How to Make Your Dreams Come True

Some make their dreams come true. Others never do. Have you ever wondered why?

The answer lies in the word "make." Those who turn dreams into realities make it happen. They take action.

The true dreamer uses his dreams as inspired guidance, a goal to achieve. He makes a start. Then strange things happen. Doors open for him, knowledge comes to him, help arrives from unexpected sources.

But how do you start? How do you get the natural Laws working for you instead of against you? It isn't the kind of knowledge you acquire in public schools but it was taught in the ancient Mystery Schools and it's taught today at Astara.

Astara offers a course of action which helps make your dream come true. Astara is a modern school of the ancient mysteries, a fraternity of all philosophies, an institute of psychic research, a church of all religions. Astara helps you understand the mysteries of life, helps you make your life the fruitful, joyous experience you want it to be.

Make your dreams come true. Take action today. Send for the free explanatory booklet, "Finding Your Place in the Golden Age."

Astara — Helping Seekers Since 1951

I SEE BY THE PAPERS

by Curtis Fuller

QUOTE OF THE MONTH

I have an immense treasure: my ignorance. For me it is a great joy to overcome it. If I can get others to profit from what I acquire, I have twice as much joy. As long as I go on discovering new things, life will be beautiful, but it will be too short for everything I want to learn.

— Roberto Rossellini

ARNOLD IS a young man who tests indicate has the low IQ of 80. He does assembly work at a Goodwill store. Yet even as a child Arnold had moments of genius. He understands the concepts of electronics, music, navigation and mechanics and uses electronic theories to build equipment.

He assembled a tape recorder, a fluorescent light and a small transistor radio plus some other components in an arrangement by which the music from the tape was changed to light energy in the fluorescent lamp and back to music in the radio. By passing his hand between recorder and light he could stop the music.

Arnold's abilities are described by Bernard Rimland, director of the Institute for Child Behavior Research in San Diego. Rimland is the author of two books on autistic children and has written an article for Psychology Today in which he looks "Inside the Mind of the Autistic Savant." Rimland prefers to call these flawed geniuses "autistic savants" rather than use the old term "idiot savant" because their intelligence is almost always above the idiot level (above 30).

By 1977 the Institute for Child Behavior Research in San Diego had assembled more than 5400 case histories of autistic children of whom about 10 percent showed unusual abilities. These abilities include amazing talents in music, art, mathematics, memory and mechanics. Rimland says that only a few "normal" people can equal the skills they display — among them are the great mathematicians Gauss and Ampère and probably Sir Isaac Newton, although Newton displayed some indications of autism, he believes.

CHILD GENIUSES

RIMLAND asked the parents of these autistic geniuses to describe some of their children's feats.

One mother reported that her child Ilene "knows practically every song ever written" including who wrote it, who first recorded it, what year it was popular, what show it is from. Ilene also knows a great deal of classical music.

Another girl sang songs in perfect rhythm and pitch at the age of 19 months. At three years old she could pick out any song on the piano and at four played melodies from sonatas that she had heard her mother practicing.

One boy could multiply two four-digit numbers in an instant. Another boy could compute square roots in his head when he was nine. At age three a boy named Richie could disassemble appliances such as clocks, radios, televisions and vacuum cleaners and then reassemble them without error.

CONCENTRATION

ALL AUTISTIC children have serious problems in communication. Half of them are mute. Until fairly recently it was believed that they suffered from emotional problems but now it is generally conceded that their problems result from a variety of neurological and biochemical abnormalities. The blood platelets of most of them show a high loss of serotonin, a neurotransmitter. The outlook for most autistic children, says Rimland, "is grim." Most of them eventually end up in institutions, although the outlook today is brighter because of behavior-modification teaching methods and because some are helped by megavitamin therapy and antiallergic diets.

How are some of these autistic children able to function at a genius level in specific categories?

They themselves don't know, of course, but Rimland believes it is due to their great ability to concentrate. It is difficult and sometimes impossible to get their attention — one of the characteristics of autism. "They tend to live in their own private worlds." By the same token they can bring immense concentration to bear on the narrow areas of their interest without being distracted. Rimland says, "The autistic savants are tuned to a degree of concentration so intense that few normals can ever achieve it."

Alas, at the same time they usually do not comprehend what they are doing. Rimland suggests there may be a trade-off — normal people do not have such good memories as the autistic savants but have better comprehension of their activities.

He quotes Langdon Down as noting that extraordinary memory is often found combined with "a great defect in reasoning power" and he quotes Nietzsche to the effect that "many a man fails to become a thinker for the sole reason that his memory is too good."

If this general proposition is correct — that the ability to narrow concentration to a small area reduces comprehension — then the commonly stated platitude that man uses only a fraction of his brain power may be untrue. By this reasoning the average brain is working with pretty good efficiency on one level or another but cannot work at both concentration and comprehension at the same time.

PLUS ESP

THERE IS one additional area of ability Rimland finds in his SOUND WAVES THAT HEAL TESTED BY WASHINGTON; ALREADY USED BY HOSPITALS & SCHOOLS WORLD-WIDE, NOW APPROVED FOR HOME USE!

In 1973, after exhaustive research, The American Research Team first discovered a delicate sound wave pattern which it suspected had the ability to put its listeners into a state of instant relaxation, block out physical pain, heighten creativity and ESP, and create for the listener a colorful parade of mental and visual images.

Since then, these sounds have been captured on recording tape and named "Astral Sounds". They have been requested by hundreds of hospitals, pain centers, school boards, universities, laboratories, government leaders and hundreds of thousands of people in every nation on the face of the earth. These sound waves tapes have even been requested by the U.S. Government and U.S. Army.

The reports indicate that these sound waves do indeed block pain instantly, create heightened brain-wave activity, instantly relax the listener, promote rapid healing and put a virtual end to things like anxiety, stress and worry.

We want to send you a FREE, NO-OBLIGATION information packet telling you all about these sound wave tapes. Your free packet will include, among many things...

autistic savant patients. Some of them exhibit extrasensory perception.

An autistic boy named George usually rode a bus to and from school. If his parents would decide to pick him up because they were in the area, George would announce to the teacher that his parents were coming and would hurry to open the door for them as they arrived. Yet George could not write his name or read a sentence.

Another child named Michelle exhibited ESP from the age of four. Once her father's watch crystal fell out in the bathroom and he immediately replaced it. The incident was known only to her father. Nevertheless, shortly thereafter Michelle described the incident to him. "Several dozens of similar 'clairvoyant' incidents have occurred since this incident. Statistical probability of coincidental knowledge nil."

THINGS A-FLYING

BERT GROSS, 54, who lives with his five children, ages 13 to 24, at 9169 Tulane Road, across the De Soto County (Miss.) line from Memphis, Tenn., was sitting with some of the kids watching TV and generally taking things easy on the last Saturday evening of March when it all began. Flying insects began to attack them. Then a decorative pillow flew off the couch in the corner of the room and landed about eight feet away, near the opposite wall.

Things developed rapidly after that. A coal-burning heater in the room collapsed. The portable black-and-white TV set crashed to the floor from the dresser; so did an alarm clock. The dresser drawers opened and emptied themselves. Tennis balls flew about. A hunk of hardened adobe being used to plug a hole around the pipe from the heater came loose and flew across the room.

The strange events continued until around 11:30 P.M., Gross told Don Winbush of the Memphis Commercial Appeal. An upright freezer in the adjoining kitchen made a 90-degree turn. Kitchen chairs, tables, utensils, a canister of sugar, a jar of spaghetti sauce moved about. A De Soto County sheriff's deputy watched the objects flying around on Sunday and decided it was not a job the law could cope with. Commercial Appeal reporter Winbush also saw the strange goings-on.

Gilbert Hines, 58, who lives nearby said, "I was drinking a can of beer this morning (a Sunday) and a pillow came around the corner, it looked like to me, and hit me on the leg. Now that's the truth if I ever told it. I wouldn't have believed it myself if I hadn't seen it."

A recap by Winbush reveals other occurrences although Bert Gross can't remember additional ones. A chicken being thawed for dinner flew off the kitchen table and crashed onto the floor. Other flying objects included Gross' size 8½ work boots, a butcher knife, a flashlight and other items from the front porch.

Three weeks later things were still happening at the Gross home, after a brief lull. On Saturday, April 15, a woodburning cook stove suddenly collapsed spilling its smoldering contents onto the kitchen floor. The night before dirt flew across the front room of the house. Both refrigerator and freezer moved during the night.

The disaster of the stove forced the family to start cooking light meals on a makeshift grill in the yard. Meanwhile Gross had been planning to move in a few weeks but said, "We're going to try to stay until it runs us out."

He did not identify "it" but noted that the objects seemed to fly only when two younger children, a boy 13 and a girl 15, were present. "When things start happening my two youngest are ready to leave home right away. I usually take them over [to a relative's] to spend the night."

Gross is not inclined to accept the idea that poltergeist activity is caused by psychokinetic energy from disturbed adolescents.

ICE IN THE SKY

ON TUESDAY night, June 5, an unidentified Calgary, Alta., Canada, woman was watching TV with her family when they heard a loud crash. A big chunk of green ice had crashed through the town house roof, through the attic floor and through the second floor ceiling to lie on the floor exuding a "strange smell."

Randy Hutton, staff writer for the Calgary Herald, checked with Air Canada spokesmen and they swear that aircraft waste water is kept in a tank and transferred by hose to a truck after landing. Sometimes, the airline admitted, clear sink water is jettisoned but that evaporates in space immediately.

Anyway, the problem with the airplane explanation is that ice was falling before there were airplanes.

FOR THOUSANDS OF YEARS PEOPLE HAVE BEEN GENERATING

GOOD LUCK FROM SOLAR POWER

As scientists search for new energy sources, they unlock the mysteries of the sun's power. While performing research, one of our staff recently made an incredible discovery. This discovery can change your life. It can shower you with wealth, prosperity and joy.

This Secret Can Now Be Yours!

MYSTERY OF THE SUN-JEWEL

The researcher was investigating a certain gemstone that was used in sacred rituals by ancient civilizations. The Egyptians, the Aztecs, the Incas and the Mayans all worshipped the sun as their greatest god. Their priests had secret knowledge of the sun's mysteries that has been lost in the ruins of time.

The researcher was fascinated by the strange beauty and unusual qualities of the gemstone... which was actually made of natural crystals. Its shape was a lovely free-form that could gather the sun's rays like a lens. The color was a gorgeous deep orange-red of a tone he had never seen anywhere else on earth.

Indeed, it appeared to him as if a piece of the sun itself had been transformed into a jewel.

AN AVALANCHE OF FORTUNE

The gemstone was so beautiful that he mounted it and wore it as a pendant. Shortly afterwards, his luck, which had been terrible, suddenly changed. Money seemed to come from everywhere. Women, respect, love. He seemed to attract everything one desires. Once sickly, he now glowed with health and strength.

He remembered the gemstone. He had given some as gifts to friends. They too now prospered without exception in the same mysterious way. Because of his scientific schooling he did not look for super-natural explanations. So, he searched the laws of physical science. Then his answer struck him like a bolt of lightning that sent chills through his spine.

THE MYSTERY EXPLAINED

The SOLARPOWER GEMSTONE had been formed by nature in one of the most violent and explosive frenzies ever to happen on earth. This created a natural crystal that could only allow special solar energy waves to penetrate and concentrate deep inside the blazing red heart of the SOLARPOWER GEMSTONE. These solar force waves could bring super prosperity to living things just as other solar waves bring life itself to our planet. He had his answer.

Then he remembered the ancient Egyptian and Indian priests and their lost knowledge of the sun. No wonder they rose far above their ignorant neighbors to create powerful and wealthy empires. They had known other secrets which were later "discovered" by scientists. Penicillin. Mathematics. Engineering. Now the greatest "discovery" of all.

LIMITED SALE PERMITTED

The discoverer of the SOLARPOWER GEMSTONE will only permit a limited number to be disbursed. Since nature has only created so many, he believes that each future generation is entitled to some. Our one source of the gems is kept absolutely secret.

The allotment for this generation is being made at this time in trust. The offer will end the moment this allotment has been used up. Your own SOLARPOWER GEMSTONE will come to you mounted as a pendant on a gleaming 24" gold plated chain, like the one the Discoverer owns and wears. They are now being distributed for only $7.95 to persons in need of good fortune. They are rushed to you first class mail with the postage paid by us. We might add that the SOLARPOWER GEMSTONE PENDANT may well be the most beautiful piece of jewelry you will ever own. There is no risk because this collector's item is fully guaranteed. You may return yours for any reason at any time and your money will immediately be refunded.

Let the sun's power smile on you and bless your life too!

But back in those days everybody knew that the idea that ice fell from the sky was as ridiculous as the idea that machines could fly.

UFOs IN THE USSR

THE SOVIETS seem unable to agree on an official position on UFOs. Their reasons for confusion appear to be different from those in the United States.

In the Soviet Union the government treats even the most ordinary information as secret, so unapproved subjects often gain the widest interest. The very fact that something is denied, the Russians reason, means there must be truth in it.

The current furor in Russia probably began after the claim was made last year by an astronomer, Felix Zigel of the Moscow Aviation Institute, that the Tunguska event was caused by an exploding extraterrestrial probe. The Tunguska explosion, of course, is generally conceded to have been caused by the impact of a small comet on a remote forested region of Central Siberia which leveled trees over 1250 square miles.

Zigel bases his theory on two main observations. First, he claims that the Tunguska object flew in an enormous loop — first northward, then westward, before crashing. Second, he claims that the explosion deposited a large quantity of zinc, bromine, sodium, iron, lead and "other elements that are completely atypical of comet nuclei but are quite possible for artificial structures."

In addition, Tass has stated that recent Tunguska expeditions offer other evidence which argues against its having been a natural disaster. This official Soviet news agency quotes researcher Alexei Zolotov of Kalinin, who led the party, as saying he found insect and plant mutations and other effects pointing to an artificial "residual biophysical field."

NATURAL EXPLANATIONS

THESE CLAIMS probably would not have attracted so much attention if an official denial had not been issued by Soviet academician Dr. Vladimir Migulin, director of the prestigious Institute of Earth Magnetism.

Dr. Migulin said any suggestion that extraterrestrial visitors were involved is "without serious foundation." Nevertheless, he admitted that the Soviet Academy of Sciences is seriously studying periodic sightings of UFOs over the Soviet Union. Migulin's statements were seen as a direct reply to Zigel and a rebuttal of last winter's television filming of purported UFOs over New Zealand. Although the Soviet press did not carry the New Zealand reports many Soviet citizens seem to have heard about them through foreign radio broadcasts.

The official Soviet euphemism for UFOs is "anomalous atmospheric phenomena" — as good a name as any — and Migulin admits that such phenomena have been observed over Soviet airspace. But, according to Seth Mydan of the AP, he assures his readers that most of these are polar lights, celestial bodies distorted through atmospheric refraction, aircraft, satellites and weather balloons.

NOW! LET THIS STRANGE AND POWERFUL GIFT FROM OUTER SPACE BRING YOU INCREDIBLE GOOD LUCK — ABSOLUTELY GUARANTEED! JUST AS IT HAS DONE FOR ME ALREADY!

The incredible true story of my GOOD LUCK GIFT from another world. by HOWARD MENDER

I first met men and women from Outer Space several years ago. I talked with them, invited them into my home, travelled in their space ships (many people call them flying saucers!) and learned the true secret of good luck from these all-knowing, all-powerful beings.

Please don't think I'm crazy. I know my story sounds strange. But it's true — and I have photographs I took myself to prove it! A little later in this message I'll tell you how you can get your own personal copies of those photographs, absolutely FREE!

But first, I'd like to tell you about a remarkable good luck gift the Beings from Outer Space gave to me.

It's called the LUCKY TEKITE AMULET

The amulet is actually made of stone from another world, stone which came to our Earth through millions of miles of outer space.

When my Friends from Outer Space handed me the Lucky Tekite Amulet, they told me it has locked within it great powers — powers to activate the hidden forces within all life forms to bring about all good, immense good luck, all the wishes and desires of the heart.

And do you know what? It's true! My Lucky Tekite Amulet brought me untold good luck, the love of a beautiful woman (now my wife!), success in my own business, and happiness and joy beyond my wildest dreams.

My Friends From Outer Space Order Me To Share My Great Good Fortune With Other Men and Women On Earth!

When my Friends From Outer Space gave me the Lucky Tekite Amulet, they also gave me specific orders. "We don't want you to be the only human blessed by our Visit. Share our Secrets with others!" they commanded. They made me promise to distribute the photographs I took... share the message of good luck they brought... and make the Lucky Tekite Amulet available to everyone I could reach with this message.

But before I go any further, let me tell you about the strange and wonderful feeling I got when I put the Amulet around my neck.

"I suddenly had the ability to be a winner at Bingo, the track, lotteries, sweepstakes, the numbers, card games, and other games of chance!"

"I suddenly had the ability to make anything good I truly wanted come to me as if by magic."

"I suddenly had the ability to achieve more in this life than I ever thought possible. All my wishes and dreams began coming true."

"I suddenly had the ability to make money, to become happy and successful, to attain great joy."

It was all because of the Lucky Tekite Amulet — and I was told by my Friends from Outer Space to make sure that everybody on Earth who wants a Lucky Tekite Amulet like mine could have one — at absolutely no obligation or risk!

My Friends Reveal The Secret of Tekite Landings

One night, my Friends took me out to a field, in the midst of a great meteor shower. Once in a rare while, they explained, meteorites actually reach the Earth. They told me of rare Tekite deposits deep in war-torn Cambodia in South East Asia. And they gave me careful instructions on how to gather them, and how to form them into Amulets identical to the one I wear around my neck.

Now, you can have a Lucky Tekite Amulet, Too!

I hired a gemological company to send agents to Asia, to search through the blazing jungles, seeking out and gathering the precious Tekite from Outer Space.

GUARANTEED IN WRITING TO COME FROM OUTER SPACE!

Please make no mistake. This is no phony good luck symbol like those you may have seen advertised. This is no "mystic" emblem or "guarantee of good luck" that hasn't a prayer in this world of working. That's because these Lucky Tekite Amulets aren't from this world. They are GUARANTEED IN WRITING to have come from Outer Space! And they actually contain locked within them mighty powers of GOOD LUCK unknown to our puny little Earth science!

Does all this seem too good to be true? Well, it is true. It will work for you, as it already has worked for me. I'm sure of it, because my Friends from Outer Space told me so.

And they have given me the mission of sharing their secrets with the world. They have told me to reveal the mystical powers of Good Luck they have shared with me. That is why I am offering you this opportunity to own a Lucky Tekite Amulet of your very own!

You must believe that the Lucky Tekite Amulet is everything I say it is and more — you must be sure in your own mind that it is the true key to happiness and success, to love and joy, to money and power — to everything your heart desires and more — or I will BUY THE TEKITE AMULET BACK FROM YOU FOR MORE MONEY THAN YOU PAID!

And — with every Lucky Tektite Amulet you order, I'll send you ABSOLUTELY FREE TO KEEP AND CHERISH FOREVER — a complete portfolio of photographs I took of the Beings from Outer Space and their ships.

Your Lucky Tektite Amulet Is The Secret Key To Unlock Hidden Mystical Powers Deep Within Your Own Soul!

You and every other man, woman and child on Earth have locked within your soul secret powers granted to you by God. Look around you. Modern man has so many miracles unknown even fifty years ago. Picture a cave man standing in front of a color TV set — how mysterious and amazing it must seem to him! That is how I felt standing before the wonderful Good Luck Secrets of my Visitors from Outer Space!

Then they gave me the Lucky Tektite Amulet, the key to unlock the Secret Powers within me. I found good luck. I found love. I achieved happiness and success that had for so long eluded me. I had seen Something greater than myself, and I was truly blessed.

Now you too can achieve that great happiness. Now you too can possess that wonderful blessing. Now you too can have untold Good Luck and great Good Fortune.

OMNIA POWER PROJECT 1979

FELIX Z., STAND UP!

SCIENTIFIC dissent, like political dissent, circulates underground in the USSR through the samizdat (self-published) network. Kevin Klose of the Washington Post refers to the samizdat circulation of a lecture by a "Leon Zigel" which is said to describe a meeting on the moon between the two American astronauts Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin and occupants of an extraterrestrial craft landed nearby.

Thousands of samizdat papers attributed to this "Leon Zigel" were followed by thousands of copies of a lecture on UFOs, attributed to the previously mentioned Felix Zigel, reporting that two UFOs landed in the Volgograd region of the USSR in 1975. Another 300 confirmed UFO sightings have taken place in the Soviet Union, the papers said. There are stories of a spot of light over the Caucasian city of Nalchik and of a UFO that followed a Soviet airliner from Vorkuta to Omsk. In another older case, a UFO purportedly stopped an automobile at a railway crossing in 1961.

Much of this may be a smoke screen. In sorting out the facts we find there is a Felix (or Feliks) Zigel with the Moscow Aviation Institute. And this Felix Zigel did write articles in the Soviet press expressing the opinion that a nuclear-powered spaceship may have caused the Tunguska explosion. These writings were answered with what appears to be an official government denial from Dr. Migulin.

As to the various samizdat papers in circulation, attributed to "Leon Zigel" and "Felix Zigel", the real Felix Zigel has said nothing.

GEOMAGNETISM

IN JULY FATE this column described research done in Italy and reported in the New England Journal of Medicine which suggests that many or even most heart attacks are caused by spasms of the coronary arteries rather than by blood clots in coronary arteries constricted with cholesterol.

Meanwhile the February 22 issue of Nature, the prestigious British science magazine, contains a report that there is a "particularly high" correlation between heart attacks and changes in the earth's magnetic field.

S. R. C. Malin and B. J. Srivastava studied the number of cardiac emergencies admitted to the main hospitals in two cities in India between 1967 and 1972 and correlated the numbers with a measure of the daily geomagnetic activity during the same period.

According to Science News, "Out of the 72 correlation coefficients, 62 were significant at the five percent level, 38 at the one percent level and 11 at the 0.1 percent level, compared with the expected four, one and 0 respectively."

DISTANT COUSINS?

THERE ALWAYS has been a question about how ancient hominids looked. The reconstructions of Dawn Man have been based upon a few bones and lots of conjecture. Recent analysis of a tiny bone from a specimen of Australopithecus robustus should put a bridle on much of the free-wheeling speculation about these early men and how closely related they are to modern man.

Yoel Rak of the University of California at Berkeley and Ronald J. Clarke of the Transvaal Museum in Pretoria, South Africa, examined an ear ossicle, called the incus, from a skull fragment. They found that this tiny ear bone not only differs substantially from that of modern man but the dissimilarity is greater than that between us and those of the African apes. Their conclusion is that Australopithecus robustus had to be very different from modern man.

LOST JETS

SOME UFO fans are making much of the simultaneous disappearance of two air force F-5E jet fighters last April 12 over the White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico. As of this writing no trace of them has been found.

Pilots Thomas S. Pollock and Michael G. Humphries were flying the jets which were made up with Soviet camouflage to resemble Russian MIGs. They had used assumed Soviet dogfight techniques in a simulated attack on a United States Air Force F-15 and then had headed back to Holloman Air Force Base near Alamogordo.

Humphries acknowledged an air traffic controller's instructions to change frequencies but they never came on the new frequency and disappeared from radar screens near 12,300-foot mountains. Neither ground nor air search has found any trace of the missing aircraft.

A CURE FOR SCHIZOS?

AMERICA's most serious mental illness is schizophrenia. For years researchers have assumed that it could be treated as a disease and have looked for a cure. Chemical imbalances in the blood and various other physical conditions have been investigated without much success.

Recently English researchers announced they have found a "virus-like agent" in the cerebrospinal fluid of 18 of 47 patients diagnosed as schizophrenic. The same agent was found in eight of 11 patients with other serious or chronic neurological diseases. In contrast, only one of 25 persons in a control group carried the same agent.

Soloman H. Snyder of Johns Hopkins University commented: "Of course, it would solve everything if a simple virus were found, but I would be very cautious (about the findings)."

IT HAS been FATE's policy not to try to edit the published letters of its readers. Within the limits of available space we allow our readers to make any claims they wish if these claims are relevant to our subjects and if they are not libelous, in poor taste, etc. Most publications do the same.

SECRETS OF THE MASTERS

The ONLY training of its kind in the world! By Ted Owens, the UFO Prophet. See Feb. 1979 FATE Magazine article by Jeffrey Mishlove, scientist (re Owens' psychic work).

Read about Ted Owens in "Mysteries," by Colin Wilson, Putnam's, hardcover; "Occult America," by John Godwin, Doubleday, hardcover; and "UFO Trek," by Warren Smith, Zebra paperback.

World-famous top psychic Ted Owens is now making available the secrets from his "Black Book," given to him years ago by aliens from another dimension, the SIs. These secrets are designed to give Owens' pupils powers not available to ordinary human beings. The pupil's "frequency" is raised to a high degree. He is taught how to train and use the enormous powers of his Biofield. This mind-training system can be installed in the pupil ONLY in combination with the other-dimensional powers of the Master, Ted Owens; and because UFOs gave this extraordinary Secret System to Owens to teach to certain key humans, it is easily understandable why these secrets and this priceless training cannot be found anywhere else on Earth. The idea is to give minority opinions a chance to be heard. It is always assumed that the opinions of letter writers are not those of the publication.

