CLIQUES.

MAN has been defined as a gregarious animal, but in his highly civilised condition he is gregarious only to a limited extent. He loves the society of his kind it is true, but then it must be such society as he fully approves. He has often little sympathy for those members of the human family who do not move in the rut in which his existence is cast. He looks down with contempt upon those who are poorer than himself, and devotes a considerable portion of his time to the task of getting into a clique a degree above him in the social scale. The human family, in these latitudes at least, is indeed cut up into sections which are as sharply defined as the arbitrary distinctions of the Hindoo. We have discarded "caste" and the "tribe," and have substituted the clique as the most reasonable method of sub-dividing the human family. Tribal or caste distinctions might be difficult to maintain in a country like ours where so many persons are ignorant that they ever had great grandfathers; but the clique fulfils all the exclusive demands of the British snob without taxing too severely his power of inventing a pedigree. We can enter a clique readily enough provided we can prove to the satisfaction of the members of it that we possess the necessary littleness of mind, and the other trifling distinctions which are demanded by the rules of the Fraternity. The clique literary, for example, is usually composed of second rate journalists, and authors who have formed themselves into a mutual admiration society for the sake of puffing each other's work. To become a member of this mysterious circle you must spend many years in a condition of probation. Your best articles will be rejected by the members as beneath their notice, and your novels will be "jumped upon" in the literary reviews. But when you have reached the condition of a literary hack, and can write nothing that possesses originality or merit, the members of the little coterie will welcome you to their circle with open demonstrations of good will. You have become one of themselves, you have graduated into the condition of a mere dealer in platitude. The rich strata of mental treasure which was in your brain has been worked out, and you are at last regarded as an equal by men who never in their lives were able to jingle two ideas together in their own feeble heads. We could point to periodicals once powerful, which, having passed into the hands of these people, have become mere vehicles for the display of the imbecility and the folly of creatures who were not worthy to loose the shoestrings of the men they have succeeded.

Again, there is the clique scientific, represented by persons like the tailor in Gulliver's Travels, who took the measure of a customer with a quadrant. These people talk a detestable jargon, compounded of Greek and English in equal proportions. Their leading idea is that science should be made mysterious to the vulgar, and with that laudable end in view they veil simple things under a cloud of words. In the jargon of the clique of geologists, for example, the great fossil lizard becomes the Ichthyosaurus or fish reptile. The fossil tapir becomes the Palæotherium or ancient wild beast; another monster is the Megatherium or great wild beast. But these names are mere trifles; such words as Megalonyx and Scelidotherium have been applied by these worthies to distinguished allied species, and we are required to believe that these "jaw breakers," as the Scotch would call them, are all necessary for the elucidation of simple scientific facts. The truth is, that without the assistance of a veil of words the geologists would soon find their preserves invaded by persons with whom the clique would not care to associate. The man who can call a fossil tapir Palæotherium, and who can dub the study of fossils with the title of palæontology imagines he has achieved a victory over the vulgar, and no doubt he has. That there are medical cliques every person knows who has had occasion to consult a physician. The member of the medical clique feels your pulse, looks at your tongue, and scrawls his prescription in a jargon as nearly like the gibberish with which school boys amuse themselves, as anything of such serious import can well be. But the "dog latin" of his prescription is innocent compared with the outrageous rubbish, in the shape of coined words, with which the medical journals are filled. The members of the medical clique cannot describe so simple a thing as the amputation of a limb, or the cure of an enlarged artery without the use of words which belong to no language that ever existed. The jargon is used to warn off intruders from the sacred preserves of the clique, and it no doubt effectually serves its purpose.

Then we have the clique composed of the rich and vulgar, who require ample proof that your balance at the banker's is satisfactory before they will deign to countenance you. You might be a Milton or a Shakspeare for aught they know or care. The treasures of the mind are nothing in their estimation, and men are classified by their money bags, and scorned or venerated accordingly. These people exist merely to display their wealth. Their houses are filled to overflowing with art treasures, and the art trumpery which is now so fashionable. The members of the clique regularly attend Christie and Manson's sales, and squabble and outbid each other over a celebrated daub, merely for the fame which will accrue to them from the purchase of a "masterpiece" at a fabulous price. Snobson glories in being pointed out as the man who gave £20,000 for a piece of blackened canvas, upon which scarcely any traces of the pencil of the painter remain. He flings away his money upon crockery, because it is fashionable to do so, but, in his heart of hearts, he thinks the drop scene at the Gaiety a finer picture than any Claude in his gallery; and his cut glass decanters he secretly holds are superior to the Portland vase. He pretends to love art because it is the fashion, but he knows no more about it than a savage, and satisfies himself for his extravagance by dreaming of the fame which will accrue to him when his collection comes to the hammer.

Such are some few of the cliques into which our complex society has become divided. We might particularise others, but we weary of the task. The world is, indeed, composed of cliques. What, indeed, is a nation but a clique on a gigantic scale, and Masonry, were it not for the breadth of the principles which it teaches, might almost be regarded as a clique of mystery men, banded together for the purpose of indulging in the universal weakness for the outré and the marvellous.

PREJUDICES.

PREJUDICES are partial judgments in favour of, or against certain persons or things, and, for convenience sake, may be ranged in two categories—those which are, comparatively speaking, harmless, and those which are harmful. Under the former category we include those which, be they favourable or the reverse, people exhibit towards one of their fellows, for a particular line of conduct, the observance of certain customs, the adoption of certain theories, or the use of certain things. Among the latter are numbered class or caste prejudices, as well as national, political, social, and religious prejudices. As regards the former, they are, as we have said, for the most part innocuous. We are prejudiced, for instance, against a person whom we know but slightly or not at all, because he is taciturn or loquacious, reserved or forward, or, in short, for any one or more of an infinite variety of reasons. But accident brings us into closer acquaintance with him, and we find that his taciturnity is merely a natural and very proper reserve; his reserve, a native modesty, which forbids him to be over curious about other people, or what concerns them; or his forwardness merely a kindly readiness to help whenever and whomsoever he can. These prejudices, we say, are comparatively harmless, easily overcome by closer intercourse, or even if they are permitted to remain, the effect is trivial. It is the other class of prejudice which is so offensive and so difficult to deal with. These are scrupulously observed by some, by some even religiously worshipped, nor will any amount of sense, common or uncommon, avail to overcome them. Of course, those we exhibit towards others are perfectly orthodox, while those are heterodox which others exhibit towards us. We cling like grim death to the former; no condemnation is strong enough for the latter. Occasionally, when others prove loyal to the prejudices they have inherited or formed, we leaven our condemnation of their conduct with a certain amount of cynical good nature. We call them deluded beings, more or less wilful, whom a little of our own enlightenment will soon undeceive. But should they be bold enough to regard or describe us as deluded, we at once reject the imputation with the most intense scorn. But to consider more minutely sundry of these more dangerous prejudices. Nations, both in ancient and modern times, have often regarded each other with the bitterest prejudices. No allowance is made for any differences of habit or of sentiment such as may be naturally engendered by differences of nationality. Thus, for ages, and indeed till quite recently, all but a few enlightened Englishmen looked upon all Frenchmen as their natural foes, and Frenchmen were not behindhand in returning the compliment. Had not Kings of England carried fire and sword through some of the finest provinces of France? Did they not owe their glory to the victories they had won over French armies? Did we not hold Calais for over two centuries, and whenever a war prevailed in Europe in which France seemed disposed to take part, was it not our bounden duty as a nation to take the opposite side, the merits of the quarrel which had induced the war being a matter of secondary consideration altogether? We are wiser in this generation than we were formerly. We fully believe it possible for England and France to co-exist without jealousy of each other's fame and influence. We find we can march together along the path of civilization; that, while one country may possess certain admirable qualities, the other also possesses certain other qualities equally admirable of their kind, we recognise that both nations have the good of humanity ever before them, though the means which each employs in promoting that good may vary considerably. But it has taken us centuries to arrive at this knowledge, and it is sad to think how much blood and treasure has been expended ere the conviction dawned upon both that a hearty co-operation of the two peoples was more desirable than a constant antagonism, the result of mutual distrust and prejudice. Then there is the prejudice of caste, exemplified often in the course of our history. Many generations passed away before the Norman and the Saxon, the conqueror and the conquered became one people. The former despised and the latter hated the other. It was, of course, natural that at the outset the former should do their utmost to secure their conquest, and that the latter should eagerly seize every opportunity of throwing off the yolk. But it was not till long after the Norman Henry I. had set his subjects an excellent example, by marrying a Saxon Princess, that the two races found they could live together in peace and harmony; that each possessed many eminent qualities, and that together they would form a strong and powerful people, able to hold their own against even excessive odds. The Cedric the Saxon and Front de Bœuf of Sir Walter Scott are but typical of the caste feeling which long prevailed under the Norman and earlier Plantagenet sovereigns of England. Class jealousies are similarly strong, and equally difficult to allay. It may almost be said, indeed, that these rarely, if ever, die out. The aristocrat—in the common, not in the refined and proper sense of the word—looks down upon the hoi polloi—the latter hate, if they do not fear the former. There is no sort of sympathy between the two, and unhappily less now than formerly. We are not speaking of the true aristocrat, the man of patrician birth and of exalted mind, who would forfeit his life ere he would be guilty of any petty vulgar act, or entertain any petty vulgar thought. Nor have we in our mind the patrician by nature, who, though ignoble by birth, possesses a mind of the very highest order. We refer, rather, to the parvenu, the mushroom aristocrat, the man who is patrician in name perhaps, yet exhibits none of those grand and noble qualities we naturally associate with men in high places. Numerous instances of such have we before us, of men who have thought themselves greater, the more they affected a lofty contempt for their inferiors in position. It is these who perpetuate class prejudices, who widen more and more the gulf that separates the more fortunately from the less fortunately placed, and whose wilful perversity not seldom leads to a temporary subversion of the political and social status quo. Then there is political, or, as we more commonly call it, party prejudice. Conservatives and Radicals, the Right and the Left, alike believe that nothing good can emanate from their opponents. A conservative must be inherently bad in the eyes of a radical; the right can do good in the eyes of the left. But all measures are not wholly bad, as all men are not wholly despicable. The impartial, the unprejudiced man recognises this; the prejudiced ignore it. Hence, oftentimes, the course of politics is as proverbially unsmooth as the course of true love, and, worse still, there is no renewal of the old ties which bound men together in the earlier times ere party politics were heard of. Men serve their party as the rank and file of an army serve their general, with an abject obedience to all his commands, and with a genuine hostility to the foe. This unreasoning obedience to the general, this stern hostility to the foe, are admirable qualities in the subordinate soldier, but in the party-man obedience is desirable, and hostile feeling towards the opposite party is uncalled for. We may differ in politics without hating each other. But the worst of all prejudices, infinitely more terrible in their consequences than all the national, political and social prejudices that have ever been exhibited are those originating in differences of religious faith. All religions lay it down that men shall love each other, shall do their best to promote the common good. But difference of creed, whether it be as wide as that which distinguishes Buddhism from Christianity, or merely sectarianism, invariably results in the most intense hatred. That others may be influenced by conscientious motives seems incredible to the followers of this or that creed, the members of this or that sect. The most terrible wars, whether internal or external, the most violent animosities, and those attended with the most fearful consequences, have been the outcome of religious prejudices. In France, the wars of the League and the Massacre of St. Bartholomew's, in Germany the terrible Thirty Years' War, in the Netherlands the wars of Independence induced by Philip II.'s bigoted attachment to the Inquisition, at home the Smithfield Burnings, the Gunpowder Plot, the so-called Popish Plot in Charles II.'s reign, and the Gordon Riots, all these owed their origin to violent religious partiality for a particular form of Christian worship. At the present moment the Pope himself, the head of Roman Catholicism, is illustrating his extreme bigotry by his condemnation of Freemasonry, on the ground that it recognises all religious faiths. It is prejudiced in favour of no one creed, but leaves it to men to adopt that which they deem most worthy of belief. The section of the Roman Catholic Church to which the Pope belongs denies to men their inherent right to honestly worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. We need not of course dwell upon this question, which has already attracted so much attention both here and abroad. It shows, however, into what extremes prejudice will lead men who, in all other respects, are bent only on the most conscientious performance of their duties.

The point to which the foregoing remarks tend will probably have suggested itself long since to the minds of our readers. It is the special aim of Freemasonry to overcome prejudice of every degree and kind, as far as possible. Men of diverse views, both religious and political, meet together in the same Lodge. All political and religious discussions are strictly forbidden, yet Masons are enjoined to be political so far as obedience to the laws of the country in which they live is essential to the welfare of the body politic, and to be religious so far as it is the duty of every man to acknowledge one Supreme Being, the Creator of the Universe. But apart from these general charges, men may be monarchial or republican, Christian or Mohammedan; so long as they are good citizens and worship God conscientiously, they are safe Masonic examples to take pattern by. In a body of men thus constituted, we necessarily attain the minimum of prejudice. As regards personal likes and dislikes, we are enjoined not to meet in the same Lodge any brother from whom we are, momentarily perhaps, estranged, but as regards the more dangerous class of prejudice, if the laws of Masonry are properly observed, there is no fear of any of those terrible dissensions breaking out which have so often endangered the progress and even the very existence of Christianity and other faiths.

THE ANTIQUITY OF FREEMASONRY.

[COMMUNICATED.]

YOU published, in a late issue, under the nom de plume of "Neophyte," a letter bearing on the much disputed question as to the ancient or modern origin of Freemasonry. Your correspondent expressed a desire to know whether the recent elucidations of Egyptian and other monuments had thrown any light on this subject. I am not surprised at such a query being put, but I fear that an adequate reply is hardly yet obtainable. The best authorities differ so widely on the matter that nothing like certainty can at present be looked for. On the occasion of the Installation of the present Most Worshipful Grand Master, the Pro Grand Master, Lord Carnarvon, spoke of the great antiquity of the Craft, "an antiquity ascending into the sphere of immemorial tradition," and forthwith Bro. W. P. Buchan and other respected brethren hastened to contest the assertion. According to Bro. Buchan, our Freemasonry is not of great antiquity. "No evidence," he asserts, "has been produced of its existence even so recently as two hundred years ago." Who shall decide where doctors disagree? We can but trace the records, and form, each one for himself, his own conclusion.

According to some writers, Freemasonry in its principles is coeval with the creation. This notion I confess I am unable to comprehend; for even the fig leaf, which certain rather profane Masonic songs allege to be the antitype of the apron, is of a somewhat later date. The tradition that King Solomon was the founder and first Grand Master rests, I fear, upon but little firmer foundation. The theory which traces the origin of Masonry to the Cabirian mysteries bears, I think, a somewhat greater appearance of probability. Herodotus has some remarks about being "initiated in the Cabirian mysteries which the Samothracians learned of the Pelasgi." The historian further remarks that, "by them (the Pelasgi) the Athenians were first of all instructed to make the figure of Mercury with an upright priapus; for the which the Pelasgi have a sacred tradition, which is explained in the Samothracian mysteries." Who the Cabirians were, is, I believe, still a matter of doubt amongst the learned, but it is tolerably certain that they were believed to be three powerful deities. Here, then, we have some mysteries, associated apparently with religion and sculpture, a process of initiation, and the mystic number three; a slender beginning perhaps, but no more insignificant than the tiny rivulet which, by and bye, swells into the gigantic river. The Dionysiac artificers of Ionia may also be cited as furnishing some analogies to modern Masonry, though rather to practical than speculative Masonry. Professor Robinson, in an article in the Edinburgh Cyclopædia, remarks that "the Dionysiacs of Ionia were a great corporation of architects and engineers, who undertook, and even monopolised, the building of temples and stadia, precisely as the fraternity of Freemasons monopolised the building of Cathedrals and conventional Churches in the Middle Ages." "Indeed," the Professor continues, "the Dionysiacs resembled in many respects the mystic fraternity now called Freemasons. They allowed no strangers to interfere in their employment; they recognised each other by signs and tokens; they professed certain mysterious doctrines, under the tuition and tutelage of Bacchus, to whom they built a magnificent temple at Teos, where they celebrated his mysteries at solemn festivals, and they called all other men profanes, because not admitted to these mysteries."

With regard to the Freemasons of the middle ages, it is probably true that their's was also an operative and practical rather than a speculative and theoretical Freemasonry. But it would seem to offer sufficient analogies both with the guild of Iona and the Freemasonry of the present day to make good its claim to be the connecting link between the two. There is said to be a Latin document extant, purporting to be a proclamation of the Freemasons of Europe assembled at Cologne in 1535 for the purpose of vindicating themselves from the charge of having attempted to revive the order of the Temple. This document declares that the Freemasons are called the "Brethren dedicated to St. John," that prior to the year 1440 the association was called the Johannite Brethren, but that about that time it began to be known by the name of Freemasons. If this document be authentic it would seem to fix the name, at all events, of Freemasons as of older date than Brother Buchan appears disposed to allow for Freemasonry itself. These craftsmen of the middle ages formed, undoubtedly, a most remarkable sect. Michelet, in his "History of France," has noted with admiration their self-denial in leaving no record of their names in connection with those wondrous Cathedrals and Abbeys which centuries of scientific advancement have left unrivalled.

Prior to the eighteenth century I think there can be no doubt whatever that Freemasonry, under whatever form or name it existed, was entirely or mainly associated with operative masonry and architecture. Amateurs were occasionally admitted into the Fraternity, but, speaking generally, it was an association of practical men, formed for eminently practical ends. With the dawn of the eighteenth century modern Freemasonry may be said to have commenced, and from that period to the present day the Order has extended its ramifications throughout the civilised world, admitting into its ranks men of all classes. During the last two hundred years, and this is probably what was meant by Bro. Buchan, Freemasonry, from being a mere trade union of architects, sculptors and masons, has gradually been expanded into a gigantic fraternity, comprising men of all honourable vocations, actuated by common principles of unity and benevolence. The trowel, the plane, the compasses, formerly the active implements of the Craft, are to-day its chief emblems and insignia. But the old cordiality, the active sympathies, the elevating principles of brotherly love, relief, and truth survive to dignify the social bond, and encourage noble effort and kindly feeling amongst the brethren.

Briefly, then, Freemasonry in its present shape is the birth of modern times. It is the direct offspring of the operative Freemasonry of the middle ages, and can thus be clearly traced to the eleventh if not the tenth century. According to Roman Catholic authorities, who describe it as a remnant of Manicheeism, it has an antiquity ascending to apostolic times; and this contention, absurd as it may be thought, is at least worth something as pointing to an early origin. Cicero's remarks on the Eleusinian mysteries, "Eleusina sancta illa et Augusta; ubi initiantur gentes orarum ultimæ," carry us also to, and even beyond, the Christian era. The links required to connect this period with that of the Cabirian mysteries may not all be forthcoming, but surely a fair inference may be drawn from the similarity existing between their recorded characteristics and those of more modern Craftship. I have felt some little diffidence in touching upon a question where opinions have been so various and contradictory, and would gladly welcome any new light that your correspondents may be disposed to throw upon this most interesting topic.

PROGRESS OF THE MARK DEGREE.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF MARK MASTER MASONS, LINCOLNSHIRE.

GREAT GRIMSBY.

GOOD fellows are by no means infrequent in Masonry, but it does not fall to the lot of every Province to be under the sway of such a right worshipful good fellow as the Provincial Grand Mark Master of Lincolnshire.

On the morning of Thursday, 30th September, the Provincial Grand Officers proceeded by early trains to Stallingbro' House, the residence of R.W. Bro. John Sutcliffe, where, after a sumptuous breakfast, they were photographed as a group, in full costume—the first Provincial Grand Lodge of Mark Masters held in Lincolnshire—which, it will be remembered, was constituted some eleven months ago at Lincoln.

This, in the early morning, was quick work; the consecration of a new Lodge, named after the hospitable Chief, having been advertised to take place at 11.15 at Grimsby. Thither, nevertheless, by the aid of special trains, all in due time assembled. The consecration ceremony was performed by the Grand Secretary, Bro. Frederick Binckes, in his customary able manner, and the Provincial Grand Chaplain, Rev. Daniel Ace, D.D., being called upon to improve the occasion, delivered an impressive extempore oration, upon the moral bearings of the Degree. He observed that earliest records had disclosed to us how the Supreme Artificer had specially marked both persons and things for the maintenance of His Glory, with the object of assisting our infirmities: for without forms or figures we could derive no ideas. From the Psalms we learned that the Lord had set apart men that were godly for Himself. Marks were upon the Tabernacle and on the Temple, and Mr. Godwin's work, "Marks on Stones," demonstrated the same of other ancient edifices. The Hebrew Tau was a sign used by the Prophet Ezekiel as a mark of the Almighty to be set upon the Jews; and such a mark was used by the Egyptians in the shape of a Cross, prior to the Christian Era. As in architecture, the copestone is essential to the perfect arch, so the rejected stone of Mark Masons proved to be the most valuable, the head of the corner. The Mark, then, is indicative of him who possesses it, that he possesses distinguishing mental and moral qualities; and a Mark Mason who should fail to cultivate these would disgrace his Order. The Rev. brother concluded with a solemn invocation to the G.O.O.T.U.

The officers of the new "Sutcliffe Lodge" were appointed and invested; the Lodge was closed, and at about half-past one the Provincial Grand Lodge was opened, it being a noticeable fact that every officer was there present in his place, a diligence not always noted at similar gatherings. The Province contains the following Mark Lodges:—

The St. Botolph.
The Remigius.
The John O'Gaunt.
The Sutcliffe.

The Provincial Grand Officers for the ensuing year were appointed:—

W. Watkins, S.W.
Bland, J.W.
Kirk, M.O.
A. Watson, S.O.
A. Bates, J.O.
Dr. Ace, Chaplain,
Gough, Secretary, &c., &c.

After which the P.G.M., in a forcible speech, urged upon his hearers the duty of not relaxing for an instant the strenuous efforts which the Province had been making in the sacred cause of Charity, but to keep the Province well in the front as a supporter of our charitable Institutions.

The brethren adjourned to the banquet at the Royal Hotel, where, as throughout all the arrangements, the kind and careful forethought of the P.G.M., were sufficiently evident. During the evening a numerous contingent of brethren from Yorkshire, headed by R.W. Bro. Th. Perkinton, their P.G.M., vied with those of Lincolnshire in rendering honour to the chairman, and in evincing, by every means in their powers, their appreciation of the "entente cordiale."

To the toast of the "Bishops and Clergy," the Rev. Dr. Ace, Prov. G.C., responded, and observed that many among the Clergy are now active in Masonry. It was not always so, for there was a time when they did not understand it, when some of them derided it, and others thought their dignity would be compromised by their mixing with it. Such would, however, find that they would be respected in Masonry, both for their work and office sake. He would briefly advert to a proposition he had made, relative to raising a tangible memorial to the venerated memory of Dr. Oliver, once a clergyman of this town. He had received encouraging letters from all parts, urging him to continue that task—to set on foot a testimonial which should benefit some poor boy from our Masonic School, by procuring for him a University Scholarship.

The health of the Prov. G.M. was proposed by his R.W. colleague of Yorkshire, in pithy but telling terms, "What need to descant upon the good qualities of one so well known, who is here present amongst you? You know him, what could I say to increase the honour and estimation which he has won." The R.W. brother did not propose to paint the rose, or gild the lily, and he was right. In addition to the Masonic Mark salutes, this toast was followed by spontaneous musical honours.

The health of the Deputy Prov. G.M., Dr. Harris, was also drunk with enthusiasm. Bro. W. H. Prince, of Rochdale, addressed a few feeling remarks to the chair, and some of the speeches (not excepting those of Bros. F. Binckes and J. Terry) were much above the average. A gathering happier in the perfect good understanding which subsisted between all, cemented by love and respect for the occupant of the chair, has never been witnessed in Masonry. If the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters has other provinces after the manner of Lincolnshire, its members need not regret the technical objections which prevented the incorporation of their degree into Craft Masonry.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF AYRSHIRE.

LAYING OF A MEMORIAL STONE AT KILWINNING.

SATURDAY, 25th September, was a day that will long be remembered in the annals of this quiet Ayrshire village, as that on which Colonel Mure, M.P., P.G.M. of Ayrshire, attended to lay the memorial stone of the new schools, erecting by the School Board, for the children of this large parish. Kilwinning, as is well known to all Masonic students, claims to have been the cradle of British Freemasonry, inasmuch as the builders of the old abbey, whose ruins still grace the village, are said to be the oldest members of the Craft in this Isle of whom we have any authentic record, and whose descendants have continued to hold their meetings up to the present time. For a long time after the formation of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, the Kilwinning Lodge not only held aloof, but she continued to grant charters to daughter Lodges, and when a reconciliation was effected it was only by conceding to her her priority over all the other Lodges, and allowing her to call herself Mother Kilwinning, No. 0, with the privileges of her members paying less for the registration and diploma than other Scotch Masons, and also granting her this unique privilege that the Master shall, from time to time elect, become thereby, ipso facto, the Provincial Grand Master for the whole of Ayrshire. This honourable office Colonel Mure, of Caldwell, M.P., has long held, and very worthily filled, and when it was known that the School Board had asked him, in that capacity, to lay the memorial stone of the splendid new schools they are erecting to meet the wants of this populous parish, it was determined that the occasion should be made worthy of the place and its memories. Notwithstanding that Friday was a very stormy day, and that the morning of Saturday was equally unpropitious, a goodly number of the mother's bairns resident in Glasgow obeyed the summonses of the Proxy Wardens—Bros. Ferguson and Tweed,—and went in special carriages by rail to this old and picturesque village. They were accompanied by a deputation of the following:—Glasgow Lodge, St. John's, No. 3½, a Lodge which lays claim to equal antiquity with Kilwinning, but one always ready to assist the mother Lodge; they were headed by their respected Master, W. Bell, P.M. Fletcher, and other influential brethren; Thistle and Rose, No. 73, were next followed by No. 116; while the Clyde, No. 408, with its banner, her Master, and both his Wardens, and a fair proportion of the brethren, brought up the rear of the Glasgow contingent. Bro. Wyllie, the indefatigable P.G.S. of Ayrshire, had a band in waiting at the station to escort them into the town, and up to the oldest Lodge room in Scotland, where they were welcomed by Colonel Mure, Lord Eglinton, D. Murray Lyon, the Masonic historian, Sir James Ferguson, late Governor of New Zealand, W. R. Partrick, of Woodhouse D.P.G.M., and the élite of the Masons of Ayrshire. The Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in the Temperance Hall, as the largest available building, by the P.G.M. Colonel Mure, M.P., R. Montgomery D.P.G.M., J. Partrick S.P.G.M., D. Murray Lyon S.W., Dr. J. Campbell R.W.M., J.W. of Maybole, No. 11, R. Wyllie S., J. Winton Treasurer. A procession was then formed by A. Bryce, the Grand Tyler of Scotland, in which the following Lodges took part:—Mother Kilwinning, No. 0, St. John's, No. 3½, Maybole, No. 11, St. John, Kilmarnock, No. 22, Thistle and Rose, No. 73, Troon, No. 86, St. Marnock, No. 109, St. John, Rutherglen, No. 116, Ayr, No. 124, St. James, No. 125, St. Andrew, No. 126, Stewton, No. 127, Tarbolton, No. 135, Operative, No. 138, Irvine, No. 149, Ayr, No. 165, St. Mungo, No. 179, Maybole, No. 198, Muirkirk, No. 201, Cumnock, No. 230, Girvan, No. 237, Johnson, No. 242, St. John's, No. 248, Dalry, No. 290, Ardrossan, No. 320, Galston, No. 331, Dalmellington, No. 433, Neptune, No. 442, Catrine, No. 497, Hurlford, No. 505, Stranraer, No. 519, and Patna, No. 565, Darby Ferguson, St. James. On reaching the building, which is at the outskirts of the town, the Earl of Eglinton, in the name of the committee, presented Col. Mure with a handsome silver trowel, who gracefully acknowledged the compliment, and promised to transmit it as a heirloom to his family. The stone was then laid with the accustomed Masonic honours. Colonel Mure, M.P., P.G.M., then addressed the assemblage. He said it was a very long time ago now—he thought it was in the year

1814—since the Freemasons of Kilwinning were employed in a similar ceremony as that which had just been completed. On that occasion they laid the foundation of the kirk tower, which was familiar to them. He had no doubt a great many of them, and particularly the ladies, who, generally speaking, were supposed to be more curious than men—(laughter)—might wonder what the object of Freemasonry was. Well, the object of Freemasonry was in itself a most excellent one, as the Craft consisted of a vast number of men, throughout the whole world, banded together in order to promote that which is good. People might sometimes say to themselves, "Are Freemasons better than any other body?" All he knew was that if they were not, they ought to be, because they bound themselves by solemn vows to be better than other people. (Laughter and applause.) With regard to education, he would say this for the Freemasons in Ayrshire, that, quite independent of the great educational movement which had been going on for some years in this country, they had tried to do a little for education, because they had already collected a subscription among themselves by which they could afford to give £20 a-year to enable the son of a Freemason to leave the parish school with the prospect of securing a higher education, and do, as many Scotchmen had done before him, raise himself in condition and intellectual power. That was not a very great great thing, but it was a step in the right direction. (Hear, hear.) He quite admitted, however, when he knew what a vast organisation Freemasonry is, and when he looked at the enormous ramifications of Masonry throughout the world, that he would not grumble if they did a little more good than they had done. (Applause.) The gallant Colonel then referred to the various emblems which had been used in the ceremony, and explained their meanings and applications. In the course of his remarks on these heads, he observed that when he took the sheaf of corn in his hand he could not help thinking that it formed in some parts of this island not only the emblem of prosperity, but in some sense it might be said to be not an unfit emblem of the ignorance that prevailed in certain parts of Her Majesty's dominions. He alluded to the wretched condition of the children employed in agriculture in the South of England, and in various counties in this country; and when he thought of that, and also remembered that it was not so very long ago that the standard of their education was lowered, in order to meet the blind folly of the farmers of England, he could not help congratulating himself that in Scotland, at least, our farmers had not come forward and said, "We cannot afford to collect the gift of a bountiful Providence unless our children are kept in ignorance." (Hear, hear.) That in itself was to him a subject of sincere congratulation, and looking, as they ought to do, with a more extended eye, let them hope the day was not far distant when the compulsory powers we had in this happy part of Her Majesty's dominions might be welcomed by all classes and trades in the whole of this great and otherwise prosperous island. (Applause.) The hon. gentleman then commented on the harmony which had prevailed at the school board, congratulating the gentlemen engaged on having set aside their religious differences in their desire that little children who were ignorant might be taught. He also congratulated the people of this country that while the leading men of other nations had to take up their time considering questions which stirred up the worst passions of their countrymen, or questions of peace or war, our great men devoted themselves to public education, and to efforts to improve the condition of the children of the country. By our future Acts, by our reformatories, by our industrial schools, and by this great effort—this great educational scheme—he hoped, by the blessing of God, we would become before many years were passed a happier, better, and more Christian people. (Applause.)

The Hon. Mr. Vernon, on behalf of his colleagues, the members of the School Board of Kilwinning, thanked Colonel Mure and those who assisted him for their kindness. Referring to an observation which fell from Colonel Mure regarding the importance of unanimity, he remarked the board had worked most harmoniously and unanimously.

Colonel Mure acknowledged the compliment. Three cheers were then given in succession, for the Queen, for Colonel Mure, and for the members of the school board. The Freemasons subsequently formed into procession, and marched into town, followed by the people who had witnessed the proceedings at the ceremony.

In the evening a large company of gentlemen, including the members of the school board and others who took part in the ceremony, met at dinner in the hall connected with the Eglinton Arms Hotel. The Hon. Mr. Vernon occupied the chair, and Mr. Roger Montgomerie, M.P., and Mr. Ralston Patrick officiated as croupiers. After dinner, the Chairman intimated the receipt of letters of apology for absence from Lord Rosslyn, Sir Wm. Cuninghame, M.P.; Dr. Taylor, secretary to the Education Board; Mr. Smollett, and other gentlemen.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF CHESHIRE.

BY command of Bro. the Right Hon. Lord de Tabley, Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master, the annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Cheshire was held on Thursday, the 23rd of September, in the Mechanics' Institution, at Hyde, which is situated a few miles from Manchester, for the purpose of transacting the annual business of the province. The Masonic province of Cheshire comprises Chester, Stockport, Birkenhead, Cheadle, Stalybridge, Runcorn, Congleton, Seacombe, Egremont, Newton, Macclesfield, Hyde, Nantwich, Northwich, Knutsford, Crewe, and other towns, there being altogether about 40 Lodges, and each of these sent representatives, some in large numbers, to attend the annual meeting of the province. Besides the R.W.P.G.M., there were present about 40 Provincial Grand Officers, about 300 W.M.'s, P.M.'s, officers and members of Lodges in the province, and nearly 50 visitors from East and West Lancashire and other provinces. The town of Hyde, which is certainly not attractive in situation nor surroundings, wore quite a holiday aspect, banners and flags floating in nearly every direction, and at various points the motto "Welcome to Lord de Tabley" was displayed, this welcome being given especially by the members of the Lodge of Industry, No. 361, Hyde (which sent 61 representatives), and the Clarendon Lodge, No. 1166, Hyde. The annual meeting was held under the auspices of these Lodges.

Business was announced to begin at half-past twelve o'clock, and shortly after that time Lord de Tabley opened the Provincial Grand Lodge in due form. Letters and telegrams of apology for non-attendance were read from Bro. G. Cornwall Legh D.P.G.M., Bro. Lord Grosvenor, and others; after which the rolls of P.G. officers and Lodges were read. The minutes of the last annual meeting at Chester on the 17th September 1874, were also read and confirmed, as well as the minutes of the committee of the Fund of Benevolence, held at Crewe in March, of which Bro. Captain Cope P.G.S.B. of England was unanimously re-elected chairman.

Bro. Lord de Tabley P.G.M., in accordance with his custom in previous years, then addressed the brethren on the present position and prospects of Masonry in his province. It was to him a great happiness to be able to continue the same congratulation which he expressed last year in reference to the Craft in his division. Freemasonry was flowing on uninterruptedly in its prosperity—increasing in numbers, and he hoped increasing in the influence it exercised on the opinions of the society in which it existed. He had the greatest pleasure in seeing the Lodges of the province over which he had the honour to preside so fully and numerously represented as they were that day; and it was also a source of satisfaction to him to have the welcome given to the P.G. Lodge in that North-east portion of the province—a welcome, he was sure, which would long remain green and fresh in their memories. He had before spoken of the care which ought to be exercised as to the respectability of those initiated into their Order, and he would again urge them to exercise this caution, striving not to secure mere numbers, but assuring themselves of the characters and sterling worth of those they introduced. (Applause.) He would also say that, proud as he was of the number of the Lodges over which he presided, he was above all anxious for the stability of those Lodges in every part of the province. The minute books of the different Lodges, he said, had been carefully kept, and showed considerable improvement; but he would remind the secretaries of Lodges of the necessity of stating in each case in the minutes, and also on the circulars, the cause for holding Lodges of Emergency. The gift of a pulpit, which they had last year made to the cathedral at Chester, was still incomplete owing to the whole of the promised subscriptions not having been received; but he was certain he had only to mention this to have the moneys paid up without delay. He had no doubt that he would soon be able to report that the pulpit, which was being erected under the direction of Mr. Gilbert Scott, would be one in every respect worthy of their Craft. (Hear, hear.) Their charities had again been very successful during the year, and they had succeeded in electing one old woman for the London institution, and there was every prospect of their boy candidate being elected in October. He trusted that their charity in the future would enable them to be successful in connection with coming elections, and he cordially urged the claims of all their charities on the hearty support of the brethren. His lordship then referred to the deaths of prominent members of the Craft in that province during the year, alluding specially to Bros. Crutenden, Dr. Evans, Terry, and William Bailey, each of whom had done honour to Masonry.

The P.G. Treasurer stated that the balance to the credit of the funds of P.G. Lodge amounted to £406 7s 9d, and the sum of £1,236 18s 6d was the balance to the credit of the fund of benevolence. The financial report was adopted, and Bro. F. Jackson was unanimously re-elected P.G. Treasurer.

Bro. G. W. Latham P.P.G.Reg. then moved, "That a grant of 500 guineas be made from the funds of the Provincial Grand Lodge for the purpose of aiding in the purchase of a perpetual presentation to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys; such grant to be on the condition that a sufficient additional sum be raised in the province to make up the amount required by the governors of the institution for such privilege." He stated that this was probably the largest sum which the brethren had ever been called upon to vote for charity, but he had no doubt they would cordially fall in with the proposition. The usual cost of a perpetual presentation was 1,500 guineas, but the governors of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys had generously agreed to reduce it to 1,000 guineas. The raising of the other 500 guineas would take some consideration, but he thought a way was already seen by which the sum might be raised. He also proposed that Bros. Horatio Lloyd P.G.S.W., J. Wood P.G.Reg., G. W. Latham P.P.G.Reg., and J. E. Williams P.M. of the Cestrian Lodge, Chester, be appointed a committee to confer with the governors of the Cheshire Educational Institution, and also with the governors of the Boys' School, London, with reference to the matter.

Bro. Bailey seconded the motion, which was adopted unanimously.

The following were then appointed P.G. officers for the ensuing year:—Bros. G. Cornwall Legh D.G.M., Horatio Lloyd P.G.S.W., Captain H. A. Bennett P.G.J.W., Rev. R. Hodgson P.G.C., Rev. J. S. Durrell P.G.C., F. Jackson P.G. Treas., J. Wood P.G. Reg., E. H. Griffiths P.G. Sec., J. E. Williams P.G.S.D., J. Hibbert P.G.J.D., R. J. Bowden P.G.S. of W., Wilmot Eardley P.G.D.C., P. Wadsworth P.G.A.D.C., Captain Arrowsmith P.G.S.B., J. Travis P.G.O., R. Sykes P.G.P., J. Swindells P.G. Tyler, and Bros. J. Bardman, F. Broadsmith, M. H. Bradley, W. Berry, G. Hesketh, and J. Turner, P.G. Stewards.

Bro. Horatio Lloyd P.G.S.W., in a few well-chosen words, conveyed to the P.G.M. the pleasure felt by the brethren at his restoration to health, which would enable him to stay during the whole of the day's proceedings. Lord de Tabley briefly acknowledged the kind expressions of sympathy by the brethren. The P.G.M. then presented charity jewels to Bros. C. Dutton, H. Bennett, Goodacre, and Matthews, which they received in consequence of serving the office of stewards at the festivals in London in aid of the Masonic Schools.

On the motion of the P.G.M., thanks were voted to the Rev. W. H. Lowther for the use of the church and the schools, and to the directors of the Mechanics' Institution for the use of that building.

After Lord de Tabley had intimated his intention of holding his next Provincial Grand Lodge at Knutsford, the business proceedings closed.

The whole of the brethren then marched to St. George's Church, where a sermon was preached by Bro. R. Hodgson P.G.C., the musical portion of the service being conducted by P.G.O. Bro. J. Travis. A collection was made on behalf of the fund of benevolence and of the Cheshire Masonic Educational Institution.

A banquet was served by Messrs. Jennison and Co., of Manchester, in St. George's Schools, to which about 250 brethren sat down, under the presidency of Bro. Lord de Tabley. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given during the evening. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Bro. Travis P.G.O., who presided at the piano, the vocalists being Bros. Edmondson, Stafford, Dumville, Ball, and Roscoe.

FRIENDLY CORRECTION.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR,—In the Answers to Correspondents, of last week's issue, in reply to J. W., the Editor states that the minimum Initiation Fee under the Grand Lodge of England is "Five Guineas." Such is not the case, but three guineas, exclusive of the fees for registration and certificate (17s), which make the sum total Four pounds. The minimum is accordingly Four pounds, the whole of which is payable on the night of Initiation, and no portion can be left unpaid on any pretext whatever. I much wish the authorities would make this fee double the present low amount, which has continued thus at Four pounds all this century, notwithstanding that the relative value would be nearer eight pounds at the present time. It seems to me that at least Six guineas should be the minimum fee, and as the charge for warrants has been increased, I fail to see on what plea a similar change should not be made respecting the costs of Initiation. Under the Grand Lodge of Ireland, not only are some of our fees higher, but we have some excellent rules in force respecting the initiation of gentlemen away from their usual residences, which it would be well for England, Masonically, if they were accepted there also, as indeed some of its provinces have done. Another correction I should like to make (if needed) has reference to a letter by Bro. E. Gottheil, who speaks of the doings of a "suburban Lodge." Bro. Gottheil's remarks appear to me to favour the notion that under the Grand Lodge of England, when the minutes of the election of a W.M. are not confirmed, the member cannot proceed afresh to the election of a W.M. at the following Lodge, but must wait for the next regular period of election.

I have before me the small edition of the Constitutions for 1875, doubtless well known to our brother, and to the English Craft generally, and in it I find that when the minutes of such election are not confirmed, "then a summons must be issued for the following regular meeting of the Lodge," and the brethren must proceed to the election of the W.M. as before.

Clearly then, in the case our brother refers to, it is the duty of the W.M. for the time being to proceed to the election of his successor at the next regular meeting of his Lodge (even if it be the succeeding month), and at the following Lodge, the minutes being confirmed, and the W.M. elect installed, he becomes relieved of his duties as W.M.

I am, yours fraternally,

MASONIC INVESTIGATOR.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

S.W.—Brethren who are Life Governors of the three Masonic Charities, and have served as Stewards for two of them, are entitled to wear the Charity Jewel. They can also wear bars with the dates of each succeeding Stewardship.

M.M.—In the absence of the W.M., the immediate Past Master can occupy the chair. If he be not present, the oldest Past Master takes precedence.

M.M.M.—Send the numbers to our Publishing Office, they shall be bound, and the volume returned to you. Thanks for your good wishes.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—This medicine has resisted every test which time, prejudice, and vested interests could impose upon it, and it at length stands forth triumphant as the most reliable remedy for those derangements of the system so common at the change of seasons. When the air grows cooler and the functions of the skin are retarded, an occasional dose of Holloway's Pills will rally on the liver and kidneys for greater activity and compensate the system for diminished cutaneous action. As alteratives, aperients, and tonics, these Pills have no equals. To every aged and delicate person, whose appetite is defective, digestion infirm, and tone of health low, this medicine will be a priceless boon, conferring both ease and strength.

The Day Dreams of a Sleepless Man. By FRANK IVES SCUDAMORE, C.B. London: Griffith and Farran. 1875.

THIS is a republication of a series of papers contributed to the Standard, Scotsman, and Glasgow News. The author, whose name has for many years been associated with one of our principal public departments, here gives evidence of the possession of literary, or we should rather say, journalistic qualifications of no mean order. His papers are written in a pleasant, humorous and gossippy style, eminently well suited to while away agreeably a vacant hour. The author describes himself as a "sleepless man," and those who have known him most intimately will probably recognise the applicability of the expression. He has tried all the reputed remedies for sleeplessness, and has found that the best resource after all is to get up and walk about. Before cock-crow, he tells us, he has often been on his rambles, wending his steps now in the direction of Billingsgate, now towards Covent Garden, anon perhaps away from the busy hum of men. Like Dickens, and indeed most extremely active minds, he seems to have found something resting to the spirit in walking through crowded thoroughfares. Most of the papers here reproduced relate to a holiday excursion, which the author appears to have recently made in the North West of France. Abbeville, Neufchâtel, Descres, Crecy, and the little village of St. Pol are all lightly touched upon, and some amusing incidents are recorded, illustrative of the manners and customs of the natives. There is a tradition existing amongst them, of a game which used to be played with a large ball, the players being divided into two hostile bands, and our author asks whether this may not have been our English foot-ball, introduced into France during the English occupation, and forgotten soon after the occupation was over. At St. Pol, the writer and his companion are regarded with some suspicion by the village Gend'arme, and even placed under temporary arrest, until a communication has been received from their friends, attesting the harmless intentions of their journey. It seemed to be the opinion of the local functionaries that no rational being would pay a visit to such a place without some sinister motive. Pedestrian excursions, in fact, are generally looked upon with a kind of doubt by the provincial French. We remember, on one occasion being stranded at a small out-of-the-way French village, about five or six miles from the town where we were staying. No train was due for at least a couple of hours, and we calculated that we could walk the distance in about half that time. We consulted a native as to the road. He looked at us with blank astonishment; but, immediately recollecting himself, pointed to the Railway Station we had just quitted. Merci, ye veux marcher, we cried; "Ah! Monsieur!" he answered, C'est impossible. In vain we attempted to reason with the man, assured him that the distance was but a trifle, and that we could walk double or treble the distance in perfect comfort. The scoundrel was obdurate, and other natives, to whom we afterwards applied, were equally impracticable. They could not countenance so reckless an experiment, and we were thus compelled to await the arrival of the train. Our author is at times discursive. The mention of St. Fonctiard reminds him that he once himself received a flogging from a certain Dr. Rice, and this again calls to his mind the story of a certain well-known pedagogue, who, in his later years, whenever he heard speak of a rising man, would remark, "Yes! yes! a clever man! a clever man! I've thrashed him many a time." The book is interesting, as exhibiting the holiday aspect of a man of affairs, and well worth the time spent in its perusal.

W. Cuthbush and Son's Bulb Catalogue, 1875. — This contains a large and varied assortment of the newest and choicest kinds of Hyacinths, Ixias, Snowdrops, Anemones, Lilies, Tulips, Narcissus and Polyanthus Narcissus, Gladioli, &c., &c. As regards double Hyacinths the price per dozen varies from fifteen to eighteen shillings, for which the finest named bulbs, suitable for exhibition, are supplied, but a good class of bulb may be had at from eight to twelve shillings. For a single bulb the price ranges from eight pence to four shillings. In the case of Hyacinths the very finest range from one to two guineas per dozen, the next class from fifteen to eighteen shillings, and a dozen of good bulbs from eight to twelve shillings. As to varieties we have noted "Kob-i-noor" (double) four shillings per bulb, and, among singles, the following:—Single Red "Howard," three shillings; "Linnæus," three-and-sixpence; "Vanrbak," five shillings; Single White, "La Grandesse," six shillings; and "Snowball," four-and-sixpence; Single Blue, "Czar Peter," four shillings; "King of the Blues," seven-and-sixpence; "Sir James Graham," five shillings; Single Black, "Blackbird," and "Lamplighter" each half-a-crown; And Single Yellow, "Bird of Paradise," seven shillings. For collections of named varieties, assorted as to shade, the price varies from ten pounds to three pounds fifteen shillings per hundred, and from five guineas to two pounds per fifty. Cheap Hyacinths for beds may be had at thirty-two shillings per hundred, or four shillings and sixpence per dozen, while mixed Hyacinths of all shades are twenty-five shillings per hundred, or three shillings and sixpence per dozen. There is an excellent selection of Tulips, both single and double, early and late, while, among Lilies, we have marked L. Auratum at from half-a-crown to half a guinea each, L. Californicum from seven and sixpence to a guinea; L. Humboldtii from seven and sixpence to half a guinea, L. Pardalinum and L. Washingtonianum, each from seven and sixpence to half a guinea, and L. Tigrinum flore pleno from five shillings to half a guinea. Similarly, the prices for other bulbous plants vary according to the class of root selected. There is also an excellent selection of Strawberries specially prepared for planting. A few good named practical hints as to the cultivation of Hyacinths are prefixed, and each is fully described. Those of our readers who may visit the Cutbush Nurseries at Highgate, will have an ample and a choice field to select from, and we are convinced they will have every reason to be pleased with their purchases. It is, of course, desirable they should go early, for then there will be a chance of obtaining roots of the finest varieties. In so simple a matter as the purchase of Hyacinths, as in the graver concerns of life, "delays are dangerous," if the buyer, at least, is anxious to make a good selection.

A List of Lodges on the Roll of the United Grand Lodge, A.D. 1814. By William James Hughan P.M. 131, &c., &c. Truro: W. Lake, Steam Press, Princes Street. 1875.

It is not necessary we should offer any lengthened comments on this—which is, in fact, a corrected issue of the List appended to Brother Hughan's well-known Memorials of the Masonic Union, the merits of which we endeavoured to do justice to in one of our earliest issues. The list will prove of great value to all students of Masonry, and it is as well that it should have been published separately. In a brief notice like this we can hardly do more than refer to the labour which Bro. Hughan must have gone through in the compilation of such a List. Thoughtless readers will imagine that a work of this kind is all plain sailing. Experienced people alone can estimate the trouble entailed in the performance of such a task, and probably there are very few brethren, who, had the compilation devolved upon them as a duty, would have had the patience or the ability to accomplish it.

Installation Song.—"Our M.W.G.M., Albert Edward, Prince of Wales." Composed by the Rev. H. John Hatch, S.W. 160, Prov. Gr. Chaplain, Essex. London: George Kenning, 198 Fleet-street.

We think this song is likely to be very popular with the Craft, not because it is above the average of Masonic songs; it is neither better nor worse than most of the ballads to which Masons rejoice to listen when the labours of the day are over; nor is the melody particularly enchanting; nevertheless we feel, as we have said, that it will meet with many admirers, and as it is far from difficult to sing and play, we shall probably hear it pretty frequently now that the Craft has resumed its labours.

MAGAZINES OF THE MONTH.

Those of our readers who have watched the progress of events in the serial story current for some months in Blackwood, and entitled "The Dilemma," will not be surprised at the turn events have taken in the present instalment. That the Residency of Mustaphabad should be relieved when almost in extremis was inevitable; that one of the principal characters in the story should be struck down in the performance of his duty, must have been long regarded as a necessary point in the story. But though the principal events contained in this Part VI. may have been foreseen, the manner in which they are described is highly effective, enabling us to realise, as far as it is possible to realise such scenes, the terrible nature of the duties which our scattered garrisons in India had to fulfil in the summer of 1857. We must not enter too minutely into detail, but we may mention that Colonel and Mrs. Falkland, Yorke, Bradden, Major Peart, and others, all do their duty manfully, as we know was the case throughout our gallant army during the whole period of the mutiny. Of the other articles, we have read with particular pleasure the long and exhaustive account of "The British Sea Fisheries," an able paper on "Money;" "Wrecked off the Riff Coast," in which the Riff pirates, as regards one of the boat's crews—to use a common phrase—come off second best, and a description of the every day routine of business in "The London Police Courts." The life and works of "Michael Angelo" form the subject of another interesting paper.

The present number of the New Quarterly will be found quite equal to any of its predecessors. The fiction is decidedly good, both Mrs. Cashel Hoey's tale of "No Sign," and the shorter, yet well conceived tale of Mr. Mortimer Collins, entitled "The Summerfield Embroglio." Students of art and poetry will find something that accords with their taste in Mr. Carr's paper on "The Artistic Spirit in Modern Poetry." There are two biographical sketches, one of an old English Dramatist, "Philip Massinger," by Mr. G. Barnett Smith, and the other of a great Italian patriot, "Nino Bixio," who played so conspicuous a part in some of the leading events of the recent struggles by Italy for establishing, not only her independence of foreign rule and native tyranny, but likewise her homogeneity. He was one of those gallant soldiers to whom Italy owes it that she is no longer what an eminent statesman, not so many years since, described her as being—a mere Geographical expression. Bixio was one of the famous thousand who landed at Marsala with Garibaldi, and was, in fact, one of that hero's most favoured lieutenants. Mr. Goddard's paper on the "Dolomites of the Tyrol," and Dr. Lear's review of "Tennyson's May Queen," are eminently readable contributions.

The chief features in the Gentleman's are "Red Spinner's" paper entitled "In the Peak Country,"—not unknown, perhaps, to some of our readers in connection with one of Sir Walter Scott's most famous novels, Peveril of the Peak, in which that pleasant writer discourses agreeably, as is his wont, of the streams that flow through that part of England; and Mr. McCullagh Torrens' inquiry "Are good recruits worth paying for?" We can well imagine the answer, that ninety-nine out of every hundred readers will give to this very proper question, which, it should be pointed out, is most ably argued from every point of view by the writer. Those who love Irish scenery and adventures will find that "Back O' Whiddy" will fully satisfy their tastes. Mr. and Mrs. Cowden Clarke's "Recollections of writers known to an old couple when young," are admirable sketches, written lightly, yet genially, and with great effect. Coleridge and Mrs. Shelly, widow of the poet, are among those to whom we are introduced this month. The Table Talk is good, and our interest in the two serials is well kept up. An English Jew writes thoughtfully of "Modern Judaism."

We note in the Argosy that "A Secret of the Sea" is rapidly approaching its termination. The point at which for the present we take leave of the story is a critical one, and it is clear that but little remains to dispose of the chief personages and events. The writer, who is known in these papers, and elsewhere, as "Johnny Ludlow," concludes his tale of "Chandler and Chandler." Tom, who has been hardly used, first by his uncle and afterwards by his cousin, prospers famously, and marries, while his cousin Valentine falls into evil ways, and has to emigrate to Canada, in order to start afresh in life.

Of Belgravia we may remark, as to the illustrations, that they are admirable—particularly Mr. French's, "All that I have is yours," and Mr. George Kirby's "At the Stile." Among the contents we have noted an amusingly written paper by Mr. G. Augustus Sala—"The Ghost of Barbarossa lately encountered on the coast of Africa," a somewhat similar kind of paper by Dr. Gordon Stables, entitled "A Reminiscence of Zanzibar." The article on "Criminals" urges, and rightly, we think, strong measures in dealing with the wife beaters and similar brutes. There is a prettily descriptive paper by Mr. Escott, "In the New Forest," a neatly told tale by Percy Boyd, "How I shot my first snipe," and well-deserved laudation of "The Midland Railway and its hotels." Of the other contents, we commend to our readers' notice, Mr. James Grant's "Strange Story of the Duchess of Kingston," and if they wish for something to excite their anger—"Revelations of a Critic." The latter may be amusing perhaps, but had better have been left unwritten. It has not even the merit of novelty.

The fare provided in Temple Bar is solid and substantial as usual. The tale of "Leah: A Woman of Fashion," is concluded; "Her Dearest Foe" is still current. There are, also, a short tale, well told, entitled "Basil's Faith," a pretty "Lapland Legend," and sketches of "Two Danes," Thorwaldsen and Anderson, two of the most illustrious sons of Denmark. We subjoin "the Poet's Last Song," translated by Hans from the original Danish of Anderson's.

Like to the leaf which falleth from the tree,
O God, such only is my earthly life.
Lord, I am ready when thou callest me.
Lo! Thou canst see my heart's most bitter strife—
'Tis Thou alone canst know the load of sin,
Which this my aching breast doth hold within.

Shorten the pains of death, shake off my fear,
Give me the courage of a trusting child.
Father of Love, I fain would see Thee near.
In pity judge each thought and act defiled—
Mercy, I cry! dear Lord, Thy will be done,
Save me, I pray, through Jesus Christ, Thy Son.

We cannot say we are quite satisfied with the turn events have taken in Mrs. Banks's story—"The Manchester Man"—the first serial in Cassell's Family Magazine. Jabez Clegg still prospers, and the services he renders Mr. Ashton are more and more valuable each day. But Augusta Ashton seems to have lost her head entirely, nor do we see that the exigencies of the story demanded the sacrifice. It would have been in better keeping with the proprieties had Aspinall père not lent himself to his son's vagaries. Altogether, though there is the same force exhibited, the same vivacity in the dialogue, while incidents, well depicted, of an interesting, nay even, of an exciting character come thick and fast upon us, we think Mrs. Banks might have spared her heroine the disgrace of becoming Mrs. Lawrence Aspinall. As to her father, he behaves well throughout, and he yields to the force of circumstances, which prove too powerful for him, only that his daughter's life may not be sacrificed to her silly passion. We have, further, in this number, a sketch of the "Rise of Good-Templarism" by Joseph Malins, Grand Worthy Chief Templar of England, who, if any one, should speak with authority on the subject. For ourselves, we think Good Templarism admirably suited for weak-minded people. "My Balloon Adventure" is a very exciting story. If it really happened, it must have been far more pleasant to narrate than to experience. A Navy Surgeon should go on writing about "Home-Baths and Bathing," not that he will add much to the force of the very sensible remarks we have to thank him for here, but on the principle of writing till you have worried people into taking your advice. We, too, know by experience the luxury of the morning tub, and how few people there are even now who indulge in it. We fully endorse "A Navy Surgeon's" remarks as to the not uncommon omission in families of the healthy practice of tubbing, and equally with him are we convinced that the health of the country generally would be vastly improved if this practice were more constantly indulged in. "Small economies" are those which it is most necessary to be careful about; what these are, and how to observe them, we learn from Phillis Browne. "The Gatherer" also has culled a sensible assortment of hints and views.

In the Voice of Masonry, for September, we have read with great pleasure a paper by Bro. William James Hughan, on the origin of "Freemasonry in North America," in which some very interesting evidence is furnished, bearing on the question when the first Masonic Lodge was constituted in America. Another paper which we commend to the notice of our readers bears also on a question which has recently excited no little interest—"The Earliest Attack of the Church against secret Societies," by Albert G. Mackey, M.D.

OFFICE: 5 Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, W.C.

PATRONS.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G., &c., M.W.G.M., President.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCESS OF WALES.

A QUARTERLY GENERAL COURT of the Governors and Subscribers of this Institution, will be held at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, on Saturday, the 9th day of October 1875, at 12 o'clock precisely, on the General Business of the Institution, to consider notices of motion as follows, and to elect 6 Girls into the School by ballot from a list of 30 approved candidates. The election will commence at 1 o'clock (or after the usual business is over), and close at 3 o'clock precisely.

By JOSHUA NUNN, ESQ., P.G.S.B., Vice-President.

"With a view to enable the Institution to accomodate a greater number of Children, found necessary by the increase of applications (Four-Fifths of the applicants at the next Election cannot be admitted for want of room), and the vastly extending growth of the Craft generally, with the circumstance that space cannot be obtained on the limited site of the present School, as it is so hemmed in by railway lines and buildings, and which, at no distant period, will be required for partially or for increased railway accommodation, that year by year has extended since the School has been at Wandsworth.

"That, a sum not exceeding twenty-five thousand pounds (£25,000) be expended out of the Funds of the Institution in the purchase of Land, and the erection of a suitable School-House and buildings, to educate and support two hundred children, and to be so arranged that in the event of the existing School being removed, space be found for extending the same, so as to contain all the Children under one roof.

"In the event of my proposition being carried: That a Sub-Committee be formed out of the General Committee to carry out the details, and complete the same.

Pursuant to the recommendation of the General Committee:

By JOHN A. RUCKER, ESQ., P.G.D., Vice-Patron.

"That in the opinion of this General Court it is advisable that arrangements be made for the admission of an increase in number of children to the benefits of the Institution.

"That a Sub-Committee, consisting of nine Members, of whom not less than Four shall be Members of the House Committee, together with the Treasurer and Trustees of the Institution, be appointed, three to form a quorum, to consider and report to the General Court on the arrangements to be made for the admission of from thirty to fifty more Children to the benefits of the Institution; that in case of need a Special General Court be summoned to receive such report, and that such report be read for information at any House Committee, or General Committee, that may meet between the completion of the report and the meeting of the (Quarterly or Special) General Court.

By RAYNHAM W. STEWART, ESQ., P.G.D., Vice-President.

"That in view of the large expenditure involved by Bro. Joshua Nunn's motion, a more desirable mode of proceeding under existing circumstances is: That the new Infirmary be utilised for the purpose of educating an increased number of younger Children with a separate Superintending Governess and staff.

"That in lieu of the present Infirmary, a house of a proper size be rented and properly furnished for the reception of invalid Children.

"In the event of the foregoing motions being carried: That it be moved that the whole of the approved Candidates be at once admitted."

"To move for a Committee to enquire as to the cause of the Head Governess's (Miss Moss) resignation, and also as to the legality of the appointment of Miss Davis as Head Governess.

R. WENTWORTH LITTLE (Prov. S.G. Warden Middlesex), Secretary.

FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE

67 BARBICAN, E.C.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THE Queen returned to Balmoral on Wednesday, from her visit to the Duke and Duchess of Argyll. She was favoured, for the most part, with excellent weather, with what, in fact, is commonly known as Queen's weather, and appears to have been well pleased with the reception accorded to her. On Friday last, their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales with their family left Marlborough House for their Norfolk residence, Sandringham, where they will remain, we presume, till the Prince starts for India. In connection with this visit we have to note that the Serapis, which is to convey his Royal Highness from Venice, has already started, while preparations for his reception at Bombay, Calcutta, and other cities, where it is proposed he should make anything of a stay, are being pushed forward. In fact, it is no exaggeration to say that all India is on the tiptoe of expectation to receive the eldest son and heir of the Empress who sways her destinies. The Duke of Connaught has returned to England after a somewhat lengthened continental tour; Prince Leopold has been visiting the West of Scotland, as the guest of Colonel Campbell, and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh have returned from their visit to St. Petersburg.

The inquiry into the loss of the Vanguard has terminated. The court have strongly censured Captain Dawkins and those of his subordinate officers whose conduct was the subject of inquiry, and the sentence as regards the Captain is, that he be severely reprimanded and dismissed his ship, while as regards the others, Commander Tandy and Navigating Lieutenant Thomas are severely reprimanded, and Mr. R. Brown, chief engineer, and Mr. D. Tiddy, carpenter, reprimanded. The main grounds on which the court found this sentence are, first, the high rate of speed at which the squadron was proceeding whilst in a fog; the unnecessary reduction of speed by Captain Dawkins without orders from the Vice Admiral, and without signalling properly to the Iron Duke; the increased speed of the latter vessel; the Iron Duke improperly steering out of line, and the want of fog signals on board of that vessel. They are further of opinion that the foundering of the vessel might have been delayed, if not averted altogether, had more energetic measures been taken by Captain Dawkins. As to the latter expression of opinion we are not in a position to offer any suggestion; but it occurs to us that, as regards the earlier portion of the finding, in the first place, there is something contradictory; and in the second, the majority of the reasons affect not Captain Dawkins, but others. Thus, Captain Dawkins is not responsible for the speed at which the squadron was moving, nor is he to blame that the Iron Duke sheered out of the line or increased its speed; while, as regards the too high rate of speed, the Captain exercised a wise discretion in reducing his rate. Had he not done so, he would probably have run down the Norwegian barque, of which, by the way, no notice appears to have been taken.

As to matters Civic, we note that the new Sheriffs, Mr. Alderman Knight and Mr. Breffit, were sworn in on Tuesday at the Guildhall with the usual ceremonies, as also were the new made sheriffs, Messrs. Baylis and Crawford. The occasion was signalised by the revival of a procession—a custom that has been in disuse for nearly twenty years—and the procession, a kind of Lord Mayor's show in miniature, was most cordially received as it wended its way to Guildhall. After the ceremony was over, the procession was reformed, and on reaching the Albion, the company adjourned to a most recherché banquet. On Wednesday, being Michaelmas Day, a successor to Lord Mayor Stone was elected to fill the Civic chair during the year 1875-6. The election fell on Mr. Alderman Cotton, one of the Parliamentary representatives for the City, who was next on the roll of Aldermen. Mr. Jones, as usual, distinguished himself by putting sundry questions to Alderman Cotton, whose answers may be taken to have been eminently satisfactory. The Lord Mayor, who presided, was honoured with the usual vote of thanks for his great services during the term of his Mayoralty. This is never a mere formal expression of opinion on the part of the Common Council, and less so than ever in the instance before us, for few Lord Mayors have been more popular than our respected Grand Junior Warden.

We print in another part of our columns, an extract from the Standard, containing the gist of the answer given by the Masonic Convention, at Lausanne, now in session, to the attacks recently made on us by the Pope and his emissaries. We need offer no remarks on the clearness and precision, as well as the singular force of this reply; its value will be best understood when we take notice of the outcry which it has raised among the various organs of the Roman Catholic press in France. Thus, the Pays insists that Freemasonry "dabbles in politics,—and very unwholesome politics too." It does not see why the Government tolerates it, and it describes its faith as mere "humanitarian humbug." We have survived a good many onslaughts, and we have little doubt we are strong enough to survive a good many more. As for the miserable attack of the Pays, we look at it much in the same light as the great big navvy did at the blows of his pigmy wife. They did him no harm, while they pleased her.

The Revenue for the half-year ended on the 30th ult. must be looked upon as very satisfactory. No great increase was expected; but the budget estimate seems to stand a very fair chance not only of being realized, but leaving also a fairly respectable surplus over and above what the Chancellor of the Exchequer anticipated. Apart from all political views, the prospect is highly gratifying.

In the fashionable world an event worth recording was solemnised on Thursday. This was nothing less than the marriage of Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P. for Whitby, the eldest son of the ex-Premier Mr. W. E. Gladstone. The bride was the Hon. Gertrude Stuart, youngest daughter of Lord Blantyre. The marriage was celebrated at St. George's, Hanover-square, but owing to the recent death of an uncle of the bridegroom, only the nearest relatives and friends of the two families were present. After the breakfast, which was at Lord Blantyre's house, in Berkeley Square, the happy pair left for Cliveden to pass the honeymoon.

According to a paragraph in the Lancet, the street purveyors of ice creams take as much as seven or eight shillings a day, but our contemporary has no very high opinion of the quality of the creams sold. It points out that if the creams were not iced, those who indulge in them would reject the stuff of which they are composed with absolute scorn. It adds that people should avoid these luxuries. It is perilous to introduce a frigid mass into the stomach, and still more perilous when the mass is composed of highly objectional matter. The Lancet suggests either that the sale of these ices should be discontinued, or that a better quality of material should be purveyed.

The directors of the Alexandra Palace have provided, this week, two Exhibitions of a somewhat novel character. The first was held on Wednesday and Thursday, and proved a very interesting International Potato Show. There was a considerable number of exhibitors, and the quality of the fruit merits the highest commendation. Some specimens, both kidney and round potatoes, were simply magnificent, and we confess we should have liked there and then to have tested the merits of a "murphy" or two. Yesterday, was held a cab show, over £200 being awarded in prizes for new kinds of cabs, the best appointed cabs in use, and to cabmen possessing well-established characters for honesty and ability in their calling. It will be somewhat of a novelty to read of a prize cabby. We imagine the man who attains to this pinnacle of good fortune will get considerably chaffed by his fellows, and that will be no light ordeal to endure. We shall give the results of the show next week.

We are happy in being able to place before our readers a full account of the meeting held on Thursday, at Great Grimsby, of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons. We may be pardoned if we take some little credit to ourselves for being able to place this report before our readers thus early. However, we hold to this very sensible maxim—that stale news is no news, and we shall always make a point of being as soon in the field as possible.

There have been one or two more railway accidents inclining to the more rather than to the less serious. In one of them the cause was a runaway train, which went bang into a passenger train. A slight misfortune also has befallen the twin ship Castalia, in its passage from Calais on Tuesday. The weather was so very rough that one of the paddle-wheels was disabled and four floats broken. This, of course, will necessitate cessation from running for a brief time.

Among our advertisements will be noticed one in connection with the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, whose next Quarterly General Court is fixed for next Saturday. Our readers will notice that sundry propositions, all bearing upon the same important question will be brought forward. The object is to enlarge the scope of the Institution, which from the fact of its being now enclosed by other buildings, is now necessarily limited in its accommodation. The first motion on the agenda paper is by Bro. Joshua Nunn, who will move that a sum of five-and-twenty thousand pounds be expended out of the Funds of the Institution in the purchase of land and the erection of school premises, so as to accommodate two hundred children, care being taken that, if the present school be removed, the new buildings may be extended so as to contain all the children under one roof. Bro. Rucker proposes the appointment of a sub-committee to inquire into and report upon the best means of providing additional accommodation for thirty or forty more children; while the third proposal is that the present infirmary be utilised for the accommodation of additional children, a suitable house being rented and furnished for the reception of the invalids. These motions are satisfactory proof of the growing interest which the Craft generally is taking in our several institutions. Whichever of the propositions is carried, the end in view is the same—namely, provision for an increased number of girls, and, we doubt not, a means will be found to secure this desirable end. We see no reason why the Masonic Girls' School should not follow the example of other large metropolitan schools, and seek a new field, at some little distance from town, where land being cheaper, larger premises could be had for far less a sum than in London. There would also be greater space obtained for recreation, while communication with head-quarters would be as easy under the new as under existing arrangements. Whatever is done, the scheme for the enlargement of the School will have our best wishes.

Blackburn has just been in all the feverish excitement of a Parliamentary Election. One of its two representatives, Mr. Fielden, died a short time since, and at first it seemed as though the election of Mr. Thwaites, or, at all events, of the Conservative candidate, would have passed unchallenged; but Mr. Hibbert, who held a subordinate post in Mr. Gladstone's Ministry, was induced to come forward in the Liberal interest. However, victory declared decisively for Mr. Thwaites, who headed his opponent by nearly a thousand votes.

Generally speaking there is a dearth of home news. We are, indeed, in a kind of transition state. The holidays are about over, yet serious work has hardly recommenced. A few weeks, however, will set things right. We are beginning to think of the Lord Mayor's show, November fogs, buying presents and Christmas pudding, and when this is the case, we know we are in for work.

It is not often we hear of a female cab-driver. However, on the 30th ult., a cab proprietor of Surbiton was summoned before the Kingston-on-Thames magistrates for having, some days previously, unlawfully interfered with one Mrs. Maria Denman, also a cab proprietor, and holding a driver's license, and hindered her from taking up a fare. It was proved in the evidence that the defendant had used language to the detriment of the complainant at the moment a lady was stepping into the latter's cab, he advising the lady that the horse could not draw, or the complainant drive. The case was proved, and the magistrate fined the defendant £1 7s 6d, including costs, or fourteen days' imprisonment, the chairman stating that his conduct was most ungenerous and unmanly, and that if such conduct were repeated, the full penalty would be imposed.

Foreign news is not very cheerful. From Paris we learn that the Count de Molin, the Spanish Ambassador, had a very narrow escape a day or two since. A car ran into his carriage, in the Champs Elysées, and badly damaged it, but fortunately the Count and his son escaped with only a few bruises. The military manœuvres at Vernon appear to have been admirably conducted, and all the foreign officers who were present bear willing testimony to the skill and ability of the rival generals, and the good form and endurance of the troops. So far there is nothing of any very serious moment. But from Spain, we hear nothing very satisfactory. We hope and trust this miserable Carlist war will soon come to an end, and as there seems to be little doubt that the Carlists are being thoroughly worsted, we hope some Convenio will be arranged, and Spain again enjoy the blessings of peace. We say not this in the interest of the Alphonsists, for, in our opinion, it matters not a brass farthing, as the saying is, whether Don Carlos or Don Alfonso reigns. But patriotism must suggest to the former that a struggle, once it is shown to be hopeless, ought not to be maintained a moment longer. Unhappily, this is not the only trouble in store for this unhappy country. The Papal Nuncio has been issuing a circular, and, as other Papal Nuncios have done before, has been showing the utmost contempt for the government of the young King. If there is a spark of courage in the advisers of Alphonso, the Papal Nuncio will be politely escorted over the border. Yet the Pope talks of the interference in politics of Freemasons. As to the Eastern question, there is good reason for the disquiet that prevails about the insurrections in Bosnia and Herzegovina. It is, we think, a good thing both for Servia herself and the peace of Europe generally, that the Skupschina has voted a reply in accordance with the address from Milan. This, at all events, confines the sphere of operations to the present limits. So far satisfactory, but we still read of so-called insurgent victories, of mutilated Turks, and refugees over the border. Turkey seems showing a considerable amount of energy, and will, doubtless, stamp out the insurrection at an early date. Yet there will have to be some reforms, which we hope that Turkey, once victorious, will be magnanimous enough to grant to all her subjects. As to the visit of Emperor William to Italy, that, we hear, is fixed for about the 15th or 17th of this month.

On Wednesday, at the Town Hall, Maidstone, a life-size portrait, painted by Mr. Sant, R.A., was presented to Mr. J. Monckton, who had been town clerk for 37 years. The presentation was made by the Mayor, H. Hughes, Esq., and it was requested the portrait should hang up in the Town Hall, as a remembrance of the respect in which the original was held. We may add that Mr. Monckton is the father of Bro. J. B. Monckton, President of the Board of General Purposes, and Town Clerk of the City of London.

