evening to the reunion and anniversary meeting of the Alumni Association. Rev. C. W. Hiatt, of Kalamazoo, Mich., class of 1880, Mrs. Emma Hawley Paine of '81, and Dr. A. W. Blunt, of Clinton, Iowa, '73, are on the program for addresses and a poem. Commencement day is Thursday, the 29th. Beside the exercises of the graduating class, Rev. J. W. Fifield, of this city, gives the Master's Oration, and Rev. Mr. Hunter, of Sycamore, Ill., is down for the annual address. The annual reunion of the friends of the college will be held in the evening. The annual meeting of the Trustees will be held on Tuesday.

MONMOUTH COLLEGE held its anniversary last week, commencement occurring Thursday. The financial report and general condition of the institution, as reported to the trustees on Wednesday, were highly encouraging. The resignations of Miss Patterson, lady principal, and J. C. Bryan, principal of the academical department, were accepted. The salaries of the professors were increased $100 each. The Alumni Association held a meeting on the same day and a banquet was given in the evening. Their literary exercises were held at the Second U. P. church, Miss Eva Clark, of Chicago, presenting the alumni poem.

NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY opened its commencement week on Thursday evening, June 9th, with the anniversary of the School of Oratory. The Conservatory of Music had the next evening, and on the 11th the contest for the Raymond prizes was held in University hall. Bishop Merrill gave the Baccalaureate address on Sunday evening. On Monday were the graduating exercises of the Preparatory School, and oratorical contest for the Kirk prize. The Alumni Association has its annual meeting and reunion Wednesday, and next day the commencement exercises proper take place in the Auditorium in this city.

KNOX COLLEGE held its forty-seventh annual commencement on the 9th. They consisted simply of the master's oration by Thaddeus Stephens, of Chicago, and an address by Dr. Bateman, giving statistics concerning former students. He gave the enrollment for the past year as 618, the largest in the history of the college. Degrees were conferred upon the forty-seven members of the graduating class. By a resolution the friends of the college thanked Dr. Pearsons for his gift of $50,000 and pledged themselves to fulfill the conditions.

GENEVA COLLEGE.—Dr. W. P. Johnston preached the Baccalaureate sermon Sabbath afternoon, May 22. Rev. R. J. George preached before the College Y. M. C. A., in the evening, on "Spiritual Power." Dr. J. B. Helwig, of Urbana, Ohio, lectured before the Literary Societies on Monday evening, May 23. The Board of Trustees requested Prof. Coleman to reconsider his resignation, but he adheres to his decision to accept the call of Allegheny Reformed Presbyterian congregation.

TARKIO COLLEGE, Tarkio, Mo., opened commencement week Friday, June 10, with the annual concert, by the Musical Department; Sabbath afternoon the Baccalaureate sermon was given by President Thompson, and the sermon before the Students' Christian Association by Rev. Jno. A. Henderson, Omaha. Literary societies have Monday and Tuesday evenings; the Alumni Wednesday, and on Thursday, at 9 A. M., commencement exercises occur.

WESTMINSTER COLLEGE commencement program opens Saturday evening, June 18, with an entertainment by the Chrestomath Literary Society; Sabbath sermon to Y. M. C. A., by Prof. W. W. White, Xenia, O.; Baccalaureate by the President, in the evening; Tuesday, alumni business meeting and reunion; Wednesday, 9 A. M., commencement exercises; 8 P. M., junior contest in oratory.

HOUGHTON SEMINARY, New York, celebrates its anniversary on the 16th inst., when the graduating exercises occur. Literary and musical societies occupy the two preceding evenings. Rev. S. Bedford, of Cattaraugus, N. Y., gives the annual address.

The commencement exercises of Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute at Tuskegee, Ala., occurred May 26. Frederick Douglass delivered the annual address, and the corner-stone of the new Phelps Hall was laid.

FROM THE FAR NORTHWEST.

LECTURES AND INCIDENTS IN OREGON.

SPOKANE, Washington, June 2, 1892.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Garfield is located in the Palouse Valley, about fifty miles south of this city. This valley is prairie; its soil is deep and black, much like that of Southern Nebraska, but more hilly.

Dr. A. Simpson resides at Garfield, and invited your correspondent to make a visit to that village. He has been a constant reader of the Cynosure for more than twenty years. He also secured the Baptist church of which he is a member, and made an appointment for an Anti-masonic lecture to be delivered last evening. At the appointed time the church was filled and the lecture delivered.

On the evening of May 31st a lecture was delivered in the German Evangelical church of this city, of which Rev. C. G. Kaatz is the pastor. The lecture was reported in the Spokane Review of June 1st.

In Tacoma the Free Methodist church, Rev. C. E. McReynolds, pastor, was opened last Sabbath morning for a sermon on secretism in relation to Christianity. In the class meeting that followed a sister testified that she had desired that her husband should join the Grand Army of the Republic, not being aware of the sinful character of that organization until she heard the sermon of that Sabbath morning. Now she abhors the thought of her husband joining the Grand Army of the Republic. Bro. McReynolds entertained me during my stay in Tacoma, at his own home, in the kindest and most hospitable manner.

Last Saturday evening a lecture was delivered in the Swedish Lutheran church of Tacoma, which was well attended. The pastor, Rev. G. A. Anderson, being absent, the lecturer was invited to preach there on the Sabbath evening following. The invitation was accepted and a sermon preached on "False Swearing," and the application made to Freemasonry, where it belongs; the design being to so preach the Gospel as to deliver Masons from their sworn obligations to hell and the devil through the pagan religious rites and ceremonies of Freemasonry, which obligations they took upon themselves of their "own free will and accord." The text was, Luke 4:18, 19.

Before leaving Oregon, I visited Canby, twenty-five miles south of Portland, and delivered two lectures in the Methodist church there. Rev. Samuel Matthew, of this church, received the truth most cordially, provided cheerful entertainment, and afforded material aid. He reminds me of the men of God in the days of the prophet Ezekiel, who sighed and cried for the abominations in the church and upon whom the man with the inkhorn set a mark that they might not be destroyed by the slaughter weapon. See Ezekiel 9:1-5.

In Portland I visited the president of the Portland University, Rev. Dr. Stratton. He is a Freemason, and says that he has not broken his Masonic obligation, but calls himself a non-affiliating Mason. He complies with the Masonic doctrine that the obligation is irrevocable and "never can be repudiated or laid aside," allowing the Masonic claim that the obligation is "a tie stronger than human hands can impose." He will, therefore, by no means listen to the proposition to speak to his students against Freemasonry.

But, after having preached in the Free Methodist church of Portland one week ago last Sabbath morning, May 22, Bro. Lindgren, who heard the discourse, declared that the truth about Masonry ought to be proclaimed on every street corner and to all the Methodist clergymen (the University is a Methodist school), and insisted that a lecture should be delivered in the hall at Portsmouth, a suburb of Portland, where the new university building is located, and where many of Dr. Stratton's students board. He set to work energetically and secured the hall for Monday evening, the 23d of May. The lecture was delivered. A very few, however, of the students attended, and it is supposed that the many were influenced to keep away; but those who did attend the lecture saw how their president was made a Mason, and that the tap root of modern Freemasonry is a most scandalous and impious lie.

At Portsmouth, brother and sister Ellis, well known to many of the Cynosure readers, entertained your agent at their tea-table, and attended the lecture. Rev. J. W. Skaus, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church at Portland, cheerfully opened his church for a lecture, and a fair-sized audience attended.

I accepted an invitation to a steambot excursion up the Columbia river to Bonneville with the commissioners to the Presbyterian General Assembly. The steamer proceeded down the Willamette river to the Columbia, and thence up that grand and majestic river, the banks of which are said to surpass in sublimity that of the famous Hudson. Upon the sides of the Columbia, attached to its banks, and also to boats, are fish wheels; these wheels are so contrived that the current of the river revolves them while they scoop the salmon out of the river and drop them into inclined sluices near the center of the wheel, whence they slide into receptacles where they are preserved alive until they are needed. It is, with good reason, feared that the fishing interests of this great river will be destroyed, if these fish wheels are not abolished. Masonic badges are worn by some of these commissioners, by both elders and preachers, indicating their real character in spite of their professions. Some of them are likewise filthy tobacco sots.

The lofty elevations of the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, with their vast and magnificent expanses of salt water, or inland seas as they are sometimes called, give them some advantages over Portland in regard to beauty of situation and healthfulness. I would like to remain in this very interesting country, Spokane and vicinity, in eastern Washington, two or three weeks longer; interesting because of its natural scenery, its future as a metropolis center of this part of the West, and its future prospects socially and spiritually. The withering blight of secretism fell upon it in its earliest history. But circumstances make it imperative that I should return to St. Paul immediately.

The Spokane Review, in its issue of June 1, with an anomalously markable for newspaperdom, and in disregard of the sworn principles of silence and secrecy essential to the very existence of that dark and damnable institution called by the name of Freemasonry, gave a fair report of my lecture delivered in this city on the evening of May 31. But on the morning of June 2 it spoiled its good behavior of the preceding day by an attempted defence of Freemasonry.

That the tap-root of the Masonic system is a barefaced, impious lie is not a debatable question, but a fact, as stated in the lecture. Likewise the symbolism of the lodge worship is the legitimate fruit of that lie, and a fact to be stated, and admitting of no debate. The tree and its fruit agree in the case of Freemasonry. And furthermore, in regard to its fruit, Judge D. H. Whitney, of Belvidere, Illinois, in the year of 1851, spoke truly when he was constrained by the action of his Grand Lodge of that State in that year to say of Freemasonry: "It is the darkest and most damnable institution that ever scourged the earth or cursed mankind."

After the lecture had been delivered on the 1st of June in the Baptist church at Garfield, the pastor of that church informed me that he had taken seven degrees of Masonry, and also the degrees of the Odd-fellows. And as a consequence he does not like to interfere with the watchwords of secretism, "Silence and secrecy." Therefore he subsidizes and nullifies the truth about Masonry. He says that a man can be a good Mason and a very good Christian at the same time; which is to say: "Good Lord and good devil." By interviewing the greater, and the lesser, leaders of the Baptist denomination we find that they are of the same opinion as this pastor. He has a reputation for harmonizing difficulties, and smoothing over troubles in Baptist churches; and their treatment of Freemasonry reveals their methods of harmony to be diabolical, and at variance with the Word of God, which demands, "First pure, then peaceable."

Why should not society treat Freemasons as it treats other perjured people? The Lord Jesus gives us one reason why people cannot see Freemasonry as it is. He says, "How can ye believe who receive honor one of another and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" Why should Freemasons be regarded as any better than they swear to be?

A lady in San Francisco, after hearing my lecture, informed me that sixteen years ago her stepfather joined the Masons, and that ever after that he was unhappy; and the terrible Masonic oath that he swore to in the lodge so wrought upon his mind that he lost his reason and went to the insane asylum. He knew not Him who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest," and that the laws of God require that Masonic oaths be broken by those who have taken them. Hence, he lost his reason and his soul. The safety of citizens, no less than simple justice, imperatively demand the enactment, and the execution, of laws to prohibit the administration of Masonic oaths.

I must not omit the mention of our friend and brother in Christ, Rev. M. H. Nichols, the former agent for the Pacific Coast. He resides in Tacoma, keenly appreciating the blasphemous and anti-Christian character of lodgery. He is enthusiastic with the hope of being able to do much in the future to destroy it, and that in ways other than by his tongue so eloquent in the defence of Christ and truth. W. FENTON.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LIGHT WANTED IN A DARK PLACE.

To all Readers of the Cynosure:

Please let me invite the readers of the Cynosure to co-operate in sending light into the dark places of the earth. Probably all have learned that Leavenworth, Ind., is the worst lodge-ruled place in America, and yet there are many good people there, who would be glad of the light, if they could get it.

I propose that we raise one hundred dollars at once and send to the Cynosure office, to be used in sending the Cynosure to such persons as will agree to read it. I send Bro. Phillips a list of the names of persons living there. I send one hundred copies of Dr. Carradine's little books, each prepaid, to Leavenworth. Now, let us raise the $100 at once and put it into the hands of Bro. Phillips for use in this work, to be concentrated on this one point.

After bombarding the place for a few months with such literature, we hope to have a tugboat with which to push the floating chapel back there and give a course of lectures on the subject, and perhaps hold a convention there, inviting all who wish to attend from abroad to do so.

I donate $4 to this object; would make it $10 if I could. Who will respond at once?

Your brother in the work, I. R. B. ARNOLD.

ACKNOWLEDGE HIM.

DEKALB, Iowa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is very interesting to hear from Bro. Hinman and others in regard to civil government. It still seems to be a question whether ours is a Christian nation or not. But all will agree that the nation is not as Christian as it should be; but it is largely what religious people have made it.

Absolute perfection should not be expected of a civil government. This only can be looked for in the foundation. In a perfect foundation, "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" are assured to all. There can be no liberty except as it is governed by law. No party in power can lawfully abridge the rights of any, hence the necessity of respecting the foundation. All civilized nations are more or less Christian of necessity, because the Bible is the only foundation for law. If we enjoy equal rights it is because of the Bible, and our nation has the right foundation, though the Constitution fails to acknowledge it.

A nation which uses the benefit of the Christian foundation and then does not acknowledge the Author, robs God. For the nation to do right in this respect and not be guilty, would be a benefit even to infidels. But they will oppose an honest acknowledgment of God in the Constitution as the author of civil government, and the Bible as supreme law. A Christian nation does not coerce infidels on any subject, but they are not willing to acknowledge the source of their own liberty. CYRUS SMITH.

LITERATURE.

"National Danger in Romanism" is the title of a series of tracts by Rev. Dr. I. J. Lansing, late pastor of a Congregational church, Worcester. Dr. Lansing has for some years been deeply interested in the subject and has made a careful study of Romanism in all its phases. His address on Jesuitism at the Boston convention of 1889 was reported in these columns. The titles of these tracts are: "Religion and the Nation," "Spanish Romanism and English Protestantism on the Western Continent," and "Columbus and the Discovery of America, or Papal Claims and Historic Fact." These valuable tracts are published by the Arnold Publishing Co., Boston.

"The Hidden Hand" is the title of a new work lately issued in England of which the Guardian of Bombay, India, says: "It is a remarkable compilation of the most damaging facts and arguments against Romanism throughout its whole genesis and history. Its title finds its warrant in Rev. 17: 4. This is literally fulfilled in a medal struck by Pope Leo XII. in honor of his jubilee, bearing on one side his own image and on the other that of the church of Rome, symbolized as a woman holding in her left hand a cross and in her other a golden cup. The first article in the pamphlet, entitled, 'Her Pedigree, the Hidden Link Brought to Light,' traces the startling resemblance of the worship of the Virgin Mary to the worship of the Assyrian Queen of Heaven, who drew the people of Israel and Judah away from their allegiance to the true God. This apostasy, which had its stronghold in Babylon, spread all over Asia, centering in Babylon, Memphis and Thibet. To this day the system survives in full force in the latter country as originally established, and the exact similarity of the whole system with the religion of modern Rome is truly striking. The images of the woman and child, the queen of heaven and her son, the monks and nuns, the dresses and the priests, the confessional, the doctrine of purgatory and the merit of men's works, together with the absence of anything like truth on the subject of the atonement, justification and the salvation of sinners, proclaim aloud the identity of the religion of Thibet with the religion of modern Rome."

President C. G. Finney, of Oberlin, was one of the most remarkable revivalists of this or any country. Those who have read his Autobiography or his volume on Secret Societies will be glad to welcome a new volume of twenty-five sermons, in which Mr. Finney makes the way of salvation very plain. Ministers, evangelists and Christian teachers will all want this book. It is very properly called "The Way of Salvation." Price, postpaid, $1.50.

Our Day for June closes its ninth volume with a strong number. "Temperance Needs in Foreign Lands" is a symposium of remarkable interest conducted in the parlors of Mrs. Joseph Cook in Boston, near the State House. Mrs. A. J. Gordon presided; and Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, who has long been superintendent of scientific temperance instruction in the National W. O. T. U., Miss F. E. Willard, Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, Miss Alice Gordon Gulick of Spain, Mrs. Guttererson from India, Miss Clara Cushman from China, took an animated part in the discussion. Prof. L. T. Townsend, of Boston University, reported at length to the M. E. Conference of New England on the question, "Is Romanism Christianity?" This radical, calm and scholarly paper is well worth preserving in this permanent form. Mr. Cook's address from the Boston Lecture Course is "Fresh Light from Ancient Monuments." The eminent lecturer makes the records, continually coming to light, speak eloquently against the ephemeral criticisms of our modern theologians. The departments of "Vital Points of Expert Opinion," "Questions to Specialists," and "Editorial Notes," are excellent.

The current number of the Review of Reviews is prophetic in the light of recent events. Prominence is given to portraits of Mr. Blaine in connection with a brief review of the commercial policy of which he is understood to have originated and fostered. "Our Indian Problem and How We Are Solving it" is an interesting review, fully illustrated with portraits of Gen. Armstrong, of Hampton, Va., Capt. Pratt, of Carlisle, Pa., and Supt. Meserve, of Haskell Institute, Kansas, with some account of their institutions and pictures of the young Indians in native dress, contrasted with their improvement after a term of study. "The Zone Tariff System," introduced in Hungary, is described; and "Relief Work in Russia," and "Home and Haunts of Shakespeare," complete the list of special articles. "The World's Progress" department, and the review of the leading articles in current magazines, are full and embellished with portraits.

American Gardening seems to be at the head of the horticultural magazines in style and character. The June number discusses "Our Public Highways," and gives plans for improving them. Everybody is interested in this question this year, and if our roads would wear as well as the topic, Americans would be happy. "Ferns of Napa Valley, Cal.," "Taste and Tact in Arranging Home Grounds," "Making a Vineyard," "Treatment of the Gypsy Moth," "New and Old Plants and Methods," are some of the valuable articles, some of them finely and skillfully illustrated.

The Cup Bearer is a new monthly magazine for children, published by the New Era Publishing Co., and edited by Helen Van Anderson. We have good right to suspect very many "New Eras," but the pages of the magazine are bright, wholesome and instructive. Price, $1.00 per year.

The Herald of Health is now in its forty-second year—a striking proof of its practical value and popularity. Arsenic in Wall-paper, Notes Concerning Health, Truth Teaching and Healing, and Life's Lessons are the topics of the month.

LODGE NOTES.

RITUALISM.

There is something inherent in ritualistic ceremonies which appeals with peculiar force to mankind in all conditions of life. In the lower stages of civilization as well as among the most enlightened races the uses of symbols and emblems is the most effective method of guiding and instructing the human mind. Those two great religious establishments, the Roman Catholic church and the Established Church of England, undoubtedly owe their prosperity and power in large measure to the prominent place which ritualism holds in their polity, and that this fact has come to be recognized by other religious bodies is seen in the growing tendency to enliven their worship by responsive services.

As in the churches, so in all the secular orders which have occupied a commanding place in the world's history. Ritualism is their foundation and it is the prime cause of their upbuilding and their permanency. The great order of Freemasonry could never have been what it is to-day but for its ritual, and the truths which it has instilled into millions of minds could never have made so lasting an impression without the emblematic emphasis with which they were enforced. And the same is true of all the other secret orders, all of which took their cue from Masonry. There are, it is true, many men who scoff at all ritualistic ceremonies; but men can also be found who speak in derision of religious services. For that reason, however, there is no immediate danger that the churches will close their doors; and because the few find nothing to admire in the secret society ritual, it is hardly probable that the Masons and Odd-fellows will allow their symbolic practices to lapse into innocuous desuetude.

If the churches find as much strength in ritualism; if the Masons and Odd-fellows recognize it as their life-blood, why should not the ritual prove of like importance in the Knights of Honor? As we have taken occasion to say before, we think it was a mistake to permit the ritual to be relegated to the rear in our order. It was a grave error of judgment to allow the utilitarian spirit to assume supreme control in the administration of our affairs and to eliminate sentimental considerations altogether. How is it possible that members should be drawn to the lodge meeting when the lodge has become little else than an insurance office? When we had a ritual whose use was imperative, there was no dearth of attendance on lodge night, and we believe that our thin meetings are largely due to the dismissal of the ritual in the initiation of candidates.

If we have made a mistake, let us remedy it as soon as possible and restore the ritual.—Knights of Honor Reporter for June.

SONS OF COLUMBUS.

Since the organization of the American Sons of Columbus at Fort Wayne, Ind., a little over a year ago, that body, without the slightest effort on the part of its founders, has grown from a group of twenty men until to-day over 500 young, active, enthusiastic Catholics claim membership upon its rolls. Among the different branches that at Peoria, Ill., is reckoned as one of the strongest, nearly 100 active members being enrolled. The next meeting of the Grand Council will be held in Peoria next fall, and even at this early date, the local members are making extensive preparations to entertain those who may attend.—Milwaukee Catholic Citizen.

THE CHURCH IN THE LODGE.

When it is understood that over seven hundred clergymen hold membership in the various Masonic lodges in one State of the Union, as is the case in the State of New York, it strongly argues that there can be naught but good in such an order of fraternity. This gives about one clergyman to each lodge, divided among the following denominations: Methodist, Episcopalian, Baptist, Presbyterian, Universalist, Congregationalist, Dutch Reformed, Christian, Lutheran, Jewish, Unitarian, and Reformed Jewish,

Get rid of it, if you have Catarrh. Don't merely relieve it for a time with poisonous, irritating snuffs and strong caustic solutions. While you seem to be getting help, you may be getting harm. Stopped in this way, it's usually only driven to the lungs. You're worse off than ever.

But you can get rid of it completely, with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. That's been proved over and over again, in thousands of the most hopeless cases. By its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, Catarrh in the Head and all Catarrhal affections are perfectly and permanently cured.

Some physicians will tell you that Catarrh can't be cured. They mean that they can't cure it. Dr. Sage's Remedy can. And to prove that they believe it, the proprietors of this medicine will pay $500 for an incurable case of Catarrh. They don't see one often, but they'll pay the money when they do.

of which the Methodists furnished 288, and the Episcopalians 146. In other lands the Brahmin, the Jew, the Mohammedan, each professing the peculiar religion of their fathers, sanctioned by the land, time and country in which they live, kneel at the same altar with the Protestant, retaining their own peculiar faith, yet are they Masons. The ancient charges oblige Masons "only to that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves." As one has said: "Masonry is no respecter of sectarian ideas or religious creeds, yet its cardinal tenets underlie and are the foundation of all religions." Those fanatics who rail at "the wickedness of lodgery" should make a note of this fact and stop baying at the reflection of the moon on the water.—Masonic Chronicle.

Happy days and restful nights result from using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It so regulates all the bodily functions and strengthens the nervous system that worry and fatigue are comparatively unknown and life is truly enjoyed. It is certainly a most wonderful medicine.

The Proper Way to Clean and Polish Silver.

Visitors to England are often struck with the dazzling whiteness and brilliant finish of the grand old dinner and banquet services, many of them centuries old, but in appearance equal to new silver. The English silversmiths have the advantage of a special preparation which has been popular with them for the past seven years. It is not altogether unknown in our country, and considering the beautiful silverware that now adorns most of the refined homes of America, an article that will not scratch the exquisite workmanship of valuable silver, and prevents tarnishing, should be as widely used as it is in the Old World. We refer to GODDARD'S PLATE POWDER, for which a depot has just been opened in New York. If you would preserve your silver ornaments and plate-ware, you should use it regularly. With reasonable care a 25-cent packet will last for many months. If not obtainable at your grocer's, it will be mailed free for 25 cents. Address, 2 Wooster Street, New York.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1892.

THE REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS.

The National Convention at Minneapolis nominated Friday afternoon on the first ballot. Benjamin Harrison and Whitelaw Reid will head the Republican ticket, and to human view will be our next President and Vice President.

This result was reached only after a severe and prolonged struggle. Most of the delegates had been chosen by their State Conventions when the sentiment of the party was all toward a re-nomination of Mr. Harrison. The friends of Mr. Blaine accepted his early letters as declining the honor in good faith. His remaining in the Cabinet confirmed the view. The effort, therefore, of the political "bosses," Platt of New York, Quay of Pennsylvania, and Clarkson of Iowa, to bring his name to the front was doubtfully received. Honorable men looked upon it as another political trick. The three are well-known political jugglers; such a movement led by them could only be viewed with mistrust. It was, therefore, with some amazement and consternation that well-meaning Republicans read on the 4th inst. the abrupt note by which Mr. Blaine resigned his portfolio, of its prompt acceptance by the President, and of the withdrawal of the ex-Secretary of State to Boston. The whole affair was too dramatic, sensational, "magnetic," and deeply tinged with dishonor. It might impress the people for a day, but in the certain reaction could not hope to abide their cooler judgment. As Gen. Logan said to Vice President Arthur, when Conkling and Platt resigned their seats in the Senate in order to strike a blow at Garfield and Blaine, "You have just left one element out of your calculation, and that is the public. They don't like politicians' tricks; and when the machinery is too apparent, they have a way of smashing that kind of thing."

Mr. Blaine was supposed to be in "the hands of his friends." He should have remembered the record of these men and held them the enemies of himself, his party and his country. Each of them has seriously injured his party in his own State. Pennsylvania under Quay's management has lost 50,000 to the Democratic party; New York has not elected a Republican to State office since Platt controlled the machine; Clarkson's work in Iowa has materially assisted in giving that State two Democratic governors when the former Republican majority was 50,000.

The fight precipitated at Minneapolis was a bitter one. Clarkson, as chairman, controlled the National Committee, and his work at first promised success. Both parties compromised on Gov. McKinley of Ohio for permanent chairman, who, though a Harrison man, was regarded as representing the best sentiment of the party, and its probable leader if the Blaine faction could prolong the fight. But the first decisive ballot Thursday evening, on seating the Alabama delegation, was regarded a test vote. It followed a long and earnest debate, and a majority of forty for the Harrison party broke the back of the opposition. Next day the first ballot for nomination stood: Harrison, 535½; Blaine, 182¾; McKinley, 182; and a few scattering votes.

The platform denounces the Democratic party and the Southern outrages, declares for a silver currency, for public schools, reduction of postal rates, the Nicaragua Canal and the Columbian Exposition. The temperance plank was more carefully considered than four years ago, and the same ideas, as acceptable to the saloonist as to temperance men, were given with less words, thus:

"We sympathize with all wise and legitimate efforts to lessen and prevent the evils of intemperance and promote morality."

The candidates, from the standpoint of the Cynosure, are as likely to succeed in November as any two men who could be named under the present condition of their party. The past administration has been in many respects a creditable one; but a party committed to monopoly and the drink traffic cannot be reliable. It cannot walk uprightly with such companions. Personally Mr. Harrison remains, we suppose, as four years ago, unconnected with any secret society, "unless the Grand Army could be considered a secret society." He is a member of the Presbyterian church, and religion is regarded in his household.

Mr. Reid has not possibly outgrown the godly training of the old Scotch Presbyterian father and mother who yet live at Cedarville, Ohio. His career since 1861, as journalist, has been a brilliant one. Few men could have succeeded Horace Greeley in the New York Tribune with such ability as he has shown; and as our minister to France he has won new honors. His bright, youthful and intelligent face reminds one of the young ruler whom Christ looked upon and loved.

Eight years ago Mr. Reid had shut the door of the tall Tribune building against secret society printers. The union men having followed an imperious demand with a strike, their places were taken by un-sworn men. The union stormed and threatened. The Tribune was firm. Mr. Blaine was then the Republican candidate. The secret union leaders appealed to him. They threatened to use their secret, dishonorable power as a lodge with other secret societies, and be a balance of power to throw the State of New York against him if the Tribune did not take them back and throw out the "scabs." Mr. Blaine refused honorably and firmly to aid them. They probably carried out their threat, for New York was lost by some 1,500 votes; and that State being lost, all was lost.

When Mr. Reid's name was mentioned for second place on the Republican ticket the eight-year-old quarrel was revived. The leaders of the union claim 35,000 members in the country who would drop all party considerations at the bidding of the lodge and vote against their old enemy. But the latest report is to the effect that some compromise has been made in the Tribune office and the lodge conciliated. It must be regretted if this arrangement has been made through any sacrifice of principle on the part of Mr. Reid. It may win him an office, but should cost him peace of conscience.

THE JUDGMENTS OF GOD.

When these "are in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

No political excitement, or public enterprise or private business should be allowed to absorb popular interest so that the hand of God shall not be seen in the devastations visited upon the earth by fire and flood. The $50,000,000, which it is estimated, will be lost by overflows in the Mississippi valley, will not fall alone upon the distressed people of that region. In time it will be widely distributed over the country.

The catastrophe in the Pennsylvania oil regions will reach with a hundred hands toward our business centers. Benevolent gifts will not make up the loss. In many ways business will be affected, and in remote markets losses will be accounted to the ruin of that dreadful day. It is therefore the greatest folly to pass by these devastations as a newspaper report, to be read and forgotten until horror hangs over our own heads. The immediate sufferers are not sinners above their neighbors. The blows that fall here and there are for the whole people. They warn them to cease their neglect of God and his laws. To repent of past disobedience. They are merciful warnings. Wise are they who heed them and deliver their souls. If there is a God ruling in the earth, as the Bible teaches, it is surely time we turned to him. The land is full of swearing, of false and hypocritical oaths: Therefore it "mourneth." It is full of the oppression of the poor and the tempted, therefore "will I arise" saith the Lord. It is full of profanation of the Sabbath and despising of God's holy things (Ez. 22:). Can then our hearts endure or our hands be strong in the day when the Lord deals with us? "Verily, he is a God that judgeth in the earth."

THE MASONIC . . .

Whoever has read some official publication relating to Freemasonry must have observed among the abbreviations of passages designed to be obscure to "cowans," occasional marks like this: . . ., indicating that something which ought to be secret and understood only by the initiated has been intentionally omitted in the text. Among those who do not bestow upon Freemasonry the veneration which its members claim for it, this hieroglyphic is known as "the three fly-specks."

Seriously, however, like a hundred and one other nonsensical things which Freemasons have dragged into the machinery of the fraternity, to add confusion and "sublimity" to its symbols and ceremonies, this hieroglyphic (.) has been adopted from the pagan mysteries of past ages, to give an air of antiquity and sanctity to the institution. It was imported into the United States from Europe, where, many years ago, it became a fashionable, or popular, "fad" among the native "brethren of the mystic tie." It is said to have originated in the "tree alphabets" of the ancient Celts, which, it is claimed, "were invented by Ogma, or Ogam, or Som, which last name is expressed in characters with this hieroglyphic subjoined." Som was sometimes known by an alias—"Hercules Ogmius." "The symbol of the 'god of immortality,' among the Chinese, is a fruit, represented usually in a triple bunch. In the British Museum is a bronze figure of Hercules holding the three Hesperian apples"—supposed to represent the fruit of life or immortality—"while in the background is seen a tree with a serpent twined around it." The intelligent Anti-masonic reader will not be surprised to find "that old serpent, called the devil, and Satan," in close proximity to anything adopted by Freemasonry. "I will," says one Masonic authority, "in this connection call to mind, too, the Grecian fable of Atlanta picking up the three golden apples . . ., and the hope of finding a deliverer. . . . in the person of Hercules. . . . The Chaldeans called this hieroglyphic 'sacal,' or 'the bunch of grapes.'"

It is upon such pagan symbols, and toys, and fables, that modern Masonry depends to support its claims to antiquity, to give character to a system of secret signs, grips, passwords and murderous obligations, and to maintain its pretensions as a religious, benevolent and respectable society.

—Persons interested in the National Convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union at Denver, Colo., are notified that the date of that gathering has been changed, for sufficient cause, from October 18 to Friday, October 28, 1892, and will continue in session until November 2, inclusive.

—The colored people of central Illinois and northern Missouri celebrated Lovejoy day with great zest at Alton on the 5th inst. Elijah P. Lovejoy was the first martyr to the cause of freeing the slaves. His memory is cherished by all true-hearted Americans, white or black. One of the finest poems written by the lamented former editor of this paper was written in 1837, while a pastor in Cincinnati, on the occasion of Lovejoy's death.

—The Catholic Review reprints entire the late address of President C. A. Blanchard before the students and faculty of Chicago Theological Seminary, and approves it as showing that Roman Catholics are not alone in their condemnation of the lodge. The Review makes a mistake speaking of Pres. Blanchard as presiding over "the Chicago Protestant Theological Seminary." Wheaton College can hardly spare him, and the institution at Union Park is one of five or six Protestant seminaries in this city and its suburbs.

—Just so long, writes Evangelist John E. Wolfe in his paper "John-three-sixteen," as we have ministers of the Gospel officiating with secret oath-bound societies, commingling with infidels, harlot-mongers, deists, Jews and Mohammedans, just so long will we have a bastard gospel preached to the people. How any true servant of God, who holds to the finished work of Christ, and eternal life, can fellowship an institution that teaches salvation by works, is a problem that can only be solved by asserting that his eyes remained "hood-winked" since he was first initiated into the secret realm of Baal worship. 2 Cor. 6: 14-18.

—The United Presbyterian, replying to criticisms upon the churches of that denomination respecting a slack discipline against secret societies, says: "Perhaps if there was a little inquiry of pastors as to what is really done in their sessions, and as to the number of persons who have disowned their secret orders before being admitted into fellowship, there might be more accurate conclusions as to the prevailing sentiment, and as to what is actually done." While it is true that such matters are more or less private, yet it would encourage all holy men if pastors of all churches not only gained men out of the lodge, turning them from its false altars to Christ, but would also let such conversions be known.

—The United Presbyterian General Assembly at its late meeting in Pittsburgh adopted the following resolution on the lodge issue:

“Fourth. The opposition to secret oath-bound societies has displayed about its usual activity, but has increasing difficulties in its way of final success, because of the vast number of labor organizations, which, while not in themselves so objectionable, create a sentiment favorable to secrecy, and prejudice their members against those who oppose the more dangerous and objectionable societies. This whole subject demands a fair, frank, and manly discussion in the pulpit and through the religious press, from the standpoint of the Word of God.”

We are thankful to note the late sentence, and trust it will prove a kind of enacting clause. Let the pastors and editors of this influential denomination apply the Word faithfully to this whole question and they may be assured the blessing of heaven will rest on the effort, though it may be attended by trying and even painful experiences, for such an effort would surely be resisted by the devil.

THE CHURCHES AND THE N. C. A. should know each other better. The work undertaken by the Association for the purification and maintenance of the worship of the true God is of vital importance to the churches of Christ. They need to be informed of its object and aid in carrying it into effect. During the present year it is hoped this work may be more thoroughly done than ever, and the Board of Directors has made it one of the special duties of the Corresponding Secretary. During the vacation of pastors this summer will be a convenient opportunity for some churches. Let them arrange for it. Address Henry L. Kellogg, Cor. Sec'y at this office or at N. C. A., Wheaton, Ill.

JONATHAN BLANCHARD'S WORKS.

A small volume of the addresses and poems of the late President J. Blanchard is to be immediately issued. It will comprise some of his best platform efforts on temperance, the lodge, National reform, the Sabbath, etc., in a volume of 150 to 200 pages. Preparation for a later and larger volume is also to be immediately begun, which will be a biography, and will possibly contain a larger selection of his writings.

A special June offer of the early volume is hereby made. To all who order before July 1st, 1892, enclosing FIFTY CENTS, the volume of poems and addresses will be sent on publication. After that date it may be found necessary to advance the price. Send orders to this office.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—H. M. Hugunin had a brief vacation of the editorial corner of the Cynosure office last week.

—Rev. Dr. J. E. Roy, of the American Missionary Association, will soon visit the Pacific Coast. He will be absent a month or two looking after the interests of the Association.

—Rev. Aaron Worth, a veteran reformer and Wesleyan minister, has been nominated for Governor by the Prohibitionists of Indiana. His rugged honesty shames the chicanery practiced at Minneapolis.

—Rev. Alexander Helton, of the Central Illinois United Brethren Conference, was killed by lightning at Casper, Ill., on Saturday evening, June 4. His name was frequently seen in reports of our reform meetings in Illinois years ago.

—Rev. O. P. Gifford, the eloquent and fearless Baptist pastor bequeathed by Boston to Immanuel church in this city, presented a paper to the Chicago ministers' meeting, Monday morning, on “The Relation of the Church to the Laboring Man.”

—Mrs. Pres. C. A. Blanchard returned to her home in Wheaton on the 4th inst. Her many friends are trusting that she is recovered from a disease that threatened to be fatal, and thank God that their prayers in her behalf have been answered.

—Mary Allen West, for years editor of the Union Signal, has been commissioned by the W. C. T. U. as superintendent of its School of Methods, and is going to the Sandwich Islands and Japan to teach and train workers by means of schools held for a few days in a place. She left the office in this city last winter and spent the season in southern California, recruiting her health.

—Rev. M. A. Gault, one of the ablest of the National Reform lecturers, attended the late Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church at Mansfield, Ohio. He passed through Chicago on his return last week, and with R. G. Elsey of Minnesota, brightened the Cynosure office with a brief visit.

—Rev. S. H. Swarts, of St. Paul M. E. church, in this city, read a paper on prohibition before the Chicago Preacher's meeting last week. It is reported as remarkable for candor, comprehensiveness, and incisive statement, and the discussion following was admirable. Those who have heard Dr. Swarts on Odd-fellowship know his ability to present a theme on which he has thought intensely.

—Rev. Dr. H. L. Morehouse, for years corresponding secretary of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, has lately resigned, to the great regret of the society. The honors paid him by the rising vote of the great assembly at the annual meeting were good proofs of the confidence which he has secured and appreciation of the vast and varied work he has performed. One of these good works was to endorse the plan to send a copy of Joseph Cook's address on secret oaths to every Baptist home missionary.

—Rev. Dr. David Maedill, of Xenia Theological Seminary, was moderator of the late United Presbyterian General Assembly. He will be remembered by our readers as formerly professor at Monmouth, and author of a part of the first volume issued by the Western Tract Society of Cincinnati on Secret Societies. Pres. J. Blanchard and Dr. Edward Beecher contributed other portions. The United Presbyterian says of him as a presiding officer: “The Assembly was happy in its choice of a moderator. Dr. Maedill is clear-headed, deliberate, and courteous. He won the kind regard and the honor of every member.”

—Major D. W. Whittle, the evangelist, spoke in Wheaton College Hall on Sabbath evening, June 5th, to a large audience, largely composed of young people. He referred touchingly to the last time he was in Wheaton, in October, 1885, at the funeral of Mrs. Ellen Milligan Blanchard, when he met for the last time her father-in-law, the man he revered and loved, Pres. J. Blanchard. On that occasion he spoke from the account of the resurrection of Lazarus, in John 11, and his later address was by a happy coincidence based on the 28th verse of the same chapter, “The Master is come and calleth for thee.” His appeal from these words for lives of consecration was most earnest and impressive.

—Rev. Jonathan Wilson, of Siam, writes that hundreds and thousands in the north of that country are suffering from starvation, and unless help is sent many must die. The famine-stricken region is the location of one of the most successful missions of the Presbyterian Board.

—There are 1,284 Lutheran churches with 219,069 communicant members in Pennsylvania; 927 churches with 164,411 communicants in Wisconsin; 1,124 churches with 143,545 communicants in Minnesota, and 568 churches with 115,836 communicants in Illinois.

—There are 527 missionaries in Japan, fifty less than last year. There are 823 organized churches, an increase of twenty-six. Three thousand seven hundred and eighteen adults are reported baptized (?) during the year, and five hundred and ten children. The present membership of the churches is given at 33,390, 1,010 more than last year.

—The population of the city of Halle, in Germany, has grown to be 100,000, yet it is only now that increased church accommodations are being provided. The first new church built in the city since the Reformation will be dedicated next summer.

—Dr. Newman Hall, the eminent London preacher, whom Americans remember with special interest because of his sympathy with the Union cause in the days of our civil war, expects to retire from his pastorate next July. He has attained the age of seventy-six. “Lincoln Tower,” 220 feet high, which adjoins Dr. Newman Hall's church in the Westminsterbridge road, was built in commemoration of Abraham Lincoln, from funds subscribed on both sides of the Atlantic.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

The D. K. E. murder case—Spooks and grand juries.

Another life is sacrificed at the altar of secret societies. This time the killing is at Yale College. The victim was Wilkins Rustin, a gifted and beloved student whose promising career is cruelly cut short this week by agonizing death, following his initiation into the notorious D. K. E. order whose heathenish orgies were recently exposed at Harvard. The Coroner's verdict published in to-day's Tribune puts the responsibility on those who conducted the shameful revelry. Coroner Mix says that it “entirely exceeds the bounds of reason and propriety” and calls on the faculty “either to abolish or restrain these modes of initiation altogether or to have entire supervision and control of the same.” This suggestion of Coroner Mix shows him somewhat mixed. The idea of a body of men, supposed to be sane, “supervising these modes” of driving about the streets and pushing into pits some half-clad student who is senseless enough to stoop to such idiotic performances, is of the same nature as that of having a minister and board of deacons supervise a religious rumhole, as proposed in this city.

The Coroner says that this killing “was caused by the carelessness of the students conducting said initiation, but purely the result of boyish fun, not such as is known to the law as criminal carelessness.” Neither law nor common sense will sustain such assumption any more than it would the exculpation of those who kill by shooting in fun, “not knowing that the pistol was loaded.” He is sensible, however, in his final sentence, “In default of action on the part of the faculty, I recommend that the proper authorities take such measures as will prevent further practices of this nature.”

Some weeks ago a woman in Jersey City lost two hundred dollars. She could not even guess the thief and so went to a clairvoyant, who consulted the spirits. These told her that J. R. was the culprit. Jersey law allowed his arrest on this ground alone, but not a particle of evidence appeared and he was discharged. The woman now has told her story to the grand jury and they too have listened to the voices of the dead and poor J. R. was again arrested and hauled before another judge, who dismissed him on a nominal bail. What next? Is the Salem witchcraft to be revived, and the liberty, life or reputation of a citizen to be imperiled by spooks? Are our courts to give judicial sanction to the exploded delusion of spiritualism, so far, at least, as to arrest people on the testimony of clairvoyants? Law has already been belittled enough, as the Minneapolis Times recently said, by “legal hair-splitting which degrades courts of justice into machines for the prevention of the punishment of criminals and by the alliance of the criminal class and criminal lawyers.” Shall we now seek the alliance of those who are bewitched by spirits of the dead? James Parton once asked the most prominent judge of his time to state what was the most profound conviction yielded to him by his long and conspicuous career. The prompt answer was returned, “The untrustworthiness of human testimony.” In “Jersey justice” we have a new element which directly tends to bring our judicial system into disrepute.

New York, June 10, 1892. OCCASIONAL.

Wayland Seminary of Washington City is an institution for the training of colored teachers and preachers, sustained by the Baptist Home Missionary Society. The whole number enrolled during the year, in the theological, normal, academic and preparatory departments was 193. The school is a Christian home. Its buildings have grown from a plain two-story frame house in 1867 to a fine structure of four and five stories. The endowment is $17,000. The religious and educational work of the Seminary have been hopeful, even cheering in results, and its friends are much encouraged for its future.

The thirty-second Annual Register of Wheaton College, for the years 1891-92 has just been issued. A summary of the young ladies and gentlemen in attendance upon the college department, the preparatory department, the English school, the conservatory of music, engaged in drawing and painting, and special students, numbers 285.

THE HOME.

GOD'S WORK GOES ON.

God's work goes on in spite of war and famine,
The dreaded pestilence, or baneful blight;
In spite of all the selfish greed of mammon,
That toils amid the shadows of the night;
In spite of evil hearts and hands essaying
To crush the temples that we build upon,
The law and order so divine obeying,
Unmoved by man's device, God's work goes on.

Not always in a radiance of splendor,
The brilliant dazzling of the noonday sun,
But in an atmosphere serene and tender
His mightiest miracles are daily done;
And though short-sighted and dull-witted mortals
Themselves against his majesty array,
Nor give him entrance through the heart's closed portals,
God's work goes on, and will not make delay.

No human power can interrupt its mission;
As well attempt the planets to remove,
Or change a single star from the position
It holds amid the galaxy above;
And so when all our plans prove unavailing,
When busy hands and throbbing hearts are stilled,
Doubt not, but rest assured that still unailing
God's work goes on—his plans are all fulfilled.

THE SHARPENING OF THE TOOLS.

"Let us go to see poor Miss Paull, this evening, Sarah," said the mild little minister, pausing at a turn in the village street.

"Very well," Mrs. Joyce laughed. "Whenever you ask me to go on a pastoral visit with you, George, I know that some one of your sheep need a lashing of hard common sense as well as prayers and religion to drive him into the strait path. You are too mild, too loving, to deal with a sinner like Miss Paull. It is not sun she needs; it is a sharp, nipping wind."

"A sinner like Miss Paull?" repeated Mr. Joyce, with a perplexed frown. "Most people regard her as a saint, Sarah. She looks like one, I'm sure, lying on that white bed, year in and year out, with her sweet, refined face, talking of her hopes of heaven in that musical, gentle voice."

"She would be more of a saint if she would get off of the bed and attend to her duties on earth, instead of her hopes of heaven," said Sarah, sharply.

"But can she? Do not be unjust."

"Doctor Vance says that May Paull's nervous disorder is one-tenth reality and nine-tenths indolence and imagination," retorted Mrs. Joyce. "She needs work more than medicine. Doctor Weir Mitchell calls such invalids vampires. It is a good name. She sapped the life from her poor mother. Mrs. Paull would be living now but for her five years' care of May."

"Her sister Louisa has the whole charge of her now," said Mr. Joyce, as they crossed the fields toward the Paull farmhouse. "Louisa Paull has a spark of real genius, Sarah," he added, earnestly. "I saw her picture which won the prize at the spring exhibition in New York. It is a great pleasure to see a thing like that—something altogether true and noble. It is like going into the deep woods or listening to great music. It is a help in one's life!" his eyes kindling.

"I don't see how she is to go on painting here," said Mrs. Joyce, lowering her voice as they stepped up on the porch of the Paull house.

It was a large house, half of it vacant, for the Paull family had been diminished by death until only three were left—the two sisters, May and Louisa; and the brother, John, who farmed the few surrounding acres.

It was John who opened the kitchen door now and told them to come in. He was a short, stout, uncleanly looking man, with thick, down-lapping lips, and eyes small and dead as those of his own Berkshire pigs.

"How d'ye, parson?" he said. "Good evening, Mrs. Joyce. Set down, set down. If you'd come ten minutes sooner you might have had some scrapple, but I've eat it up," nodding toward the littered table. "There ain't a woman in Pennsylvania that can beat Looizy in scrapple, or any other cookin'. I relish my grub, I tell you, since she come home."

"The women of your family have all been famous housekeepers," said Mr. Joyce, "but Louisa has gone beyond them into a higher field. She is a true artist, John."

The man's fat face clouded. "You mean them picters of hers? I don't see nothin' in them fool things. Of course, if she could make money by them, that's another thing. I put the case plain to Looizy when mother died. I said: 'May's to be nursed, an' I'm to be cooked for. I kin make enough off'n the farm to feed an' clothe us, but I can't pay no nurse nor kitchen girl. If you've got steady sale for them picters you can pay for both, an' live in New York and go on with your paintin'.' She says: 'I haven't steady sale for them. I'm only a beginner in art. I could support myself for a few years, but that's all.' 'Then,' says I, 'then Looizy, it's your dooty to give up yer picters an' settle right down to work here. Nurse May, an' cook for me. Yer dooty is too yer family, not to art—whatever that is.'"

Mrs. Joyce rose impatiently. "You have a most clear, logical way of putting things that concern yourself, Mr. Paull. Where is Louisa? Can we see her?"

"'Certen, certen, ma'am. May's had a sinkin' spell this afternoon. Looizy's with her. She was purty bad last night, too; thought she'd die before mornin'. She wouldn't let Looizy leave her—not even to get my breakfast. I'll tell 'em you're here."

"One moment, Mr. Paull," said Mrs. Joyce. "Ask May if Mr. Joyce can read and pray with her, and let me see Louisa here alone."

John hesitated and then laughed. "All right. Looizy ain't sick. She don't need religious consolation. She can talk to you, and I'll take the parson in to comfort poor May."

"'Poor May!' " ejaculated Mrs. Joyce, bitterly, when the men had left her alone. "Ah, Louisa!" jumping up as the girl entered. "I asked to see you alone, my dear. It was just a little ruse to bring you out of that close room for a breath of fresh air. You are looking gray and pinched. How long have you been in there?"

"I don't know. Since yesterday, sometime," Louisa said, with a cheerful laugh. "May thought she was dying and would not let go of my hand. Poor John had to cook his own meals."

"Sit down, child, here in the air. I wish I was your mother to look after you. Tell me, Louisa, candidly, is May in any danger of dying?"

"No, I think not."

"Is she suffering at all? Is it not all imagination?"

"Imagination?" Louisa hesitated. She had a resolute, thoughtful face. She was evidently a woman who never spoke or acted hastily. "I will be quite frank with you, Mrs. Joyce," she said. "I know you care for me and wish to help me. May's ailments for years were imaginary. But she has yielded to them too long. Her weakness now is real. She must always be a helpless invalid, and there is nobody to help her but me."

Mrs. Joyce was silent. Presently she broke out. "It is your art I think of. Surely, you see that God fitted you for higher work than to be May's nurse and John's cook!"

"I don't know," said Louisa, with a smothered sigh, "that seems to be the work given me. You will go in now to speak to May. She will be hurt if you do not see her."

Mrs. Joyce was to receive no more confidences, she saw. She made a perfunctory, short visit to May and hurried her husband away.

"That poor May is a most patient sufferer," he said, as they walked homeward through the twilight. "Her sight is going now, she thinks. She has to depend wholly on Louisa to read to her."

"I'll open her eyes some of these days," said Mrs. Joyce. "I'll surprise her." She said nothing more for some time, then exclaimed: "I don't understand what God means, George. I don't understand it! Here is work to be done for him in the world. This girl, Louisa, is peculiarly qualified to do a certain kind of work—among the highest, ennobling and hopeful. It is taken from her and she is given coarse, manual labor—cooking for a big human animal and waiting on a selfish hypochondriac—work which any ignorant drudge can do. What reason is there in that? What reason is there in any of the thwarted lives we see?"

The little minister did not answer for some time. His wife's shrewd, hard sense always daunted him when he differed with her. But he said at last, gently: "It often has seemed to me, Sarah, that this world was not so much a place where God had his work done as where we are fitted to work hereafter. He does not always use the qualities in us which are strong, but those that are defective. Just as a workman, going over his tools, tries the weak parts, or a physician, training an athlete, exercises the weak muscles to strengthen them. Louisa is being trained by One who makes no mistakes, be sure of that, Sarah."

"I know George," she said, in a low voice.

Just as they reached their own door Louisa went out of the farm house to the well to draw some water. A slanted beam of red sunlight struck through the mossy boles of the gray trees, bringing out fine shades of color. She drew her breath with sudden delight. Ah, how she could paint that! Her heart throbbed with a strong sense of power. "O God, if I could only go back to my work!" she thought. The next moment John passed her, grumbling complaints about his supper, and from within she heard May's shrill cry for her to hurry.

She looked upward. "Grant me patience, Lord," she said, humbly. "I am irritable. I care only for myself. What does the painting matter? Make me loving, patient, like thee. Make me thy child." And as she prayed the clear light seemed to fill the world with a hope and a promise.—Rebecca Harding Davis, in the Congregationalist.

LINCOLN'S ONLY REASON.

The late E. W. Kinsley used to relate the following passage of words between President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton which occurred during an interview Mr. Kinsley had with the President in regard to the feeling of Massachusetts on the issuance of the proclamation of emancipation in 1863.

While Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Kinsley were talking, a clerk opened the door and said that a woman insisted upon seeing the President. Mr. Lincoln directed that she be admitted. A poor old woman, her clothes clinging to her worn-out frame, and with tears running down her cheeks, entered the room and asked Mr. Lincoln for a pass, that she might go to nurse her son, who was in a field-hospital. The President told her it was impossible; that no pass could be given to any one outside the military.

"Her grief," says Mr. Kinsley, "was pitiable. She pleaded with Mr. Lincoln to be allowed to go and nurse her boy, till at last the President, every muscle of his rugged face quivering with emotion, turned to his desk, wrote a few lines, handed it to her, and said: 'There is your pass; go to Secretary Stanton and get it countersigned.'"

"The woman thankfully received the note and withdrew to the secretary's quarters.

"After her departure Mr. Lincoln leaned his head upon his hand, and in silence awaited the storm he knew would follow when Stanton had seen what the missive was. He was not kept long in suspense. The door flew open, and in came Stanton, greatly excited.

"'Mr. President,' he said, 'don't you know that under no circumstances can a pass be given to a civilian—why did you give a pass to this woman?'"

"Quick as a flash came the answer: 'Because she don't wear hoops.' Lincoln knew that he should not have given the pass, and that against Stanton's anger he could oppose no logical excuse, so he evaded it all with that irrelevant reply. The secretary turned and left the room without a word, but the old woman got her pass."—Boston Herald.

THE POWER OF SINCERITY.

It is related that when Joseph Hume, the infidel, was taxed with inconsistency on going to listen to John Brown, the godly Scotch minister of Haddington, he replied:

"I don't believe all he says, but he does, and once a week I like to hear a man who believes what he says. Why, whatever I think, that man preaches as though he thought the Lord Jesus Christ were at his elbow."

There is a story of a couple of gentlemen, who stopped at an out-door meeting in Scotland and listened while some one delivered an elegant and polished address.

"What do you think of that?" said one of them to his fellow.

"I think the man does not believe a word he says," was the reply.

After the first speaker had concluded, John Brown of Haddington rose up to preach, and poured out "the rivers of living water" which were welling within his own soul.

"And what do you think of that man?" said the traveler to his companion.

"Think," said he, "I don't know what to think. It seemed as if he thought Jesus Christ was standing by his side, and every little while he was saying, 'Now, Lord, what shall I say next?'"

The empty-headed, gabbling world needs now to hear the voice of men who believe that Jesus Christ stands just behind them; who believe his word, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world!" who are willing to speak as servants and messengers of God, as men who know the blessing and the power of their Master, and who speak the things they do know, and testify the things which they have seen.

Men grow weary of empty talk from empty men, and they long for men who are full, not of learning, or pride, or self-conceit, but who are "filled with all the fullness of God." The words of such men carry conviction to honest hearts, and men feel and know that they believe what they say, and that they must have some grounds for their belief. Let Christian men stand steadfast in the strength of the Lord, and speak the words which he has given them, in the honesty of upright souls, and their testimony shall be blessed to others, and much people shall be added to the Lord.—The Armory.

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT WOULD YOU THINK?

What would you think if the birds and flowers
Should say that the dew and the sweet summer showers
Were not what they wanted to bathe in and drink;
They'd like something stronger;
Now, what would you think?

And what would you think, some pleasant spring day,
If the robin and wren and pretty bluejay
Should go reeling and falling because of strong drink
(Just like men and boys),
Now, what would you think?

And what would you think, if you picked a bouquet,
And found that the flowers acted just the same way;
And all of them tipsy because of a drink.
(How queer it would be.)
But, what would you think?

Well, if it is silly and foolish for them,
Don't you think it is worse for the boys and the men,
Who lose both their bodies and souls, too, through drink.
Now, what do you think?

A YOUNG LIFE SACRIFICED.

A New York physician related the following fact, which has not before appeared in print:

A few weeks ago he was called to the help of a man who had been mortally wounded in one of the low dance halls or "dives" of that city. When he had attended to his patient, the doctor looked curiously about him. The wounded man lay before the bar, against which lounged some ragged old sots. In the next room a few young men, flushed and bright-eyed, were playing cards, while the gaudily-dressed barmaids carried about the liquor.

But neither the gamblers nor the women nor the drunkards paid any attention to the dying man on the floor. They squabbled and laughed, deaf to his groans. The proprietor of the dive, a burly fellow who had been a prize-fighter in his younger days, having seen the police secure the murderer, had gone back quietly to his work of mixing drinks. Death apparently had no interest or terror for these people.

Suddenly a little, old woman, with white hair, a thin shawl drawn about her, came to the street door. Her appearance produced a startling effect. The besotted old men at the bar put down their glasses and looked at her uneasily; the card players hastily shut the door to keep out the sight of her, and the barmaids huddled together in silence; but the change in the brutal landlord was the most striking. He rose hastily and came up to her, an expression of something like terror on his face.

"Is James here?" she asked gently.

"No, no, he is not here. I do not know where he is!" he said hurriedly.

She looked about bewildered. "I was sure he was here. If he comes, will you tell him his mother wants him, sir?"

"Yes, yes." The man urged her out of the door. The physician soon followed, and saw her going into another and another dive and grogshop along the street.

"Who is she?" he asked a policeman outside.

"Is she in no danger?"
The man shook his head significantly. "They'll not harm her, sir. They've done their worst to her. She is the widow of a clergyman, and she had one son, a boy of sixteen years. They lived happy and comfortable enough till he took to going to poolrooms, and then to the variety theaters, and at last to these dives here.

"He was killed in one of them in a fight three months ago in that very one you was in just now, and was carried home to her, bloated from drink and covered with blood, and dead.

"She's known nothing since. She only remembers that he came to these houses, and she goes about among them searching for him every day.

"They're afraid to see her. They think she brings a curse on them. But they won't harm her. They've done their worst to her."

This is a true story. How many sons of loving mothers are going down like this boy into these dark places to-day?—Youth's Companion.

ALCOHOL NOT A STIMULANT.

Careful investigation has demonstrated the fact that alcohol, in all its forms, is a narcotic and depressant, and not a stimulant as hitherto regarded. It is given in cases of weakness, but it paralyzes instead of stimulating the functions of the body. Hence the very conditions under which it is generally used are the ones in which it should be specially withheld. When a person is fainting, if alcohol is administered, it will lessen the vital stimulation which already exists. The stimulation which rises while the brandy is going down the throat may enable one to recover for a little while, but a much better treatment is to apply hot water to the back of the neck, or alternations of heat and cold to the spine. I think I would guarantee to accomplish by means of external applications of this sort as much in one half or one quarter of the time that is usually occupied in the administration of alcohol, and the danger from alcohol would be avoided besides.

Alcohol was formerly used as a routine medicine in cases of fever. If the doctor was afraid his patient would get too low, he would give him brandy; and if he thought he was likely to die, he would make him swallow a large quantity of alcohol. I have known cases in which patients were undoubtedly poisoned to death by the use of alcohol.

Formerly, in the London hospitals, every one who had a fever had to have alcohol, which was denominated a "supporting medicine." Many patients were in fact kept drunk all the while. However, in recent reports from London hospitals it appears that the use of alcohol is reduced to a tenth part what it formerly was. Cold water on the outside and warm water on the inside is found to be much better than whisky. The external use of alcohol is sometimes good as a tonic or astringent to the skin.—Lecture by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek, Mich.

A STRONG ARRAIGNMENT.

The report of the permanent Committee on Temperance, adopted at the recent General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, is a strong arraignment of the liquor traffic and its accessories. Vividness and force were given to the portrayal of the evils and the sin of the business and all connected with it, by the use of the number of deaths from alcoholism reported by the coroner of Allegheny county. The report asked the Assembly to sanction the following propositions:

(1.) That all revenues, public and private, derived from the liquor traffic, are unlawful gain, worse than ordinary theft in this, that while they take the money, it also ruins the character and life of its victim. (2.) That a business tending so directly and surely to the death of its victims, is essentially murder, aggravated by the fact that it not only causes the death of its victim, but also renders worthless his life and insures his eternal damnation. (3.) That all by whose act or whose neglect such business is carried on are involved in the guilt it incurs. (4.) That to escape complicity in that collection of crimes known as the liquor traffic, total abstinence is the duty of the individual; the use of his political influence and his vote in favor of the total prohibition is the duty of the citizen; the enacting of prohibition is the duty of the legislator, and refusal of all license to sell intoxicating liquors where the law makes such licensing discretionary and resignation of office where the law makes it mandatory, is the duty of every judge or other officer appointed to issue licenses. Failing in these duties, each in his place should honestly confess, "I also was standing by and consenting unto his death."—Selected.

DOES IT PAY?

There are two aspects of the liquor question considered, the economic and the moral, and from each of these comes the question, Does it pay? We answer, No! Let us look at the economic side of the question.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Revenue for 1891, we find the following statistics: Bushels of grain consumed in making liquors, 26,000,000. This does not include fruits converted into liquors.

The nation's drink bill for 1891, according to best estimates, was about $1,000,000,000.

Total value of all dutiable merchandise less than $479,000,000. All duties therefrom did not exceed $250,000,000. Total value and duties on merchandise, $729,000,000. Altogether, a little over two-thirds of the amount spent for liquors.

Value of merchandise a little over one-third of the liquor bill.

Amount of duties less than one-third amount spent for liquor.

Amount spent for government expenses, about $437,000,000.

Whole cost of public schools for 1889-1890, $140,000,000.

Amount spent in sending the Gospel abroad, $13,000,000.

Amount of ministers' salaries, $12,000,000.

Seventy-seven times as much spent for liquors as to send the Gospel; eighty-three and one-third times as much spent for liquors as for ministers' salaries.

Over seven times as much spent for liquors as for public schools.

More than twice as much spent for liquors as for government expenses.

In 1886 the amount spent for spirits was $337,000,000. Amount spent for beer, $304,000,000. Amount spent for domestic wines, $15,000,000. Total amount spent for liquors in 1886, $656,000,000.

Received for wages in 1886, $947,000,000. Two-thirds of this was spent for drinks.

Amount spent in one year for building churches, $320,000,000. In six months the liquor bill would buy all the churches.

At present there are engaged in the liquor business: Wholesale men, 37,000; retail men, 163,000. These figures represent dealers only. Number of employes, about 1,000,000.

These contribute little, if anything, to the wealth of the country.

The great wars of the world for twenty-five years, from 1852-1877, including the Franco-German war, and our own civil war, cost a fraction over $12,000,000,000.

Cost of intoxicants for the same period in the U. S. alone was $15,000,000,000

The liquor bill for the years 1852-1877 was more than the cost of all the wars of the world for that same time, by $3,000,000,000.

For every 1,000 killed in battle, whisky kills 12,000.

It is estimated that 50 per cent of insanity comes from drink.

It is said that $65,000,000 is spent in saloons in Chicago every year.

An international alcohol exhibition will be opened in Paris, France, the present month. Not only products, but processes, machinery and implements will be exhibited. There will be complete representations of distilling, brewing and cider-making, so that the public may trace the production of alcohol from its earliest beginning.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The peace and prosperity which will attend Christ's reign. Vs. 1-7. A psalm for Solomon means literally of Solomon, from which most critics infer that he instead of David was its real author. We may imagine it as written in the beginning of his reign when the heart of the youthful sovereign was full of plans for the good of his people—plans that, alas! he failed to carry out. But it must have a far higher application and wider scope than his own individual reign, or even of his dynasty, which numbered in its roll many tyrants and oppressors, and instead of enduring as long as the sun, came to an end a few hundred years after. It suits perfectly with the character of Christ's millennial reign. He will judge the poor and needy. Oppression and injustice will no longer be rife. Labor troubles will cease, for there will be no more "wages kept back by fraud," and strikes and boycotts will become as much things of the past as the petty wars of feudal times. In James 5: 1-7, we have a vivid picture of the "heaping up of riches" to be consumed in the fires of the last day. The beginning of this "time of trouble" we already see in the universal discontent which pervades the masses; and the terror and vague dread on the other hand, which is paralyzing the governments of the world. It will be a time of joy for the poor who have endured in patience, trusting to God to right their wrongs; but of weeping and wailing for their haughty oppressor. The transition from Satan's usurping reign to that of Christ, the legitimate ruler, will be a time of tremendous conflict; but his government once fairly established, it will be in its sweet and healing effect on our poor rent and torn humanity "as rain upon the mown grass."

2. His universal dominion. Vs. 8-17. "The stone cut out of the mountain without hands" is finally to fill the earth. All power and rule will be tributary to Christ, and the principles of his religion will be the corner-stone of every government, the foundation of all law. "He will deliver him that hath no helper." Let our nation ponder these words and do tardy justice to the colored people as well as to the Indians and Chinese, remembering that a terrible reckoning day is coming when a just Judge will avenge, "and that speedily," these victims of wrong and outrage. "Precious shall their blood be in his sight." For thousands of years the life of the poor has been held more cheaply than that of a brute animal. For how many centuries have they been only the foot-ball used by kings in their costly game of war. What multitudes of childish lives are even to-day stunted and miserable, toiling at unhealthy employments, and denied every chance for mental or moral improvement. How the liquor seller preys on the defenseless poor, and the nation, instead of being their protector, delivers them over to his greedy, fiendish clutches for a little paltry revenue. Under the prince of this world—or "age"—might has always made right; but when Christ takes to himself his great power and reigns, the oppressor will be broken in pieces, and equal laws justly and impartially administered shall everywhere prevail. This is the kingdom for whose coming we must do something more than pray if we would have our prayer answered. There are thousands who repeat this petition while by their selfishness and greed, and their indifference to the wrongs which exist around them, they daily give it the lie. Unless we set our faces as far as possible against every form of oppression and wrong, and refuse resolutely to profit from the underpaid labor of the poor, can we hope to have part or lot in the reign of such a Prince? The women of the Revolution refused to drink tea until the stamp act was repealed; and in anti-slavery times there were many who denied themselves everything which was the product of slave labor. If Christian people, especially Christian women, would boycott the "bargain counter," and every shop where the employees are not paid fair, living wages, it might go farther than we think towards bringing in that longed-for day of everlasting righteousness.

3. The blessed name. Vs. 18-20. David concludes with a doxology of praise "to Him who only doeth wondrous things;" for a reign of universal peace and justice must have seemed even more "wondrous" to him than to us. How sublime the faith that when the whole earth was covered with the darkness of heathenism could look forward and see it filled with his glory!

—At the Reformed Presbyterian Synod at Mansfield, Ohio, it was reported that the beneficences are larger this year than ever before. The Synod adopted resolutions approving the principles and aims of the National Reform Association and will continue to co-operate with it. It is also preparing for a vigorous prosecution of the work of political reform through its own ecclesiastical agencies. The Synod took strong ground on the temperance question, holding that the only safe positions are total abstinence by the individual and absolute prohibition by the State. The license system was condemned. Resolutions were adopted pledging the members of the Synod and Reformed Presbyterian people from entering the Columbian Exposition grounds if the gates were opened on Sunday or liquor was sold upon the grounds. The use of tobacco is denounced as leading to the liquor habit.

—The wonderful series of meetings on the Pacific Coast under Rev. B. Fay Mills has continued in power at Los Angeles. At the last meeting he held, Mr. Moody announced that he had addressed meetings in ninety-nine towns, and that there was not one in which he did not come across the fruits of his past work. The attendance at all the meetings has been very large, and it has been stated that at a moderate calculation between two and three thousand people have been present daily at the services during the four and a-half months they have continued. Mr. Moody has since journeyed to the Holy Land, and report comes back of preaching services held by him on the spot near Jerusalem, which is regarded by many scholars and explorers as being the true site of Calvary. A correspondent of the Young Men's Era describes the scene and motley company, with characteristic frankness and zeal. Mr. Moody preached to this company of Christ and him crucified, and of the new birth, the true plan of salvation, as contrasted with the empty formalisms of false Oriental faiths.

—Miss Alice N. Bacon, youngest daughter of the late Dr. Leonard Bacon, of New Haven, Conn., and author of "The Girls and Women of Japan," for nearly ten years has taught, without salary, in the Normal School for Indians and Negroes at Hampton, Va., with an interval of nearly two years spent in Japan. Besides teaching five classes a day in the Hampton school, and caring for a little motherless girl (given her by the child's father), she finds time to supervise the new Dixie Hospital and Training School for colored nurses which she has founded and to which she is giving the closest attention. Editorial work on the Hampton school paper and social duties fill in her spare time.

—The Princeton College Gospel Quartette, under the leadership of Paul Bliss, son of P. P. Bliss, the devoted Gospel singer and composer, who went down to death at Ashtabula in '76, is a company of Christian young men from Princeton College who are looking forward to the Christian ministry and missionary work. They are to spend a few weeks this summer at the Bible Institute of the Chicago Evangelization Society, on Pearson street. With them, as an attraction, Mr. R. A. —The criminal court of Berlin, Germany, decided that the Salvation Army, on account of its boisterous, theatrical character, and its social political aims, cannot be classed among religious societies, and that its devotional exercises do not merit the name of divine service.

—At the close of a series of meetings in Augusta, Ga., April 17, Sam Jones, the evangelist, said: "There have been 2,500 penitents, about 1,000 signified a determination to join the church, and the Lord only knows how many have been converted." Two abandoned the liquor business. Protracted services opened in all the Methodist, in the First Baptist, and in the First Presbyterian churches immediately after Mr. Jones' closed.

—Dr. J. E. Roy, A. M. A. secretary, reports that there is a vigorous Endeavor Society in the Indian Normal and Industrial School at Santee Agency, Neb. He says: "As a gentleman was spending the Sabbath there, he saw in the afternoon a lumber wagon driving around and a lot of Indian young people climbing in. He inquired, what does that mean, on Sunday? The answer was: That is the Endeavor Society, going out upon the Reservation to run a Sunday-school among the children of the white settlers who are coming in. These children of the red men, you see, are no respecters of persons. The same was also manifest when the missionary society of these same Sioux Indians took fifty dollars out of its treasury and gave it to the Sunday-school missionary of South Dakota to help plant Sunday-schools among the white children of the State."

In the trial of the seven aldermen indicted for conspiracy with attempt at bribery, the jury was drawn and the lawyers presented their cases. But Alderman Roth, the main witness for the prosecution, was so prostrated with nervous apprehension that he could not appear and the case was dismissed.

COUNTRY.

Three men were killed in a freight train wreck on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway at Hartford, Wis., caused by the giving way of a culvert flooded by a cloud burst.

From Denison, Texas, Guthrie, Oklahoma, and Milan, Mo., come reports of disastrous floods which have carried away railroads and bridges and destroyed crops. One entire family was swept away while fording the Canadian river. From Indianapolis is reported similar disaster from a deluge of water. Thousands of acres are under water and loss of life is added to immense damage to property.

A deal has been practically closed by which the Illinois Central railroad comes into possession of the Louisville, New Orleans and Texas Line, with its branches, covering a large area of the finest land in Mississippi and Louisiana. The proposal is that the Illinois Central pay $25,000,000 for the 798 miles of lines, $20,000,000 of which is to be in bonds and $5,000,000 in cash. The directors of the Illinois Central regard this offer favorably.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."

That beautiful and pathetic little ballad was written by a man who himself was homeless, and a stranger in a strange land. John Howard Payne would have been forgotten long ago had it not been for these few simple verses, which have endeared themselves to the human heart by association and memory. "There is no place like home, be it ever so humble," and how doubly true this is if it possesses that virtue of cleanliness (so nearly allied to godliness) which renders the plainest abode attractive, and without which the palace loses its chief charm.

But to keep clean we must have soap, which reminds us that the most liberal offer we have ever seen is that of Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., which appears in our paper this week. In fact, when the advertisement was sent to us we thought it too good to be true, so we sent for a Combination Box and are pleased to say we find the goods even better than advertised. The Chautauqua Desk is a most useful and beautiful ornament for parlor, library or guest chamber, and our readers who accept the offer will make no mistake.

HOME AND HEALTH.

PURE AIR AND THE FUNCTIONS OF LIFE.

Exercise, as well as pure air, helps us in our constant struggle against the poisons that we manufacture within ourselves. It does this by driving the blood charged with oxygen, by means of the pressure of the muscles called into play, more thoroughly through the tissue; and thus it would quicken the breaking down of dead tissue into its safe and final waste products [water, carbonic acid, and urea], and shorten the period during which the dead tissue was passing through various dangerous forms which it temporarily assumes. From this fact we may infer that the man of sedentary life, above all others, requires pure air.

In truth, pure air and exercise are equal forces acting in the same direction. They both get rid of waste, and with it of the poisons in the system which are depressing various organs. We need not, therefore, be surprised when we are told by Sir D. Galton that after barracks were better ventilated the rations of the men had to be increased; or by "the pathetic story" of certain seamstresses whose workroom was ventilated, and who then begged that the old state of things might be restored, as their appetites had increased beyond their earnings. Sir D. Galton gives another experience, illustrating the depressive effect of these poisons upon the functions of life. A New York medical man rather cruelly shut up some flies without food, some in foul air, others in pure air; the pure air being changed. To his surprise, the flies in the pure air died first, these dying from simple starvation; while the flies in the foul air died from poison, and with the tissues of their bodies unexhausted, indicating how the functions of life were carried on to the last where oxygen was available, but had been slow and depressed by the presence of the poison, so that life was actually maintained longer in the foul than in the pure air.—From Bad Air and Bad Health, in the Popular Science Monthly for May.

HOW TO BATHE PLEASANTLY.

Get enough Turkish toweling by the yard (you can get remnants) to make two pairs of thumbless mittens, just large enough to slip on over the thumb and allow the hand to stretch flat, also a large rough towel and a generous supply of tepid water, and, of course, soap, and either another towel to stand on or a piece of oilcloth four feet square.

It is very important to have a warm room, so that the body may not be chilled when you doff your garments. After taking everything off, stand on the oilcloth or towel in front of your basin, slip your mitts on, dip them in the water, squeeze the drips from the mittens, soap well and rub the body all over, beginning at the neck and ending with the toes. Take off the mittens, lay them down beside your basin; all the soil of the body will be in those mittens. Take your second pair of mittens, slip them on and go over your body again, rinsing the mittens several times, thus: Take the soap off the arms, then rinse, then to the waist, and so forth. Bathing thus rests and strengthens a tired body.

After getting most of the soap off (Dr. Dio Lewis says "it will not injure you to leave a little soap on the body; it counteracts the oil of the skin") slip off your second pair of mittens and rinse them out well; then wring them as dry as you can and rub the drips off your body. The damp mitts will not only dry the body, but it is wonderful the friction they produce and how they open the pores of the skin. Then dry with the aforesaid rough towel, which seems almost unnecessary, but that last dry rub gives an afterglow.

Give well children an all-over wash or bath with cold water twice a day. Give them as much fresh air as possible, and keep them cool, but be careful that in a sudden fall of temperature they do not get chilled. Light flannel clothing next the skin is better than cotton.

FARM NOTES.

CARE OF PORKERS.

The little porkers are putting in their appearance, and we must provide a little extra shelter for them. It need not be expensive. I will try to give the Farm, Field and Stockman readers the plan of mine, though it may not suit some of them: It is about three feet high at the back and five at the front. It should be a foot higher. It may be made any length that is desired. About eight feet wide is the right width. Divide it into rooms eight feet square. There should be a small sliding window in each compartment, and the top board at the back should be hinged so that it may be dropped to give good ventilation in summer.

Have a door in the front of each compartment through which the hogs can go into a pen which should be twelve or sixteen feet long. One good trough will be enough for each pen. Let the pen be well littered with straw.

As to the management of the sow before and after farrowing. Give her a good daily ration of some cooling food, such as bran and shorts; apples and small potatoes go well to help make up the bill of fare. Avoid whole corn and cornmeal; they are too heating, packing and fattening.

A few days before farrowing, separate the sow from the rest of the herd; put her in one of the pens, without much bedding, especially if you use straw.

After she has farrowed, do not at once give her much to eat; a bucket of warm slop, with a few handfuls of bran or shorts, will be good. Plenty of milk, shorts, and freedom in a good clover pasture will give health to her and her pigs. If a clover pasture is not handy, cut rye or grass and feed her on a clean floor or in an open yard that is dry.

Give the sow and pigs a chance to get exercise on the ground, even if you can not give them a pasture; and do not fail to make provisions for a clover pasture for next year's crop of pigs. See to it now if not already done.—A Kansas Farmer, in the Farm, Field and Stockman.

LABOR AND CLEANLINESS.

We find clover a great help in making our fields clean as well as rich. With a perfect stand of clover there is little room for weeds. We sow every foot of small grain with clover, and seed heavily. Any intelligent farmer who begins the battle against weeds and keeps it up—for "there is no discharge in this war"—is sure to succeed, and there is no more important point in agriculture. In the last two years I have traveled 10,000 miles through the best farming localities of the United States, and have inspected the farms with special reference to the weed question, and I doubt if one farm in 100 is as clean as it would be profitable to make it. Why should farmers grow regularly a crop which is of no possible value, but which fills the soil with seed to give them future trouble? Some will argue that there is fertilizing value in weeds and some benefit from shade. Granted; but we can grow for this purpose other crops which will do far more good, be profitable, and less troublesome.—Waldo F. Brown.

CELERY CULTURE.

The seeds are sown on well pulverized, highly-manured soil in the open ground as soon as it can be worked in the spring and the bed kept clear of weeds until when the plants are set out for the crop, which may be any time from June 15 to August 10.

As with other crops, well rotted manure thoroughly worked into the soil is of great benefit. Have the ground well prepared, and set the plants about six inches apart in rows four feet apart. The tap-root must not be curled up. The earth must be pressed firmly around the plant. Before setting out the tops of the plants off so as to leave two inches above the ground. If the plants are to be bleached by placing boards along the rows they need not be four feet apart.

After planting, nothing need be done but keep the crop clear of weeds until the handling process is to be begun. The "handling" consists in drawing the earth to each side of the celery, and pressing it tightly to it, so as to give the leaves an upward growth preparatory to blanching for use. Supposing this "handling" process is done by the middle of September, by the first week in October it is ready for "banking up," which is done by digging the soil from between the rows, and laying or banking it up with the spade on each side of the row of celery. After being banked up it will be ready for use, if wanted, in three or four weeks.

By many the blanching is now done by placing boards on edge along the side of the plants, keeping them in place with small stakes. Others use common drain tile, placing a length over each plant.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

FLOOD AND FIRE.

An appalling disaster, recalling the destruction of Johnstown, Pa., several years ago, occurred at Oil City and Titusville, Pa., Sunday forenoon, June 5th. A dam in Oil Creek gave away after a "cloudburst," and flooded the two cities and the intervening 18 miles of country. A tank containing distillate of benzine was lifted by the flood, and the whole surface of the torrent was soon covered by the inflammable material. A spark from a locomotive, it is thought, set fire to the benzine, one explosion followed another in quick succession, and hundreds of people who had come down to the bank to watch the rising waters were enveloped in the sheets of flame. The loss of life is unknown, and the loss of property well up in the millions. The mayor of Titusville in an appeal for aid June 12 says: "Fifty-nine bodies have been buried. Several persons are still missing. We do not need clothing, food, or other supplies. Our need will be money to relieve those who have lost by fire and flood and to repair the enormous destruction of property. The district devastated by fire and floods extends through the entire length of the city for about one mile and a-half. Its breadth is from one-eighth to one-fourth of a mile. The estimated loss of property exceeds $1,000,000. The losses fall chiefly upon the poor and the laboring people. Within the bounds named were more than 150 dwellings, as well as many shops, manufactories and oil refineries, where labor was employed. The loss of personal property in the homes of the people was a most total, while very many lost not only their houses and contents, but the ground on which they stood."

FOREIGN.

The floods in the valley of the Danube are increasing alarmingly. The inhabitants of Vienna have been officially notified that there is danger of an inundation.

A dispatch from Persia says that the cholera epidemic at Meshed, after a temporary abatement, is again increasing rapidly.

At Potchiuki, in the government of Nijnii Novgorod, Russia, a fire broke out Wednesday and destroyed 310 houses. The population of the town is only about 7,000, and the destruction of so many dwellings has caused much misery. Many of the occupants of the houses lost everything they possessed, and are dependent upon charity for their food.

The mail train running from Agram to Bron in Austria, was struck by a cyclone. Two of the carriages composing the train were lifted bodily into the air and hurled down an embankment, causing the greatest consternation among the passengers. Other carriages were knocked over by the violence of the storm and were badly smashed. Twenty of the persons on the train at the time it was struck by the cyclone were badly injured, some of them fatally.

An appalling accident occurred June 1 at the famous silver mine of Bohemia, the Birkenburg, situated near Przihrum. The timbers used in supporting the roof of the mine caught fire, and the flames spread from one part of the workings to another until the whole interior was a mass of fire. The escape of the men working in the mine was cut off. Five hundred men were working in the mine at the time of the accident. It has been found that most of the victims, including three men who lost their lives while bravely engaged in the work of rescue, died of suffocation, being overcome by the fatal gases which pervaded the entire mine. The presence of these noxious vapors has greatly retarded the work of rescue. After two or three days when the excitement had died out to a great extent and inquiries made among the survivors, it is estimated that fully 400 of the employes lost their lives in the disaster. Among those who were killed were five students from the mining academy, who were studying the working of the mine to gain a practical knowledge of mining operations.

Another week of storm and disaster, of disturbed elements and fatal accidents, has just passed. It may be that in some future time mankind will be intrusted with the regulation of weather phenomena; but at present it does not appear probable. Just now, scientific men are barely able to predict the weather conditions for a few consecutive hours, and that not often with perfect correctness. The inference is that the Almighty still governs the affairs of this earth, and that while he rules in love, he does not always take his creatures into his confidence. All that he asks of us is to believe that he doeth all things well. Surely our faith may reach that far, without a murmur.

The government Revenue Collector in this city is about instituting a crusade against the hundreds of clubs and social organizations which keep intoxicating beverages on hand for the use of their members. Under the provisions of the McKinley law, the officers and members of all clubs which neglect to pay the annual government license of $25 each are held to be equally guilty with those whose duty it is to see that the law is enforced. It is asserted that not more than one-half of these organizations ever pay the required tax, owing to the neglect of the deputy collectors. The collector proposes hereafter to see that his men are more vigilant, and the license-fee regularly collected.

The fact that from 20,000 to 25,000 persons visit the grounds of the Columbian Exposition every fine Sunday, each paying 25 cents admission fee, tends to complicate the question of Sunday closing when the Fair shall have been opened next May. It may be a problem of dollars and cents with the Fair authorities—one that has peculiar influence in most worldly affairs; but there are other considerations that should be paramount in the settlement of this question—not the least of which are whether God's commandment should be ignored, and whether the United States can afford to stoop lower in its respect for the mighty dollar than other nations which have set us a better example.

A bill was introduced in Congress last week appropriating $5,000,000 for the promotion of the Columbian Exposition, from which all mention of the closing of the Fair on Sunday was carefully excluded. This action, despite the millions of persons who have petitioned Congress not to permit the Fair gates to be opened on that day, is unwarrantable; and if the bill becomes a law without a proper amendment on this subject, the question whether this is a Christian nation or not will assume a new and important significance.

The war on fraudulent endowment orders is having the best effect, in reducing their numbers and exposing their methods and designs. In the Boston Daily Globe of June 14, notice is given that the Supreme Lodge of the Benevolent Union will wind up its affairs. An application was made to the State Supreme Court of Massachusetts, by all the officers and subordinate lodges of the order, last week, for an injunction and the appointment of a receiver. The ground for this action is the feeling of the community in relation to endowment societies, and the loss that would result should the business continue. The court took the matter under advisement. The world can very well do without these societies.

The sudden death of Emmons Blaine, of this city, son of James G. Blaine, not only casts a shadow upon social circles in which he was much admired, but forms a link in the accumulating disappointments and troubles of the ex-Secretary of State. The illness of the son is traced directly to his anxiety and arduous efforts to secure for his father the nomination for President at the Minneapolis convention,—a devotion worthy of a better cause, because it was almost a certainty that the nomination of President Harrison would be made. Whatever the shortcomings of the father have been, in a political sense, the Christian people of the country will not withhold from the afflicted family the sympathy which a series of misfortunes entitles them.

The Train Dispatchers' Association of America held its annual meeting at New Orleans last week. An important address was made by R. B. Woolsey, of Terre Haute, Ind., who opposed any attempt to transform the association into a "brotherhood," with all that the name implies, or any similar organization that would savor of a secret society, lest their purpose might be misconstrued as being antagonistic to their employers. If other labor organizations had the moral courage to manifest a similar spirit, and rely more upon the standard economic principle of demand and supply for support, than upon the whims of mercenary leaders and lodge ceremonies, they would find that capital is not a hard taskmaster, but a sterling friend to the frugal and industrious workman.

For several years past the water in Lake Michigan has been gradually decreasing, until the low-water mark recently reached a point about three feet below that of a few years ago. It is not known that any other cause exists for this subsidence of the lake than the inability of the streams flowing into it to maintain the usual average depth of water; and this may probably and properly be attributed to a lack of snow and rain. The laws of nature are very systematic, and the deficiencies of one year or more are liable to be made up in other years. The present season, since March last, has been unusually rainy, and the memory of old inhabitants finds it difficult to remember a time when the lands about Chicago, and in other portions of the adjacent country, were so flooded as at present. It will be in order now to find Lake Michigan filling up with the overflow to its normal depth. But in the meantime the surplus moisture on the shore has been uncomfortably prevalent.

Bro. J. T. Cullor, of Holyoke, Colo., informs us that last fall, after a good crop season in that State, the weather became very dry. At that juncture a man visited the principal towns in seven or eight counties and announced that by the explosion of certain chemicals in the upper air he could produce rain. The idea at once became wonderfully popular, and he immediately formed a money-making scheme of his assumed power over the elements. Now the farmers have been, and still are, giving him their promissory notes for 6 per cent of the yield of all land under cultivation, in order to raise $25,000 to give him a premium to insure them abundant rain this season to secure good crops. If the supply of rain furnished is not sufficient, the notes are to become void. Bro. C. thinks this sort of dickering is presumptuous and dishonoring to God, who is supposed to send the rain at the proper time upon the just and unjust alike. But is it any worse than trading in electricity by means of the telegraph and the telephone? The question interests both scientific men and theologians.

The case of Whitelaw Reid, Republican nominee for Vice President, is attracting considerable attention among the Union printers of the country, to whom he has been in opposition since 1877. At that time the Union printers in the office of the New York Tribune—Mr. Reid's paper—struck for higher wages, and he supplied their places with non-Union men. Until recently he has held the Union printers at bay. About a fortnight before the National Republican Convention assembled at Minneapolis, it is alleged, a reconciliation was effected between Mr. Reid and the Union. Since his nomination, however, the Union printers believe that the reconciliation was only a political ruse in order to secure their votes, and that he is really still antagonistic to their organization. They are now again in open hostility to him on this account, and their prejudices also extend to Governor Flower of New York, whom they accuse of breaking his pledges to them in the election contest of last fall. The specific charge is that he promised to use his influence to establish a State printing office, and that all his official acts, since then, have been unfriendly to this measure.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CHRISTIAN PRESS

BY CYRUS SMITH.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have received many Christian papers which ignore the secrecy question. I would be glad to write each a letter in the Spirit and mind of Christ. But I send you herewith a paper, which I hope, by the blessing of God, may reach and convince them.

The secrecy question will be settled right. It was so with the slavery question. Every question of vital importance to religion is always discussed till settled aright.

God never fails to bless the truth and the right with success, though there be but few on the Lord's side in perilous times.

THE OPEN LETTER.

DEKALB, Iowa, June, 1892.

DEAR BROTHER:—A sample copy of your excellent paper was received. It has a good name, but does not seem to be serving the God of Daniel on the secrecy question. It is anti-infidel, except on organized secrecy. And secrecy, entrenched by organization, can exist only through principles of infidelity, though it may have the appearance of a lamb and deceive many in the church.

Why not oppose all forms of infidelity, and especially lodge religion in Protestantism?

Since the religion of the lodge is known to be Christless, by all who can inform themselves, should we not try to undeceive those who take upon them the name of Christian and worship at lodge altars?

It is definitely stated by the best Masonic authority, in their books (seldom read however), that "Freemasonry is a religion. Freemasonry is not founded on the Bible. If it was, it would not be Freemasonry; it would be something else." A religion not founded on the Bible is a Christless work of darkness, unfruitful as hell in salvation. The divine command is to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," but we should "rather reprove them."

There are many who know they would grieve the Spirit of God if they were silent on the secrecy question. How very great our need to pray more earnestly for grace "to serve the present age!" May God bless you according to your need.

CYRUS SMITH.

WEEPING FOR TAMMUZ.

BY REV. WILLIAM WISHART, D.D.

As the prophet Ezekiel sat in his house in the land of the Chaldeans, surrounded by the elders of Juda, in the sixth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin, he informs us that the hand of the Lord God fell upon him, and that the Spirit lifted him up between the earth and the heaven and brought him in the visions of God to the temple at Jerusalem. The design was to show him the abominations which the House of Israel committed there.

There, under the guidance of the Spirit, he saw the "image of jealousy" at the gate of the altar northward, which probably was the image of Ashtoreth or Ashuera, set up by Manasseh as a rival to Jehovah in his temple. (See 2 Kings 21: 3-7 and 23: 4-7, revised version.) It was really the Syrian Venus, worshiped with licentious rites. Again, he saw still greater abominations, namely, every form of creeping things and abominable beasts, and all the idols of the House of Israel, portrayed upon the wall in the secret chambers of the temple, and seventy men of the ancients of the House of Israel with every man his censor in his hand, offering incense to these idols. This is what the ancients of the House of Israel were doing "in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery."

There is no doubt an allusion here to the mysteries connected with ancient pagan worship, to which none were admitted except those who had been initiated and to which the apostle refers when he says: "It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Eph. 5: 12. But again the prophet turns and goes under the guidance of the Spirit to the door of the gate of the Lord's house, which was toward the north, and there he sees still greater abominations, namely, "women weeping for Tammuz."

Who or what was this Tammuz? The etymology of the word itself is uncertain, and affords no light for the determination of this question; and the opinions of critics and commentators have been various. Some of them are quite fanciful and curious. The most common opinion, however, is that which regards the word Tammuz as the Syrian name of the Greek Adonis, and supposes that what the prophet Ezekiel saw was the idolatrous and abominable worship of Adonis introduced into the sanctuary of Jehovah. This was the opinion of that great and learned man, Jerome, who substituted the word Adonis in place of the original word Tammuz in his Latin translation of the Bible, about the beginning of the fourth century: and this opinion has been adopted by the great majority of commentators and learned men ever since that time. We believe it is the correct opinion.

Now the Gentile fable with regard to Adonis, was that he was a beautiful young shepherd, the son of Cymras, king of Cyprus; that the goddess Venus fell in love with him and frequently met him on Mount Libanus; and that Mars, who regarded him a rival, transformed himself into a wild boar, and while Adonis was hunting struck him in the groin and killed him; but that Venus lamented his death in an inconsolable manner, and went to the shades and obtained from Proserpina that Adonis might be with her six months in the year and continue the other six in the infernal regions. On this legend was founded the deification and worship of Adonis among the ancient Syrians, Phœnicians and Greeks.

The ancient Syrian and Phœnician women annually celebrated a feast in honor of Adonis. The manner in which they performed the ceremonies of this occasion seems to have been about as follows: First, in imitation of Venus, they wept and mourned and manifested the most extravagant signs of sorrow for Adonis as one dead. Then, afterwards, on the next day, they pretended that they had found him alive, and so spent a period of time in great rejoicing, while they yielded their persons to prostitution and consecrated the hire of their infamy to Venus. The former part of this ceremony was called "the disappearance of Adonis," and the latter part, "the finding of Adonis." It would seem, then, that what the prophet Ezekiel saw, was the women of Israel engaged in the former part of this ceremony—weeping and lamenting for the death or disappearance of Tammuz or Adonis.

But now can we say that this idolatrous worship, which was such an abomination in the sight of Jehovah, is among things that have entirely passed away? that it belonged to the absurdities and superstitions of a remote antiquity, but has disappeared before the light of our modern Christian civilization? Would that we could in truth so affirm, but we cannot. What is the worship practiced in the Masonic lodges in this Christian land but a continuation of this old idolatrous worship? What is the legend of the third degree in Masonry concerning the death and resurrection of Hiram Abiff but a repetition of the old fable concerning Adonis, who was regarded in the old pagan mythology as a symbol of the sun, and whose worship was therefore a part of sun worship? And what are the ceremonies of the third degree but an imitation of the old ceremonies observed in the worship of Adonis? Let us hear from Albert G. Mackey on this subject. The following is his language:

"The mysteries of Adonis, principally celebrated in Phœnicia and Syria. They lasted for two days, and were commemorative of the death and resurrection of Adonis. The ceremonies of the first day were funereal in their character, and consisted in the lamentations of the initiates for the death of Adonis, whose picture or image was carried in procession. The second day was devoted to mirth and joy for the return of Adonis to life. In their spirit and their mystical design these mysteries bore a very great resemblance to the third degree of Masonry, and they are quoted to show the striking analogy between the ancient and the modern initiations."

Again:

"In the mythology of the philosophers, Adonis was a symbol of the sun, but his death by violence, and his subsequent restoration to life, make him the analogue of Hiram Abiff in the Masonic system and identify the spirit of the initiation into his mysteries, which was to teach the second life, with that of the third degree of Freemasonry."—See Mackey's Symbolism of Freemasonry, page 314.

And again:

"In the popular theology, Adonis was the son of Cymras, king of Cyprus, whose untimely death was wept by Venus and her attendant nymphs: in the physical theology of the philosopher he was a symbol of the sun, alternately present to and absent from the earth; but in the initiation into the mysteries of his worship, his resurrection and return from hades were adopted as a type of the immortality of the soul. The ceremonies of initiation in the Adonia began with lamentation for his loss, or, as the prophet Ezekiel expresses it, 'Behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz,' for such was the name under which his worship was introduced among the Jews, and they ended with the most extravagant demonstrations of joy at the representation of his return to life."—Mackey's Symbolism of Freemasonry, p. 12.

Yes, Freemasons perform the religious ceremony of a mock murder and mock burial with inquiries and lamentations for the dead and a mock resurrection to life, connecting all this with prayer to God as if he were partaker with them in this mimic buffoonery; and their greatest writer and highest authority, Albert G. Mackey, has the shameless effrontery to recommend all this profane mockery on the ground of its identity with the idolatrous worship of Adonis, which he himself mentions as being introduced among the Jews in the time of Ezekiel, and which he cannot but know was a gross pollution of the sanctuary of Jehovah and a great abomination in his sight. Is it too much to say that Albert G. Mackey is either an open and professed infidel, or a notorious hypocrite? It is certain that the god with whom Masons have fellowship in the profane and idolatrous worship of the lodge is not the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hates and abhors all falsehood and hypocrisy, but the prince of darkness and the father of lies, who is the real object of all false and idolatrous worship. "But I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils and not to God." 1 Cor. 10: 20.

SEPARATION A NECESSITY.

BY M. PIERCE.

Christ proceeds to illustrate, in Matthew 6, the necessity of laying up treasures in heaven from a well-known fact, that a servant cannot serve two masters at the same time. His affections and obedience would be divided, and he would fail altogether in his duty to one or the other. One he would love, and the other hate. To the interests of one he would adhere; those of the other he would neglect. This is a law of human nature. The supreme affections can be fixed only on one object.

So says Paul: Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? 2 Cor. 6: 14. "Wherefore, come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you." Now, if that is not a very clear language—that if we are going to keep company with God we have got to be separated from the world, I don't know what is. I think the thing, however, is very plain; if I am yoked up with an ungodly man, how is God going to walk with me? How are we going to walk together except we be agreed? I cannot speak for others, but I could not belong to a secret society. Christ said: "In secret have I said nothing."

I don't see how a Christian man can yoke himself in partnership with an unconverted man. I say, separate yourselves from the world and the things of the world. God wants his people separate from the world; they will have ten times more influence. It is separation, not compromise, that we need; and the cry ought to be raised, Separation! Separation! There should be no compromise. Some try to control the pulpits on this subject; they say he does not preach according to our ideas; we don't want him. I do not see how any Christian, most of all a minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more by staying out, and re-proving these evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than had Lot. If ten Christians go into a lodge with twenty that are not, the twenty can vote anything they please, and the ten will be partakers of the sin. They are unequally yoked together.

We should be cautious of what we believe, and examine it by the Word of God. False doctrines are often made as much like the truth as possible, for the purpose of deceiving. The devil never comes boldly and tempts men to sin; he commences, therefore, artfully, and the real purpose does not appear till he has prepared the mind for it. The confidence is secured, the affections are won; then the allurements is, little by little, presented till the victim falls.

Every Christian should be on his guard when first tempted to join those oath-bound organizations. No Christian can unite with them with the full approval of his conscience. Men are prone to introduce foolish rites into religion. They do not love what God has commanded, and they attempt to compensate for not loving his doctrines by being great sticklers for their own. All ceremonies in religion which are not authorized by the New Testament are wrong. Man has no right to ordain rites to bind the conscience where God has commanded none. That close and faithful preaching which opens the heart and shows us what we are, is that which comes nearest to the example of Christ. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. Matt. 5: 16. Let your life and faithfulness be seen and known in societies, in business, at home and abroad; let it be seen that you are a real Christian. There are not only two religions, the true and the false; but two governments: the open and the secret, both appealing to the American people for their support. The one is constitutional, and ordained of God; the other is human device, without the Divine sanction.

THE PARSEES AND MASONRY.

BY W. B. STODDARD.

Writing under the heading "Zoroaster and Persian Dualism," Professor James T. Bixby says in the May number of the Arena: "All the powers and ways of darkness, everything that worked in concealment or by deceit, was to be forsworn and opposed by the true Zoroastrian." (Page 700.)

"So broad is the religion of Masonry and so carefully are all sectarian tenets excluded from the system, that the Christian, the Jew, and the Mohammedan, in all their numberless sects and divisions, may and do harmoniously combine in its moral and intellectual work with the Buddhist, the Parsee, the Confucian, and the worshiper of Deity under every form." (Webb's Monitor, Notes by Rob Morris, page 285.)

Like most Masonic assertions, this one of Webb's is far from the truth. There can be no religion so broad as to unite false and true worshipers. When the true worshiper condescends to unite in religious services with the false, he that moment becomes a false worshiper. When a professing Christian knowingly kneels at an altar and joins in worship with a Jew, he should not be again recognized as a Christian till he repents and discontinues his false worship. I desire mainly in this writing to call attention to the fact that the Parsees, heathen as they were, living it is supposed 2,000 years before the Christian era, did not, and the handful of their children living to-day in India will not, accept this compilation of lies called Freemasonry. Their religion, false and superstitious as it is, seems to be a marvel of righteousness compared to that taught in the Masonic lodge. Indeed, considering the light under which each system of religion originated, there is little comparison. Zoroaster taught chastity toward all. Masonry toward "Master Masons' wives, mothers, sisters and daughters" only. (See Master Mason's obligation.)

Zoroaster taught that Ahura-Mazda was God the Creator, and Sosiosh, God the Redeemer. Masonry teaches that there is a supreme being, and leaves the initiate free to choose any of the so-called supreme beings on exhibition. Zoroaster taught: "All sorceries and dabbling in the black art are to be eschewed." See Prof. Bixby's article. Darkness is essential to the life of Masonry. No, thank you, Mr. Mason! Your religion is not acceptable to the Parsee. It is too broad for him.

I would suggest to the Masons with big titles, who strut forth with feathers, imagining they have acquired a vast stock of knowledge from which their wives, mothers and daughters are forever excluded; who brag of the antiquity of their order, and the fact that they have taken all the degrees, when they have gotten all they can out of this system, that then they study the teachings of Zoroaster. They will there find a system of religion older, and infinitely more consistent, than that they have adopted.

ABSENCE OF CHRIST'S NAME IN THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Christians join the lodge for what they can make out of it, intending to be neutral on the subject of religion, but soon find that there is no neutral ground there, and they have to either justify and defend their position or abandon it. Some leave, but more stay and try to defend their position, from the Bible, and this is one of their strongholds, perhaps their strongest. I have met it oftener than any other. They say: "We use the Lord's prayer," and his name is not in it. I have a defence against that plea that I desire to put in the hands of every one. It is this: The time for the use of his name in prayers had not come, and it would have been improper to have used it then, for the Jewish religion was in full force then, and Christ taught as a Jew.

Under the Jewish dispensation the atonement was represented by the shedding of the blood of animals; but when Christ had finished his mission the blood of animals was no longer used for that purpose, but the blood of Christ was represented by the name of Christ. He then established the use of his name then and there and ever after to be used to represent the atonement. See John 16: 24: "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." Clearly implying that if they did not ask in his name that their joy would not be full; that their prayers would not be answered. See John 15: 16: "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name he will give it you." Clearly implying that whatsoever was not asked in his name should not be given. The Father had already driven the whole filthy race from his presence when he drove Adam and Eve out of the garden, and placed a cherubim at the gate with a flaming sword which turned every way to keep them out. Christ came in and purchased the privilege to address the Father if it is done in his name. If it is done without his name it is an insult to the Father to come into his presence like a horse into battle, full of wounds, bruises and putrefying sores. See Isa., first chapter, where and when it is forbidden. It is a great and presumptuous sin.

Christ not only taught in his own person that his name should be used, but he sent out his apostles to teach it, and to build his church on it, and "gave no other name whereby men may be saved." Acts 4: 12. See Rom. 1: 5: "By whom we have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name. The apostles were commissioned and sent out to establish his name. In Acts 21: 13, St. Paul declares himself ready to die for his name. In Eph. 5: 20, he says he "gives thanks always for all things, unto God the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." He would not even venture to give thanks to the Father, other than in the name of Christ. Again in Col. 3: 17, "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God the Father by him." Here again he teaches that it is a sin to even approach the Father without coming in the name of the Son for thanks or anything else. It insults his dignity. It rejects Christ. It sets aside the atonement. To omit his name is to leave him out as useless. Leaving out his name leaves him out for all there is of him, and to call him useless is to call him an impostor, for if he is what he claims to be he is not useless.

In the Lord's prayer his name should always be used after he ordered it, either expressed or understood. And it cannot be understood in a lodge prayer where it is expressly forbidden to be used. When the lodge excludes that name it shuts Christ out of the lodge and the atonement, and the only means of salvation.—L. B. Lathrop, in the Wesleyan Methodist.

REPORT ON MORAL REFORMS.

ADOPTED BY THE SYRACUSE ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE WESLEYAN METHODISTS.

The subject of Moral Reforms is a subject which should receive the careful attention of every person, and to that extent that the practices and habits of life should be in harmony with all reforms which can be established on Bible lines.

On the question of secret societies there has been so much written and offered year after year at our annual gatherings, that it is a question where to begin. Very likely there is no person present who would claim that the lodge was doing anything to raise the standard of morality. Taking the position that they do that they are religious organizations, and yet do not admit the name of Christ in the lodge, the name of the One who came to bring salvation to mankind, and who said of himself, "I am the light of the world," there can be no elevating of morals, but quite the reverse. But one says, there is no harm in the minor secret orders. If there was no other objection, all of these societies are composed of a mixed company, and the element that rules is not a godly element, but an element that intends to have a good time as the world counts good times, and the influence upon those who mingle there, who make a Christian profession, is to stunt a growth in spirituality rather than to promote it.

Men who claim to be followers of Christ will make excuses of distance, poor health and bad weather, about going to the prayer-meetings, and yet will go farther and in worse weather to get to the lodge. God grant that the day may speedily come when men who are in lodges shall seek the separation which Paul speaks of in 2 Cor 6: 17: "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." And those who are not in the lodge may seek the reception not of the lodge, but that spoken of by the apostle, continuing the quotation from 2 Cor.: "And I will receive you, and be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

INCIDENTS.

A few days ago we were the guest of a Christian friend residing in a town of my own county. He narrated the following to me as having occurred there:

"Recently a noted Masonic lecturer was addressing a large audience, loudly applauding his institution in this language: 'Freemasonry is the light of the world.' At that very instant the electric lights went totally out, leaving the crowd in darkness. They secured common lights and proceeded."

What a mercy the lecturer was not smitten down with permanent blindness or death. The county paper published where this occurred, and two other local papers reached my desk, but not a word touching this affair in either of them. Why not? Answer, "Ever conceal."

The following is a true copy of an incident published in an old copy of the Christian Cynosure, written by an aged minister of the Gospel in the M. E. church:

"Thirty-five years ago, at an M. E. annual conference held in Aurora, Ill., the secrecy question was warmly discussed. Bishop Hamlin said: 'No M. E. minister ought to belong to a Masonic lodge.' Barton Cartwright, son of the old pioneer, but very homely, took part in the debate. Some of the Masonic preachers planned to choke him off by presenting him a 'silver set.' He had spoken the day previous, and was permitted to finish the next morning. Conference convened and at the proper time Barton took the floor. The bishop said: 'Hold on a bit.' The bishop lengthily introduced the matter and presented the 'set'. His speech was knocked out of him, but he had enough left to remark, 'Gagged again, gagged again!'"

The reader can see the points. "Whatsoever doth make manifest is light." Why thus gag men for showing light and truth? Is it any better to-day in our courts? The wiles of the devil should be shown, and he himself resisted. The promise is, he will flee from us. Courage, dear reader. The Lord reigneth. Let us submit ourselves to God.—Geo. M. Freese, in the Christian Conservator.

ENCOURAGING WORDS.

The National Christian Association at its late annual meeting in Chicago reported the favor of God on its work against "lodge secretism." Through the press, the lecture field, and missionary labor, the light is shining. They desire especially to reach the ministry, teachers and students with truth on this subject. There is great need of this, as secretism, with its false religion and attendant evils, is corrupting the ministry, churches and colleges, as is plain to be seen. Its organ, the Christian Cynosure, is full of reliable truth regarding the character and evils of the lodge.

The world has lost one of its truest and strongest leading men for right against might in the recent death of ex-President Blanchard, of Wheaton College, and for twenty-three years editor of the Christian Cynosure. He took his stand in his young manhood, spending his first year after graduating in lecturing against slavery, at the peril of his life. He helped fight the battle through, standing true when Christian churches were compromising. He has stood just the same against lodge secrecy, as an educator, minister, lecturer and editor. Such characters are bulwarks of strength, and there is great need of them.—The Vanguard, St. Louis, Mo

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Bribery in the Massachusetts Legislature.—A prophecy of a Boston astrologer.—The "decline of rural Christianity."—The military drill in our public schools.

During these days of sweltering heat, which would do credit to the coast of Senegambia, one would think that the Massachusetts Legislature might wish themselves at home, and regret having idled away so much precious time in the earlier part of the season. "The most corrupt and venal Legislature which has sat in many a day. . . . a disgrace to the State." So says the Springfield Republican; and severe as is the verdict, no one who has had the patience—and it requires a great deal—to read their interminable debates, leading nowhere, and their see-saw treatment of every important bill, will complain that it is not a just one. The endowment orders have done exactly what might be expected of them;—resorted to the most shameless bribery and lobbying to defeat the Bennet bill, and get it referred to the next Legislature. Mr. Bennet has not been content to let the matter rest without calling for investigation, which after a little side-skirmishing was allowed. At the hearing before the committee, two of the most reliable members testified to being approached with a fifty-dollar bribe if they would vote against the bill. Among other inducements held out were free tickets to the theatre, and several dozen bottles of cider! One may pity, if one cannot pardon, the man tempted by the sudden glitter of gold to sell his legislative honor, but what of him who can place his vote in the scale against an evening's amusement, or the mere gratification of his appetite!

The Traveller publishes a type-written letter from Barrett, the Imperial Commander of the Five-Year Benefit Order, in which he says: "We must bend every energy towards killing the so-called Bennet bill." He urges them to see or write to their representatives, and ask that they vote against the bill, or refer it to the next Legislature. A fair specimen of the Sabbath desecrating spirit which seems to be a constituent and inherent part of the lodge everywhere is his advice in view of the fact that the House would probably act on Monday. "See your representatives Sunday; have letters written which will reach them at the State House on Monday; send telegrams to them." Truly, the family likeness between Masonry and the most insignificant of the secret orders is so palpable that "he who runs may read,"—if he only chooses to.

Coroner Mix characterizes the D. K. E. initiations as "barbarous" and "dangerous to life and health," but clears the actors in the late tragedy at Yale from any criminal participation therein, because "their carelessness was plainly the result of boyish fun." It strikes me, as I think it will any reasonable person, that when young men of twenty-one, and over, do not know the difference between "boyish fun," and tomfoolery that "endangers life and health," their proper place is not in a college but in some institute for the feeble-minded. His recommendation, however, was an excellent one, that in case the faculty fail to put a stop to these practices, the civil authorities should move in the matter. Will President Eliot heed the warning, or wait till the Harvard D. K. E. shocks the public with a similar tragedy?

A prophecy of Prof. Chester, the Boston astrologer, to the effect that Harrison would be nominated, while the Democratic Convention, to meet in Chicago, would choose some New York gentleman (not Cleveland) about June 24th, is of unusual interest owing to the fact that the first half of it has already been fulfilled. Certainly all Christian people who remember the disgraceful campaign of eight years ago will be thankful to learn that "the stars in their courses" are fighting against its repetition. Many who think of astrology as a long-exploded system of charlatanry peculiar to the dark ages, will be astonished to know that there are multitudes at the present day who are devout believers therein. The superstitions of one age are sure to reappear in some form or another. They seem to move in cycles, like comets.

The "Decline of Rural Christianity" is discussed by President Hyde, of Bowdoin College, in the last Forum, and illustrated by statistics that may well startle us. Of the population of fifteen counties in Maine more than half are non-churchgoers. In Waldo county there are 2,137 church-going families to 4,850 which are non-attendants; and in Oxford county, 2,711 of the former to 4,577 of the latter. He attributes it to giving husks to the people instead of the bread of life, and the preaching of a doctrinal theology, which has nothing to do with everyday life and conduct. This is rather hard on the rural pastors who, I believe, are not behind their city brethren in faith and zeal. President Hyde overlooks the part which the lodge has had in bringing about this sad state of things. The country towns and villages of New England have been overrun with the minor secret orders, many of which, like the Grange, take in both men and women—and it is to these little foxes that we may attribute the spoiling of that goodly vine, the country church. Will the rural pastors of New England accept the charge in silence, or recognize the real enemy which is killing the spirituality of their churches, drawing away the young people, and in other ways sapping their very life-blood? It is certainly very strange if a man like President Hyde is ignorant of these facts. While the country pastors of New England have been verily guilty in raising no voice of warning against the subtle enemy, it is not too late for them even now to put the trumpet to their lips and denounce these false religions which, in country and city alike, are so rapidly supplanting the pure Gospel.

Next to his Utah speech, nothing has made President Eliot more unpopular than his wholesale attack on our public schools; but nothing is gained by shutting our eyes to their defects. For instance, it is a good thing to teach the boys in our high schools—and why not the girls, too?—the principles of legitimate business; but not, as is done in one, at least, of Boston's public schools, the principles of financial gambling, thus teaching them in future years to be speculators and stock-gamblers. So of the military drill in schools. Far better for the boys physically and morally if this could be superseded by a course of industrial training. I was very glad to see in last Saturday's Transcript, from the pen of a high-school teacher, a brave and timely protest against this pernicious thing—the military drill in our schools. which he well said developed the war-spirit, and tends to make a machine of the boy, beside the immediate evils of the midnight supper and the dancing party which once or twice a year follow the public drill, dissipating their energies, unfitting them for mental effort, and, in many cases, placing them in the way of direct temptation to drink. I should like, with all due respect, to ask all parents and teachers who favor the teaching of military tactics in our public schools what the end of it all is if not to foster that spirit which makes the soldier a man—if he can be called such—who is to have no will of his own, but is to be a mere machine obeying blindly the will of his commanding officer, and becoming eventually food for powder and bullets? Now, the original end and aim of our public school system is to make the opposite of this:—intelligent, independent, thinking citizens. The profession of letters and the profession of arms have nothing in common; the military drill in our public schools is no legitimate part of the system, but an unhealthy excrescence which needs the surgeon's knife.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1892.

It seems that eternal vigilance is the price of prohibition, as well as of liberty. The prohibition of the liquor traffic in a few squares at the north end of Washington, brought about by the act of Congress prohibiting the sale of liquor within one mile of the Soldiers' Home, and which was so pleasing to the residents of that section of the city, is apparently at an end, and the bar-rooms are again in full blast. Just how this result has been brought about is not plain; it has been a sort of legal legerdemain. A short time ago the local papers announced that one of the liquor dealers in the proscribed section would contest the new law in the courts. When the case came to trial, the public were astounded to learn that the attorney for the District had entered a nol. pros., thus acknowledging his inability to convict under the law, although he still maintains his ability to find a way to stop the liquor selling; meanwhile it is openly going on.

It is claimed that the law is defective because no penalty is provided for its violation, and that it acts as a preventative to the application of the law against selling liquor without a license which applies to the rest of the District of Columbia. The temperance people of the District are thoroughly aroused, and determined to secure from Congress the necessary legislation to prevent this law becoming a dead letter. Two mass meetings were held Sunday afternoon for the special purpose of urging prompt action upon Congress. Mrs. E. A. Chambers, one of the speakers, a well-known temperance worker, stated that four days before the case mentioned above came up in court, a liquor dealer had boasted that $25,000 had been raised to be spent in fighting the mile-limit law. Between the power of the liquor dealers, always greater just previous to a National election, and partisan political matters, it is feared that the necessary legislation will not be procured at this session of Congress, unless the friends of temperance and moral reform in all sections of the country will interest themselves in the latter enough to write to their Senators and Representatives in Congress requesting them to give it just a little attention.

"Children's day" was observed in many of our churches last Sunday. Large attendance and interesting special services were the rule at all of them; but a very unique feature was introduced and successfully carried out at Mount Vernon Place Church, in the building of a five-foot-high fac simile of the South Washington Mission Church, of flowers, by the children of the Sunday-school. Each child brought a numbered section of the church closely covered with flowers, which was handed up as called for, and as it was put into its proper place the pastor added a few words about the pieces being emblematical of the strength and beauty of the church of God. The building of the church was a very pretty and interesting ceremony, which appeared to please the grown people quite as much as it did the children.

Representative J. H. Walker, of Massachusetts, told the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon why he was a member of the Christian church, and he told it well. He talked as a business man, and his wide experience in the business world had furnished him with a number of telling illustrations, which he used with good effect. Here is a sentence from his address that should be carefully read and pondered by every young person: "From my observation of the world I believe that there is absolutely nothing worth living for except to serve Christ. The character of Christ is the basis of all friendship, all love and all work for men."

Death has taken another member of the Fifty-second Congress. Yesterday morning, at an early hour, Representative Eli T. Stackhouse, of South Carolina, died from heart failure. Monday morning he returned from Raleigh, North Carolina, where he went to attend the funeral of his friend, Col. L. L. Polk, who died here last week. He appeared to be in his usual health, but while talking to a friend he was taken with a fainting spell. It was attributed to the unusual heat, and a few hours later Mr. Stackhouse was in his seat attending to business. When he retired, his son suggested that he allow him to sit up with him, but he declined. Before morning the son was awakened by the labored breathing of his father, and, going to his bed, found him unconscious. He died before the physician who was summoned arrived and without regaining consciousness. The remains were taken South this morning in charge of a joint Congressional committee. The Chaplain of the House said in his opening prayer, yesterday morning: "O, Eternal God, in whom alone are the issues of life and death, we come before thee to-day profoundly affected by the sudden passage from earth of one of our brethren, an honorable member of this House. We commend to thy Fatherhood the children who are stricken by this sorrow and pray that thou wilt grant to them thy comfort in their bereavement." *

If Christ were again on earth he would surely speak out against the abuse of the social principle and of the false method of raising church money resorted to in church fairs and festivals; against one rich, worldly man, practically determining who shall occupy the pulpit of the church which he attended; and against men becoming ministers not for the sake of souls, but for the sake of the profession and its emoluments.—Christian Witness.

REFORM NEWS.

ANTI-SECURITY AMONG OHIO LUTHERANS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 10, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A district synod of the joint synod of Ohio Lutherans has convened in this city. I have attended and listened with interest to the discussions during the past two days. A majority of the pastors are young men who have come from the seminary into the various mission fields where they have been called. Their churches are scattered through North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland.

As I have listened to the reports and seen the enthusiasm of these young men, my heart has been made to rejoice that there are those going out into the highways and hedges and compelling men to come in.

Two pastors reported their fields as eighty miles in length. Poor people, among the mountains and hills, are thus having a chance to hear of a higher and better life than they have hitherto known. Two brothers, Tressel by name, seem to have led the way. To one unacquainted with the power of God it might seem remarkable how much has been accomplished in the few years they have labored in this part of the vineyard.

Every minister of this synod is an anti-secret worker. I am to have a conference with these brethren at four o'clock this afternoon, at which questions pertaining to our work will be asked and answered. Several who have not read the Cynosure heretofore will do so hereafter. May it be an encouragement to them as they toil, surrounded by so much moral darkness!

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, June 17, 1892.

This is the 117th anniversary of the "Battle of Bunker Hill," which is observed as a legal holiday. Our part of the city is comparatively quiet, but Charlestown and Somerville are honoring the "patriotic dead" in speech, parade and a general racket. The sun shone full and strong until four o'clock, when a heavy thunder shower cooled the air very perceptibly. Only one mail delivery, stores closed, business suspended on the streets, and pic-nics and Sabbath-school excursions are among the noticeable features of the day.

Our legislative Solons prorogued the Assembly at one o'clock this morning, and retired to private life for a season. The session has been very lengthy, and often the scene of heated and, sometimes, of bitter discussion. The Journal of this morning, speaking editorially, says: "The record of 1892 is neither brilliant nor exhilarating. There have been multiplied indications of the work of corrupt influences, culminating in direct accusations of bribery. The opportunity which the Legislature had of putting an end to the endowment iniquity was first played with and finally thrown away. The same day which was signaled by open charges of bribery witnessed what the cynical might reasonably regard as the delivery of the goods, in the form of a vote in the House reversing its earlier actions and playing into the hands of the orders. The session has abounded in disappointments and painful surprises and it closes amid the developments of a disgraceful scandal. These are not words which it is pleasant to utter regarding a Massachusetts Legislature. There has been no legislation restricting or terminating the operations of the endowment orders."

The Journal, in its simplicity, does not seem to see that all the dereliction of duty on which it so justly animadverts is the natural outgrowth of fraternal brotherhood. As well expect the mother to strangle and devour her own offspring as the agents of Masonic or Odd-fellow orders to suppress or seriously interfere with their own progeny, which they have christened "Endowment Orders." The brotherhood tie is stronger than loyalty to principle in multitudes of men, and so long as such janizaries of the secret empire are sent to the Legislature, Massachusetts or any other States may expect corruption, and that the "wicked will go unpunished." Only yesterday a lady gave me an instance that occurred this week. She, with her daughter, has a summer residence near Boston. A portion of their goods had been sent preparatory to removal. The house was burglarized and several hundred dollars' worth of silver-ware, clothing, books, etc., were taken. Two of the burglars were surprised and interviewed by workmen employed on a building near by. But on finding that the workmen and burglars were brothers in the same secret order, said the lady, they were allowed to pass unmolested with their booty. Such is the legitimate fruit of secret sworn brotherhood; and putting a man into the State House, or sending him to Congress, does not make him honest or really "honorable."

We have, of late, been favored with a visit from Bro. John G. Fee and Pres. Stewart, of Berea College. Bro. Fee is carrying his years vigorously, but begins to show the effect of protracted and hard labor for the cause of Christian education in which he to early and heartily enlisted.

Bro. Hinman spent a week with us, looking after the financial interests of Berea College among its Boston and New England friends, meeting with fair success. He gave us an excellent talk at our Monday evening meeting, on the 6th inst., and a very interesting talk at Wellesley, Sabbath afternoon, on Education in the South.

Bro. and Sister Powers are rustivating among friends in New Hampshire for a time, and everybody who can afford it is either leaving or getting ready to leave the city.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

TO THE READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—Pray for a young pastor on the Pacific Coast, who feels "positively bewildered" by the pressure on him to join secret societies. He meets many ministers and others who belong to the lodges. He says: "If you can help me to still stand firm, I shall be thankful."

Last week I attended a Congregational Association, before whom a minister (who was also a Freemason) was on trial. The mystic brotherhood gave to those outside an apt illustration of this part of the obligation: That I will aid and assist a worthy distressed brother Master Mason, so far as his necessities may require, and my ability permit; and not a few present were able to understand it. The case was so clear that the chairman of the committee to bring in the report on the case (though himself a frater) felt compelled to sign the report; but, to make amends to his Masonic brother, he both spoke and voted against his own report! Truly, the way of the transgressor (Freemason) is hard!

Every one of this fraternity voted for their "worthy and distressed brother Master Mason," but they failed to deliver him from a just sentence. The majority of church members love God and hate hypocrisy and secret societies, whether supported by pastor or layman; and when godly people are enlightened, then the secret cabals of lodgites fail in securing their objects.

An incident during the noon hour is worthy of notice. Three of these Masonic ministers were together, discussing this pastor's case, when an aged delegate, and a deacon, joined them. He was at once asked, "Are you a Freemason?" When a negative answer was returned, it seemed to throw a "coldness over the meeting," and the conversation changed.

I have just had a pleasant visit from Rev. Edward Mathews, now located in Indiana. Many in Illinois and other States, where he has spoken as one of our lecturers, will be glad to learn that he continues to bear witness against the lodge-god; and, realizing how few the laborers, and how great the need, thinks he must enter the first open door for continuous work in this reform.

Rev. J. P. Richards, of Kansas, always finds a warm welcome at N. C. A. headquarters; and had I known that he was a delegate to the National Prohibition Convention, I should not have been surprised to have had him call on his way to Cincinnati. He is likely to remain some months in Ohio, and will add another reform worker to that State.

In answer to my invitation to furnish those who desired them with lectures on the anti-secret reform, I received word that the Swedish Oak Street Mission would open its chapel. Hence, on the evening of the 14th inst. we met about fifty young men and a few others, and I believe good was done. The "we" included, besides myself, Rev. and Mrs. Grinnell, sweet singers of the Gospel, and in full sympathy with the N. C. A. work, and Rev. E. R. Worrell, a Chicago pastor. His address was well-deserving the close attention which it received.

A word about this volunteer work. It is efficient. It is cheap. It pays. Will you have it? If you do not do what you can to place this kind of testimony before your neighbors, will God hold you guiltless? Write me if your church will open, and on what day of the week is most convenient.

We have every reason to expect one of the best years in our history is before us. What does that mean? It means the salvation of men, and the arousing of multitudes to a knowledge of the religion which the devil is furnishing the American people.

A minister has agreed to begin lecturing on the Pacific Coast next September. Our Bro. Fenton, who has just reached his home at St. Paul, Minn., has received an urgent request to return to the Western Coast. Rev. M. A. Gault stopped for consultation on his way West, and will probably spend the coming year in N. C. A. work. Rev. W. C. Paden has finally decided to give a year to the interests of this reform. Add to the above those who have long been laboring, and have we not reason to say: "We expect one of the best years in the history of this association?"

CORRESPONDENCE.

SAVED FROM SIN BY FAITH.

IDEAL, Carroll Co., Ill., June, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—"Answer it, brethren, for a soul hangs in the balance," writes Mrs. Platt, in the Union Signal.

To the question under consideration I answer, there is no power under heaven can keep a soul from Jesus Christ, providing the individual is willing to come to him. After more than ten years of struggling with the sins of the flesh, I heard a voice from heaven saying: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that all those who believe may be saved" (John 3:16), and other passages, all to the effect that Christ Jesus is able to save to the uttermost.

I came home from a Southern prison in my twenty-second year, a complete wreck. It was a long time before I could do any work, and after I became able to labor, I found that nearly all the robust men with whom I associated used tobacco—church members included. The notion that it was a health-preserver deceived me, in spite of the voice of conscience, and I began to use it as a remedy. The warmth of the smoke seemed to benefit me: but years afterwards I discovered how injurious to my system it had become. By that time the serpent had so coiled itself about me that I could not release myself from its power. The habit had reduced me to slavery. The poison weakens both body and mind, so that the young person, under its influence, is not able to grasp and comprehend the plan of salvation—too weak in faith to forsake the evil and overcome it, and to declare that "Jesus is my Saviour."

My belief is that if anybody is willing to come to the Lord and trust in his Word, the soul will be saved, whether the Gospel is fully understood or not. Coming with sincere sorrow for sin and a desire to live a new and better life, having faith in the Son of God as the only Saviour, salvation is assured.

This is generally a great difficulty—that the individual must fully understand the Gospel before he can accept the offer of salvation. The desire to be saved, when it reaches the throne of God, is all-sufficient. B. APPEL.

A REVIEW OF FREEMASONRY AS IT IS.

GARFIELD, Wash., June 10, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We have had much said and written about oath-bound secrecy, and, with your permission, I will briefly trace its origin and history.

First, in "Vincent L. Milner's History of the Religious Denominations of the World," in speaking of the popular and prevailing form of idolatry of the pagan nations, before and at the coming of Christ, he says that besides the public worship of the gods, to which all, without exception, were admitted, there were certain religious rites celebrated in secret by the Greeks and in some Eastern countries, to which a small number was allowed access. These were called "Mysteries," and persons who desired an initiation into them were obliged, previously, to exhibit satisfactory proofs of their fidelity and patience, by passing through various rites and ceremonies of the most disagreeable kind. The secret of these "Mysteries" was kept in the strictest manner, as the initiated could not reveal anything that occurred in passing through them without exposing their lives to the most imminent danger.

Verily, this sounds like a Masonic or an Odd-fellows' oath or obligation; and the prophet (Ezekiel 8: 12-16) saw these same idolatrous sun-worshippers. King Herod also took a rash and foolish oath, of which we all know the results. Likewise did those Jews who swore that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul.

The next place in which we find oath-bound secrecy is in the history of the Spanish Inquisition, where the officers of the institution were put under oath to keep all that transpired there a profound secret, at the peril of their lives.

Again, we find that at the instigation of the Jesuit priesthood of the Roman Catholic church, who had wormed themselves into the guilds of operative brick and stone masons, for speculative purposes, called the lodges together, in the city of London (Eng.), on the twenty-fourth day of June, 1717. There and then they organized the present grand lodge system of Freemasonry, changed its name and character from operative to speculative, and opened wide its doors, to take in all able-bodied young men, between the ages of twenty-one and fifty years, provided they can pay a liberal initiation fee and stipulated annual dues as long as they live. They also established the Masonic ritual, with the signs, grips, passwords, and oaths, with death penalties (in the first degree), to "ever conceal and never reveal" the secrets of the fraternity, under no less a barbarous punishment than to have their throats cut from ear to ear, and their tongues torn out by the roots.

In all this we have brought to view, in its organized form, the secret empire of Freemasonry—the Apostle John's image of the first beast (pagan Rome), made by the second beast (papal Rome). Afterwards the deadly wound of the first beast was healed; and ever since then this image (Freemasonry) has been doing the dirty political, speculative, treasonable and murderous work of which the Jesuit priests had charge before the Reformation and during the 1260 dreadful years of Rome's power and glory. For proof of this, please turn to Revelation 13: verses 3, 12, 14, 16 and 17.

Thus it is evident that Freemasonry is pagan—truly heathen—sun-worship, a child of Rome; and Freemasonry, in turn, is the prolific mother of all other secret societies now in existence, down to the latest and least of them.

We have now seen the origin, the sinful parentage, of oath-bound secrecy; but I can find no law, civil or divine, for either the administering or taking of such oaths. Indeed, they are a violation of the existing moral law of God, which says: "Thou shalt not kill," besides directly leading men to infractions of the other commandments in the decalogue; hence they are blasphemous and wicked.

My Bible teaches that men must repent of their sins and then confess and forsake them before they can experience forgiveness; therefore, if these sinful oaths are to be kept, as is taught by standard Masonic authors, they would bar and bolt the door of heaven against the last mother's son of them! When did the devil ever invent a grander scheme to cheat men out of their souls' salvation, since he deceived our first parents in the garden?

It is passing strange to me that any virtuous or honest man, and much less a minister of the Gospel, or a church member, can thus swear away his freedom of conscience and place his life in the keeping of any irresponsible clan; and if any have been led to commit themselves to this vile system, they ought to be heartily ashamed, repent, confess and publicly renounce all affiliation and fellowship with it. (See Leviticus 5: 4, 5.) In the language of Joseph Cook, I would say to those who are out, stay out, and to those who are in, come out, that they be not partakers of her sin and go down in her condemnation.

Those who desire to know the destiny and final doom of the beast and his image—twin evils—I would ask to read Revelation 16: 2-6; 19: 20, and 20: 4-10. "So mote it be!"

In the foregoing I have given but a mere outline of these evil powers, but it may be suggestive of thought; and I hope that some abler pen will take up the subject and trace the relation between Mother Rome and this image-influence in a tract.

S. SIMPSON.

A PARADOX.

FAIRFIELD, Wis., May 27, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Not long since, a man from your State, named John G. White, whose address I have forgotten, lectured in Baraboo four times, in exposition of Romanism. I heard only his last discourse, which was good. The Catholic priest, much offended by the previous lectures, had replied to White in the columns of a city paper, which was the cause of the latter's fourth effort.

There was one statement in this closing lecture which I wish to notice. In vindication of himself, he said that he was a Cumberland Presbyterian minister of fifty years or more of active work in preaching and lecturing, and had been for about twenty years fighting Romanism. Among other things he placed to his credit was the fact that he belonged to several benevolent organizations, and that he was a Royal Arch Freemason. Whew! How is all this?—a Royal Arch Mason teaching the abomination of the sinful oaths of Romanists!

It struck me, at first, that the man must be blind in one eye. I sat well in front, and had not seen it. Another thing: I had supposed that all the claims to benevolence made by secret societies were shams; but here was a Cumberland Presbyterian minister, nearly seventy-four years old, calling Masonry benevolence. Surely, I thought, the man must be blind; but, after all, he may have been thinking how many men had been buried at Masonic expense—as, for instance, the burial of William Morgan in Niagara river, for which his widow was charged never a cent!

WALLACE PORTER.

THE CIVIL POWER—WHAT CONTROLS IT?

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y., 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I hereby give you my views on prophecy, which you are at liberty to publish or discard as you think best.

I believe that the woman called the mother of harlots in Revelation is the papal church, and that the beast she rode was the civil power, over which she had full control. If you mention to a Catholic anything concerning the punishment of heretics, he tells you "it was not the church but the laws of the land which inflicted those cruel tortures upon them." And the question arises, Who made those laws? The civil power, the beast on which the harlot rode and over which she had full control.

No person can rightly be called a mother who is without an offspring, and it appears that this woman had more than one, for she is called the mother of harlots, plural number, but does not say how many; yet it is as certain that there are daughters as it is that there is a mother. Where are they? How shall we find them? Why, if we can find those who are following in the same tracks and bearing the same marks, it looks as if there was some connection between them. All sects of professed Christians are upheld by the civil power; they could not sue or be sued without their corporate franchise; and, generally speaking, at the present day they ignore the power of the Gospel to change the heart, subdue the will and control the passions, and are using their influence to induce the civil powers to pass laws to reform men and bring them into their fold. The old mother tried the same plan for centuries and failed, and the daughters cannot succeed by following in the same track.

What you say about secret societies is true; they are our rulers and law-makers, and have the controlling power. No man can be elected to an office of importance unless he belongs to them; agitating will increase rather than diminish their number. I think it would be a good plan to ascertain whom we are fighting, and begin at the head—President Harrison, his Cabinet, the Senate and Congress; and I doubt if you can find ten men among the whole who do not belong to some secret society. I doubt not, also, that there is more corruption and speculation among the members than in any other government on earth; and they encourage socialists and anarchists, traitors to their own governments, to come here and be protected. Patrick Egan, who was treasurer of the society which caused the death of Lord Cavendish and his companion in Dublin, some years ago, came to this country for protection; and there is little doubt that the money was collected in this country, passed through his hands, and was paid to the assassins for committing this atrocious deed. Still, our administration saw fit to honor him with a foreign mission, and sent him to represent this government in Chili. A man cannot put fire in his bosom and not be burned; neither can men violate justice with impunity without receiving their reward.

And what do the signs of the times indicate for the future—any improvement? No! Wicked men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived; crime is on the increase all over the land; more murders occur here than in the whole of Europe. Paul's prophecy in the third chapter of his second letter to Timothy is being fulfilled; and as time passes it will be plainer and more conspicuous to those who are watching and not blinded by the "peace-and-safety doctrine" that Christ cannot come until they have converted the world, etc.

The prophecy of James, in the fifth chapter, is beginning to be fulfilled: "Go to now, ye rich men; weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you; ye have heaped together treasures in the last days," etc. See the Russell Sage affair; other rich men have received threatening letters, and I expect to hear of more cases of violence.

UNLOOKED-FOR HELP.

[Addressed to the "Light-Bearers"—the Boys' Band, of Illinois.]

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich., June, 1892.

DEAR BOYS:—Your draft on Chicago, sent to me for the work among sailors, is safe at hand.

As I leave by the first train, on a mission of mercy, to be gone five days, over a territory of 600 or 800 miles, you will excuse haste in my reply to your kind offering. I will say—

After this I shall have a new argument with which I can reach the poor sailors. Dear boys! Think for one moment how these brave men of the great Lakes will open their eyes when I tell them of you, as I hand to the captain of each boat a large number of all kinds of extra tracts and papers; with God's Word, all nicely done up in a sack, stamped with the name of our mission, our street and number, so that if these sailors stop they will know there is one place in the city where they are safe and will find friends, with all needed help, etc.

Now, boys, you will see, as I make plain to you, how I am bound to make your kind offering tell to the awakening (and I hope to even the salvation) of many poor sailors. In the past, as I have handed them these sacks of precious reading, I have said: "Let all remember, these are the offerings of the best mothers and daughters of America, who not only remember you in storms, but earnestly pray for your present and everlasting salvation!"

Right here, my boys, you will come to the front. I will say: "Dear sailors! I must tell you the last thing God has done for you. I think it will surprise you, as it did me. I was not even thinking that the dear little boys wanted to help the dear sailors all to find the old ship Zion, to get from Jesus a free pass to the New Jerusalem. A band of small boys at ———, Ill., called the 'Light-Bearers,' sent me a check to help you, dear sailors. God bless the boys!" I will tell them, from time to time, a little about our mission. Ever in his dear name, RUFUS SMITH.

The distiller and brewer wants saloons at other doors, but not at his own. A Chicago paper says that Mike McDonald, well-known to the saloon frequenters, has entered upon a war against the location of saloons near his fine residence on Ashland avenue. George Ehret, the millionaire brewer of New York, strenuously objected to the issue of a license at a corner store opposite his palatial residence and declared he would buy up the whole block of buildings rather than have a saloon near his dwelling. Thus distance lends enchantment.

A new fast mail system, said to be capable of wonderful speed, has been devised by Dr. B. E. Osborn, of Auburn, N. Y. It consists of an aerial electric mail car made of aluminum, supported by compressed hydrogen, and running on two large trolley wires. Electricity from the wires communicates with the motor inside the car, and sets into rapid motion a series of fans and wings. The front is surmounted by an electric light. This car, it is claimed, will transport about one hundred pounds of mail.

In excavating some ancient Aztec ruins in the direction of Chaco Canon, New Mexico, Gov. Prince has unearthed twenty stone idols of different type from any before discovered. They are circular in shape, forming disks varying from six to fifteen inches in diameter, the upper half containing a deeply-carved face, and the lower half rudimentary arms in relief. In the last eight years Gov. Prince has excavated over 500 stone idols, but these are different in form from any others, and are believed to be at least 600 years old.

The woods of Voldivia are famous, and the fruit of Coquimbo is greatly esteemed. The foreign trade of Chili by the latest statistics is $120,000,000 a year, equally divided into exports and imports. Chili is an illustration of what a developed South American country can do. The United States' imports from Chili last year amounted to $3,183,249, and her exports to Chili were $3,145,627. It has often been noticed at the beginning of January the death is announced of a number of prominent men. The reason is probably found in the fact, not that great men are more prone to die in January than at any other time of the year, but that the weather in that month is unsettled, and consequently hard on the constitution alike of great and humble. Great men are only human after all, and a great man, physically weakened by hard work or disease, is just as likely to die from a change of weather as though he were a day laborer. The mortality tables show that the month of January and the first month of exceedingly hot weather in the summer are more

The Proper Way to Clean and Polish Silver.

Visitors to England are often struck with the dazzling whiteness and brilliant finish of the grand old dinner and banqueting services, many of them centuries old, but in appearance equal to new silver. The English silversmiths have the advantage of a special preparation which has been popular with them for the past seven years. It is not altogether unknown in our country, and considering the beautiful silver-ware that now adorns most of the refined homes of America, an article that will not scratch the exquisite workmanship of valuable silver, and prevents tarnishing, should be as widely used as it is in the Old World. We refer to GODDARD'S PLATE POWDER, for which a depot has just been opened in New York. If you would preserve your silver ornaments and plate-ware, you should use it regularly. With reasonable care a 25-cent packet will last for many months. If not obtainable at your grocer's, it will be mailed free for 25 cents.

THE BLASPHEMY OF MASONRY.

Between its efforts to prove that Freemasonry is a religious institution (but not too religious), and that it is the handmaid of Christianity without being a Christian society, the fraternity is often obliged to resort to language peculiar for its untruthfulness and positive blasphemy. A case in point occurs in "A Mystery Solved: An Explanation of the Third Degree, by David Ramsay," printed several months ago in the Chicago Voice of Masonry.

Most anti-secrecy reformers are aware that the Master's "sublime" degree represents a murder, a burial and a resurrection, and that it is founded upon the ancient pagan tradition of Osiris. Careful examination shows that the mysteries of Osiris and the tragedy of Hiram Abiff are based on the same system of natural religion. Masonry claims that the resurrection of Hiram Abiff is symbolical of the power of Christ, "the Lion of the tribe of Judah," in the person of the presiding "Worshipful Master" of the lodge, who brings Hiram to life by "the strong grip of the lion's paw." The claim that the Masonic ceremony has any reference to Christ and his resurrection power is blasphemous, for the tradition of Osiris shows us that the lion whose paw rescued him from the grasp of death was Leo, whom the pagans immortalized by giving his name to a constellation of stars. The whole tradition is closely connected with the ancient Baal-worship—the adoration of "the hosts of heaven," which God so plainly denounced and so signally punished.

Mr. Ramsay, however, with the arrogance, ignorance and prevarication common to the Masonic system, endeavors to convert the history and character of the Third degree into a semblance of divinity, and gets so far in his explanation as to admit there is a "deity," but there is in that character, as discovered by him, more of "Jove" than "Jehovah," or "Lord," as expressed in the first quartraine of Pope's "Universal Prayer." Let us give Mr. Ramsay credit, however, for one truism, when he says: "Masonry is no more Christian than Christianity is Masonic." In other words, there is no affiliation in them.

He also draws a conclusion from his study of the pagan myths, that out of Masonry springs "the hope of immortality and the realization of things yet to come," and that "the belief in immortality . . . is but a foreknowledge of something else." Then, from that position, he utters this horrible deduction: That "each graduate in each degree of Masonry is but ascending on the symbolic ladder to that cloudy canopy which shrouds the present God, and is so advancing to the knowledge of the mystery of man."

As we write we have at hand the expositions, obligations, and lectures of forty-eight degrees of Freemasonry; and it would be safe to wager a reasonable amount that in all of them there is not a single passage that tends to lead a soul to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ—the only Deity we acknowledge—so readily and truly as the third chapter of John's Gospel, verses 11 to 21. It is worth more than all the heathen philosophy that was ever taught.

We have charged Mr. Ramsay with ignorance. One statement made by him is this: "The very first murder recorded in Hebrew history is that of Abel. Abel signifies breath." "The cessation of 'breath' might be regarded as a figure of death." Not so—it is death—the reality. But what the death of Abel has to do with the mummery of Osiris and Masonry in the Third degree it is not easy to realize. Even Mr. Ramsay does not claim the connection. Nor is it easy, likewise, to understand Abel as a type of Christ, save that he died in innocency.

One or two more quotations from this characteristic Masonic paper must suffice:

"Whatever, as men, we believe, we do not make Masonry Christian; still more earnestly do we insist that whatever we believe, in viewing Masonry and its hypotheses, we would lay no profane hand on the Christian altar, and, speaking of any creed, view it only in a humanitarian point, as one expression of adoration." The gentleman is not very clear, but we understand him to say that any creed is an expression of adoration, no matter from what source it springs. This is entirely in harmony with the Masonic principle, which combines Christians, Mohammedans, deists and non-professors in its pagan worship.

The object of this remarkable address is thus summed up by its author: "We have endeavored to hint these two results: That in Hebrew Scripture there is found a prophecy of the Third degree; that in Christian evangile is the record of the same great truth, almost as if the Third degree were symbolical of that story of passion."

The nonsense embodied in this passage is unworthy of attention; and its horrid blasphemy is all that deserves notice. Prophecy, it is admitted, does refer to Masonry, but only as the image of the beast seen and described in Rev. 13: 14-17.

MASONIC FINANCIERING.

An attentive correspondent in West Virginia sends us the following details of a peculiar business transaction that came to his knowledge, with the names and residences of all the parties concerned.

G. M., a non-Mason, living in Greene county, Pa., sold a horse to a Mr. P., a Mason, of the same place, for $105, and took P.'s note therefor. Time passed, and the note remained unpaid. P. began to prepare to remove from that township, by putting his property out of his hands. M. desired to see his money—in fact, could not well do without it longer. P. could not, or would not, pay him anything, but directed him to an old gentleman in the vicinity, Mr. B., who would probably cash the note. B., at one time in his life, had joined the United Presbyterians. After a time, however, the church became distasteful to him, and he entered upon a career of mingled whisky and Freemasonry. For this defection he was justly expelled from the sanctuary.

Following P.'s advice, M. presented himself at the office of B., and offered him the note. But he was subjected to a heavy discount, and obliged to give a written lien upon about a hundred acres of his own land, to meet the contingency of a failure on the part of P. to liquidate the demand, before he could receive his money.

M., now finding himself bound for the payment of the note, urged P. to "lift" it, accompanying his request with a threat that unless it was settled he would "do something"—that is, urge B. to collect it. P. replied: "You cannot set my brother on me." "Brother?" said Myers; "how is he your brother?" "He is a brother Mason of mine," was the reply.

M. having learned that one G. owed P. fifty dollars, went to B. and instigated him to attach (or garnishee) the amount and save, at least, that much. B. positively refused to do this, and M., in distress, pressed the matter. B. became angry, then abusive, and ordered M. out of his office. M. could only submit and retire.

The affair remained quiet for some time after that. In the meantime, P. had collected his fifty dollars from G., and otherwise arranged his business to suit himself. B. then sent for M. and benignantly informed him that while he did not wish to resort to harshness in the collection of P.'s note, yet, as M. had given him a lien upon his farm for the payment of it, with all costs, and P. could not well pay it, the security must be forfeited. Myers, who could not very well read writing, therefore decided to buy back his note and collect it himself from P. But when he reached home he discovered that B., or some one else, had written a few words on the back of the note that forever released P. from his obligation to pay it.

Here we have an instance where a plain farmer was deliberately cheated by a brace of Masonic "brethren." M. was, of course, not a brother—that is, Masonically speaking, and had (also Masonically speaking) no claim upon the Masonic benevolence of P. or B.; but that they defrauded him was neither a Christian nor a humane act. The Scripture rules: "Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor" (Lev. 19: 13), under the ancient Hebrew law, and: "For you know what commandment we gave you by the Lord Jesus . . . that no man . . . defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such" (1 Thes. 4: 2-6), under the Christian dispensation, were both disregarded. Yet these cases of fraud are continually occurring under the influence and working of the secret lodge. Setting these facts against the boasted "benevolence" and "morality" of the fraternity, the duplicity and shameful character of the Masonic empire receives a new revelation that bears fresh evidence to its diabolical origin.

THE SCHOOL WAR IN CANADA.

The Dominion of Canada is just now in a religious ferment, arising from a clashing of educational interests between Protestants and Romanists, and the quarrel is further intensified by the action of the Orangemen, who demand the abolishment of the sectarian religious schools supported by the Roman church.

When the English conquered Canada from the French, they guaranteed to the French Canadians in lower Canada the free exercise of their religious and social rights, according to the institutions to which they had been accustomed, one of the most prominent of which was the Roman Catholic church. The English residents, prejudiced in favor of the Established Protestant church system so strongly united to the government of Great Britain, believed that "Protestant succession" was synonymous with loyalty to the crown, and as they were practically all officials of one kind and another, their loyalty was of the most exaggerated type. The fundamental difficulty, therefore, arose out of an attempt to make a united people of two sections, different in race, mind, language, and in the main different in religion, one section the descendants of conquerors, the other descendants of the conquered.

The first result manifested, as might have been expected, was the impossibility of having one system of education for all. In lower Canada the Roman Catholic church undertook the education of the French Canadians, independently of the public school system created by the Protestants. In Upper Canada, where a majority of the residents were Protestants, public schools were popular and largely patronized.

"When the two provinces were united in 1841," writes an intelligent historian, "though the union was legislative and not federal, there were separate laws for each regarding education, the principle of separation on the basis of religious belief being fully recognized in the case of Lower Canada, while it could hardly be said to be conceded at all in Upper Canada." Later on, when the Dominion of Canada was formed by the federation of several British American provinces, the principle of separate schools in Quebec and Ontario was embodied in the constitution.

The peculiarity of this arrangement was calculated to create trouble; for it was understood that where the English Protestants were in the minority they must be allowed separate schools, but where the Roman Catholics were in the minority the same privilege was not to be accorded them.

When this vexed question became a prominent factor in the political campaigns of the Dominion, as it is now, the excitement was greatly augmented. The reading of the Bible in schools became a disturbing element in educational affairs, in connection with an effort to combine common tuition with moral and religious training. A book of Bible readings for use in the schools was compiled by the Roman Catholic minister, but it was not well received, and local boards were authorized to substitute the Bible itself.

Subsequently the new province of Manitoba assumed the power to abolish the separate school system. There was a loud popular demand for a unified school system before the government acted. The Roman Catholics contested the validity of the new law, and though the provincial courts went against them, the supreme court of Canada on appeal has ruled in their favor, holding that the words in the constitution of the province guaranteeing such schools as previously existed by law "or custom" covers and protects the separate schools. The provincial government has appealed to the judicial committee of the privy council, the highest court in the British empire. It is not believed that the decision of the supreme court of the province will be reversed, but friends of the Manitoba government declare that separate schools must be abolished, with or without the consent of the courts and the constitution.

Another sinister influence in the discussion of the Canadian school question is the cry raised by the Orangemen that the minister of education, in preparing a book of Bible readings, had sacrilegiously mangled the Scriptures to suit himself and his master, the pope of Rome. Soon a squarely-made demand was made that Roman Catholic separate schools should be abolished. This cannot be done legally without a change in the constitution. This in itself might not be an insuperable obstacle, but if the majority is to rule untrammelled in Protestant Ontario, it is thought that the majority in Roman Catholic Quebec will not consent to be bound.

Thus, at present, if the foregoing statement of the situation is correct, Canada is seriously embroiled in a religious war.

The United States, too, is undergoing a trial of a similar character, and the result is still so obscure that even an estimate of the denouement must be withheld.

The position of Illinois upon the subject of education is thus expressed in the platform of the State Republican party adopted at Springfield a few weeks ago. It bodes no good to the present common school system of the Prairie State:

"Upon the important subject of education we declare: (a) That since the success of universal suffrage and of popular government requires universal intelligence, therefore the free common schools of Illinois are the chief bulwarks of the commonwealth and the safeguard of liberty. (b) That the education in elementary branches of each child in the State should be required by law. (c) That all persons and those standing in the parental relation should be left absolutely free to choose in what schools and in what manner they will educate their children. (d) That in no case shall school officers or civil authorities be given authority by law to interfere with private or parochial schools. (e) In pursuance of these principles we pledge ourselves to repeal the present compulsory school act, and in lieu thereof to enact a law in harmony with the views herein stated."

"MASONIC NATIONS."

A man born in the United States is tacitly considered a citizen, simply because he is native, "to the manor born." At no time in his life, unless he accepts office under the general government, is he required to make oath that he will "support the Constitution of the United States." And only when he becomes an employe of any State government under which he is born, or under which he lives, is he sworn to support the Constitution and laws of that State. The fact of his citizenship depends alone upon his birth. With the alien who becomes a citizen by naturalization, it is different. He is sworn to support both the Federal and State Constitutions before he can claim his prescribed rights as a citizen. Then he and the native become "free and equal under the law," and no undue partiality can be justly shown to either. They are equally favored and equally liable to the powers that be, notwithstanding their "race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

This disposition of individual freedom and responsibility is believed to be the best that can be made of humanity. It has the sanction of the Constitution and general government. Birthright and adoption are thus united in a common brotherhood.

It will be noticed, however, that the ex-alien citizen is the only one sworn to support the government. The other is not. This peculiarity may have an important significance.

In a report to the Masonic Grand Lodge of Maine, made in May, 1891, by Josiah H. Drummond, occurs this extraordinary passage, to which we invite careful attention:

"We hold that Grand Lodges are Masonic nations; that as to all other Grand Lodges, the Grand Lodge is the mouthpiece of all the craft in its jurisdiction, and that what it orders, they order; and that what it does, they do; what is done to it is done to them." (The italics are Mr. Drummond's.) "Any other doctrine destroys the power of a Grand Lodge to protect itself. We should just as soon think of holding that civil nations have no power to involve their people in war, as that Grand Lodges cannot in such cases bind the Masons under their jurisdiction. Suspension of Masonic intercourse among Grand Lodges is the same as war between nations. . . . If Bro. Wait's position is correct"—that Grand Lodges have not the power to prohibit Masonic intercourse between the members of their respective obediences—"it takes from Grand Lodges the power to determine for the members of their obedience whether a body claiming to be a Grand Lodge shall be recognized or not, and vests it in the individual Mason."

The oaths of Masons, taken in the various degrees of the fraternity, bind each individual member to strict and unqualified obedience to the Grand Lodge in whose jurisdiction he lives.

In the Master Mason's degree he swears: "I further promise and swear that I will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of the Master Mason's degree, and of the lodge of which I shall be a member, so far as the same shall come to my knowledge; and that I will ever maintain and support the constitution laws and edicts of the Grand Lodge under which the same shall be held." There is no reservation here. His allegiance to the Grand Lodge is to be absolute.

In the Mark Master's degree he is sworn that he "will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of a Mark Master's lodge, so far as they shall come to my knowledge."

In the Past Master's degree he says: "I furthermore promise and swear that I will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of a Past Master's lodge, so far as they shall come to my knowledge."

In the Most Excellent Master's degree he takes a similar obligation, swearing allegiance to a lodge of that degree.

But it is in the Royal Arch degree that he takes this extremely stringent and shameful obligation: "I furthermore promise and swear that I will stand to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of any chapter of Royal Arch Masons of which I may become a member; the constitution and laws of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter under whose jurisdiction the same may work; together with the constitution, laws and edicts of the General Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the United States of America, as far as they shall come to my knowledge." (In the Master Mason's degree he swore exactly the same strict allegiance to the Grand Lodge. Now he has two masters to serve.) "I furthermore promise and swear that I will answer and obey all due signs and summonses sent me from a chapter of Royal Arch Masons," etc. (Now he has another master.) "I furthermore promise and swear that I will assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, when engaged in any difficulty, and will espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, whether he be right or wrong." (What is this but swearing direct and firm allegiance to the devil?)

It seems to a thoughtful observer as if in all these oaths and obligations the "Masonic nations" of necessity must supersede, in importance and fidelity, any established civil government on earth. The native citizen who has never sworn allegiance to the land of his birth, when he takes these Masonic oaths, really becomes an alien; and the alien who has been naturalized and then becomes a Royal Arch Mason, also becomes a traitor to his adopted country. When he became a citizen of the United States he gave his assent to the justice of her laws against crime; but when he became a Royal Arch Mason he swore to clear his fellow-traitor from the consequences of any of these crimes, if within his power.

If such is the character of "Masonic nations," those who support and countenance them are little better than outlaws and fugitives from justice.

SOME RECENT DEVELOPMENTS.

Waukegan is a prosperous manufacturing town in Northern Illinois. It numbers several thousand inhabitants, and contains twenty liquor saloons. The present mayor is a prominent brewer. The saloon-keepers pay the city a moderately high license fee, but they "scoop in," probably, two-thirds of all the moneys paid by the manufacturers to their employes. The regulation of this liquor traffic by the citizens has been a subject of profound interest during the past two or three weeks. The mayor, although a brewer, is a law-and-order man, and has pledged himself to enforce the ordinances that require the saloons to close at 11 p. m., and all day on Sundays. The discussion of the subject bids fair to develop the evil influence of the liquor traffic upon the pockets, if not the souls and bodies, of its victims. There is great room for reform in Waukegan.

Another startling development in the liquor traffic is the adulteration of beer. Plenty of evidence is in existence, showing that under new processes of manufacture it is entirely innocent of hops and malt, but simply an infernal concoction of drugs, spices and other materials injurious to health, which costs only two cents per gallon. A barrel of it sells for about four dollars, or 12½ cents per gallon. At five cents a glass, over the bar, the net profit on a barrel cannot be less than twenty dollars. No wonder that the saloon-keeper laughs at high license as a temperance measure.

The best lager beer contains four per cent of alcohol. That is, if an ordinary beer-drinker disposes of fifty glasses a day he has swallowed two glasses, or a pint, of alcohol. And yet they tell us "beer is not intoxicating."

JONATHAN BLANCHARD'S WORKS.

A small volume of the addresses and poems of the late President J. Blanchard is to be immediately issued. It will comprise some of his best platform efforts on temperance, the lodge, National reform, the Sabbath, etc., in a volume of 150 to 200 pages. Preparation for a later and larger volume is also to be immediately begun, which will be a biography, and will possibly contain a larger selection of his writings.

A special June offer of the early volume is hereby made. To all who order before July 1st, 1892, enclosing FIFTY CENTS, the volume of poems and addresses will be sent on publication. After that date it may be found necessary to advance the price. Send orders to this office.

—The raising of $1,000,000 by the New Chicago University (Baptist), in order to secure a donation for a like amount tendered upon this condition by Jno. D. Rockefeller, bids fair to be a success. The whole amount must be pledged by July 10, and already, by the generosity of Silas B. Cobb and Martin A. Ryerson, who have given $300,000 of the required sum, the prospect of this princely endowment is very bright.

—Rev. E. F. and Mrs. Phœbe Ward, for twelve years past faithful missionaries of the cross in India, have returned to the United States for needed rest, and for a brief season may be addressed at North Chili, N. Y. From all accounts, they have deeply impressed the heathen among whom they so long labored with the beauty and sufficiency of the Scriptures as a means of salvation from sin. Let them be heartily welcomed and encouraged during their visit.

—The Report of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission of Illinois, for the year ending December 1, 1891, has been issued from the State printing office at Springfield, in an octavo pamphlet of 215 pages. The total railway mileage in Illinois, June 30, 1891, was 14,317, a gain during the year of about 300 miles. Tabular statements relating to this great department of State industry, grain inspection, etc., within the province of the Commission, serve to give, at a glance, a comprehensive statistical view of the progress made since the last report. A copy of the pamphlet can be obtained by writing to J. H. Paddock, Sec'y, Springfield, Ill.

—The account of a mob threatening Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's Floating Chapel at Leavenworth, Ind., last April, the details of which were published in this paper soon afterward, has had the effect of opening the eyes of the people to the cruel spirit of the lodge system. The following letter, received by Bro. Arnold, indicates the impression which is left upon the minds of Christian men and women: "German-English College, Charles City, Iowa. Dear Brother: Though a perfect stranger to you, yet I perceive what manner of spirit speaks from your correspondence in the Cynosure. . . ., which paper comes to our college reading-room. Go on in your blessed reform work, in the strength of Him who has promised to be strength to the weak. I had no idea of the grossness of the sin occasioned by secret societies. Yours, Philip Wacker." The ignorance of the sinfulness of the lodge, confessed by this correspondent, is a powerful argument in favor of giving the fullest possible intelligence concerning the lodge system, in every way, to convince the world of its utter wickedness. Let the truth be known, and it will set free those who are willing to receive it.

THE HOME.

THE COMING AGE.

Conflict prevails, and stern the strife,
But the past yields intenser life;
Error surrenders to the right,
Darkness evanishes in light,
Learning has left her cloister-cell,
Seeking illiteracy to dispel,
And with a lavish hand bestow
Her treasured gifts to high and low.
Inventive genius, learning, skill,
With glory our new annals fill,
Yet with electric speed we span
The little life allotted man!
Dark superstition's wing has fled,
Bright liberty now reigns instead;
And right, not might, is bearing sway,
Many the law of love obey.
Forces adverse yet lurk around
But those for good still much abound;
Faith in humanity and truth,
Keeps company with love and ruth.
Wealth seeks more generous to be
The almoner of poverty,
And many share, more doubtless would,
The luxury of doing good,
While the insatiate greed for gold
Entails its evils manifold!
Whence comes this strange transforming gift,
The genius that can so uplift?
Can moral marvels thus be wrought
By cultured intellectual thought?
The secrets in the omnific Word,
The Gospel of the grace of God!
O'er the wide world its light shall shine
So reads the prophecy Divine;
Then life in every state and stage
Shall glorify the Coming Age!

—Frederick Saunders, in the Christian Inquirer.

RAINY SEASONS.

Edmond About, in his account of Spanish convent life, describes an interview with an intelligent monk who had renounced the vanities of the world before the completion of his twentieth year.

"You must have found it hard to leave the field so long before the harvest season?" inquired the sympathizing traveler.

"Well, no," said the disciple of St. Francis. "I have abandoned secular life rather early, but not before a gift for observation convinced me that the best fun of this world is followed by the worst headaches, and that complete exemption from headaches has to be paid for in the form of ennui."

On the optimistic side of the Atlantic, the partial truth of that remark is often illustrated in the circumstance that exemption from the misery of winter frosts has to be paid for in the tedium of rainy summers. That tedium makes the fortune of umbrella manufacturers, but also of pill vendors. "How can rain cause disease?" inquire the advocates of outdoor life. "Are there not thousands of different animals exposed to every rain shower of the year, and yet enjoying complete exemption from the ailments of the well-housed lord of creation?"

But the fact remains that wet summers are specially prolific of contagious disorders. One cause of that coincidence has been traced to the fact that many of the microbes effecting the decay of vegetable substances are capable of transferring their mischievous activity to the human organism—the only circumstance, by the way, which can occasionally justify our fever-stricken cities in closing their gates against fruits and vegetables. Fresh fruit is by no means the worst diet in fever seasons; so far from it, indeed, that only frugal nations can hope to escape the ravages of febrile epidemics in the lower latitudes. In Vera Cruz and Havana the beef-eating foreigner succumbs to diseases that spare the banana-eating native, and the malaria of the deadliest tropical swamps has no effect upon the organism of purely frugivorous apes and savages.

Decaying fruit, on the other hand, may become the medium of troublesome bowel complaints, cachexies and indigestion, all tending to diminish the chance of resisting the contagion of still more serious disorders. And the first symptoms of that decay are not always easy to discern. A few years ago a French publisher created a sensation in sporting circles by a pamphlet exposing the tricks of the horse trade, and the confessions of a repentant fruit peddler might achieve success by equally surprising revelations. The art of disguising the appearance of stale vegetable products has reached an extraordinary degree of development, and the temptation of practicing the tricks of that art reaches its maximum in rainy seasons. Sultry weather hastens the process of decomposition; the local fruit farms fail to supply the demand, and early fruits and vegetables have probably to be imported from a distance that doubles their price, and makes it an object to the dealers to dispose of them by foul or fair means, and in stress of circumstances, often at figures which certain frequenters of our fruit markets find it difficult to resist.

"What makes you go to the expense of destroying such a mass of spoiled fruit?" I once asked the health officer of a large East-American city. "Would not the hucksters themselves save you that trouble if you just let them alone? The condition of a lot of rotten apples should seem to be sufficiently proclaimed by their appearance."

His answer surprised me. "That's just it," said he; "that's the very reason we have to interfere. The sight of a pile of spoiled fruit seems to exercise an irresistible attraction on certain customers, not all of them of the poorest sort. They know that they can buy such stuff at greatly reduced rates—reduced to one-tenth of the fresh market price in some cases. They also know that a little paring and trimming will restore one-half of the tainted specimens to an available condition, and so they expose themselves and their children and boarders to the risk of swallowing repeated doses of pies and stews permeated with the germs of decay. Our detectives have repeatedly caught Chinamen exploring swill barrels with long-handled dippers, and tenebrous children carrying home big baskets full of indescribable apples, bananas and potatoes. They sort such plunder in their dens, without being too much in a hurry about removing the refuse—in their peculiar sense of that word—and in sultry weather you can imagine the consequences."

The worst about it is that those consequences are by no means limited to their original victims. Quite a number of disorders of the cholera-morbus species are undoubtedly contagious, and often spread with a rapidity hardly compatible with the hypothesis that their germs can be transmitted only by means of tainted drinking water. The air itself must often become the medium of infection; and for purposes of a climate cure, it would often, indeed, be a good plan to reverse the custom of the invalids who pass the winter on the Gulf coast and return in spring to their Northern city homes. Certain evils of our large lowland towns can be cured only by a good frost, and become almost irremediable in a season of protracted damp heat.

Another cause of the unhealthiness of such seasons is the circumstance that damp clothes impede the function of the pores, and thus partly prevent the process of eliminating the gaseous wastes of the organism. A good deal of the respiratory functions of the system are, in fact, carried on by means of the skin, and anything tending to obstruct the cutaneous exhalations obliges the lungs to perform a double share of work. In the open air that task is less onerous, and I have known soldiers on forced marches to tramp through a sixteen hours' drenching without any much worse consequences than sore feet, and shoulders aching from the increased weight of the clothing. But the experiment of drying such clothes at the stove fire of an ill-ventilated room will strain the resisting power even of a hardy constitution. For the first hour or two, the activity of the pores is neutralized, and in their effort to meet the emergency the lungs open their safety-valves, and are congested by the active, but perhaps long-resisted disease germs of the vitiated atmosphere. The increased humidity of the air itself may contribute to that result, since a combination of heat and moisture favors the development of all parasitic microbes, and to persons of sensitive lungs a protracted visit to the guest-room of a crowded village tavern on a rainy evening is, in winter or summer, an almost infallible recipe for the generation of a first-class catarrh. The connection of those causes and effects is pretty generally understood, though the prevailing notions as to their physiological interaction are vague and mostly altogether erroneous. The catarrh-producing tendency of a bad drenching (owing to the synonym of "cold") is apt to be ascribed to its chilling effect, though the truth is that a person weathering a rain-storm in a suit of threadbare linen would run less risk of pulmonary complications than the proprietor of a heavy woolen overcoat, provided both of them were obliged to let their soaked garments dry on their skin. Animals, in their unsoakable hides, are still better off, for those hides are water-proof, without being air-tight (like our rubber coats); hence, the absolute equanimity of our domestic cattle grazing in a streaming rain.

The experience of every rainy season ought to convince intelligent observers of two facts; first, that the causes of catarrh may be totally independent of a low temperature; and secondly, that "colds" may be caught by proxy. I remember the case of a young lady who was seized with a catarrh almost severe enough to produce an inflammation of the lungs, besides hoarseness, sore throat, and a distressing cough, none of which symptoms she was able to explain till she remembered that on the rainiest day of the month she had passed three hours in a passenger car crowded with dripping wet travelers huddling about an overheated stove, and urgently deprecating every attempt to open a window.—Felix L. Oswald, D.D.

A SWEET AND JOYFUL THING.

It is a sweet, a joyful thing to be a sharer with Christ in anything. All enjoyments wherein he is not are bitter to a soul that loves him, and all sufferings with him are sweet. The worst things of Christ are more truly delightful than the best things of the world; his afflictions are sweeter than their pleasures, his "reproach" more glorious than their honors, and more rich than their treasures, as Moses accounted them (Heb. 11:26). Love delights in likeness and communion, not only in things otherwise pleasant, but in the hardest and harshest things, which have not any thing in them desirable, but only that likeness. So that this thought is very sweet to a heart possessed with this love: what does the world by its hatred and persecutions and revilings for the sake of Christ, but make me more like him, give me a greater share with him, in that which he did so willingly undergo for me? "When he was sought for to be made a king," as St. Bernard remarks, "he escaped; but when he was sought to be brought to the cross, he freely yielded himself;" and shall I shrink and creep back from what he calls me to suffer for his sake! Yea, even all my other troubles and sufferings, I will desire to have stamped thus with this conformity to the sufferings of Christ, in the humble, obedient, cheerful endurance of them, and the giving up my will to my Father's.

The following of Christ makes any way pleasant. His faithful followers refuse no march after him, be it through deserts and mountains and storms and hazards that will affright self-pleasing easy spirits. Hearts kindled and actuated with the Spirit of Christ will "follow him wher-ever he goeth."—Robert Layton.

BOY INVENTORS.

A boy's elders are guilty of a foolish act when they snub him because he says or does something which they don't understand. A boy's personality is entitled to as much respect as a man's so long as he behaves himself.

Some of the most important inventions have been the work of boys. The invention of the valve motion to the steam engine was made by a mere boy. Newcome's engine was in a very incomplete condition from the fact that there was no way to open or close the valves, except by means of levers operated by the hand.

Newcome set up a large engine at one of the mines, and a boy, Humphrey Potter, was hired to work these valve levers; although this was not hard work, yet it required his constant attention.

As he was working the levers he saw that parts of the engine moved in the right direction, and at the same time that he had to open or close the valves.

He procured a strong cord and made one end fast to the proper part of the engine and the other end to the valve lever; and then he had the satisfaction of seeing the engine move with perfect regularity of motion.

A short time after, the foreman came around and saw the boy playing marbles at the door. Looking at the engine he saw the ingenuity of the boy, and also the advantage of so great an invention.

The idea suggested by the boy's inventive genius was put into a practical form, and made the steam-engine an automatic-working machine.

The power loom is the invention of a farmer's boy who had never seen or heard of such a thing. He had whittled one out with his jack-knife, and after he had got it all done he, with great enthusiasm, showed it to his father, who at once kicked it to pieces, saying that he would have no boy about him who would spend his time on such foolish things.

The boy was sent to a blacksmith to learn a trade, and his master took a lively interest in him. He made a loom of what was left of the one his father had broken up, and showed it to his master.

The blacksmith saw he had no common lad as an apprentice, and the invention was a valuable one. He had a loom constructed under the supervision of the boy. It worked to their perfect satisfaction, and the blacksmith furnished the means to manufacture the looms, and the boy received half the profits. In about a year the blacksmith wrote to the boy's father that he should bring with him a wealthy gentleman, who was the inventor of the celebrated power loom.

You may be able to judge of the astonishment at the old home when his son was presented to him as the inventor, who told him that the loom was the same as the model that he had kicked to pieces but a year before.—Golden Days.

HOW LYDIA DID HER ERRAND.

"Lydia," said Mrs. Reeves to her little daughter, "go down to Mrs. Ball's and bring me some milk; a quart will be sufficient; and don't loiter on nor play upon the road, for I need the milk at once."

Lydia took a bright tin pail from its hook in the closet, and hastened to do her mother's bidding. It was a summer morning. Yet all nature was beautiful, and Lydia met a companion, too; she resisted all temptations to linger while going towards the neighbor's where the milk was to be obtained. But when she began to return her steps, her mother's command had lost its force, and she thought with regret of not having lingered a minute with a dear companion. She had not gone far in this mood before Mr. Ball's great farm wagon drove in sight, and from its depths she heard laughing and shouting. Then some sunny heads and bright eyes were seen above the side of the lumbering vehicle, for several children of the neighborhood were enjoying a ride. Lydia was a favorite among her companions, for she was especially bright and merry, and cries of "climb in, Lydia! climb in! it's lots of fun!" greeted her ears.

"Where are you going?" she asked, with a half-wistful, half-troubled look, first at the pail and then at the wagon.

"Only down to the mill," returned the children, all speaking together; "we'll be back in less than half an hour."

"Mamma won't expect me home sooner than that time," thought Lydia, "and so I'll go, that I will!"

"Climb in!" shouted all the young voices; "don't keep the train waiting, we must move forward."

Lydia scrambled into the wagon, first handing her pail to one of the children, and was soon seated upon the straw-covered bottom beside her companions.

"Get up!" cried Mr. Ball, and at the word the horses trotted briskly. The motion made the milk slop over the top of the pail and drip down its sides, much to Lydia's consternation.

"The milk will be all gone," she cried in dismay, as the slopping continued. "Oh, Mr. Ball, let me out quickly, please do!"

The wagon was stopped, but Lydia, in clambering down, dropped the pail, and the great wheel ran over it, pressing it into shapelessness. Lydia, in trying to recover it, hurt her finger so that she groaned with pain. Mrs. Reeves was very stern when her children were disobedient, and when she had heard Lydia's tearful story, she utterly refused to look at the wounded finger or do anything to soothe its pains, saying: "My daughter must bear her punishment unaided."

Lydia sat and wept with pain and contrition till it seemed as if she could bear it no more, and then she said beseechingly, "Mamma, may I go to Aunt Betsey? Please let me go!"

"If you think you can be obedient hereafter, you may," returned the mother, scarcely relaxing her sternness.

Lydia flew out of the house and up the hill towards good Aunt Betsey's residence, feeling sure of help now. Aunt Betsey was not a relative, but a dear friend in the neighborhood, and especially toward the children. Lydia told her story, and showed her injured finger to the kind old lady, who gave her good counsel while she bandaged the poor finger. The finger had received a crook from which it has never recovered; but better a crooked finger than a mis-shapen character. Lydia's lesson proved salutary, and she is now a Christian lady, lovable and exemplary.—Christian Intelligencer.

LOSING AND KEEPING.

The children kept coming, one by one,
Till the boys were five and the girls were three,
And the big brown house was alive with fun
From the basement floor to the old roof tree;
Like garden flowers the little ones grew,
Nurtured and trained with the tenderest care;
Warmed by love's sunshine, bathed in its dew,
They bloomed into beauty, like roses rare.

One of the boys grew weary, one day,
And leaning his head on his mother's breast
He said: "I'm tired and cannot play—
Let me sit awhile on your knee and rest."
She cradled him close in her fond embrace,
She hushed him to sleep with her sweetest song;
And rapturous love still lighted his face
When his spirit had joined the heavenly throng.

Then the eldest girl, with her thoughtful eyes,
Who stood "where the brook and the river meet,"
Stole softly away into paradise
Ere "the river" had reached her slender feet;
While the father's eyes on the graves are bent
The mother looked upward beyond the skies;
"Our treasures," she whispered, "are only lent;
Our darlings were angels in earth's disguise."

The years flew by, and the children began
With longing to think of the world outside;
And as each in his turn became a man,
The boys proudly went from their father's side.
The girls were women so gentle and fair
That lovers were speedy to woo and win;
And with orange blossoms in braided hair,
The old home was left—new homes to begin.

So, one by one the children have gone—
The boys were five and the girls were three—
And the big brown house is gloomy and lone,
With two old folks for its company.
They talk to each other about the past,
As they sit together at eventide,
And say, "All the children we keep at last
Are the boy and girl who in childhood died."

TEMPERANCE.

THE JUDGE AND THE PUPPY.

Mother Stewart, of Temperance Crusading fame, has been telling in the Union Signal about the times when the Crusaders used to go about and pray in the saloons or before their doors, until the saloon keepers persecuted them; and this was how a puppy settled one case in court:

"We were sued for $10,000 by a druggist, one of your grand, magnificent druggists, a member of a church, and not a subject for prayer. He got very with angry us, but we kept on going, and the more he strutted the more we prayed and humbler we became. Finally when he locked us out, our good friends put up a tabernacle in the street. He then sued us for trespass. We went all through that trial. God was making temperance sentiment all over the country all that time. The farmers came in to watch the women and hear their testimony.

My grandson had a little dog. He lived at our house and I am responsible for his education. He walked on his hind feet and held his paws up. He was very mischievous, and he was wise enough to know we were proud of him, because we laughed at his tricks. After gathering at the court-house for trial, Mrs. Foraker was sitting four or five seats back of me and I in front on a low chair. For comfort they handed me an easy chair, and they put me down on something level, so I could see Bee's tricks. The puppy was called Bee because he was a busy little bee.

I was sitting there asking God to help us, and

Mrs. Foraker had prayed at the church that God would confound the lawyers, and especially Judge Safford, of Chillicothe. He was fumbling with his papers and tumbling his books about. He laid his glasses down while a young lawyer made his maiden speech; and as the judge was leaning back in his conscious victory, my little Bee slipped down, took the spectacles in his mouth and went out just as hard as he could go, and I saw no more of my little dog. Poor Judge Safford, when he got ready for his argument and looked for his glasses, could not find them anywhere. The sheriff came and looked for them. The lawyers were all stirred up, and I knew all the while where they were, but I didn't feel obliged to tell it, for I never tell tales on my children, neither do I on my dog. So finally Judge Safford became wonderfully confused and confounded.

Just about that hour of the day I was expecting our lawyer, Mr. Williams, and his wife, from Washington court-house, and had to go home to meet them. As I passed by Mrs. Foraker she caught me by the dress, and said, "Stop." She said, "We prayed a little too hard; did you ever see a man so confounded?" I said, "Don't stop me." She didn't know a thing about the dog. She said, "It is wonderful; we ought not to have prayed so hard. I pity Judge Safford." I said, "I don't," and so went out. As I passed into the street I met the young lawyer who had pretty much all the talent of the concern against us, Mr. Sloan. He said, "I tell you, Mrs. Thompson, we are going to lose our case. Judge Safford is utterly confounded." I went home and told my husband the story of the dog, and he said, "Elizer, I knew you were a mischief, but did not think you would carry it so far. I have a good mind to go to the court-house and tell on you." "Well," I said, "it will help our cause, that is all."

OUR DRINK BILL OF $700,000,000.

Prof. Francis G. Peabody, of Harvard, in a lecture on the temperance question before the Lowell Institute of Boston, the other day, said in substance:

There are two aspects of the liquor question, the economic and the moral. There are at present in the liquor traffic throughout the country some 200,000 persons—163,000 in the retail and the rest wholesale. These figures present only the dealers. The number of persons employed is upward of 1,000,000. The worst of these horrible figures is that they mean the withdrawal of just so many persons from right kind of employments. In their present occupations they contribute little or nothing to the wealth of the country.

As to the amount of liquor consumed in 1886, $337,000,000 was spent for spirits, $304,000,000 for beer, $16,000,000 for imported wines, and $34,000,000 for domestic wines—a frightful total of about $700,000,000. That is about one-twelfth of the amount spent for food, clothing, and necessities of life.

In the same year there was received as wages $947,000,000, and the liquor bill consumed two-thirds of it. Again, it costs $350,000,000 a year for churches, and the drink bill would buy all the churches in six months.

NUGGETS.

Gojumra, in Japan, is a total-abstinence village, and each house has a motto on the door, "Frugal in all things; liquors prohibited."

All but nine States out of the forty-nine in the United States now make scientific temperance education compulsory in their common schools.

The Wine and Spirit Gazette, of New York, says: "Nobody knows better than the liquor-dealers that the police can enforce the Sunday law, if they want to."

The liquor traffic costs the people of this country over a billion dollars a year, which largely comes out of the pockets of the workingmen. Every dollar of the billion goes to support the most gigantic monopoly which ever cursed a nation. This billion of dollars, if spent for food and clothing, and other necessities of life, would do away with three-fourths of the poverty, crime, and misery which now desolate the land.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The preface. Vs. 1-3. The Acts is only a continuation of Luke's Gospel, and both were private communications to a personal friend. How this fruit of a pure Christian friendship has enriched the church for eighteen centuries! We find here one or two important lessons. (1) To choose wisely our friends, especially if we are looking forward to any important life-work. (2) Not to grudge our time as wasted which is bestowed on individual cases. Luke, to convince one person of the truth of the Gospel so thoroughly that his faith should never be shaken, was willing to take the trouble to write these two books. We have not a hint in the preface to either that he had other readers in mind, or dreamed that they would be circulated to the end of time. "Of all that Jesus began." Pentecost beautifully says: "God begins but never finishes. His works and his teachings are only movements in the march of infinite advance." "Both to do and to teach." Acts and words make up the sum of human life; yet how often our acts contradict our words, or our words our acts, while not even his bitterest enemies have been able to show the smallest inconsistency between the precepts and practice of the one perfect man, Christ Jesus. "By many infallible proofs." There is no fact of profane history better attested to by competent witnesses than the resurrection of Christ. It is interesting to know that Luke, who was a physician, and therefore from a class hardest to be convinced of such a phenomenon by anything short of the clearest evidence, should call these "infallible proofs." "Speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." If Luke had not written the Acts we should never have known the theme of Christ's conversation during these forty days. We could only be sure that the time so brief and so precious would not be frittered away on theological subtleties, or questions to no profit, but would be devoted to subjects the most practical and vital.

2. Jesus' last command. Vs. 4-8. Christ commanded them not to depart from Jerusalem until they had received the Holy Ghost, for it was there that the new dispensation of the Spirit was to begin; there that the Gospel must first be preached. No definite time was given. They were in faith to wait for it. That the old idea of a temporal kingdom was not yet wholly extinct we can see by their question, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" His answer is very applicable to these present days when so many are trying to figure out a set time for our Lord's appearing. There is a temptation on the one hand to spiritualize away prophecy, till nothing remains of it; and, on the other hand, to make our interpretations too grossly literal, thus committing anew the error of the first disciples. "But ye shall receive power." Only when baptized with the Holy Spirit do we receive power, and become witnesses,—"first in Jerusalem." When we come into a larger experience, and receive the blessing of full salvation, our testimony must be given first in the place where it is most difficult to give it—our own church. Every great spiritual movement must begin at Jerusalem; but it is abortive and dead if it ends there. The word baptizo means to dip or plunge; and the name baptistes was given by the ancient Greeks to those who dyed cloth, because they dipped or plunged the fabric into the coloring fluid until every part of it was inter-penetrated with the dye. So, if we are really baptized with the Spirit, not a faculty that belongs to us of body, mind or soul, will escape the holy influence. This is consecration; which means, if it means anything, all laid on the altar.

3. The ascended Christ. Vs. 9-12. "While they beheld." It is when we look steadfastly at Jesus, and will not let our minds be distracted to lower objects, that we may expect wonderful revelations. He was taken up by the same divine power of God that raised him from the dead, which translated Elijah and Enoch, and by which the saints will one day be caught up to meet him in the air. "Why stand ye gazing up into heaven?" There was work to do on earth—patient waiting at Jerusalem, years of preaching the Gospel. There was a world to be converted. Why spend their time in fruitless gazing after their ascended Lord? "This same Jesus"—the same in his infinite love and sympathy—shall return even in like manner as he went up. Is the thought a comfort to our hearts as it was to the disciples? Are we so living that we shall have confidence before him, and not be ashamed at his coming?

