The life of Mrs. Kellogg was that of a foreign missionary at home. The buds and blossoms of consecration and self-denial bore most precious fruit of faith in home and Sabbath-school and the church of Christ. Her children, given to God, sat with her at the same communion table. Her eldest she prayed might take up the foreign missionary work from which she had been turned aside; and she saw her prayer answered when he was called to aid in holding Christ's banner against the overflow of paganism by the secret lodge system in our own country. Her warmest sympathy was always given to the cause represented by the Cynosure and N. C. A., and she for years found time from many and pressing home duties for volunteer Bible and tract work from house to house. Her unobtrusive and devoted life were like a Psalm, precious in the memory of all who knew her.

JOHN FAIT

died at the residence of his daughter, Margaret Lowe, near Abingdon, Knox county, Illinois, February 27, 1892, at the good old age of 88 years.

When 21 years of age he married Margaret Lindsey, who survives him. They raised a family of ten children, six of whom are still living, and all imbibed the principles of their father regarding slavery, the secret lodge, and the saloon.

The deceased was an old-time Abolitionist, when and where it cost something to oppose slavery. He became an avowed opponent of the lodge during the time of the trials for the murder of Capt. William Morgan. He took a great interest in the Christian Cynosure and its warfare upon the lodge system; he also gave what he could to support the work of reform generally. He also took a great interest in the women's work against the saloon, being a reader of the Union Signal. He thought that if the saloon ever becomes outlawed, it will be through the influence of woman suffrage.

For many years he held to the religious tenets of the United Brethren church; and, since the split, has held tenaciously to the radical wing of that denomination.

He died, as he had lived, trusting in Christ.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 7, 1892.

A NEGRO PROTEST.

A fair proportion of the 10,000 Negro citizens of Chicago assembled on Sunday evening of last week to listen to a sermon by Rev. Geo. W. Gaines, pastor of the Bethel African Methodist church, on "Recent Southern Outrages on the Negro." In the course of the services the pastor asked the congregation, numbering about 1,000, to join in singing the hymn "America," but they refused to do so, and one said: "I don't want to sing that song until this country is what it claims to be, 'Sweet Land of Liberty.'"

The pastor then threw open the meeting and called for volunteer speeches. The response was an outburst of anarchistic denunciation of the whites for oppressing the Negro. This was all wrong. Anarchy should be the very last resort of an oppressed people.

To a reporter, on Monday, touching the meeting of the evening before, Mr. Frank A. Denison, assistant city prosecutor and a representative colored man, made the following remarks:

"Tis true there have been great wrongs committed against the colored people, especially in the South, but wrongs are committed in all society. Certainly no such conduct as that in the Bethel church is conducive to legislation to right the wrongs. The troubles in the South are in the nature of a reaction that savors of the Ku Klux days, but such men as Bishop Grant, of San Antonio, Texas (who has done more to secure legislation for the colored people than any other man in the United States), take a better view of things. The wails come mostly from the poorer colored element that is degenerating rather than from the better classes. Men who were slave-drivers and who were paid to be brutal and who had no property, are among those who howl the most.

"The better classes worship the name of Senator Charles Sumner, who they know built up the civil rights bill from the very precepts of the Constitution of the United States. They realize that all of the benefits they may expect to gain in this great country must be got by observing the laws and precepts. Those are the sentiments of the better class of colored people, and I have no hesitancy in reiterating that the disgraceful outbreak at the Bethel church will be the subject for censure in every good home."

That the reported outrages committed upon the Southern Negroes are not myths, the following statement, made by a prominent white citizen of the South to a Chicago reporter, bears ample testimony: "In the last year 500 colored men have died by violence in the South, and nine black men have been burned at the stake. In the last hundred years thousands of colored men have been murdered by white men in the South and yet not one white man has been brought to justice."

Now, who is responsible for these atrocities?

Mr. Dickinson's special plea is that although "'tis true there have been great wrongs committed against the colored people, wrongs are committed in all society." But in any other section of the country such outrages as burning Negroes at the stake would not be tolerated, and the inquisitors would be punished.

Mr. Dickinson also says: "The wails come mostly from the poorer colored element that is degenerating, rather than from the better classes." Perhaps the "better classes" are not being decimated by violent deaths at the rate of 500 a year, "like the poorer colored element," and the latter certainly have abundant reason for complaint. Because they are "degenerating," is it humane or lawful to kill them on the slightest provocation?—to deprive them of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," secured to them by the Federal Constitution and the Civil-Rights law, as well as to "the better classes?" Would it not be more praiseworthy to throw around them better protection under the law, educate them, civilize them, stop this alleged degeneracy, and elevate them to the standard of intelligence, industry and prudence provided for all who live under the stars and stripes?

It is true that during all the long years since the close of the Rebellion many of the Negroes have enjoyed unprecedented opportunities for raising themselves above poverty, have engaged in business, and accumulated competence and wealth, have received instruction from missionary sources—have, in short, become influential members of society.

This is gratifying as far as it goes. It is something to take even a tithe of any long-oppressed and degraded race, and restore it to the image and stature of free, intelligent manhood: and this work should be increased ten-fold by greater efforts on the part of all true philanthropists. In this way, ignorance, poverty, crime and uselessness may be dissipated in all, until all have become members of "the better classes."

It is true that the Negro is to blame for many shortcomings, and that he pays too much of his hard-earned wages for "dues" in the secret lodges with which the South is honey-combed, and possibly he spends too much money for poor whisky, and commits many other misdemeanors—but none for which he deserves to be deprived of his vote or his life, without trial and without justice.

IS THE SEAL WORTH PRESERVATION?

It is not at all probable that we can be driven into war with Great Britain on account of the seal-fisheries. There is too much of good sense on both sides to permit such a conflict.

Yet it is well to inquire, what would be the relative loss and gain to allow the seal-hunters of the world to prey on these denizens of our Northern seas—just as we allowed all men to slaughter our buffaloes? Would it not mean their extinction and a considerable diminution of the income from our Alaska possessions? Yet a six-months' war would cost more, in money, in life, and in morals, than the value of all the seals that ever swam in the seas. Besides, is the preservation of seal-life a real good?

For centuries the whalers hunted their prey until whales were nearly exterminated from the ocean. A most important business had to be relinquished, because there was no restraint on the slaughter of these monsters of the deep. The whale oil that fed the student's lamp, half a century ago, has practically disappeared from the market. But the destruction of the whale turned our attention to our mineral oils, and the result is, that we have a far better, as well as cheaper, illumination. The extinction of the buffalo has already become an important influence in favor of the civilization of the Indian. His food supply is cheaper and more abundant than when gotten by the chase. He now has an incentive to industry and economy. Civilization is better than barbarism, just as the ox is better than the bison.

When the African elephant shall be domesticated, as in India, or exterminated, there will be an end of slave hunts and slave-traders. The ivory and the slave-trader are intimately associated. They each imply the continuance of barbarism. So with the seal fisheries. They take the place of more profitable industries.

The seal consumes vast quantities of food-fish, so that its own destruction would add immensely to the world's supply of food. Fewer seals means less of this kind of adornment for the rich, but cheaper and more abundant food for the rest of mankind.

Is the seal worth preservation? Certainly he is not worth fighting for.

Later dispatches inform us that there will be no fight. It is well.

A MISSIONARY TUG-BOAT.

Bro. I. R. B. Arnold has for several years been doing a very successful missionary work along our Western rivers, and the reports from him have served, many times, to cheer our readers and encourage them to make renewed efforts in the anti-secrecy and prohibition reforms.

Bro. Arnold's heart is in this work, and he is doing yeoman's service whenever an opportunity occurs. Last winter we printed a fine engraving of his "floating chapel," the craft in which he lives and moves from port to port on the rivers, and in which he holds some very interesting meetings in the interest of the Gospel and reforms. At the same time we published a description of the boat and the service in which it is engaged, and we are sure it must have received a careful perusal.

The chapel has been a great help in carrying on Bro. Arnold's work; but it has been attended with one serious difficulty. It has been easy enough to float the vessel down stream with the current in good weather; but even this motive power has, in stormy weather, been subject to annoying delays. At times the wind is so strong as to blow the chapel against the river banks, so that it will not float even down stream for two or three days.

To obviate these hindrances, Bro. Arnold is anxious to obtain a small steam tug-boat, costing about $1,000, to tow his chapel either down stream or up, notwithstanding the weather. This would make a great improvement in his work, as he would be able to make more appointments in advance on his routes, with a certainty of keeping them. He desires to extend his work, both as an anti-secrecy lecturer and a prohibition advocate, and is very solicitous of having his new steam tug-boat at as early a day as possible.

In his behalf, and in the interest of his labors, which we all feel should receive ample support, it is requested that all who can will contribute to the necessary fund for the purchase of the tugboat.

Bro. Arnold is heartily opposed to the lodge, in all its multifarious forms, as a great public evil. His lectures on Masonry have been well received in several States, including Kentucky and Indiana. Masons and Odd-fellows listened to them attentively, and admitted the truth as presented. A lady told Bro. Arnold, quite recently, that she had been always opposed to Masonry, but that she never before knew that it was idolatry.

Bro. Arnold also labors very earnestly in behalf of the prohibition of the liquor traffic, by lecturing and distributing tracts and other literature on the subject. Anti-secrecy publications are also freely distributed wherever they are likely to do good.

The opportunities of such a mission for accomplishing great results are numerous and may be made very useful in exposing the works of darkness in the lodge and saloon.

Bro. Arnold writes to us that if he succeeds in getting his tug-boat, he will arrange to give, at each appropriate point along his routes, two illustrated lectures on temperance or prohibition, and then two in opposition to the lodges, and also aid in the continual distribution of the N. C. A.'s anti-secrecy publications, either by selling the books himself or boarding, free of expense, an agent appointed for that purpose by the Association. The proposition is generous, and, if put into operation, may result in doing much good.

TO OUR CHRISTIAN FRIENDS.

As is well known, the National Christian Association, by the liberality of the late Philo Carpenter, owns and occupies its own structure at 221 West Madison street. A part of the building is rented to other parties for business purposes, which gives several hundred dollars annually for the anti-secrecy reform. To rent the unused portions of the building for an income to carry on the anti-secrecy work was the intention of the donor.

On the second floor, fronting pleasantly on the street, is a large apartment which had been vacated by the tenant and which for two months has been used, free from rent, for noon prayer meetings and evening revival services. R. A. Torrey, Superintendent of the Moody Institute, has charge of the evening meetings.

These Christian workers are zealous and active missionaries, and their meetings have been productive, weekly, on an average, of three conversions.

Shall these missions be continued? The workers cannot pay the rent. The N. C. A. cannot afford to give the room rent free, which should net from $24 to $30 per year for the anti-secrecy work.

Will the friends interested in home missionary or city mission work contribute the rent for the room? If the work must be discontinued, any money received will be returned to the donors. If the mission goes on, its progress will be noted from time to time in the Cynosure.

Whatever is done, must be done on or before April 30th. Pledges will be received as well as cash.

—Rev. A. T. Pierson, editor of the Missionary Review of the World (New York), and a distinguished American preacher, who supplied Mr.

Spurgeon's pulpit during his last illness, has been engaged to preach to Mr. Spurgeon's congregation for five years. The appointment is alike creditable to pastor and people.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the College agent, is sojourning at Frenchtown, Hunterdon county, N. J., to rest and await favorable weather before beginning active work in the Eastern colleges. He formerly preached at Frenchtown fourteen years, and finds some old friends there yet.

—Rev. Amos J. Bailey, the esteemed correspondent of the Cynosure in Utah, has been appointed home missionary agent for the State of Washington. He has for several years conducted a successful home missionary work at Ogden. Rev. E. D. Bailey, of Central Union mission in Washington City, and formerly New England agent for our reform, is a younger brother.

—The new edition of Rev. Dr. Carradine's sterling discourse: "Are Secret Societies a Blessing or a Curse?" of which 4,000 copies were printed last month, is nearly exhausted, only about 500 copies remaining on hand. The offer, heretofore printed in this paper, to sell them in lots of fifty copies for one dollar, or less than wholesale prices, is withdrawn. The sermon may now be obtained at this office (a 20-page pamphlet, in a neat cover) at five cents per copy, postpaid, or for fifty cents per dozen. "STORIES OF THE GODS," by I. R. B. Arnold, is a handsome 32-page pamphlet, in paper covers, which has deservedly enjoyed a large distribution, and may be obtained at this office, during April, at the following reduced prices: Sent, postpaid, in lots of 50 for one dollar, or less than wholesale prices. Ordinarily it sells for ten cents per copy. By this liberal reduction we hope to reach a large number of persons who do not have access to anti-secrecy lectures, and yet who should understand that Freemasonry is a revival of the ancient pagan mysteries. It is an interesting booklet, and contains a valuable fund of information for the home, the school or church meetings. Send in the orders at once.

—Just after the visit of Pres. Blanchard and Rev. W. C. Paden, of Schaller, Iowa, to Sac City, in that State, where they lectured in opposition to secret societies, the lodge adherents engaged Rev. F. W. Evans, a strong advocate of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, to lecture in favor of these fraternities, March 22, 23 and 24, to neutralize the growing opposition to the lodges. An attentive correspondent, R. S. Coyner, who was present when Evans lectured, writes to us that he bolstered up the antiquity of the Osirian order, abused the Anti-masons, mimicked pioneer preachers, and employed ridicule to point his old-fashioned, humdrum arguments in favor of the lodges. On the third evening, by permission, Mr. Coyner took the stand, after Evans had finished his closing lecture. Evans, that evening, had said, in substance, that Masons and Odd-fellows were charged with taking oaths to protect each other in crime, but denied these allegations. Coyner inquired if he would confirm his denial with an oath taken before a justice of the peace. After some hesitation he said he would. Coyner then proceeded to read up his authorities against the lodge and lodge oaths, and reviewed the arguments of Evans, until all that the latter had said had been refuted. The publication of the evidence taken in the New Berlin Masonic trials, which Coyner read to the audience, was an eye-opener, and did much to counteract the influence of Evans' visit to the city.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The "Romance of Missions."—President Eliot's Utah speech.—Yale's new departure for women.—The "Fraternal Messenger" and Rev. J. W. Hamilton.

Who shall say that "the romance of missions" is over? In reading about the newly-wedded missionaries—the bride a native of Auburn, Me.—who are to make their home in Kinnegans, in Alaska, almost on the Arctic Circle, the thrill in many a New England heart will recall the feelings with which, in the early part of the century, her Christian households read of the departure of Dr. Judson and his devoted band of missionaries for far-away Burmah. The hardships and trials incident to a missionary station at which mail-ships touch but once a year, and where the only society must be savage, fur-clad Esquimaux, living on seal's-flesh and blubber, can hardly be exaggerated; and yet, aside from the happiness that is inherent in all true Christian service, there may be many sources of enjoyment in their lives of which the ordinary view does not take account. It is always the most highly trained and cultured minds which can best bear isolation. How strange it must seem to look across that narrow stretch of water straight to Asia, the cradle of the human race! to see the midnight sun shining above the horizon all through the long northern day, or setting at noon over Behring's Straits. How weird the gloom of the Arctic night lit up by the Aurora Borealis as by millions of flaming swords! What an enchantment in the Arctic summer, as evanescent as a youthful hope, but, while it lasts, as sweet!

It is disheartening to know—but it must be much more disheartening for them to face the actual fact—that ahead of this devoted pair New England has sent her whisky and rum to neutralize, as far as possible, their best efforts for the moral and intellectual elevation of these poor Alaskans, now our fellow-citizens. How long must the land of the Pilgrims tolerate such a blot on the 'scutcheon?' These rare instances of self-devotion lead one to question the truth of our old ideals of heaven, as a state of paradisaical bliss into which no thought of other beings less happy can intrude. People who will thus cheerfully isolate themselves on one of the bleakest and most inhospitable shores known to the civilized world,—all for the sake of Christianizing a handful of Esquimaux savages, would not be content anywhere without some kind of self-sacrificing service for their Master. On what errands of love to the lost souls of other worlds may they be sent; and what wonderful experiences may be theirs, joyful, startling, or thrilling, to be recorded,—who knows?—in the pages of some celestial "Romance of Missions!"

The editors of the Critic say that Mollie Eliot Sewall's paper on the "Absence of the Creative Faculty in Women" has been more talked about than any single article they have ever printed. It seems too bad that nonsense should always attract so much more attention than sense; but it is the way of the world. An earnest, thoughtful article, written by a woman who believed in her sex, and had made an exhaustive and philosophic study of its capacities and capabilities, would hardly have wakened a ripple. So President Eliot, unfortunately for the honor of the institution of which he is the head, is better known to the public than almost any other instructor in the country, not because he says such wise things, but because he has so often said such exasperatingly foolish ones. It seems difficult to think that he could have been in his sober mind when he made his much-talked-of speech, last week, at Salt Lake City, and drew that ridiculous and outrageous comparison between the Pilgrim Fathers of New England and the Mormon settlers of Utah. It would not be out of place to recommend to Harvard's president, before he makes another speech, a course of reading which should include Neal and Palfrey. His placing of the polygamous Mormons on the same level with those pure-minded and great-hearted men and women who fled to these bleak shores for liberty and conscience' sake, is an insult which happily they cannot feel; but if their living sons and daughters did not resent it, the very stones which mark their places of rest might cry out.

President Eliot has seemed to systematically range himself on the wrong side of every important question. Ever since he started the keynote, in his enthusiastic endorsement of Cleveland, by saying that the private character of a political candidate had nothing to do with his public life, he has never seemed to open his lips before an audience without saying something which had much better have been left unsaid; but his Utah speech "caps the climax."

His well-known opposition to co-education is one reason why Yale, in the march of progress, now steps ahead of Harvard by throwing open all the privileges and degrees of its postgraduate courses to women. The best thing about it is that the decision of the Faculty was practically unanimous, and the fact that this new departure is so cordially welcomed by the press and the leaders of thought everywhere is proof beforehand that Yale will reap as much advantage from it as the women, who need not now be at the trouble and expense of going to Oxford when they wish to supplement their work at Smith or Wellesley. Perhaps Harvard may yet learn, as Lucy Stone says in the Woman's Column, that "it pays to be just." Apropos to this subject, it is rather funny, to say the least, that at the recent Hearing on Woman-Suffrage before the Massachusetts Legislature, the remonstrants were only "conspicuous by their absence." Not one appeared, for the reason, as stated in their letter to the chairman, that they preferred to present their arguments in print, as the pros and cons of the question had become so familiar to everybody, that their recapitulation was only a useless waste of time. Of course, the hearings will lose one of their chief elements of interest, and on this account the absence of any representative of the anti-suffrage side is to be regretted; but at the same time it is a tacit recognition, on their part, of their own defeat.

A friend has sent me copies of the Fraternal Messenger of the United Endowment League, published at Boston, in the interests of that order. It contains portraits with brief biographical sketches, of all the officers, prominent among whom appears the Rev. J. W. Hamilton, Supreme Chaplain and Trustee; which fact alone would be sufficient reason for giving it more attention than the writer usually bestows on papers of this class. On the first page is a story of the usual sentimental kind found in lodge journals. It is flat and insipid enough, but would that this was the worst that could be said of it! The heroines, two destitute orphan sisters, at first refuse the invitation to attend a supper of the Endowment League because "papa never approved of these peculiar endowment orders," but they are tempted by the prospect of a good time to disregard their dead father's wishes and go; by which means their prejudices are finally dispelled, and "Terry" marries the League's "handsome president." A fair specimen of the way in which the lodge teaches filial duty.

The noticeable point about every biographical sketch is that it concludes with the statement that the subject was a prominent Mason and Odd-fellow, or connected with some other secret society, Dr. Hamilton himself being "for sixteen years chaplain of Mt. Lebanon Lodge, F. A. M., and connected with Oasis Lodge, Odd-fellows of Somerville." This shows the fraternity of the United Endowment League, but does not tend to make one more trustful of it from either a moral or financial standpoint. In its "clippings" column I notice the following choice bit of advice to lodgemen: "Don't be too straight-laced like an over-dressed woman, but allow a little freedom of action and speech, and when the meeting is over everybody will go home saying we have had a glorious time." How does this advice sound to pure-minded Christian wives and mothers? Taking advantage of the lapsed element is thus unblushingly defended in true lodge style: "One-third of the members of most of the churches are in a lapsed condition, either living in violation of the moral code, or neglecting the ordinances of God, or failing to contribute according to their ability towards the support of the Gospel." When the church begins to speculate on her lapsed element, this amazing parallel may stand. Meanwhile, I charge Rev. J. W. Hamilton, and other Masonic pastors, with being the cause, in no small degree, of her deplorable condition. The United Endowment League is distinctly stated in this paper to be "a ritualistic order," and a ritual, as Webster defines it, is "any prescribed form of religious worship." I know nothing about the ceremonies of initiation, but the fact that it has a ritual as well as a "supreme chaplain" is proof positive that it is only another of the countless forms of false worship that are killing the spirit of vital piety in every church to-day which tolerates their presence; and I solemnly warn Dr. Hamilton to separate himself from the unclean thing before it be too late, lest when the Judgment books open he find the blood of some of those "lapsed" members upon his own garments. Let him come out, like a brave man, and renounce and denounce the hidden things of darkness; so shall he save both himself and them that hear him. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

—The Augustana Hospital, controlled by the Swedish Lutherans, of Chicago, was made the subject of a large meeting of Swedes at Farwell Hall, last week. The support of the institution, situated at the corner of Lincoln and Cleveland avenues, was discussed. It is a worthy charity.

THE HOME.

THAT BLISSFUL LAND.

Beyond the shadows which surround
Our troubled mortal life,
There lies a land where never wakes
The sound of toil or strife;
Where sickness never pales the cheek,
Where starts no cry of pain,
Where gladness settles on the soul,
And never lifts again.

No billows break along its shore,
No tempests sweep the sky;
The beauty of the Lord our God
On all things there doth lie;
Eternal calm, unending peace,
Reign in that blissful land;
O happy they who reach its rest,
And stand at God's right hand!

There all the pure in heart are found,
Their very thoughts are praise;
They sing the endless death of sin,
Christ's triumph song they raise;
Before the pierced feet which led
Their spirits up to light,
They yield the homage of their love,
Arrayed in robes of white.

No more they weep, no more they watch,
No more the Tempter dread;
The dark perplexities of old
Are ever from them fled;
Saved by the all-redeeming blood,
They breathe the balm of bliss,
They know that Christ is theirs for aye,
They know that they are His.

Our Father-God, we long to reach,
Their fellowship of rest,
To see the glory of our Lord,
And be forever blessed;
Guide us through smooth and silent seas,
And o'er the stormy foam,
Until we strike the sunlit shore,
And hear Thy welcome home.

SAD EFFECTS OF OVERWORKED MOTHERS.

A writer, who was once a reporter for one of our large daily newspapers, was once detailed to go to the house of a most philanthropic and talented woman to take notes of a meeting. The drawing-room was filled with an enthusiastic audience, and the hostess was especially eloquent and felicitous in her address. Among other things, she stated that for three days she had scarcely eaten, for a week had scarcely slept, and her family had literally received no attention from her hands, so great had been her feeling of responsibility in this matter of temperance. Her remarks were greeted with the wildest enthusiasm. At the close of the session the reporter was asked to step upstairs for a few minutes, as there was something very important that the president wished to have embodied in the report.

"The scribe did as she was bid, but unfortunately knocked at the wrong door. There was a general shuffle and some whispering, and then the door was cautiously opened a crack by the son of the hostess. His breath was that of a wine-bibber, the room was full of cigar-smoke, and there were cards and bottles on the table. 'I had frequently heard of such performances in the homes of our temperance and other reformers, but this is the first time I had witnessed one,' said the reporter. 'After reflecting upon the matter—and, by the way, I had long enough time for this mental operation, as the mother and president kept me waiting exactly one hour and a half—I determined to do something I never had done before, and that was to tell tales. My disgust and indignation gave me strength, and I committed this indiscretion. This is what the reformer said to me when I had finished: 'Oh, my dear, I am sorry you should have been annoyed by the cigar-smoke, but boys will be boys, you know.' Then with the greatest ease she turned to the all-absorbing subject of liquor saloons, while my cheeks burned with the fever of an almost uncontrollable anger and shame.'

"Who is responsible for the growth in vice of this once favored son of fortune—he is now a common drunkard, in the parlance of the streets—and who for the boys of other mothers that went to destruction with him? Why, the mother who neglected her own family, who ignored her special and sacred duty for what she considered of more consequence—a universal one."

On an entirely different phase of the subject these points are made.

"The overworked mothers of large families have, in the past, been warmly sympathized with, as was proper, and to a large extent excused, when their children have 'turned out bad'—which was not so proper. The fact is, the relation of the overworked mother to temperance is just as vital and just as absolute as the relation of other mothers to this subject. The responsibilities of motherhood cannot be dodged or shifted.

"Many a boy has gone to perdition, many a girl has listened to the tempter, while the mother was trying to turn her old stove into a mirror. In contrast to this is the woman who, though overworked, thinks first of her children and her influence upon their plastic minds. If washing the windows is likely to interfere with their necessary entertainment, she allows more dirt to collect, and gives herself to her paramount duty. She never uses up the strength which rightfully belongs to her children in polishing stoves, or scouring boards with soap and sand. She does not try to imitate the frills and ruffles of her wealthy neighbors. There are just as few stitches as possible put into the necessary garments, in every way simplified by the sensible avoidance of unnecessary and nerve-rasping details. The boys as well as the girls are encouraged to help in the work, because it is made interesting by the loving tact of the mother, and the promise of the reward of entertainment that is to follow. By and by the overworked parent is relieved of some of her burdens. Her thoughtfulness, her ready sympathy with their childish wants, her willingness and ability to teach in entertaining ways, make so sweet and fascinating an atmosphere that home comes to be of all places upon earth the most pleasant. Home-made bread may be scarce, and mush and johnny-cake plentiful. Jelly-cake and angel-food may not often be seen under this roof, but ginger-bread and graham-crackers will be just as toothsome and much more healthful. There may be some dust under the lounge and the bureaus, and the beds may be destitute of pillow-shams, and the kitchen range may show a black face instead of a silver sheen, but there are picture-papers and school-books, and books from the library, and conversation and discussions, and time for social enjoyment. This mother will doubtless go to bed every night of her life very tired, but she has the satisfaction of knowing that her children are happy, and that her boys are not planning how they can 'shin down' the rain-water pipe, or, shoes in hand, escape from the house without waking father and mother.

"That the liquor saloons are largely recruited from the homes of the overworked is a fact which we all recognize, and have accepted as inevitable. To prevent this awful destruction of soul and body, we have used the best part of our energies in attacking that end of the subject which, by reason of cupidity and ignorance, has so far proved impregnable."

In discussing "the over-neat mother," the writer tells of a young mechanic who was working in a lecture-room where some ladies were earnestly discussing the subject of temperance, and who was asked if he "had something he would like to say."

"'I thank you very much,' was the immediate response, 'for I really have. I have had work to do here during your last three sessions, and have been much interested and pleased by many things I have heard. But, ladies, pardon me, I beg of you; the feeling is constantly present that, while your work here has a certain merit, it is mostly valueless because you have commenced at the wrong end.'

"There was a moment's pause, and one of the ladies took advantage of it to ask, 'Will you kindly tell us what you consider the right end of this matter?'

"'The home end,' was the instant response, and the words were electrical. There was not a woman, young or old, who did not respond to this quick, close touch of truth with every throb of her heart and every nerve of her body.

"'You see before you, ladies,' the speaker went on, 'a man twenty-five years old, who was practically homeless and motherless. I do not say that my mother did not love me, but I do say that no human interest was ever allowed to interfere with the cleanliness and order of the house. This was her first and last consideration. I had a love and, I believe, a talent for mechanics, and if I could have had the tools I needed, and a place that I could have called my own, with full liberty to whittle, plane, and carve, I should not, at eighteen, have spent all my evenings outside with doubtful companions. As long as there was no dust on my bureau, no finger-marks on the door, no litter on the carpet, it made small difference to my mother where I was. The back yard, even, was too sacred a place to be desecrated with shavings; and, though I would have been satisfied with the cellar for a work-shop, that was denied me. From morning till night I never heard anything but exhortations not to spill, not to soil, not to make a litter, and to wipe my feet, and put things where I found them. Well, I got into bad company, went to liquor saloons, and drank with the rest. I never went home intoxicated, because I knew that the consequences of not being able to wipe my feet would be very disagreeable. It certainly never occurred to me that my mother would care about my condition, outside of the trouble and disorder I might cause, and the disgrace of being seen by the neighbors. In this way precious years were wasted, worse than wasted, and long before this I should have been utterly irreclaimable if it had not been for a very lovely and a very sensible old lady, who won my confidence, and who offered me a true home. She found me a teacher, provided me with tools; and, in exchange for this kindness, I promised to stop drinking, and to spend my evenings in the house. I am now self-supporting, and it will not be long before I shall occupy a better position than my present one. So, ladies, I know that, if the mothers of our boys do not take practical hold of the right end of this matter of temperance, it might just as well be let alone entirely.' With these words the speaker turned, and walked slowly down the aisle. His unexpected testimony made a very deep impression upon his hearers, and considerable difference in the subsequent treatment of the subject.

"The mother who cares more for her tablecloth and her carpets than for the moral and intellectual growth of her children may be a radical opposer of strong drink, may attend meetings and belong to lodges; but she is a more powerful enemy to the cause of temperance than even the sellers of intoxicating beverages."—Timely Truth.

THE FATHER IN THE FAMILY.

The meaning of "husband" is "houseband." All members of the family center in the father. He is the lawmaker, illustrating in his own manly bearing the sterner virtues of energy, integrity, honesty, patience, courage, diligence, and practical usefulness.

His children are the younger members of the Lord's family,—brothers and sisters intrusted to his care by his Heavenly Father, to be trained and educated for heaven.

He should never correct his children while impatient or fretful, or while under the influence of passion. If correction is demanded, he should punish them in love, manifesting the unwillingness he feels to cause them pain. He should never raise a hand to give them a blow unless he can, with a clear conscience, bow before God and ask his blessing upon the correction he is about to give. He should encourage love in the hearts of his children, ever presenting before them high and correct motives of self-restraint. He should not give them the impression that they must submit to his control because it is his arbitrary will, because they are weak and he is strong, but because it is for their highest and lasting good and happiness.

The father is in one sense the priest of the household, laying upon the altar of God the morning and evening sacrifice. The wife and children should be encouraged to unite in this offering, and also to engage in the song of praise. Morning and evening the father, as priest of the household, should confess to God the sins committed by himself and his children through the day. Those sins which have come to his knowledge, and also those which are secret, of which God's eye alone has taken cognizance, should be confessed. The rule of action, zealously carried out by the father when he is present, by the mother when he is absent, will result in blessings to the family.—Mrs. F. G. White.

TEMPERANCE.WHICH SHALL IT BE?

A tidy little home for Betsy and me,
With just enough room for one, two, three?
Or a tumble-down hut with a broken gate,
And a sad-eyed woman toiling early and late:

Which shall it be
For mine and me?

A five-cent glass of beer for me,
Or a five-cent loaf for all of us three?
Beer or baby—wine or wife,
Which do I hold more precious than life!

Which shall it be
For mine and me?

Potatoes and salt with a crust of bread
For the best little woman the Lord ever made,
While the rumseller's wife feeds on turkey and wine,
Bought with my money—if I so incline;

This shall it be
For mine and me!

Tatters and rags for my little one,
My fair, comely baby, my own darling son;
While the rumseller's children go warm and well clad,
On my earnings, wrested from my bonny lad;

This shall it be
For mine and me?

Well, man, do you think me a whole-eyed fool,
Blindly to serve as the rumseller's tool?
Ah! How can I hesitate which to choose,
When it's all to gain—or all to lose;

For mine and me,
For mine and me?

—Anonymous.

WHY I AM A TOTAL ABSTAINER?

First of all, I never drank, because I seemed to possess an inborn hatred of all intoxicants. Although brought up with wine on the table I could never be induced to taste it, when, as a child, some light wine would be placed to my mouth to sip. To some good mothers this may seem an unwise thing for my parents to have done, but it must be remembered that I was born and brought up until my sixth year in Holland—a country where drunkenness is never seen, but whose people, high and low, believe in a moderate use of light wines, and have been brought up for years in that belief.

But, as I grew older, I began to apply reasoning to my principles. Being early thrown into business life and among men older than myself, I naturally matured quickly. I was about sixteen years old, if I remember rightly, when I began attending public dinners and assemblages in the capacity of a newspaper reporter. Wines were more freely used then at dinners than now, and I soon saw that I must make up my mind whether at these gatherings I should partake of wines or decline them.

I had been trained to the belief that it was always best to err on the safe side, and as I sat down to the first public dinner I ever attended—a New England dinner in Brooklyn—I turned down all the wine glasses set before my plate, and this I have followed ever since.

At first, my principle never to touch liquor or spirits of any kind directed to me the chaffings of my friends. But I made up my mind that there was no use having a principle unless one stuck to it. And just let me say right here to all my young readers who may see these words, I never lost one friend by my refusals, but I made scores of friendships.

Another thing which led me to make up my mind never to touch liquor was the damage which I saw wrought by it upon some of the finest minds with which it was ever my privilege to come into contact, and I concluded that what had resulted injuriously to others might prove so to me. I have seen, even in my few years of professional life, some of the smartest, yea, brilliant literary men dethroned from splendid positions owing to nothing else but their indulgence in wine. I have known men with salaries of thousands of dollars per year, occupying positions which hundreds strive a lifetime to attain, come to beggary from drink. Only recently there applied to me, for any position I could offer him, one of the most brilliant editorial writers in the newspaper profession—a man, who, two years ago, easily commanded $100 for a single editorial in his special field. That man became so unreliable from drink that editors are now afraid of his articles, and although he can to-day write as forcible editorials as at any time during his life, he sits in a cellar in one of our cities writing newspaper wrappers for one dollar per thousand. And that is only one instance of several I could recite here. I do not hold my friend up as a terrible example; he is but one of a type of men who convince me and may convince others that a clear mind and liquor do not go together.

I know it is said that when one brings up such an instance as this: "Oh, well, that man drank to excess. One glass will hurt no one." How do these people know that it won't? One drop of kerosene has been known to throw into flame an almost hopeless fire, and one glass of liquor may fan into flame a smoldering spark hidden away where we never thought it existed. The spark may be there and it may not. Why take the risk? Liquor to a healthy boy or young man will never do him the least particle of good; it may do him harm.

Then, as I looked around and came to know more of people and things, I found the always unanswerable argument in favor of a young man's abstinence, i. e., that the most successful men in America to-day are those who never lift a wine-glass to their lips. Becoming interested in this fact, I had the curiosity to personally inquire into it, and of twenty-eight of the leading business men in the country whose names I selected at random, twenty-two never touch a drop of wine of any sort. I made up my mind that there was some reason for this. If liquor brought safe pleasures, why did these men abstain from it? If, as some say, it is a stimulant to a busy man, why did not these men, directing the largest business interests in this country, resort to it? And when I saw that these were the men whose opinions in great business matters were accepted by the leading concerns of the world, I concluded that their judgment in the use of liquor would satisfy me. If their judgment in business matters could command the respect and attention of the leaders of trade on both sides of the sea, their decision as to the use of liquor was not apt to be wrong.

And as opportunities come to me to go around in homes and at public places, I find that I do not occupy a solitary position. The tendency to abstain from liquors is growing more and more among young men of to-day. The brightest young men I know, young men who are filling positions of power and promise, never touch a drop of beer, wines or intoxicants of any sort. And the young man who to-day makes up his mind that he will be on the safe side and adhere to strict abstinence will find that he is not alone. He has now the very best element in business and social life in the largest cities of our land with him.—Edward W. Bok, in the Young Crusader.

DRUNKENNESS AND DEATH.

That strong drink in all its various forms affects, and very disastrously affects, the death rate, few will have the hardihood to deny. It produces many deaths directly every year through drunken brawls, accident, suicide and murder. Sometimes an entire holocaust is offered up upon the altar of Bacchus through the negligence of some drunken watchman or employe.

Indirectly intemperance causes the death of multitudes every year. It produces many serious diseases. It weakens every organ and vitiates every tissue. By strong drink the stomach is inflamed, the kidneys disordered, the liver hardened, the heart weakened and the blood poisoned. Besides producing specific disease, it so enervates the system that it falls a victim to acute diseases from which recovery would otherwise be possible. In these different ways intemperance greatly increases the death rate.

Nor is it only the hard drinker and drunkard whose life is shortened by strong drink; it cuts off the life of many a man who never becomes a drunkard. In fact, a man who goes on an occasional spree, but who wholly abstains in the interim, stands a better chance for life than the man who, although never drunk, is constantly in small doses taking the poison of alcohol into his system. In the one case the system has a chance to throw off the poison, while in the other it is never free from its effects. The habitual beer-drinker is never healthful and seldom sound. He easily falls a victim to disease and rarely is long lived. In the case of the moderate drinker there is the ever imminent danger of his becoming a drunkard. No man ever becomes a drunkard all at once. Not every moderate drinker becomes a drunkard, but every drunkard was once a moderate drinker. Not every tadpole becomes a frog, but every frog was once a tadpole.—Rev. Jesse S. Gilbert.

A UNIVERSAL CURSE.

It is a notable and significant fact that the drink curse has been acknowledged as one of the chief factors in two great evils which now overshadow the civilized world, and that it was also one of the moving causes in a recent event which threatened at one time to plunge two Christian nations into the horrors of war. We refer to the famine in Russia, the ruin and degradation of the natives of Africa, and the quarrel with Chili. In a recent interview with Count Tolstoi, published in the World of this city, the Russian philanthropist distinctly mentions drunkenness as one of three things which have led to the present distress. The other two things are providence and despair.

The Russian correspondent of the New York Times and others who have investigated the famine districts bear testimony to the same facts. The terrible vodka, the Russian drink, is at the bottom of a large part of the misery. As for what rum is doing for the natives of Africa, all the world knows the shameful story. We are rightfully indignant at the hideous cruelties practiced by the Arab slave-dealers in carrying on their traffic among the poor Negroes of the Dark Continent, but it may be doubted whether the rum imported from Christian nations, and largely from our own country, has not been, in recent years, as heavy a curse upon these heathen people as the Arab slave trade.

Slavery may have affected a much larger number of people, but it is not an evil that takes hold of the blood. Rum not only curses those who drink to-day, but it reaches out with deadly and paralyzing grasp upon future generations. We may put an end to slavery by force, but bayonets and cannon will not eliminate the rum poison which we have put into the veins of the African Negro. And then as to the Chilian quarrel, it is a generally conceded fact that the riot in Valparaiso, which started all the trouble, had its occasion partly, if not chiefly, in the drunken antics of some American sailors.

And so it is all around. Whichever way we turn in our effort to ameliorate the condition of mankind, whether it be in its social, political or industrial status, we find this drink curse in the way.—Christian at Work.

RUM IN THE WORLD'S BIGGEST CITY.

London has 8,325 miles of streets and a population of 5,847,000—more than the whole of Scotland or of Ireland. It has only 439 church buildings. It has about 8,500 people to the square mile; 145,000 paupers, one-third of whom are children. London has over 36,000 registered habitual criminals. There are over 14,000 policemen, which cost the city over $7,000,000 a year. London has also 14,000 grogshops. How much these cost nobody can figure up. Never will there be any way out of "darkest" London, or the bottomless miseries and degradation of any other city, so long as the grogshop curse is tolerated.—Advance.

TO COUNTERACT THE SALOON.

The saloon might be in a great part supplanted if a resort were provided equally attractive and less costly, and not at all mischievous. This is the notion that has found expression in coffee-houses and Holly Tree inns in this country and abroad. Several of these are in operation in this city, and we believe there is no dispute that, so far as they go, they are successful, and that they do counteract the influence of the saloon.—New York Times.

RUM MAKES TROUBLE.

Rum makes trouble everywhere. There is great agitation in England because the government proposes to compensate liquor-dealers for pecuniary loss in retiring from the business. But there is no talk of compensating families for the losses which the liquor traffic has inflicted upon them.—Texas Siftings.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 30, 1892.

President and Mrs. Harrison do not countenance by their presence the Sunday social gatherings which a few families here, principally foreigners, or those who ape the manners of foreigners, have been trying to popularize. The Harrisons, on both sides, are descended from a long line of Christians and rigid observers of the sanctity of the Sabbath, and they have always observed it themselves, both in their public and private life. Vice President and Mrs. Morton are also strict in their observance of the Lord's day. Early in their married life they adopted a rule against all forms of Sunday entertainments, and it has never been violated, not even when they resided in Paris, while Mr. Morton was American Minister to France, where to keep the rule meant to deny themselves of many social pleasures which could not be had on other days. The Morton family are regular in their attendance at church; and only last Sunday their two oldest daughters, Miss Edith and Miss Lena, were admitted to membership in one of our local churches. It is a pleasure to note the good example set by the families of our two highest officials.

The Red Cross Auxiliary Society of the District of Columbia has undertaken to raise a fund of $10,000 to charter a ship to carry the provisions to Russia which have been contributed to the Red Cross Society by citizens in all sections of the country, and it looks as if they are going to succeed. Every seat in one of the largest of our churches was filled, Sunday afternoon, by citizens who had gone through a heavy rain-storm to attend a mass-meeting held to aid the project. Among the speakers of national reputation, at the meeting, were Miss Clara Barton, national President of the Red Cross; Senator Perkins, of Kansas; Representative Bailey, of Texas, and Bishop Hurst. One gentleman, a local business man of prominence and wealth, said that if $5,000 could be raised by popular subscription—more than $2,000 has already been raised—he thought he could safely promise to see that the other $5,000 was forthcoming. Enough provisions, donated to the Red Cross, are already in New York or on the way there, to load the vessel which it is proposed to charter.

Hon. Owen Scott, of Illinois, talked very interestingly on "The responsibilities of young manhood," which he considers the most critical period of life, to the Y. M. C. A., Sunday afternoon.

Rev. Dr. E. E. Hale, the distinguished Boston pulpit orator, preached two sermons here, last Sunday.

The Chinese government has for several years been occasionally sending a communication to the State department requesting information as to why this government persisted in discriminating against Chinese immigrants, and none of the answers sent have been satisfactory. It has just sent another, demanding, in diplomatic language, an answer to all of its inquiries on this subject, and intimating that it will retaliate upon Americans resident in China if satisfactory answers are not received. The present anti-Chinese law will expire by limitation next May, but a bill far more restrictive is pending before Congress and will probably pass before then. If it does, some think that China will at once sever all diplomatic relations with the United States, and order all Americans, including the missionaries, residing in China to leave that country.

There is a feeling of relief in administration and Congressional circles since the receipt of Lord Salisbury's last communication concerning the Behring Sea controversy which makes it absolutely certain that peace will be preserved between the United States and Great Britain. Those who have been best informed have at no time regarded war as probable; but while there was a failure to agree as to what should be done pending the decision of the arbitration, there was, of course, a possibility of war, and that possibility was sufficient to cause more or less uneasiness. The Senate, to show its peaceful inclinations, has by a unanimous vote ratified the treaty under which the arbitration is to be conducted, and it is to be hoped that we shall hear no more of even the possibility of a war with Great Britain.

Justice Lamar, of the Supreme Court, has been dangerously ill this week, but he is reported to be slightly better to-day.

A bill has been favorably reported to the Senate, and placed on the calendar, providing for the erection of a statue of Robert Dale Owen, in the grounds of the Smithsonian Institution.

The State Department has been officially notified by the Turkish government that the people of the village Tel Yeyb, who some months ago violently expelled Rev. Mr. Ainslie, an American missionary, have been tried, convicted and imprisoned therefor.

The House committee on the alcoholic traffic yesterday heard arguments on the bill providing for a commission of investigation. *

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The glory of God as shown in creation.—vs. 1-6. David was a true lover of nature, or he could not have written this wonderful Psalm. Without doubt his early life as a shepherd-boy had trained him to keen observation of the material world around him, and especially would his eye be directed to the daily and nightly recurring phenomena of the heavens. The fool might say in his heart, "There is no God," but to the simple shepherd-lad watching his flock, the sun could not rise or the shadows of night fall, without proclaiming the glories of their unseen Creator. History has preserved no record of the Ingersolls of that early day, but this Nineteenth Psalm and the name of its inspired author will live to remotest ages. The "speech" of the heavens is one intelligible to all races, for it speaks to "every man in the language wherein he was born." "Their line has gone out into all the earth," from the tropics to the poles. Even among the most barbarous tribes God has not left himself without a witness, sufficient if men would heed it, to lead them to him. The sun, as the most prominent of all created objects, is described under the beautiful figure of "a bridegroom coming out of his chamber and rejoicing as a strong man to run a race." In the East there is no long, lingering twilight of dawn as in Northern countries, but the sun seems to leap at once into the heavens. Nothing is so depressing to man and beast as the withdrawal of his rays; nothing so full of cheer and comfort as to see him shining again in undiminished splendor. Jesus is the Sun of righteousness, warming and cheering every soul that will let him. "There is nothing hid from the heat thereof;" yet it is true that even the material sunlight is not appreciated by everybody as it ought to be. There are city slums where the sun never shines, and there are richly furnished parlors into which he cannot shine, because he is shut out by thick draperies. So while the holy religion of Jesus is shining more and more directly on the world, and influencing even heathen governments, there are many dark places where its light either cannot penetrate, or is willfully shut out. As it is our duty from a hygienic point of view to do away with all obstructions to the free access of the sunshine into our homes, so it is much more our duty to pull down every obstruction which hides from men the Sun of righteousness. Such an obstruction is Masonry, the saloon, the tobacco habit, the Sunday newspaper. The Gospel will never have free course and be glorified, until the church rises in her might, and proclaims the necessity of putting away all these things.

2. The revealed Word.—vs. 7-10. The psalmist now turns to Revelation, and shows its superiority to the dim light of nature. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." It can reply to every reasonable question which man can ask regarding the purpose of his being or his eternal destinies; while nature proposes far more riddles than she can answer. "It is sure, making wise the simple." There is no room for doubt or perplexity. It is clear, direct, straight-forward,—always saying, "This is the way; walk ye in it." His statutes "rejoice the heart." Wherever the Bible is studied with a loyal, loving purpose to make it the rule of life, it brings joy and sunshine. All the difference between a Christian and a heathen home is made by this one blessed Book. "It is pure, enlightening the eyes." The pagan oracles were so cloudy and indistinct that they could be interpreted one way or another; but the oracles of God are pure from any double meaning, and whoever seeks direction therefrom on any point of duty where he feels in doubt, will find the eyes of his understanding enlightened. "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever." It prompts to that purity and holiness which has in itself the seed of immortal life. David had only a very small part of the Scriptures, and that the portion which is by general consent deemed the least interesting,—the books of Moses; yet he found it more precious than fine gold, and sweeter than honey. How should we, who have the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, prize its sacred pages!

3. The need of divine grace.—vs. 11-14. Nature and Revelation are alike useless to make us keep God's law, unless he inclines our hearts to do so by his gracious Spirit. This is a truth which David clearly comprehended. "Who can understand his errors?" We may have a head-knowledge of the Bible and be able to explain its obscure passages when we do not understand our own hearts. Even if cleansed and forgiven we may presume we are safe and forget to watch. Our very attainments may tempt us to spiritual pride. "Let the words of my mouth," etc. Our whole lives should be worship; every thought and word in tune with the grand harmonies of Nature and Revelation.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The general conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church will be held in the John Wesley church, Pittsburgh, in May next. Two hundred and fifty ministers are expected. The colored people are exerting themselves to make the occasion a success.

BAPTIST.

—At a meeting of the Board of the Baptist Theological Union held in Chicago, Monday afternoon, March 28, Prof. Ernest D. Burton, of the Newton Theological Institution, was unanimously and enthusiastically elected Professor of New Testament Interpretation in the Divinity School of the University of Chicago.

—There are eight counties in Wisconsin in which there is not a single Baptist church, twelve other counties in which there is only one church, and still eleven other counties in which there are only two churches of the denomination. The total population of these counties is nearly half a million. The number of Baptists in the above churches is 1,564, or one to every 268 of the population. The assessed valuation of property in the above thirty-one counties is $150,000,000.—Standard.

—The Board of the Baptist General Association of Illinois will meet in Bloomington, Tuesday, April 12, at 3 P. M.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Mr. John H. Finley, aged twenty-nine, and a graduate of Knox College, class of '86, was elected March 22 president of that institution to succeed Dr. Newton Bateman, who was compelled on account of poor health to resign. Dr. Bateman retains his connection with the school as professor of mental and moral philosophy.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Otsego, Mich., has organized a "Methodist relief association." Its special purpose is to care for the poor of the church, and to bury such of the church's poor as may die in need. Any member of the church is eligible to membership by the payment of 50 cents annually.

—The Wesleyan (English Methodist) London mission has captured the historic theater of Sadler's Wells, which will, as soon as the transfer to the Wesleyan Central mission has been completed, become the scene of evangelistic services, and the center of the missionary labors of Rev. J. E. Wakerley.

—Prof. E. H. Moore, Ph.D., has been invited to become head of the mathematical department in the new Chicago university. Dr. Moore has accepted, greatly to the regret of the Northwestern university where he has been associate professor during the past year, and a teacher for three years.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The death of Rev. Mr. W. D. Dalrymple, a Presbyterian missionary in Bengal, is announced. He died of leprosy, contracted while serving a forlorn colony of sufferers from this disease. He was only six months among them when the signs of leprosy appeared on him, and he slowly wasted away, continuing his service to his fellow-sufferers while he was able.

—Rev. Duncan T. McAuley, for some ten years a minister of the Presbyterian church, died at his home at Americus, Kansas, March 11. He was confined to the house for some months before his death. His life was mainly spent in Illinois and Kansas.

Recovered—sound health for every consumptive who hasn't delayed too long. There's a positive cure with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Just as it cures the worst of the many forms of scrofula, so it cures, and just as certainly, the scrofulous affection of the lungs that's called Consumption—through the blood.

But, even with this remedy, it won't do to wait. It can't make new lungs, but it can make diseased ones healthy when nothing else will. As a blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and flesh-builder, there's nothing like it known to medical science. For Scrofula in all its forms, Bronchial Throat, and Lung affections, Weak Lungs, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and every disease that can be reached through the blood, it's the only remedy so unfailing that it can be guaranteed.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

On these terms, it's an insult to your intelligence to have something else offered as being "just as good."

HOME AND HEALTH.

SELECTED RECIPES.

Buttermilk Pie—Three eggs, one cup sugar, one tablespoonful corn starch, one cup rich buttermilk; flavor with lemon.

Cold Mashed Potato Cakes—Beat an egg into two cupfuls of cold mashed potato, make it into cakes, rub them over with melted butter and bake a fine brown.

Cinnamon Cake—Take some bread dough when it is just ready to bake, work a little fresh lard or butter in it, roll it out, sprinkle well with granulated sugar, butter and cinnamon.

Custard Toast—Bring a quart of milk to the boiling point, season and add two eggs well beaten. Boil one minute and pour over six slices of buttered toast. Put in the oven until the custard is set.

Creamed Fried Potatoes—Peel and cut into dice some raw potatoes. Fry to very light brown in butter, adding pepper and salt. Just before serving pour over them some thick cream; boil up and serve.

Thin Biscuit—One quart of flour, one tablespoonful of lard and butter mixed, and one tablespoonful of salt; make into a stiff paste with cold water; beat dough until it blisters, roll thin, prick with a fork and bake quickly.

Cure for a Felon—Take part of a leaf of prickly pear split open, and bind on and change as it gets dry. To make this a success it must be used as soon as the felon is discovered.

Stomach Medicine—One ounce hops. One ounce of chamomile flowers; the same quantity of boneset in two quarts of water, steep until the strength is all out; strain, keep cool. Dose—Wine glass full three times a day before eating.

A Sure Cure for Warts—Have standing in some convenient place a little cooking soda; several times a day moisten the finger and dip it into the soda and rub it on the wart, and it will soon disappear without leaving any scar. Soda will also cure a cold sore on the lips by rubbing it several times with the moistened soda on the finger, rubbing it very hard.

To remove ink stains from the fingers moisten the spot and rub it gently with the head of a parlor match, keeping the skin wet, and the stain will rapidly disappear.—Mrs. G. W. Freeman.

Cleansing the Mouth—The continuous use of soap in the mouth, besides being unpleasant, has a tendency to make the gums soft and spongy, consequently it should not be used more than once or twice a week. An objectionable tooth powder is made of four parts English precipitated chalk and one part pulverized orris root, mixed; to be used with a soft brush. The orris is tonic, tending to harden the gums, the chalk scours the teeth, and has a tendency to neutralize acid. The soft brush will not irritate the gums excessively. If salicylic acid be used it should be with great caution in regard to dilution and in regard to swallowing it, as it is an active poison, as is also carbolic acid.—R. S. Bancroft, Abnott, Mich.

WHAT SALT WILL DO.

A little rubbed on the cups will take off tea stains. Put into whitewash, it will make it stick better. As a tooth powder, it will keep the teeth white and the gums hard and rosy. It is one of the best gargles for sore throat, and a preventive of diphtheria, if taken in time. Use salt and water to clean willow furniture; apply with brush, and rub dry. Salt and water held in the mouth after having a tooth pulled will stop the bleeding. Prints rinsed with it in the water will hold their color and look brighter. Two teaspoonfuls in half a pint of tepid water is an emetic always on hand, and is an antidote for poisoning from nitrate of silver. Neuralgia of the feet and limbs can be cured by bathing night and morning with salt and water as hot as can be borne. When taken out, rub the feet briskly with a coarse towel. Salt and water is one of the best of remedies for sore eyes, and if applied in time will scatter the inflammation. Silk

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:"

"I was in the Army of the Potomac and in the great battle of Gettysburg was struck in the ankle by a minnie ball, which smashed the bone. My leg was amputated in the field hospital, and after a long time it healed. I was discharged and went home. After 8 years

My Wound Broke Open

afresh. Dr. Pease amputated an inch of the bone, and it healed. Four years later it once more opened, and for eight years how I suffered! I do not believe it possible for a human being to suffer worse agony. During this time I had to go on crutches, being unable to wear a wooden leg. Whenever possible I relieved my sufferings by taking opiate, but when I was obliged to go without it, I suffered fearfully and thought I should go crazy. I tried every thing I could get with my limited means. Physicians said I would never be any better. Finally my and it broke out all over my face and on some parts of my body so that my face is all covered with scars now. One day I read of what Hood's Sarsaparilla would do. The first dollar I got I sent and bought a bottle and began taking it. A week or two later, my wife in dressing my leg, said it seemed to be improving, and after taking a few months, thank God (and I say it reverently), the sores all over my body had healed, and now, four years later, have never shown any sign of reappearing." GEORGE M. HAMMOND, 219 Magnolia Street, Syracuse, N. Y.

FARM NOTES.

The "Farmers' Bulletins" are published by the Agricultural Department at Washington, and may be had by any farmer who asks for them if he gives his postoffice and State. Send there for them.

See that the young calves do not get chilled. Spring is not here yet. Warmth and dry quarters have much to do with the comfort and prosperity of young stock.

We consider a fresh cow's milk good for all purposes when it will boil without curdling. By this test we have had cows that their milk was good at the fifth milking, others that went to twelfth or fourteenth. The milk of most cows is good by the ninth.

"The time will come," said a Scotch farmer to his foreman, "that I can carry the manure for my crop in this vest pocket." "And, when that time comes, my Laird," replied Sunday, "you can carry the crop in your other vest pocket."

If a young tree is growing very fast, it will be best to head back half its yearly growth, for trees that grow so rapidly are apt to get bark-bound and split open; they blossom, but rarely bear fruit, as the blossoms fall off. To make such cutting back most effective it should be done when the trees are in full leaf.

The first consignment of exhibits for the Horticultural Department of the World's Fair was received at the Chicago Custom House, March 14. The exhibits were two bales and one case of rose plants from Aix la Chapelle, Germany, and were consigned to Chief Thorpe of the Horticultural Department. There are many rare rose plants in the lot.

In building a large silo some prefer to have more than one compartment. At any rate it is a good plan to have the size so that an inch or two of ensilage will be taken off each day while feeding. This will always give fresh silage.

To make cheese the year round, have first, a factory so constructed that the temperature is uniform the year round. Second, a good cheese maker. Third, a bountiful supply of good, well-cared for, aerated, 4 per cent milk. The curing room should be from sixty to sixty-five degrees the year around.

Denmark will spend about $5,500 in showing, as a leading feature of its World's Fair exhibit, a Danish dairy, complete and in operation. The dairy interest is one of the most important in Denmark, and the most approved methods and mechanical appliances are utilized in the dairies of that country.

The miserable idea a great many have of hooking a spirited colt with an old poke of a horse, putting a severe bit in its mouth, tying it down, depriving it of all natural gait! It will put in its number of steps, learns to prance, champ its bit, work on one shoulder, bringing on sweeney and other troubles. A few such lessons ruin colts for any and all draft purposes with a man that knows a draft horse.—Jesse J. Piersol in Stockman.

There are preventives advertised to keep horns from growing on cattle that do it if applied when the calf is a few days old. When the horns have started they may be taken off with a gouge made on purpose and when they have become quite sizeable or full-grown horns they may be sawed off. See that your cow is free of lice and other vermin, her teeth all right, then give her a pound of linseed meal daily in addition to her regular feed and see if she does not improve in condition.

In a paper on "Management of Cheese Factories," read at the Oshkosh meeting, Mr. O. J. Angus truthfully said, "New factories should not be started where there is not enough milk in sight to warrant the building of a good building and getting the best of machinery and appliances." He might have added, "But do not build larger and more expensive ones than the territory from which you are going to get your milk will warrant."

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

FOR 50 YEARS THE BEST

Your blood is impure and moves sluggishly. That Tired Feeling and General Debility manifest themselves in every movement you make. A SPRING MEDICINE is needed. Don't fancy that these feelings will pass off in a few days. Don't wait for your nervous system to become disordered, your heart to lose force, or your stomach, liver, kidneys, and bowels to fail in properly performing their duty, but take AYER'S Sarsaparilla and take it NOW. It is the best of all medicines for purifying, vitalizing, and enriching the blood. It restores the bloom of youth to cheeks which have become pallid and thin, and it vitalizes and invigorates every organ of the body. AYER'S Sarsaparilla does more than give temporary relief, it strikes at the root of the trouble, removing the conditions which make disease possible, and thus enables nature to speedily repair her losses. AYER'S Sarsaparilla is composed of the best, most expensive, and highest grade alterative and tonic ingredients known to the medical fraternity and to pharmacy. The method employed for extracting and concentrating the full medicinal power and curative value of each ingredient, is the best, most scientific, and comprehensive which human ingenuity and skill ever devised, and is more expensive than other manufacturers find it profitable to adopt. AYER'S Sarsaparilla is always the same in strength, in appearance, in flavor, and in the effect produced. It is the medicine for MARCH, APRIL, MAY. It Cures Others, and Will Cure You.

"Survival of the Fittest."

If Darwin's theory is to be accepted, then the fact that I am the sole survivor in the trade of those who began with me the same line of business, gives significance to the fact that my sales of seed to market gardeners, well known to be the most critical of all buyers, has increased year by year until it has now reached vast proportions. That I raise many varieties on my five seed farms, make 1700 tests annually for vitality, and test novelties, that none may be imposed on, will explain much to the thoughtful buyer. I invite you to write for my FREE Vegetable and Flower Seed Catalogue.

calla lily. Her method is as follows: As soon as the joint flower is cut or begins to wither, pull the stalk down through the open sheath clear to the bottom. At the bottom will be found standing, close to the stalk, another bud, inclosed in a delicate covering. Cut the old stalk away as close as possible without injuring the bud, and if it has not been kept back too long, it will grow up very quickly.

The Illinois State Board of Agriculture have offered for the State Fair in September, 1892, prizes aggregating $6,450 for county exhibits of cereals, grasses, textile and forage plants, vegetables and fruits. The rules governing entries for these exhibits permit the winning of nine large cash prizes; and all counties making displays may receive $50 each for their exhibits, even if they do not secure one of the large premiums. These exhibits will become the property of the State, and from them will be selected the display of Illinois at the World's Columbian Exposition. This will make a grand display of agricultural products. The Board is in earnest in keeping Illinois at the front.

The Gas that Leavens

Yeast, and baking powders that produce leavening gas by fermentative or putrefactive action, destroy a portion of the most nutritive and healthful elements of the flour.

The Royal Baking Powder produces the leavening gas in the dough by purely mechanical means, and thus, while perfectly leavening, preserves unimpaired those elements intended by nature, when combined in our bread, to make it literally the "staff of life."

No leavening agent or baking powder, except the "Royal," possesses this great qualification.

Spring Medicine

Needed by Nearly Everybody.

In the spring months the necessity of a good blood-purifying, strengthening medicine is felt by the large majority of people. During the winter various impurities accumulate in the blood, as a consequence of close confinement in poorly ventilated tenements, stores and work-shops, or too high living. Therefore, when the milder weather comes, the blood is unable to sustain the various organs of the body which need additional strength, and the consequence is "that tired feeling," biliousness, sick headache, possibly dyspepsia, or the appearance of some blood disorder. So popular has become at this season that it is now generally admitted to be the Standard Spring Medicine. It thoroughly purifies and vitalizes the blood, creates a good appetite, cures biliousness, and headache, overcomes that tired feeling, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver, and imparts to the whole body a feeling of health and strength. Try it this spring.

Information from Boston is to the effect that six lodges of "Odd Ladies" have been established in that city. Who they are, and what they propose to do, is at present a secret; but they will be very odd ladies indeed if they can keep the secret very long.

It would seem as if the advocates of the Sunday-closing of the Columbian World's Fair are much encouraged by the unanimity with which the better classes of citizens are urging this measure upon Congress. The matter is now in the hands of an important committee, and a decision cannot much longer be delayed.

We shall begin in next week's issue of the Cynosure the publication of another Masonic experience, as truthful and almost of as much interest as that published in these columns last fall—the adventures of Mr. John Hopson, in India. This, however, is nearer home, and relates the trial of a Mason for "gross un-Masonic conduct," which lasted for more than eight years, and resulted in his expulsion from the order, simply for his telling the truth.

Prof. L. T. Townsend, of Boston, in his recent attacks upon the methods of the Methodist Episcopal Church, accuses its ministerial members of resorting to bribery to secure votes and appointments, adding that the recent election of a bishop was secured by methods "which would disgrace ward politics." These are serious charges; but, considering the amount of secret lodge machinery which the church controls—or which controls the church—it is possible the Professor is right.

Our Methodist Episcopal friends are to assemble at Omaha next month in General Conference, when the question of admitting women as delegates and participants in its deliberations will become a paramount question. Undoubtedly the struggle for and against this innovation will be warm and prolonged, and general interest will center about the final result of the discussion. The recent conference of the church in New York has again voted in opposition to such representation—168 to 69. But there are numerous conferences which favor the "female brethren" and will support their claims as delegates.

We trust that no one of the Cynosure readers has omitted to carefully peruse the sermon on "The Church and Secret Societies," by Rev. J. M. Foster, which was begun in last week's issue and is concluded in this. It is a forcible statement why the churches should forbid their members belonging to secret oath-bound fraternities: 1. Because secrecy is opposed to Christianity. 2. Because the oaths administered by secret societies are contrary to the law of God. 3. Because secret societies use the time and means of their members which belong elsewhere—to the family, the church and the state. 4. Because secret societies are essentially idolatrous. Mr. Foster "speaks by the card." Since he delivered the foregoing discourse he has preached another effective sermon on "Papal Claims," a review of the evils flowing from the papacy and Jesuitism, for a portion of which we hope to find space in an early number.

A crying evil of social life in many of our large cities—the "sweating system," as it is called,—by which grasping proprietors of clothing houses, dress-makers and other manufacturers, employ men, women and children, poverty-stricken, starved and suffering from illness, contagious and otherwise, to work for them as artisans in making garments and other wares for sale, at starvation wages, is likely to be broken up both by Congressional and State legislation. A committee of the House of Representatives is pursuing a rigid investigation of this system, the details of which are simply horrifying, uncovering a large amount of filth and misery, disgraceful to the name of civilization. Public indignation has been aroused against it; and a work of greater importance and quite as difficult as the cleansing of the Augean stables, has been inaugurated. It has not been begun too soon, nor can it be prosecuted too vigorously or too thoroughly.

Congress, last week, passed a bill forbidding all immigration of Chinese into the United States. None of the residents of the over-populated "Celestial Empire," except government diplomats, are to be admitted, and stringent measures for enforcing the act are provided. The law, if it is ever perfected (by passage in the Senate and the signature of the President), it is thought, will result in the driving out of China all Americans sojourning in the empire, including the missionaries, thus inflicting much loss and damage upon our own people. The prevention act now in force, which expires by limitation in May, has never been very effective in keeping the Chinese out of the country, but has promoted a system of smuggling difficult to detect. It is believed that no law can overcome Chinese immigration, as under the present restrictions, the natives land in the British Possessions, are there naturalized and then come to the United States as subjects of the British government. This secures them ample protection against persecution.

The Clan-na-Gael, the secret and murderous Irish society which assassinated Dr. Cronin, has recently issued a circular, in which a proposition is submitted to its members that the various "camps" each organize a rifle club provided with the best modern military rifles and at once begin to instruct its members in the use of that weapon. Those who know the Clan-na-Gael are perfectly aware that its constitution, objects and secret practices are utterly at variance with the standards of civil and religious liberty established by the founders of this Union. The avowed object of this new movement is to "evolve from our society a body of skillful marksmen who will be thoroughly fit to instruct their countrymen (Irishmen) in the use of the only means by which the freedom of Ireland can be accomplished." Whether this is the true motive or not, it is difficult just now to determine. If it is, and the members of the camps are American citizens, the national government has the right and the power to prevent their taking part in any ostensible hostile demonstration against Great Britain, with whom we are at peace; and if they are aliens, it is the duty of our officials to inform the British government of the movement.

Regarding the Indian wards of the United States government, Mr. C. C. Painter, of the Indian Rights Association, in Philadelphia, issues a forcible pamphlet on the Extravagance, Waste and Failure of Indian Education. He bases his facts upon official records, and gives them careful consideration. Space forbids more than mere reference to his conclusions. Prominent prelates of several denominations testify to the success of education as a civilizer, and not the least significant evidence in this direction is the abandonment of military posts in the Indian country and the reduction of Indian raids upon the whites. The trouble has been, wherever failure has occurred in bringing the Indian to a higher citizenship, in the wrong use of means by the agents of the government, so that the funds designed to benefit him have been perverted and wasted, and he has been the sufferer. The pamphlet, which is a powerful plea for better care of the Indians and their interests, closes with the following pointed paragraph: "If there is a solution for our Indian problem, it is unquestionably to be found in the education, literary and industrial, of the Indian children, under Christian and moral influences. There is every reason to believe that it will prove a complete solution of it if fairly tried, and it is confidently asserted that so-called discrediting facts are often falsehoods, or, when true, have their explanation in causes and conditions not inherent in the Indian himself." We shall refer to this topic again.

THE CHURCH AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

SERMON BY REV. J. M. FOSTER, PASTOR SECOND REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BOSTON, MASS., MARCH 13, 1892.

[Concluded.]

III. Because secret societies use the time and means of their members which belong elsewhere.

There are three divine institutions for meeting the wants of men—the family, the church and the state.

The family is the divinely-appointed method of restraining vice, fostering virtue, multiplying the human race and developing the better sentiments of the human heart. It has its necessity in the very constitution of our nature and its authority in God's Word: "They twain shall be one flesh." The family has the first claim to be supported. "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." To rob the family of its support by alienating its legitimate income to other purposes is a crime which God will not allow to go unpunished. The man who takes the money that should be used in buying bread and clothing for his wife and children, to say nothing of home comforts, and gives it to the saloon, is in God's sight a black-hearted robber. The man who takes the means upon which his family depend for support, and uses it in paying lodge dues and buying rich regalia for dress-parade, is no better. He robs those who are nearest and dearest to him, and offers an affront to God in preferring a human, useless, and wicked device above a divinely-appointed ordinance.

The church is another divine institution. She is the heaven-commissioned agent to bring sinners to Christ. She is authorized to receive the offerings of her members to carry on aggressive work. God has laid upon every follower of Christ the duty of devoting one-tenth of his income for the support of the church, as a recognition of his stewardship and God's right of property in all that he has. This is the Lord's portion of our substance as much as one-seventh of our time. Charity, or freewill offerings, do not begin until this has been given. The Jews were required to devote one-third of their income for charitable and religious purposes. And in doing so they always found that they were blessing themselves, and withholding more than was meet tended to poverty. And surely Christians, with the world for their field, an exalted and reigning Saviour for their Leader, and the Holy Spirit given because Jesus has been glorified, cannot give less than the Jews for the church's work. Now, a professing Christian who takes the church's portion and devotes it to his personal gratification, or that he may add house to house, is robbing God. "Ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." And the Christian who takes the Lord's portion to pay lodge fees and purchase degrees and corresponding outfits, is a sacrilegious robber of the church's treasury. The church is robbed to-day by her members who use her portion in building Masonic temples and providing rich apparel and sumptuous banquets. If secret orders were abolished, and the church received the money out of which she has been filched to support them, her work could be so enlarged that all nations might hear the Gospel preached in their own tongues during the present decade. Do you think Christ will not visit for this sin, robbing his treasury to fill Satan's, and that, too, by his reputed friends? Truly this man Christ Jesus finds his foes to be they of his own household.

The state is another divine institution. It is clothed with authority from God. It has its necessity in the constitution of man's nature, and its authority in God's Word: "The powers that be are ordained of God." The state properly demands its support from its citizens.

Now a Christian, paying his taxes, properly providing for the comfortable support and education of his family, and giving to the church "as the Lord hath prospered him," will have nothing left for the lodge. There is no manner of doubt that the money that belongs to the church goes to these fraternities; and until the church is willing to assert her rights and enforce her claims, by disciplining her members who systematically and cruelly rob her to support these fraternities, there will still be the cry of lack of funds to carry on her work. "Bring ye all the tithes into my store-house, and prove me now herewith, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing, until there shall not be room enough to receive it." This blessing is being forfeited. My wonder is that the churches do not rise up in righteous indignation and drive out every secret society man who will not consent to sever his connection with the lodge, on the ground that they are carrying her funds to the lodge. Every cent given to the lodge by a church member is robbing the church and robbing God by just so much.

IV. Because secret societies are essentially idolatrous.

Idolatry is a capital offense. It is spiritual adultery. It is worshiping the devil instead of God. For this sin Moses had 3,000 Israelites slain in the wilderness. He prophesied: "I know that after my departure ye will utterly corrupt yourselves." He anticipated their apostasy. "They sacrificed to devils and not to God; to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not." For their idolatry they were led captive to Babylon and held 70 years. "And it shall come to pass when ye shall say, Wherefore doeth the Lord our God all these things? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me and served strange gods in your land, so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours." (Jer. 5:19.) Idolatry is the worship of the devil. Paul says: "What say I then? that the idol is anything, or that which is offered in sacrifice to idols is anything? But I say, that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God: and I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils."

Now Masonry is a religion. It has an altar and engages in religious worship—Pagan, Mohammedan and Christian worship at the same shrine. Christ is excluded from the lodge as an object of supreme worship. He may come in and take his place with the heathen gods, but may not displace them; that is the religion of anti-Christ. It is all the devil wants. He is jubilant when Christians will compromise with him. A writer in England said: "We must again recall that most important truth, that whatsoever worship is paid to any but God, is paid to devils." "Cudworth, in his 'Intellectual System of the Universe,' has fully shown that each ancient pagan shrine was willing to fellowship every other, if only it might be fellowshipped in return. The Christian would not have been persecuted for worshiping Christ, if he would have worshiped Jupiter as well. But if Jehovah had consented to take his niche in the Pantheon, among the devils there worshiped, he would have made himself their equal, and so have been as false and wicked as they. But the lodge-god can afford to be liberal. Thieves and robbers are commonly so, of what is not their own. Freemasons do not object to have Christ worshiped, if no Jews or Deists or Mohammedans are present to object to it. Mackey's Lexicon says, page 402: 'Let a man's religion or worship be what it may, he is not excluded from the order, provided he believes in the glorious Architect of heaven and earth.' If, however, his worship be that of Christ, he must keep that worship out of the lodge, if Jews or other haters of the Saviour are there to object." A Christian who accepts such a religion compromises with the devil and gives Satan the lion's share. Do you ask, Why has Masonry such power over men? It can do wrong and yet lives and prospers. Financial crookedness, that wrecks banks and other corporations, does not injure the lodge. It commits murder, and yet its members remain. Why? Because it is a religion inspired of the devil. "It is the muezzin that keeps up Mohammedanism; the mass supports the papacy; and Mormonism draws its vitality and vigor from the Endowment House." Masonry is a living power, because of its religious rites, in which Satan is the inspiring spirit.

And the church must make her choice. To allow her members to serve Christ and the devil, both, is sacrilege. "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of devils. Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy? Are we stronger than he?" As Elijah said to Israel, on Mount Carmel: "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him: But if Baal, then follow him." As Joshua said to Israel, ere he departed, "Choose you this day whom ye will serve." If the Lord be your God, put away your idols. Brethren, the church cannot serve two masters. Either the lodge must be driven from the church, or God will visit her in judgment. "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor and gather the wheat into his garner, but the chaff he will burn with unquenchable fire." "Judgment must begin at the house of God. If the righteous scarcely are saved, where shall the ungodly and sinner appear?"

But you say, "There are secret orders that do not exclude Christ from the lodge, and while they are chargeable with dishonoring Christ by hiding their light under a bushel by a profanation of the religious ordinance of the oath, yet their religious exercises are Christian in form." Your admissions are fatal. If they dishonor Christ in secrecy and the oath, that were sufficient to condemn them. But we have an additional count in the indictment: Knights of Pythias, Orangemen, and all these, have a religion of good works. You hear almost daily a member of the lodge saying: "Be a good Orangeman and you will get to heaven. A man gets all the religion he needs there." Now what does this mean? Can men with sinful hearts be good in their own strength? "No mere man, since the fall, is able in this life perfectly to keep the commandments of God, but doth daily break them in thought, word and deed." Now, if the Orangemen's lodge has the law of God, the members cannot keep it of themselves. It is only by God's grace that a man can love and serve him. But what about past sins? How are they to be atoned for? Does the lodge provide for that? It is only by the sacrifice of Christ that sinful men can be delivered from the burden of guilt that rests upon them. "So I saw in my dream," says Bunyan, "that just as Christian came up with the cross, his burden loosed from off his shoulders, and fell from his back, and began to tumble, and so continued to do till it came to the mouth of the sepulchre, when it fell in, and I saw it no more."

But Christ gives deliverance from the guilt of sin through the blood, and freedom from the power and love of sin through his grace, only in and by the ordinances of his church. No lodge, or other human organization, can claim these. As a matter of fact, they do not have them. But these mild lodges claim to have a religion that will save their members. What is it? A religion of good works. Can works save any sinner? Paul answers, "We are justified by faith, without works."

Brethren, it is time this delusion were unmasked. I charge the Orangemen's lodge with being a snare of the devil, in which many souls are lured away. It serves the devil in Christ's livery. It drinks to Satan out of the chalice from Christ's house. "Their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter, their vine is the vine of Sodom and of the fields of Gomorrah; their wine is the poison of dragons and the cruel venom of asps."

Furthermore, every lodge is an organized system of selfishness. Their leading object is to promote the interests of their own order. To this end they receive only those who will be helpful to them. The rest they exclude. Now selfishness is the prime sin of the corrupt human heart. Instead of making God the center around which our lives revolve, we make self the center of attraction. Christ came to deliver us from this spirit and restore us to God. The object of the church is to effect this work in Christ's name. It takes a whole life-time to do it. It is not complete till death. Selfishness is so inwrought in the very fiber of our carnal nature that its destruction comes in the death of carnality. "It is like ivy in an ancient wall," says Flavel, "which, however plucked and uprooted, can never be wholly gotten out of it till the wall is taken down."

But the lodge lives to cultivate this selfishness. It gives aid and comfort to the enemy that we are endeavoring to destroy. It builds up what the church tears down. It is an insidious foe of the Christian religion. Let me say, once for all, "Avoid it; pass not by it; turn from it, and pass away." "Touch not, taste not, handle not, which all are to perish in the using." "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you. And I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Conclusion.

1. The Reformed churches owe it to themselves and to their exalted Head to exclude from their communion every member of the lodge. No member of a secret society should be fellowshipped until he severs his connection with the lodge.

2. No church, as a body, except the Reformed Presbyterian, makes separation from the lodge a condition of membership. [A mistake. Neither the Free Methodists, nor the Lutherans, nor the Wesleyan Methodists, admit lodge members to their communion or fellowship.—EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.] The United Presbyterian church professes to do this; but it is known that in more than a score of congregations the lodge members enjoy full communion and no action is taken to remove the scandal. The Presbyterian, Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Baptist and Episcopal churches are honeycombed with secret societies. Nothing is or can be done by these bodies to prevent it.

3. All the followers of Christ who repudiate the lodge should separate from those churches which fellowship the members of secret societies, and either join only the churches which formally testify against the "secret empire" or organize another body which will occupy the same position.

A REMINISCENCE.

As the lovely spring days go by, and, here and there, a hardy plant or bulb pushes a vigorous shoot through the still cold soil, my thoughts wander back to an experience of more than twenty years ago; and in hopes of cheering some sad heart I tell it here in all its simplicity.

One autumn day the mail brought me a beautiful bulb catalogue, which stirred up such an enthusiasm in my flower-loving nature, that I set to work at once to make out an order for tulips, hyacinths, snowdrops, crocus, and lily-of-the-valley. In a short time the bulbs arrived in good condition, and the work of planting was begun at once.

In our home there was one other as interested in the flower garden as myself; a little nephew of my husband's, the son of his only sister, a widow, left desolate by our cruel civil war. He had come to us because of poor health, more than two years before, his mother hoping that a change would be beneficial. He was a delicate child, with large blue eyes, and the transparent complexion that always accompanies such frail organizations.

No duties were assigned him except the little errands of the farm or home; but he became so attached to the children, devoted so much time to them, and was so gentle and kind, that from the eldest, a flaxen-haired girl of seven years, to the cooing baby-boy, my little flock all loved him like a brother, for his patience seemed infinite and his love never-failing.

He was very intelligent for his years, and became quite a companion to me, as well as the children. When the catalogue came, he was at once interested; helped me select the varieties, and colors; was full of enthusiasm over the making of the flower-beds, deciding the arrangement of planting and the preparation of labels.

To this day, I love to linger in thought over those beautiful October days spent over the bulb-beds. We brought the little children out, set the baby on a robe close by, and went to work. Gussie, warmed out of his usual shyness, and happy in this congenial labor, chatted and laughed, as we very seldom heard him. Indeed, we all felt like children that happy day.

In the midst of our happiness I noticed how the dear boy was growing; how he was gaining in flesh and strength; and I began to plan to keep him with us till he was old enough to go back and take charge of his mother's farm. Then I thought how much he was beginning to seem like our own son, and wondered how we could ever spare him.

The bulbs were all planted at last; then the beds were covered with a warm blanket of leaves, and by-and-by the snow came down and covered all with its white robe; but two, at least, of our home-circle often looked longingly towards the spring-time and the blooming of our precious flowers.

The winter passed away. Towards the last of March, Gussie came home from school, "tired," he said, and fell asleep in his chair by the fire. As he remained poorly, we called a physician, who pronounced it some childish ailment, and said he would be well in a few days; but, for some reason, I was strangely anxious. Still he was so cheerful and uncomplaining, that no one except a constant attendant, like myself, could understand how sick he was. To every inquiry he always answered, "I am better, thank you!"

Having the care of him at night, I found there was delirium, and my alarm grew apace, though the physician still insisted there was no cause for anxiety; and to all his friends he seemed so unchanged that they all laughed at my fears; and not till I burst into tears, one morning when asked how he was, could anyone give it a serious thought, or allow his mother to be notified.

Then there were a few days of mild delirium, calling his schoolmates, talking to the children, never making any demands, save calling "Auntie" when I left him for even a few moments; but one morning he said, sweetly smiling: "Auntie, take me up and put me over there close by mother." With fast-falling tears I moved him, and again, smiling contentedly, he fell asleep, not speaking again save to call auntie, till, about midnight, the little spirit fled, leaving an immortal smile on the fair, young face.

There were so many sad things connected with the going out of this little life, I could hardly bear my sorrow. His widowed mother had been summoned by telegram, but had not arrived; and now every effort must be made to prevent her starting, as the dear child was to be taken home, and laid in the home graveyard, by his father's side. Telegrams were flying, and trains were being watched; arrangements to be made for the sad journey, and the hours were full of pain and unrest. So all that lovely Sabbath day, with the little white form resting so still and lovely in our home—his last day with us—my heart seemed breaking. The children's incessant asking for "Gussie" was torture, and I was constantly carrying the bereaved mother's anguish as well as my own. Worse than all, I was constantly asking myself, why did you not do this, or that, for him? I thought, then, that it was because he was not my own, and I feared I had not done all I would, had he been. I know now that it is the common experience of all hearts that death has stricken.

A kind neighbor came in that sunny afternoon, and, hoping to divert and cheer me, urged me to go out into the yard; she gently drew me on, and our feet unconsciously wandered to the flower-beds. Sadly I looked down. He helped me make them. He was gone. I should not care for them now. Everything reminded me of him.

My friend stooped over, and parted the brown leaves, looked up and smiled, and said, "Look!" I stooped, and looked, and here and there were strong, vigorous shoots breaking through the half-thawed earth, lifting their heads to the sun, and air; and then the thought came like a blessed reality, for the first time, "He will rise again." In a transport of joy I fell on my knees, while floods of tears washed my cheeks like rain. "He will rise again," came the glad thought once more, and again. The dear Lord himself has said it. He who called Lazarus from the grave, who went down into death himself and rose again, has said: "I am the resurrection and the life." "He is not dead, but sleepeth." Think how Gussie helped you put the bulbs away in the dark, cold earth; how high were your hopes and anticipations; and now the sun has called them into life.

Just so you lay the fair body in the grave, but the "Sun of righteousness" will bring it forth, with a far exceeding loveliness, "like unto his glorious body;" then there shall be no more sickness, or death; no more parting, or tears, for "God will wipe away all tears from their eyes."

All the torturing, rebellious sorrow was washed away in that flood of tears, and I arose with the burden lifted, and went in, and wrote a letter full of comfort to the sorrowing mother; being able to comfort her "with the selfsame comfort where-with I was comforted of God."

No need of telling of the husband's sad journey; of his meeting the mother,—hastening to her sick child—and his hard task of pointing her to the little casket, and its still fair occupant; of the last sad rites, and the mourning household; but all the years those flowers bloomed I was always reminded of our dear one, and comforted by that visible type of the resurrection.

Dear mourning hearts! you who have laid away a dear one since the leaves fell—and, oh! how many of you there are!—look around at the earth awakening to the sun's rays this spring morning!—every tree, and shrub, and flower springing into leaf, and bud, and blossom, each saying in its silent, beautiful language: "Your loved one shall rise again,"—"not dead, but sleeping."

GRACE GROWING.

SAM SMALL ON INTEMPERANCE.

Sam Small, the Southern evangelist, was in Chicago the other day and gave expression to some opinions on the temperance question. Among other things, he said:

"I think and speak strongly on the liquor habit, and when you have heard my personal experiences you will see why I do so."

The speaker then told of his early days in Georgia, his careful early training, his college life, and final admission to the bar as an attorney. He laid stress on the fact that constant companionship with the men whom he had formerly looked up to proved his ruin, as they were addicted to the practices, lusts and excesses that he had been taught to look upon as the paths that led to eternal damnation.

"It's a crime," said he bitterly, "to elect such people to office, and the father who indorses, by his ballot, any man for office whose character and personal habits are at variance with those that he would wish to have inculcated in his own son commits a crime.

"I say that the man is not born who is of his own strength able to fight the terrible passions and appetites of debauchery. The man who can by his own resolution re-assert his manhood, and lift himself after once being down, has not yet been born, nor will he ever be. I know; I have tried. When I finally reached the stage where my friends were becoming alarmed, and I tried to re-assert my manhood, I found that I could as easily bind a lion of the African desert with a rope of sand as I could stay the lusts and passions of the flesh. I've poured over $30,000 into the tills of the saloon-keepers, and I know all of their damnable tricks—that is, unless the devil has taught them some new ones since I quit, six years ago.

"You see people who say to you in a pompous way: 'Oh, I can quit when I want to. I take a drink when I please, but I don't let it get the best of me. I can quit when I please.' Oh, yes, they can quit when they please. I was at Dwight a short time ago and saw a big place out there—the Keeley Institute. Great institutions these Keeley places. They are springing up all over the country, and stock is selling way up. Now do you know what a Keeley Institute is?

"It's a place to help fellows quit who've got ready and can't.

"Other men say that the liquor question should be left to a man's conscience. The man who drinks liquor hasn't any conscience. He thinks he has got it, but he hasn't. Pour liquor into a man, and it will dissolve conscience like nitric acid will a pewter spoon. Drinking men have a conscience? A man leaves his wife in the morning. He kisses her and his little children and promises not to drink. In the evening he comes home a staggering, cursing, howling, blaspheming brute, and then people talk of a drinking man having a conscience. It's a travesty. I'd as soon appeal to the conscience of a dirty, hairy hog in the gutter as to the conscience of a brute like that.

"Another sample that is met with is the red-nosed old fellow who says: 'I take my dram every day, but I don't let it make a beast of me. I've drank whisky for forty years.'

"The only way to account for that is illustrated by the story of the fellow on the lower Wabash who was suffering from chills and fever. He didn't seem to be able to get cured of the shakes, though he tried everything possible.

"He sat on the portico of the hotel and said that he had tried doctors and they were no good. 'Finally,' said the man, 'I went down on the bank of the river and found a boat-load of apples there. I sat on the edge of the boat and ate apples and talked with the captain, and I believe I ate a peck of apples. When I got back home I didn't have the shakes and I haven't had them since. How do you account for that?' asked he, turning about with a triumphant air. A doctor was seated near by and he said, 'I can account for it. You sat there eating apples until you made a hog of yourself, and hogs never have chills and fever.'

"That's the only way I can account for these old fellows who have drank whisky for forty years—that they have made hogs of themselves and liquor don't affect them."

The speaker then went back to his own case, telling how he sank lower and lower in the social scale in his home at Atlanta, until he finally put himself in the hands of eminent physicians in all parts of the United States.

"I put myself in the hands of the best physicians in the country," said he, "but they could not do anything for me, and I now wish to enter my earnest protest against the doctors and medicine men who say that drink is a disease that can be cured by medicine. It is not true. I have thoroughly tested and investigated the matter, and the very best authorities say that it is not a disease. It is the devil that lurks deep in a man's soul, far below the reach of medicine or surgeon's probe."

The speaker concluded by telling of his life in Atlanta after that, about an order being issued from the court forbidding any liquor-dealer in Atlanta from selling liquor to him, and of his final conversion.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Prof. Totten's Music Hall Lecture.—Clerical Politics in the Methodist Church.—Dr. A. H. Plumb on Gov. Russell's Fast-day Proclamation.—Masonry in the Courts. High-priced Religion.

No one's name has been more on the lips of the public of late than Prof. Totten's, but he suffers the usual penalty of fame, for the way really intelligent people will persist in misunderstanding him is a marvel. "This is the day that Totten says the world is coming to an end," was a very common remark last Tuesday, when, in fact, he said no such thing. He only predicted that March 29th would close this "age" or dispensation, and begin "the week of years" spoken of by Daniel;—the solemn period of judgment. All orthodox theologians admit that a persistent sinner may pass his day of grace, and in the language of the old hymn,

"To pass that boundary is to die,
To die as if by stealth;
It does not dull the sparkling eye,
Nor quench the glow of health."

It does not follow that because our world wags on the same as before, that Prof. Totten may not be a true seer, though no "crash of doom" has yet followed to confirm his warning words. Any student of the French Revolution cannot fail to notice that just before the storm burst in all its horror there was a strange lull, a deceitful peace, when philanthropy and all kinds of good works became fashionable, and only a few prophets of evil, like Cazotte, croaked of coming ill. So, in spite of the scoffing daily press, who can say that our world may not have actually passed the mysterious limit when, every divine restraint removed, the nations shall be left to rush madly on to their own destruction, and drink the cup of terror that they have brewed for themselves? A Christian worker of wide experience tells me that she has noticed a singular difficulty of late in pressing revival work;—that the Spirit has not seemed to operate with the same freedom, while on the part of sinners and worldly-minded professors there seemed to be an intensified opposition and hate. It is not necessary to subscribe to all that Lieut. Totten says, to feel that there is enough essential truth in his message to make it of most solemn import.

With his spectacles and his intellectual cast of face he looks the student and thinker, much more than he does like a military man. It is said that he has refused a large sum from Frank Leslie's Magazine for his famous Music Hall Lecture, preferring to issue it in pamphlet form, and sow it broadcast where it will do the most good. He has that intense earnestness of conviction that cannot stop to make money, and the burning zeal in whose consuming flame the lust of worldly gain cannot live, which is characteristic of all true prophets.

Rev. G. A. Crawford, of the Bromfield Street church, preached last Sabbath in reply to Dr. Townsend on the "Methodist Machinery." He stated that he had been a member of an annual conference for twenty-two years, and had never yet seen a single instance of "clerical politics." But it is very easy and very natural to shut one's eyes to what one does not want to see; so that this assertion, in the face of the numerous letters read by Dr. Townsend, who has been at last permitted to reply to the accusations brought against him as "a traducer of the brethren," cannot have much weight.

He spoke of Bishop Newman's election as having been secured "by methods that would be a disgrace to ward politics." He read, among other letters, one from Prof. Bragdon, head of Lasell Seminary at Auburndale, the home of the Gordons, in which he said "he had evidence enough in that line to make him sick." Some very startling proofs of corruption were given by New England ministers, who told of the most unblushing sale of votes and appointments; while from all over the country echoed and re-echoed the same story of ring-rule, and wire-pulling, and secret influence putting down the best men and exalting the worst, the usual, nay, the invariable result where lodge methods prevail. A colored graduate of Boston University wrote: "No Negro preacher can raise his voice against it without falling before the ring. The reign of terror in the South is becoming unbearable." White or colored, no Methodist minister can hope to succeed who refuses to bear the mark of the beast. Dr. Townsend's "bombshell" may split the M. E., but in a split seems to lie its only chance of life.

Dr. A. H. Plumb, of the Walnut Street church, in his sermon last Sabbath, criticised severely Gov. Russell's Fast-day proclamation, for the fact "it was like all which we have had for the last six or eight years—without a single expression which shows that it is for a race of sinners." The rum which Massachusetts sends from her shores to curse the poor Africans of the Congo is in itself cause enough for fasting and prayer, to say nothing of the "too much worldly-mindedness, oppression and hard-heartedness feared to be among us, and many other sins," to use the quaint wording of one of the first Fast-day proclamations, made in 1652. But a governor who believes, as Russell does, in licensing the liquor-traffic, will not be likely to have a very keen sense of our national transgressions.

If the colored people keep their Fast-day on the 31st of next month in accordance with that Bible ideal from which we have drifted so far, nothing can be more ominous of coming judgments on our guilty land. There now lies before me a letter from a missionary worker at the South, which contains a sickening account of the abuses suffered by Christian laborers in that section for no other offense than teaching the colored people. Think of spending millions on coast defences to protect us from a hypothetical foe across the water, and bullying poor little Chili into making abject apology for deeds for which she was in no wise responsible; while we see men, born under the stars and stripes, murdered under those same starry folds which should have been their sacred and invulnerable shield, without a protest! The fact that our great and mighty republic cannot protect her own citizens, much less guarantee such protection to the subjects of other countries, is not calculated to enhance the respect felt for us by republican governments.

It looks as if the Maverick Bank officials would escape through a technical flaw in the indictment;—the substitution of Monday for Tuesday. The Traveller inquires very pertinently, "if this is so, what are prosecuting officers and grand juries for?" Those who understand the numerous ways in which Masonry can defeat justice, will not be slow to see the true inwardness of the matter. In connection with the above, it is refreshing to notice that the three officers who sold out the Fraternal Circle Endowment Order for $50,000, have been given a term of five years in jail. It was thought that the cases would be placed on file, and nothing more be done about them; but Judge Sherman—all honor to him!—was of a different mind, and considered that mercy to these rascals would be rank injustice to the widows and orphans they had robbed. "His sentence," to quote the statement in the newspapers, "was a great surprise, and caused a profound sensation in the court;" but why this surprise, unless their lodge relations had been counted in beforehand to shield them, no allowance being made for a judge like Sherman, with too keen a sense of judicial integrity to clear the guilty.

The following instance from Insurance Commissioner Merrill's pamphlet on the Endowment Orders, would seem to prove not only that these orders are in themselves a system of religion, but also that the members are made to pay for a very little of the article as well as a very poor quality of it at an exceedingly high rate. When the case of the Golden Lion came into court, one of the officers, on being asked what position he held, replied that he was Supreme Chaplain, whose duty it was to open the Supreme Session with prayer. He had been a clerk in a grocery store at $15 a week, but as Supreme Chaplain of the Golden Lion he received a salary of $7,500. The Supreme Session, however, was held but once in two years; so it will be seen at a glance that the certificate holders, among whom were aged women and little cash-girls in city stores, who had given up their small accumulations in the savings banks on the promise of receiving four-fold in return, actually paid their Supreme Chaplain at the rate of $15,000 for a single prayer! Comment is unnecessary.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1892.

The heaven is working. Slowly, but surely, the opponents of the Sunday opening of the World's Fair are impressing Congress with the importance of the subject. At first it was common to hear Congressmen say: "Oh, there is no public sentiment behind this movement; the people at large are not interested in whether the Exposition is opened or closed on Sunday;" but there is no longer any talk of that kind, as the number of petitions sent to Congress, and private letters addressed individually to Senators and members, has convinced them all that the people at large are very much interested in whether this country shall take a backward or forward step in the march of moral reform; whether it shall follow the wishes of probably nine-tenths of its native-born people and show to the world that the United States is in fact, as well as in name, a Christian nation, or shall follow the wishes of its foreign-born people (whose lack of respect for the Sabbath is chargeable to the customs and practices of their native countries more than to native viciousness), and its own most vicious class in exhibiting to the world the spectacle of a nation violating one of the cardinal principles of the Christian religion, while it maintains missionaries in every country under the sun for the purpose of teaching those principles to others. It is something to have convinced Congress that there is an earnest demand for the closing of the Exposition on Sunday, and the organizations and individuals have only to keep the pressure on to win a victory.

A largely-attended meeting, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., was held here Sunday afternoon, to discuss, "Shall the Columbian Exposition be opened on Sunday?" Mrs. E. S. Cameron, of California, opened the meeting with prayer. Mrs. Mary E. Catlin, petition secretary of the National W. C. T. U., for the department of Sabbath observance, stated that during the month of March she had transmitted to Congress petitions signed by 186,500 people, of the States, asking that the Exposition be closed on Sunday. Mrs. M. J. Telford, of Colorado, in an address, said that the one great object lesson this nation should give to foreign visitors to the Exposition should be a well-observed Christian Sabbath. Rev. Dr. George, general field secretary of the American Sabbath Union, spoke of the great interest that is felt and expressed upon this question throughout the country, and drew a dismal picture of what Chicago would be on Sundays if the Fair was kept open on that day. He closed by saying that the Christians must prevent this desecration.

Temperance people residing in prohibition States will receive with pleasure the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, handed down this week, affirming the decisions of the Vermont State courts, which had convicted a New York liquor-dealer and sentenced him to a fine and imprisonment, for shipping, C. O. D., liquor in jugs, to people living in Vermont.

One day, several months ago, when the scarlet fever and diphtheria were prevalent here, several ladies, in Mrs. Morton's parlor, were expressing their regrets that Washington had no hospital where children with contagious diseases could be taken for treatment. Miss Lena Morton, one of the Vice President's daughters, was an interested listener to the conversation, and after the visitors had gone she told her mother that she thought she knew a way in which a children's hospital for contagious diseases might be provided, if she had no objection. Of course Mrs. Morton had no objection; on the contrary she promised to aid in developing Miss Lena's idea. In a few days there was a meeting of a large number of Miss Lena's young friends in that same parlor, and the Daisy Chain Guild was organized and Miss Lena Morton elected president. The object of the guild was to raise the money to build a children's hospital for contagious diseases, and so well has it been carried out that at a meeting held a few days ago it was decided to apply to Congress for a charter and to go ahead and erect the hospital, plans of which were submitted and unanimously approved. A committee of three gentlemen prominent in charitable work has volunteered to select the site and superintend the erection of the buildings, which will consist of four separate cottages, two for diphtheria and two for scarlet fever, one of each for free patients. Mrs. Morton and several other ladies and gentlemen interested in the work of the children have agreed to become incorporators of the new institution.

Notwithstanding positive statements that the bill was a violation of treaties existing between China and the United States, made by eminent members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the House of Representatives, under a suspension of the rules, passed on Monday, a bill that if it be passed by the Senate and signed by the President will prevent any Chinaman not connected with the legation in this city from coming into the United States. In the opinion of many members of both political parties it will not only be a serious mistake to enact such a law, but an absolute breach of national faith. *

REFORM NEWS.

TO FRIENDS OF CHRISTIAN REFORM IN WISCONSIN.

I wish to say that for a few months my post-office address will be Lind, Waupaca county, Wis.

I am at present preaching steadily to a congregation who are willing to hear sound doctrine. I am pleased with my work, and have enough to do; but I shall hold myself in readiness to accept any invitations to lecture on the secrecy question in any part of the State. H. H. HINMAN.

NEW ENGLAND CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Boston, Mass., April 7, 1892.

At the annual meeting held in Boston December 9 and 10, 1891, it was voted to apply for a certificate of incorporation under the statutes of the State of Massachusetts. Pursuant to this action, a meeting was held on February 12 in the office of Wm. H. White, School street, Boston, in which officers were chosen, the forms required complied with, and an application made to the Commissioner of Corporations. On March 10 the application was approved by the Commissioner and a certificate of incorporation, signed by the Secretary of the State, issued to the "New England Christian Association."

A subscription was started at the December meeting to defray the expenses of carrying on the work during the year 1892. I give herewith a list of the several subscriptions prior to the 1st of April.

Names of donors are omitted, in some instances, by request, and in others where the wish of parties is not definitely known. Any one desiring information will please address L. E. Lincoln, Treasurer, at 339 Washington street, Boston, or the undersigned, at 218 Columbus Ave., Boston:

JAMES P. STODDARD, Cor. Sec. N. E. C. A.

The officers of the corporation are: President, J. M. Foster; vice president, John A. Conant; clerk, Miss E. E. Flagg; treasurer, Lewis E. Lincoln, and corresponding secretary, J. P. Stoddard. Its board of directors are: J. M. Foster, S. A. Pratt, Mrs. A. A. Rockwood, E. T. McIntire and Mrs. A. E. Stoddard. All drafts or money orders designed to aid in the work of the Association should be made payable to the treasurer, Lewis E. Lincoln, and sent to No. 339 Washington street, Boston, Mass. All letters of inquiry, orders for books, tracts, etc., should be sent to the undersigned. Funds are needed for the tract work and for the necessary expense of keeping the work moving, and we trust the friends will deal liberally with this department of the Lord's work, according as he has blessed them. Your co-worker and brother in Christ, JAMES P. STODDARD, Cor. Sec. N. E. C. A. 218 Columbus avenue, Boston, Mass.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 7, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—While resting and preparing for the trip I expect soon to make to New York City, I have read several of the Pittsburgh papers furnished me, with interest. It seems the discussion started at our gathering there is still being carried on. The Press has evidently been quite fair in printing both sides.

A sermon preached by Rev. Mr. Donehoo on the secrecy question, the Sabbath after our convention, was published in several of the daily papers. He assumed that statements were made at the convention which were not made, and after having set up his straw man he proceeded to knock him down. His sermon showed, either that he lacked what he assured his audience that, we did not possess, knowledge, or that he was making a great effort to secure favor with lodge lovers, without much regard for facts.

Bro. J. B. Corey, of Braddock, wrote a few suggestions regarding this sermon which received a like publicity. Should there be space, I should be glad to see Bro. Corey's suggestions in the Cynosure. I would also ask that you publish a few questions asked and answered in the same paper. The author of the questions is Joseph McKee, of Allegheny, Pa., a member of the Presbyterian church, a Cynosure reader, and a gentleman much respected by those who know him best. Our Pennsylvania State Treasurer has kindly answered them.

I make this request because I think a large number of those I meet in my travels hold wrong views regarding the church of Christ and its mission in the world. Some would professedly banish all creeds, and thus make men fools or worse; for a man's creed is simply his belief. The one who believes nothing is the only one who has no creed. Others would have a creed for their church so elastic as to admit all ordinary sinners. They would take the wolf into the fold, the snake into the bosom, to avoid breaking "the bruised reed" or quenching "the smoking flax." Did not Judas commune with Christ and his disciples? No, a thousand times no! Judas was not Judas the traitor when he sat with our Lord and his disciples. Supposing, instead of possessing the heart of an unmasked hypocrite, he had publicly worn the badge of a Christ-betrayer, or, in other words, a Masonic emblem, to the table, would Christ have allowed him, thus proclaiming his sinfulness, to partake of that given alone to the spiritually cleansed? The whole life and teachings of Christ answer no!

A sick man comes into a hospital, refuses to take the medicine offered, purposes to prescribe his own, defies every authority in the hospital, and purposes to run the institution to suit himself, and yet he must not be removed for fear he may be a "bruised reed" or "a smoking flax!" Let him reason this way who can not do otherwise; but it is not the way Christ reasoned when he purged the temple with a scourge of small cords. What we need to-day is not to let down the cross for the world to trample on, but so lift it up that the world may see its beauty, and adore Him whose love prepared a hell for the wicked as much as a heaven for the righteous. W. B. STODDARD.

REV. WILLIAM FENTON IN CALIFORNIA.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 30, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Last Sabbath evening the Lutheran church of this city extended a cordial welcome to an anti-secrecy sermon, and their house was well-filled with people.

Rev. C. B. Ebey is holding quarterly meeting here with the Free Methodists, and last evening I delivered an Anti-masonic lecture in their church.

Yesterday morning I attended a meeting of the pastors of Southern California on Premillennarianism. It seems to me that they would better show their readiness to meet the Lord by attention to such practical things as the lodge devil-worship, whereby Satan controls the churches that bear the name of the Lord.

I have had some sadly interesting interviews with pastors. A pastor of the Baptist church scouted the idea that the Masons and Odd-fellows belonging to his church are devil-worshippers, accepting both the facts in the matter and the statement of the apostle that, "the things the Gentiles sacrifice they sacrifice to devils and not to God," as merely my opinion. But it is not my opinion; it is fact of their own showing, in their own books, as compared with the Bible. While he considers himself radically opposed to secret societies, he insists upon calling secret devil-worshippers good Christians. He preached a very positive sermon, last Sabbath morning, on Separation, from the text in 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18. But the lodge-men in his church would not suspect, from anything he said, that he meant them; for Masons and Odd-fellows do not look at the Bible with such spiritual eyes as do Christians; indeed, they might have praised their pastor's sermon.

In an interview with a Congregational pastor, he held that he is a radical opponent of secret societies—even college fraternities; but he says it would be "unwise" to have an Anti-masonic discourse in his church, just now, because the church is $20,000 in debt. What will the Masons and Odd-fellows belonging to that church think

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM AFRICA.

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone, March 11, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Many things were in my mind that I intended to write for your paper while waiting here in Freetown to meet Mrs. Johnston, but having decided to make a hurried trip back to our station at Rokunso this week, I will have to defer it until another time.

I will simply report success in our work here, and that we have buildings almost ready for a permanent home at Rokunso. This puts us 125 miles from the coast and in the heart of a populous district where the Gospel has never been preached before. Our health so far sustains our expectation that we would find it healthier up there. The temperature will average lower on the coast, though subject to a greater variation. In February we observed the extremes of 55 degrees and 96 degrees Fahr. The lowest temperature was at sunrise, after a cool night. Several times the thermometer fell to 60 degrees and below. When the thermometer falls to 55 degrees in Africa it seems cold and fire feels good.

There has been some excitement among the people about our station, lest we drive the "devils" out of the country, but so far no hostility to the Gospel has been manifested. The people worship devils, and look to them for help and protection; hence they feel that to have the devils driven out of the country would be a great calamity.

As soon as I have leisure, I will write you something about inland Africa.

Yours in Jesus, H. W. JOHNSTON.

CHRISTIANITY, MASONRY AND THE CONSTITUTION.

LIND, Wis., March 28, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have read with interest the articles by Bros. Gault and Milligan, on Christianity in the Constitution, and desire to further explain my position.

It is often held that since both the Constitution of the United States and the institution of Freemasonry fail to recognize the Lord Jesus Christ, we are to dissent from the one just as truly as from the others, and that if we vote and take office under the Constitution, we ought, consistently, to cease from our opposition, on religious grounds, to the Masonic institution. But the cases are by no means parallel. The divine law recognizes religious, as distinct from civil, institutions; and while the state ought to be subject to the law of God, it is not its mission to explain and enforce it. Religious institutions, on the other hand, have this as their special mission, and are to be held responsible for defective, and, especially, for false teachings. Now, the Constitution belongs to the civil department, and, though manifestly defective in its recognition of the supremacy of God, it does not repudiate such supremacy, nor interfere with our serving him according to the dictates of our consciences. Freemasonry, on the other hand, is not a civil, but a "religious institution." Its meetings are "religious meetings," and its ceremonies are distinctly religious. Its omission of the name of Christ in its worship is a fatal omission. Its exclusion of his name from the passages of Scripture which it quotes, is a blasphemous exclusion. But it is especially its false teachings that make it pernicious.

For example, take the instruction given to the Entered Apprentice. He is told that "the common gavel is an instrument used by operative masons to break off the corners of rough stones, the better to fit them for the builders' use; but we, as Free and Accepted Masons, are taught to use it for the more glorious purpose of divesting our minds and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting our bodies as living stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Now, if this means anything, it means that men are to be saved by ceremonies, or, at most, by the practice of obedience to Masonic ethics.

This is false, and establishes the fact that it is a false religion. In my former article, I referred to, and still insist on, a principle of legal interpretation. It is this: All human enactments are to be assumed to have for their object the maintenance of the divine law of justice; and it is only when their language (not the history) of their enactments compels a different interpretation, that it ought to be given. In such case, they are simply void.

The Constitution did not expressly sanction slavery. That Abraham Lincoln so interpreted it is evident; but the question is not what he did, but what he ought to have done. He was willing to, and did enforce the Fugitive Slave Act; but surely he ought not to have done so. Unless my brother Gault can show that this principle of legal interpretation is a wrong, I shall insist that he ought to apply it to the interpretation of the Constitution, and to construe it as a Christian document, however defective it may be in its details.

H. H. HINMAN.

PENNSYLVANIA ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

LETTERS RECEIVED.

CANNONSBURGH, Pa., March 19, 1892.

I hope the meeting may be a success. . . . I take pleasure in saying that it is always my plain duty and privilege to testify against un-Christian alliances and all appearances of evil. I believe the secret lodge to be an enemy to aggressive Christian work and to the cause of our dear Redeemer.

D. R. McDONALD,
Pastor First U. P. Church.

CUSTER CITY, Pa., March 18, 1892.

In presenting to you my account as treasurer of the funds of the temporary organization, let me say I rejoice in my soul that the stalwart reformers of the Keystone State are making efforts to give permanence to the association, and cause the latent forces to hear the call and come forth and fall into line, causing light to shine where darkness has hitherto predominated.

Sun temples are constantly rising in our midst, the wonder and approval of a blind and gaping crowd. We see in them dark holes set for the debauching of our children, causing us sorrow and tears. Our cries for vengeance ascend continually to the Lord God Omnipotent, to whom all vengeance belongs, trusting in his promises and relying in his help to take the battle to the gates.

May the Omnipotent God make our convention (ours still, though many of us are absent not willingly but per force of circumstances); a power for "the gathering of the clans;" the entering wedge that will finally burst the lodge combination, razing the sun temples to the very ground, causing shame, with repentance toward God, in the dupe and devotee to be seen and heard through the vales and over the hills of our commonwealth.

I am sorry that the wickedness and deceit in the natural man caused many, interested in the withstanding and removal of secret societies, and stopping their nefarious work in church and state, to withhold their means and shut their ears to the appeals of the treasurer and others, lest they would be putting money into the pockets of impostors, or, as one Christian publication, in giving reasons for refusing to publish our appeal, expressed it: "It looked like seeking funds for the benefit of the individual." It was an unkind thrust, but we left it with the God of all truth, who knows the purity of the motive in penning that appeal. The smallness of the receipts accounts for the smallness of the work done. Many circulars were distributed through the mails to friends of the cause; the responses were so meager (as the account shows) that I was ashamed to spend any more even for postage.

I wish our convention every success, and pray that the God of truth, power and wisdom preside over your deliberations, and open so wide a door before you that we shall all rejoice, and with courage go forth, daring and doing for Christ's sake.

Brethren, let us be so near God in prayer and devotion that we have "power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy, and nothing shall by any means hurt you." It is ours, if we live and consecrate for it. Yours for truth and reform,
J. C. YOUNG,
Treasurer.

BROCKWAYVILLE, Pa., March 14, 1892.

I expect, God willing, to attend the convention. . . . I hope that by the blessing of God good may be done to the cause of truth, and that the empire of darkness may be still more thoroughly exposed. My earnest prayer shall be, that God will remove and destroy every evil system, standing as they do across the pathway of the churches. Yours, in the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ,
CHARLES E. TEMPLE.

HARTSTOWN, Penn., March 15, 1892.

While I may not be able to attend the convention, and the cause which it represents, you have my earnest sympathy and prayers. Hope you will have a good convention. Put me down for $2.00, towards defraying expenses; also, a six-months' subscription to the Christian Cynosure. Yours fraternally,
(Rev.) M. B. PATTERSON.

HARSHAVILLE, Pa., March 17, 1892.

I purpose attending the convention next week, if the weather will permit. . . . I hope you may be crowded for room and accommodation, and that Christianity may assert herself, as against the gross system of darkness, the enemy of the Cross of Christ. I am sincerely yours,
(Rev.) S. B. STEWART.

DIXONVILLE, Pa., March 15, 1892.

Your kind invitation and programs received. I am in most hearty sympathy with your work, and if the way opens, will be pleased to meet you. God bless you in this work! Amen and amen! Yours in Jesus,
P. B. CAMPBELL,
Pres. Allegheny W. M. Conference.

WEST LEBANON, Pa., March 14, 1892.

I am glad to see that the convention is a fixed fact. You are waging war earnestly against the secret power. I hope much good will be done. It is certainly needed. There is no greater evil in existence, and I am afraid it is creeping into the U. P. church. I would like to be present, but I fear I cannot. I send $5.00 as my share (of expense). I would like to do more. Yours fraternally,
J. C. TELFORD.

SEWICKLY, Pa., March 15, 1892.

I expect (D. V.) to be at the convention. I trust the meeting will be blessed to the advancement of the good cause. Sincerely,
S. B. McBRIDE.

LITERATURE.

PLANTATION LIFE BEFORE EMANCIPATION. By R. Q. Mallard, D.D., of New Orleans, La. One Vol., pp. 237. Richmond, Va.: Whittet & Shepperson. 1892.

Mr. Mallard is the pastor of a Presbyterian church in New Orleans, who contributed the material of this volume in a series of letters to the Southwestern Presbyterian, the official organ of the Synod of Mississippi (including Louisiana). They were suggested by a Southern lady who wrote an article for the New York Evangelist, in defence of Southern "Christian slaveholders," in answer to "the aspersions of a secretary of the Northern Presbyterian Freedmen's Board."

The author is the son of an old-time "Christian slaveholder," and, as such, takes the ground that the slaves of "Christian slaveholders" were treated as members of the master's household on about the same footing as the bondsmen in the family of the patriarch Abraham. It is too late to discuss the discrepancies of such a claim; it may have been the fashion, in some Southern families, to treat their slaves as the patriarch did his menials, as members of his household, with kind consideration and care; but the story of Hagar suggests some other ideas not quite so creditable to either Eastern or Southern slavery. It was, before the emancipation of the Negro, too common, also, to say in reference to him, "Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren;" and then the ordinary slave-owner proceeded to curse him with over-work, no pay, and brutality.

In the family of the author's father there was apparently a disposition to make the chains of slavery less burdensome; to consider the slave more kindly as a man and brother. At least such is the impression conveyed by this volume, in its descriptions of the old plantation, the home life of the Negro, his religious instruction, and his educational training. Such is the burden of the narrative, which is not without interest and sunny phases; but the picture is heavily shaded with the clouds of slavery, and the knowledge that its horrors were rife on every hand.

The April Century Magazine closes the forty-third volume. The full-page frontispiece is a copy of Lorenzo Lotto's "Three Ages of Man," illustrating a new chapter of Old Italian Masters, by W. J. Stillman. Continuations appear of Edmund C. Stedman's Nature and Elements of Poetry, Characteristics, by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, The Naulakha, by Kipling and Balestier, and Ol' Pap's Flaxen, by Hamlin Garland. Fresh contributions are: Our Common Roads (illustrated, timely and eminently suggestive), by Isaac B. Potter; Come Love or Death (poem), by Will H. Thompson; The Mother and Birthplace of Washington (illustrated), by Ella B. Washington; The "Wyoming" in the Straits of Shimonoseki (illustrated), by William E. Griffis; The King (poem), by Louise M. Sill; The Total Solar Eclipses of 1889 (illustrations after Lick's telescope), by Edward S. Holden; "The Shadows Fold" (poem), by Jno. V. Cheney; On a Rose Pressed in a Book (poem), by Louise Chandler Moulton; Did the Greeks Paint their Sculptures? (illustrated), by Edw. Robinson; The Feast of the Marys (Play in Provence), and The Story of the Two Marys (illustrated), by Joseph and Elizabeth R. Pennell; At Break of Day (poem), by Florence E. Coates; Fishing for Pearls in Australia—Experiences of a Diver (illustrated), by Hubert P. Whitmarsh; Khamsin (poem), by Clinton Scollard; Wolcott Balestier, by Edmund Gosse; In Memoriam, Wolcott Balestier (poem), by James R. Campbell; "Starving at Taskoma" (illustrated), by Jno. Heard, Jr.; Some Passages in the History of Letitia Roy (illustrated), by M. E. Angus; The Ocean Postal Service, by Thos. L. James; The Cyclamen (poem), by Arlo Bates; Topics of the Time—First Presidential Election Under Ballot Reform; and the New Electoral College Open Letters—The Yankee and Rebel Yells, by J. Harvie Dew; Is Islam the Gospel for the Orient? by Jas. S. Dennis; Dr. Weir Mitchell's "Psalm of Death," by Geo. E. Woodberry; Aerial Navigation, by Hiram S. Maxim; In Lighter Vein—Poems by Doane Robinson (illustrated), by Mary B. Diamond, and Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and Observations, by Manley H. Pike. New York City: The Century Co. Price, $4.00 a year.

The Arena for April contains papers and contributors as follows: Vital Statistics of the Negro, by Frederick L. Hoffman; The Money Question, by Hon. John Davis, M. C.; Volapuk, the World Language, by Alfred Post; The Speaker in England and America, by Henry George, Jr.; Rational Views of Heaven and Hell, by Rev. Geo. St. Clair, D.D.; The Farmers' Alliance and Some of its Leaders, by A. L. Diggs, with portraits of L. L. Polk (frontispiece), Alonzo Wardall, C. W. Macune, H. L. Loucks, Marion Cannon, and L. F. Livingston; Pontifex Maximus, by W. D. McCracken; A Remarkable Psychological Experience, by Louise Chandler Moulton; How Nottaway "Squashed" the Indictment, by Will Allen Dromgoole—A Southern Character Sketch: A Spoil of Office (continued), by Hamlin Garland; Two Hours in the Social Cellar, by B. O. Flower, and Book Reviews. Boston: The Arena Publishing Co., $5 per annum.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly for April is bright and sparkling with spring gossip, suggestions and pictorial hints for the flower and vegetable gardens. Its variety is surprising, and there is an evident desire on the part of the editors to make each succeeding number an improvement on its predecessors. Its range of topics includes "literature, flower culture and home culture," and its increasing popularity seems to be assured. Published by the Vick Publishing Company, Rochester, N. Y., at 50 cents per annum, a ridiculously low price when the value of the magazine is taken into account.

LODGE NOTES.

FREEMASONS.

Michigan has 370 lodges, with a membership of 33,963.

Chicago has 62 lodges and nearly twelve thousand members.

White and black beans are used in Ireland in Masonic bodies in lieu of balls for balloting.

There are forty Mystic Shrine bodies in foreign lands and about sixty in the United States.

The Grand Chapter of Pennsylvania is in its ninety-seventh year, and is the oldest in the world.

The Imperial Council of the order of the Mystic Shrine will meet at Omaha, August 15, 1892.

More than 6,000 books represent works on Freemasonry and are published in the English language.

The General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons of the United States will be a hundred years old in 1897.

The Masonic fraternity in New York have a quarter of a million dollars at interest. Ten years ago they were in debt $604,686.

In 1890 there were 651,028 Master Masons; 154,898 Royal Arch Masons, and 84,923 Knights Templar in the United States.

The late Mahomed Tewfik, Khedive of Egypt, was made a Mason in 1881, and in 1887 was solicited by native Masons to become Grand Master. Under his control the craft was raised to a thorough system of perfection.

The projected Masonic Home at Springfield, Ohio, is now a certainty. The Board of Trustees has received the deed for 154 acres of land, valued at $20,800, and drafts for $11,000 donated by Masons and citizens of Springfield on condition that the Home be located on the property donated, which lies about a half mile south of Springfield. In addition to this, about $56,000 has been subscribed by different Masonic bodies and members of the order, of which $8,614.90 has been paid to the Treasurer of the Board.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

The Advocate also complains that "in three separate towns in this State (Minn.) the Masons and Odd-fellows have combined to prevent the institution of Pythian lodges, and have practiced unfraternal methods to accomplish this end," and, of course, doesn't like such methods.

The same paper says that the gain of Pythian Knights in 1890, in Minnesota, was more than 700; in 1891, but little more than 400, including the new lodges of the latter year. The Advocate thinks the falling off is largely due to suspensions for non-payment of lodge dues; one lodge, alone, suspended thirty members.

The Pythian Advocate: "Scattered over this fair land there are over 200,000 suspended Knights of Pythias," who have lost their membership for non-payment of lodge dues, and suggests that a new order be formed to be known as "Suspended Knights of Pythias," which would outnumber the present active organization of the Knights.

The New Orleans Mystic Tie complains that too many applications for membership in the Pythian order are signed by the Master of Finance, or Keeper of Records and Seal, "when the applicant is an entire stranger to them," and do so on the "say-so" of some other brother. The rule of the order is that "no brother knight should recommend an applicant for membership with whom he is not personally acquainted."

BENEVOLENT ORDER OF ELKS.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks (says an exchange) was formed in a little room on the Bowery, New York City, about twenty-five years ago, by Chas. Vivian, Thos. G. Gaynor, Henry P. O'Neil, Tony Pastor, Dan Bryant, Jno. Milligan, Nelse Seymore, and Hugo O'Neil. The organization was in the beginning more social than anything else, but one of its aims was to aid members of the dramatic profession who were members of the order. Its original name was "The Jolly Corks;" after which it was changed to the "Order of the Buffalo," and then to the "Order of the Elks." It leaped at once into favor among actors, and as it grew in numbers, its aims broadened, until it became pledged to aid the suffering, relieve the needy, care for the sick, and bury the dead, confining its charitable work to its paid-up membership. From a handful of actors the order has grown until it maintains 240 lodges and a membership of nearly 35,000, including all sorts of professional and business men.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 14, 1892.

ECHOES OF THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION.

The recent convention of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, stirred up a Masonic flutter in and around Pittsburgh that shows that somebody outside the convention was hurt.

First, the Rev. E. R. Donehoo, pastor of the Eighth Presbyterian church in Pittsburgh, although not a member of any lodge, took up the cudgel in a sermon on "Secret Societies," and defended them vigorously, but not wisely; for no man unfamiliar with the character and secrets of the lodge is able to speak intelligently or effectively either for or against them.

The trouble with Mr. Donehoo seems to have been the confounding of solemn covenants made openly between kings of the East and ancient patriarchs, between God and the patriarchs, and between the patriarchs themselves, with the secret abominations of sinful men with each other in the lodges of to-day. Not knowing anything about the work of the lodges, as he himself confessed, he wandered around, in a muddled sort of way, in defense of the lodge, apparently for no other reason than because some of his friends in the church belong to it. In conclusion he said: "Why condemn these fraternities for having their secrets, when every family has its secrets, every civil and religious organization have their secrets, yea, and even God Almighty himself has secrets into which the holiest angel dare not pry?"

Such ignorance and blasphemy in a public speaker is reprehensible in the highest degree.

Another defender of the lodge, who gave his opinion of the attacks made in the convention upon the lodge, was "J. Simpson Africa, Right Worshipful Grand Master of Masons of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania," who assisted in the installation of a new lodge at Wilksburg. He said: "Well, I think that any attacks decrying Masonry must have been made by United Presbyterian ministers and not by Presbyterian ministers. I am a Presbyterian and a Mason, and I hope not a worse Mason for the fact of being a Presbyterian. All such attacks are foolish, and made by foolish men. If any reply to them were needed, answer can be found, as far as the Freemasons are concerned, by pointing to the men who have held offices in the order. When it is charged that secret societies impede the wheels of justice by interfering with the jury system, I say that those persons uttering the charge had best particularize. It will be time then to answer them."

The evidence is abundant against this evil, and the time to answer it is here. But he won't undertake it, nor will any of his fraternity. In all such cases, "mum's the word," as it is whenever "silence is golden."

There lies before us, as we write, unimpeachable testimony that secret societies do impede the wheels of justice, as follows:

First, Edmond Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago, will furnish definite information of a consultation of Masons at his residence, to devise ways and means for packing a jury engaged in the investigation of a murder committed by a Mason.

Secondly, John C. Spencer's defeat as prosecuting attorney of the State of New York, when endeavoring to bring to justice parties implicated in the murder of William Morgan, in 1826, owing to Governor Clinton's revelation of important evidence in the case to the defense instead of the prosecution—Clinton being himself a high-degree Mason.

Thirdly, the bold defence of Judge Daniel H. Whitney, Worshipful Master of Belvidere (Boone county, Ill.) Lodge, No. 60, before the Grand Lodge of Illinois, October, 1851, on a charge of "un-Masonic conduct," in bringing to justice Samuel L. Keith, the murderer of Ellen Slade and a member of that lodge. The judge was condemned for this act by the Grand Lodge—a decision that led him to subsequently renounce Masonry.

More and similar cases might be cited if necessary; but these are sufficient.

Rev J B Corey, of Pittsburgh, through the Pittsburgh Commercial-Gazette, made a masterly reply to the sophistries of Rev. Mr. Donehoo, which we hope to re-publish next week. It does not "leave him a leg to stand upon."

AFTER THE ENDOWMENT INSURANCE SHARKS.

Information of a recent date comes from Albany, N. Y., that the Insurance Committee in the Legislature has under consideration a bill introducing new features in the present law regulating insurance business in that State. Among other noticeable clauses, that providing that every insurance company operating within the State must deposit $100,000 with the Insurance Department for each branch of insurance, provokes the greatest opposition. If the bill becomes a law this provision practically bars out a large number of mutual benefit orders now doing business, such as the Iron Hall and Order of Tonti and many others of much less merit. Hearings have been had on this bill, and these mutual benefit orders represented by counsel. The interest in the fate of these orders may be understood when it is known that there is scarcely a city of any size in the State but that has one or more lodges doing business. The regular insurance companies, of course, want the law. The great amount of money lost in "wild cat" mutual benefit orders which promise a great deal for a little is responsible for this demand for a prohibitory law.

The proposed statute will afford a much needed relief for that class of clients who are always seeking to obtain something for nothing, and are quite as persistently giving something for nothing.

OUR NAVY AND COAST DEFENSES.

We are beginning to pride ourselves on our enlarged and efficient navy. Some immense guns are being shipped to our Pacific coast, to be placed in forts and batteries on our Western border. Besides the immense drain on our national treasury, and the diversion of much-needed funds from all-important objects, we are educating the rising generation in the idea of the glory and necessity of war, and that it is only when we, as a nation, emulate the character and conduct of our great ruffian, John L. Sullivan, that we can hope for peace and protection. It seems never to have occurred to the men who advocate these measures, that just as the Sullivans are the men who have the most fights, and get the most severely pounded, so the nations with the greatest armaments, and that make the greatest preparations for war, are those who suffer most from its ravages. The bully among the nations, just as truly as the bully among men, is the most hated and despised.

A special emphasis was recently given to this subject in view of our strained relations with Great Britain and Canada, on account of the seal fisheries. Happily the cause for uneasiness and fear of war has since then disappeared; but the frontier protection of our nation still maintains its importance and interest.

The Dominion of Canada is our nearest neighbor. We are separated by an international line of more than 3,000 miles, most of which has no natural or artificial barrier. Great railroad trains constantly pass and repass, without the slightest fear of molestation, or even of knowledge when the unseen boundary has been left behind.

Now, what has been our military defense against incursions from our nearest and most wide-awake neighbor?

For nearly half a century, with all the multiplied complications of our civil war and Fenian raids, we have had the single ship "Michigan," with but a partial armament, and utterly unfit to cope with modern vessels of war. Nor has there been the slightest molestation of our great and growing cities of the Lakes. None would know, unless he inquired, whether there was any means of defense.

Not long since the "Michigan" was disabled. It was not considered safe to build a fire under her boilers. Her hull, it is feared, is essentially dilapidated, and it was deemed necessary to have her towed to Buffalo for repairs.

In the mean time it is not learned that any one sleeps less profoundly, or that any danger-signals are, for this reason, hoisted at any lake ports.

And why? Simply because the social, the commercial and religious ties are worth, a thousand-fold, more as a means of protection than all the armaments that could be constructed. If, with this entire absence of military and naval defenses on our Northern border, we can rest thus securely, why need we to fear aggression from the countries of Europe? They, too, are bound to us by such commercial ties that both we and they would lose more by even a successful war than we could possibly gain. The ships that sailed, several weeks ago, laden with food for the famine-stricken peasants of Russia, are a far more powerful means of national defense than our costliest forts and monitors; and the gladness with which their coming was hailed in the ports of Russia, and the honors paid to their officers by the imperial magnates, indicate that the cheapest, wisest and best method of promoting peace is by manifesting national peacefulness.

ANTI-SECRECY IN NATIONAL POLITICS.

The anti-secrecy work is progressing; yet it is noticeable that where it is earnestly pressed as a religious reform, it receives its heaviest rebuffs from so-called Christian churches, which formally worship Christ, yet fellowship with members of lodges, and thus seriously detract from that spirituality which is the strongest element in their Christianity. Still it is as a religious movement that anti-secrecy is best succeeding. People are ignorant of the evils of secret lodges, and of the injury they do to the family, the church and the state, or else they are so blinded and prejudiced in favor of the lodge that they range themselves in opposition to whatever reflects upon its integrity. Ignorance and prejudice must be overcome before practical results can follow; hence the work of reform is subject to many hindrances.

If the anti-secrecy reform party was sufficiently strong to carry its principles bodily into the coming Presidential election and insist on being recognized as an important factor in shaping the destinies of the nation, it would be able to dictate something of the political policy to be followed in the approaching campaign. But it is too soon to take a very active part in the election of national officers on a platform of its own.

If all the churches were uniformly opposed to secret societies, as some of them are, and as they all ought to be, they could unite in this opposition and at once declare their independence of the other political parties, casting their influence upon the issue of the election. Until that time comes, however, there is little hope that the anti-secrecy party will be recognized or receive help from any of the factions now in the field.

But the anti-secretists can afford to wait and watch and work, as they are now doing, patiently, earnestly and hopefully, until the time of their triumph shall come, as it is sure to do in the end, because their cause is just and right. If they cannot control the election in a single precinct, they can continue to pray for victory, always voting as they pray, and find comfort and encouragement in snatching deluded men from the grip of the lodge and teaching them the "better way."

Still there should be no opportunity lost to let their work be known. Their light must and will shine, and if in the good providence of God some one of the dominant political parties should be induced to insert a plank in their platform of principles to this effect, it would be a harbinger of the good time coming and be the means, perhaps, of an important advance in the cause we so much love:

"WHEREAS, There exists in our beloved country, especially in our larger cities, disloyal, oath-bound secret organizations that threaten the perpetuity of our cherished institutions, and which have, by virtue of their disloyal oaths, perverted justice, and strained our friendly relations with foreign nations; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That every person who takes a disloyal oath, or an oath not recognized by the government of any State or of the United States, shall be disfranchised and subject to both fine and imprisonment; and that whosoever shall administer any such disloyal or illegal oath to any person, shall be liable to the same penalty."

There need be nothing in the foregoing preamble and resolution deemed partisan or prejudicial.

It is merely an expressed desire to maintain the integrity of the country against the dangers of all partisan and prejudicial secret organizations.

Any one possessing influence among the delegates to any of the National Conventions that will meet this year is at liberty to urge them to incorporate this expression into their public declarations as a matter of national safety.

MASONIC INCONSISTENCIES.

In an order like Freemasonry, where the public appearance is no guide to the "true inwardness" of the institution, one may easily detect the most glaring inconsistencies in its history and pretensions. Take, for instance, the office of "Tyler" (or tiler), as it was originally spelled in accordance with its early signification. Mackey's Lexicon (undoubted Masonic authority) says of this functionary: "The title is derived from the operative art; for as, in operative Masonry, the Tiler, when the edifice is erected, finishes and covers it with the roof (of tiles), so, in speculative Masonry, when the lodge is duly organized, the Tiler closes the door and covers the sacred precincts from all intrusion."

This seems to be a sensible explanation of this important official and his duties; but an imaginative writer in the American Tyler, of Detroit, discounts it by such paragraphs as these: "The Masonic lodge is intended to represent Paradise, at the gate of which was placed an angel with a flaming sword to 'keep off all cowans and eavesdroppers.' We read that this sword twisted and turned in every direction and represented a flame of fire. Hence its similitude in the sword of the Tyler should have a gilt winding blade. Second—The sword of the Tyler was sheathless, because always presumed to be on duty. It is more what its name implies, 'an implement of office,' than for any effective purpose. As is the wand of office to the deacons and stewards, so is the sword to the Tyler, indicative of his duty and place. Therefore it should be as near as possible in harmony with the original idea which gave it birth."

It is now an open question whether any Mason knows the origin of the Tyler and his office. There is considerable difference, usually, between the night-watchman of a building and one of the holy host of heaven.

—Parties desiring to procure copies of last week's Cynosure—the issue of April 7—can purchase them at this office for 5 cents per copy, or $1.50 for fifty copies. The address of President Chas. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, on "The Church and the Lodge," which he recently delivered before the students at the Chicago (Union Park Congregational) Theological Seminary, is printed in full in that number of the Cynosure, and possesses such importance as a reform document that it should be as widely distributed as possible. All orders will be promptly filled upon receipt of the prices above noted.

—A lodge coincidence possessing some notable features occurred last week in Saginaw county, Mich. For three years or more the ownership of a "free" church, located in Bridgeport, has been in controversy between the local "tent" of the Maccabees (a beneficiary, insurance secret society numerous in Michigan) and other claimants. The dispute, involving the value of the edifice, about $2,000, was strenuously carried into the law courts. On Wednesday a decision of the State Supreme Court, adverse to the Maccabees, who had possession of the property, was announced. On that evening the Maccabees held a meeting in the church, and on Thursday morning the building was destroyed by fire. An investigation is to be made, and it is expected that the developments will be full of interest for all concerned.

—Nearly half of the liquor saloons in New York City were closed on Sunday, April 3, and most of those who control the remainder seemed solicitous lest they should be found guilty under the excise laws. For it was not owing to any special power of moral suasion that this new feature of New York Sunday life was manifested. It could be directly traced to the individual denunciation of the Tammany Society and the unscrupulous methods of that vile secret political institution by Rev. Dr. Parkhurst. Tammany has been for years the vital spring of municipal corruption and the rum interest in that city. By his energetic and damning exposure of its wickedness the Doctor forced the society to assume the defensive, and the immediate result was a "dryer" Sunday than New York had seen for years. With proper support, his foray upon Tammany will make the revolution, so auspiciously begun, a glorious success.

—A private letter from Miss Elizabeth E. Flagg says in reference to the noon prayer-meeting held in the N. C. A. rooms adjoining the Cynosure office: "I hope the noon prayer-meetings are still kept up. They seem to me to be one of the best guarantees possible of the success of our work. It does not matter if there are only two or three at each meeting. If there is one thing I have learned in the New England work, it is, not to put faith in numbers." In relation to these meetings, which are still too thinly attended by those for whose benefit they are maintained, conversions are frequent, and solid work for eternity is being done. We may be sure that the Lord will add to his church daily such as WILL be saved. "Whosoever WILL may come."

—One of our exchanges, to whom Sunday observance is obnoxious, in a recent issue, fires this off at the object of its aversion: "Remember that Sunday as the Sabbath, or as a day to be observed instead of the Sabbath, or a day for special religious observance of any kind or for any reason, has no foundation in any biblical teaching. So, while it may be true that the secular Sunday newspaper diverts religious thought, it has nothing to do with Sabbath keeping any more than the secular newspaper of any other day." It is such teachings as these by professedly Christian newspapers that aid the enemies of the weekly rest-day (called Sunday by the pagans, but known to all true followers of Jesus as "the Lord's-day") in destroying the Puritan Sabbath and treading its former glory in the dust.

—Details of the grand work instituted among the colored people of the South by the American (Congregational) Missionary Association of New York, fill the thirty-six royal octavo pages of the American Missionary for April. The Association has industrial schools and colleges located at Tongaloo and Meridian, Miss.; Blowing Rock, Beaufort and All Healing, N. C.; Talladega and Selma, Ala.; Nashville, Jonesboro and Memphis, Tenn.; Lexington, Ky.; New Orleans, La.; Orange Park, Fla.; Atlanta, McIntosh, and Thomasville, Ga.; Austin, Tex.; Oahe, Santee, and Fort Berthold, Ind. Ter. The story of each of these praiseworthy institutions is full of interest and encouragement, and the illustrations accompanying them convey a very fair idea of the methods employed to enlighten the minds, purify the hearts and strengthen the bodies of these men whom the Association is training to perform the duties of Christian citizens.

—At the Cleveland (Ohio) Rolling Mills, a few months ago, the manager inaugurated a system of practical prohibition, that worked very well. The preliminary notice of the manager, as posted on the gates of the institution, warned the men that after a certain date, any employe who leaves his work or the yard during working hours, or is known to have entered or left a saloon, or to carry any beer or intoxicating liquors to the works, or is seen under the influence of liquor either coming to work, at work, or at any time during which he is supposed to be on duty, will be immediately discharged." On the succeeding pay-day half a dozen of the men were told that, in accordance with this regulation, their services were no longer required. It may seem hard to resort to such heroic measures, but surely the warning was timely and should have been more carefully heeded. Public sympathy will be extended to the wives and children of these delinquents, but the men have no one to blame but themselves.

—The National Home Guard, published monthly at Boston by Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard (218 Columbus avenue), and edited by Miss Elizabeth E. Flagg, although diminutive in size, is one of the most stalwart anti-secrecy reform papers in New England. The March number contains a symposium of testimony against the lodge by prominent women in the W. C. T. U., which cannot fail to leave a powerful impression wherever it is read. Mary E. Cheney, secretary of the Boston W. C. T. U., writes: "I believe that any organization having a secret oath as its taproot is dangerous to the best interests of society at large." Mrs. A. J. Gordon, president of the Boston W. C. T. U., makes a strong plea against the lodge system and its evils, and adds: "We are thankful for the National Christian Association, which is turning the light on these ways that are dark and tricks that are vain; we bid God-speed to the Christian Cynosure and its editors, and to the National Home Guard, in their efforts to awaken and arouse public sentiment against all secret societies." And for our part we are thankful that God has raised up such sterling advocates for Christian reform as Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D. and his wife, and all the other able men and women who are sufficiently independent and have grace enough to lift their voices and influence against the shams and evils of the lodge system.

of such a stroke of policy as that in their pastor?

The attitude of Congregationalists towards lodge demon-worship proclaims the fact that they have more respect for it than they have for evangelical denominations other than their own—for the latter must be abandoned as a prerequisite for church fellowship and communion with Congregationalism.

When every denomination keeps the words of Christ, then, and not until then, will there be the universal Christian union contemplated by Christ, John 17: 21-23.

If all could take the words of the beloved disciple: "Love not the world nor the things in the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him," Christian union would be near at hand. But God's word demands such a separation as essential to Christian union, as the churches will not tolerate; such a separation as they cannot tolerate while the devil holds such heavy mortgages upon them. The amount specified for which this Congregational church is mortgaged is $20,000 in money. And when that is paid up, no doubt the pastor will find himself under still heavier bonds than can be estimated by money to suppress the truth.

After spending one week in this city, almost enchanting for its beauty, I depart from it tomorrow morning for San Diego. It rained very hard all last night, and they expect no more rain before next November or December. Two or three nights ago it was so very cold that it seemed to me that there would be a hard frost, but the next day the flowers were blooming as brightly as before and unharmed. Sometimes there is a very heavy fog from the sea that settles down upon the city. The encraving effects of the warm days are neutralized by the cold nights, which latter seem to preserve the health and activity of the people.

Yours truly,

W. FENTON.

ANTI-MASONIC WORK IN THE EAST.

[A private letter from a Christian lady in an Eastern State, who desires, for the present, to withhold her address from publication, thus recounts her success in her warfars, single-handed, against the lodge:]

_____, N. Y., March 30, 1892.

I have been instrumental in influencing two loved ones to forever leave the lodge, and leave not "one hoof behind" in the land of bondage. No emblem, or charm or trinket, after the fashion of the pagan symbols, defiles our happy home, and I have been the means of putting into the hands of nearly one hundred women, Masons' wives, information whereby they may also save their loved ones.

We have pledged ourselves not to patronize in business, not to listen to a minister, or receive the Lord's Supper from the hands of an affiliated Mason, considering it blasphemy toward God, and insulting to us as Christian women.

If societies could be formed in all cities, where women could take this stand, the lodge-room would be emptied of every professing Christian. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still;" for we only desire to rescue those who have named the name of our Redeemer; and we will not allow his name to be insulted and in any way condone the crime.

I never loved my Saviour so much as I have since I have studied into this abomination and learned how his professed disciples have crucified him afresh. God forgive them! "they know not what they do!" Yours sincerely,

B.

THE HOME.

THE SKEPTIC'S DAUGHTER.

[Ethan Allen's daughter was a lovely, pious young woman, whose mother, then long in the spiritland, had instructed her in the truths of the Bible. When she was about to die she called her father to her bedside, and, turning upon him her pale face, lighted by lustrous blue eyes, she said, with a sweet voice: "Dear father, I am about to cross the cold, dark river. Shall I trust to your opinions, or to the teachings of dear mother?" These words, like a keen sorrow, pierced the recesses of his most truthful emotions. "Trust to your mother!" said the champion of infidelity; and, covering his face with his hands, he wept like a child. —Harper's Monthly.]

The damps of death are coming fast,
My father, o'er my brow,
The past with all its scenes has fled,
And I must turn me now
To that dim future that in vain
My feeble eyes descry;
Tell me, my father, in this hour
In whose stern faith to die?

"In thine? I've watched thy scornful smile,
And heard thy withering tone,
Whene'er the Christian's humble hope
Was placed above thine own;
I've heard thee speak of coming death
Without a shade of gloom,
And laugh at all the childish fears
That cluster round the tomb.

"Or is it in my mother's faith?
How fondly do I trace
Through many a weary year long past
That calm and saintly face!
How often do I call to mind,
Now she is 'neath the sod,
The place—the hour—in which she drew
My early thoughts to God!

"'Twas then she took this sacred book,
And from its burning page
Read how its truths support the soul
In youth and failing age;
And bade me in its precepts live
And by its precepts die,
That I might share a home of love
In worlds beyond the sky.

"My father, shall I look above,
Amid this gathering gloom,
To Him whose promises of love
Extend beyond the tomb?
Or curse the being who hath blessed
This checkered path of mine;
Must I embrace my mother's faith,
Or die, my sire, in thine?"

The frown upon that warrior-brow
Passed like a cloud away,
And tears coursed down the rugged cheek
That flowed not till that day.
"Not—not in mine," with choking voice
The skeptic made reply,
"But in thy mother's holy faith,
My daughter, may'st thou die."

FROM HOUSE TO HOUSE.

Sunny Dale was no place for "cranks," yet there were a few there. Now a "crank" is a man who has a long, religious definition of something imaginary or real. Some "cranks" are good; some bad. The good one is balanced; the bad, unbalanced. A good "crank" can see something besides his hobby; a bad one, never! The former may be, and, for the most part, is a well-rounded man, but who puts greater stress on some point. The latter can see nothing but his hobby. In it he lives, moves and has his being. The few "cranks" in Sunny Dale church were of the latter stamp. The sacrificial blood, the ingathering of souls, the building up of the kingdom, all must stand aside and give the "right o' way." They sometimes visited the pastor and tried to urge him to preach their all-absorbing topics. One Monday morning, the pastor was no sooner out than he saw John Thimblebrain coming to his house. John was the crankiest crank of the lot. He could not see anything but his hobby. He tied his horse and was greeted by the pastor. But he could not wait: "Pastor Experience, why don't you preach on prehistoric men? You have not even mentioned the subject for four Sabbaths, and the people are losing interest! You ought to bring it in every Sabbath!" "Well," said the pastor, "I did not notice when the subject was mentioned last. We ministers have to be careful or we will run into ruts, and preach one thing all the time. I try to watch, and, as far as possible, systematize the pulpit ministrations." "No doubt you do," said Mr. Thimblebrain, "but you don't succeed. Why, I've heard the 'Gospel' and 'salvation' until I am tired; but I would never get tired of hearing of prehistoric man! And why it interests you so little, and why you leave it out of so many of your sermons, I can't see! You certainly don't read much on these old, profound subjects! I would like to give you the loan of some books so that you could keep the people 'up' on the all-absorbing-question-of-the-day!"

This was a centre shot. Some ministers would have given John Thimblebrain an intellectual thrashing on the spot, but Pastor Experience was not that kind of a man. He wanted to lead his brother out and away from the notions which he had been nursing. There was a very sick man in the congregation, and Pastor Experience suggested to Mr. Thimblebrain that they go and call. He was agreed, and they untied the horse and were away. The conversation at the bedside was very touching, and the expressions of faith by the dying man, most comforting. Mr. Thimblebrain was much moved, for he had not often heard such words or seen such love for Christ. The pastor asked Mr. T. to lead in prayer. This over, they retired. On the way home, Mr. T. expressed his astonishment and gratification, and asked the pastor to preach, some day soon, on "The Faith of the Dying Saints," and to use as an illustration what they had seen and heard. As he was about to start for home, he also made a special request of the pastor to take him with him on similar errands as often as possible, for "I see I have been missing much." From that day Mr. T. was a changed man. Thus, my friends, one sweet experience oftentimes releases from years of captivity. —Christian Nation.

PRACTICAL RELIGIOUS LIFE.

The thing for us to do is to take hold of our work willingly—as that which we are here on earth to do. Whatever it is our duty to do, let us do it. Whatever is laid upon us to bear, let us bear it. It may be pain; it may be bereavement; it may be slander; it will be largely self-reproach for our own blunders and sins. If the burdens be only toil and self-sacrifice, they are easy, and to repine about them is to quarrel with our blessings. Another thing, having done the best we know how or are able "let it go at that." I used to hear my father say when he had done a thing as well as he could—"let it go at that." Don't go back and worry over it and around it, and wish you had done it better. Another maxim of his was in regard to quarrels. "If you put your hand to your side of a quarrel to make it better, you will make it worse." His idea was that you cannot get a good thing out of a bad thing, because it is not there. There is no good thing in a quarrel, and the more you get out of it the worse you are off. Let us stand with dignity and composure by the right—and with confidence also.

And it is not difficult to find the right. There never was a noonday sun clearer upon a path than the teaching of our Lord is upon the path of our lives. There is not a stone, nor a root, nor a depression, nor an elevation, which it does not show. We may run in it and not stray or stumble. —Interior.

OLIVE'S IMPULSE.

"I wonder who will wear this," said Olive Eustice as she took the last stitch in a dark woolen dress. "It looks real pretty and comfortable, even if it is plain, and I have enjoyed making it so much. I should really like to know who will get it."

"Why don't you put a note in it?" asked Rosy Deane, laughingly.

The young ladies' mission circle was sewing for a mission box to be sent to a friend who was teaching in a large school in the West, where the pupils were nearly all destitute of the many necessities of life, to say nothing of its comforts. Olive looked up at Rosy's suggestion.

"Thank you for the thought. I suppose you will laugh at me," she said, "but I feel a 'moving,' as Aunt Harriet says, to do as you suggest."

"Indeed we will not laugh. I think it would be ever so nice for you to do it. There are pencil and paper on the table."

Olive wrote a few lines, slipped the note in the dress pocket, and folded it for the box.

"I might as well give up first as last," said Ruth Crosby; "everything goes against me. It took all the money I earned this summer to pay the doctor's bill, and now the cow has died. I shall have to give father the money I had saved for my dress to buy another cow, and I cannot come back to school without a dress. It does seem too hard. I meant to be something, and help the rest, but there isn't any use. I do want to come back so much this fall."

"I think you can, my dear," said Miss Preston. "You can pay your way in school, and I know where you can work for your board."

"But, Miss Preston, I haven't a dress to wear away from home," said Ruth.

"My friends in the East have sent me quite a box of clothing to give away; there are several things that will be just right for you, I am sure; a gray woolen dress for one, I think. Cannot you thank God and take courage now?"

"I don't know," said Ruth, sadly. "I am thoroughly discouraged; it seems to me that there is nothing but trouble and disappointment for me. I wonder how it would seem not to be so awfully poor."

The gray dress proved to be just right, but Ruth looked at it dubiously.

"I don't believe I shall ever dare to wear it," she said, "it is so nice."

It was not until she had reached home that she put her hand in the pocket and found Olive's note. It was only a few lines:

"Dear unknown friend," it read, "something impels me to send you my verse, as I call it. It has been such a source of help and comfort to me, perhaps it may be to you. This is it: 'He that spared not His own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall He not with him also freely give us all things?'"

"I have lost all my dearest ones. I am the only one left of my family, and oh, I am so lonely! but I just cling to that verse. It seemed hard and unjust to me at first, but since I learned these words I feel differently. If he loved me enough to let his Son die that cruel death for me, he surely would not deny me any earthly happiness, unless there was some wise, good reason. I know I can trust his love after that proof. Are you ever tempted to doubt it? Just cling to my verse if you are, won't you?"

I don't know how many times Ruth read that note, but as she read the hard look in her face softened. Was it possible that there was a wise, loving reason for all her hardships and disappointments? She had almost felt that her lot was harder than any one's else; but there was the girl left desolate. After all, poverty was by no means the greatest hardship; she remembered how she had thought in the summer's sickness that if God would only spare her dear mother to them she would never murmur again. And yet how bitterly she had complained about the death of the cow. Oh, she was ashamed to think of it.

"I am going to write to her," she said two or three weeks after, "and tell her how her verse has helped me, and thank her for sending it."

So it came to pass that the two girls so widely separated came to correspond, and Olive knew all about the poor crops and the loss of the cow, and how Ruth longed to educate Teddy, who was so bright. And then came books, papers, magazines to the lowly Western home, which were perfect treasures to the recipients.

And then finally came the request that Olive might be allowed to educate Teddy. "My brother wanted to be a minister if he had lived," wrote Olive; "may I not educate Teddy in his place?"

"I wish," Ruth wrote back, "that I could put a monument over that cow's last resting-place. If she had not died just when she did I should not have needed the gray dress, and so should not have received your dear little note. I think, no matter how long I live or what comes to me, I shall never doubt again like that, and every night of my life thank God for putting it into your heart to write those kind words to me." —American Messenger.

During the ten years in which the National Department of Scientific Temperance Instruction in Public Schools and Colleges has been in existence, legislation has been secured in thirty-five States and in all of the Territories, requiring scientific temperance instructions in all of the schools. The nine States which have no laws on the subject are New Jersey, South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas, Tennessee, Indiana, Kentucky and Texas.

“LEND A HAND.”

A very small boy was crossing Lafayette Square, the most beautiful of Washington's parks, one Sunday morning.

He wore the blue uniform of the District Messenger boys, and was lugging with both hands a basket containing some potted palms and roses, which doubtless were to decorate a rich dinner-table.

He was a pathetic figure, that little chap, and every one in the park was noticing him. It was such a warm morning for December, and the energy which he might have had if there had been snow on the ground became languor and listlessness. He at last set the big basket down and looked at it helplessly.

“Tired out, are you, my boy?” came a friendly voice from behind him, and the messenger glanced up at a distinguished looking man.

“Tired out?” the question was repeated. “Yes, sir.” “Have you to go far?” “Yes, sir.”

