Death is not the gateway to perfection, and the supposition that this "last enemy," with all its repugnant accompaniments, could be the open portal to eternal joy and beauty, is the contradiction of the ages. If such a belief were true, mankind would court its beneficent visitation instead of fighting to stay its hand. There can be no belief without a believer, and a belief believed, seems to have the same effect and appearance as a reality; consequently, in destroying error our work must be with the believer as well as with the belief. It must, however, be borne in mind that this believer is self-assertive mortal mind and not a person. It is only through consistent striving that we can advance along the line of spiritual progression, and right striving consists only in knowing and demonstrating that remarkable statement of the apostle, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God,"—the "sons of God," not yesterday, or tomorrow, but now. Regardless of the persistent assertions of mortality with all its concomitant imperfections, it is only through tenacious adherence to the ideal set forth in this statement of John's that a realization of the real man's forever perfect nature can be gained.

In that wonderful talk with Nicodemus Jesus said, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Flesh cannot be spiritualized, and it is only as the material concept is destroyed in human consciousness that man's essential spiritual nature is brought to light. As well attempt to transform evil into good as to try to make Spirit out of flesh. All the inordinate vanity of the counterfeit man can never make true the awful lie that Spirit is merely flesh etherealized. Just as evil ceases to manifest itself only as it is supplanted by good, so is it with Spirit and the flesh, which can never coalesce nor harmonize, for they "are contrary the one to the other." The wonderful eighth chapter of Romans should of itself forever settle this question, and but for the understanding of the blinding nature of scholastic theology, one would wonder how this sublime enunciation of Paul could have stood before men for all these centuries without clearing away all the accumulated rubbish concerning the place and power of matter.

As we study the Bible we see that flesh and sin are synonymous. Just as sin cannot be healed except as it is destroyed, so there can be no real healing of the body without a corresponding overcoming of fleshly things. Just as man cannot be perfected in sin, so he cannot be perfected in the flesh. When Jesus passed from human sight in that final spiritual exaltation known as the ascension, he left no fleshly body behind him. It is equally certain that he took none with him, for we are told in the first epistle to the Corinthians that "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." This must also have been the experience of Enoch and Elijah. Jesus once said, "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." It seems peculiarly reasonable to regard the term "rich man" as used in this connection, as meaning one cumbered with material beliefs, and this interpretation gives a vivid hint of what constitutes perfection.

The perfect harmony of music is not immediately made manifest to the beginner, yet he knows that harmonious expression is a fact in human consciousness, and holding in thought this perfect ideal he is rewarded by continuous progress. The goal of perfection is before us, and we may as well know at once that it must ultimately be gained. "Either here or hereafter," Mrs. Eddy says, "suffering or Science must destroy all illusions regarding life and mind, and regenerate material sense and self" (Science and Health, p. 296). There is no crowding in this race for perfection, and no rivalry. Like the sunshine it is all for everybody, and no one by enjoying all of it can deprive his neighbor of the same privilege. Each receives according to his deserving, and there is no other way to heaven than through the front door.

Man in the image and likeness of God—and we certainly have no warrant for regarding any lower conception of being as man—is, like his Maker, "the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever." Christian perfection can never be won through any lesser conception of man, for the complete realization cannot exceed the model held in thought. This perfect man, being coexistent with God, neither needs to be nor can be created. He simply needs to be revealed. Man in God's likeness never fell. In the words of Mrs. Eddy (Miscellany, p. 242): "Christian Science is absolute; it is neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing towards it; it is at this point and must be practised therefrom."

Childhood and Obedience

MARY E. HARDY

ONE who is observant readily traces upon the face of a child its environment of thought. If obedience to that Mind which the parents obey has been inculcated as a gentle, firm, and natural law of guidance to its first unfolding thought, we find buoyancy and brightness with spontaneity of action. On page 62 of Science and Health our revered Leader says, "The entire education of children should be such as to form habits of obedience to the moral and spiritual law, with which the child can meet and master the belief in so-called physical laws, a belief which breeds disease."

The writer recalls a home in which the young mother had been healed in Christian Science, and she had noted when visiting there the ready obedience of each of the two little children to the mother's gentle commands, also the expression on the face of the elder as the mother voiced thankfulness for her own healing.

A short time after this the writer was called to help them in a time of great need, but it was two hours before the call was received. The two children had been playing in the upper hall, it being one of the old style Southern homes, and in leaning over the banister the little boy fell, striking on his head as he landed on the floor below. The mother fainted from extreme fear, and on recovering found a doctor and a nurse preparing to place the child in an ambulance. She, however, refused to allow this and asked a friend to call her practitioner.

Every time the physician under the father's direction attempted to place ice on the little fellow's head he went into convulsions, but when left alone was quiet. The writer vividly recalls the hours of struggle with the tumult of seemingly opposing forces, also the moment when Principle gained ascendancy in the thought of mother and child. The truth was declared that he was God's child, that God called him to obedience, to harmonious action, to peaceful, quiet action, and the nothingness of congestion or fear was voiced. The work was quickly done. The mother was told that if the child became conscious during the night she should tell him that God was caring for him. At length he whispered to her faintly, "When you were sick you sent for Mrs. ———, but when I was sick you sent for the doctor." She quieted him at once by telling him that he was being cared for also.

During the night, as the father and physician friend sat at the bedside knowing their inability to give help, the physician said, "I hear your wife has been healed by Christian Science." The husband acknowledged this; then the doctor remarked, "Well, you have a case here that Christian Science can't heal." In the early morning, however, the little patient rolled marbles across the bedspread, and in the afternoon when the practitioner called he was on the floor playing with his sister, in a normal condition, proving that thought obedient to moral law is readily responsive to spiritual law. Then we may bring out from God's treasure house "things new and old." If we older children did not so often forget that quick obedience to divine law is the easy and natural way, we should not find it needful to work back to the direct guidance in our pathway from sense to Soul over the experience that purifies love like gold till it becomes refined.

We find all along the way object lessons, which if read aright are as milestones marking the way to perfect harmony. The writer recalls one such lesson. During a journey from the Pacific coast, in a conversation with a young Christian Scientist, who was happy in the joy of early demonstration, the latter remarked, "I should think after so long a period of activity in your work you would rest, as God has so beautifully opened the way for you to do so." As this voiced thought was more clearly heard than the more subtle and less innocent suggestions that had been presenting themselves, it served to arouse to a more active investigation of their source. Hints of physical inaction, self-ease, depreciation of earnest, honest effort, failure to claim the reward of work well done were next heard from.

The following spring, while the storms of a northern winter were still unspent, the writer stood in an orchard of peach trees, breathing in their beauty and fragrance and noting the promise of abundant fruitage, when thought said, If at the first appearing of the bud we rest content, what of the unfolding, what of its fruitage? The beautiful bud is but a token, a promise. What of the nurture, the constant care known best to one who has realized the need and met it? This had been a very early spring blossoming, followed by a flurry of snow and a cold and frosty night. The object lesson brought with it a strong assurance of Love's protecting presence and a whispered message that the power which gave the bud its start would protect its unfoldment. Later, after the fruit appeared, severe hailstorms threatened its destruction, but again came the realization that God made no destructive storm to destroy the beauty of fruitage. At the time of harvest some of the fruit showed bruises from the hail, but that which endured gave full measure in quantity as well as quality.

Then after gathering the lesson of the storm in all its varied manifestations, there came a clearer vision that age is but a subtle belief in self-love and self-righteousness, to be conquered by a fuller understanding of Christian Science; that the most complete demonstration we have yet known is but as a child's knowledge, for we are but touching the hem of the Christly garment. There will be many lessons in patient obedience, while the ever unfolding law of increase brings many springtimes of renewal and the joy which ever attends the birth of a new idea of Life. We may even now find many a gentle reminder that the protecting wings of Love shelter the unfolding idea from all the destroying elements of mortal mind.

Human Affection Purified

ESTHER MURRAY

IT is sometimes said by those who have a superficial acquaintance with Christian Scientists that they are hard, unsympathetic, and unloving. If this be so, it certainly is not because of the teaching of Christian Science, for the Principle of this religion is divine Love. Christian Science is founded on the teaching of our Savior, Christ Jesus, and is a religion of love and healing; indeed, true healing cannot be done without love. On page 366 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy wrote: "The physician who lacks sympathy for his fellow-being is deficient in human affection, and we have the apostolic warrant for asking: 'He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?' " The Bible tells us that "Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus," and we read also of "the disciple whom Jesus loved," and the Master's oft-repeated command to us was to "love one another."

St. John, the beloved disciple, repeatedly counseled us to "love one another." He also said, "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." In I Corinthians St. Paul points out clearly that without love everything else is valueless. "Love enriches the nature, enlarging, purifying, and elevating it," we read on page 57 of our textbook, and on page 113 we are told: "The vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love. Without this, the letter is but the dead body of Science,—pulseless, cold, inanimate."

Students of Christian Science should never entertain the mistaken notion that sympathy and human affection are unscientific. It is always more love that we require, not less. Sometimes human love seems to be changeable, selfish, exacting, and exclusive, but these mental qualities are the tares which should be destroyed, without uprooting the love, which must be purified until it makes way for the perfect reflection of divine Love,—unchangeable, limitless, all-inclusive.

As we think upon the attributes of divine Love, we find these expressed humanly as purity, gentleness, tenderness, loving-kindness, compassion, and, above all, forgiveness. Let us then cultivate these spiritual qualities, and be so kind, so charitable, so forgiving, that it can never be said of us that Christian Science has made us unloving. Let our daily prayer be to love more, and in the words of our hymn (Hymnal, p. 76),—

So may the unbelieving world
See how true Christians love.

Names Written in Heaven

RALPH B. THOMPSON

ON a certain momentous occasion the disciples returned after a joyful mission of healing, of practicing the truth which Jesus had been teaching them. The success of their efforts had evidently greatly surprised even the most enthusiastic of these students, and they felt that they must tell the Master what had been accomplished. In like manner, when a student of Christian Science has applied his individual understanding of this same unfailing Principle to a problem of sickness or sin, either for himself or for a friend, and has seen the healing Truth manifest itself in the destruction of the erroneous condition, he too must experience in some degree the joy that the disciples felt, when they said upon their return over nineteen centuries ago: "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name."

It is natural at such a time that the student should desire to share with others this new-found treasure, but in his eagerness to tell of the healing he frequently loses sight of the fundamental fact which makes the healing possible; namely, that God, good, is now and has always been All,—that is, the one infinite Power, the one infinite Mind, the one infinite Presence, and that the discords or "devils" never were real except to a false sense of things entirely apart from God's creation or knowledge. It was Jesus' constant realization of this fundamental fact that led him to rebuke the impulsive state of thought which sees only the manifestation of healing, and loses sight of the great truth which makes the healing possible. In the Sermon on the Mount Jesus had said: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." Carrying further the same rule he said to his disciples, "In this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven." He bade them rejoice, not simply because of the benefits, but rather because man's true existence had been discerned as inseparable from "the divine Principle and rule of universal harmony," as Mrs. Eddy says on page 1 of "Rudimental Divine Science."

In like manner, Paul realized the supreme importance of that state of thought in which spiritual realization predominates and governs, and the secondary importance of the natural results following this consciousness and made manifest in physical healing. In his second letter to the Corinthians he counsels them thus: "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Paul evidently realized that discord would inevitably find expression in a consciousness believing in an existence separate from that of which God is the creator, and looked upon this affliction as simply the means of forcing a false belief to abandon itself. He also knew that the joy of an exalted consciousness would come more quickly and be more permanent if the individual would look away from the visible evidence of material sense into the things not seen by this false sense,—to the building or consciousness of God's creating spoken of as the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

In other words again, as Jesus said, the name, or nature, of the true man is eternally established or "written" in heaven, and physical healing and material benefits should become incidental to the student's striving for this greater spiritual understanding. Each phase of suffering that mankind experiences is an opportunity to rejoice. We may indeed rejoice that our "names are written in heaven," and each time the truth of this statement is proven, we rise to a clearer and surer realization of the allness of good and the nothingness of that which seems to oppose it.

In describing the healing work of the Master, Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 476 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick." What joy and peace will be ours when a correct view of God and of man as His image and likeness becomes natural and spontaneous in our thinking. As we accept the privilege offered us to attain this goal through study and application of its divine Principle as set forth in the Bible and illumined by the Christian Science textbook and the authorized literature of Christian Science, we will help to usher in that happy day when all names shall be universally recognized as being "written in heaven" and the prophecy in Habakkuk will be fulfilled, "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

"The night watches"

MABEL HYDE

"God my maker, who giveth songs in the night."—Job 35: 10.

How shall my heart sing songs in the night watches?
When ills of sense conspire to banish sleep,
When brooding cares rise mountains high,
And doubts seem oceans deep;
How shall my heart sing songs?

When fear, that hydra-headed phantom, creeping
In subtle guise its seeds of ill to sow,
Seeks to enthrone and vaunt itself,
And image thoughts of woe,
How shall my heart sing songs?

Since in the tender strength of Love's revealing,
Rough places on earth's journey are made plain,
And healing touch of His sweet peace
Wipes out all sense of pain,
So should my heart sing songs!

When in the tangled skein of mortal living
I can perceive Love's golden threads alight,
And how in God's all-presence pure
No darkness is, nor night,
Then shall my heart sing songs!

As with each conscious thought I feel the glory
Of Truth's great, flaming torch about my way,
So through night watches, passing on Unto the perfect day,
Gladly my heart sings songs!

Selected Articles

["The City of God"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 26, 1918]

It is a long cry from Florence to Patmos, and there is no obvious connection between Machiavelli and Paul the apostle, yet it was the dweller in Florence of whom it was said that his citizenship was of the world, whilst it was the apostle to the Gentiles who explained the true meaning of citizenship, and the prisoner in Patmos who drew the picture of the true city, whose builder and maker is God. Now it is the moralist in the publicist, Lord Morley insists, that always interests mankind, and it was because of this that Machiavelli has been termed a citizen of the world, for, as Lord Morley dryly adds, he was an unquestionable moralist, even if of a very peculiar sort. The apostle to the Gentiles also was a publicist, possibly the greatest publicist who ever lived, and he was also a great Christian moralist. The correspondence of the two men may, indeed, be expressed in the antithesis that the one showed the world what citizenship should not be, and the other, what true citizenship was.

The gulf between the teaching of Machiavelli and Paul was no broader than that between the Florence of the Renaissance and the New Jerusalem. From the windows of his house beyond the lovely Ponte Vecchio, close by the great wall surrounding the gardens of the Pitti, the famous Florentine looked out over perhaps the most beautiful city in all Italy. Here everything that the genius of man could do to make a paradise of marble, of carving, and of fresco, had been done, and, as a result, the accomplishment of the lust of the eyes had been accompanied by the unrestrained indulgence of the lusts of the flesh, so that unbridled sensuality, murder, and unfaithfulness were the most ordinary social incidents. Poisons men sold as freely as sweetmeats, and the bravo with his stiletto was as much a popular hero as the toreador in Spain, or the gladiator in ancient Rome.

Such, then, was Florence in the era of Lorenzo the Magnificent, and a more appalling contrast to the city of God it would be impossible to imagine. It was far otherwise that the Hebrew poet wrote of this city of God: "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King." Of course the psalmist did not imagine that God dwelt materially on Mount Zion, but Mount Zion was, to him, the type of the New Jerusalem which the Galilean disciple was one day to picture coming down out of heaven. He made use of his metaphor, therefore, as all the Hebrew writers made use of metaphor, for the purpose of teaching, by pointing his readers to the spiritual reality of the city, whose builder and maker, in the words of the letter to the Hebrews, is God. The completeness of the metaphor goes, indeed, much deeper than the casual reader might suppose. For instance, there are two words in the Greek Testament which are translated new. The one means something just newly made, as the new wine which was placed in the old bottles. The other means something relatively speaking new, but not absolutely freshly made. Such are the new bottles for wine, meaning not freshly constructed wine skins, but wine skins which, though thoroughly seasoned so as to do away with the rawness of the leather, were yet in their highest state of efficiency and soundness, and not perishable like the old bottles.

Now the writer, in speaking of the new heaven and the new earth, equally with the New Jerusalem, is careful to use the word which means something newly perceived rather than something freshly created. The new heaven and the new earth thus become not a new physical heaven and a new physical earth, but a new perception of what heaven and earth means, just as the New Jerusalem is not a newly built Jerusalem with streets of gold and gates of pearl, but is a clearer spiritual perception of the city of God, as a mental image, as well as a metaphysical explanation of the way in which the old Jerusalem had been metaphorically used by the Hebrew writers to convey to the people this idea of the city of God. Thus it was that the Israelites were bidden to go up to Jerusalem, to march mentally up to the city upon the hill, throwing aside the tatters of their old garments, and clothing themselves instead in their newly found, though not newly made, garments of Spirit, and exchanging mentally their material citizenship for that citizenship or conversation which is in heaven. For, in this way, on page 589 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy describes the two Jerusalems: "Mortal belief and knowledge obtained from the five corporeal senses; the pride of power and the power of pride; sensuality; envy; oppression; tyranny. Home, heaven."

At first sight the connection between citizenship and conversation is not apparent, but if anybody will turn from the King James to the Revision he will very soon discover that the word which in the King James is translated "conversation," in the Revision has become "manner of living." The explanation is really very simple. The word "conversation" originally meant living in a certain place, and from this it was extended to mean the consorting of the people in that place. Thus a man's conversation meant not what he said, but the people with whom he mixed, and in this sense it was framed into the proverb that you might tell a man by his conversation, in other words, by the company he kept. Thus the Elizabethan word "conversation" had become purely archaic by the time of the Revision of 1885, so that, in order to retain the meaning of the Greek, it was altered to "manner of living." If the Greek word had always been the same this would have been simple enough, but the phrase "manner of living" is not always translated from the same Greek word. Thus when Paul wrote to the Philippians, "Only let your conversation be as it becometh the gospel of Christ," he was actually saying, let your citizenship be such as becometh the gospel of Christ.

Now, if anyone will turn to the Old Testament he will discover that the word there translated "citizenship" means, literally, a path or way. And thus, by one of those transitions so common in a language, the word "way," used by Jesus in the saying "I am the way," came to mean the path a man mentally traversed, and so his moral conduct. Now a man's mental tergiversations sum up his attitude as a citizen. Therefore, the citizen of the city of God was the man who had followed the way of the Christ so as to bring his conduct into an at-one-ment with Principle. The material Jerusalem, which the British troops entered a few weeks ago, was the successor to that Jerusalem to which the Jews went up in their search for a better understanding of God. But the Jews habitually taught that their material history was but the figure of the way trodden by the nation as the children of God. And thus the New Jerusalem is the spiritual concept of that heaven of harmony, whose citizens are the real children of Israel, inasmuch as they are the chosen people of Principle, because they have made themselves at one with the divine Mind, and in so doing have claimed the freedom of eternal Truth. Mrs. Eddy thus defines the children of Israel (Science and Health, p. 583): "The representatives of Soul, not corporeal sense; the offspring of Spirit, who, having wrestled with error, sin, and sense, are governed by divine Science; some of the ideas of God beheld as men, casting out error and healing the sick; Christ's offspring."

[Peter B. Biggins in Medicine Hat News, Alberta, Canada]

Christian Scientists accept the entire Scriptures and study them constantly. Christian Science makes clear the allegorical meaning of the latter part of the second chapter and the whole of the third chapter of Genesis, and it may be remarked in passing that many leading religious thinkers to-day are coming into agreement with Mrs. Eddy's explanation of these chapters.

Christian Science teaches that God is the one ever present, eternal, divine Mind, who has created man and the universe and governs all. It does not, however, as our critic claims, reduce God "to a mere mind." It draws a clear line of distinction between the divine Mind, God, and the counterfeit, the carnal or human mind, which, as St. Paul says, is "enmity against God." To prevent any possible misunderstanding on this point, and in reverence for God's name, Mrs. Eddy capitalizes the word "Mind" when she uses it to mean God. When this is borne in mind by those who study "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," there is no danger of mistaking the author's meaning. Critics overlooking this fact in quotations from this textbook, convey a meaning the very opposite of what the author intended.

[Aaron E. Brandt in The Stroudsburg (Pa.) Times Democrat]

Christian Science teaches and proves that man's every need is met by honest effort in the direction of usefulness. It unequivocally accepts the teachings of Christ Jesus on this subject: "And seek not ye what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind. For all these things do the nations of the world seek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of these things. But rather seek ye the kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Mrs. Eddy writes in her textbook on Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 530): "In divine Science, man is sustained by God, the divine Principle of being. The earth, at God's command, brings forth food for man's use. Knowing this, Jesus once said, 'Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink,'—presuming not on the prerogative of his creator, but recognizing God, the Father and Mother of all, as able to feed and clothe man as He doth the lilies."

Christian Scientists have ample proof that the above teaching is every whit true to-day, and in the degree that mankind cease to strive for material things and truly seek an understanding of the omnipresence of God's goodness—the kingdom of heaven at hand—every need will be met without taking any thought at all as to the source of supply. To supply man's every need is God's business, and He need not be reminded of His duty in this respect. To live in accord with true Christian teachings is man's business, and he will not suffer any lack as a result of obedience. "I have been young, and now am old," said the psalmist, "yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

[Robert S. Ross in The Citizen, Auburn, N. Y.]

Our seminary critic appears still to believe that the late Professor James, in classifying Christian Science with faith cure and quasi metaphysical systems, knew more about Christian Science than do Christian Scientists, although Professor James was not a student of Mrs. Eddy's writings and, consequently, was not in a position fairly to estimate the subject.

Christian Science declares that God is the divine Principle and only cause of all that really exists. If, as the Scripture tells us, "God is a Spirit," the universe including man must be spiritual. Of course Spirit never created its opposite, matter, and if Spirit did not create it, matter was not created; in which event matter, the material universe, and mortal existence must be an illusion, a waking dream.

If Spirit is the only Mind there is, the only thinking must be spiritual or godlike thinking. To put it in another way, if divine Mind is infinite, there is no finite or mortal mind. Mortals believe that they have minds of their own capable of thinking both good and evil, but Christian Science has come to correct this error, to educate mortals out of the erroneous belief in an existence apart from God. "The dream that matter and error are something," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 347 of Science and Health, "must yield to reason and revelation. Then mortals will behold the nothingness of sickness and sin, and sin and sickness will disappear from consciousness."

With the single exception of Christian Science, all systems of science, theology, and medicine base their teachings on the mistaken supposition that matter and mortal mind are realities. Believing in the reality of the human mind and mental suggestion, even Professor James could hardly conceive of a scientific system based on anything else; hence his inevitable conclusion that Christian Science is one of the "other illustrations of the mind cure movement." But if a student makes an error in numbers, in order to correct it he does not try to "suggest" it away. He applies the mathematical rule; then the error disappears. If a sufferer appeals to a Christian Scientist for help, the Scientist does not try by mental suggestion to make the sufferer believe he is not sick. On the contrary, he brings to bear on the case the Principle of being, which is perfect God and perfect man; then the suffering should disappear. If this result fails to follow, the fault is not in the Principle. The doctrine that the error which causes disease can also cure disease, is the "house divided against itself," which, Jesus plainly declares, cannot stand.

Despite the critic's belief to the contrary, Christian Science heals so-called organic and contagious diseases as readily as it heals so-called functional disorders. And why not, since God is ever present and all-powerful? A Christian cannot reasonably take the ground that there was one kind of disease Jesus could heal, but another kind he could not heal; that there was one kind of water he could walk on, but another kind he could not walk on; that there was one kind of death he could raise people from, but another kind he could not raise them from. Christian Science points out with invincible logic that unless God is omnipotent all the time, He is not omnipotent any of the time. When students of Christian Science understand and live its Principle as completely as Jesus understood and lived it, they will demonstrate it as unfailingly as he demonstrated it. This was one of the Master's assurances.

Finally, the critic will readily admit that Jesus came to do the will of God. In view of this, the very strongest argument that sin and disease are not real—that is, not created by God or sustained with His consent or approval—lies in the fact that Jesus destroyed them.

[Rachel A. Banister in The Rutland (Vt.) News]

A correspondent has taken a stand not uncommon to those who are ignorant of the real teachings of Christian Science; it is the result of a misapprehension of what Christian Science actually does teach—that of, "Just imagine you have a thing and you have it." Christian Science has numbered among its adherents men and women of all walks of life, and they are highly respectable citizens, who are not foolish enough to "imagine a vain thing" as indicated by this article. Imagination, as used in this sense of the word, is not an element of this Science, which deals with the eternal facts about God and man. Any student of Christian Science will attest that no such process of thought enters into the practice of its teachings.

[Hector Wallace Smith in Edinburgh (Scotland) Dispatch]

The piquancy and characteristic originality of Mrs. Asquith's fifteen "Love Letters" will probably entertain to some extent magazine readers, but her erroneous impressions of what Christian Science really is, partly quoted in a recent issue may unhappily lead them to the conclusion that spiritualism, spiritism, fortune-telling, suggestion, and heathen séance (whatever that may be), and the like, are in some way connected with Christian Science.

Although it seems hardly necessary, kindly allow me to repeat, for the assurance of your readers, what has more than once been said in the press,—that Christian Science has absolutely nothing whatever in common with any of those systems, which are entirely products of the human or carnal mind. The teachings of Christian Science are wholly logical and capable of proof, and in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which contains a full and complete statement of this eminently practical religion and its application to the needs of suffering humanity, Mrs. Eddy has written these words on page 79: "Spiritualism relies upon human beliefs and hypotheses. Christian Science removes these beliefs and hypotheses through the higher understanding of God."

It was in the pages of the Bible that Mrs. Eddy rediscovered this Science of the Christ, or primitive Christianity, and every chapter of her textbook is founded upon the Word of God, from Genesis to Revelation. When Mrs. Asquith maintains that people tell her she is not ill when her temperature is 104, it can fairly be assumed that she has in some manner got hold of a half truth, which is often worse than no truth at all. Mrs. Eddy herself says on page 460 of Science and Health: "Sickness is neither imaginary nor unreal,—that is, to the frightened, false sense of the patient. Sickness is more than fancy; it is solid conviction." With such a plain statement on the subject before her, it is to be hoped that some day Mrs. Asquith may be induced to investigate more thoroughly the teachings of Christian Science in order to get at the whole truth regarding illness and its cure.

To mention one more point, she declares in another passage that, "Ever since the world was inhabited, God has been made in the image of man, but here He is made in the image of woman." Now, of course, everybody knows that such an assertion is entirely at variance with what is written in the first chapter of Genesis, in the well-known verse, "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them."

The matter need not be pursued further; but let me state in conclusion that the results achieved by Christian Science are almost too well known to require special recital here. Suffice it to say that countless thousands of men and women all over the world are ready to-day to proclaim their deep and lasting debt of gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for their happy release from well-nigh hopeless bondage, which was rendered possible for them by her spiritual courage and untiring devotion, when, in New England over half a century ago, she gave Christian Science to mankind.

The Happiness of Thinking

THE thinker is the true helper of mankind. Concerning this, Mrs. Eddy says in her Message for 1900 (p. 3): "The right thinker and worker does his best, and does the thinking for the ages. No hand that feels not his help, no heart his comfort." She further says: "They who love a good work or good workers are themselves workers who appreciate a life, and labor to awake the slumbering capability of man. And what the best thinker and worker has said and done, they are not far from saying and doing." Mortal mind, however, is afraid of the thinker, and in every nation devises plans whereby to make his way difficult. In one land, for example, it will establish ancestor worship and try to clamp with the rigid hand of the past the ceremonies of the present, and the actions of men, women, and children who are alive.

In other countries it will be the utterances of some wise talker or theologian of the past that are fashioned into shackles wherewith to limit the thinker. Or it may be the king who, accepting the title of defender of the faith, sets out to formulate the faith he will defend and expects the nation to cease its own thinking and accept his changing formulations. It has been in the realm of religion that there has been most fear of the thinker, because in that realm naturally there is desire for fixity and peace. Mortal mind presents a false peace of dogma and a mechanical fixity of tradition from the past, but if you accept the ancestor and his tradition, if you accept evil heredity and perverted or incomplete views of God, you let the past build a prison house for the present.

Once a tomb was built according to the plans of one who wished his monument to endure to the end of time. Every effort was made to have it as enduring as the mountains, and it bore a boastful inscription defying time. But life is not to be defied. In a tiny crevice of the mausoleum there lodged a seed. Winds laden with invisible dust brought it soil for its need and the impartial rain watered it. At last the roots of the growing plant, with the irresistible power of life, rent the tomb of the theorist who thought that death could defy life, and made of it a heap of stones which became a garden for the green tree. So it is and always will be when we are dealing with life triumphant. In the realm of thought we should recognize that the assorting of beliefs and traditions accepted from our own past, or the endeavor to incase ourselves within the once accepted theory, is not real living, for living means thinking, and thinking means recognition of Principle, which again is Life.

Christ Jesus disturbed the settled views of the religionists of his time because he brought God into the present. They were ready to talk all day about their ancient God, and to discuss the records of Israel's past with such exactitude that they had counted the number of letters in each section of the sacred writings, and had endless pages of commentaries and comments on the law. The result had been a making void of the real law of God through beliefs, traditions, and theories of mortal mind. The seeker after God and His peace and salvation was given instead "the commandments of men," connected with which were controversies and doubtful disputations. Christ Jesus brought life where theological death reigned, because he was a thinker who made Life his premise and understood that God is Life; hence he could say, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." It is well to remember that the discovery of Christian Science was due to thinking from the premise that God is Life.

The mindless traditions of the past have been referred to as imprisoning men to keep them from thinking, and it might be added that men are likewise imprisoned by the mindless mesmerism of the present. The traveling mesmerist used to hand the same glass of water to a series of dazed victims, and each one tasting it would name a different beverage, calling it pleasant or repulsive. Half a dozen newspapers will comment upon a man's action, and every one will bring out its own peculiar view. Then the reader will accept in every case the view of his chosen paper, though it may be biased and perverted, and so the readers are thus divided into warring and antagonistic groups, although the action in question viewed metaphysically is capable of but one clear interpretation. It need hardly be said that submission to mesmerism is not thinking, any more than the acceptance of superstition is thinking. Now it does not matter whether mental suggestion is well-intentioned or malign so far as the freedom of the victim is concerned. He has no joy of freedom, for he has his love and hate, his emotions and passions, his hopes and fears, played upon relentlessly by mortal mind. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." The wicked then are not likely to give peace to their victims.

True thinking is following Christ. Some one asked another, What is it that women love to see manifested in a man? The answer given was, Gentleness, patience, deference, consideration. And what do men admire in a woman? Courage, wisdom, prudence, and order. In both cases the answer was approved. In a home, for example, the woman does not want to have to supply all the patience needed. Of this virtue it has been said pessimistically in a proverb that it is found "seldom in a woman, never in a man." But just as soon as man begins to think as a Christian Scientist he begins to be patient. Also he appreciates the change when his helpmeet begins to think as a Christian Scientist, and he is not required to supply prudence for both. Thus is illustrated the truth of the statement (Science and Health, p. 102), which says, "Christian Science despoils the kingdom of evil, and pre-eminently promotes affection and virtue in families and therefore in the community." Thinking brings out fullness of character or perfect manhood, namely, "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Here no longer do vexing imperfections and irritating antagonisms arise, since the differences upon which these are based are harmonized. Paul puts the matter in a sentence when he says, "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

The periodicals of the Christian Science movement which bear their marvelous testimony to reformation and healing and the discovery of genuine happiness should assist the world in understanding Mrs. Eddy's statement on the first page of the Preface to her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," where she says, "The time for thinkers has come."

Perseverance

GROWTH in Christian Science demands the ability to maintain the right in spite of counterinfluences. This every practical exponent of Science knows from personal experience. Perseverance is not the obstinacy of self-will, but an unselfed consecration to God's will. Perseverance breaks the backbone of that trinity of the devil: discontent, dissatisfaction, discouragement, the three D's which play the traitor to the Christian soldier on the march. Perseverance is an ally to obedience, and when the heavenly call has been heard and accepted, makes the choice definite and keeps the path strictly in line with God's commands.

On page 340 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy says, "The lives of great men and women are miracles of patience and perseverance." She also states on page 514 of Science and Health, "In the figurative transmission from the divine thought to the human, diligence, promptness, and perseverance are likened to 'the cattle upon a thousand hills;'" and again, on page 515, "Patience is symbolized by the tireless worm, creeping over lofty summits, persevering in its intent." Certain it is that without perseverance repeated sacrifices of self seem to be fruitless. With perseverance the advancing Christian Scientist learns how to disentangle himself from the tentacles of human belief, to leave behind him, as he marches forward, the exasperating demands of physicality, the mortal laws which should be more honored in the breach than the observance, the contracting ties of false relationships, the congestion of much ado about nothing, the loss of time in empty talk, the wish to please men rather than God. Perseverance is a necessary quality for all those who are uncoiling the serpents of love of ease, love of popular approval, and love of ecclesiastical control. Perseverance will discipline their scientific Christianity with strictness and fortitude.

When obedience is supported by perseverance, the fruits of the Spirit inevitably ripen into a glorious harvest under the sunlight of Soul. Human experience is full of instances in which an ounce of perseverance brings the pound of noble achievement. A little hammer used with perseverance can accomplish wonders in building operations. The persevering, rhythmic step of the mountaineer carries him to the highest peaks. When human nature cries out that its utmost has been accomplished, the next step generally brings victory,—mortal sense surrenders to immortal power, and the infinite masters the finite.

Then comes the reward of perseverance in the glory of attainment, for spiritual light destroys suffering, fear, disease, and death. This is "the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." It is completely free from darkness of any kind; therefore it destroys scholastic theology and the belief in the reality of sin and sickness. There is no sin or suffering except that which is made by thought. Holiness is to be triumphant throughout the world, and this holiness will not be as scholastic theology outlines but as God outlines. There is no need of suffering if the fear of outside thought is handled as a seeming power which has really no power at all. Accept the argument of seeming power, and you suffer; reject it, and you are free.

For instance, materialistic thought has ascribed atmospheric disturbances, the raging of the elements, floods and droughts, bitter cold and sweltering heat, to so-called material laws, supposed to be irresponsible and uncontrollable. Christian Science teaches that the physical universe is an outward expression of an inward, mortal, mental concept. Physical phenomena, therefore, instead of being uncontrollable activities are subject to the proper mental dominion. Christian Scientists should not be caught by the suggestion that in certain parts of the world the accumulation of the winter's snows must melt into disastrous floods, or that elsewhere the necessary rainfall must fail by reason of some physical law, or that difficulties of labor will prevent agriculture from being profitable. On the contrary, Christian Scientists will cheerfully and perseveringly place the earth and all its productivities under divine care, and enjoy the fruits of right thinking.

Joyful perseverance in spiritual work will turn the tables upside down on the plan of Judas to sap all the gladness out of one's work. Strict account should be given to God in all faithfulness in sending forth the healing word which has a two-edged sword for all error. Mental alertness, keenness of spiritual vision, and obedient perseverance will enable the spiritually minded to work for God in as easy a manner as a little child making mud pies. The child is just playing with the sun, which bakes the pies into shapes the little hands have molded. Christian Science has a great message for the world. It will take away all false sense of existence and establish real living. Therefore let us obey the call with perseverance.

Working Out

ON page 22 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy quotes Paul's words, "Work out your own salvation," and then she adds that this "is the demand of Life and Love, for to this end God worketh with you." In a number of other places in our Leader's writings we find a reference to this same Scripture, and there can be no question that the idea here expressed is of vital importance to every student of Christian Science. It may indeed be said that if we do not realize the desired results from our work in any direction, it is because we have failed to maintain the balance between the working within of spiritual law and the working out of this law along the pathway of daily duty.

In the second chapter of Paul's epistle to the Philippians we find the oft quoted words, "Work out your own salvation;" and this is followed by the statement, "It is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." The tendency of mortals has usually been to make drudgery of work when in reality it should be joyous, and did they but know it, the surest means of growth. Then after they have taken their first steps in Christian Science they are apt to go to the other extreme and to feel that they have done all that is required of them when they have silently declared the truth of being and recognized the operation of divine law, quite forgetful of the fact that the operation of truth within and the working out of divine law are reciprocal, and that the one implies and demands the other. Perhaps the apostle had some experiences with this mental state when he followed his admonition with this other: "Do all things without murmurings and disputings."

The faithful student of Christian Science knows that if he did not give precedence to spiritual things, and begin each day with a period of communion with God and a renewed acquaintance with the law of God which destroys all discord, the day's work could never bring out the results in the way of harmony and happiness which would follow the true method of working, and this means always to seek "first" the things of God. Some one may remark at this point that even if an hour or more is spent in the early morning in the study and declaration of truth, as understood in Christian Science, long hours of work have to follow in which we have to deal with the discords and difficulties of mortal experience. Here we may remind ourselves that if one day with the Lord means more than a thousand years of such experience, that which is gained in our communion with Truth and Love should fully provide for all the needs of the day when the vital purpose of all activity is kept well in view, and that is, to prove the ever presence and unceasing activity of the Mind which rules the universe.

At times we may wish it were possible to get away from the pressure which we are apt to feel in the working out of our human problems. This uncovers the age-long tendency of humanity to seek seclusion, and thus for a time to turn away from the process of working out the demands of divine law. We cannot too often remember that it is our high privilege even in the midst of the pressing duties to refresh ourselves with "deep draughts from the fount of divine Love," to quote Mrs. Eddy's words as found on the first page of the Preface to "Miscellaneous Writings." This may seem wellnigh impossible if we have not prepared for the needs of the day by earnest communion with God; but if we have done so and have carried with us a sense of the demands of Principle, the balance will be maintained between the inward working of truth and the working out of our own salvation and that of the world from belief in the power and reality of evil, in sin, sickness, and death.

We must not forget that there is nothing oppressive about the working out of truth, because the inward working of divine Love means the expression of our Father's "good pleasure." One who was seeking his healing in Christian Science when all material means had failed to give relief, was greatly cheered by this thought that God was doing the work for him out of His "good pleasure;" that the good pleasure of our Father never means less than health and strength, harmony and happiness; and that without the truest activity there could be no true sense of Life and progress. As this is understood we shall gladly take up the problems of the present world, no longer shrinking from any of them with a sense that they may be burdensome, because the full-grown man would smile at the thought that he could not lift and carry that which might seem very heavy to a child. As we grow into the manhood revealed in Christ Jesus, our divinely bestowed possibilities are revealed hour by hour, and never better than when we realize the wonders of our Father's work in this age, and that our highest privilege is to know that we are coworkers with Him.

Current Notes

ONTARIO, CANADA.—This office has distributed four hundred copies of newspapers containing editorials, letters, or news reports favorable to our cause. A special distribution of three thousand copies of The Ottawa Citizen, containing replies to articles in a denominational paper, was made through various churches and societies in Ontario and four other provinces. In this issue the Citizen stated editorially that these replies had been refused publication by the editor of the paper in which the attacks had been published. The Hamilton Spectator also reproduced the replies. This circulation proved so salutary that the same denominational paper published at a later date a reply to another offending article, and the number of such articles has diminished. The daily press has been quite willing generally to publish replies to reports of sermons or other items misrepresenting Christian Science.

There were several hearings by Mr. Justice Hodgins, Commissioner for the Ontario Government, in which we were represented. In February, Judge Smith and Mr. I. F. Hellmuth, K.C., stated our case briefly. On June 28, the latter, as requested by the commissioner at a hearing at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, defined the present legal status of Christian Scientists in Ontario. In the Ontario Parliament Building on June 29, Judge Smith, as a rebuttal to a rabid attack by an allopathic doctor at a former hearing, delivered a masterly paper in our defense and in behalf of medical freedom. It is expected that the commissioner's report will be made public during the next session of the Legislature.

Fifty public libraries in Ontario—including schools for the blind, etc.—are now supplied with authorized Christian Science literature, most of them having some of Mrs. Eddy's works, and some having complete sets, as well as subscriptions to the periodicals. Five military camps have been supplied in this way with subscriptions to the Monitor. At the request of the Inspector of Public Libraries for Ontario, this office donated six copies of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, to the Departmental Library Training School, for the purpose of scientific classification and cataloguing in the annual school. These books will also form part of the library from which students may borrow books for home reading. Appreciative acknowledgment of this useful gift has been received.

Last December this committee was requested by The Christian Science Board of Directors to act as War Relief committee for Canada, to administer grants of money from The Mother Church War Relief fund to Christian Scientists or their friends who are experiencing hardship on account of the war. To ten persons, most of whom had families to support, $595 has been granted. This practical helpfulness is much appreciated.—Committee on Publication.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

The Lectures

MADISON, WIS. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Arthur W. Hickman, who said in part:—

Christian Science, the new-old gospel of Truth, which Jesus taught and demonstrated over nineteen hundred years ago, is just as effective to-day and just as applicable to all our needs, physical, mental, or financial, as it was in the days when the Master healed the palsied man, cast out devils (evils), or told Peter to extract the coin from the fish's mouth. Jesus' ability to accomplish these works was not a result of any special gift from God, but was the result of his knowledge of the law of God. Our ability in this day and age to accomplish these wonders, as they are sometimes called, rests upon our understanding of the law of God, which not only heals sin, sickness, and all inharmony, but is a law of protection to all who know its power.

SPOKANE, WASH. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Joseph W. Thompson, who said in part:—

When Jesus sent his disciples out with his message of love he said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." He also said, "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." For three hundred years healing followed this preaching. Then this healing art was lost, and not until the discovery of Christian Science by Mrs. Eddy was it restored to the world. As in Jesus' time so to-day the Science of Christianity is making men free from sin and suffering and is establishing on earth peace and the brotherhood of man.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. (Fifth Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Miss Henrietta M. Steele, who said in part:—

Your presence indicates your desire to know more of this Christ-teaching, which reveals to us a God of love, a living God, a God as Principle, available for the solution of every problem that presents itself, be it great or small. Some one has said, "What this old world needs is mothering," and Christian Science has come to present God as Mother as well as Father, and the world, tired of its woes and the seemingly interminable strife, will find peace and healing for its wounds in the arms of this Father-Mother God.

LONDON, ENGLAND (Second Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Lucy E. Mann, who said in part:—

The tender, healing benediction of Truth and Love, brought to us in the promise and fulfillment of Christian Science, was never more needed by humanity than it is to-day. It is indeed a ladder let down to earth from heaven, the way of health and peace.

ITHACA, N. Y. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by A. N. Gibb, who said in part:—

Humanity is reaching out as never before for an exact, provable, and scientific knowledge of God. To the Christian Scientist such a knowledge is the only real Science, and this fact is clearly expressed on page 128 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, as follows: "The term Science, properly understood, refers only to the laws of God and to His government of the universe, inclusive of man."

Twenty centuries ago Christ Jesus not only preached but proved this fact. He made the definite statement, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." He also said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Christian Science is steadfastly holding to this promise and proving its faith by its works.

Testimonies of Healing

It is with a heart filled with thankfulness to God that I testify to all Christian Science has done for me, hoping that this testimony may help others. My healing was slow, but through this experience I have gained much. My husband first heard of Christian Science from a friend, who brought him a copy of the Sentinel at the beginning of the year 1912. As he had been seeking the truth for many years, he procured a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy without delay, for after a short period of study he recognized that this was indeed the truth of which Jesus spoke.

In February, 1905, I was very ill and my husband called in a doctor who, after an examination, advised me to go to the hospital at once to undergo an operation, which he said would cure me; but we were not eager to comply with his wishes. The operation was eventually performed, but instead of getting better I became worse. I was under medical treatment for several years, but became gradually weaker, and suffered from hemorrhage for two years and a half. The doctors then advised another operation, as they could not do anything more for me; indeed, after I began to have Christian Science treatment one of the physicians even told the practitioner that it was quite impossible for me ever to regain my health, but the power of Truth has completely healed me. I am well and strong and able to attend to all my home duties.

Those who read this testimony will realize how grateful we are for having found Christian Science. We know that through Mrs. Eddy's faithful efforts we may always avail ourselves of our loving Father's aid.—Mrs. Alida Hemerik, Mount Stewart, Cape, South Africa.

The healing of my wife is permanent. Although we have since passed through deep waters, God has helped us wonderfully and we prove daily that we are sustained by infinite Love.—D. Hemerik.

When reading the many helpful testimonies in our periodicals I have often thought that I also should like to add my experiences, but always the suggestion has come up, "I have had no wonderful healing like some of these people, so perhaps had better wait until I do!" Looking back over the last ten years, however, I find so much for which to be grateful that I feel it is time I availed myself of this opportunity of testifying to the great help which Christian Science has been to me. I did not come to it for physical healing, and for a long time took no interest in what I called the healing part, but I found that "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy answered the many questions which before seemed unanswerable, and that these answers were not theoretical but demonstrable and therefore true.

During the last six or seven years Christian Science has been my only physician, and it has been quicker and much more certain in its results than I ever found material remedies to be. But it is perhaps since the war broke out that I have felt most grateful for this teaching, and it seems quite impossible to express in words how much it has helped me. My husband is in the army, and it was difficult not to feel overwhelmed by conditions at first, but Christian Science has never failed us. Only those who have been through this experience can understand what it means to have the certain conviction through all these terrible times that God is indeed able and willing to protect and to save; that trials simply mean progress, not defeat. As an understanding of the truth helps in the big things, so it does in the least item of daily experience. It has helped me to overcome fear of my fellow beings, and to rise above the numerous small worries and fears which come to one who has possibly made much of little things.

During the war I have had to take three journeys abroad, and on each occasion was very thankful for my understanding of Christian Science; without it I should certainly have started with a good many anxious thoughts. The first time, I had to leave for Egypt at very short notice, and during the hottest time of the year. The journey was looked upon as difficult, and I was told that it was hardly possible to make connections in Paris that would enable me to get the boat at Marseilles, and to miss it meant several days' delay; however, I applied my understanding of Christian Science and also had help from a faithful practitioner, with the result that there were no delays, every connection was made, and though there had been no time to book a seat in the train or a berth on the boat there was always a place for me, though the crowds traveling were very great. When I arrived in Egypt I was also helped to overcome the effects of the extreme heat. On the other two journeys my experiences were similar, and on the last occasion I was healed of seasickness.

For this demonstrable religion, and for all the blessings which it has brought into my life, I do indeed feel grateful.

Mrs. V. Mabel Key, York, England.

I wish to express my gratitude for the physical healing as well as for the many other blessings I have received through Christian Science. I took up the study of this teaching about fifteen years ago, when in deep sorrow and very despondent. I had come to a place where I did not feel that I wanted to live any longer. I had been raised in a Christian family, but my understanding was that all my burdens were sent to me by God. At this time a dear friend who was studying Christian Science told me that I was God's child and that He loved and took care of all His children, therefore would take care of me. I was also given a Bible, along with the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and told to study them. The result was that I was healed of my sorrow, also of a skin disease of ten years' standing which had failed to yield to many different treatments.

Last winter I was called to the country. I had been living in a steam-heated apartment, but in the country I had a room that was not heated. At the end of a week I had a very severe cold, and returned to my city home with all the symptoms of acute lung trouble. The cough was so severe that I had to raise myself up in my bed in order to breathe. A practitioner was asked to treat me, and in a few days I was entirely healed.

These are only a few of the many proofs I have received of the healing power of Truth. Words cannot express my thankfulness to God for His great goodness, nor can I express my gratitude for our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and for what her explanation of Truth is doing for me every day and hour.—Miss Amelia Mary Peters, St. Louis, Mo.

It gives me great pleasure to be able to inform you of another beautiful proof of the efficacy of Christian Science. I was struck on the finger by a baseball with such force that the nail of my little finger was knocked out at the root. Our trainer cut a part of the nail off, saying it would dig into the wound and interfere with the healing. This happened on Thursday afternoon and on the following Saturday I played as good a game of ball as I ever played in my life and have not missed an inning since.

This was a beautiful demonstration to me, as the injury was on my right hand, the one I throw with, but I experienced no difficulty or inconvenience whatsoever in throwing or batting. I have had many proofs of the healing as well as the regenerating power of Christian Science, but this seemed especially wonderful because in the old way of thinking I doubt if I could have played within a week, and then probably only by great effort. Through the protection Christian Science teaches, I have been enabled to play almost five years without missing a game on account of disability. I cannot begin to tell how grateful I am for what understanding I have of this healing truth.

PHILIP KOERNER, South Berkeley, Cal.

When I first went to a Christian Science practitioner for treatment, I had never recovered from an attack of tonsillitis which occurred two years previously, and scarcely knew what it meant to be without a sore throat. When I began to study Christian Science this condition was instantaneously overcome and there has been no return of it. Before this I was not very strong, but since learning that "they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength" I have experienced better health than I ever knew and am able to accomplish more than I thought possible. At that time my finances also were at their lowest, but through the understanding that there can be no lack in Truth and that we must be rich in good works, every need has been abundantly supplied.

It often seems hardest to tell the things which are nearest the heart, and I can only say that where formerly there was a great fear of the future because of discordant conditions for which there seemed no help, through Christian Science these conditions have become so much improved that my sense of peace is best expressed in the words of the hymn on page 223 of our Hymnal, "I know no fear, with Thee at hand to bless."

Christian Science is also teaching me to overcome pride, envy, jealousy, impatience, and to keep my thoughts loving, patient, and meek. I think no one has more cause for joy than I have. During the past three years this healing truth has met not only one, but every daily need. At first the way often seemed dark, but since I stopped human planning and learned to "let patience have her perfect work" there has been steady improvement. Each day, as I rejoice over the errors which have been overcome, I try to remember these words: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases."

MRS. RUTH M. GOEBEN, West Hartford, Conn.

Many times it has come to me that I must express my gratitude for Christian Science and for what it has done for me and for my family. My father was a physician, and I had deep respect for all his work. When I was about to be married to a Christian Scientist many misgivings came to me and I asked if I might be permitted to have a physician if I wished. The reply was that I might do so. I also asked if I might continue to attend my own church, and was assured that I might, and that my husband would accompany me occasionally. For four months after our marriage we lived with my husband's family while waiting for our own home to be completed. During that time I was in no way urged to attend the Christian Science services, but was assured that I would be welcome whenever I wished to attend. Before long I clearly saw that there was nothing so restful, so quieting, so harmonious among my former church people as I found here, and in just six months I was ready to say, "Thy people shall be my people." I joined the church and later was privileged to become a member of The Mother Church.

Through the years that have followed there has been much to be overcome. Gradually with the help of a patient practitioner many nagging errors, such as revenge, jealousy, and selfishness, are losing their hold, and whereas I saw "through a glass, darkly," I am beginning to catch a glimpse of mental freedom. When our little boy came, such fear was held over me that I believe had it not been for Christian Science neither the baby nor I could have lived. This wonderful demonstration seemed to prove to me more completely the power of Truth. This little son is now seven years old, strong and sturdy, as people express it, a picture of health. He is also able to express and demonstrate the truth. His sister, who is four years of age, is strong and sunny too. I could not tell of all the blessings we have had, but the truth means more to us each day.

Many discordant conditions have been overcome and much good work has been accomplished. Often the question comes to me, "How can I best express my gratitude for all the help I have received?" And the answer is invariably, "By putting into practice the truth I have learned."

MRS. LUCY HAYES EDIE, Lawrence, Kan.

It is with a grateful heart that I acknowledge the power of God to govern the universe with the law of love. I have learned that "God is no respecter of persons;" that we can help ourselves with even a little knowledge of the truth, if we will let go of fear and trustingly follow the Master.

As a child I was so thin and pale that I was constantly asked if I had been ill, and as I grew to womanhood I became a victim to more pains and diseases. Later I underwent a local operation which disclosed conditions said to necessitate another operation, to which I strongly objected as I was afraid I would not live through it, having nearly passed out under the former one. The specialist also informed me I would never be strong or able to do a day's work, which was very discouraging, since I had two little children to support. I managed to struggle along for a year, but then found I would be compelled to submit to the operation as I was subject to terrible attacks of inflammation which kept me in bed several days, and I was not free from the effects for three weeks.

While I was having one of these attacks a neighbor recommended Christian Science treatment, but I felt insulted and told her I was really sick and needed my doctor, in whom I had great faith and who understood my case. She, however, gently insisted and I finally gave in. I had absent treatment, and in about half an hour fell asleep. An hour later I awoke in perfect health, and I cannot describe my feelings as I arose, dressed myself, and ate a hearty meal. Next day I did a big washing without experiencing any sense of fatigue. This to me was most wonderful, as I was always tired and a small washing would completely exhaust me for several days. One treatment healed me of a bowel trouble of long standing and of wearing glasses.

It is now over ten years since I came into perfect freedom, my rightful heritage. While I did not make any headway for the first three years, having moved to California and not coming into contact with Christian Scientists, yet I clung to the truth that God had healed me, and no matter what the seeming manifestation was, I did not let fear get the best of me. We were five days on the way from Wisconsin to California and there was a seeming return of the bowel trouble, but I had been told that I would be all right, so took no material remedy and had no fear, and when I arrived at my sister's home, conditions were normal.

I am more than thankful that I was able to hold fast to the truth and permanence of my first healing. After we moved to a place where I could attend church I began to make some progress. My first work was overcoming the effects of contact with poison oak, to which I was very susceptible. The last three years have been very fruitful; the way has not been easy, but I am grateful for the progress which has been made with the solving of every difficulty. I have been lovingly guided through the fiery furnace, and this has meant purification. While I am only a beginner, there is nothing I would exchange for even my slight knowledge of the truth. I was very slow in grasping the truth of being and at times despaired of ever being able to see spiritually, but I prayed constantly for an understanding heart, and since our prayers are answered before we utter them I was shown the light. All my doubts and fears were cleared away by constantly knowing that at all times God's promises are true and unchanging. I am indeed grateful to God, the giver of all good things, among which is Christian Science as given to us through our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

Mrs. Caroline M. Clark, Compton, Cal.

It is with the deepest gratitude that I write this testimony, for I feel that I am only returning to give thanks to God for the many blessings which have come to me in the past two years and a half through the understanding of Christian Science. During these years God has been our only physician, and when such ailments as scarlet fever, whooping cough, and measles presented themselves in my only child, a boy of six years, the study of this saving truth enabled me to realize that God is ever present, healing every sickness and every disease; that His promises never fail and are fulfilled daily.

Christian Science has taught me that God never changes, is always good; and the same God that restored Abraham's son to him has restored my son in perfect health to me. At times when the trial seemed great and the way dark, the Comforter again would come through the work of a loving practitioner. Words cannot express my gratitude for Christian Science, but if my testimony convinces one doubting mother's heart, then God's Word has not returned unto Him void. My endeavor is to let my life speak my gratitude, and my great aim and ambition is to live a life worthy of the name Christian Scientist.

I have been studying Christian Science for some time, and have had so many benefits from it that I could not begin to tell all the good received. As I gain in understanding of the all-power of God, I am more thankful every day that I was broad-minded enough to investigate when the subject was first presented to me. It was the beautiful religion that attracted me. While I have had trials and been through deep waters seemingly, I have clung to the truth steadfastly. I feel sure that if I had not had some understanding of it I would have lost my reason at one time. I have been healed of varicose veins and other ills, and wish I could tell every one who is depending on material means for healing how much better it is to rely on God, "who healeth all thy diseases." There is a great deal for me to learn yet, but I know that I shall reap if I faint not. What a dreary world this would be without Christian Science to those who have learned to love it! It is truly the "pearl of great price" that Mrs. Eddy found and presented to this age. My only wish is that every one could see it as we do. I thank God for this healing truth, and want to show my thankfulness by my life.

Mrs. L. Carrie McMullin, Price, Utah.

I have been thinking for a long time that I would give my testimony of healing through Christian Science. I was all out of harmony; there was not one thing about me that was right. I suffered from sleeplessness, my nerves were all unstrung, and of course everything went wrong. My stomach gave me a great deal of trouble, so that I could not eat anything without its distressing me. The doctors said I had an abnormal growth and wanted me to go to the hospital, but I did not, for Christian Science saved me. My people were much opposed to it, but I kept trying to trust Truth a little more each day, till I now can truly say that I have found the "pearl of great price." I am happy all the time, and want nothing but Christ in my home and heart. I know that those who desire the truth can have it, and am thankful for this free country where we can have the religion we desire.

I am striving each day to be more faithful and thankful to God for sending one whose purity of thought enabled her to bring this beautiful truth to us. I am very grateful for the Sunday services; indeed I can truly say that I am grateful for all the numerous blessings which have come to me and mine. I want to thank all those who have helped me in any way. I have been a member of The Mother Church for over twenty-five years.

Mrs. Susie M. Green, Stoneham, Mass.

Afflicted with hemorrhage of the lungs, also stomach and bowel trouble, and suffering in mind and body, I came from Kentucky to Colorado by advice of my faithful physician, whom I loved and still love. For a time I improved, but in the midst of a busy term of court the hemorrhage returned. I struggled on until finally advised by a physician that in his judgment I could not live to exceed one year unless I abandoned my profession, that of law, lived in the open, and continued to diet. I moved into the heart of the mountains and there with every material aid, pure air, spring water, the fragrance of the pines, mountain and valley of indescribable grandeur and beauty, I continued to experience sleepless nights and at times intense suffering.

Through my wife's healing in Christian Science of a malignant disease I was led to employ a practitioner, and as a result thereof exchanged the above products of material, wrong thinking for spiritual, right thinking and was completely healed. It is therefore more than a pleasure to acknowledge the blessings that have come to me through the study of Christian Science and to give thanks for the Christian Science organization and for all the instrumentalities it is using for the elevation and spiritual development of mankind. I desire especially to give thanks for Mrs. Eddy's writings, so replete with wisdom and truth, the study of which incites love for and search of the Scriptures, and liberates from bondage to all the erroneous conceptions of the so-called carnal or mortal mind, teaching the nature and character of God's presence and bringing fullness of joy.

For all that Christian Science has accomplished and for all the blessings, physical and spiritual, that have come to me and to others, I can best express my thanks in the language of the psalmist, "I will extol thee, my God, O king; and I will bless thy name for ever and ever."

WILLIAM T. SKELTON, Colorado Springs, Col.

I wish to give thanks for the many blessings that have come to me through Christian Science. For many years I had been suffering from pain in the back which, the doctor said, could only be relieved by an operation. To this, however, I would not consent. Later on I suffered greatly from hemorrhoids. I then went to see a Christian Science practitioner, who lovingly took up treatment, with the result that after a short time I was healed of the piles and the pain in the back, also of rheumatism, stomach trouble, and weak eyes. In my family we have had many other healings through Christian Science. Measles, fever, earache, colds, and other ailments have been overcome in a short time. For all these wonderful demonstrations, as well as for the spiritual understanding which we have gained, I am deeply thankful to God, and my thought goes out in love to Mrs. Eddy, who has given us again the light of freedom.

MRS. IDA GROTE, San Antonio, Texas.

This testimony is sent in loving gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. After suffering four years from an internal growth, I was entirely healed by the truth as taught in Christian Science. Nervousness also gave way, as well as many other troubles. The healing to me was the most wonderful thing I had ever imagined; but as I learned more about God and man, I came to see that healing followed as a necessary consequence of the realization of the truth, regardless of the nature of the condition to be overcome. Christian Science has been my only aid in every way for nine years, and divine Love certainly does meet my needs.

I am grateful for the physical help, but more so for the spiritual awakening. I am also grateful to Mrs. Eddy for showing us how to understand the Bible.

MRS. MILDRED LYON BRIGGS, Jeffersonville, Ind.

It is about seven years since my first healing in Christian Science, and I would like to acknowledge this blessing publicly, to show in a small way my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for bringing me out of darkness, doubt, sickness, and unhappiness into the sunshine of health and joy. About five years previous to my healing, I was compelled to have a surgical operation for a growth which the doctors said was the cause of continual hemorrhages. I was in bed nine months after this operation before getting relief enough to be up and around.

Five years later the condition became manifest again, and after being examined by my husband's brother, a physician, and learning from him that the growth had reappeared, remembering the suffering and struggle I had experienced after the operation, I had no faith to go through the ordeal again, so without telling anyone of my intention I visited a Christian Science church in the city where I was residing. At the close of the service I felt that I was in my right place and so turned to a practitioner for help the following day. In seven treatments I was healed, much to my surprise. My family recognized the healing and wanted to know how it had come about, and on being told, they rejoiced with me in this new-found faith in God. I had further treatments at intervals for the overcoming of fear, but have had no return of the trouble.

I am very grateful for the many blessings that have come to me through this healing truth, but to me the greatest blessing is the light which has been thrown on the Bible by the study of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, who was loving, pure, and unselfish enough to labor to bring this understanding of the omnipotence of God to human apprehension.

MRS. EDITH HECKMAN, Omaha, Neb.

I have been reading and studying "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy since January, 1916. In this short time I have received such a great deal of help and inspiration from it that I am very grateful and want others to know what it has done for me. I had been sick for two years with Bright's disease, doctoring constantly and living on a very strict diet, which I was told I would always have to do. One afternoon, while suffering with a severe headache, I decided to try Christian Science, so visited a practitioner, who interested and encouraged me at once with her loving sympathy and wonderful understanding of God's law. She began treatments that day and they were kept up for two weeks, though after the first two or three treatments all pain had left me. I lost the fear of certain kinds of food being harmful to me and ate everything I wanted without any inconvenience. I had one attack of the trouble afterward, but it was overcome with one treatment. I eat all the things that I had been forbidden to eat, without any ill effects, am perfectly well, and confident that the healing is permanent; in fact, my health is better than ever before and I am stronger in every way.

Christian Science has been a wonderful help with my three-year-old boy, who is growing more sturdy every day. He has had several minor healings, one of which is especially interesting. He stepped on a very hot register with his bare foot, raising a blister that completely covered the ball of the foot. His screams frightened me at first, and I thought the condition too serious for me to try to help him with my understanding of Christian Science, so I suggested putting something on the burn. He stopped crying immediately and said, "Mother, can't we trust God?" I accepted the rebuke and put his shoes and stockings on, and that afternoon he walked downtown with me, never once complaining; instead he said, "Mother, God took care of me; my foot is all well."

For these healings and many others I thank God and am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

MRS. PEARL I. SNYDER, Bay City, Mich.

It is with a heart full of love and gratitude to God and to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, that I send this testimony. About four years ago, when my youngest child was two and a half months old, I was taken with a bad attack of influenza which settled in my breast and caused two severe abscesses. It seemed as though I could not stand the suffering, so I called in a practitioner to give me Christian Science treatment. One abscess disappeared in four days; the other had gained a firm hold and broke in six places, but in four weeks the healing was complete. During this experience I was able to do my housework and care for my children with ease. I am truly grateful for this healing and for many other blessings which have come to us through Christian Science.

Religion adds the vision of a new heaven to the hope of a new earth. In other words, a great spiritual inspiration is at work on a vast social scale. Noble ideals of brotherhood, bringing peace, cooperation, and satisfaction in its train, are transfigured by the sublime glory of the Father's purpose and the mind of Christ. The Christian church does well to feel the utmost sympathy with these new aspirations and hopes. The corporate action of the church as a whole may still be slow and fitful, for the church is much encumbered and compromised by many alliances with the order that is passing away.

[W. R. Lethaby in The Hibbert Journal]

Our towns have not been thought of enough as organisms and wholes: wonderful work has been done in them in departments, especially in remedial ways, but not so much in constructive ways. The town itself is hardly ever thought of as a cradle of life, a school of manners, and the foundation of civilization. We have accepted our institutions as matters of course, and the problem of intense training for quality in community life has hardly ever been considered.

[The Independent]

When all men are instinctively and infallibly unselfish the Christian state will be here. But we shall get an approximation to that ideal long before that millennial time is reached. For every step in real progress that mankind makes collectively is on the road toward that far-off goal. If it does not lead that way it is not true progress, but spurious.

[Jewish Comment]

For the spiritually minded, heaven is about us everywhere. Wherever God is there is heaven, and God is everywhere. If we were but constantly conscious of it, heaven lies about us here and now. Heaven is not a matter of this or that special locality but of high thought, unselfish act, and generous feeling.

[Zion's Herald]

The simple life does not demand that a man be either rich or poor, for it is a thing of the spirit rather than of bank accounts; but in order to live it one must have himself in hand and make his great need to be the presence and favor of God.

French Translation of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy

In conformity to the rules established by Mary Baker Eddy for making and publishing translations of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has been translated into French, and is now published with the English text opposite the French translation.

This edition is bound in cloth similar to the cover used on the English editions. Price, one to five copies, $3.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $3.25 each. It is also printed on Oxford India Bible paper, and bound in the same style as the regular pocket edition of Science and Health. Price, one to five copies, $5.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $5.25 each. The quantity price will be made on six or more books of the French translation, including the two styles of bindings.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, occupy the minimum space, and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Vest Pocket Pamphlet

The article "Possession," by Adam H. Dickey, has been reprinted in a pamphlet, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at four cents a copy.

From The Christian Science Board of Directors

All correspondence intended for The Christian Science Board of Directors should be addressed to the Board at 105 Falmouth Street, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts, and not to individuals.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

Modern Zaccheuses

What The Christian Science Monitor does for one reader, and what its world-wide fashion news and advertising service does for his business, is admirably set forth in a letter from a dealer in a small town in western Australia, printed below:

"In your letter you say you are especially interested to know just how the Monitor has been brought to my attention sufficiently to warrant placing an advertisement in its columns. First, I attribute our success in business solely to Christian Science and to the valuable assistance of the Monitor. I find the Fashion Page particularly helpful as a guide to buying, and it keeps me abreast of the times to this extent: representatives of manufacturing firms visit Kalgoorlie and they often exclaim, "Why! you have already got what we are only now showing." This proves that when guided by the Monitor's articles and hints as to what to buy, our goods are a season ahead. This is of inestimable value to us. Naturally, I feel extremely grateful to the Monitor for its advanced ideas.

"I also know that when giving to another one of our missionaries, the Monitor, the Christ-truth is behind it. . . .

"I wish to conclude with keen appreciation of the work of the editor and staff of the Monitor for their faithful labors. I find each page permeated with truth, making each item of interest more forceful in its particular vein, proving that every subject must receive a most searching examination as to its project before being sent to the press, which naturally entails a great deal of thought and devotion to give out the direct message of God to the sincere seekers of Truth."

Zaccheus, too small of stature to see the Master as he was passing by, climbed a sycamore tree to more clearly behold him, and Jesus rewarded his spiritual enterprise by calling him to come down and be the host of himself and the blessings of the Christ-truth he presented (Luke 19).

The enterprising small communities of the modern world are many of them the Zaccheuses of this time, rising above the claims of limitation to discern the Christ-truth and obtain its untold opportunities and blessings.

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission to the world has been opened through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at training cantonments, at nominal postage, literature offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen in the United States. A printed notice on the front of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, and Le Héraut de Christian Science, signed by the Postmaster-General, explains the simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to mail them regularly as desired.

"What I say unto you, I say unto all, WATCH." Jesus

VOLUME XX MARCH 23, 1918 NUMBER 30

"Are you faithful? Do you love?"*

JOHN RANDALL DUNN

WE are, without doubt, living in one of the most momentous periods in human history. Unquestionably the earth is witnessing the inevitable upheaval predicted by Christ Jesus. Referring to this gigantic fermentation Mrs. Eddy wrote years ago in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 96): "This material world is even now becoming the arena for conflicting forces. On one side there will be discord and dismay; on the other side there will be Science and peace." Then a little farther along we read: "During this final conflict, wicked minds will endeavor to find means by which to accomplish more evil; but those who discern Christian Science will hold crime in check. They will aid in the ejection of error. They will maintain law and order, and cheerfully await the certainty of ultimate perfection."

This significant statement would seem to emphasize two important thoughts for the earnest student of Christian Science: first, that it is his province and his privilege to aid in shortening the period of violent chemicalization—in other words, to "hold crime in check" and "aid in the ejection of error;" and second, that he shall not be dismayed nor overwhelmed by the seeming awfulness of the situation, but "cheerfully await" the sure triumph of good and right. Many seekers after Truth, not recognizing that this great stir throughout its whole system is a favorable symptom in the world's recovery, are yielding not a little to the argument of dismay, and, what is still more unfortunate, to a mental turning away from the problem which, were such action universal, would leave our sick, chemicalizing world-patient without a practitioner.

Every conscientious worker in the vineyard of Christian Science knows that when he has declared the truth for a sufferer and the patient immediately appears to grow worse instead of better, this is no time for him to desert the sick one and say: "I cannot account for this upheaval. Evidently this is not a case for Christian Science." And yet this seems to be the attitude of some workers in the movement to-day. The argument of mere sentimental loyalty to a country apparently blinds many otherwise clear students and causes them to lose sight of the marvelous metaphysical aspects of this great world problem, thus making them inactive, negligible factors in its solution; nay worse: it causes them to become positive obstacles to the speedy working out of the problem in truth.

This is no time for the student of Christian Science to classify himself as democrat or republican, as a disapprover of the administration, or as an upholder and justifier of our nation's enemies. The hour has struck when, if we would "hold crime in check," we must realize that we are trying to be Christian Scientists, or metaphysicians; we must see and cope with this great international crisis metaphysically.

Let us suppose that a neighbor impelled by a vicious motive has unchained a savage dog, and that the beast has run amuck in the neighborhood, injuring several children. As good citizens we would without doubt first demand the capture and the tying up of the animal. If such demand were refused, we would take every legitimate common sense step to remove the menace. If the municipal government took the matter in hand and used every resource at its command to cope with the dangerous situation, we would support such government. But has the Christian Scientists' work stopped here? What about the neighbor, whose victimization by error led to the unchaining of the dog? Has the neighbor been healed? Will the neighborhood be quite safe until he is healed? May not another fierce animal be unloosed unless the evil motive which brought about the first disaster is overcome and wiped out?

Now the coming to earth in this age of that "Spirit of truth" spoken of by Jesus, is without doubt throwing into a mighty ferment nations as well as individuals. As a well-known hymn reads:—

> The advocates of error,
> Foresee the glorious morn,
> And hear in shrinking terror,
> The watchword of reform.

For the coming of truth means the coming of justice, the advent of freedom; and the advent of freedom means the death knell of autocracy, tyranny, and the oppression of the many by the few. Autocracy and all that it stands for, being therefore uncovered, brought to the surface, and ripe for destruction, knowing that it hath but a short time, has unloosed in our midst the infuriated and lawless beasts of war. This nation, in concert with its aggrieved neighbors, naturally is taking every possible step to arrest and chain the beasts. Our Leader has stated as part of her political faith that she believes in supporting a righteous government; and a government actuated by more righteous motives than this would be difficult to find. But when a Christian Scientist, being a loyal citizen, has done his material "bit" in the necessary business of restraining the militaristic evil—or aiding in "the ejection of error"—is his work ended? Has he healed the case? Far from it! There is still the victim neighbor needing his love and compassion and his earnest metaphysical work; and nothing short of metaphysics, or clear spiritual thinking, can save the race.

Equally as important, therefore, as the sending of material troops to deal with the war menace, is the daily sending into the distressed human consciousness of hosts of exalted thoughts, of declarations of the all-power of Love and of the operation and might of divine law. The Christian Scientist then has mapped out for him a high and holy task: first, in supporting a righteous government he shall do his share in maintaining law and order; second, he shall do his part in making the world safe for democracy by metaphysically healing the argument of autocracy; and third, he shall go at his work joyfully, undismayed and unafraid, cheerfully awaiting "the certainty of ultimate perfection."

It is possible for each and every one of us during these troublous days to remain undisturbed and to recall often the Master's promise respecting this very time, "There shall not an hair of your head perish." Let us also cling to such splendid statements as these, which our Leader has given us for the healing of the nations (Miscellany, pp. 278, 279): "The government of divine Love is supreme. Love rules the universe, and its edict hath gone forth: 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me,' and 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.' Let us have the molecule of faith that removes mountains,—faith armed with the understanding of Love, as in divine Science, where right reigneth." "God is Father, infinite, and this great truth, when understood in its divine metaphysics, will establish the brotherhood of man, end wars, and demonstrate 'on earth peace, good will toward men.'"

Christian Scientists, we who have been privileged to touch the hem of the garment of the reappearing Christ, with us to-day rests the task of healing stricken humanity. To us to-day again resounds our Leader's ringing question, as found on page 238 of her "Miscellaneous Writings": "Are you faithful? Do you love?"

Martha Who Served

ANNIE TREACHER HALL

ONE cannot help being struck by the amount of attention and criticism the incident in the home at Bethany, as recorded in the tenth chapter of Luke, has called forth at all times, but surely at the present day it has reached its climax. How many disputes have arisen around it, how many a Martha has been taunted, how many a Mary has been extolled,—yet we read in John's gospel that "Jesus loved Martha." The picture is so simple, so natural,—the honored guest, Martha the busy housewife, and Mary the thoughtful sister. How then did the irritation arise which caused Martha's demand, as recorded by Luke, beginning, "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone?"

There are hundreds of Marthas who understand full well the reason of her distraction. The student of Christian Science can see that she had fallen among thieves, the thieving thoughts which beset the path of every material householder,—the desire to please, the worry of fetching and carrying, the flurry and impatience, the many petty vexations. No one can suppose that Martha had no desire to sit at Jesus' feet as did Mary; it must have been this longing which made the "much serving" so irksome, and called forth the remark which sounds like an expression of envy. Had Martha been indifferent to the Master's words, she would have been lost in her preparations, and only too glad to have the opportunity of preparing a creditable meal. On the other hand, had she been on a higher plane of spiritual perception, she would have done her work less obtrusively and would have hugged her divine secret more closely as she watched the wrapt attention of her sister to the words falling from the lips of our Master, the spiritual householder.

It is interesting to read again Martha's query and our Lord's reply: "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me. And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her." Much of the seeming petulance of Martha's demand is softened as its spiritual sense is gained; indeed, the question sounds almost like a desire for instruction, and Jesus' reply surely contains none of that caustic condemnation to be found so frequently when others pass judgment upon the Martha-spirit.

Could it have been otherwise? Would not our Lord have recognized the receptive thought which was ready to unfold under his enlightening companionship? There can have been no harshness, only the healing touch, the "Seek ye first the kingdom of God." From Luke's account we turn with eager curiosity to the description of these same sisters as given us by St. John. Let us look at the character of Martha as portrayed in the eleventh chapter. She is still the active one. The conversation between Christ Jesus and Martha at the grave of Lazarus, is of absorbing interest. Every word of hers shows her conviction of the power of Spirit manifested through Jesus. "I know, that even now" (had not the brother been dead four days?), "whatsoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it thee."

Martha and the woman of Samaria—each of these is the privileged recipient of some of our Lord's deepest sayings. It was to Martha he breathed the oft repeated words beginning: "I am the resurrection, and the life." All recognize how great a part in Christian history Peter's confession has played, but we seldom hear any mention of precisely the same confession from Martha's lips. In the twenty-seventh verse of this chapter John tells us that these words came from her: "I believe that thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world." In those days of hard-hearted unbelief, this brave woman avowed her perception of the truth, and declared her conviction that Jesus was the promised Messiah. Be it said, however, as comfort to all the struggling Marthas who are working hard in these present driving, wrestling times, that at the feast which followed the raising of Lazarus, Martha still served.

How pleasant a picture is that of the home in Bethany to which Jesus could always resort. If it has touched the hearts of poets and artists, how much more must Christian Scientists feel a throb of gratitude that these scenes and words have been preserved for them. Well may we linger over these recorded words: "Now Jesus loved Martha, and her sister, and Lazarus," and as we see their relation to our present experience, we ponder anew our Leader's words respecting Christian Scientists (Science and Health, p. 35), "They bow before Christ, Truth, to receive more of his reappearing and silently to commune with the divine Principle, Love."

Principle Precedes Method

JOHN PORTER HENRY

THOSE of us who have had the privilege of participating in church building are aware that economic questions of demand and supply arise as frequently and call for the same measure of demonstration as in the individual experiences of the members. The problem of supplying the need must in both cases be handled in the same way. This question often associates itself with the problem of church administration, frequently giving rise to the consideration of methods in handling collections or encouraging contributions.

It is almost universally true of all Christian Science activities that the most businesslike and practical methods of administrative policy are adopted. It is also equally true that the mere method employed, however businesslike or practical, is not the influence which brings results; hence to pin one's faith to any particular system as the means of accomplishing the end desired, is fallacious. On the other hand, to say that we rely upon Principle, and yet fail to adopt a wise and expedient method, is to neglect the necessary human footsteps in the effort to reach the goal. We cannot wisely claim absolute perfection when we are working in materiality. Human organization is itself finite, and is therefore material. Our progress out of the finite and imperfect comes by improving the human concept,—spiritualizing it,—until step by step the finite is replaced by the infinite. Jesus said, "Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's." Mrs. Eddy showed the same wisdom in her declaration (Science and Health, p. 254), "God requires perfection, but not until the battle between Spirit and flesh is fought and the victory won."

We cannot too often be reminded that true church building in Christian Science is based on healing; that though an organization may increase in membership and succeed in piling stone upon stone until a magnificent edifice has been erected, true church building has not taken place unless the result has come through healing in the broadest sense of the term. Our church is not dependent upon either a large membership or a beautiful edifice, although these will be added when the healing is accomplished. Our church is that which is bringing to the consciousness of mankind the vision of the Christ, whereby sin, sickness, and death—all the beliefs of the carnal mind—are overcome. Then church building is the awakening of the individual, and through him of the multitude, to the allness of divine Truth.

The pure desire for church building should never be adulterated by ambitious anxiety for large memberships and handsome edifices. Neither should apathy hinder our strenuous effort in the demonstration of the best in human institutions. The Christian Scientist is not seeking the truth in order that an outward structure may be built. What he desires and is striving for is understanding of the truth, and he knows that with the acquisition of this understanding all other good things will be added. Pride and ambition, in their anxiety to flaunt their vanities, would reap where they have not sown, and are the false gods which would turn us from Principle to mortal methods for results. On the other hand, self-righteousness and theological egotism would persuade us that we are too spiritual to regard human conditions, and would have us claim a spirituality we have not attained. Either of these transgressions is an effort to take a short cut to the possession of the things which are added only to righteousness.

Mrs. Eddy tells us, "Spiritual causation is the one question to be considered, for more than all others spiritual causation relates to human progress" (Science and Health, p. 170). Jesus knew that matter is not substance, but that Spirit is. What man needs for his supply, therefore, is the apprehension of spiritual ideas. It is the spiritual idea, or the Word of God "made flesh," that meets the need. Material sense cannot possibly recognize this spiritual fact, and consequently sees a lack; hence it is mortal blindness which hides the spiritual fact of supply. This blindness is, to material sense, a very apparent external condition, about which it thinks it must do something material. It would either have an open basket because people should not be ashamed of their contributions, or adopt a closed basket because giving must be entirely impersonal—strictly between man and his Maker. At one time it would resort to monthly pledges—something definite to go by; again it would abandon such pledges as an all too material system and make the contribution purely a love offering. In short, something wrong will be found with our method when we look without and not within for the cause of any discords. When confronted with such conditions we may well remember the words of Job, "Canst thou by searching find out God?"

The spiritual barrenness resulting from human apathy must be healed; then the renovation of method, if necessary, will follow normally and effectually. While the temporal must be given its place in our progress, we must not forget that its place is secondary and not primary. When we are wise enough to see this we shall not depend upon external methods for results, nor fear the accuser in using the best human methods in working out our problems.

Active Service

LIEUT. COL. ROBERT E. KEY

IT is difficult to realize, without actual experience, what a wonderful assistance Christian Science is to the individual who is called upon to become a soldier and in support of a righteous government to fight for the cause of democracy and freedom. In the writer's own experience Christian Science has been the basis of many helpful experiences, every one of which has made the allness of Truth more real to him and taught him more humbly and patiently to wait on God. Even on the battlefields, where to mortal sense there seemed so little evidence of good, a thought turned toward God has changed the whole aspect of affairs, and made even the wilderness to bud and blossom as the rose. These experiences have sometimes brought forcibly to mind our Leader's words in Miscellany (p. 290), "Divine Love is never so near as when all earthly joys seem most afar." No one who has prayerfully gone into battle can ever doubt for a moment that divine Love is with him, even on the battlefield. Nearer, dearer, and more real to a man than at any other time, the word of God is carried clearly to the one who follows the voice of Truth and allows God to direct his action.

The question sometimes occurs, What does the army mean to a Christian Scientist? When war was loosed on the world in 1914 there were many of us who shrank from the experience, supposing that it would lie outside the ken of a Christian Scientist, who from the very nature of his profession might be considered exempt from war. We stood where our Leader had stood when she wrote of "the metaphysical mystery of error" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 223), "I was saying all the time, 'Come not thou into the secret'—but at length took up the research according to God's command." We strove to accept the situation and to handle its subtleties with the power of scientific prayer. Sometimes we have failed, sometimes succeeded, but whether by failure or success, as judged humanly, the lesson is being learned and the truth pressed firmly home that what appears as a world problem is in reality an individual experience common to all conditions of men, and one which no individual can conscientiously object to enter upon. It must be remembered that our weapons are spiritual and "mighty through God."

The fighting in the trenches is perhaps the least part of the real conflict, which is being waged in the human mind; but it behooves every Christian Scientist whose duty takes him to the firing line, to bear clearly in mind the place he really takes in battle and to whom his allegiance is wholly due. When Jesus was betrayed by Judas it never occurred to him to call upon the civil or military authorities for protection. His thoughts turned at once, as they had always done, to God, and he said, "Thinkest thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" This then is the army in which the Christian Scientist must enlist, and to which he must look for his real aid. These spiritual intuitions, or angels, in response to prayer array themselves in the battle front of consciousness and also form a rearguard against the subtle errors which would strike unseen. "For the Lord will go before you," says the Scripture, "and the God of Israel will be your rereward." When consciousness is flooded with these angel legions, there is nothing for the Christian Scientist to fear. We are told in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 566) that Michael "leads the hosts of heaven," and that his characteristic is "spiritual strength." When we consciously realize this presence of spiritual strength, every intuition is under its leadership and is guided scientifically and safely through and above every suggestion of mortal mind.

The Christian Scientist must in his thought realize that man, the image and likeness of God, is not "of the earth, earthy," and that therefore his warfare is not material, but spiritual. This applies to every individual, male and female, and must sooner or later enter and entirely transform the human consciousness and material sense of person, place, and thing. It applies to every age and nation alike, for "God is no respecter of persons" and His authority is divine, infinite, and supreme. Evil does not need to have even a brief authority, because there is no law back of evil to give it authority, and any so-called law which is unauthorized, or without authority, can be safely disobeyed.

Now take the thought of strategy, which the soldier will tell you is the art of bringing troops into the theater of war. What is spiritual strategy, and who brings the angel visitant to consciousness? Is it not God, who does this through our prayers? Does He not choose our position, give us our armament, launch our attack? Is not the victory His? And when the smoke of conflict has cleared away do we not realize that there has been no battle? Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 567), "To infinite, ever-present Love, all is Love, and there is no error, no sin, sickness, nor death."

The Prayer that Heals

HENRY J. SNYDER

IN this seeming wilderness of fear and doubt and despair, there is a longing for an intelligent understanding of prayer which would bring us into closer touch with God and give us a God who is Love, and as Mrs. Eddy tells us (Science and Health, p. 472) one who is to be "understood, adored, and demonstrated." In the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," we find in the chapter on Prayer the very essence of true spirituality, and a careful study of this chapter alone will heal disease and eliminate suffering.

The writer was at one time a member of a so-called orthodox church, trying to serve an unknown, personal God, and was at the same time living in constant dread of the elements and in fear of death as inevitable. One by one loved ones were taken from the fold, though fervent prayer had been offered for their restoration. We were told that it was God's will; that they were taken for a wise purpose and for our good. Inwardly I rebelled at these sayings, and finally lost all confidence in prayer as a means of overcoming disease and suffering.

After coming into Christian Science and taking up the study of Mrs. Eddy's writings, in connection with the Bible, fear gradually left me. I had found an omnipresent God who is Love, who answers prayer, who heals all our sorrows and afflictions. On the first page of Science and Health our Leader says: "The prayer that reforms the sinner and heals the sick is an absolute faith that all things are possible to God,—a spiritual understanding of Him, an unselfed love." We are sometimes asked why the prayers of a Christian Scientist are effectual in relieving pain and healing disease, while the unscientific supplications of good, conscientious Christians will not heal? Is it because the Christian Scientist is a better Christian than the other? The point of difference is in their understanding of God and His creation and of man's relation to Him; this determines the result of their prayers. It cannot be denied that the average Christian believes in the reality of disease and death and does not regard prayer as the best remedy for suffering, whereas the Christian Scientist understands that sin and disease are unreal because God never made them. He also relies upon prayer as spiritually understood, to bring him into the true relation to God, and knows that truth is the only remedy. In Paul's discourse at Athens we read: "As I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." We thus find that it was Paul's understanding of God, of His omnipotence and omnipresence, and of man as coexistent with God, which enabled him to heal himself and others.

We find in the thirteenth chapter of Romans: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God;" also in Science and Health (p. 228): "There is no power apart from God. Omnipotence has all-power, and to acknowledge any other power is to dishonor God." These two statements, one from the Bible and the other from Science and Health, are the basis for scientific Christian healing. The Christian Scientist knows that evil is not power; that sin, sickness, and death are the results of false beliefs, beliefs in a power apart from God.

The omnipotence and omnipresence of God are set forth in the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation, and when we begin to realize this truth about God and our relation to Him, then fear begins to subside and healing takes place. When we in our prayers can humbly and lovingly say "Our Father" and put this understanding of Him into practice in our daily lives, then and not until then are we able through prayer to cope successfully with disease and prove its unreality. Therefore the prayers of a Christian Scientist are based upon an understanding of the allness and oneness of God and His creation, including perfect man.

"An instrument of ten strings"

MARY I. MESECHRE

IN the book of Deuteronomy we find the blessing pronounced by Moses upon Judah, in which occur the following words: "Let his hands be sufficient for him." The writer was deeply impressed by this thought, as it appeared in a Lesson-Sermon, and pondered it long, but without a satisfactory conclusion as to its hidden meaning. Finally she turned from the passage with the sense of having missed for herself the fullness of Judah's blessing, and the feeling that scanty crumbs had been gathered where an abundant repast had been proffered. In the lesson for the following week there appeared an excerpt from Psalms, indicating the necessity as well as the privilege of true praise, and directing that such praise to God be accomplished by means of "an instrument of ten strings." This term arrested attention and led to earnest endeavor to fathom the spiritual significance of the words.

A particularly tedious and intricate piece of work, requiring especial care and concentration, had just been successfully completed, and much gratification was expressed by all who had shared in the task. One of the office force inquired of the writer, somewhat hesitatingly, if there was not a Bible verse about expressing thankfulness with the harp and the timbrel, and if that was to be her way of expressing joy over the finished work. "No," was the reply, "I shall use 'an instrument of ten strings.'" Instantly there came not only the interpretation of that passage, but as well a clear sense of the meaning of the other verse which had seemed so bafflingly obscure, and the two linked together in beautiful completeness. "An instrument of ten strings"—the utmost of which the hands were capable, and to which they could be sufficient. The full exercise of one's ability then would be required to praise God in the way designated by the psalmist, and anything short of this would forfeit the blessing desired for Judah, that his hands should be sufficient for him. "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again," declared the Master. "God is not separate from the wisdom He bestows. The talents He gives we must improve," writes Mrs. Eddy on page 6 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science textbook, and again, on page 89, she says, "We are all capable of more than we do." God prepares the blessing for the hands that are sufficient, the power adequate to every demand. Likewise does He provide the "instrument of ten strings"—scope and opportunity for proof of such sufficiency, for exercise to the full of the abilities divinely bestowed, thus enabling us to furnish evidence of realized blessings by the crown of gratitude.

"All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, throughly furnished unto all good works," wrote Paul to the youthful Timothy, and this good word is emphasized by our revered Leader on page 234 of Science and Health: "Whatever inspires with wisdom, Truth, or Love—be it song, sermon, or Science—blesses the human family with crumbs of comfort from Christ's table, feeding the hungry and giving living waters to the thirsty."

Motherhood

GRACE L. WHITING

O TENDER mother-love, weighed down with fear,
What canst thou do? Can anxious thought
Protect and guard the one thou holdest dear?
Can tears or human will guide wayward feet
From straying in the wilderness?
Can human love, however deep and strong,
Assure of health or wealth or joy,
Or free from power of wrong?

O mother-love, loosen thy clinging hold
And let thy child go free. Thy anxious thought
Is powerless to control. He is God's child.
His Father's tender, wise, and loving plan
For him is being wrought.
God's will gives health and harmony through every hour;
There is no evil that can interfere,
For Love alone is power.

Safe in the Love that knows no fear,
Safe in the Life from mortal law set free,
Safe in the Truth where error is unknown,
The Father holds thy child—and thee.

Selected Articles

["The Holy City"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 16, 1918]

Those for whom the Bible has been illumined by Christian Science, see in the iterated metaphor of the Scriptures allusion to the appearing to human consciousness of the spiritual idea. One traces, moreover, a growing clearness of that perception of the truth of being, from the dim beginnings of faith in the unseen reality, to the scientific understanding and demonstration of that reality. In a certain figure, the spiritual understanding of God is likened to a city, the conscious abiding place of spiritual sense. One reads of Abraham, that he "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God;" by faith he grasped the fact that such a state of spiritual realization was possible to man, and that eventually it would be attained.

One reads also of multitudes who followed him, that they saw the promises "afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them;" of these it is said that God "hath prepared for them a city." Then, when one reads that John, centuries later on Patmos, "saw the holy city, new Jerusalem," one understands that this clear metaphysical perception was the Scriptural culmination of the successive appearings to human consciousness, in lesser degrees of vividness, of the same spiritual truth. It was surely her discernment of the continuity of the spiritual idea that led Mrs. Eddy to declare on page 271 of Science and Health, "Christ's Christianity is the chain of scientific being reappearing in all ages, maintaining its obvious correspondence with the Scriptures and uniting all periods in the design of God."

Now this heavenly city, new Jerusalem, describes symbolically a state of mind, involving the knowledge of God. This city, or understanding of divine Science, can be entered into only through spiritual sense. Citizenship therein is entirely conditional upon the extent to which a man is able to lay off his materialism, to exchange physical for spiritual perception. The least attempt to approach this city, or spiritual reality, is productive of a measure of emancipation from material beliefs, the measure being proportionate to the whole-heartedness of the approach. What Abraham perceived of the divine Principle of being was sufficient to enable him to exchange, on the mountain of Moriah, his belief in man as material for the truth that man is God's child, and to advance, as a result of his enlightenment, from the custom of human sacrifice to a less repulsive mode of sacrifice.

The citizenship in heaven, the harmony of being, which Abraham thus won in part, Jesus the Christ fully entered upon and demonstrated, when, driven to Calvary by the materialism which would suppress the spiritual idea, he performed the supreme sacrifice, the surrender of the entire belief of life in matter, and proved thereby the deathless reality of Life as divine Mind. It was thus, by his example, that the overcoming of evil became the badge of citizenship in the new Jerusalem. John, who had discerned the full import of the resurrection, must have seen this very clearly when he voiced the promise of Principle, "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God."

The human mind has been so convinced of the actuality of life in matter, that it has found no place for the new Jerusalem of the Apocalypse in the present order of things; and it has, therefore, relegated it to the future as a glorious rest to be entered upon after the experience which mortals have named death. Now it is true that the new Jerusalem does not belong to the present order of material things, and it is equally certain that it is not to be approached by way of death. This heavenly state of consciousness is entered into just so fast as, and exactly where, a man comes into the understanding of God as divine Principle. Wherever you see the faith of an Abraham springing up in individual consciousness, there you see a man who looks for the city, the demonstrable knowledge of God, as a state possible of attainment; and wherever you find that faith expanding into the scientific understanding of the Christ, or Truth, there you see one who, like John, sees and believes and therefore demonstrates the authority which this spiritual citizenship confers upon him, to free himself from the domination of physical sense and law.

Just as the perception of divine Science stirs the individual consciousness to a change of basis, from matter to Mind, and works out for that individual a more spiritual sense of harmony in every function and detail of his experience, so the accumulating perception of the truth of being must work out for the whole world in a change from material to spiritual concepts of existence. As this change goes on, the apparently established order of things must also change. Thus in the material world to-day the old order is everywhere seen to be giving way, little by little, before the increasing perception of the spiritual, the real. The "Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children," is, to use Paul's symbolic phrase, being superseded by the "Jerusalem which is above," which, as he continued, "is free, which is the mother of us all."

The only proof a man can give that he is entering into the light and glory of the city of God, is the proof that Jesus the Christ himself gave, and insisted that others should give; the proof of spiritual power to conquer hate with the understanding of Love, to destroy disease and sin with the knowledge of Truth, and to overcome death with the understanding of Life. Of this city, that "lieth foursquare," of this abiding, spiritual consciousness of real being, Mrs. Eddy writes on page 577 of Science and Health, "This spiritual, holy habitation has no boundary nor limit, but its four cardinal points are: first, the Word of Life, Truth, and Love; second, the Christ, the spiritual idea of God; third, Christianity, which is the outcome of the divine Principle of the Christ-idea in Christian history; fourth, Christian Science, which to-day and forever interprets this great example and the great Exemplar."

[Albert F. Gilmore in Buffalo (N. Y.) Express]

In a letter signed "L. B.," published in a recent issue, there are certain statements which should not, in the interest of justice, be allowed to go unchallenged. While no just person will question one's right to believe and to assert, if he so believes, that "only one church handles and honors that bread of life as it should be" there is grave doubt as to his warrant for the assertion at the close of the same letter that "Christian Science is Satan's greatest joke, for it utterly denies Jesus and most of his words." As to the statement that Christian Science denies Jesus, nothing could be farther from the truth, as any honest investigator may quickly ascertain by reading the tenets of the church on page 497 of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, or by following up the hundreds of references to Jesus found throughout the body of that book and the other writings of the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

As to the interpretation and meaning of the life and teachings of the Master, Christian Scientists have the same right as others to accept that view which seems to them most logical and nearest truth. They do accept him as the great Teacher, the Wayshower, pointing out the way of salvation to all mankind; not a deferred salvation the fruits of which may be gathered only at some far distant day, but salvation to be realized here and now in proportion as one gains the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." Christian Scientists accept in the fullest sense Paul's declaration, "For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus." On page 332 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "Jesus demonstrated Christ; he proved that Christ is the divine idea of God—the Holy Ghost, or Comforter, revealing the divine Principle, Love, and leading into all truth."

[W. Stuart Booth in Wet Mountain Tribune, Westcliffe, Col.]

Christ Jesus not only preached that the kingdom of heaven is at hand, but he furnished tangible evidence to corroborate his teaching by healing the sick, freeing the sin bound, overcoming death, and reversing every claim of evil. Furthermore he distinctly commissioned all of his followers to do the work that he did, and his instructions were designed to enable them to fulfill that commission. For instance, at one time he said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," thereby implying that bondage of any sort was due to lack of knowledge of the truth. Now knowledge of the truth cannot be termed suggestion; hence the error of speaking of Christian Science as suggestion, for the practice of Christian Science consists of nothing other than knowing the truth about the one God and His perfect creation as is set forth in the Scriptures. On page 111 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "The Principle of divine metaphysics is God; the practice of divine metaphysics is the utilization of the power of Truth over error; its rules demonstrate its Science."

The implication that Christian Science is not Christian is refuted by the Christly results of its practice, whereby those enslaved by debasing habits are freed, the sorrowing are comforted, the sick are healed, and spiritual enlightenment is afforded to all who abide by its rules.

[Rachel A. Banister in St. Albans (Vt.) Messenger]

In a recent attack made on Christian Science from the pulpit of one of the churches in St. Albans, an evangelist is reported as having said: "God is not all, as the book of Mrs. Eddy would have you think. There is a lot of rubbish in this city that does not belong to God and we have no right to wish it on Him."

In the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, we find as one of the religious tenets of Christian Science, "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life" (p. 497). Let us consider in the light of Scripture why Mrs. Eddy teaches that God is All. St. John says: "All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made." In Genesis we read: "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Since everything God made was pronounced good, surely no one should wish to credit Him with having made "rubbish." The reverend gentleman, not Mrs. Eddy, has made the fatal mistake of not distinguishing between the real and unreal, the spiritual and the material.

Again, the evangelist is reported as having said, "Eddyism is going down, has got to go down; it is not true." Surely all reasoning people should be willing to apply to Christian Science the test which in the book of Acts Gamaliel recommended the opponents of Christianity to apply to it: "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

In half a century the teachings of Christian Science have encircled the globe and its adherents are to be found even in the islands of the sea. Jesus left this test of true discipleship: "These signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." If the reverend gentleman should spend his time in teaching his audiences how to do these works, he would have little time to cast the first stone at the followers of the Master who are daily striving to be known "by their fruits."

[Robert G. Steel in Benton Harbor (Mich.) News-Palladium]

Why it should be necessary to criticize the honest and sincere religious beliefs of others in an attempt to gain converts to Christianity, as was done recently by an evangelist, is beyond the comprehension of fair-minded persons.

The attempt on the part of the critic to belittle Christian Science by calling it a "cult" and "Eddyism" is rather ludicrous when the fact is realized that in the short time since its discovery, Churches of Christ, Scientist, have dotted the civilized globe, and in spite of denunciations and persecutions such as indulged in by this evangelist, its growth has been the most phenomenal of modern religious movements.

Jesus promulgated the rule by which his followers should be tested when he said, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them," and Christian Scientists are ready and willing to be judged by this standard; for it is only by successfully doing the works the Master did, and commanded his followers to do—healing the sick, casting out evil, and destroying sin—that this wonderful growth has been attained.

Christian Science does not in any way teach or recognize the supernatural, nor depend upon it for its success. This is made clear by Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," on page xi of the Preface, in these words: "The physical healing of Christian Science results now, as in Jesus' time, from the operation of divine Principle, before which sin and disease lose their reality in human consciousness and disappear as naturally and as necessarily as darkness gives place to light and sin to reformation. Now, as then, these mighty works are not supernatural, but supremely natural."

When we realize the allness of God as Spirit, and the spiritual nature of the universe, including man in God's image and likeness, as taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus, and as accepted by Christian Science, so-called material law is superseded naturally and harmoniously by spiritual law, and we are enabled to bring about those signs which the Master said would follow them that believed.

Christian Science does not ignore sin, but on the contrary is waging a relentless and successful warfare against it in all its phases. The hundreds of thousands of persons all over the world who have been released from the bondage of sin and sinful conditions through its ministrations, testify to the accuracy of the teachings of Christian Science relative to sin. One of the tenets of Christian Science as given on page 497 of Science and Health by Mrs. Eddy is as follows: "We acknowledge God's forgiveness of sin in the destruction of sin and the spiritual understanding that casts out evil as unreal." Christian Science teaches that sin is not created of God, hence has no reality, for God made all that was made and called it very good, and what He made shall stand forever. It is through this understanding of the unreality of sin that Christian Scientists are destroying it, and in so doing they are following the example of Jesus who cast out sin and all evil through this same realization of their nothingness.

[Violet Hay in Port Elizabeth Advertiser, Cape of Good Hope, South Africa]

Our critic who signs his letter "Past Master" may lay down the law as to what are or are not specific doctrines of the Christian creed, but I would point out that he has no right to infer that any individual is not a Christian because he is not a believer in some particular man-made creed or doctrine. A Christian means a follower of Christ. Our Lord formulated no creed. What he did enjoin was the necessity for his followers to do the works that he did, and the Christian Scientist turns with relief from that which is "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" and rejoices in the simplicity of the teachings of Jesus Christ himself, which Christian Science so illumines that they are found to be vital and practical to-day wherewith to preach the gospel and heal the sick.

As the well-known hymn says: "Creeds and dogmas all may perish; Truth Herself can never die," and the day will surely come when the standard of the Master, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do," will be the only criterion whereby a man will be adjudged to be a Christian. "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them."

The critic states, among other things, that the central doctrine of the Christian creed is that God came down from heaven and suffered pain on the cross. Now we do not learn from the Bible that Jesus ever called himself God. He never did. He spoke of himself as the beloved Son and of God as the Father, and said: "My Father is greater than I." "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." He furthermore said: "I and my Father are one," and his prayer for his followers for all time was "that they all may be one."

[Robert S. Ross in Syracuse (N. Y.) Post-Standard]

Our critic attacks Christian Science for teaching the unreality of death, when, as a matter of fact, it was the mission of the Master to demonstrate this very thing through the opposite understanding of the infinity of Life. Jesus not only proved for himself and others the unreality of death, but assured his followers that they would be able to prove it for themselves and others when he declared, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my saying, he shall never see death."

No Christian can safely question the sincerity or veracity of Jesus' teaching on this point without questioning his teaching on all other points. He meant all that he said, or he did not mean any of it. Much of the criticism of Christian Science is characterized by the loose logic of which the foregoing example is a fair illustration.

"A great freedom for the race"*

AT the dedication of The Mother Church in 1895, passages were read from the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." One sentence from the Christian Science textbook seemed then to have a sonorous tone, stirring and compelling like the sound of the trumpets of silver blown by the sons of Aaron "for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps." It has sounded its note of warning and promise through the years, and to-day as never before brings encouragement. "He takes away mitre and sceptre" (Science and Health, p. 571), was the sentence. It follows what the author of the textbook has written about divine Science "outshining sin, sorcery, lust, and hypocrisy." To-day when these four "principalities and powers," or claims of evil, would especially seek to darken the minds of men, let us turn to "the glory that excelleth," knowing that paganism is after all as the night, and Christianity triumphant is as the sun shining in his strength. Let us be glad that with man's enlightenment through Christian Science and his acceptance of "pure religion and undefiled" he shall know himself to be free, neither suffering from the materialistic control of miter and scepter, nor desiring to subordinate others by their means.

It cannot be said too often that true government must first be within, due to recognition of Principle. Then it will be manifested in the world as "the glorious liberty of the children of God." Setting forth the ideal of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy says (Retrospection and Introspection, p. 94): "I am persuaded that only by the modesty and distinguishing affection illustrated in Jesus' career, can Christian Scientists aid the establishment of Christ's kingdom on the earth. In the first century of the Christian era Jesus' teachings bore much fruit, and the Father was glorified therein. In this period and the forthcoming centuries, watered by dews of divine Science, this 'tree of life' will blossom into greater freedom, and its leaves will be 'for the healing of the nations.'"

Those who came to this country as pilgrims were seeking individual rights, and were in their hearts worshipers of God, even if evidence proved that ignorantly they worshiped Him. Their coming was a stage of progress and manifestation of freedom, and although conflicts followed in order that individual rights might be further secured, there came at last the time when by virtue of her own deliverance and healing, Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, was able to say to her contemporaries, as Paul said to the Athenians, "Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you," because she was able to present the absolute basis, not simply for the freedom of a group, a church, or a nation, but for the freedom of all mankind.

The Christian Science movement is really the evidencing of man's liberation from "sin, sorcery, lust, and hypocrisy." It is quite evident, then, that this cannot be for a people or a nation or a language merely, but must be for the entire race. Since it effects that mental liberation which comes through enlightenment, and this is accomplished only by the publication of the truth, it was inevitable that the movement would require an international newspaper. Mrs. Eddy saw this need quite early in her work, and several times proposed that the need should be supplied, but she had to wait for courage and wisdom to be developed by her followers, and she did establish the newspaper just as soon as Christian Scientists were ready to support the project.

The weekly and monthly periodicals of the Christian Science movement are representative of the life and joy, the demonstration and ideals of The Mother Church and its membership. They give the current report of gratitude for benefits received through Christian Science. They are representative of the religious life of the movement, and present to the world in an attractive way the results of understanding God aright, whereby He is known as divine Love that forgives iniquities, heals all disease, and crowns man with benefits and blessing.

The Christian Science Monitor is likewise one of the organs of the movement. This ideal newspaper is like a searchlight guarding the liberties, not only of those who support it, but of every one in the world, because its blaze of publicity makes wrongdoers tremble, and turn from their evil intentions. It has won its place as counselor and friend to many statesmen throughout the world. It unfolds the truth without which decisions must be blind. The cry of the perplexed is, "Lead me to the rock that is higher than I," and this desire of the honest seeker for safety is answered by its disclosure of the protection afforded by Principle, because this international newspaper is indeed the world's monitor. And the need for it is great because just at the time when, in the struggle for freedom, people are off their guard, those elements of the human mind which defy freedom reach out in the most subtle ways after control. Better conditions, toilsomely won by the struggles of a thousand years, can be lost if not guarded. When a newspaper succeeds in the uncovering of subtle designs, carefully planned, long thought out, and unobtrusively put into operation, this service proves genuine friendship, not only for the people whom schemers would victimize but for the very ones who are the schemers. There can be no blessing at all where mortal mind is dominant, but rather a continuance of the wearisome manifestations of its lawlessness, occultism, greediness, and deceit. No rule is beneficent but that of Principle, which Christian Science is interpreting to the world. The Christian Science Monitor is setting forth before the inhabitants of the earth the ideal expressed in the prayer, "Thy kingdom come."

Do Christian Scientists look upon their healing as a goal, and their church membership as a resting place? Do they feel that because they are not worldly they are not in the world? Jesus' prayer for his disciples was, "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil." If kept from the evil, that is, preserved from wrong thinking, its influence and effects, is there not a duty before the disciple? Can one who has found mental freedom as precious and refreshing to him as water from a spring, withhold from others opportunity for like learning and comfort? Who can tell how much depends upon Christian Scientists and their daily metaphysical work of prayer for the coming of the kingdom of God? Since in all Christian work for the freedom of the race, the Monitor is an assisting agency of incalculable value, let every worker gird himself for the work yet to be done, and with armor on and mind alert assist its warfare against the powers and principalities, the loudly threatening or the subtly whispering agents of evil. Here is our Leader's encouragement. She says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 120): "Beloved students, loyal laborers are ye that have wrought valiantly, and achieved great guerdons in the vineyard of our Lord; but a mighty victory is yet to be won, a great freedom for the race; and Christian success is under arms,—with armor on, not laid down."

The Second Commandment

IN the Christian Science Sunday school the pupils are eager to gain all the understanding of the Scriptures possible, because they early learn that their demonstrations of harmony depend upon their grasp of Truth. In Article XX of the Manual of The Mother Church, Section 2, we read: "The Sabbath School children shall be taught the Scriptures, and they shall be instructed according to their understanding or ability to grasp the simpler meanings of the divine Principle that they are taught." It is usually found by the teachers that all of the pupils, the older as well as the younger ones, need to be kept in line with what are known as the "first lessons," which begin with the Ten Commandments; for otherwise excuses may be made that although these were at one time committed to memory, they have been forgotten. In such a case the pupil might well be asked whether the multiplication table had been forgotten; and if such a question seemed absurd, it might be well to remind the class that the science of numbers is practically applied in all we do throughout the day, when too many are apt to forget that without the constant recognition of divine law we can never be quite sure that we are doing right or that we are protecting ourselves from the attacks of error.

The older pupils in the Sunday school are more likely to ask questions respecting the second commandment than any of the others; and this reminds us that not so many years ago it was believed by people generally that God was a corporeal being seated on a throne, although they admitted that it was not right for anyone to attempt the representation of Deity as so conceived. Now, however, this belief has largely given place to some recognition of the truth taught throughout the Scriptures that God is incorporeal, that He is omnipresent Spirit, Mind, the intelligence governing the universe and man. No one can justly deny that this change has come about largely through Mrs. Eddy's teachings, because among those who have applied for treatment the greater number contended for a corporeal concept of God, quite forgetful of the Master's declaration that God is Spirit, and that He must be worshiped "in spirit and in truth."

Most students of Christian Science will readily admit that it was easy for them to give up the belief in God as corporeal; but when it comes to man as His image and likeness, it seems to be much more difficult. There the "graven image" against which we are warned in the second commandment makes strong demands upon mortals because of material sense, and so they find it difficult to think of anyone apart from corporeality. Materia medica is of course largely responsible for this tendency, and the school systems of the present day do much to perpetuate it in the study of anatomy and physiology; but when such knowledge is acquired, the pupil knows little or nothing of man as he really is, of the mental and spiritual qualities which alone express the image and likeness of God. It is, however, of the utmost importance that children and adults alike should be taught to know God through the qualities which represent the divine nature, and thus they will be prepared to understand man's divinely bestowed possibilities.

On page 12 of "The People's Idea of God" Mrs. Eddy says: "As our ideas of Deity advance to truer conceptions, we shall take in the remaining two thirds of God's plan of redemption,—namely, man's salvation from sickness and death." It is very important that the children should come to trace the healing thought which is inseparably connected with the "first lessons." In the second commandment we find that those who bow down to materiality, which is always a false sense of God and man, lay the unstable foundations of sin and suffering for themselves and their children. Too often does scholastic theology point to this statement found in the second commandment, "visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me," as evidence that material means must be taken to prevent the operation of the supposed law of heredity. Unfortunately most of those who attempt to interpret the second commandment in this way quite forget that the suffering comes upon those who do not know God, but bow down before a false concept of Deity, while the unequivocal promise is grasped and held by those who have seen the light in Christian Science. It reads, "And shewing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments."

No one would admit that he hated God; and yet when the true idea of God is presented in Christian Science, it often arouses the bitterest resentment and denunciation from those who hold a corporeal concept of God and man, and who believe that disease must continue to manifest itself unless it can be stayed by means of material remedies. We, however, find no hint of such methods in the second commandment, for we are distinctly told that this mortal law of heredity ceases its operation when thought turns to God and the sufferer reaches out with love toward Him and with a desire to keep His commandments. Both children and adults begin with a very limited sense of the greatness, goodness, and allness of God as infinite Mind, divine Love; and so their obedience to the commandments is for this reason very imperfect. Nevertheless, the thousands of those who learn to love the truth as found in the Scriptures and illumined in Christian Science, find the mercy promised in the commandment, which means health and strength, harmony and immortality.

Without the true sense of God and man, obedience to the commandments is impossible, for they are spiritual in their real nature; and until it is known that man's real nature is also spiritual, the agreement between them is missed; hence their blessings are not realized. It is all so very simple when we come to see that "love is the fulfilling of the law;" and in the twenty-second chapter of Revelation we read: "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

Planting the Seed

THE world war makes the question of planting the seed more pressing than usual. What shall the harvest be? Evidently, according to the nature of the seed, the quality of soil, and the application of labor. God must preside over the planting and watering of His vineyard that the fruit of substance and gladness may ripen within it. Humanity must prepare the soil of its consciousness with plow and harrow to receive the seed, and there must be laborers. Jesus once said as he viewed the fainting multitude, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest." The complaint of the hour in agricultural lands repeats the statement that the laborers are few, for the war activities have called many of them away from the fields, and the time has arrived when the Lord of the harvest must be besought to supply the need.

Christian Scientists realize that there must be a spiritual preparation of men and nations before the artificial scarcity produced by hate and fear can be wiped out. Spiritual planting reverses the material procedure of agriculture. It requires gathering before sowing, receiving from God before dispensing to others. Therefore, in placing the whole problem of successful harvesting into metaphysics, the first requirement is seen to be receptivity on the part of human consciousness to the eternal, spiritual facts of being. With reference to agriculture, one of these facts is expressed in the Scriptural statement that God created "every plant of the field before it was in the earth." Interpreting this text on page 520 of Science and Health, Mrs. Eddy writes: "Here is the emphatic declaration that God creates all through Mind, not through matter,—that the plant grows, not because of seed or soil, but because growth is the eternal mandate of Mind." The real plant partakes of the nature of its creator, God, the divine Mind, and is idea, not matter. Therefore a wide prospect of usefulness to mankind opens before the farmer-metaphysician who will learn to gather, sow, and harvest mentally in accordance with the law of divine Mind before placing the seed in the earth. Thus agriculture may be delivered from the false beliefs of mortal mind which subject the plant to destruction by frost or drought, by pest or mildew.

The world may be reluctant to admit that planting the seed must be done with spiritual understanding in order to be safe from the assaults of evil mental manipulation, but this lesson must be learned along with many others during the world turmoil. The whole problem reduces itself to the question of causation. Is God Mind or matter? Christian Science has long since settled this question for all clear thinkers. Mind creates and controls the universe including "every plant of the field." Then it is impossible to safeguard God's plant while pretending to ignore God Himself. It is true that human belief, calling for material food, requires that the seed shall be planted in the earth. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 183 of Science and Health: "Can the agriculturist, according to belief, produce a crop without sowing the seed and awaiting its germination according to the laws of nature? The answer is no, and yet the Scriptures inform us that sin, or error, first caused the condemnation of man to till the ground, and indicate that obedience to God will remove this necessity."

Obedience to God brings fruition. It causes the grass to grow in meekness; it brings forth the savory herb, the nourishing grain, the fruit tree with blossom of beauty and refreshing fruitage. There will be no lack of vegetation when the agriculturist knows that God is Mind, and Mind the only creator, and that the product of Mind is ideas which, manifested as plants, are not subject to decay, but are perennial, with unfailing times of renewal and joyous upspringing.

Christian Scientists at this season are under special orders to plant the right seed in the right way and to watch over it night and day, for while men slept a ruthless enemy "came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way," —and now the tares are appearing and need to be burned. Years before the hurling of bombs and grenades and the shooting of shrapnel and torpedoes, the sowing of mental tares began through a mental malpractice, whose purpose it was to uncover national weaknesses in order to exploit them, thus reversing the modus operandi of Christian Science practice, which uncovers error in order to heal. The sowing of discord among allies, of class wars within nations, of apathy, discouragement, of peace without repentance, leaving the malpractitioners to suppose they can gain full control of the world's activities,—these are some of the tares which the farmer-metaphysician must now gather and burn because they were sowed "while men slept."

But what of the coming harvest? Christian Scientists, by watching, may prevent any attempted mental interference with God's plan. They may prevent the sowing of further tares; protect the blade, the ear, and the full grain in the ear; the Lord of the harvest will answer the prayer of spiritual understanding for laborers, and throughout the impending changes in human belief, famine and want can be checked by metaphysical planting of the seed of righteousness. Mrs. Eddy's wonderful prophecy as found on page 125 of Science and Health remains to cheer the faithful right thinker: "The seasons will come and go with changes of time and tide, cold and heat, latitude and longitude. The agriculturist will find that these changes cannot affect his crops. 'As a vesture shalt Thou change them and they shall be changed.' . . . and the florist will find his flower before its seed."

Camp Welfare and War Relief Fund

IN the interest of greater efficiency, economy, and more orderly administration, the War Relief fund and the Camp Welfare fund have been consolidated. The field is familiar with the effective and far-reaching results which have been attained by means of these funds.

Hereafter the disbursement of all funds intended for either War Relief or Camp Welfare work will be undertaken by the present War Relief committees abroad and by the Camp Welfare committees in the United States, under the supervision of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

Contributions should be sent to the Treasurer of The Mother Church and designated for the Camp Welfare and War Relief fund.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to RHINELANDER, WIS.—The Christian Science Society will hold regular services at the County Jail each Sunday afternoon from now on. They are to be conducted by different readers each Sunday. The first of these services was held yesterday afternoon [Jan. 20].—Rhinelander News.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

The Lectures

OMAHA, NEB. (Second Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by L. G. Reynolds, who said in part:—

It was his understanding of God as the only power which enabled Jesus to do his mighty works. Christian Science comes to bring this understanding to mankind. It does so by restoring the primitive Christian healing of sin and disease as taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus and his followers centuries ago. When the command to heal the sick was dropped out of the teachings of Christianity, this important omission made room for the many creeds and theories which followed. Christian Science places Christianity back on the practical basis of demonstration. Mrs. Eddy has shown us that healing by divine power is a present day possibility; she has called the world to reason on this subject and to judge by the results obtained.

VALLEJO, CAL. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Asst. Naval Constructor H. E. Saunders, U.S.N., who said in part:—

The Master brought to humanity a fuller sense of God as infinite Mind, and it is for this reason that we take as an example the Christ-mind which he revealed. In our own day there was given to a great woman, Mrs. Eddy, some measure of the Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus," and she was able to give this understanding so fully to the world that we are witnessing again the same kind of marvels which are recorded in the Bible. This understanding is what we know as Christian Science.

CAPETOWN, CAPE COLONY, SOUTH AFRICA (First Church).—William R. Rathvon, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. A. C. Wilks, who said in part:—

At a time like this, when there is so much trouble and distress, it is a good thing to be reminded of God, who is infinite Love. Christian Science is a practical religion, else there would have been no room for it in this world with its many creeds and beliefs. It helps us in both the big and the small affairs of life, it does not matter how large the problem or how insignificant; the help is there, if we apply to the problem the ever operative law of good.

Testimonies of Healing

With reverence and humble thanks to God, as well as sincere gratitude to Christian Science for revealing to me the light of Love and Truth, I wish to give the following testimony. I left home to make my way through the world at the age of fourteen, without influence or other assistance than the prayers of a good Christian mother. Whether due to overwork or other causes, at the age of twenty-five I was what is commonly termed a dyspeptic. This condition developed nervousness, and through its effects I suffered to a greater or less extent from almost every disease known to the medical profession, including a complete nervous breakdown, which incapacitated me for business. For thirty-five years after that I took drugs almost daily; indeed, I would not venture to leave home without carefully taking inventory of my supply of drugs to make sure that I would have a remedy for any ill.

My son, during his last year at college, developed a serious case of stomach trouble, and because of his ambition to graduate he did not make his condition known to his mother or myself, fearing that I would have him come home for treatment. After graduation he informed us of his condition, which was found to be such that it was not advisable for him to attempt the carrying out of his plans to engage in business at once, and not only was this a great disappointment to me but I also worried over his condition; thus my ailments were aggravated. On his way home from college in company with me we stopped over in New York, where a friend, knowing that I was suffering with severe headaches daily, notwithstanding the fact that I was living on a very strict diet, advised me to consult a doctor who stood very high as a dietitian. I had consulted, and been treated by, the most eminent physicians throughout the country, but was always seeking further advice, so followed the recommendation of my friend. After the examination the doctor told me I would have to be extremely careful, give up golf, which was my daily recreation and enjoyment, take very little exercise, and go to some quiet resort for six or eight weeks to take the rest cure. When I left him I was scared almost to death, so on arriving home I consulted my family physician, who assured me that there was nothing in my condition to give me any concern; however, I could not get rid of the fear.

Then my son, in the endeavor to recuperate, went to a ranch in New Mexico, where he remained for a time, and afterward to California and Alaska, but on his return to Chicago, where I met him, he informed me that his condition was no better. Since mine was worse, we decided to consult a stomach specialist in the Johns Hopkins Hospital, so after making an appointment we took the first train to Baltimore. After a thorough examination I was sent home with a further diet list and schedule of drugs, and my son was put in a hospital for a six weeks' course of treatment. I improved somewhat, but continued to worry about him. At the end of the six weeks he seemed to be considerably improved, but in a short time found that he was no better, and as a last resort went back to the ranch in New Mexico in company with an army officer whom he had met on his previous visit. He was not, however, benefited as he anticipated he would be, so his companion persuaded him to try Christian Science. He then took up the study and was treated, with the result that he was entirely cured; in fact, the healing was almost instantaneous. After that he and his companion rode horseback together as much as fifty to seventy-five miles a day, and he ate food that he could not have been induced to eat formerly under any circumstances. He is now in the army, and upon entering was pronounced physically perfect.

When he returned from his trip to the West, my son's interest in Christian Science was so unbounded that his ambition was to help others, and naturally his first thought was for me, but knowing that I was antagonistic toward this religion he hesitated to talk with me about it. One day, however, he told me his story, and I replied that I would at once take up the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. From that day to this I have not taken a drop of medicine and have enjoyed almost perfect health. Instead of avoiding exercise I play golf, work in the garden, and ride horseback, as much as twenty-five miles without fatigue.

I have been identified with so-called orthodox churches for thirty-five years and realize that they are a great moral and spiritual uplift to civilization, and I would not be guilty of ingratitude for the benefits I have derived therefrom. I am very young in the study of Christian Science but feel, so far as I have been able to understand it, that it leads to a higher degree of spirituality. If it offered only the cure of disease I should not have been attracted to it. Healing of the sick is a wonderful blessing, and no one realizes that more than I, but it is only incident to the greater happiness to be achieved through the study and practice of Christian Science, which has brought more happiness into our family than ever existed before.—James C. Cassell, Roanoke, Va.

With a deep sense of gratitude for the many blessings which Christian Science has brought into my life I send this testimony. About five years ago something of the true teaching and works of Christian Science was told to me, and shortly afterward I asked if it would help our little boy, two years old, who had been sick most of his life. The answer came back lovingly that it would if I gave it a fair trial. I decided to do so, and have been grateful ever since that I did. The child was completely healed overnight of a severe case of fever and congestion of the lungs. Later he was freed from bowel trouble for which we had given him some material remedy all his life. He has had nothing but Christian Science treatment since, and is now a strong, healthy boy.

Having been a sufferer for years, I had come to believe that I would always be sick, so did not think of healing for myself, but I went to see a practitioner to gain a better understanding of what Christian Science teaches and does. From the first treatment I was healed of bowel disorder of fifteen years' standing and have had no return of it. During one week's treatment, in addition to the above healing, I was freed from sleeplessness, nervousness which at times had bordered on prostration, headaches of lifelong standing, and a spinal injury from which I had suffered untold agony for years. I had been told by a specialist that I could not be cured. Glasses which had been worn for fifteen years were also laid aside. To be thus freed after years of pain meant much, but the desire to express more kindness and gentleness toward God's children and to try to see them as His perfect reflection was the true healing.

The path has not always been easy, but I am grateful for the very experiences which have forced me to rise above the human self. One of these was the development of dropsy, together with heart and stomach trouble. Conditions finally caused me to ask for medical treatment, and through the experience with it I was freed from the belief that matter could heal. To show how beautiful and wonderful the healing through Christian Science was, I might state some of the opinions of the medical men. One said he would not take the case, another said all that could be done was to keep me under an opiate, and the time came when I could not be given enough of the drug to gain any rest. Although in this extreme condition when Christian Science treatment was begun, I was healed in three weeks. At the end of that period all the bloating was gone and every ailment had left, so that I experienced a state of health never known in my life before.

This healing has been permanent. I owe my existence and usefulness here to the understanding of God as taught in Christian Science. Another child has been born to me, although even after my healing this was said to be impossible. I have done all the work for a family of five ever since the child was three days old, and have perfect health and strength.

After all is said of the physical healing, it is the least of the blessings which Christian Science has brought into our lives. For the desire to "grow in grace" and for the understanding that eternal life consists of the unfoldment of good, I am even more grateful. To be able to grow in kindness and gentleness and in love for God and man gives a great sense of gratitude for the teaching that has made this possible.—Mrs. Grace Herin, Wasco, Ore.

I am very grateful for the opportunity of telling what Christian Science has done for me. For twelve years prior to April, 1915, I had been in very poor health. Doctors had diagnosed my case as fibroid tumors and for several years I took treatments and medicine from our best physicians, but gradually grew worse. These doctors advised me to have an operation, saying it was the only means of relief. Every three or four months I would be in bed with severe hemorrhages lasting from two to three weeks and leaving me in an extremely weakened condition. This continued until January, 1915, at which time I was taken very ill and was in bed for three months with continual hemorrhages. I was so weak that it was almost impossible to raise my head from the pillow, and my friends did not expect me to get well.

At this critical time Christian Science was recommended to me, and as a last resort I reluctantly consented to try it, although I had little or no faith in it. This was about the middle of April, 1915. From the first I began to improve, and in about two months I dismissed the practitioner, being completely healed. I am unable to find words to express my gratitude for the wonderful healing of this long-standing trouble, also for the overcoming of several minor afflictions through an understanding of the truth taught by Christ Jesus and explained by Mrs. Eddy.

Mrs. W. F. Wilbur, Ashtabula, Ohio.

I send this testimony hoping it may help some one who is suffering as I was when Christian Science was brought to my attention. Some years ago, when a deep sorrow came to me, I could see nothing but darkness ahead, and the religion I had known from childhood gave me no comfort. I rejected its teaching that God sent this sorrow for some wise purpose, and that I must bow in submission and not question, so I found myself turning from God, or what I then believed God to be, and growing very bitter in my thought. I was indeed passing through deep waters.

After some months I was asked to attend a service in a Christian Science church, and what impressed me most was the peaceful atmosphere, the happiness expressed in the faces all about me. After the service I was introduced to a lady who talked lovingly, and said that God did not send this sorrow to me, for God is Love. I had of course read that God is Love, but to hear that He did not send this trouble was indeed surprising. I took these spoken words away with me; the seed had been sown. Many dark days followed, but I found myself turning to that thought and feeling a little comforted.

I finally felt that I must know of this to me new teaching about God, so I went again into the peaceful atmosphere of that Christian Science church and found God to be a loving Father. It is such a joy to know the truth about God. I had to pass through many trials and the mental healing was slow, but the sense of separation has been overcome, and I have a better understanding of God and the true man. This has made every day one of thanksgiving and peace. I am so very grateful, and my earnest desire daily is to help others as I have been helped.

I feel it a duty as well as a privilege to send my testimony, that it may help some one seeking the truth. I find God an ever present help in time of trouble. I am the mother of three little children, all of whom were born without the usual suffering. Through treatment from a practitioner I was healed of three small lumps in one of my breasts, and a large one under my arm. The pain was so severe that I could hardly nurse my baby until I finally realized the truth, after which I slept fairly well that night. When I arose the next morning, however, I was so weak that I lay down again until I realized that God was my strength and that error could not keep me from my duties toward the little ones. I soon rose, but feeling miserable I telephoned to my aunt, who is a Christian Science practitioner, and asked her to treat me. That afternoon I felt better and next morning I was practically well. My neck was a little stiff and the lumps were not quite gone, but the following day all had vanished.

I have been able to overcome fevers, colds, and bowel stoppage for the children by the study of the Lesson-Sermon. My eldest daughter, when fifteen months old, was healed of what is called bloody dysentery. She awoke one night with a high fever and soon the bowel trouble developed. My mother was with me at the time and we declared God's allness. The fever ceased and the child soon fell asleep, but in the morning it seemed best to ask my aunt for help. By the third day one would hardly know that the child had been sick. Two other children in the neighborhood were afflicted with the same trouble and had medical treatment. One of them passed away, and the other was sick five or six months and is still to mortal sense a frail child.

We live on a farm and find God our only help for all discord, even when expressed in the stock. For all these healings and many other blessings I am more than thankful. The way which Jesus taught and proved by healing the sick is again made clear in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, for which I express my gratitude also.—Mrs. Ray Jerome, Goffs, Kan.

I wish to indorse the statements made by my daughter, as I was present with her during these experiences. My first experience in Christian Science was at the birth of this daughter. My sister, the aunt referred to in the above testimony, was with me. When my other children were born I suffered long and severely, but this time I felt so strong and had such a feeling of freedom and peace, that I got up the third day and attended to my baby and my household duties. Through this proof of the power of Truth I awakened to the fact that Jesus' words, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also," were meant for all time to come and not only during the Master's earthly career. Since then we have had many healings in our family. Rheumatism, kidney trouble, a skin disease in its worst form, blood poisoning, sprained ankle, and many other discordant conditions have been overcome, including trouble and sorrow which I never could have passed through if it had not been for this blessed truth that makes free.

While I am very grateful for the physical healings, the spiritual uplift means even more to me. I am thankful to God, to our Master as the Wayshower, and grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, whose purity enabled her to reveal the truth. Our literature has been a great help to me. I hope that this testimony may encourage some one.

MRS. ETTA BLIESNER.

I am indeed thankful to God that I was led to investigate Christian Science, for through the study of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I am learning to know the truth that makes free. With the help of a practitioner I have been healed of colds, sore throat, and a broken wrist, also of discouragement. At the time of the injury to the wrist, we called a physician to set the bone. He said I would not be able to return to my work for two weeks and that my wrist would never be straight. I did not have splints put on, but asked for Christian Science treatment, and as a result returned to work on the fifth day. My wrist is as straight as it was before and has never given me any trouble.

I am grateful to all who have helped me to understand that God is an ever present help, and for the Christian Science literature and reading rooms. I am healthier and happier than I ever was before.

MISS MYRTLE MARCH MELLON, Kansas City, Mo.

I shall always be thankful for the knowledge I have gained in Christian Science. I know it is of God, everlasting Truth, and that it is a practical religion, for I have been helped so often by the realization of the allness of God, good, and by knowing the nothingness of evil. Over a year ago I was healed of a very distressing ailment that had caused me untold suffering for many months. The disease was diagnosed by a physician as gallstones and I was told that an operation was the only cure for such an ailment. A Christian Science practitioner was called, and in a comparatively short time I was entirely healed. I know the healing is permanent, for I have been so free from all unfavorable conditions ever since.

How can I help being thankful to God, the great giver of all good, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for revealing to us this wonderful truth? I do so appreciate the Christian Science literature, and realize more clearly each day what a great blessing it is to mankind.

MRS. MARY E. HARPOLD, Massillon, Ohio.

When I came into Christian Science, I was teaching school in California. I had an organic trouble that caused me a great deal of suffering, and there being many things in the school curriculum which I did not like, I resigned my position and declared I would never teach again. I had not yet learned to say, "Thy will be done." Then came months of study and research, also treatment, but no healing. A favorite sister lived in the East and I wished to live near her, so I tried to get work in Boston, but could not. Weary months dragged into years, and while I gained some slight understanding of the truth I was not healed. One day I called on a practitioner with whom I had a brief conversation. She did not even treat me, but told me to go West and go to work. I was instantly healed and went forth from her home, free.

I went to the public library and found a Los Angeles paper in which there was an advertisement for teachers, so I sent my credentials and followed them a few days later. I reached Los Angeles on Wednesday and a week from the following Thursday was at work, teaching in a small town where there was a small Christian Science church which was greatly in need of faithful workers. I was an earnest worker now, for I had learned to say, "Thy will be done." It was over two years before I found other work than teaching, but during that time I was able to help others. Most of all I was helped myself, because I had learned true obedience. Then again I seemed tried almost beyond endurance. The time had come for me to prove that supply is spiritual, and God did supply my every need, for day by day His loving care was manifested to me.

I am grateful that I was obliged to prove that every need is a spiritual need and already supplied. My home has been restored, success has come to us, and I rejoice in some understanding of Christian Science. For this I love and feel deep gratitude to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy.

MRS. VONIA RAY JOHNSON, San Francisco, Cal.

When I came into Christian Science I read the testimonies first, and the reading of the wonderful healings brought about by prayer made me very happy and grateful. I knew that I too would be healed some day. While yet in my own country I heard about Christian Science, but in an antagonistic way, and I loudly protested against it and looked down upon its followers. I had always been a very delicate child and needed lots of attention to be kept alive and healthy, as was supposed, with all kinds of material remedies. I see now that if I had been taught to know God in the way children are taught in the Christian Science Sunday school, I would have been better off. When older I needed a rest cure after hard study, and it was also found that my heart and lungs were in a bad condition; in fact, the doctor said he would not stand for the consequences if I walked more than fifteen minutes a day.

After leaving home I learned to think for myself, and I chose to give Christian Science a fair trial. One can imagine my joy and gratitude when after the first treatment, which was an absent one, I could run upstairs without losing my breath. I got well soon after that. This healing occurred over six years ago and I am getting stronger and happier every day. I am glad to be healthy, but the joy which comes from knowing that this wonderful truth is for everybody who is willing to accept it, is even greater. A few years ago I had four teeth taken out in one afternoon. A practitioner was asked to be present, and the extracting was done in a few minutes without any pain. It was a wonderful experience to me. Minor ailments have been overcome, often instantaneously, among them headache, sore throat, and influenza. I am thankful for class instruction, as a result of which I am getting more and more understanding of the truth.

I have no words to express my gratitude for all the spiritual blessings this teaching has brought me; the knowledge that God is infinite Love and fills all space, that all this discord in Europe cannot exist in God's creation, has given me great peace, and all anxiety for my dear ones over there has gone. God is right there and that is sufficient.

Miss Elise Horstman, Chambersburg, Pa.

Mrs. Eddy says on page vii of the Preface of her wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings." My blessings have been great, for Christian Science has sustained me and mine in many trying experiences. Serious illnesses have been overcome through the power of Truth, also the effects of accidents. Our son, when about fifteen years of age, mounted a very fractious horse one day, and in so doing both he and the horse fell backward with such force that neither could rise without help. The lad's head struck on some ice, causing him to be unconscious for several days, and he was badly bruised otherwise. Nobody who saw the accident thought he would live through the night, but thanks to Christian Science and to the help of a faithful practitioner, he is well and strong to-day. In about three weeks he was able to walk again. For this healing and many other demonstrations I am indeed thankful to God, also grateful to Mrs. Eddy.

Mrs. Lilla E. Hodge, Sioux City, Iowa.

Christian Science was first presented to me about ten years ago, at a time when I was suffering from what would be called a bad case of acute lung trouble. After suffering for several nights, part of the time in such pain that I could not lie in bed, my mother asked me to accept Christian Science help and a practitioner was called. In three treatments I was completely healed. Since then I have had numerous healings, among them the overcoming of the tobacco and liquor habits of many years' standing. In our family of five we always look to Truth to solve our problems, whether physical or financial.

I am more than thankful to God and feel deep gratitude to our dear Leader for the many blessings that have come to me and mine and for even a slight understanding of this truth.—W. E. Allen, Long Beach, Cal.

I want to say how grateful I am for Christian Science, and to tell a little of what it has done for me, in the hope that my experience may help others. When I first heard of this teaching I was mentally and physically a wreck, having suffered from nervousness since childhood. My condition steadily became worse, each phase appearing more difficult to combat, until I wondered at last what would happen to me. My family and friends surrounded me with love and every known remedy, but none of these things availed me in the slightest; indeed, they only added to the blackness of despair, for I came at length to the end of all material help and was worse than in the beginning.

At this, the darkest hour, the coming of Christian Science was indeed the dawn. A friend took me to a Wednesday evening testimony meeting and gave me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy to read before the service commenced. I opened it at the first chapter, entitled "Prayer," and when I came to the words, "Thoughts unspoken are not unknown to the divine Mind" (p. 1), I experienced the healing touch of absolute Truth. All fear left me, and I was instantaneously healed of a physical trouble from which I had suffered all my life. The service indeed proved the vision of the mountain top, and since that time I have never for one instant doubted the truth of the Christ Science, although owing to so many years of wrong thinking a dark time followed. The remembrance of that vision enabled me to hold on.

I have had many physical healings. An acute attack of ptomaine poisoning was overcome within half an hour, a severe condition of pyorrhea was healed in two treatments, and bad colds and other ailments have quickly yielded to the truth. One is naturally grateful for the physical healing, but far more beautiful is the change in character which slowly, perhaps, but very surely goes on if we faithfully do the best we can, seeking first "the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." I am deeply thankful to God for this wonderful truth which is leading me out of bondage into the "glorious liberty of the children of God," and am grateful to Mrs. Eddy, through whose purity, selflessness, and faithfulness the understanding of the Christ, Truth, has been revealed to this age.

Miss Eva C. Elmslie, London, England.

It has been proved to us that Christian Science does heal all manner of disease if applied in the right way. My mother has been healed of a very bad case of "blastomycosis," which the doctors claim is not only incurable but also contagious. Her healing was complete within a year. During this time we were obliged for months to keep her arms and legs bandaged with linens and the rest of her body wrapped in cotton. The power of Love and Truth has healed her of this disease, so that her skin and flesh is firm and healthy. Her hair can now be brushed and combed and is in splendid condition. We are all thankful to God for this healing.

I myself have been healed of sore throat, headache, erysipelas, and other ailments. I am thankful that I am learning man's relationship to God and that He knows only good. We have indeed had many blessings.

Mrs. Ella M. Sloan, Chicago, Ill.

It is with great pleasure that I express my heartfelt gratitude for the healing which I have experienced through the loving help of a Christian Science practitioner. In the spring of 1915, previous to which a double affliction had fallen upon my household, I found myself mentally and physically depressed, so much so that I was fast sinking into insanity. In July of the same year, as a last resort and with little or no faith, I was led by divine Love to apply for Christian Science treatment. I am thankful to say that the healing was accomplished at one visit, and the peace of God, the desire to forsake all for Him, filled my heart. I was also relieved of an almost lifelong tendency to hysteria, which during the last year had greatly increased. My eyesight was helped at the same time. From wearing glasses constantly for twenty-five years, and for four or five years a much stronger pair for reading, I was able to discard them entirely except for fine work, for which I have since used the weaker glasses. I have been enabled to pay some long-standing bills, to manage my children and household affairs more harmoniously, and in fact am constantly receiving help in many ways.

For all these blessings I am deeply grateful, but I feel even more thankful to God for an understanding of the truth which makes free.

Mrs. Mary L. Atwood, Taunton, Mass.

From the Press

[Henry Watterson as quoted in Western Christian Advocate]

Democracy is but a side issue. The paramount issue, underlying the issue of democracy, is the religion of Christ and him crucified; the bedrock of civilization; the source and resource of all that is worth having in the world that is, that gives promise in the world to come, not as an abstraction, not as a huddle of sects and faction, but as a mighty force and principle of being. The word of God, delivered by the gentle Nazarene upon the hillsides of Judea, sanctified by the cross of Calvary, has survived every assault. It is now arrayed upon land and sea to meet the deadliest of all assaults, Satan turned loose for one last, final struggle. If the world is to be saved from destruction—physical no less than spiritual destruction—it will be saved alone by the Christian religion.

[The Congregationalist and Advance]

The Christian Scientists have not usually been thought to be particularly interested in or sympathetic with what are called works of relief, but no church could have done its duty more promptly or liberally in behalf of stricken Halifax than did the mother organization in Boston. Within a few hours after the news of the calamity came they had started a special train with twenty or thirty persons on board, who on arrival busied themselves with ministrations to the destitute. Moreover, the amount of money raised on the Sunday following the disaster and in subsequent days was over ten thousand dollars. In view of their beliefs it was quite magnanimous in the Scientists to allow doctors and medical supplies to be carried on their special train.

