QUOTE OF THE MONTH

*"From the cowardice that fears new truth,
From the laziness that accepts half truth,
From the arrogance that knows all truth,
O Lord, deliver us.*

—The Rev. Arthur Ford.

THE FATES jealously guard the status quo. It has been the sad history of many a discovery, as though doomed from the beginning, to be lost in a thicket of coincidental accidents and error. Luck seems to conspire against breakthroughs in our field.

Let us hope this is not the case with "Bozo."

"Bozo" is the rather precious name that Ivan T. Sanderson has bestowed upon the frozen body of an apparently genuine Sasquatch — or subspecies of man (apelike man) that he and Belgian Zoologist Dr. Bernard Heuvelmans spent two days examining near Winona, Minn., last December.

Despite the physical difficulties accompanying their examination, Sanderson and Heuvelmans believe Bozo is genuine. And now, with the Smithsonian Institution in full pursuit, Bozo has disappeared.

In April FATE we mentioned the case of Bozo obliquely because we had been sworn to secrecy. But now that the story has broken in the newspapers, following publication of a bulletin by the Belgian Institute of Natural Science authored by Heuvelmans, we see no further reason to be bound by our pledge.

PRICE, 35 CENTS

THE UNBELIEVABLE story begins with a carnival exhibit. Bozo had been touring the United States in a specially refrigerated van, frozen in a solid block of ice and exhibited for 35 cents a look, since May 3, 1967.

Doubtless many FATE readers

HERMETIC WORKSHOP
123 So. Fairfax Ave., Dept. F
Los Angeles, Calif. 90036

in the midwest and southwest have paid their 35 cents to inspect the apelike corpse of a creature six feet tall, powerfully built, weighing perhaps 400 pounds, covered with three- or four-inch-long dark brown hair.

Strangely, the operators of the refrigerated van never proposed that Bozo was an ape-man or anything else specific. They merely billed him as a mystery, advising the curious to judge for themselves what he was.

The story accompanying the exhibit was typical carnival ballyhoo, although it had more than one version. One story said Bozo had been found floating in a cake of ice in the Pacific Ocean by Japanese fishermen who took the body to Hong Kong and sold it as a carnival exhibit.

Because of a number of unusual characteristics, some knowledgeable observers who saw Bozo came to feel that he was not a typical carnival exhibit fabricated in the Orient. They contacted Heuvelmans and Sanderson and the two scientists caught up with Bozo in last December's dreadfully cold weather at Rollingstone, Minn.

Here Bozo was in the custody of a Frank Hansen who professed not to be the real owner of the exhibit. He was extremely cagey about who was (or is) the real owner. Heuvelmans and Sanderson came to feel that Hansen was concerned that Bozo might indeed be real and essentially human and that he therefore was in possession of an actual cadaver. Possibly Hansen was remembering there are laws about transporting cadavers from state to state, especially cadavers that appear to have bullet holes in them. So Mr. Hansen is cautious — and as a result the most significant biological discovery of the century may have disappeared forever.

A COLD TWO DAYS

IVAN SANDERSON'S strongest recollection of the two days he and Heuvelmans spent examining Bozo is that they almost froze. It was not only near zero outside the van but the refrigerated cake of ice in which Bozo is preserved also is kept near zero. The conditions of their examination were extremely difficult. Although Bozo is frozen in a cake of transparent ice, no ice is really completely transparent. So, although the top of the ice cake had been cut away to conform to the molded shape of the monstrous human form beneath, not all details could be made out. But let Heuvelmans describe what he observed:

"The specimen at first looks like a man, or, if you prefer, an adult human of the male sex, of rather normal height (six feet) and proportions but excessively hairy. It is entirely covered with very dark brown hair three to four inches long. Its skin appears waxlike, similar in color to the cadavers of white men not tanned by sun. . . .

"The specimen is lying on its back . . . the left arm is twisted behind the head with the palm of the hand upward. The arm makes a strange curve, as if it were that of a sawdust doll, but this curvature is due to an open fracture midway between the wrist and the elbow where one can distinguish the broken ulna in a gaping wound.

"The right arm is twisted and held tightly against the flank, with the hand spread palm down over the right side of the abdomen. Between the ring finger and the medius the penis is visible, lying obliquely on the groin. The testicles are vaguely distinguishable at the juncture of the thighs."

APPARENTLY SHOT

MUCH MUST remain conjecture unless Mr. Hansen will produce the original body. Heuvelmans says the creature seems to have a very short neck. He conjectures that it was shot in the right eye. The force of the

INCREDIBLE BUT TRUE!

Watching you from above is the INVISIBLE MASTER who rules the world!

NOW — A BRILLIANT METAPHYSICIST PROVES THIS AND SHOWS YOU HOW TO MAKE DIRECT CONTACT WITH THE INVISIBLE MASTER TO ASK FOR AND RECEIVE:

*physical and spiritual healing . . . youth . . .
money . . . messages from departed friends . . . and much, much more!*

IT'S THE DISCOVERY OF THE AGES—come at last!

Dr. M. H. Gillchrest, brilliant Cosmic Researcher, has found positive proof of THE INVISIBLE MASTER who lives above, watching you and directing your life!

Now, in a thrilling new book, Dr. Gillchrest shows you how to make direct contact with THE INVISIBLE MASTER to ask for and receive life's richest rewards!

AMAZING TECHNIQUE IS EASY TO USE!

Yes, it is easy, says Dr. Gillchrest—the easiest thing in the world. You need no special powers, no psychic "gifts". All you need for a specific dream to come true, for a specific problem to melt away, are the words which THE INVISIBLE MASTER himself will respond to.

These words, which THE INVISIBLE MASTER has chosen, are the only ones he wants to hear before he works the miracles you want in your life.

AND IN THIS BOOK THEY'RE GIVEN TO YOU! YOU'LL DISCOVER:

- The Exact Words that will make you young because they summon the power of this Great Being to "turn back" the hands of time, says Dr. Gillchrest.
- The Exact Words that will bring you money—more money than you ever dreamed possible. And more than that, Dr. Gillchrest promises, financial security for the rest of your days.
- The Exact Words for Spirit messages: THE INVISIBLE MASTER has the power to bring messages from a departed spirit. If you doubt this for an instant, try the experiment on page 171.

IT'S TRUE! THOUSANDS

HELPED BY AMAZING TECHNIQUE

Dr. Gillchrest knows that the all-powerful

Ruler above is going to help you because he has helped others just like you. People like:

- Mary W., page 149, who was bleeding to death. She used the exact words and the pain and bleeding stopped!
- Frank N., page 152, used the exact words to avoid jail and mend a friendship!
- Marilyn R. made direct contact to recover from an injury that was threatening her marriage!
- Jack K. made direct contact to pay off every debt and buy a new home!

Perhaps most amazing of all is the case of Dr. Gillchrest, the author of this book, whose face was horribly disfigured after an auto accident. THE INVISIBLE MASTER healed Dr. Gillchrest's face—without medical help—and to this day there are no apparent scars!

In this book you'll learn the same techniques these people used. It's spelled out for you, with complete, easy-to-follow directions.

shot, he suggests, knocked out the left eye which is out of its socket and lying on the cheekbone and blew out the back of the creature's head, killing it instantly. It also appears to have been shot in the chest and Heuvelmans suggests that a bullet struck the left arm as the creature attempted to defend itself.

Bozo's hands are of "strikingly abnormal size and thickness," Heuvelmans continues. "The fingers and toes seem as large and as massive as those of an adult gorilla . . . the toes are almost of the same thickness and of the same length. . . . It is not impossible that when the foot is stretched out, digits two and three will extend beyond the great toe."

The great toe, he says, is man-like, not apelike. He estimates the hands are 11 inches long and seven and one-half inches wide. The thumb "is extraordinarily long" as are the arms and legs. The torso is barrel-shaped. It was difficult for Sanderson and Heuvelmans to see the face clearly but Sanderson reported the nose was broad. The forehead did not seem to be covered with hair.

THE UPSHOT

SANDERSON and Heuvelmans have excellent scientific credentials. They believe that Bozo is real. They believe he is, in Heuvelmans' words, an "actual specimen of what appears to be a previously unknown life-form."

They are convinced that Bozo is not a plastic or wax fabrication, nor a composite of human and animal parts, nor a freak of nature.

Scientists from the Smithsonian Institution are so impressed by the report that they are trying to obtain and study the body of Bozo. Dr. John Napier, one of the world's outstanding primatologists and director of the Smithsonian's office of primate biology, is eager to examine the creature and is frustrated by Frank Hansen's refusal to permit this.

But Hansen or other presumed owners of Bozo are running scared. And because of this precious scientific evidence may be lost.

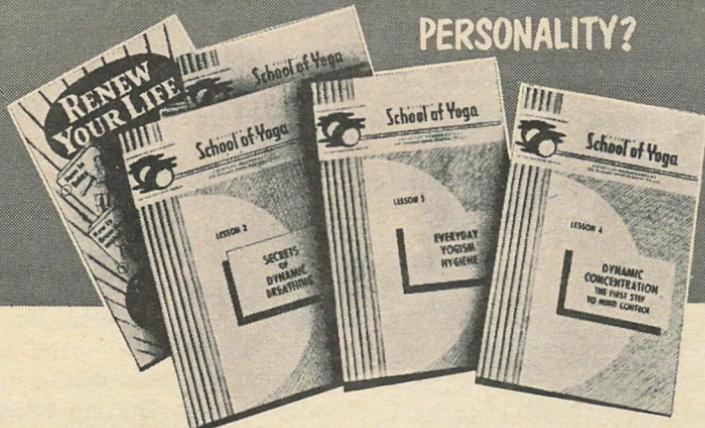

When we discussed this case with Ivan Sanderson in February he offered additional evidences for the authenticity of their observations, which we are not privileged to report. Sanderson is of the opinion that Bozo probably was killed in North America two or three years ago.

Jack A. Ullrich of Westport, Conn., a geologist and hydrologist, states flatly that no prehistoric animal ever has been preserved in ice . . . "it can be stated categorically that this corpse is only a few years old. . . . The presence of blood surrounding the head of this specimen shows that it could not have been frozen in this manner . . . artificial refrigeration produced the ice in which the creature is contained."

In addition to fears that Bozo will be destroyed by its owners who dread the complications of being so involved with a human-like creature, Sanderson told us of two other concerns he has about Bozo.

Hansen already has hinted, Sanderson says, that an artificial Bozo might be substituted for the real Bozo. But Sanderson doubts that many of the characteristics he took special note of could be duplicated in an artificial Bozo.

Ivan's other concern is that Bozo's body is deteriorating rapidly. He said it is simply impossible to preserve an animal body in ice alone. He and Heuvelmans, even in zero weather, detected gas bubbles and the sweet-sick aroma of decomposition in Bozo's van. They fear that even if Hansen can be induced to relent and allow examination of Bozo it soon may be too late.

"A FACE LIKE AN APE"
REPORTS OF other apelike creatures continue to cross

our desk. After Sanderson and Heuvelmans had investigated Bozo in his frozen ice cake they interviewed Wisconsin hunters in the eastern part of that state who said they had flushed such an ape-man on a deer drive. Sanderson's report was featured on the front cover of the April issue of Argosy.

The most recent report we have comes from Oregon and Washington newspapers. They describe the experience of Don Cox of Washougal, near Beacon Rock State Park, Washington. Cox just had rounded a bend on Highway 14 about one mile east of the park in Skamania County when he saw "a dark colored creature with a face like an ape" cross the road in front of him. Cox felt the creature might be eight to 10 feet tall. It was around 4:00 A.M.

"It ran like a man and was covered with fuzzy fur. I had just come out of a fog bank that had caused me to slow my car when I first saw what I thought to be a tree leaning toward the middle of the road.

"I slowed my car further and turned my headlights to high beam and it was then that I saw this fur-covered human form with the face of an ape. He ran across the road in front of the car, leaped up a 40 degree slope and disappeared in the woods."

Deputy John Mason who later investigated the scene could find no definable footprints but he could see where a large animal had gone up the bank on the north side of the road leaving a smeared track about seven inches wide and eight inches long pressed three and one-half inches into the soft dirt. Mason said that the track could not have been made by elk or deer and that a bear would not make an eight-foot jump to the top of the bank where a small tree and ferns were crushed.

IT WEIGHED 35 TONS

ONE OF MARCH's more promising monster stories turned out to have a bad odor after all the reports came in. It began when an excited long distance telephone call from Mexico told us an unknown sea creature had washed up on the beach near Tecolutla on March 7.

Identification was difficult because before the discovery became public fishermen had removed "tusks, eyes, teeth and large chunks of meat." In addition the creature had been badly damaged by schools of shovel-mouth sharks which had attacked it.

For some reason nearly 100 local fishermen and army soldiers, with the help of tractors, loaded the carcass onto a flatbed truck and moved it to the meeting hall of the Tecolutla Fishing Co-operative, five miles from the beach.

Biologists at first claimed it was a sperm whale. Others said it was a narwhal because of two 10-foot tusks of porous bone protruding from the head (although narwhals are small and have only one tusk). The best bet appears to be that it was a rorqual or finback whale, which has a large bony dorsal fin and that the "tusks" were jawbones exposed by loss of their fleshy covering.

These tentative judgments did not prevent some incredibly wild statements from people who have seen too many monster movies. Dr. Bernardo Villa, chief mammologist at the National University of Mexico, is reported by the UPI to have said that the creature apparently had been preserved in an Arctic iceberg and was discovered only after the iceberg melted. Other "experts" argued that the carcass could be that of a monster from a deep sea cavern who was disturbed by oil company drilling and blasting operations and died on surfacing.

Because of the mutilation by fishermen, sharks and curiosity seekers, however, its true identity may never be known for cer-

TESTING DR. VELIKOVSKY
ALTHOUGH scientists don't officially recognize Immanuel Velikovsky his theories continue to bother many of them and a great deal of sub rosa discussion about him must still go on in parlors and laboratories.

In the March 14 issue of Science William T. Plummer, Department of Physics and Astronomy, University of Massachusetts, undertook to analyze one of Velikovsky's hypotheses.

The author of Worlds in Collision, Ages in Chaos, and Earth in Upheaval, correctly made a number of startling scientific predictions which were scoffed at when he made them but which since have been verified. Based upon his theories of the development of the solar system, Velikovsky argued as follows:

1. Jupiter should be a strong source of radio waves.
2. The earth should have a magnetosphere (the Van Allen belts, predicted by Velikovsky

PRIZE-WINNING METHODS OF HYPNOSIS AND OTHER UNIQUE INDUCTION TECHNIQUES

Edited by Harry Arons

This is probably the most remarkable book on hypnosis ever published. It is a book of methods . . . only methods . . . NOTHING BUT METHODS. And not just ordinary methods (these you can get in any hypnosis book), but methods that many professional hypnotists do not know. Here are just a few of them:

- Dr. Millikin's Non-Verbal Method, in which hypnosis is induced without speaking.
- Harry Arons' Non-Sensory Method, in which hypnosis is induced in one minute without communication via any of the five senses — en masse.
- Col. Zeglinski's Method for the Deaf.
- The "Telepathy" Method.
- The Proof-Positive Method.
- Dr. Bryan's Oriental Pressure-Point Method.
- Brain Wave Synchronizer — three methods.
- The H-Alpha Stimulator, a brand-new electronic method.
- Dr. Bryant's Head-Rotation Method.
- Japanese "Sleep" Machine.
- Dome Inductor Method.
- The Head-Spin Method.
- Harry Arons' Best Deepening Method, word-for-word.
- Self-Hypnosis Methods.
- The Shadow Method.
- And many others.

before Van Allen "discovered" them).

3. The surface of Venus should be hot.

4. Venus might exhibit an anomalous rotation.

5. Venus should be surrounded by a blanket of hydrocarbons.

"All except the last of these predictions have been verified, most of them by accident," declared Plummer, referring to an open letter written to Science by V. Bargmann and Lloyd Motz back in 1952. The Bargmann and Motz letter had pleaded for a more open-minded assessment of Velikovsky's theories.

Since the fifth prediction has not been verified, Plummer set himself the task of testing it, based upon new data on hydrocarbon clouds and frosts, together with infrared observations of Venus.

Using reflection spectra of Venus obtained from four different studies, by Kuiper, Sinton, Moroz and Bottema et al, and comparing this data with reflections from butane frost and propane clouds, Plummer concluded that the evidence does not support Velikovsky's prediction of the presence of condensed hydrocarbons in Venusian clouds. Rather the evidence supports the idea that Venusian clouds, at least in the wavelengths reported, consist of small ice particles.

LOOKING AT THE CONDON REPORT

TWO SCIENTISTS recently have commented adversely on the Condon Report. Dr. James E. McDonald, a physicist at the University of Arizona, told the Utah chapters of the American Meteorological Society and the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics that the committee was biased from the start, did poor research and ignored many of the best UFO reports.

McDonald specifically criticized the omission of many important cases and the inclusion of too many trivial and insignificant reports "which a serious observer would discard at once."

He also objected to the intense attention paid to crackpots and said that scientifically weak arguments were used throughout the entire report.

* * *

A SURPRISING adverse comment was published in the March 29 issue of the Saturday Review. It is written by Frederick J. Hooven, a consultant to the Ford Motor Company and adjunct professor of engineering at Dartmouth College. Hooven, with David F. Moyer, served as a consultant to the Colorado group in analyzing the possible radioactive and magnetic aftereffects of a car allegedly forced to malfunction by UFOs.

Although no such aftereffects were found by the engineers in their analysis Hooven came to look critically on the final Condon report.

His basic viewpoint is that it has been less than 140 years since Faraday's electromagnetic induction discovery "which might be called the first truly scientific discovery to result directly in new technology."

Science on earth is incredibly young, Hooven emphasizes. If it exists on other worlds the likelihood is that it is so much older that we don't even have a basis for thinking about it. And yet here is Dr. Condon speculating about interstellar travel based upon the physics he knows which in turn is based on but a few centuries of scientific work.

Hooven also takes off on William Markowitz, the anti-UFO scientist from Marquette University.

"When one implies the permanent invariability of the relationships of such physical quantities as time, space and gravity, as Markowitz has done, he seems to forget that only 60 years ago mass and energy were also on that list. It can only be stated that things can probably be done in the future that are more unforeseeable than television from

MEANWHILE, BACK AT THE RANCH

WHILE THE authors of the Condon Report were so casually rejecting any possibility of extraterrestrial contact with us poor earthlings, a spate of fascinating reports crossed our desk over a period of just a few days.

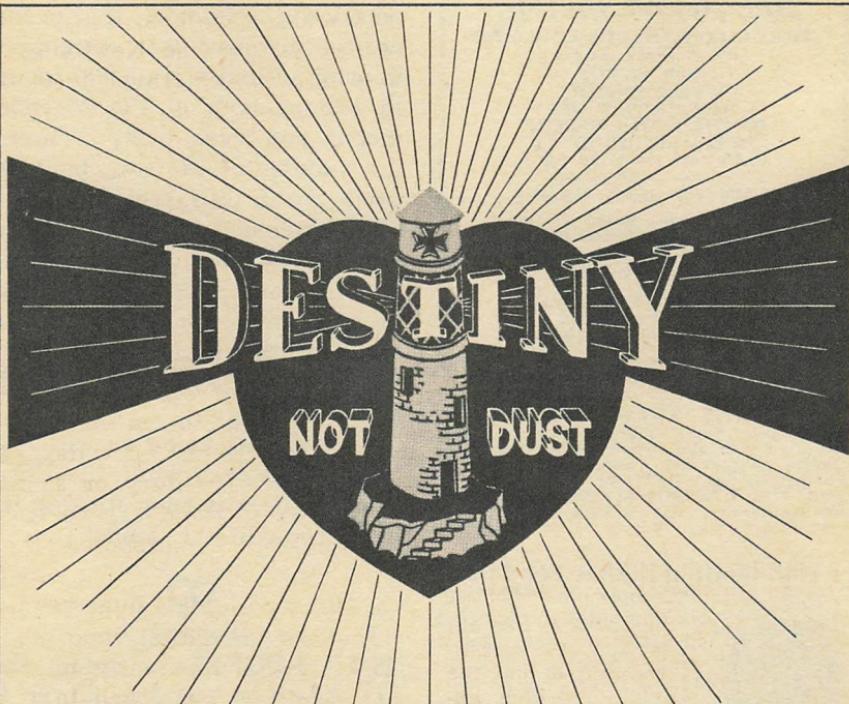

With only a century or so of true science behind us, we had accomplished or proposed the following:

- Discovered eight huge turbulent clouds of water vapor far out in space, apparently mixed with dust and gas, each larger than our own solar system. This is the first positive discovery of water beyond the central planets of our solar system.

- By simulating the atmosphere of Jupiter, experiments at the Ames Research Center at Moffett Field, Calif., showed that molecules which are the forerunners of life could exist there.

- Obtained the first "absolutely conclusive proof" that water exists in the atmosphere of Mars, thus supporting the idea that life could exist there.

- Proposed, through Dr. Fred

VOODOO INSTEAD

THE HAITIAN delegate to the international drug conference last year stated that voodoo virtually eliminates the need for tobacco, alcohol and hallucinogenic drugs among Haitians. Dr. Emerson Douyon said that voodoo rites and trances satisfy psychological needs of individuals who might otherwise turn to drugs and alcohol.

Delegate Douyon further said, "Use of drugs and voodoo trances represent two culturally different means of arriving at the same end, escape from self and reality through transcendence."

Voodoo is a Haitian religion in which the ceremonies lead to collective delirium through movement and the rhythm of drums.

Dr. Douyon said Haiti has no liquor control and no taverns.