“Well, I am going your way, I can help you a bit,” and the gentleman picked up the basket and carried it for some distance, the little chap trudging at his side. As they walked along, the small boy grew confidential, told who he was and where he lived, and finally, in a burst of good comradeship, asked his companion where he lived.

“Just across the street from where I met you,” was the answer, as the gentleman slipped a coin in the boy's hand, “in that white house opposite Lafayette Park.”

For it was the occupant of the White House, the President of the United States, who was carrying the flower-boy's basket.—Wide Awake.

MARRIED LOVE.

(Chas. H. Spurgeon to his wife.)

Over the space that parts us, my wife,
I'll cast me a bridge of song;
Our hearts shall meet, O joy of my life,
On its arch unseen, but strong.

* * * * *
The wooer his new love's name may wear
Engraved on a precious stone;
But in my heart thine image I wear;
That heart has long been thine own.

The glowing colors on surface laid,
Wash out in a shower of rain;
Thou need'st not be of rivers afraid,
For my love is dyed ingrain.

And as every drop of Garda's lake
Is tinged with sapphire's blue,
So all the powers of my mind partake
Of joy at the thought of you.

The glittering dewdrops of dawning love
Exhale as the days grow old,
And fondness, taking the wings of a dove,
Is gone like a talo of old.

But mine for thee, from the chambers of joy,
With strength came forth as the sun;
Nor life nor death shall its force destroy;
Forever its course shall run.

All earth-born love must sleep in the grave,
To its native dust return;
What God hath kindled shall death outbrave,
And in heaven itself shall burn.

TEMPERANCE.

FROM THE WHISKY-SELLERS.

The Champion of Freedom and Right, “the national representative of the beer, wine and spirit trade,” and “official organ of the Illinois Liquor-Dealers' State Protective Association,” is the pretentious title of a Chicago weekly paper.

Speaking of the defeat of the anti-prohibition legislation in Iowa, the Champion says: “The Schmidt Local Option has been defeated in the Senate. Every Democrat voted for it—every Republican present against it. And yet it was a most reasonable bill; nay, it was even quite hard enough on those citizens of Iowa who intended to go into the retail liquor business.”

Under the head of “Our Foes are Wide Awake,” the Champion gives place to the following:

“The following call for the Illinois State Prohibition Convention, to be held at Springfield, May 31, 1892, has lately been published in every one of the dozen Prohibition papers in our State.

“(They support liberally over one dozen papers—the combined liquor dealers of Illinois give but a scanty, a measly support to two papers published in their interest). Thus it reads:

“ROCKFORD, Ill., Jan. 30.

“The State Convention of the Prohibition party of Illinois is hereby called to meet in the hall of the House of Representatives, in the city of Springfield, Tuesday, May 31, 1892, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

“The business of this convention will be to put in nomination suitable candidates for State officers and for congressmen at large, the election of delegates to the National Prohibition Convention to be held at St. Louis, Mo., June 29, 1892, and to present to the people of the State a declaration of our principles and our belief regarding such questions of political and economic importance as should be considered in the interest of every home in the commonwealth, as opposed to the licensed dram shops, and to all the other abuses of power and privilege with which the misrule of the older political parties has afflicted the people of this great State.

“The Illinois saloonkeepers, wholesale dealers and brewers are dancing over a volcano—they will not realize it until the eruption scatters them into smithereens.”

MORAL ACCOUNTABILITY OF THE MAN WHO DRINKS.

Public lectures on the strong drink question usually pass over the guilt of the drunkard. Everyone else having lot or part in the matter, except the principal party, is blamed. Whatever degree of guilt attaches to others—and we would not lightly pass over that of the man who is given to treating and urges drink upon other men—we believe that letting the culprit go scot free is a great damage to the cause of temperance. He is represented as a weakling falling into the toils of stronger and more designing characters. It is true he is a weakling, much the same as every other man is a weakling who indulges in any kind of vice and gets to loving it or always has loved it. Some call a thief, or one of a certain class of thieves who steal oftener than others and do not give up the habit, a kleptomaniac—a soft term invented to palliate the love of theft, a designation of distinction accorded not to the person who steals once but to one who keeps on stealing all he can. Some unfortunate constitutional trait, some inherited quality, some defect of brain, some accident of education, something of some sort other than a man's own fault, depravity or self-indulgence, is assigned as the reason for thieving or sensuality or inebriety. This is the gist of the dangerous moral philosophy which is becoming only too popular, and more especially so as regards the question of temperance. We have only to make a more extensive application of the principle to show its folly and falsity. If the rum-thirsty is innocent, why not the blood-thirsty? A theory that would so destroy the foundations of morality cannot avail to further sobriety. The glutton or the sensualist may use it in his favor if the sot may, and so may all evil livers. They sin because they want to sin, because they have the disposition or somebody tempts them. No; let the man who gets drunk and abuses his family be known as a reprobate, not merely because he abuses his family but because he gets drunk, and let his drunkenness be not excused. Have him know that he is held accountable, and there is something done towards his reformation by letting him see himself as others see him. At least he is not encouraged to drink again. But suppose he attends a lecture on temperance in which everybody is blamed but himself; the manufacturer, the dealer, the treator, the inanimate apple, tree and perhaps his poor wife for not making home so attractive that he could not leave it of an evening (and, perchance, how could she?) and he laughs in his sleeve and says, like the sot in Solomon's time, “I will seek it yet again.” No! no! “The soul that sinneth, it shall die.” The devil could invent no more ingenious device for increasing the number of his victims than to make opponents of a particular sin excuse the sinner for committing it. If poor John, who staggers home, were not so much pitied for his weakness, he might get a little more strength by being treated as a man of responsibility who has done a contemptible thing by darkening the lives of his children and burdening the heart and hands of his wife, bringing shame and sorrow where he should give joy. We do not say he invites no pity. Every sinner does. But that he is a sinner is a fact not to be denied. It is the main fact in the case. Let him know it. All the evil to himself and others comes out of it. Say to him, then, friend or wife, “How can you do this great wickedness and sin against God?” Conscience may be reached and the sinner ask himself, “How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?” Then there is hope.—Dr. F. W. Bartlett, in Temperance.

THE COST OF INTEMPERANCE.

The Register some time ago called attention to the increase in the manufacture of distilled liquors in the United States. The complete statistics of the internal revenue department make this increase clear, not only in the case of distilled liquors, but of tobacco. The total number of cigars made last year was 4,406,696,981, an increase of 387,002,784. The total number of cigarettes, 2,976,270,885, an increase of 486,409,280. The cigar bill of the nation—domestic cigars only—is, therefore, taking the average price as 7½ cents, $330,000,000. The cigarette bill will add at least $20,000,000 to this, making the total $350,000,000. To this must be added $600,000,000 for tobacco in its various other forms. The increase is figured at about $50,000,000. That does pretty well for one year. During the same time the increase in distilled liquors was 3,000,000 gallons and 3,000,000 barrels of beer brewed. The increase in the former is not so marked as the increase in beer. The tendency seems to be to the greater consumption of the lighter drinks. The total liquor bill was probably not far from $1,000,000,000. The increase for the year about $30,000,000. But this does not mean that all temperance work has been ineffective, for without efforts of that character the increase would have been much larger than it is. Surely these figures are appalling in their magnitude, and they should arouse every patriot and Christian worker to more earnest efforts in behalf of temperance.—Iowa State Register.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

It is proposed by Frances E. Willard to found, by subscription, a John B. Gough professorship of total abstinence in the new American university to be established in Washington.

Nine hundred millions of dollars—this sum spent each year for drink. Turn this money into legitimate channels of trade; let it buy food and clothes, and who can picture the prosperity that will follow?—Rural New Yorker.

A telegram from New York announces that every one of the 9,000 saloons in that city were closed last Sunday. The 6,000 in Chicago were “running wide open” on that day. And yet it is claimed that New York is a much-worse-governed city than Chicago.

The Philadelphia Grand Jury suggests to the judges on account of “the immense number of cases of illegal liquor selling acted on by this jury,” that “if a larger number of retail liquor licenses be granted, it might help to exterminate this growing evil.”

A speak-easy proprietor in Philadelphia called on Mrs. Fedoria Jacksel, across the way, and demanded forty-five cents for beer bought by her husband. He threatened to have her arrested if she did not pay. She consulted a magistrate, who advised her to swear out a warrant, which she did; and the speak-easy fool is now languishing in jail, in default of $800 bail.

Ever since 1889, Lucy McClure has been one of the most extensive manufacturers of illicit liquor in West Virginia. She is young, athletic, of good nerve and presence of mind, and a fine shot. These advantages, with the addition of a sorrel horse, have kept her out of the clutches of the law, until last week, when the marshals ran her down. She is rich, and has engaged eminent counsel to extricate her.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Great Shepherd.—vs. 1-3. This has ever been, by universal consent, the favorite psalm of the church. "The Lord is my Shepherd." As long as we are of the world we feel no need of a Shepherd. Neither do the wild goats of the mountain, which make their home among its dismal defiles and yawning precipices; but could we imagine one suddenly transformed into a timid, bleating sheep, we should have some idea of the change which passes over the self-sufficient sinner when he becomes a meek and lowly follower of Christ. He no longer desires his own way. He wants a shepherd—no less than the Lord himself; and with this comes the blessed sequel, "I shall not want." "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures." What can this mean, except that the divine Shepherd will supply every need, temporal or spiritual; as St. Paul so wonderfully expresses it when writing to the Philippians, "according to the riches of his glory in Christ Jesus." "He maketh me to lie down." This implies a fully satisfied condition. When we see a flock of sheep lying down we know they are not hungry. "He leadeth me beside the still waters." The Christian has this beautiful promise: that though worldly luxuries may be denied him and he may have to suffer the loss of all things for Christ, "his bread and his water shall be sure." Our churches abound with lean, starved members, who have leaped the bars which divide them from the world and are feeding among the goats; drinking from its broken cisterns, and refusing the still waters "that go softly." "He restoreth my soul." Sheep are apt to stray. The parable of the Ninety and Nine is the best commentary on this passage. How untiringly the Great Shepherd seeks his sheep over the dark mountains of sin, and how tenderly, when found, he "restores" it to its old place among the flock! There is another sense in which he restores our souls. The sheep need daily to be led to new pastures. So the Christian must have the virtue which "goes out of him" in the press of his daily life freshly supplied. "He leadeth me,"—not driveth. Macdonald says that if we refuse the Shepherd's gracious leading he will send his sheep-dogs, sickness or trouble, to drive us into the right way. But how much better to give ourselves up to his gracious leadings. "For his name's sake." This means that his honor and glory, as well as his joy, is involved in the safety of the meanest of his sheep. The combined powers of earth and hell can never pluck them out of his hand.

2. His protecting love.—v. 4. In taking his flock to fresh pastures, the shepherd sometimes has to lead them through dark and gloomy mountain-passes, shadowed by overhanging cliffs, and haunted by wild beasts. So the Good Shepherd must lead every sheep through the dark valley of death to reach the green fields of the heavenly Canaan. But even there "I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." What can the sheep want more? "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." The rod was for guiding and controlling the flock; the staff, to defend them against wild beasts. God's chastening rod, which will not allow his sheep to go astray, is as much a comfort to their hearts as the staff with which he drives off their foes. Why should we fear even the last enemy? His rod and his staff will not fail us if we are his true sheep; and the best sign that we are such lies in the fact that we indeed find his chastening rod a "comfort;" that we want his will done in us, and by us, and for us. The "valley of the shadow of death" may refer to sorrows and afflictions so great as to have in them the bitterness of death, as well as to the pains of dissolution itself. It is at these times that the enemy is apt to tempt most fiercely; but his loudest roar need not terrify the most timid sheep. How "comforting" the sight of the Shepherd's strong "staff!" We sometimes shrink from the sterner side of God's character;—his wrath against sin, and his terrible judgments on evil men. But the arm that folds the lambs in his bosom must be strong to tear in pieces the bear and the lion, which seek to devour them or he is not a true shepherd.

3. His preserving power.—vs. 5, 6. "Thou preparest a table before me." How abundantly has this been fulfilled in the life of many a sainted worker for Christ! "In the midst of mine enemies." They cannot "boycott" or "starve us out," if we are true to God. "Thou anointest my head with oil." However low we may be brought, we are heirs of a crown and a kingdom. Let us not forget our holy anointing. Our "cup" will "run over," no matter what may be our worldly circumstances; and this will not be the experience of a single day, but of all the days, until we enter God's heavenly household, to go no more out forever.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The Broadway Tabernacle Congregational church, New York City, reports a membership of 1,189, of whom thirty-nine came in within the year. Receipts from pew rents were $32,990; benevolent contributions for the year, $41,882.

FRIENDS.

—New York Friends are making a canvass to raise money to aid the Russian sufferers. Timothy Nicholson has forwarded $1,972.50, of which $782 was received from the people of Richmond and vicinity and $1,172.50 from meetings and individuals away from there. The London Friend of March 25 reports £31,350 as having been raised through the Friends' channel.

—Nathan T. and Esther G. Frame have been laboring in evangelistic work the past winter in Southern Indiana. They recently closed a meeting of five weeks at Seymour. Newspaper reports from that city say that hundreds of Christians have been revived and blessed, and about one hundred and fifty have professed conversion. One hundred have joined the different churches.

GENERAL MISSIONARY.

—The missionary societies in Europe which have the largest number of communicants in their mission churches, are: The London Missionary Society, 67,797; the Church Mission Society, 48,509; the Wesleyan Missionary Society, 50,000; the Baptist Missionary Society, 40,078; the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, 35,637; the Moravians, 31,591, and the Gossners Mission, 30,027. The Women's Missionary Societies of the world raised $1,785,001 for foreign missions last year. This is about one-sixth of the whole amount raised for foreign missions. Of this amount the Presbyterian women of America take the lead with $336,244 to their credit; the Methodist women of America raised $306,299; the Congregationalist, $157,364; the Baptist, $153,858; and the women of the Church of England, $129,085.

INDIA MISSIONS.

—The Independent gives the following summary of mission work in India: Churches and societies supporting missions, 37; stations, 3,777; missionaries, 1,727, of whom 924 are male and 803 female; native preachers, 2,961; congregations, 1,605; communicants, 249,492; schools, 6,993; pupils, 294,167; Sabbath-school scholars, 124,603. The late census of India shows a population of 288,159,672. Of these, 2,284,191 are set down as Christians—one-hundredth part of the whole. The increase of Christians during the past ten years has been 22.6 per cent, or more than double any other class.

ITALY AND THE BIBLE.

—It is a short time since the Bible was a forbidden book in Italy. It was not safe for one to be found with a copy of it in the city on the seven hills. But now there are many Protestant churches in Rome, and all through the country the Bible is freely sold. The report for the past year shows the sale of 7,509 full copies, 16,827 copies of the New Testament, and 143,212 copies of portions of the Scriptures, an increase of 13,778 over 1890. These sales are not to foreigners or evangelicals, but for the most part to the Roman Catholic populations of the remote provinces, where the voice of the evangelical preacher may not be heard for a long time. Dr. A. Meille says, "I feel justified in saying that no book is so largely bought, or finds so many readers in Italy at present, as the Word of God."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Chaplain McCabe is said to have made forty thousand dollars out of his lecture on Libby Prison, all of which he has given to the Methodist church or to charity.

—A remarkable revival has occurred at Calvary church, New York, of which J. R. Day, D. D., is pastor. Two hundred people united with the church upon two consecutive Sundays, including many heads of families, business men and the brightest young people of the community. Bishop Foss, who visited the church during the refreshing, said it was an "old-fashioned Methodist revival," in which the mourners' bench and altar were magnified, and where seekers remained until "God, and not men, informed them that they were converted."

MULLER'S GOOD WORK.

—George Muller has in his care seventy-five schools, of which thirteen are in Spain, two in Italy, two in the East Indies, and seven in the English colonies. In May of last year these schools contained 6,250 pupils, and the total number since the first one was opened in 1834 was 112,937. The expenses have been $489,000. Mr. Muller planned to go out as a missionary to India, but insuperable obstacles prevented. But remaining at home he has been able to raise and distribute for missions $1,116,800.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—There are but two German seminaries in the Presbyterian church in America, one at Bloomfield, N. J., with fifty pupils, and one at Dubuque with thirty. The church committee on German seminaries met at Dubuque, Iowa, last week. Propositions were considered to consolidate the seminaries at Bloomfield or at Chicago or at St. Louis, but the committee decided to recommend to the coming General Assembly at Portland, Oregon, an endowment of $50,000 to $100,000 for the Dubuque Seminary, which is an excellent property and has an exceptionally good faculty, headed by the Rev. Dr. Adam McClelland, the blind scholar from Brooklyn, N. Y., and Professor Von Der Lippe from St. Louis.

—The Presbyterian church (North) is in trouble over the falling off of the collections for foreign missions. They have received $30,000 less this year up to February 1 than last year, and that, with an outlay of $50,000 more than last year, makes a heavy deficit.

—The Southern Presbyterian Board has established a mission in Korea, and opened a theological seminary in Capinas, Brazil.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—A distinguished prelate of the Protestant Episcopal church passed away in the death of Rt. Rev. Bishop Gregory T. Bedell, the third to fill that office in the State of Ohio. Bishop Bedell was a native of Hudson, N. Y. He was ordained to the ministry in 1841, and for several years officiated as rector of the Church of the Ascension, West Chester, Pa. In 1850 he resigned his charge and became Assistant Bishop of Ohio. Bishop McIlvaine died in March, 1873, when Bishop Bedell became his successor. Bishop Bedell was thoroughly evangelical in doctrinal matters, and was a man of broad sympathies. He was beloved by men of all denominations, and will be widely missed.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Associate Reformed church of the South is paving the way for union with the United Presbyterian church. The organ question has been decided by the Synod on the side of the instrumental music advocates.

—The church of Christ in Japan submits its Confession of Faith to the Alliance of Reformed Churches to meet in Toronto, Can., Sept. 21, and appoints delegates seeking admittance to the Alliance.

—Rev. Dr. T. Sproull, editor of the (monthly) Reformed Presbyterian and Covenant, Pittsburgh, Pa., died Monday morning, March 21, in the 89th year of his age. His death was peaceful. About 2 A. M. Sabbath morning he became unconscious, and, except a few occasional intervals, remained so until death, passing away without a struggle.

—Rev. T. Sproull, D. D., LL. D., one of the most widely known of Synod's ministers, died, of general debility, on the 21st of March, in the 89th year of his age. He was long pastor of the Allegheny Congregation, afterward divided into Allegheny, Pittsburgh, and Central Allegheny Congregations, and for almost half a century was connected with the Theological Seminary. He was editor of the Reformed Presbyterian, later the Reformed Presbyterian and Covenant. He lived to see three of his sons successful pastors—Rev. T. A. Sproull, deceased, Rev. J. W. Sproull, of Allegheny, and Rev. R. D. Sproull, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

—Father Redding, a German priest at New York, has just renounced the Roman Catholic church. He says, "I had my doubts about the faith for a long time. A priest does not readily renounce his position. It means a great deal to him—a good living, little work and few cares. I had heard of Father O'Connor, and after visiting and talking with him I determined upon taking the step I have."

Y. M. C. A.

—The following is from the recently issued report of Minnesota State work. Fifteen associations have thirty-three Bible and workers' training classes preparing 319 young men for definite, active Christian work. Of these classes, eighteen are in colleges and two are juniors.

—Plans for the students' special schools are being laid on broader lines and with greater attractiveness than in any previous year. At Northfield, Mr. Moody's home, the World Students' Conference, the mother of such conferences on three continents, will gather in early July. At Geneva Lake, Wis., the Western Students' Conference, in the beginning of the summer, will be this year still better and stronger. A Southern Students' Conference will be held at Knoxville, Tenn., on the beautiful campus of the State University, which looks down from a hill-top on the Tennessee river. This Southern Conference has been made possible by the college work throughout the South.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tire all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced."

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE GERANIUM SAVED HER LIFE

The father and brother of a dear little woman died of consumption, and she firmly believed that she would soon follow them with the same dread disease. She had a friend who believed the invalid had inherited her mother's stronger constitution, and if she could only be aroused, and the idea banished from her mind that she would soon die, she might be a well woman. Arguments were in vain; and as the friend was going away for years, she gave a geranium to the dear little woman, with the request that she would take care of it, and also that she would work out in the garden through the spring two hours a day. "I might as well do it," said the invalid, "for I shall not live but a few weeks, or months, at the longest." Very feeble were her first attempts at gardening, and she would often say on coming in, "I shall die now anyway." But the next day found her out again. The geranium was cared for, and gradually other plants were added. She became very much interested in gardening, and her mind was taken up in reading the many good floral magazines and in caring for her flowers. In the winter a bay-window was full of blooming plants. It is now three years since she began this new cure, and it has worked wonders. She is a healthy, happy woman now, and says that "women stay in the house too much, are afraid of their clothes, and the tight lacing makes a short breath, and then they say, 'we are not strong enough to work in the garden.'" Shut up the pill boxes and throw away the bottles. Breathe the fresh air, and take your medicine at the end of a light hoe handle, and see if you don't save doctor's bills.—Vick's Magazine.

PERSONAL CARE IN THOSE LIABLE TO CONSUMPTION.

A perfect familiarity with the daily life of our patient must be our first consideration. Our surroundings make us what we are, physically as well as morally and socially. Man is like the chameleon; every part of his nature partakes and is made up of his surroundings. "Show me your friends, and I will tell you what you are." This is as true of the physical as of the moral man.

If our treatment could begin with the birth of the patient, in 99 per cent we should have no tuberculosis to treat, no matter about the family history.

Fear is a powerful provocate to physical degeneration. Take the condition of the poor. It is not generally their immediate wants which cause the catastrophe. People who are habitually poor are not necessarily feeble, but those who have lost their wealth are the sufferers. Fear as to the immediate future for themselves or others; with this instinctive nervous shock the body shrinks, all the organic functions are disturbed. Especially is this true of the respiratory functions. Fear of any sort has a depressing effect upon the respiratory center. This is as true of animals as of men. Anxiety is but a species of fear.

It is futile for us to shut our eyes to the reflex action which the mind throws upon the physiological powers. We see proofs of it every instant, yet dispute it, and call it unscientific. What are we striving to accomplish in our treatment of disease? Is it not our aim to coax, by all manner of means known to us, this vital principle called life to tarry yet a little longer in its diseased incase-ment? Then give its presence a just recognition by attributing to it a capability both creative and destructive, a reality though intangible.—Dr. A. F. Pattee.

SANDWICHES.

Grate a pound and a half of cold boiled ham in a bowl with a teaspoonful of pickle chopped fine, a teaspoonful of mustard and a little black pepper; beat six ounces of butter to a cream, and add the ham. Have thin slices of bread and butter, and spread the mixture on one side of each slice.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret tradesunion of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords etc. 15cts each.

It's house-cleaning time. Every one tired and cross; every thing out of place and wrong end foremost. No time to fool away in cooking; no fire, probably; no appetite, perhaps; no comfort, certainly.

No Pearline—that's the cause of it. A little Pearline, when you're cleaning house, makes the whole thing smooth and easy. With anything about the house that isn't hurt by water, you can save time and hard work by using Pearline. You won't have to use that rub, rub, rub, in getting the dirt off; that saves other things—your paint, for instance.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 318 JAMES PYLE, New York.

FARM NOTES.

[From the Farm, Field and Stockman.]

ASPARAGUS ON THE FARM.

There is no more wholesome or delicious vegetable than asparagus. Coming as it does, at the season of the year when fresh vegetables are scarce and when we particularly need something "green," nearly everyone likes it; yet very few farmers take the trouble to raise it. Perhaps one reason is, the published directions for making an asparagus bed have been too elaborate; usually advising trenching and heavy mulching.

Asparagus will grow if planted in a trench and covered to the depth of ten or twelve inches. Indeed, it will stand almost any amount of abuse and neglect. If planted in rows like potatoes and given the same culture, it will produce more and better food to the square rod than anything else raised on the farm.

Plants may be obtained from nurseries for a trifle, but we began by sowing the seed in drills, giving clean culture during the summer. The next spring the plants were plowed out and transplanted in rows (furrowed out with a plow) four feet apart, plants two feet apart in the row. The following spring we began to use asparagus, and ever since have had an abundance for ourselves and neighbors, from the time vegetation starts in the spring, till green peas are plenty. We planted one row in a trench, but it has never produced so much asparagus, and is much later.

During the growing season asparagus should be well cultivated, the same as corn or potatoes. After the tops cover the ground it will need no more attention till the next spring. In a dry climate the tops should not be removed before spring, as they are needed to catch snow during the winter. It will pay to give the bed a load or two of manure in the fall or winter, as the stalks will be much larger.

LET US HAVE A GOOD GARDEN.

Let us wake to the importance of having the best garden not only of vegetables but also prepared for a fruit garden. Remember that our first parents made their start in life in an excellent "garden" of fruit.

If the farmer who has no garden or but an excuse for one will now think and plan for a good garden "spot," one-half of the work will already be done, for "where there is a will there is a way," and a way booked out, the rest is easy.

Make the garden spot much longer than wide for the convenience of horse culture in rows the long way.

First make it as rich as possible by manuring with well-rotted manure. Plow this under, making narrow furrows so as to break up and fine the soil and mix in the manure with the soil as much as possible. When plowed, harrow until fine, and this means to give about six times as much harrowing as is generally done on the fields of grain. Obtain the best seeds of all the different leading vegetables, and include the fruits, currants, strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, grapes, plums, gooseberries, dwarf cherry, pears and a few dwarf apples.

The list of vegetables and fruits may be as extensive and varied as will suit the various conditions of climate.

Let there be an abundant supply and always some to spare, to be given to a relative, a friend, or an acquaintance in the city, town or village; for it is a most lamentable fact that the little boys and girls in the towns and cities are starved for fruit; health is impaired for the want of good, ripe fruit in abundance. Drive through one of the towns with a wagon-load of apples and hear the little, pitiful, begging bairn crying out: "Mister, gim'me an apple—please, Mister, won't you gim'me an apple?"

If it is "more blessed to give than to receive"—and it is—how blessed would the farmers be if they would provide an abundance of the "precious fruits" that a kind and bountiful Creator has provided.

Particular directions as to how this work is to be done are not so much needed as a disposition to do the work on the part of the farmers. The first thing to do is to determine that the garden—and a good one—must be a thing of reality, and, as has been said, the work will be half done.

TIMELY HINTS.

Keep the cattle off the plowed land.

Plenty of water and grain should be furnished to ewes in milk.

Dampness is bad for young chicks. See that they have a dry place.

The average price of sheep in the United States is higher than any time since 1876.

Eggs properly packed are not injured for hatching purposes by being shipped long distances.

Keep an eye on all in-coming animals—the swine, the sheep, the cow, the mare. Don't be "too busy" to do this.

The old coops used last year, will be sweeter if you give them a good coat of whitewash inside, before using them this season.

Notwithstanding the McKinley bill the United States imported 139,317,571 pounds of wool in 1891 against 108,680,672 pounds in 1890.

Look out that the brood mare does not strain herself making the turns at the lower end of the field while working on the seeder. Many a colt is lost while putting in oats.

Even after the ewes go out on grass or rye there will be occasional cold, windy days when they must be watched closely or lambs will be dropped and chilled before they are discovered.

Dogs kill $4,000,000 worth of sheep annually in the United States, nearly four per cent of the total value of our sheep. In some States sheep-breeding is on the decline for no other reason.

If your barn-yard is low and the wading good, draw in an old stack bottom or the refuse hay from the field where the stack stood. It will save animal strength, prevent to a degree dirty milk, and make manure.

If the weather is not settled, do not put too many eggs under biddy and expect a full hatch. Better have a few less eggs and have them all hatch, than to have a full "setting" and have half of them get so chilled as not to hatch.

If you are Bilious, take BEECHAM'S PILLS.

AYER'S Sarsaparilla CURES OTHERS WILL CURE YOU

Are you troubled with loss of appetite, nausea, biliousness, sick headache, offensive breath, or a bitter taste in the mouth? Are you fretty and nervous? Do you have drowsy, dizzy sensations, a feeling of being all tired out, continued languor, and of general discomfort? These are symptoms of impure blood, usually manifested in and for which AYER'S Sarsaparilla is the Best, the Superior Medicine. Close confinement during the winter, in poorly ventilated, over-heated rooms, work-shops, and offices, excess of animal food, and lack of out-of-door exercise have poisoned your blood. It is this which causes Loss of Strength, Lassitude, Sleepiness, and Dyspepsia; Pimples, Boils, Blotches, Sties on the Eyelids, Sore Eyes, and other varieties of skin diseases. In all such cases, take AYER'S Sarsaparilla. It will healthfully stimulate all the great organs of the body to expel the poisons which clog your blood; it will quicken your appetite, and regulate your liver and bowels; it will overcome that tired feeling, free your skin from eruptive diseases, make your step lighter, your eyes brighter, your head clearer, and your arm and body stronger. It will prepare you for the warm summer weather better than any other remedy can. For Scrofula, Catarrh, Rheumatism, or for any other disease originating in impure blood, take AYER'S Sarsaparilla. BE SURE to get AYER'S.

Royal Baking Powder has no Competitors.

In millions of homes throughout the United States and around the world the fact has been recognized by appreciative housekeepers, that there is no other leavening compound that can or does compete, on the basis of purity and strength, with the Royal Baking Powder.

Other compounds intended for baking purposes, made without science, of poor materials, at a low cost, depend for their restricted sale upon the patronage of those who will use a greatly inferior article if procurable at a little lower price, or upon the recommendation of dealers whose self-interest urges the sale of goods yielding them the largest profits.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER ONLY sells and deserves to sell upon its merits alone.

The Human Family

And Its Greatest Need.

The human race as a whole is in great need of a good blood-purifier. There are about 2,400 disorders incident to the human frame, the large majority arising from the impure or poisonous condition of the blood. Scrofula, a disease as old as antiquity, has been inherited by generation after generation, and manifests itself today virulent and virtually unchanged from its ancient forms. If we are so fortunate as to escape hereditary impurities in the blood, we may contract disease from the germs in the air we breathe, the food we eat, or the water we drink.

In Hood's Sarsaparilla is found the medicine for all blood diseases. Its remarkable cures are its loudest praise. No remedy has ever had so marked success, no medicine was ever accorded so great public patronage. Scrofula in its severest forms has yielded to its potent powers, blood poisoning and salt rheum and many other diseases have been permanently cured by it. It is unquestionably the best Spring Medicine and blood purifier. Be sure to get Hood's.

W. B. Stoddard, the Washington agent, is now domiciled at No. 228 West Thirty-sixth street, New York City, where, until May 1st, those who desire to engage his services as a lecturer in that vicinity may address him.

Prominently on the eighth page of this issue is printed the official call of the Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association, which is to be held (D. V.) in the Carpenter Building, 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, on the 11th day of May, beginning at 10:30 A. M. All members of the Association, who desire to hear the reports of the various officers and learn what progress has been made in the reform work during the past twelve months, and its prospects for the coming year, together with those who wish it Godspeed, are invited to attend.

Elsewhere in this number of the Cynosure will be found additional good words from Joseph Cook on the evils of disloyal secret oaths, which have not previously been printed in these columns. Also, in another article, is given the substance of his remarks to a reporter on the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday. On both of these topics Mr. Cook speaks wisely and convincingly. In "Our Washington Letter," also, on another page, will be found Rev. Herrick Johnson's eight reasons why the gates of the Columbian Exposition should be tightly shut on Sunday. When it comes to discussion in the right spirit and by the best methods, the friends of Sunday observance have by far the best of the argument.

Rev. B. T. Roberts, Senior Superintendent of the Free Methodist church, writes to the Free Methodist that if the Columbian World's Fair decides to open its gates to Sunday desecration, as it has already consented to admit liquor selling within its domain, every Christian church should refuse all co-operation with the Fair as an agency to destroy Christianity, and every member of every church that bears the Christian name should stay away from the Fair. This is strong language, but is it too strong? Bro. Roberts always means whatever he writes, and there is no shadow of compromise where Gospel truth is involved.

The annual meeting of Elgin (Congregational) association was held last week at Woodstock, Ill. The most important question involved in discussion was a matter of ecclesiastical standing. A member of the association, a Freemason of several degrees, had been accused at the previous meeting with some misconduct, and a committee of two ministers (both Freemasons) and a lay brother had been appointed to investigate the charges against him. Between the two meetings the alleged faulty clergyman was called to the pastorate of a Presbyterian church. He then applied to the registrar of the Elgin Association (a Mason and a member of the investigating committee) for a letter of dismissal to the presbytery of the church to which he had been invited. The registrar (at the request of his brother Masons, but contrary to the rules of the association,) issued the letter as requested, and the clergyman presented it to the presbytery; but for certain reasons the latter not only declined to accept his services as pastor, but also forwarded a copy of their letter of declination to the Elgin Association, with explanations.

At the recent meeting, when the report of the registrar was made, the granting of the letter to this brother was disapproved. The registrar then read the report of the committee of investigation, which stated, in substance, that there were no charges of wrong-doing that had not been satisfactorily explained, and that there was no occasion for further inquiry on the part of the association. To this report were appended the names of the three members of the committee. It afterwards transpired that the name of the member of the committee who was not connected with a Masonic lodge had been withdrawn from the report, he stating in writing to the registrar that he did not feel free to endorse the report made, yet his name was read as agreeing thereto. It was also reported that a communication had been sent from the presbytery to the association which was in the hands of the registrar. If there was such a letter it was not presented to the Elgin Association.

The case was finally deferred for further consideration at a special meeting to be hereafter called. It is much to be regretted that the two members of the committee signing this report were both of them Freemasons. Of course it cannot be affirmed that they signed the report because they were Masons. God alone is judge of the hearts of men; but knowing the obligations which Masons assume toward one another it would have avoided seeming Masonic influence had the report been presented without the name of the person who had withdrawn from it, and had the documents sent to the association by the presbytery been presented. We do not, of course, affirm that the Masonic brethren acted in this case as Masons rather than as Christians.

As intimated above, we do not assume the office of God, and seek to judge the intentions of our fellow-men, but this is only another illustration of the fact that those who are in relation to persons who are, and those who are not connected with secret associations are in a difficult position. It is but one other proof that ministers and members in the church of Jesus Christ should be free from all associations which are not open in their character. If secret societies do not bias judgment and prevent a faithful performance of Christian duty, the very fact that they are secret naturally awakens a suspicion lest they should do so and all Christian men should abstain from such association. We do not, of course, intimate that this is the only reason why Christian men should not be members of the Masonic order; there are many others, but this alone is sufficient.

The New York Presbytery, which, last fall, voted to dismiss the charges of heresy against Dr. Briggs, quite recently elected delegates to the Presbyterian General Assembly, all of whom are said to be in opposition to the Doctor and his dogmas. It is understood that he is to be "brought to book" by that august body, to answer charges to be preferred against him by the New York Presbytery, with the further understanding that he will be tried upon them, not in New York, but at Portland, Oregon, where he has no friends from home to support him. There is apparent injustice, as well as absurdity, in this movement.

The Chicago City Council, with its customary effrontery, instructed the Mayor to close all the offices of the City Hall on the 17th of March (St. Patrick's Day), and to declare it a holiday; and the Mayor obeyed. At the Baptist Ministers' meeting on the 4th instant, Dr. P. S. Henson presented a resolution, that "this conference of Baptist ministers imperatively demand that if the precedent thus established by our City Council is to be followed in the future, that St. Andrew shall have a memorial day in deference to the feelings of our Scottish fellow citizens, and that William Penn shall be similarly honored in deference to the Quakers, and Roger Williams in deference to the Baptists, and John Wesley in deference to the Methodists, and John Calvin in deference to the Lutherans; and if there be any other race or religion that can claim enough voters to be an influential factor at the polls, then the representatives of such race or religion shall each have the privilege of naming any patron saint or reverend ecclesiast in whose honor the city offices shall be closed once a year—if there be days enough in the calendar to serve the purpose." The satire of this resolution is as timely as it is pointed and deserved.

ANOTHER MASON'S EXPERIENCE.

HOW HE WAS INDUCED TO JOIN THE LODGE.—WHY HE DID NOT LIKE THE SYSTEM.—HIS RENUNCIATION, TRIAL AND EXPULSION FROM THE ORDER.

BY S. F. PROCTOR, ELLSWORTH, ARK.

GETTING INTO THE LODGE.

In April, 1869, when a young man, I left my home and parents in North Alabama and came to Ellsworth, Ark., making my home with my brother-in-law. He and nearly all with whom I was associated were Masons. Some of them were leading men in society. All of them held Masonry to be one among the best institutions in our country. I was completely taken in by this influence and sent in my petition (as advised) when I had been here eleven months, as it had to lay over one month, and they could not act upon it until I had been here twelve months.

The committee reported favorably; the ballot was clear, and I was declared elected. Soon I was hoodwinked, cabletowed, and led into darkness, to get Masonic light, by their furnishing me Capt. Wm. Morgan's Exposition to study the lectures in. They were well-pleased with my proficiency; and within two months I took [what they called] the "sublime degree of Master Mason." Both points of the compass were elevated above the square to teach me that I had received all the Masonic light that could be bestowed in this lodge. Suffice it to say that I walked very zealously for more than thirteen years—as the poet truly said,

In 1883, when full salvation flowed into my soul like a river, sweeping away the scales from my eyes, together with Masonic darkness, I could truly say, “The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth.”

I was thoroughly convinced that this was not the place for a Christian, they having a form of worship, but excluding the name of Christ. “He that denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father; (but) he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also.” We, as Christians, are commanded to “have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. And I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord’s table, and of the table of devils. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part he that believeth with an infidel?” Jesus said: “Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light;” and “Be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. For ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father.” Again, we are commanded: “Neither be ye called masters, for one is your Master, even Christ.” Masonry does not stop at saying Master, but says, “Most Worshipful Master.” Now, almost any common school-boy would understand the term Most Worshipful to be worshiped above all things, God not excepted. It does seem that the above Scriptures are sufficient to make any candid Christian reject this Masonic yoke of bondage, and have no fellowship with this work of darkness, and reject high titles; also, the worshiping of men.

Masonry regards not the words of Jesus: “Swear not at all,” etc. Its oaths are profane, the taking of the name of God in vain. The penalties of these oaths are barbarous, and even brutal. I pronounce Masonry as being not only horrible, but an abomination in the sight of God, a curse to Christianity, and a burlesque on society, for it sympathizes with whoremongers and drunkards and murderers, in helping them to evade the laws of justice. My Master said: “And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free; if the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.” I can say in the language of the poet:

“Now I am from hoodwinks free;
Every cable now is riven;
Jesus makes me free indeed,
Just as free as heaven.”

I find, upon investigation, that Masonic lodges have neither moral nor legal authority for the administration of their oaths, and therefore those which they do administer are invalid, and without binding force, under the circumstances in which they are administered; as I shall show, there is a misrepresentation on the part of the lodge. As each candidate is led around in darkness [being hoodwinked], and caused to stop at the altar, when the Master approaches the candidate and says: “Before proceeding farther, it becomes necessary that you take upon yourself a solemn oath, pertaining to the secrets of this degree, which I assure you, as Master of this lodge, shall not conflict with your religious or political sentiments, be they what they may. With this assurance, if you desire to proceed you can manifest it by kneeling at the altar.” This is done in each of the first three degrees in Masonry. When I became thoroughly convinced of the ungodliness of this institution, in the year 1883, I found that these horrible obligations (with the foolish ceremonies) did seriously conflict with my religious belief.

I will speak of one point in the ceremonies in the second section. In taking the Master’s degree, in the mock death, mock burial and the mock resurrection, they not only teach a man to tell a lie, but to practice it. The Master says to the Junior Warden, “See if the body can be raised by the grip of an Entered Apprentice Mason.” The Junior Warden approaches the candidate (in the place representing the grave), and, taking him by the hand, lets his own hand slip off; then reports that “the body cannot be raised by the grip of an Entered Apprentice Mason; the skin cleaves from the flesh.” The Senior Warden is ordered to see if the body can be raised by the grip of a Fellow Craft Mason. After trying this grip in the same manner, he reports that “the body cannot be raised by the grip of a Fellow Craft Mason; the flesh cleaves from the bone.” Now, we who have gone through the ceremonies know that there was neither skin nor flesh broken; therefore, you see they do both tell a lie and practice it. Then comes the mock prayer, with no Christ in it. Remember that there is no other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved; only in and through the name of Jesus. “He that denieth the Son the same hath not the Father,” etc.

HOW THE LODGE PROCEEDED WITH ME FOR MORE THAN EIGHT YEARS.

At the time I made up my mind to quietly retire from the order by demit (not being familiar with Masonic law), I was Secretary of the lodge. I attended the annual election of officers in December, 1883, and on the first ballot for Master I was one vote behind J. W. Foster, who was declared elected Master for the ensuing Masonic year. I then arose and requested that they would not vote for me for any office in the lodge. The Master said (in rather harsh language): “Vote for whom you please.” On the first ballot for Senior Warden, nearly all voted for me, and the Master declared me elected Senior Warden for the ensuing year.

I arose and said: “Brethren, you have made a mistake; I meant just what I said. Now, the best thing you can do for this lodge will be to elect another man, for I cannot serve.” The Master said: “Why can’t you serve?” I said: “Because I intend to call for a demit as soon as I turn over the Secretary’s books.” He never said: “Why are you going to call for a demit,” but began searching Masonic law. Some one present read from the proceedings of the Grand Lodge of 1882, page 169, sec. 165: “Question—Can a demit be granted to a brother upon his paying up all dues, without his intending to move out of the jurisdiction or connect himself with some other lodge? Answer—No,” (which was short and emphatic).

I rose again, and said: “Brethren, there is one thing I can do. I can stop attending this lodge, stop paying dues, and go overboard,” waving my hand, and sitting down.

After a few moments of profound silence, they proceeded to elect another Senior Warden in my place. I arose and asked if I could be excused from voting in this election. The Master said (very abruptly): “You are excusable, sir!” I sat as a spectator during the rest of the time in that meeting. I have often wished that I had recorded my reasons for withdrawing from the order upon the Secretary’s book before I turned it over.

Shortly after this, one of the members plucked me away from the crowd (at a gathering), and said: “Bro. Proctor, I was awfully surprised at your withdrawal from our order; you have always been punctual at our meetings, and I think you had better reconsider this matter and go along with us.” I replied: “I reconsider a matter that I have thoroughly considered? I don’t regret the step I have taken; I generally look before I leap.” He then said (angrily), “I’ll tell you what we will have to do with you; we’ll have to expel you and advertise you.” I said: “Under what plea will you get up charges against me?” He said: “You say that Masonry is not right.” I asked, “When did I say so?” He said: “You say it by your actions.” I said: “Very well, then, just carry out your Masonic law.”

Soon after this, while meditating upon this Masonic law, this question presented itself to my mind: “Can a man retire from the order honorably and live?”

I sent the question to the lodge for an answer. They refused to answer it, but referred me to J. J. Sumpter, at Hot Springs, who was Grand Master at that time. I wrote to him a short letter, and asked him the same question. He wrote to the lodge to know my reasons for retiring from the order. They requested me to give him my reasons. I then wrote to him a long letter, giving him the Scripture upon which my reasons were based. At the close, I said: “If the above reasons are not sufficient to acquit me honorably from this institution, I have one more request to make; that is, when you expel me and advertise me you will please publish my reasons also.” He wrote another letter and sent it to the lodge to be handed to me; but never answered my question nor gave any reason why; but at the close of his letter he said: “I send this letter to your Secretary, and recommend that if you are still desirous of withdrawing from the order, to permit you to do so; but if you do, I think you will make a mistake.” The lodge refused to comply with this request from headquarters. Some time after this, I met the Master of Pleasant Mound Lodge, when he said to me: “I suppose that H. M. (who was an evangelist) has fallen from grace; so you had better come back and go along with us.” I remarked that if my faith did not reach any farther than that preacher’s I would be in a desperate condition; that my faith was not pinned to that preacher’s coat-sleeve. He then promised me, when he went to the Grand Lodge (which was to meet soon), that he would urge a disposal of my case; but he failed to do so.

MEMBERS OF LODGES AS CHURCH MEMBERS.

[From the Pittsburgh, Pa., Press.]

A FEW QUESTIONS TO SOLVE.

To the Editor of the Press:

I desire to submit a few questions for solution to those who oppose fellowshiping oath-bound members of secret organizations.

What evidence have we in the life and teachings of Jesus that he would have denied secret society men church privileges?

Is it possible that Jesus who gave his life for men would deny them the means of grace?

Would not the church in fellowshiping even her avowed enemies display the unconditional love of the Master to greater advantage than by erecting denominational fences against the “unholy?”

How is he who is denied church privileges to “break off” his “sins by righteousness,” when churchism declares that the article is not obtainable outside the fold?

Judas belonged to a secret organization than which none more hellish ever existed, whose single purpose was the murder of the Christ, and yet that same Christ kept him in the communion till he left of his own accord.

Is not the church intended for a hospital rather than a heaven?

When we, in our zeal for purity, turn out of our communion or prevent from entering those whom we judge unworthy, are we always sure that we do not “break the bruised reed” and quench the smoking flax?

Is it not plain that the centripetal force of the Jewish church would not be at all adapted to this age, and that any ecclesiastical exclusiveness in the church of to day is evidence of the lingering Phariseism of the first century?

The door into the kingdom of the saved or the church mystical may be as narrow as “the eye of a needle,” but the door into the kingdom of grace or the church physical is as wide as the love of Him who established it.

Is it not founding a dangerous inconsistency when we combine to oppose one specific evil, to the apparently willful neglect of numberless others of equal, if not greater, magnitude?

Historically considered, have the denominations who were the most rigid disciplinarians been the most aggressive in evangelization work?

Words are the signs of ideas, and all without distinction are accorded the privilege of hearing the Gospel story as expressed in words; bread and wine are sacramental signs of ideas, or the Gospel in different form. By what right then do we allow the one and withhold the other?

Jos. McKee.

ANSWER TO JOSEPH M’KEE’S QUESTIONS.

To the Editor of the Press:

In the Press for Wednesday, March 23, Mr. Joseph McKee propounds a series of questions to opponents of the secret lodge system. He wishes to know first of all what evidence we have that Jesus Christ would deny church privileges to secret society men, and, second, if it is possible that he would deny the means of grace to men for whom he gave his life. Let us consider these two together. The means of grace are twofold; first, the means designed for conversion, and, second, those designed for strengthening and perfecting the converts. To the first class belong the reading and hearing of the Word, prayer, etc. Christ denies no man these means; neither do the antagonists of secret societies, but are very anxious that all men shall use them. To the second class belongs a religious profession, the Lord's Supper, etc. That Christ would deny these to the members of secret societies is proved, first, by his own example. He declares, "I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing." John 18: 20. Second, by the teaching of his apostles. Paul says, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame to even speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Eph. 5: 11, 12. We know the process of initiation in most secret orders, and Paul's words apply to them with wonderful exactness.

Our third proof is drawn from the origin and nature of secret societies. Masons boast of the antiquity of their order. We deny their claim, but admit that it belongs to an old family. Ancient heathen religions all had their secret rites, and there is a striking similarity between Baal worship and certain Masonic rites. Nearly every secret order has a religious ritual, but the religion of the lodge is either Christless or is a travesty of Christianity.

Mr. McKee's third and fourth questions raise the inquiry whether the church would not display the love of the Master by fellowshiping her avowed enemies, and whether such a course would not be more successful in leading them to break off their sins by righteousness. We answer "No" to both queries. The Master himself is the founder of the church, the author of terms of communion, and of the distinction between holy and unholy. Church members are said to be holy, "called to be saints." They should have a holy character. This requires separation from the world. In the days of Jonathan Edwards the question was settled once for all that sinners should be converted before they unite with the church. And if they are truly converted and thoroughly devoted to Christ, they will have neither time nor taste for the secret lodge. Mr. McKee asks, "Is not the church intended for a hospital rather than a heaven?" It is intended for neither. It is an army designed to wage war upon Satan's kingdom, of which the secret empire is a part. There are always a number of sick Christians, but if the whole army is confined to the hospital it will not prove very efficient in the conflict with evil.

Mr. McKee refers to Judas, who entered into a secret conspiracy to put Christ to death, and yet he was retained in the church's fellowship till he left of his own accord.

We are sure that no Christian will give this fact as the rule for guidance in dealing with offending church members. There are plenty of reasons why Christ did not excommunicate Judas. Our Lord never interfered with the courts of the church, nor took discipline out of their hands. The exercise of discipline is placed in the hands of men. Had Judas not withdrawn he would have afterward been excommunicated.

There are many in modern times who have not the good judgment even of Judas. Judas was a traitor, but he was too honest to stay in the church. He had the good sense to go and hang himself. Traitors in our days neither hang themselves nor withdraw from the church. Should the church lie under this reproach? Our querist asks whether or not it is inconsistent to oppose one specific evil to the neglect of others as great if not greater. It is, but this charge cannot be brought against the opponents of secret orders. These men wage war against all evil. They lead the van against the liquor traffic, Sabbath-breaking, etc.

Our friend desires to know whether the denominations that are the most rigid in the exercise of discipline are the most aggressive in evangelistic work.

We cheerfully admit that some churches that are not very rigid in the exercise of discipline have been very active in doing evangelistic work. But we do not for a moment yield the palm to such churches. We must take a broad view of evangelistic work. It means not only saving individual souls, but fighting the moral evils which destroy souls. The mission of the church is to establish the kingdom of Christ in the world and not merely to save men out of the world. Far more souls will in the long run be saved by that evangelistic work that follows Christ's example in destroying the works of Satan, and in preaching the kingdom of God on earth, than in merely aiming to get souls out of the world into heaven.

R. C. WYLIE.

SCRIPTURE TEXTS OPPOSING SECRET SOCIETIES.

As noticed last week, Rev. E. R. Donehoo, pastor of the Eighth Presbyterian church of Pittsburgh, although not a member of any lodge, preached a sermon on secret societies, in which he defended them more vigorously than wisely; for no one who is not familiar with the character and secrets of the lodge is able to speak intelligently for or against them. The sermon was liberally reported in the local daily papers, and called forth the following reply (through the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette) from the Rev. J. B. Corey of that city:

To the Editor of the Commercial Gazette:

With your permission I would ask the Rev. Donehoo (seeing he has a penchant for the public newspapers, which, by the way, is a very practicable way of spreading Gospel truth,) to preach a sermon from the following texts, either or all of them, and apply them to oath-bound secret societies. He will find a foundation or text upon which to build a Scriptural or logical argument pro or con fully as solid as that of the patriarch Isaac and King Abimelech. The first text is St. John 18: 19-21: "The high priest then asked Jesus of his disciples and of his doctrines. . . . Jesus answered him, I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the temple and synagogue, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing. . . . Why askest thou me? Ask them which heard me what I have said unto them. They know what I have said."

This text Rev. Donehoo will readily see carries with it great force from the standpoint of both precept and example, seeing the reverend gentlemen appeals to the Scriptures in support of his teachings. This is perhaps the very text from which to construct a Scriptural argument or doctrine in favor of or against oath-bound secretism. Mr. Donehoo is clearly right in appealing to the Scriptures in support of his doctrine. The prophet says:

"To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." Jesus said, "If the light in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness;" and also, "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall in the ditch." Hence we see the importance of Brother Donehoo's appeal to the Scriptures.

Allow me, then, in favor of this text to suggest to Brother D., first, it is the precept and example of Him from whom the Gospel ministers profess to receive their commission to "Go preach my Gospel to all creatures," so that in enforcing its truths upon mankind you can fall back upon the authority of your Master, and let him answer for the results; second, it is of more recent date, and will not be objected to on the score of being an old, obsolete law. Brother D. will recognize the force of this, he being a believer in the modern doctrine that this is an age of great light and knowledge. So much so that any laws or precepts that have become blue from age are to be eschewed, and those more in harmony with popular notions (regardless of the little barriers, such as divine commandments or confessions of faith and covenant vows,) are to be accepted as rules of faith and practice. This being true, the precepts and example of Christ are of a more recent date than those of Isaac, and on the principle of modern interpretation will be more in harmony with the eternal fitness of things and revealed truth.

I enlarge upon this text as, in my humble judgment, being the most appropriate to the occasion.

The others will be found in Eph. 5: 11-13: "And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." "But all things that are reprov'd are made manifest by the light; for whatsoever doth make manifest is light." This text also has the virtue of being of more modern date than that of Isaac's and Abimelech's oaths, and also the approval or the indorsement of Jesus himself, who said, "Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil, and will not come to the light lest their deeds are reprov'd." It is also in harmony with that noble sentiment, that no good cause requires secrecy and no bad cause should have the advantage of it. The third text will be found 2 Cor. 4: 1, 2, "Therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy we faint not," "but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness nor handling the Word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." This text, if given a common sense application, will enforce, we think, the Gospel minister's duty to both his God and fellow-man and will also simplify and bring out the lessons taught in the other two texts on this question.

If you allow me to add, I think Brother D. will have an uphill task in making the holy Scriptures or even an enlightened conscience support and indorse the taking of such blood-curdling oaths as that of having one's throat cut from ear to ear, his bowels ripped out, etc., to establish fraternal relations among men. Fraternal or benevolent brotherhoods of that kind will not find any other support than a wresting of the Scriptures and a perversion of truth. And it will ever remain true, as the Rev. Stoddard has well said, the making of a Mason unmakes the man. J. B. COREY.

THE POPE'S TEMPORAL POWER.

In view of all that is being done by the Roman hierarchy in this country to enlist the sympathies of the American people with their efforts to secure the restoration of the pope's temporal power, on the ground that it is essential to his proper and complete rule over his church as their spiritual head, it might be well to call to mind the three questions asked by the New York Tribune in 1870, when so many protests were being made by Roman ecclesiastics in this country against Victor Emanuel's entrance into Rome. The questions are these:

1. If it be clear that the pope cannot freely fulfill the functions and discharge the duties of his sacred office unless he be a temporal sovereign unamenable to any civil power, is this not equally true of all the Catholic prelates in this and other countries?

2. Have the people of Rome a right to any voice in determining or shaping the government under which they are to live?

3. If they have not, have we or any other people?

Why should American citizens encourage any movement looking to the enslavement of any people? and what but the enslavement of the Italian citizens of Rome would be the restoration of the pope's temporal power?

The inhabitants of Rome had long protested against the government of the pope in civil affairs, and in 1849, when the pope had abandoned Rome, leaving the government without a head, a constituent assembly, elected by universal suffrage in the Roman states, declared the secular government of the papacy abolished, and proclaimed that portion of central Italy, which had hitherto been the patrimony of popes, a free and independent republic, which was only overthrown, and the subsequent rule of the pope restored and maintained, by foreign bayonets.

In 1870, acting upon the doctrine of America's Declaration of Independence that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and are instituted to secure the rights of all to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," Victor Emanuel, after entering Rome, gave to them the opportunity of declaring for themselves the form of government under which they preferred to live. They at a popular election, by an overwhelming majority, voted to unite themselves to the constituent government of Italy, and under that government they have continued to enjoy the political and religious liberty such as no pope's rule had ever granted. And now efforts are being made to bring them again under the oppressive yoke of the papacy, and, strange to say, the most active ones in this movement are the very persons who are calling upon American citizens for sympathy and material aid to help them free Ireland (they say) from English rule. If America's voice is to be heard in this matter let it be one of congratulation to the people of Rome that they are free, and their loved city, so dear to the Italian heart, is no longer a petty rival sovereignty, maintained, and that against their will by foreign arms, but once more the capital of a great nation, upheld and supported by the free choice of the nation.—Boston Traveller.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

April in New England—The Methodist Conference—Dr. J. F. Spaulding, and his return to Protestantism—Romish doings in Puritan churches—Appropriate signs for the saloon.

April has seemingly changed places with March, for with her sharp, chilling winds, and clouds of choking dust, she has so far borne but small resemblance to the coquettish nymph as we generally think of her—all smiles and tears, the link between snow-drifts and buttercups, whose very name is suggestive of umbrellas and gossamers. But the grass is turning green, and I know that in woodland places, deep among the fallen leaves, the delicate hepaticas, first-born children of the spring, are unfolding their shy beauties, just as they have done for thousands of springs before, repeating the lovely marvel of their resurrection to New England's virgin wilds, with no eye to note but their Maker's. Yet who shall say that they bloomed in vain? So of the unnoticed multitudes who have come and gone, serving God in lowly and obscure positions, the wild flowers of his spiritual garden. It is joy enough that they bloom for him, but how do we know that angel eyes do not search out these hidden beauties, and like true flower-lovers bend over them with raptured eyes, to learn new lessons from their loveliness of that infinite Mind which is at the heart of the universe?

Dr. Townsend, like Dr. Parkhurst, has been so amply vindicated from all the criticisms made upon him that it ought to encourage all other ministers who feel called upon to rebuke iniquity in the high places of church and state. The Methodist Conference, held last Monday, passed resolutions against license of the liquor traffic, Sunday newspapers and the opening of the World's Fair on the Sabbath, couched in very strong and decided terms. A Mrs. Breenan presented a daring resolution, asking that women be licensed to preach, and have the right to be ordained as presiding elders and bishops. This made quite as breezy a discussion as the resolve offered by Rev. Mr. Woods, to repudiate those political parties "which are in practical complicity with the liquor traffic." Mrs. Breenan very ably defended her position by saying that the Conference had just adopted a resolution demanding even an increased representation for itself, while, with strange inconsistency, it was ready to refuse any voice to more than two-thirds of the present membership of the church. "If woman can preach, license and ordain her," was her concluding argument. She might have added, "And see if it will not be the tree of healing, that, dropped into 'clerical politics,' will suffice to sweeten the bitter waters." A woman presiding elder, being shut out by her sex from the privileges of Masonry, could not manipulate the Masonic wires, nor would they be likely to be worked for her benefit. It would be interesting to know how much the opposition to woman having a seat in the Methodist Ecumenical Council proceeded from ecclesiastical politicians who had learned from the teachings of the lodge—not from Paul or Wesley—to deny to her all her just rights, while flattering her with a cheap and unworthy adulation; and who, in the words of Charlotte Bronte, "are willing to tell her she is an angel, if meanwhile she will allow them to treat her like an idiot." The resolution, for all its revolutionary character, was adopted. The church of Susannah Wesley and Lady Huntingdon cannot afford to occupy the position of Dr. Buckley; and the New England branch of this great denomination is to be congratulated on showing a more progressive spirit than their brethren of the West and South.

The sensation of the week has been the return of Dr. J. F. Spaulding to the Protestant fold. The former rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, whose conversion to Catholicism a few months ago so stirred up the religious mind of Boston, seems to have been very thoroughly and quickly disenchanted by an inside view of Rome. It will be remembered that in his farewell sermon he gave his reasons for abandoning Episcopacy; and now it seems peculiar, to say the least, that he should refuse to give any explanation of the causes which have induced him, after so brief an experience, to take a step more rare and remarkable than the original one of which he has now repented. Of course, the public is on the qui vive to know, for curiosity is not confined to the daughters of Eve—it is a common human infirmity—and so I am afraid that if the doctor persistently refuses to give any reason for his change of base, the criticisms upon it will be more numerous and more ill-natured than if he took a franker course. Dr. Spaulding is not the first one who has backslid Romeward, and then in disgust and shame retraced his steps. Miss Cusack was a convert to Rome, but she has frankly given her reasons for returning to Protestantism; she has not only renounced, but she has denounced and exposed, the corrupt methods and vile machinations of the Romish hierarchy, and the popular mind thinks the more of her for doing so. When a man changes the faith in which he was born and brought up for another radically different, it is naturally expected that he will show good reasons for the step; but this is still more imperatively demanded when he changes back again, convinced that he has made a mistake. He owes it to the simple souls who are dazzled by the glamour of sanctity, and fellowship, and self-abnegation, to prevent them from being caught in the meshes of what Ruskin calls that "lying and idolatrous power, the darkest plague that ever held commission to hurt the earth." Why should he allow the sorceress of the Tiber to seal his lips?

"To-morrow being Palm Sunday, special services will be held in many of the churches." This item from the daily press refers to Waltham, one of the suburban cities surrounding Boston, but it is just as applicable to many other places in Puritan New England, where Lent and Holy Week is being observed in the letter if not in the spirit. One of the most serious symptoms of decadence in our churches is this reaching out after the dead formalism which was too heavy a yoke for our fathers to wear. It is for her sons and daughters of the old Puritan stock to become Protestants in reality as well as in name, and let their protests be so vigorous that the ominous echoes shall disturb Leo XIII. behind the walls of the Vatican. And, meanwhile, we give would-be Romanists the same advice that we give would-be lodge men. An inside view of Rome, like an inside view of Masonry, can be obtained at a very cheap rate, from those who have paid the costly price of going in and then repented of their folly. In these days of lectures and widely distributed literature, there is no excuse for a man's making a fool of himself by joining either institution.

The Traveller has been interviewing temperance workers in regard to the proposed law requiring all liquor saloons to display some kind of an appropriate sign. It makes spicy reading. Mrs. Fessenden, State president of the W. C. T. U., thinks that if a sight of their handiwork in the shape of a miserable drunkard reeling through the streets is not warning enough, no art will much avail. Mrs. Everett, of Our Message, suggests "a chameleon, always varying but never right." Mrs. M. E. Cheney, secretary of the Boston W. C. T. U., would paint every saloon black, with a skull and crossbones put on in flaming red. Mrs. A. J. Gordon suggested a devil-fish with its great tentacles; others a rattlesnake, a wolf, or a catamount. Mrs. E. Trask Hill would have a picture, painted by the finest artist in the world, of the misery of a drunkard's home; while Mrs. McBride would have the words, "Legalized Damnation" written over every saloon door. It is safe to say, however, that when our legislators reach the pitch of being willing to enact such a law, there will be no need of it, for they will be ripe for prohibition.

Dr. Keeley is proposing to establish a gold-cure sanitarium in Lexington, but the citizens of that old historic town are not pleased at the prospect. If this is selfishness, one feels like saying with Patrick Henry, "make the most of it." Much as we may pity the drunkard, the dissipated and abandoned characters who will throng to such an establishment, with no thought of any radical change of heart or life, must bring with them an atmosphere of contamination not pleasant for Christian families to breathe. An Inebriate's Home, conducted on the principle that Christ, and Christ alone, can save men from intemperance and impurity, will not attract this objectionable class, but will be sought more by those who, fallen and degraded though they be, are honestly desirous of leading thoroughly changed lives.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 13, 1892.

The Chinese Exclusion bill continues to be one of the leading topics of conversation, and it is evident that the opposition to violating a formal treaty with a friendly foreign power, as this bill would do if it became a law, which has manifested itself in nearly every section of the country, is having an effect upon those Senators not irrevocably pledged to the support of the bill, but whether it will be sufficient to defeat the bill is a matter of doubt.

Rev. Dr. Herrick Johnson, of Chicago, in a sermon preached to a large Washington congregation, including the President and several members of the Cabinet, gave the following eight reasons for not opening the World's Fair on Sunday:

1. Its opening would be contrary to all precedents in this and other English-speaking Christian countries. The Anglo-Saxon exhibits at all European expositions have been closed on Sundays.

2. It is contrary to the best traditions of our nation. The law of God is woven into our customs and laws, as shown by our Thanksgivings, the giving of oaths in the name of the Most High, and President Lincoln's proclamation against Sunday labor in the army and navy.

3. It is contrary to the conscientious convictions of ten, possibly twenty, millions of church members, and it would be bad policy to affront these, the best citizens of the country.

4. Its opening would import to this country that mongrel thing, the continental Sunday, and relegate the honored American Sabbath to the back-yard, which would be a national disgrace.

5. It would demoralize Chicago completely. Excursion trains would dump an additional 100,000 visitors into the city, and with the saloons and other ungodly places in full blast, Sunday would become the devil's harvest time.

6. It would set an example for future license, leading to the ultimate destruction of the American Sunday.

7. It would interfere with the rights of labor, by compelling 50,000 men to work on Sunday, thus adding another link to the chain which would bind the laborer to 365 days' work in the year.

8. It would be selling the Lord's day for a few pieces of silver, because the chief motive for wishing to keep the Fair open on Sunday is the hope of financial gain.

A bill introduced in the Senate, last week, has created much interest here, and should it become a law it may be the cause of an exposure which may damage the reputation of some of those who will support it in the House and Senate. It provides for the purchase of a site on the south side of Pennsylvania Ave., long known as the most reputable part of Washington, and the expenditure of $3,500,000 in the erection of a new Patent Office. A new Patent Office is badly needed, but it would better be waited for a few more years than to be built on the south side of Pennsylvania Ave. Aside from the objections to the location on moral grounds, is the fact that the ground is swampy and subject to overflow whenever there is a freshet in the Potomac river. At this very time, on the site of the new city Postoffice, in the same locality in which it is proposed to locate the Patent Office, 40-foot piles are being sunk in search of a solid foundation to build upon, which shows the unfitness of the locality for large and expensive buildings, either public or private. The business men of Washington knew this years ago, and at this time all of the largest commercial establishments are located above Pennsylvania Ave. I will not repeat the ugly talk which is going around of underhanded methods being used by those interested in this unproductive property to have this bill passed, but if I were a Congressman I should shun it as I would a pestilence.

Mrs. Harrison has been quite ill; at one time it was feared dangerously so; but her physician now reports her as much better. Her daughter, Mrs. McKee, is with her, having been called from Boston, where she was visiting, by telegraph. It is thought that it will be a week or ten days before she can get out again.

Senator Morrill has recovered sufficiently from his attack of pneumonia to take a daily carriage ride, but it will be some weeks before he resumes his Senatorial duties.

"Holy week" is being very generally observed in Washington, in social as well as in church circles. Not a single large social entertainment has been given during the week.

The World's Fair officials are here in force this week, for the purpose of convincing the Congressional committee that the bill introduced by Representative Durbin appropriating $7,000,000 for the Exposition ought to be favorably reported and passed.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

Boston, April 12, 1892.

Bro. H. L. Hastings has said: "It's a good thing to have a wolf howling around; it frightens away the goats and keeps the sheep together." There is true wisdom and sound philosophy in this remark. Stragglers don't wander far when the "sharpshooters" are "picking off the sentinels" along the line, and the closely invested garrison fights with the desperation of a chieftain at bay.

But to "mass forces" is not always wise generalship, and when we get entrenched, "the Captain of the Lord's host" sometimes repeats the word of command to Abram: "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, into a land that I will show thee." We have a wise General, who knows just how to keep every soldier "in touch" with Him, and in step with His plans. "As an eagle stirreth up her nest," or as "it is written, I will smite the Shepherd and the sheep of the flock shall be scattered abroad," are "ways of Providence" familiar to God's people. "Tarry ye at Jerusalem" is the simple prelude to the great commission: "Go ye into all the world;" and the "one accord in one place" and the "endowment of power" received in each "Pentecostal baptism" heralds a new charge on the enemies of the crown and kingdom of Christ. Stephen's funeral, and Saul's "havoc of the churches," thrust the Gospel "throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria," where the preaching of Philip broke up Simon's lodge, where he had "beforetime used sorcery and bewitched the people." Perfidy, bonds and shipwreck marked Paul's "royal road" to the Cæsars as Christ's "Minister Plenipotentiary" at the imperial throne of the world. What wonder, then, that our "ways" should be superseded by His "ways;" or that we should be restrained or thrust into the hottest of the fight, regardless of our plans or choice?

Our order in Boston seems now to be not alienation but separation. "Like as an eagle stirreth up her nest," in maternal solicitude for her young, "so the Lord is leading us, and there is no strange God with us." The home of Bro. and Sister Powers has been the sanctuary of a free Gospel freely proclaimed against the lodge ever since their "eyes were anointed with eye-salve" to see the iniquity of the lodge. Their present home is No. 386 Warren street, Roxbury, Mass., where they have "flung out their colors," spread their tract-table and entered already upon their mission work, resolved to let their "light shine." Their removal leaves us without suitable rooms in which to hold afternoon and evening meetings as heretofore. New doors seem, however, to be opening, and a more extended work preparing.

I have applied for a room in Clarendon Street Baptist church for a weekly prayer-meeting, and Mrs. Stoddard has completed arrangements for monthly meetings for women at Cambridgeport, Somerville and Roxbury, and has a good prospect of reaching East Boston with a fourth appointment. In this way new fields are entered and the truth brought in contact with minds that hitherto have "sat in darkness and the shadow of death" on this subject; and thus the sundering of ties and the breaking up of pleasant relations, being "ordered of God," "the things which happened unto us have fallen out rather to the furtherance of the Gospel," as we humbly trust.

Pray for the cause and its advocates, and that the truth "may have free course, run and be glorified."

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

Boston, Mass., April 9, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A few days after visiting Adelbert College, I went to Wooster University, Wayne county, Ohio, and examined their extensive library. They have most of the anti-secrecy books furnished by the Carpenter fund some time ago, and I recommended giving them three of our later volumes.

In going to my reform work in the East, I passed through Pennsylvania, and stopped in Kingwood, Hunterdon county, New Jersey, where I preached from A. D. 1843 until 1857. There was a new edition of winter, with a heavy fall of snow, which lasted until near the end of March; and I took the opportunity to call on old friends who were members of the congregation when I was their pastor.

On the 29th of March I spent a day at Lafayette College, in the interest of anti-secretism. This college is located at Easton, Pa., and is in a flourishing condition, and richly endowed by wealthy friends. There are several large halls erected on the heights near the city, in a very picturesque position. Pardee Hall is a fine structure, lately built, of stone, and named for the man who donated the money to build it. Mr. Pardee died a short time ago, and it is reported that he has left a large donation for the college, in his will. I saw Dr. F. A. March, who is the college librarian, and he assented very cordially to my placing anti-secrecy books in the library.

Bidding farewell to former friends, some of whom I had married, and some I had baptized, on the 5th of April I reached Princeton, New Jersey. The president, Dr. Patton, was sick and I did not see him; the college was having a recess for a few days, and I did not see the classes. But Dr. Murray, the dean, said they had no secret societies in the college; so I arranged to send seven or eight volumes to the Philadelphian society there.

On the 6th I stopped at New Brunswick, and went up to the Theological Seminary. I talked with the president, Dr. Woodbridge, and the librarian, Dr. Van Dyke, and explained the nature of our anti-secrecy reform work. They readily agreed to receive our five-dollar library, and to give it a fair showing on their shelves. And so, passing through New York, I came on at once to Boston, where I am stopping with Rev. J. P. Stoddard, at 218 Columbus avenue, Hotel Howland. The reform work seems to be opening up largely under the skillful labors of Bro. Stoddard and his devoted companion. Yours in the blessed Gospel of Jesus, S. F. PORTER.

THE FLOATING CHAPEL THREATENED BY WHITE CAPS AT LEAVENWORTH, IND.

Crawford county, Ind., has long been noted as the headquarters for White Caps, and Leavenworth, the county-seat, seems yet to glory in this distinction.

We landed here a few days ago, and started out to scatter bills announcing a lecture on Bible History at night. Nearly every person to whom a bill was given, upon learning that we were advertising the Floating Chapel, would tear it in pieces.

One man said, "No, I'll not go; I belong to the chain gang."

"What do you mean by that?" I replied.

"The three links; the Odd-fellows."

After meeting a number of like repulses, I went into a store to buy some bread, and handed the merchant a bill, which he looked at and threw into the fire. Turning to me he said,

"There's the door—get out."

I asked what was the difficulty. He said: "I am an Odd-fellow; you yet out!" Then, pushing me into the street, he slammed the door behind me.

Meeting another Odd-fellow on the sidewalk, I began talking with him, and shortly a large crowd gathered around, all acting very boisterous and bitter.

Stepping into the printing-office I invited the editor of the Democrat to come to the Floating Chapel and see the pictures of Egypt that night.

He replied: "I am an Odd-fellow, and I shall not be there, and my printers will not be there."

Passing on to another street-corner, still handing out bills, a number of merchants told me I had better not stop there; that Crawford county was the headquarters for White Caps.

On the next street-corner I was surrounded by so large a crowd of Odd-fellows, Masons, and Knights of Pythias, that I concluded now was my time to say a word. "I am a stranger in your town," I said, "and have no acquaintances here, and I do not know the name of a single person living in your city; but I have many friends in nearly every State in the Union; eight hundred persons contributed money to aid in the construction of our Floating Chapel, and thousands of people are interested in its work and welfare. Your streets to-day are full of threats to 'Burn the Floating Chapel,' 'Cut it loose,' 'Skin the hired man alive,' and so many others of like nature, that if my boat is burned while we are here, in less than twenty-four hours, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, people will be saying: 'The Odd-fellow shave burned the Floating Chapel.' You may do so if you think you can afford it; but I think there are enough Christian people who are interested in our river mission to raise money in less than three weeks to build another."

This cooled them down a little, for, although they were angry, they could readily see that their violent threats would cause the public to hold them responsible for any injury done to the Floating Chapel.

They still threatened my hired man, Mr. L. D. Hinman, saying it would not be healthy for him to say anything on the street.

WHY THIS UPROAR?

While spending a week at New Amsterdam, eight miles above Leavenworth, Mr. Hinman, our hired boy, nineteen years of age, thinking to have a little sport with the Masons and Odd-fellows, began giving signs, which were answered by Odd-fellows. He then began talking about secret orders in such a manner that the Odd-fellows hired a blacksmith to give him a whipping.

Not wishing to fight, he went half a block away, followed by a large crowd, and, stopping on the street-corner, said: "If you will give me a chance, I will tell you what I know about Odd-fellowship."

That was considered fair by all except the members of the lodge. The blacksmith again put in his appearance, and struck at Mr. Hinman, who now saw his only way out was to defend himself, which he did so successfully that the sympathy of the crowd was turned in his favor. He desisted as soon as he could do so with safety to himself. The blacksmith renewed the attack, but by this time the people were so aroused to think that the Odd-fellow hired by his lodge brothers should brutally attack an innocent boy, that they interfered.

The lodge men were very much infuriated to think that their champion was whipped by a boy much smaller than himself.

Personally, I had nothing to do with the matter, and knew nothing of the circumstances until it was nearly over.

By their unreasonable and brutal attack on the boy, the lodge made many enemies; and, in order to get revenge, they wrote to the lodge at Leavenworth a glowing misrepresentation of what the Floating Chapel was doing, which worked them up to such a fever heat that our reception was about as furious as one might expect in China, India, or Africa.

A BLOT ON AMERICAN CIVILIZATION.

The city of Leavenworth was wild with excitement, boasting of its White Caps, threatening to destroy property and take life—merchants, lawyers, county officers, a Campbellite preacher, and editors, joining in the tumult. They might have destroyed the Floating Chapel had I not plainly

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE G. A. R. AND SONS OF VETERANS.

LIND, Wis., April 4, 1892.

It is proposed that Congress appropriate $100,000 for the meeting of the G. A. R. to take place in September next at Washington, D. C. It is said that the movement has the approval of President Harrison, and that appropriations have already been made for this object by many municipal organizations.

Without calling in question the patriotism of the individual members of the G. A. R., may it not be well to remember that, like all other secret organizations, they exist primarily for their own benefit, and that our pension legislation, past, present and prospective, is largely the result of their influence. According to their special mouth-piece, the National Tribune, it is only the fierce war on the tariff and silver questions, in the present Congress, that has kept the new pension bills in the back-ground, and that they are speedily to come to the front. The two great secret military orders (into whose counsels the people may not inquire) which have this matter in hand, are the G. A. R. and the Sons of Veterans. How effectually they have in the past controlled our national and State legislation, is seen in the following extract from an article in the National Tribune of March 31, by C. E. Ellsworth, "Mustering Officer of the Sons of Veterans, Illinois Division, Danville, Ill.:" "We must not stop here. There is greater work for us to do than this (defend the country). The time is, of course, not far distant when the G. A. R. will pass away as an element of influence. . . . We must be ready to take their places in peace as well as in war. We must buckle on our armor, as an influential body, to keep burning the fires of patriotism. It is through the influence of the members of the G. A. R. that pension laws are passed. In fact, everything that has been done in this country since the war, either by Congress or otherwise, that tends to keep alive patriotism, has been due to the influence of the G. A. R. If this be the case, can it be imagined what would take place if this should pass away? . . . We must prepare ourselves to take their places."

Not having the gift of prescience, we may not be able to tell what would happen if this secret influence should "pass away." Unhappily, it is a consummation not to be hoped for, at least until the people shall awaken to the danger of secret military bodies. But we will do well to remember that the people of the United States are paying a larger tax for pensions than for any other object, a larger tax per capita than any nation in Europe pays for its standing army, and that this same "influence" is still being brought to bear upon our national and State legislators to increase this enormous drain on our national resources.

Moreover, we should reflect that the "Sons of Veterans," who never did a day's work in the service of the country, deem it their especial mission to keep up and perpetuate this all controlling "influence." We do well to inquire whether we have committed all our patriotism to irresponsible secret orders, or whether we are not fostering an incubus that in the name of patriotism shall be ere long a burden as hostile to true freedom as the system of slavery that we so recently put away.

H. H. HINMAN.

QUESTION AND ANSWER.—II.

KINNEY'S CORNERS, N. Y., April 2, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Another question is this: "You say that Masonry is, in many important respects, wrong and un-Christian, and to be avoided by all; while, in direct contradiction to this, Masons tell us that it is 'all right,' and 'something for a young man to aspire to.' How shall we know what to believe in the matter?"

Answer: There are matters that have always been in dispute, and will be till "the clearer light of an immortal day;" but this is not one of them, as far as intelligent, fearless, deeply spiritual, and wholly consecrated Christians are concerned. Let such become well-informed concerning the proceedings of the lodge behind its closed and guarded doors, and discussion comes to an end. This is well-known to the order, and, therefore, every means is used to terrify its opponents into silence.

Publicity would banish it from all Christian precincts, and keep it where it belongs, among infidels, unbelievers of all shades and names, gamblers, drunkards, and, in short, all who are governed by the prince of this world.

Lodge vengeance hovers about editors, ministers and others, saying, "Touch me if you dare!" The result is, most people know but very little of the errors and blasphemies of Masonry.

The pulpit and the press speak learnedly and well about intemperance, gambling, licentiousness, Sabbath-breaking, etc., but say little or nothing, as a general thing, about the oath-bound secret lodges, leaving our young men with the impression that it is altogether a matter of choice whether they join or not. But let us turn to God's Word: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful; but his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night." Psa. 1: 1, 2.

Is it right and proper for such a person, or one desiring to become such, to unite secretly with the miscellaneous company found in lodgery, which, as a whole, is fairly described by the above texts. Then take Acts 4: 11, where Paul speaks of Christ thus: "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved."

When Masonry strikes out the holy name of Christ, which is above every name, from its rituals, and forbids prayer to be offered in his name for fear of offending Jews, infidels and others, should it be difficult for a Christian to tell what position it occupies before God as a religious institution?

Our third reference to Scripture is 1 Thess. 5: 22, "Abstain from all appearance of evil."

When the Masonic bodies of England and America put forward the Prince of Wales and General Albert Pike as leaders, to be looked up to and obeyed without question, is it not time for Christians to call a halt and carefully consider the matter? Shall we, like Esau, because we are hungry, sell our birthright as Christians for a mess of worldly pottage? Rather let us trust in Him who is able to preserve us blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. CHRISTIAN.

IS THE LODGE INVULNERABLE?

DEKALB, Iowa, April, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Secret society men sometimes say things in derision of reform that are a help to our faith. Bro. Henry Siemiller, of Blockton, Iowa, is well known as a radical worker in the cause of anti-secrecy, and especially as a minister of the Gospel.

A secrecy man compared him to "an old sheep who had butted himself" nearly all away "at a solid stone-wall" of Masonry; and the little there is left of him "still keeps butting."

This reminded me of an old colored preacher of whom I once heard, who was speaking of faith in a stone church. He said: "If the Lord commanded me to go through that stone wall, it would be dis darky's business to put his head against it, and it would be the Lord's business to put me through it."

The lodge compares itself to a stone wall—so solid that it cannot be affected by assaults, but will break in pieces all that come against it. If, however, the whole church had such faith as the old colored man, God would soon put her through the lodge, and cause its walls to fall. Daniel saw "a hole in the wall."

But let us remember that God can work by the few as well as by the many, and in his own good time, "every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

LITERATURE.

THE IMAGE OF THE BEAST: A Secret Empire; or, Freemasonry a Subject of Prophecy. By Rev. Richard Horton. Third Edition. One vol., pp. 208. Syracuse, N. Y.: A. W. Hall, Publisher.

This volume has been before the public for twenty years, and has met with considerable favor among Bible students, especially those who delight in tracing events and institutions of modern times to the prophecies recorded in the Scriptures. The work is founded on the thirteenth chapter of the Apocalypse; and the conclusion reached by the author is "that if the 'Image of the Beast' is not found in Freemasonry, it will be discovered in something exactly like it. As but one image is described by the Revelator, and as Masonry is the only institution in the world that fulfills, in every particular, all the conditions of the prophecy, we must inevitably conclude that the image of the Roman Empire and the secret anti-Christian empire of Masonry are the very same." The argument is original and ingenious, and possesses considerable interest for those who are watching the signs of the times and the growth of the secret lodge system.

THE YOUNG CHRISTIAN AND THE POPULAR DANCE. By James Brand, D.D., of Oberlin, Ohio. Advance Publishing Co., 155 LaSalle street, Chicago. 1892.

This booklet is one of a series by the same author; including "The Theatre," "The Card Table," "Social Purity," and "The Weed." The present issue is an exposition of the social dances of the day, with the social peril they involve, and their effect on the Christian life. It has drawn forth strong indorsements from pastors and laymen. A pastor writes: "My observation goes to prove all that was said, and even more. Our church-members who attend the dance do not attend the prayer-meeting." A mother says: "Out of a sorrowful experience, I know that all that was said concerning the evils and perils of the dance was true." The treatise closes with an appeal to young Christians to cheerfully follow conviction on this subject. Single copies, 5 cents; 50 cents a dozen.

THE FOURTH INTERNATIONAL PRISON CONGRESS, at St. Petersburg, Russia, June 15 to 24, 1890. By C. D. Randall, Official Delegate from the United States.

This comprises Circular of Information No. 2 of the Bureau of Education at Washington, transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior by the Commissioner of Education, Dec. 13, 1890.

The author is one of the leading authorities of this country on subjects connected with prison management and reform. This report is intended to present to the public a summary of the proceedings and results of the three previous international congresses, and the proceedings and addresses of the one designated in the title. It is one of much interest, bears very directly upon many educational problems, and has the indorsement of the Commissioner.

The principal article in the April number of the Review of Reviews is an elaborate discussion by Dr. Albert Shaw, editor of the magazine, of the most current phases of municipal problems in New York and London, illustrated with a large number of very fine portraits of distinguished men in the two great capitals of the English-speaking world. With this number the American edition of the Review enters upon its second year. It has had an exceptional, if not an altogether unique, history. One year ago it was known only to a few discriminating readers, and its subscription list and news-stand sales required only a few thousand copies. Its edition the present month is 70,000 copies, and it is eagerly read in every State and Territory in the Union and in every part of Canada. No extraordinary efforts have been made to push the magazine. There has been very little canvassing done for it. It has grown to an enormous circulation and to commanding influence simply upon its merits. A fine portrait of Mr. Stead forms the frontispiece. It is much to be regretted that this editor who has contributed, both by the labor of his intellect and the suffering of his body, so much to the bettering of mankind, should yet be so free with his praise of apostles of error, as Henry Ward Beecher, Madame Blavatsky and the cardinals of Rome. The magazine summary of the Review is a treasure-house for our busy American people.

American Gardening for April opens with a full-page view of a lovely country home, with floral and horticultural surroundings. The letter-press is admirably in season. "Floral Beauties of our Bogs and Ponds"—water lilies, etc.; "The Climbing Prairie Rose;" "A Plea for More Street Trees, with Hints for Selection and Management;" "The Tomato in the South;" "Taste and Tact in Arranging Home and Other Grounds" (continued); "Grapes for Winter Consumption;" "About Grapes in Louisiana;" "Varieties of Trilliums;" "The Irrigation Problem;" "How to Make the Calla Bloom;" "Girdled Elms that Would not Die;" Economic Plants of Japan" (continued); "Friends and Foes in the Garden;" "Making Lawns by Seeding;" "Garden Notes from New England;" "Some Flowers and Vegetables;" "Fruit and Garden Notes," and the usual departments of "Buds, Blossoms and Fruits;" "Dictionary of Seasonable Garden Work;" "Questions Asked and Answered;" "Current Garden Lore," etc. An excellent number. Our Animal Friends, published monthly by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 100 East Twenty-Second street. New York, for $1.00 per year, should find patrons and constant readers in every family. For young and old it is replete with valuable information relating to the care and comfort of dumb animals, and a fund of incident and anecdote to interest all ages. It is nicely gotten up, with fine illustrations, and its influence for good is not easily measured.

OBITUARY.

One year ago, the 15th of the present month, I made the acquaintance of REV. ROB'T ARMSTRONG, D.D., and his lovely family, consisting of his wife and niece. Within two months past they have all gone to their eternal reward, the Doctor having passed away on the evening of April 2.

Father Armstrong was born at Faurghanvale, Ireland, February 13, 1813. I know but little of his history, but I found, when working in the city where he had started the mission which grew into the church over which he was the under-shepherd for years, that no one knew him but to respect him. He was as tender and loving as a child, yet as firm as an oak exposed to adverse winds. His attachment to the church of his choice grew with years. Among those who will be known in history as foremost in advocating his distinctive principles, few names will stand above his. The Christian Instructor says:

"In 1871, he published a vindication of the position of the United Presbyterian church on secret societies. He believed that the admission of the accompaniment of an instrument in praise was an unauthorized innovation, and with great grief he witnessed its progressive incorporation as a predominant element in the mode of praise. No one ever questioned the sincerity of his devotion to the truth of Christ, whatever it might cost him."

He has gone, but his work will remain. The wife, who lived to smooth the pathway of his declining years, shared the reform views so ably advocated by the husband. They were lovely in life, and in death not long divided. They watched many reform movements with interest, and did what they could to help them forward. The writer will not forget the welcome and kindness shown him, an entire stranger, for his works' sake.

A Thought for People Who Are Prejudiced.

Rev. Sylvanus Lane, A. M., of the Cincinnati M. E. Conference, in a voluntary testimonial accompanying a letter says:

"We have for years used Hood's Sarsaparilla in our family of five, and find it fully equal to all that is claimed for it. Some people are greatly prejudiced against patent medicines, but I think a patent article is better than one unworthy a patent. How the patent can hurt a medicine and not a machine is a mystery of mysteries to me." SYLVANUS LANE, Pastor M. E. Church, Groesbeck, Hamilton County, Ohio.

ALEX. THOMSON, President.

SECRET SOCIETY POLITICS.

Tammany, Tammany Hall, the Tammany tiger, the Tammany party, are names frequently heard in "York State." The Tammany Society was established in 1789 for purposes of benevolence and charity. It took the name of a noble Indian of the Delaware tribe, and with prophetic instinct appropriated for its officers and members the designations that are common among the aboriginal pagan savages of this country. An oath-bound secret organization, it soon became a political combination for the most corrupt and selfish ends. Affiliating with the Democratic party, it has largely dominated the city of New York for many years, and at present it has full control of that organization throughout the State and aspires to national power through its candidates for the highest offices in the land. Let us look into its politics as a practical exhibition of secretism.

Tammany to-day absolutely governs New York City, having driven out or absorbed every other Democratic organization and having filled every municipal office with its creatures. From Mayor Grant to the lowest official, the city government is manned exclusively by Roman Catholics; and a few weeks ago, at a public meeting, Mayor Grant, on his knees, kissed the hand of Cardinal-Archbishop Corrigan, in token of his fealty to that foreign politico-religious despotism. A majority of the city officials are, or were, liquor-sellers; some of these, a few years ago, were running faro banks, houses of infamy, resorts of thieves, etc., etc. Now they are bosses of Tammany districts, aldermen, and even judges on the bench.

Through Boss Tweed, a Tammany sachem, the Society had control of the State government; but since his overthrow Tammany has been recuperating in the green pastures of the city treasury. Through Governor Hill, the way for its entrance into State politics had been paved by securing as many as possible of the town supervisors, who count the ballots at elections and make out the returns for the State Board of Canvassers. Last fall Tammany openly entered the State field and elected all its candidates; but not content with this, through the most audacious frauds committed by its Canvassing Boards, a sufficient number of Republicans were counted out to give both the Senate and House into the control of the Democrats. This was done in the face of Democratic judges and courts, who condemned the criminals, but were powerless to restrain the consummation of the crimes.

Thus, on Jan. 1, 1892, Tammany Hall had possession of the Legislative and Executive departments of the State government. Just then a vacancy occurred in the Court of Appeals, and a pliant tool of Tammany Hall was put into this high position. By the almost unanimous decision of the New York City Bar Association, the man thus elevated was the guilty thief by whom the true and lawful returns of the election were stolen and the false count of the Senatorial ballots was secured.

The Legislature thus foisted upon the State by secret society practices has not been wholly subservient to its masters. The proverbial "honor among thieves" proved a rope of sand, and their discord over the spoils has prevented the State from being utterly robbed and disgraced; but what they have done, and tried to do, is a most damaging record. In defiance of their constant party cry of "Home Rule," nearly all the cities of the State were gerrymandered into election districts, so as to secure the largest possible control of the election machinery. Two infamous bills organizing bridge companies to connect New York City with neighboring cities, and one organizing a universal street railway system for the annexed district of New York, were passed, giving away franchises that should be worth millions to the city and turning over their incalculable profits to companies that are held and owned by Tammany Hall; thus securing the wholesale tribute that the builders and managers of these great enterprises must pour into the rapacious maw of the Tammany tiger. Another bill was railroaded through the Legislature and signed by the Governor, authorizing a race-course in Central Park, which would have made Tammany the recipient of millions more and converted that beautiful resort into a paradise of thieves, gamblers and the vilest characters; but the uprising of the citizens compelled the speedy abandonment of the scheme. A State census was provided for, and has already been taken, without constitutional authority, and intended to discredit the United States census of 1890, which has falsely swelled the population of Democratic districts and dwarfed Republican districts, giving Tammany an unjust preponderance in the Legislative and Congressional representation of the State.

Other bills are still before the Legislature, which the awakened public sentiment and the falling out of the thieves have delayed; but they may yet be passed, and will be if the Tammany magnates can accomplish their aims. One of these is a liquor bill that repeals all the restrictions hitherto put upon the liquor traffic, viz., local option, civil damage, Sabbath hours, proximity to schools and churches, provisions for securing evidence against law-breakers, etc., etc., gives the traffic the fullest sanction and protection of the State. Another is the Freedom of Worship bill, which, if it becomes a law, will compel the State officials to provide for and support, out of the public treasury, the rites of the Catholic church in every public institution in the State. A third one strikes down the security against election frauds. The law now provides four election inspectors, two from each of the large parties, for each election district. The new bill reduces these to three, of whom two are to be named by Tammany Hall. A fourth re-establishes the Congressional districts on the basis of the fraudulent census, and gerrymanders them with nondescript boundaries, and most unfair apportionment of the population; for the largest Democratic districts have only an average of 171,000 inhabitants, while the smallest Republican districts contain an average of 183,000, and some of them as many as 215,000.

These are only a few specimens of what the bold secretists of Tammany Hall have enacted into law, or are trying to enact. If such things are done openly by them, what must be the secret wickedness which prevails in their lodge rooms? If these things be done in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry tree, when secret orders shall have obtained the national power which they seek? Unless the Christians of America awake to their danger and throttle this monster tiger, we will soon be hopelessly bound under the feet of the secret empire.

JOSEPH COOK ON SUNDAY CLOSING.

On Thursday of last week, Joseph Cook, passing through Chicago, was interviewed by the reporter of a city morning paper. In the course of his remarks, referring to the National Commission of the World's Fair, which he suspects of harboring intentions to vote for opening the Exhibition on Sundays, he said:

"Some of those commissioners are a bad lot, and I'm afraid they are going to betray the people by a wide-open policy the week around. The people of Chicago, I understand, want the Fair opened on the Sabbath, but I tell you the sentiments of the people of the country are not that way. The country is opposed to opening the Fair on Sunday, and it will be a bad thing, indeed, if the Lord's Day is not observed. It will be a violation of the Constitution to keep the Fair open on Sunday. The Constitution says the President of the United States shall have a certain length of time in which to sign or veto bills submitted to him from Congress, but that he shall do no part of the work on Sunday. Now, there is an express order that the President shall refrain from work on the Sabbath, and as he is no better than any other citizen, the constitutional requirement, as I take it, refers to all citizens as well. That, in my opinion, should be the source from which should spring all our sentiment in opposition to this move to keep 50,000 people who will be compelled to work at the Fair, constantly employed, without any rest whatever. It is claimed that the people will go to the saloons if not allowed to visit the Fair on Sunday. Are the saloons the only places for the people to go to? Are there no churches in Chicago for them to attend? It's really remarkable the solicitude the Sunday-opening fellows manifest for the poor people. But, then, the liquor power is behind it all. There is more money behind the whisky-makers to-day than behind the slave-owners. Slavery lived for hundreds of years, but, it finally went down, and so will the liquor-makers. The people will stand them for just so long, or until some terrible calamity results from their wickedness, and then they will be wiped off the earth or their villainous intoxicants will be abolished."

THE CHINESE EXCLUSION BILL.

The bill introduced into the House of Representatives by Mr. Geary, of California, provides that all Chinese, except official representatives of the government of China and their assistants, shall be absolutely prohibited from setting foot upon the soil of the United States; that all Chinamen now in this country, should they revisit their own land, shall not be permitted to return; and that this act of exclusion shall apply to all natives of China coming from all other countries, as well as from their own. It also provides that those who come to the United States in violation of this act shall be imprisoned five years, and then sent back to the country from whence they came. It expressly repeals existing treaties.

The bill was passed in the House with but forty-three dissenting voices, about equally divided between Republicans and Democrats. All honor to the men who said "No!"

That such a measure should have passed the House by so large a majority is doubtless due to the exigencies of a great political campaign. It is a plea for the votes of the Pacific States; but it implies a condition of moral degradation as astonishing as it is lamentable. Aside from the fact that it presents us to the world as a Christian nation violating our express obligations to our heathen neighbor, it is a distinct repudiation of the principle of justice and the comity of nations. Beyond the right to protect ourselves from the pauper and criminal classes that may be forced upon us, we have no right to exclude any one.

Said Washington, in his Farewell Address:

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all; religion and morality enjoin this conduct; and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it to be rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent inveterate antipathies against particular nations, and passionate attachment for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is, in some degree, a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or its affection; either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable, when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, inveterate and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the Government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The Government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts, through passion, what reason would reject; at other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

This broad continent belongs not to us exclusively, but to humanity. There is far more excuse for excluding Americans from the over-peopled nations of the old world than for excluding them from the United States. God has dealt sharply with us, as a nation, because we oppressed the African who came here without his consent, and He will not forget the wrongs that we have done, and propose to do, to the strangers who come to our shores. "The stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you; and thou shalt love him as thyself." Lev. 19: 34.

Besides, we should remember that there is such a principle as reciprocity, and that this idea is essentially Confucian. Though new to us in its international application, it is old to the Chinese. Our merchants and our missionaries are at the mercy of the Chinese government. They can be expelled from "the flowery land" at any moment. Our goods, and especially our silver, are liable to be shut out from the ports of China. This would be a form of reciprocity as novel as it would be unpleasant.

We are glad to see Christian societies protesting against this wholesale exclusion of Chinese immigrants, and, while the bill is in danger of being passed by the Senate, there is a latent hope that our Chief Executive will save us from this national dishonor by his veto.

AN ART AND MYSTERY EASILY EXPLAINED.

The New York Times, commenting on the address at the unveiling of the Grant monument, in this city last fall, says that Judge Gresham made some significant allusion to the "aggressions of those who seek to make of our politics both an art and a mystery, intelligible only to the adept and the initiated, who assume the management of them by virtue of their capacity for the deft and artful manipulation of their fellows. Their influence upon the country is corrupt and debasing, and the area of political venality constantly enlarges under it." This is the sort of talk that makes Judge Gresham extremely unwelcome in high quarters where Quay and Platt are cordially received.

It is left for the Cynosure to add, what these high authorities did not feel at liberty to do, that the grand school for this class of political workers is in the Masonic lodge.

MORE STRONG WORDS FROM JOSEPH COOK.

The following letter from Mr. Cook has never, as we remember, appeared in the Cynosure. It was written Sept. 22, 1890, after his first great speech on "Disloyal Secret Oaths" in the First M. E. church in this city. The editor of the Religious Telescope, worried and rebuked by the closing sentences of that address, which condemned the whole course of the liberal faction of the United Brethren church, wrote for an explanation, hoping, doubtless, as did the last Judean king when he sent for Jeremiah, that some word might fall from the lips of the prophet that would permit him to continue the course of disobedience he had marked out for himself. Zedekiah got a stern reply. So the Telescope finds little comfort in these strong words of Mr. Cook:

"I did not, and do not, undertake to decide whether the oaths now commonly taken by Freemasons and Odd-fellows are actually disloyal or not. The common supposition is that they now are not, or, at least, not known to be such in their implications at the time they are taken by ordinary members of the lodges. But the State of Vermont long prohibited all secret oaths, under heavy penalty. I defended the precedent set by that commonwealth as worthy of imitation yet.

"It has been established by legal evidence that the Mormon Endowment House oaths were and are disloyal. Idaho disfranchises those who take these oaths. The Supreme Court of the nation decides that this disfranchisement is constitutional. The church ought to be as severe as the state in opposing disloyal secret oaths.

"It is a general conviction of Protestant statesmen and scholars that the Jesuit secret oaths are not consistent with full loyalty to the American republic.

"Wherever there is good legal evidence that actually disloyal secret oaths are taken by church-members, I think such members should be instructed as to the mischief of their bad example, and, if unrepentant, dropped from membership.

"I am a member of the Congregational church, and am not aware that these views are at all novel or unpopular in that body. Its practice, though, of course, not perfect in every society, is, as I believe, consistent and sound, as a general rule, in this matter, and is growing yet more so. Yours, very respectfully, JOSEPH COOK."

—The reader will find the story of the attack on Bro. I. R. B. Arnold and his Floating Chapel, by the lodges, which we print this week, interesting reading.

—A letter from the New England agent in this issue of the Cynosure notes some changes in the reform work in Boston and vicinity, but of a character that indicates a broadening and deepening of the warfare against the lodge iniquity, rather than any surrender to the powers of darkness.

—Rev. A. D. Zaraphonithes and his wife hope (D. V.) to leave the United States in May, to enter upon their mission in Greece, taking with them a good Christian lady to assist in their labors. They send their love to all their Cynosure friends, and ask for their prayers for them and their work beyond the sea.

—A special telegram to the Inter-Ocean, from Ottumwa, Iowa, April 13, gives the following account of a clash between anti-fraternity men and members of secret societies among the officers and students in the Iowa Wesleyan University, at Mt. Pleasant, in that State: "The students of the Iowa Wesleyan University have risen in mutiny against the faculty and Lieutenant McAlexander, of the regular army, in command of the battalion at that place. The trouble is the outgrowth of the appointment of Frank D. Burhans, a sophomore, as Lieutenant of Company B, when it was asserted that older classmen outranked him in point of military service. Three lieutenants and three sergeants have resigned, and the students purpose to bolt the college if the shoulder straps are not taken from Burhans. The fact of the matter is that Burhans is the leader of the 'anti-frat' society and as such has incurred the hatred of all secret society men, and they cannot stand it to see him advanced over them. Burhans is a brilliant leader, and his enemies intend to teach him a lesson. The faculty are undetermined in the matter as yet. Late to-day the matter was made even more serious by the resignation of the captains along with the adjutant of the battalion."

told them that it represented the efforts of Christians from Maine to California, and, if destroyed, the public would hold the lodge responsible for the deed.

In spite of all the deadly persecution which the city of Leavenworth and Crawford county threatened through its officers, one of them a preacher, we announced to the multitude that we would stay till our enemies became our friends.

Our two colored singers fled with Mr. Hinman for their lives. Not a Negro dares live in Leavenworth.

When the crowd saw that they could not drive us away with the Floating Chapel, the Campbellite preacher, who is Auditor of the county, with the Treasurer and others, held a consultation and announced that I could not lecture without paying twenty-five dollars license! I then told them that the usual five-cent contribution at the door for expenses would be dispensed with, and all would be invited to see the pictures of Egypt and the Pyramids free of charge. I first, however, made the Treasurer admit that Leavenworth would do as every other city on the river, from Pittsburgh down, has done; grant us free license and free wharfage, were it not for the Odd-fellows.

With all this against us, we gave the first lecture to an audience of only thirty people, but had the feeling that God was giving us the victory. Since then the boat has been well-filled each night, and friends are rapidly multiplying. Many have expressed their sorrow for the reputation the lodge has brought upon the place.

In all our public life we have never passed through such bitter persecution as in Leavenworth, Ind., and this was brought upon us not by any word or act of ours.

Perhaps God has intended it to help us to feel that he is truly a safe hiding-place, and that he will never forsake those who put their trust in him. He sustains us. He is a sure refuge in time of storm.

I am more than ever convinced that the most successful way to destroy the lodge is to treat the members with pure Christian kindness; and, whatever may be said against the lodge, avoid personalities, speaking in the spirit of love. Love wins in the end. Let us have faith, hope and charity in the heart, not pinned on the outside of the coat.

THE HOME.

THE BEATITUDES.

Matt. 5: 3-12.

Blessed are the poor in spirit,
A kingdom they possess;
Blessed are the mourning ones
God comforts in distress.

Blessed are the lowly, meek,
The earth to them is willed;
Blessed are the hungry ones;
With God they shall be filled.

Blessed are the merciful,
For mercy they obtain;
Blessed are the pure in heart,
God's image they retain.

Blessed are the peaceful ones,
Dear children of the Lord;
Blessed are the hated ones;
For they have their reward.

Doubly blessed shall ye be,
If you this hatred bear;
Prophets, priests, and Christ himself
Did persecution share.

Brothers, sisters, in the Lord,
Do you desire sweet rest?
Live in these Beatitudes,
And then you shall be blest.

WHY GOOD MEN LOVE THE BIBLE.

There is nothing more evident than that it is only good men who love the Bible, and they love it none the less because it exposes their faults, and demands of them a strict conformity to its teachings. Bad men hate it because it is to them a hateful book, requiring of them such obedience as they are not willing to give, and setting forth in plain words their own evil thoughts and lives. When we take a historical view of the opposition that has been shown to the Bible since the beginning, we cannot help but come to the conclusion that it must be a very good book or else its enemies had destroyed it long ago. The opposition to it has by no means ceased. The conflict is becoming more and more serious. In the days of old the opposition was bold and defiant. To-day it is more subtle, it is insinuating, it is wily, it comes with the pretension of friendship, and endeavors in this specious way to destroy its power and usefulness, and yet good men to-day rejoice in its glory which is always as bright and fresh as the morning air.

Though there have been many bad men who hated this book, yet see the vast number of good men in all ages and countries who have loved it, and who love it now. Men who loved it for the lofty moral sentiment it taught, loved it for the great truths it presented, the light it afforded, the strength it imparted, the consolation it gave, and because it was the word of God. The very fact that the book has such an influence for good upon the lives of men is an evidence that it came from God, and that those who put their trust in its directions cannot and will not be deceived. That so many good men should love this book is again testimony of no little weight in making up our estimate of it, since these men are representatives of every nationality, from which we would infer that it must be supernatural, seeing that it is intended for all men, and adapted to all. What a grand line of great and good men have loved this book and stood up in its defense! Look to the distant past, and there you behold Origen, and Athanasius, and Augustine. Cast your eye to Greece and Rome, you see Chrysostom and Ambrose. Do you ask for other names? we mention St. Bernard and Tauler, Luther, Fenelon, Pascal, Hooker, Latimer, Taylor and Wesley, and a host of others. They have all given their testimony to the worth of the Bible, and is there any wonder that so many are anxious to be counted in with this galaxy of noble and good men who have loved God's holy word?

Perhaps one of the reasons why so many good men love this book is because it is so singularly adapted to the nature and wants of men everywhere. All other books of religion have been more local in their character and influence, while this is as wide as the race, and as we have seen, has representatives among every division of the human family. It is suited to all the changing forms of human history, and especially to the deep spirit-needs of the heart of man, oppressed with the burden of a threefold mystery—an irrevocable past, an unsolaced present, and an unknown and uncertain future. This adaptation of the Bible to man has been the subject of calm thought and patient study. Men have spoken of its adaptation to all spiritual wants of man. It is a book that has been described as "congenial to our highest instincts." One said, "It meets me in the deepest needs of my nature." An Oriental who rose from the translation of the Bible, was heard to exclaim, "Whoever made this book made me." Another has said of it, "Its overtures to the individual soul, limited to no race or caste, or class or set of faculties, extend from the entrance into life to the hour of departure; are adapted to its real wants and failings; and provide for that immortality which strikes an answering chord in the heart of every man." Arthur H. Hallam, who is mourned in imperishable verse by Tennyson, says: "I see that the Bible fits into the fold of every human heart. I am a man, and believe it to be God's book, because it is man's book. It is true that the Bible affords me no additional means of demonstrating the falsity of atheism; if mind had nothing to do with the formation of the universe, whatever had was competent also to make the Bible; but I have gained this advantage, that my feelings and thoughts can no longer refuse their assent to what is evidently framed to engage that assent."

It would require much space to repeat all that good men have said concerning the Bible. They have felt its power in various ways, and know whereof they speak. They have seen what it has accomplished for the world, and for the individual. They have seen how it has transformed whole communities into peace and order-loving people, and given them hope and a consolation when they needed it. The book must be known to be loved. If its pages remain sealed to the mind how can it produce any affection for itself. The men who love it most are they who read and study it most.—Christian World.

A BRAVE GIRL.

It was late in the fall of 1777 that a foraging party from a British camp in Philadelphia made a descent upon the farm of Major Rudolph, south of that city. Having supplied themselves well with provender, one of the soldiers happened to spy a valuable cow in the lane leading to the barn-yard, and poor Sukey was immediately confiscated.

Now, this happened to be the pride of the farm, and was claimed as the exclusive property of Miss Anne Rudolph, aged twelve years. Of course, no other animal on the estate was so important as this cow, and confiscation by the soldiers could not be tolerated. So Miss Anne made an impetuous dash for her recovery; but finding the men deaf to her entreaties, and the sergeant proof against her indignation, the spirited child rushed to the stables, saddled her pony, and was soon galloping toward the city, determined to appeal to the commander-in-chief of the British army.

Meanwhile, poor Sukey trudged along, her reluctant steps quickened now and then with a point of a bayonet in her well-rounded side.

To reach the city before the foraging party was the one thought of the child, as the pony went bounding along the old Chester road at a pace that soon brought her within the British lines. She was halted at the first outpost by the guard, and the occasion of her haste was demanded. The child replied:

"I must see the General immediately."

"But the General cannot be disturbed for every trifle. Tell me your business, and, if important, it will be reported to him."

"It is of great importance, and I cannot stop to talk to you. Please let go my pony, and tell me where to find the General."

"But, my little girl, I cannot let you pass until you tell me whence you came and what your business is within these lines."

"I came from Darby, and my business is to see the General immediately. No one else can tell him what I have to say."

The excitement of the child, together with her persistence, had its influence. General Washington was in the neighborhood with his ragged army, watching the opportunity to strike another blow for the liberty of the colonies. The officer well knew that valuable information in the movements of the rebels frequently reached the British commander through families residing in that country. Here might be such a case, and this consideration determined the soldier to send the child to headquarters. So summoning an orderly, he directed him to escort the girl to the General.

It was late in the afternoon by this time, and Cornwallis was at dinner with a number of British officers, when "a little girl from the country with a message for the General" was announced.

"Let her come in at once," said the General, and a few moments later Miss Anne Rudolph entered the great tent.

"Well, my little girl, I am General Cornwallis," said that gentleman kindly. "What have you to say to me?"

"I want my cow!"

Profound silence reigned for a moment, then came forth a burst of laughter from all the gentlemen around the table. The girl's face reddened, but she held her ground, and her set features and flashing eyes convinced the General that the child before him was one of no ordinary spirit.

With ready tact the General drew from her a narration of her grievance. "Why did not your father come?" he asked.

"My father is not at home."

"And have you no brothers?"

"Both my brothers are away. But, General," she cried impatiently, "while you keep me here talking they will kill my cow!"

"So your brothers also are away? Now, tell me, child, where are they?"

"My oldest brother is with General Gates."

"And your other brother, where is he?" inquired the General.

"Is with Harry Lee."

The girl's eyes fairly blazed as she spoke the name of gallant "Light Horse Harry Lee."

"But, General, I want my cow!"

"Ah, ah! one brother with Gates and one with Lee. Now," said the General, severely, "where is your father?"

"He is with General Washington," answered the little maiden; "but he is a prisoner now."

"So, so. Father and brothers all in the Continental army! I think, then, you must be a little rebel."

"Yes, sir, if you please. But I want my cow!"

"Well, you are a brave little girl, and you shall have your cow, and something more, too." Then, stooping forward, he detached from his garters a pair of brilliant knee-buckles, which he laid in the child's hands. "Take these," he said, "and keep them to remember that Lord Cornwallis can appreciate courage and truth, even in a young rebel." Then, calling an orderly, he instructed him to go with the child through the camp in search of the cow, and when he should find the animal to detail a man to drive her home again. So Miss Anne returned home in triumph with her cow. And those sparkling knee-buckles are treasured by her descendants as a memento of Cornwallis and the Revolution.—Wide Awake.

THE GIRL WHO BRAGS.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in the April Ladies' Home Journal, deprecates the tendency of American girls to the habit of bragging. Only recently, she writes, I asked a young bachelor who is comfortably situated in life, why he did not marry. "Well, I will tell you," he replied. "I want a home, which, of course, means a wife, but I am discouraged about making the venture. I admired a young lady greatly, and was beginning to think seriously of paying her court. She seemed to be my ideal. She was a model daughter, progressive minded, intelligent, industrious. She was always neatly but simply dressed, and her cheerfulness was like a sunny day. Recently I met her on the street just as she was emerging from a milliner's establishment.

"See my new hat?" she said brightly, as I walked along by her side. "Isn't it pretty?"

"I had not noticed the new hat, but now I saw a simple open-work straw on which reposed a few flowers and a bow of ribbon.

"Yes, very pretty and becoming," I replied. "I have a finer one being made," she continued.

"This is only a hack affair. I paid only twenty dollars for it. It is stylish, though, for the price, I think."

"My heart sank at her light way of estimating cost. I have no sisters, and my mother possessed a knack of trimming her own bonnets, so I had never known what ladies' hats cost. If that simple bit of straw and ribbon cost twenty dollars, what would be the price of the 'finer hat being made?' Thirty dollars at least. I realized at once my inability to properly support a girl who paid fifty dollars for two hats in one fleeting season. What a fortune it would require to furnish all her wardrobe at that rate? Yet she is so simply dressed to all appearances; nothing at all showy about her. I suppose all girls in her station pay as much for their clothes, and so I think I will leave marriage for richer men. The average young man cannot stand that sort of thing, I assure you."

Now, I happened to know who this young woman was, and I happened to know that she was not an extravagant girl. If she had paid twenty dollars for a hat it was an unusual expenditure for her, and would trouble her conscience and purse for many a day, and cause her much self-denial in other directions.

But she possessed the foolish idea so prevalent in this age of great fortunes, that men admire women who use money lavishly, and who pay large prices for their garments.

A SONG OF TRUST

We know not, but Thou knowest
All things, Most Good and Wise!
The light is all about Thee,
The mists are in our eyes.
Thy children love this solace
In hours of strain and strife,
What we know not thou knowest,
O God of all our life!

Why sicknesses and sorrows
Should dare to touch thine own;
Why loving hearts are breaking,
And weak ones sad and lone;
Why those who cry for morning
Are lost amid the night,
We know not, but thou knowest,
And all thy ways are right.

Why from the world that needs them
Thou call'st thy best away,
Though hosts besiege thee for them,
And they are fain to stay,
We ask, but find no answer;
We cannot understand,
But thine is perfect knowledge,
And our times are in thy hand.

From beat of stormy waters,
From waves of restless care,
From tumult of great trouble
And waste of wild despair,
Our souls find ample refuge
In faith as in an ark;
We know not, but thou knowest,
And light shines through the dark.

TEMPERANCE.

WINE AT WOMEN'S LUNCHEONS.

Without undertaking to handle the moral aspect of the point under discussion, I shall limit myself to a question of good taste in the matter of serving a variety of wines at the luncheons for women, which now play so prominent a part in the entertainment of our friends throughout the country.

Look, for example, at the large parties to which, at half after one o'clock in the afternoon, are convened ladies in visiting costume, bonneted and veiled, to be shut in a darkened dining-room, where gas and candles supplant the wholesome light of day. There, during two mortal hours, the guests are fed with delicacies of which each one seems to the taxed digestion to be—yet never is—the very last they will venture to accept. Cucumbers, caviare, truffles, foie gras, almonds, mayonnaise dressing are but a portion of the addenda of the feast. To relieve the thirst thus engendered the banqueter has recourse to what? Beside her plate stands exactly the same array of glasses—glasses of English cut; of Venice or of gilded Barisbad ware, lending glitter or color to the board—glasses for sherry, for Rhine wine, for claret, for champagne, all that would be demanded for the service of the most formal dinner.

Beside this scintillating group of glassware is to be found a tumbler or goblet of water filled to the brim—there are so few houses where the servants are instructed on this point—with fragmentary ice! What woman having ordinary regard for the elements of hygiene presumes at such a crisis to insult her already disturbed digestion with a douche of iced water? Ten to one she does not care for wine, never thinks of touching it at home; as a matter of course lets the sherry, the Chabilis, the Burgundy go by untouched; but unless it occurs to her to quietly demand a glass of water without ice, and, if need be, to tinge its clear substance with a dash of claret, she is compelled to drink champagne.

Latterly, as a natural solution of this recurrent difficulty, Clysmic, Apollinaris and the Hygeia waters are continually served.

Champagne, curiously enough, continues to hold its own. "How very extraordinary that you Americans should set champagne before your guests at mid-day," said a traveling Englishman, from whom, naturally, he having received the best hospitalities of the best American society along his line of march, frank comment was to be expected. "With us, you know, except at races and picnics, it is a wine that is like an evening coat—never seen out until after dark." However little we may relish the condescending manner of this and kindred national rebukes, there is no disputing that the right is on their side. The whole matter of serving champagne in season and out is overdone in America. But especially does it seem inappropriate for an assemblage of ladies, who, if they were in their own homes, would not go beyond a glass of claret, and who, for the most part, are content with the bottled waters of their favorite spring.

Tea drinking at luncheon, once so popular, has been elbowed out of place by the universal cup of tea at five o'clock. Women, unlike their predecessors of the Brick Lane Association, who could partake of the cheering beverage till detected in the act of "swelling visibly before the werry eye," have now found out that the philosophy of drinking tea consists in limiting one's self to one cup per diem. Chocolate as an accompaniment to food is found to be too heavy. Water, the beverage of Eden, and during so many years since respectably in vogue with a large portion of the civilized creation, has recently been pronounced fattening when absorbed with meals. What, in the eyes of many of our sisterhood, could be more condemnatory of any drink?

In connection with this question may be cited the experience of a young American girl on her first visit to an English castle, who, at luncheon, feeling thirsty, looked about her for something she could drink. Her host, next to whom she had the honor to be placed, demanded her need, and was informed that she would be glad of a glass of water. With a puzzled face he referred the matter to his wife, the servants being absent from the dining-room. "Water?" said the surprised lady, "won't she have beer or claret?" The American girl, rather depressed at this public notice, yet stoutly persisted in her demand. A bell was rung, the majestic butler entered, and on hearing what was required paused for a moment to collect his scattered faculties, bowed and retired. Some time later a footman, carrying upon a silver tray a small glass of a fluid that looked as if it had been dipped from the castle moat, appeared at the lady's elbow. After this she made prompt resolve to renounce her national beverage until again on her native heath.

What, then, poor, dear women are to drink at luncheon must, it appears, be decided by climate, custom, health and individual bias. As it is becoming clear that on these occasions little wine is actually used, perhaps hostesses will some day wake up to the wisdom of suppressing the show of glasses which lends to the ladies' luncheon its chief reproach from outsiders.—Mrs. Burton Harrison, in Ladies' Home Journal.

STARTLING STATISTICS.

"Boy at the head of the class, what are we paying for liquor as a nation?"
"$900,000,000 annually."
"Step to the blackboard, my boy. First take a rule and measure this silver dollar. How thick is it?"
"Nearly an eighth of an inch."
"Well, sir; how many of them can you put in an inch?"
"Between eight and nine."

"Give the benefit of the doubt; call it nine. How many inches would it require to pile these $900,000,000 in?"

"100,000,000 inches."
"How many feet would that be?"
"8,333,333 feet."
"How many rods is that?"
"505,050 rods."
"How many miles is that?"
"1,578 miles."
"Miles of what?"
"1,578 miles of silver dollars, laid down, packed closely together, our national liquor bill would make. That is only one year's grog bill."—Gospel Witness.

AN UNHOLY ALLIANCE.

Saloon-Keeper.—I hear that you gave me a drubbing in your sermon yesterday.

Preacher.—Yes, sir, I said some pretty hard things, but they were true.

S. K.—Did not you and I attend the same election in this city, and vote for the same candidates?

P.—Yes, that's true.
S. K.—Were not those candidates elected, and did they not grant me my license?

P.—Yes, I must admit that.
S. K.—Did not we support the same candidates for the Legislature, and don't they leave the law on the statute book which authorizes the granting of the license?

P.—Yes, that is true, but—
S. K.—Never mind your buts. You support a party which approves of, or at least does not repeal, the law which legalizes the saloon business. You vote for candidates with me who take my money and grant me a license to sell. You then abuse me and my business. I think you are a hypocrite. Good day.—Selected.

NUGGETS.

The retail liquor-dealers in the United States in 1891 numbered 240,797.

A "hand-book on temperance" in Bengali has just been published in Calcutta.

For bringing a jug of wine into the jury-room in Columbus, N. C., a grand-juryman was fined $50 and costs.

The total amount of British investments in American breweries, up to February 1, as given by the Brewers' Journal, is $92,019,240.

Rev. Charles Garrett, in presenting the annual report of his Liverpool mission, said: "The great enemy the mission had to contend with was drink."

Lady Carlisle, speaking recently on "Woman's Place in Politics," described herself as a fanatic on the drink question, and wished all others were the same.

"To escape the evils arising from the use of alcohol," says Dr. B. W. Richardson, "there is only one perfect course, namely, to abstain from alcohol altogether."

The Chicago Mail says: "If those who are searching after 'a sure cure for drunkenness' would quit drink while they are looking for it, they would find it."

The Journal of Inebriety calls attention to the fact that the use of tobacco and alcohol by railway employes is liable, unconsciously to themselves, to produce color-blindness.

H. H. Faxon, Esq., in a recent address before a committee of the Massachusetts Legislature, argued that "you mustn't go for rum-sellers with bars of soft-soap, but with a club."

"The Grand Lodge of the Retail Liquor-Dealers of Texas" is the official name of the State liquor-dealers' association. They say: "We are opposed to intemperance in any form."

The church ought to be like an advancing host against the liquor business—every church member a sworn foe to whisky in all its forms; the church itself an asylum and cure for drunkards.

The first combined convention of the World's and National W. C. T. U. will be held in Boston, November 13-18. The national society will hold its eighteenth convention at the same time. This phase of women's work is becoming simply immense.—Selected.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The prayer for mercy.—vs. 1, 2. True contrition speaks one language. David, though a crowned king, breathes the same prayer as the lowly and despised publican: "God be merciful to me a sinner." He makes the divine character the ground of his plea: "According to thy loving kindness; according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies." They who have the fullest knowledge of their own hearts, and the dreadful nature of sin, are also the ones who have the deepest insight of God's loving-kindness and un-failing mercies. Nowhere in the writers of "the liberal faith" do we find such wonderful portrayals of his pity and compassion as in the Psalms of David, and it is for the reason that they leave out the doctrine of human guilt and depravity;—the shadow without which there can be no light. It was no half-cleansing that David desired. "Wash me thoroughly from my sin." He wanted a complete work. This is another and most important characteristic of true penitence: that it was not the consequence of his sin, but the sin itself that David wanted to get rid of. True penitence is not content with anything short of being made entirely whole, or holy. David evidently believed that holiness was the end of all Christian living; and, however aggravated his fall, it was no reason why he should cease striving to attain the goal. The great trouble with many professing Christians is that they stop short of a thorough work. They have but shadowy and vague conceptions of Christ's power as a Redeemer, because they have but vague and shadowy notions of their own position as sinners. What the churches need to-day is not so much a new form of creed, as a more positive belief in the old one.

2. The sin confessed.—vs. 3-6. David's confession is both general and particular. He "acknowledges" his terrible "transgression," and "his sin is ever before him." The image of his murdered friend, and the thought of his base self-indulgence with all its bitter consequences, haunted, and would continue to haunt him, till put away by confession and genuine repentance. "Against thee, thee only have I sinned." All sin is a violation of God's holy law, and in this sense can be committed only against him. In David's mind the offended majesty of his divine Sovereign was the one omnipresent thought which overshadowed and included every other. But his confession goes even deeper than this. He recognizes the fact that his sin was the outcropping of an inherently sinful nature, and so far from having "the seed of the divine" within him, from which a pure and upright being could by cultivation be evolved, he "was shapen in iniquity." It is only as the sinner feels that there is no health in him that his case grows hopeful. "Behold thou desirest truth in the inward parts." God wants a heartfelt confession, not a mere form of words; like saying that "we are miserable sinners," when at the bottom of our hearts is the feeling that after all we are as good as our neighbors. "In the hidden part." All the dark corners and hidden chambers of the heart must feel the Holy Spirit's purifying touch. The work of grace is not a genuine one that does not extend to our most secret thoughts as well as our most public acts.

3. Further petitions.—vs. 7-13. Hyssop was used in the rite of atonement, so that here we have an allusion to the vicarious sacrifice made by Christ. David's sin was scarlet, but it could be washed away so that his soul would be whiter than snow, by faith in a coming Redeemer. "Make me to hear joy and gladness." The Gospel is glad tidings of great joy, because it is a promise of pardon to the sinner condemned to death. Even if David had lived a perfect life all his days, this one sin, if unrepented and unforgiven, would have barred him out of heaven forever. Perhaps in the first agony of his sorrow he feared that there might be no forgiveness for him; and if so, we may well understand the force of the expression: "That the bones thou hast broken may rejoice." "Hide thy face from my sin," that so it may beam in forgiving grace on the sinner. "Create in me a clean heart." Notice, it must be a creation. "Renew a right" (margin, a constant) "spirit within me." David's bitter experience of backsliding had taught him to fear nothing so much as another fall. "Uphold me with thy free spirit." The word "thy" is an error; the expression refers to David's spirit. Let me be upheld by a free, that is, a willing spirit. "Then will I teach transgressors thy ways," etc. Only through his own experience of God's goodness would he be able to justify the divine ways to men, or turn them from the paths of sin to holiness;—from death to life.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—It may be interesting to compare the size of the three Baptist tabernacles in London. The Metropolitan Tabernacle has 4,880 sittings, the Shoreditch Tabernacle 2,000, and the East London Tabernacle 1,724; but these figures do not include seats in the aisles, etc.

—The next meeting of the Christian Workers' Convention (the last one was held at Washington) will be in Boston. It has been fixed for seven days, beginning Nov. 10. Tremont Temple will be the place of meeting, with overflow gatherings at Park Street church opposite, and arrangements are already being made to insure a program of exceptional interest.

—The endowment of Suffield (Conn.) Academy is now almost up to $34,000. Mr. and Mrs. Philip Wadsworth have done good work in Chicago. Mr. Marshall Field, Mr. Byron L. Smith and Mr. T. Ogden Armour have given $100 each. Hon. Sidney A. Kent has promised to give the last $5,000 on the $50,000.

—The national anniversaries of the Baptist churches have been appointed to be held in Philadelphia, May 20-30.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The special meetings held for three weeks at the Second church, Springfield, Ill., resulted in 120 conversions. April 3 was a memorable day, sixty members being received into fellowship, among them twenty young men. This makes sixty-six members received since Nov. 1, when Rev. F. E. Hall took charge—thus more than doubling the membership. All but two were of confession.

—Joseph Cook lectured at the First church, Minneapolis, April 1, under the auspices of the Congregational Club, on the Friends and Foes of the Public Schools. He spoke at length, and during the entire time held the closest attention of his audience.

—Rev. John D. McCord has recently closed special meetings with Plymouth church, Peoria, Rev. D. B. Spencer, pastor. There has been a good degree of interest, and from fifteen to twenty converts.

—Twenty-five churches in Wisconsin have recently changed from rented to free pews, and they report increased receipts. Thirty other churches are thinking of a like change.

EVANGELICAL.

—Count Campello, a distinguished Roman Catholic who joined the Methodist Episcopal church in Rome, but soon after placed his work under the direction of the Archbishop of Canterbury, England, is doing a fine work in Italy. He has adopted some of the methods of the Salvation Army. A college and training-school has been opened in Rome, and a number of congregations and churches have been formed.

FRIENDS.

—The Society of Friends have secured several acres in Mexico for missionary buildings and purposes.

—The World's Fair people tell us that the cottage in which George Fox was born in Leicestershire, England, is being taken down to be re-erected in Chicago as an object of interest at that great exhibition.

—Mary Nichols is serving four churches as pastor in Van Wert Co., Ohio, Friends Chapel, Charity Union, Friends Home and Pleasant Hill.

GREEK CHURCH.

—It 1878 the State church of Russia numbered 58,111,135 members, with over 50,000 churches and chapels, 89,182 secular clergy, 6,402 monks, and 4,437 nuns. The proportionate number of monks and nuns is very small when compared with the Roman Catholic church. All the parish priests are required to be married. The dissenters in Russia number over 15,000,000.—Christian Union.

—A Greek church, with all that the name implies, is to be organized in Chicago. This church has no papal head, and allows its priests to marry.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Methodist Episcopal church has three conferences in India—North India, South India and Bengal. The statistics have recently been published of the three combined, together with corresponding figures for 1870, and the growth of twenty years thus shown is most cheering. The figures for two decades ago are put in parenthesis: Missionaries, 72 (19); wives, 62 (17); Hindustani mission, 54 (5); Zenana missionaries, 33 (2); baptisms in 1890, 7,661 (471); native communicants, 11,991 (600); day schools, 853 (117); scholars, 25,540 (4,300); money collected in India in 1890, 217,287 rupees (24,478).—Christian at Work.

—The Wesleyan (English Methodists) mission managers in London, during the past year secured two additional halls, making eighteen halls and chapels; ten ministers, and seventy "sisters of the people" were working under their direction, and 5,000 people meeting in class. The great efforts put forth had only just brought the revenue for the past year equal to the expenses, which amounted to about £5,000, in addition to the large amount raised by the local annual meetings. The mission has, however, still a deficit of £6,500.

—Embury church, Freeport, Ill., has had a most gracious revival. Over 200 seekers, 190 conversions, 114 accessions; seekers almost constantly thronged the altar; all classes and entire families reached; the Sunday-school greatly benefited; a general quickening; the whole place stirred.

—Bishop Thoburn says: "When I spoke in Boston last year, I stated that 'five hundred heathens in India were coming over to us every month.' But in the month of December, 1891, the baptisms from heathendom averaged over 500 a week."

—The first meeting of the City Evangelization Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church in the United States was held March 15 and 16, in Pittsburgh, Pa., and was attended by delegates from every section of the country. Addresses were made by Mr. Horace Benton, of Cleveland, who was the originator of the conference; also by Rev. A. D. Traveller, of Chicago; Dr. Mains, of Brooklyn; Dr. Pearson, of Cincinnati; Dr. Hulburd, of Philadelphia, and others. Reports were given from a large number of cities, showing the condition of the Methodist churches in those cities, and the amount of church extension work that was being carried on. A constitution was adopted, and incorporated in a memorial to the General Conference, together with a chapter which was requested to be inserted in the discipline. The organization is to be entitled the "City Evangelization Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church." Its object is to bring into fraternal and mutually helpful relations the local societies, of whatever name, in cities of the United States working for city evangelization under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal churches.

MOHAMMEDANISM.

—At Rangoon, in Burmah (India), it is reported that large sums are being subscribed, with the object of converting England to Mohammedanism.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The first five years of the pastorate of the Rev. Dr. J. L. Withrow over the Third Presbyterian church of Chicago, Ill., closed recently. During this period 1,802 additions have been made to the membership, of whom 533 were upon confession of their faith.

—The Presbyterian Society of Niagara Falls is helping to educate a young Indian for the ministry.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The next Synod of this church will meet at Mansfield, Ohio, on Wednesday, June 1, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon. The sermon by the retiring Moderator, Rev. R. C. Wylie, will be preached at 7:30 in the evening. It is designed that methods of progress in the work of the church will be discussed and promoted.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

—The Papal Bull authorizing the consecration of Dr. Charles E. McDonnell, D.D., as bishop of Brooklyn, has arrived. The ceremony will take place in St. Patrick's cathedral, Monday April 25th. His Grace Archbishop Corrigan will be the consecrator.

—The growing devotion to St. Joseph manifested by the Catholic world is very great. Sunday, March 20, was a red-letter day among his Parisian votaries. Votive masses were celebrated in his honor in all the churches, countless tapers burned before his shrines, and in the afternoon the city and diocese of Paris were solemnly consecrated to him by the Archbishop of Paris from the pulpit of Notre Dame. This act of consecration was in accordance with a rescript of Leo XIII., dated the 31st of January, this year.—Catholic Review.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Regarding the successful prosecution of the work of the church to be largely conditioned on the character of her educational institutions, literary and theological; and believing that this subject is entitled to greater consideration by the church in general than it has hitherto received, we, the undersigned representatives of the seminaries and colleges and board of education, unite in extending an invitation to ministers and laymen interested in this subject, to meet in a conference to be convened in Hanna Hall, Allegheny, Pa., May 23, 1892, at 7:30 p. m. J. B. McMichael, Monmouth College; James Harper, Xenia Seminary; R. G. Ferguson, Westminster College; Jas. A. Grier, Allegheny Seminary; J. A. Gray, Muskingum College; J. A. Thomson, Tarkio College; F. M. Spencer, Cooper Institute; W. T. Campbell, Board of Education.

THE GREAT WORDS OF GREAT MEN.

A Most Remarkable Array of Outspoken Statements from Men of Mark in Both Continents.

INTERESTING FACTS AND FACES.

palace cars, tasteful homes and daily communication with the world. It is the rapid-transit age; the age of the telegraph and the telephone. A man speaks to-day and the entire world reads his words tomorrow morning. There are but twenty-four hours in the day, but forty-eight hours are crowded into it.

We all know how we have advanced materially. Do we realize how we have advanced scientifically? More than in any other manner. Indeed, it has been the advancement in science which has caused the advancement in material things. The discovery of steam permitted the railroad and the steamboat. The development of electricity made possible the telegraph and the telephone, so that the development of the sciences has been the real cause of all modern advancement.

We will take, for example, one department of science, but the most important department. One which affects our very lives and happiness. Formerly the treat-on, not by armies, but by discoverers, inventors and brain-workers. It is a marvelous age, an age when the ordinary will not be accepted, when the best is demanded. Our grandfathers were content to travel in stage coaches, to live in cabins and receive a mail once a week. We demand ment of human ills was made a matter of superstition, of incantation, the same as it is by the medicine men of the Indians today. Gradually emerging from such blindness, it was still a matter of bigotry, of folly. What people must have suffered in those days can scarcely be imagined. They were bled, they were cupped, they were leeches, they were subjected to every device whereby their vitality could be reduced and their lives endangered. It is almost a wonder that the race survived.

There has been an absolute revolution in the practice of medicine and in the treatment of human ills. Instead of undermining the vital forces by cupping and bleeding, the vitality is now sustained in every possible manner. Instead of tearing down we seek to build up. Instead of increasing misery we seek to create happiness.

But the greatest advancement in medical science has been made by discovery. Harvey could afford to endure the ridicule of the world for revealing to it the grand discovery of the circulation of the blood. Jenner might be ostracised, but millions have benefited by his discovery of vaccination. Pasteur lived in a more enlightened age and escaped ridicule, while the world received the benefit which his discoveries have brought. Koch, although forced to reveal his discovery before its perfection, will be revored by futuro generations.

The discoveries of these great men have been of untold benefit to the world, and yet they were not in the line of the world's greatest need. Mankind has been suffering, enduring, dying from a cause far greater than small-pox, more terrible than hydrophobia and more subtle than consumption. The habits of modern life, the very inventions which have made civilization so great, have drained the vital forces of life and undermined the organs that sustain life. Ten years ago this great truth was realized by a gentleman whose own life was in sore jeopardy, and the discovery which he has given to the world has done and is doing more to-day to strengthen the vitality, lessen suffering, preserve the health and lengthen life than any of the discoveries of the other great men above mentioned. The discovery referred to was made by Mr. H. H. Warner, of Rochester, N. Y., and is known in Europe, in America, and throughout the world as Warner's Safe Cure.

It may perhaps be thought that the above assertion is an extravagant one, and so it would be were not the unquestionable proofs present to verify it. Within the past few years the claims made more than ten years ago have been admitted by the highest scientific authorities, both in Europe and America, and it is with pleasure

I emphatically state that I have been able to give more relief and effect more cures by the use of Warner's Safe Cure than by all the medicines in the British Pharmacopoeia that we present herewith some remarkable reproduced statements, together with the faces of the men who made them.

Kidney troubles, resulting far too often in Bright's disease, are the great evil of modern life. They frequently come silently and unannounced. Their presence far too often is not realized until their treacherous fangs have been fixed upon the vital portion of life. Nothing can be more deceptive, for their symptoms are varied in nearly every instance. Thousands of persons have been their victims without realizing or knowing what it is that afflicted them. Thousands are suffering to-day who do not know the cause.

The discovery made by Mr. H. H. Warner has been acknowledged throughout both hemispheres to be the only discovery for this great modern evil now known to the world. Like all great discoveries, it has had its enemies and met with opposition, but its marvelous popularity with the public has been phenomenal and its complete acknowledgment by scientists and the professions has been deserved. It stands, as it deserves to stand, upon a plane of its own, pre-eminent among all prominent discoveries for the relief of humanity and the promotion of happiness.

I prescribe and use Warner's Safe Cure in both acute and Chronic Cystitis disease and am willing to acknowledge and commend it most fearfully

HOME AND HEALTH.

HINTS.

Never wrap steel or silver in a woolen cloth; use soft tissue paper.

Never let any kind of food remain in copper or brass vessels after it is cooked.

In washing dishes take the glass first, then the silver, then the china.

A good supply of dishtowels is a necessity; do not try to get along with a few. Health and comfort are promoted by an abundance of every furnishing in the kitchen department.—Good House-keeping.

In buying brooms, whether large or small, avoid those which have a decided green color. Such brooms have been dyed with Paris green to make them look like the better quality of broom, which is cut before it loses its natural light green tint.

A polished knitting-needle dipped into a vessel of milk and immediately withdrawn in an upright position, will tell you whether your milkman is honest or not. If the milk is pure, a drop of the fluid will hang to the needle; but the addition of even a small portion of water will prevent adhesion of the drop.—Norwich Bulletin.

A delicious curry of rice is made as follows: One can of tomatoes and teaspoonful of curry powder boiled together. A small lump of butter is mixed with a cup of boiled rice put through the colander. Two small onions, sliced and fried brown in butter, and added to the tomatoes before the rice is put in; also the juice of one lemon just before sending to the table.

The practice of "trotting" a child on the knee of the nurse or the mother, though it has the sanction of long practice, has not the sanction of common-sense, and should never be indulged, especially with infants. Treating the adult body in the ratio of corresponding strength, the exercise would be about equivalent to being ourselves churned up and down on the walking-beam of a good-sized steam-engine. It has been very properly said that "gentle movement is as pleasant to the child as riding in an easily-running carriage on a smooth road to an adult; knee jolting as unpleasant and harmful as a journey over the worst corduroy roads."—Good House-keeping.

BEEFSTEAK—FRIED.

Sometimes broiling the steak is out of the question. It may be a hurried breakfast over a wood fire, or Bridget may have forgotten for the dozenth time to have the range in proper breakfast order. For such emergencies have a very thick, iron frying-pan; put it perfectly clean and dry over the fire until blue smoke rises from it, then rub it rapidly with a bit of suet trimmed from the edge of the steak, and pop in the latter at once. No lemon or vinegar should be rubbed on it in this case, or it will fry to a miserable, pale gray, instead of a good, rich brown. Nor should the steak be turned but once. Leave it as put in till half cooked, and then turn it to the other side. Do not make gravy in the pan, but spread the meat with a little butter, lemon juice, or a spoonful of currant jelly, after it is on the platter. The currant jelly will not betray its identity, and often makes a good steak out of a merely passable one.—Selected.

HOME-MADE FURNITURE.

Home-made furniture is rarely successful and more rarely economical. Occasionally a husband or wife has a gift at carpentry and can do wonders. If the young husband can build furniture so well that he would not hesitate to offer to sell it, with a fair likelihood of getting a purchaser, let him build all he can for his home. It will be good, and so much comfort to the household as the dainty needle-work his wife may have the skill to fashion.

But let the ordinary wielder of the hammer, saw and plane beware. The materials used will usually cost half enough or more to buy the finished article at a reliable shop. After the furniture is done, and money, time, and strength have been devoted to it, what is the usual result? A "toggled up" article that is rarely comfortable, generally cumbersome, and will come to pieces within a year. WHOLESOME MEATS.

Dr. Galen Wilson says the flesh of the sheep offers greater immunity from disease and filth than that of any other animal. They do not thrive in the mire, nor wallow in the trough they feed from. They consume neither garbage, vermin, decaying meats, nor rotting vegetables. Their flesh has never been known to impart scrofula or trichinae to those who eat it. The sheep is a dainty feeder, and cleanly in all its habits; it cannot subsist on filth, nor can it long survive its environment. They are of course subject to disease, but unlike cattle, hogs and fowls, they give ocular evidence of their ailment, and they are unfit to slaughter for human food almost as soon as attacked. Mutton is nutritious and easily digested, and those who partake of it may have reasonable assurance that it is clean and free from all germs of disease. More mutton and less pork on our tables would be best for both the producer and consumer. We are making some progress in this direction, but there is yet room for considerable more.

Many people who pride themselves on their blue blood would be far happier with pure blood; but, while we cannot choose our ancestors, fortunately, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, we can transmit pure blood to our posterity.

If Darwin's theory is to be accepted, then the fact that I am the sole survivor in the trade of those who began with me the same line of business, gives significance to the fact that my sales of seed to market gardeners, well known to be the most critical of all buyers, has increased year by year until it has now reached vast proportions. That I raise many varieties on my five seed farms, make 1700 tests annually for vitality, and test novelties, that no one may be imposed on, will explain much to the thoughtful buyer. FARM NOTES.

OIL THE TOOLS.

One gallon of linseed oil will cost 80 to 90 cents. It is worth $10 to $20 to the tools that you put it on. Put it on with a brush as you would paint. Put it on your wagons, plows, hoes, forks, spades, cultivators, drills, reapers—all kinds of tools and vehicles. It pays too much to be neglected. We cannot afford to not do it. Do it about twice this summer, and you will find that it keeps tools in much better fix. Paint your gates. I have some forks and hoe handles that have been in constant use for ten years, and they are better than the new handles we get now, because they have been oiled all the time. I do it myself; I don't have it done. If you want anything done, do it.—Anonymous.

BEST POTATO CULTURE.

An inquirer asked for a brief statement of the best mode of planting and raising the potato crop, according to approved course of management, since so much attention has been given to obtaining large returns. These results have been secured by different appliances in various localities, under different influences and unlike soils. But for practical farm treatment we would advise in substance the following course: Select a piece of deep, rich soil—naturally so, or which has been made so artificially a year before by barn manure. If the soil has been distinctly benefited by any of the commercial fertilizers, apply these and mix thoroughly before planting, and pulverize well. Plow furrows three feet apart; cut the potatoes to two or three eyes each; drop these a foot apart; cover them four inches deep; pass over the rows once a week with a light or slant-tooth harrow, keeping the ground perfectly clean till the plants are half a foot high, and after that with a cultivator between the rows, keeping an inch or two of the surface in a fine mellow condition, not hilled or ridged but flat. With this treatment we have raised occasionally four hundred bushels to the acre, and oftener from two to three hundred.—Country Gentleman.

EARLY SPRING WORK.

If the spring work is begun early and everything is made ready beforehand, it seems to be easy to keep well up with the work, if too much is not planned, while a late start makes hard and discouraging work. It is a stern chase all of the time. There is upon nearly every farm much work that can be done while waiting for the ground to settle so as to be suitable for plowing, and if there is help to do it then it will be better than leaving it to be done later in the season. The mending of walls, fences and gates are among such work, and the clearing of the stones from the meadows, and perhaps the digging out of stones and rocks that are known to be in the way of the plow, are among the things that should suggest themselves to every farmer.—American Cultivator.

BRIEF NOTES.

What is an "inch of rain?" It means a gallon of water spread over a surface of nearly two square feet, or a fall of about 100 tons on an acre of ground.

A wash of strong lye or potash water on the trunk and large limbs of the fruit trees early in the spring will destroy insects under the bark, or their eggs, if there are any. And if it runs down to the ground and soaks in where the roots find it, it will not hurt the tree or the fruit at all.

Do not allow the sheep to be out long in cold or rain. When the fleece gets filled with rain, it takes a long time to dry out, and this heat requires extra feed to keep it up. A heavy fleece saturated with water is a heavy load for the animal to carry about.

In two trays on exhibition, each containing one hundred apples, of which one trayful was from sprayed trees, the other from unsprayed, the former contained eighty-four perfect apples, nine with one or two blemishes, and seven worthless ones; while of the latter there were only four first-class apples, fifty-eight second-class apples, and thirty-eight culls. A pretty good illustration of the value of spraying.

Nothing adds so much to a person's appearance as a fine thick head of hair of even color, and to assure this use only Hall's Hair Renewer.

"Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething" softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain and cures wind colic 25c. a bottle.

Backed up by a cash offer—the statements that are made by the proprietors of Doctor Sage's Catarrh Remedy. They say that their medicine will cure, perfectly and permanently, the worst case of Chronic Catarrh in the Head—that not only Catarrh itself, but all the troubles that come from it, and every thing catarrhal in its nature, are cured by the mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties of their remedy. They can't say any more. Probably every medicine for Catarrh claims as much. But it's one thing to promise a cure—it's a very different thing to perform it. The proprietors of Dr. Sage's Remedy want to prove that they mean what they say. So they make this offer: If they can't cure your Catarrh, no matter how bad your case or of how long standing, they'll pay you $500 in cash. You're sure of the money or a cure. Isn't such a medicine worth trying?

The New World of Central Africa.

By Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness, with a history of the first Christian mission on the Congo. 12mo., 530 pages with maps, portraits and numerous illustrations. $2.00 "A conscientious piece of work, and gives a very clear account of what has been done by the Protestant missions to evangelize the barbarous races of Central Africa. He who wants to know what missionary effort means in these days may well learn from this volume. The reader who goes carefully through will have a good bird's eye view of recent events in Africa, with all the results of modern travel. The work contains solid information of use to all who are interested in the future of this wonderful country. The many illustrations throw light upon savage customs and costumes."—Graphic.

Mr. A. C. Higgins, who died a few days ago, quite suddenly, at Galesburg, Ill., had been a resident of that place since 1837, and long identified with the anti-secrecy reform work. One by one the veterans are being gathered home; but younger good and true men and women are following in their footsteps. Let us be thankful for that.

The April issue of the National Home Guard, of Boston, contains a spirited portrait of its talented editor and the Cynosure's esteemed and constant contributor, Miss Elizabeth E. Flagg, of Wellesley, Mass. This portrait also appears in the Independent Christian, of which she is one of the editors. There is no truer reformer in New England than Miss Flagg.

The recent local elections in Louisiana gave a large majority for the Democratic anti-lottery candidates. Of course, a Democratic victory might have been anticipated in a section where that party almost perpetually holds the balance of power. The novelty of the result is in the relegation of the Louisiana State Lottery to oblivion—an event for which all honest men may well "give thanks and sing." The suppression of this great evil is a triumph of public opinion, and foreshadows what may befall the saloon and the lodge if the people unite against them.

Albert A. Pope, one of the most prominent manufacturers in the Union, has recently addressed "An Open Letter to the People of the United States," upon the subject of improving the roads of the country by the best methods, and proposing that a special exposition of all such systems and processes be made a feature of the coming World's Fair. His idea embraces a suitable building on the Fair-grounds devoted to this purpose, in which can be grouped all the things which would be useful in educating the people how to make good roads. Every State he would have send cross-sections of roads, showing the construction best adapted to particular localities, taking into consideration the most available material of which roads may be constructed, with specimens of country road bridges, etc. A comprehensive exhibit of this kind, he thinks, would attract attention and become a powerful factor in bringing about effective national and State legislation for making and maintaining good roads. Further information respecting his design, which seems to be one in which a million of people are interested, can be obtained by addressing him at Boston, Mass.

California has been recently shocking her population with several positive earthquakes. In a few places considerable disturbance was experienced, with an annoying displacement of personal property; but, providentially, no important damage ensued. With David, the Californians may well exclaim: "The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs;" for that is about the sensation one experiences when "the earth trembles at the presence of the God of Jacob," and the solid ground becomes as "unstable as water."

The Cynosure is promised a new story from the pen of our esteemed contributor, Mrs. Victoria Alexandra Stone. In a recent letter she says: "Since the publication of those two sketches of mine in your paper, I have received several letters from its readers. One asks for further information concerning the story 'Saved by a Song.' I may as well answer here, that the stories are both true. The last one printed, 'Faithful unto Death,' is true, word for word. The one I intend sending in a few days—'How he Kept His Promise'—is also true. I am glad to do what I can to make the dear Cynosure an interesting family paper."

The Christian Standard (Cincinnati) prints a suggestive engraving, entitled "Polygamy Among the Poor" in Utah, taken from life. "It represents an old Mormon and his family, consisting of six wives and a number of children. It is not known how many children are at school, nor how many got away before the artist secured the picture." The house is very small, and looks as if it must be very much crowded when all the family are at home. "Such scenes were very common, a few years ago, all over Utah, but now are to be met with only in out-of-the-way places, where neighbors are few and far between. This kind of life is called, among the Mormons, 'living one's religion.' One can imagine how much religion, and what kind it is, that puts that old man, six women and twenty or thirty children, all in that one little log room, out on the desert." The man looks "habitually tired," but the women are engaged in various household duties. It is not an inspiring picture.

Life in the South, especially among the colored people, is not without excitement, and is liable to sudden extinction—rather too suddenly for contemplation with any degree of complacency. At Allendale, S. C., on the 20th of March, Bishop Jones, of the African M. E. church, ascended his pulpit and began to advocate holiness of life. If there is any one religious topic which Satan antagonizes and despises, it is this; and at the hands of his congregation the bishop had met with decided opposition and persecution. A division of the church ensued, and the opponents of holiness attempted to dislodge the preacher. On the evening referred to, during the services, a side window was stealthily opened, the muzzle of a gun was thrust through it, and a report followed. The outer door of the building was closed, the murderers having taken the precaution to fasten it from the outside, and when the gun was discharged, every light inside was extinguished

After a season of excitement in the darkness, lights were restored, and the bishop was found dead. But this event is only one of a long series of similar outrages in the Southern States, which are honeycombed with secret societies and desperadoes, against whom it is almost impossible, in the present condition of things, to guard.

There was a singular bit of intelligence printed in our "Religious News," last week, to the effect that the Mohammedans were raising funds to be expended in the conversion of the English people to the Moslem faith. Their first important step will be the founding of a Mohammedan institution in Liverpool. It is also reported that an Arabic paper with a circulation of 7,000, is to be issued in New York. The children of Ishmael, whose hand is against every man, and every man's hand against them, and whose religion numbers millions of adherents, and is one of warfare and bloodshed, bid fair to become a factor in the stirring events of the near future. They have already a notable colony in Chicago.

"SPECIFICATIONS:

"1. He says he intends to quit Masonry.
"2. He refuses to do anything for Masonry, either by his personal attendance or by paying his dues. This February the 18th, 1885.
"(Signed) M. E. BENNETT.
"Committee, J. M. Shelton, John Chitwood, and John Bennett, report charges sufficient."

The above charge was handed to me by John Chitwood. I asked him to request the lodge to correct the statements in the specifications and have them to read (thus): "That he says he quit Masonry more than two years ago; that he never had refused to pay dues; that they never had the face to ask me for dues."

I never attended the trial, but was informed that they only suspended me.

As the wheels of time rolled on, there were several copies of Edmond Ronayne's "Hand-book of Freemasonry" purchased in this country, and I was frequently asked if these books were true, (as I had examined them). I told the truth, by asserting that they were correct. How could I do otherwise when the Scripture says that the liar shall have his part in a lake which burns with fire and brimstone? The Psalmist David said: "He that worketh deceit shall not abide in my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight."