[Rev. Washington Gladden, D.D., in The Universalist Leader]

Will the modern church need a creed? Not such a creed as the Westminster Confession, or the Heidelberg symbol, or the Thirty-nine Articles,—no such elaborated and articulated statement of philosophical belief. No modern church could frame such a dogmatic exposition of its theological theories, or would find any use for one if it had one. It would be only an entanglement and a fetter to any body of modern Christians who undertook to shape their lives by it.

French Translation of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy

In conformity to the rules established by Mary Baker Eddy for making and publishing translations of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has been translated into French, and is now published with the English text opposite the French translation.

This edition is bound in cloth similar to the cover used on the English editions. Price, one to five copies, $3.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $3.25 each. It is also printed on Oxford India Bible paper, and bound in the same style as the regular pocket edition of Science and Health. Price, one to five copies, $5.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $5.25 each. The quantity price will be made on six or more books of the French translation, including the two styles of bindings.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, occupy the minimum space, and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Vest Pocket Pamphlet

The article "Possession," by Adam H. Dickey, has been reprinted in a pamphlet, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at four cents a copy.

From The Christian Science Board of Directors

All correspondence intended for The Christian Science Board of Directors should be addressed to the Board at 105 Falmouth Street, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts, and not to individuals.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to BLISS KNAPP, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

"Pamphlets"

Although before the days of newspapers, the spiritual messages of great reformers like Wycliffe and Luther, and later the declarations of great political constructionists like Burke and Benjamin Franklin, were distributed by means of printed pamphlets, the word "pamphlets" as understood to-day seems a totally inadequate designation for those messengers of Christian Science listed on the inside cover page of each issue of the Christian Science Sentinel and in the catalogue at the back of each Christian Science Journal.

What these "pamphlets" really are, and mean, is set forth in the following inspiring story told by a Christian Science practitioner recently returned from Paris:

> "A young Belgian soldier was brought to me in Paris by a lady who had made it her special work to look after the Belgian soldiers who were without homes. She had sent this man a pamphlet on Christian Science, and he came to see me when on leave in Paris to ask me to give his testimony at the Paris Church as his leave expired before Wednesday evening. He told me he had had tuberculosis, and had been released from military service on account of this, had read and studied the pamphlet, and had been completely healed so that he had been taken on again as 'ambulancier' in a military hospital.
> "Some time after this a batch of sick men were brought in—one of them being very bad. It was discovered to be a case of typhus, and the case was isolated, and our young Belgian friend was shut up with him in a special ward. He took care not to tell the patient he had typhus, but assured him God would heal him. Conditions grew worse and a speedy end was predicted by the doctor, but the young fellow worked on in Science as he had gleaned how to do from his Christian Science pamphlet, and an extraordinary thing happened, against all medical law so the Belgian said, and the man was healed.
> "At the time I saw this boy he was studying Science and Health with a dictionary, and wanted to know the meaning of Mind, which word does not exist in French. On being given an explanation he exclaimed eagerly: 'Oh! I see—it is the source of intelligence.' "

Over one hundred of these pamphlets, consisting of lectures, selected articles, and comments declaring the truth of Christian Science, printed in English, French, German, Danish, Dutch, Modern Greek, Italian, Norwegian, Russian, Spanish, and Swedish are listed in the Journal or Sentinel.

The above recital proves how helpful may be a hand extended to the world at this time by the distribution of these "pamphlets" at home and abroad.

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission to the world has been opened through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at training cantonments, at nominal postage, literature offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen in the United States. A printed notice on the front of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, and Le Héraut de Christian Science, signed by the Postmaster-General, explains the simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to mail them regularly as desired.

VOLUME XX MARCH 30, 1918 NUMBER 31

God Is Truth

JOHN B. WILLIS

ON the ceiling of a chapel he decorated, Michelangelo has represented God the Father as a majestic man, dignified and beneficent beyond words, and to Christian Scientists one of the most suggestive features of his famous work is this, that in it he illustrates the immensely significant fact that in the innumerable chapels of individual consciousness the divine character is outlined very much after such a superhuman model who is yet subject to limitations which are utterly opposed to the universally accepted dogma that God is infinite, the All-in-all.

It would seem that no one who attributes the world order to an individual source, called God, could fail to appreciate the importance of the emphasis which Christian Science lays upon the necessity of gaining a right concept of the nature of this all-creative, all-governing Being. Mrs. Eddy's words, "The true idea of God gives the true understanding of Life and Love, robs the grave of victory, takes away all sin and the delusion that there are other minds, and destroys mortality" (Science and Health, p. 323), make it clear that she regarded right thought of God as the summum bonum. Surely nothing can be more fundamental, more vital, or more imperative, and it is probable that no other teaching of Christian Science is more profoundly and more helpfully influencing general religious thought than is this to-day.

That the concept of Deity which men have entertained should have borne the impress of their imperfect sense of the nature of personality, so that they were led to think and speak of God as a mighty king, seems not at all surprising, and yet it is apparent that at their best all the Scripture writers recognized the menace of this point of view. In moments when they were "caught up into paradise," as St. Paul describes one of his own experiences, they were always exalting the name (nature) of the Lord, were trying to instruct the people out of that anthropomorphism which has regarded the Supreme Being as other than infinite Spirit. Mrs. Eddy clearly discerned the existing need of the religious world in this respect. She saw the hopelessness of its spiritual advance so long as inconsistent and incongruous concepts of God remained regnant in human consciousness; and the heart of the gospel which she preached from the date of her discovery of the present, healing power of the truth Christ Jesus taught, might be said to be found in her oft repeated declaration that God is infinite Truth, Life, Love. By making use of the Scripturally authorized synonyms for God, she undertook to rectify and enlarge every thought of Him which would in any way impeach His integrity and thus fetter faith or discourage aspiration.

Just here it may be said that practically all Christian creeds include definite statements respecting the infinity, the righteousness, and the integrity of the divine nature, but unhappily, Christian people have not logically adhered to these premises in all that they have thought and said about God, hence much of current belief is at war with, and cannot possibly be adjusted to, His asserted all-wisdom, all-goodness, and all-power. This lamentable fact has furnished a legitimate basis for the charge of ignorance or inconsistency, and the one way of escape from the contradiction is found in the return to that demonstrably true teaching of Christ Jesus which could but be named Christian Science. In this teaching all that is attributed to God, all of which He is the asserted origin and support, and all for which He is made responsible, is the necessary outcome of the fundamental postulates respecting His nature, the various synonyms which are used for God serving to present His inherent right relation to every subject of thought.

The practical value of these synonyms is easily discerned. For instance, to think of God as infinite Truth introduces us at once into the realm of Mind, of intelligence. We know that Truth apprehended constitutes right consciousness, the true selfhood; hence the identity of this right consciousness, or man, with Truth's reflection or expression. This at once illumines a large area of the Master's teaching. He declared that life, eternal life, is a God-knowing, and also that Truth-knowing brings freedom. All true progress is to be gained, therefore, as error is supplanted by Truth. This takes place in consciousness, and it manifestly brings the right thinker into at-one-ment with Truth. Immanuel, "God with us," now becomes perfectly intelligible as divine Truth apprehended. The coming of the Holy Ghost, the dawning of the Christ-idea, the new birth,—all are identified with Truth's appearing in consciousness, the attainment of the Mind that was in Christ Jesus. Redemption is effected as Truth is unfolded to the spiritually aspiring, and the true Bethlehem is found to be not far from any one of us. How many of the deep things of Scripture teaching are thus unveiled!

But further, we all know how difficult it is while thinking of God as a corporeal personality to understand or get any abiding inspiration from the teaching that He is omnipresent. Christians accept the fact as not to be questioned, but the how of it is, for the many, altogether obscure and inexplicable, so that the essential requisite of a truly inspired life, namely, an uplifting and continuous sense of the divine nearness, is quite unknown. Every effort to gain it has proved mockingly futile, and the outcome has been that, lacking the foundation of a real knowledge of God, no enduring spiritual structure has been or can be erected. If now, however, one begins to think of God as infinite Truth, he will be impressed with the rapidity with which these old-time difficulties begin to disappear. One has no sense whatever of any necessary separation from the truth. On the contrary we know that it is everywhere present; that it is not limited by or subject to time or space; that the laws pertaining to recent discoveries were as near to Archimedes as they were to Edison, and that their utilization was not a question of their existence, but of human insight. The Medes and Persians might as certainly have had telephones, etc., as we, had they through study and investigation come to know as much of the so-called forces of nature as did Bell and Dolbear. To gain a knowledge of law and order always means simply that we must awaken. Thus thinking, one's trouble in grasping the fact of the divine omnipresence speedily reaches its vanishing point, and his heart is as speedily made glad.

Yet again, Truth is eternal, unchangeable, and all-inclusive. It is forever pure and perfect, its expression is always harmonious, hence beautiful. It is just and impartial, it cannot be exhausted or monopolized, made over, or enslaved. It can never have to do with or consent to falsity for any purpose or end; hence our sure conviction that error is not truth in the making. For the true to be, is always for falsity not to be. Furthermore we know that Truth is one, and that this one is always right and therefore good. To say that evil is legitimate or good would be to say that falsity is true, and both are ethically unthinkable. Even when men consent to falsify, it is always excused as a "necessary evil," and not as good in itself, so that the unfailing intolerance of Truth for evil is still maintained in human thought.

And now how wonderfully these universal and undisputed perceptions of Truth's immutable nature and relations clarify and establish one's concept of God! What a clearing up of questionings they bring about! Indeed, the more one thinks of the ultimate fact of the universe as the expression of Truth, the more he rejoices that it is true. That God is Truth, and that He cannot be conscious of any untruth, any evil or disharmony,—may be said to be the first, the last, and the best thing to be known, and this knowing, Christian Science is certainly bringing about. More,—let it be told in Gath and published in the streets of Askelon,—it is healing the sick and sinful thereby!

The products of human skill usually reveal their finest art when they are seen from a single point of view, or in a specific light. They cannot bear the fullest inspection, because they are not above criticism. With a lily, however, a dewdrop, or an ideal character,—the more carefully it is examined and the greater the number of points from which it is observed, the more its splendors are revealed. New discoveries of hidden grace and glory are forever being made, and this explains, in part, why the study of the divine nature through the larger spiritual symbolism employed in Christian Science serves to magnify and enhance the glory of God, since, as Moses declares, "his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."

The Armor of Righteousness

IDA S. KOHL

IN the sixth chapter of his letter to the Ephesians, Paul outlines the different parts of the armor necessary for a thorough equipment of protection and defense against evil: "For," he says, "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." As a climax to his earnest exhortation that all put on this armor and take a firm stand for Truth, he adds, "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance." No part of this armor can be dispensed with, and what is more we must have sufficient understanding to use it.

This understanding unfolds, through prayer, that conscious activity of right thinking whereby we are united to and reflect the intelligence of divine Mind. One whose armor is not in constant use would also be unprepared to meet the enemy. We should not only watch lest evil spring upon us unawares, but especially watch to see that scientific right thoughts—the spiritual facts of being—have possession of our consciousness. To be alive to Truth through such thinking, and always on guard, makes one alert and quick to detect the first suggestion of the approach of the enemy; for thought thus armed leaves no opportunity for error of any kind to enter and frustrate the purpose of good. Our Leader chose such words as the following to express her thought of this armor (Miscellany, p. 210): "Good thoughts are an impervious armor; clad therewith you are completely shielded from the attacks of error of every sort."

In this connection there is a very helpful lesson in the Bible record of the life of David. As God's chosen one he was, when quite a youth, anointed to be king of Israel, and it is said that "the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward." This anointing must have awakened in him that which, in its continuous unfolding, became the key opening to him the kingdom of heaven,—a present sense of harmony, dominion, and fearlessness. Shortly afterward, when the children of Israel were threatened with destruction at the hands of the Philistines, David offered his services to go out single-handed against Goliath of Gath, who, as a representative of the Philistines, defied the armies of Israel. At sight of this monster all the men of Israel had, day after day, retreated in terror, but as David had already proved to his own satisfaction that God was with him, his protection and ever present help though evil seemed to be menacing, to him it was not power. He evidently had never lost sight of his anointing and had been proving, wherever he was, that he was in his rightful place, preparing for future opportunities and responsibilities.

Whatever in human thought is opposed to God and His idea, must fall before him whom God has anointed. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 592) that oil typifies "consecration; charity; gentleness; prayer; heavenly inspiration." The armor that Saul thought necessary—a great display of brass and steel, representing confidence in materiality—David had not proved, so it was of no use to him. He went forth to meet the Philistine, saying to him, "Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the Lord of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied." Then with one well-directed blow from the simplest of material weapons, wielded with skill, backed by moral courage and faith in God, he laid the giant low and saved the day for Israel. The victory was indeed won before the stone left the sling, before it was taken from the brook, for David's armor was purely spiritual.

As David went out he was so filled with the assurance of God's presence, so satisfied with God's guidance and protection, that he followed it without question. We who want to know just what move we ought to make long before the time to make that move, find a helpful rebuke in this experience. When we step forth in defense of spiritual sense, the Love which prompts this step will provide for every advancing step, till at last we realize that Truth does all, leaving nothing to be done but to follow its guidance. To meet and overcome Goliath required no struggle on David's part. He had been growing great mentally, developing a consciousness which knows no fear, so he did not hesitate to execute judgment and justice when the opportunity came.

Those who never lose sight of their first glimpse of Truth, but through consecration, prayer, and watchfulness are ready to improve every opportunity to advance Godward, are ready also to meet each new responsibility, thus acting according to their highest understanding in the use of their weapons. A well-directed statement of absolute truth —God's allness and matter's nothingness—may seem like a simple weapon, but when wielded with understanding allied to conviction it has been proved adequate, many times over, to silence the belief in evil and destroy it. All the truth revealed in Christian Science we must make our very own. It must be thoroughly proven in each individual consciousness and experience. A sense of superiority over any phase of error and security from its attacks is a part of the equipment of that individual who is protected by the armor of right thinking. When honesty and sincerity, consecration and fidelity, right motives and right desires, obedience and trustworthiness, purity and fearlessness, are an integral part of one's thoughts, they govern human consciousness and its activities, rendering one a law unto oneself,—a law of protection and immunity by day and by night.

The struggles we go through while overcoming the mortal sense of self may seem hard, but the gospel of peace, when prayerfully sought, always unfolds a preparation of thought to stand the tests. Weariness never triumphs in this battle, for the support of Truth is always sufficient at each advancing step. Faith in the power of Truth and its ultimate victory shields us from many experiences we would otherwise encounter, and when thought rests in God it has no faith in evil, and consequently encounters less of evil.

The universal belief that life, substance, and intelligence are in matter, results from the belief that matter is an entity. Christian Science shows that matter is not an entity but merely the outward expression of human thought, and governed always by thought. In teaching mankind how to think aright, Christian Science is teaching them how to subdue materiality—humanity's Goliath.

The destruction of error through the scientific use of "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God," never results disastrously to any individual, for evil is always impersonal. When Jesus first sent out his disciples, they must have done their healing and redemptive work through faith in and inspiration from him, being under his direct jurisdiction, but the time came when Jesus realized that dependence upon himself must give place to an understanding of the word of God, so he told them that he who had no sword should get one if he had to sell his garment to buy it. In the verse immediately following this discourse in the twenty-second chapter of Luke, we read: "And they said, Lord, behold, here are two swords. And he said unto them, It is enough." Very soon after this, Peter thought he had sufficient excuse for a literal use of the sword, when he cut off the ear of the high priest's servant, but to show that a material weapon was not what he meant, Jesus immediately rebuked Peter and restored the man's ear. Christian Scientists realize that they have two swords, the Bible and their textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which they are finding quite sufficient in every emergency. They are learning how to wield them with great satisfaction and success—never to injure, but always to bless. Besides these books, we have in Mrs. Eddy's other writings the practical instructions which are indispensable as aids to their correct use.

"Truth pierces the error of mortality," our textbook says (p. 210), "as a sunbeam penetrates the cloud." This dispels the cloud, which is but a mass of mist, leaving nothing but the sunshine. The trouble with us is we fail to see that error in any of its phases is but the mist of materiality. This is made plain in Christian Science, which reveals the method whereby evil is dispersed through the word of God understood, which is "quick, and powerful, and sharper than any twoedged sword." That which remains after any conflict with error is not a sense of its reality, but the "word" which unfolds in all its beauty and grandeur to uplift and bless our lives.

Our great Master said, "The prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing in me." In proportion as we really see that evil is no part of God or of man in His likeness, and give evil no place in our consciousness, we will not shrink back at the appearance of any adverse circumstance or condition, but will rather rejoice in the opportunity to test again the adequacy of our armor. Paul says, "For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds."

Every conflict is a mental one, whether individual, international, or universal, and Christian Scientists must be ready to separate themselves, in thought, from the material world, that through self-abnegation and consecration to Christ they may keep their armor bright and thus be always ready to stand as a unit to meet and master every aggression of material sense, for the final victory of Truth over all error is not a question of day or hour but of entire devotion to the cause of Christ, Truth.

Keeping Up One's Courage

WILLIAM EVANS

THE writer was born and raised on a farm a few miles from town, and when attending high school he would stay in town from Monday morning until Friday evening. When Saturday morning came he would be out early in the fields with his big brother, especially during seedtime and harvest. One springtime he remembers going to the fields when the barley was being sown. He was particularly interested to know how soon the newly sown grain would shoot out of the ground, and was told that it would do so in about three days. In the fall of the year he remembers going to the fields when the winter wheat was being sown, and upon asking how soon it would come up he was informed that the wheat would take about three weeks to shoot out. At first he could not understand why it should take the wheat three weeks to spring up when it took the barley only three days, so he asked his brother why they sowed wheat at all when the returns on the barley were so much quicker. The answer was, that though the barley grew much more quickly than the wheat, yet a bushel of wheat was worth as much as three bushels of barley.

A year or so ago the writer was able to make practical use of this lesson learned in boyhood. It served as the means of keeping up his courage in solving what seemed a slow problem. To his sense of things there was no reason why it should take so long before any returns were visible. More than once he allotted a certain length of time within which to make the demonstration, but every time he did this, he found that when the given period had expired, a solution to his problem seemed farther away than ever. More than once he felt discouraged, but the last time such a thought presented itself, his boyhood lesson in connection with the wheat and the barley flashed into memory, and it surely did serve him to good purpose. Finally the demonstration was made, and to his joy and surprise it brought a blessing far richer than he had anticipated, for the blessing he received was as different from the one he had expected to receive as wheat is from barley, and it was many times more valuable.

We often wonder why our ills are not overcome and our problems solved within the time we allot for the demonstration, and according to the plan or scheme which we have drawn up for that purpose. How often it happens that before we start to work out a problem we plan a sort of "cut and dried" solution of it. This in every instance will delay the result and very frequently lead to failure, for by our very actions we unconsciously exclude God, Principle, from our work; yet is not the realization of Principle the answer to every problem? What brings the surest returns for us, be our need physical or otherwise, is the hard work recommended by Mrs. Eddy on page 2 of her Message to The Mother Church for June, 1900, where she says: "The song of Christian Science is, 'Work—work—work—watch and pray.'" We should take up the fight with firm determination to overcome evil, and with ready obedience to Truth, determined to accomplish but one thing, and that, the conquest of error, whether it threaten our health, happiness, or prosperity. To be optimistic helps one to be courageous, and the more slowly the problem works out, the greater the opportunity to invest effort; and good efforts, like grains of wheat, do not get lost, for God takes care of all.

After experiencing for a period of over ten years both quick and slow solutions of his various problems, and upon reviewing these experiences, the writer feels like saying that to him the quick solutions are as silver while the slow ones are as gold in the gaining of spiritual understanding. We often discover that the working out of our problems involves an endurance test; therefore, let us be awake to this fact, and prove ourselves wise and courageous and win a real victory.

The Church Soloist

MILDRED SPRING CASE

MANY rare experiences come to those who have the privilege of being soloists in Christian Science churches,—experiences which prove Mrs. Eddy's wisdom in making the solo an important part of the church service. One such experience recently occurred to the writer and unfolded much that filled her heart with gratitude.

All during the week a severe cough had manifested itself, making each attempt at practicing for the Sunday solo a painful physical effort. The subject of the Lesson-Sermon for the following Sunday was "Christ Jesus," and the solo to be sung was a rendering of Mrs. Eddy's beautiful hymn "Christmas Morn" (Poems, p. 29). In studying the words of the solo, in order that the spiritual meaning might appear to her consciousness, a broader, freer conception seemed to dawn upon the soloist's thought.

Early Sunday morning she practiced the solo again, but so distressing was the physical condition and so painful the effort that she stopped and went by herself for a quiet hour's study before going to church. Once again she studied the week's lesson to learn more of the healing Christ which she was to reflect. She realized that the true voice must be spiritual, and that the phrase so often used by singers, "in good voice," has a deeper meaning than is usually realized,—for do we not always dwell in that Mind which is ever good? She knew that the true voice must ever be harmonious, self-expressed, and free from all hindrances. So clear became her understanding of the Christ-idea that all sense of her voice as being a physical thing or dependent upon matter seemed preposterous. One by one each counterfeit belief of vocalists about misplacement, lack of breath control, bad enunciation, forcing the tone, etc., were discarded, and spiritual ideas were put in their place. Could there be any "misplacement" of that which is governed by divine Mind? If God, Spirit, is all-powerful, could we not find in Him perfect "control"? Must not the voice of Truth ever be distinct in its expression to the listening ear? Discord being the result of fear could not dwell in that "perfect love" which the apostle says "casteth out fear." The thunderbolts and whirlwinds of materiality may express force, but could the still, small voice of Love ever express itself by force? Must it not rather lovingly persuade?

When she left for church all thoughts of fear had vanished and her heart was full of rejoicing. On arising to sing she was so entirely unconscious of any sense of self, so totally free from any personal effort, that the healing message seemed to come, not from her, but to her, direct from the ever present Christ. Needless to say, there was no sense or evidence of a cough left, for the spiritual idea, "dear Christ, forever here and near," to use the words of the hymn, had taken its place. When she later heard that healing had also come to certain members of the congregation at the service she was not surprised, for had not she herself felt the healing presence of the Christ, Truth?

God's Work in God's Way

GEORGE C. PALMER

VARIOUS narratives in the Scriptures illustrate the fact that to trust in human or personal strength is to produce a temporary sense of estrangement from God. If God's work is to be done by us, it must be done in God's way and at His command. Any attempt to act the part that properly belongs to another, or to bring to pass good results through the operation of material sense or human will power, not only must prove abortive, but is apt to lead for the time being into a condition of perplexity and loneliness where we may leisurely ponder the truths of Christian Science and must pass through a period of self-examination before we can accomplish the good we desire.

We read that Moses, by attempting to save the Israelite by the arm of flesh, was forced to flee into the wilderness, an experience which must, after the brilliance of the Egyptian court have been one of "loneliness; doubt; darkness," to quote from Mrs. Eddy's definition of wilderness (Science and Health, p. 597). Nevertheless it also proved, as she further defines it, an experience of "spontaneity of thought and idea; the vestibule in which a material sense of things disappears, and spiritual sense unfolds the great facts of existence."

Elijah also, endeavoring, as may be conjectured, to turn the Israelites by force to "the God of Israel," slew all the prophets of Baal by the brook Kishon, and the sequel finds him flying from an idolatrous queen to Beer-sheba, about one hundred and ten miles south of Mount Carmel. Here, realizing that his problem must be worked out with God alone, he left his servant and journeyed into the wilderness, probably the desert of Paran, on the west side of the Arabian Desert. Away from the excitement of active service, where the temptation to be overwhelmed by success, or error, is apt to be strong, he could overcome sense and self, feed upon divinely prepared food, and learn to do God's work in God's way and at God's command. Divine Truth sustained him in the wilderness, and this spiritual meal supported him till he had come to Mount Horeb in the southern part of the Sinai peninsula. Here we find him elevated above the desert sand; above the loneliness, doubt, and darkness that had beset him, having attained a spiritual altitude where error could not present its false appearance.

The narrative in the nineteenth chapter of I Kings goes on to tell us that "a great and strong wind rent the mountains." Mrs. Eddy defines wind on page 597 of Science and Health as "destruction; anger; mortal passions." Thus Elijah perceived that "the Lord was not in the wind." His indignation, which resulted in the destruction of the prophets of Baal, had no divine authority; hence his fear and the desert. The earthquake may signify the instability of the material sense of earth and the futility of adopting material means of accomplishing divine ends.

Digitized by Google

Again we read, "And after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire." On page 586 of Science and Health we have this definition of fire: "Fear; remorse; lust; hatred; destruction," and again the truth is emphasized that destruction and hatred were not required of him by divine Mind, and that by giving way to them fear had resulted, and his remorse had broken out in the words, "It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers." But this definition of fire in our textbook concludes with the phrase "affliction purifying and elevating man." Then came the supreme moment of self-examination. A still, small voice said, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" and there followed the command to retrace his steps, to pass again right over the territory from which he had fled, even to the wilderness of Damascus.

A glance at the map shows that Elijah stood at the southern extremity of the land whither he had been driven. Now he was commissioned to proceed to the point diametrically opposite. Metaphysically considered, he was to view the situation from the opposite standpoint and work under divine guidance rather than from human impulse. The Israelites were obliged to learn that nothing which they needed in the desert came to them through any virtue independently possessed by them. Their bread, their water, their shelter, and their weapons were sure, as long as they obeyed God's law.

This wilderness experience has come to many. Christ Jesus came to it and through it without sin, for to him the wilderness showed the falsity and futility of adopting self-will and mortal mind methods to provide bread or authority. These can be realized only as we become the reflection of infinite Mind. We should rejoice always, for while the wilderness experience may seem a necessity, yet even there God sustains us, teaches us, and often commissions us during the process to do His will and work. Mortal mind constantly insists that we shall consider conditions from the material viewpoint, but no situation can be correctly comprehended until we reverse the testimony of the physical senses and view life from the opposite or spiritual standpoint. Thus only can we enjoy the dominion divinely supplied to man in God's image and likeness.

At-one-ment

CHARLES C. SANDELIN

As gently as the dew on tender flower,
Comes to the heart Love's holy, healing power;
As lightly as the breeze in summer air,
Truth clears the mist of sense that lodgeth there.

Truth does not change! Each child of God must be
His perfect image through eternity;
Thine eyes but open to a wider range—
The truth of being time can never change.

Ah, thine are peace and gladness if thou seek
The Life divine with grateful heart and meek!
There's naught but good,—no evil thou canst find
In thy true home, our Father-Mother Mind!

Selected Articles

["Safety"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S. A., Jan. 24, 1918]

Safety means different things to different people. It is the same as with one's sense of pleasure. At three the boy loves a wooden horse, at thirteen a bicycle, at twenty-three a motor car or a flying machine. And so it is with safety. The mother's arms are safety to a child, a cellar spells safety to many during a Zeppelin or aeroplane raid, a trench affords to many at the front a sense of safety, and a lifeboat is generally the first thought of safety to those in a torpedoed ship. A casual reader might believe that Noah really found safety in the ark. But this was only the outward manifestation of his true sense of safety, of his perception of the fact that man is spiritual, therefore indestructible.

Spiritual perception, then, is the source of safety, and if this sense of safety should grow ever clearer and clearer, a sense of absolute safety would result. Man is effect and God the cause. No cause ever existed without an effect, else it would be no cause. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 544 of Science and Health: "Matter cannot change the eternal fact that man exists because God exists." This is absolute safety to the one who understands it metaphysically and puts it into practice. To understand it one must understand the relation between God and man, Father and Son, Principle and idea, Mind and its expression. These terms show the inseparability of God and man. Where one is, the other is, and just as one is eternal, the other is eternal. Paul's ringing words come triumphantly to us down the centuries: "For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." In other words, the mortal sense of things cannot interfere with the fact of man's inseparability from God, or as quoted above, "Matter cannot change the eternal fact that man exists because God exists."

How can this truth be practiced so as to make it available to mankind here and now, at this time of seeming special need of safety? Through practice of the qualities which express God. If right living does not accompany understanding, then the understanding is a hollow sham, not right spiritual understanding at all. It is only by identifying oneself with man who is the reflection of God that one can claim the safety of the Son of God. He who is truthful is protected by the truth he lives, for to be truthful cuts deep down into the human sense of things. It means to exchange material thinking for spiritual understanding, to know what Life is, even when its seeming opposite is rife about one, even though the horrors of the battle field are clamorous of fear and death. It means to know the truth about man's real selfhood as image, idea, and the nothingness of the claim that it is in matter, which can be destroyed.

Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 503): "Divine Science, the Word of God, saith to the darkness upon the face of error, 'God is All-in-all,' and the light of ever-present Love illumines the universe. Hence the eternal wonder,—that infinite space is peopled with God's ideas, reflecting Him in countless spiritual forms." This being so, what is there to fear? Infinite space peopled with God's ideas! And God's ideas can only bless. If, when we are in any danger, we realize this or even do our best to realize it, we shall know that the forces of good are and have always been to the right and left of us, above and below us, and we shall realize that man is abundantly blessed and wholly safe. What else saved Daniel from the lions, preserved the three Israelite boys even in the fire, saved Noah from the flood, and David from Goliath? All down through the Bible these instances of God's protecting care stand out, beacon lights to us to-day, and God's arm is not shortened that it cannot save. Present day conditions are but the opportunity to repeat the ancient wonders, and Christian Science makes this possible to every one who will but dwell in the secret place of the Most High—the absolute knowledge that man is spiritual—and who will but practice this by living as spiritually as he can.

To do this he must learn from the Bible and Science and Health the fact that the real man, the only man, is spiritual, that his aims, ambitions, and affections are all spiritual, that he cannot be tempted by evil any more than God can be tempted. These are facts, divine facts, that can be learned here and now, facts that will uplift and bless us as we seek them and learn to dwell in this light.

Temptation is only the mist of believing evil to be real, and moral courage is potent to dispel it. Moral courage which is born of spiritual understanding does not go where it knows the temptation lies; bravado does this, and there is no spiritual power in bravado. Moral courage dares to avoid the spot where temptation would make a fool of one. Moral courage in a man will win the war for right in the streets of a large city just as much as in the front line trenches, and if he understands his true relationship to God and all that this includes, it will enable him to prove that "underneath are the everlasting arms" as much in times of fiery temptation as on the battle field.

It was the wise man who said: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter," and he then went on to sum up the gist of his preaching in a few terse words, and so, too, we might say here: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter." What is it from which we need to be saved? We need to be saved from the mistake of believing that which is not true. And what can save us from this but the understanding of that which is true? It is true that God, Life, Truth, and Love, is ever present, and that there is no other power or presence. This is divine protection and ever available. It does not lie a great way off, at the top of a ladder of spiritual attainment, or at the end of years of experience. It is true here and now and it is the right of every man who will earnestly and honestly claim it as his own.

[H. S. Hughes, Jr., in Fond du Lac (Wis.) Commonwealth]

The uncomplimentary manner in which our ministerial friend makes reference to Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, does not pass the notice of the reader who is familiar with her teaching, without recalling to mind the contrast between the reference as reported in this sermon and that made by Mrs. Eddy in 1895, when in speaking of the orthodox church she says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 111), "I love the orthodox church; and, in time, that church will love Christian Science." Even to the casual observer the question naturally arises, Why the contrast? Is it not well answered by referring to the apostle Paul's clear analysis of charity: "Charity envieth not; . . . thinketh no evil"?

The purpose of the sermon, with its eloquence and many commendable points, is sadly weakened by the satiric manner in which reference is made to a noble and world respected woman who has received recognition for doing more to uplift the weak and lonely through her teaching than has been accomplished since the master Christian, Christ Jesus, not only taught but practiced the essence of charity, love.

Answering the statement made as to the doctrine of Christian Science having been "found wanting when put to a real test," it is the test of Christian Science that its adherents invite, and which has drawn hundreds of thousands to the truth it teaches and proves by lifting the individual from a useless, unhappy, and painful existence to a happy, healthy, and useful life; from sorrow to joy; from poverty to plenty; from bondage to material laws "into the glorious liberty of the children of God;" and "by their fruits ye shall know them."

If it were a fact that the continuance of Christian Science as a religion depends upon a "lucrative field for the reader and practitioner," it is safe to say that it will forever continue, as those who receive help from the "reader and practitioner" not only are most grateful for what they receive through those channels, but are generous in their support, as they feel that what they receive is of greater value to them than the silver or gold with which they might part.

A religion that shows its faith by its works, and is adhering to the Sermon on the Mount, will stand a fair chance of being the "religion of the future."

[John M. Tutt in St. Louis (Mo.) Times]

"A Seeker After Truth" has raised the question of state regulation of the practice of Christian Science. Now there happens to be an insuperable obstacle to the plan of legal qualification for such practice, and that is the fact that Christian Science is a religion and not a system of therapeutics. It heals the sick only in pursuit of a religious office or ministry. Jesus' ability as a healer of disease was not based upon a knowledge of the theory of material medicine or upon its practice. Present day ministers of other Christian sects may not, as this critic asserts, attempt the treatment of disease without a knowledge of orthodox medical theories, but that they have divine authority for praying for the recovery of the sick, even as Christian Scientists pray, is undeniable. Their failure to obey the divine command does not properly set up a criterion for those followers of Christ who are proving their understanding of the healing method employed by the Master.

Had this "Seeker After Truth" arrived at the truth of Christian Science, he would not have referred to the healing of disease as "its most sacred performance." While Christian Science practitioners are properly devoting much effort to the healing of the sick, they are doing so incidentally to the great work of destroying all discordant conditions of mind and body by the power of God through Christ. There is, therefore, no more reason for a Christian Scientist to be a physical diagnostician than there was for Peter or Paul to be so qualified.

[Albert F. Gilmore in Buffalo (N.Y.) Express]

The gentleman from Buffalo who appears so frequently as an antagonist of the teachings of Christian Science takes occasion in a recent letter to recite from the gospels a goodly number of instances where Christ Jesus healed the sick of divers ills. He could have gone farther and recited many other cases of healing, both by the disciples and by other followers of the Master. He could have cited also the instructions to the disciples, both the twelve and the seventy, and the significant declaration in the closing verses of Mark's gospel. He could have pointed out also that so reliable a historian as Gibbon states that the healing of sickness and even raising the dead by spiritual means took place among the followers of the Christian church to the end of the third century.

The Christian Scientist believes that these instructions and precepts have a significance reaching far beyond the groups to which they were directly addressed, and that these same healing works may be produced throughout all time by all who gain an understanding of God and His Christ. "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also" is to every follower of this teaching a warrant of his faith, and his faith is justified by his works, for Christian Science healing is a fact established beyond the possibility of refutation or denial.

[Henry Van Arsdale in Santa Ana (Cal.) Register]

It is true that the teachings of Christian Science in relation to Jesus the Christ differ from the views entertained by dogmatic theology, but it is not true that these teachings are "diametrically opposed to Bible truths," as was alleged in a reported sermon. Christian Scientists worship one God. Mrs. Eddy in her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" gives as one of the important points, or religious truths of Christian Science, the following (p. 497): "We acknowledge and adore one supreme and infinite God. We acknowledge His Son, one Christ."

Christian Science accepts the Old Testament prophecies relating to the Messiah, and the gospel accounts of his birth, life, crucifixion, and resurrection. Its teaching with respect to Jesus coincides with his words and deeds and with what he taught about himself. In no instance did Jesus claim to be God. He distinctly averred that his words and his works were because of "the Father that dwelleth in me" and he further assured his followers, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Mrs. Eddy writes (Science and Health, p. 333): "The advent of Jesus of Nazareth marked the first century of the Christian era, but the Christ is without beginning of years or end of days. Throughout all generations both before and after the Christian era, the Christ, as the spiritual idea,—the reflection of God,—has come with some measure of power and grace to all prepared to receive Christ, Truth." Those who are thus prepared are receiving some measure of the power of God to-day. No person has taken, or can take, the place of Jesus in the divine plan; the perception and understanding of his life and work enables Christian Scientists to bring to the world that which the Master brought in the first century.

As part of his argument that Jesus was God, the clergyman says: "Jesus died like God." The theology that teaches that God, Spirit, the infinite, can die, or has within Himself any of the elements of destruction, is far from being Christian Science. Such doctrine cannot be found in the Bible. Jesus said that no one who believed in him and relied on his teachings would ever die, and he proved his saying for himself and for others. He knew absolutely that God is Life, and this is the emphatic doctrine of Christian Science.

Referring to people calling themselves Christian Scientists, a critic is reported to have said, "They are neither Christians nor scientists." Anyone making that statement to-day in the face of the world-wide progress Christian Science has made, has a reckless disregard of fact and the opinion of intelligent people.

It is becoming so generally evident that such statements are only a confession of lack of knowledge as to what a scientific Christianity is, that we wonder anyone ventures to make them. There is nothing in the whole of Christian Science teaching that could be considered unchristian, or that would lead to a practice contrary to Christian ethics. Furthermore, it is demonstrably scientific; and thus does Christian Science honor Christianity as no other religion honors it, by proving its precepts and teaching to be demonstrable in practice. "The facts," as Mrs. Eddy herself says (Science and Health, p. 341), "are so absolute and numerous in support of Christian Science, that misrepresentation and denunciation cannot overthrow it."

Christian Scientists usually speak of themselves in that term with meekness and becoming modesty, knowing that to live the life of a true Christian Scientist means much striving in the direction of purity, and the overcoming of all that is not Christlike. They have the grateful assurance, however, that there is enough truth revealed in Christian Science to enable them to do so successfully.

Extracts from Letters

"Four of us lieutenants in the United States Army read the Lesson-Sermon together this Sunday morning, in the quiet of a stateroom on a ship on the Atlantic Ocean. The citations were all read from books which had been especially provided for the overseas service on which we are embarked. Can you picture the scene?—four khaki-clad figures—one of the readers perched on the edge of a bunk; the others ranged about in whatever manner the little room permitted. At the finish of the reading, there was voiced the thought that we take up a collection and send the proceeds to you, to be used as you see fit; not so much for the amount as for the evidence and assurance that we think often of those who contribute in so many ways to the success of our present mission. Each of us carries a copy of the khaki-bound, pocket size edition of the textbook, and you can imagine our gratitude for it, as well as for the other writings, Bible, books, and pamphlets we have with us.

"Three of our present number met while on a pilgrimage to The Mother Church and Publishing House en route to the port of embarkation. At that time one expressed a wish that there were available a published list of students of Christian Science who are in the service. The reply came that there is no necessity for such material means of identification and association. This has been beautifully proved. Imagine our feelings when on a following Wednesday evening, in New York City, without any previously announced intention or mutual agreement, each of the three was permitted to voice a testimony, to hear those of his compatriots, and others from so-called civilian life, including one from a member of the Board of Lectureship. It may occur to you that we of the Army so travel and work under sealed orders that we seldom divulge our mission or destination to casual acquaintances, even of like service. So a fresh surprise was experienced when, once on shipboard at port of embarkation, the same members of our group were found together again. And the growth and welfare of our contingent is indicated by to-day's experience.

"What was said in grateful acknowledgment of your loving expressions to us when we were with you, is here repeated. It seems we shall be able to accomplish things, because you make of us channels of good thoughts and work. As never before, the writer feels a tangible, substantial backing of sustaining, impelling thought, for which we cease not to give thanks."

"I take this opportunity to thank you on behalf of my comrades and myself for your kindness to us in sending, week after week, that most excellent paper The Christian Science Monitor. Believe me, sir, it is greatly appreciated by us all, and we look forward to its coming. Apart from its accurate news, we enjoy the 'Home Forum' immensely."

"Take heed what ye hear"

WHEN Jesus was instructing his disciples, he gave them a reason for this admonition, "Take heed what ye hear," by saying further, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you: and unto you that hear shall more be given." If the measure of what we with desire listen to is to be continually increased, it certainly behooves us to be careful regarding what we hear. In that collection of Hebraic wisdom which is indeed wisdom for all humanity it is said: "A froward man soweth strife: and a whisperer separateth chief friends." Then one who values friendship and would keep his friends, and in order to do so would himself be a friend, must not lend his ear to the sibilant utterances of the whisperer. What is true can generally be spoken with full voice as if one expected general consent and approbation. It can at least be backed by courage and spoken in the daylight, and a man may utter it with full tones, standing face to face with his friends. But the whisperer seems to love the night and its recession from activity, when the worker is unguarded because he thinks that now his duty is over and there is no special call for him to continue thinking. The day's work ended, the curtain drawn, how easy it is for him to be a listener merely, hearing the innuendoes and hints of whispered talk, and submitting to a process of mental misguidance quite the opposite of the influence of "the spirit of wisdom and understanding." Of the divine messenger it is said: "The spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him . . . and shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears."

This, however, is something which the Christian Scientist should never do. In Job we read: "The ear trieth words, as the mouth tasteth meat. Let us choose to us judgment: let us know among ourselves what is good." So anyone who is in good mental health will naturally choose only wholesome food, and as carefully test the value of that which he listens to; but the self-satisfied saint, the Christian off guard, too often forgets the company to which the whisperer belongs, and lends his ear to his hints and arguments. Paul classifies together those who are "whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenantbreakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful."

They who love Truth are really loving true life, and they have a right to escape from what are termed "the snares of death," the subtleties of falsity and dishonor, which, like poison gas, pervert, corrupt, and destroy. Truth understood as Principle is eternal power; Love is endless beneficence, and Life enduringly unfolds good. But with all this the whisperer takes issue, making it his busy business to impregnate human minds with increasing falsity, unfaith, hatred, doubt. What saith he? Lies, of course. What power has the lie? It is just an imagination of the false heart, nothing more. The whisperer is just a lie carrier who would separate, if he could, man from God, his best friend. The proverb is surely correct which says: "Lying lips are abomination to the Lord: but they that deal truly are his delight."

Truth can be spoken as openly by man to man as by a prophet to the people. God's truth-speakers have been able to say, "The word of the Lord came unto me, saying;" and the prophetic message has delivered the hearer from fear, the city from judgment, the nation from sin; that is, more love, more truth, more life have resulted. Is it not easy to see that if whisperings come like poison gas borne on a devastating wind, causing hatred, prejudice, fear, brutal desire, this is of no heavenly origin, but rather is the blight of the pit, the smoke of the torment of "whosoever loveth and maketh a lie"?

In this blight and bale none need be involved who prays for deliverance and loves truth in his heart. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 72): "As light destroys darkness and in the place of darkness all is light, so (in absolute Science) Soul, or God, is the only truth-giver to man. Truth destroys mortality, and brings to light immortality." Is God the Lord? Is He the King omnipotent? Then within His government is all safety, all peace, all good. Our Leader has given us great assurance when in "Retrospection and Introspection" she says (p. 90): "It is safe to leave with God the government of man. He appoints and He anoints His Truth-bearers, and God is their sure defense and refuge."

The individual work, then, for each Christian Scientist to do is to evidence this government of God by himself being an inhabitant of the kingdom of heaven; that is, by maintaining the authority of Truth, Life, and Love as supreme. The psalmist indicates the right attitude when he says: "I will hear what God the Lord will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints: but let them not turn again to folly. Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him; that glory may dwell in our land." In her sermon entitled, "The People's Idea of God" (p. 5), Mrs. Eddy says: "The ideals of primitive Christianity are nigh, even at our door. Truth is not lost in the mists of remoteness or the barbarisms of spiritless codes." Expressing the desire that men should "not entertain the angel unawares," she goes on to say: "The ego is not self-existent matter animated by mind, but in itself is mind; therefore a Truth-filled mind makes a pure Christianity and a healthy mind and body."

"Lo, I am with you alway"

Is there a more comforting passage in the Bible than the one in which Christ Jesus is quoted as saying to his disciples, "Lo, I am with you alway"? The assurance contained in this statement applies to us, no matter where we are or what we are. There is always the presence of the Christ, Truth, ready to heal and save, to wipe away tears from the sorrowing, to comfort in tender compassion, to bind the broken-hearted, and bid the heavy-laden take off the yoke of bondage and fear. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks," wrote the psalmist, "so panteth my soul after thee, O God." This cry is constantly reechoed by the spiritually minded in all ages, and Spirit is always ready with its reassuring answer.

The ever present Christ gives true love to mankind, in which joy can be found in the songs of the birds, in the flowers, and in the laughter of babes at play. The gentle Christ touch of love practiced daily in all the activities of human experience will smooth out trials and give overflowing blessings, placing the song of gratitude upon the lips of those who love to serve God. Kindliness, friendliness, thoughtfulness, and unselfishness are qualities with which to clothe ourselves as with a garment of gladness, and wherewith to protect the spiritual understanding of the Christ within. With this abiding sense of present help, no one need be afraid to work in God's vineyard, or to gather the fruits of the Spirit, for the wine press gives the real inspirational understanding of Truth. Christian Scientists who have started the work in certain fields, or those who are going forth into new ones need never falter under the weight of a supposed personal responsibility when they recognize that Truth has always been present everywhere. Christian Science is already discovered and founded. The ark is safe when no hands try to steady it except the hands of God.

A darkened and perplexed world to-day needs the assurance which Christ Jesus gave to his disciples so many centuries ago. The gleams of white light can penetrate the darkest clouds, stay the blackest hands, and nullify the blackest arts. In that glorious one hundred and thirty-ninth psalm, in which the singer declares his conviction of the ever presence of the Lord, the Christ, Truth, we read: "If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there." Since hell is as truly a state of evil mind as heaven is the atmosphere of right thinking, it follows that the Christ, Truth, representing the perfection of Mind, can destroy those phases of wrong thinking which are grouped under the designation of hell. In the Glossary of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has defined hell in the following words (p. 588): "Mortal belief; error; lust; remorse; hatred; revenge; sin; sickness; death; suffering and self-destruction; self-imposed agony; effects of sin; that which 'worketh abomination or maketh a lie.'"

If, then, the Christ, Truth, is present everywhere, it follows that the soldier at the front can hear the compassionate words, "Lo, I am with you alway," in the midst of the clamor and din of war; that he can march with the ever present Christ and take his rest with him in security; that he can face the concentrated fire of hate and greed with the calmness with which Jesus commanded the storm and walked the wave.

The present conspiracy to wrest the world from God's control and place it under the heel of militancy, scholasticism, and occultism does not vary from former attempts except in intensity. The active right thinkers who dwell in comparative security behind the lines of physical warfare can rejoice with the advance guard of the army of the Lord in the ever present Christ, protecting all the activities of that army with spiritual understanding. Nothing which that army requires need fail,—food, clothing, transportation, are as truly mental concepts, and so amenable to right mental activity, as are the qualities of good cheer, endurance, steadfastness, alertness. With irresistible onward sweep, the Christ, Truth, brushes aside the contrivances of the mental assassin and plants the standard of heaven upon the rock, against which, Christ Jesus told Peter, "the gates of hell shall not prevail."

No matter how astutely intentional evil intrenches itself, burrows subterraneously, or attempts to turn the lie upon its destroyers, the ever present Christ alone has the right of way. On page 161 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," we read these words by Mrs. Eddy: "The intentional destroyer of others would destroy himself eternally, were it not that his suffering reforms him, thus balancing his account with divine Love, which never remits the sentence necessary to reclaim the sinner." Above the thunder of the guns, penetrating even the very council chamber of conspiracy against the rights of man, is heard the still, small voice of the ever present Christ, Truth, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." As we read in one of the verses of the "Mother's Evening Prayer" on page 4 of Mrs. Eddy's Poems:—

> Beneath the shadow of His mighty wing;
> In that sweet secret of the narrow way,
> Seeking and finding, with the angels sing:
> "Lo, I am with you alway,"—watch and pray.

Resurrection

IN the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel we find a strange picture, yet withal one which appeals to the deepest desire of all the human race, in that it tells in touching metaphor of the awakening of men and nations from the dream of sin and death. To many this prophecy has meant only the opening of material graves, and the rising therefrom of men long dead, but to the student of Christian Science the prophet's words have a far deeper and richer signification. On page 593 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy gives this definition of resurrection: "Spiritualization of thought; a new and higher idea of immortality, or spiritual existence; material belief yielding to spiritual understanding." Lest any should say that this is too ethereal a view of the subject in question, we need but recall the words of Christ Jesus at the tomb of Lazarus: "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

Startling words, truly, were these, spoken in answer to Martha's plaintive expression of the hope that her brother would rise from the tomb "at the last day." Well may each one ask himself, concerning the Master's ringing declaration of deathless life, the question which Jesus put to the sorrowing sister, "Believest thou this?" Here some one may say that Jesus did literally awaken Lazarus from the dream of death. True, but even this did not reach the glory of resurrection,—the awakening to the life which is life indeed, the life which knows no death. The Bible does not speak of the resurrection of Lazarus, although it does tell us that he rose from the dead; but we are told of the resurrection of Christ Jesus, which clearly means the triumph of Life over death and of Truth over error, of spiritual law over the belief that there is a material law which can cause man to be sick and die. In Christian Science the resurrection therefore means a spiritual process which begins for us when we become conscious of the mighty working of divine law in all we think and say and do. On page 34 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says: "Through all the disciples experienced, they became more spiritual and understood better what the Master had taught. His resurrection was also their resurrection. It helped them to raise themselves and others from spiritual dulness and blind belief in God into the perception of infinite possibilities."

This means much to the individual; but when we begin to see the broader application of the truth in its relation to universal humanity we are ready to grasp the wonderful teaching of Ezekiel's prophecy. In the thirty-sixth chapter we find the beginning of the spiritual awakening, the cleansing of mortals from mortal impurity and the coming to human consciousness of "a new spirit," whereby they will walk in the divine statutes and keep the divine judgments. This awakening has already come to humanity through the revelation of divine Science, as stated in the Christian Science textbook, and from this we go forward to see the rousing of men and nations from the long, dreary dream of life in matter into the understanding of life in Spirit, God. Have not many of the oppressed of earth been in the condition described by the prophet, where hope was dead, and it mattered little whether those in such a mental condition walked about the earth or were literally in their graves?

It is deeply interesting to note that again and again Ezekiel was bidden to declare the truth, to "prophesy," as this process of resurrection was going on. When the prophet was asked if the dead bones could live, he answered most sagely, "O Lord God, thou knowest." It is perfectly certain that without the recognition of spiritual power the dead bones of men and nations never could live; but when there are those with sufficient spiritual understanding to prophesy, to call upon the winds of God to come and breathe upon the sleepers, they will live. In holding to the metaphor found in this wonderful chapter we see that even after the men began to live and to stand upon their feet, more of the spirit of Truth was needed; but it was at hand, it is ever at hand; and so the reconstruction of human consciousness goes on until the cleansing is complete and the belief in materiality can no longer hold mortals down under its shadow, subject to sickness, sin, and death.

At this very hour the awakening is going on throughout all the world in a far more wonderful way than we can perceive; yet we must know that it will be carried on to completion, because the divine purpose can never be stayed or hindered by mortal belief; nor can the delusions of sorcery hold the nations any longer under the long dream of a life and a mind separate from God. As we lift up our eyes to behold the divine "covenant of peace," we grasp and hold this promise for all men and nations: "I will be their God, and they shall be my people."

Camp Welfare and War Relief Fund

IN the interest of greater efficiency, economy, and more orderly administration, the War Relief fund and the Camp Welfare fund have been consolidated. The field is familiar with the effective and far-reaching results which have been attained by means of these funds.

Hereafter the disbursement of all funds intended for either War Relief or Camp Welfare work will be undertaken by the present War Relief committees abroad and by the Camp Welfare committees in the United States, under the supervision of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

Contributions should be sent to the Treasurer of The Mother Church and designated for the Camp Welfare and War Relief fund.

Current Notes

BOSTON, U.S.A.—The Boston Y. M. C. A. not only reached its goal of $100,000 last evening [Tuesday, Jan. 29], to cancel a deficit, but went beyond, rolling up a total of $119,105.42. The largest team total was returned by team No. 13, representing the Christian Science church, its total being $13,884.55.—Boston Herald and Journal.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y.—At the annual meeting of First Church of Christ, Scientist, held February 5, the literature distribution committee reported that during the year ending January 31 there had been distributed 1579 Sentinels, 123 Journals, 28 Herolds, 4103 Monitors, 36 pamphlets, making a total of 5869 pieces.—Amsterdam Recorder.

ELKHART, IND.—The handsome new edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, at Second Street and Lexington Avenue, will be opened for regular services the first time next Sunday forenoon [Feb. 17]. Two months ago, while still unfinished, it was utilized for a Christian Science lecture, but the formal opening was delayed until the building was completed. Construction was begun in July, 1916, and progressed as steadily as it was possible to secure materials and skilled labor. The spacious auditorium seats six hundred people, and provision is made for a balcony which will accommodate two hundred more. The Sunday school room seats three hundred.—Elkhart Truth.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.—A building permit will be taken out by Second Church of Christ, Scientist, within a few days [Jan. 14] for the erection of an edifice at the corner of Thirty-third Street and Third Avenue, in Oak Park, to cost ten thousand dollars, exclusive of the pews in the auditorium, which will cost an additional fifteen hundred dollars. The building, which will have a frontage of seventy-two feet and a depth of eighty feet, is to be a frame structure, finished in stucco. The auditorium will seat four hundred people, and the balcony two hundred.—Sacramento Bee.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—Papers were passed yesterday [Jan. 25] transferring to First Church of Christ, Scientist, the Glover estate at the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and Waterhouse Street, where the church will erect an edifice for its own use. This church has, since its organization in 1899, held its services in Brattle Hall. The new site is particularly well adapted to the needs of the church. The property contains more than seventy-five hundred square feet of land, together with a three-story, eighteen-room frame house, the whole being assessed for $20,500. Overlooking Cambridge Common and in close proximity to the colleges and other public buildings, and bounded by three public streets (Massachusetts Avenue, Waterhouse and Follen Streets), it is difficult to see how a better site could have been obtained.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

The Lectures

BOSTON, U.S.A. (The Mother Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

Whether people know enough of Christian Science to interest themselves in the study of it, or whether they are mere observers (indifferent or otherwise) of its great works, they all practically agree that by means of Christian Science an element of joy and confidence is introduced into human lives and living. The casual observer cannot know exactly why this is so. If he would know, he must cease to be casual in his observations, and become interested and sincere, even to the point of thorough investigation. Then he will understand more clearly what Christian Science is doing for the world, and, better still, why it is doing it.

Our lecturer this evening has had long experience in the precept and practice of scientific Christianity. He comes to tell us something of the Principle and rule which, in the measure that they are understood, constitute a demonstrable knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If any of you here to-night have not previously known of Christian Science, if any of you have come in tribulation and fear, or suffering with disease, or subject to vice and sin, you will here learn how you may take the first effectual steps to overcome any or all of those undesirable or afflictive human experiences, and possibly, through careful and prayerful attention, you may grasp some of the deeper meanings of the profound facts here set forth, and experience the immediate joy of improved health and morals, as a result of your attendance at this lecture.—The Christian Science Monitor.

ANN ARBOR, MICH. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Olaf N. Dybvig, who said in part:—

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." To acquire a scientific understanding of Jesus' teaching, or to interpret aright the message he brought, would seem then to be the one important work before us. Christian Science makes Jesus' mission clear and brings to us the truth about God and our relationship to Him. As we progress in the study of this Science, and the error of former beliefs becomes apparent, we as Christian Scientists are truly grateful to Mrs. Eddy, the one we lovingly call our Leader, for the great help her writings and example are to us as we try to comply with Paul's counsel, "Work out your own salvation."

ALBANY, ORE. (Society).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Hattie I. Parrish, who said in part:—

Christian Science is both a practical and a satisfying religion. It teaches its students to know God and gives to them an understanding of that fundamental law, the law of God, upon which Jesus based his demonstrations, thereby enabling them to emulate the Master's works in healing the sick and casting out error of every sort. Thus Christianity is being presented to-day, as in the early Christian era, with "signs following," giving incontrovertible evidence that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It needs only to be demonstrated.

CHICAGO, ILL. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Milton B. Marks, who said in part:—

The sick who in Jesus' time sought the blessing of that compassion which resulted from his perfect understanding of God, certainly gained with their healing some consciousness of heaven. Through the understanding of Christian Science many are to-day enjoying similar experiences.

matter into the understanding of life in Spirit, God. Have not many of the oppressed of earth been in the condition described by the prophet, where hope was dead, and it mattered little whether those in such a mental condition walked about the earth or were literally in their graves?

It is deeply interesting to note that again and again Ezekiel was bidden to declare the truth, to "prophesy," as this process of resurrection was going on. When the prophet was asked if the dead bones could live, he answered most sagely, "O Lord God, thou knowest." It is perfectly certain that without the recognition of spiritual power the dead bones of men and nations never could live; but when there are those with sufficient spiritual understanding to prophesy, to call upon the winds of God to come and breathe upon the sleepers, they will live. In holding to the metaphor found in this wonderful chapter we see that even after the men began to live and to stand upon their feet, more of the spirit of Truth was needed; but it was at hand, it is ever at hand; and so the reconstruction of human consciousness goes on until the cleansing is complete and the belief in materiality can no longer hold mortals down under its shadow, subject to sickness, sin, and death.

At this very hour the awakening is going on throughout all the world in a far more wonderful way than we can perceive; yet we must know that it will be carried on to completion, because the divine purpose can never be stayed or hindered by mortal belief; nor can the delusions of sorcery hold the nations any longer under the long dream of a life and a mind separate from God. As we lift up our eyes to behold the divine "covenant of peace," we grasp and hold this promise for all men and nations: "I will be their God, and they shall be my people."

Camp Welfare and War Relief Fund

IN the interest of greater efficiency, economy, and more orderly administration, the War Relief fund and the Camp Welfare fund have been consolidated. The field is familiar with the effective and far-reaching results which have been attained by means of these funds.

Hereafter the disbursement of all funds intended for either War Relief or Camp Welfare work will be undertaken by the present War Relief committees abroad and by the Camp Welfare committees in the United States, under the supervision of The Christian Science Board of Directors.

Contributions should be sent to the Treasurer of The Mother Church and designated for the Camp Welfare and War Relief fund.

Current Notes

BOSTON, U.S.A.—The Boston Y. M. C. A. not only reached its goal of $100,000 last evening [Tuesday, Jan. 29], to cancel a deficit, but went beyond, rolling up a total of $119,105.42. The largest team total was returned by team No. 13, representing the Christian Science church, its total being $13,884.55.—Boston Herald and Journal.

AMSTERDAM, N. Y.—At the annual meeting of First Church of Christ, Scientist, held February 5, the literature distribution committee reported that during the year ending January 31 there had been distributed 1579 Sentinels, 123 Journals, 28 Heralds, 4103 Monitors, 36 pamphlets, making a total of 5869 pieces.—Amsterdam Recorder.

ELKHART, IND.—The handsome new edifice of First Church of Christ, Scientist, at Second Street and Lexington Avenue, will be opened for regular services the first time next Sunday forenoon [Feb. 17]. Two months ago, while still unfinished, it was utilized for a Christian Science lecture, but the formal opening was delayed until the building was completed. Construction was begun in July, 1916, and progressed as steadily as it was possible to secure materials and skilled labor. The spacious auditorium seats six hundred people, and provision is made for a balcony which will accommodate two hundred more. The Sunday school room seats three hundred.—Elkhart Truth.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.—A building permit will be taken out by Second Church of Christ, Scientist, within a few days [Jan. 14] for the erection of an edifice at the corner of Thirty-third Street and Third Avenue, in Oak Park, to cost ten thousand dollars, exclusive of the pews in the auditorium, which will cost an additional fifteen hundred dollars. The building, which will have a frontage of seventy-two feet and a depth of eighty feet, is to be a frame structure, finished in stucco. The auditorium will seat four hundred people, and the balcony two hundred.—Sacramento Bee.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—Papers were passed yesterday [Jan. 25] transferring to First Church of Christ, Scientist, the Glover estate at the corner of Massachusetts Avenue and Waterhouse Street, where the church will erect an edifice for its own use. This church has, since its organization in 1899, held its services in Brattle Hall. The new site is particularly well adapted to the needs of the church. The property contains more than seventy-five hundred square feet of land, together with a three-story, eighteen-room frame house, the whole being assessed for $20,500. Overlooking Cambridge Common and in close proximity to the colleges and other public buildings, and bounded by three public streets (Massachusetts Avenue, Waterhouse and Follen Streets), it is difficult to see how a better site could have been obtained.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

The Lectures

BOSTON, U.S.A. (The Mother Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

Whether people know enough of Christian Science to interest themselves in the study of it, or whether they are mere observers (indifferent or otherwise) of its great works, they all practically agree that by means of Christian Science an element of joy and confidence is introduced into human lives and living. The casual observer cannot know exactly why this is so. If he would know, he must cease to be casual in his observations, and become interested and sincere, even to the point of thorough investigation. Then he will understand more clearly what Christian Science is doing for the world, and, better still, why it is doing it.

Our lecturer this evening has had long experience in the precept and practice of scientific Christianity. He comes to tell us something of the Principle and rule which, in the measure that they are understood, constitute a demonstrable knowledge of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If any of you here to-night have not previously known of Christian Science, if any of you have come in tribulation and fear, or suffering with disease, or subject to vice and sin, you will here learn how you may take the first effectual steps to overcome any or all of those undesirable or afflictive human experiences, and possibly, through careful and prayerful attention, you may grasp some of the deeper meanings of the profound facts here set forth, and experience the immediate joy of improved health and morals, as a result of your attendance at this lecture.—The Christian Science Monitor.

ANN ARBOR, MICH. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Olaf N. Dybvig, who said in part:—

Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." To acquire a scientific understanding of Jesus' teaching, or to interpret aright the message he brought, would seem then to be the one important work before us. Christian Science makes Jesus' mission clear and brings to us the truth about God and our relationship to Him. As we progress in the study of this Science, and the error of former beliefs becomes apparent, we as Christian Scientists are truly grateful to Mrs. Eddy, the one we lovingly call our Leader, for the great help her writings and example are to us as we try to comply with Paul's counsel, "Work out your own salvation."

ALBANY, ORE. (Society).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Hattie I. Parrish, who said in part:—

Christian Science is both a practical and a satisfying religion. It teaches its students to know God and gives to them an understanding of that fundamental law, the law of God, upon which Jesus based his demonstrations, thereby enabling them to emulate the Master's works in healing the sick and casting out error of every sort. Thus Christianity is being presented to-day, as in the early Christian era, with "signs following," giving incontrovertible evidence that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It needs only to be demonstrated.

CHICAGO, ILL. (First Church).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Milton B. Marks, who said in part:—

The sick who in Jesus' time sought the blessing of that compassion which resulted from his perfect understanding of God, certainly gained with their healing some consciousness of heaven. Through the understanding of Christian Science many are to-day enjoying similar experiences.

Testimonies of Healing

It is with deep gratitude for the many blessings received from Christian Science that I give this testimony. I heard of this teaching for the first time about ten years ago from a lady who was a Christian Scientist. She translated from Science and Health several passages which were very helpful to me. At that time, although an ardent Protestant, I was not satisfied with what my religion taught me. Something was lacking, and this something was precisely the spiritual understanding of the Bible which Mrs. Eddy gives us in her beautiful book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

Soon after this I came to live in the neighborhood of Paris, where I learned with the greatest happiness, for I knew but little English, that Christian Science services in French were being held every Sunday. These services have been and are to me a source of spiritual joy and development. I started to study the Bible seriously and tried to translate Science and Health with the aid of a dictionary, and with the help of a kind practitioner I made appreciable progress in understanding the truth. I had many demonstrations of God's ever presence in the course of painful experiences with which I was faced, and my life has been gradually made harmonious. I learned to say, "Thy will be done;" I had not understood the real meaning of these words before. Human sense would make me say concerning my future: I shall do this, or I shall go there. I made plans. Now I leave the way clear for God, knowing that He is lovingly leading me toward ever increasing good. From a financial viewpoint I have also had numerous proofs of the love of God. My money matters, which were in a difficult state, have been improved by the coming of unexpected help.

Knowing that reform is the principal thing in Christian Science, I try to know myself, and to a large extent have been able to overcome irritation and impatience, which were injurious to the harmony of my existence. My greatest desire is to put into practice in my daily life, as faithfully as possible, the golden rule, knowing that sin and sickness must be deprived of their imaginary power and must return to nothingness, since God is omnipresent, omnipotent, omniscient.

I thank God each day for His many blessings, for the great joy of knowing the truth, and my gratitude to our dear Leader is very deep, for by her indefatigable toil and great love she has shown the road we must follow.

MRS. L. BRUCHON, Paris, France.

About nine years ago I was divinely led to take up the study of Christian Science at a time when I needed it badly. Although two friends had mentioned the subject, neither of them Christian Scientists, it failed to interest me. Later on I read a long review of a book on Mrs. Eddy which rather opened my eyes, and having a case of illness in the house at the time I was impressed with the impotence of materia medica. Soon after this I seemed to get into a bad state of health and all the usual remedies failed. I finally consulted a physician, who put me on a strict course of diet and drugs, but after following his advice for many weeks I was no better. I then found Science and Health at the local library and took it out, without realizing what it was or what it would mean to me. As I studied its pages I seemed to recognize that it was the truth, and gradually, as spiritual light dawned in my consciousness, the dark images of mortal thought gave way. Physical ailments, such as chronic liver trouble, stomach disorder, and catarrh, disappeared, and a distinct improvement in sight enabled me to give up glasses which had been worn for over twenty years. I had been much addicted to the use of tobacco, and although often advised to smoke less had never been able to do so; but shortly after taking up Christian Science I simply lost all desire for smoking and have been free from the habit ever since.

Since my healing I have enjoyed much better health than during any similar period of years in the past. More than all, however, I value the spiritual light which Christian Science has shed on the Bible; although I had always received help from its study it has become far more to me now—a veritable chart of life. Mrs. Eddy has indeed shown us how to prove the Bible to be true. I am also very grateful for the help and kindness received from Christian Scientists in the early stages of my journey from sense to Soul, and for the great help I have found in all our literature. Like St. Paul I can still say that "I press toward the mark," knowing that as I continue in this, more freedom will be realized in all ways and even greater blessings demonstrated. It is difficult to find words to express my deep gratitude for the manifold blessings which Christian Science has brought into my life; nothing else is comparable to its priceless value.

ARTHUR W. DUNN, Wimbledon, Surrey, England.

It is over eleven years since the healing truth came to me, at a time when I was very miserable both physically and mentally. Having no hope in medicine I turned to Christian Science for help, and through the ministry of a practitioner was soon in normal health again. This happened while I was still in the United States, just before my return to Sweden. I had not much knowledge of Christian Science when I left for home; all I knew was that I had been healed. I never forgot the wonderful help I had received, but did not dream of there being any Christian Scientists in Sweden, so always longed to go back to the United States to learn more about this teaching. About a year ago I prayed that God in some way would lead me to an understanding of the truth, and He answered my prayer, for soon He sent to my own home a Christian Scientist. How happy I was when my prayer was answered! Now I study the Lesson-Sermons faithfully and am very much helped by them. Best of all, I have come to love and understand the Bible, which had been a closed book to me. I know that I have found God, and my gratitude for Mrs. Eddy's teachings is unbounded.

MRS. ANNA LUNDVALL, Ostersund, Sweden.

Eighteen years ago, while living in a small western town, I first heard of Christian Science. A copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" was loaned me and I began to read it. I could readily accept the teaching that God is Love, and the chapter on Prayer seemed most wonderful to me, for I had always longed to know how to pray aright; but I could not understand how one could be healed without material remedies, because I believed that God made the herbs and things that go to make up medicines and meant them for such use. My husband seemed very much interested in this teaching, and after six months of reading the literature and attending a church that had been established we were asked to become members and did so. That we were not ready to become Christian Scientists even in name I was soon to find out, for when my husband passed away quite suddenly a few months later, I did not know how to look to God for help and comfort. Still for two years I kept on reading the textbook.

Misfortune overtook me when I began to read literature which claimed to be Christian Science, but which antagonized me so bitterly against this religion and against Mrs. Eddy that I would not read Science and Health; yet I never put it out of my sight; I just stopped reading. Then I married again. My husband's work took him about a good deal, and as I always went with him I almost forgot about the book. I would place it in my traveling bag, but never opened it or read it. About twelve years later, when living in Philadelphia permanently, I said to my husband one Wednesday evening, "Let us go to church to-night." We did so, and what we heard impressed us so much that we have been attending the services ever since. After nearly three years of earnest study we became members, and the blessings that have come to us in the past six years have been numerous. I have been healed of bronchial trouble and asthma (supposedly inherited), chronic sore throat, and severe headaches for which I had been taking liberal doses of morphine. I have also been healed of a badly injured ankle, so that I can now walk for miles, whereas I could not walk two squares or stand for any length of time. My husband has been healed of biliousness, hay fever, and the liquor habit. Our little girl has never tasted medicine, and quite readily responds to treatment. We are very grateful for the privilege she has of going to the Christian Science Sunday school.

We are deeply grateful for the spiritual understanding of the Bible gained through the study of our textbook, and our one aim is to have that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." I am especially thankful to God for giving us Mrs. Eddy, whose name I now deeply love and revere.

MRS. IDA M. MÜHE, Philadelphia, Pa.

I can cheerfully verify the statements made in my wife's testimony, as her healing has been permanent. Christian Science has indeed been a blessing in our home, and I have had many proofs of the power of Truth to heal. It is impossible to express our thankfulness to God and our gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for Christian Science.—J. S. MÜHE.

I feel truly thankful for the blessings that have come to me through Christian Science. For years I was treated by doctors, who said I had an abnormal growth, female trouble, and other ailments—everything that flesh was heir to, I thought. There was said to be only one hope of relief for me, an operation, and to that I could not consent. I shall never forget the friend who then told me of the truth that makes free. She left her copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" with me, and I have since procured one for myself. I study it constantly, and oh, what a joy it has been! I am now enjoying the best of health and can do all my housework.

I cannot find words to express my gratitude to God, also to Mrs. Eddy, for the help I have had in Christian Science. May this testimony lead some one else to find the bright side of life.—MRS. N. E. FLYNT, Cobham, Va.

At the solicitation of my sister I first visited a Christian Science church in July, 1914, and during the service it seemed to me as though I became conscious of the presence of divine Love, this feeling being manifest during the silent prayer, in which I took part. When I heard testimonies given by those who had been healed through the power of Truth I began to believe there was salvation and healing for me also. As a result of my study and practice of Christian Science, despondency was replaced with hope and ambition, soon followed by healing and benefit to me in my everyday life and business—all of which came in response to prayer and thanksgiving.

When twelve years of age, while at school one day, I was stricken with blindness, but at the end of four days the sight of the right eye returned, at times weak and at times strong. The left eye remained blind until eighteen months ago, when I began to see what was going on at the left side of me. I can now read my watch with ease by closing the other eye. The right eye is perfectly strong also. It is marvelous to be the recipient of such a bounty, Christ-given. In 1909 I had two opticians of this city examine my eyes with a view to having glasses made to preserve what sight there was. One of them told me there was no hope and advised me to go on as I was; the other said he might produce sight gradually by a system of lenses changed from time to time. With that hope I had the glasses made, but I had no result from them and gave up in despair. At a recent examination for the engineers' corps my vision was placed on record as follows: vision of right eye 20-20, or normal; left eye 20-40, or sight enough to pass. I am not wearing glasses and have proved that I do not need them.

I can gratefully say it was through the instrumentality of Mrs. Eddy's discovery of Christian Science that this demonstration was made. With my peace of mind restored I can live for the honor and glory of God and of Christian Science.—R. H. FALLMER, Oakland, Cal.

For some time I have felt that it was my duty to testify to the wonderful healing of my eye through Christian Science. Material means had been used for some time and I also wore glasses, but the condition became worse. Four years ago, however, it was entirely overcome through the loving help of a faithful practitioner, and there has never been any return of the trouble. I have done the finest kind of work and read a good deal—all without glasses. A serious case of kidney trouble and rheumatism was entirely overcome by the help of the same practitioner. The doctor said I no doubt would be subject to it all winter, as I had come from California to the East for a year, but I go out on the coldest days and am not affected in the least. I am stronger and healthier now than for years.

For these healings and many others I am truly thankful to God, the giver of all good. I am also grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for her wonderful statements of Truth, and to all those who have helped me in any way to an understanding of Christian Science, whereby we gain peace.

MRS. MINNIE SHARPE, Wheeler, Mich.

About six years ago I found myself with a skin disease which appeared on my hands and was very annoying. My home physician, after prescribing for it a little while, advised me to consult a specialist. I did so, and my hands were then treated under electric light rays, as the doctor stated that the tissues of the skin would not mend otherwise. Off and on for two years and a half these treatments were taken up. To my inquiry as to how long I would be in that condition I received the answer that there was no way of telling. From time to time the skin would come together, but it would soon be all open again.

Through friends I had visited one of the Christian Science churches, and in the spring of 1913 I bought my wife a copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I liked the services very much, but, although I had heard from people who had been healed,

Digitized by Google

I could not see where this would apply to my case. My wife, however, asked me if I would not like to read the book I had given her, and during the fall of that year I commenced reading it. As my hands were bandaged, I would read in bed every evening. Then one evening I took the bandages off and discarded all the medicines, being satisfied that I could be healed through Christian Science. My joy on realizing this truth could not be expressed; I gave thanks to God for this wonderful blessing, and in a very short time my hands were healed. I have been greatly benefited by the overcoming of this condition and of other errors through the power of God, and will never be able sufficiently to express in words my gratitude to Jesus the Wayshower and to Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

I am now building on the rock of spiritual understanding through the study of Science and Health, and am striving daily to follow the example of the Master. My desire is to prove my gratitude to our Leader for the uplifting thoughts her writings have brought me by giving this healing message to others so that they may reap the benefit of the truth that makes free. I am very grateful for our literature, which is a daily source of inspiration, also for class instruction.—WILLIAM BLEESING, Chicago, Ill.

For more than ten years I had a growth in my nose which almost closed one nostril. Physicians had told me I did not get enough air to my lungs on account of it and must have an operation, but I had postponed it from time to time. One night while lying in bed thinking I could no longer endure the misery caused by this obstruction, it suddenly occurred to me that I might have Christian Science treatment for its removal. I had only recently taken up the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy and longed for a proof of God's healing power, so I said to myself: "Yes, that is what I shall do. I will see a practitioner and be healed, for all things are possible with God. He is my life." Imagine my surprise when I discovered, as I repeated these words, that the growth, which had always been hard, began to get soft and in a few seconds was entirely gone, leaving the once diseased nostril perfectly normal. I thought I must be dreaming, so jumped out of bed, turned on the light, and called my sister, who was sleeping in an adjoining room. Upon examination I found I was not mistaken, for the growth had disappeared. My breathing was normal, and no surgeon could have done the work so well, for there was no soreness, nor were there any of the symptoms which usually follow man's work. I could hardly believe that God had done this for me, instead of through a practitioner, as I had expected. I want every one to know that He is as available to-day as when Christ Jesus was upon earth. I am thankful to God for my experience.

MRS. E. M. DAVIS, New York, N. Y.

I first asked for Christian Science treatment about eight years ago. For several weeks I had spent much time with my sister, who had a severe attack of typhoid fever. As she began to convalesce I began to have all the symptoms of the disease. The physician in attendance said he would do what he could to prevent its development but feared it was too far advanced. I took his medicine for a week but was getting worse daily, and when Christian Science was recommended to me I decided it could at least do me no harm. I knew nothing of its teachings, but in a week's treatment all traces of the fever disappeared. I also laid aside glasses, after having worn them constantly for fifteen years and having been told by oculists that I should have to wear them always. I have never had them on since and can see better than I formerly could with them.

While quite willing to attribute the healing to Christian Science, I was unwilling to give up the church I had attended since childhood. About two years later, when a difficulty from which I had suffered for years became aggravated and the physicians said my only hope was a second operation, Christian Science was again presented to me. I had made partial arrangements to go to the hospital, and thought I was entirely too sick for it to help me this time, but upon being reminded that a former operation for this same trouble had given only temporary relief, and that I had experienced the healing power of Truth two years before, I decided to ask for treatment. This time the healing was not accomplished so quickly and there were many days of doubt and fear as well as long nights of suffering, yet I persevered and at the end of six weeks was entirely healed.

During this time I learned that not all the work rests with the practitioner, but that the patient too has a part to take. I remember one day especially. After leaving the practitioner's office I went to the reading room, and although my back ached terribly I sat and read for three hours. What I was reading in Science and Health was all new to me and different from what I had always believed, and in trying to figure out how the statements about perfect man could possibly apply to one in my condition, I forgot the suffering, and when I got up to go it had entirely left me. For years I had been unable to do anything that called for physical strength, but now I am able to do whatever I want to do and experience no ill effects.

I have relied on Christian Science for six years and have had a number of physical healings, for which I am grateful, but my gratitude is even deeper for the understanding of God as an ever present help in our everyday lives.

MRS. MARIAN CAMPBELL, Tulsa, Okla.

After eleven years of practical proof of the healing power of Truth, I wish to give my testimony of love and gratitude. I was in a miserable physical condition and in an even more helpless state mentally when I turned to Christian Science, being overcome with grief at the passing on of my baby. Turning away from God, or what I had been taught to believe God is, I refused to be comforted. I was on the verge of a nervous breakdown, was unfit for work, and cared little whether I lived or died; I could not think of God as loving, or even as just.

One day a message of Truth and Love came to me; the still, small voice told me to open my Bible. I obeyed, and opened at the New Testament. There I saw what I had never seen before, although I had read the Bible and attended church and Sunday school all my life; I saw where Jesus made it clear that he healed the sick through the power of God. The angel whisper said that what God did then He does now, and that Jesus had shown us the way. I listened and rejoiced, and when my husband came to dinner I told him of this message of Truth. His reply was, "I think the healing will be done that way sometime;" yet even then it was knocking at my door. I lived in this new found truth for days, and then was led to get some Christian Science literature to read, although I knew nothing of this teaching. The literature appealed to me as the most beautiful I had ever read, and my next desire was for the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I felt a great longing for this key to unlock the Bible for me. A copy was loaned to me and I spent hours studying one page, striving to understand its teachings, with the result that my efforts were blessed, for in a short time I found myself mentally and physically well and happy.

I was healed of lung trouble which had produced a racking cough, also of chronic headaches and other ills. Truth has been our only physician in the past eleven years. Through the understanding gained in Christian Science my husband overcame appendicitis in its worst form, and every ailment of the family has yielded to the power of Truth, including acute lung trouble, tonsillitis, fever, and coughs. Demonstrations have been made over the sense of financial limitation, and above all, Christian Science has brought more love, joy, and happiness into our home. We have indeed found that, as our Leader says, "the Bible contains the recipe for all healing" (Science and Health, p. 406). Words cannot express our gratitude, but our prayer is to live this truth so that our light may shine and so help others on the journey from sense to Soul.

MRS. HATTIE PAUL, Princeton, Ind.

I am very grateful for all the benefits we have received from the study of Christian Science. I turned to this religion when in great need, after all else had failed to give me strength and health. Most of that last year I had spent in bed, suffering from a complication of diseases caused by childbirth. During that time I underwent a serious surgical operation, the second I had undergone, but did not get much relief. I had anæmia quite badly, and my eyes had caused lots of suffering. Even with strong glasses I could read only a few lines at a time. Having gained very little during the six months following the operation, I began to study Science and Health very earnestly, thinking it was my only help. As I read, peace came to me, and all the discords vanished within two weeks. Then I took off my glasses, which two specialists had said I could never do without, and I have never had any need of them since. I am stronger and happier than ever before.

The birth of our last child, two years ago, was an occasion of joy and thanksgiving. I was up nearly all the third day and from the fourth day took all the care of him. He is a strong and happy child. When he was just learning to walk he fell, striking his head just above the temple and making a deep gash. I sent word to his father, who is also studying Christian Science, and in five minutes the baby was playing the same as usual. Although the wound bled for quite a while, he never in any way acted as though it pained him, and in a week it was entirely healed.

Burns have also been overcome quickly. The baby once burned the back of his hand, but I declared the truth for him and he stopped crying almost immediately. My five-year-old daughter let some boiling water go all over one hand. I declared that no accident could happen to God's child and also read to her, with the result that in a short time she was playing as usual with no mark on her hand at all. Words cannot express my thankfulness to God for the many demonstrations we have had, and I am very grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who so lovingly has shown us the way.

MRS. AGNES L. HERRICK, Gales Creek, Ore.

I am very grateful that I have found Christian Science, as it is the religion for which I have been looking all my life. I had always believed in a God who was good and just and had nothing to do with the wrong and injustice of the world, but I was not able to find out what could be done to lighten the burden. I did not attend any church until I heard of Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy says in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 390), "It is our ignorance of God, the divine Principle, which produces apparent discord, and the right understanding of Him restores harmony." It is for this right understanding of God and His laws as revealed in Christian Science that I am most grateful, also for the knowledge that there is no trouble, no sorrow, no difficulty so great that it cannot be overcome.

Before hearing of Christian Science I had suffered for some years from so-called gastric ulcers and dilatation of the stomach. I had tried a great many different treatments, including electric treatment and a stomach pump, and though slight relief was obtained for a time the trouble always came back again. Several doctors were consulted. One advised an operation, and another said I should always have to lead a very quiet life. I never felt really well, and hardly knew what it was to be anything but tired, until after I took up the study of Christian Science. First the tiredness was overcome, so that I could lead an active life and do anything I wanted to do, and later I was completely healed of the other trouble. I am now leading a very active life and am perfectly strong and well in every way. Christian Science brings fresh blessings into my life every day and I can find no words to express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy.

MISS HELEN BROWN, London, England.

While living in Pomona, California, about nine years ago, I had whooping cough, followed by bronchial asthma in a most distressing form. I took all kinds of medicine, anything that was heard of as I traveled through the Southwest, trying to find some place where I could get relief. Physicians told me there was little use for me to take medicine, and I got only the merest temporary relief. I had become so weak and run down that I was hardly able to travel, or to attend to business when at home, and spent a great deal of the time sick in bed. I was, indeed, sorely in need of help from some source.

Finally, in March, 1912, through the earnest solicitations of a friend, I commenced taking Christian Science treatment. I did not expect any change in my condition and told the practitioner so at the start, but after three treatments, tobacco, which I had used for thirty years, became so repulsive to me that I laid it aside and have not used it since. This I considered nothing less than a miracle. The treatments were continued for a month, when I was so much improved that I came home to Colorado. I am enjoying good health and am able to work every day. The asthmatic condition is greatly improved, and much of the time I am entirely free from it. Other ailments of long standing have entirely disappeared. I am giving this testimony in the hope that some one may be induced thereby to turn to Christian Science.—FRED C. JAQUETTE, Grand Junction, Col.

I feel it both a duty and a privilege to add my testimony to that of the thousands who have received healing and other blessings through Christian Science. My little girl was in bed for six weeks suffering from hemorrhage of the stomach and bowels, so ill that she could not turn on her side. At last I asked a Christian Science practitioner to treat her and she was soon healed. She is well, and able to go anywhere. I hope this testimony will help others to know that there is help for them. I am more than thankful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for discovering and proving for us this beautiful truth that is helping so many.

From the Press

[Translated from L'Écho des Gourbis, the Newspaper of the Trenches]

The Americans are sending to us soldiers, war material, ammunition, provisions of every kind. It seems that they are also sending us missionaries. For some time now we have been receiving parcels of pamphlets, very well edited, and addressed to the heads of sections, particularly (by what curious choice) to the adjutants. In the last that we received there were ten pamphlets, and here are some of the titles: "Prayer and Healing;" "Christian Science: The Comforter of Promise;" "Christian Science: A Religion of Progress;" "Mary Baker Eddy: Her Purpose and Accomplishment;" "Christian Science: The Gospel of the Kingdom;" "Christian Science: Its Advantage to Mankind." The text is in English on one page and French on the opposite page. The covers bear the word "French."

These pamphlets are sent out, so its followers say, if not to initiate us into a new religion, at any rate to initiate us into a new way of understanding religion.

Our reading of the pamphlets seems to show that the result of the study of Christian Science and of its understanding, which somewhat resembles a revelation, is that one can follow the very example of the Christ and overcome evil, pain, woe, and sickness; for one must not forget that the Christ and even his disciples were healers and therapeutists, and that in healing the soul they also effectually healed the body. We learn that the Christian Scientists have a free reading room at 194 rue de Rivoli, in the heart of Paris, and also have some newspapers and numerous periodicals, nearly all founded by Mary Baker Eddy.

If Christian Science heals woe, sicknesses, and perhaps wounds, it will not fail, alas, in these times and in our country, to find opportunity for exercising its beneficence. It becomes us, however, to welcome with deference, so it seems at the first glance, these manifestations from people who surprise us, but who seem to be sincere and good.

[The Universalist Leader]

Your job may be little and mean, and may not seem to you worth while, but it is bound to be worth while, no matter how small it be, if it is so perfectly done that it fits into the wonderful plan of God.

[A. E. Garvie, M.A., D.D., in The Constructive Quarterly]

Christianity is no less a morality than a religion; it is as ethical as it is spiritual, for its God is both absolute and perfect.

French Translation of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures by Mary Baker Eddy

In conformity to the rules established by Mary Baker Eddy for making and publishing translations of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," has been translated into French, and is now published with the English text opposite the French translation.

This edition is bound in cloth similar to the cover used on the English editions. Price, one to five copies, $3.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $3.25 each. It is also printed on Oxford India Bible paper, and bound in the same style as the regular pocket edition of Science and Health. Price, one to five copies, $5.50 each; six or more copies to one address, $5.25 each. The quantity price will be made on six or more books of the French translation, including the two styles of bindings.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, occupy the minimum space, and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Vest Pocket Pamphlet

The article "Possession," by Adam H. Dickey, has been reprinted in a pamphlet, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at four cents a copy.

From The Christian Science Board of Directors

All correspondence intended for The Christian Science Board of Directors should be addressed to the Board at 105 Falmouth Street, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts, and not to individuals.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

"Truth in Advertising"

When Mrs. Eddy established THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR "to spread undivided the Science that operates unspent" (The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, page 353), the fact became readily apparent that, to be a complete newspaper, the MONITOR must publish advertisements of legitimate business institutions as well as truthful and comprehensive news of world events.

From the moment this great commercial force called "Advertising" was thus brought to the special attention of Christian Scientists as one of the branches of business activity demanding their thought and consideration, there has been a more marked appreciation among them of the importance of legitimate advertising and of its metaphysical significance. At the same time there has developed a noticeably higher tone not only in advertising methods particularly but in those lines of business generally which employ advertising. The few items below graphically illustrate these points:

From a Girl's Camp in Maine:

"I cannot give you any one reason why we use The Christian Science Monitor, but rather a combination of reasons. One reason is that while we do not know enough of Christian Science to be able to discuss it intelligently, yet we find ourselves in sympathy with many of its precepts. Another reason is that we have a great admiration for the Monitor as a paper.

"I do not know of another paper in the United States whose columns are so clean and wholesome, so free from trash and slush. I would like to help it in any way I can, irrespective of creed. Another reason is that I have been advertising in many papers for several years, and the Monitor has invariably placed me in touch with the most intelligent and honorable people.

"Any one of these reasons would be sufficient to justify my patronage."

From a Reader in Connecticut:

"During the past month I have been reading with deep interest various articles which have appeared in the Christian Science publications on the subject of 'Advertising.' I refer especially to the Sentinel of August 25, 'Truth in Advertising'; and to the cover of the Sentinel of September 22. As a result of this careful reading I sent an advertisement to the Monitor."

A Western Advertiser writes:

"It is indeed a pleasure to advertise in the Monitor, as the many readers who have bought our product through the advertisement have been so loyal to their paper and to us that they have written us many testimonial letters. We have never had any such response from our other advertising mediums."

President of a Colorado concern:

"I simply want to address a short letter to you expressing my appreciation of the use of the inside back cover of the Sentinel in the short but illuminating articles that have appeared there. One in particular appealed to me, that in the issue of September 22 on 'Advertising,' which gave me such a clear idea of this subject, especially in its metaphysical aspects. It gave me a clearer idea than ever before of what I am trying to accomplish in the comparatively small local campaign that I am carrying on here."

A Monitor Representative says:

"The running of the feature page in the Sentinel of a few weeks ago, 'Counting Blessings,' as stated in the report from our London advertising representative, was the means of interesting the proprietor of the ——— in the possibilities of international advertising for his concern, and we are now running a few good-sized advertisements for them."

A Monitor Solicitor reports:

"A gentleman said in August that he had an advertisement of some houses for the Monitor, but when I called the advertising was not ready, and although I called every week, obtained no advertising. This week when I called he had the advertising ready and paid for it. Before I left he called me aside and said that the reason he was advertising in the Monitor was because he had read the article on the back inside cover page of the Sentinel about subscribers, and that placing his advertisement was the part he could take as a subscriber."

A California Reader:

"The study of advertising is deeply interesting to me; therefore the advertisements in the Monitor are read and thought over; also the inside back page of the Sentinel, advertising the Monitor, appeals to me greatly. To be able to get a higher concept of 'Circulation,' for instance, is very inspiring; and the question 'Can Truth Grow Old?' opens up a new avenue of thought to the writer of advertising who fears that only as he gets up something 'new' can he appeal to the public. I also owe much to the definition of advertising contained in the pamphlet, 'The Full Grain in the Ear,' and am firmly convinced that the careful reading of that pamphlet would be of much help and inspiration to anyone connected with the advertising business."

As truth is discerned and applied through Christian Science, it radiates spiritual healing to the business world, and brings blessings to those Christian Scientists who cooperate with MONITOR advertisers and recognize this activity as an essential part of the healing mission of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission to the world has been opened through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at training cantonments, at nominal postage, literature offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen in the United States. A printed notice on the front of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, and Le Hérant de Christian Science, signed by the Postmaster-General, explains the simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to mail them regularly as desired.

"The scientific majority"

THE HONORABLE MRS. ERIC CARR

AT a time when, as never before in the history of mankind, all the vexed and venerable problems appertaining to the government of nations may be said to have been thrown into the melting pot, it is interesting to speculate upon the nature of the changes which may be expected to have been wrought by this drastic purging, and to attempt to focus the Phœnix form which may fly upward at last, released from the funeral pyre of much garbage and wreckage. The philosophic onlooker (if indeed such an individual exists in a world struggle where all are drawn to play some part) sees that in the great conflict between the forces of autocracy and democracy only one can survive, and as the true philosopher labors for freedom of thought, the unbiased thinker will decide that some form of democracy will be the future government of the renewed and progressive civilization for which those countries are fighting to whom the democratic ideal is a living inspiration.

This prophecy may appear obvious to-day when the dark forces of autocracy have been unmasked and their true colors revealed, but perhaps the countries that are now staking their all for the ideas of democratic freedom were not so ready for this task in the bygone years when an intrepid New England woman organized "The Church of Christ, Scientist," on lines which she herself has told us are "essentially democratic" (Miscellany, p. 254). As time goes on it becomes increasingly evident that in choosing and utilizing what she considered the best form of human government for her church, Mrs. Eddy was simply applying the healing power of the Christ-idea to the diseased and afflicted counterfeits of government from which the nations had suffered so long; and this she sought to do, as in healing the sick, by presenting the true idea in some form that the world could understand and grasp.

This did not mean in the least that Mrs. Eddy sacrificed the ideal and spiritual standpoint to the necessary human footsteps in the right direction, as anyone can see by studying the Manual of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts. "Be it remembered," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 91 of "Miscellaneous Writings," "that all types employed in the service of Christian Science should represent the most spiritual forms of thought and worship that can be made visible," and here we have the reason why the Christian Science organization and the Manual form the most supremely valuable model of a type of government that the world has ever seen; and here also is why the power of the idea they embody can be traced by any student of the world's drama now being enacted, as it makes its way into every country and leaves thereon a purifying mark.

In pursuance of this idea one notices the following little quotation occurring several times in her writings, which would seem to have struck Mrs. Eddy as a happy expression of the truth she was pondering. It runs, "One on God's side is a majority," and it is interesting to remember that two American statesmen, Wendell Phillips and Stephen Douglas, are said to have quoted these words in declaration of a great truth. Mrs. Eddy was probably familiar with the views of both these reformers, whose ideas were in advance of the opinions of their day. Stephen Douglas was the author of the democratic theory of "Popular Sovereignty" under which he declared that "any state or territory should be free to form and regulate their democratic institutions in their own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States." Wendell Phillips was the abolitionist and a friend of Garrison, and we may well believe that Mrs. Eddy was in sympathy with other social reforms such as prohibition and woman suffrage, both causes with which Phillips identified himself.

"What forests of laurel we bring and the tears of mankind to him who stands firm against the opinion of his contemporaries," exclaims Emerson. But Mrs. Eddy knew what this costs, for the work of a reformer is not often acclaimed in this way at first, and certainly she could speak with an intimate knowledge of the lonely walk in the straight and narrow way of the minority, although that tremendous preponderance of the opinion of her contemporaries ever waned before her advancing understanding of Principle, as she saw more and more clearly the truth that the only real majority was with the truth declared in Christian Science. There were dark times in the earlier days of her ministry when others not so clear of vision cried to her as the servant of old to Elisha, "Alas, . . . how shall we do?" But this quiet woman was always able to reply, as did Elisha, "Fear not: for they that be with us are more than they that be with them," and this perception of where the majority really lay opened the eyes of many others to see "the mountain . . . full of horses and chariots of fire."

As the demands on Christian Science increased, the Leader of the movement saw the necessity for an organization which would provide at once a citadel and a sword to Christian Scientists, whereby an ever widening channel of the Christ-love should flow out to meet the world's need through the demonstrable truth set forth in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures;" but this organization was not built in a day, and it was after many years of thought and an almost incredible devotion to her purpose that Mrs. Eddy saw The Mother Church erected, and the Church Manual of rules and by-laws compiled. The next step was the organization of branch churches, which were built up as emphatically democratic and self-governing units while remaining one in loyalty and coordination with The Mother Church and with the whole cause and the spiritual idea it embraces; for indeed the spiritual truth about God, man, and the universe is first, last, and all the time the Rock, the foundation of all Christian Science activities. This being so, those who are taking an active and intelligent part as members of a Christian Science church should understand that they are doing much more than may appear, because the problems which arise in the course of church work are the same old difficulties of government which the world has been trying to solve from a material point of view ever since men first congregated together in an attempt to cooperate.

As has been already said, we are at the present time witnessing a terrific conflict between the two opposite poles of human impulse, called despotism and freedom, and where autocracy falls there may at first appear a state bordering on anarchy, or the negation of government, an excited condition of mortal mind described by Mrs. Eddy as being "wild with freedom" and "self-contradictory" (Science and Health, p. 552). Lawlessness is however by no means confined to any particular country or government. Human governments indeed seem to have been continually seesawing up and down among the many variations existing between the two opposite types of government we have indicated.

The only direction which Mrs. Eddy gave by which the members of a Christian Science church could approach this problem is, of course, that it must be worked out metaphysically, and when all are striving to bring out the spiritual standpoint the result will be unity and progress, and there never will be either without this understanding, as history lamentably records. When the knowledge that "one on God's side is a majority" reigns, there can be no sense of rebellion; in oneness with God there is no conflict of human opinions, no clashing wills, and this precious sense of working with Principle will enable the minority and the majority to work with brotherly love together, well knowing that personal desires can be quite safely confided to God and subordinated to the common weal. Further, when it is seen that it is in accordance with Principle to uphold righteous law and government and that "the government shall be upon his shoulder," an added blessing will flow to all from this Christianly scientific attitude of thought.

Many to-day are trying to see the truth of Paul's exclamation, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" and it is useful to remember that while Mrs. Eddy has laid down a specific form of human government as best suited to the needs of the Christian Science organization, she has shown Christian Scientists how they may consciously and practically demonstrate the truth that "reflecting God's government, man is self-governed" (Science and Health, p. 125), and how cooperation can be perfect when this control is continually brought out in all the different activities of the Christian Science movement.

True Civil Law

PERCY PHILLIP VYLE

LIKE perplexed and troubled Pilate thousands of legal authorities down through the centuries have meditated upon and asked the vibrant question: "What is truth?" This question is necessitated by the intrusion of a false sense, untruth, into human consciousness. Untruth presents such an array of feasible reasons for being accepted as reality, that the mortal mind, either wearied with the arguments for and against, or afflicted with that mental laziness which welcomes every excuse for passivity, having no fixed principle on which to base a righteous decision, simply reiterates, What is truth?

This momentous question would never have been asked in the Roman judgment hall had mankind been obedient to divine law or true civil law, and not sought other gods or attempted to establish its own opinions as the standard of practice. That the usurpation of mere human opinion for true civil law has been unsuccessful for the regulation of human affairs throughout the history of the world will be readily admitted, and even as the various peoples of Biblical times drifted from the true conception of government to the establishing of something more appeasive of mortal desire, so we of to-day are subjected to the enacting of almost as many laws as there are desires in the human mind. Such laws are the result of the ebb and flow of mortal opinion; they may be said to be the yardstick with which to measure mankind's varying mental states.

From a metaphysical standpoint let us analyze this assertion regarding civil law as of human authorship. In the first place we see that what are called laws are generally not laws at all but attempts to establish human opinion as law. These so-called laws are the general acceptance of theories promulgated by those elected to authority for the regulation of public conduct. These regulations may be said, in general, to be the outcome of human needs, of human wants predicated on the temporary beliefs of mortal mind, or they are of political origination, the more selfish form of the latter being known as the "joker," the selfish implication being concealed among fair-sounding words.

In planning laws from patterns of its own devising, the human mind is like a kaleidoscope in the multiplication of reasons for new laws, so that they are changed day by day. Thus it is seen that human laws are not stable; neither are they universal in their acceptance or in their application. Herein we have the incongruity of acts which are on the statute books of one state and absolutely unregarded in another state. Indeed, an act which is valid in one state may be illegal in another state. This is a condition which has militated against the command of the Christ, "Heal the sick." Christian Science practitioners have found that healing the sick by means of spiritual understanding is welcomed in one state while it is penalized in another.

A business man who changes his place of business from one state to another has to conform to different laws regarding his business. These changes are not brought about by an alteration in the character of the business but simply by the physical transfer of himself across a state border line. True civil law recognizes no geographical boundaries nor nationalities, and it is universal in its acceptance and application. Man-made laws are so intricate that it is necessary to employ experts to interpret them, and they so rapidly multiply that it necessitates other experts to defend the interpretations. Even in courts of final appeal judicial opinion is frequently divided as to the rightness of a decision rendered by the majority of the court.

True civil law is posited on the command: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me;" "Love thy neighbour as thyself." In the last analysis, therefore, the codes and practices which humanity devises for regulating its own acts are nothing more than feeble attempts to attenuate the true law as reiterated throughout the Bible. Mankind was warned early not to fall under the mesmerism of its own lawmaking, for in Deuteronomy in the summing up of the statutes and judgments, we read: "What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it."

Christian Science lays stress on this primal law, for on page 496 of our textbook Mrs. Eddy says, "You will learn that in Christian Science the first duty is to obey God, to have one Mind, and to love another as yourself." Stripped of all verbiage, these easily understood words contain the elements of all true civil law, and practiced to their logical conclusion would rid mankind of its burdens. All true law is the order of divine Principle, and the harmony realized by mankind is in direct proportion to their obedience to law. It is the simplicity in statement of true civil law that makes it tower above the phraseology of law to-day. Had those in authority the world over had a true sense of law it would have mastered and supplanted the belief in military law; for where love is there can be no enmity.

Christian Science effectively demonstrates that right thinking is reflected in right action; that all our action is but the result of our conceptions, and that nothing changes but our conceptions of things. Therefore a realization of true civil law must first come to the individual consciousness before it can be practiced collectively or nationally. It is in this individual reformation of thinking that the Christian Scientist has such potential influence.

To quote our textbook again (p. 458), "The Christianly scientific man reflects the divine law, thus becoming a law unto himself. He does violence to no man. Neither is he a false accuser." Christian Science teaches that our neighbor is not the physicality, or the human concept of man that we see walking down the street, but God's spiritual idea, His image and likeness; that we are members of one family because we are children, ideas, of the one Father-Mother God, and we owe allegiance to none else. As members of one family we should dwell together in harmony. In proportion as this view of our neighbor is held in consciousness and we study constantly to know more of the truth of being, we approach to government by the primal law.

In so far as we individually obey the divine Principle of law we lessen the present day necessity for the enacting of carnal mind opinion as law. From this premise we take another logical step: Were divine law collectively obeyed, human devices for the regulation of human conduct would cease to be written on the statute books, thus giving place to the perfect Principle of all law, of true civil law. While rendering unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and conducting ourselves in accordance with our country's codes, it is by remembering the simple rudiments of true civil law and practicing them that we effectively prove the human need to be not more legislative enactments, but a more thorough understanding of Principle.

Unfailing Guidance

L. LILLIAN ELLIAS, M.A.

TO the college student away from home Christian Science brings inestimable aid. When I left home for college, it was with the assurance from a dear Scientist friend that I should find God ever present to help me in meeting the financial demands of this higher education, as well as those academic and social. I had never been strong, and during childhood the difficulties had always been smoothed over for me by watchful parents. So at this time I turned to Christian Science for solace in loneliness, for guidance to remunerative employment, for health and strength in arduous duties, for wisdom to make right decisions, for intelligence to comprehend and in turn express the substance of my studies; and in each case I found it a demonstrable religion, proving God's ever presence and abundance.

The way was not one of ease, strewn with flowers, but at times steep and rugged, or darkened with storms and mists; yet it always led to heights warm and bright with the sunshine of Truth and Love. Through such experiences I learned many helpful things, not the least valuable being that home is really where one dwells in thought,—that is, one's consciousness,—and that one need never be lonely in that home when he keeps it filled with the realization of God's nearness. This had to be proved gradually, as did most of the lessons learned.

I found college a workshop, a laboratory, so to speak, in which to bring to bear upon the problems that presented themselves my gradually increasing knowledge of the operation of God's law. I feared examinations; Christian Science proved to me that the infinite intelligence expresses itself through man as truly and freely at one time and place as at another. I was timid and afraid to meet people; the confidence gained through the understanding of man's true being and dominion brought freedom from this bondage. I was unable to enter the social sphere I longed for; through applying Christian Science to my own problems, I gained the knowledge and ability necessary to help others, and thus so filled my time with loving work and my life with sweetest friendships that I was most happy to find it true, as our Leader assures us, that "God requires our whole heart, and He supplies within the wide channels of The Mother Church dutiful and sufficient occupation for all its members" (Manual, Art. VIII, Sect. 15). In the midst of my college course a Christian Science organization was formed in the university, and at its meetings was found the sweet spirit of friendship I loved, and the testimonies showed how others were applying Christian Science to their studies, to their financial problems, and to difficulties of all kinds.

Many young people at college, just launching out in the craft of individual thinking, are blown far from the true course by the winds of mistaken philosophies and doctrines of evolution, until their compass is broken and they doubt even the existence of God. Immeasurable is the gratitude I feel for the slight understanding I had of God which kept me from doubt and preserved in my consciousness the ability to weigh and measure safely, so that my college experience was in every way constructive, an experience of building even for eternity. I am also deeply grateful to the dear friends, those older Christian Scientists, to whom I appealed whenever I could not solve my problems alone.

On looking back upon college life, the friendships of that period always stand out in high relief. I am truly grateful that through Christian Science I shall hold in memory friendships of the most helpful kind, healed friendships, purified and strengthened through the demonstration of the true relation of God's ideas and of the true attraction. All this, however, but touches lightly upon the blessings which Christian Science brought into my college life. I am indeed grateful to God and thankful to our dear Leader, His messenger to this age, for her provision in the Manual for the establishment of Christian Science organizations in universities.

The Reading Rooms

L. A. IRELAND

REMEMBERING the purpose of The Christian Science Journal we cannot regard too highly the instructions it contains relative to the reading rooms. In these instructions we read: "A reading room notice, giving the address and the hours when the rooms are regularly open to the public, is a necessary part of every church advertisement." Surely in view of the importance of the reading rooms no opportunity to inform the public regarding them should be lost. At every service we find the stranger within our gates, and perhaps some who are specially waiting to be informed as to the location of the reading rooms and the hours during which they are open.

Some years ago a young man, who has since become a student of Christian Science, found himself struggling in the wilderness of mortal mind. He was sick and discouraged, his business was in a precarious condition, and there seemed to be no way out of his unhappy state. One day, when everything appeared unusually gloomy without and within, he was walking along the main street of a large western city when something suddenly awoke in him a desire to visit the Christian Science reading room. That something was an angel, for on page 581 of Science and Health angels are defined as "God's thoughts passing to man; spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect." This spiritual intuition had been entertained unawares during the reading of the notices at a Christian Science Sunday service some days previously. At that service it had been announced that the reading rooms were in a certain building, and were open daily. This was all that the young man recalled, and it was all that was necessary. The rooms were less than a block away, and it did not take him long to find his way there.

Here was indeed a table in the wilderness. The kindly lady in charge of the rooms welcomed the stranger, and her very manner seemed to lift a load from his shoulders. In response to his inquiry as to whom he could go to for help, the young man was given a list of practitioners. There was momentary rebellion at being given a list instead of personal advice as to whom to see, but divine Love was leading a child out of the wilderness, and a few moments later the first healing this young man had experienced in Christian Science was well under way.

Such experiences as this serve to impress upon us the wisdom back of the rules that have been established for the guidance of branch churches, and Christian Scientists can never be too grateful for all that Article XXI of the Manual of The Mother Church means to the cause.

Now and then error tries to say that the announcements from the desk relative to church services and the reading rooms are monotonous repetitions. Such arguments will not be listened to where there is a real desire to cast our bread upon the waters, for we know from experience that, in the words of the wise man, we shall "find it after many days."

MAUD TILLERY TRUMBO

DURING a conversation, a man who was then engaged in farming in the great western country, where irrigation is depended upon to furnish the moisture necessary to produce crops, remarked that he did not have a sufficient amount of water that season. When asked if there was a shortage of water he answered that there was an abundance, but that the ditch which carried the water from the main canal to his land was not in good condition. Weeds of the preceding season had blown into it, and it was also clogged with rubbish and sediment of various kinds which had not been cleaned out of it. As a result the ditch would not carry the water, and it was overflowing and much of it lost before it reached the place where it was needed. He further remarked that he was going to have it perfectly clean for the following season, and keep it clean, and he was sure that there would be no danger of the crops suffering because of lack of water.

These remarks brought a much needed lesson to the student of Christian Science who listened to them, and the words of a hymn which is often sung at our services came to mind (Hymnal, p. 89):—

> Make channels for the streams of love,
> Where they may broadly run;
> And love has overflowing streams,
> To fill them ev'ry one.

While this had always been a favorite hymn with the writer, and she had never heard it without many new and beautiful thoughts coming to her, never before had the necessity for making channels been so clearly seen. How could one expect blessings to flow through channels which were clogged with the weeds of doubt and fear, with self-righteousness, self-will, envy, greed, and numberless other erroneous thoughts? Many times in trying to work out problems in Christian Science and wondering why the work seemed to be without results, the writer has been brought face to face with the fact that the channels were clogged with the weeds of human will, and that instead of clearing the channels for the streams of love she was outlining the way in which the problems must be solved,—telling God how it was best for Him to do His work,—and had apparently forgotten that God's work is finished.

Our work is to cleanse the channels of thought, and, like the farmer, keep them clean. Every student knows that divine Love is continually pouring forth more than we are able to receive. When we ask understandingly, and have the channels well prepared, do we not always receive more than we expect? Many times when the writer has been able to let go of every thought of self, and to know the allness of God,—that "all is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all" (Science and Health, p. 468),—her consciousness has been so filled with thoughts of Truth and Love and she has been lifted so far above the material condition which had seemed so real, that the channels have not seemed large enough to receive the blessings which came pouring into them, and the fact that "love has overflowing streams, to fill them every one" has again been proved to be not a myth or a theory, but absolute truth founded on God's unchanging law.

Our work, then, is to dig out the channels, to know the unreality of every thought and condition which is unlike God, good. That this work is individual goes without saying; no one can cleanse our channels for us. In speaking of Jesus' mission Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 18): "He did life's work aright not only in justice to himself, but in mercy to mortals,—to show them how to do theirs, but not to do it for them nor to relieve them of a single responsibility." Jesus said to the Pharisee, "Cleanse first that which is within." So it is clearly shown that we must prepare the way. Divine Love cannot fail; the failure is within ourselves. The waters of Life, Truth, and Love will be found ready and waiting always to flow into the channels and fill them to overflowing—when these channels are cleansed and ready to receive.

Now

HUGH STUART CAMPBELL

CONSIDERED in the spiritual light of Christian Science, what a wealth of meaning is found in that simple word now. Paul observes, "Now is the day of salvation." Reverse the word and "won" is spelled. May not this, by imaginative deduction, signify first the opportunity, then the attainment of salvation? According to material usage, now means the present moment of time. There is no other time, for yesterday is not and to-morrow comes not. Paul's statement wisely includes the word now, for he means there is no other time but to-day in which to seek salvation. However, now as the present tense of mortal education is but a counterfeit of the now of God's creating, which is an idea in Mind.

The now of the calendar may be lost or wasted. It is but a limited concept with both a beginning and an end. It begins with and includes time, and time must eventually cease. The saying "Time is fleeting" illustrates its unreal and perishable nature. The now of time is wholly apart from God's idea, which is eternal and indestructible. On the other hand, the forever now of spiritual sense is a metaphysical fact, a limitless, boundless, eternal spiritual idea which includes all there is of God, good. It does not depend upon past, present, or future time; it cannot be wasted or improved, limited or increased, but remains forever an active and ever operative quality of the eternal Mind. The now of salvation is therefore the immortal now of eternity, and what we are told to do by the apostle is to occupy the present time in human experience, the now of physical life, by mental improvement, until we discern the now of life eternal,—to eliminate from thought all error and reflect only right thoughts. To gain this state of consciousness is to secure and partake of the kingdom of heaven or harmony—and is not this salvation attained?

Surely such a goal is worth working for. The admonition of Paul has rung through the centuries; it has been preached in the pulpit, printed by the press,—and yet mankind has allowed the golden hours of opportunity to pass unheeded and salvation to be considered a vague future possibility. Through the teaching and practice of Christian Science, however, the goal of deliverance may be secured to-day, a glorious prize for all who run the race with unfaltering trust; for Christian Science not only proves God to be available, and ever present, but makes it possible to know Him aright, which Jesus said was "life eternal."

In Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has given practical rules, obedience to which will point the way to heaven, harmony, to any sincere seeker. Her simple expressions of truth never swerve from the fact that we can secure all good now through right thinking. Our Leader never admits of delay or procrastination, never concedes the possibility of failure; for her words are founded on the firm conviction expressed in Jeremiah, "They shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord;" for to know God is to see God "as he is,"—Life, Truth, Love, all wisdom, immortality, now.

Penitence

SAMUEL JOHNSTONE MACDONALD

A PROPHET'S house, the road anigh,
Yet claimed no glance from passers-by:
Too modest for admiring gaze,
It spake the prophet's selfless ways.
Yet was his house to many known
Who sought surcease from sorrow's moan,
For clearer light upon God's ways,
And guidance 'mid life's murky maze.

One came in modest garb arrayed
And sought the prophet's ready aid,
Not for material gain or might,
Nor for escape from folly's plight;
Nor to o'ercome some piercing pain
And ease of body to attain;
Nor yet to heal lack's bitter stress,
Or limitation's weariness.

His heart with penitence aglow,
This humble seeker sought to know
How best he might past doubt make clear
His penitence to be sincere.
The prophet heard his meek appeal,
And answered, He who sets his seal
To penitence as deep and true,
Must Love reflect and life renew.

["Mastering Mortal Beliefs"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 23, 1918]

It is impossible to deny that the consensus of human belief is that man is the victim of that triad of evils—sin, sickness, and death—and that nothing short of a miracle, interpreted as meaning the supernatural interposition of divine, omnipotent power, can save him. The foundation for this universal belief is no doubt the theory that man is a composite being, a spirit or soul in the body.

Now in Christian Science this theory finds no place. Man is clearly shown to be what the Bible says he is, made in God's image and likeness, that is, a spiritual being; and therefore, as a fact that can be logically and practically sustained, he is not the medium of sin and disease or the slave of evil.

It is scarcely possible to imagine the wholesome revolutionary effect this would have if it were accepted and acted upon. The picture of humanity struggling after health and happiness, and mostly failing, is not encouraging. Looked at from the purely human standpoint, it is a justification for the deepest pessimism. But that is the limited view of sense testimony, which sees things at short range, and it is entirely ignorant of the truth. We are entitled to look further to see the truth.

This is just what Christ Jesus did. His mission might have seemed to be a hopeless one. Religion had been materialized; the concept of God, except to a few, was shadowy and perverted; but the Nazarene saw man as he is, God's child, and with his perfect spiritual understanding he revealed in a quite unexpected way man's unlimited capacity for good, and his true place in God's kingdom.

A similar discouraging picture at first presented itself to the Discoverer of Christian Science. "I saw before me," she says, "the sick, wearing out years of servitude to an unreal master in the belief that the body governed them, rather than Mind" (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, p. 226). From that time she entered upon her Christian ministry of interpreting the spiritual meaning of the Scriptures and demonstrating to the world that freedom and mastery over evil are man's prerogative, for, as she writes, on page 227 of the same book, "The illusion of material sense, not divine law, has bound you, entangled your free limbs, crippled your capacities, enfeebled your body, and defaced the tablet of your being." Therefore it is that divine law, which is God's law, the activity of good, justly claims man's loyalty and obedience.

The chief trouble is that the belief that man is mortal dominates thought and action. While this has the ascendancy, there will be constant trouble. The material senses will reign. Now just in the proportion that a man learns the nature of these senses, he sees them to be the product of the fleshly or carnal mind. Then, when through Christian Science he learns that man is spiritual and not material, he discovers them to be his enemies and not his friends.

It is possible that as soon as he enters upon the study of how to master these senses, he may be assailed by the sophistries of mortal mind, which would keep him in subjection to its own fatal sway. To be thus kept is plainly to continue in sin, which is simply the indulgence of any thought or word or deed which is not born of spiritual understanding. And while a man does not combat sin, the victory or the emancipation which he prays for is impossible. For, as Jesus declared, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light," but he added for the world's comfort and encouragement, "He that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God."

Here, therefore, is the way out from the entanglement of the fleshly lusts, which war against God and all that is good. Deeds that are wrought in God are the very antithesis of every effort that is made by delving into matter. From matter you can get nothing but discord and decay; you achieve nothing but that which is in the end worthless. Wealth, fame, and happiness, sought under the impetus of matter's claims, make a man the creature of false concepts, and shackle him with self-imposed bonds.

The apostle Paul warned Timothy that "if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." Now in the Science of Christianity, to do a thing lawfully is to recognize that law is spiritual, and that the conflict with error, the warfare with the flesh, is a spiritual warfare. Hence he who would win sees that it is not a question of exercising what is known as will power. You can no more "will" that you be good or conquer evil than you can "will" yourself out of a belief of sickness into a condition of health. But by learning the truth of being, through conscientious study of Christian Science, you may awaken to a spiritual perception of what are the qualities of mind that make for spiritual ascendancy and victory. Thus it is that fear is destroyed, and every carnal propensity is checked and subjugated, while every decision for right becomes a stepping-stone in real advancement, and there is revealed that government of the spiritual idea in consciousness which is the savior of mankind.

To know God is the cardinal lesson that we can draw from the teaching and example of Christ Jesus. For to know God is to learn that His reflection, man, has infinite resources, and that he must be fulfilling the divine purpose. Christian Science is, in this way, helping to set many a man in the right way, showing him that whatever his condition may be, whatever falsities he may be entertaining, all that opposes his deliverance or obstructs his mastery over evil is of mortal origin and therefore is an illegitimate intruder, an alien to all that is beneficent. This is the way in which the Christ, or Truth, conquers sickness as well as sin, for, as Mrs. Eddy has written (Science and Health, p. 569): "He that touches the hem of Christ's robe and masters his mortal beliefs, animality and hate, rejoices in the proof of healing,—in a sweet and certain sense that God is Love."

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in The Milwaukee (Wis.) Leader]

Christian Scientists hope that The Milwaukee Leader will not insist on misrepresenting either them or their religion; but the letter from a representative of the People's Council of America and the editorial adoption thereof, were both mistaken and misleading.

Christian Science does regard war as an evil; but this statement alone does not fully present its teachings on this subject. Christian Science also teaches that the defense and preservation of human rights by force of arms may be relatively right. As Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, has said: "War will end when nations are ripe for progress" (Miscellany, p. 281). Nations, like persons, do not live alone, and one may be more ready than another to listen to other reasons than superior force. Therefore, in March, 1898, just before the United States employed force against Spain for the liberation of Cuba, Mrs. Eddy, in reply to a question from The Boston Herald, spoke thus (Miscellany, p. 277): "I will say I can see no other way of settling difficulties between individuals and nations than by means of their wholesome tribunals, equitable laws, and sound, well-kept treaties;" but she also declared (p. 278) the possibility that God's "purpose for peace" might be "subserved by the battle's plan."

In June, 1898, soon after the beginning of the war, Mrs. Eddy sent a Message to her church, in which she asked Christian Scientists to "pray for the prosperity of our country, and for her victory under arms." In the same Message she rejoiced that "our nation will be as formidable in war as she has been compassionate in peace." This Message is now published as a pamphlet entitled, "Christian Science versus Pantheism," and that part of it relating to this subject will be found on page 14 thereof, and is as follows: "Pray for the prosperity of our country, and for her victory under arms; that justice, mercy, and peace continue to characterize her government, and that they shall rule all nations. Pray that the divine presence may still guide and bless our chief magistrate, those associated with his executive trust, and our national judiciary; give to our congress wisdom, and uphold our nation with the right arm of His righteousness. In your peaceful homes remember our brave soldiers, whether in camp or in battle. Oh, may their love of country, and their faithful service thereof, be unto them life-preservers! May the divine Love succor and protect them, as at Manila, where brave men, led by the dauntless Dewey, and shielded by the power that saved them, sailed victoriously through the jaws of death and blotted out the Spanish squadron. Great occasion have we to rejoice that our nation, which fed her starving foe,—already murdering her peaceful seamen and destroying millions of her money,—will be as formidable in war as she has been compassionate in peace."

This concrete expression and application of Christian Science by Mrs. Eddy proves beyond reasonable controversy that Christian Science may consistently support the government of the United States during the present war. The wrongs done and threatened by Spain in 1898, grievous as they were, were slight and inconsequential as compared with wrongs done and threatened by the German government in 1917; and in 1917, as in 1898, the President and Congress of the United States, before deciding to employ the force of arms, first exhausted all other means of redress known to the American people.

In this situation The Christian Science Monitor has consistently supported the President and Congress of the United States since as well as before their decision that war had become unavoidable; and the Christian Scientists of this country, with very few exceptions, also regard the decision of the President and of Congress to participate in the present war as necessary and right in the circumstances. The fact that former Senator John D. Works, a Christian Scientist, has withheld his support is offset by the fact that his son, Judge Lewis R. Works, also a Christian Scientist, stands with the President.

A few days ago we heard a minister of the gospel mention the fact that as he goes about his pastoral duties he finds so many people who are ill and in pain. Indeed we hear much of the suffering of humanity in this sin sick world, and with our own eyes we can see that it is a fact. And when the suffering of first one friend and then another has been relieved by death, most of our clergymen seek to bring consolation to the bereaved by saying that our loss is the doings of the Almighty, the mysterious workings of Providence.

This never appealed to the writer, and in a little volume handed to us by a stranger not long ago we discovered that

Christian Scientists differ from orthodox Christians by refusing to blame God for the death of our dear ones. Neither do they look upon sickness and suffering as the discipline of our heavenly Father.

For years the writer has always been ashamed of himself every time he has contracted a cold, and as the years go by he finds himself less troubled with these unnecessary derangements of our physical body. To us it seems like the result of simple ignorance or carelessness.

The writer does not practice Christian Science, for he doesn't know enough about it to do so, but he has observed enough to give him a very wholesome respect for it and for those who have adopted it. There are sincere people in this community, persons who are looked upon as excellent and well-balanced citizens, who declare that they owe their lives to Christian Science. It is possible they are mistaken, but it is an indisputable fact that whereas they were in serious, failing health, now they are robust and vigorous. Certainly they are no more likely to be mistaken than the person who rejoices in restoration to health after the use of the knife or some drug to which he gives the credit.

But to us it is a significant fact that the little company of local believers in Christian Science seem to be surprisingly good samples of normal health. Compared with some of their whiney, pale, and languid neighbors, they are fortunate at least in the possession of glowing countenances and exuberance of physical vim. . . . Christian Science accepts the teachings of the Bible. Why should any religionist, save a hopeless bigot, be afraid to study a system that accepts the Holy Scriptures? We commend it to our clergy who bemoan the fact that the world is full of sickness and suffering.

If there is anything in this system that will bring health and hope and comfort to those who are or think they are the victims of disease, it seems to us that any Christian ought to rejoice in the discovery, and the finding of it need not cause him to lose faith in religion; indeed the very contrary ought to be true.

[Robert G. Steel in Pontiac (Mich.) Press-Gazette]

The fact that the particular creed to which our critic subscribes may differ from the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures taught in Christian Science, in no way proves the latter to be opposed to the Bible. The Christian Science churches and societies use the Bible in their regular services to a much greater extent, probably, than does any other religious denomination, and the study of Christian Science has resulted in bringing to the Scriptures more earnest, happy, constant students than has any other single agency. The very first tenet of Christian Science, given on page 497 of its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, reads as follows: "As adherents of Truth, we take the inspired Word of the Bible as our sufficient guide to eternal Life."

The reading from Science and Health of sentences and parts of sentences so detached from their contexts as to distort their meaning in an attempt to show that Christian Science is antagonistic to the Bible, proves nothing; for in the same manner the Bible itself could be made a jumble of absurd statements. Christian Science is Christian because, being based upon the Bible, it follows absolutely the teachings of Christ Jesus, and it is scientific because it is the absolute knowledge of God and His spiritual law so systematized and classified as to be capable of successful demonstration.

Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," and his command to preach the gospel was accompanied by the no less imperative one to heal the sick. Christian Science accepts the whole Christ, the undivided garment, and the truth of its teaching is evidenced by the testimony of hundreds of thousands of grateful persons all over the world who have been freed from bondage to sickness, sin, sorrow, and other discordant conditions, and brought to a realization of their God-given privilege of health and happiness through its beneficent ministrations. These are the "signs" which Jesus said would follow "them that believe."

[Peter V. Ross in Watsonville (Cal.) Register]

Prayer in Christian Science is not so much a pleading with God for favors as it is an understanding that already He has bestowed upon us all things good and needful; it is to realize the all-presence and the all-power of God, which of necessity destroys the human sense of sickness and sorrow as well as of sin, and thereby awakens the individual to the discernment that instead of being a helpless victim of evil and disease he has power and domination over them. Thus prayer is made practically effective in better health and morals.

Christian Science not only accepts the apostle's assurance that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much," but it also lays hold of his further promise that "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." The clergyman refers only to the first of these Scriptural promises, and proceeds to tell how the captain of a vessel at sea who, when overtaken with ptomaine poisoning, was saved by a prescription sent by a physician in response to an S.O.S. call. How much more instructive, as showing the power of prayer, was Paul's experience when he was shipwrecked and bitten by the venomous viper? He sent out no S.O.S., asked for no medical prescription, and relied on no medicine chest. He simply applied his knowledge of the Science of Christianity to the wound which threatened his life, and no harm came to him, much to the surprise of the barbarians on the island.

Christian Scientists are finding that this same Science which Jesus and his apostles invoked to heal disease is available to every one to-day who chooses to gain an understanding of it through the study of the Bible. As Mrs. Eddy has well said on page 162 of Science and Health: "Christian Science brings to the body the sunlight of Truth, which invigorates and purifies. Christian Science acts as an alterative, neutralizing error with Truth. It changes the secretions, expels humors, dissolves tumors, relaxes rigid muscles, restores carious bones to soundness." Christian Science, its students understand, is nothing more nor less than original Christianity as taught by the Master and put in practice, healing sickness and overcoming other conditions opposed to the happiness and well-being of humanity.

[Albert F. Gilmore in The Truth Seeker, New York, N. Y.]

In an item in a recent issue of The Truth Seeker, surprise is expressed that Christian Scientists "have changed their foundation from love to hate," and are "actually supporting the war." While it is undoubtedly true that a great majority of Christian Scientists, like all good citizens, are supporting it, it is not because they regard war as an ideal method of settling differences between nations, but rather because they believe that even war is preferable to the loss of that degree of human freedom which has been gained through the ages and handed down to this generation as a precious heritage. Therefore war may be relatively right,—in fact is nearer right than peace without righteousness.

Religion and Politics

IN The Christian Science Monitor of March 23 there appeared a leading editorial with the above title, which was of much more than passing interest.

Its value is not alone in the incident which called it forth, but also in its declaration of the established rule which governs the editorial and news columns of The Christian Science Monitor on the question of "religion and politics"—a question which is daily attracting the attention of increasing numbers of thoughtful men and women.

This editorial, which we commend to the attention of every Christian Scientist, points out clearly that the religious teachings of a church are primarily the concern of that church alone, whereas the political dealings of a church are, in the very nature of things, common property. It also points out that The Christian Science Monitor demands for, and extends to, every religion the toleration it claims for itself and has no conflict with any form of religious teaching. It does, however, maintain its right to record and analyze the signs of these times as they appear upon the political horizon, irrespective of whether these signs reveal the attempted manipulation of men and nations in the name of political parties, religious bodies, or individuals. To do less than this would be for the Monitor to fail to fulfill its responsibility to its Founder and to the world.

In this period of universal conflict Christian Scientists need to understand clearly the issues upon which the world is being divided. They also need to stand fearlessly and understandingly on that side where only can be demonstrated "Science and peace" (Science and Health, p. 96).

Practicing Hospitality

IN Paul's instruction to Timothy regarding those qualified to be overseers, he indicates that not only was such a one expected to be master of himself and to be skilled as a teacher, but also to be "given to hospitality." Indeed, in his general instructions to the Romans, the apostle offers the same admonition, expecting all Christians to be "distributing to the necessity of saints," and also to be "given to hospitality." The Church of Christ, Scientist, in any community, is an expression of Christian hospitality. The church edifice itself is erected without solicitation of funds from the community. The gratitude of those benefited by Christian Science is expressed through a comely building to which any seeker may come and there freely enjoy the ministry of the pastor of the movement, the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," whose teachings mean life, healing, and health to those who hear. During the week there is not only the Wednesday evening testimony meeting, but the hospitality of the reading room offered to the public. Much might be said of the comfort afforded by reading rooms to the chance visitor, the stranger, the homeless worker, the new inquirer. But the hospitality offered in the free lecture to the general public is the present topic.

In giving a lecture the church is the host, and those invited by means of advertisements, cards, mailed announcements, telephone calls, or personal letters, are the guests. It is the duty of the member of the board of lectureship who is invited, to include in his lecture "a true and just reply to public topics condemning Christian Science, and to bear testimony to the facts pertaining to the life of the Pastor Emeritus" (Manual, Art. XXXI, Sect. 2). The listener then is helped by relief from the obstruction of untruth, and is drawn heavenward by learning of the life and example of our Leader, because it was given to Mary Baker Eddy to "reinstate primitive Christianity and its lost element of healing" (Manual, p. 17), through the great church which she organized.

The lecture is usually announced as "a free lecture," but how shall the seeker hear the word if he cannot gain admittance to the auditorium? A branch church once provided a lecture for a neighboring district where no Christian Science lecture had ever been given. People of the neighborhood did not begin to arrive until about the advertised hour, and the hall was already full. An announcement of the facts was made to the assembly, and all who had already heard the lecture or lecturer were invited to yield their places to the waiting guests and retire by a rear door, which they did in an orderly way. Later a second request was made that those accustomed to hearing lectures should make way for those waiting at the front doors, and again a large number of seats were vacated. Finally the request was made that Christian Scientists should yield place to the waiting guests, which they did until there was room for all who sought entrance. The purpose of the lecture would not have been accomplished if the invited guests had been turned away. Paul asks, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" But in this case the question was, How could they hear without access to the preacher?

A business man speaks of "having without success attempted to attend several Christian Science lectures, although arriving in reasonable time," and acknowledges disappointment and the hardship of loss of time. He thinks that seats might be reserved for those who wish to pay for them; but again the one most needing the help of the lecture might not be able to buy a seat. Is not the occasion of a banquet really an occasion for self-denial on the part of the host? He would not sit down early to the table with his close friends and inform those coming later that nothing was left for them. His business is to see that every guest is hospitably received and cared for. Hospitality means "kind and generous reception and entertainment of strangers and guests." Christian Scientists need no program laid out for them, because they are fertile in wise expedients and intelligent through love, able to meet any and every emergency with the right demonstration because they have the available guidance of Principle.

Quite frequently the visitor to a Church of Christ, Scientist, finds himself touched, comforted, and even healed by influences of good which reach him there. The explanation of this is found in the Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 5), where direction is given that "the prayers in Christian Science churches shall be offered for the congregations collectively and exclusively." This rule is effective for congregations assembled to hear a lecture, so that Christian Scientists should always, of course, be present on such occasions. And yet the occasion should also be made available for the inquirer, the visitor, the seeker after the true God.

Note what Mrs. Eddy says concerning the members of the board of lectureship (Miscellany, p. 125): "Loyal to the divine Principle they so ably vindicate, they earn their laurels. History will record their words, and their works will follow them. When reading their lectures, I have felt the touch of the spirit of the Mars' Hill orator, which always thrills the soul." The giving of one or more annual lectures is the duty of every church, and the privilege of every society. It is evident that the lectures are not for entertainment. The church members combining their demonstration with that of the lecturer provide the lecture of the church for the welfare of their neighbors in the community or city. Hence the words of Peter are very well in point: "Use hospitality one to another without grudging."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

Cleansing the Temple

ALL students of the Bible are familiar with the story of Jesus driving out of the temple at Jerusalem the money changers, but the modern thought is disposed to regard this as applying to an outgrown condition, since material sacrifices are no longer offered to God in the way that they were at one time. The Christian Scientist, however, seeks the deeper meaning of this incident, and its importance is brought out in our Leader's teachings. On page 142 of Science and Health she says, "The strong cords of scientific demonstration, as twisted and wielded by Jesus, are still needed to purge the temples of their vain traffic in worldly worship and to make them meet dwelling-places for the Most High." The Christian Scientist would readily admit the rightness of this statement, would indeed see it as a vital demand resting upon all who are members of Christian Science churches. It cannot be denied that the church itself is a divine idea, and it rests with us to maintain the purity of its human expression, so that nothing can enter into it which defileth or maketh a lie.

The human tendency always has been to assume readily the wrongness of what some other person has done or is doing, while the individual censor shrinks from the probing of his own errors of belief. In the present age a good many talk about worldliness and the worship of mammon, quite forgetful of the fact that if all professed Christians sought after moral and spiritual purity above all else, every other question would take care of itself. There can be no permanent prosperity for churches, individuals, or nations except that which expresses the absolute purity demanded by Christ Jesus in all his teachings, and which is also the demand throughout our Leader's entire writings. Our Master said, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." To the earnest student of Christian Science this means that the pure in heart shall see good and good only, and love good and good only at every advancing step of his experience. He will also find that on the human plane this will call for constant purification of his own consciousness,—the temple in which he must worship God,—and as each one strives after this, our churches will be made pure from selfishness, sensuality, and everything unlike God.

At this period the whole world is passing through a baptism of fire which will without doubt result in such a moral purification as has never before been experienced by humanity. If our hope rested on anything less than this it would seem as if humanity would faint and fall while undergoing the terrible birth throes, but we have a distinct promise of perfect deliverance if only we endure unto the end; and there can be no question that those who hold fast to divine Principle will so endure. In the third chapter of Malachi we read of the divine messenger coming to the temple and of the gladness with which his approach is regarded. This announcement is followed by the searching question: "But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap." Then we have the divine judgment presented,—not that which was supposed to come at the end of the world, but instead the judgment of Truth which is going on continually and which is being felt as never before when people begin to awaken from the long dream of sinful belief. The pronouncement of the Most High reads: "And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts."

In the twenty-first chapter of Acts we read of a severe chemicalization which came when ceremonial religion was called to give place to the purely spiritual teaching of Christ Jesus. It would seem that the decision handed down by the authorities of the church in Jerusalem was this, that above all else moral purity must be insisted upon, with respect to both Jew and Gentile; and no less, surely, can be demanded to-day in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist. There never was a time when clearness of vision was so needed as at the present hour, and nothing is so conducive to this as the spiritual purity based upon the recognition of man's likeness to God—purity in thought, word, and deed.

It is true that Christ Jesus is not with us to-day to enter into our churches and with his strong declarations of truth to drive out the evil beliefs which may be found therein, but the truth he declared is spoken through the Lesson-Sermon and also at the midweek service, supported by the unequivocal demands of the "Spirit of truth." This does not mean that we are to use the scourge of personal condemnation upon anyone who may not be living up to the highest standard of purity, but it does mean that we should apply the truth so vigorously to ourselves that the command, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may . . . glorify your Father which is in heaven," will do its work. Malachi tells us that we should "discern between the righteous and the wicked," between the wrong thought and the right thought, and thus we shall make steady progress. We cannot too often recall these words in Revelation: "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out."

Times and Seasons

THE yearly seasons come and go, but God's "now" never passes. Some individuals advance by leaps and bounds, then stray into byways, while slower pilgrims pass them on the straight and narrow road. The only real advance is spiritual, and is reckoned by milestones which do not appear to physical sight but are known to God. Spiritual progress cannot be measured by calendar reckoning or by the probabilities of life tables, but solely by demonstration. The worldly wise say there is a time for everything, but the world's time is not God's opportunity. The spiritual timetable is governed by Soul not by sense, and does not coincide with the revolutions of the earth nor the appearances of the moon. In the realm of metaphysics one day is as a thousand years. A moment's spiritual intuition may crown the labor of centuries. Revelation sweeps aside as inadequate the hypotheses and doctrines of the ages. Quality not quantity characterizes God's eternity, and in this the real man has all and abides forever. Therefore in speaking of times and seasons the Christian Scientist quickly learns to replace solar years by the achievements of spiritual sense, as we read in the Glossary of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 584) under the definition of DAY: "The objects of time and sense disappear in the illumination of spiritual understanding, and Mind measures time according to the good that is unfolded. This unfolding is God's day, and 'there shall be no night there.'"

There has never been a time when God's creation was not perfect, when His glory did not mean joy eternal. His ways are ways of spiritual blessings,—His cup overflows with spiritual rewards. Christian Science teaches humanity that its expectation of ultimate perfection is in reality justified by an ever present perfection. Under the happy impulsion of true Science the blind can use spiritual sight and see now, the deaf can listen to the still, small voice and hear now, the stubborn can unbend to divine Love and become flexible now, thereby becoming willing instruments of God's power.

The beginner learning the multiplication table and his A, B, C seems to make slow progress at first, but later he uses this knowledge with dexterity, hardly realizing that he is using it. So in acquiring foreign languages individuals may seem to require much time, but the language of Spirit is quick and powerful. It matters not whether one's response is slow or fast, as long as the response comes. Different flowers unfold to the sunlight differently, some slowly, some rapidly, but there is no doubt that they will bloom if they are given proper care. In this way proper attention given to the daily study of Christian Science and to its practice brings sure reward.

Healings in Christian Science are absolutely sure if right care is given to keep fear, doubt, disobedience, and the pressure of time out of the way. God heals the sick in His own time and way. Casting about for a convenient time or for a comfortable setting within which to heal the sick operates merely as an excuse for putting off the day of salvation, when the ever present now is the opportunity for God's work. The readiness of children to have a good time carries a valuable lesson to those who are grown up. Their oft repeated "Let's do it now" points to their ever readiness, alertness, and spontaneity.

Daniel declared of God, "And he changeth the times and the seasons." If humanity would not attempt to remove God's landmarks or to set up landmarks of its own according to preconceived notions, human history would run along scientifically to glorious fulfillments. Mortals judge according to human standards and traditions, fleshly beliefs, and physical limitation. They have no realization of the extent to which they deprive themselves of God's bounty by self-imposed boundaries. Even the disciples missed the significance of God's times and seasons when they asked Jesus after the resurrection, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" and received the answer, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."

The real times and seasons are spiritual epochs in human history, regulated by divine measurements, authorized by spiritual illumination. In God's times and seasons there is no premature ripening nor retarding of fruitage; there are no blights nor destructive frosts, no droughts. Under His benign rule nature need make no untimely moves, have no hesitations, nor experience drowsy reluctance. There is no law to produce mental darkness at high noon when all should be awake, clad in the armor of light. God's days are times of refreshing, and they replace the times of need and the times of trouble. In reality the children of light live in God's day, and there is no night there. As we read on page 510 of Science and Health, "Truth and Love enlighten the understanding, in whose 'light shall we see light;' and this illumination is reflected spiritually by all who walk in the light and turn away from a false material sense."

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday School, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

FREMONT, OHIO.—Sunday morning [Feb. 10] First Church of Christ, Scientist, corner of Park Avenue and Ewing Street, was dedicated. Christian Science was first introduced into Fremont about twenty years ago, and on October 4, 1900, nine persons met and organized, services being held at the home of one of the members until March 3, 1901, when a room on Croghan Street was rented. On July 17 of the same year Wednesday evening meetings were started. On March 1, 1904, more commodious and desirable rooms were rented on the first floor of a building on State Street. Another change was made May 1, 1911, when the church began to hold services in Colonial Hall. During these years the building fund had been steadily increasing, and after prayerful consideration the members of the church approved the purchase of a residence property, the present abode of the church. It was opened for the first service on January 2, 1916, and was cleared from all indebtedness on September 22 of the same year. The purchasing and remodeling of the building was an added demonstration of the spiritual understanding of substance and the overcoming of material limitation.—Fremont News.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Christian Science services are being held regularly on Sunday afternoons in the Bronx County Jail at 177th Street and Arthur Avenue under the auspices of Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist. These services were started November 19, 1916, and have continued harmoniously during the past year. Officials, keepers, attendants, and prisoners have expressed their earnest appreciation of this work. The Monitor has been a welcome guest here since the beginning of 1914.