LAWS AND DRUGS

LAST OCTOBER President Johnson signed a stiff measure designed to outlaw LSD and similar mind-bending drugs. The law makes it a felony to manufacture, sell or distribute any of these drugs. The penalty for conviction can be a prison sentence of up to five years and a $10,000 fine. Illegal possession of the drug is still a misdemeanor with a maximum penalty of one year and a $1,000 fine. — Curtis Fuller.

Model Britt Hanson wears lei of random-strung cultured pearls designed by author. Pearls are said to promote healing, beauty and creativity.

By Barbara Anton

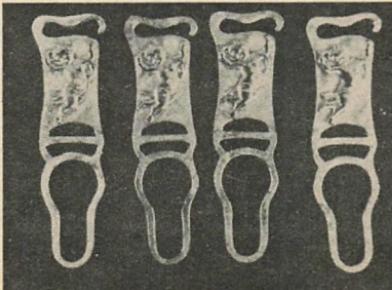

WISE OLD KING Solomon said, "Diverse are the virtues of gems. Some give favor in the eyes of gods, some protect against fire, still others make people beloved. Others give wisdom. Some render men invisible and others repel lightning. Some baffle poisons, some protect and augment treasures and others cause that husbands should love their wives."

Perhaps we should emulate his wisdom by finding out just what gems can do for us and by using them to our advantage.

Much has been written about

the magical powers of gemstones, for there never has been a society in which minerals, metals and gems weren't used to gratify the needs of man. Prehistoric relics indicate that man always has worn and embellished his possessions with gems and the inscriptions carved on the old stones suggest a belief in the supernatural. Bodies exhumed from Egyptian tombs are resplendent in gold, jade, turquoise and other precious stones. Some

What can gemstones do for you? One of more than 90 jewels may hold key to your health and prosperity.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

BARBARA ANTON's career is as brilliant as her gem-studded designs. She has won 13 international awards for excellence in jewelry design including the Diamonds-International Award and the Highest Award from the Cultured Pearl Associations of America and Japan. She earned the certification Graduate Gemologist from the Gemological Institute in New York where she studied the scientific properties of gems. Her designs have been exhibited in galleries throughout Europe and Asia and in the Philadelphia Museum and Boston's Museum of Fine Arts. She lectures, appears on radio and TV and also writes for NATIONAL JEWELER and GEMS AND MINERALS.

with Chapter 30 of the Book of the Dead which was thought to aid in the soul's transition to the next life. The scarab, a gem-stone representation of the scarabaeus beetle, was worshiped by the Egyptians and thought to insure fertility and resurrection.

Edgar Cayce, the sleeping prophet and healer, lends some credence to the practice of wearing these charms by saying, "... the scarab should be a portion of the entity's dress, ever; worn either as an amulet, a ring, or such, will make for safety in the entity's present experience." Of course this applied specifically to the person for whom this reading was given but in ancient Egypt scarabs were thought to benefit everyone.

Pearls are probably the jewel most highly esteemed by gem therapists. Kozminsky, author of The Magic and Science of Jewels and Stones, Putnam, 1922, tells us, "The golden pearl was the emblem of wealth, the white of idealism, the black of philosophy, the pink of beauty, the red of health and energy and the grey of thought. Lusterless pearls are considered unfortunate, as are pearls that have lost their sheen while on a dying person's finger."

The Romans believed pearls have special powers over the mind. They consecrated pearls and wore them in honor of the gods. They believed wearing golden pearls would increase their wealth and those who could afford them wore them constantly, even while they slept.

Edgar Cayce instructed in one reading, "... the pearl should be worn upon the body or against the flesh of the body for its vibrations are healing, as well as creative."

When the lady for whom this reading was being given asked if the pearl necklace she was wearing helped or hindered she was told, "When its vibrations have taken the body forces it will be well. Or if the body would demagnetize the necklace as it is, it would be more helpful for the body. Do not touch with same but expose necklace to the ultraviolet ray for one-tenth of a second or as a flash. This will demagnetize it and set it for better body vibration for this body . . ."

In my own experiments I have found pearls soothing to the nervous system while at the same time they stimulate my creativity, just as Cayce suggested.

Dr. Bhattacharyya, M.A., Ph.D., formerly director of the Oriental Institute in India, believes that pearl medicine, properly prepared, can supply needed moisture to blood, tissues and bones and can help cure insanity, bleeding or fever. He further tells us that the pearl releases cold waves of orange rays which, according to Roland Hunt, author of Seven Keys to Colour Healing, are capable of curing chronic asthma, phlegmatic fevers, bronchitis, wet cough, gout, chronic rheumatism, inflammation of kidneys, gallstones, prolapses, cessation of menstruation, mental debility, cholera and other diseases.

The god Vishnu is said to have discovered pearls and Indian women always have worn pearls for adornment—many attributing therapeutic properties to them. In fact, in the past pearls were so highly prized in India that anyone who drilled pearls unskillfully was required, according to an old manuscript, ". . . not only to make good the mischief but pay a fine of 250 annas." The manuscript states further: "Among the ancient Chinese the pearl was highly valued as an amulet which was supposed to increase the beauty of the body. Pearls are said to have been paid as 'tribute' for 2300 years before Christ and it is stated that in 100 B.C. the exorbitant and wilful luxury in pearls was written against by the authors of that day."

M. F. Islam tells us in his book Our Hidden Treasure that the natural pink pearls of Pakistan, when immature or deformed, ". . . are sold in the market for pharmaceutical consumption at rupees 12.00 per tola." He also mentioned in a conversation I had with him that the Pakistani believe that when these immature pearls are ground and taken with cream they prevent heart trouble, strengthen bones and teeth, improve eyesight and provide immunity against smallpox. He says that old men are especially conscientious about taking powdered pearls since they believe this produces virility.

Mr. Islam, who is a representative of the Pakistani government residing in Dacca, told me this story of an old man of his acquaintance, a Mr. Khurasan who took as his third wife a lovely young girl named Stargis. Now, since a man is allowed to have as many as four wives at one time so long as he treats them all equally, Mr. Khurasan took to drinking a potion of ground pearls mixed with cream and honey to increase his virility. Apparently the pearls had the desired effect for Mr. Khurasan recently has married his fourth wife . . . at 87 years of age.

Taoists believed that pearls steeped in a mixture of malt, honeycomb, pumice stone and serpents' gall would give long life and immortality.

Bengal tigers bearing pink pearls in their mouths adorn cuff links (top). Jewelry traditionally given Pakistani bride by her husband inspired unique hand ornament, "Oriental Splendor."

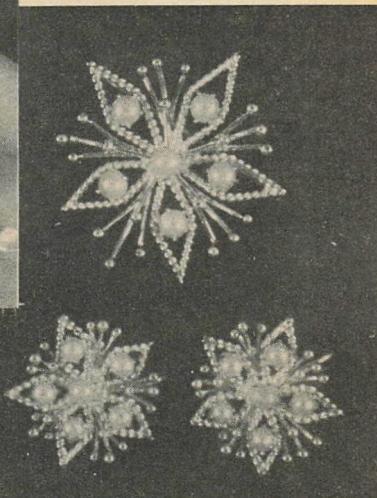

Two types of hand engraving distinguish "Bubble Fish" which has emerald eye and three pink pearl bubbles rising from its mouth. "Dove of Peace," below, carries pearl of wisdom in its bill.

Anselmus de Boot, a writer in the royal court of Emperor Rudolph II of Hapsburg in the early part of the 17th Century, who attempted to resolve the confusion between the myths and the truths of the day concerning gemstones, found this recipe for "aqua perlata" very effective: "First dissolve the pearls in vinegar, lemon juice or in spirits of vitriol or sulfur, then add fresh lemon juice and sweeten the whole mixture with sugar." He instructed, "If there be four ounces of this solution add an ounce each of rosewater, of tincture of strawberries or borage flowers and of balm and two ounces of cinnamon water . . . Cover the glass carefully while the pearls are dissolving lest the essence should escape . . . Shake well before using."

Ring extending entire length of finger is hinged to allow freedom of movement. Right, "A tribute to Prophet Mohammed" consists of pin with matching earrings. Five-sided design represents five prayer sessions, pearls in pin represent six of the major prophets, 12 pearls in earrings signify the 12 pilgrims from Yathrib.

The German monk Albertus Magnus, writing in the 13th Century, said that pearls were especially helpful in curing "mental diseases, affections of the heart and in hemorrhage and dysentery."

Alfonso the Learned of Castile and Leon suggested using pearls to cure love sickness, "... palpitations of the heart and for those who are sad and timid and in every sickness which is caused by melancholia, because the pearl purifies the blood, clears it and removes all its impurities." He suggested the pearls be powdered and swallowed in herbal mixtures and that they be "... daubed on the eyes because they clear up the sight wonderfully, strengthen the nerves and dry up the moisture which enters the eye." He claimed Aristotle as the source of this information.

Coral, another gem from the sea, also is highly regarded by gem therapists. George Frederick Kunz, American gem expert once on the staff at Tiffany's in New York City, tells us that for 20 centuries coral was classified among the precious stones but to retain its power as an amulet it had to have been freshly gathered from the sea and not cut, polished or worked in any way by man.

Edgar Cayce didn't stipulate that coral had to be this virginal in order to be beneficial for in answer to the question "Are there any colors or jewelry that I should wear in order to have better vibrations?" he said merely, "Any jewelry or ornaments that are of coral would be well." Surely from the term "jewelry of coral" we can assume that he included coral that had been worked by man.

In another reading Cayce said, "Coral should be about the entity at all times . . . against the flesh." He told another lady, "Through the very indications of that element which would be helpful in its experience (the coral) we find that the entity is highly sensitive to intuitive forces, spiritual aspects, spiritual imports . . ."

No less a man than Plato recommended, "Coral is good to be hanged about children's necks as well as to rub their gums as to preserve them from the falling sickness. It hath also some special sympathy with nature for the best coral, being worn about the neck, will turn pale and wan if the party that wears it be sick and comes to its former colour again as they recover health . . ."

Brown corals are supposed to delight in evil spirits and Oriental mystics warn against wearing dull, dirty or discolored coral.

Diamonds may be in truth a girl's best friend for if gem therapists are correct they are one of the worst enemies of disease. Diamonds have been credited with curing everything from toothache to convulsions, from delirium tremens to hypochondria, from insanity to insomnia. Indian families who could afford the luxury used to sprinkle tiny diamonds over the heads of newborn babies to protect them forever against witchcraft and the evil eye.

Although diamonds are said to be valueless as a talisman if they have been stolen or procured by fraud, honorably acquired diamonds long have been prescribed in the treatment for gout, heart disease and bad temper. In fact, it is generally agreed by practitioners of gem therapy that diamonds can cure almost anything — sometimes by being worn, sometimes by magnetizing water for drinking or for rubbing on the afflicted area. If you remind me that some of the more outstanding diamonds of history have brought about the sudden deaths of their owners I can only point out that "death is a sure cure for all diseases."

The ancients believed that the emanations from jade would protect its wearer against accident, diseases of many kinds and witchcraft. Jade long has been credited also with the ability to confer a long life and a peaceful end.

Lobsang Rampa credits jade with curing dropsy and other afflictions of the urinary system, as well as with the ability to guide a businessman to a profitable business deal.

Ancient Chinese records stated ". . . jade cannot prevent the living from dying but it can preserve the corpse from decaying," and therefore they placed jades of various colors and shapes in the nine apertures of the body before burial. When the first emperor of Ch'in died in 210 B.C. he took his entire harem to the grave with him. One wonders just how much benefit he derived from either the jade or the harem under those circumstances.

Jade knives were used to slay human sacrifices in Mexico and South and Central America long before Columbus sailed this way. And ancient legends, speaking of another virgin birth, say that the mother of the Aztec god Quetzal-coatl became pregnant when she swallowed a piece of jade. These early Americans also believed that jade worn next to the skin would ward off disease and the evil eye. If powdered and taken internally it would assure immortality.

The green color of jade and of emeralds too was believed to strengthen and improve the eyes when held directly on the eyelids or when dipped in water which then was applied to the eyes.

The emerald has been greatly valued for its beauty since history began and many have ascribed supernatural powers to this precious stone. The Romans believed it would protect them from evil of all kinds but took special note of the emerald's ability to rest and refresh the eyes. They believed that by steeping an emerald in water a beneficial eyewash could be made and that a salve concocted by grinding emeralds to a powder would rest the eyes and free them from disease.

Emperor Nero is said to have watched the games in the arena through an emerald eyepiece.

Amber is credited with aiding the kidneys and liver. Lobsang Rampa suggests grinding amber and mixing this powder with honey and a little water to alleviate constipation. The ancients tell us that adding oil of roses to this mixture will correct ear-ache and bad eyesight. Long ago amber necklaces were thought to heal diseases afflicting the throat and head and were prescribed for catarrh, goiter, asthma and hay fever.

Greek mythology tells us that the sisters of Phaethon, son of the sun god, mourning and weeping at his unhappy end, attracted the pity of the gods who mercifully changed them into trees. Their tears continued to flow and became amber, the legend has it. However modern gemologists know that amber is a transparent to translucent fossil resin, usually yellow or brownish in color.

At one time this vegetable product was more valuable than gold. In the early 14th Century amber was cut into knives and one-pronged forks which royalty and church dignitaries used for cutting "esculent fungoids, mushrooms and the like." Probably they believed the amber would negate any poisons present in those foods.

Perhaps man always has suspected that "smoking may be injurious to health," for Edwin Streeter wrote in 1879, "Necklaces and bracelets of amber are sent to Egypt and India and the meanest Turk seeks a piece of it for his pipe, not only because it is pleasant to the lip but because he has a belief that it will preserve him from inhaling pestilence."

Dr. Bhattacharyya tells us that "Rajas, Maharajas, business magnates and rich people" use burnt gems today in ash form procured from Ayurvedic pharmacists in India. As may be expected these are costly medicines available only to the wealthy so the doctor has developed a method for deriving the benefits from gems without destroying the stones, thus making the benefits available to the masses. His book Gem Therapy lists common diseases together with the gem medicines and prescriptions that he believes will cure them.

And Dr. Bhattacharyya agrees with Roland Hunt that red rays are most suitable for subjects prone to diseases such as "ailments of the bloodstream, anemia, physical debility and lassitude, colds, circulatory deficiencies, paralysis, moronic cases, etc.," so he suggests globules magnetized by rubies to cure these as well as "consumption, melancholia, leukemia, infantile paralysis, poliomyelitis, night blindness and moles."

Edgar Cayce says of the ruby, "Each element, each stone, each variation of stone, has its own atomic movement, held together by the units of energy which in the universe are concentrated in that particular activity. Hence they come under varied activties according to their color, vibration or emanation. In this particular one (the ruby) there is a fitness with that which has been the experience of this soul, this entity, through material expression. Hence it is an aid, a crutch to lean upon. But, as has always been given, let it be a stepping-stone; not that which thou standest solely upon!"

Rubies have been worn on the forehead, particularly in India, for they are believed to influence the mind. A ruby taped to the brow or placed under the pillow is said to induce peaceful and pleasant dreams.

Apparently the premium price of rubies didn't prevent the ancient healers from employing them in cures, for the records of medieval medicine suggest that the ruby be powdered and made into a paste to be applied to the source of bleeding to stop it.

Francis Bacon listed gem recipes in his massive encyclopedia of medicine and Anselmus de Boot, writing in the early part of the 17th Century at the royal court of Emperor Rudolph II of Hapsburg, stated that magnetic attractions could be shown scientifically by experiment to exist in some metals. He said his recipe for "aqua perlata" was "most excellent for restoring the strength and almost for resuscitating the dead."

Edgar Cayce cautions that we should not rely on stones to do the whole job for they won't do anything alone. They will only help us to achieve our needs. He says we must view them as "stepping-stones" rather than "foundation stones."

Lobsang Rampa tells us that gemstones have very strong vibrations and act like radio transmitters, transmitting their messages for good or for bad all of the time.

Dr. Bhattacharyya says that the seven principal gems — ruby, pearl, coral, emerald, moonstone, diamond and sapphire — are inexhaustible sources for the seven cosmic rays constituting the cosmos or the universe.

I have had some interesting personal experiences with the healing properties of gemstones, although I suspect that like other cures they do not work the same for everyone.

One of my clients was greatly disturbed because her daughter was having problems with her menstruation. She has given me permission to tell the story but without revealing her daughter's name as this might cause her embarrassment.

This young lady, from Oradell, N.J., had experienced irregularity in her menstrual periods since her early teens and her parents had taken her to outstanding clinics and doctors here and abroad. Now in college her irregular and painful menstruation was causing the young lady continued concern.

I suggested that she wear a yellow jasper pendant on a gold chain so that it touched her skin constantly. Her mother was obviously amused and dubious but the urgency of the situation and her desire not to hurt my feelings prompted her to accept the jasper pendant and to suggest that her daughter wear it.

She said later, "I was embarrassed to tell her why I was giving it to her; it seemed so ridiculous; I just gave it to her and asked her to wear it for awhile. Exactly 28 days after one menstrual period she began to menstruate again and for several months her periods were regular and she had no pain. I was very happy but still doubtful that the jasper pendant had anything to do with it. Then one day she called to say she was several weeks overdue and having a lot of pain. I asked if she had taken the pendant off and she said, 'Yes, the chain broke and I haven't been wearing it for awhile.' I then told her why I had asked her to wear it and she immediately put it on a string and began to wear it again. Within a few days her period began and she hasn't had any trouble since. Needless to say, she never again will discard her jasper pendant."

Mrs. Terry Wenzel, of New York City, was very upset in May, 1968, when, she says, "Dr. Swick of New York City told me that there was a tumor on my kidney and I would have to undergo an operation to remove it. I visited other doctors who confirmed the diagnosis but I decided to go to the Pocono Mountains for a rest before undergoing surgery. I was in pain all the time and when my landlady Mrs. Walter Miller suggested that I try gem therapy I was ready to try anything. I got a piece of polished chalcedony which I had blessed by the priest and I wore it around my neck on a gold chain from early in August until I went into the hospital on September 11. I was in the hospital for four days of tests and they couldn't find any trace of a tumor or anything else wrong with me, so they released me and now I feel fine. I'm certainly glad I tried gem therapy!"

Miss Betty Billings, who serves as nurse to H. J. Reilly, the physiotherapist recommended by Edgar Cayce who still practices in Oakridge, N.J., had pain in her right leg. There was no apparent cause but she wasn't able to get relief by any conventional method. I gave her a bloodstone pendant which she put on. After a shortwhile the pain lessened and in a few days was gone.

She says, "I never took the bloodstone off, even to bathe, for over a year and during that time I had no pain. I even forgot why I had started wearing it. Then for some reason I stopped wearing the bloodstone and soon the pain returned. When I was reminded of the healing I had experienced originally I began wearing the pendant again and I have had no pain since."

Four years ago Dr. G. D. Zehner of Tannersville, Pa., diagnosed the trouble in Aunty Em's knee as arthritis. He gave her a shot which afforded temporary relief but soon the pain returned. "Aunty Em," as primitive artist Emma A. Miller of Pocono Pines, Pa., signs her paintings, then decided to try gem therapy. She also obtained a bloodstone, carved into a heart-shaped pendant about one and one-half inches across, and began to wear it on a 14-carat gold chain around her neck.

She says, "I made sure it touched my skin 24 hours a day and soon the pain disappeared. For two years I didn't have any trouble but then the chain broke and I didn't wear the bloodstone for awhile. After a couple of months the pain returned so I had the chain repaired and started wearing it again. I also borrowed my husband Walt's bloodstone pendant and wore that, too. I haven't had any trouble since — knock on wood."

Anyone who saw Aunty Em bustling around in her psychedelic sunbonnet and near miniskirt, serving her own home-made dandelion wine at the opening of her recent art show at Gallery 9 in Englewood Cliffs, N.J., certainly wouldn't believe there was any problem with this 76-year-old artist.

Gem therapists throughout recorded history have concurred that pearls, gemstones of all kinds, metals and plants applied directly to the human skin exercise an electromagnetic influence over the physical cells. You may want to experiment with one or more of the ninety gemstones in the hope of discovering the gem which will bring the healing forces, creative vibrations, psychic ability, protection and influences you need.

By studying the available books on the subject — particularly Twenty-two Gems, Stones and Metals, published by the A.R.E. Press, Virginia Beach, Va. — and by careful experimentation you should be able to find the gemstone which will bring increased health, happiness and prosperity into your daily life.

"I Met a Psychic in Shanghai..."

"Although Madame Hahn's accurate predictions were widely publicized, I believed her just another 'fortune-teller.' "

By Martin F. Fischer

I WAS A seaman in August, 1945, on a merchant vessel in the South Pacific headed for the Marshall Islands with supplies for the Seabees. Headed also for an encounter with a Shanghai fortune-teller who foretold a chain of events which proved the wisdom of Thomas Campbell's words:

'Tis the sunset of life gives me mystical lore,

And coming events cast their shadows before.

When the Japanese surrendered we were ordered to Leyte Gulf in the Philippines — a stay that was to last four months — four whole months without shore leave, a punishment all of us sustained for the misbehavior of a few. Not even the officers were allowed to go ashore.

In the first week of January, 1946, we proceeded to Shanghai, about a week's sail from Leyte. Here we stayed until the middle of May and in this period the crewmen had shore leave every day, except those on watch. Our pay was regular — every five days — and after Europe and the South Pacific, Shanghai was a sailor's heaven.

Girls, girls, girls — Chinese and White Russian — and plentiful reasonably-priced liquor. The nightclubs and dance halls were jumping. But one could meet "nice" Eurasian girls, the offspring of European fathers and Chinese mothers, only at private parties.