This acknowledgment to the truth was one that stirred the devil, so that some of the members began to assert that I could not be believed on oath.

Then they raised the cry: "Great is this (Diana of Ephesians.) Masonic fraternity. For this our craft is in danger of being set at naught. This institution is not to be spoken against." We remember that Paul, in his blind zeal in persecuting the saints, obtained authority from the high priests; but one young (and very zealous) Mason obtained authority from their so-called Worshipful Master, and approached me in the following language: "Now, Bro. Proctor, I am going to ask you a question, and I want you to tell me the truth."

I remarked that "If I tell you anything, I propose to tell the truth."

He then said: "We have heard that you are giving away the secrets of Masonry, and I want to know whether it is so or not." I said: "I will ask you a question; you answer my question, and I will answer yours. Did Wm. Morgan give away the secrets of Masonry?" He said: "I don't know." I said: "Did Ronayne give away the secrets of Masonry?" He said: "I don't know. I never read these books." I said: "Well, I say they did; that I am often asked if these books were true, and I asserted they were. I tell no lies to cover up this institution; will face any lodge in this State and say, these books are correct according to the way they gave it to me."

I further said: "Now I know that a great many of your members have said that these books were not true, but I say they are. Now who has lied about it?"

(Remember that the above conversation was the only evidence the lodge produced against me in my trial.)

Although he was acting under high authority, he seemed about as willing to turn me loose as he was to get a hold upon me. So when this member reported this interview to the lodge, they ordered the secretary to summon me to trial. He sent me the following:

"SUMMONS.

"HALL OF PLEASANT MOUND LODGE,
No. 234, F. & A. M., ELLSWORTH,
Logan Co., Ark., Nov. 14, 1891.

"BRO. S. F. PROCTOR:—You are hereby summoned to attend a regular meeting of this lodge on the 12th day of December, A. D. 1891, A. L. 5891, to answer to charges preferred.

"Witness my hand and the seal of this lodge, this the 14th day of November, 1891.

"M. M. MOORE, Secretary."

(No seal of the lodge on the above.)

There being no charges or specifications in the above, I was anxious to know what I was charged with by the lodge; and when I went up with W. J. Rodgers (one of the members), I said to him, that I did not know what they were going to try me for, unless it was for telling the truth. He said that they ought not to try a man for telling the truth. I said, "The truth is what hurts sometimes." He said that he asked C. A. Moss where he got his Masonry (it was an evident fact that C. A. M. knew Masonry), and he (Moss) said, "From Proctor."

After hearing this statement, and when the time came for my trial, I took C. A. Moss for a witness, and went to the lodge. On arriving I found the lodge open. I approached the inner door and handed the following request to the Tyler: "In answer to the summons sent me by M. M. Moore, I am here; will you please answer the following questions: 1st. Will you give me a fair trial? 2nd. Will you permit me to answer for myself? 3d. Will you admit my witness? Please answer soon. S. F. P." Very soon the Secretary arrived, and I requested him to furnish me a bill of the charges, with specifications. He promised to do so. After waiting for more than half an hour in the cold, J. S. Bennett, the Master, and J. W. Foster, ex-Master, came down to report, promising me that I should have a fair trial; that I should have permission to answer for myself, not in open lodge, but they would call off to refreshment and hear me; that they would appoint one of the members to take the evidence of my witness, but said that the lodge was not ready for the trial to-day. Then they asked my consent to put it off until the regular meeting in January. I consented to this request. This was their annual election day for officers, and just eight years from the last time I had met with them. They also furnished me a copy of the charge, as follows:

"CHARGE.

"By virtue of authority vested in me by the Worshipful Master of Pleasant Mound Lodge, No. 234, I charge S. F. Proctor with gross un-Masonic conduct.

"SPECIFICATION:

"He has violated his obligation as a Mason by exposing the secrets of the order." (No name signed.)

I soon learned that J. W. Foster was the prosecutor of my case, and was to try to bring some more charges. Very soon I received the following (to be added to the above charge):

"Bro. Proctor, in connection with the charge and specifications, I wish to add the specification of defrauding the lodge.

"(Signed.) J. W. FOSTER, Prosecutor."

On receiving this, I remarked that I was really glad they had called my attention to this defrauding business, as I wished to show this country who was defrauding the people out of their money; for they got, "right smart," that of which my family should have had the benefit.

After the trial was put off I began in earnest to investigate the subject of Masonry; and circumstances were such that I could not attend at the regular meeting in January, so I requested them to put it off until February. They did so, and before the day arrived for the trial I was advised by one of the members not to attend; that they were getting the thing up to a pretty high pitch, and that they would not hear me. I remarked that if they would not hear me there, it was a free country, and that I would be heard somewhere else. They had promised to have the evidence written down, and that I should see it. I became so confident that they were going to try me for telling the truth that I never had the evidence of C. A. Moss taken.

When the day arrived for my trial, the rain fell (almost) in torrents. C. A. Moss declined going with me. When I arrived, I requested the Tyler to call for a committee to meet me in the lower room. In less than five minutes they sent for me to come up into the lodge-room. On entering, being wet and cold, I went to the stove to warm. In a short time, J. W. Foster approached me and said: "As soon as you warm, come over here to the Secretary's table." I went, saying that I could not say that I was ready for trial, "not knowing what you aim to prove on me, and I did not know whether I would need any witness or not." He (Foster) said: "You have had plenty of time to be ready, sir. We aim to dispose of this case now."

I said that I knew that where men would get up false charges, they could also get up false evidence. He said, "Here is the charge, and here is the evidence; but that last specification I sent you I withdraw."

He then read the charge (violation of obligation by exposing lodge secrets); also the evidence. (See conversation between myself and J. H. Trusty, above printed.) I remarked that in making my defence I would like to give my reasons for retiring from the order. Foster said: "We could not hear a great long preamble out of you this evening, but will confine you strictly to this charge and evidence." I said: "In regard to the evidence, I say, as I said to J. H. Trusty, that I will face any lodge in the State, and say that these expositions of Masonry (to-wit, Morgan and Ronayne's,) are correct, according to the way it was taught to me in the lodge; and, taking the charge in connection with the evidence, I have this to say: That some of the members of your order who are considered among the best men in the country, and they claiming to be Christians, have asserted that these expositions are not Masonry; that the men who had them published knew no more about Masonry than the man in the moon, etc. Now, if these men who are considered reliable have told the truth, where is the foundation for your charge against me? I came to this trial for the purpose of ascertaining what you proved on me, and I find it to be, as I told one of your members (when you summoned me to trial to answer charges preferred, not giving them or any), that I did not know what you were going to try me for, unless it was for telling the truth. Now, I find that to be just what you are trying me for—acknowledging to the truth." Foster replied by saying: "You promised that you would not write, print, stamp, stain, hew, cut, carve, indent, paint, or engrave it on anything movable or immovable under the whole canopy of heaven, whereby or whereon the least letter, figure, character or resemblance might become legible or intelligible to yourself or any other person. Now you know you have violated this obligation." I said: "I do not regard this obligation as legal. I know, and every member in this lodge knows, that before taking this obligation the Master assured me that it should not conflict with my religious or political sentiments, be they what they may. The time came when these horrible oaths and idolatrous ceremonies did seriously conflict with my religious belief, and I made up my mind to quietly withdraw from the order by demit, but you would not permit me to do so; and this lodge was too stubborn to take the advice of the Grand Master." Foster said the Grand Master never so ordered.

A "SLIGHT BUT NECESSARY" MODIFICATION.—I.

BY J. T. MICHAEL.

In his great work entitled "The Self-Revelation of God," Professor Samuel Harris of Yale University says:

"Christianity is the one absolute and universal religion for all men in all ages. This is essential in the idea of redemption through God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. It is God's historical action, redeeming men from sin. It is the culmination of all preceding revelations. Christ is the king of God's kingdom on the earth.

..... The aim of Christianity is as broad as humanity and as far-reaching as the continued history of mankind in this world and the next. Christianity is the religion of promise, the future ever to be better than the past. It is the religion for all ages, brightening and expanding as the ages roll on. And as it is the religion for all ages, so it is also the one only religion for all nations, under the prevalence of which all men may dwell together in love as the children of their common Father in heaven, redeemed by the same Saviour, and animated by the same trust in God and love to God and man."—Pp. 529, 530.

This is strong language; but as to the relation of Christ and his religion to the world and its religions, it expresses the belief of evangelical Christianity. Where could you find an orthodox minister of the Gospel who would, in theory, object to it?

Here, for instance, is a member of one of our churches who contemplates joining a certain association. He goes to his pastor for advice. He tells him that he has heard many good things about the society, and that he thinks it would be beneficial to him to become connected with it. There is one thing, however, which troubles him, and in reference to it he would like to have his pastor's counsel. While reading a book which was published for the instruction of members of the order, he noticed that a portion of the New Testament was quoted. This impressed him favorably at first, but after comparing it with his Bible, he found that the name "Jesus Christ" had been left out. He supposed that this was an oversight upon the part of the printer, but when he asked a prominent officer of the brotherhood for the reason, he discovered that this was not the case. He was informed that the omission was intentional; that it was regarded as only a slight modification, and that it was necessary in order to bring the passage into harmony with the principles of the association. He was also told that this association was a religious institution, and that it had a plan for saving the soul.

What answer would we expect this pastor to give to his inquirer? Would he not reply, "My brother, there is only one course for you to take. Have nothing to do with this society. It is an enemy to your Saviour. Its doctrine of salvation is in direct conflict with the doctrine of the church to which you belong and of the Christianity which you profess." Certainly nothing less than this should be given by any one who claims to be a minister in any evangelical church in the land. Let us see whether it is what would actually be given in a vast number of instances. Does Freemasonry have a theory of salvation? and does this theory exclude the Lord Jesus Christ? In bringing New Testament quotations into harmony with its own teachings and fitting them for its own use, would Freemasonry leave out the name of Christ? and would it regard this as a "slight but necessary" modification?

"Lectures and Addresses" is the title of a book published by one of our largest official denominational publishing houses. The author, the late Rev. Thomas Gard, D. D., was a prominent minister in the denomination to which the publishing house belongs. In this book is a Masonic oration which was delivered by Dr. Gard before the Grand Lodge of Freemasons of California. From this oration I will give three extracts:

"Most Worshipful Grand Master and Brethren of the Grand Lodge: I am but a novice in Masonry, for 'I am but of yesterday' as to my membership, compared with many of the sage and venerable brethren before me. This will plead for me should I fail in my endeavor to express a few of my convictions regarding our honorable fraternity. But what I lack in age of membership may be made up by fullness of youthful fervor and ardent admiration of the system into whose mysteries I have had the honor of initiation. To me it has all the fascination of novelty, and in me there burns all the enthusiasm of a first love. From the freshness of my emotions I give utterance to the thoughts of the hour. Our system has many elements of attraction, and seems to me to have incorporated not a few principles fitted to impart stability and guarantee a noble immortality."—P. 350.

If these words have any meaning, they surely teach that Freemasonry is a most excellent society, to which Christians may belong without doing violence to any right rule of Christian conduct. But is not the praise here bestowed upon Masonry only such as might be bestowed upon an insurance or railroad company for which the speaker has an intense admiration? We shall see. Hear the orator again.

"Who can object to or oppose such a system as ours? Is he a moralist? Then here may he learn the purest ethics and practice the most manly virtues. Is he a patriot? Then here may he be helped in the culture of those principles which uphold government, reverence law, and promote that righteousness which exalts a nation. Is he a philanthropist? Then can we assure him that no less profoundly than he do we believe that pure Masonry, and undefiled before God the Father, is this—that we visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and keep ourselves unspotted in the world. . . . Is he a presbyter or priest? Then we tell him that religion shall find in us one of her most useful auxiliaries, one of her most fair and generous handmaidens, and that the theology which he inculcates we live to embody. We, as he, believe in one God; as he, in one great light of conduct, the Holy Bible; as he, in one great comfort and help in all seasons of trial, woe—even prayer; and, as he, anticipate another and a better world."—Pp. 354, 355.

Once more:

"Immortality is ours. Yonder our system warrants us in looking. The acacia sprig speaks of a life that survives the grave—of a being that smiles at death's darts—of a manhood 'born to the purple' of an immortal kingship. For that we are urged to live. From that we are urged to gather inspiration for the life that now is. Our ranks are suffering loss by the removal thence of honored and trusted brothers. They are not lost. They still practice their sublime art in building edifices of knowledge, wisdom and joy in some distant region of the Supreme Architect's domain. We shall meet them, if we be true and humble and faithful men. Aye, we shall meet them in possession of highest Masonic honors, and within the enclasping shelter of the most perfect of Masonic workmanship; most perfect, for is it not a 'city which hath foundations?' Is it not a city 'four-square,' having gates north, south, east and westward? Is not that Masonic? And we shall have our Great Light, even the Builder and Maker himself; and there shall be no need of the light of the candle. And there shall be no temple—no temple, as there shall be no tomb; no tomb, for all shall be life; no temple, for the spanless city is itself the temple—the house not made by hands, eternal in the heavens. Within that four-square city our brotherhood is gathering as the stream of time flows onward."—Pp. 362, 363.

I have given more space to these extracts than may seem necessary, but I have done so in order that the reader might get their full force. Where is there an institution which deserves higher praise than is here bestowed upon Freemasonry? Where is there a religious system which claims to do more for the human soul than is here claimed for Freemasonry? Suppose now that it should turn out that Freemasonry is an abominable, anti-Christian scheme, according to the theory of which the expunging of the name of Jesus from the New Testament in order to bring the New Testament into harmony with itself, is a "slight but necessary" modification, to what an awful conclusion are we forced!

PAPAL CLAIMS.

Rev. J. M. Foster, pastor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church in Boston, on Sunday, April 3, preached on "Papal Claims." We quote a portion of the sermon from the Boston Traveller's report:

The Pope was stripped of his temporal power in 1870, but his moral power correspondingly increased. He is the ecclesiastical head of 225,000,000 of people. Fifteen governments treat diplomatically with him. All the great powers of Europe accredit ambassadors to the Vatican. Even distant China and Japan wish to be related to the holy see. Rome has its eye upon this nation. Pope Gregory XVI. said: "Out of the Roman States, there is no country where I am Pope, except the United States."

In 1859 there were 21,000,000 Protestants and 2,500,000 Roman Catholics in this country. In 1868 there were 27,000,000 Protestants and 5,000,000 Catholics. The Catholics had increased 100 per cent in nine years, the Protestants less than 29 per cent. They number one-eighth of our population to-day. It is known that some of our Western Territories are colonized by them, and to admit them into the Union means to receive a Roman Catholic State. In every national election 1,000,000 are subject to the will of the Romish clergy, and they hold the balance of power when the election is closely contested. Lafayette said: "If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed they will fall by the hands of the Romish clergy."

In 1880 five and one-half blocks in the heart of New York City were given to the Romanists, worth at least three and one-half millions of dollars, and no consideration given in return. In 11 years prior to 1879, six million dollars were given to 127 Roman charities, schools and churches. The Tweed ring in 1869 exchanged for political influence of the Roman clergy in New York $800,000 in appropriations. The government at Washington gives support to schools among the Indians under the control of the various denominations. The Roman Catholic outlook and effort committee at the capital work while Protestants sleep, and secure the lion's share.

In 1889 the Catholics received 55.5 per cent, while all the Protestant denominations together received 44.5 per cent. And the Protestants comprise seven-eighths of the population, while the Catholics number only one-eighth. In 1848 a vast landed estate in Brooklyn, N. Y., was left by an old man under the hand of a priest to the Roman church. The tax on that property in 1880 should have been $100,000; but from 1848 to this day not one cent of tax has been paid. The hand from the Tiber is in our treasuries.

Vicar-General Preston said: "The man who gets his religion but not his politics from Rome, is not a good Catholic." The Pope claims the prerogative of changing the laws of any nation. In 1863 he declared the laws of New Grenada null and void. In 1856 the laws of Mexico, in 1855 the laws of Spain, in 1862 the laws of Austria were abrogated by the Pope. In 1077 Pope Boniface VIII. wrote to Philip the Fair of France: "Pope Boniface to Philip, king of France, greetings. Know thou, O supreme prince, that thou art subject to us in all things." This aroused Philip, and he replied: "Philip to Boniface, little or no greetings. Know thou, O supreme fool, that in governmental matters we are not subject to you or any other man."

All France re-echoed the scorn of Philip the Fair. And yet in one generation they sank back into the arms of papal despotism. In 1308 Pope Hildebrand kept Henry IV. of Germany standing outside the gates of Canossa four days in mid-winter, barefoot, and wearing the garb of a penitent. In 1872 Bismarck said in the German Parliament: "We are not going to Canossa physically or spiritually." But he did go to Canossa. Rome demanded the removal of Swinton's History from our public schools in Boston. It was done. Rome demanded that Catholic children be removed from our public schools and placed in parochial schools, and it is done. Rome demands a division of the school funds. Shall this be done also?

Out of 21,000,000 in Italy in 1864, only 3,500,000 could read. That is Rome. In the Catholic countries of Europe only 1 in 124 are in schools. In Spain 75 per cent cannot read. In Mexico 90 per cent cannot read. This is what Rome would do for America. Shall we quietly submit? Rome demands that the Bible be thrust from our schools. Then she calls them godless and condemns them. Let me quote a passage from a text-book in the parochial schools:

Q. Since the Roman Catholic church alone is the true church of Jesus Christ, can anyone who dies outside of the church be saved? A. He cannot.

Q. Did Jesus Christ himself assure us most solemnly, in plain words, that no one can be saved out of the Roman Catholic church? A. He did.

Q. Have Protestants any faith in Christ? A. They never had.

Q. Why not? A. Because there never lived such a Christ as they imagine and believe in.

Q. In what kind of a Christ do they believe in? A. In such a one of whom they can make a liar.

In 1588 Philip II. of Spain built the Invincible Armada to destroy Protestantism in England and make the papal tiara supreme in Europe. Charles IX. ordered the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, when 70,000 Huguenots were slain, and the Pope ordered Te Deums to be sung; a medal was struck by his order commemorating the event, and the ghastly scenes were portrayed on the walls of the Vatican. Rome set up the Inquisition in Spain. Rome chased the saints among the Alps and through the Low Countries until "every mountain became a monument, every valley saw executions, every village had its roll of martyrs." Rome has slain 50,000,000 Protestants. When Victor Emanuel entered Rome in 1870 the Pope thus cursed him:

"By authority of Almighty God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and of the holy canons, and of the undefiled Virgin Mary, we excommunicate and anathematize him. May he be damned wherever he may be; whether in the house or in the field, whether in the highway or byway, whether in the wood or water. May he be cursed in living and dying, in eating and drinking, in fasting and thirsting, in slumbering and sleeping, in standing and sitting; may he be cursed inwardly and outwardly; may he be cursed in his head, his hair, his hands and feet, his teeth and toe-nails, his mouth and throat, and eyes and ears."

The society of Jesuits was organized in 1540. The last three popes have recognized them, and authorized their priests to teach and hear confessions in all lands. They have an organization as perfect as my hand, the wrist of which is on the Tiber, and the fingers in all nations, manipulating civil and religious institutions.

They are a secret oath-bound society. Their general at Rome is called the Black Pope. They resort to murder as a weapon. They swear to obey their superiors at all hazards. There is the clearest evidence that they murdered Lincoln. The trial in Illinois, in which Lincoln defended Father Chiniquy and his assassination in 1865 are connected as cause and effect. The 100,000 confessional boxes in the United States are so many telephones connecting the Jesuits with our homes, our legislatures, our churches. The Jesuits know perfectly well what is going on. The famous gun-powder plot of 1665, to blow up the English Parliament, has its counterpart in what the Jesuits are doing for us to-day.

Father Hyacinth affirmed that 99 per cent of the priests in the confessionals were profligate. The confessional is appointing a time and place for unmarried priests to meet the wives, mothers and daughters of America, and make their yoke of celibacy an easy one. These monasteries are often the apartments of libertines, and these nunneries are sometimes houses of ill-fame. And it is stated that there have been discovered underground passages by which the lustful priest can meet his hooded paramour for beastly commerce. A Roman senator used to close his speeches with the words "Delenda est Carthago," "Carthago must be destroyed." So we say, "The Roman Catholic hierarchy, with its Jesuitical order, must be destroyed." If we do not crush the viper, the viper will crush us

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A funny episode.—Rev. J. M. Foster at Music Hall.—A statement from a saloon organ.—A pleasant anniversary.—"Puck" ridicules secret societies.

Easter has passed with all the good and evil—the latter, alas! greatly preponderating—which is bound up in the observance of this Romish holiday. I think many a devout heart feels a conscious relief when it is over, and advertisements of "Easter millinery," "Easter openings," and other things connected, not with religion but the frivolous world of fashion, no longer meet the eye to offend the truly devotional spirit. But the marvel is that with the wonder of the spring-tide all about us, when every swelling leaf-bud and singing bird is a preacher of the Resurrection, worldliness and skepticism can exist at all.

A funny little episode occurred recently at the Methodist Ministers' Meeting, which caused anti-secretists, and some who perhaps had never committed themselves in favor of the cause, to "smile a little smile," like Browning's pied piper. When choosing representatives to the General Conference, one of the delegates, in acknowledging the honor which his brethren had conferred upon him, inadvertently alluded to "the time when we shall all meet together in the Grand Lodge above." A moment made him aware of, and rather chagrined, over his mistake, but such slips of the tongue will very naturally occur when one is more familiar with the language of Masonry than with that of the heavenly Canaan.

I notice that Rev. J. M. Foster's grand sermon at Music Hall, last Sunday, is very fully reported in the Traveller. Bro. Foster's every stroke tells, and his blows are as mighty against Romanism as they are against Masonry. When the mask is once torn away, and the public can be made to see those Jesuit priests at Claremont College fabricating Masonic degrees to kill republican liberty in England, and introduce popery with all its cheerful concomitants of stake and prison for heretics, Masonry's strongest bulwark will be gone. There is a terrible unity in evil, and yet this unity once perceived, fighting it will be comparatively easy. It is the seeming quarrel between the hydra-heads of the old serpent that deceives unthinking people into imagining that they can play off one against another, Kilkenny-cat fashion. What is license, high or low, for instance, but "the sale of indulgences" to commit every crime in the decalogue? That it is issued by the civil instead of the ecclesiastical power does not make any real difference while Christian men endorse it by their votes.

At the meeting of the New England Presbyterians in Boston, last Tuesday, the committee reported among the obstacles to the progress of religion, "Romanism, socialism, infidelity, Sabbath-breaking, Sunday newspapers, excursions on the Lord's day, and want of church accommodations," but omitted entirely any mention of the secret societies, which are doing more than Romanism or infidelity to weaken the churches; for these are foes without, while the lodge is entrenched within. This committee needs a "shock of enlightenment."

The Rutland (Vt.) Herald, is a liquor paper. Indeed, it is rum-soaked to such a degree that I do not know as it would much surprise me, when reading it, to see the letters burn with a blue light. Here is the way it handles the question why it is so hard to convict rumsellers: "The jury is sure to include men who will stretch every point against conviction; and men whose word is perfectly good everywhere else will lie under oath right and left as witnesses in a liquor case." The Herald does not tell the cause of this astonishing failure of veracity, or seem at all conscious that it is making a statement which is in itself the most terrible arraignment of the rum-traffic possible; but no one will have any trouble in accepting it who has witnessed the searing effect of their lodge oaths on the consciences of Masonic jurors.

Last Monday evening, April 18, was an anniversary, marking the second mile-stone in our department of parlor meetings, so successfully conducted by Rev. J. P. Stoddard; and as the 19th was the birthday of that dear woman who first conceived the idea of opening her heart and home for this purpose, it was celebrated with some variations from the usual program. Brother and Sister Powers have lately changed their residence to 386 Warren street, thus making a new centre of influence for the cause. After the preliminary exercises of prayer and song, Bro. Stoddard made some brief remarks, in which he alluded rather ambiguously to a picture painted by his wife, whose hidden Masonic meaning he would leave her to explain. It was an oil painting, finely executed, of a rustic winter scene; sheep in the foreground crowding to drink where the ice had been broken; that unflinching adjunct of a true New England landscape, a bit of stone wall; while in the background the spire of the village church, and a rift in the clouds above through which shone a space of clear, blue sky, gave to the whole a rare poetic charm. The handsome frame and the easel on which it stood were contributed by the friends in whose name, both of present and absent ones, Sister Stoddard very beautifully and tenderly presented this token of their affection and esteem.

Brother and Sister Powers were genuinely "surprised;" by the way, I have noticed that it is always very easy to "surprise" people who, like them, have their heart and hands so filled with good works that they have no time to be unduly inquisitive;—but made a very happy and feeling response. Mrs. Eliza Trask Hill, of the Woman's Voice, and Rev. S. F. Porter, so well known to Cynosure readers, were among the honored guests of the evening, and contributed to the interest of the occasion by short speeches. At the close, Bro. Comstock, of Charlestown, a seceded I. O. O. F., gave a simple, straightforward testimony against the lodge and its evil associations. Thank God, that such witnesses are multiplying. The Bernards and the Finneys have done their work on earth, but their spirit yet lives.

Puck has been making fun of the secret society crank. We have heard of the anti-secret crank so long that it is quite refreshing to see the tables turned. In one scene, an admiring visitor remarks on the wonderful family resemblance between what he takes to be portraits of his host's distinguished relations which adorn the wall, but is told by the latter that they are all pictures of himself in the uniforms of the different secret societies to which he belongs. In another, a very gorgeous individual, with monstrous epaulettes, a plumed hat so big as to nearly extinguish him, and a rising sun painted on his Masonic apron, is besieged by admiring Orientals who are prostrating themselves in the dust before him, to the great amusement of a ring of onlookers, and the bewilderment of a burly police officer to whom he thus explains the situation: "Why, you see, officer, I'm on my way to a parade of the 'Noble Hidalgos of the Rising Sun,' and these foreigners here think I'm some kind of a god, and they're worshipping me." This shows that our anti-secret agitation has done some good. That part of the public who care nothing for the religious side of the question, are beginning to see the ridiculous side of it. I doubt if even Puck would have dared to go so far a few years ago.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 20, 1892.

Two important matters pertaining to the foreign relations of the United States have been before the Senate this week. First came the official correspondence between this government and Great Britain and the new modus vivendi, which was signed by Sir Julian Pauncefote and Mr. Blaine, at the latter's residence, on Monday. It provides that the catch of seals for this season shall be limited to 7,500 for the support of the natives of the islands of St. Paul and St. George, and that vessels offending against this provision by poaching may be summarily seized by ships representing either of the contracting parties, and turned over to the nation whose flag they fly for trial and punishment. It also binds the United States to pay for damages sustained by Canadian sealers, if the arbitration court shall decide against the claims of the United States. The last clause is the only one to which there was any opposition, but there was not enough to prevent the very prompt ratification of the agreement, which leaves the arbitration court free to settle the long-disputed questions.

The other matter which came up in the Senate to-day may not be settled so satisfactorily, as it is by no means certain what the final action of the Senate will be on the Chinese Exclusion bill, which passed the House recently. The Committee on Foreign Relations has reported, as a substitute for the House bill, the Senate bill, extending for ten years the present laws against Chinese immigration; but already there is much opposition to the report, and an effort will be made, headed by the Senators from the Pacific States, to pass the House bill. It is expected that the final result will be a compromise of some sort.

Postmaster General Wanamaker thinks that the cutting down of the Postoffice Appropriation bill to the extent of $3,000,000 by the House, will, if it be concurred in by the Senate, result in preventing any extension of the postal service, either in railway service or free delivery; also that the special service which it had been expected to establish on the grounds of the World's Fair will have to be abandoned, unless it shall be provided for in an independent appropriation bill.

It is gratifying to note that nearly every member of the United States Supreme Court is actively interested in church work of some kind; such examples are productive of untold good, particularly among the young men, who will in the course of time direct the destinies of this nation. Justice Strong, who is president of the American Tract Society, presided over the sixty-seventh annual meeting of that organization, which was held here this week, at which interesting addresses were made by Gen. O. O. Howard, the vice-president, and Rev. William A. Rice, D.D., of New York, the secretary. The annual report showed that this society utilizes 150 languages in presenting religious truths to people in all sections of the world, and that it has issued 12,314 distinct publications, of which 664,118,039 copies have been circulated. During the past year the employes of the society have visited 117,703 families, and distributed 96,196 volumes. The society is making arrangements for a striking exhibit at the World's Fair.

Every year the observance of Easter Sunday is becoming more general in the churches of all denominations, and last Sunday there were few churches in Washington that did not have a special service of music, appropriate to the day, and most of them also had beautiful floral decorations, although, of course, the most elaborate observances were by the Episcopalians and Catholics.

The Methodist ministers of the city, at their last meeting, adopted the following resolution: Resolved, That, as the icemen of this city are making an earnest effort to secure for themselves Sunday rest, and appeal to us for sympathy and support in this difficult undertaking, we heartily commend their laudable desire and efforts to secure for themselves the physical and moral benefits of the Sabbath, and that we will use our personal influence in their behalf in a private way; and that we will, also, from our pulpits advise and urge our people to dispense with their services on the Sabbath so that they with us may enjoy the quiet and rest of the Lord's day.

To-morrow, at Mrs. Wanamaker's residence, Miss Sickles will tell about the proposed Indian congress for the World's Fair and will read the story of the ghost-dance song written by a full-blooded Sioux Indian.

Mrs. Harrison is now thought to be convalescent, but during the last week she had several very bad days.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., April 7, 1892.

The action of Congress in regard to the Geary Chinese Exclusion bill is pronounced by all the non-partisan journals to be a shameless one, in violation of solemn treaties and international comity. It is quite in keeping with our abuse of the Indians. Chauncey Depew says that our fathers stole their grounds, and shot them if they defended them; bought this island where New York now stands for $24 an acre and got the Indians to spend the money in liquor; and now that they are reduced to one quarter of a million, and we, sixty-five millions in number, have created an Indian agency which robs the red man on the one hand and the government on the other. We refuse them rakes and hoes, and call them lazy because they will not farm; starve them, and when they fight, slaughter them. "They cannot put a scratch upon our glory, but our treatment of them should burden our conscience forever."

We paid dearly for our inhumanity to the colored people of our land whom we made chattels. We are treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath in our treatment of the Mongolian and the Indian. Would that we had again some stalwart statesman, like Sumner, in the Senate to plead for the oppressed; but we look in vain. There were two voices, indeed, the other day, whose protest against the fatuous and ignoble course in reference to China was heard, but in the unseemly haste and passion of the hour they were unheeded. Judgment is sure. Not long ago I stood at Lucknow, Delhi, and Cawnpore, where Englishmen were butchered, their wives and daughters dishonored, in 1857, when Sepoy hate culminated in bloodshed. The history of the East Indian Company, for more than two centuries then, was read in a lurid light. We are repeating history now.

Between the repeated arraignments of Professor Townsend at Boston, and the unsavory matters partly uncovered in the State Conference, now here in session, our brethren of the M. E. church do not occupy a very desirable position. Some of us who have been educated to believe in a church without a bishop, as well as in a state without a king, are feeling more satisfied than ever with our simple notions of polity, as we are obliged to see so much in head-lines and lower-case, in Roman caps and in italics, of "ecclesiastical sneaks, clerical politics, church bribery," and other ways which are dark and tricks that are vain. One can hardly wonder at the exodus which Professor Townsend says is in progress, if it is true that money is offered and paid for votes, and that the recent election of a prominent bishop was secured by methods "which would disgrace ward politics." The strictures which the Cynosure has made in reference to the evil influence of secret societies in this communion, specially, appear in a new light in view of the facts revealed the past week.

The Nation uses a felicitous phrase in speaking of the luxurious crop of biographies which appears at the death of any famous or notorious person, as a "fungoid growth on new-made graves." Many of these productions are hasty and harmless, the product of scissors and paste, made to order at short notice, like some cheap garment. The turgid talk of Ingersoll at the burial of Whitman is an illustration of the ill-digested statements that are flung out on such occasions. To call him "the most eminent citizen of America" is too silly to mislead anybody. To say that "thousands of millions, after we are dead, will take his hand as they walk down to the shadow of death," is but a sample of that "delirium tremens of rhetoric" which has been said to characterize a well-known Brooklyn pulpiteer, and will do no harm. It is impious, but will deceive nobody. Common sense teaches us that we need stronger hands, and cleaner hands, too, in that hour, than those which wrote "Leaves of Grass," to a reprint of which, a decade ago, even secular authorities objected on account of its apparent atheistic uncleanness.

But fungi are not always harmless, and Ingersoll's lecture last Sunday night, in Brooklyn, was one of the most virulent attacks on Christianity, "a menace to public morals," as the Brooklyn Eagle said some viewed it among our law-abiding citizens. It is no time now, when corruption marks high places and low; when secret conspiracies of all sorts imperil life and virtue, and when anarchy flaunts its red flag on either continent, to relax the sanctions of law and of a Christian civilization; to sneer at the Jehovah of the Jews as less worthy of respect than the clowns of Shakespeare, and to assert that nobody knows that there is any God at all. Here are more than two thousand people packing our largest theatre, each reserved seat a dollar, and in the midst sits the mayor, we are told, with interested smiling face, a Presbyterian communicant, and around him other magistrates of the city of churches, to give their personal and official approval to this bold blasphemer, who has prostituted his oratorical ability in holding up religion to scorn, and so poisoning the youth who listen. A protest was sent to the proprietors of the theatre against this desecration of the Lord's day by this money-making attack on the Christian sentiment of Brooklyn, and even a Romish priest calls it simply infamous; but the city and its government seem to welcome the blot, and practically say to all of us, "what are you going to do about it?"

REFORM NEWS.

THE COLLEGE AGENT IN BOSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., April 18, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my coming to Boston, I have been kept very busy in our reform work. On Sabbath, the 10th, I preached in the United Presbyterian church, on Berkeley street, Rev. Mr. Hood, pastor.

I visited the Newton Theological Institution, at Newton Center, on the 13th, and found that seminary ready to receive our anti-secrecy books.

On Monday evening I addressed a reform meeting in Mrs. Stoddard's parlor; which, though small, proved to be very enthusiastic, and we had a very interesting evening.

There is a flourishing missionary training school on the corner of Clarendon and Montgomery streets, where young men and women are fitted for missionary work, by thorough instruction in Gospel doctrines and methods. The Rev. L. F. Chapel, the resident instructor, is assisted by several of the pastors of the city. It is a very successful enterprise. At 9:30 A. M., on the 14th, I addressed them, by invitation, on the evils of secret societies. I was very cordially received and our reform books were approved and accepted without any hesitation.

The next day, at Cambridge, I looked into the immense library of Harvard College, and found J. Q. Adams on Masonry. The librarian said they would be glad to have our reform books, and would give them a fair place on their shelves. This is said to be the oldest library in the United States, and appears to be well supplied with a liberal donation of funds.

The Society of Friends have a meeting and Sunday-school on Lord's day, at Wesley Hall, on Beacon Hill. I attended there on the 17th and, among others, gave a brief testimony for the dear Saviour, and his glorious work of salvation.

A very interesting time was had on Monday, at the residence of the Powers' family. It was of the nature of an anniversary, as the friends of reform had held cottage meetings in their parlor for the last two years. The first exercise of the evening was a little surprise. A beautiful picture was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Powers by Mrs. Stoddard, who is an adept in handling the brush, and had painted it for the occasion. After this there were quite a number of short speeches; one by Miss E. E. Flagg, of Wellesley, and one by a young man, who said he had been duped and drawn into the Odd-fellows' lodge, but now he came out and utterly renounced it.

I find the outlook about Boston much more promising than we are apt to find it in other large cities. It is in part, perhaps, because the better classes, morally and financially, reject decidedly the secret lodge system.

I find the city very much changed from what it was in A. D. 1865, when I attended the National Council. Boston has now really no neck, as the water is entirely shut out of Back Bay; and what was the mill pond is covered with busy streets and fine large buildings, with here and there a lofty spire; and alongside the noted Boston Common is an immense botanical garden. Corn Hill is hard to find; and where is Bunker Hill? Nothing remains but a square pile of earth, smoothed over with the shovel, and covered with a light sod, and the monument in the middle. There is not one mark of the old fortification left. Not one trace of the battle of Bunker Hill is there.

S. F. PORTER.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, Mass., April 23, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Bro. Porter is still with us. We are blessed in his counsels, and greatly enjoy his "communion and fellowship" in spiritual experience. He is ceaselessly active and possessed of remarkable vigor for one at four-score years. The monument he is building will remain a joy to the Redeemer and the redeemed when college edifices are "whelmed in the wreck of empires and the crash of worlds."

Bro. T. P. Stephenson, of Philadelphia, assisted Bro. Foster at his communion services last Sabbath. It was our happy privilege to attend and listen to two of his instructive sermons, and to renew an acquaintance always helpful and cheering. Bro. Foster's address at Music Hall, Sabbath afternoon, was probably not second to any in the series on Romanism delivered from that platform, in historical research and practical applications. His evident effort, and personal request to "honor the Sabbath" by refraining from all demonstrations, did not prevent frequent outbursts of approval, to which he was compelled to submit. In a few well-chosen sentences he placed Orangeism and all secret oath-bound societies in their proper attitude in the anti-Christian system. The "press comments," so far as they have come to my notice, overlook this feature of his address; but the large audience who heard will "ponder these things in their hearts."

Bro. Porter will doubtless speak of our visit at the Evangelists' Training School, in the Clarendon St. Baptist church, and of the kindly welcome we met from the professors and the class of between forty and fifty young men and women who are in training for Christian work in home and foreign fields.

Our last parlor-meeting was held with Brother and Sister Powers, at their new home, 386 Warren street, Roxbury. It was a kind of anniversary gathering, and some of the friends had prepared a little "surprise" for our host and hostess, who for two years have kept open doors for

CORRESPONDENCE.

ROMANISM AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

LIND, Wis., April 12, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Every now and then we find in the public press statements as to the position of the Roman Catholic church regarding secret societies. An address upon this subject was recently delivered before a Catholic audience in Milwaukee, Wis., by Rev. "Father" Abbelen. Its indictment of Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and Knights of Pythias as contrary to the Catholic church is able and convincing; but the facts and arguments apply with at least equal force to their relation to all other Christian organizations.

Speaking of the religion of Odd-fellowship, he said: "Their official prayer was without Christ, and therefore not Christian; the name of Jesus was carefully excluded, showing again that if the Odd-fellows are Christians, they are certainly so without Christ." This is an excellent reason for their exclusion from all Christian organizations; for "he that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father that sent him." John 5: 23. I am quite willing to concede that there are some truly Christian Romanists, and that they oppose secret societies on strictly Christian principles; and as Paul was glad to have the Gospel preached, even though the preaching was from envy and strife, so I am glad of any testimony against the lodge system; but doubtless the main reason why the Romanists oppose secret societies is one in which Protestants cannot sympathize: Many secret societies interfere with the confessional; hence the church opposes them.

Undoubtedly, a Christian church has a right to inquire into the character and conduct of its members, and if any of them become connected with any institution of questionable character, then the church has a right to know what kinds of obligations have been taken, and what sort of religious worship has been practiced. A church member who refuses to state the facts as he knows them, ought to be regarded as contumacious and unworthy of fellowship. To this extent a confessional may be tolerated. But an habitual and forced confession of all matters to a priest is so likely to be abused, that it has become justly opprobrious. Secret societies that are subordinate to the Roman church, and whose secrets may be communicated in the confessional, are not considered obnoxious. There are a large number of such societies, and they are increasing. Indeed, the lodge seems to be making inroads on the Romish church much as it has on Protestant organizations, and it seems only a question of time when they will all find toleration, if not sympathy.

The lecturer remarked that "the Catholic church has condemned, under excommunication, only the Freemasons, the Fenians and the Carbonari."

The Roman Catholic church, when it cannot create, pretty carefully follows public sentiment. It hates Protestantism, and seeks to destroy it. But Masonry is as utterly opposed to the nature and spirit of our holy religion, and even more so, than the church of Rome. It would be no more difficult for these two forces to unite in their warfare against Christ than it was for Pilate and Herod to unite. We do well to guard carefully against the encroachments of either.

H. H. HINMAN.

CHRISTIANITY AND MASONRY.

IRON HILLS, Iowa, April, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This question is a very delicate one to bring before the public at this age, especially for one who, like myself, has not entered upon a skirmish with Masonry publicly; but having no desire to act with a spirit of indifference toward this secret power, I wish to make a few statements upon their foundation, as they were published in a local paper at Maquoketa, Iowa, January 2d, 1892, after a banquet of Masons, on St. John's day.

The editor wrote these complimentary remarks over a response which one of the members uttered by one whom they called "Companion Zerubbabel," saying: "He found it necessary to refer at some length to the principal events and traditions connected with the early history of Masonry and to many of the acknowledged facts of sacred history. The most distinguished character connected with the destruction of the temple, the Babylonian captivity, and the erection of the second temple, was Zerubbabel, who was acknowledged as the prince of the house of Judah, or the prince of the captivity. It was through his instrumentality that the children of Israel finally regained their liberty and were permitted to return to their own country, there to engage in the noble and glorious work of rebuilding their city and temple. It was by his hand that the first stone of the building was laid and under his direction that it was afterward completed."

Special reference to these statements was then given in the paper, to-wit: "The foregoing incidents constitute the foundation of the beautiful ceremonies and sublime teachings of Royal Arch Masonry."

This great structure of Royal Arch Masonry seems to cling to outward, ceremonial, visible, or artificial coloring of a divine basis, neither Jewish nor Christian. Zerubbabel, who was called the prince of the house of Judah, was justly named, in being a descendant of King David and a representative of Christ himself. Matt. 1: 12; Luke 3: 27. This great treasurer and overseer of the temple gave money unto the masons and to the carpenters; meat and drink and oil unto them of Zidon, and to them of Tyre, to bring cedar trees from Lebanon to the sea of Joppa, according to the grant that they had of Cyrus, king of Persia. Ezra 3: 7.

The prophet Zechariah informed Zerubbabel that a greater work, of a more sublime nature, would be done in course of time, not under the Jewish dispensation but under the Christian, which would still excel his undertaking. The prophet spoke of the advent of Christ in saying: Zech. 3: 8-10: "Behold, I will bring forth my servant the Branch; for behold the stone that I have laid before Joshua; upon one stone shall be seven eyes; behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will remove the iniquity of that land in one day. In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbor under the vine and under the fig-tree."

The prophet illustrated Christ as St. John saw him on the isle of Patmos, as the Lamb that had been slain, having seven horns, and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. Rev. 5: 6. True Christianity of the apostolic age required a reconstruction and a spiritual rebuilding in the Christian era, which was accomplished through the Reformation. Hag-gai and Zechariah, the servants and prophets of God, stood by Zerubbabel to urge and admonish the people to rebuild the temple. Martin Luther and Zwingli advocated a rebuilding of the Christian faith, pointing men to Christ as the dispenser of spiritual power. The prophet gave a graphic account of the times, and continued with his prophecy, saying: Zech. 4: 1-5: "And the angel that talked with me came again and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep, and said unto me, What seest thou? And I said, I have looked, and behold a candlestick all of gold, with a bowl upon the top of it, and his seven lamps thereon, and seven pipes to the seven lamps, which are on the top thereof: And two olive-trees by it, one upon the right side of the bowl, and the other upon the left side thereof. So I answered and spake to the angel that talked with me, saying, What are these, my Lord? Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my Lord."

While the building at Jerusalem was erected through thousands of men by physical strength and power, after the Jewish captivity, these two olive-trees were to be endowed with spiritual powers (Rev. 11: 4 and 5) to lay a still greater foundation through their headstone of the Christian church, namely, Christ. The prophet said (verses 6 and 7): "Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the Word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts. Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it."

This was the message the great reformers proclaimed, inviting humanity to step out from Roman captivity, from modern Babylon, and to look to Christ. It would have been impossible to re-erect the Christian temple upon any secret principles; it had to be done in the manner the prophet declared it should be, with shouting and cryings. The next three verses point to Zerubbabel as being only a type and shadow of things to come. Zechariah, wishing further information in regard to the olive-trees said, verses 12-14, "And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive branches, which through the golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves? And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my Lord. Then said he, These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth." Zerubbabel stood before the Jews as the prince, governor and treasurer of the house of Judah, but through him came Christ as the Judge and Lord of the Christian race, as the Lord of the whole earth.

The cause of Christianity would stand in advance from its present position to-day if its professors, whether of the laity or the ministry, would take the character of Zerubbabel as an example of devotion and piety in its dealings with the unbeliever, the skeptic and its mixed host of Baal worshippers. The Masonic order with other kindred institutions approach Christians to-day with pleasing and loving words, as the adversaries did in Zerubbabel's time, when they were rebuilding the temple; they came to the Jews and said: Ezra 4: 2 and 3: "Let us build with you: for we seek your God, as ye do, and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of Esarhaddon, king of Assur, which brought us up hither. But Zerubbabel and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God: but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel. as King Cyrus, the king of Persia, hath commanded us."

Those moral, sympathizing representative people of the Gentiles were undoubtedly permitted to enter the court of the Gentiles, but not the court of the Jews, after its dedication.

Do Christians act so firmly and decidedly in matters of faith?

LITERATURE.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM: A Sermon Before the Missionary Society of the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Delivered Sabbath Evening, March 13, 1892, by Rev. R. C. Wylie, Pastor of the Wilkinburgh, Pa., Congregation, and Treasurer of the Pennsylvania State Christian Association (Opposed to Secret Societies). Pamphlet, 14 octavo pages. To be had from the editors of the Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter, Allegheny, Pa. Price 10 cents.

Starting out with the text in Matthew 24: 14—"This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations," Mr. Wylie enters upon a solution of the problem: "What is the special adaptation of the doctrine of Christ's kingly authority to missionary work?" which he proceeds to answer: I. The kingly authority of Christ as related to this command. II. The place assigned to the doctrine of Christ's authority while his servants are preaching the Gospel to all nations. III. The proper attitude of Christ's disciples to the kingdoms of the world in the light of the Gospel of the kingdom. Separation from the snares of the world Mr. Wylie believes to be the great consideration to be taken into account by those to whom our Lord's command is given. This principle is necessary, not only for the sake of consistency, but also to lead the church to act up to the divine plan, which contemplates the transforming of the kingdoms of the world, into the kingdom of Christ. The world-kingdoms are to be destroyed. The end of the present order of things is near. The kingdom of Satan will soon fall. The doctrine of the kingly authority of Christ, involving the principle of separation by his people from the kingdoms of the world is specially adapted to missionary work: Because it shows the authoritative character of the great commission. Its adaptation is seen in the clearness that it gives the work to be done—the bringing of the kingdoms of the world into the kingdom of Christ—and in making manifest the proper attitude of Christ's people while this work is progressing. The entire sermon is logical and convincing.

THE HYGIENIC TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION. In Three Parts. I. Nature and Cause of the Disease. II. Prevention and Treatment in its Earlier Stages. III. Treatment in More Advanced Stages. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D., Professor of Hygiene in the New York Medical College and Hospital for Women, and editor of the Herald of Health. One Volume, cloth, pp. 219. New York: M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street. Price $2.00. Sold by A. C. McClurg & Co., 117 Wabash ave., City.

The treatment recommended in this book is based upon the ground that a great majority of all cases of consumption in which patients have regained their health have been cured by hygienic remedies, and not by drug medication. In most instances, we are informed, the patients have applied these remedies themselves, often, perhaps, in a rude way, but, even thus applied, they have, it is claimed, proved of the greatest advantage. This work is an exposition of what is believed to be the best hygienic treatment for prevention and cure, and includes precautions against taking cold, enlarging the chest, Indian-club exercises, rowing, vocal gymnastics, special vocal exercises, scientific physical culture, horse-back exercise, strengthening the constitution, suitable clothing, the house and home, climate, baths and bathing, sun-baths, food and drink, the will and other psychic forces, self-help, cautions, etc.

For those who have a tendency to consumption, small chests, or weak lungs, with frequent colds, or are passing through any stage of the disease where the least hope of recovery is cherished, the plain and simple methods here advocated will possess interest and encouragement.

The Missionary Review of the World for May very appropriately has for its leading article in the department of "Literature of Missions," a review of the work of William Carey, who, in May, 1792, just one hundred years ago, founded his "Society for Propagating the Gospel among the Heathen." The review is written by George Smith, LL.D., F. R. G. S., of Edinburgh, Scotland. Other articles of special interest and timeliness in this department are: "Immediate and World-wide Evangelization," and "The Departure of Charles Haddon Spurgeon—Part II.," by the editor-in-chief, Arthur T. Pierson, D.D.; "Are Mission Converts a Failure—Part II.," by Rev. Archibald Trumbull, B. D.; "The Training of Missionaries," by Rev. Edward Storow. The "Monthly Concert of Missions" is devoted to "Siam," written by Rev. F. F. Ellinwood. Other departments have the usual interest and variety. Published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; 25 cents for single numbers. In clubs of ten, $1 50.

Mr. Henry Van Brunt, an acknowledged authority on all matters connected with architecture, begins in the May number of the Century his semi-official account of the housing of the World's Columbian Exposition. This illustrated series will give the point of view of the architects, explaining to the public the buildings which are now being erected at Chicago in relation to their special uses and to the general design of the Exposition. It will be seen from this first paper that the Exposition, in external appearance, at least, will be one of the most magnificent sights resulting from the handiwork of men.

John B. Alden, 57 Rose street, New York, is publishing a weekly illustrated literary paper entitled Knowledge. This paper undertakes to give, in attractive form, the largest amount of useful knowledge and choice literature which can be given for 50 cents a year. It starts out with four pages a weeks which the publisher engages to increase as fast as his subscription list will warrant. The specimen number before us contains a motley of Longfellow's "Evangeline," with many fine illustrations. Subscriptions can begin with any issue of the paper.

OBITUARY.

MRS. E. C. ANDRUS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I think there are readers of the Cynosure, friends of my dear father and mother, who will learn with sadness of the death of my mother, Mrs. E. C. Andrus, on Sunday, April 3, at Lebanon, Missouri.

She had been sick only five days, and it was not until three days before the end that her disease was called pneumonia. She had been in Lebanon, Mo., since last October, where she had gone to live with her younger daughter, who was principal of the high school in that place. Her remains were taken to Otisco, Mich., and she was laid beside her husband, Rev. James L. Andrus, who was killed by a fall only two years ago last October.

My father and mother will be remembered not only as faithful workers, but patient sufferers for the cause of the right against secret societies. To us who are left in bitter bereavement, my one sister and myself, comes the inheritance of their beautiful, patient, long-suffering lives, which to us is a greater glory than all the riches of the earth could be.

FLORENCE ANDRUS.

LODGE NOTES.

The aggregate assets of the 324 K. P. lodges of Indiana amounts to $482,680.08.

The minimum fee for initiation and membership in Masonic lodges meeting in Philadelphia cannot be less than $75, and elsewhere in the State not less than $40.

The Pythian Grand Lodge of Michigan met in Bay City, March 16, with representatives from 127 lodges. The present membership of the 127 lodges of that jurisdiction is 8,309.

Two lodges in Baltimore assisted a fraud recently, and the Telegram says: "If the two lodges that assisted a fraud had been subscribers to the Telegram they would have saved money."

The Masonic Temple, of Philadelphia, and the ground on which it stands, cost $1,567,578.41. In 1891, $63,000 was paid, reducing the remaining indebtedness to $713,569.58, which remains unpaid, and is placed at 4 per cent. The lot is 150x245 feet, bounded by four streets.

The members of fraternal societies in Kentucky are at present much exercised over a bill introduced into the legislature of that State known as the McChord bill, which if it becomes a law will strike a deathblow to all beneficiary societies in Kentucky. The following are some of the provisions of the bill: All beneficiary societies, lodges, etc., shall be classed as life-insurance companies and shall file annual reports of their business with the insurance department, with a fee of $25. Every policy or certificate shall state the sum of money which it promises to pay, which shall not be larger than the amount of one assessment upon the entire membership, and the number of days after satisfactory proof of the death of the member, at which such payment shall be made. If not paid within thirty days, the commissioner shall notify such order or association to suspend business. Whenever it appears to the commissioner that the liabilities of any such order, society, or association exceed its resources, he shall close the business of the association, and appoint a receiver for its affairs. Another clause (it is claimed) virtually prohibits members of beneficiary societies of other States, doing business in Kentucky under restrictions, from soliciting their friends to join those orders, unless the solicitors are licensed by the insurance commissioner.

After suffering horribly for years from scrofula in its worst form, a young son of Mr. R. L. King, 706 Franklin street, Richmond, Va., was recently cured by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other medicine can approach this preparation as a cleanser of the blood.

ANNUAL MEETING

OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,
MAY 11, 1892.

The Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association will occur on Wednesday, May 11th, 1892, at 10:30 A. M., in Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill., for the election of officers, and the transaction of other important business.

ALEX. THOMSON, President.

"SOUTHERN BARBARITY."

Under this title the New Orleans (La.) Tribune, of a recent date, recounts in nearly three columns numerous outrages committed upon the persons and property of the colored people in the South, and also reveals the inhumanity with which they are treated and the injustice meted out to them by the whites.

The Tribune's statement of the case, even after all due allowance has been made for exaggeration consequent upon the excitement which naturally exists where the events occurred, may be accepted with a good deal of confidence as a picture of barbarism greatly to be deprecated, and one entirely foreign to the spirit of freedom invoked by the founders of this nation.

Personal dislike of a Negro by a white, whatever its motive, too often leads to the destruction of the former. A white woman has only to accuse him of an assault, and straightway the Negro is lynched by an angry mob. If he endeavors to escape from his persecutors, whether innocent or not, "fifty or a hundred men are mustered with Winchester rifles and bloodhounds, and the country for miles around is terror-stricken with these inhuman devils crying for Negro blood." If caught, as he is almost sure to be, a mock trial, or none, followed by hanging or shooting, concludes the barbarity.

Really, it reads like a chapter from the ante-war records of the South.

"Arkansas," says the Tribune, "seems to be leading in this unjustifiable course of crime;" and then it cites the case of the Negro, at Texarkana, Ark., who was burned at the stake, last February, his accuser, a white woman "of respectable family," setting fire to the fagots with her own hand!

"The Negro has suffered for the last thirty years more than the persecuted Huguenots of France in gone-by centuries. The blood of too many innocent Negroes in the Southern States is crying to the just Judge of all the earth for vengeance, for our God to refrain his wrath and vengeance much longer. If a white man employs a Negro to work, and in turn refuses to pay him, the poor Negro dare not ask for his hard-earned wages, or his employer will shoot him down at will or call in a posse in midnight, to hang him to a tree."

"The outside world never gets a true report of these heinous and fiendish crimes. The associated press representatives are either greatly in sympathy with Southern barbarity or they are afraid to give the truth to the outside world."

"The white people of the South seem slow to understand that the Lord will fight the battle of the just. We are led to believe that every Negro editor should begin to speak out on this important question. We have but one time to die, and we are as willing to die one way as well as another. We have been quietly submitting to this reign of terror in Louisiana since the time of the white Leagues and Ku Kluxism, and the hearts of the blood-thirsty whites of the South have not grown sufficiently humane to cease their brutality yet; and it seems the more submissive we are, the worse they get."

The Tribune advocates retaliation by the Negroes. Of course no Christian can approve of this suggestion, in the light of the Gospel: "Vengeance is MINE, saith the Lord, and I will repay." The aggravation is great, but the vengeance, when it falls, will be heavy. And what will it avail the Negro if he undertakes to fight his own battles, with all the disadvantages under which he labors? And how terrible it would be were he to share in the vengeance of the Lord when it is visited upon his enemies, because he has lacked confidence in the power of God to avenge him!

The remedy for these evils lies in the power of the Federal Government at Washington. It only needs the co-operation of the President, his Cabinet and Congress in the enforcement of the Constitutional amendments adopted for the security of the Negro, and the perpetuity of his rights assured by the Civil Rights law, to deliver him out of the hands of his oppressors. Our national honor and safety are staked upon this issue.

LODGE-RIDDEN JURIES.

The experience of a legal practitioner in a Western State with a lodge-ridden jury is furnished to us by himself. "I suppose," he writes, "I ought to give you some account of the progress of the war against mammon and lodgery which is being waged here. I have no fear of any personal assault, although my client, Mr. ———, was attacked and beaten badly. The trials of the S—— cases began March 21st, continuing all the week, and will be resumed April 13th. I succeeded in the first case. In the second the verdict of the jury was $500 damages. To-day I argued my motion to vacate the verdict and for a new trial, on several grounds; among others, that one of the jurymen (a G. A. R. 'comrade'), in the jury-room, urged that inasmuch as the plaintiff was a G. A. R. man—he had been a paymaster in the army!—he ought to have large damages! In my argument I stated that if jurymen, having taken a solemn oath to try an issue of fact impartially, can take their lodge prejudices into the jury-room; and there, regardless of the testimony and the charge of the court, award damages to the plaintiff because he is a 'comrade' or a brother Mason, and if for this wrong the law affords no remedy, then our trials are mere farces, or rather tragedies, and the sooner we adjourn our courts sine die the better. The judge promptly denied my motion; and I shall take the case to the (State) Supreme Court and see what the seven judges will do."

This sort of legal practice is by far too disgraceful and too common. If this tampering with justice by lodge devotees continues, equality under the law, upon which the Revolutionary fathers founded this republic, will soon become myths and we shall become a nation of reprobates, deserving to be driven out of the temple of God with the scourge of his wrath.

Upon this subject an intelligent friend comments as follows; and we commend his words to all who esteem the secret lodge as the handmaid of religion and truth: "If our lawyers would enter their combined protest, we could make short work of the lodge nuisance. But the trouble is that that they are 'in it.' Masonry here is very quiet, but quietly extending. It receives open rebuke from more than one of the local ministry, and the most aggressive of these told me he had your paper. I have no doubt that it (Masonry) works to make official nominations. One preacher here urged the idea that Jephtha's oath taught us that any oath should be executed!"

That last expression contains the very spirit and practice of the entire lodge system—implacable, murderous, and condemnable.

AMEND THE POSTAGE LAWS.

As very many of the Cynosure readers may perhaps be aware, all paper-covered novels and boys' and girls' flash story-books are carried in the mails (under the present regulations) as "second-class matter," at one cent per pound for postage; while Bibles, school, scientific, religious and miscellaneous books, bound and unbound, are rated as "third-class matter," and pay postage at eight cents per pound. A bill has been introduced in Congress, removing this unjust discrimination in favor of fiction and demoralizing literature, and requiring all books (other than magazines and periodicals) to pay the same rate of postage. The number of this bill is, in the Senate, 2825, and, in the House, 5067.

Twenty million pounds of these books, about 90 per cent of which are foreign fiction, are carried in the mails annually, at a cost in cash to the people (in excess of the postage received) of $1,200,000, a fact that appeals forcibly to every sense of justice for correction, and demands the efforts of every individual to secure it.

John Wanamaker, Postmaster General, has published several very important reasons why the law should be changed, either of which fully justifies the interest of the public in its behalf. Briefly they are as follows: (1.) The enjoyment of the privilege of low postage by these paper-covered novels, often vicious in character and enervating to the mind, works an injustice to the publishers of all other (and especially good) books. (2.) This discrimination, by the postal authorities, seems to operate against American authorship. Most of the books now carried in the mail as second-class matter are of foreign origin. (3.) Works of fiction (often licentious) are given an advantage over works of science, religion, education, and all the other departments covered by literature in volumes. Other reasons, quite as pertinent, may be advanced, but none is more cogent than the simple injustice in the ruling discrimination.

The bill before Congress assumes, therefore, the importance of a necessity; but it seems to make it the duty of every well-disposed citizen to create a proper influence upon Congress for its success. It is therefore suggested that every friend of the proposed change in the law should write a personal letter to the Senators and members of Congress from his State, mentioning the bill by number, as above described, and also to the Representatives on the Postoffice Committee from his State, giving reasons for desiring the passage of the bill, and asking them to use their influence for its passage; also, to secure the interest of as many other persons as possible, and induce them to write similar letters to Senators and Congressmen; also to interest the local newspapers in the matter, sending marked copies of their notices to Senators and Congressmen. As Congress will adjourn within a few weeks (probably), immediate action in the premises should be taken.

The Postoffice Committees in Congress are as follows:

Senate: Messrs. Sawyer, Wis.; Mitchell, Ore.; McMillan, Mich.; Wolcott, Colo.; Dixon, R. I.; Washburn, Minn.; Colquitt, Ga.; Bloodgood, N. J.; Brice, Ohio; Irby, S. C.; Chilton, Texas.

House: Messrs. Henderson, N. C.; Blount, Ga.; Wilson, Mo.; Dunphy, N. Y.; Alderson, W. Va.; Brookshire, Ind.; Kyle, Miss.; Pattison, Ohio; Crosby, Mass.; Coldwell, Ohio; Wilson, Wash.; Bergen, N. J.; Loud, Cal.; Caine, Utah; Wheeler, Ala.; Hayes, Iowa.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

Wheaton College opens the spring term with the largest spring term enrollment on record. The new catalogue is being printed on the college press, and will show a larger number of students in the college classes than any preceding catalogue. The Science department has been moved into the new building.

W. C. Coffin, leader of the Imperial Quartette, instructor of vocal music in the Moody Institute, Chicago, and a successful leader of church choirs, has organized a large chorus class. His work as instructor of vocal music, during the past term, was very acceptable and promises to be equally so this term.

ABRIDGING THE FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

The lodge rule is gradually extending itself into all classes of American institutions which it does not yet govern, and among its latest movements is an attempt to injure the circulation of free and independent newspapers. The matter is thus pointedly exposed by an intelligent correspondent in an Eastern city, who writes as follows:

"The city government of York has just passed an ordinance requiring all who take subscriptions" (for newspapers like the Cynosure and, indeed, all other periodical publications) "to pay five dollars license per year, in addition to all other licenses. . . . The penalty is $50 fine, or one month in jail.

"Now I believe that this is all Jesuitic, and a blow at all newspapers everywhere. It is no doubt a plan to be carried out in all cities and towns of the United States. I suggest that we make a grand attack on all licenses, the high and low, and (especially) on the whole Romish license system. It is outrageous."

The language of our correspondent is none too strong. That of the Federal Constitution is equally significant: "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech or of the press;" and what the national parliament cannot do, the people and the press will not permit to be done by any State, city or other subordinate government. All such annoyances as that of which our correspondent complains are the result of religious, political or "boodle" influences, excited by prejudice or avarice, and should be as promptly resisted and squelched as was the odious British "stamp tax," which the thirteen original colonies stamped out in the early days of the Revolution.

—Subscribers to the Cynosure who have copies of the issue of March 17, 1892, and do not care to keep them, will oblige us by sending them to this office.

—The Insurance bill introduced into the Democratic State Legislature of New York originally contained provisions that threatened to destroy the numerous fraternal endowment societies in that State; but before its final passage the obnoxious clauses were eliminated. The pressure brought to bear upon the members by the large number of men who belong to the fraternal orders, and who are voters, was too strong to be resisted.

reformers on Monday evenings. The exercises were informal: A song by Miss Ella Curtis; prayer by Bro. Stephen Grover; reading the Scriptures, and remarks by your New England agent; the presentation of a token of grateful recognition, with a few words, by Mrs. A. E. Stoddard, with responses by Brother and Sister Powers; short talks by Mrs. E. Trask Hill, Miss E. E. Flagg and Bro. Porter, followed by gentle but forcible words from Bro. O. W. Comstock, who appeared among us for the first time, and told how he was induced to unite with the Odd-fellows and how the "love of Christ constrained" him to "come out from among them," and how his testimony in a prayer meeting created a commotion, etc. This young brother feels no restraint on account of any obligation he has taken, and no fears for his personal safety.

A sentence or two from a personal communication will not, I am confident, be deemed a breach of confidence in this connection: "Believe me to be very much interested in this work, and I shall be ready at every opportunity to testify from my experience against the curse of secret societies. I shall be heard from some day on this question, etc. Again, I thank you for your interest in writing to me, and the interest you have shown in doing so," etc. A brief chart-talk on Masonic degrees invented by Jesuit priests; refreshments prepared by our hostess; another song, and a word of prayer, closed a very enjoyable and profitable evening.

Word came yesterday morning that Bro. Powers was taken suddenly and, it was feared, quite seriously ill. I saw him at noon, and he was feeling more comfortable. His physician attributes his trouble to an over-tax of his brain, and thinks that with careful nursing and absolute quiet he may soon recover. I am confident that I voice the earnest wish of Brother and Sister Powers when I ask every friend to join in the "prayer of faith" that our sick brother may be raised up and kept for years of service. Your brother in Christ,
J. P. STODDARD.

REV. WM. FENTON IN CALIFORNIA.

RIVERSIDE, Cal., April 11, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—During a week spent in San Diego, I visited most of the pastors; some of them are Freemasons, and the others see no harm in Masonry except as it absorbs the time and energy of church members. And while men are bound up in church fellowship with Masons, and mean to preserve that relationship, it seems impossible to show them any real evil in Masonic diabolism. They are eating the bread of spiritual scoundrelism.

The Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. McTaggart, however, took an active interest in getting the truth before the people, and on Sabbath afternoon, a week ago, I addressed the young men in the Y. M. C. A. Hall.

Bro. Eddy, leader of the Gospel Mission, cheerfully co-operated in the cause, and gave their hall two evenings, upon occasions of their regular meetings, and interesting questions concerning secretism were asked and some interesting testimonies given. One brother had renounced secret societies for Christ and truth's sake, sacrificing $10,000 insurance in one case, and the privilege of a free pass on all the railroads in another. Another brother said that he had given up all secret societies to which he has belonged but one, and he should give up that at the next lodge meeting. Thus a wholesome interest seemed to be awakened upon the subject of secret societies in a place rampant with Christian Science, "falsely so called," spiritism and secretism.

In a financial and business way, San Diego is dead; its fine maritime advantages have been anticipated too far in advance, and there are a great many vacant dwellings, empty stores and hotels. Its climate is said to be surpassingly fine, equable and healthful. Its fine harbor will, no doubt, as the country develops, make it a metropolis of distinction on the coast. Property now is scarcely marketable at the price for which it has been mortgaged.

Riverside is an active business place and surpassingly grand for its rural magnificence. One of its thoroughfares, Magnolia avenue, they say is eleven miles long. It has three rows of large trees, pepper-trees in the middle, palm-trees on one side and Eucalyptus-trees on the other side. In January last they had a frost which destroyed about one million dollars' worth of the orange and lemon crop, the average crop being one and a half million dollars. The lower leaves of the palm-trees were killed by that frost.

Bro. Ebey is conducting a tent-meeting in connection with open-air preaching on the streets. The meetings are well attended and full of spiritual interest. Last evening I preached in the tent. To-night I am to lecture in the Swedish Lutheran church, and to-morrow I start for San Francisco.

In Salt Lake City, Utah, there is a laundry that does washing for Mormons, and Mormon Endowment robes are washed there; one of these robes was exhibited to me while I was in the laundry, so that I saw that the Masonic emblems—square and compass—are cut and wrought into the breasts of the garments. The bodies of Mormon wives, we are told, are never entirely divested of the Endowment robe. Therefore, when a change of linen is made, a part of the body must remain in the soiled robe until the other part is introduced into the clean robe. And such is the Mormon superstition while under the influence of Satan—the Grand Architect of Mormonism, Polygamy and Masonry. These laundry people have no doubt that polygamy is carried on in Endowment houses at other places, since that at Salt Lake has been destroyed. These Endowment robes worn by Mormon wives seem to justify their conclusion. Else what need of Masonic and other superstitious bonds of wedlock, while the common laws of the land are sufficient for a legal marriage of a man with one wife? It is to be suspected that the crafty Mormon elders have deceived President Eliot with regard to polygamy.

RIVERSIDE, April 12th.—Last evening I delivered a lecture in the Swedish Lutheran church of this place. The pastorate of this church is supplied by a student of the Lutheran Seminary of Rock Island, Ill., Bro. Brandel. Bro. Brandel manifested great interest in the truth presented last evening, as did the congregation.

W. FENTON.

THE WASHINGTON AGENT IN NEW YORK.

228 W. 36TH ST., NEW YORK, }
April 21, 1892. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I find the great Metropolis all here. "Men may come, and men may go," but its great heart never ceases to throb with a restless humanity. Day and night, winter and summer, there is an ever-changing, yet never-dying New York. As I have stood on the docks and seen the thousands of incoming immigrants, or in the rushing, pushing Broadway, I have been constrained to feel, "What is man that thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that thou takest knowledge of him?" Could we look, as God does, into the inmost recesses of every heart, know the every aspiration for a better, holier life, the passions and appetites, and all the great powers which mold and impel the life, oh, what a scene it would be! A surface view will show to the most careless observer that the heart of the multitude is set in them to do evil. Notwithstanding in this part of the city theatres and play-houses are on almost every corner, I learned yesterday the houses for nearly an entire block are to be removed to give place to another.

Do not think that I have taken a "blue pill" and view the situation from a discouraged standpoint. I never had a more successful week in this city than the one just passed. I find by reference to my book that I have secured fifty-eight subscriptions for our paper, and accomplished what, but for the help of the Spirit and power of Him who is my life, would have been impossible. There are many more righteous men in New York than were in Sodom, I believe; yet how little can we know our own hearts or those of our fellows.

I listened to Dr. Sproull, of Allegheny, Pa., preaching a sermon in the 39th street R. P. church last Thursday. It was preparatory to the communion service. His subject was the ten virgins. He noticed, first, that they were all alike in many things. They were all virgins (church members). They all had lamps. Each appeared to the world to be prepared for the bridegroom. But oh, when the testing time came, when light was most needed, there was no oil in one-half of the lamps. The doctor said: "Are we to understand by this that but one-half of those who appear to be Christians are to fail at last?"

Rev. N. R. Johnston, editor of Our Banner, has moved from Philadelphia to 151 W. 96th st., this city. I had the privilege of hearing Bro. Johnston preach on Sabbath morning, from the text: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in His likeness." I wish there was time and space to give some of the inspiring thoughts presented.

On Tuesday morning I visited a meeting of the Missouri Synod of Lutheran ministers for this section. They received me kindly, and subscribed for our paper liberally, as usual. Tuesday afternoon I visited the ministers of the United Presbyterian presbytery of New York. Though having much important business to transact, they gave what time I asked to speak of my work, and unanimously voted to indorse the cause and work I had the honor to represent. The counsel of Father Armstrong, whose obituary appeared in last week's Cynosure, was missed. Resolutions expressing the feelings of his co-presbyters were passed. I learned that he was the instrument, under God, of building three United Presbyterian churches, and many young men now in the Gospel ministry praise him for his unselfish counsels.

Last evening, Bro. Martin, pastor of the First U. P. church, Jersey City, invited me to lead the prayer-meeting and occupy what time I desired in speaking of the lodge evil. After a season of earnest prayer, I gave the friends a little view of what could appropriately be called "the hidden things of dishonesty," aided by my chart. While waiting for the ferryboat to Jersey City, I saw the steamer "Majestic," from Liverpool, landing. I never saw so large a steamer, but what attracted most was the people on board. The decks seemed literally covered. Handkerchiefs were waved, shouts of rejoicing seemed the order of the day. Men, in their excitement, climbed the rigging, placed their hats on umbrellas, and endeavored to make themselves known to dear ones waiting to welcome them on shore. Yonder, perhaps, is a wayward boy returning to a mother's love. There is a husband scanning every face for the wife who, through tears of uncontrollable joy, has discovered the object of her affection. Who could picture the joys and sorrows the few moments of this landing will bring? If joys below are so great, "Oh what must it be to be there?"—safe with Jesus in our Father's house, every want provided for, every desire satisfied?
W. B. STODDARD.

—A private note from Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Boston, April 19, states that he had an excellent meeting on the previous evening, at which a renunciator of the lodge system, a young man, a chairman in the M. E. church, gave a clean, straight testimony against the abomination from which he had sceeded. The best evidence that the secret empire is wholly wicked is that of those who escape from its toils.

THE HOME.

TWO OR THREE.

There were only two or three of us
Who came to the place of prayer;
Came in the teeth of a driving storm;
But for that we did not care,
Since after our hymns of prayer had risen,
And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master himself was present there
And gave us the living bread.

We knew his look in our leader's face,
So rapt, and glad, and free;
We felt his touch when our heads were bowed;
We heard his "Come to Me!"
Nobody saw him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But "Peace" was his token in every heart,
And how could we ask for more.

Each of us felt the load of sin
From his weary shoulder fall:
Each of us dropped the load of care,
And the grief that was like a pall;
And over our spirits a blessed calm
Swept in from the jasper sea,
And strength was ours for toil and strife
In the days that were thence to be.

It was only a handful gathered in
To the little place of prayer;
Outside were struggle and pain and sin,
But the Lord himself was there;
He came to redeem the pledge he gave—
Wherever his loved ones be;
To stand himself in the midst of them,
Though they count but two or three.

And forth we fared in the bitter rain,
And our hearts had grown so warm,
It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers,
And not the crash of a storm.
"Twas a time of the dearest privilege
Of the Lord's right hand," we said,
As we thought how Jesus himself had come
To feed us with living bread.

BEGINNING HOUSEKEEPING.

Much has been written and much more can be written to young people in regard to starting right when establishing homes for themselves.

First of all do not have a third person in the family for one year or more if it can be possibly avoided. A young couple left to themselves become more readily adapted to their new circumstances and each other's peculiarities.

Happiness in the home depends more upon the wife than husband, although co-operation is necessary to success in nearly everything we undertake. Mothers are directly responsible for so much friction in the household machinery.

No daughter's education should be considered complete until she thoroughly understands every branch of housework.

Circumstances may necessitate her having only an oversight of it. But a little experience will teach any good housewife that servants have more respect for a mistress who is skilled in household economics than for one who is dependent upon their help.

Then if a servant leaves suddenly the competent housewife is able to fill the gap until further arrangements can be made.

In the country towns and villages a "maid of all work" is all the help required, and many times a strong, healthy woman prefers to do the work herself.

One well versed in the culinary art can gladden her husband's heart in many ways, and also find some time for social duties and reading, other things being equal.

We are writing to young wives, not to the overworked, broken-down farmer's wives, or wives of that class of laboring men who care only for self.

A well-ordered house is only one step towards home-making. Young ladies are usually very careful of their toilet when their lovers are expected, but too many forget this after marriage.

It is even more essential that a wife make herself attractive to the man she sees three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. Harriet Beecher Stowe says that love needs as much care as thrifty house-plants. Sunshine is essential to their growth, and does not a tastily dressed woman help to make sunshine in the home? She cannot make it alone, for a selfish man would cloud the atmosphere of any horizon, however bright it might be. The boy who is taught to wait upon his mother will be thoughtful for his wife. Such a man lends warmth to the home atmosphere in many little ways. Here again we see the responsibility that women hold, for "the home life is the pulse of the nation," and our little boys and girls are to be the fathers and mothers of the future.—Anonymous.

THE CHRISTIAN'S REWARD.

When Garibaldi was going out to battle, he told his troops what he wanted them to do. And when he had described what he wanted them to do, they said:

"Well, general, what are you going to give us for all this?"

"Well," he replied, "I don't know what else you will get; but you will get hunger and cold, and wounds and death. How do you like that?"

His men stood before him for a little while in silence, and then they threw up their hands and cried:

"We are the men! We are the men!"

The Lord Jesus Christ calls you to his service, and says:

"I do not promise you an easy time in this world. You may have persecutions and trials and misrepresentations; but afterward there comes an eternal weight of glory, and you can bear the wounds and bruises and the misrepresentations if you can have the reward afterward. Have you not enthusiasm enough to cry out: 'I am the man! I am the man!'"

WISE ANSWERS.

A Sophist, wishing to puzzle Thales with difficult questions he had prepared, put the following, to which Thales answered without hesitation:

What is the oldest of things?

God; for he existed always.

What is the most beautiful?

The world; for it is the work of God.

What is the greatest of all things?

Space; for it contains all things.

What is the most constant?

Hope; for it remains when all else is fled.

What is the best of all things?

Virtue; for without it there is nothing.

What is the quickest?

Thought; in a minute it can reach the end of the universe.

What is the strongest?

Necessity; it makes men face all dangers.

What is the easiest?

To give advice.

What is the most difficult?

To take advice.

LIKE PRECIOUS OINTMENT.

Jonathan Edwards says, "Christian affections are like Mary's precious ointment poured on Christ's head, that filled the whole house with a sweet odor. That was poured out of an alabaster box; so gracious affections flow out to Christ out of a pure heart. That was poured out of a broken box (until the box was broken the ointment could not flow nor diffuse its odor); so gracious affections flow out of a broken heart."

We have this treasure in earthen vessels. The heart out of which, naturally, all manner of evil flows, may be so purified and transformed as to send forth profusely and constantly the odors of grace, filling all the house with the rich fragrance. "Gracious affections," as our author calls them, are the fruit of the Spirit, which is "love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." If these be in us, in their fullness, our character will be full of attractiveness, and our presence in every circle of life will diffuse a holy fragrance that shall glorify Jesus.—Christian Standard.

THE WELCOME GIRL.

The welcome guest is the girl who, knowing the hour for breakfast, appears at the table at the proper time, does not keep others waiting, and does not get in the way of being down half an hour before the hostess appears. The welcome guest is the girl who, if there are not many servants in the house, has sufficient energy to take care of her own room while she is visiting, and, if there are people whose duty it is, she makes that duty as light as possible for them by putting away her own belongings, and so necessitating no extra work. She is the one who knows how to be pleasant to every member of the family, and yet who has tact enough to retire from a room when some special family affair is under discussion. She is the one who does not find children disagreeable, or the various pets of the household things to be dreaded. She is the one who, when her hostess is busy, can entertain herself with a book, a bit of sewing, or the writing of a letter. She is the one who, when her friends come to see her, does not disarrange the household in which she is staying that she may entertain them. She is the one who, having broken the bread and eaten the salt of her friend, has set before her lips a seal of silence, so that, when she goes from the house, she repeats nothing but the agreeable things she has seen. This is the welcome guest—the one to whom we say good-by with regret, and to whom we call out welcome with the lips and from the heart.—New York Fashion Bazaar.

THE BOY WHO DID HIS BEST.

He is doing his best, that boy of sixteen, stretched out before a bright fire in the tanning shed. Reclining upon an old sheepskin, with book in hand, he is acquiring knowledge as surely as any student at his desk in some favored institution, with all the conveniences and facilities for learning. He is doing his best, too—this same boy Claude—as he helps his master to prepare the sheep and lambs' skins for dyeing, so that they can be made into leather. He is doing his best by obedience and respectful conduct to his master, in endeavoring to do his work well, although he often makes mistakes, as his work is not so well suited to his tastes as the study of Greek and Latin.

"See there, young rascal!" calls out Gaspard Beaurais, the tanner, "how you're mixing up the wools." For Claude's wits were "wool gathering" sure enough; but he was not sorting the wool aright.

"Aye, aye, sir," replied the apprentice, "but I will fix them all right." And he quickly set to work to repair his mistake.

"He'll never make a tanner," said Gaspard to his good wife, "and much I fear he'll never be able to earn his bread."

"Sure enough," replied his wife; "and yet he's good and obedient, and never gives back a word to all your scolding." And in after years when the aged couple received handsome presents from this distinguished man who had been their apprentice, they thought of these words.

One evening there came a stormy, boisterous wind, and a little stream in which the tanner was wont to wash his wool upon the skins was swollen to a torrent. To attempt to cross it by ford at such a time would render one liable to be carried down the stream and dashed to pieces on the rocks.

"We must get all the skins under cover," said Gaspard to his apprentice; "a storm is at hand."

The task was finished and the tanner was about to return to his cot and Claude to his shed, when the boy exclaimed: "Surely I heard a cry. Some one is trying to cross the ford."

In an instant he darted towards the river, followed by his master carrying the lantern. Some villagers were already there, and a strong rope was tied around the waist of the brave boy, who was about to plunge into the stream, for a man upon horseback was seen coming down the river, both rider and horse much exhausted. Claude succeeded in grasping the rein, and the strong hand of the master that held the rope drew him to the shore and all were saved. Soon afterwards the stranger sat by the tanner's cheerful fire, having quite won the good hearts of the good man and his wife by his kind and courteous manner.

"What can I do for your brave boy?" he asked.

"He's none of ours, and not much credit will be to any one, we fear. He wastes too much time over useless books," was the bluff reply of the honest tanner, who could not see what possible use Claude's studies would be to him.

"May I see the books?" asked the stranger.

Claude being called, brought the books of the Greek and Latin classics, and stood with downcast face, expecting to be rebuked. But instead he received words of commendation from the stranger, who, after some talk and questions, was astonished at the knowledge the boy had acquired.

A few months later, instead of the old tanning shed as a study, Claude might be seen with his books in a handsome mansion at Paris, in the house of M. de Vallis, whose life he had saved. The boy felt that he had only done his duty, and that he was receiving much in return, and he determined to make every effort to meet the expectations of his patron.

He succeeded. Claude Copperonier, the boy who did his best, became the most distinguished Greek and Latin scholar of his time. At the age of 25 he filled the chair of Greek professor in the Royal College of Paris. More than this, he became a man who feared God, and was much beloved for his goodness and amiable qualities. He never forgot his former master and wife. Their old age was cheered by many tokens of remembrance in the form of substantial gifts from the man who, when a boy, studied so diligently by the fire of their old shed, but who "would never make a tanner."—Selected.

RULES FOR DAILY LIFE.

Begin the day with God:

Kneel down to him in prayer;
Lift up thy heart to his abode,
And seek his love to share.

Open the Book of God,
And read a portion there;
That it may hallow all thy thoughts,
And sweeten all thy care.

Go through the day with God,
Whate'er thy work may be;
Where'er thou art—at home, abroad,
He still is near to thee.

Converse in mind with God;
Thy spirit heavenward raise;
Acknowledge every good bestowed,
And offer grateful praise.

Conclude the day with God:
Thy sins to him confess;
Trust in the Lord's atoning blood,
And plead his righteousness.

Lie down at night with God,
Who gives his servants sleep;
And when thou tread'st the vale of death,
He will thee guard and keep.

TEMPERANCE.

RUM-CURSED AFRICA.

As stated by the bishop of London, it is a positive fact that in one place in Africa the Christians are building a mosque rather than a church, because the Mohammedans do not bring drink with them; whereas an increased number of Christians would mean an increase in the importation of drink.

One of the Mohammedan African chiefs, in praying for the suppression of the liquor traffic created by us in his country, says: "The natives themselves do not want it; it is forbidden by their laws, but they are forced to break those laws by you English. You are deteriorating our people and destroying whole races of them." He pathetically implores "the English queen to stop sending her rum and her gin to his people."

The very air of Africa reeks with rum and gin imported by us; every hut is redolent of its fumes. Gin bottles and boxes meet the eye at every step, and in some places the wealth and importance of the various villages are measured by the sides of the pyramids of empty gin bottles which they erect and worship. Over large areas drink is almost the sole currency, and in many parts the year's wages of the Negro factory worker are paid altogether in spirits.

A steamer which recently returned from West Africa brought home with her a cargo of rubber, palm oil, ivory, gold and other rich products she had obtained in exchange for a compound called rum and gin, bartered at the rate of "rum ninepence per gallon and gin two shillings and sixpence per dozen pint bottles." This so-called rum and gin is known to the natives as "the missionary." The introduction of this missionary into peaceful villages transforms them into a hades peopled by brutalized human beings, whose punishment is to be possessed by a never-ending thirst for more missionary. The chastity of women becomes a virtue of the past. They follow one about with scarcely a rag on their besotted persons, crying for more gin. The wretched natives, having disposed of their cattle for drink, take to thieving for it, and, being caught, are sometimes flogged to death by our government officials.—Fortnightly Review.

THE CIDER PEST.

Would it seem absurd if I should claim that cider is not generally well understood? What are the facts in the case?

From childhood we see it made and we think of it as simply apple juice. We see that it ferments, but we hear it called new cider right along. We do not even realize that this fermentation is the decay of the sugar in the apple juice, and that this decay of the sugar in a sweet liquid makes alcohol. We cannot discover it by its color, for it looks like water, and it comes in so slowly that we do not recognize its presence by any other sign partly because we are not looking for it. We feel the tingle and we rather like it, and, perhaps, we do not wish to know that this is caused by the alcohol. At last the alcohol appetite is formed, and we cling to the cider; or, at best, it is only when the alcohol begins to change into vinegar that we call it horrid stuff and give it up to the drunkards. We venture to say that not one person in ten among so-called temperance people understand these facts.

A lady said recently: "We had a distressing time in our last society meeting on account of a cider mill near us. Seven young men and women had to take their pledge over again because they had been drinking cider. Others said they would not be disciplined for drinking cider; they would sooner leave the society."

What was the difficulty here? Was not this a temperance society, and ought not its members to know whether cider is an alcoholic drink or not? Truly they ought to know, but how shall they know if they are not taught? Many of those who read these lines are members of temperance societies. How many of them, we beg to ask, can recall cases where this subject has been thoroughly studied up in any society of which they have been members?

Is it any wonder, then, that a mature and otherwise well-informed man should have inquired, when the subject was up in Sunday-school, whether the alcohol in cider was the same as that in whisky and brandy? Is it surprising to hear the president of a temperance society assert that there is alcohol in everything; or, another president to declare a determination to ignore the pledge and drink sweet cider because it was just apple-juice and perfectly harmless? And why should we be surprised that, with such views, many object to signing a pledge that specifies cider? I am sure that we should be fairly dismayed if we knew how many women, to say nothing of boys and girls, are kept out of temperance societies because they will not give up cider.—Julia Colman, in National Temperance Advocate.

TEMPERANCE IN TORONTO.

A large deputation, representing the Ontario branch of the Dominion Alliance, waited upon the Ontario Government, through Mr. J. J. Maclaren, and submitted the following as the legislation which the last meeting of the branch decided to ask for: (1) That the majority of electors in a polling subdivision should have the right to prevent the re-issue of a license. (2) That all sales to persons under 21 should be prohibited, and no minors be allowed to loiter in a bar-room. (3) That penalties for violation of the law, especially in the case of license-holders, should be made more severe. (4) That all second and subsequent convictions should be punished as such, and the increased penalties inflicted. (5) That a license should be forfeited and the holder disqualified for repeated violations of the law, even if the offenses should not be the same. (6) That fines should be made available for prosecution, where the prosecutor is a private party. (7) That any person should have the right to apply for the cancellation of a license wrongfully issued. (8) That the signatures of petitioners for a license or the transfer of license should all be genuine and bona fide, and should be published. (9) That no druggist should sell liquor except on a certificate. (10) That bars should be abolished. (11) That the sale and disposal of liquors in clubs should be restricted. (12) That the time limited for the laying of informations should be extended to three months. (13) That no shop or saloon licenses be issued.

Mr. Maclaren pointed out that when a license was once granted, no matter how great a nuisance it proved to the neighborhood, the public were practically helpless in suppressing it. Quebec, which was not always held up as a model, was ahead of Ontario in this respect, as there a majority of the electors in any subdivision could prevent the re-issue of any license to which they were opposed. Nova Scotia, British Columbia and other provinces were also ahead of Ontario. They trusted that the government would respond to the prayers that were being sent in for a more extended local option law. Then the temperance people were opposed to any encouragement of the idea that a license had any value beyond the amount paid annually for the right to sell.—Christian Statesman.

LIQUOR MEN ON TAMMANY.

As predicted by us, the Sunday clause has been stricken out of the liquor dealers' excise bill by the Democratic Assembly Excise Committee. The elimination of that clause takes the life out of the whole bill. It is true, the police-spy clause which is embodied in section 38 of the bill is retained, and the Democratic bosses are at present hard at work trying to fool the liquor dealers by sweetly whispering to them: "Don't mind the Sunday clause. The police-spy clause is retained. Under it you can sell all you want on Sunday without fear of being molested by the police." This is the old familiar song of the Tammany sirens which we have heard before. The song is moral death. Its object is to make the liquor dealers forget their discomfiture, so that they may contribute their substance again next fall in an ecstasy of delight over the goodness of the Tammany Legislature.

It is probably true that under the police-spy clause the sale of liquor on Sunday may be carried on with practical impunity. Yet the dealers who sell on that day in defiance of the statute remain law breakers, whether detected and punished or not. They are not freed from the chains which the conflict of public sentiment and the statute law has forged around the retail trade in our large cities. The saloon-keepers will not be lifted into self-respecting men and merchants, but remain the serfs of the political bosses, and the liquor issue will continue to be a factor in politics.—The Wine and Spirit Gazette.

NUGGETS.

The Prohibition party has over 300 newspapers advocating its cause.

It is said that one-tenth of the many suicides in France can be traced to alcohol.

In 1881 the production of brandy in California was 362,174 gallons, and in 1891, 1,470,525 gallons.

Dr. Darwin says that "all the diseases arising from drinking spirituous or fermented liquors are liable to become hereditary even to the third generation, increasing, if the cause be continued, till the family becomes extinct."

Secretary Graham, of the Church Temperance Society, says: "The poor man's club is the liquor saloon. It is a bad club. It gives light and warmth and society. It gives at the same time poverty and degradation. Where it thrives and grows the home withers. Granted an existent tenement house population, crowded and squalid, and dirty as it must be and is, the liquor saloon is the only place of resort in such quarters. The deeper the poverty the larger the number of liquor saloons. They are the headquarters of political activity. The heelers are there looking for office, and the ward boss is the saloon-keeper. The warmth and the light contrast with the small back room in the double-decker tenement. They flank every street-corner like guns enflaming the street with their concentric fire. This is the stronghold of the enemy. How is he to be fought and conquered? First, by training the young and teaching them that there is only one safe side to the saloon, and that is the outside; second, by legislation diminishing the danger; third, by counteractive agencies."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE PSALMS AND DANIEL.

LESSON VI.—Second Quarter, 1892.—May 8.

SUBJECT.—Delight in God's House.—Psa. 84: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed are they that dwell in thy house.—Psalm 84: 4.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Ps. 84. T.—2 Chron. 5: 11-14. W.—Ps. 92. T.—Ps. 65. F.—John 4: 19-26. S.—Ps. 122. S.—Isa. 2: 1-5.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Desire for God's house.—vs. 1-4. "How amiable;"—how lovely and worthy to be loved. To David the tabernacle only was God's house, where he had set his name, and whither the tribes went up for the yearly feasts; but under the Christian dispensation any place where prayer is wont to be made, and where we can hold communion with God, may be a tabernacle for his presence. In the patriarchal ages Jacob called the spot where he passed the night, under the open heavens with a stone for a pillow, "the house of God;" and he made it the dwelling-place of himself and family in after-years (Gen. 35: 1). "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth," etc. This whole verse is expressive of the most intense desire, as of one hungry and thirsty to the point of exhaustion. Love for the Lord's house is a sign of spiritual health; but the last clause, "My soul crieth out for the living God," shows that it is no mere sensuous love for the outside attractions of his courts—for the hangings of blue and purple and fine-twined linen,—but a yearning of soul after God himself. Unless we go to church for the express purpose of finding our heavenly Father, and holding communion with him, we do but mock him, and had better stay at home. "Yea, the sparrow hath found a house," etc. Perhaps the psalmist means to express a wish that, like the sparrow, he might not only live himself but rear his children in the very courts of God. While a literal fulfillment of this wish was impossible, under the Gospel dispensation every Christian who sets up the family altar may have its spiritual realization. "Blessed are they that dwell in thine house." Blessed is the man who is himself the temple of the indwelling Spirit; whose soul lives in a continual atmosphere of prayer and praise. We can have all David longed for by following one simple rule: "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

2. The man whom God blesses will be a blessing to others.—vs. 5-7. Human strength is sure to fail us, and we, in our turn, will fail others if we trust in any lower source than God himself. Thus we shall be the occasion of trouble and disappointment to our fellow-men instead of a blessing. The shallow brooks run dry in drouth, while the springs which have their veins deep in some rocky strata below the soil, even the frosts of winter cannot chain. The soul which has in itself the waters of life can never thirst or see death. "In whose heart are the ways," etc. That is, who knows and loves the ways that please God. "Who, passing through the valley of Baca make it a well." The margin reads "him" for "it," which changes the sense and makes the figure much more intelligible. The truth meant to be conveyed—and it is a very beautiful one—seems to be this: "Baca" means "weeping," and refers probably to the dry and barren wastes through which in going to Jerusalem to the yearly feasts travelers had to pass. Yet refreshing rain was all they needed to fill them with beauty. The figure seems to refer to one who digs a well in these arid and desert places for the benefit of travelers who shall come after him. This life is often called "a vale of tears," but though it is in itself barren of any real or lasting joys, the Christian who is in direct communication with God will bring down such showers of spiritual blessing as to refresh not only his own heart but the hearts of others, thus making the waste places to "blossom as the rose,"—a foretaste of the heavenly Paradise. "They go from strength to strength." They have daily supplies from God; and so, instead of fainting by the way when trial and sorrow come, they daily renew their freshness and vigor until they reach Mount Zion, and join their song of praise with the countless hosts of the redeemed.

3. David's longing after God's house.—vs. 8-12. "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand" spent in the haunts of folly and pleasure.

"I had rather be a door-keeper." The lowest place in God's service is better than to hold the highest office that wicked men can bestow. "For the Lord is a sun and a shield." As God is infinite in his attributes, so he turns to his people one side, and then another, of his divine character, according to their needs, like the pillar which guided the Israelites of old—cloud by day, and fire by night. Do we want light and warmth? he is a sun. Do we want protection? he is a shield. "He will give grace and glory." Grace is unmerited favor to the sinner. Glory is the honor he bestows upon his redeemed saints when he makes them heirs and joint-heirs with Christ. Having given us all this what good thing will he withhold?

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

—The stated meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society was held at the Bible House on Thursday, April 7, 1892, Hon. Enoch L. Fancher, LL.D., president, in the chair. The issues from the Bible House during the month of March were 78,310 volumes. The total issues from the Bible House during the year ending March 31, not including those issued in foreign lands, were 936,578 volumes.

BAPTIST.

—The receipts of the American Baptist Home Mission Society for the year ending April 1, 1892, were as follows: For general purposes, $400,355.65; for church edifice work (loan and gift funds), $50,554.36; permanent trust funds, $20,458.16; conditional trust funds, $25,913.68. Total, $497,281.85. This is $92,128.45 more than last year. After payment of all obligations to April 1, there is a balance in the treasury of $35,855.40 for general purposes. By a change in school accounts a portion of those receipts are not included as heretofore. Including these the total would be considerably over $500,000.

—By formal action, April 13, Morgan Park theological seminary became the divinity school of the new Chicago university, and President Northrup became dean of the department. The property is estimated to be worth over $100,000. The university has also received the Chicago female college property at Morgan park, which will be remodeled and used as a preparatory department. As a preacher and lecturer Dr. Northrup has given eminent service alike to the denomination and to the general cause of truth in those departments of it which it is the fashion of the times to assail, more particularly that concerning the relations of science and philosophy with the doctrines of the Christian faith.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—The Christian Endeavor Societies, organized about ten years ago, have had such a phenomenal growth that the committee of arrangements for the National convention, to be held in New York July 7 to 10, are at a loss how to accommodate all the delegates who propose to attend. In 1882 there were six of these societies in the country, with a membership of 481. Last January there were 18,500 societies and a membership of 1,100,000. More than 13,000 delegates have already notified the New York committee of their intention to attend the convention, and the large Madison Square Garden cannot accommodate them. It will be the largest convention ever held.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Offers have been made to render Los Guillicos, Cal., a place for Congregational resort and residence. It is on a railroad in Sonoma county, not far from San Francisco. The place is adapted to olive growing, and an oil factory is to be established by a company. Five acres are offered for residences at a low price and the product in olives will go far toward the support of a family.

—Evangelists J. D. McCord and G. H. Lewis are assisting Rev. C. C. Otis of the First Church, Springfield, Ill., in a series of special meetings, which began April 24. Much interest is manifest and much good is anticipated.

—In Kansas, the hurricane of March 31 blew down the Kiowa church building, scattering the fragments all over the prairie. The people were needing a larger house to make room for the growing congregation, but they were not prepared to be unchurched so suddenly. They will at once rebuild.

—Joseph Cook having completed his seventeenth course of lectures in Boston, the Middlesex Union Association of Congregational Ministers enacted the following: "We especially indorse, and pray that God may bless, his eloquent and constant testimony for the value of the Christian Scriptures, his fearless and patient advocacy of the brotherhood of all men of every race and color and class and condition, his interest in the promotion of revivals of positive and vital religion wherever the church has grown careless in her work, his powerful appeals for the preservation of the Bible Sabbath, his incessant warfare upon the saloon, and his pungent appeals for the fidelity of all citizens to their obligations, at the polls, and the caucus, and wherever they can make their influence felt for purity and righteousness in the government."

FRIENDS.

—Orthodox Friends are found in 34 States and Territories and in the District of Columbia, and have a total membership, including Philadelphia Y. M., of 80,655. Among the States Indiana contains the greater number, 25,915; Ohio is second with 10,844, and Iowa third with 8,146. Of the yearly meetings Indiana heads the list with a membership of 22,105, and Baltimore closes it with 1,012. Iowa, in sweep of territory, surpasses any of the others, with 11,391 members. Seven hundred and 94 organizations are returned with 725 church edifices valued at $2,795,784. Hicksite Friends are in 13 States and have a membership of 21,992 and 201 organizations. Their church property is valued at $1,161,850. Their smallest yearly meeting, Ohio, has 568 members, while their largest, Philadelphia, counts 12,029. Wilburite Friends reside in seven States and have a total membership of 4,329, with 52 church edifices returned at $67,000. Their largest yearly meeting, Ohio, is composed of 2,451 members, and their smallest, New England, of 100. Primitive Friends (Wilburites in practice and faith) are found in four States, having 9 organizations and a total membership of 332, with a church property valued at $16,700.

MENNONITE BRETHREN.

—The ninth Annual Conference of the M. B. in Christ met at Breslau, Ont., on the 7th of April, 1892. It was decided to hold three camp meetings: At Greenwood, Mich., beginning June 3; Stayner, Ont., June 22, and Berlin, Ont., Sept. 13. Routine business only was transacted. The next (tenth) Annual Conference is to be held on the Bethel (Ont.) field, commencing on the fourth of March, 1893.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The gross amount given to charity, in the will of Hector C. Havemeyer, of New York City, is a quarter of a million dollars, of which the Methodist church will be benefited as follows: The New York Conference Church Extension and Missionary Society, $50,000; the Five Points' Mission, $35,000; St. Christopher Home and the Old People's Home, $50,000; the New York Conference work for aged preachers, their widows and orphans, $9,000; the Central Church, $4,000.

—Bishop Gaines, of the African M. E. church, is one of the ablest advocates of temperance in the South. He was foremost in the fight for prohibition in Atlanta. He says: "The greatest obstacle and stumbling-block in the way of the progress of my people is rum."

—Dr. Carradine, the famous holiness preacher and successful pastor of St. Louis, is about to establish a mission for the purpose of rescuing drunkards, thieves, and fallen women.

—The revival at Ohio Wesleyan University is now producing its effects far beyond the bounds of the university. Young men from the university went out to assist pastors in revival services during the spring vacation, and conversions ranging from 20 to 150 in number are reported from numerous churches as the result of these services.

—The Clear Lake (Iowa) camp meeting will open Aug. 10. Rev. Dr. G. R. Vanhorne of Rock River Conference has been engaged to superintend the session.

—Bishop Merrill has removed to Evanston, to which Methodist center he will be a substantial and welcome addition.

—The Western has been inviting an expression of opinion from pastors and presiding elders as to the desirability of changing the present method of selecting presiding elders. The pastors were evenly divided, while the presiding elders stood 70 to 30 in favor of the present system.

—The Quadrennial General Conference of the Methodist church will convene in Omaha, May 1, 1892. Five hundred delegates will be present from all quarters of the earth. The conference will continue in session one month.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The will of Charles Miller, a farmer of Montgomery, N. Y., has been probated. The estate amounts to about $100,000. The following, among other bequests, are made: Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, $3,000; Board of Home Missions of the same church, $3,000; American Tract Society, $3,000; Orange County Bible Society, $3,000; Trustees of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, for the disabled ministers' fund, $1,000; Good-will Presbyterian church, $4,000.

—The delegates to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church expect to hold meetings in Salt Lake City, on their way to Portland, Oregon, where they meet. The Mormons offered them the use of their Tabernacle, but it is stated that the offer was refused.

REFORMED CHURCH.

—Illinois Classis will meet in annual session in the Reformed and Lutheran church in Dakota, Ill., May 4, 7:30 p. m., 1892. The classical sessions will be opened by a sermon on Wednesday evening by the stated clerk, the president of classis having removed from the bounds of Illinois Classis. The Sunday-school convention will open on Tuesday night previous, program to be published later.

A Most Interesting Interview with a Number of Prominent Officials---How the Strains of Public Life are Overcome.

WASHINGTON, April 27.—The absorbing excitement of Congress and the interest caused by varying schemes and various measures have been overshadowed of late in Washington by the revelation of the alarming death rate among public men, and the additional fact that in nearly every case the cause of the death can be traced to one source. Congressman Springer's dangerous and long-continued illness, the sudden death of Senator Plumb, and Mr. Blaine's constant ill-health have mustered from the grave the memory of an army of public men who have died in the harness.

Senator Beck dropped insensible in the Potomac depot on the exact spot where President Garfield was shot.

Secretary Folger worked to the last, and died without warning.

Secretary Windom died while speaking at a banquet.

Secretary Chandler was found dead in his bed at the Grand Pacific Hotel.

Senator Tom Corwin expired at a reception while talking with Salmon P. Chase, Ben Wade, Senator Schenck, and John Sherman.

The Hon. Hannibal Hamlin died at the club while chatting with his friends.

Minister Pendleton passed away while seated in a railroad train.

Senator Charles Sumner, Massachusetts' pride, died suddenly, working faithfully to the hour of his death.

Senator Simon Cameron feels the mysterious creepings of paralysis, and falls in the arms of his friends.

Salmon P. Chase passed away peacefully while seated at his desk with his pen in his hand.

It has dawned upon the public men of the country, the heads of departments in Washington, and discerning people generally, that there must be some one great reason for all of those untimely deaths. It was with a view, if possible, of solving this question that I called upon a number of prominent men, the results of which are given herewith. It is well known that one of the nation's greatest men is Gen. B. F. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy, and that no man in Washington has worked harder, more persistently, or more effectively. His timely and efficient work in building up our national defence when the question of war with Chili was being agitated, must necessarily have brought a great strain upon his system. He was found, however, at the head of the Navy Department, and in very good humor. Referring to the subject Gen. Tracy said:

"I am in good health and spirits at present. Several years ago, however, I was so fully impressed with the idea that I had uric acid in my blood that I took good care and good medicine to prevent its increase or continuance."

"May I ask, General, what course you adopted?"

"I had heard of many things, but I determined to try one especially. I found it all that I desired, and, although that was some time since, I am, as you see, well to-day, although I am still taking the same medicine, which is Warner's Safe Cure."

Colonel Daniel Grosvenor, the Chief of the First Division of the Comptroller's Office of the United States Treasury, said:

"I have had an unusual opportunity to watch the condition of public men and the strains which public life brings. Many prominent men break down suddenly, and, while this may also be true of other walks in life, it seems especially true of Washington. My experience has shown that one remedy has proven more beneficial for the strains of life in the case of public men than any other known discovery. That remedy is Warner's Safe Cure. The most remarkable instance of its power is that of Mr. J. Henderson Wilkinson, the well known pension attorney. His restoration to health through its use was simply marvelous. I myself believe in it implicitly."

Congressman J. C. Belden of New York, when approached upon the subject, said:

"Ex-Governor Alvord of Syracuse, N. Y., and also ex-Speaker of the House, furnished the most wonderful instance of the fact that a public man could withstand the strains of public life and yet live to a green old age. Few men have ever been sicker than Senator Alvord was, but he is now hale and hearty. His recovery is due entirely to Warner's Safe Cure, which is certainly all the commendation of any discovery that could be required."

Mr. L. H. Egleston, Judiciary Division, Comptroller's Office, United States Treasury, said:

"Ten years ago I was ill—very ill with a disease pronounced by my attendant physicians to be incipient Bright's disease. The treatment failed to benefit me, and I grew steadily and alarmingly worse. Under the advice of friends I began to use Warner's Safe Cure, and have been in perfect health ever since. I am glad to state this, because it may save the life of others."

Senator B. K. Bruce cordially answered inquiries:

"My gratitude is due to Hon. H. H. Warner, manufacturer of the Warner Safe Cure, for the wonderful recovery which I have experienced through the use of his medicine. I am well to-day, and believe many public men might preserve their health and prolong their lives by the use of this great remedy."

The same sentiment can be found all over Washington, and there is scarcely a desk in the Treasury or other departments where a bottle of this remedy cannot be found. Its popularity here is due wholly to what it has accomplished.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

HOME AND HEALTH.

Vinegar bottles may be cleaned with crushed egg shells in a little water.

Door-plates should be cleaned by rubbing with a cloth wet in ammonia and water.

For inflamed eyes, bumped heads and sprained ankles, use abundantly water as hot as can be borne.

Clean the nickle plate of stoves with soda and ammonia, using a woolen cloth and polishing with a clean one.

To get rid of soft corns, apply cotton wool soaked in castor oil. Bind it on with a piece of soft linen.

Gather the eggs daily. Wash any that may be dirty, before putting upon market. Till washed, keep from the clean ones.

For white spots left upon polished furniture by scalding water, tea or coffee, rub hard with kerosene, then polish with dry, soft flannel.

Clean collars on woolen jackets, men's coats, etc., by sponging with ammonia and water, then with alcohol, then rub dry with a flannel cloth.

A good remedy for damp, moist hands is four ounces of cologne water and one-half ounce of tincture of belladonna. Rub the hands with this several times a day.

For grease and milk and acid spots upon furniture, rub the place well with cold water, then polish with soft linen. Save old napkins and pillow-cases for such work.

If a flannel cloth dipped in kerosene, then wrung dry, be used in wiping off dirty finger marks from paint, the grateful housekeeper will repeat the experiment often.

For hives in children, rub the irritated skin or postules with castor oil, applied with the tip of the finger. Baby will pass from fretting to slumber while the process is going on, the relief will be so great and quick.

If a tablespoonful of kerosene is put into a quart of tepid water, and this used in washing windows and mirrors, instead of pure water, there will remain upon the cleaned surface a polish no amount of mere friction can give.

Steamed Corn Bread.—Four cupfuls of cornmeal, two cupfuls of flour, two cupfuls of sweet milk, two cupfuls of sour milk, one cupful of molasses, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt. Steam three hours and a half, or longer. To be eaten hot.

Cheap Fruit Cake.—One cup of butter, one of brown sugar, half pint of molasses, two eggs, one cup of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one pound of flour, one of currants, one and a half of raisins, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, half teaspoonful each of cloves and allspice. Bake in a slow oven. This is excellent.

To clean and brighten brasses and copper, wring out a soft piece of flannel in kerosene, and with this apply putz pomade to the tarnished surface. When well coated, rub hard with old linen, and polish with dry flannel. The result leaves nothing to be desired. The shining brasses on locomotives and ferryboats are cleaned in this manner.

Raised Muffins.—One pint milk, one egg, one-half cup yeast, one salt-spoon salt, one large tablespoon butter. Flour for a stiff batter. Mix in the order given, add flour gradually, beating it well, until so stiff you cannot beat. Let it rise over night. In the morning put it into buttered pans, taking it out with a spoon and knife without stirring out the air. Bake about fifteen minutes.

New Orleans Corn Bread.—One and one-half pints of corn-meal, half-pint of flour, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking-powder, one tablespoonful of lard, one and one-fourth pints of milk, two eggs. Sift together corn meal, flour, sugar, salt, and powder; rub in lard, cold; add eggs (beaten) and the milk; mix into a moderately stiff batter; pour from bowl into a shallow cake-pan. Bake in rather hot oven thirty minutes.

A bald-headed woman is unusual before she is 40, but gray hair is common with them earlier. Baldness and grayness may be prevented by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

Peas will stand considerable frost, so get in as soon as possible.

Grapes should not be uncovered till settled warm weather is here.

Get out your rearing coops and clean them thoroughly; any that are not good and wholesome burn.

Sow alfalfa as soon as danger from spring frosts is past. Any seedsman can furnish you with seeds.

Have the cows before you build the factory. You can add to that as the number of cows or the quantity of milk increases.

Turkeys, guineas, ducks and geese should not be allowed to hatch too early, as their young often perish from exposure in early spring.

The man that breeds and feeds farm animals nearly always makes money. It is when the animals breed or feed themselves, or both, that they are unprofitable.

Put in peas as early as the ground will work and every week or ten days thereafter for a succession. The wrinkled varieties as a rule are sweeter than the smooth ones.

If we were selling cream to a factory, should consider Jersey cows more profitable than Holstein, though there have been some grand butter records made by Holstein cows.

We think the best time to prune gooseberry and currant bushes is in the fall after fruiting. Cut out the old wood. If not done in the fall do early in spring before sap flows or wait till after leaving out.

As spring opens the creamery shark will be about. Don't let him bite you. Sign no papers, make no contracts for building and equipment till you have estimates from two or more creamery supply houses.

If there is any seed that gets easier mixed than corn it must be potatoes. From want of care in selection and storing, potatoes often "run out." They are cheap this year and it is a good time to run in some new sorts or new seed of old sorts.

Mustard may be sown any time after the soil can be worked fine in the spring. With the seed bed well prepared, sow in drills or broadcast about two pounds to the acre. Drag in lightly. It will need no afterculture. Cut before too ripe and thresh as flax.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

BE CAREFUL, FARMERS.

The Kansas man about whom the Topeka Capital tells the following story, is not the only one of his species that has found marrying for profit poor policy:

"A certain farmer, so runs the tale, imagining that he would make money out of it, married her a wife. Then he caused her to do the cooking and the washing for a half-dozen hired hands. He also referred to her the small jobs, like cutting wood, milking the cow, herding the hogs and tending the poultry. This farmer made money. But one of his boys went to Texas and one went to the penitentiary, and his girl ran away with a man who peddled groceries. His useful wife had a front room in the insane asylum, and there is a place prepared for the farmer to which he will shortly go. This story plainly teaches that a farmer should be careful when he gets married."

AN EGG-EATING DOG.

A Melvin, Ill., subscriber writes: "I saw an advertisement in your paper last spring of some medicine to break a dog of sucking eggs. Can you tell me what it is?" The "medicine" to which you refer was tartar emetic and the "advertisement" was this: "Divide a heaping teaspoonful of tartar emetic into eight or ten doses. Break off the end of an egg, empty a part of the contents and stir into the remainder left in the shell a dose of tartar emetic. Confine the dog in a

There is no more useful or elegant article than Ayer's Hair Vigor—the most popular and economical hair-dressing in the market. It causes the hair to grow abundantly and retain the beauty and texture of youth; prevents baldness, heals troublesome humors of the scalp and keeps it clean, cool, and healthy. Both ladies and gentlemen everywhere prefer Ayer's Hair Vigor to any other dressing for the hair. Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, of Pitts-
Ask For ton, Me., writes: "I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time, and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and falling hair, so that I was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor, my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor to any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair." *

room, or tie him, and give him the doctored egg. In an hour or two he will be trying to turn himself wrong side out. As soon as he is over the nausea give him a second egg and a third, if he will eat it. When he refuses to eat the egg, and lets it lie by him for several hours untouched, pry open his mouth and force the egg down his throat. Afterward you may trust him in your hen-house. The object in tying the dog is to let him get nothing else to eat while he is under treatment, or he may think it was the last thing eaten that made him so sick. The idea is to convince him that eggs no longer will lie on his stomach."—New York Witness.

DAIRY SALT.

Where an analysis is not accessible for judging of the purity of salt, a good test can be made by observing its behavior in damp weather. If, when the weather is damp, salt will attract moisture enough from the air to appear wet, it is unfit for putting in butter or cheese. Pure salt remains dry in wet weather. It may stand in a cellar all summer without being sensibly moist. It is the impurities in salt (notably the chloride of calcium) which attract moisture and make it appear wet; hence salt which will vary with every change in the hygrometric condition of the air should be rejected by dairymen as impure and unfit for their use.—American Dairyman.

Freemasonry Self-Condemned. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshipped by the Christian Church. Paper covers, price, 20 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction AND MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 300 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of the law here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DEGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Finney on Masonry. The character, claims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents. Paper cover, 35 cents.

Stearns's Inquiry into the Nature AND TENDENCY OF FREEMASONRY. 338 pages. Paper covers, 40 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church. 5 cents each.

The Anti-mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid. 25 cts.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10cts each.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, AND COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in this title, bound together in cloth. $1.00 each.

The Secret

Of the greatness of the Royal Baking Powder lies in the conscientious care employed in its manufacture; in the unvarying strength and purity of its ingredients; in the accuracy with which they are combined; in its assured freedom from every and all improper or detrimental substances.

The Secret of its marvelous success (its sale being greater than that of all other cream of tartar baking powders combined) lies in the wholesome, delicious food its use insures; in its uniform, perfect, never failing work, and in its satisfactory use for a quarter of a century which has won for it the implicit confidence of the public.

Return to the grocer all substitutes sent you for Royal Baking Powder. There is no substitute for ROYAL.

Will those of the Cynosure's many friends who have written articles for its columns that have not yet been printed kindly "possess their souls in patience?" We never reject an article that we believe will be agreeably received; but we have so many of this class awaiting publication that delay is imperative. The writer has just had printed, in an Eastern magazine, an article that was formally accepted fifteen months ago.

Next week we propose to print, in full, Rev. H. J. Schub's address on "Lodge Charity Not Christian Charity," delivered before the Pennsylvania Annual Convention of anti-secretists, at Pittsburgh, in March last, and also, the first installment of Mrs. E. Trask Hill's admirable review of "The Jesuits; their Origin, their Aims, their Methods, and their Success," read at the New England Annual Convention last winter. Cynosure readers, we are sure, will peruse them with interest.

The United States Senate refused to confirm the bill which passed the House of Representatives recently, providing for the iron-clad exclusion of the Chinese from this republic, and amended the present existing law for that purpose by extending its enforcement ten years longer. It has never been an absolute preventive act, and it is doubtful whether it ever can be. "John" sails from China, lands in British Columbia, becomes a subject of Great Britain, and, as such, settles in the United States, wherever he pleases, with impunity. It is a very neat evasion.

On the 16th instant, in accordance with the call of a number of influential members of that denomination, representatives will assemble at Washington for the purpose of organizing a National Baptist Educational Convention. The movement is in harmony with the demonstrations of this great body of Christians during the past year, the most remarkable of which is the establishment and princely endowment of the Chicago University, which has sprung into being with a rapidity and solidity that, if we mistake not, has never been equaled by any similar institution in America. Commensurate with its stability and design, is the energy with which its managers are gradually gathering for its government a superiority of talent, embodying some of the best and most appreciated educators in the country. But the spirit of higher education appears to be actuating not only the Baptists, but others of the influential and orthodox denominations. Well, higher education, if properly pursued, and kept clear of "higher criticism," is worthy of encouragement.

The burning of a large theatre in Philadelphia, last week, causing the violent death of eight or nine persons, and the serious injury of many others, is an event that may be duplicated at any time in other cities. Dozens of the "temples of Thespis" throughout the country are fire-traps, from which escape during a conflagration, or other cause of panic, would be attended with equally bad or worse results. The number of available "exits" is, in many public buildings, undeniably too small, and often they are also too obscure and complicated for absolute safety in escape.

At the regular Methodist Ministers' Meeting, in this city, last week, it was more than hinted that the Republican party is not "playing fair" in ignoring the principle of prohibition, and that this factor in national politics deserves a recognition and approval, inasmuch as a large proportion—a very large proportion—of the Methodists of the Union are not only Prohibitionists but also staunch Republicans. It bids fair to become an interesting question, one of these days, whether the Methodists or the Republicans will lead in the warfare against the saloon power. From figures printed in another column, it is estimated that the total Prohibition vote, this year, will be about 500,000.

A Mason and a Baptist—a high Masonic authority—"Bro." Connor, of Tennessee—is very frank touching Masonic religion. In a recent official communication he says: "Masonry does not demand a belief in the 'divine authenticity of the Scriptures.' Masonry requires a belief in the existence of God and in the immortality of the soul, but it does not require a belief that Jesus was God, or that the body shall be raised again. Be a churchman in church, brother beloved, and a Mason in Masonry! In church the writer is a Baptist; in Masonry he is a Mason." What is this but bold blasphemy and hypocrisy? Cynosure readers now know exactly what is the religion of Masonry. Connor's letter is printed in that acknowledged Masonic authority, the Voice of Masonry, and is not the "wild dream" of a despised Anti-mason. The churches are rapidly learning that Christianity can have no fellowship with Masonry. That it is an enemy of Christ is no longer a doubtful problem, but an assured fact.

Archbishop Katzer, of Wisconsin, has addressed an official letter to the priests of his diocese relative to the position to be taken by them in regard to membership in secret organizations. He declares that Masons and Carbonari are excommunicated, and that "the Odd-fellows and Sons of Temperance are, at least by name, expressly forbidden." He also says that Anarchists, Communists, Socialists and Turners, who are allied to the society known under the general title of "Turnerbund," come under the class which the Roman Catholic church excommunicates. Moreover, all societies which claim for themselves a "priest," or chaplain, or worship on their own authority, with their own special ritual and ceremonies, are explicitly excommunicated. These remarks do not apply to the reciting of prayers at public gatherings. Under pain of "grievous sin," all Roman Catholics are forbidden to join any society which binds its members either by oath or by mere word of honor to observe the secret so strictly that it cannot be revealed with impunity even to the bishop of a diocese; likewise, on pain of "grievous sin," societies which bind their members to unreserved obedience are forbidden. Cynosure readers will find this subject further discussed in our New England Letter, on another page, with comments that certainly seem to convict the Roman Catholic church of inconsistency in its treatment of secret societies.

"The supreme duty and chief virtue of a Mason—his first obligation—is that of silence and secrecy." So says Gould's "Guide to the Royal Arch Chapter," published by Macoy, in New York, 1876, p. 145. If it had been first printed in the Cynosure, how the fraternity would have sneered, and pointed to the great, grand benevolence of the order as its brightest jewel—its noblest aspiration—and called Anti-masons appropriate names for making such an assertion. But it is true. Take away the silence and secrecy from Masonry, and all its shams and virtuous pretensions would crumble like unslaked lime in an April shower.

ANOTHER MASON'S EXPERIENCE.—III.

HOW HE WAS INDUCED TO JOIN THE LODGE.—WHY HE DID NOT LIKE THE SYSTEM.—HIS RENUNCIATION, TRIAL AND EXPULSION FROM THE ORDER

BY S. F. PROCTOR, ELLSWORTH, ARK.

[Concluded.]

I said, "I have a copy of his letter; and at the close he said, 'I send this letter to your secretary, and recommend, if you are still desirous of withdrawing, that they permit you to do so.'" Foster then said: "Oh, yes! I know he recommended that we do so; but he did not order it done, because it was contrary to Masonic law. You say that this lodge was too stubborn to take the Grand Master's advice. I tell you, as long as I am Master of this lodge, I mean to stick to that law" (pointing to the volume of "Edicts" on the Secretary's table). "You remember the law I read to you the last night you attended the lodge?" I said: "Yes; and that is what I am objecting to—your Masonic law. Now, I don't propose to be under any such law." Foster said, "Remember your obligation, sir." I said, "I know you have obligations here, and I know that they have penalties to them that would make a heathen blush." Foster said, "Don't you trample on our Masonic lights" (pointing to the altar). I said: "I see you have the Holy Bible on the altar. Will you please answer me this question: Can you show me in your Masonic monitors or rituals one prayer offered in Jesus' (or Christ's) name? 'He that denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father,'" etc. Foster said, "We are not here to answer your superstition, sir; if you are done answering the charge, you have permission to retire."

J. G. Bennett (at this time secretary) said he desired to ask a question. Foster said, "All right." Bennett then said, "You spoke of trying to get a demit; I want to know what you wanted with a demit; what did you aim to do with it?" I remarked that I was "like nearly every member in this lodge. I thought that a man had a right to take a demit from the lodge and do as he pleased with it. I intended to quietly retire from the order, and have no further association with it, whatever; but they would not permit me to do so. Now I am glad that you have prosecuted this case as you have, for it has caused me to investigate this subject more and more; and the more I investigate Masonry, the farther I get from it." Foster asked him if there was any other question he wished to ask. He said, "No, sir."

J. H. Council (whose head is frosted over by many winters) said he would like to ask a question. Foster said, "Go ahead." Council then said, "Now, Bro. Proctor, it is all in the best of feelings that we ask these questions." I remarked that "I know it is with me; that I hold nothing against you men as my neighbors; it is this ungodly institution I am objecting to." He then said, "Didn't you promise, right there, at that altar, that you would suffer your throat to be cut from ear to ear and your tongue torn out by the roots, before you would divulge the least semblance of this thing?" I said: "I tell you, as I told Trusty, that it has been published and scattered from Dan to Beersheba. When asked if these books were true, I told the truth, as every Christian will do." He then said, "Didn't you know that you was violating your obligation when you did that?" I said: "The obligation I have taken at that altar is not such as to cause me to tell lies to cover up your beloved idol. I have higher obligations resting upon me than that." Foster then said, "You have permission to retire." I said: "All right. I wish to say with St. Paul, 'But have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness nor handling the Word of God deceitfully, but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.' The weapons of my warfare are not carnal, but are mighty in God to the pulling down of strongholds. I carry my sword in my pocket (exhibiting the Testament), and we are commanded to 'have on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil; for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places; and take the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God.'" Foster said: "You have a right to have some one to defend you if you wish. The Master can appoint some one." I said: "If any one feels free to volunteer to defend me after they have heard what I have had to say to the charges, all right; if not, just carry out your Masonic law; but I make the same request I made to the Grand Master in 1885, when I gave my reasons for withdrawing from the order. At the close of my letter, I said, 'If the above reasons are not sufficient to acquit me honorably from this institution, I have one more request to make—that is, that when you expel me and advertise me, please publish my reasons.'" Foster shook his head. I said, "Very well; I see your head shaking there; I want you to remember that it is my privilege to have them published and send them as far East, or as far West, or as far North, and as far South as you send my expulsion." I then said, "Good evening, gentlemen," opened the door and came out, like a bird out of a cage, feeling as free as the freest.

I can say with Bro. Paul, "No man stood with me; notwithstanding, the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me." Now I feel determined, by the grace of God, to stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made me free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

Now, what I have to say against this institution, I say, as it were, upon the house-top. John the Revelator says: "Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works; in the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double. How much she hath glorified herself and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her." Now I mean to give her two truths for every lie she practiced upon me.

After waiting one month, looking for them to notify me of the result of my trial, I met N. M. Howard, ex-Master. I asked him if it was not the duty of the lodge to inform me of the result of my trial. He said that he found no law to that effect. I said that "reason would teach me that when a man was tried where he could not be present, that he should be informed. Now I would like to know if the vote was unanimous against me." Howard remarked that "it was, though I was in the chair (or Master's station) and did not vote." So you see I came out as I went in, by a unanimous vote.

I find there are two ways of getting out of a Masonic lodge; one is to die out—the other is to be kicked out. I prefer the latter.

I do praise the Lord that I did not go out in the first way mentioned, with this Masonic yoke of bondage and darkness resting upon me. The prophet Isaiah, looking down to Christ's day, said, "In that day the burden shall be taken off thy shoulder, and the yoke off thy neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing."

I desire to call attention to a statement I find upon a tract I received from the N. C. A. The title is, "Killed Without Inquest." I find a detailed account of two ministers (Mr. Johnston, of the Methodist church, and Mr. Marshall, of the Episcopal church,) taking the Royal Arch degree. Mr. Marshall went through safely. During the ceremonies Mr. Johnston got a fall of thirteen feet, which resulted in his death. The point I desire to call attention to is in the statement to the public, made by the officers of Huntington lodge. After describing how the accident occurred, they say: "No blame attaches to any one for this unfortunate accident, and no person can be more deeply grieved than are the members of the Masonic fraternity. We, the undersigned, officers of Huntington Royal Arch Chapter, No. 6, certify that the above statement is true in every particular. This sad accident to Bro. Johnston occurred in the performance of rites in no way derogatory to the dignity of his profession as a clergyman. (Signed) W. H. Banks, High Priest; John Olson, King; Zenas Martin, Scribe."

Now let us see how he swore: (From the Royal Arch obligation, as given in David Bernard's Light on Masonry; see sections 12 and 13): "Furthermore, do I promise and swear that I will aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause, so far as to extricate him from the same, if in my power, whether he be right or wrong. Furthermore, do I promise and swear, that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own, murder and treason not excepted."

The officers of that Chapter assert to the public that those rites as administered to Mr. Johnston were in no way derogatory to his profession as a minister of the Gospel, notwithstanding he was sworn to assist a brother in any difficulty and extricate him from the same, whether he be right or wrong; also, to keep his secrets, murder and treason not excepted. When we look around us and see the number of ministers engaged in this dark conspiracy, we say, no wonder the angel cried mightily, with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. And I (have) heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her my people, (and I have obeyed), that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. In Jeremiah we read: "Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sin hath withholden good things from you. For among my people are found wicked men; they lay in wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap; they catch men. As a cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit; therefore they are become great, and waxen rich. For from the least of them, even unto the greatest of them, every one is given to covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealth falsely." Then let me say with this same prophet: "To whom shall I speak, and give warning, that they may hear? Behold, their ear is uncircumcised and cannot hearken; behold the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach; they have no delight in it. I am weary with holding in. I will pour it out upon the children abroad, and upon the assembly of young men together; for even the husband with the wife shall be (is being) taken."

The wise man said, "Surely in vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird." Now I mean to do my utmost to discover this Masonic net to those who have not been caught in this snare, that it may be set in vain.

In conclusion, I call your attention to the language of the great Prophet that spake as never man spake and said: "For there is nothing covered, that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known. Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in the ear (at low breath) in the closet, shall be proclaimed upon the housetops."

"Now I commend you unto Him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy; to the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and evermore! Amen."

A "SLIGHT BUT NECESSARY" MODIFICATION.—II.

BY J. T. MICHAEL.

Let us examine more carefully two parts of two of the quotations which I have already given from Dr. Gard's Masonic oration. Referring to the common ground of belief between Freemasonry and the minister of religion, he says:

"Is he a presbyter or priest? Then we tell him that religion shall find in us one of her most useful auxiliaries, one of her most fair and generous handmaidens, and that the theology which he inculcates we live to embody. We, as he, believe in one God; as he, in one great light of conduct, the holy Bible; as he, in one great comfort and help in all seasons of trial, peril, woe—even prayer; and, as he, anticipate another and a better world."

Suppose that, instead of this Masonic oration, Mr. Gard, as the representative of his own denomination, had made an address of welcome to fraternal delegates to one of his conferences, and that in it he had spoken of the common ground of doctrinal belief; we can easily imagine that he would mention, as doctrines of mutual acceptance, the belief in God, the Bible, and prayer; but can we imagine that he would make no reference to the "one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus?" Why is there no reference to the "one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus?" Why is there no reference to this fundamental truth in the allusion to the common ground of belief between Masonry and the "presbyter or priest?" May the correct answer not be that Mr. Gard, as a Masonic orator—as a representative of Freemasonry—could not truthfully say that "we, as he, believe in one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus?"

Again, here is another remarkable omission: "Is it not a city 'foursquare,' having gates north, south, east, and westward? Is not that Masonic? And we shall have our Great Light, even the Builder and Maker himself; and there shall be no need of the light of the candle. And there shall be no temple—no temple, as there shall be no tomb; no tomb, for all shall be life; no temple, for the spanless city is itself the temple."

Compare this with the chapter 21 of Revelation. I will give the 22nd and 23rd verses: "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it. And the city hath no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it; for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof."

Even in this allusion to the "holy Jerusalem" Dr. Gard makes no mention of "the Lamb." Is it possible that this is a mere accident? Is it possible that, speaking as a minister of the Gospel, under any circumstances, he would have failed, while having such a theme, to make a definite reference to Jesus Christ? We must remember that our orator is now speaking as a Mason. His omission is in perfect harmony with Masonic teaching. Indeed, it is a necessary omission. In the estimate of Freemasonry, it is a slight omission. I think I can give good reasons for making these two assertions.

"The Book of the Chapter" is the title of a Masonic instruction book by Albert G. Mackey, M. D., "Grand High Priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of South Carolina, author of a Lexicon of Freemasonry, 'Principles of Masonic Law,' etc." On pages 19 and 20 of this book is a charge to be read at the opening of a lodge of mark masters. In a note appended to this charge, Dr. Mackey writes: "The passages are taken, with slight but necessary modifications, from the 2d chapter of the First Epistle of Peter and the 28th chapter of Isaiah" In the charge, 1 Peter 2:5 reads thus: "Ye also as living stones; be ye built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer sacrifices acceptable to God."

Compare this with the verse as it is in the New Testament: "Ye also, as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ."

The expression "by Jesus Christ" is left out, and there are not even any dots or stars to denote an omission. This is one of the "slight but necessary modifications." The same exclusion is made from 2 Thess. 3:6-16, in the charge for the use of a Royal Arch chapter. In the note attached to this charge, on page 104, we read: "Though the old temple be destroyed, we must labor in building the new; though the word be lost, we must labor for its recovery. Masonic labor is the search for the word—the search after divine truth. This, and this only, is the Mason's work, and the word is his reward. . . . Cheerily hoping for the consummation and the reward of our labor in the sublime knowledge which is promised to him who plays no laggard's part; and which, when this earthly temple is dissolved, we shall find in that second temple, not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Jesus Christ excluded from the epistles of his own apostles, in order to bring the portions which are for Masonic use into harmony with Masonic doctrines! "A slight but necessary modification!" This is a bold admission upon the part of Dr. Mackey, but if the Masonic standard is the correct one, it is exactly true. Think of a minister of the Gospel applying to such a system in his search for divine truth! How is it possible that those who claim to be the representatives of Christ can be found groping in such a field of darkness and death?

It may be objected that the charges in "The Book of the Chapter" are charges for use in the chapter degrees, and that, therefore, what I have said does not apply to Blue Lodge, or universal, Masonry. But the exclusion of Christ is just the same in both; and if this mangling of Scripture is necessary in the chapter, it is necessary in the Blue Lodge. If such an alteration of the New Testament is only a slight modification according to the chapter standard, it would be only a slight modification according to the Blue Lodge standard. Let us notice some "slight but necessary modifications" which may come nearer to the Blue Lodge.

"The General Ahiman Rezon and Freemason's Guide" is a work published by the "Masonic Manufacturing and Publishing Company" of New York. It contains monitorial instructions in the degrees of Entered Apprentice Fellow-craft, and Master Mason—the three Blue Lodge degrees. The book is by Daniel Sickels, "Secretary General of the Supreme Council, northern jurisdiction." In this book, we find some Masonic funeral services prepared by Robert Macoy, "Past Deputy-Grand Master, Grand Recorder," etc. In the "exhortation" to be delivered at the grave of a deceased member of the Master Mason degree, we have the following: "Then let us improve this solemn warning that at last, when the sheeted dead are stirring, when the great white throne is set, we shall receive from the Omniscient Judge the thrilling invitation, Come, ye blessed, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."—Pp. 338, 339.

What right has Mr. Macoy to say that the "Omniscient Judge" will give such a "thrilling invitation?" The Omniscient Judge himself ought to know what he will say, and he has told us what it would be. In Matt. 25:34, Jesus Christ, who is the Omniscient Judge, reveals to us what his language will be: "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Why is the expression "of my Father" left out in the Masonic burial service? It is simply another "slight but necessary" modification to get Jesus Christ out of the way. What can be more outrageous than this?

After the "exhortation," comes a hymn which may be sung at the grave. The hymn is number 999 in the "Hymnal of the Methodist Episcopal Church." I will give three verses as they appear in the Hymnal, and the same verses arranged to suit the Masonic burial service. They may be found on pages 339, 340, 341 of the book from which the previous extract was taken.

Here is the first stanza as it is in the Hymnal:

"Thou art gone to the grave; but we will not deplore thee,
Though sorrow and darkness encompass the tomb;
Thy Saviour has passed through its portals before thee,
And the lamp of his love is thy guide through the gloom."

Here is a reference to the death of Christ; but that would not do for Masonry. Take the version in the burial service, and notice the "slight but necessary" modification:

"Thou art gone to the grave; but we will not deplore thee,
Though sorrow and darkness encompass the tomb;
The Good has passed on through its portals before thee,
And the cassia blooms greenly to lighten the gloom."

Take the second verse in the Hymnal:

"Thou art gone to the grave; we no longer behold thee;
Nor tread the rough path of the world by thy side;
But the wide arms of mercy are spread to enfold thee,
And sinners may die, for the Sinless hath died."

See another "slight but necessary" modification in the last lines. I quote from the Masonic service:

"Thou art gone to the grave; we no longer behold thee,
Nor tread the rough paths of the world by thy hand;
But the wide arms of mercy are spread to enfold thee,
And we'll meet thee again in the heavenly land."

The fourth verse in the Hymnal:

"Thou art gone to the grave; but we will not deplore thee;
Whose God was thy ransom, thy guardian, and guide.
He gave thee, he took thee, and he will restore,
And death hath no sting, for the Saviour has died."

The word ransom is left out in the burial service, and that last line would never do. It must receive another "slight but necessary" modification. Here it is:

"Thou art gone to the grave; but 'twere wrong to deplore thee,
When God was thy trust and guardian and guide;
He gave thee, he took thee, and soon will restore thee
In the blest lodge above where the faithful abide."

Is not that ingenious? A comparison of these two versions of the same hymn will give a pretty clear idea of the difference between Freemasonry and Christianity. Imagine a minister of the Gospel announcing the first version at the funeral of one of his Christian brethren on one day and on the next day announcing the other version at the funeral of one of his Masonic brethren. What can be more absurd, more contradictory, more inconsistent and more abominable? If, as Prof. Harris says, "Christianity is the absolute and universal religion for all men in all ages," what business have Christian ministers with Freemasonry? They cannot belong to both systems without coming into conflict with Christianity in its very essential claims.

Col. Robert Ingersoll, with all his inconsistencies, does not ask the Christian church to support him. Freemasonry contains a scheme of infidelity which is far more injurious than Ingersollism. If ministers of the Gospel wish to be Freemasons, they should renounce Christianity. They should leave the church; and if they will not leave it, they should be expelled.

And what are we going to do about it? Will we allow things to go along just as they have been going for years? It makes my soul sick to see how many act in reference to this great question. They say they do not believe in Masonry, and that they are sorry that so many ministers are Masons; they give us long lamentations about the awful condition of the church; they hope that something will come to pass which will introduce a better state of affairs; they spend a great deal of their time in mourning, and hoping, and looking; but will they take their stand for holiness, for righteousness, for Christianity, for Christ, in such a way that something must be accomplished? If every member of every evangelical church which tolerates Freemasonry, who reads these articles, will determine that he will take such a position in his church that either a reformation will be brought about or he will be turned out, we will witness a mighty revolution.

God is tired of mere professions. He is tired of resolutions which go no further than the paper upon which they are printed. He is tired of so much talk with so little doing. He is tired of so much faith with so little work. He wants action. He wants those who profess to be his followers to act in reference to this glaring crime of the union of Masonry with the church in such a manner that a crisis will be forced in which the church will be compelled, if it will not do so willingly, to investigate this subject—a crisis in which the blazing, burning light of God's truth will go forth revealing the horrible plight of Masonic preachers of the Gospel so thoroughly that they will either fall down and renounce their allegiance to an infidel system or else slink away, ashamed to be seen among Christian people. May the great God help us to be true!

SECRECY AND SIN.

Secrecy and sin are correlative terms. The one begets the other, which, in turn, strives to conceal its parent. Sin is the father of secrecy, and secrecy is the cloak for sin.

The first unholy act on record was followed immediately by a contrivance to conceal the sin, for when our foreparents transgressed in the garden, they at once went into a secret place and hid themselves from the presence of the Lord. The scenes that followed, when the angel came down, and, with a drawn sword, proclaimed banishment from the fair and lovely Eden, and when the mighty voice of Jehovah spoke, "Cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life," closed the first great drama of the world's history, caused by sin and accompanied by secrecy. The two are twin brothers, born out of the same cause, and nursed and reared together.

The first murderer resorted to secrecy, to shield himself from the wrath of God. "Cain, where is Abel, thy brother?" He answered, "I know not." But the voice of the murdered brother's blood revealed the secret, and the Lord said, "A fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth." Thus the bloody drama was initiated, the types of iniquity set, and the two twin brothers flourished.

From the hour of their birth they have been spreading themselves like green bay trees, keeping side by side, as mutual friends, locked in each other's embrace.

The cunningness of Satan is nowhere more dextrously employed than in the modern secret fraternity. If we only had sin lone-handed to battle with, the struggle might not be so arduous, and the victory so difficult to win; but veiled with a cloak, called benevolence, including charity, friendship, brotherly love, etc., the masterpiece of organized sin is held out in its most beneficiary appearance.

Freemasonry is called a religion. (Albert G. Mackey.) It takes in the Jew, the Mohammedan, the infidel, and the pagan. It discards the name of Christ, and calls all Christians dogs. (Cowan.) Yet it claims to teach all the principles "that the soul of man desires," both for time and eternity.

One of the arguments used, to sustain the time-honored lodge, is, that Solomon is its founder, and built the first temple. Granting that he was, though for this there is no evidence, we fail to see the benefit he derived from it, for, after the building of the temple, he fell into the vanities of sinful pleasures from which the "beauties of the secret order" did not redeem him.

Another claim is that Christ himself was a member of the lodge. Now, if he was, he could only have taken the "Entered Apprentice" degree, for he says, "In secret have I said nothing," and in all the degrees, except the first, each member is required to be active.

Again he says, "Swear not at all," but in taking each degree, the candidate is required to forswear himself by the taking of blood-curdling oaths, which increase in horribleness as they advance in degrees.

Now the religion of Jesus Christ is entirely a different thing. It is to be told, not in darkness, but in the light. It is to be published, not in secret chambers, but upon the housetops. It is to be told not to a select few, but to the world.

The doors to Christ's kingdom are not chained with iron-clad oaths, but stand wide open. The invitation is not alone to the wealthy, but "who-soever will let him come and take of the water of life freely."

Sin everywhere is closely followed by secrecy, for men do not want their vices published to the world. The saloon-keeper screens his door, the gambler his window, and the lodge men take an upper room, and bolt the door. Great men are admitted—men at the head of governments, men, high in profession—the LL.D., the M. D., the Rev. D. D., as well as the drunkard, the infidel, the skeptic and the pagan. All are on one common level—"yoked together." There they revel at the dead hour of night, perpetuating some heathen myth, brought up from the dark ages, shrouded in mystery. Man—the noblest work of God's creation—is playing the murderer in darkness. Secrecy and sin, born together; they are stalking up and down, as roaring lions. Through the world they are going together, and together they must perish.

Feed the one and the other will fatten; slay the one and the other will die.—Quincy Leckrone in the Gospel Messenger.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The New Chivalry—Mrs. Livermore on Queen Elizabeth—A Curious Masonic blunder—A question for Masons—Removing mountains.

I do not know but I shall some day write a paper on "The Modern Development of the Chivalrous Sentiment in Woman." The "climbing vine" theory that makes that spirit which seeks to protect the weak and helpless—the surest sign of nobility in man—wholly a masculine characteristic, is happily receding into the past. Everywhere woman is becoming the champion of the weak, the tempted, the unfortunate classes of society. A new "age of chivalry" has dawned, in which women are the leaders; the real knights-errant, waging their holy war against the dragons of lust and impurity, and delivering the wretched victims of whom the country pays its annual tribute to the saloon and the house of ill-fame as coolly as the communities of medieval times gave up their children to be devoured by monsters. Like the worker bee, which, to become a queen, only needs to be provided with a cell and food adapted to develop its latent royalty, they are—perhaps when the twentieth century dawns we shall say were—the creatures of their environments. The changed conditions, the multiplicity of avenues for work, the larger, freer life into which the white ribbon and white cross movements, with their broad outlook on humanity, have called them—all have had a share in evolving this new type of womanhood, the chivalrous type.

That will be a blessed—and I hope not very distant—day, when this element will have its due representation in our legislative assemblies. In Massachusetts' Great and General Court, as that body now exists, there does not seem to be enough knightliness to frown down the low-minded attacks on personal character of which Senator McNary's attempt at a recent hearing on the Carney Hospital matter to weaken the testimony of a Christian woman and white-ribboner by throwing out a base innuendo, was a peculiarly offensive specimen. I hope, for the honor of his sex, that the Senator would have given something to recall his words when confronted by "the new chivalry" in the person of Mrs. E. Trask Hill, who sprang to the defence in a white-heat of just and womanly indignation. Another most cowardly and shameful attack on Mr. Arnold, a reformed and converted man who works under the auspices of the Clark-street mission, was lately made by a Jewish member, Mr. Rosonosky, who has been a very prominent and unscrupulous advocate of the Carney Hospital steal; and was simply an outrageously mean attempt to revenge on the former his stand in opposing State appropriations to this sectarian institution. It is high time that our Commonwealth ceased to send to the Legislature such low-minded Representatives.

Mrs. Livermore's Music Hall lecture on Queen Elizabeth, though it did not bring out any new points in relation to her character or history, was a fine and true presentation of the greatest and most truly royal of all England's sovereigns. There is a charm about the Elizabethan period which is partly (but by no means entirely) due to the galaxy of glorious names which surround it with such a witching glamour. Her own personality had much to do with it, as we can see by imagining the difference had she been another Bloody Mary, or even a weak-minded pedant like her successor James II. She was truly what Cromwell himself, who had enough inborn royalty to recognize it in another, used to reverently call "the great queen;" and the greater for being, on one side of her ancestry, a thorough English woman. Her reign was a day-star of hope for all Protestant Europe; and never in the history of nations was God's hand displayed more wonderfully than when he sent those August gales to dash in pieces the Spanish Armada against the wild outlying reefs of the German ocean. As that monster fleet, extending for seven miles in a semi-circle, appeared off the English coast, how frightened mothers, who perhaps had seen martyrs burned at the stake, must have clasped their children to their arms, and prayed God to defend their homes against an enemy far more to be dreaded than the Danish invaders of Alfred's time. The horror with which Spanish cruelty inspired the English race has been a heritage curiously perpetuated to this day in the old nursery tale of "Jack and the Bean Stalk." Few people know that the giant with his terrible "Fee, fo, fum; I smell the blood of an Englishman," who has held so many little ones under his dreadful spell till broken by the prowess of the gallant Jack, had its origin in those stirring times when the Duke of Parma was the bugbear of every English child, and Sir Francis Drake the conquering hero. Let us keep that inheritance of hatred, not to any man; still less to any people—God forbid!—but to that system which is seeking, covertly and by guile, to get possession of our own fair land, and which lately stoned Mary Clemmer Leavitt in the streets of Pernambuco; the first time in all her world-wide wanderings that the sanctity of her mission has failed to be respected.

Speaking of Elizabeth, a very curious mistake occurs in Rebold's History of Freemasonry. He says (p. 241) that in 1561 "Queen Elizabeth, indignant that the Grand Mastership had not been offered to her consort during his life, was intending to order the dissolution of all the Masonic lodges by force; but was finally led to revoke the command and eventually to become the protectress of the Freemasons in her realm, confirming their choice of Thomas Sackville as Grand Master." Every student of history knows that Elizabeth so abhorred the idea of matrimony that to mention it was the surest way of provoking her royal displeasure; so, perhaps, it is well that Rebold does not give us the name of her "consort." Though a Frenchman, he ought surely to have been better informed on English history than to put forth such a silly yarn. It is still more strange that so palpable and amusing a blunder should escape the notice of the American translator.

The last British American has a long editorial on the anathematizing of Freemasons and Odd-fellows by the Church of Rome; and quotes, with much satisfaction, the remarkable statement made by Colonel Sherman, Grand Orator of the Masonic Order on the Pacific coast, at Music Hall, two or three years ago, that "Freemasonry had its birth among the Huguenots of France, who took the speculative and philosophical ethics and attached them to the working tools of the operative Masons of England." Rome is great at falsifying history, but she must look to her laurels when Masonry tries its hand at the business. I would like, with all due respect, to ask the editor of the British American if it be true, as he asserts, that "Rome always and everywhere declares her unbounded hatred for Freemasonry," how it happens that the lately deceased actor, W. J. Florence, received extreme unction in his last hours, and was buried with all the rites of the Catholic church, and yet was a 32-degree Mason? Imperial Potentate Samuel Briggs, and Imperial Recorder F. M. Luce, of Mecca Temple, New York, issued an official order that all the lodges of the Mystic Shrine should be "draped with mourning for a period of three consecutive moons throughout the Western hemisphere." Why did Rome and Masonry unite to do the dead actor honor, if there is such an irreconcilable antagonism between the two? Men and brethren, the non-Masonic mind waits for light on this mystery, and is not particular from what point of compass it comes.

A W. C. T. U. woman, in the Traveller, calling for more strenuous opposition to the liquor traffic, mentions this remark of Lady Sandhurst: "Mountains must be removed before Liberalism shall triumph; but I am going to be among those who shall help remove the mountains." The writer has for some time held Sabbath afternoon meetings at her house, and last Sabbath Rev. S. F. Porter, being present, conducted the service, taking for his topic the faith which removes mountains, and its need if we would be successful in reform work. Starting with the facts of Bible history, he gave his own experience with slavery to show how, at the appointed time, the mountain was removed and cast into the sea. He was listened to with deep attention by a small but thoroughly sympathetic audience as he applied it to our own anti-secret reform. The visit of this venerable servant of God has been to me a precious inspiration. Shall we not all say, Jehovah helping me, "I am going to be among those who shall help remove the mountain?"

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27, 1892.

The United States Senate has placed itself on record by the decisive vote of 43 to 11 as being opposed to adding anything to the existing proscription of Chinese immigration. This vote was upon the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations in favor of substituting for the absolutely prohibitory bill which recently passed the House of Representatives the bill which was passed by the Senate some time ago for the extension for a period of ten years from their expiration of the present laws applying to Chinese immigration. The bill is now in the hands of a conference committee, and it is believed that the House members of that committee, seeing that the Senate will not agree to anything more radical, will report in favor of the adoption by the House of the Senate bill, and that the House will agree to it, notwithstanding the united opposition of the Pacific coast members.

Senator McMillan is a believer in the observance of the Sabbath, and has introduced a bill which provides that from and after its passage it shall be unlawful to sell or deliver ice in any quantity within the District of Columbia on Sunday, under a penalty of from $25 to $50 fine. This is the outcome of the indorsement of the ice-men's movement to obtain rest on Sunday by ministers of all denominations.

Speaking of Sabbath observance, petitions were this week presented to Congress from Seventh-day Adventists and Baptists in Missouri, Texas, Virginia, Michigan, Arkansas, Wisconsin, and the Dakotas, asking Congress not to legislate for the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday.

"One thing thou lackest," said Jesus to the rich young man who threw himself down before him crying, "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" This was made the basis of a very interesting address delivered by Rev. H. M. Wharton, the Baltimore evangelist, to young men only, in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall. He told his hearers that the same conditions existed to day as when Jesus told that rich young man to go and give his money to the poor and return, and that Jesus was always willing to receive them, but they must come poor and in need of his strength. He cautioned them against thinking, as that other young man did, that it was enough to lead a moral life and violate none of the commandments, and told them that moral men are sometimes stumbling-blocks, because they think if they honor the church and religion, that is enough for them to do, which is a great fallacy, something more being required of those who wish to inherit eternal life.

A gentleman in this city has an antique oak box, girded around with heavy wire clasps, which was once used by Martin Luther as a receptacle for his Bible.

The colored Y. M. C. A. is progressing rapidly since it got its own building. It held a large meeting last Sunday, at which an address was made by Dr. B. F. Moorland, who has just been elected General Secretary of the Association.

Successful revivals have just closed in several of our churches, and the converts number several hundred.

Secretary Blaine has sent, through the Secretary of the Treasury, a letter to Congress requesting that an appropriation of $150,000 be made as early as possible to enable the President to fulfill the stipulations contained in the treaties between the United States and Great Britain signed on the 29th of February and the 18th of April, 1892, in relation to the tribunal of arbitration to sit at Paris to determine questions relating to Behring Sea. A bill has been introduced appropriating the money.

At the last meeting of the Washington branch of the Woman's National Indian Association, Mr. C. C. Painter, a member of the Indian Rights Association, and one of the United States Commissioners, who has been at work among the mission Indians of Southern California making preparations for the allotment of their lands, told the members of the necessity for a hospital at Aqua Caliente, and it was determined to use this year's funds to pay the salary of a lady physician to be placed in charge of a hospital there.

Mrs. Harrison is improving very slowly, but she is still confined to her bed. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

Boston, April 29, 1892.

No particulars of the last hours and departure of our brother, Elder Isaac Jackson, have yet reached me. The simple statement that he "departed to be forever with the Lord" on the 6th of April, and that he requested Bro. James Miller, at whose house he died, in Bridgetown, Me., to notify me when he was gone, reminding him at the same time of a will which he had executed and which he hoped would receive proper attention, is about all I know. I know little of the details in this life of nearly four-score years, but I know, as many others can attest, that he was "a man of God," "a preacher of righteousness," and a Christian soldier who had the courage to do and to advocate that which he believed.

