effective. Even the beginner in Christian Science can prove the efficacy of such prayer, for the declaration of the allness of God and of man's unity with Him, accompanied by the simple faith of a little child, brings its immediate proof.

Radiance

EDITH L. PERKINS

Now do the constant stars their vigil hold
O'er sleeping earth until the morning breaks;
So Love doth guard us till Life's laws unfold,
And from its dream the world to Truth awakes.

The sun's rays stream e'en into prison cell,
Imparting glory where was sullen gloom.
Thus hidden depths of thought doth Love illume,
And all that darkens human sense dispel.

["Dominion"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 8, 1917]

Five hundred years and more ago John Wycliffe wrote a famous tract which, in the polite language and after the fashion of the day, he named "De Dominio," which being translated means "Concerning Dominion." Now never since the great Lollard's words set Fourteenth Century England ablaze has there been such a necessity for a clear understanding of what dominion truly means as there is to-day. The passion of self-exaltation, the frenzy of temporal power which set kings and popes by the ears while the influence of the last of the schoolmen was dominating Oxford, is sweeping like a hurricane across the world to-day, for evil knows its hour to be short. And in this hour the influence which is again speaking to humanity, in the still, small voice of Truth, is that of a book written by a New England woman, whose ancestors came out of that old England, the England of Wycliffe and of Tyndale, of Latimer and Wesley, into the great breathing spaces of the west, where men might work out their own salvation untrammeled by interference, tradition, or convention.

Wycliffe's theory of dominion exalted the idea from a material to a spiritual function as spirituality was understood in his day. Popes and kings still regarded dominion as the right to do as they chose, as David did with Bath-sheba, the wife of Uriah the Hittite; as Ahab and Jezebel did with Naboth the Jezreelite; and as Pilate insisted he could do with Jesus of Nazareth, "Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?" To all this Wycliffe replied, in effect, that dominion was every man's, but inasmuch as man was fallen, his dominion was necessarily limited by the consequences of the fall, and his redemption therefore lay in a future life through the sacrifice of Christ Jesus. This theory of dominion or of salvation by grace would have swept away, of course, the entire foundations of a social order built on the theocracy of Rome and the feudalism of western Europe. But it was, in turn, vitiated by the limitations it imposed on itself by the enthronement, above even the material dominion of popes and kings, of the dominion of evil as manifested in the fall.

These views continued to arrest with varying degrees of success the attention of the world, until the day when Mrs. Eddy proclaimed to mankind once again the full significance of the teaching of Jesus the Christ, summing it up in those clarion sentences on page 170 of her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Spiritual causation is the one question to be considered, for more than all others spiritual causation relates to human progress. The age seems ready to approach this subject, to ponder somewhat the supremacy of Spirit, and at least to touch the hem of Truth's garment." It was in 1366 that Wycliffe wrote his "De Dominio;" exactly five centuries later, 1866, Mrs. Eddy discovered Christian Science. Eighteen years after the "De Dominio," Wycliffe gave to the English the first complete translation of the Bible into the English tongue, and in it there appears that renowned translation of the seventy-seventh verse of the first chapter of Luke's gospel: "To geue science and helthe to his puple: in to remyssioun of hir synnes." Almost five centuries later, in 1875, Mrs. Eddy published the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

The days in which Wycliffe's lot was cast were not unlike to-day. Anybody, of course, who reads history with insight will find the same tendency developing all through its recorded pages, from the twilight of civilization in Crete, twelve millenaries or more before the Christian era, down to the moment when the storm clouds of Armageddon were cast over the sky, eighteen centuries after the preaching of the Christ. That tendency is the struggle of the human race to free itself from something, it hardly knows what, but which it indefinitely describes as evil. In the course of this struggle there occur moments when Spirit, or Truth, agitates the waters of matter, and when some sudden gleam of what causation really is comes to mankind, or rather to that portion of mankind with eyes to see and ears to hear. Such a moment, for the English speaking race, came with the publication of Wycliffe's Bible, such another moment came, just five hundred years later, with the publication of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

In the time of Wycliffe, as in the time of Mrs. Eddy, a great restlessness was disturbing the world. A dissatisfaction with organized society was showing symptoms of a revolt against that society. Kings and popes were striving for temporal dominion with feverish anxiety, at the one pole; at the other, "peasants' revolts" and the preaching of a new social order was threatening feudal society, and rocking it on its foundations. The healing of all this Wycliffe strove to find, and in a measure did find, in his teaching of dominion, which gave hope to Jack the Miller and Jack the Carter equally with Edward the King and John the Duke. Elaborated by Luther, his doctrine of salvation through grace became, in due course, the doctrine of justification through faith. But the world could not be saved, could not be healed, by faith alone, not at least as faith is popularly defined. Faith without works, as James insists, is dead, and faith shown through the works, demanded by the Founder of the Christian religion, is demonstrated Science. This teaching was the New Learning of the Nineteenth Century given to humanity by Mrs. Eddy. The Renaissance, the New Learning of the Fifteenth Century, had found expression in an awakening mentality, in the rediscovery of Greek, and in the publication of the Greek text of the New Testament. The Renaissance of the Nineteenth Century found expression in the interpretation of these texts, in the rediscovery of their Science, and so in the explanation of the spiritual significance of dominion.

The indifference of the Christian martyrs to physical suffering has always excited the wonder of the historian and his readers. Their dominion over the terrors of the Roman circus, the hellish tortures of the Inquisition, and the fires of Nero's gardens or the auto-da-fé, have lacked intelligible explanation until it came with scientific completeness in Christian Science. Then the world began to see what the dominion of Mind over matter really meant—not the mere influence of the human mind or will over the body, but the dominion of divine Mind, through a scientific appreciation of the nothingness or unreality of matter. The mental exaltation of the martyr, acting on the fact, scientifically unknown to him, of the unreality of matter, made him mentally temporarily impervious to pain, which in any case is experienced by the human mind and not by the body. But a higher and scientific understanding of the omnipotence of the divine Mind and the unreality of matter would have revealed to the world, as it revealed to Peter and to John, how Jesus healed the sick, walked on the water, fed the multitude, and raised the dead. It would have shown it, in short, that the miracles were not interruptions or violations of law, supernaturally brought about, but divinely natural demonstrations of divine law.

This, then, is the scientific dominion which Jesus taught and demonstrated. A dominion as available to feed a famine stricken world to-day as the people by the Galilean lake. A dominion as potent to heal the wounded man at the front as it was to restore the ear of the high priest's servant. And all, obviously, that is necessary to establish it is a knowledge, as Jesus himself declared again and again, of the truth. Such a knowledge will free whosoever acquires it from the ignorance of Principle, which ignorance is holding mankind in bondage; it will enable its possessor to speak with the authority of knowledge instead of the hesitation of ignorance, and to do the works that Jesus did, instead of struggling with hands fettered with ignorance.

[Peter V. Ross in Mercury Herald, San Jose, Cal.]

To suppose that Christian Science is "indifferent to everything," or to anything of consequence, for that matter, is a great mistake. Christian Scientists are not indifferent to the good, the beautiful, or the inspiring; rather they accept Paul's counsel and "think on these things." As such ideals are dwelt upon in thought and followed in action, they are gradually discerned to be the real and permanent things of life, while their opposites are seen to be the mistaken human concepts of reality.

Nor are Christian Scientists indifferent to the evil and suffering which seem to occupy so large a place in human experience. On the contrary, they are grappling with these disturbing forces and overthrowing them, so that in countless instances sickness has been displaced by health, sin and wrongdoing by righteousness, and sorrow by happiness and joy. "The Christian Scientist," as Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 450), "has enlisted to lessen evil, disease, and death; and he will overcome them by understanding their nothingness and the allness of God, or good."

The stand taken by their daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor, is a sufficient refutation of the notion that Christian Scientists are indifferent to the practical affairs of life or the public problems pressing so constantly and insistently for solution. The Monitor, as every one knows, is descending into the arena of human events and championing that cause or side of current questions which seems the nearest right. It is not, nor are Christian Scientists, practicing any policy of aloofness or isolation or indifference when action is demanded.

To suppose that the Buddhistic doctrine of "annihilation or absorption" has any place in the teachings of Christian Science is another grave mistake. Christian Science makes it clear that man's individual being persists throughout all eternity, never to be absorbed in Deity, nor yet to be disintegrated and lost among the shifting sands of time. The inclination, so often in evidence, to identify Christian Science with some other religion than that taught by the Bible would meet with more satisfactory results if reversed and directed toward discerning the identity of Christian Science with primitive Christianity, in which healing the sick and preaching the gospel went hand in hand. Then it would be discovered that other religious systems resemble Christian Science only as they resemble original Christianity.

[S. T. Downs in Elkhart (Ind.) Truth]

In an interesting paper entitled "The Relation of Faith and Prayer to Health and Healing," read before the Elkhart Ministerial Association, and printed in your paper at their request, a clergyman said much about faith cure and about cures that have been effected through mere faith in prayer, or mere faith in a drug, or mere faith in a religious ceremony. He attempted to characterize Christian Science healing as such faith cure, just as opponents of Christian Science have done ever since Mrs. Eddy discovered it. The fact is, however, that Mrs. Eddy set forth in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," a clear distinction between spiritual healing and faith cure, and one who makes a reasonable effort to understand this teaching will readily recognize this difference.

Christian Science healing is accomplished through an understanding of, not merely a blind belief in, God, divine Mind, and His laws. Mrs. Eddy makes this very helpful comparison of blind faith and spiritual understanding (Science and Health, p. 23): "Faith, if it be mere belief, is as a pendulum swinging between nothing and something, having no fixity. Faith, advanced to spiritual understanding, is the evidence gained from Spirit, which rebukes sin of every kind and establishes the claims of God." When faith becomes spiritual understanding, and through this understanding the allness of God is scientifically demonstrated, healing is accomplished exactly as Jesus performed his works. The great Master showed the necessity for understanding in the much quoted, but ever helpful, statement, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

It is quite common for Christian Scientists to speak gratefully of physical healing, but this is usually accompanied by expressions of still greater gratitude for the spiritual regeneration that Christian Science brings. The Christian Scientist, when his faith advances to understanding, knows that physical healing is often but the first evidence of the healing of fear, hate, envy, or the like. As has been often stated, it would be utterly impossible to make a man better physically in Christian Science without making him better spiritually; and it is likewise true that it would be just as impossible to make him better spiritually without making him better physically.

Christian Scientists agree with our brother that the mere healing of disease would not in itself be sufficient reason for accepting the teachings of a religious denomination. But when the healing of all manner of diseases is a sign following the preaching of the gospel, and is accompanied by spiritual and moral regeneration, then the healing of physical disease is a sign of true preaching. On this basis Christian Science establishes its authority beyond question, because it has not only healed all of the diseases to which flesh is heir—functional, structural, and organic—but is making genuine Christians, real followers of the Master in word and deed, and is giving to humanity a spiritual understanding of the Scriptures that is one of the greatest forces for righteousness in the world to-day.

[George R. Lowe in The Christian Guardian, Toronto, Ontario]

In trying to hold Christian Science up to ridicule, are you not emulating the example of those who sought thus to stamp out early Methodism? Christ Jesus, at the bedside of one whom her parents thought dead, said, "She is not dead, but sleepeth." Surely this is good authority for denying the evidence of the senses bearing witness to death. The seeming death was not real, not an eternal, spiritual fact, as Jesus proved. As an apostle has written, Jesus "abolished death." In the case of Jairus' daughter the spectators did not appreciate Jesus' utterance, but "they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead." Their sense of humor was discounted in the sublime, life-giving, spiritual sense entertained and manifested by Christ Jesus.

Funds of The Mother Church

Halifax Relief

"Inclosed please find one New York draft for seventy-five dollars to be applied to the Halifax Relief fund, the War Relief fund, and the Real Estate fund. This is a message of gratitude from the little band of Christian Scientists in Havana, Cuba."

War Relief

"We are told by our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, in Miscellany (p. 260), 'The basis of Christmas is love loving its enemies, returning good for evil, love that "suffereth long, and is kind." '

"We, as a small gathering of Christian Scientists, felt this love and are sending as an expression of our love a check for thirty-three dollars to the War Relief fund. We rejoice that the Christian Science War Relief committee has made it possible for us to express our gratitude."

"We wish to express our gratitude for Christian Science and love for all God's children by this contribution of £1-0-6½d. for the War Relief fund. It is a special collection taken Sunday, October 28, and for which the children have thought and worked with 'loving hearts and deft fingers' (Pulpit and Press, p. 8)."

"Deeply moved by so much benevolence I consider it my duty to thank you for your kindness; please also convey to the esteemed committee of which you are a member the expression of my deepest gratitude for the valuable help accorded me by the gracious gift."

Real Estate

"Members of this Christian Science Society are very grateful that they are able to contribute to the activities of The Mother Church. The amount of the inclosed check ($17.20) was taken at a special collection for the Real Estate fund."

The Christian Science Benevolent Association

"The members of this First Church of Christ, Scientist, in annual meeting assembled, desire to express our gratitude and loyalty by a deeper consecration to the cause of Christian Science, and deem it a privilege to pledge one thousand dollars or more to be paid toward the securing of additional real estate and the establishment of The Christian Science Benevolent Association."

"It is with the greatest joy and gratitude that I am sending the second amount toward the sum which I desire to contribute to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. Inclosed please find check for fifty dollars."

"Will you kindly credit amount of inclosed check (four dollars) to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. I am working on a ranch and seldom have money, but Christmas brings me small remembrances from my children and grandchildren. Christian Science has been the strength of my working hours and the comfort of daily life since 1886."

"At the recent meeting of an association of students of Christian Science, it was voted to send twenty-five dollars to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. In accordance with that resolution it gives me pleasure to inclose a check for that amount."

On the contrary, they are grappling with these disturbing forces and overthrowing them, so that in countless instances sickness has been displaced by health, sin and wrongdoing by righteousness, and sorrow by happiness and joy. "The Christian Scientist," as Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 450), "has enlisted to lessen evil, disease, and death; and he will overcome them by understanding their nothingness and the allness of God, or good."

The stand taken by their daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor, is a sufficient refutation of the notion that Christian Scientists are indifferent to the practical affairs of life or the public problems pressing so constantly and insistently for solution. The Monitor, as every one knows, is descending into the arena of human events and championing that cause or side of current questions which seems the nearest right. It is not, nor are Christian Scientists, practicing any policy of aloofness or isolation or indifference when action is demanded.

To suppose that the Buddhistic doctrine of "annihilation or absorption" has any place in the teachings of Christian Science is another grave mistake. Christian Science makes it clear that man's individual being persists throughout all eternity, never to be absorbed in Deity, nor yet to be disintegrated and lost among the shifting sands of time. The inclination, so often in evidence, to identify Christian Science with some other religion than that taught by the Bible would meet with more satisfactory results if reversed and directed toward discerning the identity of Christian Science with primitive Christianity, in which healing the sick and preaching the gospel went hand in hand. Then it would be discovered that other religious systems resemble Christian Science only as they resemble original Christianity.

In an interesting paper entitled "The Relation of Faith and Prayer to Health and Healing," read before the Elkhart Ministerial Association, and printed in your paper at their request, a clergyman said much about faith cure and about cures that have been effected through mere faith in prayer, or mere faith in a drug, or mere faith in a religious ceremony. He attempted to characterize Christian Science healing as such faith cure, just as opponents of Christian Science have done ever since Mrs. Eddy discovered it. The fact is, however, that Mrs. Eddy set forth in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," a clear distinction between spiritual healing and faith cure, and one who makes a reasonable effort to understand this teaching will readily recognize this difference.

Christian Science healing is accomplished through an understanding of, not merely a blind belief in, God, divine Mind, and His laws. Mrs. Eddy makes this very helpful comparison of blind faith and spiritual understanding (Science and Health, p. 23): "Faith, if it be mere belief, is as a pendulum swinging between nothing and something, having no fixity. Faith, advanced to spiritual understanding, is the evidence gained from Spirit, which rebukes sin of every kind and establishes the claims of God." When faith becomes spiritual understanding, and through this understanding the allness of God is scientifically demonstrated, healing is accomplished exactly as Jesus performed his works. The great Master showed the necessity for understanding in the much quoted, but ever helpful, statement, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

It is quite common for Christian Scientists to speak gratefully of physical healing, but this is usually accompanied by expressions of still greater gratitude for the spiritual regeneration that Christian Science brings. The Christian Scientist, when his faith advances to understanding, knows that physical healing is often but the first evidence of the healing of fear, hate, envy, or the like. As has been often stated, it would be utterly impossible to make a man better physically in Christian Science without making him better spiritually; and it is likewise true that it would be just as impossible to make him better spiritually without making him better physically.

Christian Scientists agree with our brother that the mere healing of disease would not in itself be sufficient reason for accepting the teachings of a religious denomination. But when the healing of all manner of diseases is a sign following the preaching of the gospel, and is accompanied by spiritual and moral regeneration, then the healing of physical disease is a sign of true preaching. On this basis Christian Science establishes its authority beyond question, because it has not only healed all of the diseases to which flesh is heir—functional, structural, and organic—but is making genuine Christians, real followers of the Master in word and deed, and is giving to humanity a spiritual understanding of the Scriptures that is one of the greatest forces for righteousness in the world to-day.

[George R. Lowe in The Christian Guardian, Toronto, Ontario]

In trying to hold Christian Science up to ridicule, are you not emulating the example of those who sought thus to stamp out early Methodism? Christ Jesus, at the bedside of one whom her parents thought dead, said, "She is not dead, but sleepeth." Surely this is good authority for denying the evidence of the senses bearing witness to death. The seeming death was not real, not an eternal, spiritual fact, as Jesus proved. As an apostle has written, Jesus "abolished death." In the case of Jairus' daughter the spectators did not appreciate Jesus' utterance, but "they laughed him to scorn, knowing that she was dead." Their sense of humor was discounted in the sublime, life-giving, spiritual sense entertained and manifested by Christ Jesus.

Funds of The Mother Church

Halifax Relief

"Inclosed please find one New York draft for seventy-five dollars to be applied to the Halifax Relief fund, the War Relief fund, and the Real Estate fund. This is a message of gratitude from the little band of Christian Scientists in Havana, Cuba."

War Relief

"We are told by our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, in Miscellany (p. 260), 'The basis of Christmas is love loving its enemies, returning good for evil, love that "suffereth long, and is kind." '

"We, as a small gathering of Christian Scientists, felt this love and are sending as an expression of our love a check for thirty-three dollars to the War Relief fund. We rejoice that the Christian Science War Relief committee has made it possible for us to express our gratitude."

"We wish to express our gratitude for Christian Science and love for all God's children by this contribution of £1-0-6½d. for the War Relief fund. It is a special collection taken Sunday, October 28, and for which the children have thought and worked with 'loving hearts and deft fingers' (Pulpit and Press, p. 8)."

"Deeply moved by so much benevolence I consider it my duty to thank you for your kindness; please also convey to the esteemed committee of which you are a member the expression of my deepest gratitude for the valuable help accorded me by the gracious gift."

Real Estate

"Members of this Christian Science Society are very grateful that they are able to contribute to the activities of The Mother Church. The amount of the inclosed check ($17.20) was taken at a special collection for the Real Estate fund."

The Christian Science Benevolent Association

"The members of this First Church of Christ, Scientist, in annual meeting assembled, desire to express our gratitude and loyalty by a deeper consecration to the cause of Christian Science, and deem it a privilege to pledge one thousand dollars or more to be paid toward the securing of additional real estate and the establishment of The Christian Science Benevolent Association."

"It is with the greatest joy and gratitude that I am sending the second amount toward the sum which I desire to contribute to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. Inclosed please find check for fifty dollars."

"Will you kindly credit amount of inclosed check (four dollars) to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. I am working on a ranch and seldom have money, but Christmas brings me small remembrances from my children and grandchildren. Christian Science has been the strength of my working hours and the comfort of daily life since 1886."

"At the recent meeting of an association of students of Christian Science, it was voted to send twenty-five dollars to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. In accordance with that resolution it gives me pleasure to inclose a check for that amount."

Working in the Church

THERE was an educator who discovered a beautiful ideal for the instruction and development of young children, and he phrased a motto for parents in the words: "Come, let us with our children live." It was not very long before this motto appeared with a word changed. Parents had it, Let us for our children live. So the children, instead of finding the joy of fellowship with their parents, found these parents becoming persons serious and sad and far off from their lives, ever devising plans and arrangements for making their children walk the narrow path hedged on either side with thorn bushes of the "must not" variety, or for incarcerating them in a prison house built up on all sides with "don'ts." Working for her child, a poverty-stricken mother will dress the unhappy being in absurd finery, and get into a rage of vexation if in any action native to a child it disarranges or defiles this costly expression of her pride. Then where there is wealth, and fine raiment is usual, the child is programmed for and spends the day with teachers of language and music and deportment, because the seldom seen parents are planning for her welfare. Manifestly a democratic ideal for home is where parents and children dwell together, every one learning from the others, the parents finding a joyous relationship with the children, the children adding their gladness to brighten the home.

If the Christian Scientist gains a metaphysical view of church he will be content to work in the church. Then his happiness will grow and his usefulness will keep pace with his happiness, which is indeed his "joy in the Lord." But if one is misled into any sense of self-importance and tries to work for the church, immediately then he engages in planning and materialistic outlining. Anyone who dreams out programs for other free people, and tries to force them into set ways which they are not ready to choose for themselves, invites conflict. What is autocracy but mortal mind laying down its law, and in seeking its own advantage making a narrow program for men and nations with the claim to benefit them? And democracy—what is that but the struggle of the child to be free to engage in activities natural to happy childhood, or the endeavor of the man to develop his own nature and talents with joy, or the struggle of the nation to build up its own characteristic institutions and government?

Here is where Christian Science is at this hour invaluable because it can offer the thing most needed, namely, example. There are churches in the movement, branches of that living vine, The Mother Church, which have been already pruned for fruit-bearing, that is, purged of vainglory and self-will and personal leadership, so that their work goes on by demonstration and in that way illustrates Principle. In these churches rotation in office is understood and the increment of good realized which follows obedience to this ideal. Our Leader sets this forth graphically when she says (Miscellany, p. 250): "Rotation in office promotes wisdom, quiets mad ambition, satisfies justice, and crowns honest endeavors." As the years go by, increasing numbers of those who have learned how to work by working in various offices continue to do their metaphysical work in the church as exemplars of harmony and examples of obedience to Principle.

Let us ask, What is the great need in a democracy? or, to put the question another way, How shall a democracy be established at all? In no way can it be established unless you have some men to begin with who understand how to be themselves governed by a right ideal so as to be able to illustrate to others the advantages of such mental government. Now the true Christian Scientist is one genially governed by Principle, rejoicing in the fact that God is good and reflecting the characteristic of divine Principle, which is Love. He is the true exemplar in the world of self-government, even as our textbook makes evident when it says (Science and Health, p. 106): "Man is properly self-governed only when he is guided rightly and governed by his Maker, divine Truth and Love."

When a number of Christian Scientists are grouped in church work they are not so much plan makers laying down the law as discoverers seeking to find the way of obedience to divine law. When they find this through enlightenment they enter upon that true phase of usefulness described by Jesus when he said: "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid."

In the business meetings of such a church one gets lessons in manners as well as in methods, for the members are courteous and deferential to one another as well as able to render a reason. If the way be not clear, solutions of the difficulty are presented with impersonal clarity and supported by attestation rather than controversy. If objection must be made, it is made by the mode of analysis and not by the mode of contempt for the opinion of others. No plan is adopted until unanimity of intention that it shall be adopted has been gained; consequently members are neither coerced nor do they try to coerce. Perhaps it is because they let Mind have dominion over them that they feel no temptation to domineer over others, but learn to wait and be patient for the full working out of Mind's enlightenment in regard to their business. The happiness always accompanying fruit-bearing activity is prevalent in such a church, and there is a way found for making every member feel the joy of genuine usefulness. Thus like "a root out of a dry ground" appears here and there this model of democracy, just the blade perhaps of that which in due time will be the full grain in the ear throughout the world—that is, universal government expressed in and by men who are themselves governed by Mind. But so far as these fruit-bearing branch churches are concerned, the members therein understand Mrs. Eddy's vision when she said in the Manual (Article VIII, Sect. 15): "God requires our whole heart, and He supplies within the wide channels of The Mother Church dutiful and sufficient occupation for all its members."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

Consecration and Protection

THE student of Christian Science does not need to be told that divine protection is the most wonderful fact upon which we can lay hold in our study of the Scriptures. All Christian people would of course admit this, but so far as we can judge from what is daily heard around us they do not apply it in the practical way which Christian Scientists do. We however need to remember that consecration on our part is what relates us most truly to the divine protection. Almost instinctively the Christian Scientist turns to the promises found in the Bible when danger of any kind seems to threaten either himself or those dear to him, and the declarations of spiritual law found throughout the Scriptures and made luminous by Mrs. Eddy's teachings become his defensive and offensive weapons, whatever be the occasion for their use.

In the Old Testament the ninety-first psalm stands out with great distinctness; and as we read it, we almost wonder at the marvelous understanding of spiritual law disclosed in all its statements. At the present hour, when thought turns lovingly to the men who are so whole-heartedly giving themselves to the high task of establishing justice and mercy in the earth, we find in almost every verse of this psalm a promise of protection which specially applies to these men. First of all, there is the "secret place of the most High," which no invader can ever enter, the refuge and the fortress of those who put their trust in God, not as an expression of merely formal religion, but because of their deep conviction that God is the source of all right, of all justice, and that He unceasingly defends those who are allied with divine Principle in the high and holy effort to establish right with all it implies the world over. The weapons of the enemy are mentioned, the "terror by night" and the destruction at noonday, but there is nothing uncertain about the promise which immediately follows. It is this: "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee." Here we must not forget that a fine discrimination follows this statement of protection, which implies consecration on the part of him who would be safe in time of danger, and it assures us that no evil shall befall the one who has made God his refuge.

We are not told that those who are fearlessly serving God and humanity are to be spared the most trying experiences which can come to mankind. In this psalm their enemies are typified by the lion, the adder, and the dragon, but these are declared to be powerless because God's angels are with His own continually to prove the ever presence and omnipotence of good. Here we may recall the definition of angels given on page 581 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," namely, "God's thoughts passing to man; spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect; the inspiration of goodness, purity, and immortality, counteracting all evil, sensuality, and mortality." Divine Love promises to be with man in trouble, and to deliver him; and we cannot cling too closely to the closing words of the psalm, "With long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation."

A man who was in service throughout the American civil war was told when he entered the army that it would help him greatly to study the ninety-first psalm and look to its promises for protection. He did so, with the result that in spite of many hardships and continuous service, he was never wounded or even ill, and he came to rely implicitly upon these divine promises and to consecrate his life because of their influence upon him. Years after, he told a Christian Science friend of this experience, and said with deep regret that he had drifted away from this study of the Bible when the war was over and there seemed less need of special protection; but in hearing a little about Christian Science he felt the deepest sorrow that he had ever forgotten how God stretches out His hand toward His children, wherever they are, if only they are ready to respond to its loving grasp.

In reading the eleventh chapter of II Corinthians we find in Paul's experience, as therein recorded, that which cannot fail to awaken the heroic spirit in ourselves, and make us ashamed if ever we are tempted to listen to the whisperings of cowardice. We read that again and again he was cruelly beaten, and twice he suffered shipwreck. He was in perils of every sort, "in weariness and painfulness," enduring hunger and thirst, cold and nakedness, but he was consecrated to the high task of doing his part toward the establishment of God's kingdom on earth; and instead of lamenting over these experiences, he tells us that he gloried in them. It is self-evident that his consecration was to him an assurance of man's immortality, and a ceaseless reminder that God never forgets His own. We cannot for a moment think that the cause of right, the cause of justice, could possibly fail to-day, for this would mean disloyalty to infinite Truth and Love. In her Message to The Mother Church for 1900 (p. 10) our Leader says, in speaking of the world conflict between right and wrong, "Such conflict never ends till unconquerable right is begun anew, and hath gained fresh energy and final victory."