The Albert Assurance Arbitration having come to an end, Bro. Thomas Preston (Great City Lodge, 1426), the Secretary of the Arbitration, has received a testimonial from the solicitors who were engaged in the business, addressed to Lord Cairns, the Arbitrator, in which they say:—

"We, the undersigned, having had opportunities of judging, beg leave to express to your Lordship our satisfaction at the way in which Mr. Thomas Preston has discharged the duties of the office of Secretary of the Albert Life Assurance Company Arbitration, in relation to the legal practitioners concerned.

The magnitude, intricacy, and novelty of the work demanded special qualifications, and Mr. Preston has proved himself in all respects equal to the occasion, and we beg leave respectfully to submit this to your Lordship as a testimonial to him."

This testimonial was returned to Bro. Preston, with a letter from the Lord Chancellor's principal secretary, in which he says:—

"The Lord Chancellor directs me to say that it has given him much pleasure to note such a recognition of your services as Secretary of the Arbitration, and that he is himself fully cognizant of the diligence and intelligence with which you have discharged the duties of that office."

Morning and afternoon swimming fêtes have taken place at Brills Baths, Brighton, under the special patronage of the Mayor, Bro. Sir Cordy Burrows, and Sir John Bennett. Mr. Giles, the swimming master, distinguished himself by his masterly performances. Mr. H. Smith, an old professional swimmer (nearly 70 years of age), walked into the water in his ordinary clothing, undressed himself, and showed various modes of swimming, concluding by imitating a drowning man; Mr. Giles undertook the task of rescue, and dived from the railing of the top balcony. Mr. Hutton exhibited on the trapeze, while Mr. Attwood, in an illuminated tank, showed some wonderful feats of natation. An aquatic quadrille was performed by Misses H. E. Dick, and H. Saigeman (who had previously swam from Shoreham to Brighton), and Messrs. G. Rowell and H. Evans. Youths' races and other competitions followed, and the crowded audience thoroughly enjoyed the display. During the evening, at the Aquarium, Bro. Sir John Bennett (who came from London specially to present the prizes) made a very humourous speech. Great credit is due to Mr. Dyer, the Secretary of the company, for the admirable arrangements. Bro. Thos. Hadley Prestage, V.P.S.C., acted as starter, whilst Bro. Devin's band played some excellent music during the performances.

Mr. Coleman's benefit, postponed from June, will take place at the Gaiety Theatre on Saturday morning, 6th November. The School for Scandal will be represented, with Miss Fowler as Lady Teazle, her first appearance in that character. Mr. Phelps will give her his support, as Sir Peter Teazle. Mr. Henry Neville and Mr. Creswick will also appear respectively as Charles and Joseph Surface.

We gather from the Standard that "the Freemasons assembled in 'Convent' at Lausanne have thought proper to reply to the attacks and insults levelled against them, chiefly by the Pope and the organs of the Papacy in France, by the publication of a declaration of principles. Subjoined is the text of this curious document:—

'Freemasonry proclaims, as it has already proclaimed from the time of its origin, 'the existence of a creative principle under the name of Great Architect of the Universe. It places no limits to the research of truth, and it is in order to guarantee that liberty to all that it enacts from all toleration. In its workshops it prohibits all political and religious discussion; it receives all the profane, whatever be their religious or political opinions, which are things that do not concern it, provided they should be free and their morality good. The object of Freemasonry is to fight intolerance in every shape; it is a mutual school whose programme may be thus summed up: 'To obey the laws of one's country; live in conformity with the precepts of honour; love one's neighbours; work incessantly to promote the happiness of mankind, and prosecute its progressive and peaceful emancipation.' These are the rules Freemasonry adopts, and the adoption of which it imposes upon those who wish to belong to the Masonic family. But simultaneously with this declaration of principles, the Convent deems it necessary to proclaim the truths and doctrines on which Masonry is founded; it desires that every man should know them. To raise man in his own eyes, to render him worthy of his mission upon earth, Masonry lays down the principle that the Creator has given him liberty as the most precious of all blessings—liberty, the patrimony of the whole of mankind, a ray from above which no power has the right to diminish or suppress, and which is the source of all feelings of honour and dignity. From the preparation for the first degree to the attainment of the highest degree in Scotch Masonry the first condition, without which nothing is granted to the claimant, is an unblemished reputation for honour and honesty. To these men, for whom religion is a supreme consolation, Masonry says:—'Practice your religion without let or hindrance; follow the dictates of your conscience.' Freemasonry is not a religion; it has no form of worship; therefore it wishes for the establishment of lay education, and its doctrine may be summed up in the beautiful tenet—love thy neighbour. To those who dread with so much reason political dissensions. Freemasonry says—'I banish all discussions from my meetings; be for thy country a faithful and devoted servant; thou hast no account to render us.' The love of country, moreover, accords with the practice of all virtues. Masonry has been charged with immorality! Our morality is the purest morality, the holiest morality! It is based on the first of all virtues—humanity. The real Mason does good; he extends his benevolence to all the unfortunate without distinction, within the limit of his means; he therefore rejects immorality with disgust and contempt. Such are the foundations on which Freemasonry is built up, and which secure among all members of that great family the closest union, whatever be the distance that separates the various countries they dwell in; fraternal love reigns among them. What can better prove that truth than the meeting of our Convent, unknown to each other, coming from widely different countries? Hardly had we exchanged the first words of welcome when the most intimate union prevailed between us; hands were fraternally grasped, and it was in the midst of the most touching concord that our most important resolutions were passed with unanimous assent. Freemasons of all countries, citizens of all nations, such are the precepts, such are the laws of Freemasonry, such are its mysteries! Against it the effects of calumny will remain unavailing, and insults without echo; marching peacefully from victory to victory, Freemasonry will extend each day its civilising and moral influence over the world.'"

On Tuesday evening Mr. Denzil Onslow, M.P., at a special Lodge of Emergency of the Royal Alfred Lodge, was initiated into the Order. A numerous and influential assemblage of the brethren took place on the occasion.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF SUSSEX.

THE annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Sussex, was held in the Music-room, at the Royal Pavilion, Brighton, on Thursday afternoon. Bro. E. J. Farmer P.G.D. Deputy Prov. G.M. presided, and there were about 130 members present. Two o'clock was the time fixed for the commencement of the proceedings, but it was nearly three before the meeting began. The first business on the agenda was to receive a letter from Lord Pelham Prov. G.M. requesting Bro. Farmer Dep. Prov. G.M. to transact the entire business of the province in his stead and during his pleasure. The letter was read, and the Dep. Prov. G.M. explained that the Prov. G.M. was led to make this request in consequence of continued indisposition. The letter was ordered to be recorded in the minute book. Bro. C. J. Smith, of Cliftonville, moved that the letter should be re-considered. He thought that the long continued illness of the Prov. G.M. was one reason why he should resign the reins of office to the man upon whom its labours really devolved. His proposition, was, however, ruled out of order. A letter respecting the funeral of the late Bro. Pocock having been read, the Acting Prov. G.M. proposed the following resolution:—"It is with feelings of deep regret that the members of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Sussex record in their Minute Book the decease of Bro. Gavin Elliott Pocock, which took place on the first day of the present year. His untiring exertions during the twenty years of his Provincial Grand Secretaryship were duly acknowledged by a unanimous vote of thanks at the annual meeting, two years ago, and the high estimation in which he was held by his Masonic brethren was evinced by the testimonial which was presented to him last year; so that it is unnecessary now to dilate upon his worth. The melancholy duty, however, of formally declaring the loss Freemasonry has sustained by the removal from its ranks of so distinguished and so devoted a brother still remains, and, therefore, the members of this Provincial Grand Lodge resolve to place on their minutes this record of their sorrow at the death of Bro. Pocock; and further, in order to perpetuate the recollection of the high regard in which he was held by them, and in recognition of the great services he rendered to Freemasonry, both as regards its ceremonies and its charities, they vote from the funds of this Provincial Grand Lodge the sum of fifty guineas to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, to be registered in the books of that Institution as the 'Pocock Memorial,' the privileges of this donation to be exercised in perpetuity by the Provincial Grand Master for the time being." Bro. S. R. Ade proposed that the word "Deputy" before the term "Prov. Grand Master," be retained in the last clause of the resolution, but subsequently withdrew his proposition, and the resolution was agreed to in its original form. The report of the Finance Committee was presented, and ordered to be entered on the minutes. Bro. G. Tatham was re-elected Pro Grand Treasurer; and the following Prov. Grand Officers were appointed and invested:—Bro. E. J. Farmer Deputy Prov. G.M. acting as Prov. G.M., Bro. J. Cunningham as Dep. Prov. G.M., Bro. W. H. Hallett Prov. G.S.W., Bro. L. J. Brigden Prov. G.J.W., Bro. C. A. Woolley Prov. G. Registrar, Bro. J. H. Scott Prov. Secretary, Bro. W. H. German Prov. G.S.D., Bro. J. Dorman Prov. G.J.D., Bro. J. O'Brien Prov. G. Chaplain, Bro. J. Dixon Prov. G.D. of C., Bro. R. Fidcock Prov. G.A.D. of C., Bro. J. M. Reed Prov. G. Sup. of W., Bro. C. Walker Prov. G. S. B., Bro. Boutcck Prov. G. Purst., and Bros. W. Smith, J. Eberall, Crunch, and W. Read Prov. G. Stewards. Bro. Trollope P. Prov. G.J. Warden, proposed the following motion, of which he had given notice:—"That Bro. John H. Scott and Bro. V. P. Freeman, the brethren appointed to act as Stewards for the Province of Sussex on the occasion of the installation of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as M.W.G.M., be presented from the funds of this Prov. Grand Lodge with the jewel, struck by order of Grand Lodge, to be worn only by those who acted as Stewards on that memorable day." The resolution was unanimously agreed to, the Prov. Grand Secretary following it up with a few appropriate remarks. There was no ordinary business to be transacted. The Lodge was closed in proper form and with solemn prayer. It was followed by a banquet, served by Messrs. Mutton Brothers, King's-road, Brighton, in the Banqueting-room, in their best style, about one hundred brethren partaking of it.

Strong Man Lodge of Instruction, No. 45.—This Lodge held its regular weekly meeting on Monday, the 27th ult., at the St. John's Gate Tavern, Clerkenwell, Bro. Walker in the chair, Lake S.W., Stock J.W., Piercy S.D., Read J.W., Cooke I.G., and a numerous attendance of members. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes were read and confirmed. The ceremony of raising was rehearsed, Bro. Jones being the candidate. A long discussion took place upon the bye-laws, which it had been decided should be revised. The S.W. of the evening, Bro. Lake, was unanimously elected W.M. for the ensuing week. After a vote of thanks to Bro. Walker, for his efficient services as W.M., the Lodge adjourned. The installation ceremony will be rehearsed on Monday next, the 4th instant.

Cathedral Chapter, No. 67.—This Chapter held its annual meeting on Thursday, 23rd of September, at 22 Struthers-street, Glasgow, when the following officers were elected:—Comps. James Duthie M.E.Z. (3rd year), Pridie H., Ronald J., Goldie Scribe E., J. Mason Scribe N., Wood re-elected Treasurer, Binland 1st Soj., Sloan 2nd Soj., Dickie 3rd Soj., R. Crawford Tyler. A meeting was also held on Tuesday, 28th September. Business—The exaltation of two Companions, which ceremony was carefully performed by Comp. Duthie and his new staff of officers. The yearly financial statement was also read, which gave great satisfaction, as, owing to the large accession of members, the funds are in a flourishing state.

W. Wheeler re-elected M.E.Z., John Stewart H., J. Kennard J., J. Balfour re-elected Scribe E., E. Arthur Scribe N., J. Bannerman Treasurer, Wm. McGregor 1st S., J. Gillos 2nd S., T. Yule 3rd S., J. Ambridge 1st Captain of the Veils, J. Kay 2nd Captain, S. Penman 3rd Captain, Wm. Jamison Tyler. J. Balfour, P.G. 1st S., G. Macdonald P.G.S.B. Visitors—Comps. Crabb P.Z. 50, Oliver S.E. 69, Dubbie P.Z. 119, McMurdo P.Z. 143, H. J. Shield Z. 143, Barker H. 143, Bell P.Z. 144, J. Johnson H. 122, and Currie 76 (I.C.) Business—A Lodge of Mark Masters was opened, when G. W. Wheeler, as Mark Master, assisted by Comps. McDonald as S.W., Gilchrist as J.W., and Balfour as S.D., admitted Brother D. Anderson, of St. John, to that degree. The Chapter having been opened by Comps. Wheeler, McDonald and Gilchrist, the election took place, when Comp. Crabb P.Z. 50 installed the officers, and also installed H. J. Shield, the newly-elected Z. of the Robert Burns Chapter 144. After the Chapter was closed the companions spent some time in harmony.

Lodge of Lights, No. 148, Warrington.—The regular monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday evening last, when the W.M. Bro. John Bowes P.M. P.Z. P.P.G. Reg. Cumberland and Westmorland was supported by his officers, a goodly number of members, and several visitors. The Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes read and confirmed. The W.M. read a letter of apology from Bro. Dr. Joseph, who was due for preferment, but who was unable to be present. The Lodge was opened in the second degree, when Bros. Johnson and Peake sought advancement, and having sustained their claim, were entrusted and retired. The Lodge was opened in the third degree, when the two brethren were separately re-admitted, and raised by the W.M., the working tools being pre-seated and explained by the S.W., Bro. W. H. Robinson. The Lodge was closed down when the remaining business was transacted, and when finally closed the brethren adjourned to refreshment. The W.M. presided, and was supported by the I.P.M., Bro. John Harding, Bro. Tomlinson W.M. of the Good Samaritan Lodge, Sandbach, Bro. Tongue, of Crewe, and others. The West was well cared for by Bro. Joseph Pickthall S.D. After supper the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given; the visitors warmly complimenting the W.M. on the excellent working they had witnessed. After an evening pleasantly spent the Tyler proposed his toast and the brethren separated in harmony.

Thetis Chapter, No. 122.—This Chapter held its annual meeting on Monday, the 27th September, at the Masonic Hall, 25 James-street, Glasgow. Present—Comps. John J. Scott M.E.Z., John Johnston H., John de Neif J., J. Quigley Scribe E., H. McLauchlin Scribe N., J. Gunn Treasurer, Wm. McAlister 1st S., Wm. Gunns 2nd S., George Bird 3rd S., Daniel Gillies Tyler. Ranald as J. of Chapter 67. The companions then passed a vote of thanks to the retiring officers, especially to Comp. J. O. Park, who had filled the chair of Z. since the formation of the Chapter.

Perseverance Royal Arch Chapter, No. 152, Leith.—This Chapter celebrated its autumnal equinox festival on Thursday evening, 23rd September, previous to which Bro. James A. Laurie was exalted to the Holy Royal Arch Degree. Comps. James G. Atkinson, R. Davidson, William, J. V. Bindon and P. Law were affiliated full members of the Chapter. Scribe E. read the minutes of former meetings, which were confirmed, the Chapter then proceeded to elect and install their office bearers for 1875-76. The officers in the Mark Masters and Excellent Masters' Lodges being installed, the following were elected in the Chapter:—Comp. John Laurie Z. (re-elected), Comps. G. Hudson H., D. Turner J., John S. Matheson P.Z., M. P. Galloway D.Z., David Laird Scribe E., John Neill Scribe N., E. Drummond Treas., E. Milner 1st Soj., J. W. Scales 2nd Soj., G. A. Laurie 3rd Soj., J. Reid C., G. M. Davidson D.M., G. J. Laurie Org., T. Elliott S., Alexander Henderson Janitor. The companions then sat down to an excellent supper, purveyed by Comp. Elliott, the viands being all that could be desired. Comp. Laurie Z. occupied the chair, Comp. Drummond Croupier. The usual loyal, patriotic, and complimentary toasts were duly given and responded to, they being interspersed with songs, and instrumental music under the direction of Comp. G. M. Davidson; several excellent glees being rendered by the choir, thus bringing to a close a most enjoyable evening. This young Chapter, which was consecrated last year by the Earl of Mar and Kellie, now boasts of having upward of sixty members on its roll. The paraphernalia and working tools of this Chapter are handsomely got up, and their working is second to none in the province, which is greatly due to the assiduity and energy of the First Principal and hearty co-operation of his office bearers.

Industry Lodge, No. 186.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Tuesday, the 28th ult., at Bro. Cole, the Westminster Palace Restaurant, Bros. Wyllie W.M. in the chair, Dyer S.W., W. Mann P.M. Secretary, Hook Organist as I.G.; and P.M.'s T. S. Mortlock, Tallent, W. Dehmer, Seex; and Bros. Grant, Mitchell, Dr. White, Cole, Robinson, Downey, &c. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes were confirmed. Bro. Godden was raised to the 3rd degree. Bros. Taffs and Crews were passed to the 2nd degree. Several notices of motion were handed in, and a special vote of the Lodge was unanimously carried to present, from the funds of the Lodge, the sum of five guineas for the Installation Jewel. The Lodge was then closed, and a very capital banquet was provided by Bro. Cole. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, also the routine toasts. Bros. Wallbank P.M. 144, Cox, Benit, &c. were present as visitors.

Lodge of Mona, No. 212, Castledown, Isle of Man (I.C.)—Happening to be on a visit near the metropolis of "Ellan Vannin," we received a courteous invitation to "visit" the above Lodge on the occasion of its last meeting, Monday, 20th September, and were much pleased with what we saw and heard. The chair was occupied by the W.M. Bro. the Rev. R. Ferrier, M.A., Government Chaplain of the Island, Bro. John Bowes, W.M. 148, was honoured by being requested to take charge of the West, while Bro. M. J. Backwell occupied the Junior Warden's chair. Among the other brethren present were Bros. James Mylchreest P.M. acting Organist, R. Watterson P.M., Dr. Edwards, George Quayle Hon. Sec., H. S. Mylchreest I.G., Cloona J.D., and others whose names we do not remember. The Lodge was opened in due form. The minutes were then read and declared to be correctly recorded, and by them we learned that the Lodge had forwarded, through the governor of the island, the Hon. H. R. Loch, himself a member of our brotherhood, an address of congratulation to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales as M.W. Grand Master of English Freemasons. The ballot was then taken for Mr. Paterson, a candidate for our mysteries and privileges, which proving "clear," and that gentleman being present, he was duly initiated by Bro. Past Master James Mylchreest. On the conclusion of the ceremony, the chair was again assumed by Bro. Ferrier, who read a telegram just received from a gallant Colonel, who intended to be present to claim preferment, but who was unexpectedly detained at Douglas. After some routine business a vote of thanks was accorded to Bro. J. Bowes, and a request that on the occasion of his next visit he would meet the members at a Lodge of Instruction. There being no further business, the Lodge was closed in solemn form. The brethren then adjourned to light refreshments, and all separated in perfect harmony. We cannot close this report without giving expression to the pleasure our visit to the Lodge of Mona afforded us. We have attended many Lodges, but never saw one better worked. Our brethren in the Isle of Man, however, labour under one disadvantage—they have no Provincial Grand Lodge—and we suppose this arises from the fact that the Lodges hail under two Grand Lodges—England and Ireland. If all the Lodges could be placed under one jurisdiction, and the Lieut.-Governor be constituted Provincial Grand Master, it would add to the progress of Masonry, and the advancement of its members. We noticed that one of the bye-laws of the Lodge of Mona wisely provides "That all officers quartered at Castletown, who are Masons, shall be deemed honorary members during their stay."

Burdett Coutts Lodge of Instruction, No. 1278.—On the 24th ult. the 15 sections were worked by Bro. M. Gross. The S.W. and J.W. chairs were occupied by Bro. Austin P.M. and Bro. Stevens P.M., of the Great City Lodge. The following brethren answered the questions: Bros. Horsley, Ashburner, Chitson, Allen, Yetton, Fieldwick, Pindar, Crane, Stevens, Verry, Austin, Gilchrist, Musto, Burr and Lowe. There was a strong muster of P.M.'s and brethren from other Lodges, proving practically that P.M.'s have not forgotten they owe a duty to the Craft, and that the brethren in the lesser degrees require their instruction. A vote of thanks to Bro. Gross, for his efficiency in the chair, was moved by Bro. Yetton, also that he be elected an honorary member of the Lodge; Bro. Yetton remarking that he had never heard the sections better worked. It was seconded by Bro. Verry, who said this proved what could be done if a brother applied himself diligently to the work. He himself gave Bro. Gross his first lesson in Freemasonry some three years ago. The motion was carried unanimously. The brethren then retired, having spent an enjoyable and instructive evening.

Stanley Lodge, No. 1325.—This Lodge held its regular meeting on Tuesday, the 21st of September, at the Masonic Hall, Kirkdale, Liverpool. Present—Bros. Henry Ashmore W.M., J. Bryan S.W., J. W. Burgess J.W., C. Hodson as Secretary, C. Hodson Treasurer, J. W. Davis S.D., J. H. Bradshaw J.D., C. Leighton P.M. D.C., A. Samuels Steward, G. D. Gilbert I.G., P. Larson Tyler. Visitors—Bros. Jones P.M., Hayes P.M., Seddon, Armstrong, Smith and Bryant. Business—Lodge opened in due form by H. Ashmore W.M., who initiated Mr. David T. Dick and Mr. H. Braddock. Opened in the second degree, passed Bros. Ashton, Burgess, Winskill, Macnally, McConnell, Ewing, Foulkes, Thomas, Hughes, Armstrong, Quale, and Marshall. The Lodge was then closed, and the officers, visitors and brethren adjourned to an excellent supper, provided by Bro. Casey. The usual Masonic toasts were drunk, and the evening was enlivened by a few choice songs, &c.

Gladsmuir Lodge, No. 1385.—This Lodge held its first meeting of the season on Friday, the 24th of September, at the Red Lion Hotel, Barnet. Present—Bro. Hayward Edwards W.M., James Cubbush S.W., Dr. Livingston J.W., G. Askew Secretary, W. Cubbush P.M. Treasurer, R. F. Young S.D., F. Venables J.D., Gray as I.G., Goddard Tyler. Past Master Bro. John Lowthin, Prov. S.W. Herts, and a goodly attendance of brethren. Business—The minutes of last meeting were read, and duly confirmed. Bro. W. Fred. Taunton having answered the usual questions, was passed to the degree of F.C. After some routine business the Lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

THE DRAMA.

"Macbeth" at the Lyceum—"Self" at the Mirror.

IT may be as well to say at once that we consider the performance of "Macbeth" at the Lyceum to have been a distinct failure. Probably not one of Mr. Irving's friends expected any other result. Whilst wishing him the most thorough success, they must have felt that they were really hoping against hope, and that it was impossible for a man of his physical powers to play the part in such a way as to satisfy audiences accustomed to most robust renderings of the character. We shall not attempt to lay any blame for the non-success of the play on Mr. Irving's shoulders, it was not, we are sure, out of any vanity or self-conceit that he attempted the part of Macbeth. From the time when he played Bob Gassitt at the Queen's, Mr. Irving has worked heartily and conscientiously in the cause of dramatic art, and his present prominence on the stage is owing to no self-obtrusion, but is the recognition due to one whose genius is an ornament to the national drama. It is impossible in the limited space allotted to us to enter into any detailed criticism of Mr. Irving's rendering of Macbeth: we have already indicated the cause of its failure, and we must also say that, in common with his Hamlet, it "smells too much of the lamp." The spontaneous passion which we admired so much in "The Bells," is wanting here: everything is done as with an effort, and much as we may wonder at the hard work and self-sacrifice of the artist, we cannot help feeling that in watching his exertions our attention is diverted from the play. Many new points are made by Mr. Irving, and he gives us a fresh version of the character: but whilst we thank him for the scholarly care which he has lavished on the production of the play, we must say that a little less care, and a great deal more vigour would have produced a more satisfactory result. Much interest was felt in Miss Bateman's performance of Lady Macbeth; and, again, we have to express our disappointment: her acting is very uneven at times, but very rarely rising to the level of the character, generally much too tame and subdued: the sleep-walking scene, usually the most effective in the play, falls flat and dead from her hands. Apparently following the lead of Mr. Irving, her acting, and especially recollecting her Leah, seems very spiritless. In other respects the cast of the play is fairly up to the usual mark, and we may mention for special praise the Macduff of Mr. Swinbourne, and the Witches, well played by Mr. Mead, Mr. Archer and Mrs. Huntley. The appointments and scenery are good and appropriate, and the usual stage business, although a little too noisy, is done unusually well. The production of the play does credit to a management already famous in the theatrical history of the present day: we can only regret that, from uncontrollable causes, the enterprise displayed is not likely to meet its just reward.

We return to a failure of a very different kind. "Self" is just the kind of drama which deserves to fail, and we feel no compunction in hastening it to its doom. M. Sardou's works do not as a rule bear translation well: in the process of boiling down they lose their flavour, of which "Self" had little to begin with. The story is a most unhealthy one: a man afflicted with an attendant demon is not a pleasant personage anywhere, nor is it attractive to see him portrayed on the stage. The principal actor in "Self" bears a burden of this kind. Arthur Carew, finding himself driven into all kinds of vicious courses and naughty actions by his familiar, conceives the idea that, by marrying an innocent girl, Florence Talbot, he may rescue himself from his unwelcome companion. Out of pity, perhaps, she consents to marry him, but as the demon is, as might be expected, worse after marriage than before, she is finally reduced to the expedient of burning the house down, with herself and her husband in it. Luckily for himself and mankind generally, he dies on the occasion, and on his death his attendant demon is pictured on the wall, bearing his own image, and thus explaining the title of the play. "Self" is only noticeable for the much improved acting of Miss Rose Coghlan, as Florence Talbot, which on several occasions saved the play from impending ruin. It would be unfair to condemn Mr. Allerton as a bad actor, merely from the chances afforded to him as Arthur Carew. The Polytechnic effects, rendered necessary for the due appearance of the demon, would have upset any actor, as they proved too much for the equanimity of a long forbearing audience. "Self" is followed by a burlesque on Auber's "Diamons de la Couronne," written by Mr. Reece. Well played by Mr. Atkins, Mr. Standing and Miss Brabant, well written and full of fun, the burlesque is sure to run.

ACTUARY AND MANAGER—John Messent, F.I.A.

Offices—439 Strand, London.

The primary object of this Company is the creation of a New Series of the BRITON MEDICAL and GENERAL LIFE ASSOCIATION upon a perfectly independent basis, and entirely free from any of the existing liabilities or engagements of the parent Institution, which, though continuing on its present basis, will devote its more immediate attention to its existing contracts and the profitable investment of its funds.

THE BRITON MEDICAL and GENERAL LIFE ASSOCIATION had on the 31st December last upwards of 26,000 existing policies, assuring the sum of £7,362,183, producing an annual income of £222,356. Its net assets amounted to £859,305, exclusive of its large uncalled capital.

It has been determined, on the highest actuarial advice, to continue this large business as an independent First Series, and to create a Second Series, in the form of a new Company, with a distinct capital for fresh policy-holders.

The creation of a New Series is not a novel idea. It has been adopted by some of the largest and most successful Assurance Companies, and in the present instance it can be more effectually established by means of a new Company, which, having the benefit of an existing organization of over 2,000 agencies in perfect working order, will commence operations with advantages never before enjoyed by any similar institution.

The new Company will, under special agreement, undertake the collection of the income of the old society at a fixed scale of commission, and will have the privilege of working all its well-established branches, agencies, and other valuable connections. The value of these will be best appreciated by the fact that the old association has transacted nearly, if not quite, the largest business of any kindred institution of the same age. In the ten years ended 31st December 1873, the new annual premiums amounted to an average of £31,696 per annum. Hence the prospects of the new Company are exceptionally encouraging, and offer inducements for the investment of capital seldom to be met with. It will be able at once to command a large and lucrative business without incurring the heavy outlay usually inseparable from the formation and development of similar institutions.

The Directors have caused full estimates to be made as to every point of this scheme, and have submitted the details to four actuaries of the highest eminence, viz., Mr. C. J. Bunyon, M.A., Actuary of the Norwich Union Life Insurance Society; Mr. A. H. Bailey, F.I.A., Actuary of the London Assurance Corporation; Mr. Marcus N. Adler, M.A., F.I.A., Actuary of the Alliance Insurance Company; and Mr. Arthur Pearson, F.I.A., Actuary of the Metropolitan Life Assurance Society (whose report, together with the special valuation of the Old Series Company, which has been independently checked by Dr. W. Farr, F.R.S., of the General Register Office, Somerset House, and Mr. Geo. Humphreys, M.A., of the Eagle Insurance Company, may be had on application).

Persons taking 100 shares or upwards may pay 10s on application, and 10s by two instalments of 5s each, at intervals of three months; and persons taking 500 shares or upwards may pay 5s on application, and the balance by three instalments of 5s each, at similar intervals. Share warrants payable to bearer will also be issued.

A large portion of the first issue of capital has already been taken up by the Directors and their friends, and the remainder is now offered, in the first place to the shareholders and policy-holders of the old Company, and next to the public generally, to whom the Directors confidently recommend the investment as one of an unusually promising nature.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association may be seen at the Registered Offices of the Company as above.

Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained from any of the District Managers or Agents of the Company, the Broker, or direct from the Company's Chief Office, 439 Strand, or its City Branch, 21 Cornhill.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 113 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE MASONIC LIFE BOAT ENDOWMENT FUND.

WE have been favoured by the Secretary of the National Life Boat Association with a copy of the annual report which he is in the habit of preparing for the information of Parliament, the press, and the generous public who support this admirable institution. It is a very remarkable document, and enters fully into the details of the numerous casualties which occur each year on our stormy coasts. The report ranges over the twelve months ending June 30th of the present year, thus affording the public, for the first time, the opportunity of seeing the total winter wrecks summed up in one statement. The total number of casualties for the year 1873-4 was 1,803; of this number 408 involved total loss, and 130 were attended with loss of life. The number of lives sacrificed was 506; and we are comforted by the assurance that this large number is 222 less than that of the year ending June 1873. It would seem, therefore, that Mr. Plimsoll has indirectly been the means of saving many gallant seamen from a watery grave. The noble fleet of the Life Boat Association was instrumental in saving the lives of 713 persons. This fact alone speaks volumes as to the great usefulness of the Association; and it must be our excuse for again directing the attention of our readers to the question which was discussed some months since in these columns. Our readers will remember that we then ventured to suggest that an Endowment Fund for the Masonic Life Boat should be started, and the idea was readily taken up by several Lodges. Some subscriptions reached our hands, which we still retain, pending the appointment of a committee empowered to make an authoritative appeal to the Fraternity. We shall be glad to hand this amount, which lies in the hands of our bankers, over the moment such committee is formed. We venture to think that the present moment is an opportune one, and that our brethren will rally round us for our endeavours to inaugurate a new point of departure in the history of the National Life Boat Association. We are assured, by the Secretary, that such an endowment fund as was proposed in our columns would be a real boon to the institution. No difficulty is found in providing new boats as the old ones are worn out and declared unfit for further service; but the Council of the Association is obliged to strain every nerve to raise the £30,000 or £40,000 per annum which is absolutely essential to meet the current expenses. A new Life Boat station cannot be provided at a less cost than £1,000 at the outset, including the cost of the Life Boat, transporting carriage, equipment, and boat house; and about £70 per annum is afterwards needed to keep up the establishment in a state of efficiency. The Masonic Life Boat which was presented by the Fraternity to the Association therefore entails a permanent charge of £70 per annum, which amount must, in the existing state of things, be obtained from the general public. We have no doubt whatever that our brethren would long ere this have responded to an appeal so consonant with their feelings and inclinations, but it happened that at the time when that appeal was made, a number of events of great and absorbing interest to Masons at large occurred to distract attention from a scheme of benevolence not purely Masonic. The installation of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was an event of sufficient importance to throw other matters of less apparent interest into the shade. Pressure of business, in the shape of anniversaries, has since prevented us from devoting our space to the subject of an Endowment Fund for the Life Boat; but now that the rails are clear, and as we are looking forward to the Lodge meetings of the autumn and winter, we think the time has come for the final settlement of this question. Masonic zeal in the cause of the suffering and the distressed is not confined to the mere boundaries of the Order. We credit our brethren with the desire to relieve the wretched, of whatever degree or class, and we are sure they are not indifferent to the sufferings of the gallant fellows who man our mercantile navy; nor are they careless of the claims of that noble voluntary Association which is charged with the sacred duty of saving life at sea. The season of heavy gales is rapidly approaching. Within a month we shall probably hear of dreadful casualties on our coasts, involving the loss of precious human lives. In the midst of the storms of the ensuing season it would be consoling to the members of that Order, which is based on charity and brotherly love to know that they had done all in their power to ameliorate the condition of the wretched. It is not creditable to us, as a great and wealthy corporation, to allow the Life Boat Association to incur an annual charge for the boat, which was certainly not intended to be a permanent burden to its resources. A few shillings from each Lodge in the kingdom would place her for ever above the donations of the charitable public. With the fund an accomplished fact, we should have the satisfaction of knowing that, as we have hinted above, we had done something to direct the overflowing stream of public charity into new channels. The Life Boat Association does not want for boats, but it needs capital. It will be a lasting honour to the cause of Masonry if we show the world how that capital may be realised. We urge the immediate formation of a Life Boat Endowment Fund Committee, and we need not add, in conclusion, that, in the event of its formation, we shall be glad to aid it by every means in our power, and that our columns will be open to it for the publication of subscription lists, and for the ventilation of its views in reference to the details of this most interesting question.

LODGES OF INSTRUCTION.

A SLIGHT incident, recorded in our issue of the 25th ult., offers fair ground for calling attention to the somewhat anomalous position which our Lodges of Instruction occupy. Our readers may remember that in our usual weekly report of the labours of the Confidence Lodge of Instruction, No. 193, for Wednesday, the 22nd September, it was stated that a French—it should have been a Belgian Brother—J. Pelaster, of the Lodge Les Vrais amis de l'Union et du Progrès, under the Orient of Brussels, presented himself, and having proved his acquaintance with all the essentials of the E.A.P. and F.C. degrees, declined to submit himself further for examination in the third degree, on the plea that he was not sure it was a regularly constituted Lodge, the usual regalia, &c. being conspicuous by their absence. As soon as it was made clear to Bro. Pelaster that, under these circumstances, he could not be permitted to remain—and this, it seems, was a labour of some difficulty—the worthy brother withdrew himself, amid the usual ecstatic demonstrations of mutual admiration and friendship. Thus abruptly terminated a very unusual occurrence, not likely to happen more than once in a "blue moon." Now, among English brethren, where the constitution of our Lodges of Instruction is properly understood, no difficulty of this kind is ever likely to occur, but an incident of the kind just recorded brings home to us the question—Are our Lodges of Instruction, we will not say as duly, but as formally, constituted as they might be? Is all done that can be done, in order to make them legitimate and regular, not only among the brethren of this country and our Scotch and Irish brethren, but among Masons of other countries, who are not, perhaps, well acquainted with our usages. The main ground of Bro. Pelaster's refusal was the absence of the usual warrant, without which the idea not unnaturally suggested itself to his mind, that the Confidence Lodge of Instruction was irregularly constituted. The endeavour to persuade him that all was en règle,—that the Lodge of Instruction worked under the authority of the parent Lodge, and in conformity with the laws and regulations of Grand Lodge, as laid down in the Book of Constitutions, was of no avail. Indeed, a far greater amount of eloquence than our worthy brethren of the Confidence Lodge of Instruction possessed, and a far greater familiarity with the French language would, it seems, have been necessary to persuade Bro. J. Pelaster that all was as it should be. Now the laws as to this description of Lodge are, to say the least, very bald. It is enacted (1) that "no general Lodge of Instruction shall be holden unless under the sanction of a regular warranted Lodge, or by the special licence and authority of the Grand Master. The Lodge giving its sanction, and the brethren to whom such licence is granted shall be answerable for the proceedings, and responsible that the mode of working adopted has received the sanction of the Grand Lodge. Notice of the times and places of meeting of Lodges of Instruction, within the London district, shall be given to the Grand Secretary. (2) Lodges of Instruction shall keep minutes of all brethren present at each meeting, and of brethren appointed to hold office, and such minutes shall be produced when called for by the Grand Master, the Board of General Purposes, or the Lodge granting the sanction. (3) If a Lodge which has given its sanction for a Lodge of Instruction being held under its warrant shall see fit, it may, at a regular meeting, withdraw that sanction, by a resolution of the Lodge, to be communicated to the Lodge of Instruction: provided notice of the intention to withdraw the sanction be inserted in the summons for that meeting." These are the only three points laid down by law as to Lodges of Instruction. They must be held under the sanction of a warranted Lodge, or by special licence of Grand Master. Their minutes must be produced when called for. They may be dissolved after due notice given by the sanctioning Lodge. Mackey defines them to be "assemblies of brethren congregated without a warrant of constitution, under the direction of a lecturer or skilful brother, for the purpose of improvement in Masonry," and further he says, "these bodies should consist exclusively of Master Masons; and though they possess no Masonic power, it is evident to every Mason that they are extremely useful. . . . ." Dr. Oliver, in his Masonic Jurisprudence, likewise attaches great value to these Lodges, provided a strict supervision is exercised over them. To us it seems that the law is somewhat defective, or how otherwise could such an incident as we have taken as the text of this article have happened? And, be it remembered, that, though a matter of the very rarest occurrence, yet it is quite possible that a similar case might happen again and again, and foreign brethren, seeking instruction within the body of an Instruction Lodge, who may wish to satisfy themselves of its regularity, must content themselves with a less satisfactory amount of evidence than can be furnished by a regular Lodge, or be denied the pleasure of joining in its labours. It occurs to us this is a case with which the Board of General Purposes might fairly deal, with a view to bringing it under the notice of Grand Lodge, so as to secure a more regular recognition for these Lodges. Why should not the Grand Master issue his licence in every case? There would be no great difficulty. Lodge No. 96 or No. 1096 sanctions the formation of a Lodge of Instruction; thereupon Grand Lodge issues a warrant, confirming the sanction of No. 96 or No. 1096. This warrant is placed in charge of the Instruction Lodge, so as to be producible if ever the regularity of the Lodge should be called in question. There would not be the slightest necessity for abrogating the existing laws. The sanction would still issue as now, in the first instance from a warranted Lodge, or the Grand Master, and it might be withdrawn, as now, after proper notice. There would simply be an additional guarantee from the highest Masonic authority in the Kingdom as to the legality of such Lodges. Proof, in the shape of the warrant, would be forthcoming at all times, that such a lodge was working under the sanction of Grand Lodge, and the doubts that might have arisen in the mind of any strange brother as to the regularity of its constitution would immediately be dissipated.

After all, it is mainly to our Lodges of Instruction that we must look for an extension among brethren of a knowledge of the Sacred Truths which Masonry inculcates. The regular warranted Lodges have but a short time available for this purpose, and do not often turn the available time to proper account. Their meetings, moreover, are infrequent, and, consequently, insufficient to afford the needful instruction to members. It must be borne in mind that Masonry consists in something more than the observance of certain forms and familiarity with certain signs and tokens. There is a ritual to be learnt—a ritual that must be learnt, moreover, from memory, not from the study of books. Such a ritual can only be thoroughly mastered by constant practice—in a parrot-like fashion in the first instance—but afterwards, when a brother has become letter perfect, he must be taught the meaning of it all. This, of course, can be done to a slight extent in regular Lodges, but the Lodge of Instruction is the proper theatre for study, while the regular Lodge is the place to utilise the knowledge that has been there acquired. Hence, then, everything that tends to improve and strengthen the status of the former should be done, and so small a matter as the grant by Grand Lodge of a warrant confirming the sanction given by the Mother Lodge will suffice to put every Lodge of Instruction on a securer and more regular basis. There seems to us to be no just cause or impediment why such warrant should not be issued to every Lodge of Instruction now sanctioned, or that may be sanctioned hereafter. As to expense, this need be no obstacle, for a small fee would suffice to reimburse Grand Lodge for the trouble and expense involved. Perhaps some of our readers may have given their attention to this matter, and may have some practical suggestion to offer. If so, our columns are at their disposal.

FREEMASONRY AND ARCHITECTURE.

THAT the history of Freemasonry should be found to comprise much that belongs with equal right to the history of architecture would surprise but a few; and probably fewer still would seriously question the fact when once plainly stated. We do not think, however, that the obligations of Architecture to Freemasonry have been sufficiently acknowledged by the generality of writers on this art. To us it seems little less than a marvel that the subject could possibly be treated at any length without some mention being made of the part played by the great Masonic guilds and fraternities that seem to have flourished in every age. Yet we look in vain for any such mention in some of the most esteemed works on Historical Architecture, even in cases where Freemasonry would appear to afford a ready explanation of much that was otherwise inexplicable. We do not now refer so much to the Architecture of the Ancient Egyptians and Hebrews, though there are not wanting indications of the existence of Masonic agencies, even so far back as this. Our immediate concern is with the architecture of the Middle Ages, and in particular with the style of architecture known as Gothic. Take, for example, the great German critic, Frederick von Schlegel. He confesses to "a decided predilection for the Gothic style," declares that when he is so fortunate as to discover a Gothic monument, however ruined or defaced, he examines it "with unwearied zeal and attention;" and yet, when he essays to consider the origin of the style, the only conclusion he can come to, is that it certainly is not Arabic. Another German, Dr. George Möller, in his celebrated treatise "On the Origin and Progress of Gothic Architecture," sums up the various hypotheses on the subject as follows:—

1. From the holy groves or thickets of the Ancient Celtic nations.
2. From huts made with the entwined twigs of trees.
3. From the structure of the framing in wooden buildings.
4. From the pyramids of Egypt.
5. From the imitation of pointed arches generated by the intersection of semi-circles.

Digitized by Google

To our thinking, the question of the origin and development of the Gothic order of Architecture is no such mystery as these writers would have us believe. In the first place it is surely unnecessary to point out how closely, in its more primitive and general forms, the Gothic arch resembles the interlacing boughs of a Northern forest. Nor need our readers to be informed that all arts are of necessity imitative. The early Celtic and Teutonic builders constructed their rude huts from the timber which surrounded their settlements, and when they desired to erect more imposing dwellings they naturally took their ideas from the appearance of forest groves. Before long the builders became a distinctive body, and the services of the most skilful were sought far and wide for the erection of fortresses and churches. The migratory character they thus acquired was of itself sufficient to raise them above the common herd. In their wanderings they probably very soon came in contact with the Collegia Mariorum of Rome, and the traditions of these old schools would in time and in part be grafted on their own. In process of years there would come to be recognised amongst these artificers a certain bond of fellowship, based upon their possession of a common knowledge and their pursuit of the same occupation. Like the Dionysiacs of old, and the Freemasons of to-day, they were naturally jealous of any interference from without, and carefully avoided committing to paper the secrets of their calling and organisation. No one could be admitted into the fraternity without undergoing some sort of apprenticeship or noviciate, in addition to the formal process of initiation. The value of such a confederation to the cause of art can hardly be exaggerated. At a time, so different from the present, when books were scarce, and the cacoethes scribendi confined to the learned few, these guilds were the means of keeping alive, from century to century, the principles of the art. The pupil of the one generation became the teacher of the next. Nor is this all. The enthusiasm which all the initiates were taught to feel for the cause of art and the glory of the Order, prevented in a great measure those petty jealousies and personal antagonisms which so frequently mar the lives and works of great artists. Who, that has ever studied the life of painter or sculptor, will not recognise the force of this consideration? The architects of the Middle Age avoided personal rivalries, by ascribing the glory of their productions, first of all to the Great Architect of the Universe, and in a secondary sense to their Craft. If any memorial of authorship was inscribed on the edifice at all, it was not the name of the individual designer, but a symbolical indication of the fraternity. The architect of the magnificent Cathedral of Cologne, which, in its design, forms probably the grandest conception that ever proceeded from the mind of man, remains unknown to the present day. The edifice itself is incomplete, but the original design is, we believe, extant, complete to its minutest detail.

We know of but one other Association that can in any way be compared to these Masonic guilds, in the respect to which we have just alluded. The Comédie Française, it cannot be doubted, has exercised a most salutary effect upon the art of acting in France. Here, as in the old Masonic fraternities, the Sociétaires are bound together by a kind of constitution, and every individual has a distinct voice in the management. The various officials are elected by the majority, and no one can be admitted to membership in opposition to the will of the existing members. When the Comédie Française came to England, some few years since, English audiences were astonished to see actors of world-wide reputation playing, at times, subordinate parts. The hero of one night's performance would, perchance the night after, appear in a part that did not contain a dozen words. The individual was content to sink his own importance to secure the general effect, and to enhance the credit and honour of the institution. Thus it was with the Masonic Guilds of the Middle Ages, with the further advantage, however, that the bond of union partook of a quasi-religious character, and was consequently of a more abiding and effective character. Students of the History of Architecture who omit this important factor from their consideration will find the rise, progress, and decline of Gothic art involved in mystery. Let them but recognise the value of these confederations, based upon lofty and enduring principles, inspired by a noble enthusiasm, by friendly emulation and fraternal sympathies, cemented, moreover, by a profound veneration for the Great Supreme, and by the mediæval rule of life, laborare est orare, and they will begin to comprehend how those colossal monuments of human ingenuity, those marvellous embodiments of religious fervour, which be-stud Teutonic and Celtic Europe, were wrought to so high a summit of perfection.

LODGE QUARTERS.

IT is in the order of things, perhaps, that when a new Lodge is constituted, or an old one changes its quarters, some difficulty should occasionally arise in selecting a desirable habitation. Masonic Halls are not numerous in England. We have a host of Lodges distributed throughout the country, and many of them are in sparsely populated districts, where, as a matter of course, a Lodge room is not easily to be met with. Were any confirmation of this needed, it would be found in a letter that was recently forwarded to us for publication, but which, as it appeared in the columns of our London Masonic contemporary last week, we have thought it unnecessary to reproduce. We may state, however, that Bro. Gomperts, P.M. and Secretary of the Gresham Lodge, 869, and P.P.G.P. Herts, experienced no small amount of difficulty in finding new quarters for his Lodge. There had, for some time past, been a general desire on the part of the members to make a move from the Four Swans, Waltham Cross to some other neighbourhood. The taverns were unable to afford the necessary accommodation, and at last it occurred to Bro. Gomperts to ask Bro. Rev. C. Erskine Mayo, Prov. Grand Chaplain, Herts, if he would allow them the use of the Banqueting Hall of Cheshunt Great House, Cheshunt Park, formerly one of the palaces of Cardinal Wolsey. The request was no sooner made than it was acceded to, and the Gresham Lodge is to be congratulated on having thus secured such admirable quarters. Our object in noticing a matter of apparently so little moment is to draw attention to a much vexed question as to the propriety of holding Lodge meetings in taverns. It is not every Lodge that can afford to build a hall of its own. In towns, of course, a hall can be used by several Lodges, and the expense is thus distributed over a wider field. In some country places there is a town-hall available for Masonic meetings, but generally speaking, and especially in remote districts, a Lodge must fall back on the tavern. This is most unfortunate, but we do not see any way out of the difficulty. In towns where there is an inn of the good old-fashioned type, such as were in full activity in the fine old coaching days, there is every reason why, in the absence of the accommodation, such inn should be selected for Lodge meetings, and we see no reason why, in such cases, more than one, or even half-a-dozen Lodges in the same neighbourhood, should not assemble in the same inn or hotel. It would only be necessary to arrange their meetings for different nights in the week. It is not, of course, to be expected that so loyal a brother as the Rev. C. E. Mayo will be met with often. Town Halls do not exist everywhere, and are not always securable when found. Masonic Halls are less numerous still. There is, then, in too many cases, no option but to fall back on taverns. Thus this use, which has been so frequent a subject of regret, and even of outcry, must be looked upon, to a certain extent, as a necessary evil.

There are always plenty of people on the look out for profitable, and at the same time safe investments. A high rate of interest has been described as involving a great amount of risk, but a good substantial profit may, nevertheless, be obtained in many cases without the slightest danger of loss. A case in point is the Lombard Deposit Bank Limited, which has been in existence for the last six years, and during that time has been working steadily, and most profitably, so that, by strict economy and skilful management, the investors have benefited to the extent of ten or twelve per cent. on the amount invested. Being a limited company, the shareholders' liability is necessarily limited to the amount of their shares, which the fact that the bank has existed for six years, and has enjoyed throughout an uninterrupted course of prosperity, fully justifies the hope that the future progress of the company may be equally satisfactory, as will be seen from the advertisement in another part of our columns, the Offices of the Lombard Deposit Bank are at Nos. 43 and 44 Lombard-street, City, and 277 and 279 Regent-street, W.

"MASONIC TEACHING," &c.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have been much interested in reading "Masonic Teaching," by Bro. Lionel Harrison, and consider the Illustrations of the Craft exceedingly appropriate and suggestive.

Something similar has just been issued by our Grand Lodge (Ireland) in what is termed the "Masonic Ritualist and Lecturer," which is bound up with the new edition of the "Book of Constitutions." Many advocate an authorised Manual respecting our esoteric teaching, and were such a vade mecum issued, it would undoubtedly partake of the character of the admirable Masonic explanations and principles addressed by Bro. Harrison to his dutiful and attached son (and brother.)

We fail to see any just reason why our Masonic Illustrations and teachings should not be made more public than they have been hitherto, for certainly were they better known all clerical opposition to our Order on the part of the Roman Catholic priests would fall harmless. As it is, no one can be led to think less than they should of the ancient Craft if they are "forearmed" with letters like those of Bro. Harrison's, but many know really nothing of the tendency of the Masonic society. If any think we advocate too much being published with respect to our secrets, we reply that these illustrations of Masonry are not esoteric, and so no harm is done, but, on the contrary, much good. Preston's "Illustrations of Masonry" in 1772 was published by the authority of the Grand Master of England, who was (strange to say) a Roman Catholic, and the Grand Lodge of Ireland even publishes the prayers and other portions of Lodge ceremonials.

Yours fraternally,

MASONIC INVESTIGATOR.

THE LATE DUKE OF WELLINGTON A MASON.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

SIR,—There is no doubt, I believe, about the late illustrious Duke of Wellington having been initiated into Freemasonry. I have seen the fact mentioned in several places, and somewhere, I think, it was said he occasionally acted as Senior Warden in Lodges held in Kensington under the presidency of our late M.W.G.M. the Duke of Sussex. The other day I came across the following footnote in Oliver's "Preston's Illustrations," Edition 1861. I give it in full as it may be interesting to your readers.

"The Duke of Wellington, when Colonel in the 33rd Regiment of Foot, was initiated into Freemasonry in Lodge 494, which was at that time held in the Castle of Dangan, County Meath; the late Earl of Mornington, his grace's father, being W.M. at the time. He was duly passed, after the usual examination; and in the phraseology of the Lodge entered at the Southern gate, and afterwards raised. The following brethren being members, were present; many of them, in the words of the Irish bard, "have been famous in story." Bros. Sir James Somerville Bt., Sir Benj. Chapman Bt., Hen Gorge, M.P., Delvin, late Earl of Westmeath, Rob. Uniacke M.P., Rich. Boyle M.P., John Pomeroy, Wm. Forster, George Lowther M.P., Earl of Mornington, Marquis Wellesley, F. North, Earl of Guilford, Robt. Percival, Robt. Waller, Richd. Leslie, Arthur Wellesley."

My object in writing, however, is not to announce publicly that I have read this eminently interesting fact, but to inquire if any of your Irish or English readers can tell me the day and the year when the initiation took place. It was at Dangan Castle, I think, the late Duke was born 1st May 1769, and he was in command of the 33rd at Seringapatam in 1799, having previously served in the Netherlands under the late Duke of York. Soon after this he attained the rank of General Officer, so that his initiation would have taken place some time during the last decade of the eighteenth century. Lodge No. 494, I perceive from the Masonic Calendar, hold its meetings at Freemasons' Hall, Dublin. Perhaps some member would have the kindness to favour you with these, and any other particulars which may be of interest to the Craft.

Yours fraternally,

Q.

DISCIPLINE.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Under the above heading your worthy correspondent, Bro. E. Gottheil, volunteers a little lecture to W.M.'s, on what he terms "Masonic Common Law," but I submit that he is entirely wrong in his own interpretation of such law on the point to which he calls attention.

If he refers to the Book of Constitutions (p 76, edition 1867) "of Masters and Wardens of Lodges," he will find it thus written: "Should the minutes of such election of Master not be confirmed, then a summons must issue for the following regular meeting of the Lodge, setting forth that the brethren were again to proceed to elect a Master, and on the confirmation of the minutes of that election at the following regular meeting of the Lodge, the installation of the master will follow:"—There is nothing here, or in the obligation taken by every W.M. on installation, binding the outgoing W.M. in the case in question to act for another twelve months, which would be a monstrous hardship, and inconvenience in many cases, and is, therefore, wisely provided for by the above regulation quoted from the Book of Constitutions.

Yours fraternally,

W. G. M., P.M. 227.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—"Masonic Investigator" is perfectly correct in his assertion that "if the election of W.M. is not confirmed, then a summons must be issued for the following regular meeting of the Lodge, and the election must then be proceeded with. That is just what the brethren of the Lodge in question failed to do, and, therefore, must be deemed guilty of, "not to put too fine a point on it," an irregularity, which, should it come to the knowledge of the Board of General Purposes, the collective wisdom of that august body will be bound to take cognisance of. I trust that at least some members of that board subscribe to "THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE," as I should much like to learn what measures are taken in a case of the kind under discussion.

Yours fraternally,

E. GOTTHEIL.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

—:o:—

The Spirits' Book, containing the Principles of Spiritual Doctrine. Collected by ALLAN KARDEC. Translated from the hundred and twentieth thousand. By ANNA BLACKWELL. London: Trübner. 1875.

THE rise and spread of spiritualism during the last twenty-five years, regard the matter from what light we may, form assuredly one of the most astonishing religious phenomena of the present century. Not only in America, where the apostles of this faith claim to be able to count their converts by millions, but in England, France, Germany, Spain, Italy, and Russia, the countries the most advanced in civilisation, this belief in the active intervention of spirits has taken a powerful hold upon the imaginations of men. In England, at the present day, we have some three or four periodicals to represent their views, whilst in France, Italy, Spain, and America, the subject has been discussed from almost every point of view, in books and pamphlets that have commanded as extensive a sale as a popular poem or novel. The present volume, for example, is a translation of a French work, Le Livre des Esprits, by Allan Kardec, which has, in its original tongue, gone through the almost incredibly large issue of one hundred and twenty thousand copies, besides being translated into Italian, Spanish, and other languages, with great, though inferior, degrees of success. We are assured by the translator, Miss Anna Blackwell, that the number of periodicals now devoted to the advocacy of the Kardec philosophy in various parts of the world, is over forty, and when it is considered that this school includes only a part of the great multitude who acknowledge Spiritualism as a great and living truth, it must, we think, be obvious that the movement can no longer be adequately disposed of by a smile of derision, or a curt condemnation. Spiritualism, if a fraud, is certainly one that has achieved a gigantic success—so gigantic, in fact, that stronger weapons than a mere "Pooh! pooh!" are required to overturn it. If it be only a delusion, whence comes it that our spiritual teachers, our priests, our professors, our government appointed instructors, have never been able to demonstrate its absurdity? Instead of this, dot a few of those to whom the multitude look for advice have gone over to the enemy. Goldschmidt and Flammarion, the astronomers, Wallace, the naturalist, Hoeffle and Crookes, the chemists, Varley, De Morgan, Secchi, and we know not how many more have given in their adhesion to the new philosophy, and maintain it in their published works. For our own part, we can only marvel that men of science have shown themselves so indifferent to the spread of these opinions. Here we have a book of some four hundred pages, purporting to contain a series of communications upon matters of vital interest to every human being, which the writer declares to have been directly inspired by spirits. The book has had a wonderful sale on the Continent, and now, translated into terse and vigorous English by the facile hand of Miss Blackwell, who will say that it may not find its thousands of readers in this country? And yet, our newspapers are constantly telling us that Spiritualism is played out. The book is admirably printed, and does credit to the taste of its authors and publishers.

MAGAZINES OF THE MONTH.

SECOND NOTICE.

THERE is still the usual amount of serial fiction in Tinsley's, and with one exception, to which we have before referred, we feel that we can cordially recommend them, as before, to the notice of our readers. "With Harp and Crown," by the authors of "Ready-money Mortiboy," indeed, is a specially interesting tale. Dr. Davies's "Social Status Quo" is not quite so ecclesiastical or clerical this month; he seems to have felt the force of sundry criticisms, and pleads that "'Tis my vocation, Hal." Be it so, but the writer of this class of article should not yield too readily to a very natural temptation. He should consider that his "vocation" may not be as interesting to his readers as to himself. We like to read about parsons, but not to the exclusion of other classes. However, Dr. Davies this month does what it was only natural so capable a writer should have done. He is not wholly parsopic this month, in spite of his vocation. Accordingly we find his present contribution a most genial one, one that we are persuaded will be read with a great deal of pleasure. "Two Strings to one Bean" is a clerical experience, very amusingly written, and there is, likewise, "An Italian Novel," well worth reading. The poetry, as we have again and again remarked, is so admirable, that we wish we had space to transcribe more of it. As it is, we must content ourselves with quoting the following, being No. VII. of "Dreams of a German Jew."

In dreams have I been weeping;
I dreamt that thou wert dead.
I woke, and still the tear-drops,
Down from my cheeks were shed.

In dreams have I been weeping,
That thou forsookest me;
I woke, and still was weeping—
Yea, weeping bitterly.

In dreams have I been weeping;
To me thou still wert good.
I woke, and yet for ever,
Streams on the tearful flood.

Baily, as is invariably the case, contains an excellent series of papers. Among other contributions we have noted chapter XX. of "Frank Raleigh of Watercombe," and Mr. Frederick Gale's admirably written reminiscences of "Tom Spring's Back Parlour," in which we have apparently a life-like picture of that illustrious worthy of the P.R. "A run in the Woldshire Country in December 1872," and "A Day in a Punt," together with "My Last Day's Sport in Africa," are excellent reading. "Our Van," if a little less racy than usual, is full of lively writing, notes, and anecdotes. There is, in one part, a kindly reference to the "Old Shekarry," a well known sporting writer, the early termination of whose career will be a source of regret to every true lover of sport.

The St. James's has a goodly programme. The early chapters of Mrs. Townshend Mayer's serial, "Sir Hubert's Marriage," are the opening contribution, and there are further chapters of Henry Kingsley's romance, "The Grange Garden." Mr. John C. Paget asks the pertinent question, "Can we support Turkey?" His answer appears to be to the effect that Turkey, sooner or later, will crumble to pieces. The old story of the sick man of the days of Czar Nicholas reappears, and his suggestion about our appropriating Egypt appears to be the only consolation Mr. Paget has to offer for abandoning a consistent course of policy as regards the irrepressible Eastern question. Mr. Gibbs's poem, "The Battle of the Standard," is as attractive as ever, and the editor's "Olla Podrida" smart and genial.

The story of the "Siege of Stralsund," by J. R. de Liefde, is still in progress in the Leisure Hour. Besides this we have noted "Natural History Anecdotes," "The National Melodies of Ireland," "Port Royal," by the Rev. Fred. Arnold, and No. V. of "Caricatures and Caricaturists," in which is sketched, with illustrations, the career of George Cruikshank. There is a good assortment of appropriate reading in Sunday at Home.

Once a Week includes several excellent contributions, "Jack Hamilton's Luck," "Grace's Lovers," and the notes of "The Casual Observer." There are several illustrations, in respect of merit considerably in advance of our previous experience, yet not quite up to our idea of what illustrations should be in so well-known a periodical as this.

GRAND LODGE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

THE annual gathering of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons belonging to the province of Northumberland, was held in the ancient town of Hexham, under the banner of the Northern Counties Lodge, 406. The brethren assembled in goodly numbers in the Town Hall, which was very beautifully decorated for the occasion by a rich assortment of green and hothouse plants, ferns, &c., which were kindly lent by Mr. Ralph Robson, of Hexham, and the massive, elegant new furniture of the new Albert Edward Lodge gave to the spacious hall an imposing and impressive appearance. The assembly was presided over by the Right Hon. Earl Percy, M.P., the Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master of Northumberland. The S.W. chair was occupied by Bro. T. B. Winter P.G.S.W., and the J.W. chair by Bro. A. Potter P.G.J.W. The minutes of the previous Lodge having been read and received, the various reports for the past year were read and received, from which it transpired that the Ancient Order was prospering within the province. The proceedings of the day were rendered highly interesting by the consecration of a new Lodge in the town of Hexham, called the Albert Edward Lodge, No. 1557. The solemn and impressing ceremony was duly performed, with all the accustomed rites and usages, by the Provincial Grand Master and his officers. The Lodge having been duly consecrated, Bro. George White, of Dilston Villa, was duly installed into the chair of S.S., as the first Worshipful Master of the Albert Edward Lodge. The business having been transacted, the Lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to the banquet, which was served up in first rate style by Messrs. Bell and Bolam, of the Crown Hotel, Claytra Street, Newcastle, in the Corn Market. The banqueting hall was also beautifully decorated. The chair was occupied by the Right Hon. Earl Percy P.G.M., and the vice-chairs by Bro. B. J. Thompson and Bro. C. Jarvis W.M. Tyne Lodge. Upwards of 200 brethren partook of a recherché repast.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF THE NORTH AND EAST RIDINGS.

FROM "THE HULL PACKET."

THE annual Provincial Grand Lodge of Freemasons in the above Ridings was held on Wednesday, at Hull, when there was a large and distinguished assemblage of the members of the Craft. Many years have elapsed since Hull was last selected as the place of meeting for the Prov. Grand Lodge; and on its becoming known that the invitation of the W.M., officers and brethren of the Minerva Lodge, No. 250, to pay another visit to this town had been accepted, great interest was manifested in the event. Every arrangement necessary to accord to the R.W. the Prov. Grand Master and his officers a fitting and hearty welcome was carried out with spirit; and the compliments passed on Wednesday by the Earl of Zetland on the cordiality with which the Prov. Grand Lodge had been received in Hull, must have been eminently satisfactory to all who had taken part in the planning and carrying into effect the general arrangements for the meeting. The Mayor (Bro. Charles Wells P.P.G.J.W.), with his wonted urbanity and kindness, placed the banqueting-room of the Town Hall at the disposal of the Craft, neither of the ordinary Lodge-rooms of the town being sufficiently large to accommodate the numbers that were expected. The whole of the apartments at the Town Hall were thrown open for the purposes of the meeting, and at two o'clock the general body of the brethren assembled in the Council Chamber, those holding present and past grand rank proceeding to the robing-room adjoining. The brethren, having partaken of the hospitality of the Mayor, proceeded to take up their positions in Grand Lodge, the interior of the banqueting-hall having been superbly fitted up for the occasion as a Lodge-room. Shortly before half-past two o'clock a flourish of trumpets in the vestibule announced the approach of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, the Rt. Hon. the Earl of Zetland, who was accompanied by a long procession of present and past Provincial Officers, amongst whom we observed:—Bro. J. March Prov. G.S.W., Bro. J. H. Bennet Prov. G.J.W., Bro. W. Valentine Prov. Grand Chaplain, Bro. R. W. Hollon Prov. Grand Treasurer, Bro. M. C. Peck Prov. Grand Secretary, Bro. J. Fearne Holden Prov. G.S.D., Bro. J. Hudson Prov. G.S.W., Bro. W. Potchell Prov. G.S.B., Bro. T. Oates Prov. G.O., Bro. J. Ward Prov. Grand Pursuivant, Brothers T. Marshall, W. K. Brown, J. W. Bennet, and W.H. Wellsted Prov. Grand Stewards, Bro. T. Crier Prov. Grand Tyler. A large number of past Provincial Officers were also present. Nearly all the Lodges in the province were represented, brethren attending from Scarborough, Driffield, Hornsea, Richmond, Whitby, Middlesbro', Redcar, Selby, Howden, Cleveland, Beverley, York, Bridlington, Filey, Malton, &c. It is computed that about 400 brethren in all were present at the imposing ceremony. The R.W. having taken his place, the Prov. Grand Lodge was opened in due form, and the Earl of Zetland was saluted with grand Honours. Letters of apology were read from Bros. Sir Harcourt Johnston and Sir James Neave, who had been prevented from attending on the occasion. The Prov. Grand Secretary (Bro. M. C. Peck) then read the minutes of the last Prov. Grand Lodge, and the Board of Benevolence meeting, from the latter of which it was learnt that the office of Prov. Grand Steward to the Masonic Charities, held up to the time of his death by the late Bro. James Walker, had been conferred upon Bro. John Thompson, of Hull; and the Board recommended the sum of £30 to be handed over to Mrs. Walker, in acknowledgment of the services rendered by her late husband. Bro. Charles Wells said he had great pleasure in supporting the recommendation of the Board with reference to their late Bro. Walker. He had had the opportunity, personally, of witnessing the indefatigable exertions used by him for the benefit of the Craft, and those truly benevolent objects which were his peculiar care and study. Other references having been made to the late Bro. Walker's assiduity and zeal on behalf of the Masonic Charities having been made, the minutes were confirmed. The appointment of Provincial Officers for the ensuing year was then made, the brethren being invested with their collars by the Earl of Zetland, and duly installed into their respective chairs:—Prov. Grand Senior Warden, Bro. Thomas Smurthwaite, of York, Prov. Grand Junior Warden Bro. W. H. Purritt, of Bridlington Quay, Prov. Grand Chaplain Bro. the Rev. — Wade, of York, Prov. Grand Registrar Bro. Thos. Sissons of the "Kingston" Lodge, Hull, Prov. Grand Treasurer Bro. R. W. Hollon, of York (re-elected), Prov. Grand Secretary Bro. M. C. Peck, of Hull (re-elected), Prov. Senior Deacon Bro. W. H. Delemere, of the "Denison" Lodge, Scarborough, Prov. Junior Deacon Bro. John Brooke W.M. of the "Minerva" Lodge, Hull, Prov. Grand Director of Ceremonies, Bro. T. C. Davidson of the "Marwood" Lodge, Redcar, Prov. Grand Sword Bearer Bro. John Thompson of the "Minerva" Lodge, Hull, Prov. Grand Supt. of Works, Bro. John Kemp of the "Constitution" Lodge, Beverley, Prov. Grand Organist, Brother Johnson, of "Marwood" Lodge, Redcar, Prov. Grand Pursuivant, Bro. John Ward, of York, Prov. Grand Tyler, Bro. Thos. Crier of Hull. After the transaction of other Lodge business the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, before closing the Lodge, said he was not aware that there was any matter of business or other subject of particular interest by adjourn to which it was necessary for him to detain them. At the last meeting of Prov. Grand Lodge he had the pleasure of intimating that his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales had accepted the office of M.W. Grand Master of England; and he need hardly remind them that since then his Royal Highness had been duly installed into that exalted position (applause). All who were present at that Grand Lodge must have witnessed a spectacle which would be deeply rooted in their memories, and in it they would have seen ample evidence of the loyalty of Freemasons in this country (renewed applause). In this Province they had much cause for congratulation. They were now assembled in a town which had been designated as one of the strongholds of Freemasonry in the country for many years—new additions where being constantly made to the Craft; and he was informed that there was a prospect soon of another Lodge being added to the province (applause). He and the other members of the Prov. Grand Lodge were much obliged to the W.M., officers and brethren of "Minerva" Lodge for the very cordial reception which they had accorded them to-day. Thanks were also due to the Right Worshipful the Mayor of Hull, who had so kindly lent them the Town Hall on this occasion. All the arrangements for the holding of this meeting in Hull had been most effectively and praiseworthily carried out. (Applause.) Two invitations had been received for the next Prov. Grand Lodge, namely, from Richmond and Redcar; and his lordship intimated that that from the "Marwood" Lodge at Redcar had been accepted for 1876. The noble earl concluded by proposing a vote of thanks to the Right Worshipful the Mayor of Hull for his hospitality, and the vote having been seconded by the Prov. Grand Senior Warden, was carried with acclamation. Bro. Charles Wells, in acknowledging the compliment paid him, said he had some difficulty in expressing the gratification he felt that the visit of the Provincial Grand Lodge to Hull had fallen in his year of office as chief magistrate of the town. He had thus had the opportunity of following in the footsteps of one of his predecessors, and placing this hall at the disposal of the Craft. He regretted that the accommodation afforded in the hall was not greater, so that he might have offered to the brethren that hospitality which he was anxious to dispense to them. However, he had done the best that laid in his power (loud applause), and he thanked the brethren present for the hearty and kindly manner in which his name had that day been received. The Lodge was then closed in due form, and, the procession having been reformed, the Prov. Grand officers passed along the corridors to their robing room amidst the flourish of trumpets and strains of music from the organ within the Lodge. A splendid instrument was provided for the occasion from the establishment of Bro. J. S. Stephenson, in Whitefriargate, and the musical selections of the day were ably performed by the Prov. Grand Organist, Bro. Thomas Oates, W.M. of the Alexandra Lodge, Hornsea

In the evening a banquet was held in the Public Rooms, Jarratt-street, when about 120 brethren sat down under the presidency of the Earl of Zetland. The R. W. Prov. Grand Master was supported by Bro. George Marwood P.D.P.G.M. (who had officiated during the day in behalf of the W. Deputy Prov. Grand Master, Bro. J. Pearson Bell, prevented from attending in consequence of indisposition) the R.W. the Mayor of Hull, Bro. Charles Wells P.P.G.J.W., Bro. Walter Reynolds, P.G.D.C., Bro. S. Moseley P.P.G.J.W., Bro. J. Fearne Holden P.P.G.S.D., Bro. the Rev. J. K. Saunders P.G., Chaplain, Linc., Bro. R. W. Hollon P.G.T., Bro. Terry P.G.S.B. of England, Bro. T. Clasons P.G., Registrar, Bro. John Brooke P.G.J.D., and W. M. of the Minerva Lodge, Bro. C. M. Norwood M.P., Bro. J. L. Seaton P.P.G.J.W., Bro. H. J. Atkinson J.P., &c., Amongst the other brethren we noticed—Bro. W. Tesseyman P.M., Bro. George Hardy P.M., Bro. Scherling P.M., Bro. Thomas Thompson P.P.D.C., and J. S. Warman (Richmond), Bro. Camidge P.P.G.O. (York), Bro. Dixon P.P.G.D. (Beverley), Bro. Harrison P.M. Bro. Henry Preston P.M., Bro. W. Hunt P.M., Bro. John Thompson P.G.S.B., Broomhoft P.M., Bro. J. Ward P.G.P. (York), Bro. J. H. Emes P.M., Bro. Haigh P.M., Bros. H. J. Amphlett, R. Gale, S. Walliker, B. L. Wells, B. Barnett, T. Hockney, R. Toogood, J. Reynolds, Joseph Dyson, W. Goodall, J. Shackles, J. Glover, C. Newton, Duvers, C. H. Hunt, J. S. Stephenson, G. Eaton, &c. A sumptuous repast was provided by Bro. George Peacock, whose arrangements, as usual, gave unbounded satisfaction. At the conclusion of the repast a large company of ladies were admitted to the orchestra, and by their presence greatly conduced to the enjoyment of the evening.

The toast of the "Queen and the Craft" having been legally received with full musical honours and organ accompaniment.

The Earl of Zetland said the toast he was about to propose was always received with enthusiasm, and he had great pleasure in giving "H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, Most Worshipful Grand Master of England" (loud and prolonged cheering). It had been said that in other countries—perhaps in the darker periods of history—Freemasonry had been connected with plots and seditions against the governments of other nations. He thought he might say that in England at all times the case had been singularly the reverse (hear, hear). Those who witnessed the installation of their M.W. Grand Master, last spring, must have been duly impressed with what they then saw, and which he regarded as an embodiment of the fact that loyalty was one of the first grand principles of Freemasonry in this country (cheers). The Prince of Wales was not only most popular throughout the country for his zeal for the benefit of the Craft, but also from the manner in which he had on every occasion endeared himself to his subjects in this realm. He associated with the toast the other members of the royal family (cheers).