With his estimable wife he called on me once when I was pastor in Byron, Ill., as an evangelist and laborer in the vineyard of the Lord. Subsequently we met in Minnesota, where I was much helped and cheered by his co-operation, counsels and prayers, in the pioneer work of reform. He came, with his companion, to attend the second convention in Worcester, Mass., and I afterwards visited him at his home in Harrison, Me., where he was very helpful in a two-weeks' campaign against the strongholds of Satan. It was here that I had the opportunity of knowing the esteem in which he was held by the people among whom he dwelt. Every one respected him for his integrity of character and the uprightness of his life, and those whom he sought to win for Christ from the lodge could bring no worse accusation against him than that he was an anti-secrecy "crank."

After the decease of his beloved companion I visited him, by request, to assist in making such disposition of his worldly effects as he desired by bequest. His spirit was buoyant, his mind clear, and his faith in Christ and his righteous reign triumphant. The way was more lonely since the hand he had so long clasped in his had "forgot its cunning," but he bowed reverently to the will of Him who "doeth all things well." He has written to me several times since I came to New England, always expressing the warmest interest in our Christian work, and occasionally contributing to its support as the Lord had prospered him. I trust and have confidence that his long and useful life among men closed amid a halo of glory, and that the "chiefest among ten thousand," with many familiar faces and glad voices, greeted him on the "banks of eternal deliverance."

REV. WILLIAM FENTON IN CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., April 19, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have often wondered if while on the Pacific coast I should have an opportunity to observe an earthquake. Last night the opportunity came.

My room is on the second story of a well-built frame house on Post street, near Buchanan. At about 12 minutes before 3 o'clock P. M., while lying awake meditating how I should write to you and how my visits to pastors might be made more effectual that I might not run in vain, the house began to shake. My first thought was that it was occasioned by a railway train; but there is no railway within a very long distance of the house, and then I began to realize that it was truly an earthquake. In point of violence there were two distinct culminations, the second being much more violent than the first. It seemed to be accompanied with a low, clattering, rumbling sound, and both sound and motion seemed to be in the direction of the earth's polar diameter. The shaking of the house was not sufficient to break the plastering nor disturb the position of the movables, but, nevertheless, it was a very sensible shaking and produced a strange feeling in my mind. I wished myself away from the Pacific Coast. It is the first sensation of the kind I ever experienced, and I may not live to experience another.

If we tremble at God's word as we ought, we shall not tremble when he shakes the earth, for we shall have the fear of the Lord that is the beginning of wisdom.

I want to ask the readers of the Cynosure to pray that when I visit pastors and speak the truth to them they may not be able to gainsay and despise it under the cloak that "Masons are good men and good Christians."

We who know the truth know that Masonry is a lying abomination in the sight of God, and that Moses and all the prophets, and Christ and the apostles, rebuked the blasphemy of Masonry by the severest denunciations that language can express.

I have had an interview with a Presbyterian pastor in this city. He takes the Cynosure, but says he never reads it, for while he thinks the Cynosure people "may be honest," he is satisfied with the integrity of Masons. He says that he knows a Mason whose word he would trust for $500, not perceiving that while he would be safe in that trust, the Mason may be, and indeed really is, a lying spiritual professor. According to the myths and lies of the pagan mysteries and their revival in that London gin-shop, in 1717, lying is the chief delight of modern lodge worshipers, a fact to which the majority of modern pastors willfully shut their eyes because they are eating the bread of fraud and deceitfulness.

W. FENTON.

ANTI-SECRECY WORK IN OKLAHOMA.

LEXINGTON, Oklahoma Ter., April 25, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am still pushing the battle on, the best I know how, against the secret foe, and God is giving me encouragement.

The light is shining, and some are acknowledging the truth, that the lodge is no place for Christians. I was talking to a man the other day who had just joined the Odd-fellows' lodge. He said: "You don't think there is anything wrong about that, do you?" I told him that the danger in that lay in its being a rival to the Christian religion, and that many are trusting in it for their salvation. His answer was: "I am afraid of it." Such answers as this strengthen my faith in the anti-secrecy reform, and I see that the exposures which you publish are correct.

I want to thank you and the dear friends who have so kindly supplied me with tracts and with the Cynosure for the last year. I have been strengthened and encouraged by reading them. I have distributed them at my preaching appointments, and given them away where I thought they would do the most good. I am sowing beside all waters the best I know how, and I expect the Lord will water the seed, and some day send some strong reformer down this way to harvest the fruit. Then the sower and the harvester will rejoice together.

I had a talk with the Presbyterian minister of Purcell, and his son, about the evils of the lodge. They seemed to be already awake to them, but had never seen the Cynosure. I gave them a copy, and a few days afterwards they subscribed for it. So the leaven works; and I find here and there, all over the country, men who are getting their eyes opened.

Dear friends, pray for me and the work in this country. May the time soon come when the hidden things of dishonesty will be brought to light; the highways that lead to hell be closed, and the only way of truth and righteousness be exalted.

I am praying that God may send some true reformer this way to help us—one who can and will cry aloud and spare not, but will show the people their sins, and the house of Israel their transgressions. Yours in the faith,

WM. I. ABBOTT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT RELIGIOUS.

NEW YORK, April 15, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—With Bro. Hinman's theory and practice in reference to secret orders, I am in full accord; but I cannot accept his idea that the state is "a civil" and therefore not "a religious institution." True, the state is not like the church, to explain and enforce religion; but surely the state is "concerned with religion," must be "conformed to religion," and be "godly," as Webster defines religious.

The state is a divine institution, owes its being and authority to God, and shares in the common obligation of creatures to conform to and serve its author and Lord. But the Bible expressly requires civil magistrates to give religious worship and obedience to the Lord; threatens them with judgments if they withhold these; and makes this religious character the condition and ground of their continued existence and power. Ps. 2: 10-12; Ps. 22: 27-29; Isa. 60: 12; Jer. 5: 29; Luke 19: 12-27; Rom. 13: 1-7.

The failure of the United States Constitution to recognize the Lord has steadily exerted an unfavorable influence upon the religious observances which still prevail in the nation, and has led the way to Christless forms and services of religious worship. Thus the national Thanksgiving, a day of national worship of God, is now called with a sedulous omission of the name of Christ, even by the orthodox and Christian President who now administers the government; and the observance of the day is rapidly losing all religious character, and becoming a mere holiday like Good Friday or Christmas. The Congress opens its sessions with prayer. A Jewish Rabbi a few days ago officiated in this service "with general satisfaction;" yet of course he did not own or honor the Son of God. The administration of the oath is an act of religious worship. Deut. 5: 13 and 10: 20. Yet most of our Presidents have taken the oath without using any name of God; and very largely in our civil courts, the Christian oath is supplanted altogether by the heathen "kissing of the book." The Lord's day, too, is persistently profaned by Congress, by the mail service, and by public officers; even Christian John Wanamaker is reported by the papers as returning a few days ago from New York to Washington "on Sunday."

But even if we grant that the state is "civil and not religious," can a Christian man in civil relations innocently perform an act which the law of Christ forbids him to do? Is government released, or can it release others from obedience to God? Can a Christian serve the devil as a citizen, and yet be guiltless because he serves Christ in the family and the church? No. We cannot thus escape God's presence and claims. Ps. 139: 1-9. Sin is sin everywhere and always, and the Christian is to have no fellowship with it, neither in the state nor in the lodge. "Come forth, my people, out of her, that ye have no fellowship with her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. 18: 4. J. C. K. MILLIGAN.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED AND EXPOSED.

AN OPEN LETTER.

YORK, Pa., March 18, 1892.

Pennsylvania Christian Anti-Secret Convention, Pittsburgh, Pa.:

DEAR FRIENDS:—During the past twenty-four years, I have often been told by members of the various secret societies that I do not know anything about secret organizations. And as all anti-secret reformers have had similar experience, I have concluded that it is my duty to give to the world all the proof I have that secret societies are un-American, immoral, demoralizing, dangerous, criminal, murderous, treasonable and unconstitutional. And to support this indictment I now submit the following statement:

1. The Scriptures condemn secret societies. "Men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil."

2. The history of the world is against secret orders. Jesuits, Jacobins and Janizaries are all condemned by historians.

3. Human nature frowns upon plots and conspiracies. Only depraved human beings plot and conspire.

4. Secretive animals reflect upon secretive men. The fox, cat, tiger and lion are all beasts of prey.

5. Public opinion condemns secret orders. All criminal secret associations have either death penalties or death penalty passwords, for this reason.

6. Civilization is against secretism. Civilized and enlightened men are sensible and honorable, while the half-civilized, barbarous and savage delight in torture, scalps and deviltry in general.

7. Blushing members betray secret orders. I have seen sensitive secretists blush from shame at lodge wickedness.

8. Honest, adhering lodge members enter a plea of "guilty" when the lodge is charged with immorality and demoralization.

9. Editors of lodge newspapers often accuse the craft of the same vices charged upon them by anti-secret reformers.

10. Thinking men and women are opposers of all secret orders. Thoughtless and ignorant persons are outwitted, hoodwinked and haltered easily.

11. "By their fruits ye shall know them." The Rebellion was planned and executed by Jesuits, Royal Masons and Knights of the Golden Circle.

12. Learned authorities furnish facts against secret associations. Noah Webster informs us that the words "assassin" and "assassination" are derived from an ancient secret society that taught and practiced assassination.

13. Free and independent men antagonize the lodge. They do not desire a Boss, Grand Master or Pope.

14. Angry secretists expose the lodge. Such publicly approved the murder of Morgan.

15. Drunken members expose the lodge. A drunken tongue is always "un-Masonic."

16. Reason is against organized secrecy. A secret association is an unreasonable institution in the family, state or church.

17. Truth is antagonistic to secretism. It does not need grips, winks, deception, fraud, lies, etc.

18. Patriotic heroes, like Washington, warn us against Jesuitic plots and conspiracies. Tweed, the Tammany thief, required a great Jesuitic secret organization, to plunder the State of New York.

19. Many well-tested proverbs are against the secret lodge system. "Honesty is the best policy."

20. Efforts to conceal cast suspicion on the lodge. Virtue never requires concealment.

21. Slips of the tongue often give us "more light." Lodge men have tongues that sometimes slip.

22. All institutions that are immoral and unwise resort to secret systems. The lodge, brothel, and saloon all have "speak-easy" passwords.

23. Phrenology exposes secret orders. It informs us that sly, crafty and cunning men have the animal propensities relatively stronger than their intellectual and moral faculties.

24. Indiscreet lodge members frequently give outsiders information relating to the secrets of the secret orders. They often do so without being aware that they have blundered.

25. Seceders from secret orders are in all cases intelligent, honest and brave. Nothing good ever came from ignorance, dishonesty and cowardice.

26. The more human a man is, the fewer secrets he requires; and the more animalized he is, the more secrets he has to conceal, including murder, plunder and treason.

27. Candid adhering lodge members make admissions that are damaging to the secret lodge system.

28. Cross, a 33-degree Mason, says, in his Templars' Chart, that Freemasonry is the "Royal Art." And he gives a long list of Masonic royal titles.

29. Many unanswerable arguments can be presented to the lodge. Burglars conceal their principles, practices and tools from the same reasons and motives which prompt secret associations to act on the sly and to conceal vicious and criminal acts.

GATHERED FROM ORIGINAL AND SELECT SOURCES.

A FAITHFUL MINISTER.

"Satan's servant—the lodge power—took great pains to organize the F. L. U. in each neighborhood where our anti-secret Baptists hold their church meetings, and the good Lord has given us the victory in the disbanding of the lodge at each place. We had only to drop five of our members (on that account), and three of them seem willing to come home in the near future. All but one admit that we did right to demand separation at once. To God be all the praise! Sometimes, while preaching, I have the pleasure of seeing lodgeites weeping like children, and that more than compensates me for all their wrath. At one of our church meetings, the first sermon I preached against the lodge,—though none of our brethren had joined it—different members of lodges told me they felt thankful to God for my warning; and a lodge which had been organized with about forty charter members surrendered their charter."—A. B. LIPP, Martinstown, Mo.

THE LORD'S DAY—A NATIONAL TEST.

"A word in kindness to the National Commission of the World's Fair: Who is on the Lord's side? We, God's people of America, love our country.—yes, all nations, and would be glad to attend the World's Fair. But how can we, unless the Lord's day is respected? We are commanded to let our light shine so that it may be seen. If the day is not to be properly observed during the Exposition, and all who are on the Lord's side stay entirely away from the Fair, will not the nations see that we do not belong to the Sabbath transgressors? Let this be the great national test."—RUFUS SMITH, Wheaton, Ill.

THE CYNOSURE IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

"Living in a State where lodgery is on the rampage and men who oppose the system are few and far between, we have little room to operate as reformers. The Friends and Free Methodist churches are presenting a united front against the spirit of lodgery in this State. Distributing the Cynosure and personal conversation are means which the Lord blesses; also, allusions in the public ministry; but we look forward to a day when some systematic effort can be made to organize our forces in South Dakota and awaken a public conscience on the subject. I cannot express my sense of obligation to the Cynosure for its fearless advocacy of reforms such as prohibition and arbitration—the latter the sensible and Christian antidote for war—besides its outspoken hostility to lodgery and the usurpation of the papacy. May it long live to wage its warfare for Christ and home and equal rights."—JOHN F. HANSON, Mount Vernon, South Dakota.

IN THE SOUTH.

"I appreciate the Cynosure's stand against the lodge, and think that every Christian should put his shoulder to the wheel, until the lodge is finally exterminated. I read all my papers and then mail them or give them to some one that I think has never seen it. I am in hopes that the light will soon shine into all the dark places of the earth. I have seen the fruits of Masonry in law. It makes no difference what a Mason does—he is seldom brought to justice."—J. S. PHELPS, Linden, Fla.

HE LOVES THE CYNOSURE.

"I esteem the Cynosure very highly for its unflinching attitude in regard to Masonry, and, if possible, more so for its bold and noble defense of the grand doctrines of Christianity, especially at a time when so many are trying to undermine its very foundations. Besides, it contains more general information in a nut-shell than any other publication of its kind, that I know of."—JOHN MCLELLAND, Cambridgeport, Mass.

CARRADINE'S SERMON.

"From my standpoint, as treated by Dr. Carradine it is the best and most effective production ever printed, or said, on the subject; forcibly true, yet full of Christian kindness and love."—C. H. ISELY, Fair View, Kans.

A VETERAN REFORMER.

"I am now past 86 years old. I voted against slavery as soon as there was any ticket of that kind to vote, and I have lived, contrary to my expectations, to see slavery done away. But so long as ministers of the Gospel and a large majority of professed Christians vote with the Democratic and Republican parties, I do not expect to see the alcohol curse abolished. We have, I think, nearly 100 male members of Protestant churches, and the largest vote we have ever yet cast directly against King Alcohol was 19. When will Christians learn to vote as they pray. How inconsistent it is for professors to talk temperance and vote with the rum parties!"—H. N. WALDO, Arcade, N. Y.

LITERATURE.

"CHRISTIAN SCIENCE" UNMASKED. By Rev. W. T. Hogg. "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit."—Col. 2:8. Third edition. Syracuse, N. Y.: A. W. Hall, Publisher. Price, 15 cents.

The author of this pamphlet is a well-known minister of the Free Methodist church, a logical expounder of the Scriptures, and a reformer of current evils. In this treatise he compares Gospel truth with "science falsely so-called"—a science bearing the name of "Christian" and so taught with honeyed words as to be seductive and dangerous. Mr. Hogg treats the subject fairly, presenting its dogmas, contrasting them with the teachings of Christianity, and thoroughly exposing its worthlessness either as a religion or a source of healing. It should be widely read.

In many bookstores Father Chiniquy's works are not for sale, and intending purchasers may obtain them by ordering from this office, or from the Craig Press, 178-182 Monroe street, Chicago. The publisher's prices are as follows: "Fifty years in the Church of Rome," $2.25; "The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional," $1.50.

They also publish "Chicago's Dark Places," 50 cents. "It is full of practical and wise suggestions applicable to all places where reform work is needed."

The Fleming H. Revell Co. (New York and Chicago) announce a biography of Florence Nightingale, by Eliza F. Pollard. It forms a new installment of their World's Benefactors Series," and is an earnest appeal for greater extension in woman's work. Miss Nightingale is still living and directing a training school for nurses in London. It is in the character of a war nurse that she first became famous and by her philanthropy "made the whole world kin."

The J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia, publish "Recollections," by George W. Childs, which abounds in personal and literary reminiscences of a very attractive character. Mr. Childs is a self-made and successful journalist, and withal a great promoter of art. Price, $1.00.

Scribner's Magazine for May contains continuations of the following serials: The Children of the Poor, illustrated, by Jacob A. Riis; Reflections of a Married Man, by Robert Grant; The Great Streets of the World (illustrated), by Paul Lindau; particularly interesting as a description, with fine artistic views, of Unter den Linden in Berlin; The Wrecker (illustrated), by Stevenson and Osbourne; Paris Theatres and Concerts (illustrated and concluded), by Wm. F. Apthorp. Thos. Curtis Clarke begins an illustrated discussion of the problem of Rapid Transit in Cities, a subject now becoming universally popular; the problem is to be solved in the June number. N. S. Shaler contributes a thoughtful treatise on Sea and Land (illustrated with shore scenes), which will interest lovers of the works of nature. Historic Moments, the first news message by telegraph, gives scope to a pleasing paper by John W. Kirk. Charles H. Luders and Benjamin P. Blood each contributed a poem, and Ida M. Tarbell a lively French story. The editorials are timely and readable. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons. $3.00 a year.

The Ladies' Home Journal for May opens with A Day in Patti's Castle, written by Florence Wilson, a young Englishwoman, who obtained permission from the famous diva to describe minutely the daily life at Craig-y-Nos, Patti's castle in Wales. This article is accompanied by drawings and engravings taken from photographs made specially for the Journal by Madame Patti herself. Mrs. John Wanamaker gives a strong paper on The Patient Work of Motherhood; Mrs. William Ewart Gladstone contributes her second article, Hints From a Mother's Life, and Miss V. Stuart Mosby furnishes an interesting sketch, with portrait, of the wife of ex-Senator Ingalls. Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer, ex-President of Wellesley College, is written of by Kate Upson Clark, and Mrs. L. B. Walford gives a charming description of An American Girl at Court. There are, also, various other contributions, in prose and poetry, and the usual departments, replete with much to interest and improve the mind. Philadelphia: Curtis Publishing Co. $1.00 per annum.

St. Nicholas, in its new spring suit, is as gay and fascinating as ever, with an abundant repertory of fun, stories, sketches, verses and pictures to enchant a whole household. Children who have had the reading of one number of this magazine are never satisfied—they always want some more. Among the "solid" attractions of the month, for older readers, we notice the following: Prehistoric Photography, by Tudor Jenks; A Tiger's Head from Cabul, by Thos. P. Hughes, D.D.; After Black Buck in India, by Clarence B. Moore, and A Disputed Shiny Match. Several favorite serials have new installments. Published by the Century Co., New York. $3.00 a year.

Historia, the new illustrated Chicago magazine of historical stories, in its May issue fully sustains the good opinion which we have heretofore expressed concerning its merits as a juvenile periodical. It promises to become a permanent publication, and commends itself to all who delight in the romance and reality of the world's heroism. Wat Tyler's Insurrection; Simon Kenton's Captivity; Fighting the Mexicans (continued); How the Trojan War Began; Marion and His Men (concluded); The Story of Josephus, the Jewish Historian, and Partheria (a poem) make up an interesting list of contents. The Historia Company, Chamber of Commerce Building. $1.00 a year.

Emilio Castelar, the Spanish orator and statesman has written a life of Christopher Columbus for the Century Magazine, which will be begun in the forthcoming May number. In the first article Senor Castelar presents an eloquent picture of the age which produced Columbus; and in the last article the writer, who has always been in sympathy with American institutions, will contrast America, as Columbus found it, with the teeming continent of the fourth centennial of the discovery. Special studies of the great authorities, and among original documents, have been made by the author for this work.

OBITUARY.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I send herewith some resolutions which were adopted at the recent meeting of the New York United Presbyterian Presbytery, in memoriam

REV. ROBERT ARMSTRONG, D.D.

The removal from our midst of the Rev. Robert Armstrong, D.D., who departed this life at his home in Jersey City, on the 2d inst., in the 80th year of his age, calls for appropriate action on the part of this presbytery.

As his co-presbyters, we venerate his memory, and mourn the loss of one so eminently distinguished for zeal, intelligence, fidelity, and untiring energy in the work of the ministry. He was ever ready to do his share in bearing the heat and burden of the day; and, by the blessing of God, was enabled to devote himself to his pastoral labors with unabated force and undiminished success, until the Master bid him cease from his labors and enter into rest.

He was a close and careful student of the Word, a hearty believer in, and a faithful preacher of, the doctrines of grace, as learned from the Word, and was ever in the habit of making thorough preparation for his work of expounding the Scriptures, and thus feeding the flock of God.

He was a man of strong religious convictions, an earnest and able minister, and was crowned with a large measure of success in winning souls to the Lord, and in building up the church to which he ministered. He was distinguished for his fidelity and loyalty to the church of his choice, thoroughly in sympathy with her distinctive principles, convinced of their Scriptural warrant—ever ready to defend them, to advocate them, and adhere to them in every proper way.

As a man, he was worthy of high commendation for his moral worth, a pure man, a true man, generous and high-minded, affable and hospitable, a wise counsellor, a faithful friend. Having served his generation, by the will of God he has fallen on sleep, leaving an example, in many ways, worthy of our imitation. We render devout thanksgiving to our Lord for the grace that wrought so effectually in him.

We commend to His faithful care the aged sister and others near of kin who are called to mourn by this providence. We express our sincere and heartfelt sympathy with them as also with the session and people of the Second Congregation of Jersey City, in the great sorrow and loss which they have sustained in the removal from them of their beloved pastor, who has labored so acceptably among them; whom we commend to the guidance and fostering care of the Chief Shepherd. May he strengthen and comfort them in their sorrow, and make us, in our respective fields of labor, steadfast, unmovable, ever abounding in the work of the Lord. Respectfully submitted:

A Decided Improvement.

A generation or two ago, in the days of homespun clothing, when our forefathers began to save up their old-fashioned clocks for grand-children to talk about, every spring it was the custom for whole families to take frequent and liberal doses of sulphur and molasses to "purify their blood." Fortunate are the people of to-day that they escape this nauseating mixture, and can take instead that agreeable and efficacious medicine, Hood's Sarsaparilla. This is a scientific preparation which goes to the right spot, thoroughly and dispels "that tired feeling," an expression which accurately describes the condition of thousands who will not confess that they are sick, but yet have no enjoyment of food or occupation and just feel real miserable or "dragged out." Hood's Sarsaparilla imparts such strength of mind and body, as to make one feel "like a new person."

The palate is almost tickled with Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil. The stomach knows nothing about it—it does not trouble you there. You feel it first in the strength it brings; it shows in the color of cheek and smoothing out of wrinkles.

It was a beautiful thing to do, to cover the odious taste of cod-liver oil, evade the tax on the stomach, and take health by surprise.

LIGHT IN DARKNESS.

Though the adherents of secret, oath-bound societies delight to sneer at the efforts of the N. C. A. and its faithful agents to expose and denounce the baleful influence of these institutions, the light of Gospel truth is gradually, if not rapidly, finding its way into the churches and the highways and byways of civilization, and it is beginning to be more generally understood that the power of the lodge is an indefensible evil—malignant, arrogant and un-Christian. It has taken years of earnest, prayerful labor to convince the people that this evil really exists and that its power is felt in nearly every phase of society—in the family, the church and the state; in the courts of justice, in every election, and in every important affair; and that it promotes "treason, stratagem and spoils" in numerous public enterprises.

These efforts in behalf of reform, looking to the suppression of this great evil, have had the usual effect of bringing the devil down unto us, having great wrath; but Christian reformers have long since learned that, notwithstanding the wrath of the devil is abroad in the land, "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," and truth, and victory.

It is not many years since Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard was violently opposed and threatened for suggesting, during a public lecture in an Eastern town, that the influence of the minor secret orders to which both men and women are admitted is injurious to the best interests of the family and the cause of morality. It is in these societies (he argued) that husbands are invested with secrets that they cannot reveal to their wives, and wives are brought into association with other men than their husbands and become participants in practices which they are sworn to conceal even from their families. Such a condition of affiliation can only tend to create distrust and jealousy, and, too often, results in downright infractions of the seventh commandment.

It is but a few years since it was deemed imprudent, and even dangerous, to expose the secrets of Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship on the platform; but a change has come, and men and women have learned that the secrets of both of these orders are widely known; their abominations are revealed to the public, and their un-Christian character is freely blazoned from the pulpit and press.

At the Chicago Union Park Congregational Theological Seminary, about a month ago, Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard delivered his lecture on secret societies (recently printed in this paper) before the Faculty and students of that institution, numerous others being present. Of the 172 students who heard him, but five objected to his arguments against the lodges and their influence; and the applause which the lecture elicited gave evidence of its power and the favor with which it was received. Most of these young men upon whose ears his words of warning fell are going forth to fill the pulpits of Congregational churches in various States of the Union. They will carry with them impressions of the lodge system and its evils that will be of infinite service in shaping their careers as pastors, and so the light will shine and spread in the churches, and the lodge will come to be estimated according to its demerits, rather than its pretensions.

From New England, especially, as well as from other sections of the Union, come similar reports of increasing toleration and confidence in our reform lecturers and their work. The Spirit of the Lord is assuredly laboring with them, and opening up the way for the advance of truth in its warfare on the hidden haunts of darkness. The lodge demon, the image of the old dragon, may rave and rear, but where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty and triumph.

"CHINESE SLAVERY."

If the information furnished by the San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle of April 17 may be relied upon, its article with the above heading uncaps one of the most hideous social ulcers that ever afflicted any modern city. San Francisco is known as a proud metropolis, prosperous in business, cultured in science and art and literature, rich in churches and schools, and enjoying prospects of the brightest hue; but it is the home of "sixty-two establishments where Chinese girls are held in bondage for the most degraded of purposes. Seven of these brothels are run on an independent basis, while the fifty-five are banded together in a society known as the Len Wo Tong. In these fifty-five societies there are 230 women and girls who are kept in the most abject bondage. They are closely watched, and if one does attempt to escape almost superhuman efforts are made to recapture her. Little girls are sold as slaves to do domestic drudgery, to strip tobacco, or for some temporary occupation until they shall become available for the original purpose for which they were purchased, namely: the brothel. The Chronicle secured an original bill of sale of one of these girls, but the details were too revolting for publication. It places the human chattel at the complete disposal of her purchaser, even far beyond the child becoming of age." Strange to say, these infamous resorts have escaped indictment by the grand jury, up to a recent date, but it will be stranger still if public opinion shall longer tolerate such a dreadful plague-spot upon the fame of this fair city.

THE CONSPIRACY OF SILENCE.

"And Elijah came unto all the people and said, how long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word." 1 Kings 18: 21. To these Baal-worshippers silence was their only recourse. They knew quite well that their conduct was indefensible, and the quickest way to divert attention was to be silent. There was a universal and instinctive impulse—a practical conspiracy, to make no reply.

Such a conspiracy of silence is a not uncommon method of thwarting the efforts of reformers. Forty years ago the great majority of the churches, the ministry and the religious press, made little or no reply to the indictment against them for complicity with American slavery. They tried, indeed, to suppress all discussion, but with few and rare exceptions "they answered not a word." It was only when the issue was forced upon them, that they were willing to open their mouths for the dumb.

In prosecuting our indictment against the secret lodge system, we have met just such a conspiracy of silence. We have demonstrated the un-Christian character of Freemasonry by the most positive and convincing testimony. We have exposed its degrading ceremonies, its blasphemous oaths, and its lying pretensions, and we have appealed, with most earnest, fraternal and persistent entreaty, to our brethren in the church, the ministry, and especially to the religious press; and, in the main, they have answered not a word. We have pointed out its malign influence on public worship, its stultifying effects on religious character, and its arrogant assumption of purity with, if not of superiority over, the church of the living God; and at almost every point we have met the same passive resistance. No one has attempted to dispute our statements, or to answer our arguments. To have secured a discussion in the great ecclesiastical bodies, or the religious press, would have given us a speedy triumph. No one has denied that our indictment is important, or that it is supported by competent testimony. It was simply easier to ignore it than to meet it. Consciousness of complicity, dread of exposure, fear of the opposition of an ungodly world, and, perhaps, more than anything else, the rivalry of denominational interests, has so blinded the church and the ministry, that after more than twenty years of honest, earnest effort we are still confronted with this conspiracy of silence, that seems the first, the greatest and the most difficult obstacle to be overcome.

How shall we surmount it? 1. Not by angry denunciation. This, however much deserved, will fail to secure the object. It will rather serve to divert attention from the real evil, to our supposed unkindness of spirit. 2. Not by losing our faith in the Gospel, and in organized Christianity. Bad as the nominal church is, it is inconceivably better than the godless world. Within these religious organizations there is a true church, made up of those "whose names are written in heaven;" and though many of them are in partial blindness, they are still "the light of the world" and "the salt of the earth." As between the nominal church and any political party, made up and controlled by worldly influences, the former is a thousand-fold more hopeful as a means of reaching the public conscience than the latter.

We must "cry aloud and spare not." We must labor and wait. 3. Consider the words of the apostle James: "Ye (the wicked) have condemned and killed the just, and he doth not resist you. Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of our Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it until he receive the early and the latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of our Lord draweth nigh." Jas. 5: 5-8.

Especially should we be charitable towards those who have been ignorantly or carelessly drawn into sinful associations, snatching them, as it were, as "brands from the burning," turning their feet from the pathways of evil with gentle and persuasive words, hating only the iniquity which they manifest in the spirit of the abominations to which they are joined. They are all the creatures of God, having a claim upon his love and mercy through our Lord Jesus Christ, and so are our equals under the laws of nature, hesitating only to become heirs of salvation with us in the kingdom of grace.

But of the abominations of the lodge, the saloon, the gambling-rooms, brethren, let us speak freely in the spirit of denunciation, fearlessly, as things in opposition to the Bible and Christianity. The truth, plainly told and supported by Scripture, is like a sharp sword when applied to evil institutions—it lays bare the muscles and tendons which oppose us, and so enables us the better to cripple them.

MODERN SALE OF INDULGENCES.

"The licensing of saloons is as wicked and inconsistent as selling indulgences."—The Midland.

The sale of "indulgences" by the papacy, permitting the purchaser to indulge his brutishness by getting drunk or committing numerous other sins forbidden in the Scriptures, was so reprehensible as to create a formidable antagonism to the practice, and this opposition to it formed an important element in the Lutheran Reformation.

Bad as the sale of indulgences for these vile purposes must be considered by every Christian man and woman, the practice was not a whit more wicked than that of the city governments of Chicago and other municipalities in granting licenses to saloon-keepers, permitting them to sell intoxicants to all who apply for them. There is the same sordid pecuniary consideration in both cases. The grant, in both, gives freedom to commit sin without fear of punishment. The result is the same—the destruction of the souls and bodies of drunkards (for no drunkard can inherit the kingdom of heaven) and all others who "indulge" in any sin with the sanction of church or municipal authority, as well as without it.

Prior to the Revolution, when the British government imposed a special tax (amounting to a license—nothing more or less) upon tea imported into the Thirteen Colonies, a leading American was asked in Boston, "Would you plunge the colonies in war for a tax of a few pence on a pound of tea?" The answer was: "It is not the amount of tax, but the accursed principle upon which Parliament claims the right to levy ANY tax, that we are fighting."

So it is "the accursed principle" that the government exhibits when it licenses saloon-keepers to make drunkards. It is the same principle that it would manifest in licensing Fagin to make Oliver Twist et al. pickpockets and thieves. It is the same principle that would lead a scoundrel to tempt an honest man to steal a horse and then prosecute him for the theft. The scoundrel would preserve his own freedom, but his victim would bear the odium and the penalty. The saloon-keeper is protected in his notorious business; his "drunken and disorderly" victim is fined and imprisoned. And the unfortunate drunkard would suffer just as much for his misdemeanor, whether the saloon-keeper paid a license of ten dollars or a thousand. High license would be of no benefit to him or his destitute family. Every time the city of Chicago issues a saloon license it sells an indulgence that may destroy a thousand men and women.

THE MORMON FORFEITURES.

During the government investigation and prosecution of the Mormons in Utah, last year, $300,000 was "escheated" from the church of the "Latter-Day Saints," for violations of law. To what uses this property ought to be applied, so that it will best benefit the greatest number of persons in the Territory, has led to some discussion. Rev. B. F. Clay, the Cynosure's intelligent correspondent at Salt Lake City, thus disposes of the question: "Whatever is done with the $300,000 escheated from the Mormon church, it ought to be decided upon some other grounds than Mormon professions. If put into the school fund, it will benefit the Mormons far more than anybody else. Not only because Mormon children are more numerous, but because they stand in greater need of American ideas, as taught in our schools. That $300,000 is a mighty source of good or evil for Utah, and its use ought to be carefully considered by the government." Mr. Clay believes, with the Cynosure, that the ostensible abandonment of polygamy by the Mormons is a sham. At the time of the trials, the president of the church, and several of their apostles, testified that the revelation concerning polygamy was not revoked, but only suspended. Apostle Snow said they had changed no principle, only their practice in regard to these principles. Their conversion on this question was very sudden, and is to many, who live in Utah, very suspicious. One evening the church is committed to polygamy as right in principle and practice; the next morning they abandon (?) the practice, but continue to say that the principle is right. There are good grounds for believing that polygamy is still extensively practiced in many parts of the Territory. Under these circumstances, the disposition of the forfeited estate should be cautiously made.

"A TEMPLE OF LIGHT."

The sworn object of Freemasonry is concealment, prevarication and the protection of criminals. On this point we have to put in only the evidence of the Royal Arch degree, in which the candidate swears to espouse the cause of a companion Royal Arch Mason so far as to extricate him from any difficulty, whether he be right or wrong.

It requires no professor of ethics to inform us that such a sweeping oath fully authorizes the use of concealment, prevarication, downright falsehood, and even perjury and murder, to save the guilty companion, whatever his crime may be.

Hence the practice of true Masonry of a high degree, if respect is paid to this obligation, enjoins falsehood as a cardinal principle of the order. If the obligation is ignored, it is treason to the order. The wickedness of such an institution is obvious.

So when we read the following extract from an address by Rev. Dr. Duncan McGregor, pastor of a Baptist church in Philadelphia, in defence of Masonry, we know exactly what value to place upon his praise of the order: "It is a temple of light—inextinguishable and inexhaustible light. One cannot think of a temple of Freemasonry without light and the Bible. This institution has been assailed, like all others, but it has stood firm against ignorance and superstition, but the speaker had no fear that ecclesiastical or any other power can set it and its Bible aside, for the power it embodies in itself is commensurate with any temporal power."

He neglects to tell his hearers, however, that the Masonic lodges always use a mutilated Bible in their rituals.

He was right in one thing, though, when he said that the power of Masonry is commensurate with any temporal power; for it acknowledges no government on earth except its own Grand Lodges, Grand Chapters, and its General Grand Chapter, and these its members are sworn to obey.

A PYTHIAN LODGE SUSPENDED.

One day last week, in this city, Aldine Lodge No. 129, Knights of Pythias, and Aldine Division, Uniformed Rank, of the same secret society, were suspended by the Grand Lodge of Illinois for selling ardent spirits at an entertainment given at the Second Regiment Armory. The lodge, however, applied to one of the civil courts and obtained an injunction to restrain the action of the Grand Lodge.

The charge brought by the Grand Lodge is one in direct violation of the Pythian laws. "I bow to the majesty of the civil courts" said Grand Chancellor Cook, "and no further action will be taken against the largest lodge in our jurisdiction if the courts hold that the injunction be made perpetual. Practically, however, Aldine Lodge and its members stand suspended until the matter is cleared up. There is no intention to deprive the members who were not in sympathy with the liquor selling of their membership, and perhaps I may recommend to the Grand Lodge convention that the property and records of the suspended lodge be returned to the loyal knights of the lodge."

Before the injunction is cleared up in court the regular semi-annual password will be given out, and Aldine will not receive it. No matter what the standing of the member, he cannot obtain entrance to any lodge without the password; thus Aldine members will be deprived of the right of meeting. The Grand Lodge can do nothing but hold the lodge's assets in trust until the courts settle the law involved. Aldine Lodge will not lose a penny of its rightful property should Grand Chancellor Cook's mandate be found null by the courts.

The idea is becoming prevalent among the leading orders that they must either be controlled by the whisky men, or array themselves in opposition to the liquor-dealers. In Missouri, it is stated, the Freemasons now refuse membership to these blood-suckers. "Formerly," says the Chicago Evening Post, "such action would have been impossible, because the whisky men had such influence and numbers as to defy opposition. As their power grew they allowed their ambition to outrun their discretion and a reaction set in which is resulting in the manner described." Now let the lodges extend this improvement a little further, and make it a punishable offence for all members to buy and drink ardent spirits. But no—that would disintegrate the lodges!

—The Voice of Masonry spells Satan with a little s. This is hardly respectful to the originator of the "craft."

—Rev. William Fenton writes from California that on the 26th of April he spoke on the evils of secret societies in Gospel Mission Hall, San Francisco, to a full house.

—A note from W. B. Stoddard announced that he was to lecture on secret societies at Jersey City on Sunday evening last, and return to Washington the following day.

—A handful of a so-called Christian denomination, scattered throughout eight States, have petitioned Congress to order the Columbian Exposition opened on Sunday. This is sectarianism—not Christianity.

—Rev. Rufus Smith, of Wheaton, well known to Cynosure readers as a zealous reformer, is, so we learn, about to remove to Northern Michigan, to labor as an evangelist among sailors and lumbermen. His address, until further notice, will be Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

—The National Prohibition vote, since it became a factor in politics, has increased in growth as follows: In 1872, it was 5,607; in 1876, 9,737; in 1880, 10,305; in 1884, 150,626; in 1888, 249,945; and it will probably, in 1892, reach 500,000. Its influence, even under the strongest opposition, increases with its growth.

—An adroit swindler recently forced an entrance into a couple of Odd-fellows' lodge-rooms in Pennsylvania and Ohio, stole blank visiting cards, affixing the seal of the lodge to each, and decamped. Since then he has visited various lodges with his forged cards, having the annual traveling pass-word of the order at his tongue's end, and obtaining money to meet his "necessities." At last accounts he was still at large.

—Dr. Hargreaves, a competent medical authority in this city, says that while ten years ago there were here but 25,000 habitual opium eaters and laudanum drinkers, there are now 250,000. Such a statement from a medical expert is simply appalling, when it is remembered that the opium habit is as dangerous to the souls, minds and bodies of its victims as chronic alcoholism. Nor is it in Chicago alone where this dreadful habit prevails—it is becoming a common vice in this and many other lands.

—Americans who contributed more than half a million dollars' worth of provisions to the starving Russians have the satisfaction of learning from the United States Minister at St. Petersburg that "From the Czar down, they appreciate the American relief donations, which are practically the only foreign assistance so far received." This is genuine philanthropy—"lending to the Lord" by giving to the poor. The security is excellent, and heavy interest is assured. It is a grand investment.

—A remarkable pamphlet—"The Hidden Hand," printed in England—calls attention to "the relation, the harmony—the points of union and sympathy" between Theosophy and Masonry—a question that, it is alleged, is agitating English and American Freemasons. Madame Blavatsky, the prophetess of Theosophy, recognized Masonry as a cognate system. "Paganism," remarks the India Watchman, "of all sorts, including Freemasonry, Romanism and Theosophy, is from one prime source, the great Nimrod apostasy of ancient Babylon." And as for any difference between their respective merits, their claims of Christian philanthropy, or their value to the world, it is microscopic.

—The Chicago Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union held its first regular daily prayer meeting in its new Temple, at the corner of LaSalle and Monroe streets, on Thursday last. Henceforth the headquarters of the Union will be in this magnificent building, which it has erected at a cost of about $1,000,000. When completed, as it will be within two or three weeks, it will contain some 300 offices, besides a number of banks and other prominent business houses. The structure is twelve stories high, and extremely ornamental, as well as convenient and otherwise attractive. The membership of the Union is now about 2,500, and is engaged in several commendable benevolent enterprises.

—In the second "prelude" to the Boston Monday Lectures, seventeenth year, season of 1892, Joseph Cook thus felicitously expresses his opinion of Dr. Lyman Abbott's New Progressive Orthodoxy: "Voltaire said of the holy Roman empire, that it was neither holy, nor Roman, nor empire. So it must be affirmed by any cautious man that Dr. Abbott's new progressive orthodoxy is neither new, nor progressive, nor orthodoxy." Can any word-painting be more comprehensive or expressive? We do not wonder when we are told that "the prelude and lecture were received with repeated and emphatic expressions of approval by the audience." In Joseph Cook Mr. Abbott has met "a foeman worthy of his steel"—brave, strong and invincible, because he is true to God and the Bible.

—People who watch the "signs of the times" (and the number of them is a growing quantity) see in the threatening condition of European national affairs the evident fulfillment of Bible prophecies relating to the end of the present age. Aside from this significance, the position of several important monarchies, as set forth in dispatches to the secular press, from day to day, is sufficiently defined to create a general interest in the contest that is apparently near at hand. If it does not prove to be a general war, involving nearly all Europe, it will tend to dismember some of the inferior States, perhaps divide Turkey among her enemies, and cause important changes in the geography and dynasties of the continent. In the meantime let us trust in God, and pray that none of the evils which we deserve as a sinful nation may be suffered to come upon our own fair land.

THE HOME.

COME, LABOR ON.

(Matt. 20: 1-7.)

Come, labor on!

Who dares stand idle on the harvest plain
While all around him waves the golden grain,
And every servant hears the Master say,
"Go work to-day!"

Come, labor on!

The laborers are few, the field is wide;
New stations must be filled and blanks supplied,
From voices distant far, or near at home;
The call is "Come."

Come, labor on!

The enemy is watching night and day
To sow the tares, to snatch the seed away;
While we in sleep our duty have forgot,
He slumbered not.

Come, labor on!

Away with gloomy doubt and faithless fear!
No arm so weak but may do service here;
By feeblest agent can our God fulfill
His righteous will.

Come, labor on!

No time for rest till glows the western sky,
While the long shadows o'er our pathway lie,
And a glad sound comes with the setting sun,
"Servants, well done!"

Come, labor on!

The toil is pleasant, the reward is sure;
Blessed are those who to the end endure;
How full their joy, how deep their rest shall be,
O Lord, with thee!

SHE IS DEAD TO THE WORLD.

At the entrance of the cloister of the Order of Perpetual Adoration, in Hunt's Point, N. Y., a Brooklyn girl was the center of one of the most solemn and impressive ceremonies in the Catholic church. She was Miss Minnie McMahon, daughter of James McMahon, of 87 McDonough street, and she bade farewell forever to the outer world and immolated herself in the cloister, out of which no living soul ever goes. Present at the exercises in Hunt's Point were Archbishop Corrigan, ex-Mayor Grace, Mr. John D. Crimmins; and, representing the Brooklyn clergy, Rev. Father Ward, pastor of St. Charles de Borromeo, where the family of the young woman worship; Rev. Father Mitchell the bishop's secretary, and Rev. Father Michael Moran. Father Prendergast, S. J., preached a magnificent discourse, which was spoken of by the clergy present as one of the most beautiful expositions that they had ever listened to upon such occasions. Archbishop Corrigan officiated at the reception of the girl into her life-long existence of self-denial and prayer. The cloister of the Order of Perpetual Adoration is some distance removed from other habitations, and is placed among the fields at Hunt's Point. It is not the most cheerful of places, even with all the freedom of ordinary life, but to the worldly-minded it could offer no attractions with the stupendous penalties that accompany it. The Rev. Father Ward, in speaking of the order and of the ceremonies, said to an Eagle reporter:

"This is perhaps one of the severest orders in the church. It is one of the few orders called 'contemplative,' in contrast with others, like the Sisters of Charity, which have outside duties to perform. Theirs is a life of the greatest mortification. They never use meat of any kind, and subsist at all times on vegetables. Besides this, seven months in the year there is what is called the rigorous, or 'black' fast, when only enough food is taken to keep body and soul together. The members lie on no bed, but upon boards, and the rule requires of all to arise at midnight and spend a couple of hours in prayer. Further, the idea is that continually some one member of the order shall be serving at the altar throughout the twenty-four hours, so there is never a time in the whole year that their prayers cease. When once the candidate accepts the order, she never again can put her foot across the threshold. The order was established by Archbishop Corrigan, and there is but one other like it in America, that being in New Jersey, also instituted by the Archbishop when he was over that diocese. The community at Hunt's Point numbers about twenty members I believe. It is made up for the most part of young women, who, like this girl, go from homes of wealth and luxury, from parents to whom their slightest wish is law, to this life of wonderful self-sacrifice. From the dower they bring the institution is maintained. It only remains for a few to make such sacrifices," concluded the clergyman. "Those who can so completely give up themselves for others and for religion are the exception. It is for the exceptional ones that this order does exist."—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

OUR HOME.

How is it with ourselves? Each one had better ask himself the question in the quiet now and then. Are our homes more tender than they were a year ago, or has love grown dimmer in them? Are we closer to each other's hearts or more wrapped up in silent selves? Do we spring more readily for those that call us by the home names. It is not bread you chiefly owe your family, father. It is not mended clothes, mother. It is not errands done and lessons learnt, children, that make your part. It is the way in which the part, whatever it be, is done, that makes the part. The time comes when we would almost give our right hand, could we recall some harsh world, some indifferent, cutting manner, some needless selfish opposition. Happy we, if the one gone out from our homes into the unseen home has left us no such ache to bring the bitter tears! "Too late—too late to love him as we might, and let him know it!" Too late to let her know that we knew she was sweet!" Among all "might-have-beens" does the wide world hold another one so sad? There is only one way to make that sad thought die—and that is to clear untenderness utterly from heart and from the manner towards the others who still make home "home" to us, to redouble thoughtfulness for them, and try to fill up the measure of the missed love there. When, at last, the tenderness of our bettered service blossoms evenly, unfailingly, on the root of that old sad memory, perhaps we can feel self-forgiven and at peace.—Rev. W. C. Gannett.

BOUND FEET IN CHINA.

About the first thing that a young Chinese lady remembers is the painful ordeal of binding her feet. This usually takes place when she is from four to five years of age. She must submit to this torture if she ever expects to be a lady. In the poorer families of Canton it is usual to bind the feet of the eldest daughter, who is intended to be brought up as a lady. Her large-footed sisters will grow up to be bond-servants or domestic slaves, and, when old enough, the concubines of rich men or the wives of laboring men. Small feet are, therefore, the mark of gentility, the differentiating quality that distinguishes them from the servant class. What we look upon as a frightful deformity the Chinese regard as a mark of beauty, and these crippled little feet are called "the golden lilies."

The process of foot-binding is a simple one. The girl is, we suppose, five years old, and her mother takes a strip of black calico, which she wraps tightly around the child's foot, beginning at the big toe and ending at the ankle. The object is to prevent the foot from spreading out, to cause it to taper to a point and develop an abnormally high heel. The bandage is wrapped so tightly that the smaller toes are turned in toward the sole of the foot, and a large hollow is formed between the sole and the heel. The little one screams with agony, but her cries are unheeded. The cramped foot is then put into a small shoe, a smaller one being required as the foot gets smaller. The growth of the foot is retarded, the bones contract, the flesh shrivels up, and then the bandage is tightened. Ordinarily the pain passes into a dull numbness, and then to a condition where there is little or no sensation. There have been frequent cases where the circulation is entirely stopped. Diseased bone and mortification then ensue, and amputation is necessary to save the child's life. I have seen several of these amputated feet preserved in Canton hospitals, the sight of which made me shudder. With care, the girls suffer no more than to be cripples for life; and when the foot is sufficiently cramped it is put into a tiny shoe from three to three and a half inches long with a high heel strong enough to support the entire weight of the body, as Chinese ladies do their walking on their heels. If they go outside the house they are always accompanied by a stout old woman whose business it is to carry her on her back, or to run behind her sedan chair, and on all occasions "to play propriety" for her.

Passing one day along the streets of Fatshan, I heard screams from a house close to me. The door was open, and I saw a group of women bend over a little girl whose feet were being bound. I stepped in and remonstrated with the father, who was sitting by, as it seemed, unconcernedly. He replied, with his blandest smiles: "Yes, sir, it is a cruel practice, as you say; customs differ the world over. In our country we bind girls' feet, but I notice in Hong Kong your Western ladies bind their waists."

The origin of the custom is very obscure. Some affirm that a club-footed empress of the Sung dynasty insisted on the ladies of her court binding their feet and forming them as near as possible after the model of her own clumsy extremities. Be that as it may, the custom to-day follows the law of demand and supply. Young men seek for the smallest-footed wives, and Chinese maidens or their mothers manipulate their feet accordingly. The custom is purely Chinese; the Manchu dynasty—that is, the present reigning dynasty—has never adopted it—in fact, detest the practice as much as we do. The fifteen-year-old maiden that has just become the Empress of China, and all the imperial concubines, have large feet. It must, therefore, afford some consolation to the poor large-footed China girl upon whom no gay Lothario would even cast so much as a glance, that his majesty of the dragon throne sees beauty in a solid natural-sized foot, and that she possesses at least one qualification for admittance to the imperial harem which her proud hobbling sister has lost forever. It is needless to say that missionaries, everywhere, discourage this barbaric practice, and that it is discountenanced by the natives themselves when brought under Christian instructions.—Our Mission.

"OUR DAILY BREAD."

In a miserable cottage at the bottom of a hill two children hovered over a smoldering fire. A tempest raged without—a fearful tempest—against which man and beast were alike powerless.

A poor miser, much poorer than these shivering children, though he had heaps of money at home, drew his ragged cloak about him as he crouched down at the miserable door. He dared not enter for fear they would ask pay for shelter, and he could not move for the storm.

"I am hungry, Nettie."

"So am I; I've hunted for a potato paring, and can't find any."

"What an awful storm!"

"Yes, the old tree has blown down. I guess God took care that it didn't fall on the house. See, it would certainly have killed us."

"If he could do that, couldn't he send us bread?"

"I think so; let's pray 'Our Father,' and when we come to that part, stop till we get some bread?"

So they began, and the miser, crouching and shivering, listened.

When they paused, expecting in their childish faith to see some miraculous manifestation, a human feeling stole into his heart; God sent some angel to soften it. He had bought a loaf at the village, thinking it would last him a great many days, but the silence of the two little children spoke louder to him than the voice of many waters. He opened the door softly, threw in the loaf, and then listened to the wild eager cry of delight that came from the half-famished little ones.

"It dropped right down from heaven, didn't it?" questioned the younger.

"Yes; I mean to love God forever, for giving us bread because we asked him."

"We'll ask him every day, won't we? Why I never thought God was so good, did you?"

"Yes, I always thought so, but I never quite knew it before."

"Let's ask him to give father work to do all the time, so we need never be hungry again. He'll do it—I'm sure."

The storm passed—the miser went home. A little flower had sprung up in his heart; it was no longer barren.

In a few weeks he died, but not before he had given the cottage, which was his, to the poor laboring man.

And the children ever after felt a sweet and solemn emotion when in their little prayer they came to those trustful words, "Give us this day our daily bread."—Selected.

A "MERCY" BOY.

A short time ago, as I was crossing Market street, near Twenty-second, a boy, not over ten years old, who had been walking just before me, ran into the street and picked up a broken glass pitcher. I supposed he intended the pieces as missiles, since the desire to throw something seems instinctive in every boy. Consequently, I was much surprised when he tossed the pieces into a vacant lot at the corner and walked quietly on. As he passed me, whistling, I said:

"Why did you pick up that pitcher?"

"I was afraid it might cut some horse's foot," he replied.

My next question was a natural one:

"Are you a Band of Mercy boy?"

He smiled as he said:

"Oh, yes; that's why I did it."

The bands of mercy were drawn very closely around the dear little fellow's heart, I am sure.—School and Home.

GOD'S WAYS.

God's ways are not like human ways,
He wears such strange disguises;
He tries us by his long delays,
And then our faith surprises.
While we in unbelief deplore,
And wonder at his staying,
He stands already at the door,
To interrupt our praying.

He takes his leader from the Nile,
Where mother hands have laid him;
Hides him in palaces the while,
Till he has right arrayed him.
He sends him to the desert's hush,
With flocks and herds to wander;
Then meets him in the burning bush,
New mysteries to ponder.

Why should we doubt his care or grace,
As though he had forgotten?
As though time's changes could efface
What love had once forgotten?
As though he'd lost us from his thought,
And moved on now without us,
Whose love has always goodness wrought:
And constant been about us?

TEMPERANCE.

INTEMPERANCE IN CALIFORNIA.

The destruction of life through drink is going on at a fearful rate in this city; hardly a day passes but there is chronicled some frightful tragedy emanating from that source. A few days ago Arsene Denough, a French Canadian, shot his wife and then committed suicide, leaving five children, the oldest just 14 years old. For several days Denough had been drinking heavily. Shortly before the crime he took a big drink of whisky, saying as he did so, "This is the last drink I will ever take." He grabbed his wife by the throat, and after a fearful struggle Mrs. Denough succeeded in jumping through a window and fell upon the verandah. Her husband commenced firing at her, so she threw herself over the railing and fell a distance of twenty feet to the ground, her husband standing above and shooting at her as she fell. She was taken to the hospital and after an examination her wounds were pronounced fatal. Denough, after shooting his wife, stepped back into his room and shot himself through the head. Mrs. Denough is given the best of characters by those who knew her. She and her children let liquor alone, but it did not let them alone, but subjected them to the most terrible trials imaginable.

Another case is that of Alfred J. Shephard, the chief engineer of the steamer Al-Ki, who committed suicide in George Grossman's saloon on Post and Kearney streets by blowing out his brains with a pistol. The father of the dead man said his son had been drinking very hard and he advised him to let liquor alone, but the son always replied that he knew how to take care of himself. When such terrible tragedies are of almost daily occurrence, the question naturally arises, "Why are the saloons licensed, and what advantage is the liquor traffic to a community?" For all the bloodshed and misery it is the cause of, what return does it make? In the long, black record the traffic has made, not one advantage, not a single valid, reasonable excuse for its existence can be given. Then why is it permitted to exist? Simply to gratify the lustful desire for money of a certain class, and that class to a large extent is composed of foreigners, who are not in sympathy with our institutions and care nothing for the welfare of their fellow-beings. The pernicious system of saloon-keeping will never be abolished until Americans rule America; then foreign institutions and customs will be abolished and society will be governed on the broad basis of the "brotherhood of man."

Three-fourths of those engaged in the liquor-business are foreigners, and they manage to keep the foreign vote so divided as to give to each of the two political parties enough influence, so as to hold the balance of power and control them.—Oakland (Cal.) Pacific Ensign.

BEER AND BOOZE.

No one knows just what strong drink will do to a person, for two reasons. First, no one knows just how a particular constitution will be affected; and second, no one knows just what infernal drugs and poisons the rum-seller may have mixed in that particular lot of booze, in addition to the regular "bottled devil" it contains.

Says a physician: "Persons who are heavy and lethargic should never touch beer—I do not mean physically, but for its mental effect. If I drink half a glass of beer at dinner nothing on earth interests me for an hour afterwards but an easy chair, slippers and a quiet nap. If my wife, on the other hand, drinks a glass of beer, it sets her nerves tingling and she wants to dress and go to a theatre or a dog-show. There is no telling exactly what the effect of drinking beer will be on a man, but it is always interesting to me in traveling to note the differences in the faces of people who drink various beverages. In the West, for instance, whisky is the staple; the men are sharp, active, nervous, lean, thin and intense. They can get along with six hours' sleep, because they take a cocktail before breakfast which stirs up the energy which the short hours of sleep have taken away. In Berlin, where they drink beer all the time, the men are heavy, stout and loggy. They sleep nine hours a night, and very frequently take an hour's nap in a chair in a beer garden during the day. In France, where they drink wine, the men have sallow skin and wrinkled faces. The wine has a slightly stimulating effect, but not as much a one as the whisky of our nobility of the West. The best thing for a man to drink is water. Never make any mistake about that. I am not a teetotaler, but I am able to look at the thing clearly, and I know, as every other man of the world does, that nine-tenths of the mischief in society comes from drink. Many a woman goes wrong who would never have thought of it if it had not been for the preliminary champagne. Besides, it is the best opinion of medical experts everywhere in the world that a man is healthier without wines or liquors of any sort than he is with them."—Safeguard.

A NEW TEMPERANCE SCHEME.

There has been presented to the British Parliament a petition which opens up a new prospect of dealing with the habitual drunkard. A Manchester workingmen's club, remembering that of the seven retreats in England two were empty last year, and that the remainder, with a total accommodation for eighty patients, only contained fifty-nine, desire that any person who shall have been a third time convicted of drunkenness in the same licensing district, and within any period of two years, shall be defined as a habitual drunkard, not to be permitted on licensed premises or served with intoxicants within the district; and that any licensed dealer who shall, after receiving duly prescribed police notice that any such described person has been so convicted and debarred, either permit him to remain on licensed premises or serve him with intoxicants, shall be fined £50 with endorsement of license for first offence, £100 and license forfeited for second conviction.

MRS. GOUGAR.

Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, one of the most fearless of speakers, in a sermon delivered at the Trinity Baptist church, New York, Sunday evening, said, "I have more respect for the man who gets blind, roaring drunk 365 days of the year, and then votes for the brewer and bar-keeper, than I have for the man who on election day votes to support the saloon in opposition to the way he has been praying." In defending Dr. Parkhurst's course she said, "Other preachers might do much more good than by devoting so much time to preaching about Hezekiah, Uriah and the other 'ahs.'"

NUGGETS.

A temperance society has been established in Harvard College.

Eighty-five towns in the province of Manitoba have local option.

A man should be in sober earnest when he swears off from drink.

It is stated that in the late town elections in Massachusetts 82 of 88 towns voted no-license.

Gojundra in Japan is a total abstinence village, and each house has a motto on the door, "Frugal in all things; liquors prohibited."

There is a bill before the Massachusetts Legislature to prevent the sale of liquor on premises where billiards or other games are played.

Local option has long been in operation in Finland, with the result that, as a rule, in the rural districts there are no public houses whatever.

The Hon. Carroll D. Wright, the well-known statistician, is authority for the statement that for every dollar paid in by the saloons for their license about twenty-one dollars is paid out by the people.

Judge Tainter, of Hartford, Conn., decided that wholesale liquor-dealers located outside the State cannot sell liquor in Connecticut without taking out a license in each county where the liquor is sold.

A successful competitor for the prize in a foot race, made this graceful temperance speech in accepting it: "Gentlemen, I have won this cup by the use of my legs; I trust that I may never lose the use of my legs by the use of this cup."

Illinois is said to be the stronghold of the whisky power. The internal revenue collections of this State for the year ending in June were more than twice that of any other State—New York yielding $16,565,522, while Illinois paid $38,464,312.

Mrs. Hitchcock, president of the Nebraska Woman's Christian Temperance Union, writes that they have the names of 8,000 children on the pledge cards, which will be used to decorate the white-ribbon department of the Columbian Exposition.

All but nine States out of the forty-nine in the United States now make scientific temperance education compulsory in their common schools. There are between 12,000,000 and 13,000,000 children in America to whom it is required that this instruction be given.

"I can't trust you," said a rumseller to an impoverished customer. "You should let liquor alone; if you hadn't drunk so much of it, you might now be riding in your own carriage." "And if you hadn't sold it," retorted the victim, "you might have been my driver."

Dr. Dawson Burnes, in his annual letter on the drink consumption in Great Britain, shows a yearly expenditure per head of the population, counting children, of 70 shillings, which indicates that the habit of drink continues to grow, but at a slower rate than previously in recent years.

Those who advocate the use of light wines as a preventive of drunkenness, and point to France as an illustration, should read an article in a recent issue of the Petit-Journal, Paris, which declares that of all the dangers menacing the agricultural population of France, the gravest and most difficult to fight is alcohol power.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE PSALMS AND DANIEL.

LESSON VII.—Second Quarter, 1892.—May 15.

SUBJECT.—A Song of Praise.—Psa. 103: 1-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.—Psalm 103: 2.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Blessing God for individual mercies.—vs. 1-5. The psalmist begins his wonderful song of praise by invoking every faculty—"all that is within me"—to join in blessing God. Our intellect and our affections, as well as our lips, must unite to do him homage. "And forget not all his benefits." How prone we are to do this. We lose the lively sense of forgiven sin; we cease to remember the weariness of that sick-bed from which he raised us up. How many times he "has redeemed our life from destruction," and we were all unconscious how near we stood to death. How the days and years go by, "crowned with his loving kindness and tender mercy," and we grow so familiar with the blessings that daily flow in upon us that we only think of them when they are withdrawn. But such thoughtless ingratitude is unworthy intelligent beings. Even a dog remembers and fawns upon the hand which feeds him. Shall we show a less intelligent gratitude than even the dumb animals? "So that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's,"—after the yearly season of moulting. The way in which our life is renewed daily by sleep and food and exercise, so that the waste particles are being constantly carried off, and their places supplied by new elements, is as wonderful as the mystery of life itself. Daily should He be praised who so cares for the bodies He has created. Forgiveness of sins and physical healing are mentioned together. David had a better idea of the close connection between the two than many Christians have to-day. He knew that when the fountain of wholeness, or holiness, which is in God touches us it must have its influence on the physical frame. This is only in accordance with the laws of psychology. Only as we bring ourselves into touch with God, will his life, as manifested in Jesus Christ, be imparted to us, body, soul and spirit. This is the true "Christian Science," in contradistinction from those theories which, falsely so-called, are "after the manner of Satan, with all kinds of deceivableness and lying wonders."

2. Blessing God for his mercy as manifested in his judgments and his providence.—vs. 6-14. God would not be a God of mercy if he was not also a God of judgment. The oppressed are the objects of his tenderest compassion, and his hottest indignation is directed against them who abuse their power over the helpless and the unprotected. Our terrible civil war was such a demonstration of this truth as should have blotted every unjust law from our statute books. Yet how the cry of the oppressed goes up to God from every part of our land. Will he not hear and avenge?—who knows how speedily? Yet he is merciful and gracious. Otherwise our guilty nation would be yearly deluged with judgments. "He hath not dealt with us after our sins." Who could stand before him if he rewarded every iniquity as it deserves? His mercy is in accordance with his divine character; it is as "high as the heaven" in which he dwells; and "as far as the east is from the west"—that is, to an infinite distance—"has he removed our transgressions from us." But let us remember the restrictive clause: "They who fear him." It is the soul that loves and obeys him whom God pities as a father, and takes into the tender relationship of a child. "For he knoweth our frame." Having made us, he understands all our human weakness and infirmities; and as a tender parent will not scold a sleepy, tired child, but hush it to rest on his bosom, so the Lord will do by us—if we will only let him. A thought of God when distracted with care and toil will make a spot of sweet silence in our souls where his still small voice of soothing can be heard; and many a nervous breakdown might be avoided if the busy Christian, whether business man or housewife, would take the necessary time to be alone with him.

3. God's eternal years compared with man's brief life.—vs. 15-18. The psalmist now relapses into a minor key, as he likens human life to a flower of the field perishing under the blast of death so that its very place is remembered no more. "But the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting." It stretches from the eternal past to the eternal future. "And his righteousness unto children's children"—with this proviso: "to such as keep his covenant." An unbroken line of God-fearing ancestors will not save us if we do not imitate their example, and walk in their steps.

4. A universal call to praise.—vs. 19-22. "The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens;" a throne of judgment and mercy, where no repentant sinner will be sent away unforgiven, and no hardened rebel escape his just due. Well may the whole universe join in praise to such a Being, from "the mighty angels who excel in strength," to every creature in which is the breath of life. If our lives are not already tuned to this sublime keynote, let us begin at once to learn what is yet to be the universal chorus of the whole redeemed creation.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The department of the American Baptist Missionary Union, to raise one million of dollars during the year ending May, 1893, in commemoration of the Centenary of the Foreign Mission enterprise, is proceeding favorably under Dr. Henry C. Mabie, the chairman of the Centenary committee and home secretary; Dr. O. O. Fletcher, assistant field secretary; and H. C. Camp, assistant secretary, Young People's Department.

—The American Baptist Missionary Union received during the fiscal year ending March 31 $569,172.93. The appropriations for the same time, including the debt of the previous year, were $635,927.24, leaving a deficit of $66,754.31. It is hoped that this will all be provided for by Centennial Sunday, June 5, and that the church will not fail to raise the full million this year.

—The question as to who is to be the successor of Spurgeon in the London pulpit has been decided by the election of his brother, Rev. James A. Spurgeon. It was at one time thought that Dr. Pierson would be the choice, but that minister will return to this country in June.

—Over 200 Baptist ministers of New York and vicinity have formally declared that they approve Dr. Parkhurst's efforts to give greater efficiency to the work of the Society for the Prevention of Vice, an organization of which he is president. Two hundred pulpits represent a great many thousand people. Perhaps Dr. Parkhurst has not so terribly outraged public sentiment after all.

COLORED CATHOLICS.

—There are 151,614 Roman Catholic Negroes in the United States, the largest number of whom, 80,000, are in the diocese of New Orleans, and the next largest, 35,000, is that of Baltimore. They have twenty-seven churches for their exclusive use and thirty-three priests; and there are one hundred schools for colored children attended by 6,460 pupils, with eight orphan asylums, one founding asylum and one hospital. During 1890, 4,558 colored children and 590 adults received Catholic baptism.

LUTHERAN.

—The German Iowa Synod is supporting 34 missions in 12 Northwestern and Pacific States. The receipts of their Home Board last year was nearly $6,000.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The advocates of the abolition of our probationary membership system are certainly more numerous than ever before. It is urged that we lose many converts who would be added to our membership could they be taken into the church immediately. Cases are cited in which converts have immediately joined some church other than Methodist, and have promptly brought to us a fraternal church letter upon which they have been admitted into full membership four months before the full admission of those who were converted at the same time. It is still further said that other churches do very well without a probationary plan.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

—At the Newark (N. J.) Conference, recently, Secretary Peck made this remarkable statement: "That Bishop Thoburn, since his return, had reported 25,000 native Hindus awaiting baptism, and they had to be held back for want of shepherds!" The need of the church seems to be more missionaries for India.

—The commencement of the Chicago Training School for home and foreign missions was held at Grace church, April 26. The exercises included an address by Bishop Thoburn. The graduating classes number thirty-eight, five of whom go out from the nurse's department, and the others from the biblical department.

—Six years ago, during the anarchist troubles in Chicago, the First M. E. church of Streator, Ill., placed an American flag in the rear of the pulpit, where it has since hung. Impressed by this, the conference held in Galesburg in 1888 passed a resolution recommending the placing of the stars and stripes in every pulpit of the conference. Other conferences fell into line, and finally the school boards took up the plan. At the request of general conference this flag will be taken to Omaha and placed in the pulpit during the session of that body.

—Lots have been secured for the Second Methodist church in Harvey, a flourishing suburb of Chicago, and a temporary place of worship will be built at once. Mr. T. W. Harvey generously donated one-half the purchase money.

—Probably the greatest revival ever known in South Dakota is in progress at Vermillion. Over 375 persons have started on the better life. The meetings began in the M. E. church under the care of pastor G. D. Cleworth, assisted by Rev. W. H. Carter, of St. James, Neb.

MISSIONS.

—The missionary societies in Europe which have the largest number of communicants in their mission churches, are: The London Missionary Society, 67,797; the Church Missionary Society, 48,509; the Wesleyan Missionary Society, 50,000; the Baptist Missionary Society, 40,078; the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, 35,637; the Moravians, 31,591, and the Gossners Mission, 30,027. The Women's Missionary Societies of the World raised $1,785,001 for foreign missions last year. This is about one-sixth of the whole amount raised for foreign missions. Of this amount the Presbyterian women of America take the lead with $336,244 to their credit; the Methodist women of America raised $306,299; the Congregationalist, $157,364; the Baptist, $153,858; and the women of the Church of England, $129,085. The Independent gives the following summary of mission work in India: Churches and societies supporting missions, 37; stations, 3,777; missionaries, 1,727, of whom 924 are male and 803 female; native preachers, 2,961; congregations, 1,605; communicants, 249,492; schools, 6,993; pupils, 294,167; Sunday-school scholars, 124,603. The late census of India shows a population of 288,159,672. Of these 2,284,191 are set down as Christians—one-hundredth part of the whole. The increase of Christians during the past ten years has been 22.6 per cent, or more than double any other class.

MOODY'S INSTITUTES.

—Mr. Moody closed a four months' campaign in Scotland recently, and is now in Paris with his family. He expects to return for a short summer campaign in England. His work in Scotland has resulted in great enthusiasm for the establishment of two institutes for the training of Christian workers and evangelists for unsectarian work in East and West Scotland, the plan of organization being similar to that of Moody's school in Chicago. Rev. John Smith, of Edinburgh, has been working for such an institution ever since his visit to America some months since, and the promoters of the enterprise are meeting with generous responses.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Dr. C. L. Thompson, pastor of the Madison avenue, New York, Presbyterian church, says: "A church for work one day in the week belongs to the Middle Ages. Seven days a week of work and worship is the idea of the present. To realize this, we propose to open wide the doors of our church for a welcome to all the people, and for varied and continued activity along many lines—spiritual, educational and reformatory."

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—A benefactor in New York City, who does not wish his name made public, has presented to the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Society of the Episcopal church, property worth $100,000. A building, to cost $250,000, will be erected. The necessary sum has already been subscribed, one contributor, also unnamed, giving $50,000.

REFORMED CHURCH.

—The Reformed Church in America, formerly called the Dutch Reformed, organized her first church in New Amsterdam, with 50 members, in 1628. At present it numbers 572 organizations, worshipping in 670 churches and 8 halls, valued at $10,340,000, and 92,970 communicants; 52,228 of whom are found in New York State, 24,057 in New Jersey, and 1,756 in Pennsylvania.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The Salvation Army is being boycotted in Finland. No mention of it of any kind may appear in public print. So strictly is this law being carried out that any mention of the Army, any advertisement bearing on the movement, is sufficient to cause an entire issue of a newspaper to be canceled.

SPIRITUALISTS.

—The Spiritualists are reported as having a membership of 45,030. They began with "demonstrations" in New York, March, 1848. There are members in 36 States and in the District of Columbia. The greatest number of them in any State, Massachusetts, is 7,345, and the least, Montana, 20.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Prof. J. Arnot McLean, principal of the Vilisca public schools, has been elected as principal of the Preparatory Department of Tarkio (Mo.) College. Miss Katharine I. Hutchison, Professor of Philosophy in Albert Lea College, and daughter of Professor J. C. Hutchinson, Ph. D., of Monmouth, has also been elected Lady Principal and Professor of Latin.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

The stables of the Cheshire Improvement Company at Parkville, L. I., were consumed, burning 150 horses and causing a loss of $75,000.

PUBLIC MEN SPEAK.

Opinions of Importance Freely Expressed.

Most Interesting and Valuable Facts Brought Out in an Interview by Our Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4th.—The interviews with various prominent men which I recently sent you as to the apparently mysterious cause of the untimely and sudden deaths among them, has aroused a great deal of excitement.

Senators, representatives and heads of departments all declare that unless some steps can be taken to avoid the killing strains of public life, few prominent men would care to run for office. Traced to its source, it has become fully apparent that there is one great cause for it all, and that cause is the wearing strains upon certain organs of the body which cause their tissues to give way, and hence bring about sickness or sudden death. I continued the investigation, which was reported yesterday, by calling upon a number of leading public men.

Hon. Daniel Lockwood, genial and whole-souled, has an extensive knowledge of the public men of the country. He was well aware of the strains to which they are subjected, and the sudden deaths which have been so prevalent. "It would seem," he said, "as though there should be some way of preventing these things. Our grandfathers had family remedies that seemed to preserve health and prolong life, and it would appear as though some modern discovery should be found which would answer the same purpose for the added strains of modern life. I think if anyone has such a discovery it is certainly my friend Warner with his famous Safe Cure. I know of a great many people who use it constantly, and I have in mind one gentleman connected with the Government Printing Office here who, together with his wife, has occasion to be exceedingly grateful for the restored health and strength which Warner's Safe Cure has imparted."

Hon. H. S. Greenleaf was found in the House of Representatives. He said: "The exhaustions of public life are certainly very great, but so also are the strains of business life, of professional life, of social life. I have personal acquaintance with Mr. Warner, the discoverer of the celebrated Safe Cure, and I consider it far superior to any or all other preparations. Certainly any article as popular as that and selling as extensively as it does, must have unusual merit."

Probably the most remarkable case of a government official brought to death's door and then rescued, is that of Mr. J. Henderson Wilkinson, a prominent attorney of this city. In conversation with me, he said: "Ten years ago I was seized with an attack of Bright's disease. I was then at work in the Treasury, here. I know it was Bright's disease for several reasons. In early life, I studied medicine some little time. I knew from my symptoms what my trouble was, but I was also in the hands of my physicians. How badly I became, you can understand when I say that my hands became bloated and actually cracked open. My limbs and body would alternately swell and collapse. I could only creep across the floor. Finally my physician said to me: 'You are at death's door with Bright's disease. You may live a few weeks, but there is absolutely no hope of your recovery.' Although I was so very sick my friends did not desert me. Numbers of them called to express their sympathy. Col. Daniel A. Grosvenor, Judge Tarbel, Rev. Dr. Rankin, Col. Robert M. Douglas—more than a hundred prominent men—extended to me their sympathy. None supposed for a moment I could ever recover. Upon the advice of the Rev. Dr. Rankin, now President of the Howard University, I began the use of a preparation of which I had but little knowledge. I began to improve at once. I continued its use, nothing else, and I state to you to-day that I owe my life solely to Warner's Safe Cure, which rescued me from the grave after the doctors had abandoned all hope. I am certain that if men and women generally fully realized the wonderful power of this great discovery, and used it faithfully, there would be less sickness, fewer deaths, longer life and more happiness than at present."

I was greatly impressed with Mr. Wilkinson's earnestness of manner. Certain it is that his statement is true, and that he is to-day in perfect health.

Senator Blackburn not only knows what wearing strains of political life are, but also of the power which the great discovery above mentioned has shown both in Washington and throughout the land. Indeed, he is a living example of its efficiency.

I saw Senator W. C. Squire, Mr. H. C. Clark of the First Auditor's Office, Captain J. G. Ball, and many others, and their statements amply confirmed all I had previously learned.

Mr. Abraham I. Hahn, well-known in newspaper and army circles, said: "Personally, I have used Warner's Safe Cure, and consider it the best medicine in the world for the diseases it is recommended to cure. A member of my family has also been cured after several physicians had failed to do any good."

Mr. H. McNeil, a highly educated man, a graduate of a medical college, said: "I have frequently heard Mrs. Hahn mention Warner's Safe Cure, and its highly beneficial effect."

Wherever I went I found the testimony the same. It was generally admitted that the strains of public life in Washington were wearing and shortening to the life, but it was universally conceded that for overcoming these tendencies for strengthening the vitality, toning the health and prolonging the life, nothing had ever been known equal to the great remedy I have above described.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE ART OF OMISSION.

This is an art that some housekeepers never learn. Little Mrs. Bustleabout, who has five children and keeps no servant, can never see why all can not be done in her home which is done in that of Mrs. Bullion—though Mrs. Bullion has but one child and keeps two maids. If Mrs. Bullion's dozen pairs of lace curtains are laundered every three months, Mrs. Bustleabout's four pairs must be laundered as often. If Baby Bullion, the sole son and heir of the house of Bullion, wears tucked white frocks the year round, little Tad and Trot Bustleabout must wear white frocks also—even though their mother must iron them after those restless youngsters are asleep for the night. If Mrs. Bullion's dinners are served in four courses, Mrs. Bustleabout would as soon think of asking company to eat with chopsticks as of cutting the four courses down to two.

The trouble is, that Mrs. Bustleabout has never learned how to leave anything out. Her husband would not think of undertaking to do, with his single pair of hands, the amount of work that is done by Mr. Bullion and his half-dozen assistants; yet his frail little wife is attempting something that is quite as manifest an impossibility as this would be.

Mrs. Bustleabout never has a half-hour in which to dip into a fresh magazine, or to sing over the pretty songs that she learned in her girlhood days. There is scarcely time to teach the children how to behave politely at her bountifully spread table, or to enjoy seeing them in the well-laundered daintiness that her care has provided for them.

But this is not the worst. She herself knows that the constant effort to perform the impossible is telling upon her health and her temper, and that she will be, by and by, either a physical wreck or a soured, fretful woman.

There is more than one Mrs. Bustleabout. And their number will never be fewer until women learn and practice the art of omission.—Selected.

WHAT TO DO—AND HOW.

The best covering for a poultice or a mustard paste is tissue paper.

For a grass-stain on children's clothes while it is fresh, wash it out in alcohol.

Brass work can be kept beautifully bright by occasional rubbing with salt and vinegar.

Damp salt will remove the discoloration of cups and saucers caused by tea and careless washing.

When broiling steak, throw a little salt on the coals, and the blaze from the dripping fat will not annoy.

To renovate scratched furniture, dissolve beeswax in turpentine, making it of the consistency of molasses; apply with a woollen cloth, then rub briskly with a dry piece of flannel. The improvement is wonderful.

To clean willow furniture, use salt and water; apply with a nail-brush; scrub well and dry thoroughly.

A strong solution of alum, to which has been added a little glycerine and vinegar, is a cure for mosquito bites.

Keep nickel, silver ornaments and mounts bright by rubbing with woollen cloths saturated with spirits of ammonia.

Salt as a tooth-powder is better than almost anything that can be bought. It keeps the teeth brilliantly white, and the gums hard and rosy.

To drive away ants, scrub the shelves or drawers that they frequent with strong carbolic soap, after which sprinkle red pepper in every crevice.

Avoid letting the blades of knives remain in hot water. The heat causes a sudden expansion of the steel which will make the handles crack, even though the handles themselves are kept dry.

To remove grease from carpets apply buckwheat flour. If this does not absorb the grease in a few hours cover the flour with coarse, brown paper and rub with a hot flatiron. Dried bread crumbs thoroughly rubbed over the spots sometimes prove effective.

A much better polish on lamp chimneys may be obtained by not using water. Rub the chimney first with soft tissue paper until the soot is thoroughly removed, then sprinkle in a little salt and rub with a dry flannel. Glass treated in this way is beautifully brilliant.

The following method of preserving ice in a pitcher will not come amiss to those who need it for use all night or in the sick room: Fill the pitcher with ice and water and set it on the centre of a piece of paper; then gather the paper up together, at the top and bring the ends tightly together, placing a strong rubber band around them to hold it close, so as to exclude the air. An authority says that a pitcher of ice-water treated in this manner has been known to stand over night with scarcely any perceptible melting of the ice.—Unknown Benefactor.

To overcome the marks of age, all who have gray beards should use Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers, the best and cleanest dye made for coloring brown or black.

BEATTY Pianos $175. Organs $118. Want Beatty, Washington, N. J.

They go together—the "cutting" of prices, and the substitution of inferior goods. Sometimes it's a fraudulent imitation of the genuine article—sometimes it's some cheap compound represented as "just as good;"—there's profit for a sharp dealer, even at "cut prices."

To prevent this kind of fraud and imposition, the genuine guaranteed medicines of Dr. R. V. Pierce are now sold only through druggists regularly authorized as agents, and always at these long-established prices:

Golden Medical Discovery (for the Liver, Blood, and Lungs), $1.00.
Favorite Prescription (for woman's weaknesses and ailments), $1.00.

Pleasant Pellets (for the liver), 25 cents.
They're the cheapest medicines you can buy at any price, for you pay only for the good you get. They're guaranteed, in every case, to benefit or cure, or the money is returned.

Beware of the dilutions, imitations, and substitutes offered by unauthorized dealers at less than above prices.

FARM NOTES.

A BED OF ROSES.

A bed of roses is not to be had for only the money it costs. Its price is eternal vigilance as well, and it is anything but a pleasant surprise when things seem to be going on finely, to discover some morning that a perfect army of unprincipled green bugs have actually gone to housekeeping on the very choicest plants. You would like to kill them, and you try to accomplish this desire; but they persist in living just as though they had a right to life, freedom, and the pursuit of happiness in your rose bed. There is no use, however, in losing heart, as good and inexpensive remedies can be bought of all florists, and if the plants are kept in a strong healthy condition they will seldom be attacked by insects. But with only a few roses to take care of, it will not be much work to give plants and leaves a thorough washing every two weeks with tobacco-soap water, made with half a pound of soap and two quarts of water, using a fine syringe to wet every minute spot, and especially the under part of the leaves. This will keep the undesirable visitors away, which is far better than getting rid of them after they come.—Harper's Young People.

AN AGRICULTURAL CREED.

According to the Canada Farmer, the agriculturalists of Canada met in convention not long ago, and adopted for themselves the following creed:

We believe in small farms and thorough cultivation.

We believe the soil lives to eat as well as the owner, and ought therefore to be well manured.

We believe in going to the bottom of things, and therefore in deep plowing and enough of it. All the better if it be a subsoil plow.

We believe in large crops that leave land better than they found it, making both the farm and the farmer rich at once.

We believe that every farm should own a good farmer.

We believe that the fertilizer of any soil is a spirit of industry, enterprise, and intelligence; without these lime, gypsum, and guano will be of little use.

We believe in good fences, good farm-houses, good orchards and good children enough to gather the fruit.

We believe in a clean kitchen, a neat wife in it, a clean cupboard, a clean dairy, and a clear conscience.

We believe that to ask a man's advice is not stooping, but of much benefit.

We believe that to keep a place for everything and everything in its place saves many a step, and is pretty sure to lead to good tools and to keeping them in order.

We believe that kindness to stock, like good shelter, is saving of fodder.

We believe that it is a good thing to keep an eye on experiments, and note all good and bad.

We believe that it is a good rule to sell grain when it is ready.

BRIEFS.

The least warlike vegetable—peas.

The fruit most destructive on the branches of the tree—prunes.

The only time some farmers' cattle get enough salt, is in the beef barrel.

Why is market gardening a patriotic and peaceful occupation? Lettuce have peas.

To what breed of hogs does the ground hog belong? The weather breed.

Never laugh at science until you have learned how much chemistry there is in a forty-acre lot.

You don't have to move to town to give the boys a chance—unless it is a chance to make loafers.

Don't make a practice of working in the rain, and expect anyone but the doctor and undertaker to profit by it.

Gossip grows like Jonah's gourd vine: What you hint, the next one affirms, and the third party makes affidavit to.

who burns a cigar to warm his nose but can't afford a pair of mittens for his hands.

A two-weeks' mud blockade in the country is almost as disastrous to the agricultural interests as a session of Congress.

To raise onions successfully, get on the leeward side and take care not to bruise. In this way it can be done without an effusion of tears.

Only a few men, comparatively, can make farming really pay; but any fool who does not know a potato from a clam can give the farmer sage advice.

The man who brings home a five-dollar blanket for his crack horse and a fifty-cent calico dress for his wife, doesn't need a fortune-teller to say whom he loves best.

Ethel wants to know if flowers inclosed in glass will lose their color. We can only say, Ethel, that analogy answers no. A nose that is frequently put within a glass gets a brilliant color.

There are lots of voters who believe in forcibly taking away the horns of the cattle to make them safe; but not in taking away the horn that makes their neighbors unsafe.—Farmer John, in Farm, Field and Stockman.

KEEP THE SHEEP DRY.

A shelter for sheep to run under is more necessary for these animals in wet weather during the spring months than it is during the severe cold of early and mid-winter. Now their fleeces are heavier, and, if wet, will hold moisture longer. Sheep with young lambs ought always to be kept warm and dry. A chill shrinks their milk, and by inducing cold injures both fleece and lamb.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction AND MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 300 pages; cloth, $1.00.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Absolutely Pure.

Whenever a baking powder or soda and cream of tartar are called for in any receipt for cooking, better results will be obtained by using the Royal Baking Powder. The food will be lighter, sweeter, more palatable and wholesome.

Food raised by the Royal Baking Powder may be eaten hot, even by dyspeptics, with impunity.

MRS. ELLEN H. RICHARDS, Instructor of Chemistry in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, says: "Baking Powders prepared from soda and cream of tartar chiefly are, when put up in tin cans with the maker's name and label, much more reliable than any other form of bread-raising preparation."

MISS PARLOA says: "It seems to me that the Royal Baking Powder is as good as any can be. I have used it a great deal and always with satisfaction."

MARION HARLAND says: "I regard the Royal Baking Powder as the best in the market. It is an act of simple justice, and also a pleasure, to recommend it unqualifiedly to American housewives."

M. GORJU, Chef, Delmonico's, New-York, says: "In my use of Royal Baking Powder, I have found it superior to all others. I recommend it as of the first quality."

U. S. Government Chemist Prof. H. A. MOTT says: "The Royal Baking Powder is undoubtedly the purest and most reliable baking powder offered to the public."

The Royal Baking Powder is of higher strength than any other powder (U. S. Government Food Report), and therefore more economical.

There is a volume of "pith and point" in the article of Rev. H. P. Dannecker on "Railroad Men," in the current issue of the Lutheran Standard, when he says, "The 'morals' which lodges inculcate into their members are well-known, and their fruits are many a vacant seat in our churches and many a soul in hell." The only disparaging feature in this statement (to the secret fraternities) is its truth.

Incompatibility of feeling has for some time past existed between the National Board of Commissioners for the Columbian Exposition and the local Directory, and this condition of inharmony threatens to make each independent of the other. An open rupture has not yet taken place, but is imminent. Should it occur, the most serious effect would probably be felt in Congress pending the appropriation of additional funds to meet the requirements of the Exposition.

The Chicago Tribune thus curiously disposes of the secret oath-bound "Third party," the "People's": "If it should appear that there was real danger of the 'People's party' holding together long enough to do great mischief, the Democrats would unite with the Republicans, from whom they differ chiefly on the tariff and offices, and the two would fight against a common enemy. When that job was ended the two parties would separate and resume their dispute on the tariff as of old."

Public opinion has been much excited and widely divided as to the course of Rev. Dr. Parkhurst during his investigation of the political and social evils in New York City. Fearlessly he penetrated the abodes of vice and poverty, energetically inviting the wickedness of persons and places to exhibit its hideousness, after the manner of a shrewd detective, and then exposing it to the world in vigorous and unmistakable language. His discoveries went through all the ramifications of the city government, from Tammany to the most obscure dram-shop. "Any one," he says, "who, with the easily accessible facts in view, denies that drunkenness, gambling, licentiousness in this town are municipally protected, is either a knave or an idiot." The Methodist ministers of New York refused to approve the course of Dr. Parkhurst. The Baptist clergymen have given warm endorsement to his methods of work.

A dispatch from Monticello, Ill., of a recent date, announces that "the Presbyterian churches in this district and throughout Illinois are passing resolutions petitioning the Congressmen and Senators not to grant an appropriation to the World's Fair unless there is a guarantee that there will be no intoxicating liquors sold on the grounds, and that the Fair will be closed on Sunday. They pledge themselves not to support any Senator or Congressman who votes in favor of aid to the Fair, unless these guarantees are made before the money is voted." The contest on both sides of this question is becoming more intense, but there is remarkable strength and feeling manifested among the friends of the Sunday closing and liquor prohibition movement.

At the Quadrennial Methodist Episcopal Conference, last week, Rev. Dr. Edwards freely expressed his opinion of the new Chinese Exclusion bill, as follows: "I am more than surprised at the action of Congress and the President in this bill. It is a burning disgrace." Later, he said: "The bill was rushed through Congress simply because the Irish demanded it. I believe it will react on all concerned. It is a violation of every sacred right of treaty, and may cause the blood of Americans in China and missionaries to be shed by the irresponsible rabble." If it can be proved that the passage and approval of this infamous measure was intended as a political stroke of policy to aid the Republican party in the approaching Presidential campaign (and no other inference can be so readily drawn), it behooves the people of the country to frustrate it at the polls.

The Chinese Exclusion bill which passed the House in Congress a week or two ago was too flagrant a violation of our treaty obligations to be accepted by the Senate; but a new bill has passed that body, and, in a modified form, will probably pass the House. It is scarcely less unjust than the rejected measure. In the language of Senator Palmer, who, to his credit, voted against it, it is "unnecessarily harsh and inconsistent with the fundamental principles of justice that exist in America and China, and everywhere that God reigns." When a nation of professedly Christian people violates solemn treaty covenants, there is little hope that it will be regarded by other nations except as a repudiation of all sense of equity and humanity. Nor is there much hope that we can, as Christians, do much to Christianize a pagan people whom we cruelly oppress. The passage of the original Chinese Exclusion bill was a shock to all humanity, but there then existed a hope that its inhuman spirit would become obnoxious and lead to its repeal, or, at the worst, that it would be suffered to quietly expire, by limitation, at the end of ten years. The new law perpetuates the exclusion indefinitely, and even in a more oppressive form.

Hyde Park, the suburban district adjoining the City of Chicago on the South, and which includes the Midway Plaisance and the Columbian Exposition grounds, before its annexation to the city had passed stringent laws prohibiting the establishment of saloons and the sale of intoxicating liquors within certain precincts. The movement of the World's Fair people to allow liquor to be sold within its domain has caused a thorough investigation of the statutes bearing upon the subject by Mr. W. K. Carlisle, an attorney, who submits the following as the result of his researches: "I called the attention of the committee to the fact that there was a law on the statute books forbidding any one to expose for sale or sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of any spirituous liquors within two miles of the place where any agricultural, horticultural, or mechanical fair is being held, and providing penalties for such sale, etc., and that I stated my opinion to be that this law, if enforced, would prevent the sale of liquor in Jackson Park or the Midway Plaisance. I am still of this opinion. The prohibition ordinances of the village of Hyde Park, so far as the Plaisance is concerned, go a little further, and would prevent the issue of a license."

Mr. Carlisle is of the opinion, also, that if the World's Fair authorities have granted concessions to sell liquor within the prohibition limits, they simply concede the right so far as their control over the Exposition grounds is concerned and subject to the laws which the grantee of the concession is supposed to know. The law will simply prevent the holder of the concession from taking advantage of the permission given. The Inter-Ocean, in this connection, says: "Many able attorneys take issue with Mr. Carlisle concerning the right to sell within Jackson Park. The directors will go on with their work, taking it for granted that liquor may be sold on the grounds." The matter should be promptly tested and settled.

LODGE CHARITY NOT CHRISTIAN CHARITY.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE CONVENTION, OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES, AT PITTSBURGH, PA., MARCH 22, 1892.

BY REV. H. J. SCHUH, ALLEGHENY, PA.

MY FRIENDS, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—There is an old saying which, though it is a little rough, I will use by way of introduction, because it contains a grain of truth: "Give the devil his due." By this we mean to say that, be a man never so bad, he may have some redeeming quality, and we ought to make it our business to find out that quality; or at least, when we are compelled to speak ill of a man, we should not paint his faults blacker than is absolutely necessary. This we are often accused of doing in our fight against secret societies. Men tell us, "There may be bad features about these orders, but you go too far when you condemn them in toto." Let me say here, that we don't deny there are good men in the lodges, and that's the very reason why we are so bitterly opposed to them. We would like to get these good men out of such bad orders. But we are not dealing with individuals when we oppose secret societies—only with the principles, spirit and tendency of the societies themselves, and these we consider evil.

Now there are some things so palpably wrong that a man possessed of ordinary common sense, an honorable man of the world, ought to see and oppose them. Then there are other evils, which a man cannot see until the Spirit of God has enlightened him. We propose, this evening, to look at the subject which has brought this convention together, from these two standpoints:

First, from the standpoint of an honorable man of the world; and Secondly, from the standpoint of a Christian.

And we believe that from either point of view secret societies are an unmitigated evil.

An honorable man of the world calls things by their right names, and means what he says. Such a man must be disgusted with the foolish and meaningless names of these societies. Here is a man who calls himself a "Mason." Well, what did he ever build; where did he learn his trade? Look at his hands; they look as though he could handle a butter-knife much better than a trowel or hammer. He couldn't tell whether a wall is plumb or square, to save his life. Here is another man who calls himself a "Mechanic," even an "American Mechanic." Well, what does he make? Oh, he doesn't make anything; he's a bar-tender, or lives off the interest of the money his father left him. He would be at his wits' end if you asked him to make a kite; and yet he's a "Mechanic"! Here's another, who calls himself a "Red Man," and yet he is neither black nor red, but white. Here's one that calls himself a "Druid." Ask him whether if ever, after the manner of those ancient priests, he cut the throat of a prisoner of war and offered him as a sacrifice to the gods, and he would be horrified at the idea. Yet he is a Druid! If school-boys played with names after this manner we might think it excusable. But here are a lot of full-grown men, American citizens, engaging in this tomfoolery.

Then look at their titles, for a minute. When an English lord or a German count comes over to us and asks to be adopted into our great family as an American citizen, he must forever forfeit all rights to a recognition of his title of nobility on American soil. We have no use for counts and lords on this side of the sea. We have declared, in the "Declaration of Independence," that "all men are born free and equal." About the only title we give is that of "Honorable" to men that have been elected to the legislatures or Congress; and even in such cases we are not always careful to prefix this title, particularly when, as of late, there is reason to doubt whether they are all honorable. Even the President of these United States we address simply as "Mr. President."

But here, in these societies, we have men calling themselves "Masters," "Grand Masters," "Worshipful Grand Masters," "Most Puissant High Arch Patriarchs" and what not—titles a yard long. I ask, is this in keeping with the spirit of our American institutions? Then look at this "Noble Grand" the next morning after the lodge meeting. Who is he? An ordinary shoe-maker. There is nothing particularly noble or grand about him. Ought not such child's play to disgust an honorable man of the world? If it were mere child's play, it might be tolerated; but it is worse.

This is a great country. We have the longest rivers in the world, the grandest mountains in the world, the most extensive plains in the world, the most fertile soil in the world, the richest mines in the world, etc., etc. The average American never tires of speaking the praise of his country; but the grandest and greatest thing we boast of is our liberty. When I was a school-boy, we used to sing about "the land of the free, and the home of the brave;" and I remember well how big I felt that I stood on American soil. But of late it has occurred to me, that perhaps we are not quite as free as we think we are, nor as free as we used to be. Let me illustrate. Here are thousands of our fellow citizens who have gone into secret, oath-bound societies and have bound themselves, some of them by the most horrid oaths, and under the most terrible penalties, to keep secret what shall be revealed to them. Whether these things can be kept secret with a good conscience, is not to be left to the judgment of the individual. He has sworn to begin with that he will keep his mouth shut. That man has forfeited the most precious jewel in all the crown of our liberties—the liberty of conscience; and yet he calls himself a "Freemason."

What I am going to say now may hit some one who did not expect to get hit this evening. But I can't help that. We came here to look at facts, and facts are stubborn things. Here is a man who believes in God's rule, "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." He wants to work and make an honest living for himself and his family. He finds a job. The work suits him, and the wages suit him. He is ready to begin. But here steps in a secret society and says: "Don't you dare to work without our consent! If you do, we'll make it so hot for you that you can't stay in this community." And yet we call ourselves a free people!

Here's another example: A man wants a hat; he steps into the next gentlemen's furnishing house and finds one that fits him; the price suits him. He's ready to buy. But here steps in a secret society and says: "Don't you dare to buy from that house. We've boycotted it, and if you dare to deal there we'll lift you clean out of your boots, and brand you as a black sheep." And yet this is "the land of the free!"

Here's another case: A man wants to build a house. He goes to a lumber merchant and gets an estimate on lumber. The stuff suits him, and so does the price. The dealer is anxious to sell. But here steps in a secret society and says: "Don't you dare sell that man a stick of lumber. If you do, without our consent, we'll make you sweat for it." And yet this is a free country! If the Czar of all the Russias did such things, we would cry him down as an autocrat, whose ideas of tyranny were in crying contrast with the enlightenment and civilization of this nineteenth century.

And yet these things are happening every day right here in free America. Don't you think it is time we were calling a halt, or people will feel like putting an interrogation mark after that clause, "the land of the free?" When a society, either open or secret, can step in and so materially interfere with a man's personal liberty, things have indeed come to a very bad turn in this republic.

Nor is this all. It is no longer a secret that these fraternities interfere with the freedom of our elections. Politicians use these societies as stepping-stones into office. It is bad enough when men seek office. The office ought to seek the man. But when a man uses anything else except his moral worth, his real fitness for the position for which he is proposed, particularly when he uses secret, underhanded means, is a menace to public welfare. These members of secret societies are pledged to support one another, and the question, "Does this candidate belong to our lodge?" is getting to be far more important in the eyes of thousands of voters than the other question, "Is he fitted for the office?" But we have already so far drifted away from an honest ballot that men will point to this very fact as a great advantage which the lodge offers.

And how often does lodge influence interfere with the justice of our courts? The hand of secrecy reaches into the jury-box, and often enough prejudices witnesses, attorneys, and even judges. A short time ago, in the city of Columbus, O., there was a red-handed murderer on trial. His guilt was so evident that honest-minded men expected a verdict of murder in the first degree. But the prisoner expected acquittal. When the jury brought in a mild verdict, because they were afraid to acquit, the prisoner was so incensed that he tore off his secret society badge and threw it at the jury. What did he mean by this? He meant to say: "You, my lodge brethren, have been unfaithful to the obligations of your order. As members of the lodge you were bound to acquit me, no matter what the evidence was." My friends, when such things occur in open court, may I not ask, whither are we drifting?

We pride ourselves on the liberty of speech which our country affords. But who dares to speak out against the evils of secrecy? You may call it public opinion, but I tell you, the secret lodge has muzzled thousands of men in this country, who well enough see the evil of this thing but are afraid to speak out, and many of them are ministers of the Gospel, too. Some of us know by actual experience what it costs a man to stand by his convictions on this question.

Then we talk about a free press. The desire to be popular, and the fear of lodge influence has muzzled the press, also. A few weeks ago my friend, Mr. Stoddard, offered one of our public libraries, over in Allegheny, a number of works exposing the secrets and workings of oath-bound societies. They were refused as a gift. Now, if a Methodist preacher had written a work exposing the errors of the Catholic church, and such a work had been offered to that library, I believe it would have been acceptable. Or if a Catholic priest had written a book against Lutheranism, I think they would have found room for it. I am not quite certain but they would have taken a copy of Tom Paine's "Age of Reason," or Ingersoll's "Mistakes of Moses." But there is no room for a work exposing the secrets and workings of oath-bound societies on the shelves of our public libraries! And still we talk about liberty of speech, and of the press.

It seems to me this ought to be enough to disgust an honorable man of the world with the whole secret society business.

But from a Christian point of view, the matter is still worse. A Christian finds objections to the lodge which we can't expect a man of the world, though honorable, to find.

In the first place we say: The lodge god is not the Christian's God. I have had people tell me: "How can you be so bitterly opposed to secret societies? A man can't become a member of one of these orders unless he believes in the existence of a higher being." But who is, and what is, this higher being? The devil has no objection to people believing in a higher being, so long as that higher being is not the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Triune God. But here are Jews, and Mohammedans, and infidels, all professing to believe in a higher being. Can a Christian confess with them? Does he believe in the same God that they do? Nay, verily! To him there is no higher being but God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and he can't consent to have his faith put on the same level with that of Jews, Mohammedans and infidels. In the eyes of a man who has caught the spirit of the lodge, the teachings of Christ are nothing better than the writings of Mahomet or Confucius. No, a Christian can't consent to have his Saviour placed alongside of such a sham as Mahomet.

Then, again, the prayer of the lodge is not Christian prayer. How can it be? Faith in Christ is not made a condition of membership in the lodge; then how can prayer be offered in his name? Christ says, "Whatsoever ye ask the Father in my name... he will give it you." A short time ago I was speaking with a clergyman on this subject, and he said: "You must be mistaken about this matter. A few weeks ago, I was called upon to open a lodge meeting of the Knights of Pythias, to which some of my friends belong, and I prayed, as I always do, in the name of the Saviour. Nobody objected." Very well; I don't doubt the man's word, for he's a preacher. It may even occur that the chaplain of a lodge may pray in Jesus' name so long as nobody objects. But should any Jew or infidel, being a member, object, that name, of which it is said that "there is none other given under heaven whereby men may be saved," must be omitted, and the grand lodges have so decided. The devil does not object to people praying, so long as they do not pray in the name of Jesus. The lodge, as such, does not recognize Christ as "the only Mediator between God and men."

Then we say, The lodge gospel is not the Gospel of the Christian. The Christian's Gospel is: salvation by faith in Jesus. "Whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." But the lodge proposes to teach not only virtue and morality for men's direction in this life, but even to show the way to "the grand lodge above," whatever that is, outside of Christ. Their plan of salvation needs no Saviour, no atonement, no regeneration, no sanctification, by the power of the Holy Ghost. They propose to take a short cut to heaven, and get men there by their morality and virtue. It is rank unrighteousness of the worst sort.

Finally, we claim that lodge charity is not Christian charity. It is often claimed for these societies that they are charitable institutions. It will take only about a minute to explode this bubble, and if you give me your further attention that long you will see it. Here's a poor fellow who has been unfortunate enough to lose an arm or a leg. He is no longer able to make a living for himself and his family. He is an object of charity. He's just the man for the lodge. No doubt they have long been looking out for such unfortunate people—a charitable institution, and an object of charity—that suits very well. But the poor fellow comes back to me with a long face. I ask, "What's the matter?" "Why," says he, "they want $25 as an initiation fee, and I haven't got 25 cents." What! A charitable institution wants $25 for a man to get in? That's a strange kind of charity! But I reach in my pocket and give him the $25, or get it from a friend if I'm not flush. The man goes—and comes again with a still longer face. "What's the matter now?" "Why, they say they don't take cripples; they don't want people who can't make their own living." What! A charitable institution doesn't take people who need help? Can it be possible that sensible people call such an unutterly selfish society a charitable institution? It's a misnomer of the worst sort.

But they say, we are charitable toward our members, at any rate; we help the widows and orphans. Well, may be they do. After the hall rent is paid, and the salaries of officers are paid, and the costly uniforms are paid for, and the traveling expenses of organizers and lecturers are paid, and the expenses of the delegates to the grand and great-grand lodge or encampment are paid, and the bill for the banquet has been footed, there may possibly be a mite left for the widows and orphans. But, in comparison to the sums that are paid in, it is precious little.

Then, suppose they do pay a so-called sick benefit or death benefit. Is that charity? When you buy a pair of boots and pay for them, is there any charity about that? If you insure your house, and it burns down, and the company pays you what you are justly entitled to, is there any charity about that transaction? I say no, and so do you. Business is business, and not charity. So, when you go into a contract to pay in certain sums at stated times, with the understanding and for the express purpose of being entitled to certain sums when a certain contingency occurs, nobody but a fool can call that charity. Charity is a distinctively Christian virtue, and, to be worthy of the name at all, must pattern after the love of God, who bestows his blessings, not by contract, so much for so much, but, by free grace, even upon the unworthy. My friends, this lodge charity is a sham—a hollow pretence, and it is time people were finding it out.

So we believe this lodge business, whether you view it from the standpoint of an honorable man of the world, or from the standpoint of a Christian, is an unmitigated evil.

THE JESUITS.

THEIR ORIGIN, THEIR AIM, THEIR METHODS, AND THEIR SUCCESS.

[Read at the New England District Anti-Secret Convention, in December, 1891.]

BY MRS. E. TRASK HILL.

The subject assigned me is one which should engage the thoughtful attention of every patriot in all parts of the known world; for the Jesuit has become an important factor in all civilized and uncivilized life. He is a persistent, cunning, crafty, unscrupulous enemy of free speech, free thought, free government, and religious liberty. Wherever his power is felt, strife, anarchy, socialism, and superstition abound.

The Jesuit order was founded in the year 1540, some eleven years after the Christian church had organized under the name of Protestant. Ignatius Loyola was the founder of the order. Wounded in the service of Ferdinand V. of Spain, in 1521, he was for a long period of years confined in a place where he had access to no books but "The Lives of the Saints." His solitary life, and constant brooding over unnatural themes, distorted his brain, and he soon gave evidence of being an insane fanatic, styling himself "Knight of the Virgin Mary." Bewildered with this high honor, he became a wild adventurer.

He conceived the plan of the Jesuit order, and submitted its constitution to Pope Paul III. Like all other orders of nuns and monks, the Jesuit order claims divine origin and heavenly inspiration. Loyola, perceiving that the Pope hesitated to indorse the Jesuit movement, suddenly received another heavenly inspiration, and, in addition to the customary vows of monks, viz., chastity, poverty and obedience, he declared his willingness to become absolutely subservient to the Pope.

This offer came at a time when the Pope was very uncertain of his position, as the Reformation had convulsed Europe and threatened to revolutionize governments. Seeing an opportunity to regain lost power, he declared his approval of the Jesuit order, by issuing his bull of confirmation, and gave the Jesuits permission to invade the whole world, and conquer it to the Pope. Their law was his will, their worship at his dictation. They acknowledged no church but themselves. They were especially lenient to idolatrous nations, as they themselves worshiped the wafer-god. Through these means they gained many converts among heathen nations.

In order to entrap the Indians of the West, fictitious tales and falsehoods were devised. Brewster's Encyclopedia tells us: "One of them assured a native chief that Jesus Christ was just such an one as he would have admired. He was a mighty chief, a valiant and victorious warrior, who had, in the space of three years, scalped an incredible number of men, women and children!" What a calumny on the meek and lowly Nazarene!

"Another, in the East Indies, produced a pedigree of himself, in which he clearly demonstrated that he was a lineal descendant of Bramah!"

The order was placed under strict military and despotic rule. Their General was chosen for life. Every member was sworn on the cross to implicit obedience. He yielded up his body, soul, wishes and desires to his commander. He was allowed, under no circumstances, to exercise his own judgment. He must go wherever and whenever bidden. He had no choice of faith. He must do any deed required of him without questioning. Failing in the first attempt, he must try again. If he perished while performing a dangerous act, he was sainted. Garnet, the Jesuit chief of the gunpowder-plot, is worshiped to this day, in Spain, as St. Henry.

The head of the order received and disbursed immense funds, made nominations for office, and removed officials at his will.

The society was divided into thirty-seven provinces; a register was kept of the character of each novice, or member, his talent, his tact, his activity and his defects.

Hume's history tells us: "The Jesuits had missionaries for the villages, and martyrs for the Indians." Brewster's Edinburgh Encyclopedia says: "A peculiar energy was imparted to the operations of this most singular society. The Jesuits are a naked sword, whose hilt is at Rome, but its blade is everywhere, invisible until its stroke is felt."

We find them, very early in their history, seeking to control the education of Protestant children. Their motto was this: "Give us the education of the children of this day, and the next generation will be ours—ours in maxims, in morals, in religion."

In former times, as now, they entered into Protestant churches, pretending to be converted. They were even found in the ranks of the old English Puritans. They were, as now, all things to all men.

Abbe Boileau said of them: "They are a sort of people who lengthen the creed and shorten the moral law." They numbered only ten at first, but by their subtlety and insinuating methods they gained, first, a foothold in arts and sciences, and thus an entrance into royal families. They speedily obtained authority to teach the young in every European kingdom. They secured professorships, and called to their assistance nuns of various orders, who helped them in their unworthy schemes.

In forty-eight years, their number had increased from ten to the enormous number of 11,000. Their members were installed confessors to the kings of Spain, France, Portugal, Naples, Austria, Sicily and the regal Duke of Savoy and every leading prince and noble in these kingdoms.

All this time, as to-day, they encountered deadly enemies. The Jansenists, of France, dealt them fearful blows by exposing their immorality, and their unprincipled political methods.

In 1762, by an act of the Parliament of France, they were dissolved and abolished. The reasons given were: "The consequences of their doctrines destroy the law of nature; they break all the bonds of civil society, by authorizing theft, lying, perjury, the utmost licentiousness, murder, criminal passions, and all manner of sins. These doctrines, moreover, root out all sentiments of humanity; they overthrow all governments, excite rebellion, and uproot the foundation and practice of religion; and they substitute all sorts of superstitions, irreligion, blasphemy, and idolatry."

March 31, in the year 1767, they were overthrown in Spain. The colleges were surrounded in Madrid, the fathers were seized and conveyed to Carthagena, and in less than three days every Jesuit college in Spain was closed.

In 1773, Pope Garganell (Clement XIV.) abolished the order entirely, "as a sect no longer to be endured by man!" "It will cost me my life," he said, "but I must abolish this dangerous order." His words were prophetic, for in a few days he died of poison, and among his last utterances was this: "I am going to eternity, and I know for what." Brave man, to meet so grandly his heroic death! Would that a man like Pope Garganell might be found in the United States, who, from the Presidential chair, might utter such courageous words and thus sound the death-knell of Jesuits in America!

The order existed privately, until 1801, when, for political reasons, Emperor Paul, in Russia, restored them to power. An infamous Emperor needed Satanic supporters, to carry out his diabolical plans, and the Jesuits were his ready tools.

In 1804 the king of Sardinia restored them for base purposes.

In 1814, Pope Pius VII. restored them to full power, and called on all papal princes in Europe, and the powers in South America, and in all establishments of popery, "to afford them protection and encouragement, as the Pope's right arm, and the superior and most successful instruments of extending Catholicism, and pulling down heresies." The Pope affirms: "This act is above the recall or revision of any judge, with whatever power he may be clothed."

Hearken, ye civil governments of the whole earth!

We now come down to the history of our own times, and shall consider the methods adopted by Jesuits of the United States to gain control of this goodly heritage. Thus far their plans have been wonderfully successful; and unless some thunderbolt from the hand of Almighty God shall arouse this nation to see its impending peril, we are lost, and shall be numbered among the nations who, for love of money, sold our birthright.

ENGLISH REFORM.

We copy from the London (England) telegraphic reports of April 28, 1892:

The clergy discipline bill, contemplating the degradation from their calling of clergymen found guilty of immorality, came up for the second reading in the House of Commons. The object of the bill is to enable the government to deal summarily, as is now impossible, with such preachers in the established church as have recently in considerable numbers disgraced it in their relations with their parishioners.

Mr. Balfour, in moving the second reading, alluded to the scandals which had disgraced the church recently, and said that the present machinery of the government was practically useless for dealing with the offenses in question. The bill, if it became law, would facilitate the expulsion of immoral and dishonest clergymen from the church.

Mr. Lloyd-George, Advanced Liberal for the Carnarvon District, moved an amendment to the bill to the effect that it was no business of the state to interfere in spiritual discipline. Mr. Lloyd-George spoke amid confusion among the ministerialists, who accuse him, as a champion of disestablishment, of wishing to keep criminal clergymen in the church, so that he may point to them as specimens of the worthlessness of the established clergy.

In the debate several Conservatives charged that the Welsh partisans of disestablishment wished to keep the corrupt Welsh clergy in office as living evidence that the Church of England was rotten and incapable of reform, and therefore must be disestablished.

Mr. Gladstone supported the bill. Recent scandals among the clergy, he said, had shown that such a measure was imperative.

Before and after his speech several unsuccessful attempts were made to adjourn the house on the ground that there was no quorum present. Several Radicals denounced the framers of the bill for omitting the offenses of bishops from the provisions of the penal clauses, arguing that bishops also had shown themselves not to be above sin.

At 10:30 o'clock Mr. Balfour appealed to the house for curtailment of debate. The debate proceeded amid confusion. At 11 o'clock Mr. Balfour moved the closure and carried it by a vote of 197 to 58. The majority of the Radical members protested against the closure and retired immediately after it was passed. The bill then passed the second reading, the vote standing 230 to 17.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Are we to have no heroes?—Woman Suffrage defeated again.—Mormons in Massachusetts.—“Judicial rascality in Boston.”—St. Patrick as a Masonic saint.—Our grandmothers’ “laylock” bushes.

The great characters of history are being picked to pieces by this iconoclastic age in a way that is really appalling. Don't we all remember the time when Columbus was a very demi-god to our youthful imaginations,—brave, humane, pious; and how our hearts went out in pity to the poor old man for the hard measure fortune meted out to him in his latter days? And now to be told that he was a mere adventurer, scarcely better than a pirate, and so filled with the devil of Spanish cupidity that his cruelties to the Indians cannot be read without a shudder!—verily, this is a fall. One is divided between a curious sense of shame at having been so imposed upon, and a startled fear lest our heroes which remain may also prove to be of common clay. What effect will all this have upon the already too small bump of reverence in the rising generation? Heaven save the nation whose childhood has no heroes!

The bill for giving women qualified to vote for members of the School Committee the right to vote on the license question, has been again rejected in the Massachusetts Legislature by a very narrow vote—87 to 90. The list of men that voted “Nay” shows a very liberal sprinkling of Irish names. Only one Roman Catholic voted in its favor, while fifty-one Roman Catholics voted against it. These figures are worth considering. It is from the rum-party that the head and front of the opposition comes; but there are always enough Protestants (protestants against who or what?) to join forces with the Flanigans, and Kelleys, and Quins, and Moriartys, or even they would not be able to bar the daughters of Pilgrim sires from their just heritage. The ballot in woman's hands will do many other things besides shutting up the rum-shops. Would the Paddock Pure Food bill have been so shamefully sidetracked in Congress if the housekeepers of this land had been represented by intelligent women who understood the effect of alum and ammonia on the human system, and had a practical interest in this and other questions intimately connected with the health and comfort of the household? We should have had an international copyright law years ago, if half our legislators had been women; nor would authors now be subject to the unjust tax of having to pay letter rates on all manuscripts going through the mails. Woman has always been, far more than man, the patron of literature. Why do letters always flourish most under the reign of a female sovereign? Literature, science and art have as much cause to welcome Woman Suffrage as rum and illiteracy have to fear it.

The Harvard students held a mock National Convention the other night, at which the Republicans were somewhat in excess; but not overwhelmingly so, as is the case when Wellesley shows her political colors. If women could vote, it would be like dynamite in the Democratic ranks, so it is only the part of wisdom for them to oppose it all they can.

A lady-member of Tremont Temple, now resident in Brockton, Mass., has been dropped from the rolls for a very singular and unusual reason. She has become a Mormon,—converted by her husband, who has been for years a believer in this creed. Elder A. M. Hoxie, of the Latter-Day Saints, makes the statement that there are about 600 Mormons—non-polygamous—scattered through Massachusetts, of whom 125 are residents of Boston. It will be remembered that Pres. Eliot alluded, in his remarkable Utah speech, to the fact that there were Mormon students at Harvard. He is probably conscious by this time that he made a serious blunder when he praised up the Mormons as the equals in purity and patriotism of the Pilgrim Fathers. It is to be hoped that the salutary impression will remain long enough to prevent him from ever making such a fool of himself again.

An editorial article in the Grand Army Record, on “The Judicial Rascality of Boston,” makes some very grave charges, that will be startling to many ears; but there are people who have tried in vain to get justice done them in our city courts, to whom such charges will not be at all in the nature of news. These have long known that Masonry rules in the court-rooms of Boston, and their only wonder will be that with so much evidence of judicial corruption on every side, the real cause of it all, either through ignorance or fear, remains unmentioned.

The number of applicants for liquor licenses in the city is 1,300, and of these 860 have received the desired permit. A bright W. C. T. U. woman said to me, the other day, that she had no hope that the liquor traffic could ever be successfully prohibited in Massachusetts, unless Boston should burn up from “spontaneous combustion,” or be visited by some other dreadful judgment from heaven. But Boston is a wonderful city. For culture and philanthropy she has not a rival on the continent. “Simply to breathe its atmosphere is an education,” said an enthusiastic Nova Scotian, a pupil at the Conservatory of Music; yet, exalted though she be to heaven, this terrible traffic which she allows will in time cast her down to hell. But never let us say again that Gov. Russell is not a sympathizer with the temperance cause! The Young Men's Catholic Temperance Society, and the Father Matthew Total Abstinence Society of Salem, have both been recently honored by his presence. To be sure, neither of these bodies begins to be as large, or hold such a place in public esteem, as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which, it will be remembered, he was too tired, last fall, to attend. But they have votes; the W. C. T. U. did not. There is the whole thing in a nutshell.

A correspondent of the Transcript mentions the curious fact that more than one hundred years ago there was a St. Patrick's lodge of Free and Accepted Masons at Portsmouth, N. H., and asks, “Will some Masonic antiquarian inform me why a Masonic lodge should have been so named.” That “Masonic antiquarian,” it is evident, does not take the Transcript, for I have scanned its columns closely for some weeks, curious to see the explanation, but none has yet been vouchsafed. Can some reader of the Cynosure living in that vicinity enlighten us on the subject? St. Patrick was a holy man, and a better Protestant by far than some who claim to be of Pilgrim stock, and he is not to blame if his name has been put to base uses; nor, so long as Masonry claims the two St. Johns for its own, can I see any earthly reason to hinder their claiming St. Patrick.

Jocund May is here at last. The voice of the lawn-mower begins to be heard in the land; the budding woodlands show dream-like in their tender beauty, and the lilacs—“laylocks,” as country people still call them—are showing their tiny clusters. A lilac-bush under the window is such a common adjunct of old houses that I am inclined to think it was one of the earliest colonial importations in the floral line. And a treasure it must have been to many a maid and matron, homesick for old England, as it cast its cool, green shadow across the shutterless window, and the wind sighed through its white and purple spikes, redolent with sweet and cherished memories. It is a flower that everybody with unspoiled taste loves;—little children, old people, and they who are bearing the burden and heat of the day. Long may the iconoclastic hand of fashion spare our grandmothers’ “laylock” bushes.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4, 1892.

The anti-Chinese legislation is the result of a compromise between the bills originally passed by House and Senate, respectively, as your correspondent intimated some time ago that it would be. The basis of the compromise was the bill originally passed by the Senate, extending for a period of ten years from their expiration the laws against Chinese immigration which have been in force for ten years, amended by sections providing for the registration of all Chinese now domiciled in the United States, and providing that all immigrants entering this country in violation of law shall be imprisoned one year and then be deported to China; and that no Chinese person is to be released on bail pending action on a writ of habeas corpus. Senator Sherman and Representative Hitt, who were members of the House and Senate conference committee which formed the compromise measure, thought the amendments were unnecessarily harsh, and declined to sign the report of the committee, but they did not oppose its adoption by Congress.

Mrs. Harrison is getting so much better that she will go to Old Point for a short stay. Her daughters, Mrs. Dimmick and Mrs. McKee, who have taken turns at nursing her during her illness, will go with her.

It does not speak very well for the moral stamina of the members of the House of Representatives that so many of them attended the horse-races as to leave the House without a quorum, upon several occasions lately.

Few weeks have gone by recently without something being said in Congress about the very determined effort that is being made to obtain legislation prohibiting the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday. This week, Senator Vest, who is a member of the Exposition Committee, in presenting a petition for the closing of the Exposition on Sunday characterized it as a “machine petition,” which had been originally addressed to the Ohio Senators. He called attention to a resolution it contained pledging the signers to refuse to support for any office or position of trust any Senator or Representative who should vote for any further aid of any kind to the World's Fair, except on condition of its being closed on Sunday. The Senator was very harsh in his criticism of that resolution, which he said was prepared here, in Washington, as a sort of political blackmail. He intimated rather strongly that he would not allow himself to be influenced by such resolutions, and said that his vote on the subject should be governed, not by the question of whether the Exposition was to be closed or opened on the Sabbath day, nor by the question whether beer was to be sold on the grounds, but by his judgment as to whether the honor of the country involved the reckless expenditure of money which had, he believed, already taken place in connection with the Fair. But after all, the most important thing said by Mr. Vest was that the committee was carefully considering the question of closing the World's Fair on Sunday. The more carefully it is considered the more likely it is that the Fair will be closed.

Representative Walter H. Butler, of Iowa, was the talker at the last Sunday afternoon meeting of the Y. M. C. A., and “What do I believe?” was the basis of his talk, which was preceded and followed by solos sang by Miss Jennie King Morrison, of Portland, Maine. Mr. Butler said: “The world no longer gauges a man by what he professes. Empty professions go for naught nowadays, and a man is judged entirely by what he does. This is true, for the reason that a man will not act contrary to what he believes and his daily walk must of necessity give emphasis to his own rule of conduct. If a person believes a thing he will act on it; on the other hand, if he does not live up to what he professes, it is because he does not believe it. . . . In brief, a man's acts are the indices of his belief and his conduct is the involuntary evidence of what he thinks is right and just.”

Miss Clara Barton, president of the American Red Cross Association, has returned from Brooklyn, where she went to see the steamship “Tynehead,” which was chartered by donations made by citizens of Washington to carry the cargo of provisions donated by citizens of Iowa, sail on its mission of mercy to Russia. It would have been easy to have carried a large crowd of Washingtonians over to see the ship depart, but Miss Barton did not wish anything like a public demonstration made over the departure of the ship, and her wishes were obeyed. Dr. J. B. Hubbell, the field agent of the Red Cross Society, will meet the “Tynehead” at the port of Riga, Russia, and will personally supervise the distribution of the 7,000,000 pounds of provisions with which she is laden. Miss Barton naturally feels proud of the promptness of the people of Washington in meeting her appeal for money to charter this ship.

The warm weather has given an early impetus to out-door temperance work, which is a specialty with a large number of ladies and gentlemen of Washington.

A prominent firm of glass-makers in Philadelphia, not long ago, refused a large order for bottles from a liquor-house.

Mr. Moody says: “If you find a man in the whisky business for twenty years who has not a skeleton in his closet, I would like to see that man.”

REFORM NEWS.

REV. WM. FENTON IN SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 4, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The most striking thing in this climate is its uniformity of temperature. During the last three weeks it has been too steadily cold to dispense with fire or overcoat; and flowers bloom during the whole year. The most objectionable features are the wind, the rain, and the dust. But the lovely San Joaquin valley, Tehachapi pass, the Mojave desert, the paradisaical Los Angeles, Pasadena, Ontario, Santa Anna, Red Lands, Riverside and the dilapidated but charming San Diego, are never to be forgotten.

The truth, after being rebuffed and denounced by the pastors of this city, found utterance in Gospel Mission Hall, last Tuesday evening. The hall was filled beyond its seating capacity, which is about 150. The audience listened intently to the truth for about three hours. The Masonic fraternity was well-represented in the hall, and the Masons lost their jewels. The handbills stated that at the close of the lecture, opportunity would be given for questions to be asked. But before the close of the lecture the Masons boiled over, and one of them, a very stout man, arose to deliver an oration to redeem Masonry; but among honest men Masonry is no more debatable than the Ten Commandments which Masonry violates. Therefore, the Mason was called to order and reminded that opportunity was given only for questions to be asked or denials to be made; he then made a sort of wholesale denial of the whole lecture, and upon being asked to make a specific denial of any statement uttered in the lecture he said that he could not do that without violating the Masonic obligation, and sat down. A Salvation Army man, with his regalia on, got on to a chair and boasted that he was laboring with the Salvation Army in the slums of San Francisco for the salvation of the poor, and that he was a Freemason; and in the name of the Holy Ghost he called for a curse upon the lecturer. And he declared that the lecturer had insulted the ladies in the audience by his reference to the Seventh Commandment in relation to Masonry.

Now the greater part of the audience were honest, truth-loving people; there were brethren Holmes, Dennett, and Baker. Therefore, to expose the disgraceful work of the Salvation Army it was but necessary to read the following clause from the Master Mason's obligation, as printed by the Masonic fraternity's publishing houses in "Ecce Orienti", "I furthermore promise and swear that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, knowing them to be such."

Of course, the audience saw that none but a company of libertines need such an obligation as that; and therefore its recital was sufficient to brand Masonry, and any institution, Salvation Army, or church, in harmony with it, as God-dishonoring and infamous. Why not be satisfied with the Seventh Commandment as God gave it? Because Masonry is libertinism. And what will become of the vain, gaudy attire of the Salvation Army, with its tambourines and drums, in the Judgment-day? Others, however, arose in the hall and testified to having taken the infamous Masonic obligations, and asserted the truthfulness of the lecture; one of whom grasped the lecturer by the hand, saying that he should go from the hall with a light heart, free from the bonds of the Satanic Masonic lodge. Another confessed, on last Sabbath, that he had intended to join the Masons, but the lecture had saved him from it.

The meeting closed with hearty praise to God in singing the Doxology, and a benediction by Brother Holmes, pastor of the Mission.

At the Monday morning Baptist Conference, yesterday, it was voted to indorse as home missionary to the spiritually destitute a man who wore on his vest-collar, in plain sight, a badge indicating to all that he is a sworn, lying blasphemer—a Freemason. A few days ago, while these Masonized Baptist preachers were ordaining a young Freemason to be a Baptist minister, in Oakland, the candidate was assaulted, and, true to his Masonic instincts, the young cut-throat, the candidate, drew a knife on his assailant.

At the time following the murder of Captain

William Morgan by the Masons, the Baptist denomination did not dare to allow its members to be Masons. But now the denomination has become a great world-power and dares not break its covenant with hell, i. e., its fellowship with the lawless Freemasons.

To-night I am to lecture in a Lutheran church in the city, and after that I go to Portland, Oregon.
Yours truly,
W. FENTON.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 3, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. William Fenton had a sad experience in San Francisco, through no fault of his own. In two weeks, I think, he could deliver only two lectures on Masonry. The former gave in a Gospel hall, and it was listened to by 150 persons, brought together by the distribution of hand-bills; the latter he delivered in my church—the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran, to-night. He came to me yesterday and asked for the use of the church. He had been rebuffed by every minister whom he had previously visited. He knew that the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Augustana Synod had taken a firm position against Masonry. I told him that I could promise the use of my church to-night, the only evening when it would not be otherwise occupied; but that the time was too short to get any information of the meeting to my congregation, and he must try to secure an audience in the best way he knew. He advertised his meeting in two evening and three morning papers, and, also, sent notices to the other Scandinavian ministers in the city. And when he was ready to begin his lecture, there was an audience of—twelve! He consoled himself, however, by remembering the pastor who once preached to an audience only one-half as large, and the whole half-dozen had been converted!

Bro. Fenton delivered a forcible lecture on "The Relation of Freemasonry to Sun-worship," and showed conclusively the anti-Christian character of this institution. If he has had larger audiences, he has had few who showed higher appreciation. For two hours he held the attention of his hearers, and, I think, all carried away some convictions. That some Masons were present was made probable by the fact that three or four refused to contribute to the collection that was taken up. It was just sufficient to cover the expense of the advertising. He said to me, afterwards, "I believe San Francisco is a hard place;" at which the two ministers present smiled, for it was "old news" to them. I requested him to stay over Sunday, promising that I would guarantee him an audience in the evening. But he had to hasten north. May he find a kindlier reception in every other place than San Francisco gave him. There are probably few places in which the whole population is so bound up in secret societies as this.

Yours sincerely, C. M. ESBJORN.

ONLY PROHIBITION PAPER IN LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, May 2, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am sure you have read the result of the Louisiana State election, held April 19 last. While there is some room to rejoice over the fact that ex-Governor S. D. McEnery and the lottery ticket were defeated, yet it is to be deplored, when it is known that the will of the majority of the qualified voters was overruled and the minority permitted to ride rough-shod over all. At the Democratic primary election, held on the 22d of March, when every Democrat of the State was wont to do his full duty, both Mr. Foster and McEnery polled only 90,000 votes in the State, combined; still the State Returning Board counts Mr. Foster elected by 30,000 over all; accrediting Foster 79,000, McEnery 49,000, Leonard 29,000, Breaux 12,000, Tannyhill 8,000—thus defeating the will of the majority. I believe that every candidate before the people for election should have every ballot cast for him.

The Democratic press of Louisiana, everywhere ready to shield corruption and protect fraud, provided it assures Democratic success, declares that Foster was elected by the Negro vote; and still the same Democratic press declares that the most un-American methods and crookedness were employed by the Fosterites to elect their candidate. The New Orleans States, an ardent McEnery organ, said of the pine-woods parishes, "They have" (alluding to the Fosterites) "stopped the count of votes and are counting pine trees to swell Foster's majority." The Iberville South, of Plaquemine, said (a few days ago), "They have about finished the count in the State and Foster's majority have not quite run up to a million." Thus, you see, while these same Democratic sheets are charging the Negro

CORRESPONDENCE.

MASONIC HELIOLATRY.

AVALON, Mo., April, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As a matter of interest to your readers, I present them herewith two words from the new "Standard Dictionary" compiling in New York City, to-wit: Heliolater.—n. A sun-worshiper. Heliolatry.—n. The worship of the sun.

Freemasonry is heliolatry and Freemasons are heliolaters, and hereafter in speaking of Masonic worship if the terms are used all Christians will know they apply to Freemasonry. My "American Hand-book and Citizens' Manual," now ready for mailing, will give a complete symposium of this Masonic heliolatry.

The Voice and Union Signal have recently been arguing the propriety and advisability of changing the name of the Prohibition party. Why not attach a strong anti-lodge plank and call it "American?" Without a ringing anti-lodge plank, such a change would be a misnomer. The late American party was a good enough temperance party for many, and political anti-secrecy must not stand still. Should St. John be nominated by the Prohibitionists, we will make as strong a fight in his favor as we did against him, and my book will explain why. But more anon.

M. N. BUTLER.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED AND EXPOSED.

AN OPEN LETTER.

[Concluded.]

YORK, Pa., March 18, 1892.

Pennsylvania Christian Anti-Secret Convention, Pittsburgh, Pa.:

30. Intelligent, reflecting observers have accumulated much outside evidence against the secret lodge system, from public orations, parades, newspaper articles, etc.

31. By charging seceders with perjury, the adhering lodge members have acknowledged that the seceders have told the truth.

32. In courts of justice, when liable to punishment for perjury, Masons and other secretists have testified to the murderous and treasonable character of the secret orders.

33. Intelligent investigators are continually making discoveries which prove the secret lodge system to be demoralizing and dangerous.

34. The great law of cause and effect gives us "more light." Original sin and amazing wickedness are the cause, and the secret lodge system is the effect.

35. The poets are antagonistic to plotters and conspirators. Shakespeare says:

"It were a sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath."

36. Many crimes have been traced to secret societies, in all ages and nations. The names of Morgan, Hennessy, Cronin, and Clayton remind us of well-known cases.

37. Three-fourths of the men who served in the armies of the Confederate States of America were Jesuits, Masons, Odd-fellows, Knights of the Golden Circle, Minute Men, Sons of Liberty and members of other secret societies. And the other fourth were impressed Union men, forced into the armies by secretists.

38. The wives of secret order men are in many cases strongly opposed to the lodge. Comment is unnecessary.

39. An immense amount of positive evidence against the numerous secret orders is now before the American public.

40. There is no limit to the circumstantial evidence which we can present against all the secret organizations, now composing the Jesuitic secret empire of the United States.

41. "Actions speak louder than words." The favorite lodge motto is "Industry, honesty and sobriety." But in very many cases, the treasurers of secret lodges (select secretists), are embezzlers or swindlers.

42. Perhaps the strongest proof we have of the evil character of secret societies, is the testimony of the honest seceders from the various secret orders.

43. Expert anti-secret investigators, such as President J. Blanchard, and the late Gen. J. W. Phelps, have thrown much light upon the dark and mysterious secret lodge system.

44. In addition to those who have testified in the past, recruits are coming daily to join the host of witnesses who are arrayed against the Jesuitic secret empire.

45. I have collected, from various sources, more than five hundred reasons against secret societies and secretism.

46. Having been an active worker against secret societies, for twenty-four years, I claim to possess much information gained by intercourse with secret lodge members of many of the various orders.

47. In selling anti-secret books, pamphlets, and papers on the streets of York, Pa., I have frequently been mistaken for a secret-society man, by lodge members who did not know me.

48. Members of certain secret societies have made unguarded admissions to me, after mistaking me for a fellow lodge member.

49. While selling anti-secret books, lodge men have informed me that I had no right to sell books exposing the secret societies, thus informing me that my books do expose the secret orders.

50. I have often noticed the fear of many lodge men while talking to me, in any public place, thus silently giving their testimony as to the dangerous and despotic character of the lodge.

51. As a seceder from the secret Union League of America, I claim that this association was only a cat's-paw order of the Jesuits and Royal Masons.

52. As a seceder from the Know Nothing order, I claim that it was un-American, revolutionary, dangerous, demoralizing, criminal, murderous and treasonable; and that it was a political cat's-paw order of the Jesuits and Royal Masons.

53. As an expert investigator of Jesuitism and the Jesuits, with twenty-four years of experience, I feel confident that I am right in claiming that nearly all the secret societies in the United States are cat's-paw organizations of the Jesuitic secret empire of the United States.

54. As a physiogomist, with thirty-seven years of experience, I do not hesitate to declare that in the secret society world there are more foolish than wise men, more Brigham Youngs than Martin Luthers, and more William M. Tweeds than George Washingtons.

And, in conclusion, I feel it to be my duty, as an American, as a Protestant, and as a defender of civil and religious liberty, to urge all good citizens of the United States to aid in the extermination of Rum, Romanism, Rings and Secret Societies. Yours, etc,

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

LITERATURE.

TOBACCO: ITS USE AND ABUSE. By Rev. J. B. Wight. Syracuse, N. Y.: A. W. Hall, Publisher. 1892. One Volume 16 mo., pp. 232.

This is an able treatise upon the tobacco habit, the result of personal investigation into its evils for several years. Many competent works have been written upon this subject before this one; but it is one upon which light is constantly needed, and its importance never diminishes. Hence it requires the "line upon line, precept upon precept" course of treatment. Like the whisky habit, it requires numerous and varied presentations—ever keeping it before the public—ever showing its ruinous effects upon mind and body—ever warning the young to avoid it, and urging men and women to abandon it.

Science has long since dispelled the illusion that the use of tobacco in any form is a "harmless indulgence." The vital statistics of civilized nations sufficiently prove its injury to the system and its tendency to promote fatal disorders. Its seductive pleasures have brought thousands to their graves, by inducing ulcers, cancers, heart disturbances and prostration of the nervous system.

Skeptics point to hale and aged men who have used tobacco inveterately for long terms of years as examples of the little bad effect which the poison has had upon them; but if a life-long tobacco user, having an iron constitution, can manage to live to ninety, what assurance have we that he might not have lived to 100 or 110 had he left the "weed" alone?

Mr. Wight's book is replete with the testimony of the great, the learned, and the good in opposition to its alleged benefits. It is written in a plain, agreeable manner, void of bewildering scientific terms, and appeals forcibly to the good sense of every candid reader.

DIXON ON INGERSOLL: Ten Discourses, Delivered in Association Hall, New York, by Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., Author of "Living Problems in Religion and Social Science," "What is Religion?" etc., etc. With a Sketch of the Author, by "Nym Crinkle." New York: J. S. Ogilvie, Publisher.

REMARKS ON "THE MISTAKES OF MOSES." By H. L. Hastings. Boston: Scriptural Tract Repository; H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill. Second Hundred Thousand. 16mo., pp. 32.

The author of "Dixon on Ingersoll" is a brother of Rev. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, who, for the manner in which he recently reviewed Ingersoll's teachings, has been sued for libel by the infidel, laying his damages at $5,000. The impression which one derives from the opening pages of Thos. Dixon's book is that he has dabbled in "higher criticism" until his own faith in the historic parts of God's Word is none too strong. In his discourses he attacks Ingersoll as a sentimentalist and poet, rather than as the bold, bad blasphemer that he is; but he is also the infidel's apologist. Hear him: "His tongue has been the scourge that, with burning lash, has raised slumbering orthodoxy to life. He has stabbed to the heart hundreds of superstitions and lies that have been no part of vital Christianity, and yet have posed as divine truth." He sets down one-half of the infidel's expressions as nonsense. Perhaps this is so; but it is wicked nonsense; yet Mr. Dixon offers no excuse for the following utterance, which indicates that nonsense may sometimes be contagious: "I honestly believe that God has raised up this remarkable man to be, in one sense, his prophet. In one sense, I have grown to believe, he is the mouthpiece of God." Cynosure readers will hardly indorse this estimate of the infidel's mission. It is worse than nonsense.

Mr. Hastings' review of Ingersoll's lecture on "The Mistakes of Moses" is written in a very different vein. It calmly takes up the errors made by the infidel in Jewish history and practices and refutes them, one by one, by the authority of the most trustworthy writers and modern researches. While it fully defends Moses from the charges made by the infidel, it does not descend to personal reflection or undignified language. Its great popularity is due largely to its candor and erudition.

A VIEW OF BAPTISM; From the Greek Testament, in the Light of the Gospel. By Rev. Burnthorn Musgrave. Halifax, N. S. Price, 5 cents.

This little pamphlet of twenty pages is another valid argument in favor of sprinkling as the Bible mode of baptism, drawn from the ancient Scriptures in the original Greek. In this respect it resembles, in all essential points, and tends to confirm, the little book of ex-Pres. J. Blanchard—"The Bible Mode of Baptism"—heretofore noticed in the Cynosure. We give one significant passage: "Lest we should be misled by the word 'buried,' we must remember that Christ was not interred, but that his body was put laterally into a sepulchre, which was 'quarried in the rock' (Matt. 27: 60), 'which had been quarried out of rock' (Mark 15: 46), 'cut in stone' (Luke 23: 53), and that a stone was rolled to the door of the sepulchre. The verb translated 'buried' is the same verb that would be used for cremation. . . . and is certainly not intended to convey to us any idea of submergence."

NOT ON CALVARY: A Layman's Plea for Mediation in the Temptation in the Wilderness. New York: Chas. T. Dillingham & Co. 1892: 16mo., pp. 44.

This is another of the man-made dogmas created by a perversion of the Scriptures. Such books are wholly unnecessary, because the Bible is a much more wholesome and intelligent teacher. It is simply a plea for "a new view of the divine plan of salvation," and John's Gospel is worth a thousand of it.

MAY MAGAZINES.

Our Day has a full-page portrait, from a recent photograph, of the late Charles H. Spurgeon. Rev. F. E.

Clark, head of the Associated Christian Endeavor societies, has a paper on this, "The Youngest Child of the Church," in praise of the institution, preparatory to the International Convention to be held in Madison Square Garden, New York, next July. Dr. Storrs' remarkable discourse of Nov. 15, 1891, on the Spiritual Supremacy of the Bible, will find interested readers. The New Theology in the Nursery (anonymous) is one of the most pungent satires on the modern methods of Bible interpretation that has yet appeared. J. E. Rankin, of Howard University, contributes a sonnet in memory of the late Austin Phelps. The Boston Hymn, "God With Us," written for the Monday Lecture of February 8, is from the pen of Rev. Dr. S. F. Smith, the venerable author of "America," and lacks none of his old poetic fire. The Prelude of Joseph Cook's current series of Monday Lectures reviews Dr. Lyman Abbott's New Progressive Orthodoxy in the speaker's best vein, and with convincing power. Among the "Vital Points of Expert Opinion" are Albert Shaw on Reform in the Municipal Governments of London and New York; President Rankin on Andover Professors; Dr. Furber on Austin Phelps, and Dr. Parkhurst on Corruption in New York City Politics. Questions for Specialists include President Hamlin on the New Andover Attack on the American Board; and Dr. McNiece on President Eliot's Salt Lake City Speech on the Mormons and the Pilgrim Fathers. Rev. Dr. John H. Barrows, of Chicago, has been added to the editorial corps of this magazine, which continues to maintain its high position as the leading reform periodical of the times. Published at 28 Beacon street, Boston, and the W. C. T. U. Temple, corner of La Salle and Monroe streets, Chicago. $2.50 a year.

The Cosmopolitan begins a new volume with Wm. Dean Howells as co-editor, and a choice collection of literary novelties. Among these is a posthumous poem—The Noble Lover, by James Russell Lowell, with a portrait; Sevillian Vignettes (illustrated), by Marrion Wilcox; An Only Son (illustrated), by Gertrude Smith; Two Visits to the Lapps (illustrated), by Hjalmar H. Boyesen; When Through Feast-Litten Halls (illustrated), by John Hay; King Henri Christophe I. (illustrated), by Luther C. Billings; In the Spring Fields, by Wm. W. Campbell; At the Brewery (illustrated), by Hamlin Garland; Wolcott Balestier (illustrated), by Henry James; School, College and Library, by Thos. W. Higginson; Hope, by Edgar Fawcett; Mechanical Flight, by S. P. Langley, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution; Art, by Lilla Cabot Perry; The Passing of Sister Basset (illustrated), by Sarah Orne Jewett; The Merit System in Government Appointments, by Theodore Roosevelt; Simian Speech and Simian Thought [illustrated], by Richard L. Garner; Politics of the Russian Famine, by Murat Halstead; Falstaff's Song, by Edmund C. The Century Magazine begins its forty-fourth volume with a capital number. The principal attractions embrace the first of a series of illustrated articles (with a full-page portrait) on Christopher Columbus, by Emilio Castelar; Architecture at the World's Fair (with eleven pictures), by Henry Van Brunt; Coast and Inland Yachting (illustrated), by Frederick W. Pangborn, and Thomas Couture (illustrated), by Geo. P. A. Healy. Continuations of the following serials appear: Characteristics, by S. Weir Mitchell; Ol' Pap's Flaxen (concluded), by Hamlin Garland; Italian Old Masters—Luini, by W. J. Stillman, and the Naulahka, by Kipling and Balestier. Mary Hallock Foote begins a new story—The Chosen Valley (illustrated). Other papers are: A Gray Jacket, by Thos. N. Page; Homesteads of the Blue Grass (with pictures), by Jas. L. Allen; Books and Seasons, by Thos. Bailey Aldrich; The Flagellants (painting), by Carl Man, illustrating an article on this artist; J. H. Dolph, and Herbert Adams, by W. Lewis Frazer; An After-Dinner Nap (painting), by J. H. Dolph; The Nature and Elements of Poetry (continued), by Edmund C. Stedman; with poems by Herman Melville and others; The death of Mr. Roswell Smith, the President of the Century Co., will not affect the publication of this magazine. New York: The Century Co., 33 East 17th street. $4.00 a year.

The Herald of Health [New York: Dr. M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street], now in the forty-second year of its publication, is filled with plain, practical articles, as follows: An Englishman's Health-Life; Notes Concerning Health; The Deadly Paper-Mill; Why we Grow Old; Some California Climates. Not the least important are the editor's notes on the topics of the month, in which information of interest and important suggestions in hygiene are combined. Dr. Holbrook is the author of the book on Consumption and its Treatment, recently noticed in these columns, which has received high commendation. The Herald is published monthly, at $1.00 per year.

The Cup-Bearer, a monthly magazine for children [Chicago: New Era Publishing Co., 358 Burling street], is decidedly an attractive number, and shows some very careful editing and a happy commingling of amusement and instruction. $1.00 a year.

IN BRIEF.

A German immigration agent called Leemans, whose operations are conducted on a colossal scale, waited upon Premier Abbott at the Canadian capital, recently, accompanied by some Northwest Territories members of Parliament. He proposed to settle 400,000 German immigrants in the northwest at so much per head. What the per capita tax is neither he nor any of the members will divulge. He claims to have settled 250,000 Germans in Brazil. The government is considering the proposition.

If cigarette smoking is an evil—and we believe there is no question about it—it is a monstrous evil. In thirteen years the manufacture of the little rolls of bad-smelling tobacco has increased from 238,276,817 to 2,877,799,440. Fully two-thirds, perhaps, of this enormous number of cigarettes annually made and sold are smoked by boys. The first thought of many when their attention is called to this subject is that the monstrous evil should be suppressed by law. It is much more easy to make that statement than to carry it into effect. The reformation should begin at the home of the parents.—Selected.

An interesting and amusing instance of the efficacy of the London-Paris telephone occurred the other day which is worth recording. The Salvation Army band were marching from the Royal Exchange playing the "Marseillaise" when an idea struck the men present in the telephone room. The windows and doors were thrown open and the attendant at the Paris end was asked if he could hear anything. The response (in French) was immediate, "Yes, I can hear a band playing the 'Marseillaise.'" That a band of music playing in the streets of London could be plainly distinguished in Paris, is, we think, a sufficiently striking marvel of the nineteenth century science.

Workmen will soon begin tearing down the old buildings on the lot recently purchased by the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, and the work of erecting the new home of this association will be rapidly pushed until the building is completed. The subscriptions now amount to $324,500, and the canvass will be pushed until the amount reaches $400,000. The John Crerar bequest of $50,000 has been paid to the association, and the Madison street front of the present building has been sold for an equivalent of $200,000. This property is to be delivered to the purchaser May 1, 1895. The new building and the lot upon which it will stand will represent an investment of not less than $1,500,000—by far the finest association property in the world.—Chicago Young Men's Era.

A bill to provide for a drunkard's asylum in Columbus passed the Ohio Senate. It is to test the so-called bichloride of gold cure. The Governor is authorized to appoint three trustees, who shall be instructed and empowered to contract with one company or one corporation to treat such persons addicted to the habitual use of intoxicating liquors. Such treatment shall be designed to destroy the craving for intoxicating liquors, and for no other purpose. One victim from each county can be selected by the representative. The treatment shall continue for three weeks unless the patient is cured sooner. Three thousand dollars is appropriated to test the experiment and the price for each patient shall not exceed $30. A record of all statements shall be kept and transmitted to the Governor and Legislature.

The rule of mob law in this country seems to be extending. The fact that so many persons are lynched is the most powerful indictment that could be drawn up against the modes of criminal procedure prevalent everywhere. There cannot be any question of the fact that the machinery of the law, as it is administered in the United States, is cumbersome and slow, and provides more safeguards than terrors for the criminal. A skillful criminal lawyer, if his client possesses any influence or standing whatever, can "wear out" any ordinary case, even of murder. The law fills his hand with trump cards. He can find plenty of tech-

We do not know why Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil is so useful in those simple but varied conditions which you know as "having a cough." We cannot explain it; we only know the fact from experience.

It may be due to the combination of tonic effects of cod-liver oil and the hypophosphites; it may be partly due to the glycerine. There are many effects in medical practice the causes of which appear to be plain, but how those causes produce those effects we do not know at all.

MASONRY A DANGEROUS INSTITUTION.

As has heretofore been observed, no secret society is any better than the obligations which it requires its members to assume. That every individual who joins the Masonic fraternity submits to its authority so far as to permit it to mutilate and murder him if he reveals its pagan secrets, is too well authenticated by competent testimony to be disputed; and that every member of the same fraternity is liable to be called upon at any time to mutilate and murder any other recalcitrant lodge brother, is equally well verified. These facts serve to determine, beyond a peradventure, the true character of Freemasonry.

"In the summer of 188—," relates a trustworthy informant, "I was employed by the firm of A and B, at ———, to aid in building a mill for another firm. At that time I had read of the abduction of Morgan, and also an exposition of the first seven degrees of Masonry. I knew that one of the firm by whom I had been engaged was a Freemason, but I was not aware that my partner, E. F., was also one. E. F. had lent a book on the Morgan affair to Mr. M., one of the firm who owned the mill, and was asking him what he thought of it."

Our informant was not then aware that the Masons had published a book to prove that Morgan was not murdered by their fraternity, except as it was here referred to by E. F. There is such a book, written by P. C. Huntington, which lies upon the desk as we write.

"E. F." continues our informant, "said to Mr. M., 'wasn't he' (Morgan) 'a smart man?' Mr. M.: 'You're right.' E. F.: 'Didn't he make it seem beyond a doubt that he had been taken to Canada (or was seen in Canada) or was being taken care of by his friends?' His exact words I do not remember. Then E. F. exclaimed, with an oath, 'They got rid of him all right. Such ——— fools deserve to die.' 'Yes,' replied Mr. M., 'that's what they do.'

"E. F. was not aware that I overheard the conversation, but he was speaking quite loudly, for the machinery was in motion near by; but when Mr. M. departed, I said to E. F.: 'Was that Morgan you were talking about the Morgan that the Masons murdered?' He stared at me with a look of anger and surprise, and said, with an oath, 'It's a lie! They try to make out that the Masons killed him.' I saw that he was in a rage; so I dropped the subject.

"Recently, when passing through a town, while traveling in a Western State, I was conversing with a Methodist preacher. He inquired whether a certain Free Methodist minister still continued his special meetings. He then told me that he had stopped one night with the Free Methodist brother, and that he" (the Methodist preacher) "had never received such abuse as he did from him" (the Free Methodist minister), "when the latter found out that the other was a three-degree Mason. I," continued our informant, "told him" (the Methodist preacher) "that Masonry is a Christless institution; and when he saw that I did not favor Masonry, he said: 'Well, I have taken three degrees, but I do not have anything more to do with them. But,' he exclaimed, 'I think that the (Free Methodist) preacher puts himself in a very dangerous position by talking publicly the way he does against Masonry. I think it very wrong for him to expose himself to danger. Why,' he continued, 'they are liable to get away with him for talking the way he does.' Perhaps he was aware that in the town of ——— a mob of Masons had threatened to lynch Mr. P., after he had exposed some Masonic crimes, not many years ago. He acknowledged the danger that he would be in if he were to publicly expose the Masonic work. Men who take these cut-throat oaths in the secret lodge do not think that they are meaningless."