Recently a FATE reader in California took up the cudgel for us with an editor who is experienced enough to know better. Fredric T. Schlamp, Ph. D., a research consultant, picked up the Winter 1978 issue of The Skeptical Inquirer, journal of the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal, and was surprised to read the following: "The flap of fairy sightings from our own 20th Century, reported in this magazine a few issues back, continues unabated. In its March 1978 issue, FATE Magazine reported a multiple-witness sighting of a 'leprechaun.' He was about 10 inches tall and was spotted in a patch of weeds, with his knees drawn up to his chin. Both witnesses gave the same description of the leprechaun: green clothes, a long, thin, curved golden pipe between his lips, and a flopped-over conical cap."

Dr. Schlamp asked the source of the material quoted by The Skeptical Inquirer and received back from Editor Kendrick Frazier a Xerox copy of FATE's "Report from the Readers" for the issue in question. Sure enough, the experience was described in a letter from Jane Frances T. Woodruff, Seward, Alaska.

The Skeptical Inquirer is surely playing dirty pool here, just as we would be if we quoted a letter from Time (or from The Skeptical Inquirer) as representing Time's views. Dr. Schlamp wrote us to say that he had not believed that The Skeptical In- quiner would stoop to quoting such material as representing our views.

ARCHEOASTRONOMY

JUST AS astronomers and archaeologists have come reluctantly to understand that Stonehenge, among its other purposes for being, was an astronomical observatory, they have even more slowly come to understand that many monuments in both North and South America served the same purpose for native Americans.

Last June a number of researchers participating in the third conference on "archeoastronomy" listened to a number of findings on this emerging science. Some of the hypotheses and discoveries discussed demonstrate that ancient Americans possessed considerable knowledge of astronomy. Perhaps more important is the increased understanding of how these ancient people perceived their world.

- At sites as far apart as Cuzco, Peru, and South Woodstock, Vt., it is reported that ancient structures are aligned in a way that suggests calendars. In temperate latitudes they showed where the sun would rise in the winter solstice. In the Vermont mountains the rising sun at midwinter's day shines directly into a stone shelter. A hole in the main structure at Casa Grande National Monument in Arizona marks the summer solstice and two other holes mark — within a day or two — the spring and summer equinoxes.

- It was suggested that numerous earthworks in Ohio used the 187-foot measure also employed by the planners of Teotihuacan — the gigantic

BY THE YEAR 2050

ONE OF the countless specters raised by environmentalists is that the tremendous amounts of carbon dioxide added to the atmosphere by burning fossil fuels will do all manner of harm to earth and to us. This harm ranges from bringing on a new ice age to its opposite — creating a greenhouse effect that will roast us like pigs.

The problem with all the garbage that environmentalists keep dumping on us is that it's bad science. The truth is we're only beginning to grasp what is going on. But take heart. The United States Department of Energy is supposed to produce a definitive report by 1984. Meanwhile, this spring a workshop in Annapolis on "the environmental and societal consequences of a possible CO₂-induced climate change" seems to suggest we need not panic — increasing carbon dioxide may not be all bad.

In case you've missed it, here's the standard plot:

By the year 2050 carbon dioxide in the atmosphere will double, producing an average global temperature increase of six degrees centigrade. There will be more rainfall, winds will slacken, the circulation of the oceans will change and affect fisheries, and the west antarctic ice sheet will need to be watched lest it melt rapidly and raise sea levels. (It is difficult to say what good watching it will do.)

Obviously study is needed. One of the latest analyses refutes the conventional wisdom of the people who blame everything on burning fossil fuels. For the past century, says Dr. John Gribbin, an English scientist, as much carbon dioxide has been added to the atmosphere each year by burning wood, slash-and-burn agriculture and oxidizing humus as from burning fossil fuel.

This discovery raises some interesting questions, says Dr. Gribbin. Not the least of the questions is: where is all the carbon dioxide going? "The greatest importance of the new work is the implication that even with our profligate use of fossil fuel the forests of the earth are still controlling the carbon dioxide concentration. If we stopped destroying the biomass on such a large scale, it might well be able to cope with the extra carbon dioxide from fossil fuel, removing once and for all the threat of the global greenhouse."

In other words, let's leave the forests intact and at least stop burning them!

SAVE THE FORESTS

THIS IS easier said than done. Timothy C. Whitmore, an Oxford University botanist, warns that the great tropical forests of the world will be reduced to scattered fragments by the year 2000. Huge areas of the Amazon jungle are being bulldozed and burned for dubious agricultural projects.

Not only are the large trees being cut, says Whitmore, but some forests are being leveled entirely, with small trees being ground into chips for pulp. In Malaysia bulldozers are compacting as much as 70 percent of the cleared land, hampering tree regeneration. In Sumatra a whole national park has illegally been opened for logging as a result of bribes.

In the United States, on the other hand, although mature forests seem to be diminishing, total forest cover appears to be on the increase.

PONDER SURVIVAL

DR. IAN Stevenson of the University of Virginia Medical Center in Charlottesville and Bruce Greyson of the University of Michigan Medical Center at Ann Arbor are psychiatrists who recently urged other medical doctors to take a serious look at the question of survival.

In a joint article in a July issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association the two men answered criticisms of recent books by such writers as Drs. Elisabeth Kubler-Ross and Raymond Moody.

Reviewing the research, Stevenson and Greyson said that persons who anticipated dying because of a fall, drowning, or a violent confrontation experienced their lives flashing before them. But survivors of suicide jumps, for example, did not have such experiences.

They concluded that the "suddenness and unexpectedness" with which a person faces death may influence the so-called life review experience. They also speculate that near-death experiences, which also include meeting deceased relatives and friends, may be analogous to transitional states of consciousness that occur between sleeping and waking, whose features "may not be characteristic of those mental states that lie clearly on either side of the transition."

While available evidence is still far from proof of survival, they say that life after death "is also far from deserving the neglect it has received from most scientists."

SO LATE SHMART

TO DATE there is no evidence of life on planets circling other stars, nor is there evidence that other stars have planetary systems. Nevertheless, the SETI program (Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence) continues, although at a reduced pace. The $2 million application for SETI was cut from the 1979 budget.

We can still learn much more by studying life on earth which may be applicable to life elsewhere. One critical step in understanding how life emerged on earth, for example, concerns establishing a system by which proteins are synthesized under control of the nucleic acids, according to Dr. Alexander Rich of MIT. He believes that perhaps the synthesization of proteins is the basic element of the life process. We also need to know the process by which protein development can be directed by a genetic system in an evolutionary process.

During a meeting at the Ames Research Center of NASA in June it was suggested that about 230 million years ago, at a time when life forms emigrated from the sea to land, there was a marked slowing down in the evolution of nervous systems. No one knows why. If it had not been for this slowdown the present level of human intelligence might have been reached 60 million years ago.

As it is we have had the capability of communicating with extraterrestrial beings for only 50 years. If the rate of nervous system development presently observed had been in force since the origins of life, Dr. Dale A. Russell, a Canadian paleobiologist, says it would have taken 20 billion years to evolve human thinking capacity. Compare that with 50 years!

Other life, developing intelligently somewhere else, could have gotten an earlier or later start than earth life or could have pursued faster or slower tracks. And it may be unimaginably different. For example, scientists at the Ames conference considered the possibility that other kinds of life processes — than those based on the familiar carbon chemistry — may be based on sulfur.

Could we communicate with an intelligent sulfur-based life?

VALLEY OF THE SLEEPING GODS

How does a people cut off from contact with the outside world learn to make cloth and pottery and to build aqueducts?

And who were their Visitors from Outside?

By Joseph Trainor

Photographs courtesy Dr. Hernan Amat Olazabal

Cerro Sechin, a granite hill, looms behind south wall of temple. John Alden Mason in The Ancient Civilization of Peru calls the Sechin carvings "dynamic and naturalistic."

Carved on temple wall is Sechin man mysteriously cut in half. Scholars believe that lower portion of strange drawing on right represents stomach and entrails, suggesting cannibal feast.

THE SECHIN people had always lived in Peru's Casma Valley, although they didn't call it that. Their priests spoke of an ancient homeland, the Land of a Million Trees far, far to the east, but few of the Sechin Indians believed in such a land — despite their legends of the Great Trek over lofty mountains and great foaming rivers. Their universe was this valley, an island oasis in an inhospitable desert. To the west lay the Great Sea; to the east, a sparse rugged mountain chain which would someday be called the Cordillera Negra. North and south of the valley stretched thousands of square miles of desert — the Land of Death, a place of stunted cacti, simmering rocky ground and giant sand dunes creeping relentlessly toward the sea.

No doubt a few hardy Sechin warriors attempted to cross this harsh land but if they did, they certainly left their bones in it. The nearest water hole is 50 miles away, near a cove which would one day become the seaport city of Chimbote.

Nor had anyone ever come to the valley — at least no one human. Legends told of the Visitors from Outside who had landed in their Sky Canoe at the foot of a granite hill, later to be called Cerro Sechin. And there was the tale of the Twelve Sleeping Gods. Sechin ancestors had faithfully recorded both stories on slabs of smooth grey stone to adorn the outer wall of the temple.

For roughly 900 years, from about Numerous outline or low-relief carvings show that Sechin people looked like Indians who now live in Peru's jungles.

1800 B. C. to 900 B. C., the Sechin civilization flourished, cut off from the outside world. Then it suddenly vanished. Nothing more was ever heard of the Sechin. And their valley was deserted until claimed by the Moche Indians' growing empire.

* * *

SINCE ITS discovery by Dr. Julio C. Tello in 1930, the Sechin civilization has been the subject of heated arguments between rival schools of archaeologists. Some believe that Sechin is an offshoot of the Chavin de Huantar culture.*

Others claim that the Sechin folk were headhunters, citing as proof the carvings of bodiless heads on the temple's outer wall. Indeed, the only thing on which archaeologists can agree is that the Sechin people built the temple.

The Old Ones built it in the shape of an "E" laid on its side. Subsequent generations of priests added two elaborate walls, perhaps to hide the sacred mysteries from the eyes of the common folk. It was a massive structure built of intermingled, conical adobe bricks and decorated with fiery red jaguars painted on the walls as well as the carved storytelling slabs.

In several walled enclosures nearby the people lived in small crude adobe huts with gabled straw roofs. The enclosures were built into the hillside, several feet above the valley floor, for two important reasons: First, every inch of the valley floor was needed for agriculture; and second, there was always the danger of a flash flood coming down from the Cordillera Negra.

* The earliest known Andean culture of any sophistication was the Chavin, dated at about 700 B. C., with its center at Chavin de Huantar in the northern highlands of Peru and a coastal phase at Cupisnique. The Chavin seems to have been the center of a religious cult whose influence was felt over much of the Peruvian coast, especially in the art style in which the jaguar predominated.

Not that the Sechin folk abhorred floods. On the contrary they depended on them. Every winter — the Season of the Fogs — the flooding Sechin River spread silt over the valley floor, constantly renewing the farmland.

The women brought their laundry to the river where they pounded it clean with large round stones. Sechin dress had not changed much since the days of the Old Ones. Both men and women wore the breechclout, usually dyed blue. The Old Ones had dressed in breechclouts of bark which had been pounded into long strips. Their costume can be seen in carvings on the walls of the temple.

Sechin women were spared the arduous task of lugging water to their huts. A complicated system of reservoirs and aqueducts supplied each enclosure with all the water it needed.

Mystery surrounds every facet of the Sechin civilization. Who were they? Where did they come from? How did a people cut off from all contact with the rest of the world learn to make cloth and pottery and to build aqueducts? And how can a civilization at the peak of its development suddenly vanish?

John Alden Mason, in his book The Ancient Civilization of Peru (reissued in 1975), writes: "A very important site which has been the cause of much dispute among archaeologists is Cerro Sechin in the Casma Valley. The unusual and striking feature is a line of erect, large, flat, unshaped stone slabs carved with large human figures and human heads in outline or low relief. The poses are rather dynamic and naturalistic. . . .

"The art, however, is very different from the Chavin (de Huanter)-Cupisnique style. Though apparently on the Chavin horizon — probably, in fact, a little earlier — Cerro Sechin seems to be a subculture sui generis, like nothing else yet known."

The end of the Sechin civilization was probably due to a natural disaster, most likely a severe earthquake like the one which devastated that part of Peru in 1970. In Nomads and Empire Builders author Carleton Beals points out: "Underneath Moche and Chimú temples at Sechin were found 87

Scholars conjecture that bodiless heads with eyes closed represent dead Sechin dwellers or possibly even trophy heads.

No one will hazard a guess as to the meaning of the stele which now stands upright in front of the Sechin temple.

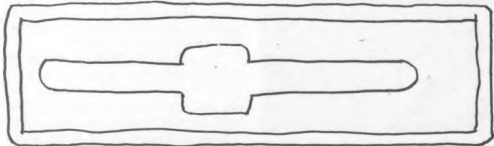

monoliths, 22 of them 15 feet tall. Some had been wrenched out of place by a prehistoric landslide."

Only an earthquake of the highest magnitude could have caused so terrible a landslide at Cerro Sechin. One can almost visualize the boulders rolling down the slope and crushing the frail adobe huts. Probably the earthquake poisoned the river, the only water supply, forcing the Sechin people to flee in the only direction open to them — east.

By sticking to the banks of the river, the people eventually would have reached a place where there was uncontaminated water. They could have survived on small game in the woods until they were over the Cordillera Negra and safely settled in the beautiful valley known as the Callejon de Huaylas. They may have remained there and intermarried with the local Indians — or they may have wandered through the Andes as the Incas did in the days of Manco Capac and his sister-wife, Mama Ocllo.

The idea of long Indian migrations through South America is not as bizarre as it sounds. The Incas are said to have originated on the shores of Lake Titicaca from where they were led to Cuzco by Manco Capac in a migratory march not unlike that of Moses. And the Carib Indians, for whom the Caribbean Sea is named, left their home near Rio de Janeiro in remote antiquity and spread throughout northeastern Brazil and Venezuela, eventually invading Cuba and the Antilles in their oceangoing canoes. If the Sechin people did indeed migrate to the Callejon de Huaylas, they were merely repeating in reverse the journey their ancestors had made to the coast.

The costume of the Sechin ancestors as portrayed on the temple wall is similar to the grass skirts worn by the Yagua Indians of the River Marañon. This suggests that the Sechin, too, originated in the tropical rain forests of eastern Peru — quite literally the Land of a Million Trees. For some unknown reason — tribal war, perhaps — they moved westward over the Andes and the Cordillera Negra and finally settled in the Casma Valley. But again, how did the Sechin folk, nestled in an isolated valley, create a highly-advanced civilization?

Luis G. Lumbreras, in The Peoples and Cultures of Ancient Peru, fixes the Sechin period at around 1800 B. C., well before the Chavin and Guanape cultures. Lumbreras claims that Sechin is a "site undoubtedly related to Chavin but resembling it in a way that suggests it may be of somewhat earlier date."

However, it's hard to believe that the Sechin culture was inspired by the Chavin. For one thing, Chavin de Huantar is more than 300 miles away, across a desert and two mountain ranges. One of these, the Andes, is more than 20,000 feet high. Travelers today have difficulty making the trip by car. Are we to believe that Stone Age Indians commuted back and forth between the cities?

If Sechin was not in contact with a proto-Chavin culture, then how did the Sechin know of jaguars and monkeys? There are jaguar paintings on their temple and in 1973 archaeologists unearthed a burial jar decorated with a monkey figurine. Yet the nearest monkey would have been hundreds of miles away in the Amazon Valley!

Clearly, knowledge such as this could have been brought to Sechin only by someone used to traveling long distances with comparative ease. But who? And how did they do it?

JOSEPH TRAINOR was born in Taunton, Mass., in 1949. He majored in history at Bridgewater State College, then transferred to Northeastern University in 1969 where he was graduated in 1972 with a B.A. in journalism.

While he was in college he worked as a reporter-intern for Taunton's Daily Gazette and joined Fitchburg's Sentinel and Enterprise as a reporter in 1972. He is now working as a planning assistant for the CETA Administration.

He has published articles in numerous issues of War Monthly and in the Providence, R. I., Sunday Journal. He is currently working on a novel set in Brazil.

The answer is in the temple slabs. When pieced together the 87 slabs form 41 columns. There should be 42 but one slab is missing. The temple wall was designed to hold 21 columns on either side of the stairway leading to the temple.

On the slabs are 42 portraits of bodiless Indian heads. Many seem to have their eyes closed and a few have wavy lines coming from their mouths. In The Art and Architecture of Ancient America George Kubler writes that these portraits represent "facts of headhunting and warfare." But Ferdinand Anton, in The Art of Ancient Peru, points out that "...the curling lines issuing from the mouths of some of the heads are a common symbol in pre-Columbian art for speech, prayer or hymns. . . ." He adds that the "eyes of some of them are closed, signifying that they are representations of dead men, possibly even trophy heads."

Some of the heads may indeed represent dead men but there are other figures portrayed on the left-hand temple wall. There are six erect figures clad in the bark skirts of primitive Indians. Four of them appear to be warriors, each holding a stone ax. A fifth figure seems to have had his torso severed. His mouth is open, as if to scream, and his hair is standing on end. The sixth figure is also screaming, his face distorted in terror, and he is pointing skyward.

Besides the heads and figures, two slabs bear a chain of five indecipherable convex symbols, a long canoe standing on its prow and 12 odd-looking bald heads. While Indian heads are always portrayed with long flowing hair (accurately, in view of the way Amazon tribes wear their hair) these heads are bald. If they are trophy heads why do they not have hair?

Furthermore, the heads are not round but hexagon-shaped and flat on top. The features are somewhat pugnosed, quite different from the Sechin ancestors depicted on the wall. Since they do not seem to be human, could the bald heads represent Sechin gods?

The temple wall on the right-hand side bears a similar series. Again we have the terror-stricken man pointing skyward, a man with his hair standing on end, pictures of people praying, and our 12 bald friends. But here there is an interesting addition: the figure of a man in an ornate helmet which covers most of his head. Lines which look suspiciously like hoses with valves run from the helmet to his torso. Can this be an ancient astronaut, the Sechin's Visitor from Outside?

Taken together, the walls appear to tell a story: warriors gather here . . . terror in the sky . . . strange objects . . . people are frightened . . . many dead . . . Visitor from Outside walks among us . . . many pray . . . Twelve Sleeping Gods are seen.

If this seems too fanciful, consider the stele which now stands upright in front of the temple. It bears only one symbol, an elongated shaft with a bulge in the middle. No one will hazard a guess as to its meaning. Yet if the stele is turned to the horizontal, the shaft assumes a familiar shape — that of the sauceroid UFO seen by millions of people in the last 30 years.

* * *

WHAT BOTHERS archaeologists most about the Sechin civilization is the abrupt manner in which it appears. Ferdinand Anton points out that many archaeologists "thought that the Sechin stones represented another ancient Peruvian style older than that of the Chavin culture, but this view has not been borne out by stratigraphic excavation."

In other words, archaeologists digging in the Casma Valley have not found any evidence of a pre-Sechin culture. The civilization seems to have come out of nowhere!

That's one interpretation. Here's another:

It is 1800 B. C. For untold ages the Sechin folk have lived a hand-to-mouth existence in this valley, hunting, fishing and gathering edible wild plants. Then one day the saucer appears, hovering over the granite hill. The craft is damaged and must make an emergency landing. The crew desperately needs water and the nearest water hole is 50 miles away.

From the bushes the frightened Indians watch the saucer land. Turning to their shaman they ask for advice. He tells them they must attack the craft; it's filled with devils. The warriors do so and the saucer defends itself accordingly. After a few Indians are killed, the rest fall to their knees, offering prayers to these new gods.

The damaged craft is unable to take off. A crewman, selected to serve as emissary to the Sechin, walks among them in his space suit, assuring them that they will not be harmed. As the long months pass while they wait for rescue, the crewmen plant a garden to supplement their diet. They teach the Indians how to cultivate land, how to make pottery from the clay of the riverbed and how to build aqueducts to insure that water reaches their new garden plots. The Indians prove to be eager pupils; a city begins to rise.

A few of the Indians are invited aboard the saucer where they see monkeys, lizards and jaguars, specimens collected near the Amazon. The Indians believe the animals are heavenly creatures and in years to come their images will appear on Sechin religious and funerary articles.

Either in the landing or in the skirmish with the Indians, 12 of the saucer's crew were critically injured. To keep them alive until a rescue ship comes, their mates place them in life-support tanks. The sight of the 12 crewmen lying side by side awes the visiting Indians. They think the crewmen are dead but their hosts assure them that the 12 are merely sleeping. Thus is born the legend of the Twelve Sleeping Gods.

When finally a second saucer arrives the damaged craft is either repaired or destroyed and once again the Sechin folk are left alone in their valley. But they will never forget the Visitors from Outside and the tale is handed down through the generations.

The Sechin Indians erect a temple on the site of the saucer's landing so that the people may worship the departed gods. Artisans tell the tale in carvings on stone slabs for the temple walls so that future generations may know what happened here.

Until some concrete evidence of such an ancient astronauts' visit turns up in the Casma Valley, this will remain a somewhat far-fetched theory. But who knows what secrets Cerro Sechin may yield in the years ahead?

The House of the Living Dolls

Proudly displayed on a bookcase were five beautiful dolls representing five different cultures — but one day the eyes of the Spanish doll began to glow . . .

By Virginia S. Glowacki

IT WAS May 1976 when strange things began to happen around our house. For one thing basement lights that we had turned off would turn on again. At first I thought someone was playing a practical joke and simply turned the lights off again. I was annoyed with the situation but I didn't let it bother me.

One day that summer my son who was 10 years old at the time informed my husband Dick and me that a ghost had appeared at the foot of his bed. Richie described the image as a dark shadowlike figure with visible arms. Naturally we shrugged the incident off, trying to reassure him by saying that ghosts do not exist. Although Richie listened, he never changed his story and on other occasions claimed he had seen the ghost again. At one time Richie told us that the date 1915 had something important to do with the history of the house in which we lived. I was shocked when I later learned that the year 1915 was indeed significant for the house — there is no normal explanation for Richie's knowing this. He claimed that the ghost, who by that time had become his friend, gave him that date.

We lived in an old house and it was obvious that additions had been made at least twice in its history. I have been able to trace the house history as far back as 1902 by checking town records, land grants, deeds, etc., and by talking with longtime residents of this small Connecticut town. I have been unable to prove the age of the house although all indications are that it was built well before the turn of this century. It is my personal theory, unproven by documentation, that the section which was our kitchen was a log cabin at one time. The house was "deeded to or given to" a well established local company in 1915 — this is the date my son mentioned to us! I have spoken with the chairman of the board of that company but he is unable to check the house history before 1915; there are no records. He does not know why or how his company acquired the property.

For some reason I never liked the cellar and went into it only when it was necessary to do the laundry. The cellar was always cold and seemed to have a distinct chilling personality of its own. Our four children, Ginger, 12,

Richie, 10, Marc, seven, and Jon, five, did not feel comfortable in the cellar either. It had always seemed a spooky place ever since we moved in, in December 1975. There were black footprints and handprints on the floor and on the bulkhead door. Painted in white on the outside of the door were the words "Come On In."

In June 1976 a friend of ours named Bob came north to stay with us while he looked for employment. He left his wife Ruth, 45, and his two sons, Pat, 21, and Kelly, 15, in Florida, intending to send for them once he obtained a job. When Bob did find work his hours were 4:00 P.M. until 3:00 A.M. Almost every morning Bob would come home from work and find the cellar light on, although I always turned the lights off before I went to bed. Bob would turn the lights off again. This went on for months.

In July we were gathered in the living room and a guest had decided to bring along a Ouija board so we could fool around with it. Previously I had used a Ouija board as a toy, a game, and I thought there was nothing wrong with using one. After all, anyone can buy a Ouija in a department store. Our company stayed until 4:00 A.M. asking questions of the board.

During the course of the evening the cellar door which was in the hall near the kitchen kept opening on its own. I thought I was imagining things as I closed the door every time I passed it, shutting it tightly, making sure the latch caught. I thought I was the only person who noticed this but the next day Bob mentioned that he had continually shut the cellar door while our company was here. I told him I had done the same thing; we were at a loss to explain it.

From then on the strange things occurred more frequently. The first of October Bob's family moved to Connecticut to stay with us until they could find their own apartment. My 29-year-old cousin Mike also moved in. Ginger spent most of her time at my parents' home since she welcomed the change from so much confusion.

We heard footsteps on many occasions, light footsteps such as those a woman makes and heavy footsteps such as a heavyset man would make. When everyone was downstairs we could hear the footsteps in the bedrooms, as though someone were walking around. Moaning and crying sounds could be heard coming from the vicinity of the cellar. Our two German shepherds would bark and growl at nothing the human eye could see.