YATES CENTER, KAN.—Literature has been distributed as follows: One hundred and fifty Sentinels, 25 Journals, 300 Monitors, and 100 newspapers containing lectures and other Christian Science articles.

BREWSTER, WASH.—The very quiet manner in which the Christian Science Society of Brewster started and completed their chapel, situated in the south part of the town, has caused us to overlook mentioning the fact before. We find this a very neat building, 18 by 36 feet, with a seating capacity of about fifty. Being of the bungalow style, it makes a very attractive addition to the residence district in which it is located.—Brewster Herald.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,

The Lectures

BOURNEMOUTH, ENGLAND (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by the Hon. Mrs. Helen Percy, who said in part:—

We are passing through a time of tension and testing for each individual character. To some these may seem dark days, to others they seem like the dawning of new and wonderful things. We seem to hear two great cries going up from humanity. First is the cry of bewilderment, the eternal child cry of "Why?" "What is it all about?" "What is the good of it?" "Why should we suffer?" Alongside that query is the cry of those who have seen a little more of what the great need of mankind really is, and their cry is the echo of the cry of the great poet Goethe: "Light, light, more light."

St. Paul says, "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." I am on this platform to-day because after eleven years' study of Christian Science and enjoyment of the benefits received from that study in my own life and home I have no shadow of doubt left that light—the light we all need—has come to the world through the open door of Christian Science.

Testimonies of Healing

Thirteen years ago I became acquainted with the teachings of Christian Science, when I was, so to speak, at the edge of the grave. From early childhood I suffered from an illness known as "spotted fever," also from a sense of fear, the effects of which I only now understand, having learned that fear is the root of all evil. Oftentimes my condition seemed unbearable, although the doctor did his best to help me. When I had been confined to my bed for several weeks, growing weaker all the time, my daughter heard of Christian Science and spoke to me about it. I was not able to form a judgment on the matter, but nevertheless gladly consented to receive treatment, so a lady came and spoke to my family about this new teaching. At first I was so confused that I could not understand any of the literature I read; however, as this lady had advised me to read as much as possible, I did so just to be obedient. After three weeks' treatment a considerable improvement set in and at the end of four weeks more, treatment was discontinued. I shall never forget the moment when the lady said she was no longer needed, that she could leave the work to me, so that by an ardent study I would grow in the understanding of Truth. There followed many a battle and many a doubt; but now I can testify with gladness that I have become a woman more joyful and more content. In my business, too, I have been able to recognize God's wisdom and love, and for this I am also deeply grateful.

My greatest desire is to assimilate more and more of this Christ-teaching, to know and to feel that neither height nor depth is able to separate me from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus. I am deeply grateful for the beautiful writings of our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, which have taught me to understand the Bible better. I am thankful also to all who have helped me along on my journey from sense to Soul.—Mrs. A. Gauss-Huber, Zürich, Switzerland.

I wish to add my testimony to that of my dear mother and give thanks for the great blessings which I have received through Christian Science. Various illnesses, such as scrofula, influenza, and rheumatism, have yielded to the power of Truth. I am very grateful for the physical healings, but the consciousness of being under the protection of God has made a new person of me. The certainty which Christian Science gives us that Life triumphs over death and that our dear ones who have passed on are progressing to a clearer understanding, has been a bright light to me in many a dark hour, enabling me to do my work more faithfully than if I had not known Mrs. Eddy's beautiful teachings.

There is much that remains to be overcome and to be worked out; confident, however, of the final victory of Truth, I am endeavoring not to look back, but to set my affection on things above. I am deeply indebted to our beloved Leader and thank all those who have helped me to a better understanding of God, the all-good.—Miss Ida Gauss.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude for all the blessings which Christian Science has brought into my life that I write this testimony. For over seven years I have proved that Truth is the actual life of man. When Christian Science was brought to my notice I had been an invalid for more than twelve years, owing to what the doctors diagnosed as valvular heart trouble accompanied by extreme weakness. I was also troubled with severe attacks of inflammatory rheumatism. Although everything was done for me in the way of strengthening foods and medicines, I could not walk without fainting, or exert myself in any way without extreme suffering. Every winter was spent in bed. Then some copies of the Christian Science Sentinel were sent to me, and when the friend who had sent them came to see me, I said I should like to read the book that was mentioned so many times—"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. This was lent me, and when reading it I saw that God is the only Life, and in the words of one of our beautiful hymns, I found "my Life, as God's own child" (Hymnal, p. 192). I put aside all material remedies, asked for treatment, and was healed. A fortnight after getting the textbook I was helping in the house, and from then until now have never spent a whole day in bed. I am in good health and lead a busy life doing God's work.

I have found the power of Truth potent to break all fetters, and only a life of purity and self-immolation can prove my gratitude to our beloved Leader for the revelation of the truth that makes free.

Mrs. Florence Smith, Horsforth, Leeds, England.

I have been a student of Christian Science more than a few years, and so numerous have been the proofs of the healing power of Truth that space and words are inadequate to tell of them, and memory could not recall them all. I know that healing does not always mean the overcoming of physical illness; fortunately I have had few experiences of that kind since taking up the study of this teaching. In the few instances when help has been needed to overcome physical ailments I have found Christian Science effectual. At one time I stepped off the upper step of a long flight of stairs leading into the cellar of my home, but the assurance of the omnipresence of God was with me. I was saved from any serious effects, although my family insisted on having a doctor called to examine me. I had struck on my face and that showed the only mark, being so bruised and my eyes so blackened that the doctor feared my eyesight was injured. He said that by the following day I would probably be in a worse condition, but thanks to the power of God, divine Love, and to my understanding of Christian Science, the next day found me as well as ever. By the end of three days no trace of the injury was left. No material remedy was used.

A few years ago, when visiting in Dallas, Texas, I attended the Sunday morning service at the Christian Science church as usual, but in the act of boarding a street car after the service I stepped directly in front of a passing automobile. The driver sounded the horn and I heard it but did not look toward it, feeling sure there was plenty of room for him to pass behind me if I moved quickly; however, the next thing I realized was that I was being carried along on the ground. Instantly the thought came that this might be the end of my existence here, yet with it came the realization of God's presence with me and that no harm could come to me; consequently there was no sense of fear. The automobile was stopped and I was raised to my feet by the driver, and others who witnessed the fall came to my assistance. The first words I spoke were, "I am not hurt; I am all right." I shall never forget the expression on that man's face when he looked into mine and said, "Can you really say that you are all right?" I replied that I was. The gratitude which I felt was beyond words, and immediately the beautiful promise in the ninety-first psalm came to me: "He shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Surely I was kept from serious harm by realizing that God is divine Love. A lady said later that it seemed impossible that I would be saved. I gave my testimony at the next Wednesday evening meeting, gladly expressing my gratitude; yet deep gratitude is continuous and can be proved only by daily living in an earnest endeavor to follow our Wayshower. Our Lesson-Sermon entitled, "God the Preserver of Man," brings to me a fuller sense of what that means, each time I study it.

With an earnest desire that the doubting of many may cease and the hope of the seemingly hopeless be stimulated, let me say that eighteen years ago Christian Science came to my attention, and in grateful acknowledgment of the results obtained from reading Mrs. Eddy's works I sent a testimony bearing witness to the same, which is given on page 617 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, in the chapter on Fruitage. I stand ready at all times to verify it as authentic. The professor of medicine had told my wife that I could live only a few months. Not only have I remained in good health since my healing, but our five children in infancy and upward have had no other help than Christian Science treatment when discordant conditions have arisen. In the Sentinel of August 29, 1903, I have a testimony concerning the healing of my eyesight after wearing glasses for nine years. This demonstration was made through realizing that sight is a normal spiritual gift, and through study of Mrs. Eddy's definition of eyes (Science and Health, p. 586) as "spiritual discernment,—not material but mental." The healing was perfect. In the question of supply I have also proved that God is the source of all good.

Mrs. Eddy states truly on page 2 of "Rudimental Divine Science": "Healing physical sickness is the smallest part of Christian Science. It is only the bugle-call to thought and action, in the higher range of infinite goodness."

C. E. MEYNELL, Philadelphia, Pa.

Christian Science is the greatest blessing that has come into my life, and words cannot express the deep gratitude I feel toward Mrs. Eddy for bringing to us this wonderful truth. Since 1910, the year that my attention was called to this teaching, we have had many proofs of the healing power of Truth. Through the study of the Bible, together with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," we have gained an understanding of God and our relationship to Him and are able to prove the truth. Even the youngest of our family, who is but three years old and knows no other treatment than Christian Science, can do many things to help himself.

One of our daughters, when two years old, became ill with what we thought was chicken pox. She awakened after a very restless night with a fever, and shortly afterward an eruption appeared all over her body. The fever became alarming and the body was very sore; in fact so sore that we had to lay her on pillows. Then we asked a Christian Science practitioner for treatment, with the result that the fever began to abate almost at once and the soreness to leave. By six o'clock her condition was much improved and she fell asleep, and the next morning she was a well, happy child. The healing was perfect. A short time ago our youngest son had a finger crushed in such a manner that the nail was forced off, and the injury was very painful. A cloth was laid around the finger and a practitioner was asked to treat the child. In a few minutes the pain was gone. The finger did not become sore or inflamed, and very soon a new nail had grown. An attack of quinsy was quickly overcome. The one suffering from this trouble seemed nearly strangled, but help in Christian Science was asked for and the healing was almost instantaneous. Only one treatment was given.

Tonsillitis, measles, whooping cough, sick headaches, biliousness, and many other ailments have yielded very quickly, many instantly, when the all-power of God has been declared.

For these and many other blessings that have come to me through this healing truth I am very grateful. I am also grateful for the Christian Science Sunday school, where the children are taught a religion which they can apply. One day my twelve-year-old son was riding on a wagon and he and the driver became so engaged in conversation that neither one noticed a small child in the street, until the horses, a rather fractious team, were upon her. My son closed his eyes and applied his understanding of the truth, and when he opened them the child was crawling from under the horses and was unhurt. Later I asked him what he thought when he saw the danger the child was in, and he said, "I knew God was her life." I was filled with a deep sense of gratitude when I realized what even a child can do. I am so grateful that I found Christian Science in time to bring up my children under its influence.

MRS. J. W. WENTSEL, Sterling, Ill.

For several years Christian Science has been the only remedy used in our home. At the time our youngest daughter was born my wife had absent treatment and a Christian Science nurse was present. When first learning to walk the child placed her hand on the stove, an air-tight heater made of thin sheet iron, which was very hot. To mortal sense she was badly burned, and I feel satisfied that had it not been for our understanding of Christian Science she would have slept none that night and would have had a bandaged hand for a week or two. As it was, the pain was overcome in a remarkably short time and the child went to bed and slept all night. It was a week or so before the hand looked like the other, but it apparently did not inconvenience her.

Christian Science has brought to me a greater realization of the meaning of the message of Christ Jesus, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Through the study of this teaching an irritating skin affliction of over twelve years' duration disappeared some fourteen months ago. All my life I had been troubled more or less with neuralgia during the changing of the seasons, and about two years ago I had an attack which was so severe it made me twitch. Not being able to overcome it through my own understanding of the truth, I went to a Christian Science practitioner for help. He gave me a treatment and told me to come back in an hour or two. I went into the reading room, and while reading Mrs. Eddy's poem "Christmas Morn" (Poems, p. 29), I was healed. I, however, went to see the practitioner as requested. Except a faint intimation of the ailment when the season changed again I have not been troubled with neuralgia since. These are two of the inharmonies which a knowledge of a more abundant life has cast out through the application of Christian Science.

I have indeed received many blessings through the study of the Bible together with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

JOHN CORMACK DILLON, Seattle, Wash.

When Christian Science was first brought to my notice in 1907, I was visiting my sister in Minneapolis, Minnesota. A Christian Scientist had lent her a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and also "Miscellaneous Writings." We both glanced through the books and were not at all antagonistic,—in fact my sister's little girl was attending the Christian Science Sunday school,—but we did not then care to read them; yet I was in great need of help, as I had not been well for years. Upon my return home I advised my friends to try Christian Science and often went to the building where the reading room was, but never seemed to have the courage to enter. In 1908 we went to Texas to live in a small town, and I sent our little daughter to the Christian Science Sunday school, although I did not attend the services myself. In the spring of 1909 I again visited my sister. Some six months before this she had turned to Christian Science to get help for her baby, who was suffering from an extreme case of skin disease. Three physicians had been tried, but the child was not healed. The healing took place three weeks after Christian Science treatment was begun. When my sister asked if I cared to accompany her when she called on the practitioner I gladly went. Words cannot express the joy I felt as a result of this visit to the practitioner and a number of others which I made before returning to my home. I forgot all about myself in my eagerness to learn more about God and man's relationship to Him.

I had never been a Bible student, although the Scriptures were constantly being discussed in the home of my parents, but through the study of Science and Health the Bible became a new book to me, and I have grown to love it. From the start I tried to put this teaching into practice, and as a result I found it never failed when rightly applied. Many healings came to me from the beginning. The constant habit of complaining about my ills left me, also chronic backache, from which I had suffered since childhood. Great comfort came when I learned to trust my little daughter to God's protection. The old sense of melancholy and weakness left me and was replaced by a peace that can be realized only by those who have experienced it.

After we had been studying Christian Science about eight months our little daughter, then five years old, was beautifully healed. She fell from a gate on which she was standing, and struck on the cement pavement. A gentleman who saw the accident called to know if she was hurt, and receiving no reply he went over to where she lay, unconscious, and brought her in to me. I was alone at the time, but I at once turned to God for help. Holding her in my arms I declared His allness and felt so confident of His presence that I placed her on the bed. I also turned to the ninety-first psalm, which strengthened me. For three hours and a half the child remained unconscious, tossing to and fro and muttering incoherently. I began to study our Lesson-Sermon for the week, and soon the child turned and smiled at me. She became greatly nauseated, but rising above the sense testimony I told her to know that her strength was in God. In a little while she went to sleep and slept all night. The next morning she was all right. There was not a mark on her body and not a pain manifested itself. This healing brought a wonderful spiritual uplift.

For nearly two years we have been living in the mountains, and until recently there has been no one near us interested in Christian Science. I have met a number of Christian Scientists in a little town seventeen miles away, but these meetings have been far between. In consequence I have found even more comfort in my study of the Bible and Science and Health, and many healings have come. In the fall of 1916 I became very ill with bilious fever. As time went on and I seemed unable to do my own mental work I wrote to a friend for help. The healing was slow, but I searched all the more earnestly for the truth and clung closer to God. I became very weak and suffered greatly at times, yet was able to be up and dressed every day and to do many little things that seemed necessary for me to do. During this time I rode into town to hear a Christian Science lecture, and this and also a letter from my friend helped me to realize what it meant to have a grateful heart. Then I began to search to see if I really was grateful for the blessings received; and by dwelling more on the good I lost sight of the evil and was healed.

While at present away from the church work I loved so much, I feel I now have a clearer realization of true membership and rejoice that no matter where I am I can do my part. I am grateful for all the healings experienced, yet they are nothing compared to the knowledge of God and of man's relationship to Him. I daily desire more to live the life of a true Christian Scientist, that I may show my love to our dear Leader in turn for all the blessings she has given the world through her consecrated life and through her writings. I am grateful for all our periodicals, which mean more than ever to me now; and also to the many who have helped me to gain a clearer understanding of the truth. Above all I am thankful to God for Christian Science.

MRS. RUBY DODGE FEDERLE, Santa Maria, Cal.

The following was the verdict delivered to my wife when seeking information as to the results of my affliction over four years ago, and was given by one of the foremost surgeons in our city: "Within three years all such sufferers become fully paralyzed if they live even that long." About a year and a half before, when in a hospital, I was told that I never again would have the use of my legs or of my hand; that I would remain a helpless cripple. I was, however, persuaded to try Christian Science and am now in perfect health, stronger and more vigorous than for many years; in fact, better than ever before in my life.

When a friend first spoke to me of Christian Science I scoffed and ridiculed much; indeed, not until the time arrived when for twelve nights my suffering was indescribable and I had anywhere from six to twelve spasms each night, leaving me in a very weak condition, and I saw that medicine was not giving me the slightest relief, did I accept his kind invitation to attend the Christian Science services. I went the following Sunday, and to say I was astonished at finding myself able to rise at the close without leaning upon the back of the pew in front of me, is to express my feeling very mildly. During this hour I suffered no pain, but became calm and peaceful and enjoyed the service much, even though it was quite different from that to which I had been accustomed for many years. That evening I received my first treatment, and to my great surprise slept through the entire night without a twitch of any sort although I had been having those spasms regularly every night for many months. I awoke feeling perfectly rested and quite ready to eat, which was also something unusual. That morning I walked two miles to business, where my friend greeted me and rejoiced over my healing, which was now well under way. My feet remained somewhat numb for a short period, but that condition too was entirely overcome, and I became normal in every respect.

I have also been healed of the liquor habit, with which I was bound for many years until I became almost a derelict. This healing was brought about through the reading of "Miscellaneous Writings" by Mrs. Eddy, although I was in a state of tremens at the time. Everything which was considered safe had been tried, including treatment at numerous sanatoriums and many private cures, but not until I came in touch with the healing power of Truth could I see deliverance from this curse. I have had many trials such as led me formerly to forget my troubles, at least temporarily, by taking to the bottle, but God has always helped me when temptation came close. I would just apply the truth as it had been taught me.

If a doubt should arise in the thought of a reader as to my reading of "Miscellaneous Writings," how I could read at all when in such a condition, let me say that I did not sense any of it for nearly three days, but I heard the still, small voice of Truth commanding me to read and kept at it, sometimes through the day and much of the night, until I gently emerged, not needing straps or any other restraining device. I have had other healings of which I would like to speak but have already used considerable space, so will simply say that I am truly thankful that this healing truth was brought to me, thankful for the innumerable blessings which followed each healing and for this privilege of telling others of my redemption. There is yet work to be accomplished in the way of supply, of more peace, and a far better understanding of Principle, God, but I now know that God is my life. Once I was lame, but now I can walk; once I was a drunkard, but now I am a clean, sober Christian man; once I was spiritually blind, but now I can see. It is beyond the power of pen to express my gratitude for Christian Science, and I am hourly striving to prove it in actions and deeds, as words avail nothing.

EDMUND BARTELS, Brooklyn, N. Y.

My heart goes out in deepest gratitude for the many blessings received through the application and study of Christian Science. For many years I was almost constantly under the care of a physician. Material methods of all kinds failed, and many symptoms were aggravated. When Christian Science was presented to me I reached out for it as the last resort, and my efforts to find help through its teachings have brought blessings innumerable.

When I was a small child a firecracker destroyed the sight of my right eye. A few years afterward, when I was fitted with glasses, the oculist said that the accident having occurred when I was a child the development of the nerves had ceased in my right eye and the left one was affected, causing a structural defect and headaches, for which the glasses were worn. He said that nothing could be done for the right eye. The headaches and eye trouble continued and became worse after wearing glasses for several years, but I had read only a few chapters of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, when this condition was instantaneously overcome and the glasses were discarded. The sight of the right eye was gradually restored, and I have had normal sight for over eight years. Besides this, a discordant home has been changed to one of love and harmony through the study of Christian Science. In our family, headaches of several years' standing have been overcome, and so-called chronic stomach disorder, a severe case of erysipelas, colds, and many other ailments have yielded to the power of Truth.

Over five years ago my mother fell fourteen feet into a stone driveway when a porch rail gave way. Both hands were broken, concussion of the brain resulted, and there was a cut on the right leg from a rusty nail. A physician was called to set the bones, and he said it was impossible for her to recover. A Christian Science practitioner was then called, and the intense pain left with the first treatment. In four days my mother was up. The physician did not apply any material remedies, and when he redressed the hands a week later expressed great surprise that there was no inflammation. He later said the use of the right hand would never be regained, but I rejoice to say that my mother can do everything required in a household and is enjoying the best of health. Mrs. Eddy says, "Every trial of our faith in God makes us stronger" (Science and Health, p. 410). The spiritual growth which came with this healing made possible six months later a case of mental surgery, when the left hand was again broken, but was healed through the power of Truth. Several weeks after this while my mother was calling on the physician on business, he asked to examine the hands, and on doing so said that the left hand was perfectly knit together.

The Bible, which had been rarely used, is now greatly valued. The light our textbook throws upon it does indeed make its teachings practical. I am thankful to God, who we know is Love, and grateful to our beloved Leader, who through her loving patience and perseverance has again brought to mankind this glorious truth.

MISS STELLA M. PARKER, Cincinnati, Ohio.

That "man's extremity is God's opportunity" was proved in the event of my taking up the study of Christian Science. The "grim reaper" had taken my dear companion, leaving me heartbroken and alone to provide for two little ones and myself. We had been ardent workers in a so-called orthodox church, but when I was told that God was the author of my bereavement and that I should bow in submission to divine decree, I at once became rebellious. I became a doubter, and all interest in the church vanished; I could not praise God, who, I was told, had brought this suffering into my life.

About two years later my attention was called to Christian Science; and tempest tossed and longing for something besides the human upon which to lean, I began the study of this life-giving truth. Here I learned that God had no part in mortal suffering; that His decree is life and health, peace and prosperity. Disease in many forms has been laid low by the application of this truth which makes men free. A structural defect of the eyes, scarlet fever, measles, colds, tonsillitis, and influenza have been overcome, also lack, unrest, resentfulness, a critical nature, and a fiery temper have been seen to vanish in the sunlight of God's love as taught by Mrs. Eddy in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Christian Science has been my physician for over eight years, and to-day I know that my life has been richer, more harmonious, less selfish, and more useful than it could have been without some understanding of this teaching. Praise and glory are due to God for giving unto us Mrs. Eddy, whose unswerving, prayerful efforts reinstated the healing religion as taught by Jesus the Christ.

MRS. ROSE M. KOOGLE, Durango, Col.

About two years ago I became interested in Christian Science. For twenty years before that time I was an unbeliever in this teaching, although I knew about it. My disease was a long-standing case of stomach trouble, and for years I tried medicines of all kinds, but found only temporary relief. The trouble would return in a worse form than before. I was advised by my son-in-law to have Christian Science treatment, and am thankful that I did, for I have found it a wonderful remedy and am gaining in health every day. I am indeed grateful to Mrs. Eddy, and even more thankful to God for the spiritual uplift received since coming into Christian Science.—W. M. SEIPEL, Saylorsburg, Pa.

[Northwestern Christian Advocate]

That the war is modifying our beliefs cannot be disputed. Where we are bound would be hard to determine now. There is no Pisgah's height from which to view the promised land. We must feel our way day by day o'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till the night is done. But in this we may be confident: out of the fire of war will come a purified nation, and with this process of cleansing will come a purged church.

[The Methodist Recorder]

As there can be no great individual life until there is a great and regenerate individual heart, so there can be no truly great state until that state stands possessed of a regenerate heart. You cannot build a great social fabric, in which men shall come to their own and find the great treasures and joys that life has to offer them, upon a foundation of purely material and selfish interest. In other words, there can be no true greatness apart from greatness of soul; no true happiness apart from God; nothing abiding, save what is built upon the Eternal.

[Rev. John Gardner, D.D., in Record of Christian Work]

We Christian people fail in our comprehension of the atonement, and we fail in the significance of our Christian life, because we will not believe that Jesus of Nazareth was a real man. The difficulty of the Christian church has not been with the divinity of Christ. The vast majority of Christians in all ages have believed in the divinity of Christ. The great overwhelming majority of believers in this present day do not hesitate to ascribe unto him all the glories that are expressed in the ancient creeds; but as in the beginning, so now, we do not believe as we ought to believe that Jesus of Nazareth was a real man, taking a real risk, facing real temptation, confronting real sin, just as you and I have to do, fighting it with weapons, with the weapons and only with the weapons which are in your hands and mine. That is the big problem. We have to face it. We have to consider his manhood.

[Rev. James F. Halliday in The Christian Work]

The statesman of the future will be an interpreter of life. He will take God into his calculations. He will not be satisfied to see everything through the eye of the mind alone. Spiritual vision is a necessity; and the new statesman will be a man of spiritual vision.

"The Foe In Ambush"

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR has a double duty to perform for humanity in this age.

First. To record and interpret the human events which are the signs and evidences of the dawn of the Science of Christianity after the long night wherein faith and understanding have been bound in the grasp of matter and physical organization.

Second. To uncover and expose to the light of publicity and honest analysis the operations of evil and reaction in both its grosser and its higher attenuations which seek through individuals, organizations, and nations to perpetuate the misrule of selfishness, autocracy, and occultism.

> "Many are willing to open the eyes of the people to the power of good resident in divine Mind, but they are not so willing to point out the evil in human thought, and expose evil's hidden mental ways of accomplishing iniquity.
> "Why this backwardness, since exposure is necessary to ensure the avoidance of the evil? . . . Who is telling mankind of the foe in ambush? Is the informer one who sees the foe? If so, listen and be wise. Escape from evil, and designate those as unfaithful stewards who have seen the danger and yet have given no warning" —Mary Baker Eddy (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, pp. 570-571).

The following grateful testimony from a subscriber is an indication that THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is performing this duty. "The editorial entitled 'The Modern Torquemada' is an admirable and conclusive summing up of the case against compulsory medicine. I am grateful for the light and courage the MONITOR is bringing to this and other menacing tendencies of the human mind. The MONITOR is making the world safe for Christian Science, and shelters me while I work out my problems."

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission to the world has been opened through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at training cantonments, at nominal postage, literature offered by individuals at post offices or to postmen in the United States. A printed notice, signed by the Postmaster-General, on the front of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, and Le Héraut de Christian Science, explains the simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science reading room to mail them regularly as desired.

VOLUME XX APRIL 13, 1918 NUMBER 33

The Coming of the Son of Man

EZRA W. PALMER

THE distinction between spirituality and materiality is being clearly discerned by a larger number of people than ever before in the world's history, and this great boon to humanity has become practicable through the discovery of Christian Science. Christian Science makes clear the line of demarcation between the universe of Mind, God, and the world of sense phenomena, and to see this is the great need of humanity to-day, because without knowing the difference between the workings of the divine energies of Spirit and the aggressive forces of evil we can have no intelligent grasp of events and phenomena in individual affairs or of the tremendous struggle of the nations.

Christian Scientists understand more clearly, doubtless, than any other body of Christians the absolute nature of Spirit, its all-inclusiveness, immutability, omniscience, and omnipresence; and they are also cognizant of the evanescent, unsubstantial, and illusive character of the material world and of physical sense testimony. They recognize that God is the all-knowing Mind, that man in reality is wise, intelligent, deathless, perfect, spiritual, because he receives these qualities from his Father, divine Love. They likewise know that human, mortal man is the mere counterfeit of the real man, and that their chief business in life is to "put off the old man with his deeds" and to demonstrate the fact of man's real existence as a spiritual being, the child of God, utterly divorced from materiality.

Christ Jesus came to earth to show men the way of eternal life, and he made this way clear and plain by opening the understanding of men so that they could grasp the nature of the things of Spirit, and thus become aware that matter, mortality, ritualism, lust for power, sin, sickness, and all the manifestations of sense phenomena, are mere dream shadows without law and without Principle. Christ Jesus was the Son of God, but in order to leaven the darkened thoughts of mortals and gently lead them along the straight and narrow path from sense to Soul "he was appointed to speak God's word and to appear to mortals in such a form of humanity as they could understand as well as perceive" (Science and Health, p. 332). Jesus is often referred to in the Bible, and particularly in the gospels, in Romans, Hebrews, the first epistle of John, also in Revelation, as the Son of man and as the Son of God. In his absolute selfhood he was the Christ, the Son of God; as the man Jesus, the anointed of God, he was the Son of man who came to present the spiritual idea in such a form that men could comprehend it. The understanding of this spiritual idea, the Christ, heals them of the ills of mortality and demonstrates life eternal. A most inspiring and valuable study is to compare and ponder the various passages of Scripture where Christ Jesus is spoken of as the Son of man or as the Son of God. By this study and by the study of correlated passages in our Leader's writings we can understand how "the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us."

Now this advent of the Son of man, this appearing of a more spiritual sense of existence, comes daily and hourly to human consciousness. It is a continuous calling to mortals to rise out of human beliefs. Since Christian Science has been given to the world, the coming of the Son of man has become better understood, and his sign in the heavens—the healing of sin and sickness by spiritual power—has been more and more clearly discerned. Christian Science makes clear the redemptive mission of the Son of man, because it separates truth from error and presents to men the opportunity of proving the great facts of God and His universe.

The effect on mortals of this ever recurring consciousness of the spiritual idea depends on the manner in which mortals receive it. If they "put off the old man with his deeds," joyfully accept the coming of the Son of man, gladly acknowledge their unity with God, they can truly say with the wise men, "We have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him." Referring to these willing seekers, Jesus said with ineffable tenderness, "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost;" and, "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Mortals are not, however, always willing or ready to accept this coming of the Son of man. They are prone to resist the divine appeal, and this resistance manifests itself in the warfare between the Spirit and the flesh, in which sin, sickness, and death are finally exterminated.

On various occasions Jesus made perfectly clear that his mission was not only to lead men to possess their divine heritage as sons of God, but also to destroy, with spiritual power, the errors that held them in bondage; because, unless the power of Truth frees men from evil, they cannot attain that singleness and purity of thought by which alone they come into the presence of God. Referring to the power of Truth to melt and refine the sinful, stubborn mentality, Jesus said, "I am come to send fire on the earth;" and on another occasion, referring to those who cry, "Peace, peace; when there is no peace," in the warfare between Truth and error, he said: "I came not to send peace, but a sword." He clearly portrayed the opposite effects produced upon the thought purified and prepared, and upon the darkened mentality which resists the truth. When those who are waiting for the appearing of the Son of man see the "distress of nations, . . . the sea and the waves roaring," they have the Master's admonition: "Then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." But of those who refuse his benign call the Master said that when the "sign of the Son of man" shall appear in heaven "then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." What is the sign of the Son of man but the healing power of Christian Science destroying sin, disease, and death, and proving man's eternal at-one-ment with God? And who are the tribes of the earth that mourn but those mortals who hold to the illusions of corporeality, are "of the earth, earthy," and who mourn when, despite their resistance, their pet sins, their ease in sensual living, and their false pleasures vanish in pain and woe like dry straw in a fiery furnace.

The Master spoke of "the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." Now, it depends upon each of us individually, as well as upon nations, whether we see the Son of man coming "in the clouds" or with "great glory." Doubtless "the sign of the Son of man," as seen in the manifestation of purified public opinion that will irresistibly destroy the liquor traffic, seems a cloud to its proponents. So likewise to the self-willed, dominating human thought that would refuse woman the right of suffrage, this great reform seems a cloud, a darkness, a turning back from conventional standards. But to advanced thinkers these reforms and upward steps are hailed with joy, because they bring freedom, power, and glory to millions of men and women; and this freedom, power, and glory are not confined to those who joyfully accept spiritual things: the blessings of the spiritual idea, the divine ever presence of Spirit, reach and bless all men. "Your Father," said the compassionate Master, ". . . sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." So, too, when the law of divine justice destroys for mortals their evil beliefs, whether they first agree or not, and they find that through the pangs they suffer these evils are no longer profitable or pleasurable, they also find, when they turn from them and their understanding is awakened, that divine Love is ever tender, ever healing, and that "behind a frowning providence He hides a smiling face." These mistaken ones, when purified and chastened, find to their joy that they are not lost, that their lot is not worse, but that, on the contrary, their lives are better, freer, happier than ever before.

Christian Scientists rejoice in the coming of the Son of man. By their prayers, their demonstrations of the ever presence of God, they are hastening his appearing. They know that human resistance cannot stop or hinder the victorious advance of the omnipotent, spiritual idea, the Holy Ghost, which will uncover and destroy all evil of whatsoever nature, and that the Christ, the Son of the living God, will be made manifest to all the children of God. The arousing of evil, the raging of the great red dragon, the stirring of latent mortal beliefs manifested in "wars and rumours of wars," and in nation rising against nation, do not overwhelm them. These phenomena show merely that evil is being uncovered and destroyed. They testify that the leaven of truth is at work in human consciousness, purging it of all evil. When this is accomplished then shall all men rejoice in the goodness, wisdom, and power of God, and say with the Revelator: "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down."

The Highest Decision

MARY EDVINA WALKER

IT has been said that we are constantly at some point of decision. That is to say, according to Webster's definition of the word judge (which bears important relation to the word decision), we are constantly called upon "to hear and determine, . . .. to compare facts or ideas, and perceive their relations and attributes, and thus distinguish truth from falsehood; to exercise the judgment." At best, so-called mortal consciousness, a paradoxical term, finds itself unequal to the task of fulfilling the demands of the definition quoted, for the ancient question "What is truth?" remains unanswered as far as this consciousness is concerned.

As spiritual understanding unfolds and man's dominion over all forms of error becomes apparent, it will be found that a Christianly scientific decision must always include three parts, which may be said to correspond, in their consecutive address to thought, to the "first lessons" of the children in the Christian Science Sunday school. In Section 3 of Article XX of the Manual these are given as follows: "The Ten Commandments (Exodus, 20:3-17), the Lord's Prayer (Matt. 6:9-13), and its Spiritual Interpretation by Mary Baker Eddy, Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5:3-12)."

Whatever the problem before us, to be mentally awake is to hear the summons, the clear, strong warning, "Hear, O Israel: The Lord our God is one Lord." This leads us to consider the commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and to perceive which one of the details enumerated throughout the remaining nine of the Ten Commandments, for our safeguarding, is calling upon us to test our loyalty to the First Commandment. Alert to gird itself, spiritual-mindedness turns to the Father, infinite Mind, in prayer, joyously laying hold of the knowledge of God's allness and ever presence, and of man's place and duty in His creation as infinite idea, in very truth beholding the face of the Father which is in heaven.

Then spiritual blessings stand revealed, the problem has been already solved, the highest decision has been given, for human will and mortal density have alike been laid aside, and human opinion and belief given pause. When the effort is made to "distinguish truth from falsehood" (material evidence), and the real power invoked, Life, Truth, and Love appear to the rightful heir. On page 271 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes, "The Sermon on the Mount is the essence of this Science, and the eternal life, not the death of Jesus, is its outcome."

Forward Footsteps

HUGH MEWHA

FOR many years prior to coming to Canada I was a local preacher connected with the Methodist church in Ireland, and as such was recommended to the Methodist church in America. I suppose I should still be associated with that body were it not that a friend had a remarkable healing through Christian Science after medical methods had done their best and failed. This lady was as loyal to her church as I was to mine, and before she would accept treatment she and her husband requested me to get some first-hand information regarding this teaching.

I shall not soon forget the first Christian Science meeting I attended. The whole tone of the service was such a contrast to what I had anticipated, and I knew at once that I was hearing the truth. In all my Biblical studies of former years I had one thing in my favor, and this was that I did not study the Scriptures for the purpose of proving denominational theology but to ascertain the truth. After all my weary wanderings through the wilderness of doubt and error I realized at this service that I had found the link so long looked for, the link of truth between God, good, and man. Of course I at once recommended my friend to apply for Christian Science treatment. She did so, and is to-day a healthy and happy woman. That was between two and three years ago; and I have since then had many personal demonstrations of the efficacy of Christian Science.

If it were a mere theory, or were incapable of being applied, Christian Science would be of no more value to the world to-day than are the traditions of the elders; but its beauty and grandeur lie in the fact that there is no conceivable phase of human experience which it cannot touch and transform. It is true that most people are drawn to its acceptance because of physical healing; yet physical healing is not the alpha nor yet the omega of its teaching. Mrs. Eddy states in "Rudimental Divine Science" (p. 2): "Healing physical sickness is the smallest part of Christian Science. It is only the bugle-call to thought and action, in the higher range of infinite goodness."

If a Christian Scientist were asked what Christian Science teaches, I do not know that he could give a more concise answer than is found on page 340 of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," where Mrs. Eddy declares: "One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations; constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars; fulfils the Scripture, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself;' annihilates pagan and Christian idolatry,—whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political, and religious codes; equalizes the sexes; annuls the curse on man, and leaves nothing that can sin, suffer, be punished or destroyed." This is a message with healing in its wings, soaring the wide world over, and bringing liberty to the captives of sense in every land, even in that dear land once called the "Island of Saints," whence there will once again go forth many to proclaim this new-old gospel of Love to the uttermost parts of the earth. In Isaiah we read, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."

"It shall not come nigh thee"

ADELE HULL KELLOGG

"OH, how I love God!" Such was the involuntary outcry of a woman who had just passed unscathed through one of the greatest calamities of modern times. The rumbling earthquake of Christmas night, 1917, had turned more than a hundred thousand people into the streets homeless, and had left many others among the ruins. Guatemala City had fallen! The warning shock came at eleven o'clock at night and inside half an hour the rich capital of the Republic of Guatemala lay in ruins.

In June we had returned to this beautiful southland. In August, the first Christian Science services were begun in our home with from five to eleven persons in attendance. A wonderful healing that had previously taken place awakened much interest in the truths of Christian Science and brought inquirers. Other healings followed, and soon over a dozen people were earnestly studying the literature so kindly sent by the publication committee, and reading the Monitor, besides two copies of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" sent by a student's association. Our second reader provided copies of the Quarterly, and daily we were rising through faithful study out of the stupefying beliefs of materiality into the consciousness of spiritual reality that means deliverance from captive sense.

About two months after our services had started there began to sound in my consciousness the words of the seventh verse of the ninety-first psalm: "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee." At first I believed this reiteration to be merely an echo of thought, but I finally came to accept it as a promise of entire protection,—from what I could not even surmise. Three months passed with these words of promise beating a rhythmic accompaniment to my steps. Thought rose on wings of faith until the entire consciousness was flooded with the understanding that God alone has presence and power. With this all-pervading sense of the ever presence and the allness of God and the consequent nothingness of evil, one who was crippled, suddenly stood free, literally leaping, and praising God. A surgeon of much repute had just pronounced it necessary to cut open the foot and again break and scrape the bone, but Christian Science spoke the "Peace, be still" and ushered into the waiting consciousness the redemptive truth that man is never at the mercy of so-called material laws.

Fortified and uplifted by ever increasing proofs of the truth of Christian Science we came finally to that Christmas night of 1917 in Guatemala. An hour had just been spent with one who seemed to be entering the "valley of the shadow," and the spoken words of Truth as set forth in our beloved textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, had so opened the floodgates of consciousness as to illumine sense with the fact of the indestructibility of being. Three of us were imbued with the peace and calm of him who said: "I am the resurrection, and the life." In less than a half hour eight in the same house stood awaiting whatever might be the material end of one of the most devastating earthquakes in history. I had sprung to my door with the first shock, to find it jammed; but the next tremble released it and I stood free. We fled into the patio, or small inside garden around which all Spanish houses are built, and instantly an inner voice seemed to warn me that I was about to be crushed by a falling timber. Immediately, as a clarion call, there came again that promise which had been as a companion for all those weeks, and as I heard the final words, "It shall not come nigh thee," a peace fell upon me which seemed to render me impervious to all fear. Gathering together the screaming servants, I bade them have no fear, for God would protect us, and the absolute conviction of the truth of the promise contained in the words calmed them.

Then came the final shock, which was like the crash of doom. We were thrown forward on to a barrel of ferns, and at this moment a huge pillar came plunging down within a foot of us; one whole side of our house fell outward. But the eight in our house escaped without injury; the supposedly dying man walked out; his wife, who had always been prostrated by every disturbance, was fearless and active, and all of us began praising God for deliverance, as taught and demonstrated in Christian Science. Some one may say that this might have happened without Christian Science. True; but no human being could have passed through such an experience fearlessly without a knowledge of its demonstrable truths.

The nine nights and days that followed were spent in the street beside our house, where a smaller house had completely fallen. We were five women, one child, and two helpless men, and upon me fell the responsibility of caring for us all. Some told me afterward that they thought me half crazy when they saw me twisting and tearing timbers out of the ruins, and wondered what I was about. My husband was out of the city and there was no one to help me build a shelter. But, mindful of the fact that we have to go forth by faith at all times, not even knowing whither we are going, I collected the timber for a tent, ropes to tie it, and rugs to cover it. Then came need for a saw, hammer, and nails, and I was directed to the very spot where these were buried deep in adobe and plaster, which spot had to be reached by crawling under the fallen stable roof. As the quakes continued at frequent intervals during all of this time, nothing but the peace consequent upon the divine promise could have given me courage and strength to go on.

Just as I had assembled all of the material necessary for building a tent, a stranger who was passing offered assistance, and this was the only aid that we had during those days, as each had enough to do in caring for his own. But this fully demonstrated the fact that if we go forward in full faith

God does give the increase. Every need was almost miraculously met, so that those who saw exclaimed; one in bondage for thirty years to belief in a weak back was freed, so that the work of a strong man was done without any ill effects; the nine days and nights that were passed in the street under seemingly impossible conditions resulted in no harm; and, wholly through demonstration as we are taught in Christian Science, one woman was enabled to care for and house the family so suddenly given into her care.

On the night of the first shock, as our house partially fell, we went into the street and awaited the dawn. The shocks were continual until morning, and with each we could hear the crashing inside the walls. It seemed as if everything must be wholly demolished, but there quickly came the realization that as thoughts are things, I could not possibly have the experience of destroyed possessions except as I allowed my thought to dwell in the realm of material illusion. In the morning when we reentered the house we found that ten dollars would cover the entire loss! The walls of three of the rooms had been almost covered by pictures and ornaments which had been mostly swept on to the tile floors by the plaster as it fell, but not a picture was injured or a glass cracked, and only two cheap ornaments were broken! Several saw this and gave Christian Science full credit for "the miracle," for how else, they asked, could glass fall from such high places on to tile floors and be prevented from breaking?

We received great and wonderful lessons from the experience, but none of more value than one that came from two incidents worthy of recital. The lesson taught was that evil has no power of its own, and we can either bestow upon it what power it seems to have or so disarm it that it has neither semblance nor expression. For instance, because I had literally filled my thought with the sense of the allness of God, the earthquake in all its horror did not come nigh me. But I had not yet been able to wipe out a personal sense of injustice,—a sense of aggrievement over a belief of being imposed upon. Then, after my husband returned, we had a shake far more violent than any. It lasted over ten minutes, and the pandemonium caused by the crashing ruins was indescribable. One could neither see nor breathe as mortar and adobe plunged in all directions, even coming to within a few feet of us; but when it had passed my husband exclaimed, "Wasn't that dust terrible!" Of the earthquake he knew no fear, while the dust had brought to him a sense of dread and terror! Right there I saw that we give evil all the power it has.

But the greatest lesson gained was that of the utter futility of giving any value to material possessions. For five years we had been earnestly striving to learn this truth and to know that only in our Father's house of many mansions are we safe. This lesson was, however, hard to learn because the belief of value in matter is universal and tenacious, and only through fasting and prayer can we recover from the false belief that we can ourselves own something. Our sudden plunge from plenty to poverty was hard, but blessed, as we now know, for the bitter experience was but the open door to the imperishable possessions of spirituality. As thought was awakened to the one reality our needs were supplied in a small way, but not until after we had faced the severest want. Firmly we stood by the fact that God is all and meets our every need, although at times fear stood at the door and clamored for admission. Again there seemed no end to the heart-breaking problem, but truth as taught in Christian Science always sped us on our way.

For two years my husband had struggled to get possession of a large, well-known finca or plantation in this country, but just as he had it about financed, the war came and ended it all. Then we turned away from material planning, began the services in Christian Science in our home, gave much time and study to the cause, and left all in the hands of God.

Inside of two months after we had stopped striving the owner gave us complete possession of the whole big property upon satisfactory terms. So when the earthquake came and ruined those of means who had been sorry for us, they exclaimed, "How fortunate you are! For you have a home and we have nothing!" Overnight, positions had changed. Earthly possessions had gone into their native nothingness and the faithful planting of spiritual seed for five years had begun to bring in visible returns. But we knew that it was due to nothing less than the unfailing operation of divine law, and this had given us a home and a refuge from the storm. Outside of the earthquake belt and already self-supporting, the finca will furnish homes and employment for many destitute people. The calamity which befell the capital has already brought some eighty thousand persons to this part of the Republic, so the question of labor and market is solved for us and a more rational life is afforded them. Thus has the wrath of man been made to serve God. We still have a big demonstration ahead of us in the development of this property, but we have fully proved that whenever we work for the glory of God, His grace is sufficient for us.

Our Daily Newspaper

OSCAR R. DELLIEHAUSEN

UNTIL the outbreak of the world war I had been a reader of The Christian Science Monitor for over four years and had derived great pleasure, enlightenment, and other benefits from its pages. With the commencement of hostilities, having been born in one of the belligerent countries, I wanted to read all I could about the war in daily papers and magazines, with the result that I became more and more confused and gave up the reading of the Monitor, thinking it was partial and unfair in dealing with this question.

For a few weeks after this I did not read the Monitor but gave all my attention to other daily newspapers and periodicals. When I began to fail physically, I came very quickly to the realization that I had strayed from the narrow path, and was not getting the correct viewpoint about this struggle. The only thing I could do was to go humbly back to reading only The Christian Science Monitor and our other authorized periodicals. These with the Bible and the works of Mrs. Eddy after that comprised my reading. This change created a great upheaval or chemicalization, but little by little I began to see the truth not alone about the world crisis but also about my own affairs. I found that I was free-born, and with this conviction there came better health, more understanding, peace and harmony and increased activity for good.

After this experience, for which I am very grateful, I saw clearly why our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, gave to the world The Christian Science Monitor. On page 353 of Miscellany she states, "The object of the Monitor is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." No one since Christ Jesus saw more clearly than did our Leader what it is that fetters mortal man, makes him a slave to evil desires, passions, sickness, and other discordant conditions, and holds the race in bondage. She saw the hidden forces which try to keep mankind in darkness and ignorance and misery, and found that one of the most forceful weapons of the carnal mind, both voluntary and involuntary, is the daily press, the ideals of which are based on mortal mind concepts and point to financial gain. In Science and Health (p. 196) she says, "The press unwittingly sends forth many sorrows and diseases among the human family." She also knew that as the student of Christian Science progresses in the study of the Bible and of her works, he needs a clear, unprejudiced metaphysical view of the daily happenings and affairs of interest to mankind all over the world. The Christian Science Monitor is successfully filling this great need, and has established to-day a world-wide reputation for its artistic execution, for its cleanliness of news and advertising, for the correctness of its information, and for its extraordinary methods of news gathering.

On page 352 of Miscellany Mrs. Eddy says, "My desire is that every Christian Scientist, and as many others as possible, subscribe for and read our daily newspaper." Are we all helping to fulfill this desire of our revered Leader, especially in regard to reading the Monitor? Every student knows that by being obedient to her teachings he receives unthought-of blessings, and the same is true concerning this desire.

Perfection Demanded

MARY PAULINE PERKINS

AT the present time a great deal is heard about knitting, and it seems to engross the feminine portion of each community, from the children whose hands are so tiny they can scarcely manage the needles to the grandmothers and great-grandmothers. In this work a certain number of stitches must be cast, then each stitch must be carefully knitted until a row is completed. Proceeding with the work, stitch by stitch and row after row, and following the directions carefully, the knitter will eventually finish the garment. If through carelessness a single stitch has been dropped or some other mistake made, it will show in the garment, and the work must be taken out to the point where the mistake occurred, and done over again.

In working out our problems in Christian Science it is well to remember that Mrs. Eddy tells us (Science and Health, p. 174): "Truth is revealed. It needs only to be practised." If we put into practice Christly thoughts, true thoughts, as they come to us, we soon have a demonstration or proof of the allness of Truth. Continuing to accept as true or real only good thoughts and rejecting all others, we have more demonstrations and begin to grow in understanding.

There must, however, be no careless work. We read on page 240 of Science and Health, "If mortals are not progressive, past failures will be repeated until all wrong work is effaced or rectified." Should a mistake occur, it must be rectified immediately, or it will mar our work and may cause us much trouble to find where the wrong thought crept in. It can, however, be found and corrected.

As in knitting, the perfection and beauty of the garment depends upon the faultlessness of each stitch, so in working out our salvation, shaping our lives according to the pattern shown "in the mount," perfect work depends upon the purity of each thought and its devotion to Principle. We should work so as to deserve the Master's "Well done, good and faithful servant."

["Cause and Effect"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 12, 1918]

Cause and effect are inseparable, but precept is possible without practice, just as is theory without demonstration. All of which conclusively proves that neither theory nor precept is cause. The Bible, which, if it is anything, is a great, scientific textbook, makes this perfectly clear. "He that believeth on me," Jesus said, "the works that I do shall he do also," and so, when he sent out his disciples, it was to preach the gospel and to heal the sick, in other words, to illustrate the coincidence between cause and effect. How futile, indeed, is precept without example, or theory without practice, is made clear by the apostle James. "Faith," said he, "without works is dead;" in other words, a faith which is dead is not causation, because no effects follow. Thus precept without practice is in the same category as faith without works. It is, that is to say, dead, as dead as a theory incapable of demonstration.

The Roman philosophers of the early years of the Christian era called this demonstration a miraculum, and out of this has been derived the English word miracle, the true significance of which scholastic theology, having no mind to accept Jesus' command literally, has eluded by the simple method of in turn defining it as supernatural. Such an exhibition of cause and effect as the raising of Lazarus, or the walking on the water, is, of course, to the human mind, entirely metaphysical, or beyond the physical, but this is only because of the human mind's ignorance of Principle. Mrs. Eddy has, indeed, explained this, with her usual marvelous clarity, on page 126 of Science and Health, where she writes: "The point at issue between Christian Science on the one hand and popular theology on the other is this: Shall Science explain cause and effect as being both natural and spiritual? Or shall all that is beyond the cognizance of the material senses be called supernatural, and be left to the mercy of speculative hypotheses?"

Now what a man demonstrates is always his own knowledge of anything. If his knowledge is purely material, he soon discovers that his premises are forever changing, for the very simple reason that there is no Principle in them. The verification of this is written in a million textbooks, from the Ethics of Aristotle to the Summa of Aquinas, and from the theories of Abelard to the speculations of Kelvin, themselves nothing but a mental Sahara of shifting sands. But if a man has caught one glimpse of the spiritual, he has found the rock of Principle, and his knowledge will begin to expand, just as the dawn broadens into day. How scientific this knowledge is, he will discover by the ease with which he will be able to account for every failure equally with every success, and by the certainty with which he will be able to assure himself that the world regards the demonstration of spiritual law as supernatural, not by reason of anything it knows about it, but solely by reason of its ignorance of it. Then, at last, he will begin to understand what Christ Jesus meant when he said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

What frees a man from the belief in sin, disease, and death, then, is the fact of Love, Truth, and Life,—in one word, of Principle. There is no Principle in sin, disease, or death, and therefore they are outside the actual, or, to put it a little differently, they are counterfeits of or lies about something in Principle. Sin can be overcome, disease can be healed, death can be mastered; indeed, it was to prove this that Jesus performed his miracles or demonstrations. But you cannot make an end of Truth, you cannot stop Love, you cannot kill Life, when these are once seen and understood as Principle; and the knowledge of this constitutes the power to demonstrate the eternal fact of Principle.

Here, then, comes in the inseparable action of cause and effect. If a man knows the truth he cannot avoid demonstrating it. That is one of the lessons of the crucifixion and the resurrection. When a person knows that two and two make four, he cannot go about the world insisting that they make five. When a man knows the unreality of sickness he cannot help destroying it. More than this, the knowledge that he can destroy it brings the sick to him for healing; that was what choked the streets of Capernaum with sick people in the time of Jesus. And it supplies also the meaning of Jesus' own words, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Cause and effect, in short, can be traced through every action of Jesus' ministry. Because he had overcome the temptations in the wilderness, the belief in materiality had no power to manacle him when he saw the paralytic by the pool of Siloam, when the demoniac came raging from the tombs, or when he stood by the deathbed of Jairus' daughter; when he was constrained to feed the multitude, when he desired to reach the boat upon the lake, or when he chose to elude the people.

Thus he came down from heaven. He constantly utilized his knowledge of heaven or harmony to overcome the world's belief in the lie of inharmony or hell. Knowing that life was not in matter he was driven by this knowledge to prove it on the cross. And thus it was that he demonstrated the very ultimate of cause and effect, to the human senses, when in the tomb in the garden he proved life to be deathless, and so showed, as Mrs. Eddy writes on page 117 of Science and Health, that "human theories are inadequate to interpret the divine Principle involved in the miracles (marvels) wrought by Jesus and especially in his mighty, crowning, unparalleled, and triumphant exit from the flesh."

Now the meaning of all this is surely absolutely transparent, and it is this: that the follower of Jesus who is not healing the sick in demonstration of his knowledge of Truth does not possess that knowledge. A merely intellectual grasp of Science is, in reality, ignorance of Science. Yet those whose demonstrations are the fewest or are conspicuous by their entire absence, are often the most dogmatic in their assertion of their opinions. This, again, surely, is why Jesus declared that those who believed on him,—that is, who understood his teaching,—would be able to do his works; that is, demonstrate their knowledge. And this, equally surely, is also why Mrs. Eddy wrote, on page 92 of the Church Manual, "Healing the sick and the sinner with Truth demonstrates what we affirm of Christian Science, and nothing can substitute this demonstration."

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in The Canada Lancet, Toronto, Ontario]

A writer's comments in your columns on the teachings of Christian Science remind me of the following definition in the Encyclopædia Britannica: "Materialism in its modern sense is the view that all we know is body, of which mind is an attribute or function." Such a view is, of course, at the utmost point of opposition to the purely spiritual view of reality taught by Christian Science. But even the crassest materialist ought to be able to see that Christian Science no more ignores disease than mathematics ignores mistakes in the use of figures. As for the nature and existence of what is called matter, the Rt. Hon. Arthur J. Balfour, an eminent natural scientist, has declared that the evidence of the senses is not a foundation of belief, and Prof. John Fiske, another eminent natural scientist, has declared that matter has no existence apart from mind. The following quotation from Professor Fiske furnishes a sharp contrast to our critic's comments on Christian Science: "All the qualities of matter are what the mind makes them, and have no existence as such apart from the mind."

It is to be observed that some medical doctors are outgrowing the belief that mind is subordinate to matter. For instance, Leonard Keene Hirshberg, M.D., F.R.C.S., the well-known medical writer, has said: "There is no longer any doubt in any experimental psychologist's thoughts that the brain and nerves have no more to do with thinking, with the mind, than have your feet. Physicians will begin to be taught this, and in turn to teach it to the public about thirty or fifty years hence."

[Aaron E. Brandt in Scranton (Pa.) Times]

Christian Science is referred to in a reprint from a medical journal in a way that shows a woeful lack of intelligence on the subject on the part of the author. He assumes that Christian Science practice consists in applying "the power of a stronger mind over a weaker one" to make the patient believe that he is cured.

Christian Scientists do nothing of the sort. Instead they find it necessary to eliminate will power, self-will, suggestion, etc., as being part of the carnal mind at enmity with God, in order to do true healing. "It is as necessary," says Mrs. Eddy (Science and Health, p. 297), "for a health-illusion, as for an illusion of sickness, to be instructed out of itself into the understanding of what constitutes health . . . Erroneous belief is destroyed by truth."

What this truth is which Christ Jesus said should make free, the medical fraternity does not understand, and so long as it does not comprehend, it would do well for its own good to refrain from exposing its ignorance in the manner stated. Happily the time has come when the teaching and practice of Jesus on the subject of healing can no longer be lightly disregarded.

[Lewis J. Harney in Akron (Ohio) Beacon Journal]

It is plainly evident from what you have written editorially that you do not believe that mental suggestion will settle the coal question. Just as emphatically is every Christian Scientist convinced that mental suggestion will not solve his problems, either of sickness or of supply. You have admitted—by implication at least—that there is plenty of coal, and we in Ohio would not need to suffer if mistakes and ignorance were eliminated from the management of the business. You agree that there is a right condition which should exist, and which would provide warmth and harmony for every home and business,—that there is no actual shortage of coal.

So, likewise, Christian Science says there is no deficiency of health, of happiness, or of supply. Whatever is necessary for our harmonious existence has been provided by a loving and compassionate Father. Such is the birthright of every one of us. But in our ignorance and false education we have strayed away from this perfect state, and, like the prodigal son, need to return by knowing the truth about God and His creation. Jesus, the Wayshower, said: "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." This knowing is the method of procedure in Christian Science, and necessitates the overcoming of one's false beliefs. Consequently it is not simply the willing a thing to come to pass, or the practice of self-deception, to bring right results. Imagination will not solve a problem in mathematics, nor will a similar mental process produce the right answer when working out our life problems. On page 251 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the textbook of Christian Science, Mrs. Eddy has written: "Ignorance, like intentional wrong, is not Science. Ignorance must be seen and corrected before we can attain harmony."

[Rachel A. Banister in Richford (Vt.) Gazette]

In recent revival meetings held in Richford the subject of Christian Science was discussed by an evangelist, and misstatements were made regarding it. Now the teachings of Christ Jesus do not warrant attacks of this sort on others holding different beliefs. Although the reverend gentleman may not agree with the beliefs of other religious denominations, this is in no wise "proof positive" that he has the whole truth in his religious belief.

Instead of stirring up strife and enmity toward other followers of the Christ in a world already too heavily laden with these elements, an evangelist, or "good messenger," should be preaching and teaching "On earth peace, good will toward men," and so setting forth our Master's methods as to enable his hearers to come up to the standard of true discipleship as recorded in the gospel: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Christian Scientists are, one and all, willing that the test recorded in the book of Acts, as recommended by Gamaliel to opponents of Christianity, be applied to the teachings of Christian Science: "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

Christian Science is set forth in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by its author, Mary Baker Eddy, and in the last one hundred pages of this book are to be found testimonials of healing of "all manner of disease" through the perusal of this textbook. Surely the teachings of a religion which is accomplishing such beneficial results as these are not to be lightly passed over as a subject of no importance.

[Herbert Hopkins in The Atlanta (Ga.) Georgian]

In two recent sermons by an evangelist reference was made to Christian Science in a manner which showed a misapprehension of its true teachings on the part of the speaker, and a consequent wrong impression was conveyed in what was said. The time has long since passed when Christian Science can be waived lightly aside and classed as a cult, an ism, or a fad. Christian Science is thoroughly established through reason and revelation, through its absolute coincidence with the Bible, and through practical demonstration of its teachings. The hackneyed saying that Christian Scientists worship Mrs. Eddy falls of its own weight. Loving gratitude and profound respect can hardly be confounded by any fair-minded person with worship. The Master said: "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." This is the doctrine of Christian Science.

All the quotations of the speaker from the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, being torn from their context, need explication. Also his first statement, "Matter is non-existent, but an illusion," is misquoted. One of the definitions of matter, which Mrs. Eddy gives (Science and Health, p. 591), is: "Another name for mortal mind; illusion." Then on page 513 she speaks of mortal mind as "being non-existent." In Genesis we read, "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." If there is nothing in the flesh pleasing to God, it was evidently not among His creations, and must consequently be an illusion of mortal mind, or a product of the "mist" (or mystification) which went up "from the earth, and watered the whole face of the ground." This "mist," or "illusion," or "carnal mind" is all summed up in the term "matter." The unreality of matter is by no means a conclusion that is held by Christian Scientists alone, but by the great majority of natural scientists.

When the Bible is quoted, the hearts of Christian Scientists glow with love and interest, because no other religion is more completely in accord with the Bible. Jesus said he came to fulfill the law. In healing the diseases of those who were brought to him, then, he was fulfilling the law of God. God could hardly have sent His Son to destroy a real condition of the real man of His creation. Jesus said also, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." If it is knowledge of the truth that makes free, it must be ignorance of truth that leads the sick and sinful into bondage, and, as fast as knowledge of truth is brought to bear on any discordant belief, whether of sickness or sin, freedom is obtained from that belief. In Genesis we read: "So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him." The Christian Science textbook says (p. 344), "Is it sacrilegious to assume that God's likeness is not found in matter, sin, sickness, and death?" Christian Science explains, however, that from the ordinary mortal point of view, disease and sin seem real.

It would be difficult to imagine a statement expressing a more divergent concept of what Christian Science really teaches about the immaculate conception than do the speaker's words, which we quote as follows: "If you want to produce another Jesus, just imagine it is Jesus, and name it Jesus, and that is all you will have to do to have two Christs on earth, according to the Eddy theory and proposition." Mrs. Eddy, of course, never taught this, and nobody ever believed it. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 29), "The Holy Ghost, or divine Spirit, overshadowed the pure sense of the Virgin-mother with the full recognition that being is Spirit." She also says in her Message for 1901 (p. 8), "Jesus, the only immaculate, was born of a virgin mother." These two quotations fully show the Christian Science standpoint on this subject.

[Charles W. J. Tennant in Greenock Telegraph and Clyde Shipping Gazette, Scotland]

Your correspondent evidently does not understand the metaphysical meaning of St. Paul's saying, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." Had he done so he would have understood how impossible it is to gain an understanding of Christian Science by "a strong effort of intellectual concentration." Spiritual understanding must always come as a revelation, through spiritual discernment. No effort of the human will can ever attain it. "This understanding," Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 505 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "is not intellectual, is not the result of scholarly attainments; it is the reality of all things brought to light."

"Things are not what they seem"

THE often quoted words from Henry Longfellow's "Psalm of Life" state what is perfectly obvious:—

For the soul is dead that slumbers,
And things are not what they seem.

A stupefied Christian may not indeed be "dead in trespasses and sins," but in so far as his inactivity is concerned he certainly is not "awake to righteousness." Also the things which mislead and hypnotize him are not what they seem. They claim to be good yet have no relationship to God; they claim to give guidance yet have in them no truth; they claim to bless yet in nature they are devoid of love. Sir Edwin Arnold merely puts the matter another way when he asks:—

Shall any gazer see with mortal eyes,
Or any searcher know by mortal mind?

The seeing of the eyes, or the hearing of the ears, or the judgment of the carnal mind, never reaches up to reality, but continually accepts deception as the fact.

Jesus spoke of some of those who in his time used the cloak of religion while their aims were undivine. They "come to you," he said, "in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves." Some day perhaps a fable will be written concerning the envoy of the wolves to the well tended flock, how they sent the most astute wolf, camouflaged with fleece, and how he induced the sheep to resent the work done for them by the shepherd, and especially to resent the night watching of the shepherd's dog, and finally induced many to scatter into the wilderness, where in lonely darkness and helplessness they became the easy victims of their enemies' designs. If they fell in with the plans of the wolves it was through being unable to see that things are not what they seem.

When mortal mind, cherishing its material views and its purely mundane purposes, puts on the cloak of religion so that it may win trust and become leader and guide, then there may be danger for those who have no strength in themselves nor any vision of Principle. They are like the youth spoken of in Proverbs, the "young man void of understanding," whom the courtesan beguiles to his own destruction. It is said of her that her lips "drop as an honeycomb, and her mouth is smoother than oil: but her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a twoedged sword." Isaiah spoke of that which misleads men under this same figure when he said, "Get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms." And he also depicted the misleading influence as a corrupt city. Speaking of this typical city, Jeremiah says, "The nations have drunken of her wine; therefore the nations are mad." John elaborated the picture of the city as a woman debauching all nations with her sorceries. Mrs. Eddy spoke of this evil influence in the terms of both Isaiah and John, indicating that it would seek to enter even the church, "retaining the heart of the harlot and the purpose of the destroying angel" (Miscellany, p. 126). Then as one giving warning she goes on to say, "A voice was heard, saying, 'Come out of her, my people' (hearken not to her lies), 'that ye receive not of her plagues.'"

There is nothing in all this deception which need cause disquiet, because the remedy is so simple. What hardship is there in the admonition, "Hearken not to her lies"? What disadvantage does one suffer who is guided by nothing but the truth? The power of evil depends upon our belief in it. But every item of healing which has been accomplished through Christian Science discloses divine power and beneficence, and so the demonstration of Christian Science is bringing to naught the kingdom of evil and exposing its pretenses and agents. Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 210): "Christian Science never healed a patient without proving with mathematical certainty that error, when found out, is two-thirds destroyed, and the remaining third kills itself."

Although persons may be the agents of these principalities and powers which are, by believing in it, upholding the power of evil, nevertheless we war "not against flesh and blood," but we do war against "spiritual wickedness in high places," and in our warfare we help ourselves and others because we are establishing reality. Truth is always our defense from treachery. Life understood is our continual protection against mental poisoning. Love is our high tower, unassailable because unreachable by human hate. It is our business then to show up evil as ineffectual and powerless by realizing and manifesting good, by demonstrating healing, as the certain effect of Principle. All men will come to see that mortal mind has really nothing worth while to give, for its promises of advantage and benefit are lies, only lies, not deceiving those unwilling to be deceived. A simple and easy answer then for the sheep in the fold among whom the wolf comes whispering, is for them to have appreciation of the shepherd's care and watchfulness, and so to continue loyal and obedient and grateful. And for men and women it is enough that they obey Isaiah's admonition and "walk in the light of the Lord." Then those who love darkness and the evil ways that are possible therein, can never reach them with their subtlety or boasting. Mrs. Eddy says (Miscellany, p. 213): "Watch your thoughts, and see whether they lead you to God and into harmony with His true followers. Guard and strengthen your own citadel more strongly. Thus you will grow wiser and better through every attack of your foe, and the Golden Rule will not rust for lack of use or be misinterpreted by the adverse influence of animal magnetism."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

"Be not faithless, but believing"

IN the practice of Christian Science, believing in the power of God loosens the soil of conservatism so that the seed of truth may eventually sprout and bring forth the fruit of the Spirit. But when human ills are nurtured and nourished in a soil of unbelief, only rank weeds emerge. Fear adds itself to unbelief and holds material images in thought when they should be replaced by the true images of God's creating, and the individual thus harassed becomes as pitiful an object as was the doubting Thomas. In all human experiences the doubting thought plays a destructive part unless it is promptly corrected by truth. To doubt God's potency and presence hinders spiritual progress. The disbelieving plunge into a darkness in which there seems to be no ray of hope. The doubting Thomases of to-day ask to see the print of the nails and are not convinced until they see material signs with material eyes.

Countless unnecessary tears have been shed over the desire to see the fleshly signs of spiritual healing. Those who have experienced healing by Christian Science know that the signs material do indeed make their appearance, for humanity is uplifted physically as well as morally and mentally, but the signs spiritual must be received through spiritual sight. Then comes the new vision of the universe and man under the laws and government of God; steadfastness replaces the doubting habit; being faithful over a few things brings out the ruling over many things; the abundant blessings of God come as a present reward; sin loses its power, because discarded from thought; and evil of every kind is no longer retained, whether as friend or foe.

Little children believe so readily, so implicitly in good that their example of trustfulness may brighten the pathway of their elders if it is studied receptively. Just believing that all things are possible with God lets in the first ray of hope and prepares the way for the full effulgence of scientific spiritual understanding, which brings fruition. When the inquirer into Christian Science complies with the compassionate request, "Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side," he opens the way to obey the further injunction, "And be not faithless, but believing." This means more than blind belief.

When the eunuch-treasurer of Queen Candace of Ethiopia asked to be baptized, Philip assured him, "If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest." Then the eunuch declared to Philip, "I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." On page 77 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy, in reply to the question, "Did the salvation of the eunuch depend merely on his believing that Jesus Christ was the Son of God?" says: "It did; but this believing was more than faith in the fact that Jesus was the Messiah. Here the verb believe took its original meaning, namely, to be firm,—yea, to understand those great truths asserted of the Messiah: it meant to discern and consent to that infinite demand made upon the eunuch in those few words of the apostle."

Animal magnetism, if admitted to power and presence in the place of God, would prevent humanity not only from understanding good, but even from taking the first step in believing. It would, if it could, place clouds before the sun, would crush the sweet flowers of spontaneous hope, destroy useful talents, repress the expression of loving compassion, and stifle the joy of life. But to be firm in believing disperses the clouds and reveals the sun shining as brightly as ever, extracts sweet fragrance from the bruised flowers, brings forth the neglected talents, and bursts the fettering habits of doubt, hesitation, and procrastination. Really believing in the all-power of God will clear the mental atmosphere of the black war clouds and give the spiritual vision of a new world. These clouds will never fade away by our being faithless, by admitting fear, slackness, or doubt.

The endless tide of spiritual power flows through the heart's desire of those who are prepared to obey the commands of divine Love. Mortal mind may find falsifiers who sleep in the idleness of mesmerism and seem to enjoy being the tools of aggressive mental suggestion. Firm believing grows into faith and understanding and is literally faithful. The empty wheat head, having nothing in itself, stands up and is snapped off by the tempest, but the ripening grain which develops a full kernel and momentarily bows before the wind, reaches full fruition.

Scripture Study

IT was Christ Jesus who said, "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God." A thoughtful study of the gospels shows unmistakably that he himself was a most diligent student of the Old Testament, for we find that he constantly used its statements of truth in his work. It is also well to remember that in so doing he lifted thought above the material sense of the word and presented the spiritual demand which alone can bring out its fulfillment. He insisted that it was not enough to abstain from murder, but that hatred must be overcome, for otherwise the divine law would be broken; and he applied the same rule in the case of moral impurity, holding that nothing less than purity of heart really meant obedience to the law of God. In the twenty-first chapter of Matthew we find him making a strong demand for the spiritual healing which he declared to be the proof of the divine character of his ministry; and when the rulers asked by what authority he healed and taught the people, he answered first by a parable, and then pressed home its demand when he said: "Did ye never read in the scriptures, The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes?" There are perhaps very few who read these words in the one hundred and eighteenth psalm who readily relate them to the Christ-healing, but there is no other adequate interpretation for them.

It is becoming more generally known and more readily admitted that students of Christian Science love the Bible and seek in its teachings what the Master said we should find there, namely, eternal life; and students of Mrs. Eddy's writings cannot fail to notice that like him she was a close and careful student of the Bible. She herself tells us on page 109 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" that for three years after her discovery of the divine Principle of the Christ-healing she "searched the Scriptures and read little else;" and as a result of her study and demonstration of the truth found therein she says (p. 547), "The Scriptures are very sacred." At this point it is also well to remember her requirement concerning the work in the Christian Science Sunday school, as given in Article XX, Section 2, of the Manual of The Mother Church, where we read, "The Sabbath School children shall be taught the Scriptures." It goes without saying that the children should be taught the sacredness of the Scriptures, and they should see how great a value their teachers place upon the Bible because of their close acquaintance with it and because of the spirit which they manifest. We also find in the Manual a strict requirement that in their classes and associations teachers shall urge their students to study the Bible.

This appeal for a more careful study of the Scriptures does not point to so-called helps, although these are often found to be useful, but to the more earnest study of the Bible itself, and especially of the great characters presented therein, whose experiences show what is possible to the divine idea, God's man, in any age. Time was when only the learned could read the Bible, and that in a language unknown to any except scholars. Then came the day when the Scriptures were translated into English, but when there were so few copies to be had that one Bible often served the needs of a whole parish, and so it was chained in the church, where eager Truth seekers might go and read the book without taking it away. Now we have Bibles in almost every tongue, carrying to all people a message of the infinite goodness of God and the unvarying demands of divine law, which when understood and obeyed lead to health, harmony, and life.

In this age, when the belief prevails that people have not sufficient time to study in the best way,—that is, diligently and exhaustively,—the sacred writings which are to-day illumined by the glorious revelation of divine Science, we need to know that we cannot be robbed of any good thing provided by our heavenly Father. It is true that nothing less than the unfolding of spiritual sense can really make known to us in their fullness the riches of the Bible, but in our desire to gain this we can search more diligently for the "hid treasures" of which the wise man speaks. It is sometimes surprising to note the mistakes made by those who are supposed to be thoroughly acquainted with the Bible and yet who have read it in a superficial and careless manner that they would not consider adequate in the study of any other work which they deemed important.

If we are ever tempted to read the Scriptures or discuss them in a superficial way, we should do well to ponder deeply the Master's teaching to some of his students on the way to Emmaus. Now, they undoubtedly were acquainted with the Scriptures, and yet their view was narrow because they had been interpreting them in a material way, and so we find that Christ Jesus proceeded to do that which would bless all of us to-day. The passage reads: "Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures." In Paul's second epistle to Timothy we find this high commendation of the young disciple: "From a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus."

Current Notes

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A third Christian Science church, located in the down town part of the city, was the subject of discussion at a meeting of the members of First Church of Christ, Scientist, held last evening [March 5]. It was pointed out that for the past few months First Church has been filled to capacity at both the Sunday morning and the Wednesday evening meetings, all seats being occupied, and people, at times to the number of one hundred and fifty, being forced to stand. Almost four years ago conditions similar to those now existing led to the formation of Second Church of Christ, Scientist, which has since that time been steadily growing in size. It is expected that the new church, when formed, will be located nearer the center of the city than either of the other two churches.—Washington Times.

GREELEY, COL.—The framework of the building of First Church of Christ, Scientist, at Eighth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, was started to-day [Feb. 22], the foundation having been completed the first of the week. The building, which will be a frame structure, will cost when finished about seven thousand dollars. This is to be but a temporary structure to meet the needs of the Christian Scientists at the present time, as they expect in the near future to build a permanent home which will be of brick or stone. The lot which they own is 100 by 100 feet and was purchased a year and a half ago.—Greeley Tribune-Republican.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Third Church of Christ, Scientist, at 1250 Haight Street, opposite Buena Vista Park, was dedicated yesterday [Jan. 20]. The property cost $125,000, and all bills and outstanding debts have been paid, $11,790 having been received from the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy. The church was organized December 27, 1908. The corner stone of the new building was laid March 8, 1915, and the church was completed in February, 1917. The auditorium seats one thousand.

San Francisco Chronicle.

EAST ORANGE, N. J.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, will break ground in Parkway North, for an edifice next month [March]. The structure will cost approximately eight thousand dollars; the site cost seven thousand dollars.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

The Lectures

FORT WORTH, TEXAS (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Attorney L. C. Penry, who said in part:—

In these times of world strife, while men, impelled by holy motives of love for fellow men, are battling with carnal weapons for universal democracy, the still, small voice of Christian Science comes to every listening ear and whispers, not a mocking call of "Peace, peace; when there is no peace," but the inspiring, man-heartening message, inscribed on page 17 of Science and Health, "God is omnipotent, supreme."

TWIN FALLS, IDAHO (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Ella E. Day, who said in part:—

Jesus had the true concept of God, and revealed to humanity his loving thoughts and ways of righteousness. The light of spiritual understanding thrown upon the Scriptures by the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, makes the Christ-teaching plain, and we find that in the measure we grow in understanding of Christian Science, we are enabled to gain the Mind which was in Christ Jesus.

OTTAWA, ONTARIO (First Church).—Clarence W. Chadwick, lecturer; introduced by Douglas Roberts, who said in part:—

What primitive Christianity was, the Bible tells us very plainly. It says, "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." It also tells us that Jesus again and again commanded his followers to preach the gospel and to heal the sick, and the gospel of Matthew closed with this command of Jesus to his disciples: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, . . . teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." We may well ask the questions, Why has an important part of Christianity been dormant for so many centuries? Why has Christendom failed to produce the signs which Jesus said would follow them that believe, the hall-marks of genuine Christianity?

SAN JOSE, CAL. (First Church).—Ezra W. Palmer, lecturer; introduced by E. A. Totten, who said in part:—

Christian Science is not a new thought or religion. It is as ancient as the "Ancient of days"—as old as the Bible and based entirely on the Bible, thereby having Scriptural authority. It recognizes the Christ as the corner stone of the Christian religion. It is applicable to every human need. It seeks to bless all mankind, reaching from the least individual inharmony to the great social, political, or world-wide problems; to overthrow oppression, to establish the rights of man, to give freedom of thought and action on the basis of one God, one Mind, and man in God's image and likeness.

San Jose Mercury-Herald.

SEATTLE, WASH. (Fourth Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Louis E. Scholl, who said in part:—

There is no dearth of religions. A United States religious census mentions one hundred and eighty-six religious denominations in the United States. There are plenty of sects. The question is: Is there a religion that is satisfying and demonstrable; that will enable us to put into practice the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount; that will meet the need of the present hour? We make bold to claim that Christian Science is that religion, and we base our claim upon demonstration. The Master said, "A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit."

JEFFERSON CITY, MO. (First Church).—George Shaw Cook, lecturer; introduced by Uel W. Lamkin, state superintendent of schools, who said in part:—

In times of stress, man, whatever his attitude in tranquil periods, turns to God. A nation is but as an individual in a larger measure. It seems now, when not only a nation but a world is in turmoil, that all peoples of the earth may be drawn toward Him. We come to-night to hear a man who represents an organization which stands for clear thinking and better living, which can come only from a fuller appreciation of the God who is as powerful to-day as He was when Christ Jesus ministered in His name.

Testimonies of Healing

In the fall of 1905, during the illness of a dear sister who was reaching out for healing in Christian Science for a chronic trouble which material remedies had failed to relieve, the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, was given me to read. After a few weeks spent in the perusal of this book I decided that I would like a copy of my own, and straightway purchased one. During the weeks that followed I did little else than study this book, as I wished to help the sister who needed the healing so much. I, however, approached the subject with an open mind, knowing that if it held anything of truth it would be revealed to me, and through this study I was healed of a bowel difficulty dating from childhood, also of another trouble which had caused much suffering. To me this was ample proof that the healing taught by Jesus was still available to mankind, and I at once decided that my future must be guided by its teaching.

With three young children in my care it required considerable courage to give up all material remedies, and many times comfort and assurance have come to me through these words from Science and Health (p. 494): "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need." Inflammatory and sciatic rheumatism and the ailments common to children have been promptly overcome, either through my own efforts or the help of a practitioner. For all these proofs of God's protecting care I am indeed grateful, as well as for another healing, which occurred about three years ago. For five years before that I had suffered from hemorrhoids which at times became aggravated and painful. While I never had a doubt of the power of Truth to heal me, my own efforts to demonstrate over this condition brought only temporary relief, so finally, when the suffering became so severe that it seemed unwise to struggle longer, I asked a practitioner for treatment and was healed instantaneously. The healing has been permanent.

Financial and home problems have been wonderfully solved, and through the leading of Truth I have had the benefit of class instruction. I am grateful for the privilege of seeing our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy; the memory of her sweet face is ever with me as proof that the truth she gave to the world had enriched and strengthened her own life beyond measure. I am grateful also to our Publishing Society, which through the foresight of our Leader is sending out the daily, weekly, and monthly messengers of Truth. The Monitor is a missionary to the whole world, and when it is universally read must heal the thought of the people and establish right thinking with all.

Even greater than for all these is my gratitude for the true understanding of a perfect heavenly Father who has only good things for His children. Before I knew of Christian Science, when sorrow and suffering and bereavement came into my life the argument that it was God's will seemed so inconsistent and unjust that I could not reconcile myself to a God who was less kind and just than my human parent, who would have spared me such suffering had it been in his power to do so. Then followed years of work and diversion, and a feeling that somehow God must be right even if the whole world did seem to be wrong. Again I took up my work in the church to gain comfort from its teaching, but I could not understand the Bible and only read it from a sense of duty. Many times I wondered if God really did answer prayer; if so, why were not my own prayers and those of others answered?

All this time God was leading me and the soil was being prepared for the seed of Truth, so when Christian Science came to me with its teaching of a God who is the divine Principle of all that really is, who is Life, Truth, and Love, omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent good, I was ready to receive it and to strive daily to prove for myself and others that the Christ is ever present and will bring all good to pass here and now in proportion as we "make channels for the streams of love," as a loved hymn expresses it.

MRS. GRACE L. YENTZER, Roulette, Pa.

That anyone could be healed of stomach trouble of twenty years' standing simply through reading or studying a book, must seem strange to those who have never investigated Christian Science,—yet this has been my experience. I had tried material means in accordance with the advice of scores of physicians, compelling myself to accept a most rigid diet, and was a slave to the laws of hygiene; yet my condition constantly grew worse, until two meals a day seemed to be my limit. I was starving, according to sense testimony, for want of food, but stood in mortal fear of eating it. Then a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" was placed in my hands by my daughter. I shall never forget the first reading of this glorious book. Perhaps a year passed before my healing was complete, but during this time the tobacco habit gradually left me. The truth finally dawned upon me quite suddenly, that divine metaphysics had performed its work, and I began to eat all things set before me. Colds, catarrh, eyestrain, bowel trouble, and many other ills have been overcome by the correct understanding of man's true relationship to God, as taught in Christian Science.

The physical healing has been marvelous and grand, but compared to the spiritual regeneration and the peace that Christian Science has brought into my life, it is of secondary consideration. I am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her discovery, and for the many blessings coming to me through the daily application of this new-old truth.

LEONARD ELSTON, Shelby, Ohio.

For ten years I suffered from neuralgia in the head, and from other ailments so serious that I was obliged to submit to two operations, and in October, 1911, my doctor said he thought another operation was necessary. I feared the result, but could see no way out of it, so wrote to a friend who had been a trained nurse for a number of years, saying I was again obliged to submit to an operation and would like to go to the hospital where she had been employed. She answered my letter at once, saying that she had been away from the hospital for some time and had been healed of a very serious kidney trouble through Christian Science, and that if I would like to try Christian Science and would come to her, she would take me to a practitioner. I asked my husband, a minister of the gospel for twenty years, what I had better do, and he said to do just as I thought best.

My sister had been a Christian Scientist for years, and had tried to interest me in this teaching when our son was suffering from tubercular disease; but we were not yet ready for it, and he passed on. But at this time, two years later, I seemed ready, so I had two weeks' treatment and bought a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." When about half through the book I experienced a most wonderful spiritual awakening and was healed. I read scarcely anything but the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, together with our literature, for three years, during which time I read Science and Health through consecutively eleven times. From the first reading I knew this teaching was the truth, for the new awakening gave me a more spiritual understanding of the Bible and of man's relationship to God than I had ever known. I have had many proofs of the allness of God and of His healing power, and was wonderfully upheld when my husband passed on very suddenly.

I have been able to do my own mental work almost wholly, and in a small way have helped others during the past four years. When a serious attack of acute lung trouble presented itself, however, I was obliged to ask for the help of a practitioner, through whose clear understanding of Truth I was healed. For this wonderful healing I am exceedingly grateful. For our helpful literature which comes to us daily, weekly, and monthly, rich with spiritual food, and for our dear Leader's clear teaching of Truth, I am more than grateful.—Mrs. Lillian Marsh, Chicago, Ill.

In the autumn of 1902 the light of Christian Science first dawned upon my darkened mind and taught me, when near the confines of death, that God is good and good alone, and that there is no evil in His infinite plan. I was attacked with severe pains in the head, stomach, and bowels, and in twenty-four hours was to sense in a critical condition. My husband called in the family physician, who at once sent for the best doctor in the city to consult him about the case. They both agreed I had typhoid fever and congestion of the stomach and bowels. Five days after I was taken ill I was given up by the physicians, and the family was told the end was at hand. I had been clinging to the twenty-third psalm, when conscious, and realized that God did not want any of His children to die. My mother is a Christian Scientist, and when she came in I asked for help in Science; so she immediately called a practitioner, through whose clear understanding of the truth that makes free, relief was soon experienced. In less than two hours I was resting quietly. I arose the following day, dressed myself, and went into the dining room, where I ate a hearty dinner, thanking God with all my heart for His wonderful truth as revealed to our dear Leader.

Since then I have passed through what seemed many deep waters, but Christian Science has always sustained me and carried me through victorious and safe. I thank God for the many wonderful demonstrations I have had through the understanding of Truth. I am filled with gratitude and love for our many blessings in the way of church work and for the privilege of being a member of The Mother Church; also for class instruction. Our literature always points the way to those who come for help in this blessed truth.

About two years ago our son, eleven years of age, was taken with what the doctors said was uræmic poisoning, or a form of acute Bright's disease. For thirty hours he had violent spasms, although our family physician, together with the consulting physician, did all that was possible for conscientious human endeavor to do with material remedies. At the end of that time we were informed, in answer to our anxious questions as to the probable outcome, that while there is life there is hope. Several times near the last we thought him dying. The doctor was informed that if he could offer no hope we would try Christian Science, and a practitioner was called. The packs were removed and all material remedies were laid aside.

After the first treatment in Christian Science a change was immediately noticeable, and the spasms gradually gave way to peaceful rest. The next day our family doctor, who was also a personal friend, called. He seemed surprised to see our boy conscious, and volunteered the advice that if we would be very careful with his diet he probably would be out in a few weeks. While we were grateful for the friendly spirit in which the advice was given, it was disregarded, as the practitioner informed us that nothing the boy could eat would harm him. In a few hours he was eating anything his fancy dictated. The congested organs became normal, he was up and around, and on the third day mowed the lawn. In less than a week he went on a three-hundred-mile camping trip. For two years he has been active and strong, notwithstanding the prediction that diseases of this nature recur. He is indeed a splendid specimen of rugged youth.

Since this healing, all material remedies have been discarded in our home. The study of the Bible with Science and Health has changed our views. It teaches us the difference between that which seems to be and that which really is. This knowledge is the remedy that has overcome and is overcoming all our difficulties, and is an ever present help in trouble. We are grateful for this healing truth which has come into our lives.

B. F. Bond and Mrs. Laura May Bond, Long Beach, Cal.

A few years ago I heard of Christian Science for the first time. I did not then understand anything about its healing power, but the chapter on Prayer in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, was such a revelation to me and seemed to answer many of my questions about God so clearly, that I commenced an earnest study of the book. I had been considered very delicate from childhood and had always been under the doctor's care. Owing to the fact that I never had any sight in one eye, I had been obliged to wear glasses from a very early age to relieve the strain on the other. An eminent oculist on one occasion, after an examination by X-rays, pronounced the eye blind at the base. I had been studying Science and Health for only a short time when with my new understanding of God I was able to discard my glasses, and some time afterward discovered that I was beginning to see a little with the eye that had always been blind. The improvement continued, and to-day the eye is normal. I never suffer any discomfort whatever from my sight, and though my clerical duties necessitate long hours and entail work of an exacting nature, I have not had the slightest need for glasses. Severe headaches due to eye-strain, from which I used to suffer frequently, have also disappeared.

Since the healing of my sight, many other beautiful demonstrations of the healing power of Truth have been brought about through the faithful work of a practitioner. I would like to mention two which have proved to me beyond all question that Christian Science is able to overcome pain under all conditions. The first was the healing of what is called a polypus, supposed to be hereditary in my case. Two of these growths had been removed previous to my hearing about Christian Science and I was then waiting for a third operation, but having suffered severely on the last occasion I was hesitating about undergoing the ordeal again. Owing to the interest aroused by the study of Christian Science I thought only occasionally about the trouble, until one day it occurred to me that all the painful symptoms had disappeared and there was no need for another operation. I had no return of this distressing complaint until four or five years later. At that time I accidentally received a severe blow on the nose and soon afterward some of the symptoms were again manifested. Through the loving work of the practitioner, however, these were overcome in a day or so, and no return whatsoever has taken place since.

When I went to have some teeth extracted, the Christian Science practitioner who had rendered such effective help on other occasions accompanied me to the dentist's office, and treatment was given me, with the result that I had ten teeth extracted with no pain or discomfort of any kind. The whole experience was such a revelation to me that some time afterward, when I had to return to the dentist to have two more extractions, I went alone with such entire confidence that the occasion was a complete demonstration.

It would be impossible for me to express in words my thankfulness to God for Christian Science and for the help it is in my home and business life, or my deep sense of gratitude to our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who has given to the world this truth that "meets the heart's great needs." We can best show our gratitude by living in obedience to God, and by emulating the example of her who sat, a willing disciple, at the feet of the Master.

Miss Elizabeth Hesketh, Walton, Liverpool, England.

As it may help another who is in the same hopeless condition in which Christian Science found me, I would like to tell of my healing. From early childhood I was afflicted with stomach and bowel trouble, for which I took medicine continually. About three years ago I had a serious illness, which lasted many months and from which my friends never expected me to recover. The physicians were most kind but could not give me much relief. I was advised by a friend to try Christian Science and was quite ready to do so. I was relieved at once of the stomach trouble, and began to eat after one treatment. When the practitioner first visited me, I was afraid to eat any solid food. Now I eat everything without a thought of fear. The bowel difficulty was relieved with the first treatment, but afterward troubled me at times, until one day I read this statement in Science and Health (p. 180): "When man is governed by God, the ever-present Mind who understands all things, man knows that with God all things are possible." I said to myself, "If that is true, I can rely wholly upon God," and from that time I have been free. Through the study of Science and Health I have gained an understanding of God which I never had before, and I can never be too grateful for all that Christian Science has done for me.

Mrs. Desire B. Gould, Orleans, Mass.

I wish to express my deep feeling of gratitude for all that Christian Science has done and is constantly doing for me. In March, 1908, I became completely incapacitated. My health was gone, and added to this I experienced business reverses and financial losses. I was treated by noted specialists in Chicago, where I was then living, and in various other cities, but with no good results, and for five years I continued to lose ground. Rarely, and for short periods only, was I able to attend to business. Finally I was prevailed upon to enter the clinic of a well-known institution, where I was under the observation and treatment of four specialists. After four weeks my case was pronounced absolutely incurable, as I had locomotor ataxia, pernicious anæmia, and chronic bowel disorder. I was also addicted to the tobacco and liquor habits. On Thanksgiving day, 1913, I was discharged from the hospital, and for sixty days following I worried and wondered when the end of my suffering would come. Then my wife received a letter from a friend who recommended Christian Science, and within another week two other people advised me to try it.

In talking the matter over, I told my wife I would take a chance so as to satisfy my friends. I knew nothing about Christian Science at the time, but was told it could do me no harm even if it did me no good; that I had everything to gain and nothing to lose. A practitioner was sent for and after a long talk I felt assured, and treatments were begun at once. Material remedies were given up, my diet list was abandoned, and from that day I have not taken a drop of medicine, but I have been able to eat anything I want and have gained in weight. The improvement in my condition became perceptible very soon and in a few months I was back at business. With my recovery there came an intense desire to know more of this wonderful truth, and that for which I am most grateful is the spiritual enlightenment that has been gained through the study of the Bible and of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

I am grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the divinely inspired words of our textbook, and for all the other authorized literature. My wife has become interested in this teaching, and our daughter, eleven years old, who has had no Sunday school training other than that of Christian Science, is a devoted student. I am very grateful, too, for the loving-kindness shown to us by the many friends we have made among Christian Scientists from time to time.

I have enumerated but a few of my many blessings. My desire is that in some way, sooner or later, I may be able to express my gratitude by doing unto others as others have done unto me.

Barrett Aldrich Robison, Kalamazoo, Mich.

If we have accepted Christian Science as taught in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, we have in a measure attained to that peace "which passeth all understanding" and are desirous of doing all we can to give this truth to the world. While I never lose an opportunity to tell my friends what this healing truth has done for me, I shall not be satisfied until I have given my experience in the Sentinel or Journal. The testimonies have been of such help to me that I have long wished to speak a word which would help lift a suffering one from darkness into health and happiness, but the suggestion would come that there is no lack of testimonies and that many others are more capable of giving them than I am. Since learning that "Love is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals," as our Leader tells us on page 13 of our textbook, I am reassured and know that no one can do my work for me.

About ten years ago a friend who was a student of Christian Science, knowing the blessing it gives to all mankind, told me of this great truth and I became sufficiently interested to buy a copy of Science and Health and read it through; but feeling a sense of disappointment I laid it aside and did not look into it again for five years. After losing a baby and feeling as if I could not bear this great trial, I was led by divine Love to read this wonderful book again, and found comfort. The heartache was gradually overcome, and after faithful study I was healed of severe headaches, stomach disorder, indescribable suffering with my back, extreme nervousness, and other discordant conditions, for which I had tried various remedies in the search for help, but was continually getting worse. Step by step I have been able to demonstrate over many limitations and fears, and feel sure I am a happier, better wife, mother, and friend than I could have been without this teaching.

I love our Leader for the many sacrifices she made to give us this blessed truth through her writings. I am grateful to our editors and all the contributors to our splendid publications, also to the friends who have given me hope when I was discouraged. I am truly thankful to be free from physical suffering, but find no words to express my gratitude for the understanding of God which Christian Science has given me.

MRS. ROSALIE FLOURNOY BENNETT, St. Cloud, Minn.

This testimony is written to express my deep gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. My first healing took place eight years ago, when I was healed of serious internal trouble after physicians had said an operation was the only thing which would cure me; but what seemed most wonderful to me was an almost instantaneous healing of severe burns on my face and neck caused by the explosion of the gas oven. The moment the accident occurred I declared the truth, and the practitioner was called up immediately, with the result that in less than an hour all pain had left. By evening all traces of the burns had gone. For the great help received through the study of Christian Science I am deeply thankful to God, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy is sincere.—MRS. T. J. WATERS, Los Angeles, Cal.

I wish to verify the statements made in the above testimony by my daughter, and also to express my gratitude for all the good which Christian Science has done and is still doing for me. Eleven years ago I was healed of asthma and of bronchial trouble. I am indeed thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this beautiful truth.

MRS. M. WEILER.

Gratefully I acknowledge the untold blessings that have come to me since I first began to grasp the truth as unfolded to us in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I had always been a well, happy person, when to the surprise of my friends and family I became depressed and sad. Everything was done to alleviate my sufferings, but all to no avail until I was led to accept the teachings of Christian Science. When I began to understand that God is All-in-all and that His love is all-sufficient, I began to see the light of a new day.

I had been in this state of bondage for fourteen years, and was sent to a private sanatorium for treatment, but did not stop sorrowing until the goodness of God was revealed to me through Christian Science. I was brought to Newburgh to learn of this truth. The practitioner was always ready to give me a word of encouragement in my hours of sadness, also many were the friends who were ready to cheer me, and I felt that I must now be with God's children. Thanks be to God for this great revelation of the truth and for the unspeakable joy that has come to me, for I have been delivered from this bondage. My desire is to be a consecrated worker, faithful to the cause in which I have enlisted, and that each day may bring me into a better understanding of God, divine Mind.

I have so often received help and encouragement from the testimonies in our periodicals that I am sending my own to tell just a little of the blessing that the true understanding of God, as learned in Christian Science, has brought into my life. Up to the age of twenty I believed implicitly in the teaching of the church in which I was brought up and in its interpretation of the Bible; but in later years when I looked for the proof of the teaching, it was lacking, and knowing no better I resolved to have nothing further to do with either God or church, until I could find that which would prove the Bible promises true.

I remained in this mental attitude for a few years, and then met with a bad accident. My case was diagnosed as injury to the spine and the worst form of shock to the nervous system. The greatest kindness, care, and attention was received from doctors and surgeons for nearly two years, but at the end of that time I was no better and had become so despondent that I had lost the wish to live. At this point I heard two people discussing some one who, they said, believed in Christian Science. I had never heard of this religion before and did not know that the study of it would bring healing; but I went with a friend to a testimony meeting in Dublin, and borrowed from the reading rooms a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. Through the reading of this book and the loving help of a practitioner, I was healed of the effects of the accident in a few weeks, and at once left off the steel jacket I was wearing. This healing took place nearly nine years ago and there has been no return of the discordant condition since that time.

Although the healing of our ills seems like the greatest blessing that could come to us when we are suffering, it is nothing compared to the never ending interest and joy which the study of Christian Science brings. Science and Health not only proved irrefutably to me that the promises in the Bible are true, but it is making true to me the words in I Corinthians, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

MISS IDA I. HULBERT, Belfast, Ireland.

From the Press

[From an editorial in New York (N. Y.) Times]

That this war will be crowned with victory no one can doubt; but it will test our spiritual strength to the limit. Conventional religion cannot stand the strain. But the man who has made his religion real has built upon the rock. No storm can shake it.

[From The Sunday Herald, Boston, Mass.]

A total of 29,444 articles were prepared and sent to enlisted men and war refugees by the Comforts Forwarding Committee, conducted by the Christian Scientists of the Boston district and located at 328 Boylston Street, during the first three months of the committee's work. Among the goods forwarded were 15,825 knitted articles and comfort kits, 5312 articles of new clothing for French, Italian, Belgian, and Serbian refugee children, and 8307 selected secondhand or remade articles of clothing.

One American ship has been supplied with enough knitted goods, totaling 3500 pieces, to equip all the sailors on board. A large number of the knitted garments and other comforts have been turned over to the different war relief associations in Boston, which are in direct communication with the people of their respective countries, notably the British, French, Italian, and Belgian associations. Some of the recruits from Boston for the British and Canadian forces were supplied with knitted articles before they left home.

which has brought splendid results is the "unit system" of preparing new garments for refugee children. Ten of the committee were first instructed in the making of a model garment, each of the ten instructed ten others, and the latter became captains of teams of ten others whom they in turn instructed. Two groups of team captains meet at the committee's rooms every day to receive instruction and material for use by themselves and the members of their respective teams, who work at leisure moments at home. Thus 1110 sewers are banded together for this particular part of the committee's program and they are turning out an average of over 1000 garments a week. In this work they have been greatly assisted by one of the patriotic manufacturing companies of Boston, which offered and has undertaken to do all the cutting required for these garments.

Before beginning to sew for the refugees of any country, the committee ascertained not only what articles were needed, but also the form and material desired, so far as was possible. It was learned, for instance, that so common an article of general use as a pillow case was, in one country for which the teams were sewing, very unlike the pillow case of the American home. For knitters, wool is sold over the counter, instructions are given, and the finished garment is returned to the committee's headquarters when ready. In addition, there are four knitting machines in operation, on each of which it is possible to knit a pair of socks in twenty minutes.

Much praise has been given to the Comforts Forwarding Committee of the Christian Scientists by persons associated with other war relief organizations, for the high quality of the articles produced and the systematic manner of their productions. Nearly 500 such committees are conducted by Christian Scientists throughout the United States.

[A. J. G. Seaton in The Methodist Recorder]

The solution of our problems can only be found in an attempt to produce a common desire among all men to do the will of the Father. In nothing less than this can there be any real brotherhood or any real democracy. The love and the worship of God alone can be the transforming motive of international and social relationships. We are left to think out the laws and treaties in which that spirit of brotherhood must be expressed, but in the dissemination of the spirit of Christ is our only hope of the establishment of that reign of peace and blessing to which we look forward.

Miscellaneous Writings

In the announcement entitled "Works on Christian Science" on the reverse side of this page, "Miscellaneous Writings" by Mary Baker Eddy is described as "a book of 471 pages, containing articles published in The Christian Science Journal from 1883 to 1896, with revisions and additions."

Christian Science was discovered in 1866. The textbook was first published in 1875. The Christian Science Journal was founded in 1883. The Mother Church edifice was dedicated in 1895.

Hence the period from 1883 to 1896 saw the first contests and triumphs of the Christian Science idea over the "inhabitants of the land," over the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Hivites, the Perizzites, the Girgashites, the Amorites, and the Jebusites (Joshua 3:10) of mortal mind.

It is of this period Mrs. Eddy wrote in 1897: "With armor on, I continue the march, command and countermand; meantime interluding with loving thought this afterpiece of battle" (Preface to Miscellaneous Writings, p. xii).

"Miscellaneous Writings" gathers into a volume the most important of Mrs. Eddy's sermons, letters, and comments as published in the Journal during that time.

Contemplation of the manner in which she was led by divine inspiration to meet and win the inevitable contests precipitated by the discovery of Christian Science and to present this discovery to the world, is of invaluable aid to Christian Scientists who in their own individual experience are advancing from the "discovery" of Christian Science to its "proof, by present demonstration" (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, p. 123).

The Meek Shall Inherit the Earth

E. MARY RAMSAY

ON first becoming acquainted with Christian Science, most people who have been brought up in religious surroundings find that without intentional hypocrisy they have yet been accustomed to accept as true some statements to which they have given very little serious thought. Christian Science forces these people to examine their position, since it brings home to them the fact that nothing but a lack of faith or spiritual understanding prevents the Christian of to-day from performing acts of the same kind as those commonly called miracles, of which the Bible bears record. Having reached this point, we begin to examine the words of the Master with new-found carefulness.

Turning to the Beatitudes we read: "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Examined in this closer way, we are bound to admit that this statement runs counter to all our experience. Push, initiative, resourcefulness, perseverance, and possibly honesty may enable a man to gain a high position in this world; but when was meekness found essential to success? Yet the words of him who is our great Wayshower are not to be regarded merely as religious aphorisms; they are positive statements of scientific truth, as absolute as the statement that three times three equal nine. It is plain, therefore, that the average man has not grasped what our Lord meant by the word translated "meekness." Nay, more, we find that most people are positively repelled by the word meekness. Every one admires courage, most all people respect truth, but meekness has few to worship at its shrine. For the majority of mankind, indeed, it hardly exists.

We read in the twelfth chapter of Numbers the following words: "Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth." In what did this meekness consist? Moses is undoubtedly one of the greatest figures of the Old Testament, and with the main outlines of his history we are all familiar. As the adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter, he received the highest education which the most learned court of the ancient world had to offer, and he undoubtedly made the most of his advantages; but when he was forty years of age, he had to flee the country for having killed an Egyptian who was illtreating an Israelite. It thus seemed as if his career was ended, and his chance of helping his oppressed fellow countrymen gone forever. Then followed the forty years during which he lived with Jethro and tended his flocks on the desert pastures. The Bible tells us nothing of the mental struggles through which Moses must have passed during those long and outwardly uneventful years, but we can imagine something of the warfare between the patriot's anguish and his faith in the future of his race, till in the fullness of time came the wonderful incident of the burning bush.

Then comes this call of Truth: "Come now therefore, and I will send thee unto Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring forth my people the children of Israel out of Egypt." To this Moses replied: "Who am I, that I should go unto Pharaoh, and that I should bring forth the children of Israel out of Egypt?" Forty years before, his attempt to help his fellow countrymen had utterly failed, and could he now at eighty accomplish this stupendous task? He makes one excuse after another till at last we are told that the anger of the Lord was kindled against Moses, and that afterward Moses' opposition gave way, and he went to do God's bidding. What was meant by this anger of the Lord, and how did it work?

As the student of Christian Science walks along the pathway from sense to Soul by which the saints and sages of the Bible went before him, he meets with experiences similar to those which the wayfarers of old encountered. Thus the anger of the Lord has been seen, in these latter days too, to flash once more through the gloom, destroying in its beneficence not man but sin, just as it destroyed, in the case of Moses, the cowardice which called itself humility, and lifted the scholar-shepherd into that atmosphere of meekness in which the false sense of self fell away and he knew himself only as the messenger of omnipotence. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 183) Mrs. Eddy says: "Man is God's image and likeness; whatever is possible to God, is possible to man as God's reflection."

Most people are aware that the same chemicals which were formerly employed as dyes are now being turned into high explosives. This curious belief may be used to illustrate the difference between the true humility and that spurious quality which often passes as the true. Humility is not a cosmetic, a dye to embellish or mask personality; it is a high explosive. When rightly applied it bursts up the false sense of self, and lo! the one thus aroused begins to recognize man's true individuality, and to perceive something of what is really going on in the realm of Mind. Now it is plain that so long as a man is clinging to a false sense of a personal self, he will no more pray whole-heartedly for humility than will a forester intentionally saw off the branch on which he is sitting. We must have enough faith to trust ourselves utterly to God before we can bring ourselves to launch forth into unexplored waters. Like the crews who sailed under Columbus on his first great voyage of discovery, we dread the unknown, and find it easier to believe in difficulties and dangers than in undiscovered good. Yet why should we fear? We fear because we do not understand enough of our own immortal nature and of the nature of Infinity. God is Love, God is All, and around us lies illimitable good. There is nothing else to know. As the psalmist sang of old: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? . . . if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there." Love is ever present, and the only hell there is or ever will be results from ignorance of this fundamental fact.

All the troubles which oppress a man attach themselves to him either through the belief that he is a physical or animal organism, or through the belief that he is a creature of desires, beliefs, emotions. By praying constantly for humility, and endeavoring to think only from the standpoint of God, man begins to disconnect or remove his individuality from the sphere in which evil seems to operate, and thus he cannot be found by evil. It is his belief in himself as mortal on which error depends. If Moses had thought of himself as material, he would have died of starvation during the forty days which he spent without food or drink on the mount; if he had thought of himself as a person, he would not have been found at the end of one hundred and twenty years with eye undimmed and natural force unabated.

In four passages Mrs. Eddy links together the words "meekness and might." Let us then strive to rise on the mighty pinions of meekness, till we reach that altitude of safety which, as Job declares, "no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen."

True Service to Our Cause

ALBERT M. PETERS

TO those who are taking their first steps in the study of Christian Science there no doubt often comes the thought: "Where can I best serve this cause, where and how may I do more for the Christian Science movement and church?" To this questioner, the one who has merely glimpsed real consciousness, there perhaps seems little for him to do, and he scarcely knows how to do that which may be assigned to him. Inasmuch, however, as the cause still needs propagating, and new churches are constantly being organized, is not this a natural inquiry? As all of our material activities must be preceded by right thinking in order to have results in right effects, it would perhaps not be amiss to point out one or two ways of serving our cause and church. First we must bring the right and scientific thought to bear upon the problem on hand, and as right thought must necessarily result in scientific and orderly activity on our present plane of existence, we will surely be guided to the place in the organization of which we may be members where we may truly serve to the best of our ability.

Mrs. Eddy has said, as part of the definition of church, on page 583 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that church is "the structure of Truth and Love." Then to build this structure in thought, let us look into our consciousness and try to discover what we can do for the upbuilding of this true edifice. We need not wait until a Wednesday meeting or Sunday service or a business meeting, but we can truly serve in the upbuilding of this structure each moment. In fact, the genuine Christian Scientist must constantly be at his mental post.

To the writer there comes the thought of two very important channels for this duty, one of which is healing. Now the layman may readily say, "Yes, but I am only a beginner; I do not yet know enough of Principle, or God, to meet all of my own problems, and surely it is not my part to take patients. This is the practitioner's work." Let us, however, look deeper into the meaning of healing. Is there a time during the day when mankind is not called upon to practice some form of healing? Is it not true that every time an evil suggestion is corrected by the truth a healing takes place? Is not every correction of a thought of impatience, censure, or criticism by a thought from Love, an experience of healing? When we put all of our waking thoughts into the crucible of Truth, is it not plain to us that we should be engaged constantly in the work of healing? Do we not all know that true healing is mental, and is it not true that the correction of all erroneous thought by thoughts of God, good, constitutes healing? How true it is that we may be always at work building and molding our thought in Truth and Love, constantly utilizing the resources of infinite Mind to make this structure safe and sound.

Then comes the other very important channel, which is the expression of gratitude. All, undoubtedly, who have touched the hem of Christ's garment do express a measure of gratitude in the many opportunities offered them. But are we expressing real gratitude? Mrs. Eddy, on page 4 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," says, "Outward worship is not of itself sufficient to express loyal and heartfelt gratitude, since he has said: 'If ye love me, keep my commandments.'" So it must needs be that the first requirement made of us is to keep our Father's commandments, and this we can strive to do every day, every hour, yes, every moment. We who are called must keep our lives a constant outpouring of gratitude, not only in word and deed, but in our every thought. Can we really express gratitude if we turn away from the needy? Have we a true sense of gratitude if thoughts of malice, bitterness, or hate lurk about in our consciousness? We most certainly are not realizing this gratitude while we harbor one least bit of wrong thinking; and it is not at all difficult, if one is honest, to separate wrong thinking from right thinking.

So to those who truly desire to serve this glorious cause of Christian Science, comes a decided call now to test and examine every thought and determine whether or not it is a fit tribute to our cause. There can be no doubt but that, to those who keep their mental realm free from all evil and filled with good, many opportunities will present themselves whereby they can serve the outward organization, which is the shadow of the true church.

The Monitor a Liberator

LENA OTT

THIS experience, which has been of great help to the writer, is given herewith to the field in the hope of helping some one else. Coming over here from Germany a good many years ago, I had from the beginning of the war to guard my thought carefully, the more so as I was then living with a German family. At the beginning this seemed no difficult task; sentences from Mrs. Eddy's writings came constantly to clear conflicting thoughts. I had been a subscriber for The Christian Science Monitor for some time and enjoyed reading it, but soon I began to see that the Monitor did not take the attitude which I would call neutral. Experience had, however, taught me not to be hasty in forming an opinion, and my loyalty toward the faithful workers at headquarters kept me from criticizing, though I must confess I did not read certain articles carefully, thinking I would thereby save myself confusion.

This state of affairs went on for months,—in fact until war in this country was declared,—when one evening I picked up the Monitor, and opening to the editorial page I saw Mrs. Eddy's words before me (Poems, p. 11):—

Brave Britain, blest America!
Unite your battle-plan.

I seemed stunned for a few seconds. The first thought that came to me was, Must I give up my Monitor in order to retain peace of mind? But as our Leader tells us (Miscellany, p. 353), "The object of the Monitor is to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." I saw that something was completely wrong in my thought, and standing there,—I do not know how long,—I fought my battle for freedom. A regular cross fire had been started, and gradually the following statements came clear to me: I asked myself what had brought me to this country? Evidently a longing for something that the old country did not have, as since has been shown to me. I came of my own free will; I found what I had been longing for,—home, friends; I enjoyed the protection of this government. I loved this country and at no time on my several trips back to the old did the wish come to stay there; and then, last but not least, I here found my God, my real home! Having thus through reasoning gained a firm foundation, I met the oncoming thoughts or suggestions claiming to have control over me as a German. Then the section on "Alertness to Duty" in the Church Manual (Art. VIII, Sect. 6) came to help; it reminded me that my first duty is to God. With this thought the mesmerism of a false Germany fell from me, and thought yielded to the divine influence.

In a moment light appeared to all the troubled senses. I saw the guidance of divine Love in bringing me to this country where I was free to follow the leadings of Principle and even to be of more and greater help to the mother I left behind. Next I saw my duty toward our Leader and to all mankind. The Monitor had been faithful to our beloved Leader's thought, and through its writings had led the willing ones to see, pointing out to them what was right and what was wrong, leading the way. The battle was won. The true spiritual ideal—standing for right at all costs—had been revealed to me. I saw myself as God's child, the object of His tender care.

The following week the Lesson-Sermon opened with the Bible citation in Numbers, where Moses asked the children of Israel, "Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here?" The answer satisfied me as to the right of the United States to enter the war. Having thus far reached my own peace of mind, I thought of how to convey some of it to others, a disturbed feeling having been aroused in our town through some unwise talkers; then the thought came to me to give my experience at the Wednesday meeting, and I did so, with a rich reward. In Mark's gospel we read that Jesus' disciples came to him saying, "Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without seek for thee. And he answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren? And he looked round about on them which sat about him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother." Looking around me in our little meeting place, seeing those with whom divine Love had united me with stronger cords than family ties could ever form, I felt that peace coming over me which is past understanding. Since then The Christian Science Monitor has become my Monitor, though not only for myself, and it is more welcome and appreciated than before. It is proving to me that we can demonstrate only what we know.

Christian Science and the Sailor

WILLIAM HALE COOMBER

THE problems which present themselves to the sailor who is a student of Christian Science are different in some ways from those of the individual whose life is mainly spent on shore, but in one respect at any rate they are the same, inasmuch as the overcoming of evil by good is just as possible to the man who sails the seas as in any other experience of human life. Perhaps there is as varied a life afloat as there is on shore, owing to the fact that in these days there is such a variety of ships which ply the ocean—from the huge dreadnought to the little torpedo boat, and from the gigantic ocean liner to the tiny tug. In whatever ship one may be, whether as officer or man, in a big ship or a little ship, in a warship or a merchant vessel, a man who is learning to know something of God and man as Christian Science teaches will find that, if he applies what he knows, a knowledge of Christian Science can improve any situation in which he may happen to be.

Paramount in these times is the question of traversing the seas in safety, owing to the fact that hostile submarines may be in a vessel's path and mines may be encountered; and, while there are other considerations consequent upon the majority of the nations of the earth being in a state of war, this would appear to be uppermost in most people's minds. All kinds of devices in the shape of patrolling vessels, ships of war for escorting transports and all kinds of merchant craft, have been tried to meet the menace to the safe transit of the seas, but still ships are sunk; and yet the man or woman who has the right idea of God and man as Christian Science teaches, and who uses that understanding, possesses the means of passing safely through such experiences in spite of all evidence to the contrary. The Bible promises this safety, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy teaches it, and the practical truth in this direction as in others is being proved by those who are grasping something of the allness of good and the unreality of evil. "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty," said the psalmist, or in other words, the truly "right thinker" is under God's care wherever he may be.

If he may be permitted to refer to his own experience, the writer has served some eighteen years at sea, and during the present war for a period of eighteen months on a ship of war, and has been constantly at sea. While on one ship, he subsequently learned that a certain hostile submarine commander, who was taken prisoner, had stated that he was constantly coming across the small squadron in which this ship was, but that he never could get within really sitting shot with a torpedo. On another occasion while the writer's ship was escorting a transport, the latter was torpedoed and sunk, but no attempt was made to fire at the escorting ship, although she had to remain in the neighborhood of the sinking vessel for some two hours to pick up the survivors. During all this time he endeavored to keep his thought clear, remembering the omnipotence and omnipresence of divine Love, and eventually all the survivors were brought safely into port.

On yet one other occasion while at anchor in a certain harbor, during an air raid a bomb from a hostile aeroplane was dropped ten yards from his ship, and others farther away; five men were slightly hurt by splinters; holes were made in awnings and side screens; two boats' falls were severed; a boat hook in the hands of a man in a boat at the ship's gangway was completely snapped in two, but the man was unhurt—otherwise no damage was done. The whole incident happened with amazing suddenness.

Thus Christian Science is a help in these times, as may be seen by the above incidents. A student of Christian Science, if he applies and lives what he knows of Truth, is a help to all those around him. Surely a knowledge of the spiritual and scientific fact that the law of Truth and Love is all around one is the safest armor one can have,—no torpedo, no shell, no bomb can penetrate that.

The student of Christian Science who is a sailor, learns to feel at home wherever he is, whether in his own country or abroad, ashore or afloat, because he is coming to realize more and more that one's real home is in divine Mind, in which one really lives and moves and has one's being; and this knowledge will destroy for him all sense of separation from relatives, as nothing else will, even if not all in a day.

Then again he will find that, as a result of his better thinking, he dreads bad weather less and less, but finds that gradually the weather conditions of his experience grow more peaceful and harmonious, because he knows that in real existence there is peace and harmony always. "The Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters," said the psalmist, and God's man has dominion.

Improved thought will, as time goes on, bring mankind into better conditions and surroundings. A student of Christian Science in a ship, like one in a house, can, through the leavening influence of Truth, be the means of transforming and healing the whole character of a ship; better work will be done, more good will be displayed,—and for these proofs of Truth's activity, he will perhaps be more grateful than for anything else.

Finally the sailor student of Christian Science can leave the whole plan of his life to the governing divine Principle, and know that under this government he will always be where he ought to be; also the Christian Scientist at sea, as the Christian Scientist on shore, from his changed aspect learns that "happiness is spiritual, born of Truth and Love," as Mrs. Eddy says on page 57 of Science and Health, and he is glad indeed that he has found a God who is ever available to help him in the midst of the ocean, as on shore, and in whom he can place the most absolute reliance, no matter how dire to human sense circumstances may seem to be.

A Mother's Victory

NELLIE E. ARNOLD

IN the past few months the writer has learned a deep lesson in Christian Science. When the declaration came that we were in a state of war, I began to awake to the fact that it might touch our home. For months my thought had been gradually changing through the reading of our periodicals, especially the Monitor, from a desire for peace at any price, to the understanding that peace established on any other foundation than Principle is not peace.

As time went on and the draft measure went through, the alarm felt was very great, and it became quite clear that faithful work on our problem must be done. Of course there was the possibility that our son would not be chosen, but this did not give any lasting sense of comfort. The thought that he might be called kept coming into my consciousness, and this thought was always met with the declaration that God places man and keep him in his right place. While making this declaration, however, there was the hope that it would keep our son at home with us; but it was not long before I saw that this way of working was not honest, so I gave up outlining and turned forever away from contemplating any human help, to God, the only real helper. I realized that if God places man, and our son were called to serve, there was no question as to the issue, even if that issue were contrary to our expectations. The temptation to claim exemption also had to be worked over and conquered. There had been some feeling of satisfaction in that thought of exemption, but this proved to be a broken reed when I tried to lean upon it, and gave no support. By turning absolutely to God as the only support and strength, a measure of that peace which passeth understanding came to me, and I was enabled to say that if our son were called I was willing he should go. When the numbers were called and his among them, there was no sense of disappointment or surprise. I was ready by this time to take the next step, namely, to "loose him, and let him go." Realizing that God was his Father-Mother, and giving up my human sense of parenthood I began to see that God could care for him much better than I could, for, humanly speaking, was I not helpless?

It is needless to say that the boy responded to this freedom, not even trying to claim exemption, and before we knew it he had enlisted in the navy. When the time came for him to depart, the presence of divine Love was again proved in the freedom, happiness, and joy which was manifested, and there was not one indication of sorrow or thought of separation. He has already proved for himself the power of Truth over discord by reading our textbook. After submitting to certain serum treatments, which all the men were given, he manifested symptoms of being quite ill. He then took Science and Health and retired to his hammock, and after reading about an hour, fell asleep. Upon awaking the next morning he was perfectly free, while all the rest of the company were still having difficulty. This was to him a convincing proof of the efficacy of Christian Science. When he related his experience to me, I thanked God for the circumstances which had made it possible for him to make his own demonstration, for heretofore it had seemed the easiest way to ask mother to do the work for him.

We mothers are learning more clearly what our Leader means when we read the following on page 277 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany": "But if our nation's rights or honor were seized, every citizen would be a soldier and woman would be armed with power girt for the hour." We are armed with power, the power from on high, and we can hardly find words to express our gratitude for it in times like these. Jesus said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

We are experiencing some measure of that peace which Jesus left with us, and are being enabled to take our stand courageously on the side of God, our hearts filled with gratitude for the brave, noble woman who made it possible for us to gain this understanding of Truth which makes free. The opening lines of the Preface to Science and Health are coming to mean more to us than ever before,—"To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings." Those blessings are received by us to-day just in proportion as we learn to lean on God and let His will, not ours, be done.

Landmarks

GEORGE MILLARD DAVISON

A PARTY of men accompanying the writer followed a seven-mile trail on foot to a cabin at the base of a steep hillside. On this slope lay one hundred and sixty acres of Government timberland which they must examine in order to qualify as witnesses for one of their number who desired to buy it. After stowing their packs in the cabin, they followed the guide nearly two miles through the virgin forest, until they reached the farthest corner of the quarter section. This had been carefully marked out by Government surveyors a few years before. The party had gone but a short distance up the trail when they crossed the snow line, and the rest of the way was over deep drifts which obscured the course. On their return, they set their direction so as to intersect the trail which they would follow to the camp. Unfortunately the heavy snow so concealed the path that the guide failed to recognize it, and not until the party was nearly exhausted by climbing for miles over fallen trees and heaped up rocks, did they stop for a council.

The guide stoutly maintained that a continuation of their course would bring them out near the starting point. One of their number, however, had lived in the timber country for many years, and as a college president he had learned how to convince men, so he presented his thoughts clearly and ably. He described so well the relation of the slopes over which they were climbing to the topography of the country at large as his auditors knew it, that they chose him for their leader. He took them in a different direction and presently brought them to a surveyor's monument. Then after an hour's hard climbing they reached a brook which flowed by their cabin. Soon they were seated around a cheerful fire eating a well earned meal.

Their new leader had spent considerable time in the woods, and he explained how surveyors begin their work. With all their care, the first line which they lay out over a new country wavers enough so that they sometimes call it "the meander line" after the famous winding Phrygian river. This line is then made perfectly straight by a series of most careful observations. When this work is completed, monuments are planted along the line in prominent places so that in future it can be easily and surely located.

Even more carefully than any surveyors, Christian Scientists are laying out for themselves straight lines. Each demonstration may be said to represent a monument. At times when the way seems hard and steep or obscured by doubt and fear, we go to our monuments, the healings which we have experienced through the understanding of Truth at critical times in the past. Standing there, we gratefully praise the Giver of all good for the ever operative law of Truth and Love, for the bounty of infinite Mind and the continual deliverances manifested to us so strikingly in other days. Then we take heart again and with a firmer grasp on Principle we press forward to the solution of our problem through an increased spiritual understanding.

On page 296 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy says: "Progress is born of experience. It is the ripening of mortal man, through which the mortal is dropped for the immortal." The victories which we win are steps in progress, and each one, rightly taken, will help us to win other victories. Jesus did not, so far as we can judge from the record, raise the dead in the first months of his ministry. He grew in the understanding of God and man till all things were possible to him. So we must "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ," to quote Peter's words. This growth does not come from sitting calmly down to vegetate, or to advance without effort, but it comes as unfoldment resulting from diligent application and the earnest study of the message of Truth. Mrs. Eddy tells us the whole story on page 147 of Science and Health, where she says: "Although this volume contains the complete Science of Mind-healing, never believe that you can absorb the whole meaning of the Science by a simple perusal of this book. The book needs to be studied, and the demonstration of the rules of scientific healing will plant you firmly on the spiritual groundwork of Christian Science."

The Ascent

EDITH L. PERKINS

UNCEASING prayer perfection to attain,
The patient overcoming of all sin,
Perpetual watching till the Christ shall reign,
A constant listening for the still, small voice within,—

This is the path we hour by hour ascend,
The straight and narrow way the Master trod,
Unto the goal where earthly conflicts end—
The mountain top—e'en face to face with God.

["The Cross of Christ"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 7, 1918]

Christendom has commonly made the mistake of regarding the cross of Christ as relating exclusively to the experience of Christ Jesus, just as it has erred in worshiping his personality rather than the divine Principle which he represented. It is easier for the human mind to reverence the sacrificial act of a benefactor than it is for it to emulate that act. Worship of a person requires a negligible sacrifice of self; but to worship divine Principle, as Jesus did, demands the same victory over the senses which he achieved. Death of the material self on the cross as the only means of winning the "crown of life," in Christian figurative language, has for centuries been preached, though it has not been practiced. Misinterpretation of the meaning of the cross has therefore frequently resulted in perpetuating the materiality which Jesus' life and teaching, if understood, would destroy.

The crime of Jesus which, in the eyes of a material priesthood, merited the ignominious death of a malefactor, was that he called himself the Son of God. Material sense, hating the spirituality which rebuked it, attempted to slay the spiritual idea which it could not perceive. It was for the purpose of proving material sense powerless, mortal life unreal, and the spiritual sense of life the only real sense, that Jesus the Christ submitted to the worst that hate could do.

Jesus said of his purpose in making this demonstration, "I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." His work was to prove Life to be divine Principle, not matter. The cross was, to him, not a punishment descending from the Father because of the sins of the world. Nothing of the kind. It showed forth the carnal mind's resistance to the divine Principle which he revealed. The cross was the necessity that was laid upon him to prove the nothingness of the carnal mind, to prove the omnipotence of God and of man's imperishability. Commenting upon the holy motive which inspired him to reveal the truth to mortals, even though it necessitated his facing and conquering the concentrated malice of the world, Mrs. Eddy writes on page 63 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "Jesus as the son of man was human: Christ as the Son of God was divine. This divinity was reaching humanity through the crucifixion of the human,—that momentous demonstration of God, in which Spirit proved its supremacy over matter. Jesus assumed for mortals the weakness of flesh, that Spirit might be found 'All-in-all.' Hence, the human cry which voiced that struggle; thence, the way he made for mortals' escape."

Now it is because Jesus did this work for the sake of all mortals, as well as for his own need of proving God, that no man can grasp salvation by resting upon the belief that Jesus bore his cross merely vicariously for mankind. He made this exceedingly clear when he said, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." The opposition and hatred of the carnal mind for the spiritual idea of to-day, is the same hatred and the same opposition which Jesus encountered, and it must be overcome through the same power of unselfed love, reflecting divine Principle.

The cross upon which material sense would impale you, is your belief that there is life and mind in matter and that man is both spiritual and material. It was this belief that Jesus the Christ took up for the sake of humanity and proved its powerlessness to intervene between God and His idea. His work has shown you how to do your work, how to resist this common belief and to destroy your share in it, through your individual understanding of the Christ and of the divine Principle which he illustrated. You can take up your cross, you must take it up, exactly where you are; and it will seem to assume the form of the specific error which stands between you and harmony. In whatever way evil claims to make you believe that discord is present and has power, that matter is substance, that life is separated from God, there is the cross you must bear, and that cross will become glorified to you only when you have made your own individual proof that evil is powerless and that God is All. "We must resolve to take up the cross," Mrs. Eddy says on page 15 of Science and Health, "and go forth with honest hearts to work and watch for wisdom, Truth, and Love. We must 'pray without ceasing.' Such prayer is answered, in so far as we put our desires into practice. The Master's injunction is, that we pray in secret and let our lives attest our sincerity."

Now the glory of this cross bearing, this scientific dealing with evil beliefs for the purpose of destroying them, is that by this you are laying down your own belief of life in matter, laying down all that stands between you and your realization that man is the Son of God. This is to be newborn. This was what Paul had discerned when he said, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."

Christian Science does not promise that cross bearing shall be made easy to the material senses through the scientific understanding of the Christ, nor does it promise that the cross-bearer shall be crowned with Olympic laurels of mortal honors. It declares that the perception of Truth, the love of the ever present Christ, enables a man to take up his cross cheerfully, and bear what to the material sense means a pang to that sense every step of the way until material sense is vanquished. Scientific cross bearing means that you are willing, yea eager, to resist all that opposes the spiritual idea in your consciousness, willing to crucify "the flesh with the affections and lusts," until you shall at length know that you have overcome the belief of material self, know that you are newborn in the understanding and demonstration of your deathless identity as the child of God. Speaking of the necessity laid upon the followers of the Christ, Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 29), "They must grapple with sin in themselves and in others, and continue this warfare until they have finished their course. If they keep the faith, they will have the crown of rejoicing."

[Albert F. Gilmore in Greenpoint (N.Y.) Home News]

It appears that the pastor's chief difficulty lies in his utter failure to grasp the difference between the true man and the false man as set forth in the first and second chapters of Genesis. Christian Science teaches that the man of God's creating, of whom we read in the first chapter of Genesis, made "in the image of God," is spiritual and perfect, incapable of sickness, sin, or death; that the account of the Adam-man, made from the dust of the ground, as found in the second chapter of Genesis, is the material concept of man which embodies all the evil, discordant, sinning, and dying beliefs of mortal man. The former is the Elohistic account of God's creation; the latter is known as the Jehovistic, the distinction between which must be clearly kept in mind if one is to understand this religion. Christian Science accepts the former as the account of the true creation, the latter as the account of a false or seeming creation.

The statement that "matter is merely a spiritual idea" is exactly contrary to the teaching of Christian Science, and no such quotation has ever appeared in the Christian Science textbook. In relation to the statement that "man is never sick, he imagines his condition," let us refer to Mrs. Eddy's exact words on page 460 of Science and Health: "Sickness is neither imaginary nor unreal,—that is, to the frightened, false sense of the patient. Sickness is more than fancy; it is solid conviction. It is therefore to be dealt with through right apprehension of the truth of being." Christian Science teaches that sickness is a false or wrong belief held in human consciousness, which is destroyed, healed, by knowing the truth of God and man; that is, by replacing the false concept with the true idea.

[Robert G. Steel in Muskegon (Mich.) Chronicle]

There is not a line in any of Mrs. Eddy's writings which in any manner denies God's word, a fact apparent to anyone who, with an open mind, reads any of her works, even though they might not be ready to agree with all of her conclusions. Christian Science honors God and God's word to a greater extent probably than does any other religion.

Christian Science teaches that the man formed of the dust of the ground by the Lord God Jehovah, as recorded in the second chapter of Genesis, is not the child of God, and for this teaching it has the absolute statement to that effect in the Bible itself. In Romans 9:8 we read, "They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God." Texts of like tenor occur all through the Scriptures and are undeniable proof of the truth of the Christian Science teaching. Neither does the Bible say that this dust man, mortal man, or flesh man, is the image and likeness of God. God is Spirit, and the image and likeness of Him must be spiritual and not material. The spiritual creation in the first chapter of Genesis, where man is made in the image and likeness of God, is finished, and the Bible declares that nothing shall be added to it nor anything taken from it.

Christian Scientists do not deny that disease has been healed and evil habits overcome in those who had little understanding of God and no knowledge of Christian Science. Such cases prove the claims of Christian Science that disease is mental, and the result in such cases is evidence that, whether the patient knew it or not, God, good, is supreme and the master of evil in all its forms. In the textbook of Christian Science, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy (p. 270), we read: "Mortals think wickedly; consequently they are wicked. They think sickly thoughts, and so become sick. . . . If a sense of disease produces suffering and a sense of ease antidotes suffering, disease is mental, not material. Hence the fact that the human mind alone suffers, is sick, and that the divine Mind alone heals." The Bible is authority for the statement that as a man "thinketh in his heart, so is he."

It is recorded that on one occasion the disciples came to Jesus with the complaint that they saw one casting out devils in his name and they forbade him, because he followed not after them. Jesus rebuked them with the words: "Forbid him not: for he that is not against us is for us."

Apples had been falling to the ground for centuries, and were no doubt seen of men, but it required a Newton to discover the law of gravitation. In the same way Mrs. Eddy, after she had been healed, through reading portions of the Scriptures, of a condition the physicians at the time pronounced incurable, realized there must be some spiritual law capable of being scientifically and successfully applied to all discordant conditions, even as Jesus had taught, and she discovered this law and named her discovery Christian Science. Thus was brought again to the world the lost element of healing which made Christianity such a vital force in the first century.

Christian Science teaches, as did Christ Jesus, that the "labourer is worthy of his hire," but this in no wise implies a money-making spirit, as charged by our critic. Jesus realized, as do Christian Scientists to-day, that until mortals reach that stage of spiritual understanding which will enable them to overcome all limitation, they require food, raiment, and shelter, and must provide these in terms of the world's custom. Jesus sent out his disciples to teach and to heal without money, extra clothing, or foot covering. Yet he knew that money was necessary with which to supply their needs, and that they must secure it through their ministrations. The Master also appointed one of the twelve to be treasurer, at once indicating a common fund and implying that it must be renewable.

The crime of Simon referred to by our critic, noted in the eighth chapter of Acts, was not so much in offering the money, as it was in the thought back of it; for Peter said to him, "Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God." This understanding is also made clear in verse twenty-two.

[George R. Lowe in Ottawa (Ontario, Canada) Journal-Press]

Whatever the significance of the obscure remarks on Christian Science by a preacher, as reported, it is but fair to reply that Christian Science is symbolized by light and not by darkness. Shakespeare wrote, "There is no darkness but ignorance." St. John wrote, "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Therefore, what sense is there in saying, "God's midnight hour," and "doctrine of night"? St. John also said that "the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." Christian Science affirms that divine intelligence is reflected everywhere, available forever to dispel ignorance, despair, sin.

Looked at through the dark glasses of pessimism, the world may seem dark, but right thinking gives a vision of "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Christian Science teaches that as we pray, "Thy kingdom come," we should confidently behold the brightness of its coming, the signs of the reign of divine Love, comforting, healing, uplifting.

[Willis D. McKinstry in Fort Scott (Kan.) Tribune]

Our clerical critic takes exception to what Christian Science teaches about the personality of God. The Scriptures declare that God is Spirit and that he is everywhere and is all-powerful. Surely this teaching cannot be understood as meaning a limited, finite, circumscribed, bodily personal God. Such a teaching or belief about God Christian Science disavows by setting forth a demonstrable understanding of infinite Being. Christian Science teaches the infinite personality of God, expanding into immensity without boundary or delineation. This infinite, omnipresent God is unlimited in wisdom and power; it was He who created all things, and pronounced them to be very good. It was this infinite, divine Principle, or God, that created man in His own image, and gave him dominion.

The apostle James declared, "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." Such a prayer is one of spiritual understanding; it is that earnest, sincere desire that admits no element of blind faith or belief. This is the prayer of Christian Science, which is daily bringing unnumbered blessings to mankind by the way of better health, more comfort and joy, purer-mindedness, and love for one's neighbor as for oneself.

Extracts from Letters

[Received from Switzerland]

"Permit us to express our deepest gratitude for the proofs of divine Love which have been given us in the way of financial support. In these hard times one feels such assistance doubly, and even more when one has such difficult financial problems to meet. While we do not wish to underrate the material worth of the gift, we appreciate mostly the fact that our faith has been strengthened thereby, in that it has proven to us anew divine Love and has brought us the fulfillment of the promise that God cares for His children."

"I desire to express herewith my heartfelt gratitude for the amount of three hundred francs which I received through my son on the twenty-fourth of this month from the War Relief fund of the dear Christian Scientists in Boston. I thank God for the help which He has given me, through your kind means, from these noble fellow men in America. It is a blessed thing to know that in all need and in these doubly hard times, our heavenly Father always will be the same good provider and helper."

"We send you herewith our thanks for your loving gift which we have received for the second time from the Christian Science committee. We give sincere thanks to God for this loving gift, as well as for all the blessings received through Christian Science. Our only desire is to learn more of this Love."

"I wish to express herewith my sincere gratitude for the effective help received through Christian Science by my children and myself at the beginning of the war. Later I learned that there is no lack, and that God does not forsake widows and orphans, so that I do not need to depend upon the support of the War Relief committee any more."

"In a time of great doubt and economic distress I prayed for help to God who hears all, and what happened? One day, being confined to my bed through physical suffering, and entertaining discouraging thoughts about my condition, I again prayed very earnestly. Shortly afterwards some one knocked at the door, and a kind lady came in, who was unknown to me at that time. Showing great interest in me, she asked about my suffering and about my financial condition, and although I was somewhat reserved on the latter subject, the lady saw clearly what the trouble was. She told me that she had a sum of money to cover my need. My gratitude cannot be expressed. My first thought was to thank God for the assistance. It was God who directed this Christian Scientist to me."

"We express hereby our deeply felt thanks to our dear brothers in Boston for the kind gift which you have sent to us through the War Relief committee in Winterthur. The generous gift came to us at a time when our means of support failed, and we did not have enough for necessities. This was another proof of God's infinite love, so that we do not need to worry for the coming day. He who clothes the lilies of the field and feeds the birds of the sky, will not forsake His children. To Him be honor and thanks!"

"Herewith I desire to express my sincere thanks for the contribution which it has been possible for us to receive from Christian Scientists in Boston through the distribution committee at Winterthur, thereby helping us in hard times."

The Chimes Rang Out

BOSTON is beloved by the world encircling membership of The Mother Church, because there may be found the edifice representing locally Mary Baker Eddy's church. The influence of this church through its many agencies and human representatives is world-wide. In 1866, before this church was dreamed of, Mrs. Eddy wrote a poem, in which she said (Poems, p. 39):—

Sons of the old Bay State,
Work for our glorious cause!
And be your waiting hearts elate,
Since temperance makes your laws.

This poem expressed prophecy which is on the way to fulfillment. When the Senate of The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, meeting in the statehouse on Beacon Hill, adopted the national prohibition amendment, the church at the foot of the hill first received the news, and its waiting bell ringers began the peal of rejoicing. This record appeared in the morning papers the next day: "The chimes of the Christian Science church were next to ring out the news. Their notes conveyed to the people of the Back Bay the first tidings of the temperance victory." Then the news was relayed from church to church to the boundaries of the state. Amid rejoicing let us recall what Mrs. Eddy herself has said (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 288): "The cause of temperance receives a strong impulse from the cause of Christian Science: temperance and truth are allies, and their cause prospers in proportion to the spirit of Love that nerves the struggle."

Why should joy pervade the minds of men at the thought of coming freedom from what is called the liquor traffic? Because of the enlightenment which has come to mankind, enabling them to recognize intoxication for what it actually is. Too long have men apologized for the drunkard, praised his hilarity, and made excuses for his depravity. True thinkers have now come to understand how the enemy of mankind works through this avenue of sense intoxication to defer the coming of the kingdom of heaven. One cannot by arguing or bribery induce a father to maim his little child, but let him be made drunken—the records of societies for the protection of children tell what he will do. Through this malign influence the weak and the innocent have cruel war made upon them by imbruted strength.

Now that which underlies this whole device of evil is no secret. We all know that every man has a struggle within against fleshly tendencies and animal desires. The good man takes the side of good, endeavors to overcome evil and succeeds because he learns how to "overcome evil with good." The drunkard stupefies his better self so that he can revel in animality, and be free, for the time during which the poison works, from the inner call to faith, meekness, self-control, honor, and kindness. Prof. William James describes the effect of alcohol as "narrowing the field of consciousness." Kraepelin and Asshaffenburg have shown that impairment of memory, and both inhibition of ability and liability to error are consequent upon the consumption of beer. It is true that the drinker often shows an expansive vanity, but he thinks himself to be something great only by deceiving himself. "Who hath woe? who hath sorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babbling? who hath wounds without cause? who hath redness of eyes?" Who but he?

It is sophistically said that a man shows freedom when through drunkenness he stultifies his manhood and expands his animality. This claim is made by those who can herd men in obedient groups only so long as they express animal qualities and are slaves to sin, lust, and fear. To become man is to rise into freedom, to think clearly, to love truth, to be enlightened by Principle. That grouping known as the saloon vote, whereby the representatives of the people are often threatened or seduced, cannot continue as an evil influence working the designs of those who seek power and kingdom on earth, if evil appetite be once destroyed. Here exactly and logically is where Christian Science lays the ax at the very root of an evil tree. Mrs. Eddy made this clear long ago when she wrote (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 297): "Taking into account the short time that has elapsed since the discovery of Christian Science, one readily sees that this Science has distanced all other religious and pathological systems for physical and moral reformation. In the direction of temperance it has achieved far more than has been accomplished by legally coercive measures,—and because this Science bases its work on ethical conditions and mentally destroys the appetite for alcoholic drinks." Is it any wonder then that we should all rejoice in the state-wide and world-wide progress of this "work" which our Leader inaugurated, and as the chimes rang out signaling one item more of human deliverance from the mesmerism of evil, that there was an answering music of joy in our hearts?