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—Rev. C. C. Earle, of Philadelphia, has accepted the call to the Harvard St. Baptist church of Boston, and commenced his labors June 15th.

—Baptists in the State of Massachusetts contributed more money last year for Christian work than those of any other State in the United States, the total being $1,937,438; and that more Baptist churches were constituted, during the same period, in Texas than in any other of the States, aggregating 140.

BRETHREN.

—Some have been wanting to know when the National Convention will be held. According to the arrangements at Warsaw, Ind., with the Park authorities, it will be held August 23 to 29; beginning on Tuesday at 9:30 A. M., and running till the next Monday, if necessary. This day suits the conditions of the Park.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—As the time draws near for the coming International Christian Endeavor Convention, which is to be held in New York City, July 7th to 10th, the interest in all the arrangements and in the program runs high. The opening session will be called to order at 2:30 P. M., Thursday, July 7th, and after a prayer and praise service words of welcome in behalf of the New York City and Brooklyn pastors and their young people will be spoken. President Merrill E. Gates, LL. D., of Amherst College, will respond, after which the annual report of the general secretary will be read. The convention sermon and President Clark's address will come Thursday evening. At the close of the session the officers and trustees of the United Society will hold an informal reception.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Dr. Samuel Giles Buckingham has for forty-five years been pastor of the South Congregational church of Springfield, Mass., which celebrated its semi-centenary recently.

—The Grand River Congregational church on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, North Dakota, lately received twenty-seven adult members. Among them was One Bull, son of the late Sitting Bull.

—The British Weekly says that "out of 2,747 Congregational ministers in England and Wales, 2,034 are total abstainers. In Scotland the abstainers number ninety per cent. In Ireland they are all abstainers. Of the students in Congregational colleges, over ninety per cent are teetotalers. In Scotland every Congregational student is an abstainer."

LUTHERAN.

—The Lutherans have work to do. By the will of the late Augustus Kountze, Esq., property and money estimated at $150,000 are devised to the General Synod to found a theological seminary at Omaha, Nebraska, provided the General Synod collect and deposit in bank at Omaha an equal amount by July 1, 1892. The time grows short, and it is still uncertain whether the churches will fulfill the condition.

—Rev. W. A. Sadtler of Baltimore, Md., has been called to the pastorate of the New English mission organized in Chicago, Ill., under the auspices of the General Council.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Mr. C. H. Hackley, of Muskegon, Mich., has donated $10,000 to the Methodists of Michigan to build an auditorium at their assembly grounds at Lake Harbor. Other citizens have given $5,000 for the same purpose. The assembly will be planned after Chautauqua and Bay View.

—The first Methodist—if not the first Protestant—sermon was preached in Chicago during the summer of 1831. The sixty-first anniversary of this event will be observed on Sunday, July 17, at Clark Street church. At the invitation of the pastor, Rev. Dr. Fawcett, Rev. S. R. Beggs, who organized the first Methodist class in Chicago, will deliver the anniversary sermon. Father Beggs, though over ninety years of age, is still vigorous in body and mind.

—A copy of the constitution of the Epworth League of young people adopted by the recent Methodist General Conference shows how far the institution has been Methodized and wrought into the organization of the church. It is to be under a board of control appointed by the bishops, and a bishop is to be president of the board and of the League. The publication of the League is made an official paper and its editor is elected by General Conference. Another salaried officer, a general secretary, is elected by the board of control. Any society becomes a member by having its plans approved by the pastor and official board or quarterly conference, and becoming enrolled at the central office.

—The statistical returns of the English Wesleyan church show a decrease of nearly 36,000 members during the past year, though there is a net gain of about 725. Over 42,800 new members were admitted into the class-meeting, while nearly 22,300 ceased to meet. Such an increased attendance at class-meeting in this country would cause general rejoicing.

—The statistics of the membership of the Wesleyan church in Ireland for the past year show a decrease of sixty-five.

—The Des Plaines (Chicago) camp meeting will be held Aug. 4 to 10, with Revs. H. G. Jackson and W. H. Burns as leaders. The program will be issued soon.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Dr. G. F. Pentecost, the evangelist, has returned to England from India. The Marylebone Presbyterian church, London invited him to occupy the late Dr. Donald Frazer's pulpit several Sundays, and now at the request of the Presbytery, he has consented to prolong his stay for one year.

—The Christian Endeavorers of a Presbyterian church in Pennsylvania "brought the plan of systematic benevolence so successfully before the church that tithe-giving became immensely popular, and pew-rents were done away with, resulting in an increase of $400 in the income. Systematic benevolence is the most spiritual plan of giving, and therefore is the most profitable plan every way."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The petition of the Synod of the Pacific for a new Synod was granted, and the new Synod was directed to be organized under the name of the Synod of Columbia. It includes the Presbyteries of Oregon and Spokane. It is to be organized on the second Tuesday of October, at Portland, Oregon. Dr. S. G. Irvine is to preach the opening sermon. The Synod of the Pacific is hereafter to be called the Synod of California.

—The eighth annual catalogue of Tarkio (Mo.) College gives a history of the college, a roll of the faculty and students, and the full course of study. There are fifteen instructors, and the total enrollment of students for the year was two hundred and twenty-four.

—An item from the recent report of the secretary of the General Missionary Society and Woman's Board of the United Presbyterian church shows a membership of 20,757, which has contributed the past year to various mission fields more than $53,000—over $2.50 to the member.

—The Presbyterian General Assembly having asked the U. P. Assembly and other ecclesiastical bodies to unite with them in petitioning the Evangelical Alliance for a change in the time of the annual "Week of Prayer," it responded affirmatively and suggested some time in November as a more suitable season.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The increase in church membership has been larger during the decade 1880 to 1890 than it has generally been supposed to be, as the following examples will show: The Methodists, at once the largest and the most aggressive denomination, have about 2,250,000 members, a gain in ten years of more than 500,000, and the percentage of gain is 30 per cent—5 per cent more than the gain in population. The Presbyterians show an increase of 39 per cent; the Lutherans 60 per cent; but even this high percentage is surpassed by the Jews, who increased from 50,000 members of synagogues in 1880 to 130,000 members in 1890, an increase of 160 per cent. The Congregational church increased 33 per cent. The returns of the Catholic church in 1880 were obviously incorrect; as the showing of the Catholic increase is less than 16 per cent, the estimated Catholic population being nearly 6,500,000. The total number of communicants of all denominations, according to the census of 1890, is 12,500,000, as against less than 10,000,000 in 1880—an average gain of more than 28 per cent.

—The program of the General Missionary Convention of the colored brethren, announced to meet at Nashville, Tenn., June 29—July 3, has been issued, and gives promise of an occasion of no little moment.

Makes work of and cleaning It makes for the wash-er—it makes safe work of what is washed. Pearline is used on anything that is washable. You needn't worry over the fine things; you needn't work hard over the coarse. You can't keep house well without Pearline; you can keep it dirty, but you can't keep it clean.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 238 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

ROME AND HEALTH.

HEARTY SUPPERS.

Although the morning hours are best for mental work, a busy farmer finds more leisure between supper and bedtime. Evenings are spoiled by many for anything but dozing by eating too heartily at supper. Eat lightly and you may accomplish much during the long autumn and winter evenings, your sleep will be more refreshing, and in after years your thoughts may joyfully revert to the time when you learned to heed the dictates of reason and judgment and ignore the inordinate demand of appetite.

GREEN CORN FRITTERS.

Green corn fritters should be served immediately after frying. Grate green corn sufficient to measure one pint. Beat two eggs well, add to them one gill of nice, sweet milk, one small teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth of a teaspoonful of white pepper and one teaspoonful of melted butter. Mix one-half cupful of flour with a little of the milk so that it will be smooth, then add the other ingredients to the flour stirring well to prevent lumps, and last of all add the grated corn. Make this mixture into small cakes with a large spoon, and fry a nice brown in hot suet or butter and suet mixed.

HOW TO KEEP FLOWERS FRESH.

A story is told of a traveler who crossed the Atlantic with two carnations, yet wore a fresh one every day in his buttonhole. The secret of it all was a raw potato, which he carried with him. Each day, when he pinned on one flower, he snipped a little from the stem of the other, and thrust it into a cleft in the potato. The latter supplied the juices that fed the blossom through its stem. I once received a box of handsome rosebuds, sent by mail from a distant city, after traveling many hundreds of miles. Their fresh condition would have been marvelous but for the fact that secure upon the end of each was a small cube (about three-fourths of an inch) of raw potato. The mystery was solved. Bouquets of flowers can be kept a long time if each day the ends of the stems are clipped and they are put into fresh warm water with a little salt. A lump of charcoal put into the water in which flowers are to stand for two or three days will absorb all the impurities and noxious odors that would otherwise make themselves known.—Housekeepers' Weekly.

FARM NOTES.

MAKING FARM HELP PAY.

In any other business than farming nobody expects to become wealthy merely by the labor of his own hands. The large profits of tradesmen and manufacturers are almost invariably due to profits gained by the employment of labor of others. To do this it is essential that the employer shall be able by investment of capital to earn more for those he hires than without his help they can earn for themselves. It is hard for a man without capital to give himself employment all the time. What he earns while working is consumed during his times of enforced idleness because he can find nothing to do. It is part of the duty of the capitalist employer of labor to provide some profitable employment for his workingmen at times when without his aid they could not get anything to do. If he does not attempt to do this part of his duty he must not be surprised when the more active and enterprising of his workingmen seek more permanent employment elsewhere. It will probably be easier the coming few years for Eastern farmers to hire good help than it has been lately. But if they would keep it for any length of time they must learn some means of providing work with pay through the whole year. It has been the inability of workingmen to find paying winter employment in the country that has made good help scarce. Gardeners who are able to provide work through the year do not suffer for lack of help, and as a rule they secure men who are more active and intelligent than those who hire out for ordinary farm work through the summer. It is not possible for all farmers to become market gardeners, but there are many ways in which work can be provided that will keep men and teams employed so as at least to earn a living and something besides. So far as we have observed, gardeners and others who employ help in the winter pay low wages. Most of them make a contract to hire by the year, and it is found that men assured of steady employment in winter are much more ready to hire at moderate wages during the busier summer season.—American Cultivator.

CLOVER.

An exchange says that when a farmer is once thoroughly converted to clover, he will stay by it as long as it will stay by him. Clover is for the most part a biennial, or, to speak more correctly, short perennial, and it dies like the rest of us when it arrives at the proper time. Farmers who have a good stand this year, and wish to keep their land in clover without ploughing it up every two years, should sow about half the usual amount of seed on the same land each March, or before the frost goes out of the ground. The plants from the seedling will take the place of those that die, and this, with the plants that did not grow last year, will make a good stand, especially if there is a little timothy with the clover.

SUNDRIES.

One pound of cheese contains more nutritive elements than two pounds of beef.

Close observers say that skim milk is worth twenty cents a hundred pounds for feeding to calves and hogs.

Are your stables clean? For the sake of those who have to drink the milk—as well as the cows—be sure they are clean.

The best butter-makers are the great est readers of dairy literature, and thus keep posted about the methods of others and do not depend too much upon the knowledge they have inherited from their grandmothers.

Dairying is similar to other occupations in that it is profitable or unprofitable just as the dairyman makes it. Energy, true (not false) economy, and a strict adherence to business principles are the "watch-words" to success.

It is well to test your cows—know exactly which are paying, both in quality and quantity. Keep a record of your profits and expenses, and you will thus be enabled to know just what your standing is at the end of the season.

The oils of the different kinds of grain fed to dairy cows have very much to do with the quality of the butter. Cotton seed, while giving an increased flow of milk rich in butter fat, makes the butter greasy and sticky. Oats and bran give good oils for butter, but the best is the oil of corn. To the general use of corn in feeding dairy cows in the West is due to a great extent the fine flavor of Western butter.

Indigestion. Dizziness. Take BEECH-AM'S PILLS.

Something you can't do is to get Dr. Pierce's genuine medicines at what pretend to be "cut prices." They don't come to you in that way.

To prevent fraud and imposition, the genuine guaranteed medicines are sold only through druggists duly authorized as agents, and always at these long-established prices.—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery (for the Liver, Blood, and Lungs), $1.00 per bottle; Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription (for woman's weaknesses and ailments), $1.00 per bottle; and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets (for the Liver), 25 cents per vial. The genuine medicines can be had only at these prices, but nothing else, no matter what the price, can be as cheap, for Dr. Pierce's medicines are guaranteed. In every case where they fail to benefit or cure, you have your money back. You pay only for value received. Beware of dilutions, imitations, and substitutes, offered at lower prices.

When the Pie was opened

The Birds began to sing The praises of Bird's Custard Powder.

An English Table Luxury,
Providing Dainties in Endless Variety
The Choicest Dishes and the Richest Custard Entirely Without Eggs.

BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER is now introduced into America, and will very shortly be on sale at all the principal retail stores. Meanwhile every American lady is invited to send to ALFRED BIRD & SONS, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, for the Dollar Sample Box of Bird's exquisite English Home Specialties and to entertain her family and friends with a few choice English dishes by way of a change.

THE DOLLAR SAMPLE BOX contains four of the articles for which Bird's name has been a household word throughout Great Britain and her Colonies for more than half a century.

CONTENTS OF THE BOX.
FIRST, a packet of BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER, sufficient to make four pints of the richest custard without eggs, which may be served either from a dish or in the ordinary custard glasses, and is delicious with all canned, bottled, or fresh fruits. Bird's Custard possesses the richness and nutriment of cream without risk to the most sensitive digestion.

A remittance of one dollar to Messrs. BIRD & SON'S New York Offices, 2, WOOSTER ST., NEW YORK, will bring the sample box EXPRESSED Free of Charge. If any dissatisfaction, the money will be willingly refunded, providing the goods are sent back intact.

Ask! Ask! Ask! Ask! Of all Stores! Everywhere! Every Day!
For BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER.

SECOND, a packet of BIRD'S BLANC-MANGE POWDER, enough to make three large Blanc-manges a pint each. The Blanc-manges are most agreeably flavoured and are highly nutritious, and can be produced in a variety of tints, forming a charming dessert dish, and contributing to the decoration of the table.

THIRD, a tin of BIRD'S CONCENTRATED EGG POWDER, a complete substitute for eggs in puddings, cakes, buns, griddle cakes, and all similar kinds of English and American confectionery, to which it imparts the lightness, richness, appearance and flavour of new-laid eggs. This tin is equal to 30 new-laid eggs.

FOURTH, a canister of BIRD'S GIANT BAKING POWDER, claimed to be the strongest and best article of the kind in the whole world. It will go twice as far as ordinary baking powder, and is guaranteed free from alum, ammonia, or any impurity whatsoever, all the ingredients being of the highest quality. N.B.—Messrs. BIRD were the original inventors of Baking Powder in 1842, and the secret of their process has never yet been discovered.

For a fifth article the box contains a copy of "Sweet Dishes," a booklet full of practical hints and numerous original recipes of tasty dishes for the dinner and supper table. The recipes are all new to American cookery, and are suited to American measures, methods and cooking utensils.

The whole of the above are enclosed in a tastefully finished artistic Cartoon Box, an excellent specimen of English fancy box ware. When the samples are taken out, it will make a very pretty handkerchief, glove, or cotton box.

This Dollar Sample Box is intended solely to introduce Bird's English Specialties into American Homes, and cannot be purchased retail, and Messrs. BIRD will not be able to supply more than one sample box to each household. Remember the object in view is to distribute samples of the Special Domestic Luxuries for which Bird's name stands first and foremost as a guarantee for Purity and High Quality.

Again we appeal to readers whose subscriptions have recently expired, or will soon run out, to renew at once. Every dollar due for the Cynosure, and whatever can be secured on new subscriptions and renewals, is needed for the promotion of the reform work of the Association. A word to the wise and the zealous should be sufficient in this behalf. Will our friends govern themselves accordingly?

A note from Rev. S. F. Porter, at Kingston, Ill., on the 20th of June, states that he has not yet done much private missionary work among the ministers in that vicinity; the roads being in a terrible condition, owing to the continued rains. He adds: "I preached yesterday at Charter Oak, and the Sunday previous at Franklin, in this (DeKalb) county. Bro. Worcester, with whom I am staying, is circulating reform literature."

Rev. Wallace J. Gladwin, writing from Bombay, India, May 14, 1892, says: "I am grateful to God and his people for the good supply of books you are sending; also, for $25.00 sent me to circulate 'Stories of the Gods' and 'Carradine's Lecture to Missionaries.' The $21.00 sent through Rev. W. I. Phillips, will be applied on account of our colporteur-evangelist work here. Let special prayer be offered for God's rich blessing on the issue of your literature in India." Bro. Gladwin is very earnest and active in the anti-secrecy reform work.

The Tammany sachers came here in strength from New York City, last week, to make a deep impression upon Chicago, to influence the Democratic Convention in behalf of their principles, and secure the nomination of D. B. Hill as their candidate for the Presidency. Before they had been here three days, between the overwhelming pressure of the rain and the feeling in favor of Cleveland, they became extremely docile, their "tiger" lost his fierceness, and they went home conquered by circumstances over which they had no control. The West is not yet ripe for the secret and corrupt methods of Tammany.

L. B. Kent, the well-known advocate of heart purity, announces that a union holiness camp-meeting will be held at Harvey, Ill., commencing July 8, and continuing ten days. Among active laborers in the cause who are expected to participate in the services are Revs. S. B. Shaw, of Michigan, L. H. Houghton, of Harvey, E. F. Walker, of Normal, Ill., and a number of other ministers and able workers. Further information can be obtained by addressing Rev. H. L. Houghton, at Harvey.

A note from Bro. Lewis Johnston, at Pine Bluff, Ark., informs us that on the 11th inst. his house and library were destroyed by fire, and that he is at present unable to replace either. His loss in books is disastrous. He lost many valuable works, including all he had that treated of Masonry. With the wish to start a better library than his former one, he would like to receive donations from readers who have copies of their books to spare, and who may also desire to stock that section with sound doctrine in opposition to the lodge system.

A singular piece of information is made public in a dispatch from Lancaster, Ky., June 15. Lancaster is, in a temperance view, a "local option" town, and, as usual, under such a condition illicit whisky-selling has been carried on quite extensively, particularly at "Battle Row," a Negro settlement. Henry A. Burdette, a detective, set about breaking up the illegal traffic, and arrested five Negroes and one white man on 3,211 warrants. The latter's name is Turner, a resident of Bell county. He was fined $100 each in 1,577 cases, amounting to $157,700. Turner was also placed in jail for kidnaping an important witness against him. A Negro named John Smith, who was engaged in the business with Turner, confessed in 1,585 cases. His fine will come close to $1,000,000. "Local option" and "high license" are but poor substitutes for prohibition.

The idea commonly accepted that prohibition of the liquor traffic is a recent principle should read an address in the forthcoming volume of President J. Blanchard's addresses. In 1834, when just out of college, a young man of 23, he lectured on temperance in Plattsburg, N. Y., and with clear and forceful logic demanded that the nation should accept the same high principles now held by the foremost leaders in that reform. The noble sentiments of the Methodist General Conference, the Presbyterian General Assembly, and other Christian bodies seem to have come tardily to light as we read the prophetic words of this young teacher. Other themes discussed in the same earnest, eloquent style are more and more coming to the front. Ordinary friends and acquaintances of our departed leader can hardly know how clear-sighted he was for the truth until they read these addresses.

We give place to-day to Rev. J. M. Foster's excellent article on "Systematic Beneficence," which will commend itself to every thoughtful reader. Since it was put into type we find in the Sabbath Recorder a paper by W. H. Whitford on "Systematic Christian Giving." In it occurs the following sentence, which is so entirely in harmony with Mr. Foster's views and the principles which are advocated by the Cynosure, that we copy it: "I tell you, friends, if we all, young and old, will adopt this system which God, and not man, has given us, his storehouse will be filled to overflow. Then there will be no need for the Masonic order, Odd-fellows, Good Templars, and many more societies which I might mention. Why? Because all of the kind deeds of charity, and caring for the sick and the poor, and lifting up the fallen from the gutter will be done through the church, where I think it rightfully belongs, and where God intended it should be; for we are told in Isaiah, 58th chapter, beginning with the 7th verse, that the work of God's people is to deal bread to the hungry, house the poor, clothe the naked, comfort the afflicted, and not to hide ourselves from our own flesh." Truth—every word of it!

Speaking of systematic beneficence, or Christian giving, and the many ways in which benevolent individuals may do good in and out of the churches, we would remind those readers who wish to find a proper channel for their surplus money that the anti-secrecy reform work in which the National Christian Association and the Cynosure are engaged presents a wide field of usefulness. Our constant warfare upon the dens and deeds of darkness of those who seek "light" in "secret chambers" and pagan worship, is producing excellent results, but the "sinews of war" are needed to make the way to victory both shorter and more easy. Will our friends remember this?

The police authorities of Sacramento, Cal., have begun active hostilities against the Chinese "highbinders" in that city, with a view of ultimately routing the whole secret force known as the Bing Hong Tong of that fraternity. The police are already in possession of the records and books of this society, captured after a bloody fight with the Chinese. These records show that the highbinders are banded together solely for the purpose of robbery, extortion and murder, dooming whom they will to death, designating the member who shall act as the executioner, and declaring his life forfeited if he fails to assassinate the offending party. The oaths administered in this society bind each member to strict obedience to its ruling powers ("whether right or wrong"), under a death penalty for recreancy to the fraternity. Blackmailing is another dark feature of the highbinders. Money is also paid to those who murder condemned enemies. Money-making is one of the grandest inducements offered to those who propose to unite with the society. A more despicable fraternity does not exist. It is worse, if possible, than the Italian Mafia. We shall refer to it again.

SYSTEMATIC BENEFICENCE.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Christian giving is not a matter of human caprice, but of divine regulation. In the early Christian centuries the church observed God's rule in this matter, and she became a mighty conqueror, triumphing over every foe. With the elevation of Constantine, in 323, came the involuntary or compulsory age. Giving was converted into taxation. The climax of this system was reached in the eighth century, when Charlemagne, who was crowned with imperial honors by Pope Innocent III., ordained one-tenth of all incomes to be given to the church on the severest penalties of forfeiture. The Reformers of the sixteenth century, on coming out of the church of Rome, repudiated this compulsory system. The pendulum swung to the opposite extreme. The Reformation period has been characterized by a system of voluntarism, which means that every one shall do as he pleases. As a result, the spirit of missions lay dormant for three centuries. It is only at a comparatively recent date that the church has come to realize the extent of her mission, "all the world;" and only a small portion of this has been reached. Out of 1,500,000,000 it is said that 1,000,000,000 have never heard of Christ; and when we remember that God has decreed that the world shall be evangelized no faster than his people pour forth the means for carrying on the work, the question arises, "Is it not time to abandon this voluntarism, and adopt God's rule for Christian giving?"

1. God's design in requiring us to give is to benefit ourselves. God has laid upon us the duty of relieving the distress of the poor and enlightening the darkness of the heathen, not because he is dependent upon us. The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof. Moreover, he could have made the necessities of life as plentiful as air and water, and he could have written his Gospel on the face of the sky, so that all could read it; but that would have deprived his people of the blessing of giving. God has ordained that the poor will suffer if we do not help them, and the heathen will perish if we do not send them the Gospel, in order that his people may be the more certain to reap the reflex blessing of giving. Christ repeats his humiliation in coming to us in the person of his poor and begging, that we may the more surely respond; and then he promises to reward that response, as though it were done to himself. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Worship is exercising the graces of the heart upon their appropriate object. Giving is an act of worship. "Honor (worship) the Lord with thy substance." Alms and prayers are joined together in worship. "Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before me." The wise men, in connection with their worship of the child Jesus, opened their treasures and "presented unto him gifts: gold, frankincense and myrrh." The Sabbath is God's time, reserved for his worship; and we are commanded on that day to set apart a portion for him. "On the first day of the week, let every one lay by him in store." Giving is as much an act of worship as prayer or praise. "According as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give, not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful (hilarious) giver." That word cheerful in the Greek is hilarion, from which comes our word hilarious. The Christian gives gladly; he gives with a swing; his whole heart is in the service. This lifts giving up into the sphere of Christian worship. We are exhorted "to do good, and to communicate, for with such sacrifices God is well-pleased." We are enjoined "to remember the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, who, though he was rich, became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich," and "let the same mind be in you." Giving is a grace. "As ye abound in everything, in faith and utterance and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love toward us, see that ye abound in this grace also," i. e., the grace of liberality, as if this were the central grace. When Paul suggested that the Corinthian church relieve the poor saints at Jerusalem, he said: "Your administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant through many thanksgivings to God." The revenue of praise to God was the object. He directed that they make their contribution before he came. He knew that his presence, eloquence and logic would prompt them to give liberally. But he wished no such influences to prevail. He would have nothing but God's grace in exercise; so he directed them to prepare their offering beforehand, "that there be no ingathering when I come." The giver, and not the receiver, was to be the soliciting party. As Paul represents the Macedonians, "praying us with much entreaty that we would receive the gift and take upon us the fellowship of administering to the saints." The people brought their gifts to build the tabernacle until Moses and Aaron said: "Tell the people to bring us no more, for we have enough and too much." Ex. 36: 7. What a blessed day it will be when our missionaries will send the message home: "Tell the people to send no more, for we cannot use all we have!" That will be the grace of liberality abounding.

2. The amount to be given has been indicated. It is not a tax which the church may collect; that is Phariseism; it is Romanism; it is Parliamentarism. But it is a law which God lays upon the individual conscience, to be applied by himself as in God's sight. The basis of giving is the original law which requires us to love the Lord with all our heart and soul and strength and mind, and our neighbor as ourselves.

1. This love was manifested in the patriarchal age by giving one-tenth. As God required man from the beginning to give one-seventh of his time as a recognition of his right to all his time, so he required him to give one-tenth of his income as an acknowledgment of God's right to all he possesses. Accordingly, all nations decimated their property religiously from the earliest antiquity, as they observed religiously the septency portion of time. Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedek; Jacob vowed to give one-tenth to God. Approved examples prove the existence of a law. As this tithe law existed from the beginning, so it will continue to the end. In Heb. 7: 12 we are told that as the priesthood has been transferred from Melchisedek to Christ, so the law of tithing has been transferred; and as Abraham paid tithes to Melchisedek, the administrator of the law, then, so we pay tithes to Christ, the administrator of the law, now. "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." The tithe law is still in vogue.

2. In the Levitical age this love was manifested by giving one-third. One-tenth was to be given to the Lord for the use of the Levites. This was the original tithe. A second tenth was to be given for their feasts and sacrifices. Deut. 14: 23. The first fruits were by custom the sixtieth of the whole. The corners of the fields were to be left unharvested, by custom the sixtieth. A sheaf was to be dropped betimes for the poor. The first-born and firstlings of flock and herd were to be redeemed. Every seventh year the fields were to be left untilled to produce spontaneously for the poor. All debts were to be forgiven every seventh year. The half-shekel of the sanctuary was to be brought annually. All the males were to make three annual journeys to Jerusalem. Abundant free-will offerings were to be made for building the temple, synagogues and maintaining the schools of the prophets. So that a conscientious Jew could not have given less than one-third for charity and religion. In giving so much the people found that they were blessing themselves, and in giving less they were robbing themselves. Both in giving such a law, and in its providential enforcement, God set his seal upon the grace of liberality. As their field was little Palestine, while ours is the world; as they had the Spirit in measure, while we hear him without measure, it would seem that the degree of our liberality should not be behind, but in advance, of theirs.

3. In the Pentecostal period the disciples gave all to the Lord. As the city of Jericho was to be dedicated to God as the first fruits of Israel's conquest of Canaan, so these Christians, as the first fruits of the New Testament dispensation, were wholly devoted to the Lord. It was an object-lesson, teaching us that we are not our own; we are bought with a price. "Ye are Christ's."

4. In the apostolic age this love is manifested by systematic beneficence according to the law of Christ. "On the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as the Lord hath prospered him."

(1.) All are to give. "Every one." Not the rich, to the exclusion of the poor, nor the old, to the neglect of the young. It is not the few large drops, but the myriads of small drops, that refresh the earth. There is much religion in the Methodist watchword, "Justification, sanctification and a penny a week." Children should give. It is wrong to keep the children away from the sanctuary, and wrong to deprive them of the service of giving. They are to come into his courts and bring an offering with them. (2.) We are to give systematically, "On the first day of the week." One design of this was to connect our giving with religious service. Another was to secure regularity. Periodicity is the balance-wheel to secure regular giving. God gives us blessings regularly. He would have us like "the Giver of all good." Covetousness is our master foe. It is like the lean kine in Pharaoh's dream, devouring the fat kine, and still as ill-favored as before. It is like the tape-worm, devouring the food of its starving victim. Giving is the sword with which you may slay your enemy. Every week you give him a wound unto death. So covetousness grows weaker and liberality grows stronger each week. This repudiates the custom of giving a large amount and then for a long time nothing at all. It condemns the practice of waiting to be solicited. And it cuts up by the roots the practice of giving chiefly at death. Lord Chesterfield speaks with contempt of "munificent bequests," as if there is anything munificent in giving away what we can no longer use ourselves.

He speaks in terms of praise of "munificent donations," in which the giver anticipates the reward of giving in the blessedness of giving. Such gifts are twice blessed, "blessing him that gives and him that takes." (3.) Our giving is to be in proportion to our income. "As the Lord hath prospered him." One-tenth should be regarded as the minimum. Liberality does not begin until this is given. But increasing means involves the obligation to increase the proportion. A man whose income is $30,000 a year, can give $10,000 to the Lord more easily than the man whose income is $1,000 can give $100; and the large donation of the rich man is no more praiseworthy than the smaller one of the poor. (4.) Our giving is blessed of God in proportion as it means sacrifice. David said he would not offer to the Lord that which cost him nothing. The poor widow was recognized by our Lord because she gave her two mites, which was all her living. The Macedonian Christians gave "beyond their power," "but of their deep poverty." Paul suffered the loss of all things for Christ. Peter left his house, Matthew his tax-tables, James and John their fishing-nets, for Christ. Verily, they had their reward. Mariah Hoshmer worked in a factory in Lowell, Mass. Out of her earnings she saved $50 a year, and supported a theological student in Sestoria, Persia, until he went out as a preacher of the cross. This she did five times over. And when sixty years old she lived in an attic, took in sewing, and supported another student until he went to preach. Her consecrated gifts were converted into six ministers of Christ. In 1884, the 1,200 converts in the U. P. mission of Egypt gave $17 each. That year the Christians in America gave 50 cents apiece. If the home church had equaled the liberality of those Egyptian converts, instead of giving $5,500,000 for missions that year, they would have given $170,000,000. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord, if I will not open you the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing until there shall not be room enough to receive it."

Boston, Mass.

THE COVENANTER CHURCH AND ANTI-SECRECY.

The following Report on Secret Societies was adopted by the Covenanter Synod at Mansfield, Ohio, June 7, 1892:

Your Committee on Secret Societies would respectfully report:

That the institution of secrecy seems to suffer no diminution in the passing years. On the other hand, there is evidence not a little that the number of these orders is on the increase and the membership of many of them is multiplying rapidly.

There seems to be a greatly growing tendency to convert all kinds of business, to push all measures of policy, and to exert special energies in any movements along the line of secrecy.

The legitimate trades of the country are becoming so hemmed in by secret lines that it is almost impossible for one who stands aloof from these orders to get employment. The corruption in governmental policies, whether municipal or in the wider fields of state and the nation, are too often hid under secret coverings, and propagated by secret nods and grips and passwords. That dark empire in operation under the surface in the great metropolis of our country, so recently unearthed by an able divine, was a vast lodge of secrecy, wherein all manner of wicked abominations were done, and sights worse than Ezekiel saw were witnessed: these were carried forward under the cloak of authority—the guise of government, yet with well known recognition and encouragement by such as were duly installed. Where God is shut out, and light and morality, and everything good are excluded, the legitimate covering is secrecy, and the natural language of such a place is nods and grips and passwords.

Men hate the light and will not come to it lest their deeds be made manifest.

Too many of these syndicates in business, corners in trade, and caucuses in politics are infused with the same love of darkness, and bound by the same bonds of secrecy.

Courts of justice are too often handicapped in their judicial transactions, by secret oaths and bonds that have been taken beforehand.

If the truth were known there might be summed up thousands and millions of dollars drawn out from public treasuries through secret cliques and conclaves who press an unworthy claim under the guise of right and justice and charity.

Besides all these lines of secrecy and more that might be mentioned, there are actual lodges of forms and names and kinds, almost innumerable. It is reported by a reliable informant, in a town of Pennsylvania of from 3,000 to 5,000 inhabitants, there were ten churches and thirty secret societies. It is truly alarming, the manner in which secrecy is honeycombing society. The enemy of truth and light is pushing hard his kingdom along the lines of secret efforts.

In this vast brood of fraternities some are of a religious type, some are of a social character, and some are, more particularly, business associations.

While this Synod does not hesitate to condemn the entire system of secrecy as wrong, an unfitting and un-Christ-like method of carrying on any pursuit, yet we would pronounce our most emphatic judgment against those higher forms of secret orders that resort to ceremonies of religion—that offer to pray, and read the Bible, and symbolize the precious things of religion by material implements.

They go through the rounds and ceremonies of a religion that is no religion at all; they pray in a form that is no prayer, for they deny the only medium of prayer; they read the lodge-prepared word with the light of that word omitted from it. They deceive a multitude of men, who say it is all the religion they want, with a form of religion that is wholly Christless.

There is no phase of secrecy so dangerous as this, the pretended religious character, and against nothing belonging to the system does this church raise a louder protest.

We believe that the growth, popularity and aggressiveness of the various orders are largely due to the patronage and co-operation of professing Christians, and to the unfaithfulness of the ministry of a large number of the Christian denominations, in failing to apply Bible truth to these secret works of darkness; and in many instances, to the ministers themselves, in leading the people by their example into the fellowship of various secret orders.

We bear testimony against all this inconsistency, and appeal to all Christian people to come out from among them, and call upon all Christian ministers to faithfully sound the gospel trumpet against this entire system of anti-Christ.

Classifying these orders under three heads—1st, religious; 2d, social or insurance; 3d, economic or labor organizations—we submit the following resolutions for consideration and adoption:

1. That while we regard the element of secrecy as in itself dangerous and ensnaring, we must stamp with special condemnation those secret associations in which, with no acknowledgment of Christ, men are encouraged to look to lodge ritualism, influence and teaching for the salvation of the soul, trusting, with the regular payment of dues and occasional attendance, to, at last, be granted entrance to the "grand lodge above."

2. That while we are persuaded that there are many secret associations of a social nature, some having certain features of life and accident insurance as a prominent characteristic, and claiming in some localities that they are not oath-bound, which are to be widely distinguished from the Christless, soul-destroying institutions, yet we cannot but deem them all worthy of condemnation, as they are not only built upon the principle of secrecy, and bring together in close social relationship the religious and the irreligious, but also because they are stepping-stones to the more objectionable oath-bound, idolatrous orders. In the multiplicity of these organizations, differing so slightly from one another in their gradations to the most fearful depths, the only safe stopping-place is outside the least objectionable of them all, and we direct sessions to protect the membership of the church by requiring the separation of our people from all such associations.

3. With strong disapproval of the spirit which distinguishes the modern relations between capital and labor, we would lift up our protest against the formation of these modern organizations, even when they are not secret, in which employers and employes are banded against each other in antagonistic unions to wage against each other an industrial war, dishonoring to God and damaging to the interests of both. This industrial war, like all war, is an evil, and only an evil. Great and special responsibility rests upon those who in any community use their influence to encourage it, and we would unhesitatingly declare such to be worthy of the censure of the church. With those who are not the aggressors, but the defenders of their rights, we sympathize, yet even upon these we would urge separation from such defensive measures, and the irreligious fellowship involved, as by all means the safer and more consistent course for the true followers of Christ.

4. That we heartily approve of the aims and objects and efforts of the National Christian Association, that is waging such a constant and effective warfare, on scriptural grounds, against secret societies, and that we heartily endorse the Christian Cynosure.

WORK OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

The Seventy-sixth Annual Report of the American Bible Society, dated May 12, 1892, is an interesting document. From it we collect a few important facts and figures.

The issues of Bibles, Testaments and portions thereof during the past year were 1,298,196, of which 434,240 were circulated in foreign lands. Since the organization of the society, in 1816, the total issues of these publications have been 55,531,908.

FINANCES.

The total cash receipts for general purposes, for the year ending March 31st, 1892, were $556,527.29. In addition to this, the sum of $5,165.00 in cash was received for permanent investment. The total cash disbursements for general purposes were $563,588.31, the same being $7,061.02 in excess of the receipts.

An analysis of the receipts shows that the amount received for books and on purchase account was $274,582.71.

The gifts from the living amount to $81,300.34.

The amount received from legacies was $127,932.60.

The amount received from interest was $22,874.00; from rents, $44,798.48; and from various miscellaneous sources, $5,039.16.

The Society holds in trust invested funds, only the income of which is at the disposal of the Board of Managers, for general benevolent purposes. On the 31st of March, 1892, the aggregate amount of these funds was $383,961.56.

The Society also holds in trust a fund known as the Jonathan Burr Fund, amounting to $31,576.14, the income of which can be used only to supply the Scriptures in raised letter for the blind.

The par value of the Fitch Shepard Bible Fund on the 31st of March, 1892, was $60,872.93, but the income from it is not yet at the disposal of the managers.

Certain other funds are still available for the benevolent work of the Society, amounting at par to $72,986.64.

TRANSLATIONS AND REVISIONS.

The entire Bible in the language of the Gilbert Islanders, has been completed.

A translation of the Book of Genesis in Musko-kee, prepared by the Rev. J. R. Ramsay, will soon be put to press.

Mr. Pratt's work on the Spanish Bible has made good progress, and the version of the Old Testament is now complete.

The new version of the Gospel of Matthew, in Koordish, has been printed in the Armenian letter.

The critical work of preparing for publication the Ancient Armenian translation of the Bible, at Constantinople, has been going on through the year, and the printing of the first edition has already begun.

A large representative committee has been organized to revise the Zulu Bible, but several years must elapse before their revision will be available.

The revision of the Modern Syriac version has advanced so far that the printing has been resumed under the oversight of Rev. Dr. Labaree.

The Laos version of Matthew has been printed in the Siamese letter, but not yet in the Laos type.

In addition to books of the Old Testament in Canton Colloquial, which have been previously published, the Society has accepted translations of Joshua, Judges, and Ruth. Authority has been given for the issue, in Roman letter, of the Scriptures in Foochow Colloquial and Soochow Colloquial.

As one result of the Missionary Conference held at Shanghai, in 1890, a Board of Revisers has been organized to prepare a standard version of the Bible in Chinese. The Board consists of three committees, which are to prepare severally the Mandarin, the Classical, and the Easy Wenli versions.

PUBLICATIONS AND GRANTS.

Among the editions printed for the Society in other lands, the following are specially worthy of mention: 29,500 volumes at Constantinople, 33,000 at Beirut, 189,398 in China, 41,509 in Siam, and 15,500 in Germany.

The Bible for the Blind.—The number of volumes in raised characters issued during the year was 821. Volumes for the blind issued in forty-nine years, 18,031.

Scriptures Printed and Purchased.—These have amounted to 1,293,631 volumes, as follows: Printed at the Bible House, 913,687. Imported from abroad, 7,475. Printed abroad, 307,032. Purchased abroad, 65,437.

Volumes Issued.—From the Bible House, 936,578; in foreign lands, 361,618. Total, 1,298,196. Of these, 411,618 were Bibles, 516,889 New Testaments, and 368,868 portions of the Bible. Including copies sent from the Bible House, the aggregate circulation in foreign lands was 434,240 volumes.

The Bible Society Record has an average monthly circulation of 19,048 copies.

Grants of books were made to auxiliary and missionary societies, churches, and individuals, of the value of $18,300.29; to Life Directors and Life Members, $8,656.66; discount on sales, $24,737.14; consignments to foreign agencies, $23,258.36; for colportage, $8,918.33.

District Superintendents engaged in the Society's work, 21; colporteurs working in the States and Territories, 55.

Number of auxiliaries reported as engaged in the canvass of their fields during the year, 102; agents employed and paid by them, 93.

The combined results of all the agencies of the Society for supplying the destitute, so far as reported for the past year, are as follows:

Families visited, 448,479. Families found without the Scriptures, 55,560. Destitute families supplied, 35,423. Destitute individuals supplied, 20,469. Sunday schools supplied by auxiliaries, 717.

The appropriations for the foreign work of the coming year amount to $159,630.

THE FOREIGN WORK.

Of the foreign work last year the report says: The unsettled condition of political affairs in Venezuela, Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and Chili has been exceedingly unfavorable for the sale and distribution of the Scriptures, and the riots and uprisings in China have caused a great reduction in the circulation usually reported there. The growing influence of foreigners in Persia has excited the jealousy of the people, and made them timid about buying the Scriptures. In Japan the adoption of new methods of colportage has been followed by a diminished circulation, and in the Levant Agency the results would have been much more satisfactory than they are, had not the Turkish authorities thrown constant impediments in the way. In no previous year have so many adverse influences been combined to the disadvantage of our work. The results are reflected in the reduced circulation reported in foreign lands, which were only 434,240 last year, as against an average of 530,371 for the five years immediately preceding.

The American Bible Society appeals to all Christians to aid it by liberal donations, according to their ability. There is no more worthy cause.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An "undiscovered country"—The death of a noble man—
"Long Convent hair"—Pres. Hyde again—Women politicians—The Butler bill.

On a day like this, with the thermometer rioting in the nineties, there is a decided charm in giving the reins to one's imagination, and taking a northward flight, say in the direction of Labrador. This old globe of ours is by no means yet like a squeezed-out orange, as we are almost tempted sometimes to fancy it. Last year a party of naturalists chose for their summer outing an excursion to this very coast of Labrador, of which, for all its comparative nearness, most of us know about as much as if it was located in the moon. But their report has given us some idea of the wealth of savage beauty on those lonely shores as they lie basking in the brief Arctic summer; of the forests of pine against which no feller has come up; of towering cliffs, where the seabirds lay their eggs, and the hand of the hunter molests them not; of lonely beaches washed by waves that have lapped the bases of gigantic icebergs as they closed, dark and dreadful, around some unfortunate navigator. There it is; that mysterious No-Man's-Land, only the distance of a pleasant sail away—perhaps some time to become the resort of tourists and pleasure-seekers, and lose forever its virginal charms.

Last evening the mail brought me a note bearing a message which has ere this flashed around the world, and brought a pang of keen sorrow to multitudes: "Dear Dr. Cullis went to be with Jesus on Saturday morning at 7 o'clock." Everybody knows of the work wrought by this loving and beloved disciple of Him whose mission it was to do good; but perhaps few comparatively know the number, the magnitude and the variety of the different institutions he has founded and carried on for the relief of suffering humanity. Besides the Consumptives' and the Cancer Homes, he established one for those suffering from spinal complaints, and was contemplating one for paralytics, and also for unfortunate girls who have been led into ways of sin; while the Faith-training College, city missions, coffee-rooms, an institute for the freedmen in Virginia, and various missions in foreign fields, India and South Africa—all these have been planned out and carried on by the inspired energy of one thoroughly consecrated man. His name will live with those other heroes of faith, Muller and Spurgeon. God grant that as one star sets another may rise, and that the work for which he gave his life be not suffered to fall to the ground.

I noticed the other day, in the advertisement of a firm dealing in human hair, that switches, "all long convent hair," could be had for half the price asked in other places. This was probably intended to disabuse the mind of the fair purchaser of any suspicion that it might have come from the hospital, the charnel house, or some such ghoulish source; but to me the thought that the hair thus advertised was severed from the heads of young women about to be buried in a living tomb, carried with it almost equal horror. There is a poem, by Robert Browning, founded on an old Breton legend, in which a dying girl begs of her parents that her wealth of golden hair may not be severed, but buried with her:

"Not my hair," made the girl her moan;
"All the rest is gone or to go,
But the last, last grace, my all, my own,
Let it stay in the grave that the ghosts may know.
Let my poor gold hair alone."

I can well imagine that many a poor nun called upon to sacrifice her last personal adornment may have felt like making a similar appeal. How the snip of the relentless shears must have seemed like the snapping of the last link binding her to home and friends. Henceforth the cell, the pallet-bed, the stifling dress, the monotonous, dreary existence which must know no natural, human, kindly relations, not even the baptismal name that her mother called her in the cradle. For my part I do not envy the woman who can wear the hair obtained from such a source without a thrill of horror; a feeling as if every separate strand was a serpent and she a new Medusa.

In my last letter I alluded to President Hyde's article in the Forum on "Impending Paganism in New England," but neglected to mention a statement of his in the same article, which makes his apparent failure to see the important part which the lodge plays in bringing about this state of affairs, still more remarkable. He says that in and about a certain Vermont village there are four churches, Methodist, Baptist, Congregationalist and Universalist; and adds: "The strongest of these churches are the Universalist, with its membership of thirteen women and one man, and the Congregationalist, with its membership of twenty women and four men. There is hardly a representative man in any of these four churches, though the Masonic lodge gathers from this and neighboring towns its hundred members."

Many people now-a-days who find it hot, may take a selfish pleasure in thinking how the politicians must perspire, yelling for their favorite candidate, with the thermometer at 95. To me the most disagreeable feature of the late Republican Convention at Minneapolis has been to read of the two or three women who made themselves conspicuous by shouting and waving banners for their favorite candidate. Had it been a Prohibition Convention, my feelings in this respect would have been only intensified. Such undignified conduct, which would be hardly creditable in a parcel of schoolboys, is in the highest degree unworthy of men when they are sent as delegates to a great deliberative assembly where a question of such vast importance as choosing a Presidential candidate is to be considered; but a woman who will descend to such depths actually does that dreadful thing which the anti-suffragists are so fond of saying will be the result of giving her the ballot—she unsexes herself, so far as she is able to do it.

A half-barrel of liquor exploded the other day in the liquor store of Doherty Bros., a well-known Boston house, making a loud noise and doing considerable damage. This ought to frighten the drunkards, but a man who is the bondsman of any evil appetite seems callous to fear. It would seem to confirm, however, the dreadful stories we sometimes hear of the deaths of hard drinkers from "spontaneous combustion."

It is time anti-saloonists were heartily sick and disgusted with this everlasting tinkering of the liquor laws. The Butler bill is a case in point. This provides that no liquor-selling shall be carried on except as an adjunct to some other business—a measure designed rather to harass than to suppress the traffic. It is more than doubtful whether in the end it would diminish the sale. Its effect might be rather to entrap more in the toils of the liquor-seller, by combining his traffic with some legitimate business. Of course, as a consistent Democrat, who wishes to keep the liquor vote, Gov. Russell could do no less than veto a measure obnoxious to his party; but the reason he gives—that the law cannot be enforced—is a weak one. It is enough to disgust any sensible and patriotic mind to have this argument, if such it can be called, continually dinned into our ears. If true, it is a confession of inherent and radical weakness. A government which cannot enforce its own laws is on the high road to anarchy. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June 22, 1892.

Representative John Davis, of Kansas, who was born and reared in the State of Illinois, says there is a law upon the statute books of our State which will prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors upon the grounds of the World's Fair, or within two miles thereof. He says this law was enacted many years ago as the result of protests of the temperance people against the disgraceful orgies which in the early days attended the annual county agricultural fairs of the State, and that it never has been repealed, at least not to his knowledge. The law in question, Mr. Davis says, prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors upon any fair grounds within the State or within two miles of any fair grounds. If this be true, it is a very fortunate thing, as it begins to look very doubtful whether Congress will take any action on the subject, notwithstanding the great number of petitions which have been presented requesting legislation to prohibit the sale of liquor on the Exposition grounds. The Illinois law is more than the temperance people asked; for, if Mr. Davis is not mistaken, it will not only prevent the sale of liquor upon the grounds of the Exposition, which is all the petitions to Congress have asked for, but it will, if enforced, prevent the sale of liquors within two miles of the Exposition grounds. I am informed that steps will at once be taken by temperance people to ascertain whether the law spoken of by Representative Davis has ever been repealed, and if not, whether the Illinois State authorities are disposed to assist them in enforcing it.

The first annual commencement of the Lucy Webb Hayes Bible School was held in Foundry church on Monday night. The school is non-sectarian, and its first year of existence has been carefully watched by our church people, all of whom are pleased that it is a success. The commencement exercises were opened with an address by Rev. Dr. J. W. Dalby, president of the school, explaining the object of the institution and reviewing its first year's work. He was followed by Miss Louise Wilson in an interesting address on "The Deaconess as a Bible Student." Postmaster-General Wanamaker was on the programme for an address, but he was unexpectedly detained in Philadelphia, and his place was kindly taken by Mr. Elijah W. Halford, President Harrison's private secretary. The closing talk was by Rev. Mr. Naylor. Three young ladies, Miss Julia Howard, Miss Annie Cozden and Miss Laura Davis, were received into the order of deaconesses.

Those engaged in local mission work have long regretted that the extreme southeast and southwest sections of the city were without a single church building for the use of white people. Mission services have been held for some time in rooms in private dwellings in those sections, but the attendance has outgrown such cramped quarters. This state of affairs was brought to the attention of Mr. W. L. Bowen, a Christian gentleman much interested in home mission work, and the result is, a new frame building 30 by 50 feet, with a seating capacity of 300, which he has generously built and donated. This building which, in honor of the donor, is to be known as the Bowen Mission, was formally dedicated Sunday afternoon by the Central Union Mission, assisted by several ministers and a number of our most prominent business men. The building was crowded to the doors by an interested congregation, consisting largely of residents in its immediate vicinity.

Few people would know, without being told, that the Rev. Mr. Peabody (Bark Foe Fo) was a native African. He delivered an interesting address to the colored Y. M. C. A last Sunday afternoon, telling them about his native tribe, of which he is a prince when at home, which numbers 200,000 people and has not a single church, school or minister. It was for the purpose of preparing himself for the ministry that he has spent six years in America, and, having been ordained, he proposes shortly returning home to devote his life to missionary work among his own people. He hopes to induce some others of his color to accompany him as co-laborers.

There is considerable talk in Congressional circles about President Harrison's message sent to the Senate this week, in answer to a resolution recently adopted by that body, asking for information and copies of any correspondence between this government and that of Canada concerning commercial reciprocity. The President recommends that Congress pass some retaliatory legislation, because of the discrimination made by the Canadian Government against American vessels passing through the Welland canal, a discrimination which he thinks is a violation of the treaty of 1870, and says that no reciprocity is possible as long as Canada continues in her present mind. *

A POET'S FAITH.

I am a chemist, a specialist, an anatomist; and the study of materialism through these means of research have only strengthened my belief in the soul's immortality. Go as far as you will in scientific delving, invariably you come to the point where materialism ends, and where that subtle, impalpable, blind grasp into futurity is attempted. It is impossible to comprehend soul truth through materialistic agencies. It requires the exercise of the soul functions; and then one believes. The very failure of materialism to satisfy, proves that there is something beyond it—soul immortality.—Sir Edwin Arnold.

THE WORLD'S FAIR AND THE SABBATH.

The Sabbath Association of Illinois has issued the following circular letter to "All Ministers of the Gospel in our State," with a request that they at once, and with energy, give it their attention. The United States government and several States in the Union have already voted that the whole Columbian Exposition, or their own portions of it, should be closed on the Lord's day. Illinois certainly should not be dilatory in this matter:

"DEAR BRETHREN:—The Illinois Exhibit at the World's Columbian Exposition is under the direction and control of the State Board of Agriculture. The members of this board are as follows: Dist. 1. J. Irving Pearce, Chicago. 2. John P. Reynolds, Chicago. 3. J. Harley Bradley, Chicago. 4. William Stewart, Chicago. 5. Byron F. Wyman, Sycamore. 6. A. B. Hostetter, Mt. Carroll. 7. Samuel Dysart, Franklin Grove. 8. W. D. Stryker, Plainfield. 9. John Virgin, Fairbury. 10. D. W. Vittum, Canton. 11. E. B. Davis, Alledo. 12. W. H. Fulkerson, Jerseyville. 13. J. W. Judy, Tallula. 14. S. W. Johns, Oreana. 15. E. E. Chester, Champaign. 16. James K. Dickerson, Lawrenceville. 17. David Grove, Carlinville. 18. Edward C. Pace, Ashley. 19. B. Pullen, Centralia. 20. J. Washburn, Marion.

"These gentlemen have power to close our State exhibit on the Lord's day, whether the Exposition shall so regard the day or not. Will you not on receipt of this letter write to the member of the board from your district, and ask four influential men of your congregation to do the same, requesting him to vote to close the Illinois exhibit each Lord's day during the Exposition? The board has never opened its own exhibitions on the Sabbath, and we believe that it will grant our request, if it is made promptly and generally throughout the State.

"By order of the Executive Committee of the State Sabbath Association."

STERLING TESTIMONIES.

"I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the 'grip' of Masonry and all other secret and un-Christian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence."—From Dr. George F. Pentecost's Letter to Conference of Christians on Secret Societies, Chicago, 1887.

"We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. God demands, and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion."—From Pres. Finney's book, "Character, Claims and Practical Workings of Freemasonry," pp. 260, 263.

"I do not see how any Christian, most of all a Christian minister, can go into these secret lodges with unbelievers. They say they can have more influence for good, but I say they can have more influence for good by staying out of them, and then reproving their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot had. If twenty-five Christians go into a secret lodge with fifty who are not Christians, the fifty can vote anything they please, and the twenty-five will be partakers of their sins. They are unequally yoked with unbelievers. 'But, Mr. Moody,' some say, 'if you talk that way you will drive all the members of secret societies out of your meetings and out of your churches.' But what if I do? Better men will take their places. Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God, and if only one or two go with us it is all right."—Address by Dwight L. Moody in Farwell Hall, Chicago, 1876.

CORRESPONDENCE.

QUESTION AND ANSWER.—III.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I now propound a third question: How can one best oppose Masonry?

Answer: Masonry, by arraying itself against our Lord Jesus Christ, thereby forfeits all just claims upon Christians who have been redeemed by faith in him and made witnesses, spiritually, of his celestial glory. When he, the soul's beloved One, is rejected, let us, if need be, suffer with him. Let us become so conformed to him in heart and life, and so dwell in him daily and hourly that we shall be filled with his presence. Then we shall be ready to detect at once the sophistries, the deceptions and the blasphemies of that anti-Christian conspiracy called Masonry.

All that helps to further the Gospel in its blessed work on earth—all that tends to make the children of God purer, holier and more devoted to him—is so much done against the dark power of the lodge.

Secondly, supply yourself with Anti-masonic literature as far as may be, especially Ronayne's "Master's Carpet" and Doesburg's Exposition of Masonry. Both of these authors are living, and prepared to prove what they have stated in these books.

By all means, read the Cynosure, for that being (as it is) the national organ of Anti-masonry in the United States, it has special advantages which enable it to give full and complete reports, from all quarters, of the progress of the work, and the best thoughts of the best writers. Each subscriber to the Cynosure is, in that respect, doing good work for the cause.

Those of us who have taken it for years find it growing better and better, and by reason of its sanctified courage and daring, worthy of a place in the front rank of the religious press.

Thirdly, let us honor and support the noble and self-sacrificing band of Christians who have gone out as lecturers to arouse the people to the necessity of prompt action, if we would do something to stay the flood of secret orders (disorders) that threaten to sweep over the land.

The true knights of the nineteenth century are those, who, like the Blanchards and Stoddards and their co-workers, have taken to themselves the armor of God, and are stoutly contending against wickedness in high places, counting not their own lives dear unto themselves if they may only finish their course with joy and the work which has been given them to do.

As we have opportunity, let us work with and through them, by assisting them with our prayers and means as we may be able, and soon the time will come when the Master shall say, "Come up higher." CHRISTIAN.

VIEWS OF A ZEALOUS REFORMER.

WOLF CREEK, Wash. Co., O., June, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am glad that reform work is begun, and I pray that the only true God will cause it to progress in good order. It seems that unless there is a great reform in the pretended Christian societies, and the United States government, that the people thereof will have to suffer much.

Be courageous to labor to root up every plant which God has not planted in his vineyard. Satan and his servants cannot go beyond what God permits; and we will soon receive according to all the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or bad.

Had we not better cut down on those high-sounding titles? How does "Rev." work with a wolf in sheep's clothing?

I desire to see a party come up soon that will be for God and his church, the family and the state. ELI RARDEN.

A BIBLE-WORKER IN MEXICO.

MAZATLAN, Mex., June 2, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—When I left Chicago in April, 1889, I came directly to Mexico, at first entering the State of Chihuahua, and the city of the same name, where I started in upon my Bible work.

In April, 1890, I began to travel all over the State, and sold a great many Bibles and Testaments. The next October I started for the mountains, to a large mining camp, where (at Bat-opilas) we had great success, as I was the first and only person to carry to them the Bible, or evangelical Word of Christ. But oh, how dark and superstitious are the people! and yet so hungry are they when they once taste of the Word. They remind me of a fish out of water—so anxious to get back into it again. I went into Batopilas with two mule-loads of books, but did not have to canvass near all of the district. Some persons who had large families bought several Bibles and Testaments; and four women, while on their way to the meat market, stopped and looked at my books. One said that she was going to buy meat, but as she had only money for one, she would buy a Bible instead, which she did, and turned back. Another asked if I would wait while she went to borrow money to buy a Bible. I did, and in an hour or so she returned and bought her book.

I had an Indian with me, to carry a box of books that weighed 65 pounds. One day we emptied it twice. Two days we took in $40 a day for books. After selling a day or two, when going through the streets, we would see men, women and children reading the Word. No minister of the evangelical faith has ever entered that place to preach Christ.

Leaving Batopilas, I crossed a very mountainous range, reaching the town of El Fuerte, in the State of Sinaloa, where I had great success in selling the Bible; and now the Rev. E. M. Bissell is located there and doing a good work.

From El Fuerte we went to Culican, where the Lord greatly blessed my work. I was the first missionary who had ever been there with the pure and simple Word of God. It was there, in April, 1891, that I was hanged in effigy for three hours, and was then burned—in effigy, I mean; was stoned several times in the streets; and the Roman Catholic bishop had a circular printed, forbidding the Catholics to sell me food, give me water to drink, or look at, buy, or receive as gifts, any of my books; nor were they to talk to me, or salute me on the street, under pain of excommunication.

In the same State, town of Sinaloa, I was asked why the priest had prohibited the sale of Bibles, but let the people read novels. While I sometimes read the Bible to the people in Spanish, I have seen them weep, and say, "Ah, that is nice, or true," etc. Here I will draw you a word-picture among a group of which I have hundreds: Enter a room in a house made of sundried bricks, with scarcely any furniture in it—often no chairs, or table, or dishes; a wicker mat on the floor of earth; a few earthen pots, or cups; a long, flat stone, having four legs, on which they grind their corn; and some old pictures of saints on the wall, or a cross made either of wood, or copper, or brass. On entering such a house (or hovel, rather), we often find no one who can read, or, if one can, she may say that she cannot; but when I have read to them from the first chapter of Matthew's Gospel, or the fifth chapter, or other portions, they will sit squatting on their feet, or stand, with mouths and ears wide open, as if spell-bound. I read just enough to make them want the book, for my work is to sell the Bible, not to preach. I have not the time; the minister must do that. It often seems such a pity for the home missions to lay out thousands and thousands of dollars, every year, to help support weak churches, where, for instance, there are three or four in a town, when there ought to be but one. They had better use that money to put the Bible into the hands of those who have never seen or heard the Bible read.

I once in awhile come across an old Bible, and what a tale these books would tell if they could speak! It is, in my opinion, a sin to spend the Lord's money in order to support our church with mission funds when there is no need of it. Look at Mexico! Hundreds of towns which have never heard the Bible read, and much less have they ever had one within their borders!

At Macorita, State of Sinaloa, I sold a good many books; for the people there, as they are everywhere I go, were glad to get them.

At Alamos, State of Sonora, we had large sales of the Bible, and much interest was aroused; so that it became the town-talk, and men and women "took sides"—some for my books, and some opposed to them; but the results of the seed sown will be great.

One night, as I was going home after my day's work, I had one Bible left in my gripsack. It was just at dusk, when I stopped before the house of a poor woman who was sitting outside. I asked her if she would like to look at a Bible. She said: "What is a Bible?"—for she told me, afterwards, that she had never seen one; but as she could read, I asked her to look at it. She read from it for a short time, and then said: "I like it much; how much is it worth?" On being told, she said: "I have no money; but if you will wait for a few moments, I will get some." She went into the house and brought out some clothes, which she handed to her girl, who took them to a pawnbroker and pledged them for money enough to buy a small Bible. When she had paid for it, she was greatly rejoiced. It made me think of our Lord's parable of the pearl of great price, for which a man sold all that he had that he might purchase it. B. B. B.

TEMPERANCE.

BROOKVILLE, Pa., June 17, 1892.

If it be true, what scientific men tell us, that drunkenness is a disease, and must be treated as such, because the nerve-cells or centres are so changed from their normal condition by the use of alcohol as to make them dependent upon it for their support, and depriving men of their will power, it seems almost useless to try to reform a drunkard without the use of some means to restore those disorganized nerve-cells to their original condition, which the Keeley bichloride of gold cure seems to do.

But, believing in the old maxim, that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," it is needful to take care of the young and rising generation and prevent the making of drunkards.

It is said that "charity begins at home;" let us begin at home. We are all in process of education; adding little by little, our lives are made up. Be ye temperate in all things, says the apostle, and that injunction reaches further than useless and hurtful things, but applies to our daily necessities. The first duty as regards temperance is, "let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit;" cleanse our own houses and cellars of all that old leaven, which will corrupt wherever it is found; no amount of vigilance or cunning can hide it; it betrays its own presence. Mother makes, or has her pies made, with brandy or hard cider to render them palatable to herself, husband and children. Does it not speak louder than your temperance speeches that you like at least the taste of intoxicating liquor? and is there not danger to yourself and your family? and the influence exerted encourages the use of liquor, and we frequently hear it said by the drinker, "You take yours with pie; we prefer ours without pie." Fathers and mothers get medicine without prescriptions; they don't feel right without a little stimulant; the drinker puts in the same plea. Suspicious-looking boxes arrive by express; your keen-eyed boys suspect, find and taste the good thing you tried to keep hidden from them, and thus you lay the foundation in your boy's heart, not only for intemperance, but deception and hypocrisy. Oh, shame on zealous pretenders to temperance!

Christian people, temperance people, don't get up festivals with accompanying schemes to raise money for a good cause, or any other; the drinker knows that you gratify your appetite in that way; he is his; the principle is the same in both, though somewhat different in effect. Don't encourage the use of mild drinks in public places; it has the "appearance of evil" which we are to avoid. Consistency is a precious jewel; and if more would wear it, the temperance cause would be prospered. Observation has suggested these few thoughts, and if any reader of them did those things with all good conscience, may it do them good, and show them the errors they have made. A. B.

ORGANIZE FOR VICTORY.

ARCADE, N. Y., June, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Bro. Manlove N. Butler, of Avalon, Mo., in his "American Handbook" presents some hopeful signs of the downfall of the Masonic idol, and expresses his faith that that result will soon be reached.

This is a refreshing and inspiring outlook.

Anyone who reads his book, which costs only forty cents, postage prepaid (and may be ordered from the Cynosure office) cannot fail to be impressed with the fitness of the name (Man-love) given him, and with the evident fact that he is also a lover of Christ and his all-comprehensive works.

It has been made clear, through the past ages of earthly experiences, that there is a God who has created, and who rightfully rules over all. No human devices will be effectual for the removal of the works of Satan, such as Freemasonry, the liquor curse, sect building and other enormous evils, unless they be sanctioned and supported by the Infinite. He has made it clear that he chooses to work for the good of his sentient subjects, through the agency of his redeemed children. To them he has given rules and regulations which, in order to lead to success, must be observed.

There are but few of God's subjects who voice the declaration that their plans and execution are preferable to his; yet there are multitudes, even of his professedly loyal children, who plan and act directly contrary to his plainly given commands. In Jeremiah's time, and through him (22: 24), God, in condemning the actions of his own covenant people, says: "This has been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyest not my voice."

Such is the present attitude of a majority of God's professedly obedient subjects in relation to his commands, as given through his servant Paul (Romans 15: 7): "Receive ye one another, as Christ also received us, to the glory of God." In direct and palpable disobedience to this command, and without any apparent compunction, these men and women devise and organize plans of their own, which are counter to God's rule for receiving to fellowship such as Christ has acknowledged and received to his communion. Thus they make void the law of God in this very important particular, and render essential service to Satan, by introducing and maintaining revolt against the Almighty's supreme and rightful authority.

Such being the travestied condition of Christ's militant forces, triumph over the powers of darkness cannot, in the nature of things, be expected.

A man of nearly eighty-three years of age, and having been for more than sixty-nine years an enlisted soldier of the cross of Christ, I humbly, yet earnestly and beseechingly, beg my fellow disciples who are now united to schismatic bodies to come out from them, to the end that all may be marshaled together under the one only banner of the cross of Christ and march to consequent and sure victory. R. W. LYMAN.

LITERATURE.

WHY THE COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION SHOULD BE OPENED ON SUNDAY: A Religio-Social Study. By the Rev. Henry C. Kinney, A. M., (Columbia College,) Missionary of the Protestant Episcopal church at the Stock Yards, Chicago, etc., etc. Pamphlet, 54 8vo. pages. 1892.

It seems strange that the rector of a professedly Christian church should be found arrayed in favor of the unorthodox use of God's holy day, set apart by all true believers as a time of sanctified rest and worship,—a day which he would have devoted to sight-seeing in its most worldly sense. "How my religious position," he says, "will be received is to me of little consequence. . . . Freely granting that my position is not that which is held by the majority of communicants of orthodox churches, I, boldly, and with assurance, appeal from these opinions to views held twenty-five years hence." That is, he does not write for the present generation, which is more interested in the Columbian Exposition than any other can be, but for a supposititious race of socialists whom he evidently thinks will supersede the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Kinney defends the opening of the Exposition on Sunday as a work of necessity! We should esteem him far more highly did he occupy the position taken on this subject by Bishop McLaren at the recent Diocesan Episcopalian convention in this city, to which Mr. Kinney was a delegate: When a resolution was presented that the Fair ought, in great part at least, to be closed on Sunday, a delegate moved that it be laid on the table; and the convention so ordered. Then the Bishop said, in explanation: "The vote must be contemplated not as if it would advertise the feeling of the convention as to the Sunday closing of the Fair, but as expressive of the conviction that such a matter is not for the action of this body."

ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE YEAR 1891-2 of the New England Watch and Ward Society: Formerly the New England Society for the Suppression of Vice, incorporated in Boston in 1884. Pamphlet, 28 8vo. pages. Published by the Society at 28 School street, Boston.

Among the prominent officers of this excellent society, which works in harmony with the efficient services of Anthony Comstock, we notice the names of Rt. Rev. Phillips Brooks, D.D., Rev. Edward E. Hale, D.D., and Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D. This pamphlet is a record of the good work done during the past year by the society in the suppression of immoral literature, obscene pictures and theatrical posters, gambling in various forms, racing, pools, etc. An interesting feature of the society is the protection of virtuous women against the devices of evil men and harlots. The statistics of the work performed in these departments is creditable to the organization.

THE ETHICS OF LITERATURE: Fanatical Philosophy's Failure as an Element of Apologetics. Analysis of the Great Analogy. By John A. Kersey, of Indiana. Pamphlet, 12 8vo. pages.

The object of this brochure is to "prove the grounds taken by Butler in his Analogy absurd; and to establish the fallacy of his reasons for the existence of a God." Those who are acquainted with the merits of Butler's Analogy will recall Esop's Fable of the viper and the file.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The American Academy of Political and Social Science was founded at Philadelphia, Pa., December 14, 1889. It was organized in answer to an express desire on the part of students of economics, politics and sociology for a society which could do in the general field of political science what similar associations, in the United States and elsewhere, are doing for natural science. The Academy thus becomes a medium through which investigators can get the results of their special work before those persons most interested in them as soon as they are ready for publication. In this way its members are enabled to keep themselves in constant touch with what is doing throughout the world in this important branch of science. The Academy publishes quite an extensive catalogue of its various and peculiar publications. Prominent among these is its bi-monthly periodical of 152 octavo pages, Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, edited by an efficient trio of literary and scientific gentlemen. The contents of the May issue comprise papers on the following topics: Practical Working of the Australian System of Voting in Massachusetts, by Richard H. Dana; Merits and Defects of the Pennsylvania Ballot Law of 1891, by Charles C. Binney; A Third Revolution (Land Reform), by Edward P. Cheyney; River and Harbor Bills (a review), by Emory R. Johnson; Indian Education (a manly plea for the civilization of our real native Americans), by Frank W. Blackman; Discussion: Economic Theory of Machines, by Augusto Grazini; Personal Notes; Book Reviews, and Editorial Comments. Any person interested in the promotion of political and social science is eligible for membership upon being approved by the council of the society. The annual membership fee is $5.00; life membership (exempt from all annual assessments), $100. The regular publications of the Academy (including the Annals, which is $6.00 a year) are sent gratis to all members. Address American Academy of Political and Social Science, Station B., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Missionary Review of the World for July contains the following specially interesting articles: "Apostolic Missions; or, The Gospel for Every Creature," by Rev. Joseph Angus, D.D., of Regent Park Baptist College, London, with editorial introduction by Dr. A. T. Pierson; "Decentralization of Missions," by Rev. A. J. Gordon, D.D.; "The New Hebrides Mission," by Rev. Robert Steel, D.D., Sidney, N. S. W.; "William Carey—III.: The Translator of the Bible and the Benefactor of Asia," by George Smyth, LL.D., F. R. G. S., Edinburgh, Scotland; "Discerning the Signs of the Times," by Dr. A. T. Pierson; "Twentieth Anniversary of the McAll Mission in France," as reported by Anna W. Pierson; "Answered Prayer," by A. Bunker, D.D., Toungou Burma; "The Work in the Diamond Mines," by Mrs. H. B. Allen, Meriden, Conn.; "A Protest Against Needless Exposure in Mission Work," by W. R. Lee, M.D. The other departments besides "Literature of Missions," have the usually wide range of topics. The Chinese Exclusion bill comes in for considerable attention. Published by the Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year.

Our Animal Friends, for June, published monthly by the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 10 East Twenty-second street, New York, is replete with varied and salutary reading for young and old, and withal as entertaining as it is instructive and suggestive. The illustrations are very fine. It ought to be freely circulated among the young, to instill into their minds the usefulness and pleasure of a true humanity. $1.00 a year.

LODGE NOTES.

"BENEVOLENT ELKS" IN NEW YORK.

The Grand Secretary's report for the fiscal year showed that there are 222 lodges in good standing, with a total membership of 18,221. The amount of cash on hand in the Grand Lodge treasury is $90,898. The value of property of the Grand Lodge is $342,511, making a total valuation of assets of $433,501. The amount expended for charity by the Grand Lodge during the year was $28,188. The receipts of the Grand Lodge amounted to $15,300, and the expenses were $10,100. The total membership of the Grand Lodge is 1,100, of whom about one-third are present in Buffalo. Forty-one new lodges have been organized.—Buffalo Telegram, June 14.

"LEAGUE OF FRIENDS."

Judge Toney, of the Law and Equity Court, here to-day decided that the League of Friends, James Henderson, President, had no right to operate. The organization proposed upon payment of $2.50 a month to guarantee to members $25 a week in case of disability by accident and $1,250 at death; also $2,500 at the end of ten years. Judge Toney held that this promise was illusory and misleading. Henderson claimed that a sufficient number would drop out without any return to enable him by the end of ten years to keep his promise.—Louisville (Ky.) Telegram, June 14.

MASONRY IN NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Hiram Lodge, No. 1, F. and A. M., was the first chartered lodge of this order in this city. It was instituted Aug. 12, 1750. David Wooster was the first Worshipful Master, Samuel Mansfield the first Senior Warden and John Elliott the first Junior Warden. The lodge is rightly proud that it held all its meetings regularly during the Anti-masonic reign of terror. At the organization of the first Grand Lodge of Connecticut the first Grand Master and the first Grand Secretary were members of this lodge. The lodge for many years has been known by the distinctive and familiar name of "Old Hiram." The lodge ranks among the wealthiest in the State. Among the property it owns is the large building corner of Chapel and Union streets known as Masonic Temple. At present it has about 500 members.—Press Report.

HIBERNIANS IN IOWA.

The fourth biennial convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of Iowa is in session here, with a large attendance, ex-Senator Wolfe, of DeWitt, the presiding delegate. The Secretary's report showed a membership of 3,800, belonging to forty-two divisions. Within the year $10,505 was paid out in sick benefits. The order has in its treasury $40,500 in cash, and property valued at $25,000.—Dispatch from Des Moines, June 14.

LODGES AND LYNCHING IN THE SOUTH.

In Southern States, says an exchange, 800 Negroes have been lynched within ten years.

The editor of the Living Way, Memphis, Tenn., recently visited Columbus, Miss., to preach a series of doctrinal sermons. He found the place terribly lodge-ridden, and many colored Baptists members of these secret assemblies. He had abundant opportunity to observe and reprove them. Then he wrote: "Here is the great secret of the lynching all over this country. The colored people have gone into these dark lodges and sworn their hearts locked against God, hence driven away the influence of the Holy Spirit, as there is no other being that can afford protection. They are killed with impunity, John 3: 19-21. This was the case with the Jews, and God told them beforehand what would be the consequences. See Deut. 28: 15-30; Eph. 5: 11, 12; Ez. 8: 9-12. It will do no good to go to another country unless you will amend your ways."

Dandruff forms when the glands of the skin are weakened, and, if neglected, baldness is sure to follow. Hall's Hair Renewer is the best preventive.

Strikes at the root—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. That's the reason so many different diseases and disorders yield to it. They all have the same beginning—there's a torpid liver or impure blood. And they all have the same ending—they're cured, by this remedy.

Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Bilioousness; the most obstinate Skin and Scalp Diseases, such as Salt-rheum, Tetter, Erysipelas, Eczema and kindred ailments; the worst forms of Scrofula—even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages; every blood-taint and disorder, no matter how it came—all are cured by it.

It's the only medicine for all such diseases that's so positively certain in its effects that it can be guaranteed. If it fails to benefit or cure, in any case, the money is refunded.

Nothing else can be "just as good." It may be better—for the dealer. But he isn't the one who needs help. Beware of spurious imitations or dilutions, offered at less prices.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1892.

WHY OPPOSE FREEMASONRY?

ALL secret societies, as sources of benevolence, charity, good-fellowship, and as moral and religious teachers, are useless. There is no laudable object which cannot be accomplished more successfully without them than by their aid. Indeed, secrecy would be a positive hindrance to any of the great philanthropic operations that are essential to the prosperity of our nation or its people.

Secrecy belongs legitimately to societies which are formed for evil purposes. "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest." John 3: 20, 21.

Secret societies give to one class of men an advantage over other men, which an honest man and Christian does not want, and would scorn to accept. This is the fundamental temptation proffered to the uninitiated by those in the lodge.

The methods proposed for the accomplishment of good—and all secret societies make much of this inducement to join them—as pursued by them, are unscriptural. The only true system of benevolence is found in the teachings of the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles, and none of them promotes selfishness or exclusion, as does Freemasonry.

Secret societies profess to possess very valuable knowledge which they are under the strongest promises and obligations to conceal from all the world, save members of their order. Expositions made by recalcitrant members of Freemasonry, to the extent of forty-eight degrees, and attested by their oaths and those of other competent witnesses, fail to discover any information that is worth keeping secret, or sufficiently valuable, per se, for publication. The "occult wisdom" of the fraternity is found in its traditions, which link it, undeniably, to the ancient pagan mysteries, for which this age of the world has no use.

Secret societies, and especially Freemasonry, establish a bond of union and brotherhood not recognized in the Scriptures, and which conflicts with and annuls the bond of union and communion prescribed by the command of God. The latter is open to all men and free; the brotherhood of the secret society is hedged in by numerous restrictions, oaths, fees, dues, signs, grips and passwords, and benefits comparatively few of the human family. The divine system of union and fellowship is founded upon love; the Masonic fraternity is based on self-interest and allegiance to the lodge.

Freemasonry excludes women from its lodges, but gives them a side-show, in which they play "The Eastern Star." Until this last-named "order" was established, the fraternity classed women with idiots, cripples and decrepit old men. No Mason dares ever to reveal to his "better half" the mummeries of the lodge to which he only is admitted.

Freemasonry, as previously intimated, promotes selfishness; it does more—it promotes "the pride of life," otherwise known as the "big head," which, as good old Deacon Willard expressed it, is a "family disease" of the human race, for which vital Christianity is the only perfect cure.

The oaths and penalties of each and every degree of Freemasonry are a special and convincing condemnation of its principles and practices. They are published to the world and can be purchased for a trifle. They confer the right and privilege of mutilating the human body in the most horrible manner, and authorize the murder of any brother who shall dare to reveal the trivial secrets confided to him in the lodge room. The forty-odd Jews who swore not to eat or drink until they had slain Paul (Acts 23: 13, 14) were a prototype of Masonic polity and vengeance.

Freemasonry regards secrecy as an indispensable and essential virtue. "Secrecy and silence" form the safeguard of their system, and so much stress is laid upon this requirement that infractions of it subject the recreant to "expulsion" by death.

The morality of Freemasonry is built on a wrong basis. Instead of teaching that immorality offends God, it avers that "temperance should be the constant practice of a Mason, as he is thereby taught to avoid excess, or to contract any wicked or vicious habits, the indulgence of which might lead him to disclose some of those valuable secrets which he has promised to conceal and never reveal!"—on the principle that "when the wine is in, the wit is out." Fortitude, which is a noble and prominent virtue in a true Christian, because it is founded upon divine love and protection, is advocated by Freemasonry as necessary to prevent lodge members from telling lodge secrets under compulsion. Prudence, also, is commended by the fraternity as a safeguard for a similar reason.

Many of the titles of Masonic offices, officers and lodge paraphernalia, etc., are objectionable, because some of them are blasphemous, and others ridiculous in the extreme.

Freemasonry not only claims to be very ancient and honorable, but divine. Witness one of their lodge melodies:

Hail, Masonry divine!
Glory of Ages shine;
Long mayest thou reign!
* * * * *
Thou art divine!

Freemasonry perpetuates a system of priesthood, and gives the title of "Grand High Priest" to certain officers. The allusion and origin of this title is something obscure, but it probably is derived from the priests of Baal-worship, like much else of the Masonic secret work.

While Masonry professes to inculcate morality, and even claims to be a religious institution, it permits its members to do many things that moral people out of the lodge would consider wicked and disreputable. Evidence on this point is indisputable, and is strongly insinuated in the obligation of the Master Mason's degree, in the allusion to infractions of the seventh commandment.

Much more might be written upon this subject, with equal truth, but this will suffice. As is sometimes said, and correctly, no secret society is any better than its obligations. By those they must be judged, whatever virtues they may claim to promote in their practices. If they swear their members to protect each other, "whether right or wrong," whether committing murder or treason, all their pretensions to goodness and truth are to be received with very many grains of allowance. "So mote it be!"

HARRISON VS. CLEVELAND.

The sessions of the National Democratic Convention in Chicago ended on Thursday last. It brought most of the prominent men of that party together, with large delegations from the several States, and the performance of their work was characteristic of a political party among which many and various preferences and opinions prevailed. Not the least notable feature of the convention was the presence of an immense delegation of "Tammany sachems" from New York City. There they are a ruling power in politics, and are known as probably the most corrupt secret association in that metropolis, if not in the Union, with many good men among them.

Early on Thursday morning the convention nominated for President Grover Cleveland of New York, and later in the day Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois, for Vice President. Mr. Stevenson was Cleveland's First Assistant Postmaster General.

The result of this convention places in competition for the Presidency the two men who sought it in 1888, and under conditions not materially changed, so far as their candidacy is concerned, from those that distinguished the former campaign. The characters of the candidates are well known, and have been thoroughly discussed time and again. Their respective virtues are indelibly recorded in the national archives, and their political shortcomings and personal weaknesses will be fully dissected between this and next November.

The platform adopted by the convention last week is very long and fairly expressive of the principles supported by that party. The section relating to free trade favors a tariff for revenue only, a "plank" on which Mr. Cleveland will feel very much "at home." With regard to the silver question, the platform demands the repeal of the act passed in 1890, and favors the use of both silver and gold as the standard coins of the country, but only upon condition that the coins of the two metals, when of the same nominal value, must also possess an equally intrinsic value. The platform also opposes federal control of elections; pledges the repeal of the "force bill;" demands the regulation of trusts and monopolies by legislation; demands that public lands be reclaimed from corporations and syndicates and held for equitable distribution among actual settlers from the people; denounces the civil service reform and calls for its reform; favors the cultivation of friendly relations with other nations, without forming entangling alliances, and favors a competent naval force, to maintain the honor and dignity of our country; denounces Russian tyranny; favors restricted immigration of contract laborers and Chinese exclusion; asks for government aid to improve the great national waterways and favors the construction of the Nicaragua ship canal; favors the admission of new States, now the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona; asks protection for laboring men by proper legislation, and especially for employes of railway and other hazardous methods of transportation; favors State laws for abolishing contract convict labor and the "sweating" system and the prohibition of child labor in factories, and opposes all sumptuary laws as interfering with citizens' rights.

The plank relating to education opposes "state interference with parental rights and rights of conscience in the tuition of children as an infringement of the fundamental principles of the democratic doctrine that the largest individual liberty consistent with the rights of others insures the highest type of American citizenship and the best government."

A plank favoring national aid to the Columbian Exposition was also adopted.

THE DEATH OF COL. GEO. R. CLARKE.

The death of Col. Geo. R. Clarke, the founder and supporter of the Pacific Garden Mission, in this city, on Tuesday evening of last week, is an event that should interest the great army of earnest Christian workers.

The incidents of his secular life may be briefly recorded. He was one of a family of ten children, and was born in Madison county, N. Y., in 1828. In 1854 he came to Chicago and entered into the real estate business, which he pursued until his death. Several years ago he moved to Wisconsin, but after sojourning there for a time, he returned to Chicago.

At the outbreak of the Rebellion, he enlisted in the Union army and served during the war successively as captain, major and lieutenant-colonel in the 113th Illinois regiment. Soon after the great Chicago fire, in 1871, he was married to Miss Sarah Dunn, and took up his abode in Morgan Park, one of our Chicago suburbs, where he has since resided.

Colonel Clarke, although an active and competent business man, during his later years lived an earnest Christian life, distinguished for his liberality and labors in the cause of the Gospel.

Fourteen years ago or more, shortly after Dwight L. Moody's noted revival meetings in the Tabernacle on Monroe street near Market, at one of which the Colonel was converted, he became intensely interested in city mission work, and his activity and zeal soon gave evidence that his conversion was thorough and lasting. He saw how little attention was given to the spiritual needs of the lower classes who lived along wicked Clark street and on the "levee," and resolved to help them. Unassisted he bought the Pacific Garden saloon, located at Van Buren and Clark streets, and in place of beer and whiskey he dispensed Bibles and hymn books. Meetings were held there every night and the crowds were treated to a short talk and much music. When the corner grew valuable as a business location the Colonel was obliged to move, and the present quarters, in the middle of the block, at 98 and 100 Van Buren street, were rented. Colonel Clarke and his wife were untiring workers at the mission. The expenses were not small, but the founder of the institution stood by it. He spent from $3,000 to $5,000 every year on the mission, and always cheerfully said that a better investment couldn't be found. Colonel Clarke often addressed the motley crowds that thronged the hall every night, and many a wanderer he helped to lead an honest life who repented at the mission meetings.

It is related of him that he had a narrow escape from death at the hands of some miners in Colorado at the time of the Pike's Peak gold excitement, and that in a truly grateful spirit he resolved to repay his deliverance by devoting his life and means to bettering the condition of mankind. He kept his vow. He hoarded no money. The surplus left after providing for his family was unselfishly devoted to Christian work.

Colonel Clarke was also a devoted anti-secrecy reformer. His denunciation of oath-bound organizations as a source and perpetuator of evil was candid, earnest and consistent. He had belonged to some of them, but he found them inharmonious and opposed to the best interests of mankind. A few years ago he delivered an address before Du Page County Christian Association, in which he carefully reviewed "secret societies as an obstacle to Christian growth and influence." It contains many masterly arguments, and his own experience with the lodges, which ought to convince the most skeptical that the secret system is not only useless but obnoxious to every principle of Christianity. This address was published in tract form by the N. C. A.

Col. Clarke passed with Christian resignation through a tedious illness of several weeks' duration before his death at his home in Morgan Park. He leaves, besides his widow, one daughter, the wife of John C. Black, president of the Continental National bank of Chicago. Five of his brothers and a sister also survive him.

His funeral occurred on Thursday afternoon.

Services were held at the home of the deceased. Floral offerings were appropriate and abundant, the tributes of former friends and associates. All was simple and informal. Rev. J. M. Campbell, of Morgan Park Congregational Church, read passages from John 4 and Revelation 1. Rev. D. Cooley offered prayer. Mr. Harry Monroe and Evangelist George Miller then sang a duet, "My Jesus, I Love Thee." The Rev. J. M. Campbell then spoke, taking as his theme the two texts, "Moses, my Servant, is Dead," and "Let not your Heart be Troubled." The Rev. Mr. Morton told of the Colonel's sympathy and encouragement in his early Christian life. The Rev. Mr. McLean faltered and sobbed as he told of his kindly words and helping hand. The Rev. Mr. Patterson spoke feelingly of the gap that this death made in his life. George Wilson and Harry Monroe told of their conversion by his instrumentality. During the services a choir from the mission, under the direction of Harold Sayle and George Miller, sang Colonel Clarke's favorite hymn, "On Christ the Solid Rock I Stand," and "Beyond the Silent River," the last composed by the departed evangelist. After a short prayer by the Rev. J. M. Campbell the doxology was sung and the friends filed by the coffin. During this ceremony the choir sang, "My Faith Looks up to Thee," and "There's a Land that is Fairer than Day." At Mt. Greenwood Cemetery, where the remains were placed in the family vault, Rev. Mr. Campbell prayed, and "I am the Resurrection" was sung.

Many prominent Christian workers and friends were present.

The work of the mission will be continued by Mrs. Clarke, with Harry Monroe as superintendent and B. Ashton and W. Evans as assistants.

THE DARK LANTERN PARTY.

The "People's party," as it is called—an organization designed to reform the political evils under which the country is supposed to be suffering, and for which, it is alleged, the other prominent political parties offer no satisfactory remedy—has lost by death one of its bright and shining lights, Colonel L. L. Polk, late president of the Farmers' Alliance. By many it was tacitly understood that the People's party convention, to be held at Omaha, Neb., July 4, would nominate him for President of the United States. The branch of the Farmers' Alliance over which he presided is a secret organization, the political and religious character of which has been quite fully exposed by competent writers in this paper. As the Farmers' Alliance to which he belonged was intended to capture only the disgruntled agriculturists of the country, which tended to restrict its influence, certain politicians were led to create a new secret alliance under the name of "The National Citizens' Alliance and Industrial Union," in order to secure for the principles of the old Alliance a greater following. Col. Polk, at the time of his death, was also president of this society, to which office he was elected Dec. 3, 1889. It may be wrong to consider his removal from the world a special providence, but it is very evident that it is a great blow to the secret societies in which he was a moving spirit. The intimate connection between the secret Farmers' Alliance, the secret National Citizens' Alliance and Industrial Union, and the other material composing the heterogeneous "People's party," is explained on page 8 of the Cynosure for May 12, 1892. It was gathered from the National Watchman, the professed organ of the "People's party," printed at Washington, D. C. Whatever the principles of this conglomeration, its methods are abominable.

MASONRY AND HOLINESS.

A correspondent of the Christian Witness, devoted to the advocacy of Bible holiness, and published in Boston, notes some of the "baseless objections" that are made by ministers of the Gospel and professing Christians to the experience of holiness of heart, and says:

"Some of these opposers to holiness are strangely incongruous. They accept the teachings and hold membership in secret societies which lay claim to do for their adherents just that which they deny is in the province of Christ's atonement. To illustrate: 'Acacian' is found in the Masonic Lexicon, and is defined thus: 'A Mason who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is free from sin.' Again: 'No aspirant can be admitted to participate in our (Masonic) sacred rites until he is thoroughly cleansed from all pollution of guilt.' This work is said to be accomplished by their rite of purification, termed 'Lustration.' Again: 'Freemasonry proposes both to cultivate the mind and enlarge and purify the heart.'"

And we agree with him when he adds: "Come out from among all such. God will not give his glory to another, and when you claim that you 'cannot conceive of anything more which the soul of man needs than the degrees of Masonry,' you are far removed from his saving grace. 'He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber.'"

SECRET SOCIETIES IN LOUISIANA.

Archbishop Janssens, of New Orleans, recently issued a pastoral letter concerning secret societies. An impression that no fraternity except Freemasons was condemned by the Roman Pontiff led to the present expression upon the subject. In the third plenary council, held at Rome, it was declared that the Independent Order of Odd-fellows and the Sons of Temperance were not excluded from condemned organizations. The original expurgation dates back to the second plenary council, at Baltimore, and the subsequent declaration of the pope, August 21, 1850.

The reasons assigned for this declaration were that these societies, as set forth in the Archbishop's pastoral letter, "study to arrange morality according to the light of reason, and practice virtue without the helps of religion, and so seem to tend by its own force to make it the most natural religion, taking no account of the distinction between the true church and the sects, as if they be matters of smaller importance. In other words, these societies have the tendency of placing natural religion above revealed religion, and to weaken the faith and the practice of religion in the mind of Catholics. These societies have ever since been held as forbidden, and until Rome should decide to the contrary, we hereby declare that members of these two societies cannot be absolved, unless they break their connections with them, nor can they be buried with the rites of the church, unless they have first severed their connection with these forbidden societies. The reverend pastors will make these declarations known to their congregations.

"We again urge on pastors and confessors earnestly to warn the faithful not to join, or to withdraw from, all dangerous societies that have secrets not to be revealed, that require an oath and a promise of absolute obedience, that have their chaplains and rituals not approved by the church. We single out as especially dangerous in its tendencies the secret society called the Knights of Pythias, which has frequently of late prevailed on Catholics to have deceased members of their family buried with rites forbidden by the church, because they feared that the death or burial benefits would otherwise not be paid."

PROPOSED UNITY IN REFORM WORK.

There is a movement on foot, as we learn from the Christian Conservator, for the co-operation of certain reform churches in carrying on reform work. "In union there is strength," and active unity among such churches could hardly fail to produce the best effect. "Reforms that are approved as right in heaven, and by good men on earth," says the Conservator—and those must include all strictly Christian enterprises,—"may languish for a long time for want of being advocated by organized, concerted effort. The anti-secret reform is of God. All good men who understand the question regard the lodge system as wrong. With the view that we should oppose the lodge, and yet fellowship it in the church, we have no sympathy; that is building up the lodge more than tearing it down. Those favoring the lodge laugh at all effort that does not mean to disfellowship the lodge by churches. The Wesleyan Methodists, the Free Methodists, the United Presbyterians, the Reformed Presbyterians, the German Baptists, some branches of the Lutherans, and still other churches, refuse membership to the members of secret societies, as does our (U. B.) church. Some of these churches might be induced to unitedly oppose the orders and the rum traffic and all other evils, fulfilling the Scriptures, 'Abhor that which is evil; cleave to that which is good.' So also they might unite in missionary work in foreign lands. Nothing with definite authority can be done until the general conferences of these churches, or their highest bodies of whatever name, meet and determine the matter. In the meantime there is much kind feeling and a disposition to consummate the measure."

INFORMATION WANTED.

The Board of lady managers of the Columbian Exposition, 409 Rand-McNally building, Chicago, is seeking information respecting women's organizations, for the purpose of making a complete encyclopedia of all societies or associations for the promotion of charitable, philanthropic, intellectual, sanitary, hygienic, industrial, or social or moral reform movements, organized or managed by women. The following are the points on which information is sought: Name; date of organization; names of officers; address of headquarters and corresponding secretary; number of charter members; present membership; the aims of the society; any educational features? If so, what? source of income; annual expenditures; how nearly self-supporting? JONATHAN BLANCHARD'S WORKS.

A small volume of the addresses and poems of the late President J. Blanchard is to be immediately issued. It will comprise some of his best platform efforts on temperance, the lodge, National reform, the Sabbath, etc., in a volume of 150 to 200 pages. Preparation for a later and larger volume is also to be immediately begun, which will be a biography, and will possibly contain a larger selection of his writings.

A special June offer of the early volume is hereby made. To all who order before July 1st, 1892, enclosing FIFTY CENTS, the volume of poems and addresses will be sent on publication. After that date it may be found necessary to advance the price. Send orders to this office.

—Should Cynosure readers for a few weeks miss from our columns the customary New England Letter, it is because their genial author is undergoing surgical treatment for chronic lameness at a health resort in New Jersey, with the hope of a thorough recovery. In this hope she asks the prayers of her friends. We are sure she will have their hearty sympathy and good wishes.

THE HOME.

HOW TO SECURE COMPLETENESS.

If you would keep your mind
From carnal kind,
Five things consider well:
With whom you dwell,
And what you think, and say,
And do, alway.

If you would keep your heart
From sin apart,
Five graces give employ:
Faith, meekness, joy,
With love divine, intense,
And penitence.

If you would keep your soul
From evil goal,
Five virtues practice still:
Peace and good-will,
With patience, godliness
And gentleness.

If you would keep your lips
From sinful slips,
Five things observe with care:
How, when and where,
Of whom to whom you speak—
This every week.

If you would keep your life
From worldly strife,
Five acts be doing still:
Abstain from ill,
Consider and obey,
And watch and pray.

—Lutheran Evangelist.

BEGIN THE DAY WITH GOD.

One hour of the morning is commonly worth two hours of the evening. A man of average duration of life sees about ten thousand mornings in the course of his existence. He begins ten thousand days; and as the after-conduct of the day depends upon a right start, it is vitally important to begin each day with God. Morning piety has much to do with the whole current of one's every-day religion.

The eyes that open after a night's slumber should turn heavenward. "In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up," exclaimed the devout Psalmist. He begins the day unwisely who leaves his chamber without a secret conference with Christ, on whom he is to depend for strength. The true Christian goes into his closet for his armor; he knows not what sudden assaults of temptation may be before him, so he puts on his panoply. He needs his spiritual "rations" also for the day's march. As the Oriental traveler sets out for his sultry journey over the sands by loading up his camel with food under the palm-tree, and by filling his water-jars from the cool fountain at its roots, so does the Christian wayfarer draw his early supplies from the unexhausted spring. Morning is the golden hour for devotion. The mind is fresh. The mercies of the night provoke to gratitude. A buoyant heart that is in love with God makes its earliest flight, like the lark, toward the gates of heaven. Thankfulness, dependence, faith and humility all prompt to early and tender interviews with him who waits on his throne for our morning orisons. We all recall Bunyan's beautiful description of his Pilgrim, who "awoke and sang" in that "chamber of peace" which looked toward the sun-rising. If the Egyptian Memnon made music when the first rays of light kindled on his flinty brow, a living Christian heart should not be mute when God causes the outgoing of his mornings to rejoice.

No pressure of household duties or of business should crowd out prayer. An eminent Christian merchant told me that it was his rule to get a good quiet half hour in his chamber on his knees and over his Bible before he met his family; and then he went into his business—as Moses came down from the Mount—with his face shining. Dr. Arnold, of Rugby, had a favorite morning hymn, which opens with these stirring lines:

"Come, my soul, thou must be waking;
Now is breaking
O'er the earth another day.
Come to Him who made this splendor;
See thou render
All thy feeble powers can pay."

Closest devotions are the fit precursor to family worship. Family religion underlies both the church and the commonwealth. No Christian government, no healthy public conscience, no Bible philanthropies, no godly church-life, can exist without God in the household. Let me be assured that a family altar stands in every home, and I care little what political party bears rule at the seat of government. The picture which Robert Burns drew of household worship tells us of the secret of all Scotland's "grandeur that makes her loved at home and revered abroad." No prelude to the day is so powerful in its sacred influence as the union of loving hearts around the throne of grace. Family worship is a strong seam, well stitched on the border of the day to keep it from raveling out into contentions, confusion and ungodliness. Wise is that Christian parent who hems every morning with the Word of God and fervent prayer. When the inroads of wealth and fashion crowd out family devotion in the morning and the weekly prayer-meeting in the evening, there is but small hope of rearing such household in the nurture of the Lord. The "church in the house" is the best feeder of the church in the sanctuary; home-religion is the sheet-anchor of our nation's well-being.

When the early devotions of the morning have equipped us for the day's work, let us shoulder up the day's duties cheerfully. God will both direct the path and lighten the loads if we trust him.

The happiness of each day depends very much on a cheerful start. The man who leaves his home with a scowl on his brow, a tart word at his wife, a snap at his children, is not likely to be pleasant company for anybody during the day, and is apt to return at night with the acid flavor of a vinegar-cruet. More than cheerfulness is required for many a day behind whose veil are concealed sudden shocks or powerful temptations. Unexpected trials may break on us ere the sun goes down. Little do we know what the day may have in store for us. Let us then make ready every morning by putting ourselves under the wing of that loving Lord and Saviour who promises, "Lo, I am with you always." We cannot tell when we shall see the last sunrise, nor how soon we may hear from our loved ones the last "Good-morning." Begin every day as if it were to end in eternity.

"Begin the day with God;
He is thy sun and day;
He is the radiance of thy dawn;
To him address thy lay.

"Take thy first meal with God;
He is thy heavenly food;
Feed with and on him; he with thee
Will feast in brotherhood.

"Thy first transactions be
With God himself above;
So shall thy business prosper well,
And all the day be love."

—Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D., in the Presbyterian Record.

AT THE FIRESIDE.

A good man once quaintly said that he would not give much for that man's religion whose very dog and cat were not the better for it. The best place to test a person's religion is at the fireside. Geo. H. Hubbard says, in the New York Observer: "In the home life the power of the Christian religion is most needed. The relations of the home are the closest of all human relations; its harmony is most sensitive. In the home, too, we are under less restraint than elsewhere. In public we are often inspired and sustained by the sympathy of numbers. Not seldom are we kept from evil by the consciousness that many eyes are watching us. The desire to stand well in the public esteem is a strong safeguard against wrong-doing. But when we are in the home, and the door is shut between us and the outer world, all these supports and restraints are taken away, and we feel free to act ourselves. In the home, character is tried by a multitude of trifles, and trifles require more grace than great difficulties or temptations. Peter could face a whole company of Roman soldiers without flinching, but he was completely vanquished by the thoughtless gibes of a servant maid. So, many a man to-day can face great misfortune calmly, and stand unmoved in the face of monster temptations, who is vexed and perhaps wholly upset by some trifling annoyance in the home. Great trials usually give warning of their approach, and we summon all our strength to meet them; but little things come unexpected in moments when we are off our guard and our armor is laid aside. To meet them successfully we need the Spirit of Christ dwelling in us richly and constantly.—Selected.

THE LOST PURSE.

Seventeen years have passed since the following incident occurred, but the impression it left on my mind has not faded, nor ever will fade, from my memory.

Located during my college course within five minutes' walk of an old friend, I often stepped in for a little intercourse after my lessons were ready for next day. So it happened on a certain Saturday afternoon, having no Sunday engagement to carry me into the country, I thought to spend an hour with my friend.

I found him in a fever of excitement, and elicited the following in explanation. He had paid his men in the city, closed his shop, and hurried to the train at Ludgate-hill, with his overcoat on his arm. As he jumped into the train he thought he heard something drop on the carriage floor; he looked down, but seeing nothing, took no further notice.

On reaching his destination, Walworth-road, he came in to dinner, and wishing to hand his wife some coin, went to his great-coat, and then discovered that he had lost his purse, containing £20 in gold. He had just made the discovery when I stepped in.

He was a good man and true, but, Peter-like, very impulsive; hence, when I proposed we should have a word of prayer over the matter, he at once protested: "No, not now; there is a time for everything; this is the time for action."

"Very well; what are you going to do?"
"I don't know; I cannot make up my mind what is best to be done."

"That, I think, is sufficient reason in itself for prayer."

"Perhaps, but I don't feel like praying just now. I think I'll go at once to the Crystal Palace, the destination of the train in which I traveled, and see if honest hands have picked it up and handed it in at the terminus; and I'll telegraph to Moorgate, whence the train started, advising them of my loss."

As soon as he was gone his good wife suggested that now we might have a word of prayer together. We knelt and pleaded that God would direct and over-rule to the finding of this purse; and then rose with a calm assurance that all would be well. Turning to his wife, I said, "I think I will go into the city and see the officials at Moorgate street."

"What for!" she inquired; "Charles has wired there, and no end can be served by your going."
"I cannot tell you why, but I feel it laid on my heart to go."

"Then I will go with you; for I am too excited to tarry alone just now."

We hurried to Walworth station, and took return tickets to Moorgate street; and up the first platform just as a G. N. R. train was signalled.

Already this train was in sight; but in our impatience we would not wait for it, but hurried down the steps again, and up the center platform as a train was just stopping there.

Rushing to a carriage we were about to enter, when my friend exclaimed, "That is a smoking compartment; we won't get in there;" and, opening the next, there was the purse, just under the seat! Of course, we caught at it, much to the surprise of the four gentlemen in the carriage, and walked off home, gladly forfeiting our tickets.

There are several things to be observed, rendering the finding of this purse remarkable. This train had gone on to the Crystal Palace, stopping at various stations, and returned on a busy Saturday afternoon, with the frequent interchange of passengers, yet nobody appeared to have noticed the purse.

Had we waited for the train already in sight, we should have missed the purse. Moreover, had we aimed to catch this train on its return from the Crystal Palace, the probability is we should have failed; for most remarkable of all, we found this train was not timed to stop at Walworth—should have run express from Loughboro Junction to Elephant and Castle; but the train being unusually heavy, the signal was against this train at Walworth, and stopped it at the platform just for the half-minute, whilst we took from the carriage the missing purse.

When my friend returned from the Palace, I inquired: "Have you seen or heard anything of the purse?"

"No," said he, in a despondent tone, "and do not expect to. The traffic being heavy, and the purse containing hard coin only, the officials can hold out but little hope of its recovery."

"Is this anything like it?" (holding up the purse.)

"Where did you find it?"

"Where you dropped it." And as we explained this remarkable recovery, he burst into tears, and exclaimed, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes."

"Oh, what peace we often forfeit,
Oh, what needless pain we bear;
All because we do not carry Everything to God in prayer."

—John Burnham, in London Christian.

THE MISTAKES OF A SMALL BOY.

A boy would not be worth much if he never made mistakes, and was never told of them. There is hope for a boy in proportion to the number of mistakes he makes and afterwards corrects.

One of the most common mistakes of a boy is in what he wants. He is apt to want most the things he hasn't, and one of the things a small boy hasn't and hankers after most is size. Oh, how he does pine for size! He waits and counts days and scratches the wall with pencil marks, and stretches himself up trying to catch up with his big brother. And all the time he may be more of a man than his big brother, if he only would put the right kind of a measure in place of the foot rule.

You have heard of the Irishman who went to market to buy the most for his money, and finding that turnips were so much cheaper than potatoes, bought four bushels of turnips instead of two of potatoes. But he was very much surprised to learn that turnips were seventy-five per cent water, and that he might have bought a package he could have carried in his vest pocket that would have contained the same amount of nutriment as his four bushels of turnips.

That was a case where size was deceiving, and that is the way a small boy is often taken in. It's not the size of a man's fist, or the breadth of a man's shoulders, or the height of his stove-pipe hat that counts. I have seen a seven-foot bully do a thing so mean and unmanly that a seven-year-old boy ought to blush for it. I have seen a boy pass along after him and pick the whining dog up that he had lamed by a kick, and treat it with such pity and tenderness that if we still lived in the days of chivalry (and we do in more ways than one), that boy would have been knighted and spurred and receive the smiles and applause of fair ladies and noble men and his king, and the hulking giant would have been given to some magician to be changed into a flea or a potato bug or some petty, noxious insect. If a boy would only hanker after the things that ought to go with size, and let size take care of itself, he would make no mistake.

Another thing the small boy is apt to over-rate is physical strength. He is always bragging about what he can do, and the strongest boy in a crowd is sure to have things pretty much his own way. The whole world used to be boys once in that respect. The man who could strike the hardest blow and ride the fastest and jump the farthest and use his arms and legs the best was the best man; now it is the man who can use his head the best. It is the man who has the best heart. The Indian said when he first heard the pistol fired and saw its deadly effects, "He heap little, heap loud, heap go quick and hit hard." A boy who is little need not be loud, but if he can "go quick" and hit the mark clean through in doing his duty, he is manlier than some who wear men's clothing. It is not the exhibition of strength; it is the just and kind use of strength, the intelligent and judicious use of strength, that makes great. The horse has more strength than the man, but the man with his less strength and his superior mind makes the horse go as he pleases, and subdue the wildest and most ferocious beast.

Don't ache for size; don't ache for strength. Don't lie awake nights thinking how to get either. Let those things take care of themselves, and be just the kindest, most truthful, patient, industrious, merriest, happiest boy you can, and get all the love you can from others, and give all the love we can to them, and men will one day say of you, "What a power he is!" and maybe you couldn't lift a five-pound dumb-bell. But all I say will be true, nevertheless.—Our Morning Guide.

TEMPERANCE.

"A HUNDRED YEARS TO COME."

We all within our graves shall sleep
"A hundred years to come;"
No living voice for us will weep,
"A hundred years to come."

Well, be it so, we'll not be sad
Concerning days to come,
But try to leave the world more glad,
Because it was our home.
Sing on, fair Hope! that men shall see
The broad earth shine on liberty;
Its naked clothed, its hungry fed,
Its weak and weary comforted,
"A hundred years to come."

Sing that the "Bright and Morning Star"
Shall light all pagan gloom;
Sing that there shall be no more war,
"A hundred years to come."
Sing the saloon forever crushed,
The violence of cities hushed,
And men and children glad and gay,
Reaping the truth we sow to-day,
"A hundred years to come."

—Josephine Tyler, in Temperance Advocate.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AND TEMPERANCE.

This church originated in the year 1858, in the union of the Associate and Associate Reformed Churches of North America. Both of those churches early took advanced ground on the temperance question, both as to the drinking and manufacture and sale of intoxicants, as a beverage. The United Church, at the first meeting of its General Assembly, gave the following deliverance upon the question, viz:

1859.—1. That the business of manufacturing and vending intoxicating liquors for drinking purposes is injurious to the best interests of society, and, therefore, inconsistent with the law of God, which says: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

2. That the use of intoxicating drinks, as a beverage, is inconsistent with the law of God.

3. That Sessions have full authority, and it is their duty to enforce the principle of total abstinence.

4. That the practice of renting houses for manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors, as a beverage, is utterly inconsistent with the Christian religion.

Nearly every Assembly, during the 34 years of its history, has given an earnest testimony against this terrible evil. Among the latter deliverances, the following are given, as expressive of the earnest convictions of the church on this question.

1871.—Declares that intemperance is so great a sin, so perilous to the interests of the community, that there is a necessity for a united and earnest effort to resist its encroachments, and appoint delegates to lay before other churches its desire to unite with them in devising and carrying out measures to stay the tide of intemperance.

1884.—1. Recognizes the question of temperance reform as one of the greatest moral issues of the times.

2. Endorses the proposition that total abstinence is the only safe rule for the individual; prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic liquors, as a beverage, the true method of dealing with the evil, by the state.

3. Pledges hearty support to prohibitory Constitutional amendment, or any just and feasible plan for the overthrow of the great enemy of all we hold dear.

4. Bids the Woman's Temperance Union "God-speed," in its patient, persistent service and prayerful effort to make effectual its battle-cry, "The saloon must go."

5. Commends the introduction in our public schools of temperance text-books, and instruction in regard to the effect of the use of alcohol on the human system.

6. Commends to all the congregations and Sabbath-schools, the importance of organized effort and thorough instruction on the temperance question.

1891.—That we reaffirm the past deliverances of the church on this subject, especially that of the Assembly at Springfield, Ohio, in 1889, namely: "That any form of license or taxation of the liquor traffic is unscriptural in principle and contrary to good government, and ought to be discouraged by every philanthropist and patriot."

2. That partisan friendship for the saloon must be accepted as hostility to the church, the home, and all that is valuable to society. No party is worthy the support of Christian men, that fails to antagonize the saloon.

3. That we favor the abolition of the government tax on intoxicating liquors, as making the nation a participant in the crime of drunkard-making, the revenue derived from this tax being the price of our brother's blood.

4. That we have learned with regret and shame of the action of the Department of State at our National Capitol, in using the influence of our government to open markets for the maltsters and brewers in neighboring nations.

5. That we endorse the petition of the World's Christian Temperance Union, to the governments of the world, asking them to strip away the sanction of the state from the drink traffic and opium trade.

THE SALOON.

The Christian Advocate (N. Y.) deals with the respectable, non-drinking saloon-keepers: "The worst men in the rum business are those who never touch liquor themselves. They deliberately deal out the poison, and set temptations before others which their own common sense leads them to resist. Such men are often the cover of iniquity in others. One—a perfect gentleman in manner—was brought into the Masonic fraternity contrary to the decisions of many grand lodges, and his saloon was the resort of many of his brethren, some of whom drank themselves to death and their families to poverty, while he touched never a drop."

Dr. Dunning, in the Congregationalist, appeals to the Christian church to oppose the great evil, the saloon. He writes: "The saloon in this country has become a vast, organized power for evil. It corrupts politics, debases society, inflicts burdens on the people, destroys multitudes of souls. It is acknowledged by all to be the chief cause of poverty, misery and crime. It is everywhere the foe of the Christian church and an obstacle to what the church seeks to do. It can best be met and overcome by those who have nothing to do with that in which it deals and by which it lives. The Christian must give all the weight of his influence, by example and word and action, against this great evil. He can most confidently hope to conquer when he gives his enemies no occasion to accuse him of inconsistency."

I feel a great interest in any effort to check the pernicious habit of tobacco using. It is not only a nuisance, but a moral and physical evil, and a shame to our boasted refinement and civilization.—Whittier.

A telegraph operator lost sight and speech without a particle of warning, at his desk. It was "tobacco paralysis!" Smoking on duty being prohibited, he "chewed" incessantly, swallowing the juice.—Christian Standard.

The organs on which growth depends—the lungs, stomach, and liver—are reduced by the use of corsets to half the natural size and activity. These two causes, with living in the shade, explain the alarming decrease in the size of American women.—Dr. John M. Howe.

Rum makes trouble everywhere. There is great agitation in England because the government proposes to compensate liquor dealers for pecuniary loss in retiring from the business. But there is no talk of compensating families for the losses which the liquor traffic has inflicted upon them.—Texas Siftings.

In the Louisville district, for the year 1891, the value of imported merchandise entered for immediate consumption on arrival and withdrawals from warehouses amounted to $681,234. The duty levied by the government amounted to $310,408.75, whiskies, wines, etc., amounting to $282,803.—Southern Journal.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Waiting for the gift of the Spirit.—v. 1. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come." This being the Jewish Thanksgiving, the most joyous of all their festivals, it was a most appropriate date for the gift of the Holy Spirit. The joyful Christians are they who have received this heavenly Guest, and the reason why the world is so apt to conceive of religion as a gloomy thing, is because they judge by the large number of professed Christians who have no spiritual power and therefore no spiritual gladness. We are told by Luke, that after the ascent of Jesus into heaven, the disciples "returned to Jerusalem with great joy." They were promised a divine Comforter who should be all, and even far more, to them than the living presence of Jesus himself. This gift they were to receive shortly. They were not told when or how. They were simply to wait for it in glad expectation. They had joy in anticipating his coming; but their joy would be full when he came. Let us take to our hearts three important lessons: (1) That we often serve God most acceptably by simply waiting before him. (2) To be joyful Christians, we must be filled with the Spirit. (3) The Spirit will be poured out whenever and wherever believers are praying for this blessing "with one accord." The lack of Christian unity is one of the prime reasons why it is in so large a degree withheld from our churches. The Holy Ghost is grieved away by their denominational rivalries and sectarian jealousies. It is not necessary that believers all think alike, any more than it is necessary that they should be all gathered together in one place; but it is supremely needful "that they be of one heart and one mind."

2. The Spirit's descent.—vs. 2-4. Our Lord likened the Holy Spirit's presence to the wind, which is invisible, and mysterious alike in its comings and goings; and both spirit and wind are expressed by the same Greek word, pneuma. The cloven tongues like as of fire "sat upon each of them." We are told that the number of the disciples was about 120, and included women as well as men. But not only did the tongues of flame crown the head of Mary and other noble women who were "last at his cross and first at his sepulchre," but we have not the least hint that any superior radiance crowned the brow of Peter or any others among the twelve. The Spirit was poured out without any distinction of sex or ecclesiastical standing. The objection to a woman's preaching, if she is called of God to do so, is thus shown to be without Scriptural foundation; while any consecrated layman who feels a burden for souls laid upon him, is as really in the line of apostolic succession as if he were an ordained bishop. They were all filled with the Holy Ghost; all began to speak with other tongues. Woman, equally with man, shares in the highest gifts of the new dispensation, and that prejudice which would debar her from exercising them has not the least warrant whatever in the New Testament, and but a seeming warrant in the Old.

3. The multitude called together.—vs. 5-12. "And when the sound was heard," says the Revised Version, "the multitude came together;—representatives from all the then known world—and were astonished to find this handful of unlettered Galileans speak to them, each in his own tongue, "the wonderful works of God." The church was, from its first beginning, a missionary church, and so long as it retained this characteristic it grew and prospered even in the midst of the direst persecution. When it lost the missionary spirit and tried to make proselytes instead of converts, it had already apostatized from the faith and become the mystic Babylon, caring only to extend her ecclesiastical sceptre over the earth. Those early disciples did not try to convert men to a creed or a denomination, but to Christ. This was one of the secrets of their great power; as the failing to do this is one of the secrets of modern Christianity's lack of power. Today the miracle of Pentecost is being repeated, but with a difference. The Bible has been translated into 300 or more different languages, and scattered through every quarter of the inhabited globe on the lightning wings of the press. "They were all amazed." A display of the Spirit's power always strikes the unbelieving world with wonder. If we are living at the close of this present dispensation, as so many students of revelation believe, we may expect to see again marvelous things. Are we prepared to receive such an outpouring of the Spirit as will make us ready, like the early disciples, to sacrifice all we have and are for the Gospel's sake? When this is true of the great body of Christian believers, the multitudes will come together, eager to hear their testimony.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The Baptist Education Society, which has just held its fourth anniversary, reports that it has expended $200,000, and that these gifts have drawn forth $1,500,000 besides, not including the two million and more that have come to the Chicago University. No denomination has during the past few years made such notable progress in its systematized educational work as the Baptist.

—Rev. Dr. J. D. Fulton will supply, for Rev. O. P. Gifford, the Immanuel pulpit in Chicago during July and August.

—"The Baptist Year Book" for 1892 gives the number baptized into the fellowship of the churches during 1891, as 160,247, and the number excluded as 42,396.

—The English Baptists have opened a mission station at Mousambi on the Upper Congo, about midway between Lulanga and Bangala. Here they have opened a school of twenty-five boys. The mission is among the Bangalas, who are said to be the finest people on the river—athletic, intelligent, manly, energetic and fearless.

—Unoccupied mission territory to the extent of 4,000,000 square miles still exists in Central Africa, an area larger than the whole of Europe, says Rev. George Grenfell, of the Baptist Congo Mission.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—Already 22,000 young people and others have secured accommodations in New York for the days of the Christian Endeavor convention, July 7-10, and the total number in attendance will not be less than 25,000. Among the leading speakers will be Hon. W. C. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, Hon. John Wanamaker, Rev. Russell Conwell, Joseph Cook, Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., Rev. C. F. Deems, D. D., Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., Pres. Merrill E. Gates, Rev. D. J. Burrill, Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D. D., Rev. John Henry Barrows, D. D., Pansy, John G. Wolley and nearly one hundred others almost equally well-known from all evangelical denominations.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. John W. Simpson, D. D., pastor of the Walnut Hills Congregational church, Cincinnati, has accepted the presidency of Marietta College at Marietta, Ohio. Dr. Simpson is a young man of varied experience, great energy, large ideas and remarkable administrative ability.

—An occasion of special interest to Milwaukee (Wis.) Congregationalists was the organization of a church among the Bohemians June 13. Mr. Beran, the pastor, is supported by the A. H. M. S., and has made his home in Milwaukee for two years. He has charge also of a mission among the Bohemians of LaCrosse. The Slavic population of Milwaukee is very great, and of these it is estimated that 6,000 are Bohemians. Among these thousands Mr. Beran is the only evangelical pastor.

—Grace church, the last branch of the Chicago First church, was organized June 14, Superintendent Armstrong being moderator of the council and Dr. Goodwin preaching the sermon. The church has ninety-six members, a Sunday-school of four hundred and a Christian Endeavor Society of fifty.

—The Congregational Union of England and Wales at last has a secretary, the office having been vacant since the death of Dr. Hannay and having been declined no less than four times. The new secretary is Rev. W. J. Woods, the committee's nominee. Mr. Albert Spicer, of the noted family of merchants, was elected chairman of the Union.

FREE METHODIST.

—Central Illinois Conference, Ipava district, will hold two camp meetings: the first, two miles southwest of Littleton, Schuyler Co., July 22-31; address S. Bartlow, Littleton, Schuyler Co., Ill. The second one at Vermont, Fulton Co., Ill., Aug. 3-14.

—Arrangements are being made for a Union Holiness camp meeting in the city of Harvey, Ill., July 8-18.

—The Fort Wayne district camp meeting will be held at Waterloo, DeKalb Co., Ind., Aug. 24-31, on the Agricultural Fair grounds.

—The annual camp meeting for the Chautauqua district will be held at Gerry, N. Y., July 27-Aug. 3.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Union Signal tells of two Women's Christian Temperance Union women who have left two other churches and joined the Methodist because of "the small elbow-room vouchsafed to woman's work in the denominations that these ladies have left."

—It is reported that Mrs. Louisa Bowman McClain, wife of Rev. T. B. McClain of the Southeast Indiana Conference, has been bequeathed $2,000,000 by a friend who died in Germany.

—The Illinois State Epworth League Convention will be held in Chicago Thursday and Friday, June 30 and July 1. Arrangements have been completed for holding the closing Friday evening service in the Auditorium. Bishop J. N. FitzGerald, president of the Epworth League, will preside. Bishop Merrill will be present.

—Dr. William Nast, the founder of German Methodism, celebrated his eighty-fifth birthday, June 15th, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Wm. Gamble, in Cincinnati.

—Rev. J. W. Mendenhall, D. D., editor of the Methodist Review, died at Wesley Hospital, Chicago, June 18.

—Gospel meetings at the races. That is a strange combination, but it is what a band of English Methodists, under the lead of Josiah Nix, are holding. The band is composed of young men who dress in the latest style, but are devoted Christians. They camp on the Derby-racing grounds, distribute Gospel tracts, and during the intervals between races sing hymns and give talks. They have done this for several years, and their work has had good results. Four young men of Chicago, Messrs. Boyer, Burgess, Bradley, and Lee, are about to undertake a similar work. They will conduct tent meetings at the most popular fashionable resorts during the summer months.

—The contributions of the native Christians under the care of the North India Methodist Episcopal Conference have more than doubled within the past year.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Thirty-five years ago the North Dutch church, Fulton street, New York City, commenced a mission work among the residents of that part of the city. Mr. Lanphier was put in charge of it and his faithful work soon showed marked results. A few months later Mr. Lanphier originated the Fulton street noon-day prayer-meeting, which in a short time became celebrated all over the civilized world, and has been carried on ever since. The thirty-fifth anniversary of the mission will be celebrated July 1 and that of the prayer-meeting September 23. Mr. Lanphier is still in charge, and though his eyesight has failed very much he is still enthusiastic and able to superintend the work efficiently.

—Requests for the religious, educational and charitable purposes under one hundred and twenty of the wills reported in this country last year amounted to about $7,000,000. The amount of charitable bequests and gifts in England in 1891, exclusive of Baron Hirsch's benefactions, is estimated at about $15,000,000 as against $11,500,000 in 1890.

—Three centuries after Christ there were 5,000,000 Christians. Eight centuries after Christ there were 30,000,000 Christians. Ten centuries after Christ there were 50,000,000 Christians. Fifteen centuries after Christ there were 100,000,000 Christians. Eighteen centuries after Christ there were 174,000,000 Christians. Now there are 450,000,000 Christians. The above figures, of course, represent not only the converted but all the adherents of Christianity.

—A Roman Catholic church originally built for, and used by the Hussites, has been ceded by the town council of Laun, in Bohemia, for the use of the Protestant congregation gathered in that town. The event is, we believe, a unique one in the modern history of Austria, and is a proof that true notions of religious liberty are spreading in that empire.

—The ninety-eighth annual meeting of London Missionary Society was held last month. The previous year was one of signal mercies. Instead of having to report a deficit as on some previous years, there was a balance of $41,000 in the treasury. The society employs 170 male and 47 female missionaries, and have the aid of 6,395 native preachers.

—Names of Pennsylvania churches petitioning Congress to close the World's Fair on Sunday, as presented by Senator Quay recently, filled one and a quarter columns of the Congregational Record.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—President Patton, of Princeton College, has fallen a victim to nervous prostration, and is now on a journey to Europe to recruit his strength.

—One of the best deeds connected with the recent meeting of the General Assembly at Portland, was the offer of Mr. John F. Middlemass, of Salt Lake City, to make over at once to the Presbyterian church one hundred acres in that city as a nucleus of a college.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—A pastoral has recently been issued, to be read in all the Catholic churches of Canada, strongly advising Canadian Catholics to refrain from going to the United States. They will be advised to go rather to the Canadian northwest, where it is claimed the cost of living is less, taxes lower, and religious tolerance greater.

HOME AND HEALTH.

PINEAPPLE JUICE FOR DIPHTHERIA.

The following simple remedy for diphtheria is given by T. W. Reece:

Nature has her own remedy for this disease. It is nothing more nor less than pineapple juice. It will cure the worst case that mortal flesh was ever afflicted with. I did not discover the remedy; the colored people of the South did that. While in Mississippi some few years ago one of my children was taken with diphtheria and the question of his death was only the problem of a few hours. An old colored man, to whom my wife had shown some kindness, called at the house, and, saying he had heard of my little one's illness, urged me to use pineapple juice. The old fellow declared that in Louisiana, where he came from, he had seen it tried many times, and that in each case it had proved effective. So I secured a pineapple and squeezed out the juice. After a while we got some of it down the boy's throat and in a short time he was cured. The pineapple must be thoroughly ripe. The juice is of so corrosive a nature that it will cut out the diphtheria mucus. Try it.—Oroville (Cal.) Mercury.

GREEN THINGS.

The wise housekeeper will do well to heed this valuable article from Harper's Bazar, and in ordering her daily bill of fare take advantage of the following facts:

Most of us feel that our general health is very much improved over its winter condition after warm weather has come and seated itself permanently on its throne; and we imagine it is because we are not breathing hot air and wearing thick clothes, and because we have increased opportunity of getting about, and because we cast off more impurities through perspiration, and because of a score of other good reasons. And if we were told that probably the greater part of our improvement was owing to the change in our diet, to the increase of that portion of our food drawn freshly from the earth and the life-giving forces of the sun, we should open our eyes in surprise. But it is doubtless true that with the system tired of heavy meats, and of canned and dried and stale vegetable that have long since left earth and light and air, our improvement dates from our assimilation of the first green vegetables we eat in spring—of the dandelion root and leaf, for example which, among others, whether used as greens or as a salad, has a direct agency in assisting the liver to do its work. It is equally true that the early spinach rouses the inert kidney, and that asparagus bed continues the good work in a degree quite sufficient to pay for the pains and labor and expense of making it. Pythagoras, we are told, thought so well of the bean in its various uses that he deified it, and although we shall go to no such lengths, we will acknowledge that the early and late bean is so nutritious that people who can have it have no right to complain if they are not able to have a great deal of fresh meat at the same time. The tomato, again, which has endured a lifetime of slander and come out triumphant, is as excellent an aid to the liver as the dandelion is, and is thus invaluable in the work of purifying the blood.

The silica in corn and peas, too, is said to be of use to growing children; the onion and the onion tops, besides, are great stimulants to the circulatory system, increasing the flow of the necessary juices and aiding digestion; while the onion and lettuce and celery supply a craving of the nerves and afford them a satisfied rest, composing their disturbance, and so inducing sleep, and sometime even helping to allay pain and dispel the unknown evil which causes rheumatic pains. Carrots, too, are of value in promoting digestion; the acid of the early rhubarb, so valuable to some, is yet so powerful that gouty and rheumatic people have to look askance at its tempting preparations; the cabbage is so full of gluten as to be very nourishing, while the turnip is nearly as nutritious as cornmeal; the sea kale and the water cress correct scrofullous tendency, and the cucumbers come just in season to cool the heated frame. Then, too, the berries are cooling and purifying, and so is the cherry, with juice more delicious than any fabled nectar could have been, and all the early fruits; the peach, coming later, is when in perfect condition, well known as a corrective.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

For fruit stains dip the spots several times in hot milk.

When mattresses are stained, rub on a thick paste of starch and cold water and place in the sun. When dry, brush this off, and if not clean repeat the process.

It has frequently been shown, by actual experiment, that troubled sleep and threatened insomniæ are corrected by so simple a thing as the placing of an open bowl of water near the sufferer's couch.

Nothing keeps out moths as well as papers. If every housewife, when she puts away her furs, pasted up all the crevices and round the lid of the box with paper, she would find her furs intact when unpacked.

A peck or more of lime left in a cellar in an open keg will absorb an immense amount of moisture, which otherwise might form in mold on the walls. Nothing is more dangerous to the health of the occupants of a house than a moldy cellar.

Beat up two eggs with four tablespoonfuls of good cream, two tablespoonfuls of good butter, small teaspoonful of salt, same of mustard, and half of black pepper and a small teacup of best vinegar. Beat and mix all these up well together; put it into a saucepan and stir over a fire till it thickens. Do not let it boil or the dressing will curdle. Let it cool, when it is ready for use.

As the time approaches when screens must be taken out and placed in windows and doors, it is a good plan, after dusting them, to rub both frames and wire thoroughly with a cloth dampened in kerosene. This will add much to their appearance, and will prevent the wire from rusting. On that account the same precaution should be taken when they are packed away again in the fall.

FARM NOTES.

CARE OF TEAMS.

Do not work the horses or oxen too hard at first, if they have not been steadily at work through the winter or spring. A hard day's work counts with them as it does with the man who pitches the manure or holds the plow, and if they are overworked they feel it the next day. And if they are getting old, or are very young, they feel it more than those in their prime. It is very easy for the farmer to so plan his work that neither man nor beast need to continue for more than six hours at one kind of labor at this season of the year. Put up the team and let them have a rest, while the men rest by exercising a different set of muscles. Increase the feed of the team a little, but not too much at once.—American Cultivator.

DURABILITY OF FENCE POSTS.

The theory that fence posts will last longer if set in the ground upside down does not hold good in practice. It is chronicled that some years ago Prof. Beal, of the Michigan Agricultural College, selected sticks of thirteen different kinds of timber; each stick was cut in two in the middle, and each of these was split, making four sticks from each one. One set was placed in sandy land, and the other in clay land, in each place putting neareach other a stick "top-end up," and its mate "bottom-end up." In some cases those with top down lasted best, in some the reverse was true, while in others there was no perceptible difference. The conclusion reached was that, so far as durability goes, it made no difference which end of the post was set in the ground.—Exchange.

SAVING GARDEN SEEDS.

No one can state, even approximately, how much tillers of the soil lose every season by planting inferior seed. A small, half-matured carrot seed will produce a carrot about as large as a man's finger, whereas a large and plump seed will bring a carrot as large as a man's arm. The same is true of parsnips, beets, and turnips. If you plant the seed of nubbins, the crop will be nubbins. If you plant small potatoes year after year, the crop eventually will be small potatoes and many in a hill.

Let me exhort every farmer and gardener to commence now, early in the growing season, to grow and save good seed for the next year. Select the best carrot, the nicest parsnip, the handsomest beet, and the turnip that is of the most desirable size and form, and set them in rich and mellow soil. When the blossoms have appeared, take a pair of shears and clip off all the small clusters, leaving only the large and fully-developed flowers. If all the small blossoms are clipped off, the seed-pods and panicles that are allowed to mature will yield large and plump kernels, two or three times as large as most of the seed of commerce.

If one desires to raise solid cabbage heads, as large as a water pail, and solid cauliflower, as large as a big dinner plate, let him set out a large, solid cabbage, and a large cauliflower, heads and stems, and he will get large and plump seed that will fill the sorrowful soul of a dyspeptic with smiles and gladness.

Keep a watchful eye on the tomato vines, and let the tomato that ripens first be saved for seed. Tie a strip of red flannel around the ear of sweet corn that ripens first, and when fully matured, hang the ear, husks and all, in some dry and secure place, where vermin and birds are not allowed to enter. Save your flower seeds, also, such as sweet peas and many other flowering plants. My frugal wife, who takes care of her flowers with her own hands, and loves them and treats them as if they were inferior intelligencies, keeps an eye out during all the growing season for the best and plumpest seeds of every flower she wishes to cultivate. Every seed that we save will germinate as certainly as a potato.—Selected.

cases almost quadrupled the value of real estate. Towns often vote large sums of money to aid railroads, when, if the same amount had been used in improving their local highways, a better return would have been received.

Be careful of the young colts. A little care in selecting proper food for them will pay good dividends. Ensilage or roots do colts great good.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.....	16

On the third page of this issue we print the platform adopted by the National Prohibition Convention at Cincinnati, last week. It is inserted as a matter of news, without comment. It speaks for itself. With it we print the votes by which the Prohibition candidates for President and Vice President were nominated.

In the Cynosure for March 17, 1892, was published an illustrated exposition of the signs, grips, passwords and oath of the Farmers' Alliance. A subscriber in Florida, writing to us June 12, says: "I know it is correct, for I spent $50 in its den before I subscribed for the Cynosure." We have other evidence to the same effect.

"Benevolent" orders have recently been in session in various parts of the country, and some statistics relating to their membership and finances have been given to the public. As usual, the amounts of money expended for lodge "charity" bear but a light proportion to the sums in their treasuries and lodge expenses. In other words, the rank and file members pay a heavy tax to "run the machine."

The State Board of Health of Illinois calls attention to the prevalence of small pox in New York City, Pittsburgh, Pa., and at several places in Ohio, West Virginia, Iowa, and Michigan, and notes some recent cases of that epidemic in Chicago. In view of the danger that it may spread throughout this State, which has for ten years past been comparatively free from its ravages, the Board particularly recommends the prompt and general vaccination and revaccination of all who are liable to contract this loathsome and fatal disease. This treatment has proved a sure method of prevention, and the Board well says that on account of the approaching Columbian Exposition, Illinois, and especially Chicago, "cannot afford another small-pox epidemic." The individual and public interests of the State demand a vigilant regard for the suggestions of the State Board.

Recent news from Turkey indicates an increase of Mohammedan opposition to Christianity and its advocates in that semi-barbarous land, where the government has adopted methods to suppress its progress. Even the singing of that good old hymn, so warmly cherished in our homes and churches—

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun Does his successive journeys run"—

has been interdicted, together with other melodies which exalt the name of Christ. But the missinearies, strong in the faith of their Leader, believe that "the heathen shall be given to him for a possession," take courage, and continue to labor, even against the rage of the Ottoman fanatics.

An unpleasant state of suspense prevails in Baptist societies, as we write, owing to the uncertainty of obtaining the donations necessary to secure a proffered gift of $1,000,000 from John D. Rockefeller for the Chicago University. The condition of this munificent endowment is the gathering of an equal sum by the friends of the University before the 10th instant. All of the requisite sum, except $140,000, has been pledged by wealthy citizens of prominence in business and social circles, but there has been an ominous delay in obtaining the balance. It would be too bad to cripple a great educational enterprise by depriving it of $2,000,000 which it needs, when so nearly within its grasp. Chicago cannot afford to allow this forfeiture.

The Turkish government has recently conceded right of way through Palestine to the new Egyptian-Syrian railway, running between Acre, in Egypt, and Damascus, in Syria, past Nazareth, Nain, Jezreel, and across the river Jordan, and over the plains of Bashan. The distance between the terminals is 120 miles, and, it is said, the road will open up for settlement a very fertile country. The cost of the railway is estimated at about $10,000,000. The civil engineers' surveys are nearly completed. Bible students experience a curious sensation when they read of this commingling of hallowed associations with modern business methods. But the railways are great assimilators and promoters of civilization, and by the introduction of increased facilities, assist in carrying the work of reform into new fields already ripe for the harvest. It is well.

During the session of the Republican National Convention at Minneapolis, W. J. H. Traynor, of Detroit, Mich., "Supreme Master of the Loyal Orange Institution of the United States," sent a telegram which was distributed among the delegates in leaflet form by the Grand Master of the Orange Lodge in that city, of the following purport: "That Thos. W. Palmer, of Michigan, or any other equally good American on either ticket, will receive 1,250,000 votes, none of which will ever be cast for Blaine." The immediate offense of Mr. Blaine, as stated in the leaflet, was his attendance at "high mass celebrated in the Capitol at Washington over the body of Senator Barbour." Further, the telegram stated that the Orangemen would "vote against him to a man in case he is nominated." Mr. Blaine was not nominated, and the lodge watch-dog was appeased.

Wilkins Rustin is dead, in his youth. Until a few weeks ago, his name was unknown outside of the social circle in which he moved, and in the heyday of his young life he sought the advantages of an education at Yale College, to prepare him for an intelligent and prosperous career. But an accursed secret society in the college ensnared him into its meshes. Of course, he was young, ardent, and social, and to join it seemed expedient. Then the cruel initiation followed. The public is not permitted to know the follies committed in the lodge room, but at one stage of the disgraceful orgies, Rustin was blindfolded and told to run down a certain street. In this act he collided with the pole of a carriage, receiving a blow in the abdomen, which induced peritonitis and caused his death. It is true that the victim in this case of college ruffianism was a consenting party; but the onus of the manslaughter will continue to rest upon those who sent him upon this hazardous expedition. Public decency and safety require the abandonment of these societies and their cruelties.

The articles on "The Church and the Liquor Traffic," printed in our Temperance Department, on another page, and which we copy from the Church Militant and the Voice, although too sweeping in their charges against the church, undoubtedly contain a modicum of truth. There are churches, probably, which by their apathy in the prohibition cause have laid themselves liable to severe strictures; but such active and persistent-for-truth denominations as the Free Methodists, Wesleyans, Reformed Presbyterians, United Presbyterians, Radical United Brethren, Friends, Mennonites, some of the Lutheran bodies, and the Methodist Episcopal, as shown by the resolution adopted at the recent General Conference in Omaha, are not to be included in the category of less faithful churches. There are probably others which deserve equally honorable mention in this connection; and the time has now arrived when all Christian denominations owe it to their Lord and Master to make an open and strong declaration in opposition to the liquor traffic in all its forms, and support it by their influence and ballots.

Persons who have been subjected to the indignity of being snubbed and badgered by over-smart lawyers, when testifying as disinterested witnesses in common-law courts, will be pleased to learn of the formation of an organization in London, known as "The Witnesses' Protection Society." The objects of the association are to protect affiants against personal abuse by attorneys while on the stand, and to place questions relating to contempt of court in the hands of a jury, rather than leave them to the whims and prejudices of the presiding judge. On this subject a contemporary remarks: "If judges cannot, or will not, protect witnesses, the jury should be given the power to commit any lawyer to jail for contempt of court who has been guilty of abusing the privileges of his position to the detriment of the self-respect or of the reputation of a witness, during the trial of the case submitted to its decision." This innovation, however, good as it is, will not reach and restrain another crying evil—the influence of Freemasonry upon judicial proceedings, in which, too often, the lodge rules, with its usual arrogance and prevarication, against truth and justice.

ARE FREEMASONRY, ETC., BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS?

BY LAURA S. HAVILAND.

Let us examine a moment, and compare them with the precepts of our Lord Jesus Christ, who said: If ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for sinners also love those that love them. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, hoping to receive as much again. (Luke 6: 32-35.)

What gain to the following widows of good Masons did they receive?

George McLean, a good Mason, who had always been very careful to pay his dues, and had a choice picture that he told his wife to show to Masons, if anything should ever happen to him, and she and the children would be well-cared for, in the spring of 1877 came from the mountains very ill. As they were poor, the Masons were applied to for aid. Three of them came at once, and hired one of their number as a nurse, who, being a drinking man, was an unpleasant companion. The wife's father had taken her to his home to care for her. Mr. Parkison (the father) told her that the doctor had said to him that it would not do for her to remain with him, in her condition; also, that Mrs. Almira Merrill (an intimate friend of the writer), would be in often, and would see that he received every attention needed. After two weeks' suffering, he saw that he was going to the spirit-world; he begged to see his wife and children (the younger a week old), and they were brought for the last farewell word, and parting kiss. Very soon after, his spirit was taken to Him who gave it. In this bitter wave of sorrow she was told, if Masons buried him she could not be lain by his side; and her father promised her to have him exhumed, and buried by her side, if he was living at her death. This reconciled her to leave all to the entire control of the Masons, as they had cared for him during his two weeks' illness. A neighbor of hers, Mrs. Miner, also encouraged her, telling her how very kind the Masons had been in her recent bereavement. Her husband had gone to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, for his health, and took his niece with him. But he died there, and the Masons furnished a metallic coffin, furnished an escort for the niece, and brought him home, and buried him free of charge. But both were sadly disappointed. The Masons brought heavy bills against their estates.

Mrs. McLean, being poor, was left penniless. They sold her husband's four horses and wagon; also her own riding pony, presented by her husband to her before their marriage. Both of those widows said they could have managed without such an expensive pageantry in the burial of their loved ones.

But why are these secret, oath-bound organizations called for? Where do we find the necessity, in this free country of ours, for oaths conceived and brought forth in heathen darkness, not known within the pale of jurisprudence? In vain does New York or Massachusetts, or any other State, pass laws against unlawful oaths, when the sin is winked at in high places in church and state. It seems to be accepted as a sort of panacea to aid in bearing all the mental ills that brain is heir to. The fine of $50, or $100, that has been prescribed for taking an unlawful oath, as in New York, etc., is a mere rope of sand, as long as it is practiced in highest official circles; and churches make strong pillars in supporting this worshipful Diana.

It seems a mania to know something not known by everybody else, and becomes a subterfuge, or hiding place where plans may be concocted, and carried out; plans, perhaps, not designed by many who are entrapped. But what is the finale of Jesuits, Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, Clan-na-Gael—and the multitude of secret orders, for their name is legion? Why is Christendom honey-combed with them, when they are diametrically opposed to the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ, who said, "In secret have I said nothing?" But what we do need is, Paul's text, Hebrews 11: 1: "Now, faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Then follows the long list of evidences, in his retrospect, of what faith had accomplished in the past, showing the utter fallacy of all wood, hay and stubble in the mixture of "the foundation of the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

I thank God and take courage, in seeing these reforms advancing, East, West, North and South,—sweeping all sins with the besom of God's Holy Spirit.

Here, too, stands Goliath Alcohol, of these United States, defying the armies of the living God; but the stripling, Prohibition, will lay the giant low, and will yet sever his head from our body politic with his own weapon. When all this legion is driven out, the angelic song heard by the shepherds of Judea, at the birth of the Lord Jesus, shall become universal: "Glory to God in the highest—peace on earth, good will to men!"

UN-AMERICAN ORGANIZATIONS.

AN ORATION DELIVERED BY G. F. JEGI, AT THE EXHIBITION OF THE JUNIOR CLASS OF NORTH-WESTERN COLLEGE, NAPERVILLE, ILL., JUNE 10, 1892.

Each nation presents a peculiar characteristic. The name England at once calls to mind an enterprising commercial and manufacturing nation, guided by able statesmen and guarded by a powerful navy. France means an unstable, warlike, fashionable, extravagant Republic. Russia conveys us back to the time of the despotic Cæsars, and we behold a fair type of a semi-barbarous people. Germany is noted for her advance in science and philosophy. So we might peruse the whole catalogue of nations and notice the characteristic of each, but will turn our attention to the United States.

Christopher Columbus, the famous discoverer of America, was a lover of freedom. Often he could be seen at night lying upon the deck of his ship studying the free movements of the constellations in the Italian sky. These observations instilled into him principles of free thought and action. After the great continent responded to his quest, the colonists flocked to the forests of America in search of liberty. Again, the Revolutionary fathers purchased liberty with their own lives. And the heroes of the late war established the principle that every honest subject should be free. Hence our characteristic is determined without difficulty. At home and abroad, America is but a stronger term for liberty.

This is the word inscribed highest upon our banner; but there are organizations which, as it were, lurk in secret and watch their opportunity to spring upon Freedom's race and expunge that dear word, liberty, and write in its stead those ill-boding words—disruption and anarchism. These organizations are the secret, oath-bound societies, which pledge themselves to keep the lodge secrets and to aid the members of their fraternity. Their name is legion, for they are many.

Taking an oath in which the name of God is mentioned is a very solemn ceremony, and should never be resorted to unless the occasion is of grave importance, and the man who takes the oath has a clear knowledge of its import. How is this with the applicant of a degree in a lodge? He blindly obligates himself to keep mysteries which are not yet revealed to him, and to obey the orders of the lodge irrespective of consequences. By so doing, a man sells his honor, his intelligent manhood, and his free will. Joseph Cook says: "It is tying a noose around your own neck with your own hands." If facts did not frequently verify this assertion, it were incredulous that a freeborn American would humiliate himself to such a degree as to barter his sacred birthright.

The question naturally arises, Why is secrecy necessary? They say: "In order to carry out our plans." The very fact that permanent organism keeps its work secret, suggests the nature of its plans. Did you ever hear of a burglar who did not keep his tools concealed? If their objects were pure, generous and noble, they would not seek darkness. Truth and justice need no cover; they can stand inspection; but plots and conspiracies cannot tolerate the gaze of a scrutinizing public. Secrecy is a relic of barbarism, and is antagonistic to the principles of a free government.

The public is, naturally suspicious of these secret clans; nor are these apprehensions entirely creations of fancy. "By their works ye shall know them." Ever and anon the nefarious schemes conceived in those iniquitous dens are brought to light. The murders of Morgan, Cronin and Hennessey are brands upon their character which the tooth of time cannot wear away, nor can centuries obliterate them. As long as these oathbound lodges shall exist, so long will the blackness of their crimes be remembered.

Justice has frequently been evaded through these fraternities. They sympathize with and support a member, whether he be as pure as Daniel or as guilty as Cain. Thus they destroy the distinction between right and wrong, annihilating the functions of government and practically establish anarchism.

Yet graver charges are preferred against secretism. It has been calculated that three-fourths of all the soldiers who fought in the Confederate army during the late war belonged to secret orders, and the remaining one-fourth were forced into service. According to this, the rebellion was practically planned and executed by secret orders. Who will for a moment hesitate to brand them as un-American? They seek not the welfare of the Union, but they selfishly guard the interests of their own members, at the expense of every principle of integrity and manliness.

Clans and classes in society are not conducive to unity. This is frequently an argument against immigration. It is said that we have here a little Ireland, there a little Poland, and yonder a little Italy, etc., and these people fail to assimilate so as to form a strong Union. But how does this matter stand with reference to secret societies? We have here a group of Masons, there a clique of Odd-fellows, yonder a horde of Clan-na-Gael, and here a mob of Mafia, and what not? Each chapter is seeking its own interest in the accumulation of wealth, at the polls, and at the bar of justice. While the nationalities will in time assimilate, these organizations direct their forces toward opposite quarters, so that time will only increase the gap between them. Thus it is obvious that they engender the spirit of schism and disruption.

Organizations of a somewhat similar character but of a milder temper are springing up in every grade of society. Among them we will mention only the Greek-letter societies of our colleges and universities. The supporters of these fraternities claim that their object is to benefit their members morally, for if any one be found contracting evil habits, they assume the responsibilities of correcting him. It requires no magnifier to discern the fallacy of this pretext, if we but observe the party strifes and the results of college elections. As Yale and McGill have lately testified, these fraternities are selfish to the core. They seek to honor their members at the expense of others. But the end is not yet; the tendency is that the man who has been a member of a fraternity during his college days will subsequently link himself to one or another of the sterner secret societies; and since college-bred men largely control our government, do we not see that the ripple started in youth will increase to a mighty billow that may engulf the ship of state?

We notice that in all of these organizations the will of the individual must submit to the behest of the order. Thus men acquiesce in slavery and call it freedom. Webster, in his memorable reply to Hayne, said: "We know no masters; we acknowledge no dictators." Oh, that this sentiment were so indelibly written upon the heart of every American youth that he would forever scorn thralldom in all its phases.

In conclusion, these un-American organizations can be subverted. The initiative has been taken. The Endowment House of the Mormons has been decared illegal, and its adherents are disfranchised. May wise and judicious statesmen arise in our legislative halls, who will pronounce a similar verdict on every secret oath-bound organization!

TENTH GENERAL CONFERENCE

FOR THE PROMOTION OF CHRISTIAN LIFE AND SERVICE, AT EAST NORTHFIELD, MASS., AUGUST 4-15, 1892.

DEAR FRIENDS AND FELLOW LABORERS:—By the favor of God there is again set before us an open door, inviting us to our annual Northfield feast of Christian fellowship and service. During the conferences of past years we have found it good to wait upon the Lord in united worship and Bible study, in service and quiet rest. They have been seasons of refreshing to many, who have gained new experiences of grace and power, and have gone forth with renewed life and hope and strength in the work of God. Many have also come to realize in these meetings, as never before, the oneness of believers in Jesus Christ, as they have held sweet fellowship with Christian workers from many lands, meeting on the common ground of faith in the only Saviour, and seeking that union in love and service for which He so earnestly longed and prayed.

Every year of this age of material progress and spiritual unrest shows more and more clearly that "it is not by might nor by power," not by worldly wisdom and skill, not by human devices and expedients, that the great work of Christ's kingdom is to be done. All experience but repeats the one lesson, that there is only one Power that can prevail for righteousness against the forces of evil, and save even the church itself from corruption and decay, and that the more utterly we feel ourselves shut up in helpless dependence upon that Divine Spirit for wisdom and power to do the work our Lord has given us to do, the more surely we shall succeed in accomplishing it.

It has been the aim of the Northfield Conferences to unite believers in the love that casts out fear and in the faith that works by love, in uttermost dependence on the Holy Spirit. We are encouraged by the experiences of past conferences to expect still better things in the days to come. Let us then gather together again in conference, around the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, to glorify him; to build each other up in the faith of the old Gospel; to provoke one another unto love and good works; to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Let us seek to gain still fuller and clearer views of the greatness and urgency of our Lord's work that waits to be done, and of the fullness and freeness of grace and power that he offers to his willing servants.

On account of my necessary absence, on foreign shores, the coming conference will be under the leadership of my friend, Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, who has kindly consented, at my request, to lay aside other plans and work, and take my place. Dr. Gordon is well known as "a brother beloved," who has from the beginning taken a deep interest and a prominent part in these meetings. I trust that the friends of Christ will do all they can, in hearty co-operation with the leader, to make the conference a great blessing. Though absent in body, I shall be present in spirit with my brethren, laboring together with them in earnest desire and prayer for the success of the conference. May abundant grace and peace rest upon the assembly from the beginning to the end.

Among the speakers who will be present are: Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of Boston; Dr. Arthur T. Pierson of Philadelphia; Rev. R. A. Torrey of Chicago; Rev. James M. Gray of Boston; Rev. Hermann Warzariack, the Christian Hebrew preacher of New York, and others. Mr. Ira D. Sankey and Mr. Geo. C. Stebbins will lead the singing.

Accommodations may be obtained at the Seminary buildings during the time of the meetings for one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50) per day. The Betsey Moody Cottage will be open, as last year, for the accommodation of any who may desire more quiet and retirement than is possible in the larger buildings; rates will be two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50) per day for room alone, or two dollars ($2) per day in room with another person. Parties wishing to tent can have a suitable place on the Seminary grounds free of charge, and, if desired, board may be had for seventy-five cents per day. "The Northfield," a beautiful, quiet hotel, furnishes first-class board to those desiring.

All communications in regard to accommodations at Seminary building, as well as at "The Northfield," should be addressed to the Manager, Mr. Ambert G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass.

SPENDING MONEY FOR THAT WHICH IS NOT BREAD.

In the first place, these lodges are all of the world. They had their origin in the world; they are actuated and directed by worldly policy; they are filled with worldly men, many of whom delight to ridicule our religion; they are not a necessity to accomplish any of the great ends of human life; they are not indispensable to human government; they are by no means essential to salvation; they convert no man to God; they save no souls; they are distinctively worldly organizations. The Scripture clearly teaches that the Christian is "not to be fashioned according to this world;" that we are in the world, but not of the world; that we are "not to love the world, neither the things that are in the world." Now, then, if lodges are in the world; if their origin is human and they serve human ends; if they have not the stamp of God upon them and we take part in them, we are sinning against God. Otherwise the Scriptures quoted have no meaning.

They are expensive. The initiation, the annual fees, and other expenses in the very cheapest ones amount to quite a sum during a year. The great cry from the church of Christ to-day is for more money. It is needed in every avenue of church work. Missionaries are to be sent to the heathen, churches are to be built in our own country, evangelists are to be supported, colleges need endowment, the poor must be fed, the orphans clothed, and God's work sustained. To take money, then, that should be expended for the cause of God and fritter it away on lodges is nothing less than sinful. But it is claimed by some that lodges feed the orphans and widows and accomplish work that the church cannot or does not. This may be true in some instances, but the reason of it is that money which the church should have, and has a perfect right to demand, is expended upon these lodges. If all the money that professed Christians spend on lodges were given into the churches of our land, there would be no opportunity for such charges made upon the church. Every man's highest duty in life is to God. When the church can command men to discharge this obligation it will have more honor in the world, and the lodges will be less popular.

If the money spent in labor unions and other organizations of like nature that are formed as protection of labor against capital were placed in savings banks, loan associations, and other institutions of similar nature, there would be more happiness among laboring classes and less danger to property from riots. I would not be thought an enemy of the laboring man, and friend of the capitalist, but I am sure if the laborer would learn some lessons of prudence, economy, and thrift from his employer his condition would soon be bettered. Many laborers spend time and money in organizations against employers, and are themselves injured.—A. C. Smith, in Richmond Missionary Weekly.

THE CHURCH OF ROME AS IT IS.

The thousands of incidents on record of the favors obtained by Catholics through the intercession of the Blessed Virgin Mary are convincing proofs of the powerful efficacy of her influence. Why then should we want for grace essential to our temporal welfare when it can be secured for the asking—with the requisite disposition? "Ask and ye shall receive." But ask the Son through his mother Mary. Ask for things lawful and ask with humility, and you will be sure to get them.—Western Catholic News (Chicago), May 7, 1892.

The formal organization of the Catholic church took place at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, when St. Peter called the apostles together, and presided as the chief and head of the Apostolic Conclave. We know from Scriptural text, Acts 2: 1, 7, that the miracle of the universal language took place at the time when the representatives of all nations assembled together on that occasion—each speaking a language of his own, yet when Peter addressed the assembly in his own tongue, they all understood him as if he had spoken in their own language. We know also that the Catholic church alone maintained an uninterrupted succession from St. Peter down to the present day, when the saintly Leo XIII. occupies the same chair which was positioned and occupied by Peter, the first Pope.—Western Catholic News, May 7.

In view of the fact that the Vatican Exhibit at the World's Fair will include relics of Christianity nearly nineteen hundred years old, we wonder what our dissenting brethren will invent to bridge over the chasm of 1,500 years which passed, between the day of Pentecost, where the church was formally organized by the apostles at Jerusalem when the first Pope, Peter, presided, and Luther's display of wounded pride by burning the bull of Leo X. For want of something better, why not exhibit the flute that Luther entertained the barmaids of Wertenburg with, or the rope which—like Judas Iscariot—he hung himself when in a state of despair.—Chicago Western Catholic News, June 25.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH AND MASONRY.

The greatest danger to Freemasonry, to-day, is from enemies within its lodges—Jesuits and atheists—who are members solely for the purpose of first injuring the institution and then undermining and destroying it. Wherever such an one is found he should be tried and expelled.—Voice of Masonry, for July.

MASONS THE ENEMIES OF THE CHURCH.

"The Catholic church has condemned under excommunication only the Freemasons, the Fenians and the Carbonari—no others. It is possible but not probable that a Catholic who knows that the Freemasons have thus been condemned will join the order. They allow that in Europe and South America the Freemasons by their actions have deserved condemnation, but claim that those of North America are entirely harmless. If this be the case, and if our Masons are really so entirely different, why then do they not separate from those, and why has the Pope Leo XIII. not made such a distinction? He may be supposed to know them sufficiently well. Leo XIII. has always evinced the greatest admiration for this country, and would have made this distinction if he could. The religion of the Freemasons as such is the same all over the world.

"In conclusion, let me ask: Are the Freemasons here really so harmless? It is a well established fact that the school fight in Illinois and Wisconsin has been inspired and directed by the Freemasons of Europe. And a certain politician, who made the fight against the Catholic schools a personal matter and who was therefore defeated, received the thirty-second degree soon after his defeat. This, in my opinion, goes to show that the Freemasons, as such, are in sympathy with those who conspired against us."—Father Abbelen, in a Recent Lecture.

WHAT ONE WOMAN SEES.

Mrs. H. J. Bailey, Superintendent of the Department of Peace and Arbitration in the World's and National W. C. T. U., gives the following strong testimony in the last number of her paper, the Pacific Banner:

We believe secret societies do much toward keeping alive a spirit of militarism. The technical terms of many of the lodge meetings have a military flavor. The uniform and street parades of these societies remind one of war time. The duties required of the members of these lodges are often similar, in spirit at least, to those enacted by an army.

She further adds: God who created husband and wife said they should "be one flesh," yet a man must keep the secrets of his order from his helpmate and companion, all his life. He passes night after night at the lodge and his wife is not free to ask a single question in regard to how his time was spent.

In reference to their effect on the cause of religion she testifies as follows: We recently heard one pastor ask another his opinion of secret orders. "They are an enemy to the church," was the quick response. "Some of my members pass right by the church on prayer-meeting night and go to the lodge." "And that has been my experience," observed the first speaker.

Christian workers everywhere testify to the disastrous influence of the lodge on the Church of Christ—worse by far than rum or Romanism, because these are outside foes, while the former is a foe intrenched within. How long will Christians remain asleep on this most vital subject?—National Home Guard.

The Montreal Daily News, one of the oldest Canadian papers, has always refused to advertise liquors and tobacco. This is better than some religious papers do.

Young people are apt to be wavering in belief, because they lack the experience of older persons; they know little of the world and its snares; the love of self and of the things of this world is stronger with them; but if they do not reject the offer of salvation in Christ, and forsake their sins, it is well with them.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 29, 1892.

Secretary Noble has written a letter to the Senate calling attention to what he thinks is a serious defect in the law providing for the adjudication and payment of Indian deprecation claims. The amount of these claims already filed exceeds $25,000,000, and under the present law as soon as the Court of Claims decides a claim to be valid it becomes in effect a judgement lien upon the tribal funds of the tribe of Indians charged with the deprecation. The Secretary does not believe the Indians are far enough advanced in civilization to be entirely self-supporting, and until they are he does not think the money to their credit should be taken to pay these claims. These claims are now being adjudicated with but little or any knowledge on the part of the Indians of the proceedings; but the funds to their credit are, on the other hand, well known to them, and each diminution by payment of any of these judgments will be known to the Indians, and, for the reason that it is not fully understood, the Secretary fears it will be deemed unjust and in bad faith by them, and thinks it his duty to express his anxiety lest it may lead to commotion and eventual outbreak. Secretary Noble thinks it would be an improvement to amend the law, giving the Secretary of the Interior authority to decide whether the financial condition of any tribe against which judgment is obtained is such as to justify the payment thereof from the tribal funds.

Senator Manderson, President pro tem. of the Senate, this week presented to that body the protest adopted by the International Missionary Union at its recent meeting at Clifton Springs, New York, against the new Chinese exclusion law, which, the Union says, was unnecessary, as the number of Chinese now in this country is but 120,000, and was not likely to be increased. It further says, in its protest, that the law is un-Christian; that it is a violation of solemn treaties, the Chinese now here being guaranteed the same rights accorded the citizens of the most favored nation, and that it is likely to endanger the lives and property of missionaries and merchants in China. The protest concludes by asking that the law be repealed, especially those features which deny the right of bail and require registration and certificates for Chinese now residing here.

Speaking of Chinese missions, a lawn fete was given yesterday afternoon and evening on the beautiful grounds of Belmont, the residence of Mr. A. L. Barber, on the heights overlooking Washington, to add to the fund which is being raised here for the erection of a chapel at Foo-chow, China, as a memorial of the late Miss Belle Twombly, of this city. It added to the interest of the occasion to know that Miss Ruth Marie Sites, the young missionary who but recently left Washington, is in charge of the work at the place where it is proposed to erect the memorial Chapel. Mrs. Barber has shown much interest in this work, and, besides giving the use of her grounds for this entertainment, has contributed liberally in cash.

If there really be any people who still refuse to believe that the world is gradually growing better, instead of worse, they should have attended the fortieth anniversary meeting of the Y. M. C. A., held last Sunday afternoon, and what was said there would have convinced them that Christianity and moral reform have made many strides forward since this organization was formed. The Washington Y. M. C. A. was the third society of its kind established in America. Rev. Dr. Butler, of the Luther Memorial Church, who was one of the founders of the Association, made a most delightful address, sparkling with personal reminiscences of the Association. Rev. Dr. Scott, the aged father of Mrs. Harrison, led the meeting in prayer, after which several of our most prominent ministers made short addresses laudatory of the work and influence of the Association. Then the older members, beginning with Zalman Richards, its first president, gave the younger members some idea of the early struggles through which the Washington society successfully passed.

It may not be amiss to present a few figures showing the remarkable growth of this young giant, which has proven itself such an able adjunct of Christianity and temperance. The first Y. M.

C. A. was founded in London on the 6th of June, 1844, by George Williams, who still lives to enjoy contemplating the wondrous growth of the seed he planted on that summer day, nearly forty-eight years ago. The latest official statistics of the Association show that there are 4,651 branch associations, with an aggregate membership of 227,000, and owning property valued at more than $12,000,000. America has 1,435 branches of this Association.

In the absence of Chaplain Milburn, the House of Representatives was opened yesterday with prayer by Representative McKinney, of New Hampshire, who is a minister.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS.

The Prohibition National Convention at Cincinnati, last week, was attended by more than 1,100 delegates, and much enthusiasm was manifested. Among active participants in the proceedings were Miss Frances E. Willard and Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, of Indiana, and their influence was widely felt in the deliberations of the convention. The latter attempted, in a sort of antirebellion speech, to create antagonism against the South, but the convention disowned her harangue by adopting a resolution forbidding that sort of argument, lest it divert the Prohibition vote in the South to other parties in the Presidential campaign.

On the first ballot for candidates for the Presidency of the United States, Gen. John C. Bidwell, of California, had 590 votes; W. Jennings Demorest, of New York, 139; Gideon I. Stewart, of Ohio, 179, and Mr. Bascom, of New York, 3. The result was received with noisy demonstrations, and Mr. Bidwell was declared the nominee.

The final vote for Vice President stood as follows: J. B. Cranfill, of Texas, 416; Joshua Levering, of Maryland, 351; Carskadden, 21; A. W. Satterly, of Minnesota, 26. Mr. Cranfill was declared nominated.

The platform of the convention contains fifteen "planks," or declarations. The first declares the liquor traffic a foe to civilization; favors the entire suppression of the manufacture, sale, importation, exportation, and transportation of alcoholic liquors as a beverage by Federal and State legislation, and demands that the full powers of the government be exerted to secure this result.

The second demands equal suffrage for men and women, and equal wages for laborers of both sexes.

The third favors the issue of all money by the general government only, and in sufficient quantities to meet the demands of business and give full opportunity for the employment of labor. For this end an increase in the volume of money is demanded, and no individual or corporation should be allowed to make any profit through its issue. It should be made a legal tender for the payment of all debts public and private. Its volume should be fixed at a definite sum per capita, and made to increase with our increase in population.

The fourth treats of the tariff, which should be levied only as a defense against foreign governments which levy tariff upon or bar out our products from their markets, revenue being incidental. The residue of means necessary to an economical administration of the government should be raised by levying a burden on what the people possess instead of upon what we consume.

The remainder of the platform is as follows:

Railroad, telegraph, and other public corporations should be controlled by the government in the interest of the people, and no higher charges allowed than necessary to give fair interest on the capital actually invested.

Foreign immigration has become a burden upon industry, one of the factors in depressing wages and causing discontent; therefore, our immigration laws should be revised and strictly enforced. The time of residence for naturalization should be extended, and no naturalized person should be allowed to vote until one year after he becomes a citizen.

Non-residents should not be allowed to acquire land in this country, and we favor limitation of individual and corporate ownership of land. All unearned grants of lands to railroad companies or other corporations should be reclaimed.

Years of inaction and treachery on the part of the Republican and Democratic parties have resulted in the present reign of mob law, and we demand that every citizen be protected in the right of trial by constitutional tribunals.

All men should be protected by law in their right to one day's rest in seven.

Arbitration is the wisest and most economical and humane method of settling national differences.

Speculations in margins; the cornering of grain, money and products, and the formation of pools, trusts and combinations, for the arbitrary advancement of prices, should be suppressed.

We pledge that the Prohibition party, if elected to power, will ever grant just pensions to disabled veterans of the Union army and navy, their widows and orphans.

We stand unequivocally for the American public school, and opposed to any appropriation of public moneys for sectarian schools. We declare that only by united support of such common schools, taught in the English language, can we hope to become and remain an homogeneous and harmonious people.

We arraign the Republican and Democratic parties as false to the standards raised by their founders, as faithless to the principles of the illustrious leaders of the past to whom they do homage with the lips; as recreant to the "higher way," which is as inflexible in political affairs as in personal life, and as no longer embodying the aspirations of the American people or inviting the confidence of enlightened, progressive patriotism. Their protest against the admission of "moral issues" into politics is a confession of their own moral degeneracy. The declaration of an eminent authority that municipal misrule is "the one conspicuous failure of American politics," follows as a natural consequence of such degeneracy, and is true alike of cities under Republican and Democratic control. Each accuses the other of extravagance in Congressional appropriations and both are alike guilty. Each protests when out of power against the infraction of the civil service laws, and each when in power violates those laws in letter and spirit. Each professes fealty to the interests of the toiling masses, but both covertly truckle to the money power in their administration of public affairs. Even the tariff issue as represented in the Democratic Mills bill and the Republican McKinley bill is no longer treated by them as an issue upon great and divergent principles of government, but is a mere catering to different sectional and class interests. The attempt in many States to swerve the Australian ballot system from its true purpose and to so deform it as to render it extremely difficult for new parties to exercise the rights of suffrage is an outrage upon popular government. The competition of both the parties for the vote of the slums and their assiduous courting of the liquor power and subserviency to the money power has resulted in placing those powers in the position of practical arbiters of the destinies of the nation. We renew our protest against these perilous tendencies and invite all citizens to join us in the upbuilding of a party that has shown in five national campaigns that it prefers temporary defeat to an abandonment of the claims of justice, sobriety, personal rights, and the protection of American homes.

The following resolution, offered by the Rev. J. G. Evans, of Abingdon, Ill., was carried:

Resolved, That we favor a liberal appropriation by the Federal Government for the World's Columbian Exposition, but only on the condition that the sale of intoxicating drinks upon the Exposition grounds is prohibited, and that the Exposition be kept closed on Sunday.

WHERE WAS MASONRY THEN?

A correspondent of the Lutheran World answers the silly question: "Was Luther a Freemason?" We were not only surprised to read the question, but more than surprised to read so long an answer. Why did J. G. M. not refer his questioner to the fact that Masonry was not in existence in the days of Luther? Just 200 years before the world ever heard of Freemasonry Luther nailed his ninety-five theses to the church door in Wittenberg. More than 150 years had rolled around after Luther's death before the Appletree-tavern events took place in London. Why not ask whether Noah or Adam were Masons?—Lutheran Standard.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON.

Commencement week at Wheaton called together the usual number of pleasant people, trustees and Alumni, old students and old friends, to enjoy the festivities of the occasion.

The weather, propitious from the beginning in spite of gentle showers between times in the earlier part of the week, finally threw off all effort to withhold Commencement sunshine, even in a rainy season, and gave us a perfect day for the closing scenes.

The Baccalaureate sermon, by Dr. Sturtevant, of Galesburg, was one to be remembered. The general theme, Leadership, taught through following, trained by obedience, is a central truth of Christian teaching, and, worthily presented, sure to be an elevating and inspiring one.

The President's last words to the class at the close were a recapitulation of the old lessons—the oft-repeated, the much-insisted-on, the all-important,—and ended with the loving reminder of the true service and good warfare which the college expected from them all in the coming years.

In the evening, Mr. Ladd, of the M. E. church of the city, addressed the Students' Missionary Society, giving them one of the earnest, stirring appeals which Wheaton people have learned to expect from him in missionary lines since his trip to the far East.

The examinations closed on Tuesday, and Tuesday evening witnessed the annual exhibition of the Art and Music Departments. The three ladies who graduated from the School of Art, this year, as has been the custom of late, either gave, on the occasion of their graduation, illustrated lectures, or allowed their rapidly moving fingers to talk for them.

The Preparatory graduating exercises, on Wednesday afternoon, were, as usual, a sort of triumphal procession. Freshness, simplicity, unpretentiousness, and withal self-mastery and faultless preparation, are the invariable order of the day in these exercises; and of the eighteen who spoke on this afternoon in rapid succession, there was not one who did not do credit to himself, his class, and the school.

The public Alumni gathering of the evening was favored with a thoughtful, well-considered essay on "The Novel and its Purpose," by Mrs. Emma Hawley Paine, of '81; and an address by the invariably delightful speaker, Rev. C. W. Hiatt, of '80, pastor of the First Congregational church, of Kalamazoo, Mich.

Dr. Blunt, of '73, welcomed the incoming class, and Mr. R. F. Paxton responded in the name of the class of '91.

Commencement Day, the audiences which had been filling the chapel so frequently and steadily for several days past, assembled with greater promptness and in larger numbers than ever, to honor the six young men and women who that day ended their school life in Wheaton.

After prayer and music, Mr. G. A. Ekman addressed the audience on the subject of municipal reform under the title of "The Modern Sphinx." Mr. C. W. Fletcher followed with an oration on "An Alloyed Civilization," maintaining that the superiority of our civilization must be found in the power of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and not elsewhere; that paganism in Christian lands is paganism still, as darkening and deadening as in the heart of heathendom; and that it is for the Christian to disown the alien growth, and keep the lines as sharply drawn between Christianity and heathenism at home as between Christendom and heathendom in the world.

Miss Laura Fuller's essay on "Echoes from the Past" recommended that we settle ourselves on the questions of modern Biblical criticism, not by the brilliant fireworks of modern thought and speculation, but by the steady light which God has poured upon us from the history of ages past, since and before the creation of man.

Mr. C. H. Mallarian spoke at length on "Crumbling Empires," with Oriental enthusiasm in behalf of the genius of the Western civilization and the progress of its free institutions.

Mr. R. F. Paxton's theme was "The Iconoclast," and the false social customs which the image-breaker in our day is called to try his strength upon, in pursuance of his high mission to follow in

"War's bloody trail,
And every lingering wrong assault."

Miss Maud Whipple closed the class exercises with an oration on "The Cost of a Great Purpose," and the valedictory.

The oration was an exceptionally clear and impressive treatment of this great theme, and formed a fitting close to the last public appearance and the whole school-life of the class whose earnest words on this occasion had been in keeping with the earnest lives they had lived in the years past, and which their friends have cause to believe they shall live in the years to come.

Mr. James W. Fifield, of the class of '88, followed with a strong speech on "Consecrated Scholarship," and Dr. Hunter, of Sycamore, gave the annual address on "The Elements of Greatness in Character," a discourse which was inspiring through its truthfulness and its intensity of expression and delivery.

The music of the day was furnished by the Imperial Quartette, of Chicago, and a chorus representing the advanced vocal class in the college, whose instruction is under the direction of Prof. Coffin, the leader of the Imperials.

The year of college work just closed has been one of increased facilities and larger attendance than during any previous year, and one in which correspondingly good work has been accomplished.

NON-MONASTIC EDUCATION.

Co-education of the sexes has its perils, but has been proved to be a great success in several judiciously managed institutions, among which Wheaton and Oberlin Colleges are good examples. It undoubtedly strengthens woman and refines man. But it must be conducted under sensible regulations as to social intercourse and in a thoroughly genuine Christian atmosphere. Co-education may become a poisonous weed if the plant stands in the shadows of liberalistic laxity; but is a noble and most wholesome growth in the full light of the Sun behind the sun.—Joseph Cook, in the Advance.

—Bessie Sherman, one of the Pentecost Band missionaries in India, communicates the following to the Vanguard at St. Louis: "While a company of missionaries were passing a Freemasons' hall in Bombay, one asked a native what that place was. The native replied, 'Shaian Khana,' which means 'devil's home.' Such seems to be the idea they have formed of Freemasonry. We think they have an appropriate name, well applied."

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WORK IN IOWA—A PROPOSED CONVENTION.

LINTON, Iowa, June 24, 1892.

Friends of the anti-secrecy reform in Iowa, attention!

Where shall our annual convention be held? Who desires to make a home for the convention, and take care of the delegates?

If the place for our meeting can be selected at an early date, it will greatly help the Executive Committee in working up a good convention. It will do much to awaken a local interest in the meeting. It will concentrate our prayers upon the meeting and its friends, while their prayers will tend to strengthen the workers and those who are to make the convention a success. Let us have invitations early. Address,

T. P. ROBB, Sec'y I. C. A.,
Linton, Iowa.

THE LODGE EXALTED ABOVE CHRIST.

STEELTON, Pa., June 18, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—With pleasure I write to you from this part of the Lord's vineyard. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few, especially in the anti-secrecy cause. Brethren engaged in the cause of Christ seem determined not to throw off the unequal yoke, or to heed the command to come out from among them.

It seems as if some would rather believe a lie and be damned. The lodge is trying to greatly exalt itself in this place, especially by Sunday parades to the churches, to hear the pastors tell them what good men they are and what good they are doing. I know some of these men are cursing God every day, and doing evil in his sight. At the end of the sermons is usually a little exhortation to live better lives; but one can hardly see how they can be much better after hearing a sermon on their own goodness; after being so highly exalted, their hearts are not in a fit condition to receive the word of God.

I heard an Odd-fellow say: "The preacher said, 'it is not the church that helps you when you are in want or in distress, but it is these mystical brethren before you!'" Truly, Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted, even in God's house; but the church helps more who are in real need, I have no doubt, than do the lodges.

I notice that the lodges, too, are instituting ladies' departments, such as "Old Ladies" and "Golden Eagle Ladies." Our prayer meetings have recently been composed mostly of ladies, with a few brethren. What will now become of the prayer meeting? The devil has invented this new device to kill it.—How long will the Lord allow it?

A striking illustration of lodgery in prohibition is noticed. A clergyman of this place, who was a delegate to the convention at Scranton, Pa., several weeks ago, said that in making up the platform, these words were used: "We believe in Almighty God." A certain man arose and said: "I want Jesus Christ's name in this platform." In explanation, the clergyman said: "It was the only riddle that occurred during the convention; but the man was soon silenced, as we believe that God is Jesus Christ; and there are Unitarians and a great many others, who are prohibitionists, who would not vote with us if we put in the name of Jesus Christ." Now, Jesus says: "Without me ye can do nothing;" and God out of Christ is a consuming fire. Will the Prohibition party ever prosper by rejecting that name?

But what can we expect, when the majority of such conventions is composed of men who reject Christ in the lodge for the very same reason?

I remain your brother in the cause of Christ,
JOHN S. WHITE.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES, ADELBERT COLLEGE OF WESTERN RESERVE UNIVERSITY.

CLEVELAND, O., June 23, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The exercises of the sixty-sixth commencement of Adelbert College of Western Reserve University began with the preaching of the Baccalaureate by President Thwing Sunday evening, June 19th, and closed with the reception by President and Mrs. Thwing at the college Wednesday evening, June 22d. On Monday evening prize speaking by members of the Freshman and Sophomore classes occurred. The speakers were Jeschke, Oakley, Reinhold and Wiers, of the Freshman class; and Tuttle, Lottridge and Bigelow, of the Sophomore class. A prize of $15 00 is awarded yearly to the best speaker of each class. Reinhold and Bigelow received the prizes, their subjects being respectively, "The American Question," and "The Mystery of Life." On Tuesday at 10 A. M., a meeting of the trustees and a business meeting of the Alumni were held. The trustees passed a resolution to endeavor to raise immediately $150,000, of which $50,000 should be to endow a chair of Greek to bear the name of Nathan Perkins Seymour; $50,000 to erect a scientific building; and $50,000 to increase the endowment of the library. A recent enumeration of the books of the library shows about 40,000 volumes on the shelves.

The Alumni elected as officers for the ensuing year: President, W. E. Cushing; Vice Presidents, W. H. Gaylord and Rev. A. C. McGiffert; Secretary, Prof. E. P. Cleaveland, Necrologist, Rev. A. C. Ludlow. It was voted to hold a grand reunion of all the Alumni at the next commencement, and a committee, of resident Alumni, consisting of George H. Paine, W. H. Gaylord, H. W. Bill, A. C. Ludlow and E. O. Stevens, was appointed to assist the President in making all arrangements.

On Tuesday afternoon formal memorial exercises were held in the college chapel in memory of the late Prof. Nathan Perkins Seymour, who had been connected with the college for more than fifty years. The exercises consisted of the doxology, an invocation, an address by Hon. W. H. Upson in behalf of the trustees, the singing of "Integer Vitas," the formal memorial address by Rev. A. C. Barrows of the class of '61, and a eulogy by Prof. Perrin of the Greek department. In the evening the Alumni oration was delivered by Rev. George F. Smythe of the class of '74, his subject being "The Enthusiasm of the Scholar."

The commencement orations of the graduating class were delivered Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock. The valedictory was awarded to Edward Christopher Williams; the salutatory to Rupert Hughes; and the philosophical to Fred Clayton Waite. Besides the degrees conferred upon the members of the graduating class, the degree of M. A. was conferred upon Emerson O. Stevens and Charles Hickok; the degree of D. D. upon A. D. McGiffert; and that of LL. D. upon Henry Adams, the historian. Reviving an old custom, the students, graduates, faculty and trustees formed a line and marched to the music of a band from the commencement hall to the college building, where the Alumni lunch was served. About 500 sat down at the tables. Speeches were made and letters read, the class of '32 being the oldest class represented.

Following the Alumni lunch was a meeting of the Phi Beta Kappa Society. The exercises closed with a reception in the evening by President and Mrs. Thwing, at which about 800 guests were present.

A BIBLE WORKER IN MEXICO.

[Concluded from last week.]

MAZATLAN, Mex., June 2, 1892.

From Alanos I went through the Indian country to Guaymas, in the State of Sonora. It is a port of entry, but very hot in the summer months. Here the Methodists have a mission, with a fine building, and here I sold a great number of Bibles and Testaments.

We next visited Hermosilla, the capital of Sonora, where Rev. M. A. Crawford has a fine church and is sowing the seed in a very fanatical field. I canvassed the town for three or four weeks, sold several books, and in the month of May I distributed about 10,000 tracts. The immediate result was, that I was stoned, and Mr. Crawford's study window was wrecked.

In November, 1891, I went, with five boxes of Bibles and Tract Society books, into the mountains. There I had wonderful success, as I was the first missionary who had ever entered that field. Here the people were willing and anxious to buy the Word, even against the strong order of the priest not to have ANYTHING to do with me, for, if they did buy a Bible of me they would be lost in hell, as I was a heretic. So you see that the heart of the Inquisition is here, but timid and restrained.

In Sayopha, State of Sonora, an old woman stopped me in the street and asked me to go to her house, as she wished to look at a Bible. We went, and had a long talk with her. Among other things, she said, in substance: "I don't believe my religion of saints and images, etc., is a good religion. I want your opinion of it;" and, after I had told her of the teachings given us in the Bible—and reading to her, which is by far the best way to convince fanatics that they are wrong—she answered: "What you have read and said I believe is all true, and I like it better than my religion." She was so poor that she could not purchase a Bible; but she could read, and I asked here if she had any old books. She showed me a book whose frontispiece was the picture of a priest in his robes, and at the foot of the page was printed: "The Saviour of the World." I pointed it out to her and told her that Christ was the only way of life, which pleased her much, and she gave me the book in exchange for a Bible.

While on the road from Hermosilla to Sayopha, a journey which occupied thirteen days and was made in heavy wagons driven by Indians, I came to such a pinch for food that I was glad to eat the boiled corn on which the Indians fed.

I next went still farther into the mountains, a two-days' ride on mules, to a town called Tacapeto, where I found a Bible which had been bought within a few days; also, two other Bibles and a New Testament. I found the people anxious to receive the Word and in want of a preacher. They told me that if a missionary would come among them they would open the Catholic church for the Protestant preacher.

At Trinidad, where in one and a-half days I sold forty-six Bibles, my stock was reduced to five books, which I had to leave there; but they were stolen and exchanged for Mexican whisky.

In Sahnaripa I could sell but three Bibles, although it is a county seat. The Catholic church is very old. It is the custom of this place to marry cousins, and for men to marry their brothers' daughters; and the result of such marriages is that the people are slow, indolent and of low intelligence. There are also many foolish ones, and these are the slaves of the priests.

At La Barranca, a mining town, I had large sales of the Bible, and found the people anxious to have the Word. At La Dura, a mining camp, we also had large sales. I also had a controversy here with the Catholic priest, whose sister proposed to buy a Bible, but I gave her one. Four other towns in this district were visited, with the result of large sales.

Within ten months, in this State of Sonora, I have seen the Word torn up and burned; but we succeeded in distributing over 2,000 copies of it. Over in the State of Lower California we also distributed, in four towns, upwards of 500 copies within a month or a little more.