We would hear knocking at the front or the back door, but no one would be there. A substance that I can only describe as water dripped from the kitchen ceiling; there are no water pipes in that ceiling. Out of nowhere a small pool of blood appeared on the kitchen floor. Articles of clothing that belonged to none of us were discovered in closets and drawers. Articles put down in one spot were found in another; some never were found again. Small change appeared on the floor and the money did not belong to any one of us. Furniture moved, doors opened and closed on their own and unidentifiable voices were heard.

A picture of Christ which we kept on our television set would turn of its own accord and face the wall. On one occasion this happened before my eyes. A crucifix which also was displayed on our TV would be discovered out of its stand and lying on the couch. One day the large crucifix which hung in our bedroom suddenly fell off the wall. The right arm of Christ broke off and the figure fell off the cross. The tiny gold nails that had held Christ's body on the cross never were found.

Our children were frightened. I was terrified. The boys refused to go upstairs alone at night. Everyone was petrified and I began to think I was losing my mind. Pictures do not move on their own! Furniture doesn't move unless someone pushes it! Lights cannot turn themselves on and off! I was becoming a nervous wreck. I told myself I was imagining things or my eyes were playing tricks with me. This was becoming more than I could handle. I am 32 years old and still cannot conceive of such things happening.

I had a doll collection which was proudly displayed on a bookcase at the foot of the stairway leading to the bedrooms. There were five dolls, purchased at various times and places, which represented five different cultures. On numerous occasions these dolls would be discovered facing the wall. One day I noticed that the eyes of the beautiful Spanish dancing doll, with her long black hair and lovely lacy red dress, had changed. Her eyes actually were different! At one time the doll was very pretty and an asset to my collection. Now it looked as if someone had expertly painted her eyes with some type of silver paint which gave them a glowing appearance. She had become ugly. I hated the way she looked but I was reluctant to give in to whatever strange phenomena were taking place in our house, so the dolls remained where they were. On many occasions we discovered the Spanish doll at the opposite end of the bookcase either in the arms of another doll or in front of the other doll. Strange as it may sound, almost everyone who was living here felt that the dolls actually "watched" them while they climbed the stairs.

The Spanish doll's eyes bothered me so much that Ruth, Mike and I decided to take her off the bookcase and hide her. Ruth put the doll in a plastic bag to protect her clothing and the three of us went into the cellar and placed the doll in the chimney vent. Ruth shut the door which separated the two sections of our cellar and made sure the light was off. We propped a chair against the doorknob and placed a heavy snow tire against the chair to make sure no one could enter that section of the cellar. When we left the basement we made sure those lights were off too and Ruth nailed the cellar door near the kitchen shut so that no one could enter the cellar — or if he tried we would certainly hear him. The next morning when Bob came home the cellar lights were on but knowing the door was nailed shut he did not attempt to turn them off.

Later that morning Mike and I went down to the cellar and found the chair and tire exactly as we had left them. We removed them and went to look in the chimney vent. The doll was gone! She was not in the chimney vent! We were totally frightened but we looked around and discovered the doll standing on the pipes in the cellar, still in the plastic bag. I don't know what compelled me to do it but once again I placed the doll with the collection. I could not hide things only to have them reappear almost at will!

At approximately 2:30 one morning I was waiting in the hall upstairs to wash up for bed. I finally decided to go downstairs and wait until the bathroom was empty. As I started downstairs, I saw the most frightening thing I have ever witnessed. The Spanish doll rose about four inches straight up in the air and proceeded in midair across the length of the bookcase and sat down in front of the doll at the opposite end of the bookcase. It was as though someone had picked her up and moved her.

I screamed Dick's name over and over, crying hysterically, frozen with terror and completely paralyzed where I stood. I could not stop screaming. It was only when Dick and Mike came inside — they had been out with the dogs — that I was able to move. Dick picked up the doll. Now, not only was she ugly, her head was grotesquely twisted. Her head was not meant to be movable; when she was manufactured her head was posed in a permanent position. Dick attempted to move her head back to its original position but was unable to do so. Finally, in anger, Dick burned the doll in the charcoal grill outside. Ruth was in our bedroom and I ran to her and collapsed in her arms.

One evening we sat down and talked about the situation as rationally as possible, trying to come to some conclusion as to what we should do. Dick and I are Catholics and decided that it would be a good idea to have our home blessed again by our parish priest. He came and did this one Sunday afternoon. However, the strange phenomena only intensified after our home was reblessed. Dick, Bob and Pat worked evenings but on several occasions the rest of us at home fell to our knees and said the Lord's Prayer aloud, hoping to secure some peace. The situation became so bad that Mike, Bob and I could tell when a presence, someone other than a human being, was in the room. The air would become icy cold and then the paranormal activity would begin.

Ruth works in New Haven and an associate of hers gave us the name of a psychologist who is familiar with psychic phenomena. I contacted this professor at Yale University and he put me in touch with the Psychic Research Center in Durham, N.C.

Several weeks later I was contacted by Boyce Batey, a qualified psychical researcher who in addition holds a Bachelor of Arts degree in English Literature from Princeton University. Mr. Batey of Bloomfield, Conn., is Research Committee Chairman for the local chapter of Spiritual Frontiers Fellowship. He studied with Dr. J.B. Rhine at the Parapsychology Laboratory at Duke University and since then has investigated many poltergeist disturbances and haunted houses. Every incident that took place in our house was thoroughly investigated by Mr. Batey and the other qualified members of his group. They took pictures with infrared film and interviewed us extensively on tape. Mr. Batey and the other members of his group, among them a nuclear physicist and an associate professor of clinical psychology, spent many long tedious hours at our home trying to prove or disprove the incidents that were taking place. The results of their investigation were forwarded to the Psychic Research Center in North Carolina.

Our credibility has been established and it has been determined by the research group that the house is inhabited by entities or spirits. Seances were held in an attempt to establish communication with these entities. Some of them met with success; others failed. My immediate family and Mike underwent numerous psychological tests.

The Catholic church was kept abreast of the situation and because of the increased paranormal activity a Mass was said in our kitchen. Thereafter the unexplainable activity almost completely subsided and most of the time the house was quiet.

With never-ending faith in God and comforted by the concern expressed by the psychical researchers and the understanding of the Catholic church, we were able to endure this period of hell! As a result we are more knowledgeable and a much closer family than we have ever been.

Since we moved out in September 1977 I have talked with a family who resided in the house years ago. They too experienced "strange things" but were too afraid of ridicule to make them public.

An erstwhile neighbor told me she still hears crying and moaning noises coming from the house.

I have been inside the house twice since we moved and nothing has been done to it despite the restoration planned by our landlord at the time we moved.

Mr. Batey writes me that nothing significant appeared on the infrared photographs. I cannot include the photographs of the broken crucifix or the picture of Christ because they, together with some other articles, are in a "demonic proof" wooden box which I have no intention of opening.

BREAD CAST UPON THE WATERS

By Fred S. Russell

IN THE spring of 1941 my sister Nell Russell was graduated from the Moses Schoenberg School of Nursing of the Jewish Hospital in St. Louis, Mo. Soon thereafter she married Harold Swingler of Overland, Mo., and they left immediately for Camp Roberts, Calif., where he was in training.

While riding up the coast one day in a Greyhound bus they came upon a bad accident. The bus stopped and Nell jumped off, administered first aid to an injured woman and was credited with saving her life.

In 1949, now a war widow, Nell was working as the school nurse at West Texas State Teachers College in Canyon. On a visit to our parents in southern Illinois, Nell was driving through New Memphis when a car ran a stop sign, struck her car amidships and knocked it into a cornfield across the highway. Nell was thrown from the car and lay semiconscious, her mouth and nasal passages filled with mud. In a matter of minutes a Greyhound bus stopped, the door opened and a nurse jumped out. She administered first aid and was credited with helping save my sister's life.

The nurse was Rosalie Garbs who had been Nell's classmate during nurses' training.

BURIAL DELAYED

IN MANILA, Philippine Islands, relatives of Antonisa Agabin were reluctant to bury her when she died in February 1979. The first time they tried, she sat up and asked for a glass of water. That happened eight years ago. During her wake the woman first moved a foot, then her head; then she sat up. The mourners fled in fright. When she died this year of an undisclosed illness the family delayed the burial, just to make sure. Then at the cemetery mourners opened the casket for a final look before lowering it into the grave.

California Kidnap-Murder Suspect Arrested . . .

Court Admits Psychic Evidence

In precedent-setting case, testimony of police and victim's parents verifies psychic's role in search for suspect.

By James Crenshaw

THE USE OF psychics in the investigation of criminal cases has been given important recognition by a California court. The judge ruled that a psychic's impression of a potential suspect was a valid "investigative tool," especially in providing leads which would justify an arrest. This may well be the first thoroughly court-documented case of a successful psychic assist in the search for a kidnap-murder suspect, the details having been verified in testimony by police and the parents of one of the victims.

Yet paradoxically the very success of the psychic's role in the case conceivably could result in freedom for the accused triple murderer, who officers testified has confessed. The problem is that the psychic's detective work which led directly to the suspect may be the basis for an appeal.

The court held that a composite sketch based on the psychic's description of a suspect — then unknown to her and to the police — was not in itself a ground for an arrest, although the drawing was identified by the family of a missing boy. Other circumstances which developed after the identification, however, did constitute "probable cause" for an arrest, the judge decided. The defense promised to appeal the ruling, either in an attempt to stop the trial or in case that a conviction resulted.

Here is the story as it unfolded both in and out of court:

Police detectives in the city of South

Gate, a suburb of Los Angeles, were totally without leads in the disappearance of seven-year-old Carl Carter, Jr., when the woman psychic was called on for help. That was in the latter part of October 1978. They said they had no clues whatever. Nor did they know whether the boy had been kidnaped or had just wandered away or even if he was alive.

The psychic-medium, whose legal name is simply Joan, told the detectives she believed the boy was not alive and began making a rough drawing of someone who she "sensed" might be the murderer. She did not know him and had never seen him, but she tried to indicate her impressions of his features.

At this point the South Gate officers decided to take her to Los Angeles police artist Fernando Ponce, whose job it is to interview witnesses and produce composite sketches from their descriptions. In this case, the resulting sketch, as everyone concerned now concedes, missed the mark in several particulars, but Carl's father and mother took one look at it and agreed, "That looks like Butch."

Harold Ray "Butch" Memro, a 33-year-old boat company worker, had been an acquaintance of the Carter family for two years. Within an hour he was under arrest and before the day was over he had confessed not only to the strangulation murder of Carl Jr. but to the 1976 throat-slashing murders of two other boys, Scott Allen Fowler, 12, and Ralph Chavez Jr., 10, in nearby suburban Bell Gardens. Police there likewise had been unable to find an arrestable suspect.

The psychic's help had literally broken all three cases. The South Gate detectives jubilantly called a press conference to announce their apparent success. Det. William D. Sims did not reveal the name of the psychic (he said this was at her own request) but in answer to a newsman's question, he declared, "She didn't have a whole lot of information — just the fact that young Carl was missing and the area he was missing from. She took it from there."

Detective Sims verified that Joan did not know the boy, his family or the suspect and would only say that he "contacted" Memro after the parents' identification of the composite sketch. In pretrial hearings, however, it was brought out that this "contact" was made at Memro's South Gate apartment when Sims and his partner, Det. Louie D. Gluhack, rushed over from the Carter home within minutes of the identification. The date was October 27, five days after Carl Jr. was reported missing. However, Memro was not arrested at the apartment. The officers interviewed him briefly (he denied knowing anything about the disappearance) and returned immediately to the Carter home. The arrest of Memro followed shortly thereafter.

Meanwhile, public exultation over the apparent solving of the three crimes was short-lived, for a shadow began to form on the legal horizon. Within hours of the press conference, the police clamped down on any further revelations and adamantly refused to discuss the details of the case, much less to release the drawing that had led them to their first prime suspect. But in pretrial hearings it was brought out that Memro guided police to the body of Carl Jr. hidden by underbrush in still another suburban community, and he allegedly discussed quite freely the Bell Gardens murders. Unfortunately, the confession was not in writing nor on tape. In fact, Memro insisted that no notes be taken during his statements and he was said to have searched high and low, under and above tables and chairs, to be sure there were no concealed "bugs" (electronic pickups) to record his statements.

Gradually it became clear that the defendant and his counsel were going to contend he was not legally arrested and that — among other things — police reliance on the word of a psychic was not sufficient "probable cause" either for his arrest or for the subsequent search of his apartment, where numerous pornographic photos of young boys were found.

David Feldman, a deputy district attorney, repeatedly conceded that without the confession, which the officers would testify to from memory, the prosecution would have no case. Deputy Public Defender Peter Williams wanted the confession "suppressed" on the ground that the arrest was illegal and that threats and promises of leniency had been made to obtain it. If he prevailed, the whole case could be thrown out.

The hard-working police detectives were appalled. They felt they were entitled to use any legal means to assemble the facts necessary to obtain a conviction. The prospect of a man they alleged had confessed to the killing of three young boys going free because of what they considered a superficially technical gap in the procedural chain was unthinkable. So they were understandably touchy about any further out-of-court declarations. Det. Sgt. George Troxey predicted sadly that the case might grind along until 1980 before all the issues could be settled.

On the line too was the whole issue of the legitimacy and advisability of using unorthodox (i. e., paranormal) means to track down a suspect. Furthermore, no matter what rulings the trial court might make, the problem would inevitably complicate the appeal in the event of a conviction. Such a case would automatically go to the California Supreme Court. The question of a psychic's participation in a criminal investigation could be the subject of a precedent-making decision by the state's highest tribunal.

Pete Williams for the defense attacked the practice in the Memro case, as was his duty. Ironically, he was placed in the position of attempting to show that the officers relied on the psychic's help in deciding to arrest the defendant.

Officer Sims testified during the pretrial hearings that the psychic was not relied on when the actual arrest was made. But Williams argued, "I think all the evidence is contrary to that."

He noted that Memro was "contacted" immediately after the identification of the sketch. It also had been said that the investigators dug up part of the yard adjacent to the apartment after his arrest, presumably because the psychic had told them the boy was dead and the body was somewhere in a hole.

"Where did they get the information to go digging in Memro's yard unless they believed the psychic — that the Psychic Joan felt that sketch at right did not exactly convey her mental impression of man responsible for Carl Jr.'s disappearance. She sensed that face should be longer, nose more pug and tilted. But when boy's father saw sketch, he said, "That looks like Butch." Harold "Butch" Memro, left, was arrested on kidnaping charges.

boy was dead?" Williams demanded. He also said that Sims indicated during the press conference he was "shocked at information the psychic had given" and that it was significant Memro was arrested within an hour of the time the composite drawing was shown to Carl Jr.'s parents.

Feldman countered that the police did not rely on the psychic in making the arrest but on voluntary statements by Memro that he had invited Carl Jr. to have a "Coke" with him before the disappearance and then had seen the boy return to his home. But young Carl, it was charged, didn't go home and Memro was perhaps the last person in the world to see him alive. In addition, the porno pictures had been observed, and there was other physical evidence, Feldman contended.

Moreover, Feldman said, Memro admitted that he had been incarcerated in the California State Mental Hospital at Atascadero as the result of his arrest on a charge of molesting another boy and was on probation. All this, he said, constituted sufficient grounds for arrest without relying on the psychic's initial lead. Nevertheless, the deputy DA was frank to admit that five days of investigation had failed to produce anything which would explain Carl Jr.'s absence until the psychic was brought in.

"They (the detectives) attempted to follow any possible lead, no matter how weak or from whatever source, because they had nothing else," Feldman admitted. "Then they got that sketch, and Carl Carter, Sr., said, 'That looks like Butch.' For whatever it was worth, that was the only information they had."

But, he insisted, although it led to the arrest, it was not the direct cause of the arrest.

In the southeast (Norwalk) division of the Los Angeles County Superior Court, Judge William E. McGinley agreed. He said the validity of an arrest does not depend on whether a defendant may be found guilty but on all the circumstances surrounding the case at the time of the arrest, including the defendant's admission that he was probably the last person who had been with Carl Jr. before he was reported missing.

So with "all the circumstances" in mind Judge McGinley made what could be the precedent-setting ruling, especially if all the circumstances, including the role of Joan the psychic, became an issue in the higher court. Declared the judge:

"The court finds that the use of the psychic in this case was merely an investigative tool and cannot be relied upon by the officers in connection with justifying the arrest. However, it may be used to follow up additional leads. . . . The court finds that there was a legal arrest of the defendant."

After hearing further pretrial testimony and arguments, the judge also refused to suppress the confession. Memro claimed he had been threatened and intimidated by the police — but not physically abused — and was led to believe that if he told all he would be sent back to Atascadero without having to go through a trial. South Gate officers denied all this.

Memro, who was described by his own lawyer as "reasonably intelligent" and by Feldman as "pretty bright," insisted that he was offered a polygraph (lie detector) test before his arrest and that he did not know he was in custody when he was first taken to the South Gate police station. Sims and Gluhack denied there was any such deal.

Feldman asked the defendant if he had been willing to take the polygraph test. Memro said he was.

"But at that time you knew where he (Carl Carter, Jr.) was and what had happened to him?" Memro replied, "Yes."

"Yet you were willing to take the polygraph test?" Memro again replied, "Yes."

"Why?" demanded Feldman.

"Why not?" answered Memro.

Feldman also asked, "Didn't you know where Carl Carter (Jr.) was before or during or at the time of your arrest?" The defendant again affirmed that he did.

The cooperation of psychics with police in criminal cases* is by no means novel or new. What appears to be new in the South Gate-Bell Gardens murders is the court-verified identification of a subsequently arrested suspect as the direct result of a psychic's picturized description.

Carl B. Carter, Sr., who carried on an auto repair business in South Gate, had purchased a motorcycle from Butch Memro about two years before

Carl Jr.'s disappearance. (Police reported that witnesses described a possible suspect in the 1976 Bell Gardens murders riding away on a motorcycle much like the one the older Carter bought.)

On the weekend when Carl Jr. was reported missing, his father was away from home on a "motorcycle run." Meanwhile, Memro had arranged to have his car repaired by Carter, with the understanding that a needed part would be supplied. The car, a Volkswagen, was left at the Carter home on Sunday, October 22, 1978, though the place was swarming with police investigating the missing boy report. Memro rode back to his apartment in his girl friend's car, saying to her — according to testimony at the hearings — there was nothing they could do to help in the search. He agreed with her that it was a shame young children were no longer safe.

Not until the next Friday, October 27, were Sims and Gluhack able to show Joan's psychically inspired sketch to the senior Carter and his wife Stella.

Joan, incidentally, has dropped a former married name as the result of a court-approved petition and now uses only her first name, because "for the first time in my life I need to be me — everything else is a title or an extremity." Here is the way she says she got involved in the case:

A retired South Gate police officer, Wayne Brockus, had become interested in the metaphysical classes she conducts at her AUM center in Bellflower, Calif. (He is also a hypnotist and feels police departments should use hypnotism whenever indicated to tap the memories of potential witnesses.) As he began to observe demonstrations of Joan's psychic and mediumistic abilities, he decided her talents could profitably be used by police agencies. Brockus introduced her to his former colleagues at South Gate police headquarters and she offered her help when needed.

"They seemed to be startled at what I could do," said Joan, "but they told me they could not pay me because of Proposition 13 (the new tax limitation law). I said, 'I don't think anybody asked you for money. I was only offering an ability to serve. If I can do that, fine.'"

"Then they suggested that sometime I might want money. So I said, 'I don't think you're hearing me. If I can serve you, let me serve you.'"

"Then this case came up, and I ran from it because from the first I felt the boy was dead, but Wayne insisted I write down the information I was receiving."

Brockus gave the information to the detectives who then asked to see her.

"I had said, along with some other things, that the boy was in a hole. They said, 'Do you really think he is dead?' and I said, 'Yes.'"

The police began searching in an uncapped sewer hole near the Carter home. Joan objected. "I told them he was not down there. I told them, 'I didn't say a sewer hole.' They asked me, 'What kind of hole?' So I just told them 'a hole.'"

(She said she was told that the boy's body later was found in a shallow hole in some underbrush where Memro allegedly had left him.)

When she visited the home of the missing boy, Joan met his mother and asked to examine some of Carl Jr.'s clothing. "I usually don't deal with psychometry," she explained, "but I wanted to make sure of what I was getting."

During the short visit, Joan recalled that Mrs. Carter said to her: "I know he is going to come home. I know he is alive."

I asked Joan what she replied, and she said, "I told her that we would all send him light and love, that we would see him where he needed to be and know that God is always with him."

She admitted it was a difficult situation, knowing "absolutely" the boy was not alive.

"It is horrendous to deal with," she commented.

Finally, after leaving the Carter home, Joan informed the detectives: "I know now who took the boy away." At least, she said, she knew what he looked like. She attempted then to draw a rough picture of a suspect. At this juncture she was asked if she could give a description to a police artist. She thought she could.

The drawing, as completed, was not entirely accurate because she eventually decided she was receiving two impressions, one of a man in his late 20's or early 30's and a boy of around 15. The latter, she believes, has a connection of some sort with the victim or victims.

She apologized for the shortcomings of the sketch.

"When I was giving the information for the drawing, I kept saying I felt we had two people involved. Then as the picture started to take shape, I kept asking the artist to elongate the face, also to make the nose more of a pug type, kind of up with a tilt to it, and to put more details around the eyes. It was difficult to get my ideas across, particularly about the eyes — very piercing and hypnotic.

"I said the suspect sometimes wore a mustache but that he did not have one at the time, that in fact he had scratched himself when he shaved it off." She said one of the officers subsequently confirmed this.

She also said she told the artist she thought the suspect from time to time wore a beard and so she wanted to emphasize other identifying features. "I understand the defendant now has a beard," she added, "but I remember I told the artist the mouth was very full and that he had the strangest neck. I remember I said, 'It's thick, and yet it's not very thick. In some respects, it's thin but it's really thick.' As you will see, it is very thin as it comes from under the cheekbones but then becomes like a bull's neck.

"As for the face, I told Bill Sims and the other detectives, 'When you show the sketch to anyone, tell the person to imagine the face being much longer.' " (In court, Memro testified that, when he was shown the sketch, he remarked, "I hope my cheeks aren't that fat.")

"They were not truly able to get the picture I wanted," Joan emphasized, "but considering the difficulties, I felt Mr. Ponce did a very good job."

Despite the difficulties, the sketch passed the ultimate test. It was recognized. On the witness stand in Judge McGinley's court, Carl Carter, Sr., affirmed that upon being shown the composite, he declared, "That looks like Butch." Sims and Gluhack wasted no time getting to Memro's apartment to see for themselves.

From the same witness stand, Mrs. Carter testified: "I looked at it (the sketch). I could see something familiar about it and I said, 'It looks familiar.' That's when my husband said, 'That looks like Butch.' "

"Did you agree?" Williams asked her as part of his determined — but unsuccessful — effort to show that the officers depended to a great extent on the identification of the composite as the basis for the arrest.

Mrs. Carter replied without hesitation, "I agreed and my son agreed." (She was referring to another son who was present.)

Both Mr. and Mrs. Carter confirmed that the officers came back to their house within about a half hour after they left for Memro's apartment. Soon afterward Memro showed up too, bringing the part he wanted installed on his VW. Carter testified he had turned the job over to a helper. "After my son was missing, I just quit work completely," he said.

Both Sims and Gluhack testified Memro was questioned further outside the Carter home and in the end handcuffed and placed under arrest on suspicion of kidnaping. This occurred when Memro suddenly "remembered" he had gone with Carl Jr. for a Coke before his disappearance.

Ruling on the legality of the arrest the court remarked on the inconsistency of Memro's statements to the detectives and cited these, along with other points, as justifying the arrest, quite aside from the rôle of the psychic. However, while Sims was on the stand, Judge McGinley inquired: "Did the sketch in your opinion resemble the defendant?" Sims' answer was a firm, "Yes, sir."

His partner Gluhack told the judge they had exhausted all other leads when they confronted Memro in his apartment. Asked why they had gone to the apartment after talking to the Carters and showing them the sketch, Gluhack stated, "Because that's the only lead we had."

Defense attorney Williams wanted to know whether Gluhack had heard that the psychic believed young Carl was dead. "I heard it from other people, yes," he answered.

"Did the psychic tell you she thought the man responsible for the Carter kidnaping was also responsible for some other murders?" Williams continued. Gluhack insisted he had never talked to the psychic personally but admitted he had received information to this effect. Joan herself declared she did in fact warn officers that the same man who abducted Carl Jr. was responsible for other murders.

She explained she did not "see" the man clairvoyantly or have a "vision" of him, as was first reported.

"I get impressions of what an individual looks like," she said. "I don't actually see a picture as such. My inner voice tells me there is a certain kind of face, a particular kind of nose, eyes and mouth and so on. Then I put them together in my mind and try to express them as a composite whole, in this instance a composite picture."

At her center named AUM (the letters AUM — in Western writings sometimes simply written OM — represent the ancient three-syllable sound used in meditation, representing a symbol of all the all-pervading mystery of God-consciousness) Joan hopes to develop sensitives who may be useful channels for inspired community service in many directions. Her wish is that this will continue to include assistance to law enforcement authorities, with sensitives working singly or combining their efforts to seek meaningful solutions to puzzling cases.

