Editorial

Stacked neatly in a locked drawer in a specially designed laboratory at Duke University in Durham, North Carolina, are sets of black and white cards the size of ordinary playing decks. Each set contains 25 cards; five marked with stars, five with squares, five with circles, five with wavy lines, and five with crosses. The cards were designed to test an individual's mental telepathy—the mind-to-mind transmission of images, thoughts and ideas.

Originated in the 1930s by Dr. J.B. Rhine who directed duke's parapsychology center, the test has been given to many people over the years—some showing remarkable results. For instance, not long ago, the card test was given to an unnamed 26-year-old woman in New York City. She was tested by Professor Bernard F. Riss of Hunter College. The woman's score was fantastic—she correctly guessed 1,349 out of 1,850 cards (73 percent). The remarkable results were recorded in the Guinness Book of World Records. The average person would have had about 73 right (2 percent).

But as any parapsychologist knows, the experiments taking place outside the laboratory—spontaneous, and unrehearsed, are the one which grab the headlines.

Fantastic results have been achieved by such well known psychics as Fredrick Davies who predicted that Israeli leader Golda Meir would resign in 1975; Maris De Long who accurately foresaw Southern California being hit by an earthquake of considerable magnitude during the first three months of 1971, and Joseph DeLouise, whose psychic clues led to the identity of the Sharon Tate murders in 1967.

Two recent psychics however are not limiting their abilities to predicting future events. They are utilizing their precious talents to aid law enforcement agencies hunt for criminals and in finding missing persons.

The two are notable psychics,Dorothy Allison of Nutely, New Jersey, and Kathleen Rhea of Cupertino, California. Both have used their powers recently to help police and relatives of missing persons. Dorothy Allison found the killer of a New York cab driver who had been murdered and dumped in the East River. Kathleen Rea aided Churchill County authorities in finding the wreckage of a single engine plane containing the bodies of a father and son.

Indeed, police are learning (and it's about time) to rely more and more on the work being performed by psychics—many of whom we hope to interview in the near future.

Sincerely

Letters To The Editor

Dear Editor:

I was intrigued with "Photographing Another Dimension," in your last issue of Beyond Reality. Bolt's experiences with a camera in the Arizona desert, is a mere twinkling of just what the camera could pick up that the human eye can't see.

There are cases on record with psychic societies around the world of cameras picking up "ghost images", faint and yet recognizable traces of individuals who had already passed on, but who are said to be "earthbound" to the particular area where the picture has been taken.

I love the article, and would appreciate more on the same subject.

Ray F. Marshall
Dallas, Texas

Dear Editor:

I was scared speechless by Nick Alcalli's, "Is Another Ice Age Just Around The Corner? (Beyond Reality Number 37). It seems that nature is slowly, but surely, undergoing an upheaval that can only spell disaster in the near (or far) future.

And I'm not only referring to what the scientific community tells us. History itself bears out what happened, and what could quite possibly—and quite probably—happen again.

For instance, current geological theory places the first Ice Age at about 500,000 B.C.E.; the First Interglacial Stage about 475,000 to 4000,000 B.C.E.; the Second Ice Age about 4000,000 B.C.E., the Second Interglacial Stage about 375,000 to 175,000 B.C.E., the Third Ice Age about 160,000., the Third Interglacial Stage about 150,000 to 50,000 B.C.E. The Fourth and last Ice Age was about 50,000 to 25,000 B.C.E. We are now in the Postglacial Stage, whose date of termination has not been accurately calculated. What can happen is what happened at the time of the Pleistocone, the last epoch of the Cenozic period of geologic time, notable as the Great Ice Age, and for being coextensive with human evolution. The ice came south at least four times, alternating with warmer periods of retreat. At their maximum, ice sheets covered Antartica, large portions of Europe, North and South America, and parts of Asia.

Can such a calamity occur again? Both psychics—and scientists maintain a wholehearted yes. I read in The People's Almanac that many psychics predict there will be a greater fear of an ice age approaching. The years 1980-2000 will confirm this. Great masses of arctic air will decend on Canada and the United States. Floods will erode much valuable land, and there will be news of ice packs forming. The cold wave will spread elsewhere in time.

Taking this information in context with Alcali's informative article, John Mercer of Ohio State University said, "In the natural course of events, we would probably sink gradually into the next ice age, we've had 10,000 or 11,000 years of warmth, and judging from the geologic record, we've just about had our ration."

Dear Editor:

Once in a while you do come up with a winner. I'm referring to "Human Beasts That Roam The Night," the article by Richard Schwartzberg. It is a well-thought out study on the subject of lycanthrophy—the ancient belief that a person can take on the form

Television Psychic Bob Ferguson shows you

MAGIC WORDS TO COMMAND MIRACLES OF WEALTH, LOVE, AND HEALTH—IN MINUTES!

Here is staggering proof, based on actual reported miracles, that what has worked for thousands will absolutely work for you!

Yes, how would you like to say some magic words, and be showered with hundreds of dollars in as little as 45 minutes! Or use amazing healing words, and get rid of crippling ailments instantly! Do you realize that it is possible to instantly and secretly command others to do your bidding . . . punish evil doers . . . see behind closed doors . . . be anything and have anything your heart desires . . . with magic words so simple yet so powerful, they can only be described as miraculous!

Yes, soon miracles will be happening to you every day, with the amazing secret of PSYCHIC TELEMETRY! My name is Robert A. Ferguson. You may have seen me on TV. I have shown hundreds how to use this amazingly simple power to command instant miracles to happen in minutes!

Impossible? I have staggering proof that it's not only possible but absolutely true and that this MIRACLE POWER WILL ABSOLUTELY WORK FOR YOU—to change your life from poverty to riches, from poor health to radiant new health, to bring whatever you desire almost instantly! I'm not exaggerating when I say the sky's the limit!

POSITIVE PROOF THAT WHAT I SAY IS TRUE!

Right now I'm going to prove to you how easily PSYCHIC TELEMETRY works for you. Remember, I cannot profit by exaggeration. What I tell you has got to be true, and it costs you nothing to find out for yourself.

● HUNDREDS OF DOLLARS IN 45 MINUTES! I have a report here from Mary D. who needed $400 quickly. She had no idea where she could get the needed money. Her sister gave her a Psychic Telemetry Enchantment to say. In only 45 minutes, she received $400 from an unexpected source!

That's chickenfeed compared to the staggering results many others have achieved with these magic words! Dave E. had been unable to find a job, and had only 3 days left before having to pay a big bill. He didn't have a cent. In one session, I showed him how to use the Psychic Telemetry Prosperity Ritual. The next morning, he was all smiles, as he reported a sudden windfall of $2,000—more than enough to pay the bill. A miracle? Of course! Yet just a very average example of the power of these magic words!

Dave used the Prosperity Ritual at about 9:00 P.M. At 8:00 A.M. the following morning, he got the money! As simple as that! I HAVE HUNDREDS OF CASES ON FILE, PROVING HOW EASILY MIRACLES HAPPEN with these magic words! Before I give you the next case, let me say this: DO YOU NEED MONEY? Say the powerful words on page 37! With this secret, money is always available to you!

You can get any amount of money at any time you need it! I am telling you the sky's the limit on how much money you can ask for and receive quickly with this power! Proof?

HOW AGNES C. WON OVER $500,000 WITH THE WORDS FOR WINNING CONTESTS!

Agnes C. was told about enchantments and spells, but insisted that she possessed no psychic powers and never had any psychic experiences. Here's what happened: She kept dreaming of a man in a flowing robe with dollar signs all over it, holding up 7 fingers, saying: "A dollar a day keeps poverty away!" She purchased a one-dollar lottery ticket.

"I simply could not believe it when my number was drawn for the grand prize (7 days later). I still can't believe it," she says. "I won over a half-million dollars." Agnes and her family are now enjoying their new lakefront home with its private boathouse and dock. They have two expensive autos and all the other luxuries money can buy.

The point is: YOU CAN USE THE SAME SECRET! You'll find the very words she used on page 37 of my book, and it won't cost you a single cent to find out what they are, and how they'll work for you.

MAGIC WORDS FOR MIRACLE HEALING!

Before I tell you how YOU may achieve a MIRACLE HEALING, let me tell you how a man was healed of arthritis in FIFTEEN MINUTES! A friend of mine, Louie A., tried the power Ritual for Magnetic Healing on page 146 on his next-door neighbor, Ken, who was confined to a wheelchair with arthritis. In a matter of minutes, the crippled man was WALKING! "I haven't been able to walk for months," he said, "and you got me out of my wheelchair."

Since that day, Louie has been able to heal "incurable" diseases! AND YOU CAN DO THE VERY SAME THING! This is just an average case. With this power, you can command healings like this on almost a daily basis. I'm telling you this power is FANTASTIC!

Look what you can do, with exact words I give you on page 139-140—

- Cure ulcers, nervous headache, and insomnia! Calm the nerves!
- Cure diseases of the liver and spleen—stop bleeding!
- Strengthen the eyes, control epilepsy and disorders of the stomach!
- Cure heart disease, increase circulation, and heal gout!
- Heal burns, conditions of the nose, throat and sinus, treat hay fever and asthma!

. . . and much more! With these words, you ask great rays of healing power to enfold you, pulsating within every nerve and cell of your body, cleansing, soothing and healing! Whatever you are trying to heal, you know the job will be done.

MIRACLE CURES REPORTED!

Do you realize that it is possible to get rid of crippling ailments almost instantly with healing words? You can command that all sickness and disease be banished from your body! Here is a force so powerful that it almost defies description! It can heal a withered limb or return sight to the blind . . . raise the crippled from their beds! It has brought miracle cures to the suffering and the lame!

● KIDNEYS MIRACULOUSLY HEALED! Evelina's only hope was to find a suitable kidney donor. She was so weak, it took two people to almost carry her to the hospital for her frequent treatments. There seemed to be little hope for her. With this method, she says—

"My whole body began to tingle—it felt like little electric shocks were playing games at the small of my back . . . suddenly . . . I knew I was healed! I leapt from my bed and ran into the living room screaming, 'I'M HEALED, I'M HEALED!' Our house was filled with tears of joy that night."

Today she is so healthy, she can hike and even climb mountains! It happens all the time with PSYCHIC TELEMETRY:

● HOW HARVEY C.'s ASTHMA WAS CURED! Harvey C. suffered asthma all his life. He could never run more than a few steps, without gasping for breath. Doctors were unable to cure it. I was so positive Harvey's asthma could be cured, I merely had him say the words on page 139-140. He never had another asthma attack! Now he can run and even play tennis!

● HAROLD SAW HIS LUNG SPOT VANISH! Harold F. was shocked, when told he had a spot on his lung, and needed an immediate operation. His wife quickly used the amazing healing words on page 145. The day before the operation, when x-rays were taken, the doctor was baffled. "I don't know how to explain this," he said. "Your lungs are perfectly clear."

MAGIC FORCES THAT WORK MIRACLES

Once you call on them, powerful forces stand ready to fulfill your every command. You can be confident that they will work a miracle.

● HOW ALLEN F. WON $800 AT THE CRAP TABLE AFTER USING THE MAGIC WORDS ON PAGE 30! Allen F. needed $800 by Monday morning. It was Friday already, and things looked hopeless. He's never been inside a gambling casino and knew nothing about roulette, craps, or blackjack, but he had a strange urge to try it. With only $1, he said the magic words on page 22, turned silently, and headed for the crap table. He threw the dice, and it came up 7. He tried it again and again. A crowd gathered. The dice were changed, but he kept throwing 7's. He walked away with $800!

Anyone can use these magic words. When you use them, what you command does happen! You can count positively on real results. It always works! It is not evil—nor is it Black Magic. Like electricity, it is simply a power given by nature to make life easier!

● MAGIC WORDS GIVE YOU POWER OVER OTHERS! Say the magic words on page 44 to make others do your bidding. With this Enchantment, you send forth mystic rays of power to impress those whom you command to bend to your will at all times. It makes other people like putty in your hands! No one can resist you! Let me show you how easily this happens!

To use this power is simplicity itself! Say the magic words then just sit back and relax. Within seconds, minutes at most, you will have a willing, obedient slave!

You can stand next to a person and place a thought in his or her mind. When others are asleep, you are free to speak directly to their subconscious mind. Your voice is remembered upon awakening. People obey your commands. It's fantastic!

● MAGIC WORDS THAT BRING YOU LOVE! Say the magic words on page 47, to command and guide the perfect partner to you . . . to command him or her to be blind to your shortcomings, and fulfill your every need and your every desire!

● MAGIC WORDS FOR SECRET KNOWLEDGE! The magic words on page 164 allow you to become an invisible traveler to anywhere in the world. You can listen to conversations and you can see what's going on, completely undetected. You will experience the ability to walk through walls and doors. Nothing can be kept secret from you—there is no longer such a thing as a locked door. You can enter any place at will. If you wish to know about others, you can secretly and invisibly watch their every move and hear their every word!

● MAGIC WORDS PROTECT YOU FROM EVIL! Say the magic words on page 51, for attunement with the pure rays of power that come to you from the Great Cosmic Mind . . . to affirm protection from every curse or evil influence . . . Say them to command divine protection, and that no evil will be able to penetrate your shield of power, and that those who would send you evil shall be powerless, and their evil shall return to them a hundredfold.

● MAGIC WORDS TO SEE INTO THE FUTURE! There is no need to blindly stumble into the future. When you say the magic words on page 62, your psychic eyes will open, and you will see actual visions of future events. Vision upon vision will flash brilliantly into your mind. If there is danger ahead, Cosmic Mind will flash you the warning so a possible catastrophe can be avoided. If there is tremendous goodness in the future, all will be revealed to you!

THE AMAZING SECRET OF COSMIC DUST!

On page 204, I tell you the amazing secret of Cosmic Dust: how to make it and USE it to bring good fortune, punish evil doers, and heal the sick! The 3 needed ingredients are easy and inexpensive to obtain. (You may already have them, in your kitchen or basement storage areas.) Put a level teaspoon of each in a bowl and mix well. Your Cosmic Dust is then ready to work amazing miracles for you!

Books For Review

BK: BEHAVIOR KINESIOLOGY, by John Diamond, M.D., Harper and Row, $8.95.

Behavior Kinesiology is Dr. John Diamond's personal synthesis of developments in psychiatry, preventive medicine, kinesiology, nutrition, music therapy and several other areas.

It is the first book on BK written for both the layperson and the professional. According to this new science, everyday things like food, clothes, our thoughts—even music and pictures— have a strengthening or weakening effect on our body muscles.

The book even includes a simple muscle test one can take at home. Amazing and fun, this test is also a valuable therapeutic tool—giving good nutrition, good posture, comfortable clothes and a positive mental outlook in our lives.

EARLY MAN AND THE OCEAN, by Thor Heyerdahl, Doubleday, $12.95.

It was Thor Heyerdahl who sailed the Kon Tiki, a primitive balsa raft, from Peru to Polynesia, proving that American culture could have easily reached those distant islands. It was Thor Hayerdahl who led the first full-scale archaeological dig on the mysterious Easter Island. It was also Heyerdahl who piloted RA II, an Egyptian reed boat, from North Africa to the shores of the Caribbean, proving that men from the earliest known civilizations could have reached the New World by sea.

The author combines the adventures and discoveries that have revolutionized our understanding of early man. The documents collected in this book provide a fascinating survey of Heyerdahl's pioneering work. The book is enhanced with illustrations, maps, bibliography, notes and an extensive index.

THE MESSAGE IN OUR TIME, by Pu Vil Inayat Khan, Harper and Row, $14.95

The Message in our Time is the story of how one can attain the very pinnacle of spiritual consciousness even as one lives in the midst of the material world. It is the long awaited, authoritative biography of Hazart Inayat Khan, the great Sufi Master and the first to bring Sufism to the Western world.

Written by his son, the book embodies the Sufi Master's teachings, introducing the reader to the Sufi methods. Descriptions of the Master's states of meditation as he awakened from ordinary consciousness, and the development of his teachings in the shockingly commercial Western world are fully reported here.

The biography is ideal for those interested in Sufism, Eastern spirituality, or religious and human greatness.

SHAMANIC VOICES: A SURVEY OF VISIONARY NARRATIVES, by Joan Halifax Ph.D., Dutton, $6.95 (paperback)

This book is an essay on shamanism—exploring and communicating with the unseen world of gods, demons and ancestral spirits. It is also a profile of the shaman—the central figure in many tribal cultures and the repository of the group's rituals, myths, and secret lore.

Shamanic Voices gives a first hand account of 36 shamanic experiences. The shamans have traveled to other worlds, have experienced androgyny and double being, have seen the house of dreams and been involved in other supernatural phenomena.

The shamans' experiences, as presented by Dr. Halifax, reveals their mysterious way of being in an elegant metaphorical style that awakens particular emotions and experiences in the reader. Each shamanic experience is preceeded by a brief introduction highlighting the shaman speaker.

THE WEREWOLF DELUSION; by Ian Woodward, Paddington Press, $10.95.

The Werewolf Delusion is the first fully documented, throughly researched investigation into the werewolf phenomenon.

It traces the whys and wherefores of werewolfery from the time of the ancient Greeks through a contemporary report as recent as 1978. In his pursuit of the truth, Woodward has traveled all over the world compiling an amazing collection of historical facts, legends and folk-tales. The ancestry of werewolf superstitions, the vampire connection, the variety of other were-animals, and the image of the werewolf found in literature and on the screen is also discussed.

FORGET YOUR SUN SIGN, By Anthony Standen, Legacy Press, $5.95.

Astrology, the authors claim, is not only rich when it is linked to other aspects of human life, but has a special connection with moral questions as well.

It is natural, Mr Standen says, for people to turn to astrology in search of relief from the moral emptiness they find in modern science—so lacking in linkage points, so dismally neutral and dry.

The careful reader will cheer the author's effort to produce a vital, accurate, sympathetic, and humorous, but also, relentlessly rational treatment of this immensely popular form of irrationality.

MY SEARCH FOR THE GHOST OF FLIGHT 401, By Elizabeth Fuller, Berkley Publishing Corp., $1.95 (paperback)

Elizabeth Fuller tells the dramatc and personal story of an encounter with the unknown that changed her life forever.

Wife of the best selling author John Fuller, the attractive stewardess tells how she discovered and unleashed her own hidden psychic powers—and how she played a key role in the breakthrough communication with the spirit world which led to the identification of The Ghost of Flight 401.

CONTINUUM: Psychology and Misticism Points to a Life Beyond, by Robert Casselman, Marek Publishers, $9.95.

Throughout history, man has denied his finiteness. He has believed in an afterlife, yet has always asked the questions, "Is there a God? Is there a soul? Is there life after death? This book begins by re-asking these same questions, discussing ancient religions, Hebrew, the pagan religions—such as Mithra and Zoraster—Krishna, and Christianity.

The book then concludes that Christianity has the elements of all religions in it, and that all religions have similar elements within them. The authors examine "other-worlds" stories as well; tales of men who could foresee the future, such as Arthur Ford, a widely known American psychic and medium who knew which soldiers would die in battle many thousands of miles away.

Continuum also examines the life of Houdini, who many people believe communicated with his wife after he died. Also mentioned is Bishop Pike, who claimed to have been contacted by his dead son. Mr. Casselman believes that extraordinary feats of the mind—such as precognition, ESP, and telepathy—are linked to the existence of a soul.

Scientists are currently studying the "energy body" or "aura" which seems to surround each person. Continuum examines the findings of such people as Elizabeth Kubler-Ross and Raymond A. Moody, as well as Eileen Garrett, who claims to have seen the soul leaves a person who had just died. The author argues that since matter is made up of atoms, and atoms are pure energy, there may be forms of energy which man does not yet know about. This energy could constitute the soul.

Mr. Casselman's conclusions, after years of painstaking research, are more than fascinating. The Heaven, the God, and the Judgement that Mr. Casselman discusses in his book are the skeptic's defeat, for they are truly credible. He assures the reader that real happiness arises from knowing in one's mind that God exists.

SWEET SPIRITS, By Kenny Kingston, "Psychic to the Stars," Contemporary Books, $10.95.

This book traces the fabulous life of the man who has given private readings to many of the world's top celebrities and politicians.

More than just a biographic dissertation on a unique personality, it is also a "how-to" book" explaining how to find personal happiness, solve problems, read auras, and understand psychic numbers. His incredible predictions include the foreseeing of Elvis Presley's death two weeks before it happened.

Kingston's seances, in which he has materialized such spirits as Fanny Brice, Clifton Webb, Clark Gable, Errol Flynn, Marilyn Monroe, and many others, have been covered in various media, including radio, television and national magazines.

The author is a former newspaper reporter from England who, since moving to Hollywood in 1965, has had celebrity stories published in just about every major American fan magazine.

UFOS AND RELATED SUBJECTS An Annotoated Bibliography, By Gale Research Co., $24.00.

This volume is a guide to more than 1,600 books, journal articles, pamphlets, conference proceedings, tapes, original manuscripts, and other such material.

The book reveals that the subject of UFOs is far broader and more complicated than is commonly believed. Thousands of books and pamphlets have been published, many of them in the 19th century. Also included in the book are works from the physical sciences which discuss UFOs in light of present physical theories.

In addition to works dealing directly with the UFO enigma, the book covers a range of related subjects such as: Origin of life, mankind, the solar system, and extraterrestrial life. □

Strange and Unknown

Elsburg, Missouri is a tiny little farming community nestled peacefully on the banks of the Missouri River just north of St. Louis.