In my next I will report the work done in Mazatlan, with the customs of the people as they are to-day, etc.

The Bible Society is doing a great work, expending large sums for the distribution of God's Word. They have a debt on their Bible House, and need more men in the field. Reader, what are you doing, or what are you going to do, to help along the Bible work? Fifty cents will put the Bible into the hands of a poor Mexican. Cannot you forego two meals and give that amount to help the work this year? Little can the missionary do without the Word in the hands of the people. You would be much more interested could you write and order the Bible Record of the American Bible Society, New York. It costs but fifty cents a year.

Cannot the readers of the Cynosure make up a purse of one or two hundred dollars and send it to the Bible Society for the work in Mexico? Money for this object may be forwarded to Rev. W. I. Phillips, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, who will see that it is sent to the Bible House.

Will all believers in prayer please pray for me and the work in Mexico, the land of the "wafer-god," that great results may be attained during the present and coming years?

LITERATURE.

THE SABBATH FOR MAN: A Study of the Origin, Obligation, History, Advantages, and Present State of Sabbath Observance, with Special Reference to the Rights of Workingmen, based on Scripture, Literature, and Especially on a Symposium of Correspondence with Persons of All Nations and Denominations. Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. By Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Author of "The Civil Sabbath" and Other Works. One Volume, 12mo., 672 pages. New York: The Baker & Taylor Co., Publishers, 740 and 742 Broadway. 1892. Price, $1.50.

Few men in the United States have given so much and so careful study to the subject of true Sabbath observance as the author of this work. Since its first appearance, seven years ago, the topic which it discusses has been widely and intelligently debated, bringing to light much new and valuable information relative to the divine command and the civil and religious aspects of the Christian Sabbath. The result is that nearly 100 pages of fresh facts and arguments have been added to the original work, making it a practical handbook of Sabbath reform that deserves a wide distribution throughout the Union. Accounts of the more recent movements for Sabbath rest in foreign lands are added in this book, but the improvements are more largely in the fuller showing the author is now able to make of Sabbath observance in our own land, having crossed the Continent six times in these seven years as a Sabbath reforming lecturer and organizer. The book aims chiefly at practical results, the suppression of Sunday work and Sunday dissipation, of Sunday mails, Sunday trains, Sunday newspapers, Sunday saloons; but it also discusses the religious and scientific aspects of the subject. One of the freshest facts on the religious side is the statement that the Talmud in 250, A. D., speaks of "the Nazarene's Day," (p. 633,) evidently meaning "the Lord's Day"—one of many evidences that the first day of the week had at that time taken the place of the seventh as the Christian day of worship. Another new fact in the same line is that the Revised Version of the Bible applies the word "Sabbath" to no other institution than the Saturday Sabbath (except the Day of Atonement), which seems to refute a common explanation of Col. 2: 16, (p. 533). Numerous railroad managers are quoted (p. 639) as to Sunday trains; thirty-one of them saying there is no real obstacle to their complete suspension. A table of Sunday papers, by States, shows there is an average of one to each 180,000 people, which indicates that about one-fourth of the families take such a paper. Of this volume, Joseph Cook says it is the most helpful he ever read on the subject; and it is certainly, as described by a contemporary, "a complete storehouse of facts, arguments and illustrations."

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Cosmopolitan for July has for its full-page frontispiece a fine illustration of "Sheep Bells," a poem in this number, by Graham R. Tomson, from a painting by Mauve. The other illustrated papers and their authors are as follows: The Great City Companies (of London), by Elizabeth Bisland; Martin Rico, by A. F. Jaccaci, with a portrait of the artist; One of England's Great Modern Schools (Cheltenham), by Douglas Sladen; The Riverside Hospital, by Jacob A. Riis; Love and Thought (poem), by James Russell Lowell; The State and the Forest, by J. B. Harrison; Jersey Villas, by Henry James; Natural Selection, by St. George Mivart; Isabella at Segovia, by Herbert Pierson; On Pawnee Prairie, by Gertrude Smith; The Latest Literary Fashion in France, by T. S. Perry; Sturgeon Fishing in the James, by Chas. W. Coleman; Uncle Nat, by Walter Cary. Other contents are: The Return to Race, by Frances Doveridge; A Night in June (poem), by Duncan C. Scott; June (poem), by John Vance Cheney; The Garden (poem), by Lorimer Stoddard; The Literary Independence of the United States, by Brander Matthews; Recompense (poem), by Frederick Peterson; Making a Living, by Edward E. Hale, and Lethe (poem), by Edith M. Thomas. New York: $3 a year.

Scribner's for July begins a new volume. The Stevenson and Osbourne serial of the Wrecker is concluded. Joseph Kirkland contributes a paper, Among the Poor in Chicago, with illustrations, that possesses much interest. Other articles, several finely illustrated, make up an agreeable number: Getting Out the Fly-Books, by Leroy M. Yale; White Edith (revised poem), a Story Retold, by Thos. Bailey Aldrich; The Art of Ravenna (with a full-page view of the Mausoleum of Galla Placidia), by E. H. and E. W. Blashfield; The Depths of the Sea, by N. S. Shaler; The House Over the Way, by Chas. E. Carryl; The Evolution of a City Square, by Samuel Parsons, Jr., (Superintendent of New York Parks); To Trojan Helen, by W. G. Van T. Sutphen; The Pianner Mores, by Martha McC. Williams; In Marble Prayer, by Julia C. R. Dorr; Historic Moments—Resumption of Specie Payments, by J. K. Upton, Ex-Assistant Secretary of the U. S. Treasury; Editorials—Free Art; Money and Culture; The General Reader; Athlete and Pedagogue. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons. $3 a year.

St. Nicholas for July seems unusually sedate and intelligent, as befits so popular a magazine for a month in which Americans glorify liberty and patriotism. The current serials are continued; Harriet Prescott Spofford contributes a Fourth of July poem; Victor Mapes, A Story of the Flag; Mary Hallock Foote describes the Spare Room at Grandfather's; Lillian L. Price, a story of Cornwallis' Men; Royal B. Smithey, The Voyage of Columbus; Emma H. Nason, The First to Greet Columbus; Virginia W. Cloud, What Things Befel the Squire's House, and several others add pleasant bits to the general collection. New York: The Century Co. $3 a year.

The latest issue of Historia—devoted to Historical Stories—is an excellent one. The list of contents is highly appreciable and includes Philippa's Queenly Request, by Harvey T. Hudson; Two Thrilling Torpedo Adventures, by Myron E. Farley; Fighting the Mexicans (continued), by Lieut. J. Harmon; Tales from Josephus, by Frank G. Soule; Joan de Montfort, by Warren T. Meadows; Stories of the Trojan War, by Henry K. Neele, and Questions of the Day, by the editor. Historia bids fair to win success and stability. Published at the Chamber of Commerce Building, Chicago. $1 a year.

From T. B. Arnold, 104-106 Franklin street, Chicago, we have received a daintily printed booklet, entitled, "The Dove and the Crow: A Poem," by Miss M. Waterbury. Pithily written, it conveys lessons of purity and the danger of contamination drawn from the well-known characteristics of the two birds which appear in its title. The illustration is artistic and there is a good degree of attractiveness throughout. It probably sells for five cents.

Mr. A. W. Harris, Director of the Government Experiment Stations in the Department of Agriculture, has written for the July Century a paper on "What the Government is Doing for the Farmer," in which he discusses the more important recent acts of Congress bearing upon the agricultural development of the United States.

LODGE NOTES.

UNIFORMED RANK, KNIGHTS OF HONOR.

This adjunct of the order occupied fully one day's time of the supreme lodge and was the cause of a great deal of oratorical effort on the part of the members. Some looked upon it with distrust and were in favor of winding it up, but the prevalent feeling was that it had not been given a fair chance, and consequently it was voted not only to continue it but to give it support and assistance. The standing committee on uniformed rank was continued, Bro. Johnson, of Ohio, being added to it in place of Bro. Davenport, and a proposed new ritual for the rank was referred to them for revision, and on approval of their report by the supreme dictator, same to become operative.—Knights of Honor Reporter.

MASSACHUSETTS ENDOWMENT ORDERS.

Commissioner Merrill, of Massachusetts, has recently printed his annual report on life, casualty and assessment insurance in that State, although it bears date Jan. 1, 1892. Since the semi-annual report of the assessment endowment corporations in July last, Major Merrill goes on to say twenty-three have gone to pieces, and are now by order of the court in the hands of a receiver, with instructions to close their affairs, or have gone into voluntary bankruptcy, or made an assignment for the benefit of the members. No less than four others, making altogether just one-half of the entire list of Massachusetts corporations of this character, are awaiting action by which the business can be concluded and the members receive the pittance of the contributions remaining for their benefit. The thirty-three endowment corporations from which reports were received to Jan. 1 show deposits of $1,056,697 in the State treasury on account of the endowment fund. These several corporations have already been in existence an average of two years. The length of their paying period averages five and two-thirds years; thus over one-third of the period in which they are to collect a fund sufficient to meet their promises has passed. Their liability upon the certificates outstanding is $49,734,775; towards liquidating this amount they have in the aggregate $1,056,697 deposited in the treasury of the commonwealth. The membership Jan. 1 is reported as 77,468. The certificates vary in amount from $100 to $2,000, in only three corporations being less than $500 and averaging $733; towards paying this $733, after the expiration of one-third of the average paying period, these corporations have collected and deposited $13.64 for each member. Commissioner Merrill continues: "Now compare the expense fund with the benefit endowment accretions. During the past year the thirty-three still existing corporations of this class report a payment of $759,207 for expenses alone. The defunct corporations reported only for the first six months of 1891; adding to the figures thus given a conservative estimate for the remainder of their existence, and their expense cost was $1,205,492, making the aggregate expenses of all the Massachusetts corporations of this character for last year $1,964,699. The expenses of the endowment corporations prior to 1891 footed up to $1,228,575, making a total cost to the members of conducting the business of these 'economically managed' companies—this is expenses alone—for an average period of two years of $3,192,274. The criticism of the commissioner of insurance during the past four years upon the schemes of this class of corporations needs no other or more complete endorsement than is found in the amount of the expense cost above alluded to, the paltry assets on hand and the record of ruin and disaster which has spread over this commonwealth in the shameful failure of the long list of these concerns during the eight months past."

PRANKS OF KNIGHTS.

The Cynosure has a bright and trusty correspondent in an Eastern State, who exhibits the spirit of a detective and "spots" wayward Freemasons in her neighborhood. During the past month she has given us an insight into their doings which fairly illustrates and confirms the opinions concerning this class of citizens previously expressed in these columns. As to her veracity, she says: "I can verify every word I have written; can give you the names of all the persons of whom I have spoken, where they live, the name of the commandery, and where it is located." We have her name and address; but prudence dictates the withholding of them from the public gaze, lest some of the devotees of "Masonry divine" should persecute her for "knowing too much," which is a capital offence in the realms of the fraternity. She is the wife of a Knight Templar.

"On the back of a circular from ———, which I send you," she writes, "is a name coupled with the title of 'generalissimo.' That man's name was a by-word in ——— county when I was a girl. One Sunday morning he was openly read out of the ——— Baptist church in ——— county; but the Masons did not turn him out of the lodge for his immorality. Oh, no; and now he is one of the 'great guns' in the Masonic Temple in P———."

"I wish to speak of the Knights of St. John and Malta, which are a splinter split from the old Malta concern. It was worse leaving bad. When one commandery was formed in the neighborhood where I formerly lived, and not far from my present abode, a supper was prepared. Among others interested I knew one man who paid eight dollars towards the expense of getting up this banquet, and whose feet, at that time, were not protected from the prevailing snow and slush. His wife greatly feared that he would be sick after parading the street for five squares, escorting Masonic visitors from New York. Along the route of the procession, red fire was burned in front of the taverns, and each rum-seller contributed five dollars to make the occasion a success, knowing well that they would regain their money fourfold. They furnished the red fire and left it to be ignited at various points, to carry the impression that it was provided by the business men of the place. After the event, for months, the bill for that red fire was not paid. The Masons also had a quantity of printing done, and they had not sufficient money to pay for it. Four times the printer sent in his bill, without success; and then he presented it in person. Instead of pleading want of money, as before, the Chancellor told the printer that the commandery had given him the money to pay it, and he had used it. The Chancellor told me of it, and said: 'I did not want the public to know that we were so badly off.' The next week I saw, in the village paper, an article headed: 'The Meanest Kind of Swindling.' I showed it to the Chancellor, and he paid the printer's bill out of his own pocket—an act by which his family were deprived of many comforts.

"That same man's wife had the grippe two years ago last winter, and the severe coughing caused the premature birth of her child. The doctor feared that the mother could not be saved. It was about seven o'clock in the evening, and the doctor had so many patients that he could stay no longer; so he wrote a prescription, handed it to the husband, and said: 'Get it filled, and give it to her as quickly as possible, so that she does not get chills.'

"When the man left the house, I think he intended to hurry back; but instead, went to a drug store opposite the commandery hall; and when he came back it was between 2 and 3 o'clock next morning. His wife, meanwhile, had gone on coughing from time to time, until chills were developed; and when the man returned, scented with rum and tobacco, she was almost beyond help. The nurse dared not leave her a minute, and sat there sobbing; for the sick woman had been a good friend to her.

"What avail were his words of sorrow? For three weeks that wife lay with no more color in her lips than if she had been dressed for the grave; and to-day she is partly deprived of her sight because the medicine which she should have had was withheld on account of a commandery meeting.

"Again, a meeting was held one Sunday afternoon to organize a commandery in ———, and one knight told his wife that he had to have his breakfast at 6 o'clock that morning, as he had to go to the town. She thought it very strange, but said nothing, even when he came home at 2 o'clock Monday morning. On Tuesday, some one was reading the ——— Press and left it lying on the table. When the knight's wife went to fold it up, the murder was out, for her eye caught the words: 'The Knights of St. John and Malta had a big time at ———, and with a big supper, singing, and speeches, they did not break up until the small hours of the morning.' The knight's wife told him what she had read, and he acknowledged that he was there. A nice way to spend the Lord's day.

"This same commandery went to church in a body, one Sunday evening. I sat right in the rear of them and I never felt so badly in a church in my life. The pastor spoke of the 'good' the knights were doing; but I knew about a dozen or more of them, and also that they stayed out all night, gambling and drinking, while the one who was a prelate in the commandery read the scripture to them every Tuesday night, abused his wife shamefully, and had card-playing in his house all day on Sunday.

"Another, a doctor, the leader of these knights, took $10 from a poor widow, to get a brace for a crippled child. He never bought it, however; and some of the neighbors raised funds to sue him, and recovered the money. He also collected money for a hospital in which we were all interested, and kept us out of nearly $300 which he had secured; but on account of his family the people forebore prosecuting him.

"When the pastor finished his discourse that Sunday evening, with the words: 'Go on in the good work you are doing,' I fairly shivered and said to my husband: 'The Lord save us from such good works!' Living so many years in that neighborhood, I knew what dark characters many of them had."

When reading these revelations, some friend of the Knights of St. John and Malta, or of some other clan, may pause and say, "Tush: there are, supposing these statements can all be verified, as you say, quite as inconsiderate and immoral people enrolled as members of Christian churches. Why don't you blame them, as well as the lodges, for harboring such persons?"

There is some significance and food for serious reflection in this retort; for we know that just such persons as our correspondent describes belong both to lodges or commanderies and some orthodox churches, and are held in fellowship by the latter as cordially as by the secret orders in which they are members. It has been evident for some time past that the lodge has invaded the church to the overwhelming shame of the Christian religion which it professes to nurture and promote. Hence it is nothing new to hear Masonic and Odd-fellow pastors addressing members of those fraternities in adulation of their principles and "good works." Sometimes the pastor does so in ignorance, but too often he is also in fellowship with those who hear him on such occasions, both in their church and lodge relations.

"Brethren, these things ought not so to be." "No man can serve two masters" long without failing in duty. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." "No man can handle pitch without being defiled." "What fellowship hath Christ with Belial?" It is bad enough when the church walks hand in hand with the world, but when she clasps hands with the oath-bound lodge, hell is glorified.

"DOUBLE DISTILLED SECRECY."

From what has already been printed in these columns, Cynosure readers very well know that a majority of the many Farmers' Alliances are based on secrecy, having initiations, obligations, grips, passwords, signs and tokens. A recent article in the New York Sun not only confirms this statement, but shows that there is also in it an inner oath-bound clan. The facts in the case are thus stated: At a political meeting in Augusta, Ga., the Rev. J. T. Vernon, a Baptist preacher, and a leader in the Alliance system, lost his temper and told the whole story, as follows: "There is," said he, "an inside degree in the Alliance order to which only a limited number are allowed. It was organized during the meeting of the State Alliance last year. I was appointed organizer for my county. The number to be taken was thirty in each county. This inside circle was to govern and direct the policy of the order to decide who should or who should not offer for public office. We were oath-bound, and not even the other members of the order could know of our existence. The name of Gideon's Band was selected." These disclosures created a sensation throughout the State. President Livingston was called upon to admit or deny the existence of Gideon's Band, but he refused to speak. This band appears to be a counterpart of the "Triangle" in the Clan-na-Gael, having power to devise and supervise the dirty work of the order.

MASONIC MORALITY.

"We have no fraternity with the mocking of our moral tenets. We cannot fellowship the drunkard, the blasphemer, the licentious, the untruthful, or the falsifier of the moral law in any point."—American (Masonic) Tyler, Detroit, Mich.

"I further promise and swear that I will keep a worthy brother Master Mason's secret inviolate, when communicated to and received by me as such, murder and treason excepted."—Master Mason's obligation. (Lying and stealing not excepted!)

"I furthermore promise and swear, that I will assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, when engaged in any difficulty, and will espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, whether he be right or wrong."—Obligation of the Royal Arch Mason.

This "holy" Royal Arch degree "ascends to the pinnacle of blasphemy and impiety by setting an average lodge-man behind a burning bush to personate the Infinite Jehovah. . . . This degree certainly excels all that precede it, but its superiority is the superiority in sorcery, blasphemy and impiety. It is the first degree in which mortal men ape and personate their Maker, and swear to shield each other's villainies and crimes, 'without exception.'"—Doesburg's Exposition, Blanchard's Analysis, pages 599, 600.

"My character!" exclaimed the woman in one of Capt. Marryat's books; "the less said about that, the better." Will the American Tyler take the hint?

MORE OF THE "MYSTIC SHRINE."

"The Triennial Conclave of Grand Encampment, Knights Templar, United States of America," is to assemble in Denver, Colo., on the second Tuesday of August (next month), and it is confidently anticipated that "20,000 belted Knights will participate in the grand escort of the Most Eminent Grand Master" on that occasion.

Of course the approach of this event fires the hearts of all Masons of the Templar degrees with joy and pride in the high-sounding but empty ceremonies with which they expect to astonish the "profane" in the mountain metropolis. Yet, like all terrestrial enjoyments, it has its annoying features.

We have, from time to time, printed such information as came in our way concerning the modern "Oriental Order of the Mystic Shrine," generally known as "Shriners." Now comes an official correspondent of the staid Voice of Masonry, one of the oracles of the fraternity, who having learned that the "Shriners" intend to be present at the conclave in force, and show themselves in a grand public parade, takes exceptions to their methods and plans in language easily understood. "Admitting," he says, "that the Shriners have as much right to parade in Denver during the Triennial as have Odd-fellows, Pythians and Red Men, and no more, the question of taste enters largely. It will be excessively bad taste for the Shriners to parade during the session of the Triennial, and for these reasons: 1. The public receives the impression that this Shrine business is a department of Freemasonry, even to understanding that it is an order higher than Knight Templar. The world should know that the Shrine has no connection under high heaven with Masonry. (?) Nothing like unto Masonry is practiced in its ceremonials, and the purposes of the club—for that is all the Temples are—are purely pleasure! True, they will not accept any one who is not a Templar or a Scottish Rite Mason of the thirty-second degree. 2. The parading will be offensive to the permanent members of the Grand Encampment—the men who legislate and concern themselves with all the true interests of the order of the Temple. But if the Denver Shriners cannot make that concession to their elder fraters, they should scrupulously remove the Templar uniform and the official jewels. This the writer says as an enthusiastic Shriner and Potentate of his club or Temple. He sees the cloud no bigger than a man's hand in the Masonic firmament, and he sounds this note of warning in good faith. Now, if the Shriners will close their eyes and parade in spite of fraternal counsels, and wear Templar uniforms and jewels while so parading, let them take notice that such determined disregard of the principles of the order will be declared a Templar offense, punishable with suspension, and perhaps with expulsion.

The offense which is thus severely rebuked arises from a recent custom in several places, of pinning the special insignia of the frolicsome Shriners upon the uniforms of the Knights Templar, thereby tending to lower the dignity of the latter. The dignity of the Knights Templars is their principal stock in trade during parades. No wonder they guard it so carefully.

THE LUTHERANS AND THE SCHOOL LAW.

The Lutheran church is deeply interested in education, and maintains numerous seminaries and schools of excellent character. The subject, therefore, occupied a prominent place in the deliberations of the recent annual Conference of the Northern Illinois District of the German Evangelical Synod of North America, at Freeport. This Synod was organized in 1840, and is one of the most prosperous in the West. About 650 pastors are connected with it, and there are several educational and missionary organizations under its control. Its territory embraces Northern Illinois and portions of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The school law of this State and the educational plank in the State Republican platform came up for consideration, amid a general expression that the Synod desired to keep the question out of politics as long as possible. After declaring for the absolute control of their own school and educational system, and for the repeal of the present school law of Illinois, which they deem "unjust," the Synod demands as follows:

The enactment of a new, just and compulsory school law not containing the following points:

That the compulsory period for parochial schools begin at any certain time.

That the child attend any school.

That parochial schools be approved or supervised by any State official.

That instructions be given in certain branches or a certain language.

That empowers State officials to take truants anywhere but to their parents as long as their parents fulfill their lawful duties.

That infringes upon the rights of parents in any manner.

That allows public money to be used for private purposes.

That connects church and state in any manner.

The obvious meaning of the Synod is that the Lutherans will vote for no men or measures that do not adopt or indorse this position.

GOSPEL SINGERS ARRESTED.

William F. Davis, the New England evangelist and reformer, sends us an account of the recent arrest and imprisonment, in Everett, Mass., of six Christians while peaceably singing Gospel hymns on Sunday in Everett Square. Mr. Davis once suffered similar punishment for a like offense. But he is an earnest, impressive minister, who claims the right to be heard on behalf of the Christian religion wherever he can obtain a hearing. "Congress," says the Constitution of the United States, "shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people freely to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances." But the trustees of Everett declare that singing hymns may become an annoyance, and a pretext for imprisonment. Hence, the arrest of Mr. Davis and his friends. Massachusetts is largely in the hands of Roman Catholics, and they always take offense whenever the Gospel is openly preached by a Protestant. The liberty wherewith Christ has made all men free is not recognized in that commonwealth.

SOMETHING OF INTEREST.

We have at this office, for sale and for the benefit of Cynosure subscribers, "The Columbian Souvenir and Visitors' Directory," which commends itself to all who see it. It is printed on fine enameled paper, with a beautiful cover in colors, and contains several full-page, half-tone pictures of the principal buildings of the Columbian Exhibition, showing Columbus (with history), a bird's-eye view of the Fair grounds and buildings, as follows: The Woman's, Horticultural, Transportation, Mines and Mining, Electrical, Administration, Machinery Hall, Agricultural, Manufacturers' and Liberal Arts, U. S. Government, Fish and Fisheries, and the Art Palace, with description, size and purpose of each. There are also two maps of Chicago, a list of places of interest to visitors, a page of general information, and a summary of 400 years of American history.

We offer this handsome Souvenir FREE to any person who will send us one new subscriber for the Cynosure for one year, with the money—$1.50, and the new subscriber will also receive a copy of it as a premium. Any present subscriber to the Cynosure who will promptly send in a renewal and fifteen cents extra, will also receive a copy of the Souvenir. Single copies will be sent to any address on receipt of twenty-five cents. Read the advertisement on another page.

A TIMELY PUBLICATION.

When Bro. M. N. Butler first proposed his new book, "The American Hand-book," some thought that it could be only a repetition of what had been so often published on the anti-secret reform. But after reviewing it, one is convinced that it is exceedingly timely and truly a masterpiece of its kind. It would be difficult to condense in a 200-page book more facts, arguments and testimonies on the evils of secret orders, than the author has produced in this volume. One cannot but admire his tact, and power of expression and condensation. Few publications contain so much material ready for use by the field worker. Just the citations needed are given and systematically arranged, and interspersed with the author's terse, practical epigrammatical points, which lure the reader on, so that it is difficult to lay the book down till it is finished. It would certainly be an excellent way to help the anti-secret reform, and indeed every reform, for every reform worker to have this book constantly with him and introduce it, if possible, into every home. The author proves himself an all-round reformer. As he says: "It is not one evil that afflicts the Republic, but a combination of evils, and the American movement is after the combination." He has, in this volume, given us the cream of his years of reading and study on reform questions, and as a Hand-book for the moral reformer it will be difficult to excel. It is for sale at this office; price, 40 cents.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman, Financial agent of Berea College, Kentucky, a ftera few weeks' sojourn in New England, has returned to his home in Oberlin, Ohio.

—A contemporary makes the statement, without any qualification, and we are bound, therefore, to accept it as a solemn fact, that "four thousand and seven hundred Negroes have been murdered in the South in twenty years." Half the money and energy that have been expended in fencing the Chinese out of the United States would have enabled Congress to prevent this wholesale assassination.

—A note from the venerable Mrs. Laura S. Haviland, at Cottonwood, Shasta Co., Cal., June 23, brings the gratifying intelligence of her improved health. When she arrived at the home of her invalid brother, Otis Smith, in that place, last November, she was suffering from a severe cough resulting from an attack of the grippe. After about a month's residence in Cottonwood the cough left her, and since then she has been freer from it during winter and spring than for a number of years. She writes in the spirit of gratitude to God for the enjoyment of this blessing.

—The Grand Army of the Republic in the North has temporarily ended its controversy as to affiliation with the colored posts in the South, by at last finding a white member who will assume command of the Department of Louisiana and Mississippi, in Gen. A. S. Badger, United States Appraiser. Gen. Badger has agreed to recognize the Negro posts as regular. The other white veterans have, with two or three exceptions, withdrawn from the order. This indicates dissatisfaction, and it would not be strange if the question continued to be a disturbing element in future conclaves.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

In a few instances, secretaries of secret societies have been instructed by their lodges (so their letters read) to purchase our expositions.

A young man from Iowa told me that when he got into the lodge, and found there its secrets in print, and read them, the glory of his action, the honor of his position, seemed to fade. He had become an Odd-fellow; "but," said he, "the reading of your exposition of the order and comments has sickened me of it."

Among the many peculiar letters received, one just at hand is certainly unique: A New York man wants to add a side degree to Knights of Pythias, "something attractive and rather funny," and writes to know if we have anything in mind that would do! The information which will be sent will fully enlighten the inquirer as to the object of this Association, and, let us hope, save him from such folly and sin.

I am securing, by correspondence, some interesting facts about the Mystic Shriners and probably their ritual. None but Knight Templars and Scotch Rite thirty-two degree Masons can become Shriners. The order is rapidly increasing.

It was primarily instituted to try, judge and execute criminals (?) whom the tardy civil law did not reach to the measure of their offences! Such parties the Mystic Shrine "would fearlessly try, judge, and, if convicted, execute the criminals within the hour, leaving no trace of their action behind." Temples were instituted throughout Europe, some years ago, and although possessing all the powers and material of the Inquisition, if required, they still continue to thrive as charitable and social organizations, as well as being inquisitors upon the flagrant outragers and desecrators of Masonic vows.

It is the effort of Freemasons in America to represent the Mystic Shrine as having nothing to do with Masonry, and to speak of it as simply a social order; while to others, it looks very Masonic, and as being a degree after the pattern of Chinese Highbinders or New Orleans Mafias. Only Masons can become members.

Rev. M. A. Gault opens his campaign under the N. C. A. banner next week in Nebraska, beginning at Fremont and visiting other points. Friends in that State will do well to address him at Blanchard, Iowa, at once.

I was glad to welcome last week at this office and complete arrangements with our Western agent, Rev. W. C. Paden. He will settle his family in their new home, and prepare himself for his field work.

All will sympathize with our Eastern agent, Bro. W. B. Stoddard, whose health is not vigorous. He hopes that a little time spent among the Vermont mountains may restore him to his usual vigor.

In closing this letter I wish to mention, with thankfulness, the prompt response of friends to our appeal for funds. During May and June I received $478.00 in cash, and pledges amounted to nearly $200.00. This is a good beginning. May we not hear this month from many more who have it in mind to do missionary work through the National Christian Association?

W. I. PHILLIPS,
Field Sec'y and Treas.

THE HOME.

NOT UNDERSTOOD.

Not understood. We move along asunder,
Our paths grow wider as the seasons creep
Along the years. We marvel and we wonder
Why life is life, and then we fall asleep
Not understood.

Not understood. We gather false impressions
And hug them closer as the years go by,
Till virtues often seem to us transgressions,
And thus men rise and fall, and live and die,
Not understood.

Not understood. Poor souls with stunted vision
Oft measured giants by their narrow gauge;
The poisoned shafts of falsehood and derision
Are oft impelled 'gainst those who mould the age
Not understood.

Not understood. The secret springs of action,
Which lie beneath the surface and the show,
Are disregarded. With self-satisfaction
We judge our neighbors and they often go
Not understood.

Not understood. How trifles often change us!
The thoughtless sentence and the fancied slight
Destroy long years of friendship and estrange us,
And on our souls there falls a freezing blight,
Not understood.

Not understood. How many hearts are aching
For lack of sympathy! Ah, day by day,
How many cheerless, lonely hearts are breaking!
How many noble spirits pass away
Not understood!

O God, that men would see a little clearer,
Or judge less harshly when they cannot see!
O God, that men would draw a little nearer
To one another! They'd be nearer Thee,
And understood. —Selected.

A HERO OF DUTY.

In the north of Holland, over an extent of three leagues, the country is not protected from the incursions of the sea by any natural barrier. Some two hundred years ago the Dutch undertook the gigantic task of erecting enormous dykes of granite blocks and clay to resist the force of their terrible invader. Behind this shelter numerous villages arose, and flourish to the present day. Alkmond in particular, which numbers 10,000 inhabitants, is built little below the dyke, which is kept in constant repair by two hundred workmen, under the direction of an engineer. One afternoon in November, about a century ago, a furious wind was blowing from the northwest, increasing every moment. The engineer in charge was a young man engaged to be married, whose friends and family lived at Amsterdam. He was to go to Amsterdam that very evening to join in a great festival, long looked forward to and eagerly desired. His preparations were all made and he was in high spirits, just ready to set out. Suddenly the sound of the rising wind struck upon his ear, and he remembered with a pang of anxiety that it was the time of the high tides. He thought of his dyke and all that depended on it. It would be a dreadful disappointment not to go. But the dyke! His friends would be all expecting him; watching for him. What would they think? But the dyke. There was a fierce conflict between inclination and duty. It is six o'clock. The sea is rising. But at seven he must set out for Amsterdam. Shall he go? His heart says yes; duty says no. Again he looks at the sea, watches the rising storm, and decides to remain at his post, then turns to the dyke. It is a scene of the utmost confusion. His two hundred men are aghast, bewildered. The storm has become a hurricane. The supply of tow and mortar is exhausted. They are at their wits' end to know how to repair the breaches—how to defend the place against the terrible enemy, who is every moment gaining upon them. But as soon as the young engineer appears a joyous cry bursts from every breast.

"Here is the master! God be praised; now all will be well." The master places each workman at his post and a desperate battle begins between man and the terrible ocean. At half-past eleven there is a cry from the centre:

"Help! help!"

"What is the matter?"

"Four stones carried away at a blow!"

"Where is that?"

The master does not lose a moment. He fastens a rope around his body; four workmen do the same, and forty arms seize the ropes, while the five brave fellows throw themselves into the waves to repair the damage. The mad waves struggle with them, dash them about, blind them. No matter; they do their duty and then they are hauled on land again.

But the cry, "Help! help!" soon arises from all parts.

"Stones!" cries one.

"There is no more."

"Mortar!"

"There is no more."

"Take off your clothes!" cries the master, tearing off his own; "stop up the holes with them!"

What will not men do for a noble leader in a great cause? Cheerfully, without a murmur, straining every nerve the gallant two hundred toil on, half naked, exposed to all the fury of a November tempest. It wants a quarter to midnight. A few inches more and the sea will have burst over the dyke and spread furiously over the defenceless country. To-morrow there will not be a living soul in all these flourishing villages. The clothes are all used up; but the danger increases; the tide will rise till midnight. "Now, my men," said the clear, thrilling voice of the master, "we can do nothing more. On your knees, all of you, and let us each cry mightily to God for help." And there, in the midnight darkness, on the dyke, which shook and trembled beneath the fury of the tempest, the brave two hundred knelt, lifting their hands and their hearts to Him who can say to the waves: "Peace, be still." And as upon the sea of Galilee, so now He heard his children cry, and delivered them in their distress. Meanwhile, the people of Alkmond ate and drank, sang and danced, little thinking that there was but a few inches of mason-work between them and death. Thousands of lives had been saved because one man had done his duty.

A REAL HOME.

Can it be a home, a child's home, without religion? It may be a house, beautiful, enriched with art, knowledge and music; but without religion, without thoughts about God, without prayer, penitence, sweet Sabbaths, faith, love and seeking after a life of holiness,—it cannot be a home. This needs no argument. It needs much emphatic repetition, and it needs deep belief.

All children are naturally religious. They have wonder, awe, reverence, trust, tenderness, the keenest sense and love. No learning comes so naturally to a child as the learning of God. The talk of children about God is as the talk of wise men. There must be religion if there is to be a home. We, who are asking that all education shall be religious, are, of all people, bound to see that our children find their first faith, their first prayer, their first thought of God, at home.

When the school-master gets our boys he ought to find that there is one elementary thing in their education well begun,—religion. To send a boy or girl into the new world of a school without prayer, faith, love, reverence, and some experience towards God, is to send those most precious to us into their first day in the world and in life as unfitted for that world, and for that life as a heathen child.—Selected.

FELLOWSHIP.

Fellowship, communion and partnership in the New Testament are but translations of one word, and but signify our unity of purpose and community of interests which exists among the people of God. At the day of Pentecost "they that believed had all things common;" and to this day spiritual believers count themselves as partners, having interests in each other, and acknowledging their mutual obligations, believing that as Christ laid down his life for his people, so his servants ought, if needful, to lay down their lives one for another.

It was to this tender bond of Christian unity that the Apostle Paul referred, when sending Onesimus, the fugitive, back to Philemon, whose service he had left; he wrote, "If thou count me, therefore, a partner, receive him as myself. If he has wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on my account." (Philemon 17, 18.)

The partnership of the people of God is a most important fact, a most precious truth; and if it was realized how it would lighten many heavy burdens, and make many persons sharers in burdens and blessings which now are left to the possession of the few. "It is more blessed to give than to receive;" yet many devote their time to receiving, while others are, in some sense, forced to spend their days in giving. Those who neglect the privileges of giving lose a blessing which they can ill afford to spare, while those who give ungrudgingly are blessed in the deed.

The partnership or fellowship of God's people is a glorious fact—a fact which the world does not comprehend, and which many Christians are slow to accept; nevertheless there are those who feel their responsibility, know their privilege, and rejoice in their opportunity, and who do "heartily as unto the Lord" those things which he requires at their hands. Blessed are they that know the joys of the heavenly partnership, and find in the work of Christ privileges and opportunities such as the world cannot afford; and who look forward to the time when they who would suffer for the Saviour's sake, and receive a hundred-fold in this present time, shall rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory in the heavenly inheritance which awaits the saints of the Most High.—Messiah's Herald.

KEEP CHEERFUL.

It is one of the hardest things in the world to do—to keep cheerful—and, at the same time, the most profitable. Cheerfulness bids defiance to old age, discouragements, and adversity, keeps the eye bright, the digestion good and the blood and heart warm. But, as we stated at first, it is hard to be always cheerful.

The morning is foggy and chilly; we come down stairs feeling stiff and not a bit rested; possibly we did not have everything in apple-pie order the night before, and John has whittled kindling and taken out ashes since.

Hum! Two little sprites seem instantly to besiege us; one, the impish little fellow, fretfulness, the other cheerfulness. We feel our foreheads begin to corrugate and our nerves to tingle; the battle is fairly on.

Well for us if we close our lips tight; for just one word and the cause is lost. It is sometimes more of a victory than we imagine to right here burst into a bit of song or utter a cheery greeting to somebody.

I oftentimes call to mind—on such occasions as this—the old gentleman who invariably sang "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," the first thing on rising, and wonder how he ever could have done it. I imagine it would have a dolorous sound, ordinarily, should I "strike it up," but the remembrance of the man cheers me.

Cheerfulness is a wonderful tonic, and not only helps us, but helps all who comes in contact with us.—Selected.

TWO GIRLS.

There is a girl, and I love to think of her and talk of her, who never comes in late when there is company, who wears a pretty little air of mingled responsibility and anxiety with her youth, whom the others seem to depend on for many comforts. She is the girl who helps mother.

In her own home she is a blessed little saint and comforter. She takes unfinished tasks from the tired, stiff fingers that falter at their work; her strong, young figure is a staff on which the gray-haired, white-faced mother leans and is rested. She helps mother with the sewing, with the week's mending, with a cheerful conversation and congenial companionship that some girls do not think worth while wasting on only mother. And when there comes a day when she must bend over the old worn-out body of mother lying unheeded in her coffin, her rough hands folded, her long disquiet merged in rest, something very sweet will be mingled with her loss, and the girl who helped mother will find a benediction of peace upon her head and in her heart.

The girl who works—God bless her!—is another girl whom I know. She is brave and active. She is not too proud to earn her own living, or ashamed to be caught at her daily task. She is studious and painstaking and patient. She smiles at you from behind the counter or desk. There is a memory of her sewed into each silken gown. She is like a beautiful mountaineer already far up the hill, and the sight of her should be a fine inspiration for us all. It is an honor to know this girl—to be worthy of her regard. Her hand may be stained by factory grease or printer's ink, but it is an honest hand and a helping hand. It stays misfortune from many a home; it is one shield that protects many a forlorn little family from the alms-house and the asylum.—The Advocate.

TEN CENTS ON EVERY DOLLAR.

All of you have heard of Colgate's soap; many of you use it. Here is a story about its manufacturer, William Colgate.

Many years ago a lad of sixteen years left his home to seek his fortune. All his worldly possessions were tied up in a bundle, which he carried in his hand.

As he trudged along, he met an old neighbor, the captain of a canal boat, and the following conversation took place, which changed the whole current of the boy's life:

"Well, William, where are you going?" he inquired.

"I don't know," he answered; "father is too poor to keep me any longer, and says I must now make my own living."

"There's no trouble about that," said the captain. "Be sure you start right and you'll get on finely."

William told his friend that the only trade he knew anything about was soap and candle-making, at which he had helped his father while at home.

"Well," said the old man, "let me pray with you once more, and give you a little advice, and then I'll let you go."

They both knelt down upon the old tow-path; the dear old man prayed earnestly for William, and then gave this advice:

"Some one will be the leading soap-maker in New York; it can be you as well as anybody else; I hope it may. Be a good man; give your heart to Christ; give the Lord all that belongs to him of every dollar you earn; make an honest soap; give a full pound, and I am certain you will yet be a prosperous and a rich man."

After the boy arrived in the city he found it hard to get work. Lonesome and far from home he remembered his mother's last words, and the last words of the old captain. He was then led to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." He remembered his promise to the old captain, and the first dollar that he earned brought up the question of the Lord's part. He found in the Bible that the Jews were commanded to give one-tenth; so he said, "I will give one-tenth, if the Lord will accept that."

And so he did, and ten cents on every dollar were sacred to the Lord.

Having a regular employment, he soon became a partner; and after a few years his partner died, and William became sole owner of the business.

He had resolved to keep his promise to the old captain; he made an honest soap, gave a full pound, and instructed his book-keeper to open an account with the Lord, and carry a tenth of all his income to that account. He prospered; his family were blessed; his soap sold, and he grew rich faster than he had ever hoped. He then gave the Lord two-tenths, and prospered more than ever; then he gave three-tenths, then four-tenths, then five-tenths.

He educated his family, settled his plans for life, and gave all his income to the Lord. He prospered more than ever.—Anonymous.

When it is said of a youth that "he drinks," the world shies him off. Why? It is whispered all through the community, "He drinks! he drinks!" That blasts him. When a young man loses his reputation for sobriety, he might as well be at the bottom of the sea.

During the past fourteen years the citizens' league, of Chicago, which was organized for the express work of suppressing the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors, has prosecuted 15,441 charges against saloon-keepers, and has secured fines and costs aggregating $151,763. It is one of the organizations which the saloon-keepers have learned to respect and fear.

THE COWARD.

Who is a coward? who?

The boy who cannot bear
A hasty word, a scornful look,
A thoughtless jest, a damaged book,
Whose selfish spirit cannot brook
The play he may not share.

Who is coward? who?

He who would rather fight
Than own that he is in the wrong,
Or curb his wild, unruly tongue,
Who rather would be fierce and strong,
Than kind, and just, and right.

Who is a coward? who?

The boy who never craves
For grace to help him to refrain
From taking God's own name in vain,
But idly follows in the train
Of Satan's willing slaves.

Who is coward? who?

He who dares not refuse
To join in every evil way
With those who seek to lead astray;
The boy who is ashamed to pray,
Afraid the right to choose.

THE CHURCH AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

[The charges in the following are exaggerated, so far as very many denominations are incriminated; but there are other churches and institutions who cannot claim innocence in this matter.]

Rev. J. S. Hughs, of Englewood, Ill., has sent us a discussion of the position of the church in its relation to the liquor traffic published in the Christian Evangelist of St. Louis, Feb. 18 and 25th. Bro. Hughs quotes from the editor of the Evangelist, and replies in pointed notes.

Hughs.—There is practically no more hostility between the present churches and the liquor power, than there is between the present license parties and the liquor power, which, in either case, is not hostility. The churches have freely continued in good fellowship those members who have helped in building up the present liquor power, and have to this hour refused to purge themselves of this kind of complicity, and all the limitations and restraints now laid upon the license parties, their representatives and their press, have their exact counterpart in the churches, their pulpits and their press, which speak, act and fellowship just as though the church was a wing of the party or the party a wing of the church.

2. Christian Evangelist.—"What shall be the attitude toward each other of these two diametrically opposite forces, the church and the saloon?"

NOTE.—They are not "diametrically opposite forces." "The war between them" has not yet begun, and therefore cannot continue until it has a beginning. If the saloon were not what it was previous to 1862, a mere doggerly, and not a nationalized institution of government, not resting, as it does now, on the ballot as a party issue, the churches would antagonize it; for the churches are a sort of moral force when unrelated by denominational interest to such a crime. To vote down the license system now would destroy the liquor traffic; it would divide any sect that should attempt to discipline its members for supporting the license system. Thus the saloon has the power to present to the church, through the political affiliations of its members, the alternative, disruption (which seems as death to them), or non-interference and conformity to a program that will not stop at treason. Each holds the other's life in its hands, but one will not be prodded into the engagement while the other is stealing souls.

3. Christian Evangelist.—"The conflict is really between Christ, as the head of the church, and this modern anti-Christian power." "We assume there is no doubt or hesitation on this point among the real followers of Christ."

NOTE.—The liquor power understands that well enough. They know, as we do, that if Christ had a large church of "real followers" in place of these recanting, backsliding sects it would end this business without any "ultimately" or "after-while" about it.

4. Christian Evangelist.—"It is the duty of the church to teach clearly and distinctly what is the real nature and tendency of the liquor power in this closing part of the nineteenth century."

NOTE.—Well, here is a good way to do it. Let our religious press urge upon our churches everywhere to appoint persons (say three), one at least of whom shall be a woman, to inquire into and report to this church the relation of its members, and of the church, to public immorality and the liquor traffic. There are plenty who will inform themselves and report, and these honest (?) brethren who are seeking light, and ready to obey, can be taught just where the matter rests. Now let our papers and preachers all demand light, and begin by faithfully imparting the light they already have. Let us make sure that it is light and instruction that are needed. Let us have a committee of inquiry at once in every church to ascertain the relations of its members to legal crimes. Let those who try it tell us where they found the "dead line."—Church Militant, New York.

FROM THE NEW YORK "VOICE."

1. About 4,000,000 voters who are church members are voting for men to represent them in public office who support the license policy, and these voters know it.

2. The license policy legalizes and protects the liquor traffic, and if these voters don't know that, it is because they don't want to know it.

3. The liquor traffic is known to be the cause of innumerable crimes, vices and murders, and everybody knows that.

4. The churches are allowing these 4,000,000 voters to continue to uphold the wholesale murders of the liquor traffic without official rebuke or remonstrance.

A "league" does not necessarily need to be a compact formally drawn up, signed and sealed. Actions speak louder than written documents. When men assist an armed foe of their country to ravage and pillage the land, it is treason, and no written compact is required for proof. When a man does the works of the devil no written compact is necessary to prove a "league" with hell. When 4,000,000 church members vote the liquor traffic the right to ravage the homes of America, there is no written compact required to prove the league. And when the church, which claims to be the teacher of morals, does not rebuke its own membership plainly and personally for such work, she stands by her silence as accessory to all the unbounded sins and shames that the American saloons have let loose upon mankind.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The multitude convicted.—v. 37. The boasting, yet cowardly, Peter comes before us suddenly transformed into the grandest of moral heroes, charging right home to the crucifiers of his Lord the terrible crime of which they had been guilty. What could work such a marvelous change but the transforming power of the Holy Spirit? and if it could do this for Peter, why not for the most timid disciple? The cowardice of many professed Christians in dealing with questions of reform would be changed to unflinching bravery could they but have this same endowment of the Spirit. When ministers keep silent regarding popular sins, thinking thereby to retain their influence, they are in the way to lose what little influence they have. Had Peter compromised the truth in the smallest degree, the multitude would never have been pricked to their hearts, or made the earnest inquiry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" It has been a subject of remark that those churches which open their doors to an anti-secret convention where the sin of lodge-associations from a Gospel standpoint is pressed home to the hearts of the hearers, are usually blessed with revivals.

2. The way to be saved.—vs. 38-40. "Repent;"—this is always the burden of true Gospel preaching. Turn about. You have been pursuing the downward path away from God; now take the upward path that leads to God. You are in the broad way that leads to death; forsake it for the narrow way that leads to life. This is repentance; a turning about, a change of will. It involves the putting away of all known sin,—the choosing of good instead of evil, of light instead of darkness. "And be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sin." Rather,—for baptism must follow, not precede repentance—as the sign that your sins are remitted; not that baptism has in itself any soul-cleansing power. "And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Even though they had been the betrayers and murderers of the Lord Jesus Christ, they, too, could receive this unspeakable gift, for the promise quoted from the prophet Joel was not only for the Jewish race, but for the far-off Gentiles, and to as many as should accept the divine calling. From verse 40 we see that but a small portion of Peter's sermon is given to us, but we have the gist of it. "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." This should be the burden of preaching to-day—separation. Peter saw that the greater part of the Jewish nation were blinded by hopeless unbelief. With an earnestness born of this conviction, he labored to save a chosen few. Eighteen centuries have passed away, but the outlook is unchanged. The masses of nominal Christendom, like the unfaithful servant in the parable, are pursuing their own selfish interests without a thought that their Lord may suddenly appear and put them to confusion. It is the mission of the church, not to fill her ranks with such servants as these—spiritually dead while having a name to live—but with the separated, consecrated class. A pure church is always a strong church, however few in numbers or poor in pocket. "Then they that gladly received his words." The truth can take no real or permanent hold where there is not this glad receptiveness. Of the three thousand souls that were the fruit of this first Pentecostal blessing, we read that they all continued steadfastly in—that is, constantly attended on—the apostles' teachings;—also in Christian fellowship and in prayers. What an example to later believers! It seems, from verse 44, that they not only attended the public temple-worship but held private—neighborhood or cottage—meetings at each other's houses. These are sometimes objected to on the ground that they interfere with the regular meetings of the church; but rightly conducted, they are a help and never a hindrance. They can be made a channel of great spiritual comfort and blessing to those who for any cause cannot attend the regular church services, and on this account alone should not be neglected. "Praising God and having favor with all the people." Nothing so recommends religion as a spirit of habitual praise. When we are joyful in the Lord the world is very quick to read the signs and take knowledge of us that we have indeed "been with Jesus." "And the Lord added to the church daily." It was not Peter's eloquence, except as that was made the instrument. It was entirely the Lord's work. Would not revivals be more frequent if we depended more on Him, and less on some famous evangelist? It was a daily adding. So the church needs to be in a state not of intermittent, but of continual revival.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The Woman's Baptist Home Mission Society raised last year for its general work $49,059.27. The corresponding secretary's report states that the society has a total of 1,635 adult societies and 422 bands. The work is growing among the children. Good has come from the systematic two years' course of study, with diploma when finished.

—Dr. S. W. Duncan has been chosen to the position of foreign secretary of the Baptist Missionary Union, to succeed Dr. Murdock, recently resigned.

—The Second International Convention of the Baptist Young People's Union of America will convene at the Detroit Rink, Detroit, Mich., Thursday evening, July 14, at 7:30, and will hold daily sessions on the three days following, adjourning on Sunday evening, July 17.

—The Baptist growth within the last twenty years is exceptional. In 1872 they numbered 1,489,000 members; now they have 3,269,000 communicants, or one Baptist in twenty of our population. Nor are they behind in educational matters. In 1872 they had institutions worth $3,247,000; at the present time they have $29,000,000 invested in them.

—Prof. Arthur Gaylord Slocum has accepted the presidency of Kalamazoo College and will remove from Corning, N. Y., the latter part of July. Dr. Slocum deserves the credit of building up the standard of Corning's educational institutions to the highest rank. His control of the schools has made them successful in all points. His interest in religious matters has been fully as great—the new Baptist church and the new Y. M. C. A. building are both in a large measure due to his untiring zeal and efforts.

CHURCH ARMY.

—The Church Army, an organization in the Established Church of England, after the order of the Salvation Army, reports 250 officers, of whom 40 are women. Many of these have sacrificed wages of $10, $15 and even $20 a week for Army work. The Army collected $70,000 in coppers, the pence of the poor, and received only $32,500 in gifts and subscriptions. Many of its enterprises are self-supporting. It has fifteen Labor Homes for 25 or 30 people each, small establishments having proved more satisfactory than large ones. The first of a proposed series of Labor Homes for women was opened in December. The Army held 40,000 outdoor and 50,000 indoor meetings. Of its converts, 6,000 were confirmed during the year, and about 1,000 are awaiting confirmation; 170 evangelists and 50 mission nurses made nearly 400,000 "Bible and Prayer-book visits."

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The Illinois Home Missionary Society has just organized a church in Harrison, a town with a population of about 700, half of whom are in the village. Evangelists McCord and Lewis held a series of meetings which were greatly blessed. The whole community became interested and seventy-eight signed a declaration of the purpose to live a Christian life. Supt. Tompkins aided in the organization of the church. Fifty-two entered into covenant.

—Fox River Congregational Club held its meeting with the New England Church, Aurora, June 23. In the midst of a pouring rain about fifty members came from Sandwich, Elgin, Sycamore, De Kalb, Batavia and other places; and 115 sat down to supper. Dr. F. A. Noble gave the address of the evening, on Progressive Congregationalism, which was received with great enthusiasm.

FRIENDS.

—In the death of Barnabas Coffin Hobbs the Friends Church has lost one of its best known and most influential and honored members. He passed quietly away after some weeks of feeble health at his home at Bloomington, Indiana, June 22, 1892, aged 77.

—Announcement is made of the annual camp-meeting at Portsmouth, R. I., instituted last year by Portsmouth Friends. It begins July 29 and continues to August 8. The place is ten miles from Fall River, seven from Newport and two from Portsmouth station on the Old Colony railroad, and is a well-equipped camp.

—Orthodox Friends are found in 34 States and Terriories and in the District of Columbia, and have a total membership, including Philadelphia Y. M., of 80,655. Among the States Indiana contains the greater number, 25,915; Ohio is second with 10,844, and Iowa third with 8,146. Of the yearly meeting Indiana heads the list with a membership of 22,105, and Baltimore closes it with 1,012. Iowa, in sweep of territory, surpasses any of the others, with 11,391 members. Ninety-four organizations are returned with 725 church edifices valued at $2,795,784. Hicksite Friends are in 13 States and have a membership of 21,992 and 201 organizations. Their church property is valued at $1,161,850.

LUTHERAN.

—Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill., has conferred the title of Doctor of Divinity upon the following: Rev. Erland Carlson, Lindsburg, Kansas; Rev. E. Norelius, Vasa, Minn.; Rev. President Olaf Olsson, Rock Island, Ill., and Prof. E. C. Enander, Rock Island, Ill.

—The Eastern Lutheran contains the announcement "that a Lutheran gentleman offers to give a college site and $50,000 at that place, if the General Synod will add $150,000 in two years."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Epworth Leagues of Illinois held a two days' session in Chicago last week—their first annual convention. The attendance was large, and a spirit of enthusiasm prevailed. The organization was completed as follows: President, Bishop Fitzgerald; Vice Presidents, C. E. Piper, Chicago; C. S. Taylor, Rantoul; R. W. Roplequet, Belleville; A. K. Tullis; Secretary, F. H. Cumming; Treasurer, Grant Stewart, Chicago. Reports showed the strength of the leagues throughout the State: In the Southern Conference, total membership, 8,944; Illinois Conference, 12,474; Central Illinois, 7,496; Rock River Conference, 11,000. Total, 39,914.

—A benevolent gentleman of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, who declines to give his name, will pay the traveling expenses of a missionary to Japan to take the place made vacant by the death of Dr. J. W. Lambuth, and will support him in the field. This is one of the indications of the rising tide of missionary spirit.

—Rev. B. Fay Mills, the evangelist, will begin meetings at Grace M. E. church, San Francisco, July 28.

—The Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in its quarter of a century's work, has aided in the building of 8,000 churches, nearly one-third of the whole number of their houses of worship.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost, the American evangelist, who went on a sort of independent mission to India a few years ago, has returned to London, Eng., where, it is said, he has taken the pastoral care of a Presbyterian church.

—The Illinois Presbyterian churches request their members not to vote for any candidate for Congress who favors a state appropriation for the Columbian Exhibition, otherwise than upon the conditions that no intoxicating drinks are to be sold on the Exhibition grounds and that the Exhibition be closed on Sundays.

—Prof. John DeWitt, of McCormick Theological Seminary, has declined the professorship of church history in Princeton, and will continue to occupy the chair of apologetics in Chicago.

REFORMED CHURCH.

—At the late meeting of the (English) Synod, a proposition was made to form a union with the German branch of the church; but the question of union was postponed for a year.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—The Roman Catholics have 115 parish churches and chapels in the City of New York with 300 priests and 300 brothers, and 2,000 religious women constantly at work among the people.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The Salvation Army believes in the use of printers ink. It publishes thirty-one weekly newspapers and five monthly magazines, with a total annual circulation of 45,000,000 copies.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The present membership of the U. P. church is 109,180, a gain of 2,633 during the past year. The total contributions of the church during the last year were $1,286,288, an increase of $152,000 over the previous year. The young people's societies of the denomination enroll about 24,000 members.

—The Assembly's committee on education will meet in Chicago, July 11.

—Several societies of the U. P. young people have already taken the name of Christian Union.

—The convocation of Iowa Synod, at Colfax Springs, will be held this year August 16-23.

—The United Presbyterian mission in Egypt is having remarkable success among the Copts, the influence of the mission extending far beyond its own organized work. At Assiout the leaders in the Coptic church have asked the United Presbyterian mission for one of its licentiates to become their religious teacher, providing his support and promising him freedom of utterance.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

Charles Francis Adams: "A more perfect agent for the devising and execution of conspiracies against church and state could scarcely have been conceived."

Thaddeus Stevens: "By Freemasonry, trial by jury is transformed into an engine of despotism and Masonic fraud."

Judge Pliny Merrick (a seceded Mason): "If ever a Chapter or a lodge shall establish laws in conflict with those of the state the Masonic requisition is obedience to the lodge and conflict with the state; and if a member hesitates at this humiliating obedience, his heart must be 'torn from his bosom,' his 'vitals plucked from his body,' and Masonic vengeance, not satisfied with this bloody immolation, denies a resting place to the motionless remains, but they are to be 'burnt to ashes and scattered to the winds.'"

Samuel C. Pomeroy, in an address, 1833:—"There may be a broad distinction between the good and the bad in secret societies, but as they all alike have oath bound obligations to complete oblivion of all they do or say, I have no means of judging the good from the bad. So I turn away from them all to the great Teacher who said, 'In secret have I said nothing.'"

Judge Daniel H. Whitney, (renouncing Mason): While professed ministers of the Gospel and members of churches are permitted to associate themselves with these organizations, the task to apply a remedy will be a hopeless one; and just so long will the declaration made to me not long since by a high Mason and a worthy man prove true, that "a Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers—deacons and whoremasters—church members and gamblers—decent men and loafers—drunkards and rowdies, that the All Seeing-Eye ever looked down upon."

Hon. Samuel Dexter, in an even letter to the Grand Master of Mass., 1798: "If there be no very important reason for upholding Masonry at a moment like the present, there is a reason against it. The system of the destroyers of human virtue and happiness is to undermine in the dark the castle that cannot be carried by storm. Secret agency has overthrown all the republics of Europe, and an extended, secret, leveling, self-created society, without any valuable object of pursuit, and embracing bad characters as well as good, cannot be the subject of approbation of an anxious patriot."

Charles P. Sumner, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason:—Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed.

Horace Greeley:—Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not.

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.:—It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason.

Hon. Seth M. Gates, ex-Mason:—Profoundly convinced by long experience and observation that Freemasonry is an evil and pernicious institution. I wish once more to my advanced age to lift my warning voice publicly against it and all kindred organizations, and to beseech Christian men to have no connection or fellowship with them. Jesus is not, and cannot properly be recognized in Freemasonry. He must be ignored in the lodge-room, in its lectures, instructions, and in its prayers.

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont:—One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen, and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?

Gen. Henry Sewall, a companion of Washington:—I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this "perfect rule of faith and practice," during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its charity appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion deism because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity unsustainable; its titles fulsome; its rites barbarous and absurd; its oaths extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken, and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and inhuman.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SALT FOR THE THROAT.

In these days when diseases of the throat are so universally prevalent, and, in so many cases, fatal, we feel it our duty to say a word in behalf of a most effectual, if not positive, cure for sore throat. For many years past, indeed, we may say for the whole of a life of more than forty years, we have been subject to a dry, hacking cough, which is not only distressing to ourselves, but to our friends and those with whom we are brought into business contact. Last fall we were induced to try what virtue there was in common salt. We commenced using it three times a day—morning, noon and night. We dissolved a large tablespoonful of pure table salt in half a small tumblerful of water. With this we gargled our throat most thoroughly just before meal time. The result has been that during the entire winter we were not only free from coughs and colds, but the dry, hacking cough had entirely disappeared. We attribute these satisfactory results solely to the use of salt gargle, and most cordially recommend a trial of it to those who are subject to diseases of the throat. Many persons who have never tried the salt gargle have the impression that it is unpleasant, but after a few days' use no one who loves a nice, clean mouth, and first-rate sharpener of the appetite, will abandon it.—The Household.

SIMPLE CURES FOR FEET TROUBLES.

For Burning Feet—Soak them in hot, saturated solution of sodium carbonate for half an hour, once or twice daily.

For Chilblains—Equal parts of the oils of fireweed and of cajeput, applied locally.

For Bunions—Olive oil saturated with nitrate of potassa, applied on a compress at bedtime.—G. O. Fraser.

TEMPERANCE DAINTIES.

Ambrosia is thus made: Cut four bananas into small pieces, also six oranges. Add some grated pineapple. Cover with a syrup flavored with vanilla. Fill orange baskets. Shred the pineapple with a fork. Oranges and pineapples are so juicy that they can be used for filling the baskets without the addition of flavoring. The filling may be partially frozen, or Bavarian cream may be used, or jelly cut into blocks and laid into the basket, with a little whipped cream. For the syrup, use one tablespoon of water and one half cup of sugar.

Milk Sherbet.—Squeeze the juice of six lemons on four cups of sugar; put the skins with a pint of water on the fire, and let it simmer a few minutes. Scald two quarts of milk with two tablepoons of corn starch and one cup of sugar. When cold put in freezer, and when it begins to stiffen add the syrup of lemon juice and sugar, then freeze. This is more delicious than ice cream.—The Temperance Cause.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Beware of bad smells about the house; but remember it is not the smell itself that is dangerous, but what it is a sign of, and, therefore, try to discover and remove the cause of the smell, whether it be a leaky soil pipe, a foul sink or garbage box, a filthy cellar, or gutter, or yard, or what not.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

One of the quickest known ways of dispelling a headache is to give some of the muscles, those of the leg, for instance, a little hard, sharp work to do. The reason is obvious. Muscular exercise flushes the parts engaged in it, and so depletes the brain.—Prof. Wm. Blaikie.

When baking cakes, set a dish of water in the oven with them, and they will not be in much danger from scorching—Good Housekeeping.

Nails may be driven into hard wood without bending double if first dipped in lard or oil.

There is no excuse for any man to appear in society with a grizzly beard since the introduction of Buckingham's Dye, which colors a natural brown or black.

In a Peck of trouble—the woman who washes without Pearline. Her work is never done, and it's never done well. With Pearline she can do twice as much, and have it done better. There is little work, less wear, never the least harm. Try Pearline, and see it go for dirt; when you see dirt, go for Pearline.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 285 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

FARM NOTES.

PROFITABLE COW-KEEPING.

I have read an article in your valuable paper from Lizzie K. Bunker, in which she says, "Does it pay to keep cows?" and with your permission I will give your farmer readers the result of five cows milked from Jan. 1, 1891, to Jan. 1, 1892. Number of pounds of butter sold, 1,500; amount of money received for the same, $322.82, average price of butter for the year, 21½ cents; number of dollars per cow, $64 55. In this estimate I have kept no account of butter and cream used in our family, which consists of three and one hired hand, besides quite considerable of hired help in threshing, corn-cutting, and other work. The figures I have given are net profits. Some one will say: "How about the feed?" I have raised four fine calves on skimmed milk until they were about four months old, and when I quit feeding them I raised fifty-one pigs with a small amount of corn, milk, and middlings; so I think the growth of the calves and pigs has paid me pretty well for the feed consumed. The cows are all crossed with the Jerseys—some half-bloods, some one-fourths, and one full-blood. So I will say, with Lizzie Bunker, it does pay, if you have good cows, and keep them well. —Western Christian Advocate.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

The road question is now one of the great issues of the day. Of all civilized countries, the United States probably holds the palm for bad roads. The annual messages of governors of States have taken cognizance of the need for better roads; the roads of a district have been made a subject for indictment by a grand jury. In the daily papers we read of a mud blockade, when farmers were confined to their houses because the roads were impassable. Their produce was locked up, money became scarce, the local merchants suffered in their business, so that a local financial crisis was the effect of bad roads.

Occasionally it is found that people in a given district rise to the importance of this subject. In New Jersey, a group of adjoining counties have positively transformed the face of the country by constructing many miles of good road.

How far State or federal aid should be devoted to the end of securing good roads is a question for political economists. It seems clear that, without some such aid, the end will never be reached. In Europe, the state is the road-maker. The great carts of the French farmer with broad tires roll smoothly over splendid Telford surfaces, a tandem team drawing immense weights without painful effort. A parallel picture is presented in other countries, England and Italy among the rest.

The work of road improvement is being furthered by constant agitation, by publication of manuals on the subject, and by an excellently edited monthly magazine, published in this city.—Scientific American.

FLAX AND HEMP FIGURES.

According to a census bulletin the area devoted in 1889 to the production of flax in the United States was 1,318,698 acres. From this was realized 10,250,410 bushels of seed. The production of fiber was 241,389 pounds, the quantity of flax straw sold or so utilized as to have a determinable value was 217,757 tons, and the total value of all flax products was $10,436,228, or a trifle over $1 for each bushel of seed raised.

Flaxseed was grown in thirty-one States, but 80.06 per cent of the product was raised in Minnesota, Iowa, South Dakota and Nebraska. South Dakota had the largest acreage devoted to flax, and Minnesota the greatest production of seed, but Wisconsin had the highest average yield, 11.42 bushels per acre, and the highest average value of product per acre—namely, $13.39.

Throughout the greater portion of the flax-producing region the straw is of little or no value, and much of the so-called fiber is only an inferior quality of tow, chiefly used for upholstery, but it is noted that there are indications of a revival in the United States of a linen industry that will afford a market for fine flax fiber of domestic production, and revive a branch of agriculture that has been almost extinct for many years.

The total area devoted to the cultivation of hemp in 1889 was 25,054 acres, and the production of fiber 11,511 tons, which was valued at $1,102,602 to the producers. Kentucky produced 93.77 per cent of the total hemp crop of the country.

LABELS FOR EXHIBITS.

If you are going to make an exhibit of your farm products at the World's Fair, there are a few things you need to make a note of, for Chief Buchanan, of the Department of Agriculture, says that each exhibit of cereals must be accompanied by a statement in accordance with the following:

1. Name of object.
2. Name of producer.
3. Place where grown.
4. Character of soil.
5. Date of planting.
6. Quantity of seed planted per acre.
7. Method of cultivation.
8. Date of harvesting.
9. Yield per acre.
10. Weight.
11. Price of product at nearest home market.
12. Average temperature by months for the time intervening between planting and harvesting.
13. Was exhibit produced by irrigation?

A soft, fair skin is the result of pure blood and a healthy liver, to secure which, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the superior medicine. Ladies who rely upon cosmetics to beautify their complexions, should make a note of this, bearing in mind that they can't improve upon nature.

Mrs. Samuel Bushey, of Nickleville, Pa., was born in April, 1811, and died July 2, 1892, as she had lived, a consistent Christian, greatly beloved by her neighbors and acquaintances. Mr. Bushey feels her loss intensely and desires the prayers of the readers of the Cynosure.

The Chicago University authorities have succeeded in raising the sum of $1,000,000 required to secure an additional million from John D. Rockefeller. One million is to be added to the endowment, and the other will undoubtedly be used in bringing to perfection this latest university, which it is designed shall be second to none in the United States.

Bro. W. B. Stoddard, the Washington agent, who has been ill for nearly two months past, writes from Boston, Mass., last week, that his health is improving somewhat, he thinks. If he grows stronger soon, he expects to visit New Hampshire and Vermont in the latter part of this month. His Western friends are hopeful that his recovery may be speedy and thorough.

As we go to press the fifth annual "Christian Conference for Jews and Gentiles" is in progress at Mt. Washington, Chelsea, Mass., under the supervision of that firm evangelist, William F. Davis. This convention of Christian workers "is called in the name of Christ alone," and, so far as human foresight can determine at this time, promises, like its predecessors, to be a season of refreshing.

The newest of Chicago Directories indicates, by legitimate estimates, that the present population of this city is 1,420,000, or an increase during the past two years of 200,000. Chicago is therefore thought to be doing well; but a friendly cynic suggests that she is now old and large enough to do better, in many respects, than she is doing, or ever has done. Many good works has she performed, but there are many more things that she has left undone, and there is plenty of opportunity for instituting greater and more thorough reforms.

The Cynosure has many warm friends and interested readers in the South among both white and colored citizens. Some of the former, however, object to this paper's occasional references to the little value placed upon the lives of the Negroes and the summary and unlawful methods adopted for the punishment of their crimes. Since the war closed the Negro has become a fully-equipped citizen, and, as such, may justly claim a fair and impartial trial by his peers, whatever the enormity of his offense. What we object to, and so must every right-thinking man, is the slaying of the Negro without due process of law and the extraordinary and inhuman penalties inflicted upon him by gangs of organized ruffians, who deprive him of life on the slightest provocation. If he can receive a fair and impartial trial by his peers, under the protection of the proper legal authorities, the Cynosure will be satisfied.

By a curious coincidence, having been impressed by the appeals of the American prelates, the pope, about six months ago, designated for July, 1892, the relation of employers and workmen to be the subject of prayer this month. Through the machinery of this world-wide organization the printed formula for the month of July was distributed to every member on the last Sunday in June. In the midst of this prayerful appeal for the mutual material advancement of the working class and a more Christian regard by employers for the rights of the employed, rises up the grim specter of confusion, battle, murder and sudden death, arising out of the unfortunate labor riots at Homestead. It is an opportune time for the priests of the hierarchy and all lovers of the Prince of Peace to pray earnestly that the relations of capital and labor may be regulated by Divine wisdom and their respective adherents brought to their senses.

Labor Unions and red-handed Anarchists assembled in Chicago last Sunday and framed a series of revolutionary resolutions condemning Carnegie and Pinkerton, and expressing the sympathy of 20,000 members of their oath-bound secret clans for the striking workmen at Homestead. One of the resolutions adopted reads thus: "That we affirm the declaration that labor creates all wealth, that wealth belongs alone to its producers, and that therefore the mills and other property now in the possession of the Carnegie company is the rightful property of the workmen of Pennsylvania who produced it." Whatever shall be the outcome of this vindictive hostility to capital, the blame will rightly fall upon those who are sworn to coerce capitalists to employ them without reference to the rights of man and the laws that govern trade and manufacture. Every man in this country is a free agent, and can work or play at his option; but his right to swear vengeance upon any other men for employing whom they please, and at their own price, forfeits his own claims upon the privileges guaranteed to him by the Federal Constitution, and becomes an Anarchist—a traitor to every principle of national and personal freedom.

A writer in the New York Catholic Review, referring to the influence of Freemasonry upon religion, states that about three years ago, in Paris and Brussels, was published a history in French of the origin and foundation of Freemasonry and its establishment successively in European countries, by Paul Rosen, formerly "Very Illustrious Sovereign Grand Inspector General of the thirty-third degree of Freemasons." The work was approved by Pope Leo XIII., in a pontifical brief dated July 7, 1890, as a compendium of "very instructive information very useful for reference." The writer shows conclusively from documentary evidence that the persistent aim and efforts of Freemasonry in Europe are directed toward the destruction of the Christian religion and particularly of the Catholic church. This correspondent has been told that the obedience of the lodges in the United States is of the Scottish Rite, which is not so fiercely hostile to the Christian religion as the Grand Orient, which flourishes in France. Nevertheless, he says Past Grand Master Jas. W. Husted's open declaration, during the last session of the New York Legislature, of his unwavering hostility to freedom of worship, and his decided opposition to the passage of the bill conceding it, seem to indicate that the fraternity has little affiliation with orthodox institutions.—which is true.

REMINISCENCE OF JOHN BROWN.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

On a beautiful afternoon in May, a few years ago, while lecturing in Bates county, Mo., I visited the historic farm once owned by John Brown, the Abolition martyr. It is located just across the line in Kansas, five miles north of Trading Post, one of the oldest towns in the State. We reached it, from the east, by a winding road cut along the slope of a steep rocky bluff which rises one hundred feet from the bottom. The farm slopes off at the top of the bluff, where there is a large orchard, and a two-story house, with a stone basement, on the spot where Brown's cabin stood. Just in front, on the edge of the bluff, is a large spring, and the spot commands a fine view of the Missouri landscape, stretching off to the east.

It is manifest that Brown selected this spot for no ordinary purpose, for it was in 1857 when the border ruffian conflict was the hottest. The men who voted Kansas a free State were constantly in danger of being shot by prowling bands of pro-slavery Missourians. The owner of this farm, C. C. Hadsall, has the bill of sale which he obtained from John Brown, dated July 25, 1858. He took us through the orchard, in a northwest direction, to a steep ravine which runs up from the bottom about a quarter of a mile from the house. This memorable spot is called "Murderers' Hollow," or the scene of the "Hamilton Massacre."

Chas. A. Hamilton, a pro-slavery leader, who had settled on the Kansas side with his slaves, had been ordered by Brown's men to leave the country. He sought revenge by gathering about thirty of his men, on May 19, 1858; and, making a raid through Trading Post and its vicinity, he arrested eleven of Brown's men. He took them from the shop, store and cornfield and marched them to this ravine, and compelled them to stand in a row facing his men, who were stationed above them on the slope. At one end of the doomed row stood a Baptist minister named Reed. At the other end stood two brothers from Vermont, named Hall. It was an awful experience, as these men stood looking at the gleaming rifles aimed at them, their hair ruffled by the May breeze as it came laden with the fragrance of wild prairie flowers. The older Hall brother, who now keeps a store at Trading Post and from whose lips I obtained this narrative, said his thoughts were only of his younger brother at his side, whom he had induced to leave a dear home in Vermont a few months before, to venture his fortune in the West. They knew it was useless to make any plea for their lives. The only words spoken were by a farmer, Asa Hairgrove, who said: "If you are going to shoot, take good aim." But they had little time to reflect. Hamilton gave the order, "All ready! Fire!" The report of a dozen rifles rang out, and when the smoke cleared away the eleven men lay upon the grass. The elder Hall brother was not hit, but lay motionless feigning death. He heard the sound of horses' hoofs as the murderers rode away, but soon heard the voice of Hamilton saying to several who remained: "Some of those men are not dead," and ordered them to go down and shoot them the second time. One of them gave Hall a hard kick and left him for dead. He next put his musket to the younger Hall's head, when Hamilton ordered him to put it behind his ear, but the ball glanced off his cheek and passed out of his mouth. After shooting several of the others the second time, the murderers rode away.

The wounded Hall afterwards recovered, and is now a wealthy banker. Only five out of the eleven died. One of them, named Campbell, was shot through the bowels and entreated Hall to stay with him till the last, and gave him his dying message to his friends in the East. Several of Hamilton's men refused to fire because some of the men gave Masonic signs. The wives of several of the dying and dead came upon the scene, soon after, and their grief can better be imagined than described.

Two stones mark the line where these men stood, one at the lower, and one at the upper end of the row.

I plucked a pretty verbena blooming on the ground once wet with their blood.

Mr. Hadsall, who bought and occupied John Brown's claim that summer, and has occupied it ever since, told us that he had slept night after night that season with his blanket wrapped about him near the spot where these men fell, thinking it would be the safest place, on the principle that "lightning never strikes twice in the same place."

Several years ago the bodies of these victims were removed to the cemetery at Trading Post, where a beautiful monument of Vermont granite, costing $2,200, on which is inscribed their names, is placed over them. On one side are these two verses of Whittier's poem written when the news of the massacre reached New England:

From the hearths of their cabins,
The fields of their corn;
Unwarned and unweaponed,
The victims were torn:
By the whirlwind of murder,
Swooped up and swept on,
To a lone rocky glen,
On the John Brown farm.

Strong men of the prairies,
Mourn bitter and wild!
Wail, desolate women!
Weep, fatherless child!
But the grain of God springeth up,
From ashes beneath,
And the crown of his harvest
Is life out of death.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A CHRISTIAN NATION?

BY REV. J. W. WOOD.

There has been quite a symposium in the Cynosure, recently, as to whether not we are a Christian nation. I wish to add my might to the matter, for I do not believe that we are, in any Scriptural sense, a Christian nation.

Prophecy reveals to us a time when the whole world will be ruled in righteousness. This alone will make the nations of the earth Christian nations. God will then be king over all the earth.

In the book of Daniel this thing is all made plain. We read in chapter 2: 44: "And in the days of these kings (those represented by the ten toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand forever." In the dream, verse 34, it reads: "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them; and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Verse 44, given above, shows us that this is the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth.

The line of metals, beginning with gold and terminating in clay, represents all kinds of governments, beginning with the absolute despotism of Nebuchadnezzar and ending in absolute democracy.

They are all to be totally destroyed together before we have a Christian government on earth.

Paul says, in Rom. 13: 1: "The powers that be are ordained of God." This is true. All forms of human government are to have their opportunity of trial, but prophecy shows us plainly that none of them will rule righteously, for if they did, they would be perpetuated; for that is all that God requires of governments.

I will now show that he does require this, and if a nation fails in it, its doom is sealed.

If we turn to 2 Sam. 23: 1-4, we read: "Now these be the last words of David: David, the son of Jesse, said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel, said, the spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his word was in my tongue. The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me, He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain."

Here we have God's law for human governments; not David's; for the "Rock of Israel" issued the decree, and this "Rock" is Daniel's stone which smote the image that represented all the forms of successive human governments. They all have failed in God's requirements.

We have here the master-key by which to test all human governments. Anything short of this is described in verses 6 and 7: "But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands; but the man that shall touch them must be fenced with iron and the staff of a spear, and they shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place."

A man who has cleared off a brier patch and gathered the rubbish together with an old pitchfork, while wearing buckskin mittens to protect his hands, can see the force of this figure.

We now have God's conditions as to what a government must be, to be considered by him a Christian government. The Rock of Israel is here the judge for himself. The ruling in such a government must be "in the fear of God."

Let us test our own government by this rule. It persistently supported human slavery until by the judgment of Almighty God upon our whole people it was extinguished in blood.

Its principles are as eminently warlike as are those of our native Indians, the Turks, or the Zulus. In fact, the only dangerous nations on the globe to-day are the so-called Christian nations, and they are dangerous just about in proportion as they claim eminence in Christianity. They are about breaking down under their enormous war expenses in time of peace.

The recent conduct of our nation towards Chili savored more of the pugilistic bully than it did of Christian statesmanship.

Our government is one of the strongest supporters of the liquor traffic of any nation on earth. It persistently licenses the sale of intoxicants among its people, by which they are debauched from good citizenship, and become a burden on the body politic, weakening us as a nation, producing untold misery, and destroying the efficiency of its own children as citizens.

Is it a Christian mother who sells the virtue of her children for hire? Look at our Indian policy. Look at the corrupt means by which our national elections are carried, and look at the administration of our government in all municipalities where there are spoils of office worth contending for.

I can see reasons enough why God would not have his name appear in our national Constitution. It would be "taking his name in vain" to place it there.

As to swearing by his name, all Christians are told by the Master himself to "swear not at all" by any form of oath. A Christian's obligation to tell the truth is eternal and unalterable, and can neither be increased nor diminished.

It is a base thought that a Christian can be treated to some ceremony by which his obligation to tell the truth is increased. It is a Masonic device, and not a Christian one; and Christians have conquered the right to refuse to take it.

Now, to go back a little on the line of the governments which Paul said were "ordained of God." What has become of them? They have every one of them perished—have been wiped off from the face of the earth by the providence of God, and a score of revolutions have occupied their territories; and this because they did not fulfill the condition of "ruling in the fear of God." This must be the fate of all governments which do not fulfill God's eternal conditions, and no nation will do so, for all existing governments are cleared away as "sons of Belial" when the time comes for the kingdom of stone to be established.

Stone is the best material as yet found for the construction of enduring foundations; so Moses, in his celebrated song, which is yet to be sung in the New Jerusalem, in declaring God to his people, says (in Deut. 32: 4): "He is the Rock; his work is perfect, for all his ways are judgment; a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he."

The word is here spelled with a capital R, giving it personality, (and it is so spelled throughout the Scriptures) where it refers to God, but where it refers to the heathen deities it is spelled with a small r.

In Isa. 28: 16, we read: "Therefore I lay in Zion, for a foundation, a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation; he that believeth shall not make haste."

On this stone we are to be built, with no crooked nor bulging walls; for "judgment will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overthrow the hiding place." So Christ, who is the Rock, says in Matt. 7: 24: "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him to a wise man which built his house upon a rock."

Paul describes Christ as the chief corner-stone of the Christian temple, and he shows us, in 1 Cor. 3: 11, that men will build with very worthless material on this precious corner, and will thereby suffer loss even though they may themselves be saved.

It is evident that this stone kingdom of Daniel's will be built upon Christ; so it will be a Christian government; and it is stated that all human governments will be swept away when it comes.

Let us now go back again, and look at the kingdom of Israel, which was established by the Almighty in a more particular sense than any other kingdom has been since the world began. David spent his life in consolidating the kingdom, and at his death it was delivered over quietly to Solomon, who built the Temple which was honored by the visible presence of God. Here was a kingdom which presented favorable conditions for perpetuity; for God could be consulted personally on all subjects concerning its welfare. It was subject to only one condition: That the king must "rule in the fear of God." Solomon did not do this to the end of his reign, and, in this, he laid the foundation for the kingdom's ruin. At his death Rehoboam declared for a more tyrannical rule than Solomon's, and the kingdom was at once dissevered, and its glory taken away.

In David's prophecy, recorded in 2 Sam. 23, he foresaw this result; for he says, in verse 5: "Although my house be not so with God (i. e., did not rule in his fear), yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things and sure, for this is all my salvation and all my desire, although he make it not to grow."

This everlasting covenant is to be fulfilled in Christ, when the stone kingdom is established in the earth.

This is still in the future, and the clearest sign of its near approach is the growing evidence of the insufficiency of human rule to establish a kingdom in righteousness. Our country exhibits the last and the wisest attempt of the clay power to establish such a government.

There are many things in sight in our land which are alarming to patriots of every name.

Prominent in this respect is the constant encroachment of capital, and the resentful attitude of labor.

There is no commodity of earth which is needful for men, which is not arrested on its way from the producer to the consumer by some syndicate or trust, and manipulated by adulteration, or in some other way by which an unwarranted tax is levied on the consumer, which goes to swell the profits of the trust. The only limit to this is the satiety of human greed.

Our Lord speaks of a time, just on the verge of his coming, in these words: "Men's hearts falling them for fear and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth."

If this Scripture does approach a fulfillment now, then we may know that the stone kingdom is drawing very near. It is only waiting for the collapse of the human, so that men may hail with joy the coming of the divine. Then will the nations of the earth be ruled by Christian governments.

Baraboo, Wis.

LONG AGO.

BY MRS. A. E. KELLOGG.

The many eulogies pronounced upon President Blanchard since he entered into rest, have recalled to my memory scenes and incidents in which he took a conspicuous part; the simple statement of which to this generation seems like romance, because they cannot understand the conditions which existed half a century ago. Take, for example, the revival scenes of that early time when such a wave of divine influence swept over the land as caused pentecostal ingatherings, which made the world pause and wonder, then gradually to take their places, some in violent and wicked opposition, others in cold criticism, while others, and among them the strongest and the wisest, were stricken with such a sense of sin and need of pardon as made them ready to cry out as in apostolic days: "Men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" The men whom God used as agents in conducting the work were as much astonished at the power manifested as those who were looking on.

Not long since my attention was arrested by an article on church progress, which strongly advocated steady growth, rather than revival methods; and the writer strengthened his position by casting discredit upon the revivals of those early times. I am very sure that the writer, if a true Christian, is not seventy years old, and must have gathered his information from a prejudiced source; for certainly the revivals of those days gave to the church men and women whose piety was of the stalwart kind, ready to do and to dare for the right. One thing which stamped these revivals as the genuine work of God's Spirit was his powerful office work upon human hearts, impressing them with a sense of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Christians felt the value of human souls, and sinners saw themselves lost. They were ready to ask the prayers of any who had an interest at the throne of grace. Methods were adopted, of necessity, which afterward became like the brazen serpent, something to conjure with; and, like that, a snare to be laid aside as useless.

There was, doubtless, chaff among the wheat; and afterward many, like the "seven sons of one Sceva, a Jew," sought to produce the results by outward methods which can only be wrought by God's Holy Spirit. And so, from time to time, from those days to the present, there have been spurious revivals from the same cause. But the wonderful revivals of those days, which have not been repeated since, left their impress upon a generation. Among the last to pass over to the higher life may be numbered President Blanchard; and now only here and there one is found remaining to deplore the fact that the church has drifted so far away from the standard of those times, when every Christian family had an altar around which parents and children gathered for worship; when the door into the church only admitted those who gave evidence of regeneration; when the words of Christ to Nicodemus had a meaning as deep and broad as when first spoken; when to unite with the church meant to come out from the world and to be separate from its fashions, its follies, and its sins. A Christian at a card-table, in a ball-room, in a theater, or at a horse-race, would have been disgraced. A Christian traveling on the Sabbath, reading secular papers or magazines on that holy day, would have grieved and offended the brethren. And the world had such a sense of sin, or of the fitness of things, that they judged Christians as severely as they judged each other. Were Christians happy so restricted?—was Christ's yoke light when it imposed such obligations? If they were not, it was because they had not learned of the meek and lowly One. Those with whom I had acquaintance were the happiest Christians I have ever known. Conversation had not become a lost art, and there was no lack of themes.

Such were the conditions in which President Blanchard's early Christian life became established; and being himself of the stuff of which heroes and martyrs are made, we see how he grew into what he was. When God has a great work to do which he intends to accomplish by human means, he chooses and fits his instruments.

At this time, among a people boasting of their liberty, human slavery had reached the zenith of its power. It was inwoven into our commercial relations; it overshadowed our homes; it controlled our government, and gave tone to our social life, in the North almost as much as in the South. Labor was considered servile; and when from any cause a lady found it necessary to do anything by which to earn an honest living, she forfeited her claim to be called a lady, and lost her place in polite society. But the mills of God were grinding, and the way of the slaves was being prepared, and they felt an impulse toward freedom. Slaveholders grew suspicious, and made the bondage heavier. The "underground railroad" was established, and the slave learned how to find the North star, and from the "land of the free and the home of the brave," poor, scared, hunted creatures escaped to the land of real freedom; for when their feet touched British soil, from being things they became men and women.

Soon the voices of strong men and women were heard, and among them President Blanchard. But iniquity framed into a law is not easily conquered. The champions of human freedom were despised as fanatics; and there was no degree of obloquy to which they were not subject. The condition of the African savage, contrasted with the domestic slave, was so presented, together with the curse of Canaan and the servitude of Abraham's people, and the return of Onesimus by Paul, that people were confused, and excellent Christians honestly believed that the institution was an ordinance of God profitable alike to master and slave, and worthy to be perpetuated and made universal; therefore, any one who interfered with it by word or deed was an incendiary scattering firebrands, arrows and death in peaceful communities;—while those who had enlisted for its destruction by looking long and steadily at the present horrors and possibilities which the underlying principle presented, were made bitter by such arguments, and many of the early Abolitionists rejected Christianity and went over to human infidelity. Broader men, like President Blanchard, stood even in that evil day against the wiles of the devil, who was using the fiery zeal for righteousness to his own advantage, and thereby recruiting his panic-stricken hosts. It seems to be a fact that ordinarily persons taking up any special line of reform in this world of sin, become dogmatic and severe toward those who differ from them. Looking steadily and long at one form of sin causes it to assume blinding proportions, so that the ordinary reformer becomes a person of one idea, sharp and incisive in thought and action, like the woodman going forth with wedge and beetle to split the oaken log or to cleave the granite block; and to them it is a condition of success. But there are those who cannot be thus narrowed, who nevertheless set in operation causes which bore into the heart of towering evils and at the right time break them in pieces with the dynamite of invincible argument. Such a reformer was President Blanchard, as witness his controversy with Dr. Rice. While earnest as an Abolitionist, he did not abate one whit his hatred of other forms of sin, or his ardor in preaching the Gospel of the Prince of Peace, whose advent into the world was to send a sword, that his kingdom should be first pure, and then peaceable. Do the sentimental preachers of our day remember this, who are trying to coax sinners away from the devil by prating of love until the "great and dreadful God" is made to appear as a soft-hearted being with but one attribute, one who is watching and waiting for his creatures to condescend to accept his love even if they do not care to assume his yoke of service? As if there were no "gall of bitterness" or "bonds of iniquity." As if Christ had not said,

"Ye must be born again." Ah! it will be a day of surprises when he whose fan is in his hand shall thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into his garner, leaving the chaff, with the tares, to the fire. True, some of the plants which grow among the wheat bear beautiful flowers, but they go into the fire just the same; they are not wheat.

President Blanchard preached no partial Gospel. But he was "a workman who needed not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," giving to each a portion in due season, bringing forth out of his treasury things new and old,—the oil of joy for the mourning penitent, and the garment of praise for those whose spirits were heavy for sin. He brought forth, also, at need, the fire and the hammer which break the flinty rock in pieces. He was, therefore, ready for the temperance reform, and the insidious form of evil to which he gave the last years of his useful life—oath-bound secrecy, which is eating out the spirituality of the churches, lurking everywhere to catch the unwary. His individuality was something to admire and to imitate; going forward alone, if need be; never asking what will men say, but what does God require? He makes one think of Noah, standing alone a preacher of righteousness against a world of violence and blood; or of Abram, alone against a world of idolatry, alert to hear, and quick to obey the voice of his God; or of Elijah, against all the priests and prophets of Baal, with Ahab and Jezebel to uphold and defend them. He lived to hear liberty proclaimed to the captive, and the opening of prison doors to them that were bound. But his work was not done, and he girded himself for new conquests. The prince of evil saw in the very conflict which set the slave at liberty a grand opportunity to further his Satanic designs: as if the fires of hell had been stirred up to seven-fold intensity to supply the fiery streams of death which deluged the camp and the field, so that many young men who went forth in the glory of their young manhood came back debauched and ruined, to be either a customer or keeper of a saloon. And so the cause of temperance was set back fifty years. Surely the devil "goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour;" but he does not always roar! his transformations are marvelous; he knows how to coil himself around his victim like the venomous serpent. He knows how to present himself as an "angel of light," though he be the prince of darkness. So the true soldier of the cross can never lay aside his armor until he enters upon the rest which remains to the people of God.

Therefore, we see that the present as well as the past calls for heroic men and women, skillful in the use of all the weapons found in the armory of the Gospel, for the church of Christ is not yet triumphant. What lessons for the true soldier of the cross may be learned, from considering the well-rounded life and service so lately finished here, to be resumed without weariness or bitterness in the glorious hereafter.

COLLEGE RUFFIANISM.

The recent painful death of a young man in New Haven, a student of Yale College, as a result of the brutal pranks of one of the secret societies of that college, is only another evidence of the extent to which downright ruffianism prevails among the students of many American colleges. Yale College, in proportion to its numbers, is probably not worse than Harvard or any other of the popular colleges. The colleges of the North Atlantic States, so far at least as newspaper reports go, seem to be the worst, and yet this excellence in evil may only be in seeming, because they come more conspicuously under the public gaze through this greater enterprise of the reporters of this region. With equal opportunities there is apparently little to choose between them.

Why these college students should in such large numbers take instinctively to blackguardism it is hardly necessary to inquire. Everyone knows that many of these young men are college students merely because their parents, for one reason or another, came into the possession of wealth not previously enjoyed by them; the sudden acquirement of wealth does not change a boor, or his son, into a gentleman. The rage for athleticism too has had a great deal perhaps to do with this. Like most good things, athletics has been occasionally overdone. The fine old maxim, mens sana in corpore sano, has been abused to mean "brutal brawn is better than a bright brain." The gilded offspring of brazen capitalists have apparently been led to believe that tough sinews would more than atone for a hardened conscience.

But what about the teaching bodies of these colleges? Have they no responsibilities for these outrages on decency and humanity? Can the Faculty of Yale College, for instance, feel no burden of conscience for the death of this young man, who was a student committed to their care to be taught those things that belong to what is called a "liberal education?" Is it a part of a liberal education for a young man, a boy just from home and from his father's and mother's love, to be pushed through the public streets by a band of hoodlums, whose parents, through an accident, are able to dress them well and send them to college, and be driven mercilessly by these young savages—"Yale men," they are called—to death? What better are these fellows, these "secret society," or "Greek-letter" young ruffians, than the young brutes of the Sioux Indians who tortured to death the prisoners taken by their fathers from Custer's column at the battle of the Little Big Horn?—Catholic Review.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 6, 1892.

Washington will be represented by nearly, if not quite, 500 people at the eleventh annual convention of that greatest of evangelical societies, the Christian Endeavor, which begins in New York City to-morrow and closes its sessions next Sunday. The regular delegates from the Washington societies go on special trains, but there will be a large attendance of individual members, as reduced tickets have been on sale by the railroads for some time. The attendance at the convention is expected to be between 30,000 and 40,000.

No non-sectarian movement in the Christian world has ever shown such rapid growth as the Christian Endeavor. The idea of the organization was conceived by Rev. Francis E. Clark, of Portland, Maine, as a means of interesting the young people of his church in religious work. The society was first organized in that city February 2, 1881, and for a time after other churches took up the idea the young societies were conducted independently of each other; but in June 1882, when there was a total membership of 481, it was decided to organize a general society, with branches everywhere. Now note the steady growth each year. In 1883, it had 2,870 members, in 1884, 8,905, in 1885, 10,964, in 1886, 50,000, in 1887, 140,000, in 1888, 300,000, in 1889, 500,000, in 1890, 660,000, in 1891, more than 1,000,000, and it is expected that reports made at the coming convention will show the present membership to be fully 1,500,000.

Ex-Gov. St. John, of Kansas, who presided over the recent Prohibition National Convention, at Cincinnati, is at present in Washington, in the interest of temperance legislation by Congress.

Rev. Julian Soper, a returned missionary from Japan, occupied a local pulpit on Sunday night, and, in place of a regular sermon, told a large congregation something about the progress of Christianity, in spite of great obstacles, in that country; how hard it is to convince the Japanese that the religion of Christ is better than that of Confucius, and how the missionaries have to show it by their methods of living before the natives can be convinced. Intemperance has been called the national curse of Japan; Mr. Soper says the native temperance workers agree in admitting that the Christian churches are much more successful in their temperance work than the native societies, that rely merely upon the personal stamina of their members for the keeping of their vows. It was pleasant to hear him say that the bitter feeling which has for seven or eight years existed in Japan against all foreigners is now rapidly dying out, and that the missions are regaining the ground they lost by reason of that anti-foreign feeling. Mr. Soper says there are now at least forty native congregations which wholly support their own ministers, and he predicts that within twenty-five years there will be established a self-supporting Japanese Christian church, which will have a powerful influence upon all eastern nations.

I was shown a list of ministers who have accepted invitations to fill the pulpit of Rev. Dr. Bartlett, who left for Europe last week, during his absence, and it appeared to me that his congregation ought to consider itself fortunate in being able to hear so many distinguished pulpit orators in the course of one summer. Here is the list: Rev. Dr. Horton, of Providence, R. I.; Rev. George Sexton, of St. Catharines, Ontario; Rev. Henry Elliott Mott, of Dubuque, Iowa; Rev. Dr. W. D. Buchanan, of New York City; Rev. Dr. W. H. Roberts, of Cincinnati, Ohio; Rev. Dr. R. S. Green, of Orange, New Jersey; Rev. Dr. G. D. Nichols, of Binghamton, New York, and Rev. Dr. O. S. Dean, of Boston.

President and Mrs. Harrison, accompanied by Mrs. Dimmick, their daughter, and Lieutenant and Mrs. Parker, left here to-day for Loon Lake, in the Adirondacks, where Mrs. Harrison will spend the summer. The President will return next week to remain until Congress adjourns. *

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, July 3, 1892.

Why is it that so few men are in our churches? This was the theme of a paper, last week, at the Maine Conference of Congregational churches. Rev. Albert Donnell, the author, gave as one cause: "The men have been drawn away by secret societies." That State is full of them. That the church is weakened by this foe to her spiritual life is a conspicuous fact. "Three-quarters of your congregation are Masons," was once said to a young pastor there, who dared to say at the start that he was not a member of any secret order. He ignored these secret societies without opposing them; but he soon found opposition from this source and had but a few years' pastorate. His second pastorate was under the same conditions. When an invitation to join a lodge was declined, friction arose, and two years ended his work there. How long shall the body of Christ, the church, be fettered and weakened by this unholy alliance with the world? To bring conviction to the hearts and consciences of Christians, may the Cynosure long continue its work of reform in this most vital matter.

The killing of a Yale College student a few weeks since, elicited the severest censure of the faculty on the part of the newspapers. The Witness suggested that if young men wished to become barbarians, a course among our American savages might be taken at less expense than a college course at New Haven. This was a harsh remark—at least, it was hard on the Indians. But the brutal assault on one of the instructors, the past week—a second assault, too—shows the severest criticism of the college authorities to be justly called for. Fifty drunken students made a midnight attack, demolishing the door, and then demanding again Mr. Moore's person. Last year they dragged him from his room in his night clothes, and made him execute a dance around a bonfire on the campus. This last attack on Tutor Moore was the boldest that has occurred at Yale in recent years. Not only was the door of his room broken in, but while the invaders were in the building a number of others were outside, pelting stones at his windows, every one of which they smashed. Believing his life in danger, the tutor fired over their heads a loaded revolver. The cowards fled.

A letter in the Tribune, a few days ago, looks at college life to-day from another direction, and the writer wishes to know what a college is good for if it is not to train men, and in pursuits befitting their sex, rather than in habits better suited to a Sybarite or hermaphrodite. He thinks that Columbia is disgraced by her college theatricals, in which the students show "disgraceful effeminacy in petticoats and corsets and ribbons, rouged and simpering like an androgyne, reciting a vapid burlesque borrowed from a London theater, rehearsals being had nightly, even Sundays." This shameful perversion of time, week after week, which parents and patrons suppose to be given to scholarly pursuits, is shown to be not only wasteful of time and treasure, but demoralizing to character. It is hoped that this earnest protest will have its effect on the college management. The whole matter of college life in its relations to modern citizenship needs a careful study.

The first Convocation of Public Readers and Elocutionists, from all over the Union and Canada, closed a six days' session to-day at Columbia. A permanent body was formed, called the National Association of Elocutionists. About 250 were enrolled, and it was a representative body, full of enthusiasm, which continued to the close. Bishop Potter offered prayer at the beginning, followed by a welcome from Pres. Hunt, of the N. Y. Board of Education. A score of papers followed, some of which were of great value, but cut short in some cases on account of the pressure of time. The great error in its management was the disproportionate time given to recitations, largely of poetry, by the women present, which, with music, took up all the evenings and too much of the days. Some recitals were excellent and some wretched. The next meeting, at Chicago, will profit by this blunder. Time is too costly to spend in saying pieces as if at a school declamation, particularly when important topics and able experts are put aside to make room for the exhibition. OCCASIONAL.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

I addressed a good audience of very attentive people at the German Methodist Episcopal church on Ashland Avenue and Tell Place, Chicago, on Sabbath evening last. Pastor Katzner and his people generally express warm sympathy with the work of the Association. They have little experience with the secret orders, except to avoid them and keep a pure communion. On the Sabbath previous, July 3, I spoke at four services in Summerdale, in the north part of Chicago. In the evening I addressed the Congregational church on the N. C. A. work. A number of secret society members were present, one of whom acknowledged the correctness of the speaker's view of lodge worship. Bro. E. B. Wylie, the young pastor of this flock, is greatly esteemed by his people. He speaks frankly to them, privately and from the pulpit, of the dangers of secretism, and followed the address of the Secretary with a few eloquent words confirming it. H. L. K.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, July 5, 1892.

New England is not remiss in the observance of historic events. Holidays are of more frequent occurrence than in any other part of the country of which I have knowledge. Yesterday being the "glorious Fourth," the Pilgrim City was "full of sound and fury." As "low twelve," Sabbath, approached, an occasional "cracker" gave notice of impatient urchins charged for the fray, and when the clock struck the hour of release, horns, cannons and scores of bells announced to startled sleepers the advent of the one hundred and sixteenth anniversary of American independence. The day itself was faultless—cool, calm and cloudless—and the eager throngs from crowded tenements and rustic hamlets gathered early on the "old Common" for a day of "merry-making," prolonged into the hours beyond the evening shadows. The balloon ascension, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, is reported as exceptionally fine; but its descent into the Bay fifteen minutes later, resulting in the drowning of two of the three occupants, was one of the sad features of the day. Elaborate fireworks were the feature of the evening, and from 8 to 10 o'clock the city was ablaze with pyrotechnics of every conceivable description. Viewed from the roof of our eight-story hotel, it was a most brilliant panorama, unsurpassed by anything of the kind I had ever witnessed.

During my absence in Kentucky arrangements had been made for a little company to picnic at the Pines, and thus escape from the noise and bustle of the city for a part of the day. Before "high twelve" a company of twenty-seven congenial spirits found their way to this rocky, romantic height, shadowed by stately pines, and as quiet as a country churchyard. Commissaries deposited, hammocks swung, and both old and young entered with zest into the spirit of "Independence," celebrating our natal day in their own "sweet way." An occasional policeman on his "round" served as a reminder that we were still under protection of the "city fathers," while merry voices from a distance, and here and there a passer-by, gave the comforting assurance that we were still within the "pale of civilization." Anticipating good appetites, a bountiful repast had been provided, which proved to be largely in excess of the capacity even of the hungry guests gathered around a common center of special interest. After uniting with Bro. Daniel Powers in thanksgiving to the "Author of liberty and of every good and perfect gift," the injunction, "Do with thy might what thy hand findeth to do," was accepted by common consent as the order of the day.

Dinner over and everybody full and happy, an informal talk came next on the program. Nearly all took part in a kind of free and easy class-meeting exercise, each choosing his own theme and presenting it in his own way. The excellencies, defects and the dangers to our Republic were, of course, the central thought, and around this were grouped the perils from Romanism, secretism, immigration, wealth, intemperance, and ignorance, while it seemed to be conceded that the "secret empire," by stimulating pride, vain displays and false worship, polluting the fountains of justice by treasonable oaths, and shielding every form of evil under its blighting shadow, was the most subtle and dangerous foe that our nation has to encounter. In harmony with this sentiment, Sister Powers read the following poem, entitled, "Death, Burial and Resurrection of a Mason at Midnight Initiation:"

'Twas low twelve in the lodge that night;
The man was dead, and out of sight,
While his companions, in their grief,
Mourned for their master Hiram Abiff.

'Twas by three ruffians' hands he died—
Jubala, Jubalo and Jubulum;
"Oh, Lord my God," the Master cried,
"Is there no help for the widow's son?"

Then rose that doleful funeral dirge,
As round and round the grave they bare,
With measured tread and mournful word,
They plant the sprig of cassia there.

Most solemn hour! O dreadful night!
Was there no power on earth to save
A reverend from this awful plight,
Of fifteen days within the grave?

To raise him from this low estate,
Endued with immortality,
They kneel around the candidate,
Masonically on one knee;

Invoking God to raise the dead—
A reverend brother it may be,
Who once was to the Saviour led,
The blessed Lamb of Calvary.

For shame on all this mocking farce,
This murder-play of Hiram Abiff,
Blaspheming God before his face
And reveling in the blackest guilt.

The speeches were interspersed with "psalms and hymns," and patriotic songs; and after prayer the happy company dispersed to their homes, with gratitude to God for his abounding goodness to our nation, to cherish pleasant memories of the "Pines," and the "glorious Fourth" of 1892.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

AT SYCAMORE, ILL.

On the 21st of June I visited Sycamore and called on Rev. H. D. Hunter, pastor of the Congregational church, who gave me a list of the ministers in Elgin Association. He said his church, before he came, had been rent asunder by the question of secretism; and it seemed to be dead. When it was started again, it was upon the condition that nothing should be said, either way, on the subject of secretism; and a portion of the former members refused to return and affiliate with Freemasons. I gave him Joseph Cook on "Disloyal Secret Oaths."

There are seven churches in Sycamore having acting pastors. Two of the ministers I learned were Masons—the Episcopal and the Universalist; but I did not see them. The pastor of the M. E. church treated me very politely, but did not seem to be interested in our reform work. I gave him Dr. Carradine's great sermon, "Are Secret Societies a Blessing or a Curse?" I called on Rev. Mr. Frickman, the Lutheran minister, who was interested and approved of the work of the National Christian Association.

Rev. Mr. Swanson is pastor of a Swede Baptist church here, and he and his people are decidedly opposed to secret lodges and orders. The acting pastor of the regular Baptist church is a very promising young man, who appears to be starting out right on matters of reform. His name is Rev. W. A. Sharp.

It is evident that there is a wide departure from American ideas and pure Gospel practice among the prominent churches and people of this prosperous town, many of whom have fallen in with, and made use of the lodge. But there are many earnest Christian people who utterly reject secretism in every form.

AT BELVIDERE.

On the 29th ult. I was at Belvidere, Ill., and called on the Rev. I. Sprague, minister of the F. M. Society. He is much interested in our reform work, and kindly entertained me. I found the Rev. Mr. Wilmath, pastor of the German Methodists, opposed, also, to the secret lodge. The Rev. Mr. Kohn, Lutheran, was not in when I called; but I understand that he, too, rejects everything connected with secretism.

There is no Congregational church in Belvidere; but the Presbyterian pastor told me, when I called on him, that the clergy of the place were all favorable to Masonry. I told him that I had already conversed with two who were not. He then said: "I am a Mason, my brother is a Mason, my father was a Mason and my grandfather was a Mason." The two Baptist ministers in the place were at that time attending their Association, so that I did not see them.

The M. E. minister told me that he was a member of two secret life insurance societies; but he utterly refused to discuss the propriety of secretism in any of its forms. Upon the whole, the outlook in Belvidere for the advancement of a pure unadulterated Gospel is not encouraging.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BEREA COLLEGE, KY.

OBERLIN, Ohio, July 5, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Your readers cannot fail to be interested in Berea College, both on account of its remarkable history, and eminent success in educational and Christian work, but especially because it has stood faithful to all Christian reforms, not omitting an earnest opposition to the secret lodge system.

By the terms of its charter it was to be "opposed to slavery, caste and sectarianism," and its founders built more wisely than they knew. It has been not less opposed to the liquor traffic than to the lodge system.

Unfortunately, but not unnaturally, its practical management has been somewhat in advance of its constituency. Being especially designed for the education of the poor, and putting its terms of board and tuition at the lowest possible figure, it has had to appeal largely to Christian benevolence for its support. Quite freely this support has come from the conservative churches of New England; and when opposition to sectarianism was defined to be "opposition to all that divides the body of Christ," its application was seen to be broader than was apparent from the language. When some special emphasis was put on the sin of schism as involved in sect-building, those Christians who either had no conception of a church except as a sect, or who were altogether hopeless as to any solution of the great problem of Christian unity, began to be alarmed. They felt, as did the silversmiths of Ephesus, that their craft was in danger. This feeling had been gathering strength for some time, but it was not until Mr. Fee published his autobiography, last fall, that it became markedly apparent. When he declared his purpose (not a new one) neither to belong to a sect, nor to participate in any work, however excellent in other respects, that had sect-building as one of its objects, and that he could not teach otherwise, it was assumed that he must have some secret purpose of making a sect of his own, and that in any case the college must be saved from the influence of such teaching. Though Mr. Fee earnestly disclaimed making anybody but himself responsible for his personal opinions, it was assumed that the views expressed in his autobiography were the doctrines taught in Berea College.

The result was, that certain individuals at the East, without any consultation with the trustees or prudential committee of the college, undertook to correct what doubtless seemed to them to be an improper "drift," and to so define the term "opposed to sectarianism" that it should not mean opposition to denominational divisions, and that all aggressive opposition to sects as such should cease. To this end they issued a private circular and employed an agent to visit the principal donors to the college, requesting them to give only on certain conditions. The avowed purpose was to put Berea on precisely the same footing as Oberlin and Amherst, namely, to be nominally undenominational, but non-committal in reference to denominationalism. They do not seem to have considered that by so doing they practically defecated one of the great purposes for which the college was chartered, and that it would make Berea practically a Congregational institution and only nominally independent. Well, the trustees met, and, after a four-days' struggle, in which the money argument was the most potent influence, the reactionary party barely triumphed. They elected two trustees who are Congregational ministers of unobjectionable character, but who manifestly represent the reactionary spirit, opposed alike to the oft-declared principles of the college, and to the convictions of some of its devoted supporters.

Meantime Pres. Wm. B. Stewart, who for two years has so ably and so acceptably administered, is forced to retire, and Mr. John G. Fee, to whom more than to any one else the college owes its existence and past prosperity, is practically "counted out," at least so far as official influence is concerned.

Prof. Frost, of Oberlin, who, three years ago, was unanimously elected to the presidency and declined to serve, was re-elected, but whether he will now accept the position remains to be seen. Without reflecting on the motives of those who have taken this strange method of changing the administration of a college, I cannot but think that a great wrong has been done to Mr. Fee, to President Stewart, and to the college. They may be able to secure larger donations, but some who have borne this institution on their hearts and in their prayers will be sadly perplexed.

H. H. HINMAN.

RELIGIOUS COMPROMISE.

IRON HILLS, Iowa, 1892.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—There are thousands of Christians living in this century who have no knowledge of any effort ever being made to harmonize Protestantism with the Roman Catholic church; but, nevertheless, we find that the adherents of Luther and Zwingli were called upon in the city of Augsburg, in the year A. D. 1530, to reconcile themselves with the papal throne of Rome. The emperor Charles V. and the ambassador of the pope met face to face with the representatives of the Reformers, with other ministers of kings, and bishops of the Roman empire, at the Diet of Augsburg, to settle the great agitation and controversy which spread all over Europe, through the liberty Luther and Zwingli had taken and were preaching on doctrines of faith and the Bible. Both parties realized that blood would flow freely if a compromise should prove to be a failure.

The emperor expected, and Rome demanded, that Protestants should yield to the majority and power which was able to draw the sword against the feeble band of worshipers and which could annihilate them in a short time. A more prudent policy was resorted to in choosing seven Protestants and seven Catholics to arrange peace and harmony. These peace commissioners, or referees, were in session from Aug. 16 until Sept. 9 in 1530. Protestants made concessions, and so also did the servants of Rome in the beginning; but the cardinals of Rome and the pope vetoed such measures of reconciliation and demanded an unconditional surrender. The two leading Reformers had labored already, at that time, twenty-four years in the ministry before this great crisis took place in Augsburg.

The Revelation of St. John recorded this turning period of history in the eleventh chapter, pointing to the anti-Christian and heathenish enemies which endeavored to prevent a Reformation, in saying, verses 1-4: "And there was given me a reed like unto a rod; and the angel stood, saying, Rise and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not, for it is given unto the Gentiles; and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand, two hundred and three-score days, clothed in sackcloth. These are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth."

The next two verses tell us that they were to be endowed with spiritual powers through which they were to subdue their enemies and to silence them in this manner.

The 1,260 weeks cover a period of near twenty-four years. The three and a half weeks, or twenty-four days, wherein Protestantism was nearing its sepulchre before the representative of nations in the city was graphically foretold in verses 7-10 to wit: "And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them and kill them. And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which, spiritually, is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified. And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and a half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth."

Faithful Protestants, far and near from the city, lamented and mourned over the prospect of the burial of the Protestant doctrine. Luther wrote that he would not submit to such a compromise with Rome. Merle D'Aubigne, the historian of the Reformation, does not say whether letters of rejoicing were sent out from the city from the Roman representatives or "they of the people" or not, but the cheerfulness which prevailed on the Roman side was certainly not confined to the city alone, when the whole Roman empire felt and realized the torment and accusation of these two witnesses against the papacy for nearly twenty-four years.

Verse 11: "And after three days and a half the Spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell on them which saw them."

Romanists in the city were astonished to see this feeble band rejecting all the councils and persuasions for submission and obedience in the mother church after the three and a half weeks or twenty-four days were ended. Reformers came very near kissing the feet of the pope, but they stood upon their feet again in faith toward their Lord Jesus Christ.

The 13th verse gives seemingly the end of these two witnesses in referring to an earthquake and other events which would occupy too much space to explain here. An earthquake shook the mountains of Switzerland Oct. 10, 1531. The Reformer Zwingli was killed the day following.

B. EISENTRAUT.

THE RELATIVE POWERS OF CHURCH AND STATE.

NEWARK, Ohio, June 15, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was my privilege to have an interview with Rev. J. W. Walden, D. D., pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of this place. He called my attention to a lecture by Rev. Dr. Robinson, of Louisville, Ky. A few items from it may interest your readers:

Athanasius settled the theology of the church; Augustine, the anthropology, and Luther and Calvin, the soteriology; but the ecclesiology is yet to be settled.

There are four theories of church order—the Papal, the Guinglian, the Lutheran, and the Calvinistic.

His definition of the church is three-fold: The Invisible—all who were given to Christ in the eternal counsel of God; the Visible—a society made up of all who profess Christ; and the Organic body, officered by her Head.

There are four positions taken: 1. All power in the church is directly from Christ. 2. Christ has delegated this authority to the church organically. 3. The mode of administration is only through tribunals. 4. The civil and ecclesiastical are mutually separate and distinct.

Under this last position he evolves five propositions:

1. Civil power is from the God of nature; ecclesiastical power is from Christ.

Now, while it is true that civil government originates in nature, and the church in grace, it is also true that nature has been subjected to the Lord Jesus Christ. He has been made head over all things to his church. Civil government is included in the mediatorial dominion of the Lord Jesus Christ.

2. The rule of the state is the light of nature and reason; the rule of the church is the Bible.

That proposition is misleading and untrue. Nature and reason are guides in matters of state, but they are altogether insufficient. The law was originally written on man's heart; but sin destroyed that handwriting. A republication of that law was necessary. Hence the law given at Sinai. Accordingly we find precepts in the Bible addressed to individuals, to families, to nations, to the church. The Bible is a law for nations, as well as the church.

3. The state deals with things seen and temporal; the church with things unseen and eternal.

This is self-evident; but that does not mean that the state may not, and must not, deal with moral questions. The state is a moral being, and must deal with material interests upon a moral plane.

4. The state bears the "sword"; the church, the "keys". The one inflicts physical penalties; the other, only moral.

But the church is the messenger of truth to the world, and it is her duty to apply the Word of God to the state, and call upon civil offices to obey him.

5. Civil power may be exercised by a single rule; but ecclesiastical power is exercised only by a tribunal; and that tribunal, from Moses' time to this day, is called the presbuteros.

The effort, by this line of argument, to prove that the state is a purely secular institution is utterly futile. The state is a moral institute, created by God in the sphere of morals, subject to the mediatorial scepter of the Lord Jesus Christ, and controlled by him in the interest of his church. The nation and kingdom that will not serve his church shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The July Century opens with a paper on Charles-Francois Daubigny, the noted French artist, whose portrait is presented in company with other illustrations, giving specimens of his skill, etc., by Robert J. Weichenden. Characteristics, by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, and the Naulahka, by Kipling and Balestier, are concluded. The other notable and illustrated articles are as follows: Continuations of Christopher Columbus, by Emilio Castelar; The Nature and Elements of Poetry—Beauty, by Edmund Clarence Stedman; Architecture at the World's Columbian Exposition, by Henry Van Brunt; The Chosen Valley, by Mary Hallock Foote; The Chatelaine of La Trinite, by Henry B. Fuller. Complete contributions in prose and poetry: Outbound, by Bliss Carman; When on the Marge of Evening, by Louise I. Guiney; A Wish, by Frank D. Sherman; The Great American Safety-Valve, by Walter B. Hill; Traffic, by Edgar Fawcett; Body and Soul, by Emma H. Nason; The Finding of the Tomb of Aristotle, by Chas. Waldstein; Voices from Beyond, by Susanna Massey; Negus Negusti, and the Abyssinians, by Frederick Villiers; A Friend of the Family, by Chas. B. Davis; The Bird's Song, the Sun, and the Wind, by Chas. G. D. Roberts; Thumb-nail Sketches—The Coffee House, Maarken, by Geo. W. Edwards; Gloria Mundi, by Graham R. Tomson; Rudis and Grim, by Maurice Thompson; What the Government is Doing for the Farmer, by A. W. Harris; Earth Hath Her Hurts, by John J. Chapman. Editorials—Responsibility for Political Corruption; A New Movement in Municipal Reform; Another Word on "Cheap Money," etc. An average "Midsummer" number. New York: The Century Company, 33 East 17th street. $4.00 a year.

The Review of Reviews, always timely in the subject matter it presents, is especially so in the July number. It contains perhaps the most complete and intelligent character sketch of Benjamin Harrison, by Gen. Thos. J. Morgan, that has ever been written. In the text of the article appears a portrait of President Harrison at his desk, taken on the 15th of June—four days after the Minneapolis Convention adjourned. In addition to this sketch there are reviewed and discussed, in the department The Progress of the World, the work and proceedings of the convention itself. With this account are presented portraits of the most conspicuous figures in that great political assembly; Governor McKinley, Chauncey M. Depew, Senator Wolcott, General John C. New, ex-Senator Ingalls, ex-Speaker Reed and Mrs. J. Ellen Foster. There is besides these a striking portrait of Hon. Whitelaw Reid, the Republican nominee for Vice President. In the Progress of the World of this number are discussed, as well, the political and social movements most prominent in other countries of the world, particularly the political situation in Great Britain. The reader who has likewise allowed the general news to escape his attention will find in the department Record of Current Events, a full summary of the world's happenings during the month. The department of Leading Articles includes a larger number of topics than usual. Mr. W. C. Edgar, who has had in charge the distribution of the Russian relief cargo of the steamer Missouri, contributes to the July number an exceedingly interesting paper on Russia's Conflict with Hunger. The article contains portraits of Count Vorontsoff Daskoff, Executive Head of the Czarewitsch's Relief Committee, and of the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, at the head of the relief committee in Moscow, and scenes from the famine district. New York: 13 Astor Place. $2.50 a year.

The first pages of the July Arena are devoted to the first circumnavigation of Lake Chala, in Africa, by the now famous Mrs. M. French Sheldon, whose portrait graces the frontispiece of this number. Mildred Aldrich contributes a profusely illustrated sketch of "Julia Marlowe" (Sarah Francis Frost), the talented American actress. This is followed by a monograph (with numerous portraits) on The Women in the Alliance Movement, by Annie L. Diggs—The Female Farmers of that political combination. A Briton's Impressions of America, the Land of Social Contrasts, by J. F. Muirhead, is pleasant reading. Edwin Reed, in the Tribunal of Literary Criticism, re-opens the case of Bacon vs. Shakespeare, presenting at first, a brief for the plaintiff. The "trial" is intended to be impartial, with the testimony, pro and con, drawn from eminent literary men and women. Another article that will attract attention is a symposium by Hon. William M. Springer, M. C.—Why the Democrats should Elect the Next President; Hon. Thos. E. Watson, M. C.—Why the People's Party should Elect the Next President, and Hon. J. C. Burrows, M. C.—Why the Republicans should Elect the Next President—Under the General title of Representative Congressmen on the Pending Campaign. B. O. Flower has another chapter on psychic phenomena—Hypnotism and Mental Suggestion. Other articles are: Confessions of a Theologian, by an anonymous writer; The Descent from Eden, by Rev. J. S. David; The Basis of Money, by H. A. Higgins; The World's Religions at the World's Fair, by Rev. Frank N. Riale, Ph. D., and Jesus, the Church and the World's Fair, by the editor, with Book Reviews. Boston: Copley Square. $5.00 a year.

The Cottage Hearth for July presents, in its regular departments, a fine collection of suggestive material. A new girl's department has just been added to the others, and in this issue treats of garden parties. Mrs. Austin continues her talks about the children of the Mayflower in the story of The Little Sachem. Will Allen Dromgoole gives an interesting Fourth of July story about the people of the Tennessee Mountains. In Art, Miss D. L. Hoyt gives a second talk on Some of the Old Masters. Mrs. A. M. Diaz takes up the subject of Character Work in School and Home. These special features, together with the ten regular departments, such as the Sabbath, Home Dressmaking, Household Chats, Domestic Science, The Home Garden, Cooking Receipts, etc., make the Cottage Hearth an acceptable visitor. Handsome illustrations add interest to the numerous stories and articles. Boston: W. A. Wilde & Co., 25 Bromfield street. $1.50 a year.

Everyday hygiene finds a valuable exponent in the Herald of Health for July, edited by M. L. Holbrook. Dr. Andrew Wilson recommends a Day in Bed for Health Sake—a plea for sufficient rest for recuperation. The editor furnishes some timely Notes Concerning Health, suited to all classes. Fresh Air, Ventilation and Poverty are plainly treated by A. H. Frank. J. J. Watson offers some harmonious suggestions relating to Music, Morals and Health. Jennie Chandler's Woman's Department is conducted in a practical and helpful spirit. Topics of the Month will interest all careful housekeepers, and Reviews of New Books closes a very satisfactory issue. New York: M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street. $1.00 a year.

The frontispiece of the July number of American Gardening is a full-page view in Shaw's Botanical Gardens, St. Louis—a charming scene. A great variety of horticultural, floral and decorative topics, as usual, is discussed, many of the articles being illustrated, and all of a timely and instructive character. In point of ability and acceptability, it ranks among the best of similar American publications, and deserves a liberal patronage from those who are engaged in gardening either for profit or pleasure. IN BRIEF.

A report comes from Washington that the marble stone which Pius IX. contributed to the Washington monument, and which Know-Nothings cast into the Potomac river, has been found by a diver, has been brought to shore, and has been again stolen.

The board of health in New Orleans has statistics to prove that there are about 250 lepers in Louisiana. There are thirty of them in the capital and a whole settlement in the Bayou Lafourche. A bill is before the Legislature to segregate them in an effort to stamp out the hideous disease. It seems to be making progress all over the world.

The first law in the colonies and United States authorizing a liquor saloon was passed in 1639. There was also a law to punish drunkenness by reprimands, whipping, fines, disfranchisement, and by being required to wear the letter D on the outside garment. Laws to permit drunkard-making and to punish the drunkard kept pace with each other.

Bulletin 193, of the eleventh census, is devoted entirely to artesian wells for irrigation in the States and Territories forming the western half of the United States, including the Dakotas, Kansas, Nebraska and Texas. The total number of artesian wells in this area in June, 1890, was 8,097. The average depth 210 feet, average cost per well $245, average discharge 54 gallons per minute; 50 per cent used for irrigation; average area for each well 13 acres, total irrigated area 52,000 acres.

It has transpired that Mr. H. E. Daniels sold his wife on February 7, 1892, to Mr. Frederick S. Snyder for $150 cash and a note for $500. Contracts to the bargain were written, signed and sealed. Where did this horror take place—doubtless in some rude, un-Christian, semi-civilized community? Oh! no, it took place in Massachusetts. The agreement was made in Sherborn and the divulging of it took place at Palmer, in that State. The Springfield Republican reports the occurrence.

While ordinarily a policy of life insurance payable to the wife on the death of her husband is not subject to the payments of his debts, yet where the policy is in the form of an endowment, a certain sum to be repaid after a certain number of years, the transaction is in the nature of a loan, the insurance being a mere incident, and if the premiums were paid by the insolvent debtor, the insurance money is subject to the claims of his creditors. Talcott vs. Field, Supreme Court of Nebraska.—Chicago Legal News.

A statue of Columbus is to be erected in Central Park, by the New York Genealogical and Biographical Society. It is to be made by Sunol and is to be a copy of his famous Columbus now in Paris. Among the subscribers to the fund for it are Archbishop Corrigan, John D. Crimmins, William R. Grace, Alfonse de Navarro, and other Catholic citizens. It will be unveiled in April, 1893. Mr. Chauncey M. Depew will deliver the oration and Mr. Edmund Clarence Stedman will read the poem for the occasion.

Pope Pius IX. granted an audience to a French lady of high station, who threw herself at his feet and devoutly thanked him for the restoration of her health. "But how have I done it?" inquired the Pope. "I procured a stocking that belonged to your holiness," she replied. "One of my stockings?" "Yes; I put the talisman on my diseased foot, and it has been completely cured." "Madame," replied the Pope, "fortune has been very kind to you. You need only put on one of my stockings and your foot is healed, while I put on both my stockings every morning and I can hardly walk."

During the administration of President Jackson, Amos Kendall, United States Postmaster-General, wishing to know the source of a Southern river, wrote to a village postmaster: "Sir—This department desires to know how far the Tombigbee river runs up. Respectfully yours, etc."

PAROCHIAL AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Last spring it was reported that twenty-one Protestant teachers in the public schools of the city of Troy, N. Y., had been removed by the commissioners in charge of those institutions, and their places filled by teachers of the Roman Catholic faith. A few days ago the commissioners deposed the principal of the high school in that city, although no charges of incompetency or unfaithfulness to duty were preferred against him. His removal was not unexpected, for after the discharge of the other Protestant teachers, he received a hint that his resignation would be accepted by the commissioners, but he positively refused to submit it. Hence his recent deposition was deemed certain, and the result confirms the correctness of the expectation. But while his removal creates no surprise, a great degree of indignation has been excited; for strong petitions for his retention and protests against any change had been presented to the commissioners.

It is but a few weeks since the press announced that the Roman Catholic "Faribault plan" in Minnesota had received the sanction of the Pope, although Archbishop Corrigan of New York had declared it inexpedient. This "plan," of which Archbishop Ireland was the originator, was the surrender of the Roman Catholic parochial schools in certain towns in Minnesota, on condition that the "Sisters of Charity" should be continued as teachers in the public schools, if found to be as capable as others.

More recently a press dispatch announced that in Stillwater, Minn., the board of education had refused to renew its lease of St. Michael's parochial school property, or to re-employ the Roman Catholic Sisters as teachers.

While there is something of encouragement in this last item of intelligence, it by no means lessens the danger to the American free-school system from the bigotry of the papal church—a church that, with all its pretensions to Christianity and purity, is governed by corrupt secret cabals which have the destruction of religious freedom for their object. Between the Jesuits and the Freemasons, the principles of "the church of the first-born"—the only Christian church—are in danger of becoming obliterated.

There is far less danger to be apprehended from the parochial school system of the Lutherans, or, indeed, any denomination that is practically orthodox. We mention the Lutherans, for they came out from Roman rule; they oppose secret societies, and are not subject to the stealthy methods of the Roman octopus.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

One of the most striking religious features of the past week was the eleventh convention of Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor in New York City. Very nearly 25,000 delegates and their friends were in attendance, of whom the State of Illinois sent 1,200. These delegates represented 21,000 societies, which embrace about one and a quarter million members.

Ten years ago there were but seven branches of this organization, with only 481 members, and their existence was confined to the New England States. In 1891, they numbered 16,274 branches and 1,008,980 members, showing a phenomenally rapid growth, which extends to about all of the Protestant denominations of the Union.

These organizations are considered the fullest manifestation of democracy in the churches. There is no central governing power. Each branch is independent of the others. There are, however, local, district and State unions, with trustees and committees, but none of these bodies exercises any legislative function. Each society is a law unto itself, and each member is left unincumbered by any ruling authority. Each society is a voluntary community, united in labor for one object, as prescribed by the following pledge:

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me do; that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and to read the Bible every day, and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and midweek services, unless prevented by some reasons which I can conscientiously give to my Saviour, and that, just as far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavor to lead a Christian life. As an active member, I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present at and to take some part, aside from singing, in every Christian Endeavor prayer meeting, unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master. If obliged to be absent from the monthly consecration meeting of the society, I will, if possible, send at least a verse of Scripture to be read in response to my name at the roll call.

State and general gatherings of the societies, like the one in New York, are avowedly for "the generation of enthusiasm," a comparison of methods and results, and reports of progress. No reference is made to dogmatic theology, or to sectional lines, in their deliberations. With such a power for good as these societies possess, the possibility of Christian union, free from sectarian influences, does not seem either difficult or distant.

MASONIC FRAUD.

"The world is in pain
Our secrets to gain,
And still let them wonder and gaze on;
They ne'er can divine
The word or the sign
Of a Free and an Accepted Mason."

—Popular Old Masonic Song.

Many years ago a book was published in London, England, entitled: "A Ritual and Illustrations of Freemasonry, Accompanied by Numerous Engravings, and a Key to the Phi Beta Kappa." The author's name is not given; but the title-page bears this verse, from Moore:

"Yes, ye vile race, for hell's amusement given,
Too mean for earth, yet claiming kin with heaven!
Ye shall have mysteries—ay, precious stuff,
For knaves to thrive by—mysteries enough,
Dark tangled doctrines; dark as fraud can weave.
Which your blind votaries on trust receive,
While craftier feign belief, till they believe."

The book itself is a genuine exposition of the three Blue Lodge, the four Chapter, the F. nights Templar, and the Scottish Rite degrees of the order, as exhibited in English lodges and encampments.

Each degree is illustrated with its signs and grips, and, in some, with the penalties inflicted upon recalcitrant members. The harmony existing between these expositions and those published by the National Christian Association attests their correctness.

But we have additional evidence of the truth of both the English and American expositions of Freemasonry in the testimony of a seceding Past Master, well known to Cynosure readers, who relates the following experience. He was then living in Canada, belonging to the local lodge, and had been duly entered, passed and raised through the Blue Lodge degrees. In his visits to the lodge, he had observed, carelessly lying about, the English book above mentioned. With a natural curiosity, he embraced his opportunities to examine it, without incurring remonstrance or objection.

Some time afterwards he applied for the four Chapter degrees. His application was accepted; he paid down $25 for the privilege, and emerged from the ordeal a full-fledged Royal Arch Mason. The one important discovery of the evening was the fact that the rituals by which he had been advanced in the fraternity were exactly those which he had read in the English book referred to, and which any in the lodge room might have read as freely as he had.

Justly he felt chagrined at the audacity of his "brothers" in charging him $25 for imparting to him only knowledge with which he was already familiar; and after the ceremonies were ended, he boldly remonstrated with them for defrauding him out of $25, when he could purchase the book from which they repeated the rituals for $1. He then demanded the return of his money; but they laughed and said that his demand was preposterous—something that never had been known before in the history of the order—and was met with a flat refusal.

"Well, gentlemen," he replied, "you will return my money, or I'll make it hot for you;" and with this threat he left them to their reflections.

No further controversy upon the subject ensued; but after a few days he found a letter, written in red ink, and containing his $25, shoved under his door.

The Past Master has lived long enough since he left the lodge to make it very "hot" for the fraternity, in his expositions of the meanness and uncleanness of the Masonic system. No man knows its character better, or can more graphically describe it in conversation or on the platform.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The West Chicago division of the Salvation Army, on Thursday evening last, celebrated the removal of their "corps" to new "barracks" in the old "Princess" opera house, on West Madison street; and, as usual on all important occasions, the Army celebrated the event with considerable vigor and enthusiasm. Among those prominent in the local "corps" who assisted were "Brigadier-General" Fielding and his wife, commanding the Chicago division. Of course, it was what the army designates as a "hallelujah time," with the characteristic accompaniments of music and "volleys" of exultant "amens." The attendance was large, the platform being occupied by numerous officers and soldiers.

The principal attraction of the evening, however, was the presence of "Commissioner" H. Ouchterloney, a notable worker in the foreign fields of the Army. This lady is the daughter of a lawyer, and although of French descent, was born in Sweden. She became acquainted with the Salvation Army, or Christian Mission, as it was then called, through Mr. Bramwell Booth, who visited Sweden in 1878 and held meetings in private houses. Some time afterwards she was invited to visit friends in England, and here she met General Booth and attended some of the big meetings in London. Subsequently she returned to Sweden with the determination to work for God wherever she found an opportunity. Several ministers immediately called upon her to conduct services in their churches, and she spoke with great liberty and enthusiasm. Soon she received a telegram from London asking her to attend the opening of Congress Hall. She went the next day and remained in England six months. In 1882 she returned to Sweden, accompanied by three women, to open fire upon Stockholm. Bills, announcing that "women would speak for Jesus," created a great sensation, as women there never spoke in public. Out of curiosity people would come distances of twenty miles to hear these people speak and sing about salvation.

An old theatre had been taken, at a rental of $20 a day, and although every person had to pay admission of about six cents, such crowds besieged the building that forty policemen were obliged to keep order outside the hall. The flashing of their drawn swords in the moonlight was such a new feature of religious work in Sweden that many people used to come in order to witness it. On the evening of the first anniversary the crowd was so great outside that it broke in the theatre doors; and when the hall would not seat half of the people they raised ladders and broke in the windows, in order to see and hear what was going on, and the terrified officials of the building sent for the soldiers to aid the police in keeping them out.

The Commissioner was often heavily fined, but never paid her fines, and was never put in prison. After nine years of unbroken success and having organized one of the mightiest religious movements of the present day, she was appointed by General Booth, International Traveling Commissioner, to visit the Scandinavian countries and settlements.

When she left Sweden the Army in that country was composed of about 11,000 soldiers, 150 corps and about 600 officers. In the large cities and have eight slum-posts, two rescue homes, four "shelters," a food depot, a wood yard, and the city authorities work four labor bureaus through headquarters. The Army has bought a building that is used for headquarters in Stockholm, at the cost of 400,000 kroner, or about $100,000, and the circulation of the Swedish War Cry is 44,000 copies weekly.

At the Thursday evening meeting, she spoke of the work accomplished in Sweden and Norway, and what great triumphs for Christ had been achieved in Europe through the labors of the Army.

Ballington Booth, commander of the Salvation Army in America, has received information from England that his father, General Booth, has decided to send another son, Commander Herbert Booth, to this country. The Army is about to redouble its energies in the United States, and, as General Booth says, "pile on more fuel." Mrs. Herbert Booth, who is an English woman of high standing in England, an enthusiastic Salvation Army worker, and blessed with wealth, youth, beauty and talent, will accompany her husband.

It is impossible not to wish the work of the Salvation Army God-speed; but we think its labors would be more effective if it expressed itself more openly against all forms of sin and in favor of the great reforms of the day, especially upon the demoralizing effects of the secret lodge system.

WEAVER AND FIELD.

The "Third party," or the "People's party," as it prefers to be called, at its National Convention in Omaha, on the 4th instant, nominated James B. Weaver, of Iowa, for President, and Gen. J. G. Field for Vice President, to be voted for at the November election.

Twelve years ago Gen. Weaver was the candidate of the Greenback-Labor party for the same office. The change in politics is not great, for it is understood that the People's party, like the "Greenbackers," is in favor of free coinage, or fiat money. The movement was not a success in 1880, and it hardly seems possible that the country is yet prepared to accept any measures of that sort. The platform adopted by the convention favors a tariff for revenue only, a more stringent law against indiscriminate immigration, and a free vote and a fair count at all elections, recommending the adoption of the Australian ballot system, and opposing federal supervision of elections.

General Field is a Southerner, whose antecedents seem to be veiled in obscurity.

The People's party is objectionable on account of its being based on the secret Farmers' and other Alliances, which indicates that its evil maneuvering will be done in the lodge, and only its exterior pretensions to public favor will be presented openly. Such a course in any political party is reprehensible and suspicious. So long as it fosters the secret conclave to promote its ends, it is unworthy of the confidence of the people whose interests it ostensibly supports.

LABOR RIOTS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

The secular press, during the past week, has given wide circulation to the details of fearful riots at Homestead, Pa., growing out of labor troubles and resulting in death and destruction of property.

Any one at all conversant with the iron trade has been aware for several months past that the great iron manufacturing plants in Pennsylvania have suffered from low prices and decreased demand for their products; yet, in the face of all the difficulties that beset them, the factories were kept in operation, to give employment to their thousands of laborers, although the prospects for an improvement in trade were far from encouraging.

Every summer the "Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel-Workers," an arbitrary labor society, meets and arranges a scale of wages to be demanded during the coming year, which scale, it is expected, the iron manufacturing houses must accept or shut down their factories. This year the Association arranged its scale as usual, and presented it to their employers for acceptance.

In the meantime the great iron manufacturer, Mr. Carnegie, by his business manager, H. C. Frick, had also prepared a scale of prices to be paid to his laborers, based on the prospective probabilities of trade. Between this scale and that of the Amalgamated Association there existed a great difference. The result was that the Association would not accept the scale prepared by Mr. Frick, and he refused to sign that presented by the Association.

Anticipating a breach between himself and the workmen, Mr. Frick had surrounded the Carnegie iron works with a double high fence, and made provision to protect the property against the disorderly and destructive instincts of the disappointed men.

The men went out, at the dictum of the Amalgamated Association, and so both a strike and a lock-out were instituted.

On Tuesday, at the request of Mr. Frick, ten deputy sheriffs were sent from Pittsburg to protect the works; but these officers were met on the way by a crowd of 2,000 workmen, who forced them to go on board a tug and return to Pittsburg.

On Wednesday a strong force of Pinkerton's men were sent to protect the works, which were in imminent danger of destruction, but at Homestead they were opposed by an overwhelming crowd of armed strikers, and a bloody fight ensued, in which six workmen and five Pinkerton men were killed, and thirty-six of the former, and one hundred and forty-three of the latter were wounded. Of course, some of the wounded were fatally injured, so that the total loss in killed, on both sides, was estimated at twenty.

Since then the contest has proceeded more quietly, but with rancor, and as arbitration seems entirely out of the question, hostilities may not yet be at an end.

Governor Pattison, of Pennsylvania, at the outbreak, exhibited a very disreputable indifference, refusing to interfere and bring out the military power of the State to preserve the peace.

Since the foregoing was written, the entire division of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, about 8,000 men, has been ordered to Homestead to support Sheriff McCleary in suppressing the riots at that place. The announcement of this action of the Governor, at the request of the sheriff, created intense excitement at Homestead, where the strikers had armed themselves and defied opposition. The troops were to gather at the scene of hostilities on Monday, and a sanguine conflict was anticipated.

THE ERA OF MISSIONS.

At the meeting of the Missionary Union, during the late Baptist anniversaries in Philadelphia, a grand climax was reached at the ninth and last session. At earlier sittings a number of missionaries had spoken, kindling the enthusiasm of the great gathering; fifty new men and women were reported under appointment, several of whom spoke; and, after speeches by Dr. P. S. Henson, of Chicago, and others, $40,000 was raised, and a hundred pastors promised to endeavor to quadruple the missionary collections from their churches. At this last meeting, Dr. A. J. Gordon, the well-known pastor of Clarendon Street Baptist church, Boston, whose heart is in every good work, was introduced, and by his address raised the enthusiasm to the highest pitch. From the Christian Inquirer we take the following abstract of this remarkable address:

In the beginning of the foreign missionary work a little over $67 was contributed; now over $11,000,000 are annually spent for this work. In the beginning of this century no door was open for the work; now all nations open their hearts and doors to our work. The Protestant churches have 7,000 foreign missionaries. But there are 240,000 preachers of the Gospel; two to every 1,000 inhabitants; two or three even in little villages. In spite of small numbers and most pitiful contributions, the missionary forces have done good work, but the Mohammedans have accomplished seventy times as much. Three points were forcibly made:

1. Churches to the front! The churches in Great Britain have not taken up the work of missions. This is true of America. We are carrying on our missions by delegation and relegation, but not by participation. Each church should feel its responsibility. Responsibility is the mother of activity. We have a power outside of ourselves; we have the Holy Spirit to do the work. The present method of work is to have the church put the work on the associations; the associations put it on the societies; the societies put it on the executive committees; the executive committees put it on the secretaries, and ultimately a dozen men or so have all the pressure on them. If each church sent out its own missionary then these societies would be our clearing-house. Our societies are tools for missionary work. God forbid that we should believe in tools above the power of God! When any single church, realizing the power of the Holy Ghost, throws itself upon him, such a church can do a hundred times as much as an organized mission society. The story of Pastor Harms was told. One church in forty years sent out 75 missionaries into the foreign field; another church sent out 140 missionaries and their wives. The problem to-day is the distribution of missionary responsibility. If churches are as zealous for Christ as for their own church luxuries—music, the "incomprehensible soprano"—there will be a glorious work done.

2. Call out the reserves! The work of the societies has been done by the commissioned officers. A call has been sent for one thousand missionaries, not only trained men but consecrated lay workers. The response has been remarkable. Business men and workingmen have come forward. On the staff of the Inland China Mission over sixty men have gone out at their own expense. Over one hundred men have gone out under the auspices of the International Missionary Alliance. The thrilling story of the Gosse-roy Mission among the Koles of India was told with telling effect. Dr. Gordon said he had the honor of standing at the commencement of the Students' Volunteer Movement. About six thousand men in seminaries and colleges have volunteered. But there is also a workingman's movement, which is to be an enormous movement.

3. Pastors to the front! Pastors should make up their mind that foreign missions is their chief business. Worldliness and rationalism, which are the same things even on different sides, are pressing upon the ministry. On the other hand, religious enthusiasm should have possession of his servants. Instead of grasping at the work of Christ with one hand and silver with the other, the men of God must be absorbed in his work. If the church does not become a missionary church it will be a missing church.

AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD.

"With the abolition of slavery Dr. Blanchard turned his attention to secret societies—and no one needs to be told where he stands on that question. He has made enemies by the score both in and out of the churches. And yet he has the respect of all his opponents on any and all questions. His simple and childlike piety, big brain, iron will, courage—even ferocity of onset, win him respect. Blanchard is one of the old prophets dropped down into the nineteenth century. Like them he was stoned—and like them on some occasions the stoning was to be expected. Not even a prophet can reasonably demand that the missiles shall all fly one way. If Michael Angelo could have had the Doctor's head for a model he would have improved upon his Moses. He was a highly successful pastor and evangelist. He lifted Knox College out of the slough and established its goings, and did a like service for Wheaton College. It is to be wished that he may leave a full autobiography."—Dr. W. C. Gray in the Interior, January 22, 1891.

The completest autobiography left by President Blanchard is found in his lectures, sermons, and addresses delivered on various questions of Christian reform. They are a noble monument. No man can rise from reading them without feeling stonger in moral conviction, and wishing to be better in his life.

The volume containing a valuable selection from his works will in a few days be on sale by the National Christian Association.

COLLEGES.

New York Military, Cornwall, N. Y., Col. C. J. Wright, B. S., A. M., President.

Wheaton College, well known to our readers from the men it has sent into the work, is now resting a little and preparing to begin its thirty-third year's work in September. During the summer asphalt walks will be laid through the campus, and the buildings are to be put in order. Our readers who wish to educate young people, or to use money to fit young men and women for life's task, are requested to send for a catalogue. The last year was one of the best ever known in the history of the college, and indications are favorable for the time to come. The recent death of young Rustin at Yale, while being initiated into a college lodge, the D. K. E., furnishes additional justification for the position maintained in Wheaton, though none was needed. One of our subscribers, Mrs. Avery, of Galesburg, who last December passed to her reward, left five hundred dollars in her will for the college. This bequest was recently paid by our good friend, Rev. Mr. Butcher, of Elmwood. We are also notified of similar kindly remembrances on the part of others. We are glad of all such efforts to promote the cause of sound learning. The want of our age is leaders who are fit to be trusted. He who helps a school that is thoroughly Christian, lays his hand on the ends of the earth. May God bless Wheaton College!

THE HOME.

THE BLUE AND GRAY.

Written on occasion of the Reunion of the Blue and Gray at Gettysburg, by Joel Swartz, D. D.

The winds have blown the clouds away
And now we see the Blue and Gray
Are met at Gettysburg to-day.

From North and South the warriors come,
Not to the bugle blast and drum,
Thank God, that dreadful din is dumb.

They rather come in grief to lay
Sweet tokens from the bloom of May
Upon the moulds of kindred clay.

Mark! how their manly bosoms swell
As, here and there, they halt to tell
How some brave comrade fought and fell.

How through these gorges ranks defiled
When war's sulphurous whirlwind wild
The dead in ghastly windrows piled.

Together down the line they ride,
The peaceful colors side by side
Where once the ground was crimson dyed.

No word revives the old debate
Or kindles up those fires of hate
Which burned along those lines of late.

But rather every prospect awes;
They feel, as here and there they pause,
That God hath judged their country's cause.

That here, from out the battle's smoke,
The God of truth and justice spoke,
And every bondman's fetters broke;

And as it were the fragments cast
Into the battle's furnace blast
And on these granite anvils vast,

Forged chains of union and of law
The States in closer ties to draw,
Without a fracture or a flaw.

And years shall but their strength increase,
As hate and war on earth shall cease,
And wider reigns the Prince of Peace.

A SELFISH LIFE.

Selfishness may prompt a man to do things that seem unselfish; but there is a world-wide difference between selfishness and unselfishness, and the recognition of this difference, in one's self or in others, is a primal test of personal character. A man may show special attention to another, or may on an occasion deny himself for another, in order to be a personal gainer by his temporary surrender of self. He may even persist in the performance of self-denying acts in the present life in the hope of greater gain in the life to come. But apart from all these things, there come occasions for every man to decide whether he will lose all thought of self or of gain or of present or future reward, and will act against his apparent interests at the call of another's need; and if at such times he chooses against himself, he acts unselfishly. This unselfish choosing is the true nobility of character. The selfish cynic says there is nothing of the sort in the world, but that every man's final choice is based on some view of his own self-interest. He, however, who is himself capable of unselfishness, knows that others also are sometimes ready to act unselfishly, and that they are to be adjudged noble accordingly. Whoever says that there is no such thing as unselfish thinking or doing in the world, thereby condemns himself as wholly and hopelessly selfish—too selfish to appreciate or to recognize unselfishness when it is exhibited before him.—Sunday-school Times.

THE JOYOUS LIFE.

The life of a believer is a cheerful, joyous life. There may be seasons when nervous affections, extraordinary trials, or unusually fierce temptations will temporarily depress him, but he cannot be habitually gloomy or sad. Wherever sadness does reign over a Christian's life, there must be some defect either in his creed or in his loyalty to Christ.

There is so much in the truth which is the root of faith to beget gladness; such an exhibition of God's infinite love to man in the incarnation of Christ; such rich consolation from the indwelling Comforter; such causes for gratitude in the mercies of his daily life; such visions of beauty evoked by the promises of coming glory, that one who really embraces God by faith can scarcely prevent his bubbling over with joy. Paul gave the keynote of a true Christian life when he said to the church at Philippi: "Rejoice in the Lord alway, and again I say, Rejoice." And Luther echoed this sweetest bird note when he said to the first-born sons of the Reformation:

Dear Christian people, all rejoice,
Each soul with joy upspringing;
Pour forth one song with mighty voice.
With love and gladness singing
Give thanks to God, our Lord above,
Thanks for his miracle of love!
Dearly he hath redeemed us.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

A man of piety may be lodged in the rudest cottage, and his occupation may be only to sweep a street, yet, let him so sweep a street that, through the honest and diligent doing of his duty, God is glorified and men are led to speak and think better of religion, and he forms a link between earth and heaven. He associates himself with holy angels, and, though at a humble distance, treads in the footsteps of that blessed Saviour who, uniting divinity to humanity, as our Maker makes all things for himself, and as our brother man, whether he ate or drank, or whatsoever he did, did all to the glory of God, and, doing so left us an example that we should follow his steps. Go and do likewise. Glorify God, and you shall enjoy him. Labor on earth, and you shall have rest in heaven. Christ judges them to be men of worth who are the men of work. Be thy life, then, devoted to his service. Now for the work, hereafter the wages; earth for the cross, heaven for the crown. Go thy way, assured that there is not a prayer you offer, nor a word you speak, nor a foot you walk, nor a tear you shed, nor a hand you hold out to the perishing, nor a warning you give to the careless, nor a wretched child you pluck from the streets, nor a visit paid to the widow or the fatherless, nor a loaf of bread you lay on a poor man's table—that there is nothing you do for the love of God and man but is faithfully registered in the chronicles of the kingdom, and shall be publicly read that day when Jesus calling you up perhaps from a post as mean as Mordecai's, shall crown your brow before an assembled world, saying: "Thus it shall be done to the man whom the King delighteth to honor."—Thomas Guthrie, D. D.

POOR JOSEPH.

A poor, weak-minded man named Joseph, whose employment was to go on errands and carry parcels, passing through London streets one day, heard the singing of Psalms in Dr. Calamy's church. He went into it, having a large parcel of yarn hanging over his shoulders.

The doctor, after a while, read his text from 1 Tim. 1: 15; "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, of whom I am chief."

From this he preached, in the clearest manner, the ancient and apostolic Gospel, that there is eternal salvation for the vilest sinner, through the worthiness of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who made all things.

Joseph, in rags, gazing with astonishment, never took his eyes from the preacher, but drank in with eagerness all he heard. Trudging homeward, he was overheard muttering to himself, "Joseph never heard this before! Christ Jesus, the Son of God, who made all things, came into the world to save sinners like Joseph; and this is true, and it is a 'faithful saying!'"

Soon afterward Joseph was seized with fever, and was dangerously ill. As he tossed upon his bed, his constant language was, "Joseph is the chief of sinners; but Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, and Joseph loves him for this."

Some one finding out where he heard this doctrine, on which he uniformly dwelt with so much delight, went and asked Dr. Calamy to come and visit him. He came; but Joseph was now very weak, and had not spoken for some time, and though told of the doctor's arrival, he took no notice of him; but when the doctor began to speak to him, as soon as heard the sound of his voice, Joseph sprang upon his elbows, and, seizing his hands, exclaimed as loud as he could, with his now feeble and trembling voice, "Oh, sir! you are the friend of the Lord Jesus, whom I heard speak so well of him. Joseph is the chief of sinners; but it is a faithful saying, that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who made all things, came into the world to save sinners, and why not Joseph? Oh, pray to that Jesus for me; pray that he may save me; tell him that Joseph thinks that he loves him for coming into the world to save sinners as Joseph." The doctor prayed; when he concluded, Joseph thanked him most kindly. He then put his hand under his pillow and took out an old rag, in which were tied up five guineas, and putting it into the doctor's hand (which he had kept all the while close in his), he thus addressed him: "Joseph, in his folly, had laid this up to keep him in his old age; but Joseph will never see old age; take it, and divide it among the poor friends of the Lord Jesus, and tell them that Joseph gave it them for his sake, who came into the world to save sinners, of whom he is the chief." So saying, he reclined his head. His exertion in talking had been too much for him, so that he instantly expired.

Dr. Calamy left this scene, but not without shedding tears over Joseph; and used to tell this little story with much feeling, and as one of the most affecting occurrences he ever met with.

It may furnish the reader with matter for serious thought. The congregation where Joseph heard the glad tidings of salvation through Christ was large and fashionable. Most of them, it may be, were occupied with themselves and their own thoughts and persons. They went, perhaps, to see and to be seen, as is often the case, and listened heedlessly to that which was spoken. But not so with poor Joseph. He listened as to a voice from heaven—he drank in every word. Upon others, the word fell like seed on stony ground, or by the wayside. Their minds were intent on other things; and, perhaps, after leaving the door of the church, they never once more thought of what they had heard, although it was God's Word; but Joseph received it as God's Word, and not as man's word, and treated it as such. He heard it as with the ears of his soul. He held it fast, and thought upon it. Others cared for the things of this world, and slighted the good news of salvation; but Joseph, after he heard it, cared for nothing else. His mind was intent on his salvation. He knew that he was a sinner, and his soul clung to Jesus as the Saviour of sinners; for he believed what was written in the Word of God, that Jesus came into the world for this gracious purpose. Jesus died, "the just for the unjust." He "put away sin by the sacrifice of himself," that he might bring us to God.—Anonymous.

SPURGEON ON SLANDER.

What a pity that there is not a tax upon words; what an income the government would get from it; but, alas! talking pays no toll. And if lies paid double, the government might pay off the national debt; but who would collect the money? Common fame is a common liar. Hearsay is half lies. A tale never loses in telling. As a snowball grows by rolling, so does a story. They who talk much lie much. If men only said what was true, what a peaceable world we should see! Silence seldom makes mischief, but talking is a plague to the parish. Silence is wisdom; and, by this rule, wise men and wise women are scarce. Still waters are the deepest; but the shallowest book brawls the most; this shows how plentiful fools must be. An open mouth shows an empty head. If the chest had gold or silver in it, it would not always stand wide open. Talking comes by nature, but it needs a good deal of training to learn to be quiet; yet regard for the truth should put a bit into every honest man's mouth, and a bridle upon every good woman's tongue.

If we must talk, at least let us be free from slander; let us not blister our tongues with backbiting. Slander may be sport to talebearers, but it is death to those whom they abuse. We can commit murder with the tongue as well as with the hand. The worst evil you can do a man is to injure his character; as the Quaker said to his dog: "I'll not beat thee, nor abuse thee, but I'll give thee an ill name." All are not thieves that dogs bark at, but they are generally treated as if they were; for the world for the most part believes that where there is smoke there is fire, and what everybody says must be true. Let us then be careful that we do not hurt our neighbor in so tender a point as his character, for it is hard to get dirt off if it is once thrown on; and when a man is once in people's bad books, he is hardly ever quite out of them. If he would be quite sure not to speak amiss, it might be as well to speak as little as possible; for if all men's sins were divided into two bundles, half of them would be sins of the tongue. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able to bridle the whole body."

Gossips of both genders, give up the shameful trade of tale-bearing; don't be the devil's bellows any longer to blow up the fire of strife. Leave off setting people by the ears. If you do not cut a bit off your tongues, at least season them with the salt of grace. Praise God more and blame neighbors less. Any goose can cackle, any fly can find us out a sore place, any empty barrel can give forth sound, any brier can tear a man's flesh. No flies will go down your throat if you keep your mouth shut, and no evil speaking will come up. Think much, but say little; be quick at work and slow at talk; and above all, ask the great Lord to set a watch over your lips.—John Plowman's Talk.

A LESSON FROM A CHILD.

The rush and crush, the hurry and drive of the present age, in its mad race after wealth, and work, and pleasure, starve out the home life and wither the home virtue to an alarming extent. Business, pleasure, luxury, amusements, parties, theatres, secret societies, clubs, and even charities, not only dry up the streams of devotion in church, but also make the home a mere sleeping place, rather than a centre of all tender ministries, gracious influences, loving fellowships, and Christly benedictions.

The New York Times repeats the story told by one wealthy and charitable woman to her intimate friends when explaining why she declined all engagements on Saturday:

"It was one day in the latter part of March that my little daughter, Constance, who is twelve years old, came into my room as I was hurriedly dressing to drive to a directors' meeting of one of the several charities in which I am interested. Her birthday had been the day before, and she had a game, one of her presents, in her hand. 'Oh, mamma,' she cried, full of eagerness, 'this is the loveliest game; do try it with me.' Her request, in my haste and absorption, seemed in the highest degree trivial to me. 'Nonsense, Connie; you know I can not,' I replied, rather sharply: 'this is board day at the hospital, and I am shockingly late now.'

"I was standing in front of the mirror, and I saw in the glass how her face fell and the life died out of it. 'I wish,' she said wistfully, 'you would sometimes have a day with me, mamma.' The child's speech went through me like a knife. I had never received so stinging a rebuke. Was it possible that in the pursuit of other duties I was neglecting the one that should be chief? My drive to the hospital that morning was full of serious introspection, and Connie has had her Saturdays ever since."

The home life is none too long. Soon our sons and daughters will be tossing on unknown seas, and exposed to unknown dangers; let us while we have our children with us make our homes places of prayer and love and blessing, that in after-years the influence may go with them to brighten other homes and bless and comfort other hearts.—The Christian.

The "drink question" is a large one, and it confronts every nation. In Germany it is discussed under the title of "Die Deutsche Alcoholfrage," and the Englishman who knows no language can make a pretty good guess at what the German words mean. The discussion of the question has brought out some statistics which are altogether startling and depressing. One quarter of the productive energy of the country is devoted to making some kind of intoxicating drink. That is one fact. Another is that the production of material manufactured into beer, wine and spirits in Germany occupied in 1889-90 just about one-fifteenth of the cultivated land of the country. As a consequence, "bread riots" break out occasionally, and the "food question" is seen to be intimately related to the "drink question," and both to the stability of the government, and to good order throughout the empire.

ENTERING IN.

The church was dim and silent
With the hush before the prayer;
Only the solemn trembling
Of the organ stirred the air.
Without, the sweet, pale sunshine;
Within, the holy calm,
Where priest and people waited
For the swelling of the psalm.

Slowly the door swung open,
And a little baby girl,
Brown-eyed, with brown hair falling
In many a wavy curl,
With soft cheeks flushing hotly,
Sly glances downward thrown,
And small hands clasped before her,
Stood in the aisle alone.

Stood half abashed, half frightened,
Unknowing where to go,
While like a wind-rocked flower
Her form swayed to and fro;
And the changing color fluttered
In the little troubled face,
As from side to side she wavered
With a mute, imploring grace.

It was but for a moment;
What wonder that we smiled,
By such a strange, sweet picture
From holy thoughts beguiled?
Up, then, rose some one softly,
And many an eye grew dim,
As through the tender silence
He bore the child with him.

And long I wondered, losing
The sermon and the prayer,
If when some time I enter
The many mansions fair,
And stand abashed and drooping
In the portal's golden glow,
Our Lord will send an angel
To show me where to go?

TEMPERANCE.

GOVERNMENT "CANTEENS."

But few people know what this expression means, but it means in plain language that the Government has gone into the business of running a saloon at every army post; that a West Point army officer, who has cost the Government about $14,000 to educate, superintends it; and enlisted men who are paid by the Government to serve as soldiers, are detailed to serve as bartenders.

This beats Bellamy's socialistic dream all to pieces; and the administration under which this outrage is perpetrated, has proven itself more progressive than even Dr. Rainsford, for they are using the time of Government employes and the prestige of the Government to educate and encourage the liquor traffic.

A correspondent at one of the army posts writes us that their "canteen" buys beer by the carload, and the "canteen" is doing a rushing business.—American Grocer.

THE DRUNKARD'S POSTERITY.

Demme studied ten families of drinkers and ten families of temperate persons. The direct posterity of the ten families of drinkers included fifty-seven children. Of these twenty-five died in the first weeks and month of their lives, six were idiots, in five children a striking backwardness of their longitudinal growth was observed, five were affected with epilepsy, five with inborn diseases. One boy was taken with chorea and became idiotic. Thus of the fifty-seven children of the drinkers only ten, or 17.5 per cent, showed a normal constitution and development.

The ten sober families had sixty-one children, five only dying in the first weeks; four were affected with curable diseases of the nervous system; two only presented inborn defects. The remaining fifty—81.9 per cent—were normal in their constitution and development. From this series of investigations we derive the sad truth that among the children of drinkers the prevailing mortality is fearful; that the surviving represents a pitiful crowd affected with unsoundness of mind, idiocy, epilepsy and other disturbance of their nervous system, and that only a very small proportion of the descendants grow up as useful members of society.—Herald of Health.

FACTS AND FINDINGS.

Liberia imports 70,000 gallons of intoxicants for every missionary it receives.

It is said that one-tenth of the many suicides in France can be traced to alcohol.

For bringing a jug of wine into the jury-room in Columbus, N. C., a grand-juryman was fined $50 and costs.

J. J. Brooks, formerly an assistant attorney-general of Tennessee, died on Thursday at a bi-chloride of gold institute in Memphis.

A society for the prevention of cruelty to children in a New England city reports that of 195 children whom it had aided, 103 had intemperate fathers and 85 drunken mothers.

The total amount of British investments in American breweries, up to February 1st, as given by the Brewers' Journal, is $92,019,240.

Local option has long been in operation in Finland, with result that, as a rule, in the rural districts there are no public houses whatever.

Rev. Charles Garrett, in presenting the annual report of his Liverpool mission, said: "The great enemy the mission had to contend with was drink."

Lady Carlisle, speaking recently on "Woman's Place in Politics," described herself as a fanatic on the drink question, and wished all others were the same.

"To escape the evils arising from the use of alcohol," says Dr. B. W. Richardson, "there is only one perfect course, namely, to abstain from alcohol altogether."

Judge Tainter, of Hartford, Conn., has decided that wholesale liquor-dealers located outside the State cannot sell liquor in Connecticut without taking out a license in each county where the liquor is sold.

Congressman Price, of Wisconsin, says: "I am neither a crank nor a saint; I simply want the man who will sell liquor put in to State's prison for it, and the fellow who will drink it shut up in an insane asylum."

Prohibition prevails in Oklahoma. The beneficence of the law is unquestioned. A man at Guthrie voiced the general sentiment when he said: "Prohibition is our salvation; without it there would be a murder every day."

A proposition has been made to the City Council of Sioux Falls, S. D., by W. H. Lyons, a United States Land Commissioner, to make the city his partner in the saloon business. He claims that the city corporation is not prevented by the Prohibition law from engaging in the liquor traffic, and that the city could clear $35,000 a year by acceding to his proposal.

The New York Times urges the coffee-house as a cure for the saloon: "The saloon might be in great part supplanted if a resort were provided equally as attractive, and less costly, and not at all mischievous. This is the notion that has found expression in coffee-houses and holly-tree inns in this country and abroad. Several of these are in operation in this city, and we believe there is no dispute that, so far as they go, they are successful, and that they do counteract the influence of the saloons."

In a recent sermon, Rev Dr. A. H. Plumb, of Boston, argues the duty of total abstinence from all that can intoxicate, on the Christian principle of self denial for the good of others. He says: "When a Christian man refuses to abstain from intoxicating beverages, he may know that he puts in jeopardy the temporal and spiritual welfare of many immortal beings around him; that he imperils their highest interests for this world and the next; that he does this rather than surrender a slight personal gratification himself, and this while he is all the time professing to order his life by the Christian principle of self-sacrifice for the good of others; while he is accepting the obligation: 'We then that are strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak.'"

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

LESSON IV.—Third Quarter, 1892.—July 24.

SUBJECT.—The Lame Man Healed.—Acts 3: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong.—Acts 3: 16.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Acts 3: 1-10. T.—Acts 3: 11-16. W.—Acts 3: 17-26. Th.—John 5: 1-9. F.—Matt. 10: 1-10. S.—Matt. 17: 14-21. S.—Luke 7: 16-23.

1. The invalid.—vs. 1-3. We have in this lesson a practical exposition of our Lord's teachings in the parable of the Good Samaritan, the prominent thought in which is that the first man, woman or child whom we can help in the time of need and trouble is our neighbor. Undoubtedly this lame man had often been seen lying at the Beautiful gate of the Temple, or in some similar public gateway in that vicinity, soliciting aid from those who assembled there to worship; and no doubt he derived from their charity a limited support—not enough to lift him above the practice of beggary; while, perhaps, there were many who saw him lying there helpless, day after day, and "passed by on the other side" with indifference. Yet he saw no hope of ever becoming cured of his lameness, and so continued to ask alms of those who frequented the Temple.

It was, on this occasion, the hour (3 o'clock) for the offering up of the afternoon sacrifice, and Peter and John, pursuing the general custom and seeking opportunities to preach the new Gospel that had been confided to them by their ascended Lord, joined the assemblage, and were about to enter the Temple, when the lame man raised his voice and attracted their attention.

2. The power of God.—vs. 4-7. The Pentecost had passed, and with changed hearts and in earnest fidelity to the instructions of the Holy Spirit, these two disciples were moved by the appeal of the lame man. They felt within them the new creation which they had undergone. Then Peter, with his usual earnestness, which before his conversion had manifested itself in a perverted impetuosity, and desiring to fix the invalid's attention upon what they had to say, called to him to listen—to withhold his cry for help from other sources. The manner of the disciples, speaking to him with great sincerity and kindness, gave him hopes of an unusually liberal alms. Then it was that Peter, taking the invalid by the hand, and uttering those wonderful words, which remind one so forcibly of our Lord's methods while he was with them, lifted up the man, no more the helpless cripple, but thoroughly sound in every part.

3. The effect of the miracle.—vs. 8-11. The first impulse of the man was naturally to test the cure which had been so strangely performed upon him. In the restored vigor of his limbs, he first stood—something that he had never done before; then, as the sense of the wonderful transformation that had taken place within him strengthened, he walked—what joy!—into the Temple as a worshiper; and as he went he leaped and audibly praised God for his goodness. And oh, in the fullness of joy that comes upon the forgiven sinner, that same blessed impulse to worship and leap and pour forth grateful praise is frequently manifested, with how much more of reason. The cripple was restored to the soundness and vigor of the perfect physical man; but when the blessed sense of freedom from sin and condemnation is realized, and soul and body are illuminated with the bliss of the new Christian life, the heart experiences unspeakable joy and even the angels rejoice over the sinner saved by grace.

4. The faithful preacher.—vs. 9-16. The effect of this remarkable event upon those who witnessed it, and all who were there assembled, was to create a general feeling of wonder. Within a few months, and even within a few days, Jerusalem had been stirred by the teachings of Christ, his crucifixion and the signs which accompanied it, the mysterious descent of the Holy Ghost, the subsequent conversion of a multitude, and the divine energy which characterized the disciples of the crucified Jesus. But now new wonder pervaded the assemblage, and the people came running together, bewildered and filled with curiosity. It was then that Peter entered upon the stern indictment of them for their cruelty, and showed them that the Christ whom they had slain still lived and manifested his miraculous power through his appointed agents.

Our lesson does not include all of Peter's address on this occasion, and the remainder of the chapter should be read in connection with the passage under consideration. So much is given in the selection, however, as will serve to teach each one of us some solemn truths.

We may not have the miraculous powers that God bestowed upon the disciples for their special mission, but we have very many opportunities presented to us, day by day, for doing acts of kindness to our unfortunate fellow-beings. We may not be able, as Peter was, to remove their permanent disabilities, but we can do much to relieve the suffering, heal the sick, make glad the hearts of the sorrowful, and bring the poor and needy to Christ for their relief and salvation. We may not have silver and gold to bestow upon them, but what we have and are we can dispense to them in the name of the Lord Jesus, and receive a faithful disciple's reward. To be able to do good is a blessed privilege, either by our own means, or to be the channel through which God can send his blessings to others. Heartfelt love and sympathy for the sick and suffering, if we do not stifle these impulses, serve to endear us to our heavenly Father. The proof that the Gospel is true is found in these tests of our own conversion—in our manifestations of the Spirit of Christ within us. In this respect, is not every conversion of a sinner a new miracle more wonderful than the healing of this lame man by Peter? And may we not, in view of these demonstrations of divine power, take courage and pray more confidently, in the name of Christ, for additional spiritual and temporal benefactions? The spirit of praise for what good we have received, and for the great and many blessings promised to us as the sons of God, should pervade not only our prayers, but every phase of our daily life. Then shall we feel the force of the words of the apostle James (5: 13): "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms." "God loveth a cheerful giver," but he loves also the grateful recipient of his favors.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—There are more Baptists in Georgia than any other State in the Union—329,851.

—The Baptist Year Book reports 160,247 received into fellowship by baptism, during the year 1891, and 42,396 expelled, showing that more than one-fourth of those received did not remain faithful.

—All the Baptist churches in Nova Scotia have banished from the communion table the wine of commerce and use unfermented wine.

—Of the thirteen churches received into the Chicago Association this year, more than half are the direct result of the work of the City Mission Society. Of the baptisms reported, one hundred are from missionary churches, and others are from missions where no churches are organized.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage will preach in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, the Channel Isles and Sweden while abroad.

—The North Congregational Church in Bridgeport, Conn., refuses the money given to it in the will of the late N. S. Worden. By that bequest the church was to receive $4,000 in trust till it should accumulate to $50,000, and then the income was to be expended in caring for the monument and cemetery, and in furnishing free seats to the worthy poor of the church.

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Cumberland Presbyterian General Assembly, by a vote of 104 to 90, has declared women eligible to the ruling eldership.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The States which stand highest in the Epworth League movement are: New York, 908 chapters; Ohio, 763 chapters; Illinois, 757 chapters; Pennsylvania, 595 chapters; Iowa, 551 chapters.

—The name of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is being mentioned in connection with the presidency of the Wesleyan Conference for next year. The conference will then meet at Cardiff, and a Welsh-born president is ardently desired by Welshmen for the occasion.

—British Methodists are moving for "fixity of tenure" in the pulpit. There are exceptions now for London, Liverpool, Glasgow, Manchester and Birmingham. Six years are proposed as the available term.

—The official statistics of Wesleyan Methodism in England show 424,952 members, a net increase of only 720. Outside of London Methodism is strongest in Halifax and Bradford.

—Bishop Ninde leaves Topeka, Kan., and will reside at Detroit; Bishop Mallalieu goes from New Orleans to Buffalo; Bishop Fowler from San Francisco to Minneapolis; Bishop Vincent, from Buffalo to Topeka, Kan.; and Bishop Fitzgerald, from Minneapolis to New Orleans. Bishop Goodsell will be at Fort Worth for a time, and then go to San Francisco.

—The camp meeting at Plano, Ill., is to be held this year from Aug. 3-10, and that at New Lennox, Ill., from Aug. 23-31. In each case the Epworth League day is the last day. The Plano camp meeting will be under the supervision of Dr. Cady, presiding elder of Joliet district, and the New Lennox meeting will be under the joint supervision of the presiding elders of Chicago and Joliet districts.

—Mrs. Mary B. Wright died at Pleasant Plains, Ill., June 20, aged eighty-four years. She came to Illinois as a missionary in 1831, was the wife of the first minister stationed in Macoupin county, and was a charter member of the first Methodist church of Carlinville.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Dr. H. K. Carroll, in an article in the Forum, analyzes the religious statistics of the census. The total of membership of all churches in 1890 was 12,500,000 representing an average gain in ten years of more than 28 per cent. The Methodist gain was 30 per cent—five per cent more than the gain in population. The Presbyterians show an increase of 39 per cent, the Lutherans 60 per cent. The Jews increased from 50,000 members of synagogues in 1880—to 130,000 members in 1890—an increase of 160 per cent. The Congregational church increased 33 per cent. The showing of the Catholic increase is less than 16 per cent. The estimated Catholic population is nearly 6,500,000.

—Some idea of the problem of converting India and its progress may be gathered from the following statement: In 1881 the population was 257,000,000; in 1891 it was 286,000,000, showing an increase in a single decade almost equal to that of the whole population of England and Wales. Of these, 207,000,000 are Hindoos, 57,000,000 are Mohammedans, 7,000,000 are Buddhists, while as yet only 2,284,196 can be spoken of as in any sense Christians. The figures are appalling. The increase of population in ten years is equal to thirteen times the number of those who "can be spoken of as in any sense Christians."

MORAVIAN.

—Moravian brethren at Bethlehem, Pa., have been enjoying a very pleasant celebration of their 150th anniversary. It is mentioned as something remarkable that hymns sung 150 years ago were rendered by the choir on this occasion.

—The Moravian church stands first in missionary enterprise of all denominations, and the United Presbyterians, of Scotland, second.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Presbytery of New York City, by a unanimous vote, decided to postpone the consideration of the Briggs case until October 3d. There will be no regular meeting of the Presbytery during the summer. This action makes an appeal to the Synod of New York impossible this year. The Synod meets early in October, and will adjourn before the Presbytery can dispose of the case. If the decision of the Presbytery is adverse to Dr. Briggs, he cannot appeal to the Synod until 1893, and a final decision may not be obtained until the meeting of the General Assembly in May, 1895.

—The membership of the Presbyterian Church in England is now 66,774, an increase of 933 over 1890. The receipts for 1891 amount to £235,650, nearly £4,000 less than in 1890.

—By a vote of 55 to 22 the presbyteries of the Free Church of Scotland adopted the "declaratory act," by which features of the Westminster Confession are softened in much the same way as has been done in the United Presbyterian Church.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—There are thirty ordained colored clergymen in the Protestant Episcopal church.

—The suggestion that the church go into the saloon business, made by Dr. Rainsford, a New York Episcopal rector, does not meet with approval even by saloon-keepers. They approve of church members patronizing the existing institutions.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—The latest mails from Uganda in Central Africa report that the Catholic missions in that region have been destroyed by Protestant missionaries, backed by the forces of the English East African Company. Doubtful; needs confirmation.

—The Catholics of Philadelphia and Baltimore will have a torchlight procession on the eve of October 12, and on the next day they will hold religious exercises in the morning and enjoy an oratorical and musical entertainment in the evening.

SALVATION ARMY, L. A.

—Rev. Dr. Chas. A. Briggs, Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, pastor of Plymouth church, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. B. F. Costa, of the Church of St. John the Divine, and Rev. Henry Wilson, formerly Dr. Rainsford's assistant at St. John's church, as well as Mrs. Abbott and Mrs. Briggs, have enrolled themselves in the Auxiliary League of the Salvation Army, and by this action have signified their approval of the objects of that organization.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOUSEKEEPING MADE EASY.

The way to make housekeeping easy is to do it by rule. "A time and place for everything, and everything in that time and place" is a familiar adage, but the practice of it is quite unfamiliar in many a home. Where such a rule does obtain there is more of comfort than where the plan is to "do as you please," and to do it when you please. With specified days for certain kinds of work, as Monday for washing, Tuesday and Wednesday for ironing, with the mid-week baking included, Thursday for the cleaning of pantries and silver, Friday for general sweeping, Saturday for baking, cleaning of windows, cellar, etc., etc.; with regular duties for each member of the household, even the children; with stated times for meals, so that those engaged in business, and the children attending school, are not fretted by having to wait, and then made late; the machinery of family life runs almost without friction, because one duty cannot interlock another.

"I do not always feel like work," says one accustomed to do as she pleases. The consciousness of something left undone is often a greater strain on nerve and strength than the labor would have been. When a hard task of any kind appears on the day's horizon, the easiest way, because the most satisfactory, is to go at it at once, and have it over. The pleasure that comes with the completion of such a task is decidedly restful. It is quite worth while to have the toothache "in order to experience the comfort that comes when the pain stops," said one who knew all about it.

System makes housekeeping easy not only by division of labor, but by the force that is brought to bear upon one thing at a time. No woman, nor man either, can do a hundred things at once and do them well. They will get nervous and flurried in such a case. But almost anybody can do one thing at a time well, and with a certain degree of enjoyment.

There must be system, too, about that family mending. It should be a rule never to put away torn garments. If not too much soiled, they should be mended before being laundered. The family mending, if done week by week, and not allowed to accumulate, will not be formidable. Believe it, lack of system is what makes housework burdensome, and—shall we add?—a cross wife and mother.—Christian Statesman.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

Never rinse colored articles in blued suds.

Soup should never be kept in metal vessels.

It is not always the cloudiest water which is most harmful. Look well to its color when at rest, and the sort of sediment which you find.

In washing black articles use some ammonia.

Never put salt on steak until after it is cooked.

Black pepper, mixed with cream and sugar, will destroy flies.

A large fire and quick boiling are great enemies of good soup.

The lid of a saucepan should never be raised over a smoky fire.

Towels with handsome bright borders should never be boiled.

Before broiling fish rub the gridiron with a piece of fat to prevent it sticking.

Shallow pans of water set about the house after painting will absorb the smell of paint.

Poorly ventilated kitchens make poor cooks, by destroying the sense of taste and smell.

Cream or milk, when put into soups, should be boiled separately, strained, and added boiling.

Rain water which is used either for drinking or cooking should not come in contact with lead.

The earthy taste often found in fresh water fish can be removed by soaking in salt and water.

The flavor of rich brown soups will be brought out better if a small piece of sugar be added to them.

Bits of camphor laid about closets where mice are wont to frequent will draw their visits to a close.

Nearly all colored fabrics stain the suds used to clean them, and that without losing their own brightness.

Quassia infused in boiling water and sweetened with sugar is a poison for flies, but innocent to human beings.

A little vinegar mixed with your stove polish will make the stove polish more brightly and quickly than the polish alone.

Rub cold tallow from a candle on to an ink spot, allow it to remain twenty-four hours and wash as usual. Properly done, this method is sure.

When sewing buttons on children's clothes where there will be much strain on the buttons, the danger of tearing the cloth out will be greatly lessened by putting a small button under the larger outside button. This applies, of course, only to buttons with holes through them.—Exchange.

Premature baldness may be prevented and the hair made to grow on heads already bald, by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Don't fool with Indigestion. Take BEECHAM'S PILLS.

FARM NOTES.

WHAT THE HORSE SUGGESTS.

Don't ask me to "back" with blinds on. I am afraid to.

Don't lend me to some blockhead that has less sense than I have.

Don't think because I am a horse that iron, weeds and briars won't hurt my hay.

Don't be so careless of my harness as to find a great a sore on me before you attend to it.

Don't run me down a steep hill, for if anything should give way I might break your neck.

Don't think because I go free under the whip I don't get tired. You would move up if under the whip.

Don't put on my blind bridle so that it irritates my eyes, or so leave my forelock that it will be in my eyes.

Don't whip me when I get frightened along the road, or I will expect it the next time and maybe make trouble.

Don't hitch me to an iron post or railing when the mercury is below freezing. I need the skin on my tongue.

Don't keep my stable very dark, for when I go out into the light my eyes are injured, especially if snow be on the ground.

Don't leave me hitched in my stall at night with a big cob right where I must lie down. I am tired and can't select a smooth place.

Don't forget to file my teeth when they get jagged, as I cannot chew my food. When I get lean it is a sign my teeth need filing.

Don't say whoa! unless you mean it. Teach me to stop at the word. It may check me if the lines break, and save a runaway and smash-up.—Courier Journal, Louisville, Ky.

HORSES THAT SELL BEST.

Here is a bit of useful information for both horse-breeders and dealers. An authority avers that horses to be sold in the New York market (and probably the same is true in other marts) for "general purpose" will bring the best prices when they conform as nearly as possible to the following standard: A good-sized, bony-head, full and kind eye, pricked ears, good crest, oblique shoulders, short on back, long on belly, somewhat arched at coupling, well ribbed up, heavy boned, short flat legs, compact, active, blocky, good-tempered, and a good walker. He should weigh from one thousand pounds upward.

EARLY CHICKS AND THEIR FOODS.

Cracked corn, wheat screenings, hay seed, or anything that the chicks will eat may be given them. It is a practice with some to feed corn meal in the shape of dough, and such food is excellent as a portion of the ration, but not as an exclusive food. If the cornmeal dough is first cooked as bread it will be more wholesome, and the mess will be improved in quality if the meal is mixed with milk instead of with water. Chicks should never be fed much sloppy food. Dry, hard food is more suitable for them, and a luxury for them will be a mess of lean meat cut up fine in a meat cutter. For green food for chicks, the clover leaves from barn sweepings, scalded, is excellent, and mashed potatoes will be highly relished. Keep little chicks busy all the time by inducing them to work at scratching for seeds. Exercise is very important in raising chicks, as it serves to prevent leg weakness, promotes appetite and renders them less liable to bowel disease.—Farm and Fireside.

Elsewhere in this issue we print a cheerful and characteristic "New Jersey Letter" from our excellent co-worker, Elizabeth E. Flagg, to whose hope that by the treatment which she is now undergoing at Newark she may be fully restored to perfect soundness, we are sure her many readers will prayerfully and heartily respond.

In one sense the United States, as a nation, is on trial. If the lower house of Congress shall pass the World's Fair Appropriation bill as it came from the Senate, including the Sunday-closing clause, it will add materially to the existing evidence that this is a Christian nation. If it decides in favor of granting the appropriation without the Sunday-closing provision, Europe and Asia will deem us recreant to our pretensions as a Christian nation. If it strikes out the appropriation and retains the Sunday-closing clause (as has been suggested), the Fair will correspondingly suffer for want of the money, but retain its reputation as a God-fearing institution; and if the directory of the Fair shall refuse to accept the appropriation on account of the Sunday-closing provision, it will be another illustration of the old proverb—"Bite off your nose to spite your face;" for the Fair needs the money to insure its perfect success. A crisis has been reached in the matter.