She is working with a number of police departments in California and elsewhere, she revealed, and says she has told them:

"If today we can take you just one step further than where you were yesterday in solving a problem, we have done our work. We don't have to solve every one of those problems. If you can open up to psychics and allow them to serve you, where one cannot help you take that extra step, another may be able to. Working together we will be of service. That is what we are here for."

NOAH'S ARK LAID TO REST

By Gardiner James

THE FINAL resting place of its original existence have been matters of speculation since the Third Century B.C. Reports of finding it on Mount Ararat in a range of mountains located in northern Turkey do not appear to be valid.

According to Dr. Lloyd R. Bailey of Duke University's Divinity School at Durham, N.C., aerial photographs and written material widely circulated in 1978 are probably based on hearsay evidence and invalid scientific tests. Scientists from the University of Miami and the University of Southern California seem to agree with him.

Dr. Bailey feels that most scholars have been reluctant to say anything about the timbers supposedly found on Mount Ararat, having no desire to dignify the claims by disputing them. Unfortunately, their silence keeps interested people from getting an informed and noncontroversial assessment of the recent claims. It is regrettable that the media (such as NBC's movie In Search of Noah's Ark) give the impression that claims of finding traces of the Ark are valid.

Although searchers brought down a piece of hand-hewn beam from the 13,500-foot level of Agri Dagi in the Mount Ararat Range and claim that laboratory tests indicate the wood is at least 5000 years old, the tests appear to be questionable.

The key biblical words relating to the final resting place of Noah's Ark are found in Genesis 8:4: "And the ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountains of Ararat." The ancient land of Ararat, which was located in Armenia, contained several mountain ranges, according to archaeologists, and various religious cultures picked different ranges and different individual mountains as the landing site.

Dr. Bailey suggests that the wooden beam and other structures found in the glacial ice pack may have been the work of worshippers who, believing they had found the landing site of the Ark, hauled wooden crosses up the mountain for ceremonial purposes.

As for the biblical flood, University of Miami geologists have found evidence of an extensive flood that occurred about 10,500 years ago but the sea level resulting from such a flood would have risen only between 15 and 30 feet. Geologist Cesar Emiliana observes, "There is no way the sea level was high enough to put anything like an ark on the top of a mountain."

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER SHARE A DREAM

"Four badly burned bodies found in a wrecked plane were identified as those of Santa Clara County residents."

By Denise Herberger

CAMPBELL, Calif., Friday, March 3, 1978 — Lea Davis was preparing breakfast when her 13-year-old daughter Beth walked into the kitchen.

"I had a terrible dream last night," Beth remarked, rubbing sleep from her eyes.

"Really? Tell me about it," Lea said. She was interested in dreams; she believed every one had a meaning.

"Well, I dreamed that I saw four bodies lying in the snow."

"Who were they?"

"I couldn't see what any of them looked like but I knew they were all dead," Beth answered. "And one of them was a baby."

"Was the baby a boy or a girl?" her mother asked.

"Oh, it was a little girl. I could see her little dress, shoes and socks. What does it mean, Mom?" Beth sounded dismayed.

"I really don't know," Lea answered. "We'll have to wait and see."

Later that day, in the beauty shop she runs in her home, Lea was finishing a hairdo for Joanne Blivens, a friend and neighbor.

"Andrea Lorenz is coming in today, isn't she?" Joanne asked.

"Yes, Friday is her regular day," Lea replied.

"Do you mind if I stick around? I want to ask her some questions about her husband's Cessna." Flying was a big part of Joanne's life and Lea's too, for their husbands both had pilots' licenses.

"Sure, it's all right. Stick around if you want to," Lea said. Just then she felt an ice-cold draft cutting through the room. "Did you feel that, Joanne? It was so cold."

"I didn't notice anything," Joanne said.

A moment later Andrea came through the door.

"Hi, Lea," she said. "We finally made it back. We were stuck in Indio because of bad weather. We couldn't get out for four days and there was nothing to do. My hair's a mess."

"I like your hair down like that," Joanne remarked. "You should wear it without so much back-combing."

"Your hair would droop too if you were stuck in a motel for four days," Andrea said petulantly. Then she said to Lea, "I don't think I can make my usual appointment next week. Can I come on Tuesday instead of Friday?"

"No problem," Lea said. "I'll put you down for Tuesday."

"I'm not sure I'll even be able to make it then. John's involved in an air race. Can I call and let you know?"

"Sure can," Lea said, writing Andrea's name in her appointment book and following it with a question mark.

"I dread going to Tahoe this weekend," Andrea continued. "John's flying makes me so nervous. I white-knuckle it all the way."

The three women talked of flying and small airplanes while Lea dressed Andrea's hair. She finished the combing — except for the bangs which Andrea always combed herself. Those bangs wouldn't act right for Lea or anyone except Andrea.

As Lea worked on other customers during the day she often felt that sharp icy breeze. She always looked toward the door to see if it were standing open but each time it was securely closed.

That night Lea and her husband went out for dinner. She had her usual two dinner drinks but later noticed they — or something — disagreed with her. After retiring for the night she couldn't sleep and decided to drink some milk and take an aspirin. She went back to bed, somewhat more relaxed, and finally fell asleep.

SATURDAY, March 4, 1978 — Lea Davis was dreaming. She saw four coffins lined up but they didn't look exactly right. Their ends were rounded, bullet-shaped. One coffin was child-sized. Amid a group of people dressed in black the coffins seemed to be rolling up a drive toward a church.

Then one coffin melted, reshaping itself into a car. A woman in the back-seat sat up, all the while combing her bangs. "That's Andrea!" thought Lea.

"Thank God, I'm free at last," the woman said. "Oh, it was awful, just terrible when it happened. But it's over now and I can finally breathe. I am happy now."

Lea awoke suddenly and looked at the clock. It was 3:00 A.M. She slept fitfully for the rest of the night, wondering about the meaning of her strange dream.

SUNDAY, March 5, 1978 — The morning edition of the San Jose Mercury carried a shocking story, datelined Loyalton:

"Four badly burned bodies found in a wrecked plane near the Nevada border were identified as those of Santa Clara County residents.

"Witnesses to the crash said the twin-engine Cessna 411 exploded into flames in midair. . . ."

The dead were John Lorenz, his wife Andrea, John's secretary Josy Maxwell and her baby Christine.

When Lea told her daughter about the crash Beth was very upset.

"Mom, remember the dream I had? Did they crash in the snow?"

"It happened near Loyalton," Lea answered. "There must have been snow. There were avalanche warnings the day before."

"The little shoes! Was there a baby on the plane?" Beth pursued.

"Why, yes. Josy and her baby were on the plane."

"What did Andrea look like?"

Lea described her, adding that her hair was frosted.

Beth said, "The lady I saw in my dream had short dark hair."

"Two weeks ago," Lea said, "I cut Josy's hair. She wore it short and it was dark."

Unbelievable as it seems, both Lea and her daughter had dreamed of the impending crash. Now Lea understood both dreams — and she did not grieve. She felt that Andrea had taken a moment from her new existence to teach her that death need not be tragic, that life exists beyond the grave.

SOUTH AMERICA ENJOYS UFOs

By W. Ritchie Benedict

AUTUMN 1978 brought a wave of UFOs to Latin America. Carlos Acevedo and Angel Moyo reported that at 4:30 A. M. on September 23 they were south of Buenos Aires, stragglers on the last leg of a 39-day stock car race, when a violet-yellow light shone in their rearview mirror. A strange force shut off the headlights and killed the engine of their Citroen CG, lifted it off the road and set it down a minute later about 95 miles north. The force, whatever it was, also drained the car's gas tank.

The following day, September 24, businessman Alejandro Hernandez was driving in southern Chile and he claims that a huge saucer hovered over his car and swallowed it. Inside, five bulky figures stuffed Hernandez's 13-year-old son into a box while a sixth interviewed Hernandez in a metallic voice. Witnesses saw the car, with frightened father and son inside, descend to the road after the harrowing experience.

A month before, bank manager Serano Silva claimed that a flying object buzzed his car on the highway between Tunja and Bogota, Columbia. The car's engine and headlights died and the banker and his passenger suffered temporary paralysis.

In Argentina, six fishermen in San Luis Province say that on February 4, 1978, a saucer lit up the predawn sky while a towering figure in a silver jumpsuit climbed down a ladder, waved, then returned to the saucer which sped away. Police found huge footprints at the scene.

An oval-shaped translucent object ringed by a halo of light flew silently over the Andes in Neuquen Province on August 22, 1978. Descriptions along its 375-mile path were so numerous and consistent that the UFO landed on the covers of two news-magazines.

Vlado Kapetanovich, a Peruvian engineer who says he met spacemen while building a dam, put himself under psychiatric care to dispel his own doubts before he wrote a book on the encounter. When the book was published Kapetanovich's daughter had him committed to an asylum, but he talked his way out and his book became a best-seller in Peru.

Sergio Lemos, a Rio de Janeiro schoolteacher, says he was told by "UFO Commander Akilovan" that his mission was to help prevent holocaust. Ariel Rietti, head of Argentina's UFO Observatory Commission, seems to believe this. He says, "UFOs have a vested interest in averting a nuclear war on earth, for this would blow the planet apart and alter the cosmos."

A PSYCHIC ADVENTURE . . .

THE SEARCH FOR AN IRISH MARTYR

Psychic clues lead an American woman on a quest to uncover the explosive truth behind Ireland's greatest historical mystery.

Part 1

By Ann Druffel

ON SEPTEMBER 19, 1803, in Dublin, Ireland, 25-year-old Robert Emmet was on trial for his life. For 13 hours he listened as a parade of witnesses uttered damning evidence. No one dared to testify in his behalf.

The verdict, when it finally came, was all but inevitable. The English judge convicted Emmet, an idealistic young patriot-intellectual who had fought for his country's freedom, of high treason against the Crown of England.

All during the trial Emmet had heard his motives mocked and his character maligned. He was left with the bitter realization that the English had succeeded in discrediting everything he had ever struggled for.

Finally Emmet addressed the judge in a passionate speech which history still remembers.

He said, "My Lord, the grave opens to receive me. . . . I have but one request to make. Let no man write my epitaph. . . . Let my memory be left in oblivion and my tomb remain uninscribed until other times and other men can do justice to my character. When my country takes her place among the nations of the earth, then, and not till then, let my epitaph be written."

The following day Emmet was executed in front of St. Catherine's Church in Dublin. With red-coated soldiers standing guard a vast crowd of onlookers watched Emmet die slowly on a crude gallows. Afterwards his head was hacked from the body with a large kitchen knife. His blood flowed onto the street.

The crowd slowly dispersed. A few brave citizens furtively soaked handkerchiefs in the martyr's blood. Later dogs came and licked the cob-blestones clean of what remained.

Emmet's last words were prophetic. The location of his grave remained unknown. His epitaph has never been written. Ireland is still divided. The Republic of Ireland gained independence in 1922 but England still rules the six northern counties.

Although the people of Ireland never uncovered Emmet's body, they did not forget his bright spirit. Over the next 175 years rumors and legends concerning the whereabouts of the grave site circulated throughout the country, leading to the excavation of cemetery plots and burial vaults, but the patriot's headless skeleton was nowhere to be found.

Under hypnosis author envisioned location of martyr's grave and drew sketch which matched (except for stone marked "Desmond") what she would find in Irish cemetery.

In recent years some Irishmen and women of mystical bent have wondered if perhaps Emmet's missing remains are linked in some way with the present troubles in North Ireland. The search for his grave has intensified.

Because I am of Irish extraction the historical plight of Robert Emmet long ago and the modern tragedy of the Irish civil war have often been in my thoughts. In 1975 I decided to try to find his grave.

* * *

I STARTED OUT by reviewing the puzzling circumstances under which the body disappeared. After Emmet died, his body lay in the entry hall of Kilmainham Jail. No friends or relatives came to claim it.

The Irish antiquarian Petrie sought permission to make a death mask of the young patriot. Since no one was guarding the body, Petrie took Emmet's head home with him and constructed an exquisite death mask which still exists.

When he returned the head an hour later, he discovered someone had taken Emmet's headless body away for burial. Not knowing what else to do, Petrie kept Emmet's head and presumably disposed of it in some still-unknown manner.

Emmet was buried at government expense in a potter's field called Bully's Acre. Shortly afterwards his body vanished, stolen by persons unknown.

For three years I searched the available literature for clues to the mystery. Although I corresponded with knowledgeable persons, I came up with no information of any consequence.

Then on August 17, 1977, I had a vivid dream in which I found myself at a cemetery where patches of weeds grew around the gravestones. I saw an object in the left-hand side of the cemetery. Someone handed it to me and it proved to be a green turtle whose shell was broken in the upper right-hand quadrant. We found a couple of pieces of the shell on the ground and replaced them.

I looked at the shell again and more pieces had fitted in like a jigsaw puzzle. Five or six pieces were in place and the shell was now complete.

I awoke sensing somehow that this dream symbolized Robert Emmet and Ireland. The broken pieces of shell corresponded almost exactly to the six counties England still rules. I felt the dream was telling me that when Emmet's remains were found, the discovery would help bring peace to the north.

In the autumn of 1977 I established contact with the gifted psychic Aron Abrahamsen. Aron's unique psychometric talent, which he prefers to call "pneumatology," is described in Jeffrey Goodman's Psychic Archeology.^{*} Aron has successfully divined the location of prehistoric artifacts and other valuable items which lie hidden beneath the earth.

Sensing that this was a humanitarian project Abrahamsen agreed to work with me and requested a good picture of Emmet and a map of Ireland. He also asked for maps showing Dublin as it was in 1803, including the locations of the Dublin courthouse, St. Catherine's Church, Kilmainham Jail and Bully's Acre. He asked for an enlarged sketch of this last spot. Using these materials he would try to establish the site of Emmet's grave.

Collecting these materials was no easy task but a series of strange events spurred me on.

Shortly after my August 1977 dream I took a course in hypnotic techniques which the American Institute of Hypnosis gives for professional researchers. There I learned the techniques of autohypnosis and with them explored my unconscious mind.

During the next 10 months I had several vivid and possibly significant dreams. I didn't know how to interpret them but nonetheless I recorded them and sketched some of the images I had "seen."

I corresponded with numerous Irish universities, libraries, preservationist societies and official bureaus in Dublin in an effort to acquire the requested maps but I obtained no real help. Finally researcher John Hind of Belfast put me in touch with Malcolm and Doreen Farmer of Dublin. The three of them gave generously of their time and talents and provided me with the material.

Unfortunately no one was able to measure Bully's Acre. In desperation my mathematically-inclined daughter Carolyn and I painstakingly prepared an enlarged sketch from an 1803 map in a rare Irish book. We transposed this with the help of 1837 and 1971 Dublin maps, hoping that our enlarged sketch was accurate enough for Aron's purposes.

I had assumed no good picture of Emmet existed but then I became acquainted with Helen Landreth, whose highly regarded book The Pursuit of Robert Emmet, written in the 1940's, had brought many of the facts concerning the 1803 Uprising to light.

Helen Landreth generously provided a previously unavailable copy of a watercolor portrait of Emmet which an observer had painted at the trial. No other portrait or sketch captures the patriot's vivacious personality so well as this one does. It shows Emmet's dark deep-set eyes, light-brown hair and sensitive mouth. The portrait seemed almost alive.

After six months' constant work I sent all the required materials to Aron Abrahamsen. My charter flight was due to leave for Ireland in two weeks. Aware that time was running out, he responded almost immediately.

Hands trembling in anticipation, I opened the mailing tube and pulled out the enlarged sketch of Bully's Acre. In the northeast corner two delicate pencil lines intersected at a precise point — the exact location, according to Aron's psychic sources, where the headless skeleton of Emmet had lain undisturbed for 175 years. In the accompanying cassette tape recording Aron stated, "The events after his first burial, as I received it, are as follows: . . . it was placed in a new area . . . of the same plot. . . . It should be there, even today, whatever remnants there are, unless there have been vandals, but this I doubt."

Aron was saying that the English government of the time had secretly reburied Emmet's body. Surely, I thought, it would be simple to persuade Irish officials to allow disinterment of the lost hero's remains.

So perhaps my August 1977 dream had been precognitive. Emmet was buried in a cemetery, in a far corner. Would the rest of the dream prove true? Would the finding of his remains somehow help resolve the bloody Irish civil war?

Then Aron delivered the most stunning words of all: "Regarding Robert Emmet's head, that was given by Petrie to a caretaker named John of St. Catherine's Church who hid it in the basement, in the northeast section."

Emmet's head was considered irretrievably lost. Yet Aron was telling me where to look for it!

Aron urged me to seek further information through hypnotic regression:

"If I were you, Ann, I would put myself in the place of Robert Emmet. You see, the information and the image have been scattered so much over the past 175 years. . . . By all means don't doubt what you obtain.

"The picture of Robert Emmet seemed to be very important. . . . Meditate over it and then ask Robert Emmet, 'What do you have to say?' That's what I did. It's no secret and you may also do this, you see."

Following Aron's advice, on June 25, 1978, I met with John de Herrera, an accomplished hypnotist, who suggested that the session could take the form of a remote-viewing experiment.

"Remote viewing" is a term applied to a process recently studied at SRI International in California. Dr. Harold Puthoff and Russell Targ's experiments seem to show that ordinary individuals who do not otherwise demonstrate psychic abilities can view and receive mental impressions from distant sources.

As Aron had suggested, I meditated on Emmet's picture, with hypnosis aiding the process. I asked Emmet to give me information as seen by him during his last two days on earth and afterwards through the eyes of his "spirit."

During the hour-long session I received vivid impressions of Emmet's court trial, his last night in Kilmainham Jail and then the dark brown earth enclosing his coffin. At the site of his second, unknown grave I saw an unevenly-shaped boulder to the right of a hollow which marked the spot. About 10 feet away stood a gravestone which seemed to be associated with the name "Desmond."

As John directed me to the matter of Emmet's head, I visualized a man carrying it in a black bag and entering a room. His hands smoothed out Emmet's features. He stroked the high, aristocratic cheekbones and pushed back the hair from the forehead. He reshaped the strangled mouth but the contortions of the throat and tongue which Emmet had endured during his slow death could not be entirely remedied. The mouth was too large, the lips too full, but Petrie did the best he could. I saw his hands construct a creamy-white death mask.

"Did he take the head somewhere?" de Herrera asked.

The man walked toward a beautiful church. It had three entrances with a few steps leading up to the main doors. As Petrie entered, he glanced toward the left in the direction of what I knew to be the basement, but for some reason he did not turn that way. He talked with the caretaker who was polishing the stone floors.

They stepped through a doorway behind a gilded altar and went down steps. They entered a basement about 9x10 feet.

"There's something metal — shelves or something — in one corner," I said. "He takes up a flat stick."

The flat stick was associated in some way I could not determine with the metal objects. The caretaker dug into rich brown soil with the stick and buried the head. I was left with the impression that the head was buried in earth behind a stone in the wall.

"These metal shelves aren't connected with the wall," I told John. "The door is somewhere to his back. . . ."

After the session ended I drew the two most significant scenes — the second grave site and the basement (including the precise location of the head) — and collected these sketches together with the records of all other material obtained by psychic means. Then I mailed notarized copies to three reputable scientists for later verification.

WHEN I GOT to Dublin, I knew I had no time to waste. I had only two weeks to pry Emmet's remains from their 175-year protective covers. To accomplish this, I needed help.

I pushed a five-pence piece into a "coinbox" (pay telephone) and heard the liquid Lancastershire accent of Malcolm Farmer for the first time.

From the very start the Farmers, a transplanted English couple, formed two other points of a perfect triad. Malcolm, a professional metallurgist, taught engineering at a Dublin university. His unruffled scientific demeanor was a constant source of strength and comfort. Doreen, genteel, calm and beautiful, possessed a keen intellect and a love of earth's mysteries.

In the long Irish twilight we motored over the Liffey to see St. Catherine's. The magnificent old Anglican church was just as I had seen it in remote viewing, including its three entrances. A high wrought-iron fence equipped with heavy padlocks closed it off from the world.

Something told me that my search was not going to be as easy as I had hoped. Unfortunately, it turned out I was right.

It was a struggle to obtain permission to enter Bully's Acre and St. Catherine's. The preservationists and officials I approached were unfailingly courteous and apparently interested but none seemed willing to make the kinds of decisions necessary to further the actual search.

With the aid of Malcolm and Doreen I worked my way slowly up the ladders of Irish bureaucracy until at last we secured written permission to enter Bully's Acre, a heavily wooded, unused cemetery with a guarded gate which had been left virtually untouched for generations.

As soon as we got to the Acre, Malcolm and I measured the east boundary — 314.5 feet, only six inches off the calculation we had made 6000 miles away! Heavy vines and brush prevented measurement of the north side.

We marked off the place of Emmet's unknown grave. The site was astonishingly like the one I had sketched during my remote-viewing experience, except that a gravestone marked "Desmond" couldn't be found — but then some of the nearby headstones were unreadable or sunken. The "boulder" proved to be a broken tombstone. The hollow was visible when viewed from an angle close to the ground.

Although we tried to get permission to excavate, we were not allowed to do so. Such a decision, we were told, had to be made on Cabinet level and that would take six to eight months.

We finally were allowed to enter the ground floor of St. Catherine's. The inside door to the basement had been tightly sealed but the basement was in the exact position toward which Petrie had looked during my remote viewing. The inside door which Petrie and the caretaker entered to go down into the basement was bricked up and inaccessible except by tearing down the tightly fitted outside seal. There seemed little hope that we would be allowed to do this. It had been shut up for so long that no one knew what it might contain.

But much to our surprise a junior executive eventually permitted us to break the marine-plywood seal on the outside door, stipulating only that we reseal the basement when we left.

On July 14, 1978, we began the long process of breaking the seal. Behind us, outside the locked fence, stood a crowd of curious Dubliners. Someone who knew of our carefully guarded plans had alerted the newspapers.

The seal proved difficult; one hour later we crowbarred it loose. The ancient iron door behind swung open on creaking hinges. Sunlight streamed through.

We walked into a small empty room. Left, through an arched doorway, was an adjacent room where two large coffins sat on a ledge. Amazed, we entered. On the west wall was a bricked-in doorway. Along the east wall were three piles of ancient coffins, stacked on a bed of earth behind a stone ledge!

There had been no hint in my research that the basement of St. Catherine's contained a burial vault. One of my dreams, however, had hinted that this might be the case.

The newsmen were waiting impatiently outside. When they saw we did not have Emmet's skull in hand, they assumed we had failed. They photographed, interviewed and departed.

We set to work. Malcolm removed bricks from the west and east walls where soundings indicated empty cavities but we found nothing interesting. Strangely, I did not remember Aron had predicted the head was hidden in the northeast section of the basement.

The basement vault was approximately 9x10 feet, as the remote viewing had predicted. I had drawn my sketch with squared walls and ceilings, not because I actually "saw" them that way but because it seemed an easy way to finish them off. Looking around at the walls and ceilings of the vault, I remembered a vivid dream I'd had in June 1978.

It was in my notarized packets sent to the three scientists. This dream was of a room approximately 9x10 feet with a domed ceiling, the walls joining the ceiling in arching lines. The basement of St. Catherine's had the identical walls and domed ceiling!

ENCOUNTER IN ALABAMA

By Frances Dunlap Heron

A LONG AN isolated Alabama trail one July evening in 1970 my husband Laurence and I encountered three Georgia travelers who experienced with us a phenomenon that defies all the zeroes on a calculator. It was as if some unseen guiding force had created a set of circumstances that linked strangers unbelievably for one memorable night.

Our printed guide listed a due-to-open unit of a national campground system several miles outside Montgomery. The location fitted exactly our schedule for an overnight stop in our station wagon which was equipped for sleeping.

At the end of the pleasant winding approach, however, we were dismayed to find the manager and workmen just leaving the premises after having installed partial washroom facilities. They said the opening of the new camp had been delayed. But to our pleasant surprise the manager graciously offered us free parking space for the night near the just-completed plumbing. Another party of campers already was parked nearby.

As we enjoyed our good fortune, a middle-aged couple from the other vehicle introduced themselves, in deep southern accents, as Mr. and Mrs. Grimes. They and their 13-year-old daughter, homeward bound toward Georgia, were spending the night some 60 yards from us. Like us they had been misled by the announced opening date of the campground. Mrs. Grimes insisted that we come right over to their trailer and she would fix supper for us. Having eaten earlier, Laurence and I declined regretfully.

By the time we finished our chores, we observed Mr. and Mrs. Grimes sitting under the lights snapping green beans. We picked up our campstools and sauntered over to chat. We and they had our own private campground! After amenities about homesites and travel routes, I mentioned my kindergarten teaching up north in Harvey, Ill.

"My wife will be interested in that," Mr. Grimes said. "She is in charge of our church's weekday kindergarten program."

I turned to my husband. "Shall I ask her?" I said. He chuckled.

So I asked, "Have you ever heard of a book entitled Kathy Ann, Kindergarten?"

"Yes," she replied with some surprise. "I just finished reading it."

I tried to sound matter-of-fact as I remarked, "I wrote that book."

Mrs. Grimes gasped, suddenly remembering and repeating my name: "Oh, yes, Heron." Her next words took me aback. "Kathy Ann, Kindergarten is the book I brought with me to read on this vacation trip! It's in the trailer right now."