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

Redeeming the Time

No one would deny that well-directed effort is of vital importance to thinkers as well as to workers, and this recalls a statement in the epistle to the Ephesians, which reads, "Redeeming the time, because the days are evil." It is quite true that Christian Scientists no longer think of the concentration of energy in the way they once did, because this referred mainly to human effort at large, without much thought of its motive or quality. At the same time they have learned that they can never accomplish anything of value without directing thought constantly to the divine Principle of man's being. On page 457 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" our revered Leader says, "Christian Science is not an exception to the general rule, that there is no excellence without labor in a direct line."

A good deal is being said at present respecting waste on the material plane, and the importance of conserving time is also receiving consideration; but the student of Christian Science, whose aim is to work in accordance with spiritual law, knows that not a moment should be wasted in idle thinking. Christ Jesus said most unequivocally, "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." We are well aware that the idle or the wicked thought must always precede the wrong word, and none knew better than the great Teacher that evil deeds were only the outcome of wrong thoughts. When Paul was writing his epistle to the Ephesians the time was indeed evil; sensualism, tyranny, and mad ambition were doing their worst to obstruct the mighty influence of Truth, which was reaching humanity through those who had accepted and were striving to demonstrate the teachings of Christ Jesus. There seemed to be plenty of energy on the side of wrong, and this may be said to characterize the present day as well; but we should never forget that the operation of Truth is unceasing, and the only question is how much of this we are realizing in the depths of consciousness, and how much of it we are expressing in word and deed.

It is an easy matter, perhaps, to think over the money spent in a given time, and to see where self-denial could have been practiced because of the world's great need; but a far more serious consideration is to see how often thought is allowed to drift into the byways of vanity,—of material nothingness,—when every thought might be and should be related to the demands of Principle, and thus made an important factor in the working out of the benign purpose of infinite Truth and Love. On page 504 of our textbook we read: "The rays of infinite Truth, when gathered into the focus of ideas, bring light instantaneously, whereas a thousand years of human doctrines, hypotheses, and vague conjectures emit no such effulgence." This passage is of tremendous importance to us at the present hour, because after all is said the one important consideration for Christian Scientists is to know how they can best aid in the establishment of God's kingdom on earth.

All professed Christians pray daily, "Thy kingdom come," but the student of Christian Science knows he must see to it that the light of Truth is shining unremittingly into his consciousness and revealing the divine purpose in such a way that no mere human theories, hypotheses, or "vague conjectures" concerning the outcome of events shall obscure his vision or interfere in any wise with the work he is called upon to do. At this hour as never before we should ask ourselves, not merely at the close of each day, but during every hour, how much we are accomplishing in the right direction; for if every thought were to turn instinctively to divine Principle with a deep desire to be obedient to the divine will, it would scarcely be possible to estimate the good which would be accomplished.

When facing the world's greatest tragedy, with a little band of disciples whose loyalty to Truth, if judged from the personal standpoint, seemed to be an uncertain quantity, the Master said this by way of assurance: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me." It is well for us to think upon this very often when we are tempted to be troubled; and because we have learned to understand God and His Christ better, we know why we should not be troubled, but should see even now the certain triumph of truth over all error. On page 93 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy says: "The best spiritual type of Christly method for uplifting human thought and imparting divine Truth, is stationary power, stillness, and strength; and when this spiritual ideal is made our own, it becomes the model for human action." Let us begin each day with an unwavering purpose to prove that one day with the Lord will accomplish more than a thousand years of mere belief.

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

"One on God's side is a majority"

WENDELL PHILLIPS' stirring statement deserves to be reiterated and metaphysically interpreted to-day. The righteous learn to put their trust in God only, and so to be in the majority with Him. They approach this final understanding through human footsteps which in the aggregate constitute their human history. In proportion as obedience to God opens up the understanding, spiritual intuition uncovers to humanity the traps laid by the carnal mind. Mrs. Eddy states on page 83 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "There is mortal mind-reading and immortal Mind-reading;" and on page 84: "When sufficiently advanced in Science to be in harmony with the truth of being, men become seers and prophets involuntarily, controlled not by demons, spirits, or demigods, but by the one Spirit. It is the prerogative of the ever-present, divine Mind, and of thought which is in rapport with this Mind, to know the past, the present, and the future."

Light dispels darkness, so truth wipes out error and exposes its hidden methods and intent. If truth were more generally understood and practiced, error would find fewer loopholes for escape and would be constantly detected and destroyed. The reason why "immortal Mind-reading" is not better known is due solely to the prevalent ignorance of God as Mind. If it were universally understood that Mind is invariably good, that it operates through good laws of its own creating and thus produces good only, the pretenses of evil would uncover themselves and appear ridiculous. In its ignorance the world has misnamed the faculty of "immortal Mind-reading," confusing it with various phases of the practice of human will power, clairvoyance, transference of mortal thought, etc., but the Bible is full of the experiences of those who through obedience to God have uncovered the machinations of the disobedient.

When the king of Syria planned a war against Israel, there were revealed to the prophet Elisha through "immortal Mind-reading" the places chosen for the attack, and he forewarned the king of Israel. Searching for a physical explanation of this, the king of Syria suspected some spy among his servants, but he was told by one of them that Elisha "telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber." Then followed the spying out of Elisha's abiding place in Dothan, the siege of that place, the revelation to Elisha's servant of the mountain full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha, the smiting of the enemy with blindness, Elisha's leading them aside to Samaria, their recovery of sight, and their return to their master after having eaten and drunk. The final statement in this illuminating story reads: "So the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel." Elisha felt himself to be in the majority with God.

Christian Science lifts the veil of mortal mind, revealing the truth of being and its immutable facts. Though appearances may indicate the temporary triumphs of physical force, of trickery and treason, yet the horses and chariots of spiritual might are there ready to protect him who trusts implicitly in God. It is not numbers which count in the warfare of Spirit against the flesh; quality, not quantity, is the decisive factor. The multiplication of material objects does not bring victory, since mere matter is delusive and spells weakness instead of strength. In mathematics the addition of zeros ad infinitum can never give anything more than zero. Again and again in human history ambitious individuals have swept together by force of arms, by superstition, or by betrayal, vast multitudes of their fellow men, and kept them for a while under an iron heel, only to find that they were heaping up weakness unto themselves. Power based upon the supposititious reality of mortality is doomed, for the only reality is immortal; and Spirit sets free, but does not enslave. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 210 of Science and Health: "The Principle and proof of Christianity are discerned by spiritual sense. They are set forth in Jesus' demonstrations, which show—by his healing the sick, casting out evils, and destroying death, 'the last enemy that shall be destroyed,'—his disregard of matter and its so-called laws."

Every one who is obedient to spiritual intuition rejoices in the shelter of the divine arms, reflects the light which heals, sends forth the Word which never returns void. In the hour of world distress such a one knows himself to be in the majority with God.

Current Notes

REPRESA, CAL.—Sunday, February 17, Virgil O. Strickler delivered a lecture at the Folsom State Prison at Represa, Sacramento County. Mr. Strickler was met at Tracy at six o'clock in the morning by a member of the prison committee that has charge of this work, which is under the auspices of First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Sacramento, and was driven from there by auto to Represa, a distance of nearly ninety miles, arriving at the prison at 10:10 A.M. By previous agreement, the regular baseball game and band concert were postponed on account of the lecture. On the previous Sunday morning, during the showing of moving pictures, the announcement of the lecture in due form was thrown upon the screen; and most, if not all, of the men knew the lecture was to be given.

Promptly on arriving at the prison, the lecturer, accompanied by sixteen students of Christian Science from Sacramento, and conducted by the captain of the guards, proceeded to the chapel, which was at once filled to the doors. It is needless to say that the men forgot their environment, forgot their seeming cares and troubles, as they eagerly listened to the lecturer's message of Truth and Love, and at the conclusion the applause was instantaneous, unanimous, and spontaneous. The lecturer afterward personally met and talked with the men, including, at his request, one man who less than a year ago was the most desperate and the most feared man in the prison, but who through Christian Science has become one of the most trusted. Not the least among the many incidents that encourage and inspire the committee, is the splendid manner in which the men who are out on parole or permanently have made good.

BOSTON, U.S.A.—The Christian Science Society of Simmons College reports much progress during this college year. Both the membership and the attendance have doubled that of last year, and because of this growth it was necessary to revise the by-laws. Most of the authorized literature has been placed in the library, and some of the periodicals have been placed in the Students' Room. In compliance with the editorial in the Sentinel of October 20, 1917, the society drew up resolutions and sent them to Mr. Hoover. It also held an open meeting for the faculty and the students, at which Dean Arnold spoke. The literature distribution committee helped in placing the Monitor in the various dormitories and affiliated houses. This committee also distributes literature at the college and sends it to men in service. The society has made arrangements to hold its first lecture in May.

SEATTLE, WASH.—A site for the edifice of Third Church of Christ, Scientist, was purchased yesterday [March 13] for the consideration of forty-eight hundred dollars in cash. The property is located at the corner of University Boulevard and East Fiftieth Street.—The Post-Intelligencer.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.—Second Church of Christ, Scientist, South Temple Street, erected at a cost of seventy-four thousand dollars was dedicated Sunday, March 17. This church was founded in 1910. The building was begun in January, 1915, and the corner stone was laid February 15, 1916. The auditorium proper will seat nine hundred and fifty persons.—Salt Lake Tribune.

BLAINE, WASH.—There have been donated to the Christian Science Society of Blaine the two corner lots on Washington Avenue across the street south of the Odd Fellows Building as a future site for a church building.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

The Lectures

NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Lady Maud Rolleston, who said in part:—

In the Bible we are told that at the beginning of creation "the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters," and that afterward God sent His first message and command-ment to the world in the words: "Let there be light"—and we know there was light. That light was independent of the sun, or the moon, or the stars; for their creation had not as yet been revealed. Surely it was the light that shines through all eternity and is coexistent with God. Throughout the ages there have been wise men and women who have perceived this light and have brought through its presence beauty and joy into the dark places of the earth. Once, above all, the light was manifested in perfect purity, in undimmed brilliancy, in Christ Jesus. Now, in these latter days once more has the light been shown to us by one of the most faithful followers of the Christ—this time by a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, who, in the face of almost insuperable trials and difficulties, gave to the world that wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the study of which has brought health and peace and happiness to thousands of her fellow creatures.

MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Leonard T. Carney, who said in part:—

Men have sought for peace from the beginning of human history. They have searched for it in the school and in the church; yet to-day the business, the home, and the church are moved in the convulsions of a conflict unparalleled in the annals of mankind. Jesus of Nazareth met and mastered this problem many years ago. He found peace and joy without measure. He prayed for it in Gethsemane; it sustained him on the cross. His message to the world was, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." This peace healed the sick; it cleansed the lepers; it raised the dead; it cast out demons; it healed men of sin. The truth underlying Jesus' healings was practiced by his followers for many years following the crucifixion, and then it was lost sight of until about fifty years ago, when its Science was accurately stated by Mrs. Eddy. To-day thousands of persons all over the world are rejoicing in their enlarging understanding of this Science, and it is healing them of sickness and of sin. It is known as Christian Science, so named by its Discoverer and Founder, Mary Baker Eddy.

JOHANNESBURG, TRANSVAAL, SOUTH AFRICA (First Church).—William R. Rathvon, lecturer; introduced by James G. Petrie, who said in part:—

During the years since its inception, Christian Science has traversed the globe. Its practical utility has been recognized by men and women everywhere in every walk of life, and to-day it stands on its merits,—"the fruits of the Spirit" (Science and Health, p. 451). In these abnormal times of warfare and stress, when evil seems more aggressive than ever before in the history of the human race, thousands of individuals are daily rejoicing in the proof that the teachings of Christian Science when understood are equal to every emergency, and offer a full and complete salvation from sorrow, suffering, sin, and fear.

LOS ANGELES, CAL. (joint lecture).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by William E. Brown, who said in part:—

In the last analysis the chief desire of mortals is to live sane, happy, and useful lives. The world at large has missed the recipe for such living because it has not correctly interpreted the mission of Jesus the Christ, who, in the language of John, came "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Christian Science has made this teaching of the abundant life so simple and so practicable that all sincere seekers may utilize it in everyday experience and become convinced that life is indeed sweet and well worth the living.

ST. CLOUD, MINN. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Charles W. Selden, who said in part:—

The great Teacher of men once said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." There are countless numbers who are longing for truth that they may be free from bondage,—bondage to sin and disease of both mind and body. Thousands of these seekers have found in Christian Science that for which they have so long sought, and have received "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

HAMMONTON, N. J. (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by James A. Wilson, who said in part:—

Students of Christian Science, by an earnest heeding of the commands of the prophets as enumerated in the Old Testament, and by following explicitly and understandingly the teachings of our great Master, Jesus the Christ, as recorded in the New Testament, find that "whatever blesses one blesses all" (Science and Health, p. 206), and in a measure realize the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding."

ST. JOHN, N. B., CANADA (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Ralph H. Watts, who said in part:—

Christian Science is just what its name implies, the Science of Christianity; and while it is decidedly efficacious in the treatment of sickness, it is equally so in the treatment of sin, as should be the case with any institution which is designed to follow the works of the Master. The physical healing is merely a means to an end and not the end itself.

Testimonies of Healing

I have long wished to avail myself of the privilege of expressing heartfelt gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. Eleven years ago I was entirely healed of asthma through reading Mrs. Eddy's book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." A dear sister and niece sent me the book for a Christmas present, and I shall never forget the peace that came to me when I read the opening lines in the Preface: "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings." The first reading of Science and Health convinced me that it contained the truth about God, man, and the universe. I had read the Bible from my earliest days, though not with much understanding. The healing came through studying, and trying to practice Christian Science in daily living; my whole hope was in God. I did not seek physical healing, although greatly in need of it, but as soon as the study of the textbook was begun I felt as though I could not read fast enough. I knew it was just what I needed, and loved Mrs. Eddy for being pure enough to give it to the world. Since my healing I have never had a return of the ailment.

Before coming into Christian Science I was very unhappy and irritable, but my disposition has improved and many discordant conditions have yielded to the truth. Ten years ago a sister living in Los Angeles, California, came to visit me, and when she returned to her home I went with her. I was also enabled to take class instruction from one of Mrs. Eddy's students, for which privilege I am grateful. The Sentinel, the Journal, and the Monitor are welcome in our home and are read daily. My heart is full of love for all mankind and I pray every day for all.

MRS. MAY HANKE, Camp Point, Ill.

I am writing this to bear witness to the truth of the testimony given by my sister, who was completely and permanently healed of asthma by the reading of our textbook. I too am very grateful for the truth taught in this book, thankful to God, and grateful to our dear Leader, who was found pure enough to be the chosen one through whom this light could be given to the world.—MRS. MARY E. BASS.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude to God for what Christian Science has done for me. Shortly after returning to my office on Tuesday afternoon, January 11, 1916, I had a very severe bilious attack; later on I had another, and diarrhœa also set in. After the second attack I felt an internal pain, and came to the conclusion that I had strained myself. I went home thinking that if I had a rest I would soon be all right; but my condition became worse, and the pain was so severe on the Tuesday night following that I decided to have a medical examination. At two o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, January 19, I waited upon the doctor, who, after examining me, said that I had appendicitis. He advised me to have an operation without delay, in fact he wanted me to go into the infirmary straight away, but I told him I would rather go home first to see my wife. I told her what the doctor had said; and after talking the matter over we decided to try Christian Science, so applied to a practitioner for help. I had treatment in the afternoon and again in the evening and felt a little easier. I slept soundly all night, and when I awoke felt much better and very hungry, and the bowel disturbance had been overcome. On Sunday I was able to attend both the morning and the evening services at church.

When I left the doctor he asked me to let him know that evening what I had decided to do, so in accordance with his request my wife told him I had decided not to have the operation. He was very much surprised, and said that if I did not have an operation I could not live through the night. Just a fortnight after my interview with him, however, I returned to work, and for this manifestation of the power of divine Truth I am indeed very thankful. My healing has been permanent.—J. PARKIN, Oldham, England.

I have received so much good from the testimonies in the Sentinel that I feel it a duty to send an account of my healing, hoping that others may be encouraged thereby. It is about ten years since I first heard of Christian Science through a friend who asked me to try it. I gladly did so, and with the help of a faithful practitioner was healed of ulcerated stomach, extreme nervousness, biliousness, and chronic bowel trouble. I could eat only light food, was sleepless, and in fact was a nervous wreck. I had been in poor health for a number of years. Many doctors did all they could for me, but I received only temporary relief. My healing in Christian Science was not complete for a few months, but after the second treatment the bowel disorder and the fear of eating vanished and never returned. From then on I ate what was set before me. When progress seemed slow, I never had any desire to go back to medicine, for I knew that I had found the truth which Jesus taught and demonstrated for us all. I feel very grateful that I have had to prove every step of the way, for otherwise I might have dropped the study. I have had many beautiful demonstrations.

One evening, shortly after I became interested in this teaching, our little girl, then about three years of age, fell on her hand, turning it under. It soon became very painful and swollen. I could not get her quiet for any length of time, and about midnight my husband thought we had better send for a doctor, which we did. He called it a very bad sprain and bandaged her wrist, then told us to bring her to see him the next evening. During this time I was declaring the truth for her as best I knew how, and about ten o'clock the next morning she came to me saying her arm was well. She was perfectly healed. We did not need to take her to the doctor, but he stopped in the next day, and was very much surprised to find her all right. My husband was healed of a sprained ankle through help from a practitioner, the pain leaving very quickly.

I am truly grateful for all these blessings that have come to us, but the greatest of all blessings is the broader, happier outlook on life. I hope to live each day in accordance with this truth, letting it purify my consciousness, and thereby gaining a clearer understanding of God as unchanging Love, omnipresent and omnipotent. I also wish to express my gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for bringing this demonstrable truth within reach of all.

MRS. ELLA CHRISTEN, Salem, Ohio.

I wish to express my gratitude for the sustaining messages which come to us through our periodicals, and especially for those which have been given to us since our country was drawn into this world conflict. A few days after war was declared, our only son went to the nearest Officers' Training Camp and enlisted. After a few weeks he was admitted and went into training. At the time it seemed like a great sacrifice, for we were not awake to the seriousness of the situation, but day after day, week after week, and

month after month, these wonderful messages kept coming to us through our periodicals—messages that seemed sent directly to us—until, as a fog melts before the bright rays of the sun, so the fog of self-pity was gradually swept from my vision and I saw how impossible it is to be a Christian Scientist and not be willing gladly to do our duty to our country. I was shown that "perfect love casteth out fear." As our son has been transferred from one state to another, each move taking him nearer the Atlantic Coast, I have been able to realize that peace "which passeth all understanding," and now upon the eve of his departure for France, I am able to rest in the blessed assurance given us by our Leader (Science and Health, p. 303), "Spiritual man is the image or idea of God, an idea which cannot be lost nor separated from its divine Principle."

I have been healed of many discordant conditions. For ten years after the birth of our son, hardly a day passed that I was free from headache and backache, but through the effort to live the truth of Christian Science, as taught in Science and Health, these have been entirely overcome. I have been healed of what is known as quinsy, of colds and severe coughs, and for many years Christian Science has been our only physician. Words are indeed inadequate to express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for pointing so plainly the way that Jesus trod.

That "man's extremity is God's opportunity" has been proved to me. I had opposed religion, Christian Science included, as I did not understand the statements made to me about its teaching; but I reached out for it in my darkest hour, and after a very short while, through the sincere study of the Bible together with the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was healed of a malignant growth, liver complaint, neuralgia, and several minor ailments of many years' duration. The drinking and smoking habit also left me. Christian Science has helped me in my home, making me a better husband and father, and it has entirely changed my attitude toward my fellow man. It has given me a demonstrable Principle, whereby I can put off the old man and put on the new. I am indeed thankful to our Father-Mother God, and grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who through her unselfish life was able to impart this true understanding of God.

ALBERT J. EUGSTER, West New York, N. J.

The number of benefits my family and I have received from the study and practice of Christian Science are countless, but there is one experience I would like especially to relate, as it may help others. For some time there had been a problem before me which had to be worked out, and I knew that Christian Science, rightly understood, could do it; but from whatever point I looked at it, there appeared a reason why no step could be taken—either fear of harming others or myself, or fear of what would be thought or said, invariably kept me from taking the only step which came to me repeatedly as the right one.

One morning, on getting up, I experienced a great sense of pain and weakness in the knees, and finding that I was likely to be late, being unable to move quickly, I did not stop to treat myself as we are taught to do in Christian Science, but passing over a suggestion of age or infirmity creeping on, with a casual thought that it could not affect me and I would soon be all right, I dressed and went to breakfast. Various things occupied my time and attention, till in the latter part of the day the trouble became much worse, with an extraordinary feeling that the knee joints were out of their sockets and the legs useless. Then I awoke to the fact that I had to do some earnest Christian Science work, and I remembered that there were several texts in the Bible which referred to "feeble knees;" but not one of them could I recall.

With the desire to find these texts I got to another room with much difficulty by holding on to the furniture, and taking up the Bible concordance found the word knee with a view to getting the references. Before the references, however, there is a note giving the different significations and uses of the word, and I read, "to worship, to pray, to be in subjection." The last word arrested my attention. That was my need—subjection; and that again means to be humble—not to any person, but before God. Then came the thought that my earnest desire was to do the right thing, but I feared the consequences of the only step I saw to take. Then gently came Mrs. Eddy's words (Science and Health, p. 89), "We are all capable of more than we do." What more could I do? Just let my own will go and know that it is what is right in God's sight that has to be done. I still held the concordance; I had not found the texts about the "feeble knees," but gladly resolved to leave the whole problem that had troubled me, till I knew God's will. There came a call which I had to answer, and I at once put down the book and went without hesitation. The knees were absolutely well. Next morning I saw the right step to take in connection with the above mentioned problem. It was the same that had come to me for months past, the difference being that I had let my will go and was ready to do God's will without fear of consequences.

I am indeed most grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us Christian Science, and thus making it possible for all to know and understand God and to bring good into their lives.

MRS. LOUISA E. BELL, London, England.

The joy, comfort, peace, and increasing understanding that is coming to each student of Christian Science who is absolutely sincere in his search for Truth, is a memorial to Mrs. Eddy which nothing can touch or destroy. When I first asked for treatment, I was in a deplorable state mentally and physically. I had never been well, having from the time I was a small girl been troubled by constant colds, headaches, bronchitis, tonsillitis, and chronic bowel disorder. For three years before turning to Christian Science I was an invalid, spending the greater part of the time in bed. At times I was away from my family, accompanied by a trained nurse and under the care of the most able specialists in Chicago and New York. I had a very severe case of nervous prostration with about every sort of physical difficulty added thereto. Besides this I was in constant fear of insanity, although assured by my family and the doctors that this would not come to pass. A great prejudice against Christian Science and a rather superior attitude toward its followers kept me for a long time from applying for help, but at last I wanted the truth and turned to it "as the hart panteth after the water brooks," and I found healing. My first visit to the practitioner lifted the fear of insanity completely, hope was awakened, and there followed bit by bit the healing of the other troubles. Two weeks after my first treatment I left off glasses which had been worn many years for reading, and I have never used them since.

In the years that have passed since then, many difficulties, sorrows, and sicknesses have been overcome by the application of the truth. It is only in the last few years, however, that I have begun to understand what it is to be a metaphysician. Although I have gone only a little way, although there is much to undo, much to outgrow, and there are spiritual heights to be gained, I can see a growth in poise, confidence, sincerity, fearlessness, loving-kindness, and peace, which were only sporadically present before. The transformation of unlovely character is the greatest joy of all to the Christian Scientist, for the destruction of disease follows this overcoming.

To tell all that this practical religion is doing for me would be impossible. My little boys are greatly helped by it and they are already beginning to understand that God is Love. Lately there has been the chance for me to "come out strong," as Mark Tapley says, when my husband left to serve his country. The feeling of peace, confidence, and even joy in what he was to uphold, entirely eliminated a selfish sense of separation.

I am deeply grateful for the faithful work of the Board of Directors and the other officials of The Mother Church, for the periodicals and Lesson-Sermons, and above all to Mrs. Eddy, who has valiantly and unselfishly given the truth to mankind. I hope that I may more and more realize the greatness of the following statement by our Leader (Miscellany, p. 160): "To live so as to keep human consciousness in constant relation with the divine, the spiritual, and the eternal, is to individualize infinite power; and this is Christian Science."—Mrs. Alice R. James, Cambridge, Mass.

About six years ago, while in Honolulu, territory of Hawaii, I took up the study of Christian Science, not with the expectation of receiving any benefit from it, but to learn what was interesting others. After reading the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, about half through, many aches and pains of years' standing had disappeared, how or where I hardly understood at that time. I needed no further proof of the healing power of Truth, so took up the study more earnestly and later was freed from severe attacks of quinsy, inflammatory rheumatism, and a chronic bowel trouble which had affected me since childhood. Aside from the physical healing, the spiritual uplift was a renewal of life to me. My likes and dislikes through life had always been pronounced, but now I am learning through the guidance of divine Love to see man as created in God's image and likeness.

Recently I have been beautifully healed of what is called erysipelas. My sister, with whom I live and who is not interested in Christian Science, was much frightened at my condition and wanted to call a physician, but I said the practitioner was capable of handling the case. I was in bed only four days, but did not suffer at all, and those who were admitted to see me looked at me with surprise. I am certainly very grateful for my rapid healing. I cannot express in words my thankfulness to God, whom I am learning to know and serve aright, and I feel deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who was given such spiritual perception as to be able to make this truth plain to suffering humanity.

It is now six years since my study of Christian Science was begun, and during that period I have received innumerable benefits and blessings from its teachings. For twenty years or more I believed myself to be an atheist, and the Bible and religion were considered superstitious relics of the dark ages. It is true that when a child, with other members of my family, I was compelled to attend church, but this weekly performance was a constant dread to me, and before I was fifteen years old the ceremony was discontinued. The years that followed led me to the very dregs of materialism. I became a confirmed pessimist and cynic; I hated myself, and was suspicious of every one else. Gradually I was becoming aware of my shortcomings, and the thought of the future filled me with alarm. At this juncture Christian Science was presented to me. The first reading of Science and Health answered all my questions, and as I gradually began to comprehend the Truth or divine Principle taught therein, the effects of my changing thought were manifested morally and physically.

About three years ago while at the beach, my feet and legs became infected and were badly puffed up and swollen. After several days the pain was so intense that I could no longer bear my own weight upon them. I had no thought of using any material remedy, but doubted my understanding of the truth, so I turned to Mind and asked to be shown. At the same time I opened the Bible and found myself reading from the book of Joshua. Instantly I understood that there was no error that God could not destroy, and in less than forty minutes I was absolutely free. Some years before this a similar condition appeared in the left foot. I sought relief from two doctors, who warned me of blood poisoning, and it was six weeks before I could walk without the aid of a cane.

One Sunday night I was seized with severe internal pains of such an alarming nature that a practitioner was asked to help me. For three days and nights I neither ate nor slept. The fourth night, being Wednesday, I was due to usher at church, but this seemed an impossibility; nevertheless I was there, and that night my peace was restored to me.

Like thousands of others I find myself unable to express in words my deep sense of gratitude for the understanding that, no matter what the illusions of false belief may be, we can never be separated from the love of God. The Christian Science publications have been such a comfort and joy to me that I wish to give thanks for all the laborers in God's vineyard.—Frank M. Keane, New York, N. Y.

About six years ago I was taken ill and several doctors said there was little chance for recovery, as my years were against me. I had heard of Christian Science, in fact a copy of Science and Health had been loaned to me several years before, but I did not get interested in it. While I was ill, however, a lady came to the house and told about a friend who was being treated by a Christian Scientist. I said I would like to have a talk with this friend, so the lady brought her to see me, and that same day we called on a practitioner. I had six treatments, kept on reading and going to church, and then all at once found I was healed.

All my life I have been afflicted with throat trouble whenever I caught a little cold. Doctors called it bronchitis. In 1916 I was taken with an unusually severe attack and became feverish and weak. A Christian Science practitioner gave me a treatment and relief was experienced at once. I kept getting better right along and have never had the least touch of the malady since. One day I started to the basement without turning on the light, and had a bad fall, injuring my right foot. There was considerable pain for a time, but by holding to the truth and with the help of a practitioner I was laid up only one day. Although two of the toes had been broken, I was on my foot as usual the next day.

Christian Science has been a great help to me in many ways. It has taught me to be more patient and considerate and to look at things in a different light, and for all these things I feel deep gratitude. I am thankful to God for His unbounded love to His children, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her untiring devotion to humanity.

It is about seven years since I became interested in Christian Science, and during that time many blessings have been received, but I never fully realized just how many until within the past year when I have been counting them up and feeling more grateful every day. I have been healed of headaches, cuts, burns, and other ills.

In May, 1916, while I was house cleaning, a large splinter got into the palm of my hand, extending up into the middle finger, and while it did not come through the flesh there was quite a lump on the side of the finger. I immediately began to declare the truth, but allowed fear to creep in to such an extent that in about an hour it was necessary to telephone to a practitioner for help. This took place on Thursday morning and I had treatment each day until on Saturday afternoon a wonderful change took place and my hand, which had been swollen and stiff, but not painful, resumed its normal condition. During the following week fear again tried to manifest itself, but was overcome with the help of a practitioner. For fourteen weeks this work went on, and during that time there were many doubts and fears to overcome, but finally the splinter came out easily and without any assistance on my part. It came out of the middle finger, while I had been looking for it to come out of the palm of the hand, proving that we cannot plan how the healing is to be accomplished, or when, but must leave it to God.

I am truly thankful to God for Christian Science and grateful to Mrs. Eddy. My desire is to be worthy the name of Christian Scientist.—MISS MAE F. WATSON, Colwyn, Pa.

Nine years ago I was healed through Christian Science of a so-called fibroid growth, with all its attendant symptoms. I had suffered from headaches since earliest childhood. They were not only frequent but very severe, lasting from two days to a week, and greatly interfered with my studies, also robbed me of many pleasures. About three years before my healing I began to have frequent hemorrhages, which caused such a sense of weakness that I would faint at the most inopportune times and places. Finally I was confined to the bed, and two well-known San Francisco physicans (one a noted specialist) pronounced my condition due to a fibroid growth. They urged an immediate operation, at the same time telling me of the danger attendant thereon and frankly admitting that I would never be the same physically after the operation as before. They, however, said that unless the growth were removed, it would ultimately prove fatal.

I did not fear death nearly so much as I feared the after effects of such an operation; therefore, as I had planned to go East, I insisted upon taking the trip. The doctors assured me that I was taking the greatest chances, but nevertheless I started on my journey, having first made arrangements for an operation upon my return. On my way I stopped over at Spokane, Washington, and it was while in that city that Christian Science was brought to my attention by a lady who had experienced a wonderful physical healing and who was also a practitioner. I had very little faith in what Christian Science could do in my case, yet felt that it could do no harm, so the night before leaving Spokane I asked this lady to treat me during my trip East, and she lovingly promised to do so. The following morning upon awakening I was surprised to find myself free from any sense of car sickness, a complaint from which I had always suffered when traveling. I spent most of that day reading Science and Health, which the practitioner had requested me to purchase and read. The months of July and August were passed in the East and Middle West, and during that time no sense of discomfort from the extreme heat was experienced, nor did I once have a headache. The hemorrhages were the last symptoms to disappear, but by the time I returned to California I felt sure I was entirely healed.

From the day I asked for help in Christian Science, I did not take medicine of any kind or resort to any material means whatever; in fact, all the medicine my physicians had provided me with was at once thrown away. About a year later I had one more hemorrhage, but this time I was not frightened. I at once asked a practitioner for help, and treatments were continued for two months, at which time I knew the healing was complete, but to satisfy others I was examined by a reputable practicing physician, who declared there was no trace of the growth left. I have since been healed of other discordant conditions, such as acute lung trouble, ptomaine poisoning, and a fractured ankle. For nine years I have relied entirely on Christian Science.

I am deeply thankful to God for all the physical healings, but far more so for the spiritual understanding of God and of man's relationship to Him, which has been gained through my study of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which teaches us how to apply the laws of God to our daily needs. I wish also to express my appreciation of all the Christian Science periodicals.—MRS. RUBY V. CHAPMAN, San Francisco, Cal.

I have received so much help from the Christian Science testimonies that I take pleasure in telling of some benefits I have received through this truth. Mrs. Eddy's words in the Preface to Science and Health (p. vii), "To those leaning on the sustaining infinite, to-day is big with blessings," have been proved true times innumerable in our home.

While residing in Mexico I contracted what is known as black smallpox in its most loathsome form. I was then nine years old and had known nothing in the line of religion or healing but Christian Science. The truth was declared for me as soon as the disease was manifested, with the result that I was brought out of all inharmony, and no manifestation of marking was left, except an almost imperceptible roughness on one hand. Though my mother was continually exposed to the disease, much to the astonishment of friends who were watching the case and were not Christian Scientists, neither she nor anyone else in the building suffered from contagion.

A short time afterward, while in the quarantine station in Cuba, it was pointed out to my mother by acquaintances that I was drawn down on one side and limped very plainly; and although they knew we were Christian Scientists, they expressed the opinion that if massage or electrical treatment were not submitted to, I would be paralyzed on that side. Instantly the thought was realized that God's child is perfect and incapable of being deformed. A few days later we met these same people in the city, and seeing me straight and free, they could only look their wonderment, knowing that something more powerful than material means had made me whole.

Christian Science has also been a help to me in my school work, in the overcoming of nervousness and of resentment for seeming injustice. I have no words with which to express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for all the blessings bestowed on me and mine.

From the Press

[From an editorial in Haverhill (Mass.) Gazette]

War has wrought many tolerations and crumbled many prejudices. The appointment of a Christian Science chaplain for the navy is taken as a significant change in the attitude of the public toward the faith of the followers of Mrs. Eddy. As this action has followed the appointment of two members of the same religious order in the army, it is now considered that the barriers have been removed and that Christian Science will henceforth be upon a free footing in both army and navy.

For many years both the army and the navy have been closed to the attempts of newer denominations to gain recognition. Legislation was invoked to keep Christian Science out of the military service, and medical societies and medical practitioners maintained strong opposition to it. But this opposition has been worn away and the spirit of religious freedom has awakened to open the doors to all recognized creeds and cults.

[Church Editor, McKeesport (Pa.) News]

If any person had the proper conception of God (which reacted necessarily upon his own life) it was Jesus of Nazareth. His conception of God was so good, and his realization of it in his own life was so complete, that he could say, "I and my Father are one." Could any nobler conception be imagined? To strive to attain it is the privilege and duty of all who profess to follow the Nazarene.

[The Christian Work]

St. Paul continually gave utterance to the most profound and vital spiritual, moral, and ethical truths. Had not the theological interpretations and the familiarity of these truths blunted and mystified their meaning—the same is true of the teachings of Christ—the church and the world would have been transformed centuries ago.

[The Christian Advocate]

The man who is altogether mastered by the love of Jesus Christ will walk in white through the furnace of temptation, because another form walks with him in the midst of the fire, and his form is like the Son of God.

[The Continent]

The only kind of religion which will be respected in a world of refreshed spiritual vision is a religion with power in it.

"To bless all mankind"

"To spread undivided the Science that operates unspent . . . to injure no man, but to bless all mankind" (The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, page 353) was what Mrs. Eddy wrote of her purpose in establishing THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

No clearer evidence can be found of the fact that the MONITOR is fulfilling this high purpose than is presented in the testimony of prominent business and professional men and women who state that while they are not themselves Christian Scientists they are, nevertheless, outspoken in their admiration for, and appreciation of, the broad scope and reliability of this international daily newspaper.

A Christian Endeavor Worker:

In an address before the Christian Endeavor workers of a First Baptist Church, D———, Mass., "Mr. ——— was very emphatic in saying that The Christian Science Monitor ought to be in every home, especially where there were children.

"He said that he was not a Christian Scientist and probably never would be, but that he could not let the occasion pass without saying just what he felt, and added that he wanted it thoroughly understood that he was not asked by the Christian Scientists to say this, but did it of his own free will."

From a Famous Author:

"It appeals to me as a most admirable newspaper, and although I am in no wise connected with the Christian Science faith, I can have only the highest admiration for a journal that is as calmly judicial and as reliable as I have always found The Christian Science Monitor to be."

Helping the Liberty Loan:

"Knowing that you are glad to get reports of the good that the Monitor is doing, I am writing to tell you that in W———, Nevada, during the recent Liberty Loan campaign, a gentleman who is not a Christian Scientist, in speaking at the American Theater there, stated that he got all of his points from The Christian Science Monitor, for which he subscribes. His little talk made a considerable impression in the town, and the next day many favorable comments on the Monitor were heard."

Iowa Physician Subscribes:

"Picked up a copy of your paper, not long ago, while waiting in a hotel lobby and was surprised at the vast amount of solid, general information, the world over, the paper contained. From the name I expected to find an ordinary sectarian sheet, but was fooled, pleased, delighted,—I found something very, very extraordinary.

"Inclosed find $1.00, if when this is used up, I am still pleased, you may expect a year's subscription."

Read by a California Jurist:

"I might say that one of our justices, considered the ablest and most highly trained mentality who has ever sat upon the bench, whose decisions are almost classics in their wonderful grasp of the law, legal reasoning, and literary style, and who is probably far from embracing Christian Science as yet, told me recently that he was a constant reader of The Christian Science Monitor. As his influence is far-reaching, his literary activities considerable, his touch with the great questions of the hour remarkable, I consider it a very great compliment to the Monitor."

A Social Settlement Worker:

"While I am not a Christian Scientist, I have to thank you and all concerned and congratulate the reading public for a newspaper which I have come to regard as representing the highest type of journalism in America. I read many newspapers, but I am never quite satisfied either with their news columns or their editorial pages. I find not only news in the Monitor that I cannot find elsewhere, but also editorial comment of the very highest type. There must be something fine and strong in your movement to produce such a journal."

A University Professor:

Recently ———, Dean of English literature at the University of ———, told one of his classes to secure a monthly magazine and a daily paper for study in their work. He said he had nothing to advise regarding the selection of the magazine, but he added, "There is only one real daily paper published in the world, and that is The Christian Science Monitor." Some laughter followed his remark, which he answered by saying, "No, I am not a Christian Scientist, but I think my position entitles me to fair opinion, and what I have said is an established fact."

Pleases Congregational Minister:

"I am a Congregational minister with a record of more than fifty active years. . . .

"I regard The Christian Science Monitor as unique and in a class by itself. It is surprising in view of previous achievements in daily journalism. . . .

"The letters from Monitor Bureaus in every part of the world, and articles from special contributors, give important and often rare information from the world's wide field. The editorial page appeals to me because of the research, keen insight, and judgment in its articles. . . .

"The cleanness of the paper is noticeable. The Monitor comes into homes with an influence of peace as far as possible in a tumultuous world afire with strife and passion."

A Healing Experience

HARRIET O'BRIEN

THE memory of my first visit to The Mother Church lingers in thought as a beautiful and healing experience, and its afterglow has been as gentle and radiant as the evening light. At the time of my first healing in Christian Science, when I was wonderfully restored to health, a desire was kindled to attend The Mother Church, but for some time the way did not seem to open. At length in the summer of 1910 the time seemed ripe for the long anticipated visit, though just then there were not sufficient funds on hand for such a journey. Very soon, however, there came an unexpected letter containing a check for money which rightfully belonged to me, and which was ample for the much desired visit. Mortal mind began at once to argue how many other things could be done with such a sum, but these arguments did not receive much of a hearing, and soon were silenced.

Preparations for the journey all worked together in a wonderful way when it was once decided upon. In order to arrive in Boston in time for the Sunday morning service it was necessary to leave on a certain train on Friday. It was then Thursday, and some said a berth must be engaged in advance; others said that this particular train was always late, sometimes even several hours; yet the berth was obtained on the train desired without difficulty, and when we arrived in Boston the attendant who assisted me as I was getting off said he did not recall when that train had been on time before.

As I started on this journey the psalmist's words, "Flee as a bird to your mountain," kept singing in my heart, and all the way expressions of good prevailed on every hand. As we were approaching Boston in the early hours of that glorious Sunday morning, while enjoying the view from the coach window, there suddenly burst into sight from the distance a large, round dome. The quick, inspiring response this view awakened left no room for doubt. It was The Mother Church! Its great white dome towering over the city and above the tree tops seemed to be extending an invitation with promise to a waiting world.

Even the street car conductor treated me as his special guest. When Norway Street was reached he left the car and gave me specific directions. No sooner had I turned the corner than the chimes of The Mother Church began pealing out in the fresh morning air the soothing tones of our Communion Hymn (Poems, p. 75):—

> Saw ye my Saviour? Heard ye the glad sound?
> Felt ye the power of the Word?

I knew in my heart that I had, for was not I there walking in freedom, and had I not been for years a shut-in invalid, unable to walk and helpless? Though the hour was early for service there were many hundred happy people entering what was the most beautiful church building I had ever entered. Once within, a great calm came over me and I was conscious of the one all-pervading divine Presence. Even the teardrops bedewing my cheeks were but evidence of a fulfilled desire and a satisfied hope.

After the service, when people were going to their homes, a feeling of loneliness began to creep over me, and for an instant I felt a stranger in a strange land. Then like a ray of light came the thought that man is always at home in Mind, and a member of The Mother Church could not help being at home in The Mother Church. After this there was no further suggestion of strangeness or loneliness throughout the entire visit. It came to me to ask some one in regard to a desirable place to secure dinner, and I spoke to a lady in the corridor. After asking a few questions she invited me to her home and later added that she had a vacant room which she would be pleased to have me occupy.

One day, in company with some new found friends, Red Rock at Lynn was visited. We carried along some books, expecting to have a quiet time for reading and meditation, but instead I found myself leaping over the rocks with great joy, drinking in the inspiring scene with childlike freedom. Then I became absorbed with the dashing spray of the incoming tide as it spent itself against the rocks, its activity increased by a brisk sea breeze. The deep blue of the sea engaged my attention until, forgetting all else, thought turned backward to the centuries those rocks had withstood the beating of the waves and remained unmoved. Regardless of the ceaseless surging of the sea, their strength and permanence had been secure. Then rocks, shore, wind, and waves became mental concepts, and these words of Mrs. Eddy's hymn (Poems, p. 12) were illumined with new meaning:—

> Thus Truth engrounds me on the rock,
> Upon Life's shore,
> 'Gainst which the winds and waves can shock,
> Oh, nevermore!

A casual observer might have believed me charmed with the view, but to myself I was like the lame man leaping as an hart, singing a song without words until these of our loved Leader came to mind.

When in the vicinity of Chestnut Hill one day, it was my great privilege to meet Mrs. Eddy on her drive. As the carriage approached it moved slowly, and as it rounded the corner where I stood it drew very near. We looked into each other's eyes for a moment, while her face was illumined with a wondrous smile, and I realized I was in the presence of the noble woman whose teachings had restored me to life and health. These words then came to me as distinctly as though they were spoken: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." This Scripture repeated itself to me the second and third time, every word clearly, as the carriage rolled slowly down the street. heavenly Father had for me came to me; while crowning it all was renewed gratitude for those wise words of our Leader (Science and Health, p. 326): "Working and praying with true motives, your Father will open the way."

The Break in the Connection

W. EDSON SMITH

NOT alone from stars and birds and flowers, but also from the rough clangor and hard glare of daily life, does the alert Christian Scientist gather the lessons that make it possible to apply his understanding of Principle to every problem. Through "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, has given us an opportunity to acquire the understanding that enables us to do this,—a living rule by which we may measure up circumstance.

The radiator in the office on the topmost floor had blown out for the second time, flooding the room with steam and hot water, making the walls clammy, and dimming the clearness of the outlook toward the mountains. Both times, superimposed upon all this violence, there had been inevitable hours filled with the disturbing noises of repair, when quiet seemed far away. On the occasion of the second break I sat watching the steam fitter at work, and was finally led to question him as to the cause of the difficulty. Very concisely, and with a definiteness and assurance which left no doubt as to his grasp of the matter, he gave me the information I sought.

He said in effect that in the basement there was an exceedingly large boiler with a high-pressure gauge,—a boiler out of all proportion to the building, which was comparatively small and new, with but limited radiating surface, many of the suites not being even fitted up. My informant stated that the man in charge of the boiler seemed unable to understand the conditions and insisted on firing heavily by way of doing a good day's work. This particular radiator had suffered, being at the end of the series and taking the full force of the pressure. The blowing out occurred at a place under great strain. "But now," said my candid steam fitter by way of conclusion, "I have provided for all the expansion necessary, and you will have no further trouble." When he had gathered up the scattered tools and gone his way, I looked at the radiator, musing over what had been told me. We have all heard of "sermons in stones," but here was a sermon in a few lengths of iron pipe.

So often during the years of my striving I had suffered bitterly by reason of distressing breaks in the continuity of living,—breaks in the productiveness, the giving that means supply; breaks in the receptivity that is progress. Naturally many of these breaks, like the one in the radiator, were at the point of strain, where supply was supposed to pour in upon me. And for the most part they were accompanied by unpleasant outpourings of wrath and tears and tumult, dimming my vision of higher things afar and making as if to crumble away the walls of thought. There had been times of cold wretchedness when I seemed cut off from God, inert, useless. Furthermore, every patching up of those ugly breaks meant another great clutter in consciousness,—confusion, delay.

Yes, the steam fitter had taught me much, for I had cried out in utter despair of heart, many a dark day of many a dark year, for power—power—yet more power! power to do this, power to do that! Hands groping upward, I had affirmed with breathless longing the power of God, and forgotten to strengthen myself humanly by declaring just as earnestly and faithfully the power of man in His image and likeness. It was not the power of God that was lacking; it was my sheer failure to realize that God and His man can never be separated by any pressure of circumstance, by any intensity of action or reaction.

Here stands our spiritual building. Do we desire a calm, comforting security against "the wintry blasts of earth" (Science and Health, p. 57)? Let us not cry for more power, but say as did the Master after his final demonstration, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Let us transform that power into the highest human concept and radiate it in love to all, for thus only may we find warmth and pleasantness ourselves.

Do we pray to be at one with God, infinite good? Then let us indulge less in vague, meaningless outcries, looking the more to strength and perfection in the intelligent coupling of channels of supply to purposes of use; seeing well to it that we provide for abundant expansion against the coming of that sudden spiritual urge, the Son of man; for we must be well fitted in very truth on that day—able to abide. So shall our towers of Truth be tenanted with abundant thoughts of Life, taking comfort in the ready, radiant warmth of Love divine.

The Way

MARY KERN TIPS

WHEN Jesus the Christ, discoursing with his disciples on the deep things of God, said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me," he referred not to his human selfhood, but to the divinity of the Christ; to his true relationship to God. Neither Truth nor Life could ever be a person, nor could the way be hedged about by limitations or dependent on the personal Jesus for actuality. The going away of the human Jesus in no way affected the eternal facts of existence, nor deprived the world of "the way, the truth, and the life." These are the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; they are, because God is. To God there is no such thing as the appearing and disappearing of the way, nor is there to His image, man. These changes take place with the carnal or mortal mind, which is "enmity against God," and therefore unacquainted with reality. It is the awakening from its own illusions and delusions which brings to the human mind an appreciation of the way exemplified by the master Metaphysician. Jesus plainly stated that his mission was to illustrate the way of salvation to humanity, to redeem mortals from imperfection, to reveal man as the image and likeness of God.

Mrs. Eddy writes on page 18 of Science and Health, "Jesus of Nazareth taught and demonstrated man's oneness with the Father, and for this we owe him endless homage." He called himself the Son of God and the brother of man, using the simile father and son to exemplify the closeness of the bond between God, the creator, and His creation. The infinite all-knowing Mind must be manifested in intelligence. Nothing can come between God and man, Mind and its expression. Nothing could change the nature of God's man without first changing the nature of God,—an unthinkable proposition. Man has no capacity to know anything which does not proceed from this infinite source, divine Mind. If it were possible for the nature of God to change, man would instantly change with it; for man is reflection, and according to law like produces like.

The immortality of man is intact, because he expresses God, who is Life. The coming and going of mortals has nothing to do with man, for man neither begins nor ends with mortality. What is termed death does not interfere with the life of man. Jesus proved this by reproducing the presence of Lazarus and others after they had lost, to human sense, every appearance of life. He knew that life, being the expression of Spirit, is spiritual, and that there are not two kinds of life, material and spiritual, the one to be given up and the other obtained through a paradox called death.

Christian Science explains the difference between the dream of material sensation and corporeality, and God's immortal idea, and this distinction must be understood before man's dominion over false law and sense testimony can be evidenced. Mrs. Eddy explains this clearly on pages 167 and 242 of Science and Health. Any faithful student may gain a knowledge of Spirit and its omnipotence and prove daily and hourly his oneness with Truth and Life. No amount of human reasoning can becloud us and prevent us from realizing that God governs His universe in harmony, through His own laws, and as one becomes conscious of Truth's omnipresence his faith in good increases; correspondingly his fear of evil decreases. Wrong viewpoints are abandoned; consequently suffering, which is the outcome of ignorance, disappears.

To give credence to human opinions, dignifying them with the name of laws, to fear that aught can be beyond the power and scope of good, is to suffer unnecessarily from superstitions imposed by false education. One must realize that man's true selfhood does not need to be saved from anything. God takes care of man. That which is a false sense of man must be recognized as false and unreal and be relegated to its proper place as nothingness. Faith must rest in Spirit, and matter recognized as only a counterfeit of reality before the Christianly scientific process of healing can be demonstrated.

All discord, whether classed as physical or mental, is the result of wrong concepts about God and man. Healing comes with regenerated thought, purified motives, spiritual desires. It is one's knowledge of good, based upon the Principle of goodness which saves and heals. This Principle is omniactive through spiritual laws, and as these laws are discerned, proofs follow their application. In the ratio of one's receptivity, then, or according to the measure of his faith, will be the results. God never withholds any good thing from man, but to be conscious of our oneness with Him excludes all else from thought, produces a sense of harmony, and establishes the certainty of man's supremacy over evil of every kind. God, being no respecter of persons; has never restricted to any specific age or period the ability to know Him and to obey His commands. His omnipresence makes such restriction impossible. The human mind has sought out many inventions in its endeavor to be at peace, but peace is spiritual and cannot be gained by these inventions nor experienced by the human mind filled with desire for the pleasures and lusts belonging to material beliefs.

It is one thing to have the way pointed out and quite another thing to walk in it. Condemnation of the failures of others will not lighten our own burdens; it will only increase them. Who can know how strong he will prove in the day of testing? Who can discern how much forbearance and tender compassion he will require at the hands of others before the goal of perfection is gained? Paul declares in his epistle to the Galatians: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted." Jesus' use of the scourge in the temple is sometimes quoted as an excuse for harsh criticism and bitter resentment by those who are yet at the beginning of their demonstration. It is true that every phase of evil must be repudiated, and if gentle treatment does not accomplish its removal more vigorous activities must be exercised, under the guidance of wisdom born of spiritual perception, which comes with self-knowledge; but this is far from being the exercise of the human will. Mrs. Eddy's viewpoint is not ambiguous; on page 571 of Science and Health she writes, "Know thyself, and God will supply the wisdom and the occasion for a victory over evil." When we have removed the beam from our own eye,—that is, when we have carefully eliminated selfish motives, when self-mesmerism, which is virtually self-righteousness, has melted into such thinness as to enable justice to be coupled with mercy,—then we can understand and emulate the method of Christ Jesus in dealing with sinners.

The certainty of spiritual guidance in every detail of human affairs grows more and more apparent as thought is spiritualized. The right thinker lives in a thought world where motives and aims take on divine hues; he is constantly on the defensive, watchfully guarding against aggressive mental suggestions adverse to his highest purpose and advancement. He keeps the lamp of spirituality trimmed with devotion and burning with the oil of consecration, that no darkness may envelop him and cause him to stray. He makes no conscious effort to bring the light to others; it shines because he lets it. He does not have to call attention to it, because those who are not totally absorbed in materiality catch its rays and are attracted toward it.

Surely it is cause for great rejoicing that we need not longer wander in the wilderness of doubt and uncertainty, nor linger idly in the bypaths of error. We can go forward with perfect assurance, since Christian Science has again opened the way. In Science and Health (p. 174) Mrs. Eddy says: "Truth is revealed. It needs only to be practised."

Compassion of the Christ

JOHN A. MEEKER

THE transforming power of divine Truth, made known through Christian Science, is soon evidenced in the great change which takes place in our lives when we have earnestly and with sincerity taken up the study of this Science. We see life from a new point of view, and many qualities of thought which were held in high esteem are found, in the new light, to be wolves in sheep's clothing.

"By compassion we make another's misery our own" was probably our highest concept of sympathy before the light of Christian Science revealed to our consciousness that compassion is the offspring of divine Love. True sympathy is the recognition of another's need and the supplying of that need: it is that deep, compassionate love for humanity which renders thought receptive of the reflection of the truth. Those beautiful lines from our Hymnal (p. 98),—

> The longing to be good and true
> Has brought the Light again, are expressive of that deep yearning for the compassionate mind of the Christ which brings the healing truth.

Compassion, which is an activity of the Christ-mind, has not the slightest sympathy for error in any of its subtle forms, but is a law of destruction to error. It is for this reason that many of Jesus' sayings seem hard to the pampered intellect, ever whining for human sympathy. Commiserating at length over the trials of a friend is not true compassion, and does not tend to lift him out of his troublesome conditions or release him from his sufferings. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 367), "The tender word and Christian encouragement of an invalid, pitiful patience with his fears and the removal of them, are better than hecatombs of gushing theories, stereotyped borrowed speeches, and the doling of arguments, which are but so many parodies on legitimate Christian Science, aflame with divine Love." This indeed comes as a refreshing message, with healing in its wings.

Compassion heals, it does not lament; it is patient with humanity's ignorance and fears, but not with sin; it is not blinded by a false sense of self-pity or weak laziness. It is very significant that on each occasion, recorded in the gospels, where Jesus had compassion on some one, healing and redemption followed. He did not commiserate with them in their sorrow and explain that God had sent this suffering for some good purpose. In each case he fulfilled the law of God by destroying the wrong beliefs and conditions which seemed so real to humanity. With Jesus' tears of compassion at the tomb of Lazarus there was shining in his clear thought the light of ever present Life. With perfect assurance he could say, "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me;" and, "Lazarus, come forth."

Divine compassion is one with Love, and Love radiates life and might. Mortal mind sympathy, devoid of this life-giving power, is only mesmerism, and mesmerism is helpless darkness. It is impossible to conceive of a ray of darkness going forth to accomplish good. This is certainly what Mrs. Eddy means when she writes, "Love cannot be a mere abstraction, or goodness without activity and power" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 250). Sympathetic mesmerism, as typified by darkness, is wholly lacking in any healing power, while divine compassion is clad with omnipotence.

That spiritual animus which expresses itself in compassion is not emotional ecstasy, nor is it a self-satisfied outpouring of a personal sense of goodness. True compassion is the prayer of understanding, for it is that spiritual discernment which sees through the mists of error and beholds God's creation as ever perfect and harmonious.

Joy

ISABEL BLACKBURN

ON page 304 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Joy cannot be turned into sorrow, for sorrow is not the master of joy," and the writer has had wonderful proof of the great truth of this passage. While we are living in material sense, joy is indeed a trembler, vanishing with the first appearance of sorrow, but when we learn a little of the truth as taught in Christian Science we see that we never had the right concept of joy when we thought of it as something evanescent.

The writer's life from childhood up was full of what she thought was joy and happiness, until she had an experience which she shares with thousands of others in the world today. A dear one passed from sight on the battle field in France. This trying experience utterly wiped out her material hopes and pleasures, and all she could see before her seemed long, dark years of loneliness. Through her very slight knowledge of Christian Science, however, a still, small voice found its way through the sound of mourning, telling that there were joys to be found which she yet knew not. On page 265 of Science and Health we read, "Who that has felt the loss of human peace has not gained stronger desires for spiritual joy?" So, heeding this admonition, she kept on searching for that higher joy, and step by step, through a diligent study of Christian Science, she has most assuredly found what she sought,—not the joy that is turned to sadness by any material conditions, not the joy that is dependent on person, place, or thing, for that cannot be joy; but the true joy of an ever increasing knowledge of our Father-Mother God, who is Love.

She has learned the truth of our Leader's words on page 386 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "When our friends pass from our sight and we lament, that lamentation is needless and causeless. We shall perceive this to be true when we grow into the understanding of Life, and know that there is no death."

If, as we journey from sense to Soul, our loved ones pass from our sight, why do we grieve? If we love them unselfishly, we should not be sad; for they may gain from such an experience the understanding that there is no death. So that if the king of terrors is for them destroyed, their progress will be so much freer for having that fear removed. Then all there is left to be sorry for is oneself, and here we come to the real cause of the distress. If we examine any parcel of sorrow that comes to us we can generally find written across it, "SELF." Now let us look at one's own side of the problem. Have we lost our dear ones? No! They exist, as they always did, as ideas in divine Mind, and no amount of erroneous belief can alter that fact. True, we cannot see them with physical eyes, but does not the material body hide the real friend almost as effectually as does the belief in death which follows that belief of life in matter? Then, day by day as our thought comes more in line with the one Mind, we grow nearer to the spiritual, the only plane on which we can meet and be in unity. So let us wish our dear ones who have thus passed on Godspeed, and rise above all personal sense of loss; for lost they cannot be.

These experiences compel us to turn for comfort to divine Love, and there we learn that material pleasure is not joy and that only as we learn to love unselfishly shall we experience true joy. It is our duty as well as our privilege to reflect joy. Just think how many hearts may be saddened in one day by one sorrowful face! Let us then carry around cheerful faces and joyful hearts and thus help all those with whom we come in contact, for they too have problems to solve. The bigger seems the error to be overcome, the greater the stepping-stone we can make of it and the broader the spiritual vision when the top is reached. So we can rejoice in the face of all difficulties or sorrow,—and error dislikes nothing more than a cheerful face and a joyful heart.

Sufficiency

EVERETT EDGAR KING

IN these days when there seems to be such a great shortage in the world's food supply, it is instructive to review Bible history and see how in times past those who were willing to obey and trust God had their needs met on different occasions. This was true in the case of Hagar and Ishmael. Hagar had taken food and water with her for a journey into the wilderness, and when this supply was exhausted, she and her son lay down to die; but the cries of the lad were heard by his heavenly Father, who showed them where there was a well of fresh water. Mrs. Eddy says on page 7 of Science and Health: "The 'divine ear' is not an auditory nerve. It is the all-hearing and all-knowing Mind, to whom each need of man is always known and by whom it will be supplied."

While the children of Israel were wandering in the wilderness during their passage to the land of Canaan, they were fed on manna and on quails. Divine Mind bountifully provided for them in spite of their murmurings against Moses, who had so wonderfully delivered them from the bondage of Pharaoh. Later on in the same journey, when the supply of water failed and they had little hope of finding another, Moses smote the rock in Horeb according to the command of God, and water came forth to supply their need. When the famine came in the land of Gilead, Elijah was warned by God that he should leave that country and dwell by the brook called Cherith. Water was provided by the brook and food was supplied by the ravens. When the brook dried up, God directed him to a widow of Zarephath, who, He said, would sustain him. We are all familiar with the story of how she shared with him her last morsel of food, and how the meal and the oil wasted not until the day that God sent rain upon the earth.

At the time when the wine had failed at the wedding in Cana of Galilee and his mother had appealed to him for relief, Jesus rose to the occasion by demonstrating that Mind is the true source of supply. Because he always obeyed God's law he knew that God would sustain him in any activity which he undertook. On account of the spirit of ready obedience which the beneficiaries showed, the supply fully met the need. When Jesus and his disciples needed the tribute money, Jesus told Peter how to get it. Peter obeyed without a question, and he found it in the fish's mouth, just as Jesus had told him. The divine supplies are generous, and they are sufficient for the occasion. Each day's needs are met when they come. Spiritual food is not hoarded, yet there is enough for each day.

Jesus fed the multitude gathered on the hillside of Galilee by his understanding that when one sought "first the kingdom of God" all the things that were needed would be "added." Had he not sought it first? At this time he had been teaching and healing three days, and his only visible supply of food comprised a few small loaves and fishes, but he knew that if God provided for the flowers of the field, he would surely provide for His children. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 530): "In divine Science, man is sustained by God, the divine Principle of being. The earth, at God's command, brings forth food for man's use. Knowing this, Jesus once said, 'Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink,'—presuming not on the prerogative of his creator, but recognizing God, the Father and Mother of all, as able to feed and clothe man as He doth the lilies."

If we study to know the truth about God because we are eager to learn and because we want to do right, we are seeking the kingdom first; but if we study from a sense of duty, harboring the feeling that we would rather be doing something else, or from the fear that something may happen to us if we do not, we are not in the right mental attitude to realize that the other things are to be "added."

Omnipresence

PEARLE M. WARREN

I KNOW that God is ev'rywhere!
For when I seek Him anywhere,
I find Him there.

Because He marks the sparrow's fall,
I know He hears me when I call,—
Hears me and all.

Since He is omnipresent Light,
Shall any error give me fright,
Though dark as night?

Reasoning thus I learn to prove:
It is in God I live and move—
And God is Love!

Selected Articles

["Consecration"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 29, 1917]

Jesus of Nazareth, preaching, in the First Century, to the shepherds and fishermen, to the laborers and artisans, of Galilee and Judæa, spoke to them with a marvelous simplicity which revealed the deep things of God in a way which they, equally with the cultivated Pharisee and the scribe, the Sadducee and the physician, were able to comprehend. Humanly, it must have seemed that he spoke only to be forgotten. The country was a province, certainly, of the Roman Empire, but a province regarded always as turbulent and disaffected, on which the hand of Cæsar might any moment fall with swift and cruel vengeance. He spoke, too, almost in the last failing accents of a perishing tongue, itself a mere barbarian jargon in the streets of Rome or Athens. He taught, too, with no man to record his words, save a handful of unlettered fishermen and a publican from the tollhouse, on the Damascus road. Very different was the manner in which the words of the great pagan teachers were spoken and recorded, Plato lecturing to the Academics amongst the olive groves of the Academy, Aristotle wandering with the Peripatetics along the sculpture bordered walks of the Lyceum. Yet it was not Plato, nor was it Aristotle, but the carpenter out of Nazareth, whose Academia was the prow of a fishing boat, and whose Lyceum was a Syrian hillside, who was able to say: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." And the disciple, the student, who recorded those words was a tax-gatherer of Capernaum, and no Speusippus nor even Andronicus, working from carefully preserved manuscripts and notes.

Almost twenty-three centuries have passed since Aristotle sat at the feet of Plato in the Academia, or wandered with his own disciples in the Lyceum. Libraries, huge and vast, have been published of their works and of the studies and elucidations by other men on their works, with the result that the world is still discussing what Plato really did mean by his philosophy of ideas, and how much Aristotle may have understood or misstated his conclusions. It is, in short, a battle of words, and this for the simple reason that the two philosophies are colossal hypotheses, incapable of reduction to definite demonstration, because, instead of being based upon Principle, they are a collection of the impossible, in other words, of what the human mind has for centuries described as principles.

Now the philosophy of Jesus of Nazareth was not merely the only true system of philosophy in that it was based upon absolute Truth, and was consequently infinite in its application; it was, in addition, Science. It was, also, not alone science, as the world understands science, but was what real Science must be, exact. It was, indeed, what the most acute reasoner of all the medieval schoolmen, Thomas Aquinas, without the faintest conception of the full force of what he was saying, defined as the only absolute Science, and therefore as the only Science, and this because it conveyed to humanity the only absolute knowledge of God, of Truth, in other words, of Principle. This surely was just what Jesus meant when he said, so directly and so simply, to those about him, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

Jesus, however, knew much more than this. He knew that a knowledge of Truth must be able to be demonstrated, and, furthermore, that if it was not demonstrated, it was not possessed. Consequently, once more with overwhelming simplicity and directness, he stated his demand to his followers, for practice as well as precept, when he said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Jesus, it must never be forgotten, was a Galilean carpenter, who was appealing to the peasants and artisans of the Syrian countryside in language they would understand. He used, necessarily, therefore, the poetic symbolism of the East, and not the prosaic terms of the West of later centuries. But he was none the less uttering immortal truths, in the simplest way possible to him, and he knew that these truths could never permanently be lost. Therein lay his vision of the Christ, and it is of this that Mrs. Eddy has written, on page 99 of "Miscellaneous Writings," in a passage of signal beauty and deep understanding: "In no other one thing seemed Jesus of Nazareth more divine than in his faith in the immortality of his words. He said, 'Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away;' and they have not."

Why, then, was it that for centuries his words seemed to have lost their living force, and his teaching to have passed from Science into schools of philosophy? Was it not simply because precept and practice had become divorced, and the attempt to explain this away had led to the smothering of the simplicity of his teaching under the intellectual exegesis of a wilderness of dogmas? Yet Jesus himself had explained exactly how this knowledge of Truth, or scientific knowledge of God, as the Greek Testament calls it, no matter how human prejudice may decide to translate it, was to be achieved, and had given his explanation once more with unaffected simplicity—"Abide in me, and I in you;" in other words, through unfaltering consecration.

What was this "me" in which the Christian was to abide? It was not the man Jesus,—that would have been impossible and absurd. It was, equally obviously, the Christ, or Truth, which made Jesus the Christ-man, or the man who abode so steadfastly in Truth that, little by little, the human mind of the man Jesus faded like a mist before the ever present Mind of Christ, and revealed eternal Principle. The mortal or human mind which had found expression in the physical Jesus was blotted out by the very persistence with which the teacher whom Mrs. Eddy has described, on page 313 of Science and Health, in the words, "Jesus of Nazareth was the most scientific man that ever trod the globe," clung to his revelation of his own spiritual reality, the infinite Christ, or Truth. This consecration of thought necessitated his seeing the truth also about the hypocritical Pharisees and about the sea on which he walked, the truth about the dead Lazarus and about the Gadarene swine. Thus it was that his consecration, his abidance in the Christ, Truth, enabled him to say, with authority, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you."

This, then, is how Christian Science demonstration is wrought. By remaining so impervious to evil, so conscious of Truth, that the human or carnal mind loses all reality for you in the knowledge of the truth, in the understanding of the Christ, who is and has always been every man's spiritual self. When, therefore, Jesus abode in Truth, and shut out the lie of matter, he was praying in the truest sense of the word, realizing the truth about Principle with such persistent consecration that the human consciousness of sin, disease, and death gave place to a spiritual realization of goodness, of health, of life. Then that for which he asked was done for him—the impurity of the Magdalen vanished, the flesh of the leper became whole, and the son of the widow rose from the bier in the gateway of Nain.

This, all this, is the result of consecration, and this surely is why Mrs. Eddy has written, on page 3 of Science and Health, "The Divine Being must be reflected by man,—else man is not the image and likeness of the patient, tender, and true, the One 'altogether lovely;' but to understand God is the work of eternity, and demands absolute consecration of thought, energy, and desire."

[Charles W. J. Tennant in The British Citizen, London, England]

Christian Scientists are not afraid to come out into the open, as a critic seems to think. The statement that "God is All-in-all" (Science and Health, p. 468) necessarily raises the question, What is God? The Bible tells us that God is Life, Truth, Love, Spirit, omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent. Since Spirit is omnipresent, Spirit must have omnipresent manifestation. The spiritual universe, including spiritual man, is therefore the infinite manifestation of God, Spirit.

A Christian Scientist is certainly not concerned with the origin of evil, or, as our critic says, "where the false comes from." He knows the futility of such a quest. His time is fully occupied with the demonstration of the infinitude of God, good. On page 275 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, the following statement appears: "The starting-point of divine Science is that God, Spirit, is All-in-all, and that there is no other might nor Mind,—that God is Love, and therefore He is divine Principle." The vast multitude of men, women, and children the world over who have been healed and regenerated through the teachings of Christian Science offers a striking testimony of its beneficent effect upon humanity.

[Peter V. Ross in Visalia (Cal.) Delta]

The evangelist who spoke recently at the Baptist Church declared, according to report, that Mrs. Eddy says: "Food neither strengthens nor weakens the body." The reverend gentleman has his quotation sadly mixed. Mrs. Eddy, so far as her published works disclose, never made this statement. In writing on the subject of food on page 388 of Science and Health, however, she has this to say: "The fact is, food does not affect the absolute Life of man, and this becomes self-evident, when we learn that God is our Life. Because sin and sickness are not qualities of Soul, or Life, we have hope in immortality; but it would be foolish to venture beyond our present understanding, foolish to stop eating until we gain perfection and a clear comprehension of the living Spirit. In that perfect day of understanding, we shall neither eat to live nor live to eat."

An evangelist is of course at liberty to entertain his audience with jokes at the expense of other denominations, but it would seem that he should first be sure of his facts lest he add misrepresentation to his witticism. Most clergymen, much to their credit, find quite enough in the gospel of Christ to preach about, without turning aside to cast reflections on other peoples' interpretation of the Scripture. In fact tolerance for different religious doctrines and willingness that the truth, no matter where or by whom it may be discovered, shall prevail, is a most hopeful tendency of the times.

[B. F. Chandler in Richmond (Va.) Journal]

One is reminded of the fable of the sowers of dragon's teeth by the antituberculosis campaign now being conducted in this city. It will be remembered that the crop was an uncontrollable army, bent upon destruction. No one can object to sensible sanitation or reasonable precautions against contagion, but a campaign launched and maintained for the purpose of inspiring fear of tuberculosis presents the paradox of defeating itself to the exact extent of its success. It is a known fact, admitted by the medical profession, that fear is one of the greatest inducements of disease. Dr. S. A. Knopp, of the New York post-graduate medical school, has said: "One must first overcome the fear of disease in order to combat it successfully." In the Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin, Dr. J. B. S. King, formerly professor in Hering Medical College, and editor of the Medical Advance, wrote: "The Romans made a desolation and called it a peace; the sanitarians make a panic and call it precaution. The effects of fear on the body are more rapid and deadly than any known poison." Dr. John B. Huber, in Collier's Weekly, said: "Fear is a prime predisposition to any infection." Many other statements could be cited, but these three are probably ample to show that inspiring fear of a disease is hardly the way to prevent it.

Everywhere one looks he is now faced with placards intended to inspire fear of tuberculosis; reading notices of the same fearful nature stare at him in all the daily papers. Even the little children in their schools are not permitted to escape, but must have this poison distilled into their thought by moving pictures, talks, and plays dealing with "the dangers of the fearful plague." When people are filled with a fear of disease, when their attention is constantly concentrated upon it, and its results are perpetually pictured to them, what happens? If the published opinions of the leading members of the medical profession are to be credited, the result is an increased number of cases of that disease. In the Southern Clinic (Richmond) for June, 1917, there was an article on "The Mind in Disease," by Dr. W. T. Marrs, of Peoria, Illinois, which deals at length with this subject. Doctor Marrs says, "Many ailments in their incipiency are due to fear in some of its protean forms," and goes on to describe how a person who has received suggestions of disease from advertisements, and the like, may discover what he believes are symptoms, and worry about them and dwell upon them until he develops the disease in very fact, and he will not go to a doctor for fear his convictions will be confirmed.

Prof. Alfred L. Hall-Quest, of the University of Virginia, wrote in the March, 1917, number of the Virginia Journal of Education (Richmond): "Susceptibility to contagious diseases depends very largely on the mental condition. The ancient sage was altogether right in his aphorism concerning man, 'As he thinketh in his heart, so is he;' the Hebrews using heart in the same sense as we use mind. Measureless are the possibilities for health in the proper organization and end of our thoughts. Fortunately, it is no longer necessary to argue in behalf of the influence exerted by mind on bodily vigor. Sound health and sane thinking are two sides of a fundamental necessity. If there is a family history of disease, many people will worry over the slightest ailment as, perhaps, another outcropping of the fatal tendency. If you think of your troubles, brood upon them, gloat over them, dissect them, study them, be sure by this constant association you will feed the incipient suspicion of an ailment until it becomes a monstrous demon of death. Think health, cultivate the health habit." How may one successfully do this when he is constantly incited to fear disease and to study himself for latent possibilities?

One clause in the pledge signed by the children who enlist in the "health crusade" (?) is, "I agree to . . . do nothing that may hurt the health of any person." It is possible that the results of constantly suggesting disease to the human mind, dwelling upon its details, and inspiring fear of it are not known to the persons who wrote that pledge, who are circulating it, and enrolling school children and others in their campaign, but there are those in authority who do know the danger and who must fully appreciate what the logical result will be. If Richmond does not want an epidemic of the white plague, it is high time to stop inviting it.

[Albert F. Gilmore in Albany (N. Y.) Sunday Telegram]

In an item which recently appeared in the Telegram, after stating that The First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, had announced an expenditure of $500,000 for the relief of war sufferers, wonder was expressed how Christian Science can justify the pains and sufferings that now exist, since it teaches that illness is a mental evil. Presumably "justify" is here used in the sense of proving or showing to be just, or defending as right (Webster). It should be stated very clearly that Christian Science neither justifies nor defends as right pain and suffering. On the contrary, in order for pain and suffering to be right or just, they must be of God's creating, included in His infinite, spiritual, perfect universe, and consequently real and eternal, that is, indestructible.

If this were true it would of necessity follow that God is cognizant of matter and its conditions, a thing not at all in accord with the facts of creation appearing in the first chapter of Genesis, where we read, "And God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Now this does not at all mean that pain and suffering do not seem very real to the physical senses, or that this suffering sense should not be relieved in every way possible. And here is where there is much misunderstanding regarding the teachings of Christian Science. Mrs. Eddy says on page 460 of Science and Health: "Sickness is neither imaginary nor unreal,—that is, to the frightened, false sense of the patient. Sickness is more than fancy; it is solid conviction. It is therefore to be dealt with through right apprehension of the truth of being." The Christian Scientist is a true Samaritan enlisted to destroy every phase and form of suffering by correcting the false, erring belief with the understanding of what God is and what man is, by mental and spiritual rather than material means. This by no means justifies pain, but destroys it as an illusion of physical sense.

A Notable Service

On Sunday, February 17, 1918, there took place on one of the battleships stationed at Boston Navy Yard, Charlestown, Massachusetts, the first official Christian Science service to be held in the United States Navy. The ship was rigged for church, and at a few minutes before half past ten o'clock the bugle call for divine service was sounded. At the same time the church flag which bears the cross was raised, this flag being the only one which is ever hoisted above the Stars and Stripes. It remained flying throughout the duration of the service, to indicate that divine worship was in progress aboard the ship.

The reading desk consisted of two steel barrels and several flat gratings covered with an American flag. A piano was available for hymns and solo, and chairs and benches were provided for the audience. Chaplain Richard J. Davis, U.S.N., acted as first reader, and Lieut. Samuel W. Burgess as second reader. With the exception of a few guests the audience was composed of naval officers and seamen to the number of about thirty or forty. All felt the deepest gratitude and joy that Christian Science services are now made possible for the men of the Navy.

The Invincible Army

A REGIMENT was marching down a city street, its steady footfall as the tread of a giant. Then the band crashed out its finest marching tune, and for a moment the listener did not think of it as Sir Arthur Sullivan's music for "Onward, Christian Soldiers," but as if it were the rhythm for all triumphant marching. The thought naturally came of the unseen army, the great army of those who pray aright, the true Christian soldiers, in uniform or without it, in the wars or at home, who combine to make the invincible army of the Lord. Our Leader in Christian Science expresses no doubt as to right being might, but being aware that the sense of right in many minds is even as the bruised reed or as the smoking flax, she prays that God may strengthen it. "Fan Thou the flame of right with might," is the prayer (Poems, p. 30). It is those who pray for the right, and consequently work for it and fight against error in all its phases, who constitute the "Christian soldiers, marching as to war."

Many of them the great god Mars would scorn, for they are gentle mothers and loving children; yet God is continually using the agencies which the proud and the self-sufficient despise, to bring human boastfulness to its end. "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are." Gathering unseen by those who, because they judge by the sight of the eyes, must lay their plans according to lust and self-will, there is assembling an increasing host of those who obey "the King eternal, immortal, invisible," of whom Isaiah says, "The God of the whole earth shall he be called." They are praying, "Thy will be done, as in heaven, so in earth." This means that an end must necessarily come to cynical self-will, even though it may seem to be enthroned in the seats of the mighty.

Many of the members of this invincible army wear the uniform of their country, and go where their duty calls upon them to be, finding no "valley of the shadow of death" to go through, because they maintain the assurance that God is Life and man cannot be separated from God. Consequently amid trials they are unafraid and give courage to their comrades. One who called himself a conscientious objector refused to enlist, because of his religion, he said, and claimed to be a Christian Scientist; but he was quickly answered, "Some of our bravest officers and men are Christian Scientists." For a man to be brave and consecrated, to be ready to lay down his material sense of life for the sake of his friends, "greater love hath no man than this." But in no sense whatever does this attitude mean the acceptance of a philosophy which glorifies

> "Convulsion, carnage, war;
> The pomp and tinsel of unrighteous power."

Of these Mrs. Eddy speaks in her Poems (p. 27), and elsewhere she tells about her own way of prayer (Miscellany, p. 286): "For many years I have prayed daily that there be no more war, no more barbarous slaughtering of our fellow-beings; prayed that all the peoples on earth and the islands of the sea have one God, one Mind; love God supremely, and love their neighbor as themselves." This was published in the Journal for May, 1908, and she added: "It is unquestionable, however, that at this hour the armament of navies is necessary, for the purpose of preventing war and preserving peace among nations." It seems to be quite clearly indicated here that our Leader had no sympathy with those who would pretend to heal a hurt, or breach, by saying, "Peace, peace; when there is no peace." Of such insincere pacifism Jeremiah says: "Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore shall they fall among them that fall: in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the Lord." Hence "the armament of navies" as well as the host "marching as to war," may be needed to establish a right conviction which will lead to true healing and restitution.

Some then in this great army will be sailors and some soldiers, some will be "pastors and teachers," some helpers at home, but all working to bring war to its end, and through righteousness to establish peace. And the real warfare is against that beguilement of men by animality, depicted in Genesis as being accomplished by the serpent, which surpassed the beasts in cunning, being "more subtil than any beast of the field." This evil instinct leading to criminality is pictured in Revelation as the dragon. This it is which glorifies deceit and falsehood as a means for gaining advantage. It induces perpetual infringement of the tenth commandment, and in carrying out its wide reaching covetousness breaks the rest of the commandments. It pours out scorn upon the sermon Jesus preached on the mount. It would overwhelm in a flood of false accusation the spiritual idea of this age; and yet it has no real power. Its temporary power is given to it by the consent of men whose lusts it promises to satisfy and the acquiescence of those who are terrorized by its boasting.

Prayer is the weapon against it which will prevail, because prayer as understood in Christian Science is effectual for the healing of the sick, the enlightenment of the darkened, the deliverance of those envenomed, and the awakening of the dead. Through prayer the child, or the woman, or the man, takes the side of Principle and "may boldly say, The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me." They who are engaged and engrossed in self so that, as indicated in the Apocalypse, they repent not "of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts," may not see the light arising; but it is enlightening men so that they are gaining freedom from sin, lust, and hypocrisy within themselves and so cannot be manipulated by the mesmerism which works through these methods.

Prayer delivers from mental suggestion which aggressively seeks to make an evil way excite a man's desire and endeavors to terrorize the good man and make his way seem unprofitable. Through prayer man learns to know God as He is, and then he is able to withstand the claim of evil to power, because he knows that God alone is power. The fact is that Christian Science is teaching men the truth regarding God and man. It is the "new religion" concerning which there is questioning and whispered hope. It teaches men how to pray and how to find answer to prayer. It reveals the kingdom of heaven coming to the hearts of men. It will reveal God's healing and saving power so that all men will gladly choose to be saints, and none will desire to be sinners, and in that case the world will not of course "learn war any more" because it will have become a new world "wherein dwelleth righteousness."

Silence in Heaven

THERE are moments in the history of men and nations when eloquent silence seems to reign. The blare of the world's trumpets, the thunder of its guns, the clamor for place and power, the cry of the bereaved, have been temporarily stilled. Nothing appears to be worth while or indeed to have being except the beautiful, the good, and the true. The supposition that hate and greed have entity or that anyone should seek revenge or could misunderstand the motives of the righteous,—these beliefs are then seen to be curious aberrations springing from nowhere and leading to no results. At such times there are glimpses of reality which reveal the naturalness of good and the consequent absurdity of evil. The whole of the universe including man seems to be listening to the voice of the creator, which speaks to spiritual perception, though it remains unheard by physical sense.

Christian Scientists rejoice in a special provision made for silent prayer in their church services. When the physical senses are hushed and the door of understanding opens to the knock of the Christ, Truth, there is silence in heaven. Silent prayer is designed to emphasize the unity of good in human consciousness, to bring the assurance of the ever present fatherhood and motherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The silence of heaven is as gentle as the falling dew, and as refreshing, and it can make the pause in a Christian Science Wednesday evening meeting golden with the peace which passeth mortal conception.

We read in Revelation that after "the servants of our God" had been sealed "in their foreheads;" after the twelve thousand from each of the twelve tribes had been sealed; after the multitude "which no man could number" had sung their hymn of rejoicing before the throne and before the Lamb; and after the opening of the seventh seal, "there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." This is the type of the heavenly silence which the Christian Science treatment imposes upon the beliefs of corporeality, this the divine command which says unto the stormy sea of carnal desire, "Peace, be still."

On page 339 of "Miscellaneous Writings" Mrs. Eddy, discoursing on the subject of "Fidelity," states: "If people would confine their talk to subjects that are profitable, that which St. John informs us took place once in heaven, would happen very frequently on earth,—silence for the space of half an hour." The world's chatter and gossiping prattle about unprofitable things tries to drown out the whisperings of Truth and distract attention from that which saves and heals. More than half a century after the discovery of Christian Science, and though the proof of its power has been and is being demonstrated conclusively to multitudes, the voluble talk of material medicine, material religion, and material science still tries to forbid the silence of heaven. Though physiology and false theology pile up their cases of the so-called incurable and the so-called morally lost, Christian Science points faithfully to the Sabbath stillness in which was made manifest that "God saw every thing that he had made, and, behold, it was very good."

Happy is he who in the hour of human darkness can turn resolutely to the divine light, whose spiritual sight cannot be blurred by the cross fire of human opinions, whose hearing is not affected by the detonations of the bombs of hate, and whose equipoise is not disturbed by the concussions of outrageous human will power. Such a one does not succumb to any process of attrition, though evil may attack again and again. The friction of contending forces does not inflame him mentally or physically; he does not permit irritants or counterirritants to impose disease upon him. He does not seek solace in intoxicants who has learned to take refuge in the "secret place of the most High."

Mrs. Eddy tells us that the title of her epoch-making book, Science and Health, came to her in the night, in a silence which surely was that of heaven. When her faithful followers listen to God in obedience, gratitude, and love, they too hear the divine message of inspiration, and can join with Hannah in her song of rejoicing: "There is none holy as the Lord: for there is none beside thee: neither is there any rock like our God." To experience the silence in heaven is to be clothed with authority and dominion. On page 93 of "Retrospection and Introspection" Mrs. Eddy writes: "The best spiritual type of Christly method for uplifting human thought and imparting divine Truth, is stationary power, stillness, and strength; and when this spiritual ideal is made our own, it becomes the model for human action."

The Great Commission

IT is not possible to study the gospels without noting the emphasis laid by Christ Jesus upon the instructions given to his twelve disciples at the time when they were nominated by him for the service of God and humanity. This is often referred to as the great commission, and great it truly is. The men who were honored in being thus called were not themselves great; they were not chosen from among the ranks of the learned, for several of them were simple fishermen; but they must have had certain qualifications which the Master recognized and which were essential in the work of saving men from sin, disease, and death.

It is very easy for the Christian Scientist to see why the Master gave priority to the work of healing the ills of mankind, for in the light of Truth it is self-evident that healing as understood in Christian Science is of more vital importance to the race than aught else. The theology of this ministry might be said to be condensed into the opening words of the great commission, namely: "Preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand." This declaration of divine Truth underlies all the teaching of Christian Science, and the Master's command which followed his announcement of the ever presence of the kingdom of God is inseparable from it. Mrs. Eddy has opened our eyes to the great fact that God has no sick or sinful children, that in His kingdom evil has no place; and so the work of the Christian student means the offering of the proof that this is true.

As we read in the tenth chapter of Matthew of the sending forth of these disciples, we at once become aware that mortal mind was ready to resist to the utmost the demands of Truth in that day even as at the present time. If the Master had not foreseen this resistance and this opposition, and had not prepared his disciples to meet it, they would probably have been grievously disappointed when their message of Truth and Love met with scorn and rejection; but he told them how to protect themselves against the asserted influence of the carnal mind when he said, respecting any house or city which refused to listen to the healing message of Truth, "When ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet." The statement which follows is unfortunately overlooked by many readers of the Bible who ought to see the tremendous importance given to it by the great Teacher, who said: "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city."

Very few, perhaps, outside the ranks of Christian Scientists consider how serious a thing it is to reject the Christ-healing or to deny that it was established by the Master for all time,—at least until the vision of the Apocalypse is fully realized, and sickness and sin, sorrow and death, have disappeared from the consciousness of humanity. On page 330 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says: "Until the author of this book learned the vastness of Christian Science, the fixedness of mortal illusions, and the human hatred of Truth, she cherished sanguine hopes that Christian Science would meet with immediate and universal acceptance." The statement which follows will show why this revelation of divine Truth is beyond the grasp of materialistic thought and can be understood only when spiritual awakening comes. It reads: "God is infinite, the only Life, substance, Spirit, or Soul, the only intelligence of the universe, including man."

The student of Christian Science soon comes to see the reason for the resistance of mortal mind to this inspired statement, for it shows plainly that the carnal mind with its illusions of sin, disease, and death is necessarily ruled out of the kingdom of God. Many professed Christians are strangely indifferent on this question and quite fail to see that if the Christ-healing has been presented to them in Christian Science, and if they choose to reject it, they are bringing upon themselves the condemnation which fell upon Sodom and Gomorrah. In Jesus' teaching this characterization was a fearless arraignment of the self-righteous thought of his time which refused to see the signs that must ever accompany the declaration of spiritual law; and so in pressing home the demand of Truth upon the resisting thought he said, "The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you."

The Master's commission to his disciples surely makes it clear that no one can heedlessly dismiss, under any plea whatsoever, the idea of the Christ-healing which he presented; for it comes down through the centuries to witness against the belief that material things are as real as things spiritual and much more attractive to mankind than the things of God. When our Leader announced to the world her discovery of the divine Principle of Christian Science she saw clearly the stupendous task before her, but never once did she shrink from it, for she knew that the time was drawing on apace when the full content of Christianity as given by the Master must be proved, because of humanity's great and ever increasing needs. It therefore rests with the humblest follower of Christian Science to make good by his work, and by pure spirituality, his right to the Master's strong assurance, "He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth me receiveth him that sent me."

Current Notes

PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, CANADA.—The Christian Scientists in the province of Quebec had a very pleasant experience in connection with the Provincial Parliament sessions just closed. A revised medical bill for 1918 was introduced into the legislature by the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Quebec, and had passed through its first reading before we were aware of its existence. It is to the credit of the framers of the bill that it was not an attack against Christian Science, which is acknowledged to be a religion of healing by spiritual means, or prayer, and does not come under the status of the practice of medicine. Had the bill passed without the correction of a clause referring to advertising, the practitioners of Christian Science would be prevented from advertising publicly, and this ban would extend even to The Christian Science Journal, if circulated in the province of Quebec.

Legal counsel was secured and our lawyer kept in touch with the executive of the House, explaining our objections. The legislators also were interviewed. Finally the objectionable clause was taken out of the bill in its entirety. In addition to this concession, a very friendly missive from the president of the College of Physicians and Surgeons was sent to our lawyer, asking him to "guarantee the Christian Scientists that the amendment in their bill (clause eight) was not intended to affect the consultations given by the healers of this religion."

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,

The Lectures

PLYMOUTH, WIS. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Bessie Wiggen, who said in part:—

In 1866 Mrs. Eddy discovered Christian Science, and although that is only a half century ago it is to-day taught and practiced in almost every country on the globe. Christian Science teaches us to love one another; to think right; to understand and know the omnipotence of divine Mind, God, good, thereby giving us health, harmony, happiness, and prosperity.—Plymouth Reporter.

COALINGA, CAL. (Society).—Prof. Hermann D. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. O. H. Knox, who said in part:—

It is recorded in the Bible that Jesus of Nazareth said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He proved that this truth when applied as he taught, would free mankind from sin, sickness, and even death. His followers also proved this for themselves and others for almost three centuries after the crucifixion. After that time the healing influence was lost, until about fifty years ago a woman, Mary Baker Eddy, rediscovered this truth which Jesus taught, and named her discovery Christian Science. She proved through her own healing and by healing others that this truth will heal the sick now and in every age, just as it did nineteen hundred years ago. She also learned, through demonstrating this truth, that God is a very present help in time of trouble, a God close at hand and not far off.—Coalinga Record.

NAMPA, IDAHO (First Church).—Dr. Francis J. Fluno, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Clare S. Jenness, who said in part:—

The Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, Mary Baker Eddy, gave to the world no new philosophy or religion; but she discovered, or uncovered, the spiritual import of the older Scripture, and of the teaching of the master Metaphysician. This uncovering is as the taking away of a veil which material sense had woven, and is ever weaving, between itself and God. Mrs. Eddy by her life and work blazed a trail through the tangled wilderness of material beliefs, and set the torch of spiritual understanding upon the hill of science, that all who run may read—that all who will may avail themselves of the light of divine Love to heal all their sickness and sorrow and sin.

CHICAGO, ILL. (joint lecture).—Clarence W. Chadwick, lecturer; introduced by Leslie H. Duvall, who said in part:—

Christian Science offers to unhappy mankind, which has long been in bondage to the belief that there is life in matter, full salvation from all sin, sickness, and distress. It says through the still, small voice of Truth, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest;" it asks only of the world to-day an honest investigation with an unprejudiced and open mind. It is healing every known disease and is overcoming poverty, lack, and human misery by giving to mankind a demonstrable understanding of God as divine Principle, which is ever operative and, when understood, lifts mortal consciousness out of its belief in matter.

Testimonies of Healing

When I began to study Christian Science, three years ago, I was very antagonistic toward it for some unknown reason, although I knew nothing about it. At that time I seemed to be on the verge of a nervous breakdown and my husband asked me to investigate Christian Science, hoping it would benefit me. Friends lovingly loaned me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and supplied me with literature, but it was some time before I was really interested. I think it was the reading of the lectures that first caught my attention. When I understood that God does not send sickness and death, and that He does not make man capable of sin and then punish him for sinning, I felt this teaching was just what I wanted.

I do not know just when the nervous condition left me; but it disappeared. We had, however, no real test until the summer of 1916, when our little daughter, aged four years, came down with a fever, which developed into so-called spinal meningitis. At first there was so much fear that I felt I wanted Christian Science and medicine too; but when I understood that this was not possible, I knew that I could not give up Science. Now we can never be sufficiently grateful, for through the loving work of the practitioner the terrible sense testimony disappeared and Truth prevailed. The child's recovery was very rapid. In less than a week after her return to consciousness she was walking and talking again. She was not nervous and irritable, as is usually the case with children who have been very ill, but was so sweet about everything. She is now a strong, healthy child and unusually large for her age.

For this demonstration, and for many other proofs we have had of God's presence and power, I am very grateful.

Mrs. Maude MacDougall, Wadsworth, Nev.

I am truly grateful to Christian Science for the great good it is to me. All my life I had been delicate and was continually under a doctor's care. As the years went by I grew worse and became unable to digest ordinary food, so was constantly living on a milk diet, and I was hardly ever free from pain. I knew nothing of Christian Science when I was persuaded by a young friend to attend a Wednesday meeting. I was deeply impressed by the reading from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and most eager to get a copy, which I did the next day. Beautiful beyond words it seemed to me and, if true, meant new life indeed; and so I found it, for since that day, now eight years ago, I have used no medicine and have not had a doctor. During my first reading of Science and Health I was enabled to leave off glasses which I had been obliged to wear every day for twenty-five years. I became strong and well, able to eat anything. The past two years have been quite free from sickness, and my sight also continues good. Though over sixty years of age, I lead a very active business life.

In the spiritual unfoldment of the Scriptures as taught by Mrs. Eddy, I find daily help and manifold blessings, inspiring me to do my best to make known to others this saving truth; and as many remember me sick and suffering, I am often called upon to explain the great change in my life, which I gladly and gratefully acknowledge is due to Christian Science. Indeed, I cannot be sufficiently grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the better understanding of the Bible which her teaching brings. I was an earnest student of the Scriptures and a Sunday school teacher in my young days, yet always was unsatisfied, because so much seemed impossible to understand. They are now my great delight as the Scriptural truth unfolds with the study of the Lesson-Sermons. The Christian Science literature is helpful in every way; it is a splendid education in right thinking.

Mrs. Emily S. Brown, Brighton, England.

I should like to say that the testimony given above by my mother is perfectly true, and great blessings have been received in our family through the enlightenment brought by Christian Science.—Mrs. Mabel Floyd Doake.

I humbly send this testimony as a tithe into the storehouse, hoping that it may prove a blessing to some seeker for Truth. At college I studied various branches of natural science and became, as regards the so-called miracles in the Bible, a doubting Thomas. After some years I was converted through hearing a sermon, and later joined the church where I heard it. I now instinctively believed that all things were possible to God; but this feeling seemed, under the pressure of a strong belief in material law, to give place in thought almost entirely to a mere ethical appreciation of the Scriptures. This viewpoint, though far from satisfying after one had glimpsed God's omnipotence, seemed the only one compatible with the belief in material law. Seeking the truth of the matter, I investigated so-called laws of heredity, hygiene, and so on, with the result that what had previously been an uncomplaining body began to complain. As an instance of the fruits of my study, though I then thought it was the result of natural law, a catarrhal condition was thought to be lung trouble, from which disease a brother had passed on. Although medical examinations proved my fears groundless, I was still in bondage to fear for the future though it was not so consciously present.

Some months later I read an account of an authorized lecture on Christian Science and was struck with the statement that, as God is Love, He could not send or have any part in sickness or sin, these latter being declared to be false beliefs. This sounded logical, and a week or two later when a friend, God sent, gave me pamphlets and explained something of this teaching, I felt that I was at last getting hold of something substantial. Eagerly the truth was sought, resulting in great physical, mental, and moral betterment. This awakening to the truth of Christian Science occurred in November, 1914, and since then I have had many proofs of its power to save from disease and sin.

I am indeed thankful to God for all His goodness, and grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who was such a true disciple of the blessed Master that she reinstated his Christianity. I am also grateful for all the activities of the movement, including the Monitor, which not only guides us away from the pitfalls of material or mesmeric conclusions regarding world affairs but also reinforces our faith by recounting instances of the ever increasing triumph of good on earth.—Ian George Watt, Fort Plain, N. Y.

I would like to give my testimony through the Sentinel in gratitude to God for all His goodness and for the many blessings which I have received since taking up the study of Christian Science. I also trust that it may be a help to some one. During the first two days of my study, while reading a Sentinel, my eyes were healed, so that I was able to lay aside my glasses, which the doctor had said I would always have to wear for reading and needlework, as I was suffering from a structural defect of the eyes. I have not needed them since this healing, now nine years ago, as my sight is perfect. Severe colds and hay fever have also been overcome, and many other ailments, through the loving help of a practitioner. The colds were overcome gradually, until now they seldom occur no matter what weather or draught I am exposed to; if they do occur, they are very mild and quickly vanish. For more than five years I have been able to overcome nearly all difficulties for myself through my own understanding of Christian Science, and also to help others.

From being a very delicate girl, I am now coming into much better health; and whereas I used to be always tired, now I very seldom am. I am so thankful, too, to be able to look to God for guidance in all things, and to understand His loving, protecting care. I have had many beautiful proofs of this. Above all these blessings, that which I prize most highly is "the peace of God, which passeth all understanding;" this is always with me, and it has come through the earnest study of Christian Science and the daily striving to put it into practice.

Miss Margaret Coralie Elliston, Sydney, Australia.

It has been about two years since I found the divine Principle of being which cleanses us from all the ills of the flesh. Words are inadequate to express my gratitude for this knowledge, given to us through Mrs. Eddy.

I had suffered for ten years from stomach trouble and pains in my back and hips. I had tried doctors of several different schools, but never received more than temporary relief, and had gone on in this way till I was a nervous wreck. I had given up nearly all hope, when a lady gave me a copy of the Sentinel to read and also the name of a practitioner. Treatment was begun right away and I started to read Science and Health. In about sixty days I was healed—sound and well. All my bad habits, such as using strong drink and tobacco, were also overcome; in fact I was regenerated—born of the Spirit. I learned to look not to personality but to divine Mind, Principle, for protection, and I am glad to say that I have had this protection in business and in my home affairs, in the little and the big things of life. I wish that all might lean on God, good, for their support and help, for there is no other power whereby we can be made free, and we can get this knowledge of the saving Principle by studying Science and Health in connection with the Bible and putting this knowledge into practice.

Although I knew for years of the many wonderful healings through Christian Science in my parents' and sisters' homes, I would have nothing to do with it. When my little boy was three months old he became very ill. We had a number of doctors attend him, and they all said the same thing, that it was only a matter of time until he would pass on. The strain of watching him grow worse day by day proved too much for me. I became very weak and had to undergo an operation. While I was in the hospital, both of my children were taken with whooping cough. When I came home and found how the little ones were suffering, in my weakened condition I scarcely knew what to do, so sent for my sister, who has been a student of Christian Science for years, thinking she could help nurse the children. The second day she was with us she said, "How this home needs Christian Science!" When I asked her if she thought it would help, she answered, "You do not know how much," so I told her we would try it, thinking only of the whooping cough. What was our surprise to find the little boy healed in less than forty-eight hours of the terrible complaint that had bound him for three years. I realized this was the truth I had been praying for, so immediately took up the study, with the result that in three weeks' time I was able to resume all my household duties, and for over a year now Christian Science has been our only physician.

It is impossible to express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for us. Our healings have been many, both physically and financially; but the greatest blessing of all has been the spiritual uplift,—the understanding of man's relation to God, and being able to demonstrate it in our daily living.

Mrs. Olive Adair, Sperling Station, B. C., Canada.

My heart is overflowing with love and gratitude for Christian Science, and I send my testimony in the hope that it may bring help and courage to others. A little over seven years ago I was ill with what the doctors called an incurable organic disease, which was said to be inherited from my father. I had undergone two operations, and four months after the second one I found myself just as ill as before, with no help in sight, unless I risked another operation. The doctor could not give me much hope that I would live through it, but said it was the only thing that could possibly relieve the intense pain I was suffering. Then a friend begged me to try Christian Science, assuring me that it would heal me. After a little talk I consented to let her take me on a twenty-four hours' journey to the nearest practitioner. I did not believe that I could be healed, but hoped I might be given courage to have the operation. After three treatments I found myself free from every symptom of the complaint, but I did not understand my healing and was afraid it might not be permanent, so I continued having help for two weeks. By that time all fear of a return of the trouble had gone, and I understood that God had healed me.

Thinking it would be beautiful for my friend to be a practitioner, I bought all of Mrs. Eddy's works and sent in subscriptions for the Journal and Sentinel, and we went back together to the country to study. When the first copy of the Sentinel arrived, I recognized it: seven years before in England I had seen a copy, which was left at our home at a time when I was suffering from severe pain in my eyes. For three years I had been alternately in pain or blind, spending most of my time in a darkened room. I heard my family say that a woman in America had discovered the law by which Jesus did his healing works, and that these works were being repeated over there.

I wanted to know something about that law; so when the others had finished with the Sentinel, I put it safely away, stopped using the drops for my eyes, and waited for the sight to return. I finally read the Sentinel under great difficulty, sometimes waiting ten or fifteen minutes before I could focus a word; but I learned that if I wanted to be God's child, I must be active, useful, and loving. I started next day to see how many useful things I could do, and for some days it was uphill work; but I never resorted to the material remedy again. Slowly and surely, by applying that little glimpse of Truth which I had received, my eyes were entirely healed, and after about two months I was able to give up the glasses. My disposition was so entirely changed that my family marveled, and I remember one day, when my mother asked what had happened to me, I replied that if I could have a Sentinel every week I knew I could be good. This, however, seemed quite impossible at the time, and so seven years passed before I again heard of Christian Science; but the healing was permanent.

There has never been a return of either the eye trouble or the organic disease, and for the last seven years the healing power of Truth has met my every need. I have had many other healings of physical ailments, and several times since the war began I have found myself with every normal channel for supply closed, but through the help of Christian Science other channels have opened up. For these many blessings I am most truly grateful; but above all I rejoice in the knowledge of God which I have gained through study, and I do thank our dear Leader for her wonderful life work, and The Christian Science Publishing Society for our current literature.—Mrs. Hilda R. W. Bailey, Bradford, Pa.

It is a joy and a privilege to bear witness to the healing power of Christian Science revealed to suffering humanity by our Leader, Mrs. Eddy. Severe headaches and chronic sore throat, which had troubled me since childhood, were overcome through this saving truth, also liver trouble, attacks of which often lasted for days. When suffering excruciating pain from this ailment, I called a practitioner, and she said to me, "It is not true." My thought refused to accept such a statement, for to me it seemed very true, very real; nevertheless, the pain immediately left me, and I was healed in one treatment. Since that time, ten years ago, I have not had even a touch of the complaint.

For the physical healing experienced I am truly grateful, and my heart goes out in love and gratitude to our revered Leader for the Science of Christianity which she rediscovered and gave to waiting humanity. For the mental healing that has followed through the study of this teaching, I do indeed rejoice. I am glad that so-called mortal mind law is being overcome in my consciousness by a right understanding of what God is and what man is. So beautifully has God's law unfolded to me that I find myself saying, "His name shall be called Wonderful." It is this phase of healing, the correction of wrong mental concepts, that to me is the greatest blessing, and I pray that my life may attest my gratitude. I am glad that I have been forced to turn away from the expectation of a solution of my difficulties through dependence on matter, and to reach out to know more of God's law, whereby my every need has been met. On page 30 of "No and Yes" Mrs. Eddy says, "God's law is in three words, 'I am All.'" To know this in its completeness is my hope, and for such hope I do rejoice.

Mrs. Amy R. Torrence, Pasadena, Cal.

In studying the Lesson-Sermon one day I came to the account of the healing of the blind man, and Jesus' reply to the question of his disciples held my attention. He said, "Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents: but that the works of God should be made manifest in him." I had occasion to prove this. My little boy was just learning to ride horseback, and as he was galloping along, he turned to look back. Becoming unseated he was thrown on his head on the stone pavement, with one foot held in the stirrup. The horse stopped immediately, and the boy was picked up unconscious; later the belief was that he was out of his head. He was brought home in an automobile, and as he was carried into the house, I began to work for him as we are taught to do in Christian Science, declaring that God is intelligence and God is everywhere. As my husband is not a Christian Scientist, a doctor was summoned; but my work was done. The boy answered all the doctor's questions intelligently, but the medical instructions were not followed. The pain and fever were overcome through my realization of the truth. The next day the child stayed quiet, but the following day he was in his place at school.

Some time ago, as I was retiring one night, my little boy complained of a severe headache. This trouble heretofore had been followed by a very severe problem which necessitated absence from school. I declared the truth and later on fell asleep, to be awakened some hours afterward by hearing the child groaning. Again I worked for him and then fell asleep, to be awakened once more. This time, as I tried to help him, the loving, yet reproachful words came to me, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" I, too, was in Gethsemane. Then my thought went on to others doing the works the Master did, until I came to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy; and as my heart went out in gratitude, I knew I had no problem to meet. Needless to say the boy awakened free and went to school that morning.

We have had other proofs of the healing power of Truth in our family. My little girl was instantaneously healed of earache four or five years ago, and has never been troubled with this ailment since. She also had a case of inflamed nasal passage causing stoppage in breathing. This trouble was said to be hereditary, but I knew that all she could inherit was good, and she was healed in a few treatments. I myself was healed of pyorrhea about three years ago. This was overcome in two weeks.

I would like to express my gratitude for the loving work of the teachers in the Sunday school. The greatest tribute I can pay our Leader is to prove the truth in my daily life. I love the Bible now, and in studying it daily am understanding more about God, good. My prayer is that I may learn to show others the freedom I possess.

Mrs. Ida Geisreiter, Sacramento, Cal.

When I realize the change in my condition during the past six years, I want to exclaim, as did the man born blind whom Jesus healed, "Why herein is a marvellous thing." Christian Science has transformed me from one who was constantly suffering to one who is free from all such bondage, and I am inexpressibly grateful for the blessing. I have been healed of a severe illness said to be occasioned by gallstones, although physicians said I could not recover; also of rheumatism, catarrh, stomach disorder, bowel trouble, and sick headaches. Glasses, which I had worn for fifteen years and which a well-known oculist said I could never do without, have been laid aside. Even if I had never received any of these healings, however, I would still be more grateful than I can adequately express for the spiritual understanding of the truth which comes through the study of Christian Science, and for the dear woman who has made this understanding possible. I am indeed thankful to God for Christian Science.—Mrs. Clara S. Black, Alton, Ill.

I thought when I had my healing in Christian Science nine months ago that I would write my testimony right away, but it never has seemed the right time until now. My healing was to me just like a miracle in the Bible. I had been a great sufferer nearly all of my life, and the last eight years it was one thing after another. I had four operations; one was considered very dangerous, the others were for hemorrhoids. The last two were five months apart. The doctors were very kind to me, but said there could nothing more be done for the hemorrhoids. I was suffering with neuritis at the time Christian Science was presented to me, and felt as if I was up against a stone wall. I was on the way to take a treatment of a magnetic healer, but the lady that presented

Christian Science to me did her work so well that I was led to a Christian Science practitioner and was healed in one treatment. I wanted to know how this healing came about, and so I got "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and the Bible; I have been studying them ever since, and now I know how the healing came about.

I am grateful for the healing, but far more grateful for the understanding I have of Christian Science. At first I did not realize how Mrs. Eddy had stood, with the world against her as it seemed, but afterward I could see how spiritual she was, and realized that there is only one power, and that God, or good. When we go to God for our help in the right way, it is ever present. Words could not express my thankfulness to God, but I am going to prove it by helping others.—Mrs. Agnes R. Pearce, York, Pa.

Personally, I did not seek Christian Science for healing; but through the understanding that comes with its study I have been many times healed, and in almost every case instantaneously. I smoked incessantly for twenty years, but was healed instantly four years and a half ago, and have not had a desire to smoke since. A little more than a year ago I was walking down Fifth Avenue in New York with my purchase book in a leather case under my arm, when an icicle, about two inches thick and twenty inches long, knocked the book from under my arm, just grazing my hat. I know I was protected from this missile, and am grateful.

I want to express my pleasure for the good received through our periodicals. I find something helpful in every one, daily, weekly, and monthly. Before I knew what Christian Science was, I could not reconcile in my thought the current opinion about Mrs. Eddy; but I found myself healed when I began to investigate her teachings. I am just beginning to see what a debt of gratitude we owe her.

William T. Giles, Birmingham, Ala.

About five years ago I was led to take Christian Science treatment. I was then a physical wreck and felt that I was of no use in the world, even to my husband and children. I was so wonderfully benefited from the beginning that we threw away all the medicine in the house and have relied entirely on Christian Science ever since. One of our little girls was healed in a few weeks of what is called cerebro-spinal meningitis. She was in bed only a few days. To say that I am thankful for what Christian Science has done for me and mine seems inadequate, but I am trying to live my gratitude. That Mrs. Eddy was pure enough to see God and have revealed to her this healing truth, I am unspeakably grateful. The understanding of this truth has brought me the only real peace I have ever known.

When one has such a burden of gratitude as I have, it is hard to know how to begin or where to end in expressing the thanksgiving one owes to God. Twenty-four years ago I was healed by Christian Science almost instantaneously of a so-called fibroid growth, bowel trouble of twenty-six years' standing, and one other serious ailment. Since that time I have never turned to material remedies for the slightest help, and have always felt and expressed grateful thanks to God; but I did not leave the church of which I had been a member many years, for I felt that I could work in Christian Science without a change of church relations. Two years ago, however, an ailment asserted itself most alarmingly and persistently, and I was convinced that the time had come to take my stand publicly on the side of Christian Science. Since so doing I have made much progress in spiritual understanding. I am now completely healed, though it required more than a year's faithful work by practitioners to set me free. Every hour is one of glad thanksgiving to God for the loving work of His faithful follower, Mrs. Eddy, and I can truly say, "My cup runneth over."

Mrs. S. L. Hogue, Portland, Ore.

About sixteen years ago I was healed through Christian Science of a mental trouble, supposed to be inherited. I was subject to attacks of melancholia so severe that I even attempted to commit suicide. These spells of extreme depression have faded away gradually as the result of the constant study and practice of Christian Science. After all these years I have developed a perception of good; I see good around me and opportunities for good in every circumstance. I find even the ability to interpret the unusual and unexpected as illustrations of God's love. This charm in life came to me slowly, little by little, with day after day of study and watchfulness. The new heaven and the new earth now welcome me. The rhythm of the universe holds me, and I praise God continually.

Mrs. Laura M. Schneider, New York, N. Y.

Christian Science has brought so much joy and peace to my consciousness that I would like to express my gratitude. Headaches, neuralgia, and sorrow have been overcome for me, and my son has been healed of a throat affection. I rejoice that the Bible has become an open book to me through the study of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. The true meaning of Life as taught by our Leader has made activity a joy and a blessing. The understanding of the truth gained through the healings experienced, the study of the textbook, and class instruction have been such great blessings and brought such comfort that I am indeed grateful for them all. I only hope to prove my gratitude by good deeds, to grow in the knowledge of the reality of good, and to worship God "in spirit and in truth."—Mrs. Clara C. Darnell, Brookfield, Ill.

In August, 1915, I experienced a second attack of nervous breakdown, and was given very little hope by the physicians that I would ever be strong again. They advised me to seek a lower altitude, and I did so, but without any relief. To mortal sense I was a physical wreck, greatly reduced in weight and very much discouraged. I spent many weary and sleepless nights. While in this state of mind Christian Science was presented to me, and after reading Science and Health and attending church, I asked a practitioner for treatment. My condition began to improve at once, and in a very short time I was healed. That was over two years ago and there has been no return of nervousness. Only those who have passed through such suffering can realize my joy now.

I am indeed grateful for the many blessings that have come to our home. The tobacco habit, to which I was a slave, has been overcome, and I am a free man.

Henry Engnell, Terraville, S. Dak.

I wish to add that my husband is now in good health. With the daily study of Christian Science we are learning more about God and how to go to Him in all our needs. We are indeed thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us this wonderful truth.—Mrs. Ida Engnell.

[The Independent]

We teach smatterings of languages and of sciences, we pretend to teach vocations, we miserably fail to teach self-control. Neglect begins in the family, it is fostered by an anarchistic educational philosophy, it is defended as an inalienable right, or as a duty even, by all the revolutionaries who insist that the way to develop children into intellectual and moral prodigies and "democratic" citizens is to let them go on the loose. Discipline of any kind is tabooed, as mediæval and reactionary.

Boys and men are seriously harmed by this educational program, girls and women are in too many instances ruined by it. Happily, boys and men as a rule get enough hard knocks in the struggle for existence to acquire some things that formal education has omitted. The girls and women, who are finding their way into self-supporting activities, also acquire, as men do, habits of disciplined action and self-control. But for those who have little to do beyond amusing themselves and seeking their own gratification, the educational failure is fatal.

[The Sunday School Times]

The soul in need of a miracle cannot keep its eyes on the crowd and on Christ at the same time and receive any marvelous help. Many times we are on the verge of some grand new chapter in experience, and then we suffer all kinds of other things to flow in. And we wonder why no mighty works are done in our lives! Just on the edge of marvelous help, we found something else that seemed to do just as well. The great experiences come to those who say, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." The night at the ford was probably the first time Jacob had ever been sufficiently face to face with God to perceive what God was always trying to do for him.

[Western Christian Advocate]

Men are so sense bound. They are influenced by the things they hear, tempted by the things they see, and regaled by the things they taste and smell. Physical science has bewildered all the five senses of man and bound his higher instincts until the trackless way to God has become a mystic path over which he cannot find his way.

[The Continent]

To replace the spirit of getting with the spirit of helping is preeminent patriotism.

Christian Science in The Camp

Mrs. Eddy writes: "Good thoughts are an impervious armor; clad therewith you are completely shielded from the attacks of error of every sort. And not only yourselves are safe, but all whom your thoughts rest upon are thereby benefited" (First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, p. 210).

In this hour, it is obvious that soldiers and sailors need the "impervious armor" of divine protection. How to obtain such protection is clearly presented in the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy. How the soldiers are applying their understanding of this teaching is indicated in the following excerpts from the report of a Literature Distribution Committee for a large barracks in the Middle West, and in a few letters received by that Committee.

"The month of January has really been a month of fruitage. The good seed sown during the previous months has really taken root,—and it was sown on good ground,—for a trip to the barracks is never made now that we do not hear of some good that our literature has done and is doing. There are always requests for the textbook—for Journals and Sentinels as well as Quarterlies and Bibles.

"We know of healings this month of measles, mumps, diphtheria, meningitis, nervous breakdown, colds, the grippe, and pneumonia.

"Many boys asked for treatment who were confined in the hospitals, and to most of them we were able to get literature.

"One day we met a man who said he was a drunkard. He had been reading the literature at the barracks, and the testimonials in the Sentinel, and felt that if he could read Science and Health he too could be healed.

"A boy on night duty in one of the hospital wards told us he rarely ever had to medicate at night; that all the boys slept peacefully through the night, and he read his Science and Health and went over his lesson at that time. Another Scientist who had been put on hospital duty was able to help a number of Christian Science boys who were placed in the ward, also to encourage and help others who seemed to be seriously ill. It began to be noticed that there were no fatalities in this ward, and more desperate cases were brought in all the time, as it was felt that this man was such a wonderful nurse. He finally had to ask for leave of absence to rest and study, as he had been on duty forty days and nights. He came to the city, got help, and is now at work again."

"Aero Squad 326, Kelly Field,
San Antonio, Texas.

"Dear Friends: Your letter received to-day. The 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures' I never received, as I have been in the hospital for twenty-five days, and, friends, I want to tell you of my healing.

"After I lay unconscious twelve days and five doctors had given me up, and our Major wired my wife in Kansas City twice that there were no hopes, and that I would pass out before morning, she went to work at once, also our practitioner, and the next forenoon I became myself, and in a few days was well except for being weak. The doctors and nurses said I was a wonder, and could not understand my case. I knew, however, what had helped me, and told them. Hope the Science and Health has been returned to you, as my practitioner sent me a beautiful copy.

"I wish to thank you for your kindness."

"Somewhere in France.

"Dear Friend: I received your most welcome and cheering letter. You don't know how it is to get a letter from across the sea. We don't get mail very often.

"I am feeling better, and get on better than I ever did before. I read whenever I can, as I carry my book with me most all the time. I would not try to get along without it again. I have not seen any Science literature here. We had a good and peaceful trip. It took us almost a month to get here. One of our officers and a sergeant are Scientists.

"Thank you for the help you are giving me. Could you not write once in a couple of months, as letters are so cheering?"

"Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

"Dear Friends: It is with sincere gratitude that I acknowledge the gift of the beautiful book of 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures' through the kindness of Mrs. ———, and while I have the larger edition I prize this small pocket edition very much, for I can always have it on my person and enjoy its truths every minute, and know it will be invaluable to me in my present work. I am indeed very grateful for the light this work has brought to me, and the wonderful demonstrations I have had in the past by it. Help in knowing the truth, and let us all know and declare that the divine Mind will in the future be more thoroughly understood and obeyed by all mankind."

"Camp Green Leaf Annex,

"Dear Friends: Will you please send me a pocket edition of 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures' by Mary Baker Eddy. While I was at ——— I could not get the chance to write, for they had me on shipment and in one day they shipped me to Georgia. I do not know any Distribution Committee here, but the one in ———.

"Will you please be so kind and send it to me as soon as you have the time."

"Dear Friends: Just a word to let you know that I received my textbook. Thanks to the individual that sent me this book. I will do my best to read this book every second of the day. I know it will do me good. I have already read that divine Love always meets my daily needs. I am happier every day since I have read this wonderful book. I thank the Distribution Committee for their trouble. I know God will never forget His children."

Milton says, "They also serve who only stand and wait." Christian Scientists are grateful for the understanding of the Science which enables the civilian as well as the soldier to do more than "stand and wait."

The above report presents again the great opportunity for distribution of copies of Science and Health and the Christian Science literature to soldiers both at home and abroad.

This service may be extended individually or through Reading Rooms, local Distribution Committees, the Camp Welfare activities, or the plan of the Postmaster-General as indicated on the front page of this periodical.

VOLUME XX MAY 4, 1918 NUMBER 36

"The redemption of our body"

ALFRED FARLOW

WHEN Paul declared, "There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body," his evident purpose was not to make a plea in behalf of matter or the flesh, which the Master before him had branded as a thing altogether unprofitable, but simply to comfort his hearers with the assurance that they would not lose their individuality on account of the apparent death of the mortal body. His intention, evidently, was to give assurance that in the heavenly estate each would maintain a distinct individuality. The redemption of the body mentioned in the eighth chapter of Romans, points to the scientific sense of man's being.

Adam Clarke in his comment on this text mentions the fact that the Greek word which is translated "body" in the text under consideration signifies "individualized entity." Each idea of infinite Spirit has distinct individuality, not a body of material parts but a distinct and definite identity which is the reflection or manifestation of God, Mind. As this spiritual sense of individuality is gained, the belief that man is a material body is lost. Paul declares, "It is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory." Flesh is the inglorious presentation of man, while the spiritual man is the glorified expression or image of Mind, not in outline or organism, but in the harmony manifested. The dishonorable sense of manhood must be overcome in order to attain the glorious manhood. As one realizes the true sense of man he loses the false sense. This change, however, does not consist of a transference from one body to another; it is simply an awakening from a dream of mortal body to the true consciousness, the likeness of God. The death requisite to a loss of the material body means far more than what is commonly referred to as the last enemy. It means the destruction of all error in the consciousness of the human individual by the awakening to true manhood.

We often hear the expression, "Be a man." This injunction should mean much more than is usually intended. It should mean to awake in the likeness of God and thereby rise above everything that is less than man. The term awake, which the psalmist used, implies that the likeness of God is already intact, that the veil of matter, the cloud of false belief, needs to be lifted by the enlightenment of the individual in order that the eternal image of divine Mind may be in evidence. Christian Science clears away the mystery which seems to hover about many Biblical statements, by revealing the spiritual Science of being, the Science of cause and effect, thereby interpreting the Scriptures spiritually.

After declaring that flesh and blood cannot enter the kingdom of God, the apostle, lest he might have left his hearers comfortless, assured them that they would not be reduced to nothing because of the loss of flesh and blood, but would have a far more satisfactory individuality; at the same time he used care to make the point that the heavenly individuality has not the characteristics of the earthly one, but is a spiritual individuality, the product of Spirit.

When one beholds his reflection in the mirror it appears to be substantial, while one's scientific knowledge maintains that it is simply reflection. There are two testimonies concerning the reflection in the mirror; one is that it is matter, the other is that it is expression or reflection. In the latter case we really see it, in the former we mis-see it. If owing to the blindness of material sense we fall short of seeing it, it appears to be what it is not. In the spiritual reality of existence we see mentally, not physically; that is, we think how things are.

Jesus said, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." By the appearance he evidently meant the way things seem according to material sense testimony distinctive from scientific knowledge. When he said, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing," he evidently knew that he was correcting the common belief of mortals, that he was declaring a fact which was in disagreement with the fleshly appearance. In other words, he knew that it did not seem so to them, to their material sense, because the mortal appearance of things belied the facts. He was teaching them the truth about creation in order to deliver them from a false sense of it. If we take away from the so-called human individual the erroneous, discordant, unhappy beliefs which constitute the corporeal man, which are generally acknowledged to be only temporal, what have we left? The spiritual, perfect, harmonious, and good only. These right ideas include what we comprehend of the real individuality. Thus we illustrate that the real man is not a body of material organs or parts, but the embodiment of Truth's idea.

Christian Science enables us to "judge righteous judgment." It reveals the fact that the only cause is Spirit, which is unseen by mortal vision, and that the substantiality of man must be determined by spiritual reasoning. The understanding of what man is must be deduced from a correct understanding of God, the cause or Principle of man. The incompetent material testimony, "the appearance," cannot in any case be accepted as evidence. One is the "spiritual body," the other is called the "natural body;" but one is real and the other is unreal. One is the man himself, the other is the lie about him, the misperception of him. Mrs. Eddy had this in mind when she wrote in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 476): "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick." As one looks beyond the appearance of the reflection in the mirror to grasp the scientific fact that it is simply reflection, so the Master discarded or denied the appearance of man as material, affirming and realizing the spiritual fact that he is spiritual; and thereby he healed the sick.

The understanding of spiritual embodiment must be exactly deduced from divine Principle. This embodiment is not matter, nor is it a mortal mind picture, but is the expression of Mind. The manifestation in the mirror is believed to be the reflection of matter; but man is the reflection of Spirit, the idea of Mind. He reflects the intelligence, the harmony, the joy, and every other characteristic of infinite Mind, Love. Material sense not only lies regarding the substantiality of man but it also lies regarding his outline or form.

The word form, if used with regard to the spiritual man, must be interpreted spiritually. It cannot be used in the sense expressed by the term human shape. We talk about forming a conclusion or an idea, thereby referring to definiteness as distinctive from vagueness of understanding. Only in this sense can the term form be correctly applied to spiritual man or body. Mrs. Eddy declared: "Infinite space is peopled with God's ideas, reflecting Him in countless spiritual forms" (Science and Health, p. 503). The form of man who is God's idea can be correctly understood only as we consider the nature of Mind, the cause of man and the universe; hence the correctness of the Scriptural definition of man as the image and likeness of God. This leaves the student to form his idea of man from his understanding of the nature of God, who is fully and perfectly manifested in man.

Letting Go

ADA POWERS

SINCE the beginning of the present world struggle, one Christian Scientist thought she was working to the best of her knowledge for the good of mankind, but one day in May, 1917, while quietly studying the Lesson-Sermon, the telephone rang, and a message came from a dear son who said he was going to report on a certain date at a camp, to be better prepared to serve God and humanity. She knew that this meant an unselfish effort to help unclasp the fetters that seem to be threatening the unfoldment of the Christ-idea in consciousness all over the world, and for a moment she sat reviewing her own past work. It did not take her long to realize that it had not been altogether unselfish, for there was at that moment revealed a latent thought she did not know was there. She had not thought her son would have to go, or would go. Ah, how she was hugging the tatters of personal possession! As soon as this thought was uncovered, the sense of human motherhood, personal possession, selfishness, fear, anxiety, began to be uncovered, and a more spiritual sense was being born. The Master's assurance, "Be not afraid, only believe," coupled with this truth, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," comforted her. Then she realized the truth of our Leader's words in "Christ My Refuge" (Poems, p. 12):—

O'er waiting harpstrings of the mind
There sweeps a strain,
Low, sad, and sweet, whose measures bind
The power of pain,

And wake a white-winged angel throng
Of thoughts, illumed
By faith, and breathed in raptured song,
With love perfumed.

The meaning of these verses came to her with such melody that thought was illumined. The "harpstrings of the mind" were tuned to a more exalted strain. Instead of wanting the dear one to remain at his place of business, the mother realized his only business was the Father's; that the only war was in thought, and that it began with self. The lesson was learned. She loosed him, knowing that God's presence had preceded him to the camp. He had enlisted under heaven's captaincy to work for the enthronement of Principle, and she could say with the psalmist, "The law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps shall slide."

When the mother had finished the battle with self, she rose from her chair feeling that a victory had been won. Having been made "strong in the Lord," having put "on the breastplate of righteousness," her feet were "shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Fear and anxiety are enemies which must be rooted out of human consciousness. The baubles of false education, with the glittering fables of sense testimony that brain, nerves, blood, and bones compose man, the real man, and that there is no other, must be exchanged for the gem of spiritual understanding. As Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 201): "We cannot fill vessels already full. They must first be emptied. Let us disrobe error. Then, when the winds of God blow, we shall not hug our tatters close about us."

World Fermentation

GEORGE SHAW COOK

MRS. EDDY calls attention in Science and Health, especially on page 401, to the effect sometimes produced when the appearing of Truth to human consciousness seems to cause a mental and physical disturbance. She describes this experience as "chemicalization," but she points out that this condition may be regarded as favorable rather than as an alarming symptom. It is the human mind's resistance to Truth that causes chemicalization, and it is only to the human mind that chemicalization can appear to be real. Obviously there can be no chemicalization in changeless Principle, or divine Mind. Chemicalization, however, from the human point of view, seems to result in purification; therefore, to human sense, it has a beneficial effect, and in this way good may result from the fermentation which is going on in the world to-day.

In elucidating further this interesting subject, Mrs. Eddy says on page 540 of Science and Health: "In Isaiah we read: 'I make peace, and create evil. I the Lord do all these things;' but the prophet referred to divine law as stirring up the belief in evil to its utmost, when bringing it to the surface and reducing it to its common denominator, nothingness. The muddy river-bed must be stirred in order to purify the stream. In moral chemicalization, when the symptoms of evil, illusion, are aggravated, we may think in our ignorance that the Lord hath wrought an evil; but we ought to know that God's law uncovers so-called sin and its effects, only that Truth may annihilate all sense of evil and all power to sin."

From the Christian, or even from the merely ethical viewpoint, war cannot be regarded as anything but a lesser of evils, and for the reason that it is even a lesser evil it cannot be truly said to exist in divine Principle, or God. Principle, which is infinite and divine, is not only perfect, but good. Mind cannot include within its infinite perfection and goodness any knowledge of evil, either lesser or greater, for the simple reason that Mind cannot be conscious of anything unlike itself. In Lamentations we read, "Out of the mouth of the most High proceedeth not evil and good."

Absolute Principle cannot be at war with its own ideas, nor can those ideas be at war with or destroy one another. What is being destroyed is but a false, material sense of life and substance. The process which the world is undergoing to-day illustrates what Mrs. Eddy referred to in Science and Health (p. 548), when she wrote, "Every agony of mortal error helps error to destroy error, and so aids the apprehension of immortal Truth." With this knowledge one can remain calm in the midst of the tumult, and can cheerfully await results, meanwhile gladly cooperating with and supporting the efforts of those who are valiantly and unselfishly contending for their highest human sense of justice and right. Perfect Principle does not have to be contended for nor upheld. The only cause, the one lawmaker, the supreme governing power, is not only self-sustained but is, now and always, sustaining, upholding, directing, protecting, and preserving the real universe in perfect unity, harmony, order, security, and peace.

Real Rest

JEANETTE L. NADEL

FOR ages, weary, discouraged mortals have been seeking rest. The Hebrews instituted the Sabbath as a day of rest, and even extended the thought of it to the land, designating every seventh year as a period of rest for the soil. They were not to sow or even to gather what sprang from the soil during the seventh year; but to compensate them for this loss, their crops were trebled during the sixth year. Moses sought in this way to lead the people to see that God was the real source of their sustenance. The land did not need the rest so much as the people needed to understand that the power which had trebled their crops was in reality the only source of supply. In like manner the people needed to cease at times from their material labor, in order to refresh themselves by turning their thoughts from material gain to the contemplation of spiritual reality; and so the Sabbath was set aside as a day of rest.

In the fourth commandment the children of Israel were told to "remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." In it they were to do no work, neither they, their families, nor anyone connected with their household. Gradually, however, this commandment became a mere form, and was observed outwardly by attending religious services and refraining from material labor, but without the inward consecration which alone could bring peace and rest. So it came about that its true meaning was lost. Our Leader tells us on page 20 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," in speaking of Jesus' teaching, "He knew that men can be baptized, partake of the Eucharist, support the clergy, observe the Sabbath, make long prayers, and yet be sensual and sinful." Now if observing the Sabbath in a merely material way were pleasing to the Father, surely our Master would have kept it in this manner; but we find him continuing his righteous activity even on the Sabbath. In our own day we find most people are agreed that mortals need to rest frequently, and the Sabbath is usually spoken of as a day of rest. In their search for health, many take what is called a "rest cure," only to find upon returning to their work that they are more than ever the victims of their self-made limitations, and must seek less active employment, until finally they yield to the suggestion that they can do no labor at all, for the sense of weariness has become chronic. They vaguely hope that after death, if not before, they shall find the rest which has eluded them during their physical lifetime.

Isaiah prophetically describes the time when men shall seek rest in divine Mind. He says, "It shall come to pass . . . that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve." This is surely the rest we all need to seek. We should not seek rest from righteous activity, but from the inharmonious conditions of sorrow, and fear, and the hard bondage. Rest does not mean inactivity, but happy, joyous activity. Our Leader makes this clear on page 519 of Science and Health where she tells us that "God rests in action." Our Master said: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." The Christ-consciousness lifts thought above the sense of physical weariness and shows us that real activity is restful.

The six days of labor, spoken of in the commandment, typify the struggle of mankind to lift itself out of the hard bondage of material sense, while the seventh day is the discernment that spiritual activity alone is real. If we have faithfully striven, during these six days of labor, to serve God, we have become meek and lowly in heart, and having taken our Master's yoke upon us, we are receptive to the spiritual understanding that divine Mind is the only activity. We thus cease from material thinking and recognize God's thoughts as the only realities. Thus we are ushered into the seventh day of rest, and find our place in the divine activity, in that consciousness where neither what we call our own thinking or that of others (typified as sons, daughters, and so on) can cause us to turn from the perfect rest of Mind. The last stanza of Mrs. Eddy's poem, entitled "Mother's Evening Prayer" (Poems, p. 5) beautifully describes this realization in the following lines:—

When heaven's aftersmile earth's tear-drops gain,
And mother finds her home and heav'nly rest.

Personal Privilege

W. K. PRIMROSE

ONE of the most specious arguments of the human mind enticingly laid across the path of a Christian Scientist is that the student is, as such, entitled to personal privileges or to receive special consideration. Such an argument, when analyzed, is seen to be only another form of the suggestion, "Ye shall be as gods." It is interesting to note how greatly our motives and actions are unwittingly tinged by past experiences, and the thought of claiming a personal privilege for ourselves will probably be found to arise from the belief that one who is endeavoring to practice Christ's teachings belongs to a class separate and apart from others, although this is one of the many class distinctions which Christian Scientists are engaged in breaking down.

To claim a personal privilege is only another way of saying that some one else should do all the hard work and that the finer and more delicate work should be left to us,—in other words, that we are better than others. It is an accepted truism that there is a right place for every one, but many are unpleasantly aware that they are, relatively speaking, not in it, and others again amid constantly altering conditions are torn with doubt and uncertainty. What then is to be done if we find ourselves situated thus? The answer to this question is very clearly given in the fourteenth chapter of Luke, where we are told to go and sit down in the lowest room and wait to be called.

The lowest room, as we all know, is symbolic of humility, and it is when we become sufficiently humble and are really ready and willing to sit down in the lowest room and are truly glad to see others go forward in preference to ourselves that we receive the call, "Friend, go up higher." To go and sit down in the lowest room after years of hard and patient work, which has been rewarded by the accumulation of material possessions and a reputation for business acumen, is perhaps a hard thing to do, but still it is absolutely necessary, for Jesus said, "Except ye . . . become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Later the same argument will present itself when we, having as it seemed received and answered the call to duty, find ourselves in the higher room. Then it is that we should remember Jesus' admonition that we have only done that which it was our duty to do, and we should be, as obedient servants, ready and willing to return again without a murmur to a lower room whenever required to do so.

On close examination, the thought of claiming any personal privilege for ourselves will be found to arise also from lack of independence, which is only another name for freedom, and this freedom is gained by a knowledge of the truth which sets us free. When we are truly free there is no thought of claiming any personal privileges for ourselves.

In time of trial and stress it is well to remember what Mrs. Eddy writes on page 224 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "We should remember that the world is wide; . . . that each person has a different history, constitution, culture, character, from all the rest; that human life is the work, the play, the ceaseless action and reaction upon each other of these different atoms." We should also remember the statement in the parable of the prodigal, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." When we realize its import, all fear will vanish, for we shall understand the protecting and sustaining power of divine Love.

The Eagle's Nest

JEANETTE L. WEAKLEY

A FRIEND of the writer had been in the Rocky Mountains, and high on an almost insurmountable crag had discovered the nest of an eagle. His description of it was of peculiar interest to one who had become a student of Christian Science, and as she listened there came to her these words in Deuteronomy respecting Jacob, or Israel: "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him."

When the eagle builds her nest, she first lays upon its rocky surface thorns, jagged stones, and all manner of sharp things. Then she lines it thickly with wool and feathers, completely covering every sharp protrusion. Here are laid her eggs, and here her brood grows until the birdlings are old enough to fly. Then the mother bird stirs up the nest, pulling out every vestige of its soft lining, and the place which was once a bed of down becomes an uneasy perch, full of cutting edges. About her restless brood the mother now flutters and flies, first above and then beneath, her wings widespread; and as she flies she calls to her young to follow. As the tiny birds reach out, and finally spread their little wings, the mother's broad pinions are beneath them, so they will not fall. If they grow weary, they rest on the mother's wings until they are strong enough to try their own again, and so in due time the old nest is deserted.

How well the Bible writer knew the habits not only of the birds but of mankind. To most of us, when young, material existence is smooth and comparatively easy; the pleasures of sense seem to outweigh its pains, and we are satisfied with the world's ways of living. Then come to us the sharp experiences and piercing shafts of the world's sorrow, and one by one our soft resting places, our trusted medicines, our would-be balms, our healing lotions, prove of no avail. As we turn our weary eyes away from earth, we hear Love's tender call, "Come unto me," and we look, but almost fear to trust. There is no other way, and so we try, only to prove the truth of what our Leader says in Science and Health (p. 66), "Trials are proofs of God's care;" and we ever find Love's outstretched pinions underneath, always find, proved in our own experience, that divine Love alone did lead us.

The world to-day is stirred to its very foundations. False ease, sleepy content, a deceived sense of peace, have been wrested from us, and we find ourselves pierced by the sharp thorns of hatred, pride, and mad ambition. Each one of us has been called to go forth to battle, if not in his own person, yet in the person of some loved one; but let us not fear. If there had not been enough of truth in the world to overcome these conditions, they would not have been uncovered at this time. "The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. . . . He maketh wars to cease."

Human consciousness, your consciousness and mine, is the real battle field. The time for action—unceasing mental activity—has come, and "Love inspires, illumines, designates, and leads the way" (Science and Health, p. 454).

"If any of you lack wisdom"

JAMES SCHEVENELL

THE apostle James admonishes every one who is lacking in wisdom to ask of God, and he couples with the admonition one of the great promises of the Bible. He says: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." Through the heeding of this admonition the promise was fulfilled in a healing experience which came to the writer some three and a half years ago.

In attempting to board a fast moving street car, I fell backward, and the muscles of one leg were given a severe wrenching or straining. The car was stopped and I was enabled to get on, but in addition to the sense of severe pain, great confusion in thought was experienced. This amounted to a veritable storm within consciousness, but above the tumult could be heard the "Peace, be still" of Truth. It was this, together with the use of that great spiritual weapon which Christian Scientists find so effectual whenever error tries to assail them, namely, "the scientific statement of being" (Science and Health, p. 468), which enabled me to leave the car at the appointed place, walk several paces, climb a flight of stairs, and keep a business engagement which had previously been made.

The business call completed, I stepped out upon the street again, but the sense of injury became so great that it seemed as if I would be compelled to signal a passing conveyance and be carried to my room. In this condition I stopped on one of the busy corners in the heart of the business district (this was in one of our great metropolitan cities), and commenced to pray over the situation. It was the noon hour, when the sidewalk was crowded with people and the street with passing vehicles, but amid the surrounding confusion I stood and prayed earnestly, imploringly, and affirmatively, as we understand prayer in Christian Science. This lasted for several minutes, and then a sense of healing came, although it was incomplete, as subsequent events showed.

With this healing there came also the assurance that I could proceed on my way, and a busy afternoon's work was completed. However, as I turned my footsteps homeward later in the afternoon, a great sense of weariness was felt in the injured leg, and as I neared my room, fear took hold upon me, and argued that if I did not have help from a practitioner through the night, I would not be able to resume work the following morning. The memory of a previous accident of the same nature, which had happened somewhat in the same way a few years before I came into Christian Science, seemed to augment my fear; but instead of calling up a practitioner, I obeyed a restraining thought—that the condition was one for me to handle—and so proceeded to my room. Upon reaching it there was experienced a sense of helplessness before the situation, when, with the directness of the spoken word, there came to me the passage from St. James already quoted, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God." It was realized at once that this thought was an angel visitant, for on page 581 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy defines angels as "God's thoughts passing to man." There was no mistaking the message or the messenger.

A complete humbling of self before God immediately took place, together with an earnest, prayerful desire for the wisdom—spiritual understanding—which had seemed lacking. This continued for several minutes; then the angel visitant returned, and as before there was an unmistakable sense of recognition of the divine presence. This time the spiritual leading was for me to take the concordance to Science and Health and look up all the references relating to the overcoming of belief in accidents, and as I read, one after another, those clear statements of scientific spiritual fact I came to that statement of absolute truth found on page 424 of Science and Health, where Mrs. Eddy says, "Under divine Providence there can be no accidents, since there is no room for imperfection in perfection." A full and complete healing was experienced, all fear was destroyed, and I awoke the next morning with scarcely a recollection of the experience of the day before.