At one of these parties I met a Chinese woman, Mrs. Suzi Seiter, who had been widowed for about five years. Her husband Charles, a Welshman, had been employed by the Shanghai Water Works and died of pneumonia in 1941, leaving her at the age of 42 with two daughters in their 20's and a 13-year-old son. She asked me directly if I were married. I was 53 years old but never had married. With the war at an end, however, I now wanted very much to find the "right" woman. When I left the party Mrs. Seiter gave me her address and invited me to look her up.

A few days later I saw Suzi again and we started dating. One sunny day in April, in a ricksha traveling down Bubbling Well Road, she said, "We are both single. Why don't we get married?"

I was not surprised because I had let her know I liked her very much. I replied, "Why not? The only obstacle is money. If the Coast Guard doesn't give me my discharge I won't get paid here and I have more than $2,000 coming."

Suzi said, "I know a fortuneteller, a refugee Jewess from Vienna, 'Madame Hahn.' She recently was written up in the Shanghai Daily News, for she accurately predicted the end of the war and many other important events. She's somewhere on Bubbling Well Road. Let's go to see her and find out if you can stay in China!"

I agreed and we visited Madame Hahn the next day—but her words set our plans awry.

She told me I would have to return to the United States to get my discharge from the Coast Guard as well as my back pay. Then she said, "You are going to meet a girl in Latin America. You will fall in love with her and marry her. She will become pregnant in the first year of your marriage and during the pregnancy she will become very ill and almost die. However, she will recover and bear a healthy baby girl. When your first daughter is about a year and a half old your wife will have a miscarriage and again narrowly miss death. In another year she will have another miscarriage and this time the doctor will say she can't have any more children."

My Chinese widow was very sad, for she believed the fortuneteller. I did not—except I supposed that what she had said about the discharge and my back pay was true.

In May, 1946, my ship was ordered to leave China for the United States. We were paid off in Wilmington, Cailf., and given train tickets for New York. I planned to rejoin the Merchant Marine but I stopped over in El Paso, Tex., for a brief holiday.

One Sunday in June I boarded the streetcar to cross the Rio Grande to Juarez, Mexico, to see a bullfight. When I reached the bullring I saw many people entering but the man at the ticket window said, "No bullfight to-day. The Juarez Lions' Club is having a fiesta to raise funds for charity. After the show there will be a public dance and you can meet some girls."

I decided I might as well see what the fiesta was like. After a good floor show staged by Mexican dancers and singers I joined the crowd for dancing. I approached one of the older women and asked her to dance and she accepted. Between dances I learned that she was 36 years old, single, and a schoolteacher in the Juarez public schools, now on summer vacation. Her name was Lucina Lara and she had been born in Camargo, Chihuahua, Mexico. We made a date for the next day and after about two weeks of seeing her constantly I asked her to marry me. Only later did I remember the fortune-teller had said I would marry a Latin-American girl.

Lucina didn't think it wise to marry on so short an acquaintance but she accepted a diamond ring I had bought to seal the engagement. When I went back to New York to the Merchant Marine I carried her picture with me. I wrote her from every port we touched and sent her flowers or candy whenever we docked in the United States.

In February, 1948, I quit the Merchant Marine and bought a car to go to El Paso and claim my bride. We were married in June at the Juarez Baptist Church — just two years after we met at the bullring.

I got a job as a construction worker building the now-famous replica of Fort Bliss. Rooms were hard to find in El Paso and we had to live with Senora Lara Mendoza, my mother-in-law, in Juarez. My mind kept returning to my own cabin in the Catskills in upstate New York. I had built the cabin before the war and all my belongings, including hundreds of books, were stored there. Finally I convinced Lucina we would be better off up there and in May, 1949, we traveled by car to New York.

Located about a mile from Cairo, the cabin was in the woods and rough, I'll admit. It was heated by a wood-burning stove and we had to carry water from a nearby creek. My Latin wife always felt cold, even in July, so unaccustomed was she to northern weather. She became pregnant and was sick quite a lot of the time but on August 5, 1949, she gave birth to a healthy seven-pound baby girl. The words of Madame Hahn came back to me. Our baby, Lucy Lara, was born while Lucina was well — but she had suffered, as the fortuneteller had predicted.

When the first frost came in October, everything turned white — the grass and the trees. My wife thought the baby surely would freeze to death if we stayed in the mountains and she begged to return south. So I sent her and the baby to Juarez by plane and remained in New York to sell the cabin and the acre of land it stood on. I didn't get a buyer until February of 1950 and then I had to sacrifice the place for about half what it was worth.

I bought a truck and loaded my belongings into it for the trip to El Paso. Reunited with my family, again I found construction work and now our housing was better too. We had a three-room apartment with all the modern conveniences in a housing project. Lucina was warm, the baby was healthy and with the news that another baby was on the way I had everything a man could ask for. But I had a sense of foreboding. What had the fortune-teller said about our second child?

In February, 1951, a year after my return to El Paso, I came home one evening from a meeting of the Building Laborers and Hodcarriers Union to find my wife and baby gone. She had left a note saying she was ill and had taken the baby to the Juarez home of her sister, Senora Ofelia Perez.

I arrived there about midnight and Ofelia assured me she would take care of my family so I could go to work without worrying about them. I went to Juarez every day and Lucina's condition did not seem to change. Then on Saturday, only a few days after Lucina had taken ill, her best friend, Senorita Consuela de la Puente, came to our home. She was very agitated and told me to rush to Juarez. Lucina had lapsed into unconsciousness. When I reached her bedside I thought she was dying. While we waited for the doctor I bowed my head and prayed.

I opened my eyes to find some color had come back to Lucina's face and her breathing was more regular. But Dr. Valdez, when he arrived, said we must rush her to the Municipal Hospital. He told all of us to ride with her in the ambulance as she would need blood transfusions immediately. Her nephew, Sergio Perez, had the same blood type and it was he who provided the blood that made her well again in a few days. But she had lost the baby.

Again the fortune-teller had been right.

In another year, 1952, Lucina had another miscarriage but this time it happened while she was in Municipal Hospital under Dr. Valdez's care — and he told her she could not have any more children.

Everything Madame Hahn had said that day, six years ago in 1946, in Shanghai had come true.

AS A YOUNG man in New York I attended classes in Eastern Philosophy held by a Hindu sage, Rishi Sherval. He himself had studied with Masters of the Far East in Tibet and I thought him the wisest, purest and noblest man I ever had met. When he left New York for Santa Barbara, Calif., I kept in touch with him.

Now that Madame Hahn's predictions had come full circle I wrote Rishi Sherval and told him these circumstances. I asked if this were predestination.

"Yes," he replied, "there is predestination but you are the predestiner. You reap what you sow in this universe of law and order. There is no escape. You and your wife set the causes in motion in former incarnations which brought about the final outcome. The psychic in Shanghai simply saw the shadow of things to come."

UFOs

PANIC

VERACRUZ

Testimony of thousands of eyewitnesses can't be brushed off when backed by meteorological recordings.

By Jay Sanderson

A SERIES OF awe-inspiring phenomena woke residents of the Mexican states of Veracruz, Tabasco and Oaxaca at 2:16 A.M. (CST) March 27, 1968. Especially the residents of Veracruz, the state capital and apparent vortex of the visitation, were paralyzed with fear and wonder.

At first the sky was flooded with brilliant light which made the night as bright as noon. Small groups, then hundreds and finally thousands of persons rushed into the streets screaming in mortal terror.

As their eyes adjusted to the blinding brilliance the people saw that it came not from one source but from several. Some swear they discerned the outlines of smooth round objects in the sky.

Seconds after the blinding light illuminated the city of Veracruz and its environs a great crashing roar assailed the ears of the throngs in the streets. The intense white glare began to change; the sky and air turned brilliant green, then bright blue. As the frightened crowds watched, the skyborne objects appeared to approach the earth. Then they paled — their glows extinguished.

Almost simultaneously the earth trembled. Earthquake! Homes and buildings vibrated, windowpanes rattled and shattered. Thousands more sought the relative safety of the streets, praying, jostling, shouting, "What's happening?" "Spaceships!" "My God, save me, save my family!"

When it was over the panic-stricken throngs seemed unable to realize it. Chief of Police Hector Hernandez Tello said later, "It was as if the mobs couldn't even hear or understand our policemen! Some men and women were beating their heads on the pavement; at one church a priest came out to help quiet the frantic mob besieging the church, clawing at the doors trying to get in. They fell on him and almost disrobed him . . . as if they didn't even hear what he was saying!"

"Our police almost had to battle the crowds to restore order. In some ways, the panic of the people was worse than what happened."

* * *

WHAT HAD happened? Instruments at the Weather Bureau station in Veracruz recorded the phenomena. The barograph and the seismograph traced visual and lasting proof: not only had there been an earthquake of moderate intensity at the same time in all of the three states — Veracruz, Tabasco and Oaxaca — but its effect on the sea itself had registered. Oceanographers reported that fountain-like spray churned up along the coastline of the Gulf of Mexico and witnesses claim to have seen a miniature tidal wave.

The crew of the oceangoing tanker Alfa-Mex II and their captain, Jaime Tiburcio Lara, gave lucid accounts of what they saw. They said mysterious objects appeared to fall to earth — or into the sea — at a point they estimated to be 50 miles distant but they were not sure they had seen the actual impact. The ship was about three miles out in the Gulf off Villa Rica, a small town 25 miles from Veracruz.

If there were a point of impact (they couldn't agree on this) they said it had to be in a limited area near the small towns of Huasteco and Coscomatepec, within 20 miles of the larger cities of Cordoba and Jalapa.

At first, Weather Bureau observers were inclined to believe that the "things" were tiny, almost microscopic fragments of meteorites; nothing new, they said. However, it seems implausible that "tiny" objects would light up the sky with blinding brilliance or that they could be related to an earthquake or the tremendous, grinding, roaring, ripping noise which persisted throughout the occurrence.

Crewmen on the Mexican gunboat Guanajuato had something to say on the subject of whether the objects were meteorites. They had seen "falling stars" before, they said, and these objects were far too brilliant and colorful to be meteorites or meteorite fragments. Some of these men ventured the opinion that the Hector Canseco, Allende Penitentiary official, witnessed night's happenings from his terrace, where he was resting due to the heat of the night.

"things" were disintegrated parts of some rocket or spaceship previously launched from earth.

* * *

ERNESTO Dominguez, aged 51, chief of the Mexican Department of Meteorology, is one of the Republic's most knowledgeable scientists. He is in charge of a complex organization which includes some 50 sea-going vessels stationed at various points in the Gulf of Mexico, most of them commanded by qualified graduate engineers, and hundreds of other weather stations similarly manned in the various states of Mexico.

After his study of all aspects of the phenomena of March 27, Chief Dominguez said, "This may not have been — probably was not meteorites. We cannot say what it really was.

"We do know that it did not fall to earth. The trajectory (of the object or objects) was curved: imagine a jet or spaceship, if you will, suddenly going out of control and plunging directly toward the earth. Then, as if control suddenly were regained, the object abruptly veers away from the earth moments before collision." This was the pattern of the phenomena over Veracruz and meteorites do not follow such a pattern. He added that it certainly was unlikely that a meteorite would swerve to avoid collision.

Chief Dominguez also remarked that when the objects came close enough to show a discernible outline — at a height estimated to be five or 10 miles above the earth — even then they appeared to be more than two yards wide. If at that great height they were visible they "very well could have been truly enormous in size." He would not even guess as to their actual size or what they were.

He was asked, "What caused the earthquake, the turbulence of the sea and the tremendous roaring noise?"

The Chief replied, "Pressure. Incalculably great pressure. It — or they — came near enough to the earth to exert this vast pressure, then veered away.

"We think the earthquake and the noise were caused when the objects were nearest the earth — about 1600 feet high. It was at this point that collision was averted and the thing or things abruptly changed course."

In his official report in the April, 1968, issue of the Department of Meteorology's Boletin Climatico Dominguez likened the object to a tremendous glowing ball. From the many accounts he had sifted he learned that offshoots of flame had been seen, similar to those visible when a rocket is launched. The trajectory of the object was stated as from east-northeast to west-southwest.

One of the most remarkable comments in the official report (confirmed by almost all of the eyewitnesses) is that at the onset of the phenomena, temperatures lowered — but as the color of the glare changed from brilliant white to green to blue, the sensation of cold changed to one of heat. Why? No one, not even Dominguez, ventured to explain this.

He estimated the speed of the objects as roughly 43.47 miles a second — 2,608.2 miles a minute or 156,492 miles an hour! He added that had the strange objects collided with the earth there would have been widespread destruction as from a bomb.

Many and varied were the opinions of eyewitnesses as to exactly what the objects were. Some claimed they had made out the outlines of cylindrical, metallic-looking pieces of — something. Others stated the things were globular; still others that they were flat and oval-shaped.

Subdirector Hector Canseco of the Allende State Penitentiary who was at home and resting on his terrace because of the heat that morning, saw it all.

"Like a ball of fire," he said. "But there was a vaguely cylindrical shape to it. We were frightened."

Guards Filiberto Mallorguin Rodriguez and Tomas Baruch Sulvarian on night duty at the penitentiary expressed similar opinions.

High school teacher Elias Gomez, aged 36, of Veracruz was awake. He drives a cab part-time and had just parked his car in front of his home on Avenue Juarez. Said Gomez:

"I would swear it had a round, somewhat cylindrical shape. I've never seen a flying saucer but now I've seen something I can truthfully say was an 'unidentified flying object.' That was no meteorite! It scared the daylights out of me and my family."

While he did not witness the Veracruz occurrence, newsman-photographer Gerardo Su Hernandez of Mexico City's Diario de la Tarde, an amateur astronomer, scoffed at the idea of UFOs. He said, "As many as 80 million meteorites enter the earth's atmosphere every day. The speed at which they are falling determines their brilliance or incandescence because they ignite as they enter the earth's atmosphere. I cannot believe that one would fall at that speed, however.

"The meteorites are visible when they are between 75 and 87 miles above the earth. Before impact they usually disintegrate into microscopic fragments, often like powder."

I asked him, "If these 'things' which fell toward the earth near Veracruz were microscopic, why was there such an unusual if not unique brilliance as compared to that of the larger one that hit near Poza Rica three years ago?"

"Why . . . I just don't know . . ." he replied.

Three years ago a meteorite fell near Poza Rica about 40 miles north of Veracruz, causing a faint earth tremor felt within a four or five mile radius and causing a mild sensation — that meteorite was discovered and found to be more than three feet in diameter. The illuminatory effects? No more than the brief, flashing descent of the usual "falling star," as they often and erroneously are called. The Poza Rica meteorite is on display at the Palacio Mineria in Mexico City.

The Rev. Presbitero Luis Rodriguez Pretelin, Pastor of the San Cristobal church and parish in Alvarado, a town about 30 miles southeast of Veracruz, witnessed the phenomena. Quickly rejecting the meteorite hypothesis, he stated the whole matter was a divine message to the people to turn away from their sins and worldliness.

Pearl Gonzalez, a seasoned writer for the Mexico City Daily News, the leading English-language newspaper in Latin America, is not a scientist but she has seen the phenomena that is loosely called "ball lightning."

She believes this is the explanation of the Veracruz phenomena. According to Mrs. Gonzalez, ball lightning produces the same optical and auditory effects (but she concedes that Weather Bureau Chief Dominguez's opinions would be better grounded).

History records that in the morning hours of November 15, 1833, approximately 240,000 meteorites of the Leonides shower fell to earth. But even this great number did not cause such brilliance as appeared over Veracruz on March 27.

The unanswered question remains:

What did come within a hair-breadth of colliding with the earth in the early morning hours of March 27, 1968, near Veracruz, Mexico? Something did . . . and caused the greatest panic the states of Veracruz, Tabasco and Oaxaca ever have known.

TWICE TOLD

THE EVENING of January 7, 1969, when I finished reading an article on the Hong Kong flu in my local paper, the New Orleans Times-Picayune, I tuned in the TV program titled, "New Orleans: Medical Center of the Americans," and listened to four doctors talk about the Hong Kong flu for half an hour. Seeking something a little lighter in the way of entertainment I checked the TV listings for the name of the late movie. It was titled "Coffin From Hong Kong."

I wondered if the newspaper and TV were trying to tell me something and the next day I rushed to the doctor for my flu shot.

LAND OF THE DEAD

By Elaine R. Foster

ONE MONTH before the assassination of Robert Kennedy I had a strange dream. I dreamed I heard a flapping of wings outside my bedroom window. It was so real that in my dream I got out of bed and looked through the open window. There I saw a large black bird (I thought it was a raven) stationary in midair rapidly flapping its wings. It spoke to me in a low sonorous voice: "Follow me." I climbed through the ground floor window and followed, floating near the ground, for a long distance, the "raven" just above and ahead of me. Then we seemed to rise above the earth and float purposefully forward in semidarkness. I felt we traveled the length of California from south to north.

When we came to a tall wide gate in a fence of black iron bars topped with pointed spikes, the bird again flapped its wings rapidly making the whirring sound I had heard outside my window. The gate swung slowly inward. The bird entered and in pitch-darkness I followed, now walking. As the gate closed I could see nothing but I heard a low mournful moaning which became increasingly louder. Many voices seemed to join in and the sound rose to frantic screaming. When it seemed my eardrums would burst the bird suddenly reappeared and with it came complete silence. The bird spoke curtly, "We will go on," and we did.

Still in silence I floated after the bird and shortly we came to a brilliant white-hot fire. At the fire's edge stood a painted sign. In red runny paint, as if hurriedly and carelessly done, its letters read, "The Land of the Dead."

Unhesitatingly the bird passed through the fire. Although I expected to be enveloped in the flames I didn't flinch. We emerged from the brilliance of the fire into semidarkness and ahead of us the shadowy figure of a man in a business suit appeared, gradually becoming iridescent and glimmering. I was astonished to recognize Robert Kennedy, his face ashen and his expression sad and strained.

As his face and figure faded the bird and I continued on and into a small building, then into a room lined with maps. On the floor was a huge map of the United States. As I peered down at it the state of California seemed to light up and burn vigorously until it was completely charred. Then the rest of the map burned in the same way, as if the fire had spread, devouring the whole country.

I walked out of the building and heard the raven croaking ominously as it disappeared into the black night sky. Then with a feeling of utter desolation I awoke — and on June 5, 1968, the day Robert Kennedy was shot the desolation returned. — San Bernardino, Calif.

SAVED BY A CREWMAN'S DREAM

Will Bert Evans, Jr.

IN THE SPRING of 1947 I was stationed aboard the U.S.S. Patrol Craft Escort 903, a naval weather vessel proceeding to a point approximately 1,000 miles northeast of the Hawaiian Islands. Our orders required that we leave port (we were based at Pearl Harbor) every other month and take up our station code-named "Baker" to gather weather information.

We had been at sea for several days when one of the enlisted men announced he had dreamed our ship was about to hit a mine. In his dream he envisioned a "horned" mine, the type that explodes on contact with a ship's steel hull, which had broken loose from its undersea moorings and was floating on the surface. I was one of several enlisted men who heard him describe what he had seen in the dream.

I don't suppose any of the 70-odd men of the ship's complement were particularly superstitious. We risked our necks every time we rode out one of those howling Pacific storms. But a PCE is a small vessel and we were several days from the nearest port. Superstitious or not, we placed an extra lookout on the ship's bow.

The following morning the lookout yelled, "Mine! Mine dead ahead!" The watch officer ordered, "Hard left!" and the helmsman spun the wheel as fast and as far as he could. An astonished but grateful crew watched the "horned" mine sweep harmlessly past the ship on the starboard side. — Pine Bluff, Ark.

BY THE SPRING of 1936 multiple sclerosis had taken from me the power to walk. On October 10 that year I lay in my twilight-darkened bedroom in our home in Redgranite, Wis., knowing little more than that my mother and father were sitting beside my bed. I heard Mother's voice as if from a distance saying, "We must call Dr. Beck. He won't be able to get here from Wautoma until 10 o'clock." I heard a door close; then all was quiet.

From some distant realm came music and a kaleidoscopic glow of light. Slowly my body seemed to float up toward the light. I heard a voice — my aunt Ella Christenson's voice — saying, "I'll go in place of her."

Although I could not see Aunt

Ella I knew she was talking directly to me when she said, "When the doctor comes, have him come to my house."

Slowly the light dimmed and melted into the lamplight of my room. I felt a new buoyancy and the semicomma seemed to lift. When the doctor finally arrived at my bedside I was feeling better than I had for weeks.

I couldn't tell the doctor that my aunt needed him without arousing a curiosity and questions that I couldn't satisfy, so I remained quiet.

Kathleen Knutson

Three days later dogs howling near my Aunt Ella's house not far from ours in Redgranite disturbed the neighbors. When she did not answer her doorbell, they had to break into the house. They found Aunt Ella dead. She has suffered from myocarditis and the doctors verified her fatal attack had occurred at approximately the time I heard her voice on the night of October 10, 1936. — Redgranite, Wis.

PHEASANT FROM HEAVEN?

By Edna Marchand

BEFORE THE stock market crash in the late 1920's most businesses were booming — but mine was not. I was living in Bellingham, Wash., and selling on a commission basis, trying — unsuccessfully — to introduce a new patent medicine. One Sunday in 1927 my finances hit an all-time low. I had only a few cents in my purse and no food at all.

Rather than fretting over my plight I turned to God. As I sat praying and meditating passages from the Bible kept coming to me:

“And there went forth a wind from the Lord and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp . . .” Numbers 11:31.

“The people asked, and he brought quails, and satisfied them with the bread of Heaven.” Psalms 105:40.