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

Real Ability

CAPACITY is enlarged, talent developed, and capability increased by drawing upon God as the source of supply. The scientific Christian when he is given a task knows that God will give him the power to do it, and to do it well. His receptive powers are wide open, for he understands that the one Mind is limitless and instantly available. He mellows himself through spiritual love and by talking with God. He digs deep the channels of good thoughts with the power of Truth. He looks away from matter into the spiritual universe where all ability bears good fruit. There are many qualities in the human mind which imitate the divine, but spiritual qualities alone have a perpetual unfoldment and give man the ability to further the kingdom of God on earth.

The supposed origin of life in matter, with its arguments and supposed laws, has confused mortal man and turned him from the realization of real living, from real progress and real reward. Mortal man, believing in this supposititious origin, has allowed real resources to remain undeveloped, and has striven in vain with material means against sickness and sin. The only spontaneity of mortal generation has shown itself in a readiness to suffer. But the awakened one turns to God, and seeing the despicable workings of the human mind, seeks the divine Mind. Thus the abasement of humanity is forestalled and its degradation prevented, while man is lifted by the power of God. The active exercise of spiritual thinking gives ability, bursts limitations, destroys hate, and rejuvenates the matured thought. The bane of the so-called matured is a tendency to settle down into habits, to stifle spontaneity, and to sit in judgment upon those who are climbing the scale of human experience with youthful enthusiasm.

In the healing work of Christian Science the spiritual ability which destroys physical as well as mental and moral ills is made manifest. Current misconceptions about the nature of God as divine Mind tend to create an inability to heal. Mrs. Eddy states on page 182 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Mortals entreat the divine Mind to heal the sick, and forthwith shut out the aid of Mind by using material means, thus working against themselves and their prayers and denying man's God-given ability to demonstrate Mind's sacred power." Whoever believes in the reality of sin and sickness is debarred from overcoming them. The supposition that God made evil and sends death places the preacher and physician who seek to nullify evil in opposition to God. If sin is a reality it is wrong to attempt to wipe out the penalty for sin, but if sin is essentially unreal and can be proven to be so in human experience, then the penalty can be made unreal also. This brings the gospel to the law, the divine to the human, and carries forward the processes by which we reach salvation. Equally valid is the same reasoning when applied to sickness. By no possibility can the human mind admit the destruction of an actual fact, of reality. In order to be amenable to the healing power, disease must be outside the realm of the real.

Equally important is it for the practitioner to establish his ability to heal upon the basis of unselfishness. To be self-important, self-satisfied, or self-condemnatory means to be self-conscious, and in the healing of the sick and sinning through Christian Science an unselfed mental condition is absolutely necessary. Self-pity is another obnoxious characteristic which tries to invade the sacred sanctuary of the spiritually minded. When the chasm between the human and the divine opens its black depth, the advancing Christian is tempted to halt in dismay or to essay a dangerous leap. Spiritual understanding will guide human footsteps aright and enable the traveler to reach the further side in safety.

Christian Science is the resplendent light which can be used for the healing of all inharmonies in the world. It lifts everything out of matter into the spiritual world and leaves the nothingness of mortal mind beliefs behind; in other words, the light dispels the cloudy mist of false teachings and doctrines. It breaks the hypnotic spell of inherited fears and prenatal mesmerism. Christian Science gives the children the ability to clap their hands over the glad tidings that they do not have to suffer and be sick. It gives them real ability to play without fear and enables their parents to leave them in God's care to bud and blossom as the rose. Envy, destructive criticism, and selfishness cannot mar nor blight the blessed budding of the Christ-idea, the child of Truth and Love. The courage and strength given to children through Christian Science for their school work and the intelligence expressed in their joyful efforts make a more harmonious schoolroom atmosphere and bring to bear a sweet influence upon schoolmates who have not the blessed privilege of Christian Science training. Thus spiritual ability can be made to characterize humanity from the earliest years and to abide, through good and evil report, to the full establishment of the kingdom of God within.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

Current Notes

HOLLAND.—The attitude of the press is constantly becoming more friendly, and on different occasions the editors of several papers have shown themselves ready to help in the most effectual way to correct misrepresentations of Christian Science. In the course of ten months corrections and articles have been sent to seventeen papers; moreover, the completion of the memorial of our beloved Leader was announced to fourteen of the principal newspapers of Holland. These articles have nearly all been accepted by the press. Translations of articles from the Christian Science periodicals were regularly sent to and published in Eenheid, a weekly paper.

This year the Government appointed two committees, the one "to decide as to the text of the necessary legal provisions, should the authority to practice medicine be no longer confined to qualified medical doctors," and the other "to investigate the efficiency of the methods of healing applied by nonauthorized practitioners, and the results thereby obtained." To all the members of these committees a copy of "Christian Science: Its Legal Status," by Judge Clifford P. Smith, was presented. Four thousand copies of the new Dutch pamphlets have been sent us for distribution among our army and navy, and the distribution committee is actively engaged in proper distribution thereof.

The distribution committee of First Church of Christ, Scientist, The Hague, aided by the Christian Scientists at Arnhem, Utrecht, and Leiden, and the committee on publication distributed from January 1 to October 31, 1917, 812 Sentinels, 308 Journals, 135 Herolds, 1639 Monitors, 1501 pamphlets, 636 copies of Eenheid, 120 newspapers containing articles by the committee on publication, 17 copies of "Christian Science: Its Legal Status," and five copies of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

For the War Relief fund in Holland we received from January 1 to October 31, 1917, from the Treasurer of The Mother Church, including balance on hand and interest, 23,062.56 florins. During the period covered, eighty-eight donations have been made from this fund, making a total of 12,948.85 florins. This fund has proved a blessing to many. By its help people who had been cut off from a means of livelihood by the war have been helped to make a living; others, who had subsisted on a very small annuity have been saved from penury and sometimes starvation, now that prices are so abnormally high. To some young men and women the means have been furnished to complete studies, the cost of which neither they nor their parents were any longer able to meet, and to a great many people the help afforded by the War Relief fund has been the means of overcoming despair. Their heartfelt expressions of gratitude to God are a telling instance of the blessed work the War Relief fund has proved to these sufferers from the war in our country.

Committee on Publication.

ANDERSON, IND.—During the past year a committee appointed by First Church of Christ, Scientist, to adopt plans for paying off the church debt by January 1 succeeded in its undertaking, and on communion Sunday, January 13, a short dedicatory service was held preceding the Lesson-Sermon.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to Nov. 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

BOSTON, MASS. (The Mother Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said:—

This gathering illustrates in many ways the deep interest in spiritual Truth which is being awakened by Christian Science. Before its advent Spirit and its derivative words were devoid of practical value. Virtually no Christians were aware of the fact that spiritual Truth could do anything more for a human being than give him a hope in a heaven after death. With Mrs. Eddy's discovery, followed by her demonstration and that of many of her followers, of the power of spiritual Truth to overcome disease as well as sin, the mere theories of religion and medicine have been shaken, not only to their foundations, but in their foundations. Christians are recognizing that it is not a theory of Christianity, but an actual demonstration of its power over fear and disease, as well as over sin, which brings satisfaction to an afflicted and tempest-tossed race.

Christian Science has proved in thousands of instances that the promises of the gospel are not contingent upon time, but wholly upon understanding, and it is because of this that many of you are here to-night, seeking to know something more of Christian Science. Jesus gave to the world and illustrated throughout his career a practical gospel, which to-day, through Christian Science, is awakening Christian faith in the omnipotence of good and is illustrating that omnipotence in the healing of disease and the redemption of sinners.—The Christian Science Monitor.

JOPLIN, MO. (First Church).—Clarence W. Chadwick, lecturer; introduced by William Lewis Wall, Jr., who said in part:—

I believe it will be generally conceded that in every human heart there is a desire to be better and to do better, and especially is there a desire to know more of God and to know better how to worship and to serve Him. This is what Christian Science is endeavoring to teach mankind, and I rejoice in saying that it is offering no mere theory in this respect, but a rule that has been proven to be absolutely true and available in every human experience, a rule that has delivered thousands of people from the burden of disease, from immoral habits, and indeed from discordant conditions of every name and nature.—Joplin Globe.

BAKER, ORE. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Raymond Ballard, who said in part:—

We all possess a knowledge of the science of numbers in a greater or lesser degree. We all apply that knowledge every day in working out any problem that may have to do with numbers. When the average man is told that there is a Science of Christianity, of which he may gain a demonstrable knowledge, and that he may apply this knowledge in healing suffering humanity of its ills, sorrows, and discords, he is apt to accept the statement with doubt, if not ridicule. There is, however, such knowledge to be obtained through Christian Science, and hundreds of thousands of grateful and happy people, the world over, bear witness to this fact.

KINGSTON-ON-THAMES, ENGLAND (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Capt. F. W. Fergusson, who said in part:—

Christian Science is not a new cult, as is sometimes supposed. The law it unfolds has always existed. Numerous instances of the operation of this law occur in the Old Testament, such as the cure of Naaman the leper; the causing of an iron axehead to swim; the protection of the Hebrew students in the fiery furnace; and the raising of the dead by Elisha. The New Testament is little else than a record of the demonstration of this law,—first and foremost by Jesus of Nazareth, afterward by his apostles, later by St. Paul and others. The Master's promise, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," would show that this law was not confined to people of his era. There are many thousands of people, including myself, who can testify from personal experience that this law is as much in operation to-day as it ever was, and that Christian Science has not come to destroy but to fulfill.

Testimonies of Healing

I give the following testimony in the hope that it will help some one as others have helped me. Up to a few years ago Christian Science seemed to me a delusion. I had never attached myself to any church, feeling that the churches did not offer that for which I was looking, and I went about still hoping and searching for that something which I could not have named. My conception of a divine Father was different from that of most people, who believed that God was manlike and changeable. A very close and dear artist friend brought me the first "good tidings of great joy" while I was living in my home town. I spoke of the peculiarities of some Christian Scientists I had known, and he explained the true teaching as given to the world by Mrs. Eddy. Then I agreed to look into it and not condemn it without further knowledge of it. This was the beginning of some seemingly wonderful demonstrations. Hardly had I started my reading and study when I found myself cured of chronic bowel trouble which had required constant doctoring in the past. Many minor ailments disappeared into their native nothingness as I studied and read and discussed points with other friends, who were all patient and kind. My big fault was that I wanted to grasp the teaching all at once and rebelled at my slow progress, but I clung to the truth as I was finding it.

Later on, after having smoked to excess for twenty years, I decided that I was not reflecting purity or good with a cigar in my mouth. I tried to overcome this through my own understanding of the truth, but not seeming able to do so I wrote to a practitioner in Indiana, who lovingly and patiently began treatment. As I continued to consume tobacco in great quantities I wrote to this lady that I felt we were making no progress; that I wanted to be healed without any effort of will power. Right here was the error which was binding me, as she discovered on reading my letter, and while she was writing me that I was free and did not need further help I was burning my cigarettes and cigars. I have since had no desire to smoke. The returns from the healing are great, and show in added weight, better health, steadier nerves. I find in my work, that of artist and designer, that ideas come more easily, and I am not only doing a higher class of work than before, but doing it more easily and more rapidly. I realize that it is God, divine Love, working through me to do His good will, and I glory in the freedom and power that are mine.

My dear wife is also studying Christian Science, and in cases of extremity I call on her for help and receive it quickly. Our home is all that we can ask for, harmonious and loving, and we feel that divine Love reigns there. For more than two years neither of us has taken any medicine, and we rely entirely on divine Mind for guidance and protection. For more than a year I have held a position which it was freely predicted I would not keep for six months. Discord has been met and conquered in many cases, and while at times things seem to go very wrong, I try to rise above the clouds into the sunlight of Truth. I used to be a constant sufferer from headaches and terrible attacks of stomach trouble, but while the attacks still seem real at times, they grow shorter and are more easily overcome.

Life is indeed sweet when one realizes that it is not the brief span which so many believe it to be, but is in reality an eternity of love, harmony, and perfection surrounded and supported and cared for by our loving Father-Mother God, who is the only power. I am so thankful for the opportunity of knowing something of this new-old religion, and pray constantly for guidance and help to gain a deeper and better understanding, until I may merit further blessings for helping others as well as myself.

To Mrs. Eddy, who so bravely placed this standard before the world, we offer our share of love and gratitude, and to the dear friends who so patiently and constantly helped us up in our many falls on the climb to higher ideals, we owe our constant devotion.

ERNEST M. VIQUESNEY, Americus, Ga.

It is ten years since, through great mental and physical suffering, I was led to investigate and gladly accept Christian Science. From the first reading of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I realized I had found the true interpretation of God and of man's relation to Him. The "pearl of great price" had been placed within my reach, and during the years that have passed since then, this treasure has become daily more precious to me. Numerous healings have been experienced in our home, my husband and children as well as myself having relied on the power of Truth as taught in Christian Science for the overcoming of every ill that has presented itself, and we have never found it wanting. In cases of accident, extreme pain, and contagion it has been found equally effective.

In March, 1916, my son, then a lad of nineteen, while working in a near-by city, became very ill and returned home. As it was necessary for him to have a physician's certificate in order to hold his position, he was examined by two physicians who diagnosed his case as sciatica, lumbago, and neuralgia, the latter affecting the stomach and heart. The joints had become greatly enlarged and he was unable at times to stand or walk uprightly. A great deal of fear was manifested by members of the family and friends not interested in Christian Science, who believed the boy was going to be crippled permanently, but a practitioner was asked for help, with the result that the boy was entirely healed in less than three months and has never had the slightest return of the trouble, although he worked for some time the following summer in a place where he was obliged to have his hands and arms in ice water much of the time.

When war was declared this son wished to enlist in the navy, and the examining physicians declared him physically perfect. He is in the service and is in perfect health. This experience has been wonderfully helpful to me and has enabled me to remain calm and peaceful, without a trace of fear for his safety, knowing that the divine Love which healed him when material remedies would have been unavailing, can and will protect him and keep him whole anywhere and under any conditions.

It is my earnest hope in writing this testimony that it may help some other mother whose loved son has gone to the front to realize that wherever duty may place him, he can never be outside of Love's protecting arms, and to rejoice more fully in the understanding that the divine presence and power which protected the Hebrew children in the fiery furnace so that there was not even the "smell of fire" upon them, is as operative to-day as it was then, and as available.

I can never find words adequate to express my gratitude for the wonderful work our periodicals are doing in this time of upheaval, in so faithfully and fearlessly pointing the way through the maze of human fear and confusion to serenity and peace. For the manifold blessings that have come to me and mine through the consecrated life and work of our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and the steadfastness of her true followers, I give thanks to God, the giver of all good, and I am endeavoring daily to express my gratitude in greater love for God and man.

As the time approaches for a Christian Science lecturer to visit Australia once again, I feel I must express my gratitude, as it was through attending one of these lectures that I learned of the truth which has opened for me the way of freedom from many ills and misfortunes, from which I was told by doctors and clergy there was no escape. The lecturer spoke "as one having authority" and said that the healing which Jesus did on earth was for all time. I had often longed to experience the healing touch of the Christ, but thought this belonged to the past, so that when I heard these beautiful promises given I determined to study Christian Science.

With my mother I attended the services and studied "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. One by one different troublesome ailments termed incurable dropped away, but I wanted even more to know what had healed me. I could not then understand the textbook nor see anything clearer in the Bible, but this thought helped me through those twelve months of wilderness: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righeousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." At last the light came, and day by day the understanding grew and unfolded the truths contained in the Scriptures. It has brought God very near to me, and instead of the Bible being to me only a record of past history, read from a sense of duty, I receive comfort and guidance from its inspired pages.

Before we took up the study of Christian Science we were always ill, and could only eat milk foods, but this condition was soon overcome by the application of the truth, as taught by Mrs. Eddy. Chronic headaches, stomach trouble, influenza, and many other ailments have been overcome, besides many disagreeable traits of character. It is five years since we took any medicine, although the doctor had said that if we omitted to take it every day he would not be responsible for the consequences; now we know that our life was not in any drug but in God.

I was also healed of ptomaine poisoning. The pain was so severe that it seemed to close up my throat and I could not breathe. My mother read to me from our textbook, and the verse of Mrs. Eddy's beautiful hymn which begins, "O gentle presence, peace and joy and power" (Poems, p. 4), went through my mind. The pain left quite suddenly, and I arose and finished my breakfast without any further trouble. I have been helped in many wonderful ways, and can never feel grateful enough for all the benefits I have received, also that now I am able to help others, which was always a great desire of mine.

MISS RHODA WITHERS, Melbourne, Victoria, Australia.

For nearly ten years Christian Science has been my only physician. It healed me of stomach and bladder trouble, partial paralysis of the bowels, a condition supposed to be hereditary, and an organic disorder so serious that several physicians said the case was hopeless without a difficult operation which it was believed I could not survive, as I had been in a neurasthenic condition for many years. At one time I was not fully dressed for more than a year.

After all else had failed to give more than temporary relief I was persuaded to try Christian Science. My healing of all these ills was slow, but I gained in understanding step by step and am now entirely well, doing all the work for a family of five on a farm. We have had many and marvelous proofs of God's power to heal discord of whatever name or nature, both for myself and for the members of my family. About nine years ago my mother was healed of cataracts in one week's treatment, after a specialist had said she could not hope to see more than six months longer. She is now in her ninety-fourth year, bright, active, and comfortable, and can see just as well as she could before the trouble appeared. My son was healed of two attacks of typhoid fever. The attacks were about three years apart. Each time there seemed to be alarming complications, but he was fully restored in less than a week by absent treatment.

Only by living in accord with the teachings of Christian Science can I best express my gratitude, for words are inadequate. My gratitude to God is unbounded, and my loyalty to Mrs. Eddy for giving to me and to all mankind "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" is sincere. The truth of the Bible may be proven here and now.

I want to tell what Christian Science has done for me. I was born in a Christian home, and as I grew up was an active church worker; still I was not happy. I had a bad temper which I seemed unable to control, was despondent, extremely nervous, and always worrying. I enjoyed being miserable, and naturally made life miserable for others as well as for myself. I then began to read various isms, seeking something, I knew not what, and I stumbled on Christian Science. I did not understand it and said it did not appeal to me, but although I left it alone for several months I went back to it. There were no Christian Scientists where I lived, but I purchased a copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." One day I was waiting for my train at a railway station when a lady came into the room and sat down near me, taking out a copy of this book. I began to ask her questions, and she told me how to study the Lesson-Sermon. Afterward she sent me a Quarterly, also copies of the Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor. Even then my progress was slow, but it was sure. After a while I left the country town where I had been living and went to New York, where I of course attended the Sunday and midweek services.

Through the help of Christian Science I have an entirely new view of life. The bad temper has been overcome, also the habit of worrying. I know there is nothing to worry over, for all people are God's children, created in His image and likeness and cared for by Him. A fear of the dark, which I had had from early childhood, has left me. This fear had been very real to me and had caused me acute suffering. Since I came into Christian Science it has simply fallen away, for I know there is nothing to fear. Four years ago, when in doubt as to whether I should take a certain step, I asked for treatment, and everything worked out beautifully. I simply knew that God's child must be in her right place. I used to be subject to colds and nearly always had a sore throat, but my throat never troubles me any more. I have had only a few colds, and these not nearly so severe as formerly.

I am very thankful for all that Christian Science has done for me, and rely upon it entirely. I find that my work goes better all day when I start out by reading Science and Health. I am very grateful that we have this "Key to the Scriptures," and thankful that Mrs. Eddy saw the truth and was able to present it to us.

I wish to express my deep thankfulness to God, and my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the knowledge of the healing power of divine Mind. We have had a most wonderful demonstration with our little son, eight years of age. The first of March, 1916, he was suddenly stricken with spinal meningitis. We asked for Christian Science treatment, but he grew steadily worse, and the next afternoon we called the practitioner to the house. The child was surely passing through "the valley of the shadow of death," but with our understanding of Christian Science and the aid of the practitioner he soon rallied, although he remained unconscious for two days and nights.

Then we found that what is called pneumonia had set in, but we were steadfast in the truth, as revealed to us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," knowing that "divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need," as our Leader tells us on page 494 of our textbook; also that all things are possible with God. The power of divine Mind was surely made plain to us in mental surgery, as the affected lung opened, but the healing seemed slow. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 410), "Every trial of our faith in God makes us stronger." The first of July the child was again stricken with what physicians would call infantile paralysis. At first he suffered and had high temperature, but with the help of the practitioner the healing power of God was made manifest. In a few hours he had no fever, but for a few days he was nearly helpless and for several weeks was unable to get about without falling. By the first of September, however, he was able to enter school. He is now normal and has no signs of the disease. I found the ninety-first and twenty-third psalms especially helpful at this time; also all the Christian Science literature, besides the daily study of the Lesson-Sermon.

While we are grateful for the physical healing, we are more grateful for the spiritual unfoldment to us of divine Truth.—Mrs. Mayme L. Shilts, Chicago, Ill.

I would like to express my gratitude for what God has done through Christian Science for me and mine. I was a church member for years, and the thought often came to me, Why does not God heal now as in Christ Jesus' time? I was always told that time was past, but still believed in healing, and when I came to Christian Science I found something that satisfied me. I read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" through and found it was what I had been looking for. The first healing I saw was that of a burned hand. The next healing was that of our little son whereby the power of God to heal was again proved. I am indeed thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the "key" which unlocks the Scriptures, proving that God does heal.

I send this testimony with a heart overflowing with gratitude for the manifold blessings which have come into my life through the teachings of Christian Science. Seemingly fear had me in its grip; I was thoroughly bowed down and altogether miserable. Lastly a lump manifested itself on my leg, but through the loving, reassuring help of a dear friend I have been led step by step to look away from fear, with all its phantom terrors, and to look upward to God, our living, loving Father, who has not given His child "the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." As the truth dawned on me fear slipped away into its native oblivion, and I now find myself in possession of that health and strength which God has never taken from His children.

I could tell of many instances of the saving power of God, and what a great joy it is to know that it is for each and all. My thoughts go out in thankfulness to the "Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning," for all His blessings.

I am grateful for what Christian Science has done for us. It is now over a year since my wife was healed of insanity through the power of Truth. It was not a quick healing, as the trouble did not yield entirely for almost two years. Only those who have had to live with people thus afflicted can understand the relief I felt when she was healed, and I am thankful to all those who helped us in our trouble. I appreciate the privilege of being a member of The Mother Church, also of having had class instruction. The editorials and articles in our periodicals are a great help to us, and I thank God that Christian Science has come, so that suffering humanity can find relief from all discord through the study and application of the truth.

John M. Timm, Hollandale, Fla.

I gladly acknowledge the great benefit received from Christian Science treatment, as I was healed of nervous prostration and severe mental trouble. I have learned to love my neighbor as myself through the study of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.—Mrs. Eva Hefty Timm.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." The truth of these words of St. Paul has indeed been revealed to me since becoming a student of Christian Science. The blessings that have come to my daughter and myself during this time have been manifold. Every erroneous condition of mortal mind, whether the problem was a physical, financial, or moral one, has been met and mastered through the understanding of Truth as taught in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. In some instances the difficulty has been overcome immediately, while in others it seemed to take longer; but I am learning that time has nothing to do with God's work, since the demonstration of Truth's power is not for time but for eternity.

I will relate an experience which occurred several years ago, and at the time seemed like a great affliction. I soon learned, however, that it was not affliction but purification, for it revealed the care and protection of divine Love in a degree that we had never experienced before. My daughter, then about eleven years of age, went for a day's picnic with some companions, and upon her return in the evening complained of a pain in her heel, caused, she said, by jumping off a rock into the water and striking her heel on something that had penetrated it as she struck the bed of the creek. A look at the foot, however, disclosed no visible evidence of anything of the kind with the exception of a slight bruise. She asked me for Christian Science treatment, which I gladly gave her, but being a very young student of this teaching I did not seem to have sufficient understanding to overcome the fear that was manifest. I treated her to the best of my understanding until the next evening, when the foot presented very serious symptoms. My work necessitated my absence from home all that day, and about five o'clock in the afternoon the maid at the house called me on the telephone, stating that the child was very sick. I immediately returned home, where I found her with a high fever and vomiting. She could hardly move her jaws, and the foot was much discolored and badly swollen. I was almost overwhelmed with fear, and asked if she wanted a physician to come and remove the foreign matter, but she emphatically declined, with the statement that God was all she needed.

A Christian Science practitioner was at once called, and after some delay arrived at our home about nine o'clock. When he came the child did not seem any better and was lying on the bed moaning with pain, but he declared the allness of God's power and presence and assured me that there was nothing to fear. About two o'clock in the morning she became easier and fell asleep, so the practitioner returned to his home. At about eight o'clock she awoke, with no sense of pain, and the swelling had disappeared. In a few hours the heel discharged and became perfectly normal, and in a day or two that foot was being used as freely as the other. Several weeks afterward three small stones came from the heel, but during the interval it had given her no trouble whatever.

To me this was a convincing and beautiful proof that Christian Science treatment is adequate in cases which seem to demand immediate relief, as well as in what are termed chronic cases. I am grateful for this privilege of publicly expressing my gratitude for our textbook and for all the authorized literature. I am thankful to God, the author of all these great blessings, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, His humble servant.—Mrs. Gertrude Goode, Lawton, Okla.

Words fail to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. Toward the end of 1916 I had what would be termed blood poisoning in my right hand. For several days the pain was so intense that I called for Christian Science help, which was lovingly given for three days. Being only a beginner in the study of this healing truth I was then influenced to have the wound opened, and the practitioner's treatments were discontinued. The following day the hand began to swell, and was so painful that I again decided to call the practitioner. The effect of the poisoning seemed to reach above the elbow and affected the whole right side of the body, causing such suffering that at times the thought of passing on was with me. For a few days this condition remained unchanged, but the tenth day the crisis came, after which I was gradually relieved, and in three weeks was entirely healed, so that I was able to attend to all my home duties.

A beautiful healing came to our daughter also. A growth appeared on her temple, but after two treatments in Christian Science it disappeared. Before coming into this blessed truth I thought it necessary to put flannel chest protectors on my children and dose them with medicine when there was any indication of colds, but those and many similar beliefs are things of the past, and I no longer resort to material means.

These demonstrations have proven to me the allness of God's power, and I am indeed thankful to Him who healeth all our diseases. I am also grateful to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, through whose discovery humanity is freed from sin and suffering.

Mrs. Carl A. Roggemann, Chicago, Ill.

In February, 1913, I became very ill. A physician was called and pronounced the condition a stroke of apoplexy with paralysis, and said I might possibly live until morning. I continued taking medicine and changing doctors for three months. Whiskey was advised to increase the circulation. Material means, however, had no effect. At this time Christian Science was recommended. I attended a lecture and began to read the literature. Then I went to a practitioner of this city and asked for treatment, which was given, and in ten days I was back at my old occupation as molder. I was also healed of the liquor and smoking habits. My health is perfect, and for these blessings I am very grateful.

In 1908, during my senior year at a hospital and training school for nurses, in San Francisco, our work was very hard. Conditions were still far from normal following the earthquake of 1906, and each nurse had to do about as much work as three would do under normal conditions. Under this strain I broke down with what the doctors called nervous prostration. One day I felt terribly nervous and depressed, and as there seemed to be no chance of lighter duties, I concluded I would have to give up and go home to my parents. This was a hard blow after having been in the school two years and having only one more year to finish the course. It was necessary for me to earn a living and I knew nothing else to do, besides having no assurance that my health would not break down under anything I might undertake.