Recently, many of the hamlet's 1400 hard-working and industrious residents have been plunged into a nightmare world of fear and shadows which began just a few short months ago, with zigzagging lights streaking across the night skies.

Many of the town's citizens speculated that the weird luminous patterns moved in such a way that "if they are aircraft, no human could be the pilot."

For close to three months the lights played havoc in the night skies. They sped over highways, following motorists and evening strollers. They came low over rooftops as though putting on a show for all who would be watching. And in time, Elsburg's residents had gotten accustomed to the somber spectacle, so much so that they took it for granted.

But then something started happening. Each time those bizarre lights danced crazily in the sky—cattle were found dead—and mutilated.

In a classical UFO visitation, one family watched spellbound on the night of April 14, 1978, as a large, disc-shaped saucer sped across the heavens at about nine PM, tracing weird patterns over the treetops and buildings.

The sighting was confirmed by several onlookers who watched in horrified, awed amazement for more than 15 minutes as the strange lights cut across the darkness—then they disappeared.

The next morning, several cows were found dead—just a few yards from where the sighting took place. And although veterinary surgeons maintain the animals died of "quite natural causes" and were then eaten by their natural predators, many of the angered citizens of Elsberry don't agree.

"No animals made these mutilations," maintains City Marshall Jon Livengood who should know, since he hunts and traps every year and has a very good idea what animal predators eat.

One family watched in terror as a large disc-shaped object sped across the skies, tracing weird patterns over the treetops and buildings

"A coyote will start at one end and chew its way right through," he said. "It won't neatly slice off the ears or other parts and leave the intestines untouched."

And that's just what happened. "The ears of the dead animals were neatly sliced off, and the genitals, or in the case of cows, the udders, were carefully cut off in such a way as to leave the intestines exposed but still in place. And there was never any blood."

As things stand, Elsberry isn't the only community—nor the state of Missouri the only state, for that matter— to have experienced the mutilation of their cattle following a UFO sighting.

In the Panhandle of Texas—a narrow strip of territory bordering the western portion of the Lone Star State, three prize bulls were found "surgically slaughtered" on the morning of July 14, 1976. Their ears were sliced off and, as in the mutilations in Elsberry, their intestines were also cut up, very neatly, but they were still in place.

The night before, switchboards in Auston, Houston, Galveston and parts of San Antonio, buzzed incessantly with reports of UFOs—"flashing lights" streaming over buildings and farming communities.

Two months later, a mass slaughter took place in Wyoming. In Casper, mutilations captured the front pages of almost every newspaper for one full week. The same held true in Rock Springs, Rawlins, Cheyenne and Cody. In each case, the mutilations were exactly the same.

Since 1974, there have been over 7,000 cases of cattle mutilation throughout the United States. The pattern is exactly the same; not only the surgical procedures by which the cattle have been dissected, but the fact that just prior to it, many reports of UFO activity flood the areas involved.

What is perhaps most interesting in the accounts is the oddest thing about the mutilations in Elsberry. According to an undisclosed medical source, small insects—flies, beetles—have been found "crystalized" in a fungus type, gum-like solution on tree branches close by.

In June, 1978, on a farm in St. Clair County, Alabama, two cows and a prize bull were found mutilated in the same way as in the states previously mentioned. In the Alabama case, the neatly cut incisions were infested with the same pests as in Elsberry, Missouri. Also, near the mutilation site, flies were crystalized in fungus in the branches of nearby trees.

It is clear, claim UFO experts, that extraterrestrials are killing our country's cattle, and surgically mutilating them.

What isn't clear yet is the reason.

Are the United States and Russia playing games where UFO's are concerned? In 1955, a radio message from saucerians, recieved at Irkutsk, Siberia, left no doubt of the existence and power of UFO transmitters. The energy in making the transmission was so strong it severely damaged the radio equipment receiving it. The message: Landing on Earth in 15 terrestrial years, destruction not intended, defense useless, peaceful colonization, exchange possible.

While it was not stated if the Soviet earthlings attempted to exchange any messages with the saucerians, several known experts in the field, including Professor Sabayev, Dr. Vladiansky, Dr. Bornovkin and Dr. Grabuyenkov, believe this to be the first authentic message from a UFO. Yet why wasn't this more publicized?

The U.S. called this event science-fiction, according to Dr. Vladimir Migulin, director of the Institute of Earth Magnetism. Yet, there is evidence that the C.I.A. and Russia's K.G.B. may be working together to cover-up their knowledge of UFO's. Dr. James McDonald, Senior physicist in the Institute of Atmospheric Physics at the University of Arizona said that the C.I.A.'s reason for debunking flying saucer reports was that with less official recognition of UFO's there would be a corresponding drop in public interest and there would be fewer reported sightings. The lawsuit that the Ground Saucer Watch has brought against the C.I.A. for supressing information about UFO's is a first step in revealing the truth to the public once and for all.

Perhaps we have learned something here. Not much has changed either with the C.I.A. or with UFOs in the past 21 years. The hope for loss of public interest in UFOs ever since Russia got that strange message in 1955 never came about. The public is now demanding more than ever to know the truth. Fifteen years have passed. Has the saucer secretly landed on Russian soil? Does the C.I.A. know all about it? Will they ever reveal this knowledge to the public? It is time that world leaders stop playing games where UFOs are concerned. The sooner they admit to the public that UFOs actually exist, the sooner they can openly begin their search to find out exactly where these UFOs come from. With public support, the job will be easier and results will come much more quickly.

A weird discovery in Miami, Florida led police to believe that Voodoo may be linked to the many grave robberies which have been reported there in recent years.

An altar, complete with animal remains, religious symbols and a human skull was found in a chicken yard. It was enough to prompt the local authorities to reopen an investigation of grave robbings which has been going on for some time.

Police Sgt. Ben Lombardi said, "...but with the skull, that makes it different. We want to know whose it is, where it came from and what it is doing here."

The scene of the macabre discovery was located after an anonymous phone call was received the humane society officers. The lost no time in finding the gruesome display in the chicken yard. What they found was strange indeed.

The altar, a weird looking thing, was surrounded by scorched goat heads and the head of a freshly killed chicken. The human skull was place on top. The body of the chicken—without the head—was placed on a plywood sheet. On the sheet were what seemed to be religious symbols written in chalk.

To add further to the mystery, they found a caldron which contained a blackened doll. Nearby, the police also found several swords, knives, and machetes. Candles were burning in front of the altar.

But what interested the police the most were the many skeletons which they found scattered about the whole area. □

As Prince Ahmed traveled by flying carpet in a famous tale from The Arabian Nights, so do some devotees of Transcendental Meditation claim for themselves the ability to levitate, or to fly, to become invisible, and to pass through walls. Readers know that the Arabian Nights stories are fables. Transcendental Meditation adherents claim their abilities are fact—not fable.

Twenty-two years ago the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi introduced TM to the United States. At the time he did so, he promised the public means and ways in which to reduce stress that could foster intelligent creativity. He invited scientists to investigate his methods. As a result medical researchers started to verify some of the therapeutic claims of TM. But the scientific world finds levitation in Transcendental Meditation much more difficult to accept, simply because it appears to contradict generally-accepted natural laws.

TM "fliers" claim to be able to rise a foot or more off the floor from the full lotus position. In this position the adherent places the left ankle on top of the right thigh and vice versa. From this position they claim to be able to move forward in the air up to ten feet. Hopping, floating, hovering like a hummingbird or a helicopter, flying at will—they claim to be able to perform such feats. Besides the hopping or beginning stage, they talk about experiences in which they have actually hovered in the air with considerable mastery over the law of gravitation. "Levitation occurs in three stages," an instructor says. "They are hopping (lifting off the floor); floating, or hovering and flying at will." A woman who says that she is a flier and that she works as secretary to a professional magician says, "At this stage one has the greatest control in taking off from the floor. Landings are inclined to be awkward and difficult."

For more than two decades Transcendental Meditation has tried to establish credibility among Americans. The job has posed some difficulties. The campus of a TM learning facility is situated in the Catskill Mountains near South Fallsburg, New York, a city of 1500 population west of Poughkeepsie. Here at the Capital of the Age of Enlightenment advanced devotees claim, "We can fly with mental power as our only propellant."

John Konhaus, acting director of TM in the United States, says: "We've reached the early stages of levitation. Success comes in various stages of our development. At first it looked as if we were just hopping about, like frogs. Then growth of consciousness developed, and we became lighter and lighter."

Konhaus operates the South Fallsburg campus, where most of the guests are professional men and women who mean business. The men wear three-piece suits, and the women don afternoon dresses or party gowns. The surroundings are peaceful. The meals consist entirely of natural foods. Persons who smoke are required to do so outside the rooms. Visitors may look into the two levitation rooms, one for men and the other for women. Transcendental Meditation tenets suggest that it is better to fly with people of one's own sex. The floors are covered with foam rubber, and more of such material is stacked in the hallways.

Allen Solof, one of eight instructors who teaches the advanced courses and who is a TM executive governor, claims that he, too, can perform levitation feats daily. "When one person begins to fly, it influences the rest to follow suit," he said. "It's like popcorn in a skillet. Success comes with considerable group consciousness.

Early TM advertisements claimed that anyone could learn to levitate so long as the prospective student paid his money. Preparatory classes last from one to two months, dependent upon the individual's stage of meditation. The first phase costs $245 a week, including room and board. The second phase requires an extra month and costs $375 weekly.

However, if one does not learn to fly, he is not given a refund. Miss Chun, who spent $2,000 at the center in the summer of 1977, says "I consider that my stay there was well worth the time, effort, and money it cost me."

Despite the success in flying that TM adherents claim for themselves, the movement is nevertheless controversial. One complaint arises over advertising. A student who enrolled at the Maharishi International University in Fairfield, Iowa—southwest of Cedar Rapids and the site of the former campus of Parsons College—claims that the terms of his enrollment were for a one-month course, including a promise of levitation training. "Halfway through the course" he says, "I was requested to pay them an additional $1,500." The protestor, Stephen Rozman, is associate professor and chairman of the social science division at Tougaloo College, near Jackson, Mississippi. "After my complaint to the Iowa Attorney General's office," he says, "I was blacklisted by the movement and told that I should operate on a show-your-faith basis. I was told, "you don't have the proper attitude."

When in May, 1977, newspaper advertisements promised free lectures on the ability to levitate by mere intention, people packed TM centers throughout North America in order to satisfy their own curiosities. However, many of the visitors were far from intrigued. Some audience members shouted for them to produce or admit that they could not do so. No demonstrations were forthcoming, nor were any secrets revealed.

Instead, the audiences were told stories from advanced meditators' own personal experiences with flying. To learn for themselves, they would have to become experienced meditators, then enroll in intensive training for up to ten weeks at $245 a week.

One levitator described his experience. "I was sitting on a sofa," he recalls, "when I felt a great amount of energy flow through me. Twice or three times my body moved up and down. I asked myself what this could be. Soon I felt my body touch the floor—some six feet from where I began."

One levitator described his experience, "I was sitting on a sofa when I suddenly felt a great amount of energy flow through me twice or three times. My body then moved up and down. I then felt my body touch the floor, several feet from where I began."

Enrollment in TM techniques dropped from a peak of 40,000 new trainees monthly to a low in 1977 of one-tenth that figure. At that time the Maharishi brought several thousand of his teachers to the Swiss headquarters to learn some new techniques. As a result, it was said, hundreds of teachers developed supernatural powers, including the ability to levitate, to walk through walls, to feel infinite compassion, and even to become invisible. However, flying is the one thing that has aroused the greatest controversy. "Now," the Maharishi said, "the time has come to pass this knowledge on to other TM followers."

What the public really wants, of course, is to see a truly-flying meditator. In fact, a TM brochure contains such a picture. But some critics say, "The levitator may be merely bouncing—not flying." For a brief time TM's governors promised to arrange live demonstrations for critics if ten observers would pay $100 each to witness it for themselves. When their conditions were met in Montreal and in Toronto, officials at TM headquarters reneged, claiming: "Demonstrations are forbidden due to their lack of dignity. No one wants to become a circus sideshow. Our adherents are at a delicate stage in their TM development. We don't teach flying. We teach instead the full development of consciousness. As a result flying is a by-product. It's like a child's enjoying to the fullest a new toy."

Recently TM has caught on in some California prisons. Some of the inmates at Folsom and at San Quentin look forward to learning advanced TM techniques called Siddhis. By using Siddhis to refine control over mind and body, they can allegedly levitate, walk through walls, and become invisible.

Such skills are said to require meditation in addition to previously-untapped physical and psychological abilities. A successful demonstration of a new skill is a test of growth in enlightenment, according to a TM newsletter. A twenty-seven-year-old New York meditator believes that, once a person has experienced the absolute, flying is not too important; he expects one day to be able to walk through a wall for himself. "What I really want," he says, "is direct knowledge of other planets."

Julian Garrett, Assistant Attorney General in charge of consumer protection, says that his office is making some progress in investigating TM claims. He finds that students refuse to talk about it; hence he believes it to be a rather questionable claim. John Konhaus affirms that since the original advertising campaign which featured levitation was begun, the promises have been toned down. "Like any business," he says, "we use advertising to attract people." While flying is a by-product of the overall TM program, it is what causes people to take notice and to enroll."

Allen Solof admits that to remove public skepticism is a major problem. "The Maharishi, guru of the TM movement, has banned exhibitions," he says. However, Konhaus believes that the Maharishi, who now lives in Switzerland, may sometime allow a levitation demonstration in order to overcome skepticisim.

An exhibition has been reported at Iowa's MIT in May, 1977, with twenty-two persons invited to watch a demonstration by four young men. Only two of the persons present were not meditators. Witnesses believed that the hopping they saw could be duplicated by experienced gymnasts. But the director of the National Academy of Gymnasts in Eugene, Oregon, says that this is not so. He denies that skilled athletes could accomplish the feat, "because there's no way of getting thrust with the full lotus position," he says.

Asked his reaction, Herbert Spiegel, a New York psychiatrist who teaches at Columbia University and who is an authority on hypnosis, says: "Self-hypnosis could be the answer. Persons who claim to have experienced levitation say that they have the feeling they're flying." Konhaus claims that physical laws have sometimes been disproved or suspended. But Dr. Spiegel affirms that the law of gravitation applies to everyone, regardless of whether or not he is a transcendental meditator.

A team of scientists are now involved in research on brain waves. They hope to establish that the mind can control matter.

Many serious practitioners of meditation find themselves distressed by TM's recent exploration of the realm of the supernormal. Patricia Carrington, Princeton University psychologist and researcher, is one of them. She invites TM officials either to demonstrate levitation or to refrain from discussing it and claiming that such feats have been performed. Author of Freedom in Meditation, she says: "When one is serious about something, he should allow a controlled observation for the benefit of scientists. The TM movement has been very conservative up until now. They did well to propagate the message of the benefits of meditation. But talk of levitation is an about-face. I'm personally bewildered by such claims."

Meditation experts suggest that the serious masters, following ancient tradition, have always minimized the powers alleged to evolve from spiritual growth. In an old Zen tale, a disciple relates that he has just finished walking across water. "What a shame," the master replies. "For two cents you could have ridden the ferry."

Not all of TM's skeptics are outside the movement. There is some disbelief even among devoted followers. A married couple expresses divided opinion: " I have no doubt that I'll leave the floor," says Devanie Wagner. But her husband, Joseph Wagner, a systems analyst for a research company, denounces the levitation claim as fraud. His wife asserts that she has not seen the flying but that she had heard of it: "I stayed near the door," she recalls. "Finally I heard considerable knocking and the sound of many thuds against the floor and the walls."

Nowadays, a team at the M.I.U. in Iowa is involved in research on the power of brain waves. They hope to establish conclusive evidence that the mind truly can control matter. For years such feats have been associated with the illusions of professional magicians. Who has not seen in sideshows and on television a young woman hypnotized ? The magician causes her to rise several feet above the table on which she lies. Then he passes hoops from head to toe of her levitated body to demonstrate the absence of concealed supports.

If TM can actually prove the ability of some of their followers to levitate, it is up to them to come forth with documentary evidence. Only then will the public come to believe in the validity of their claims. □

Dan Sekeres has been the subject of many articles in newspapers and periodicals. He is rapidly becoming much sought after for his healing powers. He claims that he is not a doctor, nor does he guarantee his methods will work for you, but many persons claim that he was able to give them relief from their various illness.

Dan Sekeres is an English teacher who in recent years has been studying, instructing and practicing foot flexology and the ancient Japanese art of Shiatsu.

THE REMARKABLE DAN SEKERES

BY RON SHILLING

Jack Raines (left) holds up a "for sale" sign on a pair of crutches. Jack hasn't used the crutches since Dan gave him a foot massage in August. Mr. Rains used the crutches for several years due to an automobile accident which almost destroyed his life.

About seven years ago, Jack Raines had a well paying and extremely responsible job. He also had a very nice home on Lake Erie's fashionable Green Garden Boulevard. In short, he had realized the American dream. However, in 1971 Jack suffered an unfortunate accident that dramatically changed his life. In a job-related activity after his normal working hours (he was a contract co-ordinator) he drove a nuclear engineer who specialized as a valve inspector, to the airport. The project he was working on at the time required intense effort and concentration since a minor error or miscalculation could result in catastrophic devastation.

Jack got the Westinghouse engineer safely to the airport but, being conscientious, decided to return to his job to recheck and complete his reports. On his return home, Jack was involved in an automobile accident. He was thrown from his car and his back was broken in three places.

Lucky to be alive, Jack spent over a year in the hospital and over four years in a cast. Since the accident occurred after work and the driver at fault was uninsured, Jack's physical suffering soon began to be accompanied by ever increasing financial hardships.

Jack has been in and out of hospital beds frequently over the last few years. He suffered almost constant pain, even when sitting or lying down. He frequently had trouble sleeping and could barely get around in a wheel chair or on crutches. He had no feeling in his feet and toes and was unable to write with his right hand. He had his phone number changed and unlisted because it was too much of an effort to answer it.

Doctors and chiropractors told him that there was no hope—he would never walk normally again.

Despite his physical pain, financial distress, and recent divorce, I found Jack intelligent, pleasant and about as optimistic as anyone could be under such bleak circumstances.

As Jack unravelled his nightmare, I became pessimistic about his future. No one from Erie had offered him a job or offered to help with his expenses after his wife left. It seemed no one was willing to help. Wait a minute, what about Dan? Why not? There was certainly nothing to lose.

instructing and practicing foot reflexology and the ancient Japanese art of Shiatsu, better known as accupressure. I had known Dan for a few months, and had read several stories about his unusual accomplishments. Arranging a meeting between Jack Raines and Dan seemed like an ideal solution to an unfortunate situation. I contacted Dan.

The results have been truly amazing. Dan first met Jack on August 25, 1978, at Jack's home. I arrived about 15 minutes after Dan and found the two men in the living room with Dan administering a massage to Jack's foot.

In the next few minutes, I saw and heard one of the most impressive and moving events I have ever experienced.

For the first time in seven years, Jack Raines had feeling in his toes. He could move his toes and feel the carpet underneath his feet.

The joy in his face and voice filled the room with a sense of deliverance. He couldn't sit still—he wanted to walk—and he did! Around the living room and kitchen. Laughing and sensing the revival of life he left seven years ago, he said, "Let's go outside, either of you guys bring a football?"

For seven years he had been unable to get to the sidewalk without a wheelchair or crutches. Even then he had to stop to rest in order to let the pain subside. Now, less than an hour after meeting Dan, he was on his fourth trip up and down the driveway and was ready to head around the block as we departed. His last words had the ring of one who was just reborn.

Dan stopped in to see Jack three days later and found him still in great spirits. I talked to Jack that evening and his whole outlook had changed. He had nothing but glowing testimonials for Dan. "No other man on the face of this earth could have done for me what Dan did," he said.

On occasion Jack has referred to Dan as "Doc." Yet, as Dan himself explains, he is not a doctor and makes no guarantees. He also points out that he cannot diagnose a condition, but neither can he cause any harm. He just "normalizes conditions that need to be normalized."

Dan Sekeres has done a remarkable job on Jack Raines. Here he is massaging Jack Rains' neck. He says the massage takes pressure off the nerves causing the whole body to relax.

Because of Dan Sekeres and foot reflexology, Jack has an entirely different view of his life. He is in the process of working on a project that he has dreamed about for a long time but, because of his handicap, was unable to pursue.

By his conservative estimate, Jack has spent over two-and-a-half years in hospitals at a cost of over $100,00 in medical bills and doctors' fees, only to be told unanimously that there was no hope. Yet, two months after his initial treatment with Dan, Mr. Raines can scale a long flight of stairs at a brisk pace without stopping to rest. This is a first for him in over seven years. While Dan's results with Jack were most impressive, I have seen him help others as well, and heard glowing first-hand reports of his many accomplishments.

Foot reflexology has reportedly helped celebrities from Muhammad Ali to Jacqueline Onassis. It has alleviated problems from hearing and sight deficiencies to allowing a woman to have her first child following two miscarriages.

Dan Sekeres has a growing number of people who praise him for the relief he has given them.

Several years ago, Grover Billings, a gas station attendant, was lifting a heavy object and injured his back. He was unable to straighten up. A few hours later, Dan pulled in for gas and asked if he could help. A massage allowed Grover to stand erect and, after the soreness vanished a couple of days later, he had no recurring problems.