The Earl of Zetland then proposed "The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon M.W. Pro Grand Master, the Right Hon. Lord Skelmersdale R.W. Deputy Grand Master, with the present and past Grand Officers." In doing so his lordship thought he might say the Earl of Carnarvon was personally known to many of the brethren present, and he was known, at all events by reputation, to every one in that assembly. He was deserving of every honour for the ability and energy which he invariably displayed for the benefit of the Craft generally. He would couple with this toast the name of Bro. Hollon, Past Grand Sword Bearer of England (cheers).

Bro. R. W. Hollon begged to acknowledge the toast which had been so kindly proposed by the noble earl in the chair. It was not necessary for him to allude to the zealous and efficient manner in which their excellent Pro Grand Master performed his duties. The returns made periodically told plainly as to how well Masonic matters were attended to, and how admirably the Craft was flourishing everywhere. He might say that, in the case of both the Masonic rulers whose healths had been proposed, they evinced every wish and determination to perform their respective duties with fervency and zeal. (Cheers).

Bro. Marwood P.D.P.G.M., then proposed "the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland R.W. Prov. Grand Master of North and East Yorkshire" (loud cheers). In discharging this important duty his words might be very few, but they would be none the less hearty; and as such he hoped every brother present would take them. Almost all of them had seen the manner in which the noble earl had done his work to-day; and he (the speaker) felt sure that, from the steady and efficient manner in which he had performed the duties of his office, they must all have felt that he was a worthy scion of the house of Dundas, which for the last three generations at least had taken a great interest in promoting the interests of Freemasonry (cheers). The manner in which he had acquitted himself in the exalted position he had filled to-day showed that he was a worthy successor to their late dearly beloved Grand Master, and with very hearty good wish for his long life and happiness he called upon the brethren present to drink to the health of the Earl of Zetland, their most excellent Grand Master of this province (enthusiastic cheering).

The Earl of Zetland, who was greeted with fresh outbursts of applause, said, in rising to respond to the toast which was last proposed, he found it somewhat difficult to express in words his thanks for the very flattering reception which had been given to his name. This was the first opportunity on which he had had occasion, in his present capacity, to pay a visit to the town of Hull; and he must say that it had been a day which would be long remembered by him. They had always heard that Hull was one of the principal strongholds of Freemasonry in the Province of North and East Yorkshire; and what he had seen to-day had in every way verified that which they had been told on previous occasions. He felt that, in following in the footsteps of his predecessor, he had a somewhat difficult position to fill; at the same time it was a very great satisfaction and pleasure to him to know that such perfect harmony prevailed throughout every Lodge, and that Masonry was so decidedly on the increase in the province. (Cheers.) He begged to thank them again most heartily for the cordial reception they had given him in Grand Lodge to-day and also for the hearty manner in which his name had been received by the company present on this occasion. (Renewed cheers.)

Bro. S. Moseley P.P.G.J.W. next gave "the W. Bro. John Pearson Bell, M.D., J.P., Past Senior Grand Deacon of England, and Deputy Prov. Grand Master of North and East Yorkshire," (cheers). He felt sure they would all deplore, with him, the cause of Bro. Bell's absence on this interesting occasion (hear, hear); and he trusted that he might soon be restored to health and strength, in order that he might continue to discharge the duties of that office he had so long and worthily filled (cheers).

Bro. Marwood P.D.P.G.M. said he felt quite sure that his old friend, Bro. Bell, would hear with great pleasure of the kindly way in which the mention of his name had been received this evening. He feared that their excellent Deputy Grand Master must be very ill, for he felt sure that nothing short of serious indisposition would have kept him away from this event. Ill as he was, he expressed his intention that morning of attending the Lodge; but when he (Bro. Marwood) was called upon to officiate in his behalf, he took it as his dear friend's tacit intimation that he had broken down. They must all feel, with him, great regret at the circumstance, and the sincere hope that Bro. Bell might soon be restored amongst them (cheers). It would cheer his heart to hear of the manner in which his health had been proposed and received by that company (renewed applause).

Bro. J. Fearne Holden P.P.G.S.D. said he rose with great pleasure to propose the next toast, though it was a pleasure which he was willing to admit had something of a selfish element in it, because the object of his toast was one that would so commend itself to their approbation that it would deprive him of any feeling of nervousness he might otherwise naturally experience in submitting it to this company. He knew for himself, and he believed he was speaking for a majority of the brethren in North and East Yorkshire when he said that the most earnest and pleasant associations in Masonry were connected with the health and personal acquaintance and patronage of the excellent brother whose health he had the honour to propose. No one in the province had attained eminence more deservedly, or was held in higher estimation among the brethren than their respected brother, George Marwood (cheers). For his part, he could remember that when a mere child in Masonry he had the highest respect and veneration for—and if he had been a naughty boy he might have had no little dread of—his name (laughter and hear, hear). When, through the illness of their late Grand Master or other causes, Bro. Marwood was called upon to preside over their assemblies, they always, whilst deploring the absence of the Earl of Zetland, felt in a great measure compensated by the knowledge that they were so ably presided over by one under whose care all matters would be so truly Masonically treated as they would be by Bro. Marwood. He knew the sentiments of the Hull Masons, and knew that in no part of the province was he more welcome than amongst them, at all times—because they knew Bro. Marwood to be a true and good Mason, and that best type of an Englishman, an English gentleman (cheers). Without further comment he called upon the company to drink, with all the Masonic honours, the health of Bro. Geo. Marwood, the Past Deputy Grand Master of the Province (cheers).

Bro. C. M. Norwood, M.P., said he felt it to be a high honour to be entrusted with a toast on this occasion, and especially so as his was a toast that would certainly be received with enthusiasm. He asked them to join with him in drinking to the health of "The Right Worshipful the Mayor of Hull, W. Bro. Charles Wells, the Past Prov. Grand Warden." (Cheers.) Bro. Wells had done good service to the cause of Freemasonry in this town in days gone by. (Hear, hear.) He believed he was right in saying that some years ago, when the fortunes of one of their Hull Lodges were not so high as at the present time, Bro. Wells threw himself into the position of W.M., and with his usual business ability and strong will, greatly infused strength, and interest, and power into that Lodge. Since that time he had been returned time after time by his fellow citizens to the Council Chamber of this great town, and he had performed his duties with such great ability that two years ago he was elected Sheriff of the borough (hear, hear). He (the speaker) trusted he might be permitted to bear his testimony to the impartiality and ability with which Bro. Wells performed his duties on that occasion (applause). At the present time he occupied the highest position which it was in the power of the town to confer upon him; and he reminded them that these honours were not to be obtained without sterling worth in their possessor. There must be integrity, strong will, and ability; and he believed Bro. Wells possessed all these essentials (cheers). He had had considerable difficulties to contend with in his year of office, yet he (Bro. Norwood) believed he would pass from the mayoral chair of this borough with the respect of his constituents, and of the town at large. (Cheers.) It must have been a great pleasure to Bro. Wells—good Mason as he was—to have had the pleasure of receiving the Earl of Zetland and other members of Prov. Grand Lodge at the Mansion House to-day. It was not his good fortune to be present as his attendance was required elsewhere in the town; but he should not forget the time when, with his dear friend, the late James Clay, he attended a Grand Lodge held in this town some years ago. The kind hospitality he had shown, and the facilities he had offered for the holding of this meeting, entitled him to their heartiest thanks, and he felt sure the toast would be most cordially received. (Cheers.)

IS FREEMASONRY CHANGING?

WE sometimes hear it said that Masonry is not now what it was even twenty years ago—that when the Lodge is at labour this and that old-time word and phrase are dropped, and others substituted, and the old work is being superseded by the new. Now, there is just as much, and no more, truth in this assertion as there is in the statement that human nature, or the human race, has changed during the same period. In a minor sense, and to superficial observation, all things are changeable and changing; but to him who views both nature and man philosophically, the characteristic of both is their unchangeableness. Surface changes are going on throughout humanity and the world, but in substance all persons and things are the same. There is nothing new under the sun, as King Solomon wisely said. Even the same sun rises in the heavens to-day that did in Adam's time. Masonry is just as unvarisble as nature and man, and to demonstrate this fact, and prove that this nineteenth century is Masonically the heir of the ages that have preceded it, is the object of our present article.

Freemasonry has both an historic and a pre-historic era, analogously to man and nature, and concerning the facts, or alleged facts of both, men are not entirely agreed. This is not surprising. Unanimity of belief, upon any subject, seems to to be unattainable. In religion, morality, commerce, law, science, philosophy, and—Masonry, opinions differ. But there is a weight of evidence in favour of certain views—a majority of individuals who entertain them, that makes us reasonably sure of the truth. The large majority of those who have investigated the origin, development, and present status of the Fraternity of Freemasons, are of opinion that in spirit and principle the Brotherood to-day is precisely the same that it was in the time of its founders, although in form it is doubtless changed. But forms are only the garb of thought. Were you to apparel yourself in the flowing dress of a Turk to-day, in the blanket of an Indian to-morrow, and the dress-suit of an American gentleman the next day, you would nevertheless be the same man. So it is with Masonry. The same great heart beat within the breasts of it true representatives, and the same moral purpose stimulates their actions now that did centuries ago.

The Masons of the nineteenth century are not exclusively, or mainly, architects and builders, as they once were, and hence the work of Masonry is necessarily changed—but changed as little as possible, under the circumstances. We do not use the twenty-four inch gauge and the common gavel, the plumb, level, square, and trowel, for the same purposes that our predecessors did, but for more noble and glorious purposes—to teach lessons of brotherly love, virtue, and morality; to develope the intellectual man, and fit him for the Spiritual Temple of the great hereafter. But we use the same implements as our forefathers did, and with more effect, since we build for both time and eternity, while they build only for time.

The Masons of the seventeenth century were almost exclusively practical, operative Masons. They have been slurringly termed, by some, bread-and-butter Masons, because Freemasonry was the business of their lives, from the practice of which they derived their daily support. But well-directed labour is never ignoble, and we honour the Craftsmen of centuries ago who erected the splendid churches and cathedrals of the Middle ages. The Guild Theory, by which our descent is deduced from the stone masons of yore, is the one adopted by the most critical and highest authorities in the Craft of the present day, and to it we give our unqualified assent. It is reasonable in principle, and well supported by facts. It explains the existence of the Fraternity during its historic period. But anterior to it is its pre-historic era. This word pre-historic is often misunderstood. It does not refer to a period so far removed from the human as to be characterised by the existence of giants and other abnormal phenomena, but only to that epoch about which we now have no certain data. A very few years ago, all time prior to the year 1717, was pre-historic in Masonry—that is, concerning it we had only traditions—since then we have recovered reliable Lodge minutes which extend back to A.D. 1598, and other documentary evidence reaching as far back as 1462. Over four centuries have elapsed between the last dates and the present, but then, as now, Freemasons met in extra Lodges, imparted their secrets only to initiates, and exemplified in stone the noble art of architecture which we now exemplify purely in a spiritual sense. The invention of the art of printing, more than any other cause, produced this peaceable revolution in the Craft. As our Brother Victor Hugo eloquently has written: "Le livre va tuer l'edifice. L'architecture est detronde."

The traditions of the Craft extend the operative existence of the Fraternity back to the age of King Solomon. This is our true pre-historic era. But we cannot tell how soon or how far it may be reclaimed and remanded into the region of the historic and the actual. The acumen and research of skilled archæologists are rapidly making history for the Craft, changing hypotheses into theories, and supporting these by incontestible facts.

Through all this extended historic and pre-historic existence of Freemasonry, there runs the same golden cord of Brotherhood, and related recondite mysteries. The germ is the same throughout. Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth, from the beginning to the end, have been the Craft's aims. Forms and ceremonies have changed, but principles never. Freemasons have always being builders, once for time, now for eternity, once with stone and timber to form material Temples, now with intelectual and spiritual natures to form a Spiritual Temple, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.—Keystone.

THE DRAMA.

"Married in Haste," at the Haymarket.

MR. BYRON has a happy knack of writing plays which, whether intrinsically good or not, are sure to be acceptable to the public. The very points which, when examined from an artistic point of view, seem his weakest, frequently turn the scale of popular opinion in his favour. Improbabilities in plot, impossibilities in dialogue are all forgiven for the sake of the laughter produced by a smart repartee or a quaint bit of word twisting. Being tolerably certain then, that his work, whatever its quality, will bring grist to the mill, Mr. Byron is to some extent justified in the evident haste with which his plays are written; but the artistic feeling which he undoubtedly possesses must often reproach him for his want of care of his literary reputation. "Pot boilers" are as necessary to dramatic authors as to artists in any other line; but an author like Mr. Byron ought, in justice to his own genius, to produce occasionally a play worthy of a place in an "Academy" of dramatic works. Although the plots of Mr. Byron's plays are usually threadbare, they possess at least one merit; they are neither "adapted" nor boldly stolen from French authors; neither faults nor excellencies are slavish copies from foreign originals. The incidents of "Married in Haste" may almost be guessed from the title. Augustus Grenville, a tutor in the house of a retired merchant, Mr. Grainger, falls in love with the daughter, Ethel, and, on the discovery of the attachment, which is mutual, is abruptly ordered to quit the house. The arrival of Gibson Greene, a friend of Grainger's, throws a new light on the scene; Greene states his knowledge that the tutor's real name is not Grenville, but Vere, that he has great expectations from a rich uncle, Mr. Percy Pendragon, and is in fact merely playing the part of the Lord of Burleigh. On this representation Mr. Grainger's opposition is withdrawn, and the young couple marry. Mr. Pendragon, justly irritated at not having been consulted on this important step, withdraws the allowance hitherto made to Vere, and the couple married in haste are left to repent at leisure. Taking to painting as a means of living, Augustus discovers that his wife's pictures are more valued than his own, and a little jealousy on this score, increased by some misunderstanding as to his attentions to a Lady Lister, results in a separation. The double reconciliation between husband and wife, and between uncle and nephew, is wrought out in a charming scene, of which the chief burden falls on the shoulders of Pendragon and Ethel, and of course all ends happily. We need only say of the dialogue that it is up to the level of Mr. Byron's style, and contains the usual quantity of his verbal fireworks. The acting is unusually good all round; Miss Carlotta Addison, whose progress has been both rapid and continuous, plays admirably as Ethel, showing much more power than she has hitherto been credited with, and acting throughout with admirable consistency of purpose. The Percy Pendragon of Mr. Vezin is another finished performance; good actor as Mr. Vezin always is, he has not often been seen to greater advantage than in this character. In writing the part of Gibson Greene Mr. Byron was writing a part for himself, and fitted it admirably to his own idiosyncrasies. The cynical, yet good hearted man of the world, always at work for one of his friends, and yet apparently too lazy to do more than drawl out his witty sayings, is excellently portrayed by Mr. Byron. Mr. Howe, always a safe actor, appears as Mr. Grainger, and Miss Emily Thorne plays the part of his wife. The piece is well mounted, and, in comparison with some recent productions, deserves, as it will no doubt obtain, a long and successful run.

WHAT ARE YOU WORKING FOR?—"How busy you are this lovely morning," said the butterfly to the spider. "I am spinning, merely spinning," said the spider, demurely. "How good the spider is. She is just like you, always at work. I found her at home, just now, on the rose bush, hard at her spinning," cried the butterfly to a sage old bee that was gathering honey with all his might. "Like me!" exclaimed the bee. "No, friend, no; I am never idle; I love industry and practise it; so far you may compare me to the spider, but there we part. My labour is spent in preparing sweet food for others: hers is spread to spinning snares wherewith she catches the unwary for her own devouring. Work and wages are to be judged, not by the skill and pains taken, but by the end proposed. My mission is one of love and life; hers is malignant, and has death for its object."—Leisure Hour.

67 BARBICAN, E.C.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THEIR Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, till the last few days, had been entertaining a number of illustrious guests, among them being the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke and Duchess of Teck, and the Prime Minister. The Prince and Princess are now returned to Marlborough House, which the former will leave on Monday for Dover, en route, viâ Paris and Brindisi, for India. The suite that will accompany His Royal Highness will include the Duke of Sutherland, Sir Bartle Frere, Lord Alfred Paget, Lord Suffield, Lord Aylesford, Lord Carrington, Lord C. Beresford, Colonel Ellis, and Mr. F. Knollys, his private secretary. The Prince will remain at The Bristol during his brief stay in Paris, and will leave for Turin on Wednesday evening, and go thence to Brindisi, which he is expected to reach on Saturday next. He will touch at Athens on the 18th, and after a stay of two days with his brother-in-law, King George, will resume his journey. At three o'clock to day His Royal Highness will receive an address from the Corporation of London, previous to his departure for India. The Duke of Cambridge has paid his usual visit of inspection to the Garrison at Portsmouth. On Wednesday the troops were engaged in a sham fight on Hayling Island, a few miles east of Portsmouth. On Monday the Duke will travel by the same train as the Prince of Wales to Dover, in order to witness a fight near Folkestone, between the Dover and Shornoliffe troops, which has been arranged for the day following.

Some time since it was announced that warnings had been sent to the various ports, that the equinoctial gales were expected to be much severer than usual, and the forecaste has been since amply verified. There has been a succession of gales, and considerable damage to both life and property has been the result. In addition to this we have witnessed what we suppose we must describe as the complete break up of the season. We have been treated this last fortnight to a superabundance of rain, though during the last few days the sun has shone out bravely and brilliantly, if not with its usual warmth. We cannot say the year thus far has been a particularly fortunate one as regards the weather. The winter was a long and trying one; of spring we had very little to boast, and the summer was distinguished by a succession of most disastrous floods, which severely damaged the hay and cut crops. Following this, we had a few weeks of glorious warm summer weather, which, happily, proved very serviceable to the crops, and enabled the farmers to gather in their harvest without hindrance, so that though the yield is somewhat below the average, the expectations of the pessimists have not been realised to the extent that was expected. Not having the gift of prophecy, we are unable to state if we are fortunately in for another spell of fine weather. We content ourselves with hoping so.

Having delivered ourselves thus oracularly on the subject of the weather, a subject of such interest to all Englishmen that any two of them who should meet and not offer some remark, more or less sapient, as to its being warm, cold, dry, or damp, would deserve to be immured for the rest of their days in the nearest lunatic asylum, we pass to other and it may be more general topics. First then the Fifteenth Church Congress commenced its session at Stoke-on-Trent in the Potteries on Tuesday. The proceedings commenced with divine service in the Parish Church, the sermon being preached by the Lord Bishop of Rochester, while the Bishop of Ontario performed a like service at another church, St. Mark's, Shelton. The Congress met in the afternoon, at the Congress Hall, and after a few preliminaries, Bishop Selwyn delivered the inaugural address, in which the Rev. Prelate set forth the scope and purpose of the meeting. After this the first discussion was opened, the subject being "The Church of England, and the Churches in communion with her; how they may be drawn more closely together." On Wednesday, the principal discussion turned on the important question of "Woman's work in the Church." The subject evoked considerable difference of opinion among those present, but all the speakers exhibited a very earnest desire to treat the question impartially, though the views enunciated were in some instances in direct conflict with each other. We may fairly assume that a Congress which has reached its fifteenth session feels that it is making some progress with the work it is engaged upon. At all events, all endeavours to promote deeper religious feeling among the masses will be cordially welcomed by all Masons, even though we pride ourselves on excluding all religious disputations. Hence we refer to this Congress, not because it is under the auspices of the Church of England, but because its object is to spread a knowledge of the broad truths of religion among the more ignorant classes of people.

Simultáneously with the Church Congress we have the Social Science Congress assembled at Brighton, this being the nineteenth year of its existence. There were present Lord Aberdare, President of the Congress and of the Departments, Sir Edward Creasy, Jurisprudence and the Amendment of the Law; Lieut.-Colonel Du Cane, Repression of Crime; Sir Charles Reed, Education; Dr. Richardson, Health; and Mr. Grant Duff, M.P., Economy and Trade. The inaugural address was delivered by Lord Aberdare, who entered, at great length, into the very wide range of subjects which the Congress sought to deal with. The most prominent among them are the repression of crime, the extension of education, and the promotion of sanitary science. We heartily sympathise with every body of men engaged in such beneficent work. Whatever tends to raise the masses must be a benefit, not to them only, but to the community of which they form a part. Decent dwellings, fresh air, and education are the surest means for improving the condition of our less fortunate fellows. We have no doubt whatever that much practical good will result from sundry of the theories propounded at this Congress, and we heartily wish it every success. While on the subject of science we may note that the Yorkshire College of Science, at Leeds, which has been established for the purpose of supplying instruction in the sciences applicable to the manufactures, engineering, mining, and agriculture of the county, was inaugurated by the Duke of Devonshire, on Wednesday. There were present, besides His Grace, who is Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, Dr. Lyon Playfair, the Marquis of Ripon, Lord Hampton, Lord Frederick Cavendish, President of the College, Sir Andrew Fairbairn, Sir John Lubbock, Mr. W. E. Forster, the Mayors of Leeds, Huddersfield, Halifax, and several other men of distinction connected with the County of York. Lord Frederick Cavendish having explained the object of establishing such a college, the Duke of Devonshire formally declared it open, after which the company adjourned to luncheon at the Great Northern Station Hotel, His Grace occupying the chair. A number of toasts were given and appropriately acknowledged. The proceedings were brought to a close in the evening, when a meeting was held in the Town Hall, for the purpose of hearing an address by Dr. Lyon Playfair. If the success that has attended Owen's College, Manchester, may be taken as affording a just criterion, we may anticipate that a long and honourable career is in store for this new College of Science.

This being the season when Members of Parliament make a clean breast of their Parliamentary performances, and take counsel with their constituents as to the present and future state of the political world, it is a matter of course that nearly every issue of the Times, and other daily papers, should contain accounts of these extra Parliamentary utterances. Among the latest and most noteworthy of these have been the addresses of Messrs. Norwood and Wilson to their constituents at Hull, the most important topics to which the honourable gentlemen referred being the shipping interest, the legislation in connection therewith, and the crusade of Mr. Plimsoll against unseaworthy ship owners. Mr. Leatham, at Huddersfield, scarcely knew how to express his regret at the retirement of Mr. Gladstone from the leadership of the Liberal party. And lastly, though the occasion hardly comes under this particular category of extra parliamentary speeches, the Chancellor of the Exchequer has been paying a visit to Middlesborough, for the purpose of inspecting the grand improvements now in course of progress with a view to improving the navigation of the river Tees. The interest on this occasion centered in the ceremony of laying the first stone of the Normandy Graving Dock, a ceremony which was very skilfully performed by Sir Stafford Northcote, amid great enthusiasm. The right honourable gentleman had previously inspected the extensive works undertaken by the Tees Conservancy Board, being afterwards entertained at luncheon in a tent erected for the occasion on the iron platform on which stands the Fifty Buoy Lighthouse. After the labours of the day Sir Stafford returned to Marton Hall, the seat of Mr. Bolckow, M.P. for Middlesborough, whose guest he is during his visit.

After laying the foundation stone of the Normandy Graving Dock, the Chancellor of the Exchequer improved his Masonic experience by laying the first stone of the Cleveland Library and Philosophical Institute, at Middlesborough, on Thursday. This Institution dates its origin only about twelve years back, when a library was commenced and an annual course of lectures established for the education of all classes, in matters of local interest, such as geology, botany, and the staple industry of the district. The Society now numbers between 400 or 500 members, and so great has been the increase in members, that the original quarters have become too small. Hence it was resolved to erect new premises, at about a cost of £4,000, and it was of this new structure that Sir Stafford Northcote laid the first stone on the day mentioned. The ceremony having been duly performed, a cordial vote of thanks was voted to the Right Honourable gentleman, who then, in company with Messrs. Bolckow, Dodds, and others, made a short excursion to the Cleveland Hills, and inspected the mine, some 500 feet deep, which is justly regarded as the most interesting feature in the district. In this mine a seam of ironstone, sixteen feet thick, is being worked, and though the Company are only working to about one-fourth of their power, a thousand tons of ore are being raised daily. Having explored the different workings, lunch was served in a temporary dining room extemporised and tastily decorated for the occasion in one of them. In the evening Sir Stafford was entertained at a banquet given by the Mayor and Corporation in the Odd Fellows' Hall, over 200 guests being invited to meet him. The toast of the evening was, of course, that of "Her Majesty's Ministers," with which was coupled the name of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. It is needless to add that the toast was cordially received and appropriately acknowledged.

The contest for the vacancy in the Court of Aldermen, caused by the retirement of Sir Sills John Gibbons, Bart., Ward of Castle Baynard, was a very close one; Bro. S. C. Hadley receiving 121, and Mr. Geo. Cockerell 120 votes. At first the latter gentleman announced his intention of challenging the verdict, but he has since given up the idea, so that Bro. Hadley's election to the honourable position of Alderman is now assured, and will be publicly announced by the Lord Mayor on Wednesday next. The Lord Mayor elect, Mr. Alderman Cotton, is endeavouring to introduce some novel features in this year's civic pageant. He has suggested to the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs' Committee, now sitting at Guildhall, the propriety of inviting the leading trades to send in plans and designs of trophies to form part of the Show. In the event of their falling in with this suggestion, Alderman Cotton farther suggests that the Civic Guilds should support such trophies with their banners, and in any other way that may seem feasible. It is also proposed that detachments of all the Metropolitan volunteer regiments, and from other parts of the county, should form part of the procession. If the idea be carried out, we shall have something quite out of the common in the way of Lord Mayor's Shows this year. But even if the idea should not find favour, the City Marshal and the Civic Coach will, we doubt not, prove as attractive as ever, especially to country cousins, and the little citizens and citizenesses not yet in their teens.

Though the weather last Friday was not quite so favourable as might have been wished, the novel idea of a cab show at the Alexandra Palace proved a great success. The show included cabs, cab-horses, and designs for cabmens' shelters, nor was cabby himself over-looked, for prizes were awarded to those who could give the best evidence of good conduct, who had been longest in the service of one employer, who had restored the greatest number of articles left in cabs, and who had had the longest experience as temperance men. As cabmen are known for their skill in chaffing, we think there might have been added prizes for those who have uttered the greatest number of decent bons mots. No doubt Punch, Judy and Fun would have come forward liberally with donations for a class of men who have figured so successfully and so amusingly in their columns. But this by the way. The exhibition was under the patronage of Lord Carrington, Lord Grosvenor, M.P., Sir Charles J. Palmer, Cardinal Manning, and Mr. Roger Eykyn, all of whom were present. Among the judges were Professor Fleming and Sir Edward Lee, together with two practical cab owners, nominated by the Cab-drivers' Benevolent Association, namely, Mr. John Turner, badge 8149, and Henry Sayer, badge 1672. Among the exhibitors was H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, who sent a splendid specimen of a hansom. In Class 1, for the exhibitors of the best conditioned cab-horse and best appointed two wheeled cab, in service for not less than six months, G. Bishops, of Taunton Mews, took the first prize, and W. Rees, of Eglon Mews, the second. In Class 2, for Proprietor of best horse and four-wheeled cab, under the same conditions, John W. Dove, of Edward Street, Dorset Square, was placed first, and W. James, of Trinity Mews, second. Messrs. Forder of Wolverhampton took the first prize in Class 3, the most convenient and economical two-wheel cab; Mr. C. Thorne, of Norwich, being adjudged second honours; Messrs. Martin and Co., of Birmingham, and G. R. Blackwell, of John Mews, Gray's-inn-road, were first and second respectively in the four-wheeled cab class. In class 5, for best conditioned cab-horse in actual work for three years, the prizes were awarded to D. H. Lewis, Chalk Farm, and John Dove. G. Bishops took the prize in class 6 for the best horse driven for over four years in the shafts of a cab. In class 7, for horses that had served over five years, W. C. Holland, Chelsea, and Mary Dale, Brunswick-square, were respectively first and second. Mrs. Ruth Parson, of Kennington Cross, with her bay-mare, in constant work for over seventeen years, took the prize in class 8, horses over eight years in work. John Dunn, badge 1091, took first prize for good conduct, having seen forty-six years of service as a driver; George Hardy took the prize for having been the longest time in the same employer's service, namely thirty-five years. Mr. John Gibson, architect, took the prize offered for the best and most economical design for a cabman's shelter. Altogether the directors of the Alexandra Palace and cabmen have every reason to be pleased with the result of this first experiment, and we trust it may be only the first of a long series of similar exhibitions. On Saturday there was a Venetian fête, on Tuesday an effective rendering of La Sonnambula, by the Carl Rosa Company, and for to-day is announced Balfe's favourite opera, The Bohemian Girl.

On Tuesday the Seventh Annual Cat Show was held at the Crystal Palace. There were considerably over three hundred animals exhibited, ranged in no less than forty-nine classes. One of the judges was Mr. Harrison Weir, and among the numerous patrons may be mentioned Lady D. Nevill, Mrs. Cashel Hoey, and Mr. Darwin. The exhibits included every variety of the domestic cat, and many of them were splendid specimens of feline beauty, the best in the whole show being an English short-haired tabby, weighing just 18 lbs. On Saturday last the twentieth season of winter concerts opened, with an average good programme, the first piece on the list being the late Sir Sterndale Bennett's overture "The Naiades," with selections from Mozart, Beethoven, Chopin, Gounod, and last of all, Herr Wagner's overture, "Der fliegende Hollander." The second of this series, to-day, will include selections from Mendelssohn, Haydn, Chopin, and a new overture by Mr. W. G. Cusins, "Love's Labour Lost." The vocalists are Madame Sinico and Mr. Vernon Rigby; pianiste, Mdlle. Anna Mehlig; and the conductor, Mr. A. Manns. Among other novelties here may be mentioned the new Skating Rink, which will be under cover, and be opened to-day. This evening is announced as the opening night of a series of Promenade Concerts at the Agricultural Hall, Islington.

Mr. George Potter, Editor of the Beehive and member of the London School Board, is determined, and very properly we think, to bring the Englishman to task for describing him as a rogue and a sham. The first summons against Dr. Kenealy failed, it being shown that Dr. Kenealy was neither Editor nor proprietor of the journal in question. But nothing daunted by this, Mr. Potter's Counsel applied for a summons against Mr. Bradley as the publisher, and it is proposed to indict Mr. Maurice Kenealy at the Sessions. The result, as regards Mr. Bradley, is his committal for trial by Alderman Sir Robert Carden, bail being allowed, however, himself in £100, and two securities in £50 each, afterwards altered to a single security of £100.

There is little to record in the way of sport. Pheasant-shooting commenced on the first instant. There has been a Croquet Tournament at Brighton, and Captain Webb is still the hero of the hour wherever he goes. The subscription list by this time must be a tolerable heavy one, as it should be, for his feat is unexampled. Coursing commenced last month, and the season for football is just being entered upon, so that, as we have remarked before, we shall soon be studying all the wonderful mysteries of drop kicks, behinds, forwards, half and quarter-backs, scrummages, hots, posters, goals, tries, &c., &c. If any of our readers are anxious to know what all this means, let him refer to Mr. Alcock's admirably compiled football annual for this year, and he will there obtain all the needful information.

A fire of greater magnitude than usual broke out on Thursday evening, at the newly erected mansion of Mr. Henry A. Hankey, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster. The house, indeed, has not yet been inhabited, for the workmen were still engaged in putting the last touches before Mr. Hankey moved into it. The house was very large, being five stories high, and some idea of its value may be gathered from the fact that the building and its contents were insured in the London and Liverpool and Globe Company, for between £40,000 and £50,000. Most of the furniture was saved, but nearly the whole of the building was completely destroyed, leaving only the bare walls standing. The first engines to arrive were those of the Wellington Barracks and these did great service in arresting the progress of the flames. The fire steamers arrived shortly, but though the men worked with a will, only two out of the twenty bedrooms were saved, as were the dining and billiard-rooms, but the drawing-room, concert-hall, and reception-room were destroyed. No life was endangered as the warning came early enough to ensure escape, but a drummer and private of the Coldstream Guards were injured, the latter so severely that his removal to the hospital became necessary. One of the firemen, too, on whom a beam fell was also conveyed thither.

From France we hear of dissensions in the Ministry. Considering what a heterogeneous body it is, we are by no means surprised at this report. Great difficulties are anticipated at the beginning of the approaching session. From Spain we learn that six Alphonsist columns have been organised for the better pursuit of the Carlists in the province of Gerona. The latter are bombarding Pampeluna, but the damage done by the shells seems to be immaterial. There is, in fact, a good deal of fear among the inhabitants, but fortunately no serious amount of danger. His Holiness the Pope has received an envoy from the Shah of Persia. The latter thanks the Pope for his letter and presents, and promises that all Roman Catholics in Persia shall be protected and respected in the exercise of their religion. Might not Pius IX. take a leaf out of the Shah's book, and leave Freemasons unmolested in the exercise of their religion? The approaching visit of the Emperor of Germany to Milan is being pretty generally discussed, and no doubt the Italians from the King downwards will accord his Majesty a most enthusiastic reception. They are directly indebted to Prussia for Venice, and indirectly for Rome, so there is every reason why they should greet him heartily. As regards the Herzegovina, we imagine the insurrection must be pretty well on its last legs. We hear of occasional engagements, in which, whenever Turkish troops are engaged, they send their enemies to the right about in double quick time. If now and again we hear of insurgent successes, we fancy the telegram should be read excesses at the expense of inoffensive Turkish women and children and their property. The Earl of Derby has recently stated that when the European Consuls were lately traversing the disturbed districts, the principal difficulty they experienced was in finding any insurgents. So much for the boastful telegrams about great defeats of Turkish troops, which a fortnight or two since came in such numbers from Servia and Vienna. Happily the Great Powers have determined upon following a policy of non-intervention. Turkey, for once, will be left to deal with her own subjects. Doubtless, when the disturbances are at an end, we shall hear of the Sultan having acceded to the prayers of his subjects for certain reforms. Our difficulties with China and Burmah, according to the latest advices, appear to be in a fair way of being settled, but we must not be too hopeful. It is no good shouting till you are out of the wood. The Chinese are as great in deception as in failing to carry out their promises. John Bull may yet find it necessary to chastise John Chinaman, and will do so certainly if the murderers of one of her Majesty's Consular servants are not duly punished by the Chinese Government. By advices from America we hear that the recent storms in Texas have been very disastrous both to life and property. Over a hundred lives have been lost, and property destroyed to the estimated extent of five million dollars. The velocity of the wind is said at one time to have been at the rate of fifty miles an hour. We doubt not steps will be promptly taken to repair the damage, and equally certain are we that, if subscriptions are opened in this country, a good round sum will be raised.

The election at the Quarterly Court of the Needlemakers' Company was held on Thursday, and Brother J. C. Parkinson, Deputy Provincial Master for Middlesex, and W.M. of the Alexandra Palace Lodge, was unanimously elected Master for the ensuing year. Bro. Sir George Elliott, Bart., and Dr. Ramsey were elected Wardens.

Bro. Fred Godfrey and the Band of the Coldstream Guards played at the Aquarium, Brighton, on Saturday, and Bro. Maclagan has been re-engaged, his artistic performances having been received with great applause.

On Wednesday, the 20th instant, a new Lodge will be consecrated in the province of Essex. By special permission of the Earl of Rosslyn P.G.M. Scotland, this Lodge will be designated the "Rosslyn Lodge," and will stand No. 1543 on the roll. The ceremony of consecration will be performed by the M.W. Bro. C. J. Martyn, P. Grand Chaplain, assisted by the V.W. Rev. Spencer R. Wigram, Grand Chaplain, and other brethren. Two o'clock in the afternoon is the hour fixed for the ceremony.

H.R.H. Prince Leopold will take up the freedom of the City, to which he is entitled by patrimony, at a special meeting of the Court of Common Council, on the 25th instant. After the ceremony the Prince will be entertained at a dejeunér.

We regret to have to announce that Bro. R. W. Little, P.G.W. Middlesex, and Secretary of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, is labouring under severe indisposition, with an affection of the throat. We fear he will not be able to be present at the Election this day (Saturday).

The election of six candidates for the Girls' School will take place to-day, the poll opening at 1 p.m. and closing at 3 p.m. On Monday there will be an election of 10 candidates for the Boys' School, the number of applicants being 58. The ballot will in this case also commence at 9 a.m. and close at 3 p.m.

The marriage of Viscount Castlereagh, eldest son of Bro. the Marquis of Londonderry, with Lady Theresa, eldest daughter of the Earl of Shrewsbury, premier Earl of England, was celebrated last Saturday at Alton Towers, the seat of the noble Earl.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN.—It was in Philadelphia that Franklin first became a printer on his own account; but he had previously visited England, and worked as a journeyman in a London office. This was in 1725, when he was only nineteen: by the middle of 1726 he was back in Philadelphia, and it was in that city that he made his first advances to independence. His industry was boundless; no labour that was honest he considered beneath him; he never stooped to the vulgar folly of setting himself above his work. The ingenuity of his mind and the readiness of his hands made him so varied a master of his craft that he could cast types, make printer's ink, cut wood-engravings, and execute vignettes in copper. Opening an office of his own, he was chosen by the Pennsylvanian Assembly to be their printer. Philadelphia was his foster-city, and he owed to it more than to the city of his birth. It was there that he speculated and wrote; it was there that he started a newspaper; it was there that he published "Poor Richard's Almanack," and delighted the thrifty with the proverbial philosophy of money getting. In Philadelphia he resided the greater part of his life, advancing education, founding libraries and philosophical societies, promoting social improvements, and making those experiments in electricity which have tamed the lightning, and converted it from the brilliant terror of the heavens into the orderly servant of man. He was not an idealist in science; he brought it down, literally, to the fireside, and to the lamp upon the table. But, though nothing of a poet, he loved music, and invented the harmonica, the knowledge of which he is said to have concealed from his wife until the instrument was perfect, when, waking her with it at night, she thought it was the music of angels.—From "Cassell's History of the United States" for October.

THE ELIZABETHAN POETS.—The land was full of song in Elizabeth's time. Music of the voice was cultivated, part-songs and madrigals were a common social pleasure. Educated men, who had no thought of calling themselves men of letters, could write pleasant verse, and sing it too. To be able to write pleasant verse was a mark of good breeding in England, as in Italy, and this was caused in some degree by imitation of Italian fashions. Much of the verse written, and more or less valued, in Elizabeth's reign, has passed away. The good remains; but of the good, perhaps, there has been as much lost as preserved.—From "Cassell's Library of English Literature."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The extraordinary variations of temperature attending the early autumn are extremely trying to the delicate clerical, the weak, and nervous. All troubled by these affections should resolve to resist no longer strengthening and regulating medicine immediately commence its use, and thereby set at that feeling of restlessness which before disordered digestion and defective secretion of bile. One of Holloway's Pills taken at or near bed-time and followed at bed-time by a dose sufficiently large to act aperiently, will speedily recruit the failing functions and restore order throughout the whole system. A treatment so safe in operation and so successful in result should be known and practised when cold and sundry other evils are attempting to gain a vexatious footing.

The resignation of a Past Master was accepted with regret, and several propositions for initiation were handed in. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren, 108 in number, sat down to a banquet provided by Bro. W. G. Jennings, of the Albion Tavern Company, and superintended by Bro. Kieping. The W.M., in proposing the toast of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales M.W.G.M., alluded to his intended visit to India, and he, as well as every one present, wished him God speed on his voyage and a safe return. He was sure in India His Royal Highness would be received with that brotherly love and enthusiasm that was always accorded him in England. Bro. E. P. Albert P.M. returned thanks for the toast of the Earl of Carnarvon, Pro Grand Master, and the rest of the Grand Officers. The W.M. then proposed the toast of the Benevolent Fund attached to the Lodge, and stated the Fund was in a prosperous state; they had over £1,100 in hand, and he had much pleasure in informing the brethren that Bro. A. Auerbaun, who had just returned from the Cape of Good Hope, had given the sum of five guineas to the Fund, Bro. H. Hymans had given four guineas to constitute him a Vice-President, and the newly initiated brethren, Bros. Nourick and Wasserbery had contributed the sums of one guinea each, while Bro. Schuldenfice had given the sum of half a guinea. (Cheers.) Bro. M. Spiegel returned thanks for the toast. Bro. Nourick replied to the toast of the newly initiated brethren. Bro. Obed. Roberts I.P.M., in proposing the toast of the W.M., was received with loud and prolonged cheers, showing the popularity of the W.M. He said, it was a pleasing duty to propose that brother's health. The Lodge may be congratulated in having one to preside over them who was so thoroughly proficient in his various duties; he hoped they would drink the toast with that amount of enthusiasm the W.M. so well deserved. (Cheers.) The W.M. said he thanked Bro. Roberts for the high encomiums he had passed on him, and the brethren for their approbation, his only aim was to do his duty to the Lodge, and he hoped ever to merit their regard and esteem. St. Peter's Lodge No. 442.—On Thursday evening, 23rd ult., the brethren of St. Peter's Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons met at the Masonic Hall, Boroughbury, in response to notice issued by the W.M., Bro. E. H. Griffin, to receive, as a gift to the Lodge, a large and beautiful likeness of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, photographed from life by Watkins, and beautifully coloured by hand, framed by Bro. Gladwell, to which is annexed the following inscription: "H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G., &c., &c., Most Worshipful Grand Master of England. Presented by H.S.H. the Dowager Countess Gleichen to St. Peter's Lodge, No. 442, to commemorate the Royal Installation on the 28th April 1875. Brother Keddy had the honour of representing the illustrious donor, in formally presenting this gift, at a Lodge of Emergency, held at the Masonic Hall, Peterborough, the 23rd day of September 1875. Brother E. H. Griffin W.M., Brother W. Dixey Secretary." The following brethren were present:—Bros. Griffin W.M., Pilcher J.W., Bockle P.M., E. Vergette P.M., Parisar P.M., Penk Treas., Dixey, Sec., E. Vergette jun. S.D., Jones J.D., Marson P.G.D.O.C., Keddy, Beeby, Pearson, Bays and Rotherford; Foskey S.D., and Allen P.M. P.P.G.S.W. Lodge No. 373; Robertson, Lodge No. 261. Several brethren who were previously engaged for the evening sent letters of apology to the W.M., regretting their absence, and the inclemency of the evening prevented many from the country being present. The Lodge being opened, the Secretary (Brother Dixey) read the circular letter convening it. Brother Keddy rose, and, in due and ancient form, presented the picture to the W.M. for the benefit and use of St. Peter's Lodge, No. 442. Brother Keddy remarked that it was gratifying to himself that he was permitted, in the name of Her Serene Highness, to offer for the acceptance of the Lodge so appropriate a present as this tribute of respect to Masonry, as represented by His Royal Highness. The Grand Master of English Freemasonry had already proved himself worthy of the high and honourable position, and His Royal Highness had honoured Freemasonry by accepting the office as head of the Craft, whilst Protestantism would also be the gainer, for the cardinal principles of Freemasonry were inspired by the Holy Bible. It was to be hoped that His Royal Highness might favour Peterborough with his presence at the next annual provincial gathering in May next. The Countess knew nothing of St. Peter's Lodge, but as she insisted on making him a present for services rendered, extending over a period of several months, he (Brother Keddy) suggested to Her Serene Highness, who was residing in the county of Suffolk, that such a gift as this portrait would be the most gratifying to himself and also most acceptable to the brethren. The Countess left England on the 16th ult. for Bombay, en route for her home in the Punjab, where she took up her residence shortly after her bereavement, and since then, for nearly twenty years, had devoted her life to the education and care of the young, and was known and beloved by all classes. She was the first lady who drew the attention of the Government to the importance of the work to which she was devoting her life, and she had the gratification to find that, in order to carry out her desires, funds from the Treasury were placed at her disposal. Bro. Bays observed that this presentation was, he felt certain, the greatest honour that had been conferred upon St. Peter's Lodge. Bro. Ed. Vegette P.M. and Bro. Buckle P.M. made a few observations expressive of their appreciation of the gift. The W.M. said he had great pleasure and honour in accepting this very beautiful and admirable likeness of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in his official clothing as Grand Master of England; and closed his observations by thanking Bro. Keddy for having been the means of the Lodge becoming possessed of such a valuable tribute to loyalty and Masonry. A unanimous vote of thanks was accorded to her Serene Highness. At the close of the Lodge the brethren partook of an excellent supper, Bro. Vergette P.M. having presented an excellent haunch of venison. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and duly responded to, and after a most agreeable evening the brethren retired to their respective homes.

Bethell, Parker, Lowenthal and Bull, and a goodly assemblage of the brethren. The Lodge having been opened in due form, and the minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed, Mr. Frederick Jackson Wray and Mr. George Edwin Saunders were initiated. Bros. Barrow, Cumbers, and Ochsenbein, were passed to the 2nd degree; and Bros. Dovey, Oakshette, and Bause, were raised to the 3rd degree. After the transaction of some routine business the Lodge was closed, and the meeting adjourned till Tuesday, 7th December next.

Faith, 581, J. Moorhouse, Imperial George, 78, John Taylor Secretary, Ashbury, 1459. Business—Minutes of last regular meeting read and confirmed. Ballot was taken, and proving favourable, for Mr. Walter Nicholson, he was regularly initiated by the W.M. A communication having been read from Provincial Grand Lodge, and hearty good wishes given by the visitors, the Lodge was closed at 6.40 p.m. The brethren sat down to an excellent supper provided by Bro. Potts. After the usual Masonic toasts had been given and responded to, the W.M. proposed that of the visitors, and laid particular stress upon having his friend and brother, the W.M. of the Faith, amongst them, the toast was received with great enthusiasm, and in response Bro. Moxon said he had received great pleasure in being at the meeting, in fact, he had enjoyed himself so much that he felt quite at home; he also spoke in glowing terms of the excellent working of the Lodge. After the toasts of the W.M., I.P.M., and officers had been duly honoured, the W.M. called upon the S. and J. Wardens for their toasts, after which the brethren separated at 9.30 p.m.

Duncombe Lodge, No. 1486, Kingsbridge.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday last, a pleasant feature which this young and flourishing Lodge has inaugurated being noticeable, the interchange of fraternal courtesies with neighbouring Lodges. Bro. John Heath P.M. P.P.G. Officer, and other brethren of Pleiades Lodge, Totnes, responded to an invitation of the W.M., Bro. James Haynes, and attended at the labours of the evening, Bro. Heath effectively and impressively performing the solemn ceremony of raising. A proposal was made by Bro. Charles Fox I.P.M., and seconded by Bro. Haynes W.M., to contribute £2 2s to the proposed memorial window in Plymouth Guildhall, in commemoration of the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, which proposition was unanimously agreed to, the brethren showing their enthusiasm by voluntarily raising a quarter of a guinea each from several members, by which it is hoped that a sum of five guineas may be thus devoted. Duncombe Lodge, as the youngest Lodge in the Province, was specially noticeable in the celebration, and thus peculiar interest is felt in the memorial of the event. The Lodge being duly closed, the brethren adjourned for refreshments, over which the merits of the Fortescue Annuity Fund (Devon), and the Boys' and Girls' Schools were discussed, a suggestion being thrown out that every brother should contribute one shilling monthly to Masonic Charities. The brethren then adjourned at an early hour, the visiting brethren having to drive thirteen miles to their home.

Past Masters, Bros. J. Latimer P.G.S.W., J. B. Gover P.P.A.D.C., J. J. Avery. Visitors—Bros. J. S. Bunce S.W. 105, J. Box J.W. 189, W. Crimp I.G. 1255, F. Pinkham 105. Business—After the minutes were read and confirmed, the ballot was taken for several candidates, and having been declared unanimous, Mr. T. Westlake was initiated. The Lodge was opened in the second degree, and Bro. Henry Longman was passed. The W.M. then introduced the subject of the Masonic Memorial Window in the Guildhall, to commemorate the visit of H.R.H. The Prince of Wales at the opening of that building, expressing his confidence that the Lodge would be liberal in their contributions. Bro. J. Latimer, Past Provincial Grand Senior Warden, then gave a very clear and lucid explanation of the scheme. Bro. James Avery Treasurer proposed, and Bro. J. P. Rogers J.W. seconded, and it was carried unanimously, that the sum of five guineas be voted, and that sum to be further augmented by the Lodge if necessary. The brethren of the Lodge contributed about ten guineas independent of this vote. Such an example by the youngest Lodge of the Province is worthy of notice and commendation. The Lodge was closed with the accustomed prayer at 9.30.

JAMES PRYOR, Manager.

Abridged Opinions of the Press on the Lombard Deposit Bank Limited.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.—"The class who cannot bank with the houses that are in the ascendant have a pleasant alternative—they can put their money in the Lombard Deposit Bank and sleep in peace, knowing that their money is safe and that the bank may be depended on."

WEEKLY TIMES.—"They had faith in the Building Society, which had been a success, as it promised to be, and they believed in the Lombard Bank. The event proved that their belief was well founded."

NEWS OF THE WORLD.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank, which was established in 1869, is now strong and sturdy on its feet, with a promise of a hale and hearty old age."

THE COURIER.—"The directors do not come before the public as a company which has no past by which to estimate the future, and whose present existence gives no certain test of the future. On the contrary, it has a successful past and a flourishing present. The progress already made by the Lombard Bank must be highly gratifying to all interested in it."

SUNDAY TIMES.—"Everybody is mutually benefited, and every one co-operates, thus one of the fundamental principles of political economy is recognised and acted upon with prominent success."

THE HOUR.—"Experience has proved that there is almost no limit to the success of companies such as this, which conduct their business on sound principles, and the Lombard has been fortunate in securing a good list of trustees and directors."

CHRISTIAN GLOBE.—"The Lombard Bank is qualified to suit the convenience of a large class of people, unable to avail themselves of the advantages offered by larger establishments."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The principles on which it is based are just and equitable, and its management economical."

LONDON MIRROR.—"The Lombard Bank is an outgrowth of the Lombard Building Society, which has been established as a company since 1869, and has more than fulfilled the expectations of its shareholders."

DRAWING-ROOM GAZETTE.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank, started on a basis of established success, offers various advantages to the public on so obviously safe a principle as needs only to be known in order to command wide and general acceptance."

WEST LONDON OBSERVER.—"If any one has his doubts respecting the security and stability of building societies, we have an instance in point which will dispel his unbelief—we allude to the Lombard Building Society, which has flourished so well, that, although not yet in its teens, it has taken unto itself a bank, and flourishes yet more and more."

CHELSEA NEWS.—"We cannot give better advice to those who wish to know where to deal with a banking company with feelings of security, than to refer them to this establishment, whose life thus far has been so full of vigour and so prosperous."

ST. JAMES'S CHRONICLE.—"The directors of the Lombard Bank (Limited) offer a boon alike to those who are prepared to deposit money at a moderate but secure rate of interest, and to such whom circumstances oblige to have recourse to a loan, the conditions of which are unusually easy and straightforward."

NORTH MIDDLESEX CHRONICLE.—"The banking department of the above company appears to us to be conducted in the spirit of liberality. All the advantages of a City Bank are to be had without the exhorbitant balance usually demanded or expected as a remuneration for keeping the account."

THE RELIGIONIST.—"There is obviously a large and legitimate field for a sound and useful investment of capital in this manner."

SHEFFIELD POST.—"Owing, therefore, to the sound principles upon which it is conducted, we believe the Lombard Bank to be one of the safest in existence."

INSURANCE RECORD.—"Established on well-tried and approved principles of mutuality and beneficial co-operation, and has a trustworthy and respectable list of trustees and directors to conduct its affairs."

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—"The bank has won the confidence of its shareholders, and now requests the support of the public generally, which we think may fairly be given and with advantage, since the company offers peculiar facilities for the use of money."

ENGINEERING AND BUILDING TIMES.—"In these times when the larger institutions are conducting business on a dangerous system, inviting enormous losses and paying scarcely any interest for deposits a society like the Lombard is doing a more scrutinising business which, with care, may bring out the most satisfactory results."

CHRISTIAN UNION.—"The rates of interest offered on deposits are thus much above the ordinary banking range."

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' GAZETTE.—"The institution has hitherto been worked so economically that each investor has had 10 per cent. per annum on his money."

RAILWAY SERVICE GAZETTE.—"No doubt so promising an institution will be extensively patronised in the railway service."

BUILDERS' WEEKLY REPORTER.—"By avoiding the mistakes of its predecessors, is enabled to afford to both investors and borrowers well-nigh unprecedented advantages."

FARRINGDON TIMES.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank is now in its sturdy youth, giving promise of growing up into a still more sturdy manhood. It is eminently a popular bank, and offers advantages which are at once unusual and solid."

MONETARY AND MERCANTILE GAZETTE.—"We have been asked by an intending investor to peruse the prospectus and balance sheet of the Lombard Bank (Limited), and having done so, we must admit that it appears to present advantages of no ordinary character, and which are particularly worthy of the attention of the provident and thoughtful. We have great pleasure in assuring borrowers that they will find it an honest, bond-fide source for obtaining advances on securities. It further enhances our pleasure in directing a borrower to this genuine source, knowing the many traps that are advertised every day to catch and plunder the unwary by a class pretending to lend money on moderate terms, with a view of getting fees."

EAST LONDON OBSERVER.—"The great banks, as a matter of course, monopolise the lion's share of business, but there are others willing to do a quiet but sure trade. Amongst such is the Lombard Deposit Bank."

WEST LONDON ADVERTISER.—"If anybody is in search of a respectable banking concern with whom they may wish to have money dealings, we can direct them to the Lombard Deposit Bank, Lombard-street, and at the West-end, in Regent-street. The man with money with which he wishes to deal has his choice. He may put his money in the bank on deposit, and receive moderate, sound, real, and sure interest; or he may purchase a share and exercise his right as a shareholder."

THE HOUR.—"The success which attended the operations of the Lombard Building Society, established in 1869, has suggested to the promoters the plan of instituting a deposit bank. Like other banks, the Lombard Deposit Bank will endeavour to make money by borrowing and lending; but it will do both on terms much more favourable for its customers, and will deal in much smaller amounts than is usual. Shares in the Lombard Bank may be applied for with confidence."

CHRISTIAN GLOBE.—"Based upon sound commercial principles, the success of the Lombard Bank has been such as to warrant the expectations first entertained of it. By the business operations of this establishment, all classes may have a banking account."

THE DRAPER.—"The Lombard Bank undertakes to lend money, as well as to receive money for investment; and it appears to us that the calculations made are such as to give the utmost soundness to the concern and ample security to investors."

THE REPORTER.—"It is becoming more and more important every day to the commercial world to have a legitimate and safe channel where temporary accommodation can be secured at a fair but profitable rate on securities not available under the Building Societies Acts. With a view of meeting these requirements the directors have projected, as a distinct company, the Lombard Deposit Bank (Limited)."

INVESTORS GUARDIAN.—"The safety of the depositor depends more upon the use which is made of his money than upon any other element, and the Lombard Deposit Bank gives that security with a marginal guarantee of a subscribed and paid-up capital."

EDUCATIONAL REVIEW.—"This bank is based upon sound banking principles, and we see no reason why it should not prove quite as successful as the building society of which it is an outgrowth. Thus far the most sanguine anticipations have been verified."

FORESTERS' FREE PRESS.—"The Lombard Bank is managed by gentlemen who have had considerable commercial experience, and who have hitherto handled other people's money with honour and probity, and paid, by a system of strict economy, every investor 10 per cent. per annum."

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' GAZETTE.—"No doubt so promising an institution will be extensively patronised by commercial men."

DRAWING-ROOM GAZETTE.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank (Limited) offers all the security of the joint stock system with a much higher rate of interest to depositors, and it possesses this great advantage over the commercial establishments termed 'co-operative,' that it has been working steadily and most profitably for six years in connection with the Lombard Building Society, and by economical and skilful management paying 10 and 12 per cent. per annum to every investor."

CHRISTIAN UNION.—"The Lombard Bank of Deposit, in connection with the Building Society, has a separate capital, and invites deposits of £10 and upwards, and conducts banking business on much the same principles as other London banks, but has, no doubt, a special function as regards the class of business conducted by the building society, or, in other words, property investment."

SHEFFIELD POST.—"Its aim is good, its principles just, its sphere of operations unlimited. Its subscribers have every encouragement."

INVESTORS' GUARDIAN.—"It is a channel which can be safely recommended to those who desire something more than a safe 3 per cent."

And upwards of one hundred provincial newspapers have pronounced the Lombard Companies to offer.

To the Investor—An honest, judicious, and lucrative channel.

"THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, 27 ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sell I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of bumbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

THE FREEMAN'S JOURNAL AND BISHOP DUPANLOUP'S PAMPHLET.

THE appearance of an English version of the Bishop of Orleans's recent pamphlet against Freemasonry affords the Freeman's Journal another opportunity for attacking our Order. We cannot congratulate our contemporary on the achievement of a very brilliant success. There was nothing new to say, but occasionally it is convenient to traverse the same ground. The "damnable iteration" of the same folly at length assumes, in the eyes of some people, an appearance of wisdom. There are folk who are weak-minded enough to believe that a lie repeated many times becomes a truth. Therefore it is we do not severely blame the Freeman's Journal that, in carrying out its policy of denunciation against us, it should keep on pegging away, for an occasional convert to its views may be the result. But some will ask, Why, then, notice these attacks? Well, we have faith in an offensive defence rather than in one that is purely defensive. Having reviewed the tactics of our enemy, we have come to the conclusion that the mine it is so anxious to explode against us is best met by a counter mine. Our generalship may not commend itself to all, but the line we have adopted appears to us the fittest under all the circumstances. Thus it is we meet the enemy, boldly instead of spurning him quietly. Whether this policy is superior to all other policies, or, rather, till it is shown that some other policy is more desirable, it is the one we shall follow in all such cases.

We have said the Freeman's Journal advances no new arguments in support of its attack on the Craft; there were none to advance. Wisely, then, has it contented itself with repeating the stock arguments as to Freemasons being a body of men without religion, and animated by the most profound hatred for all legally constituted governments. Rather be it said, this organ of Popery says "ditto" to these statements of the Rev. Bishop of Orleans. It endorses, also, another argument, which is decidedly unoriginal on the part of Monsignor Dupanloup, that the kings and princes, and, generally speaking, the men in high places, who join our Order are studiously kept in ignorance of the real secrets of Masonry. Their presence in our ranks lends an éclat to the Craft which it could not hope to obtain by any other means. We enrol them accordingly, and initiate them into a few of the more harmless mysteries, but the secrets of the Order, its true aims and purposes, these are sacredly guarded from their knowledge, for this reason: were they known to the royal and princely Masons, they would fly from us in the greatest horror. All these statements sound well. They have a certain air of plausibility about them, and it is very probable they may seduce thoughtless and weak-minded people into believing them. It occurs to us, however, to ask, in the first instance, is a man who has most grossly perjured himself exactly the kind of man whose ipse dixit we accept unreservedly. Masonry is not obligatory upon anybody. They only enter who seek entrance of their own free will and accord. Some of those who bind themselves to guard certain secrets, in due time, and to serve their own foul ends, divulge them to others. Is it in accordance with reason or common sense that such men should be accepted as truthful exponents of the secrets of Masonry. Had they bound themselves to secrecy under some overwhelming sense of fear, or as the only means of escape from some dreadful calamity, the world would to a certain extent absolve them from the crime of perjury. But they voluntarily bound themselves to accept a certain obligation, and in the most shameless manner they break faith. Would the evidence of such a person carry weight with it in any court of law? It is possible, of course, that a liar may for once in his life speak the truth, but the worst of being a liar is that one's word is never accepted. The testimony of a man who has deliberately forsworn himself is worthless, even were his evidence true. It is the reverse of creditable to the Bishop of Orleans's common sense and his knowledge of the world that he should attach the slightest value to the statements of men who have lied in the open day. But there may be concurrent testimony. Where? Why, in the rituals. But a published ritual that contained all or any of the secrets of Masonry is as direct and flagrant a violation of Masonic law as an oral statement of our secrets. Only a dishonourable man would dream of putting pen to paper and describing what he has bound himself not to reveal. Thus the rituals which the Bishop has become possessed of, even if they contained the secrets of Masonry, are as worthless as the oral testimony of the perjurer. Again, certain of our customs are described as being silly. Admitting, for the sake of argument, the accuracy of the description, we bear in mind what a certain poet of old has said:—Dulce est desipere in loco. Horace, heathen as he was, had evidently studied human kind to greater advantage than our French ultramontane prelate of the nineteenth century. Allowing that a table napkin is called a banner, a knife a sword, a glass a cannon, and that toasts are drunk as described by the Bishop, what after all is there but a little harmless folly, as far removed from atheism and political plottings and conspiracies as is the North from the South Pole. We fancy if the Bishop were at a Scottish banquet and saw the toast of the evening drunk with the full honours, he would smile a smile of pity, if not of contempt, that grown men should comport themselves so strangely. Yet a true Scot thinks it no sin to show his enthusiasm in the manner prescribed of custom in his country. The cynic may urge that a "Kentish fire," is an act of lunacy, that to drink a toast with musical honours is directly opposed to the dictates of common sense. We recal what Horace said, "It is pleasant occasionally to make a fool of oneself," and contentedly abandon the cynic to his cynicism. Then as to the various ceremonies of initiation as described by the Bishop. There are one or two passages in his account which justify us in believing that his reverence must have been studying the pages of Verdant Green, and has taken for solemn fact what the author of that exceedingly funny book intended only as a good joke. The next time the Bishop contemplates writing a pamphlet against Freemasonry, let him invest in a French version of the late Captain Marryatt's Percival Keene. He will find in it a most interesting and, as a matter of course, a most authentic account of how is given the sign by which Freemasons make themselves known to each other by day, at all events, if not by night. We need not dwell, however, on what the Bishop regards as the ludicrous aspect of Masonry. We have our customs, and some of them may strike the non-Mason as being extremely silly, but every nation under the sun has certain customs, and each looks upon the other's customs as more or less ridiculous. What is sacred with one people is unholy in the sight of other people, nor has the Bishop any greater right to laugh at Masonic ceremonials, supposing him to have formed a right conception of their nature, than a Mahommedan or Hindu has to ridicule the rites and ceremonies of the Christian Church. However, the climax of absurdity is reached when the Bishop proceeds to show that the society of Masons is always engaged in an unholy war against religion and order. We have frequently pointed out that Freemasonry, while enjoining on its children the most perfect respect for all religions, forbids the discussion of religious questions. It does not say, the moment you enter the precincts of a Masonic Lodge, you cast aside all religious belief and become an atheist. It lays it down absolutely there shall be no religious disputations. The reason is obvious. In Masonry, which respects all creeds equally, as in society, the friendly intercourse of men professing different faiths would be impossible if such discussions were not prohibited. Similarly with subjects political — these are strictly forbidden, and on the same ground. What sort of harmony would prevail at a meeting composed of monarchists, republicans, imperialists, if it were permitted to discuss the merits of the several forms of government which each professed to admire most. There have been Masons who were also political agitators, but these kept their politics outside the portals of the Lodge. What they did had no Masonic sanction. It may be that in some foreign countries the Bible has been banished from some Masonic Lodges, the reason for such banishment being that the members of such Lodges are what are known as free-thinkers. This, however, we regard as a deliberate violation of the first principles of Masonry, and as we should not consider the merits of Christianity properly exemplified in a perjured Christian, so we ask others not to judge of Masonry by what some Lodges or Brethren may do in open violation of its principles. But the completest evidence, to our mind, of the utter worthlessness of the Bishop's denunciation of the Craft, is his promulgation of the theory that there are virtually two systems of Masonry, into the least important of which only is it that princely and noble brethren are admitted; the other system, which contains whatever is dangerous to religion and order, being strictly concealed from them. No one who was truly acquainted with our secrets would knowingly advance so monstrous a proposition. True, there are different phases of the Masonic system, but the scope is the same in each. There are Craft and Arch Masonry, Mark Masonry, Templarism, the Ancient and Accepted Rite, the Rites of Misraim and Memphis, &c., &c. But there is no obstacle to a worthy Brother being elected and initiated into all these various systems if he have time and leisure to pursue his Masonic or quasi-Masonic studies. It is not a brother's rank which keeps him outside the pale of certain systems. It is simply a matter of inclination. If Bishop Dupanloup wishes to know what true Masonry is, let him be initiated. We dare swear he will find that the worst that can be urged against it is not one ten-millionth part of the tithe of what has been urged against Jesuitism. We shall not then, perhaps, find the Freeman's Journal justifying "the continual and uncompromising warfare prosecuted by the Catholic Church against a secret brotherhood which is shown to be a veritable mystery of iniquity, and the hidden ulcer of modern society." We are not quite sure we thoroughly understand this description of the brotherhood. We imagine it means something disagreeable, and are content to leave it without further inquiry.

BOYS' AND GIRLS' SCHOOLS.

WITHIN the last few days there have been held the elections, to fill sundry vacancies in these institutions, and the results will be found elsewhere in our columns. As regards the Girls' School, which we naturally place first in the order of precedence, it is to be noted that six were elected to a corresponding number of vacancies, there being thirty candidates, while for the Boys' School there were fifty-eight candidates, of whom the ten highest, as regards votes, were chosen. It is further noteworthy that in the case of the former institution all, and in the case of the latter, eight out of the ten successful candidates were provincials. Whence come the elect is a matter of comparative indifference, but it is a grand testimony to the will as well as to the perfect organisation of the committees which work for the provincial candidates, that in the one case all, and in the other, four-fifths of the chosen few should have been successful. The metropolis is the head-quarters of Masonry, and there naturally we expect to find the greatest amount of energy in connection with everything that is Masonic. But our provincial brethren apparently beat us hollow in the matter of zeal and organisation on behalf of those whose cause they advocate. Verbum sap. We trust this excellent example will have a due effect on the London brethren, and that when a London candidate is started for either of our institutions they will do their devoirs Masonically as well as manfully. It is immaterial, of course, as we have said before, whence come the successful ones, but any case that is worthy of being entertained is worthy of the most active and zealous support.

But to pass to other matters. As announced in our advertisement columns of the 2nd instant, at a Quarterly General Court of the Girls' School, held last Saturday, three propositions, all having the same object in view, were submitted for the consideration of the governing body. The first of them emanated from Bro. Nunn, and had for object the appropriation, out of the funds of the Institution, of a sum of twenty-five thousand pounds to the purchase of land, and the erection of suitable premises, large enough to accommodate 200 children, instead of the 150 now accommodated. This, though an admirable proposition of its kind, was not adopted. The second proposal was Bro. Rucker's, to the effect that the idea of extending the benefits of the Institution, so as to receive an addition of from thirty to fifty pupils, should be referred to a Select Committee, and that, if necessary, a special general court should be assembled for the purpose of entertaining any proposal the Select Committee might think fit to recommend. Bro. Stewart was the author of the third proposal, that the Infirmary should be utilised for any further increase, room for the invalid girls being obtained in some convenient house. The court appears to have acted with great wisdom in adopting the second of these three ideas, to wit, that the question should be referred to a Select Committee. The idea that naturally suggests itself at the outset is that reference to a Select Committee means shelving the question sine die. Not so, however, in the case before us. Each of the three proposals had for object the enlargement of the School. The only question to be determined was, how best could such enlargement be managed. We cordially endorse the view adopted by the court, not because it was adopted, but because we believe it essential before all things that a matter of this kind should be thoroughly ventilated. We think it unwise that all the invested funds should be utilised for any purpose, be it never so imperative. It is impossible to fix the expenditure at the outset of this or any other similar project. There may be other plans better or worse than that of Bro. Nunn's, but daily experience teaches us that to fix an absolute hard and fast line in the matter of expenditure is well nigh impossible. Bro. Stewart's proposal could only have served the exigencies of the moment. Thus, as far as our poor opinion goes, there was no alternative but to adopt the suggestion of Bro. Rucker—that a Committee of Inquiry should be constituted to determine as to the most desirable plan to be adopted for the extension of the Institution.

As regards the Boys' School a somewhat similar proposition was made—to the effect, namely, that the benefits of the Institution should be extended. As to the desirability of this proposal there can be no second opinion. The Craft plumes itself—and with great reason—on the aid it renders to distressed brethren, and the children of deceased or indigent brethren, and the more that can be done in this direction the more it redounds to our credit. The subscription lists of the current year have been beyond all precedent. The numerical strength of the Craft is daily increasing, and we do not doubt the subscriptions to our Charities will keep pace with our increase in numbers. Yet it behoves us to be discreet in our forward movements. We must be just to the Craft before we are generous in the fulfilment of our Masonic impulses. We must see our way first to securing a regular and stable progress before we think of embarking in a heavy expenditure. Hence it is that, while we feel that a great extension of the benefits of our Masonic Charities is quite possible, and assuredly desirable, we are equally certain that every progressive movement should be cautiously directed. Apathy is a vice that is not unknown, and it may not always be in our power to record such magnificent contributions to our various Masonic Charities as we have recorded this year.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE GRAND ORIENT OF FRANCE.

WE learn, from le Monde Maçonnique for September and October, that this body held its meeting on the 13th—18th ult., both days inclusive. The first session took place at 9 a.m. on Monday, the 13th, Bro. de Saint Jean, President of the Council of the Order, in the Chair, there being present some two hundred Venerables and Delegates. After the usual preliminary formalities, the President referred, with considerable emotion, to the death of Bro. Massol, lately a Vice-President of the Council, a reference which the Assembly received with the customary salute. The Assembly then distributed itself into its several committees for the purpose of electing a President and Secretary for each. The second session was held at 2.30 p.m., in the afternoon, when Bro. de Saint Jean, by 142 out of 185 votes, was chosen President of the Assembly for the meeting of 1875. On Tuesday the names of those appointed by the Council to assist the President in the labours of the session having been announced, the Assembly proceeded to business. The first two propositions were unavoidably adjourned; consequently the third order of the day, having for object the discontinuance of the half-yearly meetings of the Council, was at once proceeded with. Eight of the nine bureaux having pronounced themselves in favour of the proposal, and only one for the maintenance of the existing law, the motion was forthwith carried. An amendment to article 122, proposed by a Lodge in Guadaloupe, les Elus d'Occident, was then discussed. By the article in question metropolitan Lodges cannot initiate a profane till they have first submitted his name to the Grand Orient, which keeps a register of all profanes who have been refused admission, and which, consequently, can oftentimes furnish valuable information respecting candidates proposed for initiation, but Lodges beyond sea are subject to no such rule. The amendment proposed was to the effect that Lodges beyond sea, and in other countries, should furnish to neighbouring Lodges the names of rejected candidates, and, if necessary, the motives for rejection. Six bureaux reported in favour of the proposition, two were ready to accept it in an altered form, while one only was opposed. It was therefore adopted. The next motion was that the election of delegates to the Assembly should be governed by the same prescriptions as the election of Venerables. After a long discussion the Assembly adopted, by a considerable majority, a motion to the effect that delegates should always be chosen from active members of the Lodge of at least two years' standing as Master, and of one year's active membership of the Lodge. On Wednesday the names of those who retired from the Council, but who were eligible for re-election, were announced. These were thirteen in number, including Bro. Massol deceased. After further business a modification of Article 28 of the Constitutions to the effect that Presidents of Lodges provisionally suspended should be tried by the Council of the Order, and so also the Orator who may have been suspended for neglect in causing the Constitutions to be respected. This proposition was rejected, and one adopted to the effect that every President or Orator, so suspended, should have the right to be tried by the Chamber of Appeal as organised under Article 2 of the Judicial Regulations, such appeal to be made within eight days, or the suspension to be sustained. In consequence of the adoption of this latter proposal, Bro. de Saint Jean quitted the chair, and tendered his resignation; but at the pressing instance of all present, the resignation was withdrawn, and Bro. de Saint Jean resumed his presidency.

On Thursday, a proposal to establish courses of English, Spanish, Italian, Geography, &c., &c., as well as German was referred to the Council. Other business of importance having been decided, the session closed, and on Friday the election of thirteen members of Council was proceeded with, several of the retiring members being re-elected. On Saturday, after the accounts for 1874 had been approved, and various financial propositions accepted, Bro. Penchinat delivered a most eloquent address, and the session was brought to a close. The Council then met and elected its officers for the year, the following being the members on whom the choice fell. Bro. de Saint Jean, President; Bros. Cousin and Armand, Vice-Presidents; and Bros. Caubet and Poulle, Secretaries. At the banquet, which closed the proceedings, and was served at 7 p.m., about two-hundred and fifty brethren sat down. In the course of the evening, the patriotic conduct of the Lodges of Alsace and Lorraine, which, when summoned to break off their relations with the Grand Orient of France, preferred to break up their Temples, was referred to by the President, and loud applause followed his remarks.