My parents were visiting relatives in Berkeley at the time, and so I telephoned to my aunt's house to talk with my mother. She was out, and my aunt, who is a student of Christian Science, answered the telephone. When I told her my troubles, she offered Christian Science help and advised me to go on with my duties and say nothing until noon. I was too miserable to care what I did, so I consented, feeling sure I would leave in the afternoon, but within an hour I was perfectly healed, and able to go on with my work. Before lunch the superintendent of nurses sent for me and made me her assistant for the rest of my time at the school, a task which was pleasant and easy; however, I found out that I could do a great deal more and better mental and physical work than ever before. Since that time I have been gaining slowly but surely in the understanding of Christian Science, which has met every need, moral, mental, and physical.

I am more grateful every day for the blessings received, but most of all for the spiritual understanding of life and its possibilities, and for the consequent realization that limitation in all its phases is unreal and can be proved so.

Miss Zoe Watson, San Francisco, Cal.

I am thankful to God for guiding me to our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. After having been driven nearly to despair by false religious teaching I was led to this blessed truth. Deep gratitude is felt for the overcoming of a belief in a so-called hell which seemed exceptionally real to me until the belief was destroyed by the understanding of Truth. I have been completely healed through Christian Science of bowel trouble, catarrh, colds, sore throat, and falling hair; and worry about business affairs has been replaced with confidence and assurance.

I never knew that the Bible taught the doctrine of the spiritual man until I took up Christian Science, but I soon found that the Scriptures are full of this truth about the perfect, sinless, spiritual man who is God's likeness. I am very grateful for all the Christian Science literature and for the Lesson-Sermons. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who was found pure enough in God's sight to be the channel for this blessed truth.—M. G. Torson, Kansas City, Kan.

[Editorial in New York (N. Y.) World]

The appointment by Secretary Daniels of a Christian Scientist as navy chaplain denotes a significant change in the public attitude toward the faith founded by Mrs. Eddy.

Could such a selection of a spiritual adviser have been conceived of in Dewey's navy? Christian Science then and long after was anathema to the regular religious denominations of the country. Legislation was invoked to restrain it, medical societies prosecuted the practitioners, and it was made to bear the brunt of a powerful opposition everywhere. Now the Government gives it full recognition and accords its readers an equal status with the ministers of other creeds. Besides the navy chaplain, there are two Christian Science chaplains in the army.

So have the old antagonisms subsided and the earlier intolerance given way under the spirit of religious freedom. History has repeated itself once more, and the new kirk fought its way to a place alongside the old kirk. It has been an interesting process, and the outcome is notable as an illustration of the liberalizing tendencies of modern opinion, whether religious or political.

[From an editorial in The Newark (Ohio) Advocate]

One thing we like about Christian Science is the cheerful, helpful view its adherents take. They look upon the bright side of things. They are optimists. They find no fault with those who do not agree with them, and do not criticize those who are inclined to be harsh with them. Service seems to be a keynote of their religion. They are always ready to lend a helping hand in worthy effort and may be counted upon to do their full share. Theirs is an everyday religion, not only for one day a week. They believe in doing good, and they practice what they preach. While one may not agree with the entire formula, nevertheless the fair-minded man and woman must recognize in Christian Science a wonderful force, an honesty of purpose, and an agency that points the way to the best things of life and to the hope of life everlasting.

[The Christian Register]

Justice and mercy, truth and love, have never for a moment been banished from the world however many men banish them from their actions. They are the commands of God, and however they are disobeyed by wills in mutiny against Him, they stand fast, and will stand fast till the end of time, for human recognition and obedience.

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

Opening the Channels

"Spiritual ideas unfold as we advance," Mary Baker Eddy writes on page 361 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

The Christian Science Monitor becomes a greater power for good in the world as Christian Scientists awaken to an appreciation of its mission and of its incomparable value as an international daily newspaper.

Witness, for example, the following interesting experience:

New York, N. Y.

Christian Science Publishing Society,
Boston, U.S.A.

Gentlemen:

When The Christian Science Monitor was announced I subscribed for it promptly, almost patronizingly, and read it occasionally.

The Monitor was nearly five years old, however, before I discovered it.

I was on a visit to my father, who lives in a small town in a distant state. Although he was not a Christian Scientist, I had subscribed for the Monitor to be sent to him and he received it regularly.

Noticing how interested he was in the news in the Monitor for the news' sake, I began to question why. An English gentleman who lived at my father's house also seemed eager to see the last copy of the Monitor.

One day while sitting on the veranda out of sight of the interior of the house, I overheard the English gentleman ask my father if the last copy of the Monitor had arrived.

On receiving an affirmative reply he located it and settled down to read the foreign news with the remark: "I can't see a great deal in Christian Science (he was the proprietor of a drug store), but this paper is the only paper I've ever seen aside from the London ——— which ever published reliable world news, and I think this is better now than the ———."

As soon as I could do so unobserved I went into the house, gathered up a half dozen back copies of the Monitor, and read up on the world's news!

For the balance of a three weeks' visit my father and the English druggist had competition as to who would get the Monitor first, and when I returned to New York I found that I had contracted the excellent habit of reading the Monitor daily.

It was not long before I began to grasp its metaphysical significance, and with this revelation came a great desire to help circulate the paper, as I saw that the circulation of this paper throughout the world would be the medium as well as the gauge of the world's healing from sin, sickness, and death.

I indulged in many emotional visions of raising large sums of money among Christian Scientists to circulate the Monitor everywhere.

These were punctuated with the arguments that it would do no good to circulate Monitors until "the world was ready for them."

Then I remembered Mrs. Eddy's statement in the Sermon on Christian Healing (p. 1): "We have asked, in our selfishness, to wait until the age advanced to a more practical and spiritual religion before arguing with the world the great subject of Christian healing; but our answer was, 'Then there were no cross to take up, and less need of publishing the good news,'" and I decided that it was the "privilege and duty" (Mother Church Manual, p. 44) of each Christian Scientist who saw the metaphysical significance of the Monitor to do all he could to open the channels for its distribution by individual demonstration.

The opportunity was almost instantaneous. Lunching a day or two later with the president of a large periodical publishing house, the talk turned on newspapers and their proneness to display the sensational, which he deplored. I casually mentioned The Christian Science Monitor, and he said, "I have seen an occasional copy of it and am much interested in it, though as you know I am no Christian Scientist!"

An offer to send him the Monitor for a year was gladly accepted.

A few days later came the opportunity with a lady settlement worker and social reformer, then the president of a life insurance company, then two railroad executives, and then a club of which I was a member.

I now subscribe regularly to more than a dozen copies per year.

I never offer a subscription, and never renew unless the individual expresses the highest appreciation of the paper and the specific desire to have it continued.

I thought you would join me in gratitude for this demonstration of the power of Truth, and also felt that it might aid some other willing Christian Scientist to see one way in which the Monitor may be sent into engagement, protected by the right kind of mental barrage, instead of being sent forth without due mental preparation and protection.

Sincerely

The world will become a better place in which to live in just the proportion that those who handle the policies of national governments and commercial activities have the opportunity of becoming better acquainted with the truth about world events, as it is daily portrayed in The Christian Science Monitor.

VOLUME XX MARCH 2, 1918 NUMBER 27

The Idler

REV. JAMES J. ROME

AMONG the types of human nature referred to by Mrs. Eddy in her Message to The Mother Church for 1900, is that of "the idler." It is hardly to be expected that anyone would have any particular ambition to be considered as belonging to this class, and few there are who would care to appropriate the appellation. Upon careful consideration, however, it will be discovered that the term may be applied more generally than might be supposed.

In one sense, of course, the term is entirely relative. Those regarded as idlers from one standpoint might not be so considered from another point of view. By the man engrossed in business, for instance, who considers the making of money the acme of human endeavor, anyone who devotes his time to the pursuit of art or pleasure might be regarded as an idler. Nevertheless, devotion to the accomplishment of either one of these may require as much concentration of thought and applied energy as might be demanded in the most strenuous business life. Again, to the day laborer or artisan the life of the student or author might seem like idleness, whereas it is really a higher form of so-called human activity. Generally speaking, therefore, only that which is considered tributary to the accomplishment of whatever has been decided upon as the important issue in life is regarded as useful activity. All else is considered idleness, whether it be sheer indolence or effort spent in other directions.

It is very evident, of course, that all activity is primarily mental. Every material manifestation of action, every mechanical operation must be preceded by mental action, and is but the outward expression thereof; but, on the other hand, all mental action is not necessarily made manifest by an external or physical activity. Physical stillness does not indicate mental vacuity, or even torpor; indeed physical agitation is more likely to hinder than to help the operation of right thinking. On page 93 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy writes, "The best spiritual type of Christly method for uplifting human thought and imparting divine Truth, is stationary power, stillness, and strength."

Furthermore, the human mentality is constantly in action, no matter what the outward manifestation may be, and the question of thinking or not thinking is not a matter of choice. There is no such thing as an idler in the sense of being absolutely inactive. Indeed idleness is but the reverse of usefulness and is only a form of erroneous action. Since, then, thought does persist in keeping active, it is of vast importance that it be controlled and directed in channels which are right and helpful.

There is but one standard by which the true value of mental action can be measured, and that is the spiritual. Every action which has not for its purpose the attainment of higher spiritual understanding can only be classed as idleness. It is at once evident, therefore, that very much of the world's so-called activity would be rejected as such by this classification. Even considered from the standpoint of a human sense of good the busy life of mortals is a pronounced failure so far as producing the desired end is concerned. As Mrs. Eddy asks on page 257 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Who hath found finite life or love sufficient to meet the demands of human want and woe,—to still the desires, to satisfy the aspirations?"

Are not time and energy wasted, then, if spent in the pursuit of that which does not satisfy? The energetic business man rises early, hurries from place to place, toils until late, and thinks he is busy, whereas all his seeming activity may be only idleness. Unless he is working with the right, the spiritual purpose, there can be no real gain or progress. He performs his daily tasks very much like the squirrel which in its revolving cage climbs and climbs, and stops just where it began. The same can be said, of course, with regard to all merely material pursuits, whether in the nature of business or pleasure.

But there are other forms of idleness more pernicious and injurious—the tattling talebearer who sows "discord among brethren;" the venomous backbiter and slanderer and stirrer up of strife; the caller who simply drops in to pass the time of day and ends by passing so much of it that many precious hours are wasted and the usefulness of both himself and his indulgent (or possibly unwilling) host is sadly interfered with. There is also a channel through which animal magnetism may conveniently and successfully entice the Christian Scientist into idleness, and that is so-called sociability. Hours may be given to this, when the time should rather be given to the quiet contemplation of the truth which has been presented at a lecture, for example, or in church services.

This form of error is usually based on personality,—personal interest, personal likes and dislikes, pleasing, praising, or condemning oneself or some other self. To avoid the ills arising therefrom does not necessitate isolation of the Christian Scientist, or that he become a recluse or a hermit. We all need one another's help, and there are opportunities in abundance for words of kindness, cheer, and encouragement; but the temptation to indulge in frivolous conversation, in self-gratification or mere social sentiment, needs to be guarded against. Our great Master said: "I say unto you, That every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Concerning these subtle forms of error which would rob us of our usefulness Mrs. Eddy writes (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 230), "Three ways of wasting time, one of which is contemptible, are gossiping mischief, making lingering calls, and mere motion when at work, thinking of nothing or planning for some amusement,—travel of limb more than mind."

In the Scriptural record there is no place found for idleness among the people of God. When the manna was supplied, each one had to gather his own share, and in the building of the tabernacle every one who had a willing heart was given the privilege of contributing his part. In an appeal to Jerusalem as given in the prophecy of Ezekiel, we read: "This was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her and in her daughters, neither did she strengthen the hand of the poor and needy." Here we find idleness classed, where it rightly belongs, with other forms of evil indulgence. These paralyze the energizing thought of helpful beneficence that would "strengthen the hand of the poor and needy."

There is only one remedy for this mental stagnation, and that is to be found in the unselfish love which is so intent on meeting the demands of divine Principle, and blessing others, that it finds neither time nor place left for self-gratification and idleness. Then man is found to be the reflection of the infinite, divine activity, and there dawns upon the consciousness the glory of spiritual peace, divine satisfaction, and celestial joy. Inspiration is found in the fact that the Principle of all true action is omnipotent and is manifested in the successful accomplishment of all good, and the one who has reached this glorious perception is able to understand more fully the words of the great Master, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."

Limitation

MINNIE T. JAQUITH

THERE is a species of ant that thinks it cannot cross a chalk line, and if one of these finds itself encircled by such a line, it will perish for need of food and water. It is evident that ignorance, not the chalk line, causes the ant's confinement. It could travel, if necessary, across a chalk line, did it but realize this ability.

Ants and human beings are not so unlike in this respect. Mortal man believes that he is confined within the limits of the mortal body, and that he has no possible chance of escape from it except by means of death. It is through this belief that all trouble comes. Sin, sickness, poverty, death, are all the result of believing that man is material and mortal. In the first chapter of Genesis we are told that God created man in His image and likeness, and that He gave him "dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." The belief of life in matter has robbed us of this dominion. Instead of realizing dominion, we are inclined to be afraid of everything,—sin, sickness, accidents, death, the lower animals,—even the household pets which love and trust us.

To material sense much of the vegetable kingdom is to be feared. Beautiful flowers are called weeds and are assigned the office of pests; many are believed to be poisonous and are feared. Every way the human consciousness turns it finds enemies,—something to fear, something it believes will cause suffering that may lead to death. "But," St. Paul says, "thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Christian Science shows that there is a way out of all trouble. In the first chapter of Genesis we read, "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Through the spiritual understanding of God and man we are freed from all error. We recognize the fact that we all have one Father-Mother and one common interest, namely, to know the truth. The realization of this fact roots out of the individual consciousness greed, anger, malice, hate, revenge, all that is unlike good; and if this truth were universally accepted and lived, there could be no cause for any discord.

The instructions for gaining this understanding are contained both in the Bible and in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. By studying carefully these books and earnestly striving to put their teachings into practice, we come to the "sixth day," the spiritual consciousness that God made all that was made, and that all He made was "very good." In this consciousness all fear is eliminated. The whole universe is teeming with friends and radiant with the purity of Life, Truth, and Love. The knowledge that God created every herb to bless every part of His kingdom, robs it of the possibility of being a pest or of being poisonous. The same knowledge makes every beast and every creeping thing a friend. This knowledge, which Daniel had, freed the lions from the mortal belief of a carnivorous nature and enabled him to dwell safely in the den with them. This understanding of God and His creation enables us to keep the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," the keeping of which insures harmony.

Mrs. Eddy says of this commandment (Science and Health, p. 340): "It demonstrates Christian Science. It inculcates the triunity of God, Spirit, Mind; it signifies that man shall have no other spirit or mind but God, eternal good, and that all men shall have one Mind. The divine Principle of the First Commandment bases the Science of being, by which man demonstrates health, holiness, and life eternal."

The destruction of error is an individual problem. He who is earnestly endeavoring to know the truth about all things is not only working out his own salvation but lessening all error. The only reason we are not each accomplishing more is that we limit our ability. Christ Jesus, the Wayshower, stilled the tempest, walked on the water, passed through closed doors, supplied the multitude with food and the disciples with tribute money, healed the sick, raised the dead, comforted the broken-hearted, and reformed the sinner through the understanding of God and man, thus proving the powerlessness of belief in limitation. "God is no respecter of persons," we read in the book of Acts; and Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 13), "Love is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals."

Christ Jesus came to show us how to do the works he did, and even greater works. Paul said: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." God has made this possible for each one of us. We should strive constantly to erase the chalk line, to step out of the limitations of mortal belief into the consciousness of perfect freedom, into the consciousness of all good, where "all things are possible with God" and, by reflection, with God's man.

Healing Based upon Principle

HELEN FRIEND-ROBINSON

MANY people do not understand that Christian Science Mind-healing is based upon a demonstrable Principle, and so are misled as to its origin and purpose. Indeed, they often voice their belief that its cures are the result of one human mind acting in some mysterious way upon another. Nothing could be more erroneous than this, and any open-minded person who will look into the teachings of Christian Science will quickly ascertain how foreign these concepts are to its true mission to humanity.

Christian Science teaches that there is but one Mind or intelligence; that this intelligence constitutes the triune Principle,—Life, Truth, and Love,—understood as God; that this Principle, or one Mind, is the only factor in the healing work, and that the "carnal mind," which the Bible tells us is "enmity against God," is the very antithesis of this one infinite intelligence. Speaking to the carnal mind in his day, Christ Jesus said: "Ye are of your father the devil. . . . When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." At another time, when the Pharisees accused him of casting out devils through Beelzebub, his answer makes clear that his godlike results were obtained only by using the power of God in his work.

Christian Science does not use mortal mind force, so called, to cast out the errors of mortal mind, for this would constitute a "kingdom divided against itself," which could not stand. It uses the same means and methods that the Master used, and casts out devils, or the evils of sin and sickness, with "the finger of God," else it never could have stood the test of time nor have shown such phenomenal growth during the half century since it was founded.

The ancient prophets caught glimpses of this healing power, but it was our Master who demonstrated the absolute supremacy of the divine Principle which he called "the Father" to save to the uttermost them that came unto God by him. Jesus' teachings and example were plain and for a time were heeded; but gradually humanity lost the true import of his life and works, until in the fullness of time one was found to be spiritually minded enough to discover this saving truth and through precept and example was able to make the Christ-teaching and healing so practical to-day, in all the affairs of life, that all may read and understand its saving power.

Euclid discovered the fundamental law and made practical the rules of mathematics, but the principle of the science of numbers had always existed, and only needed to be utilized in order to be of lasting benefit to mankind. The world honors Euclid because of his discovery, and gratefully accords him the place he has earned in human progress. In like manner Christian Scientists honor Mrs. Eddy for giving them an interpretation of the Scriptures which enables them to know God aright, as an ever present help in their every time of need. They would be ungrateful indeed if they did not express their gratitude and give her the credit for her great life work which is justly her due; and sooner or later the whole world undoubtedly will give the Discoverer of Christian Science her rightful place among the world's greatest benefactors.

While the physical healing is cause for great rejoicing and gratitude, it should always be accompanied by a spiritual insight into the truth which Jesus said should make us free. To be "every whit whole" in Christian Science means spiritual regeneration, and this comes only by putting off the "old man with his deeds," as St. Paul expresses it, and by putting on the "new man," who is renewed day by day in the knowledge of God. He must be willing also to take up his cross and follow Christ by doing the works that the Master admonished his followers to do as a sign of their true fellowship with him.

Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, Pref., p. xi), "The physical healing of Christian Science results now, as in Jesus' time, from the operation of divine Principle, before which sin and disease lose their reality in human consciousness and disappear as naturally and as necessarily as darkness gives place to light and sin to reformation." Here we have the keynote to the modus operandi of healing in Christian Science; and the process may be followed by any earnest student of this Science just in the ratio that he gains an understanding of its Principle, works from given rules of motive and act, and in consecrated prayer applies them to the needs of himself or of those who come to him for help. As the schoolboy's knowledge of mathematics may be limited, so too the student of Christian Science may understand little of its healing Principle; but like the schoolboy, if he continually seeks a higher knowledge of absolute law he will readily discover and erase from thought the mistakes concerning God and man which he has learned from the beliefs and dogmas of the past, and substitute therefor a correct understanding of God and man.

As the student advances and becomes a practitioner of Christian Science he learns that only as he understands and utilizes the unfailing law of good in his work for the alleviation of sickness and the destruction of sin, will sin and disease cease to be real to him. They will disappear, both for himself and for his patient, just as naturally as night gives place to day. Not through the mutable, changeable workings of the so-called human mind force, otherwise called autosuggestion, are these results obtained, however, but contrariwise, when thought is brought into subjection to the divine will, or Principle, then it is found that "with God all things are possible."

As the practitioner gains a firmer grasp of the truth, he realizes more and more each day that love for God and humanity must be the golden thread running through all his work, else the results will fall far short of his desire to help his brother man. "Love inspires, illumines, designates, and leads the way," wisely declares our Leader (Science and Health, p. 454), and he who follows this leading cannot go far astray, but will gradually draw nearer to Principle and become a worthy and useful factor in the divine plan of universal salvation.

Consistency

LUTHER P. CUDWORTH

PERHAPS no human tendency is more usual than the faculty of being inconsistent. Experiences with our friends or relatives in the home, in social, business, or church activities, too frequently reveal this human weakness, and too seldom do we recognize this subtle argument of evil in our own thinking. Expression by word or deed is but the result of thinking, and if that word or deed be erroneous, not in accord with the one right standard, it of course is due to the process of wrong thinking.

It will no doubt be granted that most of us have set a certain idealistic or high moral standard for ourselves, and we deflect from it only through the influence of temptation, from the seeming attractiveness of sin. Often this sin may be of so common a form as to be hardly recognized as such by ourselves or others, and though it be but the selfishness that loves ease and comfort in the flesh, yet it nevertheless is sin. Now sin or evil is not in accord with good, and being at variance with God, divine Principle, is inconsistent. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 354): "Sin should become unreal to every one. It is in itself inconsistent, a divided kingdom." In the home, mental laziness after the day's work may prompt the parent to let down the bars of discipline at a time when rigid rules should be enforced, or a sense of irritation may impel a selfish or domineering demand in place of the usual loving request. Consistency, adherence to Principle, is no part of such experiences.

The business man may be tempted to alter slightly his regular policy in an important transaction, allowing more or less leeway such as may result favorably to himself, or taking advantage of an ignorance of right values, to gain his own profit. Here is inconsistency which when found out exhibits itself as business dishonesty. The fads and foibles of social life are nothing but the inconsistencies of human frailty, deceitfulness with its full quota of mental penury. In religious organizations the accusation of hypocrisy is sometimes made, and unfortunately this may be not without cause. Job wrote: "For what is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God taketh away his soul? Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him?" After all, does not the hypocrite simply place himself in the same position as the individual who may be inconsistent in the application of his knowledge of mathematics? One who consistently follows the correct rule does not add when he should subtract, nor does he calculate three plus seven as ten in one part of his problem and as nine in another.

Is not the same unerring consistency and obedience to divine Principle necessary in scientific living? And as living is thinking, is it not the thinking which must be kept accurate and consistently scientific? In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 242) our Leader says, "We may hide spiritual ignorance from the world, but we can never succeed in the Science and demonstration of spiritual good through ignorance or hypocrisy." In view of all this, are not the errors of human experience—its sin, disease, and other discordant conditions—simply the result of inconsistency? "Consistency, thou art a jewel"—and truly it is a jewel of priceless value when it is seen to bring to humanity all the harmony, health, and peace which can possibly enter into human experience. On the same page of our textbook Mrs. Eddy also says, "The divine Science of man is woven into one web of consistency without seam or rent," and thus if inconsistency is found to be hypocrisy, we learn surely that consistency with truth is Christianly scientific.

God's Care Realized

S. KING RUSSELL

ON a somewhat busy street of one of our western towns the people gazing from the windows of a passing street car beheld a sight which for a moment arrested their attention. A boy of ten or twelve years stood on a ledge surrounding an apartment house balcony two stories above the street. Along this narrow footing he walked, boy fashion, holding to the rail of the balcony and smiling at his watching companions, all unconscious of the attention he had aroused below. Then came this characteristic comment from a lady in the car: "He'll fall and be killed!" "Tell the child to go in," exclaimed some one else. "He's in danger!"

This is typical of mortal mind's attitude toward the perils which beset frail mortals throughout the dream of human existence. In babyhood each is expected to have all the diseases allotted in the infants' category. In growing years the child is warned against cold, till it becomes a very real specter to his disturbed consciousness. As the years go on he is told that he cannot eat this or drink that, until the consciousness which began with a natural buoyancy and freedom is cluttered with fears that haunt it to a discordant old age. Mortal mind unknowingly and inadvertently hangs a millstone about its own neck.

The spectators in this instance were kindly and well intentioned; their only thought was for the child's safety. Yet how much kinder it would have been to realize that as God's child he was safe, because, as the psalmist says: "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone." This truth would both correct any disobedient tendency of the child and neutralize the effect resulting therefrom; it would also serve to put the child in his right place.

A declaration of danger and destruction by a whole carful of people would tend to bring disaster in its wake; but a good thought, declaring for safety because safety is the rightful condition of all God's children, expresses true Christian brotherliness. Mrs. Eddy says: "Good thoughts are an impervious armor; clad therewith you are completely shielded from the attacks of error of every sort. And not only yourselves are safe, but all whom your thoughts rest upon are thereby benefited" (Miscellany, p. 210). The former declaration is human solicitude, fearing for its object, and thereby harming it even as it seeks to save; the latter is divine care, which blesses its object by transferring it from a limiting human sense to a spiritual consciousness of safety, approaching perfect realization. In the measure that it does this, it reflects the solicitude of the Christ, always tender and watchful, but never fretted or anxious.

It is related of Jesus in the fourth chapter of Mark that he lay asleep in his disciples' boat while a raging storm made them fear for their lives. Without a fuller understanding of Principle to enable them to triumph over the fury of the elements, they were at the mercy of wind and wave. In terror they rushed to Jesus, awakening him with the reproachful words, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" To their frightened sense it seemed as if the Master was indifferent to their danger; yet it was not indifference, but his perfect understanding that man is never for one instant separated from God, his Father-Mother, which made Jesus unafraid; and it was this same consciousness of man's relation to God which at once stilled the tempest,—an example of the conflict of mortal beliefs quieted by the still, small voice of Truth.

Let us picture this scene reproduced on a larger scale on any great ocean liner of to-day. Think of the awe of the panic-stricken passengers for a man who with a word of command could control the winds and the sea, so that the ship might ride safely on the wave. Yet the Christ-consciousness, "the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever," is as potent now as it ever was, using for a channel anyone who is as free of impeding mortal beliefs as was the Man of Galilee. Thus our Leader gives us this word for our protection: "Christian Scientists, be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake" (Science and Health, p. 442). The inspired psalmist felt the protecting power of the Mind that rules all when of old he sang, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

The Christian Science Monitor

HON. FRANCES PORTER

IN The Christian Science Monitor one day there appeared an article on France and Morocco. This article dealt with the problem of teaching agriculture to the Moors. It pointed out how, realizing the impossibility of teaching them to change at once their antiquated implements for the wonderful modern ones, the French had begun by improving those already in use and led them gradually to understand the benefit of coming up to date along agricultural lines. This struck me as being so like what Mrs. Eddy has done for the world in giving it that wonder of modern wonders, The Christian Science Monitor.

Some people may not be as yet ready to accept or to recognize the value of the metaphysical process by which harmony, health, and peace are brought into experience through Christian Science, but all can understand a daily newspaper.

Digitized by Google

So Mrs. Eddy has given to the world a daily newspaper, an example of improved journalism, which tells the news in a wholesome, unsensational way, and also tells of the good, great, and courageous efforts and achievements of people all over the world. The reading of this paper teaches mankind to realize more and still more the great possibilities and probabilities of betterment that lie within the reach of all. In the further seeking which is thus encouraged, may they not find their needs progressively met through the other Christian Science literature, finally becoming earnest students of all Mrs. Eddy's writings?

Too much stress cannot be laid on the importance of the wise distribution of The Christian Science Monitor. In order to be successful in this work, we must first learn to love and appreciate the paper ourselves. There is something anomalous in the position of one who perhaps merely glances through the Monitor and tells another it is a paper well worth reading. If he is saying what he does not heartily believe to be true because he has not carefully read it himself, his words will carry little conviction.

When we have once learned to love the Monitor, and to recognize something of what our Leader's purpose was in launching it so bravely and trustingly into the world, we have freed our hands to knock at the door of every home, and the responsive opening of the door means the entrance of a divine idea to sup with the individual consciousness consenting thereto. Every Christian Science church has its own distribution committee, whose work it is to distribute the Christian Science literature as widely as possible, and in this each field must of course make its own demonstration.