Ken Cook had a burning pain at the top of his spinal column and said that after Dan's massage, the pain just vanished. Ken's sister-in-law took a two day seminar on

ENIGMA OF THE HAUNTED SWAMP

BY GARY PARSONS

Like those scattered throughout England, the darkened marshes and pea-soup bogs of Southern France are replete with stories of dread, murder, mayhem, and ghostly doings—especially in the wild Camargue marsh where many individuals are said to have succumbed to its hidden terror — with their lives — some losing their sanity.

The most recent account has Frenchmen whispering in darkened corridors, of a monster haunting the 400-square-miles of marsh surrounding the city of Rodez—a non-human beast with a violent lust for blood.

On the morning of March 3, 1978, Claudette Souchon rode out from her farm in the heart of the Camargue. She was astride her favorite horse, Lucky, and leading another horse, Tommy. Her faithful dog Spot happily trailed alongside. She had planned to be gone for two hours — returning at noon to meet her friends for a shopping spree.

That afternoon of shopping never materialized...

The morning of the third of March marked the beginning of a mystery that to this day has French police completely baffled.

For three days, the 31-year old woman had been missing. A massive search was undertaken to pick up her trail, for it is a well-known fact that someone lost in the Camargue bogs could wander around for days — weeks even — without ever meeting another human being.

Taking up the search, a party of 33 mounted men led by Police Chief, Commissioner Jean Dinard, rode out, attempting to pick up her trail. After half-a-day of searching, they found her horse, Lucky — dead — its body savagely ripped open.

Many people believe that some dreaded horror lurks in the swamps. They warn everyone to stay away from this unearthly area.

Much later, Tommy was found. The horse bore no injuries, but it was highly frightened, hardly able to walk from fear.

Three days later, still searching for the missing woman, they found Claudette's clothing 100 miles away from the farm.

On the afternoon of the following day a woman telephoned the police. She had seen a strange girl near Rodez.

Police immediately scouted the area where they found the woman. Completely nude and covered with mud, Claudette sat on the ground, her eyes glazed over. She was unable to move or to speak. Doctors said she was numb with shock. Her dog Spot lay exhausted beside her.

The preliminary theory of rape was discarded by medical experts. At a hospital in Rodez an examination revealed no signs of a struggle, or that she had been physically assaulted.

Said Commissioner Dinard, "We have no idea what happened to her or her horse Lucky or what frightened the other horse." He added, "But something mysterious went on out there. The wounds on the dead horse were horrible. But it was not attacked by an animal. For there are no claw or bite marks."

"And we do not have an explanation for the burned out glade where we found some of her clothing."

"She has suffered some evil and brutal shock. She was confronted with something of an unknown nature." □

Your psychic voyage through a haunted house can be a very exciting experience.

HOW TO INVESTIGATE A HAUNTED HOUSE

BY ROBERTA FLOYD KRESSE

If your interest in the inexplicable is well known, chances are good that you will someday be approached for help with a haunted house. Hauted houses are not rare and the inhabitants will turn to anyone who may know something about the subject. And since professional ghost-chasers are expensive and difficult to contact, you may be asked to investigate.

What are you going to do?

First, and perhaps most important, never enter a case unless you are fully prepared to stay with it to the end. It will probably be frustrating, time-consuming and at times, even boring. But you must consider yourself on the same level as any other professional. A house painter would hardly leave half the house unpainted; so do not involve yourself in a case you might walk out of in the middle.

Approach the problem with as much logic as you can muster, but avoid giving the family involved the impression you think they're all crazy or vice versa. Suggest logical explanations, if they exist, but listen to the family's objections as well.

Early in your investigation, ask each member of the family to fill out the questionnaire included at the end of this article. You will notice that this questionnaire covers more than just the simple history of the haunting. Researchers are now finding that other paranormal events are often present in a haunting, such as UFO sightings, strange dreams and ESP incidents.

The next step should be a complete history of the house. The family may have information; if not, go to the local county courthouse which has records on when the house was built and all subsequent owners. These records are open to the public, so be firm if some secretary acts as if they aren't.

Contact the local historical society for any "colorful" stories regarding the house, and try to ascertain what, if anything, stood on the grounds before the house was built. Talk to oldtimers in the neighborhood, but try not to present yourself as a ghosthunter, as this might prejudice them against you. Present yourself as a history buff interested in any memories they have about the house from their childhood.

When you have a fairly detailed picture of the history of the house, you can place your haunting in one of several categories:

1) The "malign" house (quite rare) is one that may or may not have a history of haunting but which is, nonetheless, quite unlivable. If you are investigating a malign house, the chances are good the family has moved out before your investigation is well underway.

2) The "classic" haunting includes apparitions, noises and the famous "clammy" feeling. This is most likely connected to former inhabitants of the house.

3) The poltergeist haunting usually has little to do with the house itself but rather is an unconscious rebellion on the part of adolescents in the family.

The nature of the haunting will determine the remaining focus of your investigation. The malign haunting is hard to deal with and you may have the unhappy task of advising the family to simply leave the house. The poltergeist haunting can be best coped with by asking the parents involved to pay a little more attention to their near-teenage child during this difficult time. In extreme cases, psychiatric help may be called for.

In the classic haunting, personal investigation is best. Remember that the family involved has been through a trying time and perhaps has been seeing things not really there, or exaggerating some other incidents. (Your judgment in this will be helped by the number of other people who have seen things in the house.) In any

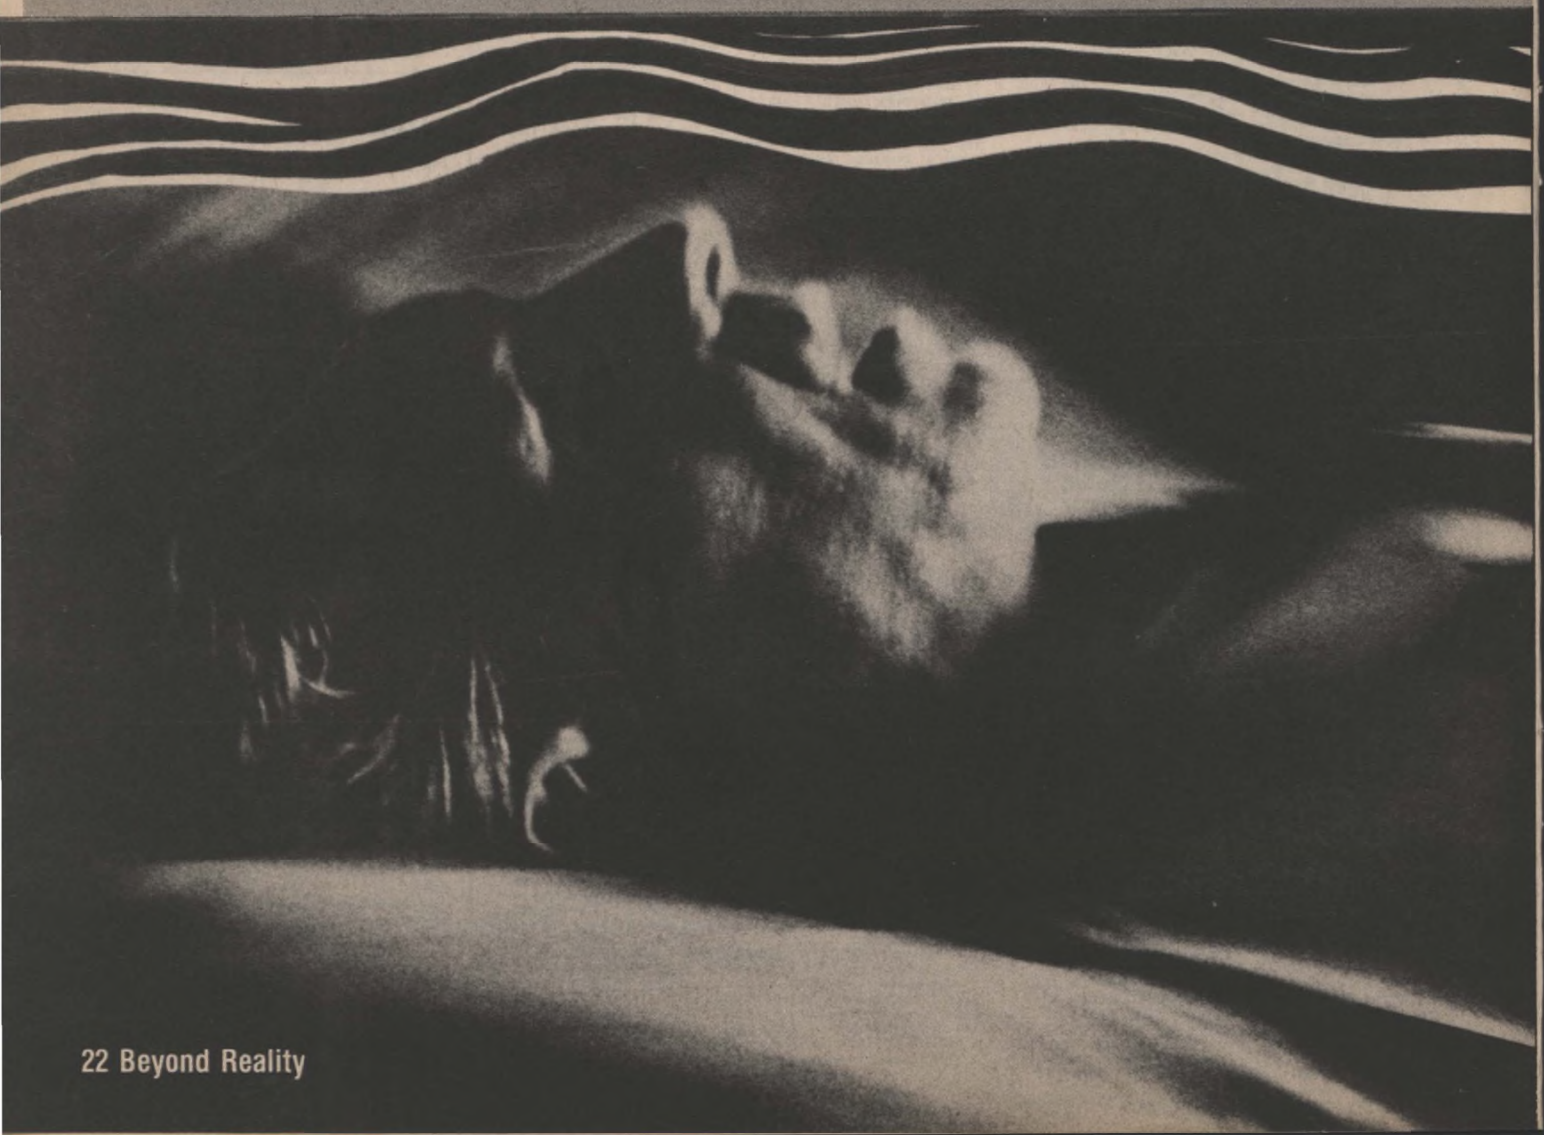
Our subconscious does not repress or evade—it stores our hopes and fears. With a little effort we can tune into this part of the mind, as in our dreams, unlocking a wealth of information which is stored there.

ACT OUT YOUR DREAMS

BY JEANNE ALDERSON



Since early Egyptian and Biblical times, people have regarded their dreams as sources of wisdom and insight. When modern man began industrializing his world, his ego began laying aside a large portion of his real self. By suppressing the subjective and subconscious aspects of life and accepting the regular, rational world of work as reality, man forgot that the subconscious is often more real than conscious life.

Our subconscious does not repress or evade; it stores our experiences, hopes, and fears and with a little effort we can tune into the subconscious part of our mind as it presents itself in our dreams. We can search our dreams to find new perspectives to serve as a springboard for decisions in our daily life.

When you fall asleep, your most significant part of life is just beginning. Dreams may arise from the depths of primitive urges or from the spiritual source within. While we sleep, dreams are providing creative solutions to our problems, as well as teaching, reminding, counseling, or predicting. However, we must make the effort to understand the language.

Dream interpretation is an invitation to take action in our waking life. Rollo May suggests that "the person who has become skillful in the understanding of what he is saying to himself in his dreams can get from them, from time to time, marvelously valuable hints and insights into solutions to his problems." By acting on the messages we get from our dreams, we may be able to avoid personal catastrophe and trauma.

Social Scientist Harmon Bro, who worked with psychic Edgar Cayce, advocates dream recall and interpretation as a means of finding identity and life direction. He believes that interpreting dreams can aid in avoiding a medical crisis, job and marriage termination and depression. Bro writes that Cayce "saw it as important to the process of recalling dreams, that dreamers act upon the dreams they recall. The very act of adding consciousness to the subconscious activity which produces the dream will set currents in motion within the total economy of the dreamer's mind—helpful currents to aid in the interpretation of all dreams." Cayce not only helped people interpret their dreams, he also filled in the parts of the dream the dreamer forgot and then suggested a plan of action. He also indicated that all important events in an individual's life are previewed in dreams. According to Bro, precognitive dreams may be identified by their cool quality and lack of emotion. Cayce accepted communication with dead relatives in dreams as evidence of survival after death.

Dr. Bro believes that "nobody dreams who is unable to interpret and learn from his own dreams." No longer is dream interpretation the province of the psychiatrist or counselor. With a little practice we can all master the art of interpretation.

Visual symbols are the language of dreams and often include visual punning. As an example, recently I dreamed I was in a concentration camp which I interpreted as a reminder for me to concentrate! I knew I had been more easily distracted and absent minded than usual. Some time ago, a dream pictured a thin floor that wobbled every time I enrolled in a course of study at a nearby university.

Interpreting a dream involves interpreting the dreamer. If your translation is correct it should fit your situation. Do not rely on dream books, they are meaningless. Your dream language must fit you. If the meaning of the symbol eludes you, try acting the role of that symbol as if you were playing its part in a play. Our many selves frequently manifest themselves as actual characters in our dreams. Mark Thurston, dream workshop leader at the Humanist Psychology Institute, suggests that you try to determine what the theme of the dream is, and then decide what application it has for daily life.

Facing or accepting the truth as revealed in our dreams is not always easy. Sometimes what we see is too real, fearful or revealing.

J. Everett Irion, a director with the Association for Research and Enlightenment Inc., believes that dreams recur until the consciousness that has to be healed will be worked through. "We are given the opportunity in daily life to heal our dreams," he said. "When you are getting the message across to the real self, you are recognizing reality and accepting it." The real self is the subconscious. When you heal your dreams, they become simpler, clearer, and more relevant to waking life.

Irion believes that every dream is a healing dream in the psychological, physical, or spiritual realm. "You obtain instantaneous healing when you dream you died," he said. "Then you have let die something within you that you needed to let die. You have a new consciousness."

Fears will usually subside if the dreamer works with his dreams and tries to learn what it is he fears. It is safer to know what the dreams are saying than to ignore them.

Psychologist Patricia Garfield and Ann Faraday have experimented with conscious dream control to alter fearful dream images. Dr. Garfield writes: "The essential element in dispelling fear of dream images is to recognize that one is dreaming." This feeling of consciousness during a dream is called lucid dreaming and can be developed through suggestions. "Frightening dream experiences, incongruities, or strange dreamlike qualities can alert your critical thought processes to the point that you realize you are in a dream state. You can learn to easily alter unpleasant dream experiences as they occur without having to escape them by awakening. To hold on to lucidity, you need to maintain a delicate balance between not becoming too emotional and not forgetting that you are dreaming. You may be able to maintain, as the Yogis do, consciousness throughout the transitions from waking to sleeping to dreaming to waking again."

Most people who are genuinely interested in remembering dreams will develop awareness of the connection between the conscious self in both waking and dreaming. The brief period immediately before sleeping and just after awakening seems to be a twilight zone bridging the subconscious and conscious parts of the mind and can be fruitfully used to produce new ideas and insights and to solve problems. This is a meditative-type state, sometimes called the fourth state of consciousness. Creative people can make use of this condition as an aid to creativity. Ben Franklin took short naps everyday to use this creative process. To make it work, you must saturate your attention with the problem and have as much information as possible concerning the subject. The answers may come to you just as you are falling asleep or waking up, or in a dream.

Elias Howe perfected his sewing machine when he fashioned the needle after spears with eye shaped holes near the tips, which he saw in a dream. James Watt inaugurated a process that revolutionized the shotgun lead-shot industry after he was showered with lead pellets in a dream. Much of the basic theory upon which atomic physics is based came from a dream. Mozart and Schuman wrote some of their music after first hearing it in a dream. Film-maker Ingmar Bergman writes and produces films based on his dreams.

"Modern dream research shows that normal people tend to persevere into the night the

People who were pronounced dead, but later revived, have described dying as seeing themselves from points outside their bodies.

They felt as though they were invisible, non-material entities, free of gravity and all material barriers.

IS THERE AN AFTERLIFE?

Is there an afterlife? This question is as old as thinking man.

We know that in prehistoric times, man believed in a life after death. More than 10,000 years ago, the Neanderthal man buried his fellow men with jewelry and flowers, presumably for use in the other world. Ever since, people have buried or burned their dead with ornaments and equipment for use in the afterlife.

Today, immortality in one form or another is promised to believers by all religions. Such an outlook has helped believers to face the event of death with confidence.

But, religious teachings were not designed to stand up to the onslaught of modern science. Modern science and technology, scientific experimentation, and methodical observations leave no room for heaven or hell or Deity. Death now seems the end of life, the end of everything for the individual. In view of all such evidence, the demand by religion to accept immortality on faith alone has little if any credibility.

But the very spirit of scientific inquiry eventually led investigators to tackle several poorly understood phenomena which had been known for a long time: hypnosis, extrasensory perception, clairvoyance, precognitive dreams and what we call death.

At first, these phenomena (except death) had been dismissed by scientists as illusions. But today, hypnosis is recognized as a valid phenomenon. Sufficient evidence has been assembled, through witnesses and experimental inquiry, leaving little doubt that ESP, clairvoyance and precognitive dreams do exist. But, in contrast to these phenomena in the material world, they are not usually found in a customary scientific method, where experiments are conducted and properties are measured repeatedly, often with great precision.

ESP is broadly defined as awareness of things or thoughts, without the benefit of our senses. Dr. Joseph B. Rhine and his colleagues and students at Duke University in Durham, North Carolina, succeeded in measuring ESP quantitatively, by using a card-guessing technique. Although fraud is common in public demonstrations of occult phenomena, Dr. Rhine was able to conclude that ESP does exist to a degree. It varies with the individual, however, and the performance of the individual generally falls off during a series of experiments.

Dr. Rhine began his experimental work at Duke in the Department of Psychology. Later, Rhine's program was established separately, in the Duke Parapsychological Laboratory. In 1965 the Laboratory became independent, as the Institute for Parapsychology of the Foundation for Research on the Nature of Man.

Another researcher, Dr. Elisabeth Kubler-Ross, inquired into the feelings of people who were about to die, and in 1969 she published her findings in a book, On Death and Dying. Surprisingly, she found that such persons had no fear of death and that they were willing to share their serene feelings with other people.

More recently, Dr. Raymond A. Moody, Jr., published interviews with nearly 150 people who had been revived from clinical death (as defined by the absence of pulse, heartbeat, respiration and pupil reflexes). His book Life After Life was published in 1975.

The people whom Dr. Moody interviewed were at first reluctant to talk to him, because they had not been believed earlier when they had tried to tell their nurses or relatives what they had experienced. Sometimes, their listeners even thought that the resurrected person had suffered brain damage during his clinical death, which in some of the cases had lasted as long as 20 minutes.

The experiences of the persons interviewed varied, but Doctor Moody was able to draw some general conclusions:

—All persons stated that there were no words to describe adequately their experiences.

—Upon dying, these persons saw themselves from points outside their bodies. They felt like invisible, non-material entities, free of gravity and material barriers. Living persons could walk right through them.

The persons interviewed had moved through walls, and were able to see and hear other people clearly, but they could not communicate with the living persons around them.

—There followed a period of stress, described by most as being forced through a dark vacuum or a tunnel.

—Most of the victims then felt themselves to be in the presence of an intensly brilliant, but non-blinding light. It seemed to have a benign personality and communicated non-verbally, asked one or two questions and instructed the person to return to life.

In this book Dr. Moody pointed out the similarities of these present-day experiences with those described in a Tibetan manual for monks, dating back to about 800 A.D.

These reports by Dr. Moody partly resemble the story of the soldier, Er, told by Plato in his Republic (book X), documented in about 375 B.C. Er had been killed in a battle in Asia Minor. Ten days later, when people were piling the dead bodies on a large pyre for cremation, Er woke up. He related that he had found himself in a large meadow. Deceased people had arrived continuously. He was approached there by what seemed to be a supervisor, who informed him that he must return to life and relate what he had seen.

The experiences of the persons interviewed by Dr. Moody remind us of the ancient Egyptian belief recorded in their writings beginning about 3000 B.C. The writings state that upon death, the immortal soul, Ba, leaves the body. Ancient Egyptian paintings show the soul hovering above the body of the deceased in the form of a bird or butterfly. The ancient Greeks, eager pupils of the Egyptians, took over this idea and named the soul with the Greek word for butterfly psyche.

The impressions of a radiant light, experienced by the people who were interviewed by Dr. Moody, also remind us of the transfiguration of Jesus reported in the New Testament (Luke 9:29), and of the light the mystics describe when they feel themselves near God.