FREEMASONRY AND RELIGION.

WE have, on more than one occasion, remarked upon the relations existing between Freemasonry and Religion. We have represented the Mason as a devout man, as a sincere man, as a man who thinks liberally, and loves to bestow with a generous hand. Truth and charity are his watchwords, whilst his highest honour and worship are rendered to the Great Supreme, the Divine Architect of the Universe. As in the present, so has he ever been in the past. The earliest traces of Freemasonry extant are invariably associated in some way with religion, and generally with a religion of a higher and nobler type than that prevailing at the time. Whether we seek the source of Masonic fellowship amongst the builders of Solomon's temple, or with the initiated in the ancient Cabirian mysteries, we find that religion lay at the very root of the system, and that, in fact, the very bond itself partook of a sacred and mystic character. The Dionysiacs, again, held principles of religion which show a considerable advance upon the crude and imperfect notions current in their day. They acknowledged a One Supreme Being, from whom all power proceeded, and to whom all honour should be rendered; and many of the doctrines and mysteries which they are asserted to have taught, bear a striking resemblance to the doctrines of Christianity. Coming down to comparatively recent times, we find the Masons taking the lead in, and indeed monopolising for a time the study of, religious Architecture. Then arose those vast and stupendous Cathedrals, which seem to have been wrought by Titans, imbued with a sense of art and religious grandeur above the ken of man. In almost every capital of Europe these monuments of Masonic devotion may be found, but, alas, too often only the beautiful remnants of their pristine glory and magnificence. Occasionally these artists were engaged on secular work, and the Palace of Louvain and other kindred buildings are still extant to demonstrate the greatness of their success. But as a rule they appear to have reserved the best of their work for ecclesiastical structures. The first fruits of their toil they laid at the feet of their Creator. In the Dome at Cologne, in the little church of St. Ouen at Rouen, in the Convents, Abbeys, and Episcopal palaces which the diligent traveller so frequently discovers throughout Saxon and Celtic Europe, in these and such like works we find the choicest specimens of Gothic art scattered with a lavish hand.

We have said that in the past Masonry has very often been associated with religion of a purer and higher type than that generally obtaining at the time. And the reason of this is obvious. The Freemasons as a body have always enjoyed a certain degree of distinction. During the practical period of the Craft in the age of Cathedrals and Churches they were much sought after by the nobility and clergy for their knowledge and skill in architecture, and they were consequently great travellers. They thus, from contact with men of various shades of belief, and different degrees of rank, acquired a breadth and liberality of thought unusual in that age. There is, moreover, ample evidence to be found in their works that they were men of refined culture, and excellent and even sublime conception.

Like other sects, a little in advance of their age, too, the Freemasons have frequently been the object of religious intolerance and persecution. The Romish Church, even at the present day, looks upon Masonry as a confederation of wicked men for evil ends. But its animosity, as will be gathered from another article in to-day's issue, is now confined within the limits of vituperation and misrepresentation. In former times, when the Church had more power, it evinced its hatred in a more unmistakable fashion. We hope on an early occasion to give a sketch in these columns of the persecutions to which the Craft has from time to time been subjected. The fact itself reflects credit on the Order. What Socrates suffered, what the early Christians suffered, what the Lollards, the Lutherans, the Scotch Covenanters suffered, it is surely no disgrace, but rather the reverse, that the Freemasons also have endured with constancy and fortitude.

That Freemasonry should, in the present day, be ever associated with particular religious sects we think a misfortune. The Craft should be broad and comprehensive, recognising only grand and general principles, and disregarding the minute diversities of creed and ceremonial. It has been well said that God made religion, but the Devil invented theology; and it is certain that the Craft has nothing to gain and much to lose in respectability from mixing itself in the strife of contending sects.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF CUMBERLAND AND WESTMORLAND.

By command of Bro. the Right Hon. Earl Bective, Right Worshipful Provincial Grand Master of Cumberland and Westmorland, the annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge was held at the Crown Hotel, Penrith, on Friday, 1st inst., for the purpose of transacting the annual business of the Province. The meeting was held under the banner of the Lodge of Unanimity, No. 339, Penrith, of which Sir R. C. Musgrave is W.M. It was first fixed for Kirkby Lonsdale, and the brethren would have been entertained in a similar way to that of 1867, when the Earl of Bective, M.P., R.W. Provincial Grand Master, was M.W. of the Underley Lodge, which position his lordship holds this year; but the death of his daughter, a fortnight ago, necessitated fresh arrangements, and the place of meeting was changed to Penrith.

There was a numerous attendance of brethren from Penrith, Kendal, Keswick, Kirkby Lonsdale, Appleby, Carlisle, Whitehaven, Workington, Cockermouth, Maryport, Wigton, &c., every one of the eighteen Lodges in the Province being represented. Sir R. C. Musgrave W.M. of Lodge Unanimity was unavoidably absent.

The following Provincial Officers were present:—Bro. John Whitwell R.W.D.P.G.M., Bro. Jas. Porter S.G.W., Bro. John Talbot J.G.W., Bro. the Rev. F. W. Wicks P.G. Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. Wm. Beeby, M.A., Assistant P.G. Chaplain, Bro. John Lemon P.G. Treasurer, Bro. W. B. Gibson P.G. Secretary, Bro. Joseph Bintley P.G. Superintendent of Works, Bro. William Gill P.M. 872, P.G. Director of Ceremonies, Bro. William Armstrong Assistant P.G. Director of Ceremonies, Bro. Peter T. Freeman P.G. Organist, Bro. Edward Atter P.G. Pursuivant, Bro. James R. Bain P.G. Steward, Bro. The Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in the billiard-room, at the new Crown Hotel, which proved of far too limited dimensions, and caused much confusion amongst the large number present. Colonel Whitwell, M.P., R.W. Deputy Grand Master, Past Grand Warden of England, presided, in the absence of the Earl of Bective, M.P. After the minutes had been read, the Grand Treasurer's accounts were approved and adopted, as also the Charity Committee's report, in which it was recommended that the support of all Lodges and individual subscribers in the province be accorded to the son of a deceased brother of Solway Lodge, Silloth, in order to insure his admission to the Freemasons' Boys' School in London.

A notice of motion, signed by Bro. Thomas Dodgson, of Millom, was then taken into consideration, to the effect that it was desirable to form an institution in the Province for the education and advancement in life of the children of deceased and distressed Freemasons. A committee was thereupon formed, to report to next meeting, amongst the members being Colonel Whitwell, M.P., Lord Muncaster, M.P., Sir R. C. Musgrave, Bart., Rev. Dr. Simpson (Kirkby Stephen), Rev. E. Cockett (Upperby), &c.

Bro. John Lemon P.M. St. John's Lodge, Wigton, P.P.G.S.W. was unanimously re-elected Provincial Grand Treasurer; and Bro. J. Gardiner P.M. 371, Maryport, was elected Provincial Grand Tyler for the ensuing year.

Brother J. W. Young, 1400, Harrington.

After the officers were invested, the Right Worshipful the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, Colonel Whitwell, addressing the brethren, said they would all remember that at the recent installation of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as Grand Master of the Order, two brethren were appointed from this Province to attend as stewards. They were brethren highly esteemed amongst them, one from the south and the other from the west, and they had discharged their duties on that occasion—no doubt at considerable expense of time and money—in a highly satisfactory manner, and he would suggest that in commemoration of that great event and as a mark of their appreciation of the services of the two brethren, that the stewards' jewel which they were entitled to wear should be presented to them by the Provincial Grand Lodge. A motion embodying the suggestion having been proposed, seconded, and unanimously agreed to, the Deputy Provincial Grand Master, with some highly complimentary remarks, referring to the long and valued services of Brother Lemon, Provincial Grand Treasurer, and to the energy and zeal Brother H. Ranthmell, Past Provincial Grand Director of Ceremonies, had displayed in Freemasonry, presented to each of them the jewel specially designed by Sir A. W. Woods, Garter, G.D.C. England, which was approved by his Royal Highness the Most Worshipful Grand Master, and is to be worn suspended by a ribbon of the Swedish national colours by the stewards who officiated at the installation of his Royal Highness, 28th April 1875. Bro. Lemon thanked the brethren in feeling terms, and said that the jewel they had just presented to him would be highly prized and valued as a token of their regard so long as he lived, and that it would be handed down as an heirloom to generations that would come after him. Bro. Ranthmell said, in thanking the Prov. Grand Lodge, that it did not need this additional proof to convince him of their kindly feelings towards him. He assured them that he felt it was a very great honour to have been appointed to represent as steward so important a province as that of Cumberland and Westmorland on the occasion of the installation of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as Most Worshipful Grand Master of their Order. Whenever he looked upon the jewel which they had just presented to him it would be with two-fold gratification and pleasure; it would recall to his memory that brilliant scene he witnessed in the Albert Hall, in which he had the honour of taking a part, and secondly, but not less, he should value it for the kindly sentiments that had accompanied its presentation from the Provincial Grand Lodge.

A hearty vote of sympathy was unanimously passed to the R.W. Provincial Grand Master, on his recent severe bereavement. A vote of thanks was also given to the brethren of Unanimity Lodge for their kind entertainment of the Provincial Grand Lodge at so short a notice.

After the Lodge was closed, the Brethren were marshalled in order of procession, and marched to the Parish Church, Bective Lodge heading the procession, where an excellent sermon was preached by the Rev. F. W. Wicks, St. Nicholas's, Whitehaven, Provincial Grand Chaplain, from the following text:—Ephesians, c. ii., v. 21—"In whom all the building fitly framed together, groweth into an holy temple in the Lord." Bro. Freeman, Provincial Grand Organist, presided at the organ. Returning to the New Crown Hotel, a banquet was served, Colonel Whitwell, M.P., presiding.

The arrangements of the meeting were admirably carried out under the experienced and energetic management of Bro. W. B. Gibson P.M. and P.Z. 119, Whitehaven, P.P.S.G.W. and Provincial Grand Secretary, assisted by Bro. William Gill P.M. 872 P.P.G.D. of Ceremonies, and Bro. W. Kirkbride P.M. Secretary of the Lodge of Unanimity.

The town was quite busy at the time of the procession, and the bells of the church rang out peals during the day, and a flag floated from the old tower.

According to the Monde Maçonnique, fourteen Freemason, of Porto Rico have been condemned to imprisonment for the sole crime of being members of the Craft. The sentence upon three of these unfortunates is imprisonment for four, and upon the other eleven for two years.

The Hebrew Leader of the 1st instant contains a very gracefully worded apology for having, some weeks since, utilised, without acknowledgment, an article that had previously appeared in these columns. We were convinced at the time that the omission of the usual credit was the result of an oversight, and we gladly record that such conviction of ours has been borne out by the facts.

The Keystone records, with deep feelings of regret, the death of Bro. Rev. Thomas Chambers, Grand Chaplain of both Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of Pennsylvania. The Rev. brother was admitted a member of Lodge No. 51, Philadelphia, 22nd May 1851, exalted in Oriental Chapter, No. 183, on 17th April 1856, created a Knight at Templar in St. John's Commandery, No 4, and one of the Charter members of Kadosh Commandery, No. 29. Bro. Chambers died at the ripe age of 78, beloved and respected by all his Brethren and Companions. He was buried with Masonic honours on the 27th ult., Past Grand Masters Bro. John Thompson, Hon. Richard Vaux, Samuel C. Perkins, and Grand Master Bro. Alfred R. Potter acting as pall-bearers.

LODGES OF INSTRUCTION AND LODGE QUARTERS.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.—Lodges of Instruction have been the chief theatre of my labours for the last six and thirty years. I have given them a large amount of attention, and have often wondered why they were not more immediately under the supervision of Grand Lodge. Considering the importance of proper Masonic instruction, I am fully persuaded that it is far too generally left to look after itself. When asked by members, gentlemen of standing and education, how they were to acquire a perfect knowledge of our ritual, I have invariably recommended them to visit some Lodge of instruction presided over by an able preceptor. But, as with the parent Lodge, so with the Lodge of Instruction, they are too frequently held in taverns, and gentlemen do not care to push their way through a crowded bar as is too often the case. I quite agree with you that a better status should be given to Lodges of Instruction. This would be done if a warrant were issued, while if an extra shilling per member throughout the London Lodges were required to be paid annually by each, a sum would be raised that would be sufficient to establish several such Lodges in suitable places, where there would be none of the discomforts which are so often and, in my opinion, with so much reason objected to now.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother,

Fraternally yours,

A WELL WISHER OF THE CRAFT.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I beg to inform your correspondent "Q." that he will find an article in the JANUARY number of the Masonic Magazine for this year, "Was the Duke of Wellington a Freemason?" the particulars of which were furnished by a member of 494, and from which I extract the following:—

"The Hon. A. Wesley, who came of age in May 1790, was then a lieutenant in the 12th Light Dragoons, stationed at Dublin, and was returned a member of the Irish Parliament for the Borough of Trim in August of that year; the family name of Wesley was subsequently altered to that of Wellesley. The exact date of the Duke's being made cannot be ascertained, as the minute book has been lost, and it is not recorded in the G.L. records; but by another minute-book it appears that the Lodge met in Trim on the 16th February 1795, the Rev. Wm. Elliott in the chair. Bro. Reynolds, the treasurer, announced that the following were the seven subscribers to the Lodge special subscriptions:—Rev. W. Elliott, the Hon. A. Wesley, John Mockler, Wm. Carshore, James Allen, George Askin and Henry Reynolds;" and in another paragraph it is stated that "During the period of one Bro. Edward Carleton's being secretary, he proposed to the Lodge that they should obtain the sanction of his Grace the Duke of Wellington to call the Lodge 'The Wellington Lodge.' Bro. Carleton having communicated this resolution to his Grace, received a reply from him, declining to allow the Lodge to be called after him, inasmuch as he never was inside any Lodge since the day he was made."

From the above it proves that the Duke was a Freemason, but from his own statement it proves that he could not have held the office of Warden in any Lodge held at Kensington.

Yours fraternally,

Emsworth. T. F.

AN ARAB TRADITION.—The Arabs have a strange tradition amongst them about the origin of the cat. Whether the dwellers of the desert really believe it or not cannot easily be settled; certainly it is written in their books, and told gravely in their tents. At the time of the Deluge, they say, Noah was greatly tormented at the rapid increase of the mice, for of course he had taken in some mice with him along with all the other animals; but here they were overrunning the ark, destroying clothes and nibbling provisions—damaging everything in all directions. So the patriarch prayed that the ravages of his little enemies might be stopped. And lo! one of the lions, seized with a violent fit of sneezing, sneezed forth a cat. Away it scampered instantly to exterminate all the enormous mice to the great delight of Noah and his family. Thus, [illegible] the first cat came into the world.—From "Little Folks" for October.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Help under Suffering.—No diseases which affect the human body are more difficult to cure, than skin diseases, whether superficial sores or deep ulcerations. Holloway's Ointment has proved itself a remedy for these maladies; it checks all scaly incrustations, heals up cracks and fissures, reduces unnatural heat, mitigates irritation and inflammation, and if at once rubbed into the wounds, and works out a sound and lasting cure more certainly and much rapidly than any other application. In those affections which [illegible] constitutional or chronic, debilitated habits and [illegible] Holloway's Pills should be taken to increase the salutary effects of his unguent.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

—:o:—

The Royal Masonic Cyclopædia of History, Rites, Symbolism, and Biography. Edited by KENNETH R. H. MACKENZIE, IX°. ("Cryptonymus.") London: Bro. John Hogg, 15a Paternoster Row, E.C.

WE have received Part I. of what promises to be a most valuable contribution to Masonic Literature—a work, indeed, which, if carried out as it has been begun, will form not only a complete, but, as far as a somewhat hasty perusal has enabled us to judge, a thoroughly trustworthy compendium of Masonic history in all countries. The utmost care has evidently been taken to make the work as clear and concise, yet at the same time as complete in all its details as possible. This indeed forms the basis of an apology for the delay that has occurred in bringing out this first instalment. We do not think any apology was needed. At all events, the reason for the delay—that the utmost pains have been taken, and that this involved a greater amount of labour, and a longer extension of time than had been originally anticipated—is a just one, nor will any sensible brother object to such delay, if he ultimately becomes possessed of a work whose value will be the greater the greater the labour bestowed upon its compilation. The task of the editor has been admirably performed, and the appearance of the Part does ample credit to the publisher, Bro. Hogg.

About Buying a Horse, &c., &c. By F. C. BURNAND, Author of "Happy Thoughts," "More Happy Thoughts," "My Health," "The New Sandford and Merton," "Out of Town," &c., &c. "Occasional Happy Thoughts." London: Bradbury, Agnew and Co., 9 Bouverie-street. 1875.

THE "Happy Thoughts" of Mr. Burnand have for some time past been one of the most amusing features in that most amusing contemporary of ours, Punch. Ordinarily, an idea carried out again and again becomes somewhat wearisome. Not so is the case with Mr. Burnard's humorous papers. The idea is repeated, but not the humour. Unlike Paganini, Mr. Burnand is not continually playing on a single string. Or at least, when he does so, with a view to show his marvellous skill, he produces an infinite variety of humourous ditties, and the result is always something new. The whole of the volume before us is most amusing. The main feature is "About buying a horse," and we heartily confess that if buying a horse in company with Mr. Burnand were accompanied with such agreeable fun as is recorded in these pages we should be careful to indulge in the outlay very frequently. The happy thoughts that occur to the writer are too numerous to record and too amusing to reproduce, save, at least exceptionally, or we should anticipate the pleasure of the reader, yet are there some few excerpts we cannot forbear to make. Here, for example, is a pleasant piece of writing, and true to nature, at p. 11:—

"Happy Thought.—By the way, to assume every one to be something merely for the purposes of conversation, must lead to discussion.

"For example, assume a man to be a soldier; talk to him of the latest invention in breechloaders (if you can—I can't), manœuvres, campaigns, the exemplary conduct of the Light Cavalry in Abyssinia (if you know anything about it—I don't), and so forth. He will join you satisfactorily for some time, then you can put such a test question to him as would tend to elicit his opinion with regard to 'the probable expense of a museman's kit,' or any such professionally military-sounding inquiry. Should he really happen to be in the army, then he will probably stick his glass in his eye, seem puzzled, and ask you 'What the deuce you mean?' in which case you can retire behind your trenches (I haven't the faintest notion what effect this would have on an enemy, but I have often met the phrase in print, and like it), and pleasantly beg to be pardoned if your "phraseology" (use the word) is incorrect; or say, 'technically incorrect,' which does look as if you had some acquaintance with the subject—and add that you yourself are not a military man.

"Should he, however, have to excuse himself on the same score, you can take high ground (all part of metaphorical operations with trenches and 'high ground'), and observe that you had asked for information, under the impression that he was in the army. This will flatter him as a rule, and he may afterwards confide to you, with a smile, that he travels in the wool trade."

In further illustration of the same happy thought, we read—

"Assume a banker to be a distinguished artist, and he'll be delighted. Assume an artist to be a Queen's Counsel, and he'll be immensely pleased. Assume a gentleman at large to be the secretary attached to some foreign legation, with a secret mission, and he'll be highly gratified. Assume that a literary man would have made a first-rate preacher, and that a philosophical writer would have made his fortune if he had only stuck to the violoncello, and you will increase the number of your friends everywhere.

"On the strength of these assumptions, they will everywhere speak of you as a 'deuced sharp chap,' a man who 'sees below the surface,' one who can read you up,' and so forth. And why? Because you've struck the key note of that general dissatisfaction which every one feels, and which is the strongest reason for every one so working in his 'station of life,' as to make the best of it."

There is an amusing hit at the facility with which testimonials are obtained. A "Bun cure" is suggested, and the following is one of the numerous testimonials supposed to be received in testimony of the wonderful efficacy of the new cure, from a Bishop:—

"Sir,—I have now taken one of your Buns, per diem, for three months, and have not had a return of the Thingummies, (whatever it may be), to which I had previously been a martyr. I can now preach for three hours at a stretch, without the slightest inconvenience.

"Yours,

"BATH AND QUITE WELLS."

The visit to Boulogne, and the imaginary incident at Folkstone, after returning, are capitally told, as indeed are the various experiences connected with this purchase of a horse. Cases in point, are "the station master," who "won't be a party to any duplicity about this horse," and the post master, "a long young man, loosely put together, as if he'd been made up gradually, and added to at different times whenever there might have been some large bones to spare," and whose face, "which is broad and round, and with a very uneven surface, is expressive of chronic astonishment at everything and everybody."

In Chapter XXII. the subject of "Freemasonry in Relation to Horse Dealing" is discussed, the result being two or three pages of very laughable matter. The imaginary conversation is carried on as between the writer and one Casell. We extract the following as to the utility of Masonry in travelling:—

"'I've heard,' I say, in order to show I am not bigoted, 'that Masonry is very useful in travelling.'

'It is,' answers Casell, decidedly.

'How?'

'How?' he returns. 'Oh, lots of ways.' He considers awhile, then he resumes: 'Well, it is a passport to society in some places. It's of great use if you get into a difficulty. You pick up companions; and, in fact,—Oh, there are heaps of instances where Freemasonry has been of the greatest possible service. I recollect a man saying how he was had up before a magistrate in Naples, and the case was just going against him, when he made a sign to the bench, and the magistrate returned it. I forget whether he got off or not, but I know that it benefited him somehow. Why,' he continues, hurrying on, as if to avoid being too closely questioned about this last interesting incident, 'when I was on the Continent, I was all alone somewhere, and I didn't know what on earth to do with myself; and I found the landlord where I was stopping was a Mason, and so was another fellow staying there, and we got quite chummy, and we had a rubber with dummy in the evening.'"

One result of bargaining for a horse is that the writer catches a severe cold, and adopts his aunt's remedy, the old-fashioned one, of "feet in hot water at night, hot rum before going to bed, and 'jump into bed directly you've drank it, and keep yourself well covered up,'" with the following result: "Not being accustomed to spirits, least of all rum, and finding it uncommonly nice, I took three doses of it, one after the other. On this occasion I certainly kept myself well covered up at night, for I found myself in bed with my boots on in the morning. My cold had gone, however." This suggests the following: "Happy Thought (for receipt). Go to bed with your boots on. Also don't wind up your watch at night. I didn't. And what's more, I don't exactly know how or when I got into bed. I mention these details because they must form part of a cure for a cold—as most certainly I was cured."

We need say little further. Besides the occasional Happy Thought "about Buying a Horse," we have others, such as, "The story of my Legal Examination," "My Aunt's great Police Case," and "Our Representative Men," in the Isle of Wight, Brittany, and elsewhere. In the course of these last experiences we take leave to cite the case of the "Well-Informed Friend," who is great on architecture in particular, and on every variety of subject as well, and who is always making mental resolves "to look up the whole subject the instant he should get home among his books." Our readers who may wish to enjoy a hearty laugh—and who does not?—will find frequent occasion for satisfying such wishes in running through the pages of these "Occasional Happy Thoughts." We hope to read many more such Thoughts from the same delightful pen.

We have much pleasure in stating that Bro. Robert Wentworth Little was so far recovered as to be able to be present at the committee meeting of the Royal Benevolent Institution on Wednesday last.

Bro. S. C. Hadley, P.A.G.D. Grand Lodge of England, was elected Alderman of the Ward of Castle Baynard, by a majority of one.

A crowded audience was present on Thursday evening, at the Royal Music Hall, Holborn, at a complimentary benefit to Bro. J. S. Sweasey, on the occasion of his tenth year of proprietorship. A host of talent was present.

Bro. Herr Schubert, No. 186, has returned from the Continent, after a successful tour, and the concerts of the Schubert Society will commence in December, where rising artists will have an opportunity of appearing before select and fashionable audiences.

Hervey Lodge, No. 1260.—This Lodge held a meeting on Wednesday afternoon, at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street. Present—Bros. J. Hogg P.G.D., W.M., Harrison S.W., Southwood J.W., Geo. King jun. P.M. Secretary, Hollingworth S.D., Ward J.D., Goodacre I.G., Speight Tyler; Past Masters Bro. George King, &c. together with Bros. R. Grey G.D., D.M. of Prince of Wales's Lodge, 259, Cubitt P.G.P. and P.M. 157, J. G. Dufries S.D. 45 and 1278, Baron Tettenborn 150, Ballard 571, Nuthall, Atkins I.P.M. 27, J. Green S.W. 27, H. Thompson P.M. 177, 1158, and 1428, W. W. Morgan 1385, Dr. Rosenthal P.G.C. Staffordshire, and others as visitors. The Lodge, having been opened, and the minutes of the previous meeting read and confirmed, was advanced to the second and third degrees, and Bro. Hall was raised, the W.M. performing the ceremonial most impressively, and with his usual ability. Bro. Foot was subsequently passed, and Messrs. G. T. Salmon and A. L. Rosenthal having been unanimously elected, were severally initiated. This done, the W.M. rose, and in the course of his remarks spoke in the most eulogistic terms of the eminent services which Bro. Hervey had rendered to the Craft, and especially to the tact and judgment he displayed in the fulfilment of his arduous official duties. He also expressed, on behalf of the Lodge generally, how fully the gift of Bro. Southwood, the J.W., was appreciated. The portrait was then formally unveiled, and the opinion was unanimously expressed that the artist had been most successful in his delineation of Bro. Hervey. The inscription on the picture is as follows:—"The V.W. Bro. John Hervey, Grand Secretary, &c., of the Grand Lodge of England, presented to the Hervey Lodge, No. 1260, October 13th, 1875, by Bro. J. H. Southwood, Junior Warden." It should be stated the portrait was painted by Bro. Baron Tettenborn, after only a single sitting from Bro. Hervey, an excellent photograph having been the artist's principal guide. The Lodge was then closed, and the members adjourned to Simpson's Hotel, Strand, where an excellent dinner was served. The usual loyal toasts were given, that of the Pro Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, and Grand Officers being very happily acknowledged by Bro. Grey G.D. The health of the initiates was next proposed, and in doing so the W.M. gave a sketch of the antiquity and influence of the Order. Bro. Grey proposed the toast of the W.M. This was most enthusiastically received, and cordially responded to. Bro. Cubitt P.G.D. acknowledged the toast of "The Visitors," Bros. Thompson and Morgan that of "The Press," while Bro. Baron Tettenborn gracefully replied to the toast of his own health as painter of the portrait of Bro. Hervey which had been unveiled that afternoon. Other toasts followed, and at length a most agreeable evening was brought to a termination. We should add that two beautifully embroidered cushions for the third degree were presented to the Lodge by Bro. Harrison S.W., a gift for which the Lodge passed a very cordial vote of thanks. The brethren appeared in mourning, owing to the lamented death of Bro. Kingcombe I.G., for whose untimely decease the deepest regrets were expressed.

St. John's Lodge, No. 795.—The Installation Meeting of this Lodge was held at the Ray Mead Hotel, Maidenhead, on Tuesday, the 12th inst. Bros. C. W. Moule jun. W.M., J. H. Sadler S.W., J. H. Turner J.D., C. Gammon P.M. Treas., H. H. Hodges P.M. Sec.; P.M.'s. R. Turner, G. Bubb P.M. 180, and J. R. Foulger P.M. 177. The Lodge was opened and the minutes were confirmed. Bros. J. Bell, J. A. Bargan, and W. Sherman were raised to the 3rd degree. Bro. J. W. Bennett, No. 181, was elected a joining member. A Board of Installed Masters was then formed, and Bro. J. H. Sadler was presented to the Lodge. Bro. G. Bubb P.M. performed the ceremony of installation perfectly and impressively. The newly installed W.M. then invested his officers:—Bro. H. Turner S.W., A. Pinto Leite J.W., C. Gammon P.M. Treasurer, H. H. Hodges Secretary, J. R. Foulger P.M. S.D., W. H. C. Sharpe J.D., Slater I.G., Bell W.S., and C. Nowell Tyler. A special and cordial vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to Bro. G. Bubb P.M. for the able manner in which he had given the various ceremonies. The Lodge was then closed and the brethren sat down to a sumptuous banquet provided by Bro. Deacon. The W.M. gave the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, Bro. H. Hodges P.M. and Prov. P.G.R. Berks and Bucks, returned thanks for the toast of R.W. Sir Daniel Gooch P.G.M. Berks and Bucks, and the rest of the Grand Officers. The W.M. proposed the toast of the I.P.M. Bro. C. W. Moule jun., and presented him with a very elegant Past Master's Jewel, as a mark of respect from the Lodge. Bro. Moule, in brief, but appropriate terms, returned thanks for the testimonial. Bro. C. Gammon P.M., in his usual happy and genial manner, responded to the toast of the Past Master, and Bro. H. Turner for the officers. The Tyler's toast having been given the brethren returned to town in a saloon carriage specially provided by Bro. Sir Daniel Gooch.

Victoria Chapter, No. 1055.—The installation meeting of this highly prosperous Chapter took place on the 4th inst., at Masons' Hall, Masons' Avenue, E.C., Comp. Eenhaus in the chair, assisted by the two other Principals, G. Newman, and J. C. Taylor, as also by the usual staff of officers. Comp. Noehmer, the J. elect, being a first Principal in another Chapter, was duly inducted into the third chair, Comp. E. Gotthiel P.Z. then installed Comp. J. D. Taylor into the second chair, after which Comp. Geo. Newman, the Z. elect, was duly installed into the first chair by Comp. Pendlebury P.Z. A banquet followed, served in Comp. Gosden's best style, to which it is needless to observe every one present did ample justice. The usual toasts were then proposed and responded to with commendable brevity. In the course of the evening, a handsome P.Z.'s jewel was presented to Comp. Eenhaus, facitiously denominated the "Royal Dane," he being a native of Denmark, and, indeed, at present a resident in that country, from which place he contrives, by judicious arrangement, to attend regularly to his duties in the Chapter. Comp. Newman complimented the I.P.Z. upon his success in securing the love and esteem of all who knew him, and assured him that when far away in his native land he is ever borne in remembrance by the Companions of the Victoria Chapter. Comp. Eenhaus replied in a very feeling manner, and said the Companions may rest satisfied that when in his far away home he will look upon this memento with pride, and it will always give him the most heartfelt satisfaction to have been in the proud position of First Principal of so important a Chapter. The evening was enlivened by songs from Comps. Gomperts, Musto, and Forsyth, and magnificent whistling of Comp. Moore. The visitors were Comps. R. Looker 1293, T. Copesteak 192, H. Wagstaff 141, Alf. Moore 862, Chas. Payne P.Z. 177. It should be stated that the new staff of officers, besides the Principals, were Comps. J. Brett P.Z. Treas., Pendlebury P.Z. S.E., Hooper S.N., Musto P.S., Forge 1st Asst., Green 2nd Asst., and Grant Janitor.

Perfect Ashlar Lodge, No. 1178.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, the 7th inst., at the Bridge-house Hotel, Southwark. Bro. C. Deakin W.M., assisted by his officers, initiated three gentlemen into the Order. A Board of Installed Masters was formed, and Bro. Dr. Dixon installed Bro. J. A. Smith J.W. into the chair. The appointment of officers resulted as follow:—Bros. Batchelor S.W., W. T. Lover J.W., F. H. Elsworth P.M. Treasurer, F. Walters P.M., P. Prov. G.P., Middlesex, Secretary, F. Garbett S.D., J. Stock J.D., J. Wootton I.G., J. Porter D.C., P. J. Grace P.M. W.S., and W. J. Laing P.M. Tyler. A vote of thanks was unanimously accorded to Bro. Dr. Dixon for the excellent manner in which he had performed the ceremony. The Lodge was then closed, and a very good banquet followed. During the evening an elaborate jewel was presented to Bro. C. Deakin I.P.M. There were about fourteen visitors present.

Era Lodge, No. 1428.—A meeting of this Lodge was held on Saturday, the 9th inst. at the King's Arms Hotel, Hampton Court, Bros. J. W. Baldwin W.M., E. H. Thiellay S.W. P.G.A.P. (Middlesex), J. Baxter Langley J.W., T. J. Sabine P.M. P.P.G.S.B. (Middlesex) Treasurer, F. Walters P.M. P.P.G.P. (Middlesex) Secretary, E. W. Devereux S.D., S. Wolff J.D., A. F. Lose I.G., R. Wright D.C., W. A. Simmons, &c. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes were confirmed. Dr. Gillispie (late 78th Highlanders) was initiated, and Bros. Henreux, Harvey and Rumbelow were passed to the second degree, the W.M. performing the ceremony very correctly. Three brethren were appointed as Stewards for the forthcoming festivals for Masonic Charities in 1876; several propositions for joining and initiations were given, also a notice of motion to alter some of the bye-laws, after which the Lodge was closed and the brethren adjourned to a banquet. The visitors were Bros. W. H. Leary P.M. 45, R. W. Williams 1326, &c.

Royal Military Lodge, No. 1449, Canterbury.—On Monday last the ceremony of installation took place, being the second since its formation. The Lodge was opened at 1.30 by Bro. Wade P.M., in the unavoidable absence of the Master, Bro. Greenwood. Sergeant-Major Cairns R.H.A. having been duly balloted for was initiated into the ancient mysteries. The ceremony of installing Bro. Moorehouse, the W.M. elect, was then proceeded with, which ceremony was most impressively performed by Bro. Wade P.M., No. 1449, assisted by Bro. Knight P.M., No. 31, S.W., Bro. John Hall P.M., No. 31, J.W., Bro. Smeeth P.M., No. 1208, and Bro. Pilcher P.M., No. 972. After the ceremony the brethren sat down to a most sumptuous banquet, supplied by Bro. Shurby in his usual liberal spirit. After the cloth was cleared, the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given, and the brethren dispersed, after having passed a most enjoyable evening.

Metropolitan Royal Arch Chapter of Improvement.—The first meeting of the session was held on Tuesday, 5th October, at the Jamaica Coffee-house, St. Michael's-alley, Cornhill. Present—Comp. John Boyd Treasurer, who took the chair of M.E.Z., and appointed Comps. Gotthell H., John Wyer J., Thomas William White S.E., John Ramsey S.E., A. H. Lilley S.N., E. Gilbert P.S. There were also present Comps. G. Lemann, R. Wyatt, W. H. Kempster, J. Allsopp, William Stephens, and R. W. Goddard. The ceremony of exaltation was completely rehearsed. The audit committee elected Comp. Edward S. Norris, who was unavoidable absent, as assistant S.E. The officers for the ensuing fortnight were elected, and the Chapter was closed.

Addiscombe Lodge, No. 1556.—At a meeting of this Lodge held on the 9th instant, Bro. Turquand W.M. presiding, Mr. Wheeler, of Addiscombe, and Mr. Lowrie, of South Penge Park, were duly initiated into the Order, and Bros. L. Turquand, Carpenter, A. Lambert, S. W. Lambert and F. W. May were passed to the second degree. The Bye-Laws were passed and ordered to be printed. The ancient charge in the first degree, and E.A. song to be bound up with them. A substantial repast was provided for the brethren, who spent a very enjoyable evening in peace and harmony. Bros. Bishop S.W. of Lodge No. 63, and Jahn, of the Lodge at Stutgard, honoured the brethren with their presence, the former giving a most effective speech in reply to the toast of the Visitors, in which, after eulogising the W.M., he recommended very strongly the members of the Lodge (and more particularly the officers) to attend the best Lodge of Instruction they could find in a district that would suit them, so as to ensure a regular attendance, in order to secure smooth working in the Lodge. The brethren are very much encouraged by the success which has thus far attended the Lodge.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THE departure of the Prince of Wales for India is now an accomplished fact. On Saturday he received a deputation from the Corporation of the City of London, composed of the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and other civil dignitaries, the object being to offer His Royal Highness an address congratulating him on his approaching journey, and wishing him Godspeed and a happy return to old England next spring. The Prince briefly but graciously acknowledged the good wishes of the Corporation. On Monday evening the actual journey commenced. Their Royal Highnesses, the Prince and Princess, drove in an open carriage to the Charing Cross Station of the South Eastern, where already were assembled crowds of people to witness the departure, and where a guard of honour of the Scotch Fusilier Guards, with colours, band and bagpipes, were drawn up on the platform set apart for the Royal train. Among those who came to bid farewell, the first to arrive were the Duke and Duchess of Teck. Then came, in rapid succession, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Christian, the Princess Louise and Marquis of Lorne; and among other persons of distinction, the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, the Earl and Countess Spencer, the Earl of Derby, Mr. Ward Hunt, &c. On the arrival of the Prince and Princess, the latter, assisted by the Duke of Cambridge, passed at once to the train, but the Prince experienced some difficulty in making his way thither, so hearty and continuous was the hand-shaking, and so overflowing the enthusiasm of all present. At length having reached the carriage, his brothers and sisters took leave of him, and the train, in charge of Mr. Shaw, moved slowly from the station amid the most vehement cheers, and to the strains of "God bless the Prince of Wales." At Dover, where the train was due a few minutes before 10, the gathering, owing to the lateness of the hour, was comparatively small. Detachments from the 78th Highlanders, 24th, and the 104th Regiments were drawn up as a guard of honour and the Earl Granville as Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, with the countess, Mr. Freshfield, one of the members for Dover, the Mayor and sundry members of the Corporation and Major General Parker, commanding the South Eastern district, were in waiting. An address from the borough functionaries having been presented, the Prince and his wife passed on board the Castalia, and when the luggage was aboard, the ship cast off her moorings, the troops presenting arms, the band playing a few bars of the National Anthem and then changing to God Bless the Prince of Wales. On reaching Calais, which was accomplished in a little over the hour, the Prince took farewell of his wife, and left with his suite for Paris, the Princess of Wales, who slept on board the Castalia, returning to town the next day. Paris was reached on Tuesday, Lord Lyons, our Ambassador in the French capital, being at the station to receive him. Here, too, he was met by Marshal MacMahon, who was off for a day's shooting at Compiégne. The Prince then drove to the Hôtel Bristol. On Wednesday, the Marshal called upon him, and had a brief but cordial interview d'adieu. After dinner the Prince drove to the railway-station, accompanied by Lord Lyons and his suite, and left for Turin by the 8.40 p.m. train. A part of his suite preceded him, and reached Bologna on Wednesday evening. The Prince is expected to reach Brindisi to-day, where he will immediately embark, stopping, en route, at Athens, which will be reached on Monday next. On Wednesday the Princess of Wales left Marlborough House for Sandringham, her children having preceded her.

The Duke of Cambridge, having accompanied his Royal cousin to Dover, held a review of the Shorncliffe and Dover brigades on Wednesday, the scene of operations being a few miles from Folkestone. A series of movements took place, and at the end of the operations the Duke addressed a few words to the commanding officers, commenting on the operations of which he had been an eye-witness. The troops that took part in the proceedings were, on the one hand, the 41st, 93rd, and 104th regiments, F battery Royal Artillery, a company of Engineers, and two squadrons 12th Lancers; on the other, the 24th, 78th, a company of Royal Engineers, two squadrons 12th Lancers, six foot batteries, and a field battery.

The Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe's name has been for some time past before the public in connection with some clerical differences. Matters ran so high that the rev. gentleman's house and chapel had to be protected by a strong force of police. All but two of them were withdrawn a few days since, and the result is that the house and chapel have been sacked by a mob of roughs. This is the most recent illustration of Christian charity.

It only needed a bright sunshine to make the visit of the Lord Mayor and Corporation of the City of London to Epping Forest a complete success, and, unfortunately, this element was, as the saying is, conspicuous by its absence. A steady downpour was the feature of the day; but, nothing daunted by the inclemency of the weather, a party, some 600 strong, and including many of the leading civic functionaries, the Lord Mayor, the Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs, Aldermen, Common-Councillors, together with a fair sprinkling of M.P.'s made their way, at the appointed time, to the new and splendid terminus, in Liverpool-street, of the Great Eastern, where a special train was in attendance. A short journey of some minutes sufficed to convey the party to Snaresbrook, where a sufficient number of carriages were in waiting. Having been duly marshalled, and headed by a body of mounted police, the procession set off, and circumambulated the forest, or at least so much of it as, thanks to the exertions of the City of London, yet remains for the purposes of public recreation. As the rain was continuous, the beauties of scenery, which are both numerous and admirable, offered no very effective picture. They were there, however, though not enjoyable for the moment. Having completed the circuit, the party found itself in the vicinity of "Fairmead Lodge," where a marquee, large enough to accommodate the numerous visitors, had been erected. Here, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, was held a dejeûner, which in great measure helped to dissipate the discomforts of the weather. A series of toasts were given, when the wants of the inner man had been satisfied, and a photographic album was presented to the Lord Mayor, by Mr. Young, as representative of the Epping Forest Preservation Fund, as a souvenir of that occasion This graceful compliment was as gracefully acknowledged by his Lordship, who announced that it would be placed in the Corporation Library, as an interesting memento of a most auspicious event. The company broke up shortly afterwards, returning to town by rail or otherwise, as was most convenient. We need hardly say that the preservation of 5,000 acres of Forest is an event worthy of celebration, and that to no public body save the City Corporation could the celebration have been entrusted with so much propriety. It is due entirely to its gallant struggles for the preservation of the rights of the Commoners, that Londoners have any forest left to enjoy themselves in, and we could have wished the clerk of the weather had been more considerate.

By the way, it is well for our reputation that we did not indulge in any cheerful forebodings as to a continuous improvement in the weather, for the said clerk already referred to has been seriously misbehaving himself since. There have been a series of floods in many parts of the country, and especially in the Midlands, and, unhappily, there have been severe losses both of life and property. At Rugby three men were drowned, at Banbury one, and at Husband's Bosworth, in Leicestershire, another was washed away, while three other lives are reported to have been lost in the same county. A severe gale likewise caused considerable damage to the shipping at Yarmouth, Plymouth, and elsewhere, and several lives are reported to have been sacrificed. Such visitations as these are to be expected at this season of the year, yet it seems to us that we have suffered far more severely than usual.

Lord Derby's public addresses are invariably distinguished by their good sound practical sense. He appeals so directly and so successfully to the minds of his hearers. His address on distributing the prizes of the Society for the Promotion of Scientific Industry at the Exhibition, Cheetham-hill, Manchester, is a case in point. He explained in a few telling sentences the advantages of such a society, and urged upon his audience to do their utmost to increase its numbers and extend its influence thoughout the district, to the ultimate benefit of the many and important industries which had raised Manchester to its present flourishing condition. After this his lordship distributed the prizes, which consisted of gold, silver, and bronze metals, together with a number of honorary certificates. A vote of thanks to the noble Earl brought the proceedings to a close.

The Social Science Congress at Brighton has brought its present session to a close. Everything was done to contribute to the pleasure of members, and the Railway Company organised a number of cheap excursions to various places, such as Hastings, Lewes, &c., within convenient reach of London-Super-Mare. Visits of inspection were likewise paid to the various places of interest in the town itself, such as the public Free Library and Museum, the Children's and County Hospitals. During the session many important and highly interesting papers were read in the various sections of the Congress, and we can only hope that some practical good will be the result. There have been other meetings of a similar character, among them a Trades' Union Congress, but we do not know that we need do more than refer to them thus briefly.

Of extra Parliamantary Speeches we would draw attention especially to one by Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., Financial Secretary to the Treasury, who, on Wednesday evening, presided at a meeting of the Public Library Committee, Watford, held for the purpse of receiving the annual report, and to distribute the prizes. This being so, it is not surprising that education should have formed the principal if not the sole topic on which Mr. Smith expressed himself. This speech, for which we must refer our readers to the daily papers of yesterday, is well worth reading, and contains, as might well be expected from so eminently practical a man as the member for Westminster has always shown himself to be, good sound advice. Mr. S Cave,

M.P., has also spoken publicly, at an agricultural meeting in East Devon, in response to the toast of Her Majesty's Ministers. Upon this address however, we need offer no sort of comment.

The crowner's quest into what is now known as the Whitechapel tragedy, has resulted in a verdict of "wilful murder" against Henry Wainwright. The accused had previously been committed to take his trial by Mr. Benson.

The Alexandra Palace directors are zealous as ever in catering for the amusement of the public. On Monday, was held a swimming fête, Miss Beckwith displaying her skill and powers, and Captain Webb afterwards distributing the prizes. On Tuesday was performed an opera by the Carl Rosa Company, while in the evening there was a second harvest display of fireworks. To-day will be performed, Flotow's opera of Martha, and for the last time this season there will be an illumination of the lake. Next Tuesday and two following days are fixed for a Great International Poultry and Pigeon Show, and as the entries are said to be tolerably numerous, a great display may be expected, and will doubtless be properly appreciated by the fancy, and those who affect poultry en amateurs. At the Crystal Palace the chief attractions are the Winter Promenade Concerts, the third of which will be held this day. On Wednesday next will take place the Great Harvest Celebration and Musical Festival.

On Sunday last a fatal accident occurred at the Hornsey Station on the Great Northern line, by which a gentleman lost his life when attempting to get into a carriage when the train was in motion. The usual inquiry was adjourned, as the jury were anxious to ascertain whether the regulations of the company had been carefully observed.

We know very little, and have no desire to know, about what are known as Magna Charta associations, but we notice that wherever they are held there usually occur disturbances, more or less serious. If it be true, as reported, that Dr. Kenealy has incited his followers to attack his opponents, the sooner these meetings die out the better. Perhaps this dire catastrophe is not very remote, for happily Dr. Kenealy seems to be less cordially received than formerly.

From Paris we learn that M. Gounod, the celebrated composer, has sustained a severe fracture of one arm, owing to his foot slipping as he was descending a staircase. The Permanent Committee of the National Assembly has held several sittings lately, and M. Buffet has notified that the Electoral Bill will be brought forward as the soon as the Assembly meets. Owing to indisposition, and the advice of his physicians, it appears that Prince Bismarck will not accompany the Emperor William on his journey to Italy. For this event great preparations are being made. There will be a State entry into Milan on the 18th, and among the other "fixtures"—to use a sporting term—are a grand banquet and a review. The Emperor will set out on his return on the 22nd instant. The Herzegovina insurrection and the Carlist war in Spain still drag their weary length along. There is a war in Liberia, a negro republic on the West Coast of Africa, and our difficulty with China is not yet settled. It is even reported that our minister, Mr. Wade, has left Pekin for Shanghai. If so, and our legitimate demands are not conceded, we are clearly in for another Chinese war. There is a new and Conservative Ministry in Servia, so that we shall probably hear nothing further of Servian sympathy with the insurgents against Turkish rule. The interest in America centres for the most part about the recent elections, in which the republican party appear to have scored one or more important victories.

The Consecration of the University Conclave of Knights of Red Cross of Rome and Constantine will take place at 29½ Green-street, Cambridge, on Wednesday, 27th October, at 4 o'clock precisely.

Bro. Alderman Paterson, whose death occurred on the 8th instant, was in the 58th year of his age, and was only elected to an Aldermanic gown in 1873 in succession to the late Sir David Salomons, Bart. Bro. Sir John Bennett, who was then beaten by the late Alderman, is again a candidate for Aldermanic honours.

Bro. ex-Sheriff Jones has been elected Master, Bro. Sir F. Perkins, M.P., Upper Warden, and Bro. Sir John Bennett Under Warden of the Loriners' Company.

THE DRAMA.

Fleur de Thé at the Criterion.—The Prince of Wales's.

WE had hoped that the palmy days of Opera-Bouffe, as presented on the English stage were over, and that a style of piece which has given just offence to even the most charitably-minded censors of the stage would in future be conspicuous by its absence. It has been reserved, however, perhaps appropriately, for the theatre under the roof of our largest public refreshment house to produce the piece which was, in the original, probably the most suggestive of indecency of all that noble array of sinners let loose upon us by the success of "La Grande Duchesse." Lecocq is a worthy pupil in that school of which Offenbach is still the chief: we get from him the same kind of catching melodies and of charming serenades, the same light sparkling music wedded to libretto of which the morality is noticeable for its absence. And inasmuch as in any opera the composer of the music benefits most by its success, it is only fair that he, too, should bear the chief blame of its faults. Fleur de Thé is a Chinese princess, living at Pekin, the disposal of whose hand in matrimony is left somewhat to chance, as the first man who sees her face is to be compelled to marry her. This fate is reserved for Pinsonnet, the cook of a French corvette, anchored in the harbour, who, with his wife, Césarine, has landed to see the sights. Césarine exacts from Pinsonnet a promise that, although obliged to marry Fleur de Thé, he will not treat her as a wife, but only as a friend, and in order to test his fidelity, contrives, by a stratagem, to take Fleur de Thé's place in the nuptial chamber. The success of this ruse may be guessed from the fact that Césarine's accompaniment to her husband's account of the innocent nature of his proceedings, runs, "How he lies! Oh, how he lies!" The piece has been toned down with some amount of success, but that the flavour of the old Adam is still too strong was evident on Saturday night in the strong disapproval expressed by a portion of the audience. The music of Fleur de Thé is not so catching and will never be so popular as that of Madame Angot, and the acting is hardly up to an effective standard. Mr. W. H. Fisher, who played Pinsonnet, was suffering from hoarseness, which marred the effect of his music, but his acting retains all its bright and pleasant qualities. A lady new to London, Miss Bessie Sudlow, was the Césarine: she possesses a clear and pleasing voice, and will prove, with practice, an acquisition to the stage. Miss Barville filled the part of Fleur de Thé fairly well. The opera is creditably put on the stage, and, as the CRITERION is not a large theatre, may have a fairly long run.

A new farce, adapted from the French, by Mr. E. Mannel, was produced at the STRAND, on Saturday last, under the title of The Doctor's Brougham. A doctor without patients has secured a brougham on trust, and drives round to visit his friends, calling on an old schoolfellow, now a barrister, without clients, but rejoicing in a pretty wife. The latter is an object of attraction to a Prussian Count, who has seen her in the street, and followed her home, and who is only too glad to feign serious illness in order to remain in her company. Out of this some amusing complications arise, the humour of which is made the most of by M. Marius as the Prussian Count, and Mr. H. Cox as the doctor.

There is good news from the PRINCE OF WALES'S. "Masks and Faces," specially revised by its authors, will shortly be produced with Mrs. Bancroft as Peg Woffington, and a hint is given of new pieces from the well-known pens of Mr. Wilkie Collins and Mr. Byron.

IRISH JIGS.—These may be described as of several kinds, of which the principal are—the common or "double jig," the "single jig," the "hop jig," the "reel," the "hornpipe," and various country dances and "set figures.' The common or "double jig" is in six-eight time, usually consisting of two parts of eight measures each, each of these measures usually presenting two quaver triplets throughout the tune, and each part being always played twice. In these general features this most common variety of the Irish dance tune only differs from the great majority of the old clan marches in the somewhat greater rapidity of the time in which they are performed: in is almost certain that very many of these common jigs were originally marches, and were anciently used for both purposes. The "single jig," like the common jig, is a tune in six-eight time, and of the same number of bars or measures. But it differs from the former in this, that the bars do not present, as in the "double," a succession of triplets, but rather of alternative long and short or crotchet and quaver notes. Thus, in dancing, the floor is struck only four times to the bar instead of six times, as in the "double." The "hop jig," popular in Munster from remote times, is in nine-eight time, a structure peculiarly Irish. It seems probable that many of the dance tunes in this time current in England and Wales were originally Irish, and passing into those countries became naturalised. The "reel" is identical in feature with that of the same name in the sister country. In both it is common time, consisting of two parts of eight bars each and generally presents a uniform succession of eight quavers (or semi-quavers, if written in two-four time) in each bar throughout the tune. There is, however, this difference between the reel-tunes of Scotland and of Ireland, that while the former are, perhaps, more marked by a sunshine of mirthfulness, the latter have usually more melody and expression of sentiment. Further, it may be worthy of remark that the reel, though now, and for a long time, regarded as the national dance of Scotland proper, was anciently known only to the Irish and Hiberno-Scoti, or Highland people, and that it does not appear to have ever been common to, or adopted by the Anglo-Saxon people of England or the cimbric people of Wales. —Dr. Rimbault in the "Leisure Hour."

The Lodge was opened in the second degree, when they were introduced and passed. The Lodge was then closed in the second degree, when Messrs. Horton, Maltby and Shields were initiated. A very pleasing incident was the presentation, by Bro. Reginald M. Whitworth, which gave great satisfaction to the brethren. The usual toasts having been duly honoured, the brethren separated at an early hour.

Business—After the minutes of last meeting had been confirmed, applications from the widows of two members were presented; a sum of money was voted in one case, and a deputation appointed to make enquiries into the other, as this Lodge is always liberal where the applicants are found worthy. The Lodge having been opened in the second degree, the Substitute Master, Bro. Findlay passed a brother to the F.C. degree. The Master then said as the Grand Lodge Laws provide for the the working of the Mark degree, and the Grand Chapter has fully admitted its right to do so, and the Lodge had decided to act on that decision, he now begged them to accept a pair of Mark stones he had prepared for them. Bro. McFarlane Deputy Master, in the name of the Lodge, received the stones, and thanked the R.W.M. for his valuable present. The Lodge was then closed, and Bro. Findlay opened it in the Mark degree, and confirmed that degree on the office bearers to enable them to work it at the next regular meeting.

St. Vincent Lodge, 553.—This Lodge met on Thursday, 7th Oct., at 162 Kent-road, Glasgow, Bro. R. McDougall R.W.M. in the chair, assisted by Bros. R. Paxton as S.W., A. McLean as J.W., and J. M'Lellan, P. Steven S.D., J. Comston J.D. The Lodge having been duly opened, Bro. McLean presented the Lodge with a very handsome jewel box in three compartments. Bro. Paxton as S.W. then presented a ballot box of a new construction, made of cedar-wood. The Master, in very graceful terms, on behalf of the Lodge, accepted those presents, remarking they should take care of their jewels, and prize as jewels those who evinced such care for their well-being. While the cedar-wood box should remind them of those cedars of Lebanon that Solomon employed in the building of the temple, and as the cedar-wood was said to keep off moths from the clothing, so he hoped his box would keep out those figurative moths that might desire to enter the Lodge, as one or two moths might damage the Masonic clothing that should adorn all true Masons. Both gifts, he could assure the donors, would be highly prized by the Lodge. A Fellow Craft Lodge was then opened, and at the request of the R.W.M., Bro. G. W. Wheeler passed Bros. Watson, Marshall, Smith, McColl and McLean to the second degree, and the Lodge was thereafter closed in harmony.

Windsor Castle Lodge No. 771.—This Lodge held its first regular meeting of the season on Tuesday the 12th of October, at the Masonic Hall, St. Albans-street, Windsor. Present—Bros. Greville Horsley Palmer W.M., Cutler S.W., Scott J.W., J. S. Tolley P.M. Secretary, Fleck S.D., Brown J.D., Cantrell I.G., Nowell, Tyler; Rev. Arthur Robins Chaplain; Past Masters Devereux, Wigginton, Grisbrook, Bingham, &c. The business of the evening, which was of a most interesting character, commenced at six o'clock, when there was a most numerous attendance, not only of the brethren, but of visitors, amongst whom we noticed Bros. Wm. Stephens, Wm. Hookvale, H. Whitfield, J. H. Reid, G. Kelly King, J. Ashley, W. Grist, W. Young, and W. W. Morgan. The Lodge was opened, after solemn prayer, by Bro. G. H. Palmer W.M. The minutes were read by Bro. J. S. Tolley, and duly confirmed. Bro. George Johnson was examined as to his proficiency in the first degree, and having answered the usual questions was entrusted. Bros. Joseph Johnson and Joseph Mitchell were then introduced, as candidates for the third degree, and after giving satisfactory replies to the usual questions, were entrusted, and retired. The brethren then repaired to the inner chamber of their beautiful Lodge, when Bros. Johnson and Mitchell were raised to the sublime degree, the ceremony being admirably rendered by Bro. Joseph Devereux, the senior P.M. of the Lodge. The candidates, as well as all the brethren present, were deeply impressed with the manner in which Bro. Devereux, who possesses elocutionary powers of a high order, conducted the ceremony. The Lodge was then resumed to the first degree, and Mr. Ernest Cecil Devereux, Mr. Robert E. Hannis, and Mr. Frank Willett were severally initiated into the Order. The next part of the evening's proceedings was the presentation of a beautifully illuminated address, on vellum, to Bro. Joseph Devereux, of which the following is the text:—

"We, the Worshipful Master, Past Masters, Warden, Officers and Brethren of the Windsor Castle Lodge, No. 771, in Lodge assembled, offer you fraternal greetings and heartfelt expressions of respect and esteem. It is our desire to place upon record our deep sense of the invaluable services you have rendered to the Windsor Castle Lodge, of which you were a founder, in A.D. 1859, and to thank you most sincerely for the Masonic zeal and assiduity you have always evinced, not only to the Windsor Castle Lodge, but also to the Craft in general. We congratulate you upon the rise and progress of our Lodge during the many years you have watched over its interests, and it is with pleasure and approval that we record the fact that you have on two occasions been unanimously elected to the office of Master, in the performance of which duty you commanded the admiration of the brethren by the unique and perfect rendering of our Masonic rites and ceremonies. It is to your indefatigable energy that the Freemasons of Windsor owe their beautiful Temple, consecrated and dedicated to Masonic purposes alone, together with its embellishments and adornments which so effectually contribute to the solemnity and dignity of the ceremonies. That the G.A.O.T.U. will give you health and strength to enjoy the fruits of your Masonic labours for many years to come, is the sincere wish of,

Yours fraternally,

THE WINDSOR CASTLE LODGE.

Bro. Devereux sen. suitably acknowledged this address, which was enclosed in a very elegant box. The very heavy business of the meeting having made great inroads on the time that was available, and several of those present being obliged to leave by an early train, the proceedings were brought to a close, but we here subjoin the following prayer, which was offered by the Chaplain during Lodge, and also the verse of the National Anthem, with a stanza bearing special reference to the visit of the Grand Master to India:—

Almighty God and Merciful Father, Supreme Architect of all our destinies, we beseech Thee to hearken to our prayers and supplication on behalf of Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, our Grand Master, now journeying from our shores to a distant land. Into Thy loving care we commit and commend him. King of kings, Lord of lords, the only ruler of princes defend him from the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and from the arrow that flyeth in the noon-day. Help him ever to be mindful of Thy commandments, and to set forth the honour and praise of his God and Saviour in all things. Grant that the beams of Thy divine love may ever lighten his path, inspire him with heavenly wisdom, replenish his soul with ghostly council, bring him safely home, and bless his going out and his coming in, now and for evermore, through Jesus Christ our Lord.—AMEN.

God save our gracious Queen,
Long live our noble Queen,
God save the Queen.
May she defend our laws,
And ever give us cause,
To sing with heart and voice,
God save our Queen.

Our Lord, thou King of Kings,
Shield with thy mighty wings,
Our Prince from harm.
O'er him thine arms extend,
For Britain's sake defend
Our Brother, Prince, and Friend,
God save the Prince.

Those of our readers who are familiar with Preston's Illustrations will recognise the concluding lines of the stanza, as having been, it is said, composed impromptu by the great Sheridan on the occasion when the late George III. was fired at in the Royal Box, at Drury-lane Theatre, by one Hatfield. We may add that Bro. Tolley's performances on the organ were of a most effective character. The brethren afterwards adjourned to a slight repast, at the White Hart Hotel. The remainder of the evening passed in a most agreeable manner, the usual Masonic toasts being greeted with the customary enthusiasm.

Gresham Lodge, No. 869, Herts.—An emergency meeting was held last Saturday, at the new quarters, for which the Lodge are indebted to the fraternal kindness of the Rev. Bro. Mayo. Present—Bros. A. C. Wylie P.P.G.S.B. Herts, W.M., J. E. Grocott S.W., W. H. Etherington J.W., Rev. Bro. Mayo Chaplain, F. D. R. Copestick P.P.G.S.B. Treasurer, W. G. Gompertz P.P.G.P. Secretary Dr. E. G. Pottle S.D., T. C. Chapman J.D., Thos. Stevens I.G., and W. G. Gomperts jun., J. Dickie, C. B. Cheese, J. C. Wylie, J. H. Brown; Young and Cuthbertson, visitors. The Lodge was opened at 2 p.m., the chair being shortly after vacated by the W.M. in favour of Bro. Gompertz P.M., who was desirous of initiating the new members and who in the performance of that ceremonial, displayed his wonted ability. The initiates were Mr. William Layton, proposed by Bro. Forsyth seconded by Bro. Copestick P.M., and Mr. J. R. Rigsall, proposed by Rev. Bro. Mayo and seconded by Bro. Wylie W.M. Bro. G. F. W. Mugliston M.D. I.P.M. 1421 and S.W. 1228 was elected a joining member. This ended, a vote of thanks was moved by Bro. Wylie to the Rev. Bro. Mayo, for his great kindness in placing the banqueting-hall of Cheshunt Great House at their disposal for holding their meetings. The motion was carried with acclamation and appropriately acknowledged. A vote of thanks was also proposed and agreed to, conveying thanks to Bro. Hunt, the worthy host of the Four Swans, Waltham Cross, for his past kindness and attention to the Lodge during the fourteen years of its existence. Bro. Hunt in acknowledging the vote, hoped yet to see the day when a Masonic Hall should be built in the province of Herts, and expressed the great pleasure he experienced on finding the labours of the Lodge carried out in some other locality than a tavern, a sentiment worthy of a brother who is himself a landlord, and which we most cordially endorse. The Lodge having been closed, an adjournment was made to the "Green Dragon," Church-gate, where an excellent repast was provided, while the wines were of a character far superior to those usually supplied to brethren at their banquets. We may attribute this to the district being a secluded one as well as the fact that the wine cellar of the "Green Dragon" is not an institution of yesterday. On the removal of the cloth, the usual toasts were given with marked brevity and responded to loyally, that of the W.M.G.M. the Prince of Wales in particular being acknowledged with more than ordinary enthusiasm. As a matter of course His Royal Highness's visit to India was referred to by the W.M. The latter, in acknowledging the toast of his own health, stated that he had just returned from Russia, a country in which Freemasons' lodges are forbidden to be held. Bro. Wylie expressed his regret, especially as English Masons were there denied the opportunity of meeting together. However, as the two countries were on the most friendly terms, and had recently become, by the marriage of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh with the only daughter of the Czar, still more directly united, he hoped the day might not be far distant when the Craft would enjoy the same privileges in Russia as in other countries. The toast of the visitors was acknowledged by Bros. Young P.M. 1327 and Cuthbertson, 27. The other toasts were regularly disposed of, every one of the speakers expressing himself highly pleased with the success of the day's proceedings, Bro. Gompertz being particularly happy in his remarks on the improved status of the Lodge.

Metropolitan Lodge, No. 1509.—An Emergency meeting took place on Thursday, the 7th inst., at the Metropolitan Club, 269 Pentonville-road, for the purpose of lightening the labours of the next regular meeting, that being the occasion of the installation of the W.M. The two large rooms had been thrown into one, and the lighting and ventilation was appreciated by the numerous brethren present. Bros. Jas. Willing jun. W.M., Michael S.W. and W.M. elect, Williams J.W., Tims P.M. 177 Secretary, Child S.D., Kingham J.D., Scales W.S. as I.G. in the absence of Bro. John Douglass of the Standard theatre, owing to a severe accident, and Bros. Stiles, Side, Levy, Little, Hatton, Stainsbury, Clarke, Jones, Rogers, Simond, &c. The Lodge was opened, and Bro. Beale, of the Domatic Lodge 177, was raised to the 3rd degree, by the courtesy of the W.M., and Bros. Simond, Little, Rogers, and Levy were passed to the 2nd degree. Messrs. L. Solomon and H. Stiles were balloted for, and duly initiated into the Order. The W.M. gave the various ceremonies in a perfect and impressive manner. Bro. Ormestou, St. John's Lodge, 262, and Walters, of the Felix Lodge, 355, Scotland, were elected joining members. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren sat down to a banquet. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were proposed. The W.M., in responding to his health, remarked it was the last time he should have the pleasure to preside over them at the banquet table. He took the opportunity to thank the officers of the Lodge for the efficient manner in which they had assisted him during his year of office; he also thanked the brethren for the attention they had paid during the ceremonies; he was sure those brethren who had been initiated in the Lodge were genuine supporters of the great principles on which our Order is founded. The toast of the officers was given, and some capital harmony emanated from the brethren. The Lodge of Instruction attached to this Lodge meets every Friday evening at the Club, where the brethren can receive the benefit of good Masonic instruction under the preceptorship of Bro. T. A. Adams P.G.P., to whose able tuition the efficiency of the officers of this Lodge is mainly due.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 113 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

Abridged Opinions of the Press on the Lombard Deposit Bank Limited.

WEEKLY DISPATCH.—"The class who cannot bank with the houses that are in the ascendant have a pleasant alternative—they can put their money in the Lombard Deposit Bank and sleep in peace, knowing that their money is safe and that the bank may be depended on."

WEEKLY TIMES.—"They had faith in the Building Society, which had been a success, as it promised to be, and they believed in the Lombard Bank. The event proved that their belief was well founded."

NEWS OF THE WORLD.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank, which was established in 1869, is now strong and sturdy on its feet, with a promise of a hale and hearty old age."

THE COURIER.—"The directors do not come before the public as a company which has no past by which to estimate the future, and whose present existence gives no certain test of the future. On the contrary, it has a successful past and a flourishing present. The progress already made by the Lombard Bank must be highly gratifying to all interested in it."

SUNDAY TIMES.—"Everybody is mutually benefited, and every one co-operates, thus one of the fundamental principles of political economy is recognised and acted upon with prominent success."

THE HOUR.—"Experience has proved that there is almost no limit to the success of companies such as this, which conduct their business on sound principles, and the Lombard has been fortunate in securing a good list of trustees and directors."

CHRISTIAN GLOBE.—"The Lombard Bank is qualified to suit the convenience of a large class of people, unable to avail themselves of the advantages offered by larger establishments."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"The principles on which it is based are just and equitable, and its management economical."

LONDON MERCURY.—"The Lombard Bank is an outgrowth of the Lombard Building Society, which has been established as a company since 1869, and has more than fulfilled the expectations of its shareholders."

DRAWING-ROOM GAZETTE.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank, started on a basis of established success, offers various advantages to the public on so obviously safe a principle as needs only to be known in order to command wide and general acceptance."

WEST LONDON OBSERVER.—"If any one has his doubts respecting the security and stability of building societies, we have an instance in point which will dispel his uneasiness—we allude to the Lombard Building Society, which has flourished so well, that, although not yet in its teens, it has taken unto itself a bank, and flourishes yet more and more."

CHELSEA NEWS.—"We cannot give better advice to those who wish to know where to deal with a banking company with feelings of security, than to refer them to this establishment, whose life thus far has been so full of vigour and so prosperous."

ST. JAMES'S CHRONICLE.—"The directors of the Lombard Bank (Limited) offer a boon alike to those who are prepared to deposit money at a moderate but secure rate of interest, and to such whom circumstances oblige to have recourse to a loan, the conditions of which are unusually easy and straightforward."

NORTH MIDDLESEX CHRONICLE.—"The banking department of the above company appears to us to be conducted in the spirit of liberality. All the advantages of a City Bank are to be had without the exhorbitant balance usually demanded or expected as a remuneration for keeping the account."

THE BULLIONIST.—"There is obviously a large and legitimate field for a sound and useful investment of capital in this manner."

SHEFFIELD POST.—"Owing, therefore, to the sound principles upon which it is conducted, we believe the Lombard Bank to be one of the safest in existence."

INSURANCE RECORD.—"Established on well-tried and approved principles of mutuality and beneficial co-operation, and has a trustworthy and respectable list of trustees and directors to conduct its affairs."

THE COSMOPOLITAN.—"The bank has won the confidence of its shareholders, and now requests the support of the public generally, which we think may fairly be given and with advantage, since the company offers peculiar facilities for the use of money."

ENGINEERING AND BUILDING TIMES.—"In these times when the larger institutions are conducting business on a dangerous system, inviting enormous losses and paying scarcely any interest for deposits a society like the Lombard is doing a more scrutinising business which, with care, may bring out the most satisfactory results."

CHRISTIAN UNION.—"The rates of interest offered on deposits are thus much above the ordinary banking range."

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' GAZETTE.—"The institution has hitherto been worked so economically that each investor has had 10 per cent. per annum on his money."

RAILWAY SERVICE GAZETTE.—"No doubt so promising an institution will be extensively patronised in the railway service."

BUILDERS' WEEKLY REPORTER.—"By avoiding the mistakes of its predecessors, is enabled to afford to both investors and borrowers well-nigh unprecedented advantages."

PENNYGOOD TIMES.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank is now in its sturdy youth, giving promise of growing up into a still more sturdy manhood. It is eminently a popular bank, and offers advantages which are at once unusual and solid."

MONETARY AND MERCANTILE GAZETTE.—"We have been asked by an intending investor to peruse the prospectus and balance sheet of the Lombard Bank (Limited), and having done so, we must admit that it appears to present advantages of no ordinary character, and which are particularly worthy of the attention of the provident and thoughtful. We have great pleasure in assuring borrowers that they will find it an honest, bona-fide source for obtaining advances on securities. It further enhances our pleasure in directing a borrower to this genuine source, knowing the many traps that are advertised every day to catch and plunder the unwary by a class pretending to lend money on moderate terms, with a view of getting fees."

EAST LONDON OBSERVER.—"The great banks, as a matter of course, monopolise the lion's share of business, but there are others willing to do a quiet but sure trade. Amongst such is the Lombard Deposit Bank."

WEST LONDON ADVERTISER.—"If anybody is in search of a respectable banking concern with whom they may wish to have money dealings, we can direct them to the Lombard Deposit Bank, Lombard-street, and at the West-end, in Regent-street. The man with money with which he wishes to deal has his choice. He may put his money in the bank on deposit, and receive moderate, sound, real, and sure interest; or he may purchase a share and exercise his right as a shareholder."

THE HOUR.—"The success which attended the operations of the Lombard Building Society, established in 1869, has suggested to the promoters the plan of instituting a deposit bank. Like other banks, the Lombard Deposit Bank will endeavour to make money by borrowing and lending; but it will do both on terms much more favourable for its customers, and will deal in much smaller amounts than is usual. Shares in the Lombard Bank may be applied for with confidence."

CHRISTIAN GLOBE.—"Based upon sound commercial principles, the success of the Lombard Bank has been such as to warrant the expectations first entertained of it. By the business operations of this establishment, all classes may have a banking account."

THE DRAPER.—"The Lombard Bank undertakes to lend money, as well as to receive money for investment; and it appears to us that the calculations made are such as to give the utmost soundness to the concern and ample security to investors."

THE REPORTER.—"It is becoming more and more important every day to the commercial world to have a legitimate and safe channel where temporary accommodation can be secured at a fair but profitable rate on securities not available under the Building Societies Acts. With a view of meeting these requirements the directors have projected, as a distinct company, the Lombard Deposit Bank (Limited)."

INVESTORS' GUARDIAN.—"The safety of the depositor depends more upon the use which is made of his money than upon any other element, and the Lombard Deposit Bank gives that security with a marginal guarantee of a subscribed and paid-up capital."

EDUCATIONAL REVIEW.—"This bank is based upon sound banking principles, and we see no reason why it should not prove quite as successful as the building society of which it is an outgrowth. Thus far the most sanguine anticipations have been verified."

FORESTERS' FREE PRESS.—"The Lombard Bank is managed by gentlemen who have had considerable commercial experience, and who have hitherto handled other people's money with honour and probity, and paid, by a system of strict economy, every investor 10 per cent. per annum."

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' GAZETTE.—"No doubt so promising an institution will be extensively patronised by commercial men."

DRAWING-ROOM GAZETTE.—"The Lombard Deposit Bank (Limited) offers all the security of the joint stock system with a much higher rate of interest to depositors, and it possesses this great advantage over the commercial establishments termed 'co-operative,' that it has been working steadily and most profitably for six years in connection with the Lombard Building Society, and by economical and skilful management paying 10 and 12 per cent. per annum to every investor."