Suddenly something told me to board the southbound Bellingham streetcar and ride to the end of the line. I had enough money for carfare but it seemed a strange thing to do, for it was food I needed — not a walk through the woods of “Happy Valley” which lay at the end of the line. Nevertheless, I am accustomed to obeying such urges so soon I found myself enjoying the autumn colors and the fresh crisp air of a beautiful fall day.

Just as I noticed two men a little ways away with a hunting dog I was startled by two loud shots. I looked up quickly to see a pheasant plummeting toward me. It landed near where I stood but neither the dog nor the men came to get it. How strange, I thought, hunters shooting game and not bothering to pick it up.

The men moved farther into the woods, their dog ahead of them. When I was sure the dog would not come bouncing back I decided the pheasant — a large Chinese male bird of gorgeous plumage — was meant for me. I thought of the verse, “He rained flesh also upon them in dust and feathered fowls like as sand . . .” Psalms 78:27.

How to get my prize home? I looked around and found some newspaper and a paper bag. Just the ticket. With my bird under my arm I boarded the streetcar back to town.

But my problem wasn’t solved. I had no cooking facilities. I prayed for further guidance and soon it came to me that I was to go to Mr. Beams. He was an old friend who had a men’s clothing store on Holly Street with living quarters in the rear. When I told him my experience and offered to share the bird he was delighted.

Mr. Beams had a well-stocked kitchen and he fixed up a real banquet for us. After we had eaten we relaxed, comfortably satisfied, and laughed about having game without hunting for it. As I thought over the happenings of the day I recalled another verse from Exodus: ". . . speak unto them saying, At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread; and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God." — Everett, Wash.

A FIND IN THE ASHES

By Ginni Shuflata

IN THE YEAR 1930, my father Albert Roberts was away on business from his Mamaroneck, N.Y., home and my mother had to make a two-day trip to their summer home in Kent Cliffs, N.Y. My husband Ken and I were elected to dog-sit and keep the ancestral home fires burning, so we moved in for the duration.

Before Ken left for work the next morning, I asked him for money to do my marketing. Since he never carried a wallet he reached into his pocket for a $20 bill he said he had — and found only loose change.

In those Depression days the loss of $20 was a major catastrophe. Since the only place he'd gone the night before was to the neighborhood store for a pack of cigarettes, as soon as he left I hotfooted it to the store to see if the money had been found. It was a forlorn hope, of course, and fruitless.

When Mother came home late that morning I told her about the loss and she agreed it must have dropped on the floor when he paid for the cigarettes and I might as well forget it.

Right after lunch I drove to town to shop, somewhat limited financially, and when I returned Mother met me at the door with a strange look in her eyes. She was very pale and I cried in alarm, "What's the matter?"

She said, "Sit down and I'll tell you. Last night I dreamed about ashes. Everywhere I went there were piles of ashes and for no apparent reason I would rake through them with my fingers. When I awoke the dream stayed with me. I couldn't seem to banish it from my mind. Then as I was driving home I saw two boys in a field rummaging through a pile of ashes and that made my dream even more vivid.

"After you left I was washing dishes when suddenly I had an uncontrollable urge to go to the basement. With dripping hands I followed that urge as if in a trance. There I walked around aimlessly until I found myself irresistibly drawn to the coal scuttle, which was full of ashes.

"As if I were reliving my dream I dug into that scuttle with my wet hands — and this is what I found."

She reached into her apron pocket and drew out a $20 bill.—

ALBERT EINSTEIN, DOWSER

By Rho Sigma

PROF. ALBERT Einstein was an ardent and skilled dowser who showed his friends practical applications of the art of dowsing. So reports the Swiss magazine RGS, which deals with such subjects as radiation-biology and geopathy.

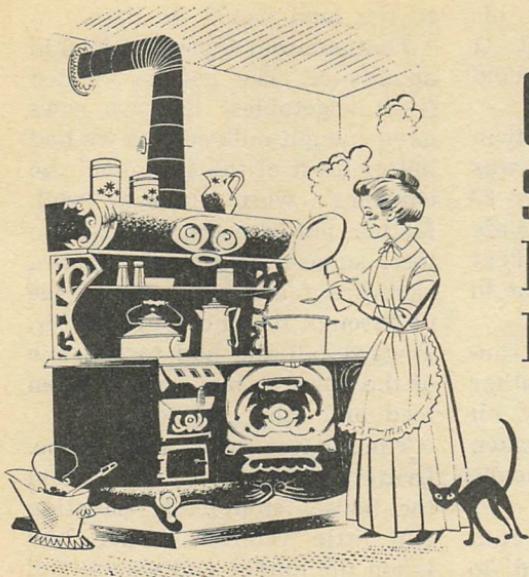

In a report by Emmy Kittemann of Tegernsee, Bavaria, Albert Einstein's friend Herman Wolf of Bremen is quoted as saying that the celebrated scientist frequently was a guest in Wolf's parents' rural home. At one time when he was there they happened to bring up for discussion a serious problem of hidden leakages from a huge pond in their garden. To the astonishment of his hosts, Professor Einstein said he might be able to help. Taking a dowsing rod he walked out to the pond and in short time pinpointed the exact location of the underground flow that was draining the pond. Then he proceeded to teach his hosts the fine points of the art of dowsing.

"Professor Einstein taught my father, my brother and me how to find these hidden leakages with the dowsing rod. Later, I was able to locate numerous wells for my friends," Mr. Wolf said.

The Swiss magazine concludes, "Professor Einstein, the world-famous scientist, not only did not ridicule dowsing, he practiced the art himself and even taught it to others. A remarkable fact indeed."

GOD SENT THREE BAGS OF FLOUR

By Ruth B. Allen

Mariah, determined to prove up her Wisconsin homestead, had been deserted — by all but God.

IN 1895 MY parents Ned and Mariah Bisbee took out a homestead in Adams County, Wisconsin. It was a wooded 40 acres three and a half miles from the main road and just as far from the nearest neighbor and about 15 miles southwest of Plainfield.

Father built a sturdy one-room log house, cleared fields, dug a well and built a roadway. As his children came along Father added another room and finally built a small barn to house the horses and cows.

Then in July, 1901, Father left us.

My grandparents were Syrina Lincoln, a cousin of Abraham Lincoln, and Jiba Bisbee. Their son Ned, my father, grew up feeling that with Lincoln blood in his veins he would have a son who might — no, must — follow in the footsteps of the Illinois railsplitter who became his nation's president.

The first child, however, was a girl but two years later Richard was born. His sturdy little son was Father's pride and joy, who in manhood would fulfill his great expectations. But at 11 months Richard died of typhoid fever.

I came next in 1899 with a twin brother, Ralph, but my twin was a blue baby and lived only 23 hours. My father was desolate and Mother later told us he kept saying, "God doesn't want me to have a son."

When my parents knew another child was coming, Father told Mother, "If it's a boy I'll know that God hasn't forsaken me but if it's a girl, I'll leave you."

When Grace was born in January, 1901, Father seemed to accept and love his new little daughter, but Mother later believed the loss of his two sons had unsettled his mind.

For a few months Father went about his usual work and fixed the barn roof and rechinked the log cabin. Then suddenly on July 14, 1901, he packed his things and left, never to return. I was only a little more than two years old but I remember his going. I cried for him for weeks.

Mother was left alone with three little girls and Maude, the oldest, was only six. Friends and relatives advised Mother to leave the homestead and move into town where she easily could get work. But Mother was determined to prove up the homestead so the land would be hers.

That summer there was food in abundance. The garden yielded fresh vegetables, the two cows gave enough milk so that we had butter most of the time, and the chickens were laying well. Mother put into the cellar potatoes, squash, pumpkins, apples, sauerkraut and salt pork to see us through the oncoming winter. Toward fall she had to sell one of the cows to buy hay, chicken feed and other staples.

The winter was a bad one. Drifting snow piled high around the house, completely isolating our little family. Father had taken the horses and wagon and we had no way of getting through the deep snow. Our only contact with the outside world was the visit by one of the neighbor boys who brought us a rabbit early in February.

By March, to Mother's horror, food was getting scarce. Only potatoes were left in the cellar, the cow was almost dry, the hens laid only an occasional egg and the flour barrel was all but empty. Then came the terrifying night when Mother had used the last of the flour and had given the last of the bread to her little girls for supper.

After she had tucked us into bed, Mother dropped to her knees and asked God for flour. After her prayer, she felt relieved and slept well that night — for the first time in weeks.

When morning came Mother put on her coat, picked up the water pail and opened the door. In the bright winter sunshine she looked down at the doorstep to see a 50-pound bag of flour, dry and undamaged by the light snow that had fallen during the night. And she could find no footprints in that snow.

The next day my uncle, Frank Bisbee, came to our house bringing a bag of flour. He said that while he had been shopping the day before the thought came to him, "Mariah needs flour." He was short of cash, however, so he started home without a bag for us. When he had gone only a short distance the thought came again — strongly this time as if someone had spoken: "Mariah needs flour." His horses seemed to turn around of their own accord and he was on his way back to the store. This time Uncle Frank bought the flour and then came the 15 miles from Plainfield through snow and drifts to our isolated family.

On the way he had stopped to pick up Mother's mail. Among the several letters was one from a dear friend, Mrs. McCallen of Plainfield, who sent enough money for a bag of flour.

"Somehow I felt you needed flour," the letter explained.

Mother told us this story over and over through the years to show us that our Heavenly Father answered her prayer by guiding Uncle Frank and Mrs. McCallen in their kindly deeds. But the first bag of flour — so mysteriously delivered to our door . . . was it a gift from God Himself?

ETERNAL LIFE?

THE SECRET OF eternal life may lie hidden in the giant sequoia of California, the world's largest living thing. Scientists have yet to find a giant sequoia dying of natural causes. They fall prey to such calamities as soil erosion or the woodsman's axe but not to pests or old age. The bark is one of the tree's secrets of survival. It is nonresinous and fibrous and grows two feet thick. Found in both the wood and bark of the sequoia is tannin, a chemical that helps the trees resist blight, insects and rot. Fallen sequoia logs that have lain on the ground for centuries still are sound.

How to Read TEA LEAVES

A little practice with this most ancient of occult arts will lead to the flowering of your own psychic ability.

By D. K. Bowen

IF YOU EVER have seen animal forms in the clouds, faces in the leaves of trees or letters and numbers in the chance shadows on ice and snow, you can learn to look into a teacup and read messages in tea leaves.

One of the earliest and easiest methods of foretelling the future, tea-leaf reading always has been the first step in training occult powers, for it requires no special talent — only the ability to relax and to allow your inner self to take over.

Not just any tea leaves will do, however. Ordinary bulk tea is too coarse. The best consistency is that to be found in tea-bags, for it must be very fine. Also, it must be combined with certain herbs, each of which has its own meaning. Altogether they allow symbols relating to various aspects of life to appear with greater clarity. All of the herbs are common and available in any supermarket. They are mint, sage, basil, parsley, rosemary and dill weed.

To make tea for the purpose of reading the leaves combine one ounce of each herb, crushed as finely as possible, with three ounces of fine orange pekoe tea (from teabags). Put these ingredients in an airtight container and mix well. It is essential that they be mixed again just before they are used.

When you are preparing to give a reading, always use a plain white china cup so that no design will intrude on the symbols formed by the leaves. Use one teaspoon of tea for each cup and fill the cup with boiling water. Allow the tea to steep, stirring it once or twice to distribute its strength. When it appears strong enough, allow the tea to stand a moment while the leaves settle. If your friend chooses, a dash of lemon or artificial sweetener may be added to flavor the tea but never add milk or sugar.

When the leaves have settled, your friend should drink all of the liquid, then holding the cup upside-down over the saucer, tap it three times to expel any excess liquid. Finally the cup should be allowed to stand (still upside-down) on the saucer for at least a minute. In this period the leaves will form a definite pattern. The few minute particles of leaves the drinker will have imbibed with the tea will not affect the reading in any way.

Now you, the reader, will look into the cup. As you study the leaves a sign will appear to you. Relate the sign and the message you feel. Turn the cup slightly counterclockwise and study the leaves until another sign itself known. Continue doing this until you have seen all the signs you can find. That is a complete reading, no matter how brief. Naturally, as you grow more proficient you will see more signs.

A maximum of two readings a week should be made for any one person. Never give two readings in one day for the same person!

To assist you in this fascinating occult practice I have compiled a list of the most common signs and symbols which appear in the leaves. I have obtained these signs and their meanings from books on herb lore and occultism and with the gracious assistance of friends who practice the art of tea leaf reading.

I have arranged the list alphabetically for your most convenient use. However, you will find that once you become proficient, the symbols and their meanings flow naturally into your mind.

A word about numbers: Any number appearing with the sign relates directly to it. A number "three" with an "X" could mean three people will cross your subject's path — or the meeting may happen on the third day of the third month or in three years. Numbers can mean time, age, date or an amount. They will appear to you and you must give your impression — for therein lies the truth of their meaning.

Also, as you read you may feel that each sign relates directly to the sign before it. If this is your impression, then this is the case and you will read it this way.

The signs listed in the chart are only guideposts. You will begin gradually to feel certain impressions as you see the signs in a cup. For example, you may see an apple in the leaves connoting marital discord. At the same time a strong feeling may come over you that this person never will have any marital discord. This impression is what you, the reader, have seen in the cup and this is what you will relate. The sign merely triggers your own occult powers. On the other hand, accompanying the sign of the apple may be your feeling that the person is heading for great marital trouble. You must have confidence that this is the correct impression. It is best to put aside all you know of your subject and to make no value judgments.

You will benefit from practicing this ancient occult art. It helps you develop your powers of observation and awareness of everyday happenings. It gives you depth of understanding of people and events—a mental bridge out into the world from where you can see forever.

AN INCREDIBLE WALK HOME

By Clarence M. Fink

CHARLES KEMPER, a popular, sober and respected optician of Memphis, Tenn., closed his shop on January 15, 1877, and pushed through a violent rainstorm in an effort to reach his nearby home — only to meet with an insurmountable obstacle, a living horror magnified beyond belief.

Kemper found himself in the midst of an incredible writhing nightmare and his abhorrence of reptiles reached its zenith that raw wintry day. In a place where no snake ever had crossed his path in 20 years, masses of the twisting, squirming creatures filled every foot of his familiar route.

Readers of The New York Times shuddered as they read that "thousands of live snakes, 12 to 18 inches long, covered the Memphis streets and yards."

Local Memphis observers claimed that the snakes were dark brown, almost black. None was seen to fall earthward with the rain.

The Scientific American

"solved" the puzzling event by claiming the common whirlwind explanation, neglecting to mention that the reptiles were found only on the ground, not on roofs or elevated places where a high wind might be expected to deposit some of them. Further, there was no debris deposited — such as earth, rocks, leaves, tufts of grass and other objects usually raised and scattered by the natural whirlwind phenomenon. But this same scientific magazine, dedicated to conform to the principles of exactitude, finished their article: "... but in what locality snakes exist in such abundance is yet a mystery!"

The Monthly Weather Review confirmed that a multitude of snakes were found in a two-block area adding that the fact that snakes don't migrate in January eliminated that as a reason for the mass movement.

What is the answer to this eerie episode? It has stumped science and reason for almost a century.

"The Sea Don't Give Up Easy!"

By Bill Duncan

BILL DUNCAN has given up his career as a newspaper man to become the author of books. After a year on the night police beat for the News Tribune in Fullerton, Calif., years ago he moved to the Long Beach Independent and Press-Telegram where he worked for 17 years. He is married to a newspaper-woman and they have five children ranging in age from seven to 17.

Recently he completed a book on the history of the Queen Mary which will be published to coincide with the opening of the ship in 1969. Now working on a second book he has resigned from the Long Beach newspapers.

Is Old Conch's sea legend true? Once you escape a watery grave are you forever safe from the sea?

THE WATERS OF the Gulf of Mexico pounding against the sugar-white sands of Florida's panhandle are clear, warm, sparkling green — and dangerous.

In the 1940's I was 16 years old and I had a summer job as bait-boy on a deep-sea fishing boat, the Mary Ann out of Panama City, Fla. One day we were seine-fishing for bait in the Gulf on a sandbar a half mile from shore. Standing waist-deep in water pulling a net I stepped off what must have been a sudden drop-off and went in over my head. I was so startled I let go of the net. Almost immediately the swirl of the water around my body changed to a sharp powerful tugging. That dread killer, the undertow, had me in its grip.

I was a strong swimmer and naturally I tried to swim against the undertow to reach sure footing on the sandbar. The harder I swam the farther I seemed to be carried out to sea. I was making no headway and tiring fast.

I began to tread water to get my bearings. The fishing boat lay almost a mile away and the undertow was taking me farther and farther away from it. Now I knew real panic.

Suddenly I realized that someone was shouting. It was "Old Conch," a veteran Greek fisherman, so nicknamed because he found the conch shellfish a delicacy. He stood on the sandbar making a megaphone of his cupped hands.

"Don't fight it, boy! Ride it. It'll take you back . . ." His words were lost on the wind but I had understood enough to obey. As I drifted farther out to sea I wondered if he meant it would take me back to Central America! But suddenly the direction of the current changed. I was being carried toward shore. Swimming and surfing with the waves I made it safely to the beach miles from the sandbar. I had traveled in a wide arc.

When the crew of the fishing boat finally plucked me off the beach I was a badly frightened youngster, shivering with shock. Old Conch came up with a cup of hot cocoa.

"You're a lucky boy," he said. "That's a mean current and you'd beat yourself to death fighting it."

Then he added a curious thing: "You don't have to worry no more. The sea don't give up easy but once you whip her fair and square she'll never take you again. That's the truth, boy."

MANY YEARS PASSED and I had all but forgotten Old Conch's legend of the sea. I had joined the Marine Corps and was stationed aboard the aircraft carrier U.S.S. Midway with the ship's Marine detachment. In 1947 the ship had been dispatched to the Mediterranean on a peace-keeping mission and in February, 1948, lay at anchor off Hyères, France. We were to be there from February 6 to 19 and although sailors and Marines continued to stand regular shipboard watches, liberty meant visiting glamorous Monte Carlo, Nice, Cannes and even Paris.

Marine detachments on navy ships are small units, however, and their liberty schedules are tighter than the regular crew's. On the night of February 15 I was not among those allowed to go ashore — but I managed to buy a liberty card. I paid another Marine, PFC Bill Hanna, $2.00 for his, because he was too broke to go ashore.

In a foreign port servicemen on ships have what we called a "Cinderella curfew," which means at midnight everyone must be back aboard ship. I had an unblemished record in the Marines, had made corporal and now was striking for sergeant. I didn't want to risk getting caught with someone else's liberty card. Having stood gangway watches I knew that at midnight the cards were checked more closely than at earlier hours. To avoid this close scrutiny I was on the dock ready to return to the ship at 11:00 P. M. I was one of the first men aboard the 30-foot liberty launch, a whaleboat used to transport crewmen to and from the ship.

I moved to the bow and waited while other men came aboard. As I stood there a peculiar feeling came over me, a prickly sense of impending danger. Without knowing exactly why I leaped to the dock just as the whaleboat started away. A fleeting memory of that dread day in Florida flashed through my mind as the shore patrol officer severely reprimanded me for "doing a fool trick."

We watched the launch move off toward the breakwater entrance. As the coxswain reached the tip of the rock jetty he turned the craft sharply to head toward the Midway. A freakish giant wave sloshed over the bow, exactly where I had been standing, and swamped the whaleboat. Eight men drowned in the Mediterranean that dark cold February night — but the sea had spared me again.

* * *

THE MIDWAY SAILED for the United States in March, 1948. That year I ended my tour of duty with the Marines, moved to California, was graduated from Woodbury College in Los Angeles and began work as a reporter for the Fullerton (Calif.) News Tribune. The two incidents at sea were almost forgotten until November, 1956.

At that time my friend William J. Barry, a 34-year-old newspaper advertising salesman of Garden Grove, Calif., purchased a 16-foot cabin cruiser and named her Susie. For her maiden voyage he planned to go from Newport Beach to Catalina Island for a weekend holiday. He invited me to join him and some other friends, saying we'd leave Friday evening. I was eager to go and although I worked nights I made arrangements with a co-worker to change shifts.

Sometime during that Friday — November 2 — Old Conch came into my mind and a prickly feeling of danger haunted me. I telephoned Barry and begged off, explaining my strange premonition.

A humorous Irishman, Barry made light of my words and quipped, "Man, you're a jinx. I'll bring you some fish."

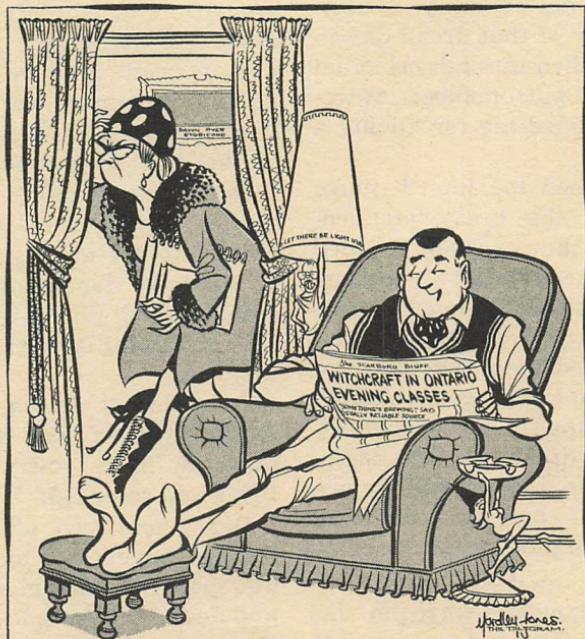

Barry and two other men — Henry Zucchero, aged 40, a newspaper staff photographer, and Jack Primrose, 31, a Garden Grove insurance salesman — set out Friday night for Catalina, which lies 26 miles from the mainland, about a four-hour trip for the Susie.