Here it may be well to draw a comparison between this painless, spiritual healing, and the results from the other accident to which reference has been made. At that time aid was sought from a medical practitioner. A remedy was applied, which, in its application, was almost as painful as the injury itself. Much pain together with loss of time from business resulted, and there was daily bandaging of the injured limb for a long period of time before a complete cure was realized.

Experiences with error in various forms and in varying degrees come to every Christian Scientist, and these will no doubt continue until we rise above all material belief; but as these experiences are met and overcome with the truth gained through a joint study of the Bible and Science and Health, they always serve to strengthen the foundations of our trust in God, to give us ever greater reasons for the faith, hope, and understanding within us, and prove to us that the teachings of the Bible and Christian Science accord absolutely with each other, and that both spring from the same eternal, spiritual source.

Prayer

LIEUT. COL. ROBERT E. KEY

OH, Love, whose perfect path is known
To all who walk the ways of God,
Whose mysteries are clearly shown
To pilgrims with the gospel shod,

Be Thou to-day so clear to me,
So beautiful, and swift to bless,
That through reflection constantly
I manifest Thy tenderness.

And every sacred shrine shall burn
With flames of Truth divinely bright;
And every weary heart shall turn
In hope toward Thee, the greater light,
Then, like the wise men, seek the birth
Which ushers in the Christ to earth.

Selected Articles

[" 'Called unto liberty' "—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 18, 1918]

"For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only use not liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but by love serve one another." These words of the great apostle to the Gentiles seem to gain an added weight when read under the pressure of present events. On all sides the war is spoken of as a tremendous struggle for liberty, while events force one to the conclusion that neither nations nor individuals are agreed as to what they mean by liberty. If, for example, that convenient person, "the man in the street," were pinned down to an exact statement as to what he understands by the term, he would probably arrive at the conclusion that it meant having no taxes to pay; because liberty to the majority means something entirely limited and personal in its application, while to a large minority, it means the exchange of domination from one stratum of society to another.

It is obvious that when Paul spoke of liberty he meant a condition widely different from this, in that liberty was to him a state of mind rather than of external circumstance, and the student of Christian Science is beginning to learn something of what Paul meant, because he is beginning to learn something about Principle. This word Principle, which to many still conveys the idea of complete abstraction, to the student of Christian Science is replete with vital actualities, for it expresses his highest conception of God as Mind, law, origin, without any opposite power or consciousness. To be in obedience to divine Principle must, it is easy to see, bring us into the liberty to which the apostle referred, a liberty which has no commerce with the license of the carnal mind. Such obedience can naturally only arise from individual effort; it cannot be enforced by acts of parliament. Neither does it need a prophetic eye to see that, as this individual reformation spreads, the foundations of civic and social discords cannot but be undermined. For were every man to seek not so much his own as the good of the community, there would be no place for discord.

"Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," said the apostle. If we take the life of Jesus as the highest illustration of one animated by the spirit of the Lord, we find that his liberty was the result of perfect obedience to law—the law of God. He came not to do his own will but the will of his Father, he said, and though he had, and showed that he had, perfect dominion over all material conditions, and was indeed a ruler and leader of men, yet he was the servant of all. There can really be no liberty except through obedience to the Spirit of the Lord, that is to Principle, to right thinking and acting; for any other supposed liberty, speaking fundamentally, simply means bondage to some form of self-will. The habit of obedience, which is generally considered to be necessary only in childhood (and, unfortunately for this generation and the next, not always then), should really be so taught in those impressionable years that as the child grows up he will recognize that he has not been coerced into obedience to an arbitrary rule, but that he has been unconsciously learning to subordinate himself, his tempers, passions, and appetites, to an unseen law, which, if obeyed, will bring him into the complete liberty of his God-given dominion.

The book of Proverbs is an exposition of this fact, and it is to be noted that the willful and disobedient are there always spoken of as "fools," and their ultimate discomfiture is constantly contrasted with the upward progress and liberty of those who have been obedient to the instruction of Truth or wisdom. The mathematician who roams at large amongst all the bewildering complexities of logarithms, or of the differential calculus, having perfect control over them all, knows that he attained to that control only by unfailing obedience to the multiplication table and the rule of three, and so it must be with every student of the Science of Life or being. The man who thinks that liberty means liberty to do as he pleases, is really, did he but know it, the victim of the desires of the carnal mind, and unless he awakes in time to effect his escape, will one day find himself held in a grip of iron which unassisted human effort cannot break.

In the textbook of Christian Science (p. 225), Mrs. Eddy says, "The history of our country, like all history, illustrates the might of Mind, and shows human power to be proportionate to its embodiment of right thinking. A few immortal sentences, breathing the omnipotence of divine justice, have been potent to break despotic fetters and abolish the whipping-post and slave market; but oppression neither went down in blood, nor did the breath of freedom come from the cannon's mouth. Love is the liberator." If only the world to-day would remember and act upon the famous words of the man, who, for the salvation of his country, was able to embody in such a large measure the spirit of that statement, would not the era of universal peace be inaugurated? "With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; . . . to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations." It was long before the speaker saw even the partial fulfillment of the hope expressed in those words, but they remained as his guiding star through many dark hours of what seemed unremitting struggle and conflict.

The strivings of the human race toward the achievement of liberty form the most wonderful pages of history, but that to-day there are signs of the dawning of the day of freedom is due to the fact that the Discoverer of Christian Science saw that the freedom of the race could only follow that of the individual from the slavery of the senses, through the knowledge of God and of His Christ, and that she labored faithfully to make that knowledge available for every man who would receive it.

True liberty, as Christian Science teaches and demonstrates, is obedience, obedience to that law of God which operates in human experience through unselfishness, spiritual desires and aspirations, bringing complete freedom from all the hate, the jealousy, the fear, which cause all the ills to which flesh is heir. The greatest liberator the world has known did not come teaching men to refuse to pay tribute to Cæsar, but to set them free from the bondage in which each individual is held by his own selfish passions. "If ye continue in my word," he said, "then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in The Christian Guardian, Toronto, Canada]

A correspondent who has written as though Christian Science could not cure a sick horse, particularly when the practitioner and the horse are two hundred and fifty miles apart, should remember that John Wesley cured his horse by prayer, and should consider whether more or less space between him and his horse would have made any difference. I have known more than one animal to be cured by Christian Science. Through the understanding of Christianity I was myself healed of a physical disorder or defect which had persisted for many years in spite of the efforts of several physicians, and this cure was wrought when the practitioner was three hundred and forty miles away. I am glad to say that I paid something for this service. It may be fairly presumed that if some one other than himself had been instrumental in the cure of Mr. Wesley's horse he would have considered the service valuable. "The labourer is worthy of his hire."

Seeing that the same correspondent has expressed a wish to talk with or to a particular Christian Scientist, I would say that this one or any other will be glad to talk with him about Christian Science whenever he wishes to do so as a sincere inquirer. It is the custom of Christian Scientists to wait for some sign of interest in the good news of which they have been assured before broaching it to anyone. Instead of debate or controversy, Christian Scientists prefer to rely upon the argument or reason furnished by proof or demonstration.

[Peter V. Ross in Fresno (Cal.) Republican]

A clergyman in a sermon as reported was clearly disposed to discuss Christian Science in a kindly and unbiased spirit. Some of his statements, however, are hardly in line with the thought of students of that religion. He says, for example, that "Christian Science makes exaggerated claims about its ability to cure diseases" and that he does not believe that it "has ever cured cancer or typhoid fever." But does the clergyman not overlook the fact that he is dealing with science, hence that what he believes is entirely irrelevant and immaterial? He would scarcely presume to offer an opinion on the truth of a mathematical proposition; rather he would resort to demonstration. Why not adopt the same course with Christian Science propositions based on the Scriptural promises that "the Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save" and "the prayer of faith shall save the sick"?

His opinions and beliefs might then give place to knowledge and demonstration, and he might find, just what others are finding, that Christian Science cures one form of disease as readily as another, and that the only limit to its healing power is human incredulity. Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should heal all manner of sickness now as He did in the first centuries of the Christian era?

Our clerical critic is credited with saying that "God has not done all things well already." Christian Science declines to ascribe any delinquency to Deity. It prefers to regard God's work as finished and perfect, and any seeming imperfection as the human erroneous concept of perfection and reality. This human misconception embraces, among other things, pain and disease, and its correction by the introduction into consciousness of the true concept of things displaces or releases sickness and suffering and causes them to vanish into their native nothingness. This is nothing more than the application of Jesus' dictum, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The clergyman fears that "Christian Science teaches man to believe that life is an easy and altogether calm affair." It is true that Christian Science imparts to its students no small measure of poise, serenity, and confidence, because it assures them that Principle governs all things and that sooner or later the great truth will appear that good is the only power.

Christian Science is not indifferent to the claims and pretensions of evil. On the contrary, it has as its central purpose the overthrow and destruction of them all. Referring to the present war, the clergyman declares that the world needs men of action and not of repose. All true Christian Scientists are quite in accord with this sentiment, and are lending their full support to our nation and our allies, knowing that their cause is just and must be maintained if human liberty is to survive. Christian Scientists are doing this in common with all other good citizens. They are not seeking any false or convenient peace, since they realize that there can be no actual peace except as it is founded on justice and Principle. It is interesting to note that Christian Science churches in this state have subscribed to both Liberty loans.

The clergyman avers that Christian Science stands in the way of measures "that will help to eradicate communicable diseases." The fact is that by maintaining a right mental attitude toward disease, Christian Science is a potent factor to-day in preventing the development and spread of contagion. Christian Scientists do not fear germs or contagion, for they realize, as some of the medical fraternity are discovering, that germs do not cause disease and that the supposed laws of contagion have no foundation except in human belief and fear.

Nevertheless Christian Scientists respect the rights of other people who think differently, and they obey the state and municipal regulations which have been adopted with a view to public safety. Any mistaken notion that they are not careful to observe such rules or laws may be to some extent traceable to occasional sensational press reports. Investigation of cases thus reported invariably discloses the fact that when Christian Scientists have come in contact with supposedly communicable diseases they have obeyed the law by making reports to health authorities and by observing isolation and quarantine regulations.

[Aaron E. Brandt in McKeesport (Pa.) News]

Referring to a Christian Science service, the church editor of the News says: "A Christian Science sermon consists of quotations from the Bible, followed by the 'spiritual interpretations' of Mrs. Eddy, read from her textbook, 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures.' The second reader reads the Scripture; the first reader, Mrs. Eddy's textbook." That is a correct statement, but the comment following it, namely, "Maybe this indicates that Mrs. Eddy's interpretation is greater than Scripture itself, to her followers," is far from the fact. No advantage whatever can be gained by making such comparisons, and no Christian Scientists have occasion to make them. When made by others, they lose sight of the true status of the Christian Science textbook as a key to the Scriptures. The supposition that a key can be greater than the door the key unlocks does not have its origin among Christian Scientists nor in Christian Science teaching. Christian Scientists are content with the fact that their textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, is a key to the spiritual interpretation of the Scriptures, and that it is unlocking to them hidden treasures of priceless value, as proved to them in the healing of all manner of sickness and disease, and the overcoming of all kinds of sin and inharmonious conditions.

Concerning the statement that the sermons delivered at Christian Science services claim to be "undivorced from truth, uncontaminated and unfettered by human hypotheses, and divinely authorized," permit me to add that any doubt upon this point is removed as soon as an understanding of Christian Science teaching is demonstrably gained. A simple illustration will help to explain this. When the early mathematicians discovered the correct relation of numbers, erroneous human hypotheses were eliminated, and it was found, as every pupil understands to-day, that mathematical principles are divorced from error. In like manner Mrs. Eddy, in following the light revealed to her by a scientific interpretation of the Scriptures, found it necessary to remove, in the elucidation of Scriptural teaching, all preconceived notions, human conjectures, and misconceptions in regard to them. But it is a mistake to suppose, as alleged, because one person failed to understand the sermon heard by him, that a common mortal cannot understand such a sermon owing to its being couched in metaphysical and philosophical terms.

Funds of The Mother Church

Camp Welfare and War Relief

"I am inclosing check for five dollars from myself and sister to be used for your War Relief work. We heartily wish it were more, but it is a blessed privilege to take even so small a part in the blessed work being carried on. The great war is teaching mankind that none can live unto himself. The spirit of Love is abroad in the earth and we are accordingly uplifted. With deep appreciation of the unselfish labor of those who are dispensing our mites to those in need. . . ."

"We are a very small unorganized society, but we are trying to do our part in this great work. We are sending our collection ($31.70) taken last Sunday for the War Relief fund, with hearts full of love and gratitude for what Christian Science has done and is doing for each one of us."

"It is with renewed gratitude that I have received your envelope and your comforting words. Thanks for the check and the continued aid which makes me appreciate daily the goodness of divine Love. I will continue to work to grow in confidence. Though my problem seems at times very difficult I know that I will reach the goal—which is, to overcome all obstructions through understanding the divine Principle. Kindly tell the committee of my sincere gratitude for the loving offer to go on helping me."

Real Estate

"Inclosed is a check for five hundred dollars, being the second and final payment on our pledge to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund."

The Christian Science Benevolent Association

"Inclosed please find check for ten dollars from our Sunday school, which please credit to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. The Sunday school is glad indeed to contribute this amount to such a worthy cause."

"You will find inclosed a check for eighteen dollars for the benefit of The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund. This is our mite toward that cause. It is just a little expression of our gratitude for the many blessings we have received and are receiving through Christian Science."

"I am not a member of a Christian Science church or organization, but I am heartily a believer in the teaching, inasmuch as I have received numerous benefits from it and I feel very thankful; in fact I am being benefited each day. I live a different life from what I did prior to taking up the study of Christian Science. I am desirous of contributing the inclosed check to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund."

"I am so grateful that it is being made possible to care for the weary and heavy-laden, and I send the inclosed check with a heart full of love. Use it as seems best to those in charge."

"The Liberty Bells"

THIS is the hour they then foretold—
When earth, inebriate with crime,
Laughed right to scorn, and guilt, grown bold,
Knelt worshiping at mammon's shrine.

This is the hour! Corruption's band
Is driven back; and periled right,
Rescued by the "fanatic" hand,
Spans our broad heaven of light.

Righteousness ne'er—awestruck or dumb—
Feared for an hour the tyrant's heel!
Injustice to the combat sprang;
God to the rescue—Liberty, peal!

Joy is in every belfry bell—
Joy for the captive! Sound it long!
Ye who have wept fourscore can tell
The holy meaning of their song.

'Tis freedom's birthday—blood-bought boon!
O war-rent flag! O soldier-shroud!
Thine be the glory—nor too soon
Is heard your "Cry aloud!"

O not too soon is rent the chain
And charter, trampling right in dust!
Till God is God no longer—ne'er again
Quench liberty that's just.

(From "Poems," copyright, 1910, by Mary Baker Eddy.)

Comforts for Army and Navy

MANY inquiries have been received at headquarters in regard to reliable ways and means whereby knitted goods may be sent to men in the Army and Navy.

With this object in view the following committee is recommended to the field:

Comforts Forwarding Committee,
328 Boylston Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

Information in regard to the kinds of articles most needed and specifications for their manufacture will be furnished on request.

Christian Scientists, however, will not lose sight of the fact that the above named activities can only supplement the primary metaphysical responsibilities for which their membership in the Church of Christ, Scientist, stands.

Prayer without ceasing, based upon the realization and demonstration of the facts of divine Science, is the hope of the world.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Camp Welfare Work

SUPPOSE that your home looks out on the western sea, and one day as the sun sinks in golden glory illumining the Pacific you learn that a young friend must soon leave his camp and take ship to cross the Atlantic, and wants to have "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" for his companion. You can convey to the local Camp Welfare committee your wish to supply this want, and the committee in the camp where your soldier or sailor friend is, being notified by mail or by wire, will within the day place in his hands a copy of the textbook. The generous contributions of Christian Scientists to the Camp Welfare fund have made this possible.

The Leader of the Christian Science movement, the author of its textbook, interpreted God not only as "the everlasting Father," but as Love, the divine Mother, ever present, giving the new term "Our Father-Mother God, all-harmonious" (Science and Health, p. 16), whereby to adore the Unchangeable. No one could know her without wondering at the all-inclusive tenderness of her motherly love and good will. At the time when her country was at war to secure liberty for the people of an island of the sea, Mrs. Eddy took occasion to say in a sermon (Christian Science versus Pantheism, p. 14): "In your peaceful homes remember our brave soldiers, whether in camp or in battle. Oh, may their love of country, and their faithful service thereof, be unto them life-preservers!" Many in the movement learned then and remember now the lesson she thus taught, and in the work they do, which is both metaphysical and practical, are bringing comfort to soldiers in camp and field.

In states or provinces there have been formed Camp Welfare committees whereby the work is organized. These committees in some states have buildings where men in uniform are made welcome, but everywhere friendly offices are being worked out for the comfort of the men and the relief from anxiety of their people at home,—friendly offices which we have not space to describe. The work of distribution of The Christian Science Monitor may be cited as an example of the provision of worth while reading matter. If the committees find misunderstanding on the part of an officer, the international newspaper itself is the best argument in its own favor. "The great verities of existence are never excluded by falsity," Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 543). Again and again this has been proved by the workers negatively, in the disappearing of prejudice, and positively, in the gaining of official approbation for regular delivery of the Monitor to those desiring to read it. As its every issue brings the elucidation of Principle in some way, it encourages the courageous, and confirms the right thinking man, but also opens the door of hope to the hitherto unprincipled man who in his heart yet wants to know God. In what way can anyone best express good will to another? We may find a clue to an answer from a young soldier, who, with a crowd of friends, had listened to a fine entertainment provided for those in camp. Some one asked for a vote or expression of thanks for the entertainers, and he in speaking did give thanks and express appreciation, but went on to say quite honestly that entertainment was not what they wanted just then. They did not want help to pass the time away, but wanted some one to use the time to tell them about God. They found themselves thinking much about life and about God and wanted to know what to believe.

It must be apparent that the best way to secure a man's welfare is to make God known to him, for in that acquaintance is peace, and in that knowledge is life. Our periodicals make known the results of faith in God as recorded in testimonies given by those healed of sickness or redeemed from error. These demonstrations of Christian Science are based upon its Principle, divine Mind. They show that Mrs. Eddy's writings have interpreted the Scriptures so that "God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, and the God of all comfort," is known to very many as their ever present helper and friend, the one who "forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases." Well then, the truest kindness will be that which ministers to mind, which comforts the heart, which releases from fear, and so establishes bodily health and mental peace. A great work is being done by these committees in supplying men with periodicals, pamphlets, Bibles, and copies of the Christian Science textbook. Contributions for the carrying on of this work from all the branch churches and societies and from individual contributors, come to the treasurer of The Mother Church, and are apportioned according to the needs of the localities where the work is developing, and this whole endeavor, in the most interesting way, illustrates the comprehensiveness, combined with simplicity, which characterizes the work of Christian Scientists.

Children and Liberty

MANY are asking at this hour what effect present world conditions are having upon children; and when we remember the sensitive thought of those who are very young, we may well be concerned respecting the means taken to preserve them from the hardships and sufferings which so many adults have to face and overcome. No one would deny that liberty is very dear to children, even though they may have a very imperfect sense of what constitutes true freedom; but the same may be said of those who have had many years of mortal experience. This, however, will be readily admitted,—that the child is more teachable than the adult, and is ready to be corrected if only the true idea is presented to him in the right way.

Our Leader pays a sweet tribute to childhood when she says (Science and Health, p. 236): "Children are more tractable than adults, and learn more readily to love the simple verities that will make them happy and good." To this she adds, "Jesus loved little children because of their freedom from wrong and their receptiveness of right." An American educator who has been looking into the conditions of children in Europe during the present war struggle, reported that in England at least they were being well cared for; but it was sad to learn from the report, that on the continent, nearer the scenes of conflict, children showed the effects of it in their mental repression and sadness. It was said that there the children never laugh and never cry. This would necessarily arouse deep sympathy on the part of American people, who seldom forget to be kind to children, even if they are not always wise in manifesting it; and while all Christian Scientists are gladly doing their utmost in every way possible to ameliorate the conditions of humanity at this hour, they need to rely more fully upon Truth, and work more energetically along spiritual lines, knowing that thus can we best become coworkers with infinite Love and wisdom.

One of the most deeply touching stories in the Bible is the record of the events which immediately followed Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem, when he went into the temple of God and cast out therefrom the representatives of material worship. We read that the blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and that he healed them; but according to the record it would seem that the chief priests and scribes took special offense at the demonstration made by the children. It is wonderful to read of their joyful acclaim in singing their praises to the Master who was revealing to all humanity what liberty really means. When the chief priests said to the Master respecting the children's praises, "Hearest thou what these say?" Jesus replied, "Yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?" This story shows very clearly that however much the older people were in bondage to fear—fear of human opinion and the consequences of ignoring it—these little ones had realized, at least for that day and hour, "the glorious liberty of the children of God."

In our Leader's address at the dedication of the original Mother Church edifice, we find these loving words by her, following an expression of her gratitude for what the children had done toward the furnishing of what was called "Mother's Room" in the church, words so truly prophetic that we gladly grasp their meaning at the present hour. She says (Pulpit and Press, p. 8), "The children are destined to witness results which will eclipse Oriental dreams." We may well think upon this if we are ever tempted to feel sad respecting the world's outlook, and at the same time we may recall anew that morning meal on the shores of the Galilean sea, which means so much to Christian Scientists. When the great Teacher sought to test to the utmost the repentance of Simon Peter he said to him, "Lovest thou me more than these?" and following Peter's fervent response which declared his love for the Master, Jesus said to him, "Feed my lambs."

And so to-day, with these words echoing in our thought, we may remember the needs of the little ones in less favored lands than our own, and rejoice that the children here take delight in making with nimble fingers and loving hearts garments for unknown little friends across the seas. We should at the same time lose no opportunity to prove our loyalty and obedience to the Master whom we profess to love when the deepest needs of the children here and everywhere—the spiritual needs—confront us. If we would teach them how to love God and their fellow men, we must ourselves know what this means, and our knowing must be so vital that the children can never mistake the lesson or fail to remember it.

The Chimes of Liberty

LIBERTY cannot be separated from God, for liberty is of God. The more men understand God's power the more liberty they have. In the liberty of God men are tuned to each other in one grand harmony of unity. The chimes of spiritual liberty ring for victory even while physical sense seems to lie in bondage. At the very time when evil believes it can work its will with the world, liberty sounds its joyous peal of freedom and calls a new nation out of the ruins of the old. The bells announce to receptive hearts the dawn of day, the reign of righteousness, the never fading light. They tell of lessons learned, evil plans forestalled, revenge frustrated, hatred baffled. They proclaim the downfall of tyranny buttressed by mistaken evil intent, the failure of physical force though expressed in multitudinous inventions, the powerlessness of human will even when hypnotically intensified. The bells ring out the glad tidings of the kingdom of heaven at hand, of man as God's child, of a universe governed by divine Love.

The spiritual chimes reach those who have learned to hear God's messages. They penetrate the clamor of council chambers where the struggle for place and power makes wisdom of none avail; they resound above the thunderings of the battle front; they nullify the secret arguments of esoteric magic, and bring comfort to the wounded, and God's presence to the bereaved. The call of Liberty, metaphysically understood, rends the veil of the temple and dissipates the fear of death. With irresistible swing and stroke these bells challenge mortal opinion with divine facts. "O death," they cry with Paul, "where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" When God made man in His image and likeness, man's safety was assured forever, because God's work is unchangeable.

Sometimes little children, with complete trust in God, hear the call of Liberty when their elders are aware only of the booming of fear. During the recent bombardment of Paris the little daughter of an English colonel went to the orderly and said: "You know, you needn't be afraid at all, because nothing can hurt me. You see, God's arms are under me, then under Daddy and Mummie, and after them everybody else." As the Liberty bells sway to and fro they ring out to a waiting world such immortal phrases from the Scriptures as these: "The glorious liberty of the children of God;" "To set at liberty them that are bruised;" "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

The famous Liberty Bell of the United States was brought from England and recast in Philadelphia, and the following Bible text placed upon it: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." This proclamation is true to-day in a spiritual sense which the American patriots of Washington's time could not have understood. Christian Science has caused the true song of liberty to be heard, liberty from sin, sickness, and the fear of death. On January 1, 1863, was issued the Emancipation Proclamation, and at the close of the American Civil War the Congress of the United States passed a resolution prohibiting slavery throughout the land. On February 3, 1865, the bells were rung in the commonwealth of Massachusetts to proclaim this joyful news, and Mrs. Eddy published in a Lynn newspaper her poem entitled "The Liberty Bells," which is republished in this issue of the Sentinel. Through her discovery of Christian Science in 1866 Mrs. Eddy inaugurated another and greater struggle for liberty than the world had ever known, and for this the bells are to-day ringing in the hearts of uncounted thousands. She explained this struggle in an address delivered in Chicago in 1888, and to be found on page 101 of "Miscellaneous Writings." There she says: "Christian Science and the senses are at war. It is a revolutionary struggle. We already have had two in this nation; and they began and ended in a contest for the true idea, for human liberty and rights. Now cometh a third struggle; for the freedom of health, holiness, and the attainment of heaven."

The various nations pressed by the war are issuing bonds for their financial defense. The United States, by a stroke of deep perception, has entitled its own, "Liberty bonds." Metaphysically considered the real bond is the tie or relationship between God and man, but the tie of the flesh is the bondage from which men are learning to free themselves in "the glorious liberty of the children of God." The abuse of so-called human efficiency would disembowel liberty if it could. Love is the strong defense against the ravages of hate.

Many a child, woman, or man to-day hears the music of the spiritual liberty bells by reason of Christian Science. Former invalids, doomed by material medicine to lifelong imprisonment, sing in their hearts that the truth has made them free in the true liberty of health; many a laborer as he goes to his work sings the song of liberty as taught by Christian Science; those who were once sick unto death are to-day robust and useful citizens by reason of it; little children given up as incurable run and play with the song of Christian Science liberty in their hearts; mothers once weary and fear-haunted to-day rejoice in these chimes of liberty. The debauchee thinking there is liberty in his life only finds slavery in his habits, so that the false liberty advocated by his living as a libertine becomes to him a falling wall over a foundation built on sand. Christian Science holds out real liberty, and reconstructs the fallen lives on the sure foundation of the rock of the Christ healing power. The former slaves of bad habits, those who have been liberated from prisons and asylums by Christian Science, join in this great hymn of praise and thanksgiving.

Truly, as our dear Leader has said (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 343), "Among the manifold soft chimes that will fill the haunted chambers of memory, this is the sweetest: 'Thou hast been faithful!'"

WILLIAM D. MCCRACKAN.

Notice

In order to be better prepared to give spiritual help in the Army and Navy through Christian Science literature and in other ways, it is desired to secure the names and present complete mail address of all officers and men in the military, naval, or aero service of the United States and of its allies, who are Christian Scientists or who have shown an interest in Christian Science. Such men, or members of their families, or friends, are requested to send this information to

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday School, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

MCGREGOR, IOWA.—On Sunday morning [Feb. 3] First Church of Christ, Scientist, was dedicated. In May, 1892, eighteen people met and organized a Christian Science church. Meetings were held at the homes of the members until steadily increasing numbers made it necessary to secure permanent quarters. The G. A. R. Hall was rented, and for four years services were conducted there. In 1897 a large upper room in the Barron Block was rented and suitably furnished. The ensuing years witnessed a slow but continuous growth in members until 1914, when upon several Sundays every chair was filled. A building fund was started in October, 1915. In April, 1916, a lot on Main Street was presented to the church for a building site, an architect was consulted, and plans for a church edifice were submitted. The plan of the building as it stands was approved in December, 1916, and in April, 1917, ground was broken for a foundation.—North Iowa Times.

EUGENE, ORE.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, is now free from debt and will probably be dedicated in the near future. This condition was brought about through the receipt of a sum of money from the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy. The value of the church, lot, and furnishings is estimated at about nine thousand dollars.

Admission to Membership in The Mother Church

The next admission of candidates will be May 31, 1918. Application blanks may be obtained by addressing the Clerk of The Mother Church, and should be returned to him on or before Wednesday, May 8, 1918.

An application sent to the Clerk does not constitute the applicant a member. Notice of election will be sent to those who are admitted to membership.

Those who have made application for membership prior to November 2, 1917, and have not received notice of election, may communicate with the Clerk if they so desire, and are especially requested to do so before sending in a second application.

CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk,
236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Mass.

The Lectures

PERU, ILL. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by the Rev. John M. MacLeod, Ph.D., who said in part:—

It indeed gives me great pleasure to stand before you, representing as I do another church, not far removed in conceptions from your own. I have always had a very near akin feeling for your great and glorious Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, for was she not a Congregationalist before she became a Christian Scientist? Many times I have been taken for a Christian Scientist and the term has delighted me in a number of ways, for it is a grand idea to be a Christian and still better if one can add to that the scientific thought of the age. Only the other day I was asked, "Why do you, a Congregationalist, introduce a Christian Scientist?" And I replied: "Why not? Should we be so narrow that we cannot see the good in others?" The Scripture says that we must be of the same mind, which, I take it, means that while we do not see things just alike, we may be of the same mind in loving and helping one another; so in the spirit of helping and of love I am here this evening. I am pleased to note the great change slowly taking place in our religious ideas,—yesterday our religion seemed to be a funeral dirge, we had long, sad faces; to-day we know that our religion should make us glad and happy, that there should be sunshine in our smile and sparkle in our eye.

Testimonies of Healing

At the age of seven my earnest study of the Bible began, which study never was discontinued. I tried to follow the Christ-ideal, but made at the same time an awful reality of evil, and was consequently much discouraged at my own shortcomings and those of the whole material world. I had a clear perception of the law which requires of us to be perfect even as our Father is perfect, but had no idea of the love of God for His children. I turned to those around me for help, but all gave me the same answer,—that the absolute truth is not attainable here, and that we have to be content with things as they seem to be.

But God's beautiful promises, "Seek, and ye shall find," and "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," revived my hope and I continued my search until, after many more failures, I gave way to utter discouragement. I cried over my sins, continually reviewing the past, until I was unable to fulfill the simplest duty in our home. My husband, thinking me physically ill, called in a doctor, who told me I needed rest. I was sent to a resting home, but continued to cry, and to pray to God for deliverance and for strength to do His will. After two months of so-called rest I returned home in a worse state than ever. My husband then consulted a specialist on nervous diseases. I told this doctor all about my troubles and asked that I might be allowed to see a clergyman, but was told that it was useless for me to see one, as he could give me no answer to all my questions. The doctor further assured me that life was only hard work and lots of suffering, with a little sunshine now and then. This verdict made me still more discouraged. He told my husband the nature of my supposed illness and that I probably would be restored for a time, but would never be quite strong again, and advised him to send me to another place, where I passed the darkest hours of my life. I could not sleep at all and many times thought God had entirely forsaken me and I would never be able to return to my home. After having spent several months in this terrible condition of inactivity and depression, I decided to leave the place and humbly to take up my duties again.

During all this time, and for many years previous to it, a dear friend in America had been sending Christian Science literature to an aunt of mine, and I had read many beautiful testimonies in the Sentinel. In this hour of utmost need I turned to Christian Science for help, and a practitioner was called. She lovingly assured me of God's infinite love for His children and of our right to be in the kingdom of heaven here and now. Almost four years have passed since that blessed day and many problems have been solved, many proofs of God's all-power have been gained, and to-day I am strong and healthy as never before, able to attend to the duty of each moment, and trying to glorify God in all my doings. I have gained an understanding of man's relationship to God, our Father-Mother, which has freed me from doubt and fear. Our home is full of joy and happiness, for the old things have passed away and everything is made new. Our dear children, for whom I used to feel a great sense of responsibility, are now a source of constant joy to me, as I know that God constantly cares for and protects them.

My gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me is unbounded. It has answered all my questions, and I know that I have found the truth which will lead us to the endless day. Our children enjoy the great blessing of instruction in the Sunday school, and from our periodicals there flows a steady stream of water to satisfy my thirst. I feel a deep reverence and love for the noble woman who was brave enough to follow the Master, and through whose consecrated work we possess the key to the Scriptures.

Out of thankfulness to God and in gratitude to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, I wish to give this testimony. Some years ago I had what the doctors call abnormal growths. I went to many noted surgeons, and they all operated on me, but with no good result. The wound would not heal and left me in a serious condition and constant agony. In five years I underwent nine operations for this trouble. I was constantly praying to God for help and one day the thought came very clearly to me that I should try Christian Science. I did so and it healed me. The healing was slow, but through it I learned a great lesson,—what God is and what man is and what church is. My hope is that this testimony will help some one who is seeking health and truth.

MRS. ELIZABETH D. FAUST, Geneva, Ill.

I can testify that what my wife has told is true. My heart is filled with gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. It has healed me of many ailments,—of rheumatism which was so bad that I hardly knew what it was to be without pain, and of kidney and bladder trouble. I was told by a surgeon that I would have to submit to a very serious operation in my nose and throat, as I was always breathing through my mouth. I am happy to say this difficulty has been entirely overcome with the help of a practitioner, and through reading the Bible together with "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I am indeed thankful to our Leader for this wonderful truth she has given to the world.—CHARLES J. FAUST.

The mitigation of the effects of what seemed a serious accident, by dwelling almost immediately upon the truth about the occurrence instead of upon the evidence of the material senses, has been so encouraging to me that I want to tell others of it, to whom it may be useful at moments when so-called material law asserts itself. At the beginning of 1915 I was taking a walk, and had to cross a road in London crowded with motor traffic. In looking after my dog I myself almost got knocked down by a motor bus, the front wheel of which went over my foot. These vehicles weigh about thirteen tons, and I felt that I was seriously injured and must give myself up to the people who were hurrying to help me; but there was no time to lose, if what I knew of Christian Science was to be put into operation. These words came to me: "Accidents are unknown to God" (Science and Health, p. 424); but in spite of trying to realize this, the sense of injury seemed to be overcoming me. The truth, however, was insistent. This statement was either true or it was not; if it was true, then there was nothing to prevent me from finishing the walk. Human reason yielded to this logic, and I acted accordingly.

The first few steps were fairly painful; but following Mrs. Eddy's instruction, "When error confronts you, withhold not the rebuke or the explanation which destroys error" (Science and Health, p. 452), the pain grew less and less. After going home, I went off to my work in the suburbs. The pain had now quite ceased, but I thought I must have trodden in a pool of water, as it was raining. This was explained, however, later in the morning, when I noticed that blood was oozing out through the lace holes and over the top of my boot. It was necessary, therefore, to go out and take off the boot and wash my foot, half of which seemed to be a crushed mass; but remembering the help that I had already received, I clung to the true version and declined the assistance of a surgeon, whom my kind friends wished to summon, saying that I would lose my foot unless proper care was taken of it. Wrapping my handkerchief round what with the eye of faith I regarded as my toes, I put the foot back into the boot, finished my work, and went home. In a week all bleeding had stopped, and in a fortnight I could walk, or run if I had liked. The only material help I needed was the washing of the foot, putting on a clean handkerchief each day, and wearing a soft shoe for a few weeks.

There is now no sign of injury, the nails have all grown again, and the bones and muscles are in their old places and acting normally. It would be impossible to express the love and gratitude I feel to our Leader for boldly showing us the absolute truth of being and giving us courage to rely upon it. On that spot in Kensington High Street, I was, as it were, face to face with Truth, or God, and my aim has ever since been to recognize Him everywhere and similarly to overcome the illusions of mortal sense that would claim to hide His presence from our eyes.—S. T. DUNN, Kew, England.

It is with deepest thoughts of gratitude that I give this testimony of what Christian Science has done for me and mine. I have been a member of the Christian Science church for fifteen years. My first healing was of heart trouble, and was brought about by listening to a practitioner explain this teaching to a lady. I was healed instantaneously. Then I knew I had the key to the spiritual storehouse where the treasure was that I had sought all my life. Christian Science is the "pearl of great price" that cannot be bought with money; we can only keep it by living up to the commands of Christ Jesus and by letting brotherly love rule out every thought that is unlike God, good. I have never used medicine or any material remedies since learning of Christian Science, and have had no desire for them, for I knew that Christ, Truth, had come to my consciousness, as our Master promised, and that was sufficient.

About a year ago I was asked to treat a child that had been dismissed from public school, for a trouble supposed to be contagious. The mother said she had been fighting it all the time. I told her not to fight any more, but know that God governed the child and herself. In a few days the boy got a certificate from a doctor and went back to school, being all right. For that healing and a multitude of others I am indeed thankful to God. I am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this truth that frees mankind from the ills of the flesh, and my daily prayer is that I may gain more of the understanding of Christian Science.

MRS. ANNIE CARSON, Sherman, Texas.

I can truthfully say that my son was permanently healed.

MRS. SARAH M. SCOTT.

When a young girl I became a member of an orthodox church, although the teachings were not my ideals. Having a great desire to do good, I later took up the work of teaching school, thinking I might find more opportunity in that way. I felt that the only obedience was obtained through love, and depended on God to guide me in all I did. Afterward, my home life having changed, hoping to be of further usefulness to mankind I entered a hospital to become a nurse. After graduating from the training school for nurses, I accepted the position of chief night nurse, and during the hospital work found many puzzling experiences, and many times asked myself the question, Why? My questions were never answered until I began the study of Christian Science.

During my last year in the hospital I had a severe attack of kidney trouble, and for the next six years was frequently confined to bed with abscess and hemorrhage of the kidneys. The attacks became more severe and my general physical condition more weakened. I was under the care of some of the best physicians in this city during that time, and after careful examinations was given no encouragement that I would ever be any better. In May, 1908, I was asked to try Christian Science. I had always trusted God, as far as I understood Him, for everything else, so reasoned that since others said they were healed, why should I not investigate and see for myself. I began the study and went to a practitioner, with the result that in just four weeks the condition was eliminated and I have never had a return of the trouble. My strength gradually returned and I have now, and have had for some time, better health than ever before.

Ptomaine poisoning, blood poisoning, carbuncles, pleurisy, and other discordant physical conditions have been quickly overcome in our home through the study and application of Christian Science, for which I am deeply grateful; but the understanding of God, whom I had always ignorantly worshiped, is cause for much deeper gratitude than are the physical healings which, I know, are the "signs following." My greatest desire is so to live and reflect the love taught in Christian Science as to prove my gratitude in the only right way.—MRS. CAROLINE J. HAMILTON, Columbus, Ohio.

I came into Christian Science through the healing of a member of our family who was suffering from diabetes, and by attending the services regularly, gradually found something that I had been wanting,—an understanding of God, Love. Words cannot express my gratitude for the knowledge of what man's birthright is, and that we are able daily to overcome in ourselves and others the evil beliefs of sin, disease, and death. Through the aid of loving practitioners, who have helped me to see the light, and through the reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, who so lovingly gave us this revelation of Truth, I have gained a clearer understanding of God and of His loving protection. I am most deeply grateful for the privilege of sending my children to the Christian Science Sunday school, by which they are benefiting.

This healing truth has helped me through many trials. A severe ear trouble was overcome in a few treatments and lasted only a few weeks, whereas before coming into Christian Science I had a similar attack, which lasted about two months, and it was necessary to have the ear drums operated on. Neuralgia and influenza have also been overcome, as well as many minor ailments. Most of all, this teaching has helped me to look at my daily problems from a more unselfish viewpoint and to be grateful for the harmonious working out of each one. My desire is to grow each day so as to be able to help my sisters and brothers to find God, who is Love and a very present help in every need.

reading of the literature surely help me every day to realize that wherever I am, the great Physician is present. The truth as taught in Christian Science has overcome the belief of nervous exhaustion for me, also such ailments as croup and measles for our eight-year-old son. My gratitude goes out to Mrs. Eddy for having explained the truth to us and for having given us a key to the Scriptures. The privilege of class instruction has been of great benefit to me.

I want to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. I had suffered for years from what the doctors called an internal growth. They said that if I wished ever to be well I would have to undergo an operation, and advised me to have this done before leaving the East, saying the doctor here would not understand my case. Friends in the East had told me of Christian Science, but I apparently was not ready for it.

Soon after this we moved to Los Angeles and were just nicely settled in a new home when my condition became worse than ever. We called in a doctor, who after several weeks told my husband that an operation was necessary. We were about ready to consent to this when Christian Science was again brought to my notice, this time by a neighbor, who said she knew it would heal me. When my husband came home I told him what this lady had said, and he was willing for me to try Christian Science, so immediately called up the doctor and told him of our intention. The doctor agreed that Christian Science might be all right for nervousness or bad temper, but declared it would do no good in my case. He was, however, told not to call any more, and a practitioner was asked to treat me. Absent treatments were given, with complete healing as a result, although it was not fully realized until four days later. I got up and was about the house, and did not see the practitioner until several weeks later, when I met her at a lecture.

This healing took place over four years ago, and I have enjoyed perfect health ever since. I have had many other proofs of the allness of God without calling for the help of a practitioner. I had read the Bible through four times, but got little benefit from it until I began to study it in connection with Science and Health. The Bible has now become a "tree of life" to me, and I find peace and happiness in its pages. I am truly thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for some understanding of the truth, which Jesus said would make us free. I am grateful, too, for all the authorized literature and lectures, besides our Sunday services and Wednesday evening meetings, which are enlightening the world and bringing mankind out of sin and suffering.

Mrs. Mary Amelia Felt, Los Angeles, Cal.

I hereby most heartily and gladly affirm the above statement of the healing of my wife through Christian Science. Not only has it healed us of our suffering but of those things of which suffering is the fruit. It has revealed God to us as an ever present help in times of seeming lack, and has proved Him to be the source of supply in every need. In one treatment I was healed of severe night sweats and stomach trouble, which had made me feel most miserable.

I, too, am filled with deepest gratitude for Christian Science, and my prayer shall ever be to do some good each day.—Ted Edward Felt.

I am very grateful for all that Christian Science has done for me. It has healed me of stomach and bowel trouble which had held me in bondage from babyhood. Throughout my childhood and girlhood I never knew what it was to feel well and happy. At the time of my coming to Christian Science I was very much discouraged; all material means had failed even to relieve me, and physicians promised me anything but a bright future. It may seem a little strange, but the only cases of healing of which I knew personally, were those of three people who had been instantaneously healed of troubles which are not considered trivial in the medical world, so I thought that all I had to do was to take a treatment and be well; but I soon found such was not to be my experience, for it was nine months before the healing was complete. One day while having treatment I suddenly became conscious of the fact that I was well, and for five years after that my health was perfect.

Later, while passing through a rather trying experience, I found it necessary to ask for help, and in a few days I was perfectly free. Shortly after this I began to go through a testing time, and there followed a year of great mental depression. I was very unhappy, though there was no reason for my being so. I earnestly tried to keep up my study of Christian Science, but seemed to be wandering in darkness. I do not know how I could have endured the mental distress if I had not had much loving help from a friend who is a practitioner. Through her many helpful talks and an occasional treatment, I was protected from erroneous thinking to a great extent.

After a time I was separated from this friend, but even before that an alarming physical condition began to manifest itself, and as I am the mother of three little ones, the fear of death became very strong. Both my husband and I felt that my condition was serious, so I wrote for absent treatment, and in a little less than three weeks the trouble vanished. I soon began to discover that during this time of trial, in many ways I had become a new creature. A great many fears regarding disease had disappeared, I was happier than ever before, and I became conscious of a feeling of peace and security hitherto unknown.

We have had many beautiful demonstrations of the power of Truth during the last eight years and more, perhaps chief among them being the birth of my last child. I was alone with the practitioner at the time, the experience was almost painless, and everything was harmonious. According to predictions made by physicians and nurses on two previous occasions, this would have been absolutely impossible, so it was proved that where God is understood, such laws have no place.

I am now enjoying perfect health, but feel that I could not get along even for one day without the support of this wonderful Science, and my greatest desire is to prove myself worthy of this glorious truth by striving to have more of that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus." I am truly grateful for all the physical healings in the family, but for the spiritualization of thought my gratitude is too deep for words to express. I am truly grateful to have lived in the age in which Mrs. Eddy gave Christian Science to the world.

Mrs. Bessie M. Scovill, Portland, Ore.

Being deeply grateful for the healing of my baby some five years ago, I desire to express my gratitude through the Sentinel. She weighed only about four pounds at birth and was never normal. At the age of eight months she was taken very ill with congestion, and her spine was affected, resulting in a curvature. She did not grow, and her teeth made her little, emaciated face look uncanny to those unaccustomed to seeing her. Her limbs were useless and seemed very sensitive to the touch. Some of my acquaintances thought her blank mentally, too. She took very little nourishment, seeming to have no desire for food. The physician we called in said no one could do much for her.

As I was somewhat interested in Christian Science, though my husband was not, we called a practitioner. The trouble was not, however, overcome, so another practitioner was engaged. After a time she told us to get some one else, as she did not feel that she had sufficient understanding to meet the case. Hearing of a practitioner who was visiting in a neighboring town, I sent for her and she came to see me. She told me that everything is possible to God; our part was to do the work and leave the result with Him. Treatment was begun, and I never had a doubt that the child would be healed. She began to improve at once, but slowly, and when she could use her feet and play with them and put her toes in her mouth, as babies are accustomed to do, I was the happiest woman in Oklahoma. When she had been treated five months, the practitioner said she felt the work was done, though it did not seem so to mortal sense. She said the perfect healing would manifest itself with time. At two years of age, which was about two months after Christian Science treatment was discontinued, she weighed just ten pounds, but she went on growing and developing, until now, at seven years of age, there is not a finer or more fully developed child to be found anywhere.

I have been greatly benefited by the study of Christian Science, and there have been many demonstrations in our home since we have been relying on this healing truth for help in time of need.—Mrs. Kate Rorie, Madill, Okla.

Truly, "man's extremity is God's opportunity." After having been a sufferer from female trouble for years, I underwent an operation; in about a year and a half, however, the old trouble came back, and I again consulted a doctor, who after having failed to secure a record of my operation refused to take the case. A few weeks from that time a lady, who was a Christian Science practitioner, came to the house. She read to me from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy; and since I longed to be healed, both spiritually and physically, I began its study in connection with The Christian Science Quarterly and the Bible. Through the understanding of Truth I have been healed of bowel disorder of eighteen years' standing, rheumatism, sick headache, female trouble, and colds, also burns caused by a coal gas explosion in a stove, and sprained ankle.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude for all these blessings. I am very grateful for having had the benefit of class instruction, which helps me to help others, and enables me to feel a deeper love for Mrs. Eddy, who through her faithfulness gave the world a demonstrable religion.

Mrs. Catherine Tewksbury, Washington, Kan.

Something over twelve years ago I heard of a person who had been healed of an eye trouble through Christian Science. I had worn glasses for seventeen years. Material means of relief had been tested since childhood and found wanting, and I thought if one person could be healed through Christian Science, another could be. I therefore sought a practitioner, who gave me a treatment, during which I knew without doubt that I was healed: the pain of years' duration left. I was told to get and read Science and Health. That seemed impossible, but I obeyed, and on the way home removed my glasses, declaring I was healed. I began to read and after a couple of hours was able to read clearly the first page in the chapter on Prayer. Only those who have had similar experiences can know the wonderful joy I experienced at this freedom from bondage. I was able to study night and day. At times it seemed as though the complete manifestation was slow, but I now rejoice in perfect healing.

Since then the proofs of God's healing power have been many and beautiful, and I am grateful for the light of Truth which has come through Christian Science. Words fail to express what this teaching means to me. I am grateful for all the wonderful help I have had from our Leader's works, and for my many Christian Science friends.

Miss Edith M. Hornbeck, Chester, Conn.

It is with a deep sense of gratitude that I testify to the permanent healing of my daughter, which to us was most wonderful, as the mortal law of blindness had been pronounced upon her by the physician. Her healing has brought us, a family of five, all into Christian Science. We have depended upon it for over twelve years and have had numerous beautiful healings, bringing us into a higher sense of spiritual living and blessedness. It has proved a practical religion, revealing the omnipotence of God. I am so thankful to God and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this glorious truth.

Mrs. Mary C. Hornbeck.

The difficulty in giving a testimony of benefits received through Christian Science is in knowing where to begin and where to stop, for Christian Scientists have so much for which to be grateful. Three years ago I became interested in this wonderful explanation of Christ's teachings through the evidence of its truth as borne in on my thought by a friend's healing of tubercular disease in an advanced stage. I did not begin the study for physical healing, but from a desire to seek and know the truth; and my thought has been greatly changed, so that I am learning to see life from a spiritual viewpoint. Whereas my children and I were continually experiencing illnesses, we are now manifesting almost perfect health; whereas our supply was apparently very limited, we now have more in a material way, as the result of knowing that God is the source of all good. I have learned to reflect love toward those who illtreat me and thus bring about a right attitude on their part.

The healing that stands out most clearly in my recollection, occurred over two years ago when I was suffering from all the distressing symptoms of influenza. Seeming too ill to help myself, I was treated by the friend whose healing I have mentioned. The result to mortal sense was wonderful, for within half an hour my suffering ceased, and only a sense of weakness remained. The next morning I went twenty miles to spend the day with my sister, while in years past I used to be ill for a week or two with this trouble, from which I had suffered many times. I have not had an attack since.

I thank God that I have been led to this exposition of Christ's teachings, as taught by Mrs. Eddy.

Mrs. Mary Caldwell Laurens, Pleasantville, N. Y.

On two occasions, three years apart, I met with an accident which resulted in broken ribs, but was entirely healed through Christian Science. One of my boys swallowed a large, open safety pin, but the truth was declared for him, and in about ten minutes he had thrown up the pin and was all right. When three years old this boy broke his collar bone, but no bandages were applied and in due time he was healed through the power of Truth. I am very grateful for Christian Science.—Arthur Brockman, Anita, Iowa.

From the Press

[Rt. Rev. Charles D. Williams, D.D., in The Living Church]

I am convinced that we are living to-day in one of those spiritual crises of history which constitute a coming of the Lord. We are witnessing to-day an advent of Christ and a day of judgment. If a Hebrew prophet were reincarnated to-day he would describe the present world situation in glowing apocalyptic language. He would see the Lord descending upon the clouds. He would hear a voice from the skies, saying, "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, Yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain." He would see kings and sovereigns, governments and dynasties, Kulturs and civilizations, tottering and falling that amidst their ruins a new sovereignty, a new and celestial civilization, the kingdom of God, might arise. He would see the judgment seat and the books opened,—and the Lord upon His throne that He might try the ways of men and of empires.

[Dr. James A. Ludlow in Record of Christian Work]

The war has thrust before the popular mind new problems, overwhelming in their vastness, unyielding in their difficulties, bewildering in their multiplicity. These problems challenge many of our accepted views, political, social, and religious. After the war there must be a reorganization of society, and a similar reformulation of our current ideas. Wise men are waiting for the smoke to drift off the battle fields.

[A. J. G. Seaton in The Methodist Recorder]

The world is unquestionably improving, but how slowly! One reason why that improvement has been so slow is that we have anticipated the coming of the kingdom of God in the very distant future. If ever we have dreamed of an ideal world, it has been so far down the ages, and so long after we are dead, that we have not felt the necessity of working hard for its establishment.

[Drs. Smyth and Ainslie in an appeal "To Our Fellow-Believers in All Churches"]

The crisis of Christianity requires the subordination of all things divisive. . . . Bishops, clergymen, laymen, shall we loiter in the way, disputing about many things, when in the suffering of the world our Lord is crucified afresh for the sin of modern civilization? The hour commands unity. By some decisive act our faith in it should be made fact.

Poems of Mary Baker Eddy

"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, and other prose writings of the same author, are being recognized more and more each day for what may be considered their "literary value." This recognition is coming from those who do not yet understand Christian Science, and despite the fact that in these prose writings the capitalization, punctuation, style, diction, and etymology are almost as radical as the treatment of metaphysics.

Had Mrs. Eddy never written anything, however, but the poems and hymns included in the volume entitled "Poems," she would have established a lasting literary reputation.

To the Christian Scientist,—and some day it will be to the world,—these writings and her other great poetical work, "Christ and Christmas," are of the utmost metaphysical significance in addition to their literary value.

The deep prophecy in "The United States to Great Britain" (Poems, page 10), written a number of years ago, is now being fulfilled.

Perhaps even deeper import is seen in the poem, "To the Old Year—1865" (Poems, page 26), when it is recalled that this composition was published on the first day of the year in which Mrs. Eddy discovered Christian Science.

Her other poems in this volume, and perhaps most of all the book "Christ and Christmas," are marvelous storehouses of hidden prophecy, while her hymns are of the utmost daily help in guiding "all right desires in their passage from sense to Soul" (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, page 566).

"Poems" and "Christ and Christmas," by Mary Baker Eddy, may be read or purchased at Christian Science Reading Rooms throughout the world.

The Ever Present Healing Christ

ROBERT NALL

IT was Mrs. Eddy's deep conviction of the presence of the indwelling Christ, won through travail of sense, which led her to testify by her works that spiritual power, the only panacea for the sin and anguish of the world, is in exact proportion to daily submission to and acknowledgment of "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," which rises above and overrules material sense. For it is true, as we come to know concurrently with our spiritual awakening, that the false human sense can never discern the Christ, the supreme manifestation of the divine allness. More and more does the appeal come to us to recognize always the incorporeal Truth if we would know our individual standing in the kingdom of heaven, and be reflections through whom Love may do its redemptive work in the hearts of humanity. This is the priceless asset which we have in Christian Science, to be used at this moment for the instantaneous and sure destruction of error.

The future has nothing for any one of us that the present does not contain. The expectation of mere future good is a species of will-o'-the-wisp that may beguile us into the drowsiness and inactivity of mortal sense, and leave us stranded at the door of the castle of indolence. Such a mental condition is, of course, the precursor of the belief that credits evil with the power to withhold the good of to-day. But more than that, if not aroused in time some are so tossed to and fro between the sorrow of having missed the good in the past and the fear that they cannot attain what is promised in the days to come, that the victory, the peace, and the health of this moment are hidden. We may ask ourselves, in words familiar to all lovers of our Hymnal (p. 12), "Why search the future and the past?" We shall have conquered a great error when we are practically cognizant of the truth expressed in the line, "Beneath thy feet, Life's pearl is cast." Does not the pearl here mentioned typify the Christ-idea, whose coming to each one of us means the purification of thought, the cleansing of the mental home, and the substitution for all merely mortal and physical order of that harmony which follows conquest over the flesh.

As we read that touching incident recorded by our Leader on pages 179–180 of "Miscellaneous Writings," when, after being healed in what seemed to be a miraculous way, she was able to declare that Christ had never left earth, for "Christ is Truth, and Truth is always here,—the impersonal Saviour," we shall remember that this is the fulfillment of the promise that Christ Jesus himself made. The royal commission to his followers to teach and observe all things that he had commanded them was followed by the declaration, "And, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." There need be no confusion of thought here. The moment we have entered upon the experience of the new birth,—the coming to us of the Christ,—that moment we are endowed with power from on high. The personal Jesus is our great exemplar; the Christ is to us the divine idea of God. As Mrs. Eddy says in her article entitled "A Christmas Sermon," which begins on page 161 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "The Science of Christianity, that has appeared in the ripeness of time, reveals the incorporeal Christ; and this will continue to be seen more clearly until it be acknowledged, understood,—and the Saviour, which is Truth, be comprehended."

The unfoldment of this truth is the beginning of a new era. It reveals the possibilities of redemption from all evil, and brings comfort and hope where hitherto there has been a darkened outlook; and was there ever a period in human history when this comfort and hope were more needed than to-day? To the physical sufferer, bowed down with the thought that the only avenue of relief is death, the uplifting from the sense dream to the knowledge that Christ, the Savior, the revelation of God, is still here to fulfill his divine mission, is a bright ray of promise that floods the heart with gratitude and joy. "Oh, if I had only known years ago that Christ still heals the sick, what suffering I would have escaped," was the half piteous, half joyous cry of one who had experienced the divine touch. And the appalling fact is that his mental condition, up to the time of his deliverance, is typical of that of masses of people who fail to recognize that divine Love is waiting to destroy in human consciousness every erroneous concept that is productive of sin, suffering, and death. The Master himself said on one occasion, "Ye will not come to me, that ye might have life." Again he said, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Christian Science is, however, answering this question in a wonderful way through those who reach, in the study and practice of this truth taught by Mrs. Eddy, the understanding of the ever present Christ.

This thought should be enough to stir in Christian Scientists an intensified desire so to guard the Christ-idea born in them, that they will be mighty through divine Principle, God, in the pulling down of the "strong holds" of ignorance, prejudice, misconception, and sin. Let us not cherish the belief that this is the special mission of a few. We are all practitioners and teachers if we are demonstrating Christ, Truth, aright. If it is to us life, purifying the thought and spiritualizing the understanding; if it is the renunciation of material self and sense, and a growing realization of our spiritual relation to God, associated with a denial of any other cause and creator,—any other power than infinite Love,—we shall then draw suffering and sorrowing ones to the Savior, Christ, Truth. Those who are thus called to experience the healing power of Truth will in turn help others to find the way marked out by our Master and revealed anew in Christian Science.

Much of our strength and encouragement lies in this: that we have not to deal with or to recommend mere human theories, but spiritual facts. We have forever set aside all speculation. We are not concerned about this or that theological dictum, nor with the many and confusing interpretations of the Scriptures. Our feet are planted firmly and forever on the rock, Christ, Truth, whence we can, in the measure of our consecration, our waiting upon God, our listening for the divine voice, so radiate the Spirit of truth that there will come showers of blessings. If by just touching the hem of Christ's garment we can be physically healed, what must that healing be which comes from possessing the Christ-spirit in its wholeness?

"Already filled"

RUTH INGRAHAM

THE statement is made with regard to conditions observed in the realm of physics that "nature abhors a vacuum." Mrs. Eddy, however, makes the absolute, metaphysical statement in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 346), "There are no vacuums." Speaking with special reference to the loss of personal friendships, she says (p. 266), "This seeming vacuum is already filled with divine Love." Since God is omnipotence and omnipresence, there can be no place unfilled by His presence and the activity of His ideas. This can be proved in very practical ways, and stated in terms of present understanding and of present need.

At one time the income of a student of Christian Science seemed to depend upon returns from renting the rooms in her large house. These had been vacant, or only transiently occupied, and in her need she called on a friend for help with the problem. Together they talked it over and endeavored to realize God's omnipresence, knowing there could be no idleness, no waste of labor or of time, no loss or lack of true substance and activity where infinite Mind is, since every place is peopled with divine ideas, about the Father's business. Within a few days the rooms had all been taken, and by a very desirable class of tenants.

Many months later the condition recurred, and the truth was again declared; but this time the rooms remained empty, and both students were at a loss to understand why. It presently developed, however, that the time had come for the householder to leave the work of Martha for that of Mary. The student rented the house to another, took up her residence in a neighboring city, and entered into the practice of Christian Science. It thus became evident that the place which demanded her was filled, through the activity of divine Love; and, again, there was the right one to fill the place she was ready to relinquish. This experience was very instructive to those who had a part in it, and is very cheering to many who are tempted to suffer a sense of disappointment in thinking their demonstration has failed because it is working out in another way than that which they anticipated. The word of Truth, scientifically declared, never fails. Some wrong condition is always changed, and usually more than we ask or think is provided. "In due season we shall reap, if we faint not," said Paul.

A home maker was once struggling, against what seemed heavy odds, to restore a long neglected garden. The destroyer and "the devourer" were much in evidence. Continuous efforts, both mental and manual, had not met the adverse conditions, much less produced the result so greatly desired. One day the discouraged student awoke to the fact that she had fallen into the habit of looking for the things she wished to overcome more than for the fruits of her labor. She looked daily for what was blighted and faded, for destructive insects, for failures here and there. She had taken over the whole care and responsibility of that garden, leaving nothing for divine Love to do, and consequently saw the results of her own troubled and limited thought.

Our textbook teaches us (p. 219) that we should "never affirm concerning the body what we do not wish to have manifested," and this surely applies to environment as well. Awakened to her mistake, the student declared that the world and all therein is governed by divine Love and law, knowing that the Mind which made the plant "before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew," is manifested in divine ideas, forms of beauty, useful and indestructible. Knowing that there are no failures in Mind, she could see only Love and Life, and all God's ideas already perfect. The student was now released from her own anxious sense of caretaking, and began at once to enjoy the flowers, with a grateful appreciation not felt before. Almost immediately people began to remark upon the beauty of her garden, and the wonderful change that had been wrought in what had been so long neglected and unfruitful. When the time came to leave this home for one more permanent, the house was rented in advance of her going, to flower lovers who had chosen it because of the beautiful garden.

Again, a Christian Scientist was facing a day whose void seemed filled only with an aching sense of bereavement, and the certainty of impending loss yet harder to bear. It was a day whose sad necessities demanded interviews and adjustments which could not be avoided, and which would at every turn emphasize the mortal sense of desolation and sorrow. Oblivion was the only thing that mortal mind could pray for,—surcease from itself,—but spiritual sense even now whispered our Leader's words, "This seeming vacuum is already filled with divine Love." Help was asked in Christian Science, and the day that loomed so gray and void of light unfolded in God's wonderful way. The interviews which in anticipation seemed so painful, proved opportunities to break the bread of Life for those yet more famished; the adjustments fraught with so many possibilities of misunderstanding were made harmonious under the guidance of the one Mind. Every one was blessed, every one to some degree comforted. In the realm of Spirit, where God's children have ever dwelt, shall ever dwell, how truly can it be said that there is no vacuum, no place where Love is not!

Fruits of Obedience

THORWALD SIEGFRIED

THE fact that the by-laws of The Mother Church, contained in the Church Manual, constitute a record of the answers to Mrs. Eddy's prayers for guidance in her direction of the Christian Science movement, was stated in a recent number of the Christian Science Sentinel. This was proved to the writer, shortly after beginning a study of the Manual, by the beneficent results which followed obedience to its simple, yet fundamental, directions.

To take but a single example: Article VIII, Section 5, provides that "the prayers in Christian Science churches shall be offered for the congregations collectively and exclusively." This, from a wholly theoretical point of view, seemed to be a rule without a reason; nevertheless, having profited by obedience to other rules, it was not long until the writer made the experiment of faith, and obeyed its provisions. Obedience required that the fervent desires for self, anxieties about loved ones, and perplexities about problems embracing all humanity, when handled in prayer while in church, should be considered in terms that would be for the congregation. If the problem was one of personal lack, the answering truth must be the admission that in God's realm the congregation was infinitely supplied with good. Anxious fears for personal friends are ruled out, in church, by the "perfect love" for the entire congregation as a divine idea, which casts out fear. Speculative questions on political matters are brought into a practical scope by the necessity of becoming prayerfully willing to do as well by the congregation, at least for the hour, as our social ideals demand for all mankind alike.

Then came the discovery, after one hour's obedience, that the mists of earth had thinned. The personal problem which had weighed so heavily up to the church door, and which this rule, like a shepherd's rod held across the entrance, had barred out, no longer inspired fear, and near friends and far friends were easily left in God's loving care instead of being cumbered with officious and anxious meddling; in short, there was realized a definite measure of what is promised in Samuel Longfellow's poem, as sung in Christian Science churches (Hymnal, p. 4):—

> The freer step, the fuller breath,
> The wide horizon's grander view,
> The sense of Life that knows no death,—
> The Life that maketh all things new.

This experience was lovingly recalled many times, as an evidence of the clear vision of our revered Leader in analyzing and correcting the leading errors in human thought. However, another experience was needed to press home the point that one hour's obeying must be expanded into habitual conformity to divine law, even with respect to church by-laws, and the lesson was taught with this same section as a text. A definite problem had arisen in connection with the church services, due to intermittent coughing on the part of a considerable number of the attendants. The annoyance made a demand upon every alert Scientist to remain conscious, in spite of all clamorous contradictions, of that perfect harmony which, in churches as in numbers, attests their truthful imaging of Principle. It may have been with a sense of irritation even that these earnest Scientists wondered why it did not cease, in the face of prayerful, silent rebukes. Then one Sunday morning there came to the writer, without warning, the suggestion that he too must play the objectionable part of a disturber; he endeavored to recall the working out of truth in which, once before, he thought he had settled for himself the fact that the real man has no need to cough, because he reflects the harmony of divine Mind, Truth; but it seemed to avail little, and the objectionable noise came forth.

During the following week the matter was pondered more than once, without finding an answer, and when Sunday came again the suggestion of coughing came also. Then it was that prayers for self, in church, were finally dispensed with; they had availed nothing the week before, they promised nothing now; and the cough vanished, unuttered, when a humble and renewed willingness to obey the Manual demanded that prayer for personal release from coughing should also be lifted to where it could be for the congregation, instead of for self.

The victory of that day was more than one over an apparently trivial annoyance; it proved that simple obedience to spiritual law robs the subtlety of error of all power to confuse or mislead one. In a room containing one chair and one light the shadow cast by the chair is comparatively simple. Adding successive lights in various parts of the room, while it lessens the intensity of the shadows, increases both their number and the complexity of the figures they form. Using this metaphor for all human experience, it is plain that increasing subtlety of shadow is only proof of progress, and calls for persistence in gaining more light, until, in its omnipresence, we shall understand with John "that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all."

The light which must blaze in our thought until it blots out all the shadows, however faint or complex, that may seem to dog the footsteps of progress in Christian Science church work, is the fact stated by Mrs. Eddy in a paragraph having the marginal note "Help and Discipline" on page 57 of Science and Health: "Love enriches the nature, enlarging, purifying, and elevating it." On page 583 of the same book, the real, actual church is defined as "the structure of Truth and Love." Then obviously, as effect follows cause, a limited, personal thought, being out of place in a church working out the Science of Christianity, would be likely to result in inharmony, and the corrective presence of the by-law in the Manual, with which this article deals, is equivalent to the quod erat demonstrandum of the geometer or the mathematician,—it reveals to the willing disciple Principle, Life, as premise; the victory of good over evil, as argument; and divine harmony, as conclusion. And it demands of him, as in the case in every truly scientific work, but one thing,—intelligent obedience; it may be a doubting and experimental obedience at the beginning, but even that suffices. "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Daily Supplies

MANIE DONA SCOFFERN

ON many occasions the writer has been able to use the statement on page 307 of "Miscellaneous Writings" where Mrs. Eddy says, "God gives you His spiritual ideas, and in turn, they give you daily supplies." In a recent application of this thought to a financial problem, the question presented itself: For what purpose does God give His spiritual ideas? Surely He does not give them in order that we may make His ideas finite by limiting them so as to serve our own selfish interests, as we are sometimes prone to attempt to do even after we discern the futility of trying to pile up matter. How often we hear the remark, "Well, I have been trying to know that God is the source of my supply, but still there does not appear to be any improvement in my financial affairs." Usually the trouble is that the one listening to and voicing such an argument, is so blinded by selfish, material demands that he has not let go of mammon sufficiently to permit God's spiritual ideas to govern his thinking.

It is absurd to think that we can lay hold of these spiritual ideas while we entertain the thought of commercializing them. The spiritual ideas of to-day have the same source and nature as those concerning which Jesus said, "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." They reveal to us the unity which exists between God and man, and thus convince us of the folly of believing that man is separated from aught that he really needs, and that he must struggle to gain the supply of those needs. Christian Science cannot be used to bring us merely commercial success any more than it can be used to make us merely healthy animals. Its office is to make us less commercial and less animal. Neither supply nor health is given that we may be at ease in materiality and indulge animal propensities, false appetites, extravagance, vanity, laziness, or waste, but that we may be alert to glorify a loving Father and manifest harmony. Health is gained in the proportion that God is recognized as the only Life, and man as the reflection of this perfect, harmonious Life; so supply is made manifest in the proportion that God is recognized as the only substance, and man as the reflection of substance.

In the Manual of The Mother Church (Art. XXIV, Sect. 5), under the heading "God's Requirement," Mrs. Eddy says, "God requires wisdom, economy, and brotherly love to characterize all the proceedings of the members of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist." If "God requires wisdom, economy, and brotherly love," these are the things that we are to strive diligently to bring out in all our affairs, and they surely are contained in the spiritual ideas which God gives. We cannot expect God's law to lift us above a business problem or sense of lack which is the result of lack of consideration for others, indolence, pride, miserliness, greed, avarice, dishonesty, or fear, unless we are willing to apply divine law to the elimination of these false standards from our thinking. When these are corrected we have obeyed God's requirements, and the result must be correct, as certainly as mathematical results are correct when the basic law of mathematics has been adhered to. Law and order characterize all God's work, and should characterize ours as His image and likeness; therefore law and order are natural and normal to man.

"Radical reliance"

ARA BELLE PERRYMAN

IN Christian Science we are often reminded that we live in perpetual nearness to God, and unnoticed opportunities for proving the presence and power of divine Love are all about us. Our daily desire and prayer should be that we may see and appropriate these opportunities.

This was impressed upon the writer in the following incident. Before and during the closing weeks of a large high school, conscientious study and thought had been given by her to know that Truth would support and guide in all the emergencies incident to the seemingly arduous days and hours. At noon one day, during examination, it was decided to go to the Christian Science reading rooms for the short rest hour, rather than spend it in the usual way in the rest room at school, and on going downstairs the halls were found full of pupils returning books to the library, passing and repassing from examination rooms. A little girl not known to the writer stood by the staircase. She replied so listlessly to the "Good-morning" that there came an impulse to speak further with her. "Were your examinations difficult?" the teacher asked. "I did not have to take any examinations," was the reply. This was an honor in the school, but the child's face showed no pleasure in the fact. Persistence in talking to her caused her to burst into tears. She then said that she had lost a twenty-dollar bill and dreaded to go home. The teacher was startled and took her to the office of the all too busy principal, where they heard her story.

Before starting to school to return her books that morning the girl had been intrusted by her mother with a twenty-dollar bill with which to pay the rent. Because she was only fourteen years old and had never transacted any business, the mother had given careful instructions, and had herself folded the bill tightly and placed it in the bottom of the purse. When the girl came to school she found a long line of pupils waiting in the library, so went to town to attend to the business matter first. She stopped at a bookstore to make a small purchase, went to another store on an errand, then to the office to pay the rent, but upon opening her purse she found that the bill was not there. She hurried back to both stores and told of her loss, the clerks promising to let her know if the money was found. She then came to school and searched diligently, but without finding the bill.

The tired lines on the face of the principal deepened; he could only say he hoped the money would be found and returned. He seemed relieved, however, when the teacher offered to go down town with the little girl and see the clerks where she had traded. In walking through the park with the sobbing girl the teacher's feeling of sympathy and helplessness increased; then like a flash came the inspirational thought that this was a case where a knowledge of Christian Science should be available. Truth said: You believe in "the three great verities of Spirit, omnipotence, omnipresence, omniscience,—Spirit possessing all power, filling all space, constituting all Science" (Science and Health, p. 109), why not prove them now? Having never tried to help one who was not acquainted with Christian Science, there was a moment of hesitation and a silent prayer for guidance. The teacher then took the child's arm and quietly but decisively declared that as this money belonged to her, God would not allow it to be lost; that although we did not know where it was, God, divine Mind, knows all things, and that we would worry no more but go on and find it.

Mentally declaring at every step that God is Love and that Love knows only harmony, that Spirit possesses all power, fills all space, and audibly reassuring the girl, I reached the first store. The clerk courteously told us the money had not been found. Repeating mentally that God is Love, we walked on. I asked her if she would go with me to the Christian Science reading rooms for a few moments of rest and quiet thought. "Yes," she replied, "but I'd like to go to the other store first." We then went to the large store, which was full of hurrying people. I corrected a thought of the hopelessness of finding anything in that crowd, by mentally declaring that God is everywhere, so we pushed our way to the place where the purchase had been made. The kind clerk came from behind the counter and expressed sympathy for the loss, and while she was speaking the girl gave a little cry of joy, took a step forward, and picked up from the floor her lost money, still tightly folded. It had lain there two hours.

This was pronounced a miracle by the clerk, the principal, and others who knew of it, but to the writer it was the divinely natural result of the realization of human helplessness and the utilization of the presence and power of Truth. The joy and gratitude of that hour will always be remembered and will be an incentive to "radical reliance on Truth" (Science and Health, p. 167). It was very clear that we had together been recipients of God's love and had experienced direct guidance. The special lesson to the writer was that of radical reliance on omniscient divine Love. With the realization of human inability, and that only God could guide in the right direction, came the peaceful realization that there could be no loss, and although we did not understand it at the time, we walked direct to where the missing money was waiting for the owner.

Illusions Dispelled

NATHAN S. DILS

SEVERAL years ago I was one of a small party camped in the mountains in the winter time. One morning we found everything enveloped in thick, whirling fog. Objects but a few yards distant were hid from view by it, while those just within the range of vision appeared in strange, changing shapes. Expecting the fog to lift soon, we started on a short trip. It was interesting to watch the changing of the grotesque shapes that the objects we passed seemed to assume when they were within the range of vision. A fierce looking shadowy shape would change to a snow crowned stump, a rock, or a bunch of brush as we approached it, and a towering, gesturing giant would prove to be a tree or a snag.

Digitized by Google

After we had walked for some time we came into bright sunshine. We reached the top of a hill that was above the fog, where we found ourselves under a cloudless sky, the sun shining brightly. While in the fog, the only object visible was the top of a hill about a mile distant on which there were a number of pine trees. It looked like an isle in a tropical sea with its grove of palm trees, while all around, the fog was rolling and tumbling in a way which would have been terrifying if we had not known it had no power to harm.

This experience furnishes a good illustration of an important chapter in my life. For a number of years before coming into Christian Science I wandered in a mist of personal sense, frightened by menacing thought pictures. It was said that heart action was not right; the doctor, an old friend, looked very grave when he finished his examination and told me things which did not bring peace of mind. There was also chronic stomach and liver trouble, as well as a number of minor ailments. Several doctors were consulted, and much medicine was taken; but I continued to grow worse, and thought man's dominion, recorded in the first chapter of Genesis, was a delusion.

At last a Christian Science practitioner showed me how to begin to climb the hill of spiritual understanding. I commenced this ascent and found as I advanced that these ailments were no more terrifying, when viewed in the light of Truth, than were the stumps, trees, and rocks which had looked so uncanny in the fog. When I began to understand their nothingness and something of the allness of God, good, their seeming power over me ceased, and I was healed of my illnesses. Then I began to experience in a degree man's God-given dominion.

The change from belief to understanding is making the passage from sense to Soul very interesting, and the right mental effort brings peace and health. On this journey the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, are faithful guides that show how every difficulty can be surmounted, how every foe can be vanquished, how every danger may be averted. All the authorized Christian Science literature is indispensable. The Monitor brings daily a clean account of the world's important doings, so written that it will help to promote right thinking on every subject found therein; the monthly and weekly messages in the Journal and Sentinel help in the understanding and working out of our daily problems; the daily study of the Lesson-Sermons prepares us for our Sunday feast. All are worth many times their cost, if we value spiritual understanding and the peace and health it brings and preserves. Love and gratitude to Mrs. Eddy is but natural when we realize how fearlessly she loved her way through the world's hatred of Truth, in order that all might share in the blessings resulting from the discovery she named Christian Science.

Evensong

A. CELIA PRATT

THE music of a gentle sea
Upon a lonely strand,
Soft purple of a hazy dusk
Enfolding sea and land;
Above, a tiny star or two
Bring peace to me—and you,
Whose home lights shine across the bay—
All part of Love's great plan.
For the Mind that rules the sky and sea
Gives harmony to man.

Selected Articles

["Liberty and License"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Feb. 9, 1918]

The human mind, having no knowledge of Principle, has no positive criterion by means of which it can scientifically separate good from evil. It is, in other words, ignorant of law, and so is incapable of judging righteous judgment. Thus it separates the tares from the wheat by human decisions which it terms moral or state laws, but which are proved not to be law by the exceedingly simple fact that they change or vary from decade to decade, or as frontiers are crossed. Three and a half centuries ago men and women were being burned as heretics in England; a couple of centuries ago witches were being hanged in Salem. To-day polygamy is legal and customary in the East, but in the West indulgence in it makes a man a criminal. What is it then that separates the reign of "Bloody" Mary from that of George V, or the Massachusetts of William of Orange from that of Woodrow Wilson? Principle has not changed, law cannot change, God remains God. The difference, then, is simple but subtle. It is that men have learned in a measure that liberty is not license, and are learning, however unwillingly, the further lesson that where there is license there is no liberty. In a word, that license is slavery.

In the twilight of history, when Romulus and Remus were supposed to have been suckled by a wolf, and when the human being was actually little better than the brute, license was practically regarded as a synonym for liberty. What separated Cæsar, in his great palace on the Palatine, from the coppersmiths and cobblers, hammering and sewing in the dark little shops round the Forum, was the ability of the one to do as he pleased, and the necessity of the others to do as they were bidden. The gulf between Herod, building his great pleasure house at Capernaum, and the fishermen, straining at their oars out on the great lake, or the shepherds watching their sheep under the stars on the hills of Judah, was the opportunity of the first to gratify without restriction his sensual appetites, and the compulsion of the others to eat the bread and drink the water of poverty and toil. Pilate put the whole position, in all its naked selfishness and brutality, to Jesus, when he demanded, with half angry, half surprised curiosity, "Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?" and was rendered speechless by Jesus' reply, which he could not confute, and yet did not in the least understand, "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above."

Behind those words, so mystical to the sensual tyrant, lay the simple statement of scientific Christianity, of Truth, the statement that real power and consequently liberty, was summed up in the laying down of license, and in the consequent realization of the liberty of the sons of God. "The likeness of God," Mrs. Eddy writes on page 315 of Science and Health, "we lose sight of through sin, which beclouds the spiritual sense of Truth; and we realize this likeness only when we subdue sin and prove man's heritage, the liberty of the sons of God." This realization was first achieved, no matter in how slight a degree, and this proof, no matter how feebly, was first given, by the patriarch Abraham. And for the purpose of the Bible, the purpose of illustration, it matters nothing at all whether Abraham was merely the type of the friend of God, or whether he was the first human being who made himself the friend of God, or obedient to Principle, in a degree sufficient to enable him to walk so far, at any rate, with God, as to put aside, in a measure, his self-will or love of license, and so gain that freedom from the flesh which is the only true liberty.

What the story of Abraham means is something very simple. He had come with his father, Terah, and his wife, Sarai, to live in Haran, the Babylonian city, high up the Bĕlikh as it rolls southward into the Euphrates. Here was the seat of the worship of Sin, the Assyrian moon god, with all its bestial rites, and here God spoke to the patriarch. Here, in other words, in the midst of the licentious ceremonies which were to be spread over the civilized earth in the name of Astarte, of Ishtar, or of Venus, Abraham got his first glimpse of Principle, which showed him that indulgence in license, in the lusts of the flesh, ultimates in sin, disease, and death. He realized that if he abandoned himself to this license, he would become the prisoner of the flesh, but that if, on the other hand, he abandoned this license, he would begin to gain that liberty which is freedom from the flesh. Therefore, he shook the dust of license off his feet, at the gates of Haran, at the very feet of the zikkurats, and went out from his country, and his kindred, and his father's house, and crossed the great river, the river Euphrates, the name of which Mrs. Eddy has defined, on page 585 of Science and Health, in the words, "Divine Science encompassing the universe and man; the true idea of God; a type of the glory which is to come; metaphysics taking the place of physics; the reign of righteousness."

Centuries later there came a man who had made the crossing of this mental Euphrates, this dividing line between license and liberty, far more effectually than Abraham, and yet who said of Abraham, "Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day: and he saw it, and was glad." Jesus the Christ realized how, in the streets of Haran, in the very midst of the scenes of license which had accompanied the worship of the zikkurat, Abraham had dimly seen the Christ, or Truth, and in that first dim glimpse had found the spiritual hammer which was to strike from off him the heaviest fetters of license, and so enable him to seek, in the land of promise, the liberty of the sons of God.

This vision of the Christ, which to the end remained to Abraham something of a glorious ideal, was reduced to terms of proof, or demonstration, by Jesus the Christ, when, in the temptations in the wilderness, he put the flesh, the world, and the devil under his feet, as the preliminary to showing to the world that liberty is the very opposite of license, that it is, indeed, entire freedom from the passions of the physical senses, and from the limitations of the flesh. This liberty frees a man from sickness and death, and shows him how he may heal the sick and raise the dead, or how he may annihilate matter as Jesus did when he fed the multitudes and walked upon the lake. But it can be won only in the way Abraham strove to walk, and as Jesus of Nazareth did walk, in the path of the Christ, which leads over the Euphrates into the promised land. Therefore, surely, was it that Mrs. Eddy wrote, on page 267 of Science and Health, "The robes of Spirit are 'white and glistering,' like the raiment of Christ. Even in this world, therefore, 'let thy garments be always white.' 'Blessed is the man that endureth [overcometh] temptation: for when he is tried, [proved faithful], he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him.'"

[Editorial in Ripon (Cal.) Record]

Our attention has been called to a recent article, written by Mr. Peter V. Ross of the San Francisco bar, in which he complains of the growing tendency of the medical profession to invade our public schools and take any and all children therein found who may have a presumed physical defect, and attempt to correct it. This may be done with the best possible intention on the part of these professional gentlemen, and yet reason would inject a serious objection to such practice. In the first place, these gentlemen are not infallible; they may not have made a proper diagnosis before picking up the knife, saw, or hammer. Another objection may be urged,—that if done at all, it should be done in the privacy of the home and with the knowledge and consent of the parents.

The greatest objection, however, to our mind would be that our best surgeons are busy with their own practices; hence, the little, helpless tots would naturally fall into the hands of those less skilled, and who have a reputation to make and none to lose. Having no children of our own in school we are in the clear; but if we had, we feel sure that we would kick like blazes should some such thing happen without our consent. Young America is too precious, far too valuable, to be furnished as raw material to be worked over by some one of doubtful ability. Then, again, the system is all wrong, and should be prohibited.

[S. T. Downs in Elkhart (Ind.) Truth]

A revivalist, in referring to Christian Science recently, expressed his prejudice against it in unqualified terms. "But," continued the critic, "it is sin that causes disease, and if there were no sin there would be no sickness." In this reference to sin and disease he stated exactly what Christian Science teaches.

Without any thought of denying our brother the right to think of Christian Science as he pleases, I should like to call attention to the fact that his inconsistent charge of humbug against those who heal the sick by spiritual means is not new. It was made against the great Master, when the Jews accused him of casting out devils through Beelzebub. However, it is an established fact that that which heals sin and the effects of sin after the manner of Christ Jesus could not be humbug. The fact is attested by thousands upon thousands of voluntary testimonies, that Christian Science is freeing the slave of false appetite and lifting him into a life of health and usefulness; it is causing those who have followed after sin and the false pleasures of the carnal mind to strive to be more godlike; and it is preaching the gospel of love and righteousness to all mankind, and healing all manner of disease as "signs following," just as the great Master commanded.

[Willard J. Welch in Burlington (Iowa) Hawk-Eye]

Christian Science does not condemn the medical profession. Mrs. Eddy tells us on page 444 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," the Christian Science textbook: "Students are advised by the author to be charitable and kind, not only towards differing forms of religion and medicine, but to those who hold these differing opinions. Let us be faithful in pointing the way through Christ, as we understand it, but let us also be careful always to 'judge righteous judgment,' and never to condemn rashly." The Christian Science Monitor purposes, as stated by its Founder, Mrs. Eddy, in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," on page 353, "to injure no man, but to bless all mankind." It attacks no man nor any man's belief. It is an imposition on the public to imply that articles in the Monitor upholding medical freedom are attacks on the medical profession. The Monitor stands for the rights of the individual against every form of tyranny, autocracy, plutocracy, or any other curtailment of a man's freedom so long as it does not interfere with the rights of others. The articles mentioned by a correspondent are all exposés of the tendency of organized medicine to force upon individuals through legislation or otherwise the dogmas and practices of one school of medicine to the exclusion of all others. This attitude of protest is shared by thousands of thinking people who know nothing of Christian Science, but who do know that "eternal vigilance" is the price of liberty in every walk of life.

The Monitor deplores and condemns the monopolistic ideas of self-interest and greed, all abuses of power through coercion, whether social, legal, or medical. It calls attention to the present danger in this direction not only in medicine but in the industries and in politics. It does all this in the interest of no one special class or sect, but for the welfare of all mankind. Far from attacking anyone or anything, Christian Scientists look for and expect to find "sermons in stones, and good in every thing." They credit the medical profession with what good it has done. They rejoice in all good. There is neither justice nor wisdom in wholesale condemnation of a system still helpful to and desired by a large proportion of humanity. Christian Scientists do not believe in the methods of the medical profession, but they extend to all men the same freedom of thought they ask for themselves. In knowing they have a better way, they still gladly recognize the right of others to any system of healing they desire. Christian Scientists are not obstructionists, but constructionists. They are not visionists, in the sense of dreamers, but practics, and point to their works, saying with the Master, "Though ye believe not me, believe the works."

[Willis D. McKinstry in Mail and Breeze, Topeka, Kan.]

Christian Science emanates from God, divine Mind; its activity is the operation of spiritual law reiterating the command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." This command is the expression of divine wisdom; it does not admit of any change or alteration to suit the wish or desire of personal opinion; therefore, obedience to it is imperative. Jesus' life and work conformed to this command; thus he said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Through the study of the gospels we learn that the greater portion of the Master's work was one of healing, and it was he who said to all them that believe: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel;" "Heal the sick."

Christian Science reveals the Principle of being as God, divine Life, Truth, and Love. Through a knowledge of the spiritual law of cause and effect, mankind comes into agreement with Principle, God, and thereby finds health and harmony, the reality of existence. A failure to receive help and healing through Christian Science only indicates the great need of a fuller understanding of God's law, and its application to the needs of humanity. Christian Science is not a new religion; it is but the fulfillment of Jesus' prophecy, and for the proof of its teachings it offers its healing work. "The tree is known by his fruit."

Our critic, the doctor, has most frankly told us that the practice of medicine is not a science: that is, it is not based upon a fundamental truth; for he says, "The sensible physician nowadays prefers to prescribe no medicine, unless for a specific purpose, and then as little as possible." Thus we see in the practice of medicine, there is not a specific remedy for a specific ill. Again the doctor gives expression to a vital truth when he says, "Anyone who will cease to fear illness and hopefully grasp for health gives his natural forces a better opportunity." Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 276): "Material beliefs and spiritual understanding never mingle. The latter destroys the former. Discord is the nothingness named error. Harmony is the somethingness named Truth."

To eliminate the healing mission of Christianity would be to dethrone the divine commission of the Christ. This healing truth is the "pearl of great price," and through it "the stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner."

Extracts from Letters

"The members of the Christian Science Society of Geneva, Switzerland, assembled in their semiannual general meeting, wish to express their sincere thanks for the good which has been done in French Switzerland through the generous help of the War Relief fund. They especially wish to assure the donors that this aid has been most welcome and deeply appreciated in relieving sufferings which, without it, would in many cases have been unbearable. Several letters have been received by the Geneva committee, asking this committee to forward profound expressions of gratitude to every one who contributed toward this fund. The members of this society take this opportunity to express their thanks to the Board of Directors of The Mother Church for having organized this fund and for the constant thought they give to it."

"I am in receipt of the pamphlet 'Then the Full Grain in the Ear,' issued by the Publishing Society, and I can assure you I very much appreciate the sending of same. With the Monitors and Sentinels you send I am well occupied in my reading, which assists me in getting away from the depressing effects of the present day press, and helps in keeping up the spirits of my companions. The Monitor is the one and only newspaper based on Principle. Again thanks . . ."

"I am very appreciative and grateful for the help afforded my family during these trying times. In the Wednesday evening meetings I have learned that evil has no power and that God never forsakes any of His children; that he who abides under the shadow of the Almighty is protected. My children have the privilege of going to the Sunday school, and we are all greatly appreciating the moral and physical benefits which we are receiving through Christian Science."

"I esteem it my duty to express to you by these lines my deep gratitude for the liberal support you have given me. I have a large family and no income but what I am able to earn from day to day. My needs have been met by the activities of the War Relief committee. What more beautiful proof could have been given me that the love of the Lord takes care of those who trust in Him?"

"We have an embryo society of four members. We desire to express our loyalty to The Mother Church and all of its activities as directed by the one Mind, and to this end we are unanimously agreed in sending you the full contents of our treasury accumulated since our first meeting, November 11, 1917. This amount, less five dollars especially donated for the War Relief fund, we desire evenly distributed between the War Relief fund, The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, and the Real Estate fund."

Courage and Good Humor

A FINE illustration of good humor is given in that story twice told in the New Testament of the woman of Canaan who sought healing for her daughter when Jesus visited the coasts of Tyre and Sidon. One account speaks of her as a Greek, a Syrophenician by birth; but the word Greek which may be translated "Gentile," might indeed be rendered "pagan," and from this epithet may be gathered the attitude of the orthodox Jew toward such a one. This woman was, however, so much in earnest that she was not discouraged by silence as the Master "answered her not a word." Jesus was evidently waiting to test her faith. At last his disciples became impatient because of her importunity, and came up to him saying, "Send her away; for she crieth after us." Evidently their expressions are not fully recorded, for they must have used an epithet usually applied to foreigners. Finally Jesus spoke to the woman as if to call her attention to the epithet which had probably been used, saying, "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs." Had the woman been less loving, less intent on her daughter's welfare, less courageous and kindly, she would have been offended and would have turned away indignant. But instead of giving up her plea, she was enabled through her courage to make the answer an opportunity for a tender and good humored appeal. She assented to the fact that it was not right to throw away the children's bread, but she reminded the Master of the fact that "the dogs under the table eat of the children's crumbs." She was speaking of the puppies, the playmates of the children, fed by their hands. It is as if she said, My appeal is not for myself, a foreigner, but just for a little child. How beautifully Jesus responded to her good humor and trust in good. "O woman," he said, "great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt," and so the little child became well, and her mother found her so when she returned to her house.

Courage has been cynically defined as "having done the thing before," as if one could face danger fearlessly because accustomed to it; but this definition is insufficient. Courage is as often shown by the weak and inexperienced made strong by love, as by the strong inured to danger. Its highest manifestation is in what is called moral courage, evidenced when a man stands for unpopular rectitude against his immoral and unmoral fellows, who either sin themselves or make compromises with sinners.

One wonders how long it took for the traffic of those who sold oxen and sheep and doves for sacrifice, and for the money changers to invade the temple. Many a saintly visitor must have abhorred the secularization of the holy place. Probably the venal priesthood profited by taking a toll from the privilege; so the mercenary confusion continued and no one dared to protest. But Jesus, when he saw this, felt just such a thrill of righteous indignation as came to David when he recognized that it was the very God of Israel who was defied by the boasting Philistine. Jesus felt it was his Father's house that was being desecrated, which ought to be always "the house of prayer." So he drove out the cattle with his scourge, cast down the crates of the dove sellers, and overthrew the tables of the money changers, showing both courage and good humor.

Had he been a mere fanatic his anger and self-righteousness would have aroused answering anger and riotous opposition; but the calmness of courage means the support of Principle, and the peace of good humor expects the support and good will of men. These characteristics must have been evidenced by our Master, for the invaders of the sacred precincts slipped away without any recorded disturbance.

This hour surely calls upon men to understand the example of Christ Jesus and to exhibit both courage and good humor, for the opposite characteristics of the coward's cruelty and the schemer's malice claim to be invading the world. In ancient times brutality was deified and worshiped as Moloch. Shall this false god terrify and subdue the world again when Christianity has become practical in operation through the discovery of Christian Science, which brings to man the remedy for fear? Let us be encouraged by what we read in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 410): "Every trial of our faith in God makes us stronger. The more difficult seems the material condition to be overcome by Spirit, the stronger should be our faith and the purer our love. The Apostle John says: 'There is no fear in Love, but perfect Love casteth out fear. . . . He that feareth is not made perfect in Love.' Here is a definite and inspired proclamation of Christian Science."

Once Maya, deception, or illusion, was personified. Shall mortal minds that mesmerize with whispered lies, shall the covert threat, the seductive promise, control men's minds to-day in the way in which this was done by priests of eld? What if this service of a false god employs professors, reporters, editors, newsmakers and newspapers, bankers and brewers, men of the professions and labor agitators, still here is the unassailable position of the Christian Scientist (Science and Health, p. 103): "In reality there is no mortal mind, and consequently no transference of mortal thought and willpower. Life and being are of God."

People are beginning to understand more clearly the meaning of that "war in heaven" which the Revelator spoke about. One soldier in the trenches expresses his vision of the case as not a mere struggle on the material plane, a struggle affecting flesh and blood, cities and territory, but as being the world's testing time as to its acceptance of righteousness as the guiding power, or submission to human will and force. He feels that no safety, or comfort, or ease, or riches which might be offered him could in the slightest degree tempt him to turn his back upon the struggle and become a defaulter in the enterprise. There can be no escape for anyone from the necessity of fighting the good fight within himself, and from deciding whether or not he will keep the faith, which means the laying aside of the human crown, casting out all self-deification of the human mind, and so receiving what Paul speaks of as "a crown of righteousness," which he knew was laid up for him and for all those who accept and rejoice in the coming of the Christ.

Stilling Financial War

A CUNNING and unscrupulous enemy psychology does not content itself with breaking down merely the physical power of its opponent, but endeavors to place a destructive hand also upon his mental, moral, and financial resources.

What is desired by such an enemy is a complete disintegration of all powers of resistance on the part of its victim. The news of the day has in a measure laid bare to those who can read between the lines the mental methods employed to bring about the wished for debacle. The spiritually minded who pierce the subterfuges which are employed need not be reminded of the attempt to drain nations of their riches by playing upon their idiosyncrasies, but the general public needs to be forewarned in order that the evil purpose may be forestalled.

The problem is one of Christian metaphysics. The average human being is easily lured by the temptation to try to get something for nothing or next to nothing. In the business world this is often called making legitimate profits, or just getting bargains. Nevertheless, this method is illogical and impracticable because it would eventually impoverish the losing party and destroy his purchasing power. The only legitimate trade motto must be, Something for something. This involves an exchange of values, and must be mutually beneficial in order to be businesslike.

Metaphysically considered, the greed and fear of the individual is based upon a belief of limitation. Human beings suppose that the supply of good things is limited, that their money-making abilities grow less with advancing years, and that they must hasten to accumulate for a helpless old age. Christian Science teaches the very reverse. It shows that in reality God's supply is as infinite as He is Himself infinite, and that men growing in grace, wisdom, and experience should gain in vigor, freshness, and strength. By correcting the prevalent misconceptions about the nature of God and man, Christian Science is taking the strain of fear off from the business world and preparing the financial ability of nations which are obedient to God to cope with the insidious suggestions of the evil planner.

Mrs. Eddy states on page 255 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "In league with material sense, mortals take limited views of all things." But it follows that when individuals and nations permit themselves to be guided by spiritual perception they are able to take a wider view and to recognize their source of supply as metaphysical and as unlimited. Fear is always in conspiracy with evil of every kind; it is a busy ally of incapacity, and suggests failure. Fear is a bully seeking to terrorize the timid. The fear of not making a living, the harassing arguments of inability, the dread of payments to be made in the future, all this helps to pull men down unless corrected by the spiritual understanding which endows man with might and plenty. Whereas the expectation of good, courage, alertness, willingness to gather the fruits of the Spirit and to keep open the avenues of giving, are qualities which fortify financial strength and construct its ramparts. Frequently the holding on to old landmarks in business, acts in a way to palsy progress and frighten away the newer methods leading to success. It is wisdom to cast away a garment which has been outgrown, before it becomes so old that it literally falls off in the tatters of decay.

At this time some of the business bugbears which fear is trying to use in order to produce financial war are the high cost of living, the shortage of the food supply, gross extravagance on the part of those unaccustomed to riches, and the lack of labor. Each one of these seeming difficulties can be met and mastered first of all metaphysically and then with whatever appropriate material measures may be required. In its essence all labor is mental, and the divine Mind never lacks the expression of its own eternal activity. No unnecessary sacrifice of men and money should be admitted. Shortage of good things is constantly argued by the carnal mind, and a desperate enemy psychology attempts to reinforce the fear of lack by mental suggestion. Abundance, on the other hand, is always being realized by the spiritually minded. It is they who in the world's crisis can help to fill the barns, sow the fields, feed the hungry, and still the financial war by reflecting to a distracted world God's infinite goodness and inexhaustible riches.

Science versus Superstition

THROUGH an entirely false concept of the teachings of Christian Science, a good many people have thought of it as a form of superstition; but when they become in any degree acquainted with the Principle which underlies all of its teachings they see that they were entirely mistaken. A dictionary definition of superstition reads as follows: "An excessive reverence for, or fear of, that which is unknown or mysterious. An ignorant or irrational worship of the Supreme Deity; excessive exactness or rigor in religious opinions or practice." So far from Christian Science being in any wise connected with superstitious belief or practice, it really is the only teaching which reveals the error of all belief that bases superstition.

Here it should be said that superstition never fails to induce fear; while Christian Science, rightly understood and practiced, never fails to destroy it. On page 83 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy says: "Between Christian Science and all forms of superstition a great gulf is fixed, as impassable as that between Dives and Lazarus." Taking up the belief in superstition at this point, we have the only direct teaching of Christ Jesus relative to the condition of those who have passed through the experience called death; and his words, as found in the parable referred to by Mrs. Eddy, actually annihilate the widely prevailing belief that there can be or should be any communication between those who have passed on and those who are on this plane of experience.

In this parable which is given in the sixteenth chapter of Luke we find that the rich man who had passed on and who declared he was in torment, evidently believed that he could send a communication through Lazarus to his brothers who were in the world. It is good to find here a hint that human affection had survived death and the grave, and it was surely the dawning of spiritual consciousness which led him to pray for their salvation; but the lesson which came to him showed that through no form of superstition could this salvation come. We read that Abraham directed the man's thought to Moses and the prophets, or, as the student of Christian Science would say, to the divine Principle that had inspired their teachings. Because, however, the rich man had not understood this divine Principle, he had failed to find the needed lessons, and thought that if one from the dead could take a message to his brothers they would repent; but though his plea was rejected, the essential truth taught by Moses and the prophets, and demonstrated by Christ Jesus, remained to light the way to full salvation from sin, sickness, and death.

That the belief in superstition was very prevalent in the days of the Master and long before that time, is very evident. When Jesus came walking on the water in the night season, his disciples who were in their boat, cried out in terror at what they thought to be the approach of a spirit. They had yet to learn that their great Teacher was demonstrating for them the Science which would destroy all superstition and all fear, even the fear of death, when it was fully understood. When the truth of being, as declared in Christian Science, was given to humanity through Mrs. Eddy's teachings, it challenged fear and superstition of all kinds, whether expressed through disease or sin. It is too well known that many persons have blindly submitted to the belief that they must die at a certain time because a prediction, medical or otherwise, had been made to this effect; but in thousands of such cases deliverance came through the understanding of Truth, and with the physical healing of the erstwhile sufferer came in large measure the freedom which is the birthright of all of God's children, and which is never for a moment overshadowed by superstitious belief.

One modern phase of superstitious belief comes with its challenge even to students of Christian Science, and by this is meant the so-called endless chain letters. Indeed, it sometimes seems as if students of Christian Science were selected for the purpose of finding out just what they would do with such things. It is quite likely that the superstition back of the threat of misfortune of the direst sort which would come to those who had the courage to break the chain, would deter those who were not Christian Scientists from meeting the challenge with the courage born of a righteous conviction; but the Scientist has often had to face more fearsome foes than this, and does not hesitate as to the right course to pursue. He knows that no one inspired by divine Truth and Love could send out a threat in the name of God or of Christ Jesus; and even though he may not feel the need of protection for himself from this phase of superstition, he gladly seizes the opportunity to deliver others who may have been, as Paul says, "all their lifetime subject to bondage,"—the bondage of belief in life separate from God. In the fifty-eighth chapter of Isaiah we find the distinct command to "break every yoke;" and this is followed by the promise which makes nothing the threats of mortal mind: "Then shall thy light break forth as the morning, and thine health shall spring forth speedily: . . . the glory of the Lord shall be thy rereward."

Current Notes

COUNTY OF DURHAM, ENGLAND.—The Christian Science literature distributed from this office for the year ended October 31, 1917, consisted of 200 Monitors containing special editorials, 200 reprints, 50 Sentinels containing Mrs. Eddy's poem "The United States to Great Britain." The distribution committee reports the distribution of 40 Sentinels, 10 Journals, and 8498 Monitors.

The secular press in this county has been free from criticism of Christian Science the past year. Two papers mentioned an inquest held in London in January, and one of these gave us the hospitality of its columns for an explanation of the facts. One religious publication contained an attack upon Christian Science, and a reply appeared in the next issue.—Committee on Publication.

BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA.—The Christian Scientists of this city, having purchased a desirable corner block of land with a frontage of 74 feet to North Quay and 171 feet to Tank Street, have erected thereon the first portion of their church, in which regular services and meetings are now being held.—The Daily Mail.

WATTS, CAL.—The edifice of the Christian Science Society has been completed and is now in use. The reading room, which was formerly on Rosella Avenue, is open to the public at the church, Wilmington and Tajauta Avenues. The building is roomy and has a large seating capacity.

Watts News.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, is negotiating for the letting of the contract for a new church edifice on State Street. The building will be 82 by 130 feet.

The Springfield Union.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Trustees of First Church of Christ, Scientist, East 46th Street and Cedar Avenue, S. E., yesterday [March 29] took title to two properties on East 46th Street.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Lectures

BRIDGEPORT, CONN. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Frederick Peitzsch, who said in part:—

Anyone really interested in Christian Science wants to know more about it; and the reason is not far to seek. From time immemorial people have been endeavoring to find satisfactory answers to their questions about life, about God, "if haply they might feel after him," as the apostle puts it, and about themselves. Questions such as Why? and What's the use? present themselves daily, and to the human mind unilluminated by truth there comes a sense of hopelessness at the inability to answer. But in spite of the seeming setbacks and discouragements, mankind has gone on, led by the desire for protection against evil and for the attainment of harmonious conditions of existence, and Christian Science shows how these results may be obtained.

BOULDER, COL. (First Church).—Clarence W. Chadwick, lecturer; introduced by Benjamin D. Cornell, instructor in chemistry at the University of Colorado, who said in part:—

Throughout the ages all humanity has sought health, happiness, and peace. There is a conviction in every human heart that to put one's self into perfect harmony with God and His laws, would be to find Him. But what is man's relation to God? What is the truth revealed in the Bible? Many have asked this question. Many are asking it to-day. Many have sought to answer it. Among the seekers of recent times, there stands out prominently the Founder of Christian Science, as perhaps one of the most earnest and the most successful.

LONDON, ENGLAND (Second Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Miss Violet Ker Seymer, who said in part:—

It is found that these lectures appeal to people of all denominations; also to those honest doubters and agnostics who, perhaps because they are seeking for a logical conception of God, have remained unsatisfied or even indifferent. And why this quickened interest? Because Christian Science is definitely lifting from humanity its burden of sin, of sorrow, and of sickness; in a word, it is a joyous, practical religion, free from those superstitious and obscured views of God which turn people away from their heavenly goal, rather than toward it.

NEW YORK, N. Y. (First Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by Warren C. Klein, who said in part:—

Christ Jesus aroused his generation with that remarkable statement: "Before Abraham was, I am." Revealed religion explains that the individuality mentioned by Jesus is the immortal, perfect man, the spiritual idea of Love, the Christ, which has always existed. Mrs. Eddy awakened her generation with the statement that she had discovered the Science of the Christ, and accompanied her announcement with the full and correct explanation of this immortal model, or spiritual idea.

ELKHART, IND. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by George C. Berkey, who said in part:—

Most every one, before knowing what it is, supposes Christian Science to be a new religion; but as we learn more about it, we find it to be the same religion that Christ Jesus taught nearly two thousand years ago, that healed all manner of disease, and made people happy. Jesus said, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." The Bible or God's law, as taught in Christian Science, does heal the sick to-day and all manner of suffering, and corrects all discords.—The Elkhart Review.

LOS ANGELES, CAL. (Ninth Church).—Frank Bell, lecturer; introduced by Douglas L. Edmonds, who said in part:—

If there is one thing for which, more than all others, Christian Science stands, it is the gospel of the eternal now. It has come to this age proving by its works that the divine Principle which cast out evil, healed all manner of disease, and overcame death in the first century, is with us here and now in the proportion that we realize that spiritual man is the only man.

CLIFTON, KAN. (Society).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by James D. Marshall, who said in part:—

Through the study and application of Christian Science, human beliefs and theories about Jesus' life and works are eliminated, and millions of people are to-day eager to testify and bear living witness to the great fact that Jesus of Nazareth offered to a waiting world the real and only solution of these problems. This solution understood is the law of God.

PEEKSKILL, N. Y. (Society).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by William Belknap, who said in part:—

Christian Science comes as the great torchlight to this age, going into the dark recesses of the world, illuminating as has no other light since the establishing of Christianity—since the time of Jesus.

Testimonies of Healing

I wish to express my gratitude to God for the wonderful truth that is revealed by the study of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. When Christian Science was first presented to me, I had very little knowledge either of God or of the Bible. Though a believer in a Supreme Being, I had never given much thought as to who or what that Being was; in fact, my time seemed to be so taken up with other matters that I seldom gave a thought to spiritual things, but one day a member of the family brought home a copy of Science and Health and expressed a wish that I should read it.

Right here let me state that when I had been reading only about two weeks, I began to notice a change. Up to that time I had been an inveterate user of tobacco for at least forty years. I had been addicted to the habit so much that I would get disgusted with myself, and often tried to break it off, or at least reduce the quantity of the weed used. The results of my efforts, however, would be only temporary, for in a few days I would be going full speed again; but wonderful to relate, as it then seemed, after I had read Science and Health a few days the desire for the chewing of tobacco began to leave me, and I soon found I was going all day without thinking of it, although I still clung to the pipe at night. Even the pipe, however,—my old friend,—seemed to be going back on me, and one evening while puffing at it I opened the window and threw it away, and from that day, seven years ago, I have had no desire for tobacco. If Christian Science had never done anything else for me, I would have much for which to be grateful, but this is only one of the many blessings I have received through the study of the Bible and our textbook.

Soon after starting work one morning I was taken with a severe pain in my right side. I tried to put into practice what understanding I had of Christian Science, but did not seem to be able to overcome the sense of pain. Although the still, small voice kept repeating the words, "Be still, and know that I am God," that was one thing mortal mind refused to do, owing to the severity of the pain. I left work and went home, and as conditions remained the same, I thought it best to ask for help. Not having a telephone, I started to walk to the nearest practitioner that I knew, half a mile distant. By resting occasionally and holding on to the telegraph poles as I came to them, I reached my destination. Treatment was given, and I felt somewhat relieved. It was then thought best that I return home, and so I started; but before I got halfway there all sense of pain had gone and I felt nothing but peace and joy. This was about noontime. I returned to work after eating a hearty dinner and felt no bad effects. I am deeply grateful for this healing. I know that the verdict would have been an operation if I had gone to a doctor.

Just one week after this healing, while cleaning the basement, I had occasion to use a ladder, which I found out afterward had a broken step. When descending the ladder I fell backward, striking heavily on my back on the sharp corner of a box. I instantly declared the truth as taught in our textbook. Although there seemed to be a fracture of the bone, the pain disappeared quickly and I was able to continue the work I was engaged in. On retiring that night I found it difficult to lie in a certain position as the back part of a rib seemed to be out of place; but I had no fear of results and tried to realize the truth. In a few days the healing was perfect.

I am deeply grateful for Christian Science, and thankful to God for the wonderful truth that is revealed to all who study the Bible and our textbook. If we as infants in the knowledge of the truth can accomplish wonders, what will the harvest be as we advance in the service. I am thankful to God for the opportunities we get for doing good; and we know that they will increase in proportion to our faithfulness and loyalty. That for which I am most thankful is the understanding I am gaining of the real man made in the image and likeness of God,—that he is not material, but is spiritual. To be able to prove this to a degree in daily work, is certainly cause for gratitude.

If anyone reading this testimony has doubt in regard to what Christian Science would do for him, let him procure a copy of our textbook, and study the same together with the Bible. If he does this it will not be long before he will begin to realize what Jesus meant when he said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God," for Christian Science makes clear the meaning of the new birth.—WILLIAM JOYCE, Cambridge, Mass.

I think it is time and a privilege for me to give a testimony to the world through the Sentinel. I was in a sanatorium for people suffering from lung trouble when a Christian Scientist came to visit me and told me a little about this teaching. I began to mend right away and in a short time was allowed to go home. A copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" was loaned to me and very soon I was able to take a position, which seemed wonderful. I remained well for two years. This happened in England. About six years ago I came to Canada but met no Christian Scientists, only opposition to the teaching, and was so discouraged that I gave up the study of it. Before long my health began to fail, but the seed of truth had been sown. One Sunday afternoon I went to visit a practitioner in Moose Jaw and after a talk with her I began to work for myself, as we are taught to do in Christian Science, with the result that in two days a severe cough, from which I had been suffering for almost two years, disappeared. All I am or ever hope to be is due to this wonderful truth.

While visiting some friends in the country in the summer of 1916 our little boy was bitten by a dog, but thanks to Christian Science there were no bad results. Through the realization of God as Life, Truth, and Love, the pain ceased immediately, and the marks on his arm and chin, where he had been bitten, disappeared the next day. For this healing my husband and I were both grateful. There are many other proofs of the healing power of Truth that I could give. Christian Science has been my only physician for years and has proved a help in time of trouble.

MRS. ALICE H. DAWSON, Moose Jaw, Sask., Canada.

When I first learned of Christian Science in August, 1915, I had been a sufferer from a tubercular hip for several years. During the last two years I had scarcely moved from my bed. Christian Science had often been mentioned to me, but I gave it only a passing thought, until one day a friend told me that a very dear Scientist friend of hers had said I need not lie there on my bed any longer. I had so long been bitter against this bondage, for which I could find no help, that I wanted to talk with this lady and find out what solution she would give for my problem. All who have had similar experiences will know the wonderful truth that she brought to me. She immediately began treatment, and a new world opened up to me in which there gradually ceased to be any pain or bitterness. In four months I put away my crutches and walked, knowing that God was my support. Not only was this condition overcome, but many ills of life-long duration yielded to the power of Truth. Headaches, adhesions due to several years of appendicitis, a tubercular throat, and many other ailments have disappeared since I first began to study "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. All but a little of the work done for me was by absent treatment.

I am deeply grateful for all the Christian Science literature, and above all for the right understanding of God.

Nearly four years ago I was suffering very much from what the doctors called general debility. I had constant headaches, and my eyes gave me a good deal of trouble. I was wearing glasses for both distance vision and reading, but in spite of this I worried continually, and was haunted by a fear of becoming blind. Notwithstanding this aid, and continual resting of my eyes, they seemed to get worse, and an eye specialist told me that they would continue to get worse, and I should wear glasses always.

At my first reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was able to take off the reading glasses, and shortly afterward discarded the others. Although not yet perfect, my vision is much improved. I can do much reading and fine sewing. My general health has improved greatly, and a constant sense of fatigue has been overcome to a large extent. I am also rejoicing in the gradual disappearance of bad temper, discontent, and selfishness. After I had been studying Christian Science for about a year, the father of one of my friends remarked, "In the last year your character has completely changed."

I am most grateful for the peace and joy which have come to me through Christian Science. Although to mortal seeming I have recently lost—in the death of my husband in France—all that made for human happiness, yet through Christian Science I am most joyfully learning that death is the illusion and can never separate God's ideas from God. I can truthfully say that my joy increases daily as I learn more of God and patiently wait on His will. Before I learned of this teaching I was ill, "tossed with tempest," and sunk in depression; now I am well and happy. I am very grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her work and love and patience.

MRS. A. JACQUELINE SHAW, Glasgow, Scotland.

Looking back to my earliest childhood, I cannot remember when I was not extremely nervous. I was always well, very strong, and unusually active, but could never relax. In June, 1898, I took my examinations for Harvard University, and failed absolutely. I was then put in charge of three tutors, and worked day and night, with the result that the following September I passed in every subject offered. A nervous breakdown followed, and our family physician told my mother that the chances were against me.. I was sent to Marblehead, Massachusetts, and in two weeks was at college and at my studies. I did the four years' work in three, the fourth year taking a course at a commercial college in Boston. After graduation I came to New York and started to work in a large concern at the very bottom of the ladder. I seemed tireless, but there was no relaxation.

In June, 1908, I married and came to Montclair, New Jersey, to live, assumed large financial burdens, and worked twice as hard as before. All went well until January 1, 1910, when, while at lunch, a most awful feeling came over me; it seemed like a mental collapse. When finally the doctor came, he told me that my hard work was over, and later said that as I had a family, I ought to be informed that the arteries were hardening and my heart was badly affected. The next five years were a nightmare. I had mapped out my work, and could not give up—the thought of quitting at thirty, a failure, was intolerable. I must provide for my family, so I hung on by will power. Sometimes I had to be helped home, and I always carried the strongest medicines and observed a most rigid diet. One night I had convulsions, and it seemed that the end had surely come; but in a day or two I was back at work again. Finally, in the fall of 1915, it seemed that the end had come indeed, and death seemed preferable to the condition in which I was living.

It was while in this condition that I wandered into a Christian Science reading room, and asked the lady in charge if there was help for anyone as badly off as I was. A few years previous my mother had given me a copy of Science and Health and its teaching had impressed me strongly, but I was not ready for it, so had loaned the book to a relative. This librarian most kindly directed me to a practitioner. My need being great and urgent, I went to her directly from the reading room. Health and strength came with my understanding of the truth of being. My nerves relaxed for the first time in my life, slowly at first, and there were some setbacks; but the work was lovingly and patiently carried on, and a perfect healing has been brought about. I am, and have been for over two years, perfectly well.

I have realized the meaning of these words of our Lord Jesus Christ: "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." It seems as if I could not be grateful enough to that blessed woman who so loved her neighbor that she reached the heights through prayerful consecration, and whose teachings and prayers and striving have lifted me out of the "slough of despond" and made me a man. In grateful and humble recognition of the good that has come to me, I am trying to make my life the measure of my gratitude.

FRANK P. PARKER, JR., Montclair, N. J.

I am happy to express my deepest thankfulness to God for the teachings of Christian Science as given us by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy; for since I turned to this Science my life has been transformed. Formerly unhappy and tormented, now I am peaceful and happy in the assurance that God is Love and that Love is the great conqueror. Mine was a moral and mental healing. From childhood I had been selfish, passionate, jealous, looking first of all for my own satisfaction, and finding it not; for I had also need of a better ideal. When I was twenty-five years old, I was a prey to what is known as acute neurasthenia, aggravated with frequent periods of hysteria, during which all moral sense, all self-discipline, entirely left me. I was altogether in a very bad condition both physically and mentally. Many doctors did their best for me, and I was taken care of by a friend who, through her noble example and indefatigable endeavors, had after many long years brought me back to an exterior dignity of life; but the basis of that life was not changed, and there were still in me these black depths, which often rebelled and made me the slave of my worst instincts.

At that time a friend spoke to me about Christian Science. I was much interested and bought a copy of Science and Health, which I read again and again, striving to follow its teachings, often amidst what seemed dense material clouds. My healing was slow, but the light was always there and led me through the dark places. I had been brought up religiously, but had left my church when twenty-two years of age, and when I wanted to unite again with a church, I did not know where to find the one I needed. After attending a Christian Science service, I knew that I had found the church I had really been seeking all along.

During the six years that I have been interested in Christian Science, many difficulties have been surmounted, many ills overcome; one of them, quite lately, gave me an added proof of the ever presence of divine Love. One day, while washing my head, by mistake I poured boiling water over it and over my right ear. I felt at once that I was badly burned, but instantly denied this with all my understanding of Truth and continued with the washing, and in about two hours all the pain had disappeared and no traces of the burn were left.

All this is small, however, in comparison with the great moral uplift, which has brought me from a life of torment and vicious habits into one of peace and purity. I am daily learning the great joy of helping others and proving the allness of Spirit and the nothingness of matter. My grateful thoughts go out to the dear friends who have helped me during my struggle from utter darkness to the glorious light of divine Science. "Glory be to God, and peace to the struggling hearts! Christ hath rolled away the stone from the door of human hope and faith," says our beloved Leader on page 45 of Science and Health. The stone has indeed been rolled away for me.

MISS MARGUERITE MOELLER, Geneva, Switzerland.

Nearly two years ago I started to investigate the teachings of Christian Science, although I had been brought up in another church and had been a member of it about twenty-nine years. I had been in very poor health for about four years, and it seemed as if everything was the matter with me, in spite of the fact that I had doctored a great deal and taken quantities of medicine. About this time a friend commenced to send me copies of the Sentinel. At first I scarcely looked at them, as I had no use for Christian Science; then I sent for a book written against this religion, intending to show my friend where she was in the wrong. When the book came I hastened to read it, but had not gone far when I became so disgusted with it that I went to my friend's house, taking the book with me. I read some of the terrible things to her, and she could prove that they were all false.

Then I decided that if Christian Science was right, I would have treatment, but that I would rather go on suffering all my life than do anything which would not be right in the sight of God. I therefore began to study Science and Health and to attend the church services. I was soon satisfied it was a true, pure, and beautiful religion, so I visited a practitioner and in three treatments was completely cured of lifelong bowel and stomach trouble. I have been healed of colds, a severe case of influenza, headaches, and many other ills. I have also had the pleasure of helping others in my home. I have not used medicine in any form since I took up Christian Science, and my husband does not take it now either. For all this I am very thankful, but more so for the better understanding of the Bible.

MRS. BELLE MILLER, Watertown, N. Y.

Having been healed by Christian Science, I desire to express my thankfulness to God through the columns of the Sentinel, so that all may know the great good which has come to me. In February, 1917, I was taken with violent pains, and being unable to obtain relief, my son sent me to a hospital in De Land. After several weeks' treatment there I was sent to a hospital in Jacksonville for an operation. The surgeon who operated on me said that he found a malignant growth so located that it could not be removed safely. I was then returned to the hospital in De Land, and after a week or two was told that I might go home; that I would never be well, and probably would not live very long. I was taken to the home of a friend in De Land for a visit, and the very first day the pains set in again. A Christian Scientist was called and asked to treat me, with the result that in half an hour the pains were gone and I slept. The next morning I found that I was healed, and there has been no return of the trouble. A practicing physician who was a guest at our hotel at the time of my healing, because of seeing my need met through Christian Science, has since that time become an earnest student himself.

I can never cease to thank God for His manifold blessings to me and to my son, and only hope my testimony may be the means of bringing others out of darkness into the light of Truth. I am reading Science and Health daily, and give constant thanks for Christian Science. I am also very grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who made it possible for this great good to come to me.

MRS. MATHILDE J. POWERS, De Leon Springs, Fla.

I am indeed grateful to Christian Science for a demonstration that was made in August, 1912, and which was the cause of my taking up the study that has proved such a blessing to me. My son, eight years old at the time, was helping around the haystacker, and in some way his right hand was caught in one of the pulley ropes. The nails and flesh were torn from the two middle fingers and the hand was otherwise lacerated. He was taken at once to a physician, who said the fingers ought to be amputated, but considering the age of the child he would dress the wounds, although he thought the boy might never have any finger nails. The next day I called on a friend, a Christian Science practitioner, and asked for help to overcome the pain. She assured me there was no pain in Truth, and said she would take up treatment immediately. After that the child slept well, never complained of any pain, and in about six weeks was doing his share of the milking, which was from three to five cows twice a day. His finger nails are now as perfect as before the accident. My one desire is to prove my thankfulness to God for all His blessings by striving to have more of that Mind in me "which was also in Christ Jesus."

MRS. OLIVE S. JOHNSON, Antioch, Neb.

"Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again," said Jesus. The old man must be put off and the new man, "which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness," must be put on. I was a cripple for over eight years as the result of an injury to the bones and ligaments of the foot and ankle. During that time I tried doctors of all schools, and at last, helpless and hopeless, using bandage, brace, and crutches, I turned to Christian Science. In three days I walked without crutches, and in ten days brace and bandage were laid aside. The privilege of walking without crutches was so great that my heart was filled with gratitude at every step. Then entered the tempter, whispering that the change had been so great that it could have been brought about without my depending upon Truth. I turned to frail mortality to test its false promise, and paid the penalty. The relapse was brief; in a few days I had regained all I seemed to lose, and my complete healing took place very rapidly. There does not remain the slightest trace of the injury, from which a full recovery was considered impossible.

For this great manifestation of the healing power of divine Love, I am deeply grateful; but for the continuous unfolding in consciousness of the spiritual sense of being, which makes the waste places to bud and blossom as the rose, I am more grateful still. It can be truly said of the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science that all the nations of the earth shall be blessed through her work. The pure thought which received so great a spiritual illumination, has lighted the way wherein we are the recipients of unnumbered blessings.

Miss Dixie Wood Harrison, Amarillo, Texas.

Words cannot express my gratitude to God for the many blessings I have received since becoming interested in Christian Science. This teaching was presented to me, just as I started in business, by one who has a very clear understanding of God. At that time I was suffering with my eyes and also from bowel trouble. I had been doctoring for another inharmonious condition, but all these ailments were overcome with the first Christian Science treatment, and through my understanding of man as the image and likeness of God greater harmony has been brought about in business.

These proofs of God's care are but trifles compared with the uplift of thought, the peace of mind, and the sense of happiness which have come to me. I am grateful for the Sunday school and for all our periodicals; also to Mrs. Eddy, who was spiritually minded enough to unfold to the world the teachings of Jesus.

Miss Doris Ann Westwood, Chicago, Ill.

Christian Science has done a great deal for me during the last few years. It found me a physical wreck, and restored me to health. It found me relying on material pleasures and habits for happiness, and it filled me with spiritual joy and peace. It found me Christless and nearly Godless, and it showed me the Christ and gave me an understanding of God as a loving Father who does not know hate or wrath or revenge—a very different concept of God from that which my earlier training had given me.

I came to Christian Science for healing. Several years ago business worries began to assert themselves as real and they made me seek forgetfulness in material pleasures, including that which "biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." For a long while I believed, in my ignorance, that this could go on indefinitely; but the time came when something had to be done if I was to continue my mortal existence, although I was not very keen to go on living: at least, I thought, there would be complete forgetfulness the other side of the grave. I was at last induced to try Christian Science, and I can never forget my first thought as the practitioner began to tell me of God, as revealed in Mrs. Eddy's works. It was this: Here is the kind of God I have been looking for ever since I began to think. The more I studied this teaching the more wonderful it seemed. It is a Utopian dream realized. My healing was complete in a few treatments. Then the unfolding began, and it has continued ever since. All of us have had moments of complete joy, even before we knew of this healing truth, but they did not last. It is always with us, if we reflect God; the spiritual joy is limitless.

Like thousands of others who have found in Christian Science all they could desire, the physical healing now seems but a small incident. At first my gratitude extended only to the practitioner, but as I continued to study and began to realize what my life would have been at the present time had not Mrs. Eddy given her wonderful discovery to the world, my gratitude to her became boundless.

There came to me in April, 1916, a time of deepest sorrow, when I assisted in nursing a dear son in his last illness. He, in mature manhood, chose to have the attendance of physicians and professional nurses, and when the former announced to me that the end was at hand, I succumbed to the sway of mortal mind, and felt myself forsaken of God. Exhaustion, nervous collapse, slight paralysis, and pleurisy followed, rendering me for six days oblivious of my surroundings. It was a singular phase of error that prompted me, in this darkened state, to call for a doctor and medicines, and by a kind of unconscious cerebration to direct for myself the exact method of treatment which had been followed in the case of my son, though I very inconsistently refused to swallow the material remedies offered. A member of my family, not a Christian Scientist, regarding my wish, as she interpreted it, encouraged and carried out this weak idiosyncrasy, until the physician in attendance declared his slight hope of my recovery, saying that I was perceptibly losing ground.

Then a son and a daughter who understood the power of Truth, intervened and called in a Christian Science practitioner, through whose treatments I was lifted out of my sinful weakness, as my sickness might rightly be designated. Now, though advanced in years, I am fully restored to health and activity, and very glad at heart to give to the world the acknowledgment that "he that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is his name;" therefore I can say, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." Very fervently I give thanks and gratitude to the revered Founder of our glorious faith, which points to us so plainly the way to the great Physician.

The Christian Science church provides each of its military members with a vest pocket edition of Science and Health. Further, each man so desiring is sent The Christian Science Monitor, the daily newspaper of the Christian Science church. In each cantonment in the country there is a camp worker under the direction of the various Christian Science Camp Welfare committees. It is the duty of this worker to see that the needs of Scientist boys are met, and to give needed advice.

The Massachusetts temperance forces won a signal victory yesterday [April 2] when the state senate adopted the national prohibition amendment by a vote of twenty-seven to twelve.

The state-wide celebration of the amendment's adoption began with the ringing of the bells in the Park Street Church, at the foot of the hill leading up to the statehouse. As soon as the news of the victory was flashed to the church, the bell ringers began. Within a comparatively few minutes the message was being relayed into the suburbs and to the farthest corners of the state by the bells of other churches.

The chimes of the Christian Science church were second to ring out the news. Their notes conveyed to the people of the Back Bay the first tidings of the temperance victory. Out in Cambridge the bell of St. James' Church was rung for the first time in years. The bell was originally installed in the belfry of this church during the revolutionary period. Despite its long idleness, it boomed forth in a way that attracted the entire neighborhood.

[The Boston (Mass.) Herald]

In the city the Easter wayfarer was greeted by public clocks set forward to the official 1918 summer hour. Some sextons had taken up a long vigil on Saturday in order to conform to the letter of the edict and set forward the hands of the clocks in their charge at exactly 2 A.M. The chimes of the Christian Science church in the Back Bay rang out one o'clock—and then, an hour later, three o'clock. Those within hearing distance knew that the sexton had been right on the job.

[From an editorial in New York (N. Y.) Times]

The defect of much of the religion of the present day is its lack of vital reality. The ever present danger is that it should become conventional. In the very nature of things prayer and worship, which are essential elements of religion, tend to become merely formal acts. It is the easiest thing in the world to have the form of godliness without its power; to make religion a theory and not a life. . . . It needs no particular insight to see that the paramount cry of to-day is for reality. Our patriotism must be real; our sacrifice must be real; our service must be real. Men will not longer tolerate unreality. Mistakes may be freely forgiven, but not conventional service and sacrifice. Religion may lack many things, but it must be real. It must be a power touching and ennobling life in all its manifold aspects.

[From Asheville (N. C.) Labor Advocate]

By resolution adopted by the city commissioners yesterday afternoon [March 13], students who profess Christian Science as a religious faith will be allowed to omit the study of textbooks on health and hygiene where such studies are at variance with the tenets of their belief. The students, however, will be required to bring a written statement from parents to the principals, and in place of this exemption they will be required to do other school work of equal time value.

Saving the World

The mission of Christian Science is to save the world. It is impossible for Christian Scientists to save themselves without doing their part toward the salvation of the whole human family.

When, through the deep spiritual insight of Mary Baker Eddy, THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR was founded, there appeared in the world something far greater than a new and wholesome daily publication.

The advent of the MONITOR marked the appearance of a means for recording and distributing throughout the earth a daily chronicle of vital world events, and a daily interpretation of the motives and actions of men, organizations, and nations.

The MONITOR's responsibility includes revealing the hidden purposes of selfishness and evil in its many forms and phases.

At this particular time the world situation demands that the "millions of unprejudiced minds" (Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, page 570) be supplied with such daily information as will nullify the effects of the insistent campaign of mental suggestion which is evident on every side.

The events of the past few months have confirmed the fact that THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is accomplishing results more far-reaching than we may realize at present. This is evidenced by the constant support the MONITOR is receiving through its increasing circulation and distribution among progressive men and women throughout the world regardless of their political preference or religious creed.

Each Christian Scientist, considering the vastness of the work in hand, inevitably asks himself, "Am I doing my part?"

Opportunity to send the messengers of Christian Science on their healing mission to the world is maintained through the plan of the Postmaster-General of the United States to send to soldiers and sailors at the front, or at training cantonments, at nominal postage, literature offered at post offices in the United States. A printed notice, signed by the Postmaster-General, on the front of The Christian Science Journal, Christian Science Sentinel, and Le Héraut de Christian Science, explains the simple plan.

Those desiring to send periodicals other than their own copies, or copies previously given for local distribution work, can doubtless make arrangements with any Christian Science Reading Room to mail them regularly as desired.

VOLUME XX MAY 18, 1918 NUMBER 38

Preparedness

ADAM H. DICKEY

A GREAT deal is being said nowadays about preparedness. Books are written, articles appear in magazines and newspapers, lectures are delivered, and speeches made, all for the purpose of informing us how to prepare to meet evil in some form or other; but notwithstanding all this, few of us seem to realize just what preparedness means. It does not mean alone the act of laying up wealth for a time of depression; it does not consist entirely in providing a lot of men and munitions, ships-of-war, armies and their accouterments. At present these things are all quite necessary, but they do not of themselves constitute all there is to preparedness. It is in knowing how to think rightly that true preparedness consists. It is the man who has ideas who is prepared to meet the foe. Paul says, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God [through Mind] to the pulling down of strong holds." The weapons of Mind are thoughts, not things. Strategy is an idea; Napoleon is credited with saying that he had known an idea to defeat a great army. Let it be understood that it is the idea which accomplishes the result, and not the weapons that are used. Weapons without the knowledge of how to use them are useless, whereas the right idea will produce its own weapons and use them to the best advantage.

Throughout the Bible the idea of preparedness stands out among the experiences of the people of God as a warning to us of this day that we should be prepared to meet the enemy, but we must first understand what the enemy is before we undertake to destroy it. Paul says, "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Our enemy then is not flesh and blood; it is not people; it is not nationalities; it is that belief of evil in human thought which in its efforts to destroy the divine idea of liberty and freedom would "wade through slaughter to a throne, and shut the gates of mercy on mankind." The Christian Scientist sees the foe in ambush and is prepared to wrest from it its temporary usurpation of power. But unless we are prepared to meet the invader in a scientific way, our efforts are of no avail.

God called upon Noah to build the ark because Noah knew how to do it and was ready to do the work when called upon. Abraham came out from among his people and became the father of a great race, because he was ready when the call came. Had Abraham not been prepared, God could never have intrusted him with this important work, and the history of Israel as we have it to-day would not have been written.

Moses was reared in the household of Pharaoh and was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, but he spent many years tending sheep in the land of Midian, during which time he was not losing a moment in preparing himself for what was to come. He was eighty years old when he began the work of liberating the children of Israel, but this did not discourage Moses. He only knew that the work was to be done and that God was calling upon him to do it; therefore he presented himself with confidence before Pharaoh and demanded that the children of Israel be allowed to depart from Egypt. It did not matter to Moses that he had to wait all these years; his duty was to prepare himself, so that he might be ready when the call came.

David was prepared to meet Goliath long before he knew there was such a person. David was also a shepherd, but he was active, courageous, and trusting. He knew that the power of God was with him, else he could never have slain the lion and the bear which took a lamb out of his father's flock. It was not alone the stone which David slung that killed Goliath. The children of Israel had probably passed over that brook many times where David selected his five smooth stones; they knew the stones were there, but they did not know enough to use them, consequently they saw there no weapon with which to destroy the enemy of Israel. It was David's ability to use the sling that brought the giant to the ground; and his confidence that he could slay the leader of the Philistines was born of the fact that God was with him, and that he relied upon God—Mind—for his intelligence and power.

Jesus did not begin his great life work until he had spent many years in preparation. He had doubtless been educated at his mother's knee and there taught the reverence for the law of God which he displayed in after years. He knew that God was his Father, and that as the offspring of divine intelligence he shared the wisdom and power of his Father. After the Holy Ghost had descended upon him he withdrew to the wilderness, there to prove to himself that he had the right idea of God and that he was prepared to give it to the world. The fact of his miraculous birth was not in itself sufficient for Jesus to depend upon, but his close walk with God and his devotion to the will of his Father was what made him ready for the service that was his to perform.

In the case of our own dearly beloved Leader, she tells us how God had been graciously preparing her during many years for the reception of the revelation of Christian Science (see Science and Health, p. 107). As the world reckons time she was forty-five years of age when this discovery came to her, and during the following forty-four years she wrote "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" and her other writings, founded the Christian Science movement, and led it to its present successful and progressive stage of development. And now do we think that we shall win our battles without due preparation, and without faithful application and devotion to the demands of God?

The question which now confronts us at this critical moment is, Are we doing our share of the work? Are we spending our time in upholding the law of righteousness and knowing the powerlessness of evil in its efforts to bring mankind into subjection? Unless we are doing this, we are accomplishing but little in the right direction. No man or woman ever accomplishes anything without laboring for it.

People do not stumble into positions of importance and consequence; these are attained only through constant effort and persistent striving. As Christian Scientists each one of us has enlisted in a warfare of defense, in a warfare of good against evil, in which we are called upon to fight a good fight. The well-known saying "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty" applies to Christian Science more than to any other occupation or profession. The great work that lies before us is to prepare ourselves to fulfill our mission, and not simply to talk about it or to speculate upon what others are doing. We must not waste our time in waiting for opportunities to show our ability.

To be a true Christian Scientist demands consecration on our part and a closer walk with God. We cannot waste our opportunities and at the same time defeat the enemy. We cannot divide our interests between God and mammon. "The devotion of thought," Mrs. Eddy says, "to an honest achievement makes the achievement possible (Science and Health, p. 199). There is no excuse for a Christian Scientist to indulge in one moment's delay or to idly wait for something to turn up. There is plenty of work for us all to do, and we should be at it early and late if we expect to accomplish definite results. The spirit of Antichrist which is abroad in the world is not going to yield readily in this warfare. Mortal mind's selfishness, greed, and avarice have too long held sway over mankind to relinquish it without a fierce struggle. It is our privilege to show that organized evil, even though it be carefully thought out years in advance in preparation for its present supreme effort, is powerless when opposed by the understanding of the omnipotence of God, good.

The battle is on to-day, both mentally and physically, and we are in the midst of it. "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." God makes demands upon us now, daily and hourly demands, and we must be ready to bear our share of the burden. To meet the present onslaught of evil requires devotion, application, and determination on our part. We do not have to wait for error to assert itself before we begin our operations against it; we must go right on getting ready. Success is not an accident; it is an achievement that can be won only through striving.

In Christian Science there are no calamities; what seem to be calamities are but so many opportunities. Preparedness means getting our thought ready for the work that lies before us. If we are ready, we shall not have to ask anyone what to do or how to do it; the right thought will come to us wherever we are, and we will go on to certain and everlasting victory. God is Mind, and Mind is the author or the creator of ideas. Whenever we are in difficulty there is a way out; but this way must first present itself to us as an idea, and by following up the idea we gain our liberty. We must see that it is the idea and the use we make of it that liberates, and not the material means which we employ.

There is nothing about an idea that makes it the exclusive property of any person. It does not conceal itself, but lends itself in every possible way to an easy acceptance by the one who wants to entertain it. What we all need then is ideas—right ideas. The one who can entertain a right idea is rich. When an idea begins to work in human thought it produces therein everything that is necessary to its own perfect development. Wisdom manifests itself through ideas. Hence God, divine Mind, is always present, giving to each one of His ideas the power of expression, expansion, and development.

In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 103) our Leader says: "In Science, form and individuality are never lost, thoughts are outlined, individualized ideas, which dwell forever in the divine Mind as tangible, true substance, because eternally conscious."

Enlightenment and Liberty

ADALENE MOTT ROGERS

AT the close of a summer's day, a party of us were returning by water from a sight-seeing excursion, and were entering New York harbor. As we sat watching the declining sun in all its glory, I remember catching my first glimpse of the majestic statue of Liberty in the distance, all aglow with the sun's reflected rays. Turning to my brother, who had lovingly planned our trip, I exclaimed, "Oh! Behold Liberty enlightening the world." He was silent for a moment, then replied, "Yes; or rather, Enlightenment liberating the world." This thought of the enlightenment which does liberate men made a deep impression on me, and then came the realization that Christian Science is the true Science which enlightens and emancipates from bondage. Jesus declared that the truth he taught would make men free, and he also said, "I am the light of the world."

In after years, while striving for freedom from the seeming slavery of ill health, both mental and physical, I began to appreciate a little what it means really to enlighten thought. I found it could not be done by simply reading our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mrs. Eddy, nor yet by hours spent in the study of Christian Science, unless the rules found therein were persistently applied and put into practice in daily life. The work of human enlightenment, then, could not be accomplished in a moment; but by small beginnings and much patient endeavor the light of divine Mind would, with its spiritual illumination, eventually sweep away with the power of Love all the darkness of wrong thinking. I could see the ultimate goal, but the work to be accomplished before arriving at that point assumed huge proportions to human sense.

One effect produced by spiritual enlightenment must surely be an expression of perfect health, and of this I was indeed in great need at the time. I had heard of many wonderful cases of healing being accomplished by simply reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." Those happy people, I decided, who received their liberty so easily and naturally, must possess some quality of thought which I appeared to lack, but in striving to know the truth regarding God and man, I uncovered the error which seemed to be holding me back. I saw that these people must have been receptive of the right idea, or their healing could not have come to them so quickly. Having made this discovery, I naturally decided that my own lack of demonstration was due to an unreceptive mental state. At this point a sense of discouragement tried hard to gain an entrance into thought, but after many battles it was expelled and dispelled by remembering that "God is no respecter of persons." I also saw, as never before, that the little seed of truth cannot even be sown until there is at least one spot of good ground in which it can be planted and carefully cultivated. It was, then, my work to dig deep and uproot the tares which years of wrong thinking had planted. This conclusion reached, the work of uprooting and sowing started in earnest. The task seemed indeed to be arduous, but I rejoice when I look back through the years and see the good that has been accomplished. It is with gratitude unbounded that I recall Mrs. Eddy's words on page 518 of Science and Health: "Love giveth to the least spiritual idea might, immortality, and goodness, which shine through all as the blossom shines through the bud."