The arrest of Wm. F. Davis for preaching the Gospel in Boston Common, a few years ago, and the more recent arrest of two young men at Everett, Mass., for singing hymns in the public square on Sunday, has led him to appeal to the courts for redress and the perpetuity of freedom of speech in Massachusetts under the Federal Constitution. In order to carry on these suits and to vindicate the right of the Gospel to be heard without hindrance or assault, he also appeals to the friends of religious liberty to aid him by their influence, and especially by their surplus money. Mr. Davis is poor, expending his substance for the cause of Christ, and he, therefore, calls upon all who love the Lord and desire the advancement of his kingdom, to contribute to the necessary fund for carrying on the prosecution of those from whose attacks the Gospel is made to suffer. His address is Mt. Washington (Chelsea) Mass.

As another indication of the cosmopolitan growth of our country, and its adaptation to the needs of immigrants "out of every nation under heaven" (Acts 2:5), we look with peculiar interest upon the first issue of the Chinese-American Advocate, published weekly in Philadelphia, Pa., starting out with a circulation of 5,000 copies, and edited by a Chinese physician, Jin Fuey Moy. The letter-press is mostly in English, with a large proportion in Chinese characters. It is designed to elevate the Mongolians now in this country, favoring Sunday-schools and other Christian educational facilities, its editor being an assistant superintendent of the Chinese School conducted by the Church of the Epiphany in Philadelphia. Americans will find in their own tongue many items of information relating to the "celestials" at home and abroad.

Every true Christian should rejoice to learn that the blasphemous "Passion Play" of Oberammergau is not likely to be enacted, with all its horrors, in a mercenary spirit at the World's Fair, as was recently proposed. No matter in what burst of religious enthusiasm it originated in Switzerland; no matter what its pseudo-religious character, the scheme to reproduce it here next year seems to have met with a providential rebuke from the refusal of the native performers to come over and take part in it. The "Christ" of the drama, who appears to be a worthy man, says in reference to the revival of the play in America: "We give this play not for the financial profit there is in it, but as a religious duty; our work is simply the fulfillment of a vow made by our ancestors many years ago in recognition of God's mercy in relieving this village of the plague. God prospers our valley, and our people are contented. If we were to turn this rite to the ends of worldly gain we should be violating the spirit of our compact with heaven, and serious evil might befall us and ours."

The elections of members of Parliament in Great Britain, this year, have been intensified by the slowness that pervades the ballot system, and by the anxiety which has pervaded the public mind during the contest, and while awaiting the returns. The Conservatives have had the lead in the first count of votes, but gradually their majority was reduced as later reports was received. The hopes of the Liberals or Gladstonian party, were in the ascendant all last week, but even if they win, the hope of "Home Rule for Ireland," it is believed, has been defeated, or seriously delayed. The campaign has been unusually active, and has developed a general desire that the voting system of the kingdom should be speedily reformed, so that every man shall have one vote and no more, thus relieving the elections of much unnecessary complication. In America, the general elections in each State are held on one and the same day. In England they continue for several days and are cumbered with tantalizing hindrances. There is great room for reform.

When the Cynosure went to press, last week, the striking mechanics at Carnegie's works, Homestead, Pa., were masters of the situation, arrogant in their secret union of interests, and defiant of law and justice. But when the Governor of Pennsylvania ordered 8,000 citizen-troops to the scene and demanded peace, the arrogance and defiance subsided into enforced quietude. If there has been but little of the spirit of concession manifested on the part of the strikers, the support given by the troops has inspired the manufacturers with confidence, and strengthened their determination to conduct their business in their own manner, and to employ whom they please without dictation from oath-bound and supercilious associations. At this writing final conclusions on either side have not been reached. Threats on the part of the strikers are modified by the presence of the troops, and several weeks may elapse before the unruly element shall entirely disappear. Non-union men engaged to take the places of the strikers will need protection, which will be accorded to them, and the rancor of the union men will rage proportionately.

On Thursday last the United States Senate passed the bill appropriating $5,000,000 for the benefit of the Columbian Exposition, besides $500,000 for the promotion of the government exhibit at the Fair. The bill also contained a clause providing that the Exposition shall not be opened to the public on Sundays. The provision in the bill as it came from the committee, that no intoxicating beverages should be sold upon the Exposition grounds, was stricken out by a vote of 29 to 21. There is no penalty attached to the clause against opening the Exposition on Sundays; but as the appropriation is made upon this provision, it is expected that the managers of the Fair will respect it. There seems to be a moderate hope that the House of Representatives, when the bill comes before it, will suffer this clause to remain in it. A heavy proportion of the foreign vote throughout the country is opposed to Sunday closing, and it is matter for regret that its influence, in and out of Congress, is seldom cast in favor of the requirements of Christianity. The Christian people throughout the Union, however, have been very prompt and united in petitioning Congress for Sunday closing and their weight is shown in the character of the Fair bill as passed by the Senate.

INDIA—STILL INDIA.

BY REV. C. B. WARD.

It seems almost wrong to ask short-handed Cynosure supporters to help India. Yet it is not. On every hand I see secretism gaining ground among the natives of India.

A young man of my acquaintance recently joined the Freemasons. He defended himself by saying that many Christians were in the lodge he joined, which would not be if it were a thing of evil.

Aside from the India Watchman, at Bombay, we know no periodical in India that ventures to talk on the question, or advertise anti-secret literature on its own responsibility. There are a few papers that advertise for the Watchman.

It must be admitted that Masonry has a fast hold on India. It is quite the popular thing for Europeans here to enter Masonry as a security to success. Young men are taught that in the civil and military service so many in the superior posts are Freemasons; that it is advisable to join early or be very sure to be supplanted by some one whom Masonic favoritism exalts.

We are sorry to admit that this thing is spreading among native Christians, too. The surprise at the spread of Masonry need only be second to the surprise at the existence of a system of such horrible oaths at all.

Ignorance of the real character of secrecy and its oaths is profound, and Masons hesitate not deliberately to lie and deny the existence of the horrid oaths administered in their lodges every week.

There is an analogy between the success of the Roman Catholic confessional and that of the order of Freemasonry. What a few souls who see the evil can do, is pretty hard to say. But of one thing I am certain—as watchmen on Zion's walls we must cry aloud, and spare not, at the evil we see. Why should not the Cynosure readers pray for the raising up of a Cynosure missionary for India?

India wants a pioneer man who will walk up and down this land in the interests of this cause. No novice could succeed. A man is wanted who knows whereof he speaks, and full of the love of Christ and the power of the Holy Ghost.

It will be martyr work. Most good people will shrink from very openly acknowledging it. It will be work that will try the stuff the man is made of, and the genuineness of his call to the work, every day of his life.

Cheap literature must be scattered much more broadly than we can do it with all our other work. Yet any specialist in this line should be so endowed with the Spirit of Christ that he would conduct himself as man's best friend, and the ally of every other well-doer in other lines.

I do not expect this thought to materialize yet, but it ought so to do. Meanwhile, the friends must help us in what we do. We are thankful for the sympathy and assistance given us in the past.

We have done a great deal of advertising in the columns of the Watchman of the Cynosure publications, free of charge. We shall continue so to do. Much is done by the book depot sending out books and tracts on the subject; that costs us money.

Will not the friends of the cause give us $100 with which to put out 100 copies of the Watchman each month of 1893, each containing a pamphlet or large tract on the subject of secrecy? And let this 100 copies be sent three months to each of four sets of names, thus reaching 400 persons, who may be so selected as to exert a wide influence and arouse much needed attention to the seriousness of secrecy. The $100 will pay for the Watchman and the tracts and pamphlets.

I hope the Lord will stir up friends to lay this $100 on the altar in the Cynosure office before December 31, 1892. Let the friends of the cause pray for us—for India and this work.

The Cynosure is one of the first-opened papers that comes to my table. God bless the workers in America. It is clear that the cause is gaining ground, but a great battle is yet to be fought.

Yallandu, India.

PHARISEEISM AND SECRETISM.

BY REV. D. SIMON.

The Pharisees were the largest and strictest of the Jewish sects. The Scribes were the most learned among them, and were so-called because they were chiefly concerned about the sacred writings, or the inspired books of the Old Testament. This sect resulted from a development of Jewish notions, some of which, at least, seemed to be in harmony with divine revelation.

Two thoughts are especially important for our consideration if we would know this sect and understand its doctrines correctly: They did not understand the purpose for which God had given his law, and they misinterpreted many prophecies pertaining to the Christ. They seemed to think that God had given his holy law as a guide by which man could attain to everlasting happiness. St. Paul, who had himself been a zealous Pharisee, calls attention to this mistaken view concerning the use of the law. In Titus 1: 8, we find the following words: "The law is good, if a man use it lawfully." This statement implies that there is an unlawful use made of the law, and that when so used it is not good. In itself the law is good, for God is its author; but when used for a purpose different from that for which it is intended, it is made to serve an evil purpose and is not good. A razor serves a good purpose when rightly used, but it may become an instrument of death when used unlawfully.

"By the law is the knowledge of sin." Rom. 3: 20. The law tells us what God wants us to be and do, and by comparing what we are and do with the requirements of that law we find out how exceedingly sinful we are. When, then, we learn that God has pronounced a curse upon all who do not keep every letter of the law to do it, and that he is angry with the transgressor every day, we are driven to repentance. When John preached repentance he was preaching the law.

The Pharisees seemed to know nothing of this use of the law. They professed to be teachers of the law, but did not understand it, nor apply it rightly, themselves. The law of God was to them the way of salvation. Do this, and thou shalt live, was their principle. To them it was the presentation of the plan of salvation when God gave Moses the commandments on the burning and quaking mountain. They seemed to know of no way of being saved but by obedience to the whole law, ceremonial, political and moral. That an atoning sacrifice should be necessary to take away the sins of the people and save them from everlasting destruction seems not to have entered their minds. They shed the blood of animals, as directed by Moses, but seemingly failed to understand that these sacrifices were simply shadows of a greater sacrifice to be offered for all the sins of all men on Calvary.

Their whole system of doctrine had no room for One who came to save people from their sins. There was no meaning to them in the words of John: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." John 1: 29. The reason why they would not come unto Christ that they might have life, was because they did not realize that they needed such a Saviour. They were looking for some one to deliver them from the Roman bondage and restore to them the government; but there seems not to have been the remotest idea in their minds that the promised One should be their substitute to fulfill the law for them and to pay the penalty of sin. They rejected Christ because he was not what they were looking for, and his whole work had no place in their way of being saved.

It is surprising how many there are in the world, even in a Christian land, who occupy precisely the position of the Pharisees. Phariseism is proclaimed from thousands of Christian pulpits to professedly Christian people. Men who have died without having made any profession or confession of faith in Christ, are lauded to the skies because they were morally good people; or, if they would state the facts in the case, they would say because they were Pharisees. What a dreadful account some ministers will have to render on the day of reckoning when they shall present a record of every word they ever spoke.

What we have here said in a general way with reference to practical Phariseism, is intensely true with respect to secretism. It is the very essence of all the teachings of secret orders, so far as they advocate anything seemingly good. The whole system of religion and morals, as taught and practiced by these institutions, without exception, is but a rehash of the principles and practices of the Pharisees. Morality, exclusive of an atoning sacrifice; a code of morals without the plan of salvation; a religion without Christ; a way to life without repentance and faith in the divinely appointed Redeemer—this is Phariseism, this is secretism. No one can dispute what we here affirm, for not only do all the books and periodicals these associations publish furnish evidence to what we claim, but every funeral service they conduct, and every public defence they make, are but so many evidences of their Pharisaic character.

Whilst there is much in these orders that can be traced to heathenism, they are rather Jewish than Gentile in character. Against them and their way of salvation the Saviour warns the people when he says: "Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5: 20.

THE UNSPOTTED CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

From the abundant testimony of the evil nature and results of secret societies, I think it is clear that the church should defend her purity and honor; and protect her treasury by absolute non-affiliation. Has not the church a right to legislate for herself and to protect herself from the encroachments of worldly institutions? And is she not bound by the most sacred obligations to do so? I think there can be but one answer to these questions: She must keep herself unspotted from the world

As to how the churches should handle the secret society question, especially as to the presentation of it to the public, there may be different opinions and views. Some may handle it intelligently, but urge it upon the attention of the public too persistently. Others may in their zeal advance beyond their knowledge and thus subject a good cause to severe criticism. Others again may have neither zeal or wisdom, but occasionally shoot a random shot which is as likely to wound the cause as to wound the enemy. Then again it may be discussed in a vindictive or bitter spirit, which always brings reproach to a good cause. Or in an apologetical manner, which is a source of weakness and always gives the enemy great advantage in the conflict. In a great battle with a strong enemy it requires courage, skill and perseverance. The church has the talent, the grit and the grace to overthrow this dark system of idolatry, and God requires her to do it. How shall it be done? I answer, the pulpit must open fire upon the enemy. Rev. B. Carradine, an M. E. preacher, of St. Louis, has recently preached an able discourse against the lodge, and it has borne already good fruit. Rev. B. Kamp, a presiding elder in the M. E. church, very recently forbade the Masons and Odd-fellows to hold their anti-Christian service in the church at Muncie, Ind., over the remains of Rev. Metts, who was a member of the secret orders. Let all Methodist preachers who expect to please Wesley or Christ, do likewise, for they are both strong anti-secretists. If the pulpit was not muzzled on this great question, thousands of souls would be rescued from the coils of this mysterious power, and multiplied thousands of souls would be saved to the church whose affections are being alienated therefrom.

The press too is muzzled, and society is enslaved, justice is perverted and truth is crushed to the earth. While the enemy is massing her forces against the church of Jesus Christ, Christians and Christian ministers should present a bold front, and bearing the ensign of Calvary they should march on to victory.

Brethren, since the wisest statesmen, ministers, educators and reformers condemn this whole system of secretism as anti-Christian, corrupting society and endangering civil governments, shall we not continue in meekness and in love, but persistently and courageously, to maintain our position of non-conformity to the world and non-affiliation with these worldly societies? Yes! Yes!! A thousand times yes! Fifty thousand voices in this church are heard to respond, Yes. Having lifted up our banner in the name of the Lord we will rejoice in his salvation. Our position is invulnerable. These institutions are worldly. The church of Jesus Christ should be wholly separated from worldly institutions. This ground we can maintain in the conflict. We can make our appeal to Christian men and Christian ministers with a hope of success. We should not, I think, as a rule enter into disputations with the ungodly or with men of the world. But with Christians we should labor to show them that they dishonor God, reproach the church of Christ, and grieve the Holy Spirit by such affiliations. In the spirit of kindness let Christian men who see the evil of organized secrecy speak to their Christian neighbors and friends upon this subject and entreat them to come out from them. Let men who are able to defend the cause speak and write on the subject, giving hard arguments in soft words—words tempered with kindness. While the secular press is largely closed against us, yet I think we ought to utilize it more fully to get our position and arguments before the public. We are at fault, I think, in not persisting in having a hearing in the secular press. We are bearing testimony more effectively against the orders than ever before because of the late division and numerous lawsuits which our Liberal brethren have instituted. The record we are making in defense of the historic principles of the church will be accumulative in its influence and power as the nature of this conflict and struggle becomes more fully known. As a matter of fact, considered in its moral and religious sense, we can better afford to suffer the loss of our property than the loss of principle and the loss of our testimony as to the power of popular influences in a struggle of right against wrong.

Secrecy is destroying the churches; sapping their life; robbing their treasury; destroying their influence over sinners; driving penitents from their altars; alienating the affections of the saints, and bringing reproach upon the cause of God.

The churches must take their stand for purity, for God against Baal and Mammon. If I were a young man I would expect to live to see all the truly evangelical churches of the land come to our position and stand shoulder to shoulder with us in this struggle against these powers and this wickedness in high places.

Brethren, let us be patient; be firm; be courageous. The God of Elijah will deliver us. And in his own good time he will vindicate his own cause.—From a Sermon by Bishop Halleck Floyd, of Canada, in the Christian Conservator.

MASONIC ABSURDITY.

The pretended antiquity of Freemasonry is refuted by the internal evidence which itself furnishes. The letter G is represented to be one of the mysterious characters in King Solomon's Masonry; but it is a historical fact that the letter G was not invented until many centuries after Solomon's time. Some Masons are simple enough to paint it upon their tavern signs, as if some important mystery hung around it.

It is also represented that when (in the "sublime degree" of Master Mason) the three ruffians, Jubela, Jubelo, and Jubelum—whose very names indicate them to be fabulous persons—assaulted Grand Master Hiram Abiff, they demanded of him the "word" of a Master Mason, so that they could travel in foreign countries and receive wages as Master Masons. You must remember that at that time there were only three Master Masons in the world (and they only existed as such in the imagination of modern Masons), viz: Solomon, Hiram of Tyre and Hiram Abiff. Now, I ask, of what use could a knowledge of that "word" be to the three Fellow Crafts, when no others knew it except THOSE three Grand Masters at Jerusalem?

This is not only inconsistency but absolute absurdity.

Some have been induced to look upon Masonry as venerable for its antiquity. In that regard, I assure you, it is a cheat and an imposture. The story of Hiram Abiff is an idle tale, invented to gull the unsuspecting. The more intelligent Masons of our country do not hesitate to declare that there is no evidence whatever that Noah, or King Solomon, or John the Baptist, were Freemasons. The origin of the fraternity can be traced no farther back than the year 1717; the most learned of our country have sought for evidence of its existence beyond that period, but in vain.—A Seceder, in Infidelity Unmasked, 1831.

TESTIMONY AGAINST THE LODGE.

NATHANIEL EMMONS.

A witness of the last century is found in the "Memoir of Nathaniel Emmons," by Prof. Edwards A. Park, D. D., of Andover Theological Seminary, issued by the Congregational Board of Publication, Boston, in 1861. Rev. Nathaniel Emmons, D. D., was an active pastor for fifty-four years, and a minister of the Gospel for seventy-one years. He was born in 1745, and died in 1840, in his ninety-sixth year, having been one of the most eminent Congregational clergymen of America. In this volume, on page 444, is the following:

"His Services in the Cause of Anti-masonry:—It had been his lifelong tendency to prize individual thought, to rely on such truth as could stand in the light of day, to oppose factious influence, especially if it be secret. Accordingly he frowned upon all institutions that aimed to hide their light under a bushel. He knew that many eminent divines were Freemasons, and that many,—among them even Dr. Charles Backus—while they did not unite with the lodge, consented to preach before it. But the open-hearted Emmons had long predicted mischief from the clandestine union. He uttered, eighty years ago (1780) the very complaints against the structure of Freemasonry which its political opponents began to utter about thirty years ago. When the political opposition arose against the Masonic brotherhood, about the year 1830, he had no change to make in his opinions. He there expressed before the world what he had been wont to utter before his pupils and parishioners. He was then eighty-five years old; but letters from fresh Anti-masons poured in upon him in profusion, soliciting his presence at their conventions, and urging him to say in public assemblies what he had always declared in social circles, that the Masonic lodge is 'an imposition on the world' by means of its gaudy displays and pompous titles and allurements to vice. The services which he then rendered to Anti-masonry have been acknowledged by the most eminent Anti-masons of that day.

DAVID NELSON,

author of "The Cause and Cure of Infidelity," left this testimony against the lodge: "When I was a young man, I was an infidel, a gambler, and a Freemason. When I became a Christian, I laid them all aside together."

FREEWILL BAPTISTS AND THE LODGE.

It has been stated recently in several papers that the Freewill Baptist denomination is under the control of secret society men. This the Morning Star of Boston has repeatedly and indignantly denied. The June election of officers by the New Hampshire Freewill Baptist Yearly Meeting would seem to weaken the vehement assertions of the Star. The N. H. Y. M. is the oldest, one of the largest and most influential in the denomination. Its President, Rev. Lewis Malvern, is a prominent and very active Freemason and Odd-fellow. Its Secretary, Rev. E. K. Prescott, is a Freemason. Its Treasurer, Dr. E. L. Carr, is an active secret society man. Of its ten directors, six are known to be active members of secret societies, and some of the other four are probably so. Of the Executive Committee of five, four are known to be active members of secret societies, three of them very prominent Freemason ministers. In view of these facts how can the Morning Star deny that the Freewill Baptist Yearly Meeting of New Hampshire, composed of about 10,000 members, is under the control of secret society men? We are sorry to record these deplorable facts.—The Christian Witness, New Market, N. H., July, 1892.

AMERICANS, TAKE WARNING.

The following from Mr. Lincoln, American Minister in London, shows that the "unclaimed foreign estate" swindler is in full swing again. Although the exposures by the Reporter from time to time have had the effect of stopping much of the advertising, it is evident that the fellow reaches the country people in some way, and newspapers throughout the country should, as a matter of protection to their constituencies, give this warning universal publicity:

LONDON, June 17.—United States Minister Lincoln requests that Americans be warned that the notorious William Lord Moore is again at work with renewed vigor, and is sending letters to Americans for the purpose of getting their money as retainers for his supposititious services in pressing their claims to enormous estates in England. Moore has been exposed repeatedly as a swindler, yet seems able to find many victims in the United States. After the American Legation had found Moore and frightened him last winter he suspended his activity for a short time, but three months ago he began again. Neighbors say that Moore seems to do all his work at night, and that he has few callers. His landlord says that he gets a heavy mail daily. The London police watch him, and have informed the legation that they are anxious to arrest him and bring him to trial, but that they can do this only after some person from the United States whom Moore has tried to swindle shall have made a complaint here in person.—American Advertiser Reporter.

For many years S. A. Edgerly, of New York, suffered from digestive difficulties to such an extent that he could scarcely eat anything. A long and severe course of treatment restored him to health and he could then eat without discomfort. He adopted a most imprudent course of life, eating all sorts of rich and indigestible food, although against his physician's advice. Suddenly he suffered a total collapse, his mind became affected and his organs of speech paralyzed so that he was unable to utter a word. Again he is under a physician's care, who hopes that his speech may be restored by time and treatment.—Selected.

A NEW JERSEY LETTER.

New Jersey through New England eyes.—A visit to the Convent of the Perpetual Adoration.—A ride to the Orange Mountains.

Looking up through the leafy screen of this giant wisteria vine which drapes the chamber window at which I am writing, I see that the skies of New Jersey are nowise different from those that arch the old Bay State; and, descending to things more material and earthly, I find that the few points of difference can be counted on one's fingers. The preponderance of Dutch and German, instead of Irish, names on the signboards is perhaps one of the first things that strike a New Englander; and if he has never before been out of Yankee land the method of computing distances by "blocks" instead of miles or fractions of miles will fall oddly upon his ears, and be at first a source of much confusion. With the ubiquitous Jersey mosquito he is supposed to be acquainted by report, and after they have duly presented their bills with as much sang froid as a New York modiste presents her's, he is quite ready to believe the generally accepted tradition, that they know a stranger at sight. But, domiciled as I am in one of those delightful suburban homes where the city and the country seem to meet each other with a friendly shake of the hand like old acquaintances—a home where the highest Christian culture is united with the most large hearted and active benevolence—I begin to feel that I love New Jersey to such an extent that I am willing to at least tolerate even her mosquitoes. And could the devotion of her own sons and daughters farther go?

Roseville, a delightful suburb of Newark, is the home Mr S. A. Darrach, where I am now staying for treatment, and whose novel appliances to aid the halt and maimed should make his name a household word throughout the country; but, unfortunately, his retiring disposition and lack of means to advertise have hindered him from achieving more than a local fame. His genius deserves a world-wide recognition. Some account of his wonderful cures and the manner in which they are performed I will give in my next letter. Mrs. Darrach is a bright and charming woman—a West Indian by birth, who nobly seconds her husband in his efforts to benefit suffering humanity. She is a standing illustration of the paradox that the busiest women have the most leisure. With all the care of her large household upon her, she finds time to listen to the numberless calls made upon her in the line of charity, besides doing occasional literary work. At present she is engaged, heart and soul, in trying to secure a home in Newark for crippled children, where they can be treated and receive that care and attention which is impossible in the wretched homes from which so many of them come.

It is not strange that people whose lives are thus spent in doing good should be opposed to a system so selfish as Masonry. I found in Mr. Darrach a stong opponent of all the hidden works of darkness, though he had never read a line of literature on the subject, and was entirely ignorant of any organized movement against the lodge. Reform seems to be in a backward state in Newark, judging from the number of its liquor saloons and the general apathy which seems to prevail on this and other vital questions. I find, however, that the Romish problem is fast becoming the burning one that it is in Boston. Yesterday Mrs. D. kindly took me to call upon a friend who has done much for this reform in a quiet way by circulating Mr. Leyden's "Secret Instructions of the Jesuits," and other anti-Romanist literature. I found that this lady, though unenlightened on the subject of Masonry, was possessed of the true reform spirit which is receptive to truth on all lines. She showed a cordial interest in our work as well as desire to know more about it, and assured me that her husband had always been opposed to secret societies. Indeed, the latent anti-secrecy sentiment in Newark would, I feel sure, make quite a showing, could it be developed and brought to the surface.

It is surely time that the women of Newark were organized, as in Boston, to confront the Romish Babylon which dares in our boasted land of liberty to establish a place like the Convent of the Perpetual Adoration. France has forbidden such an institution to be planted within her borders, but America—land of the Pilgrims—freely allows this most abominable of all the fruits of the Jesuit tree. The other day I went in company with Mrs. D. to see what I could of the building, into which no visitor is admitted farther than the chapel. The grounds are trimly kept, and the ivy which clothes the outside walls with a rich green mantle, takes away something of its forbidding look; but the high board fence, and the barred windows, strike a chill to one's very marrow. Well may the familiar passage from Dante's Inferno be written over its portals:

"Ye who enter here leave hope behind."

For once within its walls the unfortunate inmate can never come out again alive or dead. When she dies she is buried, in spite of sanitary laws, somewhere under the floor of the convent, —and thus her living tomb becomes also her grave. Could anything be more horrible? There they must stay all their lives, under a vow of perpetual silence; with their bare, fireless cells and board pallet at night, and not a single healthy, human interest to take up their minds; —nothing but the same perpetual round of embroidering altar cloths and chanting the praises of the Virgin. What soul tragedies, ending in insanity, or driveling imbecility, may be going on behind those walls! Heaven help the poor victim who finds out her terrible error when too late. Beneath the convent are underground passages, where all the horrors of the Inquisition could be enacted, and not a sound reach the ears of the outside world.

We seated ourselves in the chapel, and gazed at the handsome marble altar, behind which an archway with folding doors led—I was about to say—into the nuns' private chapel; but as it was barred and grated like a cage for wild animals, such an expression is a misnomer. We happened to enter just in time to witness a service of some kind. The folding doors were thrown open, and at the same time thick curtains were drawn across. But some tricksey sprite seemed to have taken possession of the aforesaid curtains. They stuck fast and acted in such a thoroughly depraved manner that Mrs. D. and myself actually caught a glimpse of several of the black-robed figures who are supposed never to be seen by any anybody belonging to the outside world. Then the candles over the altar were lit and the nuns began to chant—sweetly as a company of the Blessed. One was caught up into a very paradise of sound. Sometimes it was so faint, and far off, and tender, that I could only think of saints standing on the farther side of the death-flood, and calling to those just ready to pass over. But the voices died away into silence, and the tinkling of a small bell announced the coming of the priest, whose appearance was quite enough to put to flight all our heavenly visions.

He was dressed in a flowing robe lined with the symbolic hue of the Scarlet Woman, a skirt of dirty white silk showing underneath as he walked, while over his shoulders was a cape embroidered with cabalistic figures that we were too ignorant to decipher. He had one of the most villainous faces I ever gazed upon; and as this nondescript creature walked up to the altar, he strongly suggested Poe's rhymes:

"I am neither brute nor human;
I am neither man nor woman;
I'm a ghoul!"

The acolyte who attended him certainly had his hands full, for he was kept constantly employed in putting on and taking off the stole from the shoulders of his reverend superior, and in swinging a censer back and forth by which I was incensed in more ways than one. I know the Cynosure readers will forgive me for making a pun when the provocation was so great.

Coming out, I asked one of the worshipers, a pleasant-faced young Irishwoman, what the nuns did in case of illness: if doctors were excluded along with all the rest of the profane world. She said they were attended by the lay nuns and the priests. When I told her that I considered such a life far worse than death, she looked at me in pitying surprise. "It is the happiest way of life possible," she said. "These holy women are always happy." I asked her how she knew, as according to her own statement no one could go in to find out. She looked nonplussed for a moment, and then repeated her former assertion that she knew the nuns must be happy. I alluded to the very different life led by our Lord, and that we are commanded to follow in his footsteps; but she evidently knew nothing of the Bible beyond the few scraps that might be in her prayer-book. She informed me that she was at one time healed of rheumatism and sundry other ills by a rose which the priest had blessed. I felt sick at heart as I realized the depths of ignorance and groveling superstition in which Rome keeps her unfortunate victims. She alluded to Father Adams, the Brooklyn priest, whose "cures" have been so widely reported in the papers; and said that Protestants as well as Catholics could avail themselves of these healing benefits. But a few questions elicited the fact that he demanded pay from even the poorest, though all he did was to show them a toe-nail of St. Joseph or some other equally redoubtable relic; and gold in the palm of a Protestant gleams as brightly as in that of a Roman Catholic.

I am told that when the convent was in process of building a quantity of the stones used in its erection were blessed by the priest and then sold for a good round sum apiece. Whoever bought one of these stones, bought with it a three years' indulgence for all the sins he might commit. I recommend this little item to the attention of Boston's School Board. It might prove valuable to refer to should another Swinton's History case come up.

A delightful drive to the Orange Mountains, which took in Lleywellen Park, and other objects of interest, was a pleasure for which I am likewise indebted to the thoughtful kindness of my hostess. The Park itself, with its magnificent trees shooting up from the green sward, its well kept grounds and handsome villas, showed what art and nature combined can do. Our driver, Mr. Ogletree, was a perfect fountain of information, and the kindness with which he pointed out and explained every object of interest on the route, added much to the charms of the drive. Of course, the grand objective point at which all sightseers aim is the home of Edison. We could not gain admittance to the factory, which was closed, but we gazed our fill at the mansion, which was a fine one, though not exceptionally so. I will say here that I make no attempt to describe any of the numerous handsome villas which make Lleywellen Park represent more wealth and fashion in a given space than perhaps any similar spot in the United States, unless I take this opportunity to enter my protest against that lack of taste which will build sham castles on American soil. I certainly saw a bewildering variety of cupolas, and gables, and mullioned windows; but like Gilbert Stuart, who, in response to a fair settler's complaint that he had not paid sufficient attention to painting her dress, said he was not a mantua-maker, so I am not an architect and never attempt architectural descriptions. No glimpse of the wizard, whose feats with the lightning would make simple old Dr. Franklin stare aghast, was vouchsafed us. "Tom," as our knight of the reins—I cannot say of the whip, for his sleek, beautiful horses obeyed with intelligent sympathy the slightest word or sign from their master—rather irreverently styled him, "was never to be found at home at that time of day."

The sunshine fell in streaks of golden green. The rhododendrons, wild and cultivated, bloomed here and there. On we went up the beautiful winding mountain road till we reached McClellan's Heights, so named from Gen. McClellan, whose former mansion stands on the very summit. Then opened before us a panorama, the like of which we had never seen before. New York, Brooklyn, Hoboken, Jersey City, and Newark, with smaller towns and villages, lay spread out like a pictured map; while far away, quivering in the hazy distance, stretched a long blue line—the Palisades of the Hudson. I can well believe the statement that we were gazing down on the homes of three million people. It is doubtful if another view in the world takes in so much populated country. We could see the Brooklyn Bridge and the Bartholdi statue, while, near by, towered up the chimney of Clark's thread mill at Newark, said to be the tallest in the world, with one exception, and that is at Mr. Clark's thread works in Scotland, which, as he is a native-born Scotchman, he built a trifle higher, so that in the matter of chimneys, at least, America should not overshadow the land of Bruce. It was of such a scene of beauty that Harriet Martineau once said, "she was afraid to shut her eyes for fear it would melt."

On the opposite side, a narrow footpath led down the mountain. This was originally an Indian trail, and later on was trod every Sunday by the earnest-minded settlers who went on foot across these two mountain ridges, to worship in the little Presbyterian log church in Orange. Think what a journey it must have been in the winter! At the head of the pathway is a stone cross, and on the arm of the cross this inscription: "The Pilgrims' Path;" while on a stone tablet at the foot is graven the following stanza:

"The Christian pilgrims
Who this path have trod,
Are now in heaven
And walk with God."

Through the kindness of Mr. Ogletree, our "guide, philosopher and friend," I have been placed in possession of the fact commemorated by this curious waymark. Some distance back he informed me that we were on the same road that Washington took in going from Morristown to Trenton, and this little footpath, worn by so many Pilgrim feet, has also its halo of Revolutionary memories; for when the American army was retreating from Lord Cornwallis, the latter followed as far as the foot of the mountain, when two men were seen coming down the path. On being taken and questioned they informed the British that the woods were full of American soldiers, which misleading reply caused the English general to discontinue his pursuit, thus saving Washington's army from total annihilation.

We wound down the mountain, passing on our way the causeway from which the stone is quarried which forms the bedding of the roads hereabouts, and where an engine, like the he-goat of Daniel's vision, "strong and dreadful exceedingly," crushed them between its great iron teeth; and then home to tea just as the shadows of the eventide were falling thick and fast, and wrapping the beautiful Orange Mountains in their veil of dreams and silence.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 13, 1892.

In the very interesting discussion on the question of closing the World's Fair on Sunday, in the Senate this week, Senator Pettigrew, speaking in favor of closing the Exposition on that day, said that consideration was due to the petitions which had been presented to Congress asking that the Exposition be closed on Sunday, of which there were more than 4,000, containing the names of 2,826,000 persons, against 516 petitions, signed by 20,588 persons, against Sunday closing. Senator Vest favored opening the gates on Sunday, with a cessation of all labor and the holding of a religious service in a hall to be provided by the Exposition managers, the hall to be open to all denominations. Senator Manderson opposed the running of machinery on Sunday, but favored the opening of the gates, in order that the people might be educated by visiting the works of art which will be on exhibition. Senator Palmer favored leaving the matter to the managers of the Exposition, who had informed him that they would close the mechanical part of it on Sunday. Senator Hawley favored closing on Sunday, and said it would not be done unless Congress so ordered. He said the opening of any part of the Exposition on Sunday would be a turning point in American history, as no State, city or county exposition had up to this time ever opened its gates on Sunday. Senator Peffer said the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors within the grounds was, in his opinion, of greater importance than Sunday closing. Senator Frye favored closing on Sunday. Senator Hiscock favored Sunday closing, in deference to the known wishes of a large majority of the people.

A bulletin was issued this week by the census bureau giving statistics of the various branches of the Presbyterian church in this country. According to this bulletin the Presbyterian church of the United States of America contains 6,717 organizations, has 6,663 churches valued at $74,455,200, and 788,224 communicants. The Presbyterian church of the United States is given

2,391 organizations, 2,288 church buildings valued at $8,812,152, and 179,721 communicants. The Welsh Calvinistic Methodist or Presbyterian church is given 187 organizations, 189 churches valued at $625,875, and 12,722 communicants. The Cumberland Presbyterian church is given 238 organizations, 192 buildings valued at $202,961, and 13,439 communicants. The grand total of membership is 1,278,815.

"Individual Responsibility" was the subject upon which Rev. Dr. Francis A. Horton, of Providence, R. I., talked to the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon. Blessed and happy, said he, is that individual member of the world or of the church who stands just where God has placed him and gives all his talents to the Master's service. Blessed is the person who cares nothing for criticism or for what others are doing, but sets out to do what God requires of him. "It is a solemn thing to live—a happy, joyous thing—but we are living in a deep eternity. We must not stand still wishing we had more to do, but must do what we can. The world is full of little niches in which we can stand. If you are a Colossus, the Master will place you in a Colossus niche. If you are a pigmy you will be in a pigmy niche. God does not expect a humming-bird to incubate an ostrich egg. We must stand right by our work. If down among the hidden stones at the foundation, we must hold on eternally, knowing that the spire at the top rests on us."

The pulpit of the new People's church was occupied last Sunday by Senator Peffer and Representative Davis, both of whom delivered addresses bearing upon the unfortunate labor troubles in Pennsylvania. The pastor of the church also spoke on the same subject. At another Washington church a sermon was preached on the labor strike, in which some very strong expressions of opinion were uttered.

In view of the spread of the cholera in Europe, and in order that the authorities may be prepared should it come to America, Senator Chandler has given notice of his intention to offer an amendment to the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, appropriating $350,000 to meet any extraordinary emergency that may arise in connection with epidemic diseases.

Senator Vorhees has offered a resolution declaring that in all disagreements and controversies between employed laborers and the owners of capital who employ labor, that the principle of prompt and peaceful arbitration should be employed by both parties and put into practical operation for a settlement of difficulties. Senator Hale thought that such arbitration was provided for in the act of October 1, 1888, and asked that the resolution go over until he could examine that law. If Senator Hale is right, the law should at once be enforced at Homestead, Pennsylvania, and if he is wrong a law should be enacted before Congress adjourns, making arbitration compulsory. *

REFORM NEWS.

WASHINGTON AGENT IN NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON, Mass., July 14, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—We have just returned from a delightful trip down the harbor to Nantasket Beach. Rev. J. W. Fifield, pastor of the Pacific Congregational Church, Chicago, and Mr. Troop, his Sabbath school superintendent, who have been with us for the past three days, have started for New York via the majestic Fall River line. The beaches are all in holiday attire. The hotels are thronged with the thousands who have escaped from the heat and dust of the cities for a season of refreshing in and around mother earth's great bath-tub.

I shall not attempt a description of the hucksters and hacksters, catch-penny shows, and the thousand-and-one devices for extracting our nickels, quarters, or dollars, as the case may be. To be appreciated they must be seen. I watched the maneuverers of a short, thick-set, bleary-eyed fellow, calling himself a "Prof. Dr." something. He was working the "Spider and Fly" game. On his breast were pinned the emblems of some half-dozen secret societies. I noted, among them, the K. of P., I. O. O. F., and Masonic. He stood in front of a 4-by-8 shanty on which were flaming advertisements telling that he was a scientist, astrologer, etc. He had the photographs of all the recent Presidents. These, with thousands of others, had consulted him (so he explained) in regard to their past, present, and future prospects. If he could tell the past and present of a man's history, he could surely tell the future, he argued. Persons consulting him need not pay anything if not satisfied; if satisfied, fifty cents. Doubtless all would be satisfied to get out alive. If not at first satisfied, they could remain until they were. While I stood watching the fellow spring his trap, the "fly" that appeared was a young man evidently fresh from the country. If his curiosity to ascertain what is behind the curtain is fully satisfied by this experience, it may be a happy thing for him. If he follows the so-called "Prof. Dr." "in ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," he will find his fortune "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

I stopped some days at Crescent Beach at the Victoria Cottage kept by Mr. McLeod. I found him in sympathy with our work, and secured his subscription to the Cynosure. Gospel meetings are being conducted there by some young people calling themselves "Gospel Crusaders," Rev. Mr. Park and his wife, of Canada, leading. I attended four services on Sabbath, which I found to be spiritually profitable. I spoke as opportunity was given, and supplied many with tracts pertaining to our work. I hope to do more in this line before attending camp meeting and going to the mountains, where I hope to arrange some lectures. Will any friends in Vermont or New Hampshire who can arrange for me to speak in their towns, within six weeks, write to me at 218 Columbus Ave., Boston?

Should any reading this feel moved to contribute to further distribute our literature to those on the beach, I will carefully apply to that purpose any funds placed in my hands, as the interests of the cause may seem to demand. It was estimated that over 10,000 people were at Crescent Beach last Sabbath. The majority doubtless came seeking pleasure. They were as restless as the sea which lashed its waves at their feet. They need to be shown that peace alone can be found in a loving trust in Jesus. Yours for Christ and reform, W. B. STODDARD.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

We have a standing offer to send the Cynosure during the life of any one person, upon the receipt of $30.00; and our friend John Dorcas, Esq., of Iowa, proposed to us, upon his call the other day at our office, to open a list of five-year subscribers from January 1st, 1893. Bro. Dorcas heads the list. There will be several advantages in the five-year subscription plan. Your names only are needed now.

The New England agent will visit Berlin, Ontario, Canada, on the 30th, inst., and labor in that city and adjacent ones, until August 12th next. Brother Stoddard will then spend two days in Toronto, August 13th and 14th. From that city he will go to Ridgeway, Can., for a few days' work. Let all of our Canadian friends pray for these meetings and attend them, if possible.

The Washington, Oregon, department is being vigorously pushed. There are already sixty-five members in this auxiliary to the N. C. A., and it includes eight ministers. THEIR FIRST CONVENTION WILL BE HELD AUGUST 23D AND 24TH, 1892, only about one month from this date. A district agent has been secured, to begin his lecture work about September 1st. I shall be glad to receive subscriptions and money for this Pacific work.

Look for farther notice of this convention next week.

I wish some one would invent a machine for impressing on the minds of our friends the value of tract distribution! A letter before me, from a minister, says: "I picked up an anti-secret tract on the floor of Fisk University. It has led to my salvation, and that of many others, from the lodge."

A merchant writes that he uses our tracts in his business letters, and has sent them into nearly two hundred wholesale houses, in different cities. He has heard from a few, and believes that many, under God, will tell for our reform.

Rev. S. Mathew writes that many have been converted to this reform by the tracts which he has circulated during the last ten years. He says: "I have proved that the circulation of tracts is a very important part of the work of reform."

Now, friends, take the Weed pamphlets, Carradine's Sermon, Cook's Address, and other cheap literature and begin a new campaign in your neighborhood this summer and fall.

Rev. Wm. Fenton and myself will make a lecturing tour through Northern Iowa this week. Pray for us. W. I. PHILLIPS.

PERSECUTION AS AN EYE-OPENER.

The following note, received by Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, indicates that the threatened assault upon the Floating Chapel by incensed Odd-fellows, at Leavenworth, Ind., last spring, is opening the eyes of some as to the cruel spirit of the lodge:

"GERMAN ENGLISH COLLEGE, CHARLES CITY, IOWA."

"DEAR BRO.:—Though a perfect stranger to you, yet I perceive what manner of spirit speaks from your correspondence in the Cynosure of April 21, 1892, which paper comes to our college reading-room.

"Go on in your blessed reform work, in the strength of Him who has promised to be strength to the weak.

"I had no idea of the grossness of the sin occasioned by secret societies. Yours,
"PHILLIP WACKER."

It is announced that representatives of various college Greek-letter fraternities in the United States have formed an organization of a permanent character, bent on making an exhibit at nation is known as the "College Fraternities Exhibit Committee," and its officers, it is said, have been elected from persons representing some of the many secret college orders and the non-secret Delta Upsilon. The organization also includes the college girls' "sororities," a comparatively new development of the secret societies in institutions of learning. Considerable curiosity is manifested as to the character of the exhibits to be made by this committee and for which space is to be secured at the Fair. In the words of a contemporary, "we shall scarcely look for a collection of mystic grips, signs and passwords! What then?" Possibly the wagon-pole which caused the death, at Yale, the other day, of Wilkins Rustin,—the appliances used by the D. K. E. in brutally initiating the son of Wm. L. Garrison; or the trophies of midnight raids upon the property of unoffending citizens.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD'S INSTRUCTIVE HISTORY.

NORTHFIELD, Minn., July, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Although Dr. Blanchard has gone to his reward, his memory will long remain and his example speak. He did noble work for Christ, and such men were never more needed than now—fearless, "above the world," assailing "whatsoever exalteth itself against God."

He did very valuable work in the great anti-slavery revolution. I was an editor in the cause in Maine; but by an exchange of papers, we were in fraternal co-operation in that and his faithful war on Masonry, that deceptive relic of paganism with a thin religious dress. Why is it not better exposed? That able, fair, excellent article by his son (Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard's Address before the students at the Chicago Congregational Theological Seminary, last spring) ought to be in every religious paper in the land, and 500,000 should be printed in a pamphlet for every library. Will not the Chicago Theological Seminary have this done?

One great movement in which Pres. Blanchard was prominent has lessons of much present value. I quote from my Anti-slavery History:

"A great religious anti-slavery convention was held in Chicago, in July, 1850, which had not been exceeded in importance, piety and ability. There were 265 enrolled delegates from eleven States, one hundred of them ministers, including college presidents, professors, judges, lawyers, etc., prominent among whom were Presidents Blanchard, Mahan and Finney. All denominations were represented. Its great and sacred object was to enlist the Christian religion against slavery. They said 'they had argued and waited for religious bodies to act, but generally with no success. They were trammelled by the proud conservatism of the Atlantic cities; it was time to act, at least at the West.'

Their report said: "There can be no form of evil, moral, civil, or political, against which Christian literature ought to array itself, if not against slavery: that intentional silence in respect to any gross wrong is open advocacy of that wrong; that to excuse or palliate any form of known sin by such literature is to array itself against the fundamental principles of Christian morality; that this convention feels compelled to testify to the melancholy fact that to a very great extent the religious literature of this nation is most un-Christian and morally corrupting respecting one of the worst forms of moral evil on which the eye of heaven ever rested." They, therefore, resolved that "this defect is the cause of the rapid growth of infidelity; that all Christians make the correction of this deplorable wrong a subject of constant public and private prayer; that religious publications which are either decidedly pro-slavery, or at this crisis-period practically, if not directly, concede that we ought to obey man rather than God, should never be allowed in Christian families."

Here the standard of God's religion was nobly raised by faithful hands, and it had great power.

Where is the Christian church practically to-day in presence of the greater liquor crime? Would that another such convention could be held in Chicago, with its Finney, Blanchard and Mahan!

A. WILLEY.

A VISIT TO BEREA COLLEGE.

BOSTON, Mass., July, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On the solicitation of Bro. John G. Fee and others, I left Boston for Berea, Ky., June 20th ult. Eighty-six miles by the N. E. R. R., in two hours and 7 minutes, brought me to Willimantic, Conn., where our train made its first stop. Here I met Bro. J. A. Conant, and after conference decided to precede him to Washington, where I spent a day with my son and friends in the capital city. The health of my son evidently called for a change and rest, and it was arranged for him to accompany me on my return to Boston.

As previously agreed, I met Bro. Conant at the depot on the 22d, and we journeyed via the B. & O. R. R. to Cincinnati, where, changing to the Kentucky Central, we arrived at Berea at 4 o'clock P. M. Pres. Stewart and Bro. J. F. Browne welcomed us at the depot, and we were soon enjoying the hospitality and Christian sociability of the President's home, to which we had been assigned as guests during our stay.

Graduating exercises at the college had occurred the day previous, and only a remnant of the nearly four hundred students remained in town. Commencement at Berea is a notable occasion, and the people gather from miles in every direction. Five young men graduated with honors, and the entire program of the day was highly commended by all whom I heard speak of it.

Bro. Addison P. Foster, of Boston, and Bro. Geo. R. Leavitt, of Cleveland, Ohio, were in advance of us, on the same mission of "peace and good-will to men." Vacancies were to be filled in the board of trustees, and additions were contemplated, and it seemed desirable that those upon whom the lot might fall should be ready to qualify and act. The members present met on Friday, but failed to reach the election of new members until Saturday evening, too late for further business, and so took a recess until 9 A. M. on Monday, the 27th.

A gentleman in Indiana, who was not present, Bro. Leavitt, Bro. Foster, and myself, were elected members of the board; and as Bro. Leavitt was obliged to leave at 3 o'clock A. M., Monday, he was heard at an informal session of the board regarding his views and matters important to the usefulness and success of the college. Bro. Browne having provided a "two-wheeled rig" and trusty horse, we started, Sabbath morning, accompanied by Mrs. Browne and Mrs. Carlock, on a mountain tour, adopting, as occasion required and with slight modifications, the old "ride and tie" custom of primitive travel. It was a "rough and rugged road," and, in days not remote, "beset by thieves and murderers," passing the decaying wrecks of old stockades, and, if rumors are correct, winding among unmarked graves, and following the trail and through a mountain "gap" bearing the name of Kentucky's illustrious hunter, Daniel Boone. Old things are giving place to a new and better type of society in this region; and where within a decade there were dram shops, brothels and a famous gambling resort, we found peace and quiet, a rude school-house, and a company of some thirty persons, old and young, studying the "Word of Life."

Some had evidently seen service with "the hard master," but the younger ones were bright and seemed interested in the singing and general exercises. At the request of Bro. Browne, I spoke to them of the Good Shepherd, securing the attention of some, though not of all present. As it would add four miles to our journey, we declined the kindly invitation of a good brother and sister to dine at their home; and we returned by the way that we went, a trifle fatigued, but with pleasant recollections, and prophecies of a brighter future for the children of those Cumberland mountaineers.

Bro. Foster preached to "the Church of Christ in Berea" in the morning, and I was glad of an opportunity to present some thought along the line of the anti-secret work to the board of trustees, faculty and leading citizens of Berea, and to receive assurance from the incoming trustees that they were averse to the whole secrecy system, and to any measure that would lower the standard of Berea College on that issue.

At the meeting on Monday, Bro. Stewart asked to be relieved from his duties as President of the college, and on the granting of his request, retired with a brief speech, full of candor, Christian sympathy and good wishes for the future of the college. Prof. Frost was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy, and he, it is understood, will assume the duties of his office on his return from Europe. No other important changes were made in the faculty; and after completing necessary routine business, the board adjourned until the 7th of September next.

The condition of Bro. Fee's health prevented his attendance on all the meetings, though his mind is remarkably vigorous and his step firm for one of his age—one who passed through the mobs, the bitter persecutions of the Rebellion, and the severe struggles of laying the foundations of a Christian, anti-caste, anti-sect, anti-secret college on slave soil in "perilous times," and it is greatly to be hoped that he may be spared for years of service, and to see his ideal more fully realized in an educational institution to which all, without distinction of race, sex, or worldly estate, shall have free access.

Bro. Conant returned to spend the Sabbath, June 26th, at the N. C. A. headquarters in Washington, where he was heard in the holiness meeting and from the Gospel wagon, doing good service for the Master.

I arrived in Cincinnati on the 27th, in time to see the Prohibition host gathering, but decided to proceed on my way, as the crowd appeared to be ample, and the cause in safe hands.

I found in Bro. J. A. R. Rogers, of Connecticut, a very social and intelligent traveling companion, who has no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but who, like a multitude of other ministers, needs "more light." General O. O. Howard, who had at one time been connected with the Good Templars and some other petty secret societies, expressed his preference for open methods and his sympathy with our work of bringing to light "the hidden things of dishonesty." At Washington I called on Bro. Milton Ford, now in his 87th year, and long known as an uncompromising Prohibitionist and a warm friend of the anti-secrecy cause, and found him suffering from the effects of the grippe. Grave fears were entertained that he might not rally and regain strength. He was calm, resigned and hopeful, as he stood near the threshold, looking backward over the self-denial and aggressive work of a long life for the Master, without regrets, and forward with unshaken confidence in Him whose promise is of sure reward to the "faithful unto death." His devoted wife, assisted by kind friends, watched every change, fearing at times that the hour of final parting was near.

On the morning of the 1st. inst. my son and I secured tickets for Boston, via the Royal Blue Line, and the Fall River Line steamer, reaching home in time for an early breakfast on the 2nd, which Mrs. Stoddard had prepared in anticipation of our arrival at that hour.

LITERATURE.

With the number for July, the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science (Philadelphia) begins its third volume. The first article in the current number is entitled Cabinet Government in the United States. It is by Professor Freeman Snow of Harvard and is an answer to the many pleas for the adoption in the United States of cabinet government as known abroad. The next article is by Mrs. S. L. Oberholtzer, and relates how much good School Savings Banks have done and are doing. Prof. J. B. Clark, of Smith College, has a paper on Patten's Dynamic Economics, in which he explains the latest system of political economy, taking up Prof. S. N. Patten's recent book as a basis for his remarks. Prof. Leon Walras, of Lausanne, contributes an article on the Geometrical Theory of the Distribution of Prices, in which he presents a geometric picture of the causation of the prices of all commodities. Besides these there are articles by Mr. B. F. Hughes on Basis of Interest; by Leo S. Rowe on the Conference of the Central Bureau for the Promotion of the Welfare of the Laboring Classes; by Takekuma Okacla on Taxation in Japan, and the usual valuable book reviews and personal notes. Published bi-monthly. $6 a year.

Home and Country for July appears among the illustrated magazines, and will retain that position in future issues. Its specialties are literature, war history, finance and industrial progress. Among the interesting features of the current number are descriptions of the trial trips of the Clermont and Orleans, the first steamers navigating the Hudson and Mississippi; a full yet concise discussion of Senator Peffer's bill for the nomination and election of Presidents by direct vote of the people, written by its author; several articles upon Finance and Trade, adapted to the understanding of ordinary readers; reminiscences of Grant and Lincoln; short stories, and a full-page illustration of the Battle of Atlanta. Published monthly at 96-98 Maiden Lane, New York City. $2 a year. The publishers announce that a copy of the United States Official Postal Guide, containing lists of all postoffices in this country, will be given to each subscriber at $2 per annum.

Our Day for July presents its readers with a photogravure portrait of the venerable Neal Dow, the original author of "the Maine Law;" Samuel M. Davis reviews the New Aspects of the Negro Question—relating to the recent outrages in the South; Race Legislation for Railways is discussed by Prof. W. S. Scarborough; The National Supreme Court decides the problem: Is Ours a Christian Nation? Axel Gustafson recounts The Perils of Moderate Drinking; Joseph Cook contributes the usual Boston Monday Lecture: Fast and Loose Theories of Evolution—Recent Modifications of Darwinism; Book Notices; Several Vital Points of Expert Opinion; Methods of Cure of the Opium Habit; Editorial Notes, and a Summary of Reform News, by Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, embrace a suggestive epitome of current thoughts and events. Our Day Publishing Co., 28 Beacon street, Boston. $2.50 a year.

We are indebted to A. Stockham, of Wait, Sciota Co., Ohio, for an interesting tract of 32 pages, with the title of "The Fearful Outlook; or, The Impending Crisis," addressed "to whom it may concern." The opening pages are devoted to an energetic review of the present phase of the temperance question and its importance, together with the position of the dominant politicians and the church concerning it. This comprises the "fearful outlook." The warning should not be neglected. Secondly, Mr. Stockham relates the story of his religious conversion through the instrumentality of the Salvation Army—an interesting narrative. A few other brief sketches complete this little messenger. It can be obtained of the author.

St. Nicholas has been getting suggestions from its readers as to a national song. "The Star-Spangled Banner" seems to have the strongest existing claim to that honor, but one young person, who objects to the words, but thinks well of the music, makes the novel proposition to fit the words of "My Country, 'tis of Thee" to the music of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The editor of St. Nicholas suggests that she seek some quiet place and try the effect of mixing the two very cautiously.

The Cupbearer for July, that pretty and pleasant Chicago magazine for children, is filled with verses, sketches, stories and pictures that will captivate any child blessed with a taste for reading. It seems to be conducted on the principle that what little readers prefer they should have, and in good measure, and we are pleased to learn that it is widely appreciated. Chicago: New Era Publishing Co., 358 Burling St. $1 a year.

The Midsummer Holiday Century will contain a story by Honore Beaugrand, of Montreal, founded upon a popular superstition among the voyageurs in the Northwest. M. Beaugrand has made a special study of the folk-lore of Canada, and is now president of the Montreal branch of the American Folk-lore Society,

LODGE NOTES.

GRAND LODGE FRATERNITY.

"Papa."
 "Yes?"
 "What is a grand lodge?"
 "A grand lodge, Johnny, is a body of men elected to make the laws of an order."
 "Are they great men, papa?"
 "Some of them are."
 "Which ones?"
 "There is a great difference of opinion on that. You will have to be a great deal older than you are now before you can understand that."
 "How much older?"
 "Oh, a great—I can't tell you."
 Johnnie continued to spell out the words in the Sunday paper with great interest. Pretty soon he looked up and inquired:
 "Say, papa, what does f-r-a-t-e-r-n-i-t-y, spell?"
 "That is fraternity."
 "What is fraternity?"

No answer. The young Knight of Honor waited patiently for a full minute, and from the look on papa's face it was evident that he did not assent to the views expressed in the magazine article he was reading.

"What is it, papa?"
 Still no answer. The little chap looked thoughtful, and finally asked:
 "Papa, will I have to be older before I can understand that?"
 "Yes."
 "How much?"
 "About 6,000 years."—Secret Society Exchange.

It was a singular condition of affairs that existed in British Columbia Grand Lodge last year; it was this: J. E. Phillips, of No. 4, Grand Master. J. E. Phillips, of No. 3, Deputy Grand Master.—Exchange.

Three of the supreme officers of the Fraternal Circle, one of the short term endowment orders, have been sentenced to five years in the State prison of Massachusetts for embezzling $50,000. There are others engaged in the same business who ought to be sent to the same institution.—Knight of Honor Journal.

Of all the prizes to be awarded during the biennial encampment of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, which will be held in Kansas City next August, none will arouse more interest than that offered by the Kansas City Times. It will be a $500 sword, given to the most popular brigade commander, and the officer to whom it is awarded will possess the handsomest sword in the order.

The Philadelphia Siftings says that "the Patriarchs Militant in this department will be ordered into camp on or about August 22 at Lake Ariel, a beautiful summer resort, about an hour's ride from the city of Scranton. Accommodations will be provided for ladies accompanying chevaliers. The encampment will last about a week; the time will be occupied by competition drills, dress parades, etc., interspersed with such pleasurable recreations as boating, fishing and bathing."

A number of the bond and fraternal quick-to-be-rich concerns are having warm times through suits, attachments, etc. Some of the dupes who expected to pay in twenty-five to forty dollars and draw out a hundred are trying to secure a portion of the money left in the hands of agents and others. The "round-up" of those bogus concerns is about completed, and their victims are awaiting the next scheme.—Odd fellows' Companion.

North Carolina has six Rebekah Lodges with 211 members—122 brothers and 89 sisters. There's certainly something wrong in Grand Sire Busbee's resident jurisdiction. One year ago there were seven lodges and 380 members. Grand Secretary Woodell, in his report of the above facts, says: "The lodges ought to be encouraged and stimulated by the brethren. There is no better way to stimulate a healthy sentiment in any community regarding our order than by a live Rebekah Lodge."—Ibid.

Driven out — all impurities of the blood, no matter of what name or nature, or from what cause arising, by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Clear your skin with it. Every disfigurement, from a common blotch or eruption to the worst Scrofula, will disappear. It invigorates the liver, cleanses, purifies, and enriches the blood as nothing else can, and promotes all the bodily functions. For all the many and varied forms of Scrofula, and for the most stubborn Skin and Scalp Diseases, such as Salt-rheum, Tetter, Erysipelas, Eczema, Boils, Carbuncles, and kindred ailments, nothing can equal it as a remedy. The sarsaparilla claim to do good in March, April, and May. The "Discovery" does more than that. At all seasons and in all cases, it's guaranteed to benefit or cure, or you have your money back. Nothing else offered by the dealer, though it's probably better for him, can be "just as good" for you.

ially in the smaller cities and towns, that are slowly dying for want of a little genuine enthusiasm and push. When they first launched on the fraternal sea, the shouts and hurrahs of the organizers could be heard in the next county. As long as they hold office and can lead, the boom is louder than an old style Columbian cannon, but their term expires and they are relegated to the benches, when their brotherly love freezes and their enthusiasm grows colder than a coal syndicate's charity. One by one they drift into other fields of spasmodic fraternity, but they keep up their dues, take their benefits and draw the life's blood out of the organization that they do not help to keep alive. New men take command, and they too follow the path of their predecessors when the honors have gone where the woodbine twineth. By and by only a few are left, and then the office seeks the man and not the man the office. Idiotic Bill is grand mogul, imbecile Jack is second mogul, and it doesn't make any difference whether the financial secretary can count, or the recording secretary can write, they have nothing to do but bite their nails and sit up with the living corpse.

A little genuine push and some of the old-time enthusiasm would revive the corpse, but alas, the "king is dead. Long live the king."—The Fraternal News.

Whether Pasteur and Koch's peculiar modes of treatment will ultimately prevail or not, their theory of blood contamination is the correct one, though not original. It was on this theory that Dr. J. O. Ayer, of Lowell, Mass., nearly fifty years ago, formulated Ayer's Sarsaparilla,

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1892.

ANNOUNCEMENT EXTRAORDINARY.

In the issue of the Cynosure for July 28 we propose to begin the publication of an interesting exposition of the order of "The Nobles of the Mystic Shrine," the latest form of adjunctive Freemasonry, but which a writer quoted in the Chicago Voice of Masonry declares "has no connection under high heaven with Masonry." This statement finds a flat and sufficient denial in the accompanying disclosure, by the same authority, that the "Nobles" will not accept of membership any except a Knight Templar or a Scottish Rite Mason of the thirty-second degree.

Stating on what we believe is competent authority, aside from the ritual which we propose to print, this order was primarily instituted to try, judge and execute criminals (?) whom the tardy civil law did not reach to the measure of their offences! Such parties the Mystic Shrine "would fearlessly try, judge, and, convicted, execute the criminals within the hour, leaving no trace of their action behind." "Temples were instituted throughout Europe, some years ago, and although possessing all the powers and material of the Inquisition, if required, they still continue to thrive as charitable and social organizations, as well as being inquisitors upon the flagrant outragers and desecrators of Masonic vows."

The exposition that has been furnished us shows a wonderful degree of barbarism—all the more wonderful for its introduction into Christian America, where the light of Gospel truth shines effulgently, and the Spirit of Christ is so widely felt and understood.

It will be read with interest.

THE LESSONS OF "STRIKES" AND "LOCK-OUTS."

The recent strike of the iron-workers at Homestead, Pa., and of the miners in Idaho, with the attending lawlessness, defiance of authority, and murder, were but two of a constantly recurring series which, during a course of years, have marked our century, and especially its latter half, as a period when greed of gain, on the part of capitalists, is confronted with red-handed violence on the part of those who either are, or who profess to be, the oppressed.

This constitutes the great labor problem to-day—one of the most intricate and difficult of all the questions of sociology that confront the Christian nations of the two hemispheres.

Great efforts have been put forth to reconcile the parties to this conflict and secure harmony of action. Every impulse of philanthropy, every demand of patriotism, and every aspiration for political success, have combined to lead to the adoption of such legislative enactments as shall secure concord and peace.

And yet all efforts have failed. The evil has continued to increase in breadth and intensity, and now confronts us as never before.

We notice some of these proposed remedies on which the hopes of the politicians have been so largely based.

1. The policy of protection of labor by tariff legislation. It has been held, in theory, that such protection would be the great panacea for all the difficulties both of capital and labor, and that, under its benign influence, capital would find ample scope for investment, and labor abundant demands and satisfactory remuneration. It is claimed that this increased prosperity of the manufacturing interests would bring at least equal advantages to the interests of agriculture and of mining, so that no department of business would fail of development and promotion.

This experiment has had at least thirty years of trial, in which it ought to have succeeded, if success was attainable. Our tariff laws have been repeatedly changed, but always with a view of benefiting both capital and labor. The McKinley act was most carefully devised; and while it levies heavier duties than our government ever before imposed, it is manifestly the result of the maturest wisdom of the protection party.

Meanwhile, the evil has not been remedied, but has steadily increased. Fifty years ago strikes and lockouts were scarcely ever known. Within the last twenty years they have been not only common, but have, on the whole, increased both in frequency and violence. They have been quite as common among those engaged in protected as those in unprotected industries. Side by side with this bitter cry of the manufacturing laborer, the interests of farmers have suffered a continued and growing depression. The exceptionally good crops of last year, together with the great foreign demand for our grain, have tended to check, in some degree, the downward tendency; but never has our cotton ruled so low, and never have the cotton-growing States felt so great a depression. It is doubtless true that the protective policy has added largely to the aggregate wealth of the nation, and especially to the manufacturing centers, but this increase is in the hands of capitalists. The laborers and the farmers have all the time grown relatively poorer. Whether the protective policy has not been one of the foremost causes of the evils it was intended to remove, we will not now stop to discuss. We only insist that as a remedy for our labor difficulties it utterly fails. The Homestead outbreak bears testimony to its uselessness.

2. Another remedy for our labor troubles, on which much stress has been laid, is abundant and cheap money. To secure this, and also to help the mining interests, a law was first enacted to purchase and coin two millions of dollars per month. This amount was, two years ago, increased to four and one-half millions, to be either coined, or to be issued in the form of silver certificates. This amount consumes nearly or quite the entire current product of the American mines; but, instead of enhancing the price of silver, and greatly increasing the currency in circulation, the price of silver was never so low as it is to-day, and the money in circulation, per capita, is but very slightly, if at all, increased. In the meantime our gold, contrary to all precedent—for with an excess of exports, as at present, we usually import gold—is flowing out of the country, and manufacturers are insisting on lowering the scale of wages. Nor would free coinage tend to remedy the evil. That eminent statesman and financier, John Sherman, already regrets the measure for the purchase of four and one-half million dollars per month, of which he was the author, and shows conclusively that existing evils would be aggravated rather than remedied by free coinage of silver. Neither would the sub-treasury scheme, even if its adoption was possible, solve our difficulties. It would offer great facilities for getting in debt, and all experience proves that when such facilities are the greatest, the debts of the people most largely increase, and the time when payment is demanded and exacted is in periods of financial depression.

The prohibition of imported contract labor and the Chinese exclusion bill have had little effect on the labor market. So long as the Atlantic ocean is simply a ferry to be crossed in less than a week, and so long as the scale of wages is higher here than in Europe, there will always be competition in the labor market. No Chinese wall can exclude Europeans, and no combination of American laborers can prevent their employment.

Aside from these legislative attempts at the solution of the great problem, there have been the organization of secret labor unions and the formation of co-operative associations. The first are selfish combinations against employers, as unscrupulous in methods as they are un-Christian in their purposes. The latter had their origin in a sincere desire to reconcile capital and labor; and, so far as they have been tried, have had a fair measure of success. The great obstacle is the greed of capitalists, who, as a rule, are not less selfish than their employees.

What, then, is the true remedy?

1. There can be no settlement of the labor question except on Christian principles. No plan that ignores divine law, and does not rest on the principles of the Gospel of Christ, can be in any sense a settlement. So long as it can be truly said of employers: "Behold the hire of your laborers... is of you kept back by fraud;" and that "ye have lived in pleasure and been wanton," and "have condemned and killed the just," there can be no adjustment. Nor is it material whether it is the nominal price that is thus "kept back," or simply "that which is just and equal." In either case, it "cries in the ear of the Lord of Sabaoth." So, also, those who serve must do so with "good-will, doing service unto the Lord, and not to men." In short, there must be from both sides eliminated the principle of human selfishness, and in its place put the divine law of love to our brother man.

2. In all our methods for the promotion of this end, there must be constantly an appeal to reason, justice and benevolence. Both parties must be taken into the counsel, since the interests of both parties are to be considered. It follows, therefore, that all secret combinations, whether of employers or of employees, are wholly inconsistent with any adjustment of differences.

3. Honest differences should be submitted to impartial arbitrators, and their decision should be regarded as morally binding.

4. There should be instilled into the minds of the public a sacred regard for individual rights and, also, for the supremacy of civil laws. The fact that they may sometimes work oppression is no reason why they should not be cheerfully obeyed. Any covenant in any combination among men which in its nature is calculated to work an impairment of due respect for, and obedience to, all civil authority should be regarded as in the nature of a conspiracy against the public good.

So far, this question is one of moral reform, and these principles ought to have the honest support of all moralists and religious teachers. To the influence of such teaching we may look for the ultimate solution of this problem.

Legislative action may greatly promote such a consummation.

1. It seems to us that the state should discourage, rather than foster, great combinations of capital; and that, to this end, all restrictions on trade should be speedily removed. International reciprocity is the true and ultimate solution of the tariff question.

2. The state should aid, in all practical ways, the principle of co-operation, or profit-sharing, as the best solution of the labor question.

3. That boards of arbitrators should be provided by the state, and that, under certain defined circumstances, their decisions should have the force of law, binding alike on employers and employees.

4. That while the right of privacy is conceded in all ordinary business transactions, all secret combinations, on the part of either capitalists or laborers, should be strictly prohibited; and it should be held that the public well-being demands that all associations that consider public interests ought to be open to public criticism. All secret societies, as such, should also be regarded as conspiracies.

Enactments of this character would greatly mitigate the power of capitalists to oppress, and would extract the teeth of these labor unions that inaugurate strikes and destroy lives and property. As we cannot look to Satan to cast out sin, we cannot expect the so-called "People's party," which is based on combined secrecy and political ambition, to aid in this object.

"ONE MASONRY."

Among Masons all distinctions of sect and party are forgotten and ignored. The Jew and the Christian, Romanist and Protestant, the Israelite and the Buddhist, all meet upon the level, and acknowledge one common bond of brotherhood. There may be many religions among them, but there is only one Masonry.—Michigan Freemason.

Most Masonic authors, when writing about Masonry, may be justly accused, like many politicians, of "talking for buncombe," and the above is a fair specimen of the stuff which the fraternity usually bestows on the public for its own aggrandizement.

The first sentence in the above extract is true. The religion of the order is so broad that it accepts any man who is Masonically perfect, whatever his creed—whether he be pagan or Christian. If he acknowledges the existence of a Supreme Ruler of the Universe, by any name, or under any form of worship, he is accepted. "All distinctions of sect and party are forgotten and ignored." No belief is rejected, and no Christian is preferred because he is one. Masonry is a universal religion, without heart or conscience.

"All acknowledge one common bond of brotherhood." Yet (says the same publication) "selfishness and exclusiveness have managed to creep into some Masonic lodges," in which "a visitor is not at ease for a moment from the time he interrogates the Tyler to the time when he leaves the lodge. He is made to feel as though he were an interloper trespassing on the domain of others." He knows "there is"—in the lectures of the lodge—"one common bond of brotherhood;" but his experience naturally inclines him to believe, when he leaves the lodge-room, in silence and forgotten, that Masonry is a bundle of shams.

"There is only one Masonry." It is well for the world that there is but one. It is better that it can be more truly understood outside of the lodge than in it; that its inmost secrecy is revealed to all who have the curiosity to read it in the light of truth, and that then it appears as it is, in all its deformity and wickedness.

DIVINE TRAINING.

It has been said by a high authority that "there is no discharge" in the war of life; it is either death and victory, or death and failure. There is no middle provision in the contest; no other climax than the one or the other.

The price of salvation, on our part, is continued watchfulness, and this vigilance is rendered necessary by the course of discipline to which all of God's faithful children are subjected. A notable instance of this is found in Job, whom Satan, by divine and especial permission, was suffered to afflict until the perfection of the man of Uz was established beyond a peradventure. Paul, also, lest he should become vainglorious while in the enjoyment of divine favor, was afflicted with a "thorn in the flesh," a form of discipline that he acknowledged to be salutary, even though he could not pray it away; and from his day to this, God has established some form of discipline for the training of his children, either to correct a spiritual error, to restrain some presumptuous tendency, or to enlarge the measure of his grace in the hearts of those whom he would draw nearer to himself.

As Elihu (Job 36: 7-12) expressed it: "He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous: but with kings are they on the throne; yea, he doth establish them forever, and they are exalted. And if they be bound in fetters, and be holden in cords of affliction, then he sheweth them their work and their transgressions that they have exceeded. He openeth also their ear to discipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity. If they obey and serve him, they shall spend their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures. But if they obey not, they shall perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge."

Discipline, then, has for its great object the cultivation of the spirit of humble obedience to the commandments of God, and an entire and perfect submission to his will. In this connection, "hear what the Spirit saith to the churches," in Revelation 2 and 3; for it is not only individual Christians whom God chooses to discipline, but all the congregations of his saints. In these two chapters we are shown the difference in his admonitions and threats delivered to the seven early churches, in which his mildness and severity are plainly contrasted.

So it was in the cases of Job and Paul. The former suffered more in his body and estate than did Paul. He was afterwards richly rewarded for his fidelity in body and estate; while Paul, always faithful under his afflictions, laid down his life for his Master, and went to heaven for his reward.

Thus God's dealings with his people greatly differ, but none is exempt from discipline of some sort. Upon some the powers of hell are turned loose; upon others the sorrows of this world come like a flood; for others his tenderness devises less allictive but equally certain modes of discipline. To the "shorn lamb" he "tempers the wind," lest it be dismayed; to the rugged soul he administers correction of a more pungent nature. No child of God can doubt it.

He whom God does not thus chasten is not his son. If one has the witness of the Spirit that he is born of God, that one may look for the witness of discipline also to testify of the divine power; and the exhibition of God's love, thus manifested, is not only an earnest of that love, but it should also teach us that we need the discipline through which he is endeavoring to draw us nearer and nearer to himself.

So Job and Paul evidently understood their sufferings. If this is the case, it is no time for the true Christian to rebel or murmur when affliction is laid upon him. Faith may sometimes falter under the scourge, but it should never be cast away; submission may be painful but it should be willingly and patiently yielded; obedience may seem difficult, but it should not cease; for the end is peace and righteousness. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." On the other hand, rebellion can only bring shipwreck: "They shall perish by the sword, and...die without knowledge."

He who remains faithful under divine training is armed by the Holy Spirit with all necessary weapons for overcoming not only sinfulness, but all the cares and trials pertaining to "the life that now is," and is better prepared to enjoy the purer "life that is to come." Crosses will not then be deemed judgments, but, like the refiner's fire, will serve to remove the earthly dross from the soul until the Saviour can see his glorious image reflected in it; can see the effects of the travail of his own soul in ours, and be satisfied with the finished work that he beholds.

EDUCATIONAL.

On our desk lie two books, both of definite interest to every true American:

1. "The History of Higher Education in Massachusetts," by Geo. Gary Bush, Ph. D., forming No. 13 of Contributions to American Educational History, edited by Herbert B. Adams.

2. "Southern Women in the Recent Educational Movement in the South," by Rev. A. D. Mayo, M. A.

Both are official publications—"Circulars of Information"—emanating from the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, at Washington, D. C., and are intended for general distribution.

Commissioner Harris, in transmitting the work on Massachusetts to the Secretary of the Interior, offers the following suggestions as to its character and value to friends of education:

"With the opening of the nineteenth century a new educational era begins, characterized especially by greater freedom of belief and practice. The expansion of the college and its work follows. New professorships are established; various schools and departments opened; there is a broadening of the courses of instruction, and an improvement in the methods of teaching."

"The feature of special historical and educational interest to be noted in this monograph is that the Puritan of Massachusetts Bay was well-fitted to be the pioneer of a great educational movement, such as has since been developed on this continent. Of strong religious convictions, and by nature a theologian, he set a very high value upon learning and a learned ministry. Hence his first thought was to found a Christian college."

The result of this "first thought" was Harvard College, which has flourished for more than 250 years. "From the middle of the seventeenth century, until near the close of the colonial period, Harvard was the centre of the intellectual life of by far the greater part of New England. The growth of the college not only kept pace with the growth and prosperity of the country, but it furnished the trained minds which made that prosperity possible. As the eighteenth century advanced, some of Harvard's sons became men of science, and some were preparing themselves to be the standard-bearers of the Revolution. The loyalty of the educated men of New England became the strong arm of the Northern colonies in 1776."

The volume contains historical sketches of all the higher educational institutions in Massachusetts, of their establishment, the work accomplished by them, their endowments, appliances and buildings, number of students enrolled, expenses and other information in detail. An excellent statement is also made of the advantages which Massachusetts offers for the education of women. Full accounts are also given of the work done in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Had we space, much of interest could be given from its pages to our readers.

Of the other work much also might be said in its praise. Its author traveled in the various sections of the South for twelve years, visiting educational institutions of all kinds, and acquainting himself with the labors and results of the methods employed in each. His report includes the work of the Southern schools for the education of girls; secondly, the work of Northern and Southern women in the superior schools for colored youth; and thirdly, the common school. It is a summary of the labors of many noble women. Inasmuch as education in our time is coming more and more largely into the hands of the women, the phase herein treated is becoming more significant every year. The body of the treatise relates to the foundation and management of that class of schools which exercises a molding effect on the entire elementary education; for the secondary schools of the South are doing most of the work of educating the teachers. In the case of the colored schools one may say that the secondary schools educate also the preachers who are doing the best work.

In recent lectures upon the progress of the colored race delivered in Washington, D. C., Dr. W. E. Park claimed for them in only twenty-seven years of freedom over 2,118 common schools with 250,000 pupils, twenty colleges, and six universities. Dr. Beard compared the progress of the Negro to that of Narcissus, and endeavored to show by figures and keenly-pointed facts the falsity of the statement made by John C. Calhoun, who was quoted as saying: "If I could find a Negro who was able to learn to conjugate a Greek verb I would then be willing to believe he was a man." Also that of another noted Southerner who said: "The Negro does not seem to make any progress, and, in my opinion, never will; not because he will not have the necessary advantages, but because he has not the ability to rise above present surroundings." "In 1865 the Negro owned nothing, even himself; the number who could not read and write was not worth counting; their ministers were rude, ignorant and uncultured. To-day, twenty-seven years after, they have 1,000 college-bred ministers, 154 newspapers, two magazines, 250 lawyers, 749 physicians, while there are 247 Negro students in European universities studying and fitting themselves for professors and learning what they shall best teach to elevate the mental, moral, and social standards of their race."

THE VOLUME OF SERMONS AND ADDRESSES by the late President Jonathan Blanchard is running the usual gauntlet of printers and binders—and their promises. Of course, so long as men are human the latter commodity must always be discounted. Not quite allowance enough was made when it was believed the book would be issued July 10th, and unavoidable delays may keep it from the readers until next week; but the work is being hastened as rapidly as possible, consistent with good mechanical execution. The retail price will be 75 cents, postage prepaid. The volume will be a valuable addition to any library, and the first edition should be quickly exhausted. Orders will be received at this rate at the N. C. A. office at any time.

—The July issue of the National Home Guard (Boston) presents a life-like portrait and sketch of Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard, the wife of our esteemed New England agent, herself well-known to Cynosure readers as an indefatigable anti-secrecy reformer. Before going to New England she was an active Christian worker in other parts of the Union, laboring with consecrated zeal.

—A private letter from Bro. W. B. Stoddard, dated Boston, July 14, says that he finds in the ocean baths the element he seems to need for recuperation, is improving in condition, "feels grateful to God for the renewed strength he has given," and is "looking to him for greater blessings." Our brother's entire recovery will be hailed with sympathetic gratitude by Cynosure readers.

—Gen. John Bidwell, who has been nominated as the Prohibition party's candidate for President, is credited with an excellent reputation. Born in 1819, in Chautauqua county, New York, he emigrated, in 1841, to California, of which State he is still a citizen. He has filled a number of responsible offices, serving one term as a member of Congress, and is the owner of a ranch, in the Sacramento Valley, containing 25,000 acres

THE HOME.

FRET NOT THYSELF.

(Psalm 37: 1-8.)

Fret not thyself, nor envious be
Of those who work iniquity,
And prosper in their way;
For like the grass, they perish soon,
And like the herb cut down at noon,
They wither in a day.

Trust in the Lord and still do well;
Within thy land securely dwell,
And follow faithfulness.
Delight in Him so strong to save,
And every good thy heart can crave,
He'll give thee to possess.

Unto the Lord thy way commit,
Confide in Him, who King doth sit
Enthroned in power divine.
For He thy righteousness will make
As light amid the darkness break,
Thy right as noon-day shine.

Rest in the Lord and be thou still;
With patience wait His holy will,
Enduring to the end.
Fret not thyself though sin increase,
Forsake thy wrath, from anger cease,
For these to evil tend.

—Edward A. Collier, in N. Y. Observer.

THE WILL OF GOD.

Alfred Cookman said of his life that it was a continual "yes to his Heavenly Father. May we be as children who always say "yes" to their parents. How sweet it must be to God to have us say "yes" to him, no matter what he asks. But, in order for this, we must see him in everything; for it is one thing to say "yes" to his will and quite another to say "yes" to the will of man. And since a great part of our lives is made up of our dealings with our fellow-men, we must be able to lose sight of them in all that comes to us, and must see the hand of our God alone. We must pass over second causes and deal in each matter directly with our God. Therefore we need a God who will enter into every little detail of our lives; one who will not let a sparrow fall to the ground without him and who numbers even the very hairs of our heads. And such a God we have. If he then is for us, who can be against us? If he is on our side, who can harm us? We may, indeed, triumphantly say: "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me." Neither man nor woman, nor Satan, nor the elements of nature, can touch that Christian who is trusting the Lord, unless he sees it is best, and allows it to be done.

"Oh, dear friends, tell me, does not God's will look sweet to you? I think when it came to the point of a deliberate choice, every Christian would say: Give me God's will. The only thing we need be afraid of in life, would be lest his will should not be done; lest our own will, or somebody else's, should triumph. Faber says that man always reigns who sides with God.

If you are resting in your own will or on that of any man, you are running an awful risk; but if everything is put into God's hands you run no risk at all. Some old writer says: The will of God is not a load to carry but a pillow to rest on. So you will find it; and if you wake up in the night anxious, I advise you to sing yourself to sleep with this sweetest of songs: Thy will be done! Thy will be done! Thy will be done!—Union Signal.

AS OUR DAY, SO OUR STRENGTH.

There are many people who seem exceedingly anxious, since they must work, to find something which is easy to do. But it is by no means certain that this is a wise course. How much would a boy know if he was constantly kept at easy lessons? He might study his primer for fifty years, and everything would be easy; but what would he know, and what would he be fit for? So a person might read easy books, like the sloppy, trashy, sensational novels of the day, but when he had read for 999 years, what would he know, and what would he be good for? Such things do not task the mental energies, do not develop mental powers, but leave a man as they found him, only a little more weakly and flabby than he was at the beginning. So with easy work; work which tries no muscle develops no muscle. A man who never puts forth efforts which test his powers and try his strength will never have much power to test or strength to try. He will grow up lazy, flabby, feeble and unfit to fight the battle of life.

There is much work to be done which requires men of brain and men of brawn, men of mental vigor and of muscular power, and the world at large has little use for men who are always looking for easy work. What we need is men of muscle, brawn, pluck, courage, and strength; men who are ready to grapple with difficulties, dangers and hindrances; take hold of what comes, and do what is needed; meet enemies and overcome them, and do work which shall tell in time and eternity.

God calls us to quit ourselves like men—to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. Let us be ready to obey his call, and do his will; and if we do the work which he gives us, we shall have blessings in our labor while we do it, blessing on our labor when it is accomplished, and blessings for our labor at the end.—The Christian.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS.

How many griefs and troubles which come to us in this world are purely the result of misunderstandings. We think people say what they never did say, or mean what they never did mean. We count men unreasonable and harsh; we fume and fret about matters which do not go to our liking; we complain about what men have said or done; and all this while the persons whom we are blaming meant nothing of the kind that we surmise, and know nothing whatever of our tribulations.

This is one reason why people who have grievances should go at once to those concerned. They are often the only ones who know the truth, who can explain the misunderstanding, correct the error, or right the wrong. They can tell what they intended to say, or intended to do; and in a great many instances we shall find, on going to the proper parties, that we had utterly misapprehended the facts in the case, have judged others unkindly and have made ourselves miserable for nothing. In many cases we shall find that we have taken offense where none was intended; that we have counted words harsh which were kindly meant; that light and tripping phrases which were carelessly thrown off have been taken to heart as they never should have been; and that we have made ourselves and others miserable when there was no need of it whatever.

How many little misunderstandings stick, like a splinter in one's finger, until they make mischief and trouble that cannot be easily remedied; and in how many cases five minutes' frank, honest talk would have settled the whole matter. The policy of silence at such times is a very dangerous policy, and many hearts have bled and suffered when a word would have healed them.—Exchange.

A GENUINE LOVE STORY.

This story was originally told by Spurgeon:

A young clergyman and his bride were invited guests at a large party given by a wealthy parishioner. In all the freshness and elegance of the bridal wardrobe, the young wife shone among the throng, distinguished by her comeliness and vivacity and rich attire; and when, during the evening, her young husband drew her aside and whispered to her that she was the most beautiful woman in all the company, and that his heart was bursting with pride and love for her, she thought herself the happiest wife in the world. Ten years later the same husband and wife were guests at the same house where there gathered a similar gay company. The wife of ten years ago wore the same dress she had worn on the previous occasion, and, of course, it had been altered and re-made, and was old-fashioned and almost shabby. Toil and care and motherhood, and pinched circumstances had taken the roses out of her cheeks and the lithic spring out of her form. She sat apart from the crowd, careworn and pre-occupied. Her small hands, roughened with coarse toil, were ungloved, for the minister's salary was painfully small. A little apart the ten-year husband stood and looked at his wife, and as he observed her faded dress and weary attitude, a great sense of all her loving faithfulness came over his heart. Looking up she caught his earnest gaze, and noticed that his eyes were filled with tears. She rose and went to him; her questioning eyes mutely asked for an explanation of his emotion; and when he tenderly took her hand, and placing it on his arm, led her away from the crowd, and told her how he had been thinking of her as she looked ten years before, when she was a bride, and how much more precious she was to him now, and how much more beautiful, for all her shabby dress and roughened hands, and how he appreciated all her sacrifice and patient toil for him and their children, a great wave of happiness filled her heart, and light shone in her face so that it gave more than youthful beauty, and in all the company there was not so happy a couple as this husband and wife, their hearts and faces aglow from the flaming up of pure sentiment that transfigured and ennobled and glorified all the toils and privations they have endured.—Christian Repository.

EVERY DAY A LITTLE.

Every day a little knowledge. One fact in a day. How small is one fact! Only one. Ten years pass by. Three thousand six hundred and fifty facts are not a small thing.

Every day a little self-denial. The thing that is difficult to do to-day will be an easy thing to do in three hundred and sixty days hence, if each day it shall have been repeated. What power of self-mastery shall he enjoy who, looking to God for grace, seeks every day to practice the grace he prays for.

Every day a little helpfulness. We live for the good of others, if our living be in any sense true living. It is not only in the great deeds of philanthropy that the only blessing is found. In "little deeds of kindness," repeated every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the street, in the neighbor's house, on the playground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness.

Every day a little look into the Bible.

One chapter a day. What a treasure of Bible knowledge one may acquire in ten years! Every day a verse committed to memory. What a volume in twenty-five years!—Mid-Continent.

MISSIONARY UNBELIEF.

There is no escaping the conclusions of the following epigrammatic sentences of Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D. They were expressed some time ago, but they will bear repeating many times over.

The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions does not believe in the great commission. Repeat it and see.

The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions does not believe in the apostles' creed. Repeat it and see.

The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions does not believe in the Lord's Prayer. Repeat it and see.

The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions does not believe in the doxology in long meter. Repeat it and see.

The Christian that does not believe in foreign missions in this generation believes that three hundred more millions of the heathen world ought to die before we try to tell them of Jesus Christ.

How long is this unbelief to go on? How many more millions must die before the church of God is ready? "If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believeth."

LUTHER'S TWO MIRACLES.

On the 5th of August, 1530, an awful crisis of the Reformation, when the firmest seemed to swerve and the boldest to tremble, Luther thus wrote to Chancellor Bench: "I have recently witnessed two miracles. This is the first: As I was at my window, I saw the stars and the sky, and that vast and glorious firmament in which the Lord has placed them. I could nowhere discover the columns on which the Master has supported his immense vault, and yet the heavens did not fall. And here is the second: I beheld thick clouds hanging above us like a vast sea. I could neither perceive ground on which they reposed, nor cords by which they were suspended; and yet they did not fall upon us, but saluted us rapidly and fled away."

These miracles, as Luther called them, filled him with unconquerable trust and joy in God. Well they might. So may they us. We see them wrought before us every night and every day.

Reader, Luther's two miracles are visible. They have stood the sweep of centuries. They are God's matchless monuments. The heavens stand firm without a column on which to rest. The thick clouds, which are God's chariots, hang above us like a vast sea. Look up and behold the wonders, and, Luther-like, be armed with an "unconquerable trust in God."—Christian Standard.

MORALS OF DRESS.

However we may think of it, dress and manners are not simply matters of taste. They are matters of morals and religion, and Christians ought not to accept the rules and regulations set by leaders of fashion, without regard to these higher considerations. To give allegiance to arbitrary laws in these things, which are decreed by people whose lives are often shockingly immoral, is the most slavish sort of conformity to this world. The adornment of a meek and quiet spirit is of great price in the sight of God, but how many "girls of the period," even of those who are members of the church, are consciously striving to put on this adornment?

How many Christian mothers give as much thought to such adorning of their daughters as they do to "the putting on of apparel" in the latest and most stylish modes. Society at present does not foster the precious "meek and quiet spirit." It is ostentatious and boisterous. Young men run to legs and lungs more than formerly, and young women seem to strive to be mannish. If you will study the matter in places of public resort you will see the truth of this. Not many days since we were in the postoffice where some forty persons were waiting for the mail to be distributed. Pretty much all sorts of people were represented, but there was one well-dressed young lady who would monopolize all attention. In a loud and metallic voice she was constantly pouring out crude remarks and lame witticisms, to the admiration of her set and the annoyance of the others.

On another recent occasion, in a place equally public, half a dozen misses, whose ages would probably have averaged the supposedly unlucky thirteen, were as garrulous, noisy and generally obstreperous as a half-drunken saloon crowd. And the conversation, or, rather the chatter and clatter, was made up of bicycle and baseball talk, liberally interlarded with slang. They were all, we believe, daughters of Christian parents (one of them the daughter of a preacher) and several of them members of the church. We may be over-squeamish about these things, but it seemed to us that there was not much trace of the meek and quiet spirit,—the delicious maidenly reserve and modesty,—which is the chief ornament in God's estimation. Are we striving to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? Fathers and mothers,—fathers especially, and mothers most especially,—think of this.—Christian Standard.

A SALVATION ARMY TABLEAU.

Captain (who has been seated at the table, making up the books, turns to lieutenant, who is trying to patch up a rather seedy-looking uniform): "Lieutenant, how much salary would you like this week?"

Lieutenant: "It is not a question of how much would I like, but how much am I to get."

Captain: "Well, how much do you think there is for us?"

Lieutenant: "Five cents each?"

Captain: "Less than that."

Lieutenant: "Nothing?"

Captain: "That's the amount."

Lieutenant: "Can we meet the rent?"

Captain: "Yes, just to the very cent."

Lieutenant: "Praise God for that! As long as we can keep clear of debt we need not trouble, for God will never let us go hungry."

Captain: "No! God has indeed wonderfully supplied our needs since we have been here; the people are kind. No sooner is the last bit of food gone than some more comes along."

Lieutenant: "By the by, we have very little food in the house now."

Captain: "Oh, keep believing! More is coming." Tap, tap at the door.

Captain goes to the door, and there meets a little maid, who hands in a nice chicken, saying: "Please, Captain, mother sent you this for dinner to-morrow."

Captain carries in the chicken triumphantly and shows lieutenant.

Lieutenant: "Praise God!"—War Cry.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

Children, do you love each other?

Are you ever kind and true?

Do you always do to others

As you'd have them do to you?

Are you gentle to each other?

Are you careful, day by day,

Not to give offence by actions,

Nor by anything you say?

Little children, love each other—

Never give another pain;

If your brother speak in anger,

Answer not in wrath again.

Be not selfish to each other;

Never spoil another's rest;

Strive to make each other happy,

And you will yourselves be blest.

TEMPERANCE.

WENDELL PHILLIPS' "TWO SIDES OF ONE CANVAS."

[Originally printed in a newspaper and reproduced in Carlos Martyn's Life of Wendell Phillips.]

One beautiful afternoon in August, there came to me the heart-broken wife of a State-prison convict. We tried to plan for his pardon and restoration to home and the world. It was a very sad case. He was the only surviving son of a very noble man—one who lived only to serve the poor, the tempted, and the criminal.

All he had, all he was, he gave unreservedly to help thieves and drunkards. His house was their home. His name their bail to save them from prison. His reward their reformation. It was a happy hour to hear him tell of the hundreds he had shielded from the contamination and evil example of prisons, and of the large proportion he had good reason to believe permanently saved. Out of hundreds, he once told me only two left him to pay their bail, forfeited by neglect to show themselves in court according to agreement—only two!

Bred under such a roof, the son started in life with a generous heart, noble dreams, and high purpose. Ten years of prosperity, fairly earned by energy, industry and character, ended in bankruptcy, as is so often the case in our risky and changing trade; then came a struggle for business, for bread, temptation, despair, intemperance. He could not safely pass the open doors that tempted him to indulgence, forgetfulness, and crime. How hard his wife wrought and struggled to save him from indulgence, and then to shield him from exposure! How long wife, sister and friends labored to avert conviction and the State prison! "I would spare him gladly," wrote the prosecuting attorney, "if he could stop drinking. He shall never go to prison if he will be a sober man. But all this wretchedness and crime comes from rum."

Manfully did the young fellow struggle to resist the appetite. Again and again did he promise, and keep his promise perhaps a month, then fall. He could not walk the streets and earn his bread soberly, while so many open doors—opened by men who sought to coin gold out of their neighbors' vices—lured him to indulgence. So rightfully, the state pressed on, and he went to prison. An honored name disgraced, a loving home broken up, a wide circle of kindred sorely pained, a worthy, well-meaning man wrecked. Sorrow and crime "all comes from rum," says the keen-sighted lawyer.

As I parted from the sad wife on my doorstep, I looked beyond, and close by the laughing sea stood a handsome cottage. The grounds were laid out expensively and with great taste. Over the broad piazza hung lazily an Eastern hammock, while all around were richly painted chairs and lounges of every easy and tempting form. Overhead were quaint vases of beautiful flowers, and the delicious lawn was bordered with them. On the lawn itself gayly-dressed women laughed merrily over croquet, and noisy children played near. A span of superb horses pawed the earth impatiently at the gate, while gay salutations passed between the croquet players and the fashionable equipages that rolled by. It was a scene of beauty, comfort, taste, luxury and wealth. All came from rum. Silks and diamonds, flowers and equipage, stately roof and costly attendance, all came from rum. The owner was one who, in a great city, coined his gold out of the vices of his fellow men!

To me it was a dissolving view. I lost sight of the gay women, the frolicsome children, the impatient horses and the ocean rolling up to the lawn. I saw instead the pale convict in his cell twelve feet by nine; the sad wife going from judge to attorney, from court to Governor's Council, begging money for her overtempted husband. I heard above the children's noise, the croquet, laugh and the surf waves, that lawyer's stern reason for exacting the full penalty of the law—all this comes from rum!

RUM FOR AFRICA.

"A few years ago, in a lonely hut in Central Africa, a worn-out man died on his knees, praying in the fervor of a consecrated, loyal soul, Oh, let thy kingdom come! He had opened, he thought, the great dark continent to the onward march of civilization and the light of God's truth. Christendom shouted for joy, and the procession started."

"Watch it! One missionary, 70,000 gallons of rum; one missionary, 70,000 gallons more of rum; another missionary, another 70,000 gallons of rum; and so on and on it goes, rum and missionaries, and missionaries and rum. Thus we touch the great Congo State."

"Watch again! One convert to Christ, a hundred drunkards; one more, a hundred more. The missionary's heart grows sick; it cries out, 'Oh, Christians at home, for the love of Christ stop the rum!' But, as the climate does its exhaustive work, and one by one the brave workers sink beneath the burning sun, hearts at home are discouraged, and the next ship goes only with rum—without the missionary."

"Under the madness of intoxicating liquors sent from Massachusetts, 200 of those (of Congo) slaughtered each other in a single day. Again we are told of a single gallon of this drink causing a fight in which fifty were killed. Judas sold his Lord for $17.00, but America hurries fifty souls to the bar of God for ninety cents."—Margaret E. Stewart, in Herald and Presbyter.

BAY STATE PROHIBITION PLATFORM.

The platform of the Massachusetts Prohibitionists is brief, clear and emphatic. It makes the liquor question the supreme issue before the people and demands absolute prohibition and suppression. It fairly states the position of both Democratic and Republican parties. It insists on the integrity of our public school system. It asks for a fair and equitable tariff. It demands restrictive immigration and carefully guarded naturalization laws. It opposes free coinage of silver. It insists upon a free ballot and fair count in all sections of the country. It urges fair labor laws, and stands for civil service reform, asks for just and liberal pensions, denounces the "drink law" of 1891, and the refusal of the present Legislature to give effective temperance legislation. Massachusetts Prohibitionists have convictions, and also have the courage of them.—Boston Traveler.

PROTECTION FOR THE BOYS VS. PROTECTION FOR THE SEALS.

The Annual Drink Bill of the United States, according to the best estimates, is about $1,200,000,000.

The Bering Sea seal-skins sold in the London markets in the last 26 years—including most of those taken by poachers, about which the United States and Great Britain have had so much trouble—have been $30,000,000.

Dr. Darwin says that "all the diseases arising from drinking spirituous or fermented liquors are liable to become hereditary even to the third generation, increasing, if the cause be continued, till the family becomes extinct."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

LESSON V.—Third Quarter, 1892.—July 31.

SUBJECT.—Peter and John before the Council.—Acts 4: 1-18.

GOLDEN TEXT.—There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4: 12.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Acts 4: 1-18. T.—Acts 20: 17-27. W.—Luke 21: 8-19. Th.—1 Tim. 1: 12-17. F.—Rom. 1: 7-16. S.—John 3: 11-19. S.—1 Cor. 3: 1-11.

1. Peter preaching in the Temple court.—vs. 1-5. Between last week's lesson and the present one, the latter part of chapter three occurs. It gives us the remainder of the sermon preached by Peter in explanation of the wonderful healing of the man who was lame from his birth, and contains, also, an introduction to the Gospel of Jesus Christ, in the relation which the testament of salvation through his blood bore to the old covenant of God and Abraham, and the supercedure of the latter by the former. This unpalatable doctrine fell upon hearts devoid of grace, with the usual effect of creating agitation and opposition to the Gospel and its advocates. The priests, the captain of the Temple, and the Sadducees were all incensed at the boldness of the disciples; and the Sadducees, especially, vexed at the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead, which they utterly disbelieved and antagonized. It is not surprising, therefore, to find Peter and John immediately arrested and placed in confinement for the night. Still, the Spirit of God had in their words given utterance to sentiments which led many of their hearers among that audience of five thousand to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and the doctrines which he had taught.

2. The trial.—vs. 5-12. With the morrow came the rulers and elders and scribes of the Temple service before the august seventy of the Sanhedrim, with both the Jewish and the Roman high priests (Annas and Caiaphas), and other eminent persons of their kindred. When all was ready, Peter and John was brought from prison and set before this high court for trial. How forcibly must they have remembered the words of their departed Master (John 15: 20, 21), "If they have persecuted me, they will persecute you; . . . all these things will they do unto you for my name's sake, because they know not Him that sent me." The miracle wrought upon the lame man was still uppermost in the thoughts of these rulers, and the first question they asked of the apostles was, by what power this man had been healed. This inquiry led to another confirmation of the Master's promise (Mark 13: 11), for Peter, filled with the Holy Ghost, began earnestly to preach Jesus in his character not only of a healer of men's bodies, but the only Saviour whereby all men must be saved, if at all. The words of Peter had their effect of astonishing the Sanhedrim, but not of softening their hearts to receive the wonderful truths to which they had listened. How often is this experience repeated in the career of many faithful ministers of our day! The most vivid expositions of the truth frequently serve but to harden the hearts of the people against them. Then they remembered that these men had been with Jesus, of whose boldness they were presently reminded.

3. The result of the trial.—vs. 13-18. During Peter's defense, the man who had been healed through the instrumentality of the apostles had stood by, a silent witness to the truths which Peter had spoken, and his presence served to confound the Sanhedrim, but not to convert them. A private conference followed, which resulted in the dismissal of the apostles under stringent orders "not to speak at all nor teach in the name of Jesus." They could not deny the miracle, for it was "manifest to all them that dwell in Jerusalem." All they could do was to make an effort to prevent the knowledge of it spreading further among the people. Vain attempt! The Gospel may be hindered, but it cannot be silenced. The power of God is in it, and his Word will not return unto him void. If it does not convince sinners of their sinfulness, it serves to bring them into deeper condemnation for rejecting its overtures of mercy and salvation.

4. What the lesson teaches us. Whoever enters upon Christian labor in the Spirit of Christ must expect to meet with opposition at the very outset, and need not be surprised to encounter persecution as he proceeds. "The servant is not above his master; if they have persecuted me," said our Lord to his disciples, "they will also persecute you." It is the peculiarity of the Christian religion that it separates the dearest family and social ties, and arrays the best of friends against each other. On the other hand, if accepted and heeded, it forms a bond of union between men and God that will never be broken—a union that cements human hearts together in eternal harmony. Wherever persecution is encountered, this union of Christians is strengthened and increased, and its influence is such as to convince the unconverted of the reality and value of union with Christ. The Holy Spirit, working upon such hearts, both enlightens them and increases their courage and fidelity in the work of the Gospel. The effects of Christianity, as shown in those who fully embrace it, often serve to convince the most hardened sinner of its reality and transforming power. When the heart that is right towards God enters upon true reform work, no matter how unpopular it may seem at the outset, it is blessed at last with great success. All Christian labor is based, if genuine, upon salvation through Christ alone; it is his Spirit that convicts of sin; that assures forgiveness upon repentance; that opens the way to pious living; that imparts all necessary truth and strength; that cleanses the heart; that inspires us with all right motives. Drawing nigh to Christ, rejoicing in his presence and power, will help us to be daily more and more like him, and ennoble us as the children of his kingdom.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The benevolent contributions and legacies of the Congregational churches of Massachusetts last year were $1,076,887.

FREE METHODIST.

—An item is going the rounds of the papers to the effect that "Miss Emma Bradley has founded a mission school, at her own expense, in the slums of Chicago; that she makes her home in the rear of the mission, and shares both her food and table with the worthy poor around her." This is partly true, and partly erroneous. Mrs. R. A. Bradley is the founder of the mission; but Mrs. Bradley depends on the Lord to move his people to send in the means to maintain the mission, as she has no means at command—only what comes in answer to prayer. The mission is at 95 South Des Plaines street, and is almost literally surrounded by saloons and low barrel-houses. Many brands have been plucked from the burning since this mission was established. To God be all the praise. M. C. B.

FRIENDS.

—Illinois and Genesee Yearly Meetings of Hicksite Friends are held in joint session, a new departure in that body.

JEWS.

—The Jewish Publication Society, at its recent meeting, has decided to put forth a new English version of the Bible. One of the erudite Hebrews to be employed on the translation will probably be the Rev. Dr. Kohler, of the Temple Emanu-El, New York.

LUTHERAN.

—At the recent Synod of Wisconsin, about 150 ministers and 60 teachers were present. Subject of discussion was "The Call." Rev. Mr. Hoyer, referee.

—Praeses Ph. von Rohr, in his annual report, recommended the proposed consolidation of the synods of Wisconsin with those of Minnesota and Michigan. The condition of the educational institutions is represented as most flourishing. The Northwestern University was attended by 178 students. The seminary in Milwaukee has turned out nine candidates.

—A statistical compilation of school reports of the various Lutheran synods, included the Norwegian synod, shows that there are in Wisconsin 305 parochial schools, attended by 19,672 children. The total number of teachers is 363.

—The 400 Finns in Chicago are about establishing a church there. They are adherents of the Lutheran communion. No greater insult can be offered than to take a Finn for a Laplander, a slight often put upon the former.

—Those calling themselves Lutherans in this country are not united; they may be divided, speaking broadly, into Synodists, Councilites and Missourians. These three divisions may be briefly characterized as follows: The "Missourians" are strict in doctrine and in practice; the "Councilites" claim to be strict in doctrine but are loose in practice; the "Synodists" are not strict either in doctrine or in practice. To give this characterization is to give at the same time the reason for the distinct organizations. We "Missourians" honestly accept the Book of Concord of 1580, and according to the measure of ability which God gives we put this doctrine into practice, cost what it may, offend whom it may. The "Councilites" and the "Synodists" do not do thus; and for conscience sake we cannot therefore unite with them. This is our point of view.—Lutheran Witness, Baltimore, July 7.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Illinois State convention of Epworth leaguers, held recently in Chicago, unanimously asked Congress to appropriate $5,000,000 for the World's Fair on condition that the exhibition shall be closed on Sunday and that no liquor shall be sold in the grounds on any day. The convention also petitioned the Illinois commissioners to close the State exhibit on Sunday.

—Bishop Taylor is placed in the unhappy relation to his church of either going without his salary as bishop or of accepting it from a source contrary to his well-known principles.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Independent gives this summary of Northern Presbyterianism, as reported at their last Assembly at Portland: Number of ministers, 6,266, an increase of 43; licentiates, 411, an increase of 37. The candidates show a falling off, there being 1,154 as against 1,317 of the year before. The number of churches is 7,076, an increase of 6; the number of persons admitted on examination is 56,301, a falling off of 3,349; the whole number of communicants is 816,427, an increase of 9,631; the contributions to Home Missions are $995,934, an increase of $309; Foreign Missions show an increase of $28,217, the total being $812,622; education has fallen off from $154,518 to $138,339; Sabbath-school work also shows a decrease, the total being $126,960 as against $131,870; for church erection $284,514 had been given, a decrease of $76,430; the Relief Fund donations amounted to $99,440, a decrease of $17,133. On the other hand, the Freedmen's Board had an income of $130,049, an increase of $5,235; sustentation, $85,745, an increase of $22,638; while aid for colleges received $149,755, a decrease of $16,165.

—The Princeton College Gospel quartette, Mr. Paul Bliss, son of P. P. Bliss, leader, a company of Christian young men from Princeton College, who are looking forward to the Christian ministry and missionary work, are to spend a few weeks this summer at the Bible institute of the Chicago Evangelization Society, on Pearson street, Chicago, Ill. With them, Mr. R. A. Torrey and Major Whittle propose to hold a series of meetings in different churches in the various divisions of the city.

—The Rev. S. J. McPherson, of Chicago, preached the dedicatory sermon Wednesday night in the new Presbyterian church at Decatur, Ill. The structure cost $80,000, and will seat 1,400 people.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Twin City Chautauqua for the season of 1892, now in session at their grounds near Council Bluffs, Ia., is proving to be one of the most successful ever held.

—Synod of Kansas will hold the annual meeting in Forest Park, Ottawa, Kas., commencing August 2 and continuing until August 10. One hundred tents have been engaged so that all may be accommodated, and the price reduced from last year.

—The Synod of Iowa will meet at the Iowa Chautauqua Grounds, Colfax Springs, Iowa, Tuesday, August 16, at 7:45 p. m. The convocation will continue till August 23.

—Rev. W. T. Meloy, D.D., in company with Dr. C. G. Davis, a well known physician of Chicago, and member of the First church, sailed in the steamer Britannic, July 13, for a trip in Europe.

—The United Presbyterians have a membership of 109,180, who contributed to the church last year $1,286,288, or a little more than $11.78 to the member, being an aggregate increase over former years of $152,000, or about $1.40 to the member.

—The proposition to erect in Chicago a hotel for the accommodation of those in the United Presbyterian church and their friends, who will attend the coming Exposition, and in which public worship would be held, met with the most cordial endorsement, but the plan has been abandoned, principally because of the uncertainty of the action of the Fair directory regarding the Sabbath and liquor questions.

Y. M. C. A.

—The Lake Geneva Summer School for College Y. M. C. A. Workers closed a two weeks' session on the 6th inst. The attendance was 232, representing 105 institutions. The two colleges, Earlham and Penn, were represented. The intended occupations of the delegates and the number entering each are: Ministers, 102; teachers, 34; engineers, 13; lawyers, 11; business, 9; association work, 4; pharmacist, 1; architect, 1; physicians, 13; undecided, 49; student volunteers, 44.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HOW TO MAKE VINEGAR CANDY.

Take three cups of sugar, one cup of vinegar and a piece of butter, egg size. Boil twenty minutes; pour over plates to cool. Flavor, but do not stir.

HOW TO SCALE FISH EASILY.

Dip them into boiling water for about a minute before beginning to clean them. The scales will come off much more easily than by scraping.

HOW TO PREVENT MOLD ON TOP OF JELLY.

Pour a little melted paraffine over the top. This when cool will harden into a thin, solid cake, which can be lifted out when the jelly is used, and may be saved for the same purpose next year.

TO KEEP LEMONS.

Some good housekeepers on receiving lemons wash and dry them thoroughly and then put those that are not needed soon into the big sugar box, burying the fruit in the sugar. They say that lemons will thus keep fresh a long time.

TO KEEP WET BOOTS FROM SHRINKING.

Wet boots and shoes may be kept from shrinking out of shape when drying if, as soon as taken off, they are tightly stuffed with newspapers. These form a sort of rude last and ought not to be removed until the boots are thoroughly dry.

HOW TO CLEAN PAINT.

Mix common whiting with warm water until it is like a paste. Rub the surface to be cleaned with a piece of flannel dipped in the paste. Grease and other spots are at once removed and the shining surface of the paint is not injured.

TO RELIEVE HEREDITARY HEADACHES.

By confining the diet to fruit as much as possible. Mellow, sweet apples are especially good. If inclined to be bilious, water and lemonade should be the only beverages used—otherwise milk may be drank freely.

HOW TO CURE SOFT CORNS.

A cure that is simple and said to be very effective is to apply a pinch of common white chalk scraped to a powder. Bind it against the corn with a linen rag. Repeat this for several days, and unless very obstinate the corn will come off like a shell.

HOW TO CLEAN A SOILED CARPET.

After a soiled carpet has been thoroughly beaten it may be cleansed with the following mixture: Two gallons of water into which a half pound of soft soap has been dissolved, added to four ounces of liquid ammonia. Apply by rubbing it on with a flannel, then rub the carpet dry with a coarse cloth.

HOW TO LIVE TO A GOOD OLD AGE.

By being particularly careful of your health during the years that are a multiple of 7, such as 28, 35, 42, etc. The great climacterical year is 63. If one passes that safely he is inclined to rally in bodily power and attain extreme old age. This physiological course has been noted since the days of Pythagoras.

HOW TO SERVE COLD FISH.

Remove all bones and cut the fish into small pieces. Season this with salt and pepper and some chopped onions and parsley. Beat two eggs with a tablespoonful of catchup. Mix this with the fish and put the whole in a dish with several small slices of bacon laid over it. Bake and serve with drawn butter or oyster sauce. By this means any kind of cold fish is made very appetizing.

HOW TO LIVE IN A MALARIOUS REGION.

Never work outdoors before eating something, and have your coffee as soon as possible after rising. That part of the year in which vegetation is growing rapidly is usually the most healthful, and one may then be out at night with comparatively little risk, but after the "turn of the season" comes on, that is after the full grown vegetation begins to part with its juices to the air, night air is dangerous till there has been one heavy frost.

HOW TO KEEP IN GOOD HEALTH.

One of the best ways to keep in good health is not to think or worry too much about it. If you feel strong and well don't imagine that some insidious disease may be secretly attacking your constitution. Many people are like the inexperienced traveler who anxiously inquired about the symptoms of seasickness and how he should know when he had it. One generally knows when he is sick, and frequently many supposedly alarming symptoms prove upon investigation to be either perfectly natural occurrences or of very slight importance.

HOW TO CLEAN PAINT AND GLASS.

Soap will remove the paint; so use but little of it. Cold tea is the best liquid for cleaning varnished paint, window panes and mirrors. A sharp piece of soft wood is indispensable for cleaning out corners. A saucer of sifted ashes should always be at hand to clean unvarnished paint that has been badly smoked; it is better than soap. Never put soap upon glass unless it can be thoroughly rinsed off, which can never be done to window glass. Wash off the specks with warm tea and rub the panes dry; then make a paste of whiting and water and put a little in the center of each pane. Take a dry cloth and rub it all over the glass, and then rub it off with a chamois skin or flannel and your windows will shine like crystal.

FARM NOTES.

TO DESTROY WEEVILS.

It is said that millions of bushels of corn are destroyed annually by weevils. Prof. A. J. Cook of Michigan tells us how a Texan prevents their depredations. We find it in the N. Y. Tribune: Last fall in putting up his corn he placed two open bottles, containing bisulphuret of carbon, about four feet apart on the floor of the bin. The mouths of these bottles were covered with a layer of cheesecloth, and each bottle covered with an old broken box. The corn was thrown on these boxes and the bin filled to its utmost capacity. The weevils were destroyed, and none further appeared. Thus at a cost of fifty cents, with very little trouble, he protected about 500 bushels of corn against the weevils. Moreover, he had noticed neither mouse nor rat in the bin, nor traces of them, which was not the case before, for in previous years they too did great damage to the corn. Prof. Cook says: "I have advised for years such use of bisulphide of carbon. I am gratified to hear of its extensive use all over the country. Many millers use it most satisfactorily. It kills, is easily used, is not expensive, and if cautiously used, so as to cause no danger from fire or explosion, is most excellent."

BEES AND FRUIT-GROWING.

It is simply an aggravated case of base ingratitude on the part of the fruit-grower, if he finds fault with his bee-keeping neighbor on account of the injury done to fruit by bees. The fruit-grower, in fact, has no warmer friend, no more useful agent than the pollen-carrying, honey-seeking little insect. The interests of the fruit-grower and bee-keeper, far from being antagonistic, lie indeed so nearly in the same direction that we urgently advocate the combine of the two vocations in the same person.

The leading cause of barrenness in fruit trees and brush fruits is lack of proper pollination, due again, in many cases, to the absence of the right kind of pollen, and in others to its non-transfer from the stamens to the needy pistils. Many trees are not self-fertilizing, either because their own pollen upon their own pistils has no potency, or because the pollen is not discharged at the time when the pistils are receptive.

We believe bees are a good thing, and a number of colonies should be kept in or near every orchard.—Popular Gardening.

THE DAIRY SCHOOL IN MAINE.

The Dairy School at Orono, Me., has recently been opened. There is a fine dairy hall well equipped with all appliances now in use in dairy work, in which the principles and practices are being taught under competent instructors, and where the work is being performed by the students who attend. Nothing can be more complete as an outfit for giving that thorough instruction in dairy work, whether on the farm or at the factory, than is here provided. The school is in charge of the professor of agriculture at the college, and instruction in the work is in charge of G. M. Gowell. Professor Gowell has spent the winter in making observations among the dairy schools recently established in other States, and brings to our own a knowledge of the best features known to the work.

From Professor Balentine, in charge, we learn the following facts in regard to the course just opened: The course in dairying opened at the Maine State College with a class of four students, which is double the number with which the now famous Wisconsin Dairy School commenced its first term three years ago.

The dairy students are now earnestly at work on the problem of fine butter-making. About 400 pounds of milk is furnished them daily, in five different lots. Each day, one of their number is assigned to take charge of the work at the dairy-house, under the direction of the instructor, while the others act as helpers. As the milk comes in, samples are taken and tested with the Babcock milk-tester. The milk is then skimmed with the Sharpless Russian steam separator, which, in the hands of students, is leaving about 2 per cent of fat in the skim milk. The cream comes from this machine at a temperature of 80 degrees and the skim milk at about 90 to 95 degrees. The cream is weighed, sampled, and cooled down to about 60 degrees, and placed in vats to ripen. After the students have become thoroughly familiar with the steam separator, they will be taught to run the butter extractor and the De Laval Alpha separator. The cream is churned at 64 to 66 degrees, and when the butter granules arrive at the size of wheat kernels the buttermilk is drawn, the butter cooled down and washed at about 60 degrees, when it is placed upon the butter worker and salted in the granular form. It is then worked to a waxy condition and printed. Cream is also separated from the milk by the deep setting process, and treated the same as that coming from the separators, as this will be without doubt the kind of cream that our butter-makers will have to deal with at the creameries in the State for some time yet. After the students have mastered the theory and practice of butter-making, they will go through a similar course in cheese-making.

Along with the practical work of the dairy, students are required to attend two lectures per day on topics connected with the production of milk and its manufacture into butter and cheese, both on a large and a small scale.

The young men now attending the dairy school have taken hold of their work with an earnestness and an interest that warrant us in predicting that they will attain a success that will create a demand for their services in the creameries of the State.—Maine Farmer.

A LETTER FROM THE WORLD'S MOST ELOQUENT PREACHER, THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON, THAT WILL BE READ WITH GREAT INTEREST BY ALL WHO ARE AT DEATH'S DOOR.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man.

Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude.

Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough.

Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.—

Yours heartily,
(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON.

The success of women in the arena of politics is well exemplified by the announcement that 6,335 are at present employed as postmistresses, the larger proportion of whom are in the Southern States. The capabilities of women for adopting the avocations of men, and their disposition to escape from the thralldom of the kitchen and nursery, has seldom been better exhibited.

The disappointment felt by the directory of the Columbian Exposition when the defeat of the $5,000,000 appropriation in Congress was announced, was shared also by a vast multitude of others whose connection with the enterprise had far less significance. National pride was touched by this action of the House, for there is a general desire that the Exposition shall be an unqualified success. Later on, the House may rescind its refusal to appropriate the desired amount; and the friends of the Fair are industriously working for that result.

It is gratifying to observe a growing appreciation among Christian denominations of the evils of the lodge system. Words of Truth for July—the representative periodical of the more intelligent and reasonable Second Adventists, known here as Millenarians—has an article on the coming Anti-Christ, in which the writer contends that he will have control of "all infidels, all secret societies and the labor unions." The sooner all Christian churches adopt this classification, and cleanse their temples of these abominations, the nearer will be the real millennium.

After months of earnest endeavor and fervent prayer, the Sabbath-loving people of the United States have succeeded in closing, prospectively, the gates of the Columbian Exposition on Sunday. The advocates of this Christian measure have been met with much of obloquy and derision while laboring in this behalf, and had they done so in their own strength, it is probable that their object would have been defeated. But God was undoubtedly helping them, in answer to their petitions for his aid; and it is providential that the mercenary part of the bill in Congress should have failed, while that which honored the Lord's day received the sanction of the law-makers. It was a crisis in which the whole civilized world was interested; and hearty praise and thanksgiving for this victory will not be withheld in this and other lands.

We surrender nearly nine columns of the Cynosure, this week, to the complete ritual of initiation ceremonies practiced by the "Oriental Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine." The more closely it is scanned, the more its correctness seems assured. To the casual reader the language partakes largely of the nature of absurdity and rigmarole; but let him place himself in the character of the novice who undergoes this strain upon his strength and patience, suffering all that the ritual prescribes, and the paganism, barbarity and anxiety with which it acquaints him, to so little purpose, will convince any one that he is (to quote from Benj. Franklin) "paying dearly for his whistle." Next week, and the following one, further developments of the order, its history, etc., will be printed in these columns.

The week at Homestead, Pa., the seat of the recent labor riots, has been comparatively quiet. There is still much deep-seated malignity felt by the locked-out laborers against the managers and adherents of the Carnegie iron works, but the presence of an overwhelming number of State troops in the town has had a restraining effect, and open hostilities have been avoided. In the meantime some effort to settle the difficulties between employers and employed has been made, but without any certain results. A few of the more belligerent workmen have indulged in spite-work to a limited degree. The most important event of the week was the shooting and stabbing of Mr. Frick, Mr. Carnegie's business manager, on Saturday, by a man who should be classed as an anarchist and punished to the extent of the law. At last accounts Mr. Frick was doing well, and his assailant is in jail. It is hoped that this unfortunate affair may soon be settled without further outrage.

The results of the recent parliamentary elections in England show that by small majorities the control of the government will be materially changed. The vote of the people indicates the resignation of the Earl of Salisbury and his party adherents, and the calling of Rt. Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone to form a cabinet more in harmony with the altered political conditions. In re-assuming the office of Prime Minister, however, Mr. Gladstone will find himself without a very strong following in Parliament. In his own Midlothian district, in 1885, he had a majority of 4,363, but in the recent contest his majority was reduced to 690. This defection was partly owing to the personal popularity of his opponent, Col. Wauchope, and also to the opposition of the churchmen, who voted solidly against him, fearing his advocacy of disestablishment. The English suffrage laws require a new election, if he decides to accept office, and he may have to withstand additional opposition in the contest. The prospects for early "home rule" in Ireland are not hopeful.

"Every Major General in the American Army of the Revolution were Free and Accepted Masons, save one, Benedict Arnold, the traitor. He was not, neither could he have been, for no man who is a traitor to his country, in fact, or in spirit, can be a true Mason, loyalty to one's country being one of the imperative duties of every accepted Mason."—Oration of Rev. J. H. Chapin before a Masonic gathering.

Benedict Arnold was a Freemason, initiated in New Haven, Conn., April 18, 1765, R. W. Nathan Whiting, Master, presiding. Mr. Chapin, in the above paragraph, implies that loyalty to one's country is a Mason's imperative duty. It is not so implied in any obligation imposed by the fraternity. The only allegiance demanded of the initiate is obedience to the Masonic Grand Lodge or Grand Chapter. It is on record, also, that "Burr no doubt expected, and did receive much aid, in his treasonable operations from Freemasonry. He certainly made use of the Royal Arch cipher," in his traitorous correspondence. Burr was a traitor to his country, but true to his Masonic instincts and that degree which binds every Royal Arch Mason to keep the secrets of another, "murder and treason not excepted." He knew his privileges.

The little town of Franklin, in DeKalb county, Ill., if a telegram from Rockford is to be credited, has a local war of peculiar significance on its hands. Tuesday, August 2, is the date appointed for the closing exercises of the public school at that place, which include a flag-raising. "The directors," adds the telegram, "refused to purchase an American flag, and say that they will have no flag on the school-house or allow exercises of that nature to be held in it. Captain Van Wert stirred around among the citizens, raised the money, and has purchased an elegant silk flag. Colonel Lawler and Major Roper, of Rockford, and the entire G. A. R. post of Kirkland are going to be present to see that the flag goes up without interference on the day selected. Major Burst and Colonel Sexton, with a crowd of Chicago veterans, are also going out to take a hand in the exercises. One of the three directors is charged with having gone to Canada to avoid the draft during the war, and another is a foreigner who, it is said, has never been naturalized although he has held office for eight years." These occasional outbreaks are only evidence of a growing unrest and lawlessness arising from our too "free and easy" system of political management.

"NOBLES OF THE MYSTIC SHRINE."

A STARTLING RITUAL GIVEN IN FULL—FEARFUL INITIATION CEREMONIES—SHRINER MYSTERIES LAID BARE.

For some years past the public places of resort in New York, and the theatres especially, have been invaded by a crowd of individuals wearing fezes, or Turkish cloth caps, of a fiery red hue, giving themselves out to be Masons of the highest known degree, and calling themselves "Nobles of the Ancient Arabian Order of the Mystic Shrine." As such they have created a sensation in that city, and, through attaching themselves on to Masonic processions, parades, and ceremonies in every part of the country, have gained a reputation as superlative Masons never before attained by any society.

Fortunately, to divest a delusion of its charms, the Cynosure has come in possession of the ritual of this Mystic Shrine, the salient parts of which we reproduce in order that Masons debarred admission into an exclusive coterie may see the Shriners as they see themselves. In the Order of the Arabian Nobles there is but one degree, divided into three sections: the first, preliminary, the second, actual initiation, and the third, a culmination of terrors, all of which are given as follows, in the exact language of the ritual:

INITIATION OF A NOBLE—FIRST SECTION—ARRANGEMENT OF TEMPLE.

Temple darkened. Furniture: Altar of Obligation covered in black, having on it the Bible and the Koran, the black stone or Holy Stone of black marble one foot square or more, and two crossed swords; right of East, Altar of Incense with burning incense of myrrh, etc.; left of East, bier and coffin, each half way between East and Altar of Obligation; Laver of Water in the South; Gong in the Southwest, organ, etc. Members about the body of the temple, all clothed as prescribed. Officers in their respective stations, etc.

Grand Potentate—"First Ceremonial Master, you will retire to the outer walls and ascertain if ANY NOVICE AWAITS OUR PLEASURE."

First Ceremonial Master retires, ascertains, and returning before the Altar, reports after giving the sign. "Illustrious Grand Potentate, there are without (one, two, three) Sons of the Desert who seek admission to our Mystic Shrine."

Grand Potentate—"Illustrious First and Second Ceremonial Masters accompanied by our Grand Marshal, you will retire without the Temple and prepare those novices for reception in our Mystic Shrine."

They salute and retire, and prepare candidates by taking off the shoes, coat, collar and vest and clothing them in white dominoes and slippers, handcuffed, or tied at the wrist loosely.

When the candidate (one, two or three) is ready, the Ceremonial Masters take charge of him. Three loud knocks at the outer door of the Temple call the Oriental Guide to admit them. The response is, inside, a horrible clatter, the rasping of iron rings over an iron bar and the withdrawal of several large bolts; then the door opens: "What is the cause of this clamorous alarm? Who dares intrude upon the ceremonies of our Mystic Shrine?" asks the Oriental Guide.

First Ceremonial Master—"(one, two or three) poor Sons of the Desert, who are weary of the hot sands and the burning sun of the plains and humbly crave shelter under the protecting dome of the Temple."

Oriental Guide—"How may we know them to be worthy and not of treacherous or ignoble purpose?"

First Ceremonial Master—"Their characters having been canvassed, and coming within the bounds of good report, they have passed the ordeal of the Secret Ballot of our Mystic Shrine unsoiled, and I espouse their cause and sanction their reception with the Secret Pass."

Oriental Guide—"Give me the pass."

First Ceremonial Master advances and whispers: "M . . ." [Molay.]

Oriental Guide—"Tis well; let them enter."

They enter, preceded by Marshal, Ceremonial Masters, etc., conducting them,

THE GUIDE LEADING ALL.

The Grand Potentate strikes thrice; calls up the body. Gong sounds once, organ music. They march twice around, organ or singing or both; the gong sounds when they pass the East and when they halt there, the second time around. Grand Potentate strikes once; all are seated. Candidates halt.

Grand Potentate—"What strange intruders have we here? Our pleasures were most perfect and should be sacred from this turmoil and display."

Oriental Guide—"Illustrious Grand Potentate, 'tis I who have ushered in (one, two or three) poor Sons of the Desert, who being weary of the hot sands and burning sun of the plains, humbly crave that sacred boon to the weary and thirsty traveler, a cup of water and shelter under the protecting dome of our goodly Temple. I do commend them to your favor, having found them worthy and not of treacherous or ignoble purpose, each having passed the ordeal of the Secret Ballot of our Mystic Shrine unsoiled and vouched for by a NOBLE WITH OUR SECRET PASS."

Grand Potentate—"Most Noble Guide, know you the penalty of broken faith and do you stand forth as ransom for them all?"

Oriental Guide—"Illustrious Grand Potentate, I do."

Grand Potentate—"So be it, then. Conduct them once again about our Shrine and to our Most High Priest, that he may imprint upon the tablets of their memories a knowledge of the duties they do here assume."

Candidates conducted around to the Prophet and Priest, who is robed and wearing a mitre.

Priest—"Strangers, are your motives for coming among us honorable, pure and free from hope of gain or pride of knowledge?"

Candidates—"They are."

Priest—"Have you a belief in the existence of a Deity?"

Candidates—"I have."

Priest—"Have you a desire to promote justice and suppress wrong?"

Candidates—"I have."

Priest—"Have you a due regard for female virtue?"

Candidates—"I have."

Priest—"Are you willing to jeopardize your life, if need be, to punish the guilty and protect the innocent and labor in the cause of justice, truth and common humanity?"

Candidates—"I am."

Priest—"Have you still a desire to unite with us in the inseparable bonds of the Mystic Shrine for the purposes to

WHICH YOU HAVE ASSENTED?"

Candidates—"I have."

High Priest—"If you have answered in sincerity and in truth in these replies I can assure you that no conflicting sentiment nor requirement here will mar your principles nor your duties in the outer world, be they what they may. Our alliance or the Rite of our Mystic Shrine is ancient, honorable, benevolent and secret. It is devoted to the cause of justice, truth and mercy. It is ancient as the corner-stone of Mohammed's Temple of Mecca; as secret as the Moslem that bound the tribes of Arabia to Allah or their god; as honorable as the Christian, and the tenets to which it is dedicated when once assumed cannot be eschewed or cast aloof. We know no retrogression; justice is our escutcheon; charity beyond reason we do not expect; virtue must be regarded for its peerless worth and morality observed for the general good of all. We require absolute secrecy and desire all our disciples to hold an interest in our noble cause and a just observance of

THE TENETS OF OUR FAITH.

Let these preliminary teachings be deeply graven upon your hearts. They are priceless when well observed and attributes that cannot be bought with paltry, sordid gold. By the existence of Allah and the creed of Mohammed; by the legendary sanctity of our Tabernacle at Mecca, we greet you, and in commemoration of the Arab's faith in purity and innocence, we accept your answers as sincere, and you will now be permitted to proceed in the rites and ceremonies of the Mystic Shrine. The Oriental Guide and escort will now conduct you onward, while you will reverently lend an attentive ear to our preparatory service."

Gong, music, verse. Candidates proceed.

Grand Potentate—"Who is he who hath professed to have conversed in person with the Supreme and maketh himself mightiest of his Mohammed, the Prophet of the Arab's creed?"

Gong, music and short verse.

Chief Rabban—"Who but Mohammed mingled his religion with his Hourii and said: 'Are not these the true sources of happiness?'"

Gong, music, verse.

Assistant Rabban—"What shall befall them who have reflected with abhorrence that which the Prophet hath revealed? Wherefore their works shall not avail; do they not travel through the earth and see the end of those who

WERE BEFORE THEM?"

Gong, music, verse.

Priest—"Why do unbelievers indulge themselves and eat as beasts; shall not their portion be a torment? Appeal to the Prophets for the truth."

Gong, music, verse.

Grand Potentate—"To whom shall be meted out the boiling waters to drink, that they shall burst their bowels and shall be cast into molten lava to be consumed? The infidels who wait until the last hour of justice."

Gong, music, verse.

Chief Rabban—"Let us be of the number of those who bathe in the fountain of incorruptible waters and rivers of milk, the taste whereof changeth not, and rivers of wine, pleasant and purifying to those who drink, and enter into the vineyards where fruits rare and plenty ever abound,

AND NO EVIL EXISTS."

Gong, music, verse.

Assistant Rabban—"He who follows the plain declaration of his dictator will ever avoid those whose evil works have been dressed for them by the devil and who follow up their own lusts."

Gong, music, verse.

Priest—"There are Moslems among us; there are others who swerve from propriety; but whoso seeketh Islam earnestly seeks true direction; but those who swerve from truth and justice shall merit and reap abundance of chastisement."

Gong, music, verse.

Grand Potentate—"Let us purify one another. There are two highways to good and evil; attempt not the city of destruction. Be ye all possessed of the faculty of distinguishing and the power of choosing wickedness and piety. For the punishment of each will be equal to

THE MEASURE OF HIS SIN."

Gong and music, until the candidates, arriving at the East, halt.

Grand Potentate—"Sons of the Desert, you have advanced through the preliminary ceremonies of the Nobility of the Mystic Shrine, as far as it is possible, unobligated. Before advancing further in our course you will be required to assume a most powerful and binding oath, inseparably uniting yourself with us, and when once taken it can never be retracted or departed from. But, I assure you, therein is not contained a sentiment exceptionable to all that may become an honest, upright man, be his beliefs what they may. Are you willing to assume such an obligation?"

Candidates—"I am."

CANDIDATES ARE CONDUCTED .

around to the West and to the Altar of Obligation amid sound of gong, drum and music. Kneel at altar with bound arms leaning upon the top, heads bowed. Grand Potentate strikes thrice to call all around the altar, and then to candidates: "Repeat after me."

OBLIGATION.

"—, of my voluntary desire, uninfluenced and of free accord, do here assume, without reserve, the 'Obligation of the Nobility of the Mystic Shrine, as did the elect of the Temple of Mecca, the Moslem and the Mohammedan. I do hereby, upon this Bible, and on the mysterious legend of the Koran, and its dedication to the Mohammedan faith, promise and swear and vow, on the faith and honor of an upright man, come weal or woe, adversity or success, that I will never reveal any secret part or portion whatsoever of the ceremonies I have already received, that are about to be communicated to me or that I may hereafter be instructed in, to any person in the world, except it be to a well-known member of the Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and I, knowing to an absolute certainty that he or they be truly and lawfully such, and of good standing with such Nobility. That I will not be present, aid or countenance the conferring of the Order of the Mystic Shrine upon any person who is not a Masonic Knight Templar or a thirty-second degree A. and A. Scottish Rite Mason in good standing.

I FURTHER PROMISE AND VOW

that I will not willfully write, cut, speak or portray any detail that might be construed into even a clue to the same, except for official Temple work.

"Furthermore, I do here register a sacred vow, promising, should I live to become a member, I will impartially cast a black ballot without fear or favor against friend or foe applying for membership in the Nobility of the Mystic Shrine, whom I believe to be disgraced, dishonored, a thief, a perjurer, a murderer, a lunatic, an idiot or a criminal. And should I undismayed pass safely through the Moslem test and be found worthy the confidence of my fellows albeit I do not actively espouse the cause, still I do promise to be silent, even if neutral, and not oppose the purposes of the order.

I FURTHER PROMISE AND VOW

that I will obey the laws and submit to the decrees of the Parent Temple, the Imperial Grand Council of the United States of America, and that I will not acknowledge, recognize nor be present in any other body of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, claiming to be superior in authority, nor be present in any clandestine Temple not holding constitutional authority from the Imperial Grand Council of the Mystic Shrine.

"I furthermore promise and vow that to the full measure and of my ability I will never swerve from justice nor duty. That I will respect virtue; protect the innocent; assist the distressed; promote the inculcation of honor and integrity, and dispense reasonable charity. That I will protect and defend the unsullied honor of any Noble of the Mystic Shrine, when absent, if assailed;

AND NOW UPON THIS SACRED BOOK,

by the sincerity of a Moslem's oath, I here register this irrevocable vow, subscribing myself bound thereto as well as binding myself by the obligation of the prerequisite to this membership, that of a Knight Templar or that of a thirty-second degree A. and A. Scottish Rite Mason. In willful violation whereof may I incur the fearful penalty of having my eyeballs pierced to the center with a three-edged blade, my feet flayed and I be forced to walk the hot sands upon the sterile shores of the Red Sea until the flaming sun shall strike me with livid plague, and may Allah, the god of Arab, Moslem and Mohammedan, the god of our fathers, support me to the ENTIRE FULFILLMENT OF THE SAME."

G. Potentate—"In token of your sincerity salute the Sacred Book, the Bible."

Priest—"Unbind the Sons of the Desert. They are now of noble birth. The rays of the hot, flaming sun upon the sterile shores of the Red Sea are strong and more scathing than the hempen thong."

Nobles are all seated by the Grand Potentate's striking once. Candidates are ordered to arise and

THEIR WRISTS ARE UNBOUND.

Priest—"Our Oriental will now conduct the Sons of the Desert to our purifying cavern in the South. It is the fountain of Mecca. Let them there wash their hands in innocence, cleansing themselves of the snares of sin and vice that may have surrounded them, and let them be returned to us free from the stains of iniquity."

Conducted to fountain or urn, with music and verse; then conducted to the East.

Grand Potentate—"My friends, it is with pleasure that I extend to you the greeting of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and congratulate you upon having thus far passed the ceremonies of our order; bear bravely up to the Moslem test and prove your fidelity to our cause. Although vague may appear the prospect in our ceremony and the aspect of our purpose, let me assure you that there is a deep and formidable meaning in it all, and when you shall have passed unflinching and undismayed nerve and courage, then will you, indeed, be worthy to espouse our cause; but, mark well, should you ultimately decline to enlist in active part you are still bound by the strongest ties to remain neutral. Remember this and continue faithful to the death; but ere we impart to you our formidable purpose, you must prove your fidelity and courage. We do not expect all to join in active part, but those who do not unite in the task must applaud our deeds, or by silence favor not an adverse faction to gain sway.

OUR FINAL TEST OF YOUR FIDELITY,

WITH THIS ADMONITION

I yield you up to our Guide and his cohorts, who will conduct you to the ante-room and blindfold you, and one by one you will be subjected to the Moslem test of courage. And should an unforeseen disaster come we are in duty bound to honor and protect those who are left near and dear to you. Ere you depart we bid you God-speed and adieu."

Priest (approaching to East and raising both hands)—"And may Allah protect and support you, that you be not cast into 'al hotama' (hell). Now let our secret vaults open to their width, that the vapors of damp stagnation may pass away. Open the passage to the desert and disperse our trusty Arabs in full array for the Moslem test. Away!"

Candidates conducted out under solemn music to be prepared for the second section.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE SECOND AND THIRD SECTIONS.

During the preparation, etc., some member goes out and calls the most timid candidate aside, or, if there be but one, some delay takes place, and he is left alone with the member who should be his friend. The member then hastily endeavors to encourage him, and tells him confidentially that he will not be harmed, that it is all ceremony, etc., although organized as a vigilance inquisition abroad. In this country it will become entirely a social order. Then he gives him the passes, words, signs, grips, etc., hastily, in confidence and in full. When fully confided, he is discovered by some officer or member, who becomes enraged at the member so disclosing and they have some sharp words; and the discoverer declares that he will report him

TO THE GRAND POTENTATE FOR CENSURE.

Member replies, "Do as you please" (this all outside). It is then whispered about so that the rest of the candidates can hear it (if more than one) and opinions are expressed that there will be trouble for such exposure before the candidate sees the end of the ceremonies, etc., or that it was unlawful information given before the candidate is through the initiation.

(This candidate is then left until last, if there are more than one.)

Meantime the friend (member) who has betrayed the signs departs to another room, divests himself of all but his shirt, pants and shoes. Whitening his face and at proper time blackened under the eyes and on the lips to give him a ghastly appearance. Keeps out of sight and awaits the coming ceremony or clothes himself with a domino and mask and waits until required (all this should occupy but a short space of time). Furthermore, another member, a slender, fragile, smooth-faced young man (preferable) is selected to be robed as a woman or Arab girl. In white or brown flowing robes, gathered tightly at the waist, bare arms and neck, female wig or striped silk handkerchief about the head, face painted pale (with zinc and bismuth), eyebrows blackened and arched, under eyelids penciled with India ink to disguise as much as possible. He is covered with domino and masked to enter the Temple and seated with a member of light weight or spare man, one not too prominent or well known.

BOUND AT THE WRISTS,

THIS MEMBER HAS A DOMINO

on, beneath which he has his coat, vest, etc., and white shirt; under the shirt is buckled a wide, soft padded belt fastened around under the armpits with two straps from front of shoulders passing over the back and two from the shoulder blades; behind all four unite in a ring or swivel at the back of the neck, ready for harmless execution by hanging at their proper time.

These disguised members, being all prepared, sit aside in dominoes and masked in some obscure corner to await the ceremonies. Officers and members all robed and masked.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE TEMPLE.

Immediately after the candidates leave the Temple room a large banquet table is placed in the position of the Altar, provided with luncheon or banquet (as can best be done, in variety, according to ability of body); when all is properly set a frame is placed upon the table, viz.: Four square sticks, forming a post for each corner, about fourteen inches or more high, with bars from each corner, forming a square frame the size of the table. All this is above the banquet and the supports a black cloth or cover, elevated in the center, ostensibly forming a tomb. The cloth is ornamented with sphynx, urn, crescents, etc., and should reach to the floor on all sides and be fringed; this

CONCEALS ALL THE TABLE AND BANQUET.

The Lavar, Altar of Incense and all the furniture are placed about the Temple on each side. In the North a scaffold is erected of two upright and one horizontal joists, painted black and strong enough to support the weight of a man when suspended; a hole is in the center of the horizontal bar and a pulley on the right corner for a rope to slide over; also a strong peg on the center of the right perpendicular bar or post on which to fasten the rope after elevating the man, with a clasp on the end of the noose in the center to hook into the ring at the back of the culprit's neck.

THE GIBBET SHOULD BE HIGH ENOUGH to enable the executioners to raise the extremities about three feet from the floor and leave a space of two or three feet above the head (all these appointments need cost but a small sum; the whole equipment has been so arranged as not to be expensive, unless extravagant properties are desired). A member with white robe, skull and skeleton-faced mask stands front of scaffold to adjust noose at proper time. Two strong members at the side of scaffold, robed in black, to elevate the culprit. (Scaffold may have black curtains about it if desired to conceal the executioners at the side.)

FURTHERMORE, A HEADSMAN'S BLOCK

is placed in the South covered with black. A headsmen with a carved blade battle ax, clothed in a scarlet robe gathered at the waist, with belt and sword, wearing scarlet mask, presides at the block. Beside the block lies a false head on the floor with a black cloth covering it (with a beard to resemble a member, if desired). A small bowl or dish should also be in readiness on a stand for the ceremonies of bleeding.

THE GONG SHOULD BE ATTENDED

by some competent member and the organist at his post. All is now in readiness for second section, but the rough or Artificial Desert.

SECOND SECTION.

The rough road or Artificial Desert, etc., is then prepared as follows: The candidates are hoodwinked and in stocking feet enter after three loud alarms (violent blows from the mallet). At first they proceed one by one on carpet, then upon a spread of corn husks, then a strip of stair cover or sheeting strewn with pebbles, followed by a ladder with close rounds, camp stools folded and a roller or any rough road most conveniently prepared, out through the hallways, etc., according to facilities. During this intercourse drum, fife, gong, organ, rattle, bugle, etc., etc., or instruments desired. Then persecute and test candidates as much as they will stand. Finally they are returned, one by one, to the Temple again amid the din, overpowered, laid in a hammock or canvas and folded in and swung from side to side or thrown upward, carried hastily about and finally placed in some outer apartment to await the other candidates. When all have passed this ordeal, collect them together in the ante-room, remove the relics of the desert and at once place the Temple in order for the last ceremony or third section.

ALL BEING IN READINESS,

officers should be at their posts, executioners at scaffold, skeleton masked in front of same, and headsmen at the block, etc. In front of East seven seats are prepared for seven men called "Council of the Inquisition."

Before the alarm the Potentate calls seven officers or members for inquisitors to the East. Potentate occupies the center; two Rabbans (one on each side); the Priest occupies the chair in the East, wielding the sceptre; all masked, except Potentate and Priest; room quite dark. Ceremonial Masters are outside with candidates, clothed in white robes or dominoes, with shoes on and not hoodwinked.

THIRD SECTION.

First Ceremonial Master, outside, strikes thrice loudly upon the door with a wooden mallet. Oriental Guide, inside, returns the alarm, opens the wicket and says:

"Why this clamorous alarm?"

Ceremonial Master—(One, two or three) "candidates pursuing the secrets of the Mystic Shrine."

O. Guide—"Have the Mystic Pass?"

Cer. Master whispers "Nemesis."

O. Guide—"Let them enter."

Chains drawn; gong sounds low; organ music and door is opened. Candidates conducted to front of West and seated.

Grand Potentate—"My friends, having passed through the ordeal of traversing the hot sands of the desert undismayed, you are now returned for the final ceremonies. But we find ourselves compelled, most unexpectedly, to hold a secret inquisition to judge and execute upon a traitorous element within our Temple. I must, however, stay those proceedings to briefly invest you with the knowledge of our secrets.

"If it be your desire to decline the active part you are sacredly bound to secrecy and silence.

"Our mission is to succor the distressed, relieve the oppressed, protect the innocent and punish the guilty, equalize station, establish harmony in all creeds, crush fanaticism and intolerance and perpetuate the welfare of mankind.

CRIME IS RUNNING RIFE

over the land; our laws are deemed inadequate for the emergency and we are exponents of a vigilance inquisition to promptly execute and punish the malefactor, the thief, the murderer, the despoiler of innocence and virtue, the violator of obligation and the desecrator of Masonic vow.

Our purpose is to strike terror to the heart of the criminal class by bringing them speedily and without mercy to the block or to the bowstring of the Mystic Shrine.

"To arrest, judge and execute within the hour, and thus take the law within our own grasp and summarily punish the malefactor. Blood for blood and and as our fleet-footed justice overtakes and punishes the evil-doer, aye, even in the heat of misdeed, it will be a lesson to those who remain and know not the fate of the departed.

"The day is not far distant when the name and the escutcheon of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine will strike a pallid terror to the wild devouring element of crime, and the thankful prayers of the unprotected will attest the justice of our cause.

"I will now invest you with the salutations, signs, grips and passwords of our order."

WORK OF THIRD SECTION.

Captain of the Guard (discovering a member with a female in Temple in disguise, shouts)—"Most Noble Prophet and High Priest, a spy, an intruder, a traitor is in the Temple!"

All arise; confusion. Officers of Ceremonies, Guide and Priest proceed to the scene.

Captain of the Guard—"Most Noble Priest, I have but now discovered an intruder accompanied by a woman; both without Secret Pass have gained admission to the Temple."

Pointed out and mask removed.

Priest—"By our faith, Nobles, we are betrayed!"

Both are seized by the Oriental Guide and Marshal and surrounded by Inquisitors, exclaiming: "To the executioner with them!"

Potentate—"Hold! stand all apart; disrobe our mantle from that female form; bind and hold her fast."

Domino and hood taken off and the woman stands held fast, robed in white and dismayed; bare arms and neck.

Potentate (pointing to male member)—"Strip and hang that spy without delay."

Officers roughly strip member to shirt and pants (he is previously painted pale and haggard) and is prepared for

EXECUTION AS BEFORE DIRECTED.

Potentate—"Stranger, have you no defense? If not, you must meet the death of a spy."

Culprit shakes his head (No).

Potentate—"Then let the culprit be executed."

He is hurried to the scaffold; the executioner, in skeleton mask, adjusts the noose. He has a loose rope then placed about the neck (to appear real).

Priest (kneels before the gallows)—"Thus do we yield up thy life for our own security and may justice, peace and mercy abide with thee."

EXECUTIONER PLACES ON the black cap; Priest arises and holds up handkerchief and drops it; gong sounds, and the victim is suspended in the air. He struggles an instant and hangs silent and apparently lifeless.

Potentate—"Thus perish all our enemies. Noble Guide, seat that miscreant woman by the block and cut a deep crescent upon her naked breast. We cannot take her life."

She swoons and falls in chair or arms.

O. Guide—"Illustrious Grand Potentate, she has already swooned."

Potentate—"The better still; she will not know her pains. Cut the crescent on her breast and drag her from our Temple. She'll not forget the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine."

SHE IS DRAGGED IN A CHAIR

to the block, a bowl brought, her breast bared and a knife is seen in the officer's hand. The bowl is held in front and an officer from behind holds under the arm a rubber bulb with stem, that holds a pint of red wine; a cut, a groan and the blood (wine) flows into the bowl. The bowl is set on the block, a blood-stained towel is also thrown down, and she is borne from the Temple in the chair to an outer chamber.

Priest (taking up the bowl)—"Most Noble Council of the Inquisition, now, in testimony of the justice of our cause, let us in this maiden's blood seal the alliance of our bond of secrecy and silence. And let this day's bloody work in the deepest recesses of every Noble's heart be buried."

(Priest and seven Inquisitors drink.)

Curtain in front of scaffold may be drawn and the executed let down for rest. The officer who detected the member exposing the work now arises hastily (the member being

ALL PREPARED WITHOUT).

Priest—"Illustrious Grand Potentate, I now demand censure or punishment upon a member (mentioning name) upon whose case this Inquisitor's Tribunal has deliberated for the crime of treason in our midst, exposing our secrets to a friend and candidate within our very Temple."

Potentate—"Let him be brought before us."

Second culprit brought in, stripped (as described) to shirt and pants.

Potentate—"Sir, you have been openly accused of treason and betrayal of our faith, not only here, but without our Temple's walls. The Vigilance Inquisition have tried, judged and sentenced you; what is your defense?"

Oriental Guide—"Grand Potentate and Inquisitors of our Council, let me appeal to this tribunal to temper justice with mercy, and in slight extenuation of this crime, let me offer this defense: Being loose of tongue when plied with wine and most earnestly importuned by his best beloved friend, he, in part, did yield, all in good nature, but intent on friendship and not meaning harm, frivolously related who and what we were and the object of our cause. And this, his friend and companion, now comes and exonerate himself by the assumption of our vows. Therefore, I do opine, their punishment should be equal and each to assume the wrong or let the novice assume it all, for 'tis monstrous to leave his friend to perish for a crime prompted by himself."

Potentate (to candidate)—"Stranger Knight thus accused, arise. What say you to this grave charge?"

Candidate answers (no matter what).

Culprit member—"By my Moslem oath, Illustrious Grand Potentate, all that has been said by our Noble Guide is true. That I have erred I cannot deny, but all that I in confidence imparted to him I am informed he has loosely brawled about, hence I must suffer for his crime."

Potentate—"Hold, enough! Most High Prophet and Priest, to you do I appeal for judgment. Although our council has before decided, still do I appeal to you."

Priest (advancing on the floor)—"Grand Potentate and Council of Inquisitors, our cause is sorely tried, our Temple and our Shrine in jeopardy, the crescent turns perpendicular, point and point, and spills its mystic blood; the hourii weep and Justice drops her scale, for by their fault spies have fallen in our midst. Our safety commands judgment on them both. Let the first in fault and his fellow

GO TO THE BLOCK TOGETHER."

All the Inquisitors arise and exclaim: "To the block! to the headsmen!"

First and second Ceremonial Masters seize culprit member and conduct him to the block, then seize candidate and conduct him to the West. Take off his robe, coat, collar, etc., except pants and shirt, same as culprit member, and bind his hands.

Potentate—"Let the traitor suffer first."

Culprit is hurried to the block, blindfolded, and made to kneel; head on block (a false wax or carved head lies beside block, with black cloth over it, out of sight).

Priest (holding up sceptre)—"And now may justice, peace and mercy abide with you. Strike!"

THE AX FALLS, culprit tumbles on floor, executioner stoops, lifts black cloth from false head and covers head of culprit, seizes false head by hair, raises it to view and exclaims:

"NEMESIS!"

Candidate is hoodwinked and made to approach the block and lay his head upon it.

Priest—"Hold! Executioner, mark this stranger's neck with the scimitar, but do not slay him."

The headsmen slaps the candidate on the neck with a damp towel and he is at once taken by force and placed in the hammock or canvas, carried and placed in a coffin at the East end of the catafalque, while the culprit and the head are borne into an outer room. Officers all return.

Potentate—"Thus doth the evil doer and the malefactor meet with 'Nemesis' at the Inquisition of Mystic Shrine; and it now becomes our duty to deposit the result of our vigilance in the tomb, isolated from the eyes of the meddling world, a fit abiding place for the remains of the unfaithful. Most Noble Oriental Guide, lest the secret clasp of our Mystic Catafalque be prematurely known to our novices, let them be again hoodwinked, that their hearts may be taught secrecy and their tongues silence ere they be entrusted with the SECRET OF THE MYSTIC SHRINE."

Candidates all blindfolded. The coffin is then stood on end or placed at an angle with head on chair, at end of table or tomb, toward the East; the block and executioner placed at the West side. The culprit again elevated by the noose, skeleton executioner at his side; the woman seated at the North; officers and members gathered around table in tableaux, and lights turned up; black cloth and frame removed from banquet table and

ALL IS IN READINESS FOR THE FINALE.

Grand Potentate—"Now let us rejoice that iniquity has lain her proud idol in the dust and that justice has triumphed over sin. And ever thus let our light so shine before men that they may behold our good works."

Gong; hoodwinks removed; music and general jubilee at banquet. Candidate is provided and eats and drinks from coffin, the culprit also from the gallows, as also the female, still in costume, at the North, etc., etc.

After general banquet the meeting is closed in a formal manner.

TENTH GENERAL CONFERENCE FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

DEAR FELLOW CHRISTIANS:—Our countryman, Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, has made a remarkable impression on this side of the Atlantic, more than fulfilling Mr. Spurgeon's anticipations. Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost has also been more than well received, on his return from India, by the congregation of the late Dr. Donald Fraser and by the large audiences to whom he has spoken of his experiences in India. On the other hand, we in the United States have been greatly helped by brethren from Great Britain. The visits of Rev. John McNeill, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and the Rev. John Smith of Edinburgh, last year, will be long remembered.

I have pleasure in letting my friends know that since the issue of my call for the Tenth Christian Convention to be held at Northfield, Mass., Aug. 4 to 15, I have prevailed on Mr. Meyer to pay another visit to that place. He expects to sail on the last of July, arriving Aug. 6, in time to take part in the closing days of the Convention, and will continue until the 24th of August to give daily Bible readings after the greater meetings have closed. I hope this may induce many to prolong their stay. Mr. Meyer is becoming well known to large numbers of readers in America through his expository and devotional works, which are obtaining a large circulation there, as well as here. From Aug. 16 to 24 Mr. Meyer will speak once each day on at least five days in the week beside Sunday. The Sabbaths will be filled with three services. Dr. Pierson and Dr. Pentecost, enriched with their remarkable experiences in England and in India, will also be present, and after Mr. Meyer's departure will continue the daily meetings to the end of the month, and Mr. Ira D. Sankey or Mr. Geo. C. Stebbins will conduct the service of song. In view of Mr. Meyer's peculiar adaptation as a teacher and helper of the ministry, I trust that many ministers especially, as well as Bible students, teachers and Christian workers, will take advantage of this opportunity to hear a man whom God has so greatly used in blessing his fellow-workers. Ministers could spend a pleasant and profitable vacation in this way, combining rest and recreation with spiritual edification. I would also call the attention of the Christian Endeavor societies to the fact that Mr. Meyer's talks, like his writings, are very helpful to young people. I would urge that these societies send large delegations.

In order to enable many to enjoy these benefits, arrangements have been made to furnish board and lodging in the Seminary buildings to all who remain to the close of the meetings, at $1.00 per day, and reduced railroad rates will also be secured. Parties desiring further information should address Ambert G. Moody, Esq., Northfield, Mass. Yours truly. D. L. MOODY.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 20, 1892.

After a long and what at times appeared to be a doubtful struggle the victory is won and the House of Representatives has followed the lead of the Senate and officially said to the world in language that will not be misunderstood that the United States is a Christian nation, and that the Columbian Exposition, which, while not to be strictly a Government affair, is nevertheless regarded by foreigners as being under the control and protection of this Government, shall not open its gates on Sunday. The Senate adopted the amendment to the Sundry Civil bill providing for closing the World's Fair on Sundays without a division, and the House concurred by a vote of 147 to 61.

There is a lesson in this triumph which every friend of Christianity and moral reform should take to heart. It was the moral pressure brought upon Congress by the two-million and more signers of petitions asking for legislation closing the Exposition on Sundays that did the work. At the beginning of the present session of Congress the idea was scouted at and Senators and Representatives were wont to say, "Oh, there is no public sentiment in favor of Sunday closing;" later, when the petitions were pouring in, an attempt was made to lessen their influence by calling them "machine-made" petitions; but when the Senators and Representatives examined the names attached to those from their own States they soon discovered that there was a power behind those petitions which was entitled to the most respectful consideration, and many who had previously been counted as in favor of Sunday opening became outspoken in opposition thereto. It was concerted action which won this victory, and the same force can always win, if backed by as many people as were these petitions.

A movement has been started by a number of temperance and church people here, which promises, in my opinion, much practical good, if it be properly carried out. These ladies and gentlemen propose to open several comfortable sitting and reading rooms where, free from the slightest restraint, men may pass their spare time in reading, writing, or in innocent amusements. The class for which such places will offer barriers to temptation is made up of the men who frequent drinking saloons, largely because they know of no other places to go in search of companionship. As one of those interested in the movement said: "I have visited both the jail and the work-house and a large majority of the inmates of both frankly declared to me that they owed their presence in those penal institutions to the fact that they had been practically compelled to spend their evenings in the saloons because there was no other place where they could go and meet their companions who were fighting the same battle as themselves for freedom from the slavery of intemperance." The trouble with movements of this sort is that over-zealous people expect to accomplish too much at once, and the result is, all too often, that they repel the men that they are trying to save. The first and principal idea should be to make the men feel as much at ease in these rooms as they do in the saloons, and to show them that there is more real pleasure in innocent recreation than in becoming, through liquor, beasts. This should be done gradually and by example and personal contact rather than by precept; and when it is accomplished the man's moral nature is apt to have become aroused and to crave further nourishment. Then is the time to do what so many people with the very best of intentions insist upon doing when they first come in contact with these men. It will cost very little money to inaugurate this movement, and from the two meetings which have been held it appears to be certain that several of these reading and sitting rooms will be open in a short time.

The postponement again of the purchase of a site for a new Government printing office is much regretted by those familiar with the danger constantly surrounding the several thousand employes in the present unsafe building, and there is much disgraceful talk about the methods used, it is alleged, by an ex-Senator, who has a site to sell the Government, to postpone the purchase because he had been unable to get his land selected. Appearances indicate that much of this talk is true.

It is deeply regretted by temperance folks that Congress in both of its branches should have voted down the proposition to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors on the grounds of the World's Fair. The Senate at first adopted it, but afterwards reconsidered and defeated it, and the House by a vote of 189 to 41 refused to adopt it.

"Receive ye the Holy Ghost" is the mightiest of all boons; but like the sun in the heavens, it is the freest of all.—The Faithful Promiser.

Even while drinking, I could but think of how the dear Saviour was nailed on the cross, and, when he asked for a drink, how the people offered him gall. I just said to myself, "Have I not given him gall, when I might have given him water as well, when he was calling me to himself?"—The reclaimed "Mulberry Shum Bum-mer."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., July 23, 1892.

I am detained for an hour at this point, enroute to Douglas camp-meeting, where I hope to meet friends and distribute tracts if the "powers that be" will permit.

At Hebron Camp the Lord's people have been having a free conference in the Spirit. Up to date there has not been a large crowd at any one time, but a constant coming and going, so that a goodly number have caught the inspiration of the meetings and carried it to all parts of New England. No topic worthy the consideration of intelligent Christians has been excluded; and the relation of the secret kingdom of the "wicked one" to the open kingdom of the "Just One" has received due attention. After presenting the subject, yesterday, by the aid of chart illustrations, I was encouraged by many kind words, and by invitations from the presidents of two other camp-meeting associations, to address their annual conventions. The atmosphere in New England on the lodge question is gradually changing, and I am going, for the fourth time, to apply for an opportunity to present the subject at the Douglas "Holiness Convention," in the hope that a word of testimony may be allowed on some definite specific sin.

Last year our good Bro. McDonald expressed full sympathy, but would not allow the introduction of temperance, Romanism, anti-secrecy, or any other particular sin upon which public opinion was divided, lest minds should be diverted from the great theme of "holiness," the ONE great thought of the convention. I hope to find some enlargement of heart, liberty of utterance, catholicity of privilege, practical method, and "growth in grace" this year.

The Lord has given us delightful weather for the week past and a time of refreshing for all who have visited Camp Hebron.

My son, who is with us, is greatly improved in health, and hopes soon to resume work in Vermont, or where the Lord shall appoint.

J. P. STODDARD.

OUR WORK IN WESTERN STATES.

BLANCHARD, Ia., July 20, 1892.

Last week I spent several days at the Fremont, Neb., Chautauqua Assembly. Its best attraction was four lectures by the matchless Kentucky orator, Col. Geo. W. Bain. Also, three lectures, each, were given, by Jehu De Witt Miller and Leon. H. Vincent, of Philadelphia; and by Rev. Conrad Haney, and Rev. J. P. Mills, of Chicago. The Assembly was in charge of Dean Wright, of Boston, who conducted a Bible school and gave daily lectures.

There was also a W. C. T. U. School of Methods, in charge of the State President, Mrs. M. A. Hitchcock. By her invitation, I addressed the Assembly on Prohibition Day, and was followed by Col. Bain. In conversation, he remarked that Dr. Jonathan Blanchard was a hero, always found fighting in the front line of the reform army. He said: "I now have nothing more to do with secret societies."

This was only the second year of the Fremont Assembly, and it promises to be one of the most popular in the West.

I spoke four times in the Covenanter church at Wahoo, while out on this trip. Besides this congregation, there are two others in Wahoo—the Swedish and Danish Lutheran, in full sympathy with the anti-secret reform. Their pastors, Rev. C. A. Lindhl, and Rev. John Risdall, and Prof. S. M. Hill, President of the Wahoo Lutheran College, will each help in a State Convention. I know of no town in the State where a stronger influence could be secured for such a convention than in Wahoo. There is a large anti-secret element in Nebraska which has never been organized. I have hopes of being able to make an extended tour of the State during the coming autumn, and will be glad to lecture on the anti-secret issue wherever the friends of the cause will arrange.

Will all Cynosure readers in the State please write to me at Blanchard, Ia., stating the prospects for holding meetings in their respective neighborhoods?

I am spending the summer months at home, enjoying needed rest, and preparing for a year's campaign, to begin in September.

Rev. W. C. Paden, our recently appointed agent for Iowa, Kansas and Missouri, has selected as his headquarters, and removed his family to Oakland, Shawnee Co., Kan. This is a suburb of Topeka, one of the most convenient railroad centers in the West. Here his wife will be near her folks, which is an important consideration, in view of her husband's frequent absence from home.

He will be at home for the most part during July and August, preparing for a vigorous campaign, to begin Sept. 1. He has in mind a lecture tour through Iowa, beginning in the vicinity of his former pastorate in Northwestern Iowa, and extending to the southeastern part of the State.

Last spring I had the pleasure of spending a few days with Bro. Paden when he was pastor at Schaller, Ia. The way in which the Lord led him into this work can be briefly stated. Born with a natural aversion to secretism, he was aroused to preach a sermon on the subject by the fact that several brother ministers in Schaller joined the lodge. His sermon awakened such opposition that he concluded to give up his charge, although most of his people held him in high esteem. He was informed by his synodical missionary, that to obtain work in the Presbyterian church it would be necessary for him to keep quiet on the question of secret societies. The more he mused on the subject, the more he felt the importance of the question, and could not rest till he decided to enter the field as lecturer for the National Christian Association. He is a young man of clear brain, and warm heart, and highly gifted as a platform speaker. He is a graduate of Muskingum College, Ohio, and of Princeton Theological Seminary.

His evident call to this important work should stimulate every friend of the cause in his field to co-operate with him. Write to him at once of the prospects for lectures in your vicinity, so that he can begin early to plan his campaign. If you are unable to secure a church for a meeting, then try for a school house. If you fail in that, try a parlor meeting, to which you can invite as many of your friends and neighbors as possible.

Let us each one plan to make this the most successful year in the history of this reform.

M. A. GAULT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

STRIKES AND THE LABOR PROBLEM.

BOSTON, July 13, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The collision between the Pinkerton detectives and the workmen in the Carnegie steel works at Homestead, Pa., last week, has turned the attention of the people anew to the labor question. What is the difficulty? Carlyle hastily exclaimed: "The labor question! And what is the labor question, but two days' pay for one day's work? That is the whole of it." But this lays the blame at the door of the workingman, and is unjust. The laborer says: "My wages are so low I cannot live."

The employer says: "My margins are so small I cannot increase your wages." Who can tell just where the trouble is? It must be admitted that these moneyed corporations, which together form trusts, pools, syndicates and monopolies, are often systems of oppression, building up colossal fortunes, cemented with the blood and tears of the poor workers. A few years ago the nail manufacturers formed a trust. They closed their manufactories for six months, and held their goods. The market was drained, and they reaped immense profits. But their workmen were thrown into enforced idleness for six months. Their wages, their living, was taken away and the price of bread was increased—a two-edged sword, cutting the workmen in its forward and backward sweep. This is a great wrong. The law should regard it as criminal procedure. It must also be admitted that these strikes are often without a just cause. Some years ago the locomotive engineers in Ohio struck. Their average salary was $1,000 per annum. They demanded an addition of $200. The ministers of Ohio at that time were receiving $700 on an average. And all know the demands which their social position make on their purse. But who ever heard of the clergy striking for higher salary? Why did these engineers strike? That they might buy homes and educate their families? They had the means already for such purposes. It was to feed the saloons. And so long as the mouths of these tireless gormandizers of the workingmen's wages are not closed by law, there will always be a sufficient cause for strikes. The motto of Christianity is: "Labor, all its rights; capital, all its rights; equal and exact justice for all." Here "the rich and the poor meet together."

1. It requires the employer to give, and entitles the employe to receive, full wages.

A pyramid in Egypt took 360,000 men twenty years to build it. At the present rate of wages it would cost $3,000,000,000. The royal palace in Peru took 20,000 men fifty years to build it. The palace in Mexico took 200,000 men fifty years to build it. The wages paid these workmen was about two cents a day. In idolatrous countries, to-day, the average wages paid workmen is 10 cents a day; in Mohammedan countries, 20 cents; in countries where the Greek church prevails, 25 cents; in Roman Catholic countries, 37 cents; in Protestant lands, generally, 75 cents, and in the United States, $1.00. But Christian civilization increases the demands upon the laboring man's wages. Hon. Carroll D. Wright, some time since, showed from the official reports of the Bureau of Statistics for Massachusetts, that from 1860 to 1878, wages and the prices of living advanced in the same proportion, but from 1878 to 1882, wages declined, while the prices of living advanced, so that they stood as 31 to 41 per cent. The workingmen cried for relief. The worldly employer responded: "The market is flooded with workmen. I can duplicate my force at any hour of the day, and at less wages than I am paying my men. I shall, therefore, reduce their wages to the minimum." This is the spirit of the world. You see how relentless, hard-hearted, cruel, it is. It is Satanic. There is no aid or comfort here for labor. On the other hand, the Christian employer says: "I regard my laboring men as a trust for which I am answerable to God. Their wages shall be increased to the maximum limit of my ability to pay. They are American citizens. They have their vote. They must be educated. They must educate their families. They must have homes. They must have the means of making them pleasant and attractive. They must have books and papers. They must be free and independent. I am responsible for all this. So far as lies in my power their wages shall be equal to these requirements." This is Christ-like. It is Christianity applied. It works. It satisfies all.

2. It requires the state to protect both employer and employe in the enjoyment of their respective rights.

It must protect capital against destructive riots, as in Pittsburg in 1877, and at Homestead the past week. It must guard labor against wholesale discharges and lockouts. A man has no right to hire a crew and embark in a sea-voyage, and because he finds it a financial failure, scuttle his ship and leave his employes to their fate. If business men form a trust to make money and engage thousands of men, they have no right to discharge their men, or starve them, to save themselves. It is not necessary for employers to get rich; it is necessary for workmen to live. It is not necessary for employers to make money; it is necessary for their employes to have a comfortable living. The state must protect capital against the surprises and losses of sudden strikes. Too often, strikes are ordered by the irresponsible officers of labor unions, while the members have no interest in them. A law in Pennsylvania forbids locomotive engineers striking under certain specified conditions. Let those conditions be enlarged, and extended to other corporations. Strikes, as a rule, are not a blessing, but a curse to both labor and capital. The strike on the Schuylkill, in 1888, cost employer and employe about $4,000,000, and work was resumed without any advance. The state must protect labor against unjust and unnecessary reduction of wages. "A fair day's wages for a fair day's work" is right and must prevail. Rev. G. S. Reany, a noble worker in East London, says, in the English Congregationalist: "The fact, and no one denies it, is this: There are men engaged in large commercial enterprises, and some of them are professed Christian men, who have made, and are still making, large profits, and who pay workers in the East End and elsewhere the miserable pittance of one shilling for a day's work of twelve, fourteen and sixteen hours." Dr. Bradford says: "Virginius, with his cleaver, struck to the earth his daughter, whom Appius Claudius sought to ruin. Let us be frank. How much better than the Roman Decemvir are those employers who compel the daughters of our humblest homes to work at wages which mean starvation or crime? Joseph Cook, in Tremont Temple, said he knew and could name employers in Boston who were doing that. I repeated that statement to a prominent Boston merchant, and he declared that he knew men eminent in business who told their girls who worked for them that if they could not live on their wages they knew how they could live. The Rev. Mr. Rainsford said, at the Congregational Club in New York, that he knew of factories in the city in which it was impossible for young women to secure higher positions, or better pay, and remain virtuous." Satan is saying to these young women: "Cast thyself down from the pinnacle of virtue!" Shall the state not protect its citizens against the breach of the seventh commandment, as well as the sixth and eighth? "Corporations, which need not do it, are working men eighteen hours a day. Monopolies are compelling men to work at dangerous occupations for a dollar a day, and less; not because they must do so or liquidate, but simply because they can get others to work for that."

3. It furnishes employer and employe with a regularly recurring rest-day, the need of both.

The conflict between labor and capital is one manifestation of God's displeasure for trampling under foot the fourth commandment. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company disregarded this divine edict, and one Sabbath day, in August, 1877, one hundred and twenty-eight locomotives were consumed by the torch in the round-houses of Pittsburgh. The Jewish nation trampled upon the Sabbath, and God brought Nebuchadnezzar, who carried them to Babylon, and held them in bondage for seventy years, "that my land may have her Sabbaths, saith the Lord." The French nation abolished the Sabbath and adopted every tenth day as a holiday; but soon one of their leading statesmen exclaimed: "This law will ruin our nation!" Lord Macauley said, in the English Parliament: "We in England are not poorer, but richer, because we have rested these many ages from our labors one day in seven. The day is not lost. While industry is suspended, while the plough lies in the furrow, while the exchange is silent, while no smoke ascends from the factory, a process is going on quite as important to the wealth of nations, as any process which is performed on more busy days. Man, the machine of machines, the machine compared with which all the contrivances of the Watts and Arkwrights are worthless, is repairing and winding up, so that he returns to his labors on Monday with clearer intellect, with livelier spirits, with renewed corporeal vigor."

Let us have a law abolishing the United States mail service on Sabbath, forbidding the running of trains on Sabbath, prohibiting the Sunday newspaper on Sabbath, and forbidding the World's Fair to open its gates on Sabbath, and abolishing the saloon upon American soil forever, and disorganizing secret oathbound fraternities, and the labor problem will be solved.

4. It furnishes the spirit of brotherly love which harmonizes every relation between laborer and capitalist.

It enables each to say to the other, not "all yours is mine," but "all mine is yours." There is a firm in Cincinnati, O. (Procter & Gamble), soap manufacturers, having a capital stock of some $3,000,000, who divide their income with their employes, so that they are quasi-members of the company, and its prosperity is their prosperity. Their men do not grumble and talk of striking. No. They talk of how to push their business and work for that with a hearty good will. Dr. Bradford has made this statement: "When all manufacturers, according to their ability, treat their employes as the Tangys and Cadburys of Birmingham, Eng., treat theirs, there will be nothing left for trades unions to do. Those great firms have had no strikes, and workmen will cross England any time to get a chance to work in their factories. What is the secret? These artisans are treated as if they were men, not cogs in a wheel. At the Tangys, three times a week, during the dinner hour, a conference is held by a distinguished literary man, who gives his whole time to the education of those artisans. Political, social, economic questions he discusses with them; and he, too, is an employe of the company. At the great cocoa works of the Cadburys, 'family prayers' are held every morning at 9 o'clock. The time is not deducted from the men; and, said Mr. George Cadbury to me, 'we commenced it because we believed in it; we should continue it if for no other reason, because it pays.' In both establishments the men are regarded as members of a family and their interests studied as such. No strikes there! No socialism there! When the revolution comes in England these men will defend rather than destroy." This is the solution of the "Labor Problem." J. M. FOSTER.

IN BRIEF.

The earliest American typefounder was Christopher Sauer, whose establishment was started in Germantown in 1735. Following him were Mitchelson, Boston (1768); Bupell, New Haven (1769); Baine, Philadelphia (1790); Binney & Ronaldson, Philadelphia (1796); White & Wing, Hartford (1810); Bruce, New York (1814); Lothian, New York (1822); Hager, New York (1824); James Conner, New York (1827); Johnson, Philadelphia (1833), and Dickinson, Boston (1847).

The largest single building on the globe is said to be the Freihaus, a monster apartment house of Vienna. In it are 1,500 rooms, arranged so as to make 400 dwelling apartments. Two thousand one hundred and twelve persons live under one great roof, a population sufficient to make a city large enough to incorporate and furnish with a full set of aldermen. The immense building has 130 staircases and fifty elevators. The postmen say they often deliver 1,000 pieces of mail matter at this house in a single day.

The biggest workshop in the world is said to be that of Herr Krupp, the famous gun-maker of Essen, Germany. The growth of this vast establishment has been wonderful. In 1833 it employed nine workmen; in 1848, seventy-four. In July, 1888, the number had swelled to 20,960 men, and the families of the workmen numbered 73,769 souls. Of these 24,193 reside in dwellings provided by the firm. There are at Essen 1,195 furnaces of various constructions, 286 boilers, 92 steam hammers of from 200 to 100,000 pounds, 370 steam engines, with a total of 27,000 horse power, 1,724 different machines, and 361 cranes. Of coal and coke 2,735 tons are used daily, and 11 high furnaces of the latest construction produce about 600 tons of iron every day.

Early the other week all was going merrily at a very interesting wedding in Petaluma until the bridegroom was called upon to produce the wedding-ring. In vain he felt in his trousers pocket for the missing trifle. Nothing could be found except a hole, through which the ring had evidently fallen into the high boot, which is affected by young men in that part of the States. What was he to do? "Take off your boot," said the parson. The suspense and silence were painful. The organist, at the parson's bidding, struck up a "voluntary." The young man, sitting on the altar rails, removed his boot; the ring was found—also a hole in his stocking, which led the worthy divine to remark: "Young man, it is time you were married!"

A sailor belonging to a Chinese vessel lying at Spithead, England, died and was buried in the cemetery there. After the coffin had been lowered four sailors, who occupied a position at the foot of the grave, produced in succession a tin pail, a parcel of matches, a number of fagots and various pieces of brown paper. A fire having been kindled, out of the pail were brought forth several plates, which were disposed around the fire, a lump of pork, various pieces of meat, a few eggs and a quantity of salt and sand. These, having been divided into fives, were cooked and placed on the plates, and on the consummation of the sacrifice they were all gathered together and returned to the pail. A sailor now partly filled the grave, after which the captain of the ship and a couple of subordinate officers came forward and prostrated themselves three times, uttering a prayer at each genuflection. This completed the ceremony.

Full grown, the mahogany tree is one of the monarchs of tropical America. Its vast trunk and massive arms, rising to a lofty height, and spreading with graceful sweep over immense spaces, covered with beautiful foliage, bright, glossy, light and airy, clinging so long to the spray as to make it almost an evergreen—present a rare combination of loveliness and grandeur. The leaves are very small, delicate and polished like those of the laurel. The flowers are small and white, or greenish yellow. The mahog-

All women who are overworked, "run-down," or debilitated, need just one medicine—and that is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It's a broad statement, but facts bear it out. These are the facts: If you're a weak and delicate woman, then the "Favorite Prescription" builds you up; if you suffer from any of the painful disorders and derangements peculiar to your sex, it relieves and cures. It invigorates the system, improves digestion, enriches the blood, dispels aches and pains, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and strength. All the chronic weaknesses, irregularities, and disturbances known as "female complaints" are completely and permanently cured by it. These are facts, and they're strong enough to warrant the makers in guaranteeing their remedy. If it fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back. No other medicine for women is sold on such terms. That proves that nothing else can be "just as good."

any lumbermen, having selected a tree, surround it with a platform about twelve feet above the ground and cut it above the platform. Some twelve or fifteen feet of the largest part of the trunk are thus lost; yet a single log not unfrequently weighs from six or seven to fifteen tons, and sometimes measures as much as seventeen feet in length and four and one-half to five and one-half feet in diameter, one tree furnishing two, three or four such logs. Some trees have yielded 12,000 superficial feet, and at average prices have sold for $15,000.

More wonderful even than the temples of Baalbec is the wall which surrounds them, with its three ponderous stones. They are of very hard limestone, measure 70x14x14 feet, and weigh nearly three million pounds each. The question has often been asked, but never satisfactorily answered, "By what means were these huge blocks of stone moved from the quarry, a quarter of a mile distant, raised thirty feet, and placed in the city wall?" To move one a single inch it has been calculated that it would require the united and simultaneous effort of forty thousand men! We confess to a sense of indescribable amazement at the mere thought. In the quarry, near the city, is a block already hewn out, measuring 68x17x14 feet, and weighing over a thousand tons. To show the size of this stone more clearly, were we to place it in an upright position and hew it out, we should have a four-story house, with rooms in it nearly fourteen feet square.—Selected.

The value of a good name was well exemplified the other day, when a man asked one of our druggists for a bottle of Sarsaparilla. "Whose?" inquired the clerk. "Whose? why Ayer's, of course. Ye don't suppose I'm going to run any risks with Hannah, do ye?"

MASONIC "HAIL."

Masons accuse our lecturers and writers of not knowing how to spell the Masonic "hail." Edmond Ronayne, an educated Past Master (Handbook, page 74), spells it "hail." Jacob O. Doesburg (Royal Arch Mason) also spells it "hail." (Freemasonry (seven degrees) Illustrated, page 107.) A lodge-worn ritual ("The Perfect Ceremonies of Craft Masonry," printed in London, Eng.) spells it "hele," (page 48). Another English standard ritual, for the correctness of which Edmond Ronayne will vouch, spells it "hail." Mackey's Encyclopædia of Masonry (1873), following Harman G. Reynolds' Masonic Trowel of February 14, 1863, says: "Hail, or Hale. This word is used among Masons with two very different significations: 1st. When addressed as an inquiry to a visiting brother, it has the same import as that in which it is used under like circumstances by mariners. Thus: 'Whence do you hail?' that is, 'Of what lodge are you a member?' Used in this sense, it comes from the Saxon term of salutations, 'Hæl,' and should be spelt 'hail.' 2d. Its second use is confined to what Masons understand by the 'tie'—or obligation, as given in Ronayne's exposition,—'and in this sense it signifies to conceal, being derived from the Saxon word 'helan,' to hide. By the rules of etymology it should be spelled 'hale.'" The English lodge-copy, quoted above, spells it "hele," which is quite as Saxon as "hale." So that Masons are not wholly united in the orthography of the word. If Reynolds' and Mackey are right, it should be spelt "hale" or "hele" in the Masonic obligations; but when one sings "Hail, Masonry divine," or exclaims "Hail, brother," or "Hail, fellow, well met!" the usual spelling should prevail. It is well to "speak by the card."

THE PHILOSOPHY OF GOOD GOVERNMENT.

The American patriots who signed the Declaration of Independence, in 1776, insisted upon one fundamental truth which, in these days, seems to possess more importance than is usually accorded to it—the statement that "governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." This is, indeed, the bed-rock upon which all republican institutions must rely for their safety and continuity.