"A few years ago," writes R. A. Cullor, of Unionville, Mo., "a young doctor deeply wronged a girl, and when her condition became known, he promised to relieve her, and that at a certain time he would bring another doctor to assist him. At the appointed time they placed her in a buggy, took her to the 'brush,' and there left her. When she was found, her body had been partly eaten by hogs. The doctor's case was tried at Kirksville, in an adjoining county, and the State's attorney, who was a keen, shrewd and straight man, was rendered powerless by a Masonic judge, bar and jury; so the doctor went clear, and the people had to submit.

"A man and his son, who were both Masons, fell out with a non-Masonic neighbor, and, taking shot-guns with them, went to his field, where he was cutting corn. Both emptied their guns into him, instantly killing him. This crime was proven by three witnesses, beyond a doubt; but at the trial the murderers were cleared, and again the people submitted. That was in Sullivan county, adjoining this—Putnam county."

Very much of similar import has frequently been printed in this paper from trustworthy sources, and very much more might be, and probably will be, added to the records of the sinful past. All these accusations, however, are met by the Masonic fraternity with silent scorn, which is a much more easy method than bringing forth refutations of them. By and by all these things will be righted by the Judge of all the earth, when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed. In the meantime it is our duty to proclaim these horrible secrets from the house-tops, the pulpit and the press, and warn the people against the secret abominations from which they emanate.

DIED IN PRISON.

"O'Sullivan, the ice-man," a prominent participant in the murder of Dr. Patrick H. Cronin, in this city, several years ago, died in prison, on Thursday last, at Joliet, Ill., where he was serving out a life-sentence for his crime.

The evidence against O'Sullivan, who with his victim, and several others now serving life-sentences in Joliet prison, were members of the secret and murderous Clan-na-Gael, was conclusive, principally as to circumstances leading to the consummation of the crime. Had the testimony been more definite, O'Sullivan and his co-partners in the bloody conspiracy would probably have suffered the death-penalty.

Justice was content to have the assassins of Dr. Cronin incarcerated for life. But other members of the Clan-na-Gael, with influential politicians outside of the society (presumptively in harmony with it), labored strenuously to obtain a new trial and possibly an acquittal for these State prisoners.

Disease and death, however, without waiting for a Supreme Court decree, have released one of the most prominent actors in the Cronin murder. The remarkable part of the story pertains to O'Sullivan's last days in the prison. That none of the convicted assassins had ever made an open confession of the details of the murder, although prisoners for life, was due undoubtedly to two circumstances: The hope of a new trial and release, and the fear of being killed by their Clan-na-Gael friends. But it was thought probable that O'Sullivan, while dying slowly in the prison, without a hope of recovery, would unburden himself and confess the crime in all its fullness, without fear or favor, and expose the names of all the parties engaged in the affair.

But the Clan-na-Gael, secret, implacable and persistent, manifested itself even in the prison cell. Says the Chicago Evening Post: "Many have observed, and it is said that they were mostly men of influence in politics, that the treatment accorded O'Sullivan, ever since his condition became a matter of public talk, and sympathy in favor of securing a pardon for him was generously circulated by designing individuals, has been of the most humane order; indeed, far beyond the ordinary etiquette of State prisons. The sick man's apartments could not have been more easy of approach to friends and relatives had they been in the Cook county hospital at Chicago." The prisoner's attorney: "Mr. Forrest's midnight visits to O'Sullivan are not yet explained to the full satisfaction of all concerned. The lawyer appears during a critical period of the convict's case to have been in instant touch with him. Did O'Sullivan fall ill and give signs of speedy dissolution, Mr. Forrest was at his bedside as soon as the first train could fetch him, and the co-operation of complaisant officials opened the doors of the penitentiary to him. It has been remarked that no man ever gained speedier entrance to the prison, at all hours of day and night, than Lawyer Forrest, when he was bound on a visit to the unfortunate iceman."

Even Mr. Dement, the Warden of the penitentiary (continues the Evening Post), "has volunteered the opinion that O'Sullivan is an innocent and hence much injured man. On what does the Warden base this judgment? Not on the official records, because these show the iceman to be a convicted murderer and conspirator who luckily escaped hanging to get a life-sentence. Then Warden Dement has some private information, gained outside of his official character? He ought to give it to the public, even though it should implicate some highly respectable members of the administration of which he is himself a confidential member."

This last allusion of the Evening Post has reference to the recent appointment, by President Harrison, of Dan Coughlin's brother, Dr. Jeremiah Coughlin, of New York, as United States consul to Bogota, South America. Dan Coughlin is one of the parties convicted of the murder of Dr. Cronin, and now serving out a life-sentence in Joliet prison. Dr. Jeremiah, it is alleged by the Post, is a Democrat, but later intelligence makes him a Henry George freetrader, yet he obtained a lucrative position under this administration for which it is probable he possesses no special aptitude. It seems to have been a piece of diplomacy equaling that which sent Patrick Egan as minister to Chili.

The non-murderous citizens of the United States will now understand why Patrick O'Sullivan died without making a confession. The hand of the secret Clan-na-Gael was on his throat, and the prison officials were its complaisant confederates.

THE DARK LANTERN PARTY.

A new weekly paper, bearing the name of the National Watchman, announces itself as the champion of the "People's party," under the auspices of the Congressional committee of that faction. There seems to be a very general misunderstanding among honest reformers as to the character and aims of this "third" party. No doubt thousands of the best men in the country have been misled by its captivating inducements, its specious statements of the political wrongs which it proposes to right, and the apparent fairness of its methods. It is to correct these deceptive representations that we call attention to a few important facts gathered from the above-named organ of this party.

One of the principal institutions especially favored by the "People's party" is the National Citizens' Alliance and Industrial Union, which is not yet two years old, and yet professes to be a model teacher of national economy and good government. As described by a writer in the paper before us, it is another Farmers' Alliance, and was incorporated at Topeka, Kan., as a national secret order, for which is claimed an unprecedented growth. The first Farmers' Alliance was especially designed to entrap the agriculturists of the country into political complications with which nature and education had not properly fitted them to contend. The main idea taught by the secret Alliance was that capitalists are the natural enemies of labor and lay awake nights to circumvent the farmers and beat them out of their just dues.

This field, however, was found to be too circumscribed. It included only (in name at least) "the hardy, horny-handed tillers of the soil," an element that was well enough in its way; but certain politicians, desiring a larger following than the Alliance promised, lent their influence to founding the National Citizens' Alliance.

Under this newer organization the people of towns and cities became eligible to work in harmony with the political dogmas of the Alliance; and if it differs from the Alliance in any respect, it is because its membership is less in the agricultural line. "It is not," says the writer above referred to, "restricted by declarations of non-partisanship. On the contrary, this order is avowedly devoted to pushing the needed industrial reforms through a new political agency. The members of this organization are thoroughly convinced that it is useless for the people to look to either of the old parties for any legislation in their behalf. There is, therefore, no ambiguity as to the specific mission of the National Citizens' Industrial Alliance. It is educational, with the understanding that such education is to shape itself into ballots immediately. It is a secret, ritualistic order, for the reason that its councils can thus be protected from invasion by enemies. Disputes, wrangles, or specious, insidious arguments can not gain entrance and neutralize its efforts." In other words, it is as tyrannical and exclusive as any other secret lodge, governing its members by oaths of allegiance to its jurisdiction as against uninitiated authorities.

Now, on the principle that one cannot touch pitch without defilement, we propose to show just how the People's party is in strict affiliation with the secret Farmers' Alliance and the secret National Citizens' Alliance, and this we shall do by printing extracts from its own organ:

Speaking of the campaign now at hand, it says: "There is a large aggregate of farmers, laborers, and mechanics who can, and should, contribute something to aid in this great work. If every member of the Alliance, Knights of Labor, and other industrial organizations would each contribute the price of a single hour's labor, the whole country could be made to blaze with reform lecturers and literature."

Referring to the Southern Alliance Congressmen, it says: "That all these gentlemen will be found inside the third party's lines in the near future, there is but little doubt."

"Col. L. L. Polk, President National Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union, is an out-and-out advocate of the People's party, and does not hesitate to say so on all occasions."

J. H. Turner, writing from Georgia, says: "Nine-tenths of the Alliance men are with us."

Mrs. Annie L. Diggs writes: "The most influential men and women in the reform ranks are members of the National Citizens' Industrial Alliance. There are organizers in nearly every State in the Union. A large number of delegates from this body sat in the conference at St. Louis."

From this testimony it would seem that the secret Alliances are to be a powerful factor in the People's party, which is designed to make the older parties tremble in their shoes, to make capital stand aghast, and create places for obscure but aspiring politicians. The platform of the party is that adopted at St. Louis, February 22, 1892 (when Miss Willard was snubbed by T. V. Powderly), and its present officers are H. E. Taubeneck, chairman; Robert Schilling, secretary; M. C. Rankin, treasurer. Its national convention, to nominate candidates for President and Vice-President, is to be held at Omaha, July 4th.

Representatives of the Farmers' Alliance in ten Southern States were in session at Birmingham, Ala., last week. Their deliberations have been kept secret, as far as possible, but it is announced that the conference decided to keep a third party in the field in the South and to issue a circular advising all members of the Alliance to vote for third party candidates.

MICAIAH, SON OF IMLAH.

When Ahab was asked if there was not another prophet—a prophet of the Lord—besides the four hundred prophets of Baal that had with one consent advised him to go up to battle at Ramoth-Gilead, he replied, "Yes, there is Micaiah, the son of Imlah, but I hate him, for he never prophesieth any good concerning me, but always evil."

Micaiah was not different from other faithful men of God. He must tell the truth, and there was no good to be said of Ahab. True, he was in a small minority, and intensely unpopular. It would have been far more pleasing to the flesh for him to have prophesied smooth things—to have simply concurred in the predictions of the prophets, as he was urged and probably tempted to do. But to have done so would have been to change sides in the great conflict. He would have become a friend to the world and an enemy of God, (James 4: 4). But had he done so, he would simply have followed the example of great multitudes of religious teachers in all nations and in all times.

Ahab was not different from other ungodly men. Of course, he did not like to be reproved for what others declared to be "sound statesmanship," nor did he like to hear the judgments of God pronounced against him. It is no wonder that he sent Micaiah to prison, to be fed "with the bread of affliction and the water of affliction."

Jeremiah had a similar experience. No man in that age was more bitterly hated or cruelly persecuted for righteousness' sake. True, he prophesied much good, in the remote future, of his people, but he severely denounced their iniquities and told them of the impending judgments of God. But of all who have witnessed for the truth on the earth, none was ever so cordially hated and persecuted as Jesus of Nazareth. Mark what he said to his unbelieving brethren: "The world cannot hate you, but me it hateth because I testify of it that the works thereof are evil." John 7: 7. To his disciples he said: "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love its own, but because ye are not of the world, and I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." John 15: 18, 19. He even told them that they should "be hated of all nations for my name's sake." Matt. 24: 9. Truly there is a great conflict, and "that which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination with God." Luke 16: 15.

Micaiah is a fair specimen of the faithful men who have stood for all of the truth in the midst of a gainsaying world. Everywhere they have been in a small minority and intensely unpopular. The world hates them for the same reason that Ahab hated Micaiah and the Jews hated Christ. It matters not how noble in purpose, or gentle in spirit (for none has in these respects equaled our Lord), the world hates them because they testify against it.

A marked illustration is seen in the great outcry in the secular and religious press against Dr. Parkhurst and Anthony Comstock, because they have exposed the works of darkness and shown how they are protected by the men whose duty it is to suppress them. It does not need to be proved that their methods have been the wisest; but whoever loves God and hates iniquity must honor them as brave and noble men, of whom "the world is not worthy." So, too, with the men who exposed and denounced slavery. The world hated them, and mobbed them, all over the North. In the South they set a price on their heads. So it is with the men who have testified against the lodge system. No men have been more cordially hated and maligned. If the lodge people have not killed them, it has been from providential rather than moral considerations that they have been restrained. Our times are not different from the ages of the past.

In conclusion, we note a few important axioms:

1. No man can be a popular preacher and be faithful to God, for "that which is highly esteemed among men is an abomination with God;" and "the friendship of the world is enmity towards God."

2. The world will hate us, just as it hated Christ, if we "testify that the works thereof are evil;" yet in no other way can we have favor with God and success in the work of the ministry.

3. The church and the ministry (with rare exceptions) are not persecuted to-day, but simply because they are conformed to the world; and because of this worldly conformity they are almost powerless to bless humanity.

4. There was nothing remarkable in the character of Ahab, or in the four hundred prophets of Baal. They find their counterparts in the rulers and the ministry of to-day. There are a few despised Micaiahs. Let God's people honor them and listen to their prophecies.

SUMMER MUSICAL INSTRUCTION.

Arrangements have been made in the Musical Department of the Bible Institute in Chicago, of which Mr. Moody is President, to have special music classes throughout the summer, which will meet the needs of ministers, teachers and others who during the vacation wish to take advantage of an opportunity to study music-reading and singing, either for their own development or with the idea of improving the music in their congregations. This term will begin on Tuesday, July 5, and will continue three months. Such students will also have advantage of the daily lectures on the Bible and instruction in methods of Christian work by specially selected teachers. The tent work, as carried on in the different sections of the city, will also give unusual facilities for observing the methods used for doing mission work among the masses. All instruction in music, as well as the lectures, is given free for the benefit of Christian young people. Inquiries relating to the study of music may be addressed to H. H. McGranahan, 80 W. Pearson St., Chicago, Ill.

with having elected Foster, they, on the other hand, admit that Foster was not truly elected, but simply counted in.

If intimidation, fraud and violence were not resorted to, and ballots stuffed, not one Negro of every fifty would support a Democrat for office in Louisiana outside of New Orleans.

I have always been loyal to and supported the Republican party; but since I have carefully considered the condition of the Republican and Democratic parties in Louisiana, and especially so since April 19 last, I have resolved to pledge allegiance to and support the Prohibition party henceforward. Both the grand old Republican party, "the party of liberty and equal rights," and the Democratic, Catholic, rebellious and seceding party of corruption, have become so distasteful and defective that I have firmly decided to withdraw from the Republican party.

The Tribune, since its existence began, has supported the Republican party conscientiously, hoping for some fairness and justice; but we have more prayerfully and thoughtfully considered the matter, and I am now convicted and converted truly to prohibition principles in every sense. The Tribune, in its next issue (D. V.), will come out with a brand-new suit of prohibition type. I most earnestly solicit subscriptions and aid to help me successfully pilot the Tribune over the river of opposition to prohibition success. I am sure, if friends will occasionally contribute to aid me in publishing the paper, much good can be done. It is an eight-page quarto monthly, at one dollar a year. I hope to make it a weekly.

Remember we have no prohibition paper in Louisiana. I earnestly solicit good prohibition writers, from various parts of the country, to write spicy and short articles, to be published in each issue. Address the Tribune, 518 Phillip street, New Orleans, La. If I can get some assistance in the publication of the paper we can make somewhat of a respectable showing in November.

I earnestly ask the prayers of all true reformers. Yours in the work,

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON,

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I had thought to have written you sooner. Time passes so swiftly when there is much to do. I can scarcely realize that a year has passed since our annual gathering.

I was more than ordinarily successful in securing subscriptions to our paper in New York City. Owing to the generosity of some friends, many Y. M. C. A. reading-rooms that have not received our paper heretofore will be supplied. Every Young Men's reading-room in the world should have it. In what better way can we reach young men than this? They go to these rooms to read. If they read reform literature, they are likely to be reformers; at least they will be forewarned, and to be "forewarned is to be fore-armed."

On Saturday and Sabbath I enjoyed the hospitality of Rev. A. S. Biddle, pastor of the Summit Avenue United Presbyterian church in Jersey City. I addressed his people on Sabbath morning and evening, presenting the anti-Christian character of the lodge to a full house in the evening. The church of which Bro. B. is pastor grew from a mission started by himself. They have a neat church edifice, free from debt. With the pastor several members of the congregation will read our paper hereafter. Speaking of our expositions, a gentleman remarked after the Sabbath evening service, that he had belonged to the Knights of Honor and had read the exposition published by Mr. Cook. He was surprised at its accuracy. He concluded that if they could publish the secrets of this so accurately they could any other. This accords with the Scripture, "there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed, and hid, that shall not be known." Matt. 10: 26. Oh, what a revelation there will be when we all stand before the great Judge!

W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

IN HIS PRESENCE.

In the secret of his presence,
From the pride and wrath of men,
I am safe from all the danger
While I touch his garment's hem;
He will teach me all the secrets
That are best for me to know.
He will raise the mystic curtain
Far enough to plainly show
Duty's pathway, where my footsteps
Must in true obedience go.

In the secret of his presence
I shall gain my needed rest,
Gathering daily strength to journey
In the way that seemeth best.
He will keep my drooping spirit,
And will cheer me when I faint;
He will hear with Godlike patience
My poor sad and weak complaint;
Then will bear me, freed forever,
From the cruel world's restraint.

—Mrs. M. A. Holt.

WHAT THE DEACON SAID.

"There are lots of people besides the children of Israel that need a Moses to say to them, 'It is he that giveth thee power to get wealth.' I've allers thought that was a grand thing in David, when he'd done such a job, getting together that pile of gold and silver for the temple, that he just turned to the Lord, and said, 'All these things come from thee, and of thine own have we given thee.' Most men would have wanted a little credit for the pains they'd taken themselves.

"Well, in those years I was telling you about, it was dreadful how I cheated the Lord out of his due. Once in a long while I paid a little to our church, but I didn't give a cent to anything else. Foreign Mission Sunday was my rheumatiz day, reg'lar, and I didn't get to church. Home Mission day was headache day with me allers, and I stayed away from meetin'. Bible Society day I'd generally a tech of neuralgy so't I didn't feel like going out, and I stayed home. Tract Society day I'd begin to be afraid I was going to be deaf, and oughn't to be out in the wind, so I stayed indoors; and on the Sunday for helping the Publication Society, like as not my corns were unusual troublesome, and I didn't feel able to get out.

"Wife wanted to take a religious paper once, but I wouldn't hear to't. Told her that was nonsense. I didn't believe any of the apostles ever took religious papers. The Bible was enough for them, and it ought to be for other folks.

"And yet, I never even thought I wasn't doin' right. I'd come into it sort o' gradual, and didn't think much about giving, anyhow, except as a sort o' losing business.

"Well, my little girl Nannie was about eight years old then, and I was dreadfully proud of her, for she was a smart little thing. One Sunday night we were sitting by the fire, and Nannie 'd been saying her catechism, and by and by she got a kind of quiet and sober, and all of a sudden she turned to me and says she, 'Pa, will we have to pay rent in heaven?'

"'What,' says I, lookin' down at her, kind of astonished like.

"'Will we have to pay rent in heaven?' says she, again.

"'Why, no,' says I. 'What made you think that?'

"Well, I couldn't get out of her for a time what she did mean. Nannie didn't know much about rent, anyway, for we'd never had to pay any, livin' in our own house. But at last I found out that she heard some men talking about me, and one of them said, 'Well, he's bound to be awful poor in the next world, I reckon. There ain't much of his riches laid up in heaven.' And as the only real poor folks that Nannie'd ever known were some poor folks down at the village that had been turned out of doors because they couldn't pay their rent, that's what put it into Nannie's head that maybe I'd have to pay rent in heaven.

"Well, wife went on and talked to Nannie, and explained to her about the 'many mansions' in our 'Father's house,' you know, but I didn't listen much. I was mad to think Seth Brown dared to talk about me in that way; right before Nannie, too.

"I fixed up some pretty bitter things to say to Seth the next time I met him, and I wasn't very sorry to see him the next day in his cart. I began at him right off. He listened to everything that I sputtered out, and then he said: 'Well, deacon, if you think the bank of heaven's got anything in it for you I'm glad of it; but I've never seen you making any deposits,' and then he drove off.

"Well, I walked over to my blackberry patch, and sat down and thought, and the more I thought the worse I felt. I was angry at first, but I got cooler, and I thought of Foreign Mission Sunday and the rheumatiz, and Home Mission Sunday and the headache, and Bible Society day and the neuralgy, and the tract day and the corns, till it just seemed to me I couldn't stand it any longer, and I knelt down there in the blackberry patch, and said, 'O Lord, I've been a stingy man if ever there was one. Help me to give myself, and whatever I've got back to thee.'

"And I believe he's helped me ever since. 'Twas pretty hard work at first, getting to giving. I did feel pretty sore over that first dollar I slipped into the collection plate, but I've learned better now; and I mean to keep on giving 'as unto the Lord,' till I go to that heaven where Nannie's been these twenty years."—Y. L., in Lutheran Little Missionary.

FOR MY SAKE.

These three little words are the touchstone of love. The application of this touchstone begins with infancy and ends only with the end of life. If that baby in its mother's arms could speak intellectually it would say: "It's for my sake that a mother's eye watches unsleeping through the midnight hours, and her arms hold me until they are ready to drop off for weariness." "For my sake" many a successful man acknowledges gratefully that his parents toiled and economized in order to buy books and pay college bills. "For my sake" provides the sheltering roof and the arm chair for dear old grandma and the fireside. Take these words out of language and you would rob home of its sweetness and human life of its noble aspirations.—Anonymous.

AUNT HITTY'S HYMNS.

Dear old Aunt Hitty! Every spring and fall she came to us for two or three weeks, and often between times, to rip up our old dresses, and clean, scour, mend and press them into shape for the stylish young dressmaker who transformed them into modern gowns, and who held us all in awe with her quick, incisive speech and imperative decisions. We never anticipated Miss Atwater's visits with pleasure, despite the fact that she turned us out stylish gowns, but Aunt Hitty's fortnight was a benediction that seemed to follow us through the season. No matter what difficult work was given her, however jagged the rents in childish garments, she never lost her look of peace and never fretted when a thing appeared impossible.

Her chief source of consolation seemed to be the beautiful hymns that were always in her heart and often on her lips. Her voice had once been famous for its sweetness, and even now in old age it was far from unpleasant, though weak and low. In the little back sewing room, always crowded to overflowing with work for some of the six lively children who ran through their clothes with astonishing swiftness, Aunt Hitty's low chair was always placed, and here we loved to come for a little visit with our friend. But whenever she was alone we could always hear the low sound of some sweet hymn softly sung, and we knew that her thoughts were far away with the Lord whom she loved and delighted to honor.

One day when I had been unusually tried with perplexing domestic affairs, I stole away to the little retreat for a talk with Aunt Hitty. As I opened the door the words of Wesley's beautiful hymn, "And can it be that I should gain," floated through the sweet May sunshine.

"I have come in to get a little comfort and peace," I said. "You always seem so happy, Aunt Hitty, and yet your friends have been taken from you, while mine are all with me. Of course you will tell me that the secret of it all is in trusting everything to the Lord. Now, I believe in that just as much as you do, and I can practice it when a great trial comes. But when Johnny breaks my best china bowl, or tears a barn-door rent in his new trousers, or Susie is disobedient, I do forget to look above for help."

"Yes, child," said Aunt Hitty, looking at me benignantly over the tops of her old spectacles, "I know all about that. You think that the Lord doesn't notice the little things. But he does know, and I believe that he orders, or at least allows, the small vexations that either disturb us or else become certain means of grace. Doubtless he will let them come until we show that we have learned his lesson. That is the way we treat our children, isn't it?"

"Yes, surely; but I forget in the haste of the moment. How did you learn to remember?"

"I think the hymns have helped me as much as any one thing. When I was a young girl I sung in the choir, and as I learned easily, the words of nearly all the hymns in our old-fashioned choir-book became familiar to me. I sung them in those days with very little comprehension of their real meaning. People used to say that I sung with expression; but if I did touch the hearts of others, mine was unmoved. The years went on, and you know my story. The husband of my youth was first taken; then, one by one, the children; and at last, when I seemed to need it most, the old home was found to be legally the property of another. In all the hard years I did little singing. My heart made no music, and I cared not to use the voice that God had given me to help others. But one day I read something about 'songs in the night,' and it suddenly came to me that I might sing my troubles out to God and sing his love into all the trials of my life. It was hard work at first. In the old days when I began 'My soul, be on thy guard,' or 'Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood,' there was always a strong tenor voice to join in with me, and after that voice was silenced here to sing with new beauty in the heavenly choir, I missed it sorely. But little by little I learned to rush to a hymn when harsh words rose to my lips or when I was tempted to complain of God's dealings with me. It was a great trial to go out from my home and sew in other folks' houses, but I found a hymn that always makes that trouble easy. It is the one that I was singing when you came in, though you may not have noticed it. I don't know why the ministers so seldom give it out in church; for it has the whole of our religion in it, and it never fails to comfort me:

"And can it be that I should gain
An interest in his precious blood?
Died he for me who caused his pain,
For me who him to death pursued?"

"And the second verse,

So free, so infinite his grace," makes me feel so loving towards him, to think of all he gave up for us, that any work, even going out to sew for other people when you are old and tired and want to stay at home and be alone and quiet, seems easy in the light of his sacrifice and love. And the last verse fills one with comfort and a sweet sense of triumph:

"No condemnation now I dread;
Jesus, with all in him, is mine,"

That blessed hymn never fails me; and Aunt Hitty wiped away some tears, though her face shone with God's own peace.

"What else, Aunt Hitty?"

"There's 'Pilgrim halting staff in hand,' especially the verse,

"Though the way be dark and lone, and another blessed one, 'I'm but a stranger here,' and 'In heavenly love abiding.' When I used to sing that in church, child, I had no more sense of its true meaning and blessedness than a baby, but now every word of it is precious. You may not believe it, but I am fond of nice things to wear, and sometimes when my old dress looks pretty shabby and I long for the rich silks and laces that seem to belong to old women and help to make them look well, I comfort myself with a verse of
Look above!"

"Jesus, thy blood and righteousness
My beauty are, my glorious dress."

"Then there is 'Quiet, Lord, my froward heart,' and 'Father, whate'er of earthly bliss,' and so many others.

"My hardest times come when I go home at night and there is no one to meet me or to ask how the day has gone, no light and no fire to welcome me, and all so still and lonely. But I stay myself with songs of heaven, 'For thee, O dear, dear country,' and 'Sweet fields beyond the swelling flood,' or 'On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,' and it seems to bring me very near to my lost ones and to the time when I shall enter in to go no more out forever."

"Aunt Hitty, I am going to try your plan. I am sure to forget it at first, but in time it may come to me easily."

"It will comfort you much, child, to sing of Jesus. Hymns are only Scripture put in shape to sing, and they are really God's message to us. Your lot in life looks easy to me, but no doubt you have your trials and need help as much as I do. And you are sure to get comfort and guidance if you sing 'with the spirit and with the understanding also!'"—American Messenger.

THE WEDDING GARMENT.

A pleasing illustration of an old Jewish custom implied in one of our Lord's parables is given in the book of the Marchioness of Dufferin, entitled "Our Viceregal Life in India." The parable is that of the marriage feast, (Matt. 22,) where one of the guests was turned out just as the feast was going to begin, because "he had not on a wedding garment," although nothing had been previously said about the need or the provision of such a garment. The common explanation is that such garments were provided by the giver of the feast. This is confirmed by Lady Dufferin's account of a native dinner party. "Our first proceeding was to dress ourselves properly for this festival, and as soon as we got to the house we were taken into a dressing-room, were divested of our gowns, and were draped in saris . . . About ten o'clock we took off our native costumes and returned home, our hostess insisting upon presenting each of us with the saris we had worn."

GOD PROVIDETH FOR THE MORROW.

Lo! The lilies of the field,
How their leaves instruction yield!
Hark to Nature's lesson given
By the blessed birds of heaven.
Every bush and tufted tree
Warbles sweet philosophy,—
"Mortal, fly from doubt and sorrow;
God provideth for the morrow!"

"Say, with richer crimson glows
The kingly mantle than the rose?
Say, have kings more wholesome fare
Than we poor citizens of air?
Barns nor hoarded grain have we,
Yet we carol merrily,—
Mortal, fly from doubt and sorrow;
God provideth for the morrow!"

"One there lives whose guardian eye
Guides our humble destiny;
One there lives, who, Lord of all,
Keeps our feathers lest they fall;
Pass we blithely, then, the time,
Fearless of the snare and lime,
Free from doubt and faithless sorrow;
God provideth for the morrow!"

—Reginald Heber.

TEMPERANCE.

DRUNKENNESS IN ENGLAND.

Dr. Dawson Burns, of the United Kingdom Alliance, has just published his annual report of the "Drink Bill" for 1891 of Great Britain and Ireland. From this it appears that the total amount spent on intoxicating drinks in the United Kingdom last year was one hundred and forty-one millions and a quarter sterling. This sum means an expenditure of £3 15s per head, reckoning women and children as well as men; or £18 15s. for each family of five persons. Comparing the amounts with those of a year ago, there is an increase amounting to a million and three-quarters. In foreign and colonial spirits there was a decline; but this was largely over-balanced by the increase in home-made spirits and in beer. In the two latter classes the rise was respectively £1,333,778 and £1,129,869. As the decrease was in the more expensive drinks and the rise in the cheaper, it is tolerably clear that working-class drinking has increased during the year. The only pleasant feature is that the growth has not been quite so great as in 1889-90, from which Dr. Burns optimistically infers that "the tendency to increase will now give place to a tendency in the opposite direction." It appears that Scotland and Ireland, in comparison with their population, consume more spirits than England and Wales, but when it comes to beer, England is by far the greatest drinker of the three. In the twelve months she swallowed very nearly £80,000,000 worth of it, a sum which would very nearly pay for the army, the navy, and the civil service twice over.

SIX BOYS.

We all went to school together in the old brick academy in a country town, years ago.

We grew up, separated, went our different life roads.

But I have been meeting my old schoolmates lately, and it is strange how the whisky curse has divided the six.

I stood, not long ago, on the platform of the chapel in a penitentiary to talk to the prisoners. On the front bench, in spite of his stripes, his close-cut hair, his prison pallor, I recognized one of the six. We used to occupy the same desk at school.

He was a prisoner for life, and was drunk when the murder was committed.

Picking up the paper one morning I noticed that a tramp had been pushed from a train on one of our railroads, had fallen under the wheels, his right arm crushed, and that the surgeon at the hospital had amputated it at the shoulder. Recognizing the name I went down to the hospital and found in one of the wards a miserable one-armed tramp—my old schoolmate.

I tried to talk to him, to pray with him; he would not listen. I telegraphed his brother, a well-to-do farmer. He came on to the city, took the poor fellow home with him, gave him a good suit of clothes, and said to him, "Brother, as long as you live you can have a good home here with me. You shall not want for anything, but you must not go to the city."

He stayed there three days and then wandered off. He is to-day a miserable, one-armed bloated wretch, a whisky tramp, drifting toward a drunkard's grave.

There was another, a bright boy full of life, the wit of the school, sunshiny, bubbling over with laughter. He grew up to be a wild, drinking young man, but later on I learned that he had reformed and was in the temperance work.

I heard him one night, and went on the platform to speak to him.

I said, "Are you a Christian?"

"No," he said, "but I'm not afraid of whisky."

A few months afterward I heard of his conversion.

Again I met him, an earnest, active, intelligent Christian worker.

I said in my heart, "My friend is safe."

Alas! No man is safe in a land where whisky is sold.

My friend had been working as an evangelist in the West. He had some money, and he started home to visit his old father and mother. He was within twenty miles of home, on the train. He was taken sick. A gentleman in the seat with him said, "Are you sick?"

"Yes," my friend answered.

"I am taken that way myself, sometimes, and I always carry a little good whisky with me. Suppose you take a little; it will do you good."

"No," said my friend; "I used to drink, and will never touch the stuff again."

The man got up, went to the water cooler, poured a little whisky in the glass and brought it to my friend. He held it under his nose and said, "Don't be a fool; drink it."

The old devil in my friend jumped at the bait. Very eagerly he swallowed the poison.

It was like putting a spark in an open keg of powder.

At the next station my friend got off, eight miles from home. He stayed there in a saloon until, crazed by delirium tremens, the saloon-keeper sent him to a hotel.

He was put in a second-story corner room and served with all the whisky he wanted, for he still had some money. One day the delirium devils chased him to the window, out of the window headlong down on the sharp palings.

They found him there, bruised, bleeding—dead.

Within eight miles of home!

At the next station his old father had waited every day for his boy.

He said, "He will come to-morrow."

And to-morrow came at last, and a rough wooden box was pushed out on the platform.

The father saw his son's name on it. He had the box opened, and he found all that remained of his only son. So three of my old schoolmates went the downward way of death.

One in the penitentiary for life; cause, whisky.

One a wanderer on the face of the earth; cause, whisky.

One gone to a drunkard's eternity; cause, whisky.

Now for the brighter side.

Not long ago I looked down from the gallery of the House of Representatives upon a session of Congress.

At his desk I noticed a man whose name is known all over the Union.

The breath of suspicion has never touched him. He is without fear, without reproach—an active Christian worker.

Another one of my schoolmates.

One Sabbath morning I entered a church in a little Virginia town and had the pleasure of hearing another one of my old schoolmates preach.

The sixth one of the boys is myself, a sinner saved by grace, living in the sunshine, trying to make the world brighter, happier, better.

Here are the other three:

One an honored Congressman; cause, cold water.

One a minister of the Gospel; cause, cold water.

One a worker for the right.—A. W. Hawes, in the Voice.

LADY SOMERSET'S VIEWS.

In comparing the liquor evil in America and England, Lady Somerset says: "Among American men there is much more intoxication. Among the women there is wonderfully less. The American women, except those who have abandoned themselves to vicious lives, will not go into saloons. In England nothing is thought of it. There the saloons are crowded at all hours with women. They drink infinitely more than the women of this country. I suppose the vice among women in England is in a measure hereditary. American men are more given to intoxication than Englishmen, and I think one reason for this is that in England we enforce the laws better than you do over here. Your Sunday-closing laws are practically dead letters, while in London and throughout England prompt punishment is awarded those who fail in obedience. I think permitting party politics to interfere with your police departments is entirely wrong. Over there the officers retain their places, if worthy, no matter what party may be in power. You cannot hope for efficiency while every change in administration may affect the standing of every officer."

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

An anti-saloon league has recently been formed in Boston, mainly after the pattern furnished by the Rev. Dr. A. J. Kynett, of Philadelphia, having for its aim the destruction of the saloons by a vigorous enforcement of existing laws and by the use of the ballot to secure such other legislation as may be necessary, to accomplish the end in view. The organization was formed by clergymen and laymen throughout the State, who propose to unite in opposition to the saloon all voters of the commonwealth of whatever political party who can be reached through the instrumentality of the churches. The Rev. Dr. D. O. Mears was elected president, and is supported by a strong body of vice-presidents. The constitution of the league states that any voter may become a member by signing the following pledge:

"That we owe primary allegiance to God and humanity, to our country and commonwealth, and we will make our political action conform to these higher claims.

"That we will always aim to give our vote, in caucuses and at the polls, for candidates to serve as officers in the commonwealth who are known to be, and who have avowed themselves to be, opponents of the saloon.

"That, reserving the right to entertain individually our political preferences, we hold ourselves free from the domination of the liquor power in our exercise of the elective franchise."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. "A purpose true."—v. 8. "Daniel purposed in his heart," and "as a man purposed in his heart so is he." Here we have the groundwork of character;—the steady determination to abide by his principles at all hazards. It involved separation, singularity, and perhaps being called a "crank," or whatever synonymous expression they used in those days for a man whose conscience led him to pursue an opposite course from people around him. But none of these things moved Daniel in his resolution not to defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, or with the wine which he drank. It was the custom to throw a small part of the viands and wine upon the earth in the beginning of an entertainment, as an offering to the gods. This was the pagan "grace" before meals, by which all the food on the table was consecrated to their heathen deities. Daniel could not, as a conscientious Jew, partake of such food. Even Christians, centuries later, were commanded to abstain from things offered to idols. And yet Paul expressly states that the idol is nothing (1 Cor. 8: 4), and so, logically, that is nothing which is offered to it in sacrifice. The harm was not in the eating of such things in itself, but in the example and the associations. The ground is often taken that dancing is not in itself a sin, and is all right in private home gatherings. But it comes under the same rule:—it is a thing offered to idols, the idols of fashion and lust. So of card-playing and theatre-going; all their associations are with the god of this world, and the Christian cannot sit without sin at the devil's table.

2. Put to the proof.—vs. 9-16. The strongest principles may accompany the most gentle, modest and winning manners. Evidently it was so in Daniel's case; else the prince of the eunuchs would not have regarded him with such "favor and tender love." A good cause is often injured by brusque, unpleasant ways; and unnecessary bluntness of speech. This is often a peculiar temptation in reform work, but Daniel's example shows us that courage and courtesy are perfectly compatible. Melzar, though at first unwilling—for none had more occasion to fear the capricious cruelty of an Eastern despot than those who stood nearest his person—finally consented to test Daniel and his companions for ten days, by giving them a purely vegetarian diet, with water for their only drink. Spirituous drinks and high living are even now often prescribed by physicians who ought to know better; and it is not strange that a similar view should prevail among the heathen nations, or the Jews who had copied their luxuries and vices. But Daniel had been taught of God a more excellent way. He believed that he and his companions would be healthier, with firmer muscles, fairer skins, and clearer brains, if they drank cold water,—God's bountiful provision for man and beast—instead of the wines on the king's table which Esther 1: 10 shows plainly to have been alcoholic. At the end of ten days, even Melzar stood convinced that they were physically superior to the others who ate the prescribed diet. Wisdom will always be justified of her children. The right course is ever the safe course. How many have violated their principles because the wine-cup was pressed upon them by the hand of fashion and beauty. Yet Daniel refused one of the highest marks of royal favor. "He would not defile himself." Note the expression. Had he been a young man in 1892, would he, have defiled himself with tobacco? or would he with "a purpose true," have used the whole force of his example and influence against the weed, and strengthened his young companions to do the same? Snares and pitfalls beset the path of the young, especially in great cities, and Babylon, we must remember, was then the world's metropolis, where all vice and wickedness centered. This temptation which met Daniel at the outset of his career was probably only one out of many, but it is recorded here, partly, no doubt, to show us how much depends on taking a firm stand at the beginning. The way in which he conquered this first temptation set his whole life to the key-note of victory. If a boy or girl says "No" to the first temptation, it is much easier to say "No" to the second. If all our boys were Daniels, the rum-seller would lose his prey every time, and have to give up his business.

3. The reward of a temperate life.—vs. 17-21. Daniel and his companions had clear heads. They did not muddle their brains with alcoholic drinks, nor ruin their digestive powers with unwholesome dainties. Tobacco-using boys never graduate at the head of their class; intellectual prizes of life are not won by men fond of the wine-cup and the pleasures of the table. "And Daniel continued even to the first year of King Cyrus;" that is, from the reign of Nebuchadnezzar through that of four intervening monarchs, till the final overthrow of Babylon, and the end of the Jewish captivity. Boys who would live long, useful, honored lives, like Daniel, must learn to say "No" to the first temptation to drink, smoke, or in any other way gratify a depraved physical appetite.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—At Muskegon, Mich., a handsome new church was recently dedicated with simple ceremonies. The history of the enterprise is rather remarkable. A little over a year ago, the pastor, J. C. Jacob, began to agitate the building of the structure, but meeting only with rebuffs, he decided to go ahead with the construction. Accordingly he begged the lumber from prominent firms of the city, and with his own hands laid the foundations and erected the superstructure. Six days out of seven for nearly six months past he has toiled early and late on the church. With his own hands he has painted the entire building, and his own ingenuity is responsible for the beautiful interior finish of butternut, sycamore and black ash. Though the property as it stands is worth nearly $5,000, the cash outlay by the church has been less than $1,000.

—The following anniversary exercises will be held at Philadelphia:

Baptist Congress.—Commencing Thursday evening, May 19, and closing on Saturday evening, May 21, all the sessions being held in the First Baptist church, northwest corner of Broad and Arch streets.

Women's Baptist Home Mission Society.—A general meeting will be held on Sunday afternoon, May 22, at 2 o'clock; and the anniversary of the society on Monday, the 23d, all the meetings in Grace Temple, Broad and Berks streets.

American Baptist Historical Society.—The annual meeting will be held on Monday evening, May 23, in the First Baptist church.

American Baptist Missionary Union.—The anniversary and centenary of missions will begin on Tuesday morning, May 24, and continue through Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. The day sessions in the First Baptist church. Evening session in Grace Temple. Woman's Baptist Foreign Mission Society, Thursday afternoon, May 26, from 1 to 3 o'clock, in Tabernacle Baptist church, Chestnut street, above Eighteenth.

American Baptist Mission Society.—Commencing on Friday morning, May 27, and closing at noon on May 28. Day sessions in the First Baptist church; evening sessions in Grace Temple.

American Baptist Home Education Society.—Commencing Saturday afternoon, May 28, and continuing in the evening. Afternoon session in the First Baptist church; evening session in Grace Temple. Anniversary sermons Sunday, May 29, in Grace Temple. Morning, Missionary Union; afternoon, Home Mission Society; evening, Publication Society.

American Baptist Publication Society.—Anniversary Monday, May 30. Morning and afternoon sessions in the First Baptist church. Evening sessions closing the anniversaries in Grace Temple.

Baptist Young People's Union of America, by arrangement with the several societies, will hold conferences from 8 to 10 o'clock A. M. in the First Baptist church on each of the following named days: Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Monday.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Evangelists McCord and Lewis are holding meetings in the First church, Springfield, Ill., Rev. C. C. Otis, pastor. For several weeks this church has been planning and praying for a genuine revival of religion. Special sermons have been preached by the pastor, cottage meetings have been held, and a general interest awakened. The work has opened with promise.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Methodist Episcopal conference now in session at Omaha will continue to sit during the month. It is the legislative body of that church, meets every four years, is made up of ministers and laymen, delegates from more than a hundred annual conferences. To it the bishops are accountable and by it are elected, their term of office being for life. Two, three or four bishops may be elected, possibly none. Five were elected in 1888. The question of placing some of the older ones on the retired list will be raised; also the question of making episcopal districts. Now each bishop goes the entire round of all the conferences. By the plan proposed each will have a district. We understand the question of ministerial limit will be again raised. First it was two years, then three, then five. Some now want it removed entirely. The admission of women to the conference will be acted upon.

PREBYTERIAN.

—The one hundred and fourth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America will meet in the First Presbyterian church, Portland, Oregon, on Thursday, May 19.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—The Rev. James F. Spaulding, who was rector of an Episcopal church a few months ago, came to the conclusion that there was too much freedom and not enough authority in his denomination. He felt sure things were much better in the Catholic church, so he "went over." He was disappointed, and now he is back again in the Episcopal church.

ROMAN CATHOLICS.

—Three hundred Roman Catholic priests, besides "sisters," have gone into Zululand, where but twelve American missionaries were occupying the ground. Such is Rome in power to command service.

SALVATION ARMY.

—An illustration of the work accomplished by the Salvation Army in France is found in the following incident: At Lyons there are three corps, mostly converted Catholics, and the woman soldier who carried the hand-bag of Mrs. Booth-Clibborn through the street to the station was the one who formerly carried the red flag of revolution at the head of riotous mobs or anarchists demonstrations.

—A full-uniformed band of Salvation Army soldiers were allowed to conduct a meeting recently in the Old South Church, Boston. This creates much comment.

UNITED PREBYTERIAN.

—A petition to organize another new congregation, the fourth, in the city of Chicago, has been granted. The location is on the West Side, where Rev. J. A. Collins has been laboring.

—The Thirty-Fourth General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of North America will meet in the Second church, Allegheny, Pa., on Wednesday May 25, 1892, at 7:45 P. M. The opening sermon will be preached by the moderator's alternate, Rev. W. W. White, Ph. D.

—Elder William Getty, well known in the church, having for some time been treasurer of the Foreign Mission Board and having contributed many articles for the church papers, died April 20, at his home in Kansas City. His age was 68 years and 3 months.

—It is understood that Rev. J. A. Duff intends to accept the call from the congregation of Englewood, Chicago, and will begin his labors there in the near future.

UNITED BROTHERS.

—The minutes of the Liberal Pennsylvania U. B. Conference show 1,498 accessions. On the four fields where Evangelist Little labored they report 351 of the above number. Their column of "withdrawn," etc. foots up to 1,028. The loss by death and removals puts the number of lost to 1,373, leaving an increase of but 125.—Christian Conservator.

—The volume of business done by the publishing house for the year largely exceeded that of any previous year. The cash receipts, exclusive of loans, reached $201,675.27—an increase of $32,445.38 over the preceding year. This increase was chiefly in the book department. In this branch of the business the cash sales amounted to $102,204.15—a growth of $27,956.07 over the former year. The net profits of the house were $17,279.17. Necessary and valuable improvements were made, and the facilities of the house were found to be never better than at present.

Y. W. C. A.

—This year's conference of Young Women's Christian Associations, held not long ago in London, developed from a national into an international affair. Delegates were present from America, France, Norway, Sweden and Spain. The extension of these organizations for the material betterment and the spiritual uplifting of young women throughout the whole world, is a thing of the near future. The state of the work in London shows that there are forty-three institutes and homes, besides one hundred smaller branches in the metropolis. There are 2,000 young women students attending evening classes at fifteen institutes, and some have passed the Society of Arts examinations. The work is largely sustained by the voluntary service of Christian ladies.

IS SPRING A FAILURE?

Many People Feel That It Is,

If It Is Not So Joyous as It Once Was, Is It Not Your Own Fault?

You wrote a composition when you were a child in school beginning, "Spring is the pleasantest season of the year," and so it was then. There was every reason why it should be pleasant to you. You were in good health. "Life beat high" within you. You had sentiment, ambitions, happiness. The winter had passed, the flowers were blooming, the birds were singing. Certainly spring was to you then "the pleasantest season of the year."

But how is it now? Do you feel the same joyousness, happiness, and anticipation that you did then? Are you filled with hope; or possibly are you weak, languid, despondent, depressed? Perhaps your head aches, you feel tired, and there is a lack of all interest and joy in life where once in the springtime all was anticipation and happiness.

Do you know the reason for this change? It is because you are not well, because your vitality is not so great as when in your teens. Do you know what you need? Something to help you; something which will prove "a friend in need;" something that will restore you and place where you were in youth, which will make life pleasant and happy, and which will again make "spring the pleasantest season of the year." Do you know what will do this? We will not attempt to tell you, but will show you what others have done, and which you may do if you will follow the same wise course pursued by them. Read their words:

Dr. A. C. Clark, a well-known New York physician, says: "I have never known a case of spring debility, spring fever, or any of the troubles which arise during this season which has not been promptly and permanently cured by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. Its power at this time of year is wonderful. I have seen woman, run down by care and overwork; men whose vitality was exhausted, and even puny children restored to perfect health through its use."

Mrs. M. M. Simonson of Buckley, Mo., says: "My daughter, who was once the perfection of health and happiness, was for years afflicted with kidney and liver disease, complicated with scrofula, the hip joint being affected. She became so bad that the doctors wanted to unjoint the hip. I would not consent to it, and began administering a remedy which I had heard much about, and I am happy to say she is now cured, well and healthy, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure."

Mr. B. E. Mayo of Rouse's Point, N. Y., says: "Two years ago I had terrible boils on my face, and my blood was fearfully out of order. I began the use of Warner's Safe Cure; the boils left as if by magic, and I have never since been troubled with them."

If you are depressed, weak, run down by the influences of the season, follow the advice above given. You will certainly find it profitable and valuable. The renewing power of this great cure is beyond estimation. It stands as it deserves to stand, at the head of modern discoveries for the cure of sickness and the renewal of life.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The saloon-regulating ordinance was defeated in the council.

Robert D. Fowler, a heavy packer of this city, died at Liverpool, Eng., last week.

The iron-workers on the manufactures' building, at Jackson Park, went on a strike for higher wages.

The International Brotherhood of Boiler-makers inaugurated a great strike.

A contractor named Conway narrowly escaped death by the explosion of a man-hole on La Salle street.

Chauncey M. Depew, W. K. Vanderbilt, and party spent a few hours in Chicago, and visited the World's Fair grounds.

Theosophists, or wise men of the East so claiming, were in Chicago on a recent Sunday. There were about 120 delegates present, representing some 2,000 disciples of Blavatsky. They claim to have the wisdom of God from ancient times. The centre of their operations is in India at present. There are over fifty centres or societies in the United States. It seems to be an amalgamation composed three-fourths of materialism and one-fourth of spiritualism. But whatsoever it may be, it has none of the humility of Christianity.

An effort was made in the United States Court, last week, to have the two Chinamen, Ing Kain Wing and Ing Hong Wing, who are being taken to San Francisco to be sent to China by order of the United States court at Buffalo, set at liberty. The proceeding was a hearing on a writ of habeas corpus sworn out on the ground that the petitioners were of the noble Chinese family of Ing, and merchants, not laborers, and, therefore, not included under the exclusion act. After hearing the arguments the court denied the petition and the two Ings must take passage for their native land.

COUNTRY.

Rev. H. H. Hinman, of Oberlin, Ohio, has been appointed financial agent of Berea College, Berea, Ky.

Dispatches to the daily press report the death, May 1, of Rev. M. L. Weakley of Berlin, Pa., said to be the oldest Methodist minister in the United States. He was ninety-five years old, and until attacked by the illness from which he died, had never known a sick day in his life.

President Harrison on Thursday signed the Chinese Exclusion bill recently passed by Congress.

Henry H. Waterman, of Milton, Wis., secured judgment for $25,000 Tuesday against the Chicago and Alton Railway for injuries received in a wreck.

Passenger and a freight train on the Panhandle Railway collided at Scio, Ohio, and severely injured several people.

The twenty-first quadrennial conference of the Methodist Episcopal church began at Omaha, Neb., Tuesday morning. Bishop Bowman called the meeting to order in Boyd's Theatre. Thousands of visitors in addition to the 500 regular delegates were present.

Engineer Jones, of the Central Hudson Railway, was burned to death in a wreck at Churchville, N. Y., Monday morning.

Suits against the sugar trust to prevent closing deals for individual refiners at Philadelphia were begun by the government Monday.

Engineer John Murray, Fireman James Bowen, and Brakeman Elmer Brown, of the Louisville, New Albany, and Chicago Railway, went through a bridge at Otis, Ind., Monday morning, and were drowned. The train of engine and eight cars was demolished.

Seven passengers were killed and scores injured in a wreck of the Colorado vestibule, on the Santa Fe, near Dumas, Mo.

All the great central region has been swept by flood, and much damage is reported from cities in this State, Iowa, and Kansas.

Bishop Thoburn's report on mission work in India at the Methodist conference in Omaha shows that 30,000 members have been added to the church in the past four years.

In Iowa during the past week the heavy rains have prevented farm work. In Kansas the condition is more favorable.

The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst was the chief witness against the keeper of a disorderly house who was convicted in New York Friday.

Dr. Lewis Swift, of Rochester, N. Y., has been awarded the comet medal given by the Astronomical Society of the Pacific coast.

Lamperti, the famous singing master, died Friday at Milan. Among his pupils were Mme. Albani, Miss Van Zandt, and Capanini.

All friends are invited, and for those who notify us of their coming, entertainment will be provided.

CHAS. A. BLANCHARD, Pres.

SECOND, a packet of BIRD'S BLANC-MANGE POWDER, enough to make three large Blanc-manges a pint each. The Blanc-manges are most agreeably flavoured and are highly nutritious, and can be produced in a variety of tints, forming a charming dessert dish, and contributing to the decoration of the table.

THIRD, a tin of BIRD'S CONCENTRATED EGG POWDER, a complete substitute for eggs in puddings, cakes, buns, griddle cakes, and all similar kinds of English and American confectionery, to which it imparts the lightness, richness, appearance and flavour of new-laid eggs. This tin is equal to 30 new-laid eggs.

FOURTH, a canister of BIRD'S GIANT BAKING POWDER, claimed to be the strongest and best article of the kind in the whole world. It will go twice as far as ordinary baking powder, and is guaranteed free from alum, ammonia, or any impurity whatsoever, all the ingredients being of the highest quality. N.B.—Messrs. BIRD were the original inventors of Baking Powder in 1842, and the secret of their process has never yet been discovered.

For a fifth article the box contains a copy of "Sweet Dishes," a booklet full of practical hints and numerous original recipes of tasty dishes for the dinner and supper table. The recipes are all new to American cookery, and are suited to American measures, methods and cooking utensils.

The whole of the above are enclosed in a tastefully finished artistic Cartoon Box, an excellent specimen of English fancy ware. When the samples are taken out it will make a very pretty handkerchief, glove, or cotton box.

This Dollar Sample Box is intended solely to introduce Bird's English Specialties into American Homes, and cannot be purchased retail, and Messrs. BIRD will not be able to supply more than one sample box to each household. Remember the object in view is to distribute samples of the Special Domestic Luxuries for which Bird's name stands first and foremost as a guarantee for Purity and High Quality.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CANNING MEATS.

If the meats are to be boiled, as is done with corned beef, the cooked meat is put in the tins as it is taken from the boiler and the tins are immediately sealed up. They are then put in a boiler and boiled for one hour, when the long-continued heat has destroyed all the germs of decomposition, and the meat is preserved without any change for two years. Any person may put up meat for domestic use in this way, as there is no patent on the process. Roasted meats are treated in the same way, being put in the tins as hot as possible, and the tins are dipped in boiling water before being filled.—New York Times.

HEAD-CHEESE.

The head of the pig must be carefully cleaned, as are also the feet and ears, which are then all boiled in salted water enough to barely cover them until they drop from the bone. The bones are taken out and the meat remaining is chopped fine and weighed. To every seven pounds of meat a teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of black pepper, a saltspoonful of cayenne pepper, half a teaspoonful of mace and one onion minced fine are added. These ingredients are mixed with the meat while it is hot. The mixture is put in a press, and when cold forms, in slices, an acceptable dish for the tea-table. This is the old Christmas brawn.—St. Louis Republican.

MOST WHOLESOME WAY TO COOK EGGS.

Butter a tin or plate, and break in your eggs; set in a steamer; place over a kettle of boiling water, and steam until the whites are thoroughly cooked. They are very ornamental broken into patty tins, as they keep their form better. The whites, when cooked in this manner, are tender and light, and not tough and leathery, as by any other process, and can be eaten by invalids with impunity, and are certainly very much richer. Try it, and I am sure you'll want to go into the poultry business, in order to have plenty of fresh eggs.—Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph.

CANDIED ORANGE PEEL.

If a quantity of oranges are not used at one time, the peel can be thrown in a jar of saltwater (a handful of the former to gallon of the latter) and kept for weeks. If salted, soak the rinds over night in clear water. Wipe dry and boil in clear water two hours or until they can be easily pierced with a broom straw. Drain, and shred finely. Allow a cupful of granulated sugar and half a cupful of water for each heaping cupful of peels; make a syrup, throw in the peels and simmer gently until the syrup is nearly absorbed. Then pour out on plates and dry in a warm oven. Keep in a jar.—New York Observer.

USEFUL HINTS.

Oil door latches and locks occasionally. Nails dipped into soap will drive easily into hard wood.

To keep off flies paint walls or rub picture frames with laurel oil.

Morocco leather may be restored with the varnish of white of an egg.

A cement made of sand and white lead paint will stop leaks in the roof.

Apply ammonia when acid has taken the color from cloth, then chloroform.

You can sweep a rag carpet much cleaner by sweeping across the breadths.

Sealing wax is made of two parts of beeswax and one of resin melted together.

To remove paint from glass, just rub it with a wet penny or a large silver piece.

The juice of a lemon taken in the early morning will often prevent a bilious attack.

About a pound of wood soot to a gallon of boiling water makes a very fine fertilizer of plants.

To clean ermine and all white fur, rub with corn meal, renewing the meal as it becomes soiled.

There would be more vegetarians if there were more cooks who knew how to prepare vegetable foods.

Yellow spots on the linen or cotton produced by the iron may be removed by setting them in the broiling sun.

To give a good oak color to a pine floor, wash in a solution of one pound of copperas dissolved in one gallon of strong lye.

To prevent colored stockings from fading put a tablespoonful of black pepper into the water in which they are rinsed.

Headache, toothache, backache, or almost any joint ache will be relieved by heating the feet thoroughly with the shoes on.

When using the ordinary old-fashioned whitewash of slaked lime, add a small quantity of liquid blueing. It will give it a pearly white tint.

Any one can add strength and weight to his body by rubbing well with olive oil after a warm bath. Oil baths are particularly beneficial to delicate children.

Wormwood boiled in vinegar and applied hot, with enough clothes wrapped around to keep the flesh moist, is said to be an invaluable remedy for a sprain or a bruise.

When a chimney catches fire throw salt upon the fire below, shut off all the drafts possible (a piece of old wet carpet held before the grate is an excellent thing to use in shutting off the draught), and the fire will slowly go out of itself.

The highest place, among all blood-medicines, belongs to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. See if you don't think so, when you consider how it's sold to you. It's guaranteed—and no other medicine of the kind is. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back. Wouldn't every medicine make the same terms if it could do as much good?

But the "Discovery" acts differently, just as it's sold differently. It's not like the sarsaparillas, which claim to do good in March, April, and May. All the year round, with equal benefit, it cleanses, purifies and invigorates the whole system. All Blood, Skin and Scalp Diseases, from a common blotch or eruption to the worst Scrofula, are cured by it. For Salt-rheum, Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Goiter or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands, Tumors, and Swellings, it's a remedy that nothing can equal.

It's the cheapest one, too. With this, you pay only for the good you get. Refuse worthless substitutes.

'CROUPY SOUNDS

At night, from baby's crib, are distracting to parents who are at a loss for a medicine equal to the emergency. Not so with those who have Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the house. A dose of this medicine affords certain and speedy relief. To cure colds, coughs, sore throat, asthma, bronchitis, hoarseness, and the various disorders of the breathing apparatus, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has no equal. It soothes the inflamed tissue, promotes expectoration, and induces repose. Cap. U. Carley, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes: "I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for thirty years and have always found it the best remedy for croup, to which complaint my children were subject."

"I use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my practice, and pronounce it to be unequalled as a remedy for colds and coughs."—J. G. Gordon, M. D., Carroll Co., Virginia.

FARM NOTES.

SEASONABLE HINTS.

Look out for lice on little chicks. Keep chicks from damp and drafts. Sour slop food is not the best chick feed.

An Indiana subscriber: Red top would be better than blue grass for your "marsh ground."

Little chicks should be permitted to take a frolic in the garden occasionally. They will do more good in destroying insects than harm in picking a few holes in the lettuce leaves.

Gage county (Neb.) subscriber: If the land you wish to seed down for hay and pasture is low or moist we would advise you to use red top. Use two to three bushels of seed to the acre.

John Platten, Fort Howard, Wis., claims to have discovered a new road and wagon system that will give the whole country good roads at a very small cost. When its success has been demonstrated in his neighborhood it may be adopted by others and prove the redemption of the prairie States.

A Downs (Kans.) subscriber suggests that some one try the following plan for sub-irrigation: "Use common four-inch tile, level in parallel lines thirty feet apart just below frost." His idea is that they would store moisture and water where most needed (at the roots), and that water here would do as much as twice the amount above ground, as surface evaporation would be saved. What do those in the semi-arid regions think?

Corn is good for fowls—a little too good when eggs are wanted. It is so good and wholesome for them that they invariably become fat if they get enough of it; and very fat hens, although healthy, do not lay well. A variety of food, therefore, is better; but under all circumstances fowls should have some grain, wheat, oats, barley, or sorghum seed. The gizzard must have some work to do or the fowl will become dejected and worthless.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

Keep the cattle off the plowed land. Have no sagging gates or shakily fences.

The average price of sheep in the United States is higher than any time since 1876.

Never feed your fowls damaged grain or tainted food, and see that the water they drink is clean and good.

Only an experienced workmen should lay out the corn rows. The rows should be straight in order to more easily cultivate the crop, yet much carelessness is allowed in laying off corn rows, though it causes a loss of time and labor later on.

It has been noticed by members of the Kansas State Horticultural Society, that insects injurious to fruits are more numerous about the railroad stations. The average loss in that State by the depredations of insects was twenty-four per cent.

Sow more clover this spring, even if you have to cut less timothy. Clover is rich in albuminoid, while timothy is deficient. Albuminoids make milk and animal growth, and also contain more of value to return to the soil than any other constituent gathered by the horse rake.

EFFECT OF WATER UPON HORSES.

A horse can live twenty-five days without solid food, merely drinking water; seventeen days without either eating or drinking; and only five days when eating solid food without drinking. An idea prevails among horsemen that a horse should never be watered oftener than three times a day, or in twenty-four hours. This is not only a mistaken idea, but a very brutal practice. A horse's stomach is extremely sensitive, and will suffer under the least interference, causing a feverish condition. Feeding a horse principally on grain and driving it five hours without water is like giving a man salt mackerel for dinner and not allowing him to drink until supper time—very unsatisfactory for the man. If you know anything about the care of horses, and have any sympathy for them, water them as often as they want to drink—once an hour, if possible. By doing this, you will not only be merciful to your animals, but you will be a benefactor to yourself, as they will do more work; they will be healthier; they will look better; and will be less liable to coughs and colds, and will live longer.—Exchange.

WATER FOR HOGS.

A writer in the "Swine Department" of the Indiana Farmer avers, in substance, that pure water is as essential for perfect health and a high degree of thrift in hogs as any part of their daily feed. Milk and slops in many instances being a liberal portion of the rations, it is presumed that water is unimportant; but this is a mistake—neither fully satisfies the demands of thirst, and a regular supply of clean, pure water is indispensable. Milk, which is sometimes given in place of water to fatten hogs, contains too great a proportion of solids, and does not relieve thirst as water does, while house swill is open to the objection of being often salty, thus aggravating rather than allaying the desire for drink. When hogs are fed largely on corn or other heating, fat-forming foods, the necessity for a generous supply of pure water is much greater than when green food and vegetables constitute part of the rations. The water trough for the hogs should be of generous proportions, and successful feeding, and constant growth and thrift depend upon its being kept filled with pure, clean water.

A Common Mistake

Danger of Delay.

It is remarkable how many people there are who have That Tired Feeling who seem to think it is of no importance or that nothing need be done for it. They would not be so careless if they realized how really serious the malady is. But they think or say, "It will go off after a while." We do not mean the legitimate weariness which all experience after a hard day's work, but that all-gone, worn-out feeling which is especially overpowering in the morning when the body should be refreshed and ready for work.

It is a Mistake

To allow this condition to continue, as the body may soon become debilitated beyond recovery, or some serious disease may gain a tenacious foothold. The craving of the system for assistance should be gratified by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great building-up medicine. It purifies and vitalizes the blood, regulates the digestion and really does "Make the Weak Strong."

We are often deceived in the age of people having beautiful and luxuriant hair, not knowing that they use Hall's Hair Renewer to keep gray hairs away.

Doctors? Pshaw! Take BEECHAM'S PILLS.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

Charles Pinkham, Jr., formerly president of the Bank of Harlem, N. Y., was arrested Friday, charged with misappropriating $70,000 of the bank's funds.

Supposed earthquake shocks were distinctly felt at Terre Hill, Pa., Friday. The ground swayed and houses were shaken. The shocks lasted but a few seconds.

J. M. Chaliss, of Kansas University, Friday was elected president of the Interstate Oratorical Association at Minneapolis. The next contest will be held at Columbus, Ohio.

The aggregate of stocks of iron ore on the Cleveland (Ohio) dock this year is 1,537,188 gross tons against 2,662,223 gross tons on dock May 1, 1891, a decrease of 1,125,035.

The Michigan Salt Company has reduced the price of salt 10 cents a barrel at all its Western agencies, in order to meet New York and Ohio competition.

Professor G. H. Palmer, of Harvard College, in a letter to the Harvard Crimson, states that he has declined the call to the Chicago University, and will remain at Harvard.

The Treasury Department has completed arrangements for the transfer of the Assistant Treasurership at Chicago to John R. Tanner.

Charles Kendall Adams, President of Cornell University, resigned Friday.

Hugo Monsteburg, M. D., Ph. D., of Freiburg, Germauy, has been elected to a professorship in philosophy at Harvard College.

FOREIGN.

Premier Rudini, of Italy, Friday, handed in the resignations of himself and cabinet.

John David Nichol, editor of a London anarchist paper, Friday was sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment.

The dreaded May-day in Europe passed off without serious disturbance. Paris is reported to have looked like a city of the dead; during the day all the portes cocheres were closed, only a few carriages were visible, and all the tramways were empty. A socialist meeting at which 4,000 were present was as orderly as a church service. In London the day was observed as a holiday, and the crowds were everywhere good-natured and peaceably inclined. Minor outrages are reported from Liege, in Belgium, where two houses were wrecked by dynamite; in Pesth, Hungary, a factory was burned, and in Vienna a few street riots occurred.

Spain proposes to try dynamiters without a jury.

Precautions against anarchists continue to be taken in Europe.

Morocco pirates boarded and looted a Spanish vessel near the Barbary coast.

Gladstone gave the English workingmen no hope of securing the eight-hour law.

Dynamite and powder in large quantities have been stolen from the government arsenal on the island of Corfu.

From the returns compiled by Lloyd's Register of Shipping, it appears that in the year 1891, there were launched in the United Kingdom 641 steamers of 878,353 tons, and 181 sailing vessels of 252,463 tons, or a total of 822 vessels of 1,130,816 tons. These figures do not include war-ships.

Thousands of colliers' families in Durham are living on charity as a result of the protracted strike. Many of the tradespeople who supply the miners have become insolvent, and scores of villages are threatened with ruin.

Advices from South Africa report much damage from the locust plague. One swarm of the insects that was six miles wide recently passed over Graham's Town, Cape Colony. Crops have been greatly injured in the Orange Free State.

The emigration of Prussian Poles to the United States is rapidly increasing. It is attributed not only to agricultural depression but to the general fear that sooner or later war with Russia is inevitable. Altogether emigration from Ger-

HERE'S SOMETHING WONDERFUL!
YOU CAN HAVE THIS
$10 LADIES DESK OR LAMP
ABSOLUTELY FREE

IF you will buy one of our Combination Boxes of SWEET HOME SOAP AND TOILET ARTICLES, WHICH WE SELL ON TRIAL, TOO.

YOU MUST HAVE SOAP—It is an absolute necessity—the only question is where you shall buy it; we make it a decided object for you to buy of us—direct from factory to consumer, and save all middle-men and dealers' profits.

OUR COMBINATION BOX contains a large supply of the best Soaps and finest Toilet Articles made, and will give satisfaction to the most fastidious person. We have been manufacturing Soaps for over 15 years, and operate one of the largest and best equipped plants in this country, having a capacity of ten million pounds a year.

Remember, "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity, each cake will do double the work of common cheap soaps.

CHAUTAUQUA

HOME

The "CHAUTAUQUA" DESK is a "thing of beauty" and will be "a joy forever" to all who possess one. It is artistically designed, complete in appointments, a model piece of furniture, and affords what nine out of ten homes lack—a suitable and convenient place for writing letters, studying, drawing, etc., etc., which will be used and appreciated by every member of the family.

It is made of SOLID OAK, varnished and hand-rubbed finish, with brass trimmings. It stands five (5) feet high, is two and a half (2½) feet wide and ten and a half (10½) inches deep.

It is a perfect and complete desk, and also has three roomy book shelves, a top shelf for bric-a-brac, seven pigeon-holes for papers, compartments for letter paper, ink, etc.

When placed in your home, filled with books which you prize, and ornamented with the gifts of friends, it will become a centre of attraction, and you will be grateful to us for adding a new pleasure to your life.

If your library is already supplied with a desk, we suggest placing this in your guest chamber where this convenience will be greatly appreciated.

ORDER YOU RUN NO RISK.

TO-DAY

We do not ask you to remit in advance, or take any chances. We merely ask permission to send you a DESK and Combination Box, and if after 30 days' trial you are fully convinced that the soap and toilet articles are all we claim, you can then pay the bill—$10.00. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used and we will take the box away at our own expense. HOW CAN WE DO MORE? If you want the Lamp instead of the Desk, state it in your order.

Some people prefer to send cash with order—we do not ask it—but if you remit in advance, we will place in the Box, in addition to all the other extras named, a valuable present. Where boxes are paid for in advance, we ship same day order is received. All other orders are filled in their regular turn. Persons remitting in advance can have their money refunded without argument or comment if the box or DESK does not prove all they expect. PRICE OF BOX COMPLETE, ONLY $10.00, including the DESK.

We can refer you to thousands of people who have used Sweet Home Soap for many years and still order at regular intervals, also Bank of Buffalo, Bank of Commerce, Buffalo; Henry Clews & Co., Bankers, New York; Metropolitan National Bank, Chicago, or any other Banker in the United States. We give up this number of the Cynosure largely to a report of the proceedings of the annual meeting of the Association. The attendance was fair, although many whom we should have liked to see were absent. The work of the past year was amply reviewed, and that of the current one quite generally canvassed in a very hopeful spirit. From this time forward, the progress of the anti-secret reform (relying, with a deep sense of our responsibility, upon the personal efforts and earnest prayers of every member of the Association) ought to be pushed in all directions, in the Spirit and power of the Lord of hosts.

Peculiar interest attaches to the article on the eighth page of this issue, entitled "Facts." It is the last one written by ex-President Blanchard, and manifests the indomitable Christian spirit of its author.

Mr. B. B. Blachly, formerly an agent in Illinois of this Association, has, for a year or more, been employed by the American Bible Society in the western part of Mexico. During the past month and a half he has labored in the peninsula of Lower California, and within that period has sold 79 Testaments, 234 Gospels and 231 Bibles. It is satisfactory to learn that Bro. Blachly is doing well. He will contribute items for the Cynosure during the coming year.

At the recent regular session of the Presbytery of Sioux City, Iowa, Rev. W. C. Paden presented the following resolutions, which were discussed at some length: "Resolved (1). That we believe it to be the duty of all Christians, and especially of all ministers, to expose and withstand those lodges which reject our Lord Jesus Christ and unite believers and unbelievers together in a common religious worship, and standing and destiny. Resolved (2). That we earnestly exhort ministers and people of this presbytery who belong to any secret orders, to withdraw from them, and likewise exhort all others to abstain from uniting with them." Mr. Paden introduced these resolutions by a concise reference to the secret lodges and the evils they perpetuate; and while it is to be regretted that they and the preliminary declarations were not adopted by the presbytery, it is an encouraging sign of the progress of our reform work if the orthodox churches will consent to discuss the lodge question in their official meetings. What they most need, it would seem, is (to speak Masonically) a stirring "shock of enlightenment."

Mayor Washburne was recently drifting between Scylla and Charybdis—in other words, between a big brewing company and a Roman Catholic church. A saloon has for some time been running in the near vicinity of St. Patrick's church and parochial school on Desplains street. Not long ago the keeper's license was revoked, for cause, by the city authorities. An effort by the West Side Brewing Co. to have the license restored and the saloon re-opened is opposed by the church dignitaries with earnestness and energy, and the big brewing company threatens to "make it warm" for the Mayor, at future elections, if the license is not re-issued. The case will probably end in a law-suit and a nice bill of costs. The public have an interest in the contest.

The Orangeman has come to the front again. Last week the Grand Orange Lodge of New York State drafted resolutions denouncing the action of the Troy school board in dismissing twenty-one Protestant school-teachers and appointing twenty Roman Catholics and one Jewess in their places. The Orangemen are not the only ones who protest against this sectarian usurpation of the people's rights. "A church without a bishop, and a state without a king" is best suited to the spirit of our free American institutions. Opposition to this principle cost Great Britain large amounts of blood and treasure, with the loss of her thirteen American colonies. If the principle was ever worth the struggle to obtain this national freedom, is it not worth another struggle to maintain it?

We learn from a correspondent that one of the associations of Congregational churches in California has recently opened its session to a discussion of the anti-secrecy question, which is another cheering indication in the interest of our reform. We notice, also, at the regular spring meeting of the Sacramento Valley Association of Congregational churches, held at the church in Grass Valley, May 3 and 4, that among the speakers was the name of Rev. H. L. Kellogg, announced in connection with an address on "Christian Training and Discipline in the Church." Mr. Kellogg, with his family, after a sojourn of several months in California, has returned to Chicago in renewed health, and will be heard from henceforth in the work of the Association as its Corresponding Secretary.

Frederick Douglass, of world-wide fame, was in the city last week as the Commissioner from Hayti to the Columbian Exposition. In an interview with a representative of the Chicago Daily News, Mr. Douglass thus expressed his views of the recent outrages upon the Negroes at the South: "The Southern question is a big one, and something must be done or the Negroes will become chemists and learn how to manufacture bombs and dynamite, as well as some other people. It is very strange that the South has to resort to lynch law in this day and age. There is but one excuse for it, and that is that they are too weak to enforce laws, and this condemns them. Again, it seems strange to me that during the war these Southern gentlemen would leave their wives, daughters, mothers and sweethearts in charge of colored men in perfect confidence, and now declare that these same men are mean, vile and not fit to live. No depredations of the kind were ever heard of during the war, when the Negro had every opportunity to commit such vile deeds with perfect confidence of not being punished. And now that these same white men have come home to protect their homes they say that these same homes are in danger from that abandoned creature, the Negro. It appears very much as if the colored men were a scapegoat for all of the evil done in the South. I think that the colored people should hold a convention in Chicago during the World's Fair and show to the world what sort of treatment they have received from the Southern people. In this way the people of that district may be shamed into doing what is right." Probably no man in the United States better understands the temper of the Southern whites and the peculiarities of the Negro race.

Great Britain is threatened with a civil-religious war this summer, arising out of the approaching Irish elections. An Ulster convention, at Belfast, and an All-Ireland Unionist convention in Dublin, are to be held in June, prior to the elections. Sir William Vernon Harcourt asserts that "the Orange lodges are privately subscribing money for the purchase of arms to carry out the threats to rebel rather than to submit to an Irish parliament." Mr. McDonnell, Lord Salisbury's private secretary, has written to an Oxford clergyman that "his lordship is glad to see you impress upon the electors the probability that home rule would produce that greatest of all curses—a religious civil war." "After this," adds a correspondent, "it is no wonder to hear of men drilling in Ireland, and that rifles and munitions of war are being stored in England."

THE JESUITS.—II.

THEIR ORIGIN, THEIR AIM, THEIR METHODS, AND THEIR SUCCESS.

[Read at the New England District Anti-Secret Convention, in December, 1891.]

BY MRS. E. TRASK HILL.

What is the Jesuit accomplishing in America to-day?

First. As in olden time, he seeks to gain control of the education of the youth. He is accomplishing this object by the establishment of the parochial school. Within the past four years, an order has been promulgated, requiring every priest of every parish in the United States to establish at once a parochial school. That this command is being obeyed, is shown by the fact that there were in 1889 2,206 parochial schools in the United States.

The Boston Pilot stated recently, that in the arch-diocese of Boston alone there were 22,250 children in parochial schools. Among a few of them may be mentioned the following:

Those in Roxbury, one of.....	600 pupils.
Mission Church.....	1 000 "
St. Stephen's Parish.....	1 200 "
St. Thomas Parish.....	400 "
Charlestown, two with.....	1 000 "
Jamaica Plain.....	400 "
Chelsea.....	1 000 "

A Jesuit college has been established in Boston, with twenty-five professors. The Holy Cross College, Worcester, is under Jesuit control, and yet it receives the endorsement of the Governor of Massachusetts, and has received large sums of money from a former Governor of that State.

The National University at Washington is a Jesuit institution.

In these parochial schools and colleges the chief aim is to instruct the youth in the doctrines and teachings of the Roman Catholic church. The history learned is untruthful in the extreme, and claims for the Roman Catholics all the discoveries in arts and sciences, and all the wonderful inventions. Page after page of history is devoted to the extolling of the Romish saints, and but little notice is taken of the founders of this republic. The catechism is thoroughly taught, and the Protestant religion and its devotees are grossly maligned. The children are instructed in the belief that the Pope is the supreme power to which all governments are subject, and all the teaching is calculated to separate the Roman Catholic child from the Protestant, and thus concentrate two opposing forces to do battle against each other; while, on the other hand, the public school is the great assimilator, which brings both the Catholic and Protestant child together, and instills in them patriotism and good morals.

In French parochial schools the pupils are taught only in the French language, thus producing a class of people who are clannish and hard to manage.

Another curse of the parochial school is, that it disarranges the whole public school system. Without the least warning schools are depleted; in some instances 400 pupils have been removed in a day; school-rooms have been left vacant, and after teachers had been dismissed for lack of pupils, the children from parochial schools have been returned to the building, and claimed their right to be taught in the public schools, as was the case in Malden, Mass., when their poor instruction in parochial schools had caused them to be far below grade. The aim of the Jesuits is to not only establish the parochial school system throughout the United States, but to thoroughly demoralize the public school; hence they insist that Roman Catholic teachers shall be employed. They accomplish this object by sending young Romanist girls to the normal schools in large numbers. We have the statement, on the authority of one of the members of the Boston School Board, that at least one-half of all the young girls attending the Boston Normal School at the present time are Romanists. On graduating they quickly obtain places as substitutes; they force their claims through political friends, and while the Protestant girl modestly stands back, waiting to be sought for, the Roman Catholic girl seizes her opportunity, and, having been a substitute, finds promotion to the rank of teacher to be an easy matter. Protestant girls, discouraged, seek other occupations, and refuse to attend normal schools, because their chances are so small to obtain positions as teachers, as Roman Catholic girls are so largely employed. American children thus frequently come under the control of ill-mannered, uncouth, unprincipled Romanists, and sometimes suffer untold torture from the insults and abuse they receive from them. Here and there a parent protests vigorously, and the teacher is dismissed.

Romanists insist on being placed on school boards, and a single wily one will do more mischief than a dozen Protestants can counteract.

In some cases, as notably in Faribault and Stillwater, Minnesota, nuns are employed as teachers, and, clothed in the garb of their order, instill into the minds of Protestant children the doctrines of the Romish church. Seemingly friends of the public school, they, in this State, turned over the parochial school building to the town or city authorities, insisting, however, that nuns shall be employed as teachers. They interfere with the choice of text-books, as they did in 1888, when a priest demanded that Swinton's History should be removed from the public schools of Boston, and a master transferred because he had taught history truthfully. Through their influence histories have been Romanized, as was clearly proven by the Committee of One Hundred to be the case with Anderson's History. Through their efforts encyclopedias have had stricken from their pages all (to them) objectionable matter. When in the majority, as in 1888, in Boston, in the school board, school-houses were left unrepaired, and the drainage of buildings was allowed to remain in a condition dangerous to the pupil and teacher. All important committees of the board were ruled by a Roman Catholic majority, and even the janitors of the school buildings were used to forward the Jesuits' unprincipled political schemes. At their dictation, newspapers and books distasteful to them are removed from public libraries and Y. M. C. A. buildings, unless Americans with backbone are found in power.

They are to-day, in a measure, controlling the whole public school system of this country; in proof of which we cite recent occurrences in Windsor Locks, Connecticut, where a Roman Catholic priest demands as his right that he shall be made school director; as in the case of the schools at Fitchburg, Mass., where priests openly defy the law in a French parochial school; as in Worcester, where the superintendent of schools, a Protestant, is completely under Roman Catholic influence, and where a priest has the audacity to charge the teachers with gross immorality. Their purpose is to undermine and forever destroy the public school system and establish a parochial school system throughout the United States. There is not a State in the Union that does not feel the Jesuits' power.

They also seek to gain control of government funds in the Indian territories, to bring the Indians into the church. They are establishing schools among the colored people and among the Italians, and it would be hard to find a spot in our favored land where the track of the slimy serpent could not be discovered. In Canada a school-house was built with public funds, and when finished was sold to Romanists for $5.00.

Second. The rising generation having been educated, they propose to possess the land. The doubter may be convinced of this fact if he will only notice what valuable sites are already in their possession, and also observe that wherever a Roman Catholic institution, church, or dwelling is found, there he will find the locality being rapidly deserted by American Protestants, because property greatly depreciates when Romanists once control it and begin to locate there. It will be well, also, to notice that, as far as possible, commanding sites, or central positions, are obtained. Notice the situation of the Cathedral on Washington street, Boston, of the Young Men's Catholic Association, soon to be erected opposite Dr. A. J. Gordon's church; the situation of the church and Little Sisters of the Poor building, at Mount Pleasant, Roxbury, at the junction of three roads; the valuable land owned by the Church of the Immaculate Conception, and the Boston University, and the site purchased on Cony Hill. Go with me to Charlestown, and on the top of Bunker Hill I will show you the finest parochial school building in America; also a large church and a priests' residence. Shame upon us, that this historic spot, of all others, should have been allowed to pass into the hands of the nation's enemies! The beautiful square in and around Bunker Hill Monument, known as Monument Square, is being rapidly deserted by old residents, and Roman Catholics are purchasing the property at ridiculously low figures. Within a short time the Y. M. C. A. building of that district had almost passed into Romanists' hands; but Protestants awakened just in time to save it. Two immense churches have been erected by Romanists there, within two years, and two parochial schools, while the Protestant churches are on the wane, although strenuous efforts are being put forth to revive them.

What is true of Boston is true of Worcester, where the Holy Cross College occupies the most commanding view in the city; of Hartford, where a very valuable site is in their possession; of Portland, Maine, where a magnificent section of the city is owned by them.

Not a city or large town in the United States is allowed to be free from their supervision. Funds are not lacking to purchase every valuable piece of property in the whole United States, should they desire to possess it, and it could be possibly bought. Nor are their purchases confined to large towns and cities; the country towns are being invaded, and deserted farms are being bought by them, and when a sufficient number of Romanists are located in any country town, the Catholic church and parochial school follow.

Where, my friends, will be our power should the Romanists attack us in open warfare, if they thus obtain gradually all the places of defense?

You say we are in no danger of such an attack. We little dreamed that rebellion was rampant in the South where dwelt our own people, until the shot on Fort Sumter came. We awoke from our apathy then, only to wade through the blood of America's martyred heroes.

Shall we need another bloody conflict like that to arouse us to meet the most desperate foe ever to be encountered? What means this storing of weapons of warfare in churches? Why this drilling of Roman Catholic youth? Why this formation of secret societies? Why these muttered threats? They are pregnant with impending danger. Rome is getting ready for battle.

HOW HE KEPT HIS PROMISE.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

It was during the darkest days of the reign of Mary Tudor. Terror reigned throughout all England. The Bible was proscribed; Christians were daily persecuted and put to death; imprisonments were common; Protestants were arrested and incarcerated on every pretext, real or fancied, and a reign of terror prevailed throughout the kingdom.

But our story has to do with one man immured in a gloomy prison in London. For many weeks he had been confined there, shut out from God's free air and sunlight, far from his home, from his wife and sons, expecting daily to be summoned forth to die.

It was a dark, rainy day in March. David Moody sat in his cell, with chains on his hands, chains on his feet; but a weight heavier than chains was upon his heart. During the many weeks that he had been confined in that gloomy cell, not once had he seen his wife or sons. It was now night, and still raining, and as David Moody sat in his prison cell, thinking sadly of happy days forever gone, a torch-light glimmered outside his cell-door, which opened with a clang, and the jailor said: "David Moody, look up; here is your son come to see you;" and a noble-looking lad of seventeen entered the prison cell.

After the first words of greeting were over, the prisoner inquired eagerly of the outside world which he had left so long before. "Tell me, Cuthbert, is it well with thy mother and the little lad, thy brother?" "Nay, father; the mother has been very sick, and we have suffered much; but we try to bear up bravely for thy sake. Much fear prevails; neighbors Smith and Lee have both been put to death as heretics. Oh, father, it were better for us all were we dead than to live, so terrible are the times on which we have fallen! But tell me, father; how doth it fare with thee?" "The same, night and day!" his father replied; "all alone with my bitter thoughts! Hast thou that Book now, my son—God's holy book that we loved so well to read?" "Aye, father, and much comfort hath it been to us." "Oh, my son, if I only had it with me! Here I sit in my chains day after day. Canst thou not bring it to me, my lad?" "That I will, father; God helping me, I will bring it to thee!"

The jailor opened the cell-door and summoned the lad, who embraced his father and withdrew. Alas! for David Moody! Spies concealed behind his cell-door had heard every word that passed between him and his son!

Another day passed. It was still raining heavily; not a ray of sunlight pierced the cell in which David Moody sat in his chains. Dreadful sounds had reached his ears; shrieks and cries, in a child's voice, mingled with the sound of heavy blows. The sounds had lasted for several hours, but now, as the day wore on, they gradually ceased. Without, the rain still fell, and the wind howled with fitful fury, but within that dark and gloomy prison all was now still—quite still.

Within his dark and lonely cell David Moody, the Christian, sat with chains on his hands, and on his feet; but a weight heavier than chains rested on his heart. Those cries had reached his ears, and, several times had his heart been thrilled with an awful fear—surely he had heard that voice before! Yes, he had, but never before in that way.

It was night; the wind had ceased, but the rain was still falling. As David Moody sat in his prison-cell he became conscious of a sound—the sound of footsteps approaching. They trod heavily and unsteadily, as though bearing a burden. They paused at his cell-door, which was pushed rudely open, and three men entered, bearing a bundle which they laid at David Moody's feet. "Stand up, David Moody," the jailor said, "and look at thy guest; he has come to thee and has brought a Bible with him."

It was, indeed, Cuthbert Moody. His hands were tightly clenched, his eyes staring, his face horrible to behold, and his mother's Bible was bound tightly across his breast.

David Moody stood erect in his chains, gave one long, despairing look at the dead body of the boy lying at his feet; then, raising his eyes to heaven, he exclaimed: "Avenge thy slaughtered saints, O Lord!" and dropped lifeless beside the dead body of his son.

Cuthbert Moody had been scourged to death. He, however, was only one of thousands of youthful martyrs whose blood was freely shed for Christianity during those dark days of the reign of Bloody Mary of England.

My story is told. I might stop here and moralize if I chose; but I have concluded not to do so. This true tale, briefly narrated, teaches its own moral better than anything I can say. And yet, reader, suppose those dark days of persecution were to return; how many, think you, among the Christians of the present day would be willing to die for their principles? Would you?

THE ZETA PSI AT MCGILL.

BY SILAS WINIFRED MACK.

Some years ago the members of the above society, although comparatively few in numbers, succeeded by ways characteristic of their fraternity, in electing their own candidates to nearly all the places of honor. Unfortunately, however, for them, they boasted of their victory a little too openly. The other students, learning the secret of their success, combined the following year, and took revenge by driving them out of power.

Since then, secretism has been frequently discussed in the literary societies. Anti-secret literature has been distributed, and the Cynosure placed on file in a couple of the affiliated colleges. During the winter the question was discussed at considerable length in the Montreal Daily Witness. Quite recently it has been prominently brought before the public in reference to Greek-letter societies.

The fifty-ninth convocation of the Medical Faculty of McGill University was held April 2. On the platform were the chancellor, Sir Donald Smith; the principal, Sir William Dawson, and a large number of professors, while the hall was crowded with the students and their friends. After the opening exercises, Dr. T. Jamieson, B. A., was called upon to deliver the valedictory. The following is a brief summary of his remarks as they appeared in the Montreal Gazette:

"Dr. T. Jamieson, as gold medalist of the class of '92, had to perform the office of reading the valedictory for his colleagues, a task which he performed to the satisfaction of every one. After referring to the loss sustained by the class in the deaths of the late Dean Howard and Dr. MacDonnell, he dipped into matters of peculiar interest not only to the medical, but every other student of McGill. He said that of late a secret society had been making its influence felt in the affairs of the university, and that influence was not for good. McGill until recently had been free from such organizations, but now, owing to the workings of one of these, the class of 1892 was divided. There were instructors who were members, and what confidence could be expected from the student towards an instructor who was pledged to assist with all his power any member of his society who happened to be in the class. A teacher ought not to be bound by secret vows which might affect him when called upon to examine those he may have met elsewhere as sworn brothers. Dr. Jamieson added that secret societies ought to have no place in McGill. The listening students cheered these sentiments to the echo."

The Gazette, after convocation, saw two of the new M. D.'s and asked them what they thought about that part of Dr. Jamieson's valedictory dealing with secret societies. "Jamieson was right," said both. "The society exists and must be stamped out. Yale had to do it, and so will McGill. Why, just imagine, there are four instructors and one professor who are members. How can outsiders expect fair play from these men as against their own crowd?"

Since then one of the professors alluded to has been assigned the task of defending the Zeta Psi and kindred societies, if one may judge from the following item in the Daily Witness:

"That secret society in connection with McGill College which Dr. Jamieson so severely condemned in his valedictory at convocation on Saturday is not at all the formidable affair, according to the professors, which his vivid speech pictured it. It is not Masonic, it is not Orange, and it does not even boast the Odd-fellow's millinery. It is not secret in any serious sense. There are secrets in it but they are of a ridiculous and even childish character, and appear to travesty the real secret societies.

"In short, it is one of those Greek-letter societies which spring up in nearly every college on the continent, and to which pretty nearly every professor has belonged in his student days. For the peculiarity of it is that none but students can belong to it, which disposes of Dr. Jamieson's assertion that several professors were actively connected with it. The name of it is 'Zeta Psi,' and its chief function is to be a social organization to which none but 'jolly good fellows' can be admitted.

"Incidentally, there is more or less 'hazing,' but that is principally of a laughable rather than tyrannous character. An air of mock ceremony and tragic solemnity are associated with initiatory rites. The candidate has to walk around barefooted. Sometimes this is pleasantly varied by making him strip pretty nearly naked. Again, he will be driven round and round the city in a bewilderingly aimless manner.

"Should he happen to have a lady friend, he may be sent with a message to her, or with a parcel which will make her laugh and the candidate look sheepish. Then he may also have to 'fag' for the officers for a while, and when he is made a full-fledged member, he takes deep delight in making the 'other fellow' undergo similar sufferings and abasements. Sometimes the society has ten, sometimes twenty members, drawn from all the faculties. They are selected with nice discrimination, and many a student is black-balled.

"The black-balled student does not regard the society with favor. That is an obvious trait of human nature. The poet does not love the paper which rejects his little 'pome.' There is an annual dinner, and there are florid speeches, and upon the whole the 'Zeta Psi' Society, which has been in existence for twelve years, need not alarm anybody. In the States the 'hazing' has been carried to an extreme extent and has drawn forth strong protests from several professors. No complaint of cruelties has reached the McGill professors in respect of it.

"For some time past, though, there has been considerable party feeling in relation to this and a society formed by the Maritime Province students.

"The Zeta Psi Society', said Prof. Ruttan, 'is only a joke. It has nothing whatever to do with college training. It has neither political nor college significance. As for professors belonging to it, that is ridiculous, for, according to the rules, none but students can belong to it. The secrets and ceremonies are so childish that I am going to say that no grown person, much less a professor, could have anything to do with it. It is just a band of young fellows who form a society for social purposes. I belonged to it in the past. It is a memory of student days; pretty nearly every professor has belonged to it in one college or another. Dr. Jamieson is a clever young man, who will do credit to McGill, but he is quite mistaken in treating the society seriously as a secret order, with an influence upon the teachers.'"

If Dr. Jamieson's indictment is not convincing, then the above defence establishes clearly enough the immorality of such "college societies." I cannot refrain from enclosing one more article, the opinion of Alex. Johnson, L.L.D., (Trinity College, Dublin,) Vice-Principal of McGill, as reported in a later number of the Witness:

"If the secret societies mentioned by Dr. Jamieson are of a childish character it is a folly for grown men to be associated with them; but if they are of a serious character, as alleged, then they are dangerous. In either case they should not exist.' That is the opinion of Prof. Johnson, Dean of the McGill Faculty of Arts. 'I know nothing about them,' he added. 'They are confined to the Medical Faculty, I understand.'

"It is claimed,' was the reply, 'that members from all of the faculties are to be found in them.' 'I don't know,' the Professor said, 'but I remember reading—I think it was in the Witness—a letter from a parent complaining that his son had been seriously burned in the arm in connection with some ridiculous rites. Childish or otherwise, they should not exist.'"

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

ANNUAL MEETING, MAY 11, 1892.

The officers and members of the National Christian Association met in annual session in Room 1, Carpenter Building, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, at 10 o'clock A. M., May 11, 1892.

Rev. E. R. Worrell called the meeting to order, and after prayer by Rev. W. M. Howie, the President, Rev. Alex. Thomson, being absent, Rev. G. R. Milton was elected chairman.

The report of the Recording Secretary, Mrs. E. A. Cook, was read and approved.

The roll-call showed a quorum present for the transaction of business.

On motion of Rev. W. I. Phillips, the following persons were invited to seats in the meeting as corresponding members of the Association: Rev. James W. Fifield, Rev. Orange C. Bailey, Rev. L. B. Davidson, Rev. Philip Heck, Rev. R. W. French, Rev. W. M. Howie, Rev. J. B. Galloway.

The report of Chas. A. Blanchard, General Manager of the Association, was then presented, accepted and adopted. It is as follows:

REPORT OF THE GENERAL MANAGER, MAY 1ST, 1891, TO APRIL 30TH, 1892.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS OF THE ASSOCIATION:—In my absence from your meeting last year, I was elected General Manager for the Association, the understanding being that my duties were to be largely advisory, and that I was not to be called upon to do field work or writing, which was impossible. I have filled, as well as I could, the office which you entrusted to me. The principal part of my work has been to give counsel concerning matters of importance and doubt, and for this report which I am permitted to lay before you, you are chiefly indebted to our brother, Secretary and Treasurer Rev. W. I. Phillips. During the year the following meetings have been held:

First. There was a National Conference of Churches and Christians at Central Music Hall, Chicago, May 14th, 1891. The call for this meeting was signed by about five hundred leaders of religious and educational thought. The day sessions were well attended and were profitable. The evening session did not have the attendance which we had been led to suppose might be secured. On the whole, however, the meeting accomplished good.

Second. State meetings have been held in connection with our work in Wisconsin, Kansas, Illinois, Iowa, New Hampshire, Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania. In addition, there was the New England District meeting, which was, of course, largely sustained from Massachusetts, though greatly assisted by persons from other New England States. These meetings were, so far as I am informed, generally small but universally profitable. I think that they were arranged on an economic plan, little money comparatively being needed to pay the expenses of speakers, most of the work being done by persons from the vicinity where the meeting was held, and without charge. I have no doubt at all of their value, and believe that they should be continued and greatly increased in number.

Third. Parlor meetings have been held in Boston, Mass., Providence, Rhode Island, and other places during the year, the most continuous and successful one having been conducted by Bro. and Sister Stoddard in the city first named. In our building in Chicago, noon prayer-meetings and mission work have been continued throughout the year with excellent results.

Fourth. The colleges and the theological seminaries of the interior have been reached in several ways. An open letter, suggested by the Masonic proposition to hold lodge meetings on Sunday, was addressed to the presidents and professors of the colleges and theological seminaries of the United States. Printed in connection with this letter, were the testimonies of about one hundred and fifty eminent men, against secret societies. From 495 different institutions, 357 colleges and 138 theological seminaries, very few replies were received. There is, I think, no doubt, however, but that this testimony will bear its fruit in God's time.

Literature from our rooms has been furnished students of various institutions, who, in increasing numbers, seem to be bringing this reform before their societies for discussion. A letter recently received from a college in Indiana, says: "I am on the affirmative of this question, Resolved, That secret societies are detrimental to the nation. Please send me something on the subject." The address delivered by myself on College Secret Societies, before some of the students of Northwestern University, was printed in the Cynosure, and afterwards in pamphlet form. It was called for without special advertising until the edition of one thousand was exhausted.

Our College agent, Rev. S. F. Porter, one of our oldest and most faithful friends, has represented our work before many of the institutions of the interior and South, and is now laboring in the East. He has this year placed a library of our books in each of twenty-five colleges. The Faculty of Chicago Theological Seminary invited me to deliver an address on secret societies before the Faculty and students. It was well received by both professors and students. A large number of Joseph Cook's address at our last conference and of Dr. Carradine's sermon were distributed among them and were eagerly received. The principal of a business college in Ohio advised his young men to keep out of secret societies, and was waited upon by citizens of the town, who warned him that such sentiments expressed would ruin his school. Undaunted by this threat, he gave his students his reasons for his position. He retained his students, and their numbers were increased. The victory at Heidelberg University was remarkable, and should awaken thanksgiving. There were three Greek-letter fraternities secretly existing among the students in violation of college law. Emboldened by resistance made to lectures from our Mr. Fenton, these law-breaking fraternities put on their badges, announced a public banquet, and appeared openly in their true character. The Faculty, after long and patient examination, and every endeavor to secure the return to reason and obedience on the part of the young men, was compelled to suspend thirty-five of them. There was one professor, out of the eighteen members of the Faculty, who stood with the law-breaking students from the beginning. He withdrew from the institution, and the secret-society movement there was killed. During last July the Cynosure printed the report of the president of the Iowa Wesleyan University made to the College Section of the National Teachers' Association, in St. Paul. The subject of his report was college secret societies, and in it he states that he has received answers from 150 colleges of all grades, and that their testimony is overwhelmingly against secret societies.

Fifth. The foreign mission work of the Association has been continued, letters having been received from, and literature having been distributed through Rev. C. W. Wilcox, of China; Rev. H. W. Johnston, of West Africa, Rev. J. Gomer, of West Africa; Rev. W. J. Gladwin, and Mr. Hopson, of India. The testimony of all these gentlemen is, that our literature is adapted to do great good in these lands where secret societies of various names and kinds abound now as they have for thousands of years past.

Besides Cynosures and tracts, our office has sent out over three thousand pamphlets, supplying in all, some fifteen hundred missionaries.

Sixth. The Cynosure has continued its work throughout the year with so much of energy and ability as we could command. Brother Kellogg, for so many years our efficient and able editor, desiring to be absent from the State for a year, the committee of publication secured the services of Mr. H. M. Hugunin, who has served us to the measure of his power throughout the year. Our former editor-in-chief, Pres. Jonathan Blanchard, though he did not think it expedient to accept the election which you made at our last annual meeting, has very kindly assisted us by his pen, as in former years. An attempt was made to secure regular editorial writing from a large number of our gentlemen, which was only partially successful. Without feeling that the paper has been all that we could desire, yet we feel grateful that it has accomplished, under God, the excellent work which has been performed.

Seventh. Encouraging features. In some respects the year has been marked by advances more encouraging than we have hitherto been permitted to record. As before stated, the Faculty of Chicago Theological Seminary requested an address on the lodge question. The Boston Baptist Ministers' meeting, more than fifty of them present, did the same. This address being delivered by our New England representative, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, was heartily received by the ministers assembled. The Chicago Presbyterian ministers invited one of their number, who was also a member of our Board of Directors, to read a paper before them on the same question.

Seceders from Masonry and Odd-fellowship are numerous. A letter recently received from one of our co-workers in Arizona, tells of a number who have publicly renounced their Masonic vows and professed their faith in Jesus Christ. The Cynosure has, during the year, published written renunciations of five different gentlemen; Messrs. Holmes, Packard, Comstock, Matthey and Proctor. The report of the Good Templars' lodges of Illinois, for 1891, shows that last year they lost, by expulsion, withdrawal, forfeiture of charter and suspension, over 7,400 members. What is true of this lodge will be true of all others, if only the light is shed upon the minds and hearts of the people. No farmer is more sure of reaping from grain sowed, than are we of gaining the attention and consciences of men if our work is properly done.

Eighth. We have had, during the year, four compositors in our office, our clerk, Mrs. Wilcox, our office editor, Mr. Hugunin, our secretary and treasurer, Mr. Phillips. Not a day of sickness, we believe, requiring absence from the office, has been experienced by any one of them during the entire year. Their labors have been well performed, and have upon them, as we believe, the benediction of God. Ten lecturers have given more or less of the year to traveling and publicly lifting the standard of reform. Rev. J. P. Stoddard and wife have labored with good success in New England. The New England Association has been incorporated and $8,000 has been secured by will from one friend of the cause. Rev. M. H. Nichols labored on the Pacific coast during the first part of the year. His health was not good and the financial support secured was not adequate, so that he was compelled for a time to withdraw from our service. Rev. C. F. Hawley, a friend of many years and labors, carried on the work energetically until stricken down by sickness during the last of December, '91. He has labored in Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska and Ohio. Rev. H. H. Hinman, during the last few months of 1891, assisted in the holding of three State conventions, besides laboring from place to place in Wisconsin, Illinois and Ohio. Mr. W. B. Stoddard, with headquarters in our building in Washington, has labored successfully, as is his rule. The conventions in New York and Pennsylvania were held under his direction, and were among the best of our State conventions. He has been unusually blest during the year, and, as we know, his labors have been greatly useful hitherto. Rev. Samuel F. Porter, who has served this cause at his own charges and given of his money for extending it in directions where he could not personally labor, has journeyed from college to college throughout the South, Interior and East. Nearly four-score years of age, he has labored on when most men would have felt themselves in duty bound to rest. Eternity alone can reveal the results of such labors. Rev. John V. Potts was Iowa State agent for several months preceding their State convention, and in this State convention, for which he prepared, he participated. Our friend and brother, Elder William Fenton, has labored most efficiently during a considerable part of the year. He has lectured in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, Colorado, Utah, California and Oregon, beside giving several addresses in Toronto, Canada. He has recently had a most successful meeting in San Francisco, a number of gentlemen publicly renouncing the lodge at the conclusion of his address. Elder S. C. Kimball has continued the publication of his paper against the lodge, and has conducted public meetings and a State convention. He has been assisted from time to time by our Bro. Stoddard, the New England agent. Rev. I. R. B. Arnold, with his boat chapel, in which many of our friends are share-holders, has been doing good work in several States. He lectures on our reforms and other important topics and distributes much literature. He recently ordered a thousand copies of his "Stories of the Gods," and other pamphlets. Others who have assisted in our work during the year, though not officially connected with us, are Rev. M. A. Gault, Rev. W. C. Paden, Rev. J. M. Foster, Rev. C. G. Fait, Rev. J. K. Glassford, and our brother, W. L. Enlow, who has conducted his paper, the Birmingham Free Press with energy, ability and success.

Ninth. Finances. It is cause of gratitude to God that we have been able to pay the bills for publication during the year, promptly, and additional cause of thanksgiving that some three thousand dollars beside these expenses have been received in the form of securities. Promises of future help are made, amounting to a considerable sum additional. Our dear brother, A. C. Higgins, of Galesburg, who recently passed to his reward, left for us one thousand dollars by his will.

Tenth. Suggestions for the future:

1. Every effort should be made to enlighten the ministers of the United States and enlist them in our work. It may be assumed that they are well-informed respecting it, but any person who is at all conversant with the facts in the case will not be deceived by this thought for a moment. The ministers of our churches have not been generally taught respecting the character and work of secret societies, in their school-life, most colleges and theological seminaries carefully avoiding any discussion whatever of this and similar questions. When they enter upon their pastoral service, they are crowded with routine labors and have little leisure for investigation. The character of the organization which we are working against is such as to lead all except decided and courageous men to maintain silence where speech might injure them in their temporal prospects. When I say the ministers of the United States, I do not mean to limit this labor of instruction to them, as the missionaries of the world need this enlightenment and assistance as well as the ministers of our own land.

2. The distribution of literature should be pushed as rapidly and as far as possible. The tracts which we have are valuable; the Cynosure is, under God, the right arm of the cause; the local and religious press which testify to the truth are of the first importance; and these should all, so far as possible, be scattered broadcast among the people. Especially should we seek to use continually the plates which we have on our shelves which contain truths which the nation most imperatively needs.

3. The lecture and convention work should be greatly extended. My impression is that a proper effort in this direction would greatly increase the number and efficiency of our public meetings. I do not intend, by this, that great expense should be incurred, but that we should seek to use more efficiently the means and men already interested in our work.

4. I think that the effort to reach the students of our colleges, universities, and seminaries should be most energetically continued. The results of the work of brethren Kellogg, Porter and Phillips in this regard have been, I think, most signally owned and blessed of God; and that we should be encouraged to extend in all possible directions this most important work.

In concluding this report, I feel that we should thank God and take courage. The tokens are all favorable; and my judgment is that while the work is great and the laborers less numerous than we might desire, none the less God is with us, and our efforts are not in vain through him.

On motion of Rev. L. Taylor, the report was placed in the hands of a committee, to be appointed by the chair, in order that suggestions for plans for future work might be gathered from it, and that such portions of it as might be deemed wise should be published. The chair named, as such committee, Rev. Chas. A. Blanchard, Rev. L. Taylor, and Rev. E. R. Worrell.

The Treasurer's report was then presented in printed form, as reproduced in another column, read by Rev. W. I. Phillips, and approved.

A partial report from the Auditors was read and approved, and, on motion, they were requested to complete their work.

The chair nominated the following committees:

On Nominations.—C. A. Blanchard, E. Whipple, Rev. J. P. Richards, E. A. Cook, and Rev. Edgar Wylie.

On Resolutions.—Rev. H. H. Hinman, W. B. Stoddard, and Rev. L. Taylor.

Mr. Hinman requested to be excused from serving, and Rev. A. W. Parry was appointed in his place.

The report of the Board of Directors was read by Prof. E. Whipple, accepted and adopted.

After prayer by Rev. W. I. Phillips, the meeting took a recess until 1 o'clock P. M.

The afternoon session was opened with prayer by Rev. B. F. Worrell.

Rev. G. R. Milton presided.

The report of the New England Secretary, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and his wife, was presented by Rev. W. I. Phillips. It met with approval by the meeting, and was referred to the editor of the Cynosure for publication.

REPORT OF THE NEW ENGLAND SECRETARY.

To the Brethren and Sisters assembled in the annual gathering of the National Christian Association, Greeting:—Grace, mercy and peace to you from our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and unto all who are of "like precious faith."

Since it is the Master's will that I should deny myself the pleasure of meeting you at the annual roll-call, permit me to assure you by letter of my unabated interest in the cause for which the National Christian Association exists, and of my unshaken confidence in its triumph.

I wish, also, to congratulate you upon the achievements of the past year, and to commend the wisdom and patience under which a grand advance has been made under circumstances of peculiar trial. I have had few opportunities for personal conference, but as, from week to week, I have felt the pulsations of your hearts through the Christian Cynosure, a new inspiration and renewed life has been imparted to me and to the work upon this field. You will readily apprehend the important function of this means of inter-communication between friends and efficient agency of approach to many who cannot otherwise be reached, and will give to its future management such direction as in your wisdom its highest usefulness may require. While commending the ability and discretion which have characterized the N. C. A. organ, I wish to add a word of encouragement and approval for the work on the general field. A revival in some good degree of old-time zeal, and a union of forces, indicating a "coming of bone to his bone," is, I trust, the harbinger of victory in the "Valley of Decision," when "the wicked one" and his snares spread in secret shall disappear.

The multiplication of lodges is no occasion for discouragement. The unwonted activity of the enemy is prophetic of a crisis at hand, in which the principles of open, honest dealing for which we contend shall triumph. Experience in the fire makes a lasting impression, and tens of thousands of our citizens are smarting, just now, and calling in vain for relief. We have 852 secret tumors on the Boston body politic, and the people are finding them expensive luxuries. Take a sample case, officially reported: Assets about $9,000, to be divided pro-rata among 3,031 certificate-holders, in "The Royal Ark," a secret benefit order (!) The sum total deposited by these parties in interest is $285,281. The amount returned to each contributor is from $1.54 to $2.64, in proportion as they have paid in "assessments and fees" (exclusive of admission and quarterly dues) "ranging from $42.00 to $72.00, which leaves $249,281," "(exclusive of admission and quarterly dues,)" "to be divided among the seven or eight managers of this 'Royal' concern (!) Twenty-three of these benevolent orders have failed in Massachusetts in the past year, and forty thousand people have lost all the money they have put into them," if Representative Kelly is correctly reported in to-day's papers. The whole question of endowment orders is being hotly debated in the State House, and Representative Bennett is reported as having used very strong language on the floor of the House yesterday. He said: "The members have nothing to say about the government of the orders. Seven self-constituted Supremes, with a Chaplain, get together, and after reading a prayer on the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men, they proceed to rob the poor widow and the orphan." * * "The only way is to stop the business at once."

Facts and figures like these cannot fail to open the eyes of the people, and to enlist the sympathies of philanthropists and pastors as they see the wretchedness and large accessions to our over-crowded alms-houses, resulting from the robbery of that class who can least afford to part with their hard-earned wages to enrich the "supremes" who manipulate these "benevolent orders."

Permit me to express my thanks for what I recognize as a generous policy towards the New England work during the year. I do not know that you could have been reasonably asked, or that you would have been justified under the circumstances in doing more than you have done, and we are grateful to God and to the New England friends for the liberal support which the cause has received at their hands; so that we can say we have wanted for "no good thing." Very much more could have been advantageously used in the dissemination of literature; and now that the N. E. Association is incorporated and the work introduced, we are expecting larger means with which to carry it on. The cause in New England is indebted for the liberal space given to stated and occasional contributions to the columns of the Cynosure, as well as for the generous number of special copies furnished gratuitously when asked for. While the appearance of the addresses delivered at our convention, and especially the regular New England Letters, have added to the usefulness of your organ on the entire field, we recognize that they have been especially helpful in this district.

The frequent communications giving incidents and accounts of the condition and outlook for New England render it unnecessary for me to add to what has already been printed. Suffice it to say, that some have been led in our meetings to accept Christ as their personal Saviour; some to renounce the hidden things of dishonesty; many have accepted the warnings given, and escaped the gins and traps set for their feet. Christian people and pastors have been enlisted and constrained to give the note of warning, and the way more fully prepared for an advance on the strongholds of the enemy. I feel confident that in whatever measures you shall adopt for the promotion of the cause, you will find hearty co-operation in New England; and my prayer is that, as chosen representatives of a righteous cause we may not fall out by the way, and that the "unity of the Spirit and the bond of peace" may prevail and guide in all your deliberations. Your brother and sister in Christ,

JAMES P. STODDARD,
ANNA E. STODDARD.

The names of Rev. William Fenton, St. Paul, Minn.; Rev. Wm. M. Howie, Chicago, Ill.; Prof. H. F. Kletzing, Naperville, Ill., and Mr. H. Busch, Ironton, Wis., were presented by the Board of Directors for membership in the National Christian Association's corporate body, and these gentlemen were thereupon duly elected.

The name of James W. Fifield, Chicago, recommended by Rev. Edgar Wylie, Rev. J. P. Richards, and Prof. E. Whipple; also, the names of Wm. C. Bissell, Humboldt, Neb.; Rev. J. B. Galloway, Vernon, Wis., and Rev. L. B. Davidson, Lisbon, Ill., recommended by Revs. W. I. Phillips and Geo. R. Milton, were presented for membership; and all were elected.

The report of W. B. Stoddard, the Washington agent, was received and approved. It showed the work expended in organizing the State Annual Conventions in New York and Pennsylvania, and also the following facts and figures: Number of lectures and addresses given during the twelve months prior to May 1, 1892, 107; number of calls made, 2,297; number of subscriptions secured for the Christian Cynosure, 515. That part of the report relating to the Washington building was referred to the Board of Directors.

The Committee on Nomination of Officers for the ensuing year, by Chas. A. Blanchard, Chairman, presented the following list for election: For President, Rev. M. A. Gault; for Vice-President, John Dorcas; for Recording Secretary, Mrs. E. A. Cook. The report was accepted, and these nominees were elected.

The nomination of Rev. Henry L. Kellogg as Corresponding Secretary was presented, and he was unanimously appointed.

Rev. W. I. Phillips was appointed Field Secretary and Treasurer.

A motion, by Prof. E. Whipple, amended by C. A. Blanchard, that the Field Secretary shall have control of field agents, under the direction of the Board of Directors, was adopted.

Prof. E. Whipple, Prof. H. A. Fischer and Rev. W. M. Howie were appointed Auditors.

The following were appointed a Board of Directors for the current year: Rev. T. B. Arnold, E. A. Cook, J. M. Hitchcock, Rev. G. R. Milton, Rev. J. P. Richards, Rev. E. R. Worrell, Rev. Edgar Wylie, Prof. E. Whipple, Rev. W. M.

Howie, Prof. H. F. Kletzing, and Chas. A. Blanchard.

H. M. Hugunin was elected office editor of the Christian Cynosure, under the same arrangement with the Board of Directors as was made last year.

The Committee on Resolutions, through its chairman, Rev. A. W. Parry, reported as follows:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

WHEREAS, God has tenderly watched over this Association during the last year, and prospered the work with more than usual success,

Resolved, 1. That with devout gratitude to God we acknowledge these blessings and devote ourselves, with renewed diligence, to the work of the year to come.

Resolved, 2. That we rejoice in the goodness of God in the spared lives of so many who have been in the front ranks of reform conflicts for many years, and desire to mention, with special gratitude, God's goodness to him who has been our standard-bearer from the beginning of our work.

Resolved, 3. That we learn with pleasure of the efforts being put forth to close the gates of the World's Fair on the Sabbath day, and pledge ourselves to the support of any measures that we believe will best secure this result.

WHEREAS, We are about entering upon another national political contest,

Resolved, 4. That we urge upon the several conventions the importance of selecting those men as leaders who are free from lodge entanglements.

WE RECOMMEND, That each minister of the Gospel connected with this Association, or who is friendly thereto, be requested to inquire personally the attitude of the minister, or ministers, associated with him in the village, or community, in which he resides or labors, and urge upon them to speak out boldly against these unfruitful works of darkness.

The report, as a whole, was adopted.

The following are the names of corporate members absent from the meeting, each of whom sent a letter relating to the meeting and the work: H. Curtis, Wm. Hoverstork, H. Baldrige, Rev. Chs. H. Abbott, Rev. Woodruff Post, M. L. Worcester, Rev. J. A. Richards, Mrs. Sarah E. Allis, Rev. Henry L. Kellogg, Mrs. Nora E. Kellogg, Prof. C. G. F. Miller, Rev. J. E. Roy, D. D., Richard Platt, Rev. R. N. Countee, John Sutcliffe, Rev. T. B. Arnold, Thos. Hodge, J. B. Crall, Rev. Wm. Wishart, Timothy Hudson, J. M. Hitchcock, Prof. E. G. Paine, Rev. B. T. Roberts, Samuel A. Pratt, C. B. Knight, Rev. Walter L. Ferris, Rev. H. H. George, Rev. Milton Wright, Rev. J. L. Barlow, J. K. Alwood, Rev. J. W. Morton, G. W. Needels, W. T. Ellis, Rev. Nathan Callender, Miss Sarah E. Morrow, Rev. C. Bender, Rev. Alexander Thomson, Rev. E. D. Bailey, J. A. Conant, Rev. C. F. Hawley, Milton Ford.

Several extracts from the communications of these absent ones were read by W. I. Phillips; and on motion all the letters were referred to the editorial department of the Christian Cynosure for consideration and disposition. Portions of them will appear in the Cynosure for May 26.

Brief speeches were then called for from members of the Association present, and responses were made by Rev. J. B. Galloway, Rev. L. Taylor, Rev. J. W. Fifield, Rev. W. M. Howie, Rev. L. B. Davidson, and Rev. M. A. Gault.

The consensus of the remarks of these gentlemen was of a cheerful confidence and hope in the success of the work, notwithstanding the rapid increase of secret lodges, and a determination to press it during the current year, among the churches and by personal effort. Rev. Mr. Taylor suggested the great need of a manual for the home training of children in opposition to secret societies. Rev. Mr. Gault told of a secret society of children which came under his observation, behind closed blinds and locked doors. Mrs. E. A. Cook also dwelt upon the great importance of thoroughly educating the children on this subject, and of her own success in teaching industrial school classes to avoid the evils of the secret lodge.

After a prayer by Rev. L. Taylor, the meeting adjourned sine die.

—On Thursday last, at Colorado Springs, Colo., it being the sixty-third birthday of Geo. W. Childs, of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, a large number of guests assembled to celebrate the occasion by dedicating the Childs-Drexel Home for Union Printers, the joint gift to the union printers of the country by Mr. Childs and the banker, A. J. Drexel, also of Philadelphia. It is a costly present, and was made the vehicle of a good deal of adulation of the donors and the secret order by the recipients.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PROPHETIC WARNING AGAINST CONVENTS.

IRON HILLS, Iowa, May, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The prophet Ezekiel was chosen to be a watchman for God's people. His language reaches also down beyond the Jewish dispensation, telling before the time what degradation, under the cloak of worship also, Christians would resort to and obey under false teachers. We find in Ezekiel 13: 17 and 18, these words: "Likewise, thou son of man, set thy face against the daughters of thy people which prophesy out of their own heart, and prophesy thou against them, and say: Thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the women that sew pillows to all armholes, and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls alive that come unto you?"

The German version appears to be given in a more definite sense in the 18th verse, saying: "Woe unto you, who make pillows for the people, pillows under the arms, and pillows unto the chiefs, both old and young, to hunt souls," etc. God dictated unto the prophet to prophesy against the daughters of his people and against those which represented themselves as the expounders of the law, which perverted his divine commandments and his promises, hunting souls under false banners, as having proper keys to insure to them salvation and eternal life in their sacred institutions under their own dictations. The very words represent a scene of idolatry, portraying a band of indolent and idle worshippers looking to statues and images as divine intercessors, charming in appearance and harmonious with the shepherds' foundations.

Verse 19: "And will ye pollute me among my people for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that hear your lies?"

The Roman Catholic church is full of just such missionaries, who enjoy the comforts of life. They ask not for a few grains of barley, but are avaricious enough to demand that the coffers and cellars be filled with full stores of earthly riches.

The prophet illustrated such falsifiers as destroyers of life, as murderers standing prepared to kill souls which were not designed to be brought under condemnation and death. The victims were blinded in obeying the lies of those which the prophet pictured off as leaders, under the cloak of religion. Monasteries and convents are looked upon by Romanists as heavenly highways, containing within them living saints fully consecrated and betrothed to our Lord Jesus Christ, where living saints of the church could have a foretaste of heaven itself.

20 and 21: "Wherefore, thus saith the Lord God: Behold I am against your pillows, where-with ye there hunt the souls to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly. Your kerchiefs also will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they shall be no more in your hand to be hunted; and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

The prophet does not refer here to the priests which rule and govern the heathens in heathen lands, and never had an opportunity to hear the Gospel preached, but he gave stronger proof, showing that these were men living in a state of apostasy in the fold of the church, hunting souls to make them fly, or (in other words) supply them with wings so that they might enjoy a faster journey towards the life to come.

Isaiah gave a graphic illustration of the mass in chapter 28: 7-20, whereby these people would make pretensions to hold communion with heaven itself; saying, in verse 15, to-wit: "Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves."

These strong cords of faith shall be torn and be broken in the Day of Judgment. Verses 22 and 23: "Because with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life; therefore ye shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations, for I will deliver my people out of your hand: and ye shall know that I am the Lord."

The apostle Paul said, in Rom. 12: 2: "Be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." A Romanist has no way of proving what is that acceptable and perfect will of God. He is bound to conform to the requirements of the Church of Rome, which allows him no such privileges or private investigation and judgment. A Romanist must conform to Roman traditions, such as confession, the hearing and seeing the performance of mass, praying to the Virgin Mary as a treasurer of divine grace. The Roman Church promises to all those who accept these formalities, eternal life, as the prophet Ezekiel foretold nearly 600 years before the birth of Christ.

The Day of Judgment will be a scene of disappointment to these shepherds, as well as to the sheep which were led astray into paths of sin and abomination, whose hearts were made sad through the lies of their teachers, and sinners strengthened in the hands of wicked rulers; all shall know that God had appointed Christ to sit on the throne of his glory in judgment as King of kings and Lord of lords.

B. EISENTRAUT.

THE CELEBRATION OF DECORATION DAY.

SPRATT, Ohio, May 5, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The enclosed communication was sent to the Wellsville (Ohio) Union; but, so far as I know, was not published. Yours, etc.,

JOHN D. OWENS,

An honorably discharged member of the G. A. R.

Editor of Wellsville Union:

In your notice of Decoration day, in issues of June 5th, you give as a reason for the non-participation of the "various orders and societies in town, the failure of Henry Cope Post to invite them to observe the day."

In the decoration of soldiers' graves, why should the old soldiers be obliged to take the initiative? or feel compelled to continue such a custom? Are there none others who recognize the greatness of that undertaking called "The war for the Union?"

While the decoration of comrades' graves is a sad pleasure to "the boys" that remain, the fact that they are about the only ones who voluntarily reverence the memory of the departed, is, to them, a humiliation! To be forced to invite secret societies to participate in such observance is, to them, a GREATER HUMILIATION!

For secret societies to base a refusal to observe Decoration day upon either the fancied or real neglect of the post, places their patriotism in its proper light—a show. The patriotism of secrecy is pomp, parade, presumption, puerility. Respectfully,

JOHN D. OWENS.

Spratt, Ohio, June 11th, 1891.

THAT EXPOSURE OF ORANGEISM.

UXBRIDGE, Ont., April 23, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We were glad to read the first article from "A Seceding Orangeman," on the above subject, and we are patiently waiting to see the remainder of the articles promised. Send them on, and pour in all the light you have on this dark nest. Here, in this Dominion, where the Orange lodge is all-powerful, such an exposure is especially necessary and will be heartily welcomed by not a few. I gave that first article to a young minister who has been delivered from the thralldom and foolery of the Orange lodge and after he had read it, I inquired, "Does that article agree with what you know of Orangeism?" He replied that it did, and was substantially true from beginning to end.

Personally we are profoundly glad that no member of the Free Methodist church can belong to the secret lodge—no matter what soft name it may have. Of course, we might multiply converts and adherents much faster, were it not for the stand we take against secret societies. But our eyes are on the Judgment, and we would rather do such work as will stand in that day than to compromise with the works of darkness, even though it may be at the risk of reputation, money, ease, or any worldly honor.

ALBERT SIMS.

Enclosed you will find part of a letter which I received a few weeks ago, and which I thought would be of some interest to the readers of the Cynosure:

A. S.

REV. A. SIMS—Dear Sir: I take the liberty to write you a letter telling you how your tracts and books are received. I verily wish that every house had one of those "Hand-books of Freemasonry." Very few know there is such a book printed. As I am a Mason's wife, I cannot (without disturbing the peace of my home) say anything; but my earnest prayer is that something will happen to bring the lodge to an end. What one Mason says, they all say—that the book is a lie; but I have found out that some of it is true.

We are Methodists, and I cannot understand why a Christian man should desire to join the Masons; but those who unite with the lodges do not know much about it before they join them. New ones are joining them continually. They work for their lodges unceasingly, and the people do not know it. I have had a glimpse behind the curtain. . . . If a Mason receives a tract on secret societies, nobody else sees it; if any one asks him about it, he will say "it is lies," and that "the man who wrote it might better be doing something else;" and, of course, he being a Christian, will be believed. . . . What can be done?

LITERATURE.

Miss Frances E. Willard contributes a paper to the May number of the Arena, and her benign portrait embellishes the opening pages of that magazine. The title of her article is a line from Tennyson, "The Woman's Cause is Man's," and she bravely lays claim to woman's high position in the affairs of life where man, by nature and education, is no more capable than herself of achieving success. Other papers and contributors are as follows: Austria of To-Day, by Emil Blum, Ph. D.; Psychological Research (continued, showing some more remarkable instances), by Rev. Minot J. Savage; The Use of Public Ways by Private Corporations—A Discussion, by Samuel L. Powers and Solomon Schindler; Zoroaster and Persian Dualism, by Prof. James T. Bixby, Ph. D.; The Strength and Weakness of the People's Movement, by Eva McDonald-Valesh; Alcohol and its Relation to the Bible, by Henry A. Hart, M. D.; A Riot in Rome, by W. D. McCracken, A. M.; Reform, a poem, by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; A Spoil of Office (continued), by Hamlin Garland; The Broadening Horizon of Civilization, by B. O. Flower; Books of the Day. Boston: The Arena Publishing Co., Copley Square. $5 a year.

American Gardening for May is replete with letter press and engravings both seasonable and attractive. The full-page frontispiece is a fine view in Washington Park, Chicago. Illustrated papers are: A Cannon-ball Tree; A Fine Rustic Bridge; Floral Beauties of our Bogs and Ponds; A Garden at Lake Worth; Greenhouse Construction Simplified; A Home-made Weed-killer; Low-trained Fruit-trees; The Lucretia Dewberry; A New Destructive Disease in Carnations; A New Hardy Flowering Almond; Ornamental and Practical Gardening; The Removal of Large Plants; the Rhaps Palms; Setting out Large Plants; Sharing Flowers with the Unfortunate; Summer Bedding in a Brooklyn Garden; Taste and Art in Arranging Home and Other Grounds (continued); Vines About the Verandah, etc. The various departments of floriculture and horticultural information are also well filled; and the number, as a whole, will be favorably received. New York: The Rural Publishing Co., Times Building. $1 a year.

Vick's Illustrated Monthly for May has pleasant talks and pictures about the Egyptian Lotus, Lima Beans, Planting for Others, How to Read Weather Signals, Summer Drinks, Tuberose Bulbs, Potato Bugs and Blight, Success with Pansies, Seventeen-Year Locusts, Sending Plants by Mail, Extermination of Ants, Sweet Corn, Lilies, and many other timely topics touching orchards and gardens. Rochester: Vick Publishing Co. $1 a year.

The Christian Worker is a new monthly periodical published at Springfield, Mass., by the students of the School for Christian Workers, an institution designed for the preparation of young men and women for lay Christian service. The organization of the school provides for the adoption of the best methods for performing such work, and the first monthly reports in this magazine show some of the good results already attained. Price, 50 cents a year.

John B. Alden's new series of Knowledge is a handsome four-page weekly, nicely printed. The first five numbers contain installments of Longfellow's "Evangeline" and Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," and each is superbly illustrated. Other standard works will follow. The price for a year's subscription (52 numbers) is 50 cents. Published at 57 Rose street, New York.

—A class of seventeen members, all heads of families except one, was organized at Harvey, Cook Co., Ill., April 24, with prospects for an early increase.

LODGE NOTES.

LODGE CHARITY EXEMPLIFIED.

'Bro. McCord was insured in the Knights Templar and Masons' Life and Indemnity Co. of Chicago, in the sum of $5,000, in favor of his wife, and he having died in the city of Galveston, the company declared his policy forfeited by reason of one of the provisions of the policy as to traveling south of the thirty-second parallel of north latitude. We... had a personal conference here in Denver with the president of the company, the result of which was a compromise of the matter by the company's paying to Mrs. McCord the sum of $3,500, in full of her claim under the policy.'—Report of Committee to McCord's Lodge.

Masonry is eminently a religion of personal responsibility, and each individual must stand or fall by his interpretation and exposition of its principles.—Square and Compass.

THE FOUNDATION PRINCIPLES

or landmarks of Masonry were never clearer to the student than now, yet to the superficial learner, who has railroaded his way through the ritual, innovation and landmark are alike unquestioningly accepted. So subtle in fact has become the encroachment of innovation that even the symbolism of the initiation is affected. The likeness to the temple is diminished, even, by the common interpretation latterly accorded the "circumambulation." The floor of the lodge which is included within the sacred square described upon the hypotenuse, should be sacred from the tread of a profane even while seeking light in Masonry. Some learned students of the mystic lore claim that the border of the lodge, outside the chairs, should be the route of the candidate, until proper admission is had through the gates in regular form. To admit a candidate, however, within the gates at once and then expect him to understand the symbolism of the various seeming obstructions is unreasonable.—Ibid.

ODDS AND ENDS.

An exchange says: "It is estimated that there are 132,000 ladies who have become Daughters of Rebekah." If the writer of this paragraph will examine the Sovereign Grand Lodge Journal, p. 12,515, he will find that at the close of 1890 there were a total of 132,808 members of that branch of the order, two-fifths of whom, or over 53,000, were men. The Rebekah branch is rapidly increasing in numbers, but not quite as fast as that. The natural increase for 1891 will be from twenty to twenty-five thousand.—Odd-fellow's Companion.

The following is said to have occurred in Chicago: "A brother of a Rebekah Lodge in the southwestern part of the city, who had been sick for six weeks, and in addition to the benefits from his subordinate lodge, had been paid his salary during the period of his sickness, walked into the Rebekah Lodge of which he was a member, and demanded $12 benefits out of a depleted treasury, or he would take the charter from the wall."—Companion.

"The Order Alabama," said to be "instructive and amusing," is a new Masonic gibbosity, to which only Royal Arch Masons are admitted. The program includes a banquet and speeches.

Odd-fellowship of to-day and Odd-fellowship of sixty-five or seventy years ago are very dissimilar institutions, as the following from the "General Laws of Washington Lodge, No. 1, of the Order of the Independent Odd-fellows, held at the new hall, 1823," of Baltimore, Md., would indicate, it being the scale of money penalties imposed upon the members of the venerable lodge: "For any improper dress, 12½ cents; swearing, for each offence, 12½ cents; singing indecent or political songs, 12½ cents, and not less than 6½ cents; for eating or drinking in lodge room, reading newspapers or books, or giving invitations contrary to law, 12½ cents, and not less than 6½ cents; permitting a brother to enter the lodge without demanding the password, 100 cents; for leaving the door so that a stranger may walk in, 500 cents."—Exchange.

Scrofula is, in the main, a disease of early life. Home knowledge is all astray about it. You cannot tell whether your child has it or not; your doctor will know.

We do not prescribe. We are chemists. We make the remedy, Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil. Your doctor must tell you when to use it.

A book on CAREFUL LIVING tells what scrofula is. Shall we send it? Free.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1892.

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

Suddenly, but peacefully, on Saturday forenoon last, ex-President Jonathan Blanchard passed from the church militant to the church triumphant, to dwell forever more with our Lord Jesus Christ.

Of late, owing to the return of a former ailment, the President, enfeebled by the weight of years, had been more or less confined to his house, but his illness was not considered dangerous, and early on Saturday morning he was reported at this office as improving in health. But a rapid change occurred a little later, and his long and useful life was ended.

We, of the N. C. A. and the Cynosure, with our thousands of readers and old-time friends of the cause, sincerely mourn the loss of our counselor and friend. We reserve, for a future number, a more complete notice of this dispensation with a biographical sketch of his career.

His obsequies occurred on Tuesday forenoon, the services being conducted in the chapel of Wheaton College by Rev. J. E. Roy, and attended by a large concourse of mourning relatives and friends. During the day of the funeral the office of the Cynosure was closed out of respect to its venerable founder.

THE POPE IN A TOLERANT MOOD.

Last year, when Archbishop Ireland, of the Roman Catholic church in the St. Paul diocese, effected his bold and un-American scheme of placing priests of that hierarchy as principals in the public schools at Faribault and Stillwater, Minn., with nuns as teachers,—thus giving those schools a decidedly sectarian character—Archbishop Corrigan, of the diocese of New York, objected, and considerable controversy ensued among important prelates of the church. To make a long story short, the matter was referred to the Vatican, and the Pope, by Cardinal Ledochowski, has expressed himself as follows: "The arrangements entered into by Archbishop Ireland can be tolerated." Furthermore the Cardinal writes: "When the Holy See declares that such provisions may be tolerated, it thereby puts an end to all indiscreet attacks upon them." That means that Archbishop Corrigan and his adherents must henceforth be "like dumb and driven cattle" when this subject is brought into consideration.

But how about our Protestant citizens? Are they, too, to see their non-sectarian school system, famous for its effectiveness and intelligence as an educator, to pass into the hands of any sectarian oligarchy without a vigorous protest and an effort to defend themselves and our cherished free institutions from submergence in the superstitions and monkish rites of Rome?

If any doubt exists of the danger that threatens our schools and, indeed, all our boasted American liberties, let the address of Mrs. E. Trask Hill, printed in this paper to-day, convince the incredulous of the disasters that await us as a free republican nation, if we longer "tolerate" that upon which the Vatican has been pleased to place the seal of its approbation.

Oh, for another Luther!

WRIPPLED IN THE LODGE.

In Chicago, last week, John Geiger, a "Forester," brought suit in the Circuit Court against Court Valley Forge, No. 169 I. O. F., and its officers, to recover $25,000 damages, which he claims under the following charges: Several months ago, when the plaintiff was being initiated into the order, the officers of the lodge broke his leg in three places while compelling him to enter into a mock war and jump into a supposed lake of fire to show his courage. As a result of this excitement he claims he is injured for life. According to his side of the case, the lodge offered to settle for $200, but he claims that they have given him only $20.

The Iowa Times-Republican of April 28, 1892, tells the following similar instance of rough usage toward a novice in a lodge: "A man may fool his wife and family once in a while, especially when he transacts business in this city, and his family reside in another town, but will eventually get caught. There is a gentleman who resides at Liscomb, and who was elected Treasurer last fall, that got caught napping last Saturday night. He told his wife he would not be home on the train which leaves here at 6:30, as was his custom on Saturday nights, but would meet a friend here, and be home at 11:45. He met him, or at least looked as though he did when he reached home, with one hand in a sling, and a large patch of skin off his forehead. His wife was informed by a friend who was sent ahead to announce him, that her husband fell off a moving train, but it has since leaked out that he took a degree in a Masonic lodge, and the goat did the mischief. No names will be given."

An intelligent correspondent of this paper, writing from Quarry, Iowa, May 1, says: "The man referred to is our County Treasurer. His name is Emry; and the lodge is the same one that mobbed Ronayne a few years ago, at Marshalltown, Iowa, where the Times-Republican is printed."

Messrs. Geiger and Emry may well ask, in unison, "Is it worth undergoing so much to learn so little?"

These instances of ruffinly "circumambulation" are quite too frequent, and lead one to suggest that "the rough and rugged roads," of the lodge-rooms sadly need improvement. Occasionally the novice is killed by this sort of "fraternal benevolence," and no one is punished. Why not?

INCONGRUOUS OCCUPATIONS.

It is said that last year a troupe of baseball players alternated their "games" with street-preaching and other evangelistic efforts. What measure of success they had in the latter avocation is not apparent. They evidently succeeded well in the former.

A similar case is at hand. An agent for a secret society with a life-insurance attachment, who holds forth in the streets in advocacy of his order, also labors as an "evangelist" in the churches. It conveniently advertises his business, and doubtless pays, at least, his expenses. To express it mildly, such relations are out of harmony with the "eternal fitness of things." To put it in a more forcible form, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

FACTS.

INTERESTING TO THE CHRISTIAN PEOPLE OF ROCKFORD, AND ESPECIALLY TO THE CONGREGATIONAL "GENERAL ASSOCIATION" IN SESSION THERE, MAY, 1892.

Our American poet and statesman, James Russell Lowell, said that "a new reform-truth is a 'new Messiah' sent to separate the friends of truth from the friends of falsehood, and thus to "Put the sheep upon the right hand, and the goats upon the left."

At the time this was written, the "new Messiah" was opposition to American slavery. The then condition of things is now amazing. The popular Christianity of the country was slaveholding Christianity. General Cocke, a corporate member of the American Board, was a slaveholder. Its missionaries in the Cherokee and Choctaw nations owned slaves, whom they were by law forbidden to teach to read the name of Christ.

Dr. Artemus Bullard added twenty "new school" slaveholding-churches to the list of those aided by the American Home Mission Board in a single year. A slave owned by an elder in one

If American Christians had not been ignorant of the nature of slavery, there would have been no war. Knowledge would have prevented it. An equally fatal ignorance of the false altars which have desolated Judea and destroyed the United States of Palestine, now broods over and protects the worshippers of secret altars in the United States of America. It is not because the American people approve of these terrible evils so divinely denounced, but because they do not understand them. And the people called Congregationalists, who have been said to be the freest-minded people on earth, owe to God, their country, themselves and their children, to break up this lodge-produced ignorance and pour in the light of truth.

Already this grand work is grandly begun. Joseph Cook, A. J. Gordon, and others in Boston; Dr. E. P. Goodwin and others in Chicago; the good Dr. McCosh and his associates of Princeton, at the headquarters of Presbyterian orthodoxy, not to omit Richard S. Storrs of Brooklyn, N. Y.; the world's evangelists, Moody and Pentecost, are among the number of those now living who have written their names on the fore-front of this majestic movement for the destruction of the false worships of the earth.

Let us, with rejoicing, hail these thickening tokens of the coming reign of Christ, and beg for ourselves and our children a share in the glorious triumph which is sure to come. of these churches fled to Denmark, Iowa, and was concealed by the venerable Father Turner, in his cellar, for three weeks. He was captured; and the elder, who had distributed the elements of the Lord's Supper the day before, while his slave was kneeling before him put handcuffs on his arms as they were lifted to God and his master in prayer, and sold him South to the nameless terrors described in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Yet, during this state of things, some of the first minds and first characters in the United States were Abolitionists. Such were Dr. Beman of Troy, Dr. Hawes of Hartford, Beriah Green and Yates of Albany, in the church, with S. P. Chase, Charles Sumner, Thaddeus Stevens and a host of compeers in the State.

But the Abolitionists were despised, derided as men of one idea, hated, mobbed, and some of them were imprisoned and murdered. So odious was the term "abolition" that Mr. Lincoln substituted the word "abolishment."

A change soon came, and the Illinois General Association, met in Rockford, passed a resolution of thanks to God, that the condemnation of slavery was become general (see Minutes, 1862); and the same year the Association voted to republish its resolutions condemning the secret lodges which had sheltered slavery and originated the war in their Southern lodge-rooms.

The lodge is, indeed, the worse institution of the two. It includes in its ceremonial the crime of blasphemy, the folly of sorcery and the sin of idolatry. Masonry murdered Morgan; the Clan-na-Gael, Dr. Cronin, and the Mafia, Sheriff Hennessey—innocent men, and patriots; and sanctified the murderers by their false altars. If the citizens of Rockford will read the Association's Minutes of 1862, they will be surprised at the clear and forcible condemnation of secret lodges. The action of 1862 repeats and re-affirms action taken in Farmington, Jacksonville and other parts of the State, declaring secret lodges hostile to republican government and the church of Christ; and repeats the action taken here in Rockford in 1850, declaring that "however secret societies may differ among themselves, they are all anti-republican in their tendencies, and are all leading * * * ultimately to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity."

These resplendent testimonies, given here in Rockford, should be worn as ornaments by the city. A future awaits them like that which has crowned opposition to American slavery. This is not all that the General Congregational Association has done. A few years later, with but one dissenting vote, it adopted the report of Dr. Edward Beecher, which says of the lodge: "BY IT CHRIST IS DETHRONED, AND SATAN IS EXALTED;" and also the resolution drawn by Prof. S. C. Bartlett, lately President of Dartmouth College, then of Chicago Theological Seminary, declaring Freemasonry "HOSTILE TO GOOD GOVERNMENT AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION." These earnest testimonies should be read from their Minutes, and re-affirmed by the General Association.

—An old subscriber informs us that in May, 1858, there were only three days during which it did not rain. There seems to be no season so unpleasant that some one does not remember a worse one.

—China has received intelligence of the extension of the anti-Chinese exclusion law with more equanimity than we had reason to expect under such exasperating circumstances. Cablegrams from the Chinese government, received at Washington last week, directed the representative of that government at the American capital to hold negotiations with the State Department to see if the harshness of the law could not be softened by diplomacy. These instructions will, of course, be carried out, but it is doubtful if any good comes of it. Should the negotiations fail, diplomatic relations will, it is thought, be suspended, although the minister expresses doubt of such an alternative. We shall see.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

WHITESBORO, N. Y., May 2, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In continuance of my Eastern campaign, on Wednesday, the 20th ult., I paid a visit to the Methodist University, situated on Beacon Hill, Boston. I did not find the dean in his office, nor any classes in session at the time. But Prof. Marcus D. Buel, the librarian, said they would be pleased to receive a donation of our reform books, for the information of the students. Their library was large, and appeared to be carefully kept, and I concluded to send them.

The next day I went to Andover and found a large and popular library in the seminary, with but one reform book there; viz.: J. Q. Adams' Letters on Masonry. Prof. Wm. L. Ropes, who is librarian, assured me that our anti-secrecy literature would be gladly received and well cared for; and so I made arrangements to send them the books.

On the 24th, at 3 P. M., a very interesting meeting was held, in the parlor of the talented writer, Miss E. E. Flagg, by the friends and advocates of reform, in Wellesley, which I was invited to address. Afterwards there was a season of discussion, and earnest testimony against the secret conclaves of the land. One brother spoke warmly against the secrecy of priestly confessional and of the Jesuits; and one, who had been an Odd-fellow, gave his voice against the system.

The next day I visited the ladies' college at Wellesley. Miss Shaffer is president; and they have two or three large halls, and an extensive general library. There is a large number of advanced students in the classes. Miss Hawes, the librarian, very readily assented to receive our reform books, which I promised to have forwarded. This college is one of the most useful institutions of our land, and is, I think, quite liberally endowed.

On Tuesday there was a meeting of Christian workers at 235 Pearl street, Somerville, which I attended, and was invited to open with prayer. Afterward I made a brief address on missions in North Dakota, and asked their prayers for a blessing on that work. At Crescent Beach, which is in the northeastern suburb of Boston, there is a lay college or training school for missionaries and other Christian workers. They have a large building, already paid for, with lecture-room and library; and in the upper part, students' rooms and a dormitory. Rev. J. P. Bixby is president, and two city pastors assist in the lecture course. They are interested in our reform work, and Rev. James M. Gray, who is one of them, invited me to address the students on the subject. So I went out to the Beach with him, Wednesday afternoon, and spoke to them for a while, and proposed to give them the five dollar library; for which the Professors offered me their thanks in advance.

I closed my Boston campaign by taking the cars on the 29th ult. for Amherst, where I met Pres. Gates and conferred with him about our reform literature. He was very cordial, but said that the Greek-letter societies were numerous there. Still they had one anti-secret literary society in Amherst, which was strong and prosperous; and they would like to have our books, and would ensure their being well used. So I made arrangements to send them the books, and went on my way to Williamstown. Here I found Prof. Funnell, who was acting president, and told me that the college was full of secret societies, and nothing else, and that I had come to the wrong place. He said I might leave the books; but I did not like to put them out in the cold, with no one to care for them. So I passed on, and am stopping with friends for a few days in Central New York.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 11, 1892.

One question which has, in some form, been before Congress ever since there was a Congress, and which will probably stay there as long as there is a desirable piece of land owned by an Indian tribe, or aggregation of tribes, is that relating to the purchase of Indian lands by the government. This week the Senate, after the expression of opinions directly opposite to each other as to the justice of the claim, by such eminent Senators and philanthropists as Mr. Allison, of Iowa, and Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, adopted by a vote of 43 to 13, a resolution which declares it to be the opinion of the Senate that, for reasons set forth in the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs upon the President's message of February 17, last, as to the appropriation in the bill of March 3, 1891, for payment to the Choctow and Chickasaw nation, for their interest in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reservation, there is no sufficient reason for interference in the due execution of that law. The President's message referred to informed Congress that he had, in the discretion constitutionally vested in him, directed that the money appropriated—about $3,000,000—be withheld until there was a fuller investigation of the matter or more legislation upon the subject. The opponents of this resolution which practically orders the money to be paid, claim that no money is due these Indians because they were paid for their lands fifty years ago.

Justice William Strong, chairman, delivered the opening address at the celebration of the sixty-eighth anniversary of the American Sunday-School Union, which was held here Sunday evening, and a very interesting address it was. He began by saying that little was heard of the work of the Union, because instead of being denominational it was conducted by all denominations, and it made no appeals through denominational methods. More than half of the Sunday-schools in this country, he said, were started by agents of this Union, and the grand total, to the first of March last, was 86,000 Sunday-schools. During the twelve months ending with February, the Union organized 1,664 Sunday-schools in places previously destitute of religious privileges, containing 7,018 teachers and 59,551 scholars; aided several thousand schools already established; distributed by sale or gift 6,548 Bibles and 9,115 Testaments; made visits to 56,582 families; delivered 12,474 sermons and addresses; reported 6,678 conversions, developed 216 churches from Sunday-schools, besides securing regular preaching in many places. Is not that a work for any organization to be proud of?

Rev. Joseph H. McCullagh, superintendent of the Union's work in the South, made a few remarks concerning the work of his division and showing that the Union was doing temperance as well as religious work. He cited a case where a Sunday-school was started in a bar-room in a Kentucky mountain village, because there was no other place in which a meeting could be held. The result of that meeting in such an unhallowed place was the organization of a church with a membership of 80, and the raising of $1,000 for a church building. Eight months after that meeting, Mr. McCullagh again visited that mountain village. He found the church built, dedicated and paid for; the bar-keeper and his wife active members, and their oldest son at a theological seminary, equipping himself for the ministry.

The railroads sold excursion tickets at reduced rates for the benefit of the Washington and Baltimore people who wished to attend the meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly, which is to be held at Portland, Oregon, this week. As the tickets are good for ninety days, quite a number of our people took advantage of the opportunity to visit the Pacific Slope.

The temperance people who have been working to secure Congressional legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds of the World's Fair are, of course, pleased to learn that the Attorney of the Chicago World's Fair Board of Directors has given the opinion that the Hyde Park code will make it illegal to sell intoxicating liquors on the Exposition grounds; but they are not disposed to relax their efforts to secure a law that cannot be set aside by the Chicago local courts, as this attorney's opinion may be when it will be too late to secure Congressional action. They wish to be absolutely certain that the rum fiend shall be shut out.

President Harrison has written a letter to Dr. S. I. Baldwin, Secretary of the Methodist Book Concern, of New York, explaining why he signed the Chinese bill, but he declines to make the letter public, saying that it was a private communication. Dr. Baldwin previously wrote to Mr. Harrison, stating his belief that the bill in question was highly improper and inhuman.

Senator Platt yesterday presented several petitions from Connecticut churches asking legislation for the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday. He said he was in sympathy with the objects of the petitioners, but not with the threat contained in the petitions of future opposition to Congressmen who voted against closing the Fair on Sunday.

THE HOME.

FELLOW LABORERS WITH PAUL.

"Those women which labored with me in the Gospel, and others of my fellow laborers, whose names are in the book of life."

They lived and they were useful; this we know,
And naught beside;
No record of their names is left to show
How soon they died;
They did their work and then they passed away,
An unknown band,
And took their places with the greater host
In the higher land.
And were they young, or were they growing old,
Or ill or well;
Or lived in poverty, or had much gold,
No one can tell.
One only thing is known of them; they were Faithful and true
Disciples of the Lord, and strong through prayer,
To save and do.
But what avails the gifts of empty fame?
They lived to God.
They loved the sweetness of another Name,
And gladly trod
The rugged ways of earth, and they might be Helper or friend,
And in the joy of this their ministry
Be spent and spend.
No glory clusters round their names on earth,
But in God's heaven
Is kept a book of names of greatest worth,
And there is given
A place for all who did the Master please,
Although unknown,
And their lost names shine forth in brightest rays
Before the throne.
O take who will the boon of fading fame!
But give to me
A place among the workers, though my name
Forgotten be;
And if within the book of life is found
My lowly place,
Honor and glory unto God redound
For all his grace.

—Marianne Farningham.

DEEDS OF KINDNESS.

Four little girls came tripping along a beautiful country road one bright morning, the first day of May. They would make an odd-looking group now; for this was long ago, when little girls, and even their mothers, wore "shakers," as they were called, instead of the pretty, broad-brimmed hats that we see nowadays.

Their shakers were made of white or colored straw, and in shape were very much like a flour-scoop. They had deep capes of gingham, blue-checked, brown-checked or pink, and some had narrow ruffles of the same around the edge. They were very hot and close, but kept the sun from leaving his unsightly spots on small noses and cheeks.

These little girls had on shakers; neat print or gingham dresses, and good stout shoes. Each carried a basket on her arm, for they were going Maying, and fully expected to bring those baskets home full of sweet spring flowers, or, at least, moss and pussy-willows. Besides, they now held a dainty lunch to be eaten by-and-by.

They were Addie and Ella, Celia and Etta, and soon they came to a pleasant white house where they were to call for Essie Bright; but oh! they found her in great trouble. Speedily the sunny morning seemed overcast with clouds.

Their sweet friend Essie had one very great fault which I really hate to tell you about; for usually she was such a sunny-hearted, helpful little girl that everybody loved her. She had a quick temper, and when provoked was apt to speak disrespectfully.

It seems dreadful to tell of, but it was true that she was sometimes saucy to her own kind mother.

That was the trouble this lovely morning, and her mother had said that she must be punished by not being allowed to go to the May party.

As Essie had planned the whole, and invited her special friends, the punishment seemed more than she could bear. So now she stood at the kitchen sink washing dishes, with the great tears falling into the dish-pan, and listened to the girls' pleading tones in the sitting-room.

They were begging hard for Mrs. Bright to forgive Essie just this once and let her go with them. That dear, good mother, seeing that, quite against her will, she was punishing four other little girls, agreed to consult father Bright about letting their sorrowful, repentant little daughter go without further punishment this time. Mr. Bright thought as Essie was so truly sorry, and the other girls so unhappy about her, that she might be allowed to go. Instantly, the clouds and tears were banished, and a happy but very sober little girl skipped up the stairs to make ready while mother packed the lunch for her.

I must stop right here and tell you that in spite of Essie's faults she often suffered very real sorrow on account of them; and would pray very earnestly for help to overcome them; but I think the reason why she did not realize more help from our heavenly Father was that she forgot to watch. You know he says: "Watch and pray."

But girls and boys do not stay sober or unhappy very long; so, by the time these had reached the Ledges, they were laughing and chatting as noisily as a flock of sparrows. They went hopping and skipping about, very much like the birds, searching among the dead leaves and around the stumps after the shy hepaticas, which were the only flowers they could hope to find so early in the month. The arbutus did not grow there.

Each found a small bunch of the downy blue and white flowers, plenty of acorn cups, and green mosses of many kinds.