CHRISTIAN UNION.—"The Lombard Bank of Deposit, in connection with the Building Society, has a separate capital, and invites deposits of £10 and upwards, and conducts banking business on much the same principles as other London banks, but has, no doubt, a special function as regards the class of business conducted by the building society, or, in other words, property investment."

SHEFFIELD POST.—"Its aim is good, its principles just, its sphere of operations unlimited: its subscriptions low, its management economical."

INVESTORS' GUARDIAN.—"It is a channel which can be safely recommended to those who desire something more than a safe 3 per cent."

And upwards of one hundred provincial newspapers have pronounced the Lombard Companies to offer,

To the Investor—An honest, judicious, and lucrative channel.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, 27 ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

ON THE CUSTOM OF SHAKING HANDS.

WE observe, from a recent issue of a French journal, that another revolution is about to be inaugurated in that land of change and surprises. The democratic custom of "shaking hands," or, as the reformers prefer to style it, of "shaking the body by the arm," is forthwith to be abolished. The Abbé Defourny, of Beaumont, the ostensible leader in this movement, calls for the reprobation, by ecclesiastical authority, of "a most disrespectful usage," which, he declares, originated with the Freemasons, and which "consists in shaking by the poignée de main à l'Anglaise the body of the person whom it is intended to salute." The reverend Abbé suggests, as an improvement upon this mode of salutation, an inclination of the body, coupled with the greeting, "Let Jesus Christ be praised," Laudetur Jesus Christus. In certain cases, as in the salutation of parents and superiors, this may also be accompanied by the kissing of hands. The Holy Father at Rome, to whom an application on the subject has been addressed, has given a somewhat hesitating approval of the proposed innovation. The case is now, therefore, fairly before the world, and we may expect to hear of some warm discussions between the advocates respectively of the old system and the new.

We have described the custom of shaking hands as the old mode of salutation, but probably the learned Abbé would join issue with us on this point. It would seem, from his remarks, that he regards this habit as of comparatively modern origin, instituted, in fact, by that wicked sect, the Freemasons, to displace the system formerly obtaining in Monarchical France. If the reverend gentleman, however, were not above consulting his Greek history, we think he would discover that the custom of joining right hands, at all events, is as old as the time of Pythagoras, else would not that philosopher have given the advice "me panti emballein ten dexian," that the right hand should not be given to all men, meaning, as we would interpret the expression, that one ought not to make friends with everybody. Homer, Aristophanes, and other Greek writers make use of similar expressions.

Whether the Egyptians and other nations of antiquity acknowledged the same custom may well be doubted, although Josephus describes "the giving of the right hand" as an unquestionable pledge of fidelity amongst the Persians. Even from the remarks of this writer, however, it is evident that the "giving of the right hand" was not their usual mode of greeting. From Herodotus we learn that the form of ordinary salutation amongst them depended upon the respective rank of the individuals. If they were of equal position, they kissed each other on the mouth. If there was a slight disparity of rank, they only kissed the cheek. But if one was greatly inferior to the other, he prostrated himself on the ground. The modern mode of salutation in the East is somewhat different. The greeting of a Mussulman consists in an inclination of the head, great or little in accordance with the rank of the person addressed, accompanied by the raising of the tips of the fingers to the forehead. The custom of "shaking the body by the arm" seems never to have commended itself to the grave Orientals. Even the Hebrews, though regarding the right hand as the symbol of truth and fidelity, do not appear to have, even in their own country, considered the joining of hands as a pledge of faith. St. Paul is the first of the sacred writers to speak of giving "the right hand of fellowship" to his co-workers; and he, in all probability, derived the expression from the Greeks. Amongst the Romans the joining of right hands was unquestionably a very common mode of evincing mutual regard, and of exchanging pledges of good faith. Hence the expression "jungere dextras," to join right hands—came to signify to enter into an agreement, to give a mutual pledge. The Roman goddess, Fides, the patroness of fidelity and honesty, was accordingly characterised by two hands clasped together.

Various have been the customs of salutation amongst barbarians, prostration on the ground being perhaps the most usual, the rubbing of one another's noses the most curious. But we have adduced sufficient evidence to show that the custom of grasping hands is of greater antiquity than the Abbé Defourney appears to think. If the custom really takes its rise from the "Masonic Grip," we have here an additional proof of the ancient origin of Freemasonry. But for our own part, we are inclined to think that, old as Freemasonry undoubtedly is, the pernicious usage complained of is more ancient still.

We believe that Polish peasants have a form of salutation very similar to that which the Abbé proposes to introduce in Western Europe. When one of them meets another he says, "the name of the Lord Jesus be praised," the other replies, "for ever and ever." Amongst the earlier Christians, too, and amongst the Jews in the time of their persecution, some such mode of greeting appears to have prevailed, but notwithstanding these and such like precedents, we cannot hold out much hope of success to the apostles of the new crusade. We think the time is yet far distant when an Englishman, or even a Frenchman, will be content to greet his fellow with a cold "laudetur Jesus Christus," or to reply with the still more chilling formula "in secula seculorum." The custom of shaking hands once grafted upon the character of a nation is likely to be as stable and permanent as the national character itself. When Dutchmen can be converted by a sermon into Frenchmen, and Chinamen in like manner can be changed into Scotchmen, then in all probability the Abbé's project may arrive at a successful issue. Until then we think his prospects are more than doubtful.

HOW MASONRY SAVED MY LIFE.

I BECAME a Mason before I obtained my majority in the — regiment of foot. I joined a celebrated Lodge in the Metropolis, and although at first I took but a languid interest in the business, I soon became interested, and endeavoured to make myself familiar with the teachings of the Order. My regiment was at this time stationed at Chatham, but I always contrived to run up to town to attend Lodge, and I usually found the Masonic banquets much more enjoyable than the mess dinners. I had taken two or three degrees in the Order, and was looking forward in due time, to fill some honourable office in the Lodge, when war broke out between England and Russia. We had been expecting hostilities, and immediately upon the publication of the Queen's proclamation my regiment received orders to hold itself in readiness for active service. I had at once to give up all my dreams of Masonic advancement, and prepare myself for the stern duties of the field. My readers will doubtless remember the stirring incidents of the period of which I am writing, and I need not dwell upon the details connected with our departure for the Crimea. We were among the first troops to embark, and, with our luggage, we were crowded into one of those uncomfortable troop ships of the Urgent type, which were the best means of transport our Admiralty then possessed. The magnificent Jumna and Serapis, with their sister consorts, were not then in existence. Some of the regiments were embarked on board of hired transports, and others were accommodated on board the line of battle ships, which formed a portion of the fleet which was to attack the forts of Sebastopol. The voyage was an unpleasant one, but we did not mind that. Our fellows were delighted at the thought of active service in the field, and no one dreamed of the hardships and sufferings which we were fated to endure. Our landing at Eupatoria, and the victory of the Alma, are facts of history too well known to need any reference here. We were in the hottest of the fire at the Alma, and our men behaved splendidly. We had many raw recruits in our ranks, but they bore themselves on this memorable day like seasoned soldiers, and gallantly upheld the traditional fame of the old ——th. Some of us were sanguine enough to believe that this victory had decided the fate of the Russians, but we soon discovered that our task was only beginning. When the trenches were opened, we were among the troops ordered to the front, and from first to last we got more than our share of the fighting. We should not, however, have minded that if we had been properly cared for. We were a fortnight without tents, and when we got them, they were a poor defence against the weather; mere rags in fact, which admitted every breadth of wind. I, and two or three of the officers messed and slept together in a small tent, to the right of our position, and we soon found that the mess was a mere fiction. Hard bread and salt junk, with green coffee, were indeed served out to us, but we had no comforts, and our private stores, upon which we had based our hopes, were safe on board our ship in Balaclava harbour, and we had no chance of getting them. Often have I, after spending a night on the damp ground, with no other shelter than our flimsy tent and a blanket, risen to breakfast off biscuits and cold water. The men of course were no better off than ourselves, and as winter approached a great many of them were obliged to cut up their knapsacks into leggings, to defend their limbs from the wet and mud of the trenches. What awful nights those were which we spent on duty at the front! We did not care about the enemy; an occasional sortie from the garrison was welcomed as a relief from the dreary monotony of our watch. The excitement revived us, and the danger was as exhilarating as wine. A brush with the enemy, at the point of the bayonet, was a trifle, but to stand under arms for hours at a time, up to the knees in mud, this was a trial to test the powers of the strongest. After a night spent in this manner we frequently marched to the rear, to find that there was nothing for us to eat. Foraging was out of the question. The troops in the rear managed occasionally to pick up a day's rations in this way, but there was no such luck for our fellows. Salt junk, or salt horse, as the sailors call it, was beginning to tell upon us, and our mess at least was suffering from that indiscribable longing for fresh meat, which must be felt to be understood. The regiment which was quartered near us was French, and the men possessed a brute of a dog, which somehow or other managed to keep a little flesh on his bones, we longed to shoot and dine off the rascal, which was constantly prowling about our tent, but honour forbade us to attempt such an outrage. "Gaston" was known to be a great thief, and we strongly suspected that he made free with our scanty rations; but we could never catch him in the act, until, one memorable night the rogue, forgetting his usual caution, slipped into our tent, and snatched a piece of pork before our very eyes. O'Flannigan of ours had been cleaning his revolver, and as the brute rushed passed, with the meat, he struck him a tremendous blow on the head with the but end of the weapon. Poor Gaston rolled over, with a cry which was a cross between a howl and a shriek, dropped the meat, turned up the whites of his eyes, and gave up the ghost. We were not long in disposing of the body, and I must confess that roast dog is an excellent dish. I wonder our lively neighbours who have added horseflesh to the dietary of man do not think of the canine race. I might perhaps at the present time prefer a mutton cutlet to a broiled puppy, but when we were starving on salt junk and sea biscuit anything in the way of a fresh bite was a luxury. We had to pay for Gaston though through the nose. His comrades in the regiment soon cleared up the mystery of his disappearance, and O'Flannigan and I had to exchange shots with a couple of fire eaters, who felt bound in honour to burn powder over the affair.

But this little incident keeps me from the pith of my story. I have to tell how Masonry saved my life, and I hasten at once to the denouement. Our lines had been steadily pushed forward towards the Russian batteries, and we were almost every day expecting a sortie, when, one evening, as I was looking over the earthern parapet in the direction of the battery, which had been playing upon us all day, I thought I saw a dark and moving mass advancing upon our left. I hinted my suspicions to Major L——, and we both watched carefully. Presently we saw the glitter of steel. "That was the sword of an officer," said L——, "the fool has been using the flat of it upon the back of a laggard. I am satisfied now that a large force is advancing upon us." A few minutes sufficed to make our few preparations to receive the enemy, and we awaited the attack in sullen silence. The moment the head of the attacking column was plainly visible, we commenced playing upon it with grape and canister. The Russians rushed forward with a loud shout, and we replied with a volley of musketry. The enemy was truly in great force, and had soon reached the parapet of our works, when a desperate attack, on our part, with the bayonet, drove him back in great confusion. We rushed out of the trenches, and a hand-to-hand conflict took place in the darkness the like of which I have never seen since, and hope I shall never see again. The Russians were ably supported by reinforcements from the rear, and we were assisted by a brigade of French Infantry which came up as soon as the firing was heard. We had driven the enemy to the counter scarp of his own works, when he rallied, and made a desperate charge, under which our men reeled and retreated for a moment. In the struggle I received a bayonet wound in the side, and fell. A fresh column of Russians had come out to relieve their comrades, and these fellows covered the retreat in a most masterly style. I expected every moment to receive the coup de grace, for the retreating Russians cruelly bayoneted our wounded as they lay helpless on the ground. A brute of a fellow had, indeed, brought his bayonet to the charge, with the intention of finishing one, when, with a sudden inspiration, I sprang to my feet, seized the hand of an officer who stood near, and gave him the sign. Fortunately he was a Mason, he of course instantly returned it, while, with his sabre, he thrust back the deadly point which was levelled at my breast. My brotherly foe immediately gave an order for my removal, and I was carried into the shelter of the battery by the very men who, but for my happy thought, would have given me a happy despatch to the other world. My wound was instantly attended to, and the next morning I received a visit from my preserver, who brought with him a surgeon, who soon made me as comfortable as circumstances would admit. The story of my miraculous escape soon spread through the division, and I received many kind visits from Masons, who proved themselves to be brothers in word and deed. Many little comforts were contributed by these good fellows, with the view of making my captivity as pleasant as possible. I was of course hors de combat for the remainder of the campaign. I was taken into the interior as soon as I could be moved, but my story went with me, and I everywhere received the kindest treatment from the Russian officers. My captivity was not of very long duration, and I need not dwell upon the subsequent events of the war. The death of the Czar hastened the peace, and I was among the first of the prisoners who returned to England. I need scarcely add that I have ever since been a most zealous Mason, and shall cherish the principles of the Order as long as I live. When I hear people railing against Masonry, or when captious critics demand to know what practical good the Order has achieved, I usually tell my story, and I am tempted to relate it once again in the enduring form of letter-press, in the hope that the moral of the incident may compel conviction in the minds of those who are too ready to believe that Masonry is merely humbug in disguise.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Each quarter of the year tests the constitution, and discovers its weakest link. By the variable temperatures of the present season, the human system is severely tried; chest complaints, disordered digestion, and biliousness are generally more or less frequent. The wisest will save both pain and hazard by the early use of these infallible remedies. Holloway's Ointment, well rubbed upon the skin nearest the seat of disease, exerts most wonderfully purifying powers, never fails in expelling all noxious matters and removing all temporary obstructions, thus restoring healthy action to the organ. While the Ointment gently re-arranges disordered action, Holloway's Pills should be taken to remove all contaminations from the blood.

BRO. B. PENCHINAT'S ADDRESS AT THE CLOSE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE G.O. OF FRANCE.

TRANSLATED FROM le Monde Maçonnique.

BRETHREN: each time it has been permitted me to take part in the proceedings of the General Assembly of the Grand Orient, I have been penetrated with the feeling that it would be difficult to exact of the members who compose it a better spirit. In the discussion, more or less animated, but always serious, of the questions set down on the various orders of the day, each one brings to it, so to speak, the distinctive marks of his own character and temperament. Yet, in spite of divergencies of opinion, and though it is well nigh inevitable, there should be, as in every case, triumphant majorities and defeated minorities, the spirit of brotherhood, of conciliation and reciprocal affection is never absent in our Masonic relations. Whatever may be the results of our ballots, we never fail to extend to each other and grasp cordially, and without distinction, the right hand of fellowship. What is the cause, what the reason of this mutual tolerance of which we feel so proud, of this touching harmony, which nothing disturbs? It is that we all, within these walls, have but one object in view, it is that all of us are in pursuit of one and the same ideal, the noblest that can be proposed to our energies as men; it is that, while it is possible we may differ in opinion as to the means by which we hope to attain our purpose, it is impossible we should have but one and the same end to attain. You know, as I do, what this aim, this ideal, this purpose is; it is the greatness of our beloved Masonry. As regards this, struggles and disputes are out of the question. We are of one mind; our hearts beat in unison, and that love of self, which we meet with everywhere in the profane world, is powerless to make headway in face of our firm faith, our profound convictions, our inextinguishable love for this grand work of justice and truth. Our union on this basis is indissoluble, and hence our debates leave behind them no trace of bitterness, no memory of unworthy language, of wounded feelings, or of injured self-respect, and when the hour of separation is at hand, we leave behind us no angry nor rancorous feelings, for we all know that each brother has fulfilled his duty in the conscientious performance of what he believed to be good and useful, and for the common weal.

At the opening of this long and laborious session, you nominated Bro. de Saint Jean to preside over your labours. It was a just tribute of respect to one whose whole Masonic career has been one of perpetual devotion to our cause; it was a testimony of recognition for those numerous services he has rendered, and is willing to render, and I trust he will permit me, on behalf of the brethren present, to express to him our gratitude. We rely implicitly on him, and are firmly persuaded that, in all circumstances, he will know how to protect the sacred interests of that Masonry which is so dear to our hearts.

I shall not enter into details upon all the questions you have settled. Your votes inspired by the single desire to see our Order prosperous, to improve our regulations, and to bring our constitution into perfect harmony with the progress of society, will, I trust, be attended with happy results. It is when we come to put them in force that we shall learn their value; it is the practical application of the changes we have made that will prove whether we have been labouring under a delusion, or if our work has been beneficial. I earnestly hope that our labours may have been profitable, and that our conditions of life, as regards our Lodges, may improve day-by-day. Perfection is not of this world, but human institutions are capable of being perfected, and it is with this perfectibility that we busy ourselves whenever we meet within these walls. But there is one of your decisions on which I shall permit myself to dwell. The Council of the Order, which ordinarily leaves to the Lodges within its jurisdiction the initiative in respect of all bills which have for object the amendment and improvement of the constitution, has this year submitted for your consideration a plan, to which it appears to have attached the greatest importance, and by the terms of which it claimed for itself the right to deal summarily with Venerables and Orators who may have been guilty of violating the Constitution. From the general purport of the proposal it is easy to see, and none of you can have been mistaken—that among the Masonic crimes of which a President of a Lodge or an Orator is likely to be guilty, the scheme had specially in view the case in which they might have permitted political or religious controversies in the Lodge; and in order to render more effective the authority of the Council, which always in such cases has the right to stop them in pursuing a line of conduct so much to be deplored, by suspending them from office, demanded the power of withdrawing them from their common rights, and from a trial before the ordinary tribunal, with a view to making them amenable to a still higher jurisdiction. You know the result, and I have no intention of re-opening the question, but as regards the causes which brought forward this grave question, I have the right to tell you what I think.

For the last two or three years, and especially within the last few months, Freemasonry has been assailed with the greatest violence; it has been denounced, calumniated, turned into ridicule, or represented as an element of disorder and revolution. We might say with truth that a great fiat has been issued, for there is not one of our opponents that has not thought it his duty to mingle his voice in this grand concert of imprecations and anathemas. Have we done aught that could justify, even in the slightest degree, this campaign so rudely undertaken against us. I have searched in vain, and I neither see nor know of anything, whether as regards the Lodges or the Grand Orient of France, of a nature to account for this deluge of invectives, or these denunciations before the civil power of our Order. Freemasonry has never deviated from the path it has marked out for itself. It has always maintained that it was unworthy of it to engage in the struggles of party, and regulating its actions in accordance with its principles, it has always confined itself within the lofty and serene sphere of a generous philosophy, the ruling spirit of which is love of humanity. By all means let Masons in their character of citizens have this or that conviction, let them enrol themselves under this or that banner, and give expression to their views in their private assemblies, or by their writings,—what matters it? They are citizens, they are free, it is their right. But when they meet in the Lodge as Masons, then it is important the Masonic constitutions should be scrupulously observed, that Masonic principles should be rigorously acted upon; in a word, that only Masonic questions should be discussed and determined. It is at the very time, when this ambiguous charge has been designedly urged against us in public by means of the press, and which consists in confounding the moral being of the Lodge with the political or private conduct of some of its members, that we are represented as conspirators, unceasingly sapping the foundations of society, plotting the overthrow of all civil and religious authority, and seeking in our Lodges, under the mask of a cold and passionless course of inquiry, the means for perpetrating the most horrible crimes. Nothing is further removed from the truth; deceit and injury are the weapons of those who are embarked in an unholy cause. Silence should be our only answer, were there not the risk that these lying assertions at length find credit, and get propagated; and thus we should become the victims of this terrible conspiracy against an institution, the noblest, the most honourable, the most worthy of consideration, esteem, and respect. At Basle, we protested with all the force of which we were capable against these calumnies; and we shall protest always. But, my Brethren, side by side with these protestations which issue, in spite of ourselves, from our indignant souls, we have a certain line of conduct to follow, if we would pass, with any chance of safety, the crisis that is before us, and permit me to explain this duty to you in a few words: as citizens, moderation, prudence, respect for established laws, and confidence in the future; as Masons, passive obedience to the Constitution we have sworn to uphold, and the most scrupulous regard for our statutes and regulations.

It was with a view to put down any possible violation of Masonic law, a violation which under present circumstances would prove so dangerous, not only to the Lodge that might have committed, but also to the whole Order, that the Council demanded of you that it should be armed with sufficient powers. Well, in thanking that body for its solicitude, let us here solemnly bind ourselves to prove, by our acts, that its fears were groundless, that not one among us, nay, not one, is tempted to foolishly compromise the sacred interests of our beloved Masonry, and never, be the circumstances what they may, to expose ourselves to the accusations of our adversaries by deviating from our strict line of duty, or from the obligation we have contracted.

Ah! my Brethren, have we not a sufficiently wide field for our studies, our researches, and our labours? Are you unmindful that the care of humanity should be our constant preoccupation; that so long as the voice of the cannon thunders forth its commands throughout the world, and war cuts off human beings by thousands, so long will there be sufferings to administer to, ignorant to instruct, vices to eradicate; so long as the moral and intellectual level of mankind is not as high as we wish it to be, so long shall we have to labour unceasingly? Is it not enough, then, that you have before you this overwhelming task, to which generations of men have devoted themselves, which will last out your lifetime without attaining its completion, and which our descendants in future ages will still carry on? Let us not, then, I beseech you, quit our proper sphere of action; and if we have to combat for our colours, for our principles of liberty, and the enfranchisement of human reason, let it be without passion as without weakness, let it be the performance of a Duty impressed upon our conscience, nothing less, yet nothing more.

I speak of combat. Is it not strange that we should be forced to pronounce this hated word, we who profess for all mankind the deepest love? Ah! forsooth, this combat, we have not sought it, we have given no provocation to our implacable and eternal foes. It is they, the enemies of liberty and of freedom; it is they, the partisans of slavery, as their aim, and of ignorance as the means, who have entered into the contest with such unheard of violence. Summoned by our principles to defend that liberty of conscience which our forefathers have conquered from clerical despotism, can we, I ask you, lay down our arms and quit the field of battle? Further, have we not been directly accused? Do you not bear in mind that burning philippic which recently emanated from a man of eminence in that party which ardently wishes for our death?

Defence then is legitimate, and we will defend ourselves by all possible means, at the same time keeping within the limits which the laws of the State and Masonry impose upon us. We shall enter into no religious controversy—Article 2 of our constitutions forbids it; but we shall set forth the principles of our philosophy, of our morality: and the country, and, may I not say, the whole world shall decide which are they who, be it among them or us, enjoy a greater community of ideas, and are more completely in harmony with those who of old, on the shores of the Lake of Tiberias or Genesareth, substituted for the law of hatred which ruled the ancient world this law of love and of freedom.

These provocations to the struggle have afflicted, but not surprised me. Our adversaries find before them, in the accomplishment of their unholy mission, an invincible obstacle, and one before which they will utterly break down if they succeed not in crushing it. This is Human Reason, which the philosophers of last century emancipated by instructing and elevating it, and by instilling into it its rights and its duties. It is this they proscribe and insult, and which they would annihilate. But we who lay it down that without this Reason there is nothing but error, deceit, or fanaticism; we who hold that, from the day it is annihilated, there will be an end once and for all to the dignity of manhood, this Reason that is thus cursed, we defend it, and will defend while there is a breath of life left in us.

There, my brethren, is the true cause of those accusations which are launched against us. In order to give their charges a semblance of justice, they pretend that Freemasonry means atheism; they represent us as the sworn enemies of all religious faiths. It is in vain we have pointed out to them that, were this the case, we should be, as they are, sworn to intolerance; that, on the contrary, we respect the opinions, faith, and religious convictions of all our brethren, in the name of that liberty of conscience which forms the motto of our Order; that in order to avoid clashing with each other, and never to disturb that harmony which should exist among us, all discussions of this character are rigorously forbidden in our Lodges, and scrupulously respected; that if Freemasonry professed any religion it would be its duty to give it full effect, and that thus it would violate our grand principle of liberty; that it should be lay, but not atheist, and that the confusion between these terms, so essentially different from each other, is a defect of logic and of good faith. Vainly have we answered all these things; they will not listen, and it is to be feared they never will consent to listen to this language of common sense and of reason.

Our conscience, sole judge of all our actions, imposes on us the obligation in these grave circumstances of rising to the height of our duty. Indeed, I am not very far from the conviction that this warfare, this persecution may, perhaps, in the end, be of service to our Order. Danger not uncommonly reawakens the listless, excites devotion, arouses in the mind a greater activity, and in the soul, a greater enthusiasm. We no longer live, thank God, in days when thousands upon thousands of men pay with dear life for the crime of heresy, that is to say, for the revolt of reason against the despotism of a religious sect. Resistance in these days is less dangerous, but were it dangerous, is it for us to hesitate? Already I see men who have attained eminence by their character, their talents, and the services they have rendered to science and their country, coming to us, and seeking admission into our temples. This is a feature that must certainly strike you, and cause you to indulge in the firm hope of approaching triumph. When allies of such worth come and ask of their own free will, and actuated by an impulse, of which they may well be proud, to fight under the banner of Masonry, we have the right to say boldly, and with head erect, that our cause is that of right, of truth, of eternal justice, since it is embraced by those who have made justice and truth the constant aim of all their efforts and labours.

A modern philosopher, Herbert Spencer, in the course of his remarkable work, Introduction to Social Science, makes use of a comparison, the justice of which has struck me, and which I will make known to you, because it tells its own tale, and is applicable to our present situation. When a man undertakes to ascend a lofty mountain, in order that, as an artist, he may feast his eyes on the grand and majestic beauties of nature, at first he sets out, alert and joyous, satchel on his back, stick in hand. But the hours pass; his pace slackens, the ascent becomes more difficult; by degrees his strength is exhausted, his enthusiam evaporates, and he sits on a rock fatigued, ready to abandon his project, discouraged by the incessant difficulties and numberless obstacles which, at each instant, beset his path. All of a sudden he pulls himself together, he marks the distance he has accomplished, he sees that he has traversed more than half the route, and that the summit is not as distant as he had at first supposed; hope returns to him, he finds fresh strength to put himself once again on the road, and, thinking of the ideal pleasure which awaits him, he makes a final effort and attains the summit. We also, my brethren, have our mountain to scale, at the summit of which is found the realisation of our wishes and the limit of our labours. It is long since we undertook this trying journey, and from all appearances, it will last yet a long time. But is it the right moment to abandon the struggle, when the dangers are more formidable and more pressing, when there is greater need of calmness and presence of mind, of daring and energy, when we should exert to the utmost all the strength we possess? Is this the moment for us to give in? Certainly not. Let us turn a glance behind us, let us measure the distance that has been traversed, the difficulties that have been surmounted, and let us bear in mind that each step brings us nearer to our goal. Let us take heart, then; let us gird our loins, and forward!

My dear Venerables and Delegates, you are about to return to your respective Lodges. Hide not from our brethren the gravity of the present circumstances, reawaken their zeal, do battle with indifference, appeal to their feelings as Masons, if they be so in reality and in their hearts. It behoves us to marshal our ranks in order to meet the enemy which menaces modern civilization, and, as a consequence, our French Freemasonry, on the standard of which are inscribed the watch-words of humanity and progress.

Liberty, equality, fraternity, sacred triad, magic formula, which hast freed our fathers from the oppression of the despot, be ever present to our minds, direct our actions and our thoughts, enlighten our hearts, grant us the needful strength, and may we, by thy help, in a not distant future, prove victorious over our enemies, less for our own glory than for the happiness of mankind.

FELTOE AND SONS' (27 Albemarle Street, W., late of Conduit Street) "Spécialité" Sherry is a very pleasant light wine, with no heat; a real vinous flavour, which, unlike that of the majority of wherries at low prices, leaves an impression on the palate of belonging to a real wine. . . . . It is exceedingly pleasant to the eye; the taste is soft, round, and not acid; the flavour is vinous and dry, without any suggestion of artificial bitterness. We have no doubt that as a moderately stimulating accessory to the meal of a patient suffering from atonic dyspepsia it would be valuable.—Medical Times.

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY AT WHITEHAVEN.

THE annual Convocation of the Sun, Square and Compasses Chapter, No. 119, Whitehaven, was held at Freemasons' Hall, College-street, on Wednesday, 13th October. The Chapter was opened by M.E.Z. Comp. John Barr, E. Fearon H. and John Bowes P.Z., &c., as J., assisted by Comps. W.B. Gibson P.Z., Kenworthy P.Z., and James Porter P.Z., No. 327, Wigton, after which the remainder of the Comps., an unusually large number, were admitted. Several candidates were balloted for and afterwards exalted by the M.E.Z., the Historic Lecture being delivered by Comp. E. Fearon. After some routine business had been disposed of, Comp. W. B. Gibson P.Z., in the name of the Chapter, presented to the M.E.Z. a handsome gold P.Z.'s jewel, which bore the following inscription: "Presented to M.E. Comp. Barr in recognition of his invaluable service as M.E.Z. of the Sun, Square and Compasses Chapter, No. 119. October 13th 1875."

The M.E.Z. then called upon E. Comp. John Bowes P.Z., P.P.G.S.B., West Lancashire, to take the chair as Installing Principal, who Installed the Principals, and invested the officers as follow:—Comps. John Barr re-elected Z., E. Fearon H., W. Sandwith J., John Tickle S.E., W. Armstrong S.N., E. Tyson P.S., J. M'Kelvie Treas., John Rothery and W. F. Lamonby Asst. Sojs., and W. Corrie Janitor. On the conclusion of the ceremony, E. Comp. W. B. Gibson P.Z., said they were in the habit of according to their kind Comp. Bowes annually a vote of thanks, but he had an addition to propose on that occasion; it was that, in consideration of the great assistance afforded by E. Comp. Bowes to the Chapter for a long time past, he be elected an honorary member for life. This proposition was seconded by Comp. Fearon, supported by Comp. Tickle S.E., and unanimously agreed to. The Chapter then voted ten guineas to the Boys' School. The business of the Chapter being concluded, the Comps. adjourned to the banqueting-room, where an elegant repast awaited them. The chair was occupied by the M.E.Z. Comp. Barr, supported on the right and left by Comps. W. B. Gibbon P.Z., Jas. Porter P.Z., E. Tyson P.S., John Bowes P.Z., &c., Kenworthy P.Z., M'Kelvie Treas. The cross tables were presided over by Comps. Tickle and Armstrong. The chairman proposed the usual loyal toasts.

Comp. Bowes then proposed "The three Grand Principals of the Supreme Grand Chapter of England," and in doing so referred to each individually, and said that with such chiefs they had every reason to be proud of that, the highest order of recognised Freemasonry. Comp. W. B. Gibson P.Z., proposed "the M.E.Z. Comp. John Barr." He said they were all deeply indebted to their M.E.Z. for the zeal and ability with which he had managed to work the Chapter, and therefore it was the unanimous desire of the members that he should retain the position another year.

The M.E.Z., in responding, said that he was deeply indebted to the Companions for their kindness. He assured them that it was no easy task to master the ceremonial part of his labour; that he had succeeded was owing in no small degree to the untiring exertions of their Preceptor, Comp. Bowes.

Comp. Pagen proposed "The Second and Third Principals and Officers of Chapter No. 119." He said he could not but echo the feelings of regret expressed by the M.E.Z., in Chapter, at the enforced absence of their worthy and E. Comp. Dr. Henry, H. elect. He had written from London to say how sorry he was that he could not be with them to receive the benefit of installation at the hands of his friend, Comp. Bowes, and they shared his sorrow, and sincerely hoped that his health, ere long, would be completely restored. He had great pleasure in proposing the toast, because he felt confident that the Chapter would be efficiently worked by their present staff.

Comps. E. Fearon, W. Sandwith, McKelvie, Tickle, Armstrong, Tyson and Rothery severally responded

Comp. McKelvie proposed "The P.Z.'s of Chapter No. 119." He said the age of their Chapter precluded them from having many P.Z.'s; but out of the small number, two were present, Comps. Gibson and Kenworthy, and two more worthy brethren and trusty Companions could not be found. Their zeal in the Masonic cause was well known and appreciated in the province. They were both Past Senior Wardens of the Province, and as they all knew, Comp. Gibson was at present Prov. G. Secretary, their interest in Masonry was unabated, and they, therefore, might congratulate themselves that they had their names on their muster roll.

Comp. Gibson thanked them heartily for the kind manner in which the toast had been proposed and received, and said Comp. McKelvie was not far wrong when he said his friend, Comp. Kenworthy, and himself took a warm interest in Masonry. Their engagements were frequent, and it afforded them great pleasure to undertake the duties which they were invited to discharge.

Comp. Kenworthy also responded, and expressed the great delight he experienced in witnessing the efficient manner in which their Chapter was worked. When they lost their friend and Comp., Capt. Mott, it occurred to him, when M.E.Z., that Comp. Bowes would take the Chapter under his care, and put it in working order. This desirable object had been achieved, and they rejoiced on all sides.

Comp. Fearon proposed "The Installing Principal, E. Comp. John Bowes, P.Z. P. Prov. G.S.B. West Lancashire, complimenting him upon the admirable manner in which he had performed the ceremony of the day. He said Comp. Bowes was always both ready and willing to impart instruction to those who required it. On reaching the town, the night before, he at once expressed a wish to meet the officers in the Chapter Room to talk about the work they had successfully completed that day. He had very great pleasure in proposing the toast.

Comp. Bowes, in responding, said that, having lived in the county, and some of his oldest friends still living in it, he was naturally attached to Cumberland. With respect to Freemasonry, he had been a "working" brother for many years; but he was one of those who did not wish to keep the work in his own hands. When he first visited their Chapter, which he did on the invitation of his old friend, Comp. Kenworthy, they could do little of themselves. He offered his services to any Comp. who desired instruction, and Comp. Barr came forward. What they had witnessed that day was a proof that they were both sincere. No one could have listened to the ceremony of exaltation without feeling that they were deeply indebted to the M.E.Z. for the labour he had bestowed upon the requirements of this office. He (Comp. Bowes) never remembered having a more apt pupil. He would only add that his best offices should always be at the disposal of the province. He was rejoiced to see that due care and oversight of Royal Arch Masonry was about to be inaugurated. A new Chapter was shortly to be consecrated at Kirby Lonsdale, with Lord Bective at its head, and then they might soon hope to see a Provincial Grand Chapter constituted. He thanked them very heartily.

Comp. Alsop proposed "The Principals, Officers and Members of Chapters in the Province," and coupled with it the name of Comp. James Porter P.Z., of Wigton, who responded. Comp. Kenworthy, in proposing "The Visiting Companions," said he had much pleasure in discharging that duty, as he should couple with it the names of two Cumberland men now resident in far distant climes, but who happened to be on a visit to the land of their birth.

Comps. George Glasse, of Victoria, Hong Kong, and John R. Smith, of Chicago, N.S. America, responded, and were warmly received. Comp. McKelvie proposed "The newly exalted Companions," and Comp. Cowman responded. Comp. Gibson proposed "The Masonic Charities," and in doing so alluded in gratifying terms to the recent election to the Boys' School of Robert Duff, of Silloth, due in a great measure to the active personal exertions on the spot of Comp. James Porter, with whose name the toast was coupled. Comp. Porter responded in a most interesting and instructive speech. Comp. Bowes asked permission to propose a toast not on the list. The officers had all been considered, but there was an unofficial member who, if they would excuse the parador, was always in office, and one to whom the Chapter was deeply indebted, he referred to Comp. White. The toast was heartily received.

Comp. White briefly responded. The Janitor's toast completed the list. During the evening a number of companions kindly favoured the company with songs, &c., under the able direction of Comp. Cooper Organist.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF WEST YORKSHIRE.

A PROVINCIAL Grand Lodge was held on Wednesday last, under the banner of the Wentworth Lodge, No. 1239, and presided over by the R.W. Bro. Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Henry Edwards, Bart., J.P., D.L., R.W.P.G.M. of West Yorkshire, in the Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield. The officers of the Wentworth Lodge opened the Lodge shortly before one o'clock, and soon afterwards the R.W.P.G.M., the W. Deputy Provincial G.M., and Provincial Grand Officers entered, and were received in due form. The meeting was a very large one, representatives being present from almost every Lodge in the Province, including the Mayors of several towns.

The R.W. Provincial Grand Master, after opening the Provincial Grand Lodge, said: Brethren,—In the first place, allow me to compliment the Wentworth Lodge for their preparations for the reception of the Provincial Grand Lodge, which has been held under the banner of the Wentworth Lodge for the first time. And I take the earliest opportunity of congratulating the brethren on the magnificent reception they gave to our M.W.G.M. of England in August last, and the remarkable manifestation of loyalty exhibited during the visit of our most illustrious Grand Master, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and his amiable consort. Whilst I deeply regret the worshipful Mayor of Sheffield was not a member of our Craft, and that etiquette prevented an official recognition of Freemasonry, I am glad to be assured that the Craft is prospering to such an extent in Sheffield that it is proposed to enlarge and greatly improve the present Masonic Hall, and however much we feel grateful for the loan of the present building for this great gathering I trust we may soon meet in premises dedicated solely to Freemasonry in this most important centre of industry. Brethren, I thank you for your salutation. The great gathering I see before me on this occasion shows the interest manifested by you all in the Masonic affairs of the province, and trust that under my leadership the principles of Freemasonry may be upheld with the same consistency with which they were advocated by my distinguished predecessor, the Marquis of Ripon, and his able deputy, Bro. Bentley Shaw. It must be a matter of congratulation to this province that it has been enabled to command, this year, considerable accession of voting power at the Charity elections. Notwithstanding the numerous losses it has sustained through death, West Yorkshire alone has made the munificent contribution to our three great Charities of £2,000. This amount has been subscribed by 174 brethren only, so that there are something like 2,000 brethren in the province who have not directly helped our Charity Committee. Brethren, I must still say, what the Marquis of Ripon repeatedly told you, viz., that he always saw the old names on the subscription lists year after year; and I, like him, am naturally anxious that our subscriptions should be collected from those in the province forming the majority, and not left to the few. With 58 candidates for the Boy's School and only ten vacancies, with 30 applications for the Girls' School and only six vacancies, West Yorkshire should do more in the future than what has been done in the past, if it means to be successful with its own orphans. West Yorkshire was never in such difficulty as it has been in this October election. Had not the greatest efforts been made among the brethren, there was little hope of carrying even one girl. These efforts, however, has resulted in the election of the two girls, and one boy also has got in. For this we have to thank our Bro. Thomas William Tew D.P.G.M.; Bro. Thomas Hill, Chairman of our Charity Committee; Bro. H Smith, our Provincial Grand Secretary; and Bro. Simpson, of St. Oswald's Lodge, who acted as a scrutineer. With respect to the collection of voting papers, there is still great room for improvement. On the 5th October Provincial Grand Secretary Bro. Smith wrote to my deputy, Bro. Tew, that 1,800 boys' and girls' votes had still to come in, and on Saturday, the 9th October, and Monday, the 11th, the fate of our candidates was sealed. Henceforth, I beg and entreat all the brethren when they receive these voting papers to sign and send them back to our Provincial Grand Secretary without the loss of a single post. It has never been the object of Freemasonry to degenerate into a mere benefit society, or become a club in the popular acceptation of the term; and as admissions into Freemasonry are greatly on the increase I do earnestly impress on the Masters of Lodges Bye-laws 47 and 48 of this Provincial Grand Lodge with reference to joining brethren, and to the initiation of new candidates. This Province cannot be to particular who it initiates and who it receives. There are Lodges in the provinces which are Clubs and Lodges. I need hardly tell you it is necessary for the interests of Freemasonry that these Masonic Clubs should conform strictly to the law of the land, and whatever the hour of closing be in populous towns, these clubs and Lodges should close at that hour too. By extending Lodge gatherings to unstatutory hours, Freemasonry is liable to be brought into disrespect and disrepute. Lodges should be colleges for the purpose of operative and speculative Freemasonry, and for the inculcation of morality and philosophy, and not clubs for recreation alone. Since I last had the honour of addressing this Provincial Grand Lodge my indefatigable Deputy, Brother Tew, has consecrated two new Lodges. One of them has set a good example of charity by endowing two of its chairs for the Girls' School; and the other regrets, for the present, it has not a private room away from the public-house at which to hold its meetings, and in which the furniture could remain in its place without being taken away after every meeting. This is a sentiment in the right direction, and I and my deputy earnestly desire that every Lodge in West Yorkshire should soon have private rooms of its own. I cannot conclude my remarks, brethren, without referring with deep sorrow to the loss we have sustained by the death of Bro. Freeman, of Huddersfield, who rendered most valuable assistance in the revision of our P.G. Bye-laws. Bro. Jonas Hill has also been taken away from us. You will regret to hear that Bro. Thomas Hill contemplates resigning his chairmanship of our Charity Committee next April. We hope, however, he will reconsider his determination. We sincerely hope so; we really cannot spare him. I have only to add that I trust the discussions which may arise from the business before us will receive that impartial attention which is justly due to a Congress of this kind. (The R.W.P.G.M. was repeatedly cheered during the delivery of his address, and resumed his seat amidst loud applause.)

The rolls having been called, and the minutes of the Provincial Grand Lodge, holden at Dewsbury in July last, confirmed,

An important discussion arose on a motion, of which notice had been given, by Bro. J. Cawthorn P.M. 458, P.P.G.A.P., "That this Provincial Grand Lodge of West Yorkshire take into consideration the necessity of thoroughly investigating the management and expenditure of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, to the end that a more economic system of collecting and dispensing the funds of this Institution may be arrived at, so that candidates who from time to time are excluded from its benefits by reason of the present system may, by a more judicious and less expensive management, be enabled to participate in the benefits of the Charity." The motion was carried after an animated discussion, as it was generally considered that the cost per head for the education and maintenance of the children did not in figures compare advantageously with the cost in other educational establishments of a similar kind. At the same time the idea of imputing anything irregular to the House Committee or Managers of the Institution was distinctly disclaimed. Indeed, such an investigation, it was believed, would be for the good of the Institution itself, would tend to secure its stability, and would ensure to it the brethren's confidence and support, which were at the present time to some extent shaken by the statements in circulation. It was resolved, on motions by Bro. the Rev. E. B. Chalmer P.P.G.C., and Bro. J. Cawthorn P.P.G.A.P., that, for the purpose of making the desired investigation a committee of twelve be appointed, to consist of six members of the Charity Committee, and six independent members to be named by the R.W.P.G.M., and that they report the result of their inquiries at the next Provincial Grand Lodge.

It was resolved, on the motion of Bro. W. H. Gill P.M. 1019 P.P.G. Reg., that the sum of one hundred pounds be given to the Royal Masonic Benevolent Annuity Fund, and that the sum of one hundred guineas be given to the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, at the respective Festivals in 1876.

After the transaction of some other business, the Provincial Grand Lodge was closed.

A banquet was then held in the Cutlers' Hall, the R.W.P.G.M. presiding. There was a large attendance, and the proceedings were of a most enjoyable character. The toasts were as follow:—The Queen, M.W.G.M.E. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales K.G. &c. &c., R.W.P.G.M.E. the Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon, and the Officers and Past Officers of Grand Lodge, R.W.P.G.M.W.Y. Lieut-Col. Sir Henry Edwards Bart. J.P. D.L., W.D.P.G.M., Bro. T. W. Tew J.P., and the Officers and Past Officers of Provincial Grand Lodge, P.G.C., and our Clerical Brethren, the Masonic Charities, W.M.'s and P.M.'s of Lodges, and the Visiting Brethren.—Sheffield Daily Telegraph.

A crowded meeting of residents of Nine-elms and the neighbourhood was held yesterday evening, for the purpose of taking measures to free Vauxhall and other metropolitan bridges from toll. It was stated that the sum necessary to make Vauxhall-bridge open to the public would be £42,000, which ought to be granted by the Government, and its future maintenance should be divided between the counties of Middlesex and Surrey. A petition to this effect to the Chief Commissioner of Works was adopted.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—A pamphlet, signed "T. W. Tew and O. G. D. Perrott," reached me on Saturday, and has, I believe, been very widely circulated. To reply to it in your columns is impossible, but I hope you will allow me to ask your readers not to accept as truthful the accusations with which this unique production is replete. The twin authors are pleased to describe my case "as very weak," but, judging from the numerous notices and personal expressions I have received and heard, such is certainly not the general opinion. The pamphlet under notice reiterates the charges in the first (by Mr. Tew), which have been proved to be groundless—and adds others which have about the same foundation as the former. Let one instance suffice. At page 29, portentous prominence is given to the case of "James Gasson," the palpably evident construction being that the second record of a grant of £10 is not only a duplicate record, but increased to £10 for the purpose of fraud. The facts are—On 4th May 1872, Gasson received a grant of £5, for the usual outfit given on leaving the school. He could not find employment for some months, when Mr. Jackson, Watchmaker, Bethnal-green (that is "the lad's employer's name" as given), offered to receive him as an apprentice, on condition that the sum of £10 could be found. The boy being an orphan, and entirely friendless, I brought his case before the General Committee, who kindly made a grant of £10—£5 to be paid at commencement of his time, and £5 at the expiration of a year. This simple explanation could have been afforded, if asked for, but such a simple course of fair play is not understood by the pamphleteers in question. Equally easy of explanation is every other accusation so unjustly charged, and equally susceptible of solution is every apparent difficulty to which allusion is made.

In drawing attention to my salary, it is stated that I receive "£581 9s 6d, besides commissions and other remuneration." The £81 9s 6d was spent in the service of the Institution, and was money out of pocket, allowed under well-considered rule. What is intended by "commissions" is a base and unfounded calumny. What is meant by "other remuneration," I have not the slightest idea.

With the characteristics of the late Head Master I am so thoroughly acquainted that I feel no surprise whatever at his share in this "Reply to the Secretary," and if Mr. Tew elects to associate himself with him he must be content to accept the consequences.

I have a right to complain that these charges and accusations have been sown broadcast, based as they are on assumptions treated as facts without any opportunity for explanation. Condemnation has preceded enquiry, the old English maxim reversed, and officials are deemed as guilty until proved to be innocent. In fact, the motto of these specimens of Masonic practice is, "Try first and hang afterwards." This is apparent from "par. 6, page 3, second edition" (altered from par. 6 in first edition), which runs:—

"We demand the appointment of a new Committee, the dismissal of the Secretary and Matron, and a thorough investigation." Have the latter, by all means, if wished and deemed advisable; but pray let it precede, not follow, the sus. per coll. of the Committee, the Matron and myself.

It is just possible that of the thousands who so generously support the Institution, there may be some whose views are not those of "T. W. Tew and O. G. D. Perrott."

Surely, if I write somewhat strongly, the contents of this pamphlet fully justify my doing so, and I appeal to the Governors and Subscribers of the School for a fair field and no favour.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,
Yours faithfully and fraternally,
FRED. BINCKES, Secretary.

19th October 1875.

[We have received a copy of the Pamphlet referred to in the above letter. We had hoped to have taken notice of it in this issue, but the pressure on our space is such that we must defer our remarks till next week.—ED. F. C.]

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

1.—The Imperial Constantinian Order of St. George. A Review of Modern Impostures, and a Sketch of its true History. By His Imperial Highness the PRINCE RHODOCANAKIS. In two parts. London: Longmans, Green and Co. 1870.

2.—Reply to a Criticism in the Saturday Review on the Imperial House of Rhodocanakis. Westminster: Nichols and Sons, 25 Parliament-street. 1870.

ALTHOUGH it is somewhat late in the day, we readily give publicity to this dispute between the claims of the Imperial Constantinian Order of St. George and the Masonic Red Cross Order, as we think our readers should have information upon this branch of Masonry, and the discussion which has been inaugurated thereupon by the present Grand Master Mason of Greece.

Some of our readers will be aware that, outside the degree of Master Mason, there is a Chivalric fraternity which has existed in this country for sixty or seventy years, called the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, the ceremonials of which claim that it was instituted by Constantine the Great for those Masons who aided him in his war against Maxentius, which gave him eventually the throne of Constantinople. A few years ago this degree was revived in London, and a new claim to represent the State Order of the Byzantine Empire was added, with an assertion in the statutes that the degree had been planted here by the Abbé Giustiniani, whilst acting in London as Venetian Ambassador.

In the first chapter of the first part of the Review the Prince Rhodocanakis completely disposes of the Masonic Red Cross Order as having the slightest pretensions to derivation from the Byzantine State Order; and in the second chapter he ably disposes of the "Anzoli" claims, and the alleged Grand Mastership of Giovanni Andria Angelo Flavio Comneno, whom Pope Innocent XIII. and his relative, Francis Farnèse, set up to make a sale of the most ancient Order in Christendom. The Prince adds:—

"Thus terminated an intrigue, remarkable in the history of popular deception, by which the historian already referred to, and probably one of its supporters, was nominated a Grand Cross—not, indeed, as he would have us believe, of the true Byzantine Order, but of its imitation, concocted between the puppet Angelus himself, and the house of Farnèse."

In the second part of the work the Prince goes on to explain the descent of his House from Nicephorus Ducas, King of Rhodes (914-929)—who descends from the father of Constantine the Great—and the subsequent marriage of H.R.H. Prince Demetrius Rhodocanakis with Theodora Palæologina (b. 1594, m. 1614, d. 1665), heiress of the Byzantine Empire, from which marriage his House derive their chief title to the Order in question.

In the Reply, Prince Rhodocanakis, Appendix A, gives a list of fifty-three works from A.D. 1546, "in which the Imperial Constantinian Order of St. George is noticed and recognised as the first Order in Christendom." In Appendix B a list of twelve works from A.D. 1496, "in which the House of Rhodocanakis is duly mentioned and recognised." In Appendix C a list of works from A.D. 1600, "in which members of the family of Rhodocanakis appear as authors." Appendix D contains "Extracts from Byzantine Historians, in which the attempt to seize the Crown of the Byzantine Empire by Constantine Ducas in A.D. 913, the nomination of his brother, Nicephorus Ducas, as King of Rhodes, and the origin of the House of Ducas and Rhodocanakis are fully recorded."

The discussion brought the Masonic Red Cross Order to close quarters, and caused the issue of the following document:—

"TO all members of the Masonic Order, known as the Order of the Red Cross of Constantine, and to all others whom it may concern.

WHEREAS the Masonic Order, now known as the Order of the Red Cross of Constantine (hereafter concisely called the Red Cross Order), has been recently revived in England, and occupies a prominent position as a chivalric branch of the great fraternity of Freemasons; and WHEREAS discussions have arisen whether the Red Cross Order has or has not any alliance with the ancient Chivalric Order known as the Constantinian Order of St. George, and as it is expedient that such discussions shall be terminated by a declaration of the claims of the Red Cross Order.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Thomas Taylour, commonly called Earl of Bective (Lord Kenlis), the Grand Sovereign of the Red Cross Order, do hereby, for myself, and on behalf of the Council of the said Order, signify and declare as follows:—

THAT the Order of the Red Cross does not claim, or proposes to have, any connection with the ancient public Order of Knighthood known as the Imperial Constantinian Order of Saint George.

THAT the Red Cross Order claims to be a revived branch of the Masonic brotherhood which formed part of the system of the Baron Hünde in or about the year 1750, and which has since been working in England under various auspices until the establishment of a Grand Council of the Order in or about the year 1796.

THAT the Order as now conferred is, with certain modifications, the same as that over which the late Duke of Sussex presided from 1813 to 1843.

THAT the Red Cross Order claims to be a chivalric institution of Freemasonry for reception into which the degree of a Master Mason is a necessary qualification.

THAT the above articles were approved at a meeting of the Council of the Order holden at Freemasons' Tavern, London, on Friday, the 19th May 1871.

(Signed) BECTIVE,

L.S.

(Signed) R. WENTWORTH LITTLE,
G. Recorder.

London, 29th May, 1871.
To His Imperial Highness
The Prince Rhodocanakis, of Scio,
Knight Grand Cross of the Constantinian Order of St. George,
&c., &c., &c.
The Clarendon Hotel, New Bond-street, London."

We may add, for the information of our readers, that about the date mentioned in this Red Cross document there was a degree called the Red Cross of Babylon, which is very similar to the English Royal Arch Degree; but that we have as yet seen no satisfactory evidence which will connect the "Masonic Red Cross of Rome and Constantine" with Hünde's Rite, or, indeed, any of its offshoots, and that, in all probability, it has no history in this country much beyond the time of its Grand Master, Judge Waller Rodwell Wright, in 1811. When the Templar degree began to be popular in this country it was the fashion of Finch, and other lecturers, to invent degrees embodying the claims of all the ancient Chivalric Orders of Christendom; and the absence of the "Red Cross of Rome and Constantine" from foreign Rites would favour the supposition that the birth-place of the Order is England. We should be pleased to receive any proofs of higher antiquity.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THE voyage of the Prince of Wales continues, amid the warmest demonstrations of good wishes for a successful journey out and home. Quitting Brindisi on Saturday, he reached the Piræus on Monday, when King George of Greece went on board the yacht to received him, and conducted him to Athens. The Prince landed at a few minutes after noon, amid the salutes of various men of war in harbour. On disembarking the Prince entered a royal carriage with the King, and drove to the station, the people lining the route showing great enthusiasm. This was also the case when the party reached Athens and drove to the Palace; in the afternoon the Royal guest visited the Acropolis, and afterwards there was a state dinner. On Tuesday the event was the grand display of fireworks, and on Wednesday the King and Queen of Greece lunched with the Prince on board of the Serapis, his departure from harbour taking place in the evening. By this time doubtless he is well on his way to the Red Sea. A single contretemps has marked the journey thus far. The Serapis broke both cables in taking up her moorings, carrying away the bowsprit of the King of Greece's yacht, and nearly running foul of the Osborne. Happily the Hercules and Swiftsure brought her up in time and further damage was prevented. What in the name of fortune has befallen our navy that the vessel, on board which is the Prince of Wales, cannot take up its moorings without running a muck among the other vessels in harbour? There must be something rotten in the state of the navy when our ships of war and Serapises are so dangerous to each other.

In commercial circles the great event of the last few days has been what is known as the repudiation by Turkey of sundry of its pecuniary obligations. We are not, as Masons, much concerned about matters of this kind, but it occurs to us that Turkey must be singularly blind not to see that in matters financial "honesty is the best policy." She has vast undeveloped resources, which even a small amount of energy would enable the Government to turn to good account, and then if she should want money again, she would experience no difficulty in obtaining it; now we fancy she will find it no light matter to raise the wind if occasion demand it.

There have been several speeches lately by members of Parliament. Mr. Russell Gurney, the Recorder of London, made the Admiralty Circular about fugitive slaves, now, however, withdrawn, the text of his address to a Working Man's Association at Southampton, and Sir Stirling Maxwell, after commenting on the work done during the past session, received a vote of confidence from his constituents. On Friday last the chief secretary for Ireland, Sir M. H. Beach, delivered a speech on Irish Education, on the occasion of the degrees being conferred by the Queen's University of London. Considering the strange manner in which the mob have been treating the Rev. Mr. O'Keeffe, it strikes us a little more education, with a view to a little more enlightenment, is imperatively necessary. But possibly the Roman Catholic hierarchy are not of the same mind. The Home Secretary, Mr. Cross, also addressed a Working Man's Association in Edinburgh, returning thanks for the address they had presented to him, and expressing his belief that the labour laws passed last session would prove very beneficial.

This week the Alexandra Palace has been the scene of a Poultry and Pigeon Show on an unprecedently large scale. The entries exceeded 2,500, and were ranged in 147 classes, of which 84 were poultry, and the rest devoted to pigeons. The show took place in the Great Central Hall, along which were placed rows innumerable of pens. The music was not what usually greets the visitors to this magnificent place of recreation. There was more of discord than harmony about it, but after all it was an agreeable kind of discord, and one with which most of us are familiar, only not to such an extent. The crowing, the cooing, the cackling of a few thousand poultry for a few hours was very exhilarating, but not as melodious as the symphonies and sonatas more generally heard within the walls of the Palace. But, this apart, the show was a grand success, most of the best known breeders contributed of their stock, and had the weather been other than it was, the exhibition must have been as financially successful as it was in all other respects. There were splendid specimens of Dorkings, coloured, silver-grey, white, &c., of Cochins, buff, partridge, white and black, of Brahmas both dark and light, of Houdans, Crêvecœurs, Polish, Hamburgs, Game, Bantams, with some representatives of geese, ducks and turkeys. To enumerate the many varieties of pigeons were almost impossible, but those who delight in these pretty birds must have been pleased with what they saw. We hope the attendance on Thursday, which, if not a brilliant, was at all events not wholly a rainy day, may have made some amends for the dulness of Tuesday and the extreme moisture of Wednesday. On Monday takes place the Balaklava Banquet when as many of the gallant "six hundred" as are yet alive and able to be present are invited to celebrate their gallant deed of arms. The directors, with their usual liberality, came forward when there seemed a chance of the project falling through, and placed the Palace at the disposal of the gallant fellows, who moreover are invited to bring their wives and sisters with them. Several of the officers who were present at the battle will also be present. Subscriptions are flowing in, and there seems every prospect of the celebration passing off most successfully. There is one point that strikes us as a little out of character. The artist, Miss Thompson, whose picture the Roll-Call chanced to be praised by the Prince of Wales, will honour the occasion with her presence. We look for modest retirement in ladies far more than we do in men, and we do not see how having painted one or two battle pieces raises her to the dignity of a public Institution. This kind of way in which a person's fame is dinned into the ears of the public, smacks a good deal of trade advertisement. However, it matters not, if the veterans enjoy themselves. As Jupiter Pluvius is no respecter of persons, we imagine the Great Harvest Festival that was fixed for Wednesday must have been a failure as regards attendance, whatever it may have been in other respects. Let us hope to-day will be bright and sunshiny, so that admirers of the winter promenade concerts may not be kept away.

Floods in various parts of the country appear to have become current news for every-day of the week. If the rains come down like this much longer we shall require a few immense sheds to be erected on the higher ground, so that when we swim to our friends in different neighbourhoods, we may be able to dress and undress with some degree of comfort. Or as the season is, just now, not particularly warm, we might take to paddling our own canoes to the doors of our friends, or of the theatres, concert rooms, or other temples of pleasure. Now is the time, when the country is partially under water, to think of erecting a National school for swimming. Let the gallant Captain Webb be installed Professor, with a well qualified staff of assistants. Teachers might be found, too, for the ladies, who would, doubtless, soon acquire the art under the able tuition of Miss Emily Parker and Miss Beckwith.

It seems as though our difficulty with China were likely to be settled—tant mieux. But the Chinese are a treacherous lot—tant pis. We shall consider the affair is settled, when the satisfaction is granted, but not till then. From Berlin we learn that the appeal of Count Arnim against the decision of the Court below has been affirmed by the Court above, with costs against the Count. While at home we have just lost an eminent and zealous Churchman, as well as great scholar, in the person of Dr. Hook, Dean of Chichester, we hear from Paris of the death of another eminent man, and one whose loss, as his reputation was more widely spread, will be more generally felt. We are referring to Professor Wheatstone, whose name in association with electric telegraphy has for years past been a household world. When men of this calibre die, their places are not easily or quickly refilled. The report of Professor Wheatstone's illness came upon us very suddenly, and caused general sorrow and anxiety when it was known in how critical a condition he was. On Tuesday the worst fears of his numerous friends were realised, and he died, as we have said, in Paris. The most fitting tribute of respect the country can render to his memory is to let him lie among our statesmen and poets, and men of science in the grand old Abbey at Westminster. From Copenhagen is announced the approaching visit of the King and Queen of Denmark, who will be accompanied by their daughter, the Princess Thyra. The visit will last, it is said, some four weeks, and will, doubtless, help to dissipate the comparative loneliness of the Princess of Wales during the absence of her husband in India. But perhaps the most noteworthy event we have to record from foreign parts is the visit of the Emperor of Germany to the King of Italy. This had long been talked of, but the illness of his Imperial Majesty proved more than once an obstacle in the way of its accomplishment. At last, however, the fates have been propitious, and Milan is, or rather till to day was, en fête. The reception of the Imperial guest was a grand success, and it appears to have produced a great impression on the visitor. We can hardly realise the emotions that must have passed through Victor Emmanuel's mind when he contrasted, as no doubt he must have done, the difference between Italy as it was in 1858 and as it is now—then a number of petty states — a mere "geographical expression" — Now a well-knit political body, increasing in strength and influence every year. To the late minister, Count Cavour, to his own firmness and loyalty, to the late Emperor of the French, and lastly to the King of Prussia, now his guest as Emperor of a consolidated Germany, is Italy indebted for its present condition of prosperity. All this no doubt occurred to the Milanese likewise, and those who flocked into their city from other parts of Italy, thus we readily understand how the reception accorded the German Emperor must have been more than usually demonstrative. Of the occurrences which signalised this auspicious event we need not speak, but incidentally we may remark that the Archbishop of Milan contrived to be absent from the grand banquet, owing to ill-health. The Carlist war is not yet ended; the insurrection against Turkish rule still slumbers on a feeble existence, and Prince Milan of Servia has been married. This is about enough in the way of budget as regards foreign matters, while at home there can be but little that is very exhilarating so long as this "demnition" moist weather prevails. While this lasts we are enjoying a perpetual wet blanket, not only round our necks but enveloping us entirely.

THE DRAMA.

"Proof Positive" at the Opera Comique—"All For Her" at the Mirror.

"I KNOW the face, but I can't put a name to it," is the keynote to Mr. Burnand's play, at THE OPERA COMIQUE, of which theatre he has recently undertaken the charge. Hardly a sufficient foundation for a three act comedy, even though the defect of memory is carried to such an extent as to allow a man to mistake a strange lady for his wife, yet, out of this slender thread of an idea Mr. Burnand has, in some way or other, managed to construct a play. It is needless to say that a story of this kind, the whole point of which rests really on the self-conceit of a forgetful man, can excite no humour, interest, or sympathy. This fault is apparent in every work of Mr. Burnand's; he hits off the foibles of mankind with admirable cynicism; he has a very keen eye for the failings and frailties of his fellows, but there is a total want of sympathy between him and his public. One laughs always at, never with, Mr. Burnand's characters; they excite one's derision, never one's pity. It is impossible to get up any interest in the doings of a man who is so utterly idiotic as to mistake a strange lady for the wife from whom he has been divorced, and to imagine that, having been divorced in France, he has, under English law, committed bigamy in marrying again. The idea is one for burlesque, not for comedy. It is not only in conception, but also in execution, that Mr. Burnand has failed. What dramatic author, worthy of the name, would so construct his three act comedy as to bring its interest to a climax at the end of the second act? And yet this is precisely what Mr. Burnand has done, for, at the end of the second act, it becomes evident to everybody not a born idiot that the Mrs. Wellesley, whom Mr. Beckford mistakes for his first wife, cannot be anything of the kind, and the third act is occupied with the retangling of an unravelled skein. Of such workmanship as this it is impossible to speak in terms too strong. Mr. Burnand is, no doubt, very clever; at all events, one man thinks so, but he is not a dramatist. The piece serves to bring forward some old favourites, first and foremost of whom we welcome Miss Oliver, who plays Mrs. Wellesley with all her old brightness of style; and it also introduces to us two new friends, in the persons of Mr. George Clark, an American actor, whose distinguishing characteristic is self-confidence, and Miss Ada Lester, whose quiet and intelligent acting makes her an acquisition to a stage sadly deficient in actresses. To echo a suggestion from one of our contemporaries, could not the name of this theatre be changed? Even if Mr. Burnand were to call it "The Happy Thought," the name would be preferable to the ugly and inconvenient one which it at present bears.

It is no ordinary work that comes from the pen of Mr. Herman Merivale, who, in conjunction with Mr. J. Palgrave Simpson, has written the new play for THE MIRROR. In scholarship, in poetic sentiment, in dramatic feeling, his works stand out in welcome relief from the flashy comedies and the ridiculous sensation dramas, all real fire and real water, with which so many of our theatres are occupied. We have held, and shall always hold, that the mission of the stage is not to amuse only, but to ennoble the people, and we recognise with pleasure in Mr. Merivale a gentleman who both preaches and practises that doctrine. In seeing a play of Mr. Merivale's it is not only an intellectual treat that is afforded; he places us "in the company of wise and good men, to make us wiser and better than ourselves." The noblest thing on earth is self-sacrifice; "greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." This is the lesson which Mr. Merivale teaches us in All for Her; and although self-sacrifice is not fashionable now-a-days, the sight of it never fails to rouse admiration in the hearts of Englishmen. Hugh Trevor, a dissolute rake, the supposed bastard son of Lord Edardale, is in love with Lady Marsden, the affianced wife of his brother, the legitimate son. For her sake he destroys a certificate of marriage which would legitimise him and disinherit his brother; for her sake he submits to undeserved insults, to unmerited contempt; for her sake he makes the crowning sacrifice, and to save the man whom she loves takes his place on the scaffold. This is Mr. Merivale's simple and noble story; the thanks of all thinking play-goers are due to him for a play which is well constructed, well written, and possesses a powerful and healthy interest. Mr. Clayton can hardly be called a young actor; he has been long on the stage, and has, in his time, played many parts, but he has never had such an opportunity of displaying his ability as is afforded to him in the part of Hugh Trevor, and we are glad to be able to add that he makes the very utmost of his chances. The degraded spendthrift, ennobled by love, bearing in his face the signs of his true nobility, carrying on his body the rags of his disreputable life, receives ample justice at his hands. "Some day," Hugh Trevor says to Lady Marsden, "you shall know part of what the love of a fallen man can rise to; you will never know all." This is the kind of character which enlists in the highest degree the sympathies of an audience; a fallen man, raised to heights of heroism by the power of love. Mr. Clayton's performance of Hugh Trevor is by far the best thing which he has yet done. Miss Rose Coghlan merits high praise for her rendering of Lady Marsden. Nothing can give us greater pleasure than to record the success of such a play, thoroughly well written, well put on the stage, and admirably acted.

He was not finding fault with Chapter 50, his remarks applied to the whole of the Province, he might say to the whole of Scotland; he would be glad to do all in his power to remedy this state of things. Macdonald Lodge of Mark Master Masons, No. 104.—The autumnal meeting of this prosperous Lodge was held at Masons' Hall, Masons'-avenue, Coleman-street, E.C., on Saturday, the 16th inst. The W. Bro. Robert Berridge W.M. being unavoidably absent, the chair of A. was occupied by the I.P.M., the W. Bro. William Worrell P.G. Organist, and amongst others present were Bros. T. W. White S.W., North Ritherdon M.O., E. Moody S.O.; the V.W. Bros. Thomas Meggy P.G.M.O. P.M. and Treasurer, and James Stevens P.G.J.O., P.M.; the W. Bro. Charles Hammerton P.G.D.C. P.M. and Secretary; Bros. W. P. Collins S.D., G. Yexley G.S.D.C., John Close, W. Johnston, J. R. Williams, J. M. Wohlgemuth, J. H. Pitt, H. F. Partridge, G. W. Verry, Truman, Grant, &c., and visitor, the W. Bro. Sigismund Rosenthal P.G.D.C. There were several candidates for advancement, but in each case absence from town prevented attendance, and the opportunity was thereby afforded for perfecting certain arrangements affecting the working of the Lodge, which resulted satisfactorily for the good of the Order in general and of the Lodge in particular. The brethren subsequently adjourned to a banquet, under the presidency of Bro. Worrell, who afterwards proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts with considerable ability. The evening's pleasure was enhanced by the vocal efforts of Bros. Stevens, Meggy, Close, and Truman, and by a spirited recitation, by Bro. Moody, of "The Charge of the Six Hundred," in response to which the brethren "whipped round" for a donation to the fund for the forthcoming banquet of the gallant survivors of the glorious "Balaklava Charge." For a few brief moments the meeting resolved itself into a gathering of "Craft Masons," to do honour to the M.W.G.M., and to wish the royal traveller health, happiness, and "a safe return to his native land." A most enjoyable evening, characterised by that earnest good fellowship and social harmony which has always been conspicuous in the Macdonald Lodge, was brought to a close shortly before eight o'clock, when the brethren separated, "sorry to part," but hoping to "meet again" in February next.

Sincerity Lodge, No. 174.—This Lodge held its first meeting of the season on Wednesday, the 20th of October, at the Guildhall Tavern, Gresham-street. Present—Bros. E. J. Moore W.M., W. T. Wells S.W., G. J. Hilliard J.W., J. Newton P.M. Secretary, S. H. Rawley P.M. Treasurer, Appleby S.D., Seddon J.D., Webb D.C., Verry Tyler. P.M.'s Bros. Barlow, Lacey, Tuck I.P.M., Balmer, &c., and a large attendance of members and visitors, amongst whom we may mention Bros. Harward, Morrison and Adrian from the United States of America, Bro. Self S.G.W. of Essex, Bros. Binckes and Terry, the Secretaries of our Boys' School and Benevolent Institution, Bros. Berrie, W. W. Morgan, &c. The Lodge was opened and minutes of last Lodge and of the Lodge of Emergency held on 18th August were read and confirmed. The business on the summons was of an exceptionally heavy character. Messrs. Arthur Harper Bond, William Green Norman, George Gibson Harris and William Taynton were duly proposed, seconded and balloted for. The result being unanimous in their favour. Bro. G. Smith was raised to the degree of M.M., Bro. J. Vigor, formerly of the British Oak Lodge, was elected a joining member. The Lodge was resumed to the first degree, and the four candidates named above were severally initiated into the Order. The W.M. conducting the ceremonies in a very satisfactory manner. Several interesting letters, referring to Lodge business, were then read, and other matters taken into consideration. The most interesting event of the evening was then brought forward, this was the presentation to Brother J. Newton, P.M. and Secretary, of a beautifully illustrated address on vellum, elegantly framed, together with a handsome gold watch and chain. Brother E. J. Moore W.M., in a few pertinent remarks, expressed the gratification it afforded him to be the medium through which the members of the Lodge desired to express their high appreciation of the valuable services P.M. J. Newton had rendered to the Lodge of Sincerity during the many years he had held the arduous post of Secretary to their Lodge. It was no light task to carry out the work that the office entailed, and he, as well as the brethren around him, were well aware that Bro. Newton must have heavily encroached upon the hours that should have been devoted to domestic comfort and enjoyment. Under these circumstances he had great pleasure in announcing that the brethren had determined to supplement their gift to Bro. Newton by offering for the acceptance of Mrs. Newton a gold locket and chain. Brother Newton returned thanks; he had always had great pleasure in fulfilling his duties in connection with the Lodge of Sincerity, and these handsome gifts would be a still greater incentive, if any were needed, to merit a continuance of the goodwill and esteem of the Lodge. The brethren next proceeded to banquet, where Bro. Moore presided in a most genial manner. The usual toasts were given and responded to. Bro. F. Binckes, in replying to that of the Grand Officers, said, that the brethren would insist on placing him in a position of embarrassment by coupling his name with this toast. He certainly was not a Past Grand Officer, as the post of Grand Steward, which he had had the honour to fill, did not carry that rank. He, however, was not entirely out of order, as it had been ruled that, in the absence of a Past or Present Grand Officer, a Past Grand Steward might reply to the toast. To the toasts of the Initiates, the new brethren each responded, Bro. Bond, in a few brief words giving evidence of being able to express in pithy sentences feelings natural on such an occasion. Bro. P.M. Tuck proposed the health of the W.M., he referred to the arduous duties the W.M had had to perform during the evening, and to the excellent manner in which he had performed those duties. Bro. Berrie here sang, in good style, "Happy we will on together." Bro. Moore replied: It was his duty to try and do his utmost to keep up the prosperity of the Lodge. He referred to the pleasure it had afforded him to present the testimonial to Bro. Newton, and called attention to the Installation Jewel he was wearing, which had been presented to him by the Lodge. The Toast of the Visitors was replied to by the American guests. Bro. Harward expressing a hope that many English Masons would visit the States during the period appointed for the approaching Exhibition, and assuring them they would receive a cordial and fraternal greeting. "The Past Masters," was coupled with the name of Bro. Newton, who again thanked the brethren for the gifts they had honoured him with. "The Charities" was ably responded to by Bro. Terry, and the Tyler's toast brought this most interesting gathering to a close, not until great anxiety was manifested by those assembled as to whether they would be able to catch the inevitable last train. Subjoined we give the text of the address:—

FRK. BROWN, Hon. Sec.