"She liked it very much," Mr. Grimes said. They sent their daughter, who had also read some of the book, into the camper to get it for me to autograph. That inscription was like none other I have ever written!

The next morning, in the Grimes trailer, over biscuits and grits, all of us speculated on the millions-to-one odds that had brought about this close encounter.

First, for reading on a short vacation Mrs. Grimes had selected not a current best-seller but a specialized book on the religious education of small children published 15 years before and nearly out of print.

On their way home to Georgia Mrs. Grimes, her husband (a Baptist minister) and their daughter stopped for the night at an unfinished camp in the Alabama countryside. That same night a retired newspaper editor and his wife from Illinois stopped at the same camp.

The two families were the only overnight campers on the lonely expanse. The woman from Illinois just happened to have written in 1955 the book that the Georgia woman had just finished reading in 1970 in her trailer!

Millions of books on library shelves and in stores. Millions of vacationers, stopping at thousands of camps, motels and other lodging places throughout the United States. Yet one starlit night, in one unfamiliar spot, one 128-page blue-backed book led two American families to touch lives.

Coincidence? Or was it the fitting together of the pieces of a purposeful pattern by a psychic force operating on our unconscious level, drawing us together in a kind of extrasensory communication? — Homewood, Ill.

"I'LL BE ALL RIGHT"

By Fay Olson

IN THE DREAM I had early that morning in September 1922 I saw the ghostly apparition of a train, halfshrouded in steam or fog, sitting stationary in a vast desolate expanse.

Near it stood two shadowy figures. They hovered over a third who lay prostrate on a blanket on the ground. As I watched, the two figures faded away. Only the third remained.

Suddenly he moved his head to reveal a bloody face. He gasped my name and at that moment I recognized my father James Dooley.

"Oh, God! Dad! Dad!" I gasped. "What's happened?"

"Fay, listen—hear me—please. I'll be all right. Remember, Fay—all right—all right. . . ."

I awoke moaning my agonized response, "Dad, your poor face! Your poor face!"

I lay frozen for some moments. I was grateful for the moonlight that flooded the bedroom and outlined familiar things. I was grateful for the penetrating whistle of the local switch engine whose piercing blasts had awakened me from the nightmare.

A week passed. I told no one about the dream. But at the end of that week, when I had exactly the same dream, I felt that I simply had to tell my husband Oscar about it. Since he was a rational type, I was sure he could come up with a commonsense explanation.

I shook Oscar, who was sleeping beside me, until he muttered groggily. I asked him about the train that commuted workers and students between Salt Lake City and Garfield, the smelter town where Dad worked.

"Has there been a wreck on that line?" I asked fearfully.

"No, of course not," Oscar assured me. "What's the matter? Had a nightmare? Don't let it worry you.

Fay Olson

Gosh, honey, it's just a short straight run across the salt flats. Nothing could happen.

"Look, why don't you spend tomorrow with your folks? I think your dad's due to change shifts. He'll be home all day tomorrow and tomorrow night. You go in early and I'll come after work. We can all go out to dinner, maybe take in a show. Bet your mom would like that. Go back to sleep now. Come on, honey, be sensible!"

That morning I really tried to be sensible. But I did the morning chores without zest and went about my other business feeling tense and apprehensive. Suddenly I decided to take Oscar's advice. I checked the calendar to make sure it was really Dad's day off. Yes, he'd be home! It would be fun—all going out together once more before Mom had her baby. We'd all been concerned about her having her second child after nearly 20 years.

As I hastily dressed with one eye on the clock so as not to miss the next streetcar, I was thinking mostly of Dad. That dream had seemed so terribly real.

I closed and locked the front door and hurried out to the picket gate. The car stop was at the corner, just a hop-skip-and-jump away. Just then Dora, my close neighbor, appeared on her front porch. She waved frantically. Even from the sidewalk I could tell that she was excited and upset.

She fairly sprinted to my side. Hand over her heart she said breathlessly, "Fay, I just had a message for you from Salt Lake City — an emergency call! Oh, Fay! I'm sorry!"

"It's Dad, isn't it?" I asked weakly.

"He's been shot! He's in the Deseret Hospital. A train official talked to me. It happened early this morning on his way home from work. All week some high school boys have been tormenting a crew of section hands working on the tracks. This morning one of the boys just started shooting at the train. Your dad, who was sitting by a window, was hit in the face. I'm afraid he's bad off."

"I know," I said, somehow finding the words. "I'll go ahead. Someone will have to be with Mother. Get hold of Oscar. Tell him to come as fast as he can."

From the moving streetcar I called, "Please hurry!"

At first it felt as if I were in a living nightmare. How, I wondered desperately, was I to console Mother in her panic and pregnancy?

Then words from my dream penetrated my mind. Someone was speaking them — a boy who was hollering out a window two seats ahead of me. He was apparently taking his first solo streetcar ride. The words floated like balm into my being: "Don't worry," he was calling to someone. "I'll be all right."

It turned out that Dad's injury was not fatal and he recovered soon afterwards. He was, just as he had told me he would be in my dream, all right. — Torrance, Calif.

LITTLE WHITE DRESS

By Edith C. Lee

TWENTY-FOUR years had elapsed since my mother Catherine Dunderdale and I had left California to reside on the East Coast and now, after Mother's recent death in New York, I had returned to California to live.

My friend Marian and I had decided to share an apartment and we were in the process of unpacking and getting settled. As I was digging through my big steamer trunk I pulled out a small child's dress made of white chiffon and trimmed in Irish lace, now all yellowed with age.

I said, "Marian, look!" and held up the little dress.

"What a sweet little dress," Marian said, "but what in the world are you keeping it for?"

Laughingly I replied, "I really don't know. This dainty little dress was made for me when I was about five years old, by Helena Brockman, a very dear friend of my mother's. After I outgrew it I used to dress my big doll in it and after my dolly was broken or discarded I just kept on keeping it. I guess I haven't the heart to throw the little dress away."

The next morning while Marian and I were having a leisurely breakfast I said, "Marian, seeing that little dress last evening has brought back a lot of old memories of dear Helena, who made it for me. She and my mother corresponded regularly until the last few years; then somehow they lost touch. I'm wondering if Helena is still living here in California."

"Why don't you look in the phone directory and see if she's listed?" Marian suggested.

I did this immediately and to my happy surprise found Helena's number. I dashed to the phone and dialed the number. Helena herself answered.

"Helena, dear, do you remember me?" I asked, explaining who I was.

"Edith," she cried. "Why, I just mentioned your name to my sister as we were sitting here having our coffee. I was telling her my very unusual dream of last night.

"I dreamed," she continued, "that I was sitting in the waiting room of a railroad station and a man and a woman approached me. The man was carrying a little girl in his arms. When they reached me the man put the little girl on my lap, smiling as he did so. Then the couple looked at each other with approving nods and walked away. The little girl appeared to be about five years of age, with golden curls and blue eyes. I hugged her affectionately and she gave me a little smile and hugged me too. It was a happy feeling. Then I awoke from the dream. And just now I said to my sister that the child resembled you, Edith, when you were a little girl."

"Oh, Helena," I said, "what a beautiful dream. I do want to see you soon."

I did see Helena shortly thereafter and continued to see her often after that. I was still in the throes of grief over the recent loss of my dear mother and Helena was a comfort to me. I loved her and somehow she seemed like family to me at that time.

That was after 1951, the year my mother died, and now more years than I like to contemplate have rolled on. Helena, too, has gone and I believe she is seeing my mother and other dear ones again.

I wonder if Helena now has learned the reason for her unusual and timely dream about me all those years ago. Also, I wonder why I continue to keep the little white dress; perhaps only because it is my touchstone with a happy past. — Los Angeles, Calif.

DISTANT HELP

By Brack E. Callahan

MENTALISM has always been an accepted fact in our clan as far back as family history goes. That my grandfather Rufus J. Evans, my mother Daphna Evans Callahan, and I, her firstborn, were endowed with this family trait has been proven many times over.

Brack E. Callahan

In February 1966 I was 19 years old and a combat medical specialist with the First Calvary Division in Vietnam. Anguish, pain and death were my daily companions.

Nevertheless, I always looked forward to coming back to our base camp after a couple of weeks in the boonies to a stack of letters from Mom that helped dispel the exhaustion and gloom of combat. On one particular occasion there was not a single letter awaiting me upon my return. Figuring it was due to some mail mix-up, I dismissed it from my mind and hoped they would arrive in the next day or so. With that thought I threw myself onto my cot and fell into a heavy sleep.

Some hours later I awoke to a startlingly real vision. Mom was smiling and holding her arms out to me. But as I drew near her, she shuddered and began weeping, moaning and wringing her hands in great lament. Then her body began to bleed and decay right before my eyes until she was only a skeleton. This vision manifested itself to me repeatedly for the next two nights until I began to feel somewhat refreshed from my rest after combat and correctly interpreted it. Then I began sending her mental healing commands for body and mind.

About a week passed before I received a most welcome letter from her stating that she had not been able to write because she had just gone through the worst attack of joint arthritis she had ever endured, in her wrists, hands and fingers.

I wrote her back immediately, stating that a vision had made the reason known to me and that I had attempted to heal the affliction from the other side of the globe by sending mental healing commands and through extensive prayer.

After I returned home we compared notes and dates and found that her recovery began at the very time that I had correctly interpreted the vision and begun to send healing. She has had small flare-ups of the disease since that time but nothing as severe as that one time long ago when she called upon me across the distance for help.

Our Fruity Ghosts

I was sure I could drive the troublesome spirits out of the house — but they took their revenge.

By Victoria Rand

IN MAY 1951 my husband and I moved from our house in Dauphin, Pa., to another we had built in Colonial Park, a suburb of Harrisburg. In the process we secured half-bushel baskets and packed 75 empty jars into them. We left them in our cold cellar planning to take them down in the morning. We locked everything as usual and went to bed early.

Imagine our surprise when we unlocked the cellar door and found not a basket in sight. Every door remained locked and there was no evidence of a break-in. Perplexed, we filled the rest of the baskets with jars of canned fruit and put all of them into the car.

In our new house we placed the jars on shelves we had built in the cellar. That evening, exhausted from all our labors, we retired early.

In the morning, after we had enjoyed a quiet breakfast, I went to the front bedroom to get something; just as I got there, I heard our housekeeper May Tanger summoning me to the dining room. I found her standing at the basement door, an amazed look on her face. She was saying over and over, "They followed us." "They" now had taken several cans of peas and a jar of fruit — again without leaving clues as to how "they" had done it.

I knew a man named Ben Dorwart who claimed to be able to remove unwanted spirits from homes. Since I could think of no other explanation for the thefts than a paranormal one, I called him and related what had happened.

To my surprise he said, "I'll try to help but I just came from a convent where they're having the same trouble. The nuns are losing all their fruit at night even though every door is locked. I had them put a small table near the door of the cellar and I wrote a note to the spirits telling them, 'Money is on the table; please take it and leave fruit because it is needed for food.'

"They put guards at the door that night and stationed additional watchers in other places. No one heard anything or saw anyone come in or go out, but the next morning more jars than usual were gone. So I gave up."

So far as I was concerned, if there was nothing we could do about it, I wanted to move. Ken agreed.

Soon we found a beautiful place in Matamoras, Pa., and bought it. Again we moved, certain this time that we had left our spirit intruders behind.

At first nothing happened. Then one day as I passed the dining room I noticed the flowers I had on the buffet were pulled up and bent over. I put them back in place and went on about my business.

But every morning for the next several weeks the same thing happened — until finally I found the flowers scattered all over the floor. This time I took the flowers off the buffet.

I had a birdcage hanging near the door of the same room. Inside it were flowers and two artificial bluebirds. The spirits now turned their attention to this. Every day I arranged the flowers in the cage; the spirits arranged them differently. Finally one morning they removed the birds and laid them on the candle table below.

That did it. I could take it no more. I shouted to them, "Get out and leave us alone!"

That night I had a feeling of foreboding, as if something bad were about to happen. When I awoke as usual at 5:00 A.M., I sat up and started to swing my legs out from the covers — but I could not move them. Throwing back the covers I found a long slit in the sheet with my left foot caught in it. There was also a long cut apparently intended for my right foot but it was not quite long enough to trap me.

After untangling myself I showed it to my husband. Together we took off the top sheet. Underneath was a white all-cotton blanket which I had put under the sheet for the winter. It had three slits in it.

Some time later I read a magazine article about a woman who had problems with bothersome spirits. She took a half cup of water, added a teaspoon of salt and put it at the bottom of each door.

I decided to try this technique to see if it helped. After putting salt water at each of our six doors I picked up two books from the table and sank into an easy chair in the front bedroom — and suddenly I could not see!

Thoroughly alarmed, I got to my feet and with my hands guided myself to the steps of the family room. I called to my husband downstairs. Just as I did so, my eyes started to clear up and my sight returned.

I ran downstairs and my husband, after admonishing me to remain quiet, went upstairs to check out the situation. When he did not return, I got worried and went up. I found him in the dining room washing salt water off the furniture. The walls of the long hall also had salt water on them — higher than I could reach. The water must have been splashed around while the spirits kept me blinded just long enough for them to do their work — presumably they intended to show me my puny methods had no effect on them.

"PICTURE" OF ANOTHER SORT

ELAINE Braddock of Belle Fourche, S. Dak., takes great pleasure in her oil paintings but "pictures" of another sort, her dreams, cause her to fear the future.

She captures the beauty of rugged western landscapes on canvas and her work has a soft muted quality — but her dreams are anything but muted. According to Hugh O'Gara, staff writer for the Rapid City Journal, Mrs. Braddock can "see" events — from major catastrophes to insignificant everyday occurrences — before they occur. He writes, "She is a human seismograph for earthshaking events to come.

"But when Elaine Braddock says she foresaw earthquakes in Yellowstone National Park and Alaska, the Rapid City flood and assassinations during the 1960's, warning bells sounded. You have a premonition you're about to be bamboozled.

"But she can't be easily dismissed. She passed the tests for truthfulness including putting her dreams in writing prior to the events, telling friends (about them), forecasting events unlikely to occur. . . ."

Mrs. Braddock never knows when or where her premonitory dreams will come but when they do, they always show a ring of white clouds with a picture of a forthcoming event inside the ring. The dreams are always specific, she said, "but hard to understand."

For instance, in 1959 Mrs. Braddock was awakened by a small shock, which usually prefaces the dreams, to see the familiar ring of clouds. Within it she saw people running bare-legged through flying rocks and dust. The next day 29 campers were buried in an earthquake at Yellowstone Park's Hebgen Lake.

The spirits are still with us. We know now that we cannot get rid of them. So having no other choice, we have learned to live quite comfortably with them.

On March 26, 1964, she was jolted by a vision of an earthquake. She told a friend about it — 24 hours before the strongest earthquake ever to strike North America killed 131 persons in Alaska.

The evening of June 9, 1972, while she was watching news in the late afternoon, the white ring of clouds enveloped the TV set. In it she saw a dark cloud rolling over the Black Hills. That proved to portend the Rapid City flood.

The Belle Fourche painter also foresaw the Kennedy assassinations, the crash of a small airplane in which a Rawling, Wyo., couple was killed, and the 1976 attack on a Belle Fourche policeman.

Raised on a ranch near the foothills of Wyoming's Bear Lodge Mountains 20 miles west of where she lives now, Mrs. Braddock has "pitched hay, put up fence, broken horses and punched cows." She said it took her a long time to reconcile herself to her gift of clairvoyance although as a child when she had her first ESP experiences, "I thought everybody was that way," she says.

After years of foreseeing the future she is willing only to concede she has some sort of insight over which she has no control.

"I'm different, I'll grant you," she says, "but I'm not crazy."

Gypsy Boswell Lives Again

Tombstone in village churchyard corroborates details of a young teacher's past life.

By Maurice Blake

INTEREST IN reincarnation is on the upswing today as researchers discover that phobias and even physical ailments respond favorably to past-life therapy. Experimenters are finding that under hypnosis, many persons can remember previous life experiences and recall information they could not possibly have obtained in this life.

Definite corroboration of such past lives, however, is hard to come by. Therefore, finding hard and fast evidence — a solid tombstone in a village churchyard — has given me profound satisfaction. The tombstone, located in Tetford, Lincolnshire, England, corroborates details reported by my subject Margaret Baker who, while in deep trance, related in convincing detail her life as Tyso "No Name" Boswell, a Gypsy horse dealer who lived from 1775 to 1831. Mrs. Baker's case is the culmination of three years' work in which I have regressed more than 120 people with fascinating results.

Margaret Baker is in her midthirties and has two children of school age. She is a kindergarten teacher in Norwich, England, the city I live in. About two years ago Mrs. Baker joined my group of half a dozen friends who are actively interested in reincarnation, hypnotherapy, spiritual healing and kindred subjects. At our weekly meetings we usually have three or four visitors seeking healing for physical or psychosomatic troubles or asking to experience regression.

To initiate the regression I, the hypnotist, induce a state of deep relaxation in my subject. I turn on the tape recorder, then ask my subject to use his or her subconscious memory to recall the details of a previous life. Not only does this prove of profound interest to the subject but in some cases a disturbing phobia in this life is found to have resulted from an unpleasant experience in a previous life.

For example, one of my friends who always had to overcome a feeling of uneasiness before he could get into a warm bath found its cause in the fact that he had committed suicide in a previous life by filling a bath, getting into it and then extinguishing the gas jets by splashing water on them. Revealing the cause usually effects an immediate cure of the phobia.

I first regressed Mrs. Baker on February 2, 1978, and immediately she began to speak in a male voice using a Romany dialect and demonstrating a typically Gypsy mentality and attitude toward life. She called herself "Tyso 'No Name' Boswell" and touched briefly on several incidents in his life. I thought it would be useful to have further details so we had another session on March 22. On this occasion Tyso spoke still more freely of his life and misadventures.

During the two sessions, Tyso drew a number of vivid pictures of Gypsy life: being on the drom (road), telling me how to cook a hotchiwitchi (hedgehog) and how to make soup with bouris (snails). I often had to stop him to ask what certain Romany words meant. Neither Margaret nor I had the slightest knowledge of Romany nor have we had any contact with Gypsies.

His name "No Name" was acquired, Tyso said, when his mother asked the vicar to baptize him Jehovah. The vicar declined, saying, "That's no name for a childie!"

"All right," replied the mother, "I'll have no name." Tyso insisted that it was part of his name.

Speaking as Tyso Boswell, Margaret concluded her first 40-minute session by describing his death. He was killed by lightning on August 5, 1831, at Tetford, Lincolnshire, while he and his cousin Ted Heron were attending Horncastle Fair.

Their ashington (campsite) was in Tetford, a village six miles from Horncastle. When a storm came up Tyso and Ted took shelter in a hovel. Suddenly, to his amazement, Tyso found that he was standing up but at the same time he saw himself lying beside Ted. He slowly realized that the charred malodorous figures on the ground were himself and his cousin.

Author and Mrs. Baker sought and found Tyso's gravestone in Tetford, Lincolnshire. She is holding a dead pheasant.

"Even me bloody bewtlaces was split right down the middle! Me bewts was shriveled!" he exclaimed.

He stayed there and watched people "wailing and carrying on" after the storm but he was unable to make contact with them. But he felt sure that they would be buried in the churchyard and that his son Wester (short for Sylvester) would see that a stone was put up for them.

Earlier he had mentioned proudly that Wester was clever and could read. He had been taught in an army school while Tyso was in the army, having been press-ganged at Portsmouth. When arrested for drunkenness Tyso had been told that if he put his mark on a form he could go free in the morning. He did so, only to find that he had been tricked into joining the army. He boasted that he deserted, taking with him another soldier's silver watch as a souvenir.

* * *

TYSO BOSWELL had given me a number of starting points from which to attempt to corroborate the details of his life. If I could do so we would have hard and fast evidence that Margaret Baker had lived before.

First I wrote to the vicar of St. Mary's Church in Tetford and received a reply dated February 8, 1978, from the Rev. Peter Fluck which read in part:

"Entries in the Burial Register of 1831 in Tetford Church give the following information:

"Tyso Boswell, vagrant, buried August 7th, Age 73.

"Edward Hearin, vagrant, buried Aug. 7th, Age 60.

"In the churchyard, however, there is a stone memorial with (these) inscriptions:

"In memory of Tyso Boswell who was slain by lightening (sic) on 5th August 1830, Aged 56 years, and Edward Hearin (sic) who was slain by lightening on 5th August 1830, Aged ??

"These entries are difficult to decipher owing to monumental mason's errors. . . ."

The monumental mason made a monumental error in the date, burying the two men a year before they died. He also got the surname "Heron" wrong, spelling it "Hearin." Tyso himself, who dropped all his h's, called it " 'eron . . . like the bird." (Heron is a common Gypsy name.)

A few weeks later, Margaret and I visited Tetford and she had the traumatic experience of reading her own gravestone! While the Reverend Fluck had difficulty making out Heron's age on the stone, it seemed to me to read "59."

I appealed to Gypsologists in an attempt to identify Tyso Boswell and discovered that he was a member of a well-known Gypsy clan. His father Shadrach Boswell was a soldier who was killed in Holland and his mother was one Cinderella Wood. Tyso's son Wester was in fact an intelligent, if somewhat ebullient, character with a remarkable knowledge of the Romany language and a rare understanding of its grammatical complexities. He was well known to students of Romany life and language and he helped Gypsiologists produce a Romany grammar and dictionary, for which he was given a special award. There is further information about Wester in In Gypsy Tents by Francis Hinde Groome (1880, reprinted in 1973).

To check the Romany words which Tyso used I turned to Smart & Crofton's The English Gypsies and Their Dialect. Some of the words which I have been able to identify are: poovin' greis (pronounced grays) for pasturing hobbled horses overnight without permission; choppin' greis, selling horses (we still say "chopping and changing" in England today); bishopin' greis, filing a horse's teeth to make it look younger; mullo, dead; motto, drunk; kushti bok, good luck; millena, beer; otchi, short for hotchiwitchi, hedgehog; and stir, short for stiribin, prison.

Throughout the two regressions, Tyso spoke in simple ungrammatical English devoid of h's and plural verbs. His attitude toward my questioning was frequently suspicious and sometimes aggressive. Gypsies, not without reason, are averse to answering a gorgio's questions and never give any reliable information about another Gypsy to a gorgio.

"If they's writin' it down, it's 'cause they wants you for suffin'."

"I see," I replied. "But not to get you into trouble necessarily."

"Sometimes." Speaking during the second regression he said, "If you hadn't called me by name and said, 'Are you Tyso?' I'd said, 'No, but I might be meetin' 'im. What do you want 'im for?' That's the way we go."

* * *

HIGHLY literate today, in contrast to her life as Tyso, Margaret Baker is currently reading with the Open University for a degree. Considering Tyso Boswell's horse dealings, I find it interesting that Margaret is an able horsewoman who has trained and broken horses.

Other gifts which I believe derive from her Gypsy life include the ability to read Tarot cards, clairvoyance, psychometry and touch and absent healing. She has the ability to feel her patient's symptoms in her own body, a great help in diagnosis although not one that every doctor would envy.

Under hypnosis she readily goes into deep trance and, on returning to normal consciousness, is totally unaware of what she has said until the tape is played back for her.

The tapes of Margaret's sessions have been vetted by a friend who is the grandson of a Gypsy and the first was heard by a group of Boswell's descendants at their house in Selsdon, Nottinghamshire. They were enthralled.

How Gods Become Demons

The devil may not be the prince of evil after all — just somebody else's god who stands in the way of social change.

By Sanna Lowrance

THROUGHOUT the ages it has been man's tendency to worship that which he fears, to pledge his allegiance to those forces beyond his control, to placate the gods whether he conceives them to be the brute forces of nature or the latest technological developments of his own kind. And when new gods have appeared to be worshiped, man has dethroned his old gods without ever having to deny their power, by simply making demons of them. The only necessity has been the belief that the new gods were strong enough to prevail against the old.

So it is that the "flower children" turned against the god of materialism, just as the early Christians rebelled against the horned god of hunting, long worshiped by the pagan or primitive folk of the countryside, and neither found it necessary to deny the power of the former supreme being, but had only to point out the evil inherent in its nature to find converts from among the ranks of the older order.

In India, as Paul Carus writes in The History of the Devil and the Idea of Evil, one of the greatest divinities is "the goddess of a hundred names." Representing the power of nature in both its creative and destructive guises, she is not only the blessed mother but the symbol of the dangers of life and of war as well. "In the pantheon of modern Hindus," he tells us, "she is the central figure . . . the main recipient of Hindu worship all over the country." But among the Buddhists of Tibet this same goddess is transformed into a devilish demon called mKha's Groma.

In Egypt, Set was dethroned as the prehistoric god when the worship of Osiris came to dominate Egyptian culture and as time passed Set was increasingly linked with evil, discord, disease and violence, until finally he was known only as the god of night and darkness.

Baal, the two-horned nature god of the Phoenicians and Syrians, conquered death, chaos and drought. But by biblical times he had become the great rival of the Lord God of Israel and it was, as István Rácz tells us in The Unknown God, "against him that the fearless struggle of the prophets was directed . . ."