The statue of Liberty in New York harbor is indeed a beautiful symbol of enlightened thought which is liberating mankind from every form of bondage, even the bondage of war with its terror and devastation. How important, then, it is for Christian Scientists in the world to-day to uproot every evil weed which seeks to cumber the ground, that the liberation of mankind may appear. The whole world is yearning for relief from the oppressive beliefs of evil which war against eternal right. Can we who have proved the power of divine Truth in obtaining the liberty of health, be less alert in our efforts to obtain liberty of country and government? Animal magnetism and hypnotism would lull us to sleep, dull our mental activity, and make us satisfied with only a feeble effort in the midst of what seems to be overwhelming resistance; but we know that right is might, and each one must put forth his utmost effort in the endeavor to add our offering of enlightened thought to a weary and storm-racked world. As our ideals unfold in the ascending scale of thought, we find ourselves advancing toward the true government which is a divine idea, revealing a spiritual universe governed in perfect freedom by infinite Love, intelligence, and wisdom.

Truth Unfailing

CHARLES EDWARD ARNOLD

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE differs from ordinary religious teachings, in that it demands proofs of the operation of the truth it offers. An understanding of Principle rather than dogma, demonstration rather than mere profession of beliefs is demanded. Doctrine, no matter how true, is of little avail to the individual except the individual make some effort to prove its utility. It is in this effort toward demonstration that the Christian Scientist is sometimes confronted by what the world calls failure; but even then it is often much less of a failure than can be understood by one who has never made the effort, and there is no failure quite so inexcusable as failing to try. The teachings of Jesus must be perceived through spiritual understanding, that the truth of his words may be demonstrated in deeds. This understanding must unfold to the human mind gradually, for, in the words of Isaiah, "precept must be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little." And so, until thought has been thoroughly spiritualized, there remains the wavering faith between understanding and belief, between success and failure.

When Jesus of Nazareth stood before Pilate and uttered these words: "To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth," Pilate asked him the question which has echoed and reechoed down through the centuries: "What is truth?" but it is not recorded that Jesus made any reply. For three years he had been daily answering this very question. From the first day of the temptation in the wilderness, where he fought the battle between the flesh and Spirit which ended so decisively on the side of Spirit, he had been voicing and proving to the world the great metaphysical facts which he had first proved for himself; he had indeed been bearing "witness unto the truth." Now he was about to crown his earthly career with the greatest victory of all. He was to bear witness to the great fact that man in the likeness of God is at one with God, inseparable from Him, as Principle and idea, as Mind and its manifestation; yet in the very hour of his greatest triumph, there were the bigoted scoffer and the arrogant materialist who no doubt considered his three years' ministry an abject failure. Not so, however, those who were spiritually minded enough to behold the risen Christ; they knew he had not failed; and those who in all time behold this appearing know that divine Science did not then fail, that it never has failed, and never can fail.

The four gospels abound with great truths spoken by Jesus,—words of wonderful spiritual import which Christianity has put aside as almost too wonderful to be understood. In proof of his words the Master performed many mighty works,—deeds in which humanity have professed to believe, but which they hold as being beyond the possibility of repetition. Mortals have been unavailingly trying for centuries to answer with words, with creed and dogma, the question before which Jesus was silent. It remained for the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science to awaken the world from its long slumber, and on page viii of the Preface to Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has written: "The question, What is Truth, is answered by demonstration,—by healing both disease and sin." She thus separates Christian Science from a merely passive religious teaching, and shows it to be the true teaching which must be made manifest by demonstration; for the mission of Christian Science and the paramount effort of the Christian Scientist is to heal both sin and disease. If in this effort toward demonstration there is a human sense of failure, it does not in any way shake the student's faith in the absoluteness of Science, nor in any way discourage him from continuing the work of demonstration; for who, indeed, that has never tried, has the right to cry failure?

By way of illustration let us consider the student in the classroom. He rises and states the proposition that the square described on the hypotenuse of a right-angled triangle is equal to the sum of the squares of the other two sides. He is stating a mathematical fact. He may not be able to demonstrate it at once, and whether he is ever able to do so or not does not in the least alter the fact that the proposition is true. He also knows that if it is true it can be proved, and if he is a good student he will immediately set about to prove it and will not be satisfied until he can do so. If, in the attempt, he should fall short of a perfect demonstration but should catch a glimpse of the underlying truth of the statement, it could hardly be said that he failed. In any event, he has not failed as the student has who says, "I know it is true, but there is no use in my trying to prove it."

Christianity is admittedly founded on the teachings of Jesus the Christ, and Christian people profess to believe in him, and that the words spoken by him were true; yet, excepting for about three centuries of the Christian era, up to the time of Mrs. Eddy's discovery no one had attempted to prove by demonstration that they were true. It must nevertheless be apparent to the practical Christian that it is as incumbent upon him as upon the student of so-called physical science to prove his position. Whether he is able to make at once a perfect demonstration or not, he will at least catch some gleams of light, being always upheld by the same hope expressed by the psalmist: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness,"—not satisfied in the belief that at some time, and beyond the grave, this likeness will be realized; not satisfied until he is awake to the Christ-consciousness that has already stilled the tempest of human beliefs, and until he has risen above the waves of disease and sin.

On page 468 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy has given to the world the "scientific statement of being." This statement Christian Scientists accept as a great metaphysical truth; but have any of them demonstrated it in its entirety? Possibly not. This does not, however, alter in the least the fact that it is true, nor will seeming failure deter the good student of Christian Science from putting forth added effort to reach the goal. He can at least say with that other disciple of the great Way-shower: "I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." The attaining of this prize means surcease of material pains and pleasures; and the striving after this attainment is the only entrance into the haven of spiritual joy,—the complete demonstration of the Science of being.

Lions in the Den

VERONICA A. BREWER

AS children, how we loved to gaze on Daniel, as pictured in our old family Bible, standing alone in the midst of the lions. To many of us this prophet stands preeminent among all well-known characters of Bible history, not because of the great things that he did; not because of his wonderful understanding of God, but because of this remembered picture of "Daniel in the Lions' Den." The number and the outlines of the lions may have become vague in memory, but Daniel remained distinct, standing erect and fearless.

When led to recall this picture by reading part of the sixth chapter of the book of Daniel we learn, through the understanding gained by our study of Christian Science, that this fearlessness shown by Daniel radiates love—a love which includes the entire animal kingdom as well as all mankind: a love akin to that of the Master when he said, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." According to Mrs. Eddy's definition of fear on page 586 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Daniel's fearlessness manifested an absence of anxiety, of error in any form, so that faith, love, and truth must have been present with him.

We are reminded by the king's question that Daniel served God continually and that the God whom he served continually was a "living God." Nevertheless the king doubted the ability of this living God to save Daniel, otherwise his voice would not have been "lamentable." But Daniel's voice rang out clear and true in his salutation to the king, the same salutation which he would have used had he been amid friends before the throne in the king's court.

Daniel had proved the powerlessness of evil—not only of visible evil, which the lions represented inclosed by cold stone walls, but of the greater evil which they typified, namely, jealousy, intrigue, and hatred. All night long he had been dwelling in Love, all night he had been cheered by God's angels—"the inspiration of goodness, purity, and immortality, counteracting all evil, sensuality, and mortality" (Science and Health, p. 581). This accounts for the naturalness of his salutation, and his demonstration would not have been complete without it. Then followed that wonderful testimony of the saving power of divine, ever present Life. Remembering what these lions typified in Daniel's case we are prepared to grasp the meaning of the psalmist's words: "Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet."

In these days of seeming world-wide strife, many, while trying to serve God continually, are called upon to enter the lions' den—the place where fear, hatred, and error in manifold forms abound; and how deep is our gratitude to our Leader for having brought to us, before these times, the great blessing of Christian Science, which enables us to know that these lions in the den are not realities, but that Truth, Life, and Love are ever present, and these, as we read on page 243 of Science and Health, "are a law of annihilation to everything unlike themselves, because they declare nothing except God."

Daily Bread

WHEN Jesus was tempted to use his spiritual power to make bread out of stones after his forty days' fast in the wilderness, he replied to the tempter, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." By this he certainly did not mean that mankind under ordinary circumstances should not make use of material food, nor did he imply that there were two kinds of bread, the one which was produced from the earth, and the other which came down from heaven. What he obviously did mean was that the life sustaining properties popularly and mistakenly attributed to material food were really in Mind, and that in partaking of the fruits of the earth, mankind should remember that God is the substance and giver of all good things, whether temporal or eternal. The fact that Jesus could multiply loaves and fishes or turn water into wine when occasion demanded was abundantly demonstrated. This was done, however, not for himself, nor for the purpose of satisfying the material appetites of others; it was done for the same reason as were all of his earthly acts, namely, to show forth God's power in such a way as to teach mankind to love and trust our heavenly Father more in all the affairs of life.

He knew full well that matter has no intrinsic value, but he also knew that materialists must be met on their own plane of belief in order to advance them to a better and higher level of thinking and living. However, notwithstanding every effort on Jesus' part to turn the thought of his followers from the material to the spiritual import of his work, all but a few seem to have persistently emphasized the former and overlooked the latter. As an instance of this, we find the people, on the day after the feeding of the five thousand, still following Jesus; but he, discerning their motive, exclaimed, "Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled." The Jews, desiring to justify themselves, demanded of Jesus a sign similar to that which Moses had given to their forefathers when he fed them with manna in the wilderness. Jesus, however, replied: "Moses gave you not that bread from heaven; but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." This true bread, Jesus showed plainly, was the Christ, Truth, or spiritual substance, but not the manna which the Israelites had gathered in the wilderness. The fact that the Israelites ate the manna as so much material food, without realizing its significance as visible evidence of divine supply, resulted, as Jesus so clearly pointed out to the Jews, in the death of their fathers.

Paul, also, in his second epistle to the Corinthians, distinguishes between the letter and the spirit of the Mosaic dispensation, and shows how the former had failed to rend the "vail" of materialism because of what he terms "the ministration of death," declaring that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." To the student of Christian Science it is evident that constant watchfulness is needed in order to guard against the temptation to turn stones into bread, and thus to employ Spirit for the purpose of preserving matter. When one considers the overwhelming weight of desire for material things put into the human scale, and the absence of spiritual realization in the opposite scale, it is of the greatest importance that the student should realize that divine healing power can be demonstrated only in the degree that one is found willing to place the demands of Principle before all merely material advantages. This point evidently appeared so important to Mrs. Eddy that in the chapter on "Christian Science Practice," on page 410 of Science and Health, she emphasized it in the opening paragraph, under the heading "Mental Treatment Illustrated." She there says: "Selfishness does not appear in the practice of Truth or Christian Science. If mental practice is abused or is used in any way except to promote right thinking and doing, the power to heal mentally will diminish, until the practitioner's healing ability is wholly lost."

In order that the daily bread for which Christians have prayed so earnestly may be obtained more abundantly, it is apparent in the light of Christian Science that prayer must have a more spiritual incentive. "Give us this day our daily bread," when interpreted by Mrs. Eddy means, "Give us grace for to-day; feed the famished affections" (Science and Health, p. 17). This prayer, when offered understandingly, is always answered, because it is "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man," which, the apostle James declared, "availeth much," and is not the mere pleading of the human heart to obtain the specific object of its own desire.

The act of laying the human will, with all its merely personal ambitions and selfish interests, upon the altar of the one Mind, the unconditional surrender of the human to the divine, is the only living sacrifice which is recognized in Christian Science. This is the process by which the letter that kills disappears before the spirit which makes alive. It is the loving, human service which Jesus so perfectly exemplified, and through which alone Christians are enabled to partake in some measure of that holy communion which is even now uniting all mankind as one body in Christ.

Humility

ETHEL W. DENNIS

I PONDERED long and prayed to understand
The deeper meaning of humility;
Asked that its presence might enrich my life
And from vain pride and boasting set me free.

And soon I stood beside a window where
The sunlight streamed like banners fair and bright;
And as I gazed with heart aglow, there came
A tiny mote that floated into light.

When lo! a miracle was brought to pass,—
No longer dull and colorless, it shone
As though it were a thing of living fire,
Transfigured with a radiance not its own.

But even as I watched, it floated on,
Leaving of all its brilliant hues no trace,
Like myriads of its kind, invisible,
Robbed of the glorifying light's embrace.

I thank Thee, Father, for the lesson clear,—
I have no power underived from Thee;
And glorious companion-truth,—I can
Do all things through the Christ which strengtheneth me.

Bible history since the time of Cain and Abel presents an account of continuous conflict between a human sense of good and evil. At one time evil appears to predominate, at another good rises victorious; yet, as viewed from the standpoint of Christian Science, evil has no real existence, and as Paul declared, "All things work together for good to them that love God."

Among the Old Testament patriarchs from Noah to David we find many splendid examples of instinctive goodness; without any particular form of religion to guide them, these men seem to have seized the right idea and expressed it naturally. They were not altogether perfect, but they expressed perfection in a marked degree. They certainly demonstrated the power of good over evil in the main and they established valuable precedents for their successors to ponder and emulate. Furthermore, among the prophets of Israel we find many courageous men who unflinchingly held up the standard of Truth and justice and fearlessly rebuked evil in every form. These spiritual seers, in their day and generation, set standards of right living and left records of right thinking which are even to-day among the recognized classics of modern ethics and religion.

Jesus of Nazareth, as the human exponent of perfect manhood, has left us the best example of militant righteousness to be found in all history. Although Jesus himself declared that even greater works than he did could be done through an understanding of his word, still the fact remains that since the days of the early Christians and until the dawn of Christian Science, few even believed that the practices of Jesus were intended to apply beyond the time of his immediate ministry.

It is true that in the teachings and example of the apostle Paul and his associates are to be found remarkable proofs of the practical efficiency of Christianity on the part of some who never saw Jesus, yet it is well known that until the time of the Reformation Paul remained an obscure character, and his epistles were not even regarded by the church as orthodox literature. Paul is now justly regarded as the most metaphysical of all those who became converts to Christianity after the time of Jesus. Through his recognition of the spiritual origin of all things he was able to reduce all the visible manifestations of evil to one common denominator, which he termed "the carnal mind." Thus he defined the conflict between good and evil as warring "not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." Paul made it unmistakably clear that the modus operandi of this carnal mind, in common with all criminal instigators, is to keep well out of sight and to carry on its propaganda only by means of invisible forces operating through what are termed physical passions and mortal laws.

During the dark ages, millions of human beings were disciplined in the name of religion, and millions of evildoers were punished in the name of the civil law, yet in spite of these persistent attacks on the outward appearance of evil, the carnal mind itself was permitted to propagate, until its offspring to-day are literally legion. In our own time, Christian Science, as discovered by Mary Baker Eddy, again resolves all visible evil into terms of mortal mind and shows how a scientific modern campaign may be waged against this intrenched mortal mind and its host of aggressive evil suggestions. The great battle of Armageddon now going on in human consciousness is the inevitable result of the mental inertia produced by this mortal mind, which stolidly resists the coming of God's kingdom.

In the light of Christian Science it is seen that unawakened mortal man, acting under the impression that he has a separate life and intelligence of his own, is naturally inclined to be self-centered and egotistical and to defend mortal mind in all its operations. This state of self-deception is shown to be the basis of all false reasoning and is the foundation of every kind of self-seeking, including its reactionary forms, such as self-depreciation, self-condemnation, and self-destruction. The moment a human being is thoroughly awakened from this hypnotic state through a knowledge of Christian Science, he immediately takes sides in the great battle of Armageddon. Realizing the true character of good on the one hand and the false nature of evil on the other, he wastes no time in demonstrating his loyalty to the former. He would have done so long before, for it was always to his advantage to do so, but he was asleep in the mesmerism of materialism and knew not that he was its victim.

In most cases men awaken to the demands of Truth by slow degrees. Some are impelled to turn away from the false pleasures of the material senses through sheer disgust at their emptiness; while others are driven through suffering to seek relief from physical or mental pain. All, however, are tempted to stop fighting against evil when the senses are at ease, and few are inclined to push the conflict to a victorious conclusion until it is seen that evil can neither be pacified nor condoned. In her own experience, Mrs. Eddy tells us that she found it far pleasanter to receive the revelations of Christian Science than to investigate the mystery of iniquity for this age. She writes: "I was saying all the time, 'Come not thou into the secret'—but at length took up the research according to God's command" (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 223). So it is to-day in the experience of the followers of Mrs. Eddy; many would naturally prefer to enjoy the benefits of Christian Science, saying, "There is no evil," rather than to struggle with the problems of mortal mind and solve them with an application of divine Principle.

Metaphysical warfare, in the final analysis, is not a matter of faith, nor a matter of courage alone, but it is a practical working knowledge of the divine Principle of the Christ, which speaks with authority and overcomes evil with good.

[Frederick H. Eley in Santa Ana (Cal.) Register]

As a member of one of the so-called evangelical churches of this city, I would like to protest against the spirit of petty denominationalism shown by the lecture which is advertised to be held during this week in one of our leading churches.

It seems to me that the present is a very inopportune time to try to stir up denominational strife, which, after all, is only a matter of difference of opinion. Due largely to present conditions of national life, the various sects and denominations are beginning to see things from a more and more common viewpoint, and people are realizing that it is not a creed or cherished belief which counts to any extent, but rather the results in the life of the individual holding such belief and whether such belief helps the individual and the community to reach a higher ideal of life.

Judged from such a standpoint, I think that any fair-minded person will have no hesitancy in saying that the Christian Scientists as a class and as individuals are certainly doing their share toward such an end, and without fear of contradiction I will make a statement, based on personal observation and also upon statements which I have heard from business men both inside the orthodox church and out of the church altogether, that proportionately to their membership there are more members of the Christian Science belief who act up to the ideals of truth and integrity in a business way than is the case with members of the evangelical churches. On one occasion Jesus himself censured his disciples when they called his attention to one outside of their number who was doing good to his fellow men, and it therefore seems hardly fitting that a follower of this same Jesus should seek to bring odium upon those who in their own way, and according to their own concepts, are trying to live up to the Christ ideal.

I listened with what patience I possessed to a lecture by an evangelist some few weeks back, who spent about nine tenths of his time vilifying Mrs. Eddy, and the remainder of his time to quoting phrases from her textbook without giving the balance of the sentence or enough to make her meaning clear. He quoted just enough to enable him to build up an argument on something which was not really there, which to say the least is hardly the conduct one would expect from one who was presumably here to lead the people of this city toward a better life.

[John M. Dean in Johnson City (Tenn.) Comet]

A kindly and interesting article under a Paris, France, date line told something of the work of Christian Science among the soldiers, but it implied that Christian Science relies on "suggestion" for the curative powers which are now well-nigh universally acknowledged as following the application of Mrs. Eddy's teachings. Permit me to offer some correction of this misconception of the modus operandi of Christian Science healing.

Suggestion may be the basis of hypnotism, but it has no part whatever in the work of the Christian Scientist. In Christian Science God is seen as the only Mind and this divine Mind is reflected by men according to their varied degrees of spiritual understanding. In proportion as men possess and reflect this divine Mind, are they equipped to heal the sick; therefore, those who possess fewest of the qualities of the mortal, or "carnal mind," as Paul phrases it, are the best reflectors of the one Mind, and, consequently, the best healers. The ability of Jesus to heal infallibly was due to the fact that his thought was consistently pure and spiritual. Regarding creation from a standpoint of absolute spirituality, he could not help healing every receptive individual with whom he came in contact. On page 476 of her book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy explains Jesus' healing work as follows: "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick."

As mortals gain some glimpse of the real meaning of Mind, they inevitably begin to rely on God's power to help in every emergency, and thus it is that soldiers who know something of Christian Science learn to trust in God for protection from the terrors of war. It may be said broadly that if all men were Christian Scientists there would be no war. Failing in this at the present time, the next best thing is to apply Christian Science toward the alleviation of war's horrors, and those patriotic Christian Scientists who have enlisted in this war for liberty are doing this in large measure. They accept the Bible promises as definite and final, and in doing this they begin to live in the "safety zone" so well indicated by the ninety-first psalm. This beautiful psalm of promise, understood in the light of Christian Science, is a bulwark against error of every kind, and if it means what it says, why should any Christian doubt its practical availability?

[W. Stuart Booth in Saguache (Col.) Crescent]

There is surely no occasion for doubt as to the stand taken by Christian Scientists in the present world conflict, for many months ago The Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church, in Boston, issued a widely published statement to the effect that no one could claim exemption from war service on the ground of being a Christian Scientist.

Consistent with their teaching, individual Christian Scientists have put their words into practice, and are gladly serving in the cause of liberty in the various ways presented, many in the ranks, many working through the Red Cross, while still others are bending their energies to the relief work carried on through the Comforts Forwarding committees organized by Christian Scientists in various localities. The War Relief fund established by The Mother Church has been the means of bringing comfort to a large number in the war stricken countries. All of these activities, together with the Camp Welfare work now being carried on, furnish abundant opportunity for service. At the time of the recent Halifax disaster a relief train laden with supplies and workers with several thousands of dollars, was furnished by the Christian Scientists. At the request of the mayor of Boston, city surgeons and Red Cross material were taken to the stricken district on this train.

No student of Christian Science who has gained a clear concept of its teaching could do other than support every righteous endeavor to obtain and protect the liberty of all peoples and that democracy of government which most nearly approaches the spiritual ideal. That idea of Principle, which gave our nation birth, and which has led us like a pillar of cloud in the day of prosperity and like a pillar of fire in the night of trial and adversity, is identical with the animating ideal of scientific Christianity. Christian Science, which brings not only the promise but the realization of complete liberation from every bond of evil, was surely heralded in that inspired and inspiring statement of truth in the Declaration of Independence: "We hold these truths to be self-evident,—that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness."

[Miss Mary Lascelle Struve in La Science et la Vie, Paris, France]

When man's spiritual being is understood as the idea of intelligence, or infinite Mind, this understanding dissipates the belief in matter, which until then had obscured the scientific and spiritual facts of existence, and this new understanding brings health and happiness; for the body being only the manifestation of this belief in matter, it follows that the mental change which is produced when the spiritual understanding of being appears, produces a salutary effect on the body. This proves also that Christian Science healing has no relation to faith healing as in the case of Doctor Carel's patient referred to by Doctor Philipon, although this healing was the result of a mental change produced through faith, but without scientific and spiritual understanding.

Christian Science has no connection with spiritualism or occultism, for it is an absolutely exact and logical Science. Since its Principle admits of only one Spirit or Mind, it does not admit that there can be in reality either spirits or minds; and consequently it does not admit the control of so-called finite spirits or minds, as is clear from a reading of the chapter entitled "Christian Science versus Spiritualism" from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. Christian Science declares that there can be only one First Cause or infinite Principle, Mind, and that this Mind being the only cause, "there can be no effect from any other cause" (Science and Health, p. 207),—the effect being ideas which are like itself, and consequently spiritual and not material; that man is the creation, the idea, the image of infinite Mind, and is therefore spiritual and not material. It is the understanding of this truth which produces the mental change resulting in healing. I should like to add that matter, having in itself no intelligence, can neither suffer nor experience pleasure.

Christian Science is the herald of a new era in the history of the world, bringing to the chaotic conditions of humanity the light of supreme Mind. About fifty years ago Mrs. Eddy, seeing discord and despair on all sides, seeing that human ideals were unfulfilled in spite of the most earnest endeavors, consecrated her life to the search after a permanent Principle and rule upon which one might depend to solve all problems.

Christian Science is the Science of right or correct thinking—in fact, of scientific thinking; it is based on self-evident proof, and not on the unreliable testimony of the senses. Its logic is flawless. It offers to the world a permanent and positive Principle which is reliable and which has always existed, but was not unfailingly available to humanity before the discovery of Christian Science. Its facts can be demonstrated with scientific accuracy in all the problems of life.

Quietness and Confidence

"I suppose you have read in the newspapers about the severe earthquake here last Sunday. I have experienced several of these shakes, but this was the worst one that I remember. A Christian Science lecture was in progress at the time and there were over five thousand people present. The building began to rock and roll as though it would come down; in fact the shock was so great that the chandeliers swayed three or four feet each way from the center and continued to swing for forty-five minutes after the shock.

"When the shock was at its height many of the people raised up in their seats and started for the door. The lecturer did not know what was happening; he only knew that fear had taken hold of the people. He turned to —— —— and was told that it was an earthquake. He immediately turned to the crowd and said, 'Sit down.' I was ushering at the main entrance in the rear, and repeated the command. The work of the Scientists caused the people immediately to go to their seats. Only twelve left the hall, and seven of these returned to hear the balance of the lecture.

"I am so grateful to have had this experience and to have seen the effect of the speaker's next remarks. He said in clear, positive tones, 'There is no power on earth that can make the English speaking peoples fearful.' When he said that there was a great applause and the mesmerism of the occurrence was over. He then told of a somewhat similar experience during an air raid. He told the people how an audience in London behaved under similar circumstances. I am sure that not one person who heard that lecture will ever forget the experience. Contrasting this experience with the mobs and rushes that were reported to have occurred in the theaters in the city, I see a great lesson."

The House of Rimmon

NAAMAN was a great man in Syria. He had led the king's hosts to victory, and was a valorous man, a man of honor, too, and was rightfully honored by king and country. We remember the story of his healing through the ministry of Elisha, whereby he learned true humility—"and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean." His whole thought was changed by this experience. "And he said, Behold, now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel." He resolved also that he would no more offer sacrifice to other gods. But there was a ceremony he must go through which he explained thus: "In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon: when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing."

Paul makes a clear statement regarding idolatry in his time, saying, "We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one." He had already stated the individual relationship of man to God in saying, "But if any man love God, the same is known of him." Applying this to a present day problem, one may see that if any man love God he is necessarily protected by God's love, and even if human belief peoples earth, water, and wind with malevolent agencies, "though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth," yet to the enlightened mind "there is but one God, the Father." Fear then is reduced to nothingness by every clear recognition that all power belongs to God, and "God is love."

Naaman, the soldier, through the healing of his incurable disease, came to know the one God; and the psalmist must have experienced healing who could say: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies." To-day these words can be uttered in truth and gratitude by a great host. Many of them are soldiers, who, like Naaman, find that to be in obedience as the soldier is required to be they must take part in some meaningless ceremonies—he to accompany his master through the rites in the temple of Rimmon, they to submit their bodies to medical rites less cleanly, involving vaccinations and inoculations.

Where now is the sun god, Hadad-Rimmon, ripener of the pomegranate, before whom multitudes prostrated themselves? Where indeed is silver Diana, the great Diana of the Ephesians, the making of whose images brought such profit to the craftsmen that they howled down Paul's offer of Christianity? Where are the talismans, charms and amulets, the sure cures, philters, and fetishes of past ages; where the drugs and the medical methods of yesterday? They are gone, condemned by their own imperfections; and many a man is now able to recognize the exact truth of the words of Jeremiah: "O Lord, my strength, and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit." And what of the serum therapy of to-day? Undoubtedly the material and mindless theory of the hour, whatever it is, will be condemned by its own imperfections as the truth about it becomes known. If it be one of the "things wherein there is no profit," it must join the procession of all such false beliefs and pass into oblivion. Seekers after life and its preservation will then recognize that God, Spirit, saves, and will understand how and why "they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Mrs. Eddy's guidance is quite specific and satisfactory regarding the duty of those who, in serving God and country, must meet Naaman's problem. In "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 344) we find her statement: "I say, 'Render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's.' We cannot force perfection on the world. Were vaccination of any avail, I should tremble for mankind; but, knowing it is not, and that the fear of catching smallpox is more dangerous than any material infection, I say: Where vaccination is compulsory, let your children be vaccinated, and see that your mind is in such a state that by your prayers vaccination will do the children no harm. So long as Christian Scientists obey the laws, I do not suppose their mental reservations will be thought to matter much. But every thought tells, and Christian Science will overthrow false knowledge in the end."

This gentle and encouraging guidance should relieve those at home from anxiety, and should help them to take the metaphysical view which really means standing unfalteringly on the side of Principle, and therefore maintaining the unassailable reality of good. Materiality may worship a false theory as reverently as nations in bygone times worshiped a false god. But in the light of this day it behooves those who are wise to recall Paul's words, "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him." Therefore, whether inoculations are accomplished by friendly ignorance in home camps, or the prisoner must submit to disease inoculation at enemy hands, God, who is Life, must be his reliance. The words of Jesus are adequate, "Nothing shall by any means hurt you."

Light and Gladness

ALL through the Scriptures we find the idea of light associated with joy and gladness; and there is no teaching of the Master which we should so often recall as his command to let our light shine before men in order that our heavenly Father may be glorified. Immediately following this command, which is to be found in the fifth chapter of Matthew, are these words: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." The Master then warns us against the danger of breaking even one of the least of the commandments, and he insists that the righteousness of his followers must exceed that of the scribes and Pharisees in any age.

This brings us back to the command, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works." At this point we may well recall Mrs. Eddy's words on page 510 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Light is a symbol of Mind, of Life, Truth, and Love and not a vitalizing property of matter. Science reveals only one Mind, and this one shining by its own light and governing the universe, including man, in perfect harmony." Here it may be said that nothing else expresses the ever presence of infinite good so completely as does light; and when we think of light as dispelling darkness, we see that this action is instantaneous. This explains the immediateness of Jesus' healing work, and also the many remarkable cases of healing brought out in Christian Science through the understanding of the divine Principle of that work. These demonstrations would indeed tax the credulity of mortals, and can only be fully understood as the divine Science of man and the universe is recognized. To Christian Scientists the light of Truth is understood to be all; and the darkness which vanishes before the light requires no place in which to manifest itself, since it never was anything but a negation, although it seems very terrible to the human sense until the truth is known.

In Isaiah's prophecy we have the emphatic command, "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." Many times each day the Christian Scientist may with profit recall these words, especially when the clouds of sense seem to obscure for him the light. Let us assume that he is tempted to be impatient because of the error manifested by some one, by the mortal beliefs of selfishness, dullness, and opposition to truth; or it may be even the sorrowful beliefs which at this period are so much in evidence, and when the utter powerlessness of mortal mind to remedy the ills which afflict humanity is so apparent. Then here is the highest opportunity to do good and at the same time to bring joy and gladness into one's own life. "Arise, shine; for thy light is come." "Let your light so shine" that the clouds of sense, whatever their nature, may be instantaneously dispelled, for the light itself will do the work if only we are willing to reflect it.

At this point it must not be forgotten that each day furnishes the Christian Scientist with opportunities to let his light shine with respect to obedience to the Ten Commandments, even taken in their ordinary and accepted sense. Paul said that many things were lawful unto him, but that he would not do them because he might thus cause a brother to stumble, and for the same reason we should always be willing to abstain from anything which might seem to darken the dawning sense of one who had not risen above the most literal interpretation of the Scriptures. It rests with us always as our highest privilege to let our light shine where sin, sorrow, or the fear of death confronts us, also where there is an uncertain sense of what constitutes obedience to divine law, and we must never forget that as we reflect the light of Spirit we gain the priceless healing of divine Love, both for ourselves and others.

The story of the transfiguration is always wonderful, because it lifts us above the plane of mortal sense with its mists and vapors, and shows us the ideal man as manifested by Christ Jesus. Matthew tells us that "his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." Little wonder was it that the disciples were so amazed that they fell on their faces and were afraid until their Master touched them and said, "Arise, and be not afraid." This was a call for them to reflect the light which he was seeking to make them understand. Immediately after this marvelous experience we find another which seems different, and yet which is wholly like the first in its spiritual character. Jesus and the disciples who had been with him on the mount of transfiguration at the midnight hour, when all was light, went down into the darkness of mortal sense, although it was morning, and found the other disciples wrestling with a severe case of illness,—that of a lad who had from early childhood been afflicted with what is now called epilepsy. We read that a great multitude was present,—the people who still "walked in darkness," the darkness of mortal belief, and who did not believe that this healing could be effected.

From the record we can see how the disciples who had essayed to heal the boy must have accepted the evidence of the senses, and so failed to prove that the light of Truth is never absent; but when Christ Jesus approached the boy the radiation of the divine light dispelled the darkness and the boy was healed. This was the same light which had made glorious the midnight hour on the mount, so that even Jesus' clothing shone as the sun, and now it dispelled the darkness of doubt and fear, of sin and sorrow, and took the disciples forward on the journey from sense to Soul. When we walk in the light of Truth, we see the Father's face; and whatever be the testimony of the senses, His children have this sure word from Revelation: "The Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever."

Our Boys at the Front

WHAT does it mean to be at the front? Is it to be at the front with evil or to be at the front with God? Mrs. Eddy writes on page 102 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "The mild forms of animal magnetism are disappearing, and its aggressive features are coming to the front." We can meet those "aggressive features" behind the fortifications of Christian Science. Daniel was at the front when he faced the lions. He boldly confronted evil, and his obedience to God was rewarded by his deliverance. Every one has the opportunity to be at the front with God who takes on the Mind of the Christ.

When Jesus was at the spiritual front in the garden of Gethsemane fighting the great battle of life against death, he besought those whom he left behind to "watch and pray." The danger is always present that those who are at home may enter into the temptation of mesmeric sleep, for "the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." With laudable care righteous governments are providing for the feeding and clothing of their military and naval forces. Christian Scientists are helping to meet these human needs in many useful ways, especially indicated to the readers of their periodicals. But a greater obligation rests upon those instructed in Christian Science, to make their watching and praying effective in sustaining spiritually the armies fighting at the front. What is the right interpretation of the injunction to "watch and pray" with reference to those whom we delight to call "our boys"?

To properly sustain them we must first understand war to be fundamentally mental. Not a shot is fired but what has its origin in mind action of some sort. Every weapon has been thought out before it can be used; every one of the multifarious inventions used in the war zone has issued from the thinking of some one. The physical effect of all these destructive contrivances is due to mental preparation, and expresses the intent of human will power. It is also becoming clearer every day to the unprejudiced observer of the war that it was prepared in secret council; its possibilities were weighed and its probable effects forecast while the world at large was oblivious of the threatening danger. What must have been the hidden consultations, the agreements and engagements, which could finally produce an outburst such as the world has witnessed since August, 1914? The battle plan was already in mind, the strategy of the war had already been chosen, the mental manipulation had already long been practiced when war was outwardly declared.

The evil purpose must be detected and cast out as nothing; the chief weapons of the enemy must be recognized as fear and hate fired by hypnotism. Among the many contributions which Christian Science offers for solving the problem of the world war, perhaps the principal one is that love is more potent than hate. Mrs. Eddy states on page 454 of Science and Health: "Human hate has no legitimate mandate and no kingdom. Love is enthroned." Christian Science upholds the scientific fact that God is the only cause, and the Scriptural teaching that God is Love. The belief that the animal quality called hate can be cause and can be used to make and unmake nations, in a word to make history, is mere superstition. God is not matter but the great "I AM," invariable and impartial. While futile hate marshals its hosts and sends them to death, Love gathers the spiritually minded out of all nations and blesses them with the understanding of life eternal. While hate consorts with fear, greed, superstition, and hypocrisy, and officers its cohorts with sin and disease, Love equips the army of the Lord with purity, health, and gladness. While hate hangs upon its champion the heavy material weapons of a Goliath, Love slings the little stone of truth which proves physical force to be a sham and the boastful threats of mere matter to lead to a total collapse.

The scientific prayer of the spiritually minded can equip the army of the Lord with its needful peace of mind and steadfastness of purpose. It can watch over this army as it sleeps, sentineled by Spirit, sustained by imperishable substance, and protected by the atmosphere of God. The righteous prayer gives God's army the intelligence to choose the right moment to strike error and the moment to let error uncover itself. It furnishes the divine stimulus of life in the presence of the enemy which believes in death. It marches on the flanks and covers the rear of this army while God leads the way. It furnishes the whole armor, girds the loins, fits on the breastplate, shoes the feet, quenches the explosive bomb, provides the steel helmet and "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God."

When Christian Scientists at home are "praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints," then it can be said of them that they are literally doing their part in sustaining our boys at the front. Let them obey the call to-day which Mrs. Eddy uttered in an address delivered in Chicago in 1888, as found on page 99 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "Men and women of the nineteenth century, are you called to voice a higher order of Science? Then obey this call. Go, if you must, to the dungeon or the scaffold, but take not back the words of Truth. How many are there ready to suffer for a righteous cause, to stand a long siege, take the front rank, face the foe, and be in the battle every day?"

Current Notes

GREENFIELD, MASS.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, has outgrown its hall, and moves to a much larger one. It has not been a rapid growth, and for some years the Christian Scientists were hardly more than a group, albeit a very earnest and faithful one. The recent expansion indicates the approach of the day when they will have a church of their own, a day that will only arrive when they are able to pay for the building, as one of the things which this faith avoids is debt, and its church edifices are not dedicated until paid for. The local growth is but an instance of the continued increase of the Christian Science denomination, which is widespread and constant.

There has come about a larger toleration of the Christian Science church and of its faith among those who in former years visited both denunciation and ridicule upon it. Perhaps the opposition has softened through observation of the practical good that its members derive from their belief, and their high example of making their faith alive in every worldly concern. The deeper reason may be that there is in the thought of every earnest person a fundamental agreement with the main concept of Christian Science, that mind and life are one,—with only a difference in the emphasis put upon this truth. At all events, the church that brings to its people the better means of solving daily problems and contributes to the wholesomeness and cheer of the community, overcomes intolerant opposition and gains the favor of an unrestrained welcome to the forces for good.

DETROIT, MICH.—First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Detroit, Michigan, was formally dedicated on Sunday, November 25, 1917. The edifice stands on the corner of Hancock and Cass Avenues, and its seating capacity is fifteen hundred and ten. At the three services which were held on that day all the chairs were occupied. Very fine interior views of this new edifice appeared in the Sunday Free Press of December 9, with the following description: "This building is one of the most notable structures devoted to religion in the city. Its cost, all paid, was $210,000." In spite of the fact that there are three other Christian Science churches in the city, large numbers are unable to gain admission to this church at its regular services, which shows the steadily growing interest in Christian Science in our city.

The Lectures

BOSTON, MASS. (The Mother Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Bicknell Young, who said in part:—

In commending the faith of the centurion, Jesus said, "Verily I say unto you, I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel," and then he added this prophecy: "And I say unto you, That many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." That prophecy is being fulfilled in Christian Science. Its adherents are coming from all walks of life, and they are attaining something at least of the spiritual altitude which characterized the ancient worthies, and are finding a proportionate measure of the kingdom of heaven or harmony. Among those who have come, and are coming, from the East and West are many physicians. To those who know something of the medical profession, this conversion to Christian Science, so far from being strange, is really natural. Nothing is more disheartening than ideals made subservient to materialism, which is exactly the case with the medical profession.

Compassion, unselfishness, honesty, and purity are all included in its system of ethics, and often strikingly illustrated in its personnel, but while these qualities are regarded as invaluable for the character, little or nothing is said as to their effect upon the physique. Christian Science shows that anything that is good for the character is equally good for the body, and if properly understood, will at once have a beneficial effect upon the body. Its system of education not only places a high value upon the noble aims and basic purposes of the medical profession, but frees them from materialism, and gives them scientific dignity and demonstrable value. Without ideals the world would indeed be a dreary place. Christian Science shows that even the highest human ideals are all too poor really to represent the divine facts, which are as apprehensible and as practical as the facts of arithmetic.

Our friend who is to speak to us to-night found that the ideals of his former profession, which could not be realized in that profession, are vital facts in the practice of Christian Science, and that they constitute in a large measure the medicine of the divine Mind. No wonder he became a Christian Scientist.—The Christian Science Monitor.

CENTRALIA, ILL. (First Church).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Walter R. Eis, who said in part:—

Perhaps there is no thought more paramount in the minds of thinking men and women than that of peace—the peace which will ultimately come after the dark hours of tribulation that the world is experiencing to-day. It is well to stop and consider the song of the angels to the shepherds of old, "On earth peace, good will toward men." Jesus said, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you." Can this peace "which passeth all understanding" be lost through the working of human hatred, greed, and strife? Such passions do not spring from love. And yet our Master said, "This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you." Christian Science is essentially a religion of love, which in the hearts of thousands is making the golden rule a law of life.—Centralia Sentinel.

BATH, N. Y. (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by W. W. Babcock, who said in part:—

I believe I am safe in saying that there is not a man or a woman within the hearing of my voice or in this city or in this good and free land of ours, but has deep down in his heart a desire for a better understanding of God, an understanding that he can prove in his daily life, and a desire for a better and closer acquaintance and fellowship with God—such an acquaintance that he may at all times feel His presence with him to direct and protect him every hour, in every problem. Now such assurance is the result of the teaching of Christian Science.

CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS (First Church).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Mrs. Ella Woessner, who said in part:—

Jesus of Nazareth taught and practiced Christian healing centuries ago, and multitudes came and were healed of their sins and diseases. Mrs. Eddy's followers, by trying to walk in his footsteps, are healing through Christian Science, and many are coming and being healed.

Testimonies of Healing

For six years I was an invalid. My husband, a practicing physician for many years, handled my case until he became disheartened, when he called other members of his profession to diagnose the case and prescribe for me. At times I seemed to improve, but no permanent help was received. We then began the experience of thousands, going away from home in search of health, to physicians, to hot springs, turning to baths, diet, exercise, and so on. Finally I prayed to God that if I could only reach home, I would be willing to die; for with all the rest I was homesick. I was taken home, and three or four physicians were called. One came from a distance, and he was the only one who gave any hope. I was placed under his treatment about April 28, 1891, but my condition did not improve; indeed, it gradually became worse, until I seemed only a skeleton. The trouble was pronounced a malignant growth of the stomach, and the verdict passed in August that there was no hope; it was only a question of a few days or hours.

At this point Christian Science treatment was requested by letter, and absent work commenced. In a short time I experienced a mental change, and soon afterward the physical improvement was manifested. I was better, and I knew it. A few days later I was taken to the train, placed upon a bed in a Pullman car, and traveled five hundred miles in order to receive present treatment. The day I received it, I walked seven blocks, and I have continued to walk every day since, now over a quarter of a century. I returned to my home in fifteen days, a well woman. Truly it was a different home-coming. On other occasions when I had been away, I had read the Bible and prayed fervently, but returned no better. This time I studied the Bible with our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, prayed as taught in Christian Science, and returned well.

I have relied upon this healing truth to solve my life problems ever since, and it has not been found wanting in any particular. There has been only one day in over twenty-six years that I have not been on my feet and at work. With gratitude I acknowledge Christ my Savior through the teaching of this demonstrable religion.

MRS. EMMA J. LEAS, Rock Falls, Ill.

Even as the leaves of a tree are similar in general appearance, yet so different in detail that no two are exactly alike, so the experiences of all who have become acquainted with Christian Science are in agreement fundamentally, though the combination of details is different in each individual's experience. Although I had been reared in a home where the value of right action was emphasized, I found little satisfaction in conventional modes of living when the time came for me to strike out for myself. I lived very much after the fashion of those with whom I came in contact in the business and social world, yet there was always a sense of incompleteness—a strong desire for an explanation of it all. I had become a member of a church before I was fifteen years old, and was more or less active in church and Sunday school work, but the fact soon became apparent to me that I desired a clearer statement of truth than this denomination afforded; consequently, I lost interest in my church affiliation, and after reading a number of different interpretations of Scripture, decided that, since no one seemed to know about the great verities of being, there was nothing to do but to take things as I found them.

Following this state of things, I dabbled mildly in mental suggestion and kindred practices until living took on a distorted appearance to me because of continued efforts to achieve fulfillment of my petty plans through will power. It was at this juncture that I heard of Christian Science. At first I felt inclined to ridicule it; but later I read a lecture in pamphlet form and was very much impressed by the reasonable and logical statements it contained. Shortly after this I was stricken with fever and called in a physician; but before his third visit I decided to have Christian Science treatment to see if it would accomplish what had been claimed for it. Upon his arrival the physician was duly notified that his services were no longer required, as a change of treatment had been decided upon. Within a few hours after absent treatment was begun by a practitioner the fever left me, and in a few days I was up. Strength came to me as quickly as in the most favorable cases handled by the medical profession, and a great deal more quickly than is usually expected. Altogether I was absent from work about three weeks.

Such was my introduction to Christian Science. From the first I enjoyed reading its literature, and early became convinced that there was no resemblance nor relationship between this teaching and any form of mental suggestion or manipulation of the human mind; but it was not until I began to see the necessity of applying these teachings to the details of daily living that I caught a glimpse of their value, and of the proper place of Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, as a benefactor of mankind. I have not only been healed of fever, but of many other inharmonies as well. During the seven years which have elapsed since my first acquaintance with it, this saving truth has been my only remedy for discord of every nature. Severe bruises and cuts, skin disease, eye trouble, and many other physical ailments have been healed by its means. My position in the business world has been considerably bettered, fears of many varieties have been overcome, and a number of undesirable traits of character eradicated,—all through the agency of Christian Science.

I am grateful to be able to realize in a degree that to God there are no impossible situations, no impassable barriers intervening between man and the attainment of good, that such seeming tangles and insurmountable obstacles are but so many opportunities of proving man's oneness with the Father—his existence as a child of God, Spirit. Also, I am grateful for the apprehension, though in small degree, that there is really no deprivation in following St. Paul's exhortation "to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord;" that the pleasures of the senses, equally with the pains, are no part of the real man and hence not essential to his joy and happiness.

In closing I wish to express my appreciation of the faithful work of all those engaged in any way in the dissemination of the truth, those who through storm or sunshine are always at the post of duty, and through whose earnest work the redemption of the world from sin, disease, and death will sooner or later become an accomplished fact.

A. VERNON SHEFFIELD, Petersburg, Va.

In the spring of 1911 I contracted what is known as snow blindness, and for a year and a half suffered terribly, as the attacks would come on during summer and winter alike and force me to stay in a darkened room for days. Between attacks my eyes would look dull and watery. I could not read or sew for more than a few minutes at a time, and if I looked people straight in the face, tears would run down my cheeks. I bathed the eyes with lotions, and used different kinds of glasses, but without relief.

In the summer of 1912 a neighbor asked me why I did not try Christian Science, and told of her own healing in one treatment. This lady had, however, no real knowledge of the Principle of this religion, and I felt inclined to treat the matter lightly; nevertheless, I was willing to investigate anything which promised relief. After I had read in the Sentinel a few testimonies concerning the healing of eye diseases of many years' standing by the reading of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I sent for that wonderful book. On a certain day I decided to give the book a trial, and consequently set to work on a piece of fine needlework, keeping at it until my head seemed bursting with pain, and when I picked up Science and Health I could scarcely see the letters.

I was very skeptical, but the first sentence in the chapter on Prayer arrested my attention, and breathlessly I read on; for I realized that I had found what I had longed for all my life and never before could find. When I read the statement on page 16, "Only as we rise above all material sensuousness and sin, can we reach the heaven-born aspiration and spiritual consciousness, which is indicated in the Lord's Prayer and which instantaneously heals the sick," my heart sank, because the subject seemed so large and I understood so little of what I had read; but it was proved that even a little understanding of Truth will do wonders, because I realized at the same moment that all pain had vanished, and when I jumped to a mirror I looked into two bright eyes. The healing has lasted to this day.

Shortly afterward my understanding proved sufficient to bring about an instantaneous healing of a burn, and also to prove God's protection when I fell and put my arm, bare up to the elbow, through a glass pane in the hotbed. The glass broke into many pieces, but I did not get a scratch. If I ever happened to cut my fingers, a few moments of silent prayer would stop the bleeding, and I have never had a cut bandaged since my first healing.

That same autumn I allowed some unpleasant happenings to worry me, and an old complaint, called "shingles," appeared. For about a year I suffered greatly, scarcely sleeping a night, and my work in Christian Science apparently did not avail anything. Finally I felt so stupid and dull that the words I read carried no meaning with them. I did not know any Christian Scientists, nor how to find a practitioner; so I decided to take a trip to a city where I had heard there was a Christian Science church. I shall never forget that first night. The moment I entered the church I was filled with peace, and the very faces of some of those present shone with a light I had never thought possible in this world. A testimony dealing with a case similar to mine showed that I had been looking to the body for proofs of healing, instead of trusting God, and I was healed that same night. At the next Wednesday evening meeting I was so overjoyed by this proof of God's power that I overcame a sense of fear of speaking in public and gave a testimony. Since then I have met so much love and helpfulness from more advanced Christian Scientists that I shall never cease to be grateful to these dear friends.

I have had other healings too numerous to mention, chief among them the correction of a displacement, for which a well-known doctor had advised an operation, if I ever hoped to be well. Stomach and bowel trouble, colds, sick headaches, sensitiveness, resentment, and worry have also been overcome. The healings have been glorious, but they are as nothing compared with the spiritual joy and peace which is mine now, and which grows each day. I am full of thankfulness to God and to Christ Jesus, the Way-shower; also grateful to our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for the new light cast on the Bible by our Lesson-Sermons and periodicals. I feel deep gratitude, too, for class instruction, which has made it possible for me to help others, and for membership in The Mother Church.

I have received many blessings from Christian Science. My first experience was the overcoming of the sense of pain caused by a burn. I got Science and Health and read it, trying to understand what I read, and in a short time the pain was gone. Next morning there was no trace of the burn. This experience was a great help to me in later trials. When we were in Chicago a bad odor made me feel very sick, and I was getting worse all the time; but the thought came to me that the other people around did not seem to mind it and it could not hurt me. That was the last of a sick stomach while on our trip. I have also been healed of severe headaches from which I had suffered for many years. Many people told me these would disappear when I got older, but they did not go until Truth healed me. After a year or two a doubt came to me one day as to whether it was Truth which healed me or whether they disappeared because I was older. I was, however, soon to learn how harmful it is to entertain doubt. A few days later I got up with a bad headache, but it left again in a few days. Then another came on, more severe than the first. I thought I would prove to myself if it was Truth that healed me, and I am thankful to say I have been free ever since. I know that I have been healed through the power of God.

I have had the privilege of class instruction, and truly thank God for all the blessings received. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her faithfulness to God which enabled her to impart the truth to us; also to the laborers in the field, and for all our literature, which is such a comfort to us. It helps us to understand more of this healing truth. To heal the sick is my greatest desire.

MRS. M. B. MCFEETERS, Paullina, Iowa.

I have been a Christian Scientist and a member of the church for nearly ten years, and in that time have proved the power of divine Love in many ways. About twelve years ago my wife had what two eminent physicians diagnosed as an abnormal kidney. They told her she would have to undergo an operation, to which she objected. On making a visit to Greenwich, Connecticut, she met a lady who told her of the beauties of Christian Science and of its healing power, the result being that on her return home she informed me that she was going to have Christian Science treatment. I laughed at her, and scouted the idea, not having any faith in it; but the result in a few weeks was a perfect healing, and it has been permanent.

The year following, my wife had an attack of acute lung trouble which was so severe I insisted on calling a doctor, for I was filled with fear, but she was faithful in her test of Christian Science treatment, and within a week she was healed. That led me to the study of this teaching. I began treatment, and was healed of kidney trouble, the smoking habit, and other evils, and found that God is an ever present source of good. On May 1, 1916, I had a stroke of paralysis, affecting the whole of my right side, and my speech. I had gone to my place of business, and after reaching there, collapsed. I could not talk, but was conscious. Two men took me home in a cab, and my wife telephoned for a practitioner. In twenty-nine days I was back at my work, going up and down stairs quite frequently. The building was being remodeled, and the lower stairs had been taken away, so I had to use a ladder. I have been continually at work ever since. After such a demonstration, can anyone doubt God's love, or that His faithful servants reflect that love?

I feel that I am heavily indebted to God for all His blessings, and am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for pointing the way for me to follow. Not a day passes that I do not praise and bless God for His wonderful goodness, mercy, and love to the children of men. My friends and neighbors think the healing is wonderful considering my age, which according to human concept is over seventy years. I am daily looking to God for all my help, and am happiest when I conform my actions and thoughts to the teachings of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

I want to express my thankfulness to God, who through Mrs. Eddy's clear consciousness has opened up the way for me to understand in a degree His omnipotence and love. I have been a searcher after truth through all the cults and isms, but never found in them the truth and the unity of thought expressed through Christian Science. It never occurred to me to turn to God as the great Physician in any of my troubles. Since I have taken up the study of Christian Science, however, I have been healed of chronic throat trouble and other ailments, and I know that I stand firm on the rock of salvation.

One night I was taken suddenly ill with severe pains in the lower abdomen, and they became so severe that I lost consciousness several times. My mother helped me at first; but a practitioner was afterward called, because my body was swollen and I could not breathe deeply or move, as the suffering was so intense. The practitioner responded very lovingly and remained with me several hours during the day. I had perfect faith in God, and proved it by refusing to have a doctor's diagnosis. Within twenty-four hours all the pain had left, the swelling subsided, and I lay there peacefully, knowing that God meets every need. I ate well and in about ten days was up and doing things around the house. It was not only the physical healing which proved the allness of God, but the love that was manifested in ways entirely unexpected, showing that we are all God's children.

To everybody who has helped me to understand the truth better, I give thanks.

MRS. ELIZABETH E. DORN, Upper Montclair, N. J.

The first proof I had of the efficacy of the truth as given in Christian Science came to me nine years ago, when I was yet in a very critical attitude of mind. Upon my arrival at the union station of a city in the Middle West, a friend with whom I was to spend the night met me. We took the car and went uptown, stopping at the ticket office to make my berth reservation for the next day's journey. Upon opening my bag I immediately knew that I had left my purse, containing the money necessary to continue my journey south, on a seat in that crowded station, and the hopelessness of ever recovering it brought on a fainting sensation.

At this point my friend said that if I wished, she would apply Christian Science to this problem. She spoke gently but confidently, and this inspired me with a ray of hope. I assented, and we retraced our way to the station after an absence of nearly an hour. When we got there she dropped back, leaving me to go forward to do the inquiring. Soon I approached a group of four men, one of them holding up, open to view, my purse. Knowing that my cards were inside, I gave him my name and claimed the purse. He manifested gladness in finding the rightful owner, and said, "This is one case in a thousand," expressed congratulation, and declined to accept any reward. What to me seemed impossible, had come to pass. I did not perceive how, but was sure it was through my friend's application of Christian Science.

A year passed, however, before I turned to Christian Science and sought a practitioner for help. I was then in such mental and physical distress that I read the literature eagerly and hungrily. Science and Health was in my hands almost constantly for days, weeks, and months. The practitioner led me along wisely and lovingly, with the result that I was healed of stomach and bowel trouble of years' standing, also of severe attacks of neuralgia.

To me the most convincing proof that the healing came from God, was that I knew I was loving good. I had turned right around; had begun to be mentally regenerated. I began to feel more love in my heart for my fellow man, and was loving more impartially. I promptly subscribed for the Sentinel, the Journal, and the Monitor, and all along the way I have found each indispensable to my mental needs. I feel inexpressibly grateful for the Lesson-Sermons, for the church services, class instruction, the lectures,—all these helpful channels which our beloved Leader has established for the salvation of mankind.

MRS. ETHEL BORDEAUX CRAWFORD, Little Rock, Ark.

My sincere gratitude for the blessings of Christian Science and for the many demonstrations of Truth's healing power experienced by myself and my family, impels me to write this testimony, that it may be helpful to some one who is wandering in darkness. I have been an earnest student of this teaching for over seven years, and am indeed thankful to God for the spiritual uplift gained through the study of the Bible in connection with our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

I was healed of extreme nervous trouble in all its forms and of severe headaches and stomach disorder of many years' standing. There was a large swelling on my neck, for which the doctor advised electrical treatment as a last resort, and my left lung was slightly affected, seemingly causing many disturbances. I can gratefully say all these conditions were entirely overcome in a few treatments. During my first year in Christian Science I left off glasses, which had been worn four years. I had not been able to see clearly with one eye for many years, but all discomfort was gone in a short time, and since then I have used my eyes almost constantly, sewing and doing fine fancywork.

My husband has been healed of chronic bowel disorder, appendicitis, and acute lung trouble, and has almost entirely overcome fear and discouragement. Our children have also been wonderfully healed. Measles was overcome in about twenty-four hours, and a severe case of scarlet fever yielded to the truth in about three days. The patient was entirely free in two weeks, and there were no after effects in any form; at the same time she was healed of liver trouble, from which she had suffered since babyhood. I slept with her and cared for her constantly during this sickness, and God was indeed "a very present help in trouble." Through the help of a practitioner all seeming danger and fear were entirely overcome.

school, which is so helpful to our young people, and more than grateful for our literature, which helps us to apply this Principle to the working out of our daily problems. I can thankfully say I am learning to love my neighbor as myself. My heart is filled with gratitude for the many blessings we are receiving daily through the understanding of God and of our relationship to Him.

Christian Science came to our home eighteen years ago through the healing of my husband of what was said to be creeping paralysis. He had been troubled with this for thirteen years, but was entirely cured in two weeks through the power of Truth. At that time I took up the study of Christian Science and have continued it ever since. This healing truth has been the only remedy used in our family all these years, and it has indeed proved adequate many times. I have received much benefit in a physical way from Christian Science; but if I had never experienced any physical healings, I would still know that it is the truth which Jesus said would make us free. Among the things that have been overcome are rheumatism, blood poisoning, ringworm, measles, mumps, skin disease, influenza, and other ailments.

Three years ago my son was stricken with nervous prostration two days after he graduated from high school. The other healings were accomplished very quickly, but this case seemed slow in yielding, and he was under treatment for eighteen months. Every organ seemed to be diseased, and as soon as one ailment was overcome another was uncovered and had to be destroyed. To-day, however, he is well and strong and has a good understanding of the truth, which he uses for all his needs. He is better mentally, morally, and physically than ever before.

I am very thankful for the privilege of membership in The Mother Church, also for class instruction. For the past twelve years I have been a member of the Christian Science Society in this city, and it is impossible to express in words the great good that has come to me through taking an active part in the church and the Sunday school work. I am thankful to God, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who has made all these blessings possible.—MRS. CORA M. JONES, Fairbury, Neb.

With a deep sense of gratitude I send this testimony, hoping it will mean to some one who is struggling with some condition believed incurable, what a dear lady's message meant to me in an hour of great need. This lady, hearing of my condition, came to me with a face beaming with the sunshine of divine Love and a heart filled with gratitude, to tell me how she had been healed of a serious physical affliction, and also of a great sorrow. She had proved that "man's extremity is God's opportunity," and knew there was help for me. She had felt it her duty to come to me with this hope, and she left me a number of copies of the Sentinel, saying that she would provide me with more if I cared to have them.

At first none of this meant much to me, but finally I read a little in one of the Sentinels and enjoyed it so much that I read them all and sent for more. Then I began to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and after doing so for several weeks I began to realize that I was gaining. This encouraged me to continue the study, and in a little over a year I was entirely healed. I was at that time living in another state and was not acquainted with any of the Christian Scientists there. No one knew that I was reading the book, not even the members of my own family. No one knew what was healing me, nor did I myself fully realize that perfect healing was to be mine until it was nearly complete.

I had been in very poor health for fourteen years, much of the time not able to be around, and I had spent months in hospitals undergoing four serious operations. Finally I had a shock, which completely paralyzed one whole side, and such was the condition in which this lady found me. I had the best physicians in the city where I then lived, and they were faithful in doing all they could for me; but it was again proved that God is greater than man, and that the reading of the Christian Science textbook heals all manner of disease. I am now a member of The Mother Church. This healing took place about eight years ago, and has been permanent.

MRS. CORA M. DURKEE, Norwell, Mass.

I wish to express my gratitude for Christian Science. In less than a week I was healed of chronic bowel trouble through treatment from a practitioner. This healing came at a time when I needed proof of Love's power, and it brought encouragement and hope, for it was evidence of the ever presence of divine Love. I have been healed of sick headache, colds, toothache, and other minor ills. Very painful corns were also overcome, though the demonstration seemed slow. A physician had told me he knew of no cure for them and that they would always cause me more or less suffering. An abnormal growth was more tenacious, and I cannot say when it disappeared; but over a year ago, when another sufferer asked me if I had been healed, I was so thankful that I could reply in the affirmative. This lady was also healed of the growth that so greatly distressed her, and in a very short time.

I am very thankful for the better understanding of God that comes through the study of Christian Science.

MISS ELIZABETH C. IRONS, Chicago, Ill.

I wish to express through this channel of truth, which has helped me so much, my deep gratitude for my first healing in Christian Science. It was that of lung trouble, thought to be hereditary. After a week's absent treatment I was entirely healed. There have been many other healings in our family of six. For all of these I feel very grateful. I am so thankful to God for giving Mrs. Eddy the strength, love, and wisdom to proclaim this glorious truth to the world; I am also grateful to our Leader for her perseverance and endurance.—MRS. L. Y. CLAGETT, Arlington, Md.

[The Piedmont, Greenville, S. C.]

The Board of Directors of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, Massachusetts, have established Christian Science welfare workers in all states in the Union. A national Camp Welfare committee prevails, and branch workers carry on the work in and near all army camps and cantonments. The purpose of these welfare workers is to assist all officers and soldiers of their faith, but the work is not confined to the Christian Scientists alone, but to all of any faith.

War Relief committees have already been sent abroad to aid the suffering of all sects and creeds. These committees have charge of the welfare work in the war zones until welfare workers are established there, which it is expected will be done in a very short time. Several hundred thousand dollars have been raised to carry on this work, and activities have begun on a large scale.

The Christian Science welfare worker at Camp Sevier announced to-day [March 30] that rooms under the auspices of the Church of Christ, Scientist, will be opened in the Beatty Building. These rooms are open to all, but especially to soldiers and officers. The Bible and authorized Christian Science literature can be found in these rooms, besides an abundance of free stationery. Men are permitted to go there and rest, and may feel welcome at all times.

Free subscription to The Christian Science Monitor is given all soldiers and officers for the length of time in the service.

[Editorial in San Bernardino (Cal.) Index]

Some papers are criticizing Secretary Daniels for appointing Richard J. Davis of Boston as chaplain in the navy, because he is a Christian Scientist, the first one of this faith honored by such a position. Davis, however, is going about his duties with a spirit that has the true ring. He says: "The thing is to win the war, and if I can help by inspiration I shall feel that my appointment has not been in vain. The right way to reach a man spiritually is to find a common ground on which to meet him. The wrong way is to urge sectarian doctrines, beliefs, and dogmas. I am going into the navy as chaplain to do my best for the welfare of the men of the service, to make them as happy as possible, to lift up and hold up the ideals for which we are fighting, and to strengthen their faith in God to bring the war to a successful conclusion."

[L. H. Gaunt in The Christian World]

Somehow we seem almost afraid to let ourselves really enjoy anything, however good it is. We say it is "too good to be true," or it is "too good to last." Why, if I tell some people how thankful I am that we have all been well for a few weeks, they say, "Touch wood!"—as though it were unlucky to thank God for our good health! Isn't that a silly idea? I'm sure it isn't a Christian idea. There was once a heathen king who was so happy and so fortunate that he began to be afraid that his gods would be jealous of him; so he threw away some of his most valuable possessions in the hope that in that way he might appease their jealousy. But our God is not like that. He has given us all things richly to enjoy—He wants us to be happy and thankful all the time. Nothing is too good to be true in God's world—but there are many things too bad to be really true. It is the bad things and the sad things that will not last—the good things will grow stronger and more beautiful continually.

The Life of Mary Baker Eddy

By Sibyl Wilbur

No human being in modern times was farther removed from a desire to perpetuate a sense of human personality than Mary Baker Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

She knew that Christian Science was not dependent upon the personality of its Founder, but that this scientifically Christian religion would live and grow in the world in the proportion in which it was discerned and demonstrated as Science.

In "Retrospection and Introspection," as well as in her other writings, Mrs. Eddy herself gave what she regarded as the facts of her own life essential to the understanding of Christian Science and of herself. Yet there came a time when it seemed that some additional authentic, even if simple, life history of Mrs. Eddy should be given to the world. Therefore, though at first reluctant, Mrs. Eddy finally gave permission that such information should be given through Miss Sibyl Wilbur, first in a series of magazine articles, and later in book form, as published by the Concord Publishing Company.

In the Christian Science Sentinel of March 12, 1910, the following statement by Mrs. Eddy was published:

MRS. EDDY'S HISTORY

"I have not had sufficient interest in the matter to read or to note from others' reading what the enemies of Christian Science are said to be circulating regarding my history, but my friends have read Sibyl Wilbur's book, 'Life of Mary Baker Eddy,' and request the privilege of buying, circulating, and recommending it to the public. I briefly declare that nothing has occurred in my life's experience which, if correctly narrated and understood, could injure me; and not a little is already reported of the good accomplished therein, the self sacrifice, etc., that has distinguished all my working years.

"I thank Miss Wilbur and the Concord Publishing Company for their unselfed labors in placing this book before the public, and hereby say that they have my permission to publish and circulate this work."

In 1913 the publication of "The Life of Mary Baker Eddy," by Sibyl Wilbur, was taken over by The Christian Science Publishing Society, the sole publishers of all authorized Christian Science literature.

Careful reading and distribution of this work enables Christian Scientists to convey to the world a better understanding of the life and work of the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science.

Holding the Line

JOHN V. DITTEMORE

IN order to be effective the work of Christian Scientists must be based upon a clear comprehension of what the present world conflict represents and includes.

There has never been and can never be but one war, and that one is the conflict of the ages between good and evil, between Spirit and matter, irrespective of what the issues seem to be according to mortal mind's interpretation. Swords and spears, men and chariots, dreadnoughts and torpedoes, trenches and battle planes, are but the expressions of mortal mind's struggle to sustain and preserve its idols or its ideals. But to-day, as ever, the warfare is in the human mind. Battles and bloodshed are always effects. Causation is ever mental, and history ultimately renders its judgments upon the motive behind the action.

The "line" to be held in the thought of Christian Scientists is that which Mrs. Eddy has described as "the scientific line of demarcation between Truth and error, between Spirit and so-called matter" (Science and Health, p. 586). This line is the firmament—"spiritual understanding"—which divine Mind establishes in the awakened consciousness of every mortal and which will be revealed to the receptive thought of every nation and people.

If the issues of to-day in their metaphysical significance are clearly understood by Christian Scientists, "the line" will hold. Making the world safe for democracy is making the world safe for Christian Science, since democracy is but the highest human concept of government, even a prophecy of that kingdom of which "there shall be no end" wherein "all nations and peoples" shall be governed "imperatively, absolutely, finally—with divine Science" (Science and Health, p. 565).

Those who understand the import of their enlistment in the great army of Christian Science are "at the front," whether actually in the trenches or in their homes. Their zealous and consecrated effort, based upon spiritual understanding, is the most potent force on earth to-day. The destiny of Israel and of the world is in the hands of the world's untiring scientific right thinkers. If Christian Scientists are faithful to their trust, the "line" will hold and "Israel" will triumphantly cross the "Jordan" of to-day and with new vision enter the "promised land."

Thought Censorship

LILLIAN BARKER BEEDE

THERE is a significant object lesson to be gained from the action taken by the United States Government in the establishment of mail censorship. This wise precaution, prohibiting the sending of any information, however free from intentional harm on the part of the thoughtless writer, that can possibly lend assistance to the enemy which is attempting to defeat the great army mobilized for the purpose of establishing and maintaining democratic liberty for the world, reminds us of a note of warning which went forth over forty years ago to awaken the thoughtful to the wisdom of watchfulness.

When our beloved Leader rediscovered for us the way of salvation and freedom, and announced the essence of her discovery in the significant seven word sentence, "Stand porter at the door of thought" (Science and Health, p. 392), few people comprehended that the metaphysical emancipation proclamation for all mankind was being translated from the Scriptures into twentieth century language. Not many were aware that strict obedience to this admonition and the understanding of the explanatory teachings accompanying it, would be rewarded by as effective demonstrations of the power of the Christ-mind over evil manifested as sin and disease to-day, as was the devotion of Jesus to his divine mission when the external evidences of wrong thinking, known as blindness, paralysis, sin, and death, were destroyed by righteous thinking.

Our Government appeals to the spirit of patriotism when it calls upon its soldiers and citizens to guard well their written words lest they unwittingly give the adversary assistance and advantage. Christian Science, in the ringing words of its Discoverer, appeals to the world to put a censorship on thought. It is a command of equal importance to soldier and citizen, to the man in the trenches and the mother at home. To the one it suggests a sentry challenge to every thought of discouragement, of hatred, of revenge, of fear; to the other it means the most alert censorship of all anxiety, worry, sorrow, for the heroic dear ones at the front.

The great home army behind the men in the trenches can give no more effective aid to those on the fighting line than by a rigid observance of this thought censorship. Let us search our consciences daily, and if we find lurking therein fear for the safety of a loved one, let us instantly blot out the dangerous communication with the enemy by remembering the discernment of Job when he said, "The thing which I greatly feared is come upon me," and let us steady our thought by the words of the psalmist: "A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee." Do we find ourselves in an attitude of anxious waiting for a message of assurance from the front that "all is well"? Why depend upon the uncertainty and unsubstantiality of mortal mind's communications, when without delay we can turn to divine Mind and know that God's idea,—the spiritual man, the only man that in reality exists,—is not and never can be in danger. Poisonous gases, bursting shells, bullets, disease, or any material weapon of destruction invented, can never touch the real man, or for one instant separate him from Life, since God is his life and is ever present. World wars in reality destroy naught but the false beliefs of mortal mind.

Let thought's wireless messages that are continuously flashing to the front from every part of the world be protective, assuring ones, bearing only such statements as have passed through the rigid censorship of absolute Truth. It is thought force, not physical force, that is to win in the war; thought that is wholly spiritualized, censored of all error's mesmeric suggestions, thought emanating from the omnipotent Mind.

Reading and Studying

WILLIAM R. RATHVON

THOSE who know much of Christian Science are commonly those who want to know more. Those who have most thoroughly demonstrated its truths are those who are striving most earnestly to do still better work; but before we can demonstrate we must understand, and prerequisite to understanding in Christian Science is study. The study which leads to progress in Christian Science does not demand a high degree of intellectual proficiency or supernormal mental development. It is not necessary that we be intellectual giants like Macaulay, who could recite long poems word by word after a single reading, and who knew "Paradise Lost" and "Pilgrim's Progress" by heart.

Many of us approach Christian Science without having a mind trained to studious application. We may not have the advantages of a thorough education, or we may have neglected our early opportunities to learn how to think, which is the chief end of education. Our reading, perhaps, was made up of such spicy diet as the daily newspaper, the popular magazine, and the passing novel, which like the tippler's cocktail, stimulates but does not satisfy. So when we discover that continuous progress in Christian Science implies thoughtful study, we naturally deplore our lack of ability to read studiously, and, as it were, to travel mentally on unfamiliar roads. We find it difficult to make the mileage we should on the highway of understanding, and unless we firmly reject the silent proposals of error, may go back to our intellectual dram drinking, shelve our textbook for the printed stuff we formerly relished, and turn to Christian Science only when error pinches hard enough to make us uncomfortable. Or if not quite willing to put away the book whose pages have done so much for us, we may resolve to read dutifully a certain number of lines or paragraphs each day that we may sometime say, "There, I have read it through from cover to cover." But between perfunctory reading and studious reading there is a world of difference in results. The former may still a shallow sense of duty; the latter alone makes for spiritual growth.

The student who reads without studying what he reads, may have the letter at his tongue's end, but he misses its spirit, and on page 113 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy assures us that "the vital part, the heart and soul of Christian Science, is Love." He may become ever so well versed, apt in quotation, and ready with an impressive word; but the Love that liberates, that dissolves the adamant of error and imparts the right idea of Deity, he may not know.

On page 495 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy admonishes us to "study thoroughly the letter and imbibe the spirit." In her wise way, by using that simple word study, she has opened up to us a rich field of mental industry whose rewards are in proportion to our diligence in pursuing them; but however difficult may seem the pursuit to those whose minds are untrained in the art of study, there is no reason to be disheartened or dejected. In Christian Science no beliefs of deficiency or lack of time or of training or of disposition can prevent the progress of those who truly want to understand more of God. There is a well-worn path that leads to the home of Principle, and though it runs up over steep and rugged rocks, he can travel it who will. The rocks are not there to baffle us, but that we may become better climbers as we go.

The student who finds it difficult to study his textbook as he should, or to get out of it what it holds for him, will be helping himself by knowing that all beliefs of inability or stupidity are fallacies and falsities; that the inclination and capacity to study and understand are his by virtue of man's relationship with Principle, and that nothing can deprive the children of God of that which He has bestowed on them.

With this thought uppermost let him proceed sensibly with his study, seeking ideas, not merely repeating words; for words are only vehicles to carry ideas into the storehouse of consciousness. Whether we take out of them what they hold for us, rests with ourselves and not with the one who has arranged them for us on the printed page. The sentence which contains a helpful meaning for the one who is looking for it and understands it, carries the same helpful message for all. In the study of Christian Science, there is no special dispensation or private interpretation, but the ways and means which one has found to be serviceable and helpful are open to all.

Unfamiliar words lose their strangeness when we have a dictionary at hand. New uses of old words may be discovered by those who are alert, and enlarged understanding follows; for Mrs. Eddy selected her words and phrases with great care and used no word aimlessly. For this reason the practice is to be commended of comparing the several ways in which she uses a given word in different places. In this work the concordances are indispensable. It is sometimes well to read with a pencil in hand; that is, to mark your books (but never those that are not your own) when you find a passage that is profitable. This was habitual with Mrs. Eddy, as her personal library bears witness. There could be no more faithful student of our textbook than its author herself. Knowing that it came through inspiration, she reverenced and admired its lines in a wholly impersonal way, as though they had been written by another hand than her own.

These and other similar courses are productive of such profitable results that they may be called self-teaching, and that part of one's education in Christian Science which is acquired after one has started out to study for oneself, is often the best part. It creates desire for more of the same sort and proves that all the wealth of the author's thought is at our command. It is often said that Christian Science is the religion of progress, and it is also true that progress in the understanding of Truth is illimitable. There is no justification for being contented with the advance we have made in our understanding or demonstrations. Scientifically speaking, Truth itself is not progressive. It is always at the goal of perfection, lacking nothing; but the individual's understanding of Truth needs constant and continuous enlargement and expansion.

Stunted growth in Christian Science may be due to unfavorable surroundings, but more commonly this is because the student is not working mentally with the same consecration and selflessness which made his early experiences memorable. Whoever is content to review and rehearse his best demonstrations without striving whole-heartedly to have more of the same kind, should not forget that there are no way stations on the through line of progress where one may get off and idly remain as long as he likes before resuming his journey. Let him remember that the treasured experiences of his earlier days in Christian Science may be indefinitely duplicated in kind, if he will persistently study the letter, imbibe the spirit, and put into practice what he already knows. The great treasure that came to him as a free gift in the first place, he may continue to have if he is willing to pay the price, not in dollars and cents, but in study and in application with consecration.

The Higher Patriotism

BESSIE TURNER ALLEN

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE, which gives mankind the glorious perception of God as the Father-Mother, inculcates in all its adherents a sense of patriotism far beyond that of their preconceived ideas of this sentiment, and their patriotism thus becomes the manifestation of a spiritual quality of thought, instead of human sentimentality. The very word patriot (derived from the Greek patriotes,—established by forefathers, and this from pater, a father) has a deep metaphysical significance for a Christian Scientist which it cannot have for one who is not versed in spiritual law. Our nativity may seem to belong to one country or another, but our real nativity is in that "better country" of which we read in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, wherein is the "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

The metaphysical sense of patriotism not only inspires in a Christian Scientist a deep desire to promote the welfare of his country, but it gives him a fundamental truth upon which is based his purpose to do good not only to his native country but to every nation of the world, thus aiding in establishing the true brotherhood of man. In place of the human sense of patriotism, the Christian Scientist knows there is the eternal truth of man's inseparable relationship with God, the Father-Mother, and that his real abiding place is in the kingdom of heaven, defined on page 587 of Science and Health as "harmony; the reign of Spirit; government by divine Principle; spirituality; bliss; the atmosphere of Soul." The demonstration of this truth by the Christian Scientist, here and now, would express a high sense of patriotism. This is evident from the manner in which Christian Scientists have rallied to the flag in the present mental and moral conflict, bearing arms, giving their moral support to our chief executive and others in authority, and aiding substantially with their material means our Army and Navy.

It is well, having taken our stand as loyal Christian Scientists and patriotic citizens, to be alert to the mesmeric influences which would if unresisted drag us down from our high estate. It is imperative that we keep our thought anchored safely in the spiritual realm in these seemingly troublous days, that we may not be swept from our foundations by the aggressive suggestions of error. We should guard against drifting away on a wave of emotionalism from the spiritual realization of the truth about world conditions, thereby making a reality of that which we must see from the standpoint of absolute Truth, else our thought instead of healing the hatred of the world will but add fuel to the flame.

We need at this time to guard our churches sedulously from the suggestions of materiality, which, under the guise of patriotism, would dim the light of our services and tend to lead away from spirituality. Error never can deceive an earnest Christian Scientist except in some subtle way in the name of good. The right human footsteps are being taken to provide for the material as well as the spiritual needs of our soldiers and sailors, but our zeal in this matter should not cause us to forget that this work must be demonstration.

Never have Christian Scientists realized more keenly the need of "a closer walk with God" than they now do. Knowing that the supremacy of spiritual law is our only protection in these latter days when error is stirred to its depths by the power of Truth, our church services become a sanctuary from the troubled thought of the world conditions, and the inspiration gained therefrom is a support to the Christian Scientist during the hours of his human activities when he is thrown in contact with suggestions affirming the reality and power of evil. The Wednesday evening meetings are a vital factor in the Christian Science movement, and strict adherence to the order in the Manual is requisite. Beginning on page 148 of "Miscellaneous Writings" our Leader has set forth her high ideals regarding these meetings, which all loyal Christian Scientists desire to follow.

The Christian Science church is surely the church universal, which knows no distinction of nationality or race; for "there is neither Greek nor Jew, . . . Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ is all, and in all;" and it will manifest tact in keeping its services free from anything which would suggest a sense of separation among seekers for Truth. We should remember that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

Permanence of Truth

IRVIN DE R. MILLER

IN the third chapter of Ecclesiastes we read: "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: . . . That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past." These words have often been an inspiration to the writer, since they shed such a clear light on the reason for the permanency of healing in Christian Science. We learn very quickly, in our study of this infinite subject, that healing, whether of sin or of sickness, is not really the creation of a new state of consciousness, but rather the awakening to a state which, in Truth, has always been, and which God pronounced from the beginning as good. Any seeming condition of mental or physical inharmony, whether manifested as sin or as sickness, is the result of false belief, a belief that there can be joy or good elsewhere than in God, or that a power apart from God is able to alter that which He declared shall be forever.

When this belief has been destroyed by the knowledge of the truth about God and man as His eternal likeness, which comes to us through our study of Christian Science, then the inharmonious condition of which the false belief was the cause, likewise passes from our experiences. There is, therefore, no reason for us ever to fear a relapse, or a recurrence of this evil state, unless we carelessly or willfully permit ourselves to be drawn into the same false channels of thought which originally occasioned it. The past itself, whatever it may have contained of sin or of sickness, has no power over us, nor is it able to resurrect itself; as Mrs. Eddy has said on page 419 of Science and Health, "Neither disease itself, sin, nor fear has the power to cause disease or a relapse."

This may be made clear for us by a very simple parallel. Suppose a man had been taught the multiplication table incorrectly: then everything which he tried to do involving the science of numbers would be wrong; failures would beset him on every hand. If he were to pause and look back upon his past it would seem full of misfortune and mistakes, and seen thus, the present and future might well appear to be shadowed with gloom and discouragement. The moment, however, that the mathematical truth about multiplication was made clear to this man and he proceeded to act upon this basis, he would perceive his ability to solve his present problems, and his future would be brightened with confidence and hope. As for the past, he would at once realize that it was not his past at all, but rather the past of a wrong concept of the science of numbers.

In the same way, as we replace our mistaken beliefs, founded as they are upon tradition and material hypotheses, with the scientific understanding of God and man, we demonstrate our ability to overcome present inharmony, and have confidence to go forward, trusting in the Father to vouchsafe us further light to solve the problems of the future. It is an added joy to know that the sorrows and mistakes of the past are no part of our true being and have no power over us at all; for, in so far as we have corrected the falsities which led to those mistakes, to that extent we have ceased to be the men to whom that past belonged. To that extent, also, we are newborn; "old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."

Fear Dispelled

HENRIETTA A. FIELD

THE two sat together in their favorite corner of the shaded porch, with the last rays of the setting sun filtering through the leafy branches that encircled it. They had been talking earnestly over the many perplexing problems of "the life that now is," and considering also "that which is to come," and the godliness which is profitable unto both, when the younger of the two women turned to her companion and laying her hand on her arm said timidly: "I want to tell you something that has troubled me all my life, but I have been ashamed to acknowledge it to anyone. I am now, and have always been, so afraid of the experience we call death, that all my efforts to overcome this fear seem utterly in vain."

There was a little silence while the one who had been questioned sought for divine wisdom with which to answer this cry of fear; then she replied gently: "I think the trouble is that you are expecting God to give you grace to meet a certain experience, thinking that experience inevitable. I know you well enough to be sure that you have often found God's help and grace sufficient for the need of the hour as that need has come. What He has done in the past is your guarantee for the future." There was a sigh of relief as the burden of years rolled away and gave place to a reasonable confidence in God's help when any need should come; while the self-evident fact that to-morrow's grace cannot be given us to-day, overbalanced the dread of the last enemy.

Not only has our Leader taught us to pray, "Give us grace for to-day" (Science and Health, p. 17), but again, in "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 307), she says: "Never ask for to-morrow: it is enough that divine Love is an ever-present help; and if you wait, never doubting, you will have all you need every moment. . . . This sweet assurance is the 'Peace, be still' to all human fears, to suffering of every sort."

How perfectly would this loving admonition meet all the differing phases of that much dreaded future whose horrors of imagination harass poor humanity! It is not that the sickness of to-day is dangerous, but there are vivid pictures of effects which may follow; our present financial supply may be sufficient, but what of to-morrow and its needs; the loved ones who are away are well and happy now, but something might happen later. Thus the suggestions of error torture us, because we doubt God's care for to-morrow; yet why should we fear aught in the future when we have the assurance that Christ Jesus "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel"?

We may be very positive and grateful in our recognition of God's mercy as having crowned the life of both yesterday and to-day, and yet, with unreasoning fear and mortal blindness, accept unchallenged the subtle suggestion that we are drifting out into a godless future, a to-morrow whose adversity cannot possibly be overcome or alleviated by any activity of good—into a place beyond His love and care—as if the psalmist's words could ever cease to be true, that "goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life," both here and hereafter. With mental blindness mortals fail to use man's God-given right of reason, which would enable them to discern the fact that it is only the lie of error which is endeavoring to eliminate God and His omnipotent power from the experiences of to-morrow, and thus deceive its victims by the exaggerated presentation of evil. We should never forget that Paul has met this lie with his ringing declaration that Christ, God's idea, is "the same yesterday, and to day, and for ever," and that divine Love is the same present help through all the endless "to-morrows" with their ever varying conditions and circumstances; for, as the apostle again says, "neither death, nor life, . . . nor things present, nor things to come, . . . shall be able to separate us from the love of God."

While the Scriptures do not assure us of immunity from all trouble, they do constantly aver, both by promise and example, that when we are called upon to go through the most trying experiences, there shall One walk with us whose form is "like the Son of God," and whose presence will so annul the seeming power of evil, that "neither shall the flame kindle upon thee," nor the rivers "overflow thee."

So carefully is the future safeguarded that one cannot possibly come upon any forgotten or neglected portion of the way, but as Mrs. Eddy so comfortingly tells us on page 149 of Miscellany, "Remember, thou canst be brought into no condition, be it ever so severe, where Love has not been before thee and where its tender lesson is not awaiting thee." To Moses the assurance was given, "Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared." That future stretches before each one, not as an untried path, but as a wonderfully prepared road over which we may walk fearlessly, Love protecting us at every step of it from unseen danger, making smooth the rugged places, and providing rest and shelter for the weary traveler. And all along that path are to be found the tender lessons and messages, left to guide the pilgrim in the way from sense to Soul and to bring him out into a larger consciousness of Life.

"Love thy neighbor as thyself"

JOHN ASHCROFT

IN these days when resentment and hatred are much in evidence, obedience to the Master's great correlative to the First Commandment seems to require more attention than ever before; and there has been revealed, and is being disseminated in Christian Science, as if in anticipation of this hour of need, a scientific and demonstrable understanding of love which makes such obedience entirely possible. In her Message to The Mother Church for 1901 Mrs. Eddy says that "Love expresses the nature of God" (p. 3). St. John declared that "perfect love casteth out fear." Infinite, divine intelligence would necessarily know nothing that could inspire fear; even the suggestion that there might be something to fear would be absent from such consciousness.

The apostle also said, "Let us love one another." Let us reflect infinite, divine intelligence; let us know the truth about each other; let us know as God knows. Let us not be misled by appearances, tricked into believing that we are other than what God knows His children to be, deceived into accepting as the truth of being that which is imperfect or offensive to us in ourselves or in others. If we see man as God's spiritual idea, we cannot fail to love and be loved.

True love is not a mere sentiment, not a passing emotion; it is the clear-sighted spiritual perception of things as they really are. How many of us, when we have failed to heal, have felt that we have not realized our Leader's ideal; that we have not reached our patient "through divine Love" (Science and Health, p. 365), the nature of which we have not fully comprehended. How much better our possibilities for work would be if we remembered that what we are called upon to do is to demonstrate sufficient truth to realize that in God's universe there is nothing to heal or to be healed,—that nothing can ever mar God's creation.

This love that "thinketh no evil," this love which expresses the nature of divine Mind, is the basis of all forgiveness. It is often said, "I can forgive, but I cannot forget;" but this cannot be the divine forgiveness which leaves no wrong to be remembered. To give oneself a right sense for a wrong sense of any person or situation is true forgiveness. To know the truth at all times about all things, to see as God sees, is necessarily to eliminate all that is evil or erroneous in our concept of ourselves or of our neighbors. Suppose that we have seemingly sustained a great injury at the hands of those we have trusted; that we have striven for and have attained some measure of kindliness toward such a one, though the undercurrent of bitterness is still present, to surge through our weary night hours and darken our days with pain and suffering,—how can we truly forgive? Only as we exchange the belief of man which we have been entertaining for the understanding of man as God knows him, can we begin to realize that there is in reality nothing to forgive or to be forgiven. Only as we succeed in recognizing the perfection of the children of God can we truly and finally forgive.

Mrs. Eddy has assured us in "Unity of Good" (p. 7) "that an acknowledgment of the perfection of the infinite Unseen confers a power nothing else can;" and Christian Science discloses the saving truth that it is not only the infinite unseen God who is perfect, but also the unseen man, His image and likeness, our true selves, our true neighbors, in whom there is nothing unlike the perfect Father. Thus, for us and for all mankind, "shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings."

How Great Is God!

PEARLE M. WARREN

If just one star were held in space,
We still would say,
How wonderful is God!
And yet 'tis myriad stars,
With orbits all their own,
He holds above.

If just one blade of grass sprang up,
We still would say,
It came by His great might!
And yet o'er earth each blade,
With outlines all its own,
Is in God's sight.

If just one child of God appeared,
We still would say,
In him His likeness see!
Yet God hath made us all
To bear Love's image through Eternity.

["Mind Governs the Body"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 5, 1917]

If the human body could speak, it would doubtless agree with the psalmist when he says: "False witnesses did rise up; they laid to my charge things that I knew not." Mrs. Eddy states the case of the false witnesses in another way when she says in Science and Health (p. 308): "This awful demand, 'Adam, where art thou?' is met by the admission from the head, heart, stomach, blood, nerves, etc.: 'Lo, here I am, looking for happiness and life in the body, but finding only an illusion, a blending of false claims, false pleasure, pain, sin, sickness, and death.'"

The question, What controls the body? is perennially turning mortal reasoning and human philosophy awry. Among the men who are said to be professionally qualified to understand what it is that controls the human body, this question is usually answered by the words, "Brain and nerves." This answer reminds one of the ancient myth in which the god Atlas is seen supporting the earth upon his back. When, however, that simple question is asked, What supports Atlas? we have suddenly reached the end of human fiction. Just so the question, What causes brain and nerves to act (if they act at all)? has a similar effect; for we have reached our starting point, having completed the circle of human limitations.

Plainly, then, the answer to the question, What governs the body? is not to be found in the body itself. We must look outside the body if we want to learn anything of value concerning its government. A very minute description of a trolley car, for instance, would hardly be called a definition of or a treatise on power. Yet the minute description of the anatomy and physiology of the human body has been held before the public so long that mankind have actually come to believe that the body contains within itself the issues of health and disease, life and death. It is no wonder, therefore, that the body seems to be the master instead of the servant of mankind, which is about as sensible as it would be for the trolley car to claim that it is the master of the power that moves it.

Looking closely into the desires of mankind we find that nothing is held in higher esteem than the absolute mastery of the body. Mrs. Eddy, therefore, has done a great service to humanity by actually showing us how we may learn to govern the body, not through athletic exercise nor erroneous human will, but through the understanding of the truth of being. In the first place, she makes it clear to all that a mortal body expresses a mortal mind and that from this same mortal mind come the beliefs of discord and disease; indeed the whole of this mortal mind is made up of these false beliefs. "A material body," she says (Science and Health, p. 208), "only expresses a material and mortal mind. A mortal man possesses this body, and he makes it harmonious or discordant according to the images of thought impressed upon it."

Is it not plain, therefore, that if we wish to have health we must get away from the false sense that man is mortal and has, separate from God, a mind of his own which produces the false beliefs of sin, sickness, and death? In the words of Paul: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Paul, who evidently knew more about the control of the body than our best modern physicians, indicates plainly that the deliverance from the ills of the flesh comes through Christ, Truth.

Now since it is plain that a mortal mind holds the belief that man is mortal and that he lives and dies according to the testimony of the physical senses and limits himself with these senses and seems to make good his belief, then it must also be plain that immortal Mind makes and supports man, and that man is immortal. Does this not indicate the remedy for mortal mind and its belief of man as mortal? Manifestly this remedy can never be in anatomy, in physiology, or in materia medica. The remedy for the sick and sin beset beliefs of mortality is the great fact that the so-called mortal or carnal mind is a myth, that God is the only Mind, and that this infinite Mind and none other, is Life, Truth, and Love. Once we grasp firmly, through the teaching of Christian Science, the fact that mortal or carnal mind is a self-assertive delusion, and that in reality there is no mortal mind to argue sin and disease because divine Mind is the only Mind, then we have begun to break the power that claims to be the arbiter of mankind's health and morals. Also, if mortal mind, with its beliefs of man as mortal, is subject in the body to its self-constituted material laws, then, contrariwise, the great and glorious fact about immortal Mind and man who is spiritual and immortal is that he has dominion, not only over the beliefs of mortal mind and body, but over the whole earth.

The body is, of course, the expression of a state of mortal mind, as Mrs. Eddy has shown us. It is a question, then, whether we want the truth of immortal Mind or the errors of false belief to be the governing power. The true dominion is gained through the understanding which immortal Mind imparts through the study and demonstration of Christian Science. A material body, then, is found not to be the keeper of our life nor of our health,—it is utterly beyond the power of materiality to preserve life or to control it; God is the source of our life and our health, and our understanding through Christian Science learns to rest upon God instead of the body. It is not for nothing that God, Spirit, is likened in the Scriptures unto the "Rock," for this gives the sense of foundation or security. God, Spirit, is the only true foundation or resting place for our understanding. Thus God, infinite Life, is the true foundation of our health, and certainly can keep us, whereas mortal sense cannot. Paul's advice, therefore, to be "absent from the body" and "present with the Lord" is the soundest of health laws.

Immortal man, then, has his dominion through immortal Mind. This is the great fact of being, and we can realize this verity here and now through the understanding of Christian Science. Thus we discover that man never has been nor ever can be mortal; that he is always the image and likeness of God, Spirit. This discovery cannot fail to act as a corrective to our reasoning about ourselves or our neighbor, and the immortal man appears more and more to our consciousness while the errors of sense disappear. This is what Mrs. Eddy meant when she said (Science and Health, p. 427), "Immortal Mind, governing all, must be acknowledged as supreme in the physical realm, so-called, as well as in the spiritual."

[George R. Lowe in Toronto (Ontario) Mail and Empire]

In a recent issue a special writer charges that Christian Science is "the gospel of being comfortable," in contrast with asceticism and Puritanism, as well as with reasonable Christianity. He alleges that for the world's woes—sin, disease, death—Christian Science offers the solution of ignoring them—an ignorant solution, to be sure.

Christian Science does not advise merely a closing of one's eyes to the horrors of sinfulness and the denying that there is any such thing as sin. But it does point out that God, divine Love, is not the author of discord of any sort. The prophet Habakkuk declared that God is "of purer eyes than to behold evil." To turn away from sin to the pure, loving Father is the way in Christian Science. To turn to Love for relief and healing is also involved in this. It might be said truly that Christian Science is the gospel of spiritual comfort. It is not a new gospel, for St. Paul wrote of "the God of all comfort; who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 101), Mrs. Eddy says, "Discomfort under error is preferable to comfort."

Christian Science is not made up of abstract "denials," but of spiritual affirmations. A soldier with a grievous wound, who answers cheerfully, "Doing finely, thank you," who does not weakly side with the worst evidence of the senses suggesting pain and death, manifests more manliness than the self-pitying mortal, the unfortunate hypochondriac, or the pampered invalid. Right thinking does not magnify human ailments, but aims to surmount and to heal them. True sympathy encourages the sufferer to endure and to rise to higher altitudes of thought. Thus climbing the mountain of human experience, the sunlit heights are reached at length, and the joy of victory is achieved. This is the sort of comfort that Christian Science presents, the joy of spiritual ascendancy.

When once it dawns upon any critic that Christian Science is not superficial but requires to be studied, he will have gained an attitude favorable to his finding out what it is. The study of it becomes constructive and demonstrable. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." The critic should find that it is not a system of trying to deny facts, but the spiritual interpretation of the universe in which spiritual rarities are disclosed as the real facts, because eternal. Evil is not fact, but lawlessness, which destroys itself. The good is the real, the eternal fact, and honest study and practice of good brings healing and real comfort.

[Robert G. Steel in Plainwell (Mich.) Enterprise]

Since the causes of the war find their root in fear, with its attendant evils of greed, lust for power, covetousness, hatred, malice, and the like, Christian Scientists realize that the war is mental. As nations are made up of individuals the destruction in the consciousness of the individual of the belief in these evils, through the process of right thinking induced by the spiritual understanding of God, good, as the only power,—in short, absolute obedience to the First Commandment, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me,"—would bring a cessation of the strife, and peace would follow.

Such a peace, predicated on the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, would be both honorable and permanent, and would show progress of the nations along the lines of spiritual understanding, which is the only true progress. Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, in her book "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," makes this clear in the following words (p. 277): "The characters and lives of men determine the peace, prosperity, and life of nations." And on page 281 she says, "War will end when nations are ripe for progress."

Christian Science advocates but one method in the healing of the sick; namely, the prayer that understands and utilizes the power of divine Mind; and this method, it is needless to say, is not hypnotism but Christianity. Throughout all her writings, Mrs. Eddy emphasizes the fact that hypnotism is the antipode of Christian Science, as are all mental means which are capable of exerting an evil influence upon mankind. An entire chapter in Science and Health deals with the evil and the danger of hypnotism or animal magnetism, and shows the falsity of its claims. On page 482 of the same work Mrs. Eddy writes: "Christian Science is the law of Truth, which heals the sick on the basis of the one Mind or God;" whereas hypnotism and kindred methods assume to heal on the basis that there are as many minds as there are persons, and that these minds are the source of evil as well as of good influence.

It is well known that hypnotism neither calls for nor maintains any ethical standard. It has neither church nor creed, it recognizes neither religion nor righteousness, but offers itself as the tool of the most unscrupulous villain as readily as it parades in the guise of mental healing. It cannot, therefore, be the means or the mode by which Christianity, as taught by Christ Jesus, affords mankind the opportunity to demonstrate the infinite power of good in the overcoming of evil; and Christian Science teaches or advocates no other way by which men may work out their freedom from sin and disease.

[Aaron E. Brandt in The Lewistown (Pa.) Sentinel]

Excerpts from the writings of Mrs. Eddy, the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science, appeared in a recent issue. These excerpts, taken from their context, do not at all explain their meaning as intended by her. Mrs. Eddy did teach that man in God's image and likeness is never sick and never sins, but it is in this sense only that she wrote, "Man is never sick, for Mind is not sick and matter cannot be" (Science and Health, p. 393). As to the unreality of matter, Jesus showed this again and again throughout his career on earth. His passing into a closed room without the opening of a door, alone should be ample proof of it. In this particular it is necessary to assume either that matter is unreal or that Jesus is, who survived and overcame every condition of matter. Which horn of the dilemma does our critic wish to take? By his doctrine he cannot logically cling to both.

These excerpts a clergyman is reported to have discussed as false philosophy, and to have said that "all her [Mrs. Eddy's] teachings are in direct contradiction to Christ's." Now Christ Jesus himself gave the test of a true following when he said: "By their fruits ye shall know them;" "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." There are many thousands of people to-day who gladly testify that there is nothing which is in any respect contrary to the teaching of Christ Jesus in Christian Science, when understood, and their testimony is based on understanding and proof. This proof is too strong and overwhelming for any clergyman to shake.

[Albert F. Gilmore in Buffalo (N. Y.) Express]

It may be said without fear of contradiction that no religion accepts more fully the teachings of Christ Jesus than does Christian Science; and it not only accepts his precepts, but it puts them into actual practice; that is to say, it proves his words by its healing works. It demonstrates the principle which actuated his every thought and deed. It accepts him as the Way-shower to that salvation which reveals eternal life. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent."

That Christ Jesus pointed the way to this knowledge of the Father and demonstrated the allness of God more completely than could any man of less spiritual origin, every Christian Scientist firmly believes. And very far from the worshiping of theories, as our critic charges, is that understanding of Principle which enables the followers of Jesus to emulate his example in healing every phase of sin, sickness, and misery. Rather does it seem to relate pretty closely to the origin of being, the reality of the universe, which is divine Principle, when such results follow. Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 25): "Jesus taught the way of Life by demonstration, that we may understand how this divine Principle heals the sick, casts out error, and triumphs over death."

Extracts from Letters

"I received the kind gift, and thank you heartily. I felt that divine Love would always sustain me and lead me; and it surely did, when I was standing before an abyss and knew not how to cross it. For this and many blessings which I have received through Christian Science, I thank God with all my heart, and hope that the light of Truth may penetrate into all hearts. I am also grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, and all who have helped me to find this way of divine Science, from which I will never be separated. Once more accept my deep gratitude."

"My deepest thanks to The Mother Church in Boston, and all benefactors of this Christian source of help, and for all the assistance received during the war. I am happy to know the beautiful teaching of Christian Science. I have found through it the peace of mind which the world cannot give, as well as enlarged faith in God. Praise and thanks be to divine Love!"

"I wish to express my deep thanks through the distribution committee in Winterthur for the gift received during the war from the War Relief fund in Boston. It is my eager desire to perfect myself in this beautiful religion, and I hope that many people may find this way of understanding."

"With sincere thanks we acknowledge the loving gift received from The Mother Church in Boston, through the distribution committee of Christian Scientists in Winterthur. We are filled with joy and courage and have been convinced through this grand teaching that God meets every need."

"Allow me to express our deep gratitude for the proof of divine Love, in the form of financial support, which you have sent us. I was very sad before Christmas and thought myself incapable of giving my children the least joy. Then I found that 'man's extremity is God's opportunity,' for I was sent relief. Our joy was great, and we perceived that God cares for His children."

"I desire to express my sincere gratitude for the financial support which I have been able to receive through Christian Science. True Christian friends knew of my distressed condition at one time, and without being asked, they spoke for me. Just at the right moment, when I most needed direct financial support, it came to me through Christian Scientists, by means of these kind friends, to such an extent as to be very helpful.

"In good deeds or any relief for material or spiritual needs, there is more Christianity than in mere kind words. The field is indeed large on which Christian Science works in this unselfish way."

A Day of Prayer

THE President of the United States has appointed Thursday, May 30, as a day of prayer

> "to pray Almighty God that He may forgive our sins and shortcomings as a people and purify our hearts to see and love the truth, to accept and defend all things that are just and right, and to propose only those righteous acts and judgments which are in conformity with His will; beseeching Him that He will give victory for our armies as they fight for freedom, wisdom to those who take counsel on our behalf in these days of dark struggle and perplexity, and steadfastness to our people to make sacrifice to the utmost in support of what is just and true, bringing us at last the peace in which men's hearts can be at rest because it is founded upon mercy, justice, and good will."

At this time when the thought of the world is being turned through sacrifice and suffering toward the realities of Spirit, Christian Scientists should strive to gain the deep spiritual import of Mrs. Eddy's "Prayer for Country and Church" (Christian Science versus Pantheism, p. 14).

Mrs. Eddy has pointed out that "prayer means that we desire to walk and will walk in the light so far as we receive it, even though with bleeding footsteps" (Science and Health, 10:1–3), and that "the highest prayer is not one of faith merely; it is demonstration" (ibid. 16:2–4).

In compliance with the request contained in the President's proclamation there will be a brief service in The Mother Church at 11 a.m. on May 30. The order of service in The Mother Church for this special occasion will be as follows:—

1. Hymn.
2. A brief statement by the First Reader including reading the President's proclamation.
3. Hymn.
4. References suitable to the occasion, from the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy.
5. Silent prayer, followed by the audible repetition of the Lord's Prayer.
6. Hymn.
7. Benediction.

The Annual Business Meeting of The Mother Church

WHEN the Communion season in The Mother Church was abolished by Mrs. Eddy in 1908, it was pointed out that the seating capacity of The Mother Church Extension is limited to five thousand. Thus it will be seen that in order to avoid disappointment among the members, the demonstration must be made each year of limiting the attendance at the annual business meeting to the capacity of the edifice.

Mrs. Eddy has said (Miscellany, p. 125) that the annual business meeting of The Mother Church is "a grave guardian" because, as she explained, it requires us "to report progress, to refresh memory, to rejuvenate the branches and to vivify the buds, to bend upward the tendrils and to incline the vine towards the parent trunk."

According to the provisions of the By-laws no others than the officers of The Mother Church are required to be present, but in accordance with the established custom The Mother Church extends a loving welcome to its members, and requests them to aid in demonstrating an attendance at our annual meetings which shall not exceed the present seating capacity.

The Red Cross

THE humanitarian work of the Red Cross deserves the recognition and support of all our citizens.

Christian Scientists have assisted and will continue to assist the Red Cross in their work of mercy through financial contributions and by their loving cooperation in every consistent way to the end that the usefulness of the Red Cross may be increased and the efficiency of its humanitarian service upheld. It should not be lost sight of, however, that The Mother Church has established and is maintaining extensive war relief agencies which are being constantly extended and which are accomplishing satisfactory and far-reaching results. Christian Scientists naturally feel that their first allegiance is to this work and that the first demand for their support is from their own war relief activities.

The Work of Mercy

THE affairs of the world will increasingly prosper as there is more general recognition and valuing of the qualities of mind which may be termed womanly, whether manifested by men or by women. Among these qualities is mercy. Animalism cannot apprehend mercy, nor can materialism express it, because mercy in human expression is the reflection of Principle. Always "merciful and gracious" is Principle, God—"His mercy endureth for ever." Moreover Principle is complete, expressing both fatherhood and motherhood, and the mind governed by Principle, and manifesting characteristics which are its "image and likeness" cannot be imperfect, or one-sided, or incomplete. Man, therefore, cannot be a partial thinker but must express all the qualities of God.

One of the most beautiful expressions of womanly mercy and manly courage in the past was the work done in the Crimea by Florence Nightingale. She thoroughly prepared herself for her work and brought out certain qualifications, two of which our Leader speaks in the Manual as being among others necessary (Art. VIII, Sect. 31). Mrs. Eddy says that the nurse must be one "who thoroughly understands the practical wisdom necessary in a sick room, and who can take proper care of the sick." In this latter respect Florence Nightingale was perhaps the best equipped woman of her time, and when she reached the Crimea with the forty nurses who were under her care there was an opportunity to discover the influence and value of woman's work of mercy.

The marvelous increase in the percentage of recoveries of the wounded after her work began showed a great cessation of fear and discouragement. With the coming of a woman actuated by a Christian spirit some new element evidently was brought into effective operation. Hope and faith must have been aroused, and love must have mastered fear, to have brought recovery to so many of the wounded men.

What enabled this woman and her assistants to accomplish the results which seem to many unbelievably good? They must have looked to Principle in some way, and found the answer to prayer for guidance in a vision of man as more than flesh and blood.

The Red Cross Society was formed to carry out, broadly speaking, the work of mercy as thus defined: "Its objects are to care for the wounded in war, and secure the neutrality of nurses, hospitals, etc., and to relieve suffering occasioned by pestilence, floods, fire, and other calamities" (Century Dictionary). When Clara Barton was president of this association, Mrs. Eddy, with a woman's spiritual intuition, appraised and praised her work. She recognized her (Miscellany, p. 297) as "soldier, patriot, philanthropist, moralist, and stateswoman." Under her guidance the Red Cross Society had the absolute confidence of the whole country, and though both men and women were working together, the guiding ideal seemed to be woman's vision of mercy and good will.

While the work of mercy is universal, the Red Cross Society directs a considerable part of the work of ministry, especially to the sick and wounded, be they friend or foe. In such work as this, whether done by individuals or societies, what better guide and inspiration could be found than Mrs. Eddy's definition of prayer (No and Yes, p. 39): "True prayer is not asking God for love; it is learning to love, and to include all mankind in one affection. Prayer is the utilization of the love wherewith He loves us. Prayer begets an awakened desire to be and do good. It makes new and scientific discoveries of God, of His goodness and power."

The question of assisting the Red Cross Society has been and still is one for the individual decision of Christian Scientists. It would be impossible to estimate the thousands or tens of thousands of dollars contributed by them in good will with the expectation that a good percentage of the amount would go for genuine work of mercy. The thing which is touching and inspiring in the work of the Red Cross Society is the way in which men and women are finding opportunity for the expression of a true humanity. There is endless opportunity for the operation of human kindness. Its voluntary service employs the love and devotion of both men and women to feed the hungry, clothe the unprotected, nurse the sick, and care for the wounded. One is reminded of the "lady with a lamp" and her work of ministry, wherein she found such spiritual support. Mrs. Eddy proved this same law of good in her own experience, being uplifted and sustained in her toil for humanity. Hence she says (Science and Health, p. 385): "It is proverbial that Florence Nightingale and other philanthropists engaged in humane labors have been able to undergo without sinking fatigues and exposures which ordinary people could not endure. The explanation lies in the support which they derived from the divine law, rising above the human."

On the Topmost Bough

WHEN the storms shake the vineyards and the olive trees, only the most tenacious fruit maintains its hold. When the harvesters gather the grapes and shake the olive branches, only the hidden clusters and the berries on the topmost boughs or the farthest out of reach remain. When mental storms shake humanity, only those qualities which are farthest from the earth and the supposedly solid matter of trunk and branch keep their places. The carnal mind, satiated with its fury, finds these incomprehensible qualities too distant for its grasp. The effort to bring them down would be unprofitable, it argues. In this way the choice products of tree and vine, the oil and wine, may be saved from the destructive passions of the devourer. Isaiah prophesying punishment for Israel's idolatry declared, "Yet gleaning grapes shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof, saith the Lord God of Israel."

Present day world conditions are similar to those described by Isaiah with reference to Israel. The idolatry of to-day takes a different form in appearance but remains the same in essence. It is the belief in the power of matter rather than Spirit, bringing forth its own destruction. The belief of life in matter, mind in matter, sensation in matter, virtually sets up images of wood and stone and metal to be worshiped, and to them the flesh is sacrificed. Though the names of Baal, Moloch, or Vishnu may not be in use, the idolatry of matter continues under other names. Indeed, the worship of the more attenuated forms of matter in human will power and so-called human intelligence has reached the very zenith of evil to-day and is ready for destruction. Under these circumstances the spiritually minded are like the berries "in the top of the uppermost bough" and "in the outmost fruitful branches." They are beyond the reach of the marauder, safe from the stones and staves of the destroyer.

For what shall save at this hour but the Science of Christianity? Tradition, dogma and doctrine, scholasticism and ceremonials, have no saving grace in and of themselves to withstand the storm; they fall to the ground and are heard of no more. A theoretical Christianity cannot weather malignant gusts of hate propelled by hypnotic will power. The accumulated learning of the ages shrivels before the blasts of greed and revenge. Nothing less than a demonstrable religion can breast the hurricane; but this is already at hand firmly founded by its Discoverer, Mary Baker Eddy. Christian Science does not fall before the storm, for it is based upon the spiritual understanding of God, man, and the universe. The supposititious forces of evil do not take it by surprise, for all of evil has already been uncovered by the spiritual searchlight which it throws upon men and things. The Scriptures spiritually interpreted describe present day conditions and point to the inevitable restoration of Israel purged of its idolatry. The Christian Scientist who has followed the law of progress has risen above the blackness of the old world, leans no longer on the broken reeds of physiology and so-called physical science, of materialized religion, formalism, superstition, and fanaticism, and is found safe and sound "in the top of the uppermost bough," and "in the outmost fruitful branches."

Upon one occasion Mrs. Eddy was presented with a loving-cup. Of its adornment she wrote in words which may be found on page 347 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany": "The exquisite design of boughs encircling this cup, illustrated by Keats' touching couplet, would almost suggest that nature had reproduced her primal presence, bough, bird, and song, to salute me." The advancing Christian Scientist reads in nature parables for his comfort and illumination, as Jesus related them to his contemporaries. Many illustrations have been drawn from the olive and the vine. At this hour the warning goes forth to all who are working in God's vineyard and gathering the berries for the oil: "See thou hurt not the oil and the wine,"

> Ah happy, happy boughs, that cannot shed
> Your leaves, nor ever bid the Spring adieu!

Digitized by Google

—spare the tendrils of budding love, the oil of gladness, and the wine of inspiration. Then when the storms break and error is unchained for its own destruction it can be truthfully said: "At that day shall a man look to his Maker, and his eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel."

Strength and Courage

AT this hour we may well recall the words of strong assurance spoken by Moses to the people whom he was leading toward the realization of freedom, and that, too, in the face of their enemies. He said: "Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." We find these inspired words repeated by Joshua after he had taken command of the tribes, and this was added to Moses' words: "This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous, and then thou shalt have good success."

A superficial reading of the Old Testament might leave with us the impression that the children of Israel in their journeyings from Egypt into the promised land were simply bent on material conquest, as were those who had preceded them, and it is more than likely that a great many of the people were not sufficiently advanced spiritually to see any farther than this; hence their ceaseless disappointments and their long delays in realizing the good which they sought. If, however, we seek the truer meaning of the inspired word, we shall find that the real children of Israel were not represented by "Israel after the flesh." We must therefore think of this people as the pioneers of pure and undefiled religion based upon spiritual law, for we shall then better understand what they undertook to do and what they accomplished. It cannot be denied that so long as Israel kept the light of a pure spiritual ideal burning upon their altars, their enemies vanished before them, and peace and prosperity characterized them as a people; indeed the very reason for their national existence was that they might themselves hold sacred this divine ideal and extend its blessings to all the nations of the earth as they were ready to receive them. Had not God made this promise to Abraham: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed"?

With this in view we shall understand better the destiny of the American nation, which owes its very existence to the pure purpose of establishing justice and righteousness within its borders, and extending these divine ideas to all with whom its citizens come in any wise in contact. It is no vain thing that to-day all the peoples of the earth are looking toward this great nation for the help which can only come through the understanding of divine law and obedience thereto; and as the men and women of this country are giving of their best to support those who hold like ideals with their own, they need to draw ceaselessly upon the Life which is life indeed for their strength and courage.

Many there are who have been lifted out of the very depths of sickness and suffering by holding firmly to these inspired words of Mrs. Eddy on page 393 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Rise in the strength of Spirit to resist all that is unlike good. God has made man capable of this, and nothing can vitiate the ability and power divinely bestowed on man." At times the temptation may come to wish that in some way we could have evaded the issues of this hour and escaped the trial of our strength in the world's great conflict, but this would be the same as to believe that we could dally with temptation on the ground that we were not strong enough to face the foe and gain a victory, which in itself would be a virtual denial of both the justice and power of divine Love. Even if we could have delayed for a time the final issue while others suffered, we should fail utterly to read history aright, to see that in spite of mortal belief righteousness always prevails in the end; and the end is never far off to those who refuse to acknowledge anything except the supremacy of God, good. A poet has said:—

> Happy are all free peoples, too strong to be dispossessed,
> But blessed are those among nations, who dare to be strong for the rest!

This nation has in past years proved itself strong, and now has come the testing time, when it may—indeed, when it will—prove its strength far more grandly than it had ever dared to think,—prove it because on battle field and in the home alike, thought will turn from the frailty of the flesh and fleshly mind, and find in entire reliance upon the infinity of good the strength which can never fail.

Of old the psalmist said of God: "He shall judge the world in righteousness, he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness," and if for a moment faith should seem to falter, we may remember Paul's words, "The weakness of God is stronger than men." We must not forget that man's dominion over all evil comes direct from God. It means nothing less than his reflection of the divine nature; and in Christian Science, man as God knows him is never separated from God, nor would it be possible to think of God as strong and man as weak. This godlikeness with all it implies must be brought out by each one in the pure realization that nothing else is worth while except to know God and to express the divine nature; and at the present hour we may rest assured that the kingdom of God is indeed drawing nigh to humanity, and it is for us to respond unceasingly to the divine demand which comes down through the ages, "Be strong and of a good courage . . . for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

Current Notes

FILLMORE, CAL.—Last Saturday [March 2] the Fillmore Christian Science Society acquired the corner at Central Avenue and Third Street, with a frontage of 140 feet on the former and 105 feet on the latter. This is the site of a church edifice the society plans to build. It is an admirable one for the purpose, and the Herald hopes to see it adorned with the new house of worship at no distant date.

GREAT FALLS, MONT.—Beginning on Easter Sunday [March 31] First Church of Christ, Scientist, changed the place for holding services from its church building at First Avenue North and Eleventh Street to the Masonic Temple Auditorium. The move has been found necessary on account of the crowded condition at all services of the church, which is no longer large enough to accommodate the audiences.

For a considerable time the Christian Science church has been crowded, and in the hope of meeting the situation the people were requested to attend the evening services, when convenient; but the attendance kept growing, with the result that every Sunday the building was overcrowded at both services, and the same condition obtained at the Wednesday evening testimony meetings.

The present church building was erected in 1911, and the first services were conducted in it on Thanksgiving Day of that year. That was seven years after the organization of the church in Great Falls, and it is an interesting coincidence that seven years later it has again been found necessary to find larger quarters, although when the present church was built it was believed of ample size to accommodate the attendance for many years to come. The church organization has for some time owned a double corner at First Avenue and Thirteenth Street.

The Lectures

BARRINGTON, ILL. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Earl Virden, Sr., who said in part:—

Before I had any intimate knowledge of Christian Science, I had the hackneyed opinion that Christian Scientists were an overzealous class of fanatics who worshiped Mrs. Eddy, and I frankly admit that one Sunday morning I left my home and went to one of their churches in Chicago to get a good look at these people to see what they were like. Very much to my surprise I noticed going into this church a lot of representative people of Chicago, men whom I knew—some of them my friends. I was prompted to remain to the close of the service in order that I might take another look at them. The next Sunday I ventured into the church and enjoyed the simple and interesting service. On Wednesday evening I attended a testimony meeting and came away with the impression that Christian Scientists were either the greatest prevaricators I had ever heard or Christian Science was the most wonderful thing in all the world. I was prompted to investigate it further, so procured a copy of the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and some of the other writings by Mrs. Eddy, and looked into the subject a little more.

I was surprised to find that there were something like twelve hundred churches of this denomination. I learned that The Mother Church had been dedicated at a cost of nearly two million dollars and that about forty thousand Christian Scientists had assembled on the occasion of this dedication. As I became interested in the textbook I found that Christian Scientists depend absolutely on God to meet every need, but I could not understand how, if there was anything the matter with me, I could altogether depend on God. I thought if there was anything wrong with my body, something would have to be put in it or on it, something would have to be done to it—that God had to be helped along. A little later, however, there came about in my life a condition that apparently was about to wreck my future, and I readily began to appreciate that there was nothing of a material nature which would alter the situation; I had an opportunity to put the matter to the test, and am very happy to say to-night that even a slight understanding of Christian Science has helped me to pursue my duties intelligently; has taken care of every need that has come into my life in the past five years.

VINCENNES, IND. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by George W. Opell, who said in part:—

The message of Christian Science is not a message of material things, man-made doctrines, or dead ceremonies, but a message of the Christ, Truth, that our Master taught and practiced and "commended to his followers" (Science and Health, p. 35)—a practical, demonstrable, everyday religion, by which he was able to meet every need of mankind.

Testimonies of Healing

A good many years ago, after being told by one of our most eminent surgeons that while a serious surgical operation was my only hope, I would never be well again as I had waited too long, I walked out of his office, refusing even to discuss the subject further. Then for days followed a battle with self, after which I asked my husband to have another talk with the physician and see if he would not hold out the promise of a possible healing and, if not, to ascertain if I was to be benefited enough to justify the operation. This he did, only to be again told I could never be well, although I would be in much better health. I then accepted all that surgery had to offer me and submitted to the operation, and for the following six years was practically under medical treatment and taking medicine all the time. At intervals I seemed to improve; then would come periods of such intense suffering that it seemed as if in a few days I would lose all the ground I had gained. The physician finally told me again, as he had six years before, that I would always have these spells.

A few months after this we began to investigate Christian Science for healing for another member of the family, and while reading Science and Health I was instantaneously healed—made "every whit whole." I had been reading at intervals for about six weeks, and did not know anyone could be healed by reading the book; besides, I was not reading with any idea of healing for myself. My physical condition had caused intense headaches lasting for days, and relief from them was the first sign of the healing, it being probably two weeks before I realized that an internal organ had gone back into place and an enlargement had disappeared. The conditions which had been pronounced incurable were healed in a moment.

The healing came while reading of Jesus' three days' work in the tomb and his triumph over death. For me the stone was indeed rolled away, thought lifted above the crucified Jesus to discern the risen Christ. For the first time I realized it was the Christ-principle demonstrated by Jesus which enabled him to heal the sick, and that the same living, healing Christ is ever present here and now. This experience took place more than seven years ago, and there has never been a touch of these troubles since. I was also healed of inflammatory rheumatism from which I had suffered for years, at times spending the night as well as the day propped up with pillows in a chair, unable even to feed myself.

I am indeed grateful for the physical healing experienced by each member of the family—but most grateful that by following the rule, and demonstrating the Principle of Christian Science, we can daily come into a better knowledge of God. My earnest endeavor is to express my gratitude by living in accordance with the teachings of our Leader.

About five years ago I had an ailment which seven physicians tried to cure, but without any result. When I had about given up all hope, a friend who had been healed in Christian Science advised me to try it, and as a last resort I went to a practitioner, who told me of God's love for His children, that He does not send sickness, trouble, and death, but hope, life, and health, and unfolded to me this new-old truth which Jesus preached to the people nearly two thousand years ago. The result was, that through the power of Truth I was entirely healed of this trouble. Through the clear understanding of Principle, many erroneous conditions that have arisen in my family have been overcome and have gone to their native nothingness. A few of these experiences stand out in bold relief, for at the time they seemed very real. The drink habit was overcome very quickly, a pronounced rupture disappeared in three treatments, and what is known as wild eyelashes, heart trouble, and business problems have all yielded to the truth. Some of these were overcome by our own understanding of God's loving-kindness; others, by the assistance of a practitioner.

While words cannot express our gratitude for these healings, still the spiritual uplift is the most beautiful part of Christian Science, which teaches us man's relation to our Father-Mother God. We are indeed grateful for even a little understanding of the truth and for the many blessings received from Christian Science; also to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, whose writings and teachings are far in advance of the generation in which she lived, and for the privilege of owning and reading her wonderful book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."

EMERSON A. CHAPIN, Reading, Pa.

I have often been impressed with the marvelous results which come from the application to human problems of even a slight knowledge of Christian Science. In June, 1905, it was my privilege to witness a case of instantaneous healing. I was very much surprised; for I had known little of Christian Science, and had supposed that only nervous or imaginary diseases could be healed by it. My first thought was that there must be something good in this religion to produce such results, and instantly there came to me the Bible verse, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

I was filled with desire to know how this healing had been accomplished, so began to question my neighbor, whose healing I had seen. She answered all my questions, and offered to read to me from Science and Health—for at that time I was unable to read, on account of serious trouble with my eyes, from which I had suffered for over twenty-five years. I drank in this wonderful truth about God and His perfect creation as a thirsty plant absorbs water. It satisfied me completely, as the problem of evil, and the thought that God permitted it, had troubled me for many years.

I had no thought that my eyes would be benefited by the study of Christian Science, because I had tried for so many years, without avail, to obtain help for them. Good oculists had treated me for long periods, and I had undergone two operations, only to be told at last that there was no help for me; that all I could do was to take care of my general health and protect my eyes in every possible way. About a week after I began to inquire into Christian Science, I was obliged to take a little boat trip. I went unwillingly, because the reflected light on the water caused such pain, but it seemed my duty to go; so, with my eyes closed behind colored glasses, and even then suffering intensely, I was trying to make the best of the situation. All at once the thought came to apply what I had learned about Christian Science; and there on the boat, I began to think the matter over. I thought about God and His perfect creation, and as I continued to think along this line, I was filled with a great sense of shame as I remembered how often I had said that my eyes would not bear the light. I began to realize that the eye which was made for the light could bear the light, because all that God has made is perfect and eternal.

Suddenly I realized that the pain had stopped. I experienced a sense of surprise and an unspeakable joy. I removed the colored glasses and did not put them on again that day, but looked right out upon the water without any inconvenience. The next day my eyes were in a bad state of pain and inflammation, and I was very fearful of the result of my exposure of them. When the neighbor who had read Science and Health to me came in, I said to her with quite a feeling of anger—for I felt that she had been instrumental in my discomfort—that I would never do such a foolish thing again. I have always been thankful that she answered me as she did. She said, "You have not held the thoughts to-day that you did yesterday, now have you?" I saw at once that it was thought which had determined the condition of my eyes.

I straightway began to "right about face," and for three weeks I prayed without ceasing. In spite of almost constant pain and weakness in my eyes, I still declared God, good, to be infinite and His creation perfect. It was about four months before I was able to read, because of fear. Whenever I attempted to do so, I would invariably remember the prognostications of the oculists. I kept reading a little every day, however, and the fear was finally overcome. Not only has the healing been permanent, but my vision is frequently commented upon by my acquaintances, as I read and do fine crochet work for seven or eight hours a day. I seldom retire before midnight, and the evening is usually given up to work of this kind.

I would like to mention an incident which occurred about the same time and shows again the effectiveness of the application of even a slight knowledge of Truth. Across the street from us there was work being done with horses, and a great deal of cruelty was shown in overloading and then whipping them. Nearly all the neighbors made complaints to the police and the Humane Society, but still this cruelty went on. One morning I awoke very early with a great sense of unhappiness that I could not account for. Upon analyzing my feelings, I found it was dread of witnessing this treatment of the horses. I thought the matter all over with a feeling of almost desperation at my helplessness. Then the thought came that God is an ever present help in trouble. I arose and dressed, although it was not yet light, and sat down to work out this problem by the help of Christian Science. I knew that all of God's ideas are under divine protection, and that man as His image and likeness reflects wisdom, justice, love. I worked in this way for some time, affirming the truth until I felt that the work was done. When the men came to work that morning, they brought an extra team of horses, and every load that was drawn in was met by this team and easily handled by four horses, where it had been nearly impossible with two. The work continued for three weeks, and in that time I heard only one blow struck.

During the past twelve years we have had many healings in our family, but the greatest blessing that has come to us is the knowledge that God is good; that He neither knows, creates, nor allows evil; and that, as our Leader says (Science and Health, p. 183), "the supposed laws which result in weariness and disease are not His laws, for the legitimate and only possible action of Truth is the production of harmony."

I wish to express my gratitude for the many blessings that I have received through the understanding of Christian Science. Many beautiful healings have been experienced by myself and my family, and I am most grateful for them; but the spiritual uplift means far more to me. Although I seemed to make very slow progress, still on looking back I find that whenever I clung to the truth unswervingly, I was never without proof of its power. Every day I have more love for Mrs. Eddy, who was patient with all mankind and held steadfastly to God and His idea. I had tried nearly all that the medical profession had to offer, even to a diet, but finding material means did not cure me, I turned to Christian Science and was healed of chronic bowel disorder in a few treatments. Many other ailments, such as colds, throat trouble, and severe headaches, are being overcome through the realization of the truth. I never felt better in my life than at the present time. I am very grateful for all the help I have received and have been able to give to others, also for our literature.

MRS. JOSEPHINE CROSLEY, Ardmore, Okla.

After training as a hospital nurse, I was called up for service as a nursing sister in South Africa during the Boer War. These, with other experiences, brought me to the conclusion that drugs were of no use in healing the sick, and surgery only in cases of accident, though I still believed in dieting and hygiene.

Then a friend calling to see me in Johannesburg told me what she had heard of Christian Science—that the sick were being healed in the way that Jesus and his disciples healed them. When she inquired if I thought such a thing possible to-day, I replied that Jesus did say, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," so it must be possible, and I asked her to tell me all she had heard about this religion. She told me Mrs. Eddy had written a textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," that the first chapter was entitled "Prayer," at the end of which was an interpretation of the Lord's Prayer. Within a few days I borrowed a copy of this book, and turning to page 16 began to read this prayer. Mrs. Eddy's interpretation of the first line made me pause—to think she had discovered that God is Mother as well as Father. What a revelation of completeness! I read the whole prayer, and the sentence that stood out above all the others was, "Give us grace for to-day; feed the famished affections." I had often wondered what the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread," really meant, and here at last, I knew, was its true meaning.

I continued to read the book every spare moment, and in my desire to know more of Life, Truth, and Love, I slept little for three nights. During those days I realized such harmony that I went through all my duties without a hitch, while a sore finger that had troubled me for weeks was healed. This experience convinced me that the same Principle could overcome any form of disease; one had but to gain an understanding of its rule. Through the loving help of a practitioner I was healed of headaches and biliousness. I was thankful to be freed from these ailments, but am most grateful for the many blessings that have come through the overcoming of extreme nervousness, fear, worry, and pride. I now rejoice in the light which Science and Health throws on the Bible, making clear its spiritual meaning and so giving us our daily bread abundantly.

I gave a testimony similar to this in First Church of Christ, Scientist, London, some time ago, and the rich experience which enabled me to do this may prove interesting. For weeks I had been wanting to give it, but had not the courage to stand up and do so. One morning, while I was busy in my room, the words, "Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast," came so clearly to me, that I felt impelled to get the Bible and read of the marriage in Cana of Galilee. It gave me a fuller, clearer sense of this so-called miracle than I had experienced before, and I saw that I must obey this command and give of the inspiration which I have so often received—that a testimony meeting is a great feast of Love. These angels of God's presence enabled me to stand up and speak without a qualm. This has been a great blessing to me, for it has broken the mesmerism of limitation.

I wish to express my heartfelt thanks for the publication of the article "Life" (Sentinel, Feb. 2, 1918) by our dear Leader. What a blessing it will be to those on the battle field; it is such a clear statement about life and so completely disposes of death, the illusion people have feared so much. Words cannot express my gratitude for Christian Science; it can only be shown in daily deeds of loving service to others.—MRS. MARY WELLMAN, London, England.

In the hope that this testimony will help many who are struggling with the generally accepted views of scholastic theology, as I was, and in gratitude for a helpful, consistent, reasonable religion, gained from the study of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I gladly write some of my experiences in Christian Science. The daughter of a minister, granddaughter of a bishop, with two uncles, a brother, and a cousin also ministers, I naturally heard much religious discussion and teaching from early childhood, but never did I hear that which would comfort me in trouble or stress of any kind, or that was a help in time of need, until I read a few copies of the Christian Science Sentinel given me by a neighbor. There for the first time I saw plainly that God is not both a good and a bad intelligence, but good only. The vexed doctrines of theology, which had worried me for years, were logically and satisfactorily settled by reading Science and Health.

I became so interested in the study of this religion, that I forgot to wear my glasses, which an oculist said would always have to be worn; also forgot my body to a great extent, and suddenly realized that I had been healed of neuritis of eighteen years' standing, sick headaches, catarrh, corns, a throat trouble, rheumatism, and an irritable temper. These healings took place nearly nine years ago.

The physical healing constitutes the smallest part of what I have to be grateful for in Christian Science, which is to me the Comforter that the world can neither give nor take away, as I have recently been able to prove in giving up two dear sons, one to serve in the Navy, and one now serving in the Army, having already left for France. In this experience, which humanly speaking leaves me entirely alone in the home, I am uniformly calm and happy, and glad to give my boys to "aid in the ejection of error" (Science and Health, p. 97). I can realize with the Master that "the Father hath not left me alone," and also for my boys that He will give His angels charge over them to keep them in all their ways.

I have the deepest appreciation of, and admiration for, the work so vigorously and splendidly done at our headquarters. I am grateful beyond measure for the help of our periodicals, which constantly replenish our spiritual thinking; also for the priceless privilege of class instruction. The greatest sense of happiness I have ever known, however, has been felt when I have been able to help others. I have much yet to learn, and am striving to eliminate from my consciousness as fast as possible all erroneous thinking, that I may be a better transparency for Truth. Mrs. Eddy has not shunned declaring to us the whole gospel of the Christ.

MRS. SUSAN A. PACKER, Chicago, Ill.

In February, 1913, Christian Science was brought into my home by a dear friend. At the time I could not turn myself in bed or even hold the telephone to call a practitioner, and I had not slept for two weeks except from exhaustion. As a medical nurse I recognized that my condition was serious and that something must be done quickly, for medicine was not helping me. The only relief offered me was an opiate which I would not take, because my mother was then living under the bondage of morphine which had at first been given her to deaden the sense of pain. I therefore turned to Christian Science for my healing. After the practitioner had given me an absent treatment, I slept from nine o'clock in the evening until four the next morning. Next day he came to see me and gave me another treatment. A short while after he left, I was able to lay my arm out on a pillow; it had been drawn to my side so I could not move it. To-day I am well and strong.

I am also glad to tell of my mother's wonderful healing through Christian Science, a year and a half ago. She is seventy-three years old, and had been taking morphine for fourteen years. In three days she was healed, and in five days was eating anything she wanted. About three months afterward she tended and raised about eighty-five chickens and had quite a nice little garden. While she was using the drug she was too weak to do this.

I hope some one will read this testimony who is living in bondage, and will be as grateful to Mrs. Eddy as I am for the wonderful truth that she so lovingly gave to the world.

MRS. SARAH WILLIAMS, Alhambra, Cal.

The testimonies in the Sentinel and the Journal have been such a comfort and help to me that I want to add my mite, and thus perhaps help some one else who is struggling to grow in the understanding of Truth. Brought up in an orthodox church, ritual and form meant much to me, and I loved the beauty of the song service; but as life's problems pressed upon me,—and I had many,—I did not find the comfort needed, and when sorrow knocked at my door, instead of having a God to whom I could go and there find rest and peace, I had only a God to fear! This fear grew, and with it resentment; I could not see why so much sorrow should come to me and mine, and rebelled at the idea of loving a God who had chastened me so severely. Why was I treated like an automaton with no reasoning powers, if I were, as the Bible said, God's image, and as our church catechism stated, a "child of God and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven"? These feelings and arguments frightened me, and I grew to dread the thought of church, especially the communion service. Only since I have come into Christian Science have I understood why the communion affected me so; for I had been a member of the church since childhood and an earnest worker in it, too. I now see that I dwelt too much upon the physical sufferings of Christ Jesus, and made them such a reality that his blessed mission and his true self as God's Son were hidden from me.

I had for years been a nervous semi-invalid; my condition was due entirely to overdoing and imagination and a horror of disease of all kinds. I grew steadily worse, and was in a critical condition for months. Through the care of my husband and my own determination not to allow nerves to get the mastery over me—for I had been told that there was no organic trouble—I began slowly to improve, but I longed for a tangible religion. It was all very well to try to be optimistic; but if God did not send illness, why did He allow it? Then, after years of suffering, both mental and physical, the truth of Christian Science came to me. It came very slowly; but as the understanding of God as Love grew in my consciousness, nothing else seemed to matter; for had I not at last found a loving Father? It had been so hard all those years to want to love Him, yet to feel that I could not, because of His seeming injustice! But to know Him as Love, as the Father-Mother God who sends only good, as divine Principle forever operative and always present, was so beautiful after the weary years of doubt and resentment!

The way was far from easy for me, for I had so much to overcome in the old belief; each limitation had to be broken down. The coldness and misunderstanding of loved ones was hard to bear; but as each erroneous belief was overcome and its nothingness proved, the freedom was very sweet and restful, and more than worth while. I found it no easy matter, however, to be a Christian Scientist. Mrs. Eddy says, "Prayer, watching, and working, combined with self-immolation, are God's gracious means for accomplishing whatever has been successfully done for the Christianization and health of mankind" (Science and Health, p. 1). I am daily and hourly proving this statement to be true, as well as others our Leader has so lovingly given us in her books. Constant watching of our thoughts and speech, absolute selflessness, and a desire to grow more and more up to the stature of the Christ, alone enable one to demonstrate even in a slight degree this beautiful and scientific truth.

It is over three years since I began this study, and I have had many proofs of Truth's power to heal. A severely injured ankle was healed overnight, allowing me to resume my duties as usual the next day without even a trace of the trouble. One of the deepest sorrows of my life has been overcome, and a sense of resentment has been proved so unreal that peace exists where, in the old belief, bitterness and hate would have followed. I have felt the joy of lifting the burden from many shoulders as it was lifted from mine, and have also been the channel for a number of healings both physical and mental. As our understanding grows we know that "love never faileth" (Rev. Ver.) Christian Science leads us gently so to reflect divine Love as to be ever eager to give the cup of cold water to all who are ready to receive it.

Mrs. Marie Stuart Taylor, Washington, D. C.

I would like to express my gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me. I have been healed of stomach and bowel trouble of many years' standing; also of extreme nervousness and fear. Two doctors kindly advised me to try Christian Science, realizing they could do nothing more for me. I am most grateful, however, for the spiritual understanding that is daily unfolding to me, and for freedom from resentment and criticism, which I realize were to a large extent the cause of my suffering. Christian Science is a daily help in our family of six, and never fails. It has been our only help for nearly four years. Through it we have overcome a great sense of lack, and now we know that divine Love does meet our every need.

Words cannot express my thankfulness to God and to our Way-shower, Christ Jesus, and I am deeply grateful to Mrs. Eddy for this beautiful truth. My great desire is to live daily so as to reflect that Mind which was in Christ Jesus, and do to others as I would like them to do to me.

The early spring of 1905 found me "having no hope, and without God in the world." According to the diagnosis of many good physicians, I had organic heart trouble, Bright's disease, and enlargement of the liver. I was addicted to the liquor and tobacco habits in their most aggravated forms. I became interested in Christian Science through attending a Sunday service. The next day I purchased the book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and at the first reading I was convinced of the truth, and began to recover physically. The liquor habit left me almost instantly. In three months the tobacco habit followed the procession of ills, and in about a year I awoke to the fact that I was whole in every respect. I owe my recovery to the study of Science and Health, in connection with the Bible, and of the other works by Mrs. Eddy. The authorized publications are beyond price to me as an aid to the study of Christian Science, as is also the knowledge obtained through class instruction.

For all these things I am more than grateful to our Leader, and to all who have helped me to a fuller understanding of God.—Orrin H. Wilkins, Boston, U.S.A.

About five years ago, friends visiting at my home brought the message that in Christian Science I could find healing and strength. The struggle in my heart went on for about three weeks, but finally, as the wonderful meaning of this Science came to me, I forgot about my desire for health, and to know the truth became all important to me. I then took my children and went to a city seven hundred miles distant to study this new-old religion. In less than a month my ill health disappeared, and my little son was cured of severe recurring attacks of a throat affection. Five months later a daughter was born to us, and the birth was almost free from pain. So different was this from former experiences of the kind that it seemed like a miracle. After that I began to study Christian Science in earnest, and about a year later, while I was studying alone one night, a chronic case of wood poisoning, which had appeared every summer for fifteen years, suddenly left and has not returned.

I am especially grateful for the wonderful way the Bible has been unfolded to me. The healing of the body is little compared with the joy of knowing that here and now God is all-power, all-presence, and that in these days if we come with the same understanding and faith, His law will prove itself to us as surely as it did in Bible times, for God is unchanging and "no respecter of persons." Gratitude has taken on new meaning, and David's psalms of rejoicing and words of praise are no longer bits of poetry, but true, and rich with significance.

In order that it may assist others in obtaining the blessings of Christian Science, I take this means of expressing my gratitude for what this healing truth has done for me. Some years ago I was troubled with what is known as a weeping sinew in my wrist, and being a public stenographer it was a great annoyance to me. After having my wrist operated on by two surgeons, both operations being unsuccessful, I tried other methods of remedying this condition, but all to no avail. A girl friend then asked me to try Christian Science, so I went to a practitioner, and very soon was absolutely healed. I worked all the time I was being treated, even though the doctors had told me that my wrist would never get well so long as I continued my present occupation.

For this healing and many other blessings, I am deeply thankful to God, and grateful to all those who have helped to bring this great truth to me.

Miss Elsie C. Duff, New York, N. Y.

From the Press

[From a "Special" to The Christian Science Monitor]

The school committee of this city [Portland, Maine] by a vote of ten to two has adopted the following rule, which becomes effective immediately, in regard to the vaccination of school children: "No child shall attend any public school without furnishing a certificate from some reputable physician that he or she has been successfully vaccinated. Exceptions to this rule will only be made, first, in the case of a pupil whose parents or guardian present satisfactory evidence in a sworn statement that they are opposed to vaccination on principle; and second, in the case of pupils who present from a physician a statement satisfactory to the school committee certifying that they are unfit subjects for vaccination. When it is necessary, in the opinion of the school committee, on account of the presence of smallpox in the city, these unvaccinated pupils may be excluded from school."