It is very likely that such reports are based on experiences similar to those of the persons interviewed by Dr. Moody. Even so, the basic objection to Dr. Moody's findings is that the revived subject may not have been dead in the sense of being permanently lifeless. This raises the question when is a person dead? Evidently, the clinical criteria are not sufficient in some cases. All we can state with a reasonable degree of certainty is that people such as those interviewed by Dr. Moody passed out of life temporarily, and may have been on their way to permanent death. If this is true, it follows that the act of dying is a rather pleasant and painless experience.

From all the compiled evidence, it stands to reason that death is not an end, but instead a continuation, that when the soul leaves the body, it is housed in another "vehicle," that once again returns to gather experience made necessary by having lived before.

Looking beyond this stage, we find ourselves in the position of the ancient Greeks, who had to draw conclusions from the observations of natural processes, without the benefit of experimentation. They concluded, for instance, that the mutual convertibility of water into ice or steam could only take place if water consisted of minute particles. The ancient Greeks did not have the equipment to prove this, but they were right!

The most convincing evidence of life after death would be some form of contact with dead people, and contact with the dead is indeed a main part of popular occultism. The vehicle for this is the seance. In a darkened room, a dead person is expected to appear and manifest himself through the voice of a medium, or to indicate his thoughts by actuating mechanical devices such as writing, or by indicating a message on a ouija board. When we compare these techniques to the statements of Doctor Moody's subjects, namely, that in their state of clinical death (which may represent the first phase of death) they were unable to communicate with their environment (presumably because in its abstract state a soul cannot operate mechanical equipment we must conclude that much of the manifestations of the dead cited in seances are based on deceit.

Because of this, the problem of communicating with the dead revolves around finding a way of letting them enter our consciousness directly, without having to use mechanical energy which sensory communication requires in our material world.

Our way of gaining such access to our consciousness is through the entrance into our mind in its relaxed state, as in dreaming. However, if we can establish contact with the deceased through our subconscious mind in dreams, we meet the same two limitations as in ESP: no control over scheduling contacts, and lack of reproductibility.

The process of dreaming has aroused the curiosity of man in all ages, and it requires a few explanations. In antiquity, all dreams were believed to be prophetic. Through the recent research of Dr. Sigmund Freud and others, we have acquired the information that most dreams are wishful fantasies, or replays of personal experiences. And today we can measure electrical brain-waves and rapid eye movement of dreaming persons. But even these measurements tell us nothing about the dream itself.

There is no doubt that occasionally a dream can be visionary. Such rare precognitive dreams can be sufficiently vivid, leaving a lasting impression on the person's mind. Such visions can show, often in a hazy and indistinct outline, events that are going to occur at a future time. Sometimes, such a dream shows events that are happening currently, similar to clairvoyance of the waking mind or events which have occurred in the past. In such dreams, time does not seem to exist.

We illustrate this with some examples. The appearance of a murdered person in the dream of his friend is told by Cicero in his book, De Divinatione, about 50 B.C. Two traveling friends had stopped overnight in a city, and found accommodations at two different places. In the middle of the night, friend A, who was staying at an inn, appeared to friend B in a dream, asking for help. Friend A had a quarrel with the innkeeper, and the man was about to kill him. Friend B awoke, got up and started out to rush to friend A's assistance. Then he stopped — it was the middle of the night, and only a dream! He went back to bed, and to sleep. Soon, friend A appeared in a second dream. This time he told friend B that the innkeeper had killed him. Would friend B please rescue his body for proper burial, by recovering it from under a load of manure on a cart which the innkeeper was going to drive out of the city gate early next morning? Friend B rushed to the city gate at dawn. Sure enough, there came a cart loaded with manure. B asked the driver what the load was for, and the driver fled. B found his friend's body under the manure.

Then we have the report of a message from the distant past of about 3000 years ago, which came to Professor H. V. Hilprecht, a noted Assyriologist at an eastern university. Hilprecht was able to read copies of two small fragments of cuneiform writing, which had been found in the ancient city of Nippur. But the texts made no sense to him. One night, in a dream, a priest of the temple of Baal in Nippur appeared to the professor. The priest told Hilprecht that the two pieces of writing belonged together, and should be read lying side by side. They came, said the priest, from an inscription on an agate seal cylinder which had been given by the king of Nippur to the temple of the god Baal. Years later the king had ordered that the statue of the god Baal should wear two agate earrings. But stone was hard to come by in ancient Nippur. So the priest cut the seal cylinder into two parts, thereby achieving the required earrings. After awaking, Professor Hilprecht placed the two inscriptions side by side. Now he could read the message— that the king had given this seal to the temple of Baal. Still later, Hilprecht had a chance to examine the two earrings themselves, which had been found in the temple at Nippur. As he expected, the two parts fitted together perfectly!

With precognitive (prophetic) dreams, we are on less firm ground. This is chiefly because prophecies of events tend to be colored (unintentionally) by the visionary person after the event has happened. But there are many prophetic dreams recorded in the literature. A famous example on record is the death of Abraham Lincoln, which he himself foresaw.

It does seem, therefore, that the human mind in a state of relaxation does have some ability to recognize past, present, and future events and to communicate non-verbally with persons involved.

Accepting such timeless and forceless communication is not as strange as it might seem at first. It reminds us of the findings of the philosopher Immanuel Kant. He proved, 200 years ago, that the concepts of space and time do not exist as much, but that our minds are programmed to work in a framework of space and time. Recognizing this, we must conclude that outside our senses and concepts there exists a Beyond. We might call this the Great Beyond, in which our human concepts of space and time don't apply.

Such a Great Beyond can accommodate visions of our relaxed mind or reported incidences of clairvoyance such as that of the famous Swedish engineer and theologian, Emanuel Swedenborg. In 1759, returning from a trip to England and staying at the house of a friend in Goteborg, Swedenborg clearly saw and described details of a huge fire in Stockholm, about 250 miles away. Days later (radio and other high-speed communications did not exist) special messengers verified every detail of Swedenborg's description.

Our experiences with dreams, ESP, and clairvoyance invite us to look for some common denominator which can accommodate these phenomena. The existence of a Great Beyond does provide Doctor Khalil was amazed as he examined the artifact. Although the box was marked "bird models," it was clearly not a bird, but the fuselage and wings of an aircraft which fit together in a slot!

DID THE ANCIENT EGYPTIANS HAVE FLYING MACHINES?

It was an ordinary cardboard carton torn in places and dust covered with age. Across the front was chalk-marked the words, "bird models."

The carton was discovered ten years ago rotting away in an obscure and darkened corner of the Cairo Museum. It had been lying there for over 74 years, most probably cast aside when it was catalogued, stored, and forgotten.

It was on the morning of July 14, 1969, when Doctor Khalil Messiha went into the basement. When he first noticed it, Messiha, Egyptologist and prominent archaeologist, noted from tags and markings that the carton's contents had first been discovered in a tomb at Saggara in 1895, and had been in storage in the museum's cellar ever since.

Turning on all of the basement lights, the doctor saw that, within the carton, the contents were quite clearly bird figurenes, just as the inscription on the large box signified. The artifacts were quite easily identifiable to Messiha as he turned each one over in his hand, because he knew from study and long experience that the ancient Egyptians had been noted animal artisans.

However, one particular figurene in the batch caught his eye immediately. The specimen was in two parts. It was clearly not a bird but the fuselage and single wing from an aircraft which fit together in a slot. He knew that no bird or bird drawing he'd ever seen had an upright or vertical tail such as this model. The doctor, in his youth, was an avid model airplane builder, and he discovered these discrepancies at once. And yet, this figure too, as marked, was part of the original batch.

The objects were immediately carried upstairs and shown to the many highly trained experts who agreed that this one piece was not a model of a bird. It bore its original number, Special Register No. 6547, was dated 1895, and after the date was written Saqqara Expedition-Egypt, just like the others.

The analysis of this particular artifact had been so convincing that a special committee of scientists was set up to study it. The scientists, tops in the fields of archaeology and Egyptology, identified the object as an aircraft, complete with fuselage, tail assembly, and pilot's compartment, but they dated the piece as having been entombed in the year 200 B.C.

As was their custom, according to Dr. Messiha, the ancient Egyptians were avid scale model enthusiasts. Before they constructed anything, from warships and chariots to pyramids and irrigation canals, they always made extremely precise scale models.

Indeed, the discovery in the basement shook the scientific community to its very foundations by daring to intimate that the ancient Egyptians knew of flight, and designed, built, and even flew their own aircraft.

Photographs, drawings and measurements of the "flying model" were sent to noted scholar and scientist Ivan T. Sanderson who set out to draw his own diagrams of the model precisely to scale. Sanderson sent his finished scale drawings to a number of designers, aerodynamics engineers, professional pilots, and glider builders. He asked them each for an identification, not mentioning anything about where the original model was found or what he and his team of experts thought it might be.

All but one labeled it a glider.

The one who didn't—an expert technician working on large wind tunnels for a company under contract to NASA, said that it was exactly like an advanced design still on the drawing boards for a very low-powered supercargo plane meant to carry huge loads below 60 mph. The gimmick, the technician said about the ancient model sent to him, is "the counter-dihedral wings which curve at the tips."

Sanderson and Dr. Messiha made blueprints from the photographs. An examination of the blueprints, after they were completed, disclosed the startling fact that the object in question is both aerodynamically and mathematically perfect. Sanderson said, "It would seem as though the ancient designers first worked it all out on the drafting board and then built the model. It is an established fact that the ancient Egyptians were advanced in mathematics, geometry and solid geometry. To have designed a full scale working model from the replica discovered in the museum's basement took more knowledge than we ever suspected they had.

Sanderson, as well as other experts, say that the gliders, rather than used for warfare, were few in number and available only to the priests and the semi-divine pharoah.

It is quite obvious that the model found in the basement of the Cairo Museum is quite unlike the solidly-cast, hit or miss construction of others found.

This glider is the end product of much engineering, involving computational mathematics and physics. It required a higher degree of effort than it would take to have built a simple child's toy. This is readily seen, not only in its general scope, but by a thorough examination of the tail's lower portion. That part of the flying model is raggedly broken. What's more, it was originally hollow.

Could this hollow area have been originally intended to house an exhaust nozzle for a jet? A fact or an outrageous suggestion? Either way, it is offered simply because flying machines are suggested in a number of Sanskirt texts which had been translated and published in 1956 by V. Raghavan. Raghavan's paper, entitled "Yantras or Mechanical Contrivances in Ancient India" centers around Bhaja, a scientist who mentions an aerial machine shaped like that of a huge bird with a wing on each side.

Bhaja explains the motive force like this: "In the bowels of the structure, there is a fire-chamber with mercury placed over a flame. The power generated by the heated mercury, helped by the concurrent action of the wings which are flapped by a rider inside, makes

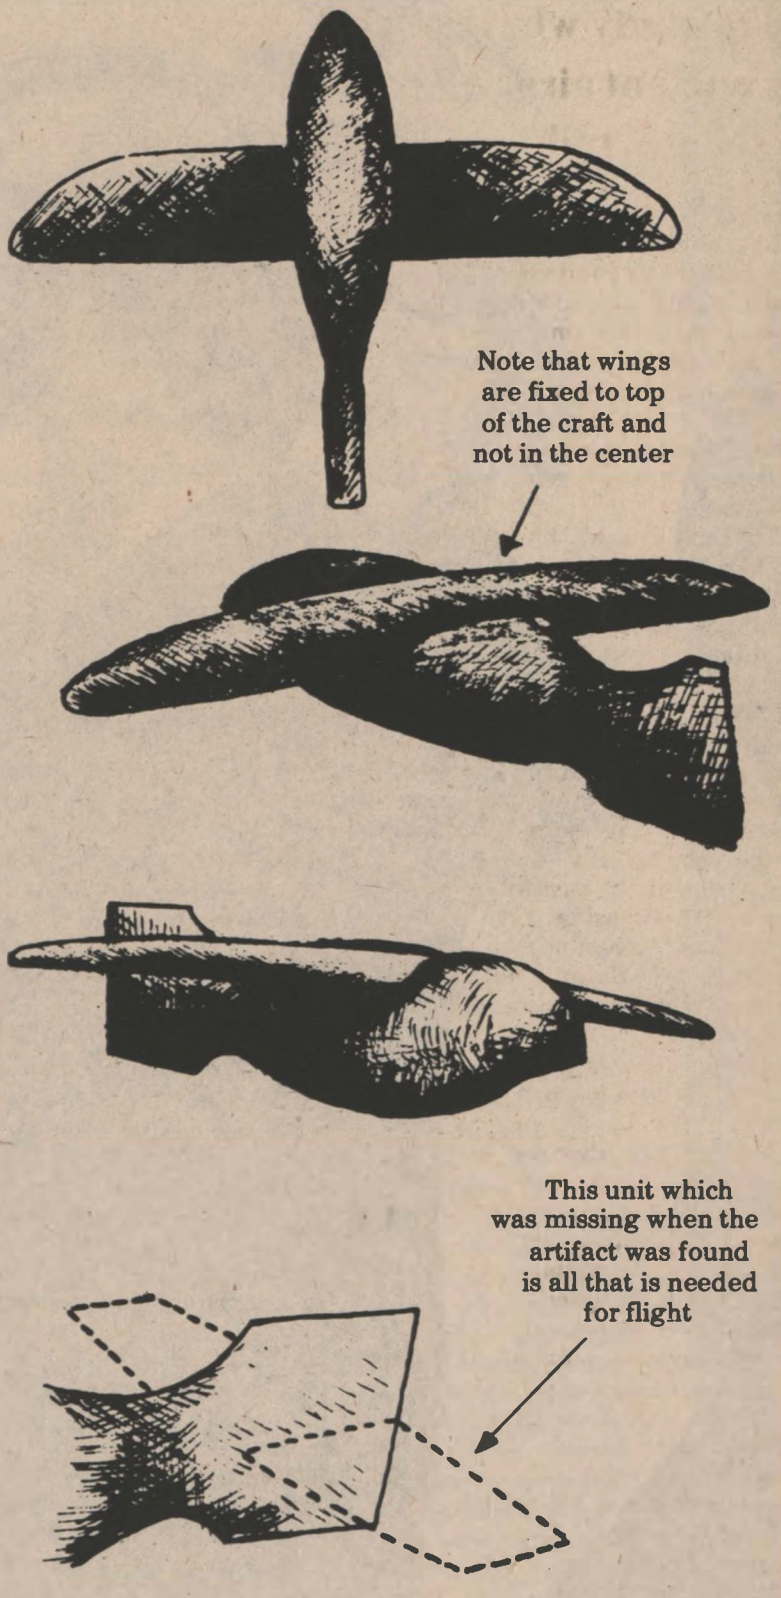
THREE VIEWS OF MODEL AIRCRAFT WHICH DATES BACK TO ANCIENT EGYPT



The ancient Egyptian plane is extraordinarily similar to the modern glider. The missing tailpiece is the only thing neccessary to complete the artifact. The tailpiece was probably overlooked when the plane was put in a box and marked "bird models." It took much ingenuity and effort for the ancient Egyptians to develop a craft of this type.

It is exactly like an advanced design, still on the drawing board for a super-cargo plane.

Modern man has always recognized Ancient Egypt as the birthplace of civilization. Yet, the artifact illustrated here—thought to be a bird model until recently—gives the Ancient Egyptian Civilization new authenticity. Skeptics are inclined to call this discovery a hoax, yet renowned experts in the field such as Ivan T. Sanderson and Dr. Messiha, say the artifact is the replica of a genuine aircraft.

PORTHOLES THROUGH TIME AND SPACE

While many men of science are now scanning the galaxies for new worlds to explore, many more are looking to our own planet in an attempt to probe its age old mysteries—from the depths of the oceans to the bowels of the earth.

For countless centuries man has dreamed of exploring the far horizons of space, of touching distant planets and returning home again safely.

When astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin, Jr., landed their Apollo XI Eagle on the moon's Sea of Tranquility, on July 21, 1969, that dream was at last realized. However, is it possible that this dream was realized centuries ago in another form—time travel?

While many men of science are now scanning the galaxies beyond the moon for new solar systems to explore, many more are looking to our own planet in an attempt to probe its age-old mysteries—from the depths of the oceans to the bowels of the earth.

One of the enigmas constantly challenging scientific scrutiny is time portals, invisible windows through which a handful of human beings are said to have ventured, emerging at different periods in our earth's history—staying for a brief span, observing, and returning through the same "window" to their own time and place.

Mention of these "entrances" and "exits" which lead to and from the past have been written up in many scientific journals throughout the years, calling attention to the fact that such doorways do indeed exist, and from time to time have actually been penetrated.

Psychic researchers burrowing headlong into the enigma have come up with what they now believe to be solid evidence of twelve such natural time tunnels existing on the earth's surface: in Norway, Panama, the United States, Egypt, Spain, France, North Africa, Italy, Russia, Ireland, Israel, and the Hawaiian Islands.

These windows have manifested themselves on rural country farms, on city streets, and along country lanes. Many are also located on the high seas.

In the annals of the Soviet Psychic Society comes a report made during the late summer of 1962. At high noon of August 14, Vladimar Ritzsik, a Moscow elementary school teacher had been vacationing at a campground on the outskirts of the Karelian Isthmus, the country's former capital which was once considered a city of classical beauty. The city was a brilliant international cultural and social center called Petrograd.

Ritzsik glanced up at the burning orb of mid-day sun and walked to his camper, reaching for a pair of dark sun glasses which he left on the seat. It was then he noticed something strange.

On the ground, approximately ten yards from where he stood, the sun's rays traced two faint vertical lines, as though side by side, running parallel and approximately twelve feet apart at its base, the tops joined together much like the top of a triangle. Ritzsik would comment later that the space between the lines, or pillars, at its farthest-spaced base point, reflected a weird, almost double image, as though the ground—grass and shrubbery beneath it—blended together. But the ground surrounding the reflection had been quite normal.

"It seemed as though the pillars being traced on the ground resembled a doorway of sorts, or a window through which a man could easily fit," he said.

Fascinated by the clever trick nature seemed to be playing on his eyes, the school teacher cautiously approached the design etched on the ground in front of him. The pulsating it gave off grew even louder, and at that point, the closer he came to the strangely-traced pattern, the more he thought he heard the sound of roaring crowds of people.

"I moved back, out of the triangle, and the noise suddenly stopped. I looked around, but all was quiet. Then I moved in closer, and the sounds came again, growing louder with each approaching step I took."

At that point, Ritzsik even thought he heard the staccato of gunfire, automobile engines and the whinnies of horses, their hooves clomping against cobblestones—all eminating from within that confined space.

Finally, curiosity getting the better of him, Ritzsik moved full into the center of the strange triangle being traced by the sun's rays.

It was then, he reported to the Soviet Psychic Society, that he was no longer in the campground but instead, found himself on a paved city street full of people.

"I know it sounds as if I had one vodka too many," Ritzsik reported, "but the street where I was standing was in Petrograd, my country's capital, renamed St. Petersburg in 1914. The crowds that gathered were striking workers and they were seizing the capital in bloody street fighting, a coup, unsuccessfully being put down by police on horseback. People were going crazy. Somehow, I was projected back in time—it was 1917, and I was in fact, caught up in the Russian Revolution."

Ritzsik described how Czarist Russia, reeling under the blows of a terrible world wide war, near famine, popular discontent, palace intrigue, and a shattered economy, collapsed. He said he witnessed food riots and mass army desertions, stood toe to toe with the crowds as they shouted outside the palace grounds for the ousting of Czar Nicholas and Czarina Alexandra.

He further said that a short, stocky, bald man stood on a podium near the Imperial Palace, preaching revolution and the overthrow of the Czarist government.

Ritzsik described the speaker as having a large head, small mongloid eyes, a high forehead and a red beard. The man, addressing the throng, he said, had a quizzing, half-contemptuous, half-smiling look.

The man he described was Nikolai Lenin, the Russian Revolution leader. He suddenly began fearing for his own life—for the mounted police began moving into the the throng using clubs and guns to break up the melee.

Suddenly finding a hole in the crowd, he stepped back several paces, and no sooner, found himself back at his original campsite. Approximately two hours had elapsed, and the bizarre triangle was already beginning to vanish as the late afternoon sun rose higher in the sky.

Just about three years after Vladimar Ritzsik's strange encounter on the Karelian Isthmus of Soviet Russia, another weird happening of the same nature was about to take place in Southern Montana at the site of the General George Armstrong Custer Monument. The area marks the historically famous battle of the Little Bighorn which was fought on June 25, 1876.

Perhaps no single battle in U.S. combat history had given rise to more commentary or controversy than that which has become known as "Custer's Last Stand." It was fought between 700 troops of the U.S. 7th Cavalry and some 3,000 warriors of the great Sioux nation residing in the camp of the Hunkpapa Medicine Man—Chief Sitting Bull.

On the afternoon of October 14, 1964, Steven R. Miller, a biologist of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, his wife Della, and their three children, ages 14, 16, and 18, had been visiting the 765 acre Monument which rises in Northern Wyoming in the Bighorn Mountains and flows northward to enter into Southern Montana, joining the Bighorn River at Hardin.

It was approximately three minutes before noon when the family decided to explore the vast Bighorn mountain range. Breathing the clean and fresh mountain air, the elder Miller and his youngest son, Steve, Jr., climbed a small hill to explore even further the vast horizon which had been, some 103 years before, a bloody battlefield. Mrs. Miller and their two other children tagged along not far behind, leisurely enjoying the warm afternoon sun and the splendid mountainous view. Signposts were everywhere, calling attention to road directions, paths, restroom and restaurants spotted through the area.