The small craft never made it. The half-submerged cruiser was found bobbing off the end of Catalina Island and all three men were drowned. Only one body was found. The other two, including Barry's, never were recovered from the shark-infested waters. The Coast Guard theorized that the Susie was swamped by a wave over her bow.

Is Old Conch's legend true? Had the sea reluctantly given up a 16-year-old boy some 20 years before never to reclaim him?

Ritual Sacrifices for Mexican Subway?

Superstition holds that only human bodies encased in cement overcoats will "appease" evil spirits.

By Emil Zubrym

RAMPANT IN Mexico today is the old superstition that all construction, small or large, requires sacrificial rites to assure its success and safety.

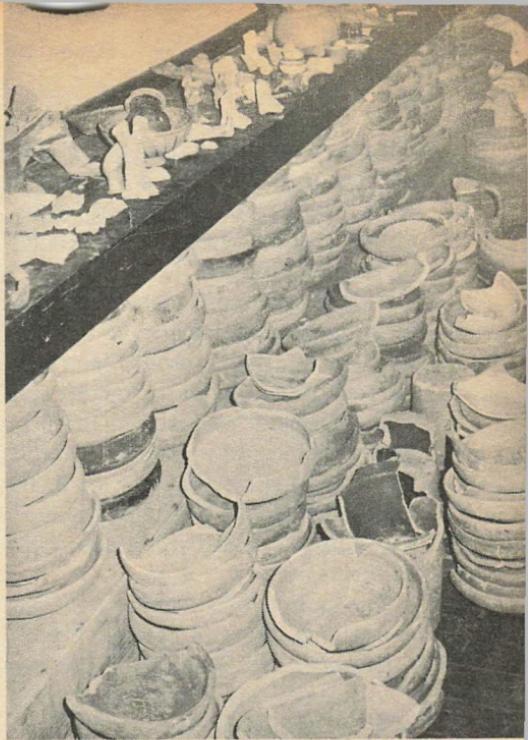

Despite its industrialization, cultural progress and evolution as one of the major capitals of the world, Mexico City today is a hotbed of rumors that its new "metro" or subway is a last resting place for 2,000 human sacrifices "to appease malignant spirits so that they are not offended by the wanton ripping up of the subsoil."

The "sacrifices" preferably must be young — children of all ages — but adults will do. Today the victims are believed to be selected from populated areas surrounding the city and from such nearby communities as Toluca, Cuernavaca, Teotihuacan and Cuautla.

The "human sacrifice" rumor in Cuernavaca gained impetus from the "escape" of eight-year-old Fidel Garcia Quiñones. One day he came home late from school, in tearful shock, his clothing ripped and soiled.

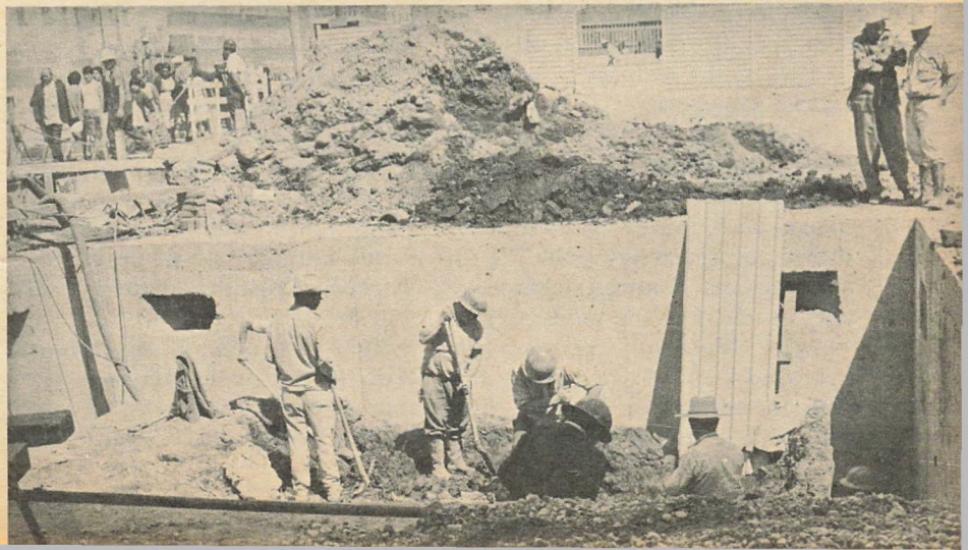

According to Fidel he had been pounced on by a trio of kidnapers who dragged him into a black car. They were racing toward Mexico City when a motorcycle policeman stopped them for speeding. The policeman saw the boy trussed up in the back, released him from his bonds and detained the "kidnapers." They soon were freed, having alleged they had only indulged in a prank.

Fidel was not so easily persuaded. "They said they were taking me to Mexico City to be buried alive in the metro," he sobbed, "and that they would be paid 1,000 pesos ($80.00) for me. They didn't even whisper — just

More than 100 tons of clay bowls, idols, masks and statuary have been salvaged from subterranean digging.

Authorities laugh off talk of human sacrifice but workers occasionally unearth skeletons which indicate it was more than superstition in an earlier day.

paid no attention to me lying tied up in the back. I was scared! I didn't want to die — and especially I don't want to be buried alive in the metro!"

Fidel's teachers describe him as a studious quiet boy, not given to prevarication. And his story spread throughout Cuernavaca and adjacent states where parents' fear made fertile ground for the growing rumor that 2,000 bodies would be needed to insure the subway against catastrophe in the future.

The police of Cuernavaca and elsewhere call the stories of kidnapings and disappearances "tall tales" and Fidel's story has been dismissed as a "preposterous lie," despite the fact that it was a policeman who found him tied up — unaccountably — and in a car heading for Mexico City.

Public reaction has been to term police "instructed accomplices" of the kidnapers seeking human sacrifices.

"It is best not to be out at night when the streets are empty," says Arturo Martinez Cruz, a mason and father of four children aged from five to 12. "I do not take any chances. I take my kids to school in the morning and we pick them up when classes end. And I try to accompany my wife to market or I make sure one of her relatives goes with her, preferably a man."

A DELEGATION of frightened parents obtained an audience with Emilio Riva Palacio, governor of the state of Morelos.

"I tried to convince them," he said later, "that the idea was fantastic. Maybe the practice of offering human sacrifices has been done in the past by the Aztecs and by our own Tlahuica Indians who inhabited the valley of Morelos and who built the huge pyramid temple in Tepostlan, but this story of human sacrifices for the subway is simply untrue — nothing but mass hysteria."

The Department of Public Works in Mexico City, supervising the subway construction (which is being done by French engineering firms) laugh off the "sacrifice" fears as baseless.

"The only sacrifices that may occur," says Miguel Guzman Cabrera, a city official, "are the normal accidental deaths that are part of any major construction project. These deaths usually are due to carelessness, certainly not a result of evil design. I don't know of one case of a worker being buried alive — nor will there be."

Yet the official disclaimers don't convince the average Mexican — nor for that matter many of the enlightened middle-class city-dwellers. Many of these still believe human sacrifices are being made and that they are indispensable as offerings to unnamed "evil spirits."

"Look," said Felipe Cabrera Velazquez, a bank executive, "in the old days the Aztecs made massive sacrifices, not only to the Sun God but also when building their temples. This is part of history and it's in black-and-white in old records. In the days of the colonial era human sacrifices were made, too. The authorities can deny this until they're blue in the face but the truth is that in excavating for the subway, they came across remains of old buildings and under their foundations human bones.

"Who knows? Maybe the legend is not such a legend after all. Maybe they are offering human sacrifices even today. I've heard talk that at least 1,500 persons have been kidnaped in various regions of Mexico. They could be resting under cement blankets in the subway foundations.

"Naturally nobody can prove this. But as for me, human sacrifices or no, I'm not taking any chances on riding in the new subway but this has nothing to do with sacrifices or superstition.

"I have a healthy fear of the sinking subsoil of our city and the constant earthquakes. I don't think the subway will be a safe place — and human sacrifices won't help to make it safe!"

UN-HAPPY NEW YEAR!

CHARLES LASHLEY, his wife, 11 children, and his mother, of Bayard, Nebr., used two automobiles to make a trip to California for New Year's. The oldest son with four brothers led the way. As he approached San Jose, Calif., at 3:15 the afternoon of New Year's Eve, his car was rammed from the rear by a speeding celebrant. The vehicle flew 75 feet through the air and bounced another 35 feet before settling in a ditch. All five boys were rushed to a hospital.

Two hours later Mr. Lashley drove into San Jose with the rest of the family, unaware of what had happened to his sons. Only one mile from the scene of the previous mishap the father was involved in a three-car accident and two more members of the family had to be hospitalized. Fortunately none of the seven was injured seriously. — Kathleen Wadham.

Our house, originally "American Gothic," was built in 1901 and its two nine-foot-high stories and peaked attic looked like this.

The GHOSTS We Dug Up

With nothing but "facts" to go on what's happening in our house today is not easily explained.

By Nora A. Miller

WHEN WE started remodeling our house in September, 1963, we were astonished to find that my husband, our children and I are not its only occupants. Until then we had experienced nothing unusual — although the older neighbors told some pretty wild stories about our home. It was said that tuberculosis wiped out one whole family and other persons died suddenly and mysteriously while living there. We paid little attention to these tales, although we knew the house had quite a history.

It was built in 1901 on the tallest hill in a dairy-farming area a few miles north of Mana-wa, Wis. Originally it had two stories with nine-foot ceilings and an attic sloping to a nine-foot peak. It had many owners through the years until my father-in-law, Albert Miller, bought it in 1948. My family moved into it in 1950 and we purchased it in 1952.

When we first moved in we remodeled the tall dwelling into a one-story house, changing the interior somewhat, but the unusual happenings — eerie sounds of footsteps, hoarse breathing and furniture moving — began when we decided on more extensive remodeling in 1963. We planned to add two rooms and to enlarge the basement and to do a great part of the work ourselves.

We hired a contractor, Mana-wa Builders, Inc., to excavate west of the house for the basement enlargement and to open the foundation wall. Through this opening we found a cellar-like part of the house we had not known was there. The children were all excited to see what was within but my daughter Sandy, 12 years old at that time, took one look and walked away. She never would go near it again. When questioned she would reply, "It feels funny down there. It's cold and I think something is buried there."

It did have a dank smell and my husband found rat holes and nests scattered through the dirt.

The contractor finished the framing about the end of November and our carpenter, Bill Schwanke, did the finishing work during December and January. We had moved Sandy's bed to the back porch and the other two girls doubled up for the duration of the remodeling. One morning I got up to find Sandy sleeping on the couch in the living room. She previously had complained of hearing breathing and footsteps after the clock struck two in the morning, but this time she flatly refused to sleep on the porch again. She told me, "I woke up about two o'clock and I heard this heavy breathing, then a脚步 crunching a candy wrapper I remembered was on the floor near my bed. The footsteps stopped but then the foot of my bed started to move. I could hear and feel someone or something crawling under my bed. I was scared to death but when nothing more happened I took my pillow and blanket and came in here."

Modifications in 1952, 1963 brought old farmhouse into step with times.

I went to the porch and found the candy wrapper looking as if it had been stepped on just where she had described it — but I slept one night on the porch and saw and heard nothing.

Another strange thing happened a few weeks later, about the end of January, 1964. We had been doing some painting on the wall between the old part of the basement and the new addition. We quit about 4:00 P.M. to go upstairs to start supper. On the steps I stumbled over a doll's head. When I asked the children who had put it there they insisted they never had seen it.

It was an old, old head, aged to a yellowish color and made of material unlike any doll's head of today. I laid it in a box on the landing and practically forgot about it until one of the children asked to see it again. When I went to get it I found the box empty. The doll's head had vanished as mysteriously as it had appeared.

The next Sunday my husband took the children skating while I stayed home to paint the walls in the new part of the basement. About an hour after the family left, I heard footsteps crossing the room above me, then the sound of a chair being moved. It seemed someone sat down in it and stretched out, for I heard the shuffling of heavy boots on the floor.

I can't explain why I was not alarmed, for if it had been my husband I would have heard the children too. Nevertheless I stayed at my work until I had used up the paint I had mixed. During these few minutes I heard the squeak of the chair as its occupant shifted his weight and the feet continued to shuffle as if he were restless.

I went upstairs quietly — to find the whole house empty. No chair stood near the spot where I knew it had to be.

My husband and I began to take these strange occurrences a little more seriously — especially when the sounds continued on the many nights I worked in the new recreation room after all the children were in bed. I would rush upstairs to surprise my visitor, only to find the house still, the chair nonexistent and everyone sound asleep.

In the spring and summer of 1964 our kitchen chairs took to overturning, sometimes quite violently, when no one was in the room. Once during the night a crash awakened the whole family and we rushed to the kitchen to find a chair lying on its side.

* * *

MY DAUGHTER Sandy still wakes occasionally to hear breathing in her room and a certain floor board squeaking. One evening it sounded as if someone were jumping on it. She called me to come quickly but the sound stopped as I entered the room.

The girls' room, the north bedroom in the old part of the house, has a mysterious wall. One section always is some degrees colder than the rest of the wall. On very cold days frost forms on this part. We can find no logical reason for this temperature variation but we know that it started about the time the house was remodeled.

We have a television set in the basement recreation room just below the girls' bedroom. On several occasions, when they have been home alone, they insist they have heard the television — unfamiliar programs and terrible music.

On January 28, 1965, at my nephew's birthday party, the children learned to play a game they called "raising the table." Several persons sit around the table, joining hands and exhorting the table to answer questions by rising from the floor.

The next day my three girls and I decided to try this. Almost immediately the card table responded. Sandy asked if we had spirits in our house. The table answered, "Yes." When asked how many, it replied, "Two." We extracted the information that the spirits are a child of about seven or eight and a man about 54. We asked if they had died in this house and it quickly answered, "Yes." When we asked if these spirits meant to harm us, the table replied "No."

Over a period of a couple of days we obtained responses from the table each time we tried, then suddenly nothing.

My daughter still hears breathing and we both hear footsteps. The cold section of the wall remains with us. But none of us has been harmed and we feel reassured that whatever is here means us no harm.

But will we ever find a mundane explanation?

A SMASHING FAMILY REUNION

ABOUT THANKSGIVING time in 1968 two men driving through heavy fog collided at an intersection in Montague, N.J. In the murky 5:30 A.M. light they didn't know each other but when they exchanged drivers' licenses they found they were first cousins.

The older man, John McConnell, aged 45, of Kearny, N.J., couldn't be angry with the younger driver, William McConnell, 28, of Hawley, Pa., whom he had not seen for 18 years.

Neither man was injured and damage to the cars was minor, so the two men drove off to find an all-night restaurant and talk about family affairs over coffee.

The JOAN DALE PSYCHOMETRY EXPERIMENT

By Margaret P. Gaddis

IT IS A TALE that unfolds before your very eyes — the story of a Chinese driving madly through the Siberian wastes — of the grim horror of Russian prisons — of sealed letters read without the aid of a human eye." So said Fulton Oursler of this highly evidential case of psychometry.

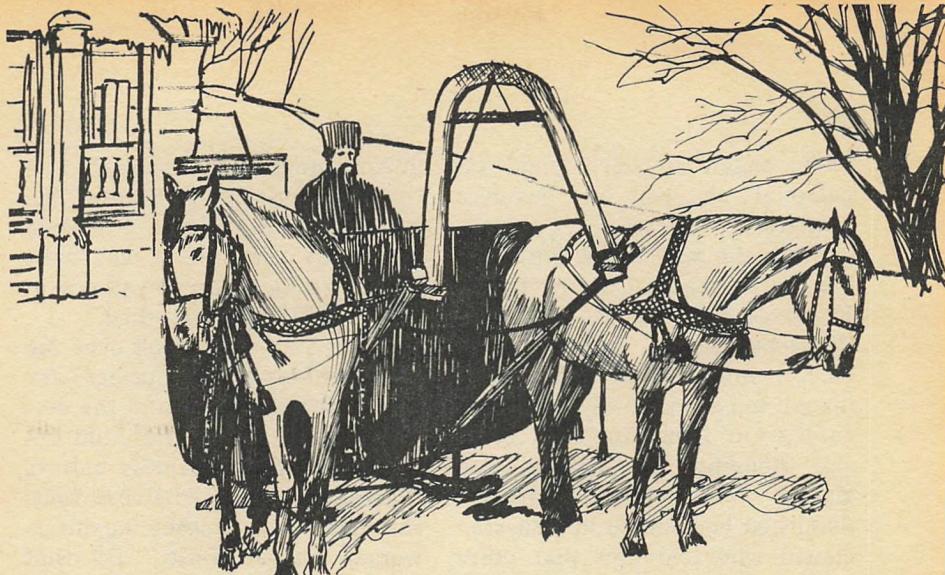

"The amazing facts in the case of Joan Dale and the seven tests with which she confounded the scientists of two continents have never reached the general public. Yet the facts cry out for the very widest dissemination," wrote Oursler, who for a time conducted a psychical research feature for an old Macfadden magazine under the pen name "Count Cagliostro."

Psychometry even today is little understood. Its very name, which means soul-measuring, scarcely describes this gift of mediumistically picking up by merely handling an object, through a kind of psychic radar, facts often previously unknown.

Discussion of this faculty probably first came into print in the mid-19th Century through a Covington, Ky., physician, Dr. J. Rhodes Buchanan, who found that certain of his subjects could recognize drugs by holding sealed packets and reacted as if they actually had swallowed them! One subject, holding a sealed emetic, only avoided an attack of vomiting by hastily dropping the packet. Dr. Buchanan thought all objects emanated what he called "nerve aura" but as inanimate objects hardly can be said to have nerves this term, too, is inaccurate.

Later researchers suggested that the force is similar to that which bends the dowsing rod. Various psychometrists have stated that before their visions begin they lose energy, are flooded with warmth or feel "electricity" flowing through their extremities.

But Joan Dale — this pseudonym was chosen for her by the famous clergyman-researcher, Dr. Walter Franklin Prince — experienced none of these sensations. She knew only that she saw and felt things that remained unperceived by most persons, that the impressions sometimes continued for hours after she lost contact and that she did not like that part of it at all!

Dr. Prince originally published this case in the Proceedings of the American Society for Psychological Research, (Vol. 17) and it was from Dr. Prince's little-known report that Fulton Oursler picked up the story some years later. But his attempt, too, received little recognition and for nearly 40 years this story has remained buried. Yet the amount and intricacy of the evidence cannot be disputed.

The story first was told to Dr. Prince by Nellie Smith, an American businesswoman, in the years following World War I. When she finally went abroad to verify the facts she gave copies of the records into his keeping.

In the early part of this century Miss Smith's brother began business dealings with two brothers named Charleburg who owned a factory in Hungary. Smith imported various products from them and when in May, 1912, he went abroad he visited their home and a close friendship was formed. He was especially fond of the older, married brother who was his age and the father of a girl and a small boy.

They began to correspond on personal as well as business matters.

When the war broke out after the assassination of Archduke Franz Ferdinand at Sarajevo, Charleburg, who was an army officer, immediately was called up. All too soon Smith received a cablegram from Tobol'sk, Siberia, begging for money and signed "Charleburg." Greatly disturbed he went to the Russian consul who told him that there was a prison camp in Tobol'sk and that the request probably was genuine.

The money was sent and some weeks later heavily-censored letters began to arrive. Charleburg, suffering from wounds and later from typhoid, was shunted over the icy wastes from one prison camp to another. His only contact with his family was through Smith. Repeatedly Smith went to Washington trying to arrange through the Russian Embassy for his sick friend's release. All attempts failed and when the United States entered the war communication ceased. Mrs. Charleburg was especially anxious because the little boy developed tuberculosis of the bone and had to be sent out of war-torn Hungary to a Swiss sanatorium.

In March, 1918, Charleburg was released from prison but it was not until after the Armistice in November of that year that he resumed writing to Smith. The following summer the two men met in Switzerland. It was their last meeting, for in the spring of 1922 Smith suddenly died.

Nellie Smith now took over the management of the business for her brother's widow and the correspondence fell to her and resumed a purely business nature. In 1917 through Red Cross work she had met another business-woman, "Joan Dale." By that time Charleburg's letters had grown infrequent and Nellie did not mention him to Joan. But she was intrigued by her new friend's abilities as a psychic and when Charleburg wrote from the sanatorium in Leysin, Switzerland, she decided to use his letter as a test. Giving no clue as to the contents or the writer, she sealed it in an envelope and took it to Joan.

From the very beginning Nellie limited the material for testing to letters sealed in opaque envelopes because a written paper offered material for exact checking later and at the same time gave no clues to Joan. Joan Dale never looked at the envelope but held it behind her back at the base of her spine, or sometimes, if impressions were slow in coming, she would place it on top of her head or in the center of her forehead. She never read any of the letters nor knew the contents until she actually met Mr. Charleburg abroad sometime later.

Nellie took the precaution of giving the Charleburg letters to Joan months apart, interspersed with other letters from abroad, so that Joan could not assume that all foreign scenes tied into the same case.

Much to Nellie's disappointment in the first test Joan got a long sequence concerned with two men winding cloth in a gloomy loft. No cloth was used in the products of the Charleburg factory. But some of Joan's other impressions did suggest the mystery of a Siberian prison so Nellie determined to use the same letter again without Joan's knowledge.