This rule was adopted after correspondence with the Board of Education of Cleveland, Ohio, where a similar rule has been put into effect. The experience of Cleveland with this rule was officially reported to be approximately as follows: "Number of children in public schools, 105,000; number of children successfully vaccinated, 100,000; number of children presenting sworn statements, 4000; number of children presenting physicians' statements, 1000."

[From an editorial in Chicago (Ill.) News]

Our social and moral systems are founded upon the absurd theory that the universe exists for the glory and profit of the human race—an animal species of contracted powers and undesirable tendencies—and that the salvation of this race, which somehow has "fallen," is the main business of being. A little reflection ought to show that this interesting but curiously egotistical race plays a relatively unimportant part in the scheme of things. The universal system does not revolve around it. The universe exists, obviously, to express the will of the omnipotence that brings it into being. And, in the expression of that will, the universe, from infinitesimals to infinity, must be governed by invariable, inflexible, perfect law. Nothing outside the omnipotent cause can change that law. It would seem to be the very special business of man the thinker—not man the animal—to discover what the law is and his true place in the general scheme. Then, perhaps, things would go well enough and the muddle in which man continually finds himself would be cleared up by a sunburst of understanding.

The Sentinel

Written for The Christian Science Monitor and published February 16, 1918.

The sentinel does battle, not with steel
Against the armed resistance of the foe,
But with the keener thrust of blades ideal,
That pierce the make-believe of matter through!

At night he walks his post; then must he be
On guard against the swiftly dealt surprise
Or soft advances of the enemy,
And watch that slumber do not seal his eyes.

For should he let his weary footsteps cease,
His heavy eyelids altogether close,
He would secure himself a wretched peace,
But give his brethren over to his foes.

Since only sleepless Mind can keep awake,
The struggle of the ages thus is his,
Denying all that Spirit did not make—
Where is a warfare mightier than this?

For brandish'd steel may ring on brandish'd steel,
And leave a thousand battles still unfought;
But when the power of Spirit stoops to heal,
The victory eternal is in thought!

The Christian Science Sentinel, designated by Mrs. Eddy as "intended to hold guard over Truth, Life, and Love" (The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, page 353), is well exemplified in "The Sentinel" portrayed in the poem above.

The Christian Science Sentinel may be sent to soldiers and sailors at the front or in the camps by utilizing the plan provided by the Postmaster-General of the United States described on the front cover of this issue.

The Strength of an Army

JOHN ELLIS SEDMAN

AS with ever increasing earnestness of purpose the United States prepares to perform to the full its part in the world war, great events in the history of our country appear to its citizens in a clearer light and with a deeper signification. We feel a new thrill as we contemplate the coming of the Pilgrims from the old England they loved to New England, impelled by no mad dream of world conquest but solely by the desire to enjoy, unmolested, the privilege of worshiping God in their own way. In the world's long history, no nation ever had its foundation laid in a purpose more pure; and quite naturally this country was the first to adopt, as a part of its basic law, the provision that its inhabitants should always be free to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. In the light of present events we appreciate more fully than ever before the great blessing which resulted to the whole world from the publication of the Declaration of Independence, which gave new impetus to that ideal of government now so dear to all lovers of liberty everywhere. Christian Scientists perceive that in the forward march of events, only that which was natural and inevitable occurred when Christian Science, the Science of freedom, was discovered in New England, from whence rang out in clear tones that wonderful message to humanity contained in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (pp. 224, 227): "Truth brings the elements of liberty. On its banner is the Soul-inspired motto, 'Slavery is abolished;'" and "Citizens of the world, accept the 'glorious liberty of the children of God,' and be free! This is your divine right."

Our country now faces the situation to which Mrs. Eddy prophetically referred, when she said: "But if our nation's rights or honor were seized, every citizen would be a soldier and woman would be armed with power girt for the hour" (Miscellany, p. 277). To-day, the battalions of the nations are indeed being set in array, and the issue is squarely drawn: Shall freedom and justice be trampled under the heel of tyranny, and all people be brought under the domination of carnal-mindedness, expressing its spurious and despotic power through elaborately developed human organizations; or shall those ideals of civil and religious liberty, with roots extending far back into the centuries, but which first blossomed in America, spread over and possess the earth, in fulfillment of prophecy, and in preparation for that day when every man shall be his own king and his own priest, and Christ's kingdom shall be established on earth as in heaven?

As our army takes its place beside those other armies which are fighting with a steadfastness and heroism possible only to those who fight for Principle, and we consider the power of this army (and it is destined to be an army of tremendous power; let us make no mistake about that), thought turns to Old Testament days. We see the shepherd boy, fresh from tending his flock, meet and overthrow the giant champion of the Philistines, not because a sling and a stone constitute a superior weapon, but because the youthful shepherd fought for "a cause" which he knew was right, and clearly realized that right alone has power. Had David accepted Goliath's invitation to "come down" to his mental level of trust in carnality he would have fared no better than the soldiers of Saul, who for forty days had fled before the giant's display of physical force. But the dauntless shepherd boy, who had seen the moral issue involved so clearly that he had dared to rescue an innocent lamb from a greed-impelled bear or lion, instantly saw what an untenable position Goliath occupied when, trusting in brute force, he defied the God of the armies of Israel, and proposed to enslave those who worshiped the only true God. This moral courage and spiritual discernment were David's real strength when he faced the Philistine, and they gave him both freedom and power to reveal the victory of Principle.

Again we remember brave Gideon, that "mighty man of valour," who was inspired by God to free his land and people from the wanton destructiveness and aggression of the Midianites and their allies. When he advanced to meet the foe, Gideon's trust in spiritual might grew steadily stronger, until he dared to reduce his army to a band of three hundred ardent, faithful followers; and with this small force he put to rout a multitude of armed men. Thus he made plain the lesson that the strength of an army lies not in its size, but rests on its trust in and devotion to God, good.

We ponder the fearlessness and perfect calm with which Elisha greeted the news that the host of the king of Syria had surrounded Dothan to capture him, and we recognize in the gentleness with which he dealt with those Syrians, rendered powerless to do him harm by his clear understanding of what really constitutes power, a proof of the statement, "Tenderness accompanies all the might imparted by Spirit" (Science and Health, p. 514). So we might go on through the long list of moral heroes, "who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens."

But when we meditate on these things, upon no point should we dwell more than upon this, that, since God's eternal law never changes, whatever has been possible is still possible to man. Every one knows the distressful method employed by human ingenuity when it undertakes to remove an abnormal growth from a human body; yet thousands know that Christian Science treatment, by eliminating the belief in an abnormal growth from human consciousness, thereby causes to disappear from the human body the manifestation of that diseased belief, as painlessly as dawns the morning light. Why then should we not realize that it is possible for an army to win a righteous victory without harm to itself? Did not brave Dewey sail into Manila Harbor and conquer the fleet of the foe without losing a single ship or a single man?

The same divine law which sustained Jesus and John and Paul, which brought the three Hebrew captives safely through the fiery furnace, and Daniel through the lions' den, sustained Washington and Dewey, and operates to-day to sustain, empower, and protect every soldier who fights for the freedom of humanity, and against the aggressiveness of the carnal mind. The more clearly this is realized by our soldiers and their friends, the more quickly and the less painfully will the victory be won, and the more impressive will be the lesson to all mankind. Whatever adds to the spiritual equipment of our soldiers is of supreme importance. How irresistible in power can be an army thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the ninety-first psalm, supported by chaplains, personal and impersonal, and by friends at home, who understand God well enough to pray "the prayer of faith," and who realize for the men the truth of the grand promise: "Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation; there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways." Something of this spirit does imbue our army, our nation, and its allies, and is destined to take possession of it more and more. Then with ever increasing confidence, of each brave soldier, lover of his country, friend and servant of mankind, we may truly say, in the words of one of our hymns:—

The Christian warrior, see him stand
  In the whole armor of his God;
The Spirit's sword is in his hand;
  His feet are with the gospel shod.

With this omnipotence he moves;
  From this the alien armies flee;
Till more than conqueror he proves,
  Through Christ, who gives him victory.

Compassion

DUNCAN SINCLAIR

EVERY student of the New Testament is familiar with the parables of the good Samaritan and the prodigal son; and all who read them are struck by their simplicity and by the depth of the compassion which they illustrate. In the story of the good Samaritan, as given in the tenth chapter of Luke, a man is portrayed as having been wounded and left lying helpless by the wayside. While he is in this pitiable condition, a priest and, after him, a Levite come his way, see him, and pass by "on the other side." "But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him." The narrative then recounts the practical result of the good Samaritan's compassion,—the placing of the injured man tenderly under the care of those who would look after him till he recovered.

Again, is it not the father's attitude of compassion toward the erring boy in the parable of the prodigal son which indicates the power that leads the wanderer back to the home where peace and love and the healthfulness of purity abide? How wonderful are the words: "And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him." Compassion was there,—compassion, the outcome of that deep, spiritual consciousness which kept realizing, even when evil seemed to human sense most real, the indestructible nature of good, the omnipotence of Love, and persisted until it healed the contrite heart.

There are significant lessons in these parables. Everybody who has taken up the study of Christian Science seriously and who is endeavoring to live in conformity with its teachings should know that, while the letter is necessary, it is "the spirit that quickeneth." One might be able to memorize the words in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" without being able to heal a single case of sin or sickness metaphysically. Behind the letter, making it yield up the gold of its spiritual meaning, must be the true Christian spirit, itself based on an understanding of the reality and allness of good. In her Message for 1902 (p. 18) Mrs. Eddy states the invariable attitude of Christ Jesus when she says: "Jesus was compassionate, true, faithful to rebuke, ready to forgive. He said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

The Nazarene is universally reckoned the most godlike man who ever lived in this world; his power for good cannot be disputed. He healed all manner of sickness and sin, and he raised the dead, overruling in each case so-called material law. How did he do these wonderful works? Christian Science gives the explanation. It was through his clear understanding of the allness of God and of God's perfect spiritual creation. Jesus knew so much about reality, about God and His ideas, and in consequence was so thoroughly aware of the false nature of every belief of evil which might endeavor to attach itself to mankind, that he was able to stand as one detached from the world even while in it, and thus to behold with compassion the struggles and trials of his fellow men, and to be always ready to heal the humble and contrite when they approached him. Jesus wept before the materialism of Jerusalem which pointed to its inevitable destruction. The evil beliefs of the world wounded him sorely, but they served also to make manifest the purity of his consciousness in the compassion which was symbolized in his tears.

It is impossible to dissociate Jesus' healings from compassion, but he did not condone evil at any time. He was aware how tragically it deceived the world. He could rebuke evil when the occasion demanded; but behind the rebuke there always lay his knowledge of the omnipotence of divine Love. It must ever be the same in Christian Science practice. The necessity may arise to point out the error of a certain line of thought or conduct, but how wisely it has to be done! Unless the Christian Scientist can do so with the compassion which springs from his own understanding of the omnipresence of divine Love, it were better far he should remain silent. The sick are sometimes peculiarly sensitive. How necessary, then, to approach them with one's consciousness radiating the truth of being. It is not the mere presence of the Christian Science practitioner which heals; it is his understanding of Truth that enables him to detect the error and uncover it, that it may be destroyed. Mrs. Eddy writes on page 365 of Science and Health: "If the Scientist reaches his patient through divine Love, the healing work will be accomplished at one visit, and the disease will vanish into its native nothingness like dew before the morning sunshine." That is not an uncommon experience in Christian Science practice; and it is one which fills all who come within its range with unspeakable gratitude.

Compassion is a benign state of consciousness resulting from spiritual understanding. It cannot be thought of as existing by itself. With it are always associated affection, faith, hope, humility, honesty. The combination serves to measure in no uncertain way a man's spiritual understanding of Truth. It were well to stand still frequently to find out just where we are, to ascertain as accurately as may be how far we are faithful and obedient to Principle; and this will be indicated by the compassion of which we are capable in our dealings with suffering humanity. Compassion is of close kindred to charity, which Paul extolled in the immortal thirteenth chapter of I Corinthians. Who can forget his summing up? "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

The granite of error is oftentimes hard to dissolve. The human mind resists the truth, and human beings often refuse to acknowledge it until suffering has convinced them of the futility of all so-called material aids; but whenever they turn in earnest toward Truth, they have to be met by loving-kindness and compassion. The broken heart must first be bound up, and then the healing will follow. Mrs. Eddy states the relationship which should exist between the Christian Scientist and those he would help, when she says (Science and Health, p. 366): "If we would open their prison doors for the sick, we must first learn to bind up the broken-hearted." And surely the inference is that compassion must always be the handmaiden of spiritual understanding.

Making Our Burden Light

LAURENE HOOK

"EVERY man's word shall be his burden," was the edict of the prophet Jeremiah. How little this great fact is understood may be learned by thoughtfully considering for one day, or even hour, the words that we, as a people, speak to each other. Jesus said, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life," and when we come to have that same mind in us "which was also in Christ Jesus," for which we daily pray, we too shall breathe forth only words that bless and comfort and heal, instead of clouding the atmosphere of thought with words which may burden the world with their ponderous weight of materiality. If we follow closely the words of our Master, we shall find that their whole tendency was to uplift thought and inspire his hearers to higher and loftier aims and ambitions. His admonition, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me . . . for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light," shows clearly that his mission included the lifting of burdens from weary mortals oppressed by their own ignorance and unbelief. This he could never have done had he gone about talking of disease, death, woe, disaster, poverty, loss, and failure.

We do not, if we are wise, keep in our closets with our good apparel a lot of old, worn, faded, moth-eaten garments; yet we sometimes keep in our mental storehouse, side by side with our new understanding of God and His perfect, harmonious creation, old beliefs and superstitions which have come down from generation to generation, and which are so musty and timeworn that they fall into dust, disintegrate, the moment the searchlight of Truth is thrown upon them. Let us, then, frequently renovate our mental abode even as we do the clothes closets in our homes, cherishing all that is good and beautiful and useful—whatever we would not be ashamed to have brought out into the light of day—and discarding all that is useless, unwholesome, or burdensome—every thought, in fact, which does not measure up to the Christ standard.

We, as Christian Scientists, have a high standard to maintain in this regard, and can do no better than follow, so far as possible, the beautiful example of our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, whose words are fraught with such deep meaning. Her writings may be studied with great and still greater profit from day to day; for no idle word can be found anywhere in their pages, nor any word which could possibly become a burden to humanity. These words of hers, on page 324 of Science and Health, "The purification of sense and self is a proof of progress," show us clearly the need for a daily, prayerful elimination of every thought which is unproductive of good. It is our privilege to see to it that our thoughts, translated into speech, measure up to the "stature of the fulness of Christ"—of divine Truth. Thus may we come to realize the truth of our Leader's words (Poems, p. 12):—

> Then His unveiled, sweet mercies show
> Life's burdens light.
> I kiss the cross, and wake to know
> A world more bright.

Thus, too, we shall eventually gain the spiritual consciousness that is not only willing but eager to purify thought, word, and deed.

Protection

EVE T. SANFORD

EACH year since I began the study of Christian Science, I have experienced better health and more of joy and happiness, because I have steadily grown in my understanding of God and my relation to Him. Previous to this time I had not known for many years what it was to have one day free from some pain or ache, and worry and fear were my almost constant companions. I was not quickly healed, and it has taken much study and striving to eradicate wholly the many wrong habits of thought, but the comfort and peace of mind which I have attained are well worth any amount of work and striving, and I know that I have so far had but a glimpse of the joy that a fuller understanding of God as divine Principle brings.

Even a very slight perception of Christian Science brings to the student a measure of protection from all the shafts of error, as was proved to me in the first years of my study, when I went to live in the tropics of Central America, where I remained for two years and a half. During this time I learned the great value of our literature, though it was about a month old when it reached me. My study of the Lesson-Sermon and the reading of the Sentinel and Journal enabled me to overcome every fear of climate and to realize that one can be as healthy in one country as another; as Mrs. Eddy has stated on page 120 of Science and Health, "Health is not a condition of matter, but of Mind."

At one time, while living in Nicaragua, I was obliged to be alone for a period of eighty days, with no one to speak to except the half-breed Spaniards, Jamaica negroes and Indians, who were in our employ, as we were in the heart of the mining district; but during this time I clung unswervingly to the truths of Christian Science, and so realized the protection which even a slight understanding of Truth always brings. During many trying night hours the ninety-first psalm was a great comfort, especially the ninth and tenth verses. The morning after my solitude came to an end a large snake, supposed to be poisonous, was caught crawling down the wall of my sleeping room, and its nest was found a short distance from the house. Had this occurred while I was alone, it would have been difficult indeed for me to have slept there, and I knew then that I had been protected because of my faithful adherence to the teachings of Christian Science.

Very many are the proofs I have had of God's protecting care during the nine years of my study of Christian Science, and I know that it is exactly in proportion as we are obedient and come into harmony with God's laws that we realize the peace and joy that are our divine inheritance. Man has not and never can have any will apart from God, but it is the belief of having a will apart from God which leads mortals into nearly all the sorrow and suffering of their lives. Just in proportion as human will is subordinated to the divine do Christian Scientists radiate the health, happiness, and loving-kindness toward others that all true followers of Mrs. Eddy's teachings should reflect; for, as she has stated on page 367 of Science and Health, "The tender word and Christian encouragement of an invalid, pitiful patience with his fears and the removal of them, are better than hecatombs of gushing theories, stereotyped borrowed speeches, and the doling of arguments, which are but so many parodies on legitimate Christian Science, aflame with divine Love."

God Unchanging

LEROY ALLIGER

BEDTIME, for two young children in a certain family, meant reading aloud from the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. "The scientific statement of being" (Science and Health, p. 468) and its correlative verses from I John as read at the close of the Sunday services in all Christian Science churches were great favorites. Sometimes the children asked for "Christ and Christmas" by our Leader, and the little faces would pore over the pictures, while the words of the poem completed for them the heavenly vision.

The child consciousness is eager and quick to grasp the thought most needed in a little one's problems, and it came about that the ninety-first psalm was known as "baby sister's psalm," while the "Love psalm," the twenty-third psalm, as spiritually interpreted on page 578 of Science and Health, was "brother's." When the evening reading was finished, when the little faces had relaxed, when the eyes were softened and brightened, brother would recite the prayer for little folk by Mrs. Eddy, as found on page 400 of "Miscellaneous Writings":—

Father-Mother God,
Loving me,—
Guard me when I sleep;
Guide my little feet
Up to Thee.

Then, since baby sister had not yet learned to lisp the truth-laden syllables, he would lean lovingly over her, and say it for her. The children knew that mortal mind had no power and that divine Mind never sleeps.

It became necessary for the family to take a long journey. From out the quiet order of a sheltered home in the country the children were taken into a mental kaleidoscope of taxi rides, electric cars, railroad travel, and an endless procession of strange people and startling sights, until little faces would droop and chubby legs would drag at times with the seeming friction of it all. But whether bedtime came in great hotels, in grandma's big, mysterious house, on railroad trains, or in the narrow confines of a steamer stateroom, it was a glorious awakening when both parents and children found that, through all the seeming change of chaotic mortality, the beloved statements were as fixed and unchanged as the Rock of Ages. All the surroundings might change, but the familiar psalms and the readings from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by our Leader became more and more a real haven, a safer and more dependable home than any inclosed by four walls. This more spiritual thought of home neutralized or overcame all limiting fears of change in food, beds, climate, mealtime and bedtime, playtime and rest.

And what of the parents who had looked forward for years to that first service in The Mother Church? Their lesson was not dissimilar! It was disclosed to them that, all unrecognized, the belief of scientific demonstration being easier in its vicinity had been allowed to creep into their thought. Never again would that or kindred errors be allowed to limit demonstration or render more difficult the task of the workers in Boston. It was an inspiring privilege to attend those services and to see the faithful workers performing the Truth lightened tasks of the central organization, but personal sense that whispered of easier scientific growth in any one place, was stilled forever.

The readers, the ushers, the soloist, the organist, the congregation—all these helped to bring inspiration, but they were not in any sense set apart from their brethren in similar positions throughout the length and breadth of the field. Our Leader's hymn, "Mother's Evening Prayer" (Hymnal, p. 240), sung by that vast congregation was identical with the same hymn as sung by a dozen untrained voices in the loghouse in the Ozark hills; the "scientific statement of being" sounded no less absolute, but no more so, than when read in the little church on the prairie; and those correlative passages from John, the beloved disciple, fell no more benignly on hungering hearts throughout the great edifice than in a well loved chapel far up in the Rockies.

God's love was not confined to Nazareth; nor is it poured forth more freely within the confines of Boston. "Love," writes Mrs. Eddy, "is impartial and universal in its adaptation and bestowals" (Science and Health, p. 13). The God of The Mother Church congregation is the God of the tiniest gathering on the far-scattered frontiers of the Christian Science movement; the Science and Health which the lone Scientist takes from his shelf in a secluded home is the same textbook as that used by the First Reader at the services in The Mother Church; its truth is just as vital, its comfort just as available, its message of Love unchanged.

There is neither virtue nor danger in change of place or mortal circumstance. The only field of scientific activity is the individual consciousness; the only home is the Father's house, the abode of Love; the only real church is the great "church of the living God," within whose arches all mankind can find refuge; the only man is God's likeness; the only God is Spirit.

"Loss is gain"

EDITH L. PERKINS

IN his essay on "Compensation" Emerson has written: "We cannot part with our friends. We cannot let our angels go. We do not see that they only go out that archangels may come in." To one struggling with a sense of inconsolable and almost overwhelming personal loss these words once came with a measure of comfort, as it was felt in a vague way that they must be true, and that at some future time God would reveal the blessing at present unseen, though the sense of loss still seemed beyond the hope of reparation.

Later there came physical healing in Christian Science, and with a gleam of spiritual understanding accompanying it, the above quoted sentences were illumined by the words of our Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who assures us that "God is good, and loss is gain" (Poems, p. 4). Then was it seen that blessings are not in a dim, uncertain future, but are a present reality, and the sense of loss is due to a false sense of separation from God, good; for in the light of Christian Science His love and tenderness stand out as qualities never failing, but always present to bless and cheer and comfort,—Christian Science revealing the motherhood as well as the fatherhood of God.

In the Christian Science textbook Mrs. Eddy writes: "My angels are exalted thoughts, appearing at the door of some sepulchre, in which human belief has buried its fondest earthly hopes. With white fingers they point upward to a new and glorified trust, to higher ideals of life and its joys. . . . By giving earnest heed to these spiritual guides they tarry with us, and we entertain 'angels unawares' " (Science and Health, p. 299). So in the entertaining of thoughts from God, thoughts of Truth and Love, we behold the "angel of his presence," bringing us the sweet assurance that because we are never separated from God, we are never separated from His ideas.

As we realize more fully, through happy obedience to the loving demands of our Father-Mother God, the ever presence of divine Love, our thought goes out in gratitude to the one who, through her hunger to know God aright and her consecration in seeking Him, brought the truth to a world bowed down by sin, sickness, and sorrow, shedding its light upon the darkness of materiality, wherein darkness vanishes and spiritual reality appears.

May our consecration to God ever deepen, and our obedience to Him be made manifest in the bringing forth of the fruits of the Spirit. So shall we become better fitted to declare the truth to those waiting for the word of our Father-Mother God, and ready to receive His tender messages. Then shall we rejoice in a clearer and sweeter understanding of our Leader's words on page 19 of her Message to The Mother Church for 1902: "Are earth's pleasures, its ties and its treasures, taken away from you? It is divine Love that doeth it, and sayeth, 'Ye have need of all these things.' " Surely does this understanding reveal that such loss is gain!

The promise of the Master is fulfilled: "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever." Through the illumination of spiritual understanding gained from the sacred revelations of Christian Science we see that our angels "only go out that archangels may come in," and know indeed that as we part with a finite sense of happiness there comes to us the ineffable joy of a conscious knowledge of God, our Father-Mother, in whom there is no sorrow, no separation,—in whom "we live, and move, and have our being."

O Heart of Mine

NELLIE BATES JEWETT

O HEART of mine, hast thou a place prepared
For that sweet presence thou hast sought so long?
Has love, with harp and viol, lifted up
Its holy ardor in thy secret song?

Has joy unsullied tilled thy vineyard fair,
And left no stone of sloth embedded there,
And stilled the winds of memory-haunted days,
And filled thy chalice with the wine of praise?

Swiftly as flew the heavenly Seraphim
With fiery coal to purge all dross and sin,
A glow of kindling warmth suffused the plain
And rose, from trembling deeps, a sacred flame;

And burned the adamantine walls, self-wrought,
And shone down all the corridors of thought,
And wreathed the sacred hills of pure desire,
And girdled barren isles with holy fire.

Bend low, O heart of mine, tender and warm,
With chambers swept of envy, pride, and scorn;
Thy lamp of Truth no darkling shade can dim,
For love with vesture white hath entered in.

The ninety-first psalm has been for centuries the refuge of the Christian in the hour of trouble. If you were to ask him the reason for this, he would probably founder in his analysis. He might tell you that it was God's message to humanity in their affliction, that it was instinct with divine protection, and a hundred other things. Yet, being at sea in the midst of a submarine zone, or on shore, amidst the shell craters of "No-man's-land," he would probably rather trust to the protection of a destroyer, in the first instance, or to a covering barrage, in the second. He would explain this, quite naturally and quite genuinely, by saying that God has given the race its intelligence with which to safeguard itself, and that the destroyer and the barrage constitute the manifestation of this intelligence. Nevertheless he knows such reasoning to be faulty, and, if pressed, will retire to a frank declaration of faith in something he can neither explain nor understand. For, indeed, the writer of the psalm never advised his readers to rely on material ingenuity, but, on the contrary, to dwell in the secret place of the most High, with the result that, "a thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee."

It is tolerably obvious, then, that if the protection of the secret place is to be made practically available to-day to those who go down to the sea in ships, or who jeopard their lives in battle, it must be through some surer protection than the blind faith urged on humanity by St. Gregory, as the only faith which is faith. The writer of the psalm certainly meant something by his words, and that something was translated by Jesus the Christ and his immediate followers into language less archaic than the cadences of the poet, and more scientific than the imagery of the prophet, "If ye continue in my word . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free;" and again, "Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works. . . . For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also."

Such language, surely, puts an end to vain argument. Knowledge is not guesswork or even a blind acceptance of other people's experience. It is the outcome of personally demonstrated experience. A man may have faith in the acceptance of a premise which he has assured himself is theoretically sound, but he has most certainly no knowledge of the truth of his theory until he has demonstrated that truth, or, as James says, proved his faith in it by works. Then his faith has passed into knowledge, and, as the proofs of the truth of his theory accumulate, this knowledge becomes exact or scientific. This is the full, exact, and so scientific knowledge of God, of the Christ, and of Truth, which the writers of the New Testament are repeatedly urging upon their readers, a knowledge so scientific and so exacting that, as Paul plainly warned the church in Rome, sensuality and materiality revolt against it, finding a positive relief in animality, and accepting as true those physical phenomena whose sole claim to recognition is that they are counterfeits of or lies about the true creations of Spirit, since, as Paul writes, "the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made," which is as much as to say that the only true thing that can be said about a lie is the fact that there is a truth to lie about.

Paul, indeed, put the same colossal truth even more simply and directly to the Hebrews than to the Romans, for, as he wrote in that famous letter, "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." The man, then, standing on the deck of a steamer, watching the wake of a torpedo, or almost stunned by the roar of the guns tearing craters in "No-man's-land," has not got to find safety in the guns of a destroyer or the cavity of a dugout. He has only to realize exactly what Paul meant, namely, that the torpedo and the shell, although things that are seen by the human vision, did not originate in things apparent to the human senses, but are simply misconceptions, formed by the human mind, of spiritual realities. When this is done, the thinker finds that he has taken refuge in the secret place of the most High, in that knowledge, in other words, of the absolute truth, which, Jesus declared, frees men from the ignorance of their material beliefs.

What this all amounts to is the gospel teaching of the unreality of matter. This, of course, is a vast subject in itself. But it may be understood or rather comprehensively stated in these declarations of Jesus himself, of Peter, of James, and of Paul. Mrs. Eddy accepted them as the basis, in Science and Health, of her teaching of the healing of sickness. Paul had explained that things were not what they seemed, that the evidence of the senses was untrustworthy, since physical phenomena did not, in the least, originate in matter, that is, in "the things which do appear." In precisely the same way, Mrs. Eddy, writing, on pages 476-7 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," of what are termed the miracles of Jesus, says, "Jesus beheld in Science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals. In this perfect man the Saviour saw God's own likeness, and this correct view of man healed the sick."

Now, in destroying an unreal mental phenomenon, there is no difference whether it be a torpedo in the Atlantic, a shell in "No-man's-land," a wound in a dressing station, or a fever in a base hospital. You do not turn aside a torpedo or a shell in flight, or a bayonet thrust, any more than you will away fever. What you do is to realize that these things are "not made of things which do appear." You endeavor to grasp the fact that inasmuch as a lie cannot be about nothing, your torpedo, shell, bayonet, or fever must be lies about some truth, which, when you know it, frees you from the effect of the ignorance bred of the material concept. You see, as Mrs. Eddy says, the perfect Truth, and the lie disappears. It is not, necessarily, that the torpedo twists away from your ship, that the shell fails to explode, that the bayonet strikes another object, or that the fever epidemic suddenly abates. It is that in gaining a true concept of substance these things necessarily cease to be. You do not discover a spiritual torpedo, a heavenly shell, a godlike bayonet, or a Christly fever, but you do discover that these material phenomena are all counterfeits of spiritual reflections of Principle or lies about ideas in divine Mind. It is not that there is any spiritual object corresponding exactly to a torpedo, a shell, a bayonet, or a fever: it is that divine Mind contains no idea, and Principle casts no reflection, that is not spiritual and harmonious. For as Mrs. Eddy writes, on page 310 of Science and Health, "Thought will finally be understood and seen in all form, substance, and color, but without material accompaniments." When once you have grasped that metaphysically, and attuned your life to your precept, you will find how utterly impossible it is that the false concept or lie, whether in the shape of torpedo, shell, bayonet, or fever, should ever come nigh thee.

[Peter B. Biggins in Edmonton (Alberta) Bulletin]

In these days when there is so much need of spiritual comfort, when people are rightly turning for solace to the promises of Christianity, large numbers are finding this consolation and healing through the teachings of Christian Science. It should be readily conceded by all thinking people that Christian Scientists have the right to enjoy these much needed blessings, even though they may have left the denominations of their fathers. When so doing, however, Christian Scientists cannot be correctly regarded as apostates, although this was implied in the address of a visiting evangelist, as recently reported. The religious teachers among the Jews regarded Christ Jesus as an apostate, but history has fully shown that they were mistaken. If these teachers had been truly practicing the precepts of Moses, they would have had no quarrel with Jesus, but would have received him with open arms. So in proportion as the Christian churches of to-day are true to the teaching and practice of Christ Jesus they will warmly welcome Christian Science.

This gentleman is reported to have said: "There is no . . . 'absent treatment' which wins souls to God." This, of course, contradicts the teaching of Scripture and seriously discredits the practice of Christ Jesus. One instance may be sufficient to prove this. In St. John's gospel it is related that Jesus healed a nobleman's son by absent treatment, and the direct result was that the nobleman and his whole family accepted the teachings of Christ Jesus. "Then enquired he of them the hour when he began to amend," so this beautiful narrative runs. "And they said unto him, Yesterday at the seventh hour the fever left him. So the father knew that it was at the same hour, in the which Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth: and himself believed, and his whole house."

The evangelist indicated that the Christian Science movement has prospered in spite of the fact that it has not established missions. But this statement may be somewhat misleading. It is true that Christian Scientists in propagating the gospel of Christ follow a plan suited to their own denominational requirements, and different from that of other denominations, but this need not produce unfavorable comment. Wherever the Christian Science church is found it is not only preaching the gospel, but also healing the sick. And so it will be readily seen that the Christian Science churches throughout the world—all branches of The Mother Church, in Boston, Massachusetts—are working quite as diligently as the missions established by other denominations.

[Peter V. Ross in Pacific Grove (Cal.) Review]

From a report in the Review of the proceedings at a recent meeting of the Itinerants' Club I notice that one of the speakers selected as the subject of his discourse, "Substitutes for Christian Science." Possibly if he had investigated Christian Science as thoroughly as unnumbered thousands of other seekers for the truth have done, he might, with them, have reached the conclusion that Christian Science and Christianity are identical, and then have styled his address "Substitutes for Christianity."

In this land and age he would be a bold advocate indeed who, notwithstanding all the mistakes that have been made in the name of Christianity, would recommend any substitute for it or argue that its teachings, if understood and practiced by all mankind, would result in anything short of establishing the kingdom of heaven on earth. Yet is not this precisely the stand that any man takes when he commends some other system of healing and regeneration in place of the Science taught and demonstrated by Christ Jesus and aptly designated by Mrs. Eddy as Christian Science? Such advocacy, however, would have this much in its favor: it would carry, by implication, the admission that there is merit in Christian Science, else why offer a substitute?

This disposition to seek some other than the straight and narrow way marked out by Principle is no new development of the human mind. Centuries ago, it will be remembered, Jesus, who so well understood human nature that he "needed not that any should testify of man," discerned that tendency and referred to it in the parable of the man "that entereth not by the door," but "climbeth up some other way."

At one point in the course of his address the speaker characterized Christian Science as being in the nature of a metaphysical healing system and "not religious in its character." Now, anyone who reads the New Testament can hardly escape the conviction that religion and metaphysical healing are most intimately associated. The Founder of Christianity made no attempt to differentiate the two. On the contrary, teaching spiritual truth and practicing it in healing the sick and sinful went hand in hand with him. "Whether is easier," he exclaimed when healing the man sick of the palsy, "to say, Thy sins be forgiven thee; or to say, Rise up and walk?" And if it is necessary to show further the closeness of the relationship between metaphysics and Christianity, this is shown in the oft quoted declaration of the Master, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

The speaker advocated "recourse to prayer and trust in God," and thought that thereby "greater wonders in healing might be expected." Certainly this is wise and wholesome counsel, and exactly what Christian Science advocates. Prayer and treatment in Christian Science are essentially synonymous terms, and faith in God's ability and readiness to heal is no small part thereof. Such prayer consists in a realization of the all-presence and all-power of God and the consequent absence or nothingness of disease and evil. It is not merely pleading with God to heal and save, but rather an affirmation of that spiritual truth of perfect God and perfect man which breaks the supposed laws of disease and sin and sets the sufferer free.

Speaking on this subject Mrs. Eddy has said in her inimitable way (Science and Health, p. 1): "The prayer that reforms the sinner and heals the sick is an absolute faith that all things are possible to God,—a spiritual understanding of Him, an unselfed love."

[Robert G. Steel in Muskegon (Mich.) Chronicle]

Christian Science, in accepting the spiritual creation as the only reality, explains logically and convincingly the unreal nature of the material formation recorded in the second chapter of Genesis, and harmonizes the many seemingly inconsistent and contradictory texts occurring throughout the Scriptures. In doing so it does not deny God's word in any particular. Smith's Bible Dictionary is authority for the statement that "we cannot, of course, conceive that anything essentially and originally evil was created by God." And Jesus said, in speaking of personified evil, "When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." In Habakkuk we read that God is "of purer eyes than to behold evil," and cannot "look on iniquity."

Those who are giving all or a great portion of their time to the study and practice of Christian Science are assuredly better qualified to judge whether its Principle is at present understood and correctly applied than is a self-appointed denunciatory critic, who by his misstatements as to its teachings shows that he knows little about the subject. If such students are given over of God to Christian Science beliefs, as our critic avers, then surely they must be walking in the true path, and rightly dividing the word of God. That success has crowned and is crowning their efforts, the grateful testimony of hundreds of thousands of persons all over the world who have been healed of all manner of sickness and lifted from lives of bondage to sin and discordant conditions of every nature through their ministrations is ample proof, and is evidence that, as Mrs. Eddy says on page 97 of Science and Health, "Christianity is again demonstrating the Life that is Truth, and the Truth that is Life, by the apostolic work of casting out error and healing the sick."

Camp Welfare and War Relief

"Please find inclosed a draft for seventy-five dollars for War Relief fund. This evening a gentleman came to my house inquiring for the clerk of this church. He stated that he and his wife desired to make a small contribution to the War Relief fund of The Mother Church, and handed me seventy-five dollars. They are not members of this church and are strangers to me, but they are awake to the blessed privilege of giving to the War Relief fund."

"Inclosed please find postal orders for two pounds, being a donation to the War Relief fund of The Mother Church from a few Christian Scientists in Pilgrims Rest, Transvaal, South Africa. I may add that we only started holding services here in a private house three months ago and the inclosed sum is part of our collections. We hope to continue sending every few months."

"I want to send a small contribution of five dollars to the War Relief fund. I send it in gratitude for the wonderful love and protection I have received since finding the 'pearl of great price' and the understanding of Christian Science. My prayer is to be more worthy of membership in The Mother Church."

Real Estate

"Inclosed find New York draft for $2348.50, the same to be divided equally between the Real Estate and The Christian Science Benevolent Association funds. This remittance overpays the pledge made last January to these funds. . . . From our periodicals we note the splendid progress being made in this branch of Christian Science activities."

"Inclosed please find money order for five dollars to be equally divided between The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund and the Real Estate fund. I was a druggist for sixteen years and was healed through Christian Science after doctors had given my case up as hopeless and sent me home to die. I am indeed grateful for the many blessings which Christian Science brings daily into my life."

The Christian Science Benevolent Association

"Inclosed please find a money order which is an effort to express a little of the gratitude we feel for the many blessings we have received since taking up the study of Christian Science. While we have been saving this money ($20) with the intention of sending it to The Christian Science Benevolent Association fund, we thought it best to send it to you to place it in whatever channel you think advisable and knowing that Love is directing."

The Household of God

PAUL defines the household of God in a letter to Timothy as "the church of the living God, the pillar and ground [that is, basis, foundation, bulwark] of the truth." This house, or household, of God is spoken of in the epistle to the Hebrews, and the faithfulness of Moses therein is recognized as the faithfulness of a servant, or a prophetic witness, whereas the faithfulness of Christ Jesus is described as that of "a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." The writer says that "every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God." So it is God's house wherein the Son rules, and the church of Christ is the manifested household of God.

In a wisely governed household there is unity of purpose, community of interest, and the coherence of mutual affection. Not the house as a building, but house as a unifying idea, brings about the conjoining of interests and the welding of affections. Christian Scientists are very well aware that their manifestation of membership in "the house of God" is not primarily in edifices and organizations, but in that spiritual cohesion, evidenced in the union of the Son with the Father, which unites them with divine Principle. This purified and exalted condition is well described by Mrs. Eddy (Miscellany, p. 127): "Happy are the people whose God is All-in-all, who ask only to be judged according to their works, who live to love. We thank the Giver of all good for the marvellous speed of the chariot-wheels of Truth and for the steadfast, calm coherence in the ranks of Christian Science. On comparison, it will be found that Christian Science possesses more of Christ's teachings and example than all other religions since the first century."

Healed as they have been, inspired as they are, grateful as they must be, Christian Scientists feel the irrepressible activities of good will. The knowledge of God so gladdens them they wish that all may know God and rejoice in His salvation. The medieval imagery of saints sitting in heavenly places with the view of the suffering of sinners in hell for a contrast is to them incomprehensible. Their work is done that all men everywhere may "turn from sin's dishonest snare," and in this reformatory and healing effort they have engaged devotedly, and employ wise methods.

This household of faith, or church of Christ, exists in the world not primarily as an organization which must be enlarged and defended. What is primal is the baptism of Spirit; for, as Paul says, "God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." So the multitude of our churches giving hospitality, reading rooms offering quiet retreat for study, distribution committees scattering the good news concerning the kingdom by means of authorized periodicals and literature, the work of accredited teachers of Christian Science, the lectures whereby truth is published through apostolic preaching, the committees on publication confuting the false utterances of opponents, the welfare committees reaching out the hand of kindness,—all express the activities of those aware that "there is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit."

What is the unique service of Christian Science to the world? It delivers both the righteous and the unrighteous from belief in evil. Those who are called the good fear evil and by mental suggestion are held in bondage to that fear. The wicked believe in the power of evil and by malicious mental suggestion use it for their own ends, only to be involved in its reaction and destruction. The hymn says, "Ye timid saints, fresh courage take," and an understanding that reality and good are one and the same thing is the true basis for courage. The hypnotist involves himself in a tangle of error ever complicating, until increase of suffering leads to repentance. Christian Science is not mental suggestion in any form. It offers not mundane influence but true vision—light to the blind, intelligence to the deaf, love to the forlorn. It establishes atonement; that is, it reveals the unity of divine Principle and its idea, the oneness with the heavenly Father of His image and likeness, man. Its work is precisely described in the call, "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

In Mrs. Eddy's address in 1894 at the laying of the corner stone of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, she indicated her prayer and hope, with which we may join (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 144): "Today I pray that divine Love, the life-giving Principle of Christianity, shall speedily wake the long night of materialism, and the universal dawn shall break upon the spire of this temple. The Church, more than any other institution, at present is the cement of society, and it should be the bulwark of civil and religious liberty."

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

God Made Manifest

ALL Christian Scientists are acquainted with the inspired statement which is read at the close of every Sunday service in the Christian Science churches throughout the world, and which is part of the "scientific statement of being" found on page 468 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." It reads, "All is infinite Mind and its infinite manifestation, for God is All-in-all." This naturally relates itself to Paul's words in his first epistle to Timothy, "God was manifest in the flesh;" also to the words in the first epistle of John: "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." The apostle goes on to say, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; . . . and he cannot sin, because he is born of God."

Christian people are all agreed that God was made manifest to humanity through Jesus of Nazareth, but unfortunately it is also believed to a large extent that this manifestation ceased when Jesus departed from the earth. Christian Science, however, has come declaring that the manifestation of God through man as His idea is an eternal fact, that man as God's reflection can no more be blotted out than can God, his original. The question therefore presents itself, How was God made manifest by Christ Jesus, and how can the followers of the Master make God manifest to those around them? This question would almost answer itself for those who are students of Mrs. Eddy's teachings, for to them the life of the Master is so illuminated by divine Science that they discover on every page of the gospels how Jesus revealed God to men,—not alone through his words, which were few, though precious, but through his mighty deeds in the overcoming of sickness, sin, and death. For students of Christian Science the barrier has been taken away which shut out from them this divine ministry with the belief that it belonged to a bygone age; and that something else, something quite material, and something which is nearly always disappointing, had taken its place, namely, material medicine.

There is little wonder that owing to the prevalence of this mistaken belief so many should have come to doubt the very existence of God, and to doubt that Jesus ever did the wonderful things recorded in the gospels; and many indeed exercise much ingenuity in explaining away the Master's so-called miracles. Not so, however, those who have come to understand through Mrs. Eddy's teachings that the demand rests upon them to make God manifest to all mankind through Christlike living, which of course includes the overcoming of the works of the devil mentioned by the apostle. Happily for humanity the belief is fast disappearing that God is in any wise responsible for sickness and death, any more than He is for sin, although this was too long believed; but now we are, through Christian Science, brought face to face with the fact that our Master's work was to destroy the works of the devil,—sin and sickness,—and that we cannot rightfully claim to be his followers unless we engage in the same ministry, because we have his full assurance that the works he did are possible to all his faithful followers, those who abide in his teachings.

We are sometimes thrilled when we read of a noble life in which self is forgotten and the pure purpose to serve God and humanity shines out from it, proving man's possibilities as a child of God. We are, however, too apt to think that such a character is almost abnormal because it seems to be above the reach of the average man; but from the Christian Science viewpoint a great and noble character is the only normal one; indeed it furnishes the surest proof that God is, and that man still is His likeness, as he was declared to be in the beginning. On page 349 of Miscellany we read: "Inductive or deductive reasoning is correct only as it is spiritual, induced by love and deduced from God, Spirit; only as it makes manifest the infinite nature, including all law and supplying all the needs of man."

At this period we are witnessing the most wonderful breaking of the fetters which have so long bound the human race, the beliefs of pride, cruelty, and tyranny, which are now replaced by the unfolding qualities of love for humanity and the self-sacrifice which reveals the man that cannot be lost or sacrificed in any ignoble way. We are also seeing as never before the advancing steps of the spiritual evolution of the race; and as our eyes are lifted from the mortal plane we shall see that man as God's idea is divinely protected and is self-sustained. He neither knows fear nor reflects fear; and as this is recognized we see the man born of God, and, as John tells us, we may have confidence because we know that in making God manifest we have the unbroken joy which is both promise and proof of eternal life.

The Eagle and the Dove

WHO does not remember the psalmist's words, "So that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's," and Jesus' illustration, "Harmless as doves"? The Bible repeatedly uses these two birds to express spiritual qualities. The eagle is swift, strong, and graceful, mounts into the sky, and makes its nest on high. Its face denotes piercing keenness of spiritual perception. Nothing escapes the eagle eye. The spiritually minded are sharp-sighted, detecting hidden error and uncovering it as nothing. With beak and talons and beating wings the eagle is formidable to the evildoer. Its extraordinary flight distinguishes it in the bird kingdom. There is no reason why extraordinary accomplishments should not be made by us when there is the inexhaustible power of God and a never ending supply of intelligence to draw upon. We read in Revelation that when the dragon "persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child . . . two wings of a great eagle" were given her "that she might fly into the wilderness."

The psalmist also sighed, "Oh that I had wings like a dove!" and we remember that after Jesus' baptism by John "he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him." The dove symbolizes tenderness and peace. Individuals may prefer the dove to the eagle or the eagle to the dove, but the spiritual qualities symbolized by both birds are necessary in bringing men and nations out of bondage into freedom. In righting present world conditions the eagle is making the way straight for the dove of peace, but the unrighteous planner would have had the dove fly on ahead and be pierced by the arrow of hate while carrying the olive branch of peace in its beak. Not so was it decreed in God's plan. There is need for reformation and reparation, for a just acknowledgment of crimes committed and mistakes made, before God's permanent peace can come, with war no more.

So important is the symbol of the dove in Christian literature that Mrs. Eddy has placed a spiritual interpretation of it in the Glossary of the Christian Science textbook (p. 584): "DOVE. A symbol of divine Science; purity and peace; hope and faith." These dovelike qualities mark the hour of demonstration; they belong to victory; they come at the close of some great struggle, and are the sign and seal of forgiveness, of error destroyed and absolute Truth enthroned. Who has not in moments of self-surrender, when some long cherished resentment has flown, or some persistent misunderstanding has been cleared up, or some old score settled, heard, metaphysically speaking, the flutter of the dove's gentle wings and felt the touch of its soft feathers? The psalmist understood this, for he wrote, "He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust." Then comes the Sabbath stillness, when the conflict of fear, conceit, and selfishness, against obedience, gratitude, and love is passed and gone; the omnipotent power of the unseen spiritual has put to shame the pretense of material force.

When Noah sent forth a raven from the ark, that bird did not return; but when he sent forth a dove the latter returned, and the second time brought Noah an olive branch as a token of gladness that the waters had receded from the earth. In the metaphysical representation of Spirit coming to the flesh, the warrior-angel Michael may be likened to the eagle, and the peacemaker Gabriel to the dove. The long flight of the eagle, which encounters storms of all descriptions, typifies spiritual endurance. It glides gracefully above the winds, and even rests upon the storm. So Christian Science gives us the wings of spiritual endurance to rise above adverse conditions and have real peace. But an artificial, double-headed eagle, invented by human pride, can only be a malformation. In the dictionary of falsities it stands for a double standard, for the supposition that good and evil are both real, for a mixture of mind and matter, life and death, intelligence and nonintelligence. When admitted to rulership, the double-headed eagle becomes a monstrosity capable of every excess and atrocity.

That birds should be used as spiritual symbols and emblematic devices seems particularly appropriate when we realize that they mount above the more solid forms of matter, such as land and water, into the rarefied air. Thence they can look down upon that which is of the earth, earthy. Just as, seen from above, the earth gives up its secrets, so the sea also becomes transparent, its preying monsters cannot hide themselves from the eyes of the birds which hover and soar, plunge and skim overhead. In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" Mrs. Eddy writes (p. 511), "The fowls, which fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven, correspond to aspirations soaring beyond and above corporeality to the understanding of the incorporeal and divine Principle, Love." To the spiritually minded the so-called mystery of evil becomes a sea of glass, made transparent by understanding and love,—a sea which can therefore be placed under foot.

In her notable poem on "The United States to Great Britain," to be found on page 10 of her Poems, Mrs. Eddy brings the qualities of the eagle and the dove together in demonstration of a noble, epoch making reconciliation:—

The hoar fight is forgotten;
Our eagle, like the dove,
Returns to bless a bridal

Among the Churches

Current Notes

BOSTON, MASS.—The First Church of Christ, Scientist. Services, 10:45 a.m., 7:30 p.m.; Sunday School, 10:45 a.m.; Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., in the church edifice, Norway, Falmouth, and St. Paul Streets. The church is open to visitors Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Reading rooms: Little Building, corner of Tremont and Boylston Streets (fourth floor); open daily, except Sunday and Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. International Trust Company Building (second floor), 45 Milk Street, near Devonshire, opposite post office; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Coolidge Corner Building, 1316 Beacon Street, Brookline; open daily, except Sunday, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

LANARKSHIRE, SCOTLAND.—During the year ending January 31, eleven references to Christian Science requiring correction appeared in the press. Of the eleven letters sent in correction, nine were published. Reprints from The Christian Science Monitor have appeared at intervals, varying in length from a few lines to a complete editorial. The influence of the Monitor upon modern journalism is inestimable; and it is unquestionable that it has modified, to a very considerable extent, the attitude of editors and journalists toward the Christian Science movement.

Notices of the Christian Science lecture given on November 1, 1917, appeared in seventeen newspapers. In seven of these the report varied from about a column to a column and three quarters. Such a wide circulation could not fail to attract attention to Christian Science in many new quarters.

During the year the following pieces of literature have been distributed to the troops for the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy: 1602 Sentinels, 36 Journals, 7134 Monitors, 50 Heralds, 481 pamphlets—total, 9303 pieces. The literature has been sent to many individual soldiers interested in Christian Science at all the fronts, as well as to those in this country; and expressions of gratitude have been frequent from them. Seven hospitals are in regular receipt of the literature.

The literature distribution committee also reports that during the year the following literature has been distributed: 5678 Sentinels, 1339 Journals, 31,852 Monitors, 16 Heralds, 1387 miscellaneous—total, 40,272 pieces. There have been 95 new openings. One copy each of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "Unity of Good," and "The Life of Mary Baker Eddy," and one copy of the pamphlet, "Law and Work," in English Braille, have been given to institutions. Two former recipients in Glasgow, and one in Paisley now purchase their Monitors, and two others have each purchased a copy of the textbook.

BROKEN BOW, NEB.—Owing to the unfavorable conditions, the Christian Science Society has postponed the building of a church this spring and will use its lots for a war garden, and invest four per cent of its building fund in War Savings Stamps. Services will continue for the present at the City Hall.—Custer County Chief.

The Lectures

HALIFAX, YORKSHIRE, ENGLAND (First Church).—John W. Doorly, lecturer; introduced by Major Duncan Webb, who said in part:—

A good many years ago, before I became a Christian Scientist, I was engaged in writing an article, called "The Reconciliation of Theology and Science." I had been working at this subject and pondering it over about two years, when one day, sitting in my study at home, I suddenly found myself, as it were, standing on a vast plain. It was very dark, but I could just see, by a flicker of light, away on the distant horizon. Wherever I went I saw nothing but ruins—ruins of temples, ruins of palaces, ruins of churches, ruins of business houses. Everything was a ruin.

Overwhelmed at the scene of awful desolation, I said, "Are there no foundations anywhere?" Then somehow I became conscious of a voice which said: "These are the ruins of human beliefs; this is the law of the elimination of error. Move toward the Light." I at once started to obey, but I very soon found that Truth is not reached at a single bound; that it is approached step by step. I also discovered that the propelling power is this law of the elimination of error, under pressure of which we are compelled gradually to give up error, and thus to advance step by step toward Truth. As I pondered over these things I made a further advance; for I realized that this elimination of error must, in the fullness of time, ultimate in the destruction of all error, and I asked myself, "What will the final state of man be?" I dimly recognized that this final state of man must be perfection, and then the words of the great Teacher came to my thought, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." At this point I came to a complete standstill. I could discern perfection, but I could not express it, until Christian Science came to lead me on. Who is the perfect man? Christ is the perfect man, and Christian Science, which is founded entirely on the Bible, teaches the practice of the perfect man—the Science of Christ; that is why it is called Christian Science.

Halifax Courier.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. (First Church).—Paul Stark Seeley, lecturer; introduced by Robert E. Buffum, who said in part:—

In these times of stress and trial a lecture on Christian Science is a particular blessing to any community. At this time in the world's history, when the earth seems to be flooded with fear, doubt, hate, and their sad effects, and when untold human sacrifices are being unselfishly and courageously made in defense of the ideals of liberty, it is only natural that those who have heretofore been indifferent to religious appeals should now, in prayerful longings, turn their thoughts Godward in search of a Savior. There is convincing evidence on every hand of a great universal and genuine religious awakening which gives positive assurance of the dawning of the day when the kingdom of God and the brotherhood of man will be realized, international comity established, and the commonwealth of mankind will be an accomplished fact.—Cambridge Chronicle.

PORTLAND, ORE. (Fifth Church).—Dr. Francis J. Fluno, lecturer; introduced by Walter G. Hayes, who said in part:—

Mary Baker Eddy discovered Christian Science, the light that is saving the world and its people. She spent most of her earthly career explaining this discovery through her many writings. The best evidence which proves her teachings to be true, is the testimony of her many followers, heard at Wednesday evening meetings, acknowledging God's healing power through the application of the rules of Christian Science. I have tested Christian Science in the sick chamber, in business dealings, and carried it into the court room where the battle was fierce, and I want to say that it needs no defense at my hands. People feel the need, more than ever to-day, of something substantial to cling to in this world war. Christian Science offers a Principle that is available; it satisfies; it will meet every need of mankind.

HOUSTON, TEXAS (First Church).—Charles I. Ohrenstein, lecturer; introduced by J. D. Sherwood, who said in part:—

Christian Science is meeting the needs of a great multitude of people throughout the whole world. Its practice lifts the human consciousness out of its dense materiality, and inspires it with a more spiritual apprehension of the divine nature. Through its wholesome ministrations the earnest desire of those who are seeking a better understanding of God, is answered by "signs following." It heals the sick, it reforms the sinner, and it comforts the sorrowing by the same spiritual means, and every sincere inquirer may to-day gain an understanding of its teachings that will enable him to prove for himself the truth of all that is claimed for Christian Science as being the most efficient remedial agency on earth to-day.—Houston Post.

BRONXVILLE, N. Y. (Society).—Willis F. Gross, lecturer; introduced by Willis J. Abbott, who said in part:—

For three centuries after the crucifixion of Jesus the primitive church healed the sick and purged the sinner by the declaration of truth, and by denial of the error that God could have brought sickness and sin into the world, or finding them there would permit their continuance. How the practice of healing fell into disuse among the Christians of the early church, or just how and by what malign force faith in drugs came to be substituted for faith in God, we do not know. But we do know that about fifty years ago Mrs. Eddy, after being healed of what had been pronounced an incurable disease, sought out the law by which her own cure was effected, and made it so readily understandable in Christian Science that hundreds of thousands have appealed to it with success.

Testimonies of Healing

Having spent the greater part of my life from 1902 to 1913 behind prison bars, I feel that I have a message of interest to my fellow men. In 1902 I was sentenced to serve three months in the county jail of a large western city, and the day of my release I was rearrested, and sentenced to serve two years in the state penitentiary. Leaving this institution at the expiration of my term, broken in health through having had bronchitis, typhoid pneumonia, and other ailments, I was seemingly driven again to resort to swindling, or what is legally known as "obtaining money under false pretenses," the charge on which I had already been sentenced twice.

I had been at liberty only about four months when I was again arrested, in a southern state, and sentenced to a county prison road gang, where I was compelled to wear a ball and chain, and to break rocks as punishment. At this time pleurisy developed. Through the loving help of a friend I was freed from the place and sent to my home in Massachusetts, where I remained but a few months when the desire to resort to my old ways of obtaining money returned. I was soon back in prison for a two-year term. All of this sentence was spent in the prison hospital, where I underwent an operation for what is known as an advanced condition of pleurisy, being in bed about five months. I left this place in a very much weakened condition. I was fortunate enough to get work which enabled me to lead an honest life for several years, but the old desire to defraud led me to my former dishonest practices, with the result that I spent a ninety-day sentence in the county prison of a southwestern state.

Finally, in 1913, while I was in the hospital ward of the Utah State Prison, being confined for forgery, some one called my attention to the Christian Science literature so kindly placed there by the distribution workers of Salt Lake City, advising me to read it. I read the selected articles, and they seemed so sincere and fair in their statements that I determined to learn more of the religious beliefs of the people who could write such articles. I already possessed a Bible and was furnished a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, through the kindness of a gentleman doing the work of reader at the Christian Science services in the prison. I read this volume six times and also studied the Lesson-Sermons, read the Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor, as well as every pamphlet and book on the subject that was printed or sold by The Christian Science Publishing Society. About six hours daily were spent in this way, just because I enjoyed it all and could not seem to get enough of it. I had no idea that I would be healed or helped by this study, but I was pardoned when my term was about half over, in spite of the fact that I was thousands of miles from home and seemingly had no one to help me. I know that "the sunlight . . . glances into the prison-cell," also that "Love is the liberator" (Science and Health, pp. 516, 225), as Mrs. Eddy tells us.

For the past few years I have not been tempted to resort to the old methods of getting money, but all my financial needs are being met just to the extent that I apply the rules of right thinking and living, as outlined in the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, and have availed myself of the articles printed in the periodicals. Instead of being troubled by high altitudes and damp climate, or having difficulty in eating certain foods, I have made several trips from coast to coast of the United States without suffering any inconvenience whatsoever, in spite of the doctor's statement as far back as 1911 that the left lung was badly affected and the right lung slightly affected, and that it would be advisable for me to live in California, if I wished to get well. The above-mentioned results were all obtained without the aid of a practitioner, but through the diligent study of the Bible and Science and Health with the aid of the Lesson-Sermons.

I am very grateful that there was one woman so unselfish and loving as to devote her entire life to the study of the Bible, and then to set forth the rules of right thinking and living in such a simple and concise way that anyone who sincerely applies the teachings of Science and Health can overcome any and all disagreeable conditions that may arise. I wish to thank all those who contribute the various articles, testimonies, and so forth, to the Christian Science periodicals, as they are thus helping me in my progress onward and upward. To me the Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor are part of the munitions of our warfare, and through the truth they give out we are protected from evil in any form.

I especially wish to thank the members of the distribution committee through whom the Sentinel that first led me to study Christian Science was placed in my hands.

Words are inadequate to express the gratitude I owe Christian Science for the good it has brought and is bringing to me each day. Being by nature full of care, emotional, and sensitive, I did not find in the religious teaching I had received anything that met my heart's aspirations or answered the troubled questioning about human woe. I therefore thought it was only by intensifying my work that I could follow Christ, and by trying to drive away the evil thoughts that attacked me. It soon came to me that I was busying myself intellectually instead of remaining calmly at the feet of Jesus to receive spiritual teaching.

Following upon this overwrought sense I fell seriously ill in April, 1914. Medicine only made me worse. I believed that God alone would be my Physician, and patiently awaited His help. I spent a year in isolation and silence. The least noise, the least movement, reading, an effort to think, even the slightest attempt to take food, produced an indescribable sense of suffering. Rest improved my health, but was far from bringing me healing.

Several times I had heard of Christian Science, but it was not until January, 1917, that I started out fully in this way of Truth. I had treatment, and soon began to feel better. Vigor gradually came back to my limbs, and the organs of the body resumed their normal functions through the clearness of the teaching received. I began to understand the nonexistence of inharmony, and tried to think right. My fear gave way to a calm security in the certainty of the all-presence and all-power of God, Spirit. In October, 1917, I had the great joy of being able to earn my own living once again without feeling any fatigue. Every one says my healing is a miracle, a resurrection.

My mother, who is very happy over this marvelous demonstration, asked for help to overcome bilious headaches, from which she had suffered for forty years, and also a skin disease, which had lasted two years. The eruption soon disappeared completely, while the headaches rarely occur, and when they do are much less severe.

We are thankful to God for the great happiness He has given us in opening for mankind this door which no one can close. This spiritual understanding reveals the real world, where all is love and bliss. Our gratitude goes out to Mrs. Eddy for her great work. No obstacle could stop this noble woman, because God sustained her at all times and made her victorious. We are grateful for all the Christian Science literature, especially for the new periodical in French, and for the translation of Science and Health, which is truly the key that opens up to us the Bible, that great treasure house.

For nearly eleven years Christian Science has met my every need, and during that time I have had many proofs of the healing power of divine Love. I am especially grateful for the quick and complete healing by mental surgery, at two different times, of dislocation. The first was about eight years ago. I stumbled when going upstairs and put out my hand to save myself; the third finger came in sharp contact with the edge of the step, with the result that the second joint was knocked out of place. I covered it at once with the other hand, realizing the power of Truth to heal every condition, and was able to put the finger straight, but the pain for a short time was great. I had to go almost immediately to teach in the Sunday school, so the suggestion that I should not be able to wear a glove was put aside, and the pain was soon overcome. The finger was never wrapped up and I felt no inconvenience, but did all my work, using the hand as usual. The swelling soon went down, and in a few days I could bend the finger as usual.

The other time, I slipped and severely hurt my thigh, getting home with difficulty, for the pain was severe. I treated myself to destroy all belief in injury, and the pain was relieved a little, but I could not lift my foot from the ground when sitting. In the evening I wrote to a practitioner for help, and very soon after she received my letter the thigh joint moved with a jerk back into its place. I had no idea until then that it had been dislocated, and for some hours the leg was very much swollen; but very soon all pain went, and I was able to move easily in bed and had a good night. I got up without difficulty in the morning, and except for stiffness when going downstairs, for about two days, there was no more inconvenience.

I am very grateful for these proofs of Mind's power to adjust and govern all. I have often been helped by the realization that there is nothing to injure or to be injured, mentally or physically, since God, Love, is All-in-all. This testimony is sent in grateful love to God for the revelation of Christian Science by Mrs. Eddy.

(Miss) ELIZABETH PICKRILL, Eastbourne, Sussex, England.

I first heard of Christian Science in Chicago about sixteen years ago. It seemed to me, at that time, that it was what I had always been seeking, and I accepted it without question or resistance, for it was to me perfectly natural that people should be healed to-day as they were when Jesus was here on earth. The next day I went to see a practitioner, and with two weeks' treatment I was healed of chronic catarrh of the nose and throat for which I had been treated by specialists for several years without receiving any benefit. Since then I have not used material remedies of any kind, but have depended always on the truth as revealed to us in Christian Science. I have had many proofs of the truth of Mrs. Eddy's statement (Science and Health, p. 495), "God will heal the sick through man, whenever man is governed by God."

If Christian Science had done nothing more for me than to heal me of physical diseases, I should certainly be grateful; but I consider the physical healing the smallest thing that Christian Science does for me. By far the most important thing, and that for which I am most grateful, is the overcoming of sin,—of fear, sensitiveness, resentment, of pride, self-love, and all the beliefs that rob us of joy and happiness. It brings to light the falsity of these errors, and teaches us how to uproot them and cast them out. It is impossible to tell others just what this religion does for us; each one must study it for himself and practice it in his daily life in order to realize the freedom, peace, and joy which are the fruits of such endeavor. I can only testify out of my own experience, that an understanding of this truth is truly the "pearl of great price," and that it is worth selling all we have in order to gain it.

I am thankful to God, from whom comes every good and perfect gift; grateful to Jesus, our Way-shower and Exemplar, who so perfectly demonstrated the Christ for us; and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, our Leader, who was so pure in heart that in the seeming darkness of this age she could see God and again reveal to us the perfect man in God's image.

The study of Christian Science has revealed a glimpse of man's at-one-ment with God. I did not take it up for physical healing, but because I was a daily witness of what this truth was doing in the lives of others. As a child I had always found it difficult to subscribe to the faith of my fathers, and although I was accepted as a member of an orthodox church, I never felt any interest in its teachings. On growing to manhood I drifted far away from any religious body, and considered all religious observances and those who practiced them, as objects of ridicule. With the exception of the hours devoted to the pursuing of my vocation, all my spare time was used in the vain search for worldly comforts and indulgences. All the so-called pleasures of material existence were sampled, with the result that while some were found to be devoid of any attraction, others seemed to be more alluring and formed themselves into bad habits.

After marriage my wife, a student of Christian Science, exerted a quiet influence which, even when I mentally resisted it, made me feel rather ashamed of many of the things I was doing and thinking. This led me to read "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" in order to find out more about her religion. Our first child passed on about this time, however, and a reaction of feeling set in that expressed itself in the determination to have nothing further to do with Christian Science, so for several years I went on in my old way of living. Two other children were born and reared under Christian Science teachings, my wife never having wavered in her trust in God's love. The elder child is seven and the younger five years of age at the present time, and neither has ever taken a drop of medicine or had the services of a physician, with the exception of the compulsory school medical law examination requirements, which include vaccination.

About five years ago a circumstance arose which called for immediate action on my part, as it seemed to involve loss and disaster to those near to me; also I seemed to be the only one to whom they could turn in this time of stress. After a careful consideration of the facts involved, I found that all human aid, as expressed through philosophy and theory, of which I had been a great student, was unable to help in this time of trial, so I turned once again to God, wondering the while whether there was any use asking His help after the life I had been leading. This time, instead of a half-hearted reading of Science and Health, the careful study of the Bible with the aid of the Quarterly and the textbook was taken up, and needless to say, the seeming problem was solved in a satisfactory manner. Since then Christian Science has been my all-in-all.

As a result of the application of the truth, many healings have taken place in our home. Both of our children have been healed of the measles, whooping cough, colds, and the results of accidents. As an effect of the measles, the elder child lost her hearing. She was so deaf that she was unable to hear a band play. There was a gathering and the suffering seemed intense. We asked for treatment from a practitioner and in ten days the child was completely healed. The pain from the abscess stopped after the first day. She now has as acute hearing as could be desired. This same girl suffered with an almost complete paralysis of the vocal cords, due to another ailment, and was unable to speak above a whisper. My wife and I applied our understanding of Christian Science to the best of our ability, and in a short time the healing took place. To-day the child possesses a clear musical voice, without the least sense of impairment. I have been healed of the tobacco habit of many years' standing, also of profanity and a bad temper.

Since these healings it has been my privilege to help others prove the healing power of God. It has been a great blessing to have been accepted as a member of The Mother Church as well as of our local church. In conclusion, I wish to thank God that one was found in this age whose life of purity and devotion to Principle made it possible for her to give us the rules for guidance in our passage from sense to Soul. I am grateful for the periodicals that furnish us daily food, and my sincere prayer is that by following the teachings of the Bible as explained by Christian Science, I may be counted worthy to be called a Christian Scientist.

I am very grateful for the many blessings my family and I have received through a better understanding of God as taught in Christian Science. Ivy poisoning, burns, varicose veins, headache, abscesses, neuralgia, and imperfect sight are some of the ills that have been overcome by Christian Science treatment.

I regret to say that two years were wasted in doubt and prejudice; now I am studying hard trying to make up for lost time. One statement by Mrs. Eddy that always gives me new courage is, "What God cannot do, man need not attempt" (Science and Health, p. 231). If we only would believe this and realize it every time a problem confronts us, it would certainly enable us to wait patiently for divine guidance. I am very grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who has given us a key to the Scriptures which enables us to understand God as Love, ever present and all-wise. It seems wonderful to have a religion to teach our children which they can apply to their everyday needs all through life.

I am grateful for the privilege of expressing gratitude to God for healing through Christian Science. This truth came into my life when I was called upon to part with one who was nearer to me than anyone else in the world. I was wonderfully sustained during trials that seemed to overwhelm me, and was instantly and most beautifully healed of grief. My gratitude for this is most sincere, for I had believed that I would have to learn to endure this state of mind and pass through many years of loneliness.

During my first reading of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, I was healed of defective eyesight. I had not finished the book when I suddenly knew that I did not need my glasses, and they have never been worn since. A specialist had treated me for this condition and had told me that it could never be healed, but the understanding of what God is, gave me normal use of my eyes.

I am grateful for many healings, but am not able to express in words my gratitude for the beautiful and practical truth about God that came into my life through Christian Science. It has indeed given to me "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."—(Mrs.) CLARA D. LONGLEY, Boston, U.S.A.

It is with heartfelt gratitude to our Father-Mother God, and to the noble woman who has given to this age a demonstrable understanding of His law, that I write this testimony. Before taking up the study of Christian Science, some twelve or thirteen years ago, I was as a ship without a rudder, having never found an explanation of life that seemed logical, or a religion that satisfied. I could get little comfort from the Bible, which seemed to me full of happenings contrary to law; and so I was filled with doubt, for I felt sure nothing contrary to law had ever taken place. When Christian Science unfolded to me the law of Spirit which puts to silence so-called material law, the Bible became to me, in the words of our Leader (Science and Health, p. 24), "the chart of life."

The study and application of Christian Science has done much for me mentally, morally, physically, and spiritually. It has healed me of bowel disorder in a very aggravated form, stomach trouble, rheumatism, and neuralgia, and has met every need which has presented itself. It is slowly but surely healing me of fear, worry, and a sense of human responsibility by giving me more faith in, and understanding of, God. My little daughter, now nearly ten years old, has never had a drop of medicine, and has been wonderfully protected by this beautiful truth.

That I may show my gratitude by more obedience and unselfed love is my greatest desire.

Words seem inadequate to express my gratitude for Christian Science, not alone for the physical help received through my study and application of its teachings, but more so for the spiritual uplift, for a clearer understanding of God, of my relationship to Him, and of the brotherhood of man. For eleven years I thought it necessary to wear a truss, and seemed unable to go without it even for a day. One day it broke and I was obliged to walk down town without it. I had been told this was a most dangerous thing to do, so was fearful lest some mishap should befall me. Job tells us that the thing he greatly feared came upon him; so before the day was ended, a serious condition set in. I kept at my work for several hours, not knowing what was the trouble nor telling anyone of my suffering, and finally became unconscious. I was then taken to a hospital and hurriedly operated on, although I was not aware of what had happened until the nurse told me, after it was all over. The operation was not successful, as the incision healed outwardly but not inwardly; so my condition was worse than before. Not wanting to submit to another operation, I was again fitted to a truss.

At the time of the operation I had some knowledge of Christian Science, but it was not until two or three years later that it dawned upon me that this healing truth was for me as well as for my fellow beings, not alone to talk and read about, but to put into practice. I studied diligently, trying to apply its teachings to my everyday problems, and one day the thought came to me that I need not wear this support nor look upon this trouble as a part of me; that I was free if only I was able to realize it. I saw that this condition was only a manifestation of fearful mortal mind, which had become so real to me that never before had the thought come to me that it was only an erroneous belief. For a couple of days I battled with this error, then one morning I cut the straps of the support. Words cannot express the freedom I felt. I dressed and walked out, soon forgetting that I had ever been in bondage to a truss. This experience occurred about eight years ago, and I am completely healed.

This has been a wonderful lesson to me. On page 199 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says, "Mortals develop their own bodies or make them sick, according as they influence them through mortal mind." I am grateful for the knowledge that we can dismiss disease in proportion to the occupancy of our thoughts by truth. I am grateful for the protection daily experienced through Christian Science.

When I became interested in Christian Science, I was suffering from the effects of a severe accident in which I had been run over by a horse and wagon going at great speed. I found myself, after a gradual convalescence under the doctor's care, condemned to semi-invalidism on account of injuries to the spine, internal organs, and nervous system. A state of hysteria, exhaustion, and constant pain in the spine, head, eyes, and a weakened heart, made my life unhappy and my work as teacher a great burden. Those who knew me at that time realize how wonderful my present state of health is, which has resulted from Christian Science treatment. All this illness seems to me nothing but a dream, as I now have no evidence of these conditions.

I have been healed of blood poisoning in the foot, which had given me a great deal to overcome in the way of fear; also of severe sore throat and of influenza. Divine Love has likewise strengthened me during several bitter experiences in grief. Erroneous characteristics are being overcome, and I am deeply grateful that the constant study of the Bible, Mrs. Eddy's writings, and our periodicals, as well as the great blessing of activity in a branch Church of Christ, Scientist, are steady sources of healing. The happiness of following God's guidance according to the way in which His will becomes understood, is giving me an ever strengthening dominion over self.

My thankfulness to God and to Christ Jesus, and my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for so intimately revealing divine Truth to us, can best be expressed through the highest demonstration of Love of which I am capable. It is my earnest desire also to state profound appreciation of the splendid work of the editors of our periodicals and of the ever watchful guidance of The Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church.

I desire to express my gratitude for a healing experienced through Christian Science in October, 1913. I had suffered for many weeks from gallstones and appendicitis, and during that time was treated by a well-known physician of this city. My condition, however, gradually grew worse, and an operation was declared to be the only means of relief. It was while I was preparing to go to the hospital that a friend urged me to try Christian Science. I finally consented to do so, and a practitioner was called, with the result that I was instantly healed, being up and about my household duties the next day.

This is only one of many proofs of God's love and care for me and mine, for during my four years' study of Christian Science, I have had other healings. Chronic stomach disorder and valvular heart trouble of twelve years' duration, both of which ailments three doctors had pronounced incurable, have yielded to the power of Truth, and among the members of my family I have witnessed the overcoming of tubercular disease, catarrh, and severe headaches. For all these benefits I am extremely grateful, but the richest blessing I have to-day and the one for which I am most thankful, is the right understanding I have gained of God and of man's relationship to Him.

I have gained so much from reading the Sentinel that I wish to express my thankfulness to God that this beautiful truth is for all time and all people, and my gratitude to His messenger, Mrs. Eddy, for her devotion to Principle, through which we are benefited. I am also grateful to our editors, who are so faithful as to the purity of what is written in our periodicals.

When Christian Science was first presented to me, through a near relative, I would not have it, although sadly in need of a physical healing such as hers had been; namely, that of weak eyes. Three years later, in April, 1915, when I could not read or use my eyes after dark without experiencing severe headaches, she again brought this teaching to my attention. This time a practitioner was asked for treatment, and an instantaneous healing followed, so that glasses which had been worn constantly were laid aside and never have been used since. Other healings followed as I began to use the understanding gained from the study of the Lesson-Sermons, from the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures." I am also gaining more peace and love.

I came into Christian Science for the love and truth and help it could give me, for I thought it a very beautiful religion. The study of Science and Health was begun in 1906, and I have taken no medicine for eight years or more. I was healed of a broken finger, and three years ago laid aside glasses which had been worn for about nine years. My husband was healed of a stomach trouble after one treatment given by my daughter, and afterward of jaundice by my declaration of the truth. He has never had a return of the trouble and is strong and healthy.

I have been relieved of tiredness and pain and sudden sickness by knowing that God is the only power. Not long ago I got a wire in my finger so tight I could not pull it out, and said to my husband and granddaughter that I thought I would have to go to a doctor and have it cut out; but after I had declared the truth about it the wire came out immediately and I felt no pain. I was very thankful for that help and that I was a Christian Scientist. I have been a member of the society here for over six years, and am a member of The Mother Church also. I am thankful to God that Mrs. Eddy was inspired to discover Christian Science, whereby comes to us this spiritual understanding of the Bible so that we can know and prove its truth.

For all the help received and for our literature, including the Quarterly, I am truly grateful; also for the lectures and for the work of the Publishing Society.

(Mrs.) LAURA E. WHEELER, Caldwell, Idaho.

From the Press

[The Methodist Times]

The combination of courage and vision is needful to a great faith. And so far the churches are trammeled by their past and "cumbered about much serving." They lack the unselfishness and venture that are essential to a great Christianity. There is much talk, but it leads to little action. Still less does it lead to action on a scale that will bear comparison with the needs of the situation, or even with the action that statesmen are prepared to take in the secular affairs of the coming age. Let it be clearly recognized by all that a church life based upon the traditions of the past and fettered by the narrow limitations of the present is for the future impossible. The churches of all denominations and in all lands must rise to a larger conception of its life and task, or slowly waste away, while the tides of the Spirit bring their inspiration elsewhere.

[The Biblical World]

Patriotism has generally been regarded as a belligerent virtue. Men have been ready to fight for their country when they dodged taxes for its support. It has been easier to go to war than to go to meetings of reformers. Men have decorated the graves of dead soldiers while they were growing rich by underpaying soldiers' children. But patriotism is outgrowing its past. Nations are less important than humanity, but only super-idealists can believe that patriotism is necessarily hostile to universal brotherhood.

[Rev. G. Ashton Oldham in The Living Church]

Spiritual forces, in the last analysis, are to determine the duration and results of this war. Let every Christian repair to the church's armory and learn again the use and value of his neglected weapons. Let him take up in earnest the spiritual combat within his own soul with faith enough to believe that there the great issues of the universe must be settled, and that just in so far as there they are settled right he will hasten the coming of the immortal reign of justice and peace, the kingdom of God.

[From an editorial in Philadelphia (Pa.) Bulletin]

To-day there is more belief in the return of primitive Christianity than in a physical second coming. . . . We learn most by experience, and after the bloodiest struggle in history we ought to be assured that life consists not in the abundance of things we possess, but rather in the triumph of good over evil.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to WILLIAM R. RATHVON, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

The Church Manual

A lawyer in a middle western city related his experience with healing in Christian Science, through the study of the Church Manual of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, as follows:

"I was sick and a victim of bad habits. I had for some time tried to understand and apply Christian Science. I read the Christian Science textbook and other works of Mrs. Eddy, but still seemed unable to grasp the Science it contained or get relief from my difficulties, although I thoroughly believed that Science as taught by Mrs. Eddy was the truth, and would heal me if I could properly understand and apply it.

"Finally a copy of the Manual of The Mother Church fell into my hands. Being a lawyer by profession, I started to read this Manual as an example of law, and as a study of Mrs. Eddy as a lawgiver. As I read I marveled at the wonderful way in which the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science had checked individual with individual, and balanced function against function in the government of The Mother Church.

"I not only realized that I was reading the most perfectly balanced and the most wonderful law in the world, but I also found myself healed!"

This testimony again proves the healing power contained in all our inspired Leader's writings without exception, and that, as Mrs. Eddy states on page 446 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "A thorough perusal of the author's publications heals sickness."

The Problem of Evil Solved

CLARENCE W. CHADWICK

THE inscrutable problem of evil still engages the thought of philosopher and religionist, and must continue to do so until the demonstration of Christian healing comes to the rescue with its proof of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God, good. Human reasoning, if humble enough to concede the all-power and presence of God, may lead thought to the foot of the mountain, but it cannot scale the steep heights of spiritual discernment and attainment. Demonstration alone can do this. Until some faint gleam of spiritual light dawns upon human consciousness, the vexatious problem of evil will seem mountain high; and worldly wisdom will be found contending for the reality and continuity of that which denies the power and presence of God.

Christian Science to-day would have no vital message to the world did it not offer the one and only solution of this problem of evil. Scholastic theology may scoff at such a statement, but the indisputable facts are here to confirm, beyond all question of doubt, the soundness of Christian Science doctrine. When the so-called incurable sick and sinful come to Christian Science for help, and when, upon no other basis than that of the omnipotence and omnipresence of God, they are completely relieved of their burdens, and are mentally, morally, and spiritually quickened to discern the risen Christ-idea, there is just one reasonable conclusion at which to arrive, and that is that the hand of God is in the demonstration. No honest man or woman can question the proof of Christian Science healing after once having experienced it, and after having gained an understanding of Principle, the basic truth upon which such healing has been accomplished. The demonstration of healing, in its broadest sense, is the one and only answer that will ever be given concerning the why and wherefore of evil. However difficult may seem the problem of evil in its manifold phases, the only remedy for it is the obliteration of its seeming existence in human consciousness. Christian Science undertakes to accomplish this very thing, and it asks only to be judged by its fruits.

The occasional spasmodic attempts to belittle the claim that Christian Science is Christlike because it does the works which Christ Jesus did, are almost, without exception, frenzied efforts to bolster up the contention that evil is everywhere present, and that it is sometimes even more powerful than good. Is it not amazing to see how passionately the rank and file of professing Christians will argue for the reality and permanency of evil when challenged by the practical demonstration of Christian Science healing! Why indulge in ill-tempered epithets against Christian Science any more than against the record of the New Testament, which abounds with cases of healing performed by the Master and by his followers, in proof of the fact that they had compassed the solution of the problem of evil?

Who is so unwise as to declare that Christian Science leaves the mystery of evil an unsolved problem? It is he alone who fails to separate the tares from the wheat and to follow that which is good. The student of Christian Science undertakes to solve the problem of evil in the same way that a mathematician deals with mistakes in calculation. That is, he understands evil to be simply a mistake; not a mistake of the one infinite or divine Mind, which is incapable of making a mistake, but a failure of the so-called mortal or human mind to understand and to grasp the real nature of God, good. He corrects the mistake by gaining and applying an understanding of what is right and true. He views the belief in evil as a subtle conspiracy against good, and the conspiracy is dissipated the moment its falsity is laid bare through his understanding of the true nature of good. In other words, he understands evil to be but the seeming absence of good, rather than an intelligent entity or power incapable of dissolution. He reasons thus: Since God is good and ever present, there is no room left for evil to occupy; consequently evil cannot be considered on a par with good, and must, therefore, be supposititious rather than actual or real. This reduces evil to a purely relative experience, unknown to the consciousness of absolute good or to the real man reflecting this consciousness. When this concept of the mythical nature of evil enters human consciousness, it is the unseen message of Truth which comes with healing in its wings; it is the coming of Christ, Truth, to the individual who is receptive to spiritual truth. This coming of the Christ is no mere theory to be accepted or rejected by mankind, but an actuality, an inevitable, incontrovertible, demonstrable fact; an active, vitalizing prelude to all true spiritual attainment.

How can a professing Christian repeat the statement of Habakkuk, respecting God, "Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity," and then presume to give actual power and presence to evil as something to be believed in by the same human being who is admonished to "have faith in God," omnipotent and omnipresent good; and to worship this God with his whole heart, mind, soul, and strength? When this higher light of spiritual understanding dawned upon Mrs. Eddy, she was sufficiently childlike and humble to let it be put to the supreme test in the healing of a desperate case of disease; and this is what she has to say of the experience on page 7 of "Unity of Good": "When I have most clearly seen and most sensibly felt that the infinite recognizes no disease, this has not separated me from God, but has so bound me to Him as to enable me instantaneously to heal a cancer which had eaten its way to the jugular vein." After reading of such experiences, students of her writings may in all humility recall the words of the Master, "The works that I do in my Father's name, they bear witness of me." Whoever professes love for Christ Jesus must be able to point to works of healing as evidence of spiritual understanding on his part, else he must be placed on the list of those who have not yet solved the seeming mystery of evil.

The admonition of Scripture, "Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity," has a deep significance in the consideration of the problem of evil. He alone departs from evil who rules it out of his thought, thereby refusing to give it either entity or power. To admit that evil is either conscious or intelligent would make it the concomitant of good. To depart from the belief in evil is to know that good and evil cannot dwell together, and from this self-evident fact to deduce that good is one and all because it is infinite; therefore good is the only real presence there is or ever will be. No professing Christian would admit that the consciousness of good involves a consciousness of evil. He knows that good is good only, although he may fail to recognize that good is one and all. Christian Science teaches that there is one infinite, all-good Mind, and to this great spiritual fact, when all is said and done, every knee must bow and every tongue confess.

How shall the consciousness of good only ever be attained? Only through purification from the human mind which is opposed to calling evil "a liar, and the father of it," as did Jesus. Any thinking person must admit the possibility of rising above certain evil thoughts. Then why should it be impossible to rise superior to all evil thinking? Paul says, "Be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." Christian Science shows how this transformation is to take place. It can never be accomplished by believing in the reality or actuality of evil, but by departing from this belief, by disbelieving it. The most devout of professing Christians have striven and are striving to "overcome evil with good," but how can they ever expect anything but failure so long as they admit that evil is any part of man's real consciousness. How can they hope to overcome or destroy that which they are unwilling to condemn or repudiate? How can they repeat daily, "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever," and then immediately deny this statement by giving power, intelligence, and reality to evil? Would this mean any mental departure from iniquity? Why should Christian Science be maligned for so magnifying the name (character) of the Lord that the mythical nature of evil is thereby disclosed and Christian healing made available in this day and age? Why say, "I believe in God Almighty," when you do not believe that God is all, omnipotence and omnipresence? Why should Christian Science be repudiated because it enables its faithful followers to declare intelligently and confidently, We know that God is all-powerful, and because He is the only power there is, we are enabled to prove this fact through "signs following," thereby departing from evil in the only way possible to men?

To believe that evil has power to make men sick or sinful, robs one of the ability to practice Christian healing. To know that evil has no real power for good or evil places human consciousness under the guidance and control of the one Mind, God, who is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance," by ceasing to believe in something opposed to God, good. And when the will of God is made manifest, the sick are healed and the sinful are reformed to-day as they were in Jesus' time. He who essays to criticize Christian Science should first ask himself whether he has investigated Christian Science up to the point of being enabled to heal the sick according to its teaching; and unless he has done so he must, if perfectly honest with himself, admit that he is in no position to express even an opinion about it. In order to pass judgment upon Mrs. Eddy's teaching, one must be open-minded enough to hear something new concerning the solution of the problem of evil and to put it to the test. If he finds that it does not do what is claimed for it, when intelligently and honestly applied, then will be the time to pass judgment. Fortunately for him, Christian Science will always stand the strain of honest and sincere investigation. One who understands it can heal the sick. One who does not understand it cannot heal the sick, nor can he impart to others the Master's concept of good, which gave him all power "in heaven and in earth" to prove evil a mere negation. He alone knows the power of Christian Science who solves the problem of evil by implicit obedience to God's command, which says, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

What more powerful, positive, scientific, and exact statement of truth could fall from human lips than that which came from the great Teacher of men when confronted with the audacious assertion of evil voiced through Pilate, "Knowest thou not that I have power to crucify thee, and have power to release thee?" Jesus then answered, "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." Jesus took his stand on the side of omnipotent good and thereby maintained his sonship with the Father. He never once believed in the reality of evil; never once believed in evil as place, person, or thing; but he did recognize what evil claimed to be, and by proving this claim a lie, a would-be usurper of God's power and presence, he not only worked out his own salvation, but outlined for all mankind the way to attain heaven, the consciousness cognizant of good and of good only. No wonder our Leader voiced this sentiment (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 309): "He advances most in divine Science who meditates most on infinite spiritual substance and intelligence."

Dreams

KATHARINE T. PORTER

THE operation of Christian Science in the human understanding is essentially a process of waking up. The Scriptures constantly refer to mortal existence as a dream, and St. Paul tells us that "it is high time to awake out of sleep." Mrs. Eddy also insists on this fact persistently throughout her writings, and from her urgency on this point one concludes that the realization that the mortal sense of existence is but a dream is essential to healing on scientific lines. To make spiritual progress, the dream sense of existence must become more and more unreal and incredible to us; we must see through its inconsistencies and falsities, and our best metaphysical perception must correspondingly acknowledge only that which is ruled by Principle. The reference to this life, so called, as a dream sometimes calls forth the protestation that it lasts too long to be of a dream nature, that we have been born asleep, as it were, and have never known anything else. It is also argued that a sleeping dream is utterly inconsequential, entirely without law or order or the consecutiveness which characterizes our earthly experience. This claim of the mortal life dream to be consistent and governed by law, requires examination and analysis; for it is not true, and it is foolish to allow it to exercise any influence upon mortals.

In Isaiah we find this prophecy: "It shall even be as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite." It was along these same lines that the writer once received much spiritual help. Going to bed supperless, she too dreamed that a satisfying meal was spread before her, but was removed before she could partake of it. Waking, she experienced a pang of disappointment, and in spite of the obvious absurdity of the wish, ruefully thought, "I wish I had eaten those good things before I awoke, anyhow!" Then certain mental questions rapidly presented themselves, demanding replies, as often happens when a lesson is being driven home: "Would you be a bit better off if you had eaten that dream meal? Could it have satisfied you—or, on the other hand, could it have caused indigestion?" No, it could not have done either; for it was not substantial, or real. "Now, do you see why matter is not causative, cannot either heal or nourish, can have neither ill nor good effect?" It is not real substance. It is but a dream dose we take when we take medicine; for mortal existence is but a dream.

Since we generally consider dreams to be lawless, irrational, irresponsible, therefore no specific suffering is attached to our dream deeds. Mortal mind does not condemn us to limitations and penalties in the sleeping dream sense, as it does in the waking dream sense. In our dreams we can fly, change our surroundings and environment without effort, go through endless experiences and lightning changes without the least surprise or distress; we can part from those we love without any sense of loss or grief,—in short, in dreams time is unknown, space is annihilated, and personality has little or no sway. This enhanced sense of freedom is more or less general with all dreamers, although the details are never twice alike; therefore the objection that the dream sense is limited to the individual himself, whereas the waking sense of life in matter is universal, loses any weight it may have had.

On page 110 of "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," our Leader, in writing on this subject, asks: "And what of reality, if waking to bodily sensation is real and if bodily sensation makes us captives? The night thought, methinks, should unfold in part the facts of day, and open the prison doors and solve the blind problem of matter." And so it does, if we will but let it: the night thought will teach us many things,—to be more free, less bound to our own human-made laws and penalties, to be more simple and fearless, more "as a little child." Compared with the inconsistencies of night dreams, the waking sense claims to be rational, natural, and true; but, indeed, the human sense of life in matter is a compound of self-contradiction and impossibility, beginning as it does with a perfect creator, who is Spirit, then declaring for a creation which is sinful and material.

We find, on examination, that what causes this deceptive sense of life in matter to deceive, is chiefly its counterfeit of law,—of given effects following given causes. The night dream is guiltless of any such false claim to usurp the prerogative of Deity; it is frankly and completely disorganized, and therefore it is the lesser liar of the two. In his first epistle to the Corinthians, Paul declares that "the strength of sin is the law," meaning surely not God's law, but the so-called law of mortal belief, which condemns men to sin, sickness, and death. In Galatians he also says that "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law." In the seventh chapter of Romans he tries in every way to explain this to his readers and says, "Ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ." And still, after humanity has for nearly two thousand years read these and many similar statements, and preached them, we continue to bow down to a false sense of law, which is no law, but simply the unreasoning fear of the Adam-dream, and verily, as Paul says, a "curse."

Do we wish to wake up from this Adam-dream? Then we can. Does not the light wake us up in the morning? In the same way the light of Truth will awaken us to our true being, if we do but turn that way even in our sleep! Do we wish to wake up? If so, we must realize better than we do how irrational are the demands of these dream beliefs of life in matter, and refuse to bow down to their so-called necessity. We must not only believe in our freedom, we must also demonstrate it. The writer well remembers how, on the day following the hunger dream above recounted, the sense suggestion of a "cold" was laughed at, so clearly did it appear to thought as a waking dream, and so it was destroyed before it could develop. One cannot take these things so seriously when one realizes that they are but of "such stuff as dreams are made on." Do we wish to wake up? If the Adam-dream is fairly bearable, we are often, in our dark ignorance of the joys of Spirit, content to let things remain as they are; but when it becomes intolerable, we cry aloud to God for help,—and that cry is prayer. Suppose, for a moment, that during a very terrible night dream, a whisper broke in upon the agonized sense: "It is not true,—it is not happening,—you are perfectly safe,—and all that you love are safe,—this is but a dream, and not true! Come, wake up; you are all right!" Hearing this whisper, and even faintly grasping its import, a sense of peace and relief would come to the dreamer, the strain would relax, the fear would grow less, and a sense of comfort would replace a sense of agony.

This is the healing which Christ, Truth, as understood in Christian Science, brings to the dreamers of to-day. The Adam-dream of to-day is appalling and terrible; and for that reason there is more gratitude for this still, small voice, and more attention being paid to it than ever before. Thus, although we may not awaken to the full truth of existence as quickly as some of us might wish, the terror of the dream will steadily diminish, the dream circumstances will become less and less real to us and, as our Leader says on page 496 of Science and Health, "the way will grow brighter 'unto the perfect day.'"

The Ark

WILLIAM LLOYD

THE study of the Bible, in connection with our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, in furtherance of a sincere desire to live righteously, gives an enlarged understanding, a protection and guidance in every affair of life, which it is impossible to describe, and which must be experienced to be either appreciated or understood. In all our lives there are periods of calm and storm. We may go on for months, even years, in the same seemingly harmonious routine, sailing on a calm sea and under a blue sky, and then, suddenly, the storm comes. If we have not secured a sure pilot, we are liable to be shipwrecked.

Noah was, first of all, a just man; and being a just man he walked with God, or lived in accord with God's law of truth and justice. He thus attained spiritual intuition, or enlarged understanding, so he was warned to prepare for a great flood, and was given directions how to build a safe refuge which would bear him and his household over the waters. Now Noah was believing, faithful, obedient, and persistent, and so he built the ark and rode in safety over the flood. The building of the ark did not save him from this experience of stress and storm, but it brought him and his household in safety through it. He did not wait until it began to rain before beginning to build. He laid the keel of the ark probably in bright sunshine under a blue sky. It was a strong and substantial ark, and it took many fine, sunshiny days to build it; but with faithful perseverance Noah labored on, adding plank to plank, examining every seam and crevice so that all might be sound and water-tight; and then one day the sky was overcast, the sun was not to be seen, the rain descended,—but Noah and his household abode in safety, because he had labored faithfully in fair weather, in the sunshine and under the blue sky, when apparently there was no need of effort.

Some thirty years ago I accepted Christian Science as my religion. I had no other choice; for from the first day I read the book "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by our revered Leader, its logic to me was unanswerable. If there was a God at all and a Bible worth anything, then that book proved the one and explained the other. It was the truth embodied in plain language for all to understand. I, however, accepted it for thirteen years only as a religion; when occasion arose, others did the healing work for the household. I had the plans and specifications for my ark, but had not yet laid the keel; the sun shone and my sky was blue. Then came, through a mistaken move, a great storm upon my life; and only then, after the flood had somewhat subsided, did I lay the keel of my ark and begin to build. As the years have gone by, my ark has grown stouter; and in it I and my household have ridden in safety through many lesser storms,—so safely that now I know, had I laid the keel and built in the days of warm sunshine and blue skies, I would have been so guided that either I would never have made my mistaken move and so would have avoided the tempest, or I would have been carried, with my household intact, in safety through it. I know this; for the belated building of my ark not only has delivered me and mine in many cases of physical need, but has so enlarged and liberated my sense of right as to direct me in my business life, and enable me to meet new, untried problems and situations with confidence, direction, protection, and success.

The plans and specifications for our ark are all in the Bible and "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures;" our planks, nails, and calking are supplied in our wonderful Lesson-Sermons, also in our Sentinel, Journal, and Monitor. Everything necessary with which to build is abundantly furnished us, and all we have to do is to give the time and labor,—labor that shortly ceases to be anything but a joy; time that even in the busiest life can readily be found,—how readily, as the labor turns into joy, will surprise one. And so each and every one of us can build an ark. On page 581 of Science and Health we find this definition: "ARK. Safety; the idea, or reflection, of Truth, proved to be as immortal as its Principle." There is no need for anyone to be swallowed in the flood and to be cast up, naked, on the shore as the waters subside,—if only each one will build his ark while the sun shines and the sky is blue.

As Children

AS a Christian Scientist stood one day looking down into the sweet face of a little child, there flashed into her thought Mrs. Eddy's definition of "children" in Science and Health (p. 582), "The spiritual thoughts and representatives of Life, Truth, and Love." Yes, surely; no wonder we love the children. Then the definition continues: "Sensual and mortal beliefs; counterfeits of creation, whose better originals are God's thoughts, not in embryo, but in maturity." Here the Scientist stopped, startled, asking herself: "Are there, then, no children as we know them in God's spiritual universe? Can it be that in the kingdom of heaven these dear little ideas we call babies, children, boys and girls, will all be mature ideas? A world without children would be a strange world indeed." Almost instantly these words of Zechariah answered the question: "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." Of course there must be children in that holy city, "whose builder and maker is God."

Continuing to ponder the matter, the Scientist realized that man, the only man, God's man, is and always has been a mature, complete, and perfect idea. She saw, too, that even from a human standpoint this child, whose baby sweetness she loved so much, would grow and develop in a few years into a mature man. "And yet there are children in 'the streets of the city,'" she went on to herself. Why did she want them there? What would be missing if they were not there? Quickly she saw that it was not the dimpled hands, or the curly hair, or the tiny bodies; these were not what she loved the children for, but for the spiritual qualities they expressed. She could hear the echo of her own voice asking a Sunday school class that very question: "Do we love our mothers and fathers because of the color of their eyes or hair? Is it what we see with our eyes that makes us love them?" A little one had replied, her face shining with love, "It can't be that, because my mamma's hair used to be brown and now it's white, and I love her just the same." They were very sure that the real man, the man they loved, was not the one the eye beheld. "The real man is not the man we see, but the man who thinks good thoughts," they had told her. "So then," she continued, "the real child is the child who thinks pure, childlike thoughts. That is why we love the children, and that is why Jesus 'took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them.'"

At this point there came crowding into the Scientist's thought many passages from the Book of books about the children, and many more loving references to them in our Leader's works. She felt that some study of these would be very illuminating. She wanted to know what mental characteristics the Master had blessed, and what those essential qualities of thought were without which she could in no wise enter the kingdom. First she read the experience of the child Samuel, whose thought was awake, ready to hear the call of Truth and obediently answer, "Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth." And she noted with grateful joy the spiritual receptivity of another child, our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy, who, like Samuel, was prepared to hear the word of God and was faithful enough to tell it to a waiting world.

To the ready acceptance of good, the student added trust in good, as she thought again of her Sunday school children. They never doubted what she told them, never argued, never feared. They received good simply and naturally, trusted it to the uttermost, and confidently looked to it to meet their every need. The purity and innocence of childhood are, of course, proverbial; but the student saw now that these qualities are the recognition of good alone as real, the knowledge of good as all. A deeper comprehension of the meaning of the beatitude came to her; "the pure in heart" see God, because they see only good and are without knowledge of or belief in anything apart from Him. To purity, innocence, receptivity to good and trust therein, she added affection, as she thought of the joyous greeting of the children of her class, and the little faces alight with love.

Still another child quality which is most interesting is mentioned by Mrs. Eddy in "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 12): "The dear children's good deeds are gems in the settings of manhood and womanhood. The good they desire to do, they insist upon doing now. They speculate neither on the past, present, nor future, but, taking no thought for the morrow, act in God's time." This consciousness which lives in the now, trusting to Love's protecting care, and joyous because of His eternal goodness, must indeed be one of the children playing in "the streets of the city."

Many other childlike qualities might be mentioned, such as faith, bravery, unselfishness; but those given were sufficient to show one student that in the kingdom of the loving Father-Mother God there certainly are children, and she understood better than ever before why Mrs. Eddy once wrote (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 110), "Beloved children, the world has need of you,—and more as children than as men and women."

"Bring ye all the tithes"

MARIE LE CLAIR

WHEN I received an invitation to serve on a committee for literature distribution, I gladly accepted it, although it seemed that my days were completely filled with work as a practitioner. In taking up the work of this committee, my first step was to examine my thought to learn how much the literature meant to me. I was indeed a subscriber to the Monitor and all the periodicals. I read them faithfully and distributed them all, but not until the thought of having to do without them was squarely faced, did I realize how great a need in my daily life they were supplying. I knew that I could not do without them. This led me to see that every one else in the world needed them just as much as I did, and that serving on this distribution committee was an opportunity to help supply that need in a larger way.

Then the question came, How much time can I give to this work? Here two aspects were to be considered: first, the relative value of my work as a practitioner and that of the work of distributing literature; second, the fact that while the first work apparently supplied my daily needs, the other was to be gratuitous. In settling the first question, I came to see that the wise distribution of our literature was one of the channels for healing, and in doing that work I was about "my Father's business" just as much as when I was in my office seeing patients. The second was disposed of by knowing that supply means ideas, not money, and that, as our Leader tells us (Science and Health, p. 79), "Giving does not impoverish us in the service of our Maker."

I began at once by taking one whole day in the week from my office, the afternoon of which was devoted to the distribution work, and gave besides on other days all my time outside of office hours. Money was needed to carry on the work. I must do my part in that, too, and was led to subscribe for an amount to be given monthly far exceeding anything I had felt able to give before. To the metaphysician the result is obvious and does not need to be touched upon; but to those just beginning their demonstration, let me say that not only have my needs been supplied in every way far in excess of anything I have had before, but a sense of peace and security has come to me which outweighs all else.

Nor is this all the blessing. The work on this committee has helped me to look into and analyze the great world upheaval now going on, to value our country and what it stands for, and to take my part, to the utmost of my ability, in giving to it through the avenues provided. This experience is but an illustration of the following verse from Malachi: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

["Life"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Jan. 5, 1918]

In nothing that it has ever undertaken to investigate or to analyze has the human mind proved more self-contradictory or more at sea than in its efforts to define life. The reason for this is perfectly simple and equally obvious. Whether reasoning from a biological, a theological, a philosophical, or what it would term a purely common sense basis, it has always founded its argument on the evidence of the physical senses, so that the conclusion reached has always been a purely finite one. The biologist, that is to say, traces human existence from the germ to its disintegration and reabsorption into matter. The theologian accepts the premises and conclusions of the biologist, with the reservation that he attributes the spark of life not to matter, electricity, or energy, but to God. The philosopher, elaborating his theory of the indestructibility of matter, accepts always the limitations of the physical universe. Whilst the exponent of common sense intrenches himself behind the irrefutable proposition that he believes what he sees.

The curious part of the matter, however, is that the solution of the entire problem is contained, in the very simplest language, in the most available book in the whole world. The Bible makes it perfectly clear that Life is only a synonym for God, and that, this being so, the more a man knows about God, the more he necessarily knows about Life. Now natural science, theology, human philosophy, material common sense, being themselves products of a finite sense of things, have always separated human existence from a larger realization of life. Their exponents have adopted, that is to say, the saying of the philosopher, Seneca, "Quid est enim novi, hominem mori, cujus tota vita nihil aliud quam ad mortem iter est?" or in direct English, "What is there new, then, for a man in death, seeing that his entire life is a journey to the grave?" To them life is nothing but the form, the divine energy, the matter, or whatever it may be, of their respective schools, and is dependent on or independent of divine propulsion, according to the teaching of these schools.

Now the deduction from this is extremely simple, it either thrusts God entirely out of creation, and enthrones matter in His place, or it makes matter the creation of Spirit, which is entirely absurd. What Jesus himself thought of such teaching he made abundantly and luminously clear. "That," he declared to Nicodemus, "which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit;" whilst to the Jews he insisted, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life,"—sayings which, whatever else they may mean, mean unquestionably this: first, that God having in the spiritual creation seen all that He had made, and pronounced it good, cannot possibly subsequently have created the flesh which profiteth nothing; and, second, that life is not a material organism but a conscious understanding of Principle.

All through the teaching of Jesus this explanation of life, an explanation so clear and simple that the philosophers and theologians must have been hard put to misunderstand it, occurs again and again. "This is life eternal," he said in the presence of his disciples, on the road to Gethsemane, "that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." Life eternal, then, is an understanding of absolute Truth, and so Truth, or God, is Life, and the life manifested in spiritual creation is the reflection or understanding of God, Truth, or Life. For, as the writer of the first epistle of John says, so emphatically and so conclusively, in summing up his epistle, "This is the true God, and eternal life."

It is supremely clear, then, that if God, Spirit, made man in His own image and likeness, and if this man, born of Spirit, is something totally apart from the flesh which profiteth nothing, then the life in the flesh must be a supposititious life, or a lie about the reality. This lie that life is finite, material, mortal, "nihil aliud quam ad mortem iter," nothing more than a journey to death, was exposed fully by Jesus. "Ye," he explained, speaking of sinning human beings, "are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." He could scarcely have said more clearly that the delusion of life in matter, which profiteth nothing, was a lie, and that this murderous lie ended in the acceptance of another lie, death. Indeed, he explained how this lie was to be contradicted and exposed, when he said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," free from what but the effects of believing the lie, for this knowledge of the truth is the knowledge of "the true God, and eternal life."

Is it any wonder then that the wise man wrote, "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding"? This wisdom is not, however, the wisdom of Seneca; it is not the wisdom of the natural scientists or the philosophers, the theologians or the men of common sense; it is the wisdom of Jesus the Christ, and it is attained only by walking in the footsteps of the Christ. "The pallid invalid," writes Mrs. Eddy, on page 376 of Science and Health, "whom you declare to be wasting away with consumption of the blood, should be told that blood never gave life and can never take it away,—that Life is Spirit, and that there is more life and immortality in one good motive and act than in all the blood, which ever flowed through mortal veins and simulated a corporeal sense of life." That sentence from Science and Health links up and makes practical, to-day, the various sayings of Jesus, previously quoted, which were themselves conceived and uttered in a language at once simple and practical to the people of that day.

It is very little use telling a man that Life is God, if you proceed to draw a picture of God as a supernatural being, dwelling in space, completely beyond his comprehension, and communicable with only by means of prayers which will be arbitrarily listened to or disregarded. But if you can show him that God is Life, and that this Life is Principle, the Principle from which he derives his true being, then you will make comprehensible to him the whole scientific theory of the atonement, namely that in proportion as he himself obliterates in consciousness everything that is unlike God, that is, unlike Principle, the divine Mind and not the mortal mind will be reflected in his actions, and in proportion as this reflection broadens and strengthens so will his life be made harmonious by being atoned or made at one with Principle. In this way he will put off the old man with his works, the mortal or human mind with all its material and sensual appetites and passions, and put on the new man which is the Christ. Thus is it that Mrs. Eddy replies, on page 96 of "Miscellaneous Writings," to her own question,

"Do I believe in the atonement of Christ?

"I do; and this atonement becomes more to me since it includes man's redemption from sickness as well as from sin. I reverence and adore Christ as never before.

"It brings to my sense, and to the sense of all who entertain this understanding of the Science of God, a whole salvation."

[Aaron E. Brandt in The Press, Philadelphia, Pa.]

Christian Science is mentioned in one of the interesting letters of a soldier undergoing training in the aviation service at the front. Owing to the fact that Christian Science is proving itself very helpful to many boys in the service, the mistake made by him in supposing that Christian Science consists of using one's will power in "imagining a steam heat plant" to be present when he is cold, and trying to convince himself that his stomach is full when hungry, should not be allowed to appear without correction.

To depend upon will power for help in such circumstances is no doubt better relatively than to submit without resistance, but to imagine things as stated can give no real help, and would ultimate in mentally unbalancing a man. Christian Science, on the other hand, shows one how to lean upon a sustaining Providence as a child of God, with a measure of that spiritual understanding which Jesus endeavored to give mankind.

To understand even a mite of the truth which sustained Jesus in the wilderness, and Moses and Elijah forty days without material food, and while enduring other hardships, is too helpful and too greatly needed by the boys in the service to be lightly passed over as a process of the imagination. In no war of the world's history had the soldiers engaged therein a better right to the support of an overruling Providence than our boys have in the present contest, fighting unselfishly for the liberty of the world, and the freedom of nations to work out their own destiny.

[W. Stuart Booth in Western Medical Times, Denver, Col.]

Whenever anyone is led to discuss a subject upon which he is not informed, he is quite sure to wander from the beaten path of fact into a maze of his own misconceptions, where he becomes woefully mired and confused, without, however, realizing his condition, much as a man lost in a forest without a compass will believe himself to be making progress when he is but going round and round. A considerable number of physicians have exchanged their material methods of practice for the spiritual as taught in Christian Science; but if a Christian Scientist, other than these, were to attempt the explanation of medical practice, he would probably become as hopelessly entangled as did the physician who tried to write about Christian Science in a recent issue of the Times.

This good doctor may be well-read in medical books, but the Book of books, the Bible, has evidently been studied little by him, else he would not have made the absurd statement that Christ Jesus never prayed but twice, and never prayed for anyone's healing. As a matter of fact his life was one of ceaseless prayer, and because of this he said, "Men ought always to pray." When asked by the disciples why they had failed to heal the epileptic boy whom he had restored, Jesus said, "This kind can come forth by nothing but by prayer and fasting,"—irrefutable evidence that such was his own healing method. The doctor again shows his unfamiliarity with Scripture when he claims that Christ Jesus delegated healing power to Peter only, whereas the Master specifically instructed not only the twelve but the seventy as well, to "heal the sick." Furthermore by consulting the twelfth verse of the fourteenth chapter of John it will be found that Christ Jesus promised, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also." Evidently the early Christians accepted this promise; for, according to Gibbon's History of Rome, they healed the sick and even raised the dead, up to the third century A. D. The study of the last few verses of Mark is also recommended in this connection.

When Christ Jesus said, "I and my Father are one," he did not refer to his material body; for he also stated, "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." According to Scripture God is Spirit, and hence man, made in His image, must be and is spiritual; herein is the oneness of God and man. On page 361 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes, "As a drop of water is one with the ocean, a ray of light one with the sun, even so God and man, Father and son, are one in being."

Since the basis of Christian Science teaching is identical with the avowed belief of the critic: viz., the omnipotence, omnipresence, and omniscience of God, it may be asked why we differ. Without pretending to speak for the doctor, the statement is made on behalf of Christian Science that having accepted the above premise, it remains consistent therewith in both theory and practice. If God, good, is omnipotent, omnipresent, and omniscient it must follow that whatever is unlike God, good, is impotent, without place in divine reality, and is devoid of true intelligence. Christian Scientists recognize the humanitarian aims and efforts of medical practitioners, and honor and respect them therefor, and it is hoped and believed that the better class of physicians, while, perhaps, not agreeing with Christian Science methods, do at least respect the high spiritual aims of Christian Scientists.

The lengthy discourse on Christian Science in a recent issue presents at least one novel phase; for rarely does a critic of this religion complain because it is founded upon the teachings of the Bible. The charge that Mrs. Eddy has committed plagiarism in arranging for Lesson-Sermons comprising readings from the Old Testament, and in incorporating many of its teachings in the religion she gave to the world, without properly recognizing their Jewish source, would be humorous if it were not said so seriously. As monotheism is the very foundation upon which all Christendom has reared its structures, it is quite inconceivable why the Discoverer and Founder of Christian Science alone should be selected for this belaboring. All Christians the world over, Christian Scientists in particular, recognize and gratefully acknowledge the source of their religious heritage as reaching far back to the kings, prophets, and wise men of Israel.

Christian Science definitely teaches that the Old Testament is the history of the unfoldment in national consciousness of the true idea of God. It recognizes that from the early concept of a God of love and hate, a God of passion and war, there came gradually to Israel the light of spiritual understanding, a revelation of truth, which reached its culmination in the life and teachings of Christ Jesus. Mrs. Eddy could, with as much justice, be charged with plagiarism in teaching the doctrine of Jesus as in accepting and promulgating the Jewish concept of the unity of God, as revealed through the prophets and lawgivers of Israel. It should be noted that the statement that God is Love is quite different from the assertion that God is a God of love. Notwithstanding the claim of the critical rabbi, the Old Testament, while teaching love as an attribute of God, does not teach that God is in essence Love. That was left to Jesus and the author of the fourth gospel, to be further amplified and expanded by Mrs. Eddy. Christian Science teaches that God is infinite Love, divine Mind, having no consciousness of hate; while all the world knows that the concept of the Jehovah of the Jews was of a God of love and hate. Mrs. Eddy states this very clearly on page 140 of Science and Health, "The Jewish tribal Jehovah was a man-projected God, liable to wrath, repentance, and human changeableness. The Christian Science God is universal, eternal, divine Love, which changeth not and causeth no evil, disease, nor death." The one is the early concept of God as a despotic monarch, the other the fullness of revelation in consciousness of God as infinite Principle, perfect Love.

The best proof that the teachings of the Jewish religion are practical in the healing of disease is to employ them to that end. Christian Science . . . proves its faith by its works. Is it not fair to presume that when the "signs following," manifest in healing the sick, regenerating the sinner, and pointing a present day salvation from all discordant living, shall characterize the practice of the Jewish religion, there will be no occasion for this kind of controversy? It is because just such signs are following those that believe in Christian Science, that its ranks have so rapidly filled. Is not the most practical, in fact the only, method of controverting this religion found in proving to the world that there is a better way, not through mere assertion but by demonstration?

Extracts from Letters

"We are sending a year's subscription to our periodicals for the Army, in addition to distributing our own in Virginia. Christian Science is growing here in this very conservative old state, which has many excellent virtues and loving and lovable people. Like the dogwood, the redbud, and the tulip trees springing into life here and there in most unexpected places, with the bright promise of spring, and as the arbutus in the woods peeping out from under the thick pile of dead leaves and brush refreshes the landscape, so Christian Science is appearing."

"I must do what I ought to have done long ago—write to you direct to thank you . . . most especially for the little vest pocket edition of 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures.' This would have reached me, as you intended, at Christmas, but for a series of circumstances much too tedious to relate. . . . However, I received it at last when I arrived here. It is, as I am sure you quite knew it would be, just the very thing for a man fixed as I am. Every ounce of weight and every cubic inch of space is a consideration. It makes possible what wasn't really possible before. I couldn't carry the larger book actually on me, and so it was rarely there when I had any real chance to read it. Thank you very much indeed for the most valued of my few possessions."

"I am sending my brother's address as directed in the Sentinel; he is interested in Christian Science and would be glad to receive some of the literature. I am also inclosing two dollars for the War Relief fund. I am so grateful for my little understanding of Christian Science and want to help in every way I can that others may be benefited and learn this great truth."

"With a heart full of gratitude to divine Love and to all those who have a part in manifesting this Love by relieving the uncertain position in which I find myself in these years of war, I wish to acknowledge the receipt of the check which the relief committee sent me."

Notice

Section 6 of Article XXVI of the By-laws of The Mother Church provides that "the associations of the pupils of loyal teachers shall convene annually." It would seem that under present world conditions students of Christian Science are in special need of the spiritual growth, awakening, and blessings which should result from the annual meetings of students' associations.

Working, Watching, Praying

IN metaphysics working means activity rather than toil, accomplishment rather than labor. No curse whatever is connected with it. By the sweat of the brow do men win material bread, but through joy in the heart man receives bread from heaven whereby he is sustained in his working. Of this sustainment Jesus said, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of," whereat the dull disciples thought some one had brought him food, and he had to explain to them, saying, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."

Now working is never done well without watching, because true working will bring the kingdom of heaven and cause the demolishment of various kingdoms of this earth, and there are foes to be overcome. Jesus said, "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight"—that is, fight to maintain the worldly kingdom. And that is just what the servants of the kingdom of this world do most earnestly, fight against whatever will diminish or annul the power and prestige of that in which they believe. Consequently they fight against the coming of the kingdom of heaven, and lay antagonistic plans to hinder and ensnare those working for that coming of the government of Christ.

The figurative speech describing "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience," indicates conflict unseen and influences invisible. Against these influences must the watch be set, for by subtlety, by delusion, by deception and mental poisoning, they will exert their control if they can. Watch is carefully kept in camp or ship; hour by hour there are wakeful eyes guarding by intelligence the common welfare against open or treacherous attack, or other danger. Consequently the worker in metaphysics must never neglect his watch. In Miscellany Mrs. Eddy writes (p. 232): "Can watching as Christ demands harm you? It cannot. Then should not 'watching out' mean, watching against a negative watch, alias, no watch, and gaining the spirit of true watching, even the spirit of our Master's command? It must mean that." The exact rule for watching is something that must never be forgotten. Several times our Leader called the attention of workers to the statement on page 442 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Christian Scientists, be a law to yourselves that mental malpractice cannot harm you either when asleep or when awake."

In order to both work and watch, the intelligent worker uses continually the activity of prayer. More than petition for a good finishing of the work is this. It is communion with that which works, illustrating what Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Mrs. Eddy is unequivocal as to the value of prayer and its effectiveness. Her seeking for quiet was no doubt explained by the same need which our Master felt for communion with Mind when he rose before the dawn and went up to some mountain to pray, or spent the quiet night alone under the brilliant stars in communion with that One who is able to "bring forth Mazzaroth in his season," who indeed "made the stars also." Many true things have been said about prayer. The words of the poet who spoke of it as the Christian's vital breath and said, "He enters heaven with prayer," are true in a way perhaps unknown to the writer of the lines. To enter heaven, in common parlance, means dissolution. In metaphysics it means knowing what is real. We enter heaven by becoming one with "the Son of man which is in heaven."

Prayer, then, unites one with Principle, and the immediate consequent is joyful activity, and so glad is this activity that it is protected by the worker. He offers no stupor for hypnotism to work upon. He never works by human will as the mesmerist does, and so cannot be victimized by the malpractitioner. Very truly indeed can it be said regarding the true metaphysician what Mrs. Eddy writes in her Poems (p. 6):—

> The arrow that doth wound the dove
> Darts not from those who watch and love.

He closes the gate of hearing to the arguments of material suggestion. He will not allow "the lust of the eyes" to make mental pictures, and he forbids the pride of knowledge from whispering, "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Thus working, watching, praying, he conquers the world, the flesh, and the devil.

The Motherhood of Being

ON page 517 of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy writes: "In divine Science, we have not as much authority for considering God masculine, as we have for considering Him feminine, for Love imparts the clearest idea of Deity." Again we read, on page 508 of the same book: "The Mind or intelligence of production names the female gender last in the ascending order of creation."

It is time that the attempt to deprive God of feminine attributes should cease. Is Deity incomplete that it should be confined to mere masculinity? Is the allness of God a misapprehension? Is the Supreme Being inadequate or insufficient? Whence comes this offense against God, this attack upon the divine integrity? Shall male domination under the cloak of religion be permitted to belittle Deity, to reproach the infinite creator, to derogate from the power of the First Cause, to limit "the Holy One of Israel," and thus wantonly and maliciously seek to rob man of the love of God? Christian Science has definitely and finally implanted the understanding of the motherhood of Being in human consciousness.

The Scriptures declare, "Male and female created he them." From this every thinker recognizes at once that feminine as well as masculine attributes must be in the divine Mind, else how could God create them. Everybody knows this to be true, and resistance to this truth constitutes a libel on God and should bring to judgment the written, printed, and published doctrines which thus slander God. It is this one-sided, irreverent concept of God which has permitted hypnotism to call upon God as its god, to terrorize the world with a fictitious male supremacy; but Christian Science sounds the doom of this perversion. The motherhood of God alone can dethrone hypnotism from its pretended right to sit in the seat of authority. The motherhood of Being understood proves the futility of necromancy, because Love alone gives the spiritual understanding which can sweep away the subtle complexities of evil intent. The world cannot be saved by belief in an imperfect God. To continue to support such a travesty upon Deity by creed and dogma is to deliver the world over to animal magnetism and carnage. Let the motherhood of God be preached, and this truth practiced. Not till then can the task of saving the world be accomplished.

The present conspiracy against the rights of man is aimed at woman. Abraham Lincoln foresaw in his day that the great American nation could not remain part slave and part free. The issue is just as clear to-day to those who break the hypnotic spell of enemy propaganda. They find arrayed against them the forces which degrade woman and make her menial. In this instance the conspirators practice what they preach: they subject, defile, and cast upon the scrap heap woman's beauty of holiness, and call this cowardly show of efficiency making nation, church, and science safe. A great woman writing more prophetically than she knew declared years ago:—

> He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
> He is sifting out the hearts of men before his judgment-seat.

But a greater woman than she, searching in the Scriptures, found the spiritual interpretation of the river Gihon which flowed from the garden of Eden to be "the rights of woman acknowledged morally, civilly, and socially" (Science and Health, p. 587). There is no record in Genesis of woman being driven out of Paradise, but it is recorded that Jehovah "drove out the man." To find Paradise, humanity must find the womanhood of God. The perfect model is ever in the Father-Mother, reigning above mere masculine wisdom in the realm of feminine love.

The secular, ecclesiastical, and scientific world is to-day faced by the fact that the concept of an exclusive fatherhood of God cannot win the war in the spiritual sense which still needs to be unfolded to human apprehension. The arm of the Lord cannot be shortened. Spiritual vision outdistances long distance guns. There must be an agreement among all Christians, as there is among Christian Scientists, to cease from speaking evil against their Maker. Let no one try to prejudice man against our Father-Mother God by pretending to curtail the deific character, and thus insult the intelligence of the divine Mind. God is whole. A spurious theology which teaches belief in a half parent is profane and impious. It was uncovered and dethroned when on page 16 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy interpreted the words of the Lord's Prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven," as, "Our Father-Mother God, all harmonious."

Christian Scientists rejoice at this hour in the assurance that the one and only God is entire, lacking no attribute of goodness, and is clothed with the majesty of infinite perfection. The loving compassion of mother gentleness comes from God. The human mother forgives, cherishes, protects, and nurses the weak. Whence come these qualities except from the divine motherhood of God? Christian Scientists love God as Him and as Her. With spiritual endurance they watch and work for humanity to awaken to the grandeur of complete being.

Remembrance

CHRISTIAN people are all familiar with Jesus' words as quoted by Paul in his first epistle to the Corinthians, where we read respecting the last supper which Jesus shared with his disciples, "This do in remembrance of me." It is quite true that Christian thought is drifting away from the more material and ceremonial significance which was once attached to these words, but it is surely important that we ask ourselves what we have put in place of them, whether we really remember the vital issues of the occasion which is presented in Paul's words, or whether professed Christians forget all that it implies on the ground that they have outgrown it. The apostle said it was a very serious thing to eat and drink unworthily at this sacramental occasion, and he said respecting those who did so, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." With respect to this word sleep as here found, some ancient writers give the passage as reading "sleep the sleep of death." In either case it surely means that those who observed this rite of remembrance unworthily, failed to commemorate the life-giving truth which Christ Jesus brought to humanity, and which he desired above all else should be perpetuated in the ministry of his faithful followers.

It is quite well known that no material elements have ever been used at a Christian Science service, although there has always been in the Church of Christ, Scientist, a solemn communion which was intended to bind men to God and to unite all men in the brotherhood of Truth and Love. If any student of Christian Science were asked what is called to remembrance on the Sunday when a Lesson-Sermon on Sacrament is read in all Christian Science churches, he would undoubtedly answer that it was intended to commemorate the beloved Master's triumph over death and the grave, over everything which is unlike God. Respecting this Mrs. Eddy says (Science and Health, p. 44): "The lonely precincts of the tomb gave Jesus a refuge from his foes, a place in which to solve the great problem of being. . . . He proved Life to be deathless and Love to be the master of hate." On the following page we read, "Jesus' deed was for the enlightenment of men and for the salvation of the whole world from sin, sickness, and death." Not alone on what may be called the communion Sabbath do Christian Scientists remember Jesus' demonstration of the power of infinite divine Love to overcome all evil, but every day, as they are engaged in the endeavor to establish the kingdom of God on earth, and to do it in the way the Master taught, in overcoming sickness, sin, and sorrow, with the joyful prospect before them of the final overcoming of death itself. As the Master's words are recalled, "This do in remembrance of me," they know that they can best commemorate his glorious work by doing their utmost to follow in his footsteps, in obeying his command to heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, and proclaim God's kingdom on earth as an ever present fact.

This question of remembrance brings to us that of individual experience. What is it that we are apt to remember most constantly—is it good or is it evil? It cannot be denied that the beliefs of sin and sorrow make very deep impressions upon mortals; hence the need of forgetting that which we should not remember, because if memory is charged with an equal sense of good and of evil, there is a constant tendency to let evil preponderate, and so we have occasion to wonder why we are not progressing in the realization of spiritual things with their inevitable health and harmony. We are not obeying the injunction to forget the things that are behind and to press on toward the goal of perfect Christianity. Let no one suppose at this point that Christian Scientists should ever hold in remembrance evil of any sort as a reality. Under present human conditions, if it seemed necessary for them to cast a glance over the past, they should do so in order to remember with gratitude the way by which they were led out of error into truth, and how they were strengthened for the journey and carried safely over the places which seemed too hard for the human sense.

As thought is spiritualized all dark shadows fade out in the sunlight of Truth, and become no more than the little trials of childhood at which the adult smiles; but this is by no means the whole of the lesson for the Christian Scientist, who needs to remember that the same divine power which inspired and sustained the Master throughout his earthly ministry has, to the extent of their recognition of it and their response to it, led them safely through what seemed perils and dangers unspeakable. Let us assume for a moment that one had to pass through an experience of persecution with all its attendant beliefs of bitterness. What out of it all should be remembered? In the Sermon on the Mount we have one rule given for meeting persecution, and it is a working rule, as we can prove if only we will. It reads, "Rejoice, and be exceeding glad." And wherefore rejoice? Is it not that here we have the highest opportunity which ever came to us to prove the omnipotence of Truth and Love in the very presence of our enemies of falsehood and hate. On page 43 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy says in no uncertain terms, "Love must triumph over hate." This statement brings us to our Leader's Message to The Mother Church in 1898. On page 14 of "Christian Science versus Pantheism" she says: "In your peaceful homes remember our brave soldiers, whether in camp or in battle." This is followed by an assurance that divine Love will be their protection, and that this nation "will be as formidable in war as she has been compassionate in peace."

As we "remember" those who are making nameless sacrifices for human rights and man's freedom, we are strengthened by the remembrance that in all the ages, in spite of the blindness of mortal mind, right has ever been victorious; and as we learn through Christian Science to ascribe all power unto God, good, and deny to evil any power whatever, we obey more fully, both in the spirit and in the letter, the command of Christ Jesus, "This do in remembrance of me."

Extract from The Christian Science Monitor

Announcement is made by the Christian Science War Relief and Camp Welfare committee of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, of the arrival in Paris of a party of ten relief workers, sent to France from the headquarters of the church in Boston. These representatives will be located in various parts of France to extend the War Relief work carried on through Christian Scientists in France since the beginning of hostilities.

Funds for this purpose have been contributed by Christian Scientists throughout the world, and have been used to relieve suffering due to the war among the families in France and other countries affected. This aid has not been confined to Christian Scientists, but has extended to all worthy of help.

The members of the party just sent to France are all experienced in the War Relief and Camp Welfare activities carried on by Christian Scientists in the United States since its entrance into the European war, and this experience will add greatly to the efficient administration of the funds in the stricken districts.

Current Notes

DENVER, COL.—Rapid increase in the membership of Fourth Church of Christ, Scientist, has led to the securing of larger quarters. The congregation formerly met in Woodman Hall on the North Side, which accommodated four hundred and fifty. The new meeting place in the auditorium of the Weir Building, 3211 Zuni Street, will seat approximately six hundred and fifty.—Denver Post.

FAR ROCKAWAY, N. Y.—The German Evangelical church has leased to the Christian Science congregation, during certain hours, its edifice on Central Avenue. The services of the two churches have been so arranged that they do not conflict.—Rockaway News.

PLAINFIELD, N. J.—The congregation of First Church of Christ, Scientist, which has been holding its meetings in the Babcock Building for some years, has purchased the property on the triangle at the corner of Prospect Avenue and East Ninth Street, with the intention of occupying the site as soon as alterations are completed.—Plainfield Courier-News.

OAKLAND, CAL.—Third Church of Christ, Scientist, located in Fruitvale, is now holding services in Pythian Castle, 3256 East Fourteenth Street, near Fruitvale Avenue. The church has purchased and completed payment on a very desirable corner lot on Fruitvale Avenue, where a church edifice will be built.—Oakland Post.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.—Due to an increase in attendance, meetings are now being held in First Church of Christ, Scientist, Sunday evenings as well as Sunday mornings.

MENA, ARK.—During December and January the following pieces of literature were distributed to interested readers: 65 Sentinels, 2 Journals, 115 Monitors, and 50 reports of lectures.

The Lectures

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN. (Fifth Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Lew C. Church, who said in part:—

Christian Science teaches man's relation to God. It teaches that man's real existence is spiritual, and is one of harmony, joy, and freedom. It shows man that he has supposed to be true about himself much that is untrue. It is the Science of life. When understood, it may be applied to the solution of any human problem. Unnumbered men and women have been lifted out of disease, penury, and sin through Christian Science. As one's knowledge of its teachings increases, he learns that he is entitled to rely on God in every time of need, of whatever kind, confident that he will be sustained and protected.

CUMBERLAND, MD. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by Robert Little, who said in part:—

Were Christian Science what I formerly thought it to be,

it would have died in its infancy, and neither you nor I would ever have heard of its Founder, Mary Baker Eddy, nor have received any of its benefits and blessings. Fortunately for humanity it is not what I thought it to be, nor what many of its critics say of it, namely, that it is "neither Christian nor scientific." Although not as yet a member of the Christian Science church, I have given the subject much earnest investigation and thought, and have received much help, both spiritually and physically from the study, and I am very glad to add my testimony to that of thousands of other earnest seekers after the truth that makes free.

PITTSBURGH, PA. (First Church).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by Maurice C. Rypinski, who said in part:—

Christian Science, a subject of vital interest to this age, is made available to us through the inspired Biblical research of a wonderful woman, Mary Baker Eddy. It shows us how to follow the Master, who said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Christian Scientists everywhere are demonstrating this freedom,—freedom from sickness and sin, freedom from a false sense of life, man, and God.

MONROE, LA. (Society).—John Randall Dunn, lecturer; introduced by P. S. Mulhearn, who said in part:—

Christian Scientists are learning that to-day "is the day of salvation." We are learning that heaven is not a locality afar off beyond the stars, the only door to which is death. We learn that heaven is a condition of perfect harmony, which we can begin to enjoy here and now. In Christian Science we learn that God is not some great king sitting on a golden throne, calling the righteous to be his servants, and sending the unrighteous into everlasting punishment. In Christian Science we learn that "God is universal, eternal, divine Love, which changeth not and causeth no evil, disease, nor death," as our Leader tells us on page 140 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures."—The Monroe News-Star.

LONDON, ENGLAND (Second Church).—John Sidney Braithwaite, lecturer; introduced by H. R. Heath, who said in part:—

A great portion of our Lord's public ministry was occupied in the so-called miraculous healing of the sick. The study of the Bible, however, in the light of the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, shows us clearly that this healing is not miraculous, nor supernatural, but is "divinely natural" (Science and Health, p. 591); and that it is the apprehension and understanding of the divine Principle of being—of God and of man's relation to Him—that heals the sick. Jesus taught his disciples how to rely on this divine all-power, and he sent them forth not only to preach the gospel, but to heal the sick. Christian Science, in this age, and after the lapse of many centuries, is again carrying on this beneficent work.

JACKSON, MICH. (First Church).—Prof. Hermann S. Hering, lecturer; introduced by Jacob J. Bolhuis, who said in part:—

The Christian Science textbook by Mary Baker Eddy is indeed a key to the Scriptures. It unlocks the treasures of truth that lay hidden in the sacred pages of the Bible for centuries, and proves the practical value of its teachings by solving life's problems. The Bible, spiritually understood, is in fact the book of life. Its precepts are so complete, so simple, so broad in scope, that as they dawn upon the human consciousness we exclaim, "God is infinite." A patient and loyal obedience to these precepts will reveal the Comforter, "even the Spirit of truth," and fulfill this promise of Scripture: "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you."

VANCOUVER, B. C. (Society).—William D. Kilpatrick, lecturer; introduced by Charles A. Varey, who said in part:—

Christian Science fully emphasizes the efficacy of prayer, enabling its adherents to rely wholly on God in every time of need. It gives us a sure remedy for every disease, and solace for every sorrow. Now, everybody wants to be well, everybody wants to be happy and free; this is the divine right of every individual, but it is one thing to proclaim a truth, and quite another to demonstrate it. Scarcely since the days of the Nazarene and his immediate followers has healing been accomplished by purely spiritual means, until the truth of being was rediscovered by Mrs. Eddy in the year 1866; since then abundant proof has been given to the world that God can and does heal the sick.—Vancouver World.

Testimonies of Healing

It has been a source of great joy to me to be able to realize the guidance of ever present Love in the so-called little affairs of daily life, also Love's ability to bring order out of chaos and to supplant fear with confidence.

Several months ago my daughter was returning from her work earlier than usual one day and stopped at the home of a friend. She had with her quite a sum of money in her purse, which she carried in her muff. The friend was at a neighbor's on the other side of the street, so my daughter crossed over. On the way back to her friend's house the purse dropped from the muff and was not missed until some two hours later. My daughter then came home and related the circumstance to her father and me. We took a lantern and searched as thoroughly as was possible by this light, and returned next morning and went over the ground as soon as it was light enough to see, again searching thoroughly. We had all been working for some time on the problem of seemingly great financial loss, in which our home and the means of much greater educational advantages for the children had apparently been swept away, and at the time this incident occurred we were just coming into a clearer realization of what true substance is. We had also proved in many previous instances the truth of our Leader's words (Science and Health, p. 510), "Science reveals only one Mind, and this one shining by its own light and governing the universe, including man, in perfect harmony." This seemed to eliminate every thought of fear, and brought more clearly to our consciousness the fact that the activities of Mind are harmonious under all circumstances.

In the morning, inasmuch as there was no name in the purse by which the owner could be identified, a friend recommended that an advertisement be inserted in one of the daily papers. This advice was followed, and about half an hour later the telephone rang, and the newspaper office informed us that some one was there with the purse and wanted to know what should be done with it. A great sense of gratitude for this added proof of Love's guidance almost prevented my answering at once. I however replied that my daughter would call in the course of the day, identify the purse, and pay whatever was due for their trouble; but the man answered very decidedly, saying that we owed nothing, as the advertisement had not been printed, but he could not understand why anyone should walk into their office with the purse within fifteen minutes after the advertisement had been telephoned in, and he should feel so confident it was ours. Another beautiful proof of Love's leading was the fact that the purse was found within four blocks of our home, but the finder went many blocks from there, down into the heart of the city, and picked out this particular newspaper office (the one most inconvenient of all to reach), and also refused every offer of reward, accepting carfare only.

Not long after this a friend of the family left her little eighteen-months-old son with me while she went shopping. I was the nurse on the case when he was born, and so he was left in my care as next to his mother. He had never heard the word fear, and had known only the tenderest love and affection from all who knew him. I took him into my room with me while I finished a piece of work that took me from fifteen to twenty minutes. He was very fond of playing with my shoe buttoner, so when I saw him standing on the window seat talking to the chickens in the next yard and biting on what I supposed was my shoe buttoner, I went on with my work, at the same time going over portions of the week's Lesson-Sermon, which had been especially helpful to me, "God the Preserver of Man" being the subject. When I had finished my work, I asked him to give me what was in his mouth, and he immediately laid in my hand a double-edged razor blade, which some one had used and failed to put in its right place. It had been in his mouth for at least twenty minutes, and there was not an atom of anything on it but the moisture from his mouth. I was so overwhelmed with the realization of the ever presence and protection of divine Love that I could only hold the little one close in my arms while I gave expression to my gratitude.

I feel that the time has come for me to give my experience in Christian Science healing, which took place in November, 1894. Two or three years prior to this time, a student of Mrs. Eddy came to Richmond, Indiana. Through her work some remarkable healing resulted, and the good news spread to other cities and towns. One of the people healed was a lady who had been pronounced incurable. After her restoration to health this lady, learning that a friend near Pendleton, Indiana, had been given but a short time to live by the physicians, made him a visit, armed with her new found faith in spiritual healing, and a copy of The Christian Science Journal. She related her experience and left the Journal, which he read and reread until he was able to leave his bed. This Journal referred to "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," so he procured a copy of this book, and through its study was completely healed.

This gentleman, hearing of my illness, came to see me. I, too, was confined to the bed. He told me his experience and talked to me for about an hour. His explanation of the teachings of Christian Science appealed so strongly to me that for some time after he left I lay in a deep study, finally awakening, as it seemed, to the realization that something had taken place—all sense of discouragement and care was gone. I soon understood that this was spiritual healing, for a wonderful peace had come to me. I arose and dressed, walked about the rooms of my home, and then out into our place of business and back. This was about four o'clock in the afternoon. I took my place at the table that evening and ate the first good meal which I had eaten for months, with no ill effects, and that night I slept like a child. I believe mine was the first case of Christian Science healing in this city.

I faithfully studied our textbook, and the following year received class instruction from Mrs. Eddy's student, already mentioned.—Franklin B. Wallace, Anderson, Ind.

I have always appreciated the testimonies in the Journal and Sentinel, and have often been helped by them; and now my own is sent in gratitude for what Christian Science, through its many channels, has done for me. Twelve years ago I had never heard of Christian Science. We were living in Scotland at the time, and I was very wretched, having just lost my second child. My trust in God seemed to fail me, the Bible appeared contradictory and confusing, and there seemed nowhere to turn for comfort.

At this point friends brought Christian Science to my notice, and it was the change I saw in them that convinced me there must be something in this religion. I purchased a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, at once became convinced of its truth, and found comfort. To learn that God is Love, "a very present help in trouble," was a revelation to me, for I had always believed that He sent afflictions to punish us. I immediately began to benefit by reading this book, and all faith in material remedies left me, although for years I had never gone a week without taking medicine of some kind for sick headaches and biliousness. These ailments left me gradually as I grasped the understanding of Christian Science and put into practice what I understood. Throat trouble and other discordant conditions were instantly overcome, and severe illnesses arrested, so that I have not been laid up for one day since taking up the study of this Science. Many faults of character have been eradicated. The overcoming of fear for my only child was the hardest struggle and was slow, but one day such a clear sense of the allness of God came to me that this fear left and the child gained in health and happiness from that time. I have learned that it is the Mind which was in Christ Jesus that heals and saves, and it is only through endeavoring to reflect this divine Mind that I can hope to be free from the ills of the flesh.