Suddenly, Steven Jr. bounded playfully from his fathers side and ran ahead, shouting that the ground was moving. Miller noticed it too, and before he was able to stop his son, the boy ran into the center of two sun-traced pillars on the flat, grassy ground. In less than five seconds, right before the horrified eyes of Miller, his wife and their two other sons, the boy vanished—as though physically disintegrating into the environment—within the strange tracing of sunlight on the ground.

Mrs. Miller's frantic screams brought other tourists running to the spot as well as uniformed mounted National Park Police. But they arrived only moments after Miller himself bounded after his son within the triangular shaped pyramid emitted by the sun's rays.

In exactly 16 minutes, Miller and his son re-emerged, expressions of terror and shock evident on both their faces. They were shaking. The story Miller told defies the imagination and staggers the senses. Both of Miller's hands, as well as his clothing had been covered with blood.

"The air was a dull gray, and smoke color," a frightened Miller told authorities later, "probably due to the thousands of shots that must have been fired."

"At first I thought the whole thing was very funny, feeling my son, and myself, were seeing something on a giant movie screen, coupled with a bit of trick photography. We even started to laugh; and then I looked behind me, expecting to see my wife and the rest of our family huddled together taking in the same spectacle."

"That's when I suddenly became frightened. Behind me was nothing but wide open plain and clear sky for as far as the eye could see. The area my son and I found ourselves in was nothing like the park we had been in just moments before."

"I called my wife by name, and our children. We both did, but there was no answer. No sound at all in fact, only our echoes piercing the mountains."

"The stench of death and decay was everywhere. It was real, believe me. It was so bad that my son vomited on the ground."

"Those dead bodies—all young men—on the ground around us were no props. They were very real.

Miller told officials how he and his son had fallen over the bodies trying to get out of the area, and how after taking a few steps backward, they had been caught in a "whirlwind" and propelled back into the park.

Their clothing and the blood stains on their hands were sent to the Blood Analysis Division of the FBI in Helena, Montana. The verdict: The Blood had been real, human blood, and not their own.

The experiences of both Vladimar Ritzsik and the Miller family, as well as the sworn testimony of police and civilian witnesses who had seen father and son enter and exit from the strange light on the ground, would lend a great deal of credence to the assumption that such time tunnels are not the results of a fiction-writer's overworked imagination.

During the early spring of 1955, a Belfast woman noticed a weird configuration being traced by the sun's rays on the ground just outside of her home. She walked into it and was transported back to fifteenth century Ireland, where she maintains she remained for a month-and-a-half. When she returned, describing the same weird sun-tracings on the ground, she was dressed in authentic clothing of that period. The history of the family she said she visited was traced. Indeed such a family did exist, and everything the woman told was authenticated.

A Milan fashion designer told of disappearing "in a triangular maze etched by the sun on the ground" in 1925. He said he saw life as it was in his city 200 years before, and in such detail that experts said he couldn't have made it up.

On the morning of May 14, 1969, John Casper, a Wisconsin

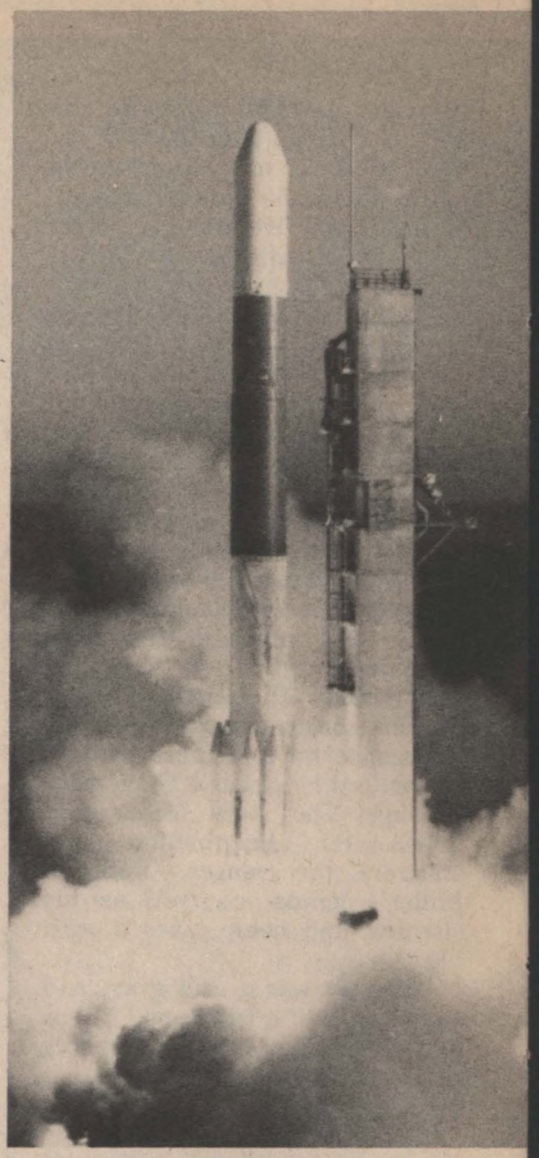
REPORT FROM NASA

NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION

BY SAMUEL BELIL



The Air Force research satellite SCATHA was successfully launched by the Kennedy Space Center aboard Delta 148.

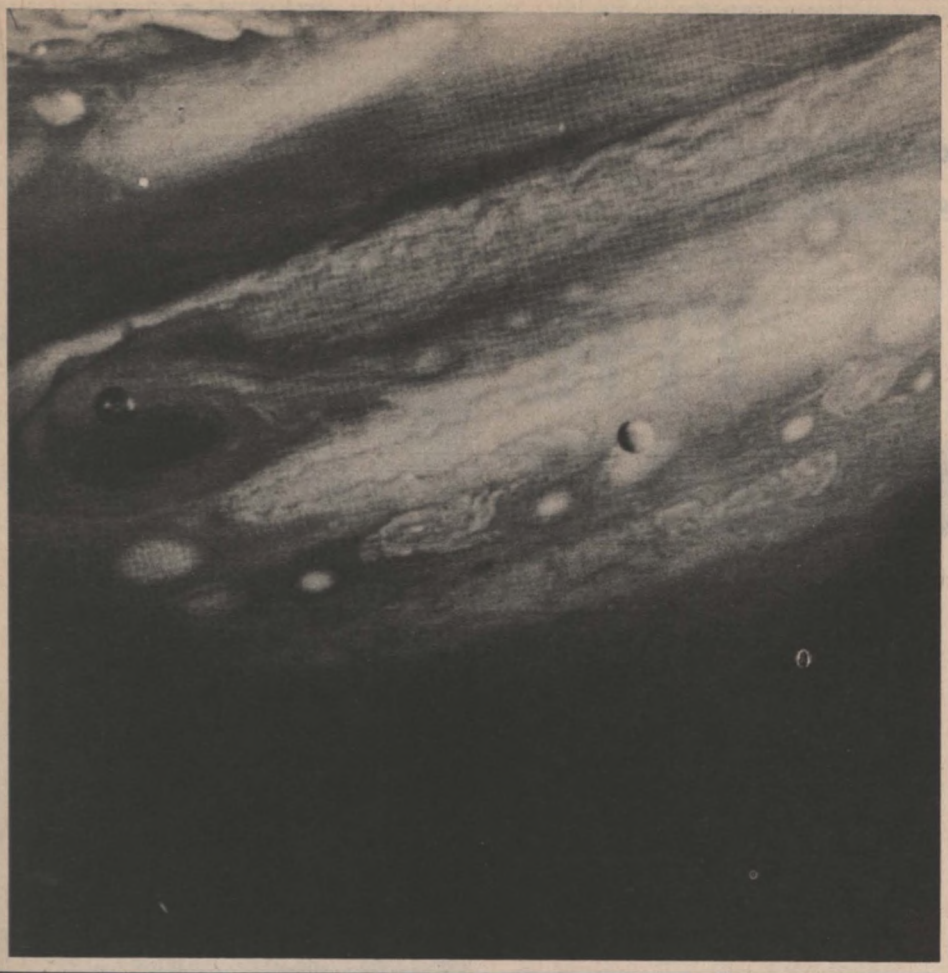
The satellite derives its name from Spacecraft Charging At High Altitudes.

It carries a total of 13 experiments designed to arrive at solutions to the problem of "static charging" which has damaged previous satellites.

NASA engineer Frank J. Nola tinkers with a revolutionary gadget he invented to reduce power consumption of electrical motors used in homes and industry.

His inexpensive Power Factor Controller (PFC) seen here can cut the energy consumed by common motors such as the one at the left by as much as 65%.

Nola developed the unit while working on a Solar Heating and Cooling project for NASA.



Voyager 1 took this photo of Jupiter and two of its satellites (Io and Europa) on February 13, 1979. Io is about 220,000 miles above Jupiter's Great Red Spot; Europa is about 375,000 miles above Jupiter's clouds.

Although both satellites have about the same brightness, Io's color is very different from Europa's. The photo was assembled from three black and white negatives by the Image Processing Lab at Jet Propulsion Laboratory (JPL) which manages and controls the Voyager project for NASA.

Jerry Longanecker (standing), International Ultraviolet Explorer (IUE) project manager, and Fred Espaneak, scope operator, watch a viewing screen at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center, as an image of the first star observed by IUE appears.

Launched January 26, 1979 from Cape Canaveral, Florida, IUE is designed to study a wide range of celestrial objects in the ultraviolet region of the spectrum, largely inaccesible to the ground-based telescopes.

Studies will range from planets in our own solar system to some of the most distant objects in the universe, including quasars, pulsars, and black holes in space.

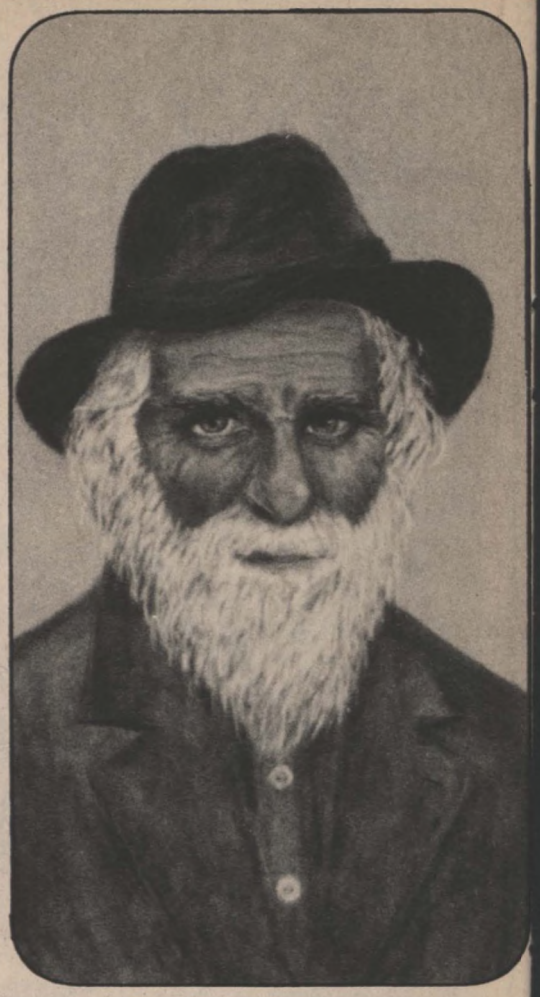
"My mind was being urged on—as though some unseen force was guiding me."

THE PORTRAIT THAT HAD TO BE



The old mountain house was too full of eerie shadows for one to feel comfortable when all alone—especially on a rainy day. Although the big log fire was sending friendly spatters of light across the room, I felt chilled, knowing that soon the faint aroma of pipe tobacco would begin to fill the house again, which was astonishing, as neither my husband—nor I—smoked.

I hurried into the kitchen and put another log in the wide fireplace, poured myself a cup of tea and sat down before my easel. Ignoring the thunder of the rain outside, I slowly mixed my paints, but found the stormy day changing my mental conception of an autumn landscape. The hills outside the window were splashed with colors that only western North Carolina can produce.

Deep into this mood, brush in hand, I was urging my mind to create a scene. This time, however, a man's face slowly began to form on the clean, white canvas. I could see a tattered old hat sitting jauntily on the head of an old man with a long beard. His deep set eyes fairly begged to be painted.

"Well, why not?" I mused. Portraits sell at art shows just as easily as landscapes. I shivered slightly as my brush moved effortless across the canvas. To avoid the staring eyes, which bothered me while painting in the other features, I started on the old hat first. Try as I would, however, the eyes came through. I wanted to paint them a soft brown, but my brush picked up blue-grey by mistake.

"O.K. old man, then you'll be a blue eyed charmer!"

Now for the background, wide planks, for sure, and barn red. I hummed with happiness as my creation slowly came to life. Stepping back to get a new perspective, I grinned at the somber old man. His eyes seemed to twinkle, but the deep lines in his face gave a no-nonsense expression. His beard seemed almost too long and pointed, the result of my hand slipping, but I decided to leave it so.

Even before the paints were dry I placed him in an antique frame. When I hung him on the wall across from the old stone fireplace his eyes seemed to be looking deep into the embers of the log fire—just as though he belonged there.

That afternoon after lunch, as I walked slowly across the room, the old man's eyes followed me. I turned my back to him and walked to the opposite side of the room.

Glancing up quickly, I was horrified to find them still watching me. This shook me so much that I ran out of the house toward the driveway. The soft rain was refreshing and soon I could hear the school bus straining up the curving mountain road. I would stand here, calmly, and wait for my child to arrive with the laughing, screaming children. When she finally emerged from the bus her bright eyes and long blond hair brought me back into a normal world and I was lost in her happy chatter.

The rain kept up it's dreary pattern for days, and as I tried to avoid the staring eyes of the portrait I resorted to painting scenes from outside each window, being careful to keep my back to the portrait. Gradually I noticed that I was losing control over my paintings. Odd looking trees, or a ramshackle woodshed would appear on the canvas before I could lift my brush. These unusual items looked very old and quaint, especially an old springhouse and a fur covered bench beneath an old juniper tree.

After the sixteenth day of rain I was thinking of moving back to Alabama over the protests of my dear husband. When he left for work that day I was so disconcerted I sat right down in front of the portrait and soon realized we were staring hard at each other. He really should be replaced by a sunny landscape, I was thinking, when I had an irresistable urge to go upstairs toward the east bedroom. Not now, I thought, as I found myself getting up and walking toward the stairway. Going up and into an attic room we hadn't had time to finish, I stood by the small window and noticed a loose board on the floor. Without knowing why, I moved it with my foot. I wasn't too surprised to find several old letters, a deed, and a photograph of a young lady with an old fashioned hair-do. The afternoon was spent reading the old love letters and wondering who the girl was. Her lovely dark hair spilled over her sheer white dress. How I longed to paint her portrait.

Top [left] portrait of the old man which the artist, above was compelled to paint. The artist, Eva Burgin, felt an urge to finish the painting. She later found that the old man she had painted was once the owner of the house in which she lived—Samuel Lance. Lance had built the house for his wife, Rose Lance, whom the author labled "the girl in white," (see insert above).

Taking my treasures downstairs, I glanced at the old man and was astonished to note that his eyes were soft and misty. I certainly didn't paint his eyes with such an expression! Confused, I looked up again and there he was, just as before, smug and serene.

Several days later the rain stopped and I was spending more and more time outdoors planting flowering bulbs for the coming spring. One morning while I was sitting on a rock in the middle of the stream, dangling my grimy feet in the cool water, I watched a late model car pull into the winding driveway. I noticed a California plate as two elderly people emerged from the parked car. They were looking at the house, talking excitedly and then I realized they were not lost in the mountains, but had come here for a reason.

As I waded toward the bank of the stream I saw them pointing to an area where we had uncovered a cold spring which had been covered over with laurel. I called out a friendly hello, and as they turned in my direction they also began to walk toward me, the old gentleman helping the stooped little lady across the lawn. They were smiling, and the man removed his hat, revealing a fine mist of grey hair.

"You live here?" he asked politely.

"Yes, I do," I answered, wondering why they were so interested in the place. Their bright eyes were taking in my wet, soppy clothes.

"Well m'am, my name is Cecil Lance and this is my cousin, Mrs. Mae Owen." She smiled a cheerful greeting. "We used to visit our great uncle, Mr. Samuel Lance who lived here when we were children," he added.

Mae tilted her head until her bi-focals found my face, "We are visiting friends at Cedar Mountain and were just hoping we could see the old place just once more."

"As I began to paint, a man's face began to form on the canvas. I could see a tattered old face with a long beard; his deep-set eyes begging me to finish the painting."

She smiled hopefully. "We hope you won't mind?"

Trying to contain my excitement, I welcomed them with a flair that didn't exactly match my appearance. Cecil showed us where he had carved his name in a large stone that was part of the chimney. In the few months we had lived here I had never noticed it.

I led them into the living room and told them to "look around," while I made a pot of coffee. When I returned they were looking at the portrait of the old man with great interest.

"Where on earth did you get this picture?" Mae asked in her high, incredulous voice.

"Oh, I—I just painted it," I answered, as confused as they were. While we stood there sipping our coffee and looking up at the painting, his eyes were saying strange things to these people. The old goat!

"Well, no," I said through tight lips, "I merely created the old character. You know, sort of out of my head." My throat was so dry I excused myself and rushed into the kitchen for a cool drink of water.

"Just exactly the way I remember him," Cecil was saying, "except he always had that old pipe in his mouth." I dropped my glass, then picked it up with shaking hands.

Mae chuckled."Yes, that's the same ole Lance alright—even to that hat he always wore, rain or shine."

We went outside and they sat in the porch swing, chatting like happy children as they looked out over the yard. Cecil wanted to know what had happened to the old springhouse. At that, I excused myself and hurried inside the house for my paintings. I might as well try to get some clues as to the unusual trees, buildings, etc. that I had painted without too much control over my subject. They looked at each painting with great care. They recognized the old springhouse, as well as every strange tree and shrub I had painted, even though they were not here anymore.

"We had a big rope swing in this," Cecil explained, as he eyed the paintings. Mae pointed to the last painting, where I had put in the old fur covered bench. The juniper tree was still here, and Mae told me that the bench was covered with goat fur, smiling softly as she spoke.

They sat peacefully for a while, then Cecil turned to me with a

SPIRIT MESSAGES TO A PSYCHIC

BY MURIEL STIFFLER

Mary Pompeo didn't help earn her way through Mercyhurst College in Erie, Pennsylvania by waiting tables or washing dishes, but by demonstrating her psychic skills. One of the most startling incidents during these performances before out-of-town groups concerned a woman who sat ashen-faced among the audience, her arms crossed over a pocketbook held on her lap.

Mary's invisible spirit helper, Paschi, who stood beside her on the stage, indicated this woman as the recipient of the next psychic message. As was her custom, Mary asked the lady to say "hello" to get a preliminary "feel" of the situation. After the lady spoke, Mary felt an on rush of emotion and repeated Paschi's words to her that she was greatly in need of love. As the woman began to weep quietly, Paschi told Mary to do a strange thing:

"Tell her to give you what she has in her purse!"

Mary hesitated. "If it's money or something personal, that's none of my business."

Paschi repeated his directive. Still Mary remained silent. The spirit gave the order a third time. Reluctantly Mary complied.

"Give me what you have in your purse," she asked.

Stunned, the woman opened the purse slowly and brought out a revolver. She had planned to take her own life.

After receiving her college degree and teaching music in the Erie public schools, Mary went on to earn a Master's Degree in psychology from Erie's Gannon College. Afterwards she got a job with the local Family and Child Service Agency as a sort of "freelance psychic consultant."

Among the cases which the Agency sent her every week was one involving a 16-year-old girl who suffered from acute depression. There were no clues in her environment to explain her state of mind. She had a good relationship with her parents and with friends of both sexes at school. Her grades were good. She was, however, something of a loner and had a tremendous urge to write poetry. In about six months she had filled several medium-sized notebooks full of it. When she felt depressed the poetry sounded very angry.

Mary noticed a strange thing when she talked with this unhappy girl. She seemed to see an Oriental face moving over the girl's features. The spirit was not very friendly at first and rammed Mary's head against a table. By degrees, however, the psychic learned that the strange form belonged to a Chinese who had lived many years ago. According to his story, his entire family had been murdered by white invaders and his arm cut off. He had been expressing his angry feelings through the girl's poetry. It was Mary's job to convince the girl to stop writing poetry and to persuade the spirit to move off.

When the Chinese found that his 16-year-old "hostess" would no longer cooperate in the production of gloomy poetry, he left as suddenly as he had come, taking the girl's depression (really his) with him.

During the last few years the pleasant, attractive psychic, now in her mid-thirties, has been called upon to investigate cases of poltergeist activity in the Erie area. Upon close examination almost all claims of supernatural disturbances have proved to be no more than a nervous observer plus an active imagination.

One case, however, defied ordinary explanation. There were raps on the wall, doors which refused to open, a shaking crib, and sudden cold temperatures. Dean, a three-year-old boy living in the spooky house, was periodically sized with inexplicable convulsive fits. He also became frequently uncontrollable and once went after his mother with a knife. While Dean's mother was approaching panic over the situation, the toddler found it all a lot of fun, especially since the unusual activity made him the center of domestic attention.

What Dean knew, and his mother didn't, was that a secret friend, Buddy, was behind all the strange happenings. Buddy had been an unruly eight-year-old cousin who had died a short time before and was now "coming back" to make mischief with Dean's help.

It didn't take Mary long to discover the secret.

She persuaded the little boy to give up his spirit pal and urged the mother to remain calm. Within a month the household was back to normal.