Eventually the tests became so intriguing that Nellie mentioned them in letters to Mr. Charleburg. Obligingly he tried to identify various impressions but felt that only a few applied to him. His old letters from the prison camp were not used in the experiment. Probably Nellie's brother had destroyed them before he died. Yet the impressions which Joan got from that one repeatedly-tested letter mailed from the sanatorium and from later communications referred almost entirely not to recent events but to events that had occurred some years previously, in Siberia or even before.

Nellie and Joan made two trips to Europe and between these two trips abroad they met Dr. Walter Franklin Prince. He never conducted formal experiments with Joan but he states in his introduction to the case in the ASPR Proceedings that she picked up so many supernormal impressions for him just in ordinary conversation that he was fully convinced of her gifts. Also, unlike his previous cases, she received entirely new impressions from the same old letter each time it was used in a test.

In the fall of 1921 Nellie took Joan abroad for the first time. It was a pleasure trip but unknown to Joan Nellie took with her the "Leysin letter" and the results of the psychometric tests, hoping to meet Mr. Charleburg. He did manage to join them at the sanatorium in Leysin where his son Walter still lay. When Nellie read him the notes from the seven tests he was utterly astounded.

"He threw himself back in his chair," she reported, "his eyes fairly starting out of his head and exclaimed, 'But where did she get it? That description is totally exact!'

"I see a red harness with brass studs," Nellie read from an early test. "It is hanging on a wall.

It is very foreign-looking with spirals or points. It must be for a sleigh. I think it is symbolic — I smell Russian leather. It means Russia! I see endless snow. I was taken over undulating snow for miles and miles."

Previously, in correspondence about this vision, Mr. Charleburg had insisted he could recall no harness of Russian leather. Now he suddenly remembered a red harness at the prison.

"But it was not leather!" he told them positively.

Consulting the notes they saw that Joan had not said it was leather. She merely had picked up the smell of Russian leather as symbolic of the country.

The memory came back to Charleburg powerfully now: "When I was very ill with typhoid they took me in an open sleigh with only a single blanket to a hospital 15 miles away. The soldier left me out there shivering, it seemed like forever, waiting for some official to sign the doctor's papers.

"I was outside in the bottom of that sleigh. I lay there waiting so very long, staring at the harness that never moved. Perhaps it only seemed long because I was so sick and cold! When we began to move again I watched that part of the harness that I could see, the part that fits over the horses' necks. The harness had three arches but we had only two horses. It was covered with a material that was red — not leather but a shiny cloth — oil-cloth, do you call it? It had brass studs around it. In my condition I observed this closely."

Mr. Charleburg was looking up at a red harness that did not move for what seemed an endless time. It was all he could see from where he lay. Joan had described the harness as immovable — as "hanging on a wall."

It seems characteristic of her psychism that all impressions picked up from the letters were experienced from the angle from which the writer had experienced them. As soon as the harness moved Mr. Charleburg actually was taken over "undulating snow for miles and miles" to the hospital.

"There is great depression and an awful thwarted feeling connected with this letter," Joan had said the year before, back in Massachusetts. How true! He was very ill and constantly thwarted in his escape attempts. His nerves were rasped by the rattling chain of a water wheel on the banks of the Amur, a wheel he never mentioned in his letters; yet Joan had described it and drew a diagram of the prison buildings, guards, barbed wire, barracks and watchtower. The drawn description applied only to this one, of several camps where Charleburg was detained.

"There is a man driving inside the camp — madly!" Nellie read from the third test. "He drives a two-wheeled cart drawn by a scrubby little animal, a donkey, or no, maybe a goat. I do not know what it is. I never saw such an animal before. The cart careens around as if it would go over."

"But that's exactly what happened!" Mr. Charleburg exclaimed. "I never told a soul. How did you know?"

In that camp there had been a small Chinese who drove a little cart, really a large covered iron receptacle between two great wheels. He drove this daily from barracks to barracks, emptying into it the slop buckets from the cells. He drove like a lunatic, often on one wheel, spilling the evil contents constantly so that infection spread like wildfire.

This horrible sight had so etched itself on Charleburg's mind that years later Joan could pick it up from a letter of more recent date.

But he was able to laugh at her description of the bizarre little animal. The Cossacks and cavalrymen in the camp never had been able to decide what the creature was. It had become a camp joke. Bred by the Chinese in Siberia, "it had long ears somewhat like an ass, large heavy feet like a dray horse, a long curly tail and roughly resembled a goat. It was small for a horse and went like the wind — its tail and the pigtail of the Chinese flying out behind," Charleburg said.

Flipping through the papers Nellie read aloud more data, "I see gray fur. A carriage robe? It makes him desperately homesick."

Mr. Charleburg recalled that in the first prison, believing the war would soon be over, he had bought skins of polar fox for his wife. They were gray with dirt but he had imagined how lovely she would look in them after they were cleaned. However, in trying to escape with a party of French furriers he had been captured and the skins confiscated by the Cossacks.

Joan constantly had seen rivers or rushing water which she suggested might be at least partly symbolic. Mr. Charleburg now admitted he had almost a complex about rivers because just before he was wounded he had seen many of his men, trying to escape over a narrow river, suddenly sink out of sight. Their clawing hands had been the last he had seen of them.

"It was one of the most terrible sights I ever saw. I think there must have been quicksand," he said. And in Siberia rivers repeatedly had foiled his many attempts to escape.

During the third test with this same letter, made in Monterey, Mass., in November, 1920, Joan had said, "I get a man with a shock of bobbed hair sitting on something and sewing on either a sheepskin coat or a pair of boots. He seems to have something to do with the other man."

Mr. Charleburg had written earlier that he did not recognize this scene although he and his fellow prisoners often were put to work making coats or boots of sheepskin. Now, two years later, he suddenly recalled: "He was the watchmaker from Germany! With him we could trust our plans to escape. He helped us in a lot of small things. He lined our coats with sheepskin and made footwear for the terrible cold we ventured our escape in. The poor man helped another party to escape later and was sentenced to death. His head was cut off."

Joan had received many impressions from the original "Leysin letter." Some they had identified through correspondence before they went abroad. "What happened to the man's eyes?" she asked one time. "I see slivers floating around . . . tiresome little dancing figures in groups of about five. He was hurt in his right forearm between the elbow and wrist and wore a sling."

Mr. Charleburg had written back that a bullet tore off his right ear and broke the bones of his chin; shrapnel tore off his right eyelid and he was half blind in that eye, with figures like stars constantly dancing in his vision. He did wear a sling but here Joan's conscious mind had jumped to the wrong conclusion. His wound was in his shoulder, not in his lower arm.

At one time Joan had walked back and forth humming and marking time to a rhythm that haunted her. She and Nellie wrote down the notes of the tune and sent them abroad.

The reply from Charleburg stated it was "a melody of the lost" that had haunted him all through the war years. He had heard it sung in the most savage way in Siberia by the nomads on their way to fight civilization.

Other sounds Joan picked up while holding the letters were harder to identify. Once she heard "oars," another time a sound like tearing leather. These were not identified until they visited the Charleburg factory on their second trip abroad in 1923.

Standing in his garden on a summer night she exclaimed, "Listen! The oars!"

Mr. Charleburg laughed. The sound, so familiar to him he no longer heard it, was from the "tubs" in the nearby factory. These revolved to shape celluloid handles in rushing water.

At the time she had mentioned the sound of tearing leather she had described a room in a factory, workmen's aprons and odd striped sacks into which something was tossed. In 1923 they found the sound was made by a ripsaw going through uncleared stinking bones shipped from Argentina. These bones then were tossed into the sacks Joan had described. Perhaps the strangest thing about this is that the whole process had been discontinued in 1906, 16 years before the psychometrized letter was written.

Surprisingly few of Joan's impressions from the "Leysin letter" referred to the sanatorium where it was written. But when they actually visited the sanatorium in 1921 some of Joan's puzzling allusions became clear. "A half-oval, very grey. I am not sure whether it is a lake or a drive" proved to be a stone tennis court which looked like a lake when wet with melting snow. Other impressions were of St. Bernard dogs, often seen there, of winding paths, beautiful trees, and of "an interior with showy large piazzas like a hotel."

Nellie couldn't understand "interior" used with "piazza" until they saw the little boy strapped in bed on one of those open porches where the letter had been written — "the entire front honeycombed with deep, rather showy piazzas gay with awnings."

Practically every impression of the many hundreds Joan had received fitted eventually into the amazing jigsaw, even "a hat in a picture . . . a high gray astrakhan hat on him."

"I never had any other in Siberia," Mr. Charleburg told them. "To protect my wound from the great cold such was absolutely necessary."

But nobody knew about this hat but the prison authorities who had photographed him in it, knowing he could not escape without it. They had retained the picture in the prison files.

One of the strangest of the impressions apparently was pre-cognitive: It concerned the cemetery where members of the Charleburg family and faithful employees were buried. Joan "saw" this from a curious angle which superimposed a unique painted wreath over a taller cross. Later Joan was to enter the cemetery and see these two grave markers, one partially concealing the other, because of where she stood. But the date on the second cross was a year after Joan's vision!

It was during their second trip abroad, in 1923, that they solved the mystery of that earliest vision of two men winding cloth in a loft. Because this had baffled them they had dismissed it. Joan had seen two men in shirtsleeves — clerks she thought — examining cloth in a dim loft where the bottoms of the windows were level with the floor and the ceiling was low. She had seen rough vertical partitions; one man was silhouetted against the light while the other, slim and younger, faced it. Joan had drawn a floor plan at the time.

Not until they actually were in the Charleburg home where Joan saw a framed photograph did this mystery begin to unravel. Pointing to the picture she exclaimed, "That's one of the men I saw winding cloth!"

Mr. Charleburg looked puzzled. "That's my picture as a young man. But I never wound cloth in my life!"

Yet Joan was positive.

Later, quite by chance while visiting the factory, they were taken into a dim low-ceilinged room filled with packing cases. Seeing a roll of paper with a long end hanging down Joan cried out, "Get on the opposite side and hold up the end. There! That's just what I saw — two men holding up something like cloth, just this width, between them. And this is the room! Only the partitions don't go all the way around and the windows don't go all the way to the floor. And I didn't see any skylight. But this is the place!"

Suddenly Mr. Charleburg's face lit up. "I know what you saw, the overseas linen!"

Until 1918, when it became impossible to obtain, they had lined the export crates with a coarse waterproofed orange linen instead of the heavy paper used in 1923. And during his apprenticeship in the factory Charleburg had worked for two weeks only in this room. The skylight had been installed after Joan's vision. And although the windows were not level with the floor they appeared to be because crates were pushed up against them to sill height. There once had been rough partitions but they had been ripped out because mice nested behind them.

Every single thing Joan had insisted she "saw" had a firm base in reality.

* * *

When young Walter Charleburg, at the sanatorium, learned they planned to visit him at Christmastime he sent an enthusiastic note to their Paris hotel. Joan read this but thought it then was destroyed. After they left Walter and resumed their travels Nellie decided to use his note for another test. She sealed it up as usual but before she could hand it to Joan the latter said excitedly, "Someone has come into the room! Don't you see her?" And she described an elderly woman.

Nellie saw nothing.

"Is there anyone connected with this letter who had hair parted in the middle and waved on both sides?"

Nellie didn't know but suggested it might be the grandmother who had died not long before. She sent Joan's full description to Mr. Charleburg.

He replied, "Everything is just correct — comb, way of dressing, collar with ruching . . . spectacles . . . chestnut-colored hair with occasional gray . . . shy little laugh . . . a retiring person with a good deal of hidden force — the best characterization for my mother."

Although Joan had been psychic all her life apparently she never before had seen an apparition in connection with psychometrizing the letters. From now on the grandmother appeared to her repeatedly as they traveled in Europe and eventually was able to communicate with her.

She asked Joan to have her son investigate a big credenza where she had hidden something. Later she asked that he examine a bureau. In one Charleburg found a family keepsake she had treasured, an old epaulette which an uncle had given Charleburg when he finished military school with honors. In the other he found a locket containing a picture of the Virgin which the grandmother had worn all her life. It was inside a box Joan had described minutely. And Joan later positively identified the grandmother through a photograph.

The grandmother promised during her appearances to Joan in Switzerland that if they would relay her requests to search the furniture she would return and give a message.

And she was true to her word.

After the furniture had been searched and about a week before Joan and Nellie arrived back at the Charleburg home Joan saw the grandmother twice again in their hotel room in Poland. Both times the apparition was dressed in a soft black gown fastened down the front with small buttons and she wore a white shawl. Accompanying the figure Joan heard two flute-like notes, repeated several times in pairs.

"What can be meant by that?" she asked Nellie. "Can't you hear the notes — toot-toot, toot-toot — low and very clear?"

But Nellie heard absolutely nothing.

Preceding the apparition's final appearance Joan saw a strange sight. Floating a few feet in front of the image of the grandmother Joan saw a little wooden whistle. The apparition reached out, took the whistle and blew two notes on it. This time the vision of the grandmother stayed in the room for some two hours, moving around, occasionally blowing on the little whistle. All the way to Czechoslovakia (which that part of Hungary had become since the Versailles Treaty) Joan continued to hear the clear notes.

When Mr. and Mrs. Charleburg met them at the train their first question was whether such a whistle meant anything to them.

Mr. Charleburg said at once that they had owned such a whistle but had mislaid it.

His wife interrupted, "I found it two days ago. I hung it on Walter's bed (since he came home) so he can blow it if he wants anyone in the night. When we reach the house we will all go together to his room and I will show it to you."

And as they entered the bedroom they saw the wooden whistle hanging on Walter's bed, looking just as Joan had described it. She picked it up and blew the two little toots, the sound of which she had tried so hard to convey to Nellie.

"Furthermore," Nellie wrote, "at the time she first heard the whistle it was lost so far as the Charleburg family was concerned — but was found just before our arrival."

The great number, diversity and accuracy of Joan's impressions make this story of psychometry unique.

"The immunity of the tests from leakage of normal information and from suggestion could hardly have been greater," wrote Dr. Walter Franklin Prince.

HUSBAND AND WIFE CLASH HEAD-ON

ACCORDING TO the Albany Times-Union for January 21, 1969, Mr. and Mrs. George Smith of Albany, N.Y., met each other coming and going Monday. He was coming and she was going. The problem was that she was going on the wrong side of the road. They met when their cars collided head-on on a sharp curve on Route 150 between Castleton and Albany. Neither was hurt but both received tickets — Jeanne Smith for failure to keep right and her husband on a charge of not having an up-to-date proof of car safety inspection.

$ A MONEY MIRACLE CAN COME TO YOU, TOO!! $

When you are Magnetized for Money.

Join this new Prosperity Movement!

Write today for free information.

Properly magnetized, any human being can summon a Money Miracle. For of all miracles, the Money Miracle is most common. They occur every day.

Money is not an artificial, man-made institution, but an abstraction of a basic energy of Nature! Prosperity begets prosperity. When your neighbor makes big money, this does not deprive you, but instead increases your chances of getting rich. The more money YOU make, the more everyone makes. There is no limit to human prosperity, save those limitations placed on it artificially by wrong thinking.

An individual — you — may be energized, magnetized and polarized to attract the flow of money, for money is an energy, like electricity, and flows according to set patterns of polarity. The Midas Touch bursts upon you when you are fully magnetized. When enough Americans have learned the principles of the Midas Touch, and the techniques of controlling the energy of Nature that manifests itself through the medium of Money, a new national concept of prosperity is to begin.

We are authorized now to find the first few people who will be energized, magnetized and polarized to attract the money flow. By radiant example, these trained, enlightened Money Magnets will launch this move toward Prosperity Unlimited. If you are interested in being a guinea pig for Money Miracles, and believe you can handle larger amounts of money than you have ever seen, write for details about this new Prosperity Movement right now. WAS IT A DREAM?

By Bonnie Marie DeLancy

MY GRANDFATHER, William H. Oatsvall, was living with us in Utica, Ind., at the time of his death on October 28, 1958. We mourned him deeply, for we loved Grandfather very much.

Because we planned to move to Mississippi soon Mother had her father's body sent there for burial in the New Zion Cemetery at Braxton, Miss. After his funeral we returned to Indiana.

Our house in Utica was a two-story brick which everyone claimed was about 250 years old. It was a huge house with four bedrooms, kitchen, bath, living room and a large hallway downstairs. My bedroom, which I shared with my sister, adjoined the bathroom.

About a week after Grandfather's funeral I had the strangest experience of my life. I guess I'll never know the exact time, for if there had been a clock in our room I was so scared I probably wouldn't have looked at it.

All I remember is being awakened from a sound sleep and becoming suddenly aware of someone or something in the room or nearby. I raised halfway to a sitting position in my bed and as if my eyes were drawn by an unseen force I looked in the direction of the door to the bathroom. It was open as usual and a small night light glowed through the doorway. As I stared through the door my grandfather appeared before me.

I was frozen with fear. He stepped toward the foot of my bed and stretched out one hand; he opened his mouth as if to speak. I felt cold sweat break out all over me and I began to shake. I can't explain why I was so frightened and I wish I had not been, for Grandfather's image simply disappeared. He had not spoken; he seemed to sense I was frightened and that he could not reach me.

While lots of people tell me this was only a dream, deep down inside of me I know it wasn't.

I always will wonder—if Grandfather had spoken to me that night what would his message have been?

— Jackson, Miss.

COMMAND PERFORMANCE

By Lorna M. Johnson

MY MOTHER-IN-LAW, Lillie Johnson, was a strong-willed person with definite ideas about how a home should be run. Having a dog in the house was not her idea of propriety but she also had a kind heart, so when a small lost Pomeranian came to the door of her farm home near Dodge Center, Minn., Lillie was quick to let her inside.

Obviously the helpless little dog couldn't be kept outdoors with the collie, so Lillie made her a bed behind the kitchen stove and named her "Buttons."

In the living room Lillie had a comfortable old-fashioned couch with a red velvet pillow. From the first Buttons was irresistibly drawn to it but she soon learned that to climb onto the couch and rest her chin on the pillow would not be tolerated. Somehow Lillie and Buttons understood each other and the matter of the couch became a sort of game.

The routine was always the same. Buttons would tread stealthily into the living room, look around to see if anyone were watching, then jump onto the sofa. After a few anxious moments while she seemed to be wondering whether Lillie had heard her, she would breathe a big sigh, rest her nose on the pillow and in minutes she would be snoring noisily. Before long Lillie would discover her and say sternly, "Buttons, you get down off that couch right now!"

Buttons would look crestfallen, drop her ears and reluctantly take refuge in her bed in the kitchen. But that brief rebuff never prevented her from going through the whole routine again at the earliest opportunity.

When Lillie died in January, 1959, Buttons was quite old. My mother-in-law had been sick and delirious for several days and just slipped away one night in her own bed in the bedroom off the living room. My father-in-law had gone to town to get the local undertaker and I sat wearily in a rocking chair, alone in the house except for the dog.

It was about 11:30 P.M. and I was very tired. I may have dozed but Buttons woke me with her long toenails on the linoleum. She was sneaking slowly toward the couch. After she had gone through the customary routine of looking and listening she was soon fast asleep. If I hadn't known Lillie's lifeless body lay in the next room, I would have expected to hear her voice.

Suddenly the dog sat up, listening intently and looking toward the bedroom. Then, as if she had heard the familiar command, her ears dropped, her big eyes turned sad, she left the couch and went forlornly to her bed in the kitchen.

The skeptic may say the dog responded in her sleep to the instinctive impulse to obey an inevitable command but there is no doubt in my mind that the dog actually heard the order to get down. I believe the familiar routine between Buttons and her mistress was being repeated for one last time.—Spencer, Iowa.

"The TRUE LIFE of JESUS of NAZARETH— The CONFESSIONS of ST. PAUL"

Slashing through 2,000 years of Christian fanaticism, this book presents the true life story — before and AFTER crucifixion — of Jesus; and exposes for all time the great hypocrisy of the Christian religion as the culmination of a villainous plot, contrived by the arch-villain, Saul of Tarsus (later called Saint Paul) and his cohort Judas Iscariot; a plot which changed the world's history for thousands of years!

Contained in a long-hidden book is this amazing revelation, delineated by no less than Saul himself; the true life story of Jesus . . . who his real mother and father were . . . His truly espoused . . . and His true teachings!

The included booklet, "The Eye Witness Account," taken from the actual ancient parchment, is the true account of the crucifixion and the life of Jesus after this tragic event!

An amazing revelation which will, once and for all, erase false and harmful doctrines from the minds and hearts of all who read it!

This book will also completely vindicate the Unarius mission and its re-establishment as a continuation of the mission of Jesus; and will effectively help prove that Unarius is the beginning of the "Second Coming."

Aunt Olga Wright. The visit proved to be a great solace, quite different from my stay there during the summer of 1935.

One August evening that summer

Julia VanBebber

33 years ago Aunt Olga had sent me upstairs to bed early. I headed for the cupola instead, for from the window I would be able to watch the twinkling coast lights and hear the fishermen's voices as they anchored their shrimp boats. When I entered the cupola I had found the window open. The white curtains, provoked by a strong breeze, billowed inward. I heard a footfall.

"Imagination," I told myself. But I heard a second step and felt an eerie presence. Vaguely I made out a human outline outside the window.

I cried out, "Aunt Olga!"

"Oh, dear," she answered from the parlor, then came patterning up the stairs. Her plump hands consoled me. "I'm sorry, honey —" A tinkling tap on the window interrupted her.

Aunt Olga listened entranced. For me the seconds were an eternity. I stood rigid as an oar.

Finally Aunt Olga said, "That was your grandmother. You frightened her. When she lived, she'd say, 'I'll visit you after death.' Aunt Olga's blue eyes penetrated mine. "And after I die I'll visit you."

"How'll I know you?" I stammered.