St. James's Union Lodge No. 180.—The first autumnal meeting of this influential Lodge was held on Tuesday, 19th inst. at Freemasons' Hall, Gt. Queen-street, W.C. Bro. W. C. Parsons W.M. in the chair, Bros. Stonor P.M. as S.W., F. Annett J.W., Robinson P.M. Treasurer, H. A. Stacy P.M. Secretary, Pillin S.D., S. Smith J.D., Harrison I.G., and Past Masters L. Herf, Smithett, Cameron, J. R. Stacey, and a numerous assemblage of the brethren. The Lodge having been opened, and the minutes confirmed, Bros. Baker, Atkin and Wright were raised to the 3rd degree, and Mr. Gree was initiated. Great credit is due to the W.M. and the office for their perfect working of the various ceremonies. A notice of motion was unanimously carried "That any brother offering himself as a Steward for either of the Masonic Charities, the Lodge should place a Life Governorship on his list until the Lodge became a Vice-President." A sum of £30 was voted to a distressed brother, and the brethren, in addition to that amount, liberally subscribed the sum of £38. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren sat down to a very excellent banquet, provided by Bro. Franzetelli, and superintended by Bro. Knill. The W.M. proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts. Bro. Smithett, in proposing the toast of the W.M., adverted to the excellent manner in which he had performed the various ceremonies during his year of office, his courteous demeanour in presiding over them, and the high estimation he is held in by every brother in the Lodge. The W.M., in reply, said he had to thank Bro. Smithett and the brethren for their kind expressions. He had been placed in the chair by the kindness of the brethren, and his aim was the welfare of the Lodge; he trusted, at the expiration of his year of office, that he would have the same good feeling manifested by the brethren. The toasts of the Visitors, Past Masters, Wardens and Officers followed, Bro. F. Annett very appropriately responding. The Tyler's toast was given, and a very enjoyable evening terminated. Bros. Cantle, Pillin, Stollard and Herf sang some very excellent songs. Several visitors were present. The Lodge of Instruction attached to this Lodge is held at the Union Tavern, Air-street, Regent-street, and meets every Monday evening at 8 o'clock, under the able Preceptorship of Bro. J. R. Stacy P.M.

Lodge of Tranquillity, No. 185.—This Lodge held its first meeting of the season on Monday, the 18th of October, at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon Street. Present—Bros. J. H. Ross W.M., Barnett S.W., D. Pocock J.W., P. Levy Secretary, J. Pearce Treasurer, Pare S.D., Bailey J.D., Croaker I.G., Rawles Tyler; P.M.'s Bros. Constable, Bloomfield, N. Moss, S. E. Moss, Harfield, Holbrook, Solomon, Sydney, M. Harris. Visitors—Bros. Lean P.M. 1067, Plummer 177, Field 1321, Browne 1426, Terry P.M. (Secretary of the Royal Benevolent Institution) 228, Reed 765, Atkins 55, Frost 1347, Herold 1056, Morgan 1385, Baker 192, &c. The business of the evening consisted in passing Bro. Rowley, and in balloting for Messrs. Digby Sadleir, Thomas William Casburn Bush, Lionel Cohen, and Philip Felix Renaud Saillard. The ballot was clear, and the gentlemen were duly initiated by the W.M., who performed the ceremonies in a most perfect and satisfactory manner. Some routine business was then transacted, and the Lodge was closed. A banquet followed, at which Bro. Ross presided, and conducted the proceedings of the evening most ably. On the removal of the cloth he said:—Brethren, previously to submitting the toasts of the evening, allow me to congratulate you upon the resumption of Masonic duty, and the health you appear to enjoy. I hope that no circumstance has transpired during our vacation to mar your happiness. The first toast I shall offer for your reception is one of loyalty, and it always takes precedence in our assemblies, whether of Masonic or public regulation. An allwise Providence has hitherto spared her Majesty from harm, and will, I hope, for many years, permit her to continue her peaceful and glorious reign. In proposing the health of the M.W.G.M. the Prince of Wales, Bro. Ross referred to His Royal Highness's visit to our eastern possessions, and trusted God would grant him health and strength on his journey, wisdom to consolidate an everlasting peace, and safely restore him to his family, and the open arms of his English brethren. Speaking to the toast of the Pro Grand Master the Earl of Carnarvon and the rest of the Grand Officers, the W.M. said it was a matter of consolation and profound pleasure to the Fraternity that the Order would not suffer in any way during the absence of the G.M., while we have so able and efficient a Pro Grand Master as the Earl of Carnarvon, whose diplomacy in matters politic as well as Masonic is well known, and with so courteous and willing a Deputy as Lord Skelmersdale we are bound to be successful in our Masonic progress. The toast of the Initiates was suitably replied to, after which Bro. Constable I.P.M. proposed the health of the W.M. of the Tranquillity Lodge. All were gratified with the manner in which Bro. Ross performed his duties, and all would feel assured that so long as he filled the chair prosperity would be with them. Bro. Ross suitably replied, and afterwards gave "The Visitors," which toast was responded to by Brother Lean. The Past Masters was then given and acknowledged, and was followed by "The Charities," which was ably responded to by Bro. J. Terry, Sec. of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution. He thanked the brethren for the interest they had always evinced in the Institution he had the honour to represent, and concluded with the hope that at the next Festival, in February, they would be as willing as heretofore to do all they could to promote the success of the Institution. The Treasurer, Officers, &c., were in due course complimented, and the Tyler's toast brought a pleasant evening to a termination.

Quick S.D. gave the charges and lectures in each degree. Bro. Frost P.S.W. was nominated as W.M. for the ensuing year. Between 50 and 60 brethren adjourned to the dining rooms, on the premises, where a supper was provided by the Stewards. Prince Frederick William Lodge of Instruction, No. 753.—The fifteen sections were worked in the above Lodge of Instruction, held at Lord's Cricket Ground Hotel, St. John's Wood, on Tuesday, the 19th inst., by Bro. F. G. Baker P.M. 753 and Preceptor, supported by Bros. Austen S.W., Long J.W., Healey, Secretary, L. R. Rogers J.D., Lucas I.G., Helsdon P.M. Among the brethren we noticed P.M.'s Cotton, King jun., Barber, Slyman, Parkins, Vine, Lawrence W.M. 901, and thirty-eight others. The Lodge was opened in the first degree, and the minutes read and confirmed. The Lodge was then opened in the second and third degrees. The Lodge was resumed to the first degree, when, after the usual introductory address, the first lecture was worked in sections by the following brethren: Bros. Amor, Dunn, King jun., Blyth, Turner, Gordon and Burgess. The Lodge was resumed to the second degree, when the second lecture was worked by the following brethren: Bros. Lawrence, Long, Bentley, Parker and Taylor. The Lodge was resumed to the third degree, when the third lecture was worked by the following brethren: Bros. Austen, Tolmie and Slyman. The Lodge was resumed to the first degree, when Bros. Hall, Ballard, Vine, Foxley, Burford, Leigh, Keil, Mason, Hurdell, Finch, Cohen, Dunn, Haslett and Robertson were elected joining members. Bro. King jun. was unanimously elected an honorary member. After a vote of thanks had been passed to the Worshipful Master, and to which he made a graceful reply, the Lodge was closed in due form. We may here mention that we have seldom seen such good working of the sections, for there was hardly any prompting, and each brother seemed to try and outdo the other.

Alexandra Lodge, No. 985.—This Lodge held its monthly meeting on Monday, the 18th of October, at the Masonic Hall, Holbeach. President—Bros. J. J. Bartram W.M., W. Redlington S.W., Thomas W. Edmund Rogers W.M., Theophilus Mitchell S.W., Francis Bartle J.W., Thomas B. Provis Secretary, Geo. Mitchell P.M. Treasurer, John H. Mayne S.D., Geo. F. Gregor J.D., Charles Tyrack D.C., James Kinsman Steward, George S. Bray I.G., Joseph Pryor as Tyler. The business consisted of the initiation of Mr. Joseph Letcher, St. Day, by the W.M., who conducted the ceremony in his usual able manner, and likewise gave the lecture on the tracing board. The charge was given by the J.W., and the working tools were explained by the S.W. The passing of Bro. Timmins, by the W.M., who explained the working tools with his usual ability, the charge being given by the Treasurer in a very lucid manner, for which he was thanked by the brethren.

Grey Friars' Lodge, No. 1101.—On Wednesday, the 13th inst., the anniversary festival of this Lodge took place at the Masonic Hall, Reading. Brother J. T. Freeman, the second initiate of the Lodge, was installed in the Chair of King Solomon, in the presence of a numerous and influential assemblage of brethren. The ceremony was performed by Bro. W. W. Morhay P.M. 414, hon. member 1101, Prov. G.S.W. Berks and Bucks, in his usual happy and impressive manner. The W.M. was saluted by the members and visitors in each degree, all expressing their hearty good wishes; after which the appointment and investment of officers took place as follow:—Bros. J. Greenfield I.P.M., E. Margrett S.W., A. Welch J.W., Rev. C. R. Honey Chaplain, J. T. Stranson Treasurer, W. P. Ivey P.M. Secretary, W. J. Flanagan S.D., T. J. E. Howlett J.D., W. W. Ridley D.C., J. Wheeler and Moffatt, of the Lodge of Union 414, W. Wells W.M. 777, A.T. Rolfe, Great City 1426, F. P. Harbor 743, &c., &c. The effect of the ceremony of installation was considerably increased by the beautiful singing of Bros. Hounslow, R. Bradley and C. Bradley, under the direction of Bro. Davis, Organist, all of 414. The labours of the evening being ended, the brethren retired to refreshment, to the Upper Ship Hotel, where a sumptuous banquet was provided by Bro. Bailey, to which about fifty sat down. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to; the glee and solo singing of the above named brethren, and the solo singing of Bro. James Robinson 1101, elicited rapturous applause. The Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. C. R. Honey, proposed, in eloquent language, "The Masonic Charities," to which Bro. F. Binckes, Secretary to the Boys' School, responded, congratulating the Lodge on the progress it has already made, and urging still further energy, till the W.M. of the Lodge has become a V.P. of each of the Masonic Charities. On the toast of "The Immediate and other Past Masters of the Lodge," the W.M. agreeably dilated upon the superior working of his predecessor, and presented and invested him with a splendid P.M.'s jewel, which was unanimously voted by the Lodge in recognition of the manner in which he discharged the duties of W.M. during the past year. The I.P.M. feelingly replied, assuring the brethren that his best exertions should be given to promote the welfare and prosperity of the Lodge. The jewel was very much admired. Upon the toast of "The Treasurer and Officers of the Grey Friars' Lodge 1101," the two Wardens replied, the Junior Warden, Bro. Welch, producing roars of laughter by his droll remarks. The Treasurer, in responding, stated that his office now was almost a sinecure, compared to what it was on his first taking it. The Secretary, in responding, read an analysis of the attendance during the past year, which caused much amusement, his motive in doing so was to induce a better attendance for the future. On the whole, a more agreeable meeting has not been remembered since the formation of the Lodge. Letters expressing regret at their inability to attend, with hearty good wishes, were received from the following distinguished brethren:—Sir Daniel Gooch Bart. M.P., R.W. Prov. G.M. Berks and Bucks, the Rev. J. Studholme Brownrigg V.W.D. Prov. G.M., the Rev. Sir J. W. Hayes Bart. V.W.P.D. Prov. G.M., R. T. Woodhouse M.D. V.W.P.D. Prov. G.M., the R.W. was initiated into the mysteries of Ancient Freemasonry, the charge being given by Past Master Bewes. This being all the business, the Lodge was closed in due and ancient form at 9.30 p.m. The brethren spent a comfortable hour together after with the W.M., at the Queen's Hotel.

Eclectic Lodge, No. 1201.—The usual meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday, the 18th inst., at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, Lincoln-Inn-Fields, Bro. Mander W.M., J. H. Watts S.W., Pankhurst J.W., Joshua Nunn P.G.S.B. P.M. Treasurer, Woods Secretary, E. J. Harty S.D., Taylor J.D., Saull as I.G., and Watts I.P.M. The Lodge was opened, and on the confirmation of the minutes, Bros. Walters, Blackwood and Walker were raised to the 3rd degree, Bros. Dr. Lloyd and Milmore were passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and Mr. R. Roby, having been balloted for and accepted, was duly initiated. The resignation of Bro. Joshua Nunn P.G.S.B. and Treasurer was accepted with regret, and the W.M., Bro. Mander, was unanimously elected Treasurer pro tem, until the regular election in January next. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren separated. There was no banquet. Among the visitors were Bros. Smallpiece, Gardner, C. A. Barrell P.M., Coulton P.M., and several others.

Gladsmuir Chapter, No. 1385.—The regular meeting of this Chapter was held at the Red Lion Hotel, Barnet, Herts, on Thursday, 14th instant; among those present were E. Comps. T. S. Carter M.E.Z., J. Neall P.Z. 429, Berry 624, Wilson 403. The business of the evening was to exalt Bro. James Cutbush S.W. 1385. The ceremony was performed by the M.E.Z., E. Comp. Terry very ably giving the Lectures. The following were then elected officers of the Chapter for the ensuing year:—E. Comps. Lowthin Z., W. Cutbush H., Hayward Edwards J., J. R. Cocks S.E. (re-elected), Verry S.N., Livingston P.S., W. Cutbush Treasurer (re-elected), and Goddard Janitor (re-elected). The companions afterwards adjourned to a capital supper, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Metropolitan Lodge, No. 1507.—The first anniversary of this Lodge was held on Thursday, under the presidency of Bro. Jas. Willing, the first W.M., and one of the founders, assisted by the officers of the Lodge, a large assemblage of the brethren, and distinguished visitors, among whom were several members of Grand Lodge. The Lodge was opened by Bro. J. Willing, with Bro. Michael S.W., Williams J.W., G. Time P.M. Secretary, &c. The minutes of the former Lodge and emergency meetings were read and confirmed. The Treasurer's account showed a balance of £23 in favour of the Lodge after paying for the furniture, Grand Lodge dues, and incidental expenses, a feature worthy to be recorded in a Lodge so young in existence. Bro. Sayers and Erwood were passed to the second degree, and Messrs. Gilbert and Swaagton were initiated. A board of Installed Masters was then formed, and Bro. Jas. Willing I.P.M. installed his successor, Bro. Michael S.W. and W.M. elect, into the chair. The newly installed W.M. having been saluted according to ancient form, invested his officers:—Bro. Jas. Willing jun. I.P.M., Williams S.W., Kingham J.W., Rose Treasurer, Time P.M. Secretary, John Douglas S.D., Scales J.D., Side I.G., Stiles D.C. and Assistant Secretary, Colls W.S. and Daly Tyler. The appointment of these brethren gave great satisfaction. The W.M. then rose and said, he had a pleasing task to perform; a duty incumbent on him; that was to testify to the brethren the merits of one who was one of the founders of the Lodge. A committee had been formed to carry out the presentation of an excellent portrait of Bro. Jas. Willing jun., who had, as the first Master of the Metropolitan Lodge, so successfully conducted the affairs of the Lodge during his year of office. Bro. Michael said he hoped that, in years to come, Bro. Willing would live in their hearts, and that they might see him, in health and prosperity, for many years to come. Bro. Jas. Willing, amid the applause of the brethren, said he never expected so great a compliment to be paid him, but he accepted it as a token of the approbation of the brethren for his services, which always were at the disposal, not only of this Lodge, but of the Craft in general. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren, 69 in number, sat down to a very sumptuous banquet, provided by Bro. Cox. The W.M. proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts. Bros. J. Smith P.G.P., T. Cubitt P.G.P., and T. A. Adams P.G.P. responded for the toast of the Grand Officers. Bro. J. Willing I.P.M. then proposed the health of the W.M., one whom the Lodge may be proud of; he would be a credit to it, not only for his working, but also for his Masonic qualifications. The W.M., in reply, said he should indeed be satisfied if he could be as successful as his predecessor, and, with the co-operation of the brethren, he would do all he could for the prosperity of the Lodge. (Cheers.) A pleasing task now devolved upon him, that was, to supplement the portrait that had been presented to the Lodge, by requesting Brother Willing's acceptance of a P.M.'s jewel; he hoped he might live long to wear it, and that it would be handed down as a heir-loom to his family. Bro. Willing returned thanks; their kindness would never be effaced from his memory. The toasts of the newly initiated brethren and the visitors followed, the latter responded to by Bro. G. Everett W.M. 177. Several brethren from America were pleased to express their opinion of the admirable manner in which the duties had been carried out, and thanks for the hospitality they had received. Several other toasts were given and responded to, and the brethren separated after spending a most pleasant evening.

Metropolitan Lodge of Instruction, No. 1507.—The usual weekly meeting was held on the 15th instant, at the Metropolitan Club, 209 Pentonville-road. Bros. Side as W.M., Berris S.W., J Carter J.W., Kingham S.D., Williams J.D., Scales I.G., Jas. Willing jun. Treasurer, and Brothers Smith, Ormiston, Walter, Fowler, Michael, Child, Read, Shaw, Little, H Stiles, and T. A. Adams P.G.P. Preceptor. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes were confirmed. The ceremony of the second degree was rehearsed, Bro. Fowler acting as candidate. The ceremony of the third degree was then given, Bro. Ormiston acting as candidate. The working of the W.M. and officers was commendable. Bro. James Willing then rehearsed the ceremony of Installation, the candidate being Bro. Michael S.W. and W.M. elect of the parent Lodge. Bro. Berris was elected W.M. for the ensuing week, and the meeting was adjourned.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 113 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6/- per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

A WEEKLY RECORD OF MASONIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THE BOYS' SCHOOL.

WE announced last week apropos of a letter we published from Bro. Binckes, the Secretary to the Boys' School, that we had received copy of a pamphlet by Bros. Tew, D.P.G.M. of West Yorkshire, and the Rev. O. G. D. Perrott, the late Headmaster, impugning, in the first place, the conduct of the Secretary in his relations with the latter of the two pamphleteers, and in the next, the financial management of the governing body of the School. We stated also our intention of offering some remarks on this pamphlet. We readily confess we would rather abstain from commenting upon a question of this kind, but the subject is of far too grave a character to be passed over in silence. On the one hand, we have a clergyman of the Church of England, with a number of very honourable testimonials to his tutorial powers, and a gentleman, holding the second place in the ranks of Masonry, in one of our most considerable and energetic provinces; on the other hand, the several Committees and a Secretary of long standing, tried services, and immense energy, who, from the very fact of their having been elected to the offices they severally fill, must be presumed to enjoy generally the confidence of the Vice-Patrons, Vice-Presidents, and other subscribers to this Charity. Moreover, the financial part of the question has been openly discussed at the recent meeting of Provincial Grand Lodge of West Yorkshire, and a resolution was passed which, without imputing anything irregular to the House Committee or Managers of the Institution, lays it down that a thorough investigation of the management and expenditure of the School is necessary, "to the end that a more economic system of collecting and dispensing the funds of this institution may be arrived at, so that candidates who from time to time are excluded from its benefits by reason of the present system may, by a more judicious and less expensive management, be enabled to participate in the benefits of the Charity." The question, therefore, is already before the Masonic world, and we should be unmindful of our duty, as an organ of Masonic opinion, if we ignored these public differences, and gave no indication of our views as to the course to be pursued. But, in dealing with the matter, we shall observe the strictest impartiality between the disputants. It is needless, perhaps, to say that we shall do what it is obviously our duty to do, especially as both the Secretary and Bro. Tew have at different times accused us of bias; and when both sides question our neutrality, we may fairly argue we have been strictly neutral. In the interests of fair play, we abstain from saying anything as to the merits of the rival cases; as having deeply at heart the welfare of our Masonic Charities, we take leave to indicate the chief points at issue.

We dismiss briefly the case as between the Secretary and the late Headmaster. We cannot say that Part I. of the new pamphlet, which is devoted to the unfortunate differences between these gentlemen, throws any additional light thereon. It simply bears out what we knew already, that a very unfortunate state of things prevailed between these officers, but which of the two has right on his side we are, happily, not called upon, nor are we competent to decide. When the evidence adduced by either has been thoroughly sifted, then, perhaps, it might be our duty to express an opinion, but certainly not till then. We make this one remark only. In Part III., which is a kind of Appendix to Part I., are two letters, written by the Secretary to the late Headmaster, marked Nos. 5 and 6 respectively. We say freely, and without the slightest hesitation or ambiguity, no amount of provocation would justify the use by any one of such language as the Secretary has employed in these letters. It may strike some folk as a paradox, but the position is nevertheless incontrovertible. People who quarrel should not lose their tempers. Evidently Bro. Binckes lost his temper, or he would never have condescended to pen such abusive notes. We imagine he has long since deplored the impetuous anger to which alone we attribute his having so unfortunately and so conspicuously forgotten himself. So much for Parts I. and III.

In Part II. is discussed the financial management of the School, and it is to this portion of the pamphlet we intend for the most part to confine our remarks. Bros. Tew and Perrott lay it down, in the first instance, that the expenditure incurred in the purchase of land and the erection of the new School, amounting to over £56,000, is greatly in excess of what it should have been. The rent charge calculated on this capital outlay at 3½ per cent. represents a sum of £1,965 15s 3½d, which for an average number of 156 boys amounts to 12 guineas per annum. This is pronounced to be an abnormally high rate in respect of rent. It is then urged that the annual grant to the Secretary of £200, his provincial travelling expenses—£81 9s 6d, and the collector's commission—£33 18s 5d, amounting together to £315 7s 11d should, as being expenditure that occurs every year, be entered, not as it is under special expenditure, but under ordinary expenditure under the head of General Office Expenses, whereby the latter item, which is set down at £959 10s 10d, would in reality be £1,274 18s 9d. It is, in the next place, suggested that the sum of £1,970 16s 6d expended for further works, architect's commission, &c., should be entered separately, under "A Building Expenditure on Capital Account," and not under the expenditure for the year, whether special or ordinary; and also that the £500 transferred to the Sustentation Fund should likewise be omitted in calculating the general outlay for the School. The result of all these several changes in the method of rendering the accounts is, that the average charge for a boy, which is set down at £43 16s 11½d, is affirmed to be £65 8s 7½d. Other portions of the report are freely criticised; as, for instance, the outlay for pianos, the sums entered as given for outfit to boys who have left the Institution, &c. Now we do not say these criticisms are just. We say this, however. The accounts of the School having been once published are liable to public criticism. In fact, the report of the governing body, which contains the various statements of account, is the evidence, the only evidence they have to offer that the duties entrusted to them have been fully and faithfully discharged. They say, in effect, to the Masonic world, This is the account we render of our stewardship? judge, ye, if we have done our duty. They thus virtually invite criticism, but whether they do so or not, it is clearly competent for Bros. Tew and Perrott to analyse the accounts and express, publicly if they are so minded, any objections they may have to the various items and the method of their arrangements under the different heads of service. It is clearly competent for the province of West Yorkshire to suggest that the management of the School may be more economically conducted, in which case it is evident, that with a reduced rate of expenditure, a larger number of pupils could be educated. We shall not dwell further on these criticisms, some of which, though relating to small matters, are of a very serious character. A somewhat strong display of feeling is noticeable throughout the pamphlet. We cannot say we are altogether surprised at this, so far as the Rev. Mr. Perrott's personal grievances are concerned. It is in human nature that a man should defend his own honour warmly, though he must be careful of course to govern himself decorously; but in discussing the financial part of the question there should have been displayed no animus whatever. A charge of financial mismanagement is a grave one to make, and it should be made with judicial gravity. But the non-observance, in the present or any other case, of this most wholesome rule is a matter of secondary consideration. The fact remains that the audited accounts of the Boys' School for the year 1874 have been publicly declared to be erroneous, and reasons, more or less momentous, are brought forward in support of this statement. The first result of this public declaration is that West Yorkshire, one of our largest and most important provinces, with some sixty Lodges, and not far short of three thousand members pronounces itself in favour of inquiry into the conduct of this Charity. In doing so, this Provincial Grand Lodge has frankly disclaimed all idea of "imputing any irregularity to the House Committee or Managers of the Institution." Bro. Binckes, in his letter of last week, after replying to one particular criticism of Bros. Tew and Perrott, went on to say, "equally easy of explanation is every other accusation so unjustly charged, and equally susceptible of solution is every apparent difficulty to which allusion is made." This being so, it appears to us to be the duty of the governing body to insist on an immediate investigation. It will never do for them to wrap themselves up in their own virtue and treat this attack upon their management with scorn. The governing body of a charity must, like Cæsar's wife, be above suspicion. It is not enough for Bro. Binckes to say in reply to this pamphlet—the statements it contains are inaccurate; he, or rather they for whom he acts, must prove them to be inaccurate. Assertion is not argument. As the case stands at present, Bros. Tew and Perrott have made certain charges and adduced certain reasons, which may or may not be sound, in support of these charges. Bro. Binckes indignantly denies them; but denial is not disproof. He must go a step further, and adduce rebutting evidence, as he says he can. And to crown the whole case, there must be some tribunal which shall decide whether the charges have or have not been substantiated. We have said that a charge of mismanagement is a very grave one to make. We cannot believe the writers of this pamphlet, after the manner of two thoughtless children, have preferred this charge without duly weighing beforehand the very serious responsibility they incur. If their pamphlet is proved to contain a series of misstatements, the whole world of Masonry will laugh them to scorn. On the other hand, if they prove their case, the most sweeping changes in the government of the School must follow. We confess we see no other way out of the difficulty than by a thorough and exhaustive investigation of all the circumstances.

And here we should have quitted this painful subject, but for certain remarks of our contemporary, last week. The policy it advocates is directly opposed to that we have recommended. There is nothing new, of course, in two journals, having the same interest at heart, recommending two different lines of policy. Had this been all, we should have been content to differ and said nothing, but sundry of the grounds on which it based its arguments are so monstrous that we can only come to one of two conclusions. Either our contemporary is joking, or it has taken leave of its senses. It begins an article on West Yorkshire by saying, "Reflection has convinced us, even more strongly than last week, how very unwise and how very unsound is the proposed motion relative to the Boys' School"—the resolution of Prov. Grand Lodge already referred to—"to which we felt it to be our duty to allude." But not only is the proposal "Unwise" as regards the true interests of the School, but Masonically we also deem it to be "thoroughly unsound in principle." And why "unsound in principle?" Because "Bro. Cawthorn," the mover of the resolution—"is, we understand, not even a subscriber to the Boys' School at all. How can he propose such a resolution? And how can the Prov. Grand Lodge of West Yorkshire pass such a resolution; still less hand it on to the Grand Lodge? What possible right has the Prov. Grand Lodge of West Yorkshire to express such an opinion as a corporate body?" As to the first two of these questions, it occurs to us our contemporary is a little behindhand in asking how certain things can be done when they have been done. The third question is more pertinent, though somewhat clumsily worded. The Prov. Grand Lodge of West Yorkshire expressed its opinion as a corporate body, because it is a corporate body, and the right it had to express this particular opinion we imagine to be thus derived. The Lodge, in its corporate capacity, has contributed to the funds of the School. Certain of the West Yorkshire brethren, over whose interests the Prov. Grand Lodge has been deputed to watch, have also contributed to its funds. Sundry of the boys in the School have been elected mainly, if not entirely, by the votes of the West Yorkshire subscribers. Ergo, the Prov. Grand Lodge has a direct interest in the proper management of the School in which the West Yorkshire boys are pupils. Our contemporary admits that the Prov. Grand Lodge in question has contributed to this Institution, "in days of old, and it has received a return in votes," but it adds, "and there its interest practically ends." The words we have italicised mean this,—if anything. West Yorkshire having purchased certain votes, succeeds or fails in electing its candidates into the School, and there the matter ends. Sundry West Yorkshire nominees have been elected, but whether the School into which they have been admitted is, or is not well conducted, it is no business of West Yorkshire to inquire. We would not, of course, presume to explain our contemporary's ideas respecting "Masonic Law and Equity." We humbly submit, however, that "It is impossible that on any known principle of Masonic Law or Equity," the Prov. Grand Lodge of West Yorkshire could, in the performance of what it conceived to be its duty, have failed to "pass such a resolution without thoroughly stultifying itself." Of course, as we are not in the secrets of Sir Henry Edwardes, we cannot say how the Prov. Grand Lodge he presides over "will hand over" this resolution "to Grand Lodge." We venture to say, however, that just as it has been passed, so it will be handed on, the exact manner in which this is done being immaterial. "We hope," however, "that for the honour and dignity of West Yorkshire," the resolution will be handed on "with a good grace." It is then asked, "But how can Grand Lodge even interfere? How could it receive such a resolution? How could it act upon it?" Here again we are at a loss to say how the thing will be done, if it is done. We feel certain, however, that having received this resolution, Grand Lodge will interfere and act upon it if, in the exercise of its wisdom, it thinks it wise and expedient in the interests of this Masonic Institution to do so. Its annual grant of £150, gives it the right to inquire into the management of the School, even though that £150 is only a very small part of the £10,000 received "annually from the Craft as private donations and subscriptions." Our contemporary has the hardihood to maintain that Grand Lodge may inquire into the appropriation of its grant, and "if not satisfied with the explanation tendered," it may withdraw it, "but it can do no more, and can go no further." Is our contemporary so far behind the age as never to have heard of sundry institutions which receive grants in aid from Parliament, and that, on the strength of such grants, Parliament claims and exercises the right to rigidly examine into the whole expenditure of such institutions? Will he affirm, in sober seriousness, that a shareholder of a public company has no right to criticise its financial arrangements above and beyond the amount of the share or shares he holds in it? Will he venture to lay it down, that a governor of Christ's Hospital, or any other charity outside the world of Masonry, can only inquire into the appropriation of his particular contribution? But even admitting, for a moment, the justice of this argument, will our contemporary have the kindness to point out how the appropriation of Grand Lodge Grant, or any other contribution, is to be traced in the School expenditure. But assuming this were possible, that the £150 was traced, that Grand Lodge was dissatisfied, and did withdraw its grant; would such withdrawal have no moral effect upon the brethren at large? It is a very significant fact, that while West Yorkshire, which is in favour of this inquiry, voted, a few days since, £100 to the R.M.B.I., and one hundred guineas to the R.M.I. for Girls, it left the Boys' School out in the cold. Yet West Yorkshire is not unmindful of its duty. It figured in the subscription list at this year's Festival for over £800. What if Grand Lodge, influenced by the resolution of West Yorkshire, and following its example, should withhold its countenance and support. Would this be a light matter—one to which the most influential committee of the Boys' School could possibly shut its eyes? But though the Constitutions—the written law of Masonry—say nothing as to the conduct of our three Masonic Institutions, it is laid down, at p. 25, that "all differences or complaints that cannot be accommodated privately, or in a regular Lodge, shall be reduced into writing, and delivered to the Grand Secretary, who shall lay the same before the Grand Master, or the Board of General Purposes, or other Board or Committee appointed by the Grand Lodge. When all parties shall have been summoned to attend thereon, and the case investigated, such order and adjudication shall be made as is authorised by the laws and regulations of Masonry." The only suggestion our contemporary has to offer is, that this complaint should be referred to the General Committee, or the House Committee. This means simply that West Yorkshire, being dissatisfied with the government of the Institution, must appeal for redress to the very body whose conduct is called in question. It may be wise to take no further steps in the matter, or to press for further inquiry. It is manifestly unfair that the question should be referred for settlement to one of the disputants. We hope our contemporary will be a little more common-sensible the next time it deals with this or any other unpleasant subject affecting the interests of the Craft.

THE CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE.

THOSE of us who have reached the meridian of life are often surprised to find, on looking back, that events which seem to be of yesterday, are, to the younger portion of the community, already covered with a thin film of the rust of antiquity. Every middle aged man, for example, regards the incidents of the Crimean War as events of the most recent occurrence; he can carry his memory back to the glorious and the inglorious events of the campaign, and he recalls those vivid letters in the Times which won for Mr. Russell the title of Prince of newspaper correspondents. But to our more fortunate, because more youthful friends, these things are already canonised in the set forms of historical narrative. They know of the Alma, of Inkermau, and Sabastopol, through the medium of Mr. Kinglake's graphic pages. They read of the Charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava with some such feelings as the school boy reads of Leonidas and the pass of Thermopylæ, and while we think of the blunder, they think only of the glory of that dashing charge. To such persons the banquet of Monday last recalls only the heroic side of that gallant deed of arms, but to us it brings a painful reminder of the incompetence and blundering of the leaders of the allied forces. We think of the hardships and horrors of the Crimean winter. We remember that circumlocution was then in full force at the War Office, and that our soldiers died, in the trenches, of hunger and disease, within five miles of the most bountiful stores that ever were provided for an invading army. Yet, while some of us are doubtful of the propriety of bringing back to our recollection thus vividly, the gigantic blunder of the campaign, no man can deny that the heroes who assembled around the festive board at the Alexandra Palace, on Monday last, richly deserved all the honours which were accorded them. They had nothing to do with the blundering of the Commander in Chief, or his subordinates. They were called upon, rightly or wrongly, to ride into the "valley of death," and they obeyed as British soldiers always obey an order which brings with it the stimulus of danger. Some of us can remember that magnificent Light Brigade, in all the splendour of its warlike array, as it departed from these shores. We call to mind the events of the Battle of Balaclava, when the heavy brigade, composed of the elite of the British Dragoons, dashed triumphantly through the Russian Cavalry; but our thoughts instinctively dwell upon the gallant six hundred who were called upon to take the Russian cannon from the hands of a vast army. When Nolan brought the order to charge and take the guns, even such a fire-eater as Lord Lucan for the moment hesitated. There was a mile and a half of ground to ride over. Batteries were planted on each flank and in front, and the guns were guarded by 20,000 infantry. It was madness to attempt such a thing; but, as poor Nolan said, the guns were there, the order was precise, and it was the duty of the brigade to take them. The hesitation of the leader was only momentary. The Light Brigade was ordered forward, and the gallant fellows, with a ringing British cheer, dashed into the valley, while their French and English comrades looked on and wondered. If our memory is accurate, 650 men rode in that death charge, and 110 returned unscathed. It was a charge of madmen; it was mere butchery, but the gallant episode taught us that a long peace had not enervated the British soldier. We learned with just pride that our countrymen were of the same stuff as the heroes who followed Wellington through the Peninsula, and defeated the flower of the French army at Waterloo. It has, indeed, taught us that our soldiers, if they are properly officered, are second to none of the vaunted troops of continental armies, and if we fear to give due weight to our advice in the councils of Europe it is because our army is, after all, but a handful, and our faith in the competence, but not the courage of its officers, is still as hazy as ever. The Alexandra banquet will add nothing to the renown of the brave men who, without thought of fame or reward, nobly did their duty in the face of an overwhelming force. The Charge of the Light Brigade is written in indelible characters on the page of history, and the soldiers who rode to almost certain death will be classed by posterity with that handful of Spartan heroes who calmly dressed their hair and uttered their concise jests in the face of two millions of invaders. The heroes of Thermopylæ died to save Greece. They voluntarily sacrificed themselves for strategic reasons, and while they filled the pass with a rampart of the dead, the Athenians in the rear were preparing for the final struggle which drove the invader into the sea. Nothing decisive followed from the sacrifice of the Light Brigade, but we revere its memory because it has taught the world that the old spirit of heroism is still in our midst. That spirit has not perished with Wellington's veterans, or Napoleon's Old Guard, and if the day should again come when England is compelled to call upon her sons for a great sacrifice, we shall be the stronger for the memory of Balaclava, and thousands will be ready to lay down their lives on the altar of their country.

THE RECENT ELECTIONS.

IT has been remarked that there is nothing so untrustworthy as facts and figures. We are not going to build up any very elaborate theory as to the results of the latest ballots for our Boys' and Girls' Schools, but one or two lessons, not wholly valueless, may be gleaned even from a superficial examination of the figures. And first, as to the Girls' School.

There were six vacancies and thirty candidates. Of the latter, four had made three previous applications, one two, nine one; while, in the case of the remaining sixteen, this was their first application. In three instances failure at this ballot would render the applicants further ineligible. Of the six elected, four applied for the first time, one had appeared twice, and the remaining one three times. Of the three who would be further ineligible if not elected, two succeeded, the other being left hopelessly in the rear. Twenty-five of the candidates hailed from the Provinces, five from London. All the six chosen were Provincial namely: two Yorkshire W.R., one Somersetshire, one Gloucestershire, one Norfolk, one Suffolk. Of those who had stood one or more times previously, there were four who might be deemed particularly formidable, having already to their credit 614, 519, 479, and 458 votes respectively. Only the last of these got a place. Of those whom we will describe as formidable in the second degree, there were five with 362, 272, 185, 153, 132 votes respectively. The second of these five obtained the fifth vacancy, while the first increased her score by 443 votes, and the last by 543 votes. There were yet five others, to whom, only in a very close contest indeed, would the votes already credited be of any service. These had 80, 54, 20, 14, and 13 votes severally to their credit. The first of these is no longer eligible, the second is the only one who has materially improved his position, having obtained 147 additional votes. Of applicants on more than one occasion, one scored over a thousand additional and succeeded, one over nine hundred and succeeded; and one over five hundred, one over four hundred, two over two hundred, four over one, and four under one hundred. Of the sixteen applicants for the first time, four scored over eleven hundred and succeeded; while of the rest, one obtained over seven hundred, one just six hundred, four over four hundred, four over three hundred; the two others being "out of the hunt" altogether.

For the Boys' School there were fifty-eight candidates, one of whom was withdrawn and will therefore be omitted from the examination, and ten vacancies. Thirty-six of these had votes to their credit, one having already been a candidate six times, one five times, two four times, eight three times, nine twice, and fifteen once; the remaining twenty-one were applicants for the first time. Of those elected, three were new and seven old candidates. Thirty-nine of the fifty-seven were provincials, of whom eight (one each from St. Helena, Cumberland, Foreign Stations, Staffordshire, Cheshire, Dorsetshire, W. Yorkshire, and Oxfordshire) were elected, while eighteen, of whom three succeeded, were Londoners. There were six whom failure at this election would render further ineligible. Of these, two succeeded and four failed. Of previous candidates, nine already had over a thousand votes to their credit—five of these succeeded; three had over eight hundred, and one succeeded; three over six hundred, ten had from one to four hundred, and of these one gained a place, and eleven under one hundred. None of these last made much way at this election. Of the new candidates, four made over 1,300, and three were elected, and three scored 461, 424, and 328 votes respectively; twelve more scored respectively 143, 138, 116, 106, 99, 15, 10, 9, 9, 7, 6 and 2; the remaining two obtained no votes at all. Of the nine old candidates, who were the most to be dreaded, having already to their credit over one thousand votes, five were provincial and four London, but while four of the former succeeded and one failed, three of the latter failed and only one succeeded. We may note here by the way that the most formidable of the old candidates for the Girls' School was a Londoner, with 614 votes already to the good, yet she came out seventh on the poll, being over three hundred below the sixth or last of the successful ones. We shall not pursue the investigation further. All we wish to demonstrate is that energy in this, as in other things, is necessary to success. It is no good having a wide circle of friends and acquaintances if you do not stir them into active, zealous co-operation with you in promoting the case you have in hand. What can be done if those in charge of a particular child's election is shown by the fact that the boy who headed the poll was a Londoner, an applicant for the first time—and for the last time also—yet he scored 2,157 votes right off, while the most formidable of his rivals, who already had, six months ago, 1,392 votes to the good, came in eighth only, and was not, therefore, so very far removed from failure. Again Nos. 3 and 4 on the list of the successful, and who were likewise candidates for the first time scored 2,008 and 1,992 respectively; these were provincials, yet London candidates with 1,199, 1,127 and 1,110 to their several credits came out 13th, 12th and 17th. The moral we deduce, and which we are anxious to impress upon our readers, is that if cases are deemed worthy of being submitted to the ballot, they must be worthy of energetic support. If people who have experienced one failure mean carrying their candidate at the next election, they must commence canvassing the very day their failure is made known to them. It is no good leaving things to chance, or till the election is close at hand, for in the latter case, scores of good votes are often lost, and instance after instance happens of people saying, "My dear fellow, if you had only told me, even a day or two since, you should have had them with much pleasure." As to trusting to chance, people who will not help themselves, seldom find others to help them. But in either case, and in fact, in all cases, a want of energy on the part of the supporters of a candidate is an act of injustice to the latter. Young as he may be, failure, and especially repeated failure, discourages him; and far too early in life he may form an impression that he has been the victim of other people's carelessness. By all means let the worthiest be chosen, but as all must have been deemed worthy of election whose names are on the list of candidates, the supporters of any boy or girl so placed are bound in honour to aid him or her to the utmost of their power. Contrast the girl Perks, who got 24 votes at four elections, with that of her rival Taylor, who obtained 1,431 at one. Or let us take the cases of Shipway, who mustered 1,858 at his seventh trial, and Duff, who had 1,892 at his sixth, and with these compare those of Price with 2,157, Sutton with 2,008, and Jones with 1,992 at one trial. Making every sort of allowance, we do not think the former would have been 3½ and 3 years respectively in getting into the School, had their friends worked as hard as those of Price, Sutton, and Jones who were elected in six months. What is worth having, is worth trying hard for.

ADDRESS ON OPENING THE WEEKLY MEETINGS.

(By Bro. Preston, W.D. and P.M.)

We are indebted to the kindness of one of our subscribers for the loan of a copy, believed to be unique, of the Bye-Laws of the Lodge of Antiquity, in force in the year 1812. As Bro. Preston's name, as an eminent Masonic author, is familiar throughout the Craft as a household word, we make no apology for reproducing the following address of his in these columns:—

"The principal intention of our weekly meetings is, mutually to instruct each other in the knowledge and practice of Freemasonry. For this purpose we may consider it as an essential duty, minutely to investigate the various subjects which are treated in the establishment of our system. Many obstacles must, no doubt, occur in the course of our inquiries, from the intricacy of the points that we are required to discuss, and from the variety of modes which have been adopted among Masons in the delineation of their forms; while our progress may be retarded from the seeming improbability of being able to effect a general uniformity in the practice of our rites. To the diligent and assiduous, however, few difficulties are insurmountable: if, therefore, we zealously pursue our researches, we may rest assured that our labour will not be altogether unsuccessful.

It is to be regretted, that the valuable tenets of our institution should be so imperfectly known, and that so few of our brethren should be inclined to become proficients in our art. Many are apt to contemn what they do not understand; and hence we may account for the irregularity which too frequently prevails in our meetings. Were our principles better understood, our customs and usages more clearly defined, and our ceremonies more accurately arranged, we should find few lukewarm advocates for Masonic instruction.

Influenced by the most generous motives, it shall be our province to discuss every point with candour and liberality of sentiment; to pry into every secret deposit of Masonic lore, and to deduce such conclusions from the general practices of the fraternity as are most reconcileable to the government of the system. These means will convince us of the utility of the institution, and enable us to partake with more pleasure in the administration of its forms.

Such are the prospects which a regular attendance on our weekly meetings may produce. Many who at present consider our assemblies as only one degree above a common club, will probably be induced to acknowledge, when they are better informed, that they are calculated for other purposes than mere conviviality; and that, in the practice of genuine Masonry, the talents of our brethren may be fully occupied in the investigation of useful knowledge.

In the culture of civilisation and mental improvement, they will find among Masons, in the Lodge, a happy union of men undistinguished by rank, country, or persuasion.

A motive so alluring to generous minds must plead powerfully in favour of the Masonic institution. Another motive, however, not less attracting, will sway them—friendly offices among the selected few whom real merit has entitled to esteem, and who, under the patronage of Masons, can never, unpitied and unassisted, sink under the weight of misfortune.

Independent of these advantages, it will also be discovered, that, in the sacred mansion set apart for the propagation of our art, we enjoy, without the danger of interruption, all the benefits of a well-regulated and rational conversation with men of different ranks, who are zealously employed in the acquisition of useful knowledge, uncontaminated by vicious habits, and whose predominant characteristics are the practice and profession of moral virtue.

To the improved mind, these are captivating enticements; and while such objects continue to be the purpose of our associations, illustrious characters will never be wanted to add dignity to our assemblies.

It must always be recollected, that though the disquisition of our tenets, and the practice of our rites, are limited to our private conversations, the influence of our principles is fettered by no such restrictions. Universal as is our system, is our friendly communication. To society at large we are professed friends; and, though to every deserving object our attention is specially directed, there is no part of the human species which is exempted from our care and protection.

From this general definition of the outlines of our benevolent institution, we need no greater incentive to become votaries in its favour. Let us therefore, who are selecting ourselves for still further improvement in the art, be alike distinguished in conduct and conversation, and convince others, by our example, that the expert Mason is the best pattern of the accomplished gentleman. To point out and to encourage, shall be my plan; to proceed, persevere, and execute, must be yours; and as honest industry will always ensure success, dignified honour will be the just reward of merit."

A PROVINCE FOR BEDFORDSHIRE.

WE are given to understand that the movement for the formation of a Masonic Province in the only county in England without one, is making good progress. A month ago the Chiltern Lodge at Dunstable passed an unanimous resolution in favour of it, and the old St. John the Baptist Lodge, at Luton, has since done the same. It remains now for the Bedford Royal Stuart and the Biggleswade St. Andrew's Lodges to consider the matter. In the ranks of their members there are several worthy Masons, any one of whom the brethren would be delighted to honour as the first Provincial Grand Master; the name of Stuart, for instance, is synonymous, in the county, with all that is in the truest sense Masonic.

PROVINCIAL GRAND CHAPTER, HERTS.

ON Thursday an event of great interest took place at Watford, being neither more nor less than the reconstitution of the Prov. Grand Chapter, Herts, the last meeting of which was held as far back as the 19th of September 1864. The installing officer was M.E. Comp. John Hervey, Grand Scribe E., who opened the Prov. Grand Chapter as Z., with E. Comp. Davison as H., and E. Comp. Heard as J. The roll of Chapters and that of Grand Officers of the old Prov. Grand Chapter having been called over, the name of Comp. Halsey M.P. was announced as the Prov. Grand Superintendent, and his patent having been handed in, read by acting Prov. G. Scribe E. Comp. Iles, and examined by Comp. Hervey, a deputation of Principals and Past Principals retired with the D.C. and introduced Comp. Halsey and placed him in front of the Pedestal. Comp. Hervey then addressed him, enquiring if he were prepared conscientiously to undertake the important duties of the office, and having received a reply in the affirmative, the ceremony of obligation and investiture was performed with due solemnity. The P.G. Superintendent then appointed and obligated the other Principals, and invested his officers, the following being the list:—Comps. Finch H., Cocks J., Iles Scribe E., Carter Scribe N., Davison P.S., Heard 1st Asst. S., Lowthin 2nd Asst. S., Lemley Smith Registrar, Andrews Sw. B., Ford St. B., Terry D.C. Dibdin O., and Thomas and Wright Janitors. On the motion of Comp. Carter, seconded by Comp. Terry, Comp. Copland was unanimously elected Treasurer, and a committee was appointed, consisting of the three Principals, the Scribe and the Treasurer, to frame bye-laws and transact other business. The Prov. G. Chapter was then closed. A banquet followed, which was well served, and at which the usual toasts were proposed and responded to with great cordiality. In replying to the toast of the Prov. G. Superintendent, Comp. Halsey congratulated all present on the successful issue of the day's proceedings, and the prosperity of the Craft in the province of Hertfordshire. He further expressed a hope that now the Prov. Grand Chapter had been revived, soon every Lodge in the province would have Chapters attached, as he (Comp. Halsey) did not consider the cycle of Masonry complete without the Royal Arch Degree.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—These Pills are more efficacious in strengthening a debilitated constitution (the vital springs of which were naturally weak, or through hard usage have become relaxed and worn) than any other medicine in the world. Persons of a nervous habit of body, and all who are suffering from weak digestive organs, or liver complaints, eructations, flatulency, dyspepsia, colic, or irritable bowels, should lose no time in giving these Pills a fair trial. Coughs, colds, asthma, or shortness of breath, are also within the range of the curative powers of this very remarkable medicine—gout and rheumatism bow before them. The cures effected by these Pills are not superficial or temporary, but complete and permanent; they are so mild as they are efficacious, and may be given with confidence to delicate females and young children.

MASONIC BOYS' SCHOOL.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

Pontefract, 26th October 1875.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—We note, in your issue of last Saturday, a letter from the Secretary of the Boys' School, with reference to our Pamphlet, and we crave space in your columns for a brief reply.

Mr. Binckes unfortunately for himself, adduces the case of "James Gasson" to convict us of error, and assures your readers that all our other statements are equally easy of explanation. The charges in Bro. Tew's first Pamphlet, the Secretary states, have been proved groundless, we should like to know when and where?

The Secretary informs your readers that, on 4th May 1872, "Gasson" received a "grant of £5 for the usual (?) outfit given on leaving the School."

Now, we find, on two pages of the 1865 Report, second edition with corrections, that "James Gasson" did not attain the age (15) for leaving the School till the 28th day of October 1872, and, as the Secretary states that the boy was "orphan and entirely friendless," we submit it was very strange that he should have left the School six months before the proper time, as he certainly must have done if both the '65 Report and Mr. Binckes's statement about the leaving outfit in May 1872 are correct. Again, according to the Secretary, £5 were paid at the commencement of his apprenticeship, some months after May 1872, and, as we find the full amount of the grant —£10 for the lad's apprenticeship recorded in the Report for 1873, it necessarily follows, in pursuance of the conditions of the apprenticeship, viz., £5 at the commencement of apprenticeship, and £5 at the expiration of a year therefrom, that the former of these two instalments must, or ought to, have been paid in 1872; we ask, therefore, why this second portion of the entire grant, being expended in 1872, is not shown in the 1872 Report? Everything in the Reports concerning "James Gasson" is most perplexing; in two Reports we are told that he left in December 1871, in another, that for the year 1865, we find his time for leaving was not till the 28th October 1872, and last week we were told that £5 were paid for his outfit on leaving in May 1872! We fail to see how the Secretary has improved his case, which appears to us to require a different solution, and we can only say, that if, as we are justified in assuming from documents before us, the Secretary's other solutions are not more satisfactory, we are not disposed to alter our verdict, which is, that the Reports for the last three years are thoroughly untrustworthy, and therefore worthless. As regards the other issues raised, we have only to refer your readers to our Pamphlet, as the limits of a letter are not sufficient for their discussion. Both the late Head Master and his Assistants demanded a complete investigation, and you, Sir, in your journal of the 17th July, pointed out that, if the Committee took no further steps, injustice to some of those concerned would be the result. In his letter to your Masonic contemporary, the Secretary admits, though doubtless with many mental after-birth pangs, having dictated the Matron's letter, which was characterised by a member of the House Committee as highly improper, and we are forcibly reminded by Mr. Binckes's reference to "suspension by the neck," that there are not a few persons who, with rope long enough, would perform the act themselves. Apologising for the unavoidable length of our reply.

We are, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

(Signed) THOMAS HILL TEW.
O. G. D. PERROTT, M.A.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Pursuing my remarks on the Pamphlet "T. W. Tew, and O. G. D. Perrott," I confidently submit that, despite all the sharp practice of those two acute financiers, and their views to the contrary, the accounts of the Boys' School are stated and set forth in a manner sufficiently clear for any unprejudiced enquirer to spot the expenditure under every head. It is not because Mr. Tew or Mr. Perrott is of opinion that this or that should be, or should not be done, that those who do not concur, are necessarily wrong. Both think that under the "cost per head" should be included the interest on the "Building Expenditure." The Committee and others think differently. In no other Institution of a similar character is such a charge included, but if Messrs. Tew and Perrott choose to make such addition, in accordance with their views, by all means let them do so. But I object to their charging with misrepresentation, and with an attempt to mislead, those who hold views opposite to theirs. The same remarks apply to the expenditure given under the head of "Special" in connection with the Secretary and Collector, and commented on most unfairly, and in entire ignorance of the matters referred to, pp. 21-24. The writers elect to overlook the fact that the money received since 1861 (the date of my election as Secretary) has been for the purpose, not only of maintaining and educating a certain number of boys, but of providing a new and commodious home in which the work should be carried on. The "Special Expenditure" is fairly and properly chargeable with the payments made for "special work," and it would be wrong and unjust to place these payments under the head of "Ordinary Expenditure."

So, with all the other cavils at the accounts, the whole resolves itself into a question of opinion as to the mode in which they should be stated.

It is grievous to find one who miserably disappointed the expectations formed of him, losing no opportunity of befouling the nest from which he was called upon to retire. Nothing escapes condemnation.

The Secretary is an incapable tyrant.
The Matron is arbitrary and insolent.
The Committee are "vacillating," and mere tools of the officials.
The ventilation is imperfect.
The heating apparatus is unsatisfactory.
The original outlay on building, &c., is excessive.
The expenditure is extravagant.
"The School is lost."

But there is one consolation,—Mr. Perrott is perfect.

Really this last is the text of the Pamphlet. It would be wearisome to go through it page by page, and I now dismiss it, with the remark of a valued correspondent, "The best plan would be not to notice it: it is evidently not written in the interest of the Institution, but for the sake of gratifying the vindictiveness of the late Headmaster."

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

27th October 1875. FRED. BINCKES, Secretary.

P.S.—By way of practical contradiction to the statements in the Pamphlet, especially as to the "loss of the School," let me entreat your readers, if they wish to see an institution under efficient management, doing its work satisfactorily and efficiently, under a firm but kind head; with a united and contented staff, and young happy faces and healthy forms, to pay a visit to Wood Green.

THE ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTIONS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Now that the lists of candidates for both the above Institutions have become so large, and the vacancies for the same so small, do you not think the time has arrived for the Committees of those Schools to take into consideration the advisability of refusing to allow any candidate to be nominated who has already a brother or sister enjoying the benefits of the Schools? I know of cases where there are already two children of the family in the Institutions, and they are trying to get in a third, and when told of the unfairness to other candidates, the reply has been, that the committees of the Schools do not object, so they do not see why I should. My idea is that such a boon ought not to be made too common, and, to give a better chance to the unsuccessful candidates to place restrictions in the way I have mentioned above. Trusting you will find a corner for this in your valuable journal,

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

W. M., 180.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

LODGE REPORTS.—We would respectfully call the attention of our Correspondents to our rule respecting Reports of the various meetings. In all cases we are willing to assist in giving early publicity to the doings of our brethren, and we have made arrangements by which Reports of meetings occurring on the THURSDAY shall be inserted in the current issue of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE. We must, however, request our Correspondents to let us have their communications as early as possible in the week; as, when Reports reach us on Friday mid-day, which might have been received three or four days' earlier—to say the least—it is somewhat trying to our temper, and seriously delays the publication of the paper.

ENQUIRER.—No more than five candidates can be initiated at one Lodge meeting, under the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of England. Emergency meetings for that purpose can be held at any time, with the sanction of the W.M., but there is no reasonable limit to the number of brethren to be passed or raised at one regular Lodge meeting.

S.W.—The Senior Warden and Junior Warden must have served either of those offices in a regular Lodge for the space of twelve months, otherwise they are not eligible for the Master's chair and no Companion of the Royal Arch can occupy either of the Principal's chairs unless he is a W.M. or P.M. of a Craft Lodge.

R.M.—1:—An "affiliated" or "joining" member pays certain fees on joining, but he may be relieved by vote of Lodge from payment of the regular subscription, when he becomes, ipso facto, an honorary member. Any brother may be admitted an honorary member of a Lodge, in which case he pays no fees whatever. 2:—By paying fees he would cease to be an honorary member and assume the character of joining member. But this change can only be effected after due notice, ballot, &c. Honorary members of Grand Lodge, Scotland, and, we presume, of daughter Lodges, do not vote. 3:—This seems to us to be a matter of courtesy. The certificate is to the effect that he shall preside if called upon to do so by the brethren present.

Several Reviews, Letters, and other matter crowded out.

CONSECRATION OF A NEW LODGE AT RISCA.

ALTHOUGH the ramifications of Freemasonry are extended throughout the civilised world, yet no extraneous effort is put forth to extend the number of its Lodges or the numerical strength of the confraternity. Nevertheless, it grows secretly and silently. Good men and true, of all nationalities and creeds, are continually being enrolled within its borders. Ever and anon, sheer necessity imposes upon the brotherhood the absolute duty of forming a new Lodge, so that the primary objects of the Ancient Order may not become stagnant or inert. Such was found to be the case at Risca. The few brethren who, from various causes, had here been brought together, became alive to the fact that they could not make progress in the mystic art when isolated from circles where the brethren are to be found in greater numbers, and where regularly constituted Lodges exist. Finding that the lack of the privilege of assembling together, as only the Masonic brotherhood can assemble, and ascertaining also that many gentlemen in the district, of the highest respectability, and unsullied reputation, were desirous of becoming members of the Craft, it was resolved to take the necessary steps to memorialise the Grand Lodge of England to grant a dispensation or warrant for opening a new Lodge at Risca—to be called the Homfray Lodge. The resolve was put into practice, and in the result a charter was granted, authorising the formation of a new Lodge, and according thereunto all the rites and privileges of Ancient Freemasonry.

The brethren most interested in its formation set to work in an indefatigable manner. A suitable and convenient Lodge room was obtained, decorated and embellished in a tasteful and most appropriate style. All the requirements necessary to a Masonic Lodge were obtained, as well as everything requisite to add to the comfort and convenience of the brethren in carrying out the business of the Lodge. The committee, with Brother W. Watkins as acting Secretary, carried out the duties entrusted to them in a highly creditable and praiseworthy manner. To this may be mainly attributed the reason why the proceedings in connection with the ceremony of consecration passed off so smoothly.

The newly consecrated Lodge is called the "Homfray Lodge," No. 1562, of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England. The Lodge room is situated on premises attached to the Post Office at Risca, with suitable accessory apartments contiguous thereto. The R. W. Colonel Lyne P.G.M. of Monmouthshire, had arranged to perform the ceremony, but was, at the last moment, summoned, by telegraph, to attend what, he feared, would be the death-bed of his mother. Under these circumstances the deepest manifestation of sympathy was exhibited, and the duty of performing the ceremony of consecration devolved upon the V.W. Bro. Captain S. Geo. Homfray A.G.D.C. of England and D.P.G.M. of Monmouthshire. The Lodge was opened shortly after 3 o'clock, when the following brethren, in addition to Bro. S. G. Homfray, were present:—Bros. Captain A. T. Perkins W.M. Benevolent Lodge 446 P.G.J.W. Somerset, L. A. Homfray P.P.G.S.W. and P.M. 683, W. H. Wickey Homfray W.M. P.P.G.S.B. Members of new Lodge—R. J. The Lodge having been opened in due form, the ceremony proceeded, and Bro. Watkins, by direction of the presiding officer, read the petition and warrant. After the approval and assent of brethren had been given thereto, Bro. Osman, the Chaplain, delivered the following oration in a most impressive manner:—

"In accordance with the part allotted to me in this day's proceedings, it is my privilege to address to you a few words on the nature and principles of the Craft. And first, as to the nature of the Institution. It is not a system of religion, though asserting the existence and attributes of the Deity on all suitable occasions. It is not a teacher of religion, though invoking the Divine aid at every step. Again, it is not a provident society, though, by its steadfast clinging to established institutions, when not inimical to real liberty, it practically makes men provident and reluctant to commit themselves to the work of destruction or change. It is not an indigent society; but where is there an institution which cares so much for, and which gives such substantial aid to indigent brethren as the noble Institution of which we have the honour to be members? It is not an insurance society, in which a man can make provision, if necessary, for those who come after him; but what Institution cares so nobly for the widow and the fatherless, if needy, as the Royal Craft?—

educating the children, by hundreds, of worthy Masons deceased, and encouraging the brethren to look after and care for the widow. It is not distinctively any of these, but it really possesses the characteristics of them all. The Craft, as every initiate has to learn, is a brotherhood—a brotherhood of just and honourable men, a brotherhood large enough and wide enough to take in every true hearted, self-respecting, upright man in the wide, wide world, every honourable man living, of whatever creed, nation, or clime; every such believer in Him who lives and reigns,—the Mighty Architect of the Universe, by whose will we live, and move, and have our being—in Him who is Lord of all, Father of all, Redeemer of all, Judge of all! And as the to principles of the Royal Craft. Are they not those which elevate and ennoble mankind, brotherly love, relief, truth? Do you seek to do good to your fellow-man? How is this to be done, if not in obedience to the promptings, and in the spirit of brotherly love, you yourself influenced by the ever present, overpowering thought of His presence, Who is above all, His love extending to all, who hates nothing His hand has made. While the Royal Craft does not take from honour already in possession of him who is initiated into it, but, as we believe, adds to that honour, it yet keeps before the mind of every one of its members the great fact that men are intended to love one another, are intended to live, not as isolated units, but in society, in brotherhood, to unite one with the other in the practice and pursuit of all that is true, just, holy, and of good report. And in the true spirit of brotherly love to stretch out the helping hand when help and relief are needed,—to help as a brother, to sympathise as a friend, to bear, as far as may be, one another's burdens; kind to all, thoughtful of all, seeking the good of all, careful by example to strengthen and confirm one another in right principles, and right conduct, yet gentle and charitable to those who err from the right way. Wishful to hide rather than expose faults and failings, from which, alas! no human life is altogether free. Of such a nature, of such principles is the Masonic Institution. In hope of promoting the development and spread of brotherly love, relief and truth, the Homfray Lodge is consecrated, and the brotherhood constituted to-day. May this hope be realised, this end attained, as the result of this day's proceedings. May the fraternal union, pleasant intercourse, and prosperity which distinguish other Lodges in the province, ever be the stereotyped characteristics of the Homfray Lodge. May the brethren assembling here from time to time be enabled to do their part of the work which Masons have to do in the world—uphold the true, defend the absent and the weak, minister to the relief of the needy, and in a large-hearted, world-wide charity seek to do the will of the Great Architect of the Universe, whose servants we profess to be, and to whom we, every one of us, shall give account at the last great day."

The anthem, "Behold how good and joyful a thing it is for the brethren to dwell together in unity" (Psalm 133rd), was sung, Brother W. P. Broad P.M. 457, P.G. Organist, presiding at the harmonium. The whole of the musical arrangements were admirably carried out.

The presiding officer having constituted the Lodge in due form, the anthem, "Glory be to God in the Highest," was sung, and the ceremony of consecration was completed.

The next duty was the installation of Bro. R. J. Chambers as the W.M., followed by the appointment of officers for the ensuing year. Bro. S. G. Homfray undertook the duty of installation, and performed the ceremony in a most impressive manner. The W.M. subsequently appointed his officers, and presented each with the insignia of his office.

The officers were as follow:—Bros. R. J. Chambers W.M., L. A. Homfray I.P.M., Jonathan Piggford S.W., Wm. James J.W., Henry Williams Chaplain, W. Watkins D.C., Thomas Moses Sec., Joseph Green Treasurer, C. H. Oliver jun. Organist, R. H. Richards S.D., George B. Robathan J.D., D. R. J. Chambers I.G., Henry Fletcher Tyler.

A number of propositions of candidates for initiation and for joining the Lodge as subscribing members were made, followed by the accustomed votes of thanks to the D.P.G.M. for presiding, and to the visitors for attending.

These votes having been suitably acknowledged, the interesting proceedings were brought to a close in the usual way.

The consecration banquet took place at the Albert Inn, where a numerous party sat down, under the presidency of Bro. R. J. Chambers, the W.M. elect, and expressed themselves highly pleased with the quality of the viands supplied by Mr. J. Boulton, as well as the wines which were placed on the table.

On the removal of the cloth the W.M. first gave "The Queen and the Craft," which was never more loyally honoured than on this occasion. The next toast from the chair was "The M.W.G.M. of England, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G.," which having been acknowledged, the list was proceeded with in the following order:—"The M.W. Pro G.M., the R.W. Deputy G.M., and the rest of the Grand Officers, Past and Present." "The R.W. the Provincial G.M. of Monmouthshire, Bro. Col. Lyne." "The V.W.D.P.G.M. of Monmouthshire, Bro. Capt. S. Geo. Homfray A.G.D.C., and rest of the Prov. Officers, Past and Present." "The W.M., I.P.M., Officers and Brethren of the Homfray Lodge, No. 1502." "The Consecration and Installing Officers." "The W.M., Officers, and Brethren of the other Lodges of the Province." "The Visiting Brethren." "The Masonic Charities." "The Tyler's Toast." Throughout the evening the greatest harmony and fraternal feeling prevailed.

ADVANCEMENT OF OUR ORDER.

We are glad to see, from the report of a recent meeting of the Lewisham District Board of Works, that the Board has accepted, by a very substantial majority, a resolution proposed by Mr. Thompson, and seconded by Mr. Jones, to the effect that application for a warrant for a new Masonic Lodge should be made in the proper quarter, and that a part of the Board's premises should be set apart for holding the Lodge meetings. We give in extenso that portion of the report relating to the resolution:—

Mr. Thompson, who made a resolution to the effect that permission be given to the Rev. W. Taylor Jones, Messrs. Thompson, Roberts, Bardett, Lemon, Jerrard, Woolf, Edwards, Dr. Wilkinson, and others, to apply for a warrant for a Masonic Lodge, and in their application to state that the Lodge is intended to be held in the building of this Board's offices at Catford, said the object of the resolution was obvious. A great many members of that Board happened to belong to the Freemasons, and they, in conjunction with the public who were Freemasons, proposed to take advantage of the accommodation afforded by the spacious rooms of the Board. All they asked for was simply the use of the two corner rooms for a short time, perhaps not more than for two or three hours, about seven times a year. He felt confident that the Lodge would conduce to a great deal closer intimacy. To show the popular feeling upon the subject, he (Mr. Thompson) stated that he had been perfectly inundated with letters asking for information, and testifying to the benefit that would be wrought in consequence of its establishment. Mr. Thompson impressed particularly upon the Board the fact that the meetings of the Freemasons would in no way clash with the arrangements of the Board as special attention would be made to their convenience.

Mr. Jones, from personal observation, was enabled to state that when he went through various parts of the country he found the use of the town hall invariably accorded for such meetings, and he was decidedly of opinion that the movement would be undoubtedly popular, and being an old Freemason, seconded the resolution with the utmost cordiality.

Mr. Lemon objected strongly against permission for the room being given, in the first place, because he had not believe the rooms were adapted to the requirements of Freemasons, and the doors were not sufficiently well closed to enable the Freemasons to carry on their business with the utmost secrecy. Again, the Board had provided themselves with some very heavy and valuable furniture, and he knew so much of the proceedings of the body to be able to state that it would involve the clearing out of all the furniture in the room, which could not be done with perfect immunity from damage. Another thing, he thought the public would look upon the Board as a clique desirous only of furthering their own ends.

Mr. Thompson said the last argument practically destroyed itself, for instead of being a clique, it would mean an introduction of a portion of the public. All the furniture required to be moved would be the two tables. Such small arguments demonstrated to him the weakness of the opposition.

The resolution was then put and carried by eight against three.

DUNMOW.

AN addition has been made to the Essex Lodges of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, by the consecration, on Wednesday last, under most favourable auspices, of a new Lodge at Dunmow. The brethren, who included twenty P.M.'s, and several Grand Officers, assembled in the Town Hall, where the ceremony was ably and impressively performed by the V.W. Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn, Past Grand Chaplain, assisted by the V.W. Bro. the Rev. Spencer R. Wigram, Grand Chaplain, and by special permission of the Earl of Rosslyn P.G.M. Scotland, and representative of the G.L. Eng., the Lodge was designated the "Rosslyn Lodge," numbered 1543 on the Registry of the Grand Lodge of England. Bro. the Rev. F. B. Shephard P.P.G.C. and P.P.S.G.W., P.M. and P.Z. 275, was installed as the first W.M., and he appointed as his Wardens Bros. G. D. Clapham and F. J. Snell. At the conclusion of the ceremony, about forty brethren adjourned to the Saracen's Head, and partook of a sumptuous and well-served banquet, which was followed by the usual Masonic toasts. Among those present were—Bros. Matthew E. Clark Deputy Provincial Grand Master, John Wright Carr P.G. Secretary, Joseph Burton P.G. OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THE Prince of Wales is now well on his way to India, and doubtless it will not be long ere we hear of his having arrived at Bombay. On quitting Athens His Royal Highness made for Port Said, which was reached early on Saturday morning. He was here received by the Princes Tewfik, Hassan, and Toussoum, sons of the Viceroy, General Stanton, our agent and Consul general, and Captain Willoughby, agent for the Indian government. Thence he proceeded aboard the Osborne to Ismailia, preceded by the Egyptian Princes in the Scinde, and these received him on landing, and escorted him to the state train in waiting to convey him to Cairo. Here the Viceroy in person received his Royal Highness, and escorted him to Ghezireh Palace, which had been prepared for his reception. On Monday an Investiture of the Order of the Star of India was held, at which his Royal Highness, by virtue of the powers conferred on him by Her Majesty invested the Prince Tewfik, eldest son and heir of the Viceroy, with the Grand Cross of the Order. In the evening of the same day, the Royal and Viceregal party visited the Pyramids, and dined there in state, the Great Pyramid being brilliantly illuminated in honour of the occasion. As our special commissioner telegraphs that he has mislaid his copy of the menu, we give the following as not unlikely to have been included in the bill of fare :—

SOUPS.—Clear Turtle. Oxtail à la Ball Apis. Mock Turtle à la Count Cagliostro.
FISH.—Turbot, Ichneumon Sauce. Fillets of Soles à la Crocodile. Red Mullets. Fried Eels.
ENTREES.—Pelican Sauté, sauce piquante. Alligator Kidneys, Mummy sauce. Veal Cutlets à la Pharoah Necho. Preserved Chariot Wheels.
RELEVES.—Boiled Dromedary Hump. Roast Ship of the Desert. Haunch of Jerusalem Pony. Roast Ibis.
ENTREMETS.—Jelly à la Phœnix. Pudding à la Misraim. Cream à la Delta. Pastry à la Caravan and à la Bedouin.

The desert included Dead Sea apples and a great variety of other fruits, for which the Nile Valley is celebrated. Had time permitted, the distinguished party would not only have inspected, but also indulged in a game of Pyramids. But a special representation at the opera had been ordered, and the Prince and Viceroy returned accordingly to Cairo in order to assist at the performance. On Tuesday His Royal Highness left by train for Suez, and thence on board the Serapis, viâ the Red Sea and Aden, for Bombay. Among the "fixtures" arranged at Bombay in honour of the Royal visit, must be mentioned a grand ball at Freemasons' Hall, Bombay.

On Monday H.R.H. Prince Leopold took up his freedom of the City. The event was celebrated with the customary honours, and the freedom was handed to His Royal Highness in a beautiful casket. When the more formal part of the ceremony, which, by the way, took place in the magnificent Library at Guildhall, was over, the party adjourned to banquet, the Lord Mayor presiding, with his wonted geniality. The usual toasts were given and responded to, that of the new Royal Citizen being greeted with great enthusiasm.

While referring to an event of no small interest in the City, it may not be out of place to state that, owing to the nature of the Report of the Parliamentary Committee on Foreign Loans, the Ministers of some small Central American States will not receive the usual invitation to be present at the Lord Mayor's banquet. It were as well, perhaps, if the Ministers in question took this hint and cleared out altogether from this country. We do not imagine John Bull would be seriously disconcerted if Honduras, Costa Rica, &c., were never again represented at the Court of St. James's.

The event of the week has been the celebration at the Alexandra Palace of the Anniversary of Balaklava. The whole of the survivors of the famous Charge of the Light Brigade were invited to a banquet in honour of this magnificent blunder. Most of the warriors responded in person to the invitation, and as the weather was fine for once in a way, we must note down this celebration as one of the most successful events of the whole year. There was a Balaklava trophy in the Great Central Hall, which was formally unveiled at 1 p.m. Here also was to be seen the charger of Colonel Kent, 77th Foot, which had carried that officer through the Crimea and the Indian Mutiny, and bore him only a few days since at Woolwich, when the regiment was inspected by the Duke of Cambridge. The horse, in spite of its seven-and-twenty years, looked well, and able to go through even half-a-dozen more campaigns. Miss Thompson's picture of the "Roll Call" was also on view, and attracted crowds of spectators, and the lady herself, we believe, was present at the banquet, though how her picture of the "Roll Call," of the guards, in any way connects her with the Charge of the Light Brigade is to us a mystery. However, whether for advertising or other purposes, the picture and the painter were both there, and so were the Russian drums, captured by the 77th Regiment at the battle of the Alma, lent for the occasion by Colonel Kent, and the head of Lord Cardigan's charger, also lent by the Countess of Cardigan. In honour of the day the programme was considerably enlarged, and the visitors thronged the Palace and grounds in thousands. In fact, locomotion in the Great Hall was a matter of considerable difficulty. The military were in strong force, red coats and blue coats being noticeable everywhere among the crowd. The last display of fireworks during the season brought a most enjoyable day to a close.