Let us remember the rule under which the Monitor goes out, as expressed by Mrs. Eddy in the leading editorial of its first issue (Miscellany, p. 353), "The object of the Monitor is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." This rule is its own protection and will prevent it from being in any place where it can injure or be injured. It will be to the Jews a Jew, with all the highest ideals of that race; to the Greeks a Greek, with culture and refinement; to each one it will be a reminder of the noblest he has seen and known. Small need is there for us who have proved the power of good to entertain any fear that The Christian Science Monitor will in any wise fail in its high mission (as stated in the editorial referred to) "to spread undivided the Science that operates unspent."

Reflections

JANE LACY

So still and cool, a little pool,
With cat-tails fringed and grasses,
Reflects their sheen of brown and green,
Stirred by each breeze that passes.

The drifting white of clouds, the flight
Of birds all nestward winging,
Are mirrored true 'gainst mirrored blue
Of sky, and tree tops swinging.

Love makes the heart a place apart
From fear, from lonely longing!
Truth's Peace, be still, can melt self-will,
Destroy wrong passions thronging,

Leaving thought clear as lucent sphere
Of dewdrop, filled with sunshine.
So, Truth in me reflected be,
Love's changeless light divine!

Selected Articles

["'A sound heart'"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 12, 1917]

Whether the word heart, in its symbolic Scriptural meaning and its modern common and literary usage, is understood to refer to the affections and emotions or to the intellect and will, it is certain that, in any case, it indicates conditions and states of the human mind. When the writer of Proverbs declared of mortal man, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he," and "A sound heart is the life of the flesh," he made perfectly clear statements that the conditions and beliefs of the human mind determine for a man his character and his health.

All have seen clearly enough that the quality of a man's heart, that is, his mind, constitutes his character, but men had not perceived, until the advent of Christian Science, that the state of a man's heart, or his thinking, is directly causative of all the fluctuating conditions of the mortal body, although this fact was made sufficiently clear nineteen centuries ago in the words of Jesus the Christ, "Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies: these are the things which defile a man."

Since the mortal mind is an unreal counterfeit of divine Mind, the origin and Life of man, it is evident that this mind has no power within itself to produce the beatific purity of heart which shall see God, and which, as a consequence, shall see man, God's likeness, in his perfection. The "sound heart," the "merry heart," the "honest and good heart," of Scriptural phrase, which insure health, cheerfulness, and a fruitful life, begin to appear only as material-mindedness itself begins to be superseded by divine intelligence. Since the material body is nothing but a picture of the mortal mind which possesses it, the body must necessarily express whatever beliefs this material mind holds within itself. This is why Christian Science lays entire stress upon the correction of the beliefs of the mortal mind in the scientific healing of disease, and pays no attention to the body. Effects change exactly as the causes of those effects change; and when a cause is removed, the effect can no longer appear.

On page 219 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "Not muscles, nerves, nor bones, but mortal mind makes the whole body 'sick, and the whole heart faint;' whereas divine Mind heals." However lamentable, to the human sense, may seem the state of a man's affairs, his character, or his health, they are unreal effects of wrong states of mind, and they inevitably disappear when the causative state of the human mind which produces them is destroyed. For the purpose of detecting and then destroying the wrong belief, the "word of God is quick, and powerful," as Paul said, ". . . and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." No error of belief can elude the penetrating, neutralizing power of Truth; and no heart but can be purified, physically as well as spiritually, by its operation.

A great deal has been said by religionists concerning the change of heart which is claimed to be necessary to procure a man's future salvation. Not since the days of the Nazarene and his immediate followers, however, has this change of heart, or repentance, been considered of any value in helping a man out of his sickness, his misfortune, or his poverty. Yet if human conditions are manifestations of the human mind, every change that takes place in that mind must inevitably affect the body and the affairs of the human being. Concerning this change of heart and the effects which may reasonably, because scientifically, be expected to follow this change, Mrs. Eddy writes on page 50 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "The human affections need to be changed from self to benevolence and love for God and man; changed to having but one God and loving Him supremely, and helping our brother man. This change of heart is essential to Christianity, and will have its effect physically as well as spiritually, healing disease."

That which is supreme in a man's affections is an unfailing indication of the soundness or the unsoundness of his heart. If his heart beats principally for self, life will consist for him of the microcosm of selfish ambitions and material desires. Such a one has no Principle to demonstrate, for he has admitted and believes man to be mortal and not immortal. He consistently sets out to elbow his way through life, fears competition, envies the successes of others, and finds the jealousy which he sends out into the world turning back to gnaw his own heart. Those whom he envies may be no nearer the pure heart that sees God, for the opposite extreme of selfish desire which has succeeded in storing its barns with material substance, and sated its lusts with sensuous pleasures, is even more likely to be lulled to sleep in the belief that life is wholly material. Satisfaction in materiality must first be made to chafe in materiality, and then yield place to the "contrite heart" which admits the nothingness of the flesh and yearns to know more of God and His reflection as the only reality.

When Jesus the Christ bade his followers, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid," he was by no means inviting them to tranquillity in the senses. He had led them into the turmoil of war against the senses, and, as a consequence, wherever they went they were greeted with troubles and persecutions. But he had led them into the contest with the false sense of material life for the purpose of saving them from false sense and from the troubles arising from materiality. They learned from his teachings to demonstrate that the heart that exchanges its trust in matter for trust in God, as the divine Principle of all being, can be untroubled and unafraid, even while it is struggling against and overcoming the evidences of the senses. They proved, moreover, that, as Mrs. Eddy says on page 150 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," "A heart touched and hallowed by one chord of Christian Science, can accomplish the full scale; but this heart must be honest and in earnest and never weary of struggling to be perfect—to reflect the divine Life, Truth, and Love."

[Aaron E. Brandt in The Patriot, Harrisburg, Pa.]

Christian Science stands on its merits, and invites its opponents to let their religion do likewise, leaving the people to judge for themselves. Christian Science has weathered successfully the storms of every conceivable kind of criticism and attack, and is making greater progress relatively than any other religion in the world. If people are leaving other churches for Christian Science, let those churches make their own teaching and practice so attractive and satisfying, in the way the Master commanded, that their members will remain with them. Christian Scientists wish them Godspeed in this.

The adherents of Christian Science are endeavoring to obey the Scriptural teaching of their revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who, among many other admonitions to the same effect, says on page 444 of her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Students are advised by the author to be charitable and kind, not only towards differing forms of religion and medicine, but to those who hold these differing opinions. Let us be faithful in pointing the way through Christ, as we understand it, but let us also be careful always to 'judge righteous judgment,' and never to condemn rashly. . . . If ecclesiastical sects or medical schools turn a deaf ear to the teachings of Christian Science, then part from these opponents as did Abraham when he parted from Lot, and say in thy heart: 'Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, . . . for we be brethren.'"

Christian Science teaching aims, among other things, to bring about the brotherhood of man rather than to sow discord among churches, as the published statement attributed to our critical clergyman has a tendency to do.

[S. T. Downs in Kokomo (Ind.) Tribune]

It should be understood that Christian Science is not faith cure, nor are Christian Science healings the result of the commonly accepted thought about mind over matter; but Christian Science healing is accomplished through the power of divine Mind, or God, over the human mind. The spiritual law through which healing results in Christian Science is the antithesis of suggestion, hypnotism, or mesmerism. In other words, spiritual law destroys the belief that man exists apart from God. The fact that the real man, the man of God's creating, lives, and moves, and has his being in Him, and the Scriptural teaching of this atonement, understood, has healed all manner of diseases, including broken bones, cancer, tumors, and functional, structural, and organic disorders.

Instead of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, being a substitute for the Bible, it has been the means of making more Bible students than any other book or movement of modern times. There is no such thing as a Christian Scientist who is not a Bible student, because the first religious tenet of Christian Science reads (Science and Health, p. 497), "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life."

[E. F. Heywood in Chat, Portsmouth, England]

In an interesting and appreciative account of a Christian Science lecture recently given in Portsmouth, a writer in Chat speaks of the phenomenal progress in the world of this religion, which "has proved itself to be a blessing and a joy to vast numbers of people for its healing and regenerating effects." And later in the same article he refers again to the results which are to be seen everywhere to-day through the spread of Christian Science, "not only by the healing of disease and suffering, but by the overcoming of sin in all its phases." These are indeed the benefits which Christian Science claims as a result of its teaching. The writer in Chat, however, is of the opinion that "if the ideals of Christian Science were dovetailed with medical skill, mankind might find practical benefit from its teachings."

The practical benefits which have come to countless thousands of men and women through the application of Christian Science are due to the endeavor humbly and faithfully to apply those same methods of healing which brought such glorious results to the sick and sinful nineteen centuries ago in Palestine. Jesus possessed no medical skill and knew naught of therapeutics, yet he healed all their sick and could ask with supreme assurance, "Whether is easier, to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Arise, and walk?" Those who have turned to Christian Science, often after medical skill of all kinds has been exhausted, quickly learn the truth of Mrs. Eddy's statement (Science and Health, p. 167), "Only through radical reliance on Truth can scientific healing power be realized."

Digitized by Google

In this "radical reliance" the Christian Scientist recognizes the necessity of steadfast endeavor to let that Mind be in him "which was also in Christ Jesus," to follow more closely in the footsteps of him who declared himself the way, and bade all men take up the cross and follow him. It is because of the immense practicability of Christian Science to every condition of human need that those who through its teachings have been delivered from bondage, physical, mental, or moral, desire to share its blessings with the whole world. To them the words of Jesus, ringing down the ages, have lost none of the vital import which they held for mankind when he uttered them: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," and, "These signs shall follow them that believe; . . . they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

To the Christian Scientist these words mean something more than a beautiful promise. He has found them infinitely and immediately available in his own experience, and in so doing has actually proved true the words of the Founder of Christianity, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

[W. Stuart Booth in Denver (Col.) Statesman]

An otherwise commendable article in a recent issue of the Statesman erred greatly in its assertion that "Christian Scientists have a theory that if you are real sick and believe that you are real well, real well you are and not sick."

In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 83, "Nothing is more antagonistic to Christian Science than a blind belief without understanding, for such a belief hides Truth and builds on error." A belief that one is real well when one is real sick is certainly "a blind belief," and one trusting therein is bound to fall into the ditch of disappointment and despair, from which he can be lifted only by the spiritual understanding afforded by Christian Science.

When Christ Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," he plainly pointed us, not to mere belief, but to that scientific understanding which enabled him to heal and to save from every enslaving condition. When the Master declared that one whom he healed had been bound by Satan, defined by him as "a liar" and the father of lies, he therein showed the illegitimate and false source and nature of disease; hence his scientific advice that freedom is to be realized through knowing the truth about God and His creation.

Many people in all walks of life acknowledge with joy that Christian Science has advanced them beyond the shifting sands of belief on to the solid foundation of spiritual understanding, and has enabled them to prove their position by the overcoming of sin and the healing of sickness as was promised by Jesus.

[Robert S. Ross in Binghamton (N. Y.) Press]

The Press reported a former rabbi's address at a local Bible Conference in which he told of his conversion to Christianity and referred to his experience in Christian Science, the teachings of which, he tells us, he renounced and then "began to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ."

Assuming that the critic's version of his experience in Christian Science was based on fact, it is evident that either he failed to grasp the real import of Mrs. Eddy's teaching as set forth in Science and Health, or, realizing the radical reforms scientific Christianity requires of human thinking, he turned back like many of Jesus' followers, as recorded in the Bible. Certain it is that there is only one way effectively to "preach the gospel of Jesus Christ," and that is to put it into practice in the way that Jesus put it into practice. It was not by what they said that Jesus declared his true followers would be known, but by their works.

That Christian Science and Christ's Christianity are one and the same is evident, because Christian Science is the only system of religion based upon Jesus' teaching that demands of its followers the same proofs of discipleship that Jesus demanded of his.

[George R. Lowe in Stratford (Ontario, Canada) Herald]

A revivalist is reported to have avowed his belief that Christian Science is of the devil. The New Testament records that Christ Jesus came to destroy the works of the devil and that he destroyed sin, sickness, and death. The mission of Christian Science is a revival of the works of Christ Jesus, and it affords proof of its Christian ministry by the healing of the sick as well as the sinful. How can this possibly be the work of the devil, since evil is not cast out by Beelzebub, the accuser of the Christ? Jesus also declared of "the devil" that "he is a liar," and "there is no truth in him." We should all seek to live the truth and to tell the truth, and thus avoid likeness to personified evil or devil.

[From The Day, New London, Conn.]

A great many persons have had the erroneous idea that Christian Scientists' charity is of such a highly ethereal and ultraspiritual sort that in most exemplifications it might run the danger of starving the needy while treatment was resorted to in expectation of magically derived supply. To these the efficient, wholly common-sensed and splendidly directed Halifax relief work of the Christian Scientists should furnish a final object lesson that must correct an unquestionably false belief.

[Peter V. Ross in The Searchlight, Redding, Cal.]

My attention has been called to a statement appearing in The Searchlight and purporting to come from the office of the state superintendent of public instruction, to the effect that Christian Scientists are opposing the physical examination of children in the public schools as a preliminary to physical training.

While I am not advised as to what Christian Scientists may actually be doing in different parts of the state in the way of opposition to this movement, still I am sure that not only they, but many other citizens, do not view with complacency the physical examination of children by school or health authorities, not merely to ascertain their fitness for physical culture, but to detect the presence of germs and secure evidence on which to base a charge of germ carrying.

The person of an individual, whether child or adult, is peculiarly sacred, and no one, under ordinary circumstances, has the right physically to examine him without first obtaining permission to do so. In the case of children the permission must of course be had from parents or guardians. This right of the individual to immunity from physical interference, so long as he deports himself with due regard to the rights of others, is one of the highest rights known to the law, and physicians, health officers, nurses, school officers, and teachers are as much bound to respect it as the layman. Their professional or official position invests them with no authority to take liberties with the persons of school children or anyone else. They have no more right to go down their throats in search of germs and to take cultures than has the janitor of the building.

Truth Versus Human Opinion

WHENEVER a man in any age comes into agreement with Truth the result is peace of mind. The finding of Truth is the discovery of harmony, because it is the escape into reality out of the discordant conditions of human beliefs. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 276): "Material beliefs and spiritual understanding never mingle. The latter destroys the former. Discord is the nothingness named error. Harmony is the somethingness named Truth."

If men lack harmony, then it is because they are not governed by Principle, not acquainted with Truth, but pulled and thrust about in darkness by human opinions and confused by the clamor of doctrines and dogmas. Human opinions have the character of the ignis fatuus, or fool's fire, that dances over the marsh promising guidance to the wayfarer, which following he finds himself lost in the mire. There is no definite oneness to rest in, but always the flitting about of many beliefs and theories calling, arguing, contending. An ancient proverb says sententiously, So many men, just as many opinions; and these opinions being unrelated to reality, not only change with different persons, but with the same person go through kaleidoscopic alteration.

Let there appear some human need for a definite good, and immediately a difference of opinion will arise as to the means for promoting that good end, and the energy which should go into the work will be wasted in contention. It is exactly as if each human being deified his own opinion and considered it as having a religious sacredness. Is not this the very acme of idolatry, in that it is multiplied denial of truth, righteousness, and love? Our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," makes short work of this human chaos masquerading as the world. We read (p. 399): "Scientifically speaking, there is no mortal mind out of which to make material beliefs, springing from illusion. This misnamed mind is not an entity. It is only a false sense of matter, since matter is not sensible. The one Mind, God, contains no mortal opinions. All that is real is included in this immortal Mind."

God's call to those who are opinionated requires obedience to the First Commandment, and it must be clear that the call is both to the evil and to the good. The evil man is manifestly trying to control his weaker neighbor and planning to enslave him so as to utilize his energies and possessions. His god is self-will and self-love. But the good man is also seeking to control his neighbor. He plans to reform his neighbor and mold him anew in conformity with human opinion which is considered good, and thus he keeps himself in a state of self-justification. As a matter of fact, Truth comes to make tyrants obey and to reform reformers. How clearly the Discoverer of Christian Science brought this out (Miscellany, p. 288): "The great Galilean Prophet was, is, the reformer of reformers. His piety partook not of the travesties of human opinions, pagan mysticisms, tribal religion, Greek philosophy, creed, dogma, or materia medica. The divine Mind was his only instrumentality in religion or medicine. . . . Jesus cast out evil, disease, death, showing that all suffering is commensurate with sin; therefore, he cast out devils and healed the sick."

How simple the problem becomes for the whole world and for every man and woman! Human opinions have driven the well-intentioned man with a whip, and the malign-minded man with scorpions into fierce contest and bitter struggle, every man's hand against his neighbor, and every individual contestant justifying himself. The divine Logos says, "Learn of me." It comes, it is here in the world, as light for every man's enlightenment—yes, for the enlightenment and salvation of the human devil as well as for the supersanctified, for the hoary-headed sinner as well as for the innocent child. Why? Because it is light; because it is that which proceeds and comes forth from God,—the Son of the Father revealing the Father as our Father. One Mind, one good, means one salvation, one heaven, one hope, and one character for man, namely the attributes of the little child obedient to good. It will mean animalism abolished, so that men proud of being cruel as the fanged wolf shall become harmless as the lamb, and those raging in pride and authority like the lion shall become useful like the ox. It will mean serpent-like malignity unknown, and true wisdom actuating men. Human opinions planning in God's mountain to hurt and destroy shall be blown away like mists before the morning sun, and one Mind will give universal enlightenment to all the members of the family of God.

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

Slackness Analyzed

GOD'S children are minutemen, armed with righteous armor, using no excuses to disobey God. Each child of God may have different duties and different ways of following the voice within, but mental alertness, keenness of vision, clearness of hearing, are all there to respond to the call. There can be no inertia of thought for the one who is in tune with the voice of the high calling. Though the spiritual call comes from the mountain top it resounds through the valley, and those who are making the upward ascent catch the tone and carry it in their heart, singing of God's glory.

Mental slackness comes from disobedience to God. Strikes of the human will, without one iota of spiritual force, are the very essence of hate. There are many mental forms of slackness that stand ready to strike like so many sleeping serpents ready to coil and sting when stirred. Let there be a mental clean-up at this hour of the world's need for metaphysicians, so that the world may be saved from going down into the thralldom of greedy disaster. The power to save the world can only come from God, and man understanding this will be given the right ideas, the strength and endurance to carry on God's work. Wiping out mental slackness will destroy evil strikes and help man to obey God and enjoy the light of heaven.

When the tide reaches a stage of sluggishness between the ebb and flow, slack water is said to have set in. When a sailing vessel is slow in coming about into the wind, it is said to be slack in stays. When a human being lacks promptness in responding to the country's call, he is to-day called a slacker. The condition of mind which is slackness is limp and listless, it slows down when briskness is required, it shirks activity, it is negligent when care and promptness should be exercised, feeble when strength is essential. Slackness retards and is remiss. It makes for poor work and procrastination.

Metaphysically considered, slackness is the wayward brother of neutrality. When the unrepentant neutral is forced to awake from the dream of death, he resorts to slackness to retard if possible the plain issue between Principle and evil. Only genuine repentance can make him willing to abandon the old and joyfully put his hand to the plow which tears up the hard ground of human obduracy. But if the unrepentant slacker is forced further into activity, while he remains unconvinced, then a strange rebellion is apt to seize him. He is tempted to become a mental striker, and to lapse into an ugly, balking mood which invites physical retaliation.

Christian Science knows no limitation in its healing work. It cures slackness and forestalls the strike habit, as surely as it heals sickness and sin, by an understanding of God as the divine, irresistible Mind, the lawful controller of men and nations. The notion of minds many and of lazy mortality as able to retard God's government or nullify His decrees could only be entertained by one who believed in the power of mental manipulation to offset the law of God. Mrs. Eddy has clearly set forth the cure for slackness and striking when she states incontrovertibly on page 283 of Science and Health, "Mind is the source of all movement, and there is no inertia to retard or check its perpetual and harmonious action." Whence this "inertia"? Humanity is naturally averse to change. When the selfish peace-at-any-price theory lulled a great nation to sleep with the dictum that the world war was European, it touched a common human failing. "Am I my brother's keeper?" asked the sluggard, and straightway became a slacker. But when the world war refused to remain localized and the call came for immediate action, another human failing was uncovered,—the obstructionist made his appearance.

An unscrupulous enemy psychology does not seek to invent human failings but to use them as it finds them. What shall be the spiritual barrier against the mental suggester? God, who is Mind, frustrates and forestalls the wicked purpose, the dark plot, the sudden world-wide rumor of evil wish which is father to the thought, the induced confusion of a Babel of tongues and plans, the destructive criticism, the suppression of inspiration, and the side-tracking of the timely warning. The exercise of gentle, loving compassion, reflecting God as Mother, complements the Scriptural teaching of God as Father and thus brings complete salvation. The war activities, which are resented by the slacker, have uncovered the need for unity of thought in all walks of life, for real unity destroys the false. Mental laziness has been laid bare and the need of the hour has forced an adjustment, a wholesome wakefulness to the work of saving humanity. The life, health, and morale of the army of the Lord is largely dependent upon the mental support of the righteous thinkers. Mental slackness and mental striking operate as mental obstruction, whether in church, state, or shipyard. Spiritual responsibility cannot be shifted from one human to another, salvation is not vicarious. We read on page 187 of Science and Health: "There is no involuntary action. The divine Mind includes all action and volition, and man in Science is governed by this Mind."

A little moth may destroy a coat. A little mental strike against God's spiritual government may eat up one's garment of righteousness. Away with sluggishness, shirking, resentment, and hate! Let the full tide of divine power flow into human hearts and flow out again into the channels of a right thinking world! Let the majestic ship sail on with Principle at the helm supported by the waters of healing. God calls; let all obey with gratitude and grace!

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

Clouds Dispelled

IN recent times religious people have to a large extent turned away from the literal interpretation of the Scriptures, especially where prophecy is concerned. Here be it said, however, that while Christian Scientists endeavor to gain a meaning above the literal, if by this is meant the material, they endeavor to lose sight of nothing which is of importance in reaching that overcoming which the Bible insists upon, and which Christian Science shows to be possible. At the present time, when there can be no question whatever respecting the identification of world conditions with those foretold by Christ Jesus and given in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew's gospel, we are almost tempted to accept the statements found therein in the most literal way, whereas there is every reason why we should lift thought above all mortal discords, and grasp the spiritual reality which is inseparable from all of our Master's teachings and demonstrations.

It is deeply interesting as well as helpful to note what the great Teacher has to say about the passing of error and the appearing to human consciousness of God's kingdom on earth, and so we read of "the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." This passage corresponds to several others, both in the Old Testament and in the New, and we find the idea repeated in the first chapter of Revelation, where we read, "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him." On page 547 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says: "The Scriptures are very sacred. Our aim must be to have them understood spiritually, for only by this understanding can truth be gained." At one time it was believed by many sincere Christians that Jesus would return to earth, and would be seen coming through the clouds in the midst of the greatest of human struggles. Christian Science, however, reveals the fact that Christ as God's idea has never been absent from the earth, for he himself said to his disciples at the close of his earthly ministry, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth . . . and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

To the Christian Scientist, as an individual, the coming of the Christ has usually been when the clouds of mortal sense hung very heavy and seemed to shut out the light of Truth and Love, but through the demonstration of divine Science the ever presence of God and His Christ and the divine all-power dispelled these clouds and brought healing, even as in the earthly ministry of Christ Jesus; nor would the one who was healed deny that this coming was "with power and great glory."

When thought rises from personal and individual experience to the great world problems of the present hour, and when we look with no uncertain hope for the coming of the Christ, as foretold by our Master, we can see many of the signs which he gave. In the sixteenth chapter of Mark we find a direct command to his followers to preach the gospel "to every creature" in all the world. This is followed by the statement, "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." We are then told that the Master departed from his followers, rose above the plane of mortal belief, and yet we read that when they gave out the truth which he taught he was "working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

The student of Christian Science will readily admit that the uncovering of error makes it appear more terrible, perhaps, than ever before, and yet much less so to the one who has made eternal Truth his refuge, for all the time there is the assurance, which gains weight with each day's experience, that though heaven and earth pass away, the words of Christ Jesus will never pass away. Commenting upon this promise Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 99): "The winds of time sweep clean the centuries, but they can never bear into oblivion his words. They still live, and to-morrow speak louder than to-day. . . . The grandeur of the word, the power of Truth, is again casting out evils and healing the sick; and it is whispered, 'This is Science.'" Shall we for a moment lose heart because the war clouds seem very dark? We are told that the Christ-idea will come "in the clouds of heaven;" and whatever the arguments of mortal mind, however fierce its aggressiveness, these are as nothing before the power and glory which accompany the coming to human consciousness of the divine presence.

In Paul's first epistle to the Thessalonians we find this same thought expressed; and although it has usually been interpreted in a somewhat material way, its truer sense is purely spiritual. The apostle's words banish error and replace it with the immortal hope. They tell of the joyful state of those who believed they had died; also of those who had not passed through such an experience, and yet it meant for both a rising above earth and earthliness, a rising above the clouds of mortal sense; and Christian Science makes it clear that the work of each day and hour should mean this and no less. Well may we ponder ofttimes the apostle's closing words, "And so shall we ever be with the Lord;" doing at all times the will of wisdom, and rejoicing evermore therein.

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday School, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a. m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

BERKELEY, CAL.—During the four months of the fall semester of 1917, the Christian Science Society of the University of California distributed at testimony meetings and through the mail to students and faculty members, 103 Sentinels, 434 Journals, 9 Herolds, 1422 Monitors, and 45 newspapers containing lectures on Christian Science. Subscriptions to the Monitor were supplied to the Military School of Aeronautics, the Faculty Club, and the current events class of the University Extension Division. The authorized literature in the University Library was completed by the addition of the Hymnal, "The Mother Church," by Joseph D. Armstrong, and the current pamphlets, each of the latter being separately bound and catalogued.

The University Library has a complete file of The Christian Science Monitor. The binding of this valuable file is making the Monitor available for reference work. Realizing that this paper will be a priceless historical record, this organization is also collecting copies for a file of its own.

BOTHELL, WASH.—Literature was distributed during the year ending December 31, 1917, as follows: 206 Sentinels, 14 Journals, 560 Monitors, 40 lectures, 3 pamphlets. It was donated by individual members of the society, and practically all of it was distributed through the mails.

HEREFORD, TEXAS.—The distribution of Christian Science literature for the year 1917 totaled as follows: 167 Sentinels, 29 Journals, 11 Herolds, 1864 Monitors, 3 copies of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," 112 lectures, 13 pamphlets, 7 Quarterlies, in all 2206 pieces. Several copies of the works of our Leader were loaned through the Free Lending Library.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—The opening services [Jan. 13] of Third Church of Christ, Scientist, East Twenty-first Street, near Church Avenue, Flatbush, were very simple. Morning, afternoon, and evening services were held in the Sunday school auditorium, the temporary meeting place of the congregation until the church proper is constructed.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

The Lectures

CONCORD, N. H. (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Major Charles E. Staniels, who said in part:—

Those of us who have lived in Concord for a generation or so recognize the fallacy of the proverb that "a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." The influence of Mrs. Eddy's teachings is actively manifest in her own state, from which it has extended throughout the civilized world. Her public spirit is also a matter of record in the archives of the city of Concord. This beautiful temple, a characteristic gift to her devoted followers, is indicative of her desire not only to meet the requirements of a growing religious constituency but to anticipate the increasing demands of posterity.

I have listened to words of wisdom from this platform without dissent. I have heard testimonies from the faithful, many of which were of a remarkable character, which would indicate that Mrs. Eddy's precepts have revealed a balm of Gilead which is a restful consolation to the physical, mental, and spiritual needs of her followers.—Concord Monitor.