The Gallic Dusius was both a fertility god and a devil. Herne the Hunter, whose appearance was strikingly similar to that of the horned god of hunting worshiped by the pagans, was a vicious woodland demon of England. The daevas, gods of India and Iran, were the devils of the Zoroastrian system.

Early Christians found the wildness and sexuality of many of the older gods made them especially suitable representatives for Christian demonology. Pan, Dionysus, Artemis, Isis, Lucifer, Belial, Beelzebub, Apollo and the satyrs all came to represent the powers of evil to one degree or another.

Yet the concept of the devil remains unclear. As William Woods points out in A History of the Devil the references to him in the Old Testament and the Talmud go no further than casting him as "a divinity belonging to some other tribe." Thus Lucifer is called "the son of the morning" by the prophet Isaiah and in II Kings, Baal is referred to as "an oracular deity of the Ekronites." Only in the New Testament is he called "prince of the demons."

In the temptation of Job, Satan appears not as a devil but as an adversary of God and is in fact introduced as "one of the sons of God." Jahweh himself "in the first centuries after Christ," according to Woods, was considered a demon by the Ophites of Phrygia who "worshiped the serpent that Moses had carried on his banners in the Wilderness and maintained that . . . the Jahweh of the postexilic centuries had been a mere demon usurper."

In those early days, Woods assures us, "Satan had invariably been a spirit, but by . . . the Fifth Century, he had become palpable, weighty, and of course, visible," for by the Fourth Century, Christianity had overcome the pagan cult with all its magical rites. Even the gods of the East had been converted to the cause, reappearing in western Europe as devils residing in the imaginations of both the simple and learned. History was repeating itself, for the pagan gods worshipped earlier by many Jews and their neighbors likewise had been turned into evil powers by the religion of Jahweh.

"God became the guiding light of establishments, and thus," Woods states, "if only by implication, the devil (became) the leader of those who opposed them."

In those early days there were many who opposed the powers of the established order. There were those who refused to give up the old religion and it survived not only in pagan rites and celebrations but in fairy tales as well, for the old gods suited the humble folk far better than the new, whose agents were severe taskmasters who brought bloodshed and terror.

Thus it was in the fight to stamp out the last vestiges of the old religion that the devil was conceived by the so-called desert fathers, who, according to Rossell Hope Robbins' The Encyclopedia of Witchcraft and Demonology, in the Third and Fourth Centuries "pieced together from their hallucinations and recollections of replaced gods (such as the cloven-footed Pan) the visualization of the Devil as the grotesque man. . . ."

Woods writes, "... our devil is almost entirely an invention of Hebrew moral law and the Christian church. . . ."

Sir Walter Scott says, "Wise men have thought and argued that the idols of the Heathen were actually fiends. . . ."

And so it was that the devil was legalized by the Council of Toledo in A.D. 447 and Satan became, as Woods states, "an efficient cat-o'-nine-tails with which to whip the recalcitrant."

"Not since Bronze Age Europe had he been so nearly ubiquitous as now," Woods writes of the Middle Ages, "peering unexpectedly over one's shoulder, crawling out of one's pocket, as a toad, a buzzing fly in one's food, one's hair, wherever one least expected. . . . He was a rat who gnawed through the timbers of a ship, or a barely visible exhalation that seeped like smoke out of the mouth of someone bewitched. . . ."

In Magic, Supernaturalism and Religion Kurt Seligmann tells us that "in conceiving Satan, the one devil, theologians disposed of the old dualism . . . the ancient survivals." He continues, "... the most innocent stories were Satanic, and the women who knew about the old legends and magic traditions were transformed into witches. . . ."

From the traditional gatherings, the druids' festival, the bacchanals, the Diana feasts, the sabbath was derived. The broom, ancient symbol of the sacred hearth, became the evil tool of the witch's flight. "The sabbath and the witch," Seligmann concludes, "existed because there were non-conformist people in Europe who, oppressed though they were, clung to the defeated gods of the past.

"The nightly gatherings in the open air . . . were remnants of the religio paganorum," he writes, "the religion of the country people. But the animal's hide and horns were now considered the devil's attributes. Often the disguise was mistaken for the original and before long the fur-clad master or president of the sabbath was believed to be Satan in person.

"Wherever the voice of freedom was heard or an original idea was expressed," Seligmann says, "the authorities detected the activities of Satan." According to Balthasar Bekker, the theory of witchcraft was initiated by the papacy "to warm the fires of purgatory and to fill the pockets of the clergy," who burned witches and confiscated their property for the church.

Hugh Trevor-Roper asserts that in the 13th Century the "feudal society of Christian Europe came into conflict with social groups which it could not assimilate, and whose defense of their own identity was seen, at first, as 'heresy.'"

As society became more unsettled with the advent of the Black Death and the Hundred Years' War, he notes that the local and sporadic persecutions became more prevalent, with every "spectacular episode" feeding the growing power of the myth. "Like the Jew," he writes, "the witch became the stereotype of the incurable nonconformist. . . ."

wrote that "in many spots, the old rites associated with fertility, firewater and fire were continued. Where this happened, the church simply labeled the whole package as the workings of the Devil, calling them Black Masses or Sabats, and suggesting they were being held in purposeful defiance of God."

Wherever the people held onto their old dualistic religious beliefs, wherever they defied the established order, wherever they stood in the way of progress, there witchcraft flourished and there the concept of the devil gained ground. In a time of newly evolving social structure based not only on the production of material goods and services but on customs and rituals as well, those in that society who yearned after the old ways and the old gods were said to be worshipping the devil who, by now, had come to symbolize all that opposed the one God and the established order.

The devils that Christ had seen simply as spirits who had possessed and overcome the rational man were now the servants of the one devil who, as the antithesis of God, was unbearably ugly, appearing in this world as an imp, a gargoyle, a great bat spreading his leather wings between heaven and earth, or a goat with a human face.

"There were originals enough," said Sir Walter Scott, "in the mythology of the Goths, as well as Celts, to furnish the modern attributes ascribed to Satan in later times. . . ." Therefore, to him, it seems not the least bit strange that the ourisk, a sylvan deity of the Scottish Gael, should provide the goat form of Pan to outfit the devil in a fitting guise.

The devil, now accepted as the evil archenemy of God, was no longer remembered in establishment circles as the wild and frivolous Pan, nor as like the satyrs who had traveled in his train. He was no longer the horned god of hunting, the ourisk, the divine he-goat of Arcadia, the duii of the Celts or Dionysus. His godly heritage had been successfully abolished, his wicked place in the world determined and truly, Lucifer had been cast from heaven.

"Man makes his divinities," Russell Hope Robbins wrote, "good or evil, in his own image, the result depending on the stage of his personal development and that of the age in which he lives. . . ."

Likewise, his demons are created from those same sources and often, Raymond Buckland points out in Witchcraft from the Inside, "The gods of an old religion become the devils of the new." This is the case with Christianity just as it has been the case with many religions that have gone before, for in the olden days the demons were the gods of the alien tribe.

"Indeed," says William Woods, "in all anthropological history when two cultures come into contact, magic (and thus diabolism) is usually attributed to the less developed."

And as Robert Ornstein and Claudio Naranjo note in On the Psychology of Meditation, "The 'dark' figures of Dionysus, Persephone, and others, the idea of descent to a nether-world and the process of psychological 'death' prior to renewal, were dominant in the Mysteries of antiquity, and it is small wonder that these pagan rites (or what remained of them through the European Middle Ages) came to be seen by Christian eyes as satanic masses and cults of the devil."

Man had begun to create for himself a new social order, a new way of being and relating. His was a new world with no room for the old nor for the trappings of the old. The new religion had won and the gods of the old were now possessed of all the evil that the one God could not control. From god to demon is the way of the world and of life. It is the archetypal path that has been walked not only by the gods but by many a man and woman among us as well.

Because it is true of humanity, as Trevor-Roper wrote, that "when a 'great fear' takes hold of a society, that society looks naturally to the stereotype of the enemy in its midst." This was the case in Hitler's Germany, in the American west, during World War II when thousands of Americans were jailed simply because they were of Japanese descent, and even as recently as the 1960's when the long-haired hippies and the militant blacks aroused the hatred and fear of the Establishment because their new ideals threatened the old and established values.

And because this is the lesson of history we can expect, to a greater or lesser extent, that all the gods of all the times and all the places will be reclassified at some past or future time. For the natural transition is from god to demon, as proven by the historical and anthropological evidence of this age and all ages past.

MAIL PROTEST DELAYED IN MAIL

GEORGE Mellendorf was a soldier in Vietnam in 1971 when he wrote to Pres. Richard M. Nixon to complain about the poor quality of mail delivery to American fighting forces. His letter, dated January 4, 1971, arrived seven years late — believe it or not.

Mellendorf's letter finally found its way to San Clemente, Calif., where Nixon now lives, about the first of February 1978. An accompanying form letter from San Francisco Postmaster L. P. Lee apologized for the delay.

Nixon's staff contacted the Defense Department in Washington and tracked down Mellendorf, now an insurance salesman in Port Huron, Mich. Nixon aide Jack Brennan sent a belated reply on Thursday, March 16, on behalf of the former president.

In Port Huron, Mellendorf's wife Linda said the letter from Nixon had not yet arrived but she was confident it would within the next few days.

RINGS AROUND URANUS

By W. Ritchie Benedict

IN THE spring of 1978 astronomers discovered three more rings around the distant planet Uranus, bringing the total so far discovered to eight. Before the first five rings were spotted from a high-flying observatory plane off Australia in 1977, scientists believed that Uranus was without rings.

Dr. Peter Goldreich, a California Institute of Technology astronomer who was one of the codiscoverers of the new rings, believes, "There may be one or two more."

The initial discovery of the rings was confirmed from a ground observatory in Australia when scientists were astonished to see a star blink five times as it emerged from behind Uranus. From this they deduced the existence of encircling rings of rocks and space dust like those around Saturn. Uranus' rings are narrower — three to 100 kilometers wide compared to a width of 16,000 to 25,000 kilometers for Saturn's rings.

Observatories in Chile and California discovered the three additional rings while viewing the planet in infrared light. This toned down the brightness of the planet and made the rings easier to detect.

THE PK POWERS OF JEAN-PIERRE GIRARD

Can this man bend metal bars through psychic means?

By Benson Herbert

JEAN-PIERRE GIRARD first came to the attention of the public as a result of an appeal made over the radio by Prof. Z. W. Wolkowski, a professor at the Sorbonne in Paris. He asked listeners who could reproduce "Geller"-like effects to come forward and be tested. Girard, a French businessman, responded eagerly. Since that time he has participated in a number of experiments conducted by Wolkowski, in collaboration with Prof. John Taylor of King's College, Cambridge, Richard Mattuck of the University of Copenhagen, and others. Girard has been able to bend bars made of steel, aluminum alloys and other materials, deflect a compass needle by focusing his gaze on it, raise the temperature of liquid crystals by four degrees centigrade merely by concentrating on them, make pens and other small objects slide toward him in short one-centimeter jerks — all this while keeping his arms folded across his chest. Even more startling, he has been able to levitate two pens by positioning his hands 10 to 20 centimeters above them.

In preparation for formal experiments Professor Wolkowski, Dr. Michel Troublé, a nuclear physicist, and Raymond Villeteange, a chemical engineer, prepared metal bars 20 to 40 centimeters long and too sturdy to be bent manually. Girard was able, by merely holding and stroking the bars lightly, to create bends of up to 30 degrees within a minute or two. During a warm-up period Girard asked Wolkowski to take a franc coin from his own pocket and hold it in his hand. After a minute, during which time Wolkowski experienced a creeping sensation like an insect crawling inside his hand, the coin was found to have bent about two millimeters. Girard had not touched it.

I saw Professor Wolkowski's videotape of these experiments in Lyon, France, during a meeting organized by French magician Andre Sanlaville. There I also met Girard for the first time.

Girard told me that he had discovered his abilities 15 years earlier but had only recently ventured to demonstrate them publicly. He had taken courage not only from the news of Uri Geller and his metal-bending abilities but also from seeing films of Nina Kulagina, the Russian psychic who can make objects move across level counters and deflect compass needles by willing it. Like Kulagina, Girard found that influencing a compass needle by PK was not too difficult. This initial success suggested to him that his abilities could be channeled toward more difficult feats. Also like Kulagina, Girard told me, he experiences physical fatigue and increased pulse rate after moving an object by PK. But this does not occur after he psychically deforms metal. He explained this difference by saying that metal deformation is a gradual process which takes place over a prolonged period of time but moving objects psychically requires a concentrated burst of energy and therefore is more draining.

I personally observed one of Girard's most interesting feats toward the end of the Third International Congress of Psychotronic Research, held June 27 to July 2, 1977, in Tokyo. On this occasion Girard was attempting to demonstrate his psychic abilities for Japanese TV. Unfortun-nately, he failed to produce any PK-mediated motion among the six upright metal and plastic cylinders which were set before him. Aluminum strips were passed around to the audience but no really clear bending took place. Girard did apparently produce a five degree bend in one of several bars of an aluminum alloy (Concorde metal) but this feat was not performed under ideal circumstances.

Russell Targ, a physicist studying PK at the California-based Stanford Research Institute, was attending the meeting and complained that it was difficult to be sure exactly what had taken place. He pointed out that Girard had turned his attention from one bar to another during the course of the demonstration and no one had checked beforehand to make sure that all were straight to begin with.

Girard replied by pointing out that he must have a selection of objects for a PK test so that he can choose one with which he feels en rapport.

He stated, "I have no feeling of a direct contact with the object to be moved or bent but a feeling of an abstract relationship in the nature of an information transfer. Once this relationship is established, then all kinds of phenomena are likely to appear.

BENSON HERBERT, director of England's Paraphysical Laboratory, specializes in the study of psychic healing and psychokinesis. He has conducted extensive parapsychological research in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. A former lecturer in physics and chemistry at London's Faraday College, he is the author of numerous science fiction stories and suspense novels.

Some seconds before a metal bar bends I have a vision of the phenomenon already realized, sometimes just one second before. This vision appears to facilitate the onset of the phenomenon. Some metals such as pure aluminum or lead cannot be bent, although they bend easily by normal means. Sometimes some other object moves nearby.

"During bending the alpha brain waves predominate. There is no difference in the phenomena observed in the case of prestressed metal. For years I thought the energy came from myself but now I think that the source of the energy is all around us. I am sometimes successful in assisting others to bend metal. In the laboratory, when I am present, some others can move objects, but not when I am absent.

"I sometimes feel as if the particles in the metal are cohering together and when this happens the specimen, though unbent, is found to have acquired an unusual microstructure."

After this disappointing session there was little hint of the unplanned excitement to come. That evening Dr. Thelma Moss of the UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute took us — Girard, Russell Targ, me and others — to a bar on the summit of a 40-story hotel overlooking the center of Tokyo where we were given an extraordinary exhibition. We sat down around a table and Girard began toying with a glass. Presently we saw the glass rotate without being touched; then it rose momentarily clear of the table, about an inch into the air.

We decided to meet the next day with a specially selected audience and under controlled conditions to conduct tests at a specially selected building. For these tests, three physicists — Russell Targ, Lise Aschmann and I — stood closely around Girard who was seated before a platform on which lay a white cardboard marked in squares, three-by-three centimeters each. This in turn was placed on a raised surface with only three other objects: a non-magnetic metal cylinder, a transparent plastic cylinder and an encased compass needle. Girard concentrated first on the compass needle, then on the plastic cylinder. He passed his hand over each one in slow circular movements — without touching them.

Targ and Aschmann stood sometimes to Girard's left and sometimes in front of him. Targ periodically took photographs. I stood on his right, frequently looking at his hands from below to make sure he was not touching anything. The height of Girard's hands above the objects varied from two to six centimeters. I also slid my finger completely across the top of the table between Girard and the objects in order to be certain there were no threads which Girard might be using secretly. I also passed my hands through the space between Girard and the table. No one else was near the platform and the audience was confined to the seats of the auditorium.

For perhaps half an hour nothing occurred. The 40 to 50 spectators waited in complete silence. Then we thought we noticed a small deflection of the compass needle, about five degrees at first. After a minute or so it returned to its original position and then slowly deflected again by about 15 degrees. These movements of the compass needle recurred at irregular intervals and gradually became more pronounced so that even some of the audience could see them. An atmosphere of expectancy began to build up.

Suddenly the compass needle began to oscillate rapidly 45 degrees each way. Simultaneously the plastic cylinder slid toward Girard, over a space of nine centimeters, in two or three seconds. Its velocity was fairly uniform. There was a clear space between it and Girard's hands throughout this time. The entire audience saw the movement and applauded enthusiastically. Meanwhile, a doctor from the audience came up to check Girard's pulse. It was up to 150 but fell back to 120 within minutes.

In our opinion, there is no way that Girard could have caused the disturbance of the needle and the plastic cylinder manually, nor could he have distracted our attention during the test in order to fake the results.

Nevertheless, the French-born psychic is not without his detractors. New Scientist, a British periodical which has attacked parapsychology on more than one occasion, published a curious article entitled "Fading Spoon Bender" in its February 16, 1978, issue. New Scientist admitted that Girard had produced a slight bend in a bar it had provided but correspondent Bernard Dreyfus refused to accept the bend as paranormally produced. His only argument was the implication that because the event had taken place during the last moments of a 4½-hour session the whole thing was a trick. Later Dreyfus even wrote to Nature, one of Great Britain's most prestigious science magazines, and claimed he "had seen nothing paranormal that night" (during his tests with Girard). Apparently Dreyfus belongs to the school of skeptics who espouse the old motto: "If you happen to see anything unusual, discount it."

Does Girard sometimes cheat?

Some of his detractors certainly claim that he does. Among the most verbal of these is The Amazing Randi, an American magician.*

It would not surprise me if Girard has engaged in some fraud on occasion for the purpose of stage entertainment. But actually whether Girard cheats on occasion or not has little bearing on what he has accomplished during tests under ideal circumstances. The whole argument is academic. It is up to the experimentors to design their tests so that they are fraud-proof. It certainly is true that demonstrations of the type Girard exhibits can be faked with the help of a magnet secreted in the hand or some other part of the body. It is up to the scientists to prevent this.

But even a magnet could not account for the movement of a plastic container which I watched Girard make happen during the Tokyo test.

At present I feel reasonably convinced that this latter was a genuinely paranormal event triggered by some power Girard controls.

*Randi made this claim directly to FATE in a letter dated April 17, 1978. He pointed out that Girard underwent a series of tests with representatives from Nature and the British National Physical Laboratory in June 1977 in Grenoble, France. According to Randi, who also attended the tests, Girard could not bend any metal objects under controlled conditions but did bend one bar during an informal after-session demonstration. Randi was able to imitate the bend fraudulently. However, nowhere in his letter does Randi state that he or anyone else actually saw Girard cheat, saying only that their tests had been a failure. Randi also pointed out in his letter to FATE that Bernard Dreyfus' tests with Girard had failed — a claim which Mr. Herbert has already refuted. — The Editors.

Psychic Clues Uncover Holy Relic

As the professor stood entranced the apparition revealed to him the startling secret of the ancient vase.

By Patrick Mahony

Excerpt from Escape Into the Psychic Kingdom by Patrick Mahony, House of Words
Publishers, Box 3853, Hollywood, Calif. 90028.

AT THE close of a sultry summer day in 1907 about 50 persons gathered at Fulham Palace in England, the residence of the Bishop of London. In the group were ministers of various religions, scientists and antiquaries. They had come to hear an address by Tudor Pole, a tall athletic American who headed the London branch of a large American firm. He started out by saying that up to the time of the incident he was about to relate, he had not been aware of having any kind of clairvoyance other than clear-sightedness in business.

In the corner of the room where he was speaking there lay a little case which held a glass vessel of unique shape, rather like a eucharistic chalice but squatter and wider. It was greenish-blue in color and subtly ornamented with silver leaf which shone softly in the lamplight. Collectors and connoisseurs among the audience had examined the vase and declared that they were unable to trace its origin or to identify the period to which it belonged. Some suggested that it might be late Phoenician while others believed it belonged to the most ancient period of Venetian glass manufacture. All agreed that the mysterious object was a work of grace and beauty.

Mr. Pole went on to say that at the beginning of the year 1902 he was returning home one evening, his mind full of calculations, when suddenly an indefinable force surged up in him and briefly held him enthralled. In this interval he received an impression that somewhere near the town of Glastonbury (of which he knew only because he had passed through it by train) a sacred relic was buried. He paid little attention to this odd impression and after a while he forgot about it.

Not until some years later, toward the end of 1906, did the impression again flash through his mind and this time a voice spoke to him, reminding him strongly that the holy relic near Glastonbury was awaiting his discovery. The strange impression became more and more insistent until by November at least three times a day a detailed picture came to his mind's eye in which he saw a spot half a mile away from Glastonbury Abbey where the relic was buried near a small spring. It was as if he were dreaming with his eyes wide open, for these impressions always came in the daytime.

Mr. Pole's many preoccupations prevented him from going himself to look for the relic so he sent his sister. She thought of the expedition as a pleasant weekend trip and invited two friends to join her. The three women were astonished when they did find the rainbow-colored vessel in the spring at a place known as Bride's Hill. The vase was under a large stone which had protected it from injury and hid it from human eyes.

The women did not dare to carry away the chalice and they concealed it again under the stone. On their return they told Pole what had happened and he in turn went at once to his vicar who was very interested in the whole affair. Together the two men went to Glastonbury to fetch the vase.

Word of the discovery reached the Bishop of London who, something of an antiquarian himself, arranged the meeting of experts at his home. Their discussion remained inconclusive but it received quite a play in the London newspapers. It was a good news story even though no one could foresee that the most fascinating part of it was yet to come.

Pole was going over the newspapers in his home a few days later when the maid announced that a Dr. Goodchild wished to see him. She ushered in a distinguished man who said immediately to Pole, "I have just read of your discovery of the chalice at Glastonbury. It was I who put it in the spring at Bride's Hill several years ago."

He explained that he had been a professor at a Welsh university and had retired some time ago. Then he unfolded the incidents that led to his depositing the relic in the spring.

For many years he had passed his summers on the Riviera. In 1885 a friend who knew of his passion for porcelain and glass told him about a rare antique vase which was for sale in a curiosity shop at Bordighera. Dr. Goodchild went at once to the shop, purchased the vase for 150 francs and gave it to his father in England.

He had almost forgotten about the vase when 17 years later a curious psychological experience befell him. One day in September 1902 as he was about to leave his home he fell into a trance in which a strange form appeared to him. The apparition was so obscure that the doctor could not describe it but its words were intelligible and had been repeated several times. Dr. Goodchild was made to understand that he was somehow in great danger, for the cup he had bought 17 years earlier at Bordighera was the "Cup of Our Lord" which He had used at the Last Supper. It was to be taken immediately to some holy hiding place. At a future time, when the Church was in distress, the cup would be used in some way for the propagation of the faith of Jesus Christ.

Complying with the instructions given him in his trance, Dr. Goodchild took the chalice to Glastonbury because he could think of no holier spot in all of England. Now that it had been rediscovered, what should be done?

The two men decided to offer it to the Vatican, where it seemed to belong. That seemed inadvisable, however, after London Roman Catholic officials inspected the chalice and decided it was not nearly old enough to have been used by Jesus.

What agency had seen fit to use Dr. Goodchild and Tudor Pole as its messengers? And for what purpose? No explanation was ever found — and eventually the whole affair fell into the limbo of forgotten things.

THINKING OF CHANGING YOUR NAME?

By Gardiner James

NAPOLEON, when he entered the Military Academy at Brienne, France, changed the spelling of his surname from the Italian Buonaparte to the French Bonaparte, thereby altering his destiny, say the numerologists.

When single digit numbers one through eight are assigned to the letters of the alphabet according to the ancient Chaldean system of numerology (the nine is considered a sacred number and is not assigned to a letter), Napoleon adds up to five as does Buonaparte, the final result being the compound number 10 which reduces to the single digit one. With the "U" dropped from the surname, Bonaparte adds to eight which brings the new name to 13 to be reduced to the single digit four.

The Chaldeans placed great importance on compound numbers and considered the pairing of single digits as adding emphasis of positive or negative vibrations to the final single digit. The compound number 10 gained from the original spelling denotes the "wheel of fortune." It is the number of honor, of self-confidence and faith, and of rise or fall. One's name as a 10 would be known for either good or evil depending on one's desire. But the desired end would be accomplished regardless of the path taken.

The compound number 13 derived from the French spelling is defined in the Chaldean occult texts as "he who understands the number 13 will be given power and domination." This appears to have held true. However, the number is symbolized by a skeleton or death with a scythe reaping down young men in a field of new grain. The number also indicates a change from the place of birth and a change in plans or original desires, carries vibrations which indicate upheavals and destruction, and suggests great personal power being wrongly used and bringing ruin and an unfortunate end to him whose name totals 13.