On a steep slope made very slippery by the fallen dead leaves grew quite a number of large oak trees; and there they had great fun, and not a few narrow escapes from rolling from the top to the bottom. At the foot of the hill were several great boulders and flat rocks which made a beautiful place to dine.

By this time they were getting very hungry, and in less time than it takes to tell it the nice dinner was arranged on a flat-topped rock. The little maids made a pretty picture sitting around with shakers thrown back, or lying on the ground, so that, for once, the sun had his own will and way with the rosy faces.

There were ham sandwiches, hard-boiled eggs, small round turnovers, with crimped edges, seed cakes and doughnuts, while right in the middle was a round plum-cake surrounded by a wreath of evergreen. Nice, cool water from a spring near by filled the bright tin dippers, and I'm sure it must make you hungry just to imagine the delightful feast.

They were nearly done, and were leaning back against the rocks telling riddles—"griddles," Essie's little brother called them—when a sharp scream, followed by a scratching and rolling, made them spring up in great alarm. A very much frightened and tumbled little girl lay at their very feet, she having rolled from the top to the bottom of that slippery slope. They helped her up; brushed the leaves and sticks from her long hair and clothes; and then Celia found tongue to ask how she came there and who she was.

"I'm May Lenox; and just as I reached out for a lovely bit of evergreen at the top of the hill, my foot slipped on some wet moss and I thought I'd never stop rolling," answered the little girl bashfully.

"It's a mercy you didn't kill yourself, child," said the motherly Miss Celia.

"Oh, girls! See the lovely flowers she has spilled on the way," said Etta.

"Yes," said May, "it is my birthday, and Aunt Ladd let me come out for a little while. The flowers are for granny—she can't move out of her chair."

"Oh! I know," whispered Essie very softly. "She is the little girl who has just come to live at that cross Miss Ladd's. I shall invite her to my party. You know teacher told us only yesterday to look out for the little deeds of kindness, and I'm very sure this will be one."

So loving Essie went close to May, and slipping an arm around her, said earnestly: "We're very glad that you are not hurt, and you must come and have some lunch right away. There's plenty left that we haven't touched; but I do wish you could have seen our cake with the wreath around it."

May shyly allowed herself to be led to the table on the rock, while all the girls offered their dainties with generous hands. She ate slowly, but plainly enough was very hungry.

When she would have no more she took one of the pretty crimped turnovers which Celia had urged upon her, and said bashfully: "If you don't mind, I will take this to old granny."

"Of course! Do take something more for her! I know she will like this ham!" burst from the girls, as each one eagerly brought forward the nice food and filled May's basket in a twinkling.

"She isn't my granny at all," said May, "but she is old and helpless, and I love to do something to please her. Mamma used to tell me that even a little girl like me could give a cup of cold water;" and the child's soft eyes filled with tears at the thought of the dear mother who had left her so alone.

The day which had begun tearfully came near ending in the same way, the girls were so in sympathy with their new friend; but the tears were soon brushed away, and the ever-ready Celia proposed that they should at once start for home.

"We will go your way, May," they chorussed, and started gayly off up the hill.

Busy tongues can say a good deal in a half hour, and when the girls parted at May's gate it was with a mutual understanding and a warm regard for their new friend.

"I've had a perfectly lovely time," said May.

"So have we!" shouted the girls. "Be sure and come in our class next Sunday. I'll tell teacher that you know about 'little deeds of kindness,'" screamed Essie, tossing a kiss for a last good-by.—Helen A. Butler, in Christian Intelligencer.

THE ROCK OF AGES.

I saw, in a vision, a shepherd on the prairie, with umbrella and waterproof, quietly watch a gathering storm; when suddenly a cyclone developed, and the black pillar of cloud appeared to spin upon the earth and wrench the heavens as it drove furiously toward him. Frightened for life, he observed a large rock some distance off, and casting away his umbrella and waterproof he leaped to run with patience the race set before him, looking to the rock. As the storm was near lifting him from the earth he neared the rock, and seeing a cleft in its side, he gasped:

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

Crouching low and leaning hard against it he felt safe, but for the raging thirst and heat after the race. Glancing down he saw at his feet a gentle spring from beneath the rock. It was all too much for his grateful heart, and he said: It is the hand of God, and these are symbols of the Saviour to my forlorn and storm-tossed soul.

And as he quaffed the living water he bowed his head in the prayer: "As the hart panteth after the water-brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God." Then I heard and felt the glad music of his soul:

While I draw this fleeting breath,
When my eyes shall close in death,
When I soar to worlds unknown,
And behold Thee on Thy throne,
Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in Thee.

WHY TAKE MUSIC LESSONS?

The answer to this question is determined by the nature of the individual. The conception that the individual has of the art of music will manifest itself in the springs of action which prompt him to take lessons. I have met individuals who desired to commence the study of this sacred art, actuated by the motive of a longing to appear in the concert at the close of the term, and thereby charm (?) the public by their skill in handling the keys of the piano-forte. I have met others who take lessons as a means of displaying wealth. They desire to convince the world that they are as rich as Croesus of old. Others who are favorably impressed with the world, and desire to be in style, take lessons because their neighbor does. I have met others who take lessons in order to become a shining society light. They desire to possess all the accomplishments that a belle of society can obtain. Others are actuated by a more ameliorating spirit, and take lessons because they think some men like musical wives; thus they will ward off that dreaded impending thought of becoming old maids, from which all girls recoil with horror. I have met some who take lessons to become teachers, thereby to make a living, and amass a fortune—no mean motive, but yet not the best. Lastly, I have met a few who take lessons for the art's sake. They have sipped at the fountain and have tasted of its sweetest extracts. Their soul has been kissed by the morning air of Paradise, and they are basking in a higher and nobler atmosphere of pure motives. This last is the zenith motive of the musical profession, while the former are the nadir. He who follows such blind motives as the former will soon be found living on the same plain. The individual actuated by the first motives will be satisfied with a little mechanical skill in shaking the keys of a piano-forte, parrot-like. The individual actuated by the last motive will not only demand a wise, intelligent, technical manipulation of the keys of a piano-forte, but will possess himself of a theoretical intelligence. Those who persist on entering the profession prompted by the first motives and can not be induced to accept a better motive—it would be better for the musical profession were a millstone hanged about their necks, and they cast headlong out of the profession.

He who is actuated by the last noble motive will be more than a mere player and singer. He will be a wise, intelligent, fine thinking and a fine feeling musician, a grace and an ornament to the profession; and an honor to his God.—Prof. C. E. Atkinson, in the Hartsville College Index.

A PERFECT REST.

(Psalm 38.)

Oh, rest thee in the Lord,
Wait patiently for him;
Though heart seems like to break,
And star of hope grows dim,
Till words of wondrous sweetness
Float o'er the clouds that roll,
"Oh, rest thee in the Lord,
The anchor of thy soul."

Oh, rest thee in the Lord,
When weary of life's care;
Oh, rest thee in the Lord,
When loads are hard to bear.
That refuge fails us never,
And e'en though tears may start,
Think not that he forgets
The longings of thy heart.

Thy dearest heart's desire
Shall in due season cheer;
Gold must be tried by fire
Before 'tis pure and clear;
Then when in loving wisdom
Our Father seeth best,
Unnumbered blessings come
To those that in him rest.

TEMPERANCE.

A POWERFUL PROHIBITION SERMON.

Among the old papers of the noted law-firm of (Abraham) Lincoln & Herndon, at Springfield, Ill., not long since, Mr. Robert H. Patton, a prominent attorney in that city, and a member of the Illinois State Prohibition Executive Committee, found a copy of a sermon preached by Rev. James Smith, D. D., entitled: "The Bottle—Its Evils and Remedy." "It was delivered," says the Springfield Liberator of April 28, 1892, from which we copy it, "at the First Presbyterian church, January 23, 1853, over thirty-nine years ago, being seventeen years before the Prohibition party was organized, and yet that sermon is the strongest argument in support of political prohibition that we have read in many a day."

On the day following its delivery, Abraham Lincoln and thirty-eight other gentlemen who had "listened to it with great satisfaction," requested Rev. Dr. Smith to consent to its publication, "believing that if published and circulated among the people, it would be productive of good."

The request was granted, and the sermon was printed in a sixteen-page pamphlet by the Springfield Journal Company, in 1853.

Dr. Smith's text was: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him."—Habakkuk 11: 15.

In the sermon Dr. Smith considered:

1. Some of the evils resulting from the use of the bottle.
2. Inquire, who hath put the bottle to his neighbor?

3. The remedy.

A few random extracts will show the masterly way in which the subject was handled under these three comprehensive divisions:

1. The necessary tendency of the use of strong drink is to destroy the character of the man, and to make him worse than useless in society. It leads to idleness, extravagance and debauchery. It impairs the man's reason, deranges his intellect, renders him stupid and almost irrational; and when in this condition the unhappy creature finds himself neglected and shunned by the better portion of society; he loses self-respect, and associates altogether with the worthless, the profligate and abandoned. Now that he has lost all sense of honor he cares not for character, for he feels that he has none to lose, and the consequence is, that in the depth of his degradation he is prepared for the violation of every duty, and for the commission of every crime . . .

The tendency of the use of the bottle is to destroy the peace and happiness of families. It is a perpetual source of quarrels, contentions and discord. How mortifying to the feelings, and how destructive to the happiness of a kind and affectionate woman who has a delicate sense of honor, to behold her beloved husband, who is the object of her most tender affections, the victim of this low vice; drunk on every occasion, rendering himself contemptible in every company; neglecting his business, sinking her and her beloved children into poverty and disgrace.

Behold such an one returning to his home from his bacchanalian revel; he appears in the presence of his family with his hair disheveled, his clothing torn and soiled, his face mangled and bleeding, his system impregnated with the contents of the bottle, his eyes glaring, his mouth foaming; like a fiend of hell. . . . In his inebriate madness he lets fly a chair, the tongs, or whatever implement he can reach, at the head of that affectionate boy, who has ever studied to anticipate all his wishes; he levels on the floor that lovely daughter who never said to him nay; while the trembling mother, with an agonized heart, is weeping over her prostrate and mangled children. Like a tiger, or a hyena, he falls upon her, whom before God and man he had sworn to protect and cherish; he seizes her by the hair, drags her over the house, leading to her many blows, inflicting upon her many kicks, until she falls prostrate at his feet. Then like a fiend he triumphs in the pain and misery he has inflicted; or he retires to sleep, to wake up in the morning to be filled with remorse and shame, which, alas! are soon to be dissipated by the contents of the bottle.

2. Who hath put the bottle to his neighbor? He that did this is the author of all the misery and woe we have been contemplating. He hath produced this deep, this damning degradation. To him are to be traced those oaths, that blood, those scars, the tears of that wife, whose husband has returned to his home transformed into a brute. He hath caused the groans of the orphan children of that man, who, in his drunkenness, has fallen from his horse and broken his neck. He it was, who, by his bottle, excited that inebriate to plunge the knife into his brother's heart; or with his pistol to hurry a fellow immortal, unprepared, into the presence of his God and judge, from him to receive a sentence which hath doomed him to eternal woe. He, it is, who hath blasted the prospects of promising youth; degraded his fellowmen below the brutes; reduced the honorable Senator to a level with the driveling idiot; dragged the venerable judge from the bench and placed him a criminal at the bar; and driven the minister of the Gospel from the pulpit to the gutter. He hath caused many a tear, made many broken hearts; sent multitudes to the poorhouse, the penitentiary and the gallows. He hath filled the land with weeping, wailing, mourning and woe; and he hath peopled perdition with the spirits of the lost!

But who hath put the bottle to his neighbor? Do you reply, the liquor-seller? he is the author of all this misery and woe. If he be, what is his most fitting reward? Is it wealth and honor, or poverty and disgrace? Is it a palace or a penitentiary? Is it a crown or a cord round his neck? Or is this the sentence you would render: Let the liquor-seller be taken without the camp, and let him be stoned with stones until he die. . . . I have shown you that if you sentence the liquor-seller and the proprietor to the penitentiary, you are bound, on the same principle, to pass the same sentence upon the Legislature and his excellency, the Governor. But that no injustice be done, before passing the sentence, these honorable gentlemen must be heard in their own defence. They come forward and frankly admit that they enacted the license law; they further admit that they did this knowing the evils which would ensue from the traffic in strong drink. But they maintain that in so doing they acted as the servants of the people, and under the conviction that they were doing their will and good pleasure. And his excellency, the Governor, tells you that he did not veto that bill for the simple reason that he was convinced the people would not sustain him in that action. It must be admitted by all that the pleas of these honorable gentlemen are good and valid. Therefore, the sentence of acquittal must be rendered by you. But if they acted as your servants, and in this instance obeyed the voice of the people, it follows that all who aided in the election of those who passed the law, knowing that they would pass it, or who have voted for any member of any subsequent Legislature, knowing that he would use no exertions to have it repealed, must plead guilty of having aided in fastening upon society a law, the working of which has produced so much degradation and misery; and if the liquor-seller is condemned by you to be taken without the camp and stoned with stones until he die, let that man among you who is without sin cast at him the first stone.

3. The liquor traffic is a cancer in society, eating out its vitals and threatening destruction; and all attempts to regulate it will not only prove abortive, but aggravate the evil. No, there must be no more efforts to regulate the cancer; it must be eradicated; not a root must be left behind, for until this be done, all classes must continue exposed to become the victims of strong drink; and the woe in the text must abide upon us: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth thy bottle to him."

The remedy. The most effectual would be the passage of a law altogether abolishing the liquor traffic, except for mechanical, chemical, medicinal and sacramental purposes; and so framed that no principle of the constitution of the state or the United States be violated.

These brief extracts will give the reader a partial idea of the logical and comprehensive manner in which Dr. Smith treated the subject, and it will also appear that his views are in perfect harmony with the principles of the Prohibition party to-day. And it was this eloquent appeal for absolute prohibition which Abraham Lincoln with thirty-eight other prominent citizens of Springfield endorsed and requested for publication. A number of those whose names appear on that petition are still alive. It would be interesting to know if their endorsement to such principles could at present be obtained.

Reliable information states that during his administration President Lincoln appointed this same Dr. Smith, the radical prohibitionist, as consul to Dundee, Scotland, an additional evidence of the high esteem in which he held him.

Every one to whom this sermon has been shown since its discovery by Mr. Patton urges its publication. Certainly a stronger campaign document could not possibly be written. It will, therefore, be published in convenient pamphlet form. The edition will be limited. Those desiring copies should therefore order at once. One man has already ordered two hundred copies. This simply shows the high estimate which has been put upon it by those who have seen it. Order at once. Price 5 cents; three for 10 cts.; 10 for 25 cts.; 24 for 50 cts.; 100 for $2.00.

Address all orders to Harnly Bros., Springfield, Ill.

Congressman Price, of Wisconsin, says: "I am neither a crank nor a saint. I simply want the man who will sell liquor put in State's prison for it, and the fellow who will drink it shut up in an insane asylum."

Prohibition prevails in Oklahoma. The beneficence of the law is unquestioned. A man at Guthrie voiced the general sentiment when he said: "Prohibition is our salvation; without it there would be a murder every day."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The four World-Powers.—vs. 36-43. It may seem singular that God should thus reveal his plans and purposes to a heathen king, and yet there was a peculiar fitness in his choice of Nebuchadnezzar, who represented the first of the great world-powers in the acme of its pride and glory. God, from the earliest ages, held personal intercourse with a few chosen ones among his people, but when he communicated with the heathen world at all it was through the indirect agency of dreams. The heathen believed in dreams as of supernatural origin, thinking that in this way the gods spoke to men and revealed future events; but the Jews were discouraged from paying them any such superstitious regard. The whole narrative shows that God does not use the same method of dealing with sinners as with saints. Instead of appearing to Nebuchadnezzar, and speaking with an audible voice as he did to Solomon, he presents to his mind the apparition of this great image, which, fantastic as it may seem to us, was perfectly congruous to the Assyrian mind, accustomed to see daily those monstrous sculptures which adorned the walls of their temples and palaces. The image's head was of fine gold, which Daniel interprets as having reference to the first of the four world-powers which it typified. "Thou, O King, art this head of gold." This cannot refer to any moral excellence in Nebuchadnezzar or his people. When John wished to represent the pride, sensuality and cruelty of the apostate Church of Rome, the antipodes of the true church, the new Jerusalem, he could use no more descriptive name than Babylon; and for centuries this title has stood as the synonym for all peculiarly great and wicked cities. Reference is here made, without doubt, to its vast wealth. It is called in the Prophets, "the golden city," and its mystical namesake in Revelation is represented as holding a golden cup in her hand, in allusion to the vast and ill-gotten riches of the Roman See. "Another kingdom inferior to thee;"—the kingdom of Medo-Persia. Says Prideaux, "The kings of Persia were the worst race of men that ever governed an empire;" but it does not mean moral—only political inferiority. Nebuchadnezzar was an absolute sovereign in every sense of the word, but the lesson for June 12 will show us that Darius, the first king of the Medo-Persian empire, was obliged to yield to the will of his nobles when he would fain have saved Daniel from being thrown to the lions. The third world-power was the Greek empire under Philip of Macedon. The "brass" probably alludes to the brazen coats of mail worn by Greek warriors. Then comes the fourth, the great Roman empire, "terrible, and dreadful, and strong exceedingly," yet with the elements of weakness and division in the feet and toes where strength and stability is most important. Rome, we know, fell by the invasion of countless barbarian hordes who intermarried with the conquered, thus forming the different kingdoms of Europe as they exist to-day. The metals decrease both in value and weight from the head downward until the last limit of decadence is reached in the feet and toes. We are now living in times of disintegration when the anarchistic element is threatening the stability of all existing governments. It is the iron and clay age, the very toes of the image.

2. The stone cut out of the mountain.—vs. 44, 45. Charlemagne and Napoleon both tried to found a fifth universal monarchy, but they failed. Revelation seems to point to another and last attempt in the near future. The stone cut from the mountain without hands shows the supernatural origin of the coming kingdom. It will not be the fruit of human efforts or human planning. The image represents really one great world-power, whose component parts as soon as the stone strikes the feet are scattered like worthless chaff. Verses 37 and 38 show conclusively that this great world-power was set up by God, yet in a very different way from the kingdom he is to set up finally which is to destroy it. These four kingdoms, which by turns ruled the world, were to be an object lesson, showing how insecure and unstable is all government that does not rest on the basis of the divine law. "The dream is certain,"—no phantom of the king's imagining; "the interpretation sure"—every jot and tittle of it will come to pass. The ten toes correspond to the "ten horns" which are so many kingdoms that are yet to appear and usher in the reign of anti-Christ, the individual head under which all the forces of evil are to unite.

3. Daniel's promotion.—vs. 46-49. "Then the king made Daniel a great man." This is using human language to denote the recognition of a greatness that was there all the while, and which no decree of the king could take from or add to. His remembering his friends is another noble trait; but great honors and great trials go together. Had they remained in lowly positions, it is not likely that they would have had to confront the fiery furnace or the den of lions. "Seek not great things for thyself," but when God calls us thereto, let us humbly trust him for the needed strength.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

ANOTHER SECT.

—People's churches to advocate social reforms on Christian grounds are being organized in different places. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has a Prohibition church. Rev. W. G. Todd is the pastor of a People's church in Topeka, Kan. It looks to us as if there were sects enough. We think that Christian patriots can do more good inside than outside the churches.—Christian Patriot.

BAPTIST.

—At the thirty-seventh session of the Southern Baptist Association, at Atlanta, Ga., a few days ago, reports were read from the boards of home and foreign missions and Sunday-schools. The former showed missionaries, 365; churches and stations, 1,324; baptisms, 5,274; churches constituted, 179; meeting-houses built, 80. The entire expenditure for the year was $132,747.82, and the deficit is $9,662.50. The report of the foreign work shows 170 missionaries and native assistants, 180 stations and outstations, and 434 baptisms. The total receipts were $114,325.80, and the deficit is $16,932.24. It has been the most prosperous year in the history of the work. The Sunday-school board presented a very full report of the first year's history of its work, showing a business of $20,800.66 for the year, with a balance on hand of $1,065.78 and assets over liabilities of $4,081.63, which, beginning the year with nothing, was thought to be doing very well.

—The formal identification of the Baptist Theological Seminary of Chicago with the new Chicago University took place a few days ago, in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the seminary. The grounds and building previously occupied by the seminary are to be used for the Preparatory Department of the University. The Divinity School brings to the University, in buildings, lands, leases, library and endowment funds, property valued at nearly $500,000.

—The death of Rev. Theodore Nelson, D.D., LL.D., president of Kalamazoo College, which occurred on April 30, is a great loss to that institution and to the denomination in Michigan. He was born in that State in 1841, and was for eight years pastor of the First Church, Saginaw, and was identified with various educational interests before accepting the presidency at Kalamazoo.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Dr. D. K. Pearson, whose generous provisions for education have placed many schools under lasting obligations, has tendered $100,000 to the Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) provided other friends of the school rally with $350,000 additional by May 1, 1894.

—The statistical reports of the Illinois churches for 1891 give a membership of 36,071, in 300 churches; additions on confessions, 2,799; by letter, 1,943; a total of 4,742. This is a gain above all removals of 2,899. The baptisms of adults were 1,503; of children, 786; total, 2,289; 203 societies (Y. P. S. C. E.) report membership of 9,370; Sunday-schools under church care have a membership of 48,472; a gain of 840 on reports of 1890. Sixteen new churches have been organized and associated.

—Dr. E. P. Thwing, of Brooklyn, N. Y., preached the ordination sermon, May 1, of his youngest son, who expects to go to China, in September, with his wife, sisters and parents, all missionaries. Two more children are abroad in Alaska, making seven in one household.

—The Congregationalist announces that seven professors of Clark University are going to the University of Chicago, and that that institution seemed likely to secure Prof. George H. and Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer.

—There are now 51 Congregational churches and 74 Sunday-schools within the city limits of Chicago. Of these the society has organized 27 churches and 28 Sunday-schools, besides five suburban churches. Four new churches were formed the past year. The ministers employed in this work preach in German, Norwegian, Swedish, Bohemian, and English.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.

—The Canada Conference has settled the question of annexation with the Canada Methodist church, by a declaration of firm adherence to the Evangelical Association. It may not be generally known to the church that for several years strong efforts have been made on the part of Methodists across the Lake to incorporate the Canadian wing of the Evangelical Association.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The increase of the church during the quadrennium is highly gratifying. At the last assembly of the General Conference in 1888 the whole number of communicants, including members and probationers, was 2,093,935, showing an increase during the preceding four years of 264,401. The increase in the last four years exceeds that number, the list showing at present 2,292,614. During the four years probably 150,000 have died. This number, added to the increase during the quadrennium, shows an aggregate of 442,000 souls added to the church by profession of faith in the last four years, a church created larger than the entire Methodism at the end of the first fifty years of its existence.

—In 1887 and 1888 the number of churches was 20,755. There are now 23,395, an increase in the four years of 2,640. The values in the former period were $80,812,792; at the present date they are $98,134,113, an increase of $18,321,321. In the four years values in parsonages show a corresponding increase. This increase is, to a considerable extent, due to the Board of Church Extension. A large proportion of the churches built have received aid from that fund, and many of them never could have been built without the help thus rendered.

—Prof. Henry S. White, Ph. D., of Clark University, has been elected to succeed Prof. E. H. Moore as associate professor of mathematics in Northwestern University. Mr. White ranks among the first in his department. He graduated from Wesleyan University in 1882. In 1887 he went to Germany and studied at Gottingen till 1890, when he secured his doctor's degree.

—Calvary Methodist church, corner Seventh avenue and One hundred and twenty-ninth street, New York City, was started about eight years ago with less than fifty members. The present membership is 1,071, and the pastor reported to conference that the membership had increased last year at about the rate of one per day.

—Another Methodist minister has gone over to the Episcopal church. This time it is Rev. George H. McGrew, until recently pastor of St. Paul's Methodist church, on Fourth avenue, New York. The marble edifice which the congregation occupied has been sold and demolished.

—Announcement is made that a temperance and religious hotel is to be erected in Chicago for the World's Fair. The capital stock is placed at $1,000,000. It is largely a Methodist venture. These brethren are to be praised for their effort. If we get a Sabbath-keeping Exposition we would expect such an hotel as the one proposed should succeed; but if the fears of many in this regard should be realized, then there will be a very grave doubt of success, even to the extent of repaying the money expended.

MOODY.

—Moody, the evangelist, is on his way to the Holy Land. He thinks that by a personal visit and study of the land he will understand the Bible better. No doubt about that. There is nothing like a visit to Jerusalem and the surrounding country to confirm one's belief in the Word.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—At Harpoot on the Euphrates, we find one little mission church multiplying itself into fourteen, with four hundred and eighteen church members, eleven native pastors, more than half of these supported by these native churches, twelve licensed native preachers, twenty-one native teachers and forty-one other helpers; of pupils two thousand and forty-one, and scores of unpaid laborers going forth every Sabbath to tell the story of Christ under the inward impulse of love for souls. And all this the outgrowth of a single church, in a single missionary station, in less than twelve years, at a cost not exceeding in all $150,000—the cost of one modern church edifice. In 1878 ten thousand converts were baptized in the "Lone Star Mission," alone, within ninety days, and sixty thousand people in South India renounced idolatry.—Annual Missionary Address.

Y. M. C. A.

—Y. M. C. A. are scattered over the Dominion of Canada, the United States, Germany, Great Britain, Holland, Switzerland, South America, France, Norway and Sweden, Belgium, Spain, Denmark, Italy, Turkey, Russia, Austria, Hungary, Asia, Africa, Australasia and New Zealand. There are well on to four thousand associations in the different parts of the world representing a membership of about three hundred thousand. Of these eighty-two are railroad associations.

—Seven hundred and eleven young men have united with the San Francisco, Cal., Young Men's Christian Association during the past six months.

IS SPRING BEAUTIFUL?

A Little Philosophy Upon the Subject.

How Mud, Dust, Cold Winds, and Piles of Rubbish Announce the Coming of the Season.

"Spring, beautiful spring!" How beautiful it is! In the country there is mud, rain, stagnant pools where melting snows have accumulated, cold winds, a chilly atmosphere—in fact, everything that is disagreeable and injurious to life. In the city there are accumulations of the winter in the streets, in the back yards and even in the parks. They are exhaling poisons every minute, and these poisons are blown by the raw winds into the home of the millionaire, into the hovel of the squatter, into the nostrils of every one. A prominent doctor says: "The surest way of communicating disease is by the dust which is blown broadcast and inhaled by every one, whether he ventures upon the street or remains at home."

Spring is not beautiful until it has fully come. Spring is dangerous, spring kills more people than any other season, spring causes more people to feel miserable than all other seasons combined. What do people do? Seek to endure it and tone up the system. This is all very well, very philosophical, but how foolishly people act when they seek to tone up the system. They take spring medicines, blood purifiers, nervines, and scores of other nostrums which force of habit rather than efficacy causes them to do. It is all absurd. Why not strike at the root of the tree? Why not realize that all these disagreeable and dangerous things of spring would and could be counteracted if the two great organs of the body were in proper condition. These two great organs are the kidneys and liver, and the kidneys and liver can positively be kept in perfect condition by the use of just the right thing. Read what Dr. A. C. Clark, a well-known New York physician, says:

"I have never known a case of spring debility, spring fever, or any of the troubles which arise during this season, which has not been promptly and permanently cured by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. Its power at this time of year is wonderful. I have seen women, run down by care and overwork, men whose vitality was exhausted, and even puny children restored to perfect health through its use."

Mrs. M. M. Simonon of Buckley, Mo., says: "My daughter, who was once the perfection of health and happiness, was for years afflicted with kidney and liver disease, complicated with scrofula, the hip joint being affected. She became so bad that the doctors wanted to unjoint the hip. I would not consent to it, and began administering a remedy which I had heard much about, and I am happy to say she is now cured, well and healthy, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure."

Is it not plain to you that, being in perfect condition, the kidneys and liver will throw off the seeds of disease which the wind and the dust bring into the system, will counteract the reeking danger caused by the ash heap, the rubbish pile, the slimy mud, or which the cold winds, the raw atmosphere, produce? Suppose you think this over carefully and see if we are not correct, see if we are not right when we make the assertion that "spring is the most dangerous season of the year," rather than the most "beautiful season of the year." See if your own feelings do not prove to you that your system is weakened and must have help; see if it does not present itself clearly to you that the only way to help your system is by strengthening the great organs which uphold it. Are we right? If so, follow our suggestions.

How Can You Afford It?

The Manager of the Larkin Soap Co. was asked this question the other day. The answer was clear and concise—"Our methods and large volume of business." They do not sell any goods to the trade, deal only with the consumer. Nearly everything we consume in the family has to pass through several hands between the manufacturer and consumer, each of whom must make a profit on the transaction. The manufacturer must have a traveling representative, a jolly, well-dressed, good-natured fellow, whose expenses and salary must come out of the profit on the goods he sells. The jobber repeats all of this and also makes his profit, then the poor, hard-worked retailer must come in for his share. All of these items increase the cost of the goods from two to four hundred per cent. The statistics at Washington of the last census will fully prove all of this and more too, as the commercial travelers of the country are paid an amount for salaries which more than equals all the incomes of the ministers and doctors of the country.

In view of all this do you wonder that by effecting this great saving we can give so much for so little money? We aided materially to make the word "Chautauqua" more famous during the past year, but we are not, and will not be satisfied until we have placed Sweet Home Soap and the Chautauqua Ladies' Desk in 100,000 homes of our great and glorious country. Their advertisement last week on last page gives interesting details.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tire all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced."

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW TO DRESS CHILDREN.

Hundreds of letters of inquiry have come to me concerning the way my baby is dressed, and I am happy to respond to these inquiries by saying that she is clothed in such a manner that every organ has perfect freedom to expand and grow as God and nature intended.

For the first two weeks of her life she wore the band until the navel healed, but no longer. After that her wardrobe consisted of one little princess silk flannel, high necked and long sleeved, thirty inches in length; another garment is silk flannel, just like the first, without sleeves, and thirty-two inches in length, and her little dimity and nainsook dresses thirty-six inches long. Her diapers are of absorbent Jersey cloth, which I find far better and warmer than linen.

For very cold days I add to the above a very fine ribbed wool undervest in preference to outside jackets and pinning blankets. There are no white cotton or linen skirts, and no undergarments with bands about the body. Everything is of flannel and perfectly loose. The result of this kind of clothing is absolutely perfect health. A more vital and muscular child of three months could not be found in the United States. She is able to lift herself, turn from side to side and hold her body perfectly erect without assistance. She has raised her head unaided since she was two hours old.

Some women will no doubt exclaim, How wonderful! but I do not regard what little Vivian is able to do in that way, for it has long been part of my theory that infants are deprived of much of the vitality which properly belongs to them by the way the mothers dress prior to their birth. I gave my little one absolute freedom during those glorious months of anticipation, and I longed for her coming with my whole soul. Nature responded to natural law in giving me an exquisitely formed, vital, well child, and to her the magnificent heritage of sound directions.

Her dresses are dainty and babylike, but they are not loaded with a quantity of trimming. Two or three of her best gowns are trimmed with fine needlework and real Valenciennes lace, and several are made of the finest nainsook, with a bit of the real lace about the wrists and neck, but only one has a flouncing of embroidery, and I should not in preparing another little wardrobe have even that one.

Hand work and daintiness rather than elaborateness and much trimming is in far better taste for infants, and a deep, hand hemmed border to the skirt is prettier by far than a Hamburg flounce. Silk flannel, with a silk embroidered scallop at the bottom, is better than a machine embroidered flounce a quarter of a yard deep.

One last word about the night clothing. I have the daintiest of little Jersey wool nightgowns, fleecy on the side next the body and fine and soft to the touch on the outside, with seams opened and covered with white satin ribbon, feather stitched down to cover all raw edges. She does not wear at night any garments worn during the daytime.—Mrs. Annie Jenness Miller.

DAINTY WASH CLOTHS.

Every one needs wash cloths, for after one's face has been exposed to the wind and dust nothing else cleanses it so well, and for delicate skins the linen birdseye or diaper is found to be the most suitable material. A set of a dozen most attractive-looking wash cloths were shown the other day by a woman who has everything about her toilet as refined, dainty and neat as it can be made. These were made of a fine quality of linen birdseye, were a quarter of a yard square, and were hemmed very narrowly and by hand, of course. Torchon lace, three-quarters of an inch wide, whipped on the edge, and held loosely so as to make a little frill, edged these cloths all around. In one corner of each were the owner's initials prettily embroidered.

To cut them to best advantage it is well to select yard-wide linen, and if a dozen is the number required a yard will cut them exactly, dividing it into twelve equal squares. Twenty yards of lace will be required to trim them. Instead of giving one's towel rack an untidy look as the Turkish crash cloth ones usually do, these dainty affairs only add to the attractiveness of it.—New York Tribune.

WINDOW DRAPERY.

To those who are furnishing their apartments in the prevailing Chippendale style, we would suggest a treatment of window that would be most appropriate to such an apartment, the window draperies depending from a canopy. The draperies might be of a cream and green brocatel, with plain Genoa satin for the little flat curtains, and for upholstering the window seats. This scheme is admirably adapted for a room that savors of the antique, and could be equally well carried out in shades of green and terra cotta.—Decorator and Furnisher.

"Looks like a ghost!" That's what they say of the pale, thin, weak woman who's "run-down" and overworked. Probably she knows it herself. But there's one thing she can't know, or she wouldn't feel so and look so—and that is, that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is guaranteed to help her.

It's a legitimate medicine, made especially for woman's needs; an invigorating, restorative tonic and a soothing and strengthening nerve, imparting tone and vigor to the whole system.

But it isn't a mere stimulant. It's a remedy, safe and sure, for all the functional derangements, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses that make women suffer. In "female complaints" of every kind, periodical pains, internal inflammation, ulceration, and kindred ailments, it's guaranteed to benefit or cure, or the money is returned.

No other medicine for women is sold so. Proof that nothing else is "just as good."

FARM NOTES.

BEAN CULTURE.

It is not advisable to put beans in the ground very early, unless care can be taken to cover the young plants on cold nights. However, as some varieties are hardier than others, the early six weeks bean may be planted before the more delicate Lima bean. The very early golden-eyed wax bean is quite desirable, because, aside from its earliness, it is tender, rich, an immense bearer, and the bushes are quite free from rust. Another good variety is the new prolific black wax, which is also stringless, buttery in flavor and a good bearer. The lazy wife's pole bean continues in favor with many, on account of the pods remaining for so long a time green and tender. The best acquisition to the bean family which has been made for years is the bush Lima. This variety does not bear as large beans as the pole Lima, but comes into bearing much earlier and is very prolific. A few short rows will produce all a medium sized family can use through the summer, and enough dried ones for winter use. The pole Lima should not be banished from the garden on account of the new and more easily cared for bush Lima, for such beans as "Ford's Mammoth" are not easily surpassed, and if a surplus is produced—which is very apt to be the case, as the well filled pods are eight to ten inches long when grown in good soil—they sell readily at fifteen cents per quart. The farmer should also grow his own winter beans. It is the thrifty man who grows, so far as possible, everything for his own table and has a little surplus to sell when he goes to town, whose land is not mortgaged to pay store and other debts.

Sod ground, when weeds are not apt to be too troublesome, is excellent for beans. Thorough culture is necessary, but should not be given on a very hot or a wet day. Beans are heavy feeders, needing much nutrition, and they suffer also for lack of moisture. Some growers fall in properly harvesting the crop. The pods should not be allowed to come in contact with wet earth, nor suffered to heat when stored. When beans are thrashed, if there is danger of heating, it may be arrested by running them through a fanning mill, which also assists in cleaning them.—Inter-Ocean.

SCAB IN POTATOES.

After a series of experiments Professor Bolley, of the North Dakota Station, comes to the conclusion that he can avoid the production of scabby potatoes, if he cannot entirely eradicate the disease. He finds no substantial evidence that any soil of whatsoever kind can in itself give origin to the disease. But the disease germ can and does remain in the ground from crop to crop for at least four years. Scabby or disease-bearing seed tubers can and will under ordinary circumstances produce a diseased crop. But by soaking the seed tubers before planting in chemical solutions enabled him to raise an undiseased product from the scabbiest of seed where the ground was known to be free from the disease. Seed tubers free from the disease germs will in any soil, clay, sand, or muck, raise an undiseased product, provided only that the soils themselves are free from the disease.

A PIG FEEDING EXPERIMENT.

A writer in the National Stockman contributes the following experience in feeding pigs:

We had 26 shoats that weighed 2,000 pounds Oct. 16 last. They were fed on a cement floor, with good warm shelter, and a lot for exercise. They were fed 68 days, and made a gain of 2,205 pounds, which was sold for $73.22, when hogs were at about the low water mark. They consumed bran and oil meal to the value of $6.50, and 180 bushels of corn, making the value of the corn 37 cents per bushel. Corn at that time was selling for 35 to 40 cents in our market. But as the distance to haul was five miles, we made more by feeding our corn than by selling it. A large pile of manure was also hauled from the lot to the field for corn this year. Had the corn been fed to hogs that sold earlier in the season at 4 to 4½ cents, the gain would have been yet larger, and a fair profit the result.

ODDS AND ENDS.

"The curl in the pig's tail is worth a dollar," says an experienced breeder, pointing to a fine specimen. And so it was. It indicated good health, vigorous constitution, and thrifty constitution. The pig's tail uncurls and droops as soon as he is sick as surely as the dog's tail does when he is frightened. Keep a good watch of that and you will find out the sick, weakly, and unthrifty pigs almost at a glance. Having made the discovery, then take them out and keep them out of the herd. If they have not a disease that will infect the others, the others will probably kill them by crowding them at the trough and in the sleeping quarters.

Keep your cattle away from the evergreen trees for the sake of the trees. The cattle can stand it. What a desolate appearance a farm house has where the cattle range the dooryard in winter and make a sport and plaything of the shade trees. We are not sure but that it would be a good thing for some people if there was a law against having a neat and tasty dooryard. They would be sure to want one then.

Do Not Delay Longer.

The benefit to be derived from a good medicine in early spring is undoubted, but many people neglect taking any until the approach of warmer weather, when they wilt like a tender flower in a hot sun. Something must be done to overcome that tired feeling and give the strength necessary to do daily work. Vacation is earnestly longed for, but many weeks, perhaps months, must elapse before rest can be indulged in. To impart strength and to give a feeling of throughout the system, there is nothing equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It seems peculiarly adapted to overcome that prostration caused by change of season, climate or life, and while it tones and sustains the system it purifies and renovates the blood. We earnestly urge the large army of clerks, book-keepers, school teachers, housewives, operatives and all others who have been closely confined during the winter and who feel the need of a reliable medicine, to try Hood's Sarsaparilla now. It will do you good.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER is now introduced into America, and will very shortly be on sale at all the principal retail stores. Meanwhile every American lady is invited to send to ALFRED BIRD & SONS, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, for the Dollar Sample Box of Bird's exquisite English Home Specialties, and to entertain her family and friends with a few choice English dishes by way of a change.

THE DOLLAR SAMPLE BOX contains four of the articles for which Bird's name has been a household word throughout Great Britain and her Colonies for more than half a century.

CONTENTS OF THE BOX.
FIRST, a packet of BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER, sufficient to make four pints of the richest custard without eggs, which may be served either from a dish or in the ordinary custard glasses, and is delicious with all canned, bottled, or fresh fruits. Bird's Custard possesses the richness and nutriment of cream without risk to the most sensitive digestion.

A remittance of one dollar to Messrs. BIRD & SON'S New York Office, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, will bring the sample box EXPRESSED Free of Charge. If any dissatisfaction, the money will be willingly refunded, providing the goods are sent back intact.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. Table of Contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50c.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. B. a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25c each.

SECOND, a packet of BIRD'S BLANC-MANGE POWDER, enough to make three large Blanc-manges a pint each. The Blanc-manges are most agreeably flavoured and are highly nutritious, and can be produced in a variety of tints, forming a charming dessert dish, and contributing to the decoration of the table.

THIRD, a tin of BIRD'S CONCENTRATED EGG POWDER, a complete substitute for eggs in puddings, cakes, buns, griddle cakes, and all similar kinds of English and American confectionery, to which it imparts the lightness, richness, appearance and flavour of new-laid eggs. This tin is equal to 30 new-laid eggs.

FOURTH, a canister of BIRD'S GIANT BAKING POWDER, claimed to be the strongest and best article of the kind in the whole world. It will go twice as far as ordinary baking powder, and is guaranteed free from alum, ammonia, or any impurity whatsoever, all the ingredients being of the highest quality. N.B.—Messrs. BIRD were the original inventors of Baking Powder in 1842, and the secret of their process has never yet been discovered.

For a fifth article the box contains a copy of "Sweet Dishes," a booklet full of practical hints and numerous original recipes of tasty dishes for the dinner and supper table. The recipes are all new to American cookery, and are suited to American measures, methods and cooking utensils.

The whole of the above are enclosed in a tastefully finished artistic Cartoon Box, an excellent specimen of English fancy box ware. When the samples are taken out, it will make a very pretty handkerchief, glove, or cotton box.

This Dollar Sample Box is intended solely to introduce Bird's English Specialties into American Homes, and cannot be purchased retail, and Messrs. BIRD will not be able to supply more than one sample box to each household. Remember the object in view is to distribute samples of the Special Domestic Luxuries for which Bird's name stands first and foremost as a guarantee for Purity and High Quality.

The Royal Baking Powder Officially Commended.

It is particularly gratifying to consumers to know that the baking powder which they have so long been accustomed to using, the Royal, has invariably gone through all analyses and competitive tests made under National and State authority, not only without a reflection against it of impurity or unwholesomeness, but each time more emphatically indorsed as the superior of all the baking powders of the market.

The health authorities of New-York, Massachusetts, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, California, Washington and other States have made exhaustive examinations of this character, uniformly finding the Royal superior to all others. The United States Government Chemist, after an examination for the Indian Department, emphatically stated that "The Royal Baking Powder is the purest in quality and highest in strength of any baking powder of which I have knowledge." The official analyst of Ontario says that he "finds the Royal Baking Powder far superior to the others," and recommends its use in preference to any other. Likewise hundreds of tests made by public analysts and other chemists of prominence throughout the country show the Royal pure, wholesome, and to produce an average of twenty-five per cent. more leavening gas than any other baking powder.

When there are so many impure and unwholesome mixtures, called baking powders, in the market, consumers will wisely adhere to the Royal, whose good qualities they have proven, and whose superior purity and wholesomeness have been officially established.

The present issue of the Cynosure is a memorial of the lamented Jonathan Blanchard. The biographical sketch and portrait of our friend, co-worker, and counselor but faintly convey an idea of his appearance and life-long Christian service, but will recall to many the memory of his efforts to make better men and women of all with whom he came in contact. There was a magnetism in his presence that was manifest in his oratory and writings, and has left a wholesome and indelible impress upon the age in which he lived and labored.

An accidental displacement of the types, in last week's issue of the Cynosure, so sadly distorted the editorial entitled "Facts" as to render it unintelligible to the casual reader. To remedy this annoying incident, we reproduce the article in its corrected form on the fourth page of this number. It was, as previously stated, the last article written by the lamented ex-Pres. Blanchard.

"Butler's American Handbook," which is noticed on page 6 of this issue, will be sent post-paid to any address from this office, on receipt of forty cents.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, the New England agent, writes as follows: "I have read with more than usual interest the record of the annual meeting of the N. C. A. on the 11th inst., which has just reached me. Though the number in attendance seems not to have been large, there could be no more auspicious omen, or certain harbinger of a successful future than the evident unity of spirit and harmony in decision which prevailed. May God make this the Pentecostal season and Sab-batical year of the N. C. A. in every department of its work."

Among the important business transacted by the Methodist General Conference at Omaha, last week, it was decided that no new bishops were necessary. This decision precludes the possibility of the election of a colored bishop. Editors of the official church papers were elected, Rev. Dr. Arthur Edwards being retained on the Northwestern Christian Advocate. Resolutions were adopted protesting against the treatment accorded the colored people by the whites of the South. The conference had previously protested against opening the World's Fair on Sunday.

One of our esteemed exchanges notes the fact that "some stir is being created in religious circles in France by Mr. M'All's new scheme of evangelizing the country by means of a 'sermon boat.' It is a floating church capable of accommodating an audience of 200, and of passing up the rivers and canals." Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's floating chapel, on the Southern rivers, has been "going about doing good" as a missionary for several years, and has not only created "some stir," but has carried the Gospel into numerous lodge-ridden, dark places with the best effect.

The New York correspondent of the Christian Mirror hit the nail on the head when he said: "A writer in these columns recently brought three indictments against the Chinese in this country: Their use of opium, lustfulness and their maintenance of secret societies with oath-bound pledges and fearful penalties. These allegations are true. They are evidences of heathenism. Either is a menace to the church and state. They are to be deplored. But our own land is suffering from all these evils, and it ill-becomes us to blame these heathen for what we, professed Christians, allow."

The terrible hurricane which devastated the Mauritius (or Isle of France), April 29, as reported in the daily press, was a duplication of the calamitous storm that swept the island in March, 1868. The destruction by this latest convulsion of nature was immense, especially in buildings, chattels, crops and shipping, and was accompanied by numerous fatalities. The island belongs to the kingdom of Great Britain. The calamity of 1868 occurred during the prevalence of a serious epidemic, which added to its horrors. The recent storm is described as one of unprecedented severity. By it over 1,200 persons lost their lives.

Will those of our friends whose subscriptions have recently expired, or are about to expire, kindly renew them at once? The expenses of publication of the Cynosure have to be met in "hard cash," and every dollar received for the paper is necessary to its existence. Another way in which our friends can help the paper and the cause materially is to canvass their respective vicinities, during hours of leisure, and solicit new subscriptions from neighbors. Also, if any can obtain advertisements of any honorable business carried on in their neighborhoods, they may help us in that manner. Will you make an effort in this behalf?

It is stated, and we do not doubt the story, that the Cynosure's lamented old friend, Jonathan Emerson, of Minnesota, has engraved upon his tombstone the following sentence: "If you want to know about the secrets of lodges, send to the National Christian Association, 221 West Madison street, Chicago." One party who learned that such was the case (from a newspaper item) has availed himself of the information and ordered anti-secrecy literature from this office. Although dead, Bro. Emerson seems still to be doing missionary work in the cause which he so piously advocated when alive. Other friends of this reform might profitably follow his example.

This evening, at the hall of Cooper Union in New York City, Dr. Parkhurst and his adherents in the work of municipal reform are to hold a mass meeting, at which Gen. Wager Swayne is to preside. The meeting is to be strictly non-political, non-ecclesiastical and non-partisan; it will be addressed by eminent speakers, and the "law-loving citizens of that city are invited to come together publicly, and by their voice and presence assure the law-breakers that they are with Dr. Parkhurst and those who are fighting vice, and endeavoring to secure the enforcement of honest laws, and a check to official corruption." The doctor is engaged in a laudable enterprise, and entitled to popular encouragement and hearty support. The downfall of Tammany, with its secret and political corruptions, is an event of no ordinary interest and importance.

THE OLD WAR-DAYS.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

The birds were singing, sweet and shrill;
The sun was bright upon the hill;
The brook was slumbering on the plain,
As if to hearken to the strain;
Afar, the woods in deepest shade
A shelter for the wanderer made;
The children, e'en, had left their play,
And resting were, that summer day.

The bugle-notes resound afar;
I hear the peal, it swells again;
A cry of wrath, a scream of pain,
Far from the field of blood and war,
It sounded loud and shrill and high;
I knew our flag was in the sky,
Which soldier-hands would not let fall;
My heart leaped at that bugle-call!

What mattered it my home was sweet!--
What matter though my children's feet
Had followed me from day to day?
My country beckoned me away!
'Neath Carolina's sunny clime
My feet to martial strains kept time;
On the cold earth we dreamed and slept,
While o'er us guard the angels kept.

Ah! those were wild and stirring days!
I faced the cannon's fiery blaze;
I heard the stirring bugle-call—
I saw the banners rise and fall.
The lights are gone in white-winged tent;
Still are the hearts by bullet rent;
From freedom's heights which laurels weave
I bear through life this empty sleeve.

The grass grows green on the battle-field;
Rusted is now the sword and shield;
Hushed is the martial music's swell;
The angels whisper, "all is well!"
Afar, on hill and mountain high
We lift our old flag in the sky;
Ah! well our noble comrades rest—
He knoweth best, He knoweth best.

THE JESUITS.—III.

THEIR ORIGIN, THEIR AIM, THEIR METHODS, AND THEIR SUCCESS.

[Read at the New England District Anti-Secret Convention, in December, 1891.]

BY MRS. E. TRASK HILL.

(Concluded.)

In the month of May our promising youth of the high schools have their annual drill. As I watched a portion of their number, in their preliminary drill, march and countermarch about the stately Bunker Hill Monument, where the statue of Col. Prescott, with his drawn sword, seems to defy all attacks upon that massive structure, my eyes were filled with tears, and my heart beat with emotion, as I thought how mercilessly these precious boys of ours might be slaughtered to atone for the neglect and apathy of their fathers. Christian men and women, shall we not, can we not, awake, and arise to meet this foe, and ward off this terrible sacrifice of human life? Shall we not, by pen, by voice, by concentrated force, resist it and crush this viper before it crushes us?

I am not an alarmist; but I am on the watch-tower, where I see and hear threatenings of a direful conflict. My two noble boys are precious in my sight, but if my country needs them, gladly shall I sacrifice them on her altar. Two of my dear brothers have been already given to save this dear old Union. I plead with you, friends, in the name of the mothers of America, to help us arouse the people before the doom of this republic is sounded from the courts of high heaven.

Notice, in the third place, the manner in which Jesuits are controlling legislation. In 1889, in New England alone, twenty-nine French Canadians were elected to legislatures. There are 750,000 French Canadians in New England to-day. They are becoming a most important element in politics. It is almost impossible for an American Protestant of integrity and strict principle to be elected to office.

One needs to be in the political world to understand just how elections are manipulated. Capitalists will insure the passage of important measures in Congress, and willingly accept Jesuit aid.

Great corporations and liquor organizations are manipulating legislation continually. There is little, if any, honest legislation. Does a man interfere with the schemes of any designing politician, nine chances out of ten he is forced to retire to private life. We cite the case of Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, as an example. The efforts to decapitate Gen. Morgan have thus far been unsuccessful, but President Harrison will feel the power of his enemies, for this reason, should he be unwise enough to accept a re-nomination in 1892. Does a president stand in the way of the Jesuit, is his death desired, the "secret service" is called into requisition, and a sorrowing nation weeps over a Lincoln slain.

The press is controlled, or boycotted (except in a few cases), and the papers that dare speak out are poorly sustained. When will the friends of Protestantism and reform see the necessity of so grandly sustaining the brave men and women who dare to write and speak the truth, that they shall not be called on to make such tremendous personal sacrifices?

I wish to call your attention, also, to the "Papal Bank Scheme," the charter of which was obtained by the "Old Tweed ring." Leyburn secured it. It has been given greater powers than any other business organization in America. It is called "The Commercial Trust Company." Feb. 15th, 1886, the Pope gave it his blessing, but the announcement was made a little prematurely. Kentucky has now taken hold of it, with a capital of $100,000,000. The aim of its founders is to consolidate the surplus Roman Catholic funds, to control railroad interests, and direct financial affairs in the United States. The Roman Catholics of the entire world are back of it.

The interference of Jesuits with religious liberties should be mentioned. Why is it that mission meetings and religious services are being constantly disturbed? Why is it that Romanist children are allowed to congregate around church doors and indulge in profanity and obscene jokes, much to the annoyance of the worshippers? Why are church buildings so frequently burned and Christian workers assaulted? It is because the tools of the Jesuits are obeying instructions.

The attempt to deprive our citizens of their personal liberty should also be noted. Where is the boasted liberty of the American citizen, when a princely merchant of the city of Boston is condemned from the altar of a Roman Catholic church because he exercises his right of saying who shall be employed as a cook in his kitchen? What of freedom, when a Protestant woman of respectability must be followed every hour of the day by a paid detective, in the employ of a female, who, although claiming to be a devoted Protestant, is found wearing a scapular and rosary and acknowledges that she has communication with Jesuit priests and archbishops? For months my own steps were thus dogged, and I was placed under strict guard by one who claimed to be a convert from Romanism. What of personal liberty, when one is assaulted by stones thrown from the hands of Roman Catholic boys, in broad daylight, in the streets of Boston?

What of our boasted freedom, when it is possible for a Protestant lad of eight years to be forced into an alleyway, choked, his pockets robbed by Irish hoodlums, and this on a Sabbath morning, as was the case not long ago in Charlestown?

I might go on for hours and state facts in my possession, but enough has been said, I am sure, to convince all convincible people that the alarm bell has not been sounded one moment too soon.

What can be done to avoid a bloody conflict, and meet the Jesuit foe?

First. Deprive him of his allies by restricting immigration. We can take care of the foreigners in America to-day, for even though they multiply by birth rapidly, dissipation, disease, and death make fearful inroads upon them.

How can immigration be restricted? Let the Chinese answer. They will tell you that restriction restricts. Paupers, criminals, and diseased foreigners should not only be forbidden to immigrate to our shores, but they should be kept out of the country. If our present officials cannot accomplish this end, see to it that proper officials are appointed.

Second. Look out for the numerous immigrants who are slyly creeping in from Canadian quarters.

Third. Change naturalization laws, so that it will be impossible, as it is now, according to the North American Review of March, 1887, for persons to vote in seventeen States without becoming citizens. The States are, viz.: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Carolina, Oregon, Texas, and Wisconsin.

In Alabama the act allowing such evasion of the United States law, reads (Section 210): "That any person resident in this State, born in the United States, or naturalized, or who shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, is hereby declared a citizen of the State of Alabama, possessing equal civil and political rights."

I submit to you, friends, if this is not a dangerous experiment for a nation to try whose safety lies in the protection of the ballot? Think of it, brothers; intelligent, upright, patriotic women of America are cruelly deprived of a voice in government; American boys must be twenty-one years of age before they become citizens; and yet so blind are American men to their own and their nation's interests, that they allow such power as is vested in the ballot to ignorant, low, degraded foreigners, as soon as they declare their intention to become citizens. A nation which allows such injustice to its women, deserves to go down into oblivion.

Justice demands that every foreigner who lands on our shores shall be deprived of the ballot until he has proved himself worthy of confidence, and has resided in the country at least twenty-one years.

Fourth. Let every class of criminal be deprived of the ballot by law. To-day only FELONS, paupers, lunatics and women are thus deprived. Let the law go still further in criminal lines and we shall be rid of all men as voters who are convicted by the courts of rumselling, thieving, blackmailing, or petty crimes. This will largely reduce the vote of unprincipled men.

Fifth. Strictly enforce the educational test. Let it not be the farce which it now is, which allows repeated attempts at writing even one's name, and scarcely more than a spelling of one's words, to accomplish the reading of a sentence.

Sixth. Strictly forbid the use of State funds for sectarian purposes. Make it impossible for an institution like Carney Hospital to obtain a $10,000 grant from the State, under the guise of a non-sectarian institution, when it is controlled entirely by Catholics, and Protestants who are unfortunate enough to be sent there, are subjected to the grossest ill-treatment. Note here the case of young Lally, a dying consumptive, who was allowed to remain on the stone steps for hours, without food or care, because he desired to go to his friends, that he might secure proper care and food.

The Roman Catholic church had obtained from the city of New York, previous to 1880, donations of real estate to the amount of $3,500,000. In eleven years this same church received from the public treasury $6,043,626.45. It received, in 1878, $710,350.98; in 1879, $693,616.29. This church is drawing annually from the public treasury $700,000. In the five years elapsing since 1880, this has amounted to $3,500,000. Added to the $9,500,000 previously obtained, we have (exclusive of accrued interest) the enormous total of $13,000,000, which the Roman Catholic church now rightfully owes New York City.

The city contains, modestly estimated, 1,300,000 inhabitants. If the money illegally obtained since 1869, drawn from Christian and unbeliever alike, were distributed equally, every man, woman and child in New York City could be paid $10 each.

To maintain the Protestant churches and institutions, $350,000 is donated annually. Summing up the whole, we find $24,171,270.

Seventh. Insist on the taxation of all church property, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, or of whatever faith. To-day there are 100,000 church buildings in the United States untaxed, valued at $1,400,000,000, and church property is always estimated far below its value.

The Protestant Episcopal church alone in New York City owns $13,319,000 worth of property, and this estimate is very low.

The Roman Catholic churches are put down at $9,479,000; yet the Cathedral on Fifth avenue actually cost more than $2,000,000.

At this rate the church property in the United States exempt from taxation does not fall far short of $3,000,000,000; and if are added to this sum the cemeteries, private schools, hospitals, and so-called charitable institutions, the amount would probably reach $5,000,000,000.

Eighth. We should demand that parochial schools shall be under public inspection. What right have we to allow schools which are only treason-breeders to thrive in our very midst uninspected?

Ninth. We should so educate public opinion that if it is found that parochial schools cannot be controlled, we should forbid their existing at all.

Tenth. There should be speedily formed, in every State in the Union, a political party, national in character and founded on American principles, prepared to defend them at the ballot-box.

Eleventh. Treasonable acts should be quickly and severely punished. When an Irish Romanist miscreant dares to pull down the American flag, as did the vile wretches in a small Indiana town, leave it not to a brave girl to defend it with the blood of a soldier-father flowing in her veins, pistol in hand, threatening to shoot the traitor who should again so insult the stars and stripes, but deal with the villain in a summary manner, as did the brave men of New Orleans who quickly silenced the Mafia. Though we may not approve of their methods, we commend their spirit.

When a Roman Catholic priest dares to forbid the American flag wrapped around the coffin of an Irish patriot to be carried into a Roman Catholic church, arrest and punish him for disloyalty and insult to the national emblem.

When a traitor dares to plant the flag of a foreign nation above the stars and stripes, force him to remove the offending object and respect the United States flag.

Too long has our national emblem been allowed to trail in the dust of the tramping, surging foreign invaders of this land. Too dearly have its blood-bought folds been purchased to allow it to be thus insulted.

Too dear was it to the heart of our heroes sleeping on quiet country hillsides and on Southern battle-fields, in unmarked graves. The tattered relics of the noble ensign cry out from the corridors of the Massachusetts State House, and call for vengeance on the men of foreign birth who dare thus insult a nation's dead.

Oh, for a revival of the Revolutionary spirit! Oh, for a return of the chivalry and bravery of the forefathers who gave us this blessed heritage! Oh, for the justice that shall strike the shackles from the hand of enslaved American womanhood, giving to her her body, her offspring, aye, and her soul, full liberty; then shall she rise, in her might, in the full possession of all her God-given powers; then shall the goddess of Liberty majestically arise and with one magnificent sweep of her hand through enfranchised womanhood, banish forever from this glorious Republic every Jesuit and traitor who defiles its sacred soil.

Jesus says: "I am the Truth and the Way; any man who climbeth up any other way, is a thief and a robber." Is not this what the lodge is doing? It claims to fit men for "the grand lodge above,"—not by the cross of Christ, but by their own good works. This robs Christ of the glory, and steals the hearts and support of his church. Instead of doing all in the name of the Lord Jesus, their deeds of charity and good works are all done in the name of the lodge.

TWO MEN FOR INDIA—A CALL.

BY REV. WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

Here is a new proposal for the N. C. A.'s foreign department. Let me earnestly request that you give it a warm place in your sympathies and prayers. For years I have been representing in India the cause of the National Christian Association. Many books and tracts have been circulated, and the folly and wrong of secrecy has been mentioned in our India Watchman. But I have, at the same time, several other "irons in the fire," and your important cause has received only a tithe of the attention which should be given to it here in India.

The time has now fully come when you should have at least two good men to devote most of their time to this special work here. If the right kind of men be found, the other points of the question will easily be settled. Surely you have, in the vast ranks of your anti-secrecy hosts in America, two or three young men whom God can use to pioneer this part of his foreign mission work. It is, indeed, a real mission work against heathenism. Freemasonry is twin sister to the idolatrous systems of Asiatic religions. Yet this modern paganism of secret fraternities—this civilized European heathenism—is spreading its network rapidly over India and riveting more strongly than ever the chains of superstition, immorality and sin upon the people of this great land. Who will come over and help us?

Let me tell you something remarkable. Passing a large Masonic lodge, the other evening, I asked an intelligent native, at the gate, "What place is this?" He answered, "Yih Bhutkhana hai." "Bhut" means evil spirit, ghost or devil. So, his answer was literally, "This is a place (or house) of evil spirits." Another term commonly given by the natives to the Masonic lodge is, "Shaitan-Khana"—Satan's house. These are not merely nick-names. The natives understand that there is some kind of conjuring, or communing with evil spirits, in these places, and they are quite right in their opinion. The intelligent Europeans, British officers, etc., who carry on these Masonic lodges are quite willing that the natives should think that their mystic ceremonies and incantations possess some mysterious, supernatural power. What other idea can the masses of natives have than that these refined European gentry, with their university education, high government position, and a little less Church of England religion, are, after all, following some mysterious system of ghost-worship which is quite akin to the philosophies of their Yoga system, etc.?

I am not wandering from my subject. The startling statements I have just made ought to prove a powerful call for the friends of the N. C. A. to pray that God would lead some of their number directly out to work in heathen lands. You have heard much, recently, about the secret orders of paganism in China, Japan, Africa, etc. Some of you who are experienced in fighting secret societies in America would have to that extent a good start for fighting against the twin systems, as they are now re-united in India.

Let me repeat this important point: All depends upon the kind of men who come. It is not absolutely necessary to have men of great educational attainments; nor even long experience in anti-secrecy work. Earnest devotion to God and deep spirituality are of far greater consequence. A man should have a fair common school education; if academic, so much the better. Some experience in home mission work is a very valuable fitting for work in foreign fields. "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart" is fitted to "stand in His holy place" as an ambassador to foreign courts. The command is, "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." I am not so anxious to have "holiness men" as to have holy men. There are many who are very orthodox and Scriptural in their view of holiness and Holy Ghost methods of work, but who do not understand the hidden and glorious power of soul-winning work. Spiritual wisdom is needed to fight successfully against the combined paganism of ancient and modern times, as Asiatics and Europeans are now joining under Satan's secrecy standard in India. It is necessary that the warriors who take up the sling against these giants should be initiated into "the secret place of the Most High," and "abide under the shadow of the Almighty." We need those who have taken several degrees in "the mysteries of the kingdom," or "the mystery of godliness," in order to fight a good fight against the "mystery of iniquity."

There is not time nor space here for me to discuss the question of ways and means for such coming workers. If we can only get those who are "called of God as was Aaron," He will guide them as to the various steps of marching to the front in His world-conquering campaign. It may be suggestive, however, to peruse my circular, "Workingman's Evangelistic Mission," which contains some important hints both as to heart experience and ways of work.

I shall be glad to hear directly from any who are seriously considering entering this "great and effectual door" of usefulness. Write to me fully and freely explaining your circumstances, religious experience, etc., clearly. The postage to India is 5 cents per half an ounce.

Will many of God's people join me in prayer that this letter may be effectual in leading at least two workers to come to India, and that they may "come in the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of Christ."

Bombay, India.

OUR WORDS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Great importance attaches to our words. "A word spoken in due season how good is it." "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in baskets of silver." "They overcame by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony."

I. They furnish the evidence as to our character. The connection between thought and words is so intimate that it is impossible to think without words. A man never rises above the language he uses. No people ever were better than their vocabulary. A rude people have a rude language. A passionate man uses fiery language. A peaceful man uses mild language.

"Who do their tongues with malice whet,
And make them cut like swords,
In whose bent bows are arrows set,
E'en sharp and bitter words."

Words of blasphemy and irreverence, words of malice, contempt and reproach, words of vainglory and pride, words of fraud and treachery, words of folly and nonsense,—all indicate the character of the man who uses them. They are to the man what the leaves, flowers, fragrance and fruit are to the tree. A good tree bringeth forth good fruit; a bad tree evil fruit. A good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is good. An evil man out of the evil treasure of his heart bringeth forth that which is evil. For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. The Saviour said: Whosoever shall speak a word against the Son of man, it shall be forgiven him. But whosoever shall speak a word against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him in this world or the world to come. Why? Because it is a malicious ascription of the works of the Spirit to the devil; and the man who can do that is thoroughly bad. He is a child of the devil and cannot repent.

II. They furnish the evidence by which we will be judged at the last day. "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof at the Day of Judgment." The master said to the wicked servant who had hid his lord's money, "Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee." His own words furnished the evidence upon which he was convicted. So the Saviour said: "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned;" literally, "out of thy words thou shalt be justified, and out of thy words thou shalt be condemned." Our words reveal our character, and so furnish the evidence for conviction or acquittal.

III. Our words are instruments of good or evil to others. Words of error injure others; words of truth bless them. Words that excite evil thoughts and feelings are a curse; words that awaken noble thoughts and right feelings are like showers of blessings. 1. The tongue is the instrument by which our lives are made blessings or curses to others. "He that offends not in word, the same is a perfect man and able also to bridle the whole body." The man who controls his tongue controls his spirit, and "he that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh the city." "Whoso keepeth his mouth keepeth his life." James illustrates by the fact that a small force applied at the proper place will control a great body. "Behold, we put bits in the horses' mouths that they may obey us and we turn about their whole body. Behold also the ships, which, though they be so great and are driven by fierce winds, yet are they turned about by a very small helm whithersoever the governor listeth. Even so the tongue is a little member." As the man who controls the bridle controls the horse; as the man who guides the helm, guides the ship, so the man who controls his tongue masters himself. James thinks of a forest on fire, the flame started by a spark. "Behold, how great a wood a little fire kindleth. And the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; it setteth on fire the whole circle of nature and it is set on fire of hell." A word from Cæsar fired the hearts of the Romans with the war spirit. A word from Napoleon fired France and all Europe. A word from Jefferson Davis fired the Southern heart with rebellion. A word from the Pontiff at Rome fires the hearts of 225,000,000 souls with treason against the civil and religious institutions of Christendom. A word whispered in the lodges of the "secret empire" fires the hearts of millions against the just and rightful authority of church and state. "It is set on fire of hell." 2. The tongue is untameable. "For every kind of beasts and of birds and of serpents and of creeping things is tamed and hath been tamed of mankind. But the tongue can no man tame: it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison. Therewith bless we God even the Father, and therewith curse we men which are made after the similitude of God. My brethren, these things ought not so to be. Doth a fountain send forth at the same place sweet water and bitter? Can a fig tree bear olive berries, either a vine figs? So can no fountain yield both salt water and fresh." When a physician is called to see a patient, the first thing is to examine the tongue. It is all coated. It is a bad tongue, he says. Not that the tongue is diseased, but it is an index to the state of the system. When the disease is removed from the system the tongue is normal. The tree must be made good before the fruit can be good. The heart must be made pure, then the words will be pure. But our hearts are full of evil principles. We cannot root them out. But we can prevent their manifestations. We can "mortify the deeds of the body." Cut off the growth of a noxious plant and the root will by and by wither and die. Prevent the manifestation of an evil disposition and it will soon lose its power. Never allow the spirit of anger to escape in word and it will soon die. If you have a spirit of falsehood and never allow its manifestation in speaking an untruth it will soon disappear. 3. A wicked heart may use the tongue to deceive as to its character. "Though their words were good, their heart with him was not sincere." Mr. Talkative, who joined Christian and Faithful, in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, could talk of things heavenly and earthly, past, present and future, but when asked as to his own experience of the grace of God, he quickly departed.

"How Talkative at first lifts up his plumes!
How bravely doth he speak! How he presumes
To drive down all before him! But so soon
As Faithful talks of heart-work, like the moon
That's past the full, unto the wane he goes:
And so all but he that heart-work knows."

Good men keep a guard at the door of their lips. David said: "In sight of wicked men my mouth with bridle I'll keep in." If we hold the tongue-gate securely, we keep the city of Mansoul.

"I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the 'grip' of Masonry and all other secret and un-Christian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Letter to Conference of Christians on Secret Societies, Chicago, 1887.

FACTS.

INTERESTING TO CHRISTIAN PEOPLE, AND ESPECIALLY TO THE CONGREGATIONALISTS OF ILLINOIS.

[This is the last paper written for publication by the late ex-Pres. Jonathan Blanchard.]

Our American poet and statesman, James Russell Lowell, said that "a new reform-truth is a 'new Messiah' sent to separate the friends of truth from the friends of falsehood, and thus to

"Put the sheep upon the right hand, and the goats upon the left."

At the time this was written, the "new Messiah" was opposition to American slavery. The then condition of things is now amazing. The popular Christianity of the country was slaveholding Christianity. General Coker, a corporate member of the American Board, was a slaveholder. Its missionaries in the Cherokee and Choctaw nations owned slaves, whom they were by law forbidden to teach to read the name of Christ.

Dr. Artemus Bullard added twenty "new school" slaveholding-churches to the list of those aided by the American Home Mission Board in a single year. A slave owned by an elder in one of these churches fled to Denmark, Iowa, and was concealed by the venerable Father Turner, in his cellar, for three weeks. He was captured; and the elder, who had distributed the elements of the Lord's Supper the day before, while his slave was kneeling before him put handcuffs on his arms as they were lifted to God and his master in prayer, and sold him South to the nameless terrors described in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Yet, during this state of things, some of the first minds and first characters in the United States were Abolitionists. Such were Dr. Beaman of Troy, Dr. Hawes of Hartford, Beriah Green and Yates of Albany, in the church, with S. P. Chase, Charles Sumner, Thaddeus Stevens and a host of compeers in the State.

But the Abolitionists were despised, derided as men of one idea, hated, mobbed, and some of them were imprisoned and murdered. So odious was the term "abolition" that Mr. Lincoln substituted the word "abolishment."

A change soon came, and the Illinois General Association, met in Rockford, passed a resolution of thanks to God, that the condemnation of slavery was become general (see Minutes, 1862); and the same year the Association voted to republish its resolutions condemning the secret lodges which had sheltered slavery and originated the war in their Southern lodge-rooms.

The lodge is, indeed, the worse institution of the two. It includes in its ceremonial the crime of blasphemy, the folly of sorcery and the sin of idolatry. Masonry murdered Morgan; the Clan-na-Gael, Dr. Cronin, and the Mafia, Sheriff Hennessey—innocent men, and patriots; and sanctified the murderers by their false altars. If the citizens of Rockford will read the Association's Minutes of 1862, they will be surprised at the clear and forcible condemnation of secret lodges. The action of 1862 repeats and re-affirms action taken in Farmington, Jacksonville and other parts of the State, declaring secret lodges hostile to republican government and the church of Christ; and repeats the action taken here in Rockford in 1850, declaring that "however secret societies may differ among themselves, they are all anti-republican in their tendencies, and are all leading * * * ultimately to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity."

These resplendent testimonies, given here in Rockford, should be worn as ornaments by the city. A future awaits them like that which has crowned opposition to American slavery. This is not all that the General Congregational Association has done. A few years later, with but one dissenting vote, it adopted the report of Dr. Edward Beecher, which says of the lodge: "BY IT CHRIST IS DETHRONED, AND SATAN IS EXALTED;" and also the resolution drawn by Prof. S. C. Bartlett, lately President of Dartmouth College, then of Chicago Theological Seminary, declaring Freemasonry "HOSTILE TO GOOD GOVERNMENT AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION." These earnest testimonies should be read from their Minutes, and re-affirmed by the General Association.

If American Christians had not been ignorant of the nature of slavery, there would have been no war. Knowledge would have prevented it. An equally fatal ignorance of the false altars which have desolated Judea and destroyed the United States of Palestine, now broods over and protects the worships of secret altars in the United States of America. It is not because the American people approve of these terrible evils so divinely denounced, but because they do not understand them. And the people called Congregationalists, who have been said to be the freest-minded people on earth, owe to God, their country, themselves and their children, to break up this lodge-produced ignorance and pour in the light of truth.

Already this grand work is grandly begun. Joseph Cook, A. J. Gordon, and others in Boston; Dr. E. P. Goodwin and others in Chicago; the good Dr. McCosh and his associates of Princeton, at the headquarters of Presbyterian orthodoxy, not to omit Richard S. Storrs of Brooklyn, N. Y.; the world's evangelists, Moody and Pentecost, are among the number of those now living who have written their names on the fore-front of this majestic movement for the destruction of the false worships of the earth.

Let us, with rejoicing, hail these thickening tokens of the coming reign of Christ, and beg for ourselves and our children a share in the glorious triumph which is sure to come.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1892.

Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, whose pulpit exposure of New York wickedness is being discussed throughout the civilized world, lectured here this week by special invitation of a number of gentlemen prominent in public and private life. The lecturer was to have been introduced by Dr. Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, in which the lecture was delivered, but, owing to a death in Dr. Hamlin's family, Dr. Rankin, president of Howard University, made the introductory remarks, opening with the quotation: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," which he said was the earliest prediction of the Messiah. Continuing, he said: "This process is not agreeable to the serpent. Of course, he lifts his bruised head and gives vent to a great hiss, and all the little serpents hiss with him. It is the serpent's brood that has been disturbed. But, notwithstanding all that, there is God's authority for the bruise. . . . It is not exactly certain what the apostle means when he says he fought with the wild beasts at Ephesus; but it is certain what is meant when we say of Dr. Parkhurst that he has fought with the wild beasts of another city. . . . He has been to the very gateway of hell. . . . If there is any shame in the act, we, Christian citizens of this capital city of the nation, wish by our presence here to participate in that shame."

The lecturer made no effort for oratorical effect, but the enthusiasm which at times exhibited itself through his flashing eyes and trembling frame as he earnestly talked, was far more effective than graceful gestures and artistically rounded periods, without his earnestness, could possibly have been. It was evident, from the start, that he carried his large audience—probably the largest ever in the church—which contained representatives from the pulpits of nearly, if not every denomination in Washington, with him.

The following characteristic extracts from the lecture will give an idea of the whole: "If a preacher ventures to pronounce a distinct opinion on social or civil relations, he is certain to be accused of sensationalism, of preaching for effect. . . . If preachers confine themselves to the future relations of the saints and the Divine commonwealth, the parochial current flows smoothly, but if they consider the relations in which men stand six days out of seven there is a cry of sensation. Friction is not pleasant; but as certain as a church becomes interested in these other things, there is bound to be friction. You cannot redeem individuals or the State without opposing the current which flows, and the fight must be bitter and to the end. The world is here to be saved, and you and I, thank God, are here to save it. . . . A Christian man who lives in these times, in good health, without making a disturbance, is not doing his duty. . . . Christianity must come into touch with the country and its laws, in their execution and application. There's where we become involved; not because there are not enough citizens who wish the best for their country, but because they do not feel their obligations. . . .

Our magistrates are not our rulers, but our representatives; our servants, and not our masters. . . . It is no easier to speak the cold truth now than it was in Jerusalem 2,000 years ago. . . . Turn on the light! It will not answer to leave the work to the newspapers, though some of them are doing nobly. If ever the country is rid of political malfeasance, it must be by bringing out individual acts, with names, date and place. . . . It is not new political methods, but a new political spirit, that is needed. The doctrine of regeneration is as valid in cities and States as in individuals. Virtue on fire is irresistible. . . . We must work always with a long look into the future, knowing that every word truly spoken, every deed honestly done, will sum up as a part of the completed victory in the dear God's good time."

From my observation there is little doubt that Dr. Parkhurst has the active sympathy of the Christians of Washington, in the object sought, although there are some who do not approve of some of his methods. This extract from a letter of regret from Bishop Paret, of Maryland, which was read previous to the lecture, comes very near to expressing the general opinion of the great mass of conservative people, in and out of the church: "I have not followed Dr. Parkhurst's action so closely that I could venture to approve everything that he has said or done, and yet it might be that if I understand it better, I should do so. But I am most strongly in favor of all those laws which protect Christian principles and morality. I think that Christian people have been timid and weak in the matter."

For the second time this session, members of the Senate have been called upon to attend the funeral of one of their colleagues. The last sad rites were performed over the remains of the late Senator Barbour, of Virginia, who died suddenly last Saturday, in the Senate chamber on Monday afternoon, the funeral oration being delivered by Bishop Keane, of the R. C. church.

Among other important decisions handed down by the Supreme Court, this week, previous to adjourning until October, was one affirming the legality of railroads making a special rate, lower than the one usually charged, for parties of ten or more passengers. This reverses a decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission. *

—A Roman priest named Phelan recently made a statement (according to the Protestant American), that the object of the Chinese exclusion law was "to force the Chinese government to expel all the American missionaries; and the Jesuits are at the bottom of the conspiracy. China will be given over to the Jesuits, and will be erected into a province of the society." It may be so; but the statement needs corroboration from a more trustworthy source.

REFORM NEWS.

REV. WM. FENTON ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, Ore., May 11, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The architecture of San Francisco is highly ornamental; and there is a grandeur and magnificence about that city not seen in this.

In San Francisco you are reminded that you are in the land where there is gold. There is the massive United States Mint, in which there lies, sealed up in one safe, since 1890, nine millions of silver dollars, in bags, each containing one thousand dollars, and making a pile 26 feet long, 14 feet wide and 12 feet high. In another vault they have ten millions of silver dollars sealed up.

In the Mining Bureau they have an Egyptian mummy that ought to interest Freemasons; it is said to be 2,100 years old, and the following inscription is copied from it: "Hatason, vestal virgin and priestess in the temple of Ammon-Ra at Lycopolis, of the dynasty of Ptolemy the Fourth, 27 Niles. Rests she in the justice of Osiris." That is, "in the justice of the devil;" for Osiris is one of the aliases of Beelzebub, the prince of devils, alias Hiram of the Masons. The obligations, penalties, and false swearing of the Masons prove their sense of right to be the devil's justice; therefore, where else can they rest except with their "great Grand Architect," the devil, when they die?

I visited the Mission Dolores, the oldest building in San Francisco, which was built in 1776.

Its walls are of adobe, and its roof of heavy tiles. I saw worshipers kneeling in an act of worship before images, in violation of God's second commandment. On the wall of the adjoining building there was a printed list of papal indulgences for souls in purgatory, exhorting the people to bow down to images for the deliverance of their departed friends out of torment. I took a copy of the list.

I also visited the Joss-houses, and some other places of interest, in China Town, where the Chinese likewise bow down to images and worship, not in spirit and in truth, but in violation of God's first and second commandments.

Yesterday, in this city of Portland, there was a Chinese funeral; one sat upon the hearse and flung bits of paper into the street, and in the carriages they had certain implements with which they made horrible noises. It is said that by these means they imagined that they frightened the devils away from the departed one. Surely, it was in reality what the devil liked, and an insult to their Maker.

On Monday morning the Baptist ministers of Portland and vicinity held their regular meeting. The moderator said to the conference: "We preach the Gospel and let Freemasonry alone;" but they poked fun at murder and put a fool's-cap on truth. Some of them are Freemasons, and some, with the cunning of the serpent that beguiled Eve, call themselves Anti-masons, while they press to their bosoms, in their coils of church-fellowship, the venomous viper, Freemasonry. They will not truly testify against Masonry in their churches, nor suffer such testimony to be given by others. How apt the words of Christ to the preachers of his day and ours: "Ye serpents, ye vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell?" I met in this conference former fellow-students of the theological seminary.

The Baptist denomination makes her boast that she has not a vestige of Romish tradition in her folds, as most other denominations have, and therefore does not allow that she is a Protestant denomination. While that may be true, and "the mystery of iniquity" has developed the Mother of Harlots and her offspring, there is a mystery of iniquity about, or in, the Baptist denomination that allies her with the "devil-worship" of the Gentiles, the lodge demonology. And nothing but that which is as the mouth of God can take forth out of her the precious from the vile. Hence the Baptist denomination must be classed with the offspring of the Mother of Harlots. Her disfellowship with the lodge demonology, sixty years ago, was but spasmodic. How long before that other voice out of heaven shall be heard, saying, "Come out of her, my people, that ye have no fellowship with her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. 18: 4.

Denominations never reform. The Romish church is preaching the same doctrines to-day that the reformers of the sixteenth century fought against. God wants us to take his Word and build upon that. Theological seminaries that conceal the truth about lodge devil-worship are not building upon God's Word; and God's Word condemns them. What a burning shame and disgrace to the name of Christ, that seminaries should send out their graduates ignorant of, and in sympathy with, devils as they do. They are made adepts in the suppression of truth, while they use the name of Christ, and say, "We preach Christ and let Freemasonry alone" for a cloak to deceive the people. They do not let Freemasonry alone; for they cherish that viper in their bosom and denounce those who touch it. "He that is not with me is against me." The church that fellowships Freemasons is as much the bulwark of Masonic demonology as the church was the bulwark of slavery forty years ago.

W. FENTON.

—At a very recent session the Evangelical Alliance of Boston adopted a resolution recording an indignant protest against the Chinese exclusion act, condemning it as un-American and un-Christian, and pronouncing its passage a stain upon the national honor. It also pledged itself, as a body of Christian ministers and American citizens, to do all in its power to have this obnoxious act repealed. The feeling among all Christians and patriots seems to be that the measure was ill-judged and unnecessary, as well as unjust.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TALMAGE AND FINNEY.

MONONGO, N. Dak., May 5, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A short time ago I noticed in the Christian Herald (Rev. DeWitt Talmage's paper), a complimentary notice of Charles G. Finney; after which I wrote to Mr. Talmage, referring to the just compliment which he had paid to Mr. Finney, and asking him if he would publish some of Mr. Finney's statements concerning the lodge of which he was once a member. I have just received a card in reply, in which Mr. Talmage declines to publish what I proposed, on the ground that it would be "unsuitable" for his paper. He added that the discussion of this subject belongs more properly to the secular papers!

If moral questions of so great importance should not be discussed by ministers, of what use is the ministry? And if "Christian" church papers must exclude subjects so intimately related to our spiritual welfare, and that of the churches, what use have we for religious newspapers? Simply none at all. C. G. FAIT.

SUCCESS OF NO LICENSE IN WORCESTER.

WORCESTER, Mass., May, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After a period of eighteen years' trial of "local option" laws, and two years of "No License" rule in this city, we find the saloons all closed, and liquor signs all taken down or painted over.

On Sunday evening, May 1, many of the city clergymen preached forcibly on the anniversary of the advent of No License. Rev. J. D. Pickles, of Trinity Methodist Episcopal parish, said: The saloon is scotched, not killed; and that its deadly purpose still was, by foulest means, to burrow under public sentiment, and thwart, in every possible way, the will of the majority, so as to secure a thoughtless percentage of fickle voters. By their aid the lukewarmness of what should be the ever-vigilant and all-conquering moral forces of the community, they hope to ride again into power, and repeat the history of crime which now reddens with blood the pages of our court records.

How, he asked, are the determined advocates of No License to enforce the present policy until the foul feeders of the depraved appetites of their dissolute patrons discover that the moral sentiment of the community has crystalized prominently into an anti-license purpose? He advised that three forms of labor be closely followed: Continued agitation, education and combination.

The course and results of the proposed enforcement of the law here will now be watched with much interest throughout the country. The arrests for drunkenness, and the total arrests for the last three years, show remarkable results for No License.

The result by months is given in the following tables compiled to-day from the police records. They show one No License year, 1890-91, between two License years:

Thus it will be seen that the number of arrests for drunkenness were about twice as many last year as the year before. Comparing the last License year with the License year two years before, we find that the whole number of arrests has increased about 24 per cent and the arrests for drunkenness about 22 per cent. During these two years the city has grown in population about 10 per cent, so that the high license policy has given drunkenness and crime a rate of increase more than twice as high as that of the population.

Worcester county is the banner county of the State in the change from License to No License towns, there being now in the county fifty-two No License and seven License towns. Instruction in the schools has had something to do in perpetuating the public sentiment which secured the last "No" vote, while the activity of the Society of Christian Endeavor in all the churches, and the fidelity of many pastors has kept the reform uppermost. But nothing has been more potent in keeping the evils of the traffic constantly before the public eye than the frequent publication of the statistics of arrests for drunkenness, contrasted with the paucity of arrests in the previous year of No License. In its determined hostility to the saloon, the Daily Telegram has gained an honorable name. Its motto in the holy war with intemperance seems to have been, Nil actum reputans si quid superesset agendum. c.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

LETTERS FROM MEMBERS OF THE ASSOCIATION WHO WERE UNABLE TO ATTEND.

FROM REV. JOSEPH W. MORTON, NORTH LOUP, NEBRASKA.

I have been for the past year serving the Seventh-day Baptist church of this place as pastor. This church has a resident membership of about 180. In a general way, we are all reformers. By our articles of faith, we are a total abstinence society, and I do not suspect any of our members of breaking their pledge. We are also a missionary people—active, according to our means, in the spread of the Gospel. We have a number of members who are members of the G. A. R., in which some of them are officers. One is nominally an Odd-fellow, and I suspect that a few are members in some kind of a secret insurance order; but of this I am not certain. As for Masonry, I think not one of our members has anything to do with it, or any sympathy with it. Occasionally I preach against secret orders. For the time being, I have preferred to hit them incidentally, when they were not looking for it. I trust our young men will be put on their guard, in this way, and that our Odd-fellow will abandon his lodge altogether. As for our G. A. R. men, I fear that they will not find any other efficient way of nursing their waning "patrotism." Still I trust that even they may yet see the folly of wasting their Christian energies in the support of this Christless institution. I have two words to say, in conclusion: First, that I am, more than ever, sick and tired of secretism, especially in the church of Christ. My abhorrence of it grows with age. Secondly, I humbly trust that you, my dear brethren, may soon see that the use of "Baal's day" as a substitute for "the Sabbath of the Lord our God" may possibly be quite as offensive in the eyes of Jehovah as the more open and direct worship of Baal in the Masonic lodge. Wishing you a glorious meeting and the richest blessings of heaven in all the good work of our society, I am, dear brethren, as ever, your brother in the common faith of the Gospel.

FROM REV. ALEX. THOMSON, PRESIDENT OF THE ASSOCIATION.

Dear Brethren:—Though I cannot be with you at your annual meeting, I desire you to know that I have abated not one whit of my interest in the cause. My home, at present, is a city of nearly four thousand people. In this town we have some nineteen saloons and eight or ten lodges; and I have an opportunity to study both their systems in this rank growth; with the conclusion that the saloon is the powerful factor for keeping the lower classes from the service of the Lord, and that which the saloon does for the men of the lower sort, the lodge does for the average citizen. The lodges of the place are all prosperous, or at least most of them are, but the churches—the Evangelical churches, I mean—are few and feeble—all of them drawing money from the missionary boards. I believe that this thought, that the lodge has in a large measure become the rival of the church, ought to be pushed to the front. It is a terrible charge, and one that in the present day is very nearly like an axiom, self-apparent.

There is one subject that I believe ought to receive, in these days, the careful consideration of the Association—namely, the question of insurance. The securing of a cheap insurance is the bait that allures many a poor soul. I fear that the claim, often made, that the insurance in these societies is on no more reasonable terms than that of other companies, is not accurate. I have a friend insured in the Woodmen, and in the Prohibition Insurance Association. He is a Christian gentleman and a man who is more than half convinced of the evil of the lodge system; but he tells me that his insurance in the Woodmen is much more reasonable than in the Association. If this is not generally true, a carefully made collection of facts ought to be on hand, in some cheap pamphlet form, to show this. If it is true, then there should be started, without delay, a Christian Bureau and Workingmen's Association, which would take like risks at rates as reasonable; for this would evidently be quite possible, since lodge rent and expense would be avoided.

Again would I call attention to the argument, so often raised, that being a member of these societies secures friendly interest when the party is among strangers. This is doubtless true. But could not the Association start a movement by which every church could take care of its own members in this same way—that is, by granting them a traveling letter? In this might be stated their standing in the church, the length of time they have been members and their occupations. Such a letter received by the pastor of the same denomination, and read to the church, would secure to the bearer all the benefits of lodge grips and signs—and, as we believe, very much more; and such a movement would take the wind out of the greater sails of the lodge.

Praying that the wisdom of the Lord may guide you in all your labors, I remain, etc.

FROM REV. B. T. ROBERTS, NO. CHILL, N. Y.

My zeal against secret societies knows no abatement. They threaten the purity of the church and the stability of the state. The general demoralization of the conscience of many church members is seen in the fact that one of the bishops of a church which claims to have been raised up "to spread Scriptural holiness over these lands," has recently been made a 33-degree Mason without an earnest general protest being made against it by those who pay for his ministrations and submit to his authority. May you be guided by heavenly wisdom in your deliberations and actions.

FROM REV. NATHAN CALLENDER, MONTDALÉ, PA.

It would give me great pleasure to be at our meeting, but my wife is sick, and my health is not at all firm. I cannot leave home. I have the fullest confidence in the dear brethren engaged in the N. C. A., and can confide in their integrity and wisdom to conduct the business in my absence. I am most fully in harmony with the noble work of the Association. Yours in Christ our Lord.

FROM REV. MILTON WRIGHT, DAYTON, OHIO.

Owing to our church anniversaries, this week, at Stryker, O., I cannot consistently be with you. I have only this suggestion to make: That every quadrennium the Association loses very much by attempting to conduct a political campaign. I think the Cynosure loses, and the cause limits its power and influence thereby.

FROM J. A. CONANT, PRES. N. E. C. A., WILLIMANTIC, CONN.

It would give me much pleasure to be with you at the meeting, but that is impossible this year. . . . As I look back twenty years, to the time I attended, for the first time, a meeting of the N. C. A., in Oberlin, O., and see the change, or advancement, the anti-secrecy reform has made, I feel very much encouraged, and am led to praise God for the many plain and persistent utterances of Pres. Jonathan Blanchard and a goodly number of coadjutors upon this and many other popular evils, the influence of which I believe is being used of God to enlighten his true children and bring them into greater harmony with him and with each other, while those who determinedly resist the Holy Spirit will wax worse and worse, until the second coming of our Lord. Trusting that the deliberations and plans of the Association will be directed by the Holy Spirit, I remain your brother in Him.

FROM REV. E. D. BAILEY, WASHINGTON, D. C.

I regret to say that there is no present prospect of my being able to be present at the annual meeting; but my absence will not be due to a lack of interest. I hope and will pray that the meeting may be blessed of the Lord and result in the increased usefulness of the Association. With love to the brethren, I am, as ever, your brother in Christ.

FROM W. T. ELLIS, EDITOR OF "FIRE AND HAMMER," PORTLAND, ORE.

I regret I cannot be with you. I have had a great experience in the Freemason line of things. I took three children from the Children's Aid Society. The superintendent was a Mason, and held his place by the power of the secret empire. Two of these children he took away from the only good home they ever had. All three had been blessedly converted. The last one I took on the underground railroad into Washington, and saved him from a Freemason court and lawyers. There is no humanity or justice in this land for an Anti-mason. God is with us, and we battle on. Press the warfare and send a missionary.

FROM REV. H. H. GEORGE, SEC'Y AMER. SABBATH UNION, BEAVER FALLS, PENN.

In my present engagement, it will be next to impossible for me to attend your meeting. . . . I will acquiesce readily in the judgment and plans of such as will be able to meet, and would gladly unite with them. . . . I deeply desire your abundant success in the great work in which you are engaged, and pray that grace, wisdom and help may be bestowed from on high.

FROM REV. C. BENDER, MENDOTA, ILL.

I will (D. V.) be present at the meeting; if Providence should prevent, I would say: That we, as members of the United Brethren in Christ (Old Constitution), are waging a constant war against the entire secret lodge system. We intend never to let up until the church of Jesus Christ is entirely freed from lodge thralldom and our government shall lift the charter of every lodge in the land. Yours in the holy warfare.

LITERATURE.

THE HIDDEN HAND: Mystery, Babylon the Great, etc. (Rev. 17: 5.) The Mystical Babylon, the Harlot (False Church): Her Life and History Compared with Her Photograph as Portrayed in the Word of God: Her Marks of Identification: Her Name, Her Pedigree, Her Seat, Her Adornments, Her Bloody Deeds, Her Doom. London, Eng.: Marshall Bros., 10 Paternoster Row. Paper, 24 pp., 8 vo.

The compiler of this remarkably strong work relative to Romanism, the character of which is well-shown in the foregoing summary of its contents, claims to have been prompted by no other motive than unswerving fidelity to God's Word, and a deep and compassionate regard for those who are dupes of a system which the Revelator describes in language expressive of God's utmost abhorrence: "No language used in Holy Writ conveys such a sense of the divine displeasure as does the Apocalyptic prediction which preshad-ows its character and doom."

The history of the horrors of the Roman inquisition in Spain, from A. D. 1481 to A. D. 1820, under the administration of forty-five Inquisitors-General, shows that 34,597 persons were burned alive; 17,687 were burned in effigy, and 284,614 were condemned to the galleys or perpetual imprisonment, because they would not embrace or remain faithful to the Romish faith. These figures do not include the reign of Fernando VII., during which more than 100,000 persons suffered imprisonment, the galleys or banishment. Among other Romish institutions, the name of the "Inquisition, or Holy Office," appears in the "Catholic Directory" for England, 1891; so that it still exists, and is quite as dangerous, though more sly, as it ever was. All that it needs to make it show its old-time horrors, is a continuance of Protestant apathy to its insidious encroachments upon our civil and religious liberty. More anon.

AMERICAN HANDBOOK AND CITIZEN'S MANUAL. By Manlove N. Butler. One volume, paper, pp. 204. Published by the author at Avalon, Mo. Price, 40 cents.

The title very imperfectly intimates the character of this book, which is really a concise summary of the past and present condition of the anti-secrecy and prohibition reforms in the United States. The fund of information which it furnishes is surprising, and shows a commendable industry and wide research. Its eleven chapters comprise the following topics: Bible and Secretism; Masonic Religion; Masonic Sun Worship; Masonic Government; Unwritten History; Grand Lodge Masonry; Public Opinion and Signs of the Times; Lodge and Saloon; The American Movement, Real Prohibition; Poor Man's Bible, and All-Around Reformers. Under these several topics the compiler has collated a vast number of extracts from various writers and speakers, which contain words of wisdom and truth to which every citizen will do well to give earnest heed. "The American Movement" is not a new subject, but a plan of the author by which to concentrate the influence of all reformers upon the doctrines of prohibition and kindred evils. The book, as a whole, is replete with instruction and peculiar interest.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM MORGAN: The Story of His Kidnapping and Murder by Freemasons, in September, 1826. In German. Illustrated. By Pastor A. Krafft, Editor of the Lutherischen Volksblattes. Pamphlet. Royal 8 vo., pp. 70. With a preface by J. H. Sieter, of New York. Published by H. Delion, Elmira, Ont. Price, 15 cents.

Mr. Krafft has compiled a succinct narrative of this notable event from standard anti-secrecy works—"The Broken Seal," "Light on Freemasonry," Valance's "Confession," and other publications sold by the N. C. A.—authority that Masonic sophistry has never been able to refute. Our German friends will find it profitable reading as a key to the evils of all secret societies.

The Missionary Review of the World for June is exceptionally good, both in contributions and contributors. "The Scourge of Africa"—the slave trade—is a picture of horrible cruelty, from the pen of Rev. James Johnston, of Bolton, Eng. Rev. A. T. Pierson, whose heart is ever in the work of missions, writes of "The Great Call of God" to evangelize the world, and the obligations of Christians to see that it is obeyed. "The Casuistry of Buddhism" finds a capable exponent in Rev. Geo. L. Mason, of Granville, O. Rev. Lewis Grout contributes an interesting account of "African Theology—The Zulu's Creed as Seen in his Folk-Lore." "The Last of the Combers" relates the history of a family of faithful missionaries, who perished in the performance of their pious work in Africa. The biography and work of William Carey, the missionary organizer, preacher and teacher, by Dr. Geo. Smith, of Edinburgh, is continued, adding another chapter to precious missionary history. The details of the Decennial Missionary Conference, to be held in Bombay, India, Dec. 28, 1892, are described. Rev. D. L. Leonard, of Ohio, reviews "The Origin of Missions in America" at length, a paper that will be read with much interest. Other articles are as follows: "The Missionary and the Lark" (poem) by Hugh P. McCormick; "A Dying Testimony," by Graham W. Brooke, of the Sudan Mission, who died on the Niger, in March last. "Livingstone's Answered Prayer," by Laura M. Latimar; "News from the South African Mission Field," by Wm. J. Neethling. "A New Mission in Africa." "Extracts and Translations from Foreign Periodicals." "The Parliament of Religions at the World's Fair," by Rev. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago, in which he expresses the opinion that "the Parliament of Religions . . . will bring into glorious conspicuity the supreme power and attractiveness of the Cross of Christ." If it does not, it had better never assemble. "Seed-thoughts of the World's Congress Auxiliary" and "The Comparative Study of Religions" are welcome contributions to the "International Department" by Rev. J. T. Gracey. New publications, editorial notes, etc., close the current issue of this excellent periodical. Published by Funk & Wagnalls Co., 18 Astor Place, New York City.

Mr. Albert Shaw, whose valuable studies of the municipal governments of London, Paris, and Glasgow have already appeared in the Century, will contribute to the June number of that magazine an article on "Budapest—The Rise of a New Metropolis." To the world at large the capital of Hungary is the least known of all the great cities of Europe, but its growth has been so rapid, and its development has been kept so well in hand by the authorities, that from the point of view of approved city-making it is becoming one of the most remarkable of the world's great cities.

LODGE NOTES.

A "BENEVOLENT" SCHEME.

A man who had been elected to the chief office in a grand council of a sister society, started out with the assertion that he was going to make his administration a success by sowing discontent in the ranks of another society and gathering into his own fold the ones who became disaffected.—American Legion of Honor Journal.

"FRIENDLY SOCIETIES" IN GREAT BRITAIN.

The growth and spread of Friendly Societies during the present century is simply enormous. The fourth report of the Royal Commission estimated the total of registered and unregistered Friendly Societies in England and Wales at 32,000, containing upwards of four million members. The reserve funds of these societies were reckoned at over £11,000,000, and it was estimated that their existence saved no less than £2,000,000 annually to the rate-payers. These societies might be termed insurance societies based on mutual principles. Most of them insure against death or sickness, but in addition to this there are many that insure against old age; some provide annuities to members' widows and education allowances for orphans up to a certain age. Under the name of "endowments," an insurance can be made for a certain term of payment in favor of a particular person, "mostly for settling a son or daughter in life." By an act passed in 1875, however, a maximum sum was fixed for insurances in all Friendly Societies.—Exchange.

WHEN LODGE DUES BECOME DELINQUENT.

Mrs. Philippine Gorr, of Milwaukee, Wis., sued the trustees of Menomonee Lodge, No. 5, I. O. O. F. It appears that Earnest Gorr, the husband of the plaintiff, some thirty-odd years ago, joined the Söhne der Freiheit, or, as it was known in English, the Sons of Liberty. This society, in 1875, became merged into Menomonee Lodge, No. 5, I. O. O. F., then on the point of going to pieces. During all these years up to July, 1891, Mr. Gorr kept up his dues, and was a member in good standing. He defaulted on the July payments of dues, and died September 28th following. His wife made application for the benefits due her from the widows' and orphans' fund, amounting to $300, and for the funeral benefits, $50—making a total of $350—payment of which was refused on the ground that her husband was not a member in good standing, and consequently not entitled to benefits.

She then brought suit to recover the amount. It was admitted on both sides that the dues were not payable in advance, and that the last payment made by Mr. Gorr was in April, and that the next payment was due in July; that he died in Sept. 28th, without having paid dues since April, as stated. The by-laws of the lodge declare that a member in arrears for dues for thirteen weeks is not in good standing, and not entitled to benefits. Notwithstanding this, the judge directed the jury, without a witness being heard, but on the admissions of counsel on both sides, to return a verdict for the plaintiff for the full amount of the relief asked, $350, with interest from Nov. 1st, 1891, at 7 per cent, up to date.

This decision upsets the precedents followed by nearly every beneficiary society in the country. It hinges and turns on the single word arrears. Although Mr. Gorr owed Menomonee Lodge dues for the months of April, May, June, July, August and September, yet he was not in arrears thirteen weeks as required by the by-laws of the lodge. This conclusion was based on the fact, that the dues not being payable in advance, they were not earned by or due the lodge until July; that as a result the arrears did not begin to run until after they were due, and as thirteen weeks had not elapsed when Mr. Gorr died, he was at that time a member in good standing, and his widow entitled to all the benefits.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 26, 1892.

JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

THE VETERAN EDUCATOR AND PHILANTHROPIST CALLED TO HIS REWARD.

President Jonathan Blanchard was born in Windham county, Vermont, January 19, 1811. His father was a successful farmer and had a family of fifteen children, most of whom lived to man and womanhood. Three sisters, Mrs. Allen, of Wheaton, Mrs. Stearns, of Paxton, and Mrs. Stafford, of Essex, N. Y., survive him. His only living brother is Mr. Samuel Blanchard, of Beloit, Kansas, now about eighty-five years of age.

His child life was not, in outward aspect, different from that of other New England lads. There was the hard stony soil to be enriched and subdued, the raisings, the husking bees, the spelling schools, the writing schools, and the evening parties of young people. The interior life was, however, even in early childhood marked by traits that foretold the life he was to lead, the work he was to do. At less than four years of age he was stirred by the recital of the battle of Plattsburg to horror of war. At twelve he excelled in the English studies taught in the rural public school, and before this latter date he had meditated upon those great problems of human life and destiny which find their solution only in the Christian faith. Solitude was congenial to him, and when his companions were engaged in sports and plays he engaged in long rambles among the hills and valleys.

At fifteen, or about that time, he entered Chester Academy, where he enjoyed the friendship, inspiration and instruction of a Rev. U. C. Burnap, at the time principal of the Academy. It was while attending this school that he became a Christian after a long-continued season of conviction and desire. His religious change was decided and his religious life, intense at the beginning, continued without flagging during all the remaining years. At seventeen he entered Middlebury College. He was very poor and throughout his entire college course boarded himself or lived in some other economical way. During his vacations he taught school or labored on the home farm, and in the end by tireless industry and rigid economy he graduated with credit to himself, his family and the college. His contributions in prose and poetry to the Undergraduate, one of whose founders and editors he was, show marked literary ability. During a recent visit to his Alma Mater, the editorial force of the paper requested him to sit with them for a picture. He did so and the group is strikingly beautiful, the old editor now the hero of many a hard fought field, and the fresh young faces full of hope and courage about him on every side.

The two years next after graduation were spent on the shores of Lake Champlain as principal of Plattsburg Academy. His career here was eminently successful, and he gave indications of the abilities which in the end determined his life work. He had, however, while in college, been useful in revival meetings and had decided on the ministry as his life task. He accordingly entered Andover Seminary, at that time having about one hundred and fifty students and being an orthodox training school for ministers. Here he passed two years of pleasant studious life. During the latter part of his second year here, agents of the anti-slavery society came to Andover soliciting young men for the lecture field. He responded to the invitation, and after spending a portion of his vacation in conference with Gerrit Smith, the Tappans, Theodore D. Weld, Beriah Green and others, he entered his field in Pennsylvania. It would be impossible to describe that service in detail. Slavery at that time ruled the United States with a rod of iron.

No self-seeking politician, no time-serving preacher, no aspirant for social leadership, but was its humble and devoted servant. Slave markets were established in sight of the Capitol at Washington. The Chief Justice of the United States sold his own brother's children on the auction block along with the mules, horses, oxen, cows and pigs of the estate, and the nation said, "Amen! So let it be!" In such a time, of course, there were multitudes of the baser sort to rave and curse and stone and club and hang. The Abolitionist in Pennsylvania in those days carried his life each hour in his hand. Mobs were an almost every-day occurrence. Yet through an entire year of this service he passed safely, though not unharmed.

Returning to his theological studies he chose to study at Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, Ohio, because he felt that his life work would lie in the West. This was on the border line. From Walnut Hills he could look across the Kentucky plantations where men and women toiled without reward other than the lash; where husbands were sold from wives, babes torn from mothers' arms, and death was inflicted without even thought of an appeal to the law. In this year of study he preached for considerable time to two churches made up of colored people, and at the end of the seminary year was called to be pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian church. He took the church burdened with debt and also burdened with the epithet "Nigger church." It was so called, not because there were any colored people connected with it, but because it held and taught that man-stealing was a crime. Here endless labors, prayers, and tears produced their legitimate fruit, and during nine years of pastoral service he received over five hundred persons to its membership. One of these men said to the writer in 1870, "Your father was the first man in America to say a kind word to me when I was a poor, friendless Irish lad picking up a living along the wharves."

Aside from the slavery discussion which waxed hotter as years passed and in which he was continually engaged, the Millerite movement, spiritualism, the Sabbath cause, secret societies, and other causes, claimed at times his attention. Respecting each one of them he seemed to discern by a prophetic instinct the essential truth. He perceived at a glance the consequences, which others could scarcely believe when they saw them wrought out before their eyes. He hated everything that hurt men, especially poor men, unfriended and alone, and he struck at such iniquities with a mighty arm and a steadfast, indignant soul.

These years of teaching in secondary schools, lecturing and preaching were a valuable preparation for what was to be his main life task. In 1846, being then thirty-five years of age and at the best of his powers, he was called to the presidency of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill. This institution had been planted in the prairies by a colony of Christian people from New York State and was at the time in the struggling period of its existence. Breaking up his home in Cincinnati he came with his wife and two daughters down the Ohio and up the Mississippi to Cape Girardeau, Missouri. He reached this town Saturday night, and as it was his rule never to travel on the Sabbath he stopped at a hotel and observed the rest day as our Puritan fathers did in Plymouth harbor, as Jesus did in Galilee and Judea. From this point he journeyed through mud and storm to Galesburg, then a little hamlet, now a flourishing inland city. Knox College was then little more than a name, an expectation, a prophecy. In fourteen years of arduous service he with his co-workers built it up to strength and prosperity. During the last year of his presidency there were about four hundred and fifty students in attendance, and the property of the institution was supposed to be worth four hundred thousand dollars. Into the merits of the denominational controversy which led to his resignation it is not needful now to enter. It is sufficient to say that even his enemies did not charge him with insincerity in the positions he assumed and maintained.

Calls to new fields of labor were numerous and flattering. Five colleges and several wealthy churches sought his services. The poorest and, to human eyes, least desirable of all these points was Wheaton. It seems almost "of course" to say that to Wheaton he came. The institution was in 1860 in much the same condition that Knox was fourteen years before. Debt, no funds, poor buildings and no college classes, is a brief outline of the situation. The slavery agitation having continued until 1861 the clock struck the hour of deliverance for the bondman. The war, of course, depleted the college and hindered school work. None the less the work went forward. The debt was paid in 1864, new buildings were begun in 1868 and completed in 1872. A debt was again contracted which was paid in 1879, amounting at that time to more than twenty thousand dollars. The attendance did not increase so rapidly as at Knox, but solid advances were made and classes graduated each year, with the exception of a single year in "war time." These graduates now number over two hundred, and are honorably filling important stations in all parts of our land. In 1882, being seventy-one years of age and much broken in health, he insisted upon a resignation which he had previously offered, and retired from active service in the college. The Board of trustees elected him President Emeritus, and in occasional lectures and perpetual prayers he served the institution he loved so well to the last.

To him retirement from one form of service did not at all mean idleness. Having put on the anti-slavery harness he wore it faithfully until that shame of American civilization was blotted out. He then devoted himself more fully to a cause which he had asserted while yet a pastor in Cincinnati. He hated secret societies because he believed that they hated Jesus Christ. He was a natural liberty lover, and could not abide the assumption of superiority, and inferiority contained in degrees. He despised their titles and regalia. But most of all he was stirred by their blasphemous references to Jesus Christ or their ignoring of him as is from degree to degree their custom. It no doubt seemed to many that he hated the members as well as the orders. No one who really knew him ever believed that for one moment. He loved all men, most of all the poor and needy. He labored with and prayed for drunkards, gamblers, covetous men and adulterers. He longed to have all men saved, and those who were accustomed to hear him pray well know that in the lodges it was the measures, not the men, to which he objected. He edited from the beginning the Christian Cynosure, established in 1868, until 1891, and during the last year, though he declined the editorial office, he has done much writing for the paper. He edited "Freemasonry Illustrated," "Knight Templarism Illustrated," "Odd-fellowship Illustrated," and published a number of pamphlet sermons and addresses.

Two years since, on the death of Mrs. Blanchard, he suffered greatly in health, and for a time it seemed that he was at once to follow her into the better land. He rallied, however, and for a large part of the time since has enjoyed a fair degree of health. It was easily perceived, however, that the attacks of disease were more frequent and the resisting power was less. Some three weeks since, feeling indisposed, he went into Chicago and spent some days with his daughter, Mrs. Cook. At this time he rode with Dr. Hanson on his rounds three days, and greatly enjoyed the visit with the doctor, who was a valued friend. Returning to this city he did not go to his own residence, as his sister, Mrs. Allen, who still survives him, was critically ill. His carriage was driven to Prof. H. A. Fischer's, and in that home he remained until the summons came. For the two weeks remaining to him his health varied greatly. At times oppressed and weak, at others revived and strong, he still could not seem to make a stable and permanent gain. He took a long ride only two days before his death, and seemed profited by it. He was deeply interested in the return of his daughter and her family from California, and in the home changes connected therewith. The morning of their arrival he said: "I shall talk with you in the months to come; to-day I wish to talk to you." He then spoke to them in a clear voice with bright eye at length. After their departure he said to Prof. Fischer: "If you would lie down by me I think I could sleep." Soon he slept quietly, and after a time said, being roused: "I have no pain now, I think that I can rest." It was but a few minutes till his breathing became heavy, and Prof. Fischer having tried to relieve him for a few moments, ran down to call his wife. She hastened up, but when she reached the room that generous, faithful, courageous, loving heart had ceased to beat.

So has ended a truly royal life, filled full of good deeds, of kindly service. At his burial the pastor of the College church, Rev. W. H. Chandler, Father Brewster, Dr. Roy and Prof. Boardman took part. The students of the college who were present, and in a body walked to the burial ground, requested Mr. Enos Shaw to voice their sentiments, which he fittingly did. The kindness of the many friends and neighbors is appreciated, and for them all the children of the loved one who has gone, will ever pray the richest blessings of a covenant-keeping God.

HIS LAST HOURS ON EARTH.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, May 21, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It was my privilege to visit with my now-sainted grandfather Blanchard but one day before his departure. I shall look back to this as one of the greatest blessings of my life. My faith will be stronger, my courage less wavering, and my hope brighter, because of this visit.

I can now see that God was preparing him for the change so soon to come; that he was, as he expressed it, "filled with the Spirit," was evident in every word and act. Christ was his all in all. When I called, on Thursday, I found him preparing for a drive. He expressed pleasure at again seeing me, and asked me to accompany him. Noting his weakness, I feared the trip might tax his energy too much.

On Friday I found him apparently much better. His eye was bright, his countenance fresh, and his mind unclouded. The matters on which he wished to converse were arranged in his mind. Each item was called forth as he had planned. Especially did he seem blessed in relating his religious experience and learning of mine. As I spoke of the way the Lord had been leading me, his face lighted up, and he remarked that my experience had been much like his own. He felt so blessed in the conversation, as he remarked afterward, that he could have shouted if it would have done any good. His soul seemed filled with a heavenly peace and love. In our season of prayer we got very near the throne. On leaving, I remarked: "When I saw you yesterday I thought this might be our last visit, but you appear so much better to-day that I think you may get well." "Well," said he, in his calm, peaceful way, "I feel better, and the doctors say I am going to get well, but the doctors don't always know."

His inquiries showed his mind completely off from self. He was anxious for the welfare of his children, grand-children, and great grand-children, but more than all for the honor of Christ. His writings in the Cynosure for the past twenty-three years, and the tributes of others that will be there published, will better show the man than I possibly could. I shall always have reason to thank God for the gift of such a grandfather.

A HEARTFELT TRIBUTE.

BOSTON, May 20, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—No word from my pen can add to the veneration in which the memory of our departed father will be held by those whom he had nourished and brought up, and who knew him best only to love him most. Not to "kith and kin," alone, but to a host who received inspiration from his faith, courage from his daring, wisdom from his counsels, guidance from his leadership, and Christ as their personal Saviour from his faithful preaching and teaching, was he "father and prince in Israel." We shall greet him no more clad in the armor of conflict; but with the "white-robed," wearing crowns of victory, we shall see him "come out of great tribulation," into the "rest that remaineth to the people of God." May the banner he so long bore in the advancing army of reform never lack for the support of a hand equally strong, a head equally clear, a heart equally sincere, a purpose equally uncompromising, and a courage to do and to dare for God and the right.

J. P. STODDARD.

NEW YORK AND THE ENDOWMENT COMPANIES.

Among the measures passed at the recent session of the New York State Legislature was a bill codifying the insurance statutes, which underwent several changes, and received close attention from insurance men during its discussion.

The bitterest struggle took place on the question of allowing endowment companies to do business. The Insurance Department wished to shut them out altogether, on the ground that they are unsound and dangerous. The code as finally passed leaves existing endowment orders untouched, but provides that none shall be organized hereafter with a shorter maturity term than five years. Provision is also made for placing the orders under the supervision of the Department, and penalties are fixed for false reports to the Department or refusal to allow the inspection of books.

A New York provincial newspaper thus pointedly expresses its opinion of these insecure benefit organizations: "Any one who goes into the scheme on this basis merely bets one to five that the supply of suckers will last until he gets his money out, and in most cases he loses. The few whose certificates come first, usually get their money, but these are almost invariably the managers, whose active brains conceived the idea. When the others come to be paid there is no money in the treasury. People who have little money should always fight shy of any investment that promises wonderful returns. If there are any chances of that kind in sight there are plenty of big capitalists getting only 5 per cent on their money who are looking for them. Put your money where it is safe and returns a good interest, but not into wild-cat schemes that promise everything and give absolutely nothing."

COLLEGE FRATERNITIES RAMPANT.

We are indebted to the May issue of the Aurora, the organ of the literary societies of the Iowa State Agricultural College, for the following: "It seems as if the 'frat' question in colleges is one that will not down. Iowa Wesleyan University is the last one to report. One Burhans, the 'anti-frat' leader, received an appointment by the faculty to a military position which he undoubtedly merited. Some of the fraternity members of the upper classmen could not bear to see their enemy step above them, so tendered their resignations. These were accepted, and then all the male members of the two higher classes threatened to withdraw from the school unless Burhans was reduced to the ranks. At present writing it is an open question who is to be the executive power of the university, the fraternities or the faculty."

In this connection the testimony of the Illinois Synod of the United Presbyterian church, 1873, is a sufficient answer to any excuse that these secret college societies may make for their existence: "They are unnecessary. They are the means of much time being misspent at their meetings, etc. They are the cause of much money being wasted in the buying of badges, etc. Their secrecy affords a cover for any evil which the members may commit. They are progressive, and tend to the more odious forms of secrecy, as Masonry or Odd-fellowship. They are a hindrance to the usefulness of students, as they curb their free expression of sentiment. They are entangling; they entangle the good with the bad, and corrupt the former. They are condemned by the Gospel. They breed and foster discord among the students." The case of the Iowa Wesleyan University fully sustains the last above-stated position, and probably all the others here mentioned. Those colleges are by far the best where the "Greek-letter" instruction is confined to the regular classes, instead of the secret chamber and its orgies.

—Rev. W. C. Paden, our efficient co-worker, delivered an anti-secrecy discourse at Morning Sun, Iowa, on the 24th inst. We are without particulars.

—Reminiscences of the terrible flood at Johnstown, Pa., received a new interest several days ago, at the first meeting, in Philadelphia, of the Johnstown Flood Commission. The total relief disbursed by the commission amounted to $2,966,384. The monument to the "Unknown Dead" to be erected in Grand View Cemetery, Johnstown, will be dedicated May 31, the anniversary of the great disaster.

—At Albion, Marshall county, Iowa, in a Friends' church, Rev. S. A. Gilley recently delivered three able anti-secrecy lectures to full houses. The lecturer is a seceded Freemason, and was assisted by another, a seceded Knight Templar. A number of high-degree Masons were present, who quietly listened until the ex-Knight gave his experience in partaking of the "fifth libation" of Knight Templarism, when a Knight in the house made a run for the door, amid the clapping of hands by "the boys," and cries of "Go it, Jake." "The wicked flee when no man pursueth."

—Fire at Rochester, N. Y., recently, burned Consistory Hall, on the eve of a meeting of the "co-ordinate bodies of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite in the Valley of the Genesee." Fortunately but a few of the brethren had assembled, the hour being early, and they "stood not on the order of their going, but went at once." Nearly $30,000 worth of lodge paraphernalia, regalia, furniture and fraternity trumpery was burned. The total loss of the building (a business block) and its contents, foots up about $50,000. Eight secret societies regularly convened in the hall. The lodge insurance was $7,500.

—The relations between the United States government and the various churches, and especially the Methodist organizations, were explained quite concisely in the Omaha Conference, recently, by Dr. Neely. He said that he wanted it thoroughly understood that the Methodist church, as a church, had never accepted a dollar of government money for Indian missions. Some individual connected with the Methodist church had entered into contracts with the government to conduct Indian schools, but the church officials had never done anything of the kind. The resolution declaring that the educational alliance between the government and the churches, by which the churches received government money, was wrong, and that the Methodist church should have nothing to do with it, was carried unanimously in the conference.

—A war between church and state broke out in Chicago several days ago, and at last accounts the church was in the ascendancy. The Woman's Alliance, a reformatory institution, recently sent a committee to inspect the character and methods of "The House of the Good Shepherd," a reformatory refuge for deluded females, operated by the Roman Catholic church. The committee reported on Saturday last, that nine of the members had visited the house, found it barred and locked like a prison and were refused admission. The Mother Superior said that as she was about to start for Europe it would not be convenient to show them through. The committee informed her that they had a permit from the Governor to visit all institutions receiving public money. This authority did not move the Mother Superior, who at once ended the conversation, which was carried on through the bars. The committee then sent two of their number to invoke the aid of the chief of police, and returned with a letter to the Mother Superior from Judge Scales, advising her to allow the women to go through the house. Another refusal was the result. A positive "no" was also given when the committee sent a message asking if they could do so at some future time. A threat was then made to call a police officer, and this having no effect the committee gave up the siege as hopeless and retired.

THE HOME.BE STRONG.

Be strong to hope, O Heart!
Though day is bright,
The stars can only shine
In the dark night.
Be strong, O Heart of mine,
Look towards the light!

Be strong to hear, O Heart!
Nothing is vain:
Strive not, for life is care,
And God sends pain:
Heaven is above, and there
Rest will remain!

Be strong to love, O Heart!
Love knows not wrong;
Didst thou love—creatures even,
Life were not long;
Didst thou love God in heaven,
Thou wouldst be strong!

—*Adelaide A. Procter.GENTLENESS.

A little timely gentleness will sweeten a parent's recollections in after-years with a thrill of gratitude, whereas the memory of hasty severity to little ones must bring a pang. This tender story of a mother's experience, published in the Christian Weekly, is a beautiful lesson in itself. The mother had laid her table with great care and pains, for a company of distinguished guests, when her little girl accidentally overturned a tureen of gravy on the snowy cloth.

"What shall I do? It seems a drop too much for my tired nerves—many drops too much for my table cloth. I was about to jerk my child down angrily from the table when a blessed influence held me.

"I caught the expression on her face—such a sorry, frightened, appealing look I never saw—and suddenly a picture of the past came and stood out vividly before my mind's eye. My child's face revealed feelings which I had experienced twenty years before.

"I saw myself a little nervous girl, about eight years old, in the happy home of my childhood. It was a stormy afternoon in winter. It was when coal-oil lamps were first introduced, and father had bought a very handsome one.

"The snow had drifted up against the kitchen windows, so, although it was not yet night, the lamp was lighted. Mother was sick in bed upstairs, and we children were gathered in the kitchen, to keep the noise and confusion away from her.

"I was feeling very important, helping get supper; at any rate, I imagined I was helping, and, in my officiousness, I seized that lamp and went down the cellar for some butter. I tried to set it on the hanging-shelf, but, alas! I didn't give it room enough, and down it fell on the cemented floor.

"I never shall forget the shock that it gave me. I seemed almost paralyzed. I didn't dare to go up upstairs, and I was afraid to stay down there, and, to make it worse, I heard father's voice in the kitchen. He had cautioned us all, again and again, to be careful of that lamp, and now there it lay, smashed to pieces!

"But his voice seemed to give me the impetus I needed to go up and meet the scolding or whipping, or both, which I felt sure awaited me, and which I really felt I deserved. So I crept up over the dark stairway, and, as I entered the kitchen, I met father with such a stern look upon his face that I was frightened.

"I saw there was no need to tell him what had happened. He had heard the crash; and if he hadn't, I guess my face would have told the story. The children stood silently around, waiting to see what father would do, and I saw by their faces that they were horror-struck, for that lamp had been the subject of too much talk and wonder to be smashed without a sensation.

"As for me, I felt so frightened, so confused and sorry, that I couldn't speak. But upon glancing again at father I saw the angry look die out of his eyes, and one of tenderest pity take its place.

"I doubt not that he saw the same look in my face then that I saw in my child's face to-day. In a minute he had lifted me in his arms, and was hugging me close to his breast. Then he whispered, oh! so kindly, 'Never mind, little daughter, we all know 'twas an accident, but I hope you will take the small lamp when you go down cellar again.'

"Oh, what a revolution of feeling I experienced! It was such a surprise to me that I was suddenly overwhelmed with feelings of love and gratitude, and burying my face, I sobbed as if my heart were breaking. No punishment could have affected me half so much, and nothing can ever efface the memory of it from my mind.

"How I loved my father to-day as the sight of my own little girl's face brought it all so freshly before me!

"Will she love me as dearly, I wonder, twenty years or more from now, because, moved by the same God-given impulse that stirred my father's heart in that long-ago time, I was able to press the little frightened thing to my heart, and tell her kindly that I knew that she didn't mean to spill the gravy, and that I knew she would be more careful another time? Will she be helped by it, when she is a mother, as I have been helped to-day?"—Exchange.

WHERE TO FIND HEAVEN.

A minister one day preached on heaven. Next morning he was going down town, and he met one of his old wealthy members. The brother stopped the preacher and said:

"Pastor, you preached a good sermon about heaven. You told me all about heaven, but you never told me where heaven is."

"Ah!" said the pastor, "I am glad of an opportunity this morning. I have just come from the hill-top yonder. In that cottage there is a member of your church. She is sick in bed with fever; her two little children are sick in the other bed; and she has not got a bit of coal nor a stick of wood, nor flour nor sugar, nor any bread. If you will go down town and buy five dollars' worth of things—nice provisions—and send them up to her, and then go up there and say, 'My sister, I have brought you these nice provisions in the name of our Lord and Saviour,' then ask for a Bible and read the twenty-third Psalm, and then get down on your knees and pray—if you don't see heaven before you get all through, I'll pay the bill." The next morning he said, "Pastor, I saw heaven, and I spent fifteen minutes in heaven as certainly as you are listening."—Selected.

WHAT STANDS BETWEEN YOU AND CHRIST?

It stirred my soul to hear a boy in my Sunday-school class a few days ago answer my question: "What stands between you and Christ?"—"It is only tobacco; do you think anyone can be a Christian and use tobacco?" That night he was at the altar; and his mother is almost broken-hearted, because at sixteen her boy is a physical wreck—perhaps a moral one—from cigarette smoking.

Will not some of the godly men, who know what the power of the tobacco habit is, answer that question for this struggling boy, in whom is this terrible obstruction to the light of God's Spirit in his soul?

You, Christian men, who go to the communion table reeking with odors of tobacco, ought to answer the question for this chained soul, trying to flee Christward, for no woman with untainted blood and breath is qualified to tell him whether Christ withholds himself from that man who keeps back tobacco as part of the price, when he hears the command, "My son, give me thine heart."

Answer it, brethren, for a soul hangs in the balance.—Mrs. Platt, in Union Signal.

TRIUMPHS OF THE GOSPEL.

The Friendly Islands fifty years ago had not a native Christian. Now there are more than 30,000 church members who give annually from their scanty store $15,000 for religious objects.

The Fiji Islands fifty-five years ago had never seen a missionary, and were peopled by ferocious cannibals. In 1879 Sir Arthur Gordon, the first British governor, said, on his return to London: "Out of a population of about 120,000, 102,000 are now regular worshipers in the churches, which number 800, all well-built and completed. In every family there is morning and evening worship.

The Sandwich Islands in 1820 were peopled by naked savages, living in the surf, eating raw flesh and practicing human sacrifice. In fifty years they were regarded as Christianized. Already these native churches have trained up more than seventy-five foreign missionaries to be sent to the islands beyond.

Micronesia saw her first Christian baptism but a little over a quarter of a century ago. Now there are forty-seven self-supporting churches, and about 5,000 church members.

Pomare, the South Sea Island queen, died at the age of seventy years. At her birth the first missionaries were just landing; at her death, 300 of the South Sea Islanders had become Christianized.

It is not yet seventy-five years since the first convert was gained in Polynesia. Now the converts number 750,000. A band of 160 young men and women from Tahiti and the neighboring islands are going forth as evangelists to other benighted tribes. Of all these native workers not one, it is said, has ever proved recreant or faithless. Yet these are the cannibals of less than a century ago, who had lost all idea of any God save that of some strange tyrannical despot.—Selected.

MAKE MY LIFE A LITTLE LIGHT.

God, make my life a little light,
Within the world to glow—
A little flame that burneth bright,
Wherever I may go.

God, make my life a little flower,
That giveth joy to all;
Content to bloom in native bower,
Altho' the place be small.

God, make my life a little staff,
Whereon the weak may rest;
That so what health and strength I have
May serve my neighbor best.

—*From "Songs for Little Ones."TEMPERANCE.*LADY HENRY SOMERSET'S GENERAL REVIEW.

EXTRACTS FROM HER ADDRESS DELIVERED TO THE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE BRITISH WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION IN LONDON, MAY 3, 1892.

As the mighty throb of steam bears us over the huge Atlantic billows at the rate of twenty miles per hour, the swift rush of the express hurries us over the iron road, and the message whispered in the old world speeds beneath the unfathomed depths of the great ocean to be echoed instantaneously in the new, it has come to me that these wonders of the nineteenth century are the voices crying in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord," for they are the heralds of the time when we shall breathe an atmosphere of truer freedom and higher spirituality. The reason for the hope that is in us lies in this, that whether we labor for the freedom of our race from the slavery of drink, the uplifting of woman to her true place in the economy of God, or for the better lot of those whom daily hunger drives to labor, and whose acceptance of their wage is based on the free choice to toil or starve whatever be the work that makes our life, we find in every land, and speaking every tongue, a thousand comrades whose hopes go hand in hand with ours.

SCIENTIFIC INSTRUCTION IN THE SCHOOLS.

The temperance movement has laborously proceeded from effect to cause; the drunkard in the gutter was the most obvious fact, and therefore he was the one to be considered. For generations the question has been: What can we do for him? Hearts taught by the Spirit have said, I will make my habits such as he can safely imitate, and total abstinence for others shall become the watch-cry of the movement. No greater good has come to the individual or the nation than from this line of reasoning and of conduct. Its reflex influence upon character has been of incalculable benefit, by as much as practicable is better than theoretical Christianity, and by so much as total abstinence for others' sake lifted its adherents to a higher plane. "The do-everything policy" in regard to this greatest of reforms must be our policy; we must climb to the fountain-head of the great river of intemperance which flows to the ocean of our national drunkenness; we must survey the hidden springs of heredity and prenatal influence; we must study the declarations of physiology, chemistry and hygiene; we must explore the tangled wilderness of inheritance, and drain the marshes whose miasma broods over the unseen springs of infancy and childhood.

Science is the handmaid of religion as well as of reform. The greatest fact of our era is, that we have learned to look upon scientific investigation as the friend of Christianity rather than its enemy. Most of the nations have now become students of natural law; its ritual is their school-book, and the temple of God is known by them to have a decalogue as high as any given to man. "The laws written in our members" are known to be the mode of action of our heavenly Father, the beneficent rules of equipoised well-ordered life. These laws, ascertained, studied and obeyed, mean health, and health means physical holiness. What wonder, then, that most of the nation, in proportion to their intelligence and thoughtfulness, should desire and purpose that the basis of their children's education, from its inception onwards, should be such a knowledge of physical science as well as law, built up in their tempted boys and girls—the determination to keep themselves free from the habits which must defeat the purpose of God in their creation. We want one generation trained to know that alcoholics are the enemy of clear brains, and that happy lives means a wineless dinner-table, the sacramental altar free from temptation, the polling booth dedicated to temperance, the publican placed under the ban of the law. Natural law is God in action. Emblems of his presence and power have multiplied with the progress of mankind. To-day the protecting divinity of childhood in the school-room is science, with her serene upturned face glowing with the light of God's truth.

THE POLITICAL ASPECT.

"Life is neither a pleasure nor a pain. It is a serious business, to be entered upon with courage and in a spirit of self-sacrifice." These were De Tocqueville's leave-taking words to Charles Sumner when he was going home to be the great central-figure in the fight for the abolition of slavery. For fifty years temperance reform has held its head above the surging waves of politics, making but little way against the billows of opposition, but holding on with relentless purpose. To-day the strong life-boat of reform is fairly launched, and the cry goes forth: "Who shall man the bark?" Across the shingly beach, in the blackness of the night, Grace Darling stepped forth in her intrepid purpose to rescue life. Are there not ten thousand women ready to respond to-day when the call goes forth to take an oar? Will not the mothers of our land, the sisters of humanity, come to the rescue in this hour of need? The voices will be silenced that tell us that woman's sphere is her fireside only; and they will learn the great discovery that we have made, that the world is our home in the same sense that John Wesley has said it was his parish. The past has not condemned the public work of women in the theatre and the music hall, but only in the church and in the government of those larger home circles which men call nations. There have always been moments in history when woman has seen the clearer light and has heard the words of divine wisdom and "pondered them in her heart," and in the great crisis of humanity her voice has been uplifted to urge the better way. Harriet Beecher Stowe, standing in her kitchen, busied with household duties, had a heart so much "at leisure from itself," so rhythmic with the great throb of the world's pain, that she dictated among her pots and pans some of the most thrilling scenes of that book which caused a revolution in the thought of the great continent.

All reformers are stoned till they succeed, but the very hands that lift the weapon shall be raised to bless, as the triumph of right shall silence the clamor of wrong. We are too often told that woman has no place in the strife for party power, yet every year the clearer light of the unfolding Gospel shows us that there is no division between the secular and the religious, but that Christ's Christianity makes the polling booth and the House of Commons as sacred as the prayer meeting and the church. If politics are not a fit subject for woman's thought and action, is it because God and the golden rule have also been kept out? To her shall yet perhaps be given the task of setting the house in order, and of cleansing the temple of government upon whose altars the dust of centuries has settled. Any custom, traffic, or party upon which a Christian woman cannot look with favor is irrevocably doomed. Its welcome of her presence and her power is to be the final test of its fitness to survive.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

There is no better test of the feeling of the nation than measures adopted by the leaders of political parties, whose object is to take the public pulse and legislate according to the consensus of opinion. Of this truth we have never had so clear a demonstration as in the fixing of two dates within a month of each other on which the Conservatives and Liberal members agreed to bring forward bills conferring the Parliamentary franchise upon women, and their anticipations were fully justified by the small majority by which the second reading of the bill was opposed on the 27th of April. In all warfare the skillful general surveys the situation, seeking the strategic points. Von Moltke never saw a battlefield till half a century had passed over his head; but the methods of attack and defence had been studied by him for years with chart and compass. In surveying the present situation the conviction must come to the logical mind, that by the women's vote temperance reform will most surely be secured, and, when secured, that vote will be the enacting clause of all temperance legislation. The process of reasoning that leads to this conclusion is based not only upon experience, but upon the principles of science, upon the teachings of Christianity, and upon the instincts of motherhood.

We have hardly realized the correlation of this great question to the temperance cause; but the results that have been obtained by the women's ballot in municipal elections have placed the argument beyond dispute. We believe the highest evolution of this age is not only the new woman with lofty ideals and noble purpose, true to the principles that God has given her, but the twentieth century man—foregleaming at the close of the nineteenth—who has been so well described as "brawny, brainy and brotherly." His powerful hand has helped to wrench away the shackles which have held women so long captive to ignorance and tyranny. It behooves us, surely, as workers for all reform, to hasten the day when she who is to people should be law-giver as well as life-giver.

PURITY.

In dealing with questions of reform, we are not only called upon as women to say what we will have, but also what we will not. We are banded together for home protection in the interest of the purity of our children and for the safeguard of our homes. We are pledged to uphold the great on-coming reform, in which the moral and legal equality of men and women in their mutual relations shall be established.

PRESS.

Much as we hear about the advantages of organization, and mighty as have been its benefits, we believe they would have been impossible except for the co-operation of the press. No influence is at present so persuasive as that of printers' ink. As the grass on the hillside binds together the particles of earth and makes a unit of the summer's pageantry, so the press of these our times binds us into one great people, welds individuals into the weapon party power, moulds the members of the same denomination into one plan and purpose, and gives to every guild the point around which to rally. Whoever fail to rate the press at its true value has but grasped the fragments of the problem of reform. He is working with his left hand when he should have used his right, for thought is the world's king—whose sceptre is the pen, whose throne the printing press, whose empire, public opinion. The organization that earliest perceives this truth and follows it most steadily will win the largest victories.

PEACE AND ARBITRATION.

A new spirit is in the air, and the best minds think it heroic to exhaust every national resource for peace rather than for war. That mood of mind is in diametric opposition to the famed traditions of Great Britain. America stands with her twin sister in the keeping of the peace. The arbitration now provided for between our two nations, and referred to in terms of congratulation by the Queen in her last speech from the throne, is a current illustration that our national ethics are getting into line with the Sermon on the Mount.

This mighty change has not happened accidentally; it is the result of forces as pervasive as the seasons and as steadfast as the tide. As a practical outcome, the Gospel has procured the possibilities of arbitration instead of armaments, peace in place of power, Christianity instead of cannon. A study of the causes of war would be incomplete without a survey of the relation of alcoholic stimulants to the brains of warriors. Christianity is the parent of temperance reform, and temperance reform was a necessary forerunner of peace. A study of history reveals evermore, side by side, the wine-cup and the sword. I applaud the action of our American sisters in establishing a department of work for peace and arbitration.

THE LABOR QUESTION.

Thoughtful study has brought home to me the fact that no phase of our social problem is more intimately related or more intricately interwoven with our own as the labor question. We are too apt to say that all poverty comes from intemperance; but such an assertion weakens, if it were possible to do so, the immense strength of our position. We cannot examine the report of the Royal Commission on Labor without an overwhelming conviction that the ethics which govern our political economy are not those of the Sermon on the Mount. In the time of Aristotle, there were men of whom he said: "There are some who think that it is only a fashion of despotic government, which makes one man a slave, and another free, and that the tie must be unjust because it is founded on force." The first faint notes were thus struck by some nameless Greeks of the great credo which was to be formulated by Jesus Christ, and re-echoed through the civilized world.

THE WORLD'S FAIR AND THE WORLD'S TEMPERANCE CONVENTION OF 1893.

Nothing helps forward a great movement so much as some definite point in the future, towards which our effort can be directed. One year from this month there will be grouped on the lake shore in Chicago such an illustration of the world's progress as has not yet been witnessed. Four thousand men are daily at work erecting the magnificent buildings that are to house the Columbian Exposition. Three hundred acres of land were required for this building in Paris; in Chicago six hundred are required. A few days before leaving, I visited the ground with Mrs. Potter Palmer, the moving spirit of all the women's work in that great enterprise. As one of the British board of lady managers, it is my duty, as it would in any event be my great pleasure, to urge upon our association throughout the United Kingdom to do their utmost to advance the interests of this great object-lesson of women's work.

THE AMERICAN WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

It has been my lot in life to visit many countries, and to revel in the beauties that art has accumulated and the treasures stored by centuries; to stand in places built by the great dead, to linger on the spot where Charlemagne knelt, where Dante walked, or Virgil sung. But when I crossed the great Atlantic Ocean last October, and landed on the shores of the New World whose portals are kept by the figure of the Liberty she holds so dear, I felt within me that which made me say, "The living, the living shall praise Thee." The whole of that great world pulsates with the larger hope, and that optimistic spirit seems breathed into its philanthropy, for the air is filled with the presence of regeneration and reform. There are times in our lives when a great momentum is given to our convictions; when a sight of what has been accomplished teaches us what can be done; when the power which has enabled others to triumph is specifically promised afresh. My visit to America has meant all this to me; nay, it has meant more. It is impossible to hold the hands and look into the faces of those women who in the strength of the Spirit were led into a great crusade, and not receive a fresh baptism of power.

The eighteenth annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was a living testimony of the work accomplished during Miss Willard's eighteenth year of labor and thirteenth year of presidency. The success of that organization has been secured by long and weary toil, nights and days of travel—thirty-eight States and four Territories visited, and 50,000 miles of country traversed in one year.

Miss Willard has been characterized by one of the first literary women of her country, "as an educator of women in the wider sense, as an emancipator from conventionalities, prejudice and narrowness, and as a representative on a spiritual plane of the new age upon which we are entering." She takes her place with the foremost women of our time. She has perhaps unconsciously described herself best when she said: "In all this wondrous battle let our motto be, womanliness first, and afterward what you will."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE PSALMS AND DANIEL.

LESSON X.—Second Quarter, 1892.—June 5.

SUBJECT.—The Fiery Furnace.—Daniel 3: 13-25.

GOLDEN TEXT.—When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.—Isaiah 43: 2.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Dan. 3: 13-25. T.—Dan. 3: 1-12. W.—Dan. 3: 26-30. T.—James 1: 1-12. F.—Isa. 43: 1-7. S.—Isa. 41: 8-14. S.—Acts 2: 1-11.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The fiery trial. Vs. 13-15. The image of gold which Nebuchadnezzar set up was probably intended to represent himself, as it was a common fashion for heathen rulers to claim divine honors as personifying the tutelary god of the empire or kingdom over which they ruled. It is somewhat on the same principle that the Czar of Russia is called the head of the Greek church, and Queen Victoria, of the English, in modern times. It was of gold, perhaps suggested by "the head of gold" in the dream that Daniel interpreted, but which does not seem to have been really understood, or to have left any permanent impression on the mind of the monarch, except, if possible, to increase his haughtiness and arrogance. It is in vain that the Lord vouchsafes signs and wonders while the heart remains untouched. It would have been no easier for people who reject the Gospel now to have been converted in the old days of visions and miracles, which only harden where they do not convince. This image which Nebuchadnezzar erected on the plains of Dura may have been typical of "the image of the beast" which should be set up under the Gospel dispensation. The "burning, fiery furnace" was a well-known Babylonian punishment. See Jer. 29: 22. "Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?" This substantially is the taunt that always meets the righteous when they set out to obey God rather than man. The merchant who tries to be strictly honest with his customers in the face of the fierce rush of dis-honest competition; the laborer who gives up a lucrative position without knowing where to look for another, because required to work on the Sabbath; the man who comes out from Masonry, or Romanism, or any other form of false religion, and boldly renounces and denounces such a "refuge of lies," fearing not the boycotting of enemies—to all such the supreme test of faith is applied in the spirit, if not in the letter, by the boastful world-power which has Satan to its prince: "Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands? that shall work a miracle in your behalf because you trust him to deliver you?"

2. A brave answer. Vs. 16-18. "We are not careful." The real meaning is, a reply is unnecessary, superfluous. Their mind was made up, without any possibility of turning. God was able to deliver them, but if it should not be his will to do so, their resolution remained unshaken: "We will not serve thy gods, or worship the golden image which thou hast set up." Unconditional obedience is the true martyr-spirit. "Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him." What if all the church was possessed of such a spirit—that will not bow the knee, or give a shadow of homage to the great world-power, even when its image is set up in the very sanctuary of God; whose example of nonconformity is so consistent and unbending that even their enemies respect it! In these times, when so many are tossed about like a weed by every wind of worldly opinion, it is inspiring to meditate on the noble words of these three Hebrew youths, in whose minds even the thought of disobeying God by yielding obedience to an earthly tyrant could find no lodgment.

3. The victory. Vs. 19-25. Nebuchadnezzar in his fury commanded that they should heat the furnace seven times hotter than its wont, not thinking that so intense a heat, by causing instantaneous death, would allow them no time to feel the anguish, thus defeating his own savage purpose. How often the enemies of the truth in their exceeding fury have heated the furnace of persecution seven times hotter than its wont, but God has overruled the result to his own praise and the real good of his people. So hot was the fire that the heat of the flames killed their executioners. History shows that the evil done to God's saints always reacts, in the long run, against their persecutors. "Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire?" The courtiers were obliged to answer, "True, O King;" and Nebuchadnezzar, though at first almost inclined to disbelieve his senses, was obliged to see and confess to the truth of this mighty miracle. So when God delivers his saints—when he brings them out of fiery tribulation, and plants their feet in a sure place, it is an object lesson for all who see it, confirming the weak in faith, and confounding their enemies with a view of God's omnipotence. Let us not shrink from the fiery trial as though some strange thing happened unto us. It is through such trials patiently borne that God is glorified in the eyes of unbelievers. "And the form of the fourth is like the Son of God." There is not an affliction large or small that we need to face alone. Said Jesus, "Lo, I am with you always." Let us meet every adversity, whether it be the loss of all things, or the common, daily trials of life, with such faith that the unbelieving world may see walking with us one like the Son of God.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The Negro Baptists of the State of Texas will hold a Missionary and Historical Congress in Houston, Texas, in the Mt. Zion Baptist church, commencing June the 8th and continuing eight days. At this Congress they propose to discuss the advancement made in the civilization and Christianization of the nations of the world by missionary operations, since the days of Christ on earth, and the progress made by the Negro race in every department of the moral, religious, intellectual and material sphere of human activity.

—Southern Baptist churches met in annual convention at Atlanta, Ga., May 7. The report of the Home Mission Board showed that during the past year there were 365 missionaries employed, whose labors have added 11,247 members to the churches, 179 churches have been constituted, 80 houses of worship built, 4,308 Bibles and Testaments distributed. The treasurer's report of the year shows a total of $227,281.51, of which $64,064.12 was for houses of worship on mission fields, $68,683.40 raised by co-operative bodies and expended in joint mission work, $19,242.53 raised by the women's societies. This is $17,682.88 more than was received the previous year. The report of the Foreign Board gave interesting details of work in Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Africa and Japan. The receipts of the year were somewhat larger than last, being $114,325.80. Owing to the enlarged work the Board was in debt nearly $17,000. In the States working through the convention are 1,282,221 white Baptists, and 1,180,681 colored, making a total of 2,462,902. The population of these States is 21,472,072, an average of about one Baptist to every eight of the population. The aggregate value of the educational and church property is over $22,000,000. The convention will meet next year at Nashville, Tenn., on Friday, May 12.

CHAUTAUQUA.

—The season at Chautauqua will open June 30th. The July course will be made up largely of University Extension lectures, progressive courses upon one general theme by prominent university men, including Prof. H. H. Boyesen, Pres. Merrill E. Gates, Prof. Moses Coit Tyler, Prof. J. H. Gilmore and Prof. Frederick Starr. A week (July 18th-23d) will be devoted largely to a university extension conference to which all societies are invited to send delegates. Model lecture courses, discussions, and training classes for lectures will be features of the plan. The August schedule provides a wide range of topics discussed by men and women prominent in all departments of life. The following speakers are engaged: Edward Eggleston, Frank W. Gunsaulus, Joseph T. Duryea, W. S. Rainsford, Anna H. Shaw, James M. Buckley, Mary T. Lathrop, Jacob G. Schurman, Richard T. Ely, Wallace Bruce, Emily H. Miller. President Harper will be at the head of the Chautauqua College; he will be assisted by a dozen or more professors. Prof. J. H. Gilmore, Rochester University, will teach English language and literature; Prof. Henry Cohn, the German; Prof. O. A. de Rougemont, the French; Prof. R. T. Ely, Political Economy; Prof. Moses Coit Tyler, History, etc. Pres. W. B. Harper will have charge also of the Schools of Sacred Literature, Dr. H. R. Palmer, of that of Music, and Dr. W. G. Anderson, of that of Physical Education.

CHRISTIAN.

—The programme of the General Missionary Convention of the colored brethren, announced to meet at Nashville, Tenn., June 29-July 3, has been issued, and gives promise of an occasion of no little moment.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—Largely through the efforts of the Christian Endeavor Societies, religious services have been provided for nearly all the life-saving stations of the New Jersey coast, and are being planned for all the service throughout the United States. The Rev. S. E. Young, pastor of the Westminster church, Asbury Park, N. Y., has especially interested himself in the matter, as well as in the efforts being made to secure better wages and accommodations of these men.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The Rev. Dr. Samuel Giles Buckingham has for forty-five years been pastor of the South Congregational church of Springfield, Mass., which celebrated its semi-centenary recently.

—The Grand River Congregational church on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, North Dakota, lately received twenty-seven adult members. Among them was One Bull, son of the late Sitting Bull.

FRIENDS.

—The decrease in the Hicksite Friends since 1880 is 1,576, a little over six per cent (in 1880, 23,568, and 1890, 21,992). The "Hicksite Friends" are very unlike the early Friends in practical soul-saving, in that they are waning in numbers constantly, while the early Friends grew rapidly. From 1650 to 1690 they grew at the rate of about 3,000 a year. The "Hicksites," after sixty years, now have less than 2,200. The early Friends in two-thirds of the time, grew from 1 to 100,000 or more.—Christian Worker.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Germans of the Methodist Episcopal church memorialized the General Conference at Omaha to take action and pass a rule forbidding oath-bound secret orders in the Methodist Episcopal church. The memorial was referred to a committee. This is significant of a sentiment there against secret orders.

—Mr. Robert A. Barnes has left to the Methodist Episcopal church South the magnificent sum of $900,000 for the founding and maintenance of a hospital in the city of St. Louis.

—Mr. C. H. Hackley of Muskegon, Mich., has donated $10,000 to the Methodists of Michigan to build an auditorium at their assembly grounds at Lake Harbor. Other citizens have given $5,000 for the same purpose. The assembly will be planned after Chautauqua and Bay View.

—Sioux City district, Iowa, is making extensive preparations for the district camp-meeting at Onawa, Iowa, July 8 to 17. The town has good railway facilities, and the grounds are beautiful and commodious.

—Bishop Merrill thinks the publishing departments of the Methodist church "the most powerful evangelizing agency on the continent." The literary work represented by the two publishing houses in New York and Cincinnati and all the various Advocates is indeed something immense.

NEW YORK SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

—The thirty-seventh annual convention of the New York State Sunday-school Teachers' Association will be held in the First M. E. church, at Saratoga Springs, June 7-9. The opening exercises will commence at 2:30 p. m., June 7. An excellent program is being prepared.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The session of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States convened last week at Portland, Oregon. Special cars, and in some instances special trains, were run from New York, Philadelphia, and other cities in the East and South. Although the place of meeting is so far West, the present session bids fair to be one of the largest and most interesting in many years. The subjects likely to receive the largest share of attention are the revision of the creed, the disposition of the Briggs heresy trial, and the relation of the Union Theological Seminary to the General Assembly. In an important sense these three questions stand closely linked together, and involve interests that are far reaching in the life and work of the Presbyterian church.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The Salvation Army twenty-five years ago consisted of only two people—a Methodist preacher, ostracized by his own communion on account of his unconventional ways, and his wife. To-day it stands before the world a fully-equipped organization, with more than 500,000 adherents, 9,000 officers, 2,900 barracks, where services are held daily, and an annual revenue of $3,750,000.

THE SECRET OF BEAUTY.

In What It Really Consists,

An Interesting Interview With a Gentleman Who Has Made It a Life Study.

(N. Y. Recorder.)

There has been far too little attention given to the question of women's complexions and women's beauty; not that the world has been insensible to beauty, so-called, but that it has always, since the days of Cleopatra, looked upon it from a wrong standpoint. The beautiful shades of color which appear in any pretty woman's complexion are always attractive; but how few women, and how infinitely fewer men, understand their cause! I had a pleasant chat with a gentleman recently who has made a life-study of this subject, and I give you his views because I believe them to be valuable.

Dr. John H. Woodbury, President of the Dermatological Institute, 125 West 42d street, New York City, and inventor of Woodbury's Facial Soap for the skin, scalp and complexion, has probably done more toward enhancing the real beauty of women than any other man in America. He said:

"How many really and naturally beautiful women do we meet? Very few. Most women, even young women, have sallow complexions, lack of color, freckles, blackheads—in fact, most of the things which render them unattractive to their relatives, friends, lovers, or husbands. They know it themselves just as well as any one can. And what do they do? Powder, paint, use cosmetics; some even use arsenic powders; in fact, anything they hear of that can possibly make the surface of the skin attractive. Others resort to enamels and the thousand devices invented by charlatans for beautifying the surface and really producing modern whited sepulchres. There never was a greater mistake. Beauty arises from good health, care and the use of just the right things. I will admit that some healthy women have irregular features, but few healthy women have sallow complexions or bad color. These things arise because the blood is not healthy, throbbing and pure, and because the female organs of life are not doing their duty. Any woman who desires to become beautiful should look to these things, rather than to any outward appearance, and the outward appearance will take care of itself.