NEEDHAM, MASS. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by William R. Beetle, who said in part:—

If men knew how to do the will of God, if they understood, all men would be brethren, and as such would have unity of purpose. Now understanding is of Mind and is spiritual, and Christian Science teaches spiritual understanding. It is a vast subject, ideal in its teaching, yet intensely practical; and approached in a spirit of fairness, without prejudice, with a sincere desire to be shown the way and a willingness to learn, it is readily assimilated, and will prove itself to be inspiring, purifying, healing, strengthening, comforting. Moreover, the student will have aroused in his consciousness that right desire to be a real brother to his fellow men. The adherents of Christian Science, numbered by tens of thousands throughout the world, feel certain that even now there is coming an awakening to spiritual understanding such as no past history records, the dominating note of which is human brotherhood.—The Needham Chronicle.

LA GRANGE, ILL. (First Church).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by John Fetzer, who said in part:—

As seldom before, men are crying to-day that they might know God—a God at hand and not a God afar off; a God that guides and guards; a God that comforts and strengthens; a God that heals and saves; a God that we may know here and have with us in life's smallest detail; the true God, to whom Jesus bade us bring our burdens and through whom he promised us rest; the God whom "to know aright is Life eternal" (Science and Health, Pref., p. vii). Now Christian Science brings to you an understanding of this God, the God revealed aforetime by Jesus the Christ and made known today through our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which reveals the spirit of Jesus' words and works, and unfolds to human consciousness Him of whom Christ Jesus spoke as "my Father" and "your Father."

NEW YORK, N. Y. (Second Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Ella Trent Taliaferro, who said in part:—

The world is starving to-day, not for material food, but for love; love such as Jesus manifested when he fed the multitudes and preached the gospel to the poor; love, the nature of which he so clearly and definitely taught his disciples that they were enabled to do the works which he did. Jesus promised that he would not leave the world comfortless, but that the full revelation of Truth should come and forever destroy the plagues of materiality. This promise is being fulfilled to-day in Christian Science, which is radiating throughout the world the healing power of Love.

KANSAS CITY, MO. (Second Church).—Dr. Francis J. Fluno, lecturer; introduced by Andrew G. Bodwell, Jr., who said in part:—

Christian Science comes to you offering no new God and no new Bible; rather does it take the same old Bible which you and I have always loved, and shed such a glorious light upon it as enables us to gain that true understanding which our Master promised would make free—free from sin, sorrow, pain.

Testimonies of Healing

My family and I have received great blessings through Christian Science, and for the benefit of those in bondage who are seeking for the truth, I give this testimony of some of the many healings experienced. In the year 1911 I became sick. The doctors did all they could for me, but instead of improving I became worse. Upon their advice I was taken to the hospital and given a thorough examination by three physicians. The verdict was that medicine would do me no good, but an operation might, although it was very doubtful whether I would ever be well again. They would not tell me the name of the disease, and I declined to be operated on, so was taken home on December 24, 1911. I had no use of my body from the hips down, and to all appearances my legs were slowly shriveling up; there was no strength in my back, but the pain there was intense. I could not get about even with crutches, and had to be carried like a baby. In the early part of 1912, upon the advice of friends, my wife took me to another doctor, who with another specialist made a thorough examination, and I was given hope of recovery. Under this doctor's treatment, which included electric treatments and the administering of strychnine, I improved to the extent that I could get about without the use of a cane, but this condition did not last long, and I got worse than ever.

During the entire period of the illness, friends persisted in sending me Christian Science literature, but I would not read it. When the doctor under whose treatment I was last, informed my wife that he could do nothing for me except give me something to relieve the pain in the back, my wife did not inform me of this verdict, but she begged me to give Christian Science a trial. I therefore began to read the Sentinel and the Journal, particularly the testimonies. Then a friend loaned me his copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which I eagerly read, but without understanding much of it. About the middle of December, 1914, my wife took me to a practitioner, who lovingly began treatment. As I was unable to walk, even with crutches, the kind lady came to the buggy and talked to me. My wife took me to her twice a week and absent treatments were also given. The healing was slow, and one day the practitioner asked if I had complied with her request not to take any medicine. I told her that my wife had destroyed all the medicine except the strychnine. As I had taken that three times a day for over three years, I was under the impression it would be injurious to discontinue at once, but the practitioner informed me that if I wanted to get well I must put my entire trust in God and destroy this drug. This was done, and my condition improved immediately. At first I walked with two crutches, then the practitioner asked if I could not put them away, as God was my strength. I put one crutch away, then used two canes, then one, and finally none at all.

I received the first Christian Science treatment in December, 1914, and went back to work in June, 1915. My healing was slow, but that made me study harder, and I am now a better man, not only physically but morally, as I no longer drink intoxicating liquors of any kind. This habit has been permanently overcome, as well as a quick temper.

One day I met the doctor under whose treatment I was last, and he stated that he was very much surprised to see me in perfect health. He wanted to know what had brought about the change, and I informed him that I had been healed through Christian Science. He said he was very glad to see me well again, and that I should always be grateful, for now that I was a well man he could tell me the name of the disease, which was locomotor ataxia.

As a family we have experienced many healings, and words are inadequate to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for us. I am thankful to God, not only for the healing, but also for the spiritual uplift and for a better understanding of God and His love for man. I thank God also that He gave to this world Mrs. Eddy, who so lovingly and patiently labored in His vineyard, and has given us "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" which unlocks the Bible, and now is read daily in our home in the study of the Lesson-Sermon. I am thankful to our Father-Mother God for the Christian Science literature, for the Sunday school, and the church services, and I pray daily for that Mind to be in me "which was also in Christ Jesus."

H. F. G. MUELLER, Houston, Texas.

I am very grateful for the great help that Christian Science has been to me on the battlefield. I have been many times comforted when in danger, and have experienced the peace that passeth understanding. Often when the shells were bursting around and the majority of men were fearful, I have felt calm and confident and safe in divine protection. During many of the long route marches, I have been strengthened and encouraged by the knowledge that man is spiritual and not material, and cannot therefore suffer from fatigue or any depressing material condition. On one occasion when we started out, we had not gone very far when a sense of fatigue and weariness came over me, and I felt that I should have to drop out, but I immediately set to work to know the truth as taught in Christian Science and almost at once I was strengthened. I was able to keep up to the end of the journey and arrived feeling fresh and well. Anyone who knows what a long route march means to the infantry, will understand what a boon and blessing Christian Science has been to me.

I have been able to use my knowledge of Christian Science in producing harmonious conditions when out resting in billets. During the very severe winter in the early part of 1917, I was guided through this knowledge to quite cozy quarters. I was, according to the doctors, very seriously wounded in the head, and constant inquiry was made if I experienced any pain or inconvenience from this wound. Although I was wounded in a number of other places, including two deep flesh wounds, no mention was made of these. My curiosity was aroused by the fact that I did not experience any pain or inconvenience from the head, so wrote home to the practitioner who had been giving me a helping thought, to ask if he had helped me at that time. I received a reply in which he said that one day he received a strong impulse to give me extra help, as he felt that I was in need of it. This occurred at the time I was wounded and I have no doubt that it was the means of saving my life. It has been a proof to me that even a distance of sixteen thousand miles is no obstacle to the immediate operation of divine Love.

I have had to meet the opposition and hostility of young fellows who so often "mark" anyone who does not join them in their worldly pleasures. On one occasion, while on our way home on the transport, I was left out in the cold, so to speak; no one seemed to want to speak to me, and when asked to pass anything to me would do so in a far from pleasant manner. I felt hurt at this for the time, but decided that some mental work was necessary, so I set about to know the truth and to declare it. I worked on this problem before retiring for the night, and early next morning when I went to breakfast I was greeted on all sides in a bright and pleasant manner. I hardly expected such a complete change as this, and felt deeply grateful for such a beautiful experience.

For all that Christian Science has done for me I am deeply thankful to God and grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy.—PRIVATE F. O. DARCY, Sydney, Australia.

I did not come to Christian Science for physical healing, but because of a deep desire to know God, and when I found and entered His kingdom through the teachings of Christian Science, the "other things" promised by Christ Jesus were added in the exact ratio that my thought was prepared to receive the blessing. For ten years prior to this time my health was greatly impaired, and in the language of Scripture I "suffered many things of many physicians," but received no permanent help. Three months of nervous prostration left me with a form of heart disease so severe as to cause frequent attacks of unconsciousness. I also suffered intensely with varicose veins, neuralgia, and a serious organic disease. For a young woman with the responsibility of a home and small children, the outlook was far from promising.

In conformity with custom I had joined a church in girlhood, but the social life was all that appealed to me. In after years, because of my husband's prominence in church work, I began to investigate the deeper significance of church membership. I wanted my Christianity to be as practical as my housekeeping; I wanted peace and harmony and justice in my human affairs, but when I asked for bread I was given a stone. I was told that God sends sickness and affliction to strengthen and form character. When as a mother I sought help and guidance for the daily training and protection of my children, I was told that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children "unto the third and fourth generation." Disappointed, rebellious, resentful beyond words to describe, I left the church and cast my boat adrift on the sea of chance. Material remedies, will power, blind faith, likewise failed me, and for a year my beliefs were "as a pendulum swinging between nothing and something, having no fixity" (Science and Health, p. 23). My physical condition was not to be compared to the mental unrest—the fear, discouragement, and doubt which pursued me day and night. Somehow I knew that back of all this inharmony there was a reality, but I never supposed it could be found on this side of the grave.

When the last material prop had failed, I found a copy of the Christian Science Sentinel, and that day marked the beginning of the new birth. Except for the name, I knew nothing of this teaching, but I was not prejudiced against it. I wanted God, and it did not matter to me by what means I found Him. The physical healing spoken of in the testimonies did not appeal to me so much as the joy and peace which they expressed. I thought if those people had found a religion which met their every need, then I could find it, too. I felt that if I could find God and know Him I would be willing to carry around my sick body always; but Truth does not work in any half way. The Master's promise, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," is operative throughout all time. That same day a visit was made to a Christian Scientist for information regarding the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. She loaned me a copy, saying it would teach me about God, who is Love, and of man's relationship to Him.

My healing was instantaneous. I never had an attack of heart trouble after that day. Elastic bandages were laid off and the swelling of the veins disappeared, a partially paralyzed arm was restored, and the attacks of neuralgia became a thing of the past. This healing took place before I had ever met a practitioner or attended a Christian Science church service. The organic disease was slower to yield. My thought needed cleansing from that which defiles and maketh a lie. My chief foe was resentment toward the orthodox church. Pride, egotism, and self-will had to give place to humility and love, and when I had grasped enough of the teachings of Christian Science to love God supremely and my neighbor as myself, I was made "every whit whole."

Eighteen months later, when one of the best oculists in this city could do nothing for my husband's impaired sight, he was healed through Christian Science. For six years ours has been a Christian Science home. Appendicitis, blood poisoning, biliousness, colds, fevers, and a supposedly incurable hereditary disease, besides many so-called children's diseases, have been overcome through our own understanding of God's word as elucidated by our textbook. We have indeed found the health, joy, and peace which is every man's birthright. While grateful for the physical healings, I am far more grateful for the spiritual understanding of the Bible, which has made that book our daily companion, and which hourly protects our home from evil of every name and nature.

I am grateful for the privilege of church membership and church work, for class instruction, and for the great privilege of being a channel through which others are finding help.—MRS. ELLA HAWSE RIGGLES, Washington, D. C.

The winter of 1907 found me bedfast with a complication of diseases, among them a serious stomach trouble, which had not yielded to the earnest efforts of a number of physicians and a specialist. I had no hope of recovery and little desire to get well.

A copy of the Christian Science Sentinel was handed me, with the remark that I could have the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, if I cared to read it. At this time I knew nothing of Christian Science, but remembered hearing some one make the remark that its adherents did not take medicine. I did not become interested in the Sentinel until I began to read the testimonies, then I borrowed the textbook and began to read it. I was not able to hold the book, so had to read lying on my side, and although I did not understand much that I read, I could hardly put the book down. In three days I was able to do little things about the house, and began to leave off different medicines. I also went to the table and ate what was put before me. There was some fear as I would do these things, but something seemed to be leading me to do them, and I made the effort, with the result that I was healed at once of all the discordant conditions from which I had been suffering.

About six weeks after this I was called one morning by a member of the family who was suffering from a headache, and asked if I could prepare the breakfast. As I stepped out of bed every symptom of the old troubles came back. My first thought was that it was not true that I had been relieved and healed, and that the family would ridicule me, as they had been opposed to my studying Christian Science. I seemed to be helpless again, and what could I do? As I asked myself this question it came to me to repeat verses of Scripture, and while dressing I did this, for I had read the Bible a great deal and was familiar with a number of passages. Then every few minutes the Master's words would come to me: "Get thee behind me, Satan." The breakfast was prepared, but I could not eat. A member of the family was going away at eleven o'clock and I had to prepare a basket of provisions, so I went about this, but with a great effort, for I was suffering intensely. When the dinner was prepared the family came to the table and I sat down with them, but felt too sick to eat. There was a couch in the room and I looked toward it, thinking I would have to admit to the family that I was ill. Hitherto they had not noticed that I was suffering. Then it came to me to make one more effort, so I repeated firmly to myself the truth, and instantly was relieved of all pain, was made free. I ate my dinner and enjoyed it, feeling that I was being sustained by some unseen presence. In the afternoon I went downtown, and it seemed to me that every one I met was smiling and happy, and everything looked bright and beautiful, I was so uplifted.

These two experiences were to me foundation stones, and in the years that have passed they have been proofs which could not be refuted of what Truth does. The healing came as the result of the reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." I am grateful to-day to be able to say that I have been lifted above the clouds of material sense, and that I enjoy in an ever increasing measure both mental and physical freedom. My concept of life has undergone a considerable change. I am happier and freer than ever before. I cannot express sufficient appreciation of Mrs. Eddy and this healing truth.

MRS. JENNIE GARRETT DEVORE, Richmond, Ky.

I became interested in Christian Science a few years ago. At that time I was suffering from loss of speech. For about eight years I had been unable to talk above a strained, husky whisper, and even that was a great effort for me. Material remedies had been tried without avail and throat specialists told me I could not be helped, as part of the vocal chords were destroyed and there was a condition of partial paralysis. After a few weeks of desultory study of Christian Science I took my first treatment from a practitioner, and even though no immediate improvement in my voice was noticeable, I knew I had found the "pearl of great price." The change in my disposition was felt and remarked on by my family,—I became more affectionate and kindly. The next result was freedom from the liquor habit and all that goes with it. I had been a slave to liquor for years and occasionally resorted to a drug, as I was despondent, owing to my physical condition, and was growing worse. The desire for stimulants was gone from the first treatment. As a professional musician I find that my ability is increased and I am able to obtain more pleasant and profitable engagements.

The complete healing of my throat seemed slow, but in a little over a year my voice was normal. The slow healing, however, made it necessary for me to study faithfully, and thus I gained in understanding of this glorious truth, whereas I might have dropped it had I been quickly healed, for I had never read a whole chapter from the Bible in my life before. Now the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," together with the authorized Christian Science literature, are my constant companions on the road, where we need such loving friends. No words can express my gratitude to and for that God-inspired woman, Mrs. Eddy, and to all the friends that have helped me to realize my wonderful heritage as a child of God. I will try to be faithful until I am come to the complete realization that "now are we the sons of God."

DON M. SHANKLIN, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

I feel that it is time, and my duty as well, to acknowledge what Christian Science has done for me, for perchance my experience may help some one. I was a teacher in a western city for a number of years, and during the early eighties many of my fellow teachers told me they were experiencing help in many ways from the study of Christian Science. I had belonged to a church for years, and attended the services from a sense of duty, but could see that I was getting little good out of them and became dissatisfied; yet I was prejudiced against Christian Science. One summer vacation, however, I resolved to purchase the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, to see what there was in it to give so much strength and help to some of my associates. I read it carefully many times, but was antagonistic from start to finish and only read it for the purpose of criticism, which of course did me no good.

I laid the book away and did not open it for about ten years, during which time I married and led a busy life in which was much discord, unhappiness, and poor health. There came a time when we had complete leisure, and my husband and I concluded we would have time to read thoroughly that Christian Science book and see if there was any good in it. We both decided that it was a good thing, and as we could then understand it somewhat, we kept on, until now we have been studying for about thirteen years, and the longer we study the book the more we value the help which Mrs. Eddy has placed before humanity, by which people can work out their own salvation.

We have had many wonderful healings, and instead of discord, unhappiness, and poor health, there is now harmony, happiness, and good health. We are able to work out many demonstrations for ourselves and are constantly gaining understanding, for which we feel very thankful, and we could not be induced to go back to the old way of thinking. We have been taking up Government land, and have been living there for seven years, far away from any church society of any denomination, in a sparsely settled country, so I have had no opportunity to connect myself with any branch of the Christian Science church, but my husband and I have both been students of its textbook, and no money could buy our books if we could not secure others. Our lives, health, and home conditions are completely changed, and it is unmistakably due to this study, which has given us an entirely different viewpoint of life and a changed concept of our great Supreme Ruler, the giver of all good.

I have been free from rheumatism now going on seven years and have been healed of bowel trouble of over twenty years' standing, as well as numerous other ills. I am almost seventy years old, but teach our district school here in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains and walk to and from the schoolhouse to my home, a distance of about seven miles. I study Christian Science every morning before starting out for the duties of the day.

MRS. MARY C. MCQUISTON, Raymond, Cal.

For the many blessings received through Christian Science during the past ten years I am very grateful. Liver trouble and chronic croup were overcome soon after I became interested in this teaching, through the reading of Science and Health. Our son, who was about six years old, had been subject to croup, but he has never had it since. The lessons learned from those first healings have been of great help to me all these years, for I learned to go direct to my books in every need. Very seldom have I had to ask for treatment from a practitioner. It was three years after I came into Christian Science that I made my first request for help. At that time our son had measles, and one treatment was given him.

I am most grateful for the sense of protection gained through reading the Lesson-Sermon every day. I am trying to realize the allness of God and man's relation to divine Principle and what it is that guides, guards, and protects us at all times. I am thankful to God, the source of all good, and am trying each day to live in accordance with the beautiful teachings of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy. My prayer is that this testimony will help some one and thereby glorify God.—MRS. GEORGIANA HOWE, Portland, Ore.

The first healing in our family, through the power of Truth as taught in Christian Science, was that of my mother some six years ago. She was healed of an abnormal growth which was causing her much pain and misery. She had been examined by a physician and two trained nurses who advised an immediate operation, and this was being considered when a friend spoke of Christian Science. Treatment was asked for and to our astonishment the growth vanished in three treatments.

As we had received such wonderful proof of the efficacy of Christian Science practice, treatment was again asked for when my small brother had measles and a year later when he had chicken pox. Both times all the manifestations of disease disappeared the fourth day, although treatment was not begun until the second day. About two years ago my mother was healed in a few days of a severe attack of rheumatism.

I have been healed of stomach disorder, worry, also to a great extent of fear, and business troubles have been overcome. I am to-day most grateful, not only for the overcoming of the errors of sense but for the fact that Christian Science is a preventive of discord. Some time ago my arm pained me so much that I could not move it without the greatest agony. The thought, however, came that I could make use of my understanding of the truth, so I tried to realize that God is the only Mind and that matter has no intelligence. Then I looked up the word action in the Concordance of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and after studying a few moments found that I was moving my arm without the least pain.

I am grateful for having taught in the Christian Science Sunday school and for the privilege of acting as usher at church services. We are all most grateful to Mrs. Eddy for the discovery of this Science of right thinking, and I am striving to have more of that Mind in me "which was also in Christ Jesus."—HANS BARTH, New York, N. Y.

My attention was first called to Christian Science while I was a young girl, but not being associated with people of this faith it soon passed from my thought. Afterward for a long time all I happened to hear or read of it was of a disparaging nature and I felt no interest in the subject. About fifteen years ago, however, my attention was again called to it because a sister was healed of a so-called fatal disease through its ministrations. As I had given up two years of teaching because of her illness, I knew from personal observation what a change had been wrought in her. After her complete recovery I again resumed teaching, having accepted a position in a town a considerable distance from my home. In the meantime this sister had become a subscriber to the Sentinel and sent me an occasional copy. While I rather liked the reading matter I began to wonder whether it might not bring disgrace to the whole family for her to espouse such a faith, but I have learned long since that Christian Science is the greatest blessing that can come to any family.

Although I had usually enjoyed a fair degree of health, I was subject to colds and throat trouble every winter, and during the second winter after this sister's healing I felt impelled to write to her for help to overcome a severe cold, as the usual remedies had afforded no relief. The result of her response was most gratifying. I sent for a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," but read it very little until two years later, when, having lost my mother, I failed to find the comfort I craved in the religion to which I had adhered. I then took up the study of Christian Science more systematically. Besides experiencing relief from troublesome colds and sore throat, I have been healed of chilblains and other annoying ills. While I am naturally grateful for the physical benefits, I am even more thankful for the spiritual enlightenment gained through the study of Mrs. Eddy's writings in connection with the Bible, for the privilege of class instruction, and for all of the periodicals issued by The Christian Science Publishing Society.

MISS IDA A. WAGNER, Watertown, S. Dak.

I did not take up the study of Christian Science for physical healing, but was led to do so through many beautiful proofs of the power of Truth by members of my family. Then through reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was healed of catarrh. The Bible was formerly an unknown book to me, but now is a daily companion. The more I learn of Christian Science the more I see the need of plucking the tares from the wheat. I am very thankful to God and grateful to our revered Leader for all the blessings that have come to me through the study and application of Christian Science, but most grateful for the understanding I am gaining of God and man.

MRS. GUSSIE ELSNER-MARKS, Chicago, Ill.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude I give this testimony of the many blessings that have come into my life during the past ten years, since I first took up the study of Christian Science. I did not come to it for physical healing, but for relief from mental depression, as I had suffered for years from severe attacks of morbidness, bordering on melancholia, until life seemed to hold little light or joy for me. I had attended church from early childhood, had read and studied the Bible faithfully at times, but until I learned in Christian Science how to apply the truths found therein, I could find nothing tangible to apply to my daily problem.

Through the revelation of Truth as taught in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" I have been able to prove many things, and I now find through study of the Bible a never failing stream of living water. Christian Science has met my every need, physical, mental, and financial, and words cannot express the happiness, joy, and peace that have come into my life through this truth. I am indeed grateful to all the loving friends who have so kindly helped me on the way from sense to Soul. My daily prayer is that I may live in obedience to God in gratitude for all the good that has come to me and mine, and help others find this way of Truth and Life. Thus only can I show my thankfulness to God and to Christ Jesus the Wayshower, also my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, whose untiring efforts revealed this wonderful truth.

MISS MARY E. ALLEYNE, Detroit, Mich.

[Editorial in The Washington (D. C.) Herald]

It is a natural and human wish to share all good things with our fellows. The right sort of boy gives his comrade a bite of his apple. The unselfish motorist gives a lift to his less fortunate neighbor. The reader of a good book passes along the information that it is a good book, et cetera and et cetera.

The Herald is simply passing along a good thing when it tells of the excellence of The Christian Science Monitor as a daily newspaper. Its sane editorials, its selection of news, and the typographically clear and uniform presentation of news, features, and advertisements are such as to commend it to observing and critical readers.

Christian Science, whether you are of the faith or not, has run the gamut of derision and ridicule and indifference until it is to-day accepted as a guiding impulse in the lives of many of our best citizens. It is our belief that The Christian Science Monitor has done more to wear down opposition than any other agency.

To-day with two Christian Science chaplains in the army and one just appointed for the navy by Secretary Daniels we are offered a concrete example of the liberality of the opinion of the day.

[A correspondent in the Ann Arbor (Mich.) Times News]

In a recent magazine article entitled "The Child and the Public School," Dr. Lewis P. Crutcher, a practicing physician, and at the time the article was written the president of the Board of Education of Long Beach, California, said, "The function of the public school is to educate—not to medicate. . . . It is the school that is public—not the child."

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

Whatever happens in the world without, 1918 must be a year of victory in the deep places of the inner life. Unless we master and control appetite, ambition, passion, and all the forces that surge to and fro in our nature, the conquering by the sword of the enemies of freedom and humanity will find us inadequate to the remaking of the world.

[The Christian Work]

Wars are never begun or ended by force; they begin in the thoughts, wishes, purposes of men; and if they ever end that is where they end. When men stop thinking war, wishing for war, preparing for war, wars will cease.

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

An Actor's Appreciation ## of The Christian Science Monitor

A prominent American actor in the course of a recent interview asked THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR representative, "How does the Monitor manage to get theater news from London, usually, before any other newspapers in the United States?"

Upon being told that a special writer provided this news from London the actor remarked that that was another example of the value of conducting a newspaper along the lines of a definite policy. Very few papers, he said, seemed to him to have any discoverable character or individual tone, but the Monitor was full of a flavor of its own, and had upon him the total impression of containing nothing but meat.

Most papers he found unsatisfactory, because upon examination they proved to be made up mostly of exciting headlines with nothing definitely set forth below them.

Theatrical managers, he continued, use the Monitor in their business. An actor comes into their office and asks, "What's new in London?" The manager replies, "Let's look in the Monitor." And there it is, if the play is of any importance, set forth in sufficient detail so that the manager will know whether or not he cares to know more about the new piece. If he does, he says, "That sounds interesting. Let's cable to find out how much they will take for the American rights."

"My wife quite depends on the Monitor," he continued. "That review the Monitor had from Montreal about Miss ———'s new play strikes me as particularly enterprising. The news of that play traveled all over the world, with a picture of Miss ——— in costume of the character before the play was seen in any of the principal theatrical centers."

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission to the world has been opened through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at training cantonments, at nominal postage, literature offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen in the United States. A printed notice on the front of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, and Le Héraut de Christian Science, signed by the Postmaster-General, explains the simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to mail them regularly as desired.

VOLUME XX MARCH 9, 1918 NUMBER 28

"There should be time no longer"

HAWLEY O. TAYLOR, PH.D.

OTHER things may come and go but time goes on forever,—so it appears to the human mind. Material existence is wholly temporal, pertaining to time. The language of mankind is permeated with the thought of time; action and being are expressed by the present, past, or future tense; the whole of human activity—political, commercial, educational, ethical, scientific, and religious—assumes time to be one of the most important factors with which it has to deal. The concept of the lapse of time is so strongly intrenched in human experience that it is well-nigh impossible to imagine even eternity as being independent of it. Eternity is described in terms of time—"the endless years of eternity." Yet time has no more relation to eternity than matter has to Spirit. The temporal is simply a counterfeit in both cases, and neither leads to nor suggests the permanent. When the wonders of eternity and Spirit are known and experienced, the concepts of time and matter will be meaningless and gone.

At first thought it may seem that the stream of time flows on continuously and uniformly, but have we not all had experiences which seemed to pass quickly and others slowly? One person in the house will say that last month seemed an age, while another will say that it seemed only a week. The difference in the state of mind made the rate of flow of the stream of time seem different to each person. The experience regarding time in these cases, an experience which every one recognizes as being of frequent occurrence, was entirely dependent upon that which occupied the attention of the individual concerned.

Again, it is not the passage of time but only the concept of it which seems to be the controlling element in giving one the appearance of youth or age. The greatest American inventor is not much concerned about time, and consequently it has taken little notice of him. A remarkable instance is cited by Mrs. Eddy (see Science and Health, p. 245) of a lady of seventy-four who, through certain circumstances, retained the appearance of a girl of twenty. On the other hand, many instances are recorded in history of rapid maturing and aging, as in the case of a monarch of Europe whose hair turned gray in a single night. It is thus very clear that the marks of time are not dependent upon the lapse of years but rather upon the mental state.

But although time as a psychological phenomenon may seem to vary with different people, may it not be true that it is unvarying as a physical phenomenon in the material universe? In this connection it may be interesting to note that in the last few years physicists have given much attention to what is called the theory of relativity, which postulates that time, not only as an experience in the human consciousness but also as measured by all regular processes of nature, is dependent upon the velocity of bodies, such as worlds in space. Thus the flight of time in the case of a stationary world, if such could exist, would perhaps, like dreams, crowd the experiences of years into a second, while for a rapidly traveling world, the events of a second might be spread out over a century.