I cannot express in words my gratitude for Christian Science and for what it has done for me and mine. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for her beautiful life of love and unselfishness, and my desire is to grow in grace so that I may become a true Christian Scientist.—(Mrs.) ADELINA M. COOPER, Solihull, near Birmingham, England.

It is my sincere desire to tell what Christian Science has done for me. For over two years I have been able to attend Sunday school, for which I am very grateful. I find that every day I can use what I have learned there, and have been able to make demonstrations. My school work has been made lighter through the knowledge that God is all wisdom, and that we, as His children, reflect that wisdom.

In June, 1914, I was instantaneously healed of facial paralysis. My mother was very prejudiced against what she thought Christian Science to be, but Truth was working and a channel was opened through which my healing came. My mother was so grateful that she took up the study of Christian Science, and to-day it is our only help in every time of trouble. I am grateful for the reading rooms and our literature; but above all my heart is filled with gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, who, with God's guidance, gave us this beautiful truth.—(Miss) CHARLOTTE B. MERRIAM, San Francisco, Cal.

My daughter's healing of facial paralysis has certainly been permanent. She has been an attendant at the Sunday school of First Church of Christ, Scientist, since January, 1915. Neither my daughter nor myself feels that we could live as we once did without Christian Science, and we are striving each day to be faithful students of all the lessons found in Mrs. Eddy's books and the literature issued by The Christian Science Publishing Society. My daughter's testimony was sent voluntarily, as she was so grateful for her healing and the other help that Christian Science has given her.—(Mrs.) BESSIE C. MERRIAM.

I am very grateful for Christian Science, which came to me four years ago. When I was about eleven years old, I was accidentally thrown on the edge of a step while playing, and sustained an injury to my hip. It did not trouble me much until about eight years later, at which time I began to feel severe pain. I was employed in a hospital, so had skilled physicians and the best of care for over a year; but my condition kept getting worse, so at last I decided to consult a specialist outside. He treated me very carefully with the aid of several other well-known specialists for eight months, but I still grew weaker. I was then told I could not be cured unless I submitted to an operation, which I knew would mean to be a cripple. It was at this point, after all material means had failed, that I turned to God. The only Christian Science practitioner I had ever seen, or knew of, had moved to another city, so I wrote her a letter and asked for absent treatment. Just two weeks from that day I was healed, and able to return to my position. I was very thankful for my healing, and also for the understanding of the truth that came to me in such a short time.

I also wish to tell of a healing that took place about two years later. Mrs. Eddy says in Science and Health (p. 373), "The fear of disease and the love of sin are the sources of man's enslavement." Before coming into Christian Science I had a great fear of appendicitis, and always was afraid it would kill me if I had it. One day, while on a pleasure trip, I was suddenly seized with a violent pain. The old fearful thought came to me, and I grew worse every minute. I started for home immediately, but was scarcely able to stand up. As I did not seem able to help myself, I asked my husband, about three o'clock in the morning, to telephone for a practitioner. Not being able to get one, he sent for a doctor who was a friend of the family and who knew I was interested in Christian Science. He came three times that night and three times the next day, claiming my condition to be very serious. I then received word that my practitioner had returned home, so I dismissed the doctor after thanking him for his kindness, as he himself could do nothing more for me; indeed, he told my family that I could not live more than forty-eight hours.

The practitioner arrived about seven o'clock that evening and stayed with me all night. When she came my fear left me, and the pain also subsided, so that I slept a little that night; but she had no more than left the house in the morning when the fear and pain returned, worse than ever. I tried to treat myself, but it seemed of no avail. An hour later I was just between life and death. Some one of my family asked if I wanted a doctor and I said, "No, I leave all to God." Then the twenty-third psalm came to me: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me." I said to my family that I was not afraid, because I knew that God was with me. Fear was destroyed, I stopped doubting and trying to do all myself, and left everything to God, with the result that I was instantaneously relieved. Two hours later I was sitting up in bed eating breakfast, and in a few days I was strong again.

I am very thankful for the spiritual uplift received through Mrs. Eddy's teachings, also for the physical healing.

I feel so grateful for the benefits, both physical and mental, which I have received from Christian Science, that I wish to give a written testimony of my healing. In the spring of 1914 I was treated for eight weeks by a physician for inflammatory rheumatism in my knee. He then advised me to try some other doctor, as he had failed to give me any relief. I went from one doctor to another (seven in all) and tried many kinds of treatment. I was operated on twice, with the result that for months I was compelled to use crutches to get about; massaging and severe electrical treatments were resorted to, but all to no purpose. For two years these various material means were tried, but the pain continued. I was able to give up the crutches, but could not walk without using a stick.

Digitized by Google

Some friends from Ottawa, who had become firm believers in Christian Science, advised me to try it, and I did so, thinking that if it did me no good it could do me no harm. I saw a practitioner in Montreal and so much relief was experienced after the first treatment that I had no further use for my walking stick. In a short time the pain was a thing of the past, and now I am perfectly well. As I gained more of the understanding of "God with us," I became an entirely different man,—my work became a pleasure, and the way seems brighter. The spiritual sense of life has completely overcome the desire for alcoholic liquors and has broken other evil habits.

My desire is to know more of Truth and Love, so that I can help others out of the darkness of materialism into the light of spiritual existence here. I cannot express my gratitude in words for the good I have received from the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and of the Bible, which has become a treasure house through the spiritual understanding gained from Christian Science.—HENRY H. HORNE, Montreal, Canada.

It is with a heart full of gratitude for what Christian Science has done for me that I write this testimony. For seven years I suffered (and when I say suffered, it applies more to mental than to physical suffering) from a skin eruption on my face. At that time I was a girl of sixteen and deeply conscious of this condition. I had tried every material remedy that had been recommended by friends and physicians, had taken various kinds of treatment, such as electrical massages, but nothing relieved the condition, which seemed to be growing worse all the time. I had reached the point where I did not care to go out because of the way I looked. Even the desire to attend church and Sunday school left me the last two years before I came to Christian Science. I had grown despondent, and spent many weary hours wondering why I had to endure the disfigurement, which I had not knowingly brought upon myself. I stopped going to church, because I did not feel that it did me any good.

About three years ago my mother, who had known of Christian Science for some time, and in fact had experienced a wonderful healing, asked me if I would not try Christian Science, since I had tried everything else to no avail. I had not the slightest idea what it was, but had reached the point where I was more than willing to try anything. My first visit to the practitioner was a beautiful experience, in which I forgot all my seeming troubles while listening to the truth which was so lovingly told me. I realized that no matter what seemed to be, the only thing I had to know was the goodness and love of God, and man in His likeness.

I can now say that the diseased condition has been overcome; the healing seemed slow, but it made me a devoted student of Christian Science, since I realized that in order to be healed I must seek to keep my consciousness filled with truth and love as a result of consecrated study of the Bible and Science and Health. After my first visit to the practitioner, glasses, which I had put on through the advice of a specialist, were laid aside, although I had been told to wear them for several years for what he diagnosed as a severe muscular trouble. I never know now what it is to have headaches, whereas before that time I had suffered almost daily with them. I am at work in the business world, and do not know what I would do without Christian Science. It helps me to overcome difficulties and seeming inharmonies, as I could not do without this knowledge of Truth.

I am grateful for class instruction, which showed me how to demonstrate the practicability of Christian Science, and for the privilege of working for the cause. I am endeavoring to show this gratitude by living in such a way as to reflect in some measure divine Principle, thereby helping others to see and be healed by the same truth which has meant so much to me.—(Miss) H. GLADYS BONNELL, Atlanta, Ga.

With a deep sense of gratitude I add my testimony to the healing and regenerating power of Christian Science. This wonderful truth does heal—physically, morally, mentally, and spiritually. I have seen and had so many proofs that I have long since ceased to doubt its healing power. I did not take up Christian Science for physical needs, but after studying it a short time, I was enabled to lay off glasses which had been worn for eight years. Chronic neuralgia, stomach trouble, and bad colds have been overcome. Through the help of a practitioner I was almost instantaneously healed of a badly ulcerated tooth, also of loss of voice caused through a shock at hearing of the death of a dear friend. For these healings I am indeed grateful, and I am thankful that Christian Science shows us how to work out the mental problems which come up each day, and that it enables us to see the proofs in the solving of these, as well as in the physical healings.

Christian Science is making me more loving in my thought toward every one. It has taught me that real happiness, harmony, and peace of mind are to be found not in the material, temporal, but in the spiritual, by substituting right ideas for wrong beliefs, and gaining a better understanding of the true nature of God. Christian Science is teaching me that God is Love, an ever present help in time of trouble, and that just to the extent we rely on Him, trust Him, and are faithful, we are enabled to solve every problem, no matter what its seeming nature may be. I feel so thankful to God for this beautiful truth, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, our beloved Leader, who has shown us the way to work out our salvation here and now.

I am very thankful for Christian Science and what it has done for me in the healing of my infant child. She weighed only seven pounds when taken sick, and did not gain any for six months. Her food did not agree with her. Then a friend gave her Christian Science treatment, and in a little while she was healed. I, also, was healed of a goiter of the neck, which troubled me very much. I took up the study of Christian Science, and have since had many beautiful demonstrations for myself and others. I am truly thankful to God, and grateful to our dear Leader, Mrs. Eddy, for giving this teaching to the world.

(Mrs.) ETHEL VARLAND, Morristown, S. Dak.

To-day, as I was looking back over the many blessings I have received in Christian Science during the past eight years, the thought came to me that I had not yet obeyed one of our Master's first commands, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." As one of the ways provided by our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, is the giving of testimonies through our periodicals, I wish to tell my experience in grateful acknowledgment of all that this healing truth has done for me.

Before coming into Christian Science, my life had been filled with sorrow. Those nearest and dearest had been taken from me, and multiplied trials and grief had at last driven me to a state of rebellion; I doubted if there really was a God, still I knew there must be something outside of self, else why was I here. Surely I was in "outer darkness," until the first ray of light came to me in reading "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy.

My only daughter, who was critically ill, became suddenly well after the first two hours of my reading in this book. Years of educated fears fell from my bowed shoulders, and for the first time I learned that God is ever present Love, filling all space, ever ready to help when we turn to Him with all our heart. As a result of this experience two pairs of glasses were laid aside and I have never needed them since. Contagious diseases, chronic bowel disorder, a throat affection, typhoid fever, congestion of the lungs, chronic headaches, heart trouble, blood poisoning, are some of the ills that have been overcome in my home, and tumorous growths have been removed through the power of Truth. We were never once tempted to use drugs in any form whatsoever, although we had been taught from early childhood to rely on them; and the absoluteness of the exact knowledge of Truth to solve every problem was proved to us.

I am grateful for all our periodicals, including the Monitor, one of the greatest blessings we have in this age. I now truly know that Christ Jesus was the Way-shower. I am thankful to God, the giver of all good to mankind, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who discovered Christian Science.

With the deepest gratitude I give this testimony of what Christian Science has done for me during the last fourteen years. A number of years before I began the study of this teaching, I was subject to colds which seemed to settle in my ears. Specialists had treated me for this trouble, but I never was healed. With the help of a Christian Science practitioner, however, and the understanding I gained by study of this healing truth, it soon disappeared. I have also been healed of an ulcer on the eyeball, and of an injury to the spine caused by a fall. For these healings I am grateful, but words cannot tell of the gratitude I feel when I think how Christian Science is freeing me from discouragement and despondency; I was almost always unhappy and blue. The spiritual uplift is bringing joy, happiness, and peace.

I am thankful to God for all the blessings I have received, and more thankful that day by day I am growing to know God as He is. I am grateful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," and want to gain a clear understanding of the truth.

When I began the study of Christian Science over four years ago, I did so for the sake of another member of the family; yet how much I needed the understanding of the truth, no one knows but myself. I had never known what it was to be well and strong, was unhappy and discouraged, and had lost all faith in physicians and drugs. I called on a practitioner to find out how to get an understanding of Christian Science, and only a few words convinced me what it means to know that God is Love. A copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy was purchased, and I became deeply interested in the reading of it. I was so satisfied with the religion that I forgot myself, and without any treatment from a practitioner was healed of lung trouble, asthma, headaches, dropsy, chronic bowel disorder, and many other ills, simply through reading and understanding and prayer. The healing has been complete and permanent. Glasses were laid aside after having been worn for seven years. Not a drop of medicine has been used in our family since Science and Health was purchased; divine Love has filled our hearts and home with peace and joy.

For these healings I am grateful, but far more so for the knowledge that God is Love, that all we have and all we are comes from Him, and that all good is ours. I also wish to express my gratitude to Mrs. Eddy, who so unselfishly gave us the truth in her writings; also for the periodicals and the Lesson-Sermons, which provide us with daily spiritual food.

(Mrs.) Bertha O. Antoine, Gorham, Col.

I gladly attest the truth of my wife's statements, and write my own testimony in deep thankfulness to God and gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for the many blessings Christian Science has brought me. I was healed of sciatic rheumatism, lumbago, and many other erroneous conditions, also of a bad temper and the use of profane language. The healing seemed slow, but this led me to strive for and to gain a better understanding of God than I had ever hoped to have. At times the struggle seemed hard, but with the Bible and Science and Health as my daily guides I found that peace "which passeth all understanding."

I often think of these words in Miscellany (p. 210): "Beloved Christian Scientists, keep your minds so filled with Truth and Love, that sin, disease, and death cannot enter them." The healing is now complete and I feel that God's work is perfect. Glasses that had been worn for nearly twenty years have been laid aside, through this better understanding of God. Words cannot express my thankfulness to God and my gratitude to our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, but I am striving to attain that Mind "which was also in Christ Jesus."—Arthur H. Antoine.

After many years of membership in an orthodox church, and of antagonism in my thought of Christian Science, I was instantly healed, five years ago, of a most aggravated form of bladder trouble in one absent treatment. After that healing I applied myself closely to the study of Christian Science, and in a few months was healed of carious bones. The fingers of my right hand were immovable for eight years, but during those months I held to the thought that "God is no respecter of persons," and knew I should be healed. I feel exceedingly grateful for my understanding of Truth when called upon to meet the experience of separation from one whose companionship I had enjoyed for over thirty years. It seemed as if all my material supply had been taken, but I am proving each day that God is substance and the source of all supply; that God is Life, and in reallty there is no separation. I am more grateful than words could ever tell for my understanding of this Christ-teaching.

(Mrs.) Clara B. Field, Detroit, Mich.

I send this testimony in thankfulness to God, the giver of all good, and I hope it may encourage and strengthen some weary one in search of healing through Christian Science. I receive much help and comfort in reading the published testimonies, and am always glad when the Sentinel comes with its words of love. Christian Science has healed me of a severe case of neuralgia of the eyes, and of rheumatism of the arm and shoulder. I have also been helped in a degree through deep sorrow. I thank God daily for His lovingkindness, and my heart goes out in gratitude to Mrs. Eddy for her consecrated life and her work for humanity. I am very grateful to all those who have helped me on the journey from sense to Soul.—(Mrs.) Ellen M. Gregg, Eros, La.

From the Press

[Dr. James A. Ludlow in Record of Christian Work]

A change is taking place in the ideal of education as popularly held. Its purpose has been too strictly limited to the advantage of the individual pupil, his mental enrichment and his efficiency in securing personal advancement in life. We are now thinking more of the relation of the individual to society, his place as a member of the body politic. To this we are driven partly by the exigencies of the day. Even the crudest observer realizes that in our times "no man liveth unto himself." Hence in some of our states it is required that high school pupils study community civics, and the problems of modern democracy, such as politics and sociology. The new movement is also due to a better understanding of the psychology of the individual, which clearly points to social influences as most strongly affecting personality and character.

[Helen Bosanquet in The Hibbert Journal]

Would it be too much to expect as a result of such a study that men might one day, perhaps in the far future, come to reject all gain which involved a loss to others? I do not think so, provided always that we began early enough with the children. If they were helped, at home and at school, to care most for what is best, to find their happiness in the things which gain by being shared, to know the difference between liberty and license, and to respect each other's rights and their own duties, we might safely expect them in after life to accept a loftier conception of profit and loss than that which prevails to-day. And with such a reconstruction we might perhaps hope also that war would become a thing of the past.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16) is the biggest verse in the Bible. It turns the world into a millennium. It is a triple ray of gospel light; light on the character of God, of Jesus Christ, and of man. Even philosophic writers of to-day, when they have analyzed present day conditions and have put their findings into figures and propositions, come back to the central power of this text and tell us that, after all, the fundamental necessity, and the key that opens the door for the individual, the nation, and the world, is Love.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to WILLIAM R. RATHVON, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

Co-operation in Advertising

A manufacturer of fine steel, who is a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR and a student of the Science which animates it, pondering how he could serve a greater number of people, considered the question somewhat in this way:

1. He realized that he made the highest grade product he knew how to make.

2. He wanted to serve mankind with his product and facilities.

3. He knew that THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR is the highest grade newspaper engaged in serving mankind.

4. He decided to announce his service in THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

And he did so.

At the head of a factory whose product was high grade tools was another Christian Scientist. Because of hostile propaganda and other malign influences, his firm was experiencing difficulty in getting the right kind of steel for making tools. This man also began to work on the question according to his understanding of Christian Science, and, opening a copy of the MONITOR, he saw the announcement of the steel manufacturer.

Correspondence and a personal interview followed; an initial order amounting to $80,000 was placed. Additional orders have since increased this amount considerably. The needs of both firms have been supplied, and one of the problems of manufacture thus solved.

This experience illustrates the possibilities of MONITOR advertising. It indicates the scientific co-operation which the MONITOR establishes between buyer and seller. It shows how a higher concept of the law of supply and demand will operate when the mission of the MONITOR is more fully understood.

VOLUME XX JUNE 15, 1918 NUMBER 42

Annual Meeting of The Mother Church

A RECORD of unparalleled accomplishment, ever broadening interest, and greater activity, with a stirring appeal for a still larger measure of consecration to the demonstration of Christian Science in its application to present human needs, characterized the proceedings of the Annual Meeting of The First Church of Christ, Scientist, held in the church edifice, Falmouth and Norway Streets, Boston, Monday afternoon, June 3. The church was filled to capacity when the meeting was opened at two o'clock by the retiring President, William D. McCrackan. After singing hymn 195, "Shepherd, show me how to go," by Mary Baker Eddy, selections were read from the Bible and from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, as follows:—

Bible: Psalms 103: 1–12, 19–22; Matt. 18:1–6, 10–14.

Science and Health: 33:18 to 9 next page; 568:24 to 569:14; 570:1–7, 14–25.

After the readings the congregation joined in silent prayer followed by the audible repetition of the Lord's Prayer. Hymn 170, "How firm a foundation," was then sung, after which the names of officers for the coming year were read by Mr. McCrackan, and are as follows:—

President, Dr. Francis J. Fluno, C.S.D., of Oakland, California; Treasurer, William R. Rathvon, C.S.B., Denver, Colorado; Clerk, Charles E. Jarvis, Boston.

The retiring President, Mr. McCrackan, then delivered the following address:—

As President of The Mother Church I want to express to you, first of all, my thanks for the loyal support you have given the cause during the past year. I want to thank you for your healing works and the spiritual joy you have expressed to the world. This spiritual joy is like a mental submarine chaser, chasing away all the subtle plans of evil manipulations. There is an eternal disappearance of matter and a forever appearance of the supremacy of Spirit. There is something wonderfully divine going on in the world to-day, —the blooming of God's ideas. There is bliss in their sweet fragrance.

At this momentous hour we must mentally hear the cry of victory. Victory should crown our spiritual vision. Let Victory! Victory! Victory! three times repeated, resound above the din of the world's cry of distress. Let Spirit be our source of information; then we shall not be deceived by the pretenses of the physical senses. Victory is the one great demonstration to be made before peace can be enjoyed. All evil manipulations must be uncovered before the world can enjoy the triumphant march of victory. We are here as winged messengers of countless victories. Overcoming self in daily life brings forward good desires, pure purposes, and the courage of righteous conviction, actuated by divine power.

Christian Scientists, you can take the reins of pure victory in your hands. God gives you the spiritual understanding to free the world from hypnotism, apathy, hypnotic neutral arguments. There is no power in war atrocities used to hypnotize whole nations by misrepresenting barbaric cruelty; God's name cannot be used as a hiding place. Victory for truth cannot be erased from your thought nor taken out of the consciousness of a righteous world. The history of real victory is already written, and was with God before the world was. "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" is the interpretation of that victory. In that book Mrs. Eddy has given two chapters uncovering the error now raging in consciousness. They are "Christian Science versus Spiritualism" and "Animal Magnetism Unmasked." The equipment of arms to meet and destroy the enemy is found in these two chapters.

Cannot we out of gratitude and obedience to God decide this day that the world is going to be fit to live in because of our healing works and our righteous thinking? We can all be Daniels and face the lions of to-day; and Josephs, forgiving our brethren and interpreting dreams with our spiritual vision. We can all go forth with courage unto victory, and overcome the flesh with Spirit, destroy hate with Love, and banish death with Life. There can be no hate nor resentment in a victory filled with the power of God.

Men at this hour of male domination need to learn womanly qualities, and the womanly man needs to learn manly qualities. Womanly women need to learn manly qualities, and manly women need to learn womanly qualities. Our Leader writes on page 249 of Science and Health, "Let the 'male and female' of God's creating appear." The Bible tells us of the curse on Adam,—that he was driven from Paradise and made to eat bread in the sweat of his face, and that Eve was cursed to suffer and be ruled by Adam. Let us take off these curses. We can do this by understanding that we are not descendants of Adam and Eve, but of Father-Mother God, who places no curse on man. If one takes delight in a good or bad reputation, in popularity, in being seen of men, false pride and these beliefs cause human experiences which lead to a fallen man. Not much is said of the fallen woman, except that she is known to be worse. That is enough. Normality of Spirit is the law of divine Science for Christian Scientists to follow.

There have been some wonderful healings experienced since we last met here. Many of the parents and relatives of the soldiers and sailors have learned more of the comforting, loving care of God in the hour of war. These men who stand for liberty and the rights of all mankind have been protected and given strength and courage to carry out their duties with power. I feel humbly grateful to them that they are fighting a battle for God, for you, and for me. We cannot do enough for these righteous warriors. Recently I have had the privilege of helping the soldiers and sailors at different forts in Boston Harbor. The faces of these boys from farms, factories, and colleges, and from almost every walk of life told me that they were being well trained. Are we ready to be trained to respond to God, to be willing instruments of His will? His will obeyed by us gives health, happiness, and all good.

Let this year, 1918, be the beginning of a new world, of an everlasting peace of Principle in which men and women become like little children, having the purity of the mind of the Christ. Obedience to spiritual thinking rends the veil of materialism for the world. Let the sick, the sinning, the bereaved, the hungry and thirsty be able to say of each one of us, as we read in the Song of Solomon, "He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love." I, myself, came to the spiritual feast of Christian Science because I was unhappy. Everything else had failed me. I also saw in Christian Science the solution of world problems. During the past year my life was saved, and I desire to give this grateful acknowledgment of Christian Science healing. I know this very kind of healing is what has made it possible for so many of you to be here to-day.

Let us extend our healing works to the whole world. We must awake to the mental manipulations of oriental magic and scholastic priestcraft. Ruthless militancy and medical domination are their outcome. Are we aware that the necromancers of to-day pretend to sit in the high seats of authority and to mesmerize the world with their mental suggestions and hypnotic tricks? The world war is the explosion of the highest form of evil destroying itself. As this darkness is wiped out with spiritual understanding victory will follow, and the dove of eternal peace will descend with the light of heaven upon a waiting world. There should be no defensive waiting for the enemy, but a forward march to victory, making the offensive the uncovering of all error. Error is an offense, so it can be attacked and destroyed. There can be no discussion of nor concession to a false peace. God's joyous victory only can establish real peace.

Mrs. Eddy opened the way for this, and our gratitude should increase continually. If we as Christian Scientists do not fully appreciate the most wonderful woman of all ages, how can the world appreciate her and be expected to be healed through her teachings? Yes, the world claims we worship Mrs. Eddy. Why this? Because the enemy does not want woman to lighten the world nor to fill a place of power. The enemy wants to keep the world in darkness. But let us be awake, that mental manipulation cannot instill fear into our thoughts, nor suppress our ardor, nor make us withhold our gratitude. We know that her ever present love has never left us.

Once more we are assembled here in this our Annual Meeting, one of the many thoughtful and wise provisions of our revered Leader. It is a joy to meet, and take each other by the hand with that confidence and assurance that we are all of one mind in one place, each intent on solving the great problem of being, according to the one divine Principle; each ready and willing to "help each other, . . . each other's cross to bear."

Our gratitude to our dear Leader is unbounded when we consider the wonderful wisdom she expressed in founding this so great a movement,—organizing The Mother Church, making all the arrangements for its growth and maintenance, both financial and spiritual; providing for the formation and organization of branch churches and societies all over the world; giving us the Manual, which is our sufficient guide in the government of The Mother Church and of the branch churches, so wonderfully based on the divine Principle, Truth and Love, strong in its demands for justice and right, and fraught with the golden rule, making it adequate not only for the present needs but for all time to come.

We are all with one accord in sympathy with the Board of Directors in the noble work they are doing, so faithful in the discharge of their duty, not only looking after the local needs, but promoting and supervising the Christian Science movement throughout the world. We are all here to listen to the reports of what has been accomplished during the past year and to get new incentives and ideas of the line of procedure for the year that is now before us.

Speaking after the manner of men, we, as a nation, are in the midst of a gigantic struggle. All eyes are turned to the East where

> The cannons are roaring
> And the war-clouds are lowering.

Anxious mothers with anxious hearts are looking for that consolation and rest for which the weary ones sigh, found only in that Love which passeth all human understanding.

We need more than ever to double our diligence and alertness in fortifying our strongholds against the intrusion of hatred and malice, and against all the hosts of the evil one. "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

Methinks if our revered Leader and Pastor Emeritus were personally with us to-day, her message to us would doubtless be fraught with thanksgiving and rejoicing over the accomplishments of the years that are past. She would speak with praise and commendation of the faithful work of the officers and band of allied workers in the church of her love. Her heart would surely overflow with gratitude and thanksgiving that the members of The Mother Church stand shoulder to shoulder with the Directors and official workers, as well as with those who so faithfully are attending to the work of our publications and periodicals, upholding and sustaining one another in one solid phalanx, impervious to the foes of criticism, faultfinding, and denunciation. Her ardent desire toward us would be that we love one another; that however much of kindness, of true friendship and brotherly love we had practiced in the years that are past, we should realize that there is still room for more in the years that are to come. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 250) she says, "I make strong demands on love." To our Leader, love was not a prescription to be given to one and withheld from another. It was not a garment to be changed to suit the season, to be donned when she went out and doffed on her return. Love was the staff on which she leaned, the strength of her being, and the joy of her life. The larger her check and the more frequently she drew on Love the greater was her bank account of spiritual wealth. Indeed, in proportion as she drew, her principal increased not only in arithmetical but in geometrical ratio. She certainly would admonish us to love our enemies, to bless them that curse us, to do good to them that hate us, and to pray for them which despitefully use us and persecute us.

She would encourage all the activities in which our church membership is engaged,—giving comfort to our brave soldiers in the Army and Navy, dispensing literature to them and caring for their spiritual welfare in this their time of need: giving food, clothing, and shelter to the starving, destitute, and homeless; and she would no doubt be a liberal contributor herself.

She would surely commend us in upholding our Government, in standing by our President and his cabinet and the Congress of our much loved country, and in honoring them so long as they seek to honor God and revere His holy name.

Our revered Leader, on page 278 of Miscellany, says: "The government of divine Love is supreme. Love rules the universe, and its edict hath gone forth: 'Thou shalt have no other gods before me,' and 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.' Let us have the molecule of faith that removes mountains,—faith armed with the understanding of Love, as in divine Science, where right reigneth. The revered President and Congress of our favored land are in God's hands."

Report of the Treasurer

The report of the Treasurer, which was in part as follows, was then read by Bliss Knapp:—

The Treasurer of The Mother Church reported the balances on hand in the various funds of The Mother Church, indicating the financial affairs of the church to be in a prosperous condition.

Referring to the War Relief fund, the Treasurer stated that it is the desire of Christian Scientists, as it should be of all others, to do everything possible for the comfort and welfare of the military and civil population in the war-stricken areas of Europe, and wisely to make use of such agencies as may be in their power to contribute for that purpose. Committees of Christian Scientists have been formed in many of the European countries, and through them we are in a position to render the most efficient relief work in the mitigation of human suffering. These committees are bringing comfort and cheer to the homes of those who are in distress through hunger and other forms of deprivation attendant upon the war.

Where the work has been inaccessible to our own committees, as in Poland and Armenia, we have contributed money through duly authorized and accredited relief committees designated by the State Department. By these several methods our contributions have gone to Armenia, Syria, Serbia, Poland, Lithuania, Rumania, Russia, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, France, England, Canada, Australia, and, before hostilities interfered, to Germany. They have also gone to the Y. M. C. A., the Comforts Forwarding committee of Christian Scientists and other benevolent organizations. Our activities are extended to all alike, of whatever race or creed, who are found upon investigation to be in need.

We take this opportunity to thank the generous contributors who have by their loving cooperation made possible this abundant fruitage of "practical, operative Christian Science," referred to by Mrs. Eddy on page 207 of "Miscellaneous Writings."

Report of the Clerk of The Mother Church

By Mr. Jarvis.—In the Christian Science Sentinel for October 27, 1917, there appeared an announcement from The Christian Science Board of Directors to the effect that the growth of our movement had reached a point where the duties of administration made such demands upon the Directors' time that it made it necessary for the Directors to be relieved from holding other church offices. As an indication of this growth it is interesting to note that where only a few years ago the work of the Directors usually required less than one afternoon a week, it has become necessary during the past year that they devote almost their entire time to consideration of the affairs of The Mother Church, many of their meetings taking up the entire day. Aside from these many meetings, there is at all times a quorum of the Board available in case of need.

The entry of the United States into the world struggle for the cause of righteous government has brought to The Mother Church new opportunities which are being recorded as a series of victories, and it is our pleasure to present to you in the briefest way some of the recent footsteps of progress which have only been possible because of the unerring operation of Principle, as exemplified and taught by our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy. In grateful recognition of her wonderful gift to humanity, let us remember that whatever is capable of accomplishment by the Christian Science movement to-day has been made possible primarily and solely because of her untiring efforts and achievements.

The Clerk of The Mother Church is not a member of the Board of Directors, although the same individual acts as the Corresponding Secretary for the Board. Technically speaking, therefore, the Clerk's report deals only with those features of the work of The Mother Church which come directly within the province of his office.

It is with much gratitude that we are again able to report a substantial increase in our membership, the growth of which has been continuous and consistent since the inception of the Christian Science movement. The hearty spirit of cooperation on the part of those upon whom rests the responsibility of approving applicants for membership in The Mother Church; the increasing tendency of students to gain the blessing of branch church experience before uniting with the parent organization, and the growing sense of appreciation of the spiritual significance of Mother Church membership are all wholesome indications which assure the maintenance of the high standard for Christian Scientists set for us by Mrs. Eddy, to which reference was made at our last Annual Meeting, and which is so vitally essential to the growth and virility of our movement. Mrs. Eddy says on page 367 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "A Christian Scientist occupies the place at this period of which Jesus spoke to his disciples, when he said: 'Ye are the salt of the earth.' 'Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill cannot be hid.' Let us watch, work, and pray that this salt lose not its saltness, and that this light be not hid, but radiate and glow into noontide glory."

During the year, 1968 Christian Science lectures have been delivered to an aggregate of 1,385,388 people. This has included six lectures delivered in The Mother Church to approximately 25,000 persons. Although traveling facilities have been curtailed to a certain degree, members of the board of lectureship have responded to invitations and delivered lectures in the British Isles, Canal Zone, Alaska and the Yukon, China, Japan, the Philippine and Hawaiian Islands, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa. Recalling the time when it was more or less difficult to have a Christian Science lecture published in a newspaper except at regular advertising rates, we have much cause for gratitude in the changed attitude of the press. It is now not an uncommon experience for a newspaper to seek the privilege of publishing the complete text of a Christian Science lecture because of its news value, and in some of the larger cities the full report of a Christian Science lecture appears in one or more of the daily papers immediately following its delivery.

While on the subject of lectures, it may not be amiss to again call attention to the desirability of each branch church required to give a lecture and each society which intends to avail itself of its privilege of calling a lecturer, completing its arrangements for the coming lecture year as promptly as possible after the personnel of the board of lectureship is announced. This plan will be found mutually advantageous for all concerned.

Since our last Annual Meeting, there have been fifty new branch organizations added to the cards appearing in the Journal, which now show a total of 1776 Christian Science churches and societies. During this same period the increased number of those devoting their entire time to the practice of Christian Science as evidenced by The Christian Science Journal has grown to 6131, a net increase of 176 new names.

The Christian Science Publishing Society

A most important development in connection with the work of The Christian Science Publishing Society was the arrangement made between the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy and the trustees of the Publishing Society, whereby the Publishing Society became the publisher of all our Leader's works. This makes The Christian Science Publishing Society the sole publisher of all authorized Christian Science literature.

Science and Health is published in English, in English-French and in English-German, with the translations on the pages opposite the inspired English text. The publication of our Leader's works is handled by the Publishing Society through a department known as the Department of Mrs. Eddy's Works. The sale of all our Leader's works is constantly growing.

The work of the Publishing Society has grown, as evidenced by the increased number of employees connected with it; and in addition, to complete the equipment of machinery, there has been installed a large rotary press for printing the Sentinel, making two presses which print the Sentinel complete, binding it and delivering it ready for mailing. A rotary press for printing Quarterlies and pamphlets has also been installed.

The Herald is published in English-German and English-French, having the English text on alternate pages with the translation. All translations of Christian Science literature are now being printed with the English text and its translation on opposite pages. The Publishing Society issues for the soldiers vest pocket editions of Science and Health, the Quarterly, a song book, and pamphlets; a vest pocket edition of our Leader's works "Rudimental Divine Science" and "No and Yes," is in course of preparation.

The circulation of our daily newspaper, The Christian Science Monitor, is steadily increasing, and the paper is going throughout the world, as our Leader says, "to spread undivided the Science that operates unspent" (The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, p. 353).

Statement by the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy

During the year ending May 31, 1918, the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy have expended "for the purpose of more effectually promoting and extending the religion of Christian Science as taught by" our revered Leader, the sum of $455,741.31. This amount has been disbursed as follows:—

Churches and Societies.—$4400 was given to branch churches and societies in the war zone to assist in maintaining Christian Science services and other church activities without interruption. $14,750.57 was given as assistance to churches and societies in paying the expenses incident to their first lectures, and the Christian Science organizations at universities and colleges in paying the expenses of annual lectures; also, under certain restrictions, in paying a part of the traveling expenses of lecturers who responded to calls from foreign fields. $200,585.69 was paid to fifty-three branch churches and societies to assist them in erecting, purchasing, and remodeling church edifices. These fifty-three church properties are valued at more than a million dollars.

Free Distribution of Literature.—$100,730.02 was contributed to 1116 churches and societies whose reports for the year ending October 31, 1917, indicated that they were entitled to assistance in the free distribution of authorized Christian Science literature. It is interesting to note that these reports show an expenditure for literature and mailing of $271,660.04, which is $61,349.89 more than the reports for 1916 indicated. $42,290.33 was expended in assisting churches and societies in the purchase of authorized Christian Science literature presented to public and other lending libraries and to soldiers and sailors. This expenditure covers 22,874 vest pocket editions of Science and Health and 878,655 other authorized books and periodicals. $66,788.14 was expended for 2,436,987 periodicals and pamphlets distributed among officers and men in the military and naval service of our European allies. $26,196.56 was expended in the purchase of 6033 copies of the Christian Science textbook and other works on Christian Science by Mrs. Eddy, and 338,783 pieces of other authorized literature, including books, pamphlets, and periodicals, donated to free lending libraries.

The Christian Science Benevolent Association

The field will be glad to learn that work is well under way on the buildings to be erected on Single Tree Hill, Brookline. The excavating and foundations are about half completed for the first units of the group of buildings to be built at this time, consisting of the administration building, dormitories F and G, kitchen ell, power plant, and laundry. Under ordinary conditions it would be at least a year before these buildings could be completed.

Committee on Publication

The attitude of public officials toward the Christian Science movement is growing more friendly as time goes on, and there is a disposition, in English speaking countries at least, to accord a just recognition to our cause. The appointment of Christian Scientists as chaplains in the United States Army and Navy, the action of the United States Fuel Administrator in changing his fuel order during heatless days so as to provide heat for the offices of Christian Science practitioners, and the fact that the Department of Labor allowed an immigrant to remain in this country under Christian Science treatment when otherwise he would have been ineligible, are significant evidences that our movement is attaining the place in world affairs foreseen for it by our Leader.

The Christian Science War Relief and Camp Welfare Committee

The organized activities of this committee started in November, 1917. On the seventeenth of that month, The Christian Science Board of Directors advised the three largest churches in each state that a conference of churches and societies of that state could be called to consider a coordinated plan for Christian Science activities in the camps of the United States Army throughout the country, and also in the large naval concentration points, and that a representative of this committee could attend the conferences prepared to recommend a coordinated plan approved by the Board of Directors. As a result of this letter, state conferences were held and committees were formed to assume jurisdiction of the camp welfare work in their states.

Digitized by Google

As an outcome of the activities of these state committees, camp welfare workers have been placed in the cities and towns adjacent to all of the national Army cantonments, National Guard camps, many of the larger Army posts, at the principal embarking points, and also at several important naval points, and welfare rooms have been opened at a number of places where the need for this sort of room was very evident.

It is the duty of the workers to keep in touch with all of the Christian Science soldiers or sailors in the camps to which they are assigned, and also at their discretion to make available The Christian Science Monitor to all, Scientists and non-Scientists alike. These welfare workers are also providing vest pocket editions of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy, the vest pocket Quarterly, and the vest pocket song book, consisting of sixty specially selected hymns from the Christian Science Hymnal, as well as subscriptions to our periodicals, to all of the Christian Scientists and to such other soldiers and sailors as are sufficiently interested to request them. Christian Science soldiers and sailors are being encouraged by these workers to hold their own Christian Science services, and the fruitage from this branch of the work has been cause for great gratitude. Reports already received indicate that a considerable amount of healing work has been accomplished. Soldiers report a much greater sense of protection, and many instances of families helped through the efforts of the committees are on record.

On March 26, 1918, the Christian Science War Relief and the Christian Science Camp Welfare funds were combined, and at present the name of the committee is The Christian Science War Relief and Camp Welfare Committee.

A cable has just been received announcing the arrival in Paris of a party of ten workers, sent to France by this committee. It will be the duty of these workers to extend the War Relief work carried on through Christian Scientists in France since the beginning of hostilities. Funds for the Christian Science War Relief and Camp Welfare work have been contributed by Christian Scientists throughout the world, and this aid has not been confined to Christian Scientists, but has been extended without restriction to all in need of help.

The achievements of the year just ended are inspiring proofs to us that God is directing the Christian Science movement, founded as a part of our inspired Leader's demonstration, and to-day more than ever before we realize that we are not without her influence. She says to us in her Message to The Mother Church for 1900, ". . . I am with thee, heart answering to heart, and mine to thine in the glow of divine reflection." Referring to those who are on their way "in their passage from sense to Soul," she says (Science and Health, p. 566), "Stately Science pauses not, but moves before them, a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, leading to divine heights." Let us remember that ours is a sacred heritage, and that Mrs. Eddy tells us how we may defend that heritage in these words, found on page 86 of "Retrospection and Introspection": "To energize wholesome spiritual warfare, to rebuke vainglory, to offset boastful emptiness, to crown patient toil, and rejoice in the spirit and power of Christian Science, we must ourselves be true."

Dwell not on days of sorrow that are past;
Dim not with fears the future's cloudless way;
Rest in the knowledge of God's allness vast,
And good—His presence—is thine own each day.

["Finding God"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U.S.A., Dec. 28, 1917]

The ancient Athenians were evidently inclined to be on the safe side in religious affairs, so they erected an altar with the inscription, "TO THE UNKNOWN GOD." It is not to be wondered at that a man as zealous for Christianity as was Paul, was stirred by such a sentiment. We find him, therefore, standing "in the midst of Mars' hill," using the altar's inscription as the basis of his memorable speech, urging mankind "that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being." It is very evident from all this that God must come into every one's life in the nature and after the manner of a discovery or a revelation. This, however, is only another way of saying that God can only be found or discovered in the things of God, the creations of Spirit. "It is also plain," to quote Mrs. Eddy (Miscellaneous Writings, p. 124), "that we should not seek and cannot find God in matter, or through material methods; neither do we love and obey Him by means of matter, or the flesh,—which warreth against Spirit, and will not be reconciled thereto."

It is safe to say, therefore, that nothing real or eternal has ever been discovered by means of the physical senses, nor has God ever been found in matter. Matter, of course, seems to be subordinate to certain laws, but these laws are not in nor of matter. Take, for instance, the law of numbers that enters so much into the material affairs of the world; do we not have to admit that even if the entire universe of matter were to disappear, and planets and suns were no more, the law of numbers might still remain and be the same eternally, thereby proving that law is not in matter nor dependent upon it? Of the law suggested to Newton by a falling apple, Mrs. Eddy says: "True, Newton named it gravitation, having learned so much; but Science, demanding more, pushes the question: Whence or what is the power back of gravitation,—the intelligence that manifests power?" (Miscellaneous Writings, pp. 22-23.) So the question: How is it possible to discover God or recognize the ideas that point Him out? can be answered in only one way, namely, that we can discover Him only by means of the law of Christian Science.

"Reason," to quote Mrs. Eddy again, "is the most active human faculty" (Science and Health, p. 327). And reason quite naturally refuses to be forever confined to the testimony of the physical senses; in fact, reason is constantly demanding liberty therefrom. So we find that reason always seeks Science and law. Now all Science and law, if they be worthy of the name, point to one harmonious source, and show unmistakably that God is their author and progenitor. Man never made law nor science, he can only discover them. Christian Science, or divine Science, is, therefore, of God, and is one with God. It cannot be separated from God nor considered apart from Spirit. Hence it unerringly points to God. Christian Science demands that this law, or divine Principle, be demonstrated, for only by demonstration can it be proved that we have found God and discovered infinite good. Mrs. Eddy, with the greatest sense of exactness, calls herself the Discoverer of Christian Science. The letter of this Science which she gives us in its textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," will help us to imbibe the Spirit thereof, so that in a certain sense we also shall become discoverers,—having found the Truth that is God.

Now it follows, naturally, that the more we demonstrate the things of Christian Science, the more we shall apprehend or discover the things of God. The law of God is, of course, the law of every right and perfect idea, including spiritual man; so when we find God we also find the real man, made in the image and likeness of God and correlated with God or the divine Principle, Love. The discovery of God, therefore, comes simultaneously with the discovery of His image and likeness, man. Nothing, it will be found, is proved more conclusively in Christian Science than the eternal at-one-ment of God and His image and likeness, man,—and hereby the sick are healed and the sinning reformed. For the discovery of God and the spiritual man is most certainly to be followed by the realization of the unreality of matter and its concomitants of sin, disease, and death. Having found the true stature of man's selfhood by having found God, through Christian Science, necessarily the lie of mortal man, or the "man of sin," as Paul names this delusion, is also revealed,—and, being revealed, is destroyed.

In daily life people do not always find what they think they are seeking; so in the search for God, whereby we find both God and the real man in eternal coexistence, we also find what we did not look for when we began our search, namely, the true status of the counterfeit or the fleshly concept called mortal man, and this mortal man is the "old man" that must be put off. So discovering God finally resolves itself into a process of overcoming selfishness or a false sense of self apart from God, good, and this simply means letting go of our personal interest in greed, ambition, pride, fear, envy, resentment, discouragement, and false appetites of every name and nature, thus finding God to be All-in-all. "When we realize," says Mrs. Eddy (Science and Health, p. 264), "that Life is Spirit, never in nor of matter, this understanding will expand into self-completeness, finding all in God, good, and needing no other consciousness."

[Judge Clifford P. Smith in The Apostolic Review, Indianapolis, Ind.]

The attack on Christian Science and Christian Scientists in a recent issue again illustrates the weakness of such attacks. Whoever is disposed to condemn parents for relying on Christian Science to prevent or cure disease for their children should at least stop to consider whether there is some other method of prevention or cure that is more reliable. Christian Scientists can speak on this point from experience; usually from experience with more than one system. Most of them have had at least the ordinary experience with material remedies, and have found that Christian Science is much more dependable. The use of law books made in the article was shortsighted. From a paragraph in one of them the critic cited a Wisconsin decision as if it were against Christian Science, without mentioning a New Hampshire decision stated as contrary to the Wisconsin decision in the same paragraph. Moreover, he failed to observe that the subject of the Wisconsin decision was not Christian Science but was spiritualism, and failed to ascertain or mention that the law of Wisconsin recognizes the practice of Christian Science, which it expressly does.

The other legal points set up in the same article were also mistaken or misleading. The fact is that the practice of Christian Science and reliance on it is lawful everywhere, except, possibly, in Germany. A Prussian judge, speaking in 1915, declared that Christian Science "is a teaching that is not in accord with the German spirit," which may be quite true; but an eminent New York judge, speaking in 1916, said, "I deny the power of the legislature to make it a crime to treat disease by prayer;" which is the American and Christian view.

Whether The Apostolic Review has given its readers a relish for attacks on Christian Science or Christian Scientists, may be best known to the editor. Sooner or later, however, they will learn in some manner that Christian Science is simply vital, practical, and complete Christianity. Meanwhile, all that Christian Scientists ask of the editor or contributors of The Apostolic Review, or any paper, is the measure of fairness defined by the golden rule.

[John M. Tutt in St. Louis (Mo.) Times]

"Elizabeth," writing in the Times under the caption "Christian Science a Misnomer," dismisses the remarkable progress of the Christian Science movement with the line "weeds grow fast." She would do well to remember that some of our most useful plants were formerly considered valueless, if not noxious. Because of the bias of medical and theological education, the writer was for many years deprived of the benefits of Christian Science. When his eyes finally were opened to the truth about Christian Science, and thereby he found health and spiritual awakening he had never known in the old ways of medicine and theology, he then discovered that the growth of Christian Science is due entirely to the fact that it "meets the heart's great need," as no other system has met it.

What can this critic mean by the assertion that Christian Science deifies man? It is the orthodox theology and not Christian Science which does that. Christ's coming "in the flesh" did not make the Christ "an incarnation of error," neither did it make the flesh a spiritual reality. But the orthodox belief that the flesh was very God does result in "an incarnation of error." Paul says that Jesus was made sin "for us," and sin is undoubtedly error. Christ Jesus proved by his "triumphant exit from the flesh" (Science and Health, p. 117) that fleshly error profiteth nothing; for he thus showed matter to be no part of the real man.

Christian Science is Christian, because it is the revival of the teaching and practice of Christ Jesus. The above illustrates its complete consistency with the teaching of the Master, for Jesus himself many times denied that he was God; he insisted that he was the Son of God.

"Elizabeth's" definition of science is from the dictionary and is quite acceptable to Christian Scientists. However, no lexicographer would care to say that Jesus was not scientific, any more than he would want to say that all science must be knowledge of matter. The very highest science is systematized knowledge of absolute truth, because that is knowledge of God, and is final. Now God is Spirit, and hence His handiwork is spiritual; it partakes of the divine nature, therefore knowledge of God and the spiritual creation is truest science. This is the knowledge Jesus possessed, with which he demonstrated his control over matter and its laws. This is the science, or spiritual truth, knowledge of which, he said to his students, would make them free.

When our critic terms the healing proof of Christian Science "a questionable one," she forgets that when John questioned if Jesus were the Christ, Jesus offered his healing works as conclusive proof of his Messiahship. "Elizabeth" cannot by a mere denial set aside the fact that Christian Science heals organic disease. Neither can the fact be annulled by the occasional failure of Christian Scientists to succeed. The power of Christian Science to heal organic diseases, and the ability of Christian Scientists to prove that power, are established by thousands of authentic cases healed, many of which are of record and attested by competent medical diagnoses. In the face of such overwhelming testimony, denial that Christian Science heals organic diseases is fatuous.

"The whole thing," concludes Elizabeth, "is a serious business and ought to be brought under control by boards of health and churches everywhere." There you have it in a sentence. Always there's a reason, and here the reason appears to be both medical and theological; for "Elizabeth" wants Christian Science to be turned over to boards of health and the churches. Great indeed is Diana of the Ephesians, and no small profit is to be protected and saved by regulating out of existence that which preaches a strange doctrine by which the traffic in the prevalent gods of medicine and religion may be depleted. To all such as "Elizabeth," who fear for the people because of Christian Science, it may be said with assurance: Because it is a religion and not a system of therapeutics, Christian Science is not subject to regulation by boards of health; because of its divine authority, Christian Science can do no harm, but, contrariwise, will continue as heretofore to bless all mankind.

[Albert F. Gilmore in Medical Review of Reviews, New York, N. Y.]

In the article, "Psychology and Drugs," the assertion is made that the sick man's confidence in his doctor (one of the physician's greatest assets) is of the same general nature as the "mysterious mental phenomenon which frequently controls physical conditions," and which has "been capitalized by faith cure and Christian Science." That there is anything mysterious about Christian Science and its healing influence, is true only so far as that which is unfamiliar is mysterious; for the mystery disappears with understanding. To the material consciousness, educated to look to matter for cause and cure, ignoring the all-power and all-presence of God, Christian Science healing seems intangible, vague, and unreal. Mrs. Eddy has expressed this very definitely on page 145 of Science and Health: "If there is any mystery in Christian healing, it is the mystery which godliness always presents to the ungodly,—the mystery always arising from ignorance of the laws of eternal and unerring Mind."

The student of Christian Science learns that healing results, not from the operation of some mysterious power, but rather from the coming into consciousness of Christ, Truth, the spiritual helper, the understanding of what God is, and of real existence; and this understanding destroys "the illusion of material sense" which, as we read in Science and Health (p. 227), "has bound you, entangled your free limbs, crippled your capacities, enfeebled your body, and defaced the tablet of your being." The healing ministry of Christian Science is in conformity to the direct command of the man from Nazareth, as practiced by him and his disciples and followers for nearly three centuries. That these healings were made by spiritual means, and that even the dead were raised, is asserted by no less an authority than the historian Gibbon. This regenerating religion is again operative, and in our midst; and the sick are healed, the blind made to see, and to the poor the gospel is preached as in the early years of the Christian era.

[Lewis L. Harney in East Cleveland (Ohio) Herald]

An item in a recent issue would leave the impression that there is a significant difference between Christian Science as stated in the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, and the religion of Christ Jesus according to the Bible, whereas Christian Science is in perfect agreement with Jesus' words and works, and is nothing more nor less than the continuation of the scientific religion he established. The passage referred to in the Herald is the paragraph from page 75 of Science and Health, which is as follows: "Jesus said of Lazarus: 'Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep.' Jesus restored Lazarus by the understanding that Lazarus had never died, not by an admission that his body had died and then lived again. Had Jesus believed that Lazarus had lived or died in his body, the Master would have stood on the same plane of belief as those who buried the body, and he could not have resuscitated it." It will be recalled that when Jesus said that Lazarus "sleepeth," the disciples did not understand what he meant, so Jesus had to tell them "plainly," or in language comprehensible to them, that Lazarus was dead. On another occasion when Jesus told the people that the damsel was not dead, but sleeping, they laughed him to scorn. Therefore the author of the inquiry as to whether to believe Science and Health or the Bible, would do well to strive to understand both Jesus' and Mrs. Eddy's meaning, and then there would be no contradiction. Jesus roused Lazarus out of the sleep of death as an ordinary man wakes another out of ordinary sleep; and that is the interpretation given to the passage by Mrs. Eddy, who saw clearly that the difference between sleep and death is one of degree.

Extracts from Letters

[From Alexandria, Egypt]

"I have not yet thanked you for your very kind letter of the twelfth of January, and the inclosure; but this delay is perhaps just as well, as I have had time to send out copies of these to those interested in Egypt and the Sudan. You will be pleased to know how very encouraging these letters have been to us all and how deeply appreciative we are of the kindness which prompted you to write so fully. Many have sent in further donations, and by means of these and of a contribution of some nine pounds from our general fund I am enabled to inclose herewith a check for one hundred and twenty-five dollars on account of the War Relief fund. One contributor, on active service, writes in sending his donation: 'It is indeed gratifying to know that Christian Science is taking such an active part in looking after those who have suffered through the war. I must candidly confess that I was ignorant of the fact that the Christian Science church had taken up this relief work, and it is exceedingly pleasing to know that it has. Would you kindly put me down as a regular monthly contributor to your fund . . .' As this indicates the general spirit of willing generosity on the part of friends out here, it is evident that the money, capably administered as we know it is, must do a great deal more good than is indicated by its face value calculated in pounds, shillings, and pence."

[From Italy]

"I found myself many a time in very disastrous financial conditions, not knowing how to satisfy my children's hunger, and you were ever ready to help me. I thank you, and thank you heartily, also all those Americans who contribute their money to help the needy in Italy. I shall ever be grateful to all."

From a soldier at the Italian front, whose family has been helped by the Christian Science War Relief fund:—

"I know that you are doing so much for my family, and buying shoes for my little girl; I feel grateful indeed. I am always strong and resolute and full of courage, feeling sure that victory will be ours, that is to say, of the civilized nations which make up the Allies."

Living Witnesses

ACQUAINTANCE with the truth of being enabled the psalmist to say, "Thou art near, O Lord; and all thy commandments are truth." He was able to see also how not distance but discord separated blessing from man, saying, "Salvation is far from the wicked: for they seek not thy statutes."

The joy and privilege of one who knows the truth as to God the Savior is clearly stated through inspiration by one who said, "I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord." Once a question was asked concerning a group of workers and students in Christian Science, Whence came they? The questioner had in mind locality and perhaps occupation. The one who made the reply, however, was reminded of the answer given by John to a similar question, "These are they which came out of great tribulation;" for the one questioned thought of the many victories over error and sickness which were represented in the group, and so said simply and truly, "Most of us came from our graves." Their experience had illustrated the truth of the statement found in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 323): "The true idea of God gives the true understanding of Life and Love, robs the grave of victory, takes away all sin and the delusion that there are other minds, and destroys mortality." It recalls also the statement in Ezekiel: "Ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live."

The Christian Science movement has included in its workers and promoters thousands of those who saw first in their own lives the marvel and mystery of Truth in operation. Peter in his address to the household of Cornelius declared "how God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power: who went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil; for God was with him." "And," he went on to say, "we are witnesses of all things which he did." Likewise there are witnesses to the work of the Comforter, "the Spirit of truth," in these latter days. For the encouragement of those who are seeking Truth, who believe that they shall recognize it by the sign of salvation, the periodicals of our movement have always recorded such signs or evidences, naming them testimonies of healing. Those who write these testimonies are the living witnesses—not merely living but loving also, that is, living with a new sense of life. It may here be said that whatever the purposes of medication may usually be it is not the purpose of Christian Science healing to make anyone merely a healthy animal, or to give one such material successes that he may for example come under the ban indicated by Isaiah when he said: "Woe unto them that join house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!" The life and the love revealed through Christian Science make one spiritually minded, superior to covetousness and animality.

The reward of fellowship that may be found by those who bear witness is illustrated by what one whose testimony was published, has written. She says: "I wish to thank you for publishing my testimony of healing and for the marked copy sent me. Through it, friends whom we have not heard from for years have written us letters. We did not even know where they were living. One family has been interested in Science for twelve years, and another party I was instrumental in helping six years ago, writes me of continued blessings in Christian Science. This is proof that nothing is lost in the divine Mind. My gratitude goes out daily for Christian Science and no words can express my appreciation for the literature."

The opportunities that are before Christian Scientists should not be taken lightly nor disregarded. If one begins to make excuses, it is easy to find reasons for saying, "I pray thee have me excused." But if it was said truly long ago, "He that withholdeth corn, the people shall curse him: but blessing shall be upon the head of him that selleth it," much more can it be said to-day that if one gives true testimony regarding the bread of Life, the people will love him. Not only, then, before audiences at testimony meetings, but also by means of articles and records of healing in our periodicals, reaching a vaster audience, may Christian Scientists show themselves to be living witnesses, attesting and confirming the fact that man "doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." Those who are responsible for the regular issuance of the periodicals wherein testimonies of healing appear, invite the living witnesses to consider the opportunity of the hour.

WILLIAM P. MCKENZIE.

"What thinkest thou?"

THE Master's question to Peter respecting the giving of tribute, "What thinkest thou, Simon?" may be profitably pondered by students of Christian Science every hour of the day. We are constantly called upon to pay tribute to the beliefs and traditions which have been established on the basis of material sense; and yet the Christ call to freedom bids us challenge each one of these, in order to make sure that we are maintaining our allegiance to divine Principle in all we think, say, and do. In the prophecy of Isaiah we are distinctly told that the thoughts of men are very far removed from being like the thoughts of God; and yet the Bible does not permit us to go on under the supposition that this difference should continue, for in the same prophecy the unrighteous man is bidden to change his thinking and to turn to God, who "will abundantly pardon."

It is now very generally known that Christian Science deals primarily with thought—indeed, it may be called the Science of right thinking—and at this point it is well to remember that it was after some years of deep study into the Scriptures that Mrs. Eddy demonstrated to those who were willing to receive the truth that right thinking brings one into a true relation with God, and enables him to gain that knowledge of God which Christ Jesus said "is life eternal." On page 219 of "Miscellaneous Writings" she says: "It is admitted that mortals think wickedly and act wickedly: it is beginning to be seen by thinkers, that mortals think also after a sickly fashion." Mrs. Eddy does not, however, leave the subject here, for she adds, "This is Christian Science: that mortal mind makes sick, and immortal Mind makes well; that mortal mind makes sinners, while immortal Mind makes saints."

For over half a century students of her teachings have been proving the truth of her words, and have had to defend stoutly their right to think upon the things which are true, honest, just, pure, and lovely,—in brief, the things which are healthful,—as Paul admonishes us in his epistle to the Philippians. Those outside of Christian Science may not be aware of it, but it is nevertheless true that all attempts at repressive measures against the practice of Christian Science are really directed at man's God-given right to think truly of himself, that is, in neither a sinful nor a sickly fashion. The practice of Christian Science is not dependent upon poisonous drugs, nor indeed upon anything which does not rest upon the recognition of man as God's spiritual likeness and as governed by spiritual law.

It goes without saying that Christian Scientists refuse to be made martyrs of. They address themselves cheerfully to the task of proving their right to think in accordance with Principle and also to act in accordance therewith; and so, instead of murmuring over these mistaken efforts to sweep back with the mop of human opinions the waves of the infinite ocean of Truth and Love, which have brought healing, happiness, and new hope to this age, they find in every attack fresh opportunity to prove their right to the freedom which Christ Jesus established and showed to be inseparable from obedience to his teachings.

In the ninth chapter of Matthew we read of a remarkable case of healing, when Jesus practically explained the basis of his work; and here it may be said that this is also the basis of all the healing work undertaken in Christian Science. A helpless man, "sick of the palsy," was brought to the Master, who addressed him thus: "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." The Master's statement at once aroused in the thought of some who were present the severest condemnation; and they charged him with blasphemy, which under Jewish law was a capital offense. To their unspoken criticism Jesus responded with the question, "Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts?" He then proceeded to explain that the healing of both sin and sickness rests upon the one divine Principle, and the Science of his words was made clear when the man was healed and departed to his house.

It is good to read that those who saw this demonstration marveled at it, as well they might, and glorified God, as thousands are doing to-day who have learned that health and happiness are the result of thinking in accordance with the teachings of Christ Jesus. These teachings are illumined and made practical for us in Christian Science, which shows that we are thinking evil in our hearts when we deny the omnipotence of God by admitting that sickness and sin can defy the majesty of His law. In the dedicatory sermon at the opening of the original Mother Church, after quoting Jesus' words, "The kingdom of God is within you," Mrs. Eddy said (Pulpit and Press, p. 3), "Know, then, that you possess sovereign power to think and act rightly, and that nothing can dispossess you of this heritage and trespass on Love." This being true, we cannot too often apply to ourselves the Master's question, "What thinkest thou?"

ANNIE M. KNOTT.

Victory

DIVINE Science knows no defeats. It proclaims one continuous victory. Defeat belongs to the illusion of physical sense, and presupposes the reality of evil. Since, however, there is no reality either in physical sense or in evil,—and there certainly can be none in illusion,—there are no elements out of which a real defeat can be concocted. In the absolute, fear, hate, greed, and animality, being wholly illusory, cannot produce conditions of destruction. The victory of righteousness, therefore, remains the normal outcome of every act, undisputed and irresistible. Victory is the natural goal of every right endeavor. In human experience victory is the crown which surmounts the cross.

The spring of 1918 in the United States, which is to-day the principal distributing center for the world's supplies, will long be remembered as a victory of good over evil. The unfolding has been unlabored, the normal growth of grain, fruit, and flower a delight to all. This notable spring proclaims the triumph of righteous prayer over the desires of the unrighteous. During the years of famine Joseph fed his brethren out of his plenty. Jacob said of him: "Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall: the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: but his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob; (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel)."

If men and nations were agreed as to the meaning of reality, there would be no contests about the unreal. Ignorance of God and His creation leads to battles over that which profiteth nothing. The notable conquerors have been men who made a great outward show but were driven by a secret sense of lack. In seeking to add lands to lands and peoples to peoples they but followed a haunting sense of poverty. Individuals who are unaccustomed to riches tend to make meretricious displays in order to cover their sense of want. Only Christian Science can uncover these unconscious mental springs of action which people conceal even from their intimates. The greater the lust of conquest the greater the sense of limitation. Victories won from such a motive power are defeats. Mrs. Eddy has written on page 239 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Let it be understood that success in error is defeat in Truth. The watchword of Christian Science is Scriptural: 'Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts.'"

The approval of the world is "defeat in Truth," for it is a victory of self, not over self. Every demonstration of Christian Science healing encounters the world's disapproval, for it breaks some of the world's cherished laws of physical belief. The world's conventions and classifications concerning sin, sickness, and death have no standing before God. Its standards simply represent the accumulation of worldly wisdom which is foolishness with God. It sacrifices substance to appearance and so cannot save. Had worldly wisdom possessed any saving grace it would have been able to forestall the destructiveness of to-day.

The Christian Science movement cannot be classified as the world would like to have it. It is not one of many sects. Christian Science is the one Christianity, the one explanation and demonstration of the Christ healing. It cannot be conveniently labeled as one of many religious beliefs, because it is not a matter of belief but of demonstration, and as such proves the correctness of its own teachings. The world's favor in admitting Christian Science to be considered as a Christian denomination cannot blind the wide-awake Christian Scientist to the fact that it stands alone as the one and only remedy for the world's woes. Its Christly power is present with the soldiers and sailors warring for liberty. It is as much at home on the battle field as in a church edifice, with those at the front as with those who are left behind. It clarifies the mental atmosphere of the council chamber, mitigates greed, brings poise to those who have suffered shock, restores the soul of those who have lost faith in good, frustrates the intent of the evil wisher. Christian Science as revealed by Mary Baker Eddy is sufficient for the salvation of the world, but how can it save the world if it be placed under the world?

Christ Jesus won his victory over death, and Paul announced to the Corinthians, "Death is swallowed up in victory." For this final conquest much humility is required, an unquestioning obedience to God, world-wide liberty, spiritual endurance, the activity of right ideas, and a never failing consciousness of "God with us." On page 3 of "Pulpit and Press" Mrs. Eddy writes: "Our surety is in our confidence that we are indeed dwellers in Truth and Love, man's eternal mansion. Such a heavenly assurance ends all warfare, and bids tumult cease, for the good fight we have waged is over, and divine Love gives us the true sense of victory."

An old hymn entitled "Faith is the Victory" is timely:—

Encamp'd along the hills of light,
Ye Christian soldiers, rise,
And press the battle ere the night
Shall veil the glowing skies;
Against the foe in vales below
Let all our strength be hurled;
Faith is the victory, we know,
That overcomes the world.

His banner over us is love,
Our sword the Word of God;
We tread the road the saints above
With shouts of triumph trod;
By faith, they like a whirlwind's breath,
Swept on o'er every field;
The faith by which they conquer'd Death
Is still our shining shield.

Faith is the victory!
Faith is the victory!
Oh, glorious victory,
That overcomes the world.

Current Notes

NORTHUMBERLAND, ENGLAND.—The year ending October 31, 1917, has been one of greater activity in our work. It is satisfactory to note an increased demand for Christian Science literature, a larger attendance at the public services, notably of men, and much good healing work done. The lecture reports in the press have been good, but not lengthy, and the newspaper editors appreciate the Monitor, which is sent to them regularly.

The literature distributed from this office shows a considerable increase, and is as follows: 55 Sentinels, 21 Journals, 710 Monitors, 65 pamphlets, 355 leaflets, 275 newspapers containing reports of lectures and corrections.

The distribution work done by First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Newcastle and the Whitley Bay Society is as follows: 2079 Sentinels, 299 Journals, 13,830 Monitors, 1 Science and Health, and 6 pamphlets—a total of 16,215 pieces. In addition to these figures special committees have distributed to soldiers' camps, billets, and hospitals the following literature, supplied free by the Trustees under the Will of Mary Baker Eddy: 1719 Sentinels, 232 Journals, 20,485 Monitors, 763 pamphlets—a total of 23,199 pieces.

The foregoing figures, making a total of 40,895 pieces of Christian Science literature distributed in Northumberland during the year, show an increase of 10 per cent on the figures of the previous year for the ordinary distribution, and 25 per cent increase on the special distribution.

July 1, 1919. This is in accord with a plan recently adopted whereby members of the Board of Lectureship, after six years of continuous service, will be privileged to take a sabbatical year for practice, research, and study.

In making engagements for lectures to be delivered, the work of both churches and lecturers will be greatly facilitated if the churches will make immediate application to the individual lecturers for the date or dates desired during the year ending June 30, 1919.

Letters and telegrams sent to the addresses given above will be duly forwarded. Use these addresses, unless for a special occasion a different address is given.

WASHINGTON, D. C. (joint lecture).—William W. Porter, lecturer; introduced by Col. H. M. Lord, who said in part:—

In this hour of world strife, when nation wars against nation, and the worst passions of humanity seem dominant; when it would seem that the civilization of the world has disappeared in the smoke of ruin and rapine; when evil seems rampant and this great and peace loving nation has been obliged, reluctantly, to turn aside from its chosen path of peace and arm itself in a just and righteous cause, I strengthen my faith in the eternal supremacy of good with that story of ancient deliverance when the Egyptians pursued the Israelites. To the Israelites it seemed that the day of destruction had dawned: but there was one strong heart that would not be swerved from its definite purpose; there was one ear attuned to hear the still, small voice above the tumult; there was one clear vision that was enabled to discern beneath the waters of the turbulent sea a pathway to safety. The message that sounded the doom of "all Pharaoh's horses, his chariots, and his horsemen," and proclaimed the salvation of the chosen people, has for all time been the message of divine Love to individuals and to peoples in times of trouble: "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord." Supplemental thereto, and linking the Pharaohs and Red Seas of the past to the Pharaohs and Red Seas of the present, is that other message to suffering humanity, falling as a benediction upon troubled waters from the lips of the Discoverer and Leader of Christian Science (Science and Health, p. 494): "Divine Love always has met and always will meet every human need."

We as Christian Scientists, justified in our active participation in this world conflict by the absolute righteousness of our cause, are not forgetful of the fact that the only real victory that can be achieved is the victory of the golden rule, and that an enduring, permanent, lasting peace cannot be attained until divine Love, "the universal panacea" (Science and Health, p. 144), has its legitimate fruition in the hearts of men. Christian Science is the practical application of this law of divine Love to the affairs of men, solving every problem, satisfying every human need, and pointing to a path to peace through the swollen flood of the world's warring passions; and a peace attained in any other way can not and will not abide.

ATHOL, MASS. (First Church).—Dr. Walton Hubbard, lecturer; introduced by Miss Charlotte M. Gary, who said in part:—

Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Christian Science is the word of God to this age, and the revelation of the truth which Jesus taught and demonstrated. Through this spiritual understanding man is freed from all inharmony, from the bondage of sorrow, sickness, and sin, thereby bringing into human experience the liberty of the children of God. In these days of great stress and disquiet, Christian Science indeed bears a message of love, peace, and freedom to all.

RED BANK, N. J. (Society).—Virgil O. Strickler, lecturer; introduced by George Ford Morris, who said in part:—

We who call ourselves Christian Scientists are sure of what we understand about God, because we can prove and demonstrate just so far as we understand. Take my own case, for instance. When I was supposed to be beyond the help of medicine and doctors, I was healed of stomach and intestinal trouble of fifteen years' standing through even my limited understanding of Christian Science; also of the drink habit, to which I had been addicted for seven years. Because what I knew of God through the teachings of Christian Science enabled me to overcome these things and thereby prove its efficacy, I am going right on with its study.

Testimonies of Healing

I turned to Christian Science several years ago, not for physical help, though there was great need of that, but for the overcoming of grief, for something to enable me to go on living. Outwardly, in the course of years, my life had readjusted itself so that it seemed normal to others, but in my thought always lurked the question, Why? Why need I go on living and suffering when there seemed to be no good, no purpose in life?

I know it was God's guidance that led me to a Christian Science practitioner. In the talk that followed I poured out the wretchedness of the years—the anguish and rebellion, the remorse and despair. I cast down my unbearable burden at the feet of the Christ, Truth, as made known to me in Christian Science, and was freed; for as spiritual reality was unfolded to me with great power and vividness, the gates of heaven—the doors of spiritual perception—swung open, and for the first time I saw with wonderful clearness the eternal truth: a God who is infinite Love, all good; the true, spiritual man created in His image and likeness; and a perfect, purely spiritual creation. I did not merely hope and trust and believe; I saw and understood—I knew. It would be called an instantaneous healing, I believe. It was the greatest proof that could be given me that Christian Science heals, for I knew that from the very nature of my trouble no material means would cure me.

On page 588 of our textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," Mrs. Eddy defines hell as "self-imposed agony." I saw this as I realized that the mental torture together with the physical suffering of all these years had, indeed, been self-imposed by my own ignorance of the truth about God and man, and life as it really is,—that the chains which had seemed to hold me in bondage had never been stronger than the strength of my own false belief in them. There have been many demonstrations of physical healing, but nothing compares with the spiritual healing and with the spiritual understanding coming to me through the study of Christian Science. During the four years since my healing I have been an earnest student of Christian Science, and find the truth taught therein a satisfying, never failing "well of water springing up into everlasting life." This past year has been a real test—a sévere test, it has seemed—in almost every way; but by holding to spiritual reality I have been enabled to stand firmly on the rock, Christ. I have also received great physical healing, though this has come, and is coming, more gradually, for it has seemed to come almost wholly through my own understanding. During the past few months there has come a great increase of strength and endurance, for I am seeing more clearly that health is a spiritual quality—that it is wholeness, which is realized as we understand man's oneness with God. Once a delicate, extremely nervous, despondent creature, afflicted for years with the mental malady of melancholia, I am to-day an active, normal woman, able to do whatever is required of me, my days filled with work in the church, the study of Christian Science, and the many duties of a home maker.

Almost from the time of my first healing I have been able to help others in some degree, and I do not lose sight of this high goal—healing and helping others with this truth; it is what I am living for. I am humbly thankful to God for His great goodness, and in all ways give Him the glory. I am also grateful to Mrs. Eddy, who has once again brought this great truth, expressed through the Christ-teaching, to a needy world.—(Mrs.) EDNA STETSON, Fayetteville, Ark.

I wish to express my gratitude for all that Christian Science has done for me and mine. Twenty-three years ago my life was despaired of, owing to a very serious nervous collapse. During a night of sleepless agony, I prayed with all the understanding I then had for light and healing, as the thought of death and separation from my loved ones was more than I could bear. My prayer was answered in a remarkable manner. A voice seemed to speak in the silence of the night, saying, "Try Christian Science"—and with the words came a wonderful cessation of pain and mental turmoil; it was as though an angel had spoken to me. Knowing nothing about this great scientific healing, I called the nurse to me, told her of my strange experience, and insisted that a Christian Science practitioner should be called. Never shall I forget that first treatment in Science; for I was instantaneously healed, lifted out of the blackest night of error into the radiance of Truth and Life—and again I knew that an angel had indeed touched me, for no human power could have wrought such a miracle. In Psalms we read, "He sent his word, and healed them, and delivered them from their destructions."

I have had many battles to fight since then, but the way does indeed grow brighter as the still, small voice of Truth is heard and obeyed. My most earnest wish is to be worthy the name of Christian Scientist.

(Mrs.) ALICE M. JONES, Denver, Col.

It is with deep gratitude, in the hope of affording help to other lonely, storm tossed pilgrims on life's highway, that the following testimony to the healing power of Christian Science is given. About six years ago I was in that condition, physical, mental, and moral, described in the words of Paul as "having no hope, and without God in the world." I suffered from great physical weakness and a feeling of utter incapacity to meet life's burdens and duties, which it seemed hopeless to struggle against. Normal strength had never been known from infancy and the weakness became accentuated as childhood passed into youth and youth into manhood, owing to a succession of illnesses. For years life was a continuous struggle against all kinds of constantly recurring ailments, including severe headaches lasting for days at a time, stomach disorder, liver derangements, chills, coughs, colds, influenza, rheumatism, lumbago, toothache, neuralgia, and faintness, together with what is known as loss of nerve.

During this time many books were read in the search for a satisfactory solution of the problem of existence, a search which was never given up, and a problem which seemed persistently to declare itself insolvable. Most of the best books bearing on this problem were read, but the riddle of the universe remained. At last I found myself helpless and hopeless, alone, and threatened with complete destitution. I went to my private room to pray. No words came to the lips, but gradually a sense of the ever presence of God stole into consciousness, bringing with it the calm certainty that the truth about God and man must be revealed, and that this revelation must necessarily insure the supply of all human needs. As an immediate result of this a long journey was undertaken, greatly against personal inclination, to a city in another country, where was found supply for all material needs and where the question, "What is truth?" was answered by an introduction to the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. The study of this book healed me instantaneously of a very painful and distressing complaint which seemed the climax of all previous suffering and was threatening to incapacitate me entirely for any useful activity, and for which an operation had been recommended by a celebrated hygienist. This discordant condition has never recurred.

Since that healing, Christian Science has been the only and the infallible remedy for every attack of illness. Some forms of physical discord have entirely disappeared; while others are more gradually being overcome; but whereas six years ago one foot was in the grave, so to speak, and each day's work was accomplished in physical and mental agony, to-day health and strength are being increasingly realized and life has become full of usefulness and joy, the greatest joy of all being the knowledge that salvation from all forms of discord is available for, and free to, all mankind,—the salvation revealed in the Scriptures when these are interpreted correctly, according to their spiritual import, as they are in Christian Science.—J. WILL CARR, Glasgow, Scotland.

Christian Science was brought to us eight years ago when our baby girl, five months old, was seemingly dying of malnutrition. When all kinds of food that were recommended for infants had been tried and our physician had said he could do no more, a friend asked us if we would try Christian Science. At that time we knew nothing at all of this religion, but as hope for help from other sources had been given up, a practitioner in a neighboring town was at once called by telephone and treatment was asked for. She treated the baby that night and when morning came the little one showed improvement. As we knew nothing of the working of Christian Science, we asked the practitioner to come to our home, which request she lovingly complied with, and from this visit we gained light that has never ceased to shine. In one week our baby was completely healed, and since then no medicine whatever has been used in our family. The following winter this baby had an attack of acute lung trouble, but instead of using medical means, Christian Science treatment was again asked for, and within a very short time the ailment had vanished.

During this winter we have witnessed the power and have felt the blessings of Christian Science in two cases. Our five-year-old daughter had acute lung trouble, and after treating her for three or four days apparently without any improvement in her condition, we asked for help from a practitioner, and in three days the trouble was overcome. Another demonstration of the power of Truth for which we are very grateful is the healing of our little girl's eye, which had caused us considerable worry. A small growth, which became very painful, appeared on the eyeball and the inflammation became so severe that she could not bear the light and could not rest at night. This condition lasted three or four weeks, but through the practitioner's application of the truth which never varies, the error was cast out and the child's eye is now perfectly well.

We are very grateful for Christian Science and are trying to prove our gratitude by living better lives; in fact, we do not want to be satisfied until we awake with God's likeness.—LESTER WEAVER and (Mrs.) ALICE WEAVER, Hereford, Texas.

I cannot express in words all that Christian Science means to me. It is a most glorious blessing to have been able to prove that we do not have to wait until some future day in order to receive help from God, but can dwell with Him now.

Three years and a half ago I began the study of Science and Health and went to a loving practitioner for help. At that time I was suffering much pain, and was compelled to have my neck and shoulders in a plaster cast after undergoing two operations. From childhood I was troubled with a weak heart, and when thirteen years old was taken out of school on that account. Instead of growing better, I became worse and was continually suffering from rheumatism and stomach disorder. The doctors did all they could for me, but when I was nineteen years of age they said it was necessary to perform a slight operation. This was followed by a serious one. Had not Christian Science come to me then, I am sure I would never have lived through the third operation which was to follow if I had stayed under medical treatment.

While studying Christian Science and having treatments I was healed, although the doctors said it would be impossible to cure me without an operation, and they stated that if I did not have one, I might die at any moment. All pain left with the first treatment, and at the end of the week the plaster cast was not needed. Strength came right away, but it was a year before the healing was complete, although all the other ailments left before then and my heart had grown strong. For two years and a half I have enjoyed health and strength, something never before experienced by me. I would also like to mention that a decayed tooth has been restored to soundness.

I can best express my gratitude by endeavoring to learn and put into practice more of this beautiful truth.

(Miss) BEATRICE NAOMI MONKS, Victoria, B. C., Canada.

The quotation, "Freely ye have received, freely give," comes to me often in reference to the testimonies given at the Wednesday evening meetings and those published in our periodicals. Every student of Christian Science has received freely of the blessings which God has provided for His children, and it surely behooves us to give thanks through the channels so lovingly and wisely provided by our beloved Leader, Mrs. Eddy. Since I became a student of Christian Science, God has been our only physician and He has never failed to meet our every need. I took up the study about six years ago, because I found Christian Scientists to be such happy, wholesome people. I have had physical healings all along the way in my journey from sense to Soul, but the healing for which I now desire to express my grateful appreciation is the overcoming of the fear of lack.

Before I knew anything of this practical religion, we left our home in the East and went to the far West on a business proposition which did not turn out as we expected. This was a great trial to me because I had always planned for our material needs months in advance, and owing to uncertain business conditions this was no longer possible. During this trying time my husband and I commenced the study of Christian Science. It seemed as if every material prop was knocked from under us, but the trials turned me from a material sense of supply to the spiritual source of all true blessedness. During the months of seeming lack we adhered faithfully to our study of the Bible and Mrs. Eddy's works, together with the literature sent out by our Publishing Society, and Love met each need as it presented itself, sometimes in most unexpected ways. The article entitled "Angels," beginning on page 306 of "Miscellaneous Writings," was a great help to me while solving this problem. It is with the deepest sense of gratitude that I now say I have learned to follow our Leader's counsel as found in the article mentioned, "Never ask for to-morrow: it is enough that divine Love is an ever-present help; and if you wait, never doubting, you will have all you need every moment." My blessings are increasing each day as I work in God's vineyard.

Words cannot express my grateful appreciation for membership in The Mother Church and a branch church, also for class instruction.

Christian Science is the most wonderful inspiration that has ever come into my life. I did not turn to this truth for physical healing alone, but more for peace of mind and happiness. My life seemed to be void of something; I could not tell exactly what, until I took up the study of Christian Science, when I soon found that it was the correct understanding of God and God's man, and man's relation to God. This was partially my trouble, as well as fear which had held me in bondage for many years. The illumination which the textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," threw upon the Scriptures was such a beautiful revelation to me that mere words fail to express my deeply felt gratitude.

After being a student of Christian Science for several years, I had occasion to prove its healing power. I had quite a difficult problem to work out, and it manifested itself in a severe sickness. I tried to treat myself, but discouragement took hold of me, as one thing after another came up to dishearten me. Finally, after trying several practitioners, I was about to give up, for I did not want to live any longer. Two doctors said there was no hope for me. A physician in Philadelphia stated that I had Bright's disease in its worst form and could not live more than three months. It was also said that there was not an organ in my body which was not diseased. One day a friend called to see me when I was most distressed, and pleaded with me not to give up, saying that Christian Science had helped me before and would again. I therefore called another practitioner, with the result that I was healed of this complication of diseases. Today I am a living witness to the power of Truth. I am a well woman, working every day.

I have also been healed of sleeplessness and fear, and Christian Science has been a help to me in a business way. I cannot help repeating those beautiful words of our Wayshower: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." I am finding that kingdom as I love my neighbor as myself. I am most thankful to God, and grateful to His dearly loved messenger, Mrs. Eddy, for all the good that has come to me through Christian Science.—(Miss) MYRTLE IRENE BENNETT, Harrisburg, Pa.

In September, 1915, I persuaded my husband to get me a copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I had been a church member for twenty-five years, and the last five years the Bible seemed more and more uninteresting. Beginning to feel alarmed about my spiritual condition, I decided to study Science and Health on account of that part of the title, "Key to the Scriptures." After reading the book partly through,—which I did very thoroughly, not finishing it until February,—I found that my religious views were greatly changed. I also discovered that I had been healed of a growth as large as a walnut in front of my ear, supposed to be caused by a diseased tooth. During these five months I did hardly anything but go to the dentist for treatment after this tooth had been extracted and a bridge prepared. As I had heart trouble, only a little work could be done at a time. When the dentist noticed that the lump was disappearing, he remarked that he could not understand it, as he had expected to have to treat it for two years (which treatments were very painful) and then if it had not gone down, he would have had to operate.

The first week in January the bridge work was done, but ten days after the work was finished, such intense pain was experienced that I was nearly out of my head. Finally my husband telephoned to the dentist saying that something would have to be done, but his verdict was so appalling that I asked my husband if I could have Christian Science treatment. He immediately called up a practitioner and treatment was given at once, with the result that I was immediately relieved. The following night the pain returned slightly while I was eating dinner. The soreness lasted for several months, then it was gone and has never returned. My husband and daughter took up the study of Christian Science after seeing this wonderful demonstration.

I have also been cured of an organic trouble supposed to be incurable, and of heart disease said to be inherited, having only one treatment for each. My daughter went through the entire freshman year of high school without being absent and with very high marks in her studies. We were very thankful for this, as her years in the grammar school had been a succession of illnesses, with the consequent falling behind in her classes. She personally has demonstrated over the effects of poisoning two summers in succession. The second time it was manifested on both arms to her shoulders, and in twenty-four hours she came to me entirely free, having worked out her problem alone while we were on a short motor trip.

As all students admit, the healing is nothing compared to the joy of studying the Bible understandingly and loving it more every day, but every demonstration worked out by ourselves without a practitioner shows we are growing in understanding and helps us to climb higher. I am so thankful to Mrs. Eddy for giving us this "Key to the Scriptures" and for our inspiring literature.

(Mrs.) GRACE K. SHANNON, Webster Groves, Mo.

I gratefully acknowledge the complete healing of my wife, and also wish to testify to the increased harmony and good that has come into our home since we took up the study of Christian Science. I am particularly glad that I can bring all my business problems to the great fountain of Truth with the absolute assurance that they will always be solved in the way they should be.—WILLIAM R. SHANNON.

Many years ago Christian Science was brought to my attention, but I turned away from it until Love forced me to accept what was best for my spiritual growth. The understanding of Truth at that time gave me a new outlook on life, and through a practitioner's explanation of the teachings of Christian Science, I began to want to live and work out life's problems scientifically. On one occasion I walked off the top landing of the stairs in our home, but was not injured. My eldest daughter had acid spilled over her arm while experimenting in the high school laboratory. It was powerful enough to leave the sleeve of her waist in tatters, but the pain was overcome in a few minutes, although the burn, extending to her hand, was noticeable for a day or two. Another daughter had a finger crushed, but no surgeon was called and no material remedy was applied, and the healing was quickly brought about through the power of divine Love.

These are but three instances of the efficacious power of Christian Science manifested in our home about the year 1909, when we began reading Christian Science literature methodically and attending the services. Since then we have been wonderfully led; two of us have had class instruction and become members of The Mother Church. Throat trouble, coughs, chicken pox, backache, neuralgia, headache, and many other ills have been overcome from time to time through the understanding and application of Christian Science, and we are more and more grateful for the blessings we enjoy through a knowledge of the ever operative divine Principle which Mrs. Eddy sacrificed and labored for, and studied to present to the world in her writings and demonstrations.—(Mrs.) STELLA J. HAMLIN, Oberlin, Ohio.

For over ten years I suffered from nervousness, said to have been brought on by an operation on my throat, together with liver, stomach, and heart trouble. I took one medicine and then another, sought health resorts and the best medical attention available, but with little or no help. Each day my condition grew worse. At last I was invited to give Christian Science a trial, and in less than two weeks was completely healed. Chronic tonsillitis which kept me in bed a week or ten days each month with high fever, was also overcome. This ailment had forced me to give up a good position and seek easier work, and I had been advised not to do office work again as my constitution would not stand it, and it was necessary for me to seek a high and dry climate. I had been rejected by various insurance companies, but a year ago I made application for insurance and was pronounced in perfect condition by the examining physician.

Some months ago, while on the way home from work, I was mistaken for some one else and beaten by a crowd of hoodlums, who finally struck me in the forehead with an instrument which cut through a thick Panama hat and inflicted a severe wound. Remembering the quick and beautiful healing received within two weeks after turning to Christian Science, and having tried ever since to learn more about this great teaching, I declared the truth. In a weak and to mortal sense dangerous condition I dragged myself to the nearest telephone and asked for help. In less than five minutes the flow of blood had stopped. An ambulance had, however, been called by the druggist from whose store I telephoned, and a demand was made that I go to the hospital. Against my will I was taken there and the wound was sewed up, several stitches being taken. I was invited to remain in the hospital a week or so, but my wife, who had been informed of my condition, arrived at the hospital and insisted that I should return home, so consent was granted. The following morning I visited a practitioner, and in two days was back at work. An interne at the hospital told me I would be disfigured for life, but without very close examination no one could tell a scar remained on my forehead. Not one moment of suffering was experienced and there were no bad after effects. My work requires a person free from nervousness, but I work day in and day out without the slightest inconvenience.

I offer this testimony out of thankfulness to God for the good I have received from Mrs. Eddy's teachings.

It is now seventeen years since I first began the study of Christian Science. At that time I was in deep sorrow and in very poor health. After reading and studying Science and Health for about six months, with a few treatments from a practitioner, my grief and suffering vanished, and I became a new woman. I used to suffer frequently from what the physicians called gallstone colic, but in the past seventeen years I have had only one attack and that was entirely overcome by reading Science and Health. Another ailment of which I was healed was neuralgia of the face and eye. I am very grateful for this healing as well as for that of my little son who suffered from a double rupture. From the first few treatments he showed much improvement, and in ten days was perfectly healed.

I feel sure that Christian Science is the truth which will deliver all mankind from sin and disease, and am very grateful to have learned through this Science the nature of God and man's relation to Him. I am thankful that Mrs. Eddy was brave and good enough to give out the truth so that all may understand what Jesus meant when he said, "If ye continue in my word, . . . ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

(Mrs.) LILLY J. STEWART, Lincoln, Neb.

I gladly bear witness to the affirmations made by my daughter in her testimony. The healing of the rupture was permanent, also her own healing of gallstones. I myself have been greatly benefited in many ways by this healing truth. I was healed of pleurisy, acute lung trouble, and many other ills that flesh is heir to, all through the understanding and application of Christian Science, the blessed truth that makes free. I feel thankful to God for this understanding, and grateful to Mrs. Eddy for having shown us the way to eternal life.—(Mrs.) MARIA HARRISON.

In the past fourteen years I have received many blessings through the study of Science and Health, and help from Christian Science practitioners. The first treatment I ever had healed a lame arm from which I had suffered for several days. Later, one week's treatment healed me of heart and lung trouble of years' standing, the pain being so severe at times that nothing but hypodermic injections relieved me even temporarily. In our family, insanity has been overcome, as well as stomach disorder and numerous other ills. Through the study of Science and Health I have been led to behold my rightful heritage as God's child, free, not in bondage to sin, sickness, and fear.

Words cannot express my gratitude for this great truth which God has sent to us through Mrs. Eddy. This testimony is given with the hope that it may help some one in need to believe that Christian Science does heal and bring happiness to all who trust God, good. My desire is to become more obedient to the divine law each day. I am more than grateful for the help that comes to me through the Sentinel.

I send this testimony to express my gratitude for the true explanation of Christianity given in "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by our great Leader, Mrs. Eddy. In 1913 I underwent an operation on my stomach. According to doctors and an X-ray examination, I was suffering from gastric ulcers. The operation did not seem to help me, for I suffered just as much and was many times worse after I left the hospital. A friend asked me to try Christian Science, and I took treatments of a practitioner. I was reared in the orthodox Jewish religion. Now I am proud to say that the teaching of Christ Jesus, with its explanation by the Christian Science textbook, relieved me of the belief of sickness and the fear of death, cured me of smoking and drinking, and in fact made a better man of me. It showed me the light of Life, the true God. I am very grateful for the Christian Science literature.

From the Press

[Helen Bosanquet in The Hibbert Journal]

We live in a world of things and actions; but we live also, all of us, in a world of ideas—ideas of what actions are right and what are wrong, of what things are good to have and what best, of our relations to other people and theirs to us. And it is this world which cries out for reconstruction. Whatever we may think the proximate causes of the war to be, we must find them ultimately in the fact that men have believed their good to lie in directions which lead to conflict rather than to harmony; and the problem which most urgently demands solution is the construction of a system of ideas which will not lead to conflict, but will naturally and inevitably involve cooperation. It is work which must be done primarily by our teachers in religion, in ethics, in economics, and by them passed on to our teachers of the young to become part of our educational system. We must, in short, devise an education which will lead men to seek their treasure in things which gain by being shared, to find their joy in making and giving rather than in taking or destroying.

[Rev. W. A. Cunningham Craig, M.A., in The Christian Commonwealth]

In this time we must exercise to the full the freedom wherewith Christ has made us free. And it may be, it must be, that Christianity still holds the solution of all the world's complicated problems to-day. There are certainly signs that it is so. Men are eagerly moving toward a larger and fuller life. Certainly for us there can be no choice; we must claim our freedom; we must make ventures up to the very limit of our faith, and if we do so we may be sure of this: that in that way we are true to the spirit of our Master, that through us Christ will be revealed to the world in new power and in new glory; that as times of emergency have always been in the past times of advance, so the time of the greatest emergency in man's history will bring with it the opportunity of the greatest progress.

[The Christian Work]

The mind of Jesus was free from bias, prejudice, and bondage to tradition or custom. His was an open mind. He saw truth intuitively and in its entirety. He was the embodiment of truth, both human and divine. Jesus saw truth intuitively, in its wholeness and in all its relations. He spoke with authority because he gave utterance to essentials and fundamentals, adapted to all races, ages, and conditions. He relied upon truth to awaken, transform, and perfect the race.

Special Announcements

Vest Pocket Edition of the Textbook

Announcement is made of the publication of a new, Vest Pocket Edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy. This volume, 3 1-16 x 4 5-16 inches in size, has been provided to meet the demand for an edition of the Christian Science textbook which can be conveniently carried in the small pocket of a soldier's or sailor's uniform, occupy the minimum space, and be of the least possible weight.

The price of the new edition is $3.00 for a single copy. When included in lots of twelve or more copies of Science and Health in any or all of the different bindings, the price is $2.75 each.

Orders for this edition for general sale are now being filled promptly.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Vest Pocket Edition of the Quarterly

Commencing with the July number, and continuing thereafter, a special vest pocket edition of The Christian Science Quarterly will be issued, conforming in size to the vest pocket edition of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy.

The price will be the same as for the regular edition of the Quarterly. Reading rooms may secure any desired quantity of either or both sizes.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Vest Pocket Folder

"What Our Leader Says," by Mary Baker Eddy, from "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany," has been reprinted on a card folder, vest pocket size, and is now on sale at five cents a copy.

New Pamphlet

"Christian Science: Applied Righteousness," a lecture by Frank Bell, has been published in pamphlet form, and is now on sale at five cents a copy.

Bible Catalogue

Bible Catalogue No. 24 is now ready for delivery. Advance copies have been mailed to all churches and societies advertised in The Christian Science Journal. Additional copies will be supplied on request.

Attention is called to the changed prices of some of the Bibles, including 01440x and 01483x, notice of which appears on the inside of the front cover of this periodical.

From the Clerk of The Mother Church

CHURCH TENETS.—The tenets of The First Church of Christ, Scientist,—The Mother Church,—printed on folded sheet for use of the branch Churches of Christ, Scientist, with space for printing their authorized forms of application for membership or extracts from their by-laws, can be had at seventy-five cents a hundred. Orders will not be taken for less than one hundred and postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Correspondence relative to the tenets or to membership with The Mother Church should be sent to CHARLES E. JARVIS, Clerk, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

From the Church Treasurer

PER CAPITA TAX.—The annual per capita tax for which the Manual provides is due from members of The Mother Church June 1, but may be paid at any time during the year. The per capita tax of those who unite with the church in November is reckoned from the preceding June, for that is the beginning of the church year. If a remittance for church dues exceeds the amount required to balance one's account, the surplus will be credited for the current year, unless otherwise directed by the sender.

Please remit by postal or express money order, bank draft, or check. Do not send paper money through the mail unless registered.

Please advise promptly of any change in name or address.

Per capita taxes and contributions should be sent to WILLIAM R. RATHVON, Treasurer, 236 Huntington Avenue, Back Bay, Boston, Massachusetts.

Opportunity and Demonstration

"The Christian Science Publishing Society,
Boston, Mass.

"Dear Friends:—

"The article 'Who can afford it' appearing on the inside of the back cover of this month's JOURNAL reminds me of this:

"Several years ago I was laboring under a very keen sense of limitation, also a sense of having to 'earn my living' and 'support' my infant son,—all of this while working out of a depressing sense of separation and a belief in death. The work I was doing was paying very little, but I had the prospect—so I outlined—of a better position, after obtaining which I intended to subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR.

"The position did not come to me. A bitter sense of disappointment and discouragement drove me to investigate scientifically just what position is—just exactly what money is—just exactly what gratitude that is worth the name is.

"With shabby clothes and almost shoeless feet, but with a knowledge born of the understanding of money (our Leader calls it 'love currency,' in The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany, page 14) and true gratitude, I went to our sub-postoffice and sent a money order to Boston for our International Daily Newspaper. Before the first copy of the MONITOR reached me all sense of limitation had dropped away,—and since that step of practical gratitude of sending the money order for our newspaper every need has been met, and I have helped many a brother and sister along the way of seeing that supply is a spiritual fact, which unfolds to us here and now, as we are gratefully obedient.

"Doubtless you receive many hundreds of just such letters,—but I am impelled, to-night, to add this to your incoming mail. Please let me express my gratitude for our wonderful newspaper which is blessing the whole world,—and redeeming countless hundreds. I am so grateful for the work being done at the Publishing House. I am so grateful to be privileged to be a part of the uplifting and upbuilding Christian Science cause,—and I want to say, 'Thank you!' "

Working Together with God

JOHN B. WILLIS

CHRIST JESUS was transcendently unique in the assertion of an exalted individualism,—his sinlessness, his perfect exemplariness, his authority, his power, and his right to the unquestioning obedience and devotion of men. Yet he no less emphatically affirmed that he was in subjection, wholly dependent on his Father and obedient to Him. He declared that of himself he could do nothing. His every healing word and work was to be attributed to Him of whom he said, "There is none good but one, that is, God." Thus, in a sense, his self-elimination was quite as marked as his self-assertion, and this is made perfectly intelligible in Christian Science through the apprehension of the nature and plane of the Messianic life and ministry, the discrimination it establishes between the selfhood of sense and the selfhood of Spirit.

Writing to Timothy, St. Paul declared that "God was manifest in the flesh." Concerning the importance of an understanding of this manifestation St. John says, "Hereby know ye the Spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God." The purpose of the appearing of the Messiah is affirmed by St. Paul to be that he might reconcile us unto God. Writing to the Romans he says that "what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us." Not his embodiment in the flesh, but the embodiment of righteousness, of Truth and Love in him, made him the Savior of all mankind.

Further, it is of the highest interest to note that in his letter to the Galatians the great apostle identifies his own ministry with that of Christ Jesus in these remarkable words: "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God." Paul does not say that he honored Christ, or had become his advocate and representative; he said vastly more, namely, that the life, the vitality, and power of Christ was his. "Christ liveth in me," were his words, and Christ could not live anywhere without manifesting the inherent nature of Truth, its healing and saving power, its Messianic effectiveness.

Paul therefore speaks for the continuity of that disclosure and demonstration of the divine law and order which gave distinctive character to the life history of Jesus of Nazareth. The recognition of this fact begets a new and quickening sense of the spiritually dynamic nature of the ministry to which we are called, an apprehension which presents a very great contrast, surely, to the generally prevailing thought that Truth's Messianic activity began and ended with the life and labors of the son of Mary. Through his teaching, his rebuke of materiality, and his spiritual demonstrations, the Master focused the universal activity of Truth upon the concrete human need of his day, but this did not limit that activity. In the scientific completeness of his spiritual consciousness he was indeed "the only begotten Son of God;" but he made it clear that the power of divine Truth which he exercised was to be available for all time and to all men. He taught that his every true follower was to participate in the fulfillment, the consummation, of Truth's redemptive work.

Nothing is more assertively maintained in the teaching of Christian Science than that in the absolute sense Truth is not and cannot be conscious of error; that Spirit knows no materiality. On page 14 of Science and Health Mrs. Eddy writes, "Entirely separate from the belief and dream of material living, is the Life divine, revealing spiritual understanding and the consciousness of man's dominion over the whole earth;" and she indicates the significance which the apprehension of this fact lends to our duty and privilege when she straightway adds, "This understanding casts out error and heals the sick, and with it you can speak 'as one having authority.'"

The only relation that can be posited between Truth and error is that which is often spoken of as existing between light and darkness, between a positive and a negative, between being and nonbeing. This is not a relation, however, in the true sense of the word, since opposites are mutually exclusive and hence cannot enter into relations. We must conclude, therefore, that the saving compassion which is attributed to God throughout the Scriptures can be expressed upon the plane of our present existence in changing that human consciousness which has a sense of both truth and error, good and evil, the right and the wrong, until a man makes "acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." This gives interpretation to St. Paul's self-estimate when he wrote to the Corinthians, "Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God."

To work "together with God," as understood in Christian Science, is to have the same Mind, the same wisdom and power, in the measure of individual apprehension, which was in Christ Jesus; hence it is to be able to do his works in his way, and it is this that gives comprehensive pertinence to the hope expressed by Mrs. Eddy when she wrote to a church (Miscellany, p. 165): "May each member of this church rise above the oft-repeated inquiry, What am I? to the scientific response: I am able to impart truth, health, and happiness, and this is my rock of salvation and my reason for existing."

Denial of the possibility of this effective at-one-ment with Christ Jesus in that apprehension of spiritual truth for which he prayed, as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John, is one of the gravest defections of the Christian church as a whole to-day. Men have professedly honored the Master while practically refusing to recognize the call to be coworkers with God as was he, and while denying that the spiritual method of healing humanity's hurt, which he inaugurated and commanded his disciples to pursue, is still binding upon his followers. No one, surely, can fail to see the relation of this refusal to accept all the prerogatives and responsibilities attaching to Christian discipleship, to that "spiritual deadness and inefficiency" which is so universally remarked upon to-day.

In Christian Science God is named the Principle of all being, and the order of Principle's activity or unfoldment constitutes divine law. Now to work according to law, requires the gain of an understanding of law, and the putting forth of effort in harmony therewith. It is always and necessarily a scientific process. This is well illustrated in the field of so-called natural science. He who would be a coworker with light,—the astronomer, the photographer, or the chemist, must first of all acquaint himself with its nature and order of manifestation, and supply the conditions under which its wonder-working is done. The agent is light itself; the coworker with it is he who intelligently utilizes it, who is obedient to its law.

Thus the law of refraction produces the spectrum by which the chemical elements and the movements of planets and stars are determined, but it is the astronomer who must supply the lens and other accessories pertaining to this marvelous determination of immeasurably far-away facts. Adjusting himself to the requirements of their law, he finds that the tiny rays of light which, though traveling at incredible speed, consume perhaps half a century in measuring the celestial depths they must traverse, bring a specific and unquestionable report of the chemical constituents of their source and the direction of its drift upon the horizons of space. Law thus becomes the servant of the studious and reveals the secrets of the infinite. As in the laboratory so in the sick room this association of an understanding of law, and intelligent procedure in articulating it with the problem to be solved is demanded, and this fact bases, defines, and constitutes the Science of Christianity.

It is thus seen that alert and spiritually aspiring human consciousness supplies the arena for the redemptive activity of Christ, Truth. Moreover, it is the only arena in which the knowledge of God and the coming of His kingdom is consummated, the only place in which the world's salvation can be effected, and it is this fact that gives such supreme significance and such dignity to truly Christian living. What enlightenment of thought, what an impulsion to self-forgetting effort for the redemption of humanity attends the perception of our relation to the eternal good! How inspiring to realize that one is privileged to know and declare the Word of God, the healing truth that is "quick, and powerful," in its effect upon every moral issue, every world problem, every condition of human need; that it is his to "be instant in season, out of season," and to work with God for humanity. In such a moment and upon such a tide one easily mounts up with wings as an eagle; he runs and is not weary. He feels the urgency of a great command, the uplift of a great vision, the joy of a great privilege; he has veritably entered into the triumph of Truth. He now understands that the words spoken by Jesus to his disciple, "Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip?" referred to the ever present Christ.

The fundamental requisites of the great Teacher are the requisites of Christian Science, namely, that we know the truth, that we apprehend the law of God, and cowork with this law in the destruction of error, thus entering into the joy of our Lord. That the divine efficacy accompanies God's every manifestation is expressed in the declaration that "Love is reflected in love" (Science and Health, p. 17). This simple saying compasses the whole philosophy of human redemption, and reveals the glorious possibilities attending the faithful living of those whom God hath made "meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light," and hath delivered "from the power of darkness," and translated "into the kingdom of his dear Son."

God and His Idea

EMMA THORNTON ALEXANDER

THE Master said, "Suffer little children, and forbid them not, to come unto me: for of such is the kingdom of heaven," thus plainly showing the lack of wisdom in forgetting all the tender ties of our childhood. In innumerable instances the Master's own words show that he thought of himself, in his relationship to God, as of a child; indeed, he begins the best known of all his wonderful sayings, the Lord's Prayer, with the words, "Our Father." He thus teaches us that God is Father, and implies that we are His children and that we may turn to our Father in heaven with perfect confidence and trust.

In strict accord with Jesus' teachings, our revered Leader, Mrs. Eddy, writes on page 256 of her textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," "Love, the divine Principle, is the Father and Mother of the universe, including man." She also says, on page 200 of the same book, "Man is the idea of God, not formed materially but spiritually, and not subject to decay and dust." For those of us who were not brought up to think in the terms of metaphysics, the word idea may denote that which is merely abstract, and which has no relation to the concrete word child, although Mrs. Eddy obviously considers them as synonyms. If, however, we consider the use of these two words from the standpoint of our own personal experiences in relation to our earthly parents, we can catch a clear glimpse of our Leader's meaning.

Can any one of us who has ever had faith in the love of a father or the affection of a mother hesitate to believe that we were constantly held in the thought of both? Never once, from the moment when the sun's earliest rays shone in at the window in the morning until the setting sun's light had departed, did we fail to be held in the loving thought of our parents. In our early experience food, clothing, education, religious training, social opportunities, were all subjects of solicitude and wise forethought. Nor was this all. Even the minutest particulars of our lives must be carefully considered. Need we then wonder that the Master said, "The very hairs of your head are all numbered"? If we received such care from our earthly parents, how much more does our heavenly Father bestow upon us!

Our Leader says, "It is generally conceded that God is Father, eternal, self-created, infinite" (Science and Health, p. 267). If this is true, it must be that man is forever an idea in the Father Mind. The very best earthly parents are limited in their views; but our heavenly Father, omnipotent Mind, has boundless provision for all our needs. Let us, then, consider what it means to be an idea of this boundless, infinite Mind, who is ever present Love. No earthly parent, however willing, can be always available or can always understand the thought of his child. The Father, who is God, is always available, always at hand to comfort and encourage His children. No slightest thought, no smallest wish tending upward, passes unnoticed. It is always God's purpose to give to His child comfort, happiness, peace, and perfect fruition.

Did we but understand God's care more perfectly, and keep in mind more clearly our relationship to Him, all our human problems, great and small, would be solved. Did you ever know your father to be so engrossed in the world's great interests that he could not stop to hear your childish woes and give heed to your small affairs? Were you not, after all, his most important care? The small child cuddles down comfortably in his father's arms, unaware of any danger, knowing no care, and fearing no frowns, unless he has done wrong. So, when all the world seems amiss, when we seem to feel a lack of sympathy and love, we can rest serenely in God's arms, secure in His love, and in the knowledge that we are indeed dear to him.

And then, when we think of our boys in France, and of those other boys belonging to foreign mothers, can we not think of them as the ideas of God, from whom they are never for an instant severed? No matter how deafening the roar of the cannon, or how fearful the devouring flames, notwithstanding all the dreadful devices of modern warfare, the Father Mind is present to shield and protect His ideas,—present in every battle, guiding, guarding, loving, protecting. As Rebecca sings in Sir Walter Scott's famous novel:—

> But present still, though now unseen;
> When brightly shines the prosperous day,
> Be thoughts of Thee a cloudy screen
> To temper the deceitful ray.

Daylight Saving

ENOS ELI SUTHERLAND

THE metaphysical effect of Truth on human consciousness is apparent in the movement for daylight saving as in other reforms. In that illuminating chapter of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" entitled Glossary, Mrs. Eddy gives the scientific definition of evening in these words: "Mistiness of mortal thought; weariness of mortal mind; obscured views; peace and rest" (p. 586); and of morning: "Light; symbol of Truth; revelation and progress" (p. 591). In "The First Church of Christ, Scientist, and Miscellany" (p. 114), she tells of a most interesting and significant observation made by her in connection with the writing of Science and Health. She says: "What I wrote had a strange coincidence or relationship with the light of revelation and solar light. I could not write these notes after sunset. All thoughts in the line of Scriptural interpretation would leave me until the rising of the sun. Then the influx of divine interpretation would pour in upon my spiritual sense as gloriously as the sunlight on the material senses."

A devoted study of the lives of the leading characters in the Bible, whose experiences and demonstrations are an inspiration for all Christians, leads one to the conclusion that they were daylight savers in the deepest sense. Many times the statement recurs that they rose early in the morning and sought the Lord. It was early in the morning that the "bread from heaven" had to be gathered daily by the children of Israel during forty years in the wilderness, for "when the sun waxed hot, it melted." These people were later taught to make a sacrifice and to bring an offering when help was desired of the Lord. The tenor of the Word seems to indicate that the offering was to be of their most valuable possessions, either from the vineyards, the first-born of their flocks, or "a lamb without blemish and without spot."

The most precious time in the day is the early morning hours, when nature appears in glorious freshness and when the human sense is free from fatigue. This is an hour when thought should be turned to God for spiritual food and spiritual drink and spiritual joy. The mandatory promise of Christ Jesus the Way-shower is, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." To rise an hour earlier each day for the purpose of having a regular time for the study of the Lesson-Sermon before beginning the work of the day, may mean a sacrifice of sensuous ease, but in Christian Science we learn that spiritual activity never wearies one. On the contrary it brings renewed strength, as the Bible tells us. The word sacrifice takes on new significance in Christian Science. It is no less than the exchange of the carnal or mortal mind with its material beliefs of time, objects, and space, for the understanding of immortal, divine Mind and its incorporeal spiritual ideas, which were never born and never die. The increasing joy in life which results from this exchange is measured by the difference between despairing uncertainty and the courageous confidence which accompanies the unfolding scientific or absolute knowledge of God and of the universe including man in His image and likeness.

Overaction of the human mind or concentration of will power is not Christian Science, but evil, which falls back upon itself, prevents spiritual interpretation, paralyzes right mental action, and puts mortals to sleep. It is consecration, not concentration, which enables one to dwell in the "secret place of the most High." No one can awake from his slumbers, from the dream of life in matter, by concentration of the human mind. This must come through spiritual illumination. It is unwise and unfair to one's self to sleep late and then start the day with a belief of hurry, postponing the taking of one's spiritual food until fagged by a day's toil. One needs God's law during the day, and should therefore not wait until the day has passed to devote a quiet time to seeking through Christian Science the understanding of God's law. Even though the beginner may seem sometimes not to think on or retain what he reads, because of the multitude of material beliefs coming between him and the spiritual meaning of the printed page, yet truth does its work, and nothing gives one confidence, assurance, divine energy, and divine guidance so much as the feeling that he has started the day right with God, that he has placed himself in the position to receive. This attitude of mind lets in the light and permits Christian Science to gradually unfold in consciousness, changing the basis of thought from matter to Spirit, until one has learned to think spiritually, or, as the Bible commands, to "pray without ceasing," thus becoming, in the light of day as understood in Christian Science, a successful and happy man because he is a daylight saver in the true and scientific sense of the word.

A Lesson from Nature

ARTHUR D. BARKER

ALWAYS a lover of flowers, shrubs, and trees, especially in their natural or wild state, the writer has long been impressed by the earliest spring flower that appears in certain sandy or rocky localities. This little flower, known as the buttercup, with a peculiarly bright face as wide open as a tiny saucer rather than a cup, comes with the first warm days of late winter, a perfect specimen being found one February in the small area of a hoof-print encircled by ice and snow. With the unfoldment which attended the earnest and prayerful study of Christian Science, through the Bible and other authorized literature, it was noted that my first sight of the buttercups was shortly after I had been healed in Science; in other words, just as the snow and ice of chronic invalidism, until then regarded as hopeless, were disappearing from my experience under the warm sunlight of Truth.

Digitized by Google

It is now ten years since one never to be forgotten evening when I watched the old year out and the new year in by reading a borrowed copy of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy. I had never before observed a New Year's eve, and certainly did not arrange that observance of it, but perhaps God did. At any rate, I read Science and Health for about five hours that evening, and seriously for the first time, although I had been unable on account of my eyes to read other things more than a few minutes at a time for several months. Also, during that evening, I took final leave of a supposedly hereditary desire for as well as a fear of tobacco.

I am very thankful for these two healings that accompanied the reading of Science and Health with a desire to know its real value. A few more weeks slipped by, and the buttercups came again in all their glory. This was certainly a time of wrestling with a material sense of things, and one fine day as I looked into their bright faces I suddenly knew why I loved them. In the first place, they open wide their hearts to the light. Then, even under close inspection, the face shows nearly the same brilliance in clouds as in sunshine. With these thoughts there came a great company of angels, "spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect" (Science and Health, p. 581), pointing out the godlike qualities or characteristics which the flowers typify. As the sun symbolizes Soul, so they show forth the reflection of Soul, whether the sun is visible to mortal eyes or not. There is a sturdy, uncompromising individual reflection, with calm, unshakable humility; each stands in its place—just being a buttercup, nothing more and nothing less. Do they not thus point away from the "works of the flesh" toward the "fruit of the Spirit"? These things when understood in their application to one's own thought and life are certainly an inspiration to behold.

Then I wondered if I was right in thinking that a plain little flower could really mean so much; and in answer to this questioning I was led to page 240 of Science and Health, where Mrs. Eddy says, "The floral apostles are hieroglyphs of Deity." The ground on which such comprehension stands is surely holy ground. According to the dictionary, one of the meanings of hieroglyph is "any character the meaning of which is not obvious." For ten years the meaning of this flower had not been obvious to me. With such a revelation the shoes of material sense are removed, and we are humbly grateful to read something of what God has written. No wonder I had loved the buttercups!

The Friendly Hills

EDITH DOYLE

TO those who love the mountains they are like old friends. We return to them, perhaps after many years, and find they are just the same. There is no sense of rebuke or neglect for our absence; they are waiting to welcome us, and to give the same comfort and inspiration, strength and peace. The same—and yet different. It may be that in those years we have had many new experiences that have changed our outlook and made us feel that life has a new purpose. We find in the mountains a new charm. We have grown to find their deeper meaning, and they have for us new lessons, higher thoughts. In Science and Health (p. 511) Mrs. Eddy writes, "Spiritually interpreted, rocks and mountains stand for solid and grand ideas." Like true friends, the mountains never disappoint, but are always interesting, always leading us away from all that is small and base. They make us look above and beyond the world's strife and din, and though they stand firmly planted on the earth, their heads are above the clouds in the calm, clear heights. They are a type of all that is great and noble, and so they are worthy friends. As we climb to greater heights, even though it be over rough, stony paths, we gain wider views, and see things in their true proportions. When some high, lonely valley is reached, the hills seem marching with us. One is raised above the petty details of everyday life and one's own small selfhood and surroundings. It is then more clearly seen what it means to be a Christian Scientist.

Some may find more warmth and ease, more companionship in the valley; to the interested climber the way may seem more lonely, more difficult, as one goes higher. One reaches what seemed to be the summit, only to find a stretch of marshy land before him, the summit yet farther away, and the path perhaps lost; but the Leader of Christian Science has been over the mental path. She knew all the trials of the way. She writes in Science and Health (p. 429): "The final demonstration takes time for its accomplishment. When walking, we are guided by the eye. We look before our feet, and if we are wise, we look beyond a single step in the line of spiritual advancement." So, if we pause and look ahead, we shall see the path distinct again, make our way toward it, and perhaps find some stones and dry places to help us over what seemed a hopeless morass, while all the time the air is becoming more fresh and invigorating, and the view is widening. Range beyond range of mountains appear; there can be no loneliness in this world of high thoughts, and the companionship of the valley seems small and trifling in comparison. What looked to be such big difficulties from below are hardly seen from above. Then a sudden turn may bring us near the summit, and standing there and gazing all around, there is only freedom and dominion—the dominion given to man by God.

It was on a mountain that Moses communed with God, and gained the wisdom to guide his people aright; from a mountain he viewed the promised land, before passing from this earth. Perhaps it was then that he attained the heights of spiritual understanding in the light of Truth and Love. Certainly, after that wonderful vision, there is no further record of his being seen by human eyes, until he appeared with Elias, talking to Jesus on the mount of transfiguration, thereby revealing to the wondering disciples the immortality of spiritual ideas. Jesus often went up on to a mountain to pray. After one such occasion he was so lifted above all materiality that he came to his disciples walking on the sea—the sea which is used by Mrs. Eddy as a type of "elementary, latent error, the source of all error's visible forms" (Science and Health, p. 559). May not the dominion gained by ascending the mountains lead to dominion over the sea, since the mountains are like the sea and its waves solidified? The undulations of the land often have the same form as the undulations of the water; ranges of hills are like the great ocean rollers, and a mountain may have the form of a curving wave ready to break. Perhaps to Jesus, who always saw the spiritual idea instead of the material counterfeit, the sea was no more formidable, no less inspiring than the mountains. Their heights may be gained fearlessly; and as the law of gravitation, or attraction, towards earth and earthly things grows less, the sea will lose its terrors; for the spiritualized thought will know how to keep above it.

Christ Jesus kept steadfastly above all error and materiality. At the beginning of his ministry, the devil took him "up into an exceeding high mountain," and showed him "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them;" but worldly kingdoms had no attraction for the Master. He saw only the supremacy of Spirit, and a universe governed by God; this vision silenced the tempter, and in place thereof were angels to minister unto him. And so Jesus went forth to reveal this spiritual kingdom to men. According to Matthew, it was on a mountain that he appeared for the last time to his disciples. There he gave them his final commands, and then, ascending above all material conditions, disappeared from human sight.

Mountains are always calling men higher, and that is why men turn from the turmoil of towns to the peaceful heights of the hills. Cities are made by men, and though they may be made beautiful, other men may mar them; but men can neither make nor mar the great mountains. There is something about them that points to enduring spiritual qualities, that makes one feel nearer to God. So the appeal of the mountains is not the appeal of anything material, but rather of "solid and grand ideas." No wonder the psalmist sang: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth;" for in those hills he felt the strength, protection, and steadfastness which he knew were only a reflection of the untiring watch, the everlasting care of the infinite Father-Mother God, who is above all.

Salvation

ALMA LUTZ

ONE of the many blessings that Christian Science has brought us is the understanding of the Bible and its application to everyday affairs. This has been made possible through the study of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mrs. Eddy, which reveals the spiritual treasures of the Bible, heretofore imperceptible to material thought.

The story of Moses leading the children of Israel out of Egypt has been of great comfort to many in these troubled times, when to human sense all has seemed chaos, destruction, and night. We find Moses encamped by the Red Sea, and with him an unsteady, undependable people who had long been enslaved. In front of them was the Red Sea, apparently impassable, and on either side were high mountains shutting them in, while behind was the host of Pharaoh, bent upon destruction, well equipped, and according to human testimony superior in every way to the Israelites. Within the camp were the mutterings, complaints, reproaches, and fears of a doubting people; but above all was the angel of the Lord, and the divine presence symbolized by a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, a protection and a guide.

What did Moses do? Did he give up because the odds seemed against him? Did he blindly ignore the evil which seemed to confront him? No. He saw the Red Sea, the mountains, the armies of Pharaoh, heard the mutterings of his people, but he looked through them, beyond them, to "the salvation of the Lord." Because he knew that this salvation was sure, he was able to accomplish what to human sense and material law seemed impossible. The sea was divided, the Israelites passed through on dry land, and "the waters were a wall unto them" on either side, while those who were bent on destruction met the fate that they had planned for others.

Just so to-day, when all mankind seem to be surrounded by hate, fear, destruction, and darkness, we too may, like Moses, not give up or ignore, but look beyond and through to the salvation defined on page 593 of Science and Health as "Life, Truth, and Love understood and demonstrated as supreme over all; sin, sickness, and death destroyed."

["Spiritual Evolution"—The Christian Science Monitor, Boston, U. S. A., Dec. 21, 1917]

To material philosophy evolution has been a ready theory with which to explain many things concerning creation,—and still leave the subject where it was in the beginning. To the practical man, however, if he thinks of evolution at all, the subject is something of a bugbear. It is hard on anyone, for instance, to be made to believe that mankind is only the victim of a remorseless law which, very slowly, but none the less surely, grinds material creation back into its original dust or nothingness.

Most of the students of material evolution seem to get very much interested in what might be called the intermediate steps of the subject. All goes well until reason demands to see what the legitimate outcome of the theory will be; then the situation suddenly reminds one of the ancient belief that the earth was flat, since you have to be very careful lest you go too far, for material evolution having had a suppositional beginning must also have an ending.

The theory can, of course, begin and end in only one of two conclusions, either that matter is as real and self-existent as Spirit, God—in fact is God, Mind, or creator, which is out of the question—or that matter is found to be nothing. For this reason, evidently, few believers in material evolution seem to have the courage to go to the bitter end of their theory, for to do so would mean to give up materiality and seek Spirit as the All-in-all. It is not strange, therefore, that material evolution has much to say of theories, supposed to explain present material conditions, but offering nothing trustworthy either as to the beginning or the ending of these conditions. This, however, is really the important part, for if mankind once understands the beginning and ending of so-called material existence, the remainder of the theory will harm no one.

Believers in material evolution seem to have overlooked the main source which promulgates their theory. Not accepting the account of creation as found in the first chapter of Genesis, because they insist upon a material instead of a spiritual creation, they often reject the entire Bible. Thus the true explanation of material evolution remains unnoticed. Now this is found in the Adam account in the second chapter of Genesis. Nothing better than this has ever been offered as a basis of material evolution. It plainly shows that material evolution began in dust, nothingness, alias material supposititious beliefs; included the contemplation of matter as real; denied God, Spirit, infinite Life, Truth, and Love—thus proving that it never was nor ever could be of God, and so ended as it began, in death or nothingness. Hence it is also apparent that by accepting the Adam account as the true account of creation, scholastic theology and material evolution rest upon the same theory, the same basis, even though they refuse to shake hands and admit their relationship.

Now evolution, as it really is, is a subject of the greatest importance to us. This is evidently what Mrs. Eddy implies when she makes the dignified statement on page 135 of Science and Health that "spiritual evolution alone is worthy of the exercise of divine power." She also says, on page 27 of "Miscellaneous Writings": "Creation, evolution, or manifestation,—being in and of Spirit, Mind, and all that really is,—must be spiritual and mental. This is Science, and is susceptible of proof." What a great difference at once appears between material evolution, so called, and spiritual evolution. Whereas the so-called law of material evolution is nothing but the working out in belief of the destruction inherent in erroneous mortal mind—the stronger belief overcoming the weaker—the law of spiritual "creation, evolution, or manifestation," is infinite Love.

Now when we speak of a demonstrable Principle, for so we must if evolution is based upon Science, spiritual evolution becomes a law that is an integral activity in our lives. It denotes a demonstrable progress, the attaining of spiritual good, spiritual dominion over sin and disease, and a constant pulling down of the false structure of mortal beliefs that the immortal facts of Spirit or divine consciousness may appear. It does not signify the destruction of one mortal belief in order that another still stronger belief may take its place, but it signifies the clearer and clearer apprehension of the ideas of Spirit, God, as reality. Spiritual evolution, from our standpoint means, then, the growth of spiritual understanding, and the constant overcoming of the chaos of mortal material beliefs, of sin, disease, and death, through the apprehension of God, as given to us through Christian Science. This is evidently the reason why Mrs. Eddy says of the Biblical record of creation (Science and Health, p. 504), "Was not this a revelation instead of a creation?"

The scientific demonstration, then, according to Christian Science, of the divine Principle, Love, whereby we find creation to be spiritual, not material, and Life and Truth manifested by God's image and likeness, man, is the true evolution by which we divest thought of all false beliefs, including all that pertains to matter, or sin, disease, and death. While spiritual evolution has nothing to destroy that is real, but everything that is true to reveal, its demand for the sacrifice of material beliefs, or error, is incessant. The price we pay, therefore, for spiritual progress or evolution, is the giving up as real all that pertains to the evidence of the physical senses. This Mrs. Eddy indicates in the following poem appearing on the flyleaf at the beginning of "Miscellaneous Writings," which sums up the entire subject of evolution:—

If worlds were formed by matter,
And mankind from the dust;
Till time shall end more timely,
There's nothing here to trust.

Thenceforth to evolution's
Geology, we say,—
Nothing have we gained therefrom,
And nothing have to pray:

My world has sprung from Spirit,
In everlasting day;
Whereof, I've more to glory,
Wherefor, have much to pay.

[Peter V. Ross in Vacaville (Cal.) Reporter]

A critic quotes Christian Science as declaring that "the less mind we have the better." Now, of course there is some mistake here; Christian Science makes no such statement and entertains no such absurd notion. On the contrary, it makes a constant appeal to higher intelligence and enjoins us to have that mind which was also in Christ Jesus as distinguished from the material or carnal mind which Paul declares is death.

What Christian Science does say is this: "The less mind there is manifested in matter the better" (Science and Health, p. 489). Few people will have any difficulty in accepting this as true. The deplorable effect on an individual of permitting his mind to run in material and sensual channels, catering to the pleasures and pains of the body, is apparent to every one. All people concede the soundness of Paul's counsel to be absent from the body and be present with the Lord.

The same critic takes exception to Mrs. Eddy's declaration, "All sin is insanity" (Miscellany, p. 301). The average person sees nothing illogical in this statement. To indulge in sin is to believe that there is satisfaction and profit in wrongdoing. Is not such belief and such action utter folly or irrationality, and is not irrationality insanity? If there is any proposition on which moralists and religionists agree, it is that righteousness is normal and rational, while sinfulness is abnormal and irrational.

The critic also contends that "the founder of Christian Science is worshiped." Naturally Christian Scientists esteem Mrs. Eddy very highly and try to appreciate what they owe in gratitude for what she has done toward making the world better. It is one of the finest attributes of character to revere and love great pioneers of truth and benefactors of the race. Therefore Mrs. Eddy does not escape profound admiration and appreciation from those acquainted with her life and accomplishments. All this, however, is very far from worship.

Finally, our critic propounds the question, "What is the world coming to when we find out all men are Christian Scientists and gone crazy?" Let him not be alarmed! The world has not yet suffered any disaster through Christian Science, but it has vastly benefited by the better health and morals that Christian Science has brought to those who have resorted to it for help. If anyone should actually be concerned about the growth and spread of Christian Science, he can easily disarm his fears by calling to mind one of its foremost tenets (Science and Health, p. 497): "And we solemnly promise to watch, and pray for that Mind to be in us which was also in Christ Jesus; to do unto others as we would have them do unto us; and to be merciful, just, and pure."

[B. F. Chandler in Bluefield (W. Va.) Telegraph]

The apostle James tells us: "Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss." Now, asking amiss does not necessarily mean that one is asking for something which he ought not to have, but that the method of asking is defective. Probably every reader of this letter has at some time offered a petition for relief from physical or mental anguish which has apparently been unnoticed, and which has tempted him to rebelliously wonder if there is a God. At such times there is very little comfort in being told that the torture of a loved one is "for the best,"—it so ill accords with the teachings that God is Love. On the other hand, prayer, as taught in Christian Science, "availeth much," as hundreds of thousands who have used it and thereby been healed of sin, sickness, misery, and sorrow will testify. Such prayer is defined on page 1 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" as "an absolute faith that all things are possible to God,—a spiritual understanding of Him, an unselfed love."

The clergyman says that Christian Science is an attack on the dogma of the Trinity. In the afternoon following the morning upon which the dogma of the Trinity was promulgated, some one offered an explanation of it; and in the evening some one else explained what the explanation meant. Ever since, some one has either been explaining or denouncing some one else's explanation of what that dogma means. It has been generally conceded, however, that the Trinity is a "divine mystery"—its very mystery proving its divinity—so that the reasonable, simple explanation of the Trinity offered by Mrs. Eddy would naturally be looked upon by scholastic theology as an interference with its vested rights.

Holy Ghost and Comforter have, with Scriptural authority, always been considered synonymous, and it is in that sense that Mrs. Eddy has defined Holy Ghost as "Divine Science" (Science and Health, p. 588). Now, divine Science, or Christian Science, has proved its right to be called the Comforter by what it has done and is doing for thousands of individuals who have turned to it after every other means had failed.

Mrs. Eddy no more invented Christian Science than Christopher Columbus invented America. This continent had been in the western hemisphere since time immemorial. All Columbus did was to discover it. Mrs. Eddy's claim is to have "discovered the Christ Science or divine laws of Life, Truth, and Love" (Science and Health, p. 107), which with a discoverer's right, she named Christian Science. She says, on page 110 of the same book, "In following these leadings of scientific revelation, the Bible was my only textbook;" and on page 262, "Christian Science takes naught from the perfection of God, but it ascribes to Him the entire glory." It is to be hoped that the clergyman may feel more kindly toward Christian Science when he learns that it is not a human system, but the divine laws which Jesus used in performing his mighty works, made available to present day needs.

[George C. Eames in Eastern Argus, Portland, Me.]

"The man about town" has recently referred to Christian Science as a kind of "fatalism" whose adherents "believe in letting a cold have its run without doing anything for it." It may not be apparent to the casual observer just what is being done by Christian Scientists to overcome colds or other diseases, but the disappearance of these troubles in much less time than those under medical treatment should be sufficient evidence that the work has been done.

Submission to disease is never in accord with Christian Science, but the understanding of man's dominion over sickness and all other evil is taught by both the Christian Science textbook and the Bible. On page 420 of "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy we read: "Instruct the sick that they are not helpless victims, for if they will only accept Truth, they can resist disease and ward it off, as positively as they can the temptation to sin;" and on page 368: "When we come to have more faith in the truth of being than we have in error, more faith in Spirit than in matter, more faith in living than in dying, more faith in God than in man, then no material suppositions can prevent us from healing the sick and destroying error." Jesus said, "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The results of Christian Science practice correspond with the application of and fidelity to an understood Principle.

[George R. Lowe in Hamilton (Ontario) Times]

The title of a lecture, "Mind the Cause and Cure of Disease," as reported in the Times, can serve to differentiate mental healing, as the doctor spoke of it, and Christian Science; because Mind, as defined in Christian Science, is God, divine Love, who does not cause disease, nor sin, nor any evil. This is the Mind of Christ Jesus, of which the mind of mortals is the counterfeit; as Paul wrote, "The carnal mind is enmity against God." In "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" (p. 92), Mrs. Eddy has written, "Mind is not an entity within the cranium with the power of sinning now and forever."

The only proof anyone can have of understanding Christian Science is the demonstration of it by healing disease and sin. Whenever anyone thus proves that he understands Christian Science in some degree, he knows that the healing is not done by any trick of mental suggestion or merely by a human emotion, but by the power of the divine Mind, Principle, understood and applied to the case. It is by the law of omnipotent Mind—not by brain or human will—that Christian Science destroys discord of any kind, by the law of harmony. It can produce only good effects, not causing disease, but healing it. "Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter?"

Extracts from Letters

[Received from Italy]

"I wish to express my gratitude for the activity afforded me by the War Relief fund of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, Boston, U.S.A. I represent the Brescia branch of Florence committee of The Mother Church War Relief fund, and by it have been able to reach many families in need, relieving suffering, breaking down prejudice against both Protestantism and Christian Science, and giving me activity I was in great need of.

"Let me again express my gratitude, and that of my husband, for Christian Science, its great humane activity the world over, and especially for the larger activity of its good work here in Italy where even Protestantism is looked upon by the masses as something to be avoided; for they, the people, do not understand.

"I would like to add that my new activity in The Mother Church work, both working with the fund and also as committee on publication, makes me feel nearer the main vine and has done much for me in enlarging my understanding of God and our relation to Him. My daily prayer is to grow more in grace and in the love of God, and, above all, to keep that understanding untainted by human reasoning."

"I am so grateful to you as well as to all those good Americans who are lending a helping hand to supply our needs and relieve the suffering of us poor refugees."

"We refugees of Sandona di Piave, Venezia, having been forced to give up the dear land to the barbarous enemy, and finding ourselves in need, feel it our duty to extend to this honorable committee our hearty thanks, having received money to buy a sewing machine with which to earn our living. We admire the generosity of our good brothers beyond the seas who in this conflict are so closely joined to our poor country in fighting the foe to attain a glorious victory."

Herewith is a letter from the officers of the Alpines, the finest Italian troops. It was written in acknowledgment of the receipt of socks for the men. Money from the Christian Science War Relief fund bought the wool, which was given out to poor women to make up into socks; the socks were sent to the front wherever there seemed need. The women were paid one lira for each pair knitted. The committee on the War Relief fund of The Mother Church help the poor by having them earn their keep wherever possible, that is, by creating a desire to always be producers:—

"We heartily thank you for the most useful and most welcome twenty-five pairs of socks, and mountain hoods (passa montagna), and knee protectors. The good that you kind ladies do is inestimable. When our soldiers feel that they are thought of by those at home, sacrifice becomes nothing to them and danger is faced with strong and calm hearts. Allow me, in the name of my officers, to extend our thanks and best wishes."

Devotional Services Universal

AT the ordinary religious service there is prevalent always some element of curiosity. No matter how familiar the usual devotional service, the reading of prayers, or the singing, there is always the possibility of something unusual in the sermon. Whatever the creed, there are no two exponents exactly alike, and the expounding of the creed is done with the flavor of the individuality of the preacher. The reading of the same sermon in all churches of a denomination would seem to the hearers to have the formality of a proclamation. How is it, then, that in the Christian Science churches the world around, where on any particular Sunday the same sermon is read everywhere, the visitor finds no placid formality, but lively interest and earnest attention during the reading? One would think that if the words of a sermon could be read in print during the week before it is delivered, curiosity would be entirely abated, and no interest would be left inducing people to come and hear.

How is it, then, with no opportunity to satisfy the Athenian desire to hear some new thing, that large congregations assemble to listen intently to the reading of the Christian Science Lesson-Sermon, unless it be that instead of curiosity to hear something new they find satisfaction in hearing something true? The new thing known becomes common and uninteresting, but that which is true can be proved again and again, and so has perennial interest. Christian Scientists read and study during the week the selections from the Bible and the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," which comprise the sermon, yet on Sunday find it so interesting that they listen with engrossed attention to the readers in church who proclaim the familiar words. At these services the auditors make additional gains in their grasp and acceptance of the truth beyond what their own study brought forth, so that they become "throughly furnished unto all good works."

There have been cases where a score or more of denominational churches in a district have been closed because of lack of preachers of the denomination, without whose help devotional services and worship of God could not (it was believed) be continued. The overcoming of such limitations was brought out by Mrs. Eddy's ordination of the books mentioned. In "Miscellaneous Writings" (p. 313) her statement of this ordination appears: "Humbly, and, as I believe, divinely directed, I hereby ordain the Bible, and 'Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures,' to be hereafter the only pastor of The Church of Christ, Scientist, throughout our land and in other lands." In the Church Manual (Art. XIV, Sect. 1) she says of these books, "They will continue to preach for this Church and the world."

Hereby was provision made for the universal devotional service suitable for the individual, the home group, the traveling party, the conference of neighbors, the ship's company, the soldiers' camp, as well as for congregations in public halls and church edifices. In some communities where readers of mature years were not available, a youth from school and a maid from the academy have read the lesson for their elders, and complied with that ideal set forth when Ezra instructed the children of the captivity regarding the law of God. In Nehemiah's record it is said of the readers chosen by Ezra that "they read in the book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading."

Now that young men from Christian Science homes have been called to serve God and country in fighting against those who have made war for gain and calculated profit, whose brutal injustice is actually planned in order to rouse fear in those made to suffer, it is of inestimable importance to know how universally Christian Science services, developing knowledge of divine Love which casts out fear, can be conducted by the men themselves. The problem of any commanding officer is the many denominations and the varying theories of the clerical representatives of these denominations. For the men of an army to hear a medley of opinions preached does not establish unity and power in the army; but overcoming of fear, recovery from sickness, cleansing from sin, the inevitable effect of Christian Science, does increase every man's potency in the direction of the struggle for justice and righteousness. Hence the welcome given to requests from officers and men that they be given opportunity to read the Christian Science service. In many cases this desire has been furthered with kindly consideration on the part of commanders who see therein the solving, in one case at least, of a vexed problem. As one officer said, "If I had men whose faith made them desire to read the Koran together I would give permission; and why should I not encourage the men who ask to read together from the Bible in a devotional service?"

"Joy cometh in the morning"

WHOEVER desires heaven must abandon sorrow. Joy is natural. It is of God. There are no sad saints, for whosoever is sad is separated from God. To attempt to be sorrowful in God's kingdom would be like insisting upon starvation in the midst of plenty. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Joy is first to greet the one who receives the healing of Christian Science. Old scars of sorrow are wiped out, sickness is destroyed, smiles take the place of frowns, and alertness quickens the step of the weary searcher for truth. This practical joy entering consciousness straightway starts a Christian Science house cleaning. In this work the beauty of holiness plays an important part, neatness comes into action, color finds harmonious placement, and a normal arrangement of mental activities prevails. No sooner has joy been received than the irresistible desire is experienced to give it out to others. The flower that opens its petals to the light of dawn expresses gladness and gives gladness.

Since joy belongs to God it can never be turned into grief, for God's gifts are as unchangeable as Himself. The Bible makes constant references to joy. After the Jews had rebuilt the walls of Jerusalem, Nehemiah urged them to remember, "The joy of the Lord is your strength." The Christian Scientist reconstructing character and health for himself or another finds his strength in this same joy. Isaiah calls upon the waste places of Jerusalem to "break forth into joy." Patient and practitioner restoring the waste places of human consciousness to fertility break forth into joy. Jesus discoursing of the at-one-ment between himself and his disciples through their union with God said: "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full."

In the Master's life example we find this joy of the Lord constantly expressed. Though little understood by his contemporaries Jesus' real joy was in healing the sick, reclaiming the sinner, entering into the heart of nature, and ascending the spiritual mountain top. Jesus did not possess the material essentials of material happiness; therefore his spiritual joy must have shone out all the brighter. The world's standard of joy is a poor staff to lean upon, but spiritual joy stands the test of eternity. Spiritual joy staves off any injury which might come from malice. A spiteful spirit will outline punishment for others and endeavor to inflict harm, perhaps taking a false joy in so-called retributive justice, but God gives man no such duty. All judgment belongs to God. There can be no joy in revenge, no satisfaction, no profit, no success. Revenge is another name for hate, and loses itself in its own nothingness as a river loses itself in the sands of the desert. Revenge is one of the worst expressions of human character. It indulges in retaliation, spiteful satisfaction in a self-imposed duty. It grinds the joy out of the one entertaining vindictive thoughts and endeavors to suppress and kill the joy of those who show any happiness.

The joy of the Lord confers spiritual equipoise under the fire of persecution which all Christians encounter who are actively engaged in the work of God. The Master as well as the Founder of Christian Science passed unharmed through their trials. Their lives encourage those who are passing through this stage of progress not to be afraid of the pointed fingers of false accusation and the stones cast in anger. Peter comforted his fellow Christians by writing to them: "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified." Christian Scientists, rejoice that your reputation, your good name, is in God's keeping. Human opinion cannot give reputation nor take it away.

The material senses receive many shocks while the spiritually minded are under the fire of spiritual progress, but subsequent events prove these experiences to have been wholesome. Many people have not learned how to impart happiness, and so remain joyless. The fountains of loving-kindness in their nature do not flow freely. Perhaps the first tendrils of affection have been blighted by misunderstanding; perhaps pride of purse, intellect, or family has dried out the streams which might inspire delight in others. Sometimes, too, the bitter waters of cynicism or sarcasm prevent the return of happiness from others, or the false decorum of scholastic theology stifles the gaiety which is natural to those who are really spiritually minded.