"What should she do? First of all, consider health, consult the proper authority and use the right remedy. I know there are very many ways in which women try to preserve health, but I really believe there is but one way, and that is to keep the organs of the body healthy. I also know that there are many things that claim to do this; perhaps many of them are very good; but one thing that I know from my own experience that is exceedingly valuable is Warner's Safe Cure. I have used it personally, and have also recommended its use to friends, and the results have been more than satisfactory.

"It is said that a tree is known by its fruits. If women who were once unattractive have been transformed into blooming health and beauty, there is a reason for it, is there not? And the reason is usually to be found in improved health, strength and vigor, which come only from developing and strengthening the organs which sustain health. These are at the basis of all female health and beauty."

I was greatly impressed by the sincerity and intelligence of the doctor, and I believe if American women would follow his suggestion they might become, as they deserve to be, the most beautiful women in the world.

The Proper Way to Clean and Polish Silver.

Visitors to England are often struck with the dazzling whiteness and brilliant finish of the grand old dinner and banqueting services, many of them centuries old, but in appearance equal to new silver. The English silversmiths have the advantage of a special preparation which has been popular with them for the past seven years. It is not altogether unknown in our country, and considering the beautiful silverware that now adorns most of the refined homes of America, an article that will not scratch the exquisite workmanship of valuable silver, and prevents tarnishing, should be as widely used as it is in the Old World. We refer to GODDARD'S PLATE POWDER, for which a depot has just been opened in New York. If you would preserve your silver ornaments and plate-ware, you should use it regularly. With reasonable care a 25-cent packet will last for many months. If not obtainable at your grocer's, it will be mailed free for 25 cents.

Address, 2 Wooster Street, New York.

HOME AND HEALTH.

If baby is old enough to wear buttoned shoes, see that they are a little larger than the foot, and fit comfortably at the ankle. Almost all infants' buttoned shoes need to have the buttons altered.

Nothing is so sweet as to feel sure that our children are inside and outside healthy. Upon us as mothers rests the sublime effort to create a noble generation. The future is ours.

How many homes are there in which the mother of the family can lie down to rest at night, assured that before morning one of the little ones will not be stricken down by an enemy more stealthy than the midnight assassin—the deadly sewer gases that emanate from our plumbing?

The old paper should be removed from walls before re-papering. Be particular about this, as germs accumulate on old paper. Papered walls, however, are not considered as good for sanitary purposes as the alabastine.

Savages in raw heathendom do not suffer from dyspepsia as civilized Americans do. On the contrary most of them enjoy excellent digestive organs. Their simpler mode of life, and lack of drug doctors and drug stores, may have something to do with results.

Let in the sunshine at the windows. Don't shut it out with curtains unless at times to shut out heat. What if it does fade the carpet—it will put color in faces and sunshine in hearts. These dark, shut-up, damp, gloomy rooms will make well persons sick if they stay in them long at a time.

Give the baby good care as to health and then trust God and be happy with it. A worry of mind will affect the health and spirits of both mother and child. It is said of some mothers that they always have good babies. This is the principal reason. They give their baby good cheer and the baby sends it back with its impress of innocence and they are both blest.

If there is a sick one in the house, by all means give him the sunniest room, well ventilated, and as soon as possible get him out into the air and sunshine, well protected, with earth and sky, trees and flowers. These are nature's remedies and within reach of all. Try it, invalids, and before a week is over you will feel health coming back in a very enjoyable way.

Hygienic physicians, who will instruct people in the art of healthful living, should be in every community. These and skillful surgeons are useful members of society. If all would listen to the wise counsels of such they would learn how to avoid disease and deadly drugs.

Will anybody explain why hundreds of thousands of people huddle together in great cities, breathing the bad air and suffering from every kind of inconvenience, when there are thousands of acres of cheap land lying untilled where all these suffering ones could gain comfort, health and competence?

Regularity in meals is quite as important as what is eaten. It is a great help in household arrangements also to have stated times for these. Three meals a day are generally considered best, if the last one is light, and taken three hours before retiring. Five hours between the other two give time for digesting healthful food, and a rest-hour for the stomach besides. This will please those who are to be served, who always like to know when meals are to be expected.

It is surprising how early a young child can be taught to eat only at regular times, and never to expect food between meals. This always conduces to health. The habit of some mothers to nurse a child every time it cries, when it goes to sleep and when it wakes up, is an injury rather than a necessity. Find out how often it needs to nurse and then hold steadily to the habit, whether the child cries or not. In a short time it only wants food at regular intervals. Irregularity and over-feeding cause the sickness and death of many infants.

A New Haven gentleman recently advertised that he would give bags of flour to needy families, provided intoxicating drinks or tobacco were not used by any member of the family applying. He deposited $50 with the Union Trust Company as a guarantee of his good faith. No application at all was received!—The Vanguard (St. Louis) and other Exchanges.

Dyspepsia has driven to an early and even suicidal grave many a man who, if he had tried the virtues of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, would be alive to-day and in the enjoyment of health and competence. Sufferer, be warned in season, and don't allow the system to run down.

WONDERS NEVER CEASE.

About one year since our readers had their attention called to one of the most liberal offers ever made in the columns of this paper by a reputable firm, and many thousands availed themselves of the offer and to-day possess a handsome Piano Lamp at a trifling cost. Now all are invited by this same firm to come forward and to secure another prize. The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y., make an offer in another column which cannot fail to bring a new source of joy to all who use Sweet Home Soap.

Overloaded and disordered stomachs and bowels don't need a dose of physic. That, with its violence, only upsets them the more. They need a dose or two of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. That cleanses and regulates them mildly and gently, but thoroughly and effectively. They're the original little Liver Pills, these tiny, sugar-coated anti-bilious granules—the smallest and the easiest to take. One little Pellet for a laxative—three for a cathartic. Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels are prevented, relieved, and cured. Put up in sealed vials—a perfect vest-pocket remedy, always convenient, fresh, and reliable. They're the cheapest pills you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction, or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get. Can you ask more?

A Pleasant Reflection

—the fact that easy washing has been made safe. Until Pearline came, it was dangerous. Pearline takes away the danger as it takes away the work. There is no scouring and scrubbing, to wear things out; there is no trouble in keeping things clean. Pearline is better than soap. With soap, you need hard work; for easy work, you need Pearline.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 290 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

FARM NOTES.

(From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

A wet May, plenty of hay. Have you fixed up the fences? Red top is generally considered the best tame grass for moist or soft ground. Do not forget to get in a succession of peas, radishes, and early beets for greens. Prof. Henry says silage has been hurt more by its friends claiming too much for it than by all its enemies have said against it. If there are children in your vicinity that will make an effort to have a strawberry bed of their own you will be doing a good deed by supplying them with your surplus plants. The spraying apparatus is now very generally employed by the best cultivators, and it would be difficult to find a fruit-grower, gardener or farmer who does not use or need it. Phosphate is a good assistant in raising flowers. It lifts the plants along at an opportune time, and makes the roots as well as stalks stronger and better able to bear transplanting. There are likely to be some "April showers" this month. Have a shelter in the calf pasture. A cold shower-bath is not conducive to health or growth; especially when long continued. Did you figure on the corn those runts of pigs ate last year? How much did it bring a bushel? Are you going to feed runts again? We think they pay best fed early to the manure heap—fact. We know of no better way of killing a hedge than grubbing out the roots (use some power that will pull them out their full length as near as possible), plowing over the land afterwards and cutting off what sprouts may come up. Since May 2, 1892, the freight rate per 100 pounds on compressed wool to Boston from Mississippi river points, between East St. Louis and East Dubuque, is fifty-seven cents, when shipped in car loads; minimum weight, 20,000 pounds. If the brood mare is a poor milker or you wish to crowd the colt a little before it is old enough to take a ration of oats, a small quantity of cow's milk may be fed with profit. Give warm from the cow, or heat to ninety-six or ninety-eight degrees. If you want those little sleek pigs to do some tall growing and be sleek when three months old, do not let them depend on the old sow for all they get. Let them have free range in a good pasture or daily supply of green food and free access to oats or shorts. Skim milk will not hurt them.

The census of 1890 shows that there were 32,953,927 pounds of maple sugar and 2,258,327 gallons of maple molasses made in this country in that year. The romance of the sugar camp may have departed, but the camp is still in existence and does a good business, especially in New York and Vermont.

Small fruits, such as raspberries, strawberries, etc., may be propagated from the seed, but there is no assurance that the fruit borne by the seedling will be the same as that from which the seed was obtained—in fact, the probabilities are that it will not be. This accounts for the vast number of new varieties put upon the market each year. The plants do not have to be budded to bear.

If land is continually cropped with hay and nothing returned, the soil is impoverished. When the "sod" is used for pasturage the droppings help to keep up the fertility. If you wish land plaster to do the most good, quick, put a small amount on each hill of corn just as it is peeping through the ground. The cheapest way in labor is to sow broadcast at the last harrowing before the cultivator.

CATTLE-FEED AND BUTTER.

Bulletin 13 of the New Hampshire Experiment Station reports as the result of experiments testing the effects of food on butter:

1. That gluten meal tends to produce a softer quality of butter than corn meal or cotton-seed meal; and, other things being equal, tends to lessen the churnability of the butter fat.
2. That with the same cows the hardness of butter depends much more upon the character of the food than upon the nutritive ratio.
3. That ensilage produces a somewhat softer quality of butter than does good hay, but it is also favorable to the flavor and texture of the butter product.
4. That skim milk has a very favorable effect upon the churnability and quality of the butter fat, and a single trial apparently reversed the general rule that the volatile fatty acids decrease as the period of lactation advances.
5. The cotton-seed meal tends to produce an unusually hard quality of butter and that cotton-seed meal and gluten meal might be used together with excellent results.
6. That contrary to general belief the melting point of butter fat is not a good index of the commercial hardness of butter. That while in general a soft butter melts at a lower temperature than a hard butter, there is no definite relation between melting point and actual hardness.
7. That no relation can be traced between food and volatile fatty acids except in the case of skim milk. That usually hardness and volatile acid vary inversely, hardness generally increasing and volatile acids decreasing, as the period of lactation advances.

That Tired Feeling

You cannot always tell what may be its cause. Possibly it may be due to change of season, climate, or life; possibly to overwork or overstudy, to mental suffering, nervousness, or various bodily ailments. But there is no mistaking its effects. You know you feel "almost tired to death," without strength to do anything; ambition seems to be all gone, and in its place indifference to how the world wags—an indescribable languor and weakness. You have no appetite, do not care about food, and only eat because it is the hour for eating, or from force of habit. This must be stopped. Your condition must be changed at once, or like a ship drifting with the inward tide, you will soon be dashed upon the rocks of incurable disease and death. Rouse the torpid kidneys and liver, tone the digestive organs, create a new appetite, purify and vitalize the impure and sluggish blood, cure the headache and overcome all the prostrating effects of That Tired Feeling, by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. It is just what you need, and to delay taking it is unwise. Hood's Sarsaparilla is sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

BIRDS CUSTARD

The Birds began to sing
The praises of Bird's Custard Powder.

An English Table Luxury,
Providing Dainties in Endless Variety
The Choicest Dishes
and the Richest Custard
Entirely Without Eggs.

SECOND, a packet of BIRD'S BLANC-MANGE POWDER, enough to make three large Blanc-manges a pint each. The Blanc-manges are most agreeably flavoured and are highly nutritious, and can be produced in a variety of tints, forming a charming dessert dish, and contributing to the decoration of the table.

THIRD, a tin of BIRD'S CONCENTRATED EGG POWDER, a complete substitute for eggs in puddings, cakes, buns, griddle cakes, and all similar kinds of English and American confectionery, to which it imparts the lightness, richness, appearance and flavour of new-laid eggs. This tin is equal to 30 new-laid eggs.

FOURTH, a canister of BIRD'S GIANT BAKING POWDER, claimed to be the strongest and best article of the kind in the whole world. It will go twice as far as ordinary baking powder, and is guaranteed free from alum, ammonia, or any impurity whatsoever, all the ingredients being of the highest quality. N.B.—Messrs. BIRD were the original inventors of Baking Powder in 1842, and the secret of their process has never yet been discovered.

For a fifth article the box contains a copy of "Sweet Dishes," a booklet full of practical hints and numerous original recipes of tasty dishes for the dinner and supper table. The recipes are all new to American cookery, and are suited to American measures, methods and cooking utensils.

The whole of the above are enclosed in a tastefully finished artistic Cartoon Box, an excellent specimen of English fancy box ware. When the samples are taken out, it will make a very pretty handkerchief, glove, or cotton box.

This Dollar Sample Box is intended solely to introduce Bird's English Specialties into American Homes, and cannot be purchased retail, and Messrs. BIRD will not be able to supply more than one sample box to each household. Remember the object in view is to distribute samples of the Special Domestic Luxuries for which Bird's name stands first and foremost as a guarantee for Purity and High Quality.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER is now introduced into America, and will very shortly be on sale at all the principal retail stores. Meanwhile every American lady is invited to send to ALFRED BIRD & SONS, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, for the Dollar Sample Box of Bird's exquisite English Home Specialties, and to entertain her family and friends with a few choice English dishes by way of a change.

THE DOLLAR SAMPLE BOX contains four of the articles for which Bird's name has been a household word throughout Great Britain and her Colonies for more than half a century.

CONTENTS OF THE BOX.
FIRST, a packet of BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER, sufficient to make four pints of the richest custard without eggs, which may be served either from a dish or in the ordinary custard glasses, and is delicious with all canned, bottled, or fresh fruits. Bird's Custard possesses the richness and nutriment of cream without risk to the most sensitive digestion.

A remittance of one dollar to Messrs. BIRD & SON'S New York Offices, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, will bring the sample box EXPRESSED Free of Charge. If any dissatisfaction, the money will be willingly refunded, providing the goods are sent back intact.
ASK! ASK! ASK! ASK! Of all Stores! Everywhere! Every Day!

HERE'S SOMETHING WONDERFUL! CHAUTAUQUA DESK

YOU CAN HAVE THIS $10 LADIES DESK OR LAMP

ABSOLUTELY FREE

IF you will buy one of our Combination Boxes of SWEET HOME SOAP AND TOILET ARTICLES, WHICH WE SELL, ON TRIAL, TOO.

YOU MUST HAVE SOAP—It is an absolute necessity—the only question is where you shall buy it; we make it a decided object for you to buy of us—direct from factory to consumer, and save all middle-men and dealers' profits.

OUR COMBINATION BOX contains a large supply of the best Soaps and finest Toilet Articles made, and will give satisfaction to the most fastidious person. We have been manufacturing Soaps for over 15 years, and operate one of the largest and best equipped plants in this country, having a capacity of ten million pounds a year.

Remember, "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity, each cake will do double the work of common cheap soaps.

The "CHAUTAUQUA" DESK is a "thing of beauty" and will be "a joy forever" to all who possess one. It is artistically designed, complete in appointments, a model piece of furniture, and affords what nine out of ten homes lack—a suitable and convenient place for writing letters, studying, drawing, etc., etc., which will be used and appreciated by every member of the family.

It is made of SOLID OAK, varnished and hand-rubbed finish, with brass trimmings. It stands five (5) feet high, is two and a half (2½) feet wide and ten and a half (10½) inches deep. It is a perfect and complete desk, and also has three roomy book shelves, a top shelf for bric-a-brac, seven pigeon-holes for papers, compartments for letter paper, ink, etc.

When placed in your home, filled with books which you prize, and ornamented with the gifts of friends, it will become a centre of attraction, and you will be grateful to us for adding a new pleasure to your life.

If your library is already supplied with a desk, we suggest placing this in your guest chamber where this convenience will be greatly appreciated.

ORDER YOU RUN NO RISK. TO-DAY

We do not ask you to remit in advance, or take any chances. We merely ask permission to send you a DESK and Combination Box, and if after 30 days' trial you are fully convinced that the soap and toilet articles are all we claim, you can then pay the bill—$10.00. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used and we will take the box away at our own expense. HOW CAN WE DO MORE? If you want the Lamp instead of the Desk, state it in your order.

Some people prefer to send cash with order—we do not ask it—but if you remit in advance, we will place in the Box, in addition to all the other extras named, a valuable present. Where boxes are paid for in advance, we ship same day order is received. All other orders are filled in their regular turn. Persons remitting in advance can have their money refunded without argument or comment if the box or DESK does not prove all they expect. PRICE OF BOX COMPLETE, ONLY $10.00, including the DESK.

We can refer you to thousands of people who have used Sweet Home Soap for many years and still order at regular intervals, also Bank of Buffalo, Bank of Commerce, Buffalo; Henry Clews & Co., Bankers, New York; Metropolitan National Bank, Chicago, or any other Banker in the United States. Also R. G. Dun & Co., and the Bradstreet Co.

AND LAMP FOR THE HOME

EACH BOX CONTAINS

The College Church of Christ (Congregational), of Wheaton, Ill., thus puts itself squarely on the record: "We hold that making, selling, using, or voting to license the sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is contrary to Christian morals." An honorable record.

We yield two and a half pages of this issue for a presentation to our readers, in full, of the beautiful eulogy contained in the discourse of Rev. Dr. Roy at the funeral of ex-President Blanchard. It is a heartfelt tribute to the life and work of the lamented reformer, guide and counselor, and will be read with interest by those who knew him as he was, through all the long years of his godly service.

The case of Bro. G. W. Needels, of Albany, Mo., as related in a recent letter, appeals to the sympathy of all our reform friends. Within the past two years a cyclone has passed over his farm, destroying $5,000 or $6,000 worth of property, and killing a member of his family. Subsequently he was thrown from a wagon and so badly injured as to (he thinks) permanently cripple him. Still the anti-secrecy reform lies very near his heart, and his prayers for its success are fervently offered. Let him have the prayers of all our friends for his relief and prosperity.

As an addendum to the article on the eighth page of this number, touching "The Negro in the South," it is noteworthy that in the annual session of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, recently, Rev. Dr. H. F. Wayland presented a resolution to the effect that in the South there were 1,150,000 colored Baptists who were subjected to all sorts of outrages, with inadequate means of redress, and that the convention emphatically protests and calls upon the general government to use the legitimate means to put an end to the persecution. In this connection, Tuesday, May 31, was set apart by the Negroes and their friends throughout the country as a day of fasting and prayer that God will bring relief from the present suffering of the colored people of the South as signally as he brought them to liberty in 1863. The call elaborately sets forth the trials which they are undergoing, and its statements are fully attested by the testimony of trustworthy whites. The governor of Georgia has also issued a stringent proclamation, denouncing the practice of indiscriminate and lawless punishment for crimes not proven in a court of justice.

The story of the alley-missions, as told by our Washington correspondent to-day, will touch the hearts of our readers who are closely in sympathy with the golden rule and our Saviour's last command. It is Christian philanthropy in its undress suit, reaching out into the sink of fallen humanity, fearless of contamination, desiring to carry the light and life of the Gospel into homes and dens where it has never yet penetrated. It is good work, the results of which will be felt throughout the years of time and the ages of eternity.

The annual meeting of the United Presbyterian General Assembly, at Pittsburgh, last week, was emphasized by the report of the committee on prevalent evils from which society needs to be reformed and the methods to be employed for that purpose. At considerable length, desecration of the Sabbath by railways, mail contractors, and newspapers; the bad influence of secret societies, the cheapness of human life, the facilities for divorce, social depravity, theatre-going, church lotteries and gambling, were denounced with words of no uncertain sound, and which indicated an approval of the methods recently adopted in New York City by Rev. Dr. Parkhurst.

The sixtieth annual meeting of the Baptist Home Mission Society, at Philadelphia, last week, received, with unmistakable applause, a series of resolutions presented by Rev. Dr. J. D. Fulton, requesting Congress to withhold its appropriation of $5,000,000 toward the World's Columbian Exposition until the Fair Commissioners have given the guarantee that the Exposition shall not be opened on Sundays. The resolutions also opposed the erection of a Roman Catholic monastery on the Exposition grounds, claiming that the Fair is intended to "show the progress of a land that has thrown off the yoke of Roman Catholicism," and that "this is a land for homes and not for monasteries and nunneries."

A little incident occurred in the Methodist General Conference at Omaha, the other day that admirably indicates the position of that church in relation to secret societies: A local conference presented a memorial, which the secretary proceeded to read: "Whereas, The oaths all persons take who join oath-bound secret societies are contrary to the command, 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord'"—"Mr. President," interrupted an excited delegate, "I rise to a point of order. These words state something which no man can know unless he has violated an oath. I move its reference without reading." The reference was made accordingly. But the truth of the memorial is none the less manifest or pointed.

At the meeting of the Board of Directors of the N. C. A., last week, Pres. Charles A. Blanchard and Rev. W. I. Phillips were appointed a committee to investigate and report upon the subject of creating an insurance department by the Association for insuring the lives and health of its members at a nominal cost, in the same manner as that ostensibly adopted by endowment orders, but stripped of lodge affiliations, expense, secrets, signs and grips. This is the plan suggested by ex-Pres Alex. Thomson in his letter to the annual meeting of the Association, as printed in last week's Cynosure. The intention of the suggestion is to rob the beneficiary orders of one of their principal attractions, the pecuniary benefits which they offer to their members. Ex-Pres. Thomson, in the same letter, made another suggestion, founded on "the argument so often raised, that being a member of these (secret beneficiary) societies secures friendly interest when the party is among strangers." To offset this attraction, Mr. Thomson proposes that every church should take care of its members in the same way—by granting each one a traveling letter, which, when presented to a church elsewhere, as showing the member's church standing, period of fellowship, and occupation, would secure to the bearer quite as warm a reception as a lodge traveling-card, grips, signs and pass-words could confer. The Board of Directors referred this subject, for investigation, to Rev. H. L. Kellogg. The reports upon both of Mr. Thomson's suggestions will be looked for with interest.

The Quadrennial Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church at Omaha closed its session of nearly one month last week. Its action on important topics has been noted from time to time in these columns. It refused to discuss the status of the church on secret societies, by the application of the gag-law, as stated in another article in this issue. The question of admitting women as delegates to the conference came up, and was referred to the individual conferences in the country to vote on. There are about a hundred conferences and the action is generally regarded as favorable to the women, for they have a great deal of influence in the individual conferences, much more than in the general assembly. Bishop Fowler was transferred from San Francisco to Minneapolis. The time and place of holding the next Quadrennial was left unsettled, subject to the decision of the several annual conferences.

TRIBUTE TO JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

A SERMON PREACHED AT THE FUNERAL OF EX-PRES. JONATHAN BLANCHARD, IN THE CHAPEL OF WHEATON COLLEGE, MAY 17, 1892.

BY REV. JOSEPH E. ROY, D.D.

TEXT: These things said Isaiah, when he saw His glory, and spake of Him.—Matt. 12: 41.

From a loving and intimate acquaintance of forty-six years, as pupil, friend and associate of the man whose entrance into glory we this day celebrate, I have ever regarded him as of the sort of the ancient prophets of God. And so, having had no intimation of his late illness, when the message flashed upon me, "Can you preach father's funeral?" my heart leaped out as did Elisha's for Elijah: "My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof;" and then shot back to that "preacher of righteousness" in those turbulent times when the world was ripening for the deluge; and then swung back to Jeremiah, whose loyalty to God and his Word, even unto bonds and the dungeon, in the days of the breaking up of Israel, the Sunday-school world has just been studying; and then came forward to that prophet of the wilderness of Judea, from whose words our departed friend preached the memorial sermon for that other prophetic man, Rev. Geo. W. Perkins, of the First Church of Chicago. But as the guide of our thought for this occasion, I fall back upon the words first named: "These things said Isaiah, when he saw His glory, and spake of Him."

Our Lord had just been silencing the cavil of the people that followed his announcement of his purpose to offer himself in sacrifice that he might draw all men unto him. Then the evangelist adds, But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him; and then enforces his saying by quoting from Isaiah, "Who hath believed our report?" and again, "He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their heart; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart and be converted." God had done this by leaving them to the blinding and hardening influence of their own hearts. And God had said these things, these retributive words, by the mouth of Isaiah, upon the occasion of his installation or re-introduction into the prophetic office. It was at the time of that sublime theophany in which Jehovah appeared to him as sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, his train filling the temple, and the seraphim, with their six wings each, crying in recitative, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory;" while the posts of the door were moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with the glory of the Shekinah. At this revelation of the holiness of the Godhead, Isaiah by the contrast was searched and humbled and purified, and so prepared, as a prophet, to deliver his messages in God's name. These severe words he could not pronounce to any effect unless he should speak them in love, in a subdued and reverent spirit. And these things he did speak, in view of that vision of glory; and, as the evangelical prophet he spoke them, even as "he spake of him," the Christ, the Logos, the pre-existent Messiah, who it was that appeared to him in that solemn symbol.

These prophetic men had their human side, their sinful nature. They had their domestic life, their personal affiliations, their social relations. By their exalted office they were not lifted out of the responsibilities, nor deprived of the enjoyments, of their human sphere. The same, of course, is true of the men whom God chooses to use now in something of the same way.

By his own instruction, Dr. Edward Payson had this placard upon his coffin at the occasion of his funeral: "Remember all the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you." Looking upon these lips, now mute, but once so eloquent, we seem to hear from them the same injunction: "Remember all the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you." And as those remembered words come back to us today, as pupils and parishioners and friends, how many of them, like those of Isaiah, seem to have been spoken from the presence of the divine glory, and always, in their richest glow, when he "spoke of Him," of Him, the incarnate God, the God and Saviour!

Making some effort, though so unworthy, for our own edification and consolation, to bring the life and character of this prophet of God under the light of these truths, I shall essay to speak of him, (1) as a man, (2) as a preacher, (3) as an educator, and (4) as a reformer.

I. The man. Jonathan Blanchard was born in Windham, Vermont, January 19th, 1811; and so at the time of his translation he had passed his four-score years by one year and four months. Fitted for college by W. C. Burnap, of Vermont, he entered Middlebury at seventeen and was graduated at twenty-one. Though he had entered the Christian life while in the Academy, he did not publicly profess Christ until he came to college. At that celebration, in this place, of his eightieth birthday, he said: "From the time I believed and trusted in Christ, which was sixty-four years ago, by the grace of God, I have never swerved from my Christian profession, though conscious of weakness and imperfection."

From college he went forth to teach two years in the Plattsburg Academy. He then took two years in Andover Seminary—then went out to lecture in Pennsylvania for a year under the Anti-Slavery Society, making the life-long acquaintance of God, Ritner and Thaddeus Stevens; and, as he says, of a young girl, a school-teacher of seventeen, who afterward became the dear companion of his life. He then came out to Lane Seminary, where he made the intimate acquaintance of Lyman Beecher, and took the last year of his theological training. He then became pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian church of Cincinnati, which he served nine years, until he was called, in 1846, to the presidency of Knox College. There he served thirteen years. Then, declining the invitation of six colleges to their presidency, and of important churches in Massachusetts, Michigan and Illinois, to pastorates, he came to Wheaton. Here he served twenty-two years as president, from 1860 to 1882. These last ten years he has continued the editing of the Christian Cynosure, which he had founded and had edited for twenty-three years. This is but the sketch of a picture that needs its filling out, a skeleton that needs the clothing of flesh and color and soul. This would require a volume and months of study, a sympathetic nature in the artist, a brave yet dainty pen. And we can but hope that the "volume," to which he alluded in his octogenarian address as held in plan, may be such a life-like history of himself.

There is no more interesting study than that of a biography—how God builds up a life, a character, and what he brings it on to be and to do. In our casual glance at the history of this man, we find a splendid physique; a massive brow; a magnetic presence; a great heart; a witchery of eloquence; a poetic endowment, which, if it had had time allowed it, might have made one of our nation's songsters; a genius for affairs, which, devoted exclusively within that channel, might have made a merchant or a railway prince. We find him the adoring husband, the good father, the strong friend, the genial neighbor, the public-spirited citizen, an all-engrossed member of the kingdom of God.

II. The preacher. This quality was recognized in him while he was yet in college. Our old friend, Warren Willard, of Galesburg, told another such, S. B. French, as he reported at the eightieth birthday festival, this story: Young Willard had been sent in from his home in a neighboring town to Middlebury, to get Pres. Merrill to go out and relieve their pastor, who was worn out in the revival in progress. It was decided that Dr. Merrill could not go. When this was told to Willard, he felt so badly that he cried, whereupon the faculty turned to young Blanchard. He said: "I will go." Taking the one seat in the gig and holding the boy in his lap, he went out and labored for weeks, doing most effective service in that wonderful work of grace.

His early attractiveness, as a preacher, was indicated by the fact that he was called directly from Lane Seminary to that Sixth Presbyterian church of Cincinnati, the same which, after he had left it, became Congregational, and had the pastorates of Rev. Drs. Boynton and H. M. Storrs, and is now known as the Central Congregational church. His preaching was eminently Scriptural and evangelical, adapted to the leading of souls into the new life and to the confirming of Christians in the really higher Christian way. Revivals were the natural fruitage of such sowing and he took 500 members into that church. The church was built up in spite of the diversions of theological contention upon the issue of Old School and New School, musty labels now upon library shelves, and in spite of the anti-slavery warfare, in which our preacher, as we shall see, was a doughty contestant. For the first two years of his presidency at Knox College, which was the last two years of my college course, I heard him constantly as acting pastor of the old First Church of Christ. Many of his sermons I yet have in pencil notes, while some are not yet effaced from the tablet of the memory of my wife and myself. Most tender and comforting was that one on the text, "A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench." Grandly uplifting was that upon the word, "Thy gentleness hath made me great." Reassuring, indeed, that one, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." But, for carrying all before it, was the discourse upon the passage, "Ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched; but ye are come unto Mount Zion and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant." As he bore us along upon the tide of his glowing emotion, it all seemed, we thought, so real that there could be nothing more until the actual entrance upon that heavenly fellowship. Upon that he has himself now entered, only to find, doubtless, that his former conceptions had been immensely inadequate. His missionary sermons, in those days, were the bursting of the day-dawn—in his absorption in new country interests and in the claims of reform putting no tether upon his aspiration for a world-wide kingdom. Beginning at Jerusalem, but going out to the ends of the earth, was his ideal.

During that period the season of revival was almost continuous. In the conference meeting his sweet and capable voice for music, and his intensity of feeling and expression in remarks and in prayer, kept the occasion up to a high key.

But the sweet and gentle were not the only strains of his preaching. While assisting, for a week, his brother, Rev. Wm. Walter Blanchard, pastor of our home church at Lyndon, he preached one Sunday morning upon the "Woe unto you scribes, Pharisees, hypocrites, for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." The atmosphere was quivering in its intensity. It seemed as if something would have to give; and it did give, for a self-righteous Unitarian, a Scotchman, who afterwards became my brother-in-law, jumped to his feet and by confession took himself out of that door of entrance. As I was speaking with the President, the next day, about the sermon, his remark was: "We came to short swords yesterday, didn't we?" Mr. French also gave another incident, as occurring while the President was assisting in a revival at Dubuque. After the sermon he called for an expression. No one arose. After retiring, he felt troubled; he arose and knelt by his chair. The Saviour presented himself as sitting upon the mountain and calling whom he would, and they came to him; and he said to this kneeling servant, "You called these men and they would not hear you. Get me to call them; they will hear me." The next evening after the sermon, Mr. Blanchard gave the same invitation, and stepping back a little, said: "Lord Jesus, call these men; they will hear thee;" and sixty came forward. Many who have known Mr. Blanchard as the reformer, or even as the preacher, have not known him as the successful revivalist, a service in which his effectiveness did not wear out, though in the later years it was manifest more in the ways of nurture in the school.

Mr. Blanchard's sermons before General Associations, at the anniversary of the American Missionary Association and other such occasions, had always the merit of fitness, breadth, kindling.

The sermons of the President did not run by the strictest canons of logic; they ran by the line of association, by the lead of illustration. But they made the goal; they reached the result of moving men. They were, in the main, the power of God unto salvation. Like Isaiah, he spoke as in view of the glory of God's holiness, as in view of the revelation of God in Christ to him; indeed, he "spoke of him," not as the Logos of Isaiah, but as the God incarnate, the man Christ Jesus. Loyalty to Christ was the touchstone for himself.

III. The educator. In his young manhood, he had been a teacher of a public school, the principal of an academy.

In the early spring of 1846 he came on to Knox College, to become its president. As we had then no railway communication, he had brought his family by steamer to St. Louis, and thence, by covered lumber wagon—prairie-schooner, so-called,—to Galesburg. I well remember the reception we, the students, gave him. He had stopped at the hotel. With the college buildings illuminated, we marched down, to the music of a brass band, and entering into his presence had a speech made by Edwin G. Smith, now these many years the successful superintendent for the American Bible Society in Illinois. It was a very distinct experience I had when my class came under his hand in mental philosophy and kindred studies. Although we had been put along through the languages and the mathematics, under his stimulating mind a new world was opened to us in this era of our mental being.

As I have looked back over the list of my teachers, both of those before and those after him, it has long been my conviction that he, more than any other one of them, had opened my mind unto myself—had taught me how to think. Using a text-book, he yet taught the subject. The margins of his own class-books were written full of notes. He hesitated not to criticise authors and to combat their theories; and in this way he was compelling us to think and to make up our own independent opinion. I think that it was almost universal that his students held much the same opinion of him as a teacher. His morning addresses upon habits, morals, principles, were classic gems. Many of them were printed and are still held as souvenirs. These speechlets usually followed the thread of some Scriptural apothegm. "As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place." Not a few young men and young women have had buckram put into their life-purpose from that lesson taught by the bird.

President Blanchard graduated the first thirteen classes in Knox College. On the first Commencement occasion, following the scholastic habit of his Alma Mater's president, and indeed the habit of the preceding times, he appeared upon the platform in his black gown, with his black silk hat unremoved. That was too much for the Democratic habit of the West, and he was too wise to repeat it. Often have I heard Knox students of his day expressing a loving sense of gratitude for the elements of mental action and of moral character which he had put into them. His was a great nature that made strong friends.

His leaving of Knox, upon his resignation, was occasioned by the unhappy contention between the two cognate denominations that founded it. This is not the fit time to go into the merits of that case. But it is due to the memory of the deceased to state that the mass of the alumni assembled sent into the Board of Trustees a petition to review its action, and to recall the President to his former position. The petition averred: "We deem it a corroborative argument that during the thirteen years of his administration, the first part of which was a struggle with poverty and prejudice, its prosperity has been steadily onward in pecuniary resources, in literary advantages, and in moral power, surpassed by very few colleges in the West."

The transfer from Knox to Wheaton was promptly made. The same characteristics of the educator have here been manifest in the methods and results. If any of you would like to see these results, we would say: "Look around you."

IV. The reformer. The prophets were reformers. It was in Mr. Blanchard's nature to be one. He had a keen sense of wrong, whether in principle, or in act. He abhorred it; he had the courage to assault it. He "smelled the battle from afar." But in all of this a man may have a consciousness that he is walking with God. Some would suppose that for one thus to walk with God, he must gather up the skirts of his reputation, lest it be soiled in the conflict with evil; that he must let alone defiant wrongs, lest he ruffle his good temper. Not so was it with the prophet Enoch, who walked with God. He did not think it necessary to doom himself to celibacy, to immure himself from the world, in order to live near to God. He had a family, and he walked with God before them; and he went down upon the plane of active life, so that he heard the ungodly words and saw the ungodly deeds which ungodly men were saying and doing against God, as the apostle Jude declares. So may a man denounce the ungodliness of his times and seek to organize victory against it, and still be walking with God, and walking with him all the more closely because of the heat of such conflict.

Our dear, departed friend took up reform, as in duty bound, as under loyalty to Christ. He took the Master into his confidences in this matter. And it is to-day to be said that, while not a few of the early anti-slavery reformers lost faith in God and turned against the church, this man never wavered in his religious convictions, in his theological system, but was all the more confirmed in them as the only hope of reform.

It is to be noted that his seminary course and his first pastorate came in that city on the border of the slave land, and during the swirl of the first flush of the anti-slavery conflict. He opposed the "come-outer" Abolitionists, and in his own happy phrase he "stood by the communion table."

His reformatory nature was manifest upon the occasion of his first remembrance. He was but three years and seven months old when his brother was telling him of having heard the guns of the battle at Plattsburg. He says: "I was horrified to learn that men were shooting each other; and from that hour have hated what destroys human life or welfare."

His reformatory career began when he was a boy of eleven years. It was in the cause of temperance. At his grandfather's he had been set to carry the liquor-jug to the harvesters. He got a hammer, went into the cellar and broke the jug. Though he expected a thrashing for it, he owned up to his grandfather that he did it, and gave as his reason that "it was bad stuff for the men to drink and he did not like to carry it to them." He did not get the thrashing.

In the academy and in the college he was lecturing on temperance and upon anti-slavery. In that early stage of his career he got a conception of the kingdom of God as "a perfect state of society," which became to him a test of all moral questions, the doctrine of supreme love to God and equal love to man. When only one year in his pastorate, he was called to deliver an address at Oberlin. There, before a congregation of 3,000 his theme was "A Perfect State of Society."

Between his two years at Andover Seminary and his last one at Lane, he lectured one year in Pennsylvania for the Anti-Slavery Society; and mobs here and there were his introduction to that reform. At Cincinnati, he preached for two colored churches; delivered anti-slavery lectures, and then, upon graduation, was made pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian church. He saw that city three days and nights in the power of the mob that broke three printing presses with sledge hammers and threw them into the Ohio river. It was there that he had that memorial debate with Rev. Dr. N. L. Rice upon slavery. It was a pitched battle of giants for four days, and he vanquished his antagonist. In ecclesiastical assemblies, and upon the floor of the American Board, he was a power and almost a terror, as with consummate skill in parliamentary tactics, he held his rights upon the floor of debate, and struck for freeing the churches and all missionary societies from complicity with slaveholding.

It is fitting that this college flag be at half-mast to-day. The ovation has occasion, along with the bereaved multitude of friends, to throw out this symbol of sympathetic memorial. If it had not been for the service of Mr. Blanchard, and of such men as he, in promoting the anti-slavery reform, there would not have been the virtue of righteous public sentiment enough in the people to resist the mad swirl of the rebellion.

In the reform which has engrossed much of Mr. Blanchard's energy for these last many years, he showed the element of a prophet as a seer. Back in Cincinnati in the rise of the minor secret temperance societies, he saw the oncoming of the oath-bound secret conclaves. He said he did not care so much for those little things except as hotbeds for sprouting Masons in. The prophecy is now history of long-standing. Down there, in that metropolis of the Ohio, he published the fact that a woman applied to the Masonic lodge for money to bury her husband, after he had promptly paid dues for twenty-five years, and was refused. For that act a mob of one hundred men from the saloons of Covington, Ky., attempted, but failed, to put him into that river. I need not tell you in this place, nor even in all this land, with what tenacity, with what prodigious energy, with what Christian consecration, he has pursued that organic evil which threatens the very foundations of legislation and of jurisprudence, of the social, civil and ecclesiastical fabric of our country. And though dead, he yet speaketh. I hold in my hand a leaflet entitled: "Facts—Interesting to the Christian People of Rockford and Especially to the Congregational General Association in Session There, May, 1892." That body is in session this very day. This leaflet simply reminds the body of its own action taken in that same city thirty years ago, condemning secret societies as "leading . . . ultimately to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity." The spirit of this leaflet, this last word of our brother, is not that of a pessimist; it is hopeful; it is encouraging. It refers to the triumph of the anti-slavery cause as an omen of victory to this one. I well remember that when in that same meeting at Rockford some one was complimenting Mr. Blanchard for his career in the anti-slavery reform, he parried the praise by saying: "Let him that is without sin, cast the first stone." Were he, to-day, in that Association, instead of the General Assembly on high, his spirit would be the same in regard to the question now at issue. He has a right to expect—has he not?—that we who remain shall be true to this reform.

I wonder, my friends, who of you has not been raising the question I took to Pres. Charles last Sunday: "Wasn't your father felicitating himself that as an old soldier he might now lay off the armor and rest?" "No," said he; "several times recently he was expressing desire to live longer and work for the Master, as there were some things he thought he could do better than any one else; and then, at one time, arresting his thought, he broke out in prayer: 'I am willing, O Lord, to bear this burden on; but thy will be done.'" Prof. Fischer, at whose home he spent the last two weeks, says that during that time his words were full of devotion to his Saviour and to his truth, and full of tenderness for all his children and grandchildren and friends. After a conversation with Mr. Kellogg and wife, who, with their family, had but just returned from their sojourn in the mountains, he inquired of Mrs. Fischer for the connection in which were found the words, "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh;" and then asked her, "If you knew that you were to die before sundown, would you be ready?" She said she thought she would; and he said the same for himself. He prayed nearly every evening for his sisters and brothers still living, and for all his children and grandchildren and great grandchildren. He also prayed the day before his death for some neighbors for whom he had frequently prayed before. It was a blessed privilege, continues the professor, to be with him during these weeks, and it seems the more remarkable because he did not expect that it would be his last stay with us on earth.

In a bound volume of the "Undergraduate" for 1831, of which he was the editor, I find seven or eight poems of his that show the true poetic fire. From one of these I quote a few stanzas that remind us of the Psalmist in the same strain:

This life—What is it? 'Tis a show
Of things unreal: Streams which smile
O'er rough rocks that lie hid below;
Bright shines their surface, but their flow
Fast sweeps us to eternity the while.

This life—What is it? 'Tis a leaf.
In spring it greens, and flutters still
In summer breezes; oh, how brief
The space, ere emblems fit for grief:
Cold, cold winds waste it, or the bleak tempests kill.

Again, what is this life? The sound
Of music heard far off at night;
It wakes us and we look around:
It dies--we sink in sleep profound,
'Till morn, the last morn, bursts upon the sight.

Still, what is life? An infant's mind,
It's hopes still on the morrow stay;
It's joy is, that itself is blind;
It's sorrow, words or looks unkind,
And all its ills are centered in to-day.

And yet, what is this life? The sky,
When viewed at a distance, oh, how fair!
It's vision clouds, its varied dye,
Approached, in shapes fantastic fly,
And its bright hues all fade in empty air.

This life? 'Tis but a span at last--
A fleeting moment--one short breath,
The measured span is quickly past--
The moment hurries by us fast,
The breath God gave--He takes it--it is death.

All true of life, these symbols; the show, sweeping streams, a leaf, a sound of music, an infant's mind, the fitful sky, a span, a moment, a breath—all true when taken on the scale of endless being; but yet how much of life, and experience and service and enjoyment, how much of good done, how much accomplished for the speeding of the kingdom of God, all within these eighty-one years!

And yet, when God's time had come to muster him out, how gently it was done! The editor of the Interior, a great friend of the President, would say of his departure as he had said of that of Henry Ward Beecher: "He had attained the brain-worker's boon," an instantaneous release.

That was one of the President's exquisite touches when he wrote of his companion's departure: "January 11th, 1890, she ascended the mountains of New Mexico, as Moses the mountains of Moab, and did not come down." So he, himself, was alone with God in his moment of transition. How much better this than the slow decay of powers! But we must not put limits to God's wisdom. We may glorify him by suffering his will in death as well as in life. We can well conceive the joy of the reunion of those plighted hearts, each already melted into the other's life. We call to mind his devotion to her, her absorption in him. Her highly intellectual endowment, her wealth of love-nature, her equipoise of spirit and of good sense, were a large factor in the outcome of his own life and mission. Her going on ahead had also been to him a finishing lesson. Some months ago, as we were speaking of her in the heavenly home, he said he had already learned from her more since her leaving this life than before. He had gotten a new hold upon the reality of the life beyond, and upon the recognition and companionship there. He had gained a fresh sense of the immediateness of the clothing of the soul with its spiritual body, of the certainty of being at once in the presence of the Lord.

No review of the life of this man and of his other self could be complete without a consideration of the family which God had given them, and which they had trained for him into stalwart Christian character. Not one in this large retinue of children and grandchildren, forty-eight of them, has failed of honoring the father and the mother in the quality of life and character. And what a power had been generated in that home, through its offspring, for the good of man and for the glory of God. Equally with those who were born into that household, have those who were brought into it by affianced adoption, been molded into the likeness of devotion to the family ideal, absorption in the service of the kingdom of God, in which the father had been so much of a prophet. But Mary, the blooming maiden, has long been over there; and yet how short seems the time since in this place I stood to pronounce the memorial of her sweet life from the words, "For me to live is Christ, but to die is gain." Kitty was taken in a moment from her little flock. And Lewis was called to lay aside his brilliant prospects at the bar and upon the forum; and these, with other younger ones, have divided the one home circle into two, the center of which has now gone over to the other side; and we would fain believe that our first-born, John Blanchard Roy, given to us one morning when the President was within our dwelling, will find a place betimes, for the sake of his parents, both old pupils, in that enlarging household in heaven, until they shall follow him and other such scions sent forward to be set in the gardens of their everlasting home. To these of the stricken family left behind, we bring the word of the Saviour: "I will not leave you; I will come to you." "He will ever be mindful of his covenant," as your father thrillingly preached to us in an early day. Trust him wholly. Remember who you are, the children of parents passed into the skies, and act in character.

And what shall we say, in God's name, to the son, who, having been gradually taking the father's place, has now come to the front, with no other generation before him? What, my dear brother, shall that word be? I find it in the message of an old leader to his successor: "Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid: neither be thou dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."

And you, disciples of your Senior President, what would he say to you to-day, but that you be disciples of the great Master, in all things, following the remembered example of the departed teacher only as he followed the great original. "Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day?" Yea, ye know it. But your Elisha is just here, already clad with the mantle of Elijah.

And now, we all, bidding our veteran a "God be with you till we meet again," sing him our "Rest in peace:"

Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy!

His spirit with a bound
Left its encumbering clay;
His tent, at sunrisc, on the ground
A darkened ruin lay.

The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease,
And, life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace.

Soldier of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ;
And, while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Saviour's joy.

And do we not hear him answering back his jubilate? "I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith; I have received the crown of righteousness laid up for me, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, hath given me, and shall give at that day not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The death of ex-Pres. J. Blanchard.—New England awakening.—Massachusetts still protects the endowment orders.—A good book for anti-secretists.

"He that dies in the prosecution of some earnest desire," says Bacon, "is like one that is wounded in hot blood who does not feel the blow. Therefore a mind fixed and bent upon something that is good takes from the pains of death." And so when a veteran soldier of the Lord dies with his armor on, knowing not when he is struck by the dart of the last enemy, it is more like translation than death.

Every anti-secretist in the land, as he read between the black-bordered lines of last week's Cynosure that ex-Pres. J. Blanchard had entered into rest, must have felt, quickly succeeding the pang of sorrow that we shall see his beloved face no more, joy that his grand warfare is at last accomplished. Never again will he gaze with mortal vision on his native Vermont hills; but to-day—so much like April that it seems to have mistaken its proper date in the calendar; while the apple trees stand in snowy, pink-tipped beauty, and the lights and shadows chasing each other across the landscape—reminds one of his own lines:

"For life is not all funeral, nor all play;
But, strangely blended to the curious eye,
Its whole vast tide bears rapidly away
Chaotic elements of joy and grief that lie
In wild confusion, as they drift in noiseless tumult by."

I feel like thanking God that both East and West can claim him—the one as his birth-place, the other as the scene of his life's labors and the guardian of his sleeping dust. Sound over him the peans of victory instead of dirges, and let that Name which he upheld so fearlessly be as a banner around the body of our venerated standard-bearer; who, noble soldier of Jesus Christ that he was, never called for halt or retreat in his long half-century of conflict with the lodge-dragon.

All indications show that the conservative New England mind is at last awakening to the importance of this question. At the late annual meeting of the Massachusetts Undertakers' Association, a vigorous protest was made against Sunday funerals, and the practice of the lodges who invariably choose the Sabbath as the best day on which to parade a large delegation, was alluded to in very condemnatory terms. Rev. A. S. Gumbart, who addressed the Association, spoke to the same tenor. The papers report him as saying that "the lodges are constantly violating the sanctity of the Lord's Day in this direction, and it is to be feared that in many cases the Sunday funeral under the auspices of these associations is occasioned by the pride which arises from the desire to have as large a turnout as possible." The Attleboro Daily News furnishes another straw, in a protest from a correspondent who signs himself "A Member of Secret Orders," against the proposed laying of the corner-stone of the new Court House in Taunton by the Masons. He very pertinently inquires why a building devoted to justice and the impartial treatment of all classes without distinction, should call in a secret order to do the job, and suggests that it would be much more appropriate to invite the civil authorities, the chief justice, attorneys and county sheriff to perform the office. He is evidently a better citizen than lodgeman, and for such the lodges have no use; so it would be good policy on his part to come out from a system with whose spirit and aims he apparently has, for all his nominal membership, but small sympathy.

The endowment orders have won the day in the Massachusetts Legislature; that is, the Powers bill has been substituted, by a vote of 128 to 78, to the others that have been offered, and which looked to their instant or gradual extermination. The Powers bill is ostensibly in the interest of the certificate-holders, "to allow time and means for raising the money which they expected to get when they joined," but really in the interest of the swindlers who hold the offices. The Springfield Republican says: "We have had, in recent years, a good many evidences of close relationship between the Legislature and the selfish interests coming before it in quest of laws that will aid in plundering the people, but this is, perhaps, as bad and discouraging as any yet revealed."

There is now about $9,000 to divide among the 3,031 passengers who are still clinging to the stranded Royal Ark. One does not need great mathematical powers to see that each individual's share, after the lawyer's fees are all paid, can be best defined by a zero figure. Of course, now that these orders have been given a further lease of life, they will leave no stone unturned in their efforts to take in enough fresh victims to pay up the scores of the old certificate-holders, besides lining anew their own pockets, leaving at the end of three or four years a far worse condition of things than now exists. It is patent to every reasonable mind that politics should have no part or lot in the deciding of such a question. Yet here are the facts: The Powers bill has been unblushingly proclaimed as a Republican measure, and used as a party whip over the heads of Republican members. At an after-dinner speech at the American House, Speaker Barrett advised those present to vote for the bill; and after it had been triumphantly passed, one of the members remarked, "That is the consequence of the dinner, Mr. Speaker." The opposers of Woman Suffrage have raised a great many objections to granting us political power, but I think it has never been suggested by the bitterest enemy of the movement that our votes would be liable to be influenced by gastronomic considerations, or suddenly turned the wrong way by the logic of an after-dinner speaker.

"What's in a name?" The Lotus Literary Club, in spite of the classical refinement of its title, has proved itself to be nothing but a secret bar-room, by bringing a suit against one of the members for $444, for wine and cigars, for which he refuses to pay. The defence set up is that the club not being licensed to sell intoxicating liquors, the defendant is not liable. The Judge has reserved his decision, but the non-legal mind with a prohibition bias can see no reason why the members, one and all, should not be arrested and fined, as were the Harvard students for keeping an illicit bar-room.

The demand for good anti-secret literature grows with the increased interest that is shown in the cause, and any who wish to help this sentiment to spread by enlightening their neighbors cannot do better than to buy and circulate as many copies as he can afford, of the American Hand-book and Citizen's Manual, a pamphlet of a little over 200 pages, compiled by M. N. Butler, for sale at the Cynosure office—price, 40 cents. It is simply packed from cover to cover with telling facts and arguments. I am especially pleased with the way it throws the light of the Scriptures on the omnipresent labor question. In closing, let me quote one sentence: "The lodge is ever active in ensnaring and leading astray the sons and daughters of Christian parents. The only safety is to enlist the young people in active, aggressive reform work." As the Old Guard falls in death one by one, let us see to it that young, strong, vigorous recruits stand ready to take their places.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 25, 1892.

The true significance of the command, "Go ye therefore into the highways and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage," given by Christ in the parable of the royal marriage, seems to have at last penetrated to the innermost recesses of the hearts of the good people of Washington, and the result is an activity in alley-mission work never before seen. For several months two English women conducted an alley-mission that might have been called independent, as they came over here solely for that purpose, and rented a house on their own account in one of the worst alleys in Washington, where they went to live, and quietly began the work of bringing the heathen of the national capital within reach of temperance and religion.

After some weeks' work, the two noble women attended a meeting of the W. C. T. U. for the purpose of interesting that organization in the work, and the result was so satisfactory to them that the London missionaries turned their alley-mission house over to the Central Union Mission, which is keeping up the good work, and left for a new field of work at Jacksonville, Florida. The W. C. T. U., became interested in the work, took hold of it with its accustomed energy, and at once made arrangements for the opening of several alley-mission houses in different sections of the city, and the contagion quickly extended to the churches and church organizations, several of which have already started alley-missions. A notable feature of this great wave of interest in the unfortunate half of humanity is that the colored churches are fully abreast of their white co-workers.

Last Sunday afternoon an immense meeting was held, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., for the purpose of increasing public interest in alley-mission work. "Blessed is he that considereth the poor," was announced as the theme, and the Scripture lesson was, "Go out into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring thither the poor, the lame, the halt, and the blind—go out into the highways and byways and compel them to come in." Rev. Walter H. Brooks, who, as pastor of a large colored congregation, has had unusual opportunities to observe the need for alley-mission work, spoke feelingly on the subject. He said: "At our very doors, and in every street, are the spiritually debased and poverty-stricken who need our help. These are the people who crowd our criminal courts, and who fill to overflowing our almshouses and prisons. What does God demand of you on this score? Just as sure as you are the children of God, you are under obligations to enlighten and lift up your brothers in the alleys." Rev. F. D. Power said the churches should be the centers of the spiritual and educational community, shedding light into Louse alley as well as upon Connecticut avenue, and that the church workers must invade the alleys and carry the practical Gospel of everyday life. Other ministers spoke on the same lines, and a contribution was taken up for the establishment of a new alley-mission.

If the interest in this subject continues to spread among the churches, the time is near at hand when no locality will be without its alley-mission. Business men, outside the churches, are also interested in and aiding the work, which many of them regard as auxiliary to that performed by the police. The objects of these alley-missions are manifold—all good. At the mothers' meetings sewing is taught and lessons in cleanliness and its bearing upon good health given; every day mothers may leave their small children while they are away at work; Bible lessons and Gospel meetings, with good music, occupy several evenings of each week, and the work of looking after the children goes on constantly, and that it will be productive of great good cannot be doubted. Everybody has a good word for the alley-mission workers.

The American Home Missionary society is holding its annual session here. The sixty-sixth anniversary sermon was preached last night by Rev. R. R. Meredith, of Brooklyn. The singing at the meetings of the society is conducted by Mr. and Mrs. George C. Stebbins, of Brooklyn. There are about 1,000 delegates and visitors. The program for to-day and to-morrow, when the society expects to conclude its meetings, include addresses by the secretary, L. H. Cobb, and the following well-known ministers: Rev. C. H. Taintor, of Illinois; Rev. C. F. Clapp, of Oregon; Rev. Dr. A. F. Sherrill, of Atlanta, Ga.; Rev. Dr. John H. Frazee, of Knoxville, Tenn.; Rev. Dr. S. H. Virgin, of New York; Rev. Dr. George H. Wells, of Minneapolis; Rev. Charles W. Shelton, Eastern field secretary of the society; Rev. W. D. B. Gray, of South Dakota; Rev. Dr. Elijah Horr, Rev. S. F. Gale, of Florida; Rev. J. H. Morley, of Minnesota; Rev. M. E. Everez, of the German department; Rev. Dr. Leroy Warren, of Michigan; Rev. S. C. McDaniell, of Georgia; Rev. W. S. Bell, of Montana; Rev. H. C. Summons, of North Dakota; Rev. Dr. C. H. Richards, of Philadelphia; Rev. Dr. S. L. Blake, of Connecticut; Rev. E. A. Lawrence, of Baltimore, and Rev. N. Boynton, of Boston. The society is in a most flourishing condition. *

—In the Northern States, last year, twenty-six persons died by lynch-law, only three of whom were Negroes. During the same period, in the South, 169 persons died by mob-violence, including the eleven members of the Italian Mafia, in New Orleans. Of the remaining 158 victims, 118 were colored and forty were whites. The three Negroes executed in the North were undoubtedly guilty of the crimes charge against them. The majority of those killed in the South were murdered without cause. Some were suspected of murder. Others were charged with minor crimes, and one Negro was hanged in Texas because he had insulted a white man: During 1891 there were twenty-seven legal executions in the North, twenty-six white persons and one colored man undergoing the death penalty. In the South sixty-four colored men and thirty-two whites were executed. These figures convey a startling comparison of the social condition of the two sections of the Union.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH ON REFORMS.

CEDARVILLE, Ohio, May 25, 1892.

The meeting of the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church at Cedarville, Ohio, has been both pleasant and profitable and the reforms of the day received more than a passing notice. The following paper on Sabbath observance was adopted with only four members dissenting: "Believing the inspired declaration that 'righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people;' and believing also that nations as well as individuals are under obligations to obey the requirements of God's moral law, and also believing that this is a Christian government in fact, although deficient in many things which go to make a nation what it ought to be; and since it has always been the aim of our church to set forth particularly and plainly the duty of nations, as also of men, to Christ the Governor among the nations, to God and his law; therefore, we, the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, do most earnestly and solemnly protest against the opening of the Columbian Exposition upon the Sabbath. Such a course would bring dishonor to God, injustice to our Christian people and disgrace upon our Republic. It would be a public violation of God's law, and a most injurious example to set before the world. We do also very earnestly and respectfully ask the Senate of the United States and House of Representatives to make the grant of aid to the Exposition only on condition that the gates be closed to the public on the Sabbath, and also that intoxicating liquors be not sold upon the grounds at any time, and that in case the Exposition should be opened on the Sabbath, we urge our members to remain away and not countenance the Exposition in any way.

"We also urge that our members be careful to properly observe the Sabbath, and that they in no way countenance or encourage the Sunday newspaper."

A strong paper on the liquor traffic was read by Rev. R. W. Chesnut, of Marissa, Ill. An attempt to table it was lost, and the paper was finally adopted with an earnest approval and decided victory for the prohibitionists.

General Synod still remains firmly opposed to all secret oath-bound societies. This church has had a very prosperous year. The various mission boards have their treasuries overflowing with money, and the expenses of all delegates were paid in full. c.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN THE SOUTH.

518 PHILLIP STREET, }
NEW ORLEANS, La., May 22, 1892. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I celebrated my third anniversary as pastor of St. Matthew's Baptist church, last Sunday, by conducting religious services in a plain way and submitting a report of the work done since my pastoral connection with the church. The report will appear in full in the June issue of the Tribune.

I am also engaged in writing a book: "History of the Baptists in Catholic Louisiana." Every Baptist pastor and church in this State is urged to furnish me such information as will aid me in writing a commendable history of the colored Baptists.

I have opened a city mission work in connection with my church, at 186 Contistrect, between Tremc and Franklin streets. This is the most licentious and depraved portion of New Orleans. Scores of children never attend any Sunday-school, as well as hundreds of young men and women who never see the inside of a Christian church. Drinking, gambling, and immorality in all of its most beastly forms, are carried on in this part of the city. Still, these poor sinners have souls for whosesalvation Christ died. Scores of these dear people, as I visit them in their vile dens and distribute Gospel tracts and tell them of the love of Christ, and urge them to come to our prayer-meetings and Sunday-school, say to me: "Sir, how much will I have to pay to come? Can old folks and children come? What must we do?" etc.

There is a Roman Catholic church two squares from the mission-room, but it seems that they teach the people little or nothing.

We have Sunday-school at 10 o'clock in the forenoon; sewing-school and prayer service on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock; prayer-meeting on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. We ask for the prayers of the faithful. We make garments for the poor in our sewing-school, and any donations in the line of clothing, cloth, bedding, shoes, Bibles, Testaments, religious books, tracts, etc., or small contributions in cash, to help us in this work, will be thankfully received and judiciously distributed. In this field we hope to do some good in the name of our Master.

F. J. DAVIDSON.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

LETTERS FROM MEMBERS OF THE ASSOCIATION WHO WERE UNABLE TO ATTEND.

FROM MISS SARAH E. MORROW, LEANNA, KAN.

I am as deeply interested in the good work you have engaged in as ever; in fact, my belief and interest in the cause to which we are pledged deepens with the lapse of time. During the last winter I heard a lady say that she really could not attend a revival in progress in her church, because she had to attend so many "lodges" of which she was a member. Another, whose husband belonged to "lodges," said that when one of her fellow church members died—who was so unfortunate as to belong to "lodges"—that his brothers and sisters in the church were unable to get seats, because "lodge" delegations filled the church, and took precedence. May God prosper and bless you in all your much-needed work, for it is New Testament Christianity. Yours for the cause.

FROM G. W. NEEDELS, ALBANY, MO.

Under the circumstances I cannot be with you, . . . but my heart runs out after my old friends and co-laborers. Alas for Missouri! None seems enough interested to work up a State (anti-secrecy) meeting. Would that God, in his wisdom, would arouse our people to a sense of the danger that surrounds them! If Providence has anything to do with it, and I think it has, I have been laid aside young, and chafing and complaining do no good; so I praise God for his goodness, and am happy even when I am lonely, remembering that what my hand has found to do, I have done it with my might. May God give you a prosperous and happy meeting, and at last may we all meet on that far, bright shore, receiving the reward for our labors here.

FROM J. K. ALWOOD, MORENCI, MICH.

The righteous cause in which you are engaged has had my devout sympathy from its inception till this hour. If I have a correct understanding of God's holy Word, and the principles therein inculcated and required of every man, your honorable body is rightly named "Christian Association." Its central and specific object is certainly in harmony with the will of the Holy One, as indicated in his Bible. Your labors, as a body, are against the most potent agencies employed by the foul enemy of all good, in opposition to the kingdom of our Saviour and Lord. So I believe. So many of the best minds believe. But if this view be correct, who can survey the American pulpit, as a whole, without amazement and deepest sorrow? Does not the common profession of sincerity among the clergy stagger credulity itself? Under the divine command, "Cry aloud; spare not; show my people their sins." Are they not taking bribes, large "hush-money," from the worshipers of the gods they should rebuke and repudiate? Is it not true in the pulpit as it is in the darkest slums, that "one sinner destroyeth much good?" One hireling sells many souls. One learned deceiver blinds many souls. One foul spirit in a high place frustrates the efforts of many wise, honest, pure laborers, because he has Beelzebub, human depravity, and the unweariness—yea, the ignorance of his victims, all in line with his operations. Yea, more: He has deluded hopes of prospective bribes, and awful bones and fetters, and terrors, to fasten his work of ruin upon his blinded victims. He himself is afflicted with the most unfortunate blindness—even moral blindness. Profoundly acute is his vision in the line of selfishness and corruption, but profoundly blind in the direction of holiness.

Our children should be early enlightened on the pitfalls around them, and solemnly pledged, at an early period, never to tie themselves to a hidden mystery, hid from them by human hands or device. They should early be shown the danger mentioned in Leviticus 5: 45, and induced to bind themselves in solemn covenant never to violate this divine prohibition. It is the only method that I can see that promises safety for the youths of our land from the ravages of the demon who controls the secret empire.

When the lodge captures a soul with its abominable sophistry and delusions, it fastens him for safe-keeping. When "the children of light" have enlightened a soul, they feel as though their duty to him were done. He stands uncommitted—untied—and always exposed to the glare of lodge delusions, and in an unlucky hour he is deluded by far-reaching, shrewdly-planned devices, captured, led away and tied fast-bound, hand and foot, to the Juggernaut of destruction. Now "the children of light" may almost as well whistle as weep over his ease. Must this always be so? "Is there no balm in Gilead?" Is there not a wise man among us that can devise a remedy? Can no one invent a way by which the young can be moored, or anchored, and saved from the yeasting surges that are carrying away millions beyond the influence of light? Oh, heaven pity our deluded race and raise up an army of Blanchards, Stoddards, Carradines, Cooks, Finneys, Floyds, Dillons, Wrights, Websters, Adams and Swards, and give them wisdom and moral courage according to the demands of this awful "day of no judgment." In Christian love and fellowship, I remain truly yours.

FROM REV. J. L. BARLOW.

RICHMOND, Ill., May 10, 1892.

Dearly beloved in the Lord. . . I have longed with an intense longing for this meeting, especially as the feeling has been growing, and has now become strong within me, that it would be the last opportunity afforded me, in time, to meet those I love so well—have loved so long. But, beloved, it may not be; my chair must be vacant. To you this may mean but little—I am but one; to me it means much, for ye are many, and my heart is knit to each with hooks of steel.

If I may not meet and greet you in person, my heart is in this letter, and my earnest prayer is that God our Father, God the Son (our Elder Brother), and God the Comforter—one in three—may be with, direct and bless you in all your deliberations; give you wisdom to plan, and power to execute, that which shall bring glorious results to the cause for which, together, we have prayed and wrought. To the veterans, let me say: Be faithful to the end. To the new recruits: Gird up your loins, for a desperate fight is on. Fall, many may, and must; but God is God, and right is right, and these shall triumph in the end, and all the toilers shall yet join in the victors' shout. Illness, alone, prevents my presence among you. Somewhere, in your approaches to the throne of grace, may I ask you to remember your absent brother?

FROM REV. WALTER L. FERRIS, CHEROKEE, IOWA.

I find that distance and press of work combine to keep me away from the annual meeting. I regret my inability to be present. I am satisfied that the cause is growing in power and influence. God is, in these late years, raising up friends to this reform. It is destined to be the question of the age. I find that the lodge is the one thing of all others which is deadening the spirituality of the church, handicapping the work of the Gospel, prostrating the work of the ministry, padlocking lips, and sending souls to perdition in platoons.

A very successful evangelist made this remark in my house: "I know of nothing which so hinders the work of the evangelist, and of the regular ministry, as does the secret society." He furthermore said to me: "I find that nearly every minister I meet with feels as you do; but they dare not say a word; their hands are tied—their lips are sealed!"

What we need, just now, is a consecrated ministry that will "cry aloud and spare not." With 25,000 fearless heralds in the pulpit, the empire of darkness, the system of organized secrecy, would speedily come to an end. Let us make the whole system unpopular, and the reform is more than half accomplished.

God reigns; revolutions ever go forward; error is, after all, a rope of sand; truth will prevail.

FROM SAMUEL A. PRATT, WORCESTER, MASS.

I am sorry to say that I have not seen the progress that I wish, nor do I expect to until the churches come up to a higher standard of Christian spiritual life, and as H. L. Hastings, after his conversion, said to me, there will be no trouble in getting a hearing on this subject; but now they refuse the light, because they love darkness rather than light.

I think I never saw such destitution in the church as now, as regards numbers and spiritual life. More than fifty years has God permitted me to dwell in the house of the Lord with joy and thanksgiving. I still remain to fight the battle in his name. The more I see and know of the evils of secret societies, the more I hate them, because they are not of God. I am not in the least discouraged, for victory is ours, in Christ's name. The Cynosure has been a comfort and blessing to me, and this year has been the best of all. My desire is that its blessings may continue until its principles are known and felt throughout the whole world.

In one direction, more has been accomplished than ever before; that is, in Boston. Bro. Stoddard and wife have done a great work and are growing in the favor of the people. It is my desire that he may continue the good work for a long time to come.

With the above few lines, I will close, wishing you grace, mercy and peace through our Lord Jesus Christ.

FROM C. B. KNIGHT, WORCESTER, MASS.

The churches of our land hold the key to your reform, as well as to the temperance reform of our times, and I think you do well to confine your work very largely, as you are doing, along these lines. A man's religion, as one has well said, cannot be much better than his politics or his lodge associations; and hence we hear the remark that very few lodge men who belong to the church are at all active therein. When the churches of our Lord are thoroughly aroused and converted, then shall we see the saloon closed and lodgery will be tottering to its fall. May God hasten the day when his people shall become a unit in the suppression of all that is contrary to his will and commandment. Wishing you much encouragement in your annual meeting, I remain fraternally yours.

LITERATURE.

EDUCATIONAL.

From the Bureau of Education, Interior Department, at Washington, we have received the following additions to its circulars for information for general distribution. To obtain them our readers have only to address the Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C. The first is No. 12 of "Contributions to American Educational History," edited by Herbert B. Adams, and embraces "The History of Higher Education in Ohio," by Geo. W. Knight, Ph. D., Professor of History in the Ohio State University, and John R. Commons, A. M., Associate Professor of Political Economy in Oberlin College. The volume is copiously illustrated with fine views of the higher educational institutions in Ohio, and letter-press descriptions of the entire thirty-three colleges and universities. An appendix treats of the Association of Ohio colleges and the forty high schools in the State. The other volume is devoted to a review of "Biological Teaching in the Colleges of the United States," by John P. Campbell, A. B., Ph. D., a graduate of Johns Hopkins University, and Professor of Biology in the University of Georgia. The Commissioner of Education writes to the Secretary of the Interior, respecting this work, as follows: "The most striking of the modifications in the college curriculum which have been made within the last half century, is the enlargement of the sphere of instruction in the natural sciences. The older colleges built their course of study on mathematics, Latin and Greek, but there has arisen in later times a tributary stream of human learning which includes three modern branches, natural science and the literature and history of modern nations. This is receiving more and more recognition in the course of study. Appreciating the significance and importance of this newer line of study, I have gladly availed myself of the opportunity to institute an investigation of the methods pursued in one of its most important divisions, and accepted the offer of Prof. John P. Campbell, of the University of Georgia, to prepare a monograph on Biological Teaching in the United States. The results of his inquiries are here presented, in the belief that they will prove valuable to all teachers of science, whether in colleges or secondary schools." Educators will find both of these volumes replete with interest.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Sunny Hour for May, "published by a boy for boys and girls," is a fine specimen of this periodical. The editor and publisher is Tello d'Apery, a lad of fifteen years, who is, besides, engaged in a great and laudable work—the establishment of missions in various localities for the distribution of shoes among destitute, barefoot children. Already he has accomplished much in this direction and is still steadily pushing on his worthy design: Among his patrons he numbers several of the crowned heads of Europe, the learned and noble in various lands, and various great-hearted Americans, and some of these are contributors to his little magazine. Its contents are clean, instructive and of interest to children and youth. In the Paris edition the regular issue has a page translated into French. He says: "I have also had a demand from Alexandria, Egypt, to have the Sunny Hour published there in Greek—that is, a Greek edition. When I told my printer, he mused up his hair, and looked as if he would go crazy. I have not yet decided about the Greek. I have a very large number of subscribers in Egypt, Greece, Italy, Turkey and France, and English headquarters in England." He also appeals to the children for help to found a barefoot mission in every city in the world. Really, the dear lad deserves every encouragement in his humane mission. His address is 18 West Fourteenth street, New York City. The price of his magazine is $1.00 a year.

Scribner's Magazine for June merits especial attention for the improved character of its contents, only a thread of fiction running through its more practical pages. The following is the list of its principal papers and their authors: An Ascent of Mt. Ætna, by Archibald Lampman. The Drury Lane Boys' Club—What it Grew From, What it Is, and What we Hope it Will Be, by Francis Hodgson Burnett; The Priceless Pearl, by Jno. W. Chadwick; Historic Moments—A Memory of the Chicago Fire, by David Swing; After Sunset, by Graham R. Tomson; The Poor in Great Cities—Third paper, embracing Life in New York Tenement Houses, as Seen by a City Missionary, by Wm. T. Esling; The Reflections of a Married Man (concluded), by Robert Grant; Cattle Trails on the Prairies, by Charles M. Harger; Rapid Transit in Cities (continued)—The Solution, by Thos. C. Clark; Sea Beaches, by N. S. Shaler; The Wreckers, by Stevenson and Osborne, approaches its conclusion; Editorials. The illustrations are numerous and finely executed. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $3.00 a year.

The usual liberal number of contributions to American female literature find ample scope in the June issue of the Ladies' Home Journal. The articles that will most interest summer readers are the illustrated installment of Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him, by Mrs. Beecher; Hints from a Mother's Life, by Mrs. W. E. Gladstone, and The Brownies Through the Year, by Palmer Cox. Lucy Hamilton Hooper sketches the career of Madame Victorien Sardou; T. C. DeLeon writes of Mrs. Augusta Evans Wilson, the American novelist. Sarah Orne Jewett begins the history of An Everyday Girl, with good effect. The Queens of Westminster Abbey furnish Miss E. T. Bradley with an interesting topic. Burdette, Talmage, Mrs. Lyman Abbott and others supply their regular departments with their usual talent, and a dozen other contributors add their facts and fancies to the general pot pourri, and give this popular monthly a welcome character. Philadelphia: Curtis Publishing Co. $1.00 a year.

Historia, the new candidate for youthful favor, with its June number reaches its fourth issue and loses none of its original prestige as it grows older. A glance at its contents will convey a very fair intimation of the value which such a class of literature must have wherever it is found: Stories of the Scottish Clans, by Thurlow Z. Hunt; An Escape from Libby Prison, by Joseph L. Parker; Perseus and Andromeda (poem), by Charles B. Soule; How the Black Prince Took King John Prisoner, by Warren T. Meadows; Stories of the Trojan War, by Henry K. Neelo; A Daring Pioneer, by Geo. Curtis; Fighting the Mexicans (continued), by Lieut. J. Harmon; Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian, by Frank G. Soule, etc., Chicago: The Historia Company, Chamber-of-Commerce Building. $1.00 a year.

Maxim, the inventor of the Maxim gun, one of the greatest of American inventors, explains in the June Cosmopolitan how it is possible to build without further discussion a flying machine which will travel through the air at the rate of 100 miles per hour; this without the aid of any gas.

The theory advanced several years ago that the pass through which the Thodul glacier, in Switzerland, is now running, at one time contained no ice, is confirmed by a recent discovery of coins under the glacial ice. The coins bear the likeness of Augustus and Diocletian. In 1887 a horseshoe was found.

Careful observations and comparisons made by scientific Americans prove that the hottest region on earth is on the southwestern coast of Persia, where that country borders the gulf of the same name. Two little islands furnish four-fifths of the cloves consumed by the world. The islands are Zanzibar and Pemba, and a little while ago Arabs found it very profitable to bring slaves from the African lake region and smuggle them in the night over to Pemba to work on the clove plantations. The farms were very remunerative once, but the market has been overstocked, and the price has fallen so low that the clove raisers have decided to diversify their crops.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Progress is the constant cry in electrical circles. No science has advanced as rapidly in practical results as the science of electricity during the past decade. A careful estimate made by the Electrical Review, New York, shows upward of seven hundred million dollars invested in this industry in this country. The same journal predicts that if full opportunity is given the most interesting and wonderful exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition will be that illustrating the power and development of electricity.

For the first time in history, the elocution teachers and public readers of America are to unite in convention, to be held in New York during the last week of June. The main purposes of the convention are to bring the scattered members of this noble profession into closer personal relations for mutual benefit to advance the interests of the art, and to discuss the latest contributions from scientific men, like Delsarte, to the general knowledge of the subject. Any communications relative to the matter should be addressed to Prof. R. E. Mayne, 172 Lexington avenue, New York, who has consented to act as secretary.

A MOST GRAPHIC STORY.

It Is Taken Direct from Real Life

A Charming New England Lady Tells Her Experience Both Abroad and in America.

The unwritten romances of life are more wonderful and far more interesting than the most vivid works of fiction. The one we are about to relate occurred in real life, and is both interesting and instructive.

Mrs. Jennie Ray formerly lived in Manchester, N. H. Her home was pleasant, her surroundings comfortable. In the year 1880 she visited England, and while in that country began to experience strange sensations. At first she attributed them to the change of climate, but they continued and increased, until finally, like many another woman she became utterly discouraged.

It was while in this condition that Mrs. Ray returned to America and her home. Thousands of women who read this story can appreciate the condition in which Mrs. Ray then was, and sympathize with her suffering. Two prominent physicians were called and endeavored to do all in their power for her relief. In spite, however, of their skill Mrs. Ray grew weaker and more depressed, while the agony she endured seemed to increase. It was at this time that a noted physician who was called declared Mrs. Ray was suffering from cancer, said there was no help, and told her friends she could not live more than a week at the farthest.

And here comes the interesting part of the story, which we will endeavor to tell in Mrs. Ray's own words. She said:

"Unknown to all these physicians, I had been using a preparation of which I had heard much. I did not tell the physicians because I feared they would ridicule me, and perhaps order its discontinuance. During all the while that the physicians were attending me the preparation was steadily and faithfully doing its own work in its own way, and I had faith in its power. At last the doctor said there was no use of his coming, for he could do me no good. I had suffered so much that I was quite willing to die, but it seems I was nearer relief than I knew. One week from the day the doctor last called a false growth, as large as a coffee cup, and which looked as though it had been very large, left me. I sent for a doctor, and he declared it was a fibroid tumor, but said he had never known one to come away of itself before. I immediately began to gain health and strength, and I unhesitatingly declare that my rescue from death was due solely to the marvelous effects of Warner's Safe Cure, which was the remedy I took unknown to the physicians, and which certainly rescued me from the grave. It is my firm belief that many ladies who are said to die of cancer of the womb are cases like mine, and if they could be induced to use Warner's Safe Cure they, like me, might be saved."

The above graphic account is perfectly true in every respect. Mrs. Jennie Ray is now living at 142 West 6th St., South Boston, Mass., and if any lady doubts the above statement she can address Mrs. Ray, who will gladly answer all questions or grant an interview of a confidential nature to any lady who may choose to call upon her. It is said that "truth is stranger than fiction," and when the thousands of suffering, helpless women who are upon the road which physicians say leads only to death, consider the story as above given there is reason for hope and joy, even although they may be now in the depths of despondency and misery. To such ladies the above truthful account is willingly given.

PENSIONS AS PLUNDER.

Although the rebellion of the Southern States failed to accomplish the ruin of the Federal Union, the corruptions wrought by the existing pension laws in favor of persons who have little or no claim upon the generosity of the government, the pension attorneys, and the politicians, are a burden to the tax-payers of this republic—a burden from which neither the present nor the future promises any relief. In the words of an intelligent metropolitan journal, "There is no legislation on the statute book so soiled with corruption, so tainted with the meanest of human vices, as the pension laws."

In 1866, one year after the rebellion ended, the pension disbursements were $13,460,000; in 1892 appropriations have been made for the payment of pensions, next year, aggregating $134,000,000. In 1866, the number of pensioners was 127,000; there are now 676,000; and yet twenty-seven years have elapsed—nearly a generation—since the war closed. Three years hence, it is estimated, $281,000,000 will be annually required to pay the pensions. That is to say, our pension list is ten times larger than that of France or Great Britain, and more than twenty times greater than that of Germany.

It is a shameful extravagance, almost wholly devoid of patriotism and gratitude, and prompted by avarice and political venality. The remedy lies in another rebellion—that of the people against the plunderers.

A GALAXY OF HEROES.

In the late discourse of Rev. Henry T. Cheever, at Washington, D. C., on the life, genius and services to humanity of his honored brother, Dr. Geo. Barrell Cheever, the place and part of the lamented senior editor of the Christian Cynosure in the great conflict with slavery, are thus referred to:

"The great men whom God raised up in the bosom of Christianity as leaders to do battle with slavery in the middle of this nineteenth century—William Ellery Channing, George Thompson, Gerrit Smith, Lloyd Garrison, Charles Sumner, Wendell Phillips, William Goodell, Jonathan Blanchard, Henry Beecher and the stalwart preacher in the pulpit of the Puritans at Union Square, New York,—all but one of them, the surviving Greatheart leader of organized opposition to oath-bound orders of secrecy (Jonathan Blanchard) now passed to the realm of the blessed—were men of the mountain type. They were the men whom James Russell Lowell meant in the stirring stanzas of 1845, entitled: 'The Present Crisis:'

"Count me o'er earth's chosen heroes—
They were souls that stood alone,
While the men they agonized for Hurled the contumelious stone:

Stood serene, and down the future
Saw the golden beam incline
To the side of perfect justice,
Mastered by their faith divine!"

Since the delivery of Mr. Cheever's discourse, the death of ex Pres. Blanchard has strongly emphasized the foregoing passage—all are "now passed to the realm of the blessed." "They rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

SECRET AND SILENT ENEMIES.

"Silence and secrecy" belong especially to the first of the "ineffable degrees" of Freemasonry, that of the "Select Master," and the phrase occurs in the charge given to the candidate at his initiation, as follows: "Suffer not an idle or impertinent curiosity to lead you astray, or betray you into danger. Be deaf to every insinuation which would have a tendency to weaken your resolution or tempt you to an act of disobedience. Be voluntarily dumb and blind, when the exercise of those faculties would endanger the peace of your mind or the probity of your conduct; and let silence and secrecy, those cardinal virtues of a Select Master, on all necessary occasions, be scrupulously observed."

Referring to this passage, a high-degree Mason says: "Pythagoras taught that God should be worshiped in silence, because all things at the creation took their beginning in silence," which is not true; for Job says (28: 7), "The morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy," on that occasion. Then the high-degree Mason adds: "And are not Christians taught to 'pray in secret?' " As if there were any connection between the petitions of a true Christian and the Christless prayers of the lodge!

Turning again to the charge in the Select Master's degree, as quoted above, there is little to distinguish it from instructions that might be given with equal force by the captain of a band of robbers and horse-thieves to his followers: "Listen, fellows! Suffer not an idle or impertinent curiosity to lead you astray, or betray you into danger. Be deaf to every insinuation which would have a tendency to weaken your resolution or tempt you to an act of disobedience. Be voluntarily dumb and blind, when the exercise of those faculties would endanger the peace of your mind or the merit of your conduct; and let silence and secrecy, those cardinal virtues of a 'knight of the road,' on all necessary occasions, be scrupulously observed. Upon them depends the safety of your persons and the accumulation of plunder."

In the Select Master's degree, the initiate has sworn obedience to the Council and Grand Council, under no less a penalty than "having his eyes torn from their sockets, his hands chopped off and his body quartered, and then thrown among the rubbish of the Temple." For an equally heinous offence the James Brothers were no doubt more humane when they shot their recreant follower to death on the spot without such horrid mutilation. Great is silence and secrecy among the ungodly!

WHY PRESIDENT BLANCHARD ACCEPTED THE CALL TO WHEATON COLLEGE.

It was pre-eminently because he was called of God. But God's calls are always in harmony with the eternal fitness of things; and a man of good sense, justice and honor, who searches the Scriptures and holds communion with God, makes no mistakes, and is able to give good reasons for what he does.

One of the most tempting offers that came into competition with the call to Wheaton, was from a college, well-endowed, and out of debt. The call was urgent the salary tempting. But, explained the President to one of his children, the question of Freemasonry had not been made a foundation principle there. Secret society men had contributed to the establishment of that school. To stand as flint against all false altars, and for the purity of the church there, would hardly be treating the founders of the school fairly; while to wage war on the secret lodge system at Wheaton would be a duty. The Wesleyan Methodists had established at Wheaton "The Illinois Institute," with prayers, tears, and self-denying toil. They could not maintain it.

Opposition to slavery and secret societies was among its foundation principles. Congregationalists promised the institution their indorsement if Mr. Blanchard would become its President.

This conflict against Gentile or devil-worship was the great legacy bequeathed to the successors of those noble pioneers who laid the cornerstone of what is now Wheaton College, in the prairie grass. Mr. Blanchard would not be party to anything that was not strictly honorable, even in opposing sin.

But the reasons for coming to Wheaton and his accepting the presidency of the college can best be stated in his own words. He writes:

"Why did I come to Wheaton? And why make opposition to secret societies so prominent? I answer: 1. Because Wheaton was near Chicago, the gate city between the Atlantic and Pacific, between Western Europe and Eastern Asia. 2. Because the Wesleyans had given up their institute, on condition that their testimony against the lodge should be maintained. 3. But the chief reason was: I believed the Lord had need of Wheaton College, to aid in preparing the way for his coming. The state of our nation at the time will explain this. In 1832, Freemasonry had fallen in the North, gone South and organized the war, which opened three months after I came to Wheaton. The ten lodges in the district of Columbia all had gone South, and the chief Freemason in the United States was raising Indians to scalp Union troops.

"Northern Copperheads and Southern rebels were in sworn fealty to the lodge, and to each other, but by a benign providence our government was in the hands of Lincoln, Seward, Chase, Stanton and Stevens; with Sumner and Hale in the Senate; Lovejoy and Giddings in the House; Grant in the army, and Charles Francis Adams in England; all Anti-masons, though these were mighty men. Hatred of the Negro, whom the white lodge excluded, and obedience to its secret oaths, nearly swamped our government; and orthodox churches which had disfellowshipped Channing and the Unitarians were 'brothering' with the non-professing deists of the lodge! I believed that the Lord had need of a college near Chicago, to open the eyes of the American people, to enthrone Christ, whom the lodge dethrones; and to teach the nations of the earth, who worship devils, that there is no reaching the Infinite God without a Mediator."

DR. FULTON'S RETURN.

The Rev. Dr. Justin D. Fulton, after two years' labor as pastor of Grace Baptist church in Montreal, Can., now retires from that field. During his ministrations he has also, with efficient co-workers, held three meetings a day in the Queen's Theatre, in that city, with crowded audiences, and almost weekly he has baptized converts, many of them seceders from the church of Rome. There is abundant testimony as to the value of his services, "especially in the way of opening the eyes of Protestants to see their peril from Romish aggression, and in stimulating and directing them in the putting forth of more earnest, aggressive, and consecrated endeavor in anti-Roman work."

Dr. Fulton, as we learn from the Standard, "believes that in the World's Fair there may be a great opportunity to strike for Protestantism and the right. The papacy, too, sees a great occasion in the Exposition. Columbus the Catholic discoverer; Catholic Spain, the nation to which we owe America; American civilization the result of Catholic foresight will be held up to view, while Mrs. Potter Palmer is writing to the Pope for Catholic relics, the model of La Rabida convent is being erected as one of the buildings at Jackson Park, the great Catholic congress is being planned for in 1893, and the Pope's encyclical letter is promised. All these things and more indicate Rome's aggression."

If the Lord shall so order, Dr. Fulton will probably be present on that occasion, to labor in sympathy with Protestant churches and in harmony with their pastors. He thinks there will be work which ought to be done at that time.

THE NEGRO IN THE SOUTH.

The lynching and whipping of Negroes in the Southern States, instigated by race prejudice, continues to leave a disgraceful smirch on social life in that section of the Union. Upon the most trivial charges, unsustained by honest evidence, the colored people are slain and persecuted, in defiance of law and humanity. No wonder the Negroes are growing restive and rebellious. From a Memphis paper of the 19th inst., we clip the following paragraphs:

"Little Rock has joined Memphis and Nashville in the lynching business. Last week H. James was taken out of the penitentiary and hung, by what the Commercial called the best citizens. What about the worst?"

The South is honeycombed with "beneficiary" secret societies, thronged with Negroes. On this point, the editor of the (Memphis) Living Way thus expresses himself: "I think the Lord will let the Negro be killed and kicked about as long as he goes into those dark dens and by oath closes his heart against God. See Eph. 4: 30."

"An oath-bound organization has been formed in Hobetie, Texas, by colored men for self-protection against the lynching of colored men. Retaliation seems to be their object whenever they cannot protect themselves," says the Commercial.

Here is a better way out: "The 31st day of May has been designated as a general day for fasting and praying all over this country, North and South, by colored people and their friends, to the Almighty God and Father of spirits of men, for his care, deliverance and protection of the colored people from the hand of Southern outlawry. Surely no one can object to this."

"There can be no mistake about the fiendish intention of the white people of the South to murder, outlaw, subjugate, proscribe, and humiliate in any way they please, the Negro who stays on its soil. It is no use talking. Every day leaves matters worse and worse, and the only remedy is to get out. The man who thinks he cannot leave because so many of his interests are entwined here may feel considerably helped while he is on his way to the other country via hemp rope or musketry."

These extracts sufficiently indicate the spirit that now pervades the old slave-States.

SECRETISM AT AMHERST.

The American Baptist, which flourished twenty years ago under Dr. Nathan Brown, turned over its list to the Baptist Weekly early in the '70s; and a few years since the latter, on the death of its editor, Dr. Patton, became the Christian Inquirer. Nathan Brown's paper was famed in all the Baptist denomination for its defense of unpopular truth; and it must be regretted that the birthright did not descend to its successors. Dr. R. S. McArthur, a well-known pastor of New York City, writes in the Inquirer of a late visit to Amherst College where he fraternized with the students in their secret societies. He believes them to be in a flourishing condition. Some of them own buildings, which contain living rooms for students as well as lodge rooms. The president is a son of Hon. Seth M. Gates of Warsaw, N. Y., well known in his time as a seceded Mason, and esteemed as an eminent Congregationalist. When at Rutgers College, New Jersey, President Gates was understood to give a limited approval of college fraternities. Dr. McArthur says he "considers them co-adjutors in the management of the college." But it is to be understood from published remarks of President Gates on this subject, that he uses these secret fraternities as the miller uses the stream. He does not wish to undertake the task of abolishing them; but accepting the situation by skillful management makes them assist in some way in the good discipline of the institution.

But Dr. McArthur goes on to remark on college secret societies in general. He is amused to read some criticisms upon them, "whose bigotry," he says, "is equaled only by their bitterness, and their ignorance by their malignity." He refutes these critics and objectors by pointing to Amherst. On a Sabbath evening he held a meeting for Bible reading and prayer in the "Psi Upsilon" building. Several of the members assisted in the devotions of the hour and all were reverent. He adds a saving clause, "Doubtless college fraternities may be injurious," but he does not think them generally so, and "so far as Amherst is concerned," opposition to them is groundless.

Now it may be said, with all respect to Dr. McArthur's recognized ability and wide experience, that he does not know everything about college secret societies; and he might visit scores of institutions and be as much amazed at his own opinions, set down in his article in the Inquirer, as he is amused at the criticisms of others.

1. In the first place he has no right to be amused at the bigotry, bitterness or ignorance of well-meaning people, who are honest in their convictions, and who humbly try to apply the touchstone of truth to the lodge, in college as well as out of it. He should rather follow the example of Christ, who was never amused with such failings in the character of men.

2. He should remember that Amherst College has been distinguished, from its foundation, for its deeply religious atmosphere. A greater proportion of its graduates are preaching the Gospel than from any other Eastern college. This character pervades the institution, and has from the first influenced the students. It affects all their societies, and of course their secret societies along with the rest. If this were not the case Dr. McArthur would not be writing in the Inquirer about Amherst College secretism. He would avoid the subject if these lodges behaved like those in Yale, Harvard, Cornell, Knox, etc., etc. But they are the same kind of societies in their principles; and the only reason they do not manifest the same wickedness and folly is because of the restraining influence of religion outside of their halls.

3. Dr. McArthur is wrong again in quoting the testimony of Amherst professors concerning Amherst secret societies, and applying it to those societies generally. He catches one swallow and thinks he has a whole summer. That is not logical. The overwhelming testimony of college officers concerning these societies is against them. Let Dr. McArthur collate it and he will be better informed. What does he say, for instance, of the recent exposure of Harvard societies by Mr. Garrison: and that is no exceptional case.

Let its readers hereafter find in the Inquirer, and from Dr. McArthur's pen, some faithful application of the teachings of our Lord respecting the lodge system. In eternity they will all be thankful for such truth.

GEN. GRANT'S PROPHECY.

In 1875, in a message to Congress, President Grant made this remarkable statement:

"In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States which paid no tax, municipal or state, amounted to $87,000,000. In 1860, the amount had doubled. In 1870, it was $354,483,587. In 1900, without a check, it is safe to say, this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to, without taxation may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally."

It is a little remarkable that President Grant's prophecy, quoted here, has already been very nearly fulfilled. In the last issue of the Cynosure, we printed the conclusion of Mrs. E. Trask Hill's article on the "The Jesuits," in which the following passages occur. She is summing up the remedies for the evils which threaten this whole nation in the growth and aggression of the Jesuits. She says:

"Insist on the taxation of all church property, whether Protestant or Roman Catholic, or of whatever faith. To-day there are 100,000 church buildings in the United States untaxed valued at $1,400,000,000, and church property is always estimated far before its value.

"The Protestant Episcopal church alone in New York City owns $13,319,000 worth of property, and this estimate is very low.

"The Roman Catholic churches are put down at $9,479,000; yet the Cathedral on Fifth avenue actually cost more than $2,000,000.

"At this rate the church property in the United States exempt from taxation does not fall far short of $3,000,000,000; and if are added to this sum the cemeteries, private schools, hospitals, and so-called charitable institutions, the amount would probably reach $5,000,000,000."

Let the candid reader compare these figures with those presented by President Grant, and he will be surprised at their co-incident relation.

REFORM NEWS.

NEW PLANS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

In planning the work of the Association for the present year, the Board of Directors has districted the country and is endeavoring to provide a lecturer for each section. To the new Corresponding Secretary has also been assigned, by mutual arrangement, a work which has been somewhat neglected. He is to visit and address, as far as possible, the religious associations, conferences, synods and conventions of whatever name. In connection with our venerable College agent, he is also to reach the students of our colleges and seminaries. He will visit individual churches, also, at every opportunity, presenting our reform, collecting funds and promoting the work in every way possible. He asks every reader of the Cynosure to aid him:

(1.) By their prayers;

(2.) By their counsel; and

(3.) By their hands and feet, in getting appointments for him, to which he will answer as speedily as possible.

Address HENRY L. KELLOGG, Cor. Sec'y N. C. A., Cynosure Office, Chicago.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

TO THE READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—The plan which I presented to the Board of Directors at their last meeting, and which was unanimously adopted, was to aid the lecture work by departments rather than by States, and to make a more systematic effort to use the home talent, ministers and others, scattered throughout the States, to fill appointments within easy reach.

Very flattering results have already been secured. Not only have I obtained the consent of able men in different States to fill such appointments, but some ten places for lectures have been opened in Illinois, besides a plan to work the State systematically and thoroughly by the aid of Rev. A. W. Parry, the Illinois Secretary. A larger number of churches are opened in Indiana, one in Missouri, five in South Dakota, and about two weeks' work is provided for in Canada.

The calls from Canada have become so frequent that the Board voted to aid a Canadian department, as it aids the other branches of the lecture field. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, the New England agent, has promised (D. V.) to help fill the appointments already made for Canada. Since these engagements cannot be fully met until the last of July or the first of August, I hope that I may hear from many before the campaign shall begin there.

If a church, or hall can be secured for an anti-secrecy lecture in any town or city, write to me for a lecturer.

Will not all of the friends who are interested in a "Pacific Department," with headquarters in Oregon, write to me the amount they will pledge for that work per year (D. V.) for the next ten years? We must go to the Pacific to stay, as we are in the East, Southeast, and here in Chicago.

I have already received assurances from the Pacific Coast that this is their desire: To hold on steadily until an impression can be made on the conscience and continued so that men shall praise God for deliverance from this "terrible snare to men, Satan's masterpiece."

One has written, offering to give the N. C. A. a house and lot for the agent to live in, and some small amounts additional have been pledged.

Let me hear from every friend who can aid in this work. I have the word of a very able minister that he will undertake the Pacific Agency as soon as the time is ripe.

W. I. PHILLIPS,
Field Sec'y and Treas.

PROGRESS OF THE CAUSE IN OREGON.

CANBY, Oregon, May 18, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. Wm. Fenton made us a very welcome visit May 14 and 15, and gave us two first-class Anti-masonic lectures. They were indeed very valuable to us, and made a deep impression on the audience, which was large considering the stormy weather. He did us just such work as we desire to have done all over the State of Oregon. I told him if he would do that kind of work up and down the Willamette river, I would pay him for it and furnish him a forerunner to prepare the way by securing churches and suitable places for him to speak, and advertise the time of the meetings extensively, so as to have large congregations.

WE MUST HAVE AN N. C. A. DEPARTMENT HERE.

I think we will arrange for a convention here next August, if no preventing providence occurs.

We wish to do our part to have the people generally informed of the great wickedness of Freemasonry. We who have information should feel it our indispensable duty to impart the same to others. It is a great mystery to me how men of good common sense can take such abominably profane oaths as are taken by so many Freemasons, and many of them professedly ministers of the Gospel. How can they be Christians?

Let every Anti-mason do his or her best by circulating tracts and furnishing money to carry forward the work needed to be done.

S. MATHEW.

THE HOME.

HOW WE LEARN GREAT THINGS.

Great truths are dearly bought. The common truth,
Such as men give and take from day to day,
Comes in the common walk of easy life,
Blown by the careless wind across our way.

Bought in the market at the current price,
Bred of the smile, the jest, perchance the bowl;
It tells no tales of daring or of worth,
Nor pierces even the surface of a soul.

Great truths are greatly won. Nor found by chance,
Nor wafted on the breath of summer-dream;
But grasped in the great struggle of the soul,
Hard buffeting with adverse wind and stream.

Not in the general mart, 'mid corn and wine;
Not in the merchandise of gold and gems;
Not in the world's gay hall of midnight mirth;
Not 'mid the blaze of regal diadems;

But in the day of conflict, fear and grief,
When the strong hand of God, put forth in might,
Ploughs up the subsoil of the stagnant heart,
And brings the imprisoned truth-seed to the light.

Wrung from the troubled spirit, in hard hours
Of weakness, solitude, perchance of pain,
Truth springs, like harvest from the well-ploughed field,
And the soul feels it has not wept in vain.

—Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar.

START EARLY.

One man attributed his early success in life to his habit of being fifteen minutes ahead of time. Time enough is usually little enough. We make it a rule when we have finished the work we have to do, to take an early train, the first one if practicable, and never, unless in case of absolute necessity, to depend on the last train. That train may not run. It may be hindered, it may be wrecked; and then it is too late to remedy the misfortune.

Says one sensible writer: "Never take the last train when you can help it. Much of the trouble in life is caused by the fact that people, in their engagements, wait till the last minute. The seven o'clock train will take them to the right place if every thing goes straight, but in this world things are very apt to go crooked. So you had better take the train that starts an hour earlier. In everything we undertake let us leave a little margin. Do not calculate too closely on possibilities. Better have room and time to spare.

LIFE IN CHRIST.

The life of fret and friction, failure and bondage, because lived for self, is transmuted into a song of joy when it comes under the mastery of the redemptive purpose of Christ. It passes from a sphere of religious drudgery to one of infinite freedom and exhaustless vigor. When we come to be absolved from self through devotion to Christ, letting him into the blessed possession of the whole life, willing to be nothing in self and for self, that he may manifest himself through us as Saviour to our brother men, we shall then be so absorbed in doing Christ's compassionate deeds, so engaged upon his errand of love, that we shall have small time to spend in the self-seeking that consumes so much strength that should be given to service; we shall be so thoughtful in opening doors into larger and better futures for others, that we shall not be anxious about ourselves; we shall not fret about what people think of us, because our supreme concern will be what they think of Christ,—glad to be forgotten that Christ may be remembered, grow smaller in others' estimation that Christ may grow larger, decrease in the sight of men that Christ may increase.

If we are ruled by a purpose to make Christ glorious in the world's eyes, enlarge his authority in the world's work, increase his worth in the world's thought, we shall not worry about what or where we are, what we have or have not—losing sight of self in our transfixing vision of the Lord—honoring him with a faith that asks not to see, and a peace triumphant over all our sufferings and vexations; we shall take care of our minds and bodies, dissipating the strength of neither in any sort of self-indulgence, because they are Christ's; mere trifles will become to us eternities; everything we touch, and all that touches us, will acquire a sacredness in our thoughts; everything without will speak to us a divine message, and gleam with the light of divine purpose, because the divine Christ-life is within.

When Christ becomes the soul of our activities, we shall go to and fro upon our daily tasks, finding in each a burning bush aflame with God, because there is nothing but God's holy ground to walk upon; our homes and markets, our courts and schools, our factories and counting-rooms, will all be holy places; the whole earth will become to us a sanctuary of worship, because the altar of the cross has been raised upon it, and the lamb slain from the foundation of the world offered thereupon as our sacrifice—because the voice of the Lord has spoken in this sanctuary, and his glory has been seen therein—because he is toiling on at its completion, building it with the strength of his grace, rejoicing with his mighty love.—Anonymous.

TONY'S OWN SELF.

"Give me a bite, Tony?"

Tony came on the playground with a fine apple in his hand. It was as round as his face, as red as his cheeks, as big (almost, he would have said) as his head, as sweet—as his temper—dear me! What did Tony answer?

"I shan't. It's mine and I want it all my own self."

"Hello, Tony, lend me your new top?" cried one of his playmates.

"No. Just as soon as I've eaten this apple, I'm going to use it my own self."

Tony's own self was about as pleasant looking a self as usually belongs with a boy. He had a bright eye and a merry voice. He had strong limbs, as he showed by the way he pushed and crowded when the boys hurried in from the playground and gathered around the stove.

"Get out of the way, Art," he snarled under his breath. "I want this corner my own self."

The trouble with Tony was that he thought entirely too much of that self of his and often put it to a very poor use.

"Miss Vale," said Tony, eagerly, as he caught up to her on the way home, "I did every one of those examples my own self to-day without a bit of showing." "I'm glad you did, Tony. It's a pretty good sort of a self that learns more and more to depend upon itself, to do things without calling for help, isn't it?"

"Yes, 'tis," said Tony. "I'm going to be that sort. I'm going to do things by my own self every day."

"And then," went on Miss Vale, who had a way of noticing her boys when they did not know it, "there are other things besides doing for our own selves. We can remember that there are plenty of other selves in the world."

Tony had not thought much of the other selves, so he had no answer ready.

"It would be a dreadful world if it were not so, wouldn't it?"

"If there wasn't anybody but just our own self in it, do you mean?" asked Tony in surprise.

"Yes, I mean that."

"Well, I should rather say it would!" exclaimed Tony. "No one to play with. No one to do things for you. No one to give you things. No one to help you. Yes, that would be a pretty mean sort of a world."

"No one to be kind to. No one to do anything for. No one to share good things with. No one to give help to," said Miss Vale.

This was more which Tony had not thought of, so he was again silent.

"Did you ever happen to wonder why God put so many of us together in this world, Tony?"

"No'm," said Tony.

"Don't you suppose it is to give us a chance to be kind to each other, to be helpful to each other?"

"Yes'm, I guess that's it. There's lots of people good to me, and I like it."

"But I wish you would try, my little boy, how much happiness there may be found in thinking more of other selves than of our own selves. Now, as you always find it, you say, very pleasant to have others do things for you—don't you think it would be equally pleasant for you to do for others?"

"Pleasant for them?" asked Tony.

"Yes, pleasant for them, but still more pleasant for you."

Tony looked doubtful.

"Don't you think, dear, that if we should all try with all our might to be kind, each one doing his best to make those about him happy, this would be a very happy world?"

"Well, I suppose so," said Tony. "But, Miss Vale, if everybody did the kind things for somebody else, instead of doing them for their own selves, it would just about even things up, would not it?"

"I suppose it would, Tony," said Miss Vale, with a smile.

"Well, then, some people won't do it, you see. Some of 'em'll keep right straight on looking out for their own selves. Then the folks that do the good things'll get the worst of it, don't you see?"

Tony looked as if he thought he had the best of it, but Miss Vale shook her head.

"Tony, who are the people who will be likely to forget themselves and look out for others?"

"Why, good folks, I guess. Christians."

"Yes, Christ's own people—those who, like him, strive to go about doing good, those who have a sweet smile, a loving word, a helpful hand for all who may come in their way. Now, do you think the Lord is going to let his own get the worst of it in any way? Don't you think he is going to see to it that they get their exceeding great reward?"

They had reached Miss Vale's gate, but before she went in she turned to Tony and took his round face between her two hands.

"This is about as nice a little self as I know," she said, looking into his eyes with a smile. "All that seems to be the matter with it is that it forgets to think enough of other selves. Try, my boy, in how many ways this own self of yours can be helpful to others before it goes to bed to-night."

If Tony was wise enough to try it I am sure he found that Miss Vale was right in declaring that the Lord our Saviour looks out for his people. I wish every boy and girl would try it this very day and taste how sweet is the reward with which he blesses those who seek not their own.—Sidney Dayre, in the Interior.

CONNIE'S DAY.

A New York mother, whose wealth, position and kind heart filled her life with social and charitable occupations, tells how a chance word opened her mind to the fact of pressing duties at home:

"One day, last March, my little daughter Constance came into my room as I was hurriedly dressing to drive to a directors' meeting of the charities in which I am interested. It was just after her birthday, and she had a game—one of her presents—in her hands.

"Oh, mamma!" she cried, full of eagerness, "this is the loveliest game; do try it with me!"

"Her request, in my haste and absorption, seemed trivial to me,

"Nonsense, Connie, you know I cannot," I replied rather sharply; "this is board day at the hospital, and I am shockingly late now."

"I was standing in front of the mirror, and saw in the glass how her face fell and the light died out of it at my words.

"I wish," she said wistfully, "you would sometimes have a day with me, mamma."

"The child's speech went through me like a knife. I had never received so stinging a rebuke. Was it possible that in the pursuit of other duties I was neglecting the one which should be chief? My drive to the hospital that morning was full of serious introspection.

"Connie has had her day ever since. Saturdays my daughter and I spend together; and now no other engagement can draw me away that day, for the child looks forward to it all the rest of the week."—Housekeepers' Weekly.

STORY OF A HANDKERCHIEF.

On the occasion of Mr. John B. Gough's funeral at Hillside, a little handkerchief was placed over the back of his chair, the latter being placed at the head of his coffin. The story of that handkerchief was told by Mr. Gough in an address on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the National Temperance Society, in May, 1870. We find it in the Gough Memorial Pamphlet just issued by the society. Mr. Gough said:

"I have in my house a small handkerchief not worth three cents to you, but you could not buy it from me. A woman brought it and said to my wife, 'I am very poor; I would give him a thousand pounds if I had them, but I brought this. I married with the fairest prospects before me; but my husband took to drinking, and everything went. The piano forte my mother gave me and everything was sold, until at last I found myself in a miserable room. My husband lay drunk in a corner; my child that was lying across my knee was restless; I sang "The Light of Other Days is Faded," and wet my handkerchief with tears. My husband,' said she, 'met yours. He spoke a few words and gave a grasp of the hand, and now for six years my husband has been to me all that a husband can be to a wife, and we are getting our household goods together again. I have brought your husband the very handkerchief I wet through that night with my tears, and I want him to remember when he is speaking that he has wiped away those tears from me, I trust in God, forever.' These are the trophies that make men glad."

IT PAYS.

It pays to wear a smiling face
And laugh our troubles down;
From all our little trials waft
Our laughter or our frown.

Beneath the magic of a smile
Our doubts will fade away,
As melts the frosts in early spring
Beneath the sunny ray

It pays to help a worthy cause
By making it our own;
To give the current of our lives
A true and noble tone.

It pays to comfort heavy hearts,
Oppressed with dull despair,
And leave in sorrow-darkened lives
One gleam of brightness there.

It pays to give a helping hand
To eager, earnest youth;
To note with all their waywardness,
Their courage and their truth;

To strive with sympathy and love,
Their confidence to win.

It pays to open wide the heart
And let the sunshine in.

TEMPERANCE.

REV. DR. BARROWS ON GROG-SHOPS.

Rev. John H. Barrows took for the subject of his sermon "A Citizen's View of Temperance." The pastor said that he spoke the mind of all those who have looked deepest into the problems which involve Christian society in this generation when he said that the question of rum was the greatest of all questions. Chicago had not begun to face this question. He believed that this condition was emphasized in Chicago. It was a city ruled by rum. It had over six thousand saloons—or one to every one hundred citizens. The former suburbs, which recently voted to make themselves a part of the municipality, were met at the outset by the domineering demands of the saloonist, who would place a dive in the precincts of every school-house and a gin-mill in the shadow of every church spire.

It is the duty of every honest American citizen to vote for the suppression of the saloon power, and the American citizen who did not vote should live in Turkey or Russia. There should be only two parties in this country, the saloon party and the anti-saloon party. The pastor was a firm believer in total abstinence, and taking for the truth the declaration of Charles Darwin and many other great scientists, that alcohol in any form is rank poison to the human mind and body, he favored the introduction of scientific lectures in all public schools against the use of liquor. Gladstone said not war, nor pestilence, nor famine was equal to the curse of intemperance. Gladstone was right.

The saloon was more than an individual question—it was an institution of society and politics, strongly fortified and corrupt, seeking to degrade and damn the people of America. One billion dollars was its capital, and its revenue was larger than the railroads. A man could not be a good citizen unless he hated a saloon. "In an imbecile moment," said the speaker, "I last week waded through the puddles of liquor in Ward McAllister's recently published book. Its only strength is the strength of wine, and if, as I believe, it is a fair picture of what is called good society in New York, I say God save us from its long duration. There is a great deal said about elevating the masses. In my opinion the way to elevate the masses is to destroy the saloon. Nothing appreciable can be done for them so long as the saloon remains."

THE POWER OF THE SALOON.

Yes, the saloon is a sorcerer whose power is prodigious, and whose hunger and thirst are insatiate. When will the sovereign people of this nation rise in their majesty and in their might, and in words of hot but righteous indignation address it as Paul addressed Elymas, and then, dragging it down from its bad eminence, gag it and chain it, and if possible, banish it from our land forever? Let it be well understood that if the saloon influence, either in the State or in the nation, is to be overthrown, it must be done by the people. It will never be controlled or defeated by unscrupulous politicians, for the very good reason that unscrupulous politicians are largely the fruit, and one might almost say, the property of the saloon.

Nor will the saloon ever be controlled or defeated by party men as such. By a "party man" we do not mean a partisan, because there is a partisanship that is quite consistent with both piety and patriotism. But by a "party man" we mean a man who puts party above principle and partisanship above patriotism. The man who is so wedded to his party that he will follow wherever it leads, or the party that is so wedded to its man that it will follow wherever he leads, is not worthy the name of a patriot. The saloon is quite safe in the hands of such men. It was said, long ago, that such a party man tries to cultivate two characters, one for private use, the other for public use; one personal, the other political. As a man, we are told, he means to be truthful, honest and moral; but as a politician, he is deceitful, cunning and unscrupulous, anything for party. As a man he abhors the slimy demagogue; as a politician he employs him as a scavenger. As a man he adores virtue; as a politician he rewards vice. As a man he hates the saloon and will not cross its threshold; as a politician he courts the favor of the saloon and cheerfully pays his money for its influence. As a citizen he is an apostle of temperance; as a politician he puts his shoulder under the men who deluge their track with whisky, marching a crew of brawling patriots, pugnaciously drunk, to exercise the freeman's noblest franchise—the vote. This is a true picture of the "party man," upon whose support the saloon can always count, and it is a thousand pities that such party men are far too numerous. From such party men, and from all such politicians, it is the duty of all Christians, and of all good citizens, to pray God to deliver us, and then it is their bounden duty to vote as they pray. The saloon has become such a power in politics that it behooves all good citizens, irrespective of their party affiliations, to band themselves against it. But to pray that the power of the saloon may be checked, and then vote for those who are sure to give it a free rein, is a species of hypocrisy and of Phariseism which has been far too common, and which has been by no means confined to one of the great political parties.—New York Observer.

DRINK AND HEREDITY.

From a recent address of G. C. Smith, A. M., M. D., President of the Indiana State Medical Society, we clip the following quotations:

"That the abuse of alcohol has grown to be one of the most gigantic evils of the age no longer can be denied. The damaging influence on future generations is more far-reaching and deleterious than we have heretofore been willing to concede. To arrest this evil, or to reduce it to a minimum, even, will require a most heroic effort—the combined labor, in fact, of all good people.

"We cannot escape individual responsibility when the public health, the general welfare, and the future happiness of our race are at stake. We cannot fold our own clean hands about us and say that as for me and mine we have no responsibility. The individual who can do this and shirk the responsibilities of life, who is not willing to lend a helping hand to sinking humanity, and labor for it so that the world may be better for his having lived in it, is a misanthrope and had better never been born. But there is probably no man so far debased that he does not love his own flesh and blood, if he have no interest in humanity in general, his single aim in life being to provide for his own descendants and make them happy. But he cannot accomplish this with certainty, for his neighbor may be an inebriate whose descendants may marry his children, and his grandchildren may be epileptic or insane, his great-grandchildren criminals or paupers and die upon the scaffold, be inmates of the penitentiary or almshouse, and finally be buried in the potter's field. Truly, he that does not provide for his own household is worse than an infidel.

"The time has come when this question must meet its solution. With the knowledge which the medical profession possesses upon the subject under discussion, we cannot occupy a neutral position. We cannot do so and discharge our duty to ourselves, our immediate descendants or humanity in general. Our voices must be heard in the land, giving forth no uncertain sound. We know that the improper use or abuse of alcohol is a frequent and fruitful source of insanity. We know that inebriety, epilepsy, crime and pauperism, and a host of other diseases too numerous to mention individually, can be traced directly or indirectly to its door. We know that all these conditions when once acquired are transmitted by heredity to future generations. We know that when a man is simply drunk he is temporarily insane, and that it may be dangerous to the community for him to be at large. We know that when the State furnishes the means which makes this individual crazy, or, what is practically the same thing, makes it legally practicable for him to obtain it, she makes herself particeps criminis, and is an accessory before the fact in any crime which may be committed, and when she punishes the criminal, she is punishing a part of herself for her own crime, and is occupying a position so absurd that it cannot be explained by any process of logic known to the present generation."

WHAT ARE WE TO DO WITH IT?

Let us detach, if possible, the idea of the drinking custom, the "inherent right" question, and be Pauline in our liberality toward men's stomachs and their "often infirmities;" let us reserve the drug store for the sick and invalid, and the hotel for the delegates who may attend political conventions and become so exhausted in their arduous labors to protect tin-plate, woolen fabric and twine, that they shall need stimulus. And "chemical purposes," and alcohol "for the preservation of medicines" and the keeping of cancers, amputated limbs, and snakes, reptiles, lizards, and the tariff question in statu quo, as it were, let us omit all this.

The saloon, the saloon, the crime-producing, poverty-breeding, desolate, dark, screened, blood-stained saloon, an inferno, a pest camp, lazar house, a slime pit of assignation, prostitution, theft, political knavery and hell-born alliance, the saloon is left.—Rev. H. O. Delano, in the Pacific Ensign.

The annual report of Mr. J. N. Stearns, corresponding secretary of the National Temperance Society, shows progress in every department of the work. Eighty-three new publications have been issued the last twelve months, making 2,016 now on the catalogue; 30,005,069 pages of temperance literature have been printed, making a total of 856,171,978 pages since the organization of the society.

Dr. Charles S. Allen states that the very first symptoms of poison by snake-bite is heart failure, and the last symptom failure of the respiratory functions. Hence the popular delusion of whisky as an antidote. Its sole value as a toxicological remedy is as a stimulant to prevent heart failure; excessive amounts of whisky will cause death; no one can drink a quart of it with impunity. Dr. Allen has made an exhaustive experimentation in this line, and says the treatment should be hypodermic applications to neutralize the poison, to check its advance through the circulation, and the use of internal remedies.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Daniel cast to the lions.—vs. 16, 17. We have here a striking instance of the inferiority of the Medo-Persian empire in the greatly circumscribed power of the king. While Nebuchadnezzar was a supreme autocrat, who killed and made alive at his own pleasure, Darius was a mere puppet in the hands of his nobles. He was a weak and sensual monarch, easily flattered with the phantom of power, and content to let others possess the substance, as can be seen by his signing such an extraordinary decree. It is no excuse to say that he did it unthinkingly, any more than for Herod when he made his rash oath; or for those at the present day who become members of a secret order and swear to obey unknown requirements. To think is a responsibility laid upon every reasonable being. That his lords had some concealed motive under this strange request, to which their apparent desire to do him homage was a mere cloak, would, it seems, have occurred to his mind had he taken a moment for reflection. "Thy God... will deliver thee." The king seems to have spoken in the same spirit with which Pilate washed his hands of the blood of Jesus; that is, he wished to convey the idea that he was entirely irresponsible in the matter. But he must have miserably failed to satisfy even himself by thus flinging the responsibility of his cowardice on God. Yet is not the same spirit found among us to-day? Those who give but the merest pittance out of their abundance to convert the heathen and expect the Lord will do it all, are an illustration. So of those who trust to him to avenge the poor and oppressed, while they themselves are upholding some great wrong by their silence. The stone and the seal are a striking type of our Lord's burial. Like Jesus in the sepulchre, Daniel's prison was doubly guarded, first by being sealed with the king's own signet, and then with that of the lords, thus precluding any possibility of rescue. This only put the miracle, as with Christ's resurrection, beyond the reach of cavil.

2. Daniel delivered.—vs. 18-23. Darius could not sleep. In his royal palace, surrounded by every luxury, he was far from being as tranquil as the faithful servant whom he had delivered over to a cruel death. For all his sceptre and crown he had not a heart of kingly courage. He was afraid of his lords, afraid to break through the trammels of a foolish custom which forbade him to revoke any edict once issued, just as people now lack the bravery to ignore foolish fashions, and think for themselves in matters of right and wrong. It must have been a strange sight to see him hastening early in the morning to the lion's den, divided between hope and fear. "Is thy God able to deliver thee?" The world is always watching the Christian to see how he bears trial, and asking this same question that Darius asked Daniel. How blessed, when our lives as well as our lips bear witness to God's ability to save, even to the utmost. Daniel, in his reply, shows his loyalty both to his heavenly and earthly sovereign. While the governments of the earth are quaking with fear of the anarchist and his dreadful weapons of bombs and dynamite, it would be well for them to consider that their best, their only, safeguard against destruction, lies in Christianizing the masses, and bringing Gospel principles to bear on the problems that are now perplexing our own and every other nation.

3. The king's decree.—vs. 24-28. A glimpse of fierce, retributive justice follows, in which we see the vast difference between the laws of heathenism and God's laws, even in Old Testament times. The Mosaic code expressly forbade the family of a criminal to be involved in his punishment unless proved accessories. Then follows the remarkable decree of Darius, in which he "commands all men to fear before the God of Daniel," whose "kingdom is that which shall not be destroyed," etc. This seems to be an echo from Daniel's interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream; but it is noticable that the king does not call him his God, nor the only God, so that his conversion was not probably more genuine than his predecessor's; still the royal decree was sufficient to protect Daniel and other faithful Jews from any more persecution. "So this Daniel prospered"—like Joseph at the court of Pharaoh, even when the weak, sensual, pleasure-loving Darius was succeeded by the warlike Cyrus. They who dare to be Daniels, even if they are never exalted to high positions in any earthly government, have the promise of being made kings and rulers in another world, and continuing to all eternity.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AFRICAN M. E. CHURCH.

—The General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion church, in session at Pittsburg, Pa., has elected two new bishops—Rev. Dr. J. Clinton, of Lancaster, S. C., and Rev. Dr. Albert Watters, of New York City. Rev. G. W. Clinton was elected to the editorship of the Star of Zion, the official organ of the church.

BAPTIST.

—It is stated that the recent great revival in the Baptist Mission at Ongole, in the Telugu field, India, at the close of which 1,671 persons were baptized, is one of the most remarkable in the annals of missions. The unprecedentedly short time in which the rite of baptism was administered to the multitude was one of the features which has excited most comment. In exactly three hours and five minutes two native preachers are said to have immersed 1,065 persons.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The State of Illinois now has three hundred Congregational churches; sixteen have been added to the number during the year.

—The sixty-sixth anniversary of the American Home Missionary Society was held in Washington May 24th, 25th and 26th.

—The Minnesota churches are endeavoring to raise $16,000 this year for home missions.

—The Chicago Association has elected the following persons as ministerial delegates to the National Congregational Council to be held in Minneapolis next October, viz: Dr. F. A. Noble, Prof. S. I. Curtiss, Rev. M. W. Montgomery and Rev. Q. L. Dowd.

—Twenty-five per cent of the Congregational churches of Massachusetts now have free pews; twenty-five churches in the State have recently changed from rented to free pews, and reported increased receipts.

—The annual commencement of the Oberlin Theological Seminary was held in the Second Congregational church, Oberlin, on Friday, May 13. The new catalogue just issued shows the names of twelve students in the senior class of the classical course and six in the English course. The total enrollment in all the classes is one hundred and eleven.

EVANGELICAL.

—Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, is now in Los Angeles, Cal., engaged in holding successful meetings. Mr. Mills held meetings before going to Los Angeles, at Tacoma, Wash., where it is said the interest was so great that the mayor of the city issued a proclamation recommending that the offices of the city government and places of business generally be closed on the day selected for religious services.

LUTHERAN.

—The German Bible revision, agitated in ecclesiastical conferences from the year 1857 on, and commenced in 1864, has been brought to a very satisfactory conclusion. The first issue was sent out just recently. It is printed by the Canstein Bible Society of Halle, and will be at once adopted by all the branches thereof. As it had the co-operation of the highest church authorities it will undoubtedly become the Bible of the German-speaking people all over the world. The translation is Dr. Martin Luther's, only the niceties of expression and language are modern. The work is cautiously and reverentially executed. Inaccuracies of translation are corrected so far as necessary to express the native sense.

—There are 1,284 Lutheran churches with 219,069 communicant members in Pennsylvania; 927 churches with 164,411 communicants in Wisconsin; 1,124 churches with 143,545 communicants in Minnesota; 568 churches with 115,836 communicants in Illinois; 575 churches with 86,970 communicants in Ohio; 311 churches with 84,187 communicants in New York; 562 churches with 62,885 communicants in Iowa; 375 churches with 62,159 communicants in Michigan; 269 churches with 40,940 communicants in Indiana; 386 churches with 27,257 communicants in Nebraska.

—The Milwaukee Hospital, Dr. Passavant, director, is the largest Lutheran hospital in the United States. It sheltered 560 patients in 1891. Of these, 357 were Protestant, 125 Roman Catholics, 34 Jews, and 44 without religious preference or confessions. The cost of maintenance was $18,460.18. The income from endowed charity beds was $1,175, and from patients paying in whole or in part, $13,780.55

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The vote of the laity as to the eligibility of women to seats in the General Conference was 235,668 for, and 163,844 against; but the majority was not sufficient to carry the question to a victory, since the vote of the laity was not authoritative. The question was decided by the vote of the ministers. Their vote stood 5,609 for the admission of the women, and 5,144 against, a majority in favor of the eligibility of women to the conference, but not a constitutional majority.

—The Methodists have decided to hold an international camp meeting of a month's duration at the time of the Exposition. It will be held half the time at Desplaines and the other half at Lake Bluff. Both places are a few miles out from Chicago.

—According to reports made to the Conference there were 442,000 additions to the church during the last four years. Deducting 150,000 deaths the net increase reported was 292,000, which is a remarkable showing.

NEW YORK MISSIONS.

—The Missionary Review says: "According to the last annual report of the New York State Board of Charities, the real estate held by all the charitable, correctional, and reformatory institutions of that single State has a value of $72,197,804, while the cost of maintaining these institutions for twelve months was $17,605,661, and the number of persons cared for was 74,773. Now, for the same period all Christendom contributed for the intellectual and spiritual well-being of all heathendom only about $12,000,000. Hence it rather looks as though the heathen at home, sad as is their case, were rather lavishly cared for by comparison with the heathen abroad."

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The report of the Committee on Home Missions to the General Assembly at Portland, Ore., last week, shows that the mission board began the year with a debt of nearly $100,000. One million dollars were asked for last year, and contributions reached within $70,000 of that amount, of which over $843,000 were available. The present debt is $67,000. The report gives an account of the work in various States conducted by 1,479 missionaries in churches with a membership of 93,500 and a school attendance of 141,000. During the year fifty-two churches became self-sustaining. The States having most home missionaries are: New York, 140; Kansas, 112; Iowa, 102; Minnesota, 84; California, 82; Illinois, 81; Nebraska, 80; Michigan, 74; the Dakotas, 112. The report made sixteen recommendations looking toward the extension of home missionary work.

—Rev. R. C. Wylie was elected, at Philadelphia, last week, first vice-president of the Presbyterian Historical Society. The occasion was the society's fortieth annual meeting.

—The Christian Endeavorers of a Presbyterian church in Pennsylvania "brought the plan of systematic benevolence so successfully before the church that tithe-giving became immensely popular, and pew-rents were done away with, resulting in an increase of $400 in the income. Systematic benevolence is the most spiritual plan of giving, and therefore is the most profitable plan every way."

—The Presbyterians in Philadelphia report 143 ministers; 73 churches; licentiates 10; students for the ministry 46; elders 378; deacons 176; added on examination 2,015; added on certificates 1,305; adult baptisms 304; infant baptisms 1,129; Sunday-school membership 35,416; number of communicants 30,086; contributions $662,349.

—The last report of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church is as follows: Total appropriations for the year, $1,015,845.48; amount received in eleven months (less $18,871.41 for debt received after May 1, 1891), $653,322.98; amount to be given in April to meet all obligations, $362,522.50; amount given in April, 1891, $290,807.62; increase needed to avoid debt, $71,714.88.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—The International Conference of Brethren in Christ, commonly known as "The River Brethren," was held last week in Stevensville, Ont. This denomination has 10,000 members, and is represented by 200 delegates in the conference. Plans for a new U. B. church in Chicago were submitted last week.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The present membership of the United Presbyterian church is 109,180, a gain of 2,633 during the past year. The total contributions of the church during the last year were $1,286,288, an increase of $152,000 over the previous year. The young people's societies of the denomination enroll about 24,000 members.

—Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, having resigned the charge of the First Reformed Presbyterian congregation of New York City, was received by certificate into the Presbytery of New York, May 16. This is regarded by all who know Mr. Milligan as an excellent accession to the ministerial force of the presbytery.

When the Pie was opened

The Birds began to sing
The praises of Bird's Custard Powder.

An English Table Luxury,
Providing Dainties in Endless Variety
The Choicest Dishes
and the Richest Custard
Entirely Without Eggs.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER is now introduced into America, and will very shortly be on sale at all the principal retail stores. Meanwhile every American lady is invited to send to ALFRED BIRD & SONS, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, for the Dollar Sample Box of Bird's exquisite English Home Specialties and to entertain her family and friends with a few choice English dishes by way of a change.

THE DOLLAR SAMPLE BOX contains four of the articles for which Bird's name has been a household word throughout Great Britain and her Colonies for more than half a century.

CONTENTS OF THE BOX. FIRST, a packet of BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER, sufficient to make four pints of the richest custard without eggs, which may be served either from a dish or in the ordinary custard glasses, and is delicious with all canned, bottled, or fresh fruits. Bird's Custard possesses the richness and nutriment of cream without risk to the most sensitive digestion.

A remittance of one dollar to Messrs. BIRD & SON'S New York Offices, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, will bring the sample box EXPRESSED Free of Charge. If any dissatisfaction, the money will be willingly refunded, providing the goods are sent back intact.

ASK! ASK! ASK! ASK! Of all Stores! Everywhere! Every Day!
For BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER.

SECOND, a packet of BIRD'S BLANC-MANGE POWDER, enough to make three large Blanc-manges a pint each. The Blanc-manges are most agreeably flavoured and are highly nutritious, and can be produced in a variety of tints, forming a charming dessert dish, and contributing to the decoration of the table.

THIRD, a tin of BIRD'S CONCENTRATED EGG POWDER, a complete substitute for eggs in puddings, cakes, buns, griddle cakes, and all similar kinds of English and American confectionery, to which it imparts the lightness, richness, appearance and flavour of new-laid eggs. This tin is equal to 30 new-laid eggs.

FOURTH, a canister of BIRD'S GIANT BAKING POWDER, claimed to be the strongest and best article of the kind in the whole world. It will go twice as far as ordinary baking powder, and is guaranteed free from alum, ammonia, or any impurity whatsoever, all the ingredients being of the highest quality. N.B.—Messrs. BIRD were the original inventors of Baking Powder in 1842, and the secret of their process has never yet been discovered.

For a fifth article the box contains a copy of "Sweet Dishes," a booklet full of practical hints and numerous original recipes of tasty dishes for the dinner and supper table. The recipes are all new to American cookery, and are suited to American measures, methods and cooking utensils.

The whole of the above are enclosed in a tastefully finished artistic Cartoon Box, an excellent specimen of English fancy box ware. When the samples are taken out, it will make a very pretty handkerchief, glove, or cotton box.

This Dollar Sample Box is intended solely to introduce Bird's English Specialties into American Homes, and cannot be purchased retail, and Messrs. BIRD will not be able to supply more than one sample box to each household. Remember the object in view is to distribute samples of the Special Domestic Luxuries for which Bird's name stands first and foremost as a guarantee for Purity and High Quality.

HOME AND HEALTH.

Wash oilcloth in borax water. Spirits of camphor will take white spots out of furniture. Turpentine will remove paint from floors or window-glass. Cold tea is the best wash to clean grained wood or natural woodwork. Rub lamp chimneys with salt before washing them; it will brighten them. Ox-gall, in lukewarm water, will clean dirty carpets and renew their freshness. To clean marble use a sponge or chamois skin, dampened in soft warm water, then rub dry. If gilt frames need cleaning, wash with rain water in which is stirred flowers of sulphur. The unpleasant smell of newly-painted apartments may be lessened by setting pails of fresh water around the floors.

The right way to put salt fish to soak is with the flesh side upward. In this way the salt settles at the bottom of the pan.

In putting new glass in windows, much difficulty is often found in removing old putty. Pass a red-hot iron slowly over it and it will come off readily.

Any one can add strength and weight to the body by rubbing well with olive oil after a warm bath. Oil baths are particularly beneficial to delicate children.

A sure cure for inflammatory rheumatism is made by taking one ounce of pulverized saltpetre and putting it into one pint of sweet oil. Bathe the parts affected.

No wonder there is a demand for home-made jellies, when commercial jellies are known to be made from gelatine and the cores and parings of evaporating factories.

Furniture needs cleaning as much as other wood, and may be washed with warm soapsuds quickly, a little spot at a time, and wipe with a dry cloth; then rub with a little oil.

It is said that a Paris laundryman has discarded all soaps, sodas and boiling powders; he merely uses plenty of water and boiled potatoes, and can cleanse, without employing any alkali, the worst soiled linens, cotton or woolen—The Chef.

Hot, sharp vinegar will remove mortar and paint from window glass. Glass is best cleaned with soft paper moistened in alcohol and water; or cold tea to which has been added a little powdered borax, or soda water. Rub the glass carefully up and down, and polish with dry paper.

For ordinary woodwork, rub the dirt off with whiting. Have a pail of warm water and a dish of whiting, moisten your flannel and dip it lightly in the whiting, rub the paint until the dirt disappears, then wash off with the warm water and wipe with a dry cloth. Skewers are very handy to use for corners and cleaning windows and woodwork.

The simplest method of cleaning willow furniture is to wash it with warm water and castile soap, wiping it very dry with a soft cloth, and then drying thoroughly in the sun, or near the fire. If one care to bleach it, have a packing box large enough to hold the willow articles. After washing, put in the box without drying; then into the bottom of the box put a small dish of burning sulphur. Cover the box, and at the end of half an hour, take out the article, which will be bleached. Willow and rattan furniture is now stained, giving variety and doing away with the necessity for cleaning.

A Valuable Cement.—Professor Alexander Winchell is credited with the invention of a cement that will stick to anything. Take two ounces of clear gum arabic, one and one half ounces of starch and one half ounce of white sugar. Pulverize the gum arabic, and dissolve it in as much water as the laundress would use for the quantity of starch indicated. Dissolve the starch and sugar in the gum solution. Then cook the mixture in a vessel suspended in boiling water until the starch becomes clear. The cement should be as thick as tar, and kept so. It can be kept from spoiling by dropping in a lump of gum camphor, or a little oil of cloves or sassafras.

HOW TO MAKE TOILET ARTICLES.

Cold cream contains one pound each of almond oil and rose water, one ounce each of white wax and spermaceti and one-half drachm of attar of roses. Boil the wax and spermaceti and oil in a double boiler of porcelain, and drop the rosewater in, stirring constantly. The lotion contains one gallon orange flower water, eight ounces glycerine and one ounce borax. A famous rouge, called "Bloom of Roses," is made with half an ounce strong liquid ammonia, quarter ounce purest carmine, one pint rose water and half an ounce triple spirit of rose. Pour the ammonia on the carmine and allow it to remain four days, stirring occasionally, then add the rose water and spirit, and after letting it stand for a week decant the bloom of roses.

It Is Not What We Say

But what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that makes it sell, and has given it such a firm and lasting hold upon the confidence of the people.

For a dinner pill and general family cathartic we confidently recommend Hood's Pills.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

That beautiful and pathetic little ballad was written by a man who himself was homeless, and a stranger in a strange land. John Howard Payne would have been forgotten long ago had it not been for these few simple verses, which have endeared themselves to the human heart by association and memory. "There is no place like home, be it ever so humble," and how doubly true this is if it possesses that virtue of cleanliness (so nearly allied to godliness) which renders the plainest abode attractive, and without which the palace loses its chief charm.

But to keep clean we must have soap, which reminds us that the most liberal offer we have ever seen is that of Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., which appeared in our paper last week. In fact, when the advertisement was sent to us we thought it too good to be true, so we sent for a Combination Box and are pleased to say we find the goods even better than advertised. The Chautauqua Desk is a most useful and beautiful ornament for parlor, library or guest chamber, and our readers who accept the offer will make no mistake.

An eruption, no matter how slight, warns you and every one who sees it that your blood isn't pure. If you're wise, you'll heed the warning. You'll look about for a remedy.

And this is what you'll find: plenty of medicines advertised to purify the blood, but just one that's guaranteed—and that is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It's a medicine that does what is promised for it—that's the reason. It rouses every organ into healthy action, purifies and enriches the blood, and through it cleanses and renews the entire system. All Blood, Skin and Scalp Diseases, from a common eruption to the worst Scrofula are cured by it. For Tetter, Salt-rheum, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Enlarged Glands, Tumors, and Swellings, it's an unequalled remedy.

If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back. You pay only for the good you get. Refuse substitutes, offered at less prices.

FARM NOTES.

In warming cream up to the churning temperature it should be well-stirred before it is tested with the thermometer, for cream conducts heat very slowly, and while one part of it might be just the right temperature the rest might be too cold.

The farmer who contrasts his business unfavorably with that of the shop-keeper in town, would do well to make a computation of the cost of all his country advantages and see what he would have to pay for the whole at market prices.—Country Gentleman.

As soon as the season permits, the earth may be removed around trees and a search made for insects, as they will be in an inactive condition. Before returning the earth, use plenty of lime and wood ashes, which serve to destroy many of the larvæ of certain insects. The peach trees may be looked over for any borers that were not removed in the fall.

It is an enigma to us, says Hoard's Dairyman, why so many dairy farmers, who seem to be really solicitous to improve their stock, put so much faith in mere heredity, and buy young bulls, even when they have a chance often to buy an aged one that has proved to be a good sire, and has a good progeny to show for the excellencies there are in him.

Clover hay, early cut and properly cured, contains eight per cent of albuminoids or flesh-forming elements, and good, bright straw from wheat, oats and barley contains 3 per cent, while good timothy hay contains about 5½ per cent. Therefore one ton of clover hay and one ton of good straw would have, when mixed, almost the exact feeding value of two tons of the best timothy hay.

Writing about the kinds of fruit trees, Mr. Josiah Hooper, an expert Pennsylvania pomologist, says that with due reference to the host of novelties in peaches, and the many excellent older varieties that may be omitted from a short list, the following may be depended upon for a crop in most localities where this fruit succeeds: For early, Alexander, Troth's Early Red, Mountain Rose, and possibly Downing, for its early season. For the medium, Coolidge's Favorite, Crawford's Early George the Fourth, Large Early York, Oldmixon Free and Stump the World. For late, Crawford's Late (nothing better), Hill's Chili, Smock's Free, Bilyen's Late October, and in some sections, Ward's Late.

SLIPS FOR THE FLORISTS.

Kenilworth ivy is useful as a basket plant as well as a climber for old walls.

The horticulturists of California favor the coyote as a defense against the hare and squirrel.

Mme. Ed. Pynaert is the name of a summer-flowering carnation of unusual size and attractiveness.

It is proposed to transplant a 100-year-old bearing orange tree from San Gabriel to the World's Fair grounds.

It is said that there are about 400 regular florists in New York, and that upwards of $2,500,000 is spent on flowers every year.

From eastern Asia comes a plant the flowers of which contain a quantity of juice that rapidly turns black or deep purple on exposure to air. It is used by Chinese ladies for dyeing their hair and eyebrows and in Japan for blacking shoes.

THINNING FRUIT.

A gardener asks for some rule in thinning fruit for the distance at which the fruit should be allowed to remain. In answer, the distances will vary with the size of varieties, and with the intended uses of the crops; but as a general or approximate rule, large peaches should be four or five inches apart on the bearing branches, and small or early ones three or four inches. Pears should be at quite as great distances, with more variation for differences in size; for while such diminutive pears as the Summer Doyenne need not be more than two or three inches apart, the Angouleme should be at least six inches. Plums may be rather less than peaches, but the necessity of thinning is even more urgent, to save from rotting.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors," which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. Any orchardist may have observed the improved quality, as well as size, in apples with a moderate crop, and should thin accordingly. It should not be forgotten or overlooked that fruit properly thinned is so much improved in quality, as well as size, that no loss in the magnitude of the crop occurs, and a positive gain in quality and price is secured by thinning.—Country Gentleman.

The Proper Way to Clean and Polish Silver.

Visitors to England are often struck with the dazzling whiteness and brilliant finish of the grand old dinner and banquet services, many of them centuries old, but in appearance equal to new silver. The English silversmiths have the advantage of a special preparation which has been popular with them for the past seven years. It is not altogether unknown in our country, and considering the beautiful silverware that now adorns most of the refined homes of America, an article that will not scratch the exquisite workmanship of valuable silver, and prevents tarnishing, should be as widely used as it is in the Old World. We refer to GONDARD'S PLATE POWDER, for which a depot has just been opened in New York. If you would preserve your silver ornaments and plate-ware, you should use it regularly. With reasonable care a 25-cent packet will last for many months. If not obtainable at your grocer's, it will be mailed free for 25 cents. Address, 2 Wooster Street, New York.

A letter from Bro. I. R. B. Arnold will appear next week.

In this issue of the Cynosure will be found an unsolicited but admirable tribute to ex-Pres. Blanchard, written by his old friend E. P. Chambers, of Galesburg, Ill., and first printed in the Republican-Register of that city. We also give place, to-day, to several communications from valued friends of the bereaved family, showing the estimation in which the venerable ex-President was held among those who best understood and appreciated his worth.

There is a remarkably fine specimen of forbearance in the conduct of the Chinese Government, through the influence of its representative at Washington, Mr. Yin, who recently received instructions from home to continue friendly relations with the United States, notwithstanding the extension of the Chinese exclusion law. Perhaps it is as well for our national peace that the Emperor—pagan though he be—refuses to return evil for evil. But it does not lessen the injustice of our act, to have the pagan displaying more of a Christian spirit than ourselves.

In a private letter from Phoenix, Arizona, of a recent date, Rev. J. K. Glassford writes: "We are having a grand victory here. Bro. Ebey and Bro. Abbott have been here, and some have forever renounced the 'Widow's Son,' and embraced the Saviour. The Free Methodists are building a church here, right where is Satan's seat, and the end is not yet; but we bless God for the outlook, and for what has already been done." It is this aggressive work, in any denomination whose skirts are clear from lodges, that makes telling inroads upon the enemy's works, and the blessing of God is sure to follow it.

Edgar William Nye, the American "humorist," in a burst of righteous sarcasm, recently gave vent to a shameful truth, as follows: "We should be glad and proud that we live in a land where one can have not one trial alone, but seven or eight, together with an arrest of judgment and executive clemency." And if one belongs to a powerful secret association, whatever his crime, he need not fear arrest, indictment, or conviction. If he is a high-degree Mason, he will never reach the stage of "arrest of judgment." We know a thirty-two degree criminal who has the freedom of Chicago and the Union notwithstanding his "offence is rank." Nobody would arrest him, with a hope of seeing him punished.

As we write, the eyes of the dominant party in national politics are turned to Minneapolis, Minn., awaiting the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency of the Union. The campaign year is always one of enthusiasm, anxiety and temptation—a time when souls are absorbed in worldliness, and sin abounds. The present one does not promise an exception to the general rule. Christian men are expected to keep their hearts warm with divine love, and their heads cool with temperance and self-denial at such times; but the trial of their faith is too frequently embittered with the prevalent partisan spirit. It requires much grace to keep men in the fear and admonition of the Lord during these months of turmoil.

The memorial forwarded to the recent Methodist General Quadrennial at Omaha, but which it referred to a committee without reading, was sent by the German Methodists of Chicago, and read as follows: "Whereas, the oaths of all who join oath-bound organizations are contrary to the commandment, 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.' Hereafter be it resolved, That a member of the Methodist church cannot belong to such organization without violating his faith." Why it was so curtly disposed of is explained in an article in another column—"A Bit of History." All anti-secrecy reformers will honor the German Methodists for thus placing themselves squarely on the record in opposition to secret societies and the evils they perpetuate.

The immorality of Europeans in India, and especially in the vicinity of Bombay, has aroused the Christian spirit of the Cynosure's good friend and correspondent, Rev. W. J. Gladwin, editor of the India Watchman, in connection with Rev. R. H. Madden, City Missionary of Bombay, to undertake its suppression by all possible means in their power. A brave and urgent circular, addressed to those who have influence with the Government, has been issued, setting forth in detail the open licentiousness that prevails in that region. So fearful are the abominations witnessed by these gentlemen that they cannot be given to the public. They are, briefly, nearly on a par with those that consigned Sodom to sulphurous flames. The work upon which these brethren have entered is a huge one, and will require a vigorous prosecution to make it effective. The prayers of all Christians for their success is one means of grace that will tend to greatly strengthen and encourage them.

Due reference to the recent floods throughout the West and Southwest, with the consequent destruction of life and property, was crowded out of last week's issue; but since then the more complete reports have fully confirmed the newspaper statements concerning the devastation caused by these terrible overflows. Statistics gathered from various boards of trade, exchanges, etc., and estimates received from reliable correspondents, show that the accumulated losses by the great floods reach the astounding total of $29,300,000 in six States, as follows: Missouri—Wheat and corn destroyed (500,000 acres), $10,000,000; homes ruined, $1,000,000; cattle drowned, $50,000; railroad property destroyed, $150,000. Total $11,000,000. Tennessee—Cotton loss, $600,000; wheat loss, $1,200,000; homes and cattle, $100,000. Total, $1,900,000. Arkansas—Farms inundated, 9,338; loss as follows: Corn, $2,500,000; cotton, $5,000,000; other products, $2,500,000. Total, $10,000,000. Mississippi's loss, $1,000,000. Louisiana's loss, $5,000,000. Kentucky's loss, $200,000. This estimate does not include stagnation in business among the merchants and transportation lines. A conservative estimate of the amount of damage caused by the loss from the high waters from Kansas City to New Orleans will reach the enormous figure of $50,000,000. The distress created by these disasters was very great, but was promptly ameliorated by Stateliberality and private benevolence.

HOW TO DEAL WITH THE LODGE IN THE CHURCH.

BY JOSEPH M'KEE.

Through your kindness I would like to say a word regarding the Rev. R. C. Wylie's attempt to answer my questions in your issue of April 21st.

To my question, "Would Christ deny church privileges to members of secret organizations—the means of grace to those for whom he gave his life?" he answers: "The means of grace are two-fold; first, those designed for conversion; second, those designed for strengthening and perfecting the converts."

The classification is as follows: "Reading and hearing the word, prayer," etc., for conversion; "religious profession, the Lord's Supper," etc., for perfecting and strengthening. Since the reverend gentleman limits "reading, hearing and praying," to the conversion of souls, which function, according to his own statement, is peculiar toward those who are without, a fact he says Jonathan Edwards settled long ago, what shall we make of the following "words?" "And he gave some apostles, and some prophets and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, till we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, and unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, and grow into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." "New-born babes desire the sincere milk of the word that they may grow." Babes are born in the house. "It shall be said of her that this man and that man was born in her." The "word" is the food of the house. "Grow in grace," etc., is Paul's injunction to church members, especially. Now, if a "religious profession, the Lord's Supper," etc., are only means of "building up" converts, and all who apply for admission into the church are supposed to be converted outside, why use, continually, "reading, hearing and prayer," which are only means of conversion?

Notwithstanding the gentleman's ingenious classification of the means of grace, I incline to think that all church ordinances are homogeneous as promoters of the new birth and growth in grace—or "building up"—and fine-spun distinctions are more the outgrowth of a subjective concept of comparative worthiness than the natural result of a careful study of God and his Word.

That Christ would have denied sealing ordinances to members of secret organizations, is proved by his own example when he declares: "I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing." My dear Bro. Wylie, your quotation is precept, not example, and utterly irrelevant to your interest—a gross misapplication of Scripture; but as it is a hackneyed phrase in Mr. Wylie's school, they are welcome to any logic it affords.

The gentleman instances the teaching of Paul: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them; for it is a shame to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Amen, I say. If the lodge is such a place as the apostle describes, we should, as church members, have no fellowship with its "works of darkness." But what of its members? I am not convinced that Paul here recommends church discipline, but rather that he warns Christians against participation in the evils of others. I do not gather from the above Scripture that good people (?) are to drive men out into the world, and then gather up their own immaculate skirts and stand at a distance that will defy contamination, reaching them the bread of life on the point of a pitchfork, or, perhaps, putting out of reach of saving ordinances altogether men who are only sinners. This same apostle found among the members of the Corinthian church a species of unnamable sin; and yet he did not drive the sinners out, but took means to save them in the church, by having them delivered over to Satan, that the flesh might be destroyed and the spirit saved. It is a very serious matter to either prevent or excommunicate church members.

It is useless for friend Wylie to write whole paragraphs descriptive of Masonic oaths and rites which render unworthy of church-fellowship those who perform them, until he can show us one worthy servant.

We think Mr. Wylie's ideal church members have all crossed the river; but by his standard the Reformed and United Presbyterian churches are full of them.

"Is the church a hospital or a heaven?" Mr. Wylie answers, "Neither;" but an "army designed to make war on Satan's kingdom." Admitted. But our Captain came to recruit not from the ranks of the converted, but from among the unconverted—not from the well, but from the sick.

But I am forgetting Mr. Wylie's doctrine, that all the necessary equipment, barring "profession" and "strengthening," by the orthodox observance of the "Lord's Supper" are to be had outside and are to be the shibboleth of church initiation. Mr. Wylie says there are "plenty of reasons why Jesus did not excommunicate Judas." If he can give any outside of the love and patient solicitude for the soul of that betrayer, I would like to hear a few. He says: "Our Lord never interfered with the courts of the church, but gave the discipline into the hands of men." Well, perhaps the gentleman is right, for it does not look a bit like Jesus to fence up the church against sinners.

If Jesus did not come to reform church government and discipline, which in the "hands of men" had become obnoxious to his great loving heart, he did not come to reform anything. I would not like to be disciplined by Mr. Wylie's session, interfered with by no divine dictum.

Perhaps the ecclesiastical burden of man-made churchism, up till the first century, was due to the want of divine interference.

The gentleman says: "If Judas had not left the church when he did, he would afterward have been excommunicated." My answer to this is, Assertions are cheap. If Mr. Wylie's ideal, ultraistic church is the one to which he ministers in Wilkesburgh, surely its sanctifying influences must soon tell mightily on the village; but before he hurls too many of those huge sectarian boulders into the motley world, he would do well to look inward and weed out all the glass heads, if there are any.

Mr. Wylie says: "Judas had the good sense to go and hang himself; but the lodge man of today will neither hang himself nor leave the church." I regret that such an expression should have escaped the lips of a minister of the Gospel; but, coarse as it is, we learn something from it—that perhaps the mistake of Peter's life was that he neither hanged himself nor left the church. If all church members—including Mr. Wylie's flock—who have denied and betrayed the Master would act on his suggestion, there would soon be no church organization.

Is not the right or wrong of secretism largely a matter of opinion? and should not its members be treated as ignorant, rather than willful, sinners? "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day." And both stand or fall to the Lord, not to the church. Then, "Why dost thou judge thy brother, or why dost thou set at naught thy brother?" You see, the difference of opinion does not destroy church fellowship, "for we," indiscriminately, inside and outside the church, whose opinions and practices do not square with the different theologies, "must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ and give account of themselves."

If men would think of the church as bounded only by the walls of the universe, located in the bosom of divine imminence, and not confined to 50x100 feet of denominational territory, their overweening preclusiveness would take on the law of love, which rules of discipline, or, indeed, law in any form, cannot govern; but in their narrow conceptions of the length and breadth, depth and height, of the unconditioned love of God, they erect judgment bars, formulate inflexible rules of discipline, and then press into the service "the infallible rule of faith and practice" for their justification; after which they are ready to hold court and pronounce sentences, many of which will be reversed at the great assize.

Allegheny, Pa.

REPLY BY REV. R. C. WYLIE.

But little space need be taken for a reply to Mr. McKee's criticisms.

First of all, the human family are divided into two classes, the converted and the unconverted. I never stated that the preaching of the Word was not for the benefit of both, but I did state, and here repeat, that the Lord's Supper is designed for true believers alone; and it may be added that it is only for them while living a regular godly life. "Eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved." "I have called you friends." "Let a man examine himself, and so let him eat." "Withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly." "If any man obey not our word by this epistle, note that man and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed." "Mark them which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned, and avoid them."

When Christ said: "I spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing," he certainly was pointing us to his course of life as an example. Friend McKee will need to look up the definition of the words "precept" and "example."

As to Paul's admonition to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," etc., we remark: (1) That he was referring to the secret mysteries of Gentile religions in his day. (2) That the admonition refers just as truly to secret societies now. (3) That Christians are warned not to belong to them. (4) That they must have no fellowship with them. (5) That to admit to church membership and to the Lord's table the members of these societies, is to have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. But we urge all such to attend church, hear the Gospel, and break off their sins by righteousness.