It is on this principle that the Federal Constitution secures the right of the majority to make laws, and enforce them, for the benefit of the whole people, without distinction of race, party or condition. This doctrine is wise and just, and worthy of a close following as long as the will of the majority is in harmony with the best interests of the state, and serves to guard, with all fidelity, the rights and privileges of the citizens under the laws.

The success of this principle, however, must depend upon the character of the majority. If in any community the majority are horsethieves, the rights of the minority will be disregarded and their property unsafe. Under such a condition of society, theft and robbery would soon become legalized. There the consent of the governed is not regarded, and has no weight in the administration of the laws. Confusion, rebellion and warfare must therefore follow, and the integrity of the nation is in jeopardy.

On the other hand, where the majority rules in righteousness, the minority finds it both salutary and easy to submit to the will of the governing power. Under such conditions the people are protected against wrong and the greatest good to the greatest number is secured, with a union of sentiment and harmony of action that cannot fail to promote social advancement and national prosperity.

It is evident, therefore, that the consent of the governed is as necessary to insure the welfare of a nation or community as the intelligence and righteousness of the majority. Wisdom and policy would suggest the importance of harmonizing, rather than of disintegrating, the interests of the whole people.

The greatest danger to any nation or community arises from a disregard of the fundamental truth incorporated in the Declaration of Independence, that all men, under the law, should be equal and permitted to pursue their own methods of securing life, liberty and happiness, having due respect for the rights and privileges of all others. Rotation in office, where the majority governs, is esteemed as an important safeguard against this danger; but there should be coupled with it the tuition of the citizen in Christianity, morality and the right use of the ballot in the suppression of vice. This sort of education should be made imperative by wholesome statutes, lest any should become derelict in acquiring it. Good government also should require the enforcement of the laws that promote the best interests of the people at large, and the repeal of all others. If this system were adopted notwithstanding the opposition with which it might at first meet, individual interest would soon develop a healthful public policy, and the governed, appreciating the dignity and utility of the change, would, by association, become a powerful factor in the government, just as Jefferson, Hamilton and Washington designed they should,

The consent of the governed, uneducated and unrestrained, will not do this. The tendency of most men, when left too much to their own guidance, is to deteriorate and rebel against the powers that be in whatever would curb their appetites and passions; and the stability of civilized governments, especially of republics, depends, therefore, upon the character of the people and their fitness to govern themselves aright. As a nation we have lost sight, too much, of the Declaration of Independence, which does not contemplate unlicensed liberty to do as we individually please, regardless of each other's prerogatives and the interests of the state, but to concentrate individual interests in whatever pertains to mutual advantage and enjoyment, until "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" shall become a common heritage.

Looking over the past history of the world, it is wonderful to note the few perfect governments which have existed; and in nearly every case, and under almost every form of rule, the failure has been due, principally, to the weakness or wickedness of the governed. Prior to the Deluge, when none but a simple Theocracy was known, while the law of God was perfect, the infractions of it were general. The government itself was just and benevolent, but the people did not give their practical consent to its provisions, and for this cause were utterly destroyed.

After the earth had been repopled and restored to fruitfulness, a rebellious spirit among the governed bade defiance to the Almighty, although the people had his promise of immunity from another flood, and they attempted to build the Tower of Babel, manifesting an unbelief that ended in their confusion and dispersion. Wars and captivity followed them everywhere. The Bible is filled with their sinfulness and discomfiture. After the return to Canaan from the Egyptian captivity, the people tired of Theocracy and the judges who ruled over them (although one can hardly conceive of a better government than that which they enjoyed, had they fully appreciated its advantages), and demanded an earthly monarchy. We all know what a troublesome exchange they made in their rashness; how that for a thousand years they underwent a dismal series of vicissitudes, enjoying blessings when they did right in the sight of the Lord, and suffering severely when they departed from the law of God. Their perverseness is a marvel yet; for they knew that to serve God aright was to enjoy his favor in all their affairs, national and social.

We are to believe that human governments were ordained of God, at first, for the welfare of mankind; and if he has permitted men to suffer from tyrannical and other distressing rule, it is well to investigate the cause and observe whether the misdeeds of the governed did not lead him to take this method of scourging the disobedient and rebellious. Look at the Jews, whom his curse has followed ever since the crucifixion of Christ, and whose persecutions, under nearly all governments, have been continuous and severe. In the days of their prosperity they would not consent that the law of God concerning them was good, although they were, indeed, his peculiar and beloved people, of whom he asked, "What more could I have done for my vineyard?" Every government that he devised for them they contemned.

Other nations have also forgotten God, scorned his government, and despised the ministers of his law and Gospel; and they, too, have always suffered for their defection. To-day nearly every kingdom and republic is suffering from this cause. In vain justice bears the sword; her rule is thwarted by the hand of bribery. In vain freedom holds out her hands to the people, laden with the richest blessings, only to be robbed by mercenary hierarchies and ungodly men; while the governed, awed by the glitter of wealth and perverted influence, are misled, cheated and befooled, until they cannot distinguish right from wrong, and their best interests are trodden under foot as of little worth.

What is the remedy? Socialists, and aristocrats, and every form of political economists, have their nostrums and flaunt them in the faces of people who know no better than to swallow them without due consideration. The consequence is that "the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint." Religious dogma, captivating in its glitter, yet sinister to every interest of Christ, and even preached in his name, yet rotten with worldliness and superstition, also prescribes its remedy. What is the result? "From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it, but wounds and bruises and putrefying sores." Then what and where is the remedy?

Read Isaiah 11:1-10. That seems to be the only solution of all these vexatious political and social problems under which men toil and fret. When Christ shall come with all his saints, the "King shall rule in righteousness;" then will the governed, with unexampled unanimity, shout "Hosanna! Glory to God in the highest!" and dwell in eternal peace.

UNCHRISTIAN ASSOCIATIONS CONDEMNED.

At the first meeting of the Synod of Associate Presbyterians, held at Chesley, Ontario, Canada, in May last, among the proceedings we find the following:

"Mr. Wylie read a paper on Trades Unions, Farmers' Alliances and kindred societies, claiming not to be oath-bound secret associations, but which seem to partake somewhat of the character of such societies. He stated that in such societies Christians were unequally yoked together with unbelievers, that such associations were unnecessary and injurious, expensive and unprofitable. For these and other reasons Synod adopted the following, viz:

"Resolved: 1. That all combinations of people for what cause soever, which have a Christless ritual, or hold deistic principles or engage in strikes, boycotts, and riots, or deny non-union people the right of employment or trade, or dictate to their members political action, or have grips, signs, passwords and badges, are condemned by the Word of God, as witnessed for by our profession.

"2. That our presbyteries and sessions are exhorted to carefully instruct and warn all under their care to faithfully conform their conduct in such matters to the will of God, as they desire to please him in all things, who loved them and gave his Son for them."

The Synod also condemned the proposed opening of the World's Fair on Sunday.

The next meeting of the Synod is to be held at Washington, Iowa, on the fourth Wednesday of May, 1893.

The Walla Walla Conference (Huntsville, Washington), United Brethren in Christ, in its twenty-seventh annual session, June 15, 1892,

Resolved, That the societies called secret are immoral would not be questioned if the many crimes committed by them were uncurtained and thrown open to public inspection. They are a sin against the free and equal rights with which all men are born (God-given rights). Many of said societies are teaching a way of salvation without the regenerating grace of Jesus Christ, and in that they are 'thieves and robbers, climbing up some other way.' They are a sworn foe to Christianity; they are supplanters of the church; therefore,

"Resolved, 1. That this conference would regard any liberalism as yielding to Satan our blessed hope in Jesus.

"2. That we heartily approve section 3 of Chapter 10 of Discipline.

"3. That we will endeavor to reform men as far as we can from the awful curse of secret societies."

Strike down secret combinations and order will be restored. They are alike a menace to civil government and the church. They should be driven off the face of the globe.

So says the Christian Conservator, of Dayton, Ohio, which, in the same issue, also remarks:

The United States troops, under orders from President Harrison, are holding the secret society at bay in the county in which Wardner, Idaho, is situated, martial law having been proclaimed; and the State of Pennsylvania is holding from acts of violence a secret society at Homestead with the military force. So that both Pennsylvania and the National Government are now anti-secrecy because in antagonism to a secret society. Herein they are like the Radical United Brethren church.—Christian Conservator.

While the above is true, it serves also to suggest that the exigency of the times which brought about this opposition of State and National officers to secret societies has existed for many years without creating a healthful public sentiment against it. The secret systems out of which these labor riots were evolved, have laid their work deep and effectively in the past, as the experiences of 1877 and later years have painfully developed; yet no State or National legislature has ever endeavored, successfully, to suppress them while they were in a quiescent condition and planning just such murderous outbreaks as those in Pennsylvania and Idaho. If governmental vigilance had been brought to bear upon them then as now, the present troubles would have been avoided. If the secret labor unions had been broken up and dispersed as unlawful assemblages in 1878, and membership in them declared ever afterwards a penitentiary offence, the labor problem, to-day, would be far more easy to solve.

"ECCE ORIENTI."

As is known to Cynosure readers (but perhaps not to as many as it should be), certain enterprising Masons have for some time past been engaged in printing in cipher the rituals of the Blue Lodge for the use of the fraternity. This form was ostensibly adopted in order that Masons could carry in their side-pockets the full work of the three degrees, so condensed as to occupy but little space, coupled with extreme lightness, and yet so disguised that if the book should be left lying loosely about, none could understand its purport. These books contain the verbal alterations in the text of the official rituals permitted in each State, and are published, with apparent authority, under the general title of "Ecce Orienti." The cipher used is a complex combination of abbreviated words and minute Masonic symbols. Thus, the picture of a curtain is substituted for the word "lodge;" wp for "worship," etc. The Masons undoubtedly find these books useful monitors in lodge work; and the anti-secrecy advocates, comparing them with Ronayne's Handbook of Masonry, or Doesburg's Illustrations of Masonry, or any other correct exposition of Masonry can assure themselves and others that the expositions sold by the N. C. A. are critically true.

Some years ago, in Illinois, the question was agitated among the fraternity, whether "Masonry shall be taught from memory alone; shall it be taught from mouth to ear alone?" The verdict, at that time, was this, that all other modes are unlawful. Past Grand Secretary Reynolds, of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, distinctly asserted that "the use or possession of notes, keys, or cipher in Masonry, in either a written or printed form, for any purpose whatever, is a clear and palpable violation of the first covenant of a Mason, and, if persevered in, is nothing short of willful and corrupt perjury."

Even Rob. Morris, one of "the three great lights of Masonry" that wore trousers, had the temerity, in 1863, to print a volume of Masonic "Mnemonics" and sell copies of it to members in over 200 Illinois lodges, swearing not a few of the purchasers to let no one know that they had the book.

"Ecce Orienti" is not a scaled book. With Ronayne's Handbook any intelligent boy can soon learn to read one as easily as the other; and in this way the Masons have given away (for $2.50, while Ronayne's is but 50 cents) the very secrets of the fraternity for which they killed William Morgan in 1826. There is not a secret in all Freemasonry—genuine work, we mean—that is not revealed to whoever desires to know it.

—The situation of the Negro in the South is graphically described by one of them as follows: It is an "indisputable fact that in this country it is treason for a black man to protect his home; murder in the first degree for him to protect the honor of his wife; riot for him to resist a lawless mob, and death for impudence for him to speak like any other man." The same writer suggests that "it would be a very great and appreciable thing for some one to get up a society for the protection of American citizens. The government says it can't do it." We fear that there is something more than sarcasm in this charge.

—Congress has declared against free coinage. When the question was reached in the House, a resolution came from the committee on rules to set aside two days for the consideration of the silver bill. The resolution was defeated by a vote of 154 to 136. There were nine Republican votes for the bill and sixty against it; 117 Democrats voted for the bill and ninety-four against it. This ends the matter so far as Congress is concerned until the Presidential election is over.

—The National Press Department of the W. C. T. U. announces the suggestive fact that the Prohibitionists of Maine, having cast more than one per cent of the last vote for Governor in that State, as required by the new Australian ballot law, they are entitled to have the names of their candidates placed on the official tickets, both State and local, and may now nominate them by convention. This indicates marked progress in the political aspects of the cause of temperance.

—One of the two Illinois Senators who voted for the Peffer prohibition amendment to the World's Fair appropriation bill, and afterwards voted to expunge it, is a candidate for re-election by next winter's Legislature, and was threatened with being advertised as a "Prohibitionist." That settled him. The other Illinois Senator who also voted both ways, is not in the way of re-election for several years, but he likewise succumbed to the persuasions of the World's Fair lobby. The only arguments made in the Senate against the final surrender to the saloon interest were a few brief words from Senators Frye and Gallinger.

—The editor of the Converted Catholic (New York City), himself a renouncing priest of the Church of Rome, mentions the cases of three other priests in that metropolis who "heard confessions, gave absolution, and offered up 'the holy sacrifice of the mass,' one morning—and were married the same afternoon." The question arises, were these priests saints or sinners?—saints in the morning—sinners after noonday? Were they any less saints for marrying? Of course the "holy mother church" brands them with numerous ugly names, and curses them with "bell, book and candle." "Sober second thought," outside of the said h. m. church, will deem them hypocrites for not manifesting the courage of their convictions in the morning.

—The Women's Christian Temperance Union is a wonderfully progressive institution, so far as its methods of instruction are concerned, and its work is so carefully classified and organized as to be widespread, attractive and efficient. Not only do the columns of its excellent mouth-piece, the Union Signal, speak volumes weekly of its operations and the progress of the cause, but it also supports a "National Press Department," ably superintended by Mrs. Harriet B. Kells, which provides press matter relating to its work for the benefit of other periodicals. Besides this, it is a dull week when a W. C. T. U. meeting, of greater or less moment, is not held at some point or other, or at which Miss Willard and her corps of assistants are not heard on the platform. Such fidelity to the truth is amply repaid.

—Since the outbreak of labor troubles at Homestead, Pa., attention has been recalled to the question of foreign immigration, its increase, and its effects upon the industrial and social interests of the nation. The Congressional joint Committee on Immigration has just completed an elaborate report of its investigation, which contains the statement that there landed in New York from April 1, 1891 to January 31, 1892, 476,658 immigrants, of whom 713 were returned under the contract labor law, and 1,000 as likely to become paupers or public charges. The enforcement of the present inspection laws, which in any event are extremely lenient, is, in the opinion of the committee, practically inefficient, and it recommends that the inspectors be increased to four. The opinion is also expressed that the steamship companies should be made legally responsible for the immigrants they carry, as it is by the exaggerated advertisements of these companies that large numbers of the worst class of immigrants are attracted from Southern Europe. Similar reports have appeared before, but the question whether this source of vice shall continue to contaminate our land is still unanswered. By-and-by, when it is too late for reformation, we shall see this evil in its true colors, and helplessly deplore it.

—The New York Voice, in its special Washington correspondence, gives a history of the reasons why the clause prohibiting the sale of liquors on the grounds of the Columbian Exposition in the Senate bill appropriating $5,000,000 to the Exposition, was stricken out. Senator Peffer, of Kansas, had previously offered an amendment to the bill, making the grant conditional upon prohibiting the sale of liquor on the Fair grounds, and it was adopted by a vote of 28 to 26. Palmer and Cullom, the Illinois Senators had voted for Peffer's amendment, thus giving it a majority. The correspondent says: "I have the testimony of an eye and ear witness that these Senators were called out by the lobbyists of the World's Fair management and served with notice that they must reverse their votes or take the consequences." "Then, by aid of absentees, the vote of 28 to 26 of July 13 was wiped out, and liquor selling was permitted by a vote of 29 to 21."

—The Christian State is a new monthly journal having for its object the direct support of the National Reform Association. The Statesman, which for many years maintained that position alone and ably, enlarged somewhat its platform a year or so since when it changed owners and removed to Pittsburgh. It still maintains the old principles under Dr. Crafts, and is a power for God and righteousness in the American press. The State is designed to aid the National Reform cause more distinctively as its organ. Dr. T. P. Stevenson of the Reformed Presbyterian church is at its helm, and with such a pilot may its course be glorious: not without some storms, but always with success. Its mission is set forth in clear-cut, unmistakable terms. Among the living issues which will be continuously discussed is the relation of the lodge system to government and religion. We should be happy to know that many of the Cynosure readers were patrons of the Christian State. It is published at 1,520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, price 50 cents per year.

THE N. C. A. AND THE CHURCHES.

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

In the endeavor to instruct the churches of Christ and rouse them to self-defense against the lodge assault by false worships, there is much encouragement day by day. During the past week cordial invitations have been given to attend two national church conferences: first, the General Conference of the ministers of the Norwegian Lutheran church, meeting August 17-23, at Decorah, Iowa, the headquarters of the denomination; second, the general convocation of the Swedish Mission churches at Rockford, Ill., Sept. 15.

Before both these influential bodies our reform will be presented, and a line of co-operation decided upon so far as possible.

A welcome was extended by pastor J. Z. Torgerson of the Bethany church, Carpenter and Indiana streets, last Sabbath evening. In spite of the great heat which had been smiting men down through the city all day, a good number were present who listened with deep interest; and crowded around at the close for tracts and copies of the Cynosure, and to ask for a week-day address on the lodge at a later date.

Three or four other churches, among them some of the largest among the Swedes and Norwegians in the city, ask for an address after the heated term is over.

Appointments have been made through Illinois and Iowa during August, but all dates are not yet filled. I can speak at points in Illinois between Princeton and Galesburg during the first half of the month, and between Princeton and Chicago after the 22d of August. Address me for the present, "in care of C. A. Kellogg," Ke-wanee, Ill.

THE HOME.

THE GLEANERS.

We are a little gleaning band;
We cannot bind the sheaves,
But we can follow those who reap,
And gather what each leaves.
We are not strong, but Jesus loves
The weakest of the fold,
And, in our feeble efforts, proves
His tenderness untold.

We are not rich; but we can give
As we are passing on,
A cup of water in his name
To some poor, fainting one.
We are not wise, but Christ our Lord,
Revealed to babes his will,
And we are sure from his dear word
He loves the children still.

We know that with our gathered grain
Briers and leaves we bring;
Yet since we tried he smiles the same,
And takes our offering.
Then let us still hosannas sing,
As Christ doth conquering come,
Casting our treasures as he brings
The heathen nations home.

—Aunt Mary.

HOME HAPPINESS.

Probably nineteen-twentieths of the happiness you will ever have you will get at home. The independence that comes to a man when work is over and he feels that he has run out of the storm into the quiet harbor of home, where he can rest in peace with his family, is something real.

It does not make much difference whether you own your house or have one little room in that house. You can make that room a true home to you. You can people it with such moods, you can turn to it with fancies that will be fairly luminous with their presence, and it will be to you the very perfection of a home. Against this home none of you should ever transgress.

You should always treat each other with courtesy. It is often not so difficult to love a person as it is to be courteous to him. Courtesy is of more value and more royal grace than some people seem to think. If you will be but courteous to each other you will soon learn to love more wisely, profoundly, not to say lastingly, than ever you did before.—Farm and Fireside.

MEN WHO CONQUERED CIRCUMSTANCES.

Young men who are given to complaining that "circumstances are all against them" ought to study carefully such examples as these:

Take Thomas Ball, the sculptor, for instance. He was but twelve years old when his father died. The poor widow—Thomas' mother, young herself, and far from strong—had five young children. There was no more school for Thomas after his father's death. He must go to work and help to support the rest. He got a place in a grocery store, where they gave him a dollar a week! Not much, that—but what a difference it made to the poor little family! From the time he was twelve young Ball had always to work for the others until they were all grown up. He had little instruction, even in his art, and he never had that little until after he had earned the money to pay for it. But—he succeeded.

Then there was that other sculptor, Hiram Powers. Hiram was the eighth of nine children, and he was a very small boy when his father died; and, like Ball, he had to go to work for the family. He had been born in Vermont, but his parents had moved out to Ohio in that way poor people have of roaming hither and yon after better luck.

It was in Ohio that the father died, and in Ohio that Hiram fought his youthful battle. For seven years he had charge of the wax figures in a Cincinnati museum, and it was while there that he felt an impulse toward his future art, and tried his prentice hand at modeling in clay. But it was not until he was thirty years old that he was at liberty to strike out for himself, and he was thirty-two before he had money enough to go to Italy. Yet he was to be the sculptor of the "Greek Slave."

Peter Cooper, who founded the Cooper institute, had a still harder struggle, because, as a boy, his health was of the frailest. He went to school but one year of his life, and during that year he could only go every other day. But when he was eight years old he was earning his living by pulling hair from the skins of the rabbits his father shot to make hat-pulp. He had not "half a chance." It seemed almost literally that he had no chance at all. He went to New York when he was seventeen years old, to make his fortune. He walked the streets for days before he got a place, and then apprenticed himself to a carriage-maker for five years for his board and two dollars a month. He had neither time nor money for what people called pleasures—but he had the pleasure of hope. While he was working for fifty cents a week, he said to himself: "If I ever get rich, I will build a place where the poor boys and girls of New York may have an education free"—and he did it. William Hunt, the painter, used to say:

"Don't talk of what you want to do—DO IT!"—Youth's Companion.

HIDING IN THE BRUSH.

One day I went hunting with a friend who, before his conversion, had been a great hunter. I had never gone before, and perhaps shall never go again, as I went for information and—got it.

The region was mountainous, and the district was used to supply wood to the neighboring lime kiln. The brush had been heaped together into huge piles so as not to interfere with the wood-choppers.

My friend would examine every brush heap as we drew near them, and at one of them he suddenly drew back, took aim and fired. Putting his hand in, he drew out a very large rabbit. On we went, another person joined our party, and we soon scared up another rabbit which took refuge in the rocks. We tried long in vain with every expedient to dislodge him but could not. We had to let him alone. I thought of the text in Prov. 30: 26: "The conies are but a feeble folk, yet they make their houses in the rocks." These rabbits seem very much like the conies of Scripture. But some of them make a mistake and make their home in brush heaps.

Men are but "a feeble folk," yet how many imitate the rabbits. They take refuge in brush heaps when they should hide in the Everlasting Rock. What is the sum of the doctrines under which many hide but the brush heaps of man's wisdom? The hunter of souls can easily find them there. Why not make your home in the Rock of Ages?—The Safeguard.

AUNT POLLY'S VIEWS.

Aunt Polly Smith chats a little about paying the preacher. She had just come home from a church-meeting where they had been trying to make up the preacher's salary. She sat down by the fire and began thusly:

"It's curious who gives. There's Squire Wood, he's put down two dollars; his farm's worth ten thousand dollars; and he's money at interest. And there's Mrs. Brown, she's put down five dollars; and I don't believe she's had a new frock in two years, and her bonnet ain't none of the newest, and she's them three grand-children to support since her son died, and she makes her living by sewing. Well, she'll have to scrimp to do it, but she'll pay it, for she loves the cause. And there's Maria Hill, she put down five dollars; she teaches, and don't get but twenty dollars a month. But she'll pay it, for I seen she loved the Lord when she told her experience. And there's John Baker, he's put down one dollar, and he'll chaw more than that much worth of 'bacco in two weeks. Cyrus Jones, four dollars. Well, he'll have to do some extra painting with that crippled hand; but he'll do it, and sing the Lord's songs while he's at work." There is something to think about in Aunt Polly's observation.—Selected.

"CAN YOU SAY THAT?"

Three young men were seated together in an office, each busy writing at their desks. One of them had recently been converted, and as the new life will reveal itself by subtle changes in the life and thought even when there is no profession of religion made, so Edward Jones, almost unconsciously to himself, had shown the great change that had taken place in him long before he had found courage to speak for Christ. When he did so, he was almost surprised to find that every one took it as a matter of course. His life had spoken before his tongue.

But when he did speak out he found that though he had something more to bear for Christ, he had also greater opportunities of usefulness.

On this day he got up from the place where he was writing, and crossed to the other side of the office, having occasion to go to a desk that was exactly between the other two clerks. As soon as he had raised the lid, one of them, stretching toward him, said in a friendly tone:—

"I suppose, Mr. Jones, you consider yourself now a great deal better than we are?"

In a moment he saw the trap that had been laid for him. If he said "no," the ready retort would have been, "But you ought to be;" and if he said "yes," he was open to the charge of self-righteousness. He raised his heart to God for wisdom, and at once the thought flashed into his mind:—

"It is not for me to answer that," he replied; "but there is one thing I can tell you: I am better off. I am not afraid to die and stand before the judgment seat, for God has pardoned me. Can you say that?"

Startled by this home thrust, the young man flushed and turned back to his seat, saying:—

"No, I can not; I only wish I could."

"Then why don't you seek it, for God is as ready to save you as me," replied Jones, shutting down the desk and going back to his seat.

Never before had he so felt the nearness of God, nor realized, as he did at that moment, that the sword of the Spirit was quivering in a human heart before him.

He also learned here the secret of effectual prayer, and how God, often "while we are yet speaking," sends the wisdom needed to guide us in our perplexities.—People's Illustrated Journal.

WHERE ARE THE BOYS AT DUSK?

Says a prominent writer, "In the daytime the devil lurks in corners and back alleys and out of the way places, but as the night draws on he puts forth a bold front."

It is very plainly to be seen in the cases of children who are allowed to be on the play ground or on the street after dusk. It is too dark to play ball or any of the out-door games, and feeling a little tired one sits down, and another by him, and still another. They are tired and wish to rest a little before going home. At first their talk is perhaps entirely innocent, but if one should pass them a little later they would see that their heads are very close together and that they are talking in a low tone, and if what they say could be heard, it would bring a blush to the mother's cheek. It would surprise any parent not familiar with this matter. We believe many parents are entirely ignorant in this regard. If they were not ignorant, or grossly indifferent, they would not let their children be out a moment after dusk. Vile stories, vile books. There is practically no limit to the evil children can learn of each other after nightfall. It has brought disgrace and dishonor to thousands of homes. The same thing is going on now. As parents, are you guilty in this respect? As Sunday-school teachers, do you warn your scholars against this rock?—Selected.

WHAT ONE BOY DID IN ONE YEAR.

He begged the office of sexton in the little Western church, and earned 75 cents a week.

He picked one hundred quarts of fruit for a neighbor.

He bought and sold eleven dozen chickens, and cleared $5 on them.

When he could get no other work, a neighbor's wood pile was always ready, at a dollar a cord, for sawing and splitting. He earned $13.75 on his wood piles.

For doing chores, cleaning yards, doing errands, etc., he received $10.

For milking cows, and taking care of horses, etc., for neighbors, $20.

At the end of the year this fourteen-year-old boy had earned a little more than $100, and never missed a day at school. It was a busy year, yet play hours were scattered all along; swimming, fishing, hunting, skating and coasting, each found its place. The old adage proves true in his case: "Where there's a will there's a way." He never missed a job; when other boys were idle he was busy, and the best of all that I can tell you about him is this: he was a "King's son."—Kind Words.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DRUNKARD'S DAUGHTER.

The circumstances which induced the writing of the following most touching and thrilling lines are as follows: A young lady of New York was in the habit of writing to the Philadelphia Ledger, on the subject of temperance. Her writing was so full of pathos, and evinced such deep emotion of soul, that a friend of hers accused her of being a maniac on the subject of temperance, whereupon she wrote the following lines:

Go feel what I have felt,
Go bear what I have borne—
Sink 'neath the blow a father dealt
And the cold world's proud scorn:
Then suffer on from year to year—
The sole relief, the scorching tear.

Go kneel as I have knelt,
Implore, beseech and pray—
Strive the besotted heart to melt,
The downward course to stay;
Be dashed with bitter curse aside,
Your prayers burlesqued, your tears defied.

Go weep as I have wept
O'er a loved father's fall—
See every promised blessing swept—
Youth's sweetness turned to gall.
Life's fading flowers strewed all the way—
That brought me up to woman's day.

Go see what I have seen,
Behold the strong man bow,
With gnashing teeth, lips bathed in blood,
And cold and livid brow;
Go catch his withering glance, and see
There mirrored his soul's misery.

Go to thy mother's side,
And her crushed bosom cheer.
Thine own deep anguish hide:
Wipe from her cheek the bitter tear.
Mark her worn face and withered brow,
The gray that streaks her dark hair now,
With falling frame and trembling limb,
And trace the ruin back to him
Whose plighted faith, in early youth,
Promised eternal love and truth,
But who, forsworn, hath yielded up
That promise to the cursed cup,
And let her down, through love and light,
And all that made her prospects bright;
And chain'd her there 'mid want and strife,
That lowly thing, a drunkard's wife,
And stamp'd on childhood's brow so mild,
That withering blight, the drunkard's child!

Go hear, and feel, and see, and know,
All that my soul hath felt and known;
Then look upon the wine cup's glow,
See if its beauty can atone,
Think if its flavor you will try,
When all proclaim, 'tis drink and die!

Tell me I hate the bowl?
Hate is a feeble word!
I loathe, abhor, my very soul
With strong disgust is stirred
When I see, or hear, or tell
Of the dark beverage of hell!

SALOONS.

Within the last few weeks California has had its daily papers filled with murders and crimes committed in saloons, and yet Christian people will vote to continue this demon in his deadly work of destruction. And there are still thousands going to their doom, as surely as the sun goes down; going by the scores every day. They leave widows and orphans destitute; they leave broken and bleeding hearts; the earth is robbed of her brightest jewels and shining lights; society has lost its leading factors, and even that great pillar of civilization, the church, loses her young men; one by one they drop off and go to destruction.

And what does rum give in return for all this loss? Will some apologist for rum mention one good that it gives to the world? The saloon! Look at it. Did it ever make any man better? Did you ever know of it to feed the hungry, or clothe the poor? Did you ever see it on errands of mercy, scattering bright smiles along life's pathway and making life the better for its existence? Did you ever see it help the clerk or laborer lay up his earnings to support him when he grows old? Did you ever hear one brilliant idea or thought emanating from the saloon? No! No! There is not one bright spot on that side of the canvas. It is as black and bleak and dismal as hell, the very place whence it emanated. You may search the history of saloons from their first existence, and there is not one redeeming trait in all the business.

Statisticians tell us that the product of the saloon in America is resultant of more harm every fifteen years than was the late civil war. Many can comprehend the magnitude of these figures because they went through the fiery ordeal; the crucible has fitted them to measure aright these great questions of finances.

William Windom, our excellent secretary of the treasury, says it would be far cheaper for the government to purchase all the saloons, breweries and distilleries, pile them up and make a huge bonfire of them, than to allow them to continue their work of destruction among the people. This he figures out in dollars and cents of saving in way of taxes to support paupers, insane, the prosecution of criminals and non-production through loss of energy and incapacity brought on by strong drink, to say nothing of the immoral phase of the nefarious business.

The saloon robs the family of its victims of the necessaries and comforts the money wasted in rum would buy, and it robs every legitimate business in the city of the money that would be paid for them. The saloon is the worst enemy of the business of any city. Consider how much money a saloon must take in daily, and multiply it by the number of saloons in the city; multiply this in turn by the 365 days in a year, and you will have before you the sum wasted in your own town or city through the rum traffic. And it is to be remembered that the saloons prevent the earning of nearly as much money by destroying the capacity for work. The drunkard cannot do as good a day's work as a sober man, and he loses the time spent in his debauches and in the inevitable "sobering up" process. As he goes on and becomes more and more the slave of rum, he becomes more and more incapable of steady labor until he will not work at all except when he can in no other way obtain the rum to satisfy his cravings.—Pacific Ensign.

MILK PUNCH IN THE PENSION OFFICE.

It is announced from Washington that the Pension Office Investigating Committee, at a recent session, found among other things from testimony given, that persons connected with the Department had been allowed to break off ice in the water-cooler with ink-erasers, hair-pins, etc., to make milk-punches, cold tea, and the like. Among the numerous investigations from time to time instigated concerning the conduct of Department officials, there come to light some very ridiculous things. This pension investigation adds another to this chapter. But we are inclined to the opinion that whatever may be the shortcomings of the Pension Department in other respects, it would be better to avoid the practice of making milk-punches, both for the Department and its interests, and the general well-being of the clerks and others, who would certainly be better without than with the milk-punch beverage. Let the incongruous practice by all means be discontinued.—The National Temperance Advocate.

THE WAY OF A DRUNKARD.

Sin comes to a young man and says: "Take this glass, it won't hurt you. It has a very fine flavor; it will be an appetizer. Take a glass at noon; it will aid digestion. Take a glass at night; it will make you sleep well." You are in a glow, while others are chilly. How bright it makes the eye, how elastic it makes the step! One day you meet him and say: "What are you doing here at noon? I thought you were at business." "Oh, I lost my place." "Lost your place?" God have mercy upon the young man when, through misdemeanor, he loses his place. Every temptation takes after him. Hopped and handcuffed at thirty years of age by evil habit! Save that young man. He is on the express train that stops not till it tumbles over the embankment of perdition.

"The way of transgressors is hard." Sin comes to a young man and says: "Take a dollar out of your employer's drawer; he won't miss it; you can put it back after awhile. Take another! Take another! Don't you see how easy it is? Hundreds of dollars added to your salary in a year!" One day the police knock at your door and say, "I want you." "What?" "I want you." Discovery has come; disgrace, imprisonment, loss of the soul. "The way of the transgressors is hard."—T. De Witt Talmage.

NUGGETS.

Idaho will hold her first state Prohibition convention August 30.

The wine production of France for 1891 amounted to 663,058,000 gallons.

Reports show that local option is increasing in Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and Prince Edwards Island, in Canada.

The total amount of British investments in American breweries, as given by the Brewer's Journal, is $92,019,240.

Local option has long been in operation in Finland, with the result that, as a rule, in the rural districts there are no public houses whatever.

The production of beer, ale and porter has more than doubled in India under British rule in the last nine years, and is now about 5,200,000 gallons.

Railway managers of Holland have found it impossible to get men to work the switches who can be depended upon to let liquor alone and have therefore substituted women.

Wine, even in Greece, or in a Rainsford church saloon, taken freely, will induce drunkenness as certainly as the stronger liquors. The only wise and safe course is to abstain from its use.

Of the 90,207 arrests in New York City last year, according to the police reports, no less than 50,000 were attributed to the liquor traffic. Nearly 40,000 were directly credited to the traffic by the police. And the records also showed that crime of all kinds was increasing in this city faster than the population.

Dr. R. H. McDonald, of San Francisco, is undoubtedly the most extensive free distributor of temperance literature in this country. It is a marvel that he should have reached with his temperance catechism and anti-tobacco leaflets every house, office and store in the great city of San Francisco. In 1891 he has distributed over 2,500,000 of his temperance circulars, visiting about 80,000 homes, offices and shops.

The saloon is the outcome of the deliberate choice, based upon motives wholly selfish, in the man who drinks, in the man who sells, and the other man in business, political or professional, who does not wish the ill-will of the man who drinks and sells. The majority of the adult population has no voice in the decision by which the saloon is permitted in the community through the votes of the classes we have mentioned.

Dr. Parkes once had three soldiers march twenty miles a day, loaded with guns, pouch, knapsack, etc., for six days. They had the same food on each day, but on two days he gave them brandy and water, on two other days coffee, and on the other two weak beef tea to drink. All three said that brandy revived them for a time, but they were more tired after they had taken brandy than they were after taking coffee or beef tea.

The British Medical Journal announces that it is the intention of the Secretary of State of the Home Department to appoint a committee to inquire into the question of habitual drunkenness, with special reference to the working of the Inebriate's Acts. The information such a commission will obtain will doubtless be valuable, but an inquiry as to how most effectually to prevent the making of habitual drunkards would be still more valuable.

Some good men are racking their brains over the question, "Why is crime increasing in this country?" We can answer it in a single word—"Drink." This is the answer which a writer in Forum gives to account for the increase of crime in Massachusetts in recent years. The report of the police department of New York City for the year 1891 tells the same story. And an analysis of the records of any police court, or prison or reformatory in the country will yield the same results.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

LESSON VI.—Third Quarter, 1892.—August 7.

SUBJECT.—The Apostles' Confidence in God.—Acts 4: 19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—They spake the Word of God with boldness.—Acts 4: 31.

COMMENT BY REV. RUFUS W. CLARK, D. D.

At the close of the last lesson, after the council (or Sanhedrim), representing the power, wealth and official authority of the Jewish nation, had "conferred among themselves, saying, What shall we do to these men?" Peter and John were commanded "not to speak at all, nor teach in the name of Jesus." To this the apostles had earnestly demurred, and without the least hesitation, and still in a respectful manner, they submitted to the rulers a new question: "Whether it be right in the sight of God to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye." They had already decided the matter at the tribunal of their own consciences, and they then appealed to the sense of right in those who composed the council. "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard." We cannot go counter to our convictions of duty and the evidences of our senses. (Acts 4: 18-20.) Spending the previous night in prison had not awakened the fears of the apostles, nor abated in the least their faith and confidence in their absent Master. They needed not to consult together as to what they should say or do. They spake by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. They were "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." They had the divine commission to preach the Gospel to every creature, either as "a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death," and believed in the name of Jesus Christ for the salvation of all who should call upon his name.

The apostles released.—v. 19. As is usual with tyrants and persecutors, who have no arguments, and act without reason or justice, the council resorted to threatenings. They would gladly have punished the apostles with severity, but for the convictions of the multitude; for "as the common people had heard Jesus gladly," so had they heard his disciples with joy, and profited greatly by their teachings. Therefore the council let them go.

The disciples' prayer meeting.—vs. 23-30. In the first flush of their freedom the apostles sought the sympathy and fellowship of their companions in the Lord. "They went to their own company;" probably the original one hundred and twenty upon whom the Holy Ghost had fallen, on the day of Pentecost. They assembled together for counsel and prayer, considering all that the chief priests and elders had said to them, and making common cause, with one heart and mind, in behalf of the kingdom of their Lord. Then, with one accord, they all went to prayer, feeling that troublesome times were before them. They felt that the imprisonment of Peter and John, the threats that had been made, the command of silence that had been imposed by the highest ecclesiastical court in the land, indicated a deep-seated hostility to Christian truth. War had been declared upon the followers of Jesus, and they must abandon the work or accept the conflict. They naturally recur to the second Psalm, in which this condition of the church is prophetically depicted. It is supposed that they then and there sang this Psalm in concert, prayer following, and applying the words of the Psalm to the present conjuncture. "Lord, thou art God, which made heaven and earth." This is the first united prayer of the Christian church with which we are acquainted. It comes from hearts deeply moved by a sense of danger, and is a cry to God for protection from enemies. The ground of confidence that the prayer will be heard and answered is the almighty power of God, the Creator of all things, visible and invisible. "Who by the mouth of David" (v. 25.) We have here the plenary inspiration of this second Psalm asserted in the strongest terms; that God spake by the mouth of his servant David. All the ancient Jewish rabbis admit that this Psalm refers to the Messiah, a portion of which is quoted, and fulfilled in the recent hostility of the rulers to the Son of God. "Why did the heathen rage." The reference is to the Gentiles, or heathen (Roman) governors, who united with the Jewish rulers against the Messiah. The raging is like the wild snorting and tearing of furious horses. "And the people imagine vain things;" that is, entertain useless and abortive designs to destroy Christ and accomplish their purposes against the will of God. "The kings of the earth stood up." (v. 26.) They rose up and stood side by side for mutual support. "The rulers were gathered together"—consulted together—"against the Lord" (Jehovah), "and against his Christ," this Messiah or Anointed One, whom they had slain. The terms Christ and Messiah both mean "anointed;" and in designating Christ as the Anointed, it is understood that he is anointed by the Father, or appointed by him to the Messianic office. Hence the enemies of Christ are the enemies of God the Father. "For of a truth against thy holy child Jesus." (v. 27.) Most truly is this prophecy fulfilled in the combination formed against the holy and Anointed One by Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee; Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor, whose consent was necessary to the execution of Christ; the Gentiles, represented by the Roman soldiers; and the people of Israel, who demanded and witnessed the crucifixion. "To do whatsoever thy . . . counsel determined." However the heathen may rage and "the rulers take counsel together against the Lord and against his Anointed," yet God says, "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." (Isaiah 46: 10.) The divine sovereignty is a rock against which the waves of human passions dash in vain. "Now, Lord, behold their threatenings." (v. 29.) The disciples pray that their enemies may be restrained, for they have this assurance (Psa. 2: 4), that "He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh; the Lord shall have them in derision." They do not pray for their destruction, that the path may be clear and unobstructed before them, but that they may have boldness to deliver the Gospel message in the face of all opposition. "By stretching forth thine hand to heal." (v. 30.) They also ask for power to perform signs and miracles of healing in the name of Jesus, as evidences that the omnipotent God is with them, and that the word they preach is the Word of God.

"And when they had prayed." (v. 31.) We come now to the results of the prayer. It is heard in heaven. The arm of the Almighty is outstretched for the protection of the young and comparatively small church, that is feeling the blasts of persecution and would prepare for the coming tempests. "The place was shaken where they were assembled." This was a miraculous manifestation that their prayer was heard. It may be regarded as a symbol of the commotions that were at hand, and which the preaching of the Gospel would produce; or it may be accepted as a sign that the omnipotent God is with them, and that he can shake the nations that rise up against him. "They were also filled with the Holy Ghost." They had once before received this baptism; and now, in answer to their fervent prayers, there comes from heaven another mighty outpouring of the Spirit. The soul needs to be constantly strengthened and refreshed with power from on high. Under this new gift "they spake the Word of God with boldness." Why should they not? What has any man to fear who is conscious that the eternal God is with him?

For many years an esteemed communicant of Trinity Episcopal church, Newburgh, N. Y., always says "Thank You" to Hood's Sarsaparilla. HOME AND HEALTH.

HOUSEWORK AS AN EXERCISE.

When a man expresses an opinion about the desirability of housework for women we are apt to think him an interested party. But the Medical Record, which may be supposed to be free from such motives, says: "To keep the complexion and spirits good, to preserve grace, strength, and agility of motion, there is no gymnasium so valuable, no exercise more beneficial in result, than sweeping, dusting, making beds, washing dishes, and the polishing of brass and silver. One year of such muscular effort within doors, together with regular exercise in open air, will do more for a woman's complexion than all the lotions and pomades that ever were invented. Perhaps the reason why housework does so much more for women than games, is the fact that exercise which is immediately productive, cheers the spirit. It gives women the courage to go on living, and makes things seem really worth while."

GLADSTONE'S CARE OF HIS BODY.

Mr. Gladstone is perhaps the most distinguished person of this age, and well he may be. He has one of the most superb bodies ever given to man and he takes the very best care of it. His chest and all the vital organs are large. His health is excellent. At the age of eighty-two he seems possessed of most of his physical powers to almost as high a degree as at fifty. If he feels overworked at all, which is seldom, he goes to bed and stays there till well. This is a great panacea with him.

First among his mental qualities one may reckon power of going to sleep, for this is a mental power as much as that of memory. No matter what cares press upon him, he dismisses them all the moment he touches the bed. If this is not an element of greatness, it certainly contributes to it in a most marked manner. Many men who have only achieved mediocre greatness would have achieved it in a higher degree if they had cultivated this power of sleeping as Mr. Gladstone has.

Next comes his habits of exercise. His large lungs require a great deal of fresh air, and he takes vigorous exercise out of doors, but not to exhaustion, either with his ax or in other ways. A cold bath every morning seems to him a delight, as it is to so many Englishmen.

He masticates his food thoroughly, and this is one secret of his splendid digestion. His stomach is never upset, which few can say.

His mental work is done without much friction. His mind is orderly in its workings and he knows how to get the best out of it as well as out of his subordinates, whether in a Liberal cabinet, or in his office stenographers.

Smoking he detests, and he has always abstained from very strong or fiery stimulants, using only very moderately light wines, more probably from habit than any real good they do him.

Finally comes his memory, which according to Mr. Stead, is "almost terrible." It makes it very bad sometimes for those who attempt to dispute his recollection of a fact. This combination of memory with great reasoning power is very rare indeed.

INSOMNIA AND NERVOUSNESS.

There can be no doubt that many persons suffer from insomnia which has its origin, or at least its principal strength, in their own nervous apprehension that they are about to be afflicted with it. Any one of a dozen causes may induce wakefulness, and yet the person lying in bed with the faculties alert at the moment when they would naturally be expected to be wrapped in slumber, has nine times out of ten, or ninety-nine times in a hundred, nothing serious to apprehend. The stomach may not be in quite its normal condition—and there is no more potent cause of wakefulness. Now, an hour—ten minutes even—seems a long time in the middle of the night, when a person wishes to be sleeping and cannot. If a sensation of dread, of apprehension, is allowed to enter the mind, such a period simply becomes interminable. The nervous apprehension increases the difficulty, and feeding upon itself, the derangement may quite possibly increase till it becomes a dangerous malady.

In such a case the very best treatment, if the patient has any degree of will power, is simply to pay no attention to the fact of wakefulness. Make no effort to court slumber, either by counting, repeating the alphabet, or imagining any monotonous thing. Keep the mind away from any business or domestic perplexity, but let it roam in full wakefulness where it will, among pleasant things, old associations, the friendships of the past or the present—anything that is not of a disagreeable nature. As the physical or nervous system recovers its balance, or as the stomach becomes master of its complications, slumber will come along, searching for the individual, and the morning will find the night's rest quite satisfying after all. Drugs and dosing are out of place; they merely aggravate and fasten the necessity for their own use. A simple bath, if no more than of the face, is helpful, especially if followed by a generous rubbing with a dry towel, which will equalize and invigorate the circulation. If there is chronic trouble with the stomach, that may properly receive medical attention; when the disordered condition is remedied the wakefulness, which was simply a symptom, and not a part of the disease, will take care of itself.—Good Housekeeping.

A LETTER FROM THE WORLD'S MOST ELOQUENT PREACHER, THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON, THAT WILL BE READ WITH GREAT INTEREST BY ALL WHO ARE AT DEATH'S DOOR.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man.

Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude.

Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough.

Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.—

Yours heartily,
(Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON.

"Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

Are you suffering from Consumption, Asthma, Chronic Catarrh, or Influenza? For nearly three quarters of a century CONGREVE'S BALSAMIC ELIXIR has been battling with these dire diseases in the fog-bound British Isles, and the many thousands of cases where sufferers have had new life restored to them is the most conclusive evidence of the value of this great English Remedy, which is now introduced into America for the first time. The most distressing cases have been known to speedily yield to the treatment. If your case is a serious one, at once obtain Mr. Congreve's book on consumption and diseases of the chest, mailed free to any address in the United States for 35c. or send one dollar for a copy of the book, a sample bottle of the Balsamic Elixir, and a box of the Pills recommended in Mr. Congreve's treatment, all securely packed and expressed free.

FARM NOTES.

POISON FOR THE CURCULIO.

Many experimenters have tried spraying their plum-trees with arsenics to destroy the curculio, with varying success. Some results of a definite character were given by G. C. Davis, of Michigan, in the Stockman. The stung fruit was first all picked off, and then some trees were sprayed and the rest left unsprayed. The trees were then tightly covered with cheese cloth, and curculios introduced under all. In a week it was found that nearly all the unsprayed fruit was stung. Only thirty per cent of the sprayed fruit was stung. No dead insects were found under the unsprayed sacking; but under the sprayed twenty-eight per cent were dead. It was found that the insects lived two or three days after eating the poison, and thus the remedy was not as prompt as desirable, as they might sting many plums in the interim. Spraying is therefore only a partial remedy. It should be applied three or four times—first, before blossoming, and then at intervals afterward, but never while the trees are in bloom, to poison the bees and honey. Under favorable circumstances it may prove valuable, and sometimes a sufficient remedy for this insect.—Country Gentleman.

TO KEEP EGGS FRESH.

A correspondent of the Lancaster Farmer writes: "It is sometimes desirable to store away eggs in the summer or fall, when prices are so low that we can not afford to sell them, and keep them till in the winter, when they are often very scarce, and will be keenly relished or can be disposed of at a good price. To keep them thus, we do not believe there is a more simple and efficient way than the one I have always practiced, and which was successfully practiced by my father the last thirty or forty years. This is by simply taking none but perfectly fresh and sound eggs and setting them in layers on the tip or small end, in a box or basket or anything that will hold eggs. We do not put anything between them, nor do we put them up 'air-tight,' but we always keep them in the cellar. Eggs that we have put away in this position were—after being kept six months—as good and fresh as the day they were laid, and we have never found one that was spoiled or stale among them, when thus served. We feel confident that they would keep good and fresh for one year."

THE FUNCTION OF FLOWERS.

Perhaps the kindest office of flowers to man has been to inspire him with a love of gardening, a humanizing pursuit wherein their pleasant companionship affords unwearied delight. Here is a homely pleasure for all classes of people, from a roadside cottager, with his handful of pinks and roses, to the grower of all rare and splendid exotics. Here is a pursuit which beguiles the young into study and the old into congenial labor; which offers profound problems to the wise, and simple pleasures to the unlearned; a resource which never fails; a delight which never stagnates into monotony, but leads on to new and ever-expanding fields as the seasons change and the years grow.—Garden and Forest.

MOISTURE-PROOF GLUE.

Farmers often want a moisture-proof glue, and it can be made by dissolving a pound of common glue in three pints of skim milk. The cement is stronger if powdered quick-lime is added. A fire-proof cement, for uses around stove-pipes, fire-places, and chimneys, where the danger from fire is greatest, can be made by mixing two parts of sifted fresh wood ashes and one part of air-slacked lime with sufficient boiled linseed oil to make a smooth paste. It hardens quickly to the solidity of a stone. It is water and fire-proof, and adheres to metal perfectly.—Household.

INCREASE THE PROFITS.

The object of farming is not to increase the income so much as to increase the profits. Many farmers forget that they must maintain the fertility of the soil. But by doing this they not only increase their profits, but raise themselves to a higher plane, for the more skill a man puts into his labor the less labor he will have to do. A farmer may sell hay and increase his income, but he can never sell hay and increase his profit. Again, men will persist in feeding their cows hay, and no succulent food in winter; they cannot expect them to do more than two-thirds of what they would had they had succulent food. There has also been a preference for big animals, but I find a small animal will give just as good an account of himself, and perhaps better, for the amount of food consumed. I make my cows pay every week, and watch them individually as to the amount of work and the quality of work they are doing.—J. W. Robertson, in N. E. Homestead.

To-day we print the second paper relating to the "Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine," confirming the truth of the ritual which we published last week, and indicating the character of the "Shriners" in New York City. Next week we purpose to give a history of the order, with several rites and ceremonies of the inner work of the Temples, with signs, grips, passwords, etc., in common use among the Nobles. We believe that they are as correct in all points as if they had been officially guaranteed.

Rev. D. Norton, a Baptist evangelist, and his wife, well-known in Chicago, have recently been laboring at Fostoria, Ohio. One Christian gentleman, who had lacked divine power while he remained in the Freemasons' lodge, has separated himself from its evil influences, with the happiest effects, and we anticipate the receipt of his renunciation of that work of pagan wickedness for publication in the Cynosure. Such testimony tells volumes for the worthiness of the reform for which the N. C. A. and the Cynosure are engaged.

The enemies of General Bidwell, Prohibition candidate for President, have been busily circulating reports that on his ranch, in California, he raised grapes, made wine, "and was for twenty years a large producer of wine and brandy." The Chicago News Record corrects the story by stating that Gen. Bidwell did, in 1850, plant a small vineyard, and in 1864, began the manufacture of wine. During his absence in Congress two years, his men made 1,000 gallons of wine. That, on his return, he gave to a hospital, for patients, sold none of it, and laid waste his vineyard.

"Masonry is a secret institution, and the great responsibility that rests upon every member to keep sacred and inviolable the secrets that are committed to him should keep them ever mindful of the injunction, never to let fall the least sign, token, or word, whereby the secrets of Masonry might be unlawfully obtained."—Michigan Freemason. Why so careful of alleged secrets that are no longer secrets? To-day the lodges of all the more important "fraternities" are thoroughly uncovered—their rituals, their lectures, their religion, their shams, their "principles," as they exist, are all exposed; and to keep up such an air of mystery about what is no longer mysterious, is worse than child's play. It is idiotic.

Parties interested in obtaining a clear idea of the spirit and religious character of the Farmers' (secret) Alliance will find the article on our third page, by Rev. Wm. C. Boardman, a very satisfactory exposition. The inference to be drawn from this review is, that the Alliance fosters a false religion; that it is not Christianity; that it is akin to infidelity; that it is not founded on Jesus Christ; that the order is largely made up of unbelievers, and that it is not consistent in its acts with its pretensions. If these inferences are erroneous, we shall be pleased to see them properly corrected.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, the New England agent, this week began a three weeks' series of meetings in opposition to the lodge and its evils, at Berlin, Ontario, Canada. He will have earnest support from local brethren in the ministry, and it is hoped that this campaign may result in a great victory for the truth over the follies and infidelity of the secret clans. Bro. W. B. Stoddard, the Washington agent, with slowly-improving health, and Mrs. Stoddard are now laboring earnestly in the cause of anti-secrecy and prohibition in Vermont. They need the prayers and encouragement of Cynosure readers.

"Masonry is not a religious institution in any ordinary ecclesiastical, theological, denominational or sectarian sense. Masons, as such, do not organize churches or endow them; do not build church edifices, call ministers, nor educate them."—Grand Master H. G. Reynolds, of Illinois. Yet on the 28th of May, 1821, "the society of Freemasons of the United States, with the Grand Master at their head," at Cherokee Hill, eight miles from Savannah, Ga., organized a new "church for all denominations, expressive of the universal love of the Great Architect to all his creatures." It wasn't a Christian church, evidently, but it was "ecclesiastical," if the term can be applied to lodge-worship performed in a church edifice. It was "organized," also, and it is probable that the fraternity "endowed" it. Possibly it was too "un-Masonic" to "live long and prosper." "Masonry is not Christianity, for Masonry was old before Christianity had a being; but she has ever been the handmaid of all pure religion."—Hon. Henry M. Look, Michigan.

President G. Stanley Hall, last week, at the session of the summer school of Clark University, Worcester, Mass., in an address on different methods of teaching religion, is reported to have spoken as follows of the Catholic system: "The teachings of the Catholic church are incalculably important. They should be studied by all students of pedagogy. First, there is the confessional, which is one of the most salutary and powerful agents in the world. In a number of our colleges it has been found that each man should have an adviser, which is in similar lines to the confessional;" with much more, of the same sort, and fulsome admiration of Jesuit methods. Auricular confession to a priest or teacher is a crime, and totally unauthorized by the Bible. The apostolic injunction, "Confess your faults one to another" (James 5:16), is the only passage in Scripture upon which auricular confession can be based, and it certainly has no reference to pope, priest or pedagogue. On the contrary, there are numerous texts like these: "Give glory to God and make confession to him;" "Now, therefore, make confession to the Lord God;" "As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." As there is no forgiveness nor salvation except from God through Jesus Christ, no confession of sin to any other is required. Auricular confession is a stratagem of the devil, and the Roman Catholic church is its sponsor.

Under continued military rule the strikers at Homestead, Pa., have been quiet, but not less pugnacious in their disposition than since our previous report. Bergmann, who shot Mr. Frick, is in safe keeping, with a suspected accomplice named Knold. In the house of the latter were found a number of important anarchistic letters and other documents. The leaders of the strikers were arrested and charged with murder committed during the fight between themselves and the Pinkerton guards. New men are gradually taking the places of the strikers in the Carnegie iron mills. A joint scale committee of the Amalgamated Association of Iron Workers and the iron manufacturers had another conference at Pittsburgh on Thursday, and adjourned for a fortnight, the men to resume work on the old scale in the meantime, and the new scale to be settled by arbitration. It is hoped that no more fighting will ensue.

The Mafia, it is believed, is at its despicable work again in Louisiana. Several months ago, Judge Marr, of the New Orleans Criminal District Court, a feeble old man, disappeared, and, it was supposed, fell into the river and was drowned. On Saturday last the Chief of Police received a letter, inclosed in an old envelope with skull and cross-bones on it, purporting to come from one P. J. Nunnez, stating that "We have in our possession Judge Marr," and stipulating that for $500, sent within twenty days, they will return him alive to his friends; but if treachery is resorted to, the Judge will be killed and his dead body sent home free. Answer was to be forwarded to general postoffice, at either Chicago, St. Louis, or New Orleans. The authorities are on the alert, in expectation of soon capturing the kidnapers. The Mafia is in very bad odor in the Crescent City, and "a stout rope and a short shrift" are reserved for the first offending member of that society.

"NOBLES OF THE MYSTIC SHRINE."

MORE LIGHT UPON THE "ANCIENT ARABIC ORDER."

[The complete Ritual of Initiation into the "Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine," which we published in the Cynosure of last week, originally appeared before the public in the columns of the New York Sunday Mercury. Below we print what appeared concerning the order and the ritual in that paper of the following week. In our next issue we purpose to give, from the same source, the history of the order and additional particulars concerning it.]

The developments in last Sunday's Mercury regarding the startling initiatory ceremonies of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine produced a profound sensation not only in this city but throughout the country, and it is rumored that a special committee has been appointed to investigate the Mercury's source of information. It will be seen that remarkable revelations appear in to-day's issue showing how law-breakers and law-defenders hobnob as brothers; and "still there's more to follow." Not since the disclosures in regard to the Sons of Malta, twelve or fifteen years ago, has there been such developments as the inside workings of the Mystic Shrine now given in the Mercury.

The publication last week by the Mercury of the ritual of the "Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine" created much surprise and no little consternation among the fourteen hundred and four superlative "sons of the desert" who form the Mecca Temple of that order in this city. Some of them protested that it was not the ritual now in use, and a few of them—the most superlative sons of untruth—ventured to deny in toto that it was now or ever had been the ritual of the order. But the majority of those spoken to, while wondering how it was obtained, admitted that it was the genuine ritual and the one now in use, perfect and complete in almost every detail. "One detail," said a Mystic Shrine member, "was omitted. It often happens when candidates are undergoing 'the test of courage' they have in very truth to be 'conducted to the purifying cavern in the South,' where they may 'cleans themselves in the fountain of Mecca,' so that the offensive 'vapors of damp stagnation may pass away.' If the names of those who were required to go through the cleansing fountain of Mecca, after the test of courage, were only published, New York would have a great

LAUGH ON MANY WELL-KNOWN INDIVIDUALS."

"True?" said another Mystic Shriner, "well, it was correct and full enough for me to buy fifty copies of the Mercury, which I hold for future sale at five dollars a copy. Rituals are not to be bought or obtained by the ordinary members, but everybody can have one by getting a copy of the Mercury."

From reliable sources it was learned that only five officers of the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine are allowed to possess copies of the ritual, and an investigation has been ordered to find out what unworthy and traitorous Noble so basely forgot his obligation. It may turn out that there will be some actual work for the Council of the Inquisition.

As a guarantee of the faithfulness of the ritual as given last week in the Mercury a list of prominent members of the order, taken from the official directory, will now be transcribed.

THE DIRECTORY IS A SMALL BOOK

printed on yellowish paper and with a blue glossed paper back. It is numbered "8," which shows that the Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine is eight years old. The title in the Arabic characters that head this article. A sub-heading or title reads: "Directors' Register, 1890," and the register was "issued January 1, 1890." The number of members of the Mecca Temple is given as 1,404, and the book is printed by J. A. Affleck, No. 63 Beaver street, New York. Stephen D. Affleck is an Assistant Director. Only one Temple is allowed in each city or district and there are fifty of them throughout the country.

[We omit the list of Temples printed in the Mercury, because since then the number of them has increased, and of course it would not be correct.—Editor Cynosure.]

the directory says:

"The rendition of the work in this Temple will take place on the evening of each respective Feast Day, which will be in the latter part of every month. Timely notice thereof will be given. The traditional banquet always served."

This banquet is described as the biggest thing of its kind in the city and is a chief attraction to the meetings, at which the average attendance is between eight and nine hundred "Nobles." In view of the high-sounding titles and superlative presentations of the order, this notice sounds funny:

"Annual dues, $2. All Nobles in arrears will please forward their dues to

CAPTAIN J. B. EAKINS, Director,
No. 158 West One Hundred and Fifth street,
New York, N. Y.

"A failure to comply will be sufficient cause to omit future notices of sessions."

CAPTAIN J. B. EAKINS, DIRECTOR, is a well-known officer of our police force, and, of course, is, in the language of the ritual, ardently possessed of "a desire to promote justice and suppress wrong," and is most "devoted to the cause of justice, truth and mercy." It is perhaps equally beyond doubt the cause of so many members of the police force being found in the order—they are all so devoted to the "promotion of justice and the suppression of wrong." The directory does in very truth and by Allah, god of the Arab, show a most extraordinary conglomeration of elements and interests. With big police officials devoted to the "promotion of justice and the suppression of wrong," are to be found the policy-dealer and gambler; side by side with the private citizen of some reputation, is to be read the name of the boodler with none. The names of men whose records spread in full are to be found in the archives of the Court of Sessions are printed cheek by jowl with those of good and law-abiding citizens. The race-track bookmaker is there in company with the banker, while the eminent advocate rubs skirts and drinks "blood" with the police court lawyer. Even the name of General Sickles is only a quarter of an inch removed from that of ———, the lottery man, who, it is said, backs one hundred and fifty policy-shops in this city and has his headquarters on the Bowery. If our good sheriff looks up the records he will find that his brother Noble ——— was convicted a couple of years ago of dealing in lottery tickets at No. 52 1-2 Bowery and fined $500. Another Noble, ———, was once convicted of dealing in the bogus Little Havana Lottery. Then there are ———, of the "White Elephant" saloon, ———, another policy-backer, pool-room keeper and brother of ———, who backs and rakes the profits of thirty-eight policy shops; ———, the race-track bookmaker, comes close in the list to Police Captain John McCullagh. Quite near the name of Antonio Rasines, of Long Island City, is to be found that of ex-Alderman James G. McMurray, who is engaged in working up a pious prohibition boom for the good Colonel Shepard for Mayor, while Julius C. Lulley, auditor of the Aqueduct Commission, has a near neighbor, a gentleman, who graduated in business life under the tutelage of a notorious policy and lottery man.

A SUBDIVISION OF THE ORDER, called the "Arab Patrol," seems to be a favorite corps for the police. It contains no less than two inspectors and seven captains, as follows: Alexander S. Williams, Thomas Byrnes, John J. Brogan, William H. Clinchy, George W. Gastlin, Donald Grant, Josiah A. Westervelt and John McCullagh. Captain Joseph B. Eakins, the Noble Director of the whole concern, makes the eighth police captain that is devoting himself through the Mystic Shrine to "the promotion of justice and suppression of wrong." Besides the captains there is a strong muster roll of police sergeants and detectives, among them Sergeants Washington Mullen, James Longdale, Samuel J. McDonald, Henry K. Woodruff, William H. Berrian, Henry Timm (the agnostic orator of the force), Detective George Woods, Court Officer John H. Weeks.

CHARLES H. HEYSER IS A PROTEGE of Mr. Usher and holds a $1,400 position in the Custom House.

George W. Millar is a printer and Past Grand Master of Chancellor Walworth Lodge, to which he still acts as a father, ruling everything.

BLOOMFIELD USHER, JR., originally came from the backwoods of St. Lawrence to fill a fourteen-hundred dollar position in the Custom House. Mr. Usher's father is a statesman of the Republican type who worked his "influence" so well that he had Bloomfield, Jr., translated from a country store to a desk in Uncle Sam's big Custom House. When General Merritt was made Collector, Bloomfield, Sr., became one of General Merritt's bondsmen. Bloomfield, Jr., was immediately advanced to the position of chief clerk of the bureau for the liquidation of vessels. ANOTHER REVIEW OF THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

BY REV. WM. C. BOARDMAN.

About one year ago, while busy in pastoral work in the State of Kansas, I received a letter from one of the leading members of an Alliance lodge in that locality. He asked several questions, criticising and greatly upbraiding me for the stand I had taken in that place in regard to the Alliance, simply because I would not tolerate it in the church. I thought, and still do think, that no Christless organization should be admitted into the church of Christ.

A few weeks after receiving his letter, I wrote the following in reply, asking, at the close, several questions, and demanding answers (or admissions), as I thought I had the right to do, owing to the stand that he had taken and the circumstances under which I was placed; but I have not heard from him since. The following is what I wrote to him:

As I have a little time now, I will answer your letter.

Your first question is very easy to answer. Our church does not receive merchants of all kinds; for, as you say, "Some belong to secret societies." We take in none who has no religion, nor any who have a false religion—just the few who have a true religion. We aim to treat all mankind in meekness, shun no one, do them all the good we can, lead the unsaved to Christ, and greet all with a Christlike spirit; yet we have "no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them. For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret." Eph. 5: 11, 12.

You spoke about the merchants' secret trademark, which, as you say, "cannot be less pleasing to God than our signs and grips." I agree with you. Owing to the way in which many use them, they must be very displeasing to God; but, as you say, "they cannot be less pleasing." Therefore, they must be more pleasing, or just as pleasing, to God; or, in other words, meaning the same thing, your signs and grips must be more displeasing to God than the secret trademark. Strange that you can uphold your order only by comparing it to something that is almost as bad.

I agree with you that they "cannot be less pleasing to God than" your "signs or grips." If you have reference to the way that the trademark is often used, then I condemn it as heartily as you do; but if you have reference to the method, provided the trade-mark be used properly, then I will make you a fair offer: Both are to investigate it thoroughly, and when one can prove that it is wrong, he is to let the other know, giving proofs; and then both are to cry out against it. Will you accept this offer?

But this cannot in any way uphold secret societies; for if it is right, we should uphold it; if wrong, we should condemn it. "Two wrongs do not make a right." Never! Neither does one kind of secrecy uphold another. Christ, in speaking of the one kind, said: "Pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Matt. 6: 6. Here the matter belonged only to the individual and to God; hence it should be known only to the person and to God. If it were a matter pertaining to ten persons, then it should be brought before only the ten. If it pertained to all, it should be brought before all; otherwise it would be infringing upon some of the rights that sacredly belong to them.

The one class the Bible approves of; but the other, as I have shown in my former reply, it most bitterly condemns.

You spoke of Matt. 13: 11; but what has that to do with the case? If a scientific master should say to the plant, "It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of vegetation, but to the mineral world it is not given," he would be perfectly scientific, and not in the least would he be favoring secret societies. So when Christ said, in the passage referred to, "It is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but unto them it is not given," he was perfectly scientific, and not in the least upholding secrecy.

It would be just as inconsistent for Christ to try and make the unsaved know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven without their being converted as it would for the scientist to try and make the inorganic become organic by polishing or contriving, instead of having it absorbed and assimilated by natural laws. But you must remember that there is a great difference between the "mysteries of godliness" and the "mysteries of ungodliness."

You spoke, next, of what Christ said in Luke 9: 50, "For he that is not against us is for us." I am very glad that you brought up this passage, for it throws more light on the subject.

Now, let us find out who is "against" Christ. "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Matt. 12: 30. Now, you will admit that the name of Christ has been left out of your constitution, and that, too, for a purpose, so as to let in "Jews and others." Your constitution is certainly not with Christ, but with "a Supreme Being;" therefore it is "against" him, and it "scattereth abroad."

You filled half of your letter with criticism of me for the stand that I have taken, trying hard to make out that I took the same course in regard to secrecy that Pilate did in regard to Christ, and that the reason why I did thus was because I feared the church, as Pilate did Caesar. But I think you are greatly mistaken. It must be that you are "not up with the times." I did no such thing. I have stated, both publicly and privately, that "I spoke my convictions, and would do the same thing, even if there had been no Wesleyan Methodist Conference or church in existence." Surely you are mistaken in your strictures. Strange that you could condemn me only for what I did not do. I did not take that stand simply because my church required it, but because I felt that it was right. I left one church because it had "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," and did not "reprove them." Eph. 5: 11. And I am glad that I now am in a church that has no "fellowship" with a false religion.

You have strongly criticised both me and my church; but I take no offence, for I take it for granted, of course, that you have proof to back your statements. Now, I call for the proof; mere assertions will not do.

1. Prove that your order is a true religion, or else admit that it is a false religion. 2. Prove that it is Christianity, or admit that it is some other kind of religion. 3. Prove that it is not one branch of infidelity, or admit that it is, or, at least, some akin to it. 4. Prove that your order, the Alliance, has for its foundation Jesus Christ, or admit that it has some other foundation. 5. Prove that your order does not reject Christ, or admit that it does. 6. Prove that you are "not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," or admit that you are. 7. Prove that your order is consistent with its motto—"Equal rights to all, and special favors no none," or else admit that it is not.

When you can furnish such proofs, your "criticisms" will be entitled to a hearing. Until then, I shall try and "serve" only the ONE Master, which is Jesus Christ. Matt. 6: 24.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER.

Coney Island—A thirsty place—A trip up the Hudson—Newburgh—Some churches in New York—Homeward bound.

The first part of my stay in New Jersey was deliciously cool, but when the thermometer suddenly leaped up into the nineties, and my friend said, "Let us have a day at Coney Island," I was very ready to "second the motion." This famous resort I had always thought of as a place where the great city of New York poured the dregs of its population, and where prize-fights and other breaches of social order were of common occurrence; but while the foreign element predominated, I was agreeably surprised to find as thoroughly decorous and well-behaved a crowd as I ever saw anywhere, and all seemed to be enjoying themselves each in their own way.

We watched the surf-bathers for a while—thinking what a wonderful charm there must be in thus going down into the embraces of old ocean when it necessitated the making such a guy of one's self—and then we strolled away to see the "sights." And if I may be pardoned a personal allusion, any of the Cynosure readers who may have met me within the past few years, and observed the difficulty and pain with which I walked, would have been convinced, could they have seen me plough through the beach sand, of the value of Mr. Darrach's mechanical appliances for the lame. But more of this hereafter.

Coney Island can be most fitly described in the words of Scripture, as "a dry and thirsty land, where no water is." Of course, lager-beer flowed in unlimited quantities, and equally, as a matter of course, the waiters (on whom I am sorry to say my white ribbon though rather ostentatiously displayed, seemed to make no impression) importuned us to have some. We compounded at last on soda water, variously flavored, but it was a poor substitute for "Adam's ale," and we "moved on," thinking of the Ancient Mariner's plaint,

"Water, water everywhere, and not a drop to drink."

At last we stopped at a place which looked promising, and tried to buy a glass of ice-water, only to be informed by the smiling proprietor that the nearest approach to that beverage which he kept was Vichy water. We ordered some, but one swallow was enough for me; and with the remark from my friend that "vicious" water would be a much more appropriate title for it, we moved away with our thirst unappeased, and wondering why the society with the long name had never thought of putting up an ice-water fountain on Coney Island. Or, if they consider it out of the line of their legitimate work, what a splendid opportunity for the W. C. T. U. to preach temperance and make a profitable investment at the same time by supplying water for the thirsty at a cent a glass. I trust some of our enterprising and philanthropic white ribbons will profit by the suggestion.

We strolled into the People's Palace, which was the nearest approach to a European beer-garden that my New England eyes have ever as yet beheld. Men and women were seated at little round tables, listening to lively strains of music, and watching a troupe of Japanese jugglers perform most marvelous feats, while the smoke from numberless cigars curled gracefully up, and the white-aproned waiters moved deftly about with their trays and brimming glasses. But the temperance cause must have made some progress even on Coney Island, for one of them remarked in disgusted accents—evidently for the benefit of our party—that "he could not sell any beer; everybody seemed to want soda water." Whatever may be said against Coney Island by those who like more select company and a higher class of attractions than is there offered, it is surely a great boon for the poor of New York to have this resort so accessible and so cheap—this chance of escaping even for a day their sweltering tenement rooms for a bath in old ocean, and a view of his illimitable grandeur.

A trip up the Hudson and a visit to Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, was an experience which even old tourists who have seen the castled Rhine may well envy. How many hundred years will it take to make our glorious Hudson as famous as that classic, old-world river? On we steamed, past the frowning Palisades—on—up into the Rip Van Winkle country—mountains, range on range, looming up blue and misty in the distance like lovely ghosts; then, as they approached nearer, gradually taking on mortal bodies, and towering up in their grim and rugged strength like warlike archangels guarding the way to a new Paradise. We passed under the very base of the monarch of them all—the Storm King—calmly basking in the summer sunshine; but one can imagine how well he would merit his name when the storm winds were loosed from their caverns, and the elves of the tempest were reveling on his hoary summit.

Newburgh lies a little beyond West Point, and is a most interesting old town, very proud of having been Washington's headquarters, and very willing, on the strength thereof, to "turn" many "an honest penny" from the throngs who daily visit this American Mecca. The house itself is a low, gambrel-roofed structure, with an outlook from its piazza on the Hudson, which is of marvelous beauty, though in stormy weather the room which was Washington's parlor, with its seven doors and only one window, must have been a gloomy place. However, in choosing the Hasborouck house for his headquarters, strategic and not æsthetic ends were probably the ones sought. We had only time to glance at the relics, which are many and interesting. Portraits of Gen. Washington and his wife, copied from the Stuart originals in Boston, grace the small and very incommensurable bedroom. Mrs. Martha Custis, "that was," to quote our queer New England expression, with her fair matronly face, looks as if not deficient in common sense or a certain kind-heartedness, but I never could see in her pictures any gleam of more intellectual qualities. If it be not treason to say so, let me whisper under my breath that I fear the Mother of her country was not in the least an interesting woman. Not a solitary bon mot, not a single wise or witty saying, so far as I know, has history recorded as coming from her lips. She was doubtless a fair specimen of a Southern matron in those early times, whose education was of the most rudimentary kind, and who believed the end of her creation perfectly fulfilled if she looked well to the ways of her household, letting affairs of state alone. But she suited Washington and that ought to be enough. Such men seldom choose very bright and clever women for wives, but seem to prefer those with prosaic, matter-of-fact natures and small individuality. I feel sure that Washington would have shrank with perfect horror from a tete-a-tete with Madame De Stael. The chair in which Washington sat was one of the most interesting of the curiosities; also a watch made to order in London in 1758, and worn by his wife before her marriage. There were any number of curious old papers, and rusty fire-locks and historic swords, including the one worn by La Fayette, and an immense boot taken from a Hessian dragoon. No wonder the Hessians were defeated if all their accoutrements were on a like clumsy scale.

On the boat we found, as all tourists do, abundant opportunity to study human nature. The most amusing specimen was a family—I am sorry to say they seemed to be Americans—dubbed by my friend "the banana family." The children, of whom there were three or four, seemed to have solved the problem of perpetual motion, for they were continually perambulating from one end of the boat to the other—always with a banana in hand, and never careful on what part of one's dress they placed their sticky fingers. When 12 o'clock came, the head of the household, who looked a good deal like the portraits of Cleveland, got out a huge dinner-box and the whole family sat round it and dined, utterly oblivious of the grand scenery we were passing through—and this at a time when each moment unfolded some new panorama of beauty, and almost every one was standing up, not to lose a glimpse of the glorious vision!

Saturday and Sunday I spent in New York, at a boarding-house kept by the Misses Gale, at 124 Lexington Avenue, which I can heartily recommend to any who may read this, as a very delightful place at which to stop while sight-seeing in New York. They are fine, cultured women, members of Dr. Parkhurst's church, and heart and hand with their pastor in his brave war against vice in high places.

One of the "sights" of New York is the "Little Church around the Corner," as it is familiarly called. It is noted for the catholic spirit of its rector, who began, 43 years ago, with meetings in a private room. He is now an old man, with a voice so weak that nobody can hear him unless they take a front pew, yet the church is always full. His noble life counts for more than his sermons. He never takes a vacation. Summer or winter he is at his post, and day or night no tale of distress falls unheeded on his ear. It is no wonder that the poor, the unfortunate, the out-cast, love that "little church around the corner" which is always open and where every seat is free. Some years ago an actor died, and was buried from this church, no other pastor being willing to perform the service, and I believe it was from this incident that its peculiar name was first given to it. Within, it is beautiful as a dream. Every part is gem-like in its finish, and the painted windows are perfect symphonies in color. It is Episcopalian, and any one attending services here can get a dose of the very highest High Church ritualism. Yet I could see, in one thing at least, a broad line of demarkation from Roman Catholic churches. Pictures from the life of our Lord, or scenes from Old Testament history, were everywhere portrayed, but it was always Jesus—never Mary—who was held up to adoration. One most beautiful window, which was the work of the rector's deceased wife, was covered entirely with texts from the Psalms—but all were in plain English characters, suited to the uneducated eye. Very different was its atmosphere from that of the grand marble Cathedral on Fifth Avenue, which I also visited, with no result beyond an additional horror of the Scarlet Woman, and any possible domination of our free America by her thralls and minions.

We attended a very enjoyable service at St. George's church—Dr. Rainsford's; and being an hour too early we sat down in the park while a number of little waifs from a Home which this church supports came round us. My friend soon had them formed into an impromptu Sunday-school class. They were bright and pretty, though still retaining traces of the life in the slums from which they had been rescued. Dr. Rainsford's curious proposal of church saloons has brought his name into much notoriety, but the church of which he is rector has the most missionary spirit of any in the city, and he himself is said to be one of the most devoted and self-sacrificing of any of the New York clergymen. His proposal is generally condemned; but at the same time most people seem willing to concede that his blunder is one of the head rather than the heart. Like almost all the other pastors, he is now away in Europe, but his substitute preached a most sound and excellent Gospel sermon on Conversion. I certainly never heard the subject handled better from the most orthodox pulpit.

This concluded our round of sight-seeing, and Monday saw us on our homeward way.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A Puritan-descended town.—"One of the sights" of Newark.—A curious result of the hot wave in Lowell.—The Pater Noster in a Worcester school.—A thought for Protestant Masons.

It is said that the records of the Patent Office show that Newark leads every other American city in the number and usefulness of her various inventions. But some one may inquire what possible connection the above statement can have with the Cynosure's New England Letter. To which I answer, "Much every way," seeing that Newark was herself settled one May morning, about two hundred and thirty years ago, by one of the first colonies New England cast out of her swarming hive;—a colony, too, which emigrated from Connecticut, land of wooden nutmegs; so if she is distinguished by inventive genius, who shall say she did not come by it honestly? During the first century of her existence she was to all intents and purposes a New England township, holding fast all the Puritan traditions; where only church members were eligible to town offices, and where the Sunday laws and the tithing man were as fixed institutions as in New Haven or Boston. So when, one perspiring hot afternoon, I climbed two flight of stairs and stood in the modest workshop of one of Newark's least-known, yet most unique, inventors, I felt that an account of what I saw there belonged as naturally to Yankee-land as to any other part of our common country.

The first thing that struck my eye was a wheeled crutch;—light, graceful, yet as strong as iron and steel could make it, with four metal wheels which moved soundlessly, but in as perfect harmony with the will of the person—child or adult, who might be using it—as if they were living, sentient things. This movement is obtained by a most ingenious use of swivel brackets, made of polished steel and so arranged that the friction is reduced to a minimum. By divers attachments, made to suit peculiar cases, invalids, with no power of natural motion, can propel themselves about and take the exercise and the fresh air they so much need. Yet this and many other beneficial aids for the afflicted would never have seen the light had not the inventor's little daughter, a few years ago, been stricken down with spinal disease, and the father's heart refused to accept the verdict of the physicians, that her case was incurable. He saw that the various forms of steel braces used to support a diseased spine were all right in theory, but woefully deficient when it came to practical application. They could neither be extended nor adjusted in such a way as to give the firm, all-around support needed; and he at once went to work to evolve an ideal "spinal corset." The first thing to be sought for was a suitable material. He experimented with gutta percha, gutta percha felt, with celluloid; then with layers of chamois skin, cemented and hardened by different compositions, and supplemented with short steel strips attached to harness leather; and, finally, with rawhide, so treated as to be impervious to moisture, perfectly elastic, yet as tough as iron. This substance could be perforated to any extent, thus obviating a fault common to all the others, of too great warmth. Being, as before stated, impervious to moisture, it cannot warp. This material, to which he has given the name of hide-bone, is the strongest, and at the same time the most elastic, which I ever handled. To ensure a perfect fit, the corset is made over a plaster cast. The result justified his hopes. The invalid could now sit up; but her disease had caused paralysis of the lower limbs, so that she had lost all power of motion, and his next invention for her use was the wheeled crutch described above. The result was that I had the pleasure of meeting at her father's house the young lady herself—now grown a fine young woman, whose, quick, light footsteps and straight, erect form bear not the smallest indication that she was ever a victim of that dreadful malady—Pott's disease of the spine.

Mr. Darrach found that the same treatment could be applied with equal success for lameness and deformity in almost any shape, whether caused by accident or disease; and he has gone on extending his business as far as his means would allow, and causing many to bless his name who without his aid would have led only a miserable, crippled existence. One lady who wears his spinal support is a teacher in a celebrated institution, and no one would dream who sees her quietly and independently pursuing her calling, that without the aid his invention affords her she would be unable to sit up—a helpless and suffering invalid dependent all her life upon others. In my own case—a disunited fracture of the hip—I have found immediate relief. Strong clasps of steel prevent the fractured parts from moving, and thus, for the first time in over four years, I find myself able to walk without pain, and have reason to hope for a permanent cure in time. If any of the Cynosure readers visit Newark, let them be sure and take in, as one of its chief sights, a visit to Mr. S. A. Darrach's place of business. They will find him a Christian gentleman, whose acquaintance it will be a pleasure to make, and whose sympathies are thoroughly enlisted in the great cause of freeing society from the curse of secret, oath-bound organizations.

The various ways in which people try to keep cool during a hot wave like the one now upon us, are interesting to note. The most thoroughly uncomfortable ones, I am persuaded, are those who betake themselves seriously to the business of keeping cool, for when the thermometer registers 95 degrees in the shade, the genius of coolness, like happiness, is apt to court the people who are too busy about some useful employment to think of their own feelings. The "summer novel," with its highly-spiced sensational pages, is another curious device for keeping cool, as if a heated and stimulated imagination was any help to this desirable end. How much more sensible to pack a volume of Arctic Travels in one's trunk, and let fancy disport itself among icebergs, and polar bears, and the flashing auroral splendors of the northern night. N. B. The writer has tried this recipe for keeping cool, and can certify that it is an admirable one. Try it, and see if it is not every whit as good as Dr. Arbuthnot's famous recipe for a sleighride; viz., to wrap yourself in furs, put your feet in a tub of melting snow-water, and jingle the dinner-bell. One of the funniest results of the recent hot weather was the bursting of ten large hogsheads of beer in the Lowell freight depot. The heads were of ash and four inches thick, but the fermenting liquor inside burst them like paper, sending the contents in a perfect geyser to the very rafters of the building. I wonder if any among the throng of bystanders who looked with envious eye on this waste, took the object-lesson to heart, and asked themselves what kind of work such stuff was likely to make in the human stomach! If there could be a general bursting of beer-kegs all over the country, as a consequence of the hot weather, there are plenty of temperance people and white-ribboners, including the writer, who would cheerfully bear their share of the discomfort.

The children in a certain Worcester school have been taught to say the Pater Noster; i. e., the Lord's Prayer in Latin,—much to the disgust of Protestant parents, who are naturally wondering to what this state of things will grow. Romish audacity fairly approaches the sublime.

I see that our Canada neighbors, at Toronto, have been entertaining the Knights of St. John, a Roman Catholic military order, whose "supreme spiritual adviser," Archbishop Walsh, has, at their request, graciously granted them liberty "to adopt such passwords and countersigns as will protect their meetings and deliberations from intrusion, provided they will make such passwords and countersigns known to the competent ecclesiastical authority when asked for." The Traveller correspondent who gives this piece of information says: "Think of any Protestant society waiting to decide a question of this kind until their 'supreme spiritual adviser' told them they might do as they wished on condition that they would be ready at all times to tell their secret to the preacher!" But our Protestant Masons may rest assured that whether they are willing to tell their secrets to a priest or not, the Jesuit is in complete possession of them all the same; so it does not particularly matter.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27, 1892.

Washington pulpits have at various times been filled by most of the famous ministers of the English-speaking world, but few of them have had so wide and varied an experience as Rev. Dr. George Sexton, of St. Catherines, Ontario, at present in Washington. Dr. Sexton is an Englishman, and in profound learning and elegant culture has few, if any, superiors. He is honorary professor of natural science in the Galileo Academy at Naples; honorary and corresponding fellow of the Italian Society of Science; honorary member of L'Accademia Del Guireti, at Rome; member of the Victoria Institute, and of the Philosophical Society of Great Britain, and has devoted much time to the study of the relations of science to Christianity, resulting in the publication of a number of very interesting and valuable works, including "The Baseless Fabric of Scientific Skepticism," and "Theistic Problems." Dr. Sexton has, by his excellent oratory and original method of bringing out new and strong points in old and familiar texts, become very popular in Washington; and, notwithstanding, the unusually great heat of last Sunday, he preached twice to a large congregation from Dr. Bartlett's pulpit, which he will again occupy next Sunday. He also addressed the Y. M. C. A. in the afternoon of last Sunday.

The "Gospel Push Cart," a new vehicle intended for use in alley mission work, made its first public appearance Sunday afternoon and attracted a great deal of attention in the section of the city through which it was pushed. It is a rather odd-looking box, eight feet long by three and one-half feet wide and four feet deep, on the ordinary push-cart wheels, and when opened it makes a platform containing a parlor organ and room for a dozen chairs; it also carries a supply of hymn-books, etc. It was built with funds contributed by the young people of Wesley church, and is to be used at open-air meetings, under their auspices, every Sunday afternoon.

Rev. Dr. John H. Worcester, Jr., professor of theology in the Union Seminary, New York City, preached a powerful sermon of the old-fashioned kind at the Church of the Covenant, last Sunday, his topic being "God, a Hearer of Prayer," and his text: "O Thou who hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come."

The officials of the World's Fair have a large number of prominent members of the two great political parties here, working hard to get Congress to undo its work prohibiting the opening of the Exposition on Sunday; but, from the best information obtainable, they are not likely to succeed. It is plain, however, from their presence here upon such an errand, that if Congress had not interfered the World's Fair would have been opened on Sunday, notwithstanding the existence of a powerful sentiment against such a desecration of the day.

Washington is passing through an unusually torrid spell of weather, and the heat is causing much suffering even among those surrounded by everything that money will buy to mitigate the heat, and it is terrible among the poor, huddled together in small and poorly ventilated rooms. Its effect is so apparent upon the attendance at the sessions of Congress that if it continues much longer, adjournment will be forced by the absence of a quorum in either House or Senate. The House is refusing to grant leaves of absence, except on account of sickness, but its members are leaving the city by every train without leave.

The new and very stringent law against the carrying of deadly weapons in the District of Columbia has gone into effect, and the authorities anticipate that it will result in a material decrease in crime.

The Senate yesterday afternoon confirmed the nomination of Mr. George Shiras, Jr., of Pennsylvania, to be Associate Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court. *

CORRESPONDENCE

REMINISCENCES OF PRESIDENT JONATHAN BLANCHARD.

We are indebted to Rev. J. E. Roy, D.D., for the privilege of printing the following private letter from Rev. A. L. Rankin, one of the sons of Rev. John Rankin, that grand old evangelical and reformatory hero, of Ripley, Ohio: SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July, 1892.

MY DEAR BROTHER:—A few days since I received a copy of the Cynosure containing your address at the funeral of Rev. Jonathan Blanchard, D.D., which I read with a good deal of interest.

In September, 1836, I entered the junior class of Lane Theological Seminary. I was informed, when I did, that all the members of that institution were required to become members of the Seminary church. In common with my fellow-students, I came with my church letter in my pocket.

I had not been there a week before I discovered that one of the elders of the Seminary church was the owner of a large sugar plantation and 500 slaves in Louisiana. Being a most pronounced anti-slavery agitator, I could not consent to be served at the communion table by a slaveholder; and, learning that the majority of the Sixth Presbyterian church of Cincinnati were anti-slavery in sentiment, I presented my letter to that church, and was enrolled a member of the same, on the second Sabbath of September, 1836.

The following week I received a notice from Prof. Dickinson to appear before the Faculty and answer for my disobedience. I put in an appearance, and had the audacity to abruptly say that I would not knowingly commune with a slaveholder, much less receive from the hand of a slaveholder the elements that represented the sufferings and death of my Redeemer.

Prof. Dickinson was annoyed and horrified at my unheard-of audacity, and said, with a good deal of anger, "I don't see but the thing for you to do is to leave the Seminary." I replied that "I was willing to do so if the Faculty advised it, and that my personal choice was to go to Andover Seminary; but at the request of my father I had come to Lane."

Now it was well-known that if I had to leave for the cause above stated, that they would hear from my father. He had reviewed, in a pamphlet, the resolution of the trustees that caused the stampede of over 100 students from Lane to Oberlin; and Drs. Beecher and Stowe, remembering the damaging effect of that review, were not willing to give cause for another. They both urged that as it was a matter of conscience with the young brother, they could not see why they should enforce the rule in his case any more than they could in the case of one of his classmates, who was a Baptist. Notwithstanding, Prof. Dickinson urged that as I was a Presbyterian, therefore I did not stand in the same relation to the rule as a Baptist brother did. The Faculty, however, did resolve to excuse my non-attendance at the Seminary church.

The following Sabbath, Bro. Blanchard preached for the Sixth Presbyterian church, and the same week the church invited him to supply the pulpit for a year, it having been made vacant by the acceptance of the pastor (Rev. Asa Mahan) of a call to the presidency of Oberlin College. Bro. Blanchard accepted the invitation, with the condition that the duties of acting pastor should not interfere with his purpose to complete his last year in the theological course at Lane Seminary. The condition was accepted by the church. He supplied it during the entire year that he was in the Seminary—not, as you state in your sermon, "he preached for the colored people," etc., until he graduated, and then for the Sixth church. The error occurs in mistaking the time of his installation as the commencement of his occupancy of the pulpit of that church.

Another matter is overlooked. Bro. Blanchard's reputation as a debater was made before he had the debate with Dr. Rice, early in his pastorate in Cincinnati. The Executive Committee of the Ohio Anti-slavery Society challenged Rev. Dr. Gurley, of Washington City, D. C., then visiting Cincinnati in the interest of the Colonization Society, to discuss with Bro. Blanchard the question: "Is the object of the American Colonization Society worthy of the patronage of the American people?" The debate continued through one entire week; and not only the opposition, but also Bro. Blanchard's friends, were astonished at his ability in debate. A. L. RANKIN.

THE BIBLE DOCTRINE OF SPIRITUAL REGENERATION.

WINNEBAGO CITY, Minn., July, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Seeing, from time to time, an advertisement entitled, "The Bible Mode of Baptism," by a certain brother, while I have not read or seen the advertised pamphlet I suspect it refers to water baptism in the church. Spiritual baptism is the work of the Lord Jesus, as declared by John the Baptist. The water part he committed to his disciples, telling them to baptize believers in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. Whoever reads the Bible to find out what is in it, will find these baptismal points clearly taught.

Spiritual birth is regeneration, making a new creature in Christ Jesus.

Spiritual baptism "guides and leads into all truth," takes of the things of the Saviour and shows them to us; brings to our remembrance all things that he has said for and to us; and also speaks nothing except "that which he hath heard of the Father;" endues with power to enjoy, and tell these things before and to others. If any of the disciples, the Lord's flock, are without this, just let it be said, "the Master, Jesus, says it is for you. Take it for his name's sake."

Now, reader, will it be out of place to seek for the use and meaning of water baptism in the Christian church and dispensation? All who think or read the Bible know that mankind are compound beings, so made, so expect to be in eternity, when all things are consummated or perfected; pronounced "very good" at creation; transgressed the Creator's command; fell, and became lost. Death resulted. Separation (the meaning of death) came; not only was the soul separated from God, but also from the body. After a length of time a Redeemer was provided, who "came to seek and save that which was lost."

If we accept him, he redeems our souls immediately, and we show the signs of redemption in a new life; "loving what we hated before;" "hating what we loved before;" with a new song in our mouths; in a word, having "joy in the Holy Ghost." Now about the redemption of our bodies—not immediately, but as Brother Paul says, "we groan within ourselves, waiting for the redemption of our body." But is there not a sign Jesus gives us by which we are required to show our belief, in its redemption? Let us turn to what Jesus says, not only by his own mouth, but also by his chosen vessels or servants. Paul, first, in Romans 6: 3: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" Notice that preacher and hearer are included in the word "us;" and if we are in Jesus, we are in his separation (death)—from what? From sin? If religious professors are not in this state, they had better get there, or it will be of no use to go any farther in this line until they are in; but if so in, then we can understand what Paul says in verse 4: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism, into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." These last words, how blessed! teaching us when taking on a sign not to be forgetful of its results.

Now verse 5: "For if we have been planted together, in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." The rest of the chapter is worth knowing, as Paul says, and we should be glad; nearly all can read who want to know. But let us turn to Col. 2: 11, 12: The same things are talked of; after the body of the sins were put off, then we are "buried with him in baptism; wherein, also, ye are risen with him, through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead." Now see what Jesus told Brother Peter to say in 1 Peter 3: 20, 21, speaking of the Ark: "Wherein few, that is, eight souls, were saved by water; the like figure whereunto even baptism doth also now save us—by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

Again, turn to 1 Cor. 15: 29, and learn from the questions Paul asks what the Lord means: "What shall they do who are baptized for the dead, if the dead rise not at all? Why are they then baptized for the dead?" Comparing these Scriptures with each other, the use and meaning of water baptism is easy and plain to the Lord's sheep. 1. A belief in the death, burial and resurrection of our Lord. As Paul said, he "preached everywhere." 2. If time lasts till we die, that we expect to die, to be buried; and to be raised through Christ. Then to study the glory of having part in the first resurrection, taught in 1 Cor. 15; also in Revelation; likewise in the Book of Psalms, the Psalmist, speaking thus: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." Compare the state of the saints, in their glorious spiritual bodies, "clothed in fine linen," "clean and white, which is the righteousness of the saints," not subject to pain, or sighing, or tears, or death, because having overcome through the blood of the Lamb, etc., then their bodies are fashioned like unto the most glorious body of our Lord, described in Revelation, and eternally happy. Compare, we say, these with the wicked brought forth in the resurrection of damnation—weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, eternally, "where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," and these to be eternal.

When these things are thoughtfully considered, can any of the chosen ones reasonably say of a sign so grand in meaning and the results following so enjoyable to think of, that it amounts to nothing? has nothing whatever to do with salvation? is not required? As John the Baptist and Jesus went down into the water of Jordan, was not Jesus separated from the outer world (a picture of death); as John laid Jesus under water, was it not a picture (or figure) of burial; as he raised Jesus from the water, was it not a figure of the resurrection? Thus Jesus began to teach what he so many times told his disciples afterward; and thus it became Jesus and John to fulfill all righteousness.

Is there any figure of death, burial and resurrection in other ways? Is there any birth of water in other ways? Do not all of Jesus' words and those of his disciples accord with his example, and not with other ways?

Truly, as the beloved Cynosure says, "the Bible is better (can it not be said, infinitely better?) than all other books of faith."

ONE OF THE LORD'S SHEEP.

LITERATURE.

From the Fleming H. Revell Co., New York and 148, 150 Madison street, Chicago, comes a daintily printed booklet—"The Two Fairs; or, Thoughts on the Columbian Exposition" (in verse), by Rev. Henry Ostrom. The measure adopted is that of the well-known hymn, "America," which is an attraction in itself. The Sunday and Liquor questions in their relation to the World's Fair form the burden of the poem, which is an earnest plea for Sunday closing and the prohibition of whisky-selling inside the gates. Congress has closed the gates on Sunday, and public opinion will have to frown down the Exposition bar-rooms, and relegate them to the numerous saloons that already cluster thickly around the entrances to the grounds. The country cannot afford to introduce and sustain the beer-garden principle into its greatest industrial and intellectual triumph. Mr. Ostrom's eloquent plea will find thousands of sympathetic responses. It is time that the saloon power should take a back seat.

CURRENT PERIODICALS

Scribner's for August is a "fiction number," a classification adopted, probably, in deference to the depressing heat of the season, when vacation fancies, rather than the heavier studies of the age, are more agreeable, being less heating and oppressive. Octave Thanet begins a new series of Stories of a Western Town—The Besetment of Kurt Lieders, which is copiously illustrated and otherwise attractive. Walter Besant contributes an English sketch—A Riverside Parish, with many waterside illustrations, evidently drawn from real scenes of English life. Mrs. Burton Harrison writes a domestic story in the old-fashioned literary form of correspondence—When the Century Came In. Icebergs and glaciers furnish the material for an interesting paper by N. S. Shaler, with several realistic engravings. H. C. Bunner has a life-like sketch—"As one Having Authority," of an impressive character. T. R. Sullivan furnishes a lively Italian love-story, with an English title—Jack-in-the-Box. The Myth of the Centaur, immortalized by Guerin, forms the basis of a rhapsodical sketch by Mrs. Fields. Other papers are as follows: The Triumph of Marie Lavolette, by Duncan Campbell Scott; Children's Rights, by Kate Douglas Wiggin; How I Sent My Aunt to Baltimore, a true story, by Chas. Stewart Davidson. Historic Moments: Driving the Last Spike of the Union Pacific Railroad, in 1869, by Sidney Dillon, illustrated; with poems by Wm. V. Moody, Edgar M. Bacon, and Anne Reeve Aldrich; editorials, etc. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons. $3.00 a year.

The "midsummer" Cosmopolitan (August) is rich in literature and illustration, variety and interest. A portrait of Henry James, the novelist, graces the frontispiece, and the following list of contents will convey a slight idea of its pretensions to public favor: Salt Water Day, by Hamlin Garland; Bridges and Bridge Builders, by Peter McQueen; The Philippine Islands, by Rufus A. Lane; Memories of Lake Huron, by Clinton Scollard; A California Farm Village, by W. C. Fitzsimmons; Watch and Ward, by Katherine Lee Bates; Anita, by Marjion Wilcox; Jersey Villas, illustrated, by Henry James; After Long Absence, by Lilla C. Perry; The Romance of Gloves, by S. Wm. Beck; Books About German and French Literature, by Brander Matthews; The Confession of an Accomplice, by Mrs. E. W. Latimer; A Sonnet; A Revolution in English Society, by Henry A. Herbert; The Causes of Evolution, by St. George Mivert; Curiosities of Musical Literature, by Alfred Veit; Compulsory Emigration, by Edward E. Hale; The Republican National Convention at Minneapolis, illustrated, by Murat Halstead. Published in New York. $3.00 a year.

St. Nicholas for August—the "vacation number"—is largely given up to seashore scenes, stories and sketches suggestive of ocean breezes, shady nooks and seaside characters. The serials of Tom Paulding, Two Girls and a Boy, When I was Your Age, and Strange Corners of Our Country, are continued. The new monographs of special interest are: Midshipman, the Cat, by John Coleman Adams; Something About Snakes, by Margaret W. Leighton; A Quiet Beach, by W. A. Rogers; How Ships Talk to Each Other, by Capt. Chas. W. Kennedy; "What News?" in Mid-Ocean, by Capt. H. D. Smith; A Fishing Trip to Barnegat, by John Whitehead; the Jolliver's Donkey, by Kate T. Woods; and several minor pieces; all of much interest. New York: The Century Company, 33 East 17th street. $3.00 a year.

The August Historia completes the first half year's issue of this deservedly successful magazine, which, as it grows in age, maintains the promise of its initial number. Both young and old will find it a pleasant companion. The contents embrace, with many engravings: The Shining Rock, by Daniel C. Hutchins; Gaul's Great Patriot, by Jennings H. Mundie; Balboa's Early Adventures, by Alfred S. Hiemans; Columbus (poem), by Chas. B. Soule; A Sixteenth-Century Sea-fight, by Agnes L. Carter; Tales from Josephus—Nero, by Frank G. Soule; Brave Deeds of Diomed, by Henry K. Neele; Fighting the Mexicans, by Lieut. J. Harmon, continued. Chicago: The Historia Co., Chamber of Commerce Building. $1.00 a year.

LODGE NOTES.

(Culled from Secret Society Papers.)

By the insurance code which the New York Legislature has passed, the endowment orders have been placed under the supervision of the insurance department, thus giving them a legal standing.

Of six commanderies of Knights Templar formed in Louisiana, but three remain. This, no doubt, is partly due to the adversity which Royal Arch Chapters in the State have suffered. The prosperity of the former largely depends on the success of the latter.

The leading men in fraternal societies have come to the conclusion that the members cannot be depended upon to do the missionary work. Most of these societies have adopted the special deputy system, that is, putting men in the field whose business it will be to increase the membership.

After eighteen years' successful operation under a level assessment rate for members below 45 years, the Knights of Honor have adopted for new members a graded scale of assessments which is practically their own, the Knights beginning to increase the assessment at thirty years instead of twenty-nine.

On the second Tuesday of August, 1892, the Grand Encampment, Knights Templar, United States of America, assembles in Triennial Conclave in the city of Denver, surrounded by the Templar host. Colorado is co-operating with its capital city to outshine in brilliancy of entertainments any preceding convocation, and we have reason to believe that they will not altogether fail. It is confidently asserted by our hosts that not less than twenty thousand belted Knights of the Temple will participate in the grand escort of the Most Eminent Grand Master.

A simple rule will always show what is and is not a legitimate fraternal society. An organization which has a ritual, holds stated meetings, is governed by officers who work without salary, whose duty it is to visit the sick, relieve the distressed, bury the dead, protect the widow and educate the orphan and watch over the interests of this latter class as though they were members of their own family, without charging or being permitted to receive any monetary compensation whatever, and which promises to pay benefits to its members only in sickness, disability or death, is a "legitimate fraternal society." Any society which has not these regulations or promises more is "something else."—San Francisco (Cal.) Call.

All the beneficial orders are experiencing an increase in the death rate. Where formerly two assessments were sufficient to pay all demands for benefits it is now necessary that three be called. The increase in the number of assessments has checked the growth of the orders so that there is not now the increase that there was formerly. New societies have come in competition with the old ones and have found little difficulty in diverting from them the applications that would have formerly been theirs. If there is no gain in membership the rate of assessments is sure to increase, and in proportion as it becomes heavier the number of men who fall out will increase, and, unless we can offset every lapse and every loss by death by an equal number of new members, we will commence to retrograde.—The Overseer.

During the dog-day season, the drain of nervous and vital energy may be counteracted by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In purifying the blood, it acts as a superb corrective and tonic, and enables the system to defy malarial and other climatic influences.

Removed — every vestige of Catarrh in the Head, no matter how bad the case, or of how long standing, by Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Not only Catarrh itself, but all the troubles that come from it — they're perfectly and permanently cured by its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties.

If you could only be soothed of that, it's enough.

The proprietors of Dr. Sage's Remedy try to prove it to you. They are sure enough of it — a record of 25 years, with thousands of the most hopeless cases, has satisfied them — but how can they prove it to you? There's no better way than with money. So they say this, and they mean it: "if we can't cure your Catarrh, no matter what your case is, we'll pay you $500 in cash. There's a chance that you can't be cured, but it's so small that we're willing to take it."

What more can they say or do to convince you? Isn't that enough?

THE LANDMARKS OF MASONRY.

Either Freemasonry in the United States must be charged with hypocrisy, from its efforts to make it more popular among Christian professors and gain entrance into the orthodox churches, or it is taking unwarrantable liberties with the old established laws and customs of the fraternity, without authority.

The laws, customs and principles of Freemasonry constitute what are classed and known as its "landmarks." These are the things pertaining to the antiquity, real or pretended, of the fraternity. Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, which names and explains twenty-five of these landmarks, says of them: "The first requisite . . . of a custom or rule of action to constitute it a landmark is, that it must have existed from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." Its antiquity is its essential element. Were it possible for all the Masonic authorities at the present day to unite in a universal congress, and with the most perfect unanimity to adopt any new regulation, although such regulation would, so long as it remained unrepealed, be obligatory on the whole craft, yet it would not be a landmark. It would have the character of universality, it is true, but it would be wanting in that of antiquity."

Of those landmarks which are classed as genuine and obligatory in Mr. Mackey's "Text-book of Masonic Jurisprudence," a standard and accepted Masonic authority in the United States, we select, for the purposes of this article, numbers 19, 20 and 25.

"19. A belief in the existence of God as the Grand Architect of the Universe, is one of the most important landmarks of the order. It has always been admitted that a denial of the existence of a Supreme and Superintending Power is an absolute disqualification for initiation."

Thus the religious element in Freemasonry, ancient and modern, is merely "pure Theism," nothing more nor less. In the twenty-first landmark, Mackey refers to the "book of the law" "that shall constitute an indispensable part of the furniture of every lodge;" and he then explains that in all Christian countries the Holy Bible is "the book of the law" in the lodge; in Mohammedan countries, the Koran; and, by implication, in Persia, the Zend-Avesta, and in China, the books of Confucius; all of which, with the exception of the Christian Bible, are based on Theism only.

"20. Subsidiary to this belief in God (G. A. O. T. U.), as a landmark of the order, is the belief in a resurrection to a future life. This landmark is not so positively impressed on the candidate by exact words as the preceding; but the doctrine is taught by very plain implication, and runs through the whole symbolism of the order."

Particularly is it demonstrated in the raising of a Fellow-Craft to the Master Mason's degree, in which the resurrection of Hiram Abiff by "the strong grip of the lion's paw" is, by implication, a blasphemous representation of the final resurrection of the just by the power of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, who only has the power of raising the dead.

"To believe in Masonry," adds Mr. Mackey, "and not to believe in a resurrection, would be an absurd anomaly." But he fails to tell us upon what this Masonic doctrine of the resurrection is founded. Other Masonic authors, quite as proficient as Mr. Mackey, tell us, however, that the order derives it not from Christian doctrine, but from the pagan legend of Osiris. (Ronayne's "Master's Carpet," pp. 373-379.) If there is anything in the above quotations to show that Freemasonry has any affiliation with the Christian religion, except to burlesque it, we have failed to find it.

But to return to the landmarks:

"25. The last and crowning landmark of all is, that these landmarks can never be changed. Nothing can be subtracted from them—nothing can be added to them—not the slightest modification can be made in them. As they were received from our predecessors, we are bound by the most solemn obligations of duty to transmit them to our successors. Not one jot or one tittle of these unwritten laws can be repealed."

If this is so, what chance has the doctrine of salvation only through the crucifixion of Christ, and human faith in him as the Saviour, Sanctifier and Eternal King, for adoption by Freemasonry? Not the slightest. It is pure Theism now, and such it must remain. What sacrilege to call it "the handmaid of religion"—especially of Christianity!

In the Voice of Masonry for July,—a magazine that endeavors, apparently, to elevate the order morally and socially, while it yet clings to the old pagan mysteries and antiquated landmarks of the fraternity—we find an article by John Newland Maffitt, once a noted temperance orator in the United States, but who has been dust for many years, in which the "sublimity of Masonry" is extolled to the skies in the most fulsome language. Maffitt became a Christian, and evidently endeavored to carry Christianity into Masonry and instill its pure principles into the spirit of the lodge, but miserably failed to convert it to the cause of Christ. In this remarkable address he used this language:

"I cannot raise my hand or voice to address, to install, or to admonish a brother, without remembering that Jesus Christ is the chief cornerstone of Free and Accepted Freemasonry, and the keystone of the topmost arch. I look around to read your thoughts. Infidelity is not here. You will therefore sustain me when I say, in God's name, through Jesus the Son of his love, we will this day consecrate ourselves to the sacred and sublime principles of our order, till each member of the fraternity becomes a temple sacred to virtue and the unsullied elements of goodness. This, brethren, is to be Masons indeed, bringing up no evil report to the disgrace of our order—that when we receive the summons from the Grand Lodge above, we may hasten with gladness, clothed in the regalia of the skies, to meet our brethren in the Holy of Holies, to go out no more for ever."

Now, according to the unchangeable laws and customs and "landmarks" of Freemasonry, all this is very un-Masonic; and we do not wonder that in preparing Maffitt's address for publication the editor of the Voice of Masonry designated it as "An unique, sublime and rhapsodical oration." We opine, however, that the editor had a special purpose in reprinting this old document, which was delivered by its author to a Masonic gathering at St. Louis, Mo., February 1, 1841; and that purpose is found in the desire of Freemasons to make church members believe that the fraternity is in harmony with the Christian religion, and so to effect a stronger affiliation between the church and the lodge.

The idea of such a harmonizing of the things of Christ with the pagan worship and mysteries of antiquity is simply preposterous. Either hypocrisy, on the part of Masonry, or a defection of Christian principle, on the part of the church, is involved in any such affiliation. A secret society that is open to all sinners, yet seeks the membership of Christians to give it "respectability" in the eyes of the world, is playing a double part. The very foundations of Masonry forbid any fellowship with Christ, because the bulk of its members may not confess his divinity; hence his name is left out of its rituals, and out of its lectures, and faith in him is not recognized by any of its authorities.

But here is the explanation. The American people are largely believers in the divinity, salvation and mediation of Christ—the only hope of a sinful and dying world. They are mostly a reading and thinking people, and when they come to examine the tenets of Masonry as it is, they find nothing but a pure theism and a rejection of Christ. Hence they become doubtful of its principles. To allay these doubts Masonry is obliged to reproduce anything that seems to cast a ray of Christianity into the gloom and darkness of its chosen mysteries. It is only a trick, however, to entrap those who have been brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord, believing in his Son and his Bible, to mislead them into a belief that Masonry and Christianity are harmonious.

On this subject let us hear the testimony of Col. George R. Clarke, the faithful Chicago evangelist, who gave himself and all that he had to the cause of Christ, and died, the other day, as he had lived, devoted to his Master's service:

"I have been in early life, and am now, a business man. I have been a member of several secret societies. I was a 32d-degree Mason in Chicago before the fire; I also belonged to the Blue Lodge and other intervening orders. I did not leave Masonry because I got out with anybody. I had many warm friends in the lodges; but the fire came and burned up the lodge-rooms. The Blue Lodge to which I belonged was given up, and before the consistory was re-organized, having lost my regalia, and moving out of the city where they had no lodges, I did not reunite with any of the orders. The Lord soon after met me and revealed himself to me, and opened my eyes. For the same reason I was prevented from uniting with my old comrades in arms, in the Grand Army of the Republic. I suppose its objects are in the main good and calculated to help the surviving soldiers of the Rebellion; but I think, though not as harmful as some, it is one of those things which stand in the way of the coming of Christ in the world. Consequently, as one loyal to the precious Son of God who has suffered for us, we must place it with all other secret organizations as harmful and retarding the growth of our religion."

A BIT OF MASONIC HISTORY.

A number of years ago the "W. M." of the Masonic lodge at Chester, Illinois, appealed to the Grand Lodge of the State a case which he stated as follows:

"Two members of the German Lutheran church have for some years been members of this lodge. Last winter they were compelled to make a promise to abstain from paying dues, and from attending the meetings of the lodge, on pain of being excommunicated from the church. At a subsequent meeting of the lodge I got a brother to prefer charges against them, specifying the cause, which the lodge did not sustain, and they remain members, entitled to all the privileges of Masonry."

The decision of the Grand Lodge was: "That in their opinion, Masonry does not assume the authority to hold its members or votaries in affiliation, when such affiliation interferes with their duties to their God, or with the peace of their families; and that such interference is good cause for a Mason to withdraw from a lodge by demit."

Just at present, considering the more intimate relations which exist between certain churches and the lodge, we suppose the church would decide as follows: "That the church does not assume the authority to hold its members or votaries in affiliation, when such affiliation interferes with their duties to the lodge, or with the interests of their families; and that such interference is good cause for a Mason to withdraw from the church by letter."

Neither the lodge nor the church is strait-laced; the membership in both is interchangeable; nobody is obliged to withdraw from either; hence the lodge and the church go hand in hand, and the latter suffers by the partnership.

COLUMBUS AS A MISSIONARY.

The Encyclical Letter of Pope Leo XIII., dated July 16, 1892, and addressed to the archbishops and bishops of Spain, Italy and of the Two Americas, just published, is a remarkable document, principally for the far-fetched conclusions which the distinguished prelate draws of the motives that inspired Columbus to undertake the discovery of an unknown western continent. That Columbus was a true Catholic no one doubts; that he was a shrewd navigator is very evident; that he was a close student of nature and science cannot be denied, and that he was ambitious to make his long-dreamed-of addition to geographical study is matter of history. But that, as the pope asserts, he was impelled to make his first voyage by a missionary spirit, is extremely doubtful. True, Ferdinand and Isabella were Catholic sovereigns, but they were as ambitious to acquire new territory as he was to discover it; and on his triumphant return, the royal banner bore the conspicuous legend: "To Castile and Leon Columbus gave a new world." It was simply a business transaction. They furnished the means, and he did the work. The missionary part of the trade was engineered by the Romish church. Columbus was a martyr; imprisoned, sent home in chains, and ungratefully disgraced by his countrymen. Now, we suppose he will be canonized because Chicago is about to honor his memory with a mammoth show. Saintship is cheap in Italy.

THE "OPTIONS" AND "FUTURES" BILL.

The speech of Hon. W. D. Washburn, of Minnesota, delivered in Congress, July 11, on his bill to prohibit "options" and "futures," or, more accurately, to suppress gambling in agricultural and food products, will amply repay perusal. It shows that here, in Chicago, vast sums are lost and won on the hypothetical sales of grain that is not expected to be delivered, received or paid for. Besides the directly demoralizing effect of such gambling—a corrupting influence that has its parallel only in the Louisiana Lottery—it directly affects the price of grain, and materially interferes with the food supply and the material welfare of the laboring poor. There seems to be no immediate prospect of the enactment of this bill; but surely a just regard for the interests both of producers and consumers, as well as considerations of public morality, demands that those men who interfere with the legitimate operations of commerce, and raise and depress at their will, both the price and supply of food, shall, in some way, be brought to the bar of public authority and be compelled to live honestly.

EDUCATIONAL.

At the recent session of the National Educational Association, at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Hon. Chas. C. Bonney, President of the World's Congress Auxiliary, explained the plans for the World's Congresses of 1893, in connection with the Columbian Exposition. The Association thereupon voted to postpone its annual session of next year and participate in the educational features of the Exposition. Arrangements were also perfected by Mr. Bonney, by which the General Educational Congress will be in charge of the Hon. William T. Harris, Commissioner of Education of the United States, with the special assistance of the executive committee of the association, co-operating with the educational committee of the auxiliary. In addition to this General Educational Congress, in which all the departments of education will be presented in their relations to each other, there will also be special congresses of the faculties of the higher institutions of learning, of the educational authorities of different countries, of kindergarten societies and teachers, of music teachers, of business and commercial colleges, of persons concerned in the education of the deaf, of persons concerned in the education of the blind, of college fraternities, of college and university students, and of representative youth from the public schools; besides conferences on such subjects as physical culture, domestic and economic education, etc.

The College for Women of Western Reserve University, Cleveland, Ohio, under the administration of President Thwing, reports a surprising growth. Established only four years ago, without endowment, occupying hired quarters, and dependent to a great extent upon the voluntary assistance of the Adelbert College faculty for its instruction, it now has a faculty of eighteen members, besides two non-resident lecturers and the instructors in physical culture and music, two buildings just completed at a cost of $90,000, and an independent endowment of over a quarter of a million dollars.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

BOSTON, July 27, 1892.

My valise is packed for a three weeks' campaign in Canada, and I want to send a note of Catap Hebron victory before leaving.

The meetings continued nine days, and every meeting was a perceptible advance in spiritual power on those that preceded it. The general lead of the meeting was more in the direction of home than foreign missions, as last year. Our fellow-workers abroad were not overlooked, and plans were inaugurated to render them substantial aid. Among those ordained by prayer and the laying on of hands to the work of the Gospel ministry was your Washington agent, W. B. Stoddard, who preached and took an active part in the convention. I presented the anti-Christian character of the "secret empire," using my chart. The subject was discussed at the will of those present, and much good was accomplished.

One minister, prominent in evangelistic work, and frequently heard at Old Orchard, applied for a chart with which to present the subject. Another minister who was present has since written for books, declaring his purpose to discuss the subject freely. Two presidents of camp meetings invited me to address their annual gatherings.

These things indicate the drift of thought among really Christian people, and are prophetic of the day of approaching deliverance for the Bride of Christ and the Gospel ministry. There were seceders present ready to confirm the expositions, and others who were not ready to accept Christ and their emancipation papers in the full Gospel of liberty.

God is hastening on the day so long and earnestly prayed for by his people, when the things done of them in secret shall be proclaimed on the housetops.

TORONTO, Can., July 30.—Mrs. Stoddard and our son, W. B., begin a campaign in Northern Vermont this morning. Pray that the work in Canada and Vermont may receive a new impulse and be greatly strengthened by the meeting to be held during the first three weeks in August.

J. P. STODDARD.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

CRESTON.

On the 8th of July I went to Creston and called on Rev. H. L. Matthews, pastor of the Congregational church, who has just removed to the place. He is a reformer, but has so lately come, that he could not inform me particularly of the state of things in the community. So I went to see Bro. H. Buss, who is acting as deacon. He told me that most of the men about Creston were members of some Masonic or Odd-fellow lodge, or other secret societies. I made a brief call on the pastor of the M. E. church and gave him Carradine's celebrated sermon. He said there were more Masons in the Congregational church than in the M. E. church. Mr. Wheeler, who was in the ministry a number of years, but now is engaged extensively in business, I did not see. I understand that he is a Mason. Upon the whole, it is sad to see the citizens of an American town become subjects of a secret empire.

MALTA.

On July 10 I went to Malta and preached for Rev. I. B. Johnston. As he was much occupied watching with his sick family, there was no opportunity for private consultation. In 1858 I labored here as home missionary, and organized the first church in the place, while it was yet a new settlement on the prairie. While I preached here, I was asked to join the Good Templars' lodge: "You are a temperance man," they said, "and ought to be a member." But I refused, saying: "Yes, I am a temperance man, right out in the sunlight; I do not need to go into a secret hole to be a temperance man." They had one of the most profane men to read the prayer at the opening of the lodge. It was not permanent, however; for it blew up suddenly, on account of the secret drinking of some of its officers. The Odd-fellows' lodge here, I think, is not very strong; but there is one sad thing going on. They are getting all the boys, as soon as they become young men, to join the little insurance lodges; evidently, to prepare them to be Odd-fellows, Masons, Knights Templar, etc. Then farewell to the Sabbath-school! and farewell to the Sabbath service! and the church!

DE KALB.

On Monday morning I took the cars for De Kalb. The Baptist minister was not at home. The Congregational minister spoke favorably of the Sabbath and of temperance in the Columbian Exposition. But when Masonry was referred to, he started up and said: "I have no time to talk of things that people know nothing about." I laughed and told him, "You must keep your jewel, of course; but (perhaps) I know more about Masonry than you do, as I heard it given away again and again when I was 13 years old, when a multitude of Masons renounced and denounced it, on account of the murder of Wm. Morgan." This professed servant of Jesus Christ was called to Sycamore, to preach a funeral sermon for a high Mason; and after glorifying secretism, he gave as a reason for so doing, that it was what the deceased friend would like to have him say! The M. E. pastor, to whom I gave Carradine's sermon, was friendly, but reticent about matters of reform. Rev. A. W. Stark, pastor of the Lutheran church, is a firm reformer, to whom I have sent the Cynosure for a year. Rev. G. T. Peterson, minister of the Mission church, is also favorable to the anti-secrecy cause.

CORTLAND.

There is an M. E. church in Cortland, but I did not see the minister, as he does not reside in the place. And there is a small society of Mormons who meet in a little tabernacle on one side of the town. They are said to be followers of Joe Smith, Jr., and anti-polygamists.

S. F. PORTER.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

Will not every friend in Oregon mark the date, AUGUST 23 AND 24 next, as Red Letter days in their calendar. The place of the Oregon District Anti-Secret Convention is CANBY, a few miles from Oregon City. Not only plan to go, but write at once to Rev. S. Mathews, Canby, Oregon, a cheering letter that "We're Coming;" and if you enclose a dollar or two he will see it judiciously used to forward the work.

Let the prayers of all members of the National Christian Association be given to this Pacific Coast Association, and for the success of its Convention, and especially for the health and strength of its aged leader, Bro. Mathews, who is giving so freely of his time and money that his State may be saved from the blight of secretism.

The best of singing is promised, as well as speaking. An opportunity will be given for every one in the five or ten minute addresses, between the set speeches. Rev. M. H. Nichols will be present. The Cynosure readers will rejoice to hear this. I hope his health will allow him to again take up the Coast agency.

Two presiding elders and other able ministers who are strongly anti-secret have promised addresses.

Write down the place and date, and post up in your village as well as on fences. It will do good: ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION, CANBY, OREGON, AUGUST 23 AND 24, 1892.

Twenty years ago I passed through Northern Iowa. Land could then be bought for one-fourth of its present value. Signs of commercial prosperity were numerous. In many towns the low wooden buildings have given place to substantial brick stores, hotels and residences. I was especially pleased to find so many fields of good corn, notwithstanding the excessive rains. It was the boast of the farmers that there is no better country in the world, and having seen the country I believe the boast is not exaggerated.

Another thing worthy of mention, and encouraging to reformers, was the fact that in almost every place there is some church willing to give the truth an open door. In one place it was a liberal U. B. church; in another, a Free Scandinavian; at a third place a radical United Brethren, and in a fourth it was a Baptist church that listened to the history of the revival, in 1717, of EGYPTIAN IDOLATRY under the name of ANCIENT, FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS.

The weather, last week, was extremely hot, and yet the audiences were good, with one exception, and the collections taken at the close of the meetings amounted to $24.23.

Bro. Fenton's addresses were clear, logical, incontrovertible and eloquent, and, in my judgment, did much good. Next week I will try to give the readers of the Cynosure a few words more upon the tour. W. I. PHILLIPS.

The Knights of Pythias, tiring, some months ago, of their old ritual, which has been in print for publication at this office last year, resolved upon a revision of it. To this end the Grand Lodge appointed a committee to perform the work, and it is now in progress at Lima, Ohio. The completed ritual is to be presented to the Grand Lodge at its next session, at Omaha, for adoption.

THE HOME.

A BLESSING IN DISGUISE.

A dense black cloud rolled ominous up the west,
Threatening and vast, and full of darkling ire,
Seeming to hold within its swelling breast
Thunder, and hail and fire.

Down sank our hearts in terror at the sight,
Dreading the deafening crash—the fierce amaze
Of the wide lightning, terrible and bright,
With world-revealing blaze.

Dark and yet darker grew the threatening cloud,
High and still higher rose its greating form;
Flocks huddled silent, and all nature bowed
To meet the coming storm.

Birds hid themselves within the voiceless wood;
The butterfly and bee forsook the bloom;
Even the brook's light laughter seemed subdued
In the prophetic gloom.

One sobbing breath of wind—enough to make
The sensitive waxen cumfrey blossoms fall,
And cause the over-ripened rose to shake
Its petals from the wall—

And then came down the blessing! Not in gleams
Of separate drops, as when scant April shines,
But pouring, plenteous, plashing silver streams
In perpendicular lines.

How beautiful! The earth drank silently
The sweet refreshing, craved so long in vain;
No thunder crashed, no lightning split the sky,
Only the voice of rain.

The headlong, hurrying downfall of the shower
Was heard—one wild, tumultuous, sweeping rush—
Lessening by slow degrees in weight and power,
And then—a sudden hush.

And lo! the clouds grew thin and rolled away,
The darkness fled, the blue sky smiled again:
Refreshed, renewed, looked forth the lovely day,
"Clear shining after rain."

Courage, faint soul! Even in the darkest hours
Let not thy hope depart, thy trusting fail;
The blackest cloud may hold refreshing showers
Instead of fire and hail.

—Elizabeth Akers, in the Christian at Work.

ILL TEMPER.

"Love is not easily provoked." We are inclined to look upon bad temper as a very harmless weakness. We speak of it as a mere infirmity of nature, a family failing, a matter of temperament; not a thing to take into very serious account in estimating a man's character. The peculiarity of ill temper is that it is the vice of the virtuous. It is often the one blot on an otherwise noble character. You know men who are all but perfect, and women who would be entirely perfect but for an easily-ruffled, quick-tempered, or "touchy" disposition. This compatibility of ill temper with high moral character is one of the strangest and saddest problems of ethics. The truth is, there are two great classes of sins—sins of the body and sins of the disposition. The prodigal son may be taken as a type of the first, the elder brother of the second. Now, society has no doubt, whatever, as to which of these is the worse. Its brand falls without a challenge upon the prodigal. But are we right? We have no balance to weigh one another's sins, and coarser and finer are but human words; but faults in the higher nature may be less venal than those in the lower, and to the eye of Him who is love, a sin against love may seem a hundred times more base. No form of vice, nor worldliness, nor greed of gold, nor drunkenness itself, does more to un-Christianize society than evil temper. For embittering life, for breaking up communities, for destroying the most sacred relationships, for withering up men and women, for taking the bloom off childhood; in short, for sheer gratuitous misery producing power, this influence stands alone. Look at the elder brother, moral, hard-working, patient, dutiful—let him get all credit for his virtues—look at this man sulking outside his own father's door. "He was angry," we read, "and would not go in." Look at the effect upon the father, upon the servants, upon the happiness of the guests.

Judge of the effect upon the prodigal, and how many prodigals are kept out of the kingdom of God by the unlovely character of those who profess to be inside! Analyze, as a study in temper, the thunder-cloud itself as it gathers upon the elder brother's brow. What is it made of? Jealousy, anger, pride, uncharity, cruelty, self-righteousness, touchiness, doggedness, sullenness—these are the ingredients of this dark and loveless soul. In varying proportions, also, these are the ingredients of ill temper. Judge if such sins of the disposition are not worse to live in, and for others to live with, than sins of the body. There is really no place in heaven for a disposition like this. A man with such a mood could only make heaven miserable for all the people in it. Except, therefore, such a man be born again, he cannot—he simply cannot—enter the kingdom of heaven; for it is perfectly certain—and you will not misunderstand me—that to enter heaven, a man must take it with him.

You will see, then, why temper is significant. It is not in what it is alone, but in what it reveals. This is why I take the liberty now of speaking of it with such unusual plainness. It is a test for love, a symptom, a revelation of an unloving nature at bottom. It is the intermittent fever which bespeaks the unintermittent disease within; a sample of the most hidden products of the soul dropped involuntarily when off one's guard; in a word, the lightning form of a hundred hideous and un-Christian sins.

Hence, it is not enough to deal with the temper. We must go to the source and change the inmost nature, and angry humors will die away of themselves. Souls are made sweet, not by taking the acid fluids out, but by putting something in—a great love, a new spirit, the spirit of Christ. Christ, the spirit of Christ, interpenetrating ours, sweetens, purifies, transforms all.—Professor Henry Drummond.

THE WAGES OF SERVICE.

"Hard at it planting the garden, I see."

"Yes, uncle," said fourteen-year-old Willie. "I'm bound to succeed this time. Father had his laugh at me last year. I didn't want to go to him and ask about every little thing, so I planted most of the seeds too deep. And just at the time the ground happened to be soaking wet, and when the sun came out it baked it as hard as a brick wherever I had touched it."

"Then you didn't get much of a crop, I'm afraid."

"No, indeed! Nothing came up. But I've been watching other people since, and I've studied the books; so I know now just how and when to do everything. I will conquer. I will make these things grow. I will be master. I will have my way." And he straightened up slowly, pressing very hard with the back of both his hands upon the lumbar regions of his spine.

"Come onto the piazza and rest a few minutes," said I. "I want to talk with you."

Willie readily consented, all the while mopping the streaming perspiration from his face and neck.

"I want to ask you," I began, "what it is that you are so determined to conquer?"

"Why, that garden, of course," he quickly replied. "I want to compel everything in it to grow. No, not everything, for I don't want weeds. But I want to master everything, for I want to tell the weeds that they shan't grow, and the plants that they shall grow. I hate to be mastered by a lot of dumb things, stupid potatoes and the like."

"Bravo, my boy! The ambition to conquer and control, when confined to the prolific principles and the active forces of nature, is noble and proper, because it will lead you almost before you know it into the most eminent position a human being can attain to."

"What is that position, uncle? I want to gain it."

"Why, it is that of being a truly intelligent and willing servant," I answered.

"I don't want to be a servant," said the youth, with a disparaging emphasis on the last word. "I despise the word. I'm going to be master or nothing."

"Softly, Willie! Do you forget who it was who taught the Divine law, that whoever would be chief, must become a servant? Do you know that there is no other way of really becoming master, excepting by a willingness to remain a servant?"

"I don't see how that can be with things in a garden," objected Willie.

"Why didn't your seeds grow last year?" I asked.

"Because I didn't plant them right," he replied.

"Put it in other words, my lad, and it was because you didn't know what they wanted, and consequently you couldn't serve them."

"But I know this year. I've been studying Prof. Gray's book, 'How Plants Grow.'"

"And very likely, after you have learned all their commands, you will be able to obey them much more intelligently than you did last year," I suggested.

"I don't like that way of putting it," said Willie, with a trace of impatience in the tone of his voice.

"Now, young man, take my advice and never quarrel about words. Try to get at ideas that lay back of words. Suppose some man should have all his orders written down in a book. And they should say to you: I'm not to be fooled with. If you expect any pay from me, you must work for it. First, I want you to get my bed ready. You may sweat and almost break your back in doing it, but it must be done! I want you to see that I am provided with plenty of food and drink. I can't do a thing myself. I can't stir or move. You must do everything for me. You must trundle over to me wheelbarrowful after wheelbarrowful of the food I like best. I know you think it is vile, ill-smelling stuff. Can't help that. I must have it. And don't dare to forget that I must have sun-baths most all day long. I know the sunshine makes you puff and sweat when you are attending to me. But I can't let you off. Moreover, I want you to do all the fighting for me. I must insist that you defend me from all enemies and kill and cut to pieces my rivals. Now, Willie, suppose a man should talk to you in that way and you were willing to do your best to obey him, which would you call master and which servant?"

"Maybe you are right, uncle," said he, springing up and preparing to resume work. "You may call me servant if you like, but I'm bound to gain the mastery over that garden."

"I'm glad, my boy, that you are willing to earn the mastery. For mastery is only the pay for service. No man ever became master of nature, without becoming bond-servant to its laws."—New Earth.

A YOUNG AFRICAN HERO.

Some of you have hard words to bear because you love the Lord Jesus. But in some parts of the world people who say they believe in him are beaten cruelly, and even put to death.

In Central Africa, a few years ago, some boys were burned to death by order of the king because they were Christians. Yet, in spite of this, a boy of about 16 was brave enough to wish to become a Christian. He came to a missionary and said in his own language:

"My friend, I wish to be baptized."

"Do you know for what you are asking?" inquired the missionary, in surprise.

"I know, my friend."

"But if you say you are a Christian they will kill you."

"I know, my friend."

"But if they ask you if you are a Christian, will you tell a lie, and say, No?"

Bravely and firmly came the boy's answer: "I shall confess, my friend."

A little talk followed, in which he showed clearly that he understood what it was to be a Christian; so the missionary baptized him by the name of Samwell, which is the same as our Samuel.

The king found him so useful that he employed him to collect the taxes, which are paid in cowries, little shells, which in Africa are used for money.

One day, when he was away on this business, the king got angry with the Christians, and ordered that all the leading ones should be killed. Samwell's name was found on the list. As he came back he heard of the death that was awaiting him. That night, when it was quite dark, the missionary was awakened by a low knocking at the door. It was Samwell and his friends, come to know what he should do. Should he run away, or must he go and hand over the money he had collected? After a silence, the missionary said: "Tell me what you think."

Looking up, Samwell replied: "My friend, I cannot leave the things of the king."

His friends earnestly begged him to fly, but the missionary said: "No, he is right. He has spoken well; he must deliver up the money."

They all knelt down in prayer together, the missionary wondering sadly if he should ever see the young hero again.

"My friend, I will try to start early and leave the cowries with the chief," said the lad, as he set off; "but I fear my carriers will not be ready till after daylight, and if I am seen I shall be caught. Good-by."

But God kept him. He went boldly to the chief's hut, put down the cowries and walked away. He went again a few nights after to tell the missionary, who said: "You ran when you got outside."

"No, my friend, for I should have been noticed at once. I walked quite slowly until I was out of sight, and then I ran as fast as I could, and so escaped."

This is a true story, taken from Mr. Ashe's book, "Two Kings of Uganda." It shows that the love of Christ can make a boy brave to do his duty even in the face of danger and death. "In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence."—Children's Record.

Do we wish to know what God is saying to us? Then let us be still. We must not look to the wind, or the thunder, or the earthquake, but when alone and in silence God will speak to us in a thought, in a feeling, in an impression, that will be a still small voice.—Anon.

A PRAYER.

I ask not wealth, but power to take
And use the things I have aright;
Not years, but wisdom that shall make
My life a profit and delight.

I ask not that for me the plan
Of good and ill be set aside,
But that the common lot of man
Be nobly borne and glorified.

I know I may not always keep
My steps in places green and sweet,
Nor find the pathway of the deep
A path of safety to my feet.

But pray that when the tempter's breath
Shall fiercely sweep my way about,
I make not shipwreck of my faith
In the unbottomed sea of doubt.

I do not ask for love below,
That friends shall never be estranged;
But for the power of loving so
My heart may keep its love unchanged.

For this I count, of all sweet things,
The sweetest out of heaven above;
And loving others surely brings
The fullest recompense of love!

TEMPERANCE.

JOSEPH COOK ON PROHIBITION.

Joseph Cook lectured at Prohibition Park Sunday morning, and notice was given that he would answer at the afternoon meeting questions suggested by the discourse of the morning. After an able lecture in the afternoon by A. G. Wolfenbarger and singing by Miss Lily Runals and Prof. Huckins, Mr. Cook advanced to the front with a hatful of questions, which he proceeded to answer. The first was as follows:

Q. "What is the duty of the Christian voter in reference to the political parties that favor the licensing of the liquor traffic?"

A. "Oh, for consistency!" said Mr. Cook. "I believe in the utterance of the last Methodist Conference and the last National Temperance Society meeting held in Saratoga, which said in substance that, since to license the liquor traffic is a sin, it is the duty of Christians to abstain from voting for any party that favors licensing of such traffic. I do not wear the collar of any political party, nor do I dictate to you how you shall vote, but I declare that as for me I will vote for no party that favors licensing of the liquor business. Were the Christian church consistent, it could end the great evil. There are nearly 5,000,000 Christian voters and 3,000,000 whom these influence, making a total of 8,000,000, or more than a majority of the entire voting population. The continuance of the traffic is a reproach to the church."

Q. "What should be the attitude of a minister whose congregation disapproves of political prohibition?"

A. "Ministers should be as wise as serpents and harmless as doves. They should have great tact; but if after due time such a minister cannot change the minds of his congregation, he should change his congregation. The rule I have made for myself would not permit me to remain pastor of such a congregation after having done my best to convince them of their error and failed. I would regard a continuance in such an error as a sure sign that I could not do these people any good."

Q. "What advice would you give to a brother who belongs to a church where the minister and the entire congregation are opposed to prohibition?"

A. "After due effort to persuade such a minister of the error of this thinking, I would join some other church."

Q. "Is not the concentration of wealth and the consequent separation of classes a greater menace than the saloon or Sabbath desecration?"

A. "The most eminent menace to self-government to-day in this country, is the saloon and Sabbath desecration. The foreigner is largely responsible for the latter."

Q. "How is the mandate 'preach the Gospel' to be harmonized with preaching upon political questions?"

A. "A political question which is also a moral question is part of the essence of the Gospel."

Q. "Do you favor broader suffrage?"

A. "Join to a broader suffrage a law that disfranchises a man who will not vote and it will insure intelligent suffrage; and I will favor the right of women to vote at municipal and all other elections."—Wheaton Flail.

RUM—THE OX THAT GORES.

"If an ox gore a man or a woman that they die, then the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quit. But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman, the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death."—Exodus 21: 28, 29.

This was a law, and the owner of the ox was the responsible party when he knew that the ox would push with his horn. There is now an ox that is goring thousands that they die, and the question is, Do the people know it? If so, who is the responsible party? I believe that their responsibility is far-reaching, as we shall see if we make a proper investigation.

The ox I wish to speak of is doing much damage to the human family financially, morally and religiously. He is known as "STRONG DRINK." He wounds millions annually, and kills thousands, and makes thousands of widows and orphans, causing misery and destruction in thousands of homes. Last, but not least, he is sinking innumerable souls lower than the grave each year.

Shame to that land that boasts of Christian civilization and yet will stain itself with a crime worse than barbarism, and bring other nations also under the bondage of the cruel tyrant, "Rum,"—the ox that gores!

I wish to present a few of the many evils of this curse to humanity which is destroying all that is noble in man, and degrading him below the brute creation, blighting the hopes of wives and children. Statistics show that tobacco and strong drink cost more than all the necessaries of life. Look at these figures and see what the people pay:

Breadstuffs.....	$505,000,000.
Meat.....	309,000,000.
Woolen and cotton goods.....	447,000,000.
Public education.....	85,000,000.
Tobacco.....	600,000,000.
Liquor.....	900,000,000.

The above shows that the cost of tobacco and liquor is one million eight hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars more than is paid for bread, meat, woolen and cotton goods and education. But the expenditure of money is not the greatest evil. The demoralizing influence it has upon those who have been gored by it, both directly and indirectly, is appalling. Not only does it direful influence ruin the souls and bodies of one generation, but untold misery is transmitted from father to son, until we shall become a nation of inebriates, and the wailing of wives and mothers will be ringing in our ears like Rachel weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted.

Sixty thousand people are annually swept into a drunkard's grave, to receive a drunkard's reward. The people know all this, and who is responsible?

1. Our law-makers, for providing a law to license men to deal out death and destruction.
2. Our judges and town councils, for granting license.
3. The men who manufacture liquor.
4. Every one that furnishes material or aid in any way to manufacture.
5. Every dealer or saloon-keeper.
6. All who know that the ox is goring men and don't use their influence to slay him.
7. Every minister who does not cry aloud and give the warning.
8. Those who do not keep away from the ox, but suffer themselves to be gored.

By close investigation we will find that every one, who has a rational mind and don't use his influence to put the ox out of the way, or to slay him, will be more or less responsible. We are commanded to watch and pray, and we should all be watchmen for the Lord. He has given us a sacred trust. The temporal and spiritual welfare of our people should always be kept in view, and the invading foe—whisky—must be guarded against. If we do not watch aright there is no use in praying, as prayer means asking God to help us to do that which we cannot do ourselves, and we are commanded to abstain from all appearance of evil. May the Lord help us to successfully fight, not only the whisky evil, but every other evil in the world, causing the misery and degradation of our people!—William Peters, in the Gospel Messenger.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

Miss Willard said the other day: "There has never been a saloon or hotel bar or a public billiard hall in Evanston. That there is some illicit sale we know, and beyond the four-mile limit the traps are set on every side, but the enforcement of the law is, on the whole, excellent. Our officers favor enforcement; our citizens insist upon it; the W. C. T. U. keeps up the education of public sentiment year in and year out; our White Ribbon Kindergarten trains forty or fifty little people from the least protected homes in the way of total abstinence; the temperance text-book is in our public schools; temperance meetings are often held, and we have some pastors who believe it to be their duty to preach often and boldly on the sin of liquor-drinking, liquor-making and liquor-selling. Real estate men know that it is a good thing financially to have Evanston advertised as a Prohibition town, and school authorities know that it helps our institutions. I believe that no one thing could possibly bring so much sanity, health, happiness, cleanliness, morality and religion to our people as the banishment of grog-shops. But I find the two old parties nationally committed to the liquor system. It seems to me in view of this fact something must give way, and it is natural to work along the line of least resistance, namely: to form the nucleus of a party committed to the proposition, 'the saloon must go,' and to get its materials from among those who are most friendly to temperance and least bound by temperamental and habitual ties to the political armies wherein they have long fought. Therefore, not only in theory but in practice, not only in law but in politics, I propose to do all that lies in my power to build up, not only the sentiment, but the action that controls at the ballot box in the interest of prohibition law, with a prohibiting officer behind it. It is a thankless task, but we have become used to being criticised. We have formed noble and enduring friendships and comradeships among Prohibitionists, so we do not feel at all left out in the cold. We believe we are right in the sight of God and man, and so we go forward with the work we are in. I am a Prohibitionist by ancestry, by education, by observation, by study, by conviction, by experience, by hope, faith and charity. When we know these things, happy are we if we do the a."—*W. C. T. BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

LESSON VII.—Third Quarter, 1892.—August 14.

SUBJECT.—Ananias and Sapphira.—Acts 5: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Galatians 6: 7.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Acts 5: 1-11. T.—Matt. 6: 1-6. W.—Matt. 12: 31-37. T.—Matt. 7: 15-23. F.—Prov. 12: 13-22. S.—Ecc. 5: 1-6. S.—Ps. 139: 1-12.

The latter part of the previous chapter comes between the last lesson and the present one; and for the better understanding of the condition of the church and the circumstances which led to the events now under consideration, verses 32-37 of chapter 4 should be carefully read.

We are to believe that Satan arrayed himself very strongly against the new Christian church that was born on the day of Pentecost; for through his chosen human instruments, the enemies of the Lord Jesus (who ought to have been the earliest and strongest supporters of his kingdom), he began a series of persecutions, with some of which we have already become acquainted, and more of which we shall learn hereafter.

At the end of the fourth chapter, we find the new church, although persecuted, enjoying great spiritual peace and comfort. "Great grace was upon them all," and "neither was there any among them that lacked." Those that had property to sell, sold it and put the proceeds into the common fund, so that all, even the poorest, might share in the necessaries and comforts of life equally with the others. Whatever a Christian gave for this purpose, he gave it with a willing heart and a free hand, as unto the Lord, the giver of life, "from whom cometh every good and perfect gift to the children of men." Selfishness, as in the case of Barnabas, was destroyed within their hearts, "and they had all things common."

It should be understood that there was no compulsion in all this. It was the generosity of true Christianity, welling up from tender hearts, going out in the love of Christ, to meet the love of all others who loved him. They "preferred not one above another;" it was real, earnest church unity.

Satan, it would seem from this account, had not by persecution been able to divide the church and scatter it; but everything, however disagreeable, had tended to strengthen and confirm the disciples in the defence and spread of the truth. Naturally, he felt that he had been foiled; and this led him to attempt another and more subtle method of destroying the church, which is described in the present lesson.

This man Ananias, and his wife Sapphira, who now appear upon the scene—he with a name that signifies "the grace of God," and she whose name means "beauty,"—come suddenly and unannounced to our acquaintance. With what motives they had united themselves to the church, we know not; but with the knowledge that we have of them, we may reasonably doubt the genuineness or thoroughness of their conversion from sin to righteousness. God knew their hearts. They might deceive the people; but God enlightened the apostles, so that they could read the hypocrisy and falsity of this unhappy couple, as from a book.

Well, like others in the church, these two sold a joint possession. It was theirs to do with as they pleased; there was nothing wrong in the act of selling, or of taking the money for which it was sold. It is not recorded that they had told the apostles or others in the church what they proposed to do; but we think there must have been, at some time, an expressed or implied intention to give the proceeds of the sale to the common fund of the church.

But when it was sold, and they had received the payment, the devil (verse 2) cautioned them not to be too generous, but to reserve a part of the money for their own comfort and convenience. The temptation was strong to do so, and they yielded; so Ananias brought only a part of the proceeds of the sale and laid it at the apostles' feet, probably conveying the idea, by prevarication, or otherwise, that no more had been received.

The sin was one of the most awful on record. It was lying to God—as if aught in the universe could deceive him. The Holy Spirit had undoubtedly prompted them to sell their possession and give the proceeds to the church; and, perhaps, at the outset their hearts were fully in unison with this suggestion. Satan, however, as in the case of Adam and Eve, found opportunity to counsel them otherwise, and they had believed him rather than God. They had not "lied unto men, but unto God," and thus heaped upon themselves utter condemnation. Whether they lost their souls in this transaction, or whether the loss of their physical lives alone paid the penalty for this sin, we are not told; but we are told (Rev. 21: 8) that "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." We may therefore justly fear that "He who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell" (Matt. 10: 28) visited upon them the extreme penalty which they deserved. What a fearful warning is this!

The sin was a deliberate one. This is shown in the perfect agreement of both their answers to the apostles. "How is it that ye have agreed together to tempt the Spirit of the Lord?" (v. 9.) No doubt they had studied the whole transaction together in the presence of Satan. But they were no worse than thousands of others who deliberately plan and operate sinfully to defraud and deceive men. The only difference was that they had "lied to God." Men may lie to other men, and the sin is very common; yet, by so doing they greatly offend God, who has promised us (Rev. 21: 27) that there shall in nowise enter into the holy city of the New Jerusalem, the final home of God's saints, "anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie."

Lying is a mean vice. It proceeds from avarice, malice, cowardice, or vanity. It lessens one in his own self-esteem; it makes others afraid to trust him. Confidence is wrecked whenever we find ourselves deceived by those in whom we have trusted as honorable and truthful; hypocrisy is sure to be detected.

Let us ponder upon these things; learn to fear and hate lying; learn to be frank with God and man in all things, and to remember the sudden and terrible punishment which came upon these lying church members.

"Great fear came upon all the church, and upon as many as heard these things." (v. 11.) The awful warning was heeded, the church purified, and God glorified in his power and judgments as well as in his love and mercy.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—Dr. J. D. Fulton in his "Spurgeon Our Ally," rehearses the open communion controversy in Brooklyn in 1874 and calls renewed attention to the strong and wise words of Dr. Edward Bright on the occasion, when he said: "Unless the Baptist church maintain the integrity of restricted communion, it has no mission in the domain of Christianity, or in the sphere of ecclesiastical polity." Every year since that date has been giving its added endorsement to the counsels that then prevailed. —Standard.

—The Baptist evangelist, Aura Smith, attends the following camps: Carthage, Ill., August 3-10; Decatur, Ill., 19-28; Gosport, Ia., September 1-10; Powersville, Mo., September 13-22.

—Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D., was the preacher at the Clarendon Street (Boston) Baptist church, July 17. His additional fame as the stated preacher in the pulpit of the late Mr. Spurgeon was the means of attracting large congregations.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The "Whitecappers," who so terribly castigated Rev. Mr. Van Cleve in Indiana, were chiefly members of his own church. Not content with maltreating him in the most shameful manner, they slapped his wife, and inflicted other indignities upon her. These are strange proceedings, surely, for "the people called Methodists."

—Bishop Taylor either goes without his salary as bishop, or must accept it from a source contrary to his well-known principles.

—Mrs. Emily Huntington Miller has charge of the Woman's club at Chautauqua. The work of the club is conducted under six departments: Household economics, household education, missionary conferences, health and hygiene, social ethics, temperance conferences.

—Twenty Methodists were elected to the new British Parliament. Our English brethren seem to feel it their duty to do something toward cleansing the dirty pool of politics.

—During the past four years Bishop Thoburn has appointed 576 women to work in India.

—Dr. Carradine has gone to Eureka Springs, Ark., to regain his health. He has been suffering greatly with sciatica, brought on by overwork in the cause of holiness.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—Mrs. Frances J. Crosby Van Alstyne, ("Fanny Crosby,") the author of "Pass me not, O gentle Saviour," is now living in New York at the age of sixty-five, and is almost totally blind. She is said to be the author of over three thousand hymns.

—Hiram Camp, of New Haven, who gave the $25,000 with which Mr. Moody erected his famous school at Northfield, has in the last year added $75,000 to the endowment. There have, of course, been other contributions. It is twelve years or so since the school opened. There are now 136 boys in attendance there.

—There are nearly 600 Sunday-schools in Chicago, with a membership of 138,183. The Methodists lead, having 130 schools, with 26,126 members. The Baptists follow, with seventy-three schools and 16,437 members. The Congregationalists are third, with sixty-six schools and 18,619 members, and the Presbyterians fourth, with sixty-seven schools and 16,641 members.

—Rev. Dr. W. H. Milburn, the blind preacher and chaplain of the national House of Representatives, will spend the summer in England. One of his most popular lectures has been, "What a Blind Man Saw in England." He expects upon his return to tell the people "What a Blind Man Now Sees in England."

—Sixty-two business houses of Mason City, Iowa, were closed one afternoon lately on account of a religious awakening. During eight days there were 250 conversions, and the work seemed just begun. Evangelists Munhall and Birch, assisted by Drs. Parsons, Millikan and Johnson, were conducting the work.

—Rabbi Lichtenstein continues his preaching in the synagogue at the Tapio-szele in Hungary, refusing repeated offers made by various denominations to win his services for their respected churches. Many Jewish papers continue to write bitterly against him but have been unable to impeach his high character.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—To secure regular attendance at divine service a Presbyterian church in Lancaster, Pa., decided to give a medal to each person who attended all the services throughout the year. Last year the sexton was the only person who won a medal.

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Annual Meeting of Iowa Classis will be held at Zwingli, Iowa, Thursday evening, September 1, 1892. The S. S. Convention will meet on Wednesday evening previous. A cordial welcome awaits all who will attend.

—Dr. Pentecost, the American evangelist, who went to India a couple of years ago, has returned to London and will make his home in that city. He is occupying the pulpit of the Marylebone Presbyterian church.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

—Notre Dame has conferred the degree of LL. D. on famous Father Lambert, the author of "Notes on Ingersoll," and the Colorado Catholic is about to put into book form the letters which he wrote to the New York Telegram in reply to the same martial infidel.

—The land of Calvin is becoming Catholic. The last Swiss census reports 1,183,828 Catholics; 1,716,548 Protestants; 8,069 Jews; and 9,039 members of other religions.

—The eighteenth annual convention of the Catholic Young Men's National Union will be held this year in Albany.

—The President of the Republic of Liberia recently sent a representative to Rome to ask the Pope to help stop the slave trade and to send more priests to evangelize the natives of his country. An answer has been sent to the President, Mr. Cheeseman, that the Holy See will do all in its power to make of Liberia the center of the anti-slave movement in West Africa, and that more missionaries will forthwith set out for that fallow field.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Synod of Iowa will meet at the "Iowa Chautauqua Assembly Grounds," Colfax Springs, Ia., Aug. 16, at 7:45 p. m. The convention will continue till August 23. The synod will be opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Pres. J. A. Thompson, D. D., or his alternate, Rev. Jas. Parker.

—Synod of Kansas will hold the annual meeting in Forest Park, Ottawa, Kan., commencing August 2 and continuing until August 10. Prof. Wiley, of Monmouth, will lead the singing. Dr. Moorehead, Dr. McCrory, Dr. Witherspoon, and Rev. J. D. Rankin are expected to be present.

—Miss Katherine Hutchison, daughter of Prof. J. C. Hutchison, formerly Vice-President of Monmouth College, has been appointed Professor of Greek in Abbott's Seminary, Andover, Mass.

WESLEYAN.

—Rev. Dr. R. H. Rust has accepted the presidency of Cincinnati Wesleyan College, and will enter upon his duties the coming session.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CANNING FRUIT.

The destruction of germs and the exclusion of air are the principles upon which the canning of food is based, writes Maria Parloa in a seasonable article on "The Canning of Fruits and Vegetables," in the June Ladies' Home Journal. If these things be properly done, no preservative need be added, except to give it flavor. Some substances require long exposure to a high temperature before all the germs are destroyed, while others need only to be heated to the boiling point, and then be boiled for a minute or two. Nearly all small fruits are easily preserved by thoroughly heating, and then canning. The larger kinds require a longer time for the heat to penetrate every part. Some vegetables, such as peas, beans, corn, etc., require a long exposure to a high temperature. Meats are still more difficult to keep, and it is the practice to add a chemical to the water in which the cans stand that the temperature may be raised to a degree even higher than that of boiling water. The essential things in canning fruit are to have the jars and covers hot, and the fruit boiling hot. The jars, also, should stand perfectly level; fill them with fruit and juice, passing a silver knife between the can and the fruit that all the spaces may be filled with the juice. Now pour in syrup until it runs over the top of the jar; seal at once. When the jars are cold, set them in a cool, dry, dark place. Fruit is always better flavored when sugar is put with it; the amount is a matter of taste. To preserve fruit syrups prepare the fruit as for jellies. Strain the juice and put on to boil. To each pint of juice add half a pound of sugar; boil for fifteen minutes, stirring well, bottle and seal while boiling hot.

SUMMER BREAKFASTS.

Easy, comfortable, appetizing breakfast dishes will help. It is best to plan the breakfast exactly overnight, and always arrange it so that the preparation in the morning will not be too burdensome. Simple breakfasts in summer are always advisable, but a pretty, tasteful table is never more grateful than on a very warm morning. Fruit and flowers are the best adornments. A single rose, broken at the window, perhaps, and put in a glass, will give a touch of true grace and refinement that has its effect, even if not immediately appreciated. Fresh strawberries, currants, cherries, or whatever is in season, give relish as well as beauty. Fruit is "gold in the morning," and to many persons never quite so good as at breakfast. The actual cookery should be very light. A little skill will produce variety from the simplest resources; such as these dishes, which may be extended by easy variations to a far greater number:

Corn Omelet.—The first tender sweet corn makes a delicious omelet. Be sure that it is young and tender; score lengthwise and press out the pulp with the back of the knife from four ears of corn. Mix with four eggs, yolks and whites beaten together, two tablespoonfuls of thick, sweet cream, a dash of white pepper or cayenne, and a little salt. Have the frying-pan very hot; melt a good-sized lump of butter and pour in the omelet. Cook with care, folding over as soon as it sets, and dish on a hot platter. Asparagus, green peas, cauliflower, tomato, and various other vegetables are excellently used in the same way for a breakfast omelet in summer, and the little dish left over from the previous day's dinner is often just enough for the purpose.

Timbale of Eggs.—Beat half a dozen eggs, with a little salt and pepper, and half a cupful of rich cream. Bake until it "sets" in a buttered pudding-dish. This is a nice dish of eggs, served, as it should be, with cream sauce, which may be made in two or three minutes if you have a jar of roux on hand. The sauce may be flavored with chopped parsley, mushrooms, or whatever "fine herbs" you have at hand. The timbale may be varied in half a dozen different ways. If you have a little boiled macaroni to mix with it, and also a few ounces of finely chopped ham, you may call it a timbale of macaroni. Bread crumbs may be used to thicken it, with a little cold chicken, finely minced and liberally dotted with bits of fresh butter. It may be steamed instead of baked if the oven is not hot.

Scalloped Tomatoes.—Skin and slice the tomatoes, and arrange in a pudding dish with alternate layers of grated crackers. Season highly, and dot each layer liberally with bits of butter. Shavings of dried beef may be used to advantage between each layer. Pour a pint of sweet cream over all, and bake for an hour. This dish is equally good for dinner; when wanted for breakfast it may be made the day before, and merely heated through in the morning.

Veal Pie.—Cold roast or boiled veal makes a dainty little pie good for breakfast, either hot or cold. Slice the meat off delicately, rejecting every bit of gristle or coarse fat. Simmer the bones in water, enough to cover them to make a little rich stock. Line a pudding dish with pastry, or, if preferred, with a layer of mashed potato or cold boiled rice. Arrange the veal in the center with a few hard boiled eggs, sliced or quartered, or small new potatoes mingled in. Cover, leaving a good opening in the center; fill up with the broth seasoned with salt and pepper to taste, and bake. A salad of lettuce is very nice to serve with this cold pie. When a potato crust is used, it must be well buttered on top and nicely browned, and is better eaten hot.—Country Gentleman.

FARM NOTES.

(From Farm, Field and Stockman.)
AGRICULTURAL.

"Keeping everlastingly at it," brings success in farming as in every other business.

Bisulphide of carbon placed in an open mouthed bottle in the grain bin is a preventive of weevils.

Keep a paint pot in your tool closet and don't be afraid to use it on the tools. Paint is not expensive except where it is not applied and the rust takes hold.

One secret of hard times upon the farm is waste—waste of material and waste of time. Proper economy would make many a hard-run man prosper.

Do you plant corn for the silo? If not, why not? One acre will produce about fifteen tons if well managed, and this is enough to feed five cows forty pounds each for one hundred and fifty days.

One of the most careful and successful farmers we know has a small branding iron and brands his initials on every tool and implement about his place. It is very convenient when one has borrowing neighbors.

A Spokane, Washington, machinist has invented a filling and sewing machine to attach to threshers and elevators and fill and sew the bags of grain. One man with this machine-can, it is claimed, do the work of ten, and fill 4,000 bags a day with ease.

A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer says he sold his first clip of wool in 1843 for thirty-seven and a half cents a pound. Between that and 1850, the price fluctuated between forty and forty-five cents. From 1850 to 1860 it averaged a little over 51 cents.

If you want to haul out some manure, when the hay and grain are out and put away, we would suggest that the timothy meadow is an excellent place for it. If you keep at it industriously you can double the hay crop on that field.

Stock breeding is now more of a business and less of a craze than it was some twenty years ago. We don't hear of any more cows selling at $40,600 as did happen in 1872 at the great Campbell sale at New York Mills, near Utica, in that year.

"Spring poor" is a term applied to cattle partially starved through the winter, and the man with such cows ought to be indicted for cruelty to animals. Poverty is no excuse. The man too poor to keep his stock in good order should sell or give away as many as are necessary in order to keep the rest well.

It is mixed farming, grain-growing, stock-growing, dairying and cattle and hog feeding, that enables farmers to employ help all the year round, and gives to country population its stable and fixed character. It is not a healthy condition of things when the farmer has to work fourteen hours a day for six months and then has nothing but chores to do the other six. The healthy normal condition prevails where there is moderate work the year round and every month's work profitable.

HORTICULTURAL.

Late cucumbers usually make the best pickles.

For fruit trees one pound of poison to two hundred gallons of water is the proper amount.

A good measure of safety against insects which injure the plum trees is to carefully gather all fallen fruit and feed it to the hogs.

Don't be afraid to use kerosene soap emulsion freely on all shrubs afflicted with plant lice. The emulsion kills the pest, both alive and in embryo.

No man ought to be "too busy" to attend the nearest horticultural meeting. He will learn enough in one day to pay for a week's absence.

C. Prusia, Iowa: We know of no remedy so simple and effective for destroying "potato bugs" as Paris green applied by mixing with water at the rate of a heaping teaspoonful to two gallons of water and sprinkling on with a common garden can or a spraying pump.

Mrs. Jennie M. Wilson writes that fruit thinning is the order of the day, and that they look for a bountiful harvest in Oceana county, Michigan.

Don't use too strong a mixture of Paris green or London purple in dusting cabbages. One ounce of poison to one hundred ounces of flour is safe and entirely effective.

Have you cut back your tomato vines? If not and you want a crop of handsome, well-developed tomatoes, do it at once, trimming down to about half the number of buds.

Montana potatoes are fast attaining a world-wide reputation. According to Harper's Magazine they "often weigh three, four and five pounds apiece and are like bags of meal."

The "New Honey" strawberry recently developed from a wild strawberry by S. L. Watkins of Grizzly Flats, Cal., is said to be remarkable for its sweetness, aroma, and prolific bearing.

California horticulturists are looking forward to a prosperous year after the disappointing campaign against grasshoppers last fall. The pests have not returned, and are not likely to.

In a series of recent experiments at the New Jersey experiment station it was established that manures tend to increase soil rot in potatoes much faster than commercial fertilizers. In fact, kainit is looked upon as a partial preventive of soil rot.

Congress adjourned last week, after sitting about eight months. The important measures of public interest which it passed may be counted upon one's fingers, including the infamous Chinese exclusion bill. It did some good, however, in defeating the obnoxious free-coinage act. Altogether it has been a very expensive and not over-creditable session.

Will our anti-secrecy friends in Oregon and Washington be sure and remember the Oregon District Anti-Secrecy Convention, to be held at Canby, a few miles from Oregon City, Ore., Aug. 23 and 24—this month? Those who have not yet written to Rev. S. Mathews, at Canby, commending the effort and enclosing such contributions in its aid as the Lord may suggest, should do so at once. Better still, be sure to be on hand during the convention, and at all times pray for its success.

The troubles in the Roman Catholic church in the United States are creating press comment again. Since the Pope snubbed the Cahensly nationality movement, which proposed German prelates for Germans, Irish priests for Irishmen, etc., he has also brought down ambitious Archbishop Corrigan with his papal gun for interfering with the American school system; and now he has suspended Father Kuhlman of St. Louis, priest and editor, for irregularity in business matters. The appeal to the Pope in the latter case appears to have been made by a German priest from the decision of an Irish bishop. Are we going to have another race war?

Sufficient testimony is at hand to prove that Freemasonry, instead of being "the handmaid of Christianity," as it pretends, is its rival. Says Rev. B. T. Roberts, in the Earnest Christian: "If a minister belongs to a secret society that is a rival to Christianity, that assumes to save the soul, and that rejects Christ, and forbids prayers in its meetings in the name of Christ, is it right to encourage such a minister by going to hear him preach, and paying him money for his support? It is no answer to this question to say that he is eloquent, and benevolent, and entertaining, and kind and polite. Robert Ingersoll has the reputation of being all that." Such a minister is serving two masters. Is he faithful to Christ?

In giving the World's Fair, outright, a bonus of $2,500,000, instead of loaning it twice that amount conditioned on the issue of bonds, or other complications, Congress has bestowed upon the Exposition a material recognition and benefaction that will greatly aid in securing its success. The directory seems to be pleased with the final arrangement, and general satisfaction is expressed. The best of all is, that before the fund could be made available, the closing of the Exposition on Sundays had to be assured beyond a peradventure.

A writer in the New York Voice has found out, what has been variously denied in the newspapers, and even before Congress, that the Chicago saloon-keepers favored the opening of the Columbian Exposition on Sundays. Said one: "If the Fair is closed people will not stir about the city so much; at least they will have no particular object in coming down town; while if it is open the people from the North and West sides of the city will have to come down town on their way to and from the Fair, and all of them will have to change cars. This will make a tremendous crowd in the business part of the city, and of course will make our Sunday sales run up to very much more than on week days." Evil as it is, this is the natural conclusion drawn from the premises, and indicates that the saloon-keeper understands his reprehensible business.

The more the strikes, lockouts, dissatisfaction and rioting in Pennsylvania are considered from a cool, calm and deliberate point of observation, the more strongly do the evils of the secret lodge system appear in the lime-lights of reason and truth. Look at these labor troubles, stripped of all their verbiage and shams, laying aside the prejudices and falsity that they engender, and what are they? Take the labor unions, with their desire to rule the business of men who employ their members—look upon them as combinations rejoicing in the wrong principle, and no other, that "in union there is strength"—advocating nothing but their own exclusiveness and right to labor at their own fixed rates, without the least regard to the right of all other men to labor when they can, and for such wages as they please—and we have prominent that dangerous monstrosity—a tyrannical empire that defies law, liberty and Christianity in a country whose government is founded upon these very elements of personal freedom. Well does the Christian Conservator remark: "These outbreaks, murders and inhuman atrocities of secret orders tell the fact that they are unsafe in any government, and deserve to be suppressed for the public good."

Troublous times are evidently brewing in the Southern States. In Alabama a secret oath-bound society—the "Knights of the White Shield"—numbering many members, has recently been organized, with the avowed purpose of maintaining, at all hazards, the supremacy of the whites in all matters political and social. On the contrary, the New Orleans Tribune, received this week, announces that the Negroes are banding themselves to secure the lives of Negro prisoners in Kentucky and Florida. The formation of these antagonistic and unlawful combinations must result disastrously, in any event, but certainly to the Negroes, if they resort to violence in their own behalf, owing to the immense disadvantages under which they must suffer in any such contest. Before Congress can again convene to avert it by proper legislation, the crisis may be reached and the South become once more a field of blood.

While affairs have been apparently quiet at Homestead, Pa., during the past week, there is undoubtedly an implacable spirit of resentment harbored by the striking ironworkers against the business interests of those by whom they were lately employed. The presence of the State troops has, without doubt, prevented any open outbreak against either the mill-owners or the non-union men who have been secured to fill the places of the strikers. Mutterings of vengeance as soon as the troops have been withdrawn have been heard; and the situation, on the whole, is not encouraging for peace except under military restraint. As an indication of the spirit which pervades the trades unions, and which is emphasized by the situation at Homestead, there was an angry meeting of the Trades Assembly in this city, last Sunday, at which it was decided to boycott all manufacturing institutions that refuse to recognize the trades unions. This action had a special reference to the refusal of the principal bakeries in Chicago to paste the union labels on their products. Indeed, the proceedings throughout were anarchistic, as failing to recognize the rights of employers to transact legitimate business without interference from irresponsible, oath-bound artisans.

The Voice of Masonry, which in its July number printed John N. Maffitt's oration on the "Sublimity of Masonry" (1841), from which we quoted last week, has, in its August issue, another old Masonic oration, delivered in 1839. Are we to believe that there are no Masonic advocates, in 1892, who are able to vindicate the cause of Masonry as well as those of the last generation—the orators of 1839 and 1841? We believe there are just as honest, just as talented men in the lodges to-day as there were in the earlier years of this century. But the times (or the orators) appear to have changed, even as some of the churches and the preachers have "modified" their Christianity under the influences of the lodge. Maffitt spoke nobly of Jesus Christ in connection with Masonry, and the Voice of Masonry called his oration "rhapsodical." The Mason whose address is printed in the August number praises the "brotherly love" taught by the Saviour as a model for Masonic brotherhood. This may do well to tickle the itching ears of Masonic church-members who wish to entrap the unwary into the lodge; but "Jesus," "Christ," "Jesus Christ," and the "Saviour" are names tabooed in the lodge by antiquated landmarks and customs, and are never used in lodge rituals and lectures. He never belonged to the lodge. Hence any allusion to him is un-Masonic or designed to deceive some one into a belief that Masonry and Christianity can by any possibility harmonize.

MORE MYSTIC SHRINE SECRETS.

ORIGIN OF THE ORDER AND ITS RITUAL.—ITS OFFICERS, RANK AND PLACE.—DRESS AND JEWELS.—ENTHRONEMENT.—RITUAL OF OPENING CEREMONIES.

The Nobles of the Mystic Shrine who saw themselves in these columns last week, says the New York Sunday Mercury, became pretty well convinced that the Mercury had "got on to them;" but still some of them pretend to hold that the ritual, as published two weeks ago, was not the genuine one in use now. As this subject has caused great interest all over the country, and is one of the questions of the day that should not be left undecided, the Mercury herewith supplies the balance of the proof, and challenges Dr. Walter M. Fleming, Speaker Husted, Police Justice Gorman, Inspector Williams, Jake Shipsey, or Joe Kay, to deny that the following is the title-page and the official account of the origin of the "Ancient Arabic Order," as given by Dr. Fleming, "Sovereign Grand Inspector-General A. and A. Rite, and Eminent Commander of Columbia Commandery No. 1., Knights Templar, New York:"

Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

ORIGIN.

The Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine was established at Mecca, Arabia, in the year 5459 (in the year of our Lord 1608). The ritual was compiled, arranged and issued at Aleppo, Arabia, by Louis Maracci, the great Latin translator of Mohammed's Alkoran.

The order was revived and instituted at Cairo, Egypt, in 5598 (equivalent to June 14, 1837).

This order was primarily instituted for the purpose of promoting the organization and perfection of an Arabian and Egyptian Inquisition, or vigilance committee, to dispense justice and execute punishments upon criminals whom the tardy law did not reach to the measure of their crime.

Being designed to embrace the entire pale of the law, and composed of the sterling men of the day who would fearlessly try, judge, and, if convicted, execute the criminals within the hour, leaving no trace of their action behind, the organization was perfected and carried into execution, with startling results.

It is said to be an organization fac simile of the vigilance committee which did such service and struck such consternation and alarm to the hearts of the abandoned in California, some years since.

Temples were also instituted in various cities throughout Europe, some years ago. Although possessing all the powers and material of the Inquisition, if required, they still continue to thrive as charitable and social organizations, as well as being inquisitors upon the flagrant outragers and desecrators of Masonic vows.

In 1871 the ritual was brought to America by one of the transient foreign members and representatives, and placed in the hands of Dr. Walter M. Fleming, 33d degree Sovereign Grand Inspector-General A. and A. Rite, and Eminent Commander of Columbia Commandery No. 1., Knights Templar New York.

Dr. Fleming, having absolute authority in America (in conjunction with William J. Florence, 33d degree, together with Edward Eddy, 33d degree, S. C. Campbell, 33d degree, Oswald Merle D'Aubigne, 33d degree, G. W. Miller, 33d degree, John A. Moore, 33d degree, William S. Patterson, 33d degree, John W. Simmons, 33d degree, Albert P. Moriarty, 33d degree, and nearly all the Knights Templar), instituted a temple of the order, in New York, of the Mystic Shrine. Brother Fleming was unanimously chosen as its presiding officer,—namely, Grand Potentate. Owing to the death of four of the original twelve, namely: Brothers D'Aubigne, Chappell, Campbell and Eddy, and the apathy and neglect of the remaining eight, Mecca Temple of New York remained inactive until December, 1875, when the work was revived and the order spread by Mecca Temple, the legally authorized possessor of the ritual.

On June 6, 1876, the parent body was formed for America, entitled "The Imperial Grand Council of the United States of America," and its officers were elected for the term of three years.

For full particulars of government, see the statutes and regulations of the Imperial Grand Council.

The Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine is said to have been organized under the creed of the Alkoran, or the Koran, of Arabia. First, because of the Mohammedan faith; second, to divert attention from its true purpose, ostensibly by promoting a perpetuation of the Arabic and Mohammedan faith; third, to render it attractive and impressive by its weird and mysterious symbolism.

For full particulars of Arabic faith, histories, etc., see Sale's Koran.

When brought to this country, it was deemed expedient to place it in the hands of Freemasons only, as had been done in Europe, and it was so resolved. Owing to the fact of the Masons being regarded as a choice of the best men in the land and already having passed the ordeal of obligation, the Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine would be safer with them than with the general run of unobligated masses, and it could be made, if necessarily required, a Masonic Inquisition.

It was then decided by the proper authorities to make a Knight Templar, or a 32d degree Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Mason, the prerequisite for membership in America; and to make it a charitable and social organization, devoted to the welfare of Freemasonry, which was ratified at the organization of the Imperial Grand Council of the Order.

The fee for initiation was placed at ten dollars as the minimum sum, and the dues in the subordinate bodies at not less than two dollars annually.

But one objectionable vote, or black bean, is required to reject a candidate for the term of thirteen weeks.

ENTHRONEMENT.

Previous to the enthronement of a Potentate-elect, the Imperial Council requires his assent to the following ordinances, viz.:

1. Do you solemnly vow, upon your honor, that you will exert your best endeavors to promote the true happiness of your brother Nobles of the Mystic Shrine?

2. That you will endeavor to promote the general good of the order and preserve the solemnity of our ceremonies with profound respect and reverence?

3. That you will not acknowledge, or have intercourse with, any Temple which does not work under constitutional authority, as recognized by the Imperial Grand Council?

4. That you will ever maintain and support the authority of the Imperial Grand Council of the United States, and enforce obedience to its statutes, edicts and regulations?

Do you submit to all these ordinances, and promise to observe and practice them faithfully?

SIGNS AND PASSWORDS.

The sign of salutation upon entering and retiring is given before the altar: Bow low, and extend the arms from the shoulders directly towards the East, forming the "salaam," and nearly touching the open thumbs beyond the top of the head—the Turkish or Arabic bow of obeisance.

The secret pass at the door, given through the wicket, or door, to the Captain of the Guard, is Molay (given in a whisper). The Mystic password inside, on opening, or the inner secret pass is Noble (given also in a whisper).

TEMPLE FURNITURE.

Furniture similar to Masonic, with additions, but covered with black alpaca or white edged, with purple and blue.

OPENING THE TEMPLE.

All assembled—temple tiled—opened.

Grand Potentate, with blow of the gavel, or sceptre, calls to order and speaks as follows:

"Chief Rabban, that no interloper or spy may intrude upon the ceremonies of our Mystic Shrine, it is my command that you summon your proper officers and receive from them our mystic pass; disperse them with alacrity in and about our Temple, to receive the same from all within our portals, and communicate to you, that you may give me the assurance that no ignoble here intrudes."

Chief Rabban raps twice and says:

"First and Second Ceremonial Masters, approach."

They arise and approach the East.

"Have you your Mystic pass?"

First and Second Ceremonial Masters.—"Chief Rabban, we have."

Chief Rabban.—"Approach and give it."

First and Second Ceremonial Masters approach, and each whispers "N. . . ." (Noble).

Chief Rabban.—"It is the command of our Grand Potentate that you forthwith receive the mystic pass from each and every one in or about the body of the Temple, and return the same to me, that I may give assurance that no ignoble spy intrudes upon the ceremonies of our Mystic Shrine."

First and Second Ceremonial Masters, each one side of the Temple, receive the mystic pass, "N. . . .," in a whisper, and, returning, communicate the same to the Chief Rabban; if one be present without the pass, the C. M. announces aloud: "An intruder!"

Member arises, is vouched for, or expelled.

Chief Rabban.—"Grand Potentate, our Mystic Shrine is secure and free from jeopardy; there are none present save Nobles of our rite."

Grand Potentate, to Assistant Rabban.—"Assistant Rabban, inform the Captain of the Guard, and he his comrade, the Outer Guard, that our Temple is now duly and regularly opened for the business and ceremonies, and both take heed who enters."

Captain of the Guard informs the Outer Guard as above, and reports (after closing the door):

"Noble Assistant Rabban, our Outer Guard stands instructed and under double guard, picketed by a tried and trusted officer without, one who knows his duty, vigilantly assisted by the Captain of the Guard within."

Assistant Rabban.—"Illustrious Grand Potentate, our sacred Temple is under a double and trusty Guard."

Grand Potentate.—"'Tis well. Since all present are Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and our Temple securely guarded, I proclaim this Temple regularly open for business and ceremony, and hereby forbid all confusion and discord that may mar our mystic rites."

Regular business is now in order, as usual in all such bodies conducted on Parliamentary law and rules. If an initiate presents himself, the Recorder and Treasurer discharge their duties respectively.

The remainder of the ritual has been printed in the Mercury and Cynosure verbatim.

PRIZE ESSAYS AT BEREA COLLEGE.

NATURE AND INFLUENCE OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

Below we print two prize essays by students of Berea College. A certain sum of money was set apart by the estate of the late Philo Carpenter to advance the cause of anti-secrecy in connection with Berea College, in Kentucky, and prizes were offered, open for competition to all the students.

A committee of the Faculty awarded the first prize to Mr. James Bond, and the second to Mr. P. A. White—both colored students. President Stewart sends these essays to the Cynosure for publication, and we are sure that our readers will be glad to give them a careful perusal.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.

BY JAMES BOND, B. S., BEREA COLLEGE, KY.

All benevolent and praiseworthy institutions, institutions seeking the highest good of society and the glory of God, should receive the sympathy and support of all. That secret societies do not aim at this is evident from their nature. The word "secret" carries with it one of the strongest proofs of their selfish nature, refuting their claims as benevolent institutions.

True benevolence, in its sweep, takes in the world. It recognizes no classes, no conditions and is bound by no lines. Secret societies, on the contrary, are organized for the sole benefit of the "brotherhood." The obligations to succor and help go no farther than their own members. Those who are not initiated into their secrets have no claim upon their benevolence, and those who have, pay dearly for it. What are these societies doing for their own members, in the way of financial return, for the large and constant sums paid into the treasury as tax-dues, etc.? If it be considered a sufficient compensation to have a motley crowd follow one to his grave and scatter a few sods on one's lifeless body as it is placed in its last resting-place, and utter some unintelligible and often blasphemous phrases, instead of the ceremonies of a Christian burial, then the members of secret societies are supremely blest. If this be not considered a just return, then there is none.

If they are of a benevolent character, why is secrecy so strenuously maintained? Why enjoined by oaths with such horrible penalties attached? "Men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

The selfish spirit of secret societies is shown in the oaths, as illustrated by those of Freemasonry. They are intensely selfish. It is his "brother" that a man swears to aid. It is his "brother" whose interests he swears "to advance by always supporting his military fame and political preferment in opposition to another." It is to his "brother's" domestic circle that he swears never to bring dishonor,—as if that obligation did not already exist, and when made did not extend beyond his "brother's" family!

But these oaths are not only selfish in their nature; they are blasphemous in the extreme; the candidate calling upon God to witness as he invokes as a punishment for the violation of his oath, the most horrible penalties—penalties which can never be inflicted, and which, if inflicted, would in their barbarous nature put to shame the most savage tribes of Africa.

Freemasonry, by far the most powerful of secret societies, and one from which most others have sprung, claims for itself the name of a religion, and is thus hostile to the religion of our Lord. It is universal in its character. The Mohammedan, the Christian, the infidel—all bow at the same altar and are addressed as "brethren." With a single stroke it breaks down the partition between Christians and the world, making them one in a common brotherhood.

Institutions so grossly selfish and hostile to the Christian religion cannot but be dangerous in their influence. There are three fundamental institutions given of God to mankind—the family, the church and the state. All these institutions are crippled and endangered by secret societies. In prevailing secret societies women are excluded and the secrets kept from them. Secrets there should be in a family, privacy upon which the world should not gaze; but there should be no secrets between man and wife, and where there are, confidence, so necessary to a happy and harmonious family, is lacking. The lodge draws the husband and father away from home, monopolizing the time that should be given to his family. Like a chill frost, it strikes the affections of the home and they fade. Oftentimes the family is robbed of the necessaries of life in order to meet the dues and taxes of the lodge.

Again, secret societies are baneful in their influence upon the church. An institution hostile to the religion of Christ is of necessity harmful to his church. The lodge destroys "unity in the body of Christ" by dividing Christians by means of orders and secrets. Lodges occupy the time and social feelings of the Christians who join them, and leave little time or disposition for church meetings. A spirit of worldliness is brought into the church, weakening its influence. "No man can serve two masters; for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." Lodges often intimidate the ministry by agreeing to withhold their support until the minister yields to their demands and consents to tolerate, and even to countenance, the order and its worldliness.

The influence of secret societies is not less harmful to the state than to the family and church. In a republic like ours it is of the utmost importance that every citizen be free in forming his opinions, and untrammelled in expressing them. This is defeated by secret societies; for the members agree "to yield their private judgment to that of the lodge." They have no opinions that are not subject to, and may not be overruled by it. They are bound by their obligations and oaths, and pass from freemen to slaves—slaves whose master's command is law. It is the object of good government to administer justice to all its subjects, but through the influence of secret organizations this object is often thwarted.

The judge, the juror, and the voter, the three most important factors in our government, are influenced in their decisions and actions by these secret organizations. The Grand Army of the Republic, Knights of Labor, etc., by their secret and organized action, exert a powerful influence in politics, often controlling local and sometimes national elections. Men are chosen not for their ability and honesty, but because they happen to belong to the order. As a result, the most incompetent and unscrupulous are often elected to fill offices of importance and trust, while able and public-spirited men are as often put aside. Many of these societies are hot-beds of anarchy, lawlessness and crime. The disturbance at Chicago, and the more recent New Orleans trouble, are but outbursts of the smoldering fire fanned into a flame by the intrigues of secret orders.