Sir Charles Reed, at a recent distribution of prizes, laid considerable stress on the ignorance so generally displayed by people as to spelling. People now-a-days are in such a hurry to learn everything, that so elementary a matter as spelling receives far less than its due share of attention. We admit that the English language is not the easiest in the world to spell, but it is our native language, and we ought at least to write it accurately. One of the difficulties cited by Sir Charles had reference to the great variety of sounds, which are conveyed by the same combination of letters as in though, through, &c. We offer the following as specially illustrating this particular difficulty: "Though the tough cough and hiccough plough me through." But if Englishmen themselves are behindhand in writing their own language, how must it fare with foreigners when they try to speak it? Imagine a Frenchmen or a German tackling the above varieties of ough for the first time.

New Zealand is a large and rising colony, but we knew not till the other day it was so considerable. Glancing over the pages of the Standard, a few days since, we saw it announced that the British Empire was in New Zealand. It must be an extensive country that will hold British India, British North America, the United Kingdom, and all our other possessions. It is, moreover, the first time we ever heard of the well known rule being reversed, namely, that the whole contains the part. Here it is the part which contains the whole. Well, we live and learn.

The floods this year are very serious. We suggested last week that possibly we should be obliged to swim instead of walk, or paddle our own canoe instead of ride, when we paid a visit to some neighbour, and in some parts of the country locomotion, except by means of boats, appears to be out of the question. This is especially so in the valley of the Thames, where the country for miles and miles on both sides of the river is inundated. Round about Eton and Windsor the whole country pretty well is under water. Matters are as bad in the Midlands, and the results are generally very disastrous in respect both to life and property. We trust we shall not be washed away, at all events this side of Christmas. What would our readers do without a Chronicle and Christmas pudding.

About the last great racing event of the year came off on Friday when Mr. Mannington's Sutton, 4 years, and carrying 5st. 13lb., won the Cambridgeshire easily, by about a length and a half, Mr. T. V. Morgan's Lord Gowran being second, and Sir G. Chetwynd's, the Grey Palmer, third. Henceforth we must turn our thoughts to the Two Thousand and Derby of 1876. In the aquatic world there is a race on for the championship, in which the veteran Sadler will doubtless prove that he has lost little, if any, of his ancient form, and Stanton in the arena of bicycles is doing something considerable, in the way of riding, at Lillie-bridge. Coursing meetings are being held in various parts of the country, and foot-ball flourishes, and will flourish, weather permitting, for some months to come.

Among the extra-Parliamentary utterances, so common at this season of the year, must be mentioned those of Sir Henry James, Attorney-General during the late ministry, and Mr. Sclater Booth and Sir Stafford Northcote, both members of the present ministry. The subjects to which they severally directed their attention were, in the case of the ex-Attorney-General, the Admiralty Circular respecting Fugitive Slaves, now, however, withdrawn, and in the case of the Chancellor of the Exchequer the new law of Friendly Societies. Mr. Sclater-Booth, as a county member, dealt chiefly with the law of settlement. Among other members who have spoken publicly during the last few days must be mentioned the name of Mr. Fawcett, who has been expressing himself with his wonted ability on the subject of Art Education.

The Wainwright trial will not come off till the November Sessions of the Central Criminal Court, the defendant's counsel having applied for a postponement of the case, and Justice Grove having acceded to the request. By the way, there appears to be what is described as an Italian Wainwright case, the body of a murdered woman having been discovered at the Railway Station at Rome, and identified, the supposed murderer having also been arrested by the police. A Greek merchant, M. Mavrocordato, has been sentenced to five years' penal servitude for embezzlement.

The visit of the Emperor of Germany to Milan appears, by all accounts, to have afforded the Imperial visitor the most intense satisfaction, while Victor Emmanuel is equally gratified with the visit. The Emperor quitted Milan on Saturday last, and reached his capital in time for the unveiling of the Stein memorial, but, unfortunately, indisposition prevented his taking part in the ceremonial. However, the Crown Prince took his father's place, and there were present also the Crown Princess and several other members of the Imperial family, to do honour to one of the leading men of his day, one to whom, more than almost any other man, Prussia is indebted for her present high position in Europe.

The news from Paris is somewhat tame. M. Rouher and M. Gambetta have issued manifestoes, the one Bonapartist, the other Republic, and both have caused a considerable amount of excitement. People are also beginning to look forward to the approaching session of the Legislative Assembly. From Spain, we are assured that a decisive campaign is about to be undertaken against the Carlists. We are no lovers of war, but in this case we cannot but rejoice at anything indicative of an approaching close of this unhappy contest. We care not a fig for Carlism or Alphonsism. Our sole wish is, that the Spaniards may once more enjoy the blessings of peace. There is nothing new as to the Insurrection in the Herzegovina, which, from a fighting point of view, may be considered at an end, though, probably, we shall hear, for some time to come, of occasional plundering of Turkish houses, and the decapitation of inoffensive Turks. The German Parliament has been opened by commission the Emperor being too indisposed to attend in person. The expressions in the speech referring to a belief in the continued maintenance of peace have given general satisfaction. This is about the sum of our foreign news.

We are informed that the eminent engraver employed on the large historical picture of the Installation of H.R.H. the Grand Master is making progress, so as to ensure the exhibition of a proof at the Anniversary Festival next year. Bro. E. J. Harty requests us to suggest to all brethren who are entitled to a portrait in this interesting souvenir, that no time be lost ere they send a carte to him, or have one specially taken at the Gallery. Time is fleeting, and qualified brethren, whose portraits may be omitted, will have cause to regret their procrastination; while others will be able to point out their own likenesses in connection with the memorable event, and to hand them down to their childrens' children. The work will probably be hung in most buildings of importance throughout the country.

It is announced that the meetings of the St. Luke's Lodge of Instruction will be held, for the future, at the Commercial Tavern, King's Road, Chelsea, on Friday evenings at 7 o'clock.

Seats for this brilliant performance are already being secured. The patrons of the Olympic will thus have an opportunity of testifying the courtesy and attention of Mr. Coleman.

Obituary.

With deep regret we have to announce the death of Brother Henry Dempster, late manager of the White Hart Hotel, Windsor. He was initiated in the Windsor Castle Lodge, 771, on the day of its consecration, February 1859, and was installed W.M. in February 1867, and was presented with a P.M.'s jewel in 1868. He died on the 20th, and was buried on 25th inst., at Ifield Parish Church, followed by the members of his family. The Lodge was represented by Brothers Johnson and Tolley P.M. and Secretary. Brother Dempster was highly respected and esteemed by all who knew him; his loss will be felt by a large circle of friends, and not the least by the brethren of his Lodge.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS.

Mother Kilwinning Lodge, No. 0.—Thursday, 21st October, being the Glasgow Fast Day, and held as a holiday, Bros. J. Ferguson and J. Tweed, the Pro S.W. and J.W. of the Mother Lodge, took down another contingent of initiates and affiliates to swell the ranks of the Lodge, which boasts to have been the cradle of Freemasonry, at any rate in North Britain. They were accompanied by twenty of the brethren, and after a pleasant ride of an hour and a half, arrived at the picturesque old village, and found the brethren assembled in the old Lodge room. This Lodge was opened at 1 o'clock, by Bros. R. Wylie P.G.S. and Past Prov. Grand Master of Ayrshire, John Johnston S.W., James Gibson J.W., and J. Whiston Tyler, when four officers of the 105th Highland Regiment of Volunteers, and two civilians, were duly admitted to the Entered Apprentice degree. It having been put to the Lodge and voted a case of Emergency, Messrs. Jas. Shirra, Alex. McDonald, Allan McKechnie, Wm. Robertson, John Clark, and Thos. Ogilvegold, were passed and raised to the sublime degree of M.M., and Bro. Balfour, of Bothwell, 13, P.G.D.C. Glasgow, and G. W. Wheeler P.M. 73, were affiliated as joining members. The brethren then adjourned to the banquet at the Eglington Arms, where a substantial repast was admirably served up by the respected host, Bro. Rodger. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were duly honoured, when Bro. Wylie proposed the Initiates he thought it no small honour to have had the privilege of assisting in bringing to light six gentlemen like the present, who, from their behaviour to-day, he felt sure would yet reflect honour upon the Order. Bro. J. Clark replied, on behalf of himself and the other Initiates. The P.G.M. then proposed the visiting brethren and affiliates. The Mother Lodge, though still working with all her rude simplicity, was yet glad to see brethren of long standing and great experience in the Order coming forward to join them with all their shortcomings. Bro. Wheeler, in reply, said: Though he held many diplomas, of various Orders and Degrees of Masonry, he could assure them there was none he should prize more than that of the Mother Kilwinning Lodge. Bro. H. J. Shields 33°, was pleased to see the simplicity with which the degrees were wrought, and yet they were strictly in accordance with the ancient landmarks. He had seen the French, German, Italian, Swiss, Spanish, and Greek Rites worked, as well as being present in nearly all the States of America, to say nothing of Ireland and England, yet since he first saw Masonic light [illegible] years ago, he had seen nothing that approved itself more to his judgment. He called it Masonry pure and undefiled; a great deal of what were called improvements in Masonry he looked upon as simply innovations, which the Order would be better without, and he could say, with Bro. Wheeler, that above all his diplomas he should prize that of Mother Kilwinning. The period for reassembling having arrived, the brethren returned to the Lodge room, and Bro. Wylie reopened; when some Glasgow brethren, who had been unable to come by the earlier train, were admitted, and Bro. J. Whiston T. affiliated Bros. W. Bell R.W.M. 3 bis., D. Reid K.W.M. 463, and J. Johnston P.M. 419, as members of the Lodge, and Mr. Jas. Wylie, draughtsman of Hueston-street, Glasgow, was initiated, passed and raised, Bro. Jas. Gibson J.W. giving him the obligations and charges. Bro. Wm. Bell 3 bis., thanked the acting Grand Master for his kindness in reopening the Lodge, and also for the honour they had conferred upon him in admitting him a member. The Glasgow members of Kilwinning had held one of their annual festivals in St. John's Hall, and he should be most happy to place it at their disposal this year should they require it. Bro. Johnson also returned thanks. Bro. Wylie was proud to receive this invitation from No. 3, a Lodge whose antiquity no one could dispute; he had been in their handsome hall, and when he thought of that, and their well appointed furniture, and other surroundings, he was afraid Bro. Bell would think very little of their primitive substitutes, and perhaps smile at their altar, but if they did not boast much of externals, he thought they possessed the real qualifications of ancient Freemasonry. Bro. Balfour expressed the thanks of the visitors to Bro. Gibson the J.W., for the way in which he had assisted in working the ceremonies, it reminded him of his own initiation in No. 13, a Lodge that originally held its charter direct from Kilwinning. Bro. Gibson acknowledged, and the Lodge was then closed in time for the last train to Glasgow.

Egyptian Lodge of Instruction, No 27.—This Lodge of Instruction held its usual weekly meeting at Bro. Maidwell's, "The Hercules," Leadenhall-street, on Thursday last, 28th October, at 7 p.m., Bro. Austin P.M. 933 presiding, supported by Bros. Horsley as J.W., Williams as J.W., and a numerous assemblage of the brethren, numbering upwards of forty, for the purpose of working the fifteen sections. The Lodge was opened in due form, and the sections of the First Lecture were worked by Bros. Brown, Calverley, Ellis, Briant, Hoare, Horsley and Barnes, after which the Lodge was opened in the second degree, and the Sections of the Second Lecture were worked by Bros. Crane, Musto, Barnes, Rowe, and Lowe. The Lodge was then opened in the third degree, and the final sections were worked by Bros. Burr, Webb and Williams. The Lodge was then resumed to the first degree, and after the usual business of the Lodge was transacted it was closed in ancient form, all the brethren having expressed their approbation of the excellent manner in which the various sections had been worked for the first time in this Lodge of Instruction.

Strong Man Lodge of Instruction, No. 45.—This Lodge held its weekly meeting on Monday, the 25th October, at the Old Jerusalem Tavern, St. John's Gate, Clerkenwell. Present:—Bros. Stock W.M., Piercy S.W., Tolmie J.W., Kidder S.D., Crawley J.D., Hill I.G., Christopher Tyler, Beckett Preceptor, Killick Hon. Sec. Visitors:—Bros. Powell 186, Hall 898, and Mitchell 1360. The ceremony of initiation was rehearsed, Bro. Walker candidate. The W.M. worked the 1st, 2nd and 3rd sections, and Bro. Cathedral Chapter, No. 67.—This Chapter was visited by Prov. Chapter on 26th Oct., when they congratulated Comp. Duthie on the continued prosperity of the Chapter; they wished that all those in the province were working as satisfactorily. The chair of Z. was filled by Comp. J. Duthie, that of H. by G. Pridie, and J. by D. Ranald. J. French Scribe E., J. Mason N., W. Wood T., J. Dicker 1st S., R. Crawford Janitor. One brother of the Glory Lodge was entered into the excellent degree, and afterwards exalted to the Holy Royal Arch degree in Comp. Duthie's well-known style.

Commercial Chapter No. 79.—This Chapter held its Installation meeting on the 22nd inst., at 30 Hope-street, Glasgow, when the following officers were duly installed in their respective offices:—D. Lamb M.E.Z., B. Brodie J., J. Munn Scribe E. Sec., J. Macpherson Treas. The board of Installed Principals consisted of J. Duthie Z. of 67, G. W. Wheeler Z. of 73, J. Brodie P.Z. of 79. Visitors—J Mitchel P.J. 50, C. Mackenzie 1st S. 50, J. Oliver S.E. 69. Comp. D. Lamb thanked the Chapter for the honour they had conferred upon him. He had always had two objects of ambition before him since he had become a Mason, one was to fill the chair of a blue Lodge, the other to preside in a Chapter. He was proud to say that he was now 2nd in the Lodge and, by their confidence, 1st in the Chapter. He had also to thank Comps. Duthie and Wheeler for the assistance rendered, not only to-night but on several other occasions as well. Comp. Duthie expressed the pleasure he had felt in installing a young member of such ability as Comp. Lamb in the chair, and augured well for the prospects of the Chapter. Comp. Wheeler also suitably acknowledged the compliment.

Caledonian of Unity Chapter, No. 73.—On Tuesday, 26th October, a deputation from the P.G.C. of Lanarkshire, consisting of Comps. W. Smith P.G.J., A. McTaggart M.A. P.G.S.E., J. Fraser P.G.S.N., Jas. Balfour P.G. 1st S., G. Thallon P.G.C., G. McDonald P.G.S.B., and J. B. Hardie P.P. Janitor, attended at 73, and after inspecting the books and seeing Chapter opened, the G.S.E. read the minutes he had prepared, expressing the entire satisfaction of the deputation with the state of the books, and the general working of the Chapter. The acting Grand Superintendent said indisposition had prevented Comp. F. A. Barron P.G.G.S. from attending, but he had requested him to say that he regretted this the less as the Chapter had already been known for the excellence of its work and the satisfactory way in which the books were kept, and he had only to add his own and the deputation's entire satisfaction with the state of the Chapter. Comp. Wheeler 1st Principal, thanked Comp. Smith P.G.J. and the rest of the deputation for the kind eulogies they had been pleased to pass on the work; he did not wish to take all the praise to himself, for he thought a good deal of it was due to his predecessor in this office. In some Chapters he had found that after a Companion had passed the first chair he seemed to lose his interest in the Order; he was then glad to be able to inform the P.G. Officer that he had the constant attendance and support of his three immediate predecessors in that chair, so that if any of the subordinate officers were absent he had very little difficulty in getting their places filled, and one of them, Comp. Balfour, made a most efficient S.E. as well as 1st S., when necessary, so that in justice he must attribute part of their success to this assistance, and, in common with the rest of the Chapter, he regretted that it was illness that had prevented Comp. Barron visiting them. But they were deeply obliged to those who had attended. The members of the Provincial deputation then withdrew, and the Chapter was closed, and a Lodge of Mark Masters opened; G. W. Wheeler W.M.M., W. McGregor S.W., J. Kennard J.W., J. Kay S.D., when Bro. D. Broadfoot M.M. of St. John's, 3, was advanced to that degree. A Lodge of Excellent Masters was opened, when Bro. Broadfoot and Bro. D. Anderson, also of St. John's, 3, were instructed in the mysteries of that degree. A R.A.C. was then opened, G. W. Wheeler Z., G. McDonald P.Z. as H. and R. Brodie J. of 79 as J., J. Balfour P.G. 1st S. as 1st S., J. Bannerman Treasurer, E. Arthur S.N., W. McGregor 2nd., Yeal 3rd, when the same two gentlemen were exalted to that 2nd degree, which concluded a lengthy evening's work.

Union and Crown Lodge, No. 103.—Presentation to Bro. Bain P.M. P.G.B.B.—On Friday, 22nd Oct. a large gathering of the friends of Bro. Bain P.M. 103 was held. The Lodge was opened by Bro. W. M. Wright R.W.M., who was supported by Bros. G. Muir D.W., D. Morrison S.M., Wm. Thompson S.W., R. Muir J.W., J. Gilles P.M. Sec., Wm. Cammeron Tyler. There were about 100 brethren present, amongst whom we recognised Bros. J. Johnson, No. 0, P.M. 449, J. Fletcher I.P.M. 34, J. Sinclair P.M. 27 Treasurer of the Provincial Benevolent Fund, J. Morgan R.W.M. 219, J. Thompson P.M. 863, and J. Cunningham R.W.M. 847. After full justice had been done to the usual Loyal and Masonic toasts the R.W.M. said the toast of the evening was "Long life and prosperity to their esteemed friend and P.M., Bro. Bain," they all knew his worth and that he was a most indefatigable worker in the Craft. Not only had he filled the chair of that Lodge with honour to himself and credit to the Craft, but he had also been at all times willing to make himself useful to any other Lodge. Any R.W.M. in the province had only to say he required help, and Bro. Bain had been always willing to render it. To slightly mark their appreciation of these services, a few friends had purchased a handsome gold watch and appendages, which, in the name of the subscribers, he begged Bro. Bain to accept, and trusted he might be long spared to wear it. Bro. Bain said he felt overpowered by the kindness of his friends; he had only been trying to do his duty, first to his Mother Lodge and next to the Craft he loved, whatever he had done had been a labour of love, nevertheless he was extremely obliged to the whole of his friends for this tangible expression of their goodwill, and he would endeavour in the future to be more worthy of their kindness. Several other brethren addressed the Lodge, and with song and sentiment a pleasant evening was spent by all present. On Monday, 25th inst., the regular meeting of the Lodge was held for the nomination of the officers for the ensuing year, after which one brother was passed, and another raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason.

The preliminary business having been transacted, Bro. M. Drummond was called up, and, everything proving satisfactory, he was passed by Bro. J. E. Dickson, and subsequently, acting in accordance with the law of ancient rite, he was raised to the sublime degree of M.M. After a short lecture by the W.M. the Lodge was closed.

Lodge of Prudent Brethren, No. 145.—The first meeting of this ancient Lodge was held on Thursday, the 28th instant, at Freemasons' Hall, Bro. G. Parkiss W.M., E. H. Thiellay S.W., Moritt J.W., John Boyd P.G.P. Treasurer, G. S. States P.G.S. Secretary, Haslett S.D., Loggut J.D., J. Last P.M., and a numerous assemblage of the brethren. The Lodge was opened and the minutes were confirmed. Two brethren were passed to the second degree. Bros. Ryder, Randell, Chapman, Akhurst and Picon were raised to the third degree, and Messrs. W. Walker, L. Bamberger, J. Hill, W. Alexander and C. A. Woods were initiated, the work being well performed. Bro. John Boyd P.G.P. then proposed, and Bro. T. Ball P.M. seconded, that a petition be presented to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales M.W.G.M. praying that the members of this Lodge be allowed the privilege of wearing a Centenary Jewel, subject to the usual regulations, this Lodge having completed its hundredth year. This was unanimously carried. Great credit is due to Bro. John Boyd for his exertions in tracing the history of the Lodge. It was then proposed and carried, "that in future the initiation fee be 10 guineas and the joining fee be seven guineas. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren sat down to a banquet, provided by Bro. Francatelli. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given. Bro. J. Confidence Lodge of Instruction, No. 193.—The usual weekly meeting of this Lodge was held at the White Hart Tavern, Aldermanbury, E.C. Bro. Collet in the chair, Abell S.W., White S.W., J. Constable Treasurer, J. K. Pitt Secretary, E. Gotthoil P.M. Preceptor, Ansell S.D., Blackall J.D. and Turquand I.G. A large number of brethren were present. The ceremony of initiation was rehearsed. The working thereof was tolerably efficient in respect to fluency, but scarcely in conformity with the usual correct interpretation as practised in this Lodge, many of the phrases being rendered in a loose ungrammatical manner, which, in not few instances, destroyed the sense intended to be conveyed in the beautiful ceremony. Brother Collet would do well to correct the unsightly excrescences of his work, and may rest assured that his evidently earnest endeavours will then be more fully appreciated. Some of the sections were then worked, after which the Lodge was closed and the brethren separated.

Orde-Powlett, of the Lennox Lodge, Richmond, Anthony Buckle, of the York Lodge, and William Williams, of the Tudor Lodge, Oldham, which proved successful. Bros. Duncombe, Orde-Powlett and Williams being in attendance, were then exalted to the supreme degree of the Holy Royal Arch. The mystical Lecture was delivered by Comp. Minerva Lodge, No. 250, Hull.—On Wednesday evening last a suite of rooms, lately added to this Lodge, were used for the first time, on which occasion there was a large and brilliant gathering of brethren belonging to this and sister Lodges. The members of the Minerva, finding the space at their disposal somewhat circumscribed, purchased the old chapel lately used by the United Presbyterians, in Dagger-lane, and on its site they have erected a magnificent banquetting room and other convenient offices, with grand staircase and hall, which present a bold and commanding appearance. The banquetting room is 50ft. in length by 24ft. wide, the ceiling being divided into panels by an arrangement of beams of pitch pine, chamfered and moulded, the whole of the work being carried out in the most approved style. Around the walls of this spacious apartment are designs in statuary and emblems of the Craft, while the old decorated windows of the chapel have been inserted in the new walls. Adjoining the hall are comfortable retiring rooms, and other necessary offices, rendering the whole appointments of the Lodge admirably complete. The design and superintendence of the work was entrusted to Bro. F. W. Hagen, architect, of Parliament-street, Hull, and Mr. Alexander Stamp, of Barton-on-Humber, and the whole of the work has been executed in a style that is highly satisfactory and creditable to all concerned. On the re-opening night there was a very large attendance, many brethren from the Humber and Kingston Lodges being present. The working of the Lodge, with Bro. John Brooke as W.M., Bro. C. Newton as S.W., and Bro. Richard Toogood as J.W., was perfect, and elicited universal admiration from all present. At the conclusion of the business a sumptuous banquet was provided, when the customary Craft and other toasts were honoured, and the officers and brethren of Minerva Lodge received the congratulations of all present upon the completion of their very laudable undertaking. The W.M. acknowledged the flattering compliments paid to himself and those who were associated with him in the conduct of the Lodge, and a very agreeable and harmonious evening was enjoyed. Bro. C. H. Hunt ably presided at the pianoforte, and some excellent songs were sung, including one composed expressly for the occasion by Bro. Pulham, and which was much appreciated.

Baker Ashworth P.M. The Lodge was closed in peace and harmony at 9.15 p.m., by the Worshipful Master, after which the brethren sat down to banquet.

St. Barnabas Chapter, No. 475.—This Chapter held an emergency meeting on Thursday, the 14th of October, at the Masonic Hall, Dunstable. Present—Comps. C. W. Scriven Z., McCubbin J., Poynte H., Cawdell E., Howell P.S., Morgan, Sloss, &c. Business—The Chapter was called in emergency in order to lighten the work at the regular meeting in November, when the installation of officers takes place. Bro. Randall, of No. 475 and 1470, having been balloted for, was duly exalted to the supreme degree, all the lectures being given. The M.E.Z. performed his very difficult portion of the ceremony, for the first time, in a manner which called forth hearty expressions of admiration; and it may perhaps be said that few country Chapters would show better working considering the comparatively small number of members on the rolls.

Devereux P.Z. then rose and commented, in most appropriate terms, upon the zeal and assiduity with which Comp. J. Stevens had governed the Chapter as M.E.Z. during the past three years, and proposed that some suitable recognition be made to him, and that the sum of ten guineas be voted from the funds of the Chapter for that purpose, also that a committee be formed, consisting of Comps. Hodges M.E.Z., J. Tolley H., Grisbrook J., G. W. Dixon S.E., and J. Devereux P.Z., to decide as to the form of the testimonial, &c. Comp. Myers a beautiful testimonial, illuminated, on vellum, and handsomely framed, for his efficient services as Preceptor to this Lodge of Instruction. After some very appropriate remarks by the chairman, Bro. Myers responded as follows:—Worshipful Master and Brethren, it is with some amount of diffidence, and I may say, regret, that I now address you—diffidence, because I am aware that there are many brethren who are more competent than myself to discharge the duties I have undertaken as Preceptor of this Lodge of Instruction, and because I am doubtful whether my services deserve so great a mark of your esteem, although it is the consciousness of having endeavoured to do my duty as a Freemason which enables me more fully to appreciate that esteem; and regret because I am unable to do justice in words to adequately thank you for the valuable present you have made me this evening—for it is valuable, morally and intrinsically. I shall always look upon this testimonial with the greatest gratification; and I hope that years hence, when most of you, perhaps, will have P.M. added to your names, it will bring to mind the time when we met here on Saturday evening to instruct each other in the ritual of Freemasonry—and not the least pleasant of my thoughts will be that I then won your good opinion. To Bro. Perkins, W.M. of the Mother Lodge, for his presence and support; to Bro. Bateman, the S.W., as the proposer of the testimonial; to Bro. Weaver the J.W., as the seconder; and to yourself, worthy Sir, for the kind words you have expressed in presenting it to me, I offer my most cordial thanks; likewise to the other brethren who have subscribed, and whose names are engrossed upon it; and I should be wanting in gratitude if I failed to mention Bro. Hubbard's name (although absent), and to thank him for the trouble he has taken in procuring so beautiful a design. Yet it is not to the brethren of this Lodge of Instruction alone that I wish to tender my thanks; there are two brothers here this evening to whom I am indebted for my knowledge of Freemasonry, and whom I thank for the trouble they have taken to instruct me. I need hardly mention their names, they are known to you as having worked the 15 sections in the Lily Lodge of Instruction on several occasions, I allude to Bros. Barnes P.M. and Austen P.M. I am sure that next to having the testimonial presented to themselves they must feel that you have paid them a mark of respect, through me, in the presentation of that testimonial. In again thanking you all for this magnificent proof of your esteem I will conclude by expressing a hope that the Lily Lodge of Instruction will continue to prosper for many years to come. I shall attend the meetings as often as my health will permit; and I now ask you to drink to the health of our chairman, Bro. Kyezor, who has so satisfactorily discharged the duties of the position he has been kind enough to take this evening. Bro. Kyezor responded, and proposed the health of Bro. Perkins, the W.M. of the Mother Lodge, which, with other toasts and songs, ended a most enjoyable evening.

Edwards P.M., who though, comparatively speaking, a young Mason, is thoroughly up to his work, and performed the ceremony in a most effective and masterly style. W. Bro. PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish, has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 112 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, 27 ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most specious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Prof. esor Redwood's for the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been having every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

Freemason's Chronicle;

A WEEKLY RECORD OF MASONIC INTELLIGENCE.

VOL. II.—No. 45. SATURDAY, 6th NOVEMBER 1875. [PRICE THREEPENCE. Registered at the G.P.O. as a Newspaper.

NEW MASONIC TEMPLE AT READING, PENNSYLVANIA.

WE are indebted to the Reading Times and Dispatch for the following particulars respecting the laying of the foundation stone of a new Masonic Temple in that city. As far back as 1865 a Masonic Hall Association for the city of Reading was incorporated, but though the need of a building large enough to meet the ever increasing wants of the Masonic community was conspicuous, no active steps appear to have been taken till April 1873, when a considerable plot of ground was purchased. In July following the ground was broken, and subsequently the cellar walls were set up. In August 1874 work was recommenced, and so vigorously pushed forward that, on the 8th ult., the important ceremony of laying the corner stone was enacted, under the auspices of Grand Lodge Pennsylvania, and in the presence of some five hundred members of the Craft. The hour fixed was noon, and at that time the procession was formed, and moved off in the direction of the New Temple, in the following order. First came the Grand Marshal Jacob Laudenslager, with Assistant Marshal George W. Grant, and the following as aids: Bros. Jacob C. Hogg, 62, F. S. Bernhart, Chandler, 227, Peter Quaring, Teutonia, 367, and William A. Runkle, St. John's, 435. The Ringgold Band came next, and then the Lodges in their order, namely: St. John's Lodge, 435, Franklin Weaver, Marshal; Vaux Lodge, 406, Hamburg, J. Jerome Miller, Marshal; Teutonia Lodge, 367 John H. Fett, Marshal; Williamson Lodge, 307, Womelsdorf, William G. Moore, Marshal; Chandler Lodge, 227, John T. Craig, Marshal; Lodge 62, Levi Moyer, Marshal. Each Lodge marched as follows: Marshal, the Tyler, Entered Apprentice Masons, Fellow Craft Masons, Master Masons, Past Masters, Pursuivant, Deacons, Secretary and Treasurer, Senior and Junior Wardens, Worshipful Master. Then came Bro. E. H. Shearer, Assistant Marshal, Grand Lodge, preceding the officers of the Grand Lodge, who were G. M. Alfred R. Potter, D.G.M. Robert Clark, S.G.W. M. Nesbit, J.G.W. S. E. Ancona, G.T. Thomas R. Patton, G.S. Charles H. Kingston, S.G.D. A. Robeno jun., J.G.D. H. P. John, G.M. Jacob Laudenslager, G.S.B. Henry J. White, G.M.C. James Morrell, jun., A. R. Hall, G.P. Horace Fritz, G.T. H. G. Clarke, G.C. Rev. Giles Bailey. On reaching the Temple the Lodge opened ranks and the Grand Officers were escorted to the front, the Ringgold band playing meanwhile a grand march.

The ceremony, which was very impressively rendered, was then begun, and lasted about an hour. When this was over, the G.M. introduced Bro. Hon. Richard Vaux P.G.M., of Philadelphia, who delivered a very appropriate oration, pointing out the connection between Freemasonry and the mysteries, Egyptian, Greek and other, of the ancients, the objects it has in view, and the grand work it achieves so unostentatiously so and continuously. The benediction was then pronounced by the Grand Chaplain, Bro. Rev. Giles Bailey, after which the procession marched back, and the several Lodges were dismissed. The following, inclosed in a tin box, were placed in the centre of the corner stone:—

Copy of Holy Bible, donated by Ringel and Richards. Copy of the Ahiman Rezon. List of officers of the Grand Lodge of F. and A. M. of Pennsylvania. OUR LITERARY BROTHER.

IT has been truly said that the world knows nothing of its greatest men. Genius is often hidden in obscurity, and some of us, at least, are disposed to lament with the poet, over the mute inglorious Miltons who have lived and died without dropping one spark of their concealed fire. The anonymous system upon which journalism is conducted in this country is rather prejudicial to the interests and the fame of writers. A man may toil on the press for years, and beyond a small circle of literary men he may be as obscure as a simple villager, buried from the world in the heart of an agricultural district. Anonymity, indeed, has its advantages, and under its veil a journalist may write as an advocate, and hold a brief for the public, without fear of being charged with inconsistency. But there are scribblers amongst us who, in spite of the anonymous system, appear to make themselves tolerably well known to the public for whom they cater. False modesty is not one of their failings; they are not ashamed of confessing the authorship of an article or a paragraph, and are very willing to take all the homage a discerning circle of readers may feel inclined to lavish upon them. Such fame as this would be the death of us; but we are, perhaps, too sensitive of the shortcomings of our lucubrations, and too impatient of the half sneering adulation of our friends. We are glad to know that some of the scribblers of the press are possessed of an epidermis that is proof against the shafts of ridicule, and taste bread enough to be pleased with flattery, even when it is laid on with a trowel. The subject of this slight sketch is, in many respects, a remarkable man. Possessed of indomitable perseverance and amazing industry, and sheathed in triple steel, which no arrow of satire can pierce, he is ever ready to push himself to the front, and to spend and be spent in the cause he has at heart. Our Masonic friends would miss him sadly if, by any chance, he were to absent himself from an important anniversary. He is present at every Masonic event of any importance, and usually contrives to push himself into the higher circles of the brotherhood with a display of "cheek" which would be amazing to us if anything our eccentric brother might do could amaze us. We frankly admit that he occupies no mean position in the ranks of Masonry, and that, barring his everlasting note-book, and his affectation of being a journalist, he is highly respected by the Fraternity. He is at home everywhere. You see him, without any feeling of surprise, chatting affably with Provincial G.M.'s, or shaking hands with the Lord Mayor, or pushing his way through the crush at a Civic ball. You go to the Opera, and you find him seated in one of the best places, looking as mystic and as profound behind his eye glasses as if he were the Editor of the Times. You visit the Albert Hall, for the pleasure of seeing a Royal Duke tickle a fiddle into convulsions, and our literary brother "spots" you, and rushes down from his place to shake hands and talk about Mansion House dinners. We know not what Protean garb he may assume when next we run against him in society, but we are certain that we have seen him assume the parts of art and dramatic critic, special reporter, descriptive writer, and paragraphist. He always tries to look the part he plays to perfection, but that horrible note-book, which is ever in his grasp, at once tells an expert that he is acting. An experienced press writer, who visits a public place for the purpose of writing a critique or a descriptive article, never needs the doubtful assistance of pencil and paper. His training has strengthened his memory, and his programme of the proceedings, or his play bill, help him to recal every point upon which he desires to dwell. There are occasions, of course, when it is necessary for a press contributor to note down every word that he hears; but we are not now speaking of mere reporting, but of those higher branches of journalism with which our friend sometimes playfully affects an acquaintance. To do him justice, he shines as a reporter of Lodge Meetings, and here his note-book is, of course, indispensable. He can, indeed, scent a Mason from afar, and even in such un-Masonic events as the swearing-in of the Sheriffs of London, or the election of Lord Mayor, he can find scope for the display of his fine bold Roman hand. In the City, and amongst Civic magnates, he is at home. The Mansion House flings wide its doors to admit our literary brother, and on the 9th November, when the streets are cleared for the Lord Mayor's Show, he can always produce a talisman which opens a way through the ranks of the police. We have seen him at the Lord Mayor's banquet, looking profoundly wise behind his spectacles, with the programme of the songs in his hand, apparently swallowing each note poured forth by the vocalists as if he intended to immortalise them in the next morning's impression of the Times. He has told us that he has passed the carefully guarded portals of the Guildhall without a ticket, and we have believed him. Indeed, if perseverance could enable a man to achieve anything, our worthy brother should be able to perform seeming impossibilities. He never takes "no" for an answer when he desires to pass anywhere. He is the very personification of good temper, and turns aside a harsh speech with a soft answer, like the good man of the Scriptures. Our Masonic friends may occasionally laugh at him, but they are sometimes glad of such fame as he can confer, and do not usually object to see their names in print, with an ornamental appendage in the shape of a string of well earned titles. He is, in truth, the Recording Angel of the Order, and such work as he does has a value of its own, which we gladly recognise. There are minds which can only take in the broad features of passing events, and others which look at everything through a solar microscope. Our literary brother is a man of this latter class, and we have reason to know that he sees much more with every sweep of those mysterious glasses of his, than we could possibly see if we were paid a princely sum to write proper names and Masonic titles by the column. Such a line of composition is, perhaps, not our special gift, but we are conscious of our shortcomings, and shall never dare to tread upon the preserves of men who are our masters in the literary art. We shall never forget our brother's appearance, during the summer months of last year, at a grand Masonic gathering, when the princes of the Order, with their ladies, were present. We were there merely to describe; he was in attendance to record. On the platform, in a post of honour, near the Lord Mayor, our hero, with spectacles on nose, and note-book in hand, was gravely writing down the name of each speaker, while we, content to take our place in the crowd, watched him with silent admiration. Such consummate coolness was indicative of positive genius, of a sort, and we mentally confessed that our devoted brother was intended by nature to be a journalist. We expected that no personal fame would accrue to us from the article which we were commissioned to write; we felt assured that our brilliant Recording Angel would be regarded as the hero of the hour, nor were we at all disappointed. That note-book and those spectacles might have imposed upon any one but an expert. That look of profound wisdom was sufficient to convince the most sceptical that a journalist was present, possessed of talent sufficient for the composition of at least an Edinburgh Review article upon the Talmud, or any other of the abstruse questions, which only addle the brains of meaner critics. We need only add that we returned to our desk a sadder and wiser man. The lesson we learned that day has taught us that effrontery is the surest passport to notoriety, if not to an enduring fame.

MASONIC NUMISMATICS.

From the American Journal of Numismatics.

We copy, below, an article, originally published in "Netter's Literary Letter," No. 4, New York, 1859, to which we have added a few notes. The subject is an interesting one, and deserves more attention than it seems to have received. Within a few years several of the Masonic Lodges in and about Boston have adopted what is known as a "Lodge jewel," which is in nearly every instance a medal struck from a die belonging to the Lodge, and worn, suspended from the lapel of the coat, as a badge of membership. The "St. John's Lodge," established nearly a century and a half ago, have a medal in the form of a shield, bearing the Masonic arms and other significant emblems. "St. Andrew's," founded in 1756, the next in age in Boston, wear a jewel of gold and enamel, upon which is a St. Andrew's cross, and suspended below the medal is a dragon rampant, alluding to the famous old "Green Dragon Tavern," their ancient place of meeting. "Columbian," another very old Lodge, have a jewel of blue enamel and gold, containing a handsome head of Columbia, in high relief, surrounded by a garter, on which are the name of the Lodge, the date of institution, a square and compass, &c., and above are emblems of corn, wine, and oil. "Winslow Lewis Lodge," named in honour of the late distinguished President of the Boston Numismatic Society, wear a somewhat larger medal, on which is struck a device representing Jacob's dream, of the ladder to heaven; below, a scroll inscribed Faith, Hope, Charity; the whole within a ribbon, bearing the name of the Lodge, and the square and compass. Some other Lodges in the vicinity wear similar jewels or medals. In most if not all cases, the Lodge jewels have an obverse struck in a die, while the reverse is plain, or has the owner's name and date of admission to membership engraved upon it.

In the year 1808, on the 24th of June, the corner stone of the Masonic Temple in Philadelphia was laid with appropriate ceremonies, and among the articles deposited in it were a copper Masonic Medal struck in 1790, commemorative of the election of the Prince of Wales as Grand Master (described in the note appended), a silver Medal of Past Grand Master Peter Williamson, the thirty-fourth Grand Master, and at that time Treasurer of the Pennsylvania Grand Lodge, "a gold Masonic Medal 'Keystone,'" and a "gold Masonic Medal (circle)." We have no information of what these last Medals were.

One of the most recent Masonic Medals struck in America, is probably that for the dedication of the new Temple in New York, 2nd June 1875. This is in the form of a shield, and bears on the obverse a view of the Temple (corner of Sixth Avenue and West Twenty-third Street). Above are the words, "Masonic Temple of New York," over them the All-Seeing Eye. Below the Temple, "Dedicated June 2nd, 1875." The reverse has the arms of the Grand Lodge of New York, with the motto, "Holiness to the Lord," and other Masonic emblems—the square, compass, plumb, &c.*

We have before us a curious Masonic Medal, belonging to Mr. Thomas P. Ritchie, of Brookline. It is of silver, apparently struck in a die, and then what would have been the field carefully cut out, leaving the various objects represented, so that they are equally to be distinguished on either side. It may be described as follows:

Obverse.—A circle bearing the words AMOR. HONOR. ET JUSTITIA. The rim is divided into quarters by the letters N. E. S. W., the E. coming at the top, between the words Honor and et. From the bottom of the circle arise two pillars; upon the top of these pillars rests a level; the square and compasses on the Bible, above; the top of the level, and the joint of the compasses being together nearly in the centre of the medal. On the right of these, the sun, a gavel and two crossed pens; on the left, the crescent moon, a plumb and a scroll, perhaps representing a charter: from the top of the plumb diagonally to the foot of the right hand pillar is the twenty-four inch gauge. The same description of the objects inside would apply to the reverse, except that of course the objects are reversed relatively to each other. The reverse of the circle has at the bottom the words SIT LUX ET LUX FUIT, and at the top the All-Seeing Eye, between AM and 5768. It has a loop attached by which it was worn suspended from a ribbon.

* We are informed by a correspondent, Mr. I. F. Wood, to whom we are indebted for this description, that this Medal was issued by Messrs. D. B. Howell and Co., of New York, under the authority of the Grand Lodge, for the benefit of the Widows' and Orphans' Fund, in Gold, at dols. 30, silver at dols. 4.50, bronze at dol. 1, gilt dol. 1, and white metal 50 cents. It was attached to a clasp with pin, and very extensively worn in the dedication procession.

We have no knowledge of the history or origin of this medal. It is evidently upwards of one hundred years old; the motto AMOR. HONOR. ET JUSTITIA is the same as that which was used on the Prince of Wales medal, just alluded to, and also on the Masonic Medal in memory of Washington, struck in 1797*, and may enable us to trace it.

We believe that a catalogue of Masonic Medals would be found to possess considerable interest, and prove to be much more extensive than Mr. Norton seems to have thought, in 1859. Perhaps some one of the readers of the Journal will prepare such a list, or send description of any Masonic Medal he may have, that they may be preserved in your pages for the use of some future labourer in this interesting field.

W. T. R. M.

Mr. Norton's article is as follows:

Few persons, even members of the Fraternity, in this country are aware of the number of Masonic Medals which have been struck during the last hundred and twenty-five years, by the Lodges of Freemasons or by individual members of the Society; nor of the interest taken in this subject, more especially by the European Lodges, many of whom have large and valuable cabinets. We propose to give a brief sketch of this branch of Numismatics.

The oldest Masonic Medal known, is mentioned by Schroeder, in his "Materialen," I. 37; by Rödel, in his article on "Medals;" by Zacharias, in his "Numotheca Numismatica Latomorum," I.; and by Mersdorf, p. 116; and is a silver medal of Lord Charles Sackville, Duke of Middlesex, who in 1733, without authority, founded a Lodge at Florence, in commemoration of which event this medal was struck. Zacharias asserts that the Lodge Minerva, at Leipsic, was in possession of a specimen; but Mersdorf, who had a leaden copy of it, states that it has disappeared, and that the only original specimen is preserved in the Hammerstein Collection. Mersdorf also mentions a Roman medal of 1742. Hamburg next claims priority in regard to the antiquity of her Masonic Medals. The oldest, bearing the legend "Facire superiori eodem," has no date, but in the Essen Catalogue is attributed to the year 1740; a second dates from 1742, a third from 1743, and a fourth from 1745—all of silver. Besides these Hamburg medals, Mersdorf mentions a bronze Frankfort medal, of the Lodge "Einigkeit," of 1742; a Brunswick medal of silver and gold, of 1744; and one of 1745—which, under the name of "Freemasons' Ducats," appear to have been used as school premiums. He also mentions three from Halle, of 1744, 1745, and 1747, the only ones ever struck in that city. The above comprise all the German medals struck during the first half of the eighteenth century.

According to Mersdorf, the oldest English medals are—one of 1760, without name of place or coinage; one of Exeter, 1766; one of London, without date, and another of 1766.

Holland, one from the Hague of 1779.

Sweden has medals of 1746, 1753, 1762, 1768, 1780, 1785, 1787, 1792, and only two others since the commencement of the present century.

The Russian Medals are limited to four, of the dates 1775, 1780, 1781; and in Moldavia we find one struck at Jassy, in 1774.

Italy offers but two medals of the eighteenth century,—the Florentine medal of 1778 and the Roman of 1742, both before alluded to.

Two Spanish medals were coined at Madrid, in 1809 and 1811, according to Mersdorf.

North America has but one medal of the last century,—struck in 1797.‡

The Masonic Medals of Asia are all very modern, and are derived from the Lodges established by the English in the East Indies.

In regard to the total number of Masonic Medals, Thory, in his "Histoire de la Fondation du Grand Orient de France," p. 336, estimates it at 200, commencing with the year 1720. Zacharias, in his "Numotheca," gives drawings of 48 different medals. Mersdorf mentions in all 234, besides 9 others which cannot be strictly termed Masonic,—as, for instance, a medal of Melancthon. The total is made up as follows:—Germany, 90; England, 14; France, 161; Holland and Belgium, 26; Denmark, 1; Sweden, 11; Russia, 4; Moldavia, 1; Italy, 9; Spain, 2; America, 5; Asia, 4.

The first cabinet of Masonic Medals was commenced by the Lodge "Eintracht," at Vienna, about the year 1784. Other collections were subsequently made at Rostock, Leipsig, and Hamburg. Private collections were also in the possession of Bros. von Eck, Zacharias, von Hammerstein, and Mersdorf. The largest cabinet at present is that of the Prov. Gr. Lodge of Mecklenburg, at Rostock, and contains 324 specimens of medals, exclusively Masonic, besides a number of mystical and other medals. The next in importance are the cabinets of the Lodges Apollo and Minerva, at Leipsig. In this country, the Lodge Pythagoras, at Brooklyn, L.I., has a collection of about 200 specimens.

A Masonic Halfpenny Token, of 1790 commemorative of the election of the Prince of Wales as Grand Master,* appears to have been in circulation as money, and is mentioned by Appel, Thory, and Zacharias. There are several varieties of it extant, four of which differ only in the inscription around the edge, viz.:—1. Masonic Token, I. Scotchley fecit, ... x; 2. Half-penny, payable at the Black Horse, Tower-hill; 3. A Masonic Token, J. Skotchley, Birmingham, fecit; 4. Masonic Token, Nitchley fecit, 1794.

A fifth variety has on the obverse a square and compass, with the legend "Pro bono publico." On the reverse, the initials "T. H. B." the date "1796," and the legend "East Grimstead Half-penny." Around the edge, "Payable at T. H. Boorman."

* This Medal is No. XLVII. in Mr. Appleton's catalogue, and is there described as follows: "G. WASHINGTON, PRESIDENT, 1797. Bust of Washington facing the left. Rev. AMOR. HONOR. ET JUSTITIA. G. W. C. G. M. A group of Masonic emblems. Brass. Size 22." The date 1797 has no Masonic allusion, but refers to his retiring from the Presidency. G. W. C. G. M. stands, perhaps, for George Washington General Grand Master. The Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, at a special meeting in January 1780, proposed to the other Grand Lodges Washington's election to such a position, but the suggestion did not meet with favour and nothing more was heard of it. This fact must have been known to any one likely to have produced a Masonic Medal in America, and we are inclined to think from the motto, that perhaps the dies for this as well as those for Mr. Ritchie's medal were made in England. Another Washington Masonic Medal is described in Mr. Appleton's List as follows: CXXXV. GEORGE WASHINGTON; head of Washington, facing the right, below G. W. L. all in a circular frame, outside which, at top an eagle, in his beak a long ribbon inscribed TALEM FERENT NULLUM SECLA FUTURA VIRUM; about the ribbon forty-five stars; at bottom a trophy of flags, guns, drum, cannon, balls, &c., on which is the shield of the United States. Rev. NON NOBIS SOLUM SED TOTO MUNDO NATI MDCCCLIX: a wreath of two palm-branches in which are Masonic emblems. Bronze. Size, 32." For whom was this struck?

† Mr. Appleton, in his list of Franklin Medals (Journal of Numismatics, Vol. VII., p. 40), describes a French medal of Franklin, as follows: — "IV. BENJ. FRANKLIN MINIST PLENT DES ESTATS UNIS DE L'AMERIQ., SEPT. MDCCLXXXIII; bust of Franklin, facing the left; below, BRENIER. Rev. DE LEURS TRAVAUX NAITRA LEUR GLOIRE; in exergue DES NEUF SOEURS; at the right, F. S.; on a rocky hill a circular temple, within, and near which are the Nine Muses at work. Silver, size 19." We presume this is Masonic, and that the "DES NEUF SOEURS" refers to the "Lodge of the Nine Muses" of Paris, who, in 1829, struck another medal in honour of Franklin, described in the same list; "XII. BENJAMINUS FRANKLIN; bust of Franklin, facing the left. Rev. LES MAÇ.'. FRANÇ.'. A FRANKLIN M.'. DE LA L.'. DES 9 SOEURS O.'. DE PARIS 5778. 5829 PINGRET F.; the Masonic emblem of Jehovah in a triangle, surrounded by rays, within a serpent coiled in a circle, and around this a pair of compasses and a square, entwined by olive-branches; above, are seven stars; at the left, a mallet, and at the right a trowel. Bronze, size 26."

‡ This, from the date, was the Washington Medal.

* This Token or Medal is illustrated by a cut in Mr. Norton's "Literary Letter." It may be described as follows: Obv. A shield bearing on a field gules a chevron between three oaxlies argent. Crest, a dove proper on a sphere. Supporters, two beavers proper. Motto, on a ribbon beneath the shield, AMOR, HONOR ET JUSTITIA. Legend, 24 NOV 1790 PRINCE OF WALES ELECTED G M. — This was doubtless intended to represent the arms of the Society of Freemasons, as used by the Grand Lodge of England, which, as given by Burke, differ from the above in having the field sable, and bearing a pair of compasses sable extended "chevronwise" on the chevron, but having no motto. The differences, except the last, may be owing to carelessness in the engraving.

Rev. A triangle, within which is an angel, resting his left hand upon a pillar, and pointing with his right to the letter G, within the upper angle, from which issue rays; behind the angel are clouds; in the lower corners of the triangle are the square and compass on the right and a book on the left; around the sides of the triangle WISDOM, STRENGTH & BEAUTY. Legend, SIT LUX ET LUX FUIT.

The regular Convocation of Grand Chapter was held on Wednesday, the 3rd November, at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, Lincolns-Inn-Fields. Comps. S. Rawson as G.Z., H. Sandeman G.H., Capt. Platt G.S.E., Major Creaton G.S.N., J. A. Rucker G.P.S., W. Speed 1st Asst., R. Grey 2nd Asst., T. Fenn G.S.B., E. J. Macintyre G.R., J. Smith as G.D.C., B. Head, N. Bradford, A. Holman, J. Nunn, H. J. P. Dumas, H. Muggeridge, J. Glaisher, J. Percy, Leith, F. A. Philbrick, Q.C., R. Hollom, Hyde Pullen, W. S. Gover, John Boyd, J. J. Case, H. Massey, G. Newman, White, C. F. Hogard, G. Leman, W. Stephens, Herbert Dicketts, W. Hammond, W. F. Nettleship, A. Ridgway, W. Young, Cochrane, C. W. Nohemer, J. Scox, J. L. Thomas, R. Spencer, G. Lambert, &c. The G.S.E. read the minutes of the former Convocation, which were confirmed. All the petitions placed on the agenda paper were granted; these were announced in our last issue. The Grand Chapter was then closed in due form.

The Emulation Chapter of Improvement will hold its annual festival at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, on Friday, the 26th inst., on which occasion Bro. J. B. Monckton, President of the Board of General Purposes, will preside.

A crowded and fashionable audience was present on Monday evening, at St. James's Hall, at Miss Emily Mott's concert. The popularity of the fair cantatrice, combined with a very attractive programme, explains this. Miss Emily Mott's singing is greatly improved, growing years bringing confidence and power to her vocalisation. She sang "Flowers of Friendship," "The Minstrel Boy," and "Trust Her Not," each song being deservedly encored. Miss Blanche Cole, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and Mr. Sydney Smith, solo pianist, contributed some excellent songs. Mr. Sims Reeves was never in better voice. His singing "The Requital," "The Bay of Biscay," and "Tom Bowling," created a furore. Bro. Fred. Godfrey's band, of the Coldstream Guards, was thoroughly appreciated, and was one of the great features of this enjoyable musical treat.

MASONIC BOYS' SCHOOL.

We have received a number of letters on the subject of the Boys' School Management, and though we are the reverse of anxious to keep this controversy before the public, we feel it is only just to our correspondents to allow them the opportunity of expressing their views. With reference to the proposal emanating from one of them, that a testimonial should be raised for Bro. Rev. O. G. D. Perrott, we publish the letter out of regard for our esteemed correspondent, but we feel it our duty to point out the act of publication must, under no circumstances, be construed into a departure from that strict neutrality we have so carefully striven to observe.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

2nd November 1875.

SIR,—As a Steward of 1870, for the Boys' School Festival, and a Life Governor in virtue of my donation then made to the funds of the Institution, I received the current report, that for 1869; and have now examined it in order to find how far it bears out Bro. Tew's statement.

I regret to say that, as far as the expenditure on the maintenance of the School for the year 1869 is concerned, Bro. Tew's assertions are very far below the mark; so that, if the state of things at the Boys' School is bad now, it was worse, to a considerable extent, five years ago.

In the year 1869, the Secretary seems to have received as his personal share of the expenditure as much as £817! The items are as follow:—

Provincial travelling expenses	67	12	6
Commission (a second item, on p. 40) ...	150	0	0

Printing and stationery	315	3	5
Making a total of	£1,402	13	11

spent in secretarial and clerical expenses during a single year; to which might fairly be added some of the following:—

Advertisements	£39	6	5
Pension to past Secretary	100	0	0
Examination fees	48	19	3
Recreation of boys during holidays ...	23	14	4
Hire of omnibus for Committee ...	19	10	0
Election expenses	18	11	0
Gratuities, grants and outfits to boys leaving the Institution	60	0	0
Making a grand total of	£1,713	14	11

of actual solid expenditure confined specially to the year, and leaving nothing to show, as building does, but necessarily to be repeated to some extent every year.

This heavy office expense is very nearly a third of all the annual expenses of the whole establishment, large as they are. The following was the total expense of the year:—

Secretarial, clerical and miscellaneous office expenses, apart from the Institution	£1,713	14	11
Salaries of 5 Masters, 1 Matron, 1 wardrobe keeper, 1 Chaplain, 1 Medical Officer and 1 Drill Instructor	726	0	8
Wages of all the servants	281	9	0
Provisions	1,277	15	8
Clothing and repairs	703	18	7
Furniture, linen, &c.	78	2	1
Earthenware, glass, &c.	1	5	4
Coals, gas, and water	341	13	9
Rates and taxes (no rent)	154	17	3
Miscellaneous	177	17	6
Grand total	£4,447	15	9

All this was money spent during the year for the purposes of the year; and on the then average of 106 boys amounts to £51 10s per head. Comment is superfluous.

Your obedient servant,

A WEST YORKSHIRE LIFE GOVERNOR.

[Our correspondent must bear in mind that his letter cuts both ways, and that as between 1869 and 1874 the figures in the two accounts show a marked reduction for expenses of management.—EDITOR FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.]

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

Pontefract, 2nd November 1875.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The best reply to Mr. Binckes's assurances, that "the accounts of the Boys' School are stated and set forth in a manner sufficiently clear for any unprejudiced enquirer to spot expenditure under every head," is the subjoined letter in answer to a communication from the Secretary in last week's Freemason. That he should again commit himself to such blunders must be perfectly conclusive to the mind of every "unprejudiced enquirer" as to the manner in which the accounts are kept. We have no doubt the Secretary will assure your readers that we are in error; let the proofs be adduced.

The Secretary, in his letter, admits the correctness of our calculations, and we find from the Reports for the last three years, that the amount for "gratuities" (only 10s per boy), during this period comes to £31 viz: £9 in 1872, £4 10s in 1873, and £17 10s in 1874; whereas, in his letter of last week, the Secretary accounts for only £18 10s, and this, too, incorrectly, as only 37 boys, according to Reports, left between January 1872 and December 1874, two at least, of whom (there were probably more) did not receive the "gratuity," so that we have only 35 boys with the money award of 10s, or £17 10s: adding to this "the most unaccountable" (as the Secretary terms it) charge of £1 5s for silver medal, we have to subtract £18 15s from our correct total of £314 5s, which gives £295 10s to be accounted for, and not £294 10s as shown in Mr. Binckes's last letter.

While the total of £9, £4 10s and £5 is, as proved, wrong; each item, according to the Reports, giving numbers of boys leaving from time to time is also wrong.

At the top of third column, page 481, in last week's "FREEMASON," we observe quoted together "Grants and Gratuities," whilst in the three Reports before us, "Gratuities to Boys on leaving Institution," are put down as one item, separate and distinct from "Grants and Outfits for Boys on leaving Institution," some three or four lines below the former item; we do not understand the reason for this confusion, of what hitherto had always been treated as quite distinct. The "Grants and Outfits," for 1872 were £110 according to 1872 Report and Sec.'s letter,

" 1874 " 51 5s " 1874 " but according to

Mr. Binckes's last letter were £62 10s, whilst the item for "Gratuities" only, according to 1874 Report, was £17 10s, which the Secretary now says was only £5; here, then, we have a difference of £12 10s.

A little lower down we are besought to attend to the three annexed statement, with an obvious inference from incorrect data. Now, the very first item of this statement is wrong, according to the Reports for 1872 and 1873 (two editions of the latter), from these three books George Augustus Frederick How is credited with £5 5s, and the total of page 37 of 1873 Report, published in 1874 is £50 5s and not £50 as the Secretary gives it.

As regards four of the nine blunders pointed out by us the Secretary styles them "Clerical errors," though perpetrated a second time in the June edition of 1873 Report; we hardly think your readers will be disposed to regard so lightly errors, involving a sum of £20, in so simple a matter as the account of appropriation of three or four hundred pounds, and we feel we were not far wrong in warning the readers of our Pamphlet against them. Still lower down we have a reference to page 48 of 1874 Report: we turn, accordingly, to the page and find, not £47 10s, but £37 10s for "Amount of grant not previously made or ascertained," to which sum we suppose must be added the £5 for marine outfit from "Fund for the advancement of boys on leaving the Institution." As one instance of proving an impossibility, "Samuel Collingwood's" grant is addduced; The Secretary informs us that £5 were granted on 6th June 1873, and, as we believe, all such grants are made by the General Committee, who always meet on a Saturday, this Committee, according to Mr. Binckes's data, see Calendar 1873, must, in the month of June of that year, have met on a Friday; we find, moreover, that Samuel Collingwood is credited in the Report for 1872 with £5, so that, if the grant was not formally made till some day in June 1873, it must have been given to the lad without the proper sanction. We observe the Secretary admits a discrepancy of £3, even according to his own reckoning, in which, including dates, we have pointed out twelve inaccuracies.

In Report for 1874, under Stock account, a balance is stated as due to the Secretary, though not shewn in the 1873 account: Bro. Cox's Canonbury Medal in 1874 Report is, in one place, page 41, put down at £4, in another, page 53, at £4 4s; in 1873 Report, pages 34 and 53, Bros. Winn and Cox's Prize Money is put down at £17 18s 6d, of which sum only £9 9s appear to have been awarded.

We could point out many other discrepancies did we not feel that we have already trespassed too much on the space available in your columns, and we deem it due to our correspondents to state that their valued assistance has enabled us to detect several errors.

We are, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

(Signed) THOMAS HILL TEW.
O. G. D. PERROTT, M.A.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In all probability the majority of your readers will be of opinion that you have, on the whole, dealt tolerably fairly with both parties in the remarks you have thought proper to offer on the extraordinary Pamphlet of Messrs. Tew and Perrott. Equally probably you will think me very unreasonable if

I venture to state that, in some respects, I do not accept your strictures as satisfactory and deserved. This is more especially with reference to your unequivocal condemnation of the language of the two letters marked Nos. 5 and 6. To justify them requires, I admit, the existence of very strong provocation, and I contend that the provocation I received not only justified, but demanded, the use of the strongest language I could employ. This leads me to notice the position advanced in Part I., p. 8, paragraph number 1, "The Masters have had a very bad time of it at the School, and that the Principal Master has been kept in entire subjection to the Secretary, by the Secretary." To the latter portion of this statement I can only give the most express contradiction, and I assert most positively that no attempt at "subjection" was ever made or contemplated. The first portion is true enough if referable to the duration of Mr. Perrott's rule, than which nothing can be imagined more harassing or tyrannical. This appears, to a great extent, from the letters of some of the Assistant Masters, copies of which I forward you, and which may be had on application by any one interested in the controversy.

You remark, with reference to my denials of the specious statements of Messrs. Tew and Perrott, that "assertion is not argument," that, "denial is not disproof." I say, with reference to the charges alleged against me, that "assertion is not proof." In what manner can you deal with an accuser who contents himself with iterating charges which have been thoroughly investigated and disproved? and who follows this up by denying the statement that "the Secretary put to each witness the questions that follow." Those questions, and the facts and circumstances connected therewith, will be found at pp. 7 and 8 of my "Reply," and the members of the Committee present at the investigation can best judge between the statement of Mr. Perrott (for his coadjutor could know nothing of these occurrences, save by hearsay) and myself. I repeat:—

That the questions were put as stated by me.

That the answers given were as recorded by me.

That Mr. Perrott's reply to the chairman, who enquired as to the reasons for such baseless accusations being brought by him against the Secretary, is given by me in the ipsissima verba used.

That immediately on the decision of the Committee being announced, Mr. Mallam (since then the champion of Mr. Perrott) proposed a vote of unabated confidence in the Secretary, which was adopted by acclamation.

That Mr. Mallam subsequently expressed to me the satisfaction he experienced at being able to propose such a vote, adding, "that he had come to the Committee thoroughly prejudiced against me."

In bringing this serious charge it will be at once apparent that Mr. Perrott took the initiative in hostility, by seeking to not only lower, but to ruin me in the estimation of those whose confidence I enjoyed, and this, I firmly believe, in pursuance of a set purpose formed by him from the date of his election, consistently followed down to the time of his retirement, and since then pursued with unrelenting and unscrupulous vindictiveness.

A few words on the question of the "missing" amount for outfits and the grants to "James Gasson."

As regards the latter, Messrs. Tew and Perrott, in their letter to you, say—"Mr. Binckes, unfortunately for himself, adduces the case of James Gasson." Why "unfortunately?" They evidently wish it to be believed that I entered the payment of £10, such payment not having been made. I explained the mode of payment in three sums of £5 each. Beaten upon that point, they now cite an acknowledged error in the date of his leaving the Institution as another charge. Granted that, in the Report for 1865, the date was given "28th October 1872," the mistake was subsequently ascertained and corrected to 1871.

My rule always has been, and is,—When I commit an error to acknowledge it at once, and amend it, not to attempt an elaborate, Jesuitical vindication, as is the practice of Mr. Perrott, when dictated in a wilful misstatement. (See note to letter 22, p. 38.)

With reference to the "outfits" and the "missing amount of £141 15s," which, by Messrs. Tew and Perrott, I am accused of misappropriating (nothing less can, by any possibility, be inferred from p. 29), I not only repeat my "indignant denial" of so foul a calumny, but am prepared with a statement of every particular of each grant, and to produce the receipt by each boy, or by the tradesman supplying him, for the amount of each grant. You say "a charge of financial mismanagement is a grave one to make," that "I must go a step further than denial, and adduce rebutting evidence." Will the production of all these vouchers suffice? Again you say, "it is in human nature that a man should defend his own honour warmly." What degree of warmth will you allow me, in repudiating the vilest slander that has ever been uttered to my prejudice? I only wish I had the power to "put in every honest hand a whip to lash the rascals naked through the world."

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

London, 2nd November 1875. FREDERICK BINCKES.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—A few months ago you were good enough to insert a few remarks of mine about the lamentable condition of our Boys' School. Since then, according to the pamphlet written by Bros. Tew and Perrott, nothing appears to have been done by the Committee to vindicate their improved action, beyond the recent assurances of Bro. Binckes, "that all is well." The startling figures of the pamphleteers are either "wrong or right," and as you justly observe, in your able leader of last week, it is the duty of the Committee to prove them wrong. Part 3 clearly proves that the late Head Master had not fair play, and on this ground I feel sure the brethren of England will stand up as one man to protect a brother who evidently had much to contend with and, feeling this, well knowing the serious loss he must have incurred, I shall be happy to form some kind of monetary testimonial for Bro. Perrott, and would gladly subscribe my £10 10s for such a purpose, feeling assured others would follow on knowing the true facts of the whole case.

I am, yours truly and fraternally,

"A LOVER OF FAIR PLAY."

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF GLASGOW.

A PROVINCIAL Grand Lodge was opened on Thursday, 28th October, at St. Mark's Hall, Glasgow, by Bro. F. A. Barrow D.P.G.M., Wm. Bell R.W.M. 34 S.W., G. McDonald J.W., A. Mc Taggart M.A. P.G.S., G. Sinclair P.G. Treas. of Benevolent Fund, J. Gilles P.M. 103 P.G.S.D., G. Thallon P.M. 362 P.G.J.D., R. Robb M., J. Fraser A.M., Jas. Bolfour P.M. 332 P.G.D. of C., J. Millar P.M. 418 D. of M., Wm. Phillips P.G.S.B., A. Bain P.M. 103 P.G.B.B., J. W. Burns R.W.M. 87 P.G.I.G., and J. B. Hardie P.G. Tyler, with a full attendance of the Masters and Wardens of nearly every Lodge in the province. The Secretary read the minutes of the last quarterly communication, which were passed, after which Bro. G. Sinclair read the report of the Benevolent Fund Committee, from which it appeared that six widows had been relieved during the quarter. The P.G.M. wished to direct the attention of the members to two questions he was about to bring before the Grand Lodge, at the next meeting in Edinburgh; one was on the delegation of duties by some P.G.M.'s to inferior officers or private members, contrary to Grand Lodge laws; the other was the necessity of the Grand Lodge seeing that its bye-laws were properly observed. On the motion of Bro. Mitchell R.W.M. of 102, seconded by J. S. Scott R.W.M. 419, it was unanimously resolved to memorialise the Grand Lodge to see that all the Lodges conformed to the Constitutions, by not conferring more than one degree at one time. An opinion was also expressed that it was unmasonic to make gentlemen who were residing in another province, especially if it were done at a less fee than was charged in their own province. Several questions were asked as to the status of affiliated and honorary members in Lodges. The P.G.M. ruled that an honorary member could not fill any office, and affiliated members could only do so if they paid the full affiliation fees, according to the bye-laws of the Lodge. With respect to the status of Installed Masters, he held that it would be desirable to follow the example of their English brethren, but at present their position was not very clearly defined, the Grand Lodge not having passed any law on the subject. There being no further business, the Provincial Grand Lodge was then closed in due form.

MASONRY IN QUEBEC.

THE following is a verbatim extract from the Quebec Daily Mercury of the 9th ult.:—The Masonic Hall was last night the scene of an interesting ceremony: the presentation of a magnificent set of Masonic jewels and regalia to Mr. Dunbar, Q.C., whose term of office as Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Quebec has expired. The Past Grand Master's chain collar is of gold, beautifully engraved and chased, formed of broad open-work links of oblong form, alternating with pointed stars, each link containing a monogram of the initials of the Grand Lodge of Quebec. The star to which the pendant jewel is attached has the raised letter, "Q," in gold upon it. The jewel itself is a gem of artistic workmanship, made of solid polished gold, and represents the compass extended to 45 degrees, with the segment of a circle at the points. The riband which attaches it when worn on undress occasions is of dark blue ribbed silk, about the breadth of those used for military medals, and it also has a gold clasp fixed in the same way. There are also blue satin gauntlets profusely embroidered in the richest gold lace, and having the insignia of the compass and segment of circle worked in bold relief on the front. The apron is the most gorgeous worn by any Masonic officer; it is ornamented with the blazing sun embroidered in gold, in the centre, on the edging the pomegranate and lotus, with the seven eared wheat in each corner and also on the fall; all is gold embroidery with fringe of gold bullion. The whole regalia came from the renowned Masonic furnishers, Spencer and Co., Queen-street, London. The cost was about 250 dols. The idea of testifying the regard in which Mr. Dunbar is held by his brother Freemasons in the district of Quebec and Three Rivers occurred when he so successfully took part in promoting the amicable settlement of the disputes which had arisen between the Grand Lodge of Canada and the Grand Lodge of Quebec. His recent elevation to the honourable and distinguished position of Grand Master caused those who had charge of the subscriptions to suggest the appropriateness of presenting him with the jewels and regalia his high office demands. The presentation was made in the presence of a very large number of the brethren, including many of the oldest Freemasons in the city. The recipient of the testimonial was addressed by Right Worshipful Bro. Thompson, who in eulogistic terms referred to his services to the Craft in organising the Grand Lodge of Quebec, as Deputy Grand Master for four years, and lastly as Grand Master. Mr. Dunbar replied briefly, expressing his deep sense of the compliment paid him. He said he felt that no words could express his thanks for this generous kindness from those amongst whom he lived and who should know him best. After other complimentary addresses the large assemblage dispersed, and the occasion is one which will long be memorable in the Masonic annals of Quebec.

Freemasonry: its Secrecy and Relation to Faith and Worship. An Oration delivered before the Provincial Grand Lodge of Devon, on the occasion of the Dedication of the Masonic Hall, Bideford, 13th October 1875. By Brother Rev. Thomas Russell, P. Pro. G.C. Oxon., G.J.W. Devon, W.M. of the Lodge of Benevolence, No. 489, Bideford. Printed by Request. The Gazette Office, High-street, Exeter.

We are by no means surprised that Bro. the Rev. T. Russell should have been invited to publish the address he delivered at the recent dedication of the Masonic Hall, at Bideford. Regarded merely as a composition, it is a most admirable essay. But in defending Masonry from the base aspersions of its numerous enemies, our Rev. Brother has adopted a tone that harmonises well with the purposes of the Craft. Admitting that our Charitable Institutions and our known loyalty to the Sovereign are worthy of the highest praise, he nevertheless points out that, after all, these are merely the ornaments of Freemasonry. The line of defence which should be universally adopted is placed on still higher grounds. Our secrecy, for instance, is not the secrecy which dreads the light of day. The State knows well enough who and who are not Masons, for the law requires that the members of our Order should be registered. Our laws are published to all the world, and if there are, or have been, backsliders among us, that should no more be cast in our teeth than the crimes of Christians in the teeth of individual Christians. We are loyal to the State, and believe in a personal God, to whom we shall be hereafter accountable for our actions. It is absurd, then, to hold that because we admit indiscriminately within our ranks those who profess this faith, though differently, we are therefore an irreligious body. We have more than once expressed ourselves similarly, and quite as emphatically, though the manner of our so doing has very probably been less happy and less ornate. We thank our Rev. Brother for having afforded us anopportunity of reading and commenting on his address, which deserves a high place in this class of Masonic literature.

The Craft that has Weather'd the Storm. Words by Bro. Dr. O'Macgregor Edwardes, 1107. Music by Bro. Sherwin, 1107, 913, 1076, Published by Bro. George Kenning, 1, 2 and 3, Little Britain, and 198, Fleet-street, London.

This is far above the average of Masonic songs, both as regards the words and the music. Our readers, who may bear in mind our frequent references to the general want of taste, and even, in many instances, of sense, in the various ballads, &c., &c., which, till now, have passed muster among the Craft—we presume in the absence of any better—will find, in this case at all events, a good song, worthy of a foremost place among the few that are really respectable. The words run smoothly and tunefully; the air is melodious, and there is a good chorus, a matter of no small importance, considering it will be mostly sung at those agreeable gatherings which usually follow our Lodge meetings. This chorus is worth reproducing here; indeed, had we not so many claims upon our space, we should have given the song in extenso. However, its general merits may be gleaned from the evidence herewith.