"You'll know."

I remembered all this fondly as I entered the old parlor in the spring of 1968. Aunt Olga's peaceful aura surrounded me. Then I seemed to see her smiling blue eyes and feel her soft hands.

"I've come," she said. "Remember? I promised."

Like a divine messenger she not only calmed my disturbed feelings but appeased my desire to accumulate worldly possessions. She whispered parts of I John 2:15, 16, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world . . . the pride of life is not of the Father, but is of the world." — Dumas, Tex.

AYE-SEE (I SEE)

THE MYSTIC MESSAGE BOARD

See messages from the beyond—or from the depths of the subconscious spelled out before your eyes!

AYE-SEE (I See)* lets you see into the beyond or into the mists of subconscious personality. The gentle touch of your fingertips to the AYE-SEE Planchette can throw open the door to those hidden worlds that invite your exploration. Others have already found that they can see beyond with AYE-SEE, now you have the same opportunity.

A NEW, PATENTED PRINCIPLE

AYE-SEE works on a newly discovered principle that appears to improve accuracy and bring messages through with greater speed. U.S. Patent #3,307,849 has just been granted to protect this discovery, which is the basis of the AYE-SEE.

HOW IT WORKS The essential parts of the AYE-SEE are the all-wood Table, the Planchette, and the Light Beam. The Planchette is a disc of translucent styrene bearing the letters of the alphabet, numerals and symbols in gold relief. The Light Beam streams softly from a lens in the center of the Table.

*TM Reg. U.S. Pat. off.

AYE-SEE is a custom-made psychic appliance now offered only to readers of FATE Magazine. Our shop works slowly and carefully on each AYE-SEE so place your order now to avoid disappointment.

You invest only $14.95 to buy your AYE-SEE; you risk nothing because your purchase is fully guaranteed.

As you touch your fingertips to the Planchette, mysterious forces may move it about over the Table. When it stops moving, the Light Beam will point to one letter or symbol to indicate that it belongs in the message. The indication is very positive—there is no question as to what AYE-SEE wants to tell you.

The entire Table is built of wood because psychics have advised that wood produces the strongest vibrations. Since the entire Planchette is in contact with the Table, it may be that most of the energy from these vibrations is absorbed by the Planchette.

DEVELOPED BY SENSITIVES The superior features of AYE-SEE are the product of careful experimentation by sensitives adept in using message boards. From coast to coast, accomplished psychics have contributed suggestions which now emerge as AYE-SEE.

You can be confident that AYE-SEE will work for you, because it has been created by people who know. Here is a typical comment from an experimenter who tested AYE-SEE: "I'm delighted with it as I'm getting my messages much faster."

OPERATES IN DIM LIGHT AYE-SEE provides its own light—room lights need not be turned on to read the messages—thus, AYE-SEE can be used in comforting, dim light or under the conditions of the seance-room. An AYE-SEE working under these conditions seems to pour out a fountain of light and presents a highly dramatic picture.

USE ALONE OR WITH A GROUP The AYE-SEE Planchette is a perfect, round disc. Thus it can be operated equally well by one person or by a large group, each touching a hand to the Planchette. The long electric cord supplied with AYE-SEE permits it to be placed in the center of a room with guests seated all around.

IF YOU HAVE TRIED OTHER BOARDS If you have had any measure of success with other types of boards, you owe it to yourself to try AYE-SEE. This recommendation comes from an experimenter who wrote, "... those who have enjoyed using (trade name omitted) will get a bigger kick out of this psychic appliance."

ORDER NOW!

AYE-SEE cannot be mass-produced, it will be manufactured in limited numbers only in the workshops of the Venture Bookshop.

ON THE IMPORTANCE OF YOUR EXPERIMENT When you experiment with AYE-SEE you are participating in a great work. The world-renowned psychologist and investigator F. W. H. Myers wrote this about such experiments: "May I add the remark that it is to experiments with automatic writing, crystal-vision, etc., rather than to spontaneous apparitions, that we must look for any real information as to the degree in which departed spirits retain the knowledge of the things of earth."

saying that my father had suffered a stroke and was hospitalized that day, December 30. He lived only until January 9, 1949.

I was so weak from my illness that the shock of my father's sudden death was almost too much to bear. I had to take an extended leave from my job and when my husband began losing patience with me I made up my mind I would have to get control of myself.

I always said my prayers in a large walk-in closet. On April 22, 1949, I had just begun talking to God when my father appeared to me. He said, "You must quit your grieving about me. Everything is beautiful here. Don't cry anymore." Then he was gone. His voice was the same but he looked young, as he had when I was a little girl. Instantly my grief and hurt were gone. I never cried over him again and I felt he never was far away from me.

About the end of May, 1968, I was getting ready to go to a nearby store across a very busy intersection. I had just turned the doorknob to go out when I heard my father's voice again. He called my name and said, "Wait." At the same time I saw and felt his hands on my shoulders as he gently pushed me back from the door. I sat down and in a few minutes I heard a terrible crash. Through my window I saw two cars had hit head-on right in the middle of the intersection.

I might have been there too if Father had not told me to "wait." — that he and one of his cronies were going to Nevada on a fishing trip, for this was his idea of a real vacation.

After the first few days alone in our Los Angeles home I began to miss Larry very much and on the evening of the fourth day, August 29, I became strangely apprehensive. I went to bed early but had difficulty falling asleep. I must have dozed off, however, only to wake in a cold sweat. Larry was calling me! His voice was faint, as if he were calling from a great distance or suffering great pain.

In utter terror I jumped out of bed, turned on a night light and stepped into the hallway. At its far end I saw him! He was clutching at the wall, trying to stand up, and his clothes were drenched with blood.

"Dear God!" I screamed. "What happened?"

"Don't touch me," he cried. "I have to go back."

"Back where? Tell me what happened!"

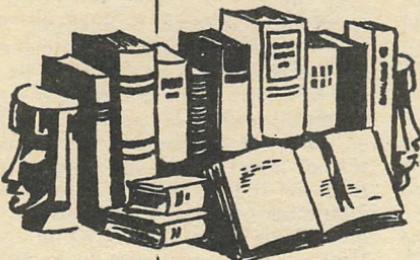

"I can't! No time — got to go back."

"I'll call Dr. Norris!" I dashed to the phone but at that instant it rang.

As I snatched it up I heard a strange voice, "Mrs. Larry Exline? I've got some sad news for you. I'm Sheriff George Marcy here in Ely, Nev. We've just had a bad accident. Your husband's car went out of control and the man with him was hurt bad. Your husband was killed instantly, so at least he didn't suffer."

"Oh, no," I said. "My husband's here!" I hurried back into the hall — but Larry wasn't there. He indeed had "gone back." — Los Angeles, Calif.

TITANS COMPARED

IN THE DELUGE of current literature in the psychic field, two authors' names appear with remarkable frequency. Hans Holzer and Brad Steiger turn out new volumes at an astonishing pace. The bulk of their work appears in paperback (either originally or in early reprint) so many persons first encounter psychic material in a Steiger or Holzer book picked up at a newsstand. It behooves us therefore to scrutinize carefully and criticize exactingly the work they do.

A product typical of Hans Holzer, the New York journalist, is Psychic Investigator (Hawthorn Books, New York, N.Y., 1938, 192 pages, $5.95). A close reading of this volume reveals one way Holzer can maintain his writing pace: he lets persons who write letters to him supply most of the book. Much of Psychic Investigator reads like selections from FATE's "My Proof of Survival" tied together with brief commentary. In many instances, perhaps, Holzer may have interviewed his informants but the material just as easily might have been culled from letters.

As well as styling himself a "psychic investigator" Holzer lightly tosses around another designation: he calls himself a "parapsychologist." Why he aspires to the status is beyond me but his credentials for it are another matter. A dust jacket blurb reads: "He has lectured widely at leading universities in the United States and Europe on the subject of parapsychology." I find it astounding that "leading universities" have entertained any lecturer on parapsychology, let alone Mr. Holzer.

As to his standing in the eyes of academic parapsychologists he has none whatever, to put it bluntly. He has not attended the meetings of the Parapsychological Association nor applied for membership. I know personally of several instances in which he has avoided contact with established psychic research groups or alternatively suggested prohibitive speaking fees. His sole contributions to the professional literature have been a few book reviews in International Journal of Parapsychology. "Psychic investigator" he may be but "parapsychologist" he is not.

ON THE TRAIL

THE CHAPTERS IN Holzer's book supplied by his correspondents are generally pretty fair. He assumes his title of investigator, I am sure, from the cases where he himself has been on the scene, however. His modus operandi in brief is this: He first gets a report from an informant who alleges that his or her residence is haunted. If the information sounds sufficiently interesting (and might make a chapter in a future book) and if it is convenient enough for him to get to, Holzer arrives on the scene with a trance medium (in Psychic Investigator usually Ethel Myers or Sybil Leek) who goes into trance. The information imparted through the entranced sensitive is duly recorded by tape recorder or notebook. Holzer then says something to this effect: "Isn't it interesting that we've solved this case of haunting?" Then he packs up his notebook and goes on to another case. In the few instances where he tries to verify the information conveyed by the so-called "ghost" the true nature of the bulk of his material is only too evident. (If any reader thinks I am impugning the mediums, he is mistaken. No medium in genuine trance is consciously responsible for the content of the trance information.)

Perhaps the most revealing example of Holzer's methods is "The Fifth Avenue Ghost" in his first book, Ghost Hunter. The material on this case is sufficiently extended and includes enough verbatim transcript to demonstrate unmistakably that Holzer overlooks mounds of incorrect or unverifiable data to seize on a few nuggets of what may be paranormal material. It also portrays graphically how the "communicator" is coaxed into affirming Holzer's preconceived notion of the haunting.

In a case where I have some personal knowledge (Alexandria Stewart's house in Chicago) Holzer is injudicious enough to mention that the "communicator's" story bears an odd similarity to the facts in the life of a still-living person. He seems unfamiliar with the countless recorded cases of mediumistic dramatization of material derived telepathically from the living. He also stoutly maintains that he exorcised the ghost, his sole basis being Mrs. Leek's final trance utterance, "She's gone . . ." Unfortunately for Holzer's claim Mrs. Stewart has affirmed that there have been subsequent disturbances. This, in fact, is the house involved in the story by Henry Cole ("Chicago's WBBM-TV Hunts a Ghost") in the June, 1968, FATE, in which he describes events which took place after Holzer's exorcism.

GHOSTS: PRO OR CON?

HOLZER PRIDES himself on being unlike those "other parapsychologists." He is "pro-ghost." The others, he charges, simply try to explain away the alleged hauntings. This statement has enough truth that one must concede Holzer his point. Unfortunately, many researchers get interested in psychic phenomena primarily because they want to prove their nonexistence. Too few contemporary parapsychologists are interested in studying alleged hauntings and too often the investigator behaves in a bull-in-the-china-shop fashion, intent on proving the whole thing is a hoax. (This does not imply of course that these are the methods of, say, William Roll of the Psychical Research Foundation, Durham, N.C.)

Before moving on to the sort of investigation Holzer conducts, many other researchers try to establish two things: (1) that the alleged phenomena indeed did occur as reported (that is, independent witnesses tell the same story) and (2) that all normal explanations have been ruled out (teen-agers playing pranks, the wind blowing through chinks in the roof and the like). Only then does it make sense to try to identify the paranormal agency responsible — and often that agency turns out not to be paranormal.

It is ironic that because of the publicity he has received, Hans Holzer probably hears about more hauntings than do other psychic researchers. Clearly he has good sources for material. One wishes he weren't so busy gathering material for his next book, he could be making a real contribution to the field by recording these cases.

At one point in Psychic Investigator Holzer complains that he must finance all of his own investigations; there is "no institute or research foundation to take up the slack." Might this have something to do with the nature of his evidence?

STEIGER IN DUPLICATE

BRAD STEIGER is even more prolific than Holzer and nearly all of Steiger's books are paperbacks. He turns them out rapidly and this inevitably leads to an unevenness in the results.

A fair statement about his Sex and the Supernatural (Lancer Books, New York, N.Y., 1968, 192 pages, 95 cents) is that the title is exact and specific. He deliberately chose "supernatural" over the more confining term "psychic" because the book deals with a broad range of topics: vampires, werewolves, witchcraft and strange religious cults.

Of course the thesis that a connection exists between sexual energy and psychic phenomena is not original with Steiger. The late Dr. Nandor Fodor made a strong case for a correlation between sexual frustration and poltergeist activity. Peter Underwood in Light Magazine made the same point a few years ago. The erotic overtones in both witchcraft and witch-findings were fully explored by R. E. L. Masters in Eros and Evil.

Although Steiger frequently is accused of "borrowing" some of his material he uses almost none of the voluminous material Fodor published on this topic. Fodor's strong point of course was his psychoanalytic diagnosis of the personality dynamics underlying the paranormal activities. Similarly, Steiger's most interesting material includes the details of the psychodynamics rather than mere mention of possible correlations. The book as a whole is a patchwork of original observations, reworked material and lurid passages (added, I suspect, solely for shock value). Despite some interesting content, the chapters are uneven in quality and the book is not Steiger's best.

A second recent paperback, The Mind Travelers (Award Books, New York, N.Y., 1968, 186 pages, 75 cents), is quite another story. Here is Steiger at his best (and that best can be very good indeed). The topic of this book is out-of-the-body experiences (astral projection). It contains fresh material gathered in the Holzer manner from correspondence with readers of earlier books. But Steiger shows also a thorough familiarity with the classic cases in psychic research and draws on them to illustrate the myriad varieties of projection which have been reported. The one serious gap in his background seems to be Robert Crookall's works.

I might mention the same two criticisms I have voiced on previous books by Steiger: the material tends to be episodic and he includes no overall evaluation or wrap-up. He presents a series of cases and does it very well but stops without giving the reader his opinion as to their significance. Perhaps this is deliberate. After all, a number of books delineate the philosophical or metaphysical framework for understanding astral projection. Perhaps Steiger simply prefers to leave it to Muldoon, Carrington, Crookall, Oliver Fox and the rest. On the other hand, Steiger may be hesitating to commit himself to any particular theory. I for one would like to know what he really believes and I hope someday he will put it in print. In the meantime, this book serves as a fine introduction to astral projection.

OTHER REVIEWS

WINDOW TO THE PAST: EXPLORING HISTORY THROUGH ESP by Hans Holzer, Doubleday & Company, Inc., Garden City, N.Y., 1969, 254 pages, $5.95.

When you finish the introductory pages of this book and start on Chapter II you say to yourself, "Oh, no! I hope this isn't another book discussing Lincoln's prophetic dream about his assassination!" Nevertheless, you find the dream is here as recorded by Ward Hill Lamon, Lincoln's friend and secretary. (Lincoln related the dream at a cabinet meeting and a few cabinet members wrote it down in detail in their diaries which still exist, but these are not mentioned.)

When you finish this chapter on Lincoln you admit it contains new information, after all, so you continue and finish the book.

You might have liked it better if more exciting, less well-known and less warmed-over events had been printed earlier in the book. The new angles uncovered through extrasensory perception on Nell Gwynn, Archduke Rudolph of Austria-Hungary and Aaron Burr are thrilling and would have enhanced interest in the book if they had been nearer the beginning. Despite this fault, Holzer reveals unique "detective work" in Window to the Past.

THE LADDER OF LIGHTS by William G.
Gray, Helios Press, Teddington, England,
1968. 230 pages, $6.00.

The Qabalistic System commonly is credited with supplying a major portion of Jewish and Christian philosophy.
Students of these early manuscripts recognize many parallels in astrology, numerology and the concepts of reincarnation, metaphysical evolution and other occult arts.

Literature on Qababism generally has suffered in two respects — either it has been oversimplified to a form of parlor numerology or steeped in such Hebrew allegory as to defy practical understanding. This effort by Mr. Gray is a refreshingly understandable treatment of an otherwise dimly-visualized metaphysical system.

In bare terms the Qabalistic contemplates a 10-step evolution from the status of Man to realization as God. Only the lower four steps are within physical embodiment while the upper six stations are beyond embodiment — ranging from Light through Energy to One or Nothingness.

The title symbolism, "ladder of lights," is Gray's depiction of the Qabalistic Tree of Life. This "ladder" concept helps to clarify an otherwise rambling and involved structure of the original Tree with its fanciful intertwining "pathways." Visualizing progressive steps of the ladder and interinfluence of the stations occupying common rungs is made easier for a reader oriented in a nuts-and-bolts culture.

Astrology is incorporated to the degree of assigning a planetary body and its mythological influences to each station or Sephiroth. However, sun signs related to individual births get no attention and there is little overall correlation here.

The concept that nothing is really good or bad is not unique or original as expressed in Qabalah but some of the related concepts are intriguing. At the Sixth step or station the symbol of Sun connotes not just a midway point in the climb but a center point of all life. This is the eye of the hurricane and is compared to the axis of a spinning top. By analogy it is suggested that we acquire knowledge not so much in pursuit of facts as in a withdrawn state of regarding or observing. The axis of the spinning top moves the least, simply relating the movements of its outer elements.

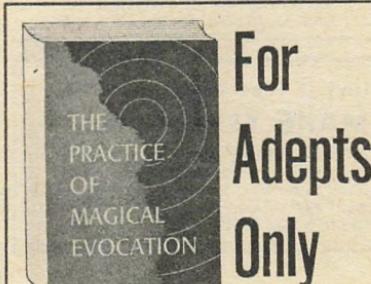

Antiwar activists will find little solace in the Qabalistic System. Here the planetary influence of Mars is considered the balancing force for excesses. Wars are considered an equitable substitute for something far worse: irretrievable karma or eternal loss in the Abyss. From a personal aspect, if we each fight small wars within ourselves as defects appear, the great external wars can be avoided. Mars is described as the bright red of a healthy revitalized bloodstream.

As Gray's exposition nears the top of the ladder and the picture of evolution nears station One or Nothingness, the analogies become more ephemeral. Perhaps it is forgivable, even commendable, that the author disclaims omniscience at this point himself, suggesting that such understanding is impossible for our materialistic intelligence. At this height the air is just too rare.

At least, after reading The Ladder of Lights I can envision the lower rungs in quite clear detail. In the older dissertations on the Tree of Life even the lowest branches seemed draped in allegorical fog and Hebraic symbolism. — Tom C. Lyle.

SINGING FOR POWER: The Song Magic of the Papago Indians of Southern Arizona, by Ruth Murray Underhill, University of California Press, Berkeley, Calif., 1968, 103 pages, $5.75.

First published in 1938, this small volume now reprinted already has a somewhat archaic flavor. It will hold interest chiefly for folklorists and anthropologists.

Informal in style, unindexed and written in simple language, Singing For Power is an examination of the Papago Indians—Bean People—living (in 1938) "in a desert corner of Arizona." (Are the Indians still there? How many are they? Where in Arizona is their reservation?)

Separate chapters deal with various rituals of this ancient people, their ideas about birds and animals, their dances, their many wartime ceremonies (although the author says they are a peaceful tribe and never have fought the white man) and their crop-raising customs. Since singing, chanting and praying are part of these activities, each chapter contains a version of the songs used.

The poems are exceedingly simple (in English) and undoubtedly lose much in translation. But magic power lies in the songs, we are told, and UFOs: A NEW LOOK by National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena, 1536 Connecticut Ave., N. W., Washington, D.C., 1969, 46 pages, $3.00.

This publication may be regarded as an interim report between Volumes I and II of NICAP's monumental study, The UFO Evidence. In the eight sections and four appendices of UFOs: A New Look the NICAP staff discusses some of the outstanding UFO sightings of the past few years and speculates on UFO occupants.

One sees in this compilation a possible change in NICAP policy. For years NICAP publications have been giving UFO occupants little space, even when such accounts seemed fully as credible as more mundane sighting reports. A panel of NICAP advisers now has been set up to deal specifically with selected occupant reports. Although most of the reports used in UFOs: A New Look will be familiar to UFO researchers NICAP deserves credit for presenting details of two little-known (or little-researched) incidents. As practically all other UFO research groups long since have recognized the value of occupant reports, this move finally may bring NICAP up to date. Alternatively, it may be “too little and too late.”

One most appropriate comment is brought forth during a discussion of possible past and future visits to earth by extraterrestrials. Dr. Carl Sagan of Harvard University has speculated that various myths and legends (notably the Sumerian myth of “Oannes”) might represent garbled accounts of space visitations. Sagan also suggests that “we may expect an (extraterrestrial) emissary perhaps in the next several thousand years.”

Similar views have been expressed by other astronomers and scientific writers. Recalling the multitude of present-day UFO evidence that is conveniently ignored or explained away by such thinking, NICAP quotes Lewis Carroll's Red Queen's comments to Alice: "Jam yesterday and jam tomorrow, but never jam today."

Other sections of the book are devoted to accounts of vehicle pacings by UFOs, close-range sightings, UFO landings, Congressional hearings on UFOs, and the University of Colorado UFO project. Numerous sketches and illustrations throughout the book add greatly to its value.

This publication can be recommended, for it indeed does represent a "new look," not only at UFOs but for NICAP.—Lucius Farish.

THE GREAT ORM OF LOCH NESS by F.W. Holiday, W. W. Norton & Co., Inc., New York, N.Y., 1969, 223 pages, $5.95.

The consensus is that some sort of unexplained phenomenon plies the waters of Loch Ness. The movie made by Tom Dinsdale (a portion of which I have seen) clearly demonstrate the presence of something in the lake.

The first question to be resolved is whether the phenomenon is organic or inorganic. This question has not been answered unequivocably although some inorganic possibilities clearly have been eliminated (e.g., the wake of a passing boat).