The arguments against secret societies may be summed up as follows: They are selfish in their nature, hostile to the religion of Christ, and are dangerous in their influence upon the family, the church and the state.

BY P. A. WHITE, BEREA COLLEGE, KY.

Secret societies are associations of persons whose rules, government and internal works are, wholly or in part, kept hidden from the knowledge of persons not connected with the societies. Their proclaimed object is to care for their needy and helpless members, provided the members are not in debt to the society at the time they ask aid from their respective lodges. If, when a member of a secret society dies, he is square in his accounts with the treasurer of his society, the society in almost all cases attends to his burial and pays all the funeral expenses. Some secret societies, at the death of a member, according to their law, give to the wife, husband, children, or to whomsoever the member chooses to will it, a sum of money, which, of course, in amount, differs in different societies.

This is called a bounty, and is given for the support of the receiver. It is the duty and proclaimed object of secret societies to administer to the wants and comforts of their needy and helpless members, whether sick or otherwise physically disabled. All members are required to pay a regular tax for the support of the society; and additional taxes and fines are imposed as the demands and cases require.

Often the society demands for money from each member are very great. It matters not how much money a member has paid into his society, nor how great his need, if he owes the society the least amount, it is the rule to let him have no aid. The rule is promptly followed. Some, and perhaps the most strong and independent, societies are even secretly pledged to assist and do assist their members to escape the penalty of the law for crime committed by them. A person becomes a member of these societies upon oath or affirmation that he will by no means divulge any of the secrets of the society to outside persons. The penalty of revealing secrets of the society ranges from severe reprimand to a most horrible and cruel death.

Such in part is the nature of secret societies.

The influence of secret societies is, according to my observation and judgment, on the whole, injurious to the highest good of man. While it must be conceded that secret societies often do quite a deal of good for the needy of their members, yet a little reflection will show that their influence, on the whole, is derogatory to true happiness and prosperity. The influence exerted by secret societies amounts to the gathering into their pale, every year, thousands of persons.

In all the towns and cities in the country, secret societies are springing up like mushrooms. Observation has proved to me that large numbers are influenced to join these societies. They are, so to speak, carried away by the clamor of those who allege the so-called "good work" of these societies. Now, if the work of these societies, on the whole, is good, their influence in bringing persons into their ranks is good. If their work is, on the whole, bad, their influence is bad, and therefore injurious to the good of man. Let us, then, with unbiased feelings look at secret societies and their work.

The word "secret," used in connection with these societies, naturally suggests to the mind of right-thinking people the idea of darkness, wrong-doing—impose work. All good should be brought to light that people, by it, may be influenced for good. Then, if in their secret work these societies are doing good, they make it wrong by not bringing it to the light that it may influence others to do good. Christ said, "I ever spake openly in the temple, and in secret have I said nothing;" and, again, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." (Matt. 5:16.) We cannot let our light shine before men when we work in secret. If our deeds are evil, it is natural for us to keep them in the dark—secret; if good, to bring them to light. May this not be true of secret societies?

If they are doing good in their secret work, are they not defying the command of Christ by keeping their light under a bushel?

When we fail to adhere to his commands we do wrong, and our influence is wrong in the work in which we disobey.

Again, I know by observation that members of secret societies who are members of the church will utterly neglect their Christian duties to attend to less important society affairs. Is this not injurious to their highest good?—neglecting the work of God?

Some secret societies are pledged to assist their members to escape the penalty of the law, if at any time they should commit a crime; and at the same time it might be the will of heaven, and for the safety of the people, that the offender be punished.

Thus they encourage and protect crime. Can the influence of such societies be for good? Nay, verily—most assuredly, for wrong.

Since, then, in so many cases they are wrong, how can their influence be otherwise than bad—injurious to the good of man? A fountain can not at the same time send forth sweet and bitter water.

THE BING HONG TONG OF HIGHBINDERS.

As heretofore duly recorded in the Cynosure, there was (a few months ago) an attack made upon this infamous secret Chinese society in the city of Sacramento, California. Carefully laid away in a huge safe in the Sacramento police station, says a later dispatch, are the records and books of the Bing Hong Tong of Highbinders. They were seized shortly after the recent outbreak in which two Chinese were killed and several wounded. The capture, it is thought, is the first step in the direction of breaking up these villainous organizations.

DARK SECRETS EXPOSED.

For the first time in the criminal history of the State have the police been able to obtain even a glimpse of the dark secrets of the Highbinder Associations. With these records in their possession the police have hopes of ultimately running down the hired assassins whose bloody deeds have added another chapter to the criminal history of California.

Through the instrumentality of peaceable Chinese, Officers Higgins and McManus, of the Sacramento police force, recently located and seized the records of the Bing Hong Tong. The documents were found secreted in an unused stove, evidently having been deposited there a short time prior to the resumption of hostilities. When it became known that Higgins had taken possession of the records of the society the Highbinders held a secret meeting and decided to kill him. Before they had a chance to carry their purpose into execution, however, they were either jailed or driven from the city.

The records show that the Highbinders are banded together solely for the purpose of robbery, extortion and murder. When a Chinese is doomed the "executive committee" holds a meeting and sticks marked with Chinese characters are given to each member. The Chinese who receives the stick, which is known as the "bloody mark," must, in a given time, kill the Chinese designated by the "chairman" of the committee. If he should fail in making the intended victim a subject for the coroner his life is duly declared forfeited.

A few days prior to the recent Chinese murders in Sacramento the "committee" met and selected one of its members to kill an inoffensive cigar-maker named Lee Gong. He had incurred the enmity of the Highbinders by refusing to submit to their blackmailing methods. As the victim was playing with his two children the hired assassin shot him through an open window. The bullet passed through his body and he expired on the spot. Through the efforts of a rival organization his murderer was arrested and is now awaiting trial for murder. It has since been learned that the murderer was a member of the "executive committee" and had received the "bloody mark," with instructions to kill Lee Gong. If he had neglected to kill his victim he would have been promptly put to death.

A TERRIBLE OATH.

The oath which is required of the Chinese as they become members of the society is the most terrible that could possibly be devised. The new member kneels before a shrine and, amid a mass of smoking punks and dimly lighted candles, he swears to commit murder whenever called upon.

As near as can be translated, it reads:

I (giving the name) enter the Bing Hong Tong and promise to regard each member as a brother and the closest relative I know. If called upon by our society on necessary business I will not inquire whether it is concerning any relative of mine, whether he is of my family name, or whether he be my brother, but I promise to go out into the street and fight and fire pistols. I will obey all signs or signals of the high men in our society and come up to help whenever called on to fight, no matter if the enemy is of my family name. I will never betray our society nor tell our signs, and if anyone does so I will kill him in the street or in some outside place. I will work for our society so we will make plenty of money and go to China, to the land of our ancestors. I know that if I refuse to fight when ordered the great god

Shing will punish me, and I am afraid of being punished by him.

After the applicant repeats the oath he is admonished that if he betrays the society his doom will be swift and terrible. If he keeps the obligation, however, the great god Shing will protect him.

The by-laws of the society are printed on large red sheets of paper and are very explicit. Among the rules is one requiring each female slave living in houses of ill-repute to pay $2 per month toward the funds of the society. If she refuses or neglects to pay the amount her master must suffer the consequences. The punishment may be complete ostracism or perhaps death. The woman, also, may be killed if the "executive committee" deem it proper. The by-laws also contemplate that all fan-tan games must be assessed. The members of the organization can walk into the gambling den, and if they lose their bets they are at liberty to pick up the stakes and decamp. When they play a winning button, however, the dealer must pay the bet. If the "sure thing" gamblers are molested by the dealers they are justified in shooting down those who do so. Immunity from arrest is promised by the society.

If a Chinaman contracts to work for $1 a day and another contracts to work for 1 cent less, the latter is at once condemned. It is at the discretion of the "executive committee" to reverse the judgment and compel him to pay a larger sum of money to the society.

According to the account of the organization the "hatchet men" are allowed $1 per day for expenses. They are especially enjoined from smoking too much opium or drinking Chinese gin.

The letters which were seized with the records show that the society has branches in nearly every city in California. When any serious trouble arises the "executive committee" is notified, and if assistance is needed the Highbinders are immediately sent to the scene.

THE DEMAND FOR MURDERERS.

The following letter sent to the "high man" of the Bing Hong Tong demonstrates the feeling which exists among the branch organizations:

LOS ANGELES, April 8, BING HONG TONG:—We want more men in Los Angeles to fight. Kill more Hop Sing men. Lots of Gee Hong Kong to be killed. We are going to fight some more Gee Hong Kong men. After we get through with murder case we will kill all Gee Hong Kong men.

The murder case referred to resulted in the conviction of the two murderers.

As an incentive to commit murder the association offers a reward of $300 for the killing of any member of a rival organization. It is thought that the recent battle was caused by the branch in San Francisco. The "high man" of this society urged the Sacramento Highbinders to murder the members of the Gee Hong Kong. The San Francisco organization had selected their victims, as is shown in the following letter received by the Bing Hong Tong men:

SAN FRANCISCO.—Bing Hong Tong men, you will kill Chee Hung Kung men. Kill You Kee, Lee Gong, Lee Yee, Mung Pock, Sneang Lee, Fong Ah Ling, and will pay you $300 for each man killed, to be paid by Ching Hing and Luey Dock, San Francisco.

BING HONG TONG COMPANY BOSSES.

And another letter signed by the same Chinese asks if the Sacramento Highbinders need more men. The writer states that he will send fifty to the capital city on the next steamer. He also advises the fighters to kill all they can.

Chief Rogers is determined to rid Sacramento of the Highbinder element. He has notified them to leave the city immediately under penalty of arrest. It is thought that by this means further bloodshed will be averted.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 3, 1892.

Congress and the people of the United States, not to say of the world, might have been spared the shameful and disgraceful spectacle which some misguided people, including members of Congress, appear to regard as a huge joke, presented by a special committee of the House of Representatives publicly engaged in investigating a charge made by a member of that body alleging that he had seen other members on the floor in a beastly state of intoxication, and that drunken members had made maudlin speeches on important public matters, if no intoxicating liquors had been allowed to be sold in the House restaurant. Members of Congress who testified before this committee, although generally disposed to shield one particular member whose name had been mentioned, all agreed in saying that they had seen intoxicated men upon the floor of Congress. The committee might have been instrumental in bringing about an actual prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the House restaurant, instead of the present hypocritical pretense of not selling it, while furnishing it to all who are willing to pay for it; but it positively declined to hear testimony concerning the sale of liquor in the House restaurant, on the plea that it was beyond the scope of the investigation the House had directed the committee to make. Excuses are always handy for those who do not wish to do a thing. To stop the sale of liquor in the Capitol building would not, of course, make temperance men out of those who are disposed to be intemperate, but it would remove the temptation to drink during the daily sessions which now exists, and would be a valuable aid to temperance workers as an object-lesson, showing the sympathy of the legislative branch of the national Government with the temperance cause.

On the 2d day of August, 1842, the first Tent of the secret order of Rechabites was organized in the United States, New York City being the place chosen for the introduction of this temperance fraternity, which it was alleged was to accomplish much good; but what benefit it has ever been to the cause of temperance is wrapped in obscurity. This week members of the order are holding a semi-centennial celebration in this city. Among the distinguished visitors from foreign parts are High Chief Ruler Henry Sharples and High Deputy Ruler John Lee, of Great Britain, who bring fraternal messages and good wishes from the parent stem of the order. Monday evening the ladies of Covenant Tent held a reception in honor of the visitors; on Tuesday morning the High Tent, after hearing addresses of welcome, held a long business session, and in the afternoon there was a street parade, ending with the holding of a temperance mass meeting, at which there were addresses by prominent members of the order. A prominent and unique feature of the parade was the Girls' Cornet Band, of East Liverpool, Ohio, composed of girls from eight to sixteen years of age, all Rechabites. Today and to-morrow will be largely devoted to sight-seeing.

Rev. Dr. David Wilson, a chaplain of the United States Army, and pastor of a local church, preached a sermon Sunday evening on the "Modern Social Club," which has been considerably talked about. He said: "The social club of the present day resembles a net spread to catch the innocent and unsuspecting youth. At that age when a young man should presumably marry or find his social enjoyment in the refined and elevating society of the gentler sex, he heeds the call of the social club, which is not calculated to refine or restrain, but to invite to dissipation and sin. The special peril to young men is that, except on rare occasions, their sisters, wives and mothers never enter these clubs. Their associates are men only, and the lewd jest and profane speech are not wholly unfamiliar." He closed by begging the young men not to join social clubs, but to use their time to better advantage, by seeking other amusements more refining and less harmful.

There is one aspect of the dead-lock, which continues in the House of Representatives, over the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, which contains the amendments appropriating $5,000,000 for the World's Fair, and providing for the closing of the Fair on Sundays, that seems to have escaped general notice. If the bill should for any reason fail to become a law, and there are some Congressmen who favor extending last year's bill, under which the branches of the Government affected are now being provided for, until next December, the amendments would also fail, and all the work to secure Congressional action closing the Exposition on Sunday would have to be done over again. For that reason, if for no other, all those who favor Sunday closing should be in favor of the pending bill becoming a law.

The "Faribault plan," or school system, of which Archbishop Ireland was the originator, and which he went to Rome to advocate, it is announced, has proved a failure at Stillwater, Minn. The "plan" included the surrender of the Roman Catholic parochial schools in Stillwater and other towns in Minnesota, on condition that "sisters of charity" should be employed as teachers in the common schools, if they were found to be as capable as others. Quite recently the Stillwater board of education declined to enter into a contract with St. Michael's (R. C.) parochial school for amalgamation, and as the Catholics themselves opposed the measure, the "plan" was abandoned. The school board has decided to erect two additional public school buildings, and all within their jurisdiction will be conducted independently of Romish influences. Let sectarianism be confined to private schools, and the public schools will be the better for its absence.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

At Gencya, Ill., I saw the pastor of the Congregational church. He was friendly but reticent; and I gave him Joseph Cook on "Illegal Oaths." The M. E. minister I did not see. The Rev. Mr. Anderson, pastor of a mission church, is interested in our reform work and I gave him some anti-secrecy tracts.

At St. Charles, I was kindly entertained by G. H. Smith, and gave him some reform tracts. He is pastor of the Congregational church. I also supplied Rev. J. J. Schuyler, the F. M. minister, with some. He is a reformer, and is doing a good work. I called at the residence of Rev. Mr. Cessander, Lutheran, but he was not at home. He is said to be an open reformer.

The M. E. minister at Genoa, Rev. Mr. Farmeloe, to whom I gave Carradine's celebrated sermon, expressed a wish to examine the subject, and I left Joseph Cook on "Illegal Oaths" for him. The preacher in the Advent church I did not see; but he is said to be a Mason. The Lutheran pastor had gone to conference, and I missed seeing him. He is, however, strongly opposed to the tyranny of the lodge.

In looking over the field one thing is plain: While secretists will not discuss the question, whether the secret lodge has any right to be, they injure, and strive to terrorize free-speaking men, and make them silent on the subject.

S. F. PORTER.

THE FLOATING CHAPEL ON A SAND-BAR.

EVANSVILLE, Ind.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I wish to say to our friends that last week, while floating the Chapel from Lewisport, Ky., to Grandview, Ind., the wind arose suddenly and blew it upon a sand-bar, where it now remains, with the water nearly gone from around it.

If we had had steam-power to hold the boat in the channel, this could not have happened.

A steamboat endeavored to float it, but could not move it; so it will remain where it is until the river rises, which may not be for months.

With the fields so ripe for the harvest, how can we afford to let the Floating Chapel remain so long idle?

Of the multitudes who are interested in the work among the freedmen, who will send $100, $25, $5, or $1, to help us raise the $1,500 needed to purchase the missionary tug-boat that would enable the Floating Chapel to double its usefulness, and prevent such delays in the future?

CORRESPONDENCE.

FREE PUBLIC PREACHING OF GOD'S GOSPEL.

MT. WASHINGTON, CHELSEA, Mass., }
7th mo., 26 day, A. D., 1892. }

EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—Wilt thou kindly permit me to use thy columns for stating the case concerning our relation to the courts on the subject of free public preaching of the Gospel?

We are not prosecuting, nor putting others up to prosecute, the persecutors of God's Gospel. But, surely, it is proper for us to show the illegality of the course of the prosecutors of those who freely preach the Gospel. It is right to show this in court when we are summoned into court. If any one does it, some one must do it. In God's providence this duty has been laid upon a few persons. Therefore, we do it.

The enemies of God's Gospel have done their utmost to obscure this great subject. True men will welcome the light, and the light proves the utter impossibility of suppressing free public preaching for many reasons, of which a few are here given:

1. To put down this preaching, one must put God down. For God is the Author of the free preaching of the Gospel, and God alone. "For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time." (1 Tim. 2: 5, 6.)

"Freely ye have received; freely give." (Matt. 10: 8.)

"And the times of this ignorance God winked at, but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent." (Acts 17: 30.)

"And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matt. 24: 14.)

"And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway unto the end of the world. Amen." (Matt. 28: 18-20.)

"For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." (1 Cor. 1: 21.)

"And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst, come. And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." (Rev. 22: 17.)

"Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. And the servant said, Lord, it is done as thou hast commanded, and yet there is room. And the Lord said unto the servant, Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." (Luke 14: 21-23.)

These, and many other passages, prove that God is the sole Originator and responsible Author of the free public preaching of the Gospel; and whoever opposes such preaching will "be found even to fight against God." (Acts 5: 38, 39.)

2. Civil governments are also ordained of God.

"For the kingdom is Jehovah's, and he is the Governor among the nations." (Ps. 22: 28.) If it be said that this passage is, evidently, prophetic, pointing to that time when Christ, coming in his proper kingly glory, shall break to pieces and destroy all the corrupt governments of this world, and rule with unchallenged supremacy throughout all the earth, I admit it. But this passage also warrants the idea that these governments now have power only as it is delegated by God; and, in that sense, we may say even now that the kingdom is Jehovah's, and he is the Governor among the nations."

To Nebuchadnezzar, Daniel said: "Thou, O King, art a king of kings; for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power and strength, and glory." (Dan. 2: 37.)

To the Romans Paul wrote in the Spirit: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil." (Romans 13: 1-3.)

The Holy Spirit, writing to Christians through the Apostle Peter, says: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the king, as supreme; or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil-doers, and for the praise of them that do well." (1 Peter 2: 13, 14.)

In all these passages we have the distinct recognition of civil governments as existing by God's ordination.

But the Scripture passages first quoted prove that the free public preaching of the Gospel is also ordained of God, as we saw.

What, then, must we conclude, in case the civil government opposes, or tries to suppress, the free public preaching of the Gospel?

Would it be unreasonable to infer, when men employ the machinery of civil government to suppress the free publication of the Gospel, that this is a case of God's ordinance fighting against God's ordinance? O no,—God is not the author of confusion. God's appointments are not a house divided against itself. God always makes joints that match.

Because human governments are ordained of God, it does not follow that every act of every human government is approved by God. The assumption that God can be held to be the author of any human legislation aimed at abolishing or hindering the free publication of the Gospel is blasphemous.

More than two thousand years ago the Psalmist indignantly repelled such a suggestion, by the exclamation: "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?"

To such legislators God publishes his solemn caveat: "Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed." (Isa. 10: 1.)

But, admitting the wickedness and folly of any human by-laws, or ordinances, which assume to prohibit or check the free public preaching of the Gospel, (as for example, "No person shall, without the permission of the mayor, deliver a sermon, lecture, address or discourse upon the Common or other public grounds," Sec. 11, Chapter 42, Revised Ordinances of Boston, 1885), do the Scripture precept and example allow a true Christian to disobey such a by-law if it is passed by a legislature, enforced by the police, and approved by a human court?

Certainly. The precepts and examples of Scripture precedents on this point not only allow true Christians to disobey such by-laws and ordinances, but require them to do so. An attentive study of Isa. 8: 9-20; Jer. 1: 6-10, 17-19; Eze. 3: 4-11, 17-21; Dan. 6: 4-23; Luke 13: 31-35; Acts 1: 8, 2: 14-47, 3: 1-26, 4: 1-31, and Rev. 6: 9-11; prove beyond a doubt that when human ordinances forbid public testimony unto Jesus, that is unto God our Saviour, we should obey God rather than men, and set at nought such ordinances. But, it may be asked, if we disobey such an ordinance, do we not disobey the injunction "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake?" No. Unless we draw a sword, or pistol, or take a gun, or club, or other carnal weapon, with which to fight against the officer who attempts to arrest us. We "submit" to a wicked ordinance, forbidding free public preaching in the sense which Scripture requires, when we disobey this ordinance and freely preach the Gospel in public, and then submit to false arrest, false accusation, mock trial, and false imprisonment in consequence.

But is it right to use the service of a lawyer in replying to the false accusation in a court of law?

If a Christian lawyer volunteers his aid to secure a just, instead of an unjust trial, and a righteous, instead of a wicked issue to the trial, we ought by all means to welcome his aid. For if the jury and judge will heed his presentation of the truth from a legal point of view, and give a righteous vindication of the Gospel preacher, they will by these means clear themselves from the awful woe which God visits upon the persecutors of his ambassadors. This service Patrick Henry once rendered to the witnesses of Jesus under false arrest in Virginia, and saved the court from a great disgrace, and from the judgments of God.

In 1887, the courts of Massachusetts heeded not the to-this-day-unanswered argument of one of the best constitutional lawyers in our country concerning a free Gospel, and condemned a poor but conscientious preacher to imprisonment twelve months in Charles street jail, for preaching four sermons freely to the common people on their own Boston Common.

Thus a great stigma was attached to the entire governmental force of Massachusetts, giving us eminent disgrace throughout the land and world. Before the minister of Christ had served out four months of the sentence imposed upon him, the judge who imposed that sentence, the district attorney who moved it, and two of the principal aldermen responsible for the by-law framed to destroy free public preaching, had suffered the death penalty at the bar of the Judge of all the earth, and no acts of habeas corpus issued by, or returnable to human courts, nor skill of man-made doctors, could deliver these officials from the grasp of the death-angel.

The general law of the land is right on this subject, saying, "CONGRESS SHALL MAKE NO LAW RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION, OR PROHIBITING THE FREE EXERCISE THEREOF." This is the first clause of the first article, "In addition to, and amendment of the Constitution of the United States of America." This article was proposed by Congress at its first organization in 1787, and ratified by the legislatures of the several States, pursuant to the fifth article of the original Constitution." (Public Statutes of Mass., 1882, p. 9, and Story on Constitution, p. 255.)

The fundamental law of our several States is equally clear and strong in proof of the inviolability of free public preaching.

Thus the supreme written law of our Massachusetts Commonwealth opens with a preamble which declares the "objects of government," defines the "body politic," and closes with a renewed appeal unto God, as follows: "We, therefore, the people of Massachusetts, acknowledging, with grateful hearts, the goodness of the great Legislator of the universe, in affording us, in the course of his providence, an opportunity, deliberately and peaceably, without fraud, violence or surprise, of entering into an original, explicit, and solemn compact with each other; and of forming a new constitution of civil government, for ourselves and posterity; and devoutly imploring his direction in so interesting a design, do agree upon, ordain and establish, the following Declaration of Rights and Frame of Government as the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts." (See Public Statutes of Mass., 1882, p. 18.)

So this pious preamble points to the Massachusetts Bill of Rights as the first integral part of "the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

Now, look a moment at this Bill of Rights. Its first article is very properly a brief recapitulation of the National Declaration of Independence: "Art. I. All men are born free and equal," etc.

Its second article bears directly on this subject of a free Gospel, reaffirming, on the authority of the State government what we have just seen had been previously laid down as the constitutional law of the entire nation.

"Art. II. It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society, publicly, and at stated seasons to worship the Supreme Being, the great Creator and Preserver of the universe. And no subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained, in his person, liberty, or estate, for worshiping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; or for his religious profession or sentiments; provided he doth not disturb the public peace, or obstruct others in their religious worship."

This, be it known to all, is the supreme human law of Massachusetts concerning public preaching, which is an essential part of public worship. And is the supreme law of the United States.

The law of our country is freedom in the public exercise of religion. But no one under cover of this legal liberty is permitted by the law to "disturb the public peace," or to "obstruct others in their religious worship."

Every one should understand that this is the law throughout our country, and will remain so until legally changed by the vote of the whole people.

The Boston gag-by-law, and New York City ordinance, therefore, are framed in direct opposition to both the letter and spirit of National and State constitutions on this subject. Therefore these by-laws are utterly void of legal authority, no matter what any man ignorantly or perversely says to the contrary.

It is the plain duty of Christians to follow our Gospel commission, use our constitutional liberty, freely publish the Gospel on our common lands, and if called into court, firmly appeal the case to the highest judicial tribunal in the United States. For if free public preaching can be abolished in our land, our light will be extinguished, and our salt trodden under foot.

Four times has the Everett case, to which the Cynosure referred in its issue of the 21st day of this seventh month, A. D., 1892, been brought up in the criminal session of the Middlesex county court at Malden, only to be postponed.

Meanwhile, the preaching in Everett Square has gone on undisturbed by the police. The fifth time fixed for the hearing of the case is the 29th of this same month. Bros. Williams and Linnell have been urged to prosecute the chief of police for false arrest under the Revised Statutes of Mass., p. 1168, Chapter 207, Sec. 21: "Whosoever willfully interrupts or disturbs an assembly of people met for the worship of God shall be punished by imprisonment in the jail not exceeding thirty days, or by fine not exceeding fifty dollars." But, though willing to suffer for Christ's sake, they are too well taught in the Scripture to resist evil with evil.

Meanwhile, we have held open-air meetings this season, not only in Chelsea and Everett, but in Newton, Weymouth, Woonsocket, Revere, Wellesley and Wakefield, and are arranging, God willing, to speak the Word openly in other places.

Sincerely thy servant in Christ,
WM. F. DAVIS.

LETTER FROM MICHIGAN.

JONESVILLE, Mich., July 26, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Is R. N. Countee still at Memphis, Tenn., issuing his paper and "running" his school? His energy and enthusiasm, manifested in his address at this place, together with the character of his arguments, in which he did not omit criticism of the church and the practices of its popular members, had a Bible-Christian ring which indicates that he is not a lodge-man.

Dr. N. W. Tracy, the temperance evangelist, did not suit me so well. He made truthful and scathing hits, but was not sufficiently careful, leaving too much room for hurtful inferences; and, when spoken to about it, seemed impatient and showed too little interest in having everything properly qualified or sufficiently in harmony with the truth.

A very severe wind, rain and electrical storm passed this way on the afternoon of the 24th, playing various freaks with trees, burning one barn, filled with hay and grain; killing two calves; and tearing shingles and boards from another barn—my own—and making splinters of them.

LITERATURE.

"IMPRESSIONS." By Martin Wells Knapp, Editor of the Revivalist, Albion, Mich., and author of "Christ Crowned Within," "Revival Tornadoes," etc. One volume, pp. 145. Cincinnati, Ohio: Revivalist Publishing Co. Price, 50 cents; to ministers, 40 cents.

Mr. Knapp has chosen an interesting subject—interesting to all who desire to live and think aright. Evidently he believes, with the apostle, that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness;" and also in the apostolic injunction to "believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they be of God."

Briefly, he teaches that mankind is quite as likely to be influenced, or impressed, by Satan as by the Holy Spirit, and that it is sometimes difficult, when Satan appears as an angel of light, for even a true believer to readily decide from what source the impression comes.

For these reasons, he says, he has written this book: "1. Because of the great need of light, and the absence of books, on this subject. 2. Because it is believed that some have gone over the falls of fanaticism, and that others have been greatly perplexed and hindered in their life-work on account of a lack of such light." "An impression is defined as 'an influence on purposes, feelings, or action.' . . . Every impression has a source. Back of all operating second causes, there is with each impression a designing mind which is the source of it. God is the author of all good impressions, Satan of all that are evil." This division emphasizes the character of each. Every Christian knows an experience bearing on this line of argument, which Mr. Knapp distinguishes by the terms, "impressions from above," and "impressions from below." Having traced them to their different sources, he shows the results of following those from "below," and instructs us how to test them. In treating of impressions received from above, he assures the reader of divine guidance in applying the proper test; the conditions of being led by these divine impressions, and the effects upon the man by following them. Finally he displays to us, in the Lord Jesus Christ, the perfect man—the model by which every Christian should endeavor to fashion himself in all things. Taken altogether, this little book is admirably designed to help the careful reader, as it is said to have already helped some, to avoid unnecessary trouble and temptation.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The August Century has a handsome new white and green cover marked Midsummer Holiday Number. It is notable not only for its midsummer characteristics, but as celebrating the centenary of the poet Shelley by a frontispiece portrait and a striking essay by the poet George E. Woodberry, who is one of the chief Shelley scholars of America. Mr. Woodberry gives a very high estimate of Shelley's work in the line of modern civilization, and says that "those to whom social justice is a watchword, and the development of the individual everywhere in liberty, intelligence, and virtue is a cherished hope, must be thankful that Shelley lived." In Open Letters Mr. John Malone gives the interesting result of a patient search for Shelley's American Ancestor. Pictures and stories abound. The opening article is a fresh account of the ascent of Japan's sacred mountain—an interesting description. The other notable attractions are: Glimpses of Wild Life, by John Burroughs—a pleasant peep at hawks, foxes, thrushes, woodchucks and other intimates. Prof. Kenaston describes in a graphic manner The Great Plains of Canada, with illustrations. R. Cleveland Coxe, the artist, writes and illustrates an article concerning the picturesque features of Gloucester harbor. W. E. Norris contributes an instructive paper on the old foreign game of "golf." Castelar continues his entertaining history of Columbus, and discovers America. The Chatelaine of La Trinite, by H. B. Fuller, is continued, as is, also, Mrs. Foote's Western story, The Chosen Valley. The relation of truth to poetry forms the subject of Mr. Stedman's essay for the month. He also contributes an illustrated poem—A Sea Change. T. B. Aldrich, too, has a poem—Sea Longings. Several other poems by Century writers also add a charm to its pages. The various usual departments are likewise ably filled. New York: The Century Co., 33 East 17th street.

The Arena for August is a strong number, both in topics and writers. While we cannot always agree with its teachings, it must be admitted that its array of talent and reviews of timely topics from month to month, are remarkable. The pleasant features of Mrs. Mary A. Livermore greet the reader in the frontispiece, and she gracefully relates the experiences of her Twenty-five Years on the Lecture Platform. Edwin Reed continues his critical comparison of Shakespeare with Bacon. The other monographs of the number are: An Idealistic Dreamer, by B. O. Flower; A Hitherto Unpublished Letter from Elizabeth Barrett Browning, by Louise Chandler Moulton; An Irresponsible Educated Class, by Helen H. Gardener; The Coming Brotherhood, by Frances E. Willard; Dress Reform in America, by Frances E. Russell; The Chain of the Last Slave, by Susan E. Wallace. The first Symposium—The Pending Presidential Campaign—is written by Gail Hamilton, Republican; Wm. T. Ellis, M. C., Southern Democrat; Geo. F. Williams, M. C., Northern Democrat, and Senator Jas. H. Kyle, of the People's party. Eleven noted women contribute their opinions of Women's Clubs, and Books of the Day are reviewed by the editor and Rabbi Schindler. Published in Copley Square, Boston, Mass.

The leading article in American Gardening for August is fresh and breezy and full of suggestions helpful to all who wish to see and enjoy beauty in nature. For botanists, there are, in this same number of the magazine, interesting papers upon parasites and oddities, garden exiles, our native orchids, etc. Orchids, palms and The Lilies of the Field all receive due attention in separate, special articles, and time spent in the Gardens at Woodbank, cannot fail to pass pleasantly. Orchardists will find much to interest them in the three articles contributed by specialists on fruit-culture, and the needs and interests of market-gardeners are remembered in notes upon various vegetables, Handling Garden-Crops for Profit, and Fields Under Glass—the latter by Professor L. H. Bailey, contains much that is interesting concerning the forcing of vegetables by means of electric light. In the several departments, Buds, Blossoms, Fruits, Comments by Readers, Dictionary of Seasonable Garden-Work, Current Garden Lore, Lights from the Societies, and Questions Asked and Answered, much valuable and interesting matter is condensed into few words, for the benefit of all who are interested in gardening or the great world out of doors. New York: Times Building.

The Herald of Health for August has a variety of useful hints and suggestions on hygiea, of special value to invalids and convalescents. Pleasure not an End but a Means to health and happiness, by O. B. Frothingham, is good vacation reading. The Health Habits and Hygienic Theories of Prof. Edwin Faxon, by himself, contains some salutary lessons. The editor's valuable Notes on Health present an excellent and varied miscellany for general readers, as, also, do the Woman's Department, conducted by Jennie Chandler, and Topics of the Month, by the editor. Edited and published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street, New York.

IN BRIEF.

A bat cannot rise from a perfectly level surface. Although it is remarkably nimble in its flight when once on the wing and can fly many hours at a time without taking the least rest, if placed on the floor or on flat ground it is absolutely unable to use its wings. The only thing it can do is to shuffle helplessly and painfully along until it reaches some trifling elevation from which it can throw itself into the air, when at once it is off like a flash.

A splendid way to improve the memory is to begin by treating it as if it were another person, and then charging it, upon penalty of a severe upbraiding, to keep until wanted the information, fact, date, name, or whatever is to be remembered. By this course you unconsciously do two things—you sort out things worth while to know, and you impress them upon the memory in such a way as to cause it to grasp and keep them. The latter is a most important thing to do. Half of one's forgetfulness comes from failure to properly grasp what it is that you are to remember. It is said of Thomas B. Reed, the famous member of Congress from Maine, who was Speaker of the House of Representatives two years, that he considered it a great hardship to have to tell a man the same thing twice. You ought never to cause any one such hardship.—Harper's Young People.

Statistics show that the majority of accidents due to petroleum lamps are caused not by explosion, but by the lamp being upset or falling down. An explosion may be produced by a rapid cooling of the glass or porcelain oil reservoir, from a cold draft, causing a bursting of the reservoir, or also by the rapid movement of the lamp when carried about, or by blowing down the chimney, bringing atmospheric air in contact with the explosive gas in the oil reservoir, and so forcing it out and in contact with the flame. A loose cap on the oil reservoir may produce a similar result, and, finally, an ill-fitting wick may cause a disaster by admitting cold air into the oil chamber, or by being screwed down, fall with a burning spark into the oil. In all these cases the explosion is not the direct cause. To prevent such accidents it is needful, therefore, to study the causes of the fire rather than of the explosion, and try to prevent the oil taking fire.

An American newspaper concludes, after studying the census, that probably no one who has not obtained information on the subject could make a reasonable guess at the number of places in the United States containing one thousand or more inhabitants. The guesses by the uninformed are usually from 10,000 to 15,000, but the United States census discloses only 3,715. Moreover, there are only 2,552 that have a population exceeding 1,500. At the other end of the line the returns are no less remarkable, for there are only seven cities with a population exceeding 400,000. There is abundant room for growth in these cities and towns, but the places with 1,000 or more population already contain 41 per cent of all the total population of the United States. The larger cities, it appears from the returns, are growing more rapidly than the country at large. Thus in 1880 there were 286 places having 8,000 inhabitants or more, the combined population of such places being 23 per cent of the whole. In 1890 there were 448 such places, containing 29 per cent of the whole population.

Over 200 stars are now known to vary in brightness. Differences in the phenomena observed have led astronomers to make the following classifications, as proposed by Prof. Pickering, of Harvard College Observatory: 1. Temporary or new stars, of which only very few have ever been recorded. They blaze out suddenly, remain visible for a short time then disappear, never to return. A small temporary star discovered in 1848 in Ophiuchus is still perceptible, but has faded from the fourth magnitude to the thirteenth. 2. Variable stars, with regular periods of considerable length. The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 1892.

IS THIS A CHRISTIAN NATION?

The answer to this question depends largely on what we mean by the term "Christian." If we mean the same that we do when we speak of a Christian person—one who is a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and who strives in all things to act in conformity to his mind—we will then surely mean not a Christian nation; nor is there any reason to think that such a nation ever existed, or will ever exist, until "the kingdom shall be given to the saints of the Most High, and they shall possess the kingdom." But if it is meant that the great majority of the people of the nation assent to the teachings of Christianity as revealed in the Christian Scriptures, and that they have largely conformed their opinions, customs and laws to the letter, if not to the spirit, of these teachings, then surely we are a Christian nation.

If we are to regard China and Japan as heathen, and Turkey as Mohammedan, we ought surely to rank our own as a Christian nation. Whether any good would come to us and to mankind generally by a declaration that we are a Christian nation, and that we recognize the teachings of Christianity as morally binding on both individuals and nations, depends upon the importance that we attach to these teachings.

If there are great central truths in Christianity which are axiomatic, and command the assent of all thinking people in all nations and in all times; and if the influence of these truths has always been beneficent, and especially on legislation and on customs of society, then much would be gained by their declaration as a part of our national faith. It would not follow that all of the people would assent to such a declaration. Not all of the people believed that all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with an inalienable right to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

John C. Calhoun and many others denied it. Nevertheless, that declaration was a great educator, and did much to develop in the minds of the people a higher and truer regard for the rights of humanity. So, too, a declaration of the divine authority of human government and its obligation to recognize and carry out the divine law of justice and mercy would do much to develop a much-needed reverence for law, and a truer and higher sense of duty to God and to man.

THE NEGRO VOTE IN THE SOUTH.

The recent election in Alabama illustrates two important facts: (1.) That neither ignorance nor race prejudice stands in the way of the exercise of the right of suffrage by the colored people of the South, provided always that they vote the same ticket with the popular parties.

There was no Republican candidate in the field, and the colored vote, which was divided between the Democratic and the People's parties, was quite fully given, and fairly counted, showing a large increase of the usual vote. Doubtless there has been a great progress in education and general intelligence among the Negroes for the last thirty years; but the point we want to emphasize is, that as politicians have never objected to the ignorance of the white voters, so they will have no quarrel with the Negro if he votes to please them. Nay, more—the costliest carriages are none too fine to bring infirm Negroes to the polls, provided they will help elect "our party candidates."

(2.) The true solution of the Southern race problem is in the division of the Southern vote, including the Negro vote, on questions of principles and of policy, and not on the color line.

The great mistake of the Republicans of the South has been that they were closely identified with the Negro race, and the color-line has mainly separated the two parties; the whites, being generally more unanimous, and always wealthier and more influential, usually carry the elections.

No Federal election law, however just may be its requirements, will be an adequate remedy. Whatever tends to promote race antagonism will increase the difficulty and add fuel to the flame.

It is the harmonious co-operation of all the people, both white and colored, that is needful not only for the general welfare of the South, but for the best interests of the colored race. Class legislation and class politics, and especially race politics, are to be deplored.

The Prohibition and the People's parties have done more to settle this vexed question by dividing both the colored and the white vote on questions of policy and principle, than could have been possibly affected by any legislation.

DISCIPLES OF CHRIST AND THE LODGE.

Alexander Campbell, whose name is often applied to this body of "Christians" (Disciples), frequently expressed his opposition to secret lodge systems. (See tract No. 12, "Alex. Campbell's Estimate of the Lodges," published by the N. C. A., at this office.) Additional evidence shows that Isaac Errett and Geo. Flowers, prominent ministers among the Campbellites, held views concerning the lodge similar to those of Mr. Campbell.

The question arises, How is it to-day with many of the popular preachers of this denomination? We know that some are not true to the sentiments uttered by the founder of their church, but are gratified with the knowledge that others among its pastors are personally opposed to the secret lodge system. It is remarkable, however, that probably only one society of the Disciples in Chicago makes lodge membership a matter of discipline, as it ought to be.

In the life of Geo. Flowers, by the late Isaac Errett, published by the Standard Publishing Company, Cincinnati, we find (on page 57) that "Anything that detracted from the all-sufficiency of the Gospel and the church stirred him to opposition and rebuke. This is seen not only in his constant opposition to human creeds. . . . but in his condemnation of such worldly associations as divide the sympathy and affections of Christians, and impair the efficiency of their religious life. Thus, he tells of a visit to a church that had invited him to preach for them:

"I had a very muddy ride for ten miles. Got there just in time for night meeting. Found many of the male members had gone to the Masonic and Odd-fellow lodges—which only strengthened me in the belief that these societies are doing much to retard the progress of Christianity, for we find, almost without exception, that Christians who belong to them have more interest in their success than in the success of the church. They can miss prayer meetings, but not their lodge meetings. I wish that as a Christian people we could be more forcibly impressed with the grandeur and surpassing worth of Christianity, remembering that it is perfect, and that anything added to it decreases its power?"

"The church, with him, was the 'pillar and ground of the truth;' and the church which he honored with his ministrations will do well to follow him in his deprecation of the Christless lodge.

THE ELGIN CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION AND FREEMASONRY.

The recent trial of a member of this Association for unministerial and un-Christian conduct resulted in his conviction, by a vote of 24 to 21. It so happened that the minister thus arraigned was a Freemason, and that his Masonic brethren very heartily stood by him, claiming, after the trial, that it was an Anti-masonic persecution.

Rev. J. M. Green, a member of the Association, publishes an open letter, in which he arraigns the majority for their Anti-masonic prejudices, and says: "There is a large class of men in the Association who claim the same right to be members of secret societies that other men claim not to be members of such societies;" and that: "That spirit (of the majority) carries with it division, and strife, and discord; and, if it is to be continued, then farewell to union and fellowship."

This is the old refrain. It was just such a plea against anti-slavery discussion that divided the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches, and which undertook to divide the Union.

Mr. J. T. Cook, in a late number of the Geneva (Ill.) Republican, makes a most able reply to Mr. Green's letter. After vindicating the Association from the charge of unfairness, he takes up the issue presented. The following extract gives the animus of this most valuable paper: "For one, I do not propose to be terrorized into silence, or to sound a retreat, by such a threat as that contained in the lines from your open letter quoted above; and the sooner this sort of bullying by Masonry, by threats and alarms of what is to follow if these churches dare to keep or mutter above their breath against the transcendent mummeries and fooleries, not to say the high crimes against justice and righteousness, of Masonry, is met and defied, and put a stop to, the better it will be for the churches and for the world. Nay, more: The sooner the churches purge themselves utterly clean from the last vestige of this relic of paganism, and make it a condition of membership in them, and make it a condition of ordination to preach the Gospel of an honest God, that the candidates shall not be Masons and never join their dark-lantern orgies, the more will these churches have power with God and man, and prevail."

To all of which we say amen.

THE SCIENCE OF ATMOSPHERIC DISTURBANCES.

The second Bulletin issued from the Weather Bureau in the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington presents the introductory "Notes on a New Method for the Discussion of Magnetic Observations," by Frank H. Bigelow, Professor of Meteorology.

Prof. Bigelow is a member of the scientific corps of the Weather Bureau, and since the application of electricity to weather reports has been making a study of the causes and operations of atmospheric disturbances, for the benefit of farmers and mariners.

The object of his present paper is to describe a new method of dealing with the observations of magnetic observatories fitted up for the promulgation of such information respecting weather phenomena as shall enlighten those most interested in the operations of nature.

Of course, his observations relate more directly to the scientific aspects of electricity and magnetism, yet, in the end, the conclusions, when reached, will have an important bearing upon the interests of the people.

The general conclusions already reached by electricians are that the larger part of the observed terrestrial magnetic field must be derived from sources within the surface of the earth, while a small part comes from regions outside this surface; in a word, that the permanent magnetism originates within, and the periodic variations without, the surface of the earth. The question then arises regarding the variations, whether they are caused by corresponding changes in the physical conditions of the atmosphere, or whether they are produced by cosmical influences emanating, for the most part, from the sun and the moon. At the same time it is regarded as proven that the sun and the moon do not continuously influence the terrestrial field by direct action as magnets, according to distances, such action being deemed inappreciable. Along this line, too, are to be considered the causes of the great atmospheric disturbances, such as electrical storms, cyclones, hurricanes and floods.

We cannot follow Prof. Bigelow through all the logical discussion of solar and terrestrial magnetism and the deflecting forces which intervene to create atmospheric phenomena, but it is gratifying to know that government enterprise and scholarship are endeavoring to solve the mysteries of these devastating influences upon the earth.

Prof. Bigelow's treatise can be obtained by writing to the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.

"THE IRON HALL."

The recent exposure of this, one of the numerous and worthless secret insurance orders, conducted on the endowment plan, has occupied considerable space in the newspapers and provoked deserved criticism.

"The principle," says the Philadelphia Bulletin, "on which this organization is based is unsound and vicious, and it is only a matter of time when the fallacy will be demonstrated by experience. To give $1,000 at the end of seven years to a man who has paid but two or three hundred dollars, may work well for a time, but it is bound to come to grief sooner or later. It is true that this order has not been managed so recklessly or has carried its theory of finance to so crazy a point as the hundreds of the get-rich-quick societies that have perished like mushrooms in the past few years, but its example has been mischievous and demoralizing. There can be no faith in the exact integrity of any man or set of men who conduct business on this principle, even if they do not start out with any systematic purpose of swindling."

Like all other societies of this sort, as has been abundantly shown in the legislative investigations of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, the Iron Hall makes provisions that cannot be possibly fulfilled by any honest methods, but can only deceive the ignorant.

Just now several suits are pending against this order in Indianapolis and elsewhere, and it is hoped that its affairs will be speedily wound up. Still, as in the case of Aesop's fox, one swarm of flies is no sooner driven away than another, more tantalizing, takes its place.

The true remedy is that proposed by the Legislature of Massachusetts, at its recent session—and which, but for bribery, would have become a law—the entire suppression of all the secret endowment orders.

THE IMPLACABLE INQUISITION.

The Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., one of the brightest writers of the age, has recently published a new work: "The City of the Seven Hills," a poem, in which the career of Rome is traced from the founding of the city to the destruction of the papal power. One reviewer praises it as the best epitome of the history of the struggle with the Romish church that has been issued. The one fact prominent in it, as in every other trustworthy book upon this subject, is this: That Rome is unchanged. That she only awaits an opportunity to repeat the bloody scenes of the past, is evident from the following from the pen of Dr. Guinness, on page 271 of the volume referred to. He says: "Accompanied by Mr. Wall, a well-known Baptist missionary, who has labored in Rome since 1870, I visited the Inquisition three years ago, and had a long interview with two of the chief Inquisitors. . . . In a long and lofty side court, we saw the numerous narrow windows of the former Inquisition prisons. Part of the building is now used as a barrack for soldiers; the rest remains in the hands of the Inquisitors. We were shown the chamber in which the Inquisitors still sit in council week by week. The Holy Office is, as in past centuries, in the hands of the Dominicans, with the Pope at their head. When I inquired from the Inquisitors whether the Inquisition possessed branches at the present day in different countries, as in times past, they told me that the bishops throughout the world were their coadjutors; and when I asked whether the bishops were not free agents in such matters, the head Inquisitor answered emphatically, 'They do as we bid them!' In reply to my inquiries whether the Inquisition had changed its principles and objects from what they were in past centuries, he said, 'Rome never changes; what she was in the days of her youth, she is still; she is infallible and her laws are inflexible!' Coming from such a quarter this testimony is decisive. 'Semper eadem' is the boasted title of the apostate persecuting papal church."

DESTROYED BY LODGE INFLUENCE.

In his sermon at Wahoo, Neb., on the 17th inst., Rev. M. A. Gault, our efficient co-worker, related the following affecting experience, showing the evil influence of the lodge upon the home: "While lecturing at ———," he said, "I hunted up an old schoolmate, whom I had not seen for thirty years. We sat, in childhood, upon the same bench in the old log school-house in Wisconsin. After spending four years in the army, he came home at the close of the war, and married a banker's daughter, one of the most promising girls in the town of ———. They accumulated property, had an elegant home; also, a son in college, and a daughter of great promise, just blooming into womanhood.

"But a great grief was corroding the heart of the once happy wife and mother. The father had fallen into the habit of using intoxicating beverages, for which she had remonstrated with him faithfully, until her appeals had lost all effect. She had borne her grief in silence, but appealed to me, amid sobs and tears, to do something to reclaim her husband. I having been his early friend and playmate, she hoped that I might influence him more than any other.

"I found that he was a Knight Templar, and, though living in a prohibition town, that he obtained liquor through his lodge associates. His wife said that his intemperate habits began when he joined the lodge. Her pastor had gone with him through the Knight Templar degrees, and had often told her that 'the lodge is a handmaid to religion.' 'But, oh!' said she, 'if the lodge is such an aid to religion, why is it that my husband's bad habits began only with his joining it?' I explained to her the demoralizing influence of the lodge, and that her husband's reformation was impossible so long as he remained in it. He would not only have to cut loose from the lodge, but, also, from association with a minister who lends his influence to the lodge, which in so many cases leads men down to ruin.

"What a fearful condemnation must rest upon such a pastor! Surely the blood of perishing souls must be required of such a 'watchman!'"

NATIONAL PROSPERITY CONDITIONAL.

It is written in the Word of God: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people" (Prov. 14:34); and every one who does not "sit in the seat of the scornful" readily acknowledges this truth. The Scriptures mention several national sins as bringing reproach and trouble on nations. Read Jeremiah 23:10, and 50:38; Isaiah 59:12-15; Psalm 106:38, and Hosea 4:1. The Bible abounds with such passages, shewing that national chastisements are sent on nations by reason of the sins that are prevalent in them.

But there is one of the Ten Commandments (Exodus 20) with which national continuance and prosperity are specially connected. God said to Israel, when he was making of them a great nation, and giving them a rich and happy country: "Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee, that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." (Deut. 5:16.) This commandment each individual in the nation could obey; and if all obeyed it, then it would go well with all the nation in the country designed to establish it. That it is national blessing, as well as personal advantage which is promised, and that it was not exclusively so for Israel, is clear from the history of the family of Jonadab, who was a patriarch, in the reign of Jehu, of the Rechabites, a tribe of Arabs. These Rechabites kept to a law made by their father for two hundred and fifty years after him; and God promised that the tribe should continue forever, or what was equivalent, that there should always be representatives of it to stand publicly before God; and although it may be difficult to distinguish the descendants of Jonadab among the Kenite tribes of Arabia at the present day, there is a feeling among those who have investigated the subject that a tribe of true Rechabites still exists.

The Fifth Commandment was not designed merely for the younger children of families, for Moses was instructed: "Speak to all the congregations of the children of Israel: Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my Sabbaths. I am the Lord your God." (Lev. 19:2, 3.) This, besides being clearly a commandment to grown persons, connects this duty, likewise, with reverence to the Sabbath, which is also a public and national duty.

A separate but corresponding national promise is made, if parents do their duty to their children: "Ye shall lay up these my words in your heart, and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thine house, and upon thy gates: that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon the earth." (Deut. 10:1-5. See, also, Psa. 78:1-8.)

Nor is it difficult to see how national obedience to the Fifth Commandment should naturally bring about the national fulfillment of those promises, just as all moral virtues naturally bring about their own present reward; and this will happen even if parents should neglect their duty; and how much more if they fulfill it!

For if the children, through a nation, honor their parents, then the habits and principles, public and private, which the last generations have acted upon, will be imbibed and revered by the generations which follows; and every change which differing circumstances and increasing spread of knowledge and advancing civilization may seem to render necessary, will be slowly and cautiously, and not hastily, carried into effect. Early habits and reverence for the opinions of fathers and ancestors will naturally check innovation, until the young have become themselves more experienced; and then if thoroughly convinced of the necessity of alteration, they will be careful not to change further or faster than is absolutely needful, and in accordance with national wants and habits. The spirit and unity and common tie of the nation will be preserved, and change merely for novelty's sake will have but few charms, for the nation will be slow to alter what their fathers have valued, and approved, and found excellent. Thus those sudden changes, or revolutions, which (besides being sinful, in some quarter at least) weaken and ruin nations, will be prevented. And just in proportion as parents have been careful to do their part and imbue their children's minds with the principles of Christianity, that is to say, of sound, unchangeable truth, wisdom and godliness, just in that proportion will the changes required from time to time be made on Scriptural, and, therefore, on secure principles. The nation will, in that case, do well, and its blessings be continued in the land which the Lord hath given to it.

"REBUKING PUBLIC VICES."

This is a discourse of remarkable clearness and power, given before a body of Presbyterian ministers by the late Pres. J. Blanchard, while pastor in Cincinnati. No one can read it without being stronger for this conflict of the latter-day with the "principalities and powers" of this world's darkness. It is found in the handsome volume of "SERMONS AND ADDRESSES" by Jonathan Blanchard, now on sale at this office. Price 75 cents. Send early for a copy of this latest and one of the best of our books.

—We conclude, in this issue, the publication of the ritual of the "Ancient Arabic Order of the Mystic Shrine." Possibly our readers have found it quite as profitable and interesting as they expected. Like most exposures of secret societies, it is rather disappointing, if one looks for wisdom or sublimity.

—The Corresponding Secretary has received much encouragement from the Friends, the United Presbyterians and Swedish Baptists respecting the co-operation of their fall assemblies with our efforts against secretism. He intends visiting the Iowa State Convention of the Disciple church, the United Presbyterian Synod of the same State, and a General Conference of Norwegian Lutheran pastors next week.

—The warm friend of our reform, Rev. H. H. George, D. D., late president of Geneva College, has been appointed Field Secretary of the American Sabbath Union. The official organ of the Union says he has been doing excellent service for that cause among the Congressmen at Washington in favor of Sunday closing at the 1893 Exposition, and is also very successfully organizing the Sabbath work in several States. Dr. George may be relied on to do good work in every righteous cause.

—The death of Mrs. Mary B. Willard, the venerable mother of Miss Frances E. Willard, will touch a far-reaching and deep-seated chord of sympathy. Not only for her own pure Christian life will she be sincerely mourned, but as one very near and dear to every friend of temperance and purity, and as one still nearer and dearer to the devoted daughter and Christian reformer in whose arms she died. Such women are too rare not to be lamented when they are taken out of the world that has been brighter and better for their living in it.

THE HOME.

AFTER A NIGHT OF WEEPING.

When the long night of weariness and pain
Is full of bitter thoughts, and doubts that sting,
Do we not long to hear some holy strain
That far-off angels sing?

Whenever golden deed the heart hath planned
Is darkened by the fear of failing powers,
And all our life seems like a barren land,
Unbless'd by sun and showers;

When every word that loving lips have said
Sounds, to the morbid fancy, falsely sweet,
And every truth that we have heard or read
Seems poor and incomplete;

When the one thing whereon our hopes are set
Is still withheld, although we pray and weep,
Until we murmur, "Can the Lord forget?
Or doth the Master sleep?"

When the old sin that we have nearly crushed,
Arrayed in all its fearful might appears,
And yearning voices that we thought were hushed
Call from departed years;

Then, like an evening wind that unperceived
Beneath an odor from the rose's breast,
Comes to remembrance: "We which have believed
Do enter into rest."

And our eyes close, and all the phantom throng
Of doubts and troubles vanish into air;
And the one face that we have loved so long,
Smiles on us calm and fair;

The face that in our darkest hour is bright,
The tranquil brow that never wears a frown,
The steadfast eyes, that never lose their light
Beneath the thorny crown.

So at His word the clouds are all withdrawn,
The small, sharp pains of life are soothed away;
After the night of weeping comes the dawn,
And then, His perfect day.

WITH HAND AND HEART.

Some of you remember the story of Ginevra, in which we read that she gave her hand with her heart in it to Francesco. The hand has little worth that does not contain a bit of the heart. I was reading the other day, a story of a little girl, who was asked to bring her father's slippers to him, but who did not want to leave her play. At length she went for them, though very reluctantly, and returned looking very serious. Handing them to her father she said, 'I've bwinged 'em, papa, but I guess you needn't say 'Thank you,' cause I only did it with my hands; my heart kept saying 'I won't.'" A great many of us can learn a lesson, if we will, from this little girl. We surely can see how to render the service which we perform very unacceptable. No such service can be pleasing to God. "My son, give me thine heart," is the exhortation of Scripture. There is little use in putting our hands to work for God if the heart does not go with the hands.

THE BOY PREACHER.

Charles H. Spurgeon began his preaching very early in life. When a child six years old, at his grandfather's at the old parsonage at Stambourne, he heard his grandfather lamenting the evil habits of one of his flock who used to frequent the public house to enjoy a mug of beer and a pipe.

"I will kill him," said the embryo preacher; and he shortly afterward told his grandfather, "I've killed old Rhodes. He will never grieve my poor grandfather any more."

"What do you mean, child?" said the minister.

"I have not been doing any harm, grandfather," said the boy; "I have been about the Lord's work, that is all."

Not long after, "Old Rhodes" explained the situation. He was in the public house when little Charley walked in and said to him, "What doest thou here, Elijah, sitting with the ungodly—you, a member of the church, and break your pastor's heart? I am ashamed of you! I would not break my pastor's heart, I am sure."

"Old Rhodes" evidently thought this was pretty plain talk for a six-year-old boy; but his momentary anger yielded to honest conviction. He knew the child was in the right, and he asked forgiveness for his fault. At the age of sixteen Charles became deeply convinced of sin, and earnestly sought for peace and salvation. He was converted while listening to the Gospel in a Primitive Methodist chapel in Colchester. Soon after his conversion he began to speak in meetings, out doors and in; but he was first led to preach by the kindly strategy of some Christian fellow-worker. In 1873, in the introduction to a sermon from the text, "Unto you therefore which believe he is precious," he told the story of his first sermon, as follows: "I remember well that more than twenty-two years ago the first attempted sermon that I ever made was from this text. I had been asked to walk out to the village of Taversham, about four miles from Cambridge, where I then lived, to accompany a young man whom I supposed to be the preacher for the evening. On the way I said to him that I trusted that God would bless him in his labors. 'Oh, dear,' said he, 'I never preached in my life. I never thought of doing such a thing. I was asked to walk with you; and I sincerely hope God will bless you in your preaching.' 'Nay,' said I; 'but I never preached, and I don't know that I could do anything of the sort.' We walked together until we came to the place, my inmost soul being all in a trouble as to what would happen. When we found the congregation assembled, and no one else to speak of Jesus, though I was only sixteen years of age, as I found I was expected to preach I did preach; and the text was that just given."

The cottagers listened with delight and wonder to the boy in his short coat and his "turn-down collar."

After his sermon was concluded, and he took up the hymn book, the question was asked, "How old are you?" He replied that that was not a proper question during service. At the conclusion of the exercises the question was repeated, "How old are you?" "I am under sixty," said the boy. "Yes, and under sixteen," said an old lady. "Never mind my age," said Spurgeon; "think of Jesus."

The message was not soon forgotten; and the boy preacher had entered upon a work that was to be lifelong and world-wide, and which resulted in thousands being brought to Christ.—Christian Safeguard.

THE LOST HEART.

I knew a man who lost his heart. His wife had not got it, and his children had not got it, and he did not seem as if he had got it himself.

"That is odd!" say you. Well, he used to starve himself. He scarcely had enough to eat. His clothes were threadbare. He starved all who were around him. He did not seem to have a heart. A poor woman owed him a little rent. Out she went into the street. He had no heart. A person had fallen back a little in the payment of money he had lent him. The debtor's children were crying for bread. The man did not care who cried for hunger, or what became of the children. He would have his money. He had lost his heart.

I never could make out where it was till I went to his house one day, and saw an iron safe; it stood behind the door of an inner room, and when he unlocked it with a heavy key, and the bolts were shot and the inside was opened, there was a musty, fusty thing within it, as dry and dead as the kernel of a walnut seven years old. It was his heart. If you have locked up your heart in an iron safe, get it out. Get it out as quickly as ever you can.—Spurgeon.

A NIGHT IN THE SWITCH-HOUSE.

"Mamma, why don't papa go to church with you?"

Mamma looked down smilingly at little Etta, as she asked this abrupt question, and, as she saw the serious look in the child's eyes, she bent forward and kissed her.

"I don't know," she replied. "He never cares to go."

"Isn't he a Christian?" continued the questioner.

"I'm afraid not, Etta." Mamma's voice had a sorrowful ring in it as she made this reply.

"Then he won't get to heaven,—will he, mamma?"

"Don't ask such questions, child. They are too serious for a little head like yours."

Etta remained quiet, but the blue eyes had a strange look in them that seemed to suggest a feeling of pain or horror at her new discovery. She plied her needle with industrious skill for the next ten minutes, for she was just learning that most difficult of all arts for little girls' hands—the art of fine sewing. Her mother watched her curiously from her position near the window, wondering, all the while, what had caused her to ask the strange question about her father.

Etta had been brought up in a Christian way, her mother having early taught her to pray and read her Bible, and to attend Sunday-school and church. Her father, although not believing in such things, desired that she should be carefully trained like other children. He loved to see her studying her Sunday-school lesson, and he even listened with interest when she would repeat it to her mother; but he never opened his own Bible, or thought it necessary to live a strictly Christian life. He was a good, upright, moral man, attending to his business faithfully, and never taking the advantage of those around him. He was a switchman on one of the great railroad lines leading into New York City, and it was his business to stand in the small watch-tower near the track, and turn the great iron levers every time a train passed in or out of the depot. Once a week he took a turn with his fellow-switchman, and worked at night, rather than in the daytime. This usually fell on Saturday, and Sunday he complained of being so tired and sleepy that he could do nothing but keep to his bed all day long. In the evening he loved to stay at home with his family, and enjoy himself in talking and reading to them.

"Papa, are you going to work to-night?" asked Etta the next Saturday afternoon, when her father came into his early dinner.

"Yes, child, would Etta like to go with me?"

"Oh!" And Etta's lips looked like her eyes—just as big and round. "Can I go, papa?" she asked, with a flutter of anticipation.

"Why, yes; little girl. I intended to take you some night and show you the switches and cars."

"John, why do you talk so? The switch-house is no place for Etta," interposed Etta's mother, looking severely at her husband. "She will get sleepy, too, before eleven o'clock."

"I know that, mother, but I have prepared everything for her. I have a nice little bed that she can sleep on when she gets tired. It will do her good to spend one night out."

"Well, if you'll take good care of her, it's all right."

And so it was decided that Etta should accompany her father to his work, and spend a night in the switch-house, where all the brakes and switches were connected and locked. For the next half hour she danced around the room in delight, imagining all sorts of sights which she would see. Her mother put on her a dark dress, which she could not soil in the greasy place where she was going. A warm shawl and some lunch were wrapped up in a bundle, and then, after kissing mamma a good-by, Etta and her father left their home for the railroad.

"What are these big things?" was Etta's first exclamation, when she entered the high tower, which overlooked the yard of the depot.

"Those are the switch-handles," replied her father; "when I move one of those backwards, the railroad out there in the yard moves also. Then the cars can run from one track to another."

"Oh! I see. But, papa, if you shouldn't turn one in time, what would happen?"

"Why, the whole train of cars would be thrown off the track, and many people killed."

Etta gave a shudder as she remembered the railroad accidents that she had read about. Then she continued:

"I should think you'd be afraid, papa. Suppose you should get to sleep and forget it? Then—"

"I should be the cause of many people's death," replied her father with a slight laugh, kissing his little girl at the same time.

"But you pray every night that you won't fall to sleep, and forget to turn the switch—don't you, papa?"

This was asked in such a confident tone that Etta's father could not find the heart to disappoint her by saying "no," and so he turned the question off by telling her something about the workings of the machinery in the tower. Etta soon became interested in his talk and listened attentively. She asked many questions, which her father answered. She even attempted to turn one of the great handles, but her strength was insufficient for the act.

"Now, Etta, here comes the first train."

It was now quite dark, and a number of lights were seen flashing here and there in the yard, making all sorts of circles and gyrations as they were swung to and fro. In the switch-tower, however, it was quite dark, no lights being allowed in there by the company, as they would prevent the switchman from seeing his trains coming.

Etta looked in the direction her father pointed, and a great big light could be seen coming towards them, growing larger and brighter every moment. It was the headlight of the engine. The great iron horse blew a loud whistle before it reached the house, and her father gave one of the handles a twist, and the train of cars rushed off on another track. Etta watched the proceedings with interest, and did not get tired of it until a dozen trains had been switched off. Then she began to grow sleepy, and her father made her little bed up and told her to lie down and get some rest.

"I must say my prayers to you, papa; mamma isn't here," said the little girl when the bed was ready. "I will pray to God to keep you from falling to sleep and from making any accidents. Then you can pray to him, too."

Strange to say, Etta's father had not heard her pray before for four years, and he was strangely moved as the girl knelt down before him, and offered up her simple prayer. He heard his own name frequently mentioned, and listened to her simple wish that the switches would work all right, and nothing happen to the cars and the people in them. Then she finished, and in a few moments Etta was sleeping peacefully on her bed.

But her father began to think. He was all alone with his work, and during the intervals between the arrival of the trains he remained silent, looking at his only daughter and recalling some of the words of her prayer.

His thoughts were thus busily engaged when the shriek of another engine startled him. He woke up, and grasped the handle of his brake, and began to turn it. It would not move. He tugged away desperately at the iron lever, jerking it backwards and forwards, but, for some reason, it remained stationary. The shrieking train came hurrying on, unmindful of danger that awaited it. Great drops of perspiration began to roll down the forehead of the lonely switchman, as he saw the fearful accident that would soon happen. But he was a strong man, and one not easily disconcerted. He went down on his knees, and examined the bolts which held the lever in its place. Jammed in between two iron pins was a small piece of wood, which had caused all the disturbance.

It required but a moment for the excited man to pull out the offending piece of wood, and then, as he leaped to his feet, and seized the handle of the switch again, there escaped from his lips a once familiar phrase to him, "Now, God, help me."

The switch worked all right, the train rumbled by the switch-house on the right track, and the accident was averted. Etta's father wiped his forehead with his handkerchief, and went over and kissed his daughter. She was still sleeping peacefully, unmindful of the danger that had just been overcome.

"I believe it was your prayer that saved me," said the strong man; "and it has been a lesson to me."

He kissed her again; and then a deep silence fell upon him as though he were thinking or praying. No words escaped him, but his lips moved slowly in the dark.

The next day was Sunday, and Etta and her mother were both astonished to hear the husband and father say that he would accompany them to church that evening.

From that day the switchman seemed a changed man. He no longer gave some flimsy excuse when asked to read his Bible or to attend the meetings. He soon began to listen to Etta's lessons each Sunday, and help her out when she was puzzled. But she never knew how instrumental she had been in her father's conversion.—Sunday-School Times.

Love is the purification of the heart from self; it strengthens and ennobles the character, gives a higher motive and a nobler aim to every action of life, and makes both man and woman strong, noble and courageous; and the power to love truly and devotedly is the noblest gift with which a human being can be endowed; but it is a sacred fire that must not be burned to idols!—Miss Jewsbury.

MY NEIGHBOR JIM.

Everything pleases my neighbor Jim;
When it rained
He never complained,
But said wet weather suited him.
"There never is too much rain for me,
And this is something like," said he.

When earth was dry as a powder-mill
He did not sigh
Because it was dry,
But said if he could have his will
It would be his chief, supreme delight
To live where the sun shone day and night.

When winter came with its snow and ice
He did not scold
Because it was cold,
But said, "Now, this is real nice.
If ever from home I'm forced to go,
I'll move up north with the Eskimo."

A cyclone whirled along its track,
And did him harm—
It broke his arm,
And stripped the coat from off his back.
"And I would give another limb
To see such a blow again," said Jim.

And when at length his years were told,
And his body bent,
And his strength all spent,
And Jim was very weak and old,
"I long have waited to know," he said,
"How it feels to die;" and Jim was dead.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DEVIL'S TRAP.

In Philadelphia a boy was enticed into a saloon by one of those leech-eyed monsters, and he was given a glass of lemonade to quench his thirst. A customer at the bar said to the dispenser of liquor, "Why did you call that youth in to drink?" and the answer was: "Don't you see that mansion on the hill yonder. In a few years the old man of that mansion will die; the son will fall heir to it; and by his habits and customs will be unable to take care of it. Then I will become the owner." A tavern will swallow up more valuable property and more precious lives than any destructible tornado that ever existed.

The liquor traffic is like the deadly sting of the rattlesnake. This city is infested with many dens, but the citizens have become so accustomed to the noise of them that their rattle is now unheeded. License rattlesnakes! If the drink traffic is good, why license it?—put it on the market the same as other merchandise, and sell free. The revenue of the country is increased by the sacrifice of thousands of young men of the fair Dominion. Prohibition should be proclaimed from every pulpit and platform in the land. If the country were rid of the evil, prosperity would attend on every hand. Thus said the Rev. G. W. McDonald, of St. John, N. B., in the course of a sermon preached to the Royal Templars of that place.—The Templar.

BEWARE OF ALCOHOLIC DRINKS.

The movement among some of the most eminent physicians of Europe in organizing total abstinence societies is most appropriate, as they above all other classes are aware of the terrible effects and ravages proceeding from alcoholic drinks. In France alone 6,000 persons were sent last year to inebriate asylums, and an appalling fact connected with this was a majority of them were women. The proportion was three to one. Drunkenness is largely on the increase all over Europe, so physicians feel the necessity of doing something to check the evil from where so many diseases spring, and which causes such fearful destruction of life. The most learned among them have in warning tones told the people of the poisonous and death-dealing effect of alcohol, of how it destroys the tissues of various organs by coagulating the albumen and absorbing the water, of how it lessens the amount of carbon dioxide excreted by the lungs, thereby loading the system with this poison, of how it weakens the power of the heart and paralyzes the entire vasomotor nervous system, so it is only fitting for these men, knowing so well the devastation caused by this dreaded poison, to band men and women together for their protection.—Pacific Ensign.

A FRAUD.

If high license does decrease the number of saloons (and even that is a question), it must be admitted that it greatly increases the power of the saloons that remain; so that experience has demonstrated that the high-licensed rum traffic is just as potent for evil as is the low-licensed. And, by the way, this fact is well worthy the consideration of all Christians who have been deluded into the belief that the evils of the rum traffic can be overthrown by high license. Haman proposed to pay King Ahasueras a pretty high fee (ten thousand talents of silver) for a license to kill the Jews; and so the high-licensed delusion and fraud are only a scheme by which the rum traffic, through the payment of a middling high fee, secures a license to besot and murder from 75,000 to 150,000 citizens of the United States each year. Shame on any well-informed Christian who favors license, high or low!—Telescope.

OATMEAL VS. ALCOHOL.

It is supposed to be the proper thing at the close of a novel to introduce a moral with which to adorn the tale. In like manner the recent gauge conversion by the Great Western Railway company has its moral side. It was a wonderful feat and it was accomplished without the aid of alcohol. Time was, and is now in some quarters, when no work could be carried out unless intoxicants were supplied. It was supposed that nothing could exceed the sustaining power of alcohol, and this supposition has become crystalized into one of the most dangerous of customs. This testimony has been scouted in the past. But the late railway conversion was a striking proof of its truth, says the Western Morning News.

Over 200 miles of broad gauge railroad had to be transformed to narrow dimensions in the shortest possible time and with the greatest possible care. To accomplish the work nearly 5,000 men were employed, and they worked two successive days of seventeen hours with only short intervals for meals. The strain on the men was exceptional, yet not beer but oatmeal and water was provided by the railway company. Testimonials to its refreshing, thirst-quenching and sustaining power were heard on every side. This triumph of oatmeal water over beer should not pass unnoticed. Will farmers and other employers take cognizance of the explosion of the idea that beer is more sustaining than any other beverage?—Exchange.

SAYINGS OLD AND NEW.

The greed of the saloon is the peril of the people.

A saloon can no more be run without boys than a sawmill without logs.

Low license wants our boys; high license demands our girls also.

The saloon-keeper is the voter's agent whose ballot makes his business lawful.

What one does by his agent he does himself. That which is morally wrong is never politically right.

The safety of the people is the State's supreme law.

Rum's license fees are the State's blood money. The patronage of the bar is the beggary of the family.

He who stands behind the bar will one day stand before the judgment bar.—Free Methodist.

The silver for table use in one of the new hotels of Chicago just opened cost over $30,000. The bar-room is minutely described in the morning papers, and is called the Temple of Bacchus. The fitting up of this room cost $50,000. The keeping of it in customers will cost infinitely more. A world of misery and poverty and crime will result from the keeping up of this gilded dram-shop.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1, The Apostles before the Council.—vs. 25, 26. The order of the Sanhedrim to bring the imprisoned apostles before them for examination had been met by the astonishing news that while the prison doors were safely locked and guarded the men they sought were standing in the temple teaching the people. They did not dare use violence in arresting them, though engaged in repeating the very offence for which they had been put into prison. A wholesome fear was on their enemies—fear of the populace, as well as fear caused by the supernatural way in which they had been delivered. The lives of missionaries and Christian workers contain many illustrations of the wonderful manner in which God will preserve his own and make the wrath of man to praise him. There is something in the very atmosphere which surrounds those who are bent on doing their duty fearless of consequences which strikes terror to the hearts of their foes. The great sin of modern Christianity is the cowardice of its nominal professors. Would so many churches take "the price of blood" from rich brewers and wholesale liquor-dealers if the earnest voices of all their members who hate the shadow of complicity with the traffic could be lifted against such an outrage? Our churches continue to fellowship Masonry, though there is reason to believe that a majority of the members have strong objections to the lodge. How soon they might, had they the spirit of the early disciples, force an issue that would result in a triumph for the cause of pure religion; but they shrink from the contest which must come first. So did not the apostles.

2, A good confession.—vs. 27-32. "Behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine." This was a singular admission for the priests to make, and it shows how utterly unavailing is persecution to prevent the spread of the truth. "And intend to bring this man's blood upon us." The terrible curse which they invoked on themselves at Christ's crucifixion had evidently begun to cast its shadows before. Peter's noble answer, "We ought to obey God rather than men," contains the rule for every Christian when the civil and divine laws conflict. "The God of our fathers—he whom Abraham obeyed—was the one to whom all their vows of allegiance were given. By the use of this term Peter would show that the chief priests and elders themselves, with their traditions of men, were the real innovators. So it is now. The old-fashioned religion seems a new thing in the eyes of many, because they have grown used to seeing only the corrupted forms;—ceremonies not ordained by Scripture, and the worldly lives of professors who have not been "transformed" by the Spirit of Christ. "We are his witnesses." The burden was laid upon them. They could not keep silent. Oh, that a like witnessing spirit might possess the whole church to-day! "So is also the Holy Ghost." We can never stand alone in witnessing for Jesus, or for any just and righteous cause. The Holy Spirit will witness with us, and in us, and for us, and they who oppose the truth will be "cut to the heart" as were these early adversaries of the Gospel. They were self-convicted of the dreadful crime with which Peter charged them, but not penitent. They had indeed slain the Just One. They make no reply, no attempt to defend themselves from the accusation, which only renders them more desperate in their fury; more determined to take the lives of the apostles. "They took counsel to slay them;" an epitome of the history of religious persecution in all lands and ages.

3, Gamaliel's wise counsel.—vs. 33-41. The world would have been saved many a blood-stained page if every tribunal of persecutors had contained a Gamaliel to show them their folly; and his wise advice might well be heeded by many a Christian to-day who is troubled, when some new view of truth that seems to upset the theological system in which he was brought up, is put forward. But how foolish to tremble for the truth; and if it be an error, the sooner it is overthrown the better. When conflicting religious isms are rife, our best way to meet them is to cling close to the Word of God. "In quietness and in confidence shall be your strength." That the council in their heated state of mind should have accepted Gamaliel's advice must have seemed almost as wonderful to the apostles as their escape from prison; but let this thought keep us from all cowardly fear when we are doing our duty: that no servant of God can die before his time. Even the angel of the pestilence must sheathe his sword until our work is done; and much less can mortal man do aught to harm us.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—There are over 200 Baptist churches in Wisconsin, but only eight of their pulpits are to-day occupied by the same pastors they were eight years ago. Instability and brevity in the pastoral relation is one of the evident causes of church weakness in this State. The reason of these frequent changes rests alike with the churches and the pastors.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

—It begins to seem that the only thing which can save the Church of England from being entirely Romanized is its disestablishment. How far gone in that bad direction many of its parishes and ministers already are, may be inferred from the quotations made in the London Christian Commonwealth from a recent book, "Home Idolatry and Home Missions," by Rev. Morley Wright. We take the following from an article in the paper named: "The evidence which Mr. Morley Wright adduces is of the usual familiar yet startling sort. The following is from a copy of the official list of Lent services at St. Peter's, London Docks: On Thursday, March 3d (1892) at 5 P. M. 'Solemn Vespers of the Blessed Sacrament.' This is a service for the adoration of the Sacrament. The list of services has a letter from the vicar of St. Peter's attached to it, in which occurs the following passage: "Bring the cards [of resolution] to one of the early celebrations of the Holy Eucharist, and when your dear Lord comes down on the Holy Altar in the form of bread and wine, reading over your resolution on your knees, ask him to help you to keep it." On Good Friday, at St. Cuthbert's, Kensington, the devout were exhorted to attend at 9 A. M. for the service of 'Adoration of the Holy Cross.' And on the same day in Manchester Cathedral a service in honor of the Blessed Virgin, known as the Stabat Mater, was performed in presence of the Dean and Chapter. In the English Catholic's Vade Mecum, which is bound up with the prayer book, and used in all parts of the land, we have ever Roman Catholic doctrine that can be named—the Worship of the Virgin Mary, Confession to a Priest, Prayers for the Dead, Celibacy, the Seven Sacraments and the Mass."

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The Center Congregational church, of Manchester, Conn., has distinguished itself as the first church in the world to recognize the bicycle as a Sunday conveyance. A large number of its regular attendants, residing at a distance from the church, both gentlemen and ladies, have been accustomed to reach the place of worship on bicycles, and a bicycle shed, with lock and key, has been built.

EVANGELICAL.

—Extensive preparations are being made for the convention of Christian Workers to be held this year, Nov. 10-16, at Tremont Temple, Boston. Revs. B. Fay Mills and L. P. Sibbals have just been added to the general committee. The convention will surely miss, this year, the genial and spiritual presence of Col. George R. Clarke, one of its early promoters.

—The field assigned to Dr. H. C. Woods, superintendent of missions of the Home Mission Society, is now to include Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arizona and Utah—surely, a big field. His residence is to be at Colorado Springs, Colo., to which place his correspondence should be addressed.

—The missionary work of the National Temperance Society has, during the past year, been vigorously prosecuted in needy localities all over the country. Six colored missionaries have been maintained in the field, and a large amount of literature has been circulated all over the South.

—America in fifty years expended $1,250,000 to evangelize the Sandwich Islands, and has received back $4,000,000 a year in commerce.

—Rev. Sam. P. Jones will hold meetings at Harrisonburg, Va., commencing Aug. 16.

JEWS.

—A fine piece of land, about 2,400 acres, on the east side of Jordan, has been bought by a society called "Lovers of Zion," for a colony in which distressed Russian Jews may settle. The tribe of Manasseh originally possessed this territory.

LUTHERAN.

—The annual meeting of the Augustana Synod was held this year at Lindsburg, Kansas. The attendance was 141 clergymen and 60 lay delegates. The following officers were elected: President, Rev. P. J. Soaerd; Vice-president, Rev. M. C. Ranseen; Secretary, Rev. C. M. Esbjorn; Treasurer, Mr. C. G. Thulin. The total income for Augustana College and Seminary at Rock Island, Ill., during the past year was $580.15. The expenses in different directions were about the same. The institution is growing in favor. A post-graduate course has been introduced, so that special studies may be pursued. Rev. C. E. Lindberg is president of the faculty. Five of this year's graduates can also preach English.

—At the recent meeting of the United Synod of the South, it was decided that a Theological Seminary is to be established for the Southern church, which for the present will have its headquarters at Newberry, S. C. A number of places, especially Winston, N. C., are anxious to secure the permanent site for the new seminary. Rev. A. G. Voigt was elected as first professor. The bequest of $10,000 for the seminary from the late Capt. A. W. Barrier was accepted. Hon. H. S. Trout was elected treasurer of the seminary fund.

—At its late session Michigan Synod resolved to join the Synodical Conference, and also to unite with the Minnesota and Wisconsin Synods in forming a joint synod of the Northwest.

MENNONITES.

—A number of new Mennonite settlements are being formed in the British Northwest Territory. Already quite a number from the older settlements of Manitoba as well as from the States have gone to these new homes, and many more will no doubt soon follow, while many new emigrants from across the sea are expected to join them in settling this country which is represented as a land of great promises. It is encouraging to note that among those already gone there, there are those who are quite as much concerned for the spiritual welfare as for the material prosperity of the new colonies.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The Chicago District Camp-Ground association has invited the Class-leaders' association of the Chicago districts to take charge of the services Saturday, Aug. 13, at Des Plaines, and it is the purpose of the class-leaders to make that the great day of the camp meeting. The platform is 600 feet long by 16 feet wide, and the waiting-room 160 feet long by 32 feet wide. The camp meeting will spend about $3,000 in general improvements, including one tent 100 by 140 feet, and another for the Epworth league 70 feet in diameter with new platforms, seats, etc. It has also provided a corral and stables for horses and vehicles. These and other improvements are being made with special reference to the international camp meeting to be held on these grounds in 1893.

—The Methodist Episcopal church, South, has two missionary societies, the men's and the women's, of which the former reports a large deficiency and the latter an equally large surplus well invested.

SALVATION ARMY.

—The Salvation Army in California has augmented its forces with a body of musical troopers, known as the Hallelujah Cavalry. This cavalcade will sweep along the highways, arousing the unconverted. Flaming posters headed "Bombardment of the Hallelujah Cavalry!" have been displayed all over the State. The idea is a new one in the methods of the Army, and originated with "Major" Kyle, the commander of the Salvationists on the Pacific Coast. No women are to be allowed to accompany the mounted warriors, for the sufficient reason that the horses pressed into the service are Nevada broncos unaccustomed to the blare of trumpets and the boom of the big drum. A cow-boy convert has promised, however, to make the animals tractable after a fashion. The music of the cavalry will be furnished by ten brass instruments, banjos, drums, horns, and tambourines. Regular cavalry saddles will be furnished for the men, and will be set off with red braided saddle-cloths. The uniform will be white cavalry fatigue hats, loose red blouses, and cavalry boots tipped with long spurs, more for the clanking they will make than to rowel the broncos. The leading riders will carry lances and fluttering pennons. The troopers will camp along their route in regular army style. They expect to penetrate the mountain and desert parts of the State, where churches and meeting-houses are not to be found.

—General Booth says that the Salvation Army uniform is worn by men of all colors and in every zone on earth.

—In the Salvation Army, almost the first thing is a postal note sent home by some one who once spent everything in sin.

UNITED BRETHREN.

—The Synod of Pittsburgh will hold its thirty-first regular meeting at Ridgeview Park, commencing Thursday, Aug. 25, at 10 A. M., and continuing until the following Monday.

—The Synod of Nebraska will meet in Kearney, on Tuesday, Aug. 30, at 7:30 P. M., the opening sermon to be preached by the moderator, Rev. J. D. Rankin, of Denver. The meeting will continue till Sept. 10.

—The Synod of Iowa will assemble in convocation at Colfax Springs, Colfax, Iowa, on Aug. 16, 1892, and will continue its sessions until Aug. 23.

HOME AND HEALTH.

WHAT DR. LEMON WILL DO.

Do you want to know the name of one of the best all-round household doctors, and certainly the cheapest that can be found in any country?

It is Dr. Lemon. Yes, an ordinary, sour, yellow lemon, which you can buy at any grocery for a few cents.

Here are some of things Dr. Lemon will do for you if you give him the chance.

Squeeze him into a glass of water every morning and drink him with very little sugar. He will keep your stomach in the best of order, and never let Mr. Dyspepsia, whom he hates cordially, get into it.

If you have dark hair, and it seems to be falling out, cut off a slice of the doctor and rub him on your scalp. He will stop that little trouble promptly.

Squeeze him into a quart of milk, and he will give you a mixture to rub on your face night and morning and get a complexion like a princess.

Pour him into an equal quantity of glycerine, and rub your hands with the mixture before going to bed. If you don't mind sleeping with gloves on, that is better still, and helps the doctor considerably in his task of whitening your hands. In the morning wash your hands thoroughly in warm water and apply the doctor again pure, but only a few drops of him this time. You must not keep this up too long, or your hands will show such a dazzling whiteness as to make all the other young ladies in the vicinity jealous.

If you have a bad headache cut Dr. Lemon into slices and rub these along your temples. The pain will not be long disappearing, or, at least, in growing easier to bear.

If a bee or an insect stings you, clap a few drops of the doctor on the spot, and you will find yourself the better for it.

If you have a troublesome corn the doctor can be again put to good account by rubbing him on the toe after you have taken a hot bath and cut away as much as possible of the troublesome intruder.

Besides all this, the doctor is always ready to sacrifice himself in the cause of Russian tea—slice him in without sugar—or in the preparation of old-fashioned lemonade, than which no drink is more wholesome.

Altogether, Dr. Lemon is an individual few people can afford to get along without.—N. Y. Herald.

PREPARE FOR WINDOW PLANTS.

If you desire flowers all winter on geraniums, heliotropes, fuchsias, and similar plants, as ordinarily do duty outdoors in the flower garden in summer, don't depend upon the same plants for winter you do for summer. The best way is to select young plants for the purpose, and keep them in the pots all summer. Say if you now select nice, thrifty young plants in three-inch pots, repot them into four or five-inch pots, and they will be just the thing for winter. As flowers are no object on these in the summer, keep them picked off and encourage the plants to make nice, stocky, compact plants. To aid this give every plant an abundance of room so that they have air and light all around them. Such plants plunged to half their depth in the soil will want but very little attention save an occasional watering and pinching of shoots where there is uneven growth. Plants grown this way will be ready to flower freely by fall, continuing all winter, while those lifted up out of the garden will take half the winter to recover themselves.—Edgar Sanders, in Prairie Farmer.

THE BACK DOOR.

No kitchen slops, either from wash-tubs or dish-pan, must be thrown upon the ground, or into that open drain too often found at the back of the house. Boarders should fly a place where this untidiness exists. Organic waste festers in the hot sun, and the saturated ground gives forth incense fit for Beelzebub, god of flies. All household waste should be removed as fast as it gathers, and lightly buried. In the dark laboratory of the earth noxious matter is turned at once to sweet and wholesome uses. Lawn and garden thrive on what is fatal to man. But if this cannot be done, then the kitchen waste should be burned two or three times a day. No standing pails of garbage should be allowed to tempt flies and defile the fragrant air.—Anonymous.

A LETTER FROM THE WORLD'S MOST ELOQUENT PREACHER, THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON, THAT WILL BE READ WITH GREAT INTEREST BY ALL WHO ARE AT DEATH'S DOOR.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man

Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude.

Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough.

Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health I value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.—

Yours heartily, (Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON. "Westwood," Beulah Hill, England.

FARM NOTES.

SCIENTIFIC POULTRY FEEDING.

At Cornell University Experiment Station last year a series of experiments were conducted by James E. Rice, a graduate of the college, under the supervision of the director. The experiments were made upon different lots of fowls; they were fed all they would eat of the following rations: No. 1, one-third wheat bran, one-third wheat shorts, one-third cotton-seed meal, two parts skimmed milk. No. 2 was fed on cracked corn and whole corn. Both lots had a small allowance of green clover or cabbage. The following are the conclusions given:

So far as it is warrantable to draw any conclusions from a single experiment of this kind it would seem that—

Chickens fed on an exclusive corn diet will not make a satisfactory development, particularly of feathers.

The bones of chickens fed upon a nitrogenous ration are fifty per cent stronger than those fed upon a carbonaceous ration.

Hens fed on a nitrogenous ration lay many more eggs, but of smaller size and poorer quality, than those fed exclusively on corn.

Hens fed on corn, while not suffering in general health, become sluggish, deposit large masses of fat on the internal organs, and lay a few eggs of large size and excellent quality.

The flesh of nitrogenous fed fowls contains more albuminoids and less fat than those fed on a carbonaceous ration, and is darker colored, juicier, and tenderer.

UNEVENLY MATCHED TEAMS.

The old Hebraic injunction against yoking the ox and the ass together has a sound reason for it. Such a team could not pull true, the slower ox holding back. Neither could exert the full strength it might if each pulled true and evenly. The jerking from side to side makes sore shoulders, and very soon the team that was at first only mismated must be given a month's rest to put it in shape for working again.

TOMATOES IN FIELD CULTURE.

Not one-half nor one-tenth of the tomatoes marketed yearly could be grown in gardens on rich soil. It is a common practice now to grow them by the acre on warm and only moderately rich soil. Thus grown, the plants can be set more closely, and it is claimed will produce earlier fruit, not running so much to leaf as on richer soil. The price of tomatoes varies, and depends often on abundance or scarcity of fruit. The crop in field culture yields more than potatoes, and usually sells for more money.

SOIL FOR CELERY CULTURE.

Mr. Stuart, of Kalamazoo, Mich., who is a successful grower of this delicious vegetable product, as well as author of a reliable work upon celery growing, makes the declaration that the peat lands, so common, and usually known as waste lands, swamps, mireholes, and good only to hold the world together, when suitably reclaimed, are the choicest locations upon which to grow celery, because they can be quickly worked and done so easily after one once knows how. There is a constantly increasing demand for this product; and if the profits from its culture will encourage the reclamation of the unsightly swamps whereby they may be made to contribute to the expenses of the farm, or add to the income resulting from labor, some good will be accomplished. As a result, peat bogs or swamp lands are the residue of decomposed matter, such as grasses, weeds, etc., and are a veritable storehouse of nitrogen in a latent condition, only requiring reclaiming to bring it into energetic activity through the channel of crop production.

AN EXPENSIVE PIG-PEN.

Probably the most expensive pig pen ever made was recently completed at the "Harmonist" Community, at Economy, Pa. A local paper there describes it. "The cost of the pen or nursery, up to date, is $3,000. It is constructed not only on sanitary principles, but with special regard to comfort of each and every porker which finds a place within

The eating room is separated from the rest of the pen, and everything is kept scrupulously clean by two attendants, whose sole duty is to take care of the pigs, and look after the heating and ventilating of the building. At present the pen contains 300 as fine young porkers as can be seen anywhere. They seem to thrive in their well-kept home, and appear to realize their superiority over new comers, which they eye with disdain."

About twenty ministers of the Gospel, representing various denominations, have signified their intentions to be present at the Oregon State Anti-Secrecy Convention, at Canby, Ore., on the 23d and 24th instant. Let earnestness and activity pervade the labors and prayers of all who desire the success of this grand rally in the far Northwest. Address Rev. S. Mathews, at Canby.

We have in hand, for early insertion, from the pen of a Freemason, an article showing, quite conclusively, that the fraternity is more or less under the influence of Demonism; or, in other words, that in joining it, if his heart is in its work, a man surrenders himself to Satan, and under that influence is blinded and unable to distinguish the evils to which he is subjected.

We make room to-day for a mournful tribute to a man of sterling worth and a triumphant witness for the truth as it is in Christ Jesus—our late intimate associate in the anti-secrecy reform, Bro. Geo. R. Milton (whose portrait we present on this page). In every Christian's death the world is always a loser, but the strength of the heavenly host is augmented by his entrance into life eternal. What we who remain have lost we can only regain by following his example in Christian faith and practice.

Bro. W. B. Stoddard, writing in another column of this issue, calls attention to measures now in progress for the success of the State Anti-secrecy Convention which it is proposed to hold at Walton, Delaware county, New York, in October next. This movement is not only interesting to every Cynosure reader, but of extreme importance to all who ought to be in attendance on that occasion. The date is not yet announced, but it soon will be, and a hearty co-operation in the deliberations of the convention should be freely conceded, and made a subject of earnest prayer.

The labor troubles in Tennessee increase in intensity, and overt acts abound. Mine owners had secured 390 convicts from the State prison to work the mines at or near Tracy, belonging to the Tennessee Coal and Iron Co. These men were badly housed and treated with unwarranted severity, and compelled to work long hours. Aggravated beyond measure by this act of the mercenary mine-owners, the free miners banded themselves together, burned the stockades, marched the convicts to the railroad train, and sent them back to the penitentiary, under guard. Briefly, these are the facts in the latest development. The war is on, and the end is not yet.

GEORGE R. MILTON.
[See 8th page.]

About 100,000 persons, from all parts of the United States, visited Denver, Colo., last week, to witness the triennial conclave and parade of the Knights Templar. Thirty thousand of these mock knights were in line during the march, with plumes and swords and martial bearing and uniforms—for what? Simply to make a show. What worthy object lies beneath this pomp and glitter, this interchange of high-sounding titles and military paraphernalia—all so unrepugnant and mistrustful? Why all these secret meetings, signs and grips of the numerous commanderies? Will they tell us that these things are but an expression of brotherly love—a love so exclusive that an humble servant of the Lord Jesus, whom they pretend to venerate, if he does not belong to their order, is as the off-scourings of the earth? What a farce is the lodge when it apes Christianity!

Citizens of towns lying along the principal railroad routes leading to Denver, Colo., were treated, on a recent Sunday, as they are on other Sundays every three years, to a sight of passenger coaches filled with jubilant, drinking Knights Templar on the way to their triennial conclave. That these men, who profess in their secret work to be friends and defenders of the Lord Jesus Christ, and at their initiation are invested with the emblem of their faith in him, should openly disgrace the day set apart for his honor and worship by traveling and other profane uses, serves only to show what a hollow institution Freemasonry is when separated from its glitter and shams. It is reported that a part of the business of the recent conclave was to arrange for the preparation of a new ritual. Will they eliminate from it the name and teachings of Jesus? It certainly would honor him more highly than does the present blasphemous work, taken in connection with their ordinary practices.

WHAT ONE WOMAN DID:

AND WHAT ANY OTHER MAY DO TO FREE HER LOVED ONES FROM THE BONDAGE OF FREEMASONRY.

BY A MEMBER.

Some four years ago my indignation was roused by finding that Masonry, instead of being only a foolish waste of time, was a fraud which Satan had been successfully perpetrating on society for over two hundred years; and that actually here, in the dawn of the twentieth century, with the light of Christ's Gospel, free to men, Satan was deluding our husbands and sons, and binding them, soul and body, and that they were forbidden to tell us, their loving wives, what was free to be known to profane, ungodly men, who cared nothing for them, but to use them as a butt of ridicule.

With two other women whose sense of offended dignity and pride were akin to my own, we met and resolved to devote ourselves to finding out this secret business which was separating us from those whose duty it was to confide in us.

We, three Christian women, wives of three deluded, weak men, who had not the power to break the bonds of this secret sin, resolved, with the help of Almighty God, and in the name of his Christ, that we would free our husbands from bondage; and we pledged ourselves never to stop our work until every man related to us by any tie of kinship was out of the land of Egypt and house of bondage—"not a hoof left behind."

Our husbands were professed followers of Jesus Christ, and we would not allow our Father's house to be made a den of thieves, and we would insist on the unconditional surrender of either God or Satan—the church or the lodge. We resolved to thoroughly inform ourselves on all points in regard to the charm of secret societies wherein lay the power to force our loved ones to lie, deceive, and otherwise degrade themselves in our eyes, for the purpose of keeping us in ignorance of their pursuits. So "We three did agree,

In peace, love and unity,
The whole business to search;
"So we three did agree"
To find three, such as we,
This sacred vow to keep.

We three, and, later, three times three, procured all the books of instruction which are printed in this country for the use of the lodge, such as Macoy's, Mackey's, Pike's, Sickel's, Duncan's, Richardson's and Allyn's, besides all literature bearing on the subject. We also obtained many English works; such as the plain and illustrated teachings of Dr. Geo. Oliver, Preston, and others; also the French "work," by many authors, the numberless lectures of enthusiastic advocates of the "system of morality veiled in allegory," etc.; also the works of Findel, of Leipzig, until our library contained over fifty volumes of standard works, English, American and French, and the monitors and rituals used in the "work of the lodge."

We spent one year in the careful study of the "work" as used in the different countries, and the different States of our own country. We were assisted by the voluminous publications of Ezra A. Cook, who prints only well-attested and perfectly truthful expositions of the craft. Being a Christian man, his publications can be relied on, and are helpful, in that the rites are more fully illustrated and explained.

We became so well informed that several of the "craft" have borrowed our books, secretly, to inform themselves in regard to higher degrees, so that they may save their money, and steal the passwords and signs.

We re-organized our society, composed of "we three and three times three such as we," and drew up the following resolutions:

Whereas, we, Christian women, wives, daughters, and mothers of Freemasons, find our husbands, fathers and sons, who are professed Christians, indulging in scenes of defilement and sin, which they are ashamed to have us know, thereby forming a wall of secrecy and separation between us, causing them to live a lie, and compelling us to distrust them: we have informed ourselves of the nature of the "mystery and secrecy," and pronounce the rites and ceremonies of Masonry degrading, in that it forces a man to appear partially naked, blindfolded, led about a lodge room by a rope fastened around his neck, subjecting him to positions and duties, kneelings and gyrations, which to us seem brutal and disgusting, inasmuch as this is done while he is hoodwinked and left a victim to the coarse jeer and joke of profane and ungodly men.

2. It robs a man of his liberty, in that it compels him to take an oath that he will not tell of his degradation to any "cowan"—meaning his wife or any other "dog"—and thereby causing him to be bound by Satan's chains.

3. It causes him to perjure himself, or live a lie, in that he swears directly contrary to the vow he has taken, when he becomes a member of Christ's church, or vice versa.

4. It makes him break the law of his land and church, by taking an unlawful oath, in that no oath is lawful unless administered by the church or state.

5. It makes him blaspheme, in that he defiles sacred names, and sacred things, using the name of God lightly, in mock prayers, while performing Satan's rites and ceremonies; by using the Word of God for unlawful oaths and passwords, while degrading his body and mind, which is the "temple of God." By representing Deity in the burning bush, and other scenes, as sinful. In trifling with the ark of the covenant and other things which God called holy.

In the third degree, by making Christ's death and resurrection a jest, as performed in Hiram's death, and hundreds of like scenes, all interspersed with mock prayers and Bible readings; taking God's holy name in vain, using the Word of God to bind unlawful oaths, with penalties so degrading and brutal that a South Sea Islander would revolt at them, and often sealing them in libations (as in the fifth or sealed libation) from a human skull, which make us, as wives and mothers, feel that we have been deceived and tricked by lies, and thus insulted, by this "work of darkness" and sin, called the "mysteries of Masonry."

Therefore, we, the redeemed of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in his name, protest against such abuse of our husbands, and sons, and such an insult to our Divine Master; and we pledge ourselves to tell it out to every woman who has a loved one in chains, so that she may, in turn, tell it out to others, until our influence is felt in the home and community, believing that no young man will pay for what he can get for nothing; so we place the light in the hands of the uninitiated; and believing the charm for our loved ones who are bound will be gone, when they realize that we can see them, as "Hiram," as "a sojourner over the rough and rugged road," or as a "prepared candidate" in the lodge room. We hereby pledge ourselves not to (knowingly) patronize in business, entertain socially, listen to the preaching of God's Word by, or receive the "sacrament of the Lord's Supper" from the hand of an "affiliated" Mason; that is, one who visits the lodge or commandery of Knights Templar, or pays dues and fees.

That we, who are wives, will remain such; "for what knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband;" using our knowledge at all times, in love and persuasion, to cause them to turn from the evil.

That we, who are unmarried, will not "become unequally yoked" with this sin, but will marry after a promise to renounce all such equivocal works of Satan, and never to return to it.

To which we sign our names.

We have put into the hands of over one hundred women the means of thoroughly informing themselves and others; and we have, through God's blessing, induced many to renounce forever the sinful practice, and many others to avoid entering the "unknown mystery."

We "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them."

Any woman can form a society, but thorough knowledge of the craft is essential. The first thing taught a Mason is to lie; and, unless he finds you are in dead earnest, and know more than he does, you will be outwitted by him, for the best Mason that ever lived is a perjurer, and must be, by his own showing. Read the works of their advocates; they are all inventions of the father of lies."

FREEMASONRY A UNIVERSAL RELIGION.

BY REV. GEO. J. FRITSCHER.

In order to understand the religious idea which is the real secret of Freemasonry, it is quite important to know the time in which this institution took its present form. In spite of the queer and improbable traditions of many Masonic authors concerning the age of their order, it is an established historical fact that the order sprung into existence in the year 1717. This is also conceded by many intelligent Masonic writers.

To us it is merely of psychological interest how reasonable authors can in full earnest make such fantastic assertions as we find them in Masonic articles in speaking of the time when Masonry started. Webb claims that the great antiquity is one of the fundamental articles, that the belief in it is the first requirement for a good instructor, otherwise the order comes to the same line as every society of modern date. Others date the origin when the stars sang God's praise, and some come down a little farther to the time when Adam tilled the soil. In full earnest the birth of Freemasonry is dated back to creation. "Ever since symmetry began and harmony displayed her charms, our order has had being. No art, no science preceded it."—Sickel's Ahiman Rezon, p. 14.

Or as a hymn words it:

"At the dawn of creation, when bright beams of morning
Broke through the region of Chaos' night,
. . . Then on the new-born man beamed the great mystic plan
Of Masonry's order, accepted and free."

Enoch is made an illustrious old Mason. "He has ever been acknowledged as a father in the institution."—Town's Speculative Masonry, p. 117. Noah and his three sons are counted among their number; hence some claim the title of Noachides. Melchizedek is claimed. Ancient Masonry claims him as one of her "most venerable patrons." Joseph is assigned the honor of Grand Master of Egypt. Moses is taken in, and they have received from him the correct pronunciation of the name of Jehovah, "the awful secret of Masonry," which God imparted to him at the burning bush.—Oliver's Theocratic Philosophy, p. 4. All persons who had the true understanding of God's plans, not only from Adam till Noah, but also from Noah to Solomon, are designated as Masons in a certain sense.—Town's Speculative Masonry, p. 145. The whole ritual is constructed upon the assertion that Solomon belonged to the order. Town wagers the assertion that no one can reach the seventh degree without being fully convinced that those three men—Serubable, Josua, the high priest, and Haggai—belonged to the old brotherhood. Lodges are dedicated to St. John the Baptist and St. John the evangelist, as they held prominent places among the old brotherhood.

One nice fable runs this way: There is a tradition that St. John the evangelist was an Essenic Freemason and organized a secret theological society with mystic rites and Masonic symbols; and that Clement, the disciple of St. Paul and Peter, took possession of the books and papers of the secret organization at the death of St. John. Another story is told thus: Tradition reports that the Jewish war and the destruction of Jerusalem caused a general decline of Freemasons. Many lodges were suspended; few had the number required. In consequence of this, a general meeting of all Freemasons was held in the city of Benjamin, where it was found that the principal cause of this decline was the lack of a Grand Master to lead the whole. Hence seven of the most respected members were delegated to visit St. John at Ephesus to request him to accept the office of a Grand Master. St. John, then an old man of 90 years, accepted the office.

—The New Masonic Trestleboard, p. 27. Oliver's Dict., p. 483, p. 407. National Freemason, 1868, p. 54.

Men of all times and ages, ancient and modern, who have a name in history, are received with applause; among them are Zoroaster, Confucius, Abraham, Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Nebuchadnezzar, Cæsar, Herod, the murderer of the innocent children, Clement, Justin the martyr, Origen, Huss, Melancthon and many popes;—all of them are said to have knelt at the altar in the lodge. Yes; even our Lord and Master Jesus Christ is claimed to have been entered. The most wonderful of all is, that these historical productions are set forth in dead earnest.

But the historical fact that the order of Freemasons was founded in 1717 is significant and important in examining its religious character. At that time deism was the "spirit of the times," ruling all over the world as deism in England, naturalism in France, and rationalism in Germany; and deism is in every part and entirely the religion of Freemasonry and the related secret societies. It is the fundamental idea of these to form a union of all the religions of the world on this foundation. Mackey and others admit this. Mackey says: "The religion of Masonry is pure theism, on which the different members engraft their own peculiar opinions, but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry."—Mackey's Lexicon, p. 402. Compare also Mackey's Mystic Tie, p. 33. Findel says the same, in other words, in his history of Freemasonry.

Wherever a union of all the religions of the world is planned, most naturally all differences which separate the various Christian denominations must appear minute and most insignificant. The uncharitable disposition of the Christian church, which is divided up into many parts and sections, is blamed—whereby one denomination holds itself aloof from the others, and denies union and recognition. Over against this state of this, the ideal state of Freemasonry is put forth, in which such disharmony can not occur, where the Episcopal, the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Baptist, the Catholic, and so on, sit together in peace and harmony.—New Monitor, p. 111.

The doctrinal tenets of the different Christian churches are claimed to be unessential. The conflict and dispute concerning such secondary points which are not an essential part of true religion, they say, is unnecessary. Such things ought not to be, and nothing "but the want of sufficient charity has led to this state of things." As it respects the Masonic institution, disunion is a stranger." Hence Neidner, the German historian, calls Freemasonry "Indiffering union" (a union on the basis of indifference) between Romanism and Protestantism. This is claimed to be an essential part of the objects of the orders. We find it in the statement of the intention of the order of Odd-fellows. It is "to subdue the asperities of the sects and parties." And Masonic periodicals complain that those Christians who uphold with all energies the doctrines in which they differ (mention is made of Presbyterians, Shakers and Baptists, and such who cling tenaciously to their special dogmas) are the worst material for Masonic cultivation. "These men of sectarian bias are the bad material, the soft, cross-grained, crumbling, shaping, cracked, unmanageable candidates with whom we have most trouble."—Mystic Star, 1867, p. 136.

We hear, now and then, that Freemasons are leading men in this liberal line, favoring union everywhere in the church. They boast that in the reunion of the Old and New School Presbyterians, Freemasons were the leading men.

It is essential to the secret societies that all the differences between the various churches and sects are looked at with indifference, for these are exceedingly small over against the real objects which these societies pursue. Their plan takes in many more divisions. Nothing less is intended than a union of all religions of the whole globe.

It is the underlying principle of the Freemasons and similar societies that within all religions of the globe the one genuine and true religion is hidden. This true religion has been embellished in the many religions by a number of unessential additions which do not touch the real underlying principle. And it is the object of them to take out this only essential part which is found in all of them. The religious opinion among men must be necessarily very different. The leaves of every tree differ; no two human faces are entirely alike; no two men are entirely the same in their mental capacities; no two men think exactly the same way. It does not matter at all which religious ideas one has, but whosoever fears God and does right is acceptable to him. This is genuine and true religion. It matters not what other private religious convictions one has; this does not affect the true religion.

Freemasonry claims to have for its object the cultivation of that general, true and genuine religion. The standard expression is: "to cultivate that religion in which all men agree." This same thought is expressed in many similar ways:

"The system of Masonry, as in its original conception still claims to be, is a system of religion in which all men can unite."—Pierson's "Traditions," p. 372.

"Masons are generally charged to adhere to that religion in which all men agree."—Ahiman Rezon, p. 35, in Freemasonry by a Master Mason, p. 128.

"A creed which receives the universal consent of all men, which admits of no doubt and defies schism."—"It is now thought more expedient only to oblige them to that religion in which all men agree, leaving their particular opinions to themselves."—Mackey's Ritualist, p. 700, from Ancient Charges, published in 1723.

"He is charged to adhere to those grand essentials of religion in which all men agree, leaving each brother to his own private judgment as to the particular modes and forms."—Moore, p. 5.

Lessing: "The religion of the lodge, that one in which all men agree."—Quotation in Nielsen, Freimauerie, p. 61; compare Preston, p. 30.

"The basis of this religion is so universal that all religions, from Protestantism to Buddhism, can find a place in it."

".....so religion of a broad and universal character is the prime inculcation of the master's degree."—Morris' Practical Synopsis, p. 271.

".....so broad is the religion of Masonry and so carefully are all the sectarian tenets excluded from the system, that the Christian, the Jew, the Mohammedan, etc., in all their numberless sects and divisions, may and do harmoniously combine in its moral and intellectual work with the Buddhist, the Parsee, the Confucian and the worshiper of Deity under any form."—Ibid, p. 284.

"The descendants of Abraham, the divers followers of Jesus, the Pariahs of the stricter sects, here gather around the same altar as one family manifesting no difference of creed or worship."—Grosh's Manual, p. 277, quoted in Revised Odd-fellowship, Illustrated, p. 158.

"A basis high above the petty and changing creeds. At last, by this brotherhood, which unites everything that is separated, which reconciliates all that is parted, mankind has fulfilled its duty towards all religions."—Translated from Schauberg's Symbolik der Frei., I., fol. 374 forward.

"A universal brotherhood meeting and uniting in a plan far above the petty and changing creeds which enter into the religious and political opinions of the world."—National Freemason, 1868, p. 325.

"The various forms of religion and human churches are only passing illusions."—Translated from Schauberg's Symbolik der Frei., II, p. 207.

But Masonry and other secret societies have the religion par excellence—the natural religion. Freemasonry is "a world-wide, natural religion."—Mystic Star, 1866, p. 702.

"Masonry is the religion of nature, and the Masonic halls are the schools in which intellectual man is to be educated for natural religion."—Translated from Polack's Geschichte der Urreligion, p. 285.

The Druids: "We take our doctrines from mother nature. We study in the temple of universal deity—this temple does not cheat or deceive."—Quoted in Meier's Kirche an Loge, p. 10.

"Christ arose as a philosopher and teacher of pure natural religion."—Translated from Banhutte, 1865, May 27.

"The secret object of this ceremony is... to recall the brethren to natural religion and to persuade them that the religion of Moses and of Christ had violated religious liberty and equality."—Barruel, quoted in Freemasonry by a Master Mason, p. 293.

"It has the intention to build a temple of humanity in which natural religion and human ethics can find a freehold."—Translation of quotation in Nielsen, p. 25.

"As Masons, we only pursue the universal religion, or the religion of nature."—Ahiman Rezon, p. 35, in Freemasonry by a Master Mason.

"The great book of nature is revealed to our eyes, and the universal religion of her God is what we profess as Freemasons."—Dalcho, p. 13, quoted in F. M. by a M. M.

"The universal religion of nature as taught in our temples....."—Heart and Hand, 1870, Jan. 22—"Our Religion."

This original religion—to cultivate which Masonry finds its special duty—is named variously: Ancient Sabbatism, Ancient Noachism, Original Mosaism, and Original Christianity, etc.

"Freemasons call themselves Noachides, or the sons of Noah.....claim to be his descendants, because they still preserve that pure religion which distinguishes this...father of the human race from the rest of the world."—Mackey's Lexicon, p. 326.

"The seven Noachide commandments form the constitution of our ancient brethren."—Mackey's Lexicon, p. 327.

"In the first constitution of 1722 it is said: A Freemason is hereby bound to observe the moral law as a true Noachide."—Translated from Nielsen, pp. 13, 26.

"Noachides or sons of Noah were, according to some ancient reports, the first name of the Freemasons."—Ibid, p. 13.

"As Freemasons we belong to the oldest catholic religion."—Ahiman Rezon in F. M. by M. M., p. 220.

"We shall attempt to show that ancient Masonry comprised what may with much propriety be termed ancient Christianity."—Town, p. 84.

"This religion, or creed, is to be implanted into man by nature; it is said to be born with man; to be in the mouth and heart of every one. To get this belief one must not ascend to heaven, or hear the explanation of church councils, or descend into the abyss. It is not written on paper, but on the heart and in the memory of man. This is the purely human position elevated above every cult and dogma."—See Leutbecher, quoted in Schauberg's Symbolik.

This religion of Freemasonry is the unit of all the religions on the globe—the universal religion.

"The natural religion, the religion of pure reason, the higher and undefiled belief in the God of Christianity, according to which there is but one God, but "One mankind and but one spirit."—Translated from Schauberg's Symbolik, I., pp. 3, 4.

Dr. Oliver observed: "If Masonry is not universal religion," etc.—Masonic Advocate, p. 47.

"Freemasonry is, then, also a religious institution. Not a religion of forms and creeds, but a universal religion whose theology embraces," etc.—Mackey's Mystic Tie, p. 3.

"Masonry, to be effective, must be a universal system."—Freemasonry and Religion, p. 33.

Making Masonry a sect—"Such a supposition soon would reduce it to the level of a religious sect and utterly destroy its universality."—Oliver's Dictionary, p. 325.

The National Freemason, a Masonic journal, which represents what is called the Christian element in the lodge, gives a description of the religion, and says that Freemasonry can and will educate man for a higher religion; for that religion which indeed embraces the lower religion of creeds and sects, but divested of all intolerant and uncharitable views and preconceptions. And this is said to be one of the finest and most precious traits in Masonry, that it intends to form a universal brotherhood, meeting and uniting in a plan high above the petty and changing creeds which enter into the religious creeds of the world.—National Freemason, 1868, p. 325.

"If there should come a time when all the great mysteries of all the religions will be solved, and when the true religion has thus been found to rest, besides on faith, on intellect, then, no doubt, Freemasonry would become one institution with the church."—Translated from Allgemeine Handbuch, I., p. 433.

We draw the conclusion: Freemasonry is the unit of all religion, and embraces everything that is good and true in them. It is the right, most sublime, most perfect religion,—the ideal religion, which has stripped off every part that is not essential. There can be but one such religion, and this is in Freemasonry. This is the real secret of Freemasonry and kindred societies.

How does the Christian reader like the religion that Masonry thus presents? Has it any affiliation with the teachings of Christ?—and if not, has the Christian church any right to fellowship those who belong to such a Christless, murderous institution?—EDITOR CYNOSURE.

ALCOHOL AS MEDICINE.

BY REV. SAMUEL F. PORTER.

The editor of a leading religious journal writes to me concerning "Bible Temperance:" "You quote Prov. 31:4,5, which is a prohibition of wine: but you do not quote Prov. 31:6,7, which, it seems to me, use the same terms in the same sense, and commend the use of wine and strong drink."

I supposed that the use of poisons as medicine was well-understood, and so passed it by, for the sake of brevity. It was a mistake, no doubt; for the old rut is too deep to get out of easily. Strychnine, arsenic, mercury, and many other poisons, are used and recommended as medicine, but not as food. So with alcohol; give it to one who is nearly dead from accident, drowning or frozen, or internal derangement of the liver, stomach, or hypochondria, and just ready to commit suicide—give it to him, a few times, to tide him over the perilous place. But do not give to anyone as a beverage or food the wine that has the snake in it. Prov. 23:31,32.

To illustrate this, I recall a circumstance which occurred near Shabbona Grove, Ill., while I had an appointment there sometime about A. D. 1860. A young lady was bitten, one morning, by a rattlesnake, while on her way to the school-house where she taught. Her ankle immediately began to puff up, and she was in great agony. But an old settler began at once to administer dose after dose of pure whisky; and they told me it was wonderful how much alcohol she took before she felt it. At length she began to feel a little boozey, and they gave her no more; and the next day she returned to her teaching as usual. And this appears to have been the common treatment for many years while rattlesnakes flourished on the Illinois prairies.

Use alcohol, then, as other poison is used, cautiously, for what it is adapted to cure. Give strong drink to him that is ready to perish, and wine to those that be of heavy hearts; but refuse utterly, as a beverage, the wine that "moves itself aright" (has the bead); do not fool around with it, "for at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

Age after age, because men loved the snake-bite, they could not see nor understand the divine testimony. And so ruin and death have followed the example and teaching of those who were set for the salvation of mankind.

THE PETITION OF THE WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

for the protection of the home, addressed to the governments of the world, beseeches each ruler "to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals; to strip away the safe-guards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect the homes of the people by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory where his (or her) government extends."

This petition has lately received hearty indorsement from "The International Missionary Union," composed of missionaries from many lands, and the "Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor," at their annual meeting held in the city of New York. These, with indorsements from churches, missionary societies, peace associations, the Salvation Army, Good Templars, Y. M. C. A., and other bodies, aggregate millions who have thus said, we desire the complete banishment of intoxicants, opium and other narcotics, and, with the Woman's Christian Union, appeal to earthly potentates to exercise all power in them vested, to accomplish this deliverance.

We, therefore, most earnestly request that all those will unite with us in prayer that, as leading Christian women in the presentation of this petition, standing face to face with rulers, pleading for the protection of their homes, the Spirit of the Lord will move upon royal hearts to grant their request.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Martial fancies—A new danger—The beer garden in New England—Boston courts—The Iron Hall—The Homestead matter.

Longfellow long ago tuned his lyre to the praise of "the red planet Mars," and his lines to "the star of the unconquered will," with its noble closing stanzas:

"Oh, fear not in a world like this
And thou shalt know ere long,
Know how sublime a thing it is To suffer and be strong."

we naturally recall at the present time when so many telescopes are being pointed at our interesting stellar neighbor, and speculation in regard to it is running wild. It is funny, but not at all impossible, nor perhaps improbable, to imagine a poet in Mars making us the subject of his lay—especially if they have given us some euphonious name which lends itself kindly to the exigencies of rhyme—and weaving all manner of poetic fancies about the radiant, peaceful planet, their morning star, which shines down upon them without the slightest hint in its celestial far-off loveliness of all the wars and grim tragedies of which it is and has been the theater. Doubtless they have asked many a time the old, easily asked but never answered question, "Is it peopled? and, if so, by what kind of beings?" However, astronomers who believe that the stars are inhabited have not as yet made out much of a case, as only the tiniest corner of our system seems to meet the required conditions for supporting life, while the rest are glowing masses of fire, whose immense areas are still uncrusted over. So if a like state of affairs prevails through the universe generally, we must be living in the very day-dawn of Creation, with all its countless eternities of history lying before instead of behind us. Isn't there an inspiration in the thought? Doesn't it come across one in these wilting dog-day heats like a breeze from some mountain top, filling our souls with new vigor and hope? How much pleasanter an idea this than the common way of thinking: that we have been born at the fag-end of things!

The hot weather has crowded our sea-shore resorts to overflowing with tired rest-seekers who, I imagine, would in many cases have found more satisfactory "rest" under their own vine and fig tree. How few places remain on our beautiful sea coast where one can enjoy his holidays like "the country parson," with "no band of music," "no gay promenade," "no billiard room," "no hotel" to come between him and the grandeur of old ocean—only a postoffice, and that a mile distant! When one is tired, why go where seeing crowds of other weary people must only add to the sense of weariness? But the most unpleasant thing in relation to our crowded sea-shore resorts, is the steady encroachments of the smokers and beer-guzzlers. Already they have made of one of our most beautiful beaches—Nantasket—only an inferior Coney Island.

A correspondent of the New England Home has been recently making some grave statements regarding the increase of the liquor habit among women, and refers to the beer concerts in New England's metropolis, known by the rather vulgar name of "Music Hall pops," as an ingenious device for helping on this lamentable state of things. Young women of the higher classes, who would on no account drink beer in public, sit in the balcony to enjoy the music; but by degrees they yield to the temptation to join the throng at the little tables—just for once—and take, not a tumbler of beer indeed, but a sip of lemonade or Apollinaris water. And the mischief is done. Gradually, little by little, the desire for something stronger grows upon her, and the gay butterfly reverses the natural order of her existence, and becomes the crawling grub. Nothing could be more contrary to New England habits and ideas than the German beer garden; but there are many other things to which her whole genius and spirit is equally opposed, that have nevertheless gained a footing on her soil, simply because the danger was not recognized soon enough.

The Masons of East Boston are presumably very happy, having now taken possession of their handsome new hall, luxuriously furnished by their lady friends, who held a fair for this purpose which netted them nearly one thousand dollars. The fraternity, to show their gratitude, tendered the ladies a reception, which was attended by about six hundred people, and was a grand affair, but whether it was adequate pay for weeks of toil and anxious drudgery, is another thing. Still, if flattery of the most fulsome type could reward them, they ought to have been abundantly satisfied by the evening's oration which was made by Rev. Mr. Bodge, a Leominster clergyman, and formerly Prelate of the East Boston Commandery. He is reported as saying that "Masonry in every particular was for the sanctity and purity of home and of women." Such kind of talk will do very well for that class of women who are content to accept without question anything their lodge friends tell them. That the exact opposite is true, and that the Masonic obligation has shielded some of the vilest criminals against her honor and her home, thanks to the light shed by our Pole-star, she is beginning at last to see. The statement recently made by Washington officials that Boston's courts are the worst and most corrupt in the country, ought to bring a blush of shame to our cheeks, but will not be at all in the nature of news to the many who have vainly tried to get justice done them and found Masonry blocking the way at every step. "They want every penny that comes into their hands to turn into gold," says one of the government officials who is conducting the investigation. If it is a searching one, and these officials do not themselves wear the Masonic hood-wink, it will astonish the people with the flagrant wrongs and abuses shielded by Boston's miscalled "courts of justice."

I used to think the Iron Hall not inaptly named, for it has seemed to be the veritable bulwark and fortress of the endowment orders. I do not remember ever making any criticism of their peculiar management, when some lodge man was not all ready with the rejoinder, "Look at the Iron Hall now; how long that has been in operation; but it has always honored its promises in full, and is stronger to-day than ever." Even when these orders were going down, one after another, like leaves in an autumn gale, there were plenty to take a forlorn refuge in the Iron Hall, and think that because that still held its own the system must be right, in spite of Commissioner Merrill and other prophets of evil. To all such the news that even this—the oldest of the endowment orders—is tottering to its fall, the iron having been found to be after all mixed with miry clay, must have been crushing indeed. Mr. Merrill states that four years ago he had evidence that Supreme Justice Somerby—as his extremely inappropriate lodge title runs—was falsifying his reports. But what could be done? The laws of Massachusetts obliged him to go on, putting the seal of an official falsehood to these orders, and legally "approving" what his judgment condemned.

It is said that the strike of the granite-cutters has lost them already more than five million dollars in wages. Many New England people, while discussing the Homestead trouble, have congratulated themselves that such a state of affairs could not prevail in their own more favored section. I hope that such is the fact; and yet with hordes of foreign immigrants crowding into our manufacturing towns, and the power of the unions so great that the refusal of a "treer" to instruct a boy at a boot and shoe factory in Quincy, Mass., could close the establishment and throw two thousand men out of employment, it is well for us not to be too premature in our self gratulations.

It is a dark picture, taken altogether, and it is not lightened any by the incidental side-gleam thrown on it by the Iams-Streator affair. What must be the morale of our militia if Col. Streator and Private Iams are specimens!—the one an anarchist, the other brutal enough to train in the army of the Duke of Alva, three or four centuries ago? This is a question that must suggest itself to any thoughtful mind, and add a deeper cloud to the boding outlook. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, August 10, 1892.

Indian Bureau officials were surprised to receive a visit from four Pottawatomie Indians this week, and still more surprised when the delegation made known the object of its trip from the home of the tribe, in Wisconsin, to Washington. This tribe is regarded as being well-advanced in civilization, and has been self-supporting for nearly 60 years, and yet these four Indians came here to ask the Government to provide for the tribe. True, they do not ask this as charity, but claim it as the payment of a debt that the Government owes them, having in some way become imbued with the idea that a sum of money large enough to support the tribe in idleness is due them. They were very much disappointed when informed by the officials that the Government did not owe them anything, and could not undertake to support the tribe or any part of it. There is much curiosity on the part of the officials to learn where the Indians got the information that the Government was largely in debt to them, and whether it was imparted to them in good faith or for the purpose of making mischief.

The White House is in a dismantled condition, as all of it except the executive offices, which still remain open in charge of President Harrison's private secretary, is undergoing its annual shaking up. The carpets are up, the curtains down, and the mirrors and chandeliers heavily draped to keep off the dirt. It was expected that the interior decorations would be completed this summer, but there are two reasons why they may not be. One of them is the necessity for having the house in a condition to be thrown open to the thousands of old soldiers who will come to the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held here in September, and the other, the uncertainty about Mrs. Harrison's health.

The exhibit sent to the Historic American Exposition, which is to be open at Madrid, Spain, on Sept. 12, by the Smithsonian Institution, is a most interesting one. It aims to illustrate primitive American life at the period of the discovery and of the Spanish conquest. A marked feature of the exhibit is a large map, on which is marked every town, river, mountain or political division in America bearing the name of Columbus or Columbia; another is a collection of all the different portraits of Columbus known in America. The greater part of the exhibit concerns the Indians found on the continent by Columbus, and in addition to 2,000 photographs, some of them life-size, there are a number of lay figures, accurately costumed in aboriginal trappings, and a considerable display of objects representing the daily life, in both peace and war, of America's early inhabitants.

Mrs. Belva Lockwood, of this city, who sailed for Europe a few days ago, will attend the International Peace Congress, which opens at Berne, Switzerland, on the 22nd inst. She is a delegate from the Universal Peace Union, and also a United States Commissioner to the Berne bureau.

Evangelist John E. Ducket, leader of a well-known street-mission in our sister city, Baltimore, is at present in Washington, for the purpose of aiding in alley-mission work. He expects to remain several weeks.

Senators Jones and Allison, United States Commissioners to the International Monetary Conference, were at the State Department yesterday, to confer with Secretary Foster on the business of the conference, the date for the meeting of which is still in doubt. *

REFORM NEWS.

DOWN THE "Q".

FROM THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On the way to the earlier fall meetings of the churches I came on Saturday, the 6th inst., down the favorite Burlington and Quincy road to Kewanee. To Mendota my cheerful companions were Bro. W. H. Chandler, State Evangelist among the Congregational brethren, whose praise is in all their churches. Mrs. Chandler and other members of the family were with him, on their way to friends in Van Orin. He was anticipating with pleasure meeting Bishop Milton Wright, of Dayton, who was on the same day to reach Van Orin and dedicate a new United Brethren in Christ church next day.

Bro. Chandler spoke with deep feeling of the condition of many churches, not altogether of the Congregational order. Pastors seeking salary before souls, and the flock preferring apples of Sodom to the milk and-meat of the Word. "Remember Lot's wife," should be the motto over such pulpits.

At Kewanee the prevalent condition of pastors at this season—absence—left no opening for the morning, but in the evening a union service of the Congregational and Mission (Swedish) churches in the pleasant new building of the latter was an opportunity for the truth which was not lost, though others might have improved it better. Some, I know, went away thoughtful. Next day a long and earnest conversation with the editor of the temperance local paper proved this to be the case. Pastors Edwards and Wenstrand were faithful and helpful in the meeting.

Next day a drive to Elmira brought me to old friends of our work and probably secured a union Sabbath service at some future convenient time with the Presbyterian and United Presbyterian churches. The latter has now no pastor, and the Canadian Presbyterian church has been pastorless since Mr. Diarmid left.

At Galesburg, Wednesday, I was royally welcomed by Mr. and Mrs. Hammond. Pastors Haterins, Sturtevant and Bushnell were away, and advisers in their churches preferred that I wait their return. The Illinois Conference of the Swedish Mission church received me cordially as the representative of the Cynosure and the N. C. A. A short time was given to our reform, and the requests of the N. C. A. for a delegate to our next annual meeting, for sermons, resolutions and encouragement to our agents, were put on the secretary's table for a convenient time for action.

At Monmouth, Bro. Hugh Nash aided in securing a conference meeting Friday evening in the First United Presbyterian church parlors.

From Monmouth, Bro. Hugh Nash wrote that a pastoral conference could be arranged on short notice; and the rooms of the beautiful First United Presbyterian church were opened Friday evening to a small company, who considered the lodge system in the light of evidence which has not in any consecutive form found its way into print. I remain at Bro. Nash's hospitable home over the Sabbath, to meet three, and perhaps four, engagements. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN VERMONT.

GREENSBORO BEND, Vt., Aug. 9, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am, for the first time, in the State of Vermont. Mother and I have been here for over a week, enjoying the hospitality of Mr. Rollins, and working as the way has opened. Mother has addressed the children of two Sabbath-schools, speaking on the line of temperance. My addresses on the lodge question have been three. Others are planned.

This evening I speak, for the third time, in the United Presbyterian church at Greensboro. Last evening I spoke in the M. E. church, at Greensboro Bend.

As would be expected, quite an interest and discussion has been awakened, and Cynosure subscriptions are being secured.

Rev. Mr. McBride, pastor of the U. P. church, is doing what he can to enlighten the people of his community regarding the lodge evil.

Rev. Mr. Pierce, pastor of the M. E. church, had observed the evil effect of secret societies, keeping church members from the prayer meeting, and causing their spiritual decline, and was willing to speak out.

Rev. Mr. Taylor, pastor of the Covenanter church, at East Craftsbury, writes that an appointment is made for me to lecture there to-morrow evening.

We plan to go, the last of this week, to Dansville and Barnet, where Bro. Faris will probably have some meetings arranged.

In coming among the mountains we were reminded of the letter said to have been written by Patrick to his brother Jamie in Ireland. He was to report whether there was land enough for both to cultivate in this country. Landing near the mountains, he wrote his opinion in the following language: "Come on, Jamie; come on quick; there's so much land here they have to pile it up in heaps."

We are now between the Green and White mountains. Vermont boys should have clear heads and steady nerves. With no open saloons to tempt, with an abundance of fresh air and clear spring water, how could it be otherwise? The farms are rough, but tidy. One fails to see the old tumble-down houses, so common in many of our older-settled districts.

The devil gives his most profound attention where his kingdom is the most in danger. The serpent appeared in the garden. Here, as elsewhere, the lodge evil is creeping in, and binding those who will place themselves in his grasp.

At Greensboro, the Masonic lodge died of heart-failure. Its skeleton was conveyed to a neighboring town, Hartwick, where it awaits the fate of all the devil's works. It will be remembered that Vermont, with Pennsylvania, rebuked the murder of Morgan, and showed its disapproval of an institution sanctioning such a deed, by the election of an Anti-masonic Governor. Oh, that the people might be aroused to a realization of the danger threatening in the multiplication of these marshalled hosts of darkness, and throw off the chains that would drag them to the dark abyss!

As the fall campaign opens, we should plan for the future. Will it not be well to plan for the New York State Convention to be held in October? Those who attended the Binghamton (N. Y.) Convention, last February, will remember that the weather was unfavorable. Our friends near Walton, the place designated where we are next to gather, are many of them in the country. Good roads will be indispensable to their general attendance.

I shall be glad to co-operate with State officers and friends interested in arranging the annual convention for the best interests of all concerned.

After work here and in Boston I plan to return home, and shall then hope to so arrange my work for fall and winter that each move may tell for the right. Yours till the final victory,

W. B. STODDARD.

THE COLLEGE AGENT AT ELGIN.

When I visited Elgin the 30th ult., the pastors of the First Baptist and the First Congregational churches were in Europe, and one or two other ministers of the city also. But I consulted with and gave tracts to quite a number while there. The Rev. W. T. Jungk, who ministers to the St. Paul United Evangelical church, approved of the work of the N. C. A. Also the Rev. I. Wellner, pastor of the German Evangelical church, is a friend of reform.

The Rev. Philip Thelander has charge of a large Swedish Lutheran church, and with him I spent a pleasant evening. They have a rule, I believe, excluding adhering members of all secret societies from the sacraments of the church.

The pastor of the Grace M. E. church is reported to be a Mason. So, also, is the Presbyterian minister who preaches in Spring street while his church is building. The Rev. Mr. Rasmussen, who is pastor of the Norwegian Lutheran church, I found to be fully in sympathy with the N. C. A. and opposed to the lodge.

I saw the present preacher of the Second Congregational society, who is said to be a Mason; and he did as most secretists do, when they come in contact with anti-secrecy witnesses: he was very still, and said nothing pro or con, lest he should lose his jewel. There is something very ludicrous in the attitude of mature men, in this free country, who are in the grasp of the lodge. They must not discuss it with those who know about it; and its secrets are generally known now. If they deny the truth, they stand forth as liars; if they admit the truth, they are liars and foresworn. If they order others to be silent, they are not Americans; if they rush away to avoid hearing or speaking, they are bondslaves of the lodge.

On Sabbath evening I preached for the Rev. I. I. Spaulding, who is pastor of the Free Methodist church. He is an earnest reformer and a faithful witness for Jesus Christ. S. F. PORTER.

FROM THE WESTERN FIELD.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Aug. 10, 1892.

Last Sabbath the rails on all the roads to Denver were kept hot by excursion trains carrying people to the Masonic conclave in that city. Seldom have we known such public and notorious Sabbath desecration. If there were no other argument, this alone must stamp the lodge system as anti-Christian. Its conventions are so fixed that its delegates are required to travel on the Sabbath. This involves not merely their own members in this violation of God's law, but hosts of others who are tempted to take advantage of their excursion rates. How aggravated is the guilt of ministers of the Gospel and professed followers of Christ who have fellowship with such unfruitful works of darkness, and lend their influence to these organizations that despise the authority of Christ and trample upon his law.

The South Methodist church of the North Missouri Conference have established a new college at Albany, Mo. They expect soon to lay the corner-stone with Masonic ceremonies. A noted Masonic orator, named Fremont, it is announced, will preside and make the address. One of their ministers, Rev. J. T. Loyal, of Elmira, Mo., himself a Mason, complained that it would be far more fitting that the corner-stone of a Christian college should be laid by the church which builds and sustains it, rather than those of the Masonic lodge. It certainly marks a period of fearful degeneracy in a church when it thus prefers the ceremonies of a false religion, whose rites have all been borrowed from the secret worship of the sun-god of the ancient pagans.

The churches in the South are even more contaminated with this modern Baal-worship than in the North. I preached recently in Rev. J. T. Loyal's pulpit at North Grove. He had moved from Southwest Missouri. After the sermon, we dined with an ex-confederate soldier, David Reynolds, who took sides with me against Masonry, claiming that it caused much favoritism in the army. His pastor was profuse in his laudations of Masonry, claiming that one of his members had been converted under the impression received in the lodge. I furnished him one of Dr. Carradine's sermons, which I hope will be instrumental in opening his eyes.

Last Sabbath I preached twice at York, Mo., in the U. P. church. The pastor, Rev. J. T. Torrence, formerly from Monmouth, Ill., is a good friend of the cause. The collection of the morning service was devoted to the N. C. A. cause, in addition to which James Rankin gave $10. He is known far and near as an uncompromising witness against secret orders. Years ago he was at Dr. Rodgers' auction sale, at Blanchard, when Father James Bullock handed him the Cynosure, telling him to send for the paper if he liked it.

CORRESPONDENCE

A GOD-PRAISING PEOPLE.

BOSTON, Mass., July 26, '92.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The members of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church met in their vestry on Monday evening, for the purpose of making a recognition of the services of Elder John McLelland as precentor and teacher of music. In presenting him with an envelope, with certain contents, the pastor remarked: "Music hath its charms. David, 'the sweet singer of Israel,' charmed away the evil spirit from Saul with his harp and psalms; and when informed that the king and his sons had fallen on Mount Gilboa, he wrote a memorial ode entitled, 'The Bow,' and 'bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow.' In David's reign, the sons of Gershom, Kohath and Merari were 38,000. Of these he selected 4,000 to conduct the service of praise. He divided them into twenty-four courses, or bands, each having 166 members. The sons of Asaph, Korah, and Jeduthun, 288 in number, were leaders, making twelve leaders for each orchestra. On the occasions of the great feasts, the twenty-four orchestras were united, making a band of 4,000, accompanying the great chorus of the Levites. We can imagine what grand music they had. No wonder the children of Israel were so glad to go up to the annual festivals! But all this was typical. It looked forward to the time when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; when God's praise shall be one as his name is one in all the earth, and all the people shall sing together with one voice. The victory of Gladstone and the triumph of Republican principles in England, the two houses of our National Legislature, deciding to close the gates of the World's Fair on Sabbath, a signal victory for moral principles in this nation, are harbingers of the better day; and the Young People's Convention, in New York, in which 16,000 voices united in praising God, is a prelude of that day when such assemblies in every land will sing the grand, rugged, soul-stirring psalms of inspiration. And that will only be a foretaste of the sanctuary above, where the 144,000 stand with the Lamb on Mount Zion and sing the song of Moses and of the Lamb, while harpers harp, trumpets are sounded, and the music of the spheres accompany them.

"For all this the Covenanter church stands. It is a great privilege to be a Covenanter. You have been providentially appointed to lead the service of praise for us. It is an important position. That is the service in which all actually participate. It is not the design to repay you for your services. That we could not do. The purpose is to make a formal recognition of what you have done, and our appreciation of its importance."

In replying, Mr. McLelland referred to his experience as music teacher in Scotland, to the part he was called to perform in developing the phonetic system of notes, and to the twelve years' pleasant work in this church. He commended the faithful work of his pupils and expressed the conviction that no other congregation in Boston had better music, or even so good, as the Second Reformed Presbyterian. He humbly stated that his talent had been consecrated to the service of the Master, and he hoped to honor him in its use. He spoke out of a full heart, and every one felt drawn to him.

The readers of the Cynosure will be glad to know that this church, devoted to the cause of anti-secrecy, in which a mob tried to break up the first convention, and where the rights of those who mean to exterminate the secret empire were vindicated, is marching on.

The Traveller, for the past four weeks, has been giving large space to our National Reform sermons. Within that time I have preached twice for the Baptists, and in two Presbyterian churches. The door here is wide open for reform work. Yours, J. M. FOSTER.

CHARACTERISTIC MASONIC "ARGUMENT."

ELBURN, Ill., August, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A Masonic picnic took place in Whitney's Grove, on the 4th inst.

A Rev. Mr. Smith, from Wayne, made the opening prayer. He invoked the blessing of God upon the institution of Masonry, which was for the betterment of mankind.

He was followed by the Rev. J. M. Green, pastor of the Congregational church, at DeKalb, a Knight Templar, Odd-fellow, and Grand Army man. He began his address by saying: "I shall make you a very peculiar address. I am here at the invitation of my Masonic brethren." He quoted from St. Paul: "As a man thinketh, so is he." "An idle man's brain is the devil's workshop. Right thinking is right action. The central truth of Masonry is God, whatever others may say." He said that "the greater proportion of Masons have been and are the best men in the nation. Washington, Garfield, Arthur, and Logan, were Masons." He did not repeat the names of Benedict Arnold, Aaron Burr and Jeff Davis. "If what the enemies of Masonry say is true" (he continued), "I am unworthy of the position I hold. Those men who make charges against Masonry are calamityites. Everything is going to the devil on account of secret societies. The Bible is found on the table of every lodge."

That undoubtedly is true. But I know rank infidels who were sworn on that Bible who did not believe a word in it. He boasted of the benevolence of Masons; how they assisted the widow and the orphan; but the Voice of Masonry said: "Thousands of dollars are spent by Masons in building magnificent temples and in getting up great shows; but very little goes to aid the widow and orphan."

The speaker said: "A great majority of the Methodists and their bishops are Masons." He stated this "to prove that a great many good men are members of the lodge. I hope," he said, "that the anti-secretists will have an open door into heaven."

It was humiliating to hear an old minister of the Gospel eulogize such a Christless, oath-bound institution as Masonry.

The Rev. William Kettle, a Scotsman, pastor of the church here who has been a strong apologist for Masonry—such as were called "Jack Masons" in Morgan times—has, I learn, joined the lodge here. Most of his salary comes from Masons; but I think he will get very little support from the anti-secretists, if he is a Mason. He says that he "would not believe a seceding Mason who had violated his oath of secrecy."

I hope the Elgin Association will take strong grounds against Masons, as they did formerly against slavery, and allow no man to be a member who is a Freemason, or an apologist for Masonry. J. P. B.

CHAS. G. FINNEY DENOUNCED.

STATION, July 31, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Being a member of the M. E. quarterly conference at ———, near here, by virtue of being superintendent of two Sunday-schools—forenoon and afternoon—at two different places, I was in duty bound to report the condition, spiritually and financially, and the membership, etc., of both schools. I was pained, greatly pained, when I, for the first time, knew and saw that the presiding elder was a Mason, for he was swinging from his watchguard the "keystone," bearing the initials of "Hiram, Tyrian, Widow's Son, Sent to King Solomon."

If the good Lord will forgive me, it will be the last meeting in which I shall take part in that capacity, where the Masonic insignia is so prominent. At the next official meeting he will either remove this repulsive and obnoxious charm, or I will keep out of the conference.

I ate dinner at Bro. ———'s, with the elder; and after dinner, on the way up-town, I told him I was very sorry that he wore the "keystone." I told him some of my objections, and that I knew enough about the order to satisfy me that it is no place for a Christian; that I had studied the principles of the fraternity for twenty-five years, and had had several newspaper controversies with friends of the order for several weeks, filling column after column, and (not wishing to praise myself), was satisfied with my side of the argument.

He wanted to know where I got my information in regard to the lodge. I told him, from Chas. G. Finney and others. He denounced Chas. G. Finney as a scoundrel.

It is high time that all Christians should expose all these "unfruitful works of darkness," with their cut-throat and idolatrous practices. I feel that it is the duty of every Christian man and good citizen to assist in ridding the country of not only Masonry, but the entire brood of secret, hoodwinking orders. "Ecce Orienti" turns the Masonic sack inside out and shakes it, while the expositions of the many thousands who have left the fraternity completes the thorough knowledge of the order.

To call Chas. G. Finney, the great Christian writer and scholar, known and revered both in Europe and America for his learning and piety—to call him a scoundrel, shows that the order is in wonderful need of props to keep it from collapsing. ANTI-MASON.

THE LODGE IN POLITICS.

AVALON, Mo., August, 1892.

ED. CYNOSURE:—Gen. Weaver, a Freemason, is leading the turbulent lodge force in the Alliance, Knights of Labor, et al, "People's party." Adlai E. Stevenson, second on the Democratic ticket, denies the affidavits proving him to have belonged to a rebel league during the war, but makes a bad matter worse by claiming to be a Freemason.

Let us have the lodge relation of every leading candidate published in all reform and anti-lodge papers, and as widely as possible.

At Homestead, Pinkerton's guards shoot down lodge workmen; and the echo comes back from the far West that in Idaho lodge workmen shoot and kill free workingmen. It is a disgrace to our civilization to countenance or tolerate organized "unionism" that educates and incites "union" workingmen to mob and murder brother laborers who will not swear allegiance and surrender their personal independence to plotting conspiracy.

The outlook is that H. C. Frick and his millionaire associates will demonstrate the suicidal policy of lodgery in labor difficulties. We state without fear of successful contradiction, that the lodge has always left the labor question in a more deplorable condition than it found it. And in the end the people will side with free labor against lodge dictation and intimidation, and demand justice from capitalists for their employes.

If Pinkerton's force (as declared) is unlawful and dangerous, then other organized, officered and equipped military conspiracies, as the Knights Templars, Knights of Pythias, ad infinitum, are doubly dangerous, and should be suppressed.

When the authorities, through the powerful, well-regulated police system of the cities, cannot control oath-bound lodgery in their suburbs and protect life and property without calling out the militia, what must country people expect when ere long these lodge hordes, abetted by sympathizers in every community, shall over-run, pillage and burn the rural. Lodgery and anarchy are synonomous, however different they may appear to the superficial student. They have the same spirit of destruction and assassination. The "unionism" that prompts men to shoot free workingmen in Idaho, and inspires women to gouge out the eyes of helpless prisoners, would be a mild tonic to the throat-cutting and tongue-pulling, breast-tearing and heart-plucking, body-severing and bowel-burning teachings of Freemasonry. What a spectacle for all humanity to ponder—graduates of this awful Masonic inquisition posing as standard bearers for political parties whose voters have passed through our public schools and are able to read and reason! No wonder red-handed anarchy assembles on Sunday in Chicago to sympathize with lodge labor and denounce law and order. Yet papers, and ministers even, that see all this as plainly as others, are content to speak out timidly and at long intervals, and then imagine that they have done their duty. In the meantime the lodge is massing its forces, and in a labor cloak led by Masonic Weaver, a commotion is pending that will overshadow all others. Our "American Handbook" shows conclusively that Masonry hatched the great rebellion; that its lodge-rooms were the drill camps of treason; that lodgery is the embodiment of the Jeff. Davis system; and that the Alliance, etc., are Masonic outcroppings, akin to "unionism," and fit to be led by a Freemason. Let no anti-secretists be diverted from the real issue,—the all-pervading lodge. Piety and patriotism would arouse every one to renewed, aggressive, incessant activity. Turn your guns on the Christless, un-American lodge and let us stand shoulder to shoulder and show the people the situation as it is. We have been praying for years for this issue in politics. It is here and must be met; and promptly, or woe to Christianity and righteous government in the United States. It will not do to take it for granted that our free institutions can stand this awful tide of organized conspiracy and usurpation. The patriot will not need a second appeal at a crisis like this. M. N. BUTLER.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The August number of the Review of Reviews contains a character sketch of Grover Cleveland, written by Geo. F. Parker, who has recently edited Mr. Cleveland's speeches, official messages and other utterances. He gives a sympathetic and eulogistic, but careful and candid, sketch of the Democratic standard-bearer. One of its keenest articles of this number is a sharp, and very unsparing, attack upon Cahenslyism, by a prominent American Catholic editor, who declares that within a certain wing of the Catholic church there has been, and is, a most unworthy conspiracy to prevent the Americanization of European emigrants to this country. Co-operative Holiday Traveling describes the touring guilds of Toynbee Hall and the Polytechnic Institute, London, and the traveling clubs of Liverpool and Manchester. A unique feature is an account of the Spanish Infanta's Royal Charity Album, which she has just published in the interest of an orphan asylum. The leading articles of the month sum up the principal political, social, religious and literary utterances and achievements of the past few weeks. Published at 13 Astor Place, New York City.

The Cup-bearer, Chicago's pretty children's magazine, for August, is replete with summer-day stories, sketches, verses and pictures in great variety, with sunshine on every page, and a tone of love and truth pervading the pleasant lessons that it teaches. Published at 358 Burling street, Chicago. $1.00 a year.

Timely notes for the cultivation of flowers, fruit and vegetables, ornamentation and summer delights, interspersed with appropriate illustrations, make the August number of Vick's Magazine very attractive for a well-ordered household. Published at Rochester, N. Y. $1.00 a year.

LODGE NOTES.

"The Senate Chamber of the United States at Washington, D. C.," says the Keystone, "has been used more than once as a place of informal Masonic meeting. Such a meeting was held on March 9, 1822, called by such prominent brethren as Bro. Henry Clay, of Kentucky; Henry Baldwin, of Pennsylvania; Thaddeau Mason Harris, of Massachusetts, and others. And in the call for the meeting, they requested that it should not be published in the newspapers, but distributed among Masons, as a subject concerning the affairs of their own body."

The ceremony of placing the Cape-Stone is not of recent origin. In Gould's "Early British Freemasonry," it is said that Gilbert Sheldon, Archbishop of Canterbury, designed the Theatrum Sheldonianum at Oxford; and that the Craftsmen celebrated the Cape-Stone, and Dr. South delivered an eloquent oration. A letter from Geo. W. Speth, of the Coronati Lodge of London, to our Past Grand Master, Bro. J. C. Smith, says that Edward Strong, Jr., a Freemason, placed the Cape-Stone in the lantern of St. Paul's with his own hands, assisted by others of the order. That was early in the 17th century.—Hiram W. Thomas, Chicago.

A curious case at law, between the Freemasons and Jesuits of Madagascar, was recently decided. The head of the Jesuit mission in Madagascar was fined $200 and ordered to pay damages to the amount of $2,000 to the Freemasons in that country. Last year a lodge of Freemasons was established at Antananarivo, the capital of Madagascar. The Jesuits at once issued a pamphlet, in the Malagassy language, setting forth the "disreputable and loathsome proofs of Freemasonry." The pamphlet said that the evils of Freemasonry were too great to be described in detail, and therefore attention was confined to some principal instances. This pamphlet made a profound impression and gave Freemasonry a bad name among the natives.

After all, we think that the best lodge for women is the domestic lodge by the family fireside. And it is not a bad lodge for men also. The family altar was reared before the Masonic altar, and it should never be neglected. The man who neglects it entirely is "fit for treason, stratagem and spoils." The multiplication of degrees has much to do with such neglect, where it exists. If the degrees of Freemasonry had been confined to "the ever blessed three," thirty-one nights in the month could not be absorbed by the lodge. No doubt, so-called female Masonry—which is everywhere a delusion—had its origin in a protest against the continual absence of Egyptian male mystics from home, attending to the labor and refreshment of a thousand and one degrees. But the remedy was worse than the disease. "What is home without a mother?" There cannot be a "sweet, sweet home" that is deprived of both father and mother. Somebody must stay home. That somebody, of course, is the "better" half, for the worst half, the husband, is too apt to be away—at lodge.—Keystone (Masonic).

A candidate is recommended presumably in good faith, the application referred to a committee of three, who, at the next regular meeting, report favorably. He is elected and duly initiated, and, perhaps, receives his Second Rank. Then some brother comes along and raises a protest, claiming, perhaps, that the candidate should not be advanced further "on general principles." At once a very unpleasant surprise is sprung upon the lodge, and the result is that some good members go home "soured," and may stay away for months, or if they do attend, come prepared to raise 'hades' generally. Then there is trouble caused by the breaking up of friendships that have probably existed for years, and who can estimate the injury done to our order in this manner?

Then we have smaller attendance at our meetings, the loss of interest, and very soon a lodge which has been known as one of the best in the city where lo-

A boil hurts, but it helps. It shows you plainly what you need. It wouldn't be there, if your blood were pure and your system in the right condition. And they would be, if you'd take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

It carries health with it. All Blood, Skin, and Scalp Diseases, from a common blotch or eruption to the worst Scrofula, are cured by it. It invigorates the liver, purifies and enriches the blood, and rouses every organ into healthful action. In the most stubborn forms of Skin Diseases, such as Salt-rheum, Eczema, Tetter, Erysipelas, Carbuncles, and kindred ailments, and with Scrofula in every shape, and all blood-taints, there's nothing that can equal it as a perfect and permanent remedy.

That's the reason it's the only medicine of its kind that can be guaranteed. If it fails to benefit or cure, in any case, you have your money back. And that makes it the cheapest blood-purifier sold, for you pay only for the good you get.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 18, 1892.

THE LABOR DISTURBANCES.

The situation at Homestead, Pa., and at other points, indicates but little encouraging change. Unrest, dissatisfaction, and a cropping-out, occasionally, of anarchy, are still visible, although restrained by military power. A former employe of the Carnegie mills stated, the other day, that the union men were quietly waiting for the soldiers to be withdrawn and then a blow would be struck with greater effect than any ever before. Another Homestead man, one Clifford, has been arrested on charges of murder and aggravated riot, in the attack on the Pinkertons, etc.

Charles Rayburn, head cook at the Carnegie Steel Works at Homestead, struck Wednesday afternoon and left, taking seventy-one cooks with him. Later he swore out warrants for chief watchman Newton and four assistants, and they were committed to jail for a hearing.

Hugh O'Donnell, chairman of the advisory committee, returned to Homestead Thursday from his trip through Canada and the Northern States. He said he came back more than ever convinced of ultimate victory for the strikers.

Differences between the Amalgamated Association and the iron manufacturers, except Carnegie & Co., were settled, and the scale signed Thursday. The basis of puddling remains the same—$5.50 per ton—but the finishers accept a reduction of 10 per cent.

Grand Chief Engineer Arthur, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, interviewed at Cleveland, Ohio, Thursday, said his order had received no request from the Amalgamated Association to boycott Carnegie material; that the Brotherhood is under contract with nearly every railroad in the country to haul its trains so long as the companies live up to the terms of their agreements. These contracts are regarded as sacred, and not to be broken under any circumstances.

Later accounts state that a universal boycott against the products of the Carnegie works is proposed by the labor chiefs.

The situation at other points is thus stated:

Judge Beatty, of the United States Court, at Boise City, Idaho, held eleven of the Coeur d'Alene rioters guilty of contempt of court, and sentenced them to terms ranging from two to eight months each. Ten prisoners were discharged.

At the annual conference of the window glass manufacturers held in Pittsburgh, Pa., Wednesday, the scale of wages of last year was adopted without any change, and the rules and usages will be practically the same.

West Superior (Wis.) Switchmen's Union has agreed to handle no cars containing the product of non-union labor. This is in sympathy with the steel-workers' strike at that place.

Jefferson Iron works at Steubenville, Ohio, refused to treat with the Amalgamated Association, Thursday, and as a result the men left in a body. A long lockout is expected.

Speaking of the fact that some of the non-union men employed in the great mill at Homestead are being induced by the strikers to come out of the works, is accepted by the strikers as an indication that the Amalgamated Association is in a fair way to win its fight against Carnegie, the Inter Ocean well remarks: "The public will, of course, be glad when there is an equitable settlement of the deplorable trouble at Homestead, but it is difficult to see wherein the strikers will be benefited by the closing down of the mill. It does not appear that the company is receding from its declared resolution never to recognize the Amalgamated Association, and to deal with employes only or individuals. If the mill owners are as decided as they were, the association will gain nothing by the enticement of non-union men from their employment with the Carnegies. The strikers may prevent the operation of the mills, but they cannot compel their operation. Enterprises that give employment to thousands of workingmen can be broken up and the men forced into idleness; but there is no way of forcing capital into investments against the will of the holders of that capital. The Amalgamated Association may make it impossible for the Carnegies to keep the mills running profitably; but we fail to see in what way the workingman is to be benefited by the suppression of enterprises that employ labor. The question seems to be whether it is worth while to maintain the Amalgamated Association at the expense of labor interests in general. At the rate things are going now there will be a war between organized and unorganized labor, in this country, long before the struggle between capital and labor is ended. As organized labor represents less than one-tenth of the total labor of the United States, it is not prophetic of the security of 'unions' when they begin to practice against the interests of labor in general."

THE "UNION SIGNAL" AND "THE WAY OUT."

In the Union Signal of the 4th inst., is an able editorial paper on the Labor problem and "the way out." The article is replete with many just thoughts, but, we are pained to say, contains the following indorsement of the secret trades-unions: "It is evident that labor has as good a right to organize as capital; but if labor is to organize, it will not do for its objects to be defeated by the coming in of other laborers to take its place. There must be a solidarity among laboring people; if not, we should have the increasing barbarism of non-union men working for capitalists, protected by troops against their fellow-workmen. Of course, no workman can be compelled to join a labor organization, but we must say that we should think more highly of him for so joining."

We regret to find this in so excellent a publication:

1. Because it is misleading. Of course, laborers have as good a right to organize as capitalists, but neither has a right to be selfish, nor regardless of the interests of others. The law for both labor and capital is the divine law of love. Under no possible circumstances can its sacred requirements be set aside. Trades-unions are secret, usually oath-bound, and always selfish. There is in them nothing of that charity that "suffereth long and is kind," that "seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked." The very object of the secrecy is to promote the interests of a class, rather than the interests of the whole. Capitalists and laborers have a right to organize; but the interests of the one class ought to be just as sacred as the interests of the other; and capitalists have no right to organize against labor, or labor against capital; and hence all such combinations ought to be open to the world. No other association, either of laborers or capitalists, is in harmony with God's law of love. It is by mutual comparison and consultation that mutual rights are to be ascertained. It is by appealing to reason and justice, and not by conspiracy, or by force, that peace and harmony are to be secured. Our sister has manifestly overlooked the secrecy and selfishness of these organizations.

2. These secret orders do not have even the poor pretext that they are a government by the majority. For a while no majority, however large, can rightfully interfere with the ownership which every man has in himself and in his labor. The trades-unions constitute but a meagre minority of the laborers of the world. And this minority is arrayed not merely against capital, but other laborers, denying and despoiling them of their rights. But it is said that there ought to be "a solidarity of labor." This can never be under the system of secret trades-unions. Many are kept from membership by their ignorance, their poverty, and their weakness; and not a few of the most intelligent by their conscientious convictions. The only basis of "solidarity of labor" is one infinitely broader and nobler than any existing labor union.

3. But our sister says that it will "not do for its (the trades-union's) objects to be defeated by the coming of other laborers to take their places." The assumption is that the object of these organizations is altogether just, but, even if this were conceded, it would not follow that the means used for their promotion are lawful. We do not believe that either their objects or their methods (certainly not the latter) can be justified by Christian principles.

4. But it is said that if non-union men take the places of striking unionists, we shall have "the increasing barbarism of non-union men working for capitalists, protected by troops from their fellow-workmen." But who is responsible for such "barbarism?" Surely, not the non-union men. It is an evidence of good government, and not of barbarism, that such protection is afforded when called for. The argument reminds us of those who blamed Abolitionism, rather than slavery, as the cause of the late war.

5. But we are told that the editor would think more highly of a laborer who joined a trades-union than of one who did not. From this conclusion we must unqualifiedly dissent. Surely, our sister cannot have considered the nature, tendency and practical workings of those secret combinations, or she would not give such advice. (a) They are without warrant in the sacred Scriptures. (b) They are contrary to the example and teachings of Christ and the apostles. (c) In their nature and practical workings they are selfish "for the benefit of the order," and not for the world at large. (d) They trample the rights of non-union laborers, and deny to the youth of our land the equal right to learn trades and become skilled artisans. (e) They bind men under covenants that are often construed as contrary to the laws of the land, and which lead to their violation. (f) They tend to the subversion of all civil government, and to the reign of anarchy, rather than of righteous law. (g) Their history, for the last thirty years, is one of crime and blood. (h) They include some of the worst elements of society, and are largely directed by men of foreign birth who have no sympathy with American or Christian principles.

While we deeply sympathize with all wise methods to help the laborer, and especially with the work of prohibiting the liquor traffic, we cannot but regret that the Union Signal has so signally failed to give to the Gospel trumpet a certain sound.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Our dear brother, Geo. R. Milton, rests from his labors. He was born in England, we believe, but had lived and labored in the United States for many years.

In this vicinity his first pastorate was in Geneva; afterward he labored in Streator and Winnebago, Illinois, and then, for several years, in Nebraska—we think, in Hastings, of that State.

Leaving the place last named, he was called to the pastorate of the Prospect Street Congregational church in Elgin, about five years since. He labored with that church about three years, and then resigned, in consequence of some radical differences of opinion in the congregation. A number of the members desiring his ministry, withdrew and worshiped in the Opera House, and, later, in the Academy of Music. Still later, owing to difficulty in securing the public place of assembly, he preached in his own house. Some ten days before his death he was taken with typhoid fever, and at last he fell quietly asleep in Jesus, to wake, as we believe, in the resurrection of the just.

This is the mere outline of a busy life of fifty-two years. But who shall fill it out and record the temptations, trials, prayers, and victories of this career now ended? None can that do but the good God who created, preserves and will judge us all. Still, there are some things which we know and can say that may be helpful to others who yet live to battle with the wicked world that crucified Jesus Christ.

Our brother was a diligent and successful student of the Word of God. It was, during his whole life since we knew him, the book upon which he spent his time and thought. He took some views of Scripture which are held by those called Plymouth Brethren; e. g., the personal return of our Lord Jesus. In general, it may be said that he believed the doctrines commonly called orthodox, and that he held and taught them very strongly.

His relation to the Cynosure and the National Christian Association became intimate while he was pastor of the Bridge Street Congregational church at Streator. Since that time he has been at all times an open advocate of the truth as opposed to all lodges of whatever name. He was at various times a member of the Board of Directors of the National Christian Association, and at the time of his death was the chairman of that board.

His wife was the daughter of our dear friend and brother, Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, who preceded him, by a few months, to the better land. His association with him was no doubt one reason for the positive views which he held respecting the modern heathenism which prevails in this country under the general name of secret societies. In Elgin, as was to have been expected, the worshippers at lodge altars were very angry at him because of his testimony. The writer himself saw a widow at the grave of her husband stop a modern Woodman who was trying to read some of the lodge ceremonial, after having been told that no such exercise was desired. In that same cemetery the Woodmen were swearing at Bro. Milton, and one of them followed him about the streets with the purpose, seemingly, of assaulting him.

None of these things moved him, but he continued to declare the testimony of the Scripture against all Baal worshipers until his voice was stilled in death. His last illness was short, and the Lord whom he served was with him to the last.

He repeatedly declared his unwavering confidence in the word and work of Jesus, selected passages from John as a farewell message to his flock, and then fell quietly asleep. At his funeral Bro. Whittle spoke of his personal acquaintance and friendship for the deceased, and President Blanchard preached from the words: "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

SALOON-CURSED CITIES.

The saloon is prosperous, and, worst of all, it "has come to stay," unless by some system of "heroic treatment" it can be banished, which, at present, in its supreme power and increasing influence, seems almost an impossibility. The estimated population of Chicago is now about 1,500,000, and we have, within our limits, it is credibly reported, 7,042 saloons, supported or encouraged by wealthy brewers and distillers. This gives us one saloon to about every 212 citizens, including children. All the most eligible business street corners are sought for as locations for these dens; and the city is cursed with an ordinance which compels the authorities to issue a saloon license to every applicant of "good character." No appeal from that ordinance can avail, and saloons may be opened along every street and boulevard in the city, without reference to the will of the adjacent property owners. The situation is simply terrifying; mainly, because the saloon influence is so strong that no hope of the repeal of this infamous ordinance is entertained. For a world's fair city, the record and the prospect are bad.

At a moderate estimate, New York City can not have less, to-day, than 2,000,000 inhabitants. It also has 8,400 saloons, or about one to 238 persons. In this proportion, say what we may of Tammany and the bad government of New York City, Chicago shows a more depraved record and inefficient municipal rule than the principal city of the Union. Commissioner Meacham estimates that the saloons in New York City receive in their business over $54,000,000 annually. In New York and Brooklyn there are more grog-shops than there are public schools in the entire State; and we all know what an immense difference must exist between the moral and immoral influences prevalent in those cities.

Congress having adjourned without making the changes in the license laws rendered necessary by a recent court decision to close up the unlicensed saloons openly doing business in Washington, the Commissioners have tried to reach the evil by adopting a new police regulation, making the penalty for selling liquor without a license $100 to $250 for each offense, and imprisonment in the work-house for failure to pay the fine. The legal advisers of the Commissioners say they have a right to enforce this regulation, but its publication has not closed a single one of the numerous unlicensed saloons, and the Liquor-dealers' Association will carry the matter into the courts before they will recognize the authority of the Commissioners; and until the case is finally decided, every one of these pest-holes will be wide open. The House of Representatives is to blame for this state of affairs, or, rather, the two members thereof who objected to the consideration of the license bill which had been passed by the Senate, and which would have gone through the House and been signed by the President if they had not objected.

—"SERMONS AND ADDRESSES BY JONATHAN BLANCHARD," with a life-like portrait, is now ready at this office; price, 75 cents. It appeals directly to the feelings of all who knew this stalwart reformer and the good work which he accomplished, and possesses abundant intrinsic merit to insure its popularity.

—Of Butler's Handbook ("American Handbook and Citizen's Manual," by M. N. Butler, sold at this office), the Christian Conservator says: "We wish that our ministers and members would get this book. It would be an arsenal from which they could draw many arguments to convince men of the wrongfulness of the lodge—statements that condemn and doom the lodge to the destruction it deserves." Sent on receipt of forty cents.

—The United States government has been investigating the Keeley Bichloride-of-Gold Asylums and discovered that they all sell intoxicating liquors to their patients, without first securing the proper license. The institutions entered a plea that liquors were only administered for medical purposes; that unless spirits were given to patients they would die from the sudden cessation of stimulants, etc., but the government was inexorable; if intoxicant fluids are used in the institutions, the federal tax of a retail dealer ($25.00 per annum) must be paid. This decision will be variously discussed; but as long as the government is virtually in the liquor trade by its taxation of spirits, it seems natural that, like the saloon-keeper, it should wish to make its business as profitable as possible.

—Some writer has recently been making interesting comparisons between the amounts paid for standing armies and for educational purposes, by several nations. For instance: Italy expends every year $96,000,000 for her soldiers, and less than $4,000,000 for schools. In Spain it costs $100,000,000 to maintain the army and only $1,500,000 to educate the children; but then, the statistician adds, it is the exception to find a Spanish farmer who is able to read and write. Germany boasts of being in the foremost rank among the nations in the Kulturkampf of the world. Yet, she expends $185,000,000 on her army, while $10,000,000 is deemed sufficient for the education of her children. France maintains an army at an expense of $151,000,000 and supports her schools with $21,000,000. In the United States, some years ago, $115,000,000 was expended upon our public schools, while at the same time the expense of our naval and military forces was but $54,000,000. This gratifying exhibit, however, loses its force when we come to add to the cost of our navy and army, $150,000,000 per annum for pensions to ex-soldiers and sailors. Taking this into account, the actual figures do not place us so very far in advance of our European neighbors. If it suggests anything, it is an increase of schools and other educational facilities, and the reduction of standing armies to a "peace footing."

He did like it, and sent for it, because his past experience had taught him that the secret orders were a great evil.

James Bullock has gone to his final rest, but there are many such results of his labors which follow him.

It was an inspiration to be entertained at James Rankin's home and listen to his experience in testifying against these powers of darkness. He starts soon for New Mexico, with an invalid son. Let us pray that the trip may be blessed for his restoration to health. M. A. GAULT.

THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT IN CANADA.

BERLIN, Ont., Aug. 9, 1892.

I wish to inform the readers of the Cynosure that Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Boston, has just finished a course of lectures in this town of Berlin, Ontario, and this week is giving lectures in the villages in different parts of the county. He gave lectures in four of the different churches, and then three in the town-hall, and there was good attendance at all the meetings. On the Sabbaths he preached in the United Brethren, Evangelical, and Mennonite churches, acquitting himself as a minister of Christ. He gives the "trumpet a certain sound," "contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." He is not one of "the dumb dogs that cannot bark" (Isa. 56: 10), or "the watchman that seeth the sword coming and giveth not warning" (Eze. 33: 6), but, like Paul in his letter to the Ephesians (5: 11), admonished them to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them"—not "approve" them, as so many professed ministers of Christ do, even on God's holy day, and in God's house, preaching approvingly to, and for, the lodges, though it "is a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret." His labors here were very acceptable to most of those who heard him—and there were many who heard him.

As a rule, not many of the "craft" were out. They do not covet to have their lodges exposed to the "profane." Bro. Stoddard showed himself well acquainted and master of the situation. I think the lodges feel a little as they did in the days of Morgan.

"O, Jubela! and Jubelo! and also Jubelum!
We're in a peck of trouble now; the times are troublesome."

We are satisfied that few of those who heard him will ever join the lodge.

About a dozen years ago, Edmond Ronayne worked the three degrees of the Blue Lodge here, in the town hall, to large crowds, and did a great deal of good; but we realize that there must be agitation—continue to give the people light, to keep the young people out of the lodges. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Bro. Stoddard made himself and the cause a great many friends, who will be glad to see him and hear him at any time in the future.

D. B. SHERK.

FROM THE FIELD SECRETARY.

The Canadian campaign, carried on by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, shows increasing interest. He will not be able by the 1st. of September to occupy all the openings for this work which the friends are making. He has averaged an address for every day since he entered Ontario, and the hat collections have resulted in about $5.00 per meeting, thus paying all hall rents and other expenses.

Have faith in God; plan for great things. "It is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom."

There are many tokens of encouragement besides the one mentioned above. Rev. J. K. Glassford finds unexpected open doors and vitality in the southern portion of California. The same is true of Rev. S. Mathews, in Oregon.

W. B. Stoddard is meeting in Vermont with his customary success. Many, I am sure, will be interested to know that at his recent ordination as a minister,—Rev. Mr. Peckham gave the charge, Rev. A. A. Hoyt, the right hand of fellowship, and the prayer was by his father, Rev. J. P. Stoddard.

Rev. M. A. Gault writes that an extensive correspondence with the Nebraska friends indicates that the State is ripe for a convention.

Rev. W. C. Paden expects to begin a lecture tour in Iowa early in September. He and Bro. M. A. Gault are planning to co-operate in holding State conventions in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri and Kansas. We then expect them to move on to Illinois, Michigan, Indiana and Ohio. Two such men can do a great work for each State if we all help. Let those who live where a fair local attendance can be secured write to have a convention held at their place. Let those who would like to see these brethren or either of them in their place, though they can promise them no local support, and only a dry-goods box on the street corner to speak from, write. Let every one who wants to see the people saved from the religion which the devil is offering Americans to-day, write and help these brethren.

Rev. M. A. Gault will address a W. C. T. U. meeting in Thayer county Aug., 31st., and will attend the U. P. Synod at Kearney, September 1st., when he expects the arrangements for a State anti-secrecy convention will be perfected. He also expects to present the cause to a Swedish Lutheran conference in Phelps Co., Neb., next month.

While we remember these field agents often in prayer, let us also thank God that he has raised up such a company of consecrated men as S. F. Porter, J. P. Stoddard, Wm. Fenton, W. B. Stoddard, M. A. Gault and W. C. Paden to labor for home, country and church this coming year, under the N. C. A. banner. W. I. PULLIPS.

THE HOME.

GOD'S APPOINTMENTS.

This thing on which thy heart was set, this thing that cannot he,
This weary, disappointing day, that dawns, my friend, for thee;—

Be comforted; God knoweth best, the God whose name is Love,

Whose tender care is evermore our passing lives above.
He sends thee disappointment? Well, then, take it from his hand.

Shall God's appointment seem less good than what thyself had planned?

'Twas in thy mind to go abroad. He bids thee stay at home?

Oh! happy home; thrice happy if to it thy guest he come.
'Twas in thy mind thy friend to see. The Lord says,
"Nay, not yet."

Be confident; the meeting time thy Lord will not forget.
'Twas in thy mind to work for him. His will is, "Child! sit still;"

And surely 'tis thy blessedness to mind the Master's will.
Accept thy disappointment, friend, thy gift from God's own hand.

Shall God's appointments seem less good than what thyself had planned?

So, day by day and step by step, sustain thy failing strength;

From strength to strength, indeed, go on through all the journey's length.

God bids thee tarry now and then, forbear the weak complaint;

God's leisure brings the weary rest, and cordial gives the faint.

God bids thee labor, and the place is thick with thorn and brier;

But he will share the hardest task, until he calls thee higher.

So take each disappointment, friend; 'tis at thy Lord's command!

Shall God's appointing seem less good than what thyself had planned?

STRIKE, HEARTS OF OAK!

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

Years ago, when the black clouds of war swept over the land, our forces were massed on the battlefield of Gettysburgh. On the second day of the fight, one spot on Cemetery Hill was especially dangerous, as it was exposed to the full fire of the enemy. Regiment after regiment was sent to hold it, but were overpowered and beaten back. At last a Union General—I forget his name—sent to the General commanding the Eleventh Corps, saying: "Send me a regiment that won't run."

A few minutes afterwards, and the Sixty-fourth New York marched up the hill. Side by side they stood on the fatal spot, shot and shell hurtling about them. One after another the men fell, but the ranks closed up, displaying a solid front to the foe, and not a man offered to stir from the spot till the order was given to retreat. Then, turning carelessly about with rifles at "carry," they marched as unconcerned from the field as though they were on dress parade.

My brother, who was a private in that regiment, shared in the horrors of that day. Speaking of the hour in which they held that fatal position on Culp's Hill, he said: "We would have stood there until the last man dropped. I don't think one of us thought of such a thing as retreating."

We need just such fearless hearts to-day. In the language of Nelson, the English naval commander, our battle-cry should be, "Strike, hearts of oak!"

Are the times full of evil? Now is the time to show your strength. Have you courage? Rise and face the foe with a brave and fearless front. No matter though men may scoff and sneer, we expect they will do so, but for us, our duty is to quit ourselves like men and soldiers, and to look beyond the evils and follies of this world.

Strike, hearts of oak! God himself wields the sword! His guardian angels are around and about us. Not a tear, not a pang, is unmarked by him who is at once our Saviour and Captain. Strike hard—and let every blow tell! Satan fights hard, but God is stronger than Satan. His power is infinite; and if he is with us, who can be against us?

Strike, hearts of oak! Smite, and fear not! Foes gather about us on every side; but courage!

there is light beyond! Look up and be glad! Though the valleys be dark, on the hills the sun is still shining! What matter though the hills of this world be black with the coming tempest? The hills of God are all the brighter! May God give strength to the strong right arm and courage to the fainting heart, until Satan's empire falls, and the door of the kingdom of God swings wide to let the King of glory march through!

Work on, work on, but not for wages,
On burning sands and fields of frost;
It wildly round the tempest rages,
And often all but Christ seems lost,—
Work on, work on, the day is flying,
And scanty hire at most we give;
And some are dead, and some are dying,
But all who hear the message live.
Work on, work on, for night is nearer;
With patient toil and holy plan
God works with us, and what is dearer
To brothers than their brother man?

Steamburg, N. Y.

REVEALED BY THEIR SONG.

The Rev. Dr. A. A. Bonar, writing in Youth on the origin of the sacramental observances of Scotland, tells us that the fast day originated in the coming together of godly men in the later days of the persecution of 1660-1688, in order unitedly to praise God. Once, in a time of sore trouble, John Brown, of Priesthill, afterwards murdered by Claverhouse at his own doorstep, had gone out to a deep ravine on his farm where he thought that no one would be likely to interrupt him. To his amazement a sweet sound met his ear. It was not the song of birds or the cry of the plover. It was the voice of some hidden ones among the heather singing:

"Because I am brought very low,
Attend unto my cry:
Me from my persecutors save,
Who stronger are than I."

Thereupon John Brown responded:

"O let the prisoner's sighs ascend
Before Thy sight on high:
Preserve those in Thy mighty power
That are design'd to die."

To which the little hidden company, two Christian wanderers from Lesmahagow, replied:

"Though ye have lien among the pots,
Like doves ye shall appear,
Whose wings with silver and with gold
Whose feathers cover'd are."

Soon all issued from their hiding places, and with great joy joined in spending the day in fasting and prayer. Scenes like these naturally led to the permanent institution of the "fast days"—being found to be times of so much refreshing.

STORY OF "THE BIRD WITH A BROKEN WING."

One day a convict in Joliet prison picked up a scrap of paper from the corridor, on which were these lines:

"I walked through the woodland meadows,
Where, sweet the thrushes sing,
And found on a bed of mosses,
A bird with a broken wing.
I healed its wound, and each morning
It sang its old sweet strain;
But the bird with a broken pinion,
Ne'er soared as high again.
"I found a young life broken
By sin's seductive art;
And touched with a Christlike pity,
I took him to my heart.
He lived with a noble purpose,
And struggled not in vain;
But the life that sin had stricken,
Never soared as high again.

"But the bird with a broken pinion
Kept another from the snare;
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair.
Each loss has its compensation,
There is healing for every pain;
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soars as high again."

This man had been converted in the early part of his imprisonment, and the words came to him with great force. He thought of his sin, and realized how hard it would be henceforth to make his way in the world. He copied the stanzas and kept them carefully. When he came out of prison he resolved, God helping him, to preach the Gospel. Many looked upon him with suspicion, but God gave him friends, and he gained the confidence of people wherever he went.

In telling his experience he often recited "The Bird with a Broken Wing." Who the author was he did not know. At length, however, it was learned that the poem was written by Hezekiah Butterworth, the well-known editor of the Youth's Companion. He gives this story: "Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D.D., pastor of Tremont Temple (1872-1878), delivered a sermon on 'Samson grinding at the mill,' saying with reference to Samson, 'the bird with a broken pinion never soars as high again.' Mr. Butterworth said the words came to him as a lightning flash of truth. He went home and wrote the poem.

"Dr. Lorimer afterward went to Chicago as pastor of the Immanuel Baptist church. There, one Sunday evening, he preached on the Cincinnati riots. Speaking of the insidiousness of sin, he raised his finger, saying: 'It may be to-night there is a defaulter here.' He happened to point directly at a defaulter. It was God's arrow convicting the guilty one of sin. The man resolved at once to make restitution, desiring to cover his crime until able to restore all he had taken. But his crime was discovered. He pleaded guilty and took a two years' sentence to Joliet. This was the man who found 'The Bird with the Broken Wing.' It was a true picture of himself.

"He has been for several years now an earnest Christian worker, preaching much and with great power to audiences of criminals. And it is true of him as is expressed in the song:

"But the bird with a broken pinion
Kept another from the snare;
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair."

This be our loftiest aim, as it was of our dear Saviour, to keep back the young and unwary from the snares of the devil, and rescue those who are led captive by him at his will.—Selected.

ACTIVITY A DELIGHT.

It has been a common doctrine that man is ordained to work, and that just enough play is allowed to keep us from being too much exhausted with the monotony of daily toil. This doctrine reverses the natural order. We were created to play and work as only a means to fulfill our destiny. The best work is not only that which is training us to play but is itself transmuted into play. The intellectual creations we value most come when the mind is free and at play. In religion we can never be satisfied with any other condition than that which we may designate as religious play. God's service must become a delight or it becomes an offense. Man is created for joy and not for sorrow, for happiness and not for misery. This is far from being a refined selfishness, as moralists have sometimes maintained. Selfishness is antagonistic to life. The perfect life, the perfect joy, is in self-surrender. . . .

Wherever love is it bears the pain of others and finds in its self-sacrifice its highest joy and blessedness. It is an old lesson which loving hearts in every age have made familiar. It is taught in all its fullness in the life of Him who bore our griefs and carried our sorrows. In Him was the fullness of joy. Sin has worked universal toil and misery, but his deathless love shall work universal life and joy. In the strength of that love his followers will fill up the measure of their Master's sufferings; they will bear the wretchedness of humanity upon their hearts as their Master also bore it, but in the joy of the same loving self-sacrifice they also can anticipate the time when all things shall be subject to the love against which the gates of hell shall not prevail.—President L. C. Seelye, at Smith College.

A WORD TO THE ELDERLY.

Among all the housekeeper women, young, bright, active, sober, middle-aged, earnest, benevolent, and spiritual, there must always be some who are getting past the center of life's stream, and who are looking longingly at the quiet waters beyond the boiling, eddying, wildly hurrying tide against which they have for years bravely battled. Dear women, growing old, don't imagine that because you are 50, 60, or even 70, that now your rowing days are over, and you may complacently rest on your oars. How many women lose what brightness there is for the evening of life—and there is a brightness peculiar to every period of one's existence—by giving up! They give up their aims after mental improvement, their pleasurable pursuits of art, fancy work, or reading poetry, fearful lest such things may not comport with their self-made standard of quiet, idle, selfish elderliness, a state into which a natural inclination invites them to drop themselves. They give up the missionary society work, the Sunday-school and the temperance work with easy good nature, hiding themselves under the cloak of age, which they believe will piously repel every conscience-thrust, every protest.

I remember a dear, old grandmother, who, at fifty-five, sat down in her corner to be "an old woman," making patchwork there for the rest of her life, imagining that she was too weak and feeble to walk to her children's homes or to church, and growing irritable and dyspeptic for thirty-three years. I contrast her with some old ladies seen of late, who keep up at 75 the pleasurable things which they loved in earlier years: dress prettily, do fancy stitches, laugh and chat with the girls, attend every good philanthropic gathering, and have their hearts fresh and young after all the hardening, wearing things behind them. Don't give up until Providence shows plainly that you must, for of all nice things here below, a young old woman is the nicest.—Housekeeper.