Besides her occasional poltergeist investigations, Mary has served as a consultant for several police departments in southwestern New York State and northwestern Pennsylvania. Through her psychic powers she helped the Erie police find a mysterious "artist" and averted a probable kidnapping.

The art work—really a sort of pen and ink cartoon series—was being stuck in the retractable box of the auto teller window at a local bank. A handwriting expert and a psychologist both determined that the drawings were the work of a disturbed person. When Mary's opinion was sought, she first asked that future pictures be put directly into a large envelope without anyone touching them. Then from the undisturbed vibrations she was able to receive a mental picture of the "artist."

One strange case defied ordinary explanation, with raps on the walls, doors refusing to open, a shaking crib, and sudden cold temperatures.

From her description bank officials recognized the culprit immediately. It was the son of one of the bank's board members.

The pictures conveyed a garbled message about how the young man felt he failed to fit into a deteriorating society. Later it was found that he planned to entice one of the female bank tellers to his basement apartment where he had collected a large supply of food and keep her captive there.

Mary believes that mental pictures and/or messages come into her mind from spirit entities via vibrations. To open herself to spirit communications she first becomes quiet and relaxed, trying to shut out her own thoughts. Then she does breathing exercises, holding her breath for a count of ten, and finally she holds the object (if any) between her palms and then between her fingertips.

This procedure is similar to one she follows prior to giving a "reading" about some specific or general concern for someone. First Mary sits quietly for a few minutes with the person requesting the reading while they both try to achieve a relaxed state. Then she does breathing exercises and focuses with the eyes closed on the "third eye" (spiritual eye) between the eyebrows. Then the message starts coming.

Usually the readings do not contain predictions, but it did in Mitizi Bemis' case. Mitizi opened an acupuncture center in Erie a few years ago. It was, however, abruptly closed down by the police and Mitzi was arrested. Having explained to the authorities that she had tried to obtain certification as administrator but no laws covered such centers, she reopened it and was encouraged that this time the center, according to a reading she obtained from Mary, would stay open. It has not only stayed open but has also expanded its services and has achieved full status in the eyes of the law.

One evening a few years ago, four psychics prepared for the appearance of spirits. In the semi-darkness, Mary, her husband Angelo, a welder, Tom, a liquor store manager, and Linda, a hair stylist began with stretching exercises. Then after sitting quietly with closed eyes they did a series of breathing exercises, focused on the "third eye," and finally began a Buddhist chant. The four-word Japanese chant was repeated over and over for about fifteen minutes.

Then Linda went into a trance. She became bathed in light, she sat erect, her mannerisms began to change, and the face of an Egyptian queen appeared over

THE SOVIET UFO COVER-UP

BY HUGH F. COCHRANE

In April 1978, after their return from a 16-day trip to the Soviet Union, two National Enquirer journalists broke the dramatic story of an incredible UFO attack on the northern Russian city of Petrozavodsk. During the attack the UFO was said to have hovered, bombarding the city with ray beams which bored holes in windows and paving blocks. Shortly thereafter, the Soviet Government clamped a shroud of secrecy over news surrounding this and similar encounters during the next few months.

Even so, the two journalists were able to penetrate the shroud and get inside information from their Soviet contacts which supported the UFO attack story.

While these two journalists may have gotten their story, there is evidence which suggests that the journalists did not get the truth. In fact what they got was probably a story concocted by high level Soviet intelligence sources intent on covering up a dangerous blunder caused by experiments being conducted by their own Intercontinental Ballistic Missile Defense Command.

Based on this new evidence it now appears that the "UFO attack" was in reality a malfunction of a high energy beam weapon which almost brought disaster to the Russian city.

The full story behind this weird weapon began in the late 1960's when the Soviets set up huge underground experimental facilities at Azgir and Semipalatinsk in the southern part of the USSR.

The purpose behind the experiments was the development of magnetohydrodynamic fusion and other high energy devices. These experiments, however, soon led in a different direction. Before long, the Soviet scientists were hard at work trying to perfect high-energy particle beam devices that could be turned into weapons of great destruction.

Based on new evidence, it appears that the Soviets are experimenting with high energy beam weapons capable of destroying cities many miles away. The sites of these weapons are underground and well hidden.

Over the next few years as work progressed, the U.S. intelligence got wind of the experiments and directed one of their spy satellites to keep an eye on the sites. By 1973 the U.S. successfully launched the "Big Bird" satellites into orbit. These 12 ton units were capable of revealing the license plate numbers of vehicles parked at the sites as well as the nature of the equipment being funneled into the underground laboratories. The results of this intelligence gathering only strengthened the Pentagon's worst fears. Information gleaned from the photographs and the radiation detected in the atmosphere above these sites clearly indicated the Soviets were deeply involved in manufacturing high energy particle beam generators as war weapons of the future.

This sent the Pentagon brass into a huddle. There were no huge appropriations in the U.S. for such weapons development. Aside from a few pilot projects, little could be done but watch and wait.

They didn't have to wait long. Early in 1976 the Soviets completed their first successful tests of a killer satellite system. By October 1977 they completed the sixth test. The Soviets were now well on their way

Notes on the Paranormal

Haunted House With A Tragic Past

What do you do when you purchase a house you later find out is haunted? Harold Cameron confronted his ghost with an ultimatum: "You stay on your side of the house and we'll stay on ours!"

It all began with the ad in the local newspapers: "Large 17 room house in a lovely Philadelphian suburb." The Camerons had been looking for a house. Now their dream had come true.

Shortly before they moved in, the Camerons—Harold, his wife and their four children—drove out to inspect the ancient granite mansion. Harold went in through the back door. His family stayed in the car. "The mansion was dark," Harold recounts the chilling experience. "I felt my way through the butler's pantry. As I opened the door under the stairway and started down the hall toward the front entrance, I heard a weird noise."

Over to his left the library door had slid open by itself. Thinking that his family had come inside, Harold struck a match. No one was there. Only darkness eminated through the open doorway. Suddenly, footsteps pierced the silence, going from the library to the stairs. Still, no one was there.

That was the first incident of unseen intruders. Many more followed. Strange sounds in the night, footsteps in the dark—all coming from the library. The Camerons, who had lived in fear ever since they brought the house, decided that they had enough.

Sitting together in the darkness of their livingroom, Harold spoke aloud. "We know you want to get rid of us," he uttered," but we want to make a deal instead." The Camerons offered to stay out of the library and the coach house. The offer was accepted. The nightmare ceased.

As a result of their harrowing experience, the Camerons became interested in psychic phenomena and tried to learn more about the strange house. Unfortunately they did. It was a very tragic account involving rape, suicide and murder.

When their lease ran out—so did the Camerons.

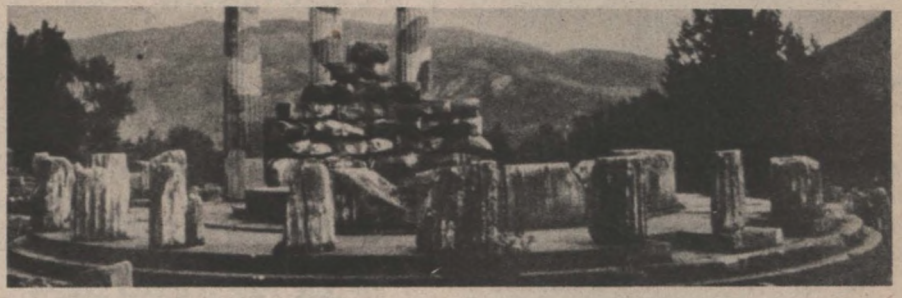
THE WOMAN DIED TWICE

After the doctors pronounced her dead more than eight years ago, a Philippine woman sat up in her coffin and asked for a glass of water. When the woman, Atonisa Agabin, died "again" recently, her relatives were reluctant to close the lid on the coffin.

According to the 1971 account which was reported by the Philippine News, the woman, a spinster from Tuguegarao province, first moved her foot, then her head, then sat straight up in her coffin during her wake. A sister gave her the water she requested as other mourners fled in panic.

Recently, when she was pronounced dead again, the family delayed the burial for several days—just to make sure.

LOST CITY OF THE INCAS



The lost city of the Incas has been found, according to Philip Miller, president of Adventures Unlimited. A series of eight "little white dots" on a satellite photo of Peru led to what may become the archeological find of the century.

Two Peruvian members of the South American Explorer's Club called Miller's attention to the eight pinhead size dots on the photo, Miller said. The specks appeared in a parallel pattern—four abreast and two deep—along the rugged forested slopes of the Andes, west of the Amazon Basin.

After concluding that the dots were not natural formations, Miller arranged for a pilot to fly him over the area. The dots on the photographs turned out to be sections of 12 pyramids in an area more than two miles long. The pyramids rise an estimated 500 feet over the jungle rain forest. "The structures are so huge, the whole thing is so unusual it must be the lost city!" Miller said.

PSYCHIC FINDS MISSING BODY

An air and ground search for a 78-year old man who had been missing four months was closed recently by the California police. When authorities failed to find any trace of Russell T. Drummond, his overly distraught daughter-in-law visited a California psychic. The psychic, Kathlyn Rhea, director of the Parapsychology, Education and Awareness Center in Los Altos, California, took several minutes to describe exactly where Russel Drummond was.

Using the psychic's description, Calaveras County officials found Drummond's body in a mere three hours. His skeletal remains were lying under a bush about a mile east of the campsite near Hogan Dam.

"I studied the picture of the old man, concentrated on what he was doing the last time he was seen," Rhea said. "Then, I just followed the energy field," she continued. The psychic described finding the body as "just like I was watching television."

The elderly man's daughter-in-law, Mary Lou Drummond, wasn't sure about Rhea's powers. "A friend of mine told me about Rhea and I contacted her," Mrs. Drummond revealed. "She taped our conversation, which meant nothing to me at the time. Yet, without that tape the sheriff would never have found my father-in-law," she said.

Lieutenant Robert D. Bunning of the Calaveras County sheriff's office said, "It was remarkable how much of what the psychic said was actually true. She said some things on the tape that nobody could possibly know except the victim."

Strange Creature Encounted By Motorist In Florida

First there was the Snowman, then Big Foot, and now there's Skunk-Ape, a shocking creature which, for the past several years, has been making the scene in the Florida Everglades.

First making his appearence in 1974, the creature is described by eye-witnesses as being big—over seven feet tall, walking upright like a man, and having a terrible odor, "like a skunk."

The most sensational report on the controversial ape-like creature came when, on January 9, 1974, Richard Leed said he ran into the monster with his car. Three hours later, Florida patrolman Robert Holmeyer said he saw a "funny creature eight-feet-tall, and very furry," limping into a bush in the area of the accident.

In 1977, a report by a CB radio operator driving in the area of Delray Beach in Florida said the creature jumped in front of his car, then disappeared. Later the creature was seen on a golf course west of Delray Beach, drinking water at a lake near the golf course's second tee. A dozen armed men searched the area—to no avail. The strange creature is still at large.

Scientists Explain How Pigeons Find Their Way

Cornell University scientists are attempting to explain the natural navigational know-how by which homing pigeons find their way.

Many claim that the birds have a celestial "radar" or clock that pinpoints the position of the moon, even in the broadest daylight when the moon is invisible.

According to biologists William T. Keeton and Timothy Larkin, homing pigeons make daily shifts in their initial bearings on their target or "home," in response to the changing positions of the moon.

During the past several years, Cornell researchers have demonstrated that homing pigeons can see light waves invisible to human beings. They can detect low-frequency sounds hundreds of miles from their source and can also detect minute changes in barometric pressure in the earth's magnetic field.

towards building a weapons system designed to give them a space domination capability. Their satellites could now be equipped for seek-and-destroy missions against any other satellites or space stations, particularly those satellites netted into the U.S. atomic submarine fleet.

For the first time in a quarter of a century the balance of terror had shifted into Soviet hands, something that didn't sit well with U.S. Defense Chiefs.

Even so, the U.S. military was not to be outdone so easily. In August 1978 news leaked out that the U.S. had also gone into the laser weapons business. After declining comment for two years, a Pentagon official confirmed that in 1973 the U.S. had successfully shot down a pilotless drone with a high-energy laser beam. They also confirmed that the Army and Navy tests had succeeded, and that a helicopter and anti-tank missiles had been destroyed in flight by laser weapons. This put both the U.S. and the USSR in the space weapons business.

While these comments reached the public there was far more going on in the USSR than ever reached print.

The experiments at Azgir and Semipalatinsk were speeded up after the tests were successful. Now research was being pushed well beyond the Death Ray of science fiction. The Soviets were after the means to develop "energy curtains" which could be thrown up all along their borders, and "sky shields" which would place an energy umbrella over their strategic missile sites. All of them are by-products of high-energy particle beams.

Basically, these high-energy particle beam generators use lasers to blast apart hydrogen pellets which release heavy protons. These protons are then focused through magnetic mirrors into a beam pulsed millions of times per second, and containing energies of hundreds of millions of volts. When these beams are swept back and forth across the sky like a searchlight, they create a wall of energy hundreds of miles wide and thousands of miles long. Anything attempting to enter this curtain of energy explodes instantly. Set up to cover a border of the sky above the missile sites, these beams form an invisible, impenetrable wall against atomic and hydrogen bombers or ballistic missiles.

According to reports, it was proven in scientific experiments that the type of pulses being targeted on North America are capable of a variety of effects in humans. Among these are the inducement of trance states and out-of-body experiences.

With their strategic installations under the cover of sky shields, and their hunter-killer satellites roaming through space, the Soviets could bully their way around without fear of retaliation.

Like all new weapons, these are not without their problems. Quantities of smoke or water particles in the atmosphere can reduce or seriously deflect the high energy beams. In fact, the old smoke screen used in the past by world natives is a very effective defense against these new weapons. The smoke particles ionize and act as an energy sink converting the beam's energy into a glowing plasmic shell preventing the beam from reaching its target. Also, special mirrors can reflect the beam, sending it back at its source with devastating results.

This is where the "UFO Attack" story comes into the picture. Many now believe that something along this line occurred in the sky above Petrozavodsk on February 20, 1977. They suggest that the Soviets were conducting experiments with their high energy beam when it encountered particle obstructions in the atmosphere. These sent the beam on a wild excursion. Thus, the brilliant glow in the sky was not a galactic vehicle, but a glowing plasmic shell. And the "ray beams" were laser-like splatters of the beam deflected downward where the energy was absorbed, boring holes in glass windows and paving blocks.

Normally such a dangerous excursion breeds caution. Not so in the Soviet Union. For it now appears that the Russian scientists continued their tinkering.

On the morning of April 2, 1978, the U.S. defense satellites zoomed in on a high concentration of energy moving across the North Atlantic. As they continued to track the concentration it zeroed in towards Newfoundland's Bell Island area, less than 15 miles from St. John's, the capital of this Canadian Province.

When this high concentration of energy hit the island it collapsed in a massive thunderbolt. The flashes and blasts were recorded at a number of U.S. satellite tracking stations and the data was immediately forwarded to the special weapons laboratory at Los Alamos, California. Within hours, two military representatives from the labs arrived at the site of the blast. Following their investigation, the two investigators, Freiman and Warren, filed their reports with the Pentagon. As could be expected the reports are still classified. However, the Defense Department did confirm that the Los Alamos Labs were doing work on high energy lasers, and they (the Defense Department) were interested in the Bell Island episode.

As mentioned, Bell Island is close to the Provincial capital. It sits in Conception Bay on the southeast tip of Newfoundland, and the center of the blast occurred on the farm of James Bickford at Lance Cove.

According to local residents, electric power went out just before the blast, as did the phone service. One woman stated that sparks flew out of her electric oven, and a man had the phone knocked from his hand.

But the major damage occurred around the Bickford property. Here, what was described as an energy ball blasted down a metal chimney and a surge of energy vaporized the electric wires in the area. It blasted the metal doors from switch boxes; melted glass fuses, and exploded outlets from the walls. Behind the Bickford home it disintegrated the wires leading to a chicken coop where it blew the shed to pieces killing the birds. Behind the shed it burrowed three identical holes in the ground. The holes were a foot-and-a-half deep, six feet across, and arranged in a triangle six feet apart.

"The blast was louder than 300 charges going off in the mine," Bickford told a reporter.

Others around the area described the brilliant flashes as blue-white, red-tinged, and dusty-red. Both the flashes and blast were reported from as far away as 70 miles.

According to scientists from the Newfoundland University and the Canadian Government, the event was caused by a meteorite, a bolt of lightning, and an exploding fire ball.

Strangely enough, residents close to the area reported hearing a strong humming before the flashes and blast, while others stated that their television sets had gone blank just before the event. This would make it a very strange meteor, fire ball, or what have-you.

Mrs. Bennett, one of Bickford's neighbors, probably expressed it best. She said, "It was like a bomb!"

Following this mysterious event, UFO buffs interpreted the episode as a crashed saucer. Others immediately blamed the Concord SST which uses a corridor over the area on the overseas route. Many tied the whole thing in with the sonic-booms plaguing the east coast.

Still others sounded off, blaming not a crashed saucer, but one which actually landed.

These people weren't the only ones interested in the Bell Island Enigma. The Planetary Association for Clear Energy (PACE), a privately funded Ottawa based group had also been keeping track of the Soviet experiments. For the past few years they have been investigating the high energy signals which have been disrupting radio communications around the world. This unexplained interference has been in progress since July 1967. At times it has blanketed the whole radio spectrum.

PACE members believe that the Bell Island event was part of the same problem. According to Dr. Andrew Michrowski, a member of the Canadian Secretary of State's, think-tank, and a co-founder of PACE, the explosion on Bell Island was the result of a standing columnar wave generated by powerful transmitters inside the Soviet Union. His group believes that a large iron ore deposit under Bell Island acted on the wave to bring about sudden collapse and energy explosion. The collapse is thought to have resulted in the production of three spinning vortices of highly charged particles which formed a plasma. When these vortices hit the ground they released vast quantities of energy which vaporized electrical systems and bored the holes in the ground.

PACE favors the Tesla Magnifying Transmitter as the source of these high energy waves. They believe one or more of the transmitters are located in Riga and Gomel, in the northwestern USSR. In fact, through a link up of monitoring stations in Canada using direction finding equipment, they were able to pin down these two locations as the source of the interfering signals blotting out radio bands. PACE has also worked in conjunction with the Canadian Department of Transport's Communications Branch to document the Soviet intrusions into world-wide radio bands over the last few years. At times, these intrusions have blotted out legitimate broadcasts with unexplained "buzzsaw" and "woodpecker" pulses.

More importantly, PACE believes it has proof that there's more to these Soviet signals than simple interference. Working in cooperation with the Pacific Northwest Center, in Portland, Oregon, a mass of evidence has been collected by the two groups. This data shows that the Soviet high energy waves also contain pulse rates known to be biologically significant and useful in brainwave conditioning and programing in humans.

By July 13, 1977, these two investigative groups determined that the signals were being directed at a specific target population in the U.S. and Canada. Cross-country monitoring was begun and the observers were able to track changes in the movement of the electromagnetic fields. These movements could be fast or slow, and the direction appeared to be from northeast to southwest.

Oddly enough, many UFO researchers around the Great Lakes have noted the great number of times UFOs have been reported travelling from northeast to southwest.

Among the reports turned in by observers following the course of these waves are reports showing that on March 15, 1977, between 3PM and 10PM, the interfering waves blotted out the signals of a 17,500 watt television station in Timmins, Ontario. Witnesses there observed "a dielectric avalanche of the atmosphere," along with sheet lightning which occurred regularly along the 30 mile wide circumference of a field in a counter-clockwise direction. The color was reported as blue, or flashed fluorescence of high intensity.

In another report from Ottawa, Canada's capitol, on September 15th 1978, the same phenomenon was observed which retained the same dimensions and coloring. When a random check was made of people living in the path of the perimeter of the wave, many complained of headache and irritability.

Researchers believe they have proof that these Soviet high energy waves also contain pulse rates known to be biologically significant and useful in brainwave conditioning and programing in humans.

A check with RCA turned up the fact that on the same date, problems had plagued the whole system of communications in the North Atlantic coast from Boston to Cape Cod.

In the northwestern U.S. a similar investigation has been carried out over the past year by the Pacific Northwest Center. This has been done in a number of localities, mainly Portland and Eugene in Oregon. From this it appears that Eugene is the major target area for the wave. Among the health problems reported here were irritability and lack of sound sleep. Some residents complained of a low humming noise which could not be heard by others close by. (This anomaly was also discovered among a number of residents in Warminister, England in the past few years.) In one home electrostatic voltages near the ceiling measured 25,000 volts.

Marshall Van Ert, an industrial hygienist who measured the waves from an aircraft flying over Eugene said, "At 3,000 feet the power intensity was astronomical."

Similar signals, said to be biologically significant, have been detected in the atmosphere around Huntsville, Alabama, and Kirkland Lake, Ontario.

According to PACE members, it has been proven in scientific experiments that the type of pulses being targeted on North America are capable of a variety of effects in humans. Among these are the inducement of trance states and out-of-body experiences.

The possibilities posed by such transmission become more frightening when it is remembered that many aircraft in these areas are totally dependent on ground based electronic guidance systems. Interference with signals in this dependent system is dangerous, to say the least. Coupled with mind-altering pulses which can lower the consciousness of pilots or other air crew can only result in disaster.