The never ending struggle of the physicist to eliminate incongruities in physical theories as new theories are accepted, often leads to surprising conclusions, as in this case. Reasoning along the line that all observation of motion must be relative in its nature, since there is no stationary object in the universe to which motion can be referred, has led to the theory already stated, which is now in such favor among physicists that no hypothesis in physics is accepted which does not square with it. The grind of time, which seems to be irresistible in its ceaselessness, has thus come before the attention of human beings. As measured in the material universe, it is now regarded as dependent upon the physical property of speed of bodies; its existence in the absolute is unknown to mortals, since there is no way of marking time except by some recurring event inherent in matter. The conclusion that time is merely a property of matter is thus irresistible when these considerations are viewed in the light of the inspired words proclaimed by John on the Isle of Patmos: "And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever and ever . . . that there should be time no longer."

When all the facts of sense testimony are considered, time is seen to be merely a phase of human consciousness. Human consciousness includes all human experience which, although interpreted as transpiring in an external world, is, as revealed in the light of Christian Science, simply the one illusion, mortal mind, individualized in each seeming human mind. These physical conceptions are in a state of change even to the extent that the existence of the basis of material substance, the ether, is now called into question because it is incompatible with the theory of relativity. What then constitutes laws of matter when its foundations are continually shifting? These asserted laws are merely inherited or formulated conceptions which for a time seem to correspond with our experience. As our experience changes, however, these conceptions change. Such changing conceptions can of course have no binding force as law, and hence no material phenomenon can have power to subjugate man except as he believes that it is true.

As matter, to the student of Christian Science, disappears under the searchlight of truth, so time, being a property of matter, will be found powerless as a governing factor in any real sense. True growth and unfoldment will be found independent of time, and achievement will be freed from a sense of retardation. There is thus no necessity for disease to run a course or for a period of convalescence. Time has been a heavy burden for mortals to bear, but spiritual understanding has revealed the truth which lifts it from their shoulders. The freedom thus gained gives man dominion over all sense of youth or age and loosens the chains of ignorance, discord, poverty, and imperfection. To mortals it seems to take time to work out of these things, but as the sense of time constitutes no law which has binding force, mortals cast off its seeming power in proportion as they recognize themselves, not as inhabitants of a material realm, but as perfect spiritual ideas of the divine Principle of the universe.

Copyright, 1918, by The Christian Science Publishing Society, Falmouth and St. Paul Streets, Boston, Massachusetts. Entered at Boston post office as second-class matter

The barrier of time which ever seems to intrude between mortals and the good which they seek and which is another phase of the illusion that man is separate from God, drops into obscurity before the eternal truth that man is inseparable from God since he is the expression of infinite good. The truth concerning all things is an eternal fact. In mathematics, the product of twenty-four and eighteen is an ever present fact, but this may not be evident to the beginner who laboriously works out the multiplication with perhaps erasures and discouragements, and after getting the result which he may imagine was due to his own efforts, he remarks about the time required to bring the fact into being, while, to the mathematician, the product was known when the figures were stated. It is only because of the seeming necessity to work out spiritual truths in physical symbols that time seems to be required; when it is seen that matter forms no part of spiritual truth and is not a necessary accompaniment nor expression of it, then the element of time in the overcoming of all manner of physical discords will vanish, and healing will be instantaneous.

The illusions which seem to fetter us, as expressed in the limitations constructed by the physical senses, are reversed in every detail when man and the universe are understood to be spiritual and good. Wonderful revelations are continually coming to light as each one discovers for himself facts of being which set thought free and make more vivid the presence and power of Spirit, Life, and Love. In the words of our Leader (Science and Health, p. 598), "One moment of divine consciousness, or the spiritual understanding of Life and Love, is a foretaste of eternity. This exalted view, obtained and retained when the Science of being is understood, would bridge over with life discerned spiritually the interval of death, and man would be in the full consciousness of his immortality and eternal harmony, where sin, sickness, and death are unknown." To this she adds, "Eternity is God's measurement of Soul-filled years."

Symbolic Imagery

ISRAEL PICKENS

ON page 520 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Human language can repeat only an infinitesimal part of what exists." That this is a truism is especially witnessed wherever the infinite theme of absolute Truth has been treated. This inadequacy of words to describe the things of Spirit appears constantly throughout the Scriptural writings, and is one of the reasons why similitudes and metaphorical expressions are so frequently employed to convey to the disciple a clearer comprehension of the great truth of being.

Another and important reason for this is the fact that the Bible was written in ages not far remote from the days when the only form of written expression was that of picture writing, or hieroglyphics. The book of Job, which historians claim to be the oldest of books, abounds in symbol and metaphor, as do also the writings of Moses, David, and Isaiah; while the New Testament writings, although of a much later period, are likewise garlanded with the same metaphoric beauty. Indeed, nearly all of the Bible's greatest truths are thus veiled.

More than all others, however, the teachings of the blessed Nazarene possess a metaphoric imagery unparalleled in their masterful meanings. That he used the simplest language in bringing the mightiest truths to the sin-dulled ears of mortals is one of the vivid characteristics of his recorded sayings. Thus, for example, the doctrine he taught was likened to leaven which was placed in three measures of meal, "till the whole was leavened," a clear prophecy of the certain transformation of human consciousness which this doctrine would finally accomplish. The church he compared to a grain of mustard seed,—so obscure and insignificant in its embryonic state, but ultimately growing so as to reach out and extend its Christly beneficence over the whole earth.

The kingdom of heaven, to which Jesus so frequently referred, was made plain to the understanding of his disciples in a series of significant metaphors, the purpose of each one being to unfold the wondrous sublimity of divine revelation. The penitent seeking forgiveness was glowingly portrayed in the stories of the piece of silver, the lost sheep, and the prodigal son. Those upon whom spiritual understanding had shed its life-giving halo, he likened to "a city that is set on an hill." What could have so calmed the fear of his flock as the story of the Father's watchful care of the tiny sparrow, or what could have bespoken the glad promise of the Love that is infinite more than the beauteous picture of the lilies of the field! Here were the simplest subjects used to expound the greatest things of life,—even the allness of God and of man's inseparable oneness with Him.

On account of the fact that the Bible was written at an early period, among an Eastern people, it is quite easily understood why symbols were so generally employed in teaching, even though the written language itself had attained a higher evolution. It was the form of instruction most readily understood by the student in those early days. Although Jesus' teachings thus abounded in simile and metaphor, it is clear that he recognized the ability of his disciples to see the spiritual truth beyond the symbol, for he said, "Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parable."

It is also significant to note that in the latter part of Jesus' career he not only perceived his disciples' advancement in spiritual understanding, but also that these truths of being needed not even to be veiled in symbolic imagery, for in the sixteenth chapter of John occurs this statement: "The time cometh, when I shall no more speak unto you in proverbs, but I shall shew you plainly of the Father." That he did so is evidenced by the greater degree of spiritual understanding the disciples attained in healing the sick, raising the dead, and doing other works which he commissioned them to do.

Why then, it may be asked, did this healing work become dissociated from the Christian church after about the third century? Was it not the fact that a perversion of Christianity came when humanity's ideal reached out no farther than the symbol itself, and the signs that should "follow them that believe" were superseded by ritualism and ceremonial? Indeed it was this very thing which blinded the eyes of the early Christians, causing them to go even so far astray from Principle as to worship the personality of the human Jesus, and to forget the eternal Christ, Truth, of which the Nazarene was the greatest exponent and representative. Thus it was that for a while Christianity became to a large extent ineffectual, so far as the meeting of humanity's deepest needs was concerned.

A notable advance in the enlightenment of the ages is witnessed in the present era, when devout thinkers could be ready to receive and grasp the message contained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." The mission of this book is to interpret the Scriptures in their spiritual and therefore true meaning, and this has been done with less resort to material symbol than is to be found in the Bible. Christian Science in no way decries the symbolism of the Bible; rather does it elucidate it in all its beauty, and unfold the richness of meaning back of these types. It also at the same time presents the spiritual import of the Biblical writings in a manner that is wholly metaphysical.

Christian Science is in no respect abstract. On the contrary, it is a comprehensible and logical statement of absolute Truth in a direct and scientific order. Its transcendentalism appears dark and abstruse only to the materialistic sense which refuses to entertain its angelic behests. But blessed is that one for whom the Science of Christianity has unlocked the treasured truths of the Scriptures. Our Leader tells us (Message for 1900, p. 5), "The spiritual sense of the Scriptures understood enables one to utilize the power of divine Love in casting out God's opposites, called evils, and in healing the sick."

Teaching the Scriptures

ETHEL MUNRO GOSS

THE first requirement in our by-law on Sunday schools (Manual, Art. XX, Sect. 2) is: "The Sabbath School children shall be taught the Scriptures." Bearing in mind that the object of all education is to develop, not to inform; to draw out, not to pour in; and to nurture the spiritual life of the child, how are we to teach the Scriptures, and what are we to teach? Human knowledge does not heal, but divine wisdom does. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 170), an extract from a sermon by Mrs. Eddy is quoted, in which she says, "The material record of the Bible . . . is no more important to our well-being than the history of Europe and America; but the spiritual application bears upon our eternal life."

One of the motives underlying all religious instruction is to inspire the child with a reverent religious attitude toward life. One of the means of nurturing reverence and wonder in the child is the inspiration gained from the lives of the Bible heroes. Carlyle says, "Worship is transcendent wonder," and who that has looked into the uplifted, wondering eyes of a child has not humbly prayed for strength and consecration to feed these lambs. In the Christian Science Sunday school all the pupils, the older as well as the younger ones, are being taught the Scriptures, beginning with the First Lessons, outlined as the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer with its spiritual interpretation, which begins on page 16 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and the Beatitudes. These prepare the way for the study of the Lesson-Sermon on the part of all the pupils as they are ready to grasp its meaning, and also to apply it daily in the working out of their problems.

In the Sunday schools of other churches the primary classes are taught largely by kindergarten methods, in which the use of crayon, pictures, and songs are employed, and while we are not competing with any such attractions, we must be alert mentally to make our presentation of truth vivid and attractive. We must know that the children love the truth and want the truth for Truth's sake. We have the advantage of knowing that we can prove our statements, that we are teaching a demonstrable religion, and we must remember that the Sunday school is an important part of the church, of which Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 583), "The Church is that institution, which affords proof of its utility and is found elevating the race, rousing the dormant understanding from material beliefs to the apprehension of spiritual ideas and the demonstration of divine Science, thereby casting out devils, or error, and healing the sick."

What a different perspective we get on the Bible characters when we take them out of the realm of ecclesiasticism, wrapped in the mist of far-off years, and look at them with a fresh interest, as actual and spiritual individualities. The essential points in the Hebrew religion of the Old Testament which separated it from the rest of the world were, first, its monotheism, and, second, its constant relating of religion to ethics, of doctrine to demonstration. This is the golden thread which runs all through the Scriptures, which gives meaning to the lives of prophet and seer, and which, obscured by priestcraft for a time, finds fuller expression in the Christianity of the New Testament. It is expressed by Jesus as the fulfillment of the law in the two duties, love to God and love to man.

Methods are as varied as is individuality, but the fundamental objective underlying these methods is the same—to teach the child to respect, love, and understand the Scriptures, so that, armed with this understanding, he may meet and overcome mortal beliefs. One plan that has worked out in a very interesting way for pupils and teacher takes up the study of the Scriptures from the standpoint of law. The study of the Ten Commandments must include the study of the children of Israel and their journey to the promised land. The keynote of this history is strict obedience to law with consequent suffering from disobedience. This study includes the story of Moses and necessitates taking up in accordance with the lesson for the day the stories of Abraham, Isaac, and Joseph, those simple, strong characters who found and worshiped the one God. Daniel, David, and Elijah, who appeared after the Israelites had received the law, all illustrate the possibilities of man when obedient to divine law.

It has been urged by some great story-tellers that a child needs the broad education of the myths and stories of every nationality, and that the study of our Bible heroes alone would have a narrowing effect. But it is well for parents and teachers to remember that there never was a time in the history of education when there were as many opportunities for the child to gain a knowledge of world literature as at present in the schools and from magazines. Because these Bible heroes stand for an unswerving obedience to the one God it behooves us to deepen these impressions in the home and Sunday school, so that obedience to law may be clearly recognized as the golden thread binding all these great lives together.

With the unfolding of the Scriptures in their spiritual meaning as our aim, and with the Ten Commandments as our central subject, in our study of the Old Testament we can make our lessons continuous from Sunday to Sunday and so hold the attention of the children. With this thought of law as our basis we can link the law and the gospel, the Old and the New Testament, the teaching of Moses and the teaching of Jesus. For while the law of loving our neighbor has been specifically stated by Moses in Leviticus 19:18, it was Jesus who gave us the gospel of humanity and lovingly insisted that love of God must be expressed in love to man. Then, in the study of the Beatitudes, and of the Lord's Prayer with its spiritual interpretation, is opportunity for teaching the parables of Jesus and his demonstrations of healing. His life can be linked with the prophecies in the Old Testament which voiced the longing of the human heart for a way-shower.

constitutes no law which has binding force, mortals cast off its seeming power in proportion as they recognize themselves, not as inhabitants of a material realm, but as perfect spiritual ideas of the divine Principle of the universe.

The barrier of time which ever seems to intrude between mortals and the good which they seek and which is another phase of the illusion that man is separate from God, drops into obscurity before the eternal truth that man is inseparable from God since he is the expression of infinite good. The truth concerning all things is an eternal fact. In mathematics, the product of twenty-four and eighteen is an ever present fact, but this may not be evident to the beginner who laboriously works out the multiplication with perhaps erasures and discouragements, and after getting the result which he may imagine was due to his own efforts, he remarks about the time required to bring the fact into being, while, to the mathematician, the product was known when the figures were stated. The possibilities are endless in illustrating the Beatitudes, if we keep ever before us the fact that they are ascending steps in the unfolding of man's true consciousness, and contrast them with the formalism and ritualism of the Pharisee. One phase of this ritualism, expressed in the wearing of phylacteries or frontlets on the forehead, is interesting. Originally intended to remind the children of Israel of the law, the custom grew to have such a different significance that it was sternly denounced by Jesus. In the story of the good Samaritan the priest and Levite, adorned with these phylacteries, these empty symbols of law, failed in their duty to their neighbor; and the simple Samaritan with his merciful ministrations fulfilled the law.

Another ideal which is apparent in these Scripture stories is the courage with which prophet and apostle faced a material world. Our children need the inspiration of such heroism, because the children of the Christian Science Sunday school have often to stand more or less alone in their life at day school, and mortal mind often tempts them to go with the tide, not to confess their faith before all men. The heart of a child is very sensitive and the child does not like to be put apart from its fellows, so they need the story of Daniel who, three times a day, a captive in an alien land, prayed to the God of his fathers, and who was not afraid to eat pulse in preference to the luxuries of the king's table; or of David who, in spite of his brother's gibes, feared not to go forth and fight the Philistine. They need to know of Enoch, who "walked with God;" of Paul, fearless and courageous, singing in his dreary prison; and of the love and tenderness of Stephen, praying for his persecutors.

In teaching the children spiritual law through the Scriptures, we know that like Joshua of old we can cause them to inherit the land; and Truth still charges us as it did Joshua to be strong and of a good courage. The good land stretches before them fair and smiling, but they too must cross their Jordan and overcome the cities little by little. Like Caleb of old we can assure them that "we are well able to overcome it," and we can help them by knowing there is no mental inertia, no apathy, toward spiritual things. We can sow the seed only, give needful nourishment and pray; the rest is in God's hands, for the time of awakening will come to each little one.

Thinkers

ETHEL PUTNAM

IN the Preface of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. vii) Mrs. Eddy has written, "The time for thinkers has come." This is a comforting statement to one who looks with some dismay at certain tendencies of the times, when apparently the world wishes to achieve even its pleasures with as little mental effort as possible. Through our Leader's wonderful teaching and practice, humanity is, however, shaking off its mental indolence, and instead of depending on one set of men to do its religious thinking, and on another to do the thinking deemed necessary to keep the body well, men and women are learning to understand God for themselves. So doing, they invariably find that in proportion as they think correctly about God they have healthy bodies and contented minds.

The breadth of Mrs. Eddy's own mental horizon makes it evident that she did not intend to limit thinking in any direction, and in proof of this we have The Christian Science Monitor,—"an international daily newspaper." Perhaps few of us get from the Monitor all that we should, but the past year has made the writer, for one, more grateful for the work it is doing for the world, and increasingly conscious of its clarion call to us all to think.

With the new privilege of the ballot and the duty to use it as wisely as possible, came the realization that the Monitor is an educator competent to fit women for this responsibility. One who did not understand might fancy that women would be led like sheep to the support of this candidate or that, this party or the other; but Christian Science does not encourage blind following, even when the leadership is wise and good. If one were so mistaken as to want to be led without much thought, this easy way would soon prove itself a hard one. None is exempt from the apostolic demand, "Work out your own salvation."

One who would be well informed soon discovers he may not confine his reading to the metaphysical article on the Home Forum page and depend on an occasional authoritative editorial to tell him where to stand on the great questions of the day; the Monitor is not laid out on these lines. The editorials are illuminating, but if read first, instead of satisfying by their comments on the subject in hand they send us back to the news pages, where we are given a very generous provision of instructive articles and reported speeches; and gradually, if not all at once, we realize that while the Monitor will help us to think rightly, it will not do our thinking for us. The time for thinkers has indeed come.

The Present Moment

HECTOR WALLACE SMITH

"WHAT I say unto you I say unto all, Watch." These scientific words recorded in Mark's gospel were uttered by our Master on a memorable occasion when he spoke privately to Peter, James, John, and Andrew as he sat upon the Mount of Olives foretelling the signs which would come to pass on the destruction of the temple. He was admonishing them against sleeping—against the prevalent mesmerism of the day. In the very next chapter we read that three times he found them asleep while in the garden of Gethsemane, and asked of Peter, "Couldest not thou watch one hour?"

No one understood better the real significance of our Lord's warning than did our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who placed the Master's words respecting watchfulness at the beginning of the Christian Science Sentinel; and are not these words to-day of vital importance to Christian Scientists and every one else? To watch does not mean that we are to be alert at stated intervals, or occasionally as there may seem need, but at every moment to maintain the law of Truth, for Mrs. Eddy admonishes us, "Christian Scientists, be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake" (Science and Health, p. 442). As we nightly lay ourselves down for repose, our prayerful declaration of the truth about God and man will, in proportion as it is realized, assure us that the everlasting arms of divine Love afford protection during slumber, and thus enable us to awaken in the morning feeling refreshed and renewed in strength. The psalmist tells us, "Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

Upon reflection we come to see that all we really possess is the consciousness of the present moment in which to think and to act. It has been said that yesterday is always past and to-morrow never comes, because every day is just to-day to each one of us. How important therefore is the eternal now for which personal sense tries to substitute time. In human experience it seems to be the seconds which really count as of momentous value to us, for the hours and even the minutes can be left to look after themselves, as it were, provided we exercise our vigilance upon that present moment which is, as has been pointed out, the only thing we seemingly are able to count upon as our very own.

It behooves us therefore to be constantly alert,—in other words, to pray without ceasing, which in Christian Science simply means that we must strive continually to keep our consciousness full of good thoughts, and thus attain to the Science of right thinking. As we honestly put into practice the endeavor to have, every moment, that Mind which was in Christ Jesus, we shall surely gain the sense of the eternal now. Since God has no consciousness of time, it is inevitable that as we progress, our material sense of seconds, minutes, hours, days, months, and years will gradually diminish until it ultimately disappears when we awake in His image and likeness, spiritual and perfect. The truth is that man is now spiritual and not material, and it is the manifestation in consciousness of the revelation of the healing word of God—the spiritual understanding of Christian Science demonstrated in our daily living—which brings about this radical change in the human mind, away from the sense of time altogether, into that new sense of eternity, the ever presence of God, Spirit, Mind, the eternal now.

In the Manual of The Mother Church our Leader has given to us two important by-laws entitled "Daily Prayer" and "Alertness to Duty" (Art. VIII, Sects. 4 and 6), and how inspiring they become when we begin to realize that we must strive to obey them every moment. As God, good, is never absent, we do not need to watch for good thoughts, but we do learn the necessity of guarding against the entrance of wrong thoughts, for we too often find that evil suggestions are ever ready to attempt to penetrate a weak spot in our armor. We know from practical experience that it is possible, by dwelling "in the secret place of the most High," to refuse any evil suggestion admittance into our consciousness, and that as we abide "under the shadow of the Almighty," any temptation to be sick or to commit sin is rendered powerless, because both sickness and sin are unreal and cannot exist in the divine presence.

Mrs. Eddy counsels us, "Stand porter at the door of thought" (Science and Health, p. 392), and as we gain the true significance of the present moment, in the working out of our own salvation, we shall come to appreciate more the scientific meaning of our Lord's saying, "Watch ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation." As the eternal now dawns on the human consciousness we shall better understand that the demands of divine Principle are imperative, inexorable, and absolute, and that the only way to obtain freedom from error, and to reduce and destroy friction, is to possess an honest desire to try each and every moment to think and act in accordance with the unchanging law of God, good, and thus manifest more peace and harmony and health in our existence here and now.

WHEN Love attunes my thought, and hatred flies,
And Truth lays bare life's ills 'neath sunlit skies,
Then Light of light! My heart in rapture cries.
God comes to me!

When 'neath the dawn's swift-disappearing dew
I catch the violet's eye of deepening blue,
And hear dear nature's song of joy anew,
'Tis God with me!

["Correct View of Man"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 11, 1918]

Notwithstanding the fact that the Scriptures declare in the first chapter, and reiterate through their pages, that man is the image and likeness of God, this view of man is the one most remote from common acceptance. Rather have men inclined to the view, proposed in the myth of the serpent, that men "shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." This false view of man hides the harmony of real being in which spiritual man can have no knowledge of what God does not know. The false estimate of man as a combination of good and evil must therefore be a survey of something outside of the infinite All; and this is an evident absurdity. So the material view of man resolves into nothing more substantial than a supposititious illusion, and from this illusion arise all the ills which afflict material man.

When a mistake is seen as a mistake, it is easy enough to understand that it can be corrected only by the opposite fact. When it is admitted that the material view of man is an entirely false one, the correct view is naturally sought in the spiritual fact, and this carries one back to the original and scientific statement that man is the image and likeness of God. As this spiritual verity dawns upon human consciousness, the false view begins to disappear and the facts concerning immortal man to appear as the only reality. "We look not at the things which are seen," Paul confidently declared, "but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." In the same way, Christian Science reverses the effort to find life and harmony in matter, leads thought away from the mortal to the immortal, and gives to a man such a view of Principle and its idea that he is enabled at once to begin the demonstration of its rule and to prove that harmony exists where once inharmony seemed to be.

The material and unreal beliefs of the human mind, and their outward manifestations of discord, disappear in just the proportion that a man adheres to the true view of the real, ideal man, made in the image of God. It is evident that if a man habitually confines his views of life to the testimony of physical perception, he cannot see the spiritual realities which are just at hand, for they are discerned only through spiritual sense. As more correct views of God and man are gained, consciousness becomes aware of spiritual harmonies never dreamed of before. "As mortals give up the delusion that there is more than one Mind, more than one God," Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 191), "man in God's likeness will appear, and this eternal man will include in that likeness no material element."

The false belief that man knows evil naturally manifests itself evilly, in "the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," in sin, disease, and death. This mortal man, which is the only man visible to material sense, is nothing more than misconception of a true spiritual idea, which exists in divine Mind, entirely separate from matter. The real, ideal man is expressed spiritually, and is the only man recognized by spiritual perception. Spiritual man reflects the divine nature and must be sought therefore in those spiritual qualities which express Principle, in mercy, justice, loving-kindness, honesty, purity, and so on. As these characteristics of spiritual man are put into practical daily operation, the facts concerning man are better perceived and appear more and more as realities. Spiritual man cannot, of course, be made more real than he is, since the spiritual has always been the truth concerning man; but the human experience of exchanging a material for the spiritual view of man shows the unreality of material sense and thus brings to light the opposite truth. As the spirituality of man is apprehended the evil conditions that appeared in the material view of man no longer loom so large in a man's regard, nor are they as much feared or honored.

The ability to see, and therefore to demonstrate, the real, ideal man, is gained in just the proportion that the human mind is superseded by the Mind of the Christ. When Philip said, "Lord, shew us the Father, and it sufficeth us," Jesus the Christ replied, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." To those with eyes to see, Jesus the Christ had revealed God as divine Principle, and man as His idea. Because of his own spirituality, he had destroyed for himself the belief that man is material; because of his perfect understanding that God is the only Mind, he did not recognize a material mind as having any real existence.

Then, when a material sense of life dominating those about him claimed to present its own manifestation of disease and death, his pure spiritual vision penetrated beyond the falsity of the presentation, and saw only the real, spiritual man, reflecting God. It was because the spiritual consciousness of Jesus the Christ thus saw and understood man in the image of God, that he was able to unsee, to destroy, the beliefs of material man, and to cause those who believed they were diseased also to unsee the disease, to become convinced that it could not exist. With great exactness Mrs. Eddy describes the nature and effect of Jesus' perception where, on page 476 of Science and Health, she writes, "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick."

They who to-day would escape from the ills of the flesh, may appeal to the Christ just as did the sinful and the sick in the first century. This appeal demands, however, the same change from the material to the spiritual view of man; a change so radical that it amounts to a complete renunciation of all that constitutes material selfhood; a change that establishes the effort to look, day by day and moment by moment, as did Jesus the Christ, at the spiritually real, until belief in the reality of the flesh and its ills yields to the divine, and consciousness, liberated, views the perfection of man in the likeness of Principle, and demonstrates Mind's healing power.

[W. D. Hinchsliff in The Norman (Okla.) Transcript]

It seems proper when the world is in such turmoil as it is at this time, that we consider some of the vital forces that are at work for the uplift and betterment of mankind. One of the greatest forces, if not the greatest force for good, is the movement known as Christian Science. It is the solution of every problem confronting mankind to-day, for it is the Science of Life, and in its exposition of the various phases of experience it shows what to do and how to do it. It teaches of God and of man in God's image. It is healing the sick and reforming the sinner. It is making the world better by making mankind better, and is showing the world the utter uselessness of trying to solve life's problem from the basis of material sense, or mind in matter.

Mrs. Eddy, through whose clear, spiritual insight Christian Science was given to the world, was a New England gentlewoman of irreproachable character, and was honored and beloved by her neighbors who were in constant touch with her and knew of her noble, self-sacrificing life. Her voluminous writings breathe the purest ethics, the soundest morals, the loftiest ideals. Under her leadership Christian Science has encircled the globe, and everywhere it has been known by the good it has done. Through its practical demonstration the drunkard loses his desire for drink and the sinner his love of sin. It opens to the awakened consciousness new visions of life and its responsibilities. It awakens the dead in trespasses and sin to newness of life in Christ Jesus.

Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 113), "The vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love." It teaches the worship of God, whom the beloved disciple said is Love, and consequently when its followers are maligned and abused, they learn to love their enemies and to bless those that despitefully use them, thus fulfilling the Master's injunction. Christian Science will go on in its beneficent healing and saving mission until the world is regenerated through the Mind that was in Christ Jesus.

Now with reference to the healing accomplished in Christian Science, in support of which the strongest kind of evidence can be produced from reputable sources, and covering every known disease or disorder,—organic, functional, malignant, or otherwise, diagnosed as such by physicians,—let it be understood that in this healing process Christian Science practitioners do not diagnose or treat disease. Sin, when it is conceived, as Paul pointed out, brings forth death, and disease and sickness are only intermediate states. Sin can only be conceived mentally, and it must be so conceived before it can be manifested outwardly in its many forms. "To be carnally minded is death," said Paul. The pure in heart shall see God, Jesus said, and it is by purification that the healing is accomplished. Does our critic object to purification? Is he entertaining the deluded belief that only those of his particular views can know what purification is? Do Christian Scientists deny the atoning blood? They know that it is the atoning lifeblood of the Christ, Truth, which in Christian Science practice heals the sick, and blessed is he who understands this fact, and the further fact that this blood is not material.