ON HER LIPS THE LAW OF KINDNESS.

A little group of women happened to meet informally the other day in a restaurant up town, where all had drifted from their several engagements at the hour of luncheon. Their talk flew from one topic to another, and finally became somewhat personal, the name of a man known to the circle being the latest theme. This man had, in public character and career, managed so to act as to invoke the criticism of many thoughtful people, and to antagonize others by his manner of doing perfectly legitimate things.

One lady expressed herself very positively, "I thoroughly distrust —. I want no dealings with him. I have become convinced of his ingrained deceitfulness." Another said, "My quarrel with — is that he is so ill-bred. He tramples on the most elementary rules of good form." Others followed, and poor — seemed to have alienated all kindly feeling, in that assembly at least.

Among the number lingering to chat over the cups of tea was one to whom God had given rare grace, tact, sweetness, and a dower of beauty. Her entrance upon any social scene is always gladly greeted, and men and women alike acknowledge her gentle sway. She had not spoken at all, but in a lull of the conversation she now said: "I always think when — is mentioned of such a kind, unselfish thing he once did for me; a thing that cost him money, and time, and pains. I shall never forget how this act of his encouraged me when I had a great deal in my life that was depressing. He could so easily have been indifferent; but instead he was eager to serve me, and to do so cost him self-denial."

After this there was a hush. On her lips had been the law of kindness.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE STEPPING-STONES.

A little girl was sent on an errand one day to the neighboring village. Her path lay through beautiful fields. On her way she had to cross a wide but shallow stream. The bridge was a long way off, but there were firm, tried stepping-stones all the way over.

"Oh, I'm afraid!" said the child to a lady who was passing.

"But, you see the stones, my child; they go all the way across."

"The water is so wide," she said tearfully, looking across the stream.

"Yes, but it is very shallow. See how easily I can cross it." So, carefully picking her way, she went quite over, and then returned.

Very timidly the little girl entered the water.

"Just one step at a time is all you have to take," said her kind guide.

So one step followed another,—the first few were the hardest to take,—and soon she was safe on the other shore, smiling at her fears.

"It was not so hard after all," she said, looking back on the water. "Just one step at a time brought us over."

"Remember this walk, dear, when you have other hard things to do. Go forward, and the way will look easier and easier. When troubles come, as they are almost sure to do in this world, don't look at the waters before you, but at the stepping-stones Jesus places for your feet. The thing that we feared very often does not come upon us, or if it does, Jesus sends such comforts as we never could have imagined. Here is a strong, firm stepping-stone that has often saved me from sinking: 'As thy days, so shall thy strength be.'"

There came many times in her after-life when Mary remembered that day's lesson, and it brought cheer and peace to her soul.

TEMPERANCE.

TO THE RESCUE.

Dark is the sky of midnight,
Calmly night's hours have sped;
But, lo! mad shouts are ringing,
And flames burst forth o'erhead;
There's a tramp of gathering thousands,
And hot and stifling air,
And ghastly are the faces
That gleam amid the glare.

O grief to see the spoilage
The Fire Fiend strives to take,
But deeper now the wailing,
For human life's at stake;
Yet still the sturdy fireman
Seeks peril not to shun;
Again he's sought the conflict,
And fought with death, and won.

Reformers, to the Rescue!
Oh, hear that cry so dire,
"Intemperance is raging
A wild consuming fire."
Oh, hear the shrieks of victims;
Haste at that anguish cry;
For wrecks of love and virtue,
In ashes soon may lie.

Reformers, to the Rescue,
And shall the rallying cry
Ring vainly through our army,
Nor temperance men reply?
O hand, ye are not weary?
Nor plighted lips grow dumb;
For a thousand lives re-echo,
"In God's great name we come."

Then on, ye rescuing army,
True blows each sword must smite
Till, earth one field of triumph,
No foe is left to fight;
Then, when o'er each endeavor
Success complete we see,
Blessed in the land forever,
Our righteous cause shall be.

—Harriet Glazebrook, in Advocate.

WHERE DOES THE SIN BEGIN?

Where does a man cease to be a Christian in the following classification? Who can tell? He is a good, pious Christian and church member at the start, and takes the following steps:

1. Becomes a moderate drinker in social circles, at private houses, or at the White House.
2. As a moderate drinker he visits saloons.
3. Is occasionally intoxicated.
4. Is frequently intoxicated.
5. Is a common drunkard.

Has he ceased to be a Christian? If so, when?

ANOTHER PROBLEM TO BE SOLVED.

A church member and pious Christian takes the following steps:

1. Votes with a political party which favors, tolerates, allows and licenses, protects the saloon.
2. Signs papers aiding applicants for saloon license.
3. Openly advocates licensing saloons.
4. As a landlord, rents property for saloon purposes.
5. Becomes a distiller.
6. Becomes a brewer.
7. Becomes a wholesale liquor merchant.
8. Becomes a bartender in a saloon, or clerk or book-keeper in a wholesale liquor-house.
9. Becomes a saloon-keeper.

Has he ceased to be a Christian? If so, when?

Let some wise man who knows draw the line now, and show an anxious generation the right in this matter. With one consent all will agree that both have ceased to be Christians. When?

If you will not judge others will you not decide this for yourself? And if you draw the line and tell your next lower neighbor in the scale your decision, will he not remind you that the pot called the kettle black?—Christian Evangelist.

THE WAY OF A DRUNKARD.

Sin comes to a young man and says: "Take this glass, it won't hurt you. It has a very fine flavor. Take a glass in the morning; it will be an appetizer. Take a glass at noon; it will aid digestion. Take a glass at night; it will make you sleep well." You are in a glow, while others are chilly. How bright it makes the eye, how elastic it makes the step! One day you meet him and say: "What are you doing here at noon? I thought you were at business." "Oh, I lost my place." "Lost your place?" God have mercy upon the young man when, through misdemeanor, he loses his place. Every temptation takes after him. Hopped and handcuffed at thirty years of age by evil habit! Save that young man. He is on the express train that stops not till it tumbles over the embankment of perdition.

"The way of transgressors is hard." Sin comes to a young man and says: "Take a dollar out of your employer's drawer; he won't miss it; you can put it back after a while. Take another! Take another! Don't you see how easy it is? Hundreds of dollars added to your salary every year!" One day the police knock at your door and say, "I want you." "What?" "I want you." Discovery has come; disgrace, imprisonment, loss of the soul. "The way of the transgressor is hard."—T. De Witt Talmage.

RUM FOR THE HEATHEN.

No matter how earnest Christian missionaries to heathen lands may be, their efforts are often neutralized by the conduct of nominal Christians. Here, for instance, is the Bombay Guardian speaking about what it calls "the devil's missionary enterprise:" All vessels bound for West and South Africa, coming from ports in Europe and America, stop at Madeira. Here is the list of spirituous liquors which passed through in one week; it is taken from the daily returns posted in Liverpool:

960,000 cases of gin.....	£240,000
24,000 butts of rum.....	240,000
30,000 cases of brandy.....	90,000
28,000 cases of Irish whisky.....	56,000
800,000 demijohns of rum.....	240,000
36,000 barrels of rum.....	72,000
30,000 cases of Old Tom.....	60,000
15,000 barrels of absinthe.....	45,000
40,000 cases vermouth.....	3,000

NUGGETS.

There are 32,000 families homeless in London through intemperance.

Forty-one out of the seventy-four counties in the State of Mississippi are under prohibition.

Five hundred children under ten years of age were arrested in London last year for drunkenness.

The saloon-keepers of St. Joseph, Mo., have formed an organization for the promotion of temperance.

The juvenile branches of the Church of England Temperance Society number 3,469 with 416,280 members.

It is computed that no less a sum than £15,000,000 is annually spent on Sunday drinking alone in the United Kingdom.

Twenty-eight of the large breweries of Chicago, representing a capital of $20,000,000, have combined against the English brewer's syndicate.

The quiet little town of Hennepin, Ill., has had an awakening in the temperance cause. James M. Dunn, of Milwaukee, has been holding meetings crowded to overflowing. More than three hundred men and women signed the pledge.

The Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Minneapolis has just opened a lunch room in the midst of a nest of saloons. It keeps open from 12 to 12 o'clock, and its coffee cart furnishes coffee free. So the liquor traffic has its own weapons turned against it.

HOME AND HEALTH.

ABOUT SHOES.

Never try to wear a shoe too small, or that does not fit when first put on. Never let your shoe get hard or dry. Do not let it run down at the heel or the side. Never wear into the welt or insole. A shoe repaired in time will retain its shape and afford comfort, and will be found true economy. Never put wet shoes by the fire to dry, but dry them gradually and slowly. Never dry a wet shoe without first applying some oil and grease—castor-oil or tallow is the best. The steam generated in a wet boot or shoe will scald it and cause it to crack. Do not use too much force in polishing—a gentle brushing with a soft brush is better than the vigorous work of the bootblack. Do not allow a thick crust of blackening on your shoes. Wash it off occasionally and apply a little castor-oil—you can polish it over in an hour or two. Never try on or handle a patent-leather shoe when cold; always thoroughly warm it before bending the leather. A patent leather shoe put on in a warm room can be worn out in the cold weather without injury. Never put a good pair of shoes in galoshes; use an old pair for this, and withdraw the galoshes as soon as you enter a house.

HOW TO TELL OLD FURNITURE.

Do half the furniture-buyers know the difference between Louis XV and Louis XVI chairs? Or, in examining a cabinet, can they tell why it is called Rococo? The only difference between the two eras is that the first named furniture has lyre-shaped legs, while the other has straight legs a little turned out. In other furniture, cabinets, tables and sideboards the Louis XVI is a combination of his predecessor and Rococo. The latter is a decoration consisting of shell and scroll work. Empire furniture is that on which the pattern is inlaid in brass, and Marquetrie has adornments in different colored woods.

MAKE MORE OF RICE.

Dealers in rice would greatly increase the consumption of this food if, through the food expositions, or in other ways, they would show the American people in how many ways rice may be prepared for use. Wheat is our great cereal and it enters into thousands of toothsome and delicious articles of food. Rice is generally prepared in only half a dozen different ways by English-speaking peoples. It is, however, an elegant substitute for potatoes, with fowl, fish and meats, and in India is made into the most delicate cakes and articles of confectionery. It is the staple food of hundreds of millions of the human race, and a little popular education as to its capabilities and value as a food would soon double its consumption in this country.

NEATNESS IN GIRLS.

Neatness is a good thing for girls, and if she does not learn it when she is young, she never will. It takes a great deal more neatness to make a girl look well than it does to make a boy look passable. Not because a boy, to start with, is better looking than a girl, but his clothes are of a different sort, not so many colors in them; and people don't expect a boy to look so pretty as a girl. A girl that is not neatly dressed is called a sloven, and no one likes to look at her. Her face may be pretty, and her eyes bright, but if there is a spot of dirt on her cheek, and her fingers' ends are black with ink, and her shoes are not laced or buttoned-up, and her apron is dirty, and her collar is not buttoned, and her skirt is torn, she cannot be liked. Learn to be neat, and when you have learned it, it will almost take care of itself.

MILK DIET.

The use of milk and eggs as a diet or an aid in building up a patient is often a trial to the nurse. Many patients will take milk slightly warm, or even hot, and digest it readily, when cold milk causes distress. It is an excellent plan to rinse the mouth with cold, cool or hot water, as preferred, before and after drinking milk. The taste left in the mouth of many persons after a drink of milk, especially a small quantity, often causes the patient to dislike it. The secret of success in giving milk and eggs to those who would rather not take them is to prepare them in different ways. For a delicate stomach the white of the egg, well-beaten, added to hot or cold milk sweetened to taste, will often prove tempting, when even the sight of the yolk with milk is unpleasant. After a time a little of the yolk may be used, the white of the egg being added last and not stirred into the milk, but left at the top of the glass for ornament. With careful preparation and a little ingenuity the mixture can be varied. A champagne glass is of a convenient size for a small quantity, and it is better to offer a person a wine glass full than a cup or glass full when only part will be taken. A sick person likes to empty a dish; it is better to repeat a small quantity than to take more to the patient than he can use. A soft-boiled custard will prove a pleasant change from raw eggs and milk. This may be made tempting with white of egg.—Boston Cultivator.

FARM NOTES.

POULTRY.

Keep the drinking-water out of the sun.

Give the hens a place for themselves, and let the animals have the stables.

Old rusty nails or an old horseshoe put occasionally in the drinking-water is a great benefit to fowls.

Eggs are imported into this country every year. A "glut" of the poultry and egg market never occurs, although when the excess of "old hens" are being sent to market, prices are reduced for a while, but there are times when the prices exceed all other farm products.

Dampness in the poultry yard is the great assistant of roup, and should be avoided. On heavy clay soil, where the poultry man must build or do without poultry, a drain made of tile should be a feature of every yard. A sandy location is best, however, as it is dry and free from filth.

A neglect to supply water for a day, or the omission of a meal, will sometimes cause a falling off in the number of eggs. A neglect to clean out the houses, remove the surplus food, etc., may be very important factors in inviting lice. The old maxim—"Look after the small things, and the larger ones will take care of themselves," is as true in poultry-keeping as with any other pursuit.

Grass should be thrown to the hens in a condition so that they can pull it. A bunch of clover, with the roots and earth adhering, will permit the hens to help themselves; but to throw it to them by cutting it off from the roots is to cause the greater part to be wasted. A fodder cutter will cut the clover fine, when the hens will pick it up without difficulty. Hens in confinement require green food, and it should be supplied daily as a matter of economy.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

BEES.

"The old bees as well as the old queen," says George W. York, "leave the hive when they swarm. The young bees are at first nurse-bees in the hive, and attend to various inside duties."

Nearly one-half of the bees, it is thought, were lost throughout the country the past winter and spring. What a fine chance for those that are left! Honey will be worth something this year.

A farmer in Minnesota writes that the prairie and timber land is one vast flower bed. Had he his fifty colonies of bees his hives would soon be filled with honey. But the bees—he had only seven colonies left.

A honey-bee enemy in California is mentioned in Insect Life. Specimens of the insect have been sent to Washington for examination by the Entomological Division. Both the adults and the nymphs were seen feeding upon honey-bees in California.

The first annual report of the Illinois State Bee-Keepers' Association is an attractive volume of nearly two hundred pages. It contains the constitution and by-laws, act of last legislature in favor of the Illinois State Bee-Keepers' Association, articles of incorporation, roll of members, minutes of the meetings since organized and the affiliation of Northwestern with minutes of its proceedings, discussion of all the important subjects relating to apiculture, by prominent Apiarists, all the acts of the Bee-Keepers' Union, decisions of the Supreme Court, in cases against bee-keepers; a short work on bee-keeping which if followed is comprehensive enough for any amateur. Any person wishing to become a member of the Illinois State Bee-Keepers' Association and thereby receive the benefits to which members are entitled as well as the next annual report can do so by sending name and address and membership fee of $1 to the Secretary, James A. SPANISH LADIES

So famous for the beauty and abundance of their hair, consider Ayer's Hair Vigor superior to all other dressings. They prefer this preparation because it keeps the scalp cool, moist, and free from dandruff, heals troublesome humors, prevents baldness, and imparts to the hair a silken texture and lasting fragrance. It restores the original color and fullness to hair which has become thin, faded, or gray, and is so clean that it does not stain the most delicate fabric. Gentlemen as well as ladies

It restores gray hair to its original color, promotes a new growth, gives lustre to the hair, and cleanses the scalp of dandruff."—Bernardo Ochoa, Madrid, Spain.

"Over a year ago I had a severe fever, and when I recovered, my hair began to fall out, and what little remained turned gray. I tried various remedies, but without success, till at last I began to use Ayer's Hair Vigor, and now my hair is growing rapidly and is restored to its original color."—Mrs. Annie Collins, Dighton, Mass.

descent at the end of a halter and with no whip near him. Many horses when brought out of the stable are excited by the presence of strangers, and become still more so at the sight of a whip. A slight lameness may therefore be momentarily overlooked by the horse himself, just as a man, under strong excitement will sometimes forget a sore foot. Leading the horse down a slope will show any defect in his forequarters, and running him back will develop any weakness that may exist in his hind legs.—Scientific American.

LEACHED FERTILIZERS.

This subject was discussed at a Farmer's Institute by Professor Drew, of the Experiment Station at Cornell University. He said if manure is properly housed it will always have a close relation to the feed from which it is made. To avoid leaching, manure should not be applied until after the fall rains, or allowed to become dry by exposure. Keep manure from becoming too dry or too wet. Mix horse and cow manure, and keep under cover until manure is needed. The manure vat should be cleaned out once or twice during the winter. Spread the manure in winter as drawn. Land plaster is used to absorb liquids. Its absorbing qualities are simply wonderful. Another speaker—Mr. Richardson, of Orange county—favored the use of horse manure in the cow stable. He thought manure best when spread on the land as made. Manure spread in the fall before freezing gives more growth than when spread in the spring. His grass grows four inches higher by fall manuring.

A State anti-secrecy convention in Nebraska is among the anticipations of the early future.

We hope and expect to present a report of the anti-secrecy convention at Albany, Oregon, in our next issue.

We surrender several columns of this issue to reports from agents in the field, showing gratifying progress in the work.

Our publisher, N. C. A. Treasurer and Field Secretary, Rev. W. I. Phillips, leaves this office, this week, for a journey through Indiana and Michigan, in the interest of our reform work. We look for a good report upon his return.

The letters from Rev. M. A. Gault and Rev. W. C. Paden, on another page, refer hopefully to proposed anti-secrecy State conventions, this fall, in Iowa, Kansas and Missouri. Let the brethren in those States be strengthened and helped in their work by earnest prayers, kind letters, and material aid.

The grasping, mercenary spirit of trusts is finely exhibited in a Philadelphia dispatch, which says: An officer of the Philadelphia and Reading company is authority for the statement that the company expects to begin exporting anthracite coal to England early this fall. It is very significantly added: "The advantage of working up this foreign market is not confined to money to be made directly from such sales. The scheme's great value is that it will, if successful, afford relief from any glut in the market here and will enable the coal combination to hold home prices stiff." The simple meaning of this is, to furnish England with coal at about cost, as a device for keeping up the price of coal in the United States. In the meantime the trust will go on hiring miners for a mere pittance.

The Catholic Review thinks that "mystery is no objection to Christianity." Jesus, himself, tells us that he ever taught openly, and in secret said nothing. Let the Roman Catholic church be equally frank, and she will find that Christianity has no mysteries. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." With the divine mysteries of heaven we have now no business. They are for the saved hereafter. Let us be content with what we now know, using it to the best advantage and for God's glory, and waiting patiently, in obedience and humility, to be taken into fuller confidence by him when his kingdom is complete.

Masonic argument with reference to the merits of the fraternity is like dirty snow—off color; first, because Masons never argue, but become as dumb as an oyster when opposition to it is under discussion; secondly, it is un-Masonic to mention those secrets of the order that any one may purchase for fifty cents, and, thirdly, because it has no valid defence of the institution to advance. The weapons of Masonry are silence, prevarication and blunt denial.

Since the troubles of the "Iron Hall" secret endowment society began, they have steadily increased, and recent developments serve to place it and its operations in a worse light. Among later incidents may be mentioned the assignment of the "Mutual Banking Surety, Trust and Safety Deposit Company" of Philadelphia, in which the funds of the Iron Hall had been deposited by "Supreme Justice" Somerby of the society. Somerby admitted that $170,000 had been given to the bank by the officers of the Hall, ostensibly to prevent the assignment; and the money seems to have been well placed, since the receiver is believed to be entirely in harmony with the interests of the society.

While the daily press has for a fortnight or more given vent to outbreaks of indignation because the military commander at Homestead, Penn., severely punished "Private Iams," hanging him by the thumbs, and drumming him out of camp as an unworthy soldier, hardly a paper has dwelt upon the enormity of the offence for which he was subjected to such harsh measures. The facts are, that while he wore the clothing, arms and insignia of a volunteer soldier of the State of Pennsylvania, he was at heart an anarchist—an open one; and his retention in the militia was neither just to his comrades nor consistent with the safety of the commonwealth. He was simply a pest.

Last November and December, in several issues of the Cynosure, there appeared "A Mason's Experience," by Joseph Hopson, of the British army. Those who remember the thrilling adventures through which he passed in entering, enduring and leaving the Freemasons' lodge in India, will be pleased to read the article "Demonism in Freemasonry," from the pen of the same writer, which we print in the present number. What we herewith publish is the preface to a voluminous work expository of Freemasonry by this gentleman—the same book from which we also copied his Experience. This explanation will serve to make clear some of the author's allusions in the closing paragraphs of his article.

The "bloodless revolution" in Great Britain, wherein the administration of the Earl of Salisbury was superseded by the appointment of Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone (for the fourth time) as Premier, was completed last week by the selection of an entirely new list of government ministers. This shows what a powerful factor in the rule of a great nation the ballot is becoming as an enforcer of public opinion. Formerly, in France, as is now frequently the case in South America, changes of State administrations were effected only by intestinal war and bloodshed. Now, in France, the necessary changes in the government are peacefully wrought in one-day's voting. The inference is, that a republican form of government, or a limited monarchy, is preferable to the rule of "one-man power," or of a mercenary hierarchy.

In the Cynosure of July 7, reference was made to "Gideon's Band" (so-called), an inner circle of the heterogeneous and secret "Farmers' Alliance." This "band" seems to occupy a position similar to that of the "triangle" in the Clan-na-Gael, having power to devise and supervise the dirty work of the Alliance. It embraces in its membership all, or nearly all, the leaders of the Alliance. It contemplates the raising of a political legion of 300 men in each Congressional district in the Union, and its object is to strike both of the two old parties wherever it can. We purpose to print its obligation and much other information concerning it next week.

The annual synods and conferences which favor the anti-secrecy reform are giving earnest expression to the views of their churches upon this subject. The Lutheran Synod, at its recent session in Indiana, entered upon its records the declaration that "secret societies are un-Christian, and without the sanction of the Bible." The Free Methodist Conference of California, a few weeks ago, declared that "organized secretism is one of the most formidable foes of true religion. The principle is antagonistic to the family, the church, and the state. It fosters selfishness by promising unmerited preferment, by encouraging caste and clannishness and frequently offers hope of salvation without Christ." These are truths, expressed with the terseness of axioms, that should find sympathy and hearty endorsement in every Christian church and family.

The city Board of Education has completed its "school census" of Chicago, which fairly represents the present number of its inhabitants and their educational status. The total population is placed at 1,438,010, of whom 542,163 are minors. Of these, who are obliged to work and cannot attend school, there are 41,946; those who are between the ages of twelve and twenty-one and can not read or write English, 4,458; number attending kindergartens, 4,968; attending private schools, 6,575; attending church or parochial schools, 51,442; attending business colleges, 9,271; number of colored children, of all ages, 19,754; number of Mongolians, of all ages, 1,476. Total population under six years of age, 212,365. It would seem from these figures that those between the ages of six and twenty-one years, admissible to the public schools, number 215,596—quite a formidable army of ideas to be taught how to shoot!

DEMONISM IN FREEMASONRY.

BY JOSEPH HOPSON, BRITISH ARMY.

A person may read the Scriptures a thousand times over without realizing the fact that there has always been, is now, and ever will be to the end of probationary time, a body of men engaged in conspiracy and actual strife against God—against their Father, their Maker, the Most High, the Almighty—with the view of destroying all the works of his hands, of frustrating all his designs, of eventually overpowering him and holding him forever in a helpless magnetized state. Yet such men there most certainly are. These become satanically enlightened, and stand in Satan's interest. Satan taught them that they know that their souls existed in God in all past eternity, and that they are immortal. They therefore look on themselves more as embodied spirits than natural men, and many of them profess to know themselves to be members of Satan's destroyed host regenerated by him in human bodies, and they are accordingly resolved whether in the body, or out of the body, as when reduced to the state of separate spirits by the destruction of the body, to persist forever in their strife against God.

This, their strife against God, is in the 2nd Psalm called the vain thing which the people, kings and rulers of the earth imagine against the Lord and against his Anointed; and in the 21st Psalm, the mischievous device which they have imagined against the Lord, but which they are not able to perform. Isaiah says of them: "Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker! Let the potsherd strive with the potsherds of the earth. Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?" The same evil body is alluded to in many other places of Scripture. Thus in Deuteronomy it is said of them: "Their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah; their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter. Their wine (doctrine) is the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps. Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? To me belongeth vengeance and recompense; their foot shall slide in due time; for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste." The venom of the asp, it is said, brings over a person a pleasant sleep, out of which he never awakes; and so subtle and powerfully destructive is the doctrine of these men, when taken into the mind. The following Psalm perfectly describes them, and like the above, foretells their doom:

"Hear my voice, O God, in my prayer; preserve my life from fear of the enemy. Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity; who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words; that they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him" (old version, "hit him"), "and fear not. They encourage themselves in an evil matter: they commune of laying snares privily; they say, Who shall see them? They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search; both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart is deep. But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly shall they be wounded. So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves: all that see them shall flee away, and all men shall fear and shall declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing. The righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and shall trust in him; and all the upright in heart shall glory." Psalm 64.

In the old version, instead of "So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves," etc., we have: "Yea, their own tongues shall make them fall; insomuch that whoso seeth them shall laugh them to scorn. And men that see it shall say, This hath God done; for they shall perceive that it is his work." This is more consistent with what is said of them in the former part of this Psalm.

This evil body has long ensconced itself in Freemasonry, which, from being a merely civil institution, is now an exclusively mysterious one.

The Masonic body is composed of real and nominal Freemasons; and as the nominal are greatly in excess of the real, they screen the real from detection. These workers of iniquity, whom the Scriptures in so many places condemn, are now the self-styled "Innocent and faithful craft." Craft, indeed; yet not innocent and faithful, but in the highest degree nocent and perfidious, except to their Grand Master, Satan, and their own evil institution.

These works of an evil body carried on with the greatest plausibility and subtlety, are satanic, and their powers superhuman, and, because superhuman, are utterly incredible to most men. The incredibility of their powers and their proceedings, joined with the powerfully delusive influence which they have the power of exerting on the minds of men by means of magnetic influence, secures them from detection and enables them to carry on their corrupting and destructive labors in secrecy and security. They can not only annihilate the wills of all over whom they have power, but they can produce in them whatever feelings, affections, appetites, passions, lusts, tastes, fancies and whims they please. They can put a person over whom they have power in whatever mind they please, befool him and render him an object of derision. They kill many, and have committed innumerable murders by their arts. They can produce in persons over whom they have power whatever sickness or disease they please, and to all appearance perfectly natural, so that the real cause of the disease is not even suspected. They can beget in a healthy person such an invincible dislike of food that he shall pine away and die for want of nourishment; and they can beget in men the most perfect disbelief of their arts while they are in fullest operation on them. When they can make a man forget his own name; when they can arrest the half-pronounced word on his lips, while standing behind or at a distance from him; when they can make a man feel sorry or glad and to any extent they please; when they can exert perfect control over his muscular powers, making him strong or weak, rigid or supple; also over his feelings and sensations, making him at one time feel burning hot, and at another freezing cold, what evil can they not effect in the earth?

With great reason, then, has our Lord taught us to pray the Father to deliver us from the evil, not from evil in the abstract, as the translator of the Lord's prayer has put it, but from this evil body, from which he himself, in his last prayer to the Father, prayed him to keep his followers, saying: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." John 17: 15. These men, with Satan at their head, are unquestionably the evil from whom it is of the most vital importance to be kept. They have great reason for keeping their proceedings secret, for were they known to any extent, bad as the world is, they would be chased, like wild beasts, off the face of the earth, for their efforts are directed against all with the secretly avowed design of corrupting all, and bringing all into eternal perdition, and that without a thought of good to themselves beyond the material good which the temporal life affords, or the least feeling of pleasure beyond the fiendish pleasure which they take in the success of their devilish arts. "They shoot in secret at the perfect." That they do by means of the magnetic powers they possess. They can operate magnetically on persons at a distance, even on persons whom they have never seen, by their intensified silent will and forced faith. These are with them in incessant operation; sleeping or waking their malign wills are ever the same and ever in intense operation. "They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search." Freemasons profess to have the art of discovering new arts. These arts are new means of corruption and destruction, varied according to the customs and fashions of the day. Their powers over men are in proportion to the sinfulness or the worldly mindedness of those on whom they make their attempts, and, Balaam-like, their outdoor labors are artfully directed to lead all imperceptibly into sin, or beget in all a worldly taste, that they may have power over all. In this they have fulfilled these words of our Lord: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days (the days of persecution) shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Matt. 24: 29. One of the avowed works of Freemasons is to keep the world in darkness. All our stars are fallen, all our clergy are secularized and profaned, all are involved in the ruinous world of fashion. Where is the clergyman of any degree from the Pope and the Primate down to the lowest curate that does not pride himself and value himself more on being a gentleman than on being a Christian: a follower of the gorgeous prince of this world rather than of the meek and lowly-hearted Saviour of men, who had not in this world a place whereon to lay his head? But the fashionable world is not the place in which to look for divine knowledge; gentility, not godliness, is the great motive of all to outward propriety of conduct. Satan allows a semblance of godliness to exist in the world of fashion for the purpose of deceiving men and holding the simple in subjection; but if we look into a sermon which shows the amount of divine knowledge that a fashionable clergyman possesses, we see nothing vital in it, however wise his sayings and however learned his language may be. We can not say of him, he has the words of eternal life; words which teach us how to live forever or to attain to everlasting life in our natural bodies, which was the declared purpose for which the Son of God came into the world.

On this point see John 3: 16, 17 and 6: 38-40. But there are some exceptions; there are two classes of fashionables. There are those whose hearts and minds are wholly engrossed with thoughts of fashionable things: dressing, eating, drinking, and adorning their persons and places, to whom the world of fashion is their natural element, of whom the Psalmist says, "These are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches." Psa. 73: 12. And there are those to whom conformity to fashions is a grievous evil. To these the word is addressed: "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues, for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." Rev. 18: 4, 5. It is certain that the Babylon whose requirements are so fully particularized in the 18th chapter of Revelation is not the church of Rome or any other church, but the whole circle of the fashionable world, the great city, the whole body of the great distributed over all the earth, and especially over the Christian portions of it; for where the Lord records his name, there the Satanic body set up their Moloch.

It would be well for the world if the deceptive and corrupting power and influences of Satan and his confederates, his emissaries, his agents and adherents, were confined to the small territory of Rome, if all the rest of the world was free from his evil influence; if all the rest of the world was sinless, pure and holy, full of divine light, and walking happily and blissfully in that light; if all the threatenings of prophecy were limited to the territory of Rome, and if the city of Rome alone was to be violently cast down and doomed to everlasting burnings. But the Babylon affected by these threatenings is not the church or territory of Rome, or any other church or territory, but the whole fashionable world, all the ungodly great of the earth; and the fire that is to burn in fallen Babylon forever is not material fire, stored up in the bowels of the earth, as some of our divines suppose, but the unquenchable fire of the appetites, passions, and lusts which will burn in the bodies of her citizens when those bodies on her casting down become "the habitation of devils (full of everything that is evil and wicked) and the hold of every foul spirit and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird, wandering spirit; when the fruits that her soul lusted after are departed from her, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from her, and she shall find them no more at all."

The foul spirits that will have the citizens of fallen Babylon for their prisons will have all their own evil propensities, their appetites, passions and lusts, their maliciousness and wickedness, and will communicate these to every one in whom they will be imprisoned and thus produce the unquenchable fire that will burn forever in the citizens of fallen Babylon. Isaiah, in allusion to this burning body of men, says: "The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil." Isa. 33: 14, 15. It is an incontrovertible fact that all the blood that has ever been shed in war on the earth has been caused by the great of the earth, and they only gain by oppression. The poor of a nation never make war upon the poor of another nation; they never oppress, but are oppressed. Isaiah says again of the same everburning body: "And they (the righteous) shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me; for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be an abhorring to all flesh," that is because of the filthy nature of the lusts that will burn in them. All will be in the flesh, both the burning and the spectators of the burning.

There are among Freemasons those who profess to know themselves to be so many of the spirits of Satan's fallen angels regenerated in human bodies, which bodies therefore are already the habitation of devils; and being assimilated to him in nature by instruction in his mysteries, they cleave to him and zealously labor to maintain his evil cause and accomplish his destructive design in the world, which destructive design is the GRAND DESIGN of Masonry, the design on which the hearts and minds of Freemasons are ever set. That such is the actual fact will be abundantly demonstrated in the body of this work.

In the magnetic power of the Freemasons we see the secret cause of the utter corruption of the children of Israel in the days of their kings. They were led into sin by the sorcerous and mysterious heathen among whom they dwelt, and chiefly the sin of idolatry, which by the secret arts of these workers of iniquity, the Freemasons of the day, was heightened to a mania, such as we see now rages in the world of fashion, which, like an impetuous torrent, carried them on to corruption and destruction. Such was and such is the power which the Freemasons have, in animal magnetism, the means of exerting on sinful men, and, as said before, their outdoor labors are directed to lead all into sin that they may have power over all.

We read in the Revelation that there was war in heaven. "Michael and his angels fought against the dragon, and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven. And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth and his angels were cast out with him. Woe, it is said, to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." Rev. 12: 7-9, 12. Hitherto, Satan and his cast-out angels have escaped detection, nor has any one discovered or sought to discover the place of his abode, or the way in which he gives vent to his wrath. In Freemasonry, Satan and his angels and their works are to be seen.

Looking to the present state of the world, and the vain and unprofitable pursuits of men, I fear I am before my time in the possession of the knowledge which I here communicate, and that consequently little interest will be taken in the subject, and little credit given to my statements by the majority of my readers. The world is too deeply involved in satanic darkness to see into the subject, and too much under Satan's deadening and deluding influence to read these pages with any degree of attention. But I am satisfied that the time will come when the knowledge they contain will be duly appreciated by all the well disposed of the earth; that time in which the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. In that day when the Lord alone will be exalted. See Isa. 11: 9 and 2: 17.

If we would have character among the everliving inhabitants of the world to come, the earth in its renewed state; if we would be renowned for the performance of noble deeds through the countless millions of ages that are comprehended in the words ever and ever, now in our probationary life is the time to acquire character, and to perform such deeds as shall obtain us this renown; and this work of mine I feel to be one of such deeds; yet is it not my acquirement of such renown my motive in giving the knowledge of these mysteries to the world. My motive is my love of God and his most righteous cause, the maintenance of his cause against all enemies human and satanic, and the enlightenment of his people, that they may attain to the knowledge of everlasting life. We see not the glories to which we are heirs, we know not the object of our creation, we need rousing and enlightening; we need to be made willing and obedient, to yield to the leading of our Holy One in every particular whenever he visits us and to resist him in nothing, and this God alone can give us light, and grace, and sense, and wisdom, and inclination and power to do. He is our Creator first and last; he it is that works all our works in us; let us pray then that we may yet realize his utmost expectations of us, and fulfill all his desire of us as loving, dutiful, and obedient children, whose highest joy and greatest pleasure through the endless ages of eternity will be to glorify him our Father, our God, our life and strength and joy; to yield him pleasure, and to do always those things that please him.

We everywhere see the characters that men give their souls and spirits, for our present character will be our everlasting character. Now then is the time to reform our character, if it needs reforming; now is the time to choose the kind of spirit we wish our spirits to be through the endless ages of eternity, through the countless millions of ages comprehended in the words ever and ever.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

"THE BAND OF GIDEON."

A THIRD SECRET SOCIETY IN CONJUNCTION WITH THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

The original Farmers' Alliance, in order to extend its influence among other classes of citizens besides agriculturists, formed the Citizens' Industrial Union; and, later, to formulate another secret branch of the concern known as the "Band of Gideon."

We copy the following exposition of this new secret political factor, with its obligation, which will sufficiently explain its purposes and show how an iron-clad secret monopoly of this sort intends to oppose all other monopolies.

The special correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writes from Washington, under date of August 14, 1892:

"Gideon's Band" is the newest factor in this year's campaign. It proposes to smite the heathen of the old parties after the biblical method. This development of Alliance politics, as unfolded to the Tribune correspondent, is a remarkable one. Yet every detail can be taken as absolutely correct, and the Alliance leaders will be slow to deny the existence of the secret oath-bound order within the party. Congressman Livingston of Georgia, National Lecturer Willetts, Ben Terrell of Texas, and Jerry Simpson can enlighten the public if they will. Maybe Chairman Taubeneck has also heard of it.

Time and again it has been charged by the politicians of the two old parties that the order of the National Alliance and Industrial Union was being manipulated by certain of its leaders for their personal aggrandizement and preferment, but not until a few days ago were these complaints and charges verified, and the motor, the wheel within a wheel, by which the mass of Alliance men are moved, fully exposed.

The story is a strange one, and goes to illustrate the folly of the farmers in allowing themselves to become bodily incorporated into an order whose work is hidden from sight and whose public demands are both unjust and unreasonable.

This wheel within the Alliance wheel is a preferred oath-bound society, to the few known as the "Band of Gideon," which was organized by Dr. Macune and others at the Ocala meeting two years ago. It was duly officered at that meeting and embraces in its membership all, or nearly all, of the Alliance leaders. Its object is to strike the two old political parties wherever they may be in control. The plan of this secret society as laid down by Macune, its originator, is a simple one, but the results expected were to be widespread. It contemplates the raising of a political legion of 300 men in each Congressional district in the Union.

This secret inter-society seems to have been suggested by the biblical legend laid down in the book of Judges, wherein is recited the story of the overthrow of the Midianite and Amalekite host and the deliverance of Israel under the leadership of Jerubbaal, who is Gideon.

TEXT OF THE IRON-BOUND OBLIGATION.

Not even the despised "Know-Nothings" ever adopted an oath so sweeping as the one given below. The Gideons are not only required to subscribe to it but to pledge their lives to obey it. The form is a copy of those printed for general use throughout the country. It runs thus:

I, _____, a free citizen of this republic, do hereby, in the presence of God and these witnesses, solemnly swear never to reveal to any human being on earth any of the signs or secrets of this order or the existence of the same.

That I will not divulge by any means calculated to convey an idea, either directly or indirectly, the name of any person belonging to this order, or the method by which its work is conducted or any work that has been done or accomplished or sought to be accomplished.

That I will implicitly obey all laws, rules, and regulations of this order and unquestioningly carry out all instructions and commands from superior officers.

That I will, without any evasion or mental reservation whatever, speak the exact truth when conversing with a brother of this order under the

That I will immediately, upon receipt of any information which leads me to suspect the fidelity to the cause or integrity of any brother, report the same to my superior officers.

That I will not make or preserve for my own use or gratification any written or other evidence calculated to convey the names of brothers, or signs, grips, passwords, or other secrets of this order.

That I will never propose any one for membership who is not honest, faithful, true, and devoted to the cause which we espouse.

That I will labor for the accomplishment of industrial freedom from monopolistic greed.

That I will, upon any and all occasions, defend the principles of this order and the good name of the members thereof.

To all of which I most solemnly swear and sign my name, binding myself under no less penalty than that of being held up to the contempt of all mankind. And I further pledge my life, my liberty, and my sacred honor, and should I willfully break this oath I hereby surrender my body to the just vengeance of the members of this order.

FORM OF THE INITIATION.

Accompanying this oath is the printed initiatory form used when a new member or members are to be installed. An idea of the full scope of the work of the Gideons can be gathered from it. The document rules in this wise:

You are about to enter an organization that depends more upon the zeal, fidelity, and devotion of its members than upon their number. It is bound together by a solemn compact in which each member joins in a pledge of secrecy and loyalty as strong as can be expressed in language. The object is to secure a small band, devoted to the cause of humanity, the members of which can be depended on to act together in any emergency, forsaking every other cause and defending the principles of this band with their lives if need be. We read in God's Word as follows: "And the Lord said unto Gideon, the people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying mine own hand hath saved me. Now, therefore, go to, proclaim in the ears of the people, saying, whosoever is fearful and afraid let him return and depart early for Mount Gilead. And there returned of the people twenty and two thousand, and there remained ten thousand."

From these verses of divine writ we learn that the most important undertaking does not require the greatest number, but does require devotion, courage and strict obedience. If, therefore, you lack in devotion, or falter in courage, or do not yield full and complete obedience, you are at liberty to turn back with the twenty and two thousand who were rejected in the formation of God's band. After full consideration of this offer do you desire to proceed?

If the answer be yes, then proceed. Place yourself in this position and repeat after me as follows: [Here the pledge.]

You are on the threshold of one of the purest and strongest organizations ever formed. We will pause a moment that you may appreciate the full import of this obligation. It demands a surrender of all partisan allegiance to any party, and full and complete obedience, even to the sacrifice of life. If you hesitate for one moment there is now a last opportunity to turn back. Will you go with us?

If the answer be yes, then proceed:

The people are in bondage and they cry for deliverance, as Israel did 3,000 years ago. Just as they were driven from their homes, driven to resort in caves and mountain fastnesses through fear of the Midianites, so now are the people forced to yield their inheritance to satiate the greed of monopoly. There is now pending a revolution which, unless checked, will astound the world—corporate and money power on the one hand and struggling humanity on the other. The masses have been patient and forbearing, while the votaries of money have been arrogant and proud.

LIBERAL QUOTATIONS FROM DIVINE WRIT.

Has not God spoken truly in these words? "And they have said in their hearts, my power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God; for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day, and it shall be. If thou do at all forget the Lord thy God and walk after other gods and serve them and worship them, I testify against thee this day that ye shall surely perish. As the nations which the Lord destroyed before your face, so shall ye perish, because ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the Lord thy God." Deut. 8: 17-20.

This forcibly teaches us that God has a covenant with his people and that if they break the covenant they shall surely perish. The formation of this band dates back to the deliverance of Israel, and as God in his wisdom and mercy chose only 300 from the vast army of Gideon to overcome the mighty host of the Midianites, so has this been formed from the vast multitude of toilers that the people's inheritance may be peaceably and quietly wrested from the money power and forever protected from its greed.

As God chose only 300 to redeem Israel, demanding of Gideon that each should be honest, faithful, true, and devoted, so may we be successful if we follow out this divine precept and example. A vast multitude can only be controlled by having a few acting as one man; for just as Gideon invaded the camps of the Midianites under protection of secrecy and silence, so must we go forth to fight our battles. We must quietly band ourselves together and invade the camps of monopoly. With the information we can gain and a knowledge of their weakness and vulnerability we will be enabled to successfully overcome them.

More depends on the fidelity of this band than on great numbers. This 300, whose purity of purpose and abandonment of selfish ambition and preferment is so firmly established that neither the riches of Cræsus nor the kingdoms of the world can move them, will succeed.

The G shall be the superior officer in each Congressional district, and shall have full power to call meetings whenever the good of the order demands; and each member shall report promptly to him, and he will be held personally responsible for all initiations and the work done in his district. He will receive instructions from G, B or J during an interval of any session.

The initiation fee, $2, and quarterly dues, 50 cents, for each member of the 300, must be paid in advance to the G, who will remit on the first of each quarter, with his report, one-half the fees and dues to the National Secretary, P. O. box 13, New York.

In every instance the majority must rule, and it must be full, free action. As the success of our mission depends upon the courage and fidelity of its members, each G will see that only the very best material shall constitute his 300, and that these shall be properly distributed throughout his district.

J shall, upon receipt of information, call the G's of any State together, whenever any question of interest to that State demands such a meeting. G B shall be convened by J whenever questions of national concern, or affecting two or more States, demand such a meeting.

Each 300 may adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary for its government, the same to be submitted to J for approval before going into effect. Each G shall be appointed by J, and shall hold office during faithful performance of duty and the consent of his 300.

THOSE CHOSEN AS CHARTER OFFICERS.

As has been stated, this Gideon's band was originated by Dr. Macune at the Ocala meeting, and the organization was there perfected, only the most trusted leaders being qualified. Col. Livingston of Georgia, the present Congressional Representative from the Atlanta District, and at that period the President of the Georgia State Alliance, was chosen as the first Jerubbaal or Mighty Chief Gideon; and Oswald Wilson, whose alleged connection with the cordage trust subjected him to charges, was elected as the first Secretary and Treasurer. The charter membership embraced all or nearly all of the men who have lately become the political beneficiaries of the Alliance or who have been prominent in its counsels. Dr. Macune, Ben Terrell, Sledge Gwynpe, and Tillman of South Carolina, Livingston of Georgia, Willetts, the National Lecturer; Jack Turner, the National Secretary; Oswald Wilson, Jerry Simpson, Mrs. Lease, Chairman Taubeneck, in fact all the bright shining lights of the order, were advised of the existence of this inner political machine. They were invited to sign the pledge and to become the stockholders of its secret work and influence.

People who are familiar with the political revolution in the Atlanta district two years ago, by which Col. Livingston unhorsed and drove from the political field Judge John D. Stewart, one of the most popular members of the Georgia Congressional delegation, attribute his phenomenal success to the existence of a Band of Gideon in that district command by Gideon, the Mighty Chief, in person. Not a whit less remarkable was Livingston's victory two weeks ago over one of the most distinguished lawyers at the Atlanta bar, Judge George W. Hillyer, who offered himself as the Democratic candidate against the redoubtable Alliance man. In only one county of that populous district, the county in which Atlanta is located, did Hillyer achieve a success. The country counties, manipulated, it is believed, by this secret band, gave Livingston phenomenally large majorities, and his antagonist, amazed and disheartened, withdrew from the unequal contest.

It is not known at this time who are the officers of the Band of Gideon. Col. Livingston resigned his commission as Jerubbaal at the St. Louis convention, and his successor was chosen. Oswald Wilson resigned his commission as Treasurer at the same time, and his successor was named.

It is a mighty order, having its ramifications in every Congressional district where the Alliance gonfalon has been flung to the winds, and it will make its sinister influence felt in the Congressional elections this fall as well as in the Presidential election.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Boston's quandary—Mrs. Lucy Stone—The Borden tragedy—Wellesley graduates—An inquiry that might well be reversed.

Boston is in a terrible quandary over her narrow streets and what to do with them. The alarming number of fatal accidents which have occurred from "the deadly electric," to say nothing of the many—nobody knows how many—cases of injury more or less serious which never get into the papers, makes the subject one of personal interest not only to the native Bostonian, but to the multitudes of dwellers in suburban towns, who feel that they take their lives in their hands every time they go on a shopping expedition to the city and attempt to cross her congested thoroughfares. Remedies have been suggested in plenty, and now the one thing wanting is a plan which will suit everybody. The very latest is to widen Tremont, and, if it proves practical, other streets, by taking away a part of the first story from each building, in which case the upper one would jut over and form a covered walk supported by strong pillars much after the idea of Edward Bellamy in "Looking Backward." This would give Boston a touch of the look of Oriental cities, where "arcade" sidewalks, caused by the jutting over of the upper stories, have been the thing for ages. I can see nothing in the plan that is not feasible, except that the owners and tenants will not be likely to view it with much more favor than they do the elevated railroad. But private interests must give way to the general good; and Boston being the birthplace and center of the Bellamy school of social ideas, what better locality to try one of the least of its wonderful schemes and have covered sidewalks, under which the pedestrian can be protected alike from sun and storm?

With the advent of electric cars, all our older New England towns are being called upon to confront the problem of narrow streets. What a burden of financial expense and anxious thought has this strange lack of foresight on the part of our ancestors, who certainly had all the land there was, entailed on their children. The pity of it is that widening the streets in so many cases means the destruction of some old landmarks, rich in priceless historic memories, that must be ruthlessly sacrificed to such improvements. But desirable as it may be to save these, the institutions for which our forefathers went into lifelong exile over the sea are infinitely better worth preserving than the mere material walls of the buildings in which they lived, or the trees under which they ate; and I am glad to see that the old historic town of Lexington has put itself on record by prosecuting a speculator in real estate who was in the habit of bringing excursions from Boston to look at his building lots, and otherwise using the Lord's Day to further his sales. These are the kind of men who, having no regard for the institutions which her forefathers bequeathed New England, are the very ones whose vandal hands would raze every old house and church, and burying-ground, for the paltry dollars which the land they occupy will bring.

The 74th birthday of Mrs. Lucy Stone, that lovely and gracious woman, the very sight of whose face ought to be a talisman against any fear of growing old, was quietly observed last Saturday—Aug. 13—at her home in Dorchester, Mass. I remember, when a small child, reading the diatribes directed against her in the public press, and in my young innocence, believing that the newspapers always told the truth, thinking of her as almost if not quite an ogre. Such diatribes would read funnily enough now, and if their authors are living, are remembered (I hope) with shame and confusion. And nothing, by the way, will give one a more vivid idea of the changes that half a century, or even less, will make in public sentiment, than to look over a pile of old magazines—Putnam's or Harper's—and see with what flippancy the great questions of the age, intemperance, slavery, and woman—female suffrage, the intelligent reviewer always called it, were then treated by our leading periodicals. Nothing is indeed more noticeable than the general ignoring of that grand old Saxon word, woman, as a prefix, and putting in its stead a mere noun of sex equally applicable to all the lower animals—female suffrage, female seminaries, female education. I can well understand the disgust which a lady of my acquaintance once told me that she conceived for botany, after hearing it recommended as a study particularly adopted to the female mind! Mrs. Stone's retaining of her maiden name is criticised by many even now, who, when a popular actress or singer does the same, have not a word of protest to offer. Every little while some paper will print in its society column the idiotic question whether a married woman should call herself Mrs. John Jones or Mrs. Mary Jones. This silly fashion, decidedly more honored in the breach than the observance, of married women merging even their baptismal names into their husbands', is one of the small ways dame Fashion occasionally takes to remind them that they were once only chattels and nonentities. It is observable, however, that the women thus willing to blot out their personality, as a rule, are those who have the least personality to blot out; they are seldom or never the ones who are helping to mold the times, and who are felt as potent forces in the world of letters, philanthropy, or art.

There is one gleam of light on the dreadful "Borden tragedy" in the manifestation which it gives of that spirit of chivalry that a broader outlook on their age, and a fuller understanding of themselves, is developing in women. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Young Women's Union at Fall River, have held a special meeting at which they passed resolutions of sympathy and unshaken faith in Miss Lizzie Borden, "as a fellow worker and sister tenderly beloved," and assured her of their earnest prayers that she "might be supported under the unprecedented trials and sorrows now resting upon her." The last Woman's Voice puts in a noble and earnest plea against the sensational and cruelly false reports which have made the public ready to condemn Miss Borden beforehand; and asks, indignantly, "if previous exemplary conduct and right living count for nothing in these days of crime in which we are now living?" It would almost seem not; yet any common-sense person must see that circumstantial evidence, always unreliable, is peculiarly so in a case like this. The first thing thought of by a cool and hardened criminal—and no other could have committed the deed—would be to cover up his tracks in such a way as to throw suspicion on some one inside of the family. Meanwhile no one can predict the outcome, but every true woman's heart must go out to her with pity, and a longing to see her triumphantly vindicated from the terrible suspicion.

What do our Wellesley graduates do? Some people seem to have a vague idea that they are all seeking situations as teachers. By no manner of means. One of the blessed effects of a college education is to relieve that overburdened profession of the women "who hate teaching," but would in other years have been forced into it because there was nothing else for them to do. Some will be journalists, one or two will be doctors, one will settle on a western ranch, and three are going to take up their abode in college settlements, and study social problems as they are daily presented in the homes and lives of our city poor. It is the hope of Miss Vera Scudder, the originator and presiding genius of the Wellesley College Settlement in New York, to establish a similar one to be a beacon light amid the slums of Boston. Woman's brain will yet solve these knotty problems that have so long been the despair of our political economists. Poor Anne Bradstreet, and Mrs. Hutchinson, and Hannah Adams, and the multitudes of women like-spirited, who rest in unknown graves, would have rejoiced to see this day, but died without the sight.

Speaking of social problems, the Forum, in "Churches and Labor Unions," by Rev. John P. Coyle, gives the report of the Massachusetts Congregational Association, which sent out printed circulars to the different labor unions to inquire whether industrial discontent has produced any effect on the attitude of the working men of Massachusetts towards the churches. It struck me, while reading the article, that these learned ministers did not begin at the right end. An inquiry into the influence these labor unions exert for or against the churches would have been more to the point. The answers were, many of them, too curt and brief to give much information; some did not reply at all, which Mr. Coyle naively says was not surprising, considering their general dislike of the cloth. But did it not occur to him that if they disliked the clergy, they must have an equal dislike to the church, and the doctrines which she teaches; and that their subtle anti-Christian influence, far more than "industrial discontent," is what is constantly widening the breach between the working man and the churches?

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, August 17, 1892.

There is something radically wrong in the make-up of any person who does not love flowers, which have been poetically called "God's ornaments for mother earth," and such persons are rare. It comes natural for us to love flowers, wild or cultivated; it is therefore natural for us to be interested in the progress made by those who spend their lives in cultivating them. For that reason the Florists' National Convention, at present holding its annual meeting, is the centre of attraction in Washington. The convention was called to order yesterday morning in a hall profusely decorated by the local florists. Addresses of welcome were delivered by Commissioner Ross, representing the government of the District of Columbia, and by Assistant Secretary Willett, of the Department of Agriculture, representing the National Government, and responded to by Mr. E. G. Hill, ex-president of the association. The president, Mr. James Dean, of Bay Ridge, N. Y., then delivered a very interesting annual address. In the afternoon Mr. John R. McLean held a reception to the delegates and their families at his beautiful place in the north-western end of the city, and his collection of rare flowers was much admired. The program for the session, which will end to-morrow, includes papers and discussions upon almost every general question in which the amateur or professional grower of flowers of any kind is interested; and when the proceedings of the convention are published, the pamphlet will be a very useful one to flower-growers everywhere.

One of the interesting features of the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held here next month, will be the daily "camp fires" of the army chaplains which it is proposed to hold in the churches from 8 to 10 A. M. An effort will be made to get as many of those who served as chaplains in the late war to attend as can possibly do so, and ten of the Washington churches have given the use of their church buildings for holding these "camp fires," and many more are expected to do the same.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Buchanan, of New York, who occupied a Washington pulpit last Sunday, delivered a sermon that will be pleasantly remembered for "many a long day" by those who were so fortunate as to hear it. His text was from Job 22: 21—"Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace; thereby good shall come unto thee." In his introductory remarks, the speaker called attention to the fact that this affiliation with God was spoken of away back in the ages when men said the Gospel was shrouded, if prophesied at all. Then he spoke of the two extreme views of God which are most common among men, one making him too austere and the other making him too lenient. "Both of these views," he said, "of the Divinity are wrong. God is not only righteous and just, but tender and compassionate. Men without Christ should be reconciled, and the text, written in the days of Job, gives the promise that reconciliation is possible." Speaking of the acquaintance with God mentioned in the text, Dr. Buchanan said: "God is known in a number of ways, and is seen through his works: the rain that comes to renew the parched earth and fructify the grain and other growing crops; the storms that terrify and awe the men who go down to the sea in ships; the rotation of the seasons that unlocks the earth from the icy grip of winter and throws about it the verdure of the reproductive summer season, the seedtime and the harvest. Looking at all of these, the fact is visible that God is here; but, over and above all these, God is known and his presence felt by his revealed Word. The all-important thing, without which all other evidences fail, is, however, the Spirit of the Most High, which reveals to man the presence of his God and unfolds to him the constant presence of his works." The conclusion of the sermon was full of the most touching sentiment drawn from the life of Christ, who has realized the good promised to all those who will acquaint themselves with God and be at peace.

Right across the street from Wesley Chapel is Judiciary Square, and last Sunday evening the pastor held services in the open air on the square, the greater part of the congregation standing, while the simple services of primeval days—prayer, hymns and a sermon—was gone through with.

The idea of the Government issuing one dollar souvenir notes in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, which originated with Chief Meredith of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, has been favorably received here, and if it meets the approval of Secretary Foster, to whom it will be submitted as soon as he returns to Washington, it will be carried out. The Postoffice Department is to issue a set of souvenir stamps, to be ready by the time the Columbian Exposition opens, and if the souvenir dollar note is endorsed by Secretary Foster, they can be ready at the same time.

REFORM NEWS.

A WEEK IN IOWA.

AMONG CHURCHES AND CONVENTIONS.

DECORAH, Iowa, Aug. 18, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Here, among the hills of the Little Iowa river, in the northeast corner of the State, I am visiting a remarkable meeting—a general pastoral conference of all the Norwegian Lutheran ministers of the country. I am here at the request of Pastor O. Juul, of Chicago, and hope to secure the influence of this interesting body of pastors more heartily for our reform.

Last Sabbath I was at Monmouth, Ill., in the home of Bro. Nash. Absence of the pastors seemed to give few opportunities for our work. The Swedish Lutheran and Baptist churches welcomed a few minutes' talk, one at the beginning and the other at the close of the morning sermon, and in the afternoon I had the pleasure of speaking in the Y. M. C. A. meeting, of the danger of false worship, and the special temptations of young men respecting them. The remarks of the new pastor of the Disciple church added a forcible remark that God wants our whole worship, and cannot endure that it should be divided.

Dr. Campbell, of the Second U. P. church, returned Saturday with his wife from a three-months' trip in California and the Yellowstone Valley.

Dr. T. P. Hanna, of the First church, has been absent seven months. His health is much affected, and he may not be able to resume pastoral work for some time. Dr. Wishart, also, is in impaired health, and is now ceasing from his usual labors among the churches. One of his sons, assistant pastor of Dr. Dale in Philadelphia, preached in Dr. Hanna's pulpit morning and evening.

The Monmouth church buildings are finer than in any other town of equal size with which I am acquainted. Dr. Hanna's, particularly, has a very fine interior.

Among the Galesburg friends whom I met I must not forget Bro. E. P. Chambers, whose pen and voice are both ably engaged for the truth. Dr. Bushnell, of the First Congregational church, is absent and in ill health. He is spoken of as a man of courage and conviction. The last Illinois State Convention for our reform was held in his church. Pastor Hatterius, of the Swedish Lutheran church, is also absent. As was pastor Lindahl, and others before him, he is faithful in opposing the lodge craze that clouds our American skies. One of the M. E. pastors promised to announce any meeting I might hold, and urge his people to attend. The last year's Galesburg convention did not affect him favorably, but he restrains his young people from secret societies, and says he has no member under 35 years of age who belongs to one.

From Monmouth to Albia, Iowa, took the hours on either side of midnight, Monday, and about three A. M. Tuesday. I was joined by Rev. Dr. Thompson, president of Tarkio College, Mo., and Rev. J. T. Torrance, of York, Mo., both on the way to the Iowa Synod at Colfax, and the former being the retiring moderator. In company with Bro. Torrance I called on Rev. Jas. Shearer, a retired United Presbyterian minister, who desires a Sabbath given to our reform in the Albia church. The Methodist and Presbyterian pastors both regard the lodge with aversion.

At Des Moines in the afternoon I found an intelligent and earnest crowd of people at the University Place Christian church. Conferring with several members, they advised postponing the secret society discussion for the present, but they took a large number of the Campbell tract and put them in circulation. Drake University, opposite the church, is one of the educational headquarters of the Disciples. The attendance last year was some 1,200. The grounds are pleasant, and a new Science Hall has just been erected. The traditions of this denomination are with us against the lodge. Their history, as well as the Bible, which is held as their only creed, should make them earnest in promoting the cause we urge. It must be regretted, therefore, that some of their ministers are in the lodge and their members follow them. But the majority of the church is largely—thank God!—for the right.

The United Presbyterians of Iowa are meeting in a beautiful spot. The mineral springs of Colfax rise among the high bluffs on the left bank of the Checaqua river. Six fine hotels accommodate the multitude of summer visitors. Grounds have been partly prepared for summer assemblies and

CORRESPONDENCE.

THEN AND NOW—GREAT CONVENTIONS OF 1845 AND 1892.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 15, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—In 1845, forty-seven years ago this last June, I was called from New York to attend the great Southwestern Abolition Convention, held in the great tabernacle in the city of Cincinnati. It was an immense gathering of able, earnest and persistent men and women, whose souls burned within them over the wrongs and woes of 4,000,000 slaves in this professedly "free country," and who were unitedly and firmly bent on the utter overthrow of that "vilest system of oppression the sun ever shown upon."

That great tabernacle was crowded, morning, noon and night, with the most intent and enthusiastic audiences, composed of all classes; not only pro-slavery people of the city, but slaveholders from the South, with one ex-sheriff from Kentucky, who had just been on an unsuccessful expedition to Columbus, Ohio, to recapture two fugitive slave girls. This "two-leg'd bloodhound," chagrined at his failure, became so uproarious that he had to be put out by the police; and went back to Kentucky a wiser man.

This convention was presided over, with great dignity and grace, by that noble man and philanthropist—that repentant slaveholder who had emancipated three sets of slaves—Hon. James G. Birney, the Liberty party candidate for President. Hon. S. P. Chase was chairman of the committee who wrote the address to the people and the resolutions. Few conventions excelled this for earnest, able and eloquent speakers, such as the Hon. Owen Lovejoy (brother of E. P. Lovejoy—the martyr—who was so ruthlessly shot down by a pro-slavery mob at Alton, Ill., while defending his own free anti-slavery press;)—also Hon. S. P. Chase, Hon. Samuel Lewis, Dr. Brisbane, Rev. J. Blanchard, Dr. Bailey (editor National Era), Rev. John Pierpont, the poet, of Boston, Father and Mother Coffin, the noted Quakers of the “underground railway,” and Rev. John G. Fee, who so heroically carried the war into the enemy’s camp by establishing a college, at the risk of his life, for all colors, sexes and conditions, at Berea, in the then slaveholding State of Kentucky.

It was at this convention that I first met Bro. Blanchard, then pastor of the Sixth Presbyterian church of Cincinnati, afterwards called to Galesburg, Ill.; and still later, President of Wheaton College, Ill.,—the founder and many years the able editor of the Christian Cynosure, and recently, as you all know, at a ripe old age, gone home, full of honors, to his final rest, entering into the joy of his dear Lord.

When I first met Bro. Blanchard in Cincinnati, forty-seven years ago, then in the flush and prime of his noble manhood, he was earnest, faithful, fearless and outspoken on all the great and vital questions of reform—especially on the question of slavery, which was then violently agitating the country. His was the only church in the city that had the moral courage to open its doors and invite in the radical “Liberty Singer” to plead the cause of the slave with the power of song; and, notwithstanding the pro-slavery character of the city, the mobbing of Birney, and the throwing of his press into the Ohio river, and the threats of violence, the power of song was most signally triumphant.

The house was full and hushed, except when Whittier’s “Stanzas for the Times;” his “Yankee Girl;” “Pride of New England,” and other such stirring pieces brought out ringing applause. No violence was offered. We had an orderly and a most enthusiastic time.

Since then I have met Bro. Blanchard on many interesting occasions, at many reform conventions, in New York, in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in Louisiana, at New Orleans, in Chicago, as well as at his own home, and at my own; and always found him the same genial, earnest, broad and comprehensive Christian reformer; firm as a rock in his convictions of right and duty, yet kind and charitable to all.

His noble and manly bearing—his equable poise, his Christian example, his considerate and wise counsels—his masterly addresses, his clear and forcible editorials—all, all proved him a true amicus humani generis; and his life and works have made a deep and lasting impression for the good of mankind and the glory of God.

To-day not only Bro. Blanchard, but every one of the noble and devoted men and women who took active part in that memorable anti-slavery convention, are dead and gone but two—Rev. J. G. Fee, of Berea College, in Kentucky, and the writer of this.

“We a little longer wait,
But how little none can know!”

I used to be told, in those early days of the great anti-slavery struggle, amid pro-slavery outrages, mobs and murders, that “if I lived to be as old as Methuselah, I would never see slavery abolished in this country.” I have lived to see that day, and nearly thirty years beyond; and am now only up in the eighties,—some years behind Methuselah yet! So I say to reformers, don’t listen, or be bluffed, by the croakings of false prophets. I was as confident, then, of the near overthrow of the slave-power of which I sang, as I am now equally confident of the near overthrow of the more widespread, deeper-rooted and deadly foe than was ever chattel slavery—the LIQUOR POWER, for the overthrow of which I still sing, and for which I pray and vote.

We, old gray-haired veterans—

“May not live to see the day,
But earth shall glisten in the ray
Of the good time coming,
When the might with the right
And the truth, shall be;
And come what there may
To stand in the way,
That day the world shall see!”

And now, after forty-seven years I have, but recently returned from attending another great—in fact, a still greater reform convention in that same city of Cincinnati. The first, as I have just described, was a national convention of the “Liberty party” for the overthrow of the slave-power; this latter, a national convention of the “Prohibition party,” for the overthrow of the God-defying, law-breaking, body-and-soul-destroying liquor power.

It was an immense gathering of the ablest, most devout, earnest and determined Christian men and women in the country, crowding that capacious Music Hall morning, noon and night—the last night until three o’clock in the morning.

The addresses and discussions were of the highest order—eloquent and masterly; its resolutions and its platform of principles were broad and comprehensive, embracing about every interest of humanity which it is the legitimate duty of civil government to recognize and protect.

One plank more would have put on the capstone and cornice, and topped it out completely, and made it the most perfect platform of principles ever presented to the American people, viz., a plank condemning all secret oath-bound societies as unnecessary, inconsistent, and dangerous in a republican government—fostering vain show, wasteful display, and dissipation—a decoying enemy that lures multitudes of our young men into its dark and demoralizing meshes, and which seriously menaces our orthodox churches, and other Christian institutions.

The candidates nominated by this convention, for President and Vice President of the United States, General Bidwell, of California, and Dr. Cranfill, of Texas, are able, clean, noble men, for whom all true conscientious Christian men and patriots can cast their votes, unstained with the blood of liquor license, and at the same time vote for equal rights and exact justice to all without distinction of sex, color or condition.

And what a conspicuous, notable and commendable contrast does this convention furnish to the Minneapolis and Chicago conventions of the old pro-license parties! Here no liquor bars or bad-houses got a customer or a penny; and no smirch, or smell of rot-whisky, or vile poisonous tobacco was, found upon their garments.

PRAYSE GOD FROM WHOM ALL BLESSINGS FLOW!

God bless and prosper, and give glorious victory to the Prohibition party!

“Of what is small but living
God makes himself the Nurse!
While Onward cry the voices,
OF ALL HIS UNIVERSE!”

LITERATURE.

SERMONS AND ADDRESSES BY JONATHAN BLANCHARD, former President of Knox and Wheaton Colleges, and editor of the Christian Cynosure. With a Portrait. One Volume 16mo., pp. 191. Chicago: Sold by the National Christian Association, 221 West Madison street. Price 75 cents.

This comely memorial volume commends itself to the kind consideration of every true reformer. It contains a reflex of the grace and wisdom of its author as he made the pilgrimage from youth to the triumphant consummation of his long and useful career. It does not profess to present all that he wrote. The various expositions of secret societies to which he gave careful editorship, and the editorial columns of the Cynosure for twenty years, bear precious witness of his activity and earnestness in the work of reform. But this little book deals with other forms of his solicitude for the salvation and improvement of his race, and often reveals to us more of his kindly Christian spirit than one would naturally expect to find exhibited in the rugged warfare which he ever waged against the institutions of slavery and secrecy.

The compiler of this volume, who was for many years President Blanchard’s constant companion in the anti-secrecy work, informs us that the sermons and addresses included in it are selected from a large number of equal interest and ability that came into his possession. “The rule of their selection,” he says, “was simply to make these pages an echo of their author’s voice on living questions of Christian reform.” “These discourses cover nearly the entire public life of their venerable author, and show the force and symmetry of his character, the vigor of his thought, and the humility and devotion of his religious life.” In the words of Joseph Cook, “the principles he championed have most of them achieved victory, and the rest are on the way to it. His memory is an inspiration and a benediction.”

THE CROWNING SIN OF THE AGE: The Perversion of Marriage. By Brevard D. Sinclair, Member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science; Late Member of the Bar of the Supreme Courts of Ohio, North Carolina, and of the United States of America. One volume 16mo., pp. 94. Boston: H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill. Price 50 cents.

The “crowning sin of the age,” according to Mr. Sinclair, is the pre-natal murder of children by the consent and participation of the parents. The author is a Presbyterian clergyman at Newburyport, Mass., and the keynote of his little book is a sermon preached by him from the text: “Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death.” James 1: 15.

The largest half of the book, however, is a trenchant addition in defense of the author’s position, drawn from various statistical and other trustworthy sources, showing the widespread evil which he so righteously denounces, touching “The Decay of New England,” owing to this crime; “The Voice of the Church” on this subject; a consideration of the causes and errors of “Small Families;” and “Commendatory Letters,” from Cardinal Gibbons, Dr. A. J. Gordon, Bishop Vincent, Joseph Cook, Dr. T. L. Cuyler, Dr. Chas. F. Deems, Dr. James McCosh, Miss Frances E. Willard, etc.

The subject is of intense interest; but of such a nature that it is better studied in the book itself than discussed openly in the newspapers. But it should be thoroughly studied, to understand its importance.

IN BRIEF.

Dr. Sheldon Jackson visited Siberia last summer, and by barter with the natives obtained a few strong and well-developed reindeer, which were transferred to the island of Ounalaska, in the North Pacific, and placed in charge of a white keeper, who has fed them with his own hands. Dr. Jackson reports that he finds them this year as plump and vigorous as they could have been in their native haunts.

The Kiowa and Comanche Indians are still dying around Anadarko and about over the reservation, like diseased sheep. Measles is the prime cause of so many deaths. By marrying strictly within the limits of their own tribe from time immemorial, every member of each small tribe becomes of close blood kin to every other member, and rheumatism, consumption, scrofula, and all manner of blood taint and inherent weakness is steadily transmitted in increasing volume from generation to generation, until the wild Indian is now but little more than a physical wreck at his best.—Muscogee Phoenix.

Prof. David P. Todd, of Amherst College, describes in the August Century an ascent of Fuji-san, the sacred mountain of Japan. His expedition was one of several which have been made possible by the bequest of a wealthy and eccentric Boston gentleman, who left a fortune of $200,000 to a board of trustees, with discretionary power to employ it in establishing and maintaining an astronomical observatory on some mountain peak. The fund is now managed by the Harvard College Observatory, and experimental research has been conducted at high altitudes in different parts of the globe in order to show the precise nature of the improved conditions of vision, and to ascertain the best location for the mountain observatory.

Among the most important acts of Congress touching the welfare of the farmer are those which provide for the establishment of institutions of learning which are to give special attention to agriculture and the sciences related to it; for the maintenance of agricultural experiment stations which are devoted to the scientific investigation of agricultural problems; and for the elevation of the United States Department of Agriculture to a cabinet department. These three educational agencies, the colleges, the stations, and the department, are the most important ones now at work for the betterment of agricultural matters, for nothing can benefit the farmer so much as the knowledge of the best methods of farming for the region in which he may live.—Century Magazine.

About forty years ago a single pair of rabbits was introduced into Australia, and now the various colonial governments are wrestling with the question of a rabbit extermination. It is estimated that the progeny of two rabbits in ten years will aggregate 70,000,000. From 1883 to 1890 the Government of New South Wales expended over $4,000,000 endeavoring to exterminate the vermin. In addition to this, private enterprise was also directed to their extermination. Royalty was paid in one year on 25,280,000 rabbit skins. The royalty paid by government for killing a rabbit is two cents, the skin sells for six cents, and the meat for four cents. So that an active man can make good wages killing rabbits. In the skin trade alone there are ten companies in Australia and four in New Zealand engaged. One half of these combine with it the industry of packing the meat. They are not anxious to see rabbits exterminated.—Selected.

Richard Gibson and Anne Shepard were favorite and very diminutive dwarfs at the court of Charles I. of England. At a christening (says the July St. Nicholas), little Gibson saw the small Anne decked out in great splendor; and although he was still rather young to think of matrimony, he fell in love with her then and there. His affection was returned, and in due course the king and queen gave their consent to the marriage of the two dwarfs. Great preparations were made for this wedding, which was celebrated in the chapel of the Palace of St. James; and everybody who was anybody at all was bidden to the ceremony. Henrietta Maria, who, in more senses than one, was the reigning beauty of the British court, took great interest in the festivities, and arrayed herself in all her splendor and loveliness to bestow her blessing on the little pair. The little bride looked charming in a white satin dress with a very long train, and the tiny groom wore a white satin waistcoat with trimmings of satin. His hose and breeches were of white silk, and diamond buckles sparkled in his tiny shoes. The dwarfs were a dainty pair, and created a sensation as they stood before the clergyman exchanging their vows. King Charles, very handsome, very graceful, and looking every inch a king, gave away the bride.

THE WESLEYANS AND SECRECY.

A staunch Wesleyan, J. B. Wharton, of Tippicanoe, Ohio, writes: "It has been said to me that we have as many preachers, according to our numbers, that belong to secret orders, as any church. I replied, that to my knowledge we haven't one from Maine to Mexico that is an adhering Mason or Odd-fellow or Knight of Pythias. One M. E. preacher said he knew our ministers were Masons, for they gave him the grip. I replied that I could do that too, and yet was never in a lodge in my life, and never expected to be. . . . The reason I never joined a secret society is that a Christian man has no use for them. We are to shun every appearance of evil, and have no fellowship with the unfruitful powers of darkness, but rather reprove them."

The editor of the Wesleyan Methodist, to whom this letter was addressed, challenges "any Mason or Odd-fellow in America to prove that there is a Wesleyan Methodist minister in good standing in all our denomination who is a Mason or an Odd-fellow, or a member of any other lodge. We call for the evidence, the name and location of the lodge, the name of the man and his present standing in the lodge. Will any one arise and give us the evidence? Until the evidence is produced we shall regard those who assert that we have ministers in good standing in our churches and conferences, who are members of secret societies, as being untruthful."

This challenge will remain unanswered.

The stand taken against Masonry and all other secret societies by the Wesleyans, the Covenanters, the Free Methodists, the Lutherans, and a few other godly denominations, is as righteous as it is impregnable. It is no time for Christian churches to dally with paganism in any form, or allow it to fatten upon their substance. The line that binds any orthodox church to the lodge should be quickly severed, lest they drift, together, to perdition.

FREE SCHOOLS IN MANITOBA.

In the Cynosure for June 23, 1892, we gave a succinct history of the school war in Canada, and especially in the Province of Manitoba, between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants. The latter, under a loud popular demand for a unified school system, assumed the power to abolish the separate, or parochial, schools. The Roman Catholics contested the validity of the new law; and although the provincial courts decided against them, the Supreme Court of Canada, on appeal, ruled in their favor, and construed the law as a measure covering and protecting the parochial schools. The provincial government then appealed the case to the highest court in the British empire, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and quite recently it handed down its decision, approving the provincial law, which abolishes the separate or sectarian schools. The Roman Catholics can now cast themselves upon the Dominion Parliament, which, while it cannot set aside the judgment under the appeal, may be induced to petition the British Parliament to legalize separate schools in Manitoba. If this is done, the question will be again unsettled; but there is little cause to believe that the appeal to Parliament in England will be sustained in opposition to the decision of the Privy Council. For the present, however, the free school is in the ascendant in the province.

THE DEATH OF DR. MILTON F. COE.

Dr. Milton F. Coe, one of our brightest and best young men, has been suddenly called away from earth to heaven. He came to WHEATON COLLEGE from his home in New York State, about 881. In college he was altogether an exceptional man, so studious, cherry, bright, Christian and helpful, that his influence in all lines was helpful to both teachers and his fellow-pupils.

After his graduation he began his medical studies at the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Chicago. Here, also, he was a straightforward, out-and-out Christian man. Graduating with honor, he began practice on the South Side, his office being at the corner of Oakwood and Cottage Grove avenues. His excellence as a man and a physician, together with the kind providence of God, gave him a great professional success. His practice grew steadily from the beginning, and he had already been appointed a lecturer in the College of Physicians and Surgeons and had received the degree Artium Magistri, causa honoris, from his Alma Mater.

He was married, in 1886, to Miss Jessie Hiatt, youngest daughter of Dr. A. H. Hiatt, Professor of Physiology and Hygiene in Wheaton College. She was a brave and helpful companion of his brief but honorable and successful career, and now, with their boy, waits the reunion that surely comes in the presence of our Lord Jesus. It is a comfort to her, and to the many who truly sorrow with her, that the earthly life now ended was so true and manly and Christian.

When Dr. Coe first entered practice, the insurance lodges which are now promoting paganism by making life insurance one means of coaxing young men into their lodges, asked him to unite, and offered to make him their medical examiner if he would worship at their altar. It was a position which would have paid him one thousand dollars a year, when his income was only six hundred; but he said, "No." As he stands to-day in the presence of our glorified Lord, how sweet the recollection of that "No" must be!

He died of pneumonia, after a short illness, at his home on Drexel Boulevard. His funeral services were attended by delegates from the South Side Medical Association and many friends. The exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. Scott, pastor of the South Congregational church, of which he was a member, and brief remarks were made by President Blanchard. He was laid to rest in Oakwood Cemetery, a beautiful spot not far distant from the home and friends he loved.

But though thus fallen on sleep his work is not at all done. He serves a Master who does not permit his followers to die. In ways unknown, in hearts unnamed, the influence of his pure and helpful life will be felt; and who shall set bounds to the work which his unencumbered spirit may perform?

—A dispatch from Evansville, Ind., Aug. 16, mentions a report that the secret order of the Knights of the Golden Rule is in a shaky condition, and that one lodge, Easter Castle, has withdrawn. A call has been made to investigate the supreme commandery. There are about seven lodges at Evansville, and the announcement has caused a sensation in the ranks.

—A note from Bro. M. A. Gault, last week, brings us the sad intelligence that Rev. J. R. W. Stevenson and his wife, Covenanter missionaries to Cyprus, who were sent out last October from the Blanchard, Iowa, congregation, have returned because of Bro. Stevenson's protracted illness. A telegram received from them on the 17th inst., dated on the train at Harrisburg, Pa., stated that he was very low. They will have the sympathy and prayers of many friends. Since the above was written, Bro. Stevenson and wife have arrived at Blanchard. He is very weak with the Syrian fever, but strong hopes are entertained of his recovery.

—We are indebted to the management of the Estey Organ Company, at Brattleboro, Vt., for an invitation to be present at their celebration, the 17th inst., of the completion of the two hundred and fifty thousandth organ of their manufacture. The program promised addresses by Governor Page, of Vermont, and Hon. J. L. Martin, with a profusion of music. A fine portrait of Hon. Jacob Estey, the originator of the Estey organs, accompanies the program. This gentleman (it is said), when a young man, united with the Masonic lodge, in order to increase the sales of his instruments; but, we understand that he is now opposed to secret oath-bound institutions, with a personal knowledge of their defects.

our U. P. brethren are here abiding in tents. To speak of a few when all were friendly were invidious. Through Dr. W. P. McNary the N. C. A. representative was introduced, Wednesday afternoon, and presented the claims of the Association briefly, and its requests for co-operation. Some pastors spoke for a Sabbath discourse in their churches, and some preferred to do such reform work themselves. One spoke of several members of secret societies whom he had won from the lodge to the church. The discussions of the afternoon and evening were on the various boards of the church, for which earnest and eloquent men spoke at length.

From Colfax to Cedar Rapids delayed trains and prolonged transfers used up the night, and a few hours were spent in this enterprising young city.

In company with an old college friend, Mr. O. Bowers, Rev. Mr. Bailey, synodical missionary, or evangelist, for the Presbyterian church in Iowa, was visited. He has found from extensive acquaintance among the churches that impaired Christianity follows a lodge initiation. Pastor Hauser, of the Evangelical Association church, will be glad to have an address before his people at any time. The United Presbyterian pastors were absent at Synod.

Mrs. Bourne, widow of Nathaniel Bourne, long so active among the reformers of Iowa, gave a cordial welcome and a donation to the N. C. A. She recalls with pleasure the labors of her husband, in which she heartily shared. The Masonic library, in which Grand Secretary T. S. Parvin has persuaded the Masons of the State to invest a considerable sum, which might otherwise be squandered in the gewgaws of regalia, is elaborately and expensively fitted up. Books, pictures, portraits, autographs, curiosities from earth and sea, and from the garrets of our fathers, fill the rooms profusely. A large case full of books on "Early Secret Societies" shows that Masonry had ancient relatives of ill-repute. The invitation to investigate here at will was courteously given, and probably some of us Anti-masons ought to make use of this collection: it is doubtful if Masons do to any extent.

Friday forenoon was given to the General Conference of the Norwegian Lutherans. The pastors gathered here are some 150, and a finer looking body of men few denominations can show. The few aged men among them were a reflection of piety, learning and benevolence. Their countenances were a benediction. After opening devotional services, the N. C. A. requests were heard on the motion of Rev. O. Juul, and the reason for them given. The response was so quick and hearty as almost to take one's breath. Other business seemed almost suspended while members came forward for a tract or a paper and subscribers gave their names; and after a few minutes it was announced in English that a committee had been appointed to confer with me as to what the Conference ought to do. Their report recommended a delegate to our annual meeting; that pastors instruct the youth preparing for confirmation; that they subscribe for the Cynosure, get acquainted with the literature of the reform and secure lectures as far as possible. Some of them could themselves speak ably on this question.

I cannot now write as I would wish of the beautiful and favorable surroundings of this Conference. The steep and sometimes rocky bluffs of the Little Iowa river rise on every hand.

Luther College, a grand new building, is itself on an eminence gently rising from the town and breaking off in a precipice of 100 feet on the opposite side. The institution has a fine library and every appointment for the convenience and health of students; and that its work is thorough and noble there was ample evidence in the appearance of the Conference. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

KINGSTON, Ill., Aug. 18, 1892.

On the 6th inst., I called at the Congregational parsonage in Carpenterville, but the pastor was gone to Europe. He is generally understood to be a Mason, and I left a tract or two with the lady there, who apologized for the lodge.

The Rev. Wm. Vehe is pastor of the German Methodist church. He seemed very much disturbed with the course taken by many American ministers and churches as to secretism. But I gave him some tracts, and urged him to stand steadfast for truth and righteousness, and not be entangled with any yoke of bondage.

At Dundee, the Rev. C. Steege is pastor of a large German Lutheran church, and he is a steadfast reformer. They do not allow their members to be connected with oath-bound secret societies; and if any one joins the lodge, they labor with him, and if he still adheres, he is excommunicated. That, it seems to me, is a genuine church of Christ. They had the same rule in the Congregational church, in Westmoreland, N. Y., which I joined in 1829.

The Baptist minister I did not find at home. But I called on the pastor of the M. E. church and offered him some anti-secrecy tracts; and he refused to receive them. He said I should give them to those that needed them; he did not. But he avoided saying anything for or against the lodge.

A union service was held on Sabbath morning in the M. E. church, and a meeting in behalf of the Bible Society in the evening. The Congregational church was closed, as their minister was taking a vacation, I think, in Europe.

In passing over this part of Illinois I can but note the persistent efforts of Masons and kindred clans to browbeat and terrorize those outside their secret conclave. God grant that none of Christ's disciples may be as dumb dogs that can not bark. (Isa. 58:10.) S. F. PORTER.

FROM THE EASTERN AGENT.

WEST BARNET, Vt., Aug. 18, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This finds me in the midst of meetings. I have spoken, since my last, at Greensboro, East Craftsbury, West Barnet, Barnet, McIndoe's, and Bro. Faris' church here in the country. The pouring rain made the attendance small at East Craftsbury. Our every need was supplied by Rev. Mr. Taylor and wife, whose kind hospitality we enjoyed.

At South Albany we met Bro. Putnam, pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church. He kindly subscribed for the Cynosure, and would have gladly arranged for meetings could I have stopped to lecture. We shall hope to help this brother at another time.

On arriving at Bro. Faris's I found, as had been anticipated, a number of appointments made for me to lecture. The appointment at Barnet was made on the same evening that the I. O. O. F. lodge met. The members of this lodge came to my lecture in a body, and, I understood, adjourned their meeting that they might do so. I found the members of this lodge to have a zeal for their order worthy of better things. Should they all become Christians and work as hard to get men to Christ as they are now working to get them away from him, they might arouse the entire community. Let us pray that they may yet be converted.

Going to the store, Tuesday morning, I found there was much discussion about the lecture. A Mr. Keneston introduced himself to me, declared his love for the I. O. O. F. lodge, and added that he wished the entire Congregational church would join their lodge, as he thought it would make the members better. I inquired if they would all be received. How about the women and children; the poor and unfortunate? They could go (he replied) to what you call "the side show" [referring to the Rebekah degree]. His next statement was that when he was a child he spake as a child, etc., but when he became a man he put away childish things; inferring that it was childish for me to engage in this work. I replied that one reason why I was opposing Odd-fellowship was its childishness, and asked if he did not think it childish to march about with painted poles and various trinkets?

A Mr. Wilson proposed a joint discussion of the principles of the I. O. O. F. in the Village Hall. He proposed to send for one or two ministers who should meet me in such discussion any evening I might designate. I assured him that I should be happy to compare views with the gentlemen he might bring, and appointed Friday evening as the time. The question agreed upon is: "Resolved, That membership in the I. O. O. F. is consistent with the Christian life." Should the affirmative have two speakers, Bro. Faris is to assist me.

To-night I am billed to speak in the Barnet Centre U. P. church, Rev. McKinley, pastor.

The lecture at McIndoe's was not largely attended, owing somewhat to a fire that kept the people up much of the night previous. Rev. Mr. Gay, the Congregational pastor, is a typical New Englander. I enjoyed a brief visit with him and found him in sympathy with our work. A collection of $6.43, given to our work by Bro. Faris's people at the lecture last evening, indicated a willingness on their part to help what they could; $143 was collected through this congregation and sent to the starving in Russia recently. It would be interesting to know how much of the money sent to the Russians was collected by lodges, as compared to that by churches. The lodge dries up the streams of charity so far as it may, by absorbing all it can within itself. More anon.

W. B. STODDARD.

REV. WM. FENTON IN MINNESOTA.

RUSH CITY, Chisago Co., Minn., }
Aug. 16, 1892. }

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Twenty years ago here was a dense forest of large trees, but now a thriving city of 1,200 inhabitants. It is on the line of the St. Paul and Duluth railway, fifty-four miles from St. Paul, and five and a half miles from the State line of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The Swedish Lutherans, wide awake to the dangers of lodgery with respect to Christ's kingdom, opened their church last evening for a lecture on "Lodgery and the Bible." These people are not to be deceived by the artful device of Satan, the lodge-god, who inspires his pastors to say, "Preach Christ and let lodgery alone." If they did preach Christ they would destroy lodgery; but the fact that their preaching does not destroy the love of lodgery in the hearts of their converts make it evident that they do not preach Christ in fact, but that they make a hobby-horse of his name to further their own devices in the service of the lodge-god.

This morning (16th) has been spent in giving away tracts, pamphlets and circulars, and conversing with the people. Some of the Masons were just verdant enough to gratify their curiosity by attending the lecture last evening, and (praise God!) they seem to be out of countenance and put to shame. It seems to be almost opportune to suggest that the lodges bring out their altars, regalia and other lodge trappings and make a bonfire of them on the public square, and thus forever abandon the infamous thing, if perchance God may shew them mercy by giving them repentance and salvation.

Last Monday evening I spoke in the German Methodist Episcopal church at Owatonna, Steele county, of this State. On Friday evening next I am to speak in a Congregational church of St. Paul, the church being occupied by the Swedish Lutherans, and they extending the invitation. In that locality, Merriam Park, the pastor feels the pressure of secret lodgery to be so great upon his church that its life is in danger; for these Lutherans will not fellowship the unhal- lowed, infernal, spirit of the lodge. Yours truly, W. FENTON.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

THE WESTERN AGENT IN MISSOURI.

BLANCHARD, Iowa, August 18, 1892.

At Burlington Junction, Mo., last Sabbath, at the Free Methodist State Conference, I met many old-time warriors in the anti-secret cause. Among them were Rev. B. T. Roberts, of North Chili, N. Y.; Rev. J. G. Terrill, of Chicago, and Geo. W. Needels, of Albany, Mo. There were a score of Free Methodist ministers, and thousands of people gathered from the surrounding country, and the woods rang with their hymns, prayers and hallelujahs.

Their primitive Methodist style and radicalism attracted the people, for it required an overflow meeting and several speakers to reach the crowds that thronged around, eager to hear, and the best of order prevailed.

Bro. Roberts, in introducing me from the platform, paid a high tribute to Covenanters by referring to their heroic struggles in Europe against the political corruptions of the times. He said he had visited historic places in Scotland where many a Covenanter's blood had stained the heather.

The Free Methodists came out of the M. E. church on the slavery and anti-secret issue. I know of no church bearing such faithful testimony against secretism, intemperance, tobacco and worldly conformity as the Free Methodists.

They stand in about the same relation to the M. E. church as the Covenanters do to the Presbyterian.

Bro. Terrill was one who helped to organize the National Christian Association, at the Aurora, Ill., convention. Bro. Roberts has long been identified with the movement, and has often spoken in its conventions. It was profitable to consult with these brethren in regard to the needs of the work.

Bro. Geo. W. Needels and wife have nearly recovered from injuries received, first, in a cyclone, that swept over their home, and, afterwards, when their horses ran away. God has honored these devoted servants, in strengthening them to do important work in the past, and we pray that their lives may be spared yet many years, to do important work in the future, and to reap the fruit of their labors.

Bro. Needels and other friends in Missouri desire a State Convention before winter, and think that the largest delegation could be rallied at Albany. There has been little agitation of the question here since Bro. Needels and Bro. Butler transferred the American Freeman to Washington—a step they have often regretted since. But their agitation resulted in the erection of a Free Methodist church at Albany, and a large number in the community have not bowed the knee to Baal. . . . The town is a center of influence—the foundations of two colleges having been laid there recently. Unless stronger inducements are offered from some other point, let the friends in Missouri begin at once to arrange for a rally at Albany that will echo from one end of the State to the other.

I had the opportunity of addressing the Free Methodist Conference, Sabbath afternoon, and in the morning preached in the M. E. church at Burlington Junction. The pastor, Bro. I. M. Kinney, is a Mason, but always welcomes me to his pulpit. He had read Prof. C. A. Blanchard's address before the Evanston University students, and I gave him Dr. Carradine's sermon. Let us have the same faith that this seed will take root that we have in the growth of the seed we put into the soil. Bro. Kinney, like many ministers in the lodge, is ready to listen and have his people listen to our testimony on this question.

M. A. GAULT.

FROM THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

OAKLAND, Kansas, August 16, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I desire the friends of reform in Kansas, Iowa, and Missouri, especially of reform along the lines of anti-secretism; to know that I enter the field embracing these three States as my district, early in September. We especially desire to hold a State convention in Kansas and Missouri, each, this winter or fall. We are already at work upon a convention in Iowa early in November. I have had some correspondence with friends of this reform in Kansas, Missouri, and Iowa, and I desire larger correspondence. Let friends address me at Oakland, Kansas. Let me receive suggestions and information from reformers in Kansas and Missouri, in regard to the conventions mentioned above.

I shall lecture in the cause from evening to evening, beginning with September. Let friends of the cause co-operate with us in this work. If you desire a lecture or lectures, send information directly to me or to W. I. Phillips, Field Secretary, 221 West Madison St., Chicago.

That secretism is doing great damage in this land of ours, and especially in this Western country, is a patent fact. The debasing influence and practice of that which is held before us as pre-eminently the Christian degree of Masonry was shown in our city of Topeka on Sabbath, August 7. Train load after train load left here on that day for Denver, to attend the conclave! The Lord's day was desecrated by show and brass bands and Sabbath traveling. And yet we are told that this is pre-eminently the "Christian degree of Masonry."

A brother here sent a few lines to one of the daily papers, reviewing the matter; but the paper refused to publish it. This is typical of the condition of an overwhelming majority of our newspapers out here. There are exceptions, and we are glad to record the fact.

Let the friends not be backward in addressing me. Yours in the work,
W. C. PADEN.

THE HOME.

FAITHFUL AND TRUE.

Two in the robes of life arrayed,
Active workers as here portrayed,
In Faithful and True.

From the earliest dawn of their life
There was victory in the strife
By Faithful and True.

Through the darkest, heaviest night,
There is ever a steady light,
For Faithful and True.

Satan, though subtle and strong,
Was overcome with victor's song,
By Faithful and True.

Many a weak and sinful soul
Is led to Christ and heaven's goal
By Faithful and True.

Souls, under the chastening rod,
Are led to give praise for all to God,
By Faithful and True.

They who the orgies of Bacchus sing,
Are led to own Christ as Lord and King,
By Faithful and True.

Souls enslaved by pleasure's charms,
Find freedom and joy in a Saviour's arms,
Though Faithful and True.

Seeking a quiet place of rest
There's ever open the Saviour's breast,
For Faithful and True.

Through all life's changing scene,
There's a peace and joy serene,
For Faithful and True.

And when, at last, the cross is laid down,
There will be a many-jeweled crown,
For Faithful and True.

WHAT BRINGS PEACE.

A doctor who was once visiting a Christian patient had himself long been anxious to feel that he was at peace with God; the Spirit had convinced him of his sin and need, and he longed to possess "that peace which the world cannot give." On this occasion, addressing himself to the sick one, he said: "I want you to tell me just what it is—this believing and getting happiness, faith in Jesus, and all that sort of thing, that brings peace." His patient replied: "Doctor, I have felt that I could do nothing, and I have put my case in your hands; I am trusting to you. This is exactly what every poor sinner must do in the Lord Jesus." This reply greatly awakened the doctor's surprise, and a new light broke in upon his soul. "Is that all?" he exclaimed; "simply trusting in the Lord Jesus? I see it as I never did before. He has done the work. Yes, Jesus said on the cross 'It is finished,' and 'whosoever believeth in him shall not perish but have everlasting life!'" From that sick-bed the doctor went a happy man, rejoicing that his sins were washed away in the blood of the Lamb.—Christian Worker.

THE HOME OF THE "HOLY FAMILY."

There Jesus lived for thirty years. There God was honored, and piety ruled. The annual attendance upon the feasts at Jerusalem shows that all religious duties were faithfully observed. The taking of Jesus with them when he was twelve years old, shows their attention to his religious training. In that house nothing sordid, or savoring of meanness or impurity, was ever found. From his parents' lips he learned, in his earliest years, the precepts of the Law, and in their saintly lives saw exemplified the beauty, dignity and power of holiness. He loved, and was loved by his mother most tenderly. From her he received lessons of the richest value, and her words could not but arouse all his powers of thought. He had also both sisters and brothers—the latter of whom, at least, did not believe on him up to the time of his death—yet the filial affections seem to have been always deep and tender, and to one of them he made a personal manifestation after his resurrection. He was happy in their company, and at home. Years afterwards when meeting the tremendous issues of his life, the relief which the sight of childhood gave him, the strong attachment to children which he ever exhibited, and his words about their simplicity and innocence, were proofs and products of the happiness of his own joyous childhood at home. And in that sweet home he grew all silently. From the divine germ, planted at his creation in his being, and which itself grew as naturally as a flower from its bud, his life unfolded itself day by day. There was nothing fitful or sporadic. There was no accretions from without. The growth was vitally from within. That illustration which he gave his disciples was a perfect picture of his own development: "Consider the lilies, how they grow." As silently, steadily, without toiling or spinning, they push upward their stock and stem with their most delicately, interwoven strength and grace, until at last they are crowned with flowers of the most exquisite purity and loveliness, so through the successive stages of youth, his life-development went on without any care or anxiety as to growth, until the bloom and fragrance of his manhood heightened and glorified all.—Rev. H. M. Paynter, in the "Holy Life."

WELL ANSWERED.

A boastful infidel once asked a humble and devout Christian woman, "Is your God a great God or a little God?" She answered, "He is both—he is so great that the heaven of heavens cannot contain him—and he is so little that he condescends to dwell in my poor heart!" The infidel was confounded by this simple answer. It is written, "There shall be given you in that day a mouth and wisdom, that your adversaries shall not be able to gainsay." Christ is made unto us "wisdom," and when the enemy comes in like a flood, full of worldly wisdom and philosophy, determining to confound the humble child of God, there is given unto him a mouth of wisdom, equal to the occasion, and the boasting objector proves that "these things," the things of the kingdom of heaven, "are hidden from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes." Therefore the true servant of God need not hesitate to go before kings and potentates, knowing that the treasures of Infinite Wisdom are at his command.

If the great adversary imagines that the Christian is at any time left to his own resources, he is egregiously mistaken. The Lord is his strength and his defense, on the right hand and on the left, and he is near in every emergency. Stand then resolutely against the foe.—Christian Standard.

KING SOLOMON'S TROUBLES.

It was a prominent church in one of our most fashionable city streets. That church rejoices in a first-class choir. It has a soprano that can, musically speaking, climb to the top of Mt. Pisgah. She can take a whole note and split it up into small ones and trill them off till the air seems full of semi-quarters. It has a bass that can go clear down to the bottom of facts. I think he often strikes Trenton rock. He has some heavy notes in the basement that he has never hoisted up into the audience room. They weigh about a ton each. They are used only on special occasions. This was one of those occasions. This choir generally sings in a way that inspires confidence in it. I shall watch the corners hereafter though. The choir was executing a voluntary: "Consider the lilies of the field how they grow. They toil not; neither do they spin; yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

They had a fine time for a while sliding up and down the musical ladder, just as you and I used to slide down the cellar door. Then the soprano would scoot up the ladder, and the bass would scoot down, while the tenor and alto would keep things pretty lively about midway.

They considered the lilies for a while in this way without any special excitement till they got to the last clause, "Yet I say unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed," etc. They stopped right here and did not finish the sentence.

"In all his glory," thought I. I think it struck the soprano the same way, for she flew up the ladder, screaming "was not array-a-ayed." She soared and soared till she could not get any soarer. She fairly stood on the tip-top and screamed "was not arrayed."

At this the basso-profundo took it up, "was not arra-y-a-ayed," and he just scooted down the ladder to the bottom, like a piledriver, jarring the very foundations of the church. I mentally exclaimed, "I guess he's started for Trenton rock."

The tenor and alto were now just chapping in their very best. "Was not arrayed, was not arrayed, was not arrayed." I thought to myself, "I guess they've got him." He must be behind the organ. I felt sorry for him. I thought there certainly must be some mistake about it some way. Solomon was of a good family. He was well brought up. He moved in good society. He had plenty of money to dress well. It certainly was very strange. Possibly there may be some mitigating circumstances about it. Perhaps he was a somnambulist and had wandered in here in his sleep. He certainly is, not in the habit of doing this way. If it had been a Christian scientist church they would have had a way out of it. They would but have to make themselves and him think he was arrayed, and he would have been clothed to order.

People were now putting their money into the contribution box. I thought to myself, he needs clothes more than money, if the choir hasn't overestimated the fact "that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed." I was about to give him my collars and cuffs, and tell him to part his hair in the middle and not attempt to go on the street without decorating himself a little.

But just then the choir added the remainder of the clause, "like one of these." That placed the affair in a little different light. If the choir had stated that in the first place and not put so much emphasis on his not being arrayed, the impression would have been different. I am glad Solomon is all right.—Anonymous.

NO DIFFERENCE.

A touching incident: "Why, hal-le-lu-jah!" "Praise the Lord!" "I'm glad to see you!" "Are you saved yet?" One of the city corps had just come in from the march, and a young man, who stood at the head of the stairway leading to the hall, was the recipient of the above enthusiastic welcome. The officers and soldiers gathered around him, and I question if General Booth received a more hearty welcome in any place during his great tour. Who was the young man? He must be some important personage to receive such a welcome. A few months ago he was a convict in one of the California State prisons. After his release he determined to lead a better life, and when he arrived in the city he went to an Army meeting and told his story. They didn't shrink from him, but told him of a Saviour who would give him the strength to become a different man, and he accepted him. A few days afterwards he left the city, and when he returned his heart was gladdened by the welcome given him by the friends of the ex-convicts, drunkards, and outcasts. "God bless the Salvation Army!" said the writer, as memory brought the time before him—some four years ago—when he, too, was friendless, and the humble soldiers of Jesus made him welcome to their ranks, and by kind words helped him to return to the path of sobriety and manhood.—Observer.

THE YOUNG FROG.

In the field back of my house and up the hill are two nice springs. From one I draw water into my house through pipes, while the water from the other goes to my barn and my neighbor's house. The water runs very swiftly because it is running down hill. It is far easier to run down hill than it is to run up.

The pipe enters this spring not at the top of the water, nor at the bottom either. If it were at the top, the scum would get into the pipe, and a floating bug now and then. If it were at the bottom dregs and sediment would get in. So the pipe goes in about six inches below the top of the water.

When we are drawing water at the barn for the horses, and my neighbor draws water at the same time for her washing-day, the pipe sucks at a great rate. But it draws nothing but pure water, if floating things keep at the top, and all heavy things lie still at the bottom. Now for my story.

One day there was a gay young frog, about as big as half my thumb—too big for a tadpole, too small for a wise frog. He could go just where he pleased. He did not have to float with the bugs, for he knew how to dive. He did not have to stay at the bottom with the dregs, for he knew how to swim. So he kicked up his little hind legs and swam all around the spring, doing very much as he pleased.

One day he saw the little, round, black hole of the pipe, where the water was running quite freely. He put his nose in and felt the water pull and was a little scared and backed out. But it was such a funny feeling to be sucked that way, it felt kind of good round his nose, and he swam up, and looked in again. He went in as much as half an inch, and then the water got behind him, and he was drawn in.

"Here goes!" said he. "I shall see what I shall see."

And along he went with the water, till he came to where the pipe makes a bend for my barn—a sharp bend, straight up. As the water was quiet there, he gave a little kick and got up into a still, dark place, close by the barrel where the horse drinks.

"Well," said he, "it's a snug place, but rather lonely and dark."

Now and then he thought of the spring and the light and the splendid room he used to have to swim in, and he tried to swim back against the stream. But the water was on him, or running by him swiftly, and he had no room to kick in the pipe. So every time he started to go back to the spring, he would work hard for a few minutes, and then get tired and slip back into the dark place by the barrel.

By-and-by he grew contented there. The water brought him enough to eat. He shut his eyes and grew stupid; stopped exercising and got fat; as he had no room to grow very big in the pipe, he had to grow all long and nothing broad. But he grew as big as he could, till he stopped up the pipe.

Then I had to go and see what was the matter, for the horse had nothing to drink. I jerked away the barrel, pulled out the plug, and put a ramrod down; felt a springy, leatherly something, and pushing, down it went, and out gushed the water. "What was that?" I thought. So I pulled out the big plug, and down went an iron ramrod and I churned it two or three times and then let the water run, and out came a long, red and white and bleeding frog.

I couldn't put him together again. Anything that gets sucked into that pipe and grows up in those dark places has to come out dead and all in pieces. I wondered how such a big frog could ever have got into such a small pipe. Then a wise lady in my house told me: "Why, he went in when he was but little and foolish, and grew up there."

I cannot get that poor frog out of my mind. He was so like some young folks I have seen. They frolicked up to the door of a theatre, or they stood and looked into a bar-room, or they just wanted to go to one ball, or out behind the barn to smoke a pipe, or went off sleigh-riding with some gay young man without asking leave—or some way put their foolish noses into a dark hole that felt funny, and led, they didn't know where.

Pretty soon in they go. When they want to get back they can't, and they grow bigger and wickered, and all out of shape in that dark place. If they come out at last they are all jammed up, knocked to pieces, sick, or dying, or dead. When I see them in their coffins I hear folks ask, "How came he to throw himself away so?" "What made him drink himself to death?" "How happened she to go off to infamy?" "How came he to be a gambler?"

Then I shall answer as the wise lady told me about the frog: "They went in when they were little and foolish, and grew up there." A bad habit hugs a man tighter, and jams him out of shape worse than my pipes did that poor frog.—Thomas K. Beecher, in Good Words.

LITTLE THINGS.

A good-bye kiss is a little thing,
With your hand on the door to go,
But it takes the venom out of the sting
Of a thoughtless word or a cruel fling
That you made an hour ago.

A kiss of greeting is sweet and rare,
After the toil of the day,
But it smooths the furrows out of the care,
And lines on the forehead you once called fair
In the years that have flown away.

'Tis a little thing to say, "You are kind,"
"I love you, my dear," each night,
But it sends a thrill through the heart, I find.
For love is tender, as love is blind,
As we climb life's rugged height.

We starve each other for love's caress;
We take but do not give;
It seems so easy some soul to bless,
But we dole love grudgingly, less and less,
Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

TEMPERANCE.

AN ACTOR'S OPINION OF WHISKY.

One of the best and briefest temperance lectures in print is that contained in a letter now going the rounds of the newspapers which, on good authority, is ascribed to the late W. J. Florence, the popular and witty actor:

"My Dear —: One gallon of whisky costs about $3, and contains about sixty-five fifteen-cent drinks. Now if you must drink, buy a gallon, and make your wife the barkeeper. When you are dry give her fifteen cents for a drink, and when the whisky is gone she will have after paying for it, $6.75 left, and every gallon thereafter will yield the same profit. This money she should put away, so that when you have become an inebriate, unable to support yourself, and shunned by every respectable man, your wife may have money enough to keep you until your time comes to fill a drunkard's grave."

COST OF DRINK TO GREAT BRITAIN.

According to British newspapers, the people of Great Britain and Ireland have spent in one year the sum of $734,500,000 in intoxicating liquors. This fearful waste is enough to account for all the poverty in Great Britain; if we add to it the illness, crime, and misery caused by this altogether unnecessary expenditure, the case is still stronger. To be prosperous the British public need only boycott the publican, and be sober, pure, and strong.—Herald of Health.

If newspapers are not promptly paid for, they become accusing angels.

"UNION SIGNAL" AND OTHER NOTES.

Canada receives some $7,000,000 revenue in return for $25,000,000 expended in drink.

Mary Allen West has sailed for Honolulu, where she will engage in temperance work until September, when she goes to Japan.

In any district of the Fiji Islands, any white man found giving intoxicating drink to an aborigine or half-caste is liable to a fine of fifty pounds or imprisonment.

One of the most active and best-informed Glasgow ministers has given it as his solid conviction that some thirty thousand men and women go to bed drunk in Glasgow every Saturday night.

Take this thought and turn it over and over, and get all the bearings of it; and make your resolves accordingly: "The next generation must be largely a generation of drunkards, if the liquor traffic is not suppressed."—The Independent.

The two causes which are credited with awakening the German people to the necessity of the temperance reform are, first, the conviction that beer drinking is weakening the moral and physical qualities of the nation, and, second, the necessity of turning the beer material into bread. Statistics show that Germany devotes about a quarter of her productive energy to the liquor traffic, and that the "demand for bread can only be met by the denial of beer."

Hon. Joseph D. Taylor, of Ohio, in a recent speech in the House of Representatives, referred to the drink traffic, and to "the tremendous loss, the tremendous waste of money which this traffic causes, and the ruinous effect it has on all classes, in all kinds of business."

Half the misery of homes arising from bad temper, sloth, squandering, selfishness, debt, neglect of all duty, is caused by the indulgence of wine and the like. The sure and best cure of this is to bring up the children in simple habits, and to guard them against acquiring the liking for intoxicating drinks.

The fourth International Congress to protest against the abuse of alcoholic liquors, will meet in the Hague, September, 1892. The commission divides the subjects for discussion into three classes: First, Alcoholism, in its moral, hygienic and medical aspects. Second, Preventive and persuasive measures. Third, Compulsory measures.

An argument for total abstinence as conducive to longevity is found in the annual report of the United Kingdom temperance and provident institution. There are two sections, one including moderate non-abstainers, the other, total abstainers. In the former there were thirty-nine more deaths, and in the latter, eighty-one fewer than were expected.

Southeastern Kentucky, once the scene of wild brawls, raids and terrible debaucheries, is fast becoming entirely changed by the determination of some of its best inhabitants. Many counties have prohibited the sale of liquor, and emigrants of good character are buying the rich farming land. Temperance, education and religion have gone hand in hand.

"I deliberately affirm that Herod, the historical ogre of the New Testament, is a philanthropist compared with the breweries and distilleries of Great Britain. And I say solemnly and deliberately that worship of the child Jesus in sincerity and truth is impossible to those who sit with folded hands, while the pestilential breath of this modern Herod poisons the children whom Jesus loves."—Canon Wilberforce.

The following is an extract from the platform adopted by the Vermont Republicans, June 22: "We demand a continuance of the prohibitory liquor law. We believe that law is, on the whole, more efficient and better enforced to-day than ever before; and we assert that the attitude of Republicans in the State towards that question is such as to leave the Prohibition party of Vermont without an occupation."

By common consent the man who becomes the proprietor of a whisky saloon is excluded from good society. His business puts him under a ban. But, by some strange process, the man who figures as a big distiller or a wholesale dealer does not suffer a similar penalty. The fact that he has abundance of money, or some other equally unreasonable consideration, seems to operate as an atonement for his offense. But why should it be so? As far as we can see the cases ought to be reversed. We should rather go to judgment loaded down with all the offenses of a fourth-rate "doggerly-keeper," than with those of the most genteel distiller that ever throve and grew fat on his trade of blood.—The Pacific.

During the year ending April 30, 1892, the output of beer in the United States was 31,475,519 barrels, which represents a yearly consumption of one-half a barrel for every man, woman and child, or about two barrels apiece for every adult man. All but six States in the Union produce beer. The exceptions are Arkansas, Florida, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina and Vermont. New York, with an output of nine and a half million barrels, is three times the biggest brewer in the lot. Pennsylvania comes next, while Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin, New Jersey, Massachusetts and California follow in order. Iowa and Kansas, though prohibition States, make 114,523 and 1,500 barrels respectively. The tax on this illicit brewing was duly paid to the United States collectors of internal revenue. We are curious to know by what authority these officials act as public accomplices in crime?

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The preaching of Philip.—vs. 5-8. Philip was one of the seven deacons from whose ranks Stephen had already gone to receive the martyr's crown. He was earnest, fearless and eloquent; every way qualified to wear his mantle, and must have been for this reason a shining mark for persecution. Samaria would offer him—at least for a little while—a safe asylum, and, being a Grecian Jew, he could preach to the people with less fear of arousing their provincial prejudices than the apostles could. It was the beginning of a great awakening. The people with one accord gave heed to his words. Perhaps he told them the story of Jesus and the woman at the well. It is certain that the work done there by his Master must have helped Philip to achieve these remarkable results. If we turn to John 5: 35-38, we shall see that Jesus prophesied of a spiritual harvest that his disciples were yet to reap in this very locality from the seed he himself had sown among these despised people. The wonderful miracles that Philip wrought were also a fulfillment of Christ's promise: "And greater works than these shall ye do." "And there was great joy in that city." This is always the effect of true religion—to bring joy, and temporal as well as spiritual blessings. It is a great mistake to consider religion as profitable merely for the life to come, but many people think of it only as something that they will need to make them die happy, not as something they need now to make them live happy, and so they keep putting it off until it is too late, and have neither joy in their life nor hope in their death.

2. A false convert.—vs. 9-13. The Samaritans were a superstitious people, and a certain clever sorcerer, named Simon, had gained such power over them by his seemingly supernatural powers that he was sought by all classes. But when through Philip's preaching they believed on Jesus, their faith in his magic and incantations was gone, and Simon himself, we are told, believed also, and was baptized with the others. The sequel seems to throw great doubt on the genuineness of his conversion. This shows that the rite of baptism has in itself no saving power. It could not make Simon Magus a good man, nor could the want of it keep the penitent thief out of Paradise.

3. Simon's sin.—vs. 14-24. The apostles had continued to stay in Jerusalem, bravely exposing themselves to death rather than desert their post. They were the leaders, the teachers, the spiritual guides, of the infant church. When it was right, and even their duty, for others to flee, it would have been wrong for them. Questions of duty must often be determined by our individual circumstances. When they heard of the wonderful success that had attended the preaching of Philip in Samaria, they at once saw the necessity of sending two of their number to further confirm the new converts in the faith, by the gift of the Holy Ghost. We come now to one of the many proofs afforded by Scripture that Peter did not hold any such position among the twelve as papal dogmas accord him. He could have wielded no authority in the early church like that exercised by the man who sits in the Vatican and calls himself his successor. We learn also that to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and be baptized is only the initial step in the Christian life. We are to desire, both for ourselves and others, that deeper work of grace which Peter and John saw these Samaritan converts needed—even a baptism of the Holy Spirit. A revival that simply gathers people into the church goes only half-way. When Simon saw what wonderful results followed the gift of the Holy Spirit, and that it only came through laying on of the apostles' hands, he seems to have concluded that it was the same in kind, only far superior, as his own tricks of legerdemain, and wanted to purchase this strange power for himself. His sin did not consist in ignorantly thinking that he could buy it, but in the proof which he gave of an unchanged heart in his evident purpose to turn the whole thing into a grand money-making scheme. He was willing to give a handsome sum for the gift—not in order that he might do good by healing diseases and otherwise benefiting humanity. His only thought was of the golden harvest he might reap by the sale of this gift to others. No wonder that Peter's indignation was aroused. Whether Simon repented we know not. His answer sounds humble, but shows more superstition than enlightened faith, in the fact that he seems to look upon Peter as a kind of necromancer, and asks his prayers instead of praying for himself. How many have fallen into the snare of coveting spiritual gifts in order that they might win popularity and the praise of men thereby!

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—There stands at Salem, Mass., the oldest church in America, built in 1629, a little one of frame of heavy oak, rude and plain. Roger Williams once preached from its pulpit. It is now owned by the Essex Institute, and is safely housed for future generations.

—Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, a Presbyterian, has just closed a temporary pastorate of the great Baptist Tabernacle (Mr. Spurgeon's) in London. This is followed just now by the announcement, that Rev. F. B. Meyer, the well-known Baptist preacher, is to become the successor of Rev. Newman Hall, D. D., the well-known Congregationalist. Dr. Newman Hall is best known by his tract, "Come to Jesus."

—Meridian, Miss., it is reported, has secured the Baptist Mississippi College now located at Clinton. The former city offered a bonus of 125 acres of land, besides $50,000 in cash.

—Over $4,000,000 have been contributed to Baptist educational institutions during the past year. For the past three years the average has been $3,000,000 a year. Since the organization of the American Baptist Educational Society, four years ago, a gain in the educational property of the American Baptists has been made of $9,500,000, and the aggregate now stands $29,000,000.

BRETHREN.

—All churches of Southern Indiana wishing to apply for the annual meeting of '93, should be prepared to make their applications at the special district meeting, previously announced, to be held at Arcadia Sept. 1, that the committee on location may decide on the time and route, to visit the several locations offered.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Dr. D. K. Parsons, of Chicago, donates $100,000 to the Chicago Congregational Seminary upon the condition that $350,000 additional be contributed on or before May 1, 1894.

"CHRISTIAN SCIENCE."

—On the subject of "Christian Science" the New York Witness uses these vigorous words: "Christian science" is neither Christian nor scientific; it is simply a fraud. It has no power to cure any one. Your friend's cure may have been the work of her own imagination; it may have been a genuine faith cure; or it may possibly have been the work of the devil, seeking to gain credence for a false religion; but it is certainly no proof of the correctness of the doctrines of the Christian scientists. These doctrines are unscriptural and dangerous in the extreme."

GERMAN METHODISTS.

—After fifty years of active work, supported by liberal grants of funds, the German Methodists of this country number 71,570 members, 600 ministers, 537 lay preachers. Their principal organ has 19,500 subscribers, one copy to every four members.

LUTHERAN.

—The thirty-sixth annual convention of the Synod of Southern Illinois will be held in the Lutheran church in Dongola, Union county, Ill., Rev. J. K. Reed, pastor, September 1-5.

—The seventh annual reunion of the Lutherans of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania, took place at Pen Mar, on Thursday, August 4th. It is estimated that over 20,000 were present, the railroads having brought more than ever before. It was decided to hold the next reunion on the first Thursday of August, 1893.

—The thirteenth annual convention of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Synod of Central Pennsylvania, will convene in the Ev. Lutheran church, Rebersburg, Pa., Sept. 20, 21, and 22. Opening session Tuesday 7:30 p. m. Societies are requested to send delegates and church representatives to the convention.

—The cost to the Missouri Synod last year of maintaining its colleges and seminaries at St. Louis, Mo.,

Springfield and Addison, Ill., Milwaukee, Wis., and Fort Wayne, Ind., is reported at $100,777. In the same time the income of Augustana College and Seminary (Swedish) was $58,000. These institutions are maintained nearly solely to educate pastors and parochial teachers.

—According to the Lutheran Review, the Lutheran churches in New York City number 27, while those in Brooklyn number 30—a total of 57 in these twin cities.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The Church Building Society of Berlin, Germany, has been at work for two years, and has raised a million and a half of marks for its purposes. State, city, and other authorities have added four million marks to the amount raised by the society! As a result nine new churches are built, and sixteen more are to be erected in and around Berlin. In these two years nearly fifteen million marks have been used for churches in and around this capital.

—A religious census of Canada just issued shows the Catholics at 1,990,465. Of Protestant denominations the Methodists come first with 847,467 adherents, being followed by the Presbyterians with 755,199. The members of the Anglican church number 644,106, the Baptists count 303,749, and the Congregationalists 28,155.

—Hiram Camp, of New Haven, who gave the $25,000 with which Moody erected his famous school at Northfield, has in the last year added $75,000 to the endowment. There have, of course, been other contributions. It is twelve years or so since the school opened. There are now 136 boys in attendance there.

—The tenth annual session of the Moody (Northfield, Mass.) conference has been in session. At the opening the room was packed with an enthusiastic and intelligent audience, which joined heartily in the stirring hymns, led by Mr. Sankey, and listened with profound attention to the opening address by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, who, in the absence of Mr. Moody and by his request, has charge of the meetings this year. Evangelist George C. Needham followed Dr. Gordon with his celebrated address on the "Plan of the Ages." This address, it will be remembered, the Supreme Court of North Carolina, sitting at Raleigh, recently adjourned to hear, judges and lawyers trooping in a body to the church in which Mr. Needham delivered it. The Rev. F. B. Meyer is also at Northfield, by the persuasion of Mr. Moody, and will give Bible readings daily during the conference. He is one of the best known Dissenting clergymen in England.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Scotch church, in New York City, has purchased six lots, corner of Ninety-sixth street and Eighth avenue. Some of the lots extend through to Ninety-fifth street. The cost of this site is $115,000. The church intends soon to erect on this site a new church edifice, and Sunday-school and lecture rooms, and when these are finished the congregation will move uptown. The Scotch church is one of the oldest Presbyterian churches in this city, dating back to 1776. It is financially strong, but its congregation has dropped off somewhat owing to the removal of families connected with it. It anticipates a fresh lease of prosperity in its new home.

—The Rev. A. T. Pierson, late of the Tabernacle, London, preached recently, morning and evening, at the Fourth Avenue church, New York, formerly Dr. Howard Crosby's. He will continue his ministrations there some time.

—The Dutch Reformed branch of the Presbyterian family increased less than eighteen per cent during the last decade. The United Presbyterians advanced but seventeen per cent.

—Presbyterian church statistics for 1892 show the number of ministers to be 6,266; licentiates, 411; candidates, 1,145; churches, 7,078; received on examination, 56,301; on certificate, 38,603; total membership, 816,427; net gain, 10,000.

—According to recent returns, which will not be materially changed by later additions, there are 13,490 organizations or congregations of Presbyterians of all branches in the United States, 12,462 church edifices, valued at $94,876,233, and 1,278,815 communicants.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL.

—The most recent incident about Bishop Phillips Brooks is in reference to his visit to the ritualistic Church of the Advent in Boston. "Father" Frisby, the rector, wrote to him saying that doubtless many of the usual ceremonies in this church would be offensive to him, and expressed a desire to have the service on this special occasion just as the bishop wanted it. In his reply, after thanking the rector for his courtesy, the bishop said: "I beg of you, however, to make no change whatever in your service. Turn everything on."

—Here are the latest statistics of the Protestant Episcopal church. HOME AND HEALTH.

Sash curtains are an excellent style for kitchens, and they can be made of almost any cotton fabric.

The utility of the feather duster except for walls is to be doubted, and even for walls a soft cloth is better.

A turkey's wing is admirable to get the dust out of chinks and between rails, and chamois gives a last polish better than anything else.

One woman uses all of her wornout silk stockings for dusting, and still another makes loose mittens out of old woolen which she puts on as dusters.

A thin silk cloth, or a piece of cheese-cloth, makes a good duster. So does a soft woolen cloth; but linen and cotton flannel leave lint behind them.

Table oil cloth, tacked back of the stove, if pans or cooking utensils are hung up, and of tables where mixing or dish washing is done, saves the wall, and may be cleaned easily, and lasts a long time.

If, as is often the case, there is no receptacle for cooking utensils in the kitchen, thus obliging you to carry them back and forth from the pantry whenever they are to be used, determine to do it no longer.

Lace, either knit or crocheted in a close, heavy pattern, is handsome for trimming the lower edge of Holland shades. Number thirty cream or unbleached linen thread is commonly used. The most effective design is one that admits of a fringe being tied through the bottom of the lace.

If you use a copper teakettle and have any trouble in keeping it bright you can remedy the matter by keeping an old dish with sour milk and a cloth in it and washing the kettle with this every morning, then washing in clear water, wiping dry, and it will always look new and bright.

The best polish to keep furniture from looking dingy is the following: Two tablespoonfuls of cottonseed oil, one tablespoonful of turpentine. Instead of cottonseed oil, grout oil or any good vegetable oil may be used. This should be well rubbed into the wood, and then a last polishing given with chamois.

If you are compelled to keep flour in a barrel that must be moved whenever the floor is cleaned, make a small platform with casters at each corner to stand it on. If you have no good cover for the barrel, take off the upper hoop, fasten it securely together and put a cover of double unbleached muslin over the top and sew it around the hoop.

A room is dusted only when the dust is taken out of the room, and that is done only when it has been carried out of the room. This is done by using a soft cloth to dust with, and by wiping the surface of each article slowly and with care not to throw the particles of dust up in the air, whence they will settle again instantly somewhere else.

Study the situation: see where there is a space in which you can put a long shelf, or two or three short ones over each other. Iron brackets cost but little and are adjusted easily. A shelf six or seven inches wide will hold all the baking powder, spices, extracts and the like in common use, and by screwing small hooks to the under side egg beaters, cups, spoons, etc., can be suspended.

Teach your girls to close all closet and chamber doors before commencing to make beds and to put rooms in order, else dust and lint will puff and settle over garments in closets and needless litter in hallways and landings. Maybe half their wardrobe is not neatly hanging in smooth well-shaken folds on their hooks, but is lying in tumbled heaps on the closet floor, or scattered about the chamber, rumpled, dusty, creased, hopelessly injured with their slovenly negligence.

Rub shoes free from dust whenever they are worn, using a black cloth; keep them in a shoe bag, the buttons sewed on or ties fresh, and when growing shabby, brush the buttons and heels with black varnish and rub the shoes with a

WANTED—GOOD HOUSEKEEPING.

Young women make a big blunder if they do not learn to take care of a home. It is a grievous, social and moral wrong when girls are brought up helpless in household life. How often we see mothers busily engaged in domestic duties, like a slave, in order that the girl may enjoy every luxury and do nothing; indeed, many hardly let their daughters soil their hands. No woman ought to marry who cannot look well to the ways of her household. In case she may not herself be required to work, she ought to be able to see whether the work is done in a proper manner. A woman is out of her element unless she is acquainted to a certain extent with sciences of bake-ology, boil-ology, stitch-ology, make-ology and mend-ology. There never was a greater blunder than to substitute good looks for good qualities.

The reason why so many men do not make homes for themselves in these days is because they cannot afford it. The women are too much averse to working, and too extravagant in all their tastes. We want more frugality, industry and system; if we could introduce these virtues into our higher society we should diminish the envy, jealousy and suicides of the single, and the wretchedness, bickering and the divorces of the married. Every girl ought to be brought up to have regular domestic duties. Idleness should be forbidden her. The only dignified life is a useful life.—Labor Tribune.

FARM NOTES.

(From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

AGRICULTURAL.

Every weed that is allowed to go to seed means a dozen next year. Keep them down.

Now that you have a little time you can call your own, how about that front gate that needs rehanging?

Successful corn raisers agree that it pays best to cultivate for the grain alone or for fodder alone. Fodder is always saved at the expense of the grain.

Don't be afraid to burn up trash. There is no worse economy than that which hoards up trash of no possible value and which only makes "clutter."

Reasonable care must be taken with ensilage as with anything else. It doesn't pay, for instance, to sow it broadcast. If you want it satisfactorily drill it in.

Have you cut the grass around the house and raked up the fallen twigs and branches? If not you have no idea what a difference in the looks of things an hour's work will make.

If you are not satisfied with the profit from a given crop, try to reduce the cost of growing it, rather than depend upon an increase of values. The surest way to reduce cost is to grow more from the acreage you have devoted to the crop.

No change of law or system can make our country roads good, without the liberal use of stone as a foundation on which to build them. A certain piece of road could be so done each year, with less expenditure than is now put in working out poll tax.

HORTICULTURAL.

Tomatoes for seed should be selected before the fruit is dead ripe if you want a vigorous early crop next year.

Sweet peas, carnations and chrysanthemums will bloom much more abundantly if pinched back freely for a time.

According to the American Florist, hydranges potted in peat, if given plenty of water, will thrive and be of a handsome blue color.

Now is the time to trim arbor vitae hedges. The spring sap has stopped flowing and the new growth may be clipped off without injury to the hedge.

We find that pinching off the tops of new raspberry shoots when they reach the height of from four to five feet makes the bushes much trimmer and easier to handle.

A very fine collection of tropical plants, including some of the largest specimens, will be sent from Jamaica to the World's Fair. The arrangements for their transportation have already been made.

Did you ever watch a toad taking his breakfast in the early morning? If you have you must be convinced that he is the gardener's friend. Lice, slugs, small caterpillars and other pests are his lawful prey, and he is a hearty eater.

A large portion of the agricultural exhibit which Illinois will make at the World's Fair will be selected from the exhibits made at the State fair at Peoria the coming fall. In order to encourage the farmers to make especially fine exhibits of farm, orchard and garden products, the State Board of Agriculture, which has in charge the preparations of the State's World's Fair exhibit, has offered a number of cash prizes aggregating $6,500.

Salt applied around the quince tree at the rate of about one quart per tree in the spring, for young trees, to be increased as they grow older, up to two or three quarts applied one-half in the spring and one-half in the fall, promotes the growth of the tree, and the size and the fairness of the fruit is increased, says an exchange. It keeps the ground moist, which is important for this crop, though they do not need wet land as much as was once thought.

POULTRY.

It has long been recognized by good feeders of horses, cattle and swine that only as much food should be given as they will eat up clean, and the same rule applies to poultry.

Not more than one farmer out of a hundred can tell the value of his poultry product for the past year. But that one who can is the very one most likely to get a profit from his fowls.

When they are confined in a pen and are overfed, there is no inducement to young chicks to take exercise, their digestive organs become deranged, and weak legs are the consequence.

It has been demonstrated that ducks can be kept with profit with only water for drinking purposes. True, the adult duck will need a trough for bathing, but young ducks should not be allowed to get into water at all.

The lice must be kept down or they will destroy the chicks. One poultry keeper greases the top of the head of each chick with a bit of tallow the size of a small pea. He repeats the process once in ten days till the chicks are six weeks old. He also dusts the hen and chicks with insect powder about once in two weeks.

Ducks and geese may be fattened very quickly on boiled turnips, potatoes and carrots thickened with oatmeal. They should be confined for the purpose. Hens and turkeys need a greater variety, though it is safe to state that a variety is better even for the web-foot fowls. Ten days is time enough, as they will begin to lose flesh if kept too long in confinement.

Comes back—every cent that you've paid for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, if you have not found the help that you need. But, if you're a tired and feeble woman, or a delicate and ailing one, it's a remedy that's sure to give it.

Practically, it's sold on trial. That's what it amounts to. If it doesn't give satisfaction, in the building-up and strengthening of overtaxed womanhood, and the complete cure of all the delicate derangements, functional disturbances, and painful disorders peculiar to the sex—then you have your money back.

You'd think that any medicine could be sold so, if it did all that's claimed for it. Exactly.

But the fact remains that out of all the medicines for women, "Favorite Prescription" is the only one that's sold on such terms.

Knowing these things, it's an insult to your intelligence to have something else, that pays the dealer better, offered as "just as good."

A LETTER FROM

THE WORLD'S MOST ELOQUENT PREACHER, THE LATE REV. C. H. SPURGEON, THAT WILL BE READ WITH GREAT INTEREST BY ALL WHO ARE AT DEATH'S DOOR.

DEAR MR. CONGREVE:—As a rule I have no faith in advertised remedies; but it must now be some twenty-five years since first I saw in the person of one of my students the effects of your remedy. He seemed at death's door, but he lives now, a strong, hearty man.

Since then I have seen in many, very many instances, the most happy results following your medicine. I do not go by hearsay, but I testify to what I have seen with my own eyes. I believe that you have saved numbers from Consumption. I have friends with coughs and weak lungs, who speak of your medicine with sincere gratitude.

Personally, I find it most useful in the case of wearing cough.

Very reluctantly do I give testimonials for publication; but I send you this as your due. What I have seen of God's healing power through you, demands of me that I speak for the good of others. I have those around me whose health is value, and they are living witnesses that yours is a very beneficial preparation.—

Yours heartily, (Rev.) C. H. SPURGEON.

The floating chapel, contrary to expectation, Bro. I. R. B. Arnold writes, has floated off the sandbar, and will soon be ready for mission work.

A private letter from Bro. W. B. Stoddard brings the good news that he is gaining strength and has nearly recovered from his recent illness. He returns to Washington (D. V.) this week.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard has returned to Boston from his campaign in Canada, of which we hope, next week, he will give us further information. He has been doing stalwart service over the border.

Correspondence from agents in the field, this week, possesses much interest, especially the report of the anti-secrecy convention at Canby, Ore. The work in the Northwest gives promise of very gratifying results.

The Corresponding Secretary visited Aurora, Ill., on the Sabbath. Bro. Parry, of the Free Methodist church, extended a welcome, and correspondence and conference with Baptist and other pastors is hopeful. The suggestion in the Secretary's letter about turning over the N. C. A.'s work to the churches is worth notice. To this end let us labor, and expect it as a great step forward that will be well-pleasing to God.

Rev. A. W. Parry, a staunch anti-secret reformer, residing at Aurora, Ill., announces that he is prepared to deliver a series of three lectures, or addresses, on "The Scourge, the Foe, and the Tyrant of Civilization." These lectures comprise the important topics of the liquor traffic, the Roman hierarchy, and organized secrecy, in their relations to the home, the church and the state. We are very sure that Bro. Parry cannot fail to interest an audience with one or all of these prolific themes. If any churches within two or three hours' ride of Chicago desire his services, dates and other particulars may be arranged with him by correspondence. Will not our brethren in Northern Illinois exert themselves to give him an opportunity to present the truth to their neighbors?

Convict labor troubles are extending into Alabama, and the warden of the Coalbury prison had to appeal, last week, to the sheriff of the county for a hundred men for the protection of its inmates against a mob of miners. The convict-lease system is oppressive and mercenary, and it is no wonder that free miners feel outraged by its methods. The convicts, too, have a right to appeal from a barbarity that condemns them to lives of hideous slavery. Altogether, the system is an abomination in the sight of God and men.

The law in New Jersey against monopolies of coal and other products caused by combinations of railroad and other corporations, in order to keep up high prices, is very severe; and last week the authorities issued an injunction against certain railroad lines to prevent such a monopoly. One clause of the decision states that "when a corporate excess of power tends to the public injury, or to defeat the public policy, it may be restrained in equity at the suit of the Attorney General." Such a law in every State would be highly salutary.

The strike of railway switchmen at Buffalo, whose lawlessness and malevolence has filled the columns of the daily press for a fortnight past, ended last Wednesday night, in the defeat of the strikers. The presence of a large body of State militia, restraining them in their work of destruction, and the refusal of the railway firemen, conductors and trainmen to join them, brought the strike to a close. Said "Grand Master" Sweeney, chief of the revolting switchmen, "We cannot fight 8,000 militia and a dozen railroad corporations." There has been nothing gained, but an immense sum in labor and property lost, by this bootless insurrection. The lesson was costly, but its effect will be salutary. Whatever the faults of capital, labor puts itself out of the pale of public sympathy when it resorts to methods that injure the interests of the public.

During the past fortnight millionaire brewers of Chicago have strengthened their combination by uniting in its operations all but two (and those small ones) of the beer-making establishments in the city. The immediate result of this increased power is to advance the price of the noxious beverage fifty or seventy-five per cent, and otherwise secure to themselves more monopolistic advantages. One of the new regulations forbids a brewer starting, or assisting in placing, a rival saloon within 200 feet of one already established. On a certain corner a brewing company recently purchased the site for a beer saloon and apartment building, and erected upon it a four-story and attractive structure; but some time must yet elapse before it will be ready for occupancy. In the meantime another brewing company has put a saloon into full operation in a hired building within 200 feet of the new edifice. The question arises, will the original saloon dare open under the recent restrictions? It will be a happy thing for the neighborhood if it cannot.

One who writes occasionally for the Cynosure, and always well, gives us, in a private letter, a little of his personal experience as an anti-secrecy reformer: "The discourse"—printed in the Cynosure for April 7, 1892—"was preached to an unusually large congregation. Several secret society men came to hear. It must have been a blessing, for we have not lifted so large a collection at any service yet. We began thus, before our text: 'I am announced to preach on the church and secret societies. It is with fear and trembling that we approach this subject. We know that it is treading among burning plowshares. We know how easy it is to speak unadvisedly and to offend one of Christ's dear children. When a young minister said to McCheyne, I preached on eternal punishment last Sabbath, he replied, I hope you did it tenderly. It is our desire to speak kindly and tenderly, and to win all to the truth. Let us stand together before God, who searches the heart, and say, Lord, show us the right, and give us grace to do the right.' At the close we added: 'I have spoken the truth as I expect to answer to God. If what has been said be true, brethren, receive it. If in anything I have not spoken the truth, I shall consider it the greatest kindness to be set right. May God open our eyes!'" This, it seems to us, is preaching the truth in righteousness and love, a sure key to its effectiveness.

KING DAVID AND LODGISM.—Ps. 26.

BY REV. J. C. K. MILLIGAN.

Jehovah, judge my righteous life;
I trust Thee, Lord, and shall not slide;
Search me, Jehovah, and me prove;
Let heart and reins be fully tried.

Thy mercy is before mine eyes;
Where'er I walk, Thy truth's my stay;
With lying men I never sat,
And will not pass their secret way.

Ill-doers all I hated have,
And from their councils turn away;
I'll wash in innocence my hands,
And at Thine altar, Lord, I'll pray.

I will reveal, with thankful voice,
And all Thy wondrous works I'll tell;
The place of Thine abode I love,
Wherein Thy glory great doth dwell.

With sinners gather not my soul,
Nor take my life with bloody men;
For crime is in their hearts, and bribes
Their right hands fill with guilty gain.

In mine integrity I'll walk;
Redeem me, and thy grace afford;
My foot stands in an open place;
I'll in assemblies bless the Lord!

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

There is a Hebrew proverb which runs, "That thing which has been is that thing which shall be;" and it is a maxim framed out of experience of the ages, that history repeats itself. Indeed, the world's history is but one short story often told. As an illustration of this truth, compare a few facts in our national history with those of the United States of Israel.

It was by hard bondage in Egypt that they were qualified to lay the foundation of the republic of Israel. So our Pilgrim Fathers were severely disciplined by oppression in the Old World, to prepare them for founding this republic. It was 1,500 years before Christ that Moses led the Hebrews out of Egyptian slavery; and it was 1,500 years after Christ that Martin Luther led God's people out of the bondage of the dark ages. It was 1,492 years before Christ that the spies went over and explored the land of Palestine, where the first republican government was founded. It was 1,492 years after Christ that Columbus crossed the sea, and opened up this continent where God founded the second great republic. The Hebrews crossed the Red Sea into the wilderness; so our fathers came over the sea to this wilderness of the New World.

When their feet touched these shores they kept a day of thanksgiving, and doubtless sang the same songs of praise that were sung by the Israelites as their feet stood on the shores of the Red Sea. They had a hard struggle in driving out the heathen nations. Our fathers had a hard struggle in driving out the Indians.

Josephus says that there were about three million Jews at the organization of their republic; Patrick Henry says there were about three million Americans at the formation of our government. Our Revolutionary fathers fought a seven-years' war, under Washington, in achieving our national independence. The Israelites fought a seven-years' war, under Joshua, in achieving their national independence. Our government was formed by thirteen colonies; and counting the division of one of the tribes, there were thirteen colonies constituted the nation of Israel. In a great national convention at the foot of Sinai, they voted on and adopted the Ten Commandments as their national constitution, just as truly as our Revolutionary fathers voted upon and adopted the Constitution of the United States. Our republic was modeled after theirs, in that their tribes were so many State governments under one Federal Constitution. Like ours, they had the legislative, executive and judicial departments of government clearly defined. From Numbers 1: 16 we find they had a congress, composed of the "renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribe, heads of thousands in Israel. They had a senate composed of "seventy men of the elders of Israel." See Num. 11: 16. Their judicial system was composed of higher and lower courts. See Ex. 18: 21. There is not a good feature of our republic whose original we cannot find in that form of republican government which God gave to Israel 3,384 years ago.

But the Bible gives us the history of the Jewish republic, not only as a model for us, but also as a beacon light. The reefs on which that republic went to pieces are the most dangerous rocks in the path of our nation. When they rejected the form of government that God gave them, they rejected God's authority. Our government rejected the same authority when it adopted a constitution which excludes his law and authority, and substitutes the will of the people. Their corrupt administration brought on a great civil war in the time of Absalom's rebellion, and ours in the time of the slaveholders' rebellion. They became a nation of Sabbath-breakers and were sent into slavery for seventy years, because they had robbed God of seventy years of Sabbaths. Our government, through its mail service and railroad corporations, is robbing God and millions of our fellow-men of the Sabbath rest, a crime that must certainly bring national judgments. Their association with heathen nations around them was what corrupted their morals and hastened their ruin; and the demoralizing influence of foreign immigration is one of the most dangerous rocks in the pathway of our republic. Their civil rulers, just before the captivity, ruled God's law out of politics; one of their kings, Jehoiakim, cut it in pieces and threw it into the fire after hearing it read. And the desire to exclude the Bible from politics is a dangerous symptom of our times.

Their prophets again and again declare that the crimes that hastened their national destruction were their legalized intemperance, and their oppression of the poor; and these are the evils that are gathering storm-clouds of judgment over this land.

Their great national crime was that upon so many hilltops were erected heathen altars to false gods; and in nearly every town and city in our land we have established such heathen altars; not on hilltops and in groves, but in halls in upper stories of buildings!

These secret lodges are false religions, as dishonoring to God as were the altars of Baal.

Finally, when the critical hour came in Israel's history and it was time to put the question, "What will you do with Jesus?" they said, "Crucify him! crucify him! Not this man, but Barrabas." And forty years afterward the Roman army surrounded their capital, and in a five months' siege, one and a half million Jews perished. History has no such record of suffering as God inflicted upon that guilty nation for their sin of rejecting Christ.

The great question before the American people now is, can we avert the fall? Shall this circle of history be complete? When the moral issues now stirring our politics are pressed to their final decision, shall we decide them on the side of Christ? History says the next step before our nation is ruin. There is but one escape. It is to secure moral anchorage for our government; by putting our politics in harmony with the law of Christ.

Once to every man and nation
Comes the moment to decide;
In the strife of truth with falsehood,
For the good or evil side.
Some great cause, God's new Messiah,
Offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand
And the sheep upon the right;
And the choice goes by forever,
'Twixt that darkness and that light.
Hast thou chosen, O my people,
On which platform thou shalt stand,
Ere thy doom from its worn sandals
Shakes the dust against thy land?

BLACK SLUM JIM, THE SALVATIONIST.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

Tramp, tramp, tramp! Rub-a-dub-dub, rub-a-dub-dub! Far down the streets the sounds are heard, drawing nearer and nearer. Passers-by paused in their rapid walk; women looked out of the windows; and a group of children, sitting on a horse-block in front of a store, shouted: "The soldiers are coming!"

And now they are in sight, and the sound of singing is borne upon the wind. The children look again. There are women dressed in peculiar bonnets and navy-blue suits; men with banners; and all are marching with a quick, alert tread, keeping time to the song they are singing. The children press close to the edge of the sidewalk, screaming, "It's the Salvation Army!"

Sure enough, so it was. They marched along with their banners, drums, and tambourines, singing, meanwhile, in their musical voices: "I am glad I'm in this army." There were some twenty-five or thirty in their ranks, and they had nearly all passed by, when one of the children in the group by the sidewalk shouted: "By Jove, if there isn't Black Slum Jim!" And, sure enough, in the rear ranks was a slight, frail-looking lad, about sixteen years of age. He was dressed in full uniform, and carried a banner. He seemed to wish to avoid the children's gaze, for he did not look in their direction, but marched sturdily on, with a proud, elastic tread, that told plainly that whatever others might think, he was not ashamed of being where he was,—marching in the ranks of the Salvation Army.

One or two of the boys in the group seemed to have a special spite against the lad, exclaiming, "S'pose he thinks he is too good to be one of us now! Wonder if he remembers that he used to be the ringleader of every fight in the streets down there in the Black Slums? Much good he will be there in the Salvation Army!" "See him fixed up in them togs!" screamed another; "wonder what he has done with his rags?" "He says he is cleansed," says another boy of twelve, with an enormous quid of tobacco in his cheek; "cleansed," he said with a contemptuous sniff; "much he knows about it! I'd cleanse him fast enough if I could get hold of him, the little dandy upstart!"

The "Black Slums" was one of the worst streets in the city. Every third house was a saloon; every fourth, a dance-house. Ragged, filthy children swarmed in the streets from morning till night, and the foetid air of the place fairly quivered with oaths and vile language. Every young girl in the place was a harlot, or intended to be one. Yet, within the precincts of that horrible place, the Salvation Army, true to their name, had penetrated, and the results were several converts, among whom was "Black Slum Jim;" so-called, because he was one of the worst characters in the place, as well as the one best known to the police.

A day or two after the incident above narrated, an open-air meeting was held in a grove in the suburbs of the city. The speaker was a dark-eyed girl who had led the singing in the march two days before. On reaching their barracks, that day, she sent for "Black Slum Jim," and, giving him a package of tracts and papers, she said: "Take these down to the 'Black Slums' and distribute them among your friends and acquaintances. The Army will march down there, to-night." Poor Jim looked into the beautiful face smiling down upon him, and, for a moment, quailed. He knew his life was in danger if he went there; the next instant, his form straightened, and his eyes flashed, for was he not a soldier? Now was the time to tell what metal he was made of. He stuffed the tracts and papers into his pockets and started proudly on his way. But a moment after, and the dark-eyed girl-preacher was surprised to see him returning. Had his courage failed? "Please, ma'am," he said, "may I carry the banner?" "Oh, yes," she said; and she placed it in his hand, and once more he started down the street on his eventful errand.

That night, just as the sun was setting, the Salvation Army, with tambourines, drums and banners, marched down the streets of the "Black Slums." As might be expected, their appearance attracted much attention. A few watched them and listened in silence, but the majority did not do so; but there were plenty of yells, howls and cat-calls, while mud, stones and rotten eggs were hurled at them; but they still marched on, and not a voice failed, nor did a step falter. At last, far down the street, a group attracted their attention. The dark-eyed girl-preacher was the first to see it. It was a group of wrangling, struggling, fighting boys, and, waving high above them, was a banner! "It is James! our James!" the girl-preacher cried; "he is in trouble. Hasten! we must help him!" They quicken their pace. Now, the banner is down,—no, it is up again! See the angry group fight and struggle around it! It falls again! Oh, will it rise? Yes, there it is! The dark-eyed girl-preacher shouts and claps her hands. But now, once more, the banner falls; and, although they watch so anxiously, it does not rise again.

They have reached the spot now, and the captain, with imperious hand, waves the angry mob aside, and there, face downward, poor "Black Slum Jim" lies, both hands tightly clutching the banner. The dark-eyed girl-preacher drops upon one knee beside the boy. His cap had fallen off, and his dark curls were matted with blood. "He is dead!" she said. She tenderly raised him to a sitting posture, and the dark, blood-stained hand rested upon her shoulder.

And now, most wonderful sight of all! his fingers, stiff in death, had closed around the flag-staff; and as the girl-preacher raised him in her arms, those dead hands lifted the banner! "See," she said, "he was a good soldier. He was faithful, and did his duty well. See! in death he holds fast to the banner!"

They gathered around the dead boy, the men with uncovered heads, and the women with sad, pale faces. No angry words, no fighting now; all is silent before the stern messenger Death. The dark-eyed girl-preacher bowed her head, the tears falling fast from her eyes. "God have mercy on his murderers!" she said. "They knew not what they did."

"Amen!" said the captain.

THE OATH-BOUND GIDEON'S BAND.

The Tribune did a service to the public yesterday by turning the electric light on the secret organization calling itself "Gideon's Band," the inner circle of the "People's Alliance," which it has ruled with mysterious and despotic power. Many of the features of this society will remind older persons of the Know-Nothings who flourished between 1854 and 1860, and who had the same love for secret lodge meetings, grips and passwords, oaths and pledges, that the "Gideonites" appear to have. This organization, like its Know-Nothing predecessor, is un-American in its methods, which are borrowed from the Carbonari of Southern Italy and the Mollie Maguires of Pennsylvania. Such methods are resorted to only by persons who know that their aims and objects will not bear open inspection.

Fortunately, it is difficult to keep anything hidden in this country which is in the nature of a conspiracy against the public. The press is too vigilant and the feelings of most people are too unfriendly to societies which claim from their members a higher allegiance than they owe to their government. The Tribune yesterday gave a very fair idea of the society which owes its existence to the scheming brain of one Dr. Macune; and the veil of secrecy having been partially withdrawn other information will be obtained, until all the mysteries of Macune's lodge-room are laid bare before the public.

The head of the society has the title of "Jerubbaal," which was the original name of Gideon, but which was offensive to the pious Israelites of a later day. The first high cockalorum chief was Col. Livingston of Georgia. He selected a trustworthy henchman in each Congressional district, who was given the title of "Gideon." The latter was commanded to pick out 300 trusty fellows in his Congressional district, and the organization was completed. The expectation is that by intrigue, finesse, and fraud the 300 conspirators in each Congressional district, acting as a unit and obeying the orders of one shrewd man, may be able to run its politics. Each district averages over 180,000 inhabitants, or something like 35,000 voters; but the intention is that the latter, whether Republicans or Democrats, shall be "bossed" without their knowing it by the little band of 300 Gideonites and its chief conspirator.

As yet the names of the head men and their subs in the different Congressional districts which have been organized have not been printed, but they will be in due time. One discovery will be followed by another, and before long the big and little wheels of the inner machinery will be exposed. Then the people of each district will learn the names of the individuals who have set themselves up as their masters and have been working in dark and devious ways to secure the election of Congressmen, members of Legislatures, and State and county officers pledged to the wild and destructive schemes set forth in the Ocala platform. It will be found when the facts are known that a large percentage of these plotters have managed to secure offices for themselves from Jerubbaal Livingston down.

Happily, the power for mischief of Gideon's Band is gone the moment it is exposed. Everybody will scuttle out of it and deny that he ever belonged to it, as people deny that they ever joined the Know-Nothings, or the Knights of the Golden Circle, another nightly affair which had its oaths and hailing signals. Americans have no patience with secret organizations except for charitable and social purposes. They prefer to take their politics openly. Thus this band, formed to get offices for its members and to elect to State and Federal offices men in favor of the issue by the government of irredeemable shinplasters, will soon be a thing of the past, and the voters of each Congressional district will be allowed to manage their political affairs for themselves.—

SECRET SOCIETIES.

Whatever we may know or suppose about the veiled and ostentatiously concealed workings of secret societies, there are certain facts about them open to any observer which he might well pause and think about. Such great conclaves as that recently held at Denver is one of these. Over all this great host, imposing from its very numbers; over all this pompous ceremony and ridiculously extravagant titles; over all this bewildering display of fuss and feathers, one is moved to pause and exclaim, Cui bono?

We know the meaning of a political assembly; it has a serious aim to carry some policy of state. We recognize at once the reason of a Christian Endeavor Convention, which is but the visible evidence of the great religious uprising among young people. But what is the substance beneath the show of the Denver assemblage? Or have the show, the ceremony, the secret oaths, the formalism been made an end in themselves, not directed toward a proportionately high or worthy purpose, and calculated to divert men's minds from things of greater seriousness and value?

Just this, in the mind of many observers, is what these secret organizations tend to do. Their judgment is not based on any supposed revelations of impious oaths or practices, but on what he who runs may read of the nature and tendencies of these bodies. It seems to them that these are factitious, artificial bodies, which are plainly opposed to some of the great natural divisions or organizations of society.

What is the danger of the secret society to the church? It is not in the fact of direct opposition to Christian things, though some of them may oppose; but in the more subtle and insinuating form of evil which tends to make the society the substitute for the Christian church and a vital spiritual religion. No one can dispute that the lodge has this tendency. Members have been heard to say that the religion of their lodge was all the religion that they wanted. One of the loudest vaunts made by the members of the most important of these societies is that they will not accept a member who does not believe in a supreme being. And this general declaration, broad enough to take in Jews, Mohammedans and Buddhists, Parthians, Medes, Elamites and dwellers in Mesopotamia, is made to do duty in a vast number of instances for a real, vital religion and for active Christian service. How often do we hear this boast in the mouths of men of no Christian profession, and who do not embody Christian principles in the conduct of their lives. It is therefore not an aid but a direct enemy to the church. The same is true of its relation to the family. Its tendency is to break up the home circle; to draw the husband and father away from the fireside and make him seek his pleasure and recreation in another quarter; to make a large part of his life and interests a secret that cannot be shared even by those nearest and dearest to him.

The very principle on which these societies make their greatest claim, the principle of mutual helpfulness, is entirely opposed to Christian teaching on this subject. Christianity teaches the brotherhood of men. These societies teach the brotherhood of secret and sworn confederates. So far from being for the welfare of mankind, in principle and practice it is for the welfare of the society against all the rest of mankind. It is the same principle which makes labor unions seek to gain control of a trade, and to maltreat and drive out all workmen in that trade who prefer not to belong to their organization. Such principles are clearly for selfish advantage and not for the public good.

Often this feeling of the society against the world leads to direct protection of enemies of the public welfare. It is useless to talk about the theory of these organizations upon such matters. The facts and tendencies of the societies are against them. We once heard an officer high in Masonic circles tell how, by the fact of his membership in this order, and by making the secret sign, he was able to evade the Swiss customs laws and to get his baggage past the inspector without examination. He told the story to illustrate the benefits of the order. To our minds, he could not have passed a severer condemnation upon it. Thus has the principle proved in colleges, militating against the general good order and discipline. Thus has it proved in churches. Thus has it proved time and again in the State.

It often happens that the most open and outspoken foes are not the most to be dreaded. It is those rather that come with half-truths and with a seeming good. But we cannot give any commendation whatever to this partial good when it operates to exclude men from their highest good, and blind them to their greatest needs.—

ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

Some time ago I had the privilege of listening to a discourse on Odd-fellowship, by a Rev. Mr. ———, from Webster City, which discourse, judging from the speaker's failure to find another institution that would compare with it, was calculated to impress one with the superiority of that institution, above all other institutions—the church of Christ not excepted.

Let us now examine into the assumed superiority of this institution. The reverend gentleman considered Odd-fellowship founded in the "brotherhood of man." But is it so founded? We must reduce the brotherhood of man to a society, where benefits conferred result from the payment of a stipulated sum of money, by the party receiving the benefits, the stipulated money being his "dues." This reduction must be made before we find Odd-fellowship; and at the foot of this reduction we find many other societies, such as Freemasons, insurance companies, etc. Hence the brotherhood of man unreduced reveals no such institution as Odd-fellowship. Indeed, the only institution it does reveal is the church of Christ. Odd-fellowship virtually says, do good to those only who are members. The apostle says, "do good unto all men, especially unto the household of faith."

We are not informed that the "good Samaritan" looked for a "badge" on the man lying wounded by the roadside, before he would take care of him. The "badge" of distress ought to be sufficient to call forth our sympathy and assistance.

One of the gentleman's illustrations is in point here. A physician who was an Odd-fellow was called to attend a patient. He went and found the patient in a wretched, cheerless room, in a tenement house. The invalid was a woman, attended only by a little girl. The doctor prescribed and started to go, when his attention was attracted to something hanging on the wall, which proved to be a certificate of membership in the Odd-fellows' lodge. Her husband was dead and this was his certificate of membership. He then asked her if her husband had been an Odd-fellow. She replied yes. He then notified the lodge and she was taken care of. Now observe the motive which prompted him to act thus. When he started from the room, what was it that arrested his attention?

Not the wretched and pitiable condition of that woman, but the certificate of the lodge on the wall. That certificate caused him to realize that he was under obligations to that woman, not by virtue of the brotherhood of man, but by virtue of the brotherhood of the lodge. Hence we may perceive that the Odd-fellows' lodge is a selfish institution, and its votaries should not be so deluded as to imagine it to be anything else.

We have a very good language portrait of the Odd-fellows' lodge, in Luke 6: 33, 34. It reads: "And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for sinners also do even the same; and if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again." If the Odd-fellows help those who help them what do they more than other worldly institutions? But mark the following: "But love your enemies, and do good and lend, hoping for nothing again, and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the Highest." I opine that if the money ingredient was taken out of the lodge, and an attempt made to run the institution on the "do-good-and-lend-and-hoping-for-nothing-again"-plan, there would be a rapid falling off in the membership, especially on the part of those who are not in that institution, because of the great love they have for each other.

A stream rises no higher than its fountain head.

And so the fountain head of "lodgism" arising in the animal nature of man, goes no higher than his animal nature. "Lodgism," recognizing no fall of man and consequent need of a Redeemer, is therefore very palatable to the natural man.

Let us notice another of the preacher's illustrations. We were given a view of heaven and heard a conversation between Christ and an angel, about as follows: "I (Christ) hear that they are having quite a time down on the earth, about Odd-fellows, and my followers are sending up prayers to me, to curse it. Now you (speaking to the angel) go down and investigate and report to me." The angel goes down, inquires at the "poor-house" as to whether they have any Odd-fellows on their list. The answer is, "no." The angel then asks if they have any children of Odd-fellows on their list, and the answer is "no." The angel then returns to heaven and makes something like the following report: "I find that Odd-fellows take care of their sick; I find that Odd-fellows take care of the children of Odd-fellows." Then Christ is represented as saying; "The report is satisfactory; go on with the good work." "He that is not against me is for me."

It seems to me that the "report" lacks in thoroughness. The angel should have inquired as to whether Odd-fellows, in a lodge capacity, looked after any one except members of the lodge and their children, and the answer, I think, would have been no. Is it a very great spectacle to angels and men that Odd-fellows should take care of their own members? Were it not for the fact that the professed followers of Christ are uniting with the lodge and thus crippling the influence of the Christian religion, we would not have such a controversy with the lodge. But the presence of the Christian at the lodge and at the ceremonies incident to the burial of one of its members, strengthens the idea that the lodge is better than the church; else why forsake the church for the lodge? I emphatically protest against this unholy mingling of believers with unbelievers, as is the case in the lodge, and the unwarranted assumption that God sanctions such a mongrel institution. And by reason of this "mingling" of believers with unbelievers, the name of Christ must needs be omitted, for fear of offending the unbelievers, as though it were no offense to the believers to have Christ's name omitted; and indeed is it an offense to the believers to omit Christ's name? Let those who are in it answer. If it is they swallow the offense, perhaps, out of regard for the feelings of the unbelievers; a strange "regard."—S. D. McLain, in the Brethren Evangelist.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

"The realization of a day-dream.—The Eliot Oak.—Pegan Hill.—A Catholic endowment order gone under.—Masonry's part in the Labor war.—Who elected Gov. Russell?"

"A dream I had when life was new;
Alas, our dreams! they are not true;
I thought to see fair Carcasoune,
That lovely city—Carcasoune!

* * * * *
Who has not known a Carcasoune?"

So runs a touching little ballad from the French, in which an aged peasant of four-score sits in his chair, musing with vain regrets an old day-dream of his youth. My Carcasoune was not a city but a hill, by no means a sky-piercing elevation, but one of very respectable altitude for these parts, which from childhood away up into years of mature womanhood had been to me a kind of enchanted ground. I do not remember when I did not long to tread the summit of Pegan Hill,—and as everything comes round to him who waits, either here or in some better form beyond, I recently found myself one lovely afternoon actually starting for these happy hunting-grounds of the primeval savage. For the drive led us through South Natick, celebrated by Mrs. Harriet B. Stowe in her "Old-Town Folks," but whose real fame dated generations before she or any one else had risen to weave the golden thread of romance into the dark and sombre realities of Puritan life;—the days when John Eliot, his heart burning with love for his red-skinned brothers, made here the first attempt to gather them into a Christianized and civilized community.

We pass, on the way, the college grounds, and catch occasional glimpses of the lovely Lake Waban, so named from the Indian chief who was Eliot's first convert, as it gleams and sparkles in the sunshine,—fit mirror for the queen of women's colleges to see her fair face in as she sits enthroned upon its banks. Then the famous Hunnewell estate comes into view, where for nearly half a century art combined with unlimited wealth has had it all her own way, and made it one of the most unique and enchanting spots in New England, if not in the United States. Its chief attraction is the Italian garden situated on the shores of the lake before mentioned, and which is, as its name imports, a bit of sunny Italy dropped down bodily into our prosaic Yankee land. Petrarch and Laura might have sat on those terraced steps without a sense of incongruity, so perfect is the illusion. But our objective point is farther on, and we cannot stay to dream as we otherwise might that we are on the shores of Lake Como. A few moments more and we find ourselves in South Natick, the sleepest of all sleepy little villages, though an electric line just completed promises to remedy all this, and make it before long a very different kind of place.

It is here we come to our first point of historic interest, an aged oak, still green and lusty, standing in the middle of a kind of square formed by the divergence of two streets, and having a stone tablet at its base on which is this simple inscription: "The Eliot Oak, 1651." Here it is: the famous tree under which John Eliot preached his first sermon to the Indians. It is not probably near as old as the Waverly Oaks, a few miles from here, on the outskirts of Waltham, which are known to be in the vicinity of one thousand years old, and must have, therefore, been standing when Eric and his Northmen landed. But these Methusalehs of the forest, like their antideluvian prototypes, have no history;—they are remarkable only for the centuries which have passed over their heads, and that "we live in deeds, not years," may be said of trees as well as men. We stopped our horse under its shade, and in reverent silence paid homage to the memory of the Apostle Eliot, whose faith, and zeal, and tenderness, and burning love for souls made him, in his limited area of action, a second Paul. We looked up into the rustling boughs which had once shaded that venerable head, and thanked heaven that both the lightning's bolt and the vandal hand of man had hitherto spared it. Centuries more may it flourish, a living monument to New England's first home missionary, who when dying at the age of four-score could say: "My memory faileth, my understanding faileth, my speech faileth, but my charity never."

Then we went on over a road that he had traveled doubtless with weary feet, when it was only an Indian trail among pathless woods, until at last we reached our Ultima Thule, Pegan Hill. The yarrow and golden-rod, together with the red blossoms of the sumach, brightened our way, besides a variety of nameless wildwood growths, which the old Indian doctress, Hannah Dexter, who lived here once and did her best according to her simple skill to lighten humanity's load of aches and pains, would have seized upon as treasures. Poor old lady! Her tragic death certainly proves that the pure whisky of our forefathers could incite to fiendish deeds, fully equal to those caused by the adulterated stuff of modern days; for her sons and grandsons, one Thanksgiving night, having imbibed too much fire-water, got into a drunken quarrel, and burned her to death in the great brick oven. Well that John Eliot could sow and reap in hope without foreseeing that the end of his labors would seem to human eyes only a gigantic failure.

Our road terminated abruptly at a farm-house, when about two-thirds up the hill, and hitching our team we had to proceed the rest of the way on foot; but the view when we reached the summit well repaid fatigue. Quiet villages, with their church spires pointing heavenward, lay spread out below, slumbering peacefully in the lap of the hills, which spread all around us in a circling rampart—the most noticeable perhaps being the Blue Hills of Milton, the Great Hills from which Massachusetts derives her lovely, liquid Indian name, and unpleasantly famous for the number of rattlesnakes killed thereon. Only the cawing of crows disturbed the silence, while the air was cool and sweet, as if breathed from the very "land of souls." For an outing we all voted that this was much better than going to some more famed resort, among crowds of would-be fashionables, smokers and beer-drinkers, which make such a thing as communing with nature, if attempted at all, a mockery and a farce. Long may Pegan Hill keep its lovely sylvan wildness, and be sought only by simple souls content with simple pleasure, who would rather "win the secret of a weed's plain heart" than sparkle in diamonds at Saratoga or Long Branch. Very appropriately, in going over this old missionary ground, we had with us a young colored lady, Miss L. E. Howard, who is fitting herself for work in Africa. The good John Eliot, who, when he became too old to labor among his beloved Indians, used to gather about him the Negro servants of the settlers for religious instruction, would have greeted her as a kindred soul, and a sister beloved. It may interest the reader to know that she is a cousin of Miss Imogene Howard, also a Boston girl, and a young lady of the rarest culture, who has been chosen to stand at the head of the Afro-American department at the World's Fair.

Home we drove in the lengthening shadows—how soon they begin to lengthen now, and how that subtle creeping chill in the air reminds us of the equinoctials not far off!—and there was the evening newspaper waiting us with its tidings from the great world, from which Pegan Hill with its pastoral silence and its by-gone memories had for a while so completely shut us out.

The Catholic Crusaders of the Holy Cross, an endowment order of the Romish church, here in Boston, has followed suit with its contemporaries, and been placed in the hands of a receiver. The religious complexion of such schemes matters little when dishonest and unsafe financiering is at the bottom. Even Rome cannot alter the rules of arithmetic, or make five of two and two.

The great labor strikes bring out a great deal of talk, which only shows how ignorant are the speakers. Some condemn utterly the Coal Creek miners, forgetting that in spite of their lawless methods they have right and justice on their side. Those Southern States, which, in the spirit of the dark ages, still cling to their infamous chain-gang system, and have refused to hear the indignant voice of public sentiment, perhaps need the shock of arms to cure their deafness. But when Labor Commissioner Ford tells us that one of the striking miners who captured Captain Anderson said to him: "Captain Anderson is a Mason, and so am I, and I will lose my life before he is taken by the mob;" and adds: "Then I knew he was safe," can any thoughtful mind fail to foresee that in this new labor war, whose end no man can foretell, Masonry is going to play the same part, and one even more prominent, than she did in our great civil struggle?

A little story at the expense of Gov. Russell is told by the Boston Record: The Governor, who, it will be remembered, could not go to the W. C. T. U. Convention last fall, because he was too tired, yet is never too fatigued to attend a boat-race, or any celebration where his non-attendance would be likely to offend the foreign voters, of course attended the Framingham muster with his wife and quite a party of guests. The evening train on which they came back was crowded, and many of the men on board being under the influence of liquor were very noisy and profane. Our Governor, like the party he stands for, does not believe in restricting personal rights; but it finally became so unpleasant that the conductor had to interfere. One sullen voice in the crowd asked, "Who elected the Governor, anyway?" but another said: "Well, he's a good fellow; let's be quiet." And for a time comparative quiet reigned in Warsaw.

And these are the men who elect our rulers.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, August 24, 1892.

That the power of the rumseller is great is well known to every person who ever took the trouble to look even superficially into the subject; but that it was powerful enough to compel the resignation of an assistant District Attorney, who by reason of his industrious prosecution in the police court of the rumsellers who violated the license laws had incurred the ill-will of the liquor men, was not believed by many until it was actually accomplished. But now that it is known, there is much indignation in the community, and it is by no means confined to the members of the temperance organizations and churches. Respectable people of all kinds now recognize, many of them for the first time, that the liquor question is one upon which, sooner or later, every one must take sides; that there is no middle course between the disreputable liquor dealers and the reputable family circle, and that those who are not outspoken against the saloons are tacitly aiding them to increase their power, which in this case defies the existing laws and controls the authorities charged with their administration.

This is no local question; it affects every family in the United States. If the rumsellers of the District of Columbia are strong enough to prevent Congressional legislation averse to their interests, as they unquestionably did at the last session of Congress, notwithstanding the influence of a very large majority of the reputable citizens of the national capital in favor of that legislation, they may eventually become strong enough to dictate legislation, national, State and municipal, in their own interests. If they are strong enough to compel the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, officers appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, to demand the resignation of a prosecuting attorney who by his faithful performance of legal duties pertaining to his office had become obnoxious to them, it encourages them to try the same tactics in your State, county, or town, and, succeeding in this, they will then demand that all prosecuting attorneys shall be named by them and shall hold office subject to their pleasure. Sounds ridiculous, doesn't it? But not more so than would a statement covering the present situation at the capital of the nation, if it had been made a few short years ago.

Lawyers who represent liquor-dealers are particularly fond of referring to their clients as law-abiding citizens, and as being ready at all times to aid the officials in bringing law-breakers to justice. The facts in this case show the contrary. It was only the rumsellers that break the laws who had any occasion to fear trouble at the hands of Mr. Dumont, the deposed prosecuting attorney—he had no authority to prosecute those who conducted their business inside of the laws, however much he might deprecate the looseness of those laws. And the fact that the liquor-dealers' association demanded that Mr. Dumont be compelled to resign shows that the main object of the association is the protection of those rumsellers who habitually violate the law. Liquor-dealers have long openly accused Mr. Dumont of being entirely too energetic in his prosecution of saloon-keepers brought before the police court, and his success in that line made him many enemies; but it was not until he began proceedings under an old and forgotten law to close the numerous bar-rooms openly doing business without licenses in the district embraced by the faulty law prohibiting the sale of liquor within one mile of the grounds of the Soldiers' Home, that he felt the heavy hand of the organized rumsellers. He was informed by his immediate superior, Hon. George C. Hazleton, attorney for the District of Columbia, who was once a Congressman, from the State of Wisconsin, that he must dismiss all of the cases against liquor-dealers in the "mile limit" district, and not begin any future prosecutions of them until directed so to do. This information was in writing, and after submitting it to the court as his reason for asking the dismissal of cases in which he was confident of securing convictions, Mr. Dumont tendered his resignation, which he had previously declined to do at the request of Mr. Hazleton, because no reason was given for asking it. Mr. Dumont considered the letter directing him to dismiss all the cases he had prepared against the unlicensed liquor-dealers in the "mile limit" a sufficient reason for his resignation having been asked for; and if it had not been asked for he says he would have resigned upon receipt of that letter, as he does not consider that the oath he took upon assuming the office would allow him to refrain from prosecuting such liquor cases as might come into his hands.

That this disgraceful state of affairs should exist in Washington is entirely the fault of Congress, which is the only law-making power the national capital has, and only outside pressure affects Congress. Residents here can only hope that the good people of the country will see that the pressure is turned on, full force, next winter.

REFORM NEWS.

WHEN THE N. C. A. MAY RESIGN.

The General Conference of the Norwegian Lutherans, at Decorah, Iowa, set the keynote for the churches. That notable body of men, gathered from various States, and serving in widely scattered communities, have many of them sharply realized the evil influence of secretism. They open the Word of God, and with light from its pages on this question, they judge of it as God does and not as man. For his thoughts are not like man's upon this issue.

Nathaniel Colver spoke like a prophet when he said of the lodge: "I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men."

So also wrote George F. Pentecost, that this system is doing more mischief to churches and their members "than any other one enemy of Christ."

Such a prophetic view seemed to be given to this great conference. Their churches are, as a rule, free from lodge contamination. They mean to keep them so. It was a wise resolution to begin with the confirmation classes, the young people and youth of their congregations. Wise instruction will fix right principles, and produce unchangeable conviction; and an ounce of prevention at this early age is worth pounds of cure a few years later. This branch of the Lutheran church will thus take up the work against lodge idolatry in an earnest and effective manner. When all the churches shall undertake it, in like manner, this reform will then be returned to the proper agency, and the N. C. A. may seek another mission.

Returning from Decorah to Illinois, I met a remarkable congregation on the Lord's day at Providence, Ill. This is a "country" place literally. A church, school-house, blacksmith-shop, store, postoffice, and a half-dozen homes lie within what might be the limits of an ordinary town. These are scattered upon the crown of a long slope, a literal ground-swell, that rises from a distance of miles, but nowhere breaks into rough rocks or sharp declivities.

For twenty miles in every direction the glory and goodness of God are spread like a map marked with inviting groves, fields of yellow grain, the dark-green breadths of corn land and pasture, and everywhere well-built farm-houses, telling of a prosperous and happy country. Here Rev. J. L. Fonda, a friend and comrade of student-life, preaches to an intelligent and earnest people, who filled the Congregational church on Sabbath morning as few town churches are filled at any season of the year, and for such a location the church is large. The truth concerning the worship of God and its danger from the lodge was heard with interest and general approval. The effect we shall find enduring.

This is the third Congregational church I have addressed on the Sabbath within a few weeks. Other churches are opening. Let us ask of God and expect all to be. This reform belongs to them. It is peculiarly their work. We must take it to them, convince them, and pray God to give them an enthusiasm for this truth equal to its importance. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

FROM THE EASTERN AGENT.

BOSTON, Mass., August 26, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—My lecture in the Barnet Centre U. P. church, all things considered, was well-attended. The pastor, Rev. Mr. McKindlay, prepared the way, and did what he could to help along.

You will remember that I announced in last week's report a joint discussion of the relation of the I. O. O. F. lodge to the Christian religion. Mr. Wilson, the gentleman giving the challenge to discuss, labored hard to get his I. O. O. F. preachers to help him out. He wrote and telegraphed, but when the hour came for the discussion no preacher appeared in the lodge defence.

Some got the impression that the discussion would be given up. Mr. Wilson agreed to arrange for the place, etc. The advertising was very meager, and the place of meeting indefinite, until a little before we gathered. However, the school hall was well filled a little before eight o'clock, and the discussion began.

Rev. Mr. McKindlay was appointed chairman. By request, I opened the discussion, though on the negative of the question.

Mr. Wilson opened for the affirmative.

A general discussion followed, each being free to express his or her opinion.

Mr. Wilson, and in fact all who spoke in favor of the lodge, labored under the disadvantage of not knowing what the institution does teach. No one had a manual or book aside from the constitution or by-laws setting forth their teachings.

The most of the lodge speakers made a claim that it was not a religious institution. Some of the same speakers made the claim that a man must be a good Christian to be a good Odd-fellow. When one was asked, "Why do you have prayers, Scripture-reading and other religious services if you are not a religious institution?" he made no reply.

Rev. Mr. Faris showed that the I. O. O. F. were anti-Christian because they rejected Christ—there can be no Christianity without Christ. Again, the lodge did not manifest the spirit of Christ, and hence could be none of his, should they profess to be.

In showing the lodge Christ-rejecting, we referred to the following, found in report of the last meeting of the Sovereign Grand Lodge I. O. O. F., held in St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 21-26, 1891: "Rep. Weatherspoon, of the Lower Provinces, moved the following:

WHEREAS, In the report of the session of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of 1888 the following question was submitted to the Grand Sire for his decision: [No. 58. Page 11 and 105:] 'Is it lawful for a Chaplain to commence and finish his prayer in the name of Christ?' and in his decision the Grand Sire, after defining the meaning of the word 'sect,' used these words: 'In this sense Christianity is a sect, hence it is inexpedient, unwise and, I think, unlawful, to make prominent reference to it in lodge work.' And

WHEREAS, By the report of a committee of the Sovereign Grand Lodge, adopted in 1889, the decision of the Grand Sire was confirmed and sustained; and

WHEREAS, The decision of the Grand Sire places our order on record as having put a ban on the name of Christ; therefore

Resolved, That this Grand Lodge petitions the Sovereign Grand Lodge to reverse the decision of the Grand Sire as given in 1888, in relation to the name of Christ and prayer." [See page 12,-619, Sovereign Grand Lodge report.] "The committee appointed reported: 'On the Memorial of the Grand Lodge of the Lower Provinces on the decision of the Grand Sire in reference to prayer, etc., the committee report that no resolution has been offered by any member of this Grand Body and that no action can be taken by this committee.'" [See Index, Part III., Reports of Com.]

So it seems there was not a man in the last Grand Lodge meeting that would offer a resolution to allow a recognition of Christ in the order. In referring to the I. O. O. F. in foreign countries, the Grand Sire makes the following significant statement: "Odd-fellowship is one body with one head." Question, who is the head? "In one word, what regeneration by the word of truth is in religion initiation is in Odd-fellowship." [Grosch's Manual, Chapter I., on initiations generally.] The same chapter further on: "May your initiation and consequent practice aid in releasing you from all blindness of moral vision, set you free from the fetters of ignorance and error, and bring you from a death in selfishness into a life of active benevolence and virtue." "On the broad platform of brotherhood, all nations,

CORRESPONDENCE.

"OVERWORKED MOTHERS."

WALPOLE, Mass., 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your paper of April 7th is an article on "Overworked Mothers," taken from Timely Truth. Evidently it was written by a person who knows very little of the opposite side of the argument.

I have been in the temperance work for over twenty years; have raised a family of children, none of whom has ever been seen drinking liquors of any kind, and have met many ladies actively engaged in temperance work; but it certainly is the exception to the rule to see the homes of these women so sadly neglected. We admit that it is a well-known fact that out of some well-ordered homes come some of the greatest wrecks of boys and girls.

I do not want to shield the negligent wife and mother, but I do protest against anything that looks like a wholesale charge of neglect in the homes of thousands of women who stand so nobly at the front of all true reforms, where our husbands and fathers ought to stand. But because men will neither agitate against the sale and manufacture of liquor, nor vote the cursed traffic out of existence, or at least class it among crimes which it ought to be, instead of placing it under the protection and sanction of the law—because, I say, of this neglect on the part of many husbands and fathers, the wives and mothers are constrained to take up the work, in order to save their own and others' children from the terrible doom of drunkenness.

Should there be ample proof of a small minority of mothers who really neglect home for temperance work in public, would it not be well to find out whether the husband does not, by his own example, teach his children that he and not his wife is the "boss" in his home. Such instances are not rare.

When a woman enters the ranks of temperance-workers, she invariably does it for two reasons: first, to save her own family; secondly, to help save some other family.

If children go astray in a family, the charge is generally laid to the mother; she is either too negligent or too indulgent; she is the one that is likely to be criticized, anyway.

If the writer of the above-named article will show me a dozen instances where the children were lost because the mother was overworked in the temperance cause, I will show hundreds of cases where a mother was overworked at washing, ironing, etc., because the husband was a drunkard; she being barely able to attend to her home duties, when she comes home from working for other families.

But there is no sound raised against her "over-work" in that line. Oh, no! the public consider it her duty to continue there; and only when she urges the closing of liquor saloons where her husband spends his money, and where her sons and daughters may also be ruined, only then is she doing a terribly wrong thing. Then "she becomes a powerful enemy to the temperance cause."

I am aware that the "home-end" is the right end to begin at, but I challenge any reader to argue with me on this "home-end" line. In a very marked degree the law has placed woman in a position where she is utterly powerless to save or destroy her children, morally, the husband and father being given all the dominion over her whom he calls wife; and, in a majority of cases, he acts out his own selfish gratifications, detrimental though they may be to both wife and children, and by thus indulging his own desires of lust and appetite, he makes it impossible for his wife to be a power for good in his household.

Ah! wives and mothers, there is another way of helping to close out this cursed business in our land. Yes; begin at the home end; take up the subject of marital virtue and purity. Study, first of all, the duties of him who would be the father of your children, and then see to it that those children are given a pure and holy heritage before they are born. Do not allow lustful passions, indulgence in liquor and tobacco, to be woven into their very flesh and blood before they are born, so that it will become an almost impossible thing to root it out of their being after they are born.

When the time comes that woman is enthroned queen of her own home, she may be able to train better children; or, rather, she may bring forth children who will not need much training, as there will be less of evil to eradicate out of their make-up. They will be children of purer bodily habits, purer motives, purer ambitions and desires.

When that time shall have come, our boys will grow up and become the men we need; men who will say "No" to all the evils that are now rampant; men who will not vote "Yes" on the liquor question; men who will carry on political affairs in truth and purity, while the wife and mother rules in righteousness at home.

Perhaps the reader will say, "that is the way we have it now;" but I answer emphatically, No. Woman is under bondage in the home of to-day, both morally and legally, to a very great degree; and any woman who thinks I am representing a wrong thing, let her say to her husband that she means to be her own, and rule her own body in purity, and my word for it, she will soon find out that doctor, lawyer, or pastor will tell her she has mistaken her mission, and they will aid in driving her back to her master for service. This is a very humiliating statement, but it is, nevertheless, true; and so long as this state of affairs exists, let no one put the blame on the mother, if the children do not grow up to be noble men and women, but let the blame rest on him to whom has been given the power to bring forth good or evil just as he chooses, regardless of any wish or plea from her who is to be the mother.

I am truly sorry for the "mechanic who is twenty-five years old," who had a mother whose cleanliness he so little appreciates. Over against his statement there are thousands who attribute their advent into the saloon to an untidy or wretched home. The husband, the neighbor, yea, the whole public, make no allowance for children in an untidy home. The mother is aware of this, and so makes every effort to keep her home as neat as she can, and often sacrifices something in order to do it, so that she may not be classed among those who are slovenly.

The young man in question, perhaps, never thought it his duty to clean up his litter of shavings, etc., once in awhile, himself, or was even taught to do so by his father who deemed it a duty to help lighten the burdens of a wife and mother; to carefully brush extra dirt off his boots or clothing before entering a room which his wife had spent hours to make clean. If, I say, the boy had been taught by the example of his father to aid in keeping home clean, perhaps tired mothers would have been glad to let him whittle, etc., once in a while.

When I see the wearisome life of wives and mothers so falsely represented at times, I don't usually take it for granted that it is true. I go quietly into some of the homes and see by whom the burdens are laid on the woman. And when I have found out, I do not wonder that so very many of our mothers are laid away in the churchyard, and their children left to a cold and uncharitable world.

Up, sisters—sound the alarm, and awake to the fact that in the "home-end" woman has a right of which she is at present deprived, and because of this deprivation much ruin of children is involved, which ought to be charged to the man who is at present sole lord and owner of her whom he calls wife. Mrs. A. BOCK.

A LETTER FROM AFRICA.