This part of the problem has been considered serious enough that the U.S. Air Force has begun studies of the effects of electromagnetic waves at—you guessed —Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

John Keel explored some of the little known aspects of low frequency waves. In an article in the September 1977 issue of UFO Report, he told how Marconi, in 1936, caused a whole line of automobiles to stall and made telephones useless when he switched on a powerful low frequency transmitter. The transmitted waves were able to cancel out the signals on the phone lines and the pulses in ignition coils.

A recent similarity here is the case in September 1976 when the Iranian Air Force went into battle against two glowing "UFOs," This was around the time when the Soviets were making their first tests of their killer satellites using the high energy particle beams. The Iranian Air Force came off second best when the electrically controlled systems on board their jets ceased to function. When they escaped the area near the UFOs their systems returned to normal. But in the meantime the "UFOs" made their escape.

Incidently, it should be noted that the battle in the sky over Iran took place less than 500 miles from the underground test facility at Azgir in the Soviet Union.

For the first time in over a quarter of a century, the balance of power had shifted into the Soviet hands, something that didn't sit well with U.S. Defense Chiefs

If this suggests that the Iranians are living in a dangerous neighborhood, the following will do nothing to brighten the picture.

On September 19, 1978, Prof. Heinz Kaminski, Director of West Germany's Bochum Observatory, blamed a Soviet underground blast at Semipalatinsk for triggering the Iranian earthquake of September 16, 1978 which killed an estimated 18,000 people. That blast, Kaminski said, registered 6.9 on the Richter scale and was recorded at seismological stations around the world. It occurred 36 hours before the quake hit Iran.

According to Kaminski, the Semipalatinsk blast triggered geological fault lines in the earth in the hours before the quake.

Experts at the Swedish seismological station confirmed that the blast as Semipalatinsk was very powerful. However, they doubted that it had triggered the earthquake in Iran. Even so, one wonders.

All of this is not intended to bunch UFOs into a bag marked "made in USSR." Flying saucers are one thing; Soviet plasmoids are another. And it behooves the UFO researcher to separate the two.

In the end analysis there is a parallel in all this. In the life readings of Edgar Cayce, the sleeping prophet, he gave a considerable amount of background on the history of the Atlanteans and the development of their science. According to Cayce, the Altanteans discovered how to use the energy beams of the Great Crystal. With these they were able to power their civilization, kill huge animals at a distance, control the courses of their ships and planes, and even rejuvinate humans. In the end they experimented with beams directed at crystals in pits where they made contact with the forces inside the earth. But they tuned the beams too high and the result was devastation for their entire continent.

We are left to wonder if history is about to repeat itself. In light of the Soviet's record we may not have to wait too long. □

Scientists Discover ESP MACHINE!

You Simply Turn It On And Think!

The discovery that can bring you Money -- Psychic Power -- Love -- and Health - ALMOST INSTANTLY!

EVER WISHED YOU COULD PERFORM ALL OF THOSE FANTASTIC FEATS YOU'VE SEEN KRESKIN, GELLER AND ALL THE OTHER PROS DO? EVER WISHED YOU COULD BEND METAL, COMMUNICATE WITHOUT SPEAKING FORM PHOTO IMAGES WITHOUT A CAMERA, OR INFLUENCE OTHERS WITH THE POWER OF THOUGHT ALONE? WELL, THERE'S NO LONGER ANY NEED TO SIT BACK AND MARVEL AT THE PSYCHIC FEATS OF OTHERS! NOW YOU CAN ACCOMPLISH THE MOST MIND BOGGLING MENTAL FEATS YOURSELF! EVEN IF YOU'RE A NOVICE WITH NO SPECIAL ABILITIES OR GIFTS...HAVE NEVER BEEN SUCCESSFUL AT ESP, YOU CAN NOW PERFORM SEEMING MIRACLES WITH JUST THE TURN OF A DIAL! HERE, COMPLETELY REVEALED FOR THE FIRST TIME IS AN ACTUAL ELECTRONIC ESP MACHINE! NOT A MYSTIC CHANT OR PLASTIC AMULET, BUT AN HONEST TO GOODNESS TRANSISTORIZED "THOUGHT AMPLIFIER"! THIS UNBELIEVABLE DEVICE HAS ACTUALLY BEEN IN USE FOR YEARS BY A SMALL GROUP OF INFORMED SCIENTISTS! NOW, YOU CAN HAVE YOUR OWN! NO SPECIAL SKILLS ARE NEEDED TO ASSEMBLE THE DEVICE, AND WHAT'S MORE, NO SPECIAL ABILITY OR PSYCHIC GIFT IS NECESSARY TO OPERATE IT! AS A MATTER OF FACT, SO POWERFUL IS THIS MACHINE, THE OPERATOR DOESN'T EVEN HAVE TO BE AWARE OF WHAT IT IS!

Would You Like To Do These Things?

And what quack says all of this is possible? Famous scientists..world reknowned physicists..U.S. Government researchers..and prominant psychics the world over! What's more this astonishing machine is now being used by psychics and scientists in England, Australia Germany, Canada, the Soviet Bloc countries and Western Europe, to accomplish with the POWER OF THOUGHT alone, the most awesome feats in the history of mankind.

• • • • • • • • • • FOR EXAMPLE: • • • • • • • • • •

- In England, Dr. George De La Warr inserts some film into a small black box, adjusts a few dials and takes out a picture of his wife and himself on their wedding day ..... 30 YEARS BEFORE!
- In the Cumberland Valley a scientist from the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau inserts the photograph of an insect infested field into a psionic machine. 48 hours later all the insects in the infectedfield are dead!

- In the Mojave Desert physicist George Lawrence stand by moonlight with a little black box in his hand. He points it out into deep space ...and begins to receive messages!
- A russian technician works diligently over a world map, a psionic machine at his side. After tuning several dials in succession, he makes a tiny mark on the map. He has found the location of a wanted defector!
- Two medical doctors take a just exposed piece of ordinary film from a small psionic box and examine the image. It shows a nine month old fetus...but the picture was taken from an expectant mother in her third month !

Do these claims sound unbelievable to you? Kooky? Fantastic? Then realize that this amazing device has been awarded patents in both Europe and the United States! What's more, the principals upon which this miraculous device is based..PSIONICS..have been extensively researched by Columbia, Yale, Duke and Pennsylvania Universities, Dow Chemical Co. and especially the prestigious Soviet Acadamy of Science! Intensive studies are going on right now by many reputable organizations around the world among them the Institute of Noetic Sciences, founded and presided over by ASTRONAUT EDGAR MITCHELL, and Mankind Unlimited of Washington D.C. chaired by DR. WERNER VON BRAUN!

Believe it! A mechanical device now exists that will amplify all the inborn psychic abilities you may not even realize you have.

HOW IT WORKS

The power within these tiny devices is tremendous and well known to research scientists. As famous science editor John Campbell said, "These machines work beautifully! Their consistancy of performance is excellant"! Others have not only claimed to have used the machine for mind to mind contact, but to have actually accomplished telekinesis or levitation..MOVING OBJECTS WITH THE MIND ALONE! As a matter of fact, we've now reached the point where psionics is being used for everything from monitoring astronauts in deep space.. to locating vast ore deposits..and doubling plant yields! Just recently a major oil company used the device to discover a huge new oil field in the frozen north!

In farming, former Brig. Gen. Henry Gross, head of a firm that uses these machines for agricultural purposes said, "We can not only increase plant size and yield, but if a plant is infected with insects, a leaf is put into the machine along with a small amount of insecticide. Upon operation of the device, THE INSECTS ARE KILLED or leave the plant within 48 hours"!

This may sound like a lot of Voodoo, but after investigating it for a full year, the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau drew up a contract with the firm for the exclusive use of the device in Pennsylvania!

In describing the operation of these machines, science reporter Joseph Goodavage said, "These machines have circuits that detect, amplify and direct human thought and emotion..whatever is on the mind of the operator"! By tuning to these frequencies, they can not only be received, but modified and re-transmitted very much like an ordinary radio station. It means imposing human thought into the very structure of atomic matter! As Goodavage testified, using this method "researchers have analyzed emanations from relics of prehistoric creatures and CAUGHT THEM ON FILM"!

Now it's known! Psionics is the scientific reason why psychics can get a 'reading' from a ring or wristwatch someone has worn or touched. It's why others like Uri-Geller can order molecules of metal to bend upon command..manipulate light, or create pictures on film without a camera...with just the MIND ALONE!

AMAZING ELECTRONIC DEVICE REQUIRES NO SPECIAL PSYCHIC TRAINING OR MIND EXERCISES!

Unleash all of your hidden psychic talents, just by turning a dial! You'll be amazed at the psychic feats YOU can now perform ..... absolutly unbelievable results have been attained in ALL FIELDS of psychic phenomenon..Telepathy, Telekinesis Clairvoyance, Psychic Photography and most amazing of all, documented proof of actual molecular change in solid matter! Now you can do all the amazing things famous psychics and healers do..command Love and Respect from those around you ... communicate with pets and plants all with this simple device!

NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT!

You'll be amazed how easy it is to build your own Psychotronic Amplifier with these easy step by step detailed plans. Even if you've had no scientific training at all... no special electronic skills...by following the simple diagram, we GUARENTEE you can produce a working model that will do all the amazing feats we've described ..and more! Examine this book and the pictorial step by step plans for a full 10days. If your not completely convinced that the ESP MACHINE works, that it will do all the astounding things we've said it will, we'll RETURN YOUR MONEY, no questions asked! But you do have to hurry! SPIRIT MESSAGES TO A PSYCHIC/continued from page 46 her features. The other three psychics could see and hear the queen, but Linda in her trance state could not.

The apparition identified herself as a minor Egyptian queen who had lived many centuries ago. (Mary later verified her name in an encyclopedia). Although she was proud, and at first expected homage from the little group, she had actually come to seek help.

According to her story, Tom, one of the psychics, had once lived in ancient Egypt in a past life. He had been a palace guard and the queen had loved him but later betrayed him by not intervening in his scheduled execution. She felt that her sin of omission was unforgivable, dooming her to a spiritual life in limbo. Yet she was sincerely sorry and sought Tom's forgiveness. Tom, of course, forgave the queen for something he couldn't even remember, and she then departed in peace.

One evening Mary, with her husband Angelo, prepared herself for "prajna," a state defined by Buddhists as one of "pure and unqualified knowledge." The path to this enlightenment was, according to the couple's studies, in "raising the kundalini," or concentration of spiritual power at the base of the spine up through the cakras, which are nerve centers along the spine.

Mary and Angelo abstained from meat for several weeks. They meditated for three days and drank only fruit juices and water the day before the experience. They also did breathing and stretching exercises in preparation. On the appointed evening the two sat in a half-lotus position in the living room.

Then it happened. Mary could feel the psychic force beginning at the base of her spine, then rising to envelop her whole body.

"I understood then what it was to be one with the universe. I felt in and out of my body at the same time, yet I was conscious of my spirit imprisoned in its physical shell.

"I felt that this state of ecstasy would never end. My sensitivity was extremely heightened. I perceived intense light and sound, and I could actually see the atoms in solid matter as little moving dots. The air was made up of pinpoints of light.

Everything became clear in the understanding of myself and of others, and of mankind's place in the universe. I then felt as if I was a part of God, but at the same time I was myself—I never lost my individuality."

After twelve hours the unusual experience had passed.

For Mary Pompeo the realm of spirits is close by. Every day she crosses the bridge to the unknown, to a world which may seem strange to the uninitiated, but which seems ordinary to those whose perceptions extend beyond reality. □ and nature of a wild beast. Most common, of course, is the belief in the werewolf—a person who can change into a wolf.

I agree with the writer's premise. Just as the moon effects tides, it affects human beings in one way or another. Police are firmly convinced that many violent crimes are committed when the moon is full. Sexologists confirm that human sexual glands become more aroused at night than during the day, and on nights of a full moon they are aroused the most.

What's more, mental hospital administrators are of the firm belief that on nights of full moon, patients exhibiting psychiatric disorder, become more agitated.

Dear Editor:

Can an automobile be cursed? That seems to be the question author Tom Staicar is trying to answer in the June issue of Beyond Reality.

The car in question, an Austrian Graef-und-Stift, manufactured in 1914 seems to have brought its owners bad luck. From the first, Austrian Archduke Franz Ferdinand who was assassinated while riding in the back seat with wife, to Tibor Hirshfeld, a garage owner who bought it, painted it, repaired it—and was killed while driving with six friends to a wedding party.

I think a better word than cursed would be haunted. What malevolent spirit possessed this car from the time it left the factory will never be known. But if there's one thing that's for sure, it's the fact that the Devil himself must have put a down payment on it.

By the way, can you tell me what became of the automobile?

Charles Dominguez

Editor's Note:
The car was destroyed during an air raid towards the end of World War II.

Dear Editor:

I picked up a copy of your most recent copy, June, 1979, and I was terribly intrigued with the editorial by editor Harry Belil.

It's frightening to think that calamities of every form, shape and size are plaguing mankind. Just think that since 1948, there have been 31 major earthquakes on our planet.

Lillian Teejar
Toledo, Ohio

Editor's Note: How right you are, and the earthquakes you mention are only a few of a vast number of catastrophes visited upon us. By the way, you were wrong in your calculations. There have been 32 major earthquakes since 1948, the latest on November 17, 1977 in Northwestern Argentina.

businessman, walked out of his office for a coffee break. He was making his way to a restaurant a block away. More than 28 people saw him vanish as he stepped off the curb, "in a triangular pattern traced by the sun's rays on the sidewalk." He disappeared as though off the face of the earth for a day-and-a-half. On the night of May 15, he wandered into his home in Oeshtigo. His clothes were charred and he was suffering from lst and 2nd degree burns on his chest, legs and upper portion of his left arm which later had to be amputated at the elbow.

He told his wife, "I found myself in the midst of a great fire. He described the incidents in minute detail, telling how he stepped off the curb and suddenly roaring flames reach out, destroying everything in its path. He said it was on Sunday, October 8, 1871 that the fire ravaged through the city.

Research bore him out. On that day, ashes fell from the darkening sky when, from out of the southwest, there came the dreadful roar of a forest fire, pushing before it intense heat with gale force winds.

When it was over, three days later, 1,500 lives in Peshtigo and neighboring communities were lost along with four million acres of forest and prairie, Peshtigo was completely destroyed.

A Norwegian sailor fell from his fishing outrigger into the waters of Oslo during the Nazi occupation of Norway. A German motor patrol boat spotted him; everyone on board watched as he swarm into a glowing area on the sea. According to German naval archives, "as soon as he reached that weird glowing spot on the water, he disappeared. He didn't drown. He was still swimming on the surface, when he simply disappeared." He returned to his village a week later, and told how he had been fished out by Vikings, who had rescued him from the sea.

A businessman walked out of his office for a coffee break. He was making his way to a restaurant a block away. Over twenty-eight people saw him step of the curb—and vanish!

Factual incidents depicting individuals being propelled headlong into the past, all by the same means, a strange triangular, sun-painted pattern just at high noon, has been bourne out by countless testimonies since the 14th century.

But what is perhaps the most popular, highly documented account of all concerns the adventures of Charlotte Moberly and Eleanore Jourdian, two principals of an Oxford college who, while vacationing in Versailles during the mid-summer of 1901, walked through a weird, sun-drenched pattern in the gardens near the Petit Trianon, where it was said Marie Antoinette used to sit and paint for hours on end.

On August 10, after walking through such a pattern traced by the afternoon sun, they found themselves at the end of a lane surrounded by farm buildings.

They wrote later, "We asked directions of two men in green livery wearing three-cornered hats. Since they had seen a wheelbarrow and spades on the grounds nearby, they took the men for gardeners. The two women were told to go straight ahead, and when they did, they encountered a small wood where there was a circular kiosk which is a small stand used as a refreshment booth. It looked like a small bandstand.

The women crossed a rustic bridge over a tiny ravine with a thread-like waterfall, and found their way into a garden overlooking a country house. Suddenly, they discovered themselves back in the twentieth century.

Subsequent visits to the area where their experience had begun convinced them that the Petit Trianon must be haunted, for the buildings they had seen—the bridge, the ravine, the wood and kiosk—did not exist.

Where they had seen a young woman sketching in an area framed by a small garden there was now a large bush and some gravel.

Researching this experience, they came to the conclusion that they had indeed visited the past, and they young woman in the garden was Marie Antoinette who, historic research had revealed, spent much time painting in Versailles.

The two women were so overcome by their experience that they published a book detailing it. The title of the book was An Adventure.

It was almost forgotten, until 1928, when two other Englishwomen—a schoolmistress and her former pupil, walked through the same garden and told of witnessing the same phenomena. Similar accounts were revealed after a walk in the Trianon gardens. In 1937, 1938, 1949 and 1955, reliable citizens spoke of walking through the gardens and viewing people in archaic dress and seeing a Marie Antoinette-like figure drawing in a sketchbook.

Although no map exists which shows a kiosk in the Petit Trianon, a document dated 1776 was unearthed which refers to a "circular pavilion". According to the document, the circular pavilion was later demolished, exactly where the spinsters had reported seeing one. What's more, foundation of a cottage has been found where Miss Jourdian said she saw such a building.

Many who had walked through the royal gardens mentioned two men who were gardeners. From the description of their clothing, green livery and three cornered hats, they have been identified as the royal gardeners, Claude Richard and his son Antoine. They wore green livery in the gardens until 1774. Their portraits were sketched by Marie Antoinette, and their names, beneath the paintings, depict them as royal gardeners.

Many psychic researchers who are investigating this enigma are convinced that this planet of ours holds many secrets which are constantly being probed. Indeed, these invisible windows through which individuals have taken a journey to the past is only one of our planet's mysteries. □ slight frown. "Mam," he said, "I don't want to cry or act ignorant, but just how can a body paint a picture of someone they've never seen?"

I closed my eyes and tried to think of an answer. Words wouldn't come. I honestly did not know. In fact, the entire concept was weird. What did it all mean? Was I led upstairs the day I found those letters? To clear up my confusion I decided to show the items to my friends. Surely they could help me.

They held the papers tenderly, without comment, until they saw the photograph of the girl in white.

"She was so pretty," Cecil said lovingly. Mae nodded in agreement. My throat was getting dry again, but I had to ask "who is she?" They both started to speak at the same time, they laughed, and Cecil beamed as Mae told me the beautiful story of the romance of young Sam Lance and his sweetheart who lived down the mountain in a little place called Punkintown. Her name was Rose, and she lived with her very strict parents, farming the rich valley soil. They opposed the marriage because Sam lived in a simple one room shack by a mountain stream. When his friends heard about it they volunteered to help Sam build a suitable house for his beloved. What a wonderful job they did. The wide hand-planed wall boards are made of yellow poplar and the pegged floors are still air-tight.

When the house was finished, young Sam rode his horse down the winding mountain road to the corn field where Rose and her parents were working. News about the new house had already reached the valley by the circuit preacher, so her folks gladly let Sam swoop her up onto his horse and take her back to the mountains as his wife.

When their story was over I knew that I would never leave this place. I felt a little sad when my friends drove away that afternoon. I wondered if I would ever hear from them again. Going back into the house, I stood before the portrait and looked deep into his eyes.

"How about that, Sam Lance?" I asked. There was no noticeable response. "Well," I snapped, " I just hope it was a white horse!"

A few days later the mail brought a long letter from Cecil with several photographs and a clipping from the local newspaper which showed a group of "old timers" standing and kneeling in front of the local courthouse. The occasion was a Confederate Veteran's Reception in 1911. Sure enough, right there in the first row, third from the left, was Col. Samuel Lance. His long grey white beard was slightly pointed, and his eyes seemed to penetrate my very soul.

I looked up into his kindly face and assured him that I would start on Rose's portrait the very next day. When I had finished it I hung it next to him.

At times, I could swear they are smileing at me. □

for plausible explanations, and it would at the same time include our concepts of death and the survival of our soul. Such a Great Beyond is beyond our present human concept of "reality."

It is beyond our known world of matter, space and time. The event of death carries us to this Great Beyond like the return to a permanent home. In the process we shed our body—a beautifully constructed and functioning temporary housing—like a used garment. In the Great Beyond, infinity and eternity have lost the meaning they have for us now. There is no open and steady link from our world to the Great Beyond (such as a staircase, or an elevator in a building). But apparently we do catch glimpses of the Great Beyond—occasionally, and without warning.

With what we know now of the Great Beyond, we can expect that dying itself (even after sickness) will be a pleasant event, as the persons interviewed by Dr. Kubler, Dr. Ross and Dr. Moody described. We can expect that after dying we shall go through a brief period of stress (perhaps analogous to the stress with which we are born into this world) and then arrive in the Great Beyond. (We may have come from there!) We cannot say definitely whether we shall retain, in the Great Beyond, our present personal identity. But the fact that persons who have died can appear to us in our material world indicates that individuals can exist in the Great Beyond in some way.

Many of the old questions persist: Is there a great Beyond? A distinction between souls who have and have not acted kindly to their fellow men on earth?

Do animals undergo the same process? (We have learned recently that animals have more feelings than was previously assumed.) How does the life cycle of matter (as in galaxies) fit into this scheme of a Great Beyond?

For the time being, we have to leave questions such as these to rest until further investigation and research can make relevant observations.

Is there life after death? From what we have been able to observe, up to the present time, we can at least conclude with reasonable certainty that there is; the transition into it will be pleasant, and what follows will be interesting. □

the yantra go up and travel far." He then talks of an even heavier flying machine: "It contains not one but four pitchers of mercury over iron ovens. The boiling mercury ovens produce a terrific noise which is put to use in battle to scare away elephants; by strengthening the mercury chambers, the roar could be increased so that, by it, elephants are thrown completely out of control."