For the sake of discussion, let us assume the phenomenon is organic, that it is some sort of living creature. Now the fundamental question becomes, is it plant or animal? There is little evidence to support the plant hypothesis; so if it is an animal we must determine whether it is vertebrate or invertebrate. Most prior explanations have favored a vertebrate theory—especially some sort of marine reptile or sea serpent. Those who hold it's an invertebrate have postulated some member of the mollusk group, either a giant squid or octopus or perhaps a slug. Mr. Holiday joins the small coterie favoring the invertebrate theory and is the first—to my knowledge—to advocate that the Loch Ness monster belongs to one of the worm groups, much lower on the critter scale than the mollusks.

What led Holiday to this conclusion? Thereby hangs the tale.

Some 40 years ago strip-mining began in coal-bearing strata about 50 miles south of Chicago. In 1958 one Francis J. Tully brought to Chicago's Field Museum of Natural History a collection of fossils from these strip mines. Most proved readily identifiable plants or invertebrates.

Then Mr. Tully produced a startling specimen, an animal with a dirigible-like body, a spade-shaped tail and a long thin proboscis with a gaping claw. Near the base of the proboscis a transverse bar crossed the body and at each end of this bar projecting outside the body was a little round swelling.

Although numerous other specimens later were collected, their identification remained a mystery. Finally Dr. Eugene S. Richardson, Jr., Curator of Fossil Invertebrates, prepared a formal description of this creature which was published in Science in January, 1966. Dr. Richardson couldn't fit it into any of the established animal phyla and he bestowed on the specimen the scientific name Tullimonstrum gregarium — the Common Tully Monster.

Author Holiday now presents the thesis that the Loch Ness beastie is some sort of worm, possibly related to the 300-million-year-old Tully monster from the Illinois coal mines.

Numerous facts weigh heavily against Holiday's worm hypothesis and a few may be mentioned here. First, size: it stretches the bounds of credibility that any invertebrate could reach the dimensions postulated by Holiday — some 560 cubic feet and a weight of 15 tons. The giant squid, largest of living invertebrates, reaches a maximum length of 50 feet (not 500 as stated by Ivan T. Sanderson in his foreword in this book).

Then there is the problem of the sense organs which Holiday presumes the Loch Ness worms to possess. He recounts that several attempts to photograph the monster were unsuccessful due to the fact that it was scared off, either by "seeing" the observer or by hearing some sound such as the slamming of a car door. None of the existing worm groups have such sophisticated sensory organs. The best that worm "eyes" can determine would be light intensity and perhaps the direction of illumination. And none of the worm groups possess auditory receptors.

Holiday also fails to provide a satisfactory explanation of the mode of locomotion for his Loch Ness worms. While it is true that many existing worms have two sets of muscles, a circular and a longitudinal set, their movements require a substrate (or base) to push or pull against. A snakelike movement without a stiffening rod of cartilage or bone would get a swimmer nowhere.

Another important factor is the reproductive cycle of worms. Holiday suggests that the Tully Monster might represent the immature form of the Loch Ness organism. Apparently he is unaware that in most worm groups the eggs hatch out not as miniatures of the adult but as quite dissimilar larval forms which subsequently metamorphose to the adult worm.

Now, as to that term orm. Holiday apparently wanted to refrain from calling it a sea serpent (obviously vertebrate) so he dredged up the Scandinavian equivalent, Sjö-arm. Thank goodness he didn't follow the suggestion of a Mrs. Whyte who proposed, he tells us, the Gaelic term Each Uisge. As Holiday himself says, this is easy to misspell and even easier to mispronounce.

The jacket blurb informs us that Mr. Holiday has been a "journalist and a writer on angling topics for 20 years." I suggest he stick to fish stories.—Ernest J. Roscoe.

THE INTELLIGENT MAN'S GUIDE TO FLYING SAUCERS by T. M. Wright, A. S. Barnes and Co., Cranbury, N.J., 1968, 279 pages, $5.95.

Author Wright displays a fair amount of native writing ability but apparently as a result of his youth and lack of experience (he is only 21 years old) he has committed an irreversible blunder. He has confused gossip with research. Thus we find him presenting conflicting ideas. He pays lip service to the importance of scientific research and objective research writing but almost in the same breath lauds Frank Edwards among his favorite writers on the subject. He seems unaware of Edwards' tendency to write from memory and amplify at will.

Wright's inclusion of distorted and sensationalized material and a tendency toward careless reading have produced a wealth of misinformation. For example, "Snippy," the appaloosa of Alamosa, Colo., is placed by Wright in "Reno, Nev." Careful reading of the Associated Press story he quotes as a source would have eliminated this error. May we conclude he picked up a bad habit of one of his heroes, that of writing from memory?

But take a look at what Mr. Wright does to the case of James Stokes. He dates the case November 2, 1957. The correct date is November 4. He describes Stokes as from "Levelland, Tex." and places the sighting "northwest of Levelland." Actually, Stokes lived in Alamogordo, N. Mex., and the incident involving him occurred south of Orogrande, N. Mex. Wright describes Stokes sighting an egg-shaped mass "that glowed like a neon sign" and says Stokes' engine died and his lights went out. The facts are that Stokes did not describe a glow and since the incident occurred in daylight he did not have his car headlights on. Wright reports that Stokes approached the object on foot—which would have been a neat trick in view of the fact that the object did not land.

I do not mean to imply that such gross errors are typical of the book but they occur far too often and in general discredit the book's reliability.

In dealing with contactees—in particular, Adamski—Wright displays a credulity that to say the least is incautious. He accepts Adamski's first contact as authentic despite Adamski's history and the fact that his witnesses were not able to corroborate the "contact" itself.

I suggest that intelligent men looking for "a guide to flying saucers" save their money. —L. J. Lorenzen.

COMMON HORSE SENSE

Pearl Golubow's story, "A Three-Way Winner," in the April, 1969, FATE was very interesting. However, I think she should get her horse facts straight.

Buckpasser was a very good horse but he never won the Kentucky Derby. Kanai King won the 1966 Derby and Buckpasser was sidelined because of an injury.—Myron T. Jones, Bowling Green, Ohio.

THE RIGHT OF SELF-DEFENSE

I have remained silent long enough about the review of my book, Science, the Public and the UFO, which you published in FATE (January, 1969). I think that the whole question of the purpose of book reviewing is at issue in my case. Normally an author sits back and accepts the bad with the good because he is as aware as anyone that not all persons will appreciate his work.

However, when a reviewer sets out with an axe in a devastating manner the author surely has the right to defend himself. Or do only reviewers have rights?

It has been brought to my attention that severe criticism of Jerome Clark's review of my book was sent to you immediately following the publication of your January issue. As you have not seen fit to publish this criticism in "Report from the Readers" it seems you are taking sides by allowing only Jerome Clark to express his view. I am forced into testing you in my own defense.

As a modest man, I am the first to admit that my book may not be a particularly good one. However, a great many persons claim it is one of the better volumes on the subject and reviews in other worthy publications have so stated. It seems, then, that just because Clark thinks my book is "objectionable" and "just plain dull" does not necessarily mean that it really is. Many readers have said they couldn't put it down until they finished it, that they found it absorbing. So we do have different views.

I do not believe that Jerome Clark's views (or any other reviewer's) should be accepted as final, particularly when so devastating an attack is made. Clark seems to set himself up as "The Authority" on UFOs—but readers of my book will recall that I clearly showed that there are no authorities or "experts" in this field.

Certainly, in all fairness, at least one disagreement with the published review should be printed so that opposing viewpoints at least may have equal space. When you allow space to only the axe-wielder, great harm can be done to a book others may consider worthwhile.

Is it your purpose in FATE (which I happen to have considered a worthy publication) to crucify an author on the strength of one person's views? You have the right to print or not print whatever you choose, of course, but if my effort to defend myself goes unpublished, you know as well as I that you are guilty of bias and unfairness.—Arthur Bray, Ottawa, Ont., Canada.

OUT OF BOUNDS

I am told that a recent issue of your publication quoted me as giving the tacit official approbation of the Southern California Society for Psychical Research to the Tarot card-reading of Ron Warmoth.

Mr. Warmoth attended a couple of small social gatherings at which a few members (about 10) of the SCPSR were present. (There are more than 500 persons in the organization.)

Mr. Warmoth later got in touch with me and told me Brad Steiger was writing a book about him and he asked if I would write a letter concerning his work which he could show to Mr. Steiger. Since he had gone to the trouble of demonstrating his Tarot card-reading techniques at the two parties I had helped to hostess, as a courtesy gesture I wrote complimentarily concerning his ability—but my comments in no way reflected the official attitude of the Southern California Society for Psychical Research. The vast majority of the membership, including the Board of Directors, do not even know Mr. Warmoth.

THE CONTROVERSIAL CONDON REPORT

Recent comment from prominent UFOlogists concerning the report of the Condon Committee's UFO investigation shows up an inherent trait of many UFO investigators: they are wishy-washy. In the business world they would be known as "yes-men." They tend to agree with other UFOlogists, practically to the letter. This is probably why some scientists consider UFOlogists fanatics: the most agreed-on theories are invariably the least supportable.

NICAP originated the extraterrestrial theory yes-men, those who agree with the outer-space-origin theory of UFOs. NICAP recently criticized the Condon Committee for the reasons described in "Colorado UFO Fiasco" (September, 1968, FATE) and this of course led to a blanket condemnation of the Condon Committee and then to a blanket condemnation of the Committee's report. I dare say that almost every UFOlogist formed his opinions about the Condon Report before it came out. Already prejudiced, they went on to disagree with everything in it.

The Committee concluded that there is no scientific evidence of UFOs. You can't argue this fact if you know what scientific evidence is. Scientific evidence is absolutely irrefutable. It cannot be faked. A witness or two (or 10 or 100) may see a UFO — but there is no way this can be proved to a person who did not see it. Reports are about as far from evidence as you can get.

Some of the explanations reported by the Condon Committee make you wonder why nobody ever thought of them before. A reputed "claw mark" supposedly left by a UFO occupant was identified as urine-soaked sand. Famous UFO photos were found to be easily faked. The Condon Committee showed it could be done by doing it.

After the Report came out, the Committee's conclusions were so good as to prove embarrassing to people who criticized it publicly, thus creating another bad image for UFOlogists. In an article in its January, 17, 1969, issue, Time apparently delights in calling persons who study UFOs "saucer buffs." Dr. James McDonald is portrayed as a "saucer buff," along with NICAP, a whole group of "saucer buffs." The term implies fanaticism, of course, and unfortunately this time I think we may have earned the label.

Of course the Condon Committee wasn't perfect. No two-year study can investigate fully the UFO phenomenon. But the public doesn't want millions of tax dollars spent on a thing that has been relegated to the realm of ghosts, sea monsters and witches. It follows that it is the UFOlogist's duty to gain a more respectable image in the press and in the public eye so that we can get a long-range study with plenty of money to do the job.

Many UFOlogists have the notion that the Condon Committee was a failure just because it didn't come to the conclusions they wanted. This does not make it a failure. The Committee identified many sightings and gave a respectable image to UFO study. There aren't many other 1,464-page reports on UFOs! — Paul Johnson, Collinsville, Conn.

THE SKEPTIC'S JUNK-AMMUNITION

John Keel's article, "Our Skies Are Filled With Junk" (March, 1969, FATE), is well-researched and interesting. This assorted scrap that falls earthward keeps the smile on the UFO skeptic's face. When superficial examination shows that the "hardware" is very common to earth, this proves to the skeptic that UFOs do not exist.

John Keel uses the same junk to support his thesis that UFOs do exist but cannot be extraterrestrial. I think the skeptic and Mr. Keel are both jumping to conclusions.

The nickel-iron meteorites that shoot downward from space are not unusual in their makeup but they fooled scientists for hundreds of years. At this stage of the game I believe there is no justification for thinking that either man or magnesium is unique in the universe. — Frank Hudson, Elkins, Ark.

 I quote from John Keel's article, "Our Skies Are Filled With Junk":

"A red-hot disc plunged from the sky in Corona, N.Y. . . . When it cooled the object was found to be made of aluminum."

There may be unstated qualifications behind this story but aluminum melts before it gets "red-hot." Also the specific heat of aluminum is so low that it would be cooled to air temperature while falling.

Let's stick to accuracy in UFO matters.—G. D., Cardiff-by-the-Sea, Calif.

"PAY DIRT"

In my search for truth occasionally I strike some "pay dirt." I think Dr. Jule Eisenbud's article, "Why You Refuse to Believe in ESP" (April, 1969, FATE), is pure gold.—L. C. Hughes, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE NORSE COLONIES

In the November, 1968, issue of FATE I enjoyed reading about the Norse colonies in North America ("I See by the Papers"). I believe strong evidence exists that the Vinland Norse were Christians.

I come from Yorkshire (England) and in my youth I heard much about the tradition of Norse descent, common in north and northeast Yorkshire amongst the country people. The Norse are supposed to have come from Ireland through Westmoreland into Yorkshire driving the Danes (who were already there) into the southeast corner. To complete the picture a Celtic pocket in West Yorkshire is supposed to have survived all these goings-on almost down to the present day and the local dialect until recently contained many Celtic words.—H. W. Somersford, Manchester, England.

SEARCH FOR A BOOK

I would be overjoyed to hear from any FATE reader who might know where I can obtain copies of a book published in 1959 entitled We of the New Dimension by Will and Evelyn Miller—or even better, where I can contact the authors.

This book has tremendous signicance at this point in space and time.—Alex McFee, P.O. Box 2213, Idyllwild, Calif. 92349.

EARLIER SPIRIT MESSAGES

In the January, 1969, FATE David Techter comments that he first encountered a "spirit message" mentioning Baha'u'llah in the book, Let the Dead Speak of Their Life published in 1968.

I have such a message dated July 11, 1953. It began, "A light to the world . . . Baha'u'llah . . . greetings . . ." Should his teachings prevail they would "bring hope and rest to a sad and weary world."—Dotha Mitchell, Banning, Calif.

AN AMAZING STUNT

Recently I have met a person who performed an amazing stunt for us. His equipment included playing cards and paper. An onlooker selects a playing card and places it on the paper. The paper is burned and the ashes sprinkled on and rubbed into our stuntman's arm. When all the excess ashes are rubbed away the symbols on the playing card appear on his skin. I hope among FATE readers there is someone who can explain how this "stunt" is accomplished.—Philip Campiglia, Jr., Flushing, N. Y.

TEAPOT TEMPEST STILLED

A number of FATE readers have written to the publisher and to us pointing out a "discrepancy" in our story, "Glenn Ford, The Timeless Horseman" (February, 1969, FATE). Ford in his incarnation as the music teacher Stewart could not have played Chopin's music, our critics suggest, for the composer (born in 1810) was an infant when Stewart died in 1812.

The simple explanation for this is that it was Glenn who named the three composers, Beethoven, Mozart and Chopin, and Glenn candidly admits his inexperience in the musical field.

However, even if Glenn were to have played Chopin we do not view it as a contradiction of the theory of reincarnation. Any professional hypnotist knows the basic characteristics of the unconscious mind cannot be eradicated no matter how deeply in trance a patient may be. In other words, no matter how far back in time Glenn might have been regressed he still would carry with him his present unconscious. He never could be exactly the figure of the past. That past figure always would be enriched with the present.

Since Glenn in his conscious state cannot read a note of music, much less sit at a piano and play, the fact that he did interpret classical masterpieces and play them with professional skill seems to us a phenomenon most easily explained by the theory of reincarnation. — Neil and Margaret Rau, Los Angeles, Calif.

A REMINISCENCE

The story, "Old Lady of the Woods," by Grace D. Prier of Lake Oswego, Ore., published in FATE, February, 1969, took me back many years. Perhaps it has given me an answer to something I have wondered about for a long time.

I was a child when my family lived in Lebanon, Ore., the scene of Mrs. Prier's story. The time was the 1920's and the town was very small but the park at the edge of town was there at that time.

My friends and I spent hours hiking in the wooded hills outside of town and often we went to the park — which always seemed quite empty. I never spoke of my feelings but I did not like to stay long in that park. An eerie feeling would come over me every time we were there. I did not see an apparition at any time but I had a feeling of intrusion — even danger.

As I read of Mrs. Prier's experience in the park the old eerie feeling came over me. I might have had a similar experience, had I ever entered the park alone.—Thelma Garretson, Sparks, Nev.

THE GREEN FLASH

I would like to correct an impression you have created in the March, 1969, FATE. In "I See by the Papers" you mention the green flash that occurs at sunset—and I might add at sunrise. It may be legendary but it is not without explanation, nor is it solely a phenomenon of the Netherlands Antilles. A rather complete description with beautiful color photos and a theoretical explanation has been published in the January, 1960, Scientific American. —Eugene Caplinger, Sierra Madre, Calif.

* * *

The mysterious green flash is neither confined to the Netherlands Antilles nor is it without explanation. The Egyptians were the first to notice it and some of their monuments show the sun with a small green aura.

According to the January, 1960, Scientific American, as the sun lowers on the horizon the earth's atmosphere acts as a giant prism and magnifying glass, producing both enlargement and separation of colors. At a critical and momentary angle the orange and yellow are absorbed while the blue and violet are scattered leaving a thin band of green existing as a "green flash."

The phenomenon can be seen only under nearly perfect atmospheric conditions. In high mountains or in desert areas it is seen most frequently. In the far north when the sun is at horizon level the flash may last more than half an hour.—Gary Lockhart, Plano, Ill.

No one of my acquaintance ever has seen the green flash but I saw it when I was about 12 years old—55 years ago—looking out over Chesapeake Bay. I have looked for it many times since but to no avail. I had about decided I had been mistaken when I read in the old Baltimore American that the personnel of Mont Blanc Observatory were investigating it.—J. C. Fluhart, Quinby, Va.

While on a ship returning from Trinidad, B.W.I., I saw the "green flash" when a ship's officer pointed it out. I saw it twice after that on trips on the Caribbean. The horizon must be clear of clouds for it to appear and that is why the flash is not seen more often. Also, the nearer one is to the equator the more likely one is to see the flash.

At the time of Admiral Byrd's expedition to the Antarctic the flash was mentioned, I believe, on the front page of the New York Times in a column reporting the progress of the expedition. However, the color of the flash in those regions was a bright blue and the scientists said it was caused by a bending of the light rays from the sun.—Mildred Rapp, Pt. Pleasant, N.J.

In a little-known novel by Jules Verne, "The Green Ray," he attributes the light to the last flash of the setting sun when seen across or reflected on sea water. The phenomenon appears only when the sunset is viewed over the open sea.

In his book Verne mentions the poetic fable that whoever sees the Green Ray from then on will be capable of reading the human heart.—Comtesse Madeleine de La Riviere, Montreal, Que., Canada.

about 50 years ago. He told me about a casket that had been dug up in the graveyard at East Main Avenue Methodist Church when widening of the street encroached about 30 feet into the graveyard. His description coincided with the description in Ruth Duy's FATE article.

Kephart told me that the plate over the face of the woman in the casket had been broken when struck by a pick during the excavation. The workmen had a good look at the face of the corpse which disintegrated in three days after being exposed to air.

At the time no one had any knowledge of this type of casket (two of which eventually were found and reburied in Woodlawn Cemetery here).

About six months ago, to clear a site for the construction of an apartment building, part of a cemetery on East Hill Avenue had to be moved. The Berry Funeral Home had the contract for the removal of some graves and they found 14 iron caskets just like those described in FATE. These too were reburied in Woodlawn Cemetery. Fred Berry, president of the funeral home and also a state senator, intends to introduce a bill in the General Assembly to get authority to dig them up again and have them put on exhibition in a museum or some public place.—Dr. Lloyd C. Bonham, Knoxville, Tenn.

PROVE YOUR PSYCHIC POWERS WITH A PLANCHETTE!

THE PLANCHETTE IS A MECHANICAL MEANS FOR AUTOMATIC WRITING. IT AIDS PSYCHIC MANIFESTATIONS WHICH HAVE NO OTHER MEANS OF BECOMING CONCRETE.

The result of an exhaustive search, our authentic planchette is hand-made from a special wood — an "alive" wood that magnetizes — and will absorb YOUR vibrations. It measures about 6 inches in length. Smoothly hand-finished, it is polished to a high lustre with a resin polish which, being a wood byproduct, will not interfere with the vibrations which the operator's continued use sets up.

HOW THE PLANCHETTE WORKS:

Specially-fitted pencil forms one leg of planchette, the other two rolling free on ball bearings. These ball bearings permit the slightest indication of movement to take effect, the tiniest wisp of pressure transmitted through your hand. Only a superior product, an authentic psychic appliance, could have this expensive ballbearing feature.

Complete instructions for use of the planchette, as well as its care and protection of the vibrations, are included with this advanced psychic instrument.

WHAT HAS FATE IN STORE FOR YOU?

... A chance to explore the unknown . . . truths you find nowhere else . . . articles and stories to fire your imagination—that's what FATE has in store for you. Here is Editor Mary Fuller's report on stories planned for future issues:

∞ Dreams give easy access to the realm of psychic adventure, according to Marcia Douglas. She has devised a method you can use to find the real "you" as you travel the scenic highways of the astral world.

∞ Researchers find that among some peoples, clairvoyance develops as naturally as the other five senses. ESP feats now are viewed not as gimcrack trickery but as the sixth sense at work.

∞ Cato, a "very polite old gentleman," returned from the grave to deliver dark velvety-red roses for "Miss Louise" to ease her loneliness and incidentally to change the course of her life.

∞ Is it possible to construct a trick-proof means of spirit manifestation? Yes, says W. D. Chesney, who gives you the plans for his "psychic tepee," a spirit cabinet which leaves chicanery and charlatanism out in the cold.