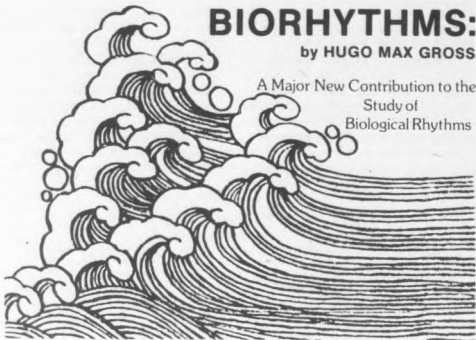

When 13 is reduced to the single digit four, the name indicates a person who has a rebellious nature and a determination to change or reverse the order of things in government. Thus the vibrations of 13 are an added influence in the characteristics indicated by the final reduction to four.

It is interesting to note that if the name Napoleon Bonaparte is computed according to the currently popular Pythagorean system in which the number nine is used, the final digit is also a four and the interpretation of vibratory influences corresponds with the Chaldean interpretation of this number. Apparently when Napoleon changed the spelling of his name he sealed his fate.

"UNCLE BILL WAS RIGHT"

By Nancy Halstenberg

ON MARCH 6, 1970, my husband Reynold Halstenberg, a research engineer at General Dynamics Astronautics in San Diego, came home from work with a troubled expression on his face. He told me he had just been given his two-week termination notice. He always tries to accept life philosophically but I could see he was shaken and uncertain about our future.

Our daughter Sue was in junior high. We had payments to make on our home and car, both of which we wanted to keep. All at once our financial security was in jeopardy.

I was so shocked that I just moved slowly around the house doing my chores with a blank stare on my face. I kept thinking, "This can't be happening." I went to bed that night so anxious and distraught that I couldn't sleep.

Then suddenly I saw a white form at the foot of the bed. It was tiny at first but grew brighter. In the very center of the light the image of my Uncle Bill Warner appeared. The figure was life-sized but not solid. Uncle Bill had passed away the year before in Atlanta, Ga.

He looked exactly as he had the last time I saw him, which had been at my cousin Joan's wedding in San Francisco. Then as now he appeared healthy and smiling — although before his death he had been ill and bedridden for a long time.

Uncle Bill said to me, "Don't worry, Nancy honey. Everything will be all right. Just don't worry."

I felt so encouraged and at ease from his message that I was able to go to sleep soon afterwards. The next morning I told my husband and daughter about the experience and during the next two weeks I concentrated on what Uncle Bill had said and tried not to worry.

The day before the two-week period was up, my husband stepped into the house with a big smile on his face. He grabbed me and kissed me, saying, "My termination has been canceled. I still have a job. Uncle Bill was right!" — San Diego, Calif.

AN UNKNOWN CALLER

By David C. Wickers

MY GREAT-UNCLE Martin Chisholm spent his life in a small town on one of the Cape Breton Isles, just off the mainland coast of eastern Canada. He was a kind man and loved by everyone who knew him.

He and his wife had 13 children. Of these one died in infancy and another of pneumonia at age nine. His wife of 37 years died of cancer in 1965, leaving him more or less alone in the world since his remaining children were by then grown and living in the United States.

In August 1975 when he was 69 years old Martin's health began to deteriorate rapidly. He had had emphysema for two years and the strain of constantly labored breathing had weakened his resistance to disease. In December of that year he was hospitalized and within a month family members had received word from his doctors that Martin didn't have much time left.

One cold and snowy day in February 1976 three relatives — his children Joseph and Mary and I — came to visit Martin. With us were a priest, Father Robert Hannon, and a nun, Sister Anne, from the local area. Inside the room Martin lay in bed, so weak that he could barely move or speak. The scene made us feel sad and helpless.

We had sat with him for about 15 minutes when we witnessed an unusual and bizarre event. It happened when suddenly Martin regained his strength. He propped himself up on one elbow and looked around the room at all of us. Then after a moment he focused his attention on a corner of the room where no one was standing. He smiled as if seeing someone there and he nodded his head. And then, to everyone's bewilderment, he began speaking in a strange language, conversing with someone we couldn't see. We asked him to repeat what he had said. He did but we still couldn't identify the language.

Martin continued to speak for several minutes in this unknown tongue. When he was finished he rested his head on the pillow again, a serene smile on his face. He closed his eyes and never uttered another word to anyone. Martin died peacefully in his sleep two hours later.

Had he spoken with someone who came to take him away to the world beyond death? — Bayside, N.Y.

KEEPING IN TOUCH

By Beverly Lindbeck

ON THE MORNING of December 14, 1970, I awoke with my heart pounding. I had dreamed of my father Stan Kelben who was recovering from a serious liver ailment at the Veterans' Hospital in Erie, Pa.

In my dream I had approached an open casket flanked by the usual floral tributes. When I looked into the casket, to my horror I saw my father. I awoke with a jolt, only to find that the sickening, overpowering smell of flowers filled my room.

Just as the numbness wore off, the phone rang. It was my brother Tim Kelben calling to tell me that Dad had taken a sudden turn for the worse and had been given the last rites. I immediately prepared myself and my family for the trip to Erie from Jamestown, N.Y. Two days later my father was gone.

On the eve of the funeral, as I was tucking my small sons Robert and Todd into bed, I felt a hand on my shoulder. I knew my dad was there in spirit and I felt comforted.

As the months went by, I dreamed often of my father but in these dreams he seemed distant and we never spoke. Then on the first anniversary of his death I dreamed that a phone was ringing but I was reluctant to answer it. Finally after many rings I picked up the receiver, put it to my ear and heard my father say, "Bev, it's Daddy."

I awoke abruptly and was sitting up in bed when I heard my father say again, "Bev, it's Daddy." This time the words comforted me rather than shocked me.

For as long as I can remember, psychic occurrences have taken place within my family. They serve to remind us of the links between loved ones that death cannot break. They let us know that somehow we can still keep in touch. — Jamestown, N. Y.

"WAKE THEM, HURRY!"

By Jeri Bickel

THIS ALL happened in East Mountain, Tex., just two years ago, in 1977. I have insomnia, so it was not unusual for me to be awake in the middle of the night. I was hoping to make myself sleepy by writing a letter to my husband David who was on the aircraft carrier Independence. And I also was sending some poems to a musician friend of mine, Jim Dandy, who was lead singer with the rock group Black Oak Arkansas.

I had closed my eyes for a minute or two to rest them before finishing up when suddenly I sensed someone had entered the room. I opened my eyes expecting to find my mother had come to tell me to go to bed. Instead I found my grandmother Louiza Medlin who had been dead for several years. She seemed upset about something and asked me if I was ready yet.

Startled, I asked her what she meant. I have experienced unexplained happenings since I was 14 and strongly believe in life after death, so I was not as frightened as some persons might have been.

Sitting down on the edge of a chair next to me, Grandmother took her glasses off and cleaned them with the hem of her dress, just as she used to do. Then, instead of answering my question, she started pacing the floor and looking around. She told me to finish up my letter and to come with her. I was scared then but nervously prepared to go with her. She told me to hurry, we had to wake them up, and she went to the door where she stood waiting.

I followed her out of the house but she vanished before I could catch up to her. All I could hear was her voice saying, "Hurry, hurry, wake up the kids."

We lived in the country and shared a mailbox with my Aunt Mary Jo and Uncle Leonard Daniel. The box was down by the road in front of their house. My dead grandmother had vanished and I was so shaken up that after putting my letters which I had automatically brought along into the box and raising the flag, I turned toward their house.

It was then that I saw the dark cloud that looked like smoke hanging over the end of the house where the bedrooms were.

My grandmother reappeared in the driveway and pointing to the house, said, "Wake them up, hurry!"

Meanwhile I began to smell the smoke. I ran to the house and knocked on the door. There was no response and I ran to the bedroom window where the smoke appeared to come from and looked in. The closet door was open and I could see flames. I screamed at my cousins Wesley Brasher and Alan Daniel who were asleep in the room. As soon as they were awake and saw the fire I was quickly forgotten in the ensuing confusion. The rest of the event is a blur but I do know everyone escaped injury and possibly death.

But what would have happened if my grandmother had not appeared to me?

I wasn't about to mail a letter that late at night. I have a fear of the dark, especially that far out in the country. But because Grandmother insisted I come out I did mail the letter and the rest is family history. — Big Coppitt, Fla.

THE SUNNY SIDE

By Floyd C. Lantz

GOSH, I feel surprisingly well! I had suffered a heart attack and was in the Cardiac Care Unit in a hospital in Altamonte Springs, Fla. They had operated on me awhile ago — I remember being wheeled into the operating room — but it's all over now and I feel fine, although very tired.

Isn't that strange! Ahead of me I see an immense field. It must be a mile long and a half mile wide. And there's a high wooden fence bisecting the whole expanse. One side is gloomy, as if night were falling; the other side is in bright sunlight.

The people on the dark side, whom I can barely see, are huddled and silent, but in the sunny area, the people seem to be laughing and having a good time. They are all dressed in white — white slacks, shorts, shirts, blouses and shoes.

Why, there's my dear departed Mom and there's Carman Bunk and Garland Hallman whom I haven't seen for 50 years! I must go over and talk to them.

Oh-oh, there's a guard at the opening in the fence. Wonder if he'll let me through. He's a big tough-looking guy.

"Hi! Is it all right if I go through to the sunny side?"

With a smile on his big robust face he said, "No, it's not all right. They saw you coming and ordered me to send you back. They also said to tell you your job isn't finished yet. Sorry!"

Now that I am home and well again I often ponder this incident. Was it a dream, a vision, an unbelievable glimpse of the world beyond? — Casselberry, Fla.

BEFORE HOLOCAUST

By Tamarah Romaine

IT HAPPENED a long time ago but I remember very clearly the night of February 15, 1939.

I was 11 years old when my beloved grandma Auguste Rosenberg suddenly became ill, complaining about pain in the stomach. She was taken to a hospital where the doctors announced the most shocking truth — like a death sentence itself. She had cancer in an advanced stage and she was sent home to die!

Tamarah Romaine

We all lived in Ostrowiec, Poland, and our home was about 12 blocks away from Grandma's. My parents Marie and Alexander Novak spent the last three nights of her life at her bedside. Finally on the third night she briefly regained consciousness, only to whisper that she was going back to that beautiful place that is without pain. With her last breath, her features relaxed and a light smile stayed on her lips.

But to me — 12 blocks away — it happened differently. I was deep in my sleep and lights were on in my bedroom. Suddenly I found myself sitting up in bed, wide-awake and surprised to see Grandma. She was wearing her new maroon dress. (It was her wish to be buried in that dress but at that time I did not know that. Also I knew nothing about life after death.)

Grandma was standing next to my bed, looking down at me with a smile, and somehow I understood that she was saying not to worry. She'll always be with me.

I remember glancing at my little silver watch, a present from Grandma. The time was five minutes before three o'clock and I was told later that was the time Grandma died. My watch stopped at that moment but for the next 14 months I did wear it anyway until it was taken away from me among all our possessions — including our freedom.

After her death and for many years to come I felt very strongly the presence of my grandmother, in danger, cold and hunger, but I had a feeling in my heart that no harm could come to me.

And indeed I needed all her guidance and protection during the awful terrifying five years of holocaust. — Chicago, III.

A NEW LOOK AT UFOs

THE MOST exciting book in the field of ufology that I have read since Allen Hynek's UFO Experience is the new Beyond the Four Dimensions by Karl Brunstein (Walker and Company, New York, N.Y., 1979, 222 pages, $12.50). Brunstein is an accomplished physicist whose major work has been in cosmic ray research; he has now turned his attention to reconciling ufology with traditional physics and parapsychology.

Brunstein makes his subject understandable for those of us who would be lost in a discussion of the abstract aspects of quantum mechanics and advanced mathematics. He states his belief that any "really worthwhile idea can be expressed in ordinary terms" and understood by anyone who will take a few minutes to ponder the idea. Thus his book begins with several chapters to give us a background on the major concepts dominating both physical and biological theory. Brunstein writes well and you'll enjoy the quick refresher course in these opening chapters.

Once you have been made aware of the "acausal" events in atomic particles, relativity and evolution, he turns to the discussion of UFOs. At the heart of his argument, which I will not attempt even to summarize, Brunstein faces the uncomfortable realization that UFOs have "no physically understandable means of getting here" and that this fact tends both to negate the extraterrestrial hypothesis for UFOs and to cause scientists to dismiss the phenomenon altogether because of the difficulty of bringing it into the realm of scientific sobriety. This "painful" aspect of the UFO phenomenon suggests the possibility that UFOs are a "new set of physical phenomena" which offer "a possible basis for new physical insights." Brunstein obviously espouses the idea and this gives rise to his evident passion for pursuing the subject.

Brunstein suggests two possible doorways to understanding the erratic phenomena associated with UFOs and reconciling them with our understanding of the physical universe. He hypothesizes a fifth dimension (beyond space and time) as an axis upon which the UFO phenomenon can be measured. (If you can't measure it you can't call it science.)

As early as 1921 one physicist proposed such a fifth dimension but could find no physical reference to give it significance. Einstein explored the idea, attempting to tie it to quantum phenomena, but was not completely successful. In each case the new dimension needed an associated force or effect to take it out of abstract mathematics and establish it in generally observable events. Brunstein asserts that we now possess such a phenomenon — the force called in parapsychology "extrasensory."

"ESP phenomena can today be viewed as quite firmly, if not yet comfortably, scientifically established," he writes.

In line with this, Brunstein proposes that UFOs get here by the sophisticated technological application of an extrasensory force, thus turning the discussion of the "psychic" dimension of ufology away from the occult into the physical realm.

I cannot agree with all of Brunstein's arguments or his conclusions but I find his perspective refreshing. I certainly would like to sit down and talk with him about the questions he raises. I think you'll find his ideas as exciting as I do.

THAT OLD-TIME ENERGY

AFTER reading Brunstein's fine book I felt let down by Maxine Asher's Ancient Energy (Harper, New York, N. Y., 1979, 181 pages, $8.95). Her book can be likened to a tabloid newspaper — the headlines promise so much and so little is delivered.

Asher attempts to prove the existence of a force she calls "ancient energy" which is distinct from the normal psychic energy which we all experience. Ancient energy, she tells us, is "an invisible force composed of matter vibrating at different wavelengths which is governed by the laws of quantum mechanics." If you can make sense of that definition please write me. It is without meaning for me although it sounds impressively scientific.

In the long run Ancient Energy turns out to be a mishmash of subjective experiences, unscientific unfinished experiments, archaeological insights from ancient astronaut literature and shallow metaphysics. The majority of the book is Asher's "psychic" experiences at various archaeological sites around the world. She relived vivid scenes of ancient happenings, got sick in Yucatan and discerned written languages where others saw only meaningless markings on stones. These vignettes are never summarized, systematized, grounded in the experiences of others or cross-checked for accuracy. As I read I kept looking for some order to the meaningful experiences but there were only more disconnected visions by an obviously sensitive soul.

Throughout, the book quotes people like Peter Kolosimo and Andrew Tomas whose understanding of archaeology assures their never being invited to speak before a literate audience. Why can't amateur explorers of "psychic archaeology" read solid works on the sites they are "exploring" and avoid making such outlandish mistakes as, for instance, this reference to the nonexistent "incredible record of accurate predictions attributed by historians to the Oracle of Delphi"?

Ancient Energy gives us the report of yet another person who has discovered Mesmer's animal magnetism, von Reichenbach's odic force and Reich's orgone but who lacks their sophistication in presenting it. Ancient Energy leaves the medical model for the archaeological but finally and abruptly dumps us into the metaphysical without any smooth connection. And then somehow (by magic?) we find that ancient energy has resulted in a "holistic interpretation of the universe." We can increase our own energy by eating foods like coffee, cake and cookies but milk, red meat, cabbage and (worst of all) chocolate will decrease it.

While reading Brunstein I disagreed with much of what he said but he stimulated my thinking and made me question my own conclusions. In reading Asher I found that basically I agreed with much she was saying — I have no problem with the idea that archaeological sites can trigger psychic images, that "ancient energy" does exist, that it is somehow linked to sex, food and psychic development — but her book is so disconnected, subjective, filled with off-the-cuff speculation, and the constant use of equivocal terms such as "may be the case," "probably," and "I believe" that I shut its covers wondering why a first-rate house like Harper published the volume at all.

ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS

I DO WANT to let you know about two fine reference books that have just appeared. David Godwin's Cabalistic Encyclopedia (Llewellyn, St. Paul, Minn., 1979, 452 pages, $14.95) is a dictionary of cabalism as understood by the mystery schools and magical lodges of the West (as opposed to the Hasidic Jewish groups out of which the Cabala arose). It contains a list of all the transliterated Hebrew words used by cabalists with their numerological equivalents and definitions. The terms are arranged both in alphabetical order and in numerical order. And an appendix contains Aleister Crowley's cabalistic work Sepher Sephiroth. This book reads like a telephone directory but is a necessary reference work for anyone studying the Cabala.

Scarecrow Press, which continues to dominate the parapsychological publishing field, has just released Poltergeists: An Annotated Bibliography of Works in English, Circa 1880-1975 by Michael Goss (Scarecrow Press, Metuchen, N. J., 1979, 389

OTHER REVIEWS

THE AIRMEN WHO WOULD NOT DIE by John G. Fuller, G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York, N.Y., 1979, 348 pages, $10.95.

In The Airmen Who Would Not Die John G. Fuller has done his usual splendid job. I cannot imagine anyone better qualified to write this study of the psychic phenomena associated with the ill-fated airship R-101.

The story really begins in 1928 when Capt. Raymond Hinchcliffe and Elsie Mackay attempted an east-west flight in a single-engine Stinson monoplane. Tragically the plane crashed at sea. On the night of the crash two of Hinchcliffe's friends, Royal Air Force Col. G. L. P. Henderson and Sq. Ldr. Rivers Oldmeadow, were on board ship. And there an apparition of the now-missing pilot appeared to Henderson; the ghostly Hinchcliffe said he had the woman with him and was lost. Immediately Colonel Henderson burst into Oldmeadow's stateroom to relate the message.

Eventually a British medium whose pseudonym was Mrs. Beatrice Earl began to receive Ouija board communications from a spirit presumed to be Hinchcliffe who requested that his messages be given to his wife. From time to time these communications contained bits of important information concerning the crash. Mrs. Earl, who had read newspaper accounts of Hinchcliffe's disastrous flight, was sufficiently impressed to contact Mrs. Hinchcliffe and Conan Doyle.

Concerned individuals arranged to have a sitting with Eileen Garrett. And in time Emilie Hinchcliffe also sat with Mrs. Garrett. She too apparently received information that could not have been normally known to the medium. Among these messages was the warning that all was not well with the new airship R-101.

Two new giant airships had been constructed, the conservative R-100 and the experimental R-101. Many new and untested features were introduced into the R-101 and it was known to be underpowered and deficient in lift. To compensate, the builders added a bay which brought the vessel to a total length of 777 feet and a gross lift of 167 tons. There were other problems; the type of triangular fins used on the R-101 had a nasty habit of stalling out; also gasbag surging, which would cause the airship to spiral in flight, was a serious factor. The canvas envelope had become brittle and although hasty measures had been taken to remedy this, the covering was still susceptible to tearing. During heavy rainstorms the ship would absorb water which made the craft even heavier and caused it to lose vital lift.

Because of these flaws and many other minor faults the airship was in truth a total failure. Nonetheless the Air Minister insisted that the R-101 make the planned India flight — a flight that some personnel thought to be impossible. At any rate, the ship crashed into the ground and burned near the French town of Beauvais on October 5, 1930. So complex were the many factors contributing to the ship's tragic destruction that Lord Brabazon said, in 1959, that the court of inquiry never did find out why the crash occurred.

While the first laps of the R-101's flight to India were being reported from the airship to the interested world, Garrett was receiving a communication which said, "Nothing but a miracle can save the ship." A few days later, after the crash, Garrett got the famous communication which presumably originated from the captain of the R-101, Flt. Lt. H. C. Irwin, at a sitting with Harry Price on October 7, 1930.

It was during this sitting that "Irwin" gave many of the details of a technical and semitechnical nature that contributed to the disaster. Price was impressed. Among the statements made by the communicator through Garrett's mediumship were these: "Bulk of the dirigible was much too heavy for her engine capacity." "Engines too heavy; useful lift too small; flying at too low an altitude; load too great for long flights." "Cruising speed bad and ship badly swinging; airscrews too small; cannot trim."

Price copied down another remarkable statement made by "Irwin": "This exorbitant scheme of carbon and hydrogen is entirely and absolutely wrong."

This remark refers to a scheme to use hydrogen from the gas cells and kerosene from the engines as fuel — a scheme written off early in the construction of the ship. Such an engine was to be ready for testing in July 1928 but it never was successful. Price always insisted that the scheme was not known outside official circles.

In 1929 tests had revealed that due to resonance in the shafts the Beardmore diesel engines could deliver only 585 horsepower. In its October 9, 1929, issue the well-known magazine The Aeroplane reported that the ship was made to fly at less than 2000 feet altitude in cool English weather. This of course means it was known that the R-101 was unsafe long before the mediumistic communications were received.

During a public flight at the end of June the ship had had to jettison both fuel and water to compensate for heaviness at the end of the 12-hour flight. It is true that static tests showed that the propellers swung only 15 inches above the hangar floor, meaning that they assumed the correct radius of swing relative to the ship above and the hangar floor below, but if the whole plan of the ship was off this would mean nothing. John Fuller believes they were too small and that this was known "by many of informed opinion."

With great reluctance the Aeronautical Inspection Board had granted a certificate of airworthiness just before the ship's last flight — to India.

I mean to point out that this case can be viewed in two ways:

Supporters of the airship were so anxious that the personnel at the yard reported the ship ready against their better judgment and some of the engineers were completely opposed to this last flight but said nothing more.

I cannot feel sure that the details given by "Irwin" to Garrett were unknown. In fact, we know that some of these details were public knowledge and thus available to Mrs. Garrett. If this is true then a bit of reading about possible causes of the crash could well have created the messages on a subconscious level. In consequence I am not convinced the communications were unimpeachably paranormal in origin.

By the same token, I think that John Fuller has uncovered many paranormal incidents, particularly those relating to the Hinchcliffe case, and of course he may be absolutely correct in thinking that the famed Irwin/Garrett communication with Harry Price was of psychic origin and indeed did originate with the dead airman.

I can only suggest that readers make their own judgments.

Whatever you decide, John Fuller has written an important book for all students of the paranormal. — Raymond Bayless.

THE WEREWOLF DELUSION by Ian Woodward, Paddington Press Ltd., New York, N.Y., 1979, 256 pages, $10.95.

Werewolves may not rank among the most pressing problems of the 20th Century but their psychological impact on earlier generations is enough to give one pause. With The Werewolf Delusion Ian Woodward well may become the leader of the pack of latter-day werewolf scholars. After having spent years assembling material from every corner of the globe, he tells us a great deal about the origins and effects of "werewolfery."

While it may be hard for us to appreciate the fear of werewolves that once gripped most of the civilized world, Woodward's book communicates the power of that fear. About 30,000 cases of werewolfery were recorded in France alone between 1520 and 1630. In 1542 the Sultan of Turkey led a military force against the werewolves said to be overrunning Istanbul; according to the records he and his troops killed over 150 of the creatures. During one wartime period many Swedes believed that the Russians had sent legions of werewolves to wreak havoc in their country.

As Woodward reports these and other fascinating anecdotes, he doesn't confine himself to any one explanation for werewolf mania but explores the whole gamut of possibilities, eliminating some along the

Vibroscope DIVINING ROD

The Vibroscope Divining Rod is like no other dowsing instrument we know. It is used by professional dowsers when they search for water, oil, valuable metals, lost jewelry. Parapsychology views dowsing as a natural talent latent in many persons. Instruments such as the Vibroscope Divining Rod are used merely to manifest or focus it.

Even dowsers don't agree whether vibrations are received from the object or whether dowsing is a kind of psychic ability akin to clairvoyance. Skeptics deny it exists at all—yet there are thousands of dowsers in the U.S. and a national association to which many of them belong.

Perhaps you have this controversial ability. Using the Vibroscope Divining Rod is fun as a parlor game, too!

way. He dismisses theories concerning fetal children and genetic skin disease but takes more seriously those which point to mental delusions, witchcraft hysteria, rabies, cannibalism and the hallucinogenic effects of werewolf potions as possible causes of werewolf scares.

Woodward also considers possible paranormal answers to some of the weirder werewolf manifestations. Although he rejects the myth that a human being could physically transform into a wolf, he does suggest that some reported depredations could be laid to astral attacks,* with the astral body assuming the wolf form. He also thinks that there may be psychic thought forms that take on the appearance of wolves and that some people may be able to project astrally into the body of a wolf.

He examines thoroughly the fictional werewolf of literature, theater and cinema and reports on actual "living" wolfmen. For instance, some English medical authorities suspect that incidents of cattle-maiming in that country may be the work of demented human lycanthropes.

If you should ever find yourself without a silver bullet when a huge ravenous wolf with human eyes and no tail materializes before you, take heart from a course of action Woodward mentions. According to Danish folklore, you can sometimes cure a werewolf simply by giving it a good scolding. — Martin V. Riccardo.

THE BIRTH OF THE MOON by Lewis A. Manson, Dennis-Landman Publishers, Santa Monica, Calif., 1978, 205 pages, $14.95.