SHAINGAY MISSION, Africa, June, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Negro is a problem, hard to solve. He is a conundrum. What to do with him, how to handle him, or how to get rid of him, is a question that is puzzling the brains of many sage philosophers in America; but a satisfactory answer has not been reached.

I have had over twenty years' experience with the Negro in his native home, in the wilds of Western Africa; am a Negro, myself, and have had over thirty years' acquaintance with my people in America. I was born in Michigan, of Negro parents; and in view of all these facts, I think I may venture a suggestion. Of those in America I would say: Just let them alone as they are for the next fifty years at least. The Southern Negro is not prepared to come here, nor can he be in less time than that, for many reasons that space in a brief letter like this will not permit me to give.

But this I will say: Four hundred years of the most oppressive slavery has done its deadly work upon them and wholly unfitted them for the task of civilizing and Christianizing a heathen people. The high partition walls that have always been kept up between the whites and blacks, both North and South, have been a great barrier to the progress of the American Negro. The churches, the school-houses, and the legislative halls, from whence knowledge flows, have kept these walls so high that the poor Negro seldom had an opportunity to peep behind them. True, they have had their own churches and schools; but often their preachers and teachers were not qualified for the positions which they held, and very little knowledge was gained by the pupil.

Then, again, in order to civilize a people properly, they must come in contact with civilized people; must mingle with civilization in daily life, so as to imbibe its spirit. This has never been allowed, North or South. The blacks have been carefully grouped together, and the whites have also held themselves aloof, as though there was something infectious about the blacks. Hence the Negroes, either South or North, as a whole, have not attained to that degree of civilization that fits them to manage a country, or to civilize a heathen people. They may be well-educated in books, and in some arts and sciences, and yet be great heathens. It is even so with many of the whites.

We have just had a case in hand here. The mission girls heard a noise in the yard one night. Taking a lantern, they went to see what was the cause. As they entered their kitchen, a small boy jumped through the window and ran into the coffee field. The girls followed and soon caught him. He was between seven and eight years old, quite naked, and very dirty. He stated that his master, the Corporal, wanted to flog him, and he had ran away three days before. He had been hiding in the cotton field, and was very hungry. They gave him a bucket of water, and he bathed himself, and they provided him with food.

Next morning the matron for the girls took the boy to his master, a native African, a Corporal stationed here by the Governor to look after the interests of the British government. He and his wife are educated. They said that the boy was a witch, who, at night, would turn himself into a rat, and eat his wife's toes. In proof of this, she showed her toes, which had been actually gnawed. The Corporal had called a "country-fashion-man" (a conjuror), who went through a series of incantations and pointed out this boy as a witch; adding that he (the boy) had been the cause of the death of their own two children, and that they must get rid of him at once, or they would always have trouble in their family. The poor little fellow was sharply questioned as to his being a witch and able to turn himself into a rat; also, whether he had caused the death of the children. He was frightened into confessing both charges, and they were preparing to punish him when he ran away.

Our good sister tried her best to convince them of the folly of such things; but they were firm in their belief that the boy had killed their children, and he must be disposed of. If she wished to keep the boy, she might do so; otherwise, they would get rid of him. She brought him home, and he is with the other boys in the mission. I said to them, a few days ago, "Tommy has never yet troubled any one in the mission." "Oh, no," said the wife, "he can't have power in the mission, for God is there."

If this Corporal and his wife had been trained from childhood by civilized people, they would never have believed in such nonsense. It is the early association that lays the foundation. I repeat it: Tear down the partition and treat the Negro as a man and a brother, as the Almighty intended that he should be treated. Permit him to dwell wherever he pleases in his heavenly Father's dominions, and the Lord will take care of us all.

As a matter of course, there are exceptions; for it has been demonstrated in thousands of cases that the Negro is susceptible of the highest culture; but there are exceptions. The masses are not ready for self-government. This I can say for him: For years I have mingled with him in his native home, where his manhood has never been crushed out of him; where he has not been taught from infancy that he is an inferior being. There I find in him a noble specimen of manhood, with a natural dignity, that is suffering, hospitable, generous, sympathetic and sociable.

At the present time rum is doing a deadly work all along this (Western Africa) coast, and its blasting effects are painfully visible. I cannot suppress the prayer: How long, O God, how long must this state of things continue?

(Rev.) J. GOMER.

THE WRONGS OF THE NEGRO.

LIND, Wis., August 12, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Please allow these few imperfect lines a place in your paper. I wish to bespeak the prayers of its readers in behalf of the South. I have long been fearing the results of the wrongs perpetrated on the colored people. Now the article in your last number alarms my fears more and more. I see prayer as our only hope.

The Negroes need to wait and let God avenge their wrongs; and he will do it, if they can be induced to wait; as formerly he broke the chains of slavery, so he will in this case. But if they decide to avenge themselves, that will be terrible, and they, themselves, will surely be (as you say) the greatest sufferers. May kind heaven avert this awful calamity! To this end let us pray; for our God does hear prayer. He heard prayer when Elijah prayed; and he is the same prayer-hearing and prayer-answering, almighty Jehovah that he was then and always. As his saints, we are responsible if we do not, with our opportunity and mighty faith, call his blessing on his people in a time like this.

It seems to me that we might do well to hold a day of fasting and prayer in their behalf. It is an important consideration. May we meet our responsibilities as children of God, for Jesus' sake!

I feel every power and faculty of my being drawn out in behalf of the colored race, who have suffered so much at our hands; and I tremble in view of God's retributive justice on us as a nation. Yours for the right, Mrs. J. GRIFFIN

LODGE NOTES.

THE INSURANCE ORDERS.

Grand Commander J. D. Miles, of Mississippi, has issued an official circular to the members in that jurisdiction, asking them to assist in extending the order. It also contains a list of Councils and Secretaries thereof. He says: "We are determined to push the American Legion of Honor in this State for all it is worth."

The cause of fraternal insurance has lost a strong supporter in the death of Companion Hugh Doherty, M. D., which took place at his residence in South Boston, Mass., July 31. He was supreme medical examiner and grand recorder of Massachusetts of the A. O. U. W. for many years, also a charter member and medical examiner of Garfield Council of the American Legion of Honor, and a member of other similar societies.

When an institution comes forward and claims a patent on the death rate, offers to furnish life insurance at one-half the cost in other societies, pay back in addition to the benefit all the money paid in by deceased members, and furnish a tombstone for the graves of those who die, it is only reasonable that the public should examine very closely whether it is in condition to carry out its engagements and fulfill its promises.

The new insurance law, enacted by the Ontario Legislature, went into effect July 1. Under this law every stock and mutual insurance company, as well as the fraternal societies, whether local or foreign, must be registered at the insurance department, and life insurance agents are also required to register their names and take out licenses. These are liable to cancellation at any time on conviction of misrepresentation or fraud, and there are also other penalties attached. It is reported that there has been a ready and general compliance with the law thus far.—American Legion of Honor Journal.

MASONIC.

The Grand Commandery of Washington, at its recent conclave at Seattle, enacted that no member can visit a commandery in that jurisdiction for a longer period than one year on a dimit. This will enforce depositing the dimit or prohibit visiting.

The Denver, Col., Sun says that on the evening of the 5th novices of the Mystic Shrine, to the number of thirty-eight, crossed the hot sands at the meeting of El Jebel. The work was done in a manner exceeding any previous occasion in the history of El Jebel. There was dancing by the novices, the hot sands proving uncomfortable for permanent footholds.

The death of Bro. Charles Henry Harris, a member of Apollo Lodge, No. 642, A. F. & A. M.; Washington Chapter, No. 43, R. A. M.; Chicago Commandery, No. 19, K. T.; Oriental Consistory, S. P. R. S. 32°; Medinah Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., all of Chicago, and a journalist of ability and distinction, is formally announced. Among his friends he was either "Carl Pretzel," editor of a Dutch dialect paper in Chicago, or plain Charlie Harris.

The latest is a Masonic marriage ceremony. It is "French." The N. Y. Dispatch says of it: "A recent wedding in Grand Orient Lodge was a pompous affair. The ceremony was performed on a platform hung with drapery and decorated with the national colors, and an abundance of flowers. The bridegroom was a member of the lodge, and, after recognizing in a formal manner the official marriage certificate, the bride was regarded as a sister."

The New York Sunday Times has the following: "It is asserted that Past Grand Master Myron M. Parker, of the District of Columbia, says that General Lafayette was made a Mason by General Geo. Washington at the old Freeman's Tavern on the Green, at Morristown, N. J., in 1777. Other writers state that he was initiated into a military lodge, but the record is lost and the location forgotten. Can any of our readers furnish the facts, as it is certain he was made a Knight Templar in this city

DIVERSE VIEWS.

The Deseret (Salt Lake City, Utah) News says that "oath-bound aggressive societies are a curse to the country, as they segregate and tend to disrupt social and political affairs." How about the Endowment House (Mormon) secret conclaves? Did they "disrupt social affairs?"

Speaking of the great Knights Templar conclave at Denver, Colo., the other day, the Brethren Evangelist says: "Among them, no doubt, were some who on other occasions suffered themselves to be called Christians, but in the lodge carefully conceal the cross and expose to view the flaming lodge."

The Toronto (Can.) Empire, speaking of Rev. J. P. Stoddard's visit to that city and his lectures, reports as follows: "Any resident of this city of lodges who desires three meals a day and a bed to lie on, would think twice, yes, three times, before publicly denouncing secret societies. Strangers, men who have sufficient of this world's goods to last them for the rest of their days, and reckless enthusiasts have now and again raised their voices against what they claimed to be the stealthily growing strength of 'the goat.' Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Boston, secretary of the National Christian Convention, is both a stranger and an enthusiast, and, for the past three or four weeks, he has been delivering lectures in the western part of the province on 'Secret Societies: What They Do in the Dark and How They Do It.' In many towns he spoke in Baptist, Evangelical and other churches; but on reaching Toronto he found that the subject of his lecture shut the doors of houses of prayer against him, and so he decided to speak in the Y. M. C. A. lecture room on Saturday night. The attendance was small, owing partly to the short notice that was given of Mr. Stoddard's presence in the city. The reverend gentleman is well on in years and is an avowed and determined enemy of secret societies. He spoke of Freemasonry and denounced the craft in most unequivocal terms."

The Gospel Banner (organ of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ at Berlin, Ontario, Can.) referring to Mr. Stoddard's lectures there, says: "The 'Radicals' and 'Liberals' have equal rights in the U. B. church in Berlin at present. They were asked to open their church one evening for Mr. Stoddard to lecture on secrecy. The 'Radical' trustees were quite willing to open the church, but when one of the 'Liberal' trustees was asked, he said they would not give their consent to it, the lecture being on secrecy. The Baptist and the Evangelical and the Old Mennonite and the Mennonite Brethren in Christ all admitted him into their churches to lecture on this subject."

The same paper says: "The lectures on Secrecy given in Berlin, Conestoga, Breslau and New Dundee, by Rev. J. P. Stoddard were well attended, and have caused quite a stir among members of the different secret societies. Mr. Stoddard is an able man and knows whereof he speaks. We believe much good has been done in the way of enlightening the people as to what these lodges do in the dark, and how they hinder the progress of the work of the church. We trust the time is not far distant when there will be an organized band of active workers raised up on this line in our Dominion."

THE WORLD'S FAIR "PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS."

In an address delivered by Rev. John H. Barrows, D.D., of Chicago, in Madison Square Garden, at the National Convention of the Societies of Christian Endeavor, in New York, July 10, the speaker gave a condensed view of the religious possibilities of the World's Fair. Among the events which will lead to these possibilities, he spoke of an association which "has been formed to provide for great meetings on every Lord's day, to be addressed by some of the leaders of mankind. . . . The American churches and Sunday-schools. . . . will be on exhibition before the thousands who will flock to us from every peopled shore. The Gospel will be preached by returned missionaries and others in Turkish, Armenian, Arabic, Spanish, Greek, Italian, Chinese, and in many other of the chief languages of the world. Not only on the Lord's day, but through the week, there will be tent-preaching and open-air preaching near the gates of the Exposition. I have no doubt that the Hotel Endeavor, with its great convention hall and daily meetings, that the Sunday-school headquarters and Women's Temperance Unions, and the rooms of the Young Men's and Women's Christian Associations, and the Tract and Bible Societies, will be the centers and agencies of daily Christian activity, by means of which the Gospel of our Lord will be proclaimed to the representatives of every nation. There will also be, for the first time in any world's fair, a material exhibit. . . . of the work of religion, as shown by models, maps, pictures, statistics, and selected publications of the Bible, missionary, tract, denominational and interdenominational societies, for which exhibit an area of 20,000 square feet has been reserved. . . . For more than thirty days the great halls will be thronged with the representatives of our Christian churches, and of the non-Christian faiths, coming from the six continents. The so-called denominational congresses will occupy a week or more. The Catholics and the Lutherans and others have already planned for conventions on an immense scale. A week has been assigned to the Evangelical Alliance. . . . ; three days will be given to the Sunday Rest congresses. . . . Special days will be set apart for interdenominational conventions, like those of the Christian Endeavor and other societies. . . . The Mission congresses, covering the entire field of city, domestic and foreign missions, will occupy eight days or more. . . . an immense opportunity of showing not only to people of Christian lands, but to the representatives of non-Christian nations, the splendid vitality and vigor of the missionary spirit, which is the grandest feature of this grandest century since Jesus commissioned his disciples to evangelize the world."

With this general summary of the Christian features of the Exposition, we think, the readers of the Cynosure will be pleased, as affording a fine field for advancing the interests of the kingdom of our Lord.

But there is another feature of the Fair, of a religious character, referred to and praised by Dr. Barrows, that should be received with far less enthusiasm, because its influence upon the younger branches of the Christian fellowship may be fraught with danger to their faith in Christianity. They have been nurtured and instructed in the belief that salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ is the only true and safe religion in the earth. But in the proposed "Parliament of Religions," to be held in connection with the Fair, they are going to be placed face to face with numerous other and false religions, which cannot only divert their attention from their own, but may be so presented by the advocates of these heresies as to allure the minds and imaginations of the young and inexperienced. The result of such an exhibition of man-made doctrines may be contamination, doubt and infidelity. In the garden of Eden, Eve believed God until she encountered the devil and listened to his wiles. Then she forsook the truth and believed a lie. Had she never been brought into touch with the serpent, Christ need not have died to save her posterity.

It will not do to be too complaisant in our intimacy with these falsities. They are stronger than human wills and human strength. We cannot dally with heathenism, in or out of the lodge, without incurring spiritual loss and imbibing something of its spirit. The ancient prophet, in the Old Testament, who was slain by a lion on the road for believing another prophet who lied to him, should be a warning to us not to "hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely." (1 Kings 13: 11-30, and Psa. 58: 5.)

If it was to be a parliament for discussion, for advocacy, for refutation, so that argument rather than mere assertion should be a distinguishing feature of this exhibit, the danger would be greatly lessened; but under the circumstances, as a show only, it will appeal, as the representative of all man-made religions, to the carnal and sensual rather than the spiritual. In this phase of presentation, the Christian religion has no part. It offers nothing to charm the human side of our nature; it presents no houris, no heaven of sensual delights, to the faithful; it is rather a religion of crosses, self-denial and warfare; but it has one great advantage over all other religions; it is founded solely on the Word of God and our faith in that Word.

In conclusion, in the words of a Christian contemporary: "Surely, Christianity has little to learn of the character of Mohammedanism. The missionaries who have seen it in its own home have told us what it is and what it is not. More surely still, Christianity has no concessions to make and no compromises to offer." And what is here said of Mohammedanism will apply equally well to all other spurious doctrines.

PRIVATE IAMS.

The case of this individual, to which reference was briefly made in last week's Cynosure, suggests some additional comment upon an event that has attracted far more public attention than it deserved.

Forty or fifty years ago, Thomas Carlyle wrote his "Model Prisons," in which he deprecates the growth of a sentimentalism that promotes such a mitigation of the severity of the laws as to increase crime and endanger public safety. Now it is not so much the mildness as the uncertainty of the laws that instigates crime, and augments the insecurity of life and property.

Just now, in at least three States (New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee), large bodies of militia have been under arms to secure the enforcement of the laws for the protection of the public peace.

There was doubtless undue severity in the punishment of private Iams, of the Pennsylvania militia; but it must be remembered that his crime was aggravated and the crisis was imminent. An insurrection had been quelled by the State troops, and the insurrectionists were being held at bay by a force whose loyalty and discipline must be unquestioned, or it would count on the wrong side in the struggle. When Iams called for "three cheers for the man who shot Frick," it meant more than murder. It meant mutiny, anarchy and treason. It was simply because no one was sufficiently foolish to respond to his appeal, that, in all probability, his and other lives did not pay the established penalty for such expressions.

In times like these, when the land trembles with fear of mob-violence, we cannot afford much sympathy for those who, when set for the defense of the laws, are the aiders and abettors of anarchists and murderers. What would, at other times, be sharply condemned as unwarrantable severity, under such circumstances may be condoned.

To preserve the public peace is the first and highest duty of every officer, whether civil or military, and to secure this end it is far better that crime, in its inception, should be put down with a strong hand, and at the expense of much pain, rather than it should yield the fruits of anarchy and strife.

REV. WILLARD BURR.

Another veteran has been called to his reward.

Rev. Willard Burr, of Oberlin, O., was one of the first graduates from Oberlin College. He was for many years an able and efficient minister of the Gospel and an earnest reformer. He was one of the few in Oberlin that steadfastly adhered to the principles laid down by Pres. Finney, in his book on the "Character and Claims of Freemasonry." No excessive love of popular favor, nor any desire for denominational growth, could make him oblivious to the iniquities of the secret lodge system. He was a steadfast friend of prohibition, and earnestly sustained the Prohibition party.

Thursday, the 18th inst., was the regular evening for prayer meeting in the First church, of which he was a member. He attended and was in his usual health. The topic was: "Redeeming the Past." He arose and spoke about ten minutes, very clearly and forcibly, referring to his past experience and urging the importance of progress and growth in the Divine life. He had been seated but a few minutes when he was stricken with heart-failure, and was at once carried out and laid on the grass. He gasped feebly, and expired amidst his sorrowing brethren and friends.

The meeting was broken up, but it had a grand object-lesson; an old man who, in a long and spotless life, had illustrated the beauty of godliness, was, while in usual health, called as suddenly as Elijah to enter on his higher and better life.

He leaves behind, at his home, a wife, two daughters, and two grandchildren, who will mourn his loss, but not as those who have no hope.

—The lesson taught by the recent and existing labor troubles in several States is this: That in twenty years the secret labor unions have done far more to unsettle the labor problem (and promote anarchy) than they have to reform its abuses. How would it do to try something less coercive and more conciliatory?

—Bro. J. M. Hitchcock, of the N. C. A. Board, has for many years been superintendent of the great Sabbath-school in the Moody church in this city. Last Thursday was set for their annual picnic at Desplaines, but as they were gathering for the train rain began to fall, and forced a hasty postponement. The picnics of this school give hundreds of poor children almost the only glimpse of country life they have during the year.

—Rev. Mr. Hallner, editor of the Mission Friend in this city, has compiled a valuable book for Swedish Americans. Its title translated is, "A Great Campaign Against the Enemies of the Home and Nation." It is a hand-book of information on temperance, prohibition and political economy, and from the thorough study the author has given these topics his countrymen will find the work most helpful in answering a thousand questions that will arise this fall.

—Edward Blake, the popular Canadian statesman who was lately elected to the British Parliament, and was regarded a possible member of the Gladstone cabinet, declined several years ago the offer of knighthood offered by the Queen. He is greatly opposed to the introduction of Old World ideas into the Dominion. This appeared in the remarkable debate on the Orange society a few years ago, in which Mr. Blake took strong ground against all secret societies. He is represented by the press as having a fine voice, a commanding presence and the courage of his convictions.

parties, and sects can meet and freely mingle in offices of needed kindness, mutual well-doing and fraternity. "As all men have God for their father, all are brethren," etc. "In one word, all our operations are designed to lead each other to the knowledge and practice of the true brotherhood of man."

Grosh could truthfully say: "In one word, we make the same proposition the devil made Christ: 'Unite all the kingdoms of earth in one great brotherhood, with his satanic majesty at the head.'" The manual from which the above quotations are given is the latest edition, purchased of the Grand Secretary at the Odd-fellows' Temple in this city. It is most heartily endorsed by the Sovereign Grand Lodge as truly setting forth the principles of the I. O. O. F.

The discussion lasted until 11 o'clock. Time and space forbid mention of much that would interest.

We shall expect what Christians there are in the Barnet lodge to leave, knowing, as they must, by remaining they are upholding a Christ-denying, God-dishonoring institution.

Bro. Faris writes, Aug. 23, referring to this discussion: "We are not through at Barnet yet." Denials are being made. He desired evidence, which I have secured and will send him, to meet the denials. Let there be a full and free discussion of this matter, as truth has nothing to fear from discussion. W. B. STODDARD.

OREGON AND WASHINGTON CONVENTION.

(Our Special Report.)

The Christian Association of Oregon and Washington, opposed to secret societies, convened in the Tabernacle at Canby, Oregon, August 23, 1892, at 10:30 A. M.

The meeting had been announced but a few weeks, yet there were thirty-one ministers present, and quite an attendance of laymen. When the signatures to the constitution were collected, it was ascertained that more than four hundred had given their names to the movement, which we recognize as a fair start for the cause here.

After devotional exercises Rev. M. H. Nichols, of Tacoma, was introduced and addressed the audience for one hour, giving a brief history of Freemasonry and its relation to the ancient mythologies. The address was listened to with marked attention.

The organization was effected by the election of the following officers for one year: President, Rev. Samuel Matthew, Canby, Oregon; Vice President, Rev. C. M. Bryan, Cornelius, Ore.; Secretary, Rev. P. B. Williams, Portland, Ore.; Asst. Secretary, Dr. J. M. Green, Canby, Ore.; Treasurer, Samuel Terry, Canby, Ore.

The president then made an earnest practical address; after which the convention adjourned, and were invited to a fine luncheon by the ladies of Canby.

I think this first session fully decided the matter of the permanence of the anti-secrecy principles on this Northwest Coast.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Prayer by the president.

It was agreed that the chair appoint a committee to look after an agent to travel in the interests of the association.

R. Loggan, P. B. Williams, Frank Cathey, — Crips, T. H. Organ, S. Matthew and Dr. Green were constituted the committee.

Brief addresses were then delivered by the following persons: Rev. Messrs. Scott, Organ, Beers, Loggan, Williams, Ellis, Crips, Nichols and layman Franklin.

This gave to the convention a great variety of thought and experience. Several of the speakers had been behind the tyled doors and gave their testimony as to the truthfulness of revealed Masonry and other societies.

On motion it was agreed to hold the next annual convention at Canby, Ore., on the third Tuesday in August, 1893, at 10:30 A. M.

Adjourned. Benediction by Bro. Beers.

EVENING SESSION.

The president conducted a devotional meeting for a few minutes. These services were very spiritual.

The minutes of previous sessions were read and approved.

Rev. R. Loggan, of Woodburn, Ore., was introduced and delivered an excellent address on "The Religion of Freemasonry," showing the anti-Christian nature of the same. This was an able address.

B. P. Williams followed with an address on "Secret Societies as Related to the Church and Christianity."

The convention voted that he be requested to speak often against the lodges.

Brief addresses were again indulged in by Bros. Ellis, Terry, Franklin and Bowerman.

It was agreed to have a literary committee of three; Rev. Messrs. Nichols, Ellis and McCart were elected.

After a few words of excellent advice by the president, the convention adjourned with the doxology and a benediction by Bro. Ellis.

SAMUEL MATTHEW, Pres.

P. B. WILLIAMS, Sec'y.

FROM THE COLLEGE AGENT.

AT DUSTIN.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On the 14th of August I preached a reform discourse at Dustin in the F. M. meeting-house, to a full and interested congregation. In the meeting for testimony, at the close, the lodge was fully repudiated, as well as the saloon, by these robust Christians, who seemed determined to follow Christ at all hazards. The pastor, Rev. F. M. Fish, wished to visit his parents on his way to camp-meeting; and at his request I supplied his pulpit the next Sabbath, both morning and evening. Bro. M. L. Worcester took me to this appointment in his buggy; and, as is his custom, helped on the good cause by distributing a full supply of reform literature.

In the class-meeting above referred to, one brother said that he thought that popery was a greater menace to church and state, in this free country, than the lodge. This brother is said to have been an Odd-fellow once, which may have prepared the way for this conclusion. But it strongly impressed my mind that both are great enemies to God and mankind. It may be difficult to decide which is the greater. The papacy, notwithstanding its lofty boasting, has but little real influence except among the very ignorant, and these mostly foreign born. And they are sold to certain corrupt politicians and rulers to vote and their price goes into the hands of their masters, i. e., the papal hierarchy.

As for the lodges, the "good men" who are enticed into them withdraw in very large numbers, silently; or, they pay their dues and attend the secret meetings occasionally. The more gross uses of secretism are kept from them, such as defamation, false swearing and murder. With smooth words about the brotherhood, and the benefits to the widow, they beguile the people; while the ground-hogs dig away in the dark and run in and out of their holes.

S. F. PORTER.

FROM THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

OAKLAND, Kansas, Aug. 22, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I expect to labor in North-eastern Kansas in September, and in Iowa in October and the first of November. Let all communications be sent to me at Oakland, Kansas. I have been corresponding with a number of persons in Kansas and Missouri in relation to a State anti-secrecy convention in each State. Bro. Gault is doing the same. Let any friend of this reform who thinks that the convention can be profitably held in his town, and who will help to that end, promptly apprise Rev. M. A. Gault, of Blanchard, Ia., W. C. Paden, of Oakland, Kansas, or the Field Secretary, N. C. A., 221 West Madison St., Chicago. Let us soon get a rallying point for these conventions, and then work to that end. Does not the Iowa State convention go to Marengo this fall? Should be glad to hear a positive announcement in regard to the Iowa convention.

I enter the field on the first of September as District Secretary for Iowa, Kansas and Missouri. We desire to push the work along three lines, by lecturing, by holding conventions, and by the dissemination of anti-secrecy literature.

Bro. Gault and I expect to hold conventions together. Let the friends of this reform be free and ready to communicate anything of interest and value in this cause. Let us not keep silent. Sincerely yours, W. C. PADEN.

BLANCHARD, Iowa, Aug. 26, 1892.

I addressed meetings, last Sabbath and Monday evening, at Randolph, a small railroad town in Fremont Co., Iowa. The meetings were in the Presbyterian church, and were arranged by Father Dodd, who, with his son Clark Dodd, have for many years sustained the Cynosure cause here. Father Dodd and his wife are both in feeble health, and should have the prayers of the friends of the cause. He spent a day with me, visiting families in the congregation and talking up the cause.

There are quite a number of Scotch-Irish Presbyterian people in the congregation. They are a good class to enlist in reform work. We obtained some half-dozen subscriptions for the Cynosure, and we hope for permanent and important results from our planting.

Dr. Merrill, pastor of the First M. E. church, Omaha, was present at our Monday evening meeting, and spoke to the people. He is impressed with the evil of secret societies, but does not openly oppose them.

Father Dodd once lived at Cedar Rapids, Ia., and was an intimate friend of the late Nathaniel Bourne. It was through his influence, in first sending him the Cynosure, that Father Dodd became so deeply interested in the anti-secret cause. M. A. GAULT.

THE FLOATING CHAPEL AFLOAT AGAIN.

ROCKPORT, Ind., Aug. 25, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Perhaps it will be well to say to the readers of the Cynosure, that owing to a rise in the river, we are off of the sandbar, and are now at Rockport. Here we found a large quantity of papers that came by freight, mail and express during the last three months. These will be used at all points below.

We expect to arrive at Evansville (Ind.) in about two months, and will then get all that have been sent to that point. I will explain matters, and request freight and express agents at Evansville to wait patiently. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

THE HOME.

CHRIST IS MY LIFE.

[Said to have been written by Anna Gracfin von Stolberg, about A. D. 1600.]

Christ is my Life forever,
And death my endless gain;
Naught shall my spirit sever
From Him, in peace to reign.

With joy would I be taken
To Christ, my Brother blest,
And, ne'er by Him forsaken,
In His fond arms find rest.

I journey, meekly bearing
His cross, His grief, His rod;
His sacred sorrow sharing,
That seals my soul to God.

When earthly powers are breaking,
When breath and utterance flee,
Though I no word am speaking,
Lord, take my sighs to Thee!

When earthly joy has vanished,
Like some faint, flickering light;
When earthly hopes are banished,
To shades of gathering night,

Then let me gently, sweetly,
Repose in Thy dear arms,
Released by Love completely
From sin, and death's alarms!

There naught my soul shall sever
From Thee, the one True Vine;
There shall I live forever
With Thee in joy divine!

—J. Auktel, in the Moravian.

A FRIENDLY VISIT TO THE QUEEN.

Most people will remember a paragraph which appeared in the newspapers a few days ago, telling of the arrival in England of an old colored lady named Mrs. Martha Ricks, who had come from Liberia in the hopes of seeing the Queen. She had been a slave, and to her mind the Queen of England was the liberator of the slaves and the mother of her people. For many years—for fifty years—the idea of coming to this country, and to see Queen Victoria, had been a wish toiled for and closely held. It was not an idea that seemed very likely of realization, for the difficulties were many. Mrs. Ricks, Aunt Martha, as they call her, is old, and the little Negro Republic on the West Coast of Africa is a long way off. "But my time was nearly over," she said, "for I am seventy-six; and though they told me that I could never come, I must see the Queen now or never shall I see her. And so I should have if it had been by myself alone." She did indeed set out from Liberia by herself, with no guide and no credential of her mission, except a satin quilt embroidered with a pattern of the coffee plant, which she hoped the Queen might take from her.

But although Mrs. Ricks did indeed set out on her pilgrimage alone, she did not make the journey by herself, for she was accompanied by Mrs. Roberts, the wife of the ex-President of Liberia; and on her arrival in England, Dr. Blyden, the Liberian Minister, interested himself in the furthering of her desire. He wrote to Sir Henry Ponsonby, telling him of the arrival in England of Mrs. Blyden, and asking that she be allowed to present Mrs. Martha Ricks, whose little story he detailed. Sir Henry Ponsonby replied, suggesting an unofficial visit since the necessity of applying for an official visit, through the foreign office would take time; and on Saturday a telegram asked Mrs. Blyden to bring Mrs. Ricks with her. On the arrival of the party from Liberia at Windsor they were taken to the Castle in three of the Queen's carriages. Mrs. Blyden, her daughter, her little granddaughter and Mrs. Ricks were received at the door of the Palace by the Master of the Household, who escorted them to the Royal presence. The Queen received her guests, surrounded by her own children and grandchildren, the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice, the Princess Victoria and maid.

Each of the guests were presented to the Queen, who shook hands with them and said some gracious words to each. To the old lady who had come so far to see her, the Queen said that she felt "greatly honored by the trouble you have taken to visit me," and to the youngest of the Liberians spoke with an affectionate and characteristic kindness.

For Mrs. Ricks this was the great, the only day of her life. "I cannot tell what she said to me," she says, speaking of her visit; "but the Queen spoke very soft, and I think she must have been saying blessings to me. I shall now, after a time, go back to my country, now that I have done seen the Queen, and I shall always remember. I came to England thinking, perhaps, I might see her; plenty of friends have I found here, and have seen her who is our mother. That I shall remember in the days which go by before the time shall be for sleep."—Selected.

A HYMN IS A WING.

Both the excitement of religious feeling and the expression of it are greatly dependent on suitable hymns. And since without feeling, without fervent love to God, there can be no true religion, nothing but cold morality, the importance of hymns, both for public worship and for private devotion, can very plainly be seen. "A hymn is a wing," it has been well said, a wing by which the soul soars above these earthly cares and toils into a purer air and a clearer sunshine. A hymn has been called "A singing angel, who goes walking through earth scattering the devils before it," the devils of melancholy and gloom, and doubt and fear. A singing saint is one that habitually conquers, and gets "the swing of victory." If there is depression at any time, a good plan is to sit down in some quiet spot, and roll out lustily a few of the grand hymns of the ages, entering into their spirit, and the rich joy of God's great salvation will speedily return.—Selected.

BEEHIVES AND MISSIONS.

A pastor of a church beyond the Mississippi, in remitting to the treasury of the board the sum of $19, gives an interesting account of the way in which this amount was secured. A little more than a year ago a man who had been far away from God was converted, and he at once gave himself to active Christian work. Feeling that he ought to do something for foreign missions, he prayed earnestly that some way might be opened for him to aid this cause. Procuring five empty beehives he placed them in his field, and solemnly promised the Lord that he would give the product of those hives to foreign missions. Strange to say, it was only a few days before every hive had a colony of bees. Where they came from no one could tell. At the close of the season the honey was sold and the proceeds amounted to the $19 which had just been remitted. These bees are already at work this year, and a larger amount is anticipated in the autumn for foreign missions. How much might be earned for benevolent work if Christians had their hearts warmed and would set their wits at work!—Episcopal Recorder.

THE STORY OF A LETTER.

"Off work so early?"

James stopped in passing a boy who, like himself, was one of the workers on a large ranch. Caleb's stumpy figure was bending over a table in the rough back porch, and his face was drawn into a pucker which told that his task was no easy one.

"Yes; it's early, I know, but it's mail day tomorrow, and I thought I'd send a letter."

"Folks back East?" asked James.

"Well, I haven't got many folks. Ain't so well off as you are. It's my stepmother; but she's a good woman, and likes to hear from me, and I think I ought to."

No one ever thought of taking Caleb for an exemplar in anything. He was slow and clumsy in his movements, and never dreamed of presuming to make a suggestion of duty to any one. But it had come to be observed that Caleb was to be relied on.

"If you look for him where he belongs, he is sure to be there," his employer had been heard to say. And some of the boys had noticed that Caleb's quiet "I think I ought to," always referred to something he was sure to do.

James had intended calling upon Caleb for assistance in the turning of water into the irrigating ditch upon which the crops so largely depended; but he now turned away and went by himself, with a weight at his heart and a shadow upon his brow. If asked the reason for it he might have been slow to admit to any one else that it was called there by a consciousness of neglect of duty, but it was very plain to himself.

"Just a stepmother. If Caleb thinks it's a matter of 'ought to' write to her about every mail day, I wonder what he'd do if he had a mother, and a father, and a sister. Heigho! I didn't expect to be gone three years when I got mad and quit."

In the early spring-time James had been seized with a spasm of remorse at his long, cruel neglect of those who loved him, to whom he was so much, and to whom he realized he owed it to be such comfort.

"I'll write. And some day I'll go back and do my best by 'em."

He did write, his letter carrying all the joy which may be imagined into the old farm-house. Father and mother had answered, the sight of their poor cramped handwriting bringing tears to the eyes of the wandering son. And Susan had written:

"Father says he'll never miss driving in to the postoffice on the days that a letter could get here after your mail day. And mother stands at the gate watching for him to get back."

It had reached his heart, and spurred him up to writing quite regularly for a while. Then the intervals between his letters had grown longer, and now for weeks he had not written.

Passing later again near Caleb's rough library he paused with half a smile. The sun-tanned, freckled face was now in the throes of an effort to accomplish a fine-looking address to his letter, drawn into a series of knots and wrinkles astonishing to behold. All of a sudden they relaxed into a smile of pride and delight, as he held up and contemplated the scraggy result of his efforts.

"I'd rather plow all day," he said, meeting James's gaze with a beaming eye. "Yes, I would. I always feel as though I'd tackled a big job and got the better of it when I've wrote a letter. I feel as light as a feather. When I used to let it slip, sometimes I felt as though I had a stone to carry. I feel that way now when writin' time's comin'. 'But I've found the best way to get rid of that feelin's just to get right at it and do it. I think that's the way with most things when you think you ought to, don't you?"

"Yes, I do," said James, as he went on toward the stables. "And when you know you ought to, as I do," he added to himself.

Caleb followed him with a shout, betokening his unburdened condition of mind, and leading out one of the shaggy ponies used in herding the cattle, was soon galloping the four miles to the point at which the weekly mail was gathered. Scant and irregular it was; and who can tell how many hearts watched for its news of loved ones, or waited in the weariness of hope deferred for tidings which did not come.

The full moon arose over the wide expanse of rolling, mountainous scenery as the rider's form was lost in the distance. James leaned against a rough cart and gazed half-mechanically about him.

"I wish I had written, too. I didn't mean to get into loose ways about it again—as sure as I live I didn't. Mother watching at the gate, Susy said. I s'pose it's the same old gate—the one I used to swing on when I was little and got scolded for it. Next Tuesday'll be the day mother'll be watching."

In the hush of the glorious light his thoughts wandered over years gone by. Far back, almost to infancy, did his memory stray, bringing up scenes vague and misty, incidents only dimly recalled; yet in all his mother's face, gentle and tender, seemed to stand out distinctly. Sometimes it bent over him in sickness; sometimes he saw it as in church, with the grave expression. Sometimes it bore a smile of sympathy with some of his small delights; again, perhaps, a frown or a grieved look over his shortcomings.

"Yes, and I remember exactly how she looked when she whipped me, and how she would come to me ten minutes afterwards, crying and begging me never to make her do it again. Poor mother," with a remorseful smile, "she didn't give it to me half hard enough."

"I wonder how she looks now." The thought came with a sharp pang. It had never before occurred to him to wonder whether his mother had changed in these years in which he had not seen her. The line of thought once struck, seemed to lead on without his own volition. It must be that the anguish of his abrupt leave-taking, the anxiety for his welfare, and the longing for a sight of him during this weary time, had written deep lines upon the patient face.

"There's Caleb back." James sprang up, as if in glad escape from the heavy thoughts, as the distant beat of hoofs smote upon his ear. "She is only his stepmother, and yet he walks right up to the business like a soldier, hating it as he does. Caleb has the making of a soldier in him, I believe."

James was many years older before he fully recognized the fact that there is nothing more heroic than the persistent standing by the duties, great or small, of every-day life.

"Hello, Caleb," he cried, "you've made a quick trip."

"Yes," said Caleb, still with the beaming face belonging to the finished letter. "Shag hasn't been at work to-day, and he's as full of jump as if—as if—he'd got a letter off himself."

James could not help joining in the boy's gleeful laugh.

"I wish I felt as good as you do, Caleb," he said.

"I'll tell you what," said Caleb, with the air of one telling a great secret, "I don't believe there's anything makes you feel half so good as doing something you think you ought to do."

"Not going to turn in?" he asked, returning from the stable after giving his little nag faithful care.

"No, I'm going to write a letter."

"I'm glad 't isn't me," with an expressive shake of his head. "I'm tired enough to sleep for a week."

* * * * *

Mother was not watching at the gate on the Tuesday on which a letter might be expected from James. Indeed, there sometimes crept over father and Susan a cold chill of fear that she might never stand there or anywhere else again.

For the feet which had taken so many steps in loving ministering, which had so patiently held to the round of small duties laid out by Him who orders all our ways, were at last taking a rest. She had been suffering with a low fever, and the doctor shook his head with a discouraged face as day followed day, to be lengthened into week following week, and still the pulse grew weaker and the faded eyes dimmer.

"If there was anything to rouse her," the old doctor had said, sorely perplexed at the utter lack of result to all his applied remedies. "There isn't so much the matter with her; only a lack of vitality. Nothing seems to touch it."

He sat with a helpless, baffled look. During the latter weeks Susan had stolen out on Tuesday for a little season of wistful watching for the longed-for letter which had never come. But to-day she sat still, weighed down by the burden of dread of what might be, scarcely hearing the slow rumble of the wagon as father drove along the lane. A few moments later he appeared at the door and held up a letter before Susan's eyes. She forgot her caution in a glad spring towards him.

"A letter! A letter from James!"

She controlled her voice to a whisper, but mother had been stirred from her half-stupor, and had opened her eyes. The doctor was watching her.

"Read it," he said, motioning Susan to the seat at her mother's side.

"DEAR MOTHER—I've been thinking to-night how long it is since I left home. I never thought it would be so long; really I didn't, when I got into a pet and came off. And if I've wondered once why I did it, I've wondered a thousand times, for I haven't in all these three years seen any place that was quite up to homo. And if I was to stay three times three, I'd never find anybody like you, and father, and Susy."

"There's another thing, I've been wondering, and that's whether you want to see such a good-for-nothing as me there again?"

A little sob came from mother, and Susan paused in alarm.

"Go on," motioned the doctor.

"But I'm most sure you would, and I'm coming home, mother. It won't be so very long before you see me. I've learned a lot of lessons since I left, and the one I've learned the best is that any boy who goes around the world hunting for a better place than homo is a simpleton. So I'm coming to be your boy again. And if you don't find that I can be a comfort to you and father and Susy, why, all you can do is to send me away again."

"Her fever'll be up again," said Susy, bending over her mother in a flutter of joy and anxiety.

But there was a smile on mother's face, and a light of hope and peace in her eyes, which had long been wanting there.

"Thank God," she whispered, "my boy's coming home."

And when James very soon followed his letter, he held his breath at learning how very near he had come to finding a desolate home, and thankfully rejoiced in the blessed privilege of winning his mother back to health and happiness.

There are many boys who put off the home-letters and the home-coming until too late.—Free Church of Scotland Monthly.

THE PRAYER OF PYTHAGORAS.

[The following metrical lines are ascribed to the Greek philosopher, Pythagoras, who lived in the 4th century B. C. They are worthy of serious reflection.]

Let not soft slumber close thine eyes
Before thou recollectest thrice
The train of actions through the day.
Where have my feet found out their way?
What have I learned where'er I've been,
From all I've heard, from all I've seen?
What know I more that's worth the knowing?
What have I done that's worth the doing?
What have I sought that I should shun?
What duty have I left undone?
Or, into what new follies run?
These self-inquiries are the road
That leads to virtue and to God.

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT NO-LICENSE DOES.

Rev. George W. Hunt, of Brockton, writes so approvingly of the effect of no-license in that city, says Zion's Herald, that we venture to give the note to our readers:

In a recent editorial in Zion's Herald I saw a reference to the great amount of drunkenness in licensed Boston on our national anniversary day. I immediately called to mind the remark of one who was spending the day with me in our "city of shoes." We had been up through the central part of the city in the morning and had seen the sidewalks thronged with people who were waiting to view the parade of the soldiers and civic societies, and had walked through several of the side and cross streets, and in the afternoon we rode the entire length of Main street, and when we came home we noted the fact that we had seen but one drunken man in all our wanderings. Brockton has the reputation of being a "fast place;" it used to be referred to as the "Leadville" of New England; but where can a city of 30,000 be found of which as good a report as the above can be made? For five years Brockton has persisted in voting no-license. And the above statement of fact shows that no-license means less drunkenness, even on a public holiday.

A COMPROMISE MEASURE.

As a settlement of the liquor problem, perhaps the most moral proposition comes from the city of Sioux Falls, South Dakota. In that burg the city council recommends, without a dissenting voice, that the municipality own, operate, and regulate the saloons within its limits. The proposition as outlined by the councilmen is, that the saloon business be made a department of the city government, to be presided over by a superintendent, who will be held responsible for the proper working of this bureau. Under the guidance of this official, a saloon will be opened in each ward, and placed in charge of bartenders hired by him, who will become city employes the same as policemen, or waterworks officials. Beer will be sold at five cents a glass, but whisky will be retailed at twenty-five cents a drink, and it is possible that the drink will be measured by the bartender. The idea in thus discriminating is to discourage the drinking of ardent liquors and divert the taste to what is deemed a less harmful liquid.

It appears that this scheme is being received by the general public without opposition. Even the saloon-keepers do not antagonize it. South Dakota has a strong prohibition element in its population. Perhaps the people are willing to see the project carried into practice by way of experiment. However, we view it as improper and something outside of the functions of government, national or municipal.—Deseret (Utah) News.

CHICAGO SALOONS.

The eight thousand or ten thousand saloon-keepers of Chicago have a queer idea of the people who are going to attend the World's Fair. They have an idea, or say they have, that if the World's Fair is closed on Sunday, some seventy-five thousand or one hundred thousand of us will be loafing about their bars on the Lord's day. We can pardon the ignorance of the Chicago saloonists, but the newspaper men who repeat this gag as an argument for Sunday opening offer the American people gratuitous insult. If many thousands of people are going to Chicago during the Fair with the idea of guzzling in the rum shops, a good many other thousands of us will not care to go at all.—Springfield (Mass.) Union.

LIQUOR IN JACKSON PARK.

"Two saloons have already been established in Jackson Park where the great white palaces rise so grandly, and intoxicants are openly sold to the thousands of workmen employed on the grounds. Just outside the entrance on Sixty-third street, within the sacred limits of the Hyde Park prohibition district, still other places have been opened, and all kinds of anti-prohibitory beverages are retailed over public bars. Between five and six hundred of the men employed on the great Manufacturer's Building are paid off on Saturday night, and a trip through Sixty-third street groggeries showed how easy it is to accumulate an alcoholic exhilaration and get rid of hard-earned wages at the same time. Ground has been broken for a Moorish palace two hundred feet square. It is a reproduction of the Alhambra. It will have a capacity for one thousand guests, and the right to sell beer." These manifestations are reported to us by the Chicago press, and show that the trail of the serpent is already over the Eden of the Fair.—Union Signal.

CIGARETTE SMOKING.

The United States Senate Committee on Epidemic Diseases, has reported its conclusion that cigarette smoking is decidedly injurious to youth; that, in fact, the use of tobacco in any form and by anybody, young or old, is "injurious to the physical condition of man," but that Congress has no constitutional power to prohibit the manufacture or sale of cigarettes in the States, as it was invoked to do. The report, however, favors the prohibition of the importation of cigarettes from foreign countries and of their manufacture and sale in the District of Columbia and in the Territories, as within the power of Congress.

NUGGETS.

The Prohibitionists of Michigan on Wednesday, at Owosso, nominated A. Dodge, of Grand Rapids, for Governor.

Out of 2,700 Congregational ministers in England and Wales, at least 1,600 are abstainers; of 361 students, 320 are abstainers.

The Carriage and Wagon Makers' International Union has ordered the summary dismissal of any person in the union who gets drunk.

The Keeley company in all its branches in forty States must pay a retail liquor tax. Such is the final decision of Commissioner Mason at Washington.

Sir Wilfred Lawson, in recalling the hard names that have been and are still hurled at temperance reformers, reminds them, in his usual happy style, that "fanatics are earnest men in a minority, and a faddist is one who knows something more than the rest of the people."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has decided to investigate the report that beer is being served to the non-union men at the Union Mills, and, if true, to request the Carnegie Company to stop it, or the W. C. T. U. will call a mass meeting to protest.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES.

LESSON XI.—Third Quarter, 1892.—September 11.

SUBJECT.—Philip and the Ethiopian.—Acts 8: 26-40.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life.—John 3: 36.

!Open the Bible and read the lesson.!

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Acts 8: 26-40. T.—Acts 28: 23-31. W.—Acts 26: 22-29. Th.—Acts 17: 1-11. F.—1 Cor. 1: 18-25. S.—Matt. 3: 7-17. S.—Rom 6: 1-11.

1. From impenitence to worship.—vs. 26, 27. The angel of the Lord.—Possibly one of the heavenly host set apart to minister to the Saviour and his followers during the establishment of his kingdom; that ministered to the Saviour in the wilderness of temptation; that delivered Peter out of the prison; that stood by Paul in the midst of the tempestuous sea—to strengthen, help and comfort them amid the trials and dangers of their pilgrimage. The lesson taught us is that found in Psa. 34: 7—"The angel of the Lord encampeth about the just." Angel ministry is a prominent feature in both the Old Testament and the New; and it is probable that it still continues to bless the weak but faithful followers of the Lord. The mission of this angel was to prepare the way for the conversion of the Ethiopian treasurer. Philip promptly obeys the divine injunction.

The Ethiopian, born and brought up in the African lands south of Egypt, had evidently been converted from heathenism to Judaism, and in pursuance of the customs of the Jews, had gathered with the others from all parts of Judea to participate in the worship of Jehovah at Jerusalem. That duty performed, he was now returning to his own country. The fact that he had obtained a copy of the prophecies of Isaiah indicates that he had heard of Christ and desired to know more of him. He had become interested in the Word.

2. Help from others needed.—vs. 29-35. The angel had been instrumental in sending Philip to the Ethiopian. Now the Holy Spirit comes upon the scene and directs the work of conversion, just as we may believe he does the work of every faithful minister. Philip approaches the chariot in haste. Then he evidently hears the Ethiopian reading aloud the magnificent but sorrowful passages in the fifty-third chapter. As an introduction to an instructive conversation, Philip asks, very naturally, if he understands the context as he reads. The reply is quite as natural: "How can I, except some man should guide me?" Here was a man willing, at least, to be enlightened; and this is the kind of unconverted men whom pious teachers always delight to find. When a man is thirsting for knowledge of the truth, the inspired preacher is filled with joy, and earnestness in seeking is quickest in discerning.

Philip now takes his place beside the Ethiopian, and together they enter upon the work of Bible study. The Scripture upon which their attention was fixed is found in verses 7 and 8 of the chapter under consideration. There is scarcely a passage in the Old Testament so filled with tender appeal to our sympathies as this. The imagery is appropriate and forcible; and when the tremendous exposition of its meaning reaches the understanding of the humble reader, his soul is touched deeply with its power. The whole life of the suffering Saviour is epitomized in these brief sentences. There we learn that he was wounded for our transgressions; that all his sufferings were for our sake, to make atonement for our sin. He bore the sins of men so that to those who repent and believe on his name (1) the sense of justice is satisfied; (2) the evil of sin is shown to be greater than it could have been by the punishment of sin; (3) more than by any other power is the sinner saved from committing sin, and (4) it is the greatest preventive of sin among men. The contemplation of this remarkable passage, when illumined by the Holy Spirit, brings the strongest motives—love, duty, fear, hope—to bear on the hearts of men with the greatest power. Facts visible in every Christian community prove that Christ does bear away the sins of men, as far as the East is from the West. Yet he himself was destroyed by oppression and the forms of judgment. So was he separated from prison and from justice. "Who shall declare his generation?" He was cut off without children, and with but few spiritual children. His life, humanly speaking, was imperfect in the consolations of humanity. He was desolate, forsaken, and without a place to lay his head. Such were the lessons, no doubt, taught by Philip to this deeply interested Eunuch, as he "opened his mouth, began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." Let us heed these beautiful, but sorrowful teachings to our own salvation.

As Philip expounded the Word, the Holy Spirit performed his convincing and converting work upon (1) the understanding and (2) the heart of his hearer.

3. From personal help to faith.—vs. 36, 37.—The requisites were at hand. There was the water, the Spirit, and the cleansing blood—these three witnesses to the power of salvation upon the soul. The simple faith—"I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God," and the confession of that faith, paved the way for baptism—and the work of conversion was complete. If it was not, why was Philip snatched suddenly from this interesting and eventful scene? The child-like faith and obedience of the converted sinner, with the "finished" work of Jesus, leaves nothing more for man to do. The soul is born into the kingdom. It belongs to God and is filled with him.

4. A few things to remember.—God gives his faithful ones work to do in some very unexpected places, so that "the desert" shall "blossom as the rose." It is worth one's while to engage earnestly in seeking salvation. God alone can interest the indifferent by his Word and by his Spirit. If we approach the way of salvation we shall be led into it, if we suffer God to direct our steps. By reading and meditation we come to the knowledge of the Word; by prayer, we obtain the measure of its meaning. We should seek help only from those who enjoy the favor of God if we would understand his will and his way aright; but we should seek it from such.

This lesson will teach us that the religion of Jesus Christ is for all men, whether black or white, regardless of our circumstances in life; the condition of obtaining it is earnestness in seeking it; and the promise of success is sure.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—Says a Boston letter: "A great audience was out Monday night to hear Rev. O. P. Gifford, whom Mr. Eddy introduced as 'A New England preacher lent for a time to Chicago.' Mr. Gifford's apt rejoinder was: 'If I were a churchman I should keep Lent.'"

—Jen Hawk, the famous Chinese convert from St. Louis, Mo., who delivered an eloquent address at the recent Christian Endeavor Convention, has accepted the pastorate of the Chinese Baptist Mission in New York City.

—The Rev. Dr. J. S. James, of the First Baptist church, Hartford, Conn., was elected president of the American Baptist Bible and Choral Union, at Crescent Beach; Fred W. Payne, of Hartford, secretary; Charles E. Prior, of Jewett City, treasurer.

—The Baptists of Waterloo, Iowa, have a missionary car, with a seating capacity of one hundred, presented to them by Rockefeller, which they run into small towns to establish outposts. It has been quite a success in its line.

—Keuka College, Yates county, N. Y., has prohibited the organization of secret societies within its jurisdiction.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The American Missionary Association (Congregational) recently received $1,000 each from two Presbyterians, friends of the cause of missions. This is practical Christian union.

—The next annual meeting of the American Missionary Association will be held in Hartford, Conn., October 25 to 27, 1892. Rev. A. H. Bradford, D. D., of Montclair, N. J., will preach the sermon.

—The Northwestern Congregationalist says that the Stillwater experiment in joining forces with the Roman Catholics in the public schools has proved so much of a failure that it will not be tried another year. Sectarianism could not be kept out, and more than 1,200 citizens of the place petitioned against the further employment of the sisters as public school teachers.

—An English paper in speaking of Dr. Hall's church, Congregational, in London, says: Its Gothic arches and pillars, its chancel, and mosaic pavement, and stained glass windows, are exactly such as are met with in an Anglican cathedral. The pulpit is at the side, and a handsome eagle lectern occupies the front center of the transept. Dr. Hall does not enter his pulpit at the beginning of the service. With his assistant, Mr. Grainger, both in surplice and stole, he sits in the first seat of the choir throughout "morning prayer." The service is taken from the Church of England Prayer Book, and in compiling it no deviations from the English liturgy were made but such as were thought likely to extend its use among evangelical Christians. The General Confession, the Apostles' Creed, the lessons of the day were gone through on Sunday morning as in the Established church.

EVANGELISTIC.

—East Northfield, Mass., was formerly known only as the home of the evangelist, D. L. Moody, until 1879, when Northfield Seminary was founded by him. Starting with twenty-five students in 1879, the number has steadily increased until to-day nearly 400 students avail themselves of the privileges offered at Northfield. Mt. Hermon Boys' School, founded by Mr. Moody two years later on the opposite side of the river, offers to boys the same advantages as the seminary offers to girls. The seminary buildings are utilized for the guests at these conferences.

—Rev. S. E. Young, of Asbury, N. J., invites Christian Endeavor Societies and other religious organizations in neighborhoods where there are Life-saving Stations to communicate with him with the object of co-operating with the society, recently formed, for promoting Christian work among the life-savers.

—The Evangelical Association has a conference in Japan with 23 preachers.

JEWS.

—A remarkable scene was witnessed in the Synagogue of the Sons of Jacob, at St. Paul, Minn. A strange rabbi rose and began to preach. The audience was delighted till he began to preach Christ crucified. Then the congregation rose to a man and rushed on him. They knocked him down, pounded him, and threw him out of the synagogue. He can sympathize with Paul.

LUTHERAN.

—According to the Minneapolis Journal of the 11th inst., G. Markhus, manager of the Norwegian Weekly Amerika of Chicago, has accepted a call to a professorship in Luther College, Iowa. Mr. Markhus has been a member of Rev. Mr. Bartholomew's congregation, in Chicago.

—The Lutheran population of Chicago is estimated at a quarter of a million, of whom 125,000 are Scandinavians.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—During the five years for which the fund for the extension of Methodism in South Wales has been in operation, it has made grants in aid of the erection of thirty-seven new chapels; thirty are in places in which no Wesleyan chapels previously existed.

—A Methodist minister, in lodge-infested New Hampshire, stands up for Masonic assassination. He insists that for a man who breaks lodge oaths, "no penalty is too severe."

—The man who preached the first Christian sermon in Chicago, sixty-one years ago, now in his 92nd year, addressed a large audience in the First Methodist church in that city on a recent Sunday. His name is the Rev. Stephen R. Beggs. There were then, he said, no streets and no street-lamps save lightning bugs. He lived for a while in the fort, where in three weeks thirteen children were born. He was afterwards a circuit rider in Missouri, when there was not a white man's house or hut between him and the Pacific Ocean.

—One-third of the population of Canada are said to be adherents of the Methodist Episcopal church.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—From March 1 to July 1 the missionaries for the American Sunday-school Union in the North western District, under the superintendence of T. G. Ensign, of Chicago, organized and reorganized 395 Sunday-schools (over three a day), into which were gathered 1,360 teachers and 10,814 scholars, besides aiding other schools in 970 cases, where 5,902 teachers are giving Bible instruction to 53,075 scholars. They held 1,905 meetings, made 11,294 visits to families, distributed 1,260 Bibles and Testaments and $1,094 worth of religious literature, and traveled 77,355 miles.

—The British Sunday-school Union reports 6,661 schools, with 152,977 teachers, and 1,531,432 scholars.

—The American Sunday-school Union since its organization has established 86,000 Sunday-schools.

—The Swedish Missionary Society is actively at work among the Laplanders. They have an orphanage at Ange, and six mission schools in other parts of Lapland, in which 173 children have received instruction. The king granted them 2,000 crowns; but during the past year their expenses were 1,500 crowns in excess of their receipts.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Fulton Street daily noon prayer meeting, N. Y., celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary recently.

REFORMED CHURCH.

—The federal union between the Reformed (Dutch) church in America and the Reformed Church (German) in the United States that has been under consideration some time, has been postponed one year by the synod of the first named body. It is possible that the union may never be accomplished, as many in both churches are outspoken in their opposition to it.

HOME AND HEALTH.

PICNIC LUNCHES.

Meats for sandwiches should be boiled the day before; then after removing bone, skin, and gristle they should be put in packing tins, heavily weighted, and set in a cool place over night, writes Mrs. A. G. Lewis in the July Ladies' Home Journal. Cut in very thin slices.

Bread one day old is best, and a very sharp knife is needed for cutting it into thin slices not over three inches square. These buttered slightly may be daintily filled with ham, salad, sardines, tongue, or whatever one likes.

Then cut pieces of confectioner's paper just large enough to cover the sandwiches neatly. Place them side by side, closely packed, and they will preserve their shape without breaking. The paper is not to be removed until served.

Cakes must also be one day old; and for picnic use a little extra flour in stirring, and an extra five or ten minutes in baking, will insure a firmer crust. Frosting, if put on hot, does not crackle and fall off. Cookies are more desirable than loaf cake, as are also cup and gem cakes. Jelly and cream confections are seldom nice for picnic serving.

Pies made of jellies, fruits, or sweets are best cooked turnover fashion, the pastry covering the filling entirely. Lay them in paper covers, and they serve thus very conveniently.

Lemon, orange, strawberry, raspberry or currant juices should be extracted, then sweetened, and when well dissolved, bottled. Drinks can then be prepared by adding two tablespoonfuls of the liquid to a tumbler of ice water. All these juices combined make a delicious drink.

Strong coffee or tea may also be prepared and served in the same way. Bright tin mugs are more convenient than tumblers, and there is no danger of breakage.

Hampers with several trays are more desirable for packing. Ordinary lunch baskets are a difficulty. White confectioner's paper should be used for lining the baskets and for separating the different kinds of foods; also for covering neatly individual pieces. Cookies and crackers must be put in tight boxes. Plates are too heavy, but bright new biscuit tins—the square shapes are the best—are very useful in packing, and with fringed napkins laid inside they serve well for salvers in handing the food around. Paper napkins are best.

Whatever is to be eaten last should be packed at the bottom of the hamper and that to be served first at the top. Fruit, pickles, olives, and cheese must not be forgotten.

WORTH REMEMBERING.

It is well, as far as possible, to avoid dosing with expectorant medicines, as they irritate and offend the stomach, and rarely do any good. The cough cannot be prevented; it is nature's way of throwing off offending matter from the lungs. Rational living is the best remedy and alleviation.

Pork, whether fresh, salted, or smoked, should be thoroughly cooked; for it is well known that it is especially liable to be infested (not to speak too strongly on the subject) with parasites, the most dreaded of which is the trichina spiralis. Tapeworm also comes from infested pork. All meat is, in fact, the better for being thoroughly cooked.

Damp situations are entirely unsuitable as building sites. Residence long continued in a damp atmosphere is a powerful influence toward developing scrofulous disease. Persons who are obliged by force of circumstances to live in such a locality should have their living rooms and sleeping rooms up stairs and go out into the sunshine as much as possible.

Many people advocate the shower bath, but few constitutions can stand it; in fact, it is highly dangerous to many persons of weakly habit; for they have no reactive power. Says a clever writer on this subject: "Every change in our growth and development is slow and gradual. If nature approved of sudden changes she might make a man bald in Freckles are considered a great disfigurement by their unhappy possessors, and sometimes, when they are very numerous and dark in color, they really are. FARM NOTES.

AGRICULTURAL.

Sheep are better than hogs for picking up fallen fruit.

The hen is an efficient insect destroyer in the orchard.

Ground bone and muriate of potash are excellent fertilizers for fruit.

Rub all lice-infested animals with a mixture composed of equal parts of sweet oil and kerosene.

Never undertake to treat an animal whose disease you do not understand, but employ a competent veterinary surgeon.

It is estimated that in the United States there are 2,800,000 hives belonging to 70,000 rearers, and producing 61,000,000 pounds of honey yearly.

The wild black cherry is highly recommended for timber planting. It grows very rapidly and produces a wood of great value, ranking next to mahogany for cabinet work.

Dampness in the poultry yard is the great assistant of roup, and should be avoided. On heavy clay soil, where the poultryman must build or do without poultry, a drain made of tile should be a feature of every yard. A sandy location is best, however, as it is dry and free from filth.

The latest reports from fruit growers the country over indicate a crop considerably under the average. Late frosts and long continued rains have played havoc with vineyards, orchards and small fruit plantations. Apples are in better shape than any of the other fruits and a fair crop is hoped for.

To lessen the suffering of poultry while being shipped, follow these rules: Do not crowd them. Place cups for water at the four corners of the coop and also midway between. Place boxes of feed by the side of the cups. Put sand and gravel on the floor. Have the coops at least twenty inches high with a cloth top and the sides open, so as to protect from the sun as well as provide air and keep the coop cool.

Corn is not easy of digestion, and hogs fed on it easily become cloyed. A dose of hardwood ashes, and still better if ashes are made from corn-cob, restores the appetite and keeps them in thrifty condition. This, however, is only to be recommended for fattening pork, as the ashes, like the soda and baking powders used for making biscuit, is really injurious to digestion in the long run. With hogs that are fattening, the digestive organs a year hence are matters of minor importance.

Hens cannot eat too much in cold weather nor too constantly if the food be of the right sort. An exclusive carbonaceous diet will not answer; to fatten them is not the object, nor is it desirable. Dry bran in troughs which they cannot soil, vegetables to pick on, oats to pick from the sheaf, chopped, steamed clover hay sprinkled slightly with bran—all these are good, but none more easily prepared nor cheaper than the dish of dry bran. Keep it by them continually. With it abundant water will be appreciated; if it be supplied hot, so much the better. The birds pick all day long when free in summer. If they cannot do it in winter they will not do their best. Keep an open eye for the most frequent layers of big eggs and put them in the breeding pen.—Practical Farmer.

HORTICULTURAL.

An excess of manure is injurious to grapes.

A sharp steel rake is a good weed-killer at the start.

Cultivation will benefit the trees for a few years after setting out.

Prune the trees in the orchard; keep in good shape from the start.

Arrange to keep the tomatoes off the ground and lessen the risk of rot.

Salt or salt brine can often be applied under the pear trees with benefit.

The peach tree bears most at the extremity of its branches, and for this reason is more liable to break down when laden with fruit. Pruning early in the season is advisable on this account.

When through with a crop in the garden put what is left under the ground.

Clover loosens up the soil by penetrating it, and when it decays helps the soil mechanically.

Corn is one of the best crops to grow in an orchard; potatoes come next, and beans are probably next.

A pedigree plant may be said to be one which possesses the best points of its variety in the greatest perfection.

On clay land especially the applying of coarse fresh manure is beneficial on account of the mechanical effect produced.

No plan of management will be best in all cases; the owner must adapt the treatment to the condition of the orchard.

If second or third crops are to be grown in the garden, be ready to plant them as soon as the first crops have matured.

Supplying all of the essentials of a crop, such as a good soil, thorough preparation and good seed are of more importance than the signs of the moon.

Plant the crops in the garden so as to cover the whole summer rather than to rely upon any one that will only cover a portion of the season; there is usually less risk and more profit.

It requires the very best of management to make the farm carry sufficient manure to keep up the fertility of the soil without using green manures or commercial fertilizers.—Live Stock Indicator.

The coleus plants can be had in scarlet, yellow, fiery crimson, carmine, rose, bronze, green, and in fact in nearly every color or shade of color that can be desired, those plants that have leaves flamed with different colors being especially beautiful, enabling anyone with artistic taste to produce the most elegant effects.

LABOR.

One hundred and twenty-four Lackawanna switchmen and fifty of the Buffalo, Pittsburg & Rochester Railroad Company's switchmen at Buffalo struck entirely from sympathy for the other strikers, Tuesday.

Strikers at Homestead became so boisterous Tuesday that General Wylie ordered a bayonet charge by the troops. The crowd then quickly dispersed. Two strikers were arrested.

Charles Gabel, a non-union switchman, was attacked by five strikers in the yards at Buffalo Tuesday, and he is not expected to recover from his injuries.

Thomas J. Manahan, one of the switchmen who went on a strike, was probably fatally shot by militiamen Tuesday because he and four other strikers would not leave the Lehigh tracks.

In Marquette county, Michigan, the last of the five big pig iron furnaces went out of blast Tuesday and not a pound of pig iron will be made in the county until the pig iron industry improves.

At midnight Wednesday, mainly as the result of an unsuccessful effort to involve other railroad organizations in the switchmen's strike at Buffalo, it was officially declared off by Mr. Sweeney.

Michael Broderick, 17 years old, was shot in Buffalo Thursday by soldiers of the Twenty-second New York Regiment, who accused him of throwing stones at them.

Over 200 men from the Twenty-ninth street Pittsburg mill of the Carnegie Company quit work Thursday in sympathy with the locked-out men.

Grand Master Sweeney, of the Switchmen's Association, was assaulted and knocked down on a Buffalo street corner Thursday by a union switchman, who was one of an angry crowd embittered against their leader on account of his action in ending the strike.

Not satisfied with the stoppage of the strike by Sweeney, and with alleged grievances of their own, the switchmen on the Lackawanna and Nickel Plate Roads at Buffalo quit work again Thursday.

At Coal Creek, Tenn., the trial of the leaders of the insurgent miners was begun, and the troops captured a few more of the law-breakers at Oliver Springs.

At the meeting of the Letter-Carriers' Association Thursday, Frank E. Smith, of San Francisco, was elected president and Kansas City selected at the next place of meeting.

President Gompers, of the Federation of Labor, said that the striking switchmen at Buffalo and the strikers at Homestead would be victorious; that the struggle had just commenced instead of being at an end.

Additional particulars of the recent very successful anti-secrecy district convention at Canby, Ore., were received from Bro. Nichols too late for insertion in this issue. They will appear next week.

A specimen of the tyranny of the lodge system over its adherents was seen in notices printed in the daily papers, restraining them from laboring on Labor Day, under a penalty of $10 each. A safe estimate places the loss of wages by this demonstration at not less than $150,000 in Chicago alone, and millions more throughout the Union; money that many of these poor workingmen cannot afford to lose. Thousands more were worse than wasted in intoxicating drinks. It was a harvest for the saloons.

Another "benevolent" secret order—that of "Solon"—is in trouble. A dispatch from Pittsburgh, Pa., September 2, states that R. J. Godfrey, Supreme Treasurer, and other members were on trial before Alderman McMasters on a charge of embezzling funds of the order. The information was made by W. H. McKelvey. The principal witness was A. F. Sawhill, an expert accountant, who said that when he took charge of the Supreme Treasurer's books, he found a shortage of $1,353, and Sept. 25 last there was a shortage of $14,233. The hearing was adjourned until Friday of this week.

The cholera is making terrible havoc in Russia and several other foreign countries, and everywhere the authorities abroad and at home are on the alert to prevent the ravages of "the pestilence that walketh at noonday," and makes darkness a horror. Its coming is rightly to be feared; but to give it undue importance with slavish fear before it comes is distrusting the power of God. A clear conscience, a cool head, sobriety, regularity of habits, careful diet, cleanliness and cheerfulness are excellent safeguards. One remarkable feature of this epidemic is that dread of it is a great predisposing cause.

Mr. John Bidwell, the Prohibition candidate for President, has written a letter accepting his nomination, in which, in substance, he states that liquor costing two billions of dollars a year is a nuisance, evil and immoral; that women of America should be emancipated, allowed to vote and be man's equal; that but a small percentage should be charged for loans of money; that monopolies should be suppressed, also gold-accumulating combinations, and that the present oppression of the workingman must be lifted. Mr. Bidwell's platform is broad enough to accommodate a pretty large and respectable constituency.

The announcement of the annual fall festivities at St. Louis, Mo., is an event of public interest. This year, at an outlay of something like a million dollars or more, extraordinary attractions were provided for the grand opening, last week, of the Exposition, the annual fair, the street illuminations and the Veiled Prophet parade, on an unusually superb scale. The street illumination was distinguished by over 50 arches and over 75,000 electric lamps and gas jets; and everything was conducted on a similarly magnificent and expensive scale. Accompanying the announcement the management issued a handsome souvenir book—"St. Louis through a Camera"—filled with artistic views of buildings, scenery, etc., in "the city by the great bridge." St. Louis is a fine and growing city, and possesses numerous advantages for business and other investments.

Germany has no use for either the Society of Jesus or the Redemptorist Fathers, and carefully excludes them, by law, from the empire. The relation of the Redemptorists to the Jesuits is now extensively discussed. The general opinion is, that there is practically no difference between them. Recent statistics show that the Redemptorists have 132 cloisters in 12 provinces. Two of them are in America, the province of Baltimore and the province of St. Louis. The authorities of the order report a membership of 2,557. Of these 1,232 are priests, 378 clericals, 287 lay brethren, and 360 novitiates. Of what possible use they are in this country few can tell. The religion of the Lord Jesus Christ has no need of "cloisters" or lodges; and if the Redemptorists are no better than the Jesuits, they are dangerous foes to liberty of conscience and our free republican institutions.

Rev. Justin D. Fulton has for two months past supplied Rev. O. P. Gifford's pulpit at Immanuel Baptist church in this city, during the latter's absence. At the close of his engagement, the church expressed their high appreciation of "the faithful and loving spirit manifested at all times" by him, and especially "commending him for his earnest efforts to reach and win Roman Catholics." Perhaps the comment of Deacon Lyford, of Immanuel church, expresses the feeling with which his ministrations inspired the people: "I have been led, as never before, to realize our duty to Romanists. We have considered Romanists as beyond our reach; that there was a wall between them and us, so that it is useless for us to try to save them. We send the Gospel to all parts of the world to save the lost; but Romanists are all around us, and they need salvation as much as any people in the world. They are building their hopes of salvation on the wrong foundation. If we are right, they are wrong. They put so much between themselves and Jesus Christ that all their hopes are vain. It is therefore our duty to labor for their conversion."

The Iron Hall endowment society is dead. "Supreme Justice" Somerby recently expressed his belief that the order will be revived. Insurance Commissioner Merrill, of Massachusetts, calls that belief "sheer nonsense." "There is no chance," added the commissioner, "of his or anybody else resurrecting the Iron Hall. It is dead now as a door-nail. The fact is, the people who have been and now are identified with it have lost confidence in it by this latest showing up of the order. He may be able to get some fools to go in for a resurrection of the Iron Hall, but you can depend on it that the bottom is knocked out. The end has not only come for this order, but for all the endowment orders now existing. The only thing that encouraged them was the fact that the father of them all, the Iron Hall, was in existence, and had been for ten years. They said, 'If the Iron Hall can do this thing why can not we?' The fraternal societies, like the Royal Arcanum, American Legion of Honor, and Knights of Honor, will feel the effect of the fall of the Iron Hall, but it will be only temporary, and such organizations will weather it all right."

A correspondent of the Gospel Messenger asks this question in a recent number of that paper: "What is a brother to do, who is a mechanic and out of work, and has nothing to depend on but his daily work at his trade. He can get plenty of work at good pay, if he joins the Knights of Labor. Now what is he to do in this case?" The Gospel Messenger is the organ of the Brethren church in Illinois and Pennsylvania, which is opposed to secret societies, and its editor, in "the courage of his convictions," gives his correspondent this sound reply: "The only question that can be about it is, Is it right to unite with such societies? The church has decided that it is not, and the late labor troubles at Homestead and other places show that our position is not only well taken, but that these organizations are really the laboring man's worst enemy. They are unreasonable and even tyrannical in their demands, even to their own members. No, trust in the Lord; take such work as is offered, and he will provide." This is the Christian view of the case. It is no more right to "do evil that good may come" than it is to insist that "the end justifies the means;" two aphorisms that may suit the Masonic philosophy, but find no indorsement in the Bible.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

[A Pamphlet issued by the Mixed Lutheran Pastoral Conference of Sheboygan and Manitowoc Counties, Wis.]

The Grand Army of the Republic is a society of veterans. According to Chapter I, Article 4, of the Constitution of the order, there can become members of the society, "soldiers and sailors of the army, fleet, or marine corps of the United States, who have served in the war for the suppression of the Rebellion between April 4, 1861 and April 9, 1865, and who have after such services been honorably discharged and have at no time borne arms against the United States."

According to Chapter I, Article 2, this organization is to serve: "For the preservation of those friendly and fraternal feelings which unite those sailors, soldiers and marine troops who unitedly have fought down the past Rebellion. The society has also other purposes in view which are not to be rejected; for example, to procure support and protection for needy war-comrades, and especially their widows and orphans."

It is, however, not enough to pursue good objects; it is needful that, for the accomplishment of such object, right means and ways should be made use of, if one wishes that Christians who are guided in all respects by the revealed Word of God are to take part in the same.

Unfortunately the founders of the society were of the opinion: "That a secret society, with signs, grips and password, would best serve the accomplishment of the purposes and objects."

Thus General Lucius Fairchild, who himself has been Commander-in-chief of the Grand Army, reports, in a public writing of the year 1887. He bears witness, likewise, in this writing, that at the first regular gathering the persons present had sworn the oath of secrecy. See the Lutheran of June 17, 1888. The Lutheran reports furthermore: "In a letter before us of Nov. 22, 1887, the present Commander-in-chief Rea writes: "You will notice, if you look at Article 13, Chapter 5, page 32, of the regulations of the order, that it is not at my option to send you a copy of the ritual." The above-named Commander-in-chief also repeatedly speaks of the "secret work" of his order.

In the place referred to by Mr. Rea, it says, under the superscription "Secrecy:" "The ritual and the unwritten forms of the Grand Army of the Republic are to be kept secret." Those violating these regulations are threatened with expulsion in disgrace. Other members also confessed that the Grand Army is a secret society, and that they have had to render the oath of secrecy at their reception.

Although we gladly admit that the Grand Army as a society pursues no objects purposely hostile to the church, and that it also has many praiseworthy aims in view, nevertheless no true Lutheran Christian can be a member of the society. He knows that the Lutheran church has declared itself against all secret, oath-bound societies. The reason why it must do this is next to be shown.

SECRETISM.

St. Paul writes, in Romans 12:17: "Take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men."

Dr. Philippi: "The apostle exhorts the church to take thought for what is good; that is, for a moral or honorable life in the sight or in the judgment of all men; that is, not only before Christians, but also before Jews and heathen."—Commentary to the letter to the Romans.

Dr. Luther: "That is, as he says in 1 Thes. 5:22: Avoid all appearance of evil; and in Philippians 4:8: Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest; all this is said about the outer life, in order that the Christian may not think that he can do whatever he wants to, whether it pleases nobody or everybody. For this he is to do only in matters of faith, but in outward life he is thus to deport himself that nothing blameable is to be found in him, but that he pleases everybody. 1 Cor. 10:32: Give none offence, neither to the Jews nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God. 1 Peter 2:12."—Aberle, the Epistle to the Romans, page 325.

Dr. Walther: "It is needful that a Christian should take thought for things honorable before everybody. So then he is to be concerned not only to do what is right in itself, but so to act that everybody may deem it right. He must not only avoid evil, but every appearance of evil. He must not only preserve his Christian freedom and his conscience, but for the sake of those who are weak he must, in his outward life, limit that freedom where necessary or yield it entirely."—Epist. Post. page 81.

Further: "If it is a matter of indifference to a man what other people think of them; if a man is satisfied with merely doing no evil although others take offence at it; if, for instance, Christians become members of secret societies about which nobody knows anything except the members, whether they have in view what is good or bad, the consequence is that there can be no true peace, no true union of heart amongst men."—Epist. Post. page 84.

The Christian who desires to be obedient to the Word of God and "to take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men," is therefore not permitted to do whatever he wants to, irrespective of the fact that it pleases nobody or everybody. He must take his fellowmen into account in respect to his outward life.

In matters of faith we are, of course, bound to the Word of God; there we are compelled to believe, and to acknowledge as truth, that which the natural mind of man holds for folly. There the only decision rests upon what does God say in his Word.

In matters of faith we are bound to God's command. We must do what God commands and avoid what he forbids. Daniel did not allow any command to interfere with prayer, and his three comrades did not obey the command to worship the image. Whatever touches our conscience touches also our faith; for faith cannot accommodate itself to a bad purpose in the heart.

If our life is according to the law of God, we shall also take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men, for the revealed moral law and the inherent law of nature agree. According to both, revolt against authority, murder, adultery, drunkenness, stealing, lying, and the like, are injurious. Therefore, Paul says of the works of the body, that they are manifest.

To outward life, however, there belong also the indifferent things which we may do or leave undone, because God has neither commanded nor forbidden. In the use of this freedom, however, we are not permitted to proceed without thought; we have to take into account our fellowmen. If we are in danger of incurring the appearance of evil and of giving offence, we are not permitted to do it.

Now, there are, of course, queer people in the world who have wonderful ideas about things honorable; if we were to be guided by them, we would not be permitted to speak German nor to do many other things. However, it would be easy to prove against these that our doings and actions are neither against the law of God nor against public morals, and that they, much to the contrary, have very queer notions in their heads; but this is needful that we be able to justify our actions before our fellowmen as honorable. God himself demands of us that which the apostle recommends with the words, "Take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men."

Now let us apply these truths of Scripture to secret societies, bound by an oath to conceal certain things from the eyes of all uninitiated, and to carry on their work in secret. It may be that their hidden work is something very good; it may be that in their meetings nothing evil is done; it may be that a Christian who observes these things is able to justify his doings before his own conscience; all this admitted, nevertheless, he does not take thought for things honorable in the sight of all men. Bound by his oath, he cannot justify his actions before his fellowmen; and yet we are commanded to take thought for things honorable, not only in the sight of God, who observes what is secret; not only before our own conscience, but also in the sight (that is, in the judgment) of all men. Even General Lucius Fairchild is compelled to confess: "It lies in the nature of things that secret societies are readily looked upon with suspicion." See the Lutheran.

Truly, the doings of secret societies are suspicious because they are so anxious to conceal them from all uninitiated. Christ says: "For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reprov'd." John 3:20. He, who without having just cause, is so anxious to conceal what he does that he communicates it only to those who have bound themselves beforehand with an oath not to reveal it, certainly invites the appearance of evil and the suspicion that he is engaged in evil.

Christ was able to say: "I spake openly to the world," etc. . . . "in secret have I said nothing." John 18:20.

It is befitting to a Christian to follow the example of Christ. A Christian ought never to invite the appearance of evil, to-wit: That he is one who works in the dark whose doings have cause to fear criticism.

The secret doings of the devotees of secrecy is suspicious to us, however, for another reason; to-wit: because so many secret societies have, in fact, turned out to be the tools of dark powers; thus, for instance, the Russian Nihilists, the Italian Mafia, the Irish Mollie Maguires, the Southern White Caps. That these spread fear and terror about them; that they work death and destruction, and are able, often for a long time, to escape the punishing arm of justice, is to be ascribed especially to their secret activity, which they have bound themselves by oath to conceal.

The Lutheran Witness of July 7, 1891, writes with reference to the excesses of the Italian Mafia in New Orleans: ". . . the murders committed by the Mafia are to be laid at the door of secretism; an ordinary band of criminals would be unable to do what this secret society has done." . . . "Freemasonry killed Morgan, because of the same thing. Secret societies have often turned investigations against their members into a mere farce. . . ."

In view of such hard accusations against secret societies, those who know themselves unentangled by their doings and wish to have nothing to do with them should declare themselves freed from a principle which bears such evil fruits. We may further argue that we live in a union of States, where the people govern themselves. If everything is to be done decently and in order, the public authorities ought to be consulted, in order that just criticism may be exercised. The doings of secret societies are withdrawn from public criticism; this being so, a few demagogues working underhandedly are able to lead thousands without its being possible that their course should be criticised. It is a fact that the Grand Army plays a part in the politics of our land.

Truly, there is no wonder that patriotic citizens look upon secret societies as suspicious; the only wonder is that the government has not long ago forbidden secret societies as injurious to a free State.

By the the word of the apostle, "Take thought," etc.; and by the word of the Lord, "Every one that doeth evil, hateth the light," etc. All secret societies are condemned. The principle at the foundation of them all is un-Christian.

MORMONISM IN WEST VIRGINIA.

BY J. W. MOSS.

A few weeks ago, in looking over one of our county papers, my eye fell upon a very flattering account of a big meeting held by the Mormons in Wetzel county, West Virginia, which had been sent in by a correspondent from that place.

This set me to reflecting upon the Mormon question a little; and I thought that a brief account of that sect, as it has shown itself in this vicinity, might not be without interest to the readers of the Cynosure.

Mormon "priests" and "bishops," from Pittsburgh, Pa., and other points, have been operating in West Virginia for some fifteen or twenty years; but it does not appear that they have succeeded in gathering a very large number of adherents at any one point.

They parade under the not-objectionable title of "Latter-Day Saints;" one of them remarked to me that I could not with propriety call them ancient saints, and if not ancient saints they must be latter-day saints. I told him, in reply, that I felt compelled to admit that they were not ancient saints, but that it might be possible that their claim to being saints at all is a little questionable.

I have not had an opportunity of hearing them preach; but their hearers have told me that their preaching is much the same as what is heard at some other sectarian meetings; in fact, they are thought to excel, if possible, the soundness of any on the subject of immersion. In close union with their theological teaching is exhibited that cunning which has ever been an inseparable concomitant of religious fanaticism.

But it was not necessary for the Mormon missionary to play any hypocritical part in displaying a preference for immersion. When Sidney Rigdon, Parley P. Pratt, and others of the early apostles of Mormonism, left the Disciples for the Mormon fold, they carried their baptismal ideas with them.

The West Virginia Mormons say but little on the subject of polygamy in their sermons; but you should not thence conclude that they give it the go-by, by any means.

Nephi comes into our midst, not with a tongue loud in the praises of the harem, but with his grip-sack weighted down with books on "celestial marriage." These are sold and in various ways distributed broadcast, and when objected to, they are said not to contain the creed of the church at all, but to constitute an interesting addition to the reading matter which would well pay the trouble of perusal; in thus proceeding they display some of the cunning of the sons of Hiram Abiff. Verily, Mormonism is the fox which works his way into the hen-house without attracting the attention of the watch-dog.

Though the Mormon priest usually makes use of the gentler forces of cunning and persuasion in building up his peculiar Zion, he is not always averse to a resort to weapons that are carnal in overcoming the opposition of the profane. No sooner does a community of that ilk become sufficiently numerous in a neighborhood to feel a sense of the rising horn of power, than they begin to manifest a hostile and persecuting spirit towards their neighbors.

Two or three years ago, at Glen Easton, about five miles west of Cameron, W. Va., where a community of "Latter-Day Saints" had been established, hostilities sprang up between them and their neighbors, the opposition being mostly from Universalists and Spiritualists. At first some high words and a few blows were exchanged. But the Mormons swore to have revenge, and threatened to "clean out" their enemies. Both parties armed themselves, and in about three or four weeks an opportunity was afforded for a hostile demonstration, and a "fight to a finish."

A prayer meeting was appointed at a school-house near Glen Easton, twenty-two miles east of Wheeling, in Marshall county. Both parties turned out in full force, the Mormons a little the first, but the others were soon on the ground. All came in looking as meek as saints. The Mormons made the onset and were met in fine spirit, both contestants using pistols, knives and clubs. One aged man (a Mr. Harris) was so horrified with the sight that, although he revived from his first faint sufficiently to be taken home, he died soon after from the nervous shock. It was at first reported, and so published in a Cincinnati paper, that six of the belligerents were killed outright. But, strange to tell (by a miracle I might almost say), they all recovered, after having received wounds ordinarily looked upon as certainly fatal.

One young man, of powerful physique, on whom the Mormons first opened fire, after having stabbed two of his assailants through and through, and being himself fearfully wounded, fled to a neighbor's house, covered with blood from head to foot. The man of the house took him in, but shut the door of the room, to keep his wife, who was in a delicate condition, from getting a sight of so horrible a spectacle. The young man was at my house some time afterwards. His head was still bald, and the scarcely-healed scars, two or three inches long, showed that he had been roughly handled. He was forced to sell his farm in their midst and settle some eight or ten miles away from the scene of contest.

AN OPEN LETTER TO WORKERS.

BY CYRUS SMITH.

DEAR READER:—The Lord may be pleased to use you to honor his neglected truth. There is much fundamental truth in the Gospel pertaining to organized iniquity that is neglected by a large majority of the workers. This could not be, were it not for the beguiling arts of the wicked one; but, notwithstanding this, the workers are making advances on Gospel lines which are gloriously successful; and many portions of the vineyard are well cultivated. But rank weeds of infidelity are growing in the church where righteousness shall flourish when the sickle of God's truth is used by all the workers along neglected lines, or when all are in harmony. God calls some pastors, some teachers, and so on, but he calls none to discord and confusion.

The importance of work on lines of neglected Gospel truth cannot well be over-estimated; because when good men get the light of Gospel truth on the secrecy question they quit the lodge and "renounce the hidden things of dishonesty." It was so with C. G. Finney, a hero in Israel, and many others whose testimonies might be given would space permit. The greatest of evangelists, D. L. Moody, gives the Gospel trumpet no uncertain sound and tells men to "come out of the secret lodges if they would walk with God."

It is self-evident that all lodges are worldly institutions, and that Christians who belong to them are "unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

God ordained only the family, the church and the state. All other institutions are not of his planting. And Jesus, our precious Saviour, whose truth we delight to honor with all our ransomed powers, says: "Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." The orthodox denominations and independents compose the church of Christ. The lodge, however, is as much a place of worship as is the church, having altars and prayers. In the church they worship God through Christ openly. The service of the lodge is modern Baal-worship, rejecting the name of Christ from the ritualistic prayers deceptively. Some have been so deceived as to think it "the secret place of the Most High." But when the workers are all in harmony with God's truth on this neglected line then we will hold up each other's hands and lovingly bear each other's burdens. Do away with false worship, and the church will no longer commit spiritual adultery with the rival of Christ, the lodge "god of this world." "The truth shall make you free," is true of the church; and when this is done she will be divorced from the lodge and be more truly the bride of Christ than now.

Beloved, trust in the living God; let his "truth" be your "shield and buckler." Take up the cross on this neglected line and tell people to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." Give them the light you receive, directly and indirectly, from God through prayerful research and desire. Be a reflector of the light of Christ, who said: "In secret have I said nothing." "Come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty," at whatever cost.

"And the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ."

Let us pray more fervently, if possible, than ever before for the oneness of Christians on all lines.

"Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly Dove,
With all thy quickening powers," and help thy church and people here.
De Kalb, Iowa.

THE CURSE OF SECRET GANGS.

"In secret have I said nothing," was the testimony of the Son of God. Secrecy is the convenient refuge of sin and crime. Secret combinations are sometimes used to resist despotic power, but often the remedy proves worse than the disease.

Italy has been a land of spiritual despotism; and when men's souls are in bondage, their bodies cannot be free. Hence there has grown up a system of secretism which defies law and nullifies justice. These secret combinations are transported to other lands, and become potent for evil. Says Zion's Herald:

"The committee appointed by the mayor of New Orleans to investigate the Mafia and similar organizations have brought to light some startling facts. Before Chief of Police Hennessey was murdered, evidence was traced of ninety-four assassinations by Sicilians or Italians, which went unpunished because of the secrecy which accompanied each act. They found that the Mafia had gained a strong foothold, and terrorized the Italian population of the city, levying tribute at pleasure under the threat of death. They had even attempted to poison the Italian consul. Several remedies were proposed by the committee, the most radical of which was the absolute exclusion in future of Sicilians and Southern Italians—classifying them with Chinese as an undesirable and prohibited class."

What have honest men to do with secret oath-bound clans, which are so fruitless of good and have such possibilities of evil wrapped up within them? Far better is it to stand for God if you stand alone, than to join hands with the godless, and thus become partaker of other men's sins.—The Christian, Boston.

RELIGIOUS PAPERS.

There are 955 religious papers in the United States, whose combined circulation is about one-eighth of all the newspapers published in the country. The Methodists publish 147 papers, with a circulation of 650,000; the Roman Catholics, 127 papers, circulation 750,000; Baptists, 126 papers, circulation 500,000; Presbyterians, 53 papers, circulation 500,000; Protestant Episcopal, 47, with a general circulation all over the country. Lutherans are most numerous in Pennsylvania and the West; they have in all 37 newspapers, circulation mostly local. Congregationalism is strongest in New England; its 21 papers circulate about 150,000 copies. The Christians have 14 papers, with a circulation of 50,000.

The Jews have 13 papers; Spiritualists 10, Universalists 11, United Brethren 11, Swedenborgians 9, Unitarian, Disciples, and Friends 6 each, Mormons 4, Church of Christ and Salvation Army each 3, and the Shakers, King's Daughters, and Reformed Episcopalians each 1. The Evangelical, undenominational, and unsectarian together have 227 papers with a combined circulation of over three-fourths of a million each issue.

A LESSON FOR FATHER AND SONS.

Ebenezer Webster, Daniel Webster's father, a sturdy New Hampshire farmer and miller of the last century, was one of those intelligent and generous parents whose most cherished purpose is to give their children a better education than they have enjoyed themselves. Every one was poor then in the northern part of New Hampshire; there were but few books, and none but the district schools; and, therefore, all the latter years of Ebenezer Webster's life were a severe struggle to accomplish this purpose. Daniel Webster relates, in one of his letters, an affecting conversation which occurred one hot day in July, 1792, in the hayfield, between his father and himself, when he was about ten years old. A member of Congress came out to the hayfield to see Captain Webster—he was called captain from his having commanded a company in the Revolutionary war—and when the member had left, the old man called the boy to him and they sat on a haystack together under an elm tree.

"My son," began the strong-minded, proud, but uneducated man, "my son, that is a worthy man; he is a member of Congress; he goes to Philadelphia and gets six dollars a day while I toil here. It is because he had an education, which I never had. If I had had his early education, I should have been in Philadelphia in his place. I came near it as it was. But I missed it, and now I must work here."

The tender-hearted boy was much affected at these words and began to cry.

"My dear father," he exclaimed, "you shall not work. Brother and I will work for you, and wear our hands out, and you shall rest."

"My child," said the father, "it is of no importance to me—I now live but for my children; I could not give your elder brother the advantages of knowledge, but I can do something for you. Exert yourself—improve your opportunities—learn—learn, and when I am gone you will not need to go through the hardships which I have undergone, and which have made me an old man before my time."

The ten-year-old little Daniel threw himself on his father's breast, and as he sobbed aloud, he registered a vow deep in his heart that he would never idle away a moment that could be devoted to study. In 1796, when Daniel was fourteen years old, his father, who had been made county judge, at a salary of fourteen hundred dollars a year, was able to send him to the famous academy at Exeter, N. H. When he had been at school a few months, and was at home for the vacation, his father told him that he meant to send him to college. "The very idea," says Mr. Webster, "thrilled my whole frame. . . . I was quite overcome, and my head grew dizzy. The thing appeared to me so high, and the expense and sacrifice it was to cost my father so great, I could only press his hand and shed tears."

"I live for my children," said the generous old man, "and I will do all I can for you, if you will do all you can for yourself."

Daniel was sent to Dartmouth College before he was properly prepared for admission. But his wonderful talents and his studiousness enabled him soon to get abreast with all his classes, and to graduate with distinction. His father lived to reap the reward of his parental devotion by seeing the unfolding of his son's unequalled talents. Daniel Webster's reverence for his father, and his appreciation of the good old man's affection and self-sacrifice, were conspicuous traits of his character. In the height of his fame his lips quivered and his voice trembled when he spoke of him; and once every year he took his children to the log cabin in which his father had lived, and to the humble grave in which his remains reposed.

Such an eminent instance of parental devotion and filial appreciation, when rightly considered, elevates one's conceptions of human nature, and strengthens our faith in the capabilities of man.—Exchange.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Smart women—Lions as architectural decorations—A quiet summer—The "Traveller" again boycotted—Our New England agent home again.

"Everything I have done I thought I couldn't do," Abby Morton Diaz is reported as saying to an interviewer; and I believe her remark would be echoed by nearly all our public women who have reached middle life. To find that they could sway an audience by their silver-tongued eloquence, preside with grace and dignity at conventions, write political leaders for the papers, and do a hundred and one things that nobody—they themselves least of all—dreamed they ever could do, must have made their way, rough as it was, so full of delightful surprises that they did not mind their bleeding feet as they pressed on over the sharp stones and matted briars of popular prejudice. Their's was the joy of first discoverers—a joy that their daughters coming after them, with all the crooked places made straight and the rough ways smooth, can never know.

I have been wondering why all the prodigiously smart women who in some mysterious way contrive to do the work of a dozen ordinary mortals, always hail from Maine or the West. Can the Maine law have anything to do with it? Or is it the resinous breath of their pine forests, and the winds that sweep down from Mt. Katahdin, that put iron into their blood and steel into their sinews? There is one Maine woman in South Ellsworth who drives the mail stage from that place to Ellsworth, does all the housework and sewing for a family of five, and in berry time picks berries to sell; and there is still another (if the newspapers are to be believed) in East Norridgewock who breaks the record by carrying on a farm, making butter, doing her housework, caring for five little children, and teaching school five days in the week, besides canvassing for different publications. The wicked newspaper man suggests that her spare time is probably spent in making flannel shirts for the heathen in Africa. Shades of our great grandmothers! Let them rest quietly under their mossy headstones after this. The race is not yet extinct. At this moment I recall one Maine woman whom I feel honored to call my friend, who filed a local pulpit for some time, but is now laboring as a foreign missionary; "divinely tall," of superb proportions and "upright as a palm tree." "I tell people I grew so tall from looking up to the giant pines in my native county of Aroostook," she once said to me, laughingly, and I could well believe her. Happy they who are born where Nature provides them with something to look up to. Their natural environments mould the mental as well as the physical characteristics of a race more than we think. I believe the Dutch owe their stolid, phlegmatic disposition, more than anything else, to the flat, uninteresting soil on which they were born and reared, that gives them nothing for an inspiration higher than their own windmills.

A friend who wished me to visit a certain noted public building, desired me to pay special attention to the two monstrous lions which were a part of the internal decoration, and see if I could perceive any artistic consistency or general appropriateness in having such an un-American emblem. Would not the American eagle have been a far more fitting decoration? he asked. Somebody suggested—for our talk was at the breakfast-table—that as the building was one devoted to trade it might be in imitation of the winged lions of Venice. But these had no wings; they were just common-place stone lions; and as to borrowing the emblems of Venice, why have we got to borrow at all? The use of the king of beasts for purposes of decoration seems to be a fad with American architects, and in Boston it seems to have smitten us deeply, which is curious, considering that there was a time when he was supposed to have been permanently supplanted by the eagle. I hope no one, not even our good friend, the British American, will accuse me of any desire to "twist the lion's tail" when I say that I object to it on æsthetic as well as patriotic grounds. It is true there is a compact strength, a massive majesty in the leonine form which no other animal possesses, but I never admired its face. I believe Dr. Livingstone, speaking of it in one of his books of African travel, rather irreverently compares it to an old woman's face with a cap on—of which the usual run of lion's heads in pictures are really an excellent caricature. As Dr. Livingstone came very near being a meal for a lion once, perhaps this is one of the instances where familiarity breeds contempt. Fewer lions and more eagles, and our national flower—when it can be decided what it is—worked out as the Egyptians worked out their lotus, the Greeks their acanthus, and the French their fleur-de-lis, would give our architecture a more distinctly national character.

The fierce summer heat has given place to something more temperate, and to-day I notice for the first time that the elm opposite has hung out a yellow banner, which means that autumn is already on the threshold. Those golden leaves are very beautiful, and yet, like the first gray hairs, nobody welcomes the sight. For a Presidential year this has been an unusually quiet summer, but perhaps the torrid height at which the thermometer has stayed most of the time has had something to do with this lack of excitement in the political world. The summer schools and religious meetings have been largely attended, and given fresh inspiration and uplifting to many. From the Convention of the Vineyard Baptist Association at Cottage City comes the following pleasant and perhaps "ower true" saying of Dr. Gifford's which I pass along for the amusement of Cynosure readers in all sections: "The Baptists of the South are all orthodox. A Southern friend once said to me, 'At the South a quotation from Scripture ends all argument; in Boston it is the beginning.'"

Again the Transcript has got the contract for reporting and printing the proceedings of the Boston Aldermen and Common Council during the ensuing year, although the Traveller bid $1,500 less. Quinn, one of the Irish Romanists who rule the city of the Everetts and the Adamses and the Channings, poured out his vials of wrath upon the Traveller as a most bigoted, prejudiced and un-American sheet; but the Traveller still lives and has a circulation of thirteen thousand, in spite of boycotting and abuse.

The Granite-Cutters' strike seems to have been, as such troubles usually are, a duel between capital and labor—the New England Manufacturers' Association on one side, and the labor unions on the other. What will future generations think of our government, which lacks the courage and the wisdom to step between the contending parties in this suicidal conflict, and bid them submit their differences to arbitration? Nothing very complimentary, I fear.

I was pleasantly surprised to-day by a visit from our New England agent, Bro. Stoddard, just returned from his tour in the Queen's Dominion, brimming over, as ever, with faith and cheer, and showing no traces of having fought with beasts at Ephesus, though he held some lively meetings at which the lodge found itself in much the same predicament as the dragon when St. George thrust the ball of pitch into its open jaws. Bro. Stoddard's trip has been gloriously successful, financial and otherwise, and we can begin another year's warfare against the secret works of darkness in New England under unprecedentedly prosperous conditions. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, August 31, 1892.

An instructive object-lesson, showing a part of what has been accomplished by the systematic alley-mission work recently begun by the W. C. T. U., was presented at a mass meeting held here Sunday afternoon. Fifty small colored children from the notorious Willow Tree Alley, neatly dressed and with shining faces, ranging in color from bright mulatto to ebony black, occupied the front pews; and after Sister Grace, of London, who has taken a prominent part in the alley-missionary work, opened the meeting with prayer, and Mrs. M. E. Griffith, organizer of the Home Missionary Society, read a chapter from the Bible, the little waifs sang several of the kindergarten hymns they have been taught, and recited a number of verses. In no other way would the wonderful good effect of a few weeks' instruction given by these Christian women have been more strikingly shown. And as shown by the short address of Mrs. La Petra, who presided over the meeting, the work in this alley has been conducted under great difficulties, there being within its precincts no less than twelve liquor saloons. An effort is now being made to raise the money needed to support five kindergarten schools for the alley children, and there is little doubt of its success. The Society of Friends has promised to support one, and one of the local churches will maintain another. Mr. B. Pickman Mann, who first introduced the alley kindergarten school into Washington, rightly said that, if the children of the city could be properly trained, when the present generation of grown people had passed away the millennium would be at hand. And he might have added that, it is one of the first duties of the present generation of grown people, both to Christianity and to civilization, to aid in properly training the children. What has been done is but a beginning; but the success already attained should stimulate the workers, and everybody should be a worker, in some capacity, to greater exertions in the future.

"This is an old-fashioned sermon from an old-fashioned book," was the striking opening of Rev. Dr. Duncan McGregor, of Philadelphia, who preached a powerful sermon to an unusually large congregation last Sunday night, on God's great economy in saving the lost, the text being: "For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which is lost;" of which he said: "If all the rest of the Bible should be destroyed, this passage would be sufficient."

Rev. J. Albert Rondthaler, of Indianapolis, preached here twice last Sunday. Many who heard and saw him for the first time noted a wonderful resemblance in speech and style of oratory to Rev. Dr. Talmage, the noted Brooklyn minister.

Speaking of resemblances, Rev. Dr. Ezra Tinker, of New York City, who addressed the Y. M. C. A. on "Achieving success in life," Sunday afternoon, is very much like Mr. Elijah Halford, President Harrison's private secretary. Dr. Tinker opened his remarks by ridiculing the popular idea that "luck is a factor in the real success of anybody, although it may at times be the seeming cause of monetary and material achievements." He cautioned his hearers that as a rule the man who sits "waiting for something to turn up," sits waiting until he turns up his own toes. "Success," he said, "is born of resolution. One who is without ambition to be among the best of his chosen calling will not progress. Those who are not content to be among mediocrity are men of iron will and energy. The race of young men to-day is fast developing a species of backboneless humanity; without ambition except to pose as fashion-plates and models of blase society." One sentence from his concluding remarks is specially applicable to the young man who is always complaining because his abilities are not properly recognized by others: "Every man must prove himself a man before he has the right to demand recognition as a man."

A mass meeting of temperance people is to be held on Monday night to take some action concerning the resignation of Prosecuting Attorney Dumont, which was demanded by his official superior at the instigation of the liquor interest, because of his being too industrious in prosecuting liquor-dealers who violated the laws. In the call for the meeting it is stated that some action is necessary for the moral welfare of the national capital.

The Treasury Department officials who have immediate supervision of the Marine Hospital service, which is in charge of the sanitary measures that are being undertaken to keep the cholera out of the United States, are in almost constant consultation. The question of ordering a national quarantine against all cholera-infected ports is under consideration. This would very seriously affect commerce and travel; but it will be done if it is thought to be necessary to keep the cholera out of the country. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND AGENT.

DEPOT, WORCESTER, Mass., Aug. 30, 1892.

I accompanied my son Willis on his return to Washington as far as Putnam, Conn., where I spent last night, sharing the hospitality of Hon. George and Mrs. Buck, both in fair health and good heart. Sea-bathing, New England air and a vigorous campaign among the Vermont mountains have put new vigor into the blood, and the kindly co-operation of friends renewed courage and hope into my son's life, so that he faces the future without misgiving.

An hour with H. T. Cheever, D.D., at the home of his sister, Mrs. Washburn, was a pleasant and profitable episode. It is especially gratifying to meet with those who dare maintain the right at any personal cost, and such a conference, however brief, is always an inspiration.

Unlike to "the bloody and deceitful" symbol of Odd-fellows' benevolence (?)—a naked heart in an open hand—Bro. S. A. Pratt looks, and speaks, and acts a manly, intelligent and discreet liberality, responsive, not to vows or oaths of favoritism to members of a picked, packed and mercenary brotherhood, who can pinch a knuckle, poke the nose or brush the earlocks by rule, but on the divine and holy impulse of love and homage to Him who "giveth liberally to all men," and has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto ME."

The beneficence of "a certain rich man clothed in purple," living sumptuously in this world, and who after death "in hell lifted up his eyes, being in torment," is fittingly symbolized by "a flaming heart" in a hand relaxing its grasp, after tearing that heart from the bosom of its agonized victim; while a cheerful giving, for Christ's sake, illuminates the transparency of true benevolence, hung just outside the gate to the celestial city, and revealing, in characters of gold, the loving admonition, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven," "for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also;" not incrustated with selfishness, or held in "the lion's paw, or strong grip of a Master Mason," but in the bosom of Christ and of his bride, the church. "No man can serve two (Worshipful) Masters."

WELLESLEY, Aug. 31, P. M.—A Christian welcome at the "Industrial Cottage" of Bro. Flagg brought me in touch with kindred spirits, who spontaneously joined in the voice of praise and thanksgiving to the "Giver of every good and every perfect gift" when I related how "the Lord had visited his people" and shown unmerited favor to one of his weakest servants. It will be a blessing to those who have been willing almoners to a needy cause, popular in heaven, but unpopular with the wicked world, to know that they are "compassed about" with the prayers of saints who are "walking with God" and have an influence at the court of final appeals.

By the way, "Industrial Cottage" is noted for surprises, and the latest was a "family rig" at the door, in which the senior member of a quartet acted as coachman for a most delightful drive to the quiet country home where Deacon I. Leadbetter offers the morning and evening sacrifice as his patriarchal predecessors have done ever since Abel's typical lamb prefigured the "seed of the woman" who should "bruise the head of the serpent." This venerable man, in the eighth decade of his pilgrimage, wearing the coronet of glory, discourses of the unwritten past and of the present and future as a "voice crying in the wilderness," or as one who has entered already "within the veil." Neither our good brother, nor his devoted and faithful wife, has been left without evidences of true discipleship; but in all their sufferings they have found consolation in the assurance: "These light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." It is impossible for any one to spend an hour in such a home, or with such companionship, and not be a better and stronger man, or a more guilty and presumptuous sinner.

My train approaches, and I hasten on to Boston, where I hope to meet Mrs. Stoddard on her return from "labors abundant" in Vermont, this evening.

THE CAMPAIGN IN CANADA.

[The report referred to in the following failed to reach this office.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.]

I wrote, with some care, a report of the work in Canada, up to August 12, and after reading it to Rev. J. B. Detwiler, mailed it in the afternoon, at New Dundee, to the Christian Cynosure. Beyond that I have no knowledge of its whereabouts. I enclosed in the same envelope a list of subscribers which, of course, did not reach the office. If friends who subscribed fail to receive their papers, will they kindly notify Rev. W. I. Phillips, at 221 W. Madison street, Chicago, as I expect to be in Kentucky for the next two weeks, and if sent here it would occasion unnecessary delay? At this distance of time and place I cannot reproduce the report I had hoped to see ere this in the Cynosure, but I will give a brief sketch.

My sojourn in the Dominion was brief, but long enough to give me some idea of the country and its inhabitants. My lot was cast among Christian reformers of the heroic type, though an occasional sally indicated that there were "bush-whackers and gorillas in the woods." In all, I spoke twenty-eight times, received $94.40 as compensation, secured in the Dominion thirty-seven subscribers to the Cynosure and reached my home in Boston twenty-nine days and seven hours from the time I left it.

Never in all my wanderings have I seen finer stock, better-kept farms, more substantial buildings, more hospitable homes, or a more industrious and successful class of citizens. The impression largely prevails that a man can make a living by attending to his own business, and, as a result, it is easier to find a dozen or score of farmers worth from $20,000 to $50,000 than to find an equal number of Masons or Odd-fellows outside the villages.

A sample case is that of Bro. C. D. Rosenberger, who began in the "bush" with no capital but "grit," and a "help-meet" from the Lord, raised a family of eleven children, and adopted three of other people's who needed a home, and is hale and hearty at 80 or near that time of life; and all by attending to his own business, without the aid of any secret society. When I asked the old gentleman what he was worth, his reply was, "That is not for me to say; but I have always paid one hundred cents on a dollar, and if we have luck we shall get through without going to the poorhouse." Some of his neighbors said he was worth at least $50,000.

Wheat, oats and barley, with large fields of peas, are the principal crops, and very little corn is imported from "the States" since the McKinley bill took effect.

Berlin, with a population of about 8,000, is the shiretown of Waterloo county, and was the center of my work. I gave seven lectures, and preached three sermons to respectful and attentive audiences in Berlin, beside speaking at several other points in the county. Very much credit is due to Bros. H. S. Hallman and D. Sherk, and others on the committee are deserving of much credit for the thorough and business way in which they arranged and carried out the program of the campaign. To their efficiency, with the hearty co-operation of others "like-minded," is mainly due the success of the work in the Dominion. There were a number of noteworthy incidents which I will try and give later, if the Lord permit. At Ridgeway I met Bro. Learn, and held two fairly successful meetings in the Free Methodist church under the pastoral care of Sister Shultz, who has the fear of God, but not of man, before her eyes. Five services in and near Markham were well sustained in numbers and interest. The third evening, in Toronto, brought out the "craft," and gave a rather lively turn to affairs, which I am confident did not result in a complete victory to the "brotherhood." It would give me great pleasure to meet those who appeared to champion the secret orders, or any "like-minded," at some future time in Toronto; and I hope to give them an opportunity, if they dare attempt to make good the charge of falsehood publicly made in the Y. M. C. A. hall.

I was the guest, while at Toronto, of Bros. Robert and William Jones, to whom, with their households, I am under lasting obligation for kind offices and hearty co-operation. To me there appears to be an open door and fields ripe for the harvest in Canada. Who will undertake to stand for the Lord and for his church in this "Valley of Decision?" May the Lord choose, qualify and sustain some one, whom he will, for this work.
J. P. STODDARD.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

AT HOME, Sept. 1, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have devoted my time for the past week largely to personal visitation and canvass.

For some reason, difficult at times to understand, the manufacturers, like the farmers of our country, have their prosperous and depressing times. Last year I found the boot and shoe manufactories of Brockton, Campello and Montello,

Mass., putting forth less than their capacity. This year many reported orders for more goods than they could produce. Some account for this change on the ground that there was a surplus stock last year, which is now consumed and gives place for new goods. The increased number of feet to be clad could make but little difference with the trade of these giant manufactories.

As many engaged here are of Swedish descent and almost to a man opposed to "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," we rejoice in their prosperity. Rev. Mr. Ohlson, of the Congregational church, Campello, thought that that my former addresses in that place had done good, and assured me of a welcome any time I could come again.

Rev. Mr. Norlin, the Lutheran pastor, was away from home, but is a reader of our paper and supporter of our work.

Rev. Mr. Ohlson had an experience during the past years which has intensified his dislike for Masonry. At the request of the mother, he officiated at the funeral of a young man who was a Mason. Knowing his disapproval of the order, no services of the lodge were attempted till they reached the grave. Then the lodge surrounded the preacher and attempted to mix their services with his. Seeing that he was surrounded by this company clad with white aprons, many of whom he knew to be ungodly men, and not desiring to make a disturbance, he immediately withdrew and left them, much to their displeasure.

Our old friend Rev. E. P. Marvin, of Lockport, N. Y., conducted the noon prayer meetings at the Bloomfield Street M. E. church, Boston, last week. It was my privilege to attend but once. His general theme was the progress of Christian-

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GREAT NECESSITY—NATIONAL REFORM

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 26, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was our privilege to preach in East Foxboro, Mass., Wednesday evening. We had a very good and appreciative audience. But I was struck with the fact that there were three women for every man. I inquired the meaning of this. The answer was: "The men go to the lodge. They take their spare money to pay lodge dues. The women form sewing circles and do all in their power to support the Gospel, but it is a failure. The church here is dying out."

That started a train of reflections in my mind. The church must be purified. The Pilgrims brought a pure Gospel to America. But shortly after coming, slave-holders were allowed membership. Then theater-goers were admitted. Then distillers, brewers and bar-keepers found aid and comfort within the church. Then members of Sabbath-breaking corporations and those who use the railroads and Sunday papers on Sabbath found refuge. In Washington, D. C., women who give "progressive euchre" parties on Sabbath evening are fellowshipped. Members of secret, oath-bound fraternities are welcomed into the fold. Theater-going, dancing and the lodge during the week, Sunday newspapers on Sabbath morning, "progressive euchre" parties and pleasure-riding Sabbath evening, with frequent journeys for business or pleasure consuming all the Sabbath-day; all this in the church, unrebuked. Will the Spirit dwell in the church while these things are so? The facts answer.

More than half the people in this country never darken a church door. Out of 7,000,000 young men 5,000,000 never go to church. It is true that 75 per cent of our young men never enter a church, 95 per cent are not members, and 97 per cent do no work and carry no cross for Christ. God is judicially withholding his Spirit, and the church cries, "Oh, my leanness!"

The state must be purified. Two years ago the Christian citizens, with one accord, demanded the destruction of the octopus of the Louisiana Lottery. Congress responded with the anti-lottery law. For two years our Christian citizens have been calling for the closing of the gates of the World's Fair on Sabbath. And recently both houses of Congress adopted a measure looking to the closing of those gates on the Lord's day. Let the Christian people demand it, and the saloon will be banished by national law, and the United States postal service and railroad service will be prohibited on the Sabbath day. And let Christian people demand that Christ be honored as King of kings and the United States Constitution will be amended. What the people can do they ought to do.

It is unquestionably the church's first and great duty to rescue the perishing. But she is not bringing the people in contact with the Gospel. We have the leaven in one pan and the dough in another, and they are not brought in contact. There is a great barrier between the church and the people which must be removed. God is providentially calling upon Christian citizens to roll away the stone that lies in the way of the church's progress. What a help it would be to the church in reaching the masses, if every saloon in the land were closed forever. What an advantage the church would have if the railroad and the United States postal service were prohibited on Sabbath, and the Sunday newspaper, that abomination that is making a moral desolation, were outlawed! How the church's work would be aided, if a uniform national divorce law were enacted, arresting the destruction of the home by speedy and easy divorce! How the church's work would be facilitated if only God-fearing, upright and pure men were eligible to office and trust in our land! Who can calculate the advantage the church would receive if secret, oath-bound fraternities were disbanded by law, and the time and money consumed by them devoted to her aggressive work? And what untold blessings would come to the church if this nation would honor the King of kings and secure his promised blessing of the Spirit upon the whole people? And until Christian citizens are ready to unite and make this an accomplished fact, there will be spiritual dearth in the land, and the problem of the churchless masses will be unsolved.

The secularism and political atheism that have been incorporated in the fundamental law of this land are bearing their legitimate fruit. Our national Sabbath reformation seems farther off now than two years ago. Prohibition, instead of marching to victory, is suffering unexpected and humiliating defeat. Why is this? Our nation has ignored the crown rights and royal prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ, and he is ignoring us. The armies of Israel were smitten before the men of Ai, because sin was in the camp. The Achan must be put away before God will return and give them the victory. The army of Prohibition and Sabbath Observance in our land is being defeated ingloriously. The Achan is political atheism. Until that is put away we may expect to be put to the worse by the men from the Ai of intemperance and Sabbath desecration. The Head of the church will prosper evangelistic work in China, Japan, India, any heathen country, without a national recognition of the King of kings. But in a Christian nation, like ours, where the majority of the citizens are in the enjoyment of the light, the Spirit will not be given in great measure to efforts in behalf of the churchless masses without a public recognition of the authority and law of Christ, the King of nations. This is a necessary prelude to the bringing of the masses into the churches.

TWENTY-FOUR MEN WANTED IN INDIA.

BOMBAY, India, July 22, 1892.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—One man is urgently needed in my office as an assistant: able in correspondence, careful in accounts, spiritual and zealous in mission work.

One man for reform work, prohibition, anti opium, anti-secrecy, anti-worldliness. (See Jer. 1: 7-10.)

Two men for mission work among the Jews. This is an important Eastern center. God wants the Gospel given to his ancient people.

Three men for city mission work, among all classes. (Read Acts 20: 20, 21, 31.)

Three men for the Romanists in Western India. In Bombay 92 per cent of the professed Christians are Romanists—in all India 66 per cent. There is a great awakening among them, especially on account of internal strife in that so-called united church.

Four men greatly needed for colporteur-evangelists. Going from house to house and station to station, they can preach to many, sell many books, and point many to Jesus. We now have three men; but what are they in all India?

It is a blessed work. (The above work is chiefly among the English and the educated natives. They could also learn vernacular work.)

Ten men are called for by interior native work, where aggressive advance is being made. It is chiefly on self-supporting methods. Some who will gladly "work with their own hands" as did Paul, will be specially acceptable in these calls.

For qualifications we refer to Acts 6. For methods, to Acts 13 and 1 Thess. 2. For further information write to the editor of this paper; also to me. Write freely and fully, stating your case clearly.

Our mission is independent. We have no promise of support other than God's promises. We live humbly, as plain working men. We look for thorough soul experience, leading to a fruitful life of separation from all worldliness, and a consecration to God's work of saving souls.

While we promise no support or employment, yet it is a plain fact that successful workers are in great demand here. Humble, holy, happy men, ready to suffer for Jesus, content with food and raiment (and not stylish therein), zealous, persistent, wise and spiritual workers—such are wanted greatly. If sent of God, he will provide them work and bread.

Listen to God's call. Be not a Jonah or a Demas. Jesus is going out to seek and save the lost; will you go with him? Will you gladly "suffer with him that you may also reign with him?" Remember, "The King's business requireth haste."

LITERATURE.

THE SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES

usher in the autumn with very much to interest their patrons, both in letter-press and illustration.

The Missionary Review of the World, as usual, is replete with interesting intelligence and suggestions. Hapgood (Great Streets of the World series); French Art—Classical Painting, with reproductions of works of French painters, by W. C. The receipt of the Herald of Health, edited and published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, at 46 East 21st street, New York City, impels us to acknowledge its superior merits as a hygienic instructor. Its prevailing spirit is common sense touching everyday life and diseases, but more particularly the common sense methods of avoiding disease by living aright in the proper exercise of all our God-given functions. The current number is no exception to the general good character of its teachings. Debit and Credit in the Economy of the Nervous System; the Editor's Notes Concerning Health; the Hygienic Treatment of Diabetes; the Preparation of Milk for Babes from Cows' Milk; the Perfect Man, and Of Interest to Women, are worth more than a year's subscription ($1.00) to any thoughtful family.

St. Nicholas comes to the front regularly and with considerable eclat. The opening article, A King Without a Throne, by Tudor Jenks, is capital reading, even without the beautiful illustrations that accompany it. Tom Paulding, by Brander Matthews, Two Girls and a Boy, by Lieut. Flecher, and When I Was Your Age, by Laura E. Richards, are continued. Sir William Wetherell's Well, by Celia Thaxter; The Walking-Beam Boy, by L. E. Stoffel; The Greatest Natural Bridge, by Charles F. Lummis; An Incident at Mowbray's, by D. B. Waggener; A Curious Community; A Kitten by Post; Nan's Collecting; A Troublesome Model, and several others in prose and verse, will find delighted readers. A very good number. New York: The Century Co.

The September number of the Cottage Hearth is full of good things, and among them we notice a readable story by Margaret Sidney, the scene being laid in Nantucket—one of the quaintest old places in America. The fourth and last of the series of travel sketches in the heart of England is given us by a Bohemian. As a general thing but little is known of the life our American fishermen lead, and the account Alfred F. Coulter gives of a Trip to the Georges will therefore be of great interest. The regular departments are filled with timely hints, and Edith Robinson in "Home Dressmaking" tells mothers what the latest things are and how to make them. The September number is excellently illustrated. W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston, Mass.

If the manuscript of John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" is still in existence, and can be produced at the World's Fair, it will be, certainly, a matter of no little interest. Mrs. J. W. Patton, of Springfield, Ill., believes the manuscript to be now in possession of a family named Bates, living in Southern Illinois. It is said to have descended, as an heirloom in the family, from Bunyan's widow, to whom after his death the manuscript had been returned by the printers of the book. The unearthing of relics for exhibition at the World's Fair will probably become quite common; in some instances, no doubt,—and we could wish it might be so in the present case,—with supporting testimony that may be trusted.—Exchange.

Historia, the new illustrated monthly, and one of which Chicago may be proud, begins its second half-year with the current number, improved in appearance, and sustaining its good reputation. How Decatur Destroyed the Frigate Philadelphia; Balboa's Discovery of the Pacific Ocean; Adventures of a Young Northman; Hector and Andromache; A Well-Planned Rescue, and a continuation of Fighting the Mexicans, will appeal to the interest of every boy-lover of real adventure. The Historia Company, Chamber of Commerce Building, City.

IN BRIEF.

It is affirmed that talking under water by telephone is the remarkable discovery of a Frenchman. He claims that he will be able to talk from Paris to New York as readily as between land points.

An English naval officer has noticed that barbed wire has played the part of a peace-maker in Uruguay. It has tended to suppress revolutions by making it difficult to march troops across the country where it is used for fencing.

In the Impartial Intelligencer, London, of March 7, 1649, appeared the first regular advertisement of which anything is known. It was inserted by a Suffolk gentleman for the return of two of his horses which had been stolen.

Lieuwenback has computed that 10,000 threads of the web of a full-grown spider are not larger than a single hair of a man's beard. He calculates that when young spiders begin to spin, 400 of their threads are not larger than one from a full sized insect. If this be a fact, 4,000,000 webs of a young spider are not as large as a single hair from a man's face—Harper's Young People.

A married woman, handling her own money, and doing business for herself, had better use her own name instead of her husband's. For example:—Mrs. Brown should sign: "Mary J. Brown," and not "Mrs. Samuel W. Brown." But whether she uses her own name or not, she ought to choose the one that she proposes to use in business, and stick to it. If "Mary J. Brown" is selected, then it should be so written, every time. If written variously, as "Mary J. Brown," "M. J. Brown," "Mary Brown," or "Mrs. Samuel Brown," much annoyance and confusion are likely to result.

Probably the most costly railroad station in the world will be the Waverly station, which is the Edinburgh terminus of the North British company, for in the company's negotiations with the municipal authorities, it was stated that the cost of the immediate approaches, station, etc., would be at least a million pounds sterling. The finest station in the world at present is that of the Indian Peninsular railroad in Bombay, which cost in our money $1,500,000, and took ten years to build. The finest in Europe is said to be the new central station at Frankfort-on-the-Main, in Saxony. Owing to the cost of the substructures some of the London stations have been very expensive, that at Cannon street costing $1,200,000 and the Charing Cross station $800,000. There is a new and very large station at Birmingham, England, that cost $1,250,000.—Journal.

Some noteworthy photographs of flying bullets were exhibited by Mr. C. V. Boys at the last Royal Society conversation. The pictures were produced by sparks from a Leyden jar, which was discharged by the closing of an electric circuit on the passage of each bullet. A wave of compressed air was photographed in front of the bullet, and another in the rear, with a wake still further behind. In some pictures were shown fragments of glass and paper torn from sheets perforated by the bullets, the glass particles flying off to the rear as though from an explosion. One picture showed an aluminum bullet which had been fired by smokeless powder from a magazine rifle at a speed of 3,000 feet per second; and another was of a bullet which had been pierced with a number of holes, through which the light was seen, demonstrating that the photograph had been taken in one two-hundred-thousandth of a second.

An International Congress of Charities, Correction and Philanthropy will be held in Chicago during the first week of June, 1893, when the World's Fair will be in the zenith of its glory. Rutherford B. Hayes, ex-President of the United States, will preside. It appears that in addition to his vast industry in the poultry and farming lines, Mr. Hayes is devoting considerable time to the study of sociology. He thinks that paupers and criminals are not getting the attention they deserve from society. He denounces the prevailing system of operating penal institutions, reformatories and refuges on

MASONIC VAPORING.

The Voice of Masonry continues its hypocritical policy of advocating Freemasonry as "the handmaiden of Christianity," by printing, in its September issue, a fraternal oration delivered in 1841 before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Patriotism, personal cleanliness, morality and intellect are elements of civilized manhood, but they are no more Christianity than the "so mote it be" that responds to the Christless lodge-prayer. "Freemasonry," says Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, page 641, first column—"Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor a substitute for it." Hence every effort to convince the world that it has fellowship with Christ and his church is sheer hypocrisy.

The same issue of the Voice of Masonry also says: "The Christian Cynosure is very anxious to prove that Masonry is religious, but not cynosurely so. Masonry is religiously constituted—divinely and christianly so—and no perversion of the Cynosure can change that fact." So far as the "christianly" part of this statement is concerned, Mackey's Encyclopædia (above quoted) stamps it as false. As to the "divinely" claim, Mackey says it is "pure theism" (Lexicon, Art. "Religion"), a term that will apply as well to Baal-worship as to a belief in the Christian's God and Father. In this sense, Jezebel's 400 priests were as "religious" as Masonry.

The Voice of Masonry also makes this reference to the Ancient Arabic Order of the Mystic Shrine: "The New York Sunday Mercury and the Cynosure, of Chicago, are rejoicing over a professed exposure of the Mystic Shrine in their columns. If any credence can be given to what they say, the Shrine is a travesty of justice, with no real purpose but that of merriment, and in no sense Masonic." It is very evident from our exposition that the Shrine originally had a "purpose," and a very bloody one, in sitting in judgment upon its recalcitrant brethren, in the form and spirit of the Spanish Inquisition; and as all its members are Masons of the higher degrees, it must necessarily be "Masonic." As to "merriment," it is generally admitted that it is merry—and silly. On page 706 of the current issue of the Voice of Masonry, in a review of the proceedings of the Masonic "Grand Council" of California, Companion Edwin A. Sherman is made to speak of the Arabic Order as "that parasite of buffoonery known as the Mystic Shrine, which crowns the pillars of Wisdom, Strength and Beauty with the caps and bells of the harlequin, the clown and the fool!" And the Voice innocently asks: "Is the Shrine so bad as that?" Our exposition says it is.

LABOR AND THE FLAG.

The Cynosure goes to press amid the roar of trumpets, drums, tramping men and jostling crowds. September's first Monday is "labor day," so called; and that a possible 20,000 men may march, ten times the number are idle. To the tens of thousands spent in the actual parade, hundreds of thousands are lost in wages.

A real labor day we thank God for,—a labor-union day gives no glory to him, nor any real benefit to men. He has given labor its days: one for its rest, six for its struggle with opportunity or necessity. God's way is best for man. But there is little satisfaction in tramping for hours after bellowing bands, and dancing till night, with stump speeches and beer for punctuation. The Cynosure for once is with the majority,—on the side of the 200,000 laid off, rather than for the 20,000 secret trade unions who march.

We have a suggestion or two for the majority.

1. Let us insist that the Sabbath is true labor day. Preparations for Monday's parade were largely made on God's day. We saw one banner calling for Sunday rest,—and that was from a retail clothing house and not from a labor union. The business world will be influenced a hundred to one by churches filled with worshipping working men rather than by streets blocked by tramping labor unions.

Let us insist that the American flag—God save its every stripe and star!—is honored only when our citizens maintain and cherish our heaven-sent institutions; but every body of men who in peace are secretly sworn from their fellows are trailing that flag in the dust by their practice of despotism in their lodges. Three lodges of machinists were voted out of the parade Sunday because it was understood that they objected to review by employers, capitalists and city officials. There was much talk of their trailing the flag in the dust, and buncombe spouters made much capital by threatening violence upon them. These same lodges were in the parade Monday morning with bands and banners, and inscriptions of loyalty to the flag and city officials. But let us show these men, our neighbors, that we honor the flag when we honor the American principles it stands for and protects; and that ever destructive of those principles are the ridiculous and flatulent titles, the caste spirit, the despotism and the secret oaths of the lodge.

God save our men of toil and make his day theirs.

THE "VOICE" AND THE LABOR UNIONS.

The recent strikes in Pennsylvania, New York, Idaho and Tennessee, resulting in much destruction of property, great losses both to labor and capital, and such anarchy and crime as necessitated the calling out of the militia in all these States, have arrested the attention of the entire American press, and subjected us to much adverse criticism by the papers of Great Britain.

With the exception of some publications that represent the labor organizations, there is, with one consent, a denunciation of mob violence and a united demand that not only shall the rights of property be respected, but that every man shall be privileged to sell his labor wherever he can receive the best remuneration for it.

But with a singular obtuseness (it would seem) these papers overlook the most important factor in the terrible series of crimes—the influence of the secret labor unions. The common thought seems to be that these unions are, both in purpose and methods, most desirable institutions, and that it is only their excesses that are to be abated.

Among the able editorials on this subject, we take the following from the Voice: "We want to see three things: 1. Every man participating in violence punished according to law. 2. Every non-union man, if necessary, protected by the entire militia of the State. 3. The unions unsuccessful in their efforts to maintain their organization and to defeat the man who has tried to break it down."

This reminds us of the recent discourse of Rev. Dr. Rainsford, in favor of Christianizing the saloon. He failed to see that the two things are morally incompatible. There are certain things that can never be brought into harmony with moral purity and a due regard for public and private interests. The liquor traffic is one, and the secret trades-unions another. Whatever may be their claim—whatever may be the exact wording of their covenant, they practically inculcate a disregard for the rights of non-union men, and an allegiance to "the order," that is paramount to their obligations to the civil law.

By their fruits we know them. The history of the last fifty years has shown that, both in Europe and America, their oaths of secrecy and obedience to the lodge power have led them not only to engage in numberless strikes, but, almost invariably, in acts of violence and crime.

A strike that has resulted from the "ordering out" of one of these unions, and that was attended with no destruction of property, and with a due respect for the rights of non-union men, would be as hard to find as a saloon in which is no drunkenness or other immorality. Some things can be reformed only by being destroyed, and among these are all such organizations as are based on secrecy and servile obedience.

I think we are told that the leaders in these unions deprecated violence, and that they used their influence against it. But a similar plea can be made for the saloon-keeper. He does not want his customers to become dead drunk; he deprecates delirium tremens, and is shocked at suicide and wife-murder. It would be far more in harmony with his interests if the dram-drinker should be moderate in his debaucheries. He would last longer, and be a more profitable customer. Do not the brewers, distillers and liquor-dealers pass resolutions in favor of temperance? Are they not ready to make oath that they are opposed to drunkenness and crime?

It is vain to hope for good fruit from a tree that has always borne evil fruit. When we have reformed the theater and made it a promoter of Christian morality; when we have made lotteries, gambling-halls and saloons to minister to purity and truth; then we may expect that these oath-bound, secret trades-unions will be consistent with the universal prevalence of justice and good government.

ity, which he illustrated with a chart. When speaking of the altar of Cain, he showed clearly that the lodge-worship of to-day is Cain-worship; and he added that none of those present engaging in such worship knowingly could call themselves Christians, or words to this effect. I scarcely need add that this created what the newspapers call a "sensation."

Bro. Marvin took the position that all organizations outside the Christian church, such as the W. C. T. U., whose object was the advancement of some specific line of truth, were also sinful. He believed it is the church's duty to be right, and teach right, on all lines. If it did as it should there would be no occasion for such organizations. The question arises, What is the church? Is it composed of those who meet in certain buildings set apart for God's worship, and there engage in so-called religious, or true religious worship? I believe Christ has but one church in the world, and those who worship him in spirit and in truth are in this church. They will not forget the assembling of themselves together for public worship and obedience to his command in the ordinances of his house.

It is a sad thing to say, but a generally recognized fact, that many of the so-called churches of Christ are merely play-houses of the devil, dead or barren of fruit. Christians should assemble themselves together to oppose wrong and advance right. In thus doing they will be approved of God. We were sorry Bro. Marvin took this [what seems to many] extreme view.

Father returned on Saturday evening, rejoicing in Him who had been leading on to victory, and laden with the rich experience of the recent past. His Canada letter, for some reason, seems not to have reached the Cynosure office.

Bro. Pratt and friends at Worcester showed no signs of getting weary in well-doing. After a night's sleep on the "mighty deep," I awoke as westeamed under the Brooklyn bridge and soon found myself amid the surging masses on Broadway, New York. Crossing to Brooklyn, I spent a few hours calling on friends, and then took the B. & O. "blue line" for home. Our train made the run in five hours.

Bro. Milton Ford, whom many will remember as very helpful in securing our home here, I find very sick. The doctors think he cannot remain with us long. He has not found it necessary to join a lodge to get care in sickness. I am to have the privilege of watching with him to-night. Rejoicing in the goodness of him who is my Redeemer and King, I remain yours for the conflict,

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM FIELD SECRETARY, PUBLISHER AND TREASURER.

It is a pleasure to answer the inquiries which have been received as to the position of the Prohibition nominees for President and Vice President on the secrecy question. Neither of them are Freemasons, and the Prohibition party could not have a more thoroughly free, independent, and manly American for a leader, than Hon. John Bidwell, of California.

I was in Detroit when the father of the Iron Hall secret association lived when he added this lodge to the host of similar ones, and which now has an almost countless number of victims.

The following extracts from Detroit papers are interesting, and ought to serve as a warning. Said a prominent member:

"So far as the secrets of the order are concerned, they don't amount to anything except to serve the purpose of a screen for covering up d—rascality."

Is not that true of all secret societies?

Another said: "If the law has no penalty for the supreme rascals to pay, how long will it be, after the corpse of the Iron Hall has been put out of sight, before the 'good' Somerby will be an 'exalted exemplar,' or some other magnificent thing, and be working another 'skin game,' babbling of his own goodness and high moral character, and prating of the virtue and grandeur of the new system of giving everybody a $1,000 and a chromo for $250?"

Somerby was "Supreme Justice" of the Iron Hall, and had had his salary raised from $1,000, when he started the order, to $20,000, at the time of its collapse. That he had had training in Odd-fellowship and Freemasonry is evident from the following statement of Insurance Commissioner Merrill of Massachusetts: "He is talking now," he said, "just as he did four years ago when he was here. He was always talking about the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man and his order."

Exposures, however, have little influence in stopping such organizations; for during this very week, when excitement was highest over the Iron Hall matters, a new kind of secret lodge was established in Detroit. The only remedy is the proclamation of the Word of God, accompanied by the power of God,—the Holy Spirit. Let us not cease to pray for the N. C. A. lecturers, that they may be full of the Holy Ghost.

My conference with Bro. J. P. Stoddard was as profitable to the cause, I hope, as it was enjoyable to each of us. He gave twenty-nine lectures in Canada in about as many days; and if the Ontario anti-secretists do not take the present opportunity to keep the standard raised, they will doubtless miss the opportunity of their generation.

An agent of unusual ability can be had for that field. The anti-secretists have numbers and money. The field is white for the harvest; the door has been opened. Will the opportunity be improved?

Have you read the short report, in the last Cynosure, of the Oregon Convention at Canby? Did you realize what is indicated for the Pacific coast when four hundred signed the Constitution of the Association, and thirty-eight of them ministers? The last session of the convention should have been a praise meeting. Bro. Mathews says: "It was the most harmonious and religious meeting I ever attended." Rev. M. H. Nichols is the Oregon agent, and is now working in the vicinity of Newberg, Yam Hill Co., Oregon.

In Minnesota Rev. W. Fenton has been "holding the fort," as well as carrying the Gospel of separation to the churches in different places. We expect a State convention this year in Minnesota, Dakota and Wisconsin, as the result of his labors. Bro. Paden is stirring up the Kansas friends. He has spoken in Dennison and other places, and will doubtless aid in the Nebraska convention at Wahoo, and at Tabor, Iowa, in the near future.

Bro. Gladwin, of Bombay, India, writes for another lot of our books. He has paid for over $30 worth at retail rates since the 3,000 pamphlets were sent for free distribution among Christian workers. He writes: "Let us pray that these may do a vast amount of good in fighting the civilized heathenism of secret societies, which is in such a direct succession from the ancient heathenism of Asia."

I was obliged to stay at a hotel over night a few weeks ago in a little village where there were no saloons; but at this hotel I heard blasphemy of the coarsest type so frequently that staying there was a burden. There is about one minister to every hundred inhabitants. The hotel-keeper, though not a Christian, was a genial, pleasant man. He was a member of the Good Templar Lodge of the place, along with at least two of the ministers, Rev. Messrs. Swain and Carlton.

While not in favor of Freemasonry, neither of these ministers profess to see any objection to their entering a religious brotherhood, such as that of the Good Templars, with this hotel manager, who, though not a Christian, is eligible to the office of chaplain.

I have been a Good Templar, and was chaplain before I was a Christian, but have never been to the lodge since my conversion.

I have thought about the religious rites of this secret order, and I can not but believe that they are blasphemous in the sight of God. I would not say that the profanity in the village was directly caused by the profane religious practices of these "brothers" and "sisters" in their secret Temple.

When I joined the Good Templars, I had to profess my faith in God. "Do you believe in God?" must be answered in the affirmative. It makes no difference what kind of a god, so that you are not an atheist. Membership is not based upon Christian character, nor is faith in the Triune God required. Hence our hotel friend could accept the faith of the order.

I have known a very profane man to be the regularly elected chaplain in a Good Templar lodge. He was in good standing, and hence eligible to any office to which he might be chosen. As long as it is not Jesus Christ, in whom faith is professed at the time of joining, it is not to be wondered at, perhaps, that a mere worldlyling should be chosen chaplain of an ordinary lodge, that had not the advantage of two ministers as members to choose from.

When I joined the Good Templars, the name of Christ did not appear in the ritual. The prayers, like the creed at the door, were deistical.

But criticism was finally quieted by injecting into one or two prayers the name of Christ; but the creed at the door was not changed, for if it had been, only professed Christians would have gone into the lodge.

Can anyone tell us why it is that a secret society composed of all kinds of men as to character requires its initiates to profess a religious faith? Why have a creed prayer and funeral services? Can anyone explain why these two Christian ministers can have nothing to do with Freemasonry and yet see no evil in one of her germane children?

Years ago this secret temperance society got into the Moody church of this city. Mr. Moody said publicly in Farwell Hall: "I was partaker of their sin because I let them get into the church; but they were cleaned out, and they never came back. This idea of promoting temperance by yoking oneself up in that way with ungodly men is abominable." W. I. PHILLIPS.

WE MUST GO TO THE CHURCHES.

THE WORK ALLOTTED TO THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

On Saturday, Aug. 27, I began, with Bro. A. W. Parry, pastor of the Free Methodist church, a visitation of the twenty or more Protestant ministers of Aurora, Ill. Many were absent from the city, but we were kindly received by Rev. Mr. Clendenning, of the large Methodist church on Fox street, who, although very conservative on the subject of secret societies, is free to say that he belongs to none. He lately took exception to the secret methods of combatting the Romish church used by the American Protestant Association. That order has unusual strength in Aurora, and has, because of its one principle of Romish proscription, attracted to its fold some excellent men who are by conviction opposed to secret lodge operations. Mr. Clendenning offended members of the order, it is said, by urging that Romanism should be fought openly and not in the darkness of secretism.

Pastor Brooks, of the West Side Baptist church, had written of his desire for a conversation on the particular phase of the lodge question which I am taking to the churches, and also of his wish to hear an address upon it.

Pastors Alberding, of the Evangelical Association congregation, and Mulfinger, of the German M. E. church, greeted us cordially and with true sympathy. Sabbath evening I spoke in the fine church of the latter, Pastor Alberding agreeing to dismiss his congregation so that all might attend. In the M. E. congregation are some prominent members who have renounced secretism. It was a very attentive meeting.

The same morning Bro. Parry introduced me to his Free Methodist congregation, an earnest and responsive people. Sickness and camp meetings reduced the number, but God was with us and the truth was blessed. In the evening Bro. Parry was cheered by the reclamation of a back-slidden convert of former years, who came forward with his glad wife after sermon.

The pastors of the West Side Methodist, the Presbyterian, Lutheran, Evangelical, African M. E., and also a few members of their congregations, were visited. The general conviction of all was against the orders, but a few were guarded in expression. Some remembered with satisfaction the first convention which opened our present movement, in the fall of 1867. We were satisfied that if the Christian people of Aurora, who are such not in name alone, were united and prayerful, that a mighty influence which the lodges could not withstand would be exerted against secretism in that city.

On Tuesday several pastors were visited in Batavia, and preparations for future addresses were made. It was reported to me that the Baptist pastor, who was formerly connected with the Free Methodist church in New York, has lately joined the Odd-fellows, in order to enlarge his influence. I trust the information is incorrect, since it would indicate inexcusable weakness and bad judgment, and would cause division in his home, where every successful pastor must be strong.

Two later days of the week were spent among the pastors of Chicago; and on Sabbath, the 4th inst., large congregations of Swedes, in their Oak street hall, and in the Free Mission church on Market and Whiting streets, eagerly listened to some facts and arguments showing that our churches and government are put in jeopardy by the false altars of the lodge. A fine-looking people worship in the well-appointed hall on Oak street. The Bladet is published in the same building, and people, pulpit and paper are one on the question of the secret system. This appointment I filled at the request of Bro. Fenton, of St. Paul, who is spending a little time in Chicago and was expecting to speak, until sudden illness obliged him to keep his room.

In the evening rain threatened for a time to seriously interfere with the attendance, but the great Mission church, which seats about the same number as the Moody church a few blocks away, opened to a good congregation of some 700, and Pastor Bjork welcomed the speaker. I pray that the discourse may be of service to him and his interesting people in uniting them with more consecration and faith about the true altar where they worship the Father and the Son.

Other Chicago pulpits will welcome a discourse on the destructive effect of lodge-worship, and I am invited to several more church conferences. So many of these are now occurring that a dozen men might be busy among them. But the means must be provided by our earnest friends for this great work, since little can be expected, or should be asked, from ministers on expense away from home. If we intend to carry our reform to the churches as such, we must push along this line. Dear reader of the Cynosure, you must pray for and help this work.

FROM THE WESTERN DISTRICT—NEBRASKA CONVENTION.

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 30, 1892.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I spent yesterday here talking up our State convention with pastors and others. Most are agreed that Wahoo is the place. Rev. E. B. Graham will speak for us. Rev. J. W. Morton, of North Loup, and Bro. W. C. Paden have promised to assist. The World, Herald and other papers here promise to announce the convention and publish proceedings. I expect to lay the matter this week before the Swedish Lutherans at their conference at Funk, and before the United Presbyterians at their Synod at Kearney, and will be able to announce definitely the time and place next week. The prospect is constantly brightening for a good Nebraska convention.

I am now en route to address a W. C. T. U. convention in Thayer county, Neb., led by those good workers in our cause, Brother and Sister Park.

Last Sabbath I preached in the U. P. church at Coin, Iowa, where there are some good friends of the cause, among whom I expect to canvass for material aid in the near future.

Kansas Presbytery of the Covenant church will meet at Winchester on Tuesday, Oct. 4, at 7:30 P. M.

Bro. Paden and I expect to hold a local convention at Tabor, Ia., and address meetings in Southwestern Iowa and Northwestern Missouri early in October.

M. A. GAULT.

THE HOME.

THE MOTHER'S PRAYER.

Starting forth on life's rough way,
 Father, guide them;
 O, we know not what of harm
 May betide them;
 'Neath the shadow of Thy wing,
 Father, hide them;
 Walking, sleeping, Lord, we pray,
 Go beside them.

When in prayer we cry to Thee,
 Do Thou hear them;
 From the stains of sin and shame
 Do Thou clear them;
 'Mid the quicksands and the rocks
 Do Thou steer them;
 In temptation, trial, grief,
 Be Thou near them.

Unto Thee we give them up;
 Lord, receive them;
 In the world, we know, must be Much to grieve them—
 Many striving, oft and strong,
 To deceive them.
 Trustful, in Thy hands of love
 We must leave them.

—William Cullen Bryant.

THE MORNING COMETH.

[The following paragraphs are the brilliant peroration of Wm. Morley Punshon's lecture on John Bunyan. None who ever heard that eloquent Englishman will forget him, especially if it was their good fortune to have caught this apostrophe to the triumphs of Christianity as it fell from the lips of the matchless orator.]

Wearily the years have passed, I know: wearily to the pale watcher on the hill who has been so long gazing for the daybreak: wearily to the anxious multitudes who have been waiting for his tidings below. Often has the cry gone up through the darkness, "Watcher, what of the night?" and often has the disappointing answer come, "It is night still; here the stars are clear above me, but they shine afar, and yonder the clouds lower heavily and the sad night winds blow." But the time shall come, and perhaps sooner than we look for it, when the countenance of that pale watcher shall gather into intenser expectancy, and when the challenge shall be given, with the hopefulness of a nearer vision, "Watcher, what of the night?" and the answer will come, "The darkness is not so dense as it was; there are faint streaks on the horizon's verge; mist is in the valleys, but there is a radiance on the distant hill. It comes nearer—that promise of the day. The clouds roll rapidly away, and they are fringed with amber and gold. It is, it is the blest sunlight that I feel around me—MORNING.

IT IS MORNING!

And in the light of that morning, thousands of earnest eyes flash with renewed brightness, for they have longed for the coming of the day. And, in the light of that morning, things that nestle in dust and darkness cower and flee away. Morning for the toilworn artisan! for oppression and avarice, and gaunt famine, and poverty are gone, and there is social night no more. Morning for the meek-eyed student! for doubt has fled, and sophistry is silenced, and the clouds of error are lifted from the fair face of Truth for aye, and there is intellectual light forever more. Morning for the lover of man! for wrongs are redressed, and contradictions harmonized, and problems solved, and men summer in perpetual brotherhood, and there is moral night no more. Morning for the lover of God! for the last infidel voice is hushed, and the last cruelty of superstition perpetrated, and the last sinner lays his weapons down and Christ the crucified becomes Christ the crowned.

Morning! Hark how the earth rejoices in it, and its many minstrels challenge the harpers of the sky—"Sing with us, ye heavens! The morning cometh, the darkness is past, the shadows flee away, the true light shineth now."

Morning! Hark how the sympathetic heavens reply, "Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw herself, for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended."

IT IS MORNING!

The planet now doth like a garment wear the beauty of the morning. And the light climbeth onward and upward, for there is a sacred noon beyond. That noon is HEAVEN.

"AND THERE SHALL BE NO NIGHT THERE."

GLADSTONE'S YOUTH.

No man in the world has been more talked about recently than William Ewart Gladstone. Because of what he is, and what he has achieved, it is worth while to look into his earlier life—to see how he bore himself as a young man, and in that period of life when his character was being formed.

Going back seventy-one years, when Gladstone was a boy of eleven, we learn that he went up to the famous Eton school from a home whose tone and influence were of this sort:

"There was the father's masterful will and keen perception, the sweetness and piety of the mother, wealth with all its substantial advantages and few of its mischiefs, a strong sense of the value of money, a rigid avoidance of extravagance and excess; everywhere a strenuous purpose in life, constant employment, and concentrated ambition."

William Gladstone was the third son, and when he went up to school he was known as "the prettiest little boy that ever went to Eton."

He came to be more than that. "At Eton," said Bishop Walter Hamilton, "I was a thoroughly idle boy; but I was saved from some worse things by getting to know Gladstone." Another schoolfellow "remembers seeing William Gladstone turn his glass upside down and decline to drink a coarse toast" at a school dinner. When he protected some pigs from torture and was bantered by his schoolfellows, he offered to write his reply "in good round hand upon their faces." Devoted to duty, fearless, pure-minded, and humane, he was a boy that other boys respected.

His most intimate friend was Arthur Hallam, whose beautiful life and early death furnished the theme of "Tennyson's 'In Memoriam.'" Boys who afterward became Sir George Lewis, Bishop Selwyn, the Duke of Devonshire, who has just died, the historian Kinglake, Lord Elgin, Earl Canning, and Mr. Milnes Gaskell, felt the impress of his character. The latter, writing to his mother in 1826, says: "I was out all yesterday evening with Gladstone, who is one of the cleverest and most sensible people I ever met with"—odd praise for a boy of seventeen.

Gladstone was at his best in the debates of the school literary society, and in the editorship of the Eton Miscellany. In the former he made his maiden speech on behalf of the education of the poor.

The impression he made at school may be indicated by Hallam's bright forecast of his future:

"Whatever may be our lot, I am confident that he is a bud that will bloom with a richer fragrance than almost any whose early promise I have witnessed."

Gladstone entered Christ Church, Oxford, in October, 1828. "The blameless schoolboy," says Mr. Russell, one of his biographers, "became a blameless undergraduate; diligent, sober, regular alike in study and devotion, giving his whole energies to the duties of the place, and quietly abiding in the religious faith in which he had been trained." Bishop Charles Wordsworth says that no man of his standing read his Bible more or knew it better. Cardinal Manning, who there began a lifelong friendship, remembered him walking to church with his "Bible and prayer-book tucked under his arm." It is not surprising that he stood for straight and manly conduct.

His chosen associates were steady and industrious men. Some who afterward became famous were members of an essay society called after him, the W. E. G. In the Oxford Debating Union he made a brilliant record as a speaker. He had already shown an immense command of language. When asked in later life whether he had ever felt nervous in public speaking, he said: "In opening a subject, often; in reply, never." All his work was thorough and won for him classical and mathematical honors. He read every morning for four hours, then took a constitutional walk or rowed on the river, and always read for two or three hours before bedtime.

That he had a brilliant career before him was the confirmed judgment of his friends. Bishop Wordsworth says that one of his speeches at the union made him feel no less sure than of his own existence "that Gladstone, our then Christ Church undergraduate, would one day rise to be prime minister of England."

This confident assurance would not have been fulfilled had he followed the bent of his own mind. Devout, conscientious, and keenly anxious to use his powers for God's glory and the service of men, he wanted to enter upon the work of the ministry. But his father's firm objections prevented, and after six months in Italy, he made a first venture in the field of politics.

Few of us have what Gladstone had at twenty-two: "A physical constitution of unequalled vigor, the prospect of ample fortune, great and varied knowledge, a natural tendency to political theorization," and a tongue to let it all loose with. But none of these things always insures success. Not every physical constitution is kept intact until eighty; ample fortune has been known to stifle energy; knowledge may run to seed; and a ready tongue is not always a blessing. The value of Gladstone's example for us lies in the fact that he has made a good use of the gifts with which he was endowed. This is all that any one can do. His life has been one of firm faith, high ambition, strict method, and strenuous effort.

"The paramount factor of Mr. Gladstone's nature is his religiousness," says his latest biographer. His religion is "an intensely vivid and energetic principle, passionate on its emotional side, definite in its theory, imperious in its demands, practical, visible, and tangible in its effects. It runs like a silver strand through the complex and variegated web of his long and chequered life." He is himself an evidence of Christianity, and a proof that as a spring of human action it is no spent force.—Young Men's Era.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

THE MINISTER'S DIVERSIONS.

"Pastor, who is that lady just passing, with a face like a hearse and the air of a self-made martyr."

"Oh, that is one of my leading members, Mrs. Archibald Chatterton."

"Is anything the matter with her?"

"Yes, something is always the matter."

"What is the matter now?"

"Fortunately I am able to enlighten you this time. I learned only yesterday that she was sadly 'out' with her pastor because he had not called to see a friend who was taken sick some days ago while on a visit at her house."

"Is this friend one of the members of your church?"

"Oh, no, she came from Montana."

"Did Mrs. Chatterton send you word of the sickness in her home?"

"Oh, no, she never does that."

"And does she expect you to know it?"

"Always."

"Does she expect the doctor to come without being notified?"

"Never."

"How does she expect you to know?"

"By special revelation."

"Are there other cases of sickness in your parish just now?"

"At the present time about thirty."

"Is your church membership large?"

"A few over nine hundred."

"You must make a good many calls in the course of a year."

"About fourteen hundred on the average."

"And there are still some other duties?"

"Two sermons a week."

"Anything else?"

"Two prayer meeting addresses a week."

"Is that all?"

"Not strictly."

"Would you object to giving me a little further insight?"

"Well, on Tuesday and Friday just passed, I had funerals among my own people, and on Wednesday I went nine miles into the country for a similar service."

"Was this also the funeral of one of your own people?"

"No, I never heard of the family before."

"They must have been very grateful for such service."
 "They skillfully concealed all signs of gratitude."
 "Well, perhaps they thought the money compensation all-sufficient."
 "I beg pardon, money compensation? I think I misunderstood you."
 "Did they not pay you handsomely for your services?"
 "If they had suggested dividing the expense of horse-hire with me, my gratitude would have burst all bounds."
 "You do not mean to say that they left you to pay your own expenses!"
 "I did not mean to say it lest it should seem mean to say it."
 "Tell me honestly, now, did you pay for the livery?"
 "I paid $4."
 "Did they not tell you they would send the money?"
 "They said nothing."
 "Except thanks."
 "Thanks?"
 "Yes, thanks, of course."
 "No word of thanks was spoken to me."
 "It is impossible. You cannot say that they did not thank you?"
 "That is the fact."
 "Do you mean to tell me that you paid out $4 and spent an afternoon in such service without a word of thanks and without compensation?"
 "There was compensation."
 "Ah, I thought so. What was it?"
 "I escaped two agents with Lives of Spurgeon and one man who was introducing a new stove polish."
 "Two agents with two Lives of Spurgeon in one day?"
 "It is a low average."
 "And the agent with stove polish wanted to see the man of the house?"
 "Yes, he was selling territory and wanted local agents."
 "And came to the minister?"
 "Yes, he was a Baptist; he was selling Baptist stove polish and wanted only Baptist agents. So he wanted a Baptist minister to recommend some local agents."
 "How did you learn all this? I thought you escaped him."
 "Only for the time. I merely had a reprieve. He returned next day."
 "And the agents for Spurgeon's Lives—did they return?"
 "One of them. The other was providentially run over by an ice-cart and taken to the hospital. He sends word that he hopes to see me next week."
 "Did the other agent sell you a Life of Spurgeon?"
 "No, I was already supplied."
 "What did he say to that?"
 "He said if I would give him the names of seventy-five or a hundred of my leading members, it would do as well."
 "And you gave him such a list?"
 "No, I was just going to a wedding and compromised by giving him the name of Mrs. Archibald Chatterton."
 "Have you given her name to other agents for Spurgeon's Life?"
 "To thirteen."
 "And to the stove polish agents as well?"
 "I give her name to every agent who comes; she once told me she was extremely fond of company; I rather shrink from it myself."
 "By the way, I hear that your wife is not well."
 "She has been sick for eighteen months."
 "Is she quite sick?"
 "She has been very sick much of the time."
 "Does Mrs. Archibald Chatterton often call?"
 "She has never called, though she sent her servant to inquire just before they sailed for Europe, last summer."
 "Is Mrs. Chatterton a very busy woman?"
 "Very."
 "Are her family cares heavy?"
 "She has three servants; no children."
 "I had almost forgotten her sick friend; is she likely to recover?"
 "I saw her out driving, yesterday."
 "Oh! Then she is able to sit up; what is the nature of her sickness?"

"Said to be indigestion caused by a late supper of lobster salad."
 "Oh!"—One Who Has Suffered, in Examiner.

WHICH WAS RIGHT?

A small, clear brook set out one day
 To search for the dark blue sea;
 It babbled and sparkled; it rippled and sang,
 And cried, "Just look at me;
 For I have started, dear neighbors and friends,
 To find my father, the Sea!"

"O dear little brook!" urged the mossy bank,
 As the stream slipped singing by,—
 "I beg you most earnestly, give it up;
 If you'll wait, I will tell you why!"
 But the brook would not listen, and ran away
 Beneath the smiling sky.

"Oh, where are you going, you gurgling brook?"
 Asked a pollard-willow tree,
 Which leaned where the brook formed a limpid pool,
 Its tresses green to see,—
 "I'm going, dear madam," sang the brook,
 "To find my father, the Sea!"

"O dear, small brook!" cried its pollard friend,
 "Great danger will meet you this day;
 There's an awful thing which will swallow you up Before you go half the way!"
 "I don't believe it," rippled the brook,
 "I'm going, for all you say!"

And the brook and the pollard both were right,
 As you will presently see;
 For a great dark river hurried along,
 And swallowed the brook, and its merry song;
 And carried it off to the Sea!

TEMPERANCE.

"THE NEW DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE."

[From the Fourth of July Address of Jno. G. Woolley, at Prohibition Park, Staten Island, New York, 1892.]

This is a Christian country; its foundations were laid in the Gospel; the compact of the Mayflower was signed "for the advancement of the Christian faith, and for the glory of God;" our fathers braved the seas, the snow, the savages, seeking not freedom merely, but freedom to worship God; and from that beginning to this hour our history has been a lyric, epic, romance of liberty through Jesus Christ.

But if you come to analyze the fighting strength of the republic you will be shocked to find, as you will be to hear me say, that the Christian man, as such, cannot be counted on.

In the world's broad field of battle,
 In the bivouac of life,
 You will find the Christian soldier
 Represented by his wife.

The Christian citizen is in the fight, but not in that character, except as a contract chaplain at military posts, an honorary supernumerary in legislatures, a nurse or a sister of charity; the fighting Christian is in all camps indifferently, under all flags, faced both ways, the express type of political felo-de-se, but he is incognito, and after battles he appears in the record as "unknown dead" or simply "missing."

As to much of political action it is natural and right for Christian men to be divided, but as to some, division means stupidity or apathy or treachery; such is the problem of the drink traffic, which is indeed not a problem at all, but a fight or a flight. How do I explain the recent proposal for church saloons? I do not. I would as lief try to explain the Dismal Swamp; at such a thing one can only shudder; but on its premises, namely, the "final perseverance" of the saloon, and the "apostolic succession" of dram-sellers, I concede the logic of an "established church" of the immaculate doggery. I must not be counted among carpers at the church; on the contrary, I hope nothing for our cause except at her hands; the world has unlimited capacity of adjustment to the saloon, and will never abolish it; but we shall be more ready for to-morrow by taking a clear look at to-day, and if I seem to criticize the church it is because I love her much and suffer much at her reproach, and it would be disingenuous to deny that there is reproach upon her.

The liquor traffic is a political and commercial system, colossal, sagacious, rich, powerful, far beyond any personal entreaty or rebuke or social ostracism, and straight through the various phases of temperance reform has risen like a spring tide, and we have simply tried to disparage and discourage it by "taking a collection," and it has with cheerful alacrity dropped into the federal and municipal plate, yearly, some hundreds of millions dollars, each dollar marked "In God we trust." What delicious sarcasm! And the church has prayed over the wolfish, bloody, damnable offertory, and a government agent waits on every worm of the still and every brewer's spigot and stamps the packages "U. S."—US.

Beyond any question, the present effrontery and power of the saloon are due to license laws. At my old home a vine of bitter-sweet came up at the root of a fine young elm tree; it was a pretty, delicate, twining thing and I turned it so it might climb the tree; it did climb, in graceful, spiral rings, to the very top, and the tree was beautiful; the long tendrils of the vine hung down on every side: I pinched off the tender shoots as they multiplied so as to obstruct the path, and the more I did so, the stronger grew the trunk coils. I planted vines by all my young trees, it made them look so brave and lively; I thought how strange that nature had not planted vines and trees in pairs. I have seen "why" recently; my beautiful elm is a dead stalk with the vine embedded in its body, itself spiral now, conformed to the constricting cord of the beautiful Thug so the Christian republic, guileless, devoted trelis of the liquor traffic for so many years, stands all deformed and corkscrew-shaped to-day in the deadly spiral of commercial and political whisky rings; but alive, thank God! and still powerful, for her good right hand is free; the church is its palm, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, the Salvation Army and the Society for the Prevention of Crime are the fingers, and the Prohibition party the thumb; I see it reaching out for "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon."

It is not union of the church and state I advocate, but union of the church to save the state. It seems to me that from a slavish old ecclesiasticism we have swung over to a childish and impractical spiritism that sighs and prays, "Oh, Lord, make us right, or about right," "Thy kingdom come," gradually. We need to rig ratchets on our Sunday Christians to hold them up to the crank during the week.

The reproach and weakness of the church is can't—"can't elect," "can't enforce," "can't prevent;" the saloon-keeper is a man who can, and he does, and he will until Christian voters leave off their "t." In Minnesota it takes a brave bird to stand the winter; at my window one evening; when the mercury was falling rapidly and the fine snow flew like powdered glass, a blue-jay swung on the tree-top and shouted, "Hit-him-a-lick, hit-him-a-lick," and away down on the icy trunk a sap-sucker piped back, "Can't." Next morning the sap-sucker lay dead on the drift, but the jay swung in the dizzy top and shouted, "Hit-him-a-lick!" but of course the sap-sucker couldn't.

The church is overstocked with sap-suckers. Many of our Christian men are brave enough, but are waiting for light as to methods, not reflecting that power and light are so correlated that when you get one you have the other, as in the case of an electric motor; when the trolley is on the wire overhead, it goes and has light. You say you can't see? You are disconnected; reach up, and touch God and you will see because you go.

But the simple fact is that the average Christian voter, as such, has no defined status in politics; the convention does not regard him, for he does not regard himself; he is willing public conscience shall be shot provided the bullet be gold; he is agreed that public virtue be hanged if the rope be silken.

But the greatest movement of history is just commencing; the W. C. T. U., the Salvation Army, the Y. P. S. C. E., the S. P. V. are part of it. They are distinctly born of the church, which, criticise it as you may, is the sole hope, and not a forlorn hope either, of this government and this world.

Sheriff Cram, of Portland, Me., who with his deputies, Messrs. Sterling and Plummer, has secured the best enforcement of prohibitory law ever known in that city, is a candidate for reelection. He has been nominated by the Republicans, and the party Prohibitionists have placed his name upon their ticket.

Lessons taught us: God gives us clear assurance of an ever-living Saviour, and of immortal life. The power of the church is from the presence and power of the Holy Spirit. The presence of the Holy Spirit is shown by the fruits of the Spirit he works within Christians, and by the turning of many souls to the Lord. The church must expect to meet with difficulties both within and without. But God overrules these hindrances and changes them into helps. Wherever there is a faithful church ready to obey, devoted to their Lord, and open to receive the Holy Spirit, there is sure to be great outward success.—Rev. A. F. Schaeffler.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—The colored Foreign Mission Convention of the Baptists, organized in 1880 to forward the evangelization of Africa, will hold its Thirteenth Annual Session in the city of Savannah, Ga., on the 17th of September, 1892. This convention will be styled the "Convention of Baptist Missions," and will be the grandest meeting in the history of the colored Baptists of this country.—Exchange.

CHINESE MISSIONS.

—There are now eighteen missions of the American Missionary Association among the Chinese in California. Sixty-five joined the church during the last year, and about three hundred Christians are connected with the missions. Their offerings for Christian work for the first fiscal year amounted to $6,290 40. The other denominations, the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Baptist, and others, have a similar record; and it is an encouraging fact that the Gospel is making steady progress among the Chinese in California.

CHRISTIAN.

—If you know of any church that wants to employ at a living-salary a Sunday-school superintendent, teacher of Bible class, conductor of prayer-meeting, church sexton, treasurer, secretary, home evangelist and pastor, will you please put me in correspondence with that church?—F. W. Barry, Wytheville, Va., in Christian Standard.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Mr. S. Sherin, of St. Paul, for the past few years connected with the National Educational Association, has entered the work of the Western Seamen's Friend Society, and has undertaken the raising of $20,000 to build a Sailor's Floating Bethel Ship at Chicago. The Bethel will have an audience-room, reading-room, bath-rooms, and every convenience to minister to the wants of soul and body. There are about 100,000 sailors and dock men who make Chicago their headquarters, whose very vocation cuts them off from the privileges of church, home, or society, and it is the purpose of the Bethel Society to have pleasant headquarters where they will be welcomed by the chaplain and afforded Gospel privileges.

—The annual meeting of the American Board—national council for foreign missions—in Chicago, October 4 to 8. The triennial National Council, in Minneapolis, comes the following week, October 11. Not too early for ministers and others to plan for attendance at both meetings.

—The Minutes of the General Conference of Maine give the number of members in the 254 churches as 21,726; received during the year on confession, 728, total, 1,088; in Sunday-schools, 23,567; Christian Endeavor Societies, 163; members, 7,179; benevolent contributions, $71,006; legacies, $48,123; home expenditures, $223,000.

—In Louisiana a loss in church members of 107 is reported. This is due to the fact that the churches of the West Central Association failed to report. Last year they reported 331 members; this year none. This shows a gain for the churches of the Louisiana Association, which did report, of 224 members. The Minutes, however, report a gain in Sunday-school attendance of 226.

—The Mills meetings in San Francisco continue to be crowded. One evening the wigwam was filled with men, and the sermon was from the address of Moses on Choosing Life or Death. Other meetings were held in the same place and from thence they were to be transferred to the Pavilion, and then to the First Presbyterian and First Congregational churches. There is a very wide-spread interest.

EPISCOPALIAN.

—The Episcopal church is compiling a new hymn-book. Among the gems which are embraced within its covers is a hymn on apostolic succession, two verses of which are quoted by a denominational paper, viz.:

"His twelve apostles first he made
His ministers of grace;
And they their hands on others laid,
To fill in turn their place.

"So age by age, and year by year,
His grace is handed on;
And still the Holy Church is here,
Although her Lord is gone."

Doctors of divinity will differ from this sentiment.

LUTHERAN.

—The thirteenth annual convention of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Pittsburgh Synod will meet in Zion's Lutheran church, Indiana, Pa., Rev. Louis Hay, pastor, September 21-23d. Opening session Wednesday, 2:30 p. m. It is sincerely hoped that all societies will send delegates.

—Rev. W. A. Sadtler, the new missionary of the General Council in Chicago, Ill., has had the degree of Doctor of Philosophy conferred upon him by the University of New York.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The census bureau has issued a bulletin giving statistics of the M. E. church in the United States, which shows 102 annual conferences, not including ten or more in foreign countries. Connected with these conferences are 2,240,354 communicants. This includes both members and probationers. Of the 2,790 counties in the States and Territories the church is represented in all save 585. It has 25,861 organizations, with 22,844 church edifices, with a seating capacity of 6,302,708, and an aggregate valuation of $96,723,408. This valuation, which does not include parsonages and other church property, is the largest reported by any denomination thus far except the Roman Catholic.

—The African M E church has thirty-eight schools and colleges, with 134 teachers and over 4,000 students. Their graduates number 370. The school property is valued at over half a million dollars, and yet some people think Negroes are not capable of acquiring an education. They seem to desire it, at all events.

—The British conference has resolved that the heading of its class tickets shall be altered from "Wesleyan Methodist Society" to "Wesleyan Methodist Church," and that the ecclesiastical district gatherings shall henceforth be called, not "committees" or "meetings," but "synods."

—One-third the Protestant population of Canada are Methodists. There are 65,000 more Methodists than members of any other church.

—A cable message announces the death Aug. 26 in Jaffna, Ceylon, of Rev. William Ware Howland, for nearly fifty years missionary of the American Board on that island.

—At Asbury Park, N. J., in the recent Bible Conference, Bishop William Taylor, of Africa, was introduced, and for forty-five minutes spoke of the condition and needs of Africa's perishing millions, and explained what was being done in her work for their salvation. Dr. Munhall, the leader of the conference, then took the platform, and stated that, for one thousand dollars, Bishop Taylor would plant a station in Darkest Africa; and, inasmuch as the conference was interdenominational, he believed it would be for God's glory to give the Bishop the money, and tell him to plant the mission for the Seaside Bible Conference. In ten minutes, more than a thousand dollars were secured. It was wholly spontaneous.

REFORMED CHURCH.

—The Fifth General Council of the "Alliance of the Reformed Churches Throughout the World Holding the Presbyterian System," will meet at Toronto, Canada, September 21st, 1892, at 11 A. M., in St. James Square Presbyterian church, and will be opened with a sermon by the Rev. Wm. Caven, D. D., principal of Knox College. The chairman or convener of the committee of arrangements is the Rev. Dr. Caven, and the secretary, the Rev. Wm. Burns, both of whom may be addressed at Toronto, Canada. The general secretary of the Alliance, the Rev. George D. Matthews, D. D., will be in Toronto on and after August 24th.

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Synod of Pittsburgh met this year at Ridgeview Park. This is a summer resort and camp-meeting ground on the Pennsylvania railroad, a few miles east of Latrobe. In addition to attending to the ordinary business, Synod spent a considerable portion of its time in conference on Sabbath Reform, The Mission of the United Presbyterian Church, her women, her sons and daughters, Education, Temperance, The Sabbath-school, Power in the church, and Bible study. Devotional exercises were prominent in all these conferences.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Inquisitive floor-sweepers at the Bee-Hive store on State street set off the fire alarm apparatus, and the department came near deluging the sweepers before the cause of the alarm was known.

Sergt. Thompson of the central station returned from San Francisco with Albert Strittmater, who, it is claimed, absconded with $10,000 belonging to the Mutual Life Insurance Company of Newark, which has an office in this city.

Mrs. Alice Mack and Ida Berry, a 12-year old girl, were seriously burned by the explosion of a gasoline stove last night. The reservoir of the stove exploded while Mrs. Mack was bending over it and the contents were scattered over her and about the room.

The Workingmen's Protective League will open headquarters at Monroe and Clark streets.

Albert Mack, President of the colored Y. M. C. A. of America, is in the city trying to raise funds to be used in the erection of an association building at Louisville, Ky. He will preach at various churches during his stay in Chicago.

In affidavits presented to Commissioner Hoyne it is shown that five Chinese boys are detained in Canada while their wealthy fathers have stores in Chicago.

World's Fair authorities have had to apologize to a party of guests who went to the grounds on the Boston steam yacht Gad About and were driven away by the officious policemen.

One of the North Side cable trains ran away from the tunnel to Monroe and La Salle streets. Luckily all persons and vehicles got out of its way and no one was hurt.

The joint committee of the Trunk Line and Central Traffic Association has decided that the weight on boxed meats packed with salt (not canned meats) shall be estimated at 18 per cent over net weights of the meat, which must be ascertained by taking the net weight as stenciled on the package, the 18 per cent to cover weight of box and salt. Boxed meats when packed with borax or cotton will be estimated at 13 per cent over stenciled weight. This action will supersede the conflicting provisions on the same subject published in a previous circular.

COUNTRY.

The most notable death of the week is that of George William Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly and the "Easy Chair" department of Harper's Monthly. His loss is deeply deplored in the professions of journalism and literature.

The past week was distinguished by two disastrous shipwrecks—that of the steel steamer "Western Reserve," on Lake Superior, with a loss of twenty-six lives, and that of the "City of Toledo," on Lake Michigan, with the drowning of all (seven) on board. The lake men are astounded by the first-named disaster, the steamer being very large, and (as was thought) one of the staunchest afloat.

The hanging of Talton Hall, a desperate outlaw at Wise Court House, Va., last week, removed a remarkable instance of criminal perseverance, he having slain at various times ninety-nine men. The world is well-rid of the monster.

Two striking switchmen at New Orleans began an attack upon non-union men in the yards Monday night and in the battle which ensued five men were wounded.

Valuable beds of terra cotta clay have been discovered at Petoskey, Mich. The clay has been examined by experts, and is said to be of the finest quality.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

HOME AND HEALTH.

Over-eating is a common cause of much sickness.

A little sleep each day will give strength to accomplish much more in the same time than could be otherwise done. It is nature's restorative, not a loss of time, when needed.

Light shoes with thin soles are commonly worn by American women, while the English woman wears the heavy leather and thick soles, even with her fine array. Is not this one reason why they are more robust?

Most women carry enough weight in heavy skirts to tire them out. These fastened around their hips become a double burden. Lighten up the skirts and suspend them from the shoulders and it will do much to restore bodily strength.

Bread may be freshened up when likely to get too stale, by putting the whole loaves into the steamer and steam them about an hour, or until they are thoroughly heated through, then wrap in a cloth and lay away until cold, before using.

There is no reason why a woman should not have the free use of her feet. False modesty is shocked at seeing a woman's dress short enough to give her feet freedom in walking. It is a shocking taste that makes a woman's skirts—dirt-gatherers.

A correspondent of the New York Witness furnishes the following treatment for paralysis: "Take good sour vinegar and Cayenne pepper mixed together. Make quite hot, and bathe the afflicted parts twice a day. This was recommended by a great London physician."

Oil baths of olive or cocoanut oil are quieting to the nerves. They are employed quite generally in sanitariums, and by hygienic physicians. Any good nurse can apply them, the rubbing being the principal thing. Given to invalids just before retiring promotes restful sleep.

People think that the supply of vital energy is inexhaustible and that repair goes on as fast as waste. This is a serious error. Nerves should be economized as carefully as a bank account. You cannot get out what is not put into the nerves any more than into the bank. Sleep is nature's way of winding up the machine.

Grape Catsup.—Pick over, stem and wash the grapes, then weigh, mash, and cook in porcelain kettle; when soft, strain through a colander. Allow two-thirds as much sugar as you have grapes, add the sugar to the pulp and return to the kettle, and cook until thick; then add spices, allowing for every nine pounds of grapes one tablespoonful of ground cloves, one of cinnamon, one of allspice, one teaspoonful of black pepper, one quart of vinegar. If too thin, cook slowly a while longer. Put in bottles for winter use.—Exchange.

Healthful dress is claiming more attention than ever before. The Society for the Promotion of Physical Culture and Correct Dress wish to make an exhibit at the Columbian Exposition through photographs, pictures, statuary and costumes. It may yet be the fashion to dress for health. Let us at least hope so and help to make it so now.—Vanguard, St. Louis.

Don't worry. Don't hurry. "Too swift arrives as tardy as too slow." "Simplify!" "simplify!" "simplify!" Don't overheat. Don't starve. "Let your moderation be known to all men." Court the fresh air day and night. "Oh, if you knew what was in the air." Sleep and rest abundantly. Sleep is nature's benediction. Spend less nervous energy each day than you make. Be cheerful. "A light heart lives long." Think only healthful thoughts. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so he is." "Seek peace and pursue it." "Work like a man, but don't be worked to death." Avoid passion and excitement. A mother's anger may be fatal. Associate with healthy people. Health is contagious as well as disease. Don't carry the whole world on your shoulders, far less the universe. Trust the Eternal. Never despair. "Lost hope is a fatal disease." "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Laws of Life.

Cleanliness Next to Godliness.

We read that Cleanliness is akin to Godliness; that the two are nearly inseparable. We will not dispute the point, nor attempt to even argue it, but will be content to say that without the former the latter cannot be attained.

Naturally the question arises with us all how to become clean (occasionally), even if our vocation is such that we cannot keep so.

By reference to the large advertisement of The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y., in this issue, this question is readily solved. This Company rank among the most extensive manufacturers of soaps in the world. They are aggressive, pushing men of marked business ability and integrity.

The offer they make to the readers of this paper is certainly a remarkable one. When we received the order for the insertion of this advertisement we at first thought they offered more than they could do. To satisfy ourselves upon this point we ordered one of the Combination Boxes (as described in the adv't), that we might see if all they offered would be fulfilled. The Box came at once. And we can truly state that it is all that they claim, even better.

The "Chautauqua" Ladies' Desk is worth all that the box costs. There is enough Sweet Home Soap to last a family one year, also toilet soaps and toilet preparations to please the entire family.—Eds.

FARM NOTES.

(From the Farm, Field and Stockman.)

AGRICULTURAL.

Keep studying and experimenting if you don't want to be left behind the times.

Two beeves can never be made fat on a pasture that has only grass enough for one.

Mow the weeds in your pasture land four or five times a year and you will be free from them in a few years.

Strict attention to your own business will be more dollars in your pocket than the election of any ticket in the field.

Cut down bushes while they are in full growth. If you wait till the leaves fall you will have much more trouble from sprouts.

Industry and economy is a better protection against hard times than secret political association or any other kind of combination.

Don't swear at your cow for going through a fence that had the top board off and the others just hanging. Put the blame where it belongs and the board too.

South Dakota's prospective wheat yield as given out by competent experts will be from 50,000,000 to 60,000,000 bushels, the largest of any State in the Union.

Any man who has spent hours of valuable time trying to locate a stopped-up drain tile will appreciate the advice never to make under drains without making a map locating them, and indicating the depth at which they are laid.

Eternal vigilance is the price of success as well as of liberty. The farmer who doesn't take an agricultural paper is as much at the mercy of his enemies as the little ostrich that knows it all and hides its head in the sand when pursued.

Apropos of hedges vs. fences a contemporary suggests that yellow locust trees set in line will hold a wire at four years old, and may be kept trimmed down to the trunk with impunity, thus combining the advantages of hedge and fence.

The cultivation of a crop of beets is not difficult after the plants get a good start. The most critical period is when the seed is germinating and the plants are very small, as the weeds and grass may take possession, but with extra care and labor for a few weeks the difficulties will be but few later on.

HORTICULTURAL.

Old strawberry beds are especially subject to blight and all the other fruit diseases. It pays to renew the beds often. But to lessen the danger from blight, burn the beds over in the fall.

The first object in planting fruit should be to supply the family with everything in this line that can be grown upon the farm. After proving your ability to do this, you can safely calculate on growing for market.

Brown rot or gray rot of the grape, also sometimes known as downy mildew, is due to a fungus which thrives in warm, wet weather. Spraying with bordeaux mixture or ammonia carbonate is a sure cure. The vines should be sprayed every fifteen days from the first of July till the fruit begins to turn blue.

In using manure from the poultry house in connection with wood ashes, the best results will be obtained in both garden and orchard by applying, at different times, separately, and a week or ten days apart. The chicken manure should be removed every day and mixed with plaster to give the best results.

The New York law for the destruction of all trees known to be afflicted with black-knot disease is one that all the fruit growing States would do well to copy. It authorizes the town officials to appoint a committee who shall examine any afflicted trees and give the owner ten days' notice for destroying the whole tree or such part as is affected. If he fails to do this the commissioners are to do it for him, and he is liable to a $25 fine and ten days' imprisonment. The commissioners receive $2 a day and are protected from any action for damage.

POULTRY.

The secret of feeding is to avoid getting your laying hens fat.

Do not compel a few good hens to support the others. Kill the drones.

Look under the wings for the red lice, but use only a few drops of the lard.

Never grease the bodies of chicks unless lightly, as grease will often kill them.

You can't produce eggs and lice at the same time—the business is entirely separate from the other.

Linseed and cotton seed (cake or meal) is excellent, but all oily foods are liable to cause moulting.

Beans and peas, cooked, and thickened with bran, and fed twice a week, is an excellent food for laying hens.

When your birds have bowel disease change the food for a day or two and change the grit. One-half the troubles are from lack of sharp, hard grit.

When chicks droop, and appear sick without cause, especially in summer, look for lice (not the little red mites) but the large grey body lice on the heads and necks. If you find them use a few drops of grease of any kind. A teaspoonful of oil of pennyroyal to a cup of lard is excellent.

Any of the earlier stages of Consumption can be cured. It's a matter of evidence—strong enough and complete enough to warrant the makers of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in promising this:

If it's taken in time and given a fair trial, they'll refund the money in any case where their medicine fails to benefit or cure.

But it's a medicine that doesn't fail; it goes to the root of the trouble. Consumption is developed through the blood, and must be cured in the same way. It's a scrofulous affection of the lungs—a blood-taint. And the surest remedy for Scrofula in all its forms, the most potent blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and flesh-builder known to medical science, is the "Golden Medical Discovery." It cures Scrofula; it cures Consumption; it cures all Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, Asthma, Weak Lungs, Severe, Lingering Coughs, and kindred ailments—through the blood.

And if there's no help, there's no pay.