[Samuel Greenwood in The Times, Victoria, B. C., Canada]

The report of an address on Christian Science which appeared in The Times would make strange reading if one did not consider the many vagaries to which the human mind is subject. The speaker deserves and certainly receives the sympathy of Christian Scientists; first, because he is laboring under the serious disadvantage of not knowing his subject, and secondly, because no person can talk that way about his fellows and be really happy. If Christian Science were what he claims it is, he may be sure that Christian Scientists would be among the first to disown it; but between what Christian Science really is and what he says it is a great gulf is fixed, across which neither his amazing logic nor his baseless insinuations can find a bridge.

It seems to be a hobby with a certain class of preachers, more especially with those who are here to-day and gone to-morrow, to rail at Christian Science and its Discoverer, without being too careful in the trifling matter of verity. These critics have become past masters in the art of building up a fabric of straw, figuratively speaking, which they label Christian Science, and then proceed to show their ability by knocking it down. It might be interesting to state that in spite of the terrible onslaughts on these wonderful straw castles, the Christian Science movement grows with increasing rapidity, the last year having marked the greatest growth in its history.

The speaker stated that any religion that did not accept the authority of the Bible was not a Scriptural religion, and secondly, that any religion which denied the authority of Christ was not a Christian religion. Now as Christian Science accepts them both, the speaker is without a case; and a common practice with self-opinionated critics, when they have no case, is to abuse their opponents.

The accuracy of this critic's information relative to Christian Science can be gauged by his attempt to identify it with an ancient philosophy that is said to have "wrecked the homes of millions" in India. Christian Science on the contrary has brought blessing to unnumbered homes throughout the world. It is not the "philosophy of selfishness," since it teaches that men must learn to give up all for Christ. It cannot be a system of negation, since it is based on the truth that reality is infinite, and that this infinity is good.

[Frederick R. Rhodes in Sheffield (England) Telegraph]

A report of a lecture on "The Church and Mental Healing" contains a reference to Christian Science which is likely to leave quite an erroneous impression with the reader. This lecture, which is being delivered in various cities, always commences with the assertion that the "fundamental doctrine of Christian Science is all wrong." The teaching and practice of Christian Science is based entirely upon the Bible and the teaching of Christ Jesus, and because it refuses to compromise in any way with the sectarian teachings of the many religions, it is at once condemned as foolish, or even worse.

All spiritual reality, looked at from the standpoint of the "natural man," will necessarily appear foolishness, because the things of God must and can only be spiritually discerned, so that the one proof which is accepted by all right thinking inquirers is that of "signs following." The experiences of those who have put the teachings of Christian Science to the test in their daily lives have proved beyond doubt that this new-old religion is not only bringing to their consciousness the scientific and exact knowledge of God, but also, as Jesus said the Word should, is lifting them out of sorrow and sin, and healing their diseases.

The hundreds of Christian Science churches and societies dotted all over the civilized world, with their hundreds of thousands of devout worshipers, most of whom have received in some way a practical proof of the value of its teaching, are surely sufficient evidence that the revelation of Mrs. Eddy to this age is the promised Comforter.

[Carl E. Herring in Omaha (Neb.) Bee]

That the theologians have always found the apparent presence of evil a hard problem, serves only to introduce the fact that until Mrs. Eddy embodied the idea of evil as unreal as the only logical sequence of the accepted fact as to the allness of God, there never had been anything but muddled thought about evil. Granting the theological dogma that evil is as real as good, you are impaled upon the horn of making God, good, the author of evil, or that of admitting a devil who has as much capacity to create evil as God has to create good. Satisfy those two propositions, or get rid of one of them as Christian Science does, and you eliminate the greater bulk of theological writings, commentaries, and creeds.

In the first chapter of the gospel of St. John we read, "All things were made by him [God]; and without him was not any thing made that was made;" and in the first chapter of Genesis we find that "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good."

In order to accept good and evil as real we must contradict the Scriptures that God's creation is good, as well as deny that God made all things. Men and women of culture and sound judgment have found a soul-satisfying haven in the Christian Science teachings as to the unreality of evil, and it is our only purpose to invite such as so desire to investigate for themselves, that perchance they too may find the Scriptures illuminated as well as harmonized.

Extracts From Letters

"I have great pleasure in thanking you for The Christian Science Monitors duly received. Through reading our newspaper I have been greatly helped in maintaining that mental poise which seems so difficult at times under present conditions, but which is so essential if one would safely steer one's bark 'o'er earth's troubled, angry sea' (Poems, p. 12). I can truly say that to the Christian soldier the Monitor is a real inspiration to noble endeavor, and I am grateful to God for this token of love."

"Just a line or two to denote my appreciation of the Christian Science literature which you so kindly forward to me. With regard to the Monitor, I am able after reading it to leave it in the men's mess room each day, where it is read with interest, and I have heard quotations from it on several occasions, which has given me a chance to state what it stands for."

"I have to thank you kindly for the gift of newspapers sent to this battalion. They came at a very opportune time, since we were out at rest in a district where no readable matter could be purchased. All ranks appreciate the interest and labor you so willingly carry out in their behalf."

"The parcel of copies of The Christian Science Monitor has just been received and distributed to the men, who appreciate the kindly thought in sending reading material to them while they are so many miles from England."

"I beg to acknowledge the continued receipt of the parcel of Monitors, also the Sentinel. I need hardly say how delighted we are to be favored with such excellent reading material, and I would ask you in my name to convey my very best thanks to those who are responsible for the fund."

"On behalf of myself and my comrades here, I desire to thank you very much for the parcels of The Christian Science Monitor which we have received up to date. I can assure you we are greatly indebted to you for your kindness in supplying us with such interesting reading matter, which greatly helps to pass the time when off duty, and gives us some news of the doings of our gallant ally, America."

"I beg to thank you for The Christian Science Monitor. We will be pleased to receive same as often as you are able to send us a copy. Our Australian forces are very fond of your paper."

"The commander, officers, and men of this ship desire me to express their hearty thanks for American papers which you are so good as to send us from time to time. Now that America is with us they are very interesting and instructive reading. Again thanking you very heartily. . . ."

A Spiritual Movement

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE exactly meets the need of the world to-day, and nothing else can. Let the workers in the movement be alive to their opportunity and the blessing it brings. Too many are postponing activities which they promise to engage in some day in the future. They are "waiting for the war to cease." Those who stay in mental apathy are like the unready virgins, for when the vision arrives and the thing happens for which they are waiting they will be unable to join with those who prepared themselves and were thus ready for the next stage of progress.

It must be clear that war will not cease of itself. In war every act is an act provocative; it is the perpetual sowing of harm and reaping of revenge. War will not end until men have cleared their vision, and this can only be rightly done by gaining some knowledge of God, because "he maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth." It is the privilege of the Christian Scientist to maintain now the vision which eventually all shall know. He looks forward to the time when the knowledge of God, being universally known, will cause the cessation of all distresses and sorrows and woes. Therefore, at the present time his steadfastness due to his adherence to Principle should be as a rock of reliance for those tossed on tides of human life and death, good and evil, love and hate.

God only can speak peace to those distressed by human love and longing or tortured by hate and fear. God's realm is a different realm from this, even a new world wherefrom the human mind with its works is excluded, wherein dwelling we have the Mind of Christ.

There is an admonition in Peter's first epistle about being "as obedient children," and he defines this as "not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance," and continues his admonition, saying, "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." Do we not far too often hark back to times of our ignorance and foolish lusts, imaginings and desires, and speak the speech of yesterday? In such mental moods we are not helpers of church or country, of government or humanity; but the world to-day, with its nations and individual men and women, needs true helpers, and its true helpers are true thinkers. Sorrow and death and darkness evidence the absence of "the light of life." Cruelty, injustice, and obscenity prowl in the night. "Have respect unto the covenant," said the psalmist, "for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty." But Christ Jesus said, "I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

Mrs. Eddy emphatically declares on page 367 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "A Christian Scientist occupies the place at this period of which Jesus spoke to his disciples, when he said: 'Ye are the salt of the earth.' 'Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.' Let us watch, work, and pray that this salt lose not its saltness, and that this light be not hid, but radiate and glow into noontide glory." It is quite evident then that much depends upon what Christian Scientists are and what they do. The Christian Science movement, reaping as it does the aggregate well-doing and right thinking of a vast number of people who are students of Christian Science, is by no means an ecclesiastical or political movement. Nevertheless it is a power, and this power is due to the spiritual activity which is manifested. In other words, Christian Scientists are a potent force in the world because of the good example which they offer. If a group of people should be overcome by darkness while still wandering at a distance from their destination, and some one should appear with a light, and this light should illumine, even if faintly, the road upon which they all should walk, the one carrying the light would in a true sense be the leader of the multitude, but this leadership would be on an entirely different basis than that of a conqueror dragging his captives at his chariot wheels. It would be the leadership of light, the leadership which comes from knowing the right way, the leadership of brotherly kindness. What better guidance can be accepted by each worker in this movement than that which was given by Mrs. Eddy to the Christian Science board of lectureship (Miscellany, p. 248): "You go forth to face the foe with loving look and with the religion and philosophy of labor, duty, liberty, and love, to challenge universal indifference, chance, and creeds. Your highest inspiration is found nearest the divine Principle and nearest the scientific expression of Truth. You may condemn evil in the abstract without harming any one or your own moral sense, but condemn persons seldom, if ever. Improve every opportunity to correct sin through your own perfectness."

WILLIAM P. McKENZIE.

The Uplifted Standard

IN the sixty-second chapter of Isaiah we find this command: "Lift up a standard for the people," and following this proclamation we read, "Behold, thy salvation cometh." To the student of Christian Science these words are very significant, whether they be taken as meaning the moral and religious standards of humanity or the flags which emblematically express these standards throughout the world. At the present hour, as never before, thinking people may well ask themselves what their standards are to them individually, and how far their words and deeds express to others the lofty ideals which all should hold.

Well did the great Teacher know that the nations of the earth chose to make their own standards, which were never very high, rather than to respond to the divine demand for perfection in all things, whether individual or national. It is, however, cheering to read Mrs. Eddy's words on page 174 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "The thunder of Sinai and the Sermon on the Mount are pursuing and will overtake the ages, rebuking in their course all error and proclaiming the kingdom of heaven on earth." This assures us that even the failures of all human systems or the mistaken efforts to live below the divine ideal will at length force mortals to accept God's way, and to find for the whole race the harmony, happiness, and holiness which are inseparable from obedience to divine law.

In looking at the flag of this great country, we are reminded that in every one of the states represented by its stars the Christ-healing brought to humanity in this age through Christian Science has been demonstrated, and well may we rejoice that enough of freedom is realized throughout this entire land to make the practice of Christian Science possible. Here it must be remembered, however, that the right to bring this healing truth to suffering humanity has been challenged by the representatives of materia medica in almost every one of this noble sisterhood of states. Christian Scientists have in a number of cases been compelled to defend their God-given and their constitutional rights before the courts,—and that not because of any failures on the part of this healing system, but rather because its successes aroused the advocates of material methods, so that they wished to make reliance upon spiritual law for healing unlawful.

Christian Scientists may well heed the words of their Leader, on page 99 of "Miscellaneous Writings," where she says: "Men and women of the nineteenth century, are you called to voice a higher order of Science? Then obey this call. Go, if you must, to the dungeon or the scaffold, but take not back the words of Truth." Thanks to the all-protecting power of divine intelligence, no Christian Scientist in this country has had to take the test here indicated; but the continued attacks upon human freedom which would bar the way to the Christ-healing against those who have failed to find relief through material methods are indeed strange. When the master Christian declared that the truth he taught would make men free, his listeners resented the implication that they were not free; but he insisted that no one who was in bondage to sin could be called free; and he endeavored not only in his teaching, but even more through his demonstration of divine law to show that Truth, and Truth alone, brings the liberty which is worth while. The answer to his glorious work was the mockery of a trial with false witnesses and false judges, and this followed by the crucifixion; but the truth once grasped by the purified human consciousness can never again be wholly lost, even though centuries intervene before its full-orbed demonstration is attained; and so, after centuries of light and darkness, we have clearer light and the truth which demands freedom and gives freedom.

We can never forget how much we owe to the pioneer settlers in this country and to those throughout the years who have stood at all cost for the rights of man as a son of God. Without this faithfulness on the part of the bravest and best in this country the establishment of Christian Science in this age might have been impossible; at any rate, it would have been extremely difficult, and Mrs. Eddy pays fitting tribute in her writings to those who were brave enough and good enough to stand for human freedom with all that this implies. The testimonies of those healed in Christian Science are the best answer to any who would bar the way to its life-giving ministry.

It rests with us to recall ofttimes the Master's words, "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall be much required;" and so it is our high privilege to do our utmost in sending out the literature which explains the Principle and rules of the Christ-healing into every state and territory where our flag floats, knowing all the while that it will from thence go forth to all the nations of the earth and reveal the eternal fact of God's kingdom established everywhere, and the divine standard acknowledged as the only standard. On page 46 of "No and Yes" Mrs. Eddy says: "As dutiful descendants of Puritans, let us lift their standard higher, rejoicing, as Paul did, that we are free born. Man has a noble destiny; and the full-orbed significance of this destiny has dawned on the sick-bound and sin-enslaved." Because we know the truth and have proved for ourselves its power, let us go on and "lift up a standard for the people."

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

What to Do in War Times

WAS there ever a time when war was not going on? Many people may not have been aware of this, but the war germ is so subtle it operates unseen through homes, business enterprises, and governments, setting men and nations at variance with one another. This germ must be detected, dissected, arrested, and exterminated, and the present war brought to a successful termination. The searchlight of Truth turned upon war shows it to be based upon the belief in the fall of man. To reverse this mental error reveals man as unfallen, dwelling in the spiritual creation where no decay can exist. Resistance to Spirit on the part of the flesh makes war. Therefore only absolute obedience to Spirit can place humanity outside the possibility of war. But human will, making minds many, fear, and hate, wars against Spirit, hampers obedience, and resorts to elbowing, sidetracking, and backbiting, sinking finally to total depravity. Even right ideas are stolen and used as camouflage for evil purposes,—to use a war term of to-day.

Nevertheless the war germ destroys itself in the end, for destructive motives and hateful desires finally fall harmless at the feet of the righteous thinker. When the children of Israel asked for freedom from bondage, the power of Spirit was used by Moses, but the resistance of Pharaoh to this righteous demand brought war, ending in the pursuit by the Egyptians until they were lost in the Red Sea. Still the war germ continued to operate among the Israelites themselves, creating doubts and turning them away from God at different times until obedience and trustfulness returned and they entered the land of Canaan. Man unfallen obeys God, and humanity's sure defense in war times comes from living and loving this obedience, thus setting up a spiritual defense which no enemy can penetrate.

This is the time when veils are being rent asunder. The mental realm is no longer a mystery, thanks to the revelation of truth which is Christianly scientific. Hypnotism, superstition, revenge, diabolism, black art (so called), and other concoctions of the human will have exposed themselves in full view of the wise men. Those seeking high ideals need to have the handwriting on the wall interpreted to them. To-day as in Belshazzar's time the "fingers of a man's hand" writes: "God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it. . . . Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." The Belshazzar of to-day has a troubled countenance while the interpretation of the handwriting on the wall is being given, for it is written in big letters on the mental wall. All the pseudoscientific efforts of war, the engineering inventions, strategic endeavors, cannot stop the onward rush of hate unless right thinking build the wall of defense.

When Daniel told the truth to King Belshazzar he did not mince matters but struck home into the king's evil doings. He showed him up as a destroyer of humanity, as a mentality hardened with pride, a giver of false gifts, using flattery for self gain. He unflinchingly tore off the mask of the evil manipulator and exposed the visual expression of organized evil, greed, and oppression.

To-day Christian Science again tears off the mask from the false teaching which would try to associate evil with God or power. On page 52 of "Unity of Good" Mrs. Eddy writes: "God is not the so-called ego of evil; for evil, as a supposition, is the father of itself,—of the material world, the flesh, and the devil. From this falsehood arise the self-destroying elements of this world, its unkind forces, its tempests, lightnings, earthquakes, poisons, rabid beasts, fatal reptiles, and mortals." Christian Scientists should recognize that the weather conditions which have been used to hamper traffic during the winter months need not be followed by devastating floods in the spring, since evil is a falsity, a liar whose lies return unto it void when confronted by truth.

The trying experiences of hatred in the present are pressing the righteous to higher living, wider awakenings, and stronger spiritual activities. The heart-torn mothers and fathers of the sons in the army and navy may find their solace in the love of God, who guides His own as the shepherd feeds his flock. Protected by divine Love, those who have the light of spiritual understanding are given endurance, strength, support, and comfort in meeting hatred, jealousy, greed, envy, and malicious intention. The enemy today is the same mental enemy which crucified Jesus. The evildoer who loves the qualities and activities of hatred and hides under the cloak of righteousness has to go his way as did Judas.

At this hour of seeming war darkness there is great need of spiritual light, of powerful steadfastness in obedience to God, of ever readiness to respond to the high calling of God. The demand upon Christian Scientists is to go up higher and to dwell in Spirit not matter, to know no hate nor any quality of hate, but to march with upturned faces as true soldiers of God, keeping God's comfort within and outwardly reflecting the kingdom of heaven on earth. As war has always seemed to enter human experience, and hate with its emissaries to act as ruling factors, the way to destroy the war germ is to eradicate hate from one's own life, and then love will reign supreme and a permanent and perfect peace will be established.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

Christian Science War Relief Committee,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

Lecture in The Mother Church

The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts, announces a free public lecture on Christian Science by Ezra W. Palmer, C.S.B., a member of the Christian Science board of lectureship, in the church edifice, Falmouth, Norway, and St. Paul Streets, Back Bay, Friday evening, March 15, 1918, at eight o'clock. The public is cordially invited.

Current Notes

DURBAN, NATAL, SOUTH AFRICA.—The sale of literature on the whole has been good, and a steady demand has been met at the reading room. Owing to irregular mails there has been difficulty at times in supplying all the literature required. The following figures may therefore be considered satisfactory: "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," 91 copies; Mrs. Eddy's other works, 75; "The Life of Mary Baker Eddy," 3; Bibles, 20; Hymnals, 32; pamphlets, 607; Sentinels (a week), 40; Journals (a month), 25; Monitors (a week), 36; Quarterlies (a quarter), 270. The increased interest that members generally are taking in the periodicals is shown by many new subscriptions sent to The Christian Science Publishing Society. This is particularly noticeable with regard to the Monitor, as in addition to the extra subscriptions there is a sale of thirty-six copies a week at the reading room.

The lending library has been freely used throughout the year. The lending copies of the textbook, numbering twenty-two, are frequently all on loan at the same time. It will be necessary to increase this number in the near future. The reading room has been more frequented than previously. Quite a number of soldiers have visited it, and there have been frequent expressions of gratitude from them for the literature. There are in all fifty-one places receiving copies of our literature, an increase of fourteen over last year. There has been a considerable increase in the number of subscriptions for literature placed at the disposal of the committee, which enables parcels to be sent to East Africa, to the "Huts," and also to be placed on board the transports; eight copies of Science and Health, seventeen Quarterlies, and thirty pamphlets have been given to soldiers passing through Durban, and grateful letters have been received. A box containing copies of the periodicals has recently been placed upon the platform of the Central Railway Station, and during the first nine days, 141 pieces of literature were taken away. To provide funds for a sufficient supply of literature for distribution, members are now adding sixpence extra to their monthly subscription. Literature given away during the year totaled 3986 pieces comprised as follows: 1461 Sentinels, 233 Journals, 19 Herolds, 2218 Monitors, 8 copies of Science and Health, 17 Quarterlies, 30 pamphlets.

The newspapers in Natal are not numerous, but those that have published correspondence on the subject of Christian Science have shown a tolerant attitude. The criticisms have been mostly from a theological standpoint, and the letters from this source, like those from other sources, reveal much misunderstanding on the subject. During the past year the letters written by the committee on publication have been courteously received and published, with one exception. On several occasions The Natal Advertiser has published extracts from the Monitor. Copies of the Monitor are sent by the committee on publication to editors of newspapers and to individuals engaged in public work.

At the church meeting held in February it was decided to contribute twenty-five pounds to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund in response to the appeal published in the Sentinel.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

The Lectures

MILL VALLEY, CAL. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by W. W. Derr, who said in part:—

People everywhere are pausing to look at the growth of Christian Science; they see the families of Christian Scientists living in health and happiness without the use of drugs or medicines; they see children growing up unafraid of disease or germs; they see those who were once sickly and dependent upon medicines and prescriptions now living in health with medicine chests empty and discarded; they see the look of happiness on the faces of those who do not have to fear illness or disease, who do not have to fear evil or accident. And why all these things? It is because through the study of Christian Science they have learned the truth about God and His creation.

Christian Science was not invented by man or woman. The truth was given to the world by Jesus the Christ, and was practiced by his disciples and the early Christians. Then followed centuries steeped in materialism, when the Science of Christianity was neglected and lost. It was rediscovered by Mrs. Eddy in the year 1866.

DENVER, COL. (Second Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Josephine G. Clayton, who said in part:—

The great need of the hour is a better understanding of God and His immutable law. This recognition has given birth to an earnest desire in the hearts of humanity to know God aright, and to understand how His unalterable law of justice, operating in the human consciousness, makes for the betterment of individual and universal conditions, mentally, physically, morally, and financially. The teachings of Christian Science as set forth in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," afford an available source from which this understanding of the one God may be gained, for Mrs. Eddy has given a correct interpretation of the "words of the Lord" which will do much toward a readjustment of universal conditions and the restoration of ultimate harmony.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Ida C. SoRelle, who said in part:—

Christian Science is God's message of truth and love to this age. Its teachings exalt God, good, in the human consciousness. Christian Science restates and reiterates the Master's teachings, giving man a higher and better understanding of God, telling him of God's allness, God's goodness and love, and helping him to find his real selfhood as the child of God. It comes "to bind up the brokenhearted . . . to comfort all that mourn . . . to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Its teachings are logical, convincing, and satisfying.

LONDON, ENGLAND (Third Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Raymond Smythies, who said in part:—

Christian Science is a religion which is founded wholly on the Bible, and while embracing the highest ideals, it is an intensely practical religion. At this time, therefore, when probably a greater number of people than ever before in the history of the world are acutely conscious of their need for a practical religion, Christian Science comes as a messenger of Love to meet the need.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Audley F. Hewitt, who said in part:—

Christian Science has a message for the business man and the business woman, a message which enables us to see more clearly that the Christianity which Jesus taught is applicable to all the affairs of life—not just in the church and perhaps to some extent in the home, but as well in the office, in the shop, and on the street. In fact, Christian Science is making it more and more apparent that it is necessary to take Christianity into our office and our business, for it is showing that the standard is being lifted to that point where our success is determined by the degree of our understanding and application of Principle.

Testimonies of Healing

I have received so much help and encouragement from the testimonies in our periodicals that I feel that I should try to express my gratitude for all the help Christian Science has been to me, especially during the last seven months that I have been at the front. As a child and boy I was always intensely nervous, and I am sure that without the help received from the understanding of God and man as taught by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I should never have been able to stand the strain of trench life. This understanding has given me freedom from fear, coolness under fire, and has enabled me to do physical labor which would otherwise have been impossible.

On one occasion, last August, I had an attack of trench fever which prostrated me for several hours whilst in a dug-out a few yards from the front line. The same night our gun crew were unexpectedly relieved and had an hour to get ready for a march of about six or seven miles, the first two of which were through tunnels that in places were knee-deep in water and nowhere were high enough so that we could stand upright. This under normal conditions would be a great strain, especially when carrying rifle and other equipment. When I first received orders to go, my head and limbs were aching violently, but by the time I had to start I was feeling much better and the journey was accomplished without undue difficulty, although I had to go down a hundred-foot vertical ladder to start with. I arrived at my billet in the early morning and almost collapsed on arrival, being unable to move all day. My friends urged me to report sick and the temptation to do so was strong, for the prospect of a good rest in comfort was pleasant. I, however, knew it would not be in accordance with Principle, so endeavored to cling to Truth, and the next day I was well. I felt most grateful for this demonstration.

On many occasions I have had beautiful proofs of the protecting power of Truth. At one time I lost my way at night in a ruined town partly occupied by British and partly by Germans, when the latter opened up a heavy artillery fire and I could also hear machine gun bullets overhead. I just sat down by the side of the road and waited for daylight, and although shells were falling round thickly for an hour and a half, I was able to rejoice all the time, for I felt certain of my protection. On another occasion I was walking at night through mud knee-deep, when a large caliber shell exploded in an old shell crater three or four yards from me, covering me with mud and water, but doing me no harm. I turned back to take shelter in a shellproof building about fifty yards away, and the next shell burst behind me a few seconds later just where I would have been if I had kept on. Later the same night I was with two companions, and finding shells falling very thickly just ahead, we hesitated whether to go on. Whilst the others were looking in the direction of the bursting shells, I heard what sounded like a "dud" shell (one which fails to explode) about ten yards to windward of us, and on turning saw a thick cloud of poison gas blowing straight at us. I shouted a warning and we had but a few seconds in which to put our respirators on.

No words are adequate to express my gratitude for all the evidence I have had of God's care. Whenever I have been in any unusually dangerous place, I have always had the protection of God's angels, or messages, for some sentence from the Bible or "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" has come to my thought and destroyed any sense of fear or danger. This has shown me so clearly the accuracy of Mrs. Eddy's beautiful teaching regarding angels. I would also like to say how thankful I am for our periodicals, which bring their helpful, cheering messages wherever we may be. My earnest desire is to be found worthy of the name Christian Scientist.

MORTIMER CARR (at the front).

It is with a heart filled with love and gratitude that I testify to my healing through Christian Science. Three years ago a friend gave me a Sentinel, and as I rather liked what I read, I purchased Mrs. Eddy's book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and read in it every minute I could spare. When I was through reading the book, all my ills had disappeared. Following childbirth I had had an ailment sixteen years; I had also suffered frequently from headaches and much of my hair had fallen out. Before I became interested in Christian Science I lost two members of my family and suffered from a sense of separation, but now God has given me comfort and peace.

I am deeply grateful to God for the many blessings and healings which have come to me through reading the Bible and Science and Health. I am also thankful for the noble work which our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, has left to us and to the whole world.

MRS. MARIA KLICH, Los Angeles, Cal.

When a child of about twelve years, while living in India, I suffered from brain fever as the result of a severe blow on the head, and the effects of this remained with me for many years. Shortly after this I contracted sunstroke, and a little later jungle fever. This succession of illnesses produced such an effect on what was already considered a delicate constitution, that in the course of time I was practically an invalid, unable to attend to my household duties, and never free from pain, which at times was extremely acute. Later in life I developed what the doctor diagnosed as creeping paralysis, and finally was prostrated with what was stated to be kidney disease. Feeling myself a total wreck I almost despaired of ever finding relief on this plane of consciousness.

For a long time I had been an earnest and constant reader of the Bible, which indeed was my only comfort during many years of sorrow, and from it I knew that God was still able and willing to heal, but how to obtain this healing I did not know. When in this dire need my attention was directed to Christian Science, and a copy of its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, was lent me. On the advice of a friend I asked for help from a practitioner and during the third treatment all symptoms of the kidney trouble and paralysis disappeared. In place of pain and weakness I experienced a great sense of peace and spiritual uplift. On the fourth day I walked briskly about a mile and a half to attend my first testimony meeting, and back again, rejoicing in the fulfillment of the promise, "They that wait upon the Lord . . . shall run, and not be weary." I was so uplifted by this experience that I discontinued treatment, thinking there was nothing further to be done, but later on I found it necessary to ask for help in Christian Science again, as the old symptoms of brain fever and sunstroke were manifesting themselves. This condition was overcome in one treatment, and although about eleven years have since elapsed I have never had a return of it. Later on I had an attack of bronchial asthma, from which I had suffered periodically for many years. This trouble soon disappeared through the application of Christian Science, and my eyesight, for which I had worn glasses fifteen years, began to improve. Great was my joy on being able to read the Bible and the Christian Science textbook without material aid.