DOOMSDAY: THE SCIENCE OF CATASTROPHE by Fred Warshofsky, Reader's Digest Press, New York, N.Y., 1977, 259 pages, $10.00.

According to Lewis Manson's The Birth of the Moon the world was a far different place 12,000 years ago from what it is today. Covered by "shallow seas and low land areas . . . a nearly smooth, swampy, humid globe . . . (without) . . . rivers, mountains, deep valleys, rock, flint, metals and petroleum," it had "no rain, no snow, no lightning or thunder . . . and the Moon did not exist."

Then, says Manson, an errant star whizzed through our solar system, disturbing most of the planets. It pulled earth out of its orbit and ripped away a huge chunk of earth's crust which became, in a matter of a few seconds, our moon. It caused the oceans of Mars and Venus to migrate some tens of millions of miles through space to fall upon earth and become the oceans we know today. If we still had astronauts on the moon, Manson avers, they'd find the shattered bones of dinosaurs, the remains of trees, primitive man and other flora and fauna carried off by that space cataclysm. Manson even identifies one lunar rock shown in a Surveyor photo as the fossilized nose bone of a dinosaur!

Meanwhile earth's fractured crust, minus that missing piece, shifted and wobbled about, fragments banging into each other, humping up mountains, then drifting apart to become the continents we know today. Globe-girdling tidal waves preceded all this mountain-making and continent-drifting; the catastrophe seems so complete that it's understandable why Manson chooses to gloss over the question of how many creatures managed to survive. But some must have survived since we're here, aren't we?

There's much more in this book — which Manson and his publisher say is but a fragment of a larger work — but there's nothing much in the way of solid proof for this radical revision of more conventional views of our planet's history. Neither is there anything in the biographical data that accompany Manson's book to show he has had any formal training in geology or other sciences which bear on the matters with which his book deals. He appears to be largely self-taught, which no doubt will cause some to welcome him as a Protean Genius unhampered by Scientific Dogma and Conventional Wisdom. Others, me included, will view him as self-deluded.

In the decades since Darwin the accepted dogma declares that the evolutionary process has been a gradual, quiet one, taking place over millennia. Those who thought otherwise, who entertained a belief in the shaping effect of global catastrophes, were hooted down by ruling nabobs of scientific orthodoxy.

But in recent years there has been a growing realization that earth's history does include catastrophic events and that these may well have shaped not only earth itself but life upon it. Doomsday: The Science of Catastrophe presents the catastrophists' view of earth's past and some views of possible futures.

In tracing the beliefs that have shaped our thinking, Fred Warshofsky presents the case for catastrophic changes as opposed to evolutionary gradualism. Chapters such as "Ice Ages: Past and Future," "The Death of the Dinosaur, the Dodo, the Whale and Just About Everybody Else" and "The World Will End On . . ." will bring little comfort to those who prefer to believe the earth's problems are solely of man's own making.

Warshofsky points out that, while man has a great capacity to trigger global changes, particularly atmospheric ones, such changes can be reversed if spotted in time. But changes brought about by natural causes — volcanism, earthquakes, ice cap slippages — are not only less easily anticipated but seem impossible to prevent or to take precautions against. After all, if the oceans of the world suddenly rise 200 feet because the Antarctic ice cap melts, what can be done except to abandon New York, London, Rome, Tokyo and the scores of other cities that lie less than 200 feet above sea level?

Nor can we take heart from the fact that the large-scale volcanic activity which ice-age catastrophists predicted would start in 1977-78 has not taken place. What is an error of one year or even 10 in the earth's long geological history?

Warshofsky does supply one inadvertent catastrophist put-down. In a chapter on climate he mentions that a team from Columbia University's Lamont-Doherty Geological Observatory obtained "an unbroken geological record of the climate changes that have taken place over the past 450,000 years . . . (from) . . . sedimentary cores pulled from the Indian Ocean." That, I think, clearly scuttles the moon-spawning crustal catastrophe Lewis Manson envisions as occurring a mere 12,000 years ago.

Warshofsky's synthesis of all the disparate strands of catastrophe theory makes for reading that is fascinating and sometimes frightening but always informative and highly thought-provoking. — George W. Earley.

PSYCHIC PETS by Joseph Wylder, Stonehill Publishing Co., New York, N.Y., 1978, 163 pages, $9.95.

The dust jacket identifies Joseph Wylder as "the pseudonym for a researcher at a large Midwestern pharmaceutical company" who apparently wishes to protect his professional reputation. I hope the author's timidity will not put off FATE readers. Although only 163 pages long, Psychic Pets is a generally excellent book on a subject which has long fascinated both scientists and laymen: the psychic world of animals.

In his briskly readable and nontechnical book Wylder surveys the entire gamut of strange animal behavior — the telepathic abilities of dogs and cats, the mathematical abilities of some dogs and horses, the communicative abilities of some other animals, and so on. Not since Vincent and Margaret Gaddis' The Strange World of Animals and Pets in 1970 has there been such an insightful — not to mention sensitive and loving — book on the secret dimensions of animal behavior.

Wylder openly admits to a love for animals of all kinds. So his book is a personal document as well as a journalistic report. He relates his own experiences with psychic animals; even more important, he explains in detail just how each of us can learn to build up a better psychological and psychic rapport with our pets. Elsewhere in the book he discusses mankind's historical relationship with animals and the general subject of animal consciousness.

Psychic Pets has several minor flaws. Most of the cases and experiments cited in the text are not referenced; the book abounds in misprints; speculation is passed off as fact; a lengthy two-page quote appears twice within the first several pages; and the chapter on laboratory experiments with animal ESP is incomplete.

But these flaws do not offset the fact that in Psychic Pets Wylder (whoever he is) has given us a tender document which should appeal to every animal lover and student of the paranormal. — D. Scott Rogo.

THE MAMMOTH RIDDLE

In "I See by the Papers" (October 1979 FATE) Curtis Fuller comments on my book Pole Shift, then quotes William White, a reader of the British magazine New Scientist.

White's remarks further demonstrate why I titled my chapter on mammoths "The Riddle of the Frozen Mammoths." White is both right and wrong. He's right that not all mammoths were killed in a single event. Radiocarbon dating yields dates from 47,000 B. C. to as recent as 600 B. C. He's wrong when he says mammoths were well adapted to extreme cold. They lacked the oil glands that every arctic animal has to lubricate its skin against dehydration in the cold air. Mammoths would have died quickly in arctic conditions because they would have lost body water quickly. There also isn't nearly enough vegetation in the arctic to support vast herds, each animal requiring several hundred pounds of food a day. Pelts alone don't prove the case — tigers have thick pelts but are tropical for the most part — nor does blubber — witness elephants and manatees.

The riddle gets even more perplexing when you consider that the famed Berezovka mammoth died in late summer; yet it was frozen quickly enough to stop digestive juices in its mouth and stomach from decomposing grasses. Normally such action goes on for several days after an organism dies. The most recently found mammoth, the baby Dima, died of blood poisoning, yet was perfectly preserved. Blood poisoning takes several days or more to bring about death and in this case it happened in midsummer. How did the animal die in warm weather and freeze so quickly that it did not decompose?

William White's remarks are useful insofar as they give us a review of some of the facts, but they're less than useful insofar as he attempts to draw conclusions by interpreting the facts. He merely echoes a long-established view that has been questioned time after time by catastrophists who see clearly that the conclusion doesn't take into account all of the data. — John White, Cheshire, Conn.

BOOK BACKTALK

I have always relied on your book review column to give unbiased, scientific evaluations to guide me in my choice of books. I was quite upset by D. Scott Rogo's review of You Have Been Here Before by Dr. Edith Fiore (April 1979 FATE). To start with, Rogo has the title wrong, calling it You Have Lived Here Before.

Rogo writes, "... she (Dr. Fiore) even reports on page 15 that she has been interested in hypnosis for only two years. . . ." Actually, on page 15 Dr. Fiore states, "Until two years ago I was totally uninterested in the idea of reincarnation." She had been using hypnosis in her practice prior to the awakening of her interest in reincarnation.

She became interested in reincarnation when she told a patient to go back to the origin of his problems and he went back several lifetimes. Yet Mr. Rogo says that Dr. Fiore's patients go back to the fantasy of other lifetimes only because she suggests they do so. (I also think Rogo shows a lack of good manners by calling her "Fiore" throughout the review when she has earned the title of "Dr.")

I practice reincarnation therapy in New York City and I have trained with Dr. Fiore in California. Using me as a subject in a demonstration Dr. Fiore cured my hypoglycemia and food allergies. I can prove this by tests given to me by my doctor before the regression. Mine was an unusual case, for cures are not generally affected in one session. Nevertheless, reincarnation therapy is helping many persons overcome a variety of problems.

I won't go into all the discrepancies in Mr. Rogo's review but I think it's horrendous that your magazine published an illiterate review of Dr. Fiore's book. Someone at your magazine owes her an apology.
— Sheilah Schwartz, New York, N. Y.

By now you should have a few letters from readers up in arms over J. Gordon Melton's review of A Practical Guide to Holistic Health by Swami Rama (August 1979 FATE).

While I have not read the book I would hesitate to dismiss it as offhandedly as Melton's review did. Yoga is based on principles that do not yield completely to an intellectual study. Yoga requires practice. Most of the critics of yoga have not practiced it or have not practiced it sufficiently and correctly. Therefore their criticism is based more on theory than experience.

Swami Rama's book should be reviewed by someone who has applied the concepts taught therein. — Larry Shull, DeBary, Fla.

I would like to add a thought to Jerome Clark's review of The Andreasson Affair by Raymond E. Fowler (August 1979 FATE). Perhaps one explanation for the "phoenix" which Mrs. Andreasson saw consumed into "ashes from which a thick gray worm emerged" is this: The bird represents the United States and the brilliant light or fire which consumed it symbolizes an atomic holocaust. After a nuclear attack the United States would emerge with the military potential of a worm.

Just as the king of Babylon was given a vision in a dream (Daniel 2) regarding the destiny of nations, perhaps Mrs. Andreasson was given a vision that also needs interpreting. — Harry F. Rohmer, Mobile, Ala.

* * *

I thank you for devoting generous space to a review of my book The Mediumship of the Tape Recorder (April 1979 FATE).

Naturally it would have been nicer if your reviewer Raymond Bayless had found less with which to take issue but I am not surprised. I am aware that he and I have differing views on the subject. In fact, the only time I mention Bayless in the book is to disagree with him about his claim that Attila von Szalay's were the first voices to be studied. And I am less than enthusiastic about these, as is shown by the comments your reviewer quotes.

Anyway, even Mr. Bayless concedes that the book is not totally without value. — David Ellis, Pulborough, West Sussex, England.

* * *

It appears to be impossible for an author to obtain an objective review of his book unless it conforms to the personal biases of J. Gordon Melton and his assistants. The reviews in the July 1979 issue of FATE are just more than I can swallow.

Melton leads off by paning Brad Steiger's Worlds Before Our Own for no good reason I could see. However, I have not yet read the book. He is upset because the artifacts cited by Steiger are too sophisticated for a Stone Age people to have made, that they are out of context with any civilization known to him.

There are primitive people living today in various places on this earth. Suppose one of these savages obtains by barter, theft or other means a digital watch. Thousands of years from now an archaeologist discovers this watch in its primitive setting. Should he throw it away merely because it is out of context? All of Melton's objections are invalid for reasons like this. The point is that we have the sophisticated artifacts. It's up to us to explain them.

Farther on in the column George W.
Earley does worse than Melton in his review of a not too favorable book on Atlantis, Atlantis: Fact or Fiction? To destroy the legend of Atlantis completely Earley cites with evident glee a "devastating" statement by a geologist named Dorothy Vitaliano.
She dogmatically declaims, "We can definitely rule out the possibility of a sunken landmass of any substantial size in the Atlantic. . . ."

Vitaliano and Earley failed to do their homework. I suggest they consult back issues of National Geographic which report the results of dredging in the Atlantic Ocean. Among other things brought to the surface were sea sand, lava that had cooled in the air and remains of small animals that live only in fresh water. Sea sand is formed only by the lapping of waves against the shore. On the bottom of the Atlantic there are lava beds, some of which cooled in the air as can be determined by the crystal structure. And obviously, there must have been at some time a freshwater lake to support the animals. How do Vitaliano and Earley account for these facts? — W. T.
Black, Georgetown, Ky.

In reviewing Brad Steiger's *Worlds
Before Our Own*, J. Gordon Melton says,
"One must approach the ancient past in a somewhat playful spirit." I disagree. One must intelligently approach what scattered pieces of the past we find.

For instance, there is a wall in Peru which has been heightened through the centuries. The bottom layer is one of those Inca walls, where the stones fit so closely that a knife blade won't go between them.
But at the higher levels, the stones become smaller and the joints looser, as if skills and knowledge the Indians once possessed had been lost.

Then there's the Nazca plain with all those "pictures" which archaeologists conveniently classify as "religious." To anyone with common sense it is clear they are meant to be seen from the air. I certainly hope they are not ancient Burma Shave signs. At least they indicate that this planet long ago had lighter-than-air travel.

These are indications that a higher than Stone Age civilization once existed on earth, a culture whose talents and accomplishments have been lost.

In Melton's review of Stonehenge: The Indo-European Heritage he latches onto the book as if it were a great relief to find a means of throwing out the interesting theories in Stonehenge Decoded. I still go with the astronomical theories, except that I think Stonehenge was based on astrology, not astronomy. I think that the strange monoliths at Stonehenge and along the French coast are remnants of a religion based on astrology. — Betsy C. Freitag, Cheverly, Md.

BRACE YOURSELF

I note in "I See by the Papers" (August 1979 FATE) that some French astronomers are predicting we will enter an interstellar cloud 50 millennia from now.

This is exactly what Conan Doyle visualized in his sci-fi thriller The Poison Belt. — Frank C. Tribbe, Penn Laird, Va.

A UNIQUE FINDING

In "Death Can Be Hellish" (August 1979 FATE) Dr. Rawlings of Chattanooga, Tenn., reports that of the near-death patients he has resuscitated, 50 percent saw heaven and 50 percent saw hell. This is a unique finding.

The major researchers on near-death experiences do not report anything like this. Visions of hell are exceedingly rare, almost nonexistent. The usual near-death experience, very well reported in Raymond Moody's Life After Life, involves exteriorization and viewing of the body and surroundings. Only when this out-of-body state is protracted do heavenly or other scenes appear. Survival research has not validated biblical conceptions of either hell or heaven.

Dr. Rawlings' findings thus present an anomaly. He claims not to have been religious previously but perhaps he absorbed fundamentalist ideology in childhood and repressed it. Thus the images of hell his patients see may be projections of his own unconscious, intended to throw the fear of God into them and ultimately improve the spiritual quality of their lives.

Perhaps the fear of hell helps some people live better lives but it also drives sensitive persons away from religion in droves. Every atheist I've ever known was raised in a hell-fearing faith. — Dai Circe, Santa Barbara, Calif.

GHOSTS IMPLY SURVIVAL?

I think it is a mistake to believe that ghosts and haunts imply survival of human "souls." I suggest that ghosts are in some cases a sort of mindless remnant similar to an odor and that they trigger visual or other images in our brains. In cases where some invisible force rearranges objects or where mediums are "spoken to," it is likely that the perpetrators are denizens of a world alongside ours who enjoy pretending to be people we have known.

In "Girl-Ghost Hitches Ride" (July 1979 FATE) the supposedly unhappy earthbound spirit of an accident victim laughs when closing the car door. In "The Haunting at Beil's Hill" (same issue) the ostensible spirit of a "prim Victorian lady" takes to keeping people awake at night. In "The Demon Stayed On" (same issue) a ghost shows his ability to reproduce the voice of author Niles.

Despite many indications that such entities are human beings who have left our world, I believe there must be a better explanation. The immortality hypothesis assumes a body that houses either a soul or a second, more tenuous physical body. The soul concept refers basically to a mind distinct from matter, which is clearly meaningless. Mind must have structure (sensations, memories and the ability to attend to various combinations of these) and structure is physical. The second-body idea is more rational in a way but it would have to duplicate all the brain cells and connections. It is hard to see why we should credit consciousness to the wraith which is supposed to leave the grosser body at death and still conceive of it as having no awareness, although it is a duplicate of the other.

If we are ever to solve these mysteries we should cease to be distracted by the common wish to live forever. — Harry E. Mongold, Manhattan, Ill.

FOCUS ON FLUMMERY

Well! Such a tempest over my comments in your pages! Doubtless Dr. Harold Puthoff of SRI International was the instigator of this tirade in another attempt to take the focus off his flummery in the name of science — but his teeth are so blunted by now from constant teeth-gnashing over my calling his hand at each deal that he has little bite.

Obviously Curtis Fuller's piece ("Randi Rides Again," July 1979 FATE) is designed to embarrass me concerning my $1000 offer. Nevertheless, I am standing by the offer and will continue to do so.

In actuality, Targ and Puthoff did not describe the "100-envelope test" at all. In Nature they gave a description of a test that did not take place. If they intended this to serve as an accurate account of what took place on that occasion they were mistaken. The number of envelopes is wrong, the protocol is wrong and in general it amounts to semantic flummery of their usual high order.

It is interesting that Fuller makes no comment on the other portions of my letter of December 13, 1977, which you reproduced with the article: the Geller ex-confederates who have decided to tell all, Lee Fried's "prediction" of the 747's collision which turned out to be a conjuring trick, the failure of Jean-Pierre Girard's PK "powers," and the Matthew Manning fiasco.

I anticipate that when my new book Flim-Flam: The Truth About Unicorns, Parapsychology and Other Delusions comes out, you will doubtless have ample reason to use my name in FATE. You have my permission. — James Randi, Rumson, N. J.

fateful December 5, 1945, which showed the complete disorientation of the crews of the five planes, their inability to know directions, the failure of all their electronic instruments and so on, as reported in many publications. He speaks of naval student flyers but fails to mention that two seasoned flying instructors who were in command sent the messages.

If, as Treschuk says, the planes were caught in an upper air storm of hurricane force, how does he account for the disappearance of the rescue plane, the Martin Mariner, carrying a crew of 13 and the rescue equipment, from which no word was received after a few minutes from takeoff? What is his theory as to the disappearance of the rescue plane?

This occurrence seems to be only one of the many mysterious disappearances which have occurred in the Bermuda Triangle over the years. I'm a bit curious. — Mary Bay, Largo, Fla.

REDDY, WHITEY AND CHINKY

Let's not be silly about the Christians from Europe and the dear Injuns they supplied. Both were mixed bags.

God's first command to man was "be fruitful and multiply and replenish the earth." Reddy had lost his momentum, content to let North America above the Rio Grande stay at about 3,000,000 population. Whitey gave Reddy some unwelcome competition, saying "Let me show you how to do it!" So now we have 230 million. And if we grind to a halt, be assured Chinky will come and say, "Now I'll show you how!" — Curtis Gibson, New York, N. Y.

SOMETHING HAS TO WORK!

Tom Lyle's letter headed "Man's Search" in your March 1979 issue basically has to do with "man's search" rarely meeting success through any system whether the system be related to philosophy, religion, or any educational or political agency. Tom seems to be trying to say that only complete elimination of emotions is a possible answer. To me this is a very cold "fate" indeed.

Tom says he has spent 40 years of research and study into this matter. Well, I've spent 50, if that means anything.

REPORT FROM THE READERS

Breakthroughs, if they occur, can come in seconds. My objection to his letter is the idea that no system works. I guess that depends on what one means by "works."

Most systems don't work for mainly two reasons. One is that almost all people, modern or ancient, have tried to fit the truth — or the answers — to themselves rather than the other way around. Naturally that won't work. A second reason is that people want "workings" which, if they did work, would defeat underlying universal principles. In both cases man is trying to be the big shot, making the universe the lesser in the formula.

Long ago I learned I could not reshape truths to fit me. I had to let loose of cherished so-called facts and reshape my own ideas to fit universal realities. When one does that he begins to see and understand universal principles at work. They constitute a "system" that does work and it works here and now.

Obviously there has to be a system that works. If there weren't we wouldn't be here. We are a result of systematic evolution. That fact naturally and necessarily leads to two conclusions. There is a "primary" to the system and there is a continuing "purpose" since, obviously, we live between the two. Accepting this, one can trace the system. I have found that when one discovers one principle it is fastened to the tail of another. Thereafter it is a process of hanging onto the cord to be able to unravel them one after another. — Jack H. Perrine, Paynes Creek, Calif.

ERROR ACKNOWLEDGED

In "Report from the Readers" (July 1979 FATE) Frank Magnus is correct in his rebuttal of my statement which implied that Abraham knew Hebrew. I have already discovered my error. Abraham quite probably used Akkadian — also known as Babylonian-Assyrian, which was written in Sumerian cuneiform. — Terry Jacobsen, Pocatello, Idaho.

FASTER THAN OUIJA BOARD!

Smooth-rolling ball bearings speed flow of automatic writing—without awkward pauses.

THE PLANCHETTE

Beautifully hand-crafted of smooth wood. Wood-resin polish gives high lustre.

Many experienced automatic writers learned with a planchette, and still find it the only way to obtain manifestations. Once you have acquired the gift, you will agree that the planchette is far superior to the Ouija Board. It is particularly favored by those who prefer to work in meditative solitude.

HOW THE PLANCHETTE WORKS:

Specially-fitted pencil forms one leg of planchette, the other two rolling free on ball bearings. These ball bearings permit the slightest indication of movement to take effect, the tiniest wisp of pressure transmitted through your hand. Only a superior product, an authentic psychic appliance, could have this expensive ballbearing feature. Complete instructions for use of the planchette, as well as for its care and protection, are included with this advanced psychic instrument.

WHAT HAS FATE IN STORE FOR YOU?

... A chance to explore the unknown ... truths you find nowhere else ... articles and stories to fire your imagination—that's what FATE has in store for you. Here is Editor Mary Fuller's report on stories planned for future issues:

∞ Can horses respond to telepathic commands? Veteran horse trainer Henry Blake believes they can — and he proves that horses communicate telepathically with each other as well.

∞ All through the southwestern United States the unexplained mutilations of cattle continue. As lawmen and other investigators study the clues, the mystery only deepens.

∞ As part of a remarkable experiment, two of America's leading psychics, Harold Sherman and Ingo Swann, projected themselves out of their bodies and into outer space. Janet Lee Mitchell reports the amazing results.

∞ A hypnotized person who has been instructed to recall a "past life" may speak in a foreign language he has never learned. Does this prove he has been reincarnated? D. Scott Rogo examines this controversial question.

MARY MARGARET FULLER

Each month FATE publishes more than 40,000 words of true articles on the strange, the unusual, the unknown. You can read such stories only in FATE because FATE is the only magazine of its kind in the world!

"I'm Stumping for the Coming Revolution in Higher Consciousness!"

Stumping? "Yes, like you'd run for election. City to city, state by state, day after day, delivering the message you believe in."

Why? "Because my heart is burning with love for America, for our people, and for the torch of freedom that is ours to carry to the nations. Simply because I can't sit home when I see the degradation of our little children, our women, our men, and our youth. I must go out and find the people of God who are determined to do something about it."

How? "By the authority of the God who lives within you. By going within and finding the inner Self who is the living Christ, becoming that Christ, then starting your own light revolution, moving into the community and creating a better way of life. . . . God is the imprisoned lightning within you and me. Because we have not discovered how to release that energy, we are deprived of the tremendous power, wisdom, and love that is ours by the very nature of who and what we are."

You'll share with Elizabeth Clare Prophet her impassioned search for Saint Germain, meeting the Master M. then Mother Mary face to face. You'll come to know the ascended masters as the great religious revolutionaries of East and West. They have accelerated consciousness and reunited with God. And though in another dimension they are close at hand, fully prepared to transmit to us the resolution of seemingly insurmountable problems.

She'll show you a chart of your divine Self—the pulsating spheres of light within your own God Presence, the mediatorship of your Christ Self, and the action of the 'violet flame' baptism of the Holy Spirit. You'll find out about the seven chakras, or light centers, within you—their rhythm, their color, your aura.

Complete from bhajans to blessings, this 4½ hour 3-cassette tape album for only $12.50 will prepare you for the Coming Revolution!

A Sacred and revolutionary message from Elizabeth Clare Prophet

A Straightforward Presentation On The Following Type Of Subjects?

Not by commercialized, self-proclaimed gurus or "divine" messengers, but by the long-established teachings of a centuries-old renowned organization?

The following are but a few of a magnitude of intriguing and important subjects that are available to you.

- Has the human body a radiant energy?
- Can consciousness project beyond itself?
- Is human life the highest form of intelligence in the universe?
- Is there a primary energy that underlies all existence?
- Does consciousness survive death?
- Is there such a thing as an absolute good—or is good only a human value?
- Is there actually an evolutionary process, a purposeful ideal toward which the universe moves?
- Does man possess unused, unrealized powers of self?

If these and related subjects interest you, why not send today for your free copy of The Mastery of Life. This book inquires into the mysteries of life from a thought-provoking, philosophical viewpoint. The Rosicrucian Order (AMORC) is NOT a church or religious sect, but a worldwide non-profit fraternity.