I am much obliged to Mr. McKee for his reference to the case of incest in the Corinthian church. The offender was delivered over to Satan; that is, he was put out of the church, until he should repent of his sin and reform his life. That is exactly what should be done with Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., now.

Mr. McKee admits my representation of the church as an army, and that it is not a hospital or a heaven; but he says the Captain came to recruit from the ranks of the unconverted. Yes, but they must be converted before their names are added to the list of his followers. They must separate from the world. They will be of little service in fighting the battle for the truth so long as they are wedded to such worldly institutions as secret societies. Mr. McKee works himself into a fine frenzy over the matter of discipline, Judas Iscariot, etc. His theory would abolish all church discipline. He says, about as plainly as words can express it, that there should be no discipline in the church; that it is contrary to the loving heart of Jesus, etc. To all this we have to say that Jesus Christ himself is the author of church discipline. With a scourge he cleaned out the temple, driving the sinners before him. He commandeth us to tell our brethren their faults; first alone, then before one or two witnesses, then to the church; and if all this does not bring them to repentance, let them be put out of the church.

Paul reproved the Corinthian church because they did not discipline the incestuous members. Christ, through John, reproved the Church of Pergamos, because some of the members who held the doctrines of Balaam and of the Nicolaitans, were not disciplined. And he says, "Repent, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth." This mawkish sentimentalism that wants you to love everybody so well as to take them, with all their filth, right into your bosom, is not the kind of love shown by Christ. It is written: "Be ye holy, for I am holy." His love is not inconsistent with discipline, but demands it. As to Peter, he did a better thing than to hang himself or leave the church. He repented. Christ's look of love melted him. We want all sinners to follow his example. That is what we urge secret society people to do. If all church members who have betrayed Christ would do as I think they should, instead of the church being disorganized there would be a day of fasting and repentance, followed by a reformation that would deal Masonry a stunning blow. The evil of secrecy is not a matter of opinion. It denies the one way of approach to God, viz., through Christ; it draws an artificial line through the human family; it is organized selfishness; it is anti-republican, and anti-Christian.

Wilkesburgh, Pa.

REMINISCENCES OF JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

Having been asked to write about some of my recollections of Mr. Blanchard while a citizen of this place, my thoughts instantly reverted to his first appearance here, and to some of the circumstances attending it. Some time in 1845 Mr. Blanchard had been invited by the officers of Mission Institute at Quincy to visit their institution with reference to accepting a call to its presidency. Its late president, Rev. David Nelson, author of the famous popular work, "The Cause and Cure of Infidelity," had a few months before died. Mr. Blanchard was at that time pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian church of Cincinnati, a large and rapidly growing organization. He, however, accepted the invitation, and in May or June, I think, came to Quincy to look over the ground. The outlook not proving satisfactory he declined the proffered presidency.

In the meantime, or even earlier, it seems, Rev. Hiram H. Kellogg had been thinking of Mr. Blanchard as his successor, and had broached his views to some of the trustees of Knox College. Mr. Kellogg was the first president of Knox, and had formed an intimate acquaintance with Mr. Blanchard as a traveling companion to the World's Anti-slavery Convention in London, and as a co-worker and aid to an extent in his efforts for Knox College in Great Britain. When it became known that Mr. Blanchard was coming to Quincy, and Mission Institute seemed to be stealing a march upon Knox, the officers of the latter college extended an invitation, requesting him to visit them also, having in view his succeeding ex-President Kellogg, who had a few months previously resigned. The invitation to visit was accepted. All Galesburg—which, considering the character of its inhabitants, was even then considerable of a town, and a felt power in our commonwealth—was agog when we learned that Jonathan Blanchard was about to visit us. Although but little over thirty years of age, he already had more than a national reputation as a preacher and a reformer.

I think I shall never forget the first Sunday he was here. It was also the first time he appeared to the Galesburg public, for if I mistake not, he arrived here from Quincy only the night before. It was understood that he was to preach for us on that day. We at that time worshiped in the old Academy building, which then stood where the First National Bank is now located, and was the only place of public worship in town. We usually had three sermons each Sabbath: one in the forenoon, one in the afternoon and one at night. Galesburg was then four days from Chicago, and one day from any river town, or two days when we had such weather as we are now experiencing, unless we accepted that term for ourselves. Most of our citizens had never or seldom seen salt water; and while our habiliments were not strictly homespun, they were largely home-made and not quite up to the latest style, and usually intended to last two or three years. Many of the then children and youths had often heard our parents speak in almost rapturous terms of the preaching of Lyman Beecher, and Beman, and Finney, but most, if not all of us, had never heard one of even Mr. Blanchard's reputation. It was therefore to us younger ones a day of great expectations; and yet not to us only, but to Galesburg generally, and especially to the students, and furthermore we were not disappointed.

The day was a perfect one; our people had assembled; the thoughtful audience was waiting and expectant; a quietness pervaded all within and without that was itself a benediction and restful. The day was sufficiently warm to permit of the opening of all the windows and the old academy was thoroughly but pleasantly ventilated. Everything seemed ready for the services to commence, but strange to say, the minister was late. Presently a stranger entered; tall, with a lofty but slightly receding brow; evidently a clergyman, and as evidently in poor health; and took a seat near the door at which he entered. Immediately all eyes were fixed upon him; silent judgment was rapidly being passed, and many undoubtedly were consoling themselves with the adage: "You cannot tell from its looks how far a toad will jump." While this was going on, conversation from without was heard as of people approaching. As I sat at the window nearest the direction whence the conversation proceeded, my attention was attracted thitherward, and instantly a sight greeted my eyes that is as vivid at this writing as when first pictured upon my retina. Rev. Dr. G. W. Gale and his wife, accompanied by a stranger, a man of striking appearance and genteel garb, were engrossed in conversation while rapidly walking to church. I was not long in assuring myself who the stranger was, and knew the audience was about to have an agreeable surprise. At the same time I was conscious of an inward satisfaction, arising, no doubt, in having an ideal realized, for the man looked much as in my youthful imagination I thought the Boanerges ought to look. Upon entering, an unexpected pleasure with a dash of wonder lighted up the countenances of the congregation; then removing his hat, and proceeding to the preacher's desk, there stood before the admiring throng the young man, Jonathan Blanchard. In person he was of more than medium height, erect, with but little of the student's stoop of the shoulders, with a large head just beginning to be bald, a forehead high and full, beetling over dark, flashing eyes, and with hair "black as a raven's wing," the most marked and "lion-like looking man" I ever saw; looking so marked and distinguished that as the Hon. Rufus W. Miles said, "It is not necessary for him to dress in his silk robe and shining silk tile" (in which he appeared at our first commencement) "to indicate which is the president."

The text of one of the sermons, I am not sure it was the first one, was: "A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench," and the discourse was a beautiful portrayal of God's longsuffering and mercy. Both discourses (I think we had only two sermons that day) were gems, and contained but slight, if any, allusion to the reform of the day, that of anti-slavery; yet they gave, I think, universal satisfaction to our abolition community. In his prayers, however, this reform was fervently prayed for, and contained touching, beautiful and even poetic allusions. It was a frequent remark of the older graduates of Knox, after they went forth from us, that they never heard such prayers as those offered by President Blanchard. One enthusiastic theologian asserted he would walk five miles to hear one again.

The result of his visit here was his election to the presidency of Knox College, and his acceptance of the position. Yet before his removal here, but after his visit, he was put forward by the late Chief Justice Salmon P. Chase, Dr. Gamaliel Bailey (at a later day editor of the National Era, a newspaper made illustrious not only by the joint editorship of Dr. Bailey and John G. Whittier, but by first giving to the world Mrs. Stowe's immortal story, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and the earlier verses of Alice and Phoebe Cary), William Birney and other prominent Abolitionists of Cincinnati, as their champion to discuss with that experienced and skillful debater, the late Rev. N. L. Rice, D.D., the question: "Is slaveholding in itself sinful, and the relation between master and slave a sinful relation?" This debate occurred in the fore part of October, 1845, and just before President Blanchard came here to reside. Of course the affirmative of this debate was taken by our president, and maintained to the satisfaction of the Abolitionists, who felt that he had thereby added eclat to his reputation as an anti-slavery reformer. I remember also hearing occasionally the opinion of some who were by no means pronounced Abolitionists, that Dr. Rice was more artful than honest and convincing in his arguments. A comparison of the opponents made by the Hon. H. R. Sanderson, in our youthful days, I yet recollect, and as I recall the discussion the comparison does not seem very, if at all, unjust. "Blanchard," he said, "was like a mastiff going along undisturbed about his master's service, while Rice reminded him of a fist" (small dog, the i long) "snapping and snarling at him."

As an illustration of President Blanchard's style of argument in this debate, I will give an excerpt, not of any painstaking selection, but almost taken at random:

"But I prove directly that slaveholding is sin, because it annihilates marriage. Eminent jurists have decided this fact. Observation has decided it. We know it. 'Slaves,' says Dunlany, 'are incapable of marriage, because incapable of the civil considerations annexed to it.' And because slaveholding prevents unions which God hath permitted; or (if they were married before they were enslaved) 'puts asunder those whom God hath joined together,' it is sin.

"Several instances have occurred in the history of American slavery, illustrating the practical operation of the property principle upon the marriage tie. Instances where a young girl has been tenderly reared to womanhood, educated, and knew not that she was a slave until after her marriage, when the heirs of the deceased master, who was also her father, came and claimed her as their property. And such instances are constantly liable to occur wherever there are fathers of slave children who will not send to the Negro quarter and sell their own offspring.

"Now, bring the case home. Suppose one of the elders of my brother's church, spending the evening in the bosom of his family, has just opened the Bible and commenced the sweet solemnities of the hour of worship, when a rap calls him to the door and a stranger takes him outside and tells him that himself and wife are descended from persons held as slaves, and that they are property—the property, if you please, of the most amiable and pious man the Southern States ever held. Nothing has touched this family yet but simple slavery—the property-holding power. The husband returns to worship, but his lips refuse their office. He retires to his pillow, but sleep has fled from it. He groans inwardly as he turns upon his bed: 'Oh, God, I have no wife! My wife is the property of another man! My children all the property of another!' This is precisely the truth respecting, not some few slaves, but of every slave family on earth. 'Husband, my dear!' at last sobs the wife, 'what on earth did the man want? Do tell me what has happened?' 'Oh, nothing, only we are all slaves!' 'Slaves!' cries his companion, 'then may God regard us in mercy! But who owns us?' 'Oh, an excellent man, the Rev. Dr. —; but if he dies to-night, we know not who will own us to-morrow! And what is worse still, our continuance together does not depend on our own sacred rights, but upon his permission; and that permission again depends not only upon his disposition, but his debts. He may be compelled to sell us, or his creditors may take us. What we shall do I know not. We are hopelessly undone.'

"This is the natural, necessary and invariable operation of the pure slavery relation upon the family ties, when stripped of every law and circumstance of cruelty. And now will my friend, and he a minister of Jesus Christ, stand up before this audience and tell you that slavery does not separate husband and wife; that this separation is no part of slavery; when he knows that the property-tenure always prevails over the marriage tie; that creditors' rights are saved without asking or caring about such a relation; that the slave who should plead it would only be an object of derision; when, in short, he knows there is none, and can be no marriage between slaves? The marriage relation, that invisible tie of nature and of God, has given place to another invisible relation, armed with power—the property relation. If, therefore, contravening, resisting, transgressing the law of God is sin, then slaveholding is sin. If my brother does, in the face of all this, still assert that the separation of families is not justly chargeable upon slavery, but upon the chance cruelty of the master, all we can do farther, is to pray for him to Almighty God."

Perhaps the most distinguished part Pres. Blanchard took in the anti-slavery reform while residing here, was his speech before the American Board in support of a resolution which he presented, conveying the identical doctrine he affirmed in the debate with Dr. Rice. This was some years after the combat in argument. However, before that, the board had been repeatedly petitioned to declare in favor of the tenet that slavery is a sin per se; and Dr. Rice taunted his opponent, because at last it had declared against it. Under the leadership of Dr. Leonard Woods a report upon the subject of the petitions was adopted, which, while it expressed great abhorrence for the sin of slavery, nevertheless denied the request of the petitioners. They knew that to have granted the request would have next led to the disciplining of their Indian converts who were church members and were owning slaves.

This attitude of the American Board, whose claims Pres. Blanchard advocated, was of course very distasteful to him, and he therefore at one of its annual meetings presented his resolution and supported it with a lengthy, able and elaborate speech. His appearance at the time before this august body has been represented as one of the finest recent exhibitions of the moral sublime, and suggested to many Luther before the Diet of Worms. His resolution utterly failed of adoption and a motion prevailed that it should not appear in the records of the meeting. The last action aroused Dr. Lyman Beecher and brought him and his son Dr. Edward Beecher to the aid of Pres. Blanchard. Dr. Lyman Beecher, in one of his impassioned, telling utterances (it was one of his last) said that unless they reconsidered their last action and permitted the resolution to appear with the other proceedings, the Western churches would wheel away from them in companies and platoons. The action was reconsidered and reversed.

While yet the president of our college, Mr. Blanchard began to give expression to his views on the question of reform which in these last years has so engrossed his thoughts and efforts, viz.: that of opposition to secret societies. In June, 1850, he preached two sermons in the First church in behalf of this reform, which were not regarded with indifference by either the friends or foes of secret societies. A short time previously he had delivered these discourses before the State Congregational Association at Rockford; and it is interesting to note that the last article from his pen is an appeal on the same subject to the same body now convened at the same place.

Of his self-denying, indefatigable efforts for the college all are made familiar by recent statements; but all may not be aware how large the attendance was during his administration. Some of us have been quietly amused at the boasts of younger students about the largest attendance Knox has ever known when it did quite come up to 455, which we are not sure was the largest number of any year during Pres. Blanchard's incumbency. But there was a sound of ardor and hopefulness in those boasts which would not brook correcting, and possibly may have helped to accomplish the grand results of to-day. Yet it should be remembered that at the earlier period Knox College had fewer departments than it now has, and Galesburg was then one of the storm centers, while the separation of Presbyterians and Congregationalists in mission boards and public institutions was going on; and each was scrupulously careful that the other should not take away anything which did not belong to them.

That Jonathan Blanchard was courageous, and where principle was involved, uncompromising, goes without saying. When the late editor of the New York Witness first met him he greeted him: "The bravest of the brave." No other man we know came up so nearly to the Pauline rule of not conferring with flesh and blood when duty demanded the declaration of an unpopular sentiment. At the time when some of his ecclesiastical foes had turned to be his political friends and were urging him to let his name go before the convention for nomination as candidate for Congress. I remember the writer called upon him at the request of citizens of Avon to urge his permission to the same use of his name. It happened that some had heard of his opposition to secret societies and evidently were hesitating to endorse the request of their partisans. I mentioned this fact, and asked him if he had not better keep his views in abeyance. He asked: "Are they Christians?" It happened that the most hesitant one was a Methodist and I so informed him. Immediately he handed me a copy of his sermon, and said: "Here is my pamphlet on that subject. Give it to him." Mr. Blanchard was not a politician.

It would be interesting to recall and detail many of his acts and remarks as a citizen and a neighbor, but this article is already much too long, and we must refrain. One incident we have recently heard from a merchant of our city which is so characteristic of his thoughtful helpfulness, and leaves such a picture of the man as many another in some way helped and encouraged by him will gladly cherish, that we will venture to relate it. When our merchant was a little child his father was called to the East on an important matter relating to the future welfare of his family. The family was in only moderate circumstances, and consisted in the parents and quite a number of young children, of whom our merchant was the older son. Vexatious hindrances in his business held the father long beyond his intended absence. It was during the situation thus sketched, that Mr. Blanchard observed that they were nearly out of stove wood; and soon the busy executive officer, the faithful professor, the active pastor, the man with all the obligations which these offices imply, came over with his saw and sawed up a week's supply of fuel for the family. "That," says our merchant, "was Pres. Blanchard."

Now that he has gone to his rest and reward, his closing utterances in the debate from which the above passage is taken has a new and thrilling meaning, both as to his accomplished work and rest, and to his long since fulfilled desire for the race whose cause he championed. He said, "For me, I know that when a few more days are come, a thousand miles shall stretch between your dwellings and mine—and when, hereafter, this toil-worn frame shall be sinking to its last earthly rest, it shall please my failing memory to remember that my last effort among you was in vindication of the oppressed. Happy, if, when my toils are over, I can raise my dying head, like Wolfe upon the Heights of Abraham, and hear the gathering shout of my countrymen, that the enemy of freedom and God's truth are routed, and the slave is free; and when my weary head shall at last lie low amid the wild flowers of yonder prairie, my future home, it shall content me well if they shed their dewy honors above the grave of one, who having humbly striven in all things to follow his Lord, like him, also, has been faithful to his poor."—E. P. Chambers, in the Galesburg (Ill.) Republican-Register.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Anarchism in Boston.—Governmental inspection of convents.—Other matters.—June in New England.—Where do all the caterpillars go to?

Unequal conditions of the atmosphere create cyclones and thunderbolts. It is just so in the social world. Boston, with her fifty millionaires, and her wretched dens crowded by the victims of the "sweat shop," is on the way to develop in time a similar state of affairs to that which is now paralyzing with fear the great European centres. The anniversary of the Commune in March brought out some fiery Anarchistic speeches in Paine Hall, and an audience of about 200—mostly foreigners, who cheered them to the echo—thus proving that there are enough in Boston who pay homage to the red flag to make mischief should occasion arise. The chairman, who was American by birth and lineage, and formerly a Unitarian minister, prophesied that "in the terrible revolution yet to come every enemy of the people will be swept away, although thousands of workmen will be sacrificed before the end will be consummated." These are the low mutterings of a storm that may seem to hang more menacingly over New York and Chicago, but which, when it bursts in its full fury—which calamity heaven avert!—will not spare the city of the Pilgrims.

Meanwhile the political economists, like Bellamy, propose to eliminate all sin and wretchedness from the world by making the state everything and the individual nothing; Dr. Rainsford, that "setter-forth of strange doctrines," suggests that the church go into the saloon business as the best way in which she can help social ills; and Moncure D. Conway, at the recent meeting of the Free Religious Association, at the Meonion, advised that churches be given up as an outgrown institution for which the advanced thought of the present day has no need, and their places supplied by clubs. There are a great many churches at the present time that are actually nothing else, but their success with the masses is not such as to make one hopeful of the experiment, if tried on a big scale. Verily, there are remedies enough proposed. Empirics start up on every hand, but like the sick woman of Scripture, poor humanity is nothing bettered but rather grows worse.

Mr. Conway, however, said some good things. He stigmatized, in scathing terms, "the miserable irresponsibility of our States. Miserable, cowardly wretches," he said, "can strip women naked and scourge them, and 400 or 500 people can go armed to murder eleven poor, undefended, acquitted Italians, while we pay $25,000 for the deed done in our backyard." The apathetic indifference of the North to Southern outrages makes her almost equally guilty before God, and she might well have joined with her colored citizens in yesterday's fast.

That the English House of Commons has already had two monster petitions presented to it asking that a Commission be appointed to inquire into the condition of convents and monasteries, is a suggestion to us on this side of the water. I was greatly struck, last summer, while enjoying a drive through one of our suburban towns, at the sight of an exceedingly high board fence—as high, in fact, as the walls of an ordinary dwelling—which I was told enclosed a recently built nunnery. We may well look with suspicion on institutions which take so much pains to shield themselves from the public eye; but committed to a do-nothing policy, we allow this thing to go on, and never think of asserting our self-evident right as a government to inspect them, and know what is going on inside;—particularly such places as the convents of the Perpetual Adoration, in whose gloomy cells, more bare of comforts than a condemned criminal's, foolish women are incarcerated for life, and who, however bitterly they may mourn their mistake, whatever miseries they endure, or the indignities to which they are subjected, are cut off from all communication with the outside world. Such governmental investigation, provided it was a reality and not a farce, would bring to light many a terrible wrong and cruelty, which now cries silently to God for vengeance. This is a step which the anti-Catholic party in the United States needs to take. Of course such a movement will meet with unbounded opposition from Rome and her political friends and allies, but this very fact is enough to demonstrate its necessity. As the Traveller well says: "If there are no evils and abuses to be investigated, the monasteries and convents should welcome investigation."

I count it one of the strangest things that in an age which considers itself emancipated from the shackles of religious superstitions, a man occupying so prominent a place in the literary world as George P. Lathrop, the son of a Puritan ancestry, should desert the faith of his fathers for a church whose devout adherents are now crowding—200,000 in three weeks—to worship a part of the wrist of St. Ann, or, as Father O'Connor believes it to be, the bone of a defunct chicken! Can all the pomp and splendor of the Romish ritual atone, even in the mind of Mr. Lathrop, for such a reverse side to the picture? If it does, the more's the pity. Mrs. Lathrop, who is a daughter of Hawthorne, unlike Dr. Spaulding's wife, meekly followed her husband in his change of belief. Mrs. Spaulding, it will be remembered, showed no inconsiderable backbone by printing a positive and decided denial to the rumor circulated that she had gone over to her husband's faith. Who knows how much her courageous stand may have had to do with his return to the Protestant fold?

It is said that the son of W. H. Vanderbilt was, at the time of his sudden decease, eagerly looking forward to the coveted honor of an admission into the "Skull and Bones" secret society of Yale. The very name of such a society should cause its prompt suppression by the faculty, who know, or ought to know, that the drinking and rowdyism which disgrace so many of our colleges, notably Yale and Harvard, have their origin and their stronghold in these secret dens. It is in a large degree their fault that the legitimate honors of class-day rank lower in the eyes of so many students than the very doubtful "honor" of being initiated into such societies, with their cut-throat names and low, debasing orgies.

This first day of June seems to have come as a foretaste of July's fiery heats. The indications are all for a hot summer; but did New England's hills and dales ever look more beautiful, in their fresh, tender green? One almost longs for a sixth sense to adequately take in the charm of this all too-quickly fleeting loveliness. Even the June roses will soon be gone, and so will—the June caterpillars,—the furry, creeping nuisances whose white tents make so many honest new England apple trees look as if blossoming all over with huge, white cotton bolls; which cover sidewalks and walls and fences with their wriggling bodies, and drop on your head or your bare arm without the smallest regard to your personal feelings, and which in their coming and going are alike a mystery. I have lost the happy faith of my childhood that every caterpillar will, if spared, turn into a butterfly. I no longer believe any such thing, but I should like to know what they do turn into. To me it is a question more fascinating and more inscrutable than even the old problem, "Where do all the pins go to?"

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1892.

Active preparations are being made for the second season of the Glen Echo Chautauqua, which, the management say, is to include some entirely new and original features. About 3,000 people visited the grounds on Memorial day, and listened to a delightful musical program and addresses by Secretary Jennings, of Chautauqua, Prof. Presbrey, Major J. W. Powell, director of the U. S. Geological Survey, and Mr. W. A. Crofut. They also had the pleasure of being introduced to the Indian pappoose whom Secretary Jennings referred to as the only native American in the audience, and who was taken from under her mother's dead body after the battle of Wounded Knee.

The interest in the alley-mission work is still on the increase, and much good is being done in carrying religion and temperance to many who could not be persuaded to attend a church or a temperance meeting held in the usual places. Last Sunday the W. C. T. U. organized a Sunday-school at the newly-opened mission-house in Willow Tree alley, a notorious locality, and ninety scholars enrolled themselves. The children were poorly dressed, many of them ragged and dirty, but they seemed by intuition to understand and appreciate the interest taken in them by the ladies who had volunteered to teach them.

Bishop Grant addressed the colored Y. M. C. A. on Sunday afternoon, congratulating the members upon the rapid progress they had made since organizing, and exhorting them to continue to strive for the elevation of themselves and their race. The association has made arrangements to conduct religious services in the jail, workhouse, hospitals and other places where good may be accomplished.

The anniversary exercises of the Howard University were more than usually interesting this year, by reason of some figures presented by Dr. Beard, showing the progress of the colored race, which, he said, now has 1,000 college-bred ministers, 154 newspapers, 2 magazines, 250 lawyers, 749 physicians, and 247 students in European universities studying and fitting themselves for professors, and learning what they shall best teach to elevate the mental, moral and social standards of their race. Senator Cullom delivered the annual address to the graduates of the law department.

Rev. Edward M. Mott lectured before the Y. M. C. A., last Sunday, on "Truth," considered from an etymological standpoint, as the first step toward ascertaining its real and full meaning in the Bible. He said: "There is no more beautiful word in our language, and none more powerful in religion. It is the essence of hope; love, faith and duty are all bound up in it. Its sentiment is embodied in pure white; yet as the spectrum teaches us that the ray of white light is composed of seven distinct colors, so truth embodies in itself all the moral beauties of the universe. The equivalent of our word truth, as it occurs in the old Hebrew, means 'steadfastness.' So Moses' conception of the Almighty as a 'God of Truth' pictures the unchangeable, the ever-abiding, the 'Rock of Ages.'"

Rev. Green Clay Smith, sometimes spoken of as the "soldier preacher," because of his having been at one time a general in the army, preached a special Memorial-day sermon to the veteran soldiers from the text "Righteousness exalteth a nation."

The result of the first attempt to secure Congressional legislation closing the World's Fair on Sunday, and prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds, which was made in the House of Representatives, was far from satisfactory. The best that the House would do towards closing on Sunday was to direct the closing of the Government exhibit on that day, and it voted down the proposition to prohibit the sale of liquors in any government building. It has been stated that the reason this proposition was voted down was that it was too broad, and would have resulted, had it become a law, in closing the two Congressional bar-rooms, known respectively as the Senate Restaurant and House Restaurant. Anything that would stop the sale of liquor, now openly carried on, in the Capitol building is certainly to be desired by all having the moral welfare of the nation's legislators at heart. At present the matter is solely in the hands of the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House. Every few years one or the other of these officials issues an order prohibiting the sale of liquor in the House or Senate restaurant, and for a while the order is partially obeyed; that is, the open sale to all comers is stopped; but it is always resumed again. Nothing short of a law will ever effectually stop it

NEW YORK LETTER.

Clergymen for bartenders! What do you think of it? The church of Christ establishing saloons for the sale of mildly intoxicating drinks to promote the cause of purity and temperance! In a letter I received from Dr. O. W. Holmes, nearly thirty years ago, an absurd statement was followed by the professor's assurance, "This is a goak." The suggestion of Dr. Rainsford ("clergymen for bartenders") might be considered such, were it not in harmony with his previous acts and statements. But it seems incredible that any sane person should recommend such a scheme. Nobody but rumsellers can be expected to approve it. They know how fast a moderate drinker comes to be an immoderate one; how short the step is from wine to whisky. One might as well advise respectable brothels to crowd aside disreputable ones. The Tribune says: "A multitude of good men will see this as only an immoral, vicious surrender to the powers of evil," and adds: "The saloon of to-day is one the greatest curses of our civilization."

There appeared in the grand parade of 67,000 Sunday-school children, last week, in Brooklyn, a beautiful spectacle, in a large, open Bible encircled with lilies and roses. One thinks of Peter's antithesis of withering grass and falling flower and "the Word of the Lord enduring forever." We see no open Bible carried in popish parades. Yet some unreasonable people have complained that the Brooklyn Sunday-school Union, a Protestant, evangelical body, did not invite Jews, Romanists and all other sects to join the yearly parade. There was one unlovely sight among these sweet little followers of the Prince of Peace—a company of lads with muskets and bristling bayonets, suggestive of brutal and bloody scenes of war. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, and the war spirit is not one which Sunday-schools need now to foster.

The Syrian Society is our newest organization, and brings to Syrians and other Arabic-speaking people not the Gospel in their own tongue, but helpfulness in gainful industries and in the preparation they need to become intelligent American citizens. Dr. Haddad, 95 Washington street, is secretary. A school has been opened in his medical office, but larger quarters will be sought as soon as funds are received. Dr. H. is a medical graduate of Beirut, and of New York University, as well, and will welcome donations from far and near.

June brings summer heat. With the mercury in the eighties one longs for the hillside or the sea. The Congregational pastors held their closing meeting for the season last Monday, and take a recess of four months and a half. Some pastors have already started for their European visit. Rev. Dr. Whiton sailed to-day, to meet engagements in London and Glasgow. Dr. Talmage leaves shortly to be absent in England and Scotland till September. The winter holidays and summer ones take out a large portion of the church year. Speaking to a wealthy man in May in reference to an urgent charity call, he said, "Nothing can be done till next October." Though the bulk of our church members are wage-workers and spend most of the hot season in the city, leaders in religious and charitable work are away, and nothing of aggressive work is thought of between May and October—in many societies, at least.

Dr. Clapp, the honored treasurer of the American Home Missionary Society, is still confined to the bed with an injured leg, but expects to be able to walk ere long. Dr. Taylor's people have given him a long vacation, but it is feared that even that will not restore again the integrity of his nervous system. Pastor Bourne, at Bedford Park, the oldest Congregational pastor in the pulpit in this city, is doing excellent service in a new and growing section of upper New York. A beautiful stone sanctuary is well filled and a united flock rally about him.

The Nestor of our hosts is Dr. Edward Beecher, who enters his ninetieth year in August. He is still seen on our streets, using two canes since the loss of his leg and is an attendant on the preaching of Dr. Meredith, of Brooklyn. Rev. Joseph H. Towne, D.D., his predecessor at Boston and my pastor at Salem Church, 1837, still lives at Andover in his 88th year. He too, still wields a vigorous pen though physical powers are waning.

LETTER FROM BOSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., May 26, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On Thursday evening, 19th inst., a mass meeting was held in Tremont Temple to protest against the anti-Chinese bill recently adopted by Congress and signed by President Harrison. That bill is a gross outrage on the rights of the Chinamen. We tried the experiment of trampling on the rights of the black man and the war of the rebellion was our retribution. Now we are trampling on the rights of the yellow man. The wheels of avenging justice will bring upon us the judgments due. Burke once said in the English Parliament, "Except you guard the rights of the humblest serf that walks your shores, you cannot preserve the rights of England's proudest peer"—a sentence that always thrills me when I think of it. The party that rushed that measure through with such unseemly haste, to make political capital in the coming Presidential campaign, should be consigned to "innocuous desuetude."

Last Monday night the anniversary of the Women's-rights Association was held in Tremont Temple. Lucy Stone presided. The leading address was made by Rev. D. Gregg, D.D., of Brooklyn, N. Y. He contended that the right to vote is a natural right, inherent in the personality of every human soul. Women who have reason, will and conscience should be allowed to vote on just the same terms as men. Women holding property are taxed, and where is the justice in taxing them without a representation? In the church women vote for officers and laws and creeds. They have every right enjoyed by the male members. Why should they not have the same rights in the State? What natural law and the church sustain, we expect to find in the Bible. And we are not disappointed. "In Christ Jesus there is neither Jew nor Gentile, male or female."

Miss Frances E. Willard has a very interesting article in the current number of the Arena, on "The Woman's Cause is Man's." She says: "In England there are 1,000,000 more women than men. In the United States 3,000,000 women earn their own living, and 4,500 occupations are open for them to earn a livelihood. In twenty-five years all fields of labor will be open to them, and character will be the only certificate required, and co-operation will forever abolish the wage-system. Last autumn, of the 1,600 candidates for scholarships in London University, chiefly lads, a Scotch lassie was found to head the list when the examination papers were made public. A lady took the prize in competitive examinations for Cook county, Ill., at the Evanston University. Co-education, equal wages for the same work, and political rights are soon to be realized by the Woman's-rights Association."

A Sabbath-school teacher in Boston received a handsome clock from his class of young ladies. In presenting it, these points of analogy were noted: The works of a clock are hidden, but we know they are there because the hands on the dial-plate move. The wheels of God's providence are hidden, but we know that an unseen hand guides them. History is not chaos, not chance, not blind fate, but the unfolding of the divine plan and every human life is included in the plan. A clock must be regulated by the sun, "for nothing goes right beneath the stars." Our souls must be regulated by the Sun of Righteousness. A pendulum, or balance wheel is necessary, and this must be regulated by the fixed standard. Our souls must be guided by conscience, and conscience must be regulated by the Word of God. An enlightened conscience is a necessity. No two clocks will run precisely alike. No two minds can think in perfect harmony. Substantial unity is in endless variety. A clock strikes the hours. If threescore and twelve years made up our life, there would be twelve periods of six years each. At six years the clock strikes I; at 12 it strikes II; at 48 it strikes VIII. At 72 it strikes XII, and life day is ended. When Christ died the clock of ages struck I. When paganism fell, in 323, it struck II. In the first Reformation it struck III. In the second Reformation, culminating in the revolution of 1688, it struck IV. In the Declaration of Independence it struck V. In the Emancipation Proclamation of 1863 it struck VI. In the fall of the secret empire, about 1900, it will strike XII, and that will be the seven-thousandth year, the world's Sabbath, the Millennium. When a clock gets wrong, it must be repaired from within. These souls of ours are wrong. They must be restored, not by outward reformation, but by inward renewal. A clock must be repaired by one who understands it. A clock in the tower of Strasburg Cathedral, of wonderful mechanism, called forth the praises of the people. The king was jealous, and ordered the arrest of the artisan. Before the sentence was executed he ascended the tower, touched a secret spring, and the work was ruined. No one could restore it. Only God can restore the ruined soul. A clock runs down and must be wound up. In God's time the soul departs and the clock ceases to beat time. The clock of Providence will soon run down. The heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll, the elements melt with fervent heat, and time shall be no longer.

J. M. FOSTER.

—Among visitors welcomed to the office of the Cynosure, within the past few days, were Rev. J. G. Princell, of Chicago, editor of the Norwegian periodical Liberty and Peace, evangelical; Rev. J. F. Hanson, of the Friends' church, Mount Vernon, South Dakota; and Rev. C. D. Trumbull, of the Presbyterian church, Morning Sun, Iowa. These gentlemen are all warm friends of the anti-secrecy cause and our co-workers in its behalf.

CORRESPONDENCE

IN MEMORIAM.

TRIBUTES TO THE LAMENTED JONATHAN BLANCHARD FROM SORROWING FRIENDS.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

STOCKBRIDGE, Vt., May 23, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I can hardly expect to find in your columns room for more than a brief tribute of respect for an old college friend and a brother in Christ whom I knew in 1830-32 . . . I knew him as a Christian, as a brilliant scholar, a poet, a ready debater, a wit, and a radical. Anti-masonry, about that time, was triumphant in Vermont, and he had contributed his share to its success. Anti-slavery was beginning to assume form, spirit and life, and he was ready to urge it forward . . . He was genial and kind-hearted; and we who were a little younger, and later in college, had great respect and much love for one whom we all believed to be entirely worthy. It is not too much to say that Middlebury still cherishes a high regard for his memory, for his integrity, for his constancy in the right, and his unswerving opposition to that which he regarded as wrong. He probably met with much opposition . . . So did Luther; so did Paul . . . and the same determination in them to overcome it was as conspicuous in him, and the world will certainly see, at some day, his plans of reform succeed. You speak of his entrance into rest, and the Psalmist bids us "mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

T. S. HUBBARD.

WHITEFORD, Mich., May 22, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We who have long been patrons of the Cynosure are made to feel that a capable and faithful standard-bearer has fallen; but shall we be discouraged? No! Let us, rather, thank God and take courage. In the language of the poet:

"I am glad that he has lived thus long,
And glad that he has gone to his reward."

MRS. C. M. CANDEE.

BIG SPRINGS, Kan.

DEAR CYNOSURE: . . . Truly a great man has fallen, not in the dark . . . but in the light—in a grand and noble cause. . . . While I feel like bowing in humble submission to Him who holdeth the universe in His hand, and doeth all things well, I will continue to pray that his mantle may fall on one who shall never be afraid to hoist the reform banner to the breeze. His very name should be a household treasure to all true reformers.
D. K. LAWRENCE.

PUYALLUP, Wash., May 26, 1892.

It is a pleasing thought, amidst our bereavements, that we can rejoice even though our friends fall. It is a grand thought that our brother's life was so devoted to the deliverance of mankind from the thralldom of secret societies. To him, indirectly, I owe my freedom from Masonry; for if the N. C. A. had never been established, I should, probably, have gone to my grave under the cloud which Masonry produces, through its mystic entrancement of the mind. O Jonathan, my brother, very pleasant hast thou been unto me! Thou art gone a little before us, but we shall follow on until we fall, we trust, with the harness on, having fought the good fight of faith, and finished our course. Yours in much love,
HENRY COGSWELL.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 26, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The death of Rev. J. Blanchard touches the heart of every true reformer. As I look back and remember his memorable address on the lodge at the Central church, in 1888, and my visit to his room, on St. Andrew street, and his kind and consoling advice to me; yea, and when I remember his charitable heart and his unanswerable arguments against the greatest enemy to our American institutions and the destroyer of church unity—the secret lodge—I can but say, truly a prince has fallen in Israel; but to the front and on deck, brother reformers! God has in store others, though younger and less experienced than Bro. Blanchard. Their hearts are in the work, and success will crown their labors bye-and-by. Yours, for the Master,
FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

ROGERS PARK, Ill.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In common with all your readers, I would express sincere sorrow (with sympathy for all concerned) for the loss sustained in the death of your great chieftain, that "grand old man," Jonathan Blanchard, whose memory will be honored, and whose life and labors have inspired so many, and are cherished in the blessings which they have secured for all. He was one of the stars which shine through the clouds of our times, and give faith and hope in the light that shall appear when the true principles of our Christianity are better understood, and when its foes—secret or open—shall hide themselves in their congenial darkness. His large-heartedness embraced the world of men and women, and had its special joys in all his loving labors for family, church and Christ. Those who knew him best loved him most; and it is our consolation that his departure was so peaceful and free from suffering. No one need doubt his welcome into the joy of his Lord, in the happy home above.
THOS. HODGE.

A REFORMER'S LAST MESSAGE.

[Elsewhere in this issue of the Cynosure will be found the obituary of Elder Benjamin Williams, who dictated to his daughter the following letter, which was finished on the day of his death.—EDITOR.]

WARREN, Ill., April 13, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We are taught that we need patience after we have done the will of God, that we may receive the promise. I am in my eighty-ninth year. In my youth I knew of no temperance societies, or abolition, or anti-secret movement, except what was taught in the Friends' church, in which I was raised. In Western New York, where I lived, whisky was used freely by nearly all classes of people. It was used at logging and husking bees, at quiltings, and sometimes at religious services.

I knew a deacon who got a gallon of whisky, to be used at a quarterly meeting. If a barn or any building was to be raised, whisky flowed freely.

I was the first man in Orleans county, New York, to propose raising a heavy frame for a barn without whisky. They hooted at me at first, but the barn went up just the same—thank God!—without whisky, to the surprise of many. As early as 1826, I gave my heart to God, and the love of Christ constrained me to fight against these evils.

Since that time I have worked on the frontier of all reforms. I have seen slavery wiped out with the best blood of the nation. I cast the first abolition vote in the town in which I lived, and was hissed at for doing so. I have seen secrecy exposed. I lived but a few miles from the scene of the Morgan murder at the time it was perpetrated. I have lived to see the day that intemperance is unpopular and un-Christian, and to see noble Christian reformers marching on to victory. We should not falter, but possess our souls in patience, for the promise is sure.

The Christian Cynosure comes to me, like a band of Christian workers met at prayer or class meetings, to tell experience and report work. It brings me strength and courage; and the noble men and women who work, write and pray for its extension and the spread of its anti-secret and reform principles, are children of light; like a city set on a hill, that cannot be hid, their good works so shine that they penetrate the hidden recesses of darkness.

Many Christian men who have been in darkness now speak out in favor of the separation of the church from all secret orders, as the Bible directs. It is said: "There are so many good men in the lodge, if it was so very bad they would leave it and expose the evil." The same might have been said of American slavery. Eminent Christians and eloquent divines pronounced it of divine origin, sanctioned by God. The Sanhedrim, supposed to be the best men among the Jews, conspired against Christ and caused his death. What for? Because he taught openly and not in secret conclaves, and warned the people against going into the wilderness and the secret chamber, where imposters and evil men congregate. If it was right then, it is right now. If those good men, in the lodge or out of it, who claim to be messengers of Christ, do not come out and teach openly of the coming kingdom of Christ, and warn men against the ungodly works of darkness, how much better are they than those who killed Christ?
B. WILLIAMS.

LITERATURE.

Lippincott's Monthly Magazine for June is "a Western number," most of its topics and many of its contributors having a Western character and local habitation. James Lane Allen furnishes the complete opening story of John Gray, a Kentucky Tale of the Olden Time. Portraits are given of Murat Halstead, James Whitcomb Riley, John James Ingalls, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, and Maurice Thompson; and the other contents of the magazine are as follows: Early Editorial Experiences—Journalist Series, by Murat Halstead; Being His Mother (poem), by James Whitcomb Riley; "Westward the Course of Empire Takes its Way," by John James Ingalls; At Dead of Night (poem), by Carrie Blake Morgan; Concentration (poem), by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; Smithers, illustrated, by Maurice Thompson; Frost (poem), by St. George Best; The Great American Desert, illustrated, by Wm. F. G. Shanks; A Study from Life (poem), by Susie M. Best; On the Idaho Trail, illustrated, by Wm. Y. Lovell; LaCrosse—Athletic Series, illustrated, by Frederick Weir; The Woman of the Plains, illustrated, by Patience Stapleton; The Struggle for the West, illustrated, by John B. McMaster; Before the Storm (poem), by Robert Loveman; Curious Mixtures (composite photographs); As it Seems; and With the Wits, illustrated, by leading artists. Published by J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia. $3 a year.

The Cottage Hearth, a household magazine for June, exhibits marked improvement in its new and artistic cover. The table of contents reveals the fact that internal changes have also been made. Mrs. Jane G. Austin, so well known for her entertaining stories of the early Puritan days, has contributed an exceptionally bright tale about one of the children of the Mayflower. Among the popular writers of magazine literature is Molly Elliot Seawell, whose story of The Neighbors will be read with interest. The breezy happenings at the Capital City are told by Kate Foote, in her Washington Letter. An appreciative sketch of Giotto's life as one of the Old Masters is given by Deristhe L. Hoyt. Those who are interested in travel will be entertained by the account a Bohemian gives of Tramping in the Midland. The ten regular departments of Music, The Sabbath, Home Dressmaking, Domestic Science—Cooking Receipts, Shut In, Boys and Their Doings, The Home Garden, Household Chats, and The Arm Chair, seem to be in close touch with the best things in the home life of an average American family. The magazine abounds in handsome illustrations by clever artists; and there is an evident desire on the part of the publishers to maintain a high order of literary and artistic merit. Boston: Published by W. A. Wilde & Co.; price, $1.50 a year.

The Cosmopolitan for June—contents and authors: Illustrated articles—In the St. Peter's Set, by Thos. A. Janvier; The Wayside Shrine, by Inigo Deane; For a Birthday (poem), by James Russell Lowell; Fashions and Counterfeits of Bric-a-Brac, by Sarah Cooper Hewitt; A Woodland Mood (poem), by Maurice Thompson; A Grand Ducal Family, by Eleanor Lewis; Our National Political Conventions, by Murat Halstead; New Zealand, by Edward Wakefield; General Sheridan's Personality, by Theo. R. Davis; To the Soil of the Earth, by Howard Pyle; "Maw," by Eunice Carew; Our Fur-Seal Rookeries, by Henry W. Elliott. Other articles—The Town Meeting, by Edward Everett Hale; Mystery (poem), by Amelie Rives; The Working of the Department of Labor (at Washington, D. C.), by Carroll D. Wright; Among the Mountains (poem), by William Waterfield; Reveille (poem), by John Hay; The Aeroplane, by Hiram S. Maxim; Recent British Fiction, by Brander Matthews; Marriage (poem), by Marrion Wilcox; Modern Life and the Artistic Sense, by Walter Crane; Evolution and Christianity (first paper), by St. George Mivart. The Frontispiece (a full page engraving) is "In the Garden," by Howard Pyle, illustrating his "To the Soil of the Earth." Published in New York City. $3 a year.

The Arena for June begins a new volume, with a full-page portrait of W. D. McCrackan, who contributes a paper on the Lake Dwellers of Switzerland. Other articles and contributors: The Ether and its Newly Discovered Properties, by Prof. A. E. Dolbear; The Rights of Children, by Rev. M. J. Savage; The Democracy of Darkness, by the editor, B. O. Flower; Three English Poets (a review of William Morris, Lord Lytton and Sir Edwin Arnold), by Louise Chandler Moulton; The Bed-Rock of True Democracy, by A. C. Houston; A Flaw in the Public School System, by Rabbi Solomon Schindler; Life Insurance: Its Rise and Marvelous Growth, by David N. Holway; "Automatic" Writing, by B. F. Underwood; The True Basis of Currency, by Miles M. Dawson; Confessions—I. The Physician (one of an "anonymous series" of papers); Why She Did It, by Frederick Taylor, F. R. G. S.; A Spoil of Office, concluded, by Hamlin Garland; Book Reviews, by the editor. Published in Boston. $5 a year.

St. Nicholas for June is quite up to its standard for excellence, and its readers, young and old, will find much of interest in the following articles: The Boy who Wouldn't be Stumped, by Bessie Chandler; The Lonely Lighthouse, by Wm. Abbott; A Story of Old Spain, by Tudor Jenks; A Visit from Helen Keller (the blind deaf-mute at Andover), by Adeline G. Perry; The First American Traveler in the Southwest, by Chas. F. Lummis; Dick's Dive, by Howard Bunch; That's the Way, by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; The Vireo's Nest, by Ernest Ingersoll, and others. The serials of Two Girls and a Boy, Tom Paulding, and When I was Your Age, are continued. The illustrations are numerous and expressive. New York: Published by the Century Company, 33 East Seventeenth street.

Knowledge and Choice Literature, an illustrated weekly paper published in very attractive form at the startlingly low price of 50 cents a year, furnishes a wonderful amount of valuable and interesting literature for the money. Recent issues give Longfellow's Evangeline, complete, finely illustrated, for 4 cents, Hawthorne's The Scarlet Letter, complete, for 8 cents, or both of them for 10 cents. The last issue starts a series of papers, edited by one of the ablest of American literary scientists, devoted to a "Popular Science Digest," which will doubtless be very interesting and very valuable to readers generally; fifteen of these papers will cost only 25 cents. A specimen issue may be had free. Address, John B. Alden, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

OBITUARY.

BENJAMIN WILLIAMS

was born May 7, 1804, in Saratoga county, New York. His parents were Quakers. His father, John Williams, was of Irish extraction, and was raised in the Catskill Mountains. His mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Whitehead, descended from Puritan stock, her ancestors having come over in the May Flower. He passed his boyhood working on a farm, on what was then the frontier. He had little chance for education, but he learned to read and write at the apology of a school that the country at that time afforded.

He became a Christian in 1826, and his heart was so full of the love of God that he went "forth into all the world to preach the Gospel." He became a thorough Bible student, and was ordained to the ministry by the Christian church. He lived on a farm, and preached when he could, for nearly twenty years.

He emigrated to Jo Daviess county, Ill., in 1845, and for years he was on the frontier again, preaching, baptizing, and organizing churches and Sabbath-schools. He made extended trips into Iowa and Wisconsin, preaching in log cabins, and often the roughest of miners from the lead mines were his audience. I remember an incident in one of those meetings: In the midst of his sermon a reckless frontiersman arose, trembling from head to foot, and with faltering voice he cried: "Pray for me, Uncle Ben;" and he did pray, and others prayed, and that reckless, thoughtless sinner was brought into the fold of Christ. He lived near his Saviour for forty-five years, and died with a blessed hope of immortality.

As old age came on and other ministers came to the field, Elder Williams turned his attention to reform work. He was one of the first in his neighborhood to agitate the abolition movement; he was an advocate of prohibition, and an ardent opposer of all secret organizations. He spent time and money freely to assist the anti-secret workers, and was never happier than when distributing anti-secret literature. He loved the Cynosure next to his Bible, and when his eyes were so dim with age that he could not read, his children or grandchildren would read it to him.

For more than forty-five years his home has been in Jo Daviess county, Ill. In 1852 he went to the West Indies, where he remained a year.

He was twice married; first, to Sophronia Church, in 1828. His wife lived one year. He was married the second time to Saloma Hall, in 1833. His aged wife and five children survive him, three having died in early childhood. Brothers Arnold, Brown, Stoddard, Hinman and others will remember having partaken of his hospitality at his home in Warren, Ill. For several years he has lived with his children.

He died April 13, of apoplexy, at the residence of his daughter, the writer of this article. His last days were full of peace. His faith was simple and child-like. He was sure of a home in the house of "many mansions." Many may question his methods, but none his sincerity. He has lain down his armor; his life work is done. He went to sleep at eventide, while sitting in his arm-chair, surrounded by loved ones; with a smile on his lips, he passed painlessly away to the Father who will verify the promise to the faithful. His life was full of good works and the fruits thereof shall live after him. E. W. BRIDGMAN.

"Is this hot enough for you?" is a silly question; but if you meet a man who complains of suffering from the heat, ten to one you will find, on inquiry, that he does not use Ayer's Sarsaparilla to tone up his system and free his blood from irritating humors.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1892.

A BIT OF HISTORY.

In the last issue of this paper was related a little incident which occurred in the recent Methodist Episcopal General Conference at Omaha, that plainly indicates the position of that church in relation to secret societies.

About the middle of last January the following paragraphs were reprinted in the Cynosure. They were copied from one of our exchanges, the Christian Holiness Standard:

Q.—Can the Methodist Episcopal church be a holiness church while she admits Freemasonry, or is in any way in sympathy with it?

A.—We never knew that the Methodist church admitted Freemasonry, or was in any way in sympathy with it. Some of the ministers and members are Freemasons, and others may be in sympathy with Freemasonry.

The comment of the editor of the Cynosure on this passage was this:

It is claimed, and it seems to be an underestimate, that one-fifth of all the Methodist Episcopal ministers in the United States are Freemasons; and it is notorious that a large proportion of the congregations of that denomination in this country is honeycombed with Freemasonry. In 1876 the subject was brought before the General Conference of the church for consideration, but that body refused to take action upon it.

An intelligent correspondent calls our attention to that part of the foregoing paragraph printed in italics, proceeds to show us that we were mistaken, and furnishes us with the following record of the action taken by the General Conference on that occasion:

The petition of fifteen thousand ministers to that body was, that they should take such action "as shall require our ministers and members to separate from these associations" (secret societies).

These petitions were submitted to the Committee on the State of the Church. And we have the following from the Daily Christian Advocate, Baltimore, May 24, 1876:

"The Committee on the State of the Church, to whom were referred the petitions and memorials on 'secret oath-bound organizations,' have duly considered them all, and beg leave to report that it is found that all the petitions are designed to be summed up in one petition, as stated by the originator of all these petitions and memorials. Your committee have had a very difficult task to perform from the nature of the subject presented to them. Being secret oath-bound organizations, what your committee most needed was more light. From the light they have received, they fail to find sufficient evidence that the obligations and teachings of these organizations are essentially and designedly anti-Christian, since these organizations claim and publish to the world, in their works, that their fundamental principle is, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself,' and are mutually bound to carry out the divine precept. Therefore, it should be left to each individual to decide in regard to uniting with these organizations. But while we do not express any opinion or judgment as to the propriety or expediency of uniting with these associations, we do most affectionately and earnestly admonish our ministers and members to carefully guard against allowing membership in, or attendance upon, these organizations to interfere in any manner with their religious duties, or attendance upon the means of grace. Your committee, therefore, beg leave to respectfully recommend that as to the prayer of the petitioners which asks the General Conference 'to take such action as will require our membership to separate from these associations, or be subject to disciplinary action, as also all members who may hereafter unite with such orders,' be not granted. All of which is respectfully submitted.

"JOSEPH HARNER, Sec.,

"C. B. FISK, Ch'n.

"This report was acted upon, and adopted" (says Elder Geo. Richey), "and is now the sense of the M. E. church in regard to Masons, and Masonry."

On the whole, agreeing with the opinion of our esteemed correspondent, it is evident that the General Conference of 1876, in adopting the report above-quoted, did really commend the Masonic fraternity by saying that the lodge and the church are mutually bound to carry out the divine precept indorsed by the lodge; and it is equally evident that by this decision of the conference of 1876 all present and prospective members of the church are guarded against disciplinary action for uniting with the lodge. In other words, the Methodist Episcopal church is pledged to maintain a friendly relation to the Masonic fraternity, so that members of each can interchangeably "brother" each other at the communion table or around the Masonic altar.

Our correspondent deems it very inconsistent "to call the Methodist Episcopal church a 'holiness' church, while she permits the 'Anakims' to lurk within her borders." And he is right.

ECCLESIASTICAL TRUSTS.

Perhaps no popular impulse has been more general, or better sustained by the moral sense of thinking people, than opposition to "trusts." That manufacturers and dealers should combine to interfere with the operation of the natural law of supply and demand, thereby levying a tax on the consumer for their benefit, has been justly regarded as an outrage on the public well-being.

But something much like commercial "trusts" is too prevalent in the ecclesiastical world, and seems not to have called forth so general a protest as has gone out against these secular combinations. Surely, "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Each of the great ruling bodies in many denominations, in the spirit of "trusts," periodically makes out a list of objects for which pecuniary provision is to be made by its churches, and collections are ordered in each and all of them for these specific purposes. This is true, also, of certain local churches that exist under an independent form of government. There are, usually, from six to ten such stated collections every year for special objects. These are exclusive of contributions, pew-rents, etc., secured for the support of ministers, current church expenses, and local charities. Loyalty to the denomination requires that these collections be taken, and the application of a moral pressure secures the result.

Moreover, too often, a quarantine is frequently established around the church to fence out intruders, and to make assurance that little or nothing shall be collected for any other purpose.

The consequence is, that anything except these specified objects has the smallest possible chance of securing support or a reasonable hearing. Let us illustrate: Time was, in certain churches, when anti-slavery was tabooed; its advocates were received with a shrug of the shoulders, and pulpits were closed against them as disturbers of the peace; agitation and opposition from pro-slavery members were dreaded, lest the church should become unpopular. Oberlin College, with its abolition sentiments and President Finney's "new light" doctrines, found no favor in certain churches, although subsequently both became popular. So with many new and untried reforms. Churches are shy, fearful of countenancing what they consider would be disturbing elements if once admitted to open debate in their congregations. Perhaps the fear is natural, but it has been seriously detrimental to the progress of healthful reforms.

We can have charity for a pastor or a denomination that is ignorant of an evil that may exist in the communities from which support is received, and it may actually receive nurture within the churches because they do not recognize its iniquity. In churches where the proposed reform is permitted to be freely aired, light is more readily thrown upon a work of darkness and its deformities are soonest made visible and rightly estimated.

The number of these worthy reforms that can be taken up in the churches and there fully discussed is limited; but until either of them wins popular favor, or becomes so essential to the interests of the denomination as to demand recognition, it is ignored. Meantime, many a deserving and noble object goes begging in vain for a proper hearing by the Christian public—shut out of pulpits where it should be warmly welcomed by the "trusts" which their benevolence has made the medium of distribution.

This has been the trouble in the past with the anti-secrecy cause. It was exceedingly unpopular, often because pastor and people could see no discrepancy existing between Christianity and the pagan worship of the secret lodges, and it has required decades of honest and earnest work to convince pious church members that they should have no fellowship with any dangerous and demoralizing works of darkness, although Paul gave powerful words of warning against them, eighteen hundred years ago. But, at last, the light begins to dawn upon the churches that the secret lodge is a work of the devil, the refuge of sinners, the enemy of Christianity. Thank God!

The result, already, is more liberality in certain denominations—more interest in our work—more demand for light upon the evils of secret organizations—a more general exposure of their wickedness in the sight of God—and a growing desire to divorce the lodge from the church.

Let the good work go on. "Be of good courage." God still reigns, and Christ continues to help and bless his faithful servants.

WRITE TO THE EDITOR.

Very often private letters received at this office contain information concerning the anti-secrecy reform quite as interesting as those that are designed for publication, and are as truly trustworthy indicators of the spirit with which reformers are confronted in the course of their work.

One of these letters, now before us, comes from an Eastern city, where the writer is engaged in the dissemination of anti-secrecy literature, which all our readers know embraces expositions of the horrible oaths and penalties to which Freemasons, especially, are required to subscribe. The writer says: "Masons to whom I have given tracts say that these oaths and penalties are 'all lies, and that they can only laugh at such stuff.' But there was one man that told me it was too true." And this is the testimony of every honest Mason who has the courage to renounce the evil works of darkness, and tell what he knows about the lodge.

The same letter also recounts the following incident: "Perhaps you have heard of Bishop MacNamara." This gentleman is a Reformed Catholic, who sojourned in Chicago for several months, a few years ago. He disclaimed being a Protestant, but he openly and bitterly denounced the papacy and its religious methods. "He had a rough time of it here last night"—the letter continues—"at one of his prayer-meetings. The Roman Catholics threw bricks and rotting eggs through the windows, and the police had to take the women home. Wasn't that just terrible for free America?"

Masonic exaggeration is also exemplified in another part of this private epistle. There had been a parade of Knights Templars, and the local papers, as usual, had given glowing accounts of the public enthusiasm exhibited on that occasion, the general decoration of private houses, etc. "I went into the portion of the city where the Templars passed," says our correspondent, "to see the parade and these decorations, and I am glad to be able to say that there was not a private house (with one exception) in the eight squares that I walked that had even a flag out." "The moral is obvious."

If our friends everywhere, who do not care to write letters to appear in the Cynosure as "correspondence," can occasionally send us brief items, similar to the above, real incidents that come in their way, we can use them in the interest of the anti-secrecy reform and with them add zest to the other contents of the paper.

THE DEATH OF EX-PRES. BLANCHARD.

ACTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

WHEREAS, God in his providence has removed our friend, brother and wise counselor, ex-Pres. Jonathan Blanchard; therefore,

Resolved, (1) That the National Christian Association Board of Directors realize that a great man has fallen in Israel, and their prayer is, that God would raise up a multitude of laborers in the cause of reform, having the same consecrated wisdom, the same burning zeal, and the same dauntless courage.

Resolved, (2) That we recognize the fact that our departed brother was the leader of this reform against the lodge, and, more than any other one man, was its head, heart and soul.

Resolved, (3) That in him was a man most thoroughly loyal to the truth as he saw it, and bating shams and hypocrisies with all the intensity of a great soul set on fire to save men from the snares of Satan.

Resolved, (4) That we put on record the expression of our appreciation of the value of his great service, not only in the cause of education and all moral reforms, but especially our high appreciation of his services for God and mankind in the National Christian Association.

GEO. R. MILTON, Chairman.

EDGAR B. WYLIE, Sec'y.

time approaches for many pulpits. Let this be an opportunity. The cause of a true worship which the secret lodges are breaking down should be presented in a hundred churches this summer. "You must be aware," says Mr. Carson, for many years the leading spirit and highest authority among the Freemasons of Ohio, "that we are dis-integrating your churches."

Pastors and church committees, arranging for a supply, will do wisely to appoint a day for the presentation of this reform. Let them write to Rev. H. L. Kellogg, Corresponding Secretary, at this office and he will arrange to visit them if in his power.

JONATHAN BLANCHARD'S WORKS.

A small volume of the addresses and poems of the late President J. Blanchard is to be immediately issued. It will comprise some of his best platform efforts on temperance, the lodge, National reform, the Sabbath, etc., in a volume of 150 to 200 pages. Preparation for a later and larger volume is also to be immediately begun, which will be a biography, and will possibly contain a larger selection of his writings.

A special June offer of the early volume is hereby made. To all who order before July 1st, 1892, enclosing FIFTY CENTS, the volume of poems and addresses will be sent on publication. After that date it may be found necessary to advance the price. Send orders to this office.

—A note from the "Literary Information Committee of the Papyrus Club," Auditorium Building, in this city, informs us that they wish to obtain the names of literary persons (book-writers) living in Chicago, and the titles of their publications.

—Among the many worthy charities which flourish in Chicago, the Children's Aid Society appeals fervently to the support of the benevolent in every walk of life. It was conceived and incorporated under the State laws in July, 1890, with the design of meeting the necessities of a great city which has outgrown its earlier methods of charity. Its specific object is to improve the condition of poor and destitute children—the placing of homeless and friendless children in families where they can receive proper nurture and education, with every inducement to become honest, industrious citizens. If left to roam objectless and unrestrained about the streets, the probabilities are that they will vegetate into criminals and vagabonds. Homes are secured for older boys where they can develop into farmers and mechanics, and infants and destitute young orphans are placed in private families as adopted children. Indigent widows and deserted wives are not separated from their children, when it can be avoided, but both mothers and children are placed where the women can earn a living, in families, and so be self-supporting. For further information application can be made to the Children's Aid Society (Room 510), 167 Dearborn street, Chicago.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

TO THE READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—Our Canadian friends will take notice that the New England Secretary, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, will (D. V.) spend Sabbath, July 31 next, in Montreal or Toronto, and soon after visit Berlin, Ont. No doubt you will take advantage of these opportunities to hear him.

I hope all who read the Cynosure will feel a personal interest in the Oregon Department. It is true of some already. One man outside of Oregon has written me, that he will give $25 per year for this department, and as much more as he can. This department ought to have a $20,000 endowment. Shall it be put upon such a basis?

Several hundred have received, during the past week, our annual statement of the past year's progress, and a request to aid the work for the year to come. My report of donations in this number shows that some have responded at once. I trust that all will, sooner or later. If each would send a little during the summer months, it would be very helpful. It gave me much pleasure to receive and read a letter from the son of the late Rev. W. G. Keil. His mother sends from the little that was left to her a draft for $50, simply because her husband had intended to help the N. C. A., but fell asleep ere it could be accomplished; a beautiful contrast to the contests over wills, and the greed of the living in their efforts to thwart the expressed wishes of the dead. In the Lord's work, as Jesus taught his disciples, it is not quantity so much as quality that has God's blessing upon it.

I have just been informed that our old friend, Mr. George Brokaw, left in his will $200 for the National Christian Association, which the executor hopes to pay in the early part of next year.

In the N. C. A. Hall, the Gospel of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ continues every night to be preached, and many have accepted Jesus as their Saviour. The workers come from the Moody Institute. Mr. Moody's testimony, in large letters on the wall, speaks to every one against going into the secret lodges. Several contributions have been received for continuing this work.

It was in this room that I met brethren T. P. Robb, J. B. Black and W. C. Paden, of Iowa, for consultation last week. Bro. Robb is the secretary of the Iowa State Association. The result of our conference was a better understanding, which insures more effective planning and pushing of the work. I was disappointed, however, in my expectations that Bro. Paden would take the agency either of the Central, or Western Department. He had changed his plan somewhat since his last letter to me. He may yet take the agency, though he fears his health forbids. He will continue to lecture occasionally as his services are demanded, even though he take pastoral work.

Any one in Iowa wishing a lecture on this reform, and who will pay the traveling expenses of the speaker, can have the services free, of any of the following: Rev. C. D. Trumbull, Morning Sun, Iowa; Rev. T. A. H. Wylie, Washington, Iowa; Rev. T. H. Atcheson, Hopkinton, Iowa; Rev. T. P. Robb, Linton, Iowa; Rev. S. A. Gilley, Marengo, Iowa; Rev. L. Mendenhall, Fairfield, Iowa; Rev. W. N. Coffee, Burlington, Iowa, North Hill; W. L. Enlow, Editor, Birmingham, Iowa.

Iowa is especially favored in its efficient State officers, as the above list of speakers who have been secured by them abundantly testifies.

Do not miss Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's proposition for using the Cynosure. A letter just received says that the Cynosure has made some of the Masons there weak-kneed, and caused others to quit.

Does your pastor take the paper? If he does not take it, and he will read it if it is sent to him, kindly let me know at once.

W. I. PHILLIPS, Field Sec'y and Treas.

FROM THE WASHINGTON AGENT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 2, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It seems as if the great reaper has been more than usually active during the past few months. Returning from the annual meeting, I found several of those who have manifested their love for reform by kind acts missing. Bro. Zartman, a gunsmith, at Newark, Ohio, was little known to the world outside the home and church circle in which he lived, yet he always had a welcome for the reform agent. He read the Cynosure with interest, and sent it to others. I called at his office, but he was not there. Father Hervey, of Utica, Ohio, has completed his earthly mission, and I have no doubt has entered "into the rest that remaineth for the people of God." His children will revere his memory and sustain, as their means will allow, the reforms that he loved. I called on but few excepting those I had known in other years to be tried friends. In no instance did I find their faith diminished or their zeal grown cold. Those who enlist in reform usually do so from convictions that increase with years of experience.

A day in Allegheny, Pa., permitted me to look in on the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, in session there. I was assured that competent individuals would look after the anti-secrecy interests. It seems that the United Presbyterians of Garnet, Kan., do not understand the law of the church regarding secret societies, and so sent a memorial to the General Assembly, "inquiring if the canons of the church forbid a member of the church to belong to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, a secret society." They will, of course, be informed. The law is as follows:

"That all associations, whether formed for political or benevolent purposes, which impose upon their members an oath of secrecy, or an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with such association."

The question might naturally arise, Why does not the pastor inform them? Can it be he is ignorant of the law? Will not some of our Kansas friends see that they are enlightened on the secrecy question?

During the past week have I been favored with visits from several of our friends. Bro. Samuel Pratt, of Worcester, has been attending the meeting to the American Home Missionary Society just held in this city. Dr. H. H. George drops in occasionally. He reports the prospects very favorable for the closing of the gates of the World's Fair on Sabbath. What was reported as a victory for the other side in the action of Congress, the other day, he believes came from a misunderstanding. The real question has not yet been voted on.

Rev. Mr. Prichard, editor of the Christian Nation, paid us a friendly visit on his way to Synod, which is now convening in Mansfield, Ohio. Both he and his paper are all right on the lodge question, and helping to strengthen the reform sentiment in the East.

We shall hope soon to see anti-secrecy in the forum of reforms represented by the Christian Statesman, as the editor, Dr. Crafts, promised your agent it would be. More anon.

W. B. STODDARD.

REFORM WORK IN THE R. P. CHURCH.

MANSFIELD, Ohio, June 3, 1892.

The Reformed Presbyterian Synod met here in the Covenanter church, June 1, with quite a full attendance of more than 180 delegates. The front of the church was handsomely decorated with flowers and a beautiful banner hung behind the pulpit, on which was inscribed "For Christ's Crown and Covenant." The retiring moderator, Rev. R. C. Wylie, of Wilkinsburg, Pa., preached an appropriate sermon from 1 Tim. 3: 15. Dr. R. J. George, of Beaver Falls, was elected moderator, and Dr. C. D. Trumbull, clerk. The elegant church building is well filled during all the sessions, the church parlor being thrown open by folding doors, thus making a commodious auditorium. Quite a number of visitors and many of the delegates have brought their wives.

There seems to be no falling off in the attendance, and the interest and work of the church has not perceptibly suffered by the defection of last Synod. The most earnest discussion has been on the question of dropping the National Reform work. Of the half-dozen lecturers employed by the denomination only one remains in the field, and there is a fearful falling off in the contributions to this cause. The interest and funds of the church are very largely absorbed in the work of missions, some twenty or more missionaries being supported by the denomination. Many thought the National Reform movement did not go far enough, because it did not directly advocate political dissent from the National Constitution, and because it did not give more emphasis to the anti-secret issue.

Secret societies are making dangerous inroads upon the Covenanter church. In Western congregations some members have joined the Farmers' Alliance, and there are few city congregations in which are not found members of secret orders. The greatest danger now confronting the church is a growing indifference to reform work, and a disposition to substitute other work in its place.

M. A. GAULT.

THE HOME.

REAPPEARING.

The star is not extinguished when it sets
Upon the dull horizon; but it goes
To shine in other skies, then reappear
In ours, as when it first arose.

The river is not lost, when o'er the rock
It pours its flood into the abyss below;
Its scattering force regathering from the shock,
It hastens onward with yet fuller flow.

The bright sun dies not, when the shadowy orb
Of the eclipsing moon obscures its ray,
It still is shining on, and soon to us
Will burst undimmed into the joy of day.

The lily dies not, when both flower and leaf
Fade, and are strewn upon the chill sad ground,
Gone, as for shelter, to its mother earth,
'Twill rise, re-bloom, and shed its fragrance round.

The dewdrop dies not, when it leaves the flower,
And passes upward, on the beam of morn;
It does but hide itself in light on high,
To its loved flower at twilight to return.

The fine gold has not perished when the flame
Seizes upon it with consuming glow;
In freshened splendor it comes forth anew,
To sparkle on the monarch's throne or brow.

Thus nothing dies—or only dies to live.
Star, stream and flower, the dewdrop, and the gold;
Each goodly thing, instinct with buoyant hope,
Hastes to put on its purer, finer mould.

So, in the quiet joy of kindly trust,
We bid each parting saint a brief farewell;
Weeping, yet hoping, we commit their dust
To the safe-keeping of the silent cell.

Softly, within that peaceful resting-place,
We place their wearied limbs, and bid the clay
Press lightly on them, till the night be past,
And the far east gives note of coming day.

The day of reappearing, how it speeds!
He who is true and faithful speaks the word;
Then shall we ever be with those we love—
Then shall we be "forever with the Lord!"

—Rev. Horatius Bonar, D.D.

THE IRRELIGIOUS WOMAN.

A lady who has recently returned from a trip to Europe, and who enjoyed unusual opportunities while there for becoming acquainted with the private life of foreigners of high social standing, recently made these striking observations:

"I visited several houses while I was gone," she said, "in which, in the midst of culture and refinement, there was no religion. In all these the same characteristics were noticeable, but in one they were especially marked. The mistress of this house was perhaps fifty years old or more, gray-haired, dignified, elegant. Her husband was somewhat younger, fond of his club and his own pleasure. They had comparatively little in common, and I could feel, rather than see—for they preserved the most scrupulous etiquette in their outward relations—that they were not happy and did not have each other's confidence. The young lady daughters, pretty and graceful and possessing some charming accomplishments, seemed yet without zest in life. The sons were growing up like the father, and one of them at twenty seemed blase.

"I cannot tell you how painfully was impressed upon me during my stay in this household the awful lack which is produced by the absence of religion. There were no family prayers, no grace before meat, no Bibles upon the beautiful tables, no church-going on the Sabbath, no study of God's Word. And the need of these was so sadly reflected in the lives of these people! Instead of revolving in beautiful harmony around one central thought, as does a Christian household—a thought constantly elevating, refining, quickening—there seemed absolutely no homogeneity in the whole. It was as though each member of this large family were pursuing a separate path in search of he knew not what. There was a feeling as though here was a flock without a shepherd. One's heart ached to direct them to a Guide, a Helper, and, indeed, I said all that I could in courtesy say to meet what I felt to be their cruel need.

"The tone of the conversation in this family, which was always bright and witty, was equally trying. It was cynical and pessimistic to the last degree and full of flings at sacred things.

But the most striking thing to me in this whole experience was not its effect upon my moral sense, though that was of course the most shocking. My whole æsthetic nature revolted at it. No doubt similar families abound on our own side of the Atlantic, but my lot here has always fallen among Christian people. Now I saw, as I had never seen before, how ugly and unsymmetrical is a household without the love of God in it. If the mother had only been a Christian how entirely altered would the whole scene have become! I realized as never before what a gain of mere beauty would be secured could sin be taught 'the carriage of a holy saint,' to say nothing of the loftier objects which would be attained if the heart were attuned to Christ's teachings. Touchingly impressive and beautiful as I had always known the Christian life to be, I had never quite understood before what a real 'ornament' was the 'meek and quiet spirit' of the true Christian."—The Congregationalist.

THE CURE FOR ANXIETY.

"Be anxious for nothing," St. Paul is made to say in the Revision, while in the older version it reads "be careful for nothing." The former is the correct meaning, and that beyond a question. The same change is made by the revisers in the Gospel, where they put it "be not anxious for the morrow," instead of "take no thought, etc."

The fact is we ought to take thought, and we ought to exercise proper care. Care and thought are the mind's proper exercise. It was meant that we should put the powers upon the strain and tension just in the same way as we are called to put our muscles on the strain and do the good work of the body. Care and thoughtfulness are not practiced enough. There is a great lack of them, and the poor world goes lame and lacking because of the mental indolence of debilitant souls who never strung the thought up to a tension that really tested it, in all their aimless lives. Care and thoughtfulness work no ill to the one who practices them.

But anxiety is a very different thing. If you call care and thoughtfulness the exercise under which the mind is kept up to its normal working heat, you may call anxiety the fever of the mind. As is well known, the normal temperature of the body is 98 degrees. In health all our bodies are at this temperature. The healthy exercise of bodily functions then goes on uninterruptedly. But let that temperature increase and fever begins; the proper exercise of bodily functions is interfered with, and if it pass six or more degrees beyond a hundred and is not promptly reduced, death ensues. This is a true figure of that mental something called anxiety. It is the fever of the mind. It wears upon and destroys the mental powers and weakens even the spiritual nature. It is no wonder, then, that in curing other diseases Jesus had a thought about this, and quite natural also that his apostle should be found saying "be anxious for nothing."

But now the best of it is that he prescribes the cure. It is not merely an exhortation such as we so often use when we say "Don't worry," but have no true reason to give why our friend should not be anxious. St. Paul gives the wonderful prescription, "but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving unto God," etc. There is the simple rule. You are a praying man or woman; well, whenever anxiety comes rushing over you again and again, as is it sure to do, turn it into a prayer. Put it into the form of a request; lift it up into the light of your heavenly Father's countenance.

And why does your Father in heaven let anxiety come to you? To make you pray more. "Be anxious for nothing," but when you begin to feel anxiety intruding then turn it into prayer—"in everything by prayer and supplication . . . let your requests be made known." That is the meaning of anxiety. It passes through the alchemy of faith and comes out on the other side of a prayer. And then? Our Great Teacher tells us what the result will be, and he does it gloriously: "And the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." "The peace of God" is to settle down in you a place of anxiety, and it is a peace which "passeth all understanding." You will be able to say: "Oh, yes, I see how it is. This thing is all set right, and that other thing is all taken out of the way. We live in an analytical age, and there is too much of that kind of faith which is no faith at all." But you can do no analyzing here with this peace. "It passeth all understanding." It is God's peace. It settles down, and you lift up your hands in wonder at it. You say: "I do not see why I feel so calm about this. I do not know any more than I did before, but all my anxiety is gone."

And that is Christ's way. Do you have anxiety? Get it into the shape of a prayer. Hold it close to the heart of God by continuing supplication. Think of all the times he has helped you in the past, and give thanks for the help received! Then watch for the promised peace; it will come as sure as God is true, and beyond all measuring or explaining it will guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." This is, by the alchemy of divine grace, which can turn base things into the gold of the kingdom.—Anonymous.

BEING AND DOING.

No one can impress the truth upon others who has not been duly impressed by it himself. This is the open secret of all successful preaching and teaching. The degree of power with which any one speaks is measured by the power his message has had on his own heart. What we often loosely style "magnetism" is simply the truth vitalized in one's own character. The old prophets used to call their inspired communications a "burden." And when we come to feel that what we have to say is a "burden" on our souls, we will speak with equal power. The Sabbath-school teacher who said, "I am so full of the lesson that I can hardly wait for Sabbath to come to teach it to my class," had the true idea. And the preacher who enters the pulpit with a yearning to impart to his people the blessed thing with which he himself is filled and uplifted, will always do them good.—Apostolic Guide.

A GOOD STORY.

"Of what use is all your studying and your books?" said an honest farmer to an ingenious artist; "they don't make the corn grow, nor produce vegetables for market. My Sam does more good with his plow in one month than you can do with your books and papers in a whole year."

"What plow does your son use?" said the artist, quietly.

"Why, he uses ———'s plow, to be sure. He can do nothing with any other. By using this plow we save half the labor and raise three times as much as we could with the old wooden concern."

The artist quietly turned over one of his sheets and showed the farmer a drawing of the lauded plow, saying:

"I am the inventor of your favorite plow, and my name is ———."

The astonished farmer shook the artist heartily by the hand, and invited him to call at the farmhouse and make it his home as long as he remained in the neighborhood.—Selected.

LEARN A TRADE.

Every boy, whether rich or poor, should learn some regular trade or occupation, one that he can be sure to make a living at, whether he intends to follow it or not in after life. A good mechanic is always sure of finding employment and at generally fair wages—enough, at least, to give him support for himself and family, should he have the latter. Some boys think it more genteel to serve as clerks in stores and offices, where they will be under the necessity of dressing in good clothes, and looking slick and neat at all times. They may be suffering for the want of food, but must dress well in such situations.

Better be a clerk than to remain idle, but clerking is a poor business, and nine times out of ten the grown-up clerk does not receive half so much in wages as the mechanic. Clerks may look smart and chipper, but their pocket-books are nearly always empty. A man well known in this State learned a trade in his youth, and became a skilled mechanic. He worked at the trade as an apprentice and journeyman some ten or twelve years, and then went into business for himself. He conducted said business successfully for about thirty-five years, and accumulated considerable property, when at the age of sixty years a series of misfortunes befell him and he lost all the savings of his life. With a family on his hands matters looked very "blue" to him for a while. Then he remembered his old trade, and he went to work at it, and for several years thereafter it gave him a support for himself and family.

If it had not been for the trade he learned in his youth he would have been in a lamentable condition after he lost his business and property. We know of a number of cases similar to the above, where the trades saved the men from poverty and the poorhouse. In this country the wealthiest and most successful business men sometimes lose their property, and if they have no trade or regular occupation to fall back upon their condition is often sad indeed. Therefore, boys, learn a trade.—The Advance.

TEMPERANCE.

THE SAW-MILLS OF SATAN.

It is as impossible to run a saloon without ruining the boy as it is to run a saw-mill without using up logs.—Miss Frances Willard.

Some of the Chicago rum-sellers are in the habit of enticing the school children into their saloons, giving them beer, and offering a prize to the one who drinks the most.—Voice.

Careful investigation shows that at least 150,000 children, many of them of the tenderest years, are in the habit of daily visiting the saloons of this city; in a large number of drinking places, bar-tenders are in the habit of giving the little ones candies and pennies as inducements to patronize their places.—Christian Advocate, New York.

The saw-mills of Satan, the slum and saloon,
Where villains and felons are made,
Daylight and twilight, midnight and noon,
Driving their devilish trade.

Up with the gates! how they haul them in,
As they jam and jostle and crash!
Soaked and sodden and slimy with sin,
To these terrible teeth they rush.

Lads and lasses, the freckled and fair,
Robbed of their beauty and bloom;
The child of vice and the child of prayer
Drawn to the drunkard's doom.

Oh, horrible change! from the mill he comes
All scarred and scathed and cursed;
A raving wretch flung out of the slums,
The demon has done his worst.

Boys from the school house, college and cot,
Seized and sawn and slain,
A license for this he bargained and bought
To keep up the old refrain.

Who licensed this ruffian to capture and kill
The lad that was loved so well;
To cut him up in his murder mill
To fuel the flames of hell!

By the love of your God and love of your boy,
Oh, free men, we plead and implore,
These saw-mills of Satan denounce and destroy,
To hear them, or fear them, no more.
Let them buzz, buzz, buzz, hum, hum, hum,
Or use up our youth by selling them rum.

WENDELL PHILLIPS ON PROHIBITION.

The following words of Wendell Phillips are as forcible as when uttered, and are well worth reading at this date. They are taken from his "Life" written by Carlos Martyn:

"No one supposes that law can make men temperate. Occasionally some sot betrays the average level of liquor intelligence, by fancying that to be our belief and plan. Temperance men, on the contrary, have always known and argued that we must trust to argument, example, social influence, and religious principle, to make men temperate, but law can shut up those bars and dram-shops which facilitate and feed intemperance, which double our taxes, make our streets unsafe for men of feeble resolution, treble the peril to property and life, and make the masses tools in the hands of designing men to undermine and cripple law.

"The use of intoxicating liquors rests with each man's discretion,—the trade in them comes clearly within the control of law. Many considerations—and among them the safety and success of republican institutions—bid us put forth the full power of the law to shut up dram-shops. We have never yet ruled a great city on the principle of self-government. Republican institutions undermined by intemperance are obliged to confess that they have never governed a great city here, on the basis of universal suffrage, in such a way as to preserve order, protect life, and secure free speech.

"New York ruled by drunkards, is a proof of the despotism of the dram-shops. Men whom murderers serve that they may escape, and because they have escaped the gallows rule that city. The ribald crew which holds them up could neither stifle its own conscience, or rally its retinue, but for the help of the grog-shop. A like testimony comes from the history of our other great cities. State laws are defied in their streets; and means of the dram-shop, and the gilded saloon of fashionable hotels, their ballot-box is in the hand of the criminal classes,—of men who avowedly and systematically defy the laws.

"The only bulwark against the dangers of intemperance is prohibition. More than thirty years of experience have convinced me, that this can only be secured by means of a distinct political organization."

HOW THE SALOON PAYS IN ONE COMMUNITY.

In Binghamton, N. Y., Romaine Silver was made drunk in a saloon, then for fun went forth and broke the doors of a school-house, the natural enemy of the rumseller. For this he was arrested and sent to prison. The fracas cost Broome county tax-payers about $1,800, but they have $100, what they received for the license to show for it. Daniel Ryan, a traveling drunkard, got off the train to hoist in another drink from a licensed hell-hole placed near the depot to make it more of a resort for loafers. Ryan was so full that he could not get on the train and took to the streets. He zig-zagged along till the shades of night settled on the city, then he ran into a store-window, was arrested for burglary and sent to prison at Auburn for two years and six months. This little picnic cost Binghamton tax-payers about $2,100, but they got $100 of it back from the license, while the State boards Daniel thirty months, but at no expense to the tax-payers!—Advance Thought.

LADY SOMERSET IN ENGLAND.

[Politics is in a ferment in England, as everybody knows. Parliament is to be dissolved in June and the elections follow in a few weeks. Lady Henry Somerset has been asked to join the Central Committee of the Women's Liberal League, Mrs. Gladstone, president, and she responds as follows.—Editors Union Signal.]

DEAR MRS. McLAREN:—In accepting the invitation to join your federation and offer myself for election to your committee, I think I owe it to myself and you to state clearly why I do so.

For the last seven years I have given all my time and energy to the temperance cause; they have been years of hard work to me, but encouraging, because of the unexampled activity that temperance workers of every order have shown. The churches have engaged in the crusade; politicians, journalists, and men of every profession, creed and class have come into the ranks; the temperance associations have never known such extensive membership or active interest as they can boast to-day.

And yet this work, which has mainly been in the direction of moral suasion, has failed in its immediate object. Statistics conclusively prove that no marked impression has been made on the drinking habits of the country, and the explanation is simple. So long as the surroundings of the poor are blighted by legalized temptation; so long as the number of licensed houses is uncontrolled by the public voice; so long as the tempting facilities for drink and ruin are regulated not with a view to the welfare of the unfortunate class who afford the staple custom of the public house, but only in the interest of the brewer's gains, the habit of temperance cannot make appreciable progress.

But if the movement has not succeeded in making England more sober, it has created a strong and overwhelming opinion in favor of public action in the matter. We have long demanded a machinery that shall make public opinion locally effective in checking the most fruitful cause of human misery; and this the party with which your federation is identified has at last promised.

Such legislation, I believe, will be the first step towards emancipating England from her cruel slavery, and when women—experts in all that conduces to a pure and healthy home—have a voice in its working, the success of the movement will be secured.

Both these things are, I understand, professed objects of your federation; they are the objects of all my public work, and only through the success of the Liberal party does there seem any possibility of their enactment. I should be less than sincere if, under the circumstances, I hesitated to offer you my most loyal and devoted co-operation.

Home Rule will, however, practically be the only test question at the next election. I ought therefore candidly to say that as this seems to me not more important than these reforms, I shall feel free to place my principles in this question before my loyalty as a partisan, and shall direct my efforts strenuously against any candidate who is in sympathy with the liquor traffic. Yours in the best bond, ISABEL SOMERSET.

FRANCIS MURPHY AS A REFORMER.

In November, 1876, Mr. Murphy instituted the plan of work which has become so popular. At Pittsburg 50,000 people signed the pledge and the movement spread through the entire West. A few years later a convention was held at Cleveland. At this meeting twenty-two States were represented by delegates and a record made showing 13,000,000 pledges secured. In his meetings in Philadelphia 95,000, at Cleveland 25,000, New York 100,000, San Francisco 20,000. With a letter from President Hayes, the temperance hero of the White House, to the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Mr. Murphy went to Europe for temperance work. Monster meetings were held in Mr. Spurgeon's tabernacle and the first to take the pledge was the famous preacher himself, and 15,000 others immediately followed the eminent divine's example. In Ireland and Scotland, accompanied by his talented son, Thomas E., Mr. Murphy did a magnificent work, the pledges running up into the millions. Messrs. Wilberforce, Farrar, Gladstone, Fawcett and the Queen approved the work most heartily.

Mr. Murphy always preaches the power of Christ to save and keep as the only power against drink, and the meetings of B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, can have no better forerunner than a temperance revival under Francis Murphy. Before you get the spirit of Christ into a man you have to get the spirit of alcohol out of him.

Mr. Murphy and his wife are just from a tour of Washington and Oregon, where he left 30,000 more converts to temperance and many thousand to Christ. Mrs. Murphy is a sweet-faced woman and a constant inspiration to her husband. Prayers are going up from hundreds of homes that loved husbands, brothers and sons may be released from the bondage of drink.

Mr. Murphy is in sympathy with prohibition and votes the ticket, though many newspaper interviews that never took place, report him contrawise. No one is doing more to help the prohibition cause than Francis Murphy, and all temperance organizations should aid him.—Oakland (Cal.) Pacific Ensign.

The Illinois Gospel Temperance League are working to get a temperance band in every church and society in the State.

In the Province of Quebec the study of physiology and hygiene, with special reference to alcohol, is compulsory in all the Protestant schools.

One fifteenth of Germany's cultivated land is devoted to the liquor traffic, which is making it a question of beer or bread for the poorer classes of that country. The drink question is thus becoming an important one in the political economy of Germany. Professor Schmoller, of Berlin, an able political economist, thus writes: "Among our working people the conditions of domestic life, of education, of prosperity, of progress, or degradation are all dependent on the proportion of income which flows down the father's throat. The whole condition of our lower and middle classes—one may, even without exaggeration, say the future of our nation—depends on this question. If it is true that half our paupers become so through drink, it gives us some estimate of the costly burden which we tolerate. No other of our vices bears comparison with this."

Central Truth:—The kingdom of Jesus Christ, in righteousness and peace, shall extend over all the earth, and endure forever.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL UNION.

—The report of missionary work for the neglected children of our country in the American Sunday-school union, for the year ending March 1, 1892, shows 1,664 schools organized in places that were previously altogether destitute of religious privileges, containing 7,018 teachers and 59,551 scholars, aid given to 2,127 other schools, with 14,302 teachers, and 135,299 scholars, and 4,536 schools aided that had been reported with 25,790 teachers and 299,206 scholars. The missionaries of the society distributed by sale and gift 6,458 Bibles and 9,115 Testaments. They made 56,582 visits to families for religious conversation and prayer, and delivered 21,474 sermons and addresses. Six thousand six hundred and seventy-eight conversions were reported as the result of evangelistic services held, and 216 churches have been developed from the Sunday-schools established, while regular preaching services have been secured in many other places as an outgrowth of this Sunday-school work.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY.

—The annual meeting of the American Tract Society has just been held at New York. One hundred new publications have been added to the catalogue, in twelve languages. The secretary reported that literature to the value of $25,554.52 had been circulated gratuitously. The 174 colporteurs of the society had visited 126,112 families, held 4,366 public meetings, and circulated 94,414 volumes. The benevolent department received $67,237.63 in legacies and gifts, and from sales and other sources enough to make a total of $139,055.86.

BAPTIST.

—The total valuation of the Baptist church, educational and charitable institution property of this country, amounts to $95,797,511.

—Some idea of the rapidity with which the denomination is growing in Chicago may be learned when it is stated that probably no less than sixteen churches will apply for admittance to the Chicago Association for its next meeting in Oak Park. Should all these come in, the number of churches in the association will be sixty-seven.

—Telugu missions.—Five millions of Telugu people are dependent upon us for the Gospel. For these millions we have sixty-seven missionary laborers. There are seventy-two churches, with a membership of 47,548; there are 317 out-stations, 201 native preachers, 211 Sunday-schools, and 533 other schools. Of gratifying features in this mission may be mentioned (1) the spiritual vitality apparent among the native Christians; (2) the large accessions during the last year, numbering 7,905; (3) signs of awakening among those who are yet heathen; (4) growth of a favorable disposition toward Christianity on the part of the higher classes of the people; (5) recent re-enforcements, strengthening the force, although not to the extent needed; (6) the favorable aspects of the educational work. Over against all these gratifying aspects there is the sad fact of the famine now prevailing, and which calls for the earnest sympathy of the Christian people of America.

—In New York City, recently, a mass meeting of Baptist young people celebrated the centenary of Baptist foreign mission work. Rev. George C. Lorimer, of Boston, made the address, in which he said that an attempt would be made this year to raise $1,000,000 for missions and to send out at least 100 new missionaries. The Baptist young people of this country are expected to raise at least $250,000 of the amount. It is believed that the churches will contribute $400,000, and that the balance will come from the women's societies and private subscriptions.

BRETHREN.

—The annual meeting began on the 7th inst., at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where a great tabernacle, 120 feet square and capable of seating 5,000 persons, has been erected. It is one mile from the railway station.

—The Conference of German Baptist Brethren began at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, June 3, closing to-day.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The Fox River, Ill., Congregational Club proposes a unique service for its meeting June 23. It will hold a mass meeting and picnic in a grove at St. Charles, Kane Co. Distinguished speakers from abroad will address the meeting. Music and social hours will fill up the day. The invitation will be extended to all the members of the churches of Aurora and Elgin Associations with their friends.

EPISCOPALIAN.

—The question of the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday came up in the Chicago Annual Diocesan Convention, last week, in the form of a preamble and resolution presented by Rev. Floyd Tompkins, setting forth that inasmuch as many thousands of laboring men would be compelled to work on the Lord's day, if all the machinery were run seven days of the week, it was the sense of the diocesan convention that the Fair ought, in great part at least, to be closed on Sunday. The Rev. F. W. Dunham, of the Church of the Redeemer, South Park, instantly moved that the resolution be laid on the table, and the convention so ordered. Bishop McLaren perceived the danger of misunderstandings touching the action of the convention, and said: "The vote must be contemplated not as if it would advertise the feeling of the convention as to the Sunday closing of the Fair, but as expressive of the conviction that such a matter is not for the action of this body."

—The Washington, D. C., Diocesan Convention recently showed that there are in the diocese 183 ministers and 21 awaiting orders. The bishop in his annual address stated that he had confirmed 1,906 persons, 1,228 of whom were females and 126 colored people. This number showed an increase of 350 over the past year, yet it was not equal to the year 1890, and several years previous. Reference was made to the building of a cathedral at the capital. Land and money to the amount of $2,500,000 have been given. The site obtained is away on the outskirts of the city.

—The Diocesan Episcopal Convention recently held in Philadelphia voted that no clergyman should be entitled to a seat who had taken any vow of ecclesiastical obedience to any brotherhood or order.

LUTHERAN.

—The Norwegian Danish Conference decided as soon as possible to establish a Theological Seminary in the northwest. Liberal offers will be made to locate the same in Seattle.

—Rev. E. Lee Fleck, of Sidney, Nebraska, was the recipient, April 25, of the 19th volume of Spurgeon's Sermons, from the Odd-fellows' Association. They had attended his church on the Sabbath evening preceding when he had a special service and sermon for their benefit, and although the Rev. Fleck is not a member of any secret order, they were so well pleased with his sermon from 1 Peter 2: 17 that they at once made him the above donation.

—At the Columbus conference of the Joint Synod of Ohio, recently, a paper was presented on the subject: "Reasons why Christian congregations cannot affiliate with members of secret orders," which caused considerable discussion. Agitation is the life of reform. Let the good work go on.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—An official report of the status of Methodism in Canada makes the following exhibit: "In 1883, the year of the union, the enrolled membership of all the uniting churches was 170,000. Growing steadily year by year, it is now in our eleven annual conferences 250,000, an advance of 10,000 per year, and holding about the same ratio to our entire population that all the Methodisms of this country, summed up, hold to the population of the United States. We had at the union 1,650 ministers, now 1,750, and might have had many more had we room and work for them. In 1883 our Sabbath-school teachers and scholars numbered 190,000; now about 270,000. The amount of missionary money then raised by all was about $190,000; now $250,000."

—The National Epworth League bureau has just been organized in Chicago. The officers are Rev. G. R. Vanhorne, D.D., president; Rev. J. T. Docking, vice-president; Rev. Wm. Forkel, secretary; Rev. C. H. Smith, treasurer; Mr. Page Wingrove, general manager. The Lyceum department provides churches and other Christian societies with lectures, concerts, and other suitable entertainments. It succeeds to the business of the Lyceum-league of Cleveland and the Epworth league lecture bureau. The employment department secures remunerative and morally safe employment for trustworthy people. The securing of advanced positions for Christian teachers is a specialty. The Guide and Information department furnishes guides, chaperons, and information in Chicago. Large preparation is now being made to provide furnished rooms in Christian homes for visitors to the Columbian exposition.

—John R. Buchtel, founder of Buchtel College, died in Akron, Ohio, May 23, from paralysis, with which he was first stricken five years ago. Mr. Buchtel was seventy-two years old. During his lifetime he made gifts to Buchtel College amounting to $500,000.

—Rev. G. A. Reeder of North Ohio conference has given $10,000 toward a building to be used as headquarters for denominational work in Rome, Italy. A lot 95 by 150 feet centrally located has been secured.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—Chicago Presbytery contains more people than half a dozen other Presbyteries that might be named. Besides Chicago, there are within the limits of Presbytery dozens of cities having a population of from 5,000 to 30,000. The Presbytery has not a single church in one of these cities. Outside of Chicago her congregations are in the country, or some small village (four in the country and two in villages). Compared with the population, these churches have been getting smaller and smaller every year for many years.

AT THE CAPITAL.

Political Excitements Largely Overshadowed.

A Most Interesting Interview with a Number of Prominent Officials—How the Strains of Public Life are Overcome.

The absorbing excitement of Congress and the interest caused by varying schemes and various measures have been overshadowed of late in Washington by the revelation of the alarming death rate among public men, and the additional fact that in nearly every case the cause of the death can be traced to one source. Congressman Springer's dangerous and long-continued illness, the sudden death of Senator Plumb, and Mr. Blaine's constant ill-health have mustered from the grave the memory of an army of public men who have died in the harness.

Senator Beck dropped insensible in the Potomac depot on the exact spot where President Garfield was shot.

Secretary Folger worked to the last, and died without warning.

Secretary Windom died while speaking at a banquet.

Secretary Chandler was found dead in his bed at the Grand Pacific Hotel.

Senator Tom Corwin expired at a reception while talking with Salmon P. Chase, Ben Wade, Senator Schenck, and John Sherman.

The Hon. Hannibal Hamlin died at the club while chatting with his friends.

Minister Pendleton passed away while seated in a railroad train.

Senator Charles Sumner, Massachusetts' pride, died suddenly, working faithfully to the hour of his death.

Senator Simon Cameron feels the mysterious creepings of paralysis, and falls in the arms of his friends.

Salmon P. Chase passed away peacefully while seated at his desk with his pen in his hand.

It has dawned upon the public men of the country, the heads of departments in Washington, and discerning people generally, that there must be some one great reason for all of those untimely deaths. It was with a view, if possible, of solving this question that I called upon a number of prominent men, the results of which are given herewith. It is well known that one of the nation's greatest men is Gen. B. F. Tracy, Secretary of the Navy, and that no man in Washington has worked harder, more persistently or more effectively. His timely and efficient work in building up our national defence when the question of war with Chili was being agitated, must necessarily have brought a great strain upon his system. He was found, however, at the head of the Navy Department, and in very good humor. Referring to the subject Gen. Tracy said:

"I am in good health and spirits at present. Several years ago, however, I was so fully impressed with the idea that I had uric acid in my blood that I took good care and good medicine to prevent its increase or continuance."

"May I ask, General, what course you adopted?"

"I had heard of many things, but I determined to try one especially. I found it all that I desired, and, although that was some time since, I am, as you see, well to-day, although I am still taking the same medicine, which is Warner's Safe Cure."

Col. Daniel Grosvenor, the Chief of the First Division of the Comptroller's Office of the United States Treasury, said:

"I have had an unusual opportunity to watch the condition of public men and the strains which public life brings. Many prominent men break down suddenly, and, while this may also be true of other walks in life, it seems especially true of Washington. My experience has shown that one remedy has proven more beneficial for the strains of life in the case of public men than any other known discovery. That remedy is Warner's Safe Cure. The most remarkable instance of its power is that of Mr. J. Henderson Wilkinson, the well-known pension attorney. His restoration to health through its use was simply marvelous. I myself believe in it implicitly."

Congressman J. C. Belden of New York, when approached upon the subject, said:

"Ex-Gov. Alvord of Syracuse, N. Y., and also ex-Speaker of the House, furnished the most wonderful instance of the fact that a public man could withstand the strains of public life and yet live to a green old age. Few men have ever been sicker than Senator Alvord was, but he is now hale and hearty. His recovery is due entirely to Warner's Safe Cure, which is certainly all the commendation of any discovery that could be required."

Mr. L. H. Egleston, Judiciary Division, Comptroller's Office, United States Treasury, said:

"Ten years ago I was ill—very ill with a disease pronounced by my attendant physicians to be incipient Bright's disease. The treatment failed to benefit me, and I grew steadily and alarmingly worse. Under the advice of friends I began to use Warner's Safe Cure, and have been in perfect health ever since. I am glad to state this, because it may save the life of others."

Senator B. K. Bruce cordially answered inquiries:

"My gratitude is due to Hon. H. H. Warner, manufacturer of the Warner Safe Cure, for the wonderful recovery which I have experienced through the use of his medicine. I am well to-day, and believe many public men might preserve their health and prolong their lives by the use of this great remedy."

The same sentiment can be found all over Washington, and there is scarcely a desk in the Treasury or other departments where a bottle of this remedy cannot be found. Its popularity here is due wholly to what it has accomplished.

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. Composed of "Temple of Honor Illustrated," "Adoptive Masonry Illustrated," "United Sons of Industry Illustrated," and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and other secret societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms, and the duty to disfellowship Odd fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias; and Grangers, is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10cts each.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SOURCES OF DISEASE.

A cellar should be kept free from decaying fruit and vegetables at all times, but if any have been allowed to remain, carry them out speedily and bury them where they may enrich the garden plot. Do not let them continue to breed decay and perhaps disease by dumping them in a heap upon the surface of the ground. Make the cellar as clean and tidy as you do the parlor, for its condition, if under the house as most cellars are, is more important from a sanitary standpoint. Whitewash the walls or wash them with a strong solution of copperas. If there be any mould on the walls, know that the ventilation or drainage or both are at fault, and as you value the life and health of your family, remedy the defects. Fumigation with sulphur is not usually necessary, but it is the most radical and certain form of disinfection for killing all manner of germs and vermin, particularly disease germs. Use flour of sulphur in the proportion of four pounds to every thousand cubic feet of air, and mix it with an equal quantity of pulverized charcoal; pour a few ounces of alcohol over it and ignite. The mixture should be placed in an iron kettle which is set on bricks inside a tub in which is standing a little water. At the outset, paste paper around the cracks of windows and doors. After starting the smudge, leave the room closed and undisturbed for twenty-four hours.

The wood-shed and wood-box are two more ordinary sources of disease-breeding decay and filth. Chips and bark gather moisture and the odors which they give off are as unsanitary as they are unsavory. Such accumulations should never be allowed, but if they have been, use the most vigorous measures of renovation—fire will be the best prescription for the old wood-box.

Drains and sinks should be carefully inspected and kept in a sanitary condition. The drain pipe should lead for rods away from the house and an open box conductor never used. Wood is poor material; tile answers quite well and so does iron; although a lead pipe is the best of all. But whatever its construction, it should be flushed as often as once a week in warm weather with some good disinfectant solution. Copperas is as good as anything for ordinary use and costs only 3 to 5 cents per pound. Dissolve in the proportion of a pound to a gallon of water, use very freely and as near the boiling point as possible. A hot fluid is more penetrating than a cold one and will also injure the dissolving of all greasy accumulations. Plug the outlet and pour into the sink enough of the hot solution to fill the pipe its entire length. Slop pails should be thoroughly scrubbed out with this same solution applied hot, and they need attention frequently. Abolish the garbage barrel, and if you keep no animals to which can be fed parings of potatoes and other vegetables, bury them in the garden, and if you have no garden, burn them daily or dispose of them promptly in some other radical and sanitary way.—Helen I. Manning, in Michigan Advocate.

HINTS FOR NURSES.

Sick people do not like to be stared at. They are morbidly sensitive. To look surprised at the change sickness has wrought is annoying, and, worse than that, it is disheartening, and makes invalids imagine their case to be worse than it is. Therefore, don't stare at sick persons. And don't stand at the back of the head to make him turn his eyes round to see you. Always sit by the bedside, for the patient feels more at rest than if you stand up tall before him. And don't whisper; don't talk in a low voice; don't follow the doctor or a caller out into the next room. The invalid will be absolutely certain that you are discussing him. Don't wear garments that rustle or are made of rough cloth to come in contact with hands made tender by sickness, and don't wear creaking boots or thick-soled boots.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Between Two Opinions: OR THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR. By Miss E. E. Flagg, author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc., etc. Everyone who loves to read a good story, chaste and elegant in expression, pure in thought, interesting in narrative, should read this book upon the power of secret societies in politics, and the remedy. 389 pages, cloth, postpaid, $1.00.

finds that the part occupied as lawn—about one-third of the whole—has a more uneven surface than he at first supposed when he made the purchase of the place, and he asks for a remedy without digging up the whole and seeding anew. There are two ways. One is to remove the turf in regular, even squares from all rounded projections to a perfect level and replace the turf. These pieces of turf should be carefully cut in squares with straight edges; and then being turned upside down, the under side is scraped with a hoe to a uniform thickness before replacing. The other mode, less perfect and requiring less labor, is to spread sand on finely pulverized soil in all the depressions, an inch or two in thickness, late in autumn. The grass will shoot up next spring through this spreading; and, when well established, the operation may be repeated till all are brought to a level.—Country Gentleman.

The Proper Way to Clean and Polish Silver.

Visitors to England are often struck with the dazzling whiteness and brilliant finish of the grand old dinner and banqueting services, many of them centuries old, but in appearance equal to new silver. The English silversmiths have the advantage of a special preparation which has been popular with them for the past seven years. It is not altogether unknown in our country, and considering the beautiful silverware that now adorns most of the refined homes of America, an article that will not scratch the exquisite workmanship of valuable silver, and prevents tarnishing, should be as widely used as it is in the Old World. We refer to GODDARD'S PLATE POWDER, for which a depot has just been opened in New York. If you would preserve your silver ornaments and plate-ware, you should use it regularly. With reasonable care a 25-cent packet will last for many months. If not obtainable at your grocer's, it will be mailed free for 25 cents.

FARM NOTES.

WHEAT FLIES.

The Joint Worm, Wheat Straw Worm and Wheat Stem Saw-fly all belong to the same order of insects as the ant, bee and wasp. The eggs are deposited in the growing stems, and the insect passes the fall and winter in the stubble.

Burning the stubble will probably destroy the majority of the insects in a field, while a rotation of crops will do much to prevent their becoming abundant.

The Grain Sphenophorus destroys wheat by burrowing in the basal joints of the straw. This is one of quite a number of species which do serious injury to corn, being known as corn Bill-bugs.

The Stalk borer is a near relative of the cut-worm and army worm, but departs from the habits of these last by burrowing in the stems of wheat and other grains. Little damage is done to wheat, its chief injury being among corn and vegetables.

The Wheat Stem Maggot is the young of a small fly which deposits its eggs on the leaves of growing wheat and grass in spring, summer and fall. The maggots burrow in and destroy the tender, growing stems, and are particularly noticeable in wheat fields just before harvest, when they work just above the upper joint, causing the heads of the grain to wither and turn white. At other times they cause the center of the plant to turn yellow and die. Sowing plats of wheat in mid-summer, and plowing these under in September, will destroy many of the larvae, as will also the destruction of volunteer wheat. Some varieties of wheat are attacked more severely than others.

The Companion Wheat-fly and the American Frit-fly are small dark colored flies resembling minute house flies. The habits of their larvae are much the same as those of the wheat stem maggot, and similar remedies and preventives will be found equally effective.—Ohio Experiment Station.

ROAD MAKING.

A correspondent of the Western Farmer tells how they make town roads in Wisconsin: The township owns a road-grader, a six-horse machine that makes a turnpike as smooth as a boulevard. This machine is manned by an expert, who makes a circuit of the township in June with team, grader, and plough. When the outfit gets to our district we hitch on our teams and grade up where most needed as much turnpike as we can gravel the same season, making it rather high and narrow at first, in order that the rain and gravel of a year or two may not flatten it out and make it as much of a mudhole as at first. We find that the best road is made by grading in spring and graveling in the fall. In this way the turnpike gets packed solid during the summer months, so that the gravel put on in the fall does not sink into the dirt, but is packed so solidly on top by winter rains and snows and the constant travel that the spring break-up cannot disturb it.

NEATNESS ON THE FARM.

Order in the house and order outside on the farm sometimes go hand-in-hand, but often they do not. If the farmer likes and demands an orderly house, why should not the farmer's wife demand an orderly-kept farm when she goes out to get air after her work is done? Now, the farmer may take his ease and read his paper in an untidy room, but not so comfortably as in one where neatness governs, because the eye is offended and worries him.

The farmer's wife is disturbed when she walks abroad on the farm for recreation by the general litter that meets and offends her eye. Many things, from a wheel-jack to a mowing-machine, are seen where last used; wagons, parts of wagons, tools and rubbish block the way at every turn. This is not a fair return of favor. Neatness in the house should be supplemented by corresponding neatness on the farm.—Anonymous.

BRIEFS.

Ducks can stand out in a hard rain, but dampness induces cramps.

As the weather becomes warmer care must be taken in shipping fowls not to crowd.

It is a good plan to put the hen with a brood of chickens in the garden, confining the hen in a coop; the chickens will destroy many insects.

"Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething" softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain and cures wind colic 25c. a bottle.

An attractive face—the one that belongs to a thoroughly healthy woman. That's what you'll have, that's what you'll be—if you'll take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. The painful disorders and diseases that afflict woman-kind make themselves seen as well as felt. Dull eyes, a blotched or sallow face, and a wasted form follow them.

Cure all these ailments and weaknesses, regulate and promote the proper functions, quiet your nerves, build up your health and strength—with the "Favorite Prescription." It does all these things, and more. The system is invigorated, the blood enriched, digestion improved, melancholy and nervousness dispelled.

For ulcerations, displacements, bearing-down sensations, periodical pains, everything that's known as a "female complaint," it's an unfailing remedy—the only one, among all medicines for women, that's guaranteed. If it fails to benefit or cure, in any case, you have your money back.

When the Pie was opened

BIRDS' CUSTARD

The Birds began to sing The praises of Bird's Custard Powder.

An English Table Luxury,
Providing Dainties in Endless Variety
The Choicest Dishes
and the Richest Custard
Entirely Without Eggs.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER is now introduced into America, and will very shortly be on sale at all the principal retail stores. Meanwhile every American lady is invited to send to ALFRED BIRD & SONS, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, for the Dollar Sample Box of Bird's exquisite English Home Specialties and to entertain her family and friends with a few choice English dishes by way of a change.

THE DOLLAR SAMPLE BOX contains four of the articles for which Bird's name has been a household word throughout Great Britain and her Colonies for more than half a century.

CONTENTS OF THE BOX.
FIRST, a packet of BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER, sufficient to make four pints of the richest custard without eggs, which may be served either from a dish or in the ordinary custard glasses, and is delicious with all canned, bottled, or fresh fruits. Bird's Custard possesses the richness and nutriment of cream without risk to the most sensitive digestion.

A remittance of one dollar to Messrs. BIRD & SON'S New York Offices, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, will bring the sample box EXPRESSED Free of Charge. If any dissatisfaction, the money will be willingly refunded, providing the goods are sent back intact.

ASK! ASK! ASK! ASK! Of all Stores! Everywhere! Every Day!
For BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER.

SECOND, a packet of BIRD'S BLANC-MANGE POWDER, enough to make three large Blanc-manges a pint each. The Blanc-manges are most agreeably flavoured and are highly nutritious, and can be produced in a variety of tints, forming a charming dessert dish, and contributing to the decoration of the table.

THIRD, a tin of BIRD'S CONCENTRATED EGG POWDER, a complete substitute for eggs in puddings, cakes, buns, griddle cakes, and all similar kinds of English and American confectionery, to which it imparts the lightness, richness, appearance and flavour of new-laid eggs. This tin is equal to 30 new-laid eggs.

FOURTH, a canister of BIRD'S GIANT BAKING POWDER, claimed to be the strongest and best article of the kind in the whole world. It will go twice as far as ordinary baking powder, and is guaranteed free from alum, ammonia, or any impurity whatsoever, all the ingredients being of the highest quality. N.B.—Messrs. BIRD were the original inventors of Baking Powder in 1842, and the secret of their process has never yet been discovered.

For a fifth article the box contains a copy of "Sweet Dishes," a booklet full of practical hints and numerous original recipes of tasty dishes for the dinner and supper table. The recipes are all new to American cookery, and are suited to American measures, methods and cooking utensils. The whole of the above are enclosed in a tastefully finished artistic Cartoon Box, an excellent specimen of English fancy box ware. When the samples are taken out, it will make a very pretty handkerchief, glove, or cotton box.

This Dollar Sample Box is intended solely to introduce Bird's English Specialties into American Homes, and cannot be purchased retail, and Messrs. BIRD will not be able to supply more than one sample box to each household. Remember the object in view is to distribute samples of the Special Domestic Luxuries for which Bird's name stands first and foremost as a guarantee for Purity and High Quality.

READERS of the Cynosure will please notice on the 9th page the prospectus of a new book which will be well deserving their patronage.

A sensational case was before the courts in Knoxville, Iowa, the other day, sadly confirming the evidence of a seceded Mason, which we reprint on the third page of this number from the Lutheran Standard. A Miss Edwards sued her cousin for breach of promise. The case went to the jury on the 1st inst. after a week's exciting trial. It is significant that the general press reports of the affair stop here, and leave us in doubt as to the result. But for this there is a sufficient explanation in the statement that the leaders in Masonic circles were constant in their attendance and active in their sympathies for one of the parties.

We presume that Judith Ellen Foster is still leader of the "non-partisan" party of temperance women. The Chicago Post says of her appearance at Minneapolis, "she broke upon the platform and obtained permission to make a speech just as Chairman McKinley was about to call for nominations for President. Mrs. Foster took characteristic advantage of the privilege for twenty minutes or until the convention was very tired." As chairwoman of the Woman's Republican Association of the United States, recognition was due Mrs. Foster, and she was much more in her proper sphere than in the National W. C. T. U., fighting in word for a principle which her whole course of action violated and denied.

A leading Catholic journal suggests that a new impetus be given to the Jesuit secret order. Jesuit colleges, it says, "dot the land from New England to the Pacific Coast." The plan is that the graduates of these institutions form a national association, and by means of their peculiar and demoralizing methods gain such a power that the simple announcement of the fact, "I am a graduate of the Jesuits," would be like the boast of that "elder day," when to say "I am a Roman" would be to claim more than kingship among men. But rather, as the Masonic badge advertises the shameful and humiliating initiation to which the wearer has subjected himself, and the blasphemous oaths he has taken, and the power he has given other men over him, so let the tokens of Jesuitry be always recognized as a "mark of the beast"; like danger signs in a highway. He who displays them advertises himself as among the enemies of civil liberty and social peace.

Mr. Gladstone made a great speech in London the other day, in which, among other matters of interest to Englishmen chiefly, he spoke of the labor question in a liberal and statesmanlike way. Of the demand for a uniform working-day of eight hours, he said it was a large scheme to propose, but all reforms had extravagant things charged to them in their early stages. He has appointed a meeting with the London Trades Council to discuss the question in its practical bearings. To secure such a champion for shorter hours is better than a thousand strikes.

"Grand Lodge Masonry," as described in the Monmouth address of Pres. J. Blanchard in 1873, has a very significant illustration in Iowa. The Grand Lodge of that State met at Dubuque last week. Last year a charge was made that Col. John Scott, master of the lodge in Nevada, Iowa, belonged to the "Cerneau" rite. He rose to explain that he did not, but "Grand Master" Phelps refused to let him speak. Scott then exercised his privilege as an American citizen and attacked the petty despotism of the Grand Master through the press. The latter fought back with Masonic weapons and expelled Scott, who came to the Dubuque meeting determined to have his rights. He made a stout fight, but found he did not know all about Masonry. The lodge, numbering 1,100 votes, gave a majority of only 16 against the Cerneau rite. There is a fighting chance for the Nevada master yet.

"College fraternities are to make an exhibit at the Fair," says one of the Chicago papers. What has a secret society to exhibit in public, we would like to know? In the office of the humane society in the Auditorium building are exhibited the gags, punches, clubs, prods, and other instruments of cruelty taken from inhuman men. This gives us a hint. Let the college secret societies exhibit young Garrison's scarred arm. Let them show the wagon tongue which impaled young Rustin. Let the blindfold that shut the eyes of young Leggett at Cornell when he went down to his death be there. Let all the gruesome machinery: the blankets, the ropes, the coffins, the dram bars, the bestial banquets,—let them all be exhibited to dotting parents. But worse than all, the moral damage,—this can be seen daily in the lives of the devotees of these societies. Let us not have half-truths at the Fair.

A few years since William J. Onahan, a prominent local politician and office holder of this city, was filled with the notion that Roman colonization in our broad western prairies would be a mighty impulse for the papal subjugation of America. Great meetings were held to promote the scheme. Archbishop Ireland of Minnesota, Bishop Spalding of this State, and other eminent Romanists supported it heartily. Lands were purchased in the trans-Missouri region, and colonies planted, each led by a priest. The plan had a fair look on paper, but the experiment is a failure confessed. It has been dropped, and the reasons are asked for. Mr. Onahan may have plenty of them, but he will not mention one that all Roman Catholics ought to consider. No colony can succeed where the feeling of true brotherhood is not one of the strongest influences, stronger than self-interest, at least. The colonies of Mennonites, of "Dunkards," Friends, etc., thrive and are happy. The grace of God has given them a stronger tie than greed, or obligation to a priest, or to a false brotherhood like the lodge. The new life men have in Jesus Christ only makes it possible for them to live together happily and with true brotherliness.

The passage of the anti option bill in the House last week is a significant and warning step. Board of Trade speculators understand that the time draws on when gambling in food products must cease. The bill first defines "options" and "futures"; then names the articles which are protected, as, "cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, grass-seed, flax-seed, pork, and other edible products of swine," and the fourth clause imposes a license of $1,000 on dealers in options and futures, and a tax of 5 cents on each pound of cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon, and other edible products of swine, and 20 cents a bushel on each bushel of the other articles which the subject of gambling contracts. The bill is morally altogether inadequate. Grain gambling should be suppressed as well as any other, or as the saloon. But no doubt the heavy taxes imposed will nearly, if not altogether break down the business.

Rev. John Rankin, of Ripley, Ohio, was one of our American heroes. He was a warm and cherished friend of President J. Blanchard, and it was the desire of the latter to write for the Cynosure some sketch of his life and work. Rankin died in 1886 at the age of 87. His fellow citizens have placed a monument on his grave, which was lately dedicated. The Ripley Bee thus describes the event: "Last Thursday was the occasion of one of the most memorable and interesting celebrations ever witnessed in Ripley, being the ceremonies attendant upon the unveiling and dedication of a bronze bust of the Rev. John Rankin, the famous pioneer Abolitionist. This bust was modeled by Mrs. Ellen Copp, of the Chicago Art School, daughter of Dr. Andrew Rankin, and granddaughter of Rev. John Rankin, and a lady who has achieved a high reputation for her art work. The event was also made the occasion of a reunion of the Rankin family, and was attended by many relatives and friends from far and near. The affair was happily favored by beautiful weather, and was carried out most successfully in all its details." The inscription on the monument is severely simple and reads:

"JOHN RANKIN,
1799—1886.
JEAN LOWRY, HIS WIFE,
1795—1878.
Freedom's Heroes."

Dr. Parkhurst of New York, the brave crusader against the police protection of crime and vice in that city, has gone to Switzerland for a brief rest. The cleansing of such an Augean stable was a task for Herculean strength. He will recuperate and study London and Paris as he returns. His effort in New York has broadly opened the question of the relation of the Christian churches and their pastors to entrenched evils in society. There are always a few who think they can control a vicious tendency by embracing it; as the preacher Gainsford would regulate the saloon by taking it into the church, and many more vainly hope to utilize the lodge by swearing its vile oaths. But more are like Gallio of Corinth, who could see men beaten before his judgment seat with indifference. To them the churches have nothing in common with politics or the administration of justice. But a continually increasing majority are accepting the fact that the church is an army with banners that are to be displayed because of the truth; that their place is in line of battle, against every immorality. If there be any foes to bribery, lying, fraud, and all the rottenness that corrupts political life, they should be found among Christian men.

LODGERY AND PROHIBITION.

THE QUESTION PRECIPITATED.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

The campaign is rapidly culminating. State after State is flashing its ticket before the people. The lines are being drawn, the old party lashes are beginning to crack, and the voters are hopping back into the traces. Independents, mugwumps, and leaders long schooled in chicanery, are fixing their several little deals.

The Prohibition party is having a little domestic tussle. W. J. Demorest, said to be a high Freemason, is leading the lodge papers and elements; while the Voice and other non-lodge agencies, after a "wild-goose chase" with the so-called People's party, and being thoroughly snubbed by it, are pushing forward ex-Gov. John P. St. John, a virtually seceded Mason, for nomination.

The time has at last arrived to precipitate the lodge fight with all sincere temperance people. We do not mean that any American should go into their ranks, but we should persistently and unitedly press the lodge issue upon their notice. The writer is already pushing ahead, urging this lodge question upon the leading W. C. T. U. workers, and placing his "American Handbook," prepared especially for campaign work, in the hands of non-lodge Prohibitionists. Let every man and woman help in campaign agitation. The cheapest and best possible literature, directing attention to the paramount importance of this all-pervading, overshadowing lodge evil, should be freely distributed at all Prohibition conventions, assemblies, and temperance gatherings. The man who imagines that it is detrimental to anti-secret papers and speakers to participate in political agitation, has certainly read reform history to little purpose.

Let every anti-secretist go to work at home. Donate the price of a pig, a calf, or a day's labor, if no more, to enlightening the editors, pastors and leading thinkers in your own county. As purpose and consecration increases, so will endeavor and influence. Faith is the power that carries forward all great reforms. "Faith without works is dead." Prayer and ringing resolution is grand. The old guard are at their posts. Now let the millions who preach and pray against the Christless, monarchy-aping lodge, move to their support and the work will be done. Up and at it!

THE FUTURE MEN OF INDIA.

BY A BOMBAY MISSIONARY.

An Iowa lad goes to India as a missionary, and after many years brings his two sons to Iowa, goes back to India,—and here is what he says:

I wonder if I can fire a shot at my two boys in Miles, Iowa, which will also reach a thousand other boys in various parts of America. Let me try it.

What is the most interesting subject that I can write about? What do boys think most of? Well, I suppose they think most about boys. Now suppose I were to bring over from India a great collection of curiosities, elephants, lions, tigers, palm trees, Hindu temples, idols, carts, ploughs, tools, dress, etc., and put them out in a big tent for a show; and suppose I had a Hindu boy and a girl also in the show. Now, if I were to drive the caravan into some town in Iowa, pitch my tent on the square and stick up my posters announcing the show and all the curiosities, what would the boys and girls be most anxious to see? Let us watch them as they appear in the tent. They would glance quickly around all the new, strange things, and want to see everything all at once. But you know very well what they would look at with the most wide-awake interest of all, and that would be the Hindu boy and girl. How they would want to hear them talk; and if the Hindu boy had a book, oh, I am sure a score of you would shout out, "I say, my lad, please read us a page of it." Then if the Hindu children were to commence singing a Chajin, I am sure that lion, tiger and company would get but little attention for a while. So I think the most interesting subject that I can write about will be the native boys of India.

My sons, Victor and Vivian, know a great deal about India boys, for they were born and bred up here and learned to talk the Hindustani language before the English language. But I shall tell some things which will even be new to them.

First of all, let me say that the boys of India are not a different race of people from boys in America. You have all seen Negroes, and some of you have seen the Chinese and the American Indians. Those are different races from the English people, but in India the people are of the same race that we are. We are called the Caucasian, or Indo-Germanic race; also the Aryan race. Thousands of years ago the ancestors of this race lived in Central Asia, and from there they spread down to India and westward to Europe. A great variety of people have sprung from this source. There is much difference among some nations in India, just as you see difference between the nations of Europe—Russians, Italians, Spanish, Irish, etc., being different nations, but all of the same race.

In the first place I want to say that the people of India are just as sharp and quickwitted as the people of America. Do you know where you got the figures which you write all your accounts with? They are from the old Hindu figures, when our ancestors in England were wild barbarians and had no books or schools. The people of India had schools, arithmetic, astronomy, philosophy, music and many wonderful arts. Some of their grand ancient buildings are still standing, to show what wise people they were then; and they are just as wise still, only more so, as they have added much modern learning.

Do you know that our ancestors in old Britain were heathen and worshiped idols? Yes, and they offered human sacrifices. True, they burnt a great many men, women and children at times as offerings to their gods. Do you want to know what their gods were. Let me tell you. On the first day of the week they worshiped the sun. So they called that day Sunday. The next day they worshiped the next greatest object that they could see, the moon, and they called that the moon-day. The third day they worshiped Tecus or Mars, the gods of war. They called that day Tuesday. Next day they worshiped Woden or Odin, and that was called Wodens-day. Next day they worshiped Thor, or Thunnen, the god of thunder. They represented him as a great giant, with iron gloves, throwing a huge hammer through the sky to make the thunder. That was called Thor's-day. The sixth day they worshiped Frea, who, they said, was the wife of Thor, and hence Frea-day. The last day they worshiped Saturn, and called it Saturn-day. Do you know what took our English ancestors out of heathenism into this beautiful Christianity? It was the Bible, the true, blessed Word of God. How strange that there are so many people in England and America who do not love the Bible! How does it come that the English and American nations have got so much ahead of the people of Asia? Because the Asiatics were centuries ahead of us in education, arts, etc. The reason is that our British forefathers took God's wonderful Word, and multitudes of them became true Christians, whereas the people of Asia followed the false systems of religion which have held them back. Now, in God's providence we are bringing the Bible back to Asia again, and telling our cousins, the Asiatics, about this blessed religion which has done our nations and our heart so much good.

The boys in India are naturally brought up to follow the religion of their parents. So the Hindu boys learn to worship idols and to do all sorts of strange things, as their parents do. Only last night a Hindu lad said to me, "How can I leave them and take Christ? Should I not do what my parents tell me to do?" I answered: "If your father should tell you to drink liquor, that would be wrong, and you ought to disobey him. If your father tells you to worship a stone, that is wrong, and you are bound to disobey him, because God's command is above that of your father's; but in all proper things you should obey him." He was a rather sharp youth, and he answered me thus: "The Hindus do not worship the images; they only worship God under the appearance of images." I said, "You know that the great mass of the people worship the image itself. Now we can easily test it this way. Suppose I go where your people are bowing down to a painted stone, and I pick up that stone of image and throw in the mud, would not the people want to beat me?"

And if I were to say to them, you say you do not worship the image, but only God, who is beyond the image; now I do not throw God in the mud, but only the stone, so that I have not done anything wrong to you, would the Hindus accept that? No, they would still be angry with me and still worship the stone; all goes for nothing."

You see, my boy, the Hindus have just the same argument about the worship of images that the Roman Catholics have. What multitudes of boys and girls all over India! Suppose all the people in the United States were under eighteen years of age, what a nation of boys and girls it would be? That is about the number of boys and girls we have in India; and how sad it is to think that the far greater part of them are being brought up to worship idols or to follow Muhumud or some other false faith. Aside from this sad fact, the children of India are quite like the children of America. They play, laugh, cry, talk, sing and shout in their way, and are just as child-like as any other human beings. Inwardly they are just the same as you are in America. The very same love to parents and to each other; the same good and bad tempers; the same anger, pride and selfishness that other children have all over the world. The need of their young hearts are just the same. They want love. They love to be loved by their parents and friends. They need to know about the love of God. A little Muhumedan girl told a lady missionary that she liked Jesus better than Muhumed. "Why so?" asked the lady. "Because," said the girl, "Jesus loved little children and Muhumed never did." She had heard how Jesus took little children up in his arms and blessed them.

You remember, Victor and Vivian, how we had a foundlings' home when your dear mamma was with us. You can never forget some of our dear little foundling children. You were so young then that you could not understand what a blessed thing it was to rescue those little children from the suffering and shame which was before them. There is a great mission work to do among the children of India. You know how Bro. C. B. Ward took a great many girls and boys in the time of the famine, about thirteen years ago. He brought them up as Christians, and now they are a happy and useful community of earnest native Christians. They are spreading the Gospel around them in the Telugu country. Miss Austey did the same in South India, and hundreds were saved.

When I was a boy I used to read about the people of India, and my heart was drawn this way. I used to pray much about it, and finally God let me to work in this great and needy land. I trust that your hearts may be drawn in the same way; yes, and the hearts of thousands of boys and girls in America. There are different ways of working for the Lord in India. Some may be regular missionaries; others teachers, publishers, etc. We need a great many who will be Christians, business men and missionaries at the same time, persons who will earn their living in some employment and spend all possible spare time in working to win souls to Christ.

I want you all, my two sons and the thousand of boys and girls who read this letter, to begin to work for God where you now are, especially among your young schoolmates and friends. Don't forget to work right in your family circle, also. Pray much about it. Pray for your brothers, sisters, and yourself and friends. Take some special cases before the Lord in prayer, and then be sure that you do something to carry out your part. What a great mistake it is to say that you must wait until you are old enough to make big speeches before you can work for God. The Lord especially says that he will perfect his praise out of the mouth of little children. He chose the weak things to confound the mighty. Very many instances have occurred in which older persons have been won for the Lord by the labors of girls and boys. A little child shall lead them. I am sure it makes you happy to think that thousands of the girls and boys of India are learning about Jesus, and many of them love the Lord. But you must remember well that there are many, many millions here who do not know and love our Saviour. I hope you may pray much to God for them, and ask him if he does not want you to come this way and work for him when you are older. A little girl in Iowa who is only thirteen years old, wrote to me that she wanted to be a foreign missionary, and she asked how a person could get to India. She also asked me to answer soon. I think she felt in her happy, saved soul that she would like to get out to India as quickly as possible, to teach the dear little native girls about the Saviour whose love she enjoyed in her heart. Of course you must keep close to Jesus yourself. Don't be discouraged when Satan tempts you. When you hurt yourself, what do you do? Do you not go at once to your parents or guardians for help? Just so when your heart is hurt by any temptation, or Satan stumbles you by any wrong doing, run to Jesus at once. He loves to save you, and wants to help and hold you up in his hands so that you may run and not be weary, and walk and not faint.

This letter I send to my sons, and they will send it to be printed. I shall be glad to have letters from any boys and girls who read it. If you wish to write direct to me, address your letters as below. Postage is 5 cents per half ounce. If you would like to have a large letter from me every month in the shape of a magazine, you may take the India Watchman, which I print here in Bombay. It costs 60 cents per year, postage and all. It will give you monthly eighteen pages of good reading matter. My son, Victor J. Gladwin, Miles, Iowa, is the agent for this magazine.

Any one who feels called of God to go to tell the heathen the good tidings of great joy which God wants proclaimed to all people, may write to me freely and fully about it. I will advise as best I can.

Take courage, everybody; victory is nigh.

"The morning light is breaking,
The darkness disappears."

Yours in the grace of our world-winning Jesus,
WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

LAW DEFIED.

A MASONIC REMINISCENCE.

Our story takes us back to the year 1870, and is located in one of the mountainous regions of a neighboring State. I was living then in the town of S., which was the capital of the county in which it is situated. Some time previous to the events I am about to relate, I had become a member of the order of Freemasons. At this time I held official position in the lodge to which I belonged. A railroad was in process of construction through the county, and hundreds of men were employed upon it as laborers.

Among the many contractors was a Mr. M. from Ohio. His gang of laborers, notably Irish, had among them some men of dissipated habits. It was said also that M. himself, while having a family in Ohio, was here living with a mistress in gross and unconcealed adultery.

It happened that one day two of his laboring hands, while in a state of intoxication, took it into their heads that they would have some sport. They went to Mr. M.'s mistress, M. himself being absent, to ask the loan of two horses, intending to visit a neighboring town. The request was refused, and some sharp words passed between the parties. When the horses were denied them, the men went and took them without permission, mounted them and rode off.

When M. was told of the occurrence, which was soon after, he at once started in pursuit of the men, and soon came close up to them. When they noticed his approach, they dismounted and fled, taking refuge in a farm-house near by the road. Coming up to the house M. noticed one of the men at the window, drew his revolver and shot and killed him. The offence committed by the two men was a provoking one, but not such as deserved death. The killing was an unjustifiable act of homicide, and was so viewed by all just and reasonable men, at the time.

The case came up for trial in court in the town of S. With many others I attended and watched the proceedings. The trial attracted a great deal of attention, and was largely attended by people from the town and country. As usual, the sentiment as to the degree of the guilt of the accused was somewhat divided. There were those who pronounced the act one of willful and premeditated murder, while others judged of it with more leniency. There yet was a third party, who demanded the man's acquittal, and these were the Freemasons. M. himself belonged to the Masonic order. He was a brother of theirs, and, guilty or not guilty, they were bound to have him acquitted. Being myself a member of the Masonic lodge in S., I had every facility of knowing all the tricks and intrigues that were resorted to by the Masons to clear this murderer.

The sheriff of the county was a Mason; M.'s attorney was a Mason, and the foreman of the jury was a Mason. All these were instructed to know and do their duty, and they did it. While the trial was in progress, the Masons were busy working up sentiment in favor of the accused. They packed the court-room to impress the jury; they visited hotels and stores, and stood on street-corners, to talk up the case of their client. When the final pleading was done they were again at hand, and, with a view to influencing the jury, showed their approval or disapproval of all that was said or done.

Meanwhile, few if any of the uninitiated knew or suspected anything of these secret proceedings. All was done in such a manner that no one but Masons knew that anything was going wrong. The end aimed at was accomplished. The murderer was acquitted of the charge against him, and then was congratulated and applauded, as if he were a martyr and a hero. When all was over, the Masons made no concealment of their share in this transaction. They even made it a subject of boast and glorification.

The affair shocked my moral sensibilities. I asked myself, Is it possible that you are identified with an order that aids and abets the crime of homicide, by shielding and protecting the murderer? The occurrence opened my eyes to the enormity of the iniquity of this secret oathbound society. But I somewhat condoned it by thinking it was an isolated case, the unauthorized work of a few conscienceless men. I have, however, learned better since then. To dispose of a case in the manner above related, is a universal practice among Masons, and not in conflict with Masonic law. It is the next thing to impossible to convict a secretist of crime, no matter how guilty he may be. Men wonder why justice so often miscarries in our civil courts. Here is the secret. The work is done by the dark and unseen intrigues of oathbound fraternities.—H., in Lutheran Standard.

LAW AND PUBLIC MORALS.

(Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe in the Chicago News.)

There was published, about thirty years since, in New York, a little volume entitled "Maxims of Washington." Never was such a book so much needed as now, when public men, and even Senators in Congress, deride the great principles of religion and morality, upon which the fathers of the Republic based its Constitution and established its legislation. "Morality," says the father of his country, "is the necessary spring of popular government"; and he adds, emphatically, "let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion." He allows that men of education and of refined tastes may be found who profess a philosophical morality and consistently maintain it; but he very clearly points out the truth, illustrated by all history, that, as few men are philosophers and the masses are not influenced by refined tastes, the restraints and sanctions of pure religion are requisite to the individual, the family and the state.

Indeed, the entire book may be said to enforce this principle and to commend it to his countrymen as the only safeguard to that deference for law and that conscientious discharge of duty without which liberty begets license and free institutions become the prey of faction and civil broils. The condition of the South American states, which have so signally failed heretofore in their attempt to establish such a republic as our own, not to speak of the successive failures of Mexico, may illustrate these maxims of Washington; for none can doubt that the immorality and irreligion of their populations are the secret of their disorders. It may be justly urged that the Bible alone and a reverent acceptance of its moral code have as yet been found sufficient to build up free states. An eloquent Frenchman once said to an immense assembly of his countrymen in Paris, and in my own hearing: "Why do we in France, with all our splendid capabilities in other respects, make so many unsuccessful attempts to imitate the Americans, and to found lasting institutions of freedom, civil and religious? Why cannot we, like our great rivals across the channel, build up and maintain the liberties we have so long coveted? The Queen of England has said the secret of enlightened freedom in the old world and the new is that they are based upon the Scriptures, universally diffused and universally revered." The vast audience applauded, and seemed very deeply to feel this expression, while the orator added his fervent hope that he might live to see France, like England, "a land of the Bible."

THE BIBLE AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

A very grave matter indeed is the experiment which has recently become popular of excluding the book of books from our public schools, and one fears that the maxims of Washington are too thoroughly imbued with Scripture to be long exempted from a like indignity. But, till Americans are so degenerate as to scorn the counsels and to cast out the wisdom of their great founder, it is worth inquiring whether this little volume might not wisely be introduced into all our public schools, and, in short, commended to all instructors of youth throughout the land. But, far better, let the Bible be everywhere restored. Apart from its incomparable teachings of human brotherhood and of the love of one's neighbor, it is a book of which nobody can be ignorant, if only because it is the first classic of the English language. It came with our first colonists to the shores of Virginia and to the rock at Plymouth. It has been part of our history, and is associated with every memorial of the heroic lives and struggles of our ancestry. More than that, it is a living factor of our civilization, nor can our civilization long survive if it cease to hold its place. Kent and Webster and the rulings of innumerable cases in our courts have proved that the civilization which our laws have been created to maintain is Christian civilization—not, indeed, the Christianity of creed and theology, but the Christianity of our social life, our marriages, our family relations, our homes, our community of ideas in education, magistracy, the claims of humanity and the nature of justice.

THE OATH UPON THE BIBLE.

All people are welcomed to share with us in these our institutions, and they are institutions which protect their rights and their equality with others before the laws of the land. But aliens are welcomed to enjoy them, not to overthrow them. Hence the alien is made a sharer in our privileges before he becomes a citizen; but he can only become a citizen by swearing to support the Constitution—a Christian Constitution in so far as morals and civilization are concerned. In a celebrated trial on a charge of blasphemy, Chancellor Kent defined the relations of the Bible to our laws as part of the law of the land. It is the recognized instrument of the law in giving its character to an oath. Men may be permitted to swear or affirm in other forms, but a Bible oath has peculiar dignity. Nobody, the great chancellor said, could regard an oath upon a book which it was no offense to the law to insult opprobriously, that is, to blaspheme, and his ruling has been generally accepted throughout the land. Washington not only laid his hand reverently upon the book when he took his oath as first President of the United States, but he gently repressed the effort of Livingston to raise it to his lips, in order that he might bow his head in giving it the ceremonial kiss.

THE ESSENCE OF LAW-GIVING.

Now, the Constitution is law; but the "sessions laws" of legislature are only legislation, which often fails to become law. To become law, it must be sustained by the moral sense of the people. That moral sense cannot preserve itself; it must rest on the knowledge of God, and of our moral duties as prescribed by him, and for which he will hold his intelligent creatures accountable. The great Athenian orator told his countrymen that to enact laws was nothing; to make the people will to obey and enforce them was the essence of law-giving. If such is the power of the masses, surely in a democratic republic the masses must be identified with the spirit of law and order or all is lost. They must be penetrated by a sense of accountability to the Judge of all, and a fundamental reverence for him as the great Law-giver, or the prime condition of permanent prosperity does not exist.

STUDY OF LAW IN ITS ELEMENTS.

But let us have men qualified by reflection, at least, and by elementary education, to be our law-givers. It would be well if a new edition of Montesquieu's "Spirit of Laws" might be published for American youth and made a text-book for the upper classes of our colleges. In a country where every young man may live to be a judge, a senator or a member of the cabinet, if not a governor or president; where every citizen may be summoned to act as a juror; where even exempt citizens, physicians or clergymen may at any time be placed in positions where a knowledge of law and of laws will be of very great use to them, we must commend to all educated youth a study of law in its elements. And if Montesquieu could be prepared, annotated and enriched by some able jurist, in the spirit of the American Constitution and of American history, we think his very faults could be turned to good use by the overrulings of the editor; for then the young would be taught to read even authors of great repute with discrimination, and would be enabled to form opinions by the use of their own minds and morals, not yielding themselves blindly to any theorist or philosopher, however eminent in his day or popular in our own.

THE BEAUTY OF SECRET GANGS.

"In secret have I said nothing," was the testimony of the Son of God. Secrecy is the convenient refuge of sin and crime. Secret combinations are sometimes used to resist despotic power, but often the remedy proves worse than the disease.

Italy has been a land of spiritual despotism; and when men's souls are in bondage, their bodies cannot be free. Hence there has grown up a system of secretism which defies law and nullifies justice. These secret combinations are transported to other lands, and become potent for evil. Says Zion's Herald:

"The committee appointed by the mayor of New Orleans to investigate the Mafia and similar organizations have brought to light some startling facts. Before Chief of Police Hennessey was murdered, evidence was traced of ninety-four assassinations by Sicilians or Italians, which went unpunished because of the secrecy which accompanied each act. They found that the Mafia had gained a strong foothold, and terrorized the Italian population of the city, levying tribute at pleasure under the threat of death. They had even attempted to poison the Italian consul. Several remedies were proposed by the committee, the most radical of which was the absolute exclusion in future of Sicilians and Southern Italians—classifying them with Chinese as an undesirable and prohibited class."

What have honest men to do with secret oath-bound clans, which are so fruitless of good and have such possibilities of evil wrapped up within them? Far better is it to stand for God if you stand alone, than to join hands with the godless, and thus become partaker of other men's sins.—The Christian, Boston.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Modern advertising genius—Another Cornell tragedy at Yale—Romanism and Masonry—The coal combine.

There is surely one branch of modern art in which we leave the ancients hopelessly in the rear. Of course I allude to the art of advertising. We are continually having our pride taken down by some fresh discovery about the people on the Nile or the Euphrates—how four thousand years ago they had their libraries, and their scientific and literary fads, but in the matter above mentioned we need not eat humble pie to the old Egyptians or anybody else. They, evidently, did not know how to advertise; or else they thought, strangely enough, that the public had some rights that even the makers of hair nostrums and corn extractors were bound to respect. We have plenty of enterprising Americans who would think nothing of placarding the Great Pyramid from apex to base with a patent medicine sign, or utilizing for a similar purpose even the majestic features of the Sphinx herself. They are the same who deface every noble tree, and every picturesque rock (if so unfortunate as to be on the line of travel) with an invitation to use Hood's Sarsaparilla, Warner's Safe Cure, or Greene's Nervura. There is a vulgarity about their efforts to attract the public eye which makes vandalism itself seem respectable. But it was left for the architects of the new Public Library building to hit upon a specially unique and original method of carving their names in "enduring stone." On three big tablets on the extreme left of the facade front they chiseled the following list of "immortals": Moses, Cicero, Kalidasa, Isocrates, Milton, Mozart, Euclid, Æschylus, Dante, Wren, Herrick, Irving, Titian, Erasmus. To the unlightened reader this seems a queer jumble. Why put Moses and Cicero—surely as unlike as any two men of antiquity that could be named—in such close juxtaposition? Why make Herrick one of the immortals and leave out Shakespeare? Simply because the first letters taken in order spell out the names of the three architects, McKim, Mead, White. This ingenious plan for advertising themselves to posterity, free of cost, proved of no avail, for the library trustees at once held a meeting, and voted unanimously to have the acrostic obliterated.

Another Cornell tragedy is reported from Yale. The mixture of barbarity and idiocy in about equal parts which characterize the D. K. E. initiations received a showing up last winter which made an impression that the death of young Rustin must greatly deepen. Being blindfolded and told to run down the street, he came into violent collision with the pole of a carriage, and this young man, who is described as bright and popular, was cut off in the flower of his youth, dying in intense agony before his parents could reach him. Those members concerned in the affair are to be arrested, and further light will probably be thrown on the practices allowed in these secret college dens. The time has come when parents ought to be sufficiently awake to the moral and physical perils inherent in such societies to refuse to let their sons go to a college where such things are tolerated by the Faculty. The action of the Yale authorities on this subject will be looked for with interest. Will they make a clean sweep of the D. K. E. and all other secret societies, or will they say, like Pres. Eliot, that such matters are beyond their control? Many a long-suffering citizen of Cambridge and New Haven would be glad to know why the mere fact of being in college should be enough to emancipate boys and young men from all the laws of civilization, decency, and common sense.

Before this reaches the reader the agony at Minneapolis will be over. If one could only look behind the scenes and see all the wires, and how and by whom they are pulled! The presidential bee is a dangerous insect to have in one's bonnet. It stung poor Greeley to death, and it may Blaine, who surely would have been dead long ago if the malicious lying of his enemies could effect such a result. The Supreme Grand Master of the Orangemen promises 1,256,000 votes for a good American (this is a large figure even allowing for lodge exaggeration), but none for Blaine, because of his Roman Catholic affiliations. Gen. Sherman, without doubt lost the presidency for a similar cause. When a Roman Catholic, however, can boast, as was recently done, that the firm for which he worked—a concern that manufactures lodge regalia—has inside information from all the patriotic orders and knows exactly their strength and their weakness, it ought to show to every thinking man and woman the possibility that through these very orders themselves the wily Jesuit may control our elections in the interests of Rome when the unsuspecting members flatter themselves that they are working against her.

I notice that at Saginaw, Mich., the Roman Catholic mayor set his foot down, and very properly, against the Freemasons being called upon to lay the corner-stone of the new city hall. The latter revenged themselves, dog-in-the-manger fashion, by influencing the general public to keep away, so that the ceremonial turned out a failure and a farce. Since then Saginaw has experienced a political overturn similar to that which swept over Boston a few years ago, and now they intend to have the dedication ceremony the grandest pageant known in the city's history. But the Knight Templars, and all the grand Masonic bodies from near and far, have contrived that the dedication of their new Masonic temple in Saginaw shall fall on the same day. And of course they have been called on to lay the coping stone of the city hall as a salve to their wounded dignity in not being allowed to participate in the first performance of the corner-stone laying. Masonry has thus worked its cards so that it can now make a double display before the admiring eyes of Saginaw's citizens, who will never dream that those knightly swords and waving headgear are the insignia of an order manufactured in Paris by Jesuit priests as a means of bringing England under the rule of the Pope.

The choosing of Mrs. S. S. Fessenden as delegate to the Prohibition Convention was a compliment to both sides. May her presence be like that of Deborah in the army of Barak.

The recent coal combine by which the poor and middle classes of New England are robbed to put money into the pockets of the coal barons of Pennsylvania, is one of those outrageous acts of oppression to which the American people seem forced to submit unless science kindly comes to the rescue with some cheap substitute for coal. But while we grumble, and most righteously—it may be some comfort to know that our neighbors in Greece are debarred from using that prime necessity in hot weather and warm climates, an oil stove, because they too are victims of the monopolist, and have to pay fifty cents a gallon for kerosene. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 8, 1892.

Representative Bryan, of Nebraska, who, although just serving his first term in Congress and one of the youngest members, has already earned a reputation as one of the foremost young orators in public life, delivered a strong and interesting address to the Y. M. C. A., Sabbath afternoon, his text being, "For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." He said: "This subject is selected because I have been more and more impressed with the fact that in it we find the secret of human conduct. The man we see and know as we meet him on the street is the physical man. We recognize him by his size and features and give him a name. But what we see is only one of three persons who constitute the man. There is, besides the man we see, a mental or intellectual man whom we sometimes learn to know. . . . The intellectual man is capable of almost infinite development, and yet, if we had only the two, a human body with the well-developed mind, the man might be both a curse to himself and to society. If we would really know the man, we must learn the third and most important quality, the moral man. We speak of the heart as the seat of the moral forces. Whether or not this is so I do not know, but from this moral centre, wherever it is, come love and hate; in it are found the ambitions, the plans and the purposes of life. The heart determines what shall be done and the mind how it shall be done. . . . The heart, too, is the road by which we really reach and move a man. . . . A man does not go to his intellect to be guided in his actions. . . . How often do we hear given as an excuse or reason for action something entirely different from the real cause. A man, as a rule, does a thing first and afterwards frames the most plausible excuse to fit the action. The young man who departs from his early profession, and afterwards becomes known as a skeptic, can generally trace his departure from the faith to a time, when beset by temptation, he wished to do something contrary to his convictions of duty, and, having done it, manufactured some plausible excuse for his conduct. Each battle lost finds him weaker for resistance, and he at last excuses his course by manufactured doubts as to the authority of the Bible, which he had willingly accepted as a guide so long as he wished to follow it. The way to reach that young man is not by argument. He has gotten to that point where he can offer a plausible objection to any argument you may have to offer. He doubts the possibility of a miracle, and fails to see how loaves could be multiplied or the whale swallow Jonah. The way to reach him is to get back in his recollection to the time when to him the authority of the Scripture was law. Recall to him his mother's knee, and his childhood's song and prayer, and then you have touched a spot in his nature from whence all the mists of doubt and darkness may be dried up and the light of truth and right once more shine clear before his eyes."

The House of Representatives seemed to realize that it was drawing near the time that Congress usually adjourns this week, when, under a suspension of the rules, it passed the measure known as the anti-option bill, which, by a practically prohibitory tax imposed, will prevent speculative dealings in agricultural products for future delivery, if signed by President Harrison, as it passed the Senate some weeks ago. It also passed, under a suspension of the rules, bills admitting the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico to the Union as States, and the Legislative appropriation bill. A concurrent resolution was also introduced in the House providing for the final adjournment of Congress on July 4, but there is very little probability of Congress being able to get away quite as early as that.

The police have just completed a census of the square in which is located the notorious Willow Tree Alley, just now the scene of some very enthusiastic, and apparently successful, mission work. The population of the square is 1,359, of whom 1,094 are colored. The population of the alley proper is 721. Think of that, ye who live in comfortable homes! Seven hundred and twenty-one human beings crowded into an alley just the length of one ordinary city square, living in crime, squalor, filth and poverty. Is it not a noble work to teach these people how to live, and to die? Since the alley mission work began the eyes of many people have been opened. They have been taught that Washington, beautiful as it is, has plague spots never before dreamed of by those who imagined themselves thoroughly familiar with the city. *

THE COLLEGES.

The annual catalogue of Wheaton College is issued this year from the printing office connected with the institution, and is handsomely done. Of the seventeen members of the Faculty, God has removed the venerable head, the president emeritus, since the catalogue was issued. The number of students marks a prosperous year: 58 in the college classes, 93 in the preparatory school, and a total attendance of 286. In connection with the usual curriculum, a thorough Bible course is pursued by the college classes. The number of students of the Musical Conservatory and of the Art School indicate a deserved popularity. The new east wing is now completed and occupied, adding greatly to the facilities of the institution.

In the new catalogue of Heidelberg University and Theological Seminary, Tiffin, O., the report for the year is flattering and encouraging. The different departments during the year had a grand total in attendance of 356 students. This indicates encouraging progress. The university is in a condition to do better and more thorough work now than it has been at any period of its history. The alumni of Heidelberg number 371, of which number 130 are ministers, 59 lawyers, 47 professors and teachers, 14 physicians, 121 unclassified. The struggle of the demoralizing Greek-letter lodges to get a footing in this institution has been a help rather than an injury, as some enemies of righteousness desired. The institution is not only purer but stronger for the trial.

Northwestern University, the Methodist educational headquarters at Evanston near this city, issues a voluminous catalogue of 240 pages. This exhibits briefly the history of the institution and unfolds the relations and work of the seven schools of liberal arts, medicine, law, pharmacy, dentistry, woman's medical school, and theology. The first and last only are located at Evanston. The others are located in Chicago, and have a relation to the University rather nominal than otherwise. The total number of students in these different schools is 2,301. The administration of the new president, Dr. H. W. Rogers, seems to be popular and successful.

The Biblical department of Earlham College, Richmond, Ind, organized in 1884 and continued ever since under the care of Dr. Dougan Clark, is now to be enlarged and is called "The Biblical Institute of Earlham College." It will open under the new plans and course of study next autumn. This is the largest institution under the patronage of the Friends in this country.

COLLEGE ANNIVERSARIES.

WHEATON.—Commencement occurs this year during the last week in June. The Baccalaureate sermon of Sabbath morning, June 25, will be preached by Rev. Dr. Sturtevant, of Galesburg, Ill. An address before the missionary societies is to be given in the evening. The anniversary exercises of the Musical Conservatory and Art School take place Tuesday evening, June 27th. Wednesday afternoon is given to the graduating class of the Preparatory School; and the