It is a well-known fact that many ancient Indian writings make mention of "flying machines propelled by mercury engines." In Rome, in 200 A.D., one citizen wrote that he made a model plane in the form of a dove and flew it with compressed air.

In ancient times, Egypt and India traded goods. When they met, by sea and overland from the eastern Mediterranean to India and beyond, it is possible to conceive that they also exchanged information, scientific as well as mathematical and technological.

Artifacts similiar to the glider have been excavated from caves during archaeological expeditions in the jungles of Costa Rica, Columbia, and Peru dating back many hundreds of years.

Artifacts similar to the glider have been excavated from caves during archaeological expeditions in the jungles of Costa Rica, Colombia, Venezuela, and Peru. The data derived from these South American artifacts would indicate that they were created many centuries ago.

Many of the world's leading aeronautical experts are in agreement that, everything considered, the little model does not look like any kind of known animal. "But it does look remarkably like a small airplane," they conclude.

Many authorities are quite certain an airplane—a miniature replica of the real thing—is truly what it is. □ event, it is best that you make an attempt to assess the character of the house personally.

Recruit two or three friends including, if possible, a sensitive. Ideally, people who do not crumble at the sound of a creak on the stair. Plan your expedition on a night when the family can be out for a number of hours, an outing would probably do them good at this point. Take along a couple of tape recorders and blank tape which you have played through once to make sure no factory noises are present on them. You may also want to take along a camera with infrared film.

Be sure when you arrive at the house that all animals are out of doors and you and your friends are completely alone there. No progress can be made if you are constantly telling yourself the strange noises you hear are the cat.

Station yourself in the area of the house which seems to have the most activity, preferably at the time such activity usually starts if it is that routine a haunting. Place your tape recorders in like areas.

Keep a precise log of the time and the things you hear and see. Do not assume anyone else sees what you see until later confirmation. It has been noted that paranormal activity seems to build when the mind is not focused on the problem. Sit with your friends, relax as much as you can, and talk about something entirely unrelated.

Try to spend two or three nights in this manner. If you do see an apparition, try to speak to it and ascertain why it is lingering on this plane. (A gently-phrased "go away" has also been found effective.)

When this phase of the investigation is complete, it is time to answer some hard questions. What is happening in the house? Here are some choices:

1) You have a bonafide haunting.

2) You honestly feel the family is fooling themselves; there is no independent corroboration and you have seen and heard nothing yourself. Tell them that in your estimation they have nothing to worry about; but if the situation should worsen they should call you.

3) There are strange incidents you cannot explain but you feel it points more to human harrassment than emnity from the spirit world. Ask the family if they can think of anyone who would want to put them through such an ordeal. Their answers might surprise you.

If you do have a haunting, advise family members to speak to any apparitions they see, and to remain calm.

If the family is religious, suggest they contact a minister or priest. You can be of service to them in this regard by preparing a report of your investigation, along with the names of witnesses to the phenomena. Priests do perform more exorcisism than is commonly realized, and ministers will likely agree to bless the house even if no problem exists.

More usually, however, a haunt-problem will cease to exist if the reason for the haunting can be found or if the apparition can be persuaded to leave. You should bear in mind that apparitions often linger in their old home because they do not realize death has taken place and are wandering around in a highly confused state.

Above all, proceed through the investigation calmly, NEVER let your own emotions cause the family more fear than they are already experiencing.

QUESTIONNAIRE

1. Name, age, occupation.

2. Length of residence in house.

3. When did you begin to notice manifestations in the house?

4. Has the level of severity increased since then, or has it remained about the same?

5. Names of neighbors or friends who have noticed unusual things in your house.

6. Do these manifestations appear to have any pattern? a) Do they occur more frequently at night, b) when the family is together, c) early in the morning, etc.

7. What area of the house seems the most affected?

8. Describe the major experiences you have had involving strange sounds.

9. Can you think of any reasonable explanation for them? List them.

10. Have you seen anything inexplicable? Describe it.

11. Have you noticed any odd odors or feelings which you could not explain? Describe them.

12. If you have any pets, how did they respond?

13. Have you had any unusual dreams during this period? What were they?

14. Can you think of any unusual incidents which have happened to close friends or neighbors during this period? Detail them.

15. Have you ever been interested in the paranormal?

16. Have you ever felt uneasy or had experiences on the grounds outside your house? What were they?

17. Do you know anything about the house or surrounding landscape?

That is, do you know the history of the families who have resided in the house, from the very first tenants on, since the particular house was built?

If the answer is yes, secure all of the pertinent data. If no, find out who the renting agent or real estate people are and pay them a visit.

Now, investigation really begins—digging up history means you will exhume family skeletons. This must be done with extreme caution.

18. Are the hauntings, especially where poltergeist activity is evident, centered on particular members of the household rather than on others? □ reflexology and helped alleviate Ken's wife's headache problems.

John and Jean Palochak suffered headaches and an ear ache which disappeared under Dan's skillful manipulation.

Earl Schultz had a pain in his lower back which is now gone, and his wife Fern's bad knee was helped with Dan's massage.

Dottie Carlson's lower back problem was eased by Dan Sekeres. So was Mrs. Hull's aching finger. Both these problems had persisted for some time until Dan worked on them.

Several weeks ago, my good friend Jeff O'Melian stepped down off a tractor and his knee gave out. For three weeks he limped noticeably and with considerable pain. A surgeon suggested an operation—informing Jeff that he had suffered extensive ligament and cartilage damage. He had difficulty walking, standing on the injured leg, bending it even slightly, and straightening it out completely.

He is not a doctor and he makes no guarantees, but there are many documented first hand reports of his strange powers.

According to Jeff, one session with Dan Sekeres caused his condition to improve over 80 per-cent. Jeff said that after a second treatment, his leg was about as sound as it had ever been.

Dan only charges a few dollars for a foot massage. It does no harm and has worked wonders for a good many people. □ questions that absorbed them in the day—not only questions of their role and status with others, but in very practical questions of money, studies, trips, food, skills, and even questions on how to get enough sleep," writes Dr. Bro. Contemporary writers have been telling us that the solution to the dilemma of the activity-centered, fast-paced American may be in the subconscious.

As man begun to explore his horizons in outer space, he continued to ignore his inner space. Our Western culture emphasizes rational thinking functions while the Eastern culture emphasizes intuition. Hopefully, as the Eastern influence becomes more pervasive in our culture, we will be made more aware of our subconscious as well as our conscious self.

Each of us is carrying around our own sense of salvation, self-knowledge, and wisdom, which becomes conscious through our dreaming. Dreams don't make decisions for us, but they can help clarify aspects of our lives. By acting on the message of the dream, we deepen our relationship to the subconscious. For as Shakespeare told us: "We are such stuff as dreams are made of, and our little life is rounded with a sleep." □

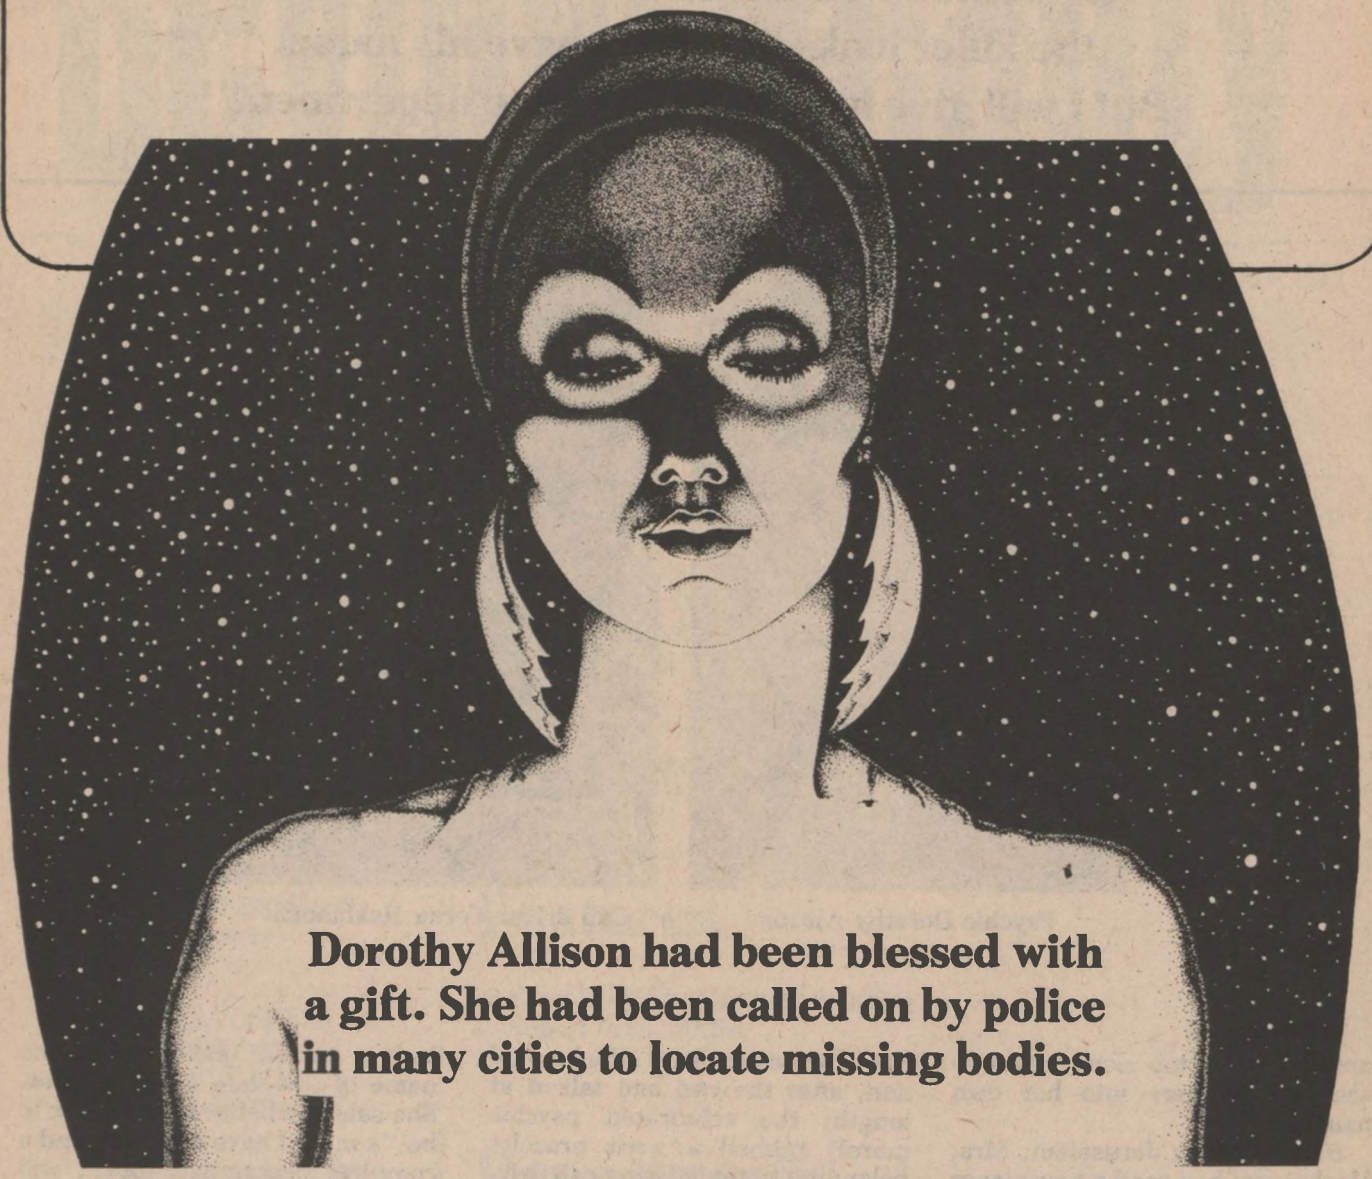
WOMAN WITH A GIFT



Dorothy Allison had been blessed with a gift. She had been called on by police in many cities to locate missing bodies.

Early last January, a New York taxi driver climbed behind the wheel of his cab and began what was to be just another workday in his hectic ritual of making an honest buck. He gassed up his cab, checked the meter and pulled out of the garage to cruise Manhattan's bustling streets and avenues for fares.

When he failed to show up at the taxi garage that evening, fellow drivers became concerned, but not alarmed; not yet. For Yeran Hashonai, a one-time Israeli tank commander, was considered to be an energetic worker, someone who knew the ropes and how to handle himself in a crisis. It was merely figured he was having a busy night and would bring his cab in when he was through.

When he failed to check in the following day, alarm began to be felt by the many friends he made at the garage where he worked out of, and they decided to summon police.

Five days later, on January 13, 1979, the fear and apprehension felt by his co-workers took on solid shape and definite gut-wrenching form: Hashmonai's taxi was located. It was abandoned in front of 150 East 42nd Street. What's more, there were bloodstains on the front and back seats.

And, although New York City Police combed the city, they could devote just so much time to finding the cab driver. He seemed to just vanish. The police incorporated the task into the countless other day-to-day assignments that they have to devote their time to.

For Hashmonai's mother, who arrived in New York from the Middle East to locate her son, the police worked too slowly, and so she took matters into her own hands.

Back home in Jerusalem, Mrs. Hashmonai had read a newspaper account of the work being done by Dorothy Allison of Nutley, New Jersey, a psychic whom, she learned, was credited with helping police to locate many missing persons throughout the country.

Quite impressed with the newspaper story, Mrs. Hashmonai sought out the psychic who, at the time, was working with the Chicago police on the much-publicized John Wayne Gacy mass murders.

Touched deeply by a mother's story, Dorothy Allison, herself a mother, came to New York to take on the case of Yoran Hashmonai. She contacted Mrs. Hashmonai and, after the two had talked at length, the celebrated psychic merely rubbed a wrist bracelet belonging to the missing cab driver and shortly thereafter announced she had a psychic picture. She informed the police that the missing driver's body was floating in a river.

It was at that time that the body of Yoran Hashmonai was found—floating in the waters of the 79th Street Marina.

Police who retrieved the body said the cabby had been shot once in the head—most probably with a small-caliber bullet.

Ms Allison, who said the vision had come to her "like the picture on a TV set," announced that she had a psychic picture and the name of the slain cabby's killer. She said she believed the killer to be "a man, I have his name and a complete description, but I will give it only to the police."

Although police said they have as yet no clues in the murder, the psychic said she feels the motive was money. "I feel he knew the man who killed him, that he had met his killer at least once before—maybe as far back as last August."

It is reported that Dorothy Allison plans to return to Chicago to continue her search for bodies in the Gacy case, but will make herself available to the New York Police should they need her for the Hashmonai murder. □

How to make others secretly DO YOUR BIDDING with the astonishing power of AUTOMATIC MIND COMMAND!

Here's how to get started in just 3 minutes . . .

Dear Friend:

New power is about to leap into your life . . . an astonishing way to control the thoughts and actions of others without their knowing it . . . no matter how much they may not want to follow your instructions, they carry them out to a "T" every time!

With "Automatic Mind-Command" you'll be running the show. Make a wish, turn on The Power, and watch those around you drop everything and do what they're told.

And nobody will even have the faintest idea that you're behind it all. That's the beauty of "Automatic Mind-Command"—you are the only one who knows what's going on—you alone decide when things should start . . . stop . . . change around.

CONTROL YOUR FRIENDS OR STRANGERS!

You can use it to control your friends or strangers, one at a time or in large numbers, at any time, and ANY WAY YOU LIKE.

For example: You go into a bank for a loan. The credit man smiles but says "Sorry. You don't qualify for a loan right now: however, if there's anything else I can do for you, I'd be glad to . . ." Then in a flash, his tune changes when you let loose your "Automatic Mind-Command." He continues, "In fact, we'll be glad to give you $1,000 more than you asked for. And any time you want more, just see me personally! Thank you so much for coming by!"

Impossible? You'll be doing things like that every day without even thinking about it. As soon as you need something done, it's done! The people who do these things for you will remember what they did, but not why!

FUN POWER—TOO!

You can have a lot of fun with this power, too. Look how Evelyn C. used it at work . . . One day, while sorting papers, her boss angrily inquired why she had to make so much noise—and scolded her in front of everybody. Evelyn said nothing, but smiled to herself—for she had just turned on the "Automatic Mind-Command . . ." Suddenly the boss apologized for being a scoundrel. "Please . . . I'm sorry," he said, in front of everybody. "I'd like to make it up to you!" And he told her what a wonderful person she was! When Evelyn turned the power off, the boss just stood there with an open mouth, wondering what made him say all those things.

Think what this power can mean in your life. You need money . . . and it's there! You want some affection . . . you'll be smothered! You want peace and quiet . . . the world stands still!

NO MORE SECRETS WILL BE KEPT FROM YOU!

People who think they can hold back the facts will meet their master in you! You just fire a little "Automatic Mind-Command" at them, and they'll sing like meadowlarks . . . Nona J. was at her wits' end when she tried to find the money she'd put aside to pay the rent—it was gone. A frantic search through the house turned up nothing. There was only one possibility left . . . she asked Billy. A look of surprise crossed his face. No—he hadn't seen any money. But Nona didn't believe him, and started using "Automatic Mind-Command" to find out if he was telling the truth. Suddenly Billy reached into his pocket and took out a roll of money. After giving her the money, he acted as if nothing had happened!

Think how many secrets must be hidden all around you! Things your spouse won't tell . . . your neighbors won't say . . . your boss keeps quiet about . . . ALL BROUGHT INTO THE OPEN JUST FOR YOU!! They'll tell you all their secrets, but they won't know why.

Hold on now, because I haven't told you yet about the best part of "Automatic Mind-Command."

You may have to bolt your door to keep people from overwhelming you with love, gifts, favors, rewards! Perfect strangers will be walking up to you and asking, "How are you? Can I do anything for you?" They will never suspect that "Automatic Mind-Command" is impelling them to like you, please you . . . and automatically want to help you.

INSTANTLY YOUR LIFE IS CHANGED!

At first, I couldn't believe it. And yet I know this to be true from my own personal experience . . . time after time. For example . . .

A STRANGER HANDS HIM $500—Harry G., a low-paid factory worker, wanted to start a business of his own. All he needed was cash to get started, but no one would give him the money. Finally someone told him how to use "Automatic Mind-Command"—and Harry laughingly tried it. A short time later, a perfect stranger handed him $500—saying he'd heard about Harry's plan, and was eager to help him get started!

Unusual? Not at all . . . things happen every day with "Automatic Mind-Command."

RECEIVES NEEDED CASH QUICKLY!—Mrs. Thelma J. reports, "I needed money badly." Her husband hadn't worked in months, and their savings were running out. Then she discovered "Automatic Mind-Command"—and turned on the power immediately! The next morning she received a package containing several hundred dollars from friends and well-wishers she never knew existed!

In all history, few indeed are the ones who have recognized "Automatic Mind-Command." The rest, who do not use it, pay the penalty in suffering, wishing, hoping, dreaming . . . Now I say to you: Wish no more!

HOW TO GET STARTED IN JUST 3 MINUTES!

Minute #1—Fill out the No-Risk Coupon and mail it to us.

Minute #2—When you receive a package in the mail from us, open it.

Minute #3—Lift the front cover, and let the secret feed itself in to your mind automatically.

After that, sit back, relax—and see how this power can work for you. It's as simple as that! It won't cost you one penny unless it works!

IN THAT INSTANT, YOU WILL ALREADY BE ABLE TO USE "AUTOMATIC MIND-COMMAND" FOR THE FIRST TIME . . . for money, love, healing, protection, and much more!

Imagine the thrill—after a lifetime of "scrimping" and "penny-pinching"—to see a tidal wave of riches rolling into your life from every direction—pay raises, bonuses, gifts, legacies . . . a rising tide of good fortune!

MORE AMAZING CASE HISTORIES!

And it's all just minutes away!

Larry S. wanted to see his girlfriend—although he had no idea where she was—and no way of contacting her by letter or phone. From far away . . . he began using "Automatic Mind-Command!" In that instant, his girlfriend knew what she had to do. She dropped what she was doing, excused herself and hurried to visit him. Arriving in record time—she hugged and kissed him, explaining that "something" told her he wanted and needed her, and what could she do for him!

Now here's a most fantastic use of "Automatic Mind-Command"—one I'm sure you'll agree proves that here is a power which staggers the imagination!

For example, cases of health-symptoms relieved with "Automatic Mind-Command!" John C. reports that his hearing now seems normal again! Warren W.'s blurred eyesight cleared, sharpened, and now seems normal! Lydia E. says her arthritic symptoms of soreness and stiffness in the fingers were relieved when nothing else seemed to help, and Mrs. M. S. was surprised when her leg pain disappeared. Bella S., who complained of "ulcerative colitis" with stomach cramps and diarrhea, obtained fast relief . . . And others report relief from complaints of high blood pressure, heart symptoms, "migraine" headaches, weakness, dizziness, fatigue, and more.

It's simple, easy, and automatic to apply!

YOURS TO PROVE—AT OUR RISK!

So you see, life can be beautiful with "Automatic Mind-Command." To discover its amazing power let it put you on the road to a NEW LIFE . . . filled to the brim with riches, love, pleasure and all the wonderful luxuries of the world . . . and more! You owe it to yourself to try it! Why not send in the No-Risk Coupon—TODAY!