About five years ago I contracted an illness which to mortal sense was very serious, and wishing to save my family any unnecessary trouble, I asked to have a doctor see me. His verdict was that I had a severe attack of congestion of the lungs, and, assuming that I wished him to prescribe for me, stated he would not take the responsibility unless I could see my way to have two nurses at my house. Instead of falling in with this arrangement I had Christian Science treatment, with the result that the trouble was soon overcome. Since this time I have been remarkably free from coughs and colds, and have enjoyed increasingly good health; in fact I am able to attend to my household duties as I never could before.

For the physical healing I am truly thankful to God, but for the increased spiritual understanding of the Scriptures, and for the joy of knowing God aright and being able to leave all my cares and sorrows in His hand, words cannot express my thankfulness, or my gratitude to our dear Leader.

Mrs. M. A. Bunting, Dublin, Ireland.

I want to give thanks for what Christian Science has done for me. I was healed of the tobacco habit in one treatment. This was over five years ago, and I have never had any return of the desire for the weed. I was also healed of a bad attack of influenza last winter in about forty-eight hours. I am grateful to say that these demonstrations were made through my own understanding of the truth. Other mountains have been removed through the help of a practitioner. The hilltops are high, but if we just keep climbing and trusting Truth, we will surely reach the summit.

I am grateful for the privilege of being a member of Seventh Church of Christ, Scientist, of this city, and also for being an usher. I thank God for this "pearl of great price" and am grateful to His messenger, Mrs. Eddy, for giving us the understanding of the healing power of Truth.

Thomas W. Hatch, Chicago, Ill.

When I was a child my mother was healed of curvature of the spine, appendicitis, peritonitis, an abnormal growth, and other diseases, through the prayer of a Christian Science practitioner. That was the opening of a new world to me. I entered the Christian Science Sunday school and straightway blessings began to pour in upon me. As I grew in understanding I was healed of defective sight, a weak ankle, neuralgia, influenza, tonsillitis, stomach trouble, and inharmonious organic action. I was also freed from the belief that I could not comprehend mathematics, and much of my false education was corrected.

One experience that is yet vivid to me is the overcoming of delirium. Ever since I can remember, the slightest illness made me delirious. About three years ago one of these attacks came on, and all night I seemed to be in two separate states of consciousness at once. I was the patient in a nightmare of delirium, and also the practitioner, and not for one moment did I let go the fact that divine Mind is ever expressed. When the sun rose I was calm and well. I slept two hours, then arose and went about my work peacefully and happily. I was healthier than ever, because I was convinced that nothing could separate me from the love of God.

Unmeasured good has come to me through the study of Christian Science. Gratefully I acknowledge the blessings received through the Sunday school, the church services, and church membership, as well as through our periodicals, the lectures, and class instruction. People used to tell me that when I grew up I would find that life was not full of happiness, but since growing up I have found more happiness than I dreamed of when a child.

Christian Science is teaching me to worship God, the Father; and most gladly do I express gratitude to Christ Jesus the Wayshower, and to Mrs. Eddy, who revealed the truth to this age.

Mrs. Frances May Cauthorn, Aberdeen, Wash.

After twelve years of blessings and loving protection as the result of the study of Christian Science, I desire to tell of a few of the multitude of good things it has done for me. I became interested in Christian Science because of its practical nature—in other words, because it is a religion which teaches that God is Principle and man is His idea. The study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, our revered Leader, healed me of chronic colds, bowel trouble, rheumatism, and freed me from financial limitation. Through persistent and faithful study and application of our Leader's works and of the periodicals, I have had the privilege of being a reader in a branch church, and of class instruction.

I am thankful to God for Christian Science and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving it to this age. I am also grateful to Christ Jesus for opening the way for all ages, and grateful for each individual who strives to understand and live this Science of God, man, and the universe.

Benjamin F. Cauthorn.

Having proven that the overcoming of the tobacco habit through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy has been permanent, and because of further proofs that the understanding of God as taught in the Bible and explained in Christian Science enables mankind to overcome sin and disease, I desire to testify publicly to these facts, trusting that my statements may help others to find the way.

In September, 1909, I first read the Christian Science textbook as the result of a promise to my wife, who had been helped physically by a practitioner some time previously. Having been a smoker for about thirty years, and because of a great need of physical as well as mental healing, I was ready to prove the truth of this teaching. As I read and smoked, the cigars did not taste right, even though the test was being made on a fresh box of my favorite brand. I however attributed this to the cigars; and not knowing that my thought was being changed and purified, I kept trying one after another, until finally they again satisfied and I was once more happy in a depraved appetite. This only proved that the habit of self-indulgence was strong within; had I known enough, the taste for tobacco need not have again been cultivated.

Some time later I awoke to the fact that I was still addicted to the use of the weed, and while puzzled as to why the healing had not come I was sure the fault was with me and not with the wonderful book I was daily studying. At this point I was willing to test Christian Science, so laid down the cigar I was smoking and firmly resolved to do my part. Temptation came for several days, but help sufficient to resist came also, and when I no longer remembered to smoke after a meal, the power of God, divine Truth, was demonstrated and I was free, for the desire was destroyed and has not returned.

From this beginning, encouragement came to overcome piles, which gave me much distress, and by faithfully declaring the truth this condition disappeared after a short time. Through constant study of the Christian Science literature and the ever increasing desire to put to use my understanding of the truth, opportunity came in various ways, and the joy of being able to overcome promptly and effectually such ills as influenza, ulcerated teeth, appendicitis, rheumatism, and neuralgia, was marked and led to greater thanksgiving.

Growing more confident that the truth as taught in Christian Science would enable one to overcome any difficulty, and having proven that sin, fear, and ignorance yield to the power of divine Love, I hoped to have opportunity to help others. Then members of my family began to seek help, and lastly those outside the family and acquaintanceship also. It was in this manner that Mrs. Eddy's discovery was proved in my experience, and although I am as yet but a babe in understanding, I have proved God's willingness and power to heal disease and to destroy as well as prevent evil. This enables me to see that all who accept the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures as taught in Christian Science may avail themselves of these blessings, since God is "no respecter of persons."—EMORY FAY, St. Louis, Mo.

I wish to state that the healing of my husband of the smoking habit, about eight years ago, has been permanent. It was a beautiful demonstration of the power of Truth over error. Since then he has had many healings, and is a living witness to the Truth he advocates.

MRS. EVERETTA W. FAY.

My hope is that this testimony may be of help to some one looking for the truth. I did not come to Christian Science for physical healing myself, but through the healing of my wife, for which I thank God daily. For twenty-two years she was treated by doctors, and she went through twenty-three operations in England and Wales, but without benefit. In 1910 she was asked by a neighbor in this city if she had ever tried Christian Science. My wife had never heard the name before, but she accepted it without a doubt, believing it was that for which she had been looking for years. This lady lent her a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and I noticed that as she read this book she was growing brighter all the time. Then I thought there must be something good in it, so I began to read the book, and I have not passed a day without reading it in over six years. I have been healed of the tobacco habit, after having been a great smoker for thirty-three years.

I thank God for the blessings that Christian Science brings to our home daily, and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her study and faithful work and for this teaching which she has made so clear that every one can work out his own salvation.—DAVID JONES, Vancouver, B. C., Canada.

I wish to verify my husband's statement of my healing through Christian Science. I had suffered from stomach disorder for over twenty years and a malignant growth finally developed. This with female trouble caused me many years of misery. I was healed through reading the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and the healing gave me such a spiritual uplift that for three months I was not conscious of the body. This was to me at the time most wonderful. I had seen a great light and wanted every one else to see it too, so in my zeal I uttered the absolute truth when I had but little spiritual understanding, and had many downfalls as a result. I had to come down from the mountain top and work up, building on a spiritual foundation.

I am very thankful to God for these healings, and grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the great work she has done for all mankind.—MRS. ELIZABETH A. JONES.

I am filled with joy and gratitude for the privilege of testifying to the blessings which have been showered upon me since taking up the study of Christian Science, and for the healing of chronic appendicitis, which had troubled me for years. I had been under medical treatment constantly, having a number of the best known physicians, but no help was received. At last Christian Science was recommended, and I decided to give it a trial, with the result that I was healed in about three days. Since that time I have had many wonderful demonstrations. I am grateful for the understanding of the Bible and of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which comes to me through the study of these books.

Christian Science helps me with my daily problems, and has made me a strong, healthy, and happy woman. For all these blessings I am indeed grateful.

MRS. LILLIAN A. POVELITE, Richmond, Va.

I can vouch for the accuracy of my wife's testimony, and wish to add that through Christian Science I have learned to lead a better, cleaner life. While I have had many physical healings, the mental, moral, and spiritual uplift—healing not discernible to the eye—has meant much more to me. From childhood I suffered from almost constant headaches, but I was completely healed of this trouble in one treatment. This experience spurred me on to learn more of this divine healing power. Since then chronic stomach disorder, weak eyes, and rheumatism have all disappeared into their native nothingness. The tobacco and drink habits have also been overcome. Through an understanding of the peace of God, worry and fear have changed to peace and happiness. It is but natural that I should be thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her wonderful book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which is indeed the key to Life.

FERDINAND POVELITE.

A deep sense of gratitude to God prompts me to tell of a few of the many blessings that have come to me through Christian Science. Twenty-seven years ago I was led to investigate this teaching through the healing of a member of the family. From childhood I had never been strong, and for fifteen years, on account of a cough, I had never been out in damp weather. The Bible had always been very precious to me, but after making a study of it with our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was completely healed of lung trouble, and also of neuralgia, from which I had suffered for many years. I have since been in perfect health. Twenty-six years ago I had the privilege of class instruction. The Bible and Science and Health met all my needs until three years ago, when I was exposed to an infectious disease of the eyes, and not having protected myself sufficiently with the truth of God's perfect creation, I suffered from the effects. Not being able to read at this time, I called on a practitioner for help, with the result that in four months the healing was complete and normal sight was restored.

Words cannot express my gratitude for the light shown to me each day through the study of Christian Science.

MISS FRANCES M. HODSON, Minneapolis, Minn.

An experience came to me some months ago which so strengthened my faith in the ever presence and power of God as revealed by Christian Science that I am passing it on in the hope that it may prove equally helpful to some one else. For some weeks I had been conscious of a deeper, stronger trust in God than I had ever before attained, and one afternoon, while at work at my typewriter, so full a realization came to me of what perfect trust in God would do for one that I was almost overwhelmed by it. I saw that if one fully trusted God he would be immune from the dangers —accidents, casualties, sudden misfortunes—that to mortal sense continually threaten the health, happiness, and life of man. It became clear that not only one's own safety would be preserved by such trust but all of one's friends and associates would be helped thereby. The joy of this realization so filled my consciousness that it seemed to me I could never be afraid of anything again, and, being alone in the room, I stopped work just long enough to thank God silently for this revelation of His love and protection.

Not more than ten minutes had elapsed when there came the most terrific crash accompanied by the sound of breaking glass. For a few seconds I seemed stupefied by the shock, but presently realized that whatever danger had threatened me had now passed and the only visible result was a slight litter on my desk and the floor, caused by the falling of small particles of whitewash from the ceiling. Being now thoroughly aroused I hurried into the outer office to learn what had occurred and whether anyone had been injured. To my joy I found that all were safe, although the floor and tables were completely carpeted with broken glass, the glass partitions and the front and side windows having been wrecked by the force of an explosion, which had occurred in the stereotype department, which is just back of the office.

All agreed that it was nothing short of a miracle that no one was injured, for large fragments of iron pipe were hurled in all directions, to say nothing of the shower of broken glass. One remarkable phase of the incident was that the windows in the room where I was at work and the two just the other side of the partition which separated this room from the main office were the only ones left intact, the latter two being directly opposite the desk of the bookkeeper, my special friend. The shattered glass had stopped just the other side of her desk. Thus the truth of the spiritual realization that had come to me a few moments previous to the occurrence was perfectly demonstrated, for I had been completely shielded, my friend had been given special protection, and all my business associates were safe. It is needless to add that I went to my home that night with a very grateful heart.—Miss Helen Woodruff, Milwaukee, Wis.

At the time of the explosion mentioned above I was a block away. The report and the sound of breaking glass indicated that it was a serious one, and knowing that the writer of the above testimony was employed in the office where it occurred I wondered if she had met with any injury, at the same time realizing that her knowledge of Christian Science would protect and aid her. A few moments later I met the owner of the building, who has an office on the floor below, and in reply to a question he stated that although the explosion was a severe one, no one had been injured. This seemed quite remarkable, but later, when the lady referred to explained what she had been realizing mentally just previous to the explosion, it was understood why no injury had been sustained by her or by others in the office.

Robert J. Thompson, Milwaukee, Wis.

Gratitude prompts me to do the little I can in giving to the world an acknowledgment of the good received from the study of Christian Science. I never enjoyed health or freedom until I learned man's true relationship to God as taught in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I have witnessed many healings through the power of Truth, both in my home and out of it, among them that of chicken pox. My three children were exposed to scarlet fever while on a visit, and the symptoms of the disease manifested themselves, but were overcome in one night. Many faults in disposition have been cast into oblivion, and the protecting power of Love was demonstrated when an automobile in which three persons were seated collided with a street car. Concussion, also dislocation, and a seemingly helpless condition were overcome. I have been healed of a sense of separation, which has been replaced with peace and joy. I am grateful for the periodicals that supply our daily food, also for class instruction and the many privileges that come to me proving God's allness and nearness. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her untiring efforts and great love of mankind. To God I give all the praise and glory, for it is God that worketh in me to do the good I do. The transformation that has taken place through the many beautiful demonstrations of the truth has inspired many a weary heart to press onward; hence my desire to give to the world a glimpse of the glory in learning to know God and His love for all mankind.—Mrs. Minnie Ullrich, Indianapolis, Ind.

I am very grateful for Christian Science, having been instantly freed from bad headaches and depression in March, 1916. In April, while studying Science and Health, I was healed of throat trouble, varicose veins, and bowel disorder. I am indeed grateful for these healings, which taught me that all things are possible to God, but I am most thankful for the spiritual uplift, for the knowledge of God as our Father-Mother, and of heaven, harmony, here on earth.

Esther L. Lee, Holloway, London, N., England.

I enjoy reading the testimonies of others so much that I should have sent mine long ago. I came to Christian Science for healing, having been in poor health for a number of years, and under the care of several physicians who decided that nothing but an operation would help me. They diagnosed the trouble as gallstones. In desperation I went to the Christian Science reading rooms, although I then knew nothing about the teaching, and a dear Christian Scientist there explained to me lovingly about a God I had never known—one whose power destroys sickness, sin, or death. I had thought I must be patient under afflictions because for some good reason God sent them.

I asked for treatment and slept that night as I had not for years, and in the morning found myself healed of a minor ailment which has never returned. That was ten years ago. The main trouble yielded slowly, but I know that had I been suddenly healed of everything I might never have looked into Christian Science to find the truth. Every discordant condition has not been overcome, but I know that, with God's help, as I gain more understanding of the truth error will disappear.

I am more than grateful to our heavenly Father for the many blessings which have come to me and mine through Christian Science, and to our dear Leader who so lovingly gave us this revelation of Truth.

Mrs. Eugenie A. Miller, Utica, N. Y.

[From an editorial in Boston (Mass.) Advertiser]

When the Red Cross devotes a part of this immense fund to vivisection experiments a considerable element of the community sincerely believes that it misdirects the money which has been contributed to it to a purpose for which that money was not given. There are a great many contributors throughout this country who entertain this view and would like to have the officers of the Red Cross know that they entertain this view.

When the Red Cross devotes money of the people to vivisection experiments instead of to alleviating suffering, a great number of very intelligent, very sympathetic, and very patriotic people firmly believe that it is creating suffering, and the many thousands of people who are opposed to vivisection object to such a perversion of the funds. And people who have no opinion one way or the other about vivisection are disposed to object to the Red Cross using its funds for any purpose other than the purpose for which they were subscribed.

[Editorial in Columbus (Ohio) Journal]

Secretary of the Navy Daniels has appointed a Christian Scientist of Boston as chaplain in the navy. We have no doubt but the secretary has acted wisely. The Christian Scientists' quiet and modest influence is just what will reach the hearts of the soldiers. A chaplain is peculiarly an influence, a kind companionship. He is not an argument or an expounder of the faith, but a quiet worker inside the heart, inspiring good habits, noble thoughts, a controlling spirituality, and a generous friendship. We have seen chaplains who were not of this kind—mere formalities, drawing pay without warming a heart. They did as much harm as good, because the soldiers were constantly laughing at them or joking them, a practice not favorable to respect. There is no greater need in an army than a chaplain, but he must not be any kind of a man; he must be a real one.

[Rev. Dr. F. G. Coan in New York (N. Y.) Post]

The capture of Jerusalem by the English forces, under General Allenby, deserves to rank as one of the most significant events of many centuries. What crusade after crusade with their heavy toll of life failed to accomplish, has at last taken place, and the Holy City, for thirteen centuries in the hands of the Moslems, has been wrested from them, and forever, let us hope, made the heritage not of one power, but of the whole world.

French Translation of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy

In conformity to the rules established by Mary Baker Eddy for making and publishing translations of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has been translated into French, and is now published with the English text opposite the French translation.

This edition is bound in cloth similar to the cover used on the English editions. Price, one to five copies, $3.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $3.25 each. It is also printed on Oxford India Bible paper, and bound in the same style as the regular pocket edition of Science and Health. Price, one to five copies, $5.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $5.25 each. The quantity price will be made on six or more books of the French translation, including the two styles of bindings.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, occupy the minimum space, and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Vest Pocket Pamphlet

The article "Possession," by Adam H. Dickey, has been reprinted in a pamphlet, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at four cents a copy.

From The Christian Science Board of Directors

All correspondence intended for The Christian Science Board of Directors should be addressed to the Board at 105 Falmouth Street, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts, and not to individuals.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

The Christian Science Textbook

For the announcement appearing on the outside cover page of this periodical, entitled "Works on Christian Science, written by Mary Baker Eddy, Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science and Author of its Textbook," Mrs. Eddy herself wrote most of the text, including the following appellation of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures":

"The original, standard, and only textbook on Christian Science Mind-healing."

Mrs. Eddy says (Message for 1902, p. 15): "Six weeks I waited on God to suggest a name for the book I had been writing. Its title, Science and Health, came to me in the silence of night, when the steadfast stars watched over the world,—when slumber had fled,—and I rose and recorded the hallowed suggestion. The following day I showed it to my literary friends, who advised me to drop both the book and the title. To this, however, I gave no heed, feeling sure that God had led me to write that book, and had whispered that name to my waiting hope and prayer."

The first edition of the book was published in 1875, one thousand copies being issued.

At this date, 1918, Science and Health with the Bible have doubtless become the most widely circulated and most closely studied books in the Christian world, and Christian Scientists are getting a grasp and the world a gleam of the importance to the world at this time of the Bible truths as practically illuminated by "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

The Apostle Paul declared, though, "How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent?" (Rom. 10, 14–15.)

The more rapidly these "preachers" are sent forth by Christian Scientists and heard by mankind the sooner mankind will be redeemed.

"Without material accompaniments"

NELLIE B. MACE

THE human mind assents readily to the scientific denial of the evidence of the senses, if expecting that its suffering may thereby cease. It feels its need on the specific point of suffering sooner than it sees its greater need of redemption from the entire material sense of being. This accounts for the inconsistent complaint, sometimes expressed, that the light of Truth which penetrated material sense in the healing of disease, unexpectedly disturbed sensuous pleasure in the beauties of the material world. All that the human mind knows of its so-called material world is the picture it forms of phenomena which are themselves subjective states of the human mind. This is surely what Mrs. Eddy means when she says (Science and Health, p. 310): "Thought will finally be understood and seen in all form, substance, and color, but without material accompaniments."

The Bible has all along contained the statement, for those who would heed, that the substance of all reality, of all that is good and beautiful and therefore enjoyable, is not to be perceived through the material senses. "Eye hath not seen," Paul declared, quoting the words of Isaiah, "nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." The apostle's words certainly imply that the human heart which yearns for happiness, for freedom to enjoy the beauties and harmonies which it mistakenly supposes Christian Science takes away, can find the substance and reality of all these things through, and only through, the love of God, the spiritual understanding of Principle. This as surely shows that what the human mind believed to be enjoyment, before the truths of spiritual being penetrated and began to dissolve material belief, was at its best only a promise of something real, and in its lower forms was but the sensuous appeal of a material counterfeit.

The substance of all beauty and goodness has always existed everywhere. The human mind's vision of beauty and truth has been limited because of its belief in the substance of matter, and that matter could produce and experience pleasurable sensations. Mrs. Eddy says on page 247 of Science and Health: "Being possesses its qualities before they are perceived humanly. Beauty is a thing of life, which dwells forever in the eternal Mind and reflects the charms of His goodness in expression, form, outline, and color."

The dismay which the human mind sometimes feels when it begins to see that the reality of Life must be without material accompaniments, arises from the vast discrepancy between the present mortal sense of substance as matter and the realization that Spirit is the only substance and being. Yet it is just this knowledge which reveals the foundation of all true beauty to be the divine Principle in which inheres infinite potentiality, all law, order, harmony, action. To perceive beauty as spiritual, apart from sensuous appeal, is to liberate the human mind from its dependence upon matter in every other mode of thought.

In the transition from finite material belief to the grandeur of being in Mind, the application of the rule of spiritual perfection will mean at every step of the way that all objects of thought—the sky and the clouds, the mountains, trees, and flowers, music, companionships, and all activities—will grow more beautiful to the advancing thought as the human sense of them is less and less burdened with materiality. Ascendant thought will look up to the hills, seeing in them a type of the strength and serenity of spiritualized consciousness. The growth, outline, color, and fragrance of trees and flowers will be recognized and appreciated as symbols of the loveliness of holiness; and music will measure diviner cadences in those silent spiritual harmonies beyond material sound. Companionships and associations which are responsive to spiritual attraction will be found more sweet and satisfying than were friendships more materially conceived. All activities will be seen, in so far as they are good, to be reflections of the beauty, or unity in diversity, of spiritual law and order. Little by little, day by day, the material accompaniments of imperfect human concepts will be regarded less and less as solid matter; for the purified subjective sense will behold, as did St. John, the light and glory of the new heaven and new earth. Earth will seem more beautiful when it is seen as a reflection of Mind, not as matter.

This spiritualization of thought, whereby human concepts are seen as phenomena instead of material substance, is the most tremendous influence in the world to-day. It has an inevitable corollary in the uncovering and destruction of evil as mind. It shows that the material manifestations of evil thought, operating as engines of war, are as unreal as is the evil mind which projects them. It shows that war will finally be overcome, not by counter war maneuvers, which are only a temporary expedient, but by the power of spiritual understanding, which is already replenishing the earth through the perception of the beauty and truth of holiness, and the consequent unreality of material abnormity of thought and its unlovely caricature of power and action.

It was their own belief in a material mind and its manifestation which terrified the disciples when the risen Lord appeared in their midst. They thought they saw a spirit with a material embodiment. "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have," Jesus told them. It was their own thought of him which they saw as having flesh and bones. Because their thought was not yet spiritual enough to perceive the spiritual idea or the Christ, the compassionate Savior presented to them that which they could appreciate, to substantiate to them his proof of unconquerable, deathless Life. When they were fully convinced of the reality of Spirit and the consequent nothingness of matter as he had taught them, they lost sight of him as matter and received the Truth in spiritual understanding. They could not yearn for the physical presence of Jesus when they had realized the immortal presence of the Christ. They saw him then as he was in reality and loved him better when the Christ became to them the supersensible idea of Love.

Christian Science reveals the absolute truth of being. This revelation will eventually destroy both mortal mind and its phenomena. One does not, however, overcome matter by growing despondent because he can no longer enjoy it on the same basis that he did before the truths of Christian Science appeared to him. Being exists now at the point of perfect beauty, goodness, and harmonious action. The sum of being is to be worked out and up to this point. This can be done only by a process of progressive, selective, spiritual perception, separating the real from the unreal in the individual conception of all things. On page 86 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says, "The pleasant sensations of human belief, of form and color, must be spiritualized, until we gain the glorified sense of substance as in the new heaven and earth, the harmony of body and Mind."

As thought rests loyally upon the fundamental fact that all substance, goodness, form, color, expression, action,—in a word, "the beauties of holiness,"—exist as spiritual ideas without material accompaniments, one grows more intelligently grateful for every advancement in human ideals which at present he sees as accompanied with material forms of expression; for he will see in this betterment an indication that the human subjective states and their phenomena are giving place to the divine, and that this beckoning, glorified sense of being is drawing humanity irresistibly up and out of matter and its transitory promises and failures into the actuality of the vision.

Perfection

JOHN M. DEAN

THE possibility of the attainment of perfection is a vital question which has never been settled and cannot be settled outside of the spiritual understanding of God and man as gained in Christian Science. This is because all other systems of religious thought approach the subject from a more or less material basis. Such an attitude at once precludes any rational solution of the problem, for when man is considered as so much blood, bone, and muscle, it is no wonder that his perfectibility has come to be regarded as a Utopian dream, impossible of attainment; and yet the command of the master Christian, "Be ye therefore perfect," stands unabridged and unabated.

On page 414 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says, "Remember that man's perfection is real and unimpeachable, whereas imperfection is blameworthy, unreal, and is not brought about by divine Love." The Bible, indeed, plainly indicates that only the perfect can inherit perfection, so there can be no escaping the conclusion that heaven cannot be gained except as the realization of perfection is reached. This, however, is an individual process in which each man makes his own heaven or hell according as he deserves reward or punishment, and because of this the individual finds no satisfaction or justification in waiting for all mankind to make this final demonstration simultaneously.

God never made a law or inspired a command impossible of fulfillment. To believe Him capable of such a thing is to charge Him with being unjust to His own children. It must then be true that, since according to the Scripture "God is no respecter of persons," every command and promise in the Bible was meant for all men in all time, and therefore for us to-day. To be deluded into believing otherwise is to dig a pit for oneself, and is to say that God is omnipotent at one time and impotent at another, as if omnipotence could ever be less than omnipotent. That which is all-power now must always have been all-power and must always be all-power. How, then, can any Christian question that positive statement of Jesus, "With God all things are possible"?

There is no such thing as fleshly perfection. In its very nature all that is subject to decay must be imperfect; therefore mortals cannot attain perfection. It is only as mortality is laid off that immortality can be reached. Perfection can never be marred even in the slightest degree, for it can never be less than perfection. No mortal seeming can alter this spiritual fact, and in spite of the evidence of the material senses, Christians must be guided by that saying of the Master, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." The belief that by any possibility perfection could lapse into imperfection is self-contradictory, for if perfection could degenerate it must first possess an element of imperfection.

If we once concede that perfect man could fall, we must also admit that if this fallen man could once more gain perfection he could fall again and again. If such an unthinkable condition were possible, what incentive could mortal man have to continue to strive for a merely precarious state of so-called perfection from which he might fall the next minute? Surely the web of error is woefully tangled. Human striving for perfection must always go unrewarded until our eyes are turned Spiritward, and until this fact is seen, the command, "Be ye therefore perfect," will appear as an elusive mockery of all human hopes. Some day all men will know that compliance with this command is an imperative essential of salvation, and that the ideal condition to which it points is not to be won by submitting to death, but must be considered as a forever fact.