"Then a song and a shout, let them gaily ring out,
As we drink in Masonic due form,
To the officers true, and the staunch gallant crew,
Of the Craft that has weather'd the storm."

We imagine "them," in the first line, must be a misprint for "us;" it certainly reads more in harmony with the next line—Then a song and a shout let us gaily ring out, As we drink, &c., &c. Any musical brother who may be on the look out for a new song will, we feel sure, derive much pleasure, if he purchases "The Craft that has Weather'd the Storm."

The Bye-laws of the York Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, No. 236 (held at the Masonic Hall, Duncan-place, York); to which is added a short History of the Lodge and of the Ancient Grand Lodge of all England. York: Printed by F. R. Delittle, corner of Railway-street and Micklegate.

We think it very desirable that every Lodge that possesses records stretching back to any distance of time should entrust to some capable member the task of arranging and publishing them. The York Lodge, the case before us, is an illustration. This Lodge has nearly completed a century of existence, having been warranted in July 1777, by Sir Thomas Tancred, Pro Grand Master for the County and City of York, under the authority of the Grand of Lodge England. It was originally known as the "Union Lodge," but in 1870, it assured, with the sanction of the M.W.G.M., its present title. There are now 140 subscribing members on the Lodge roll, and we cordially endorse the wish of the writer that "this representative of Masonry in the ancient City of York may long continue to flourish, and may be the instrument of disseminating the great and glorious principles of our noble institution to future generations." In addition, we have a history of the "Grand Lodge of England," and this contains much that is highly interesting to those members of the Craft who delight in studying the early history of our Order. The account of the York Lodge was, we are told, compiled by Bro. Joseph Todd P.M. P.P.S.G.W., and that of Ancient Grand Lodge by Brother William Cowbery P.M. P.P.S.G.W., who have accomplished their task with marked success. Certainly Yorkshire, and doubtless, the whole world of Masonry will regard the publication of these and similar records with great satisfaction.

CONSECRATION OF THE MASONIC HALL AT BARTON.

From the The Hull and Lincolnshire Times.

Some five months ago we recorded the circumstances connected with the laying of the foundation stone of a new Masonic Hall, which had been determined upon by the brethren of the St. Matthew's Lodge, No. 1477, of Free and Accepted Masons; and on Wednesday 27th ult. we had pleasure in "assisting" at the ceremony of dedicating that building to the noble purposes for which it has been designed. It is not too much to say that upon the foundation laid last May a superstructure has been raised, perfect in all its parts, and honourable to the builder. The site of the new structure is on the Brigg Road, where it will, in future years, be admired as an ornament to the town, and amongst the most handsome public buildings of which Barton can boast. Although a very "young" Lodge, the brethren of St. Matthew's boast of a long and distinguished line of ancestors; for, as a correspondent recently informed our readers, a band of brothers, bearing the name of the patron saint upon its banner, flourished here as far back as the commencement of the present century. In 1778 the St. Matthew's Lodge, No. 406, was founded in Barton—being at the time the only Lodge in the province of Lincolnshire. It appears to have flourished for a number of years, in perfect conformity with the ancient usages of the Craft, most of the towns and villages in the northern division of the county being represented in its membership; but some years ago, for reasons which do not appear to be very distinctly set forth, the Lodge collapsed, and the name of St. Matthew's disappeared from the list of Lodges until October 1873. In that month Bro. Colonel Taylor, of Burnham Manor, undertook the laudable work of resuscitating the Lodge, surrounding himself with a trusty band of officers, who were readily assisted by experienced members of the Craft in Hull and various parts of the province of Lincolnshire. Under Colonel Taylor's Mastership, the Lodge meetings were held in the Volunteers' Hall; but so popular did the new movement become—especially since the installation of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales as M.W. Grand Master of England—that the brethren felt the necessity of casting about them for a more suitable "local inhabitation" in which they could more thoroughly and perfectly carry on their operations. The success which attended this effort is only what might have been expected from the energy and spirit which were thrown into the movement; and we congratulate Bro. Swallow, and the officers by whom he has been so ably supported, upon the completion of this excellent work before their terms of office have expired. The building, which on Wednesday week last was consecrated to the purposes of Masonry, is a credit to them and the town, and the possession of such a structure will, no doubt, give a fresh impetus to Masonry, which has already become so deservedly popular in the province. The building is of white stock bricks, with red brick pillars and arches, and contains on the ground floor a library and banqueting-room, 24ft. 3in. by 22ft. 9in., and a Tyler's residence, with spacious kitchens, fitted with suitable cooking apparatus, and other conveniences. There is also a cloak-room on the ground floor, and the whole building has been admirably fitted with a heating apparatus of the most approved description. On the first floor is the Lodge room, of the same dimensions as the banquetting room, and adjoining it are waiting and robing-rooms, and all other necessary offices. The structure is in the modern classic style of architecture, having a frontage to the Brigg Road of 25ft., and a depth of 44ft. Bro. W. H. Wellsted, architect, of Hull, was entrusted with the designs, according to which the building has been erected by Mr. Alexander Stamp, of Barton, and the whole of the work has been executed in a manner that is highly satisfactory to all concerned.

The brethren assembled in their new hall at half-past one o'clock, where they were joined by a number of visitors, the following Lodges being represented:—The Humber 57, the Lindsey 712, the Kingston 1010, the Bayons 1286, the Pelham Pillar 792, the St. Alban's 1294, the Ancholme 1282, the Alexandra 1611, &c. As soon as the brethren had taken their places in the Lodge, the P.G. Officers and Past Officers, and the Officers of the Lodge, entered in procession, when the chair was taken by Bro. W. H. Smyth W.D.P.G.M. of Lincolnshire, and the following officers of St. Matthew's were also present:—Bros. W. Swallow W.M., Colonel Taylor I.P.M., Henry Ashton S.W., W. H. Simons J.W., R. Bedford Treasurer, John Fuller Secretary, James B. Swallow S.D., J. D. Waddingham J.D., W. Gray I.G., and Kenningham Tyler. The Provincial and other Grand Officers occupied seats upon the dais, and ably assisted in the ceremony of consecration. Bro. G. R. Welsh ably presided at the organ, and the musical portions of the ceremony were most efficiently rendered. The Lodge having been duly opened in the three degrees, the W.D.P.G.M. directed the P.G. Superintendent of Works to examine the appointments of the Lodge, which were pronounced satisfactory; and the sublime ceremony of Consecration, in accordance with the formularies of the Craft, was then proceeded with. At its conclusion the W.D.P.G.M. delivered an impressive and eloquent address on the duties inculcated in Freemasonry, advising the brethren to be discriminating in their admission of members, and wise in their promotion of the interests of the Craft. He then congratulated the W.M. on the completion of that magnificent hall, and wished for the Lodge a long career of future prosperity. Bro. Swallow then took the chair, and presided over the remainder of the business, the working of all the officers being conducted in an eminently satisfactory manner.

At three o'clock the brethren sat down to a sumptuous banquet, provided by Mr. Taylor, at the George Hotel, the tables being adorned with a choice profusion of flowers, ornamental plants, and the whole of the arrangements were carried out in commendable style. The chair was occupied by Bro. W. Swallow W.M., who was supported by the W. Deputy Grand Master of the Province, Bro. W. H. Smyth;

Bro. Thomas Sissons, Prov. Grand Registrar of North and East Yorks.; Bro. the Rev. J. C. R. Saunders, Prov. Grand Chaplain of Lincolnshire; Bro. E. Locock, P.P.G.S.W., &c., and the duties of the vice-chair were admirably discharged by Bro. H. Ashton, the S.W. of the Lodge. At the conclusion of the repast the loyal and Craft toasts were duly honoured, the W.M. alluding to the visit of the M.W. Grand Master of England to India, in which he said all Masons must take a deep interest at the present time. They all hoped his Royal Highness might have a successful voyage, and a safe return home. (Cheers.)

Bro. Colonel Taylor then proposed "his Grace the Duke of St. Albans, R.W.P.G.M. of Lincolnshire; W. H. Smyth, Esq., W.D.P.G.M., and the Officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge." (The toast was received with honours.)

Bro. Major Smyth, in responding, returned thanks for the cordial manner in which the name of the Duke of St. Albans had been received by the company. He could assure them that though his Grace was not present, his heart was thoroughly with them. (Hear, hear.) He frequently heard from the Duke, and sometimes saw him; and he felt convinced that his Grace took the deepest interest in, and was always desirous for, the welfare of Freemasonry in the province. (Cheers.) For his own part it was a source of great pleasure to him to visit the different Lodges and to see their prosperity: and he had never been better pleased than he had been to-day. In conclusion, Bro. Smyth proposed the "Bishop and Clergy of the Diocese," the former of whom, he remarked, was about the "best abused man in the whole country." To-day they had amongst them their worthy Bro. Saunders, who had attended several meetings held in Barton, and had shown a zeal in Masonry which must have obtained for him the respect and approbation of the brethren generally. He begged to couple the name of their Prov. Grand Chaplain with the toast he had just proposed. (Cheers.)

Bro. the Rev. J. C. R. Saunders in responding, thought they had reason to be thankful that in this diocese they had such a man as their bishop to preside over them, for if they looked round the Episcopal Bench they would not find his superior, "taken for all in all." (Applause.) He was a man of transcendent talent, extraordinary energy, and persevering labours; and, above all, he was a thorough Christian gentleman. (Hear, hear.) He expressed the pleasure it had afforded him to be present on this occasion. He was present at the consecration of the Lodge, at the foundation-stone laying, and at the ceremony of to-day; and he must say he considered the Barton Lodge had done wonders. There was, in fact, scarcely another instance in the records of Masonry in England of a Lodge being formed, and within two years building a house of its own. Therefore, he congratulated his brethren of the St. Matthew's Lodge, to whom all honour was due, for the excellent work they had accomplished. (Cheers.)

Bro. Thos. Sissons, Pro G.R., then gave "The Worshipful Master of the St. Matthew's Lodge," from whom he said the brethren had at all times received genuine cordiality and kindness whenever they met. (Cheers.) He wished Bro. Swallow long life, health, and prosperity, and after having seen all the members drafted into the P.M.'s chair, they could not do better than to re-elect him. (Laughter and loud cheers).

Bro. W. Swallow W.M., who was greeted with renewed cheering, returned thanks for the kind way in which Bro. Sissons had proposed the toast; and for the cordiality with which the brethren had received it. He was sorry he could not find words to express his feelings to-day; but he must first of all thank the brethren for the way in which they had gone through the ceremony of consecration, and the attention they had paid to the lessons which the event inculcated. Next he thanked the brethren of St. Matthew's Lodge for wishing him to have the honour of seeing the new Lodge consecrated before his term of office had expired. He concluded by wishing their new Masonic Hall prosperity and success. (Cheers.)

Bro. W. H. Sissons next proposed "The Masonic Charities," a toast which was given at all these festive gatherings, serving to remind them, in the midst of all their gay good humour, that Masonry had higher duties and nobler responsibilities. This toast came in the very centre of the toast list, and thus reminded them that charity was the keystone of Freemasonry. (Cheers.) Doubtless in the early history of the world, Freemasonry was a necessary protection, by which good and wise men were enabled to know whom they could meet in an honourable and friendly spirit, and whom it was necessary to avoid. And, later on, it was of service when the sword and the spear were used alongside the ploughshare. But now, knowing the genuine principles of its vitality, Masonry had ceased to be the offensive and defensive alliance which it had been for hundreds of years; and it was an institution, not merely for mutual benefit, but also for the benefit of those who were not actually Freemasons themselves. (Hear, hear.) No man who called himself a good and honest Mason would hesitate to deny that he was his brother's keeper—keeper of his brother's name and honour and reputation—of his worldly and spiritual happiness—for when circumstances arose they were dependent one upon the other. They could not explain to the outside world all their mysteries and ceremonies; still, they could give to it the outward and visible sign that, to the best of their ability, they aided the widow and the orphan, and those who were unable to fulfil the chief duty of life, namely, to provide for the maintenance of themselves, and those who were dependent upon them. As Masons they testified that they were prepared to take upon themselves that great sacred duty. Applause. He had hoped to have had amongst them to-day their worthy Bro. F. Pigott P.P.G. Steward, but unfortunately, in consequence of ill-health, he had been prevented from attending on this interesting occasion. Recently he spent a few hours with Bro. Pigott, who, in the course of their interview, pointed to what he valued above all else in possession—not a rare specimen of china, or a valuable piece of plate—but a plain sheet of parchment, containing the thanks of the boys and girls in the Masonic schools, for the services he had rendered them as Steward of this province. (Cheers.) Having further alluded to charity as one of the great essential characteristics of Masonry, the speaker coupled with the toast the name of Bro. Locock. (Cheers.)

Bro. E. Locock P.P.G.S.W., in returning thanks, said, if there was one toast which, more than another, brought the principles of Masonry home to their hearts, it was that of their invaluable Charities. He was very glad to know that in recent years the most important of their Masonic Institutions, the Boys' and Girls' Schools and the Benevolent Institution had been very largely supported by this province. He could remember, some years ago, they never thought of having subscriptions for this purpose, and an annual contribution from Lodges was not thought of. He then referred to the manner in which their late Prov. Grand Secretary. Bro. Lucas, fought in behalf of the Charities; and said he was the man who showed them the way in which the province ought to work. He then alluded to the Benevolent Fund of the province, which had been of great benefit, and many private Lodges had benevolent funds of their own; and he urged upon all Lodges to establish such funds, which were of the greatest value themselves and benefit to those who were deserving of their consideration. (Cheers.)

Bro. Nelson next gave "the Officers and Brethren of St. Matthew's Lodge."

Bro. Henry Ashton thanked Bro. Nelson for the kindly manner in which he had proposed the toast. He had known Bro. Nelson in another Lodge, and also in another capacity—as a soldier (hear, hear); and he was proverbial for his kindliness of heart and courtesy to all around him.

Bro. R. Bedford then proposed "the health of the Visiting Brethren." They in Barton were greatly obligated to friends who, during the early career of their Lodge, came from Hull and elsewhere, and rendered them invaluable assistance. He should have been better pleased had a much larger number of brethren from the other side of the Humber visited them on this occasion. They had been of great assistance during the formation and growth of St. Matthew's Lodge, and they were entitled to the best thanks of the brethren. (Cheers.) It would afford them pleasure at any time to welcome brethren from a distance, for the interchange of kindly feeling and sentiment were most valued by members of the Lodge. He would associate with the toast the name of Bro. H. J. Amphlett, of the Alexandra Lodge, Hornsea. (Cheers.)

Bro. Amphlett briefly acknowledged the toast, expressing, on behalf of the visitors present, their high appreciation of the kindliness and hospitality which had been displayed by the brethren of the St. Matthew's Lodge. The ceremony they had witnessed had been of the most impressive and interesting character; and he congratulated the officers and brethren upon the excellence of the work they had accomplished. Though a young Mason, he had taken a deep interest in the Craft, and enjoyed visiting the brethren in the various Lodges; in all of which he found the same spirit of friendliness and brotherly love prevailing. (Applause.) He thought no man could help admiring the great and noble objects of Freemasonry, which were not political, nor confined to any sect or denomination. It was a wide-spread institution, whose object was the extension of human sympathy and human brotherhood, and had embraced thousands of all creeds and shades of thought in a common bond of amity. Charity and brotherhood were the leading and guiding principles of the Institution, and the practical display of such virtues must ultimately earn for the Craft a large and increasing amount of public approbation. (Cheers.) Again, he thanked the brethren for the hearty welcome they had accorded to the visitors, and assured them, if they returned these visits, they would be as thoroughly well received by any Lodge which they might honour with their presence. (Applause.)

The W.M. said he must be excused if he departed a little from the list, and proposed to them the "Health of their good friend and Immediate Past Master, Colonel Taylor." (Cheers.) When he (the speaker) took the chair, he knew he succeeded a man whom it would be difficult to follow. But whenever he required advice on any matter he had only to go to Burnham, when he found Bro. Taylor quite ready to afford him any assistance he needed. He trusted the gallant Colonel would frequently attend the Lodge and sit with him as P.M. of St. Matthew's; for he (the speaker) was determined to attend as often as he possibly could do. (Cheers.)

Colonel Taylor, in responding, said he had been a Mason for 19 years, and certainly wished to see the Lodge flourish at Barton. He acknowledged the assistance which had been received from brethren at Hull and elsewhere, and he felt certain the St. Matthew's Lodge would ultimately become second to none in the province. Their W.M. required but little assistance at the outset, and required none now; and he had confidence that the next Master would be the same. He concluded by wishing the Lodge every success.

Bro. T. Sissons then, in a humorous speech, proposed the "Ladies," for whom Bro. Henry Meggitt gallantly responded; and the official list having been got through, the remainder of the evening was spent in a more convivial manner.

We must not omit to state that, in commemoration of the completion of the building, the members of the Lodge generously provided a dinner for the whole of the workmen, numbering upwards of thirty, who had been engaged in the erection.

The Directors of the Briton Life Association announce that they will proceed with their allotment of shares on the 10th inst.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

An addition to the Royal Family is always a subject of congratulation among all classes of British subjects, and we Masons, who pride ourselves, not without substantial reason, upon our loyalty, are not likely to be behindhand in felicitating their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh on the recent increase of their family. Of other news connected with the Royal Family we have to record that H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught landed at Gibraltar a few days since, in order to enter upon the appointment which he had been gazetted to do. A hearty welcome was accorded him, and an address, to which his Royal Highness briefly but appropriately responded, was delivered by the American Consul, Mr. Sprague, in the name and on behalf of the Consular body. Lastly, the King and Queen of Denmark have arrived in this country, with a view to spending a few weeks with their daughter, the Princess of Wales, and the latter will, by permission of Her Majesty, spend Christmas at Copenhagen. A slight accident has occurred to the Crown Prince of Denmark, who, in dismounting from his horse, had the misfortune to sprain his ancle. A few days, however, will suffice to restore him to his usual health.

"A good blowing up" is a common, if not particularly ornate expression. Jones misconducts himself, or, at least, we consider he has done so; therefore we "blow him up." Two hundred and seventy years since, about the greatest blowing up the world ever dreamt of was contemplated. A number of fanatics, headed by one Guido Fawkes had made all the necessary preparations to blow up King, Lords, and Commons in Parliament assembled. Happily, by the interposition of Providence, the event did not come off, but, instead, Guido Fawkes and his associates were elevated, if not as high as Haman is recorded to have been, quite enough to serve as a warning to future fanatics not to indulge in attempts at blowing up King and Parliament. The anniversary of Gunpowder Plot came off yesterday. In the suburbs, and in many provincial towns it was celebrated with more or less of the usual display, which, as far as amusing young children, and putting a few coppers into the pockets of ragged little rascals, is quite harmless.

Next Tuesday will be anniversary of the birth of our M.W.G.M. H.R.H. Prince of Wales, who, on that day, will complete his thirty-fourth year. The reign of Lord Mayor Stone will also come to an end on that day, and Alderman Cotton succeeds our respected brother as first magistrate of the wealthiest city in the world. As true Masons we "welcome the coming, speed the parting guest," but in the case of Lord Mayor Stone, we feel bound to say something more, and to offer him our hearty congratulations on the grand success of his mayoralty. Of course, every citizen who attains this exalted position, strives his hardest to maintain its dignity, and add some lustre to his own name. Chance, too, occasionally aids them. The visit of a foreign potentate, the birth of an heir to the throne, a state visit to the city, when such an event occurs the Queen usually confers the dignity of a Baronet on the Lord Mayor and that of Knighthood on the Sheriffs. No such event has occurred during the year that will close next Tuesday; nevertheless, Lord Mayor Stone's Mayoralty has been, as we have just said, a grand success. We are not referring especially to his hospitality, for the hospitality of our Civic Sovereigns is matter of every day notoriety. We imagine, however, that few Lord Mayors have shown a greater activity, a greater desire to please everybody, a greater firmness and impartiality in the discharge of his very onerous duties. We heartily wish him God speed in the future, both as a Citizen of London and as a Mason. Doubtless the last noteworthy event of his year of office will be the event of Thursday, when the freedom of the City was conferred on the Astronomer Royal, Sir George B. Airy, the copy of the freedom being contained in a magnificently embossed gold casket. The Chamberlain, as the mouthpiece of the Corporation, spoke in deservedly complimentary language of the great attainments of Sir G. B. Airy, and the latter acknowledged the honour conferred upon him in fitting terms. Both the speech of the Chamberlain and the reply of the Astronomer Royal were unanimously ordered to be recorded on the minutes of the day's proceedings. There were present, besides the Lord Mayor, who presided, and Mr. Chamberlain, who was the spokesman, Aldermen M'Arthur and Lusk, and an unusually large attendance of Common Councilmen and others.

The second sitting of the Spiritualists was held at their room in Bloomsbury Square, on Thursday evening, the chair being taken by Dr. Sexton, who is reported, in the course of his opening remarks, to have expressed his conviction that a large number of the cures he had seen effected resulted from the direct agency of disembodied spirits. We are not ourselves of the Spiritualist fraternity, but we fancy there is something at the bottom of Dr. Sexton's theory. At all events, we offer in confirmation of it the popular belief that the best cure for a cold is one or more doses of rum and water, the water, of course, being the disembodying element in the case. An American Spiritualist who who was present, cited several cases of spiritual cures which had come within his knowledge. Possibly the receipt in the States for curing a cold, is hot Bourbon whisky and water; but this, we think, would leave a slight head-ache behind. Every now and then we read in the daily papers of extraordinary séances being held, now in London, now in the provinces. The following is an ordinary séance common enough in all parts of the world, though we have not seen its incidents recorded with as great particularity as we should like see. Scene.—A library. Dramatic Personæ. The relatives and friends of the recently defunct owner of said library, bearing about them all the outward and visible signs of the greatest anguish, and the family lawyer, who acts as medium. After a few preliminary flourishes on the part of the latter, he proceeds to read the will, when a sudden chill is felt throughout the room, and the voice of the deceased gentleman is distinctly heard to say, in tones of the most cynical enthusiasm, "Nimium ne crede Dolori." Our readers, of course, will note the very happy consistency, in the above account, of allowing the spirit of a defunct gentleman to express its feelings in a dead language. No doubt the family lawyer grinned a ghastly grin, when he heard the familiar tones of his late employer, but we should imagine the sorrowing relatives and friends, while not a little disturbed in their minds by the apparition, would not lend themselves to the encouragement of spiritualism.

This has been a comparatively quiet week at the Alexandra Palace. The season is too far advanced for much to be done out of doors. Indoors, however, every possible sort of attraction is offered to the public, who are nothing slow to avail themselves of the offers. Weather permitting, and even, indeed, in spite of the weather, the dramatic performances and the Saturday Popular Concerts are very well attended. On Lord Mayor's Day we are promised a firework competition, and on the fifteenth instant there will be another grand trotting match. As regards the Crystal Palace there is little to report, the chief weekly event of interest being the Saturday afternoon concert.

Among the many various reforms that are continually being offered, there is hardly one that commends itself so thoroughly to the dictates of reason and common sense as funeral reform. The bestowal of grand funeral honours on some great man, like Wellington or Nelson, is a proper tribute of respect to pay to his memory. But why the stately glare and display, the hired trappings of woe, the unsightly hearse, and oftentimes the still more unsightly attendants? No man of sense believes that all this display and these paraphernalia form essential part of the respect we pay to the dead. A military funeral is one of the most impressive sights that can be witnessed, yet of funeral emblems there are few indeed. The coffin is borne along on a gun carriage, the deceased's charger following. The solders follow, with arms reversed, and the band playing the Dead March in Saul. A Mason's funeral, too, is a solemn ceremony, but the ordinary dingy hearse and mourning coaches are the merest burlesque of sorrowing respect. We are glad to see that Mr. Bright has expressed himself so sensibly and so practically as to the necessity for funeral reform, especially in such cases as he cites in evidence of a poor man's funeral, not unfrequently using up all the scanty means at the disposal of his family. A quiet and unobtrusive, and, we may add, inexpensive funeral, is not inconsistent with a genuine heartfelt sorrow for the loss of a respected friend or relative.

The greatest evidence that the holidays are over, and that this business world of ours has resumed work, is borne out by the fact that Ministers held a Cabinet meeting on Thursday, at which, no doubt, the programme for the coming Session of Parliament would be discussed. On Tuesday, of course, we shall receive a certain amount of enlightenment as to how the political world is wagging. A few members of Parliament have been giving expression to their views on subjects of local or general interest, and there is a vacancy in Mid-Surrey, caused by the elevation to the Bench of Sir Richard Baggallay.

Scientific readers will, no doubt, be interested in learning that a new planet is reported to have been discovered by a French astronomer, M. Paul Henry. So, at least, M. Le Verrier, of the Paris Observatory, informs our Astronomer Royal, Sir George Airy.

The National Assembly has resumed its sittings at Versailles, after the autumnal recess. The President of the Council, M. Buffet's, motion that the Electoral Bill should be put down for discussion on Monday, was agreed to unanimously. Another proposal, emanating from M. Duprat, of the Left, to the effect that the Bill for raising the State of Siege, and the appointment of Mayors by the Municipal Councils, instead of by the Government, was also agreed to. From Penang is reported the murder, in the Malayan territory, of Mr. Birch, the British President at Perak. Troops are said to have already marched upon that city, with a view to punishing the guilty parties. It seems more that probable that Austria, Prussia, and Germany will act jointly in pressing upon Turkey the necessity of dealing out liberal reforms to her subjects, and especially those professing the Christian faith. What part France, Italy, and this country will take, or whether they will take any part with the other three powers, is not known. But, no doubt, the subject seriously engaged the attention of our Ministers at the late meeting of the Cabinet. The news from the United States relates chiefly to the recent elections in various of the States, the result, from what we gather, being somewhat favourable to the Republicans. There has been some fighting on the West Coast of Africa, Commodore Sir W. H. Hewett having penetrated some miles up the coast to inflict salutary punishment on the pirates, who mustered in tolerably strong numbers, a very severe chastisement ensued, and that, too, with but trifling loss on our part. A little time ago there was a talk of some action being taken by the United States Government towards Spain in relation to Cuba, but the latest advices show that no action was ever contemplated. The memorandum sent by the Washington Cabinet to the Spanish Government having merely reference to certain documents forwarded two years ago to Madrid. From Spain, the news respecting the war contains no feature of importance. The two armies still confront each other, thus the report that the decisive campaign would be shortly undertaken has not, as yet at all events, been verified. From Herzegovina there is nothing of moment to record. The other item of news worth alluding to is the terrible accident to the French ironclad Magenta, which took fire while lying at anchor in the harbour of Toulouse. No lives were lost, and as the magazines were partially flooded, the explosion of the magazines, when it did take place, caused comparatively little damage to the town. What with the losses of the Captain and the Vanguard, and the destruction of the Magenta, ironclad ships of war seem to be very costly affairs.

CONSECRATION OF A NEW LODGE AT MORECAMBE, LANCASTER.

ON Tuesday, the 26th ult., the R.W. Prov. G.M. Rt. Hon. Lord Skelmersdale D.G.M. of England, consecrated, with all the Masonic ceremonies, the Morecambe Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. Half-past twelve was the hour fixed for the ceremony, and, for the convenience of the Lancaster brethren, a special train started from the Green Ayre station at twelve o'clock, and of which about sixty took advantage. On arriving at Morecambe, the brethren at once repaired to the North Western Hotel, where, for the present, the Lodge will hold its meetings, and after a short delay arrayed themselves in their Masonic clothing and assembled in the Lodge room. Craft Lodge was opened by Bro. Wylie Prov. P.G.S.D. (who subsequently acted as Grand Director of Ceremonies during the consecration), and this having been intimated, the R.W. Prov. G.M. shortly afterwards entered the Lodge room, preceded by his Grand Officers and the Worshipful Master designate, namely Bros. Charles Fryer (Mayor of Preston) Prov. G.S.W., the Rev. J. W. Morgan Prov. G.C., W. M. Deeley Prov. G.J.W., Thomas Armstrong Prov. G.W.T., H. S. Alpass Prov. G. Sec., Reuben Pearson Prov. P.G.R., W. Joseph Sly Prov. G. Pars., and Dr. John Daniel Moore P.G.S.B. of England, a processional march being played by Bro. Skeafe Prov. G.D., whilst the Grand Master took his seat in the Master's Chair. The Grand Master then appointed Bro. Fryer to take the S.W.'s chair, Bros. Deeley J.W., John C. Bradshaw I.P.M. 1051 S.D., William Hall P.M. 281 J.D., and John Gibson P.M. and Treas. 950 I.G. Immediately on the Grand Master having taken his seat, the Grand Director of Ceremonies called upon the brethern to salute the Grand Master, which was done in true Masonic style. The ceremony of consecration was then commenced by the Grand Chaplain reading a portion of Holy Writ and offering up prayer, after which an ode was sung. The Provincial Grand Secretary then read the petition and also the warrant of constitution, which latter was attested by the sign manual of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales the Grand Master of England. The ceremonial of consecration, as prescribed by the ritual of the Craft, was then duly performed, the elements of consecration (the corn-copia, wine, oil, and salt) being carried three times round the Lodge, amid solemn music, by four Provincial Grand Officers, and afterwards the censers in like manner by the Chaplain. On the conclusion of the ceremony the Grand Master proceeded to instal the Worshipful Master designate (Bro. J. D. Moore) into the chair of the Lodge, those members of the Craft who have not attained to the degree of Past Masters being first requested to retire, and the ceremony then proceeded according to the rites of the Craft; on its conclusion the members were readmitted, and proceeded to offer their congratulations to the Worshipful Master elect. The Worshipful Master then proceeded to invest his officers as follow:—Bros. William Duff S.W., Thomas Longmire J.W., William Longmire Sec., William Aspden S.D., Henry Hartley jun. J.D., James Shaw I.G., E. Airey I.P.M. 281, at the request of the Worshipful Master consented to occupy the chair of I.P.M. Two candidates were proposed for admission, and the Grand Director having called for the usual vote of thanks, which were given in a manner peculiar to the Craft. The Lodge was duly closed. The Grand Master went through the ceremony of consecration with considerable ability and impressiveness, whilst Bro. Wylie discharged the duties of Grand Director of Ceremonies in a manner no less creditable to the Craft than to himself. The musical portion of the ceremony was ably rendered by a quartet of voices, under the direction of Bro. Skeafe, who presided at the harmonium. The pedestals for the Grand Master, Senior and Junior Wardens were beautiful specimens of workmanship, and manufactured from designs furnished by the Worshipful Master designate.

The brethren then adjourned to the Lodge room of the hotel, where a banquet had been prepared in celebration of the opening of the Lodge, and a very attractive menu was provided by Bro. Hartley. Dr. Moore, the Worshipful Master, presided, and was supported on the right by the Right Hon. Lord Skelmersdale, the Rev. J. W. Morgan, Bros. Alpass, Skeafe, &c., and on the left by the Mayor of Preston, Bros. Deeley, Armstrong, &c., the company numbering about sixty. On the removal of the cloth, the usual toasts followed, the chairman successively proposing the "Queen" and "The Prince of Wales," in the twofold capacity of heir to the throne and Grand Master of England, which were received with enthusiasm. The W.M. then gave "The health of the R.W. Prov. G.M. Lord Skelmersdale, Deputy Grand Master of England," referring to the honour which had been conferred upon them in having his lordship to open the Lodge, and alluded to the high position and the interest which he took in the Craft; the toast was received with great enthusiasm, and on his lordship rising to respond, he was received with a perfect ovation. On the applause subsiding, his lordship expressed the pleasure he had in attending to consecrate the Lodge, more especially as it was in his own province. It was his earnest wish to do his duty so far as he could, and he hoped that in future years they would see the Lodge one of the best in the province. Freemasonry was on the increase throughout the kingdom, and the impetus given to it by the appointment of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to the position of Grand master had not ceased, and he hoped never would cease, during his reign. He (Lord Skelmersdale) hoped that so long as he continued to occupy the high position in which His Royal Highness had placed him he should never be found wanting in fulfilling its duties. (Applause.)

The Worshipful Master then proposed the health of the "Provincial Grand Officers," which was acknowledged by the Mayor of Preston. The Worshipful Master next proposed the "Visiting Provincial Grand Officers," which was responded to by Bros. Holmes, Talbot and Tattersall, of the Cumberland and Westmorland Grand Lodge.

The Mayor of Preston, in highly eulogistic terms, proposed the health of the Worshipful Master, and alluded to the eminence he had attained in the Craft as a Grand Lodge Officer, and augured a prosperous future for the Lodge under the auspices of one so well acquainted with the Craft as Bro. Dr. Moore. The toast was drunk in a bumper. The Worshipful Master, in responding, said it was the fourth time he had filled the office of Worshipful Master, therefore, it could not be supposed he coveted the honour particularly. He saw they had the nucleus of a good Lodge, and he did not see why it should not be so; he thought, with a little practice, in a short time they would be second to none in the province. He was glad the Lodge had been consecrated with so much éclat, and he felt it a honour to hide the collar of the Grand Lodge beneath the humble blue ribbon of the Master of the Lodge; he felt prouder of the blue ribbon than of the purple and gold of the Grand Lodge. (Applause.) "Success to the other Officers of the Morecambe Lodge" was then given, and responded to by Bros. Duff and T. Longmire. The health of the "Immediate Past Master" was next given by the Worshipful Master, who alluded to the services rendered the Craft by Bro. Airey, and that he felt less diffidence in accepting the office of Master, knowing that, when his professional duties called him away, he could leave the interests of the Lodge in the hands of a worthy coadjutor.

Bro. Airey, in acknowledging the compliment, expressed his gratification at a Masonic Lodge being opened in Morecambe, a consummation which he had been working for for some time. "Success to the Lancashire Lodges" was next given, and responded to by Bros. T. Atkinson 281, and F. G. Dale 1851. "Masonry in general—success to it" followed, and was acknowledged by Bro. J. Atkinson 281. "Members of Grand Arch" was responded to by Bro. Johnson 413. The last toast on the list was "To distressed Masons," which was proposed by Bro. J. Watson Tyler 281. During the banquet several glees were sung under the direction of Bro. Skeafe, and songs were also given by several of the members present. The arrangements for the consecration and banquet—which devolved mainly upon Bros. Dr. Moore and Airey—were very complete, and being efficiently carried out, the proceedings passed off with the greatest cordiality and harmony.

COACHING DAYS.—Since the 15th September 1830, when the first railway in England was opened between Liverpool and Manchester, we have passed through a transition era in the history of travelling and locomotion. The neatly-appointed four-horse coaches, timed to do their nine or ten miles an hour, had superseded those various methods of communication that, in various centuries, had been adopted by Englishmen on their travels—whether they were the trains of horses in Chaucer's day; or the horses by post, as when Taylor, the water-poet, made his "Penniless Pilgrimage;" or the carriers and pack-horses that Milton's old Hobson passed into a proverb; or the machines and stage-waggons of Stow's day; or that primitive coach that Parson Adams outwalked, and in which Roderick Random and Strap made their journey to London, at the rate of four miles an hour, exclusive of stoppages; until we arrive at the more recent date, 2nd August 1784, when the first mail-coach went from London to Bath, and inaugurated that admirable coaching era in which the very perfection of travelling seems to be attained, but the ruin of which was foreshadowed by the wondrous "Car of Miracle" in Southey's "Curse of Kehama." The old order of things is changed; the English coachman, so graphically drawn by Washington Irving in 1820, is as extinct as the dodo or the Charlie; the coaches are superseded by other "coaches" of a very different pattern; and as Mr. Reynardson, the author of "Down the Road," says, "The tea-kettle, with its steam, has taken the place of the four bright bays; the grimy engine-driver and stoker have taken the place of the coachman; and the guard or conductor, in his blue coat and foreign-looking hat, has taken the place of the guard in red, with his glazed hat and cockade; and the long mellow horn of former days is now replaced by a shrill, and certainly not to be called mellow, whistle." It is true that four-horse coaches still exist here and there in certain districts, though chiefly in the touring season; and the advertisements that appear of them in the end of our "Bradshaw" are sufficiently suggestive of the change that has come over our modes of travelling. London, too, in certain months, still sends forth its well-appointed four-horse coaches to convey passengers to Brighton, Tunbridge, Dorking, and other favourite spots; but the coaches that went up and "down the road" at certain fixed hours on every day throughout the year are no longer to be met with. Mr. Reynardson makes the suggestion that "a real old mail and a real old stage-coach, with its piles of luggage and all other etceteras, should, before every recollection of them is gone, have a place, fully equipped for the road, in the times of old, in the British Museum. It would not be a bad thought for some enterprising 'Down the road' to set the thing on foot, and thus hand down to posterity what would be a wonder to behold when the generation to come travel by electricity instead of steam."—Leisure Hour.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS,

Minerva Lodge of Mark Masons, No. 12, Hull.—The annual meeting of the members of this Lodge took place on Monday evening, in the Minerva Hall, when there was a very large attendance of Mark Masons belonging to this and other Lodges in the district. The chair was occupied by Bro. R. T. Vivian W.M., who was supported by Bros. Henry Haigh as S.W., Smith J.W., Henry Preston M.O., Geo. Hardy S.O., and E. Balchin J.O. Bro. John Brooke acted efficiently as Director of Ceremonies, and Bro. J. H. Emes as R.M. After the transaction of the ordinary business, eleven candidates were advanced to the superior degree, the impressive ceremony being admirably worked throughout. Subsequently, the voting for the next W.M. took place, and the choice of the brethren fell upon Bro. Henry Haigh, who was thus elected to fill the principal chair for the ensuing year. Bro. Geo. Hardy P.M. was appointed Treasurer, and Bros. Faulkner and Crier Tylers. Before concluding the business the W.M., in a few happily chosen sentences, expressed the gratification which the members of this Lodge felt at the completion, by the Minerva Craft Lodge, of the beautiful building they now held, for Masonic purposes. Meeting, as they did, under its roof, they had the privilege of participating in the advantages they had so well secured for themselves; and on behalf of the Mark Masons present he had much pleasure in conveying to Bro. Brooke, as the W.M. of the Minerva Craft Lodge, the congratulations that these worthy labours had been prosecuted and completed during his term of office (applause). He must not omit to mention that this very laudable undertaking was commenced under the auspices, and greatly through the instrumentality of the I.P.M., Bro. J. H. Emes, and too much praise could not be given him for the energy he had bestowed upon the work (hear hear). He believed the additional facilities and accommodation thus provided would tend to the spread of Craft Masonry under the auspices of the Minerva Lodge, and he also trusted that it would tend to enhance the pleasure and social intercourse of the brethren generally (applause). Bro. Brooke briefly acknowledged the congratulations expressed by Bro. Vivian W.M. in behalf of the Mark Masons assembled on that occasion, and trusted that the extension of their Lodge accommodation would have the tendency which he had foreshadowed. The whole of the proceedings, he might say, were initiated before he (Bro. Brooke) had the honour of occupying the chair, and the entire arrangements were made by older and wiser heads than his own. He considered great credit was due to Bro. J. H. Emes, who laid down the first lines of the alterations which had been made with so much credit to all concerned; and also to Bro. Walter Reynolds, their excellent Secretary, who acted almost like a clerk of the works in seeing those instructions faithfully carried out in such a manner as to secure the greatest amount of comfort, not only to their own individual members, but to every other grade of Masonry that assembled within its walls (applause). The business of the meeting having been concluded in due form, the brethren sat down to a substantial banquet in the adjoining hall, under the presidency of Bro. R. T. Vivian W.M. The customary toasts were duly honoured, and Bro. Haigh received the congratulations of the brethren upon his election to the principal chair—a position which it was admitted on all hands he most richly deserved. The proceedings were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music, and the evening was passed in an agreeable and harmonious manner.

Bro. Tolmie was unanimously elected an honorary member and was accorded a vote of thanks, and he, in acknowledgment, tendered his heartfelt thanks to Bro. St. Mungo Encampment of Knights Templar.—This Encampment held a special meeting on Thursday, 28th October, in St. Mark's Hall, Glasgow, at 2 o'clock p.m., the E.C. Sir Knight Robert Bell presiding, assisted by Sir Knights G. W. Wheeler as Prelate, J. Tweed as Marshall, J. Shaw C.C., J. Ferguson S.C., G. Dalrymple J.C., J. McLeish W., and J. B. Hardies S. On the dias was Wm. Brice, Grand Sentinel, who had come from Edinburgh to see a friend received in St. Mungo's. A petition was presented from Comp. A. N. Henderson, of Chapter 44, who was duly dubbed and created a Knight of the Temple, in Sir Knight Bell's usual impressive style. Sir Knight Brice expressed his satisfaction at the way the ceremonies were rendered, as, from his experience in the Supreme Chapter General and the Priory of the Lothian, he was competent to judge. Sir Knight Bell said praise from such a source was indeed worth having, but he felt that owing to the absence of some of the officers, it had not been quite so effectively rendered as he could have wished. The Encampment was then closed.

MARK MASTER MASONS OF SUSSEX.

THE annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Mark Master Masons of Sussex was held at the Castle Hotel, Hastings, under the presidency of Bro. Sir John Cordy Burrows G.M.M., the Committee of General Purposes having previously met. The Grand Mark Lodge having been opened, the business on the agenda paper was then proceeded with. The election of Officers then took place, when the following brethren were elected and afterwards invested:—Bros. J. Braithwaite G. Treasurer, T. Hughes G. Tyler (by ballot), Dr. Cumming D.P.G.M., D. Trollope G.S.W., W. Hudson G.J.W., the Rev. Cave Brown Cave G. Chaplain, W. Kirkland G.M. Overseer, T. H. Mosley Registrar of Marks, S. H. Ade G. Secretary S. R. Legg Assist. Secretary, W. B. Bro. Sir Cordy Burrows (Ex-Mayor) Grand Mark Master, presided with great ability, and gave the usual loyal and routine toasts, which were duly responded to, and a very agreeable evening was passed. Among those present were Bros. T. J. Sabine P.G. (Mark) Secretary, Hudson, G. Smith, Matthews, Lockyer, Cave, Jas. Dorman, G. Wellord Grey, J. Nixon, &c.

MEDICINE OR MIRTH.—A Scotch critic, in noticing Bro. Toole's return from America, says, "Toole has a face, a voice which would make a New England Shaker, in the lowest depths of the dumps, quake with mirth. Cachination is better than colchicum for the gout, it is a sovereign specific for the sulks, and he who can create it at will is the most potent physician of the age. Such a physician is John L. Toole." A further proof of his popularity is such that, on the first night he is announced to appear at the Gaiety Theatre, on the 8th of November, every available place is secured.

FREEMASONRY AT BARTON-ON-HUMBER.

THE installation of Bro. Henry Ashton, of Thornton Hall, as Worshipful Master of St. Matthew's Lodge, No. 1447, of Free and Accepted Masons, took place under the most gratifying auspices on Wednesday last. The brethren, together with several visitors from Pelham Pillar (Grimsby), Ancholme (Brigg), Alexandra (Hornsea), and other Lodges in the district, assembled at the New Masonic Hall, at 3 o'clock, when the Lodge was opened in due form, and the imposing ceremony of installation was performed by Bro. W. W. Copeland P.M., P.P.G.S.D., of Pelham Pillar Lodge, No. 792, who delivered the charges in an able and efficient manner. The installing Officer was assisted by P.M. Bros. Colonel Taylor, P.M. Thos. Morris P.P.G.P of Ancholme Lodge, No. 1282, Thomas Fryer W.M. Ancholme Lodge and P.G.S., Bro. Nelson P.G.S., P.M. Bro. Marshall Pelham Pillar Lodge, &c. Bro. W. J. Roberts of Grimsby Lodge acted as Director of Ceremonies; and the musical portions of the ceremony were admirably sustained, Bro. G. R. Welch presiding at the organ. The I.P.M., Bro. W. Swallow, having vacated the chair, presented his S.W., Bro. Henry Ashton, for installation as his successor, and this solemn and impressive ceremony was gone through in accordance with ancient usages. Bro. Ashton having been duly installed into his exalted office, then proceeded to invest his officers for the ensuing year, and they were inducted into their respective chairs as follow:—Bros. W. H. Sissons S.W., J. B. Swallow J.W., R. J. Bedford Treasurer, John Fuller Secretary, W. Waddington S.D., W. Gray J.D., Rev. Francis A. Godfrey (curate of Bonby) Chaplain, G. R. Welch Organist, F. D. Davy Steward, M. Woodall I.G., and S. Kenningham Tyler. The S.W. moved, as the first act of the newly constituted Lodge, a vote of thanks to the retiring Master, and in doing which he passed a high eulogium on the manner in which the duties of the Lodge had been sustained during the year. This was seconded by Bro. P.M. Col. Taylor, and carried unanimously, and Bro. P.M. Swallow returned thanks for the compliment paid him, and also for the very generous support which his officers and the brethren generally had accorded to him during his years of office. This made him feel somewhat loth to quit the chair, but he felt assured that the same kind support would be afforded to Bro. Ashton, and that the coming year would be as harmonious and successful as the past had been. The Lodge being closed, the brethren adjourned to the George Hotel, where a magnificent banquet had been provided by Mr. and Mrs. Taylor. The newly elected W.M. presided, faced, in the vice chair, by his S.W., and at the conclusion of the repast the customary loyal and Craft toasts were duly honoured. Bro. Geo. Nelson responded on behalf of the Provincial Officers, and, in return, gave the "Bishops and Clergy of the Diocese, and Ministers of other denominations," to which the Rev. F. A. Godfrey responded. Bro. Colonel Taylor proposed the "health of the retiring W.M. of St. Matthew's Lodge." Bro. Swallow replied in suitable terms, and proposed, in turn, "the newly installed W.M., Bro. Ashton," who responded in a few happily chosen sentences. The health of the Installing Master was next given, and acknowledged by Bro. W. W. Copeland. Bro. R. J. Bedford proposed the "visiting brethren," for whom Bro. G. Nelson replied, and he concluded by proposing the "officers and brethren of the St. Matthew's Lodge." The toast was acknowledged by Bro. W. H. Sissons. Bro. H. J. Amphlett then gave "the ladies," on whose behalf Bro. Bennett gallantly responded, and the official list closed with the Tyler's toast. The evening was spent in an agreeable and harmonious manner.

THE DRAMA.

AS usual, at this time of the year, there is a lull in affairs theatrical; the pieces which opened the campaign have been produced, and have achieved a moderate or an "unprecedented" success, as the case may be. Of plays that are really and thoroughly damned we have none now-a-days, but only for the reason that our audiences appear to have become enervated, and to have lost the vigour of mind requisite for the raising of a good genuine hiss. In every department the stage seems to be sinking to a dull, dead level of mediocrity. Apathy has spread from audience to actor, from actor to playwright, and in the latter it is most conspicuous. Authors seem to be satisfied if they can turn out a piece which, by dint of some snobbish rudeness, miscalled wit, in dialogue, some eccentricity in costumes or other extraneous attractions, manages to hold the stage for a respectable number of nights. Better for the stage to pass a season marked here by triumphant success, there, it may be, by disastrous failure, than to suffer this dreary monotony of pieces, unworthy of either hearty praise or discriminating blame. At rare intervals a play appears which challenges criticism higher in tone than that accorded to its fellows. Last week we had the pleasure of giving its meed of praise to All for Her, but as we survey the list of pieces now being played at the London theatres we cannot help feeling how barren of dramatic worth that list is. At the HAYMARKET we have the painful puns and rude smartnesses of Mr. Byron, employing the abilities of such artists as Mr. Vezin and Miss Carlotta Addison; at the ADELPHI, a poor adaptation of one of Mr. Dickens's novels; the VAUDEVILLE is still supported on the shoulders of Our Boys, the attractiveness of which piece must have greatly astonished both author and lessees. A mistaken Macbeth carries the fortunes of the LYCEUM, and not even Mrs. Bateman's touching manifesto to the public will have power to cover that blunder. Flamingo, at the STRAND, is said to be a great success, which is probably the reason why it will speedily be withdrawn. Proof Positive must, we suppose, be an amusing comedy, being written by a contributor to Punch, but we have failed, as yet, to discover the humour of it. The DRURY LANE Shaughraun is a piece which would be appropriate if the audience at DRURY LANE were drawn from the immediate neighbourhood of the theatre. There are still three theatres which well support the reputation of the London stage, the GAIETY, the PRINCE OF WALES'S, and, for the present, at least, the MIRROR. At these theatres may be seen plays which, however different in kind, are all well worthy the attention of playgoers, and those pieces are acted by artists than whom we have few betters on the stage. Nowhere can we find a light comedian better than Mr. Mathews, who at seventy-three is still only twenty; and who of our actresses can surpass Mrs. Bancroft or Miss Ellen Terry? But with these brilliant exceptions, the theatrical prospect is dreary, and augurs badly for the season.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 113 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, 27 ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to exhibit any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying everyday Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior health at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

THE PRINCE OF WALES IN INDIA.

THE event to which public attention has been directed for months past is at length realised, and India has received, with much ceremony and still more enthusiasm, the eldest son of its Empress, the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland. Early on Monday morning, the Royal Yacht Osborne steamed into Bombay Harbour, preceding by a few hours only the Serapis, with the Prince of Wales and his suite aboard. Thereupon the ships of war and the forts fired a Royal salute, and the Viceroy, Lord Northbrook, was rowed to the Serapis, and went on board, for the purpose of welcoming his Royal guest to India, and felicitating him on the safe progress of his journey. A few hours later in the day the Prince landed, amid the noise and smoke of another salute, and was received by the Governor, Sir Philip Wodehouse, and the Indian princes, who had come specially to be present on the occasion, and pay homage to the son of India's ruler. Slowly, amid the most loyal greetings from the Europeans, and the quieter yet respectful salutations of the Hindoos, the procession moved on through the streets of Bombay to the Governor's residence, which had been specially prepared for His Royal Highness's reception. Of course, every known form of celebrating any auspicious event was observed in honour of the visit. There were banquettings and illuminations, the reception of, and the return visits to the Indian Princes, who mustered to the number of seventy or eighty; in fact, Bombay, since the Prince's arrival, may be said to have been continuously en fête, and for the rest of the week the busy capital of Western India cast aside the business of money making, and plunged heart and soul into the business of merry making.

To chronicle the whole course of the doings during this eventful week would occupy more space than is at our command. We have said enough already as to the outer forms and ceremonies of the reception thus far, but a few words as to the wisdom and policy of the visit may not be out of place. Two or three centuries are but a brief period in the history of nations. Yet it is less than three centuries ago since the first British traders planted their factories on the Ganges, at Surat, and in other places on the continent. It is but little over two hundred years since Bombay came into the possession of England, as part of the marriage portion of Catherine of Braganza, wife of our Charles II. The formal cession of the Island and its dependencies was at first refused by the Portuguese Governor, but on 1664 it was taken possession of in the name and in behalf of the English Sovereign, and has remained English ever since. In 1668 it was transferred to the East India Company, and in 1858 it again passed directly under the rule of Queen Victoria. Territory was gradually acquired in other parts of Hindostan, now at the expense of the French, or the Dutch, now at that of the Mogul and other Indian Sovereigns. Plassey, won by Clive, in 1757, laid the foundation of our Empire, and the repression of the Indian Mutiny confirmed it. Thus from the enterprise of a few merchant adventurers, only a few score years since, has sprung up the British Indian Empire of to-day, with close upon two hundred millions of population, enormous revenues, and resources, the wealth of which it is impossible to estimate. Once already since the transfer of power from John Company to the British Crown, has a prince of the reigning house, the Duke of Edinburgh, visited our Indian dependency, but there was little or no formality on that occasion. The visit of the Prince of Wales is a far more significant event. Though, for wise purposes of State, His Royal Highness will be, during his stay in India, merely the guest of the Queen's Viceroy, he will be regarded by Indians of all classes, from prince to peasant, as the representative of the Queen his mother. It is well, moreover, that the heir to a throne should make acquaintance, personally, with the countries he will some day rule over. We, in England, who live happily and contented under the easy forms of a constitutional government, can hardly gauge what the power of a ruler means. In India we English are a dominant people. We may do much to make stronger the ties which unite the natives of that country with us as subjects of one and the same Sovereign; but above and beyond this, and seeing that our rule over them will last only so long as our strength remains what it is, the heir to a ruler who, there at all events, governs as well as reigns, is a far more important personage than in his own country, where the actual power of the Crown is wielded by a ministry, who, in its turn, is dependent on the popular will. British rule in India is a very formidable entity. We govern the country for its good, but that we govern the country at all is owing to our military strength. Thus, in traversing Hindostan, and visiting its most populous and important cities, the Prince will be looked upon as representative of a sovereign whose power is irresistible, and who knows no laws but those of her own making. His presence, and the state and ceremony which will attend him everywhere, will give a reality to Queen Victoria's sovereignty over India which it has lacked heretofore. That the visit will be to the common good of India and England, we doubt not for one moment. That the Prince's reception in all parts of our Indian Empire will be as cordial as at Bombay we feel assured; while, in common with all loyal subjects of the Queen, we wish him God-speed on his way, and a safe return home next year.

A DISTINGUISHED MASON.

"A GOODLY presence" has been the making of many a man, who, but for his physical advantages, might have long kicked his heels in the cold before he had persuaded the world to value him for his mental endowments. We are all prone to judge the people we meet by the impressions which mere physical qualities produce upon our minds. Few men are gifted with sufficient insight into character to be able to recognise a great soul under an unsightly husk. The faculty of reading men is only acquired by those who have passed the greater portion of their lives in public, and even this schooling is often lost upon a dullard. The human face, like the human mind, is not an easy task to master, and he who can find the clue to a man's character, in the lines which are written on his brow, may flatter himself that he has acquired no mean art. Books, after all, are for children. "The proper study of mankind is Man." The subject of our sketch may be styled, emphatically, a man of the time. An observer would no more think of classing him with the men of the age which is passing away than they would think of comparing Apollo with Hercules. We occasionally see faces which irresistibly recall the past. Some of the men we know recall the age of wigs, ruffled shirts, and gallantry. We have been positively startled, sometimes, by apparitions of flesh and blood, if we may use a paradox, who bring back to our minds the age of Louis Quatorze, the Georgian era, or that period in English history which has been so deeply impressed on our minds by the portraits from the pencil of Vandyke. Faces of this type are, however, rare, and our studies in the picture galleries which we have been privileged to visit have convinced us that the human face changes from age to age. Indeed, a writer in the Art Journal, has recently developed this idea in a most ingenious fashion, and the facts he brings forward are conclusive proofs in favour of a theory which we have held for years. Our subject, we have said, is undoubtedly a man of the period; dress him in doublet and hose, or in scarlet laced coat and breeches, with point lace ruffles to his shirt, paint him so on the canvas, shave off his glossy moustache, and we pledge ourselves that we will immediately recognise his features as peculiar to this century. Yet you might wander through the streets for a whole day without meeting with a better looking or more gentlemanlike person, or with one more stalwart of frame and symmetrical of limb. His frock coat fits him to perfection, and exhibits a frame of which an athlete would not be ashamed. The dark and piercing eye and the aquiline nose are in perfect keeping with the figure; the face, indeed, is that of a strong willed, keen and clever man; a man, whose legal training has taught him to grasp readily at the leading points of any matter that may be submitted to his judgment. You feel assured that this man will not readily make mistakes, or if he should occasionally fall into them, he will extricate himself by the aid of a ready wit, and sound practical good sense. If a discerning stranger were told that he is one of the princes of the Order, he would at once exclaim, "that man is worthy of high command; he may not be a profound thinker, a great logician, or a born orator, but nature intended him for a ruler, and he looks every inch a leader of men." Of his exact rank in Masonry we shall not speak; we prefer that these sketches shall be somewhat vague, since if we paint skilfully, and from the life, our readers will be sure to discover the persons who have honoured our literary studio with a visit. It is sufficient for us to say, that our distinguished brother is a great Mason, on whose breast a perfect galaxy of honestly won orders shines like the prominent stars of the firmament. On a recent occasion his name was in everybody's mouth, and the winged messengers of the press carried his fame to the farthest quarter of the globe. Masons are accustomed to speak, not less of his administrative qualities, than of the remarkable urbanity which he exhibits to the youngest brother. At the Board of General Purposes his voice carries due weight, and his Masonic career has been marked by labours, as great as they are beneficent. Possessed of singular capacity for business, and a large share of that wonderful tact, which is often conspicuous by its absence in some people, whom the irony of fate brings to the top, he has been remarkable as a chairman, and has conducted the business of the Order with distinguished ability. He is a practical man, who cares little for the theoretical speculations of literary Masons, and has confined himself to those works of practical benevolence for which our Order has, in these days, become famous. Many a widow has had cause to bless him, and many a fatherless child has been taught to regard him as a second parent. His strong voice, powerful as the frame from which it emanates, has often been raised in the cause of the suffering and the oppressed, and if it be indeed true that the good men do in this world lives after them, then his Masonic virtues will constitute his most appropriate epitaph, when he has "gone before" to a better land. But his fame, as a man and a citizen, is on a par with his renown as a Mason. In the city, he is a prominent figure, and stands conspicuous as one of the great ceremonial officers of the greatest corporation in the world. Some of us can remember the circumstances under which he was elected to the high office he now fills. The Corporation, at a critical period, were anxiously looking for a man with talent, and personal qualities of weight sufficient to sustain the old prestige of the City. A vast majority of Civic magnates hailed him as the man for the vacant office, and his career as an official has amply justified their choice. Persons who are conversant with civic affairs, tell us that he mastered the complex business of the Corporation in an incredibly short period, and that, with the single exception of the Recorder, no officer is more highly respected within the hallowed precincts of the Guildhall. Possibly his indirect influence and example has had much to do with the growing interest in Masonry which is manifested by city men of the highest standing. We say indirect influence advisedly, for no man is less given to talking shop than our distinguished brother, who is an official and nothing more within the Civic boundary, whatever he may be out of it. Of his future career in the Order it would be idle for us to speculate, "but," to borrow, with a slight paraphrase, the language of a distinguished writer, "if his ambition be on a level with his understanding, if he judges of what is truly honourable for himself, with the same superior genius which animates and directs him to eloquence in debate, to wisdom in decision," even our poor pen "shall contribute to reward him. Recorded honours shall gather round his monument and thicken over him. It is in solid fabric, and will support the laurels that adorn it." These praises must not be regarded as the language of mere panegyric. "They will wear well, for they have been dearly earned."

Digitized by Google

GRAND CHAPTER OF IOWA, U.S.

THE Grand Chapter of R.A. Masons of the above State met for the despatch of important business on the 19th ult., the Sessions being held at the Odd Fellows' Hall in the City of Keokuk. At the third sitting, on Thursday, the 21st, there were present, the following Grand Officers, namely, Companions

W. W. Estabrook, E.G. Master First Veil.

Together with representatives of fifty-two out of the seventy-five chartered Chapters in the jurisdiction and the three under dispensation.

After the formal business of opening Grand Chapter in ample form had been despatched, the M.E.G.H.P. Robert F. Bower very ably, and in full detail, reviewed the occurrences of the year that had just been brought to an end. The following were then chosen Grand Officers for the year 1875-6, viz. :—

Grand High Priest—H. S. Winslow, Newton.
Deputy Grand High Priest—Fred Getchell, Des Moines.

G. Master 1st Veil—Jerome Burbank, Waverly.
G. Chaplain—Downing Bangh, McGregor.
G. Guard—Theodore Schreiner, Mt. Pleasant.

Standing Committees were also elected, and shortly after Grand Lodge was called from labour to refreshment. At 2.30 p.m. the street parade moved off in order of procession along some of the principal thoroughfares of the city to Chatham-square Church, where the ceremony of installing the new Grand Officers was most impressively performed. Then was delivered the following address, which is so admirable, that we have thought it desirable to reproduce verbatim et literatim as it appeared in the Daily Gate City (Keokuk) under date of the 22nd October, from which also we have culled the above particulars of the proceedings of the Grand Chapter.

P.G.M. PARVIN'S ADDRESS.

The present year of our Lord is, as it were, the centennial eve, and already have the first acts in the drama of its celebration passed in review before the Nation. Ere we shall again be assembled in annual convocation and conclave, the centennial of the Nation's birth will have come and gone. In the near future, so near indeed as to be almost present, the people of this land of the free and the asylum of the oppressed of all nations; and not these alone, but all people reached by the advancing civilization of the age will be engaged in celebrating the event in a manner, and upon a scale commensurate with its importance. It must, in the nature of events, be so, because it marks an era in human progress which concerns, not the citizens of our great Republic alone, but those of the whole civilised world.

Nor is it merely the interest of the passing hour which concerns us and them. Around it is clustered, and upon its future depends the weightiest considerations which can affect a people interested in the solution of the grandest problem of human life—civil government. Ours has been well defined by the martyred President to be a "government of the people, by the people and for the people." Hence all classes of citizens, as individuals, associations, societies or states (we, as Masons, being a constituent part) must feel a deep interest in an event in which we and they have not heretofore, and will not again be called upon to participate—the baptismal of our centennial anniversary. It was no insignificant event, when on the morn of a bright summer's day the old bell of Independence Hall "proclaimed liberty throughout the world," in notes so loud and clear that the sound as not died away, for its echo, like the vision of the pulpit, ever and anon comes to us from the distant hills of far off nations struggling to be free.

As Free and Accepted Masons, we, and those we represent upon this joyous occasion, feel an interest in common with you, the ladies and gentlemen of this, the Gate City of Iowa. Your very name serves ever to recall the past of our early history, and thus becomes an index to mark the progress we have made in all that goes to make up the advance of civilization over barbaric modes of life. True it is that the institution, one of whose steps in the march of time we to-day commemorate, had its rise in a dark age and among a despotic people—yet its greatest development and most rapid progress has been among the people the most enlightened and whose institutions secure to the many the largest degree of rational liberty. Freemasonry may, nay, does exist under governments the most despotic; but it cannot expand and grow into general favour and usefulness, except where freedom is the birthright of the individual, and guaranteed by bonds imperishable as is nature. In seeking the land where it has flourished the most and borne its best fruits, you must turn to those nations which furnish the best and safest guarantees for "free thought, free speech, free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color or religion." In all absolute governments our society has been at times, and too often, under the ban of the government, under the heel of the governor, be he Pope, Emperor or King.

Nevertheless, it is a well attested fact, true as wonderful, that Freemasonry is universal—existing in every nation, among all peoples, and its mysteries taught in every written language.

In common with our brethren of every jurisdiction are the Masons of Iowa called upon to join hands in this Centennial enterprise, and take part in the work to be done. The summons has already come from the city of Brotherly Love, whose Masons claim—and with much show of reason—that the first Lodge chartered in America was in their city, inviting the Templars and Masons of Iowa to meet their brothers there in the year of our nation's jubilee. And surely we have an interest in such an event—one so telling upon the progress of all that goes to make a nation great, and its citizens prosperous and happy.

And here we are met with the question how shall we, as Masons, engage in this work? Surely not as the vague traditions of the Order relate, that the captives returning from Babylon to Jerusalem engaged in rebuilding the city and temple of the Lord, made desolate by the Chaldees, arms in hand to protect themselves from surrounding foes. Nor should we go up, as did the tribes of old, to the dedication of the Temple, when Solomon, in all his glory, placed the copestone amid the rejoicings of the gathered hosts. To all our people, the present is a time of universal peace and plenty, and there is none to molest and make us afraid. The Mason's temple—the greatest ever dedicated by the fraternity to Masonry, virtue, and universal benevolence—has already (a triad ago) been consecrated to the practice of our rites and ceremonies by the pouring on of corn, wine and oil, emblems of health, plenty and peace to the Craft and the world. Not as in the past then will we go, for the educated and intelligent man of to-day is not of those, "being more exceedingly jealous of the tradition of their fathers." Rather like Paul, after his conversion, would we hold to the truth of the gospel which comes by faith in historical truth, and not the vain traditions which have so long obtained among men and Masons.

Our fellow-citizens will go armed and equipped according to the law of individual and national progress everywhere manifest, bearing in their hands the fruits of their labors. The agriculturist with "the fruit of the ground," and the herdsman with "the firstlings of his flock and the fat thereof"—but not in contention and wrath, the accompaniments of the first recorded offering to the Lord. With them will go the artisan bearing the work of his skilled hands, the artist with the choicest productions of his cultivated taste, the miner with the treasurers of beauty and usefulness, contributed at his bidding by our mother earth, while the man of science and genius will be represented by models of what his brain hath wrought out or evoked at his inspired bidding. All men and women will go carrying the harvest of toil, whether of hand or mind, or both conjoined.

All things will contribute to show the progress made in the useful arts and sciences, and the offering will be made by all our people, and those of every nation and the isles of the sea, for all have an interest in this, the world's movement, centering in this sovereign State, though the youngest in years, "the first among its equals," in all that constitutes the State.

The lesson in its usefulness will very much depend upon how it is learned and improved. "A centennial is imperfectly improved unless an accurate balance is struck between the profit and loss flowing from the event celebrated, and a discriminating estimate is made that will show upon the whole world is better or worse off for what is commemorated." It will be wise for us as a people, and for us as a society, to inquire in what respect we have fallen below the standards of a hundred years ago, as well as in what respect we have risen above them; and in estimating our gains we will do well to consider the losses, if we would arrive at conclusions at all profitable to ourselves.

The President of the nation, recently at the capital of our State, in the only general utterance ever escaping his lips, declared this important truth, to which it would be well to give heed that "the centennial year of our national existence is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundation of the structure commenced by our forefathers a hundred years ago at Lexington." So recent is our organization as a nation that it is an easy matter to bring in review the past, and all the past, in our history and growth, from so small a beginning, to the present outgrowth of a centennial and millions of freemen, the bulwark of the world's liberty, which, in the end, all people must share and enjoy or become, as Napoleon declared, Cossack without end.

The instructions and admonitions we have cited as applicable to the nation, apply with equal force and significance to us as a society. True, we cannot, with the nation, go back to our origin as an institution, and trace its progress through the long years of its history to the present. Nor is there any occasion for such a useless waste of time and effort. It will suffice if we well and truly trace its progress and history for the century that is passed, and confine ourselves to the truth as it is told. As Masons, symbolic and Royal Arch, and as Templars (who though individually are Masons, their organization is not Masonic, as the ignorant have declared, for Masonry is of all religions and cosmopolitan, while Templars are purely and solely Christian, excluding the Jew and the Gentile), we are wont to meet annually and as often to tell the old story of the origin of the institution, and present the people who honour with their presence our public assemblies, that same old dish of hash called Masonic history, tracing the institution back to the time "when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Or if they (that is the grandiloquent orators) be a little modest or doubting in faith, they will drop off a few cycles and come down to the time when "Adam delved and Eve span" without the garden from which they had been expelled by an angry God whose laws they had not at naught, in presuming, as some of our illustrous brothers and Sir Knights have since presumed, to rebel against constituted authority and set up their will as the law for all to follow or be for ever "anathema maranatha." Such oracles are always proclaiming as Masons, Enoch, the translated, Solomon, the wise, and the St. Johns of Christian sanctity. It is amusing to note how they always enroll among their numbers the noble and the good of all nations, and all the time as carefully excluding the opposite class. Another and a large number more of our anniversary orators drop the antediluvian chapter, and are even so considerate as to come down to the period of the building of the first temple, and trace its origin to that event, and make Solomon its great founder, as God's viceregent in its creation. And it is indeed only within a few years past that a generation of doubting Thomases have arisen, who demand the proof that even these things are so, and have applied the same tests to Masonic history as has been for a century applied to all sacred and profane history—to the end that the truth might be eliminated from the myths and traditions which have so long misled even the world of letters.

My hearers (whether Masons or no) can recall the times almost a score, when they have heard not only the nonsense we have related as touching the times so long remote, but coming down to our own day and country, three blind leaders have, time and again, so often proclaimed as a fact, that they no doubt believe that "all the general officers of the revolution were Masons, except the traitor Arnold," and that "all the Presidents of the Republic were Masons." As we penned these lines we received through the mails a circular, from a publishing house at the National Capitol, named for a man, who, when a boy, would not lie, asking our aid as a Mason, to further the sale of a series of Presidential portraits they have executed. And what think you was the consideration upon which they presumed to invoke our aid as a Mason and an officer in a Masonic body whose jurisdiction is co-extensive with that of the State. That circular publishes to the world, with solemn emphasis, that all the Presidents were Masons. As happily there have been no traitors (as in the case of the Generals) so the usual exception of one as in the case of Judas and Arnold is not made by this class of-buncombe orators—of which Orator Puff is a fair exponent.

But you, my brethren, must not think this class of speakers are all foreign, for we have some of the most famous within our own Grand bodies. You have only to examine the proceedings of one of the Grand bodies here and now represented to find published an oration from which we quote as follows. In speaking as usual of the antiquity of Freemasonry, the orator says: "Masonry and Christianity were married and the union was designed by Omnipotence himself, and that this marriage took place in the reign of the Roman Emperor Constantine [who died A. D. 337] and the union so consummated continued until the Reformation [A. D. 1517, a period of twelve centuries] when in consequence of the intolerance, bigotry and corruption of the Romish church, the twain were separated, never to be re-united again." Warming with his subject our eloquent brother adds, "that the studious Knight Mason of to-day knows that the intimate union of religion and Masonry is something older than the marriage of order with the church of Christ, before the inauguration of the church [A. D. 33] Masonry was, (the emphasis is his) and when the church was born it was promptly adopted by the fraternity, the which with reverent humility abdicated its right as elder sister and exponent of the will of the Deity." Verily our Iowa exponent of Masonry is not to be outdone by the long line of his illustrious predecessors.

Now, in all candour and with all proper respect to the brethren, to this audience, not overlooking my own self respect as a Mason and a man of mature age, I must declare that such stuff, while it may possibly (though we can devine no good reason) be "sold to marines," certainly to all such heresies we may apply the injunction of David in his lament over Saul, and "tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askenon." Such tales will surely, sooner or later, return to our hurt, as they ever should.

It is always the safest course to presume that the audience is quite as intelligent as ourselves, and likely to be as well informed upon historical topics, whether relating to the history of the world, the church, the nation, or to Masonry even, as an institution of great age and universal diffusion among men. History of Freemasonry is not one of our mysteries—secrets we truly have, and

"All secrets until they are once known,
Are wonderful ————"

Now it is too bad upon these annual occasions, and at home, to repeat parrot-like such stale legends—no they are not legends even, which are defined to be "doubtful narratives," for there is no doubt about these stories being falsehoods tending to mislead. How much more grevious then would be the sin to go to Philidelphia the ensuing year and harrangue the assembled Masons of the world in the language of these legends, fables, myths—falsehoods in plain English, the language of freemen. This is no way to celebrate the nation's jubilee or the Mason's part in it; however humble it may have been. Nor may it be amiss to repeat our previous utterance, that the tests which enlightened and judicious criticism has applied to the unravelling of the fabulous history of the early nations of the world have been as successfully applied to the elucidation of Masonic history, and to the separation of the truth from the fables that have so long led as willing captives so many of our brethren who are fond of the marvellous.

In the light of this evidence, then, we can assure even the enemies of our Order, that Adam and Enoch, and their long line of successors, ante and postdiluvian, are perfectly free from the sin and odium the antis would attach to the "Morgan killers" of the nineteenth century.

And pity 't is true,"

that even Solomon was no Mason. With all his wisdom, great as it was, he knew no more of the mysteries of Freemasonry than did the beautiful (of course she was beautiful) Queen of Sheba who came from afar to adore his wisdom and the temple he built, if not to love his person. Nor is there any evidence, however faint, to prove that either of the St. Johns, the austere and the lovely followers of all that is good in heaven or on earth, were Masons, beyond the wish that it were so, of the Christian portion of the universal brotherhood. Nor is it true that all the Presidents, from Washington to Grant included, were or are Masons. The first was, the last is not. And what would the spirits of those anti-Masons, the elder and younger Adams, and Van Buren, and Fillmore, say to the cruel accusation, could they but wing their way to the earth and throw back the lie in the face of their falsifiers. It is true, however—and the truth should be told—that Arnold, the single traitor of his age and country, was a Mason, as is well attested by the records of his Lodge in Connecticut, his native State. So much the worse, both for the traitor and those who, without evidence or trial, would exclude him from their associates.

But all these sins of commission affect only profane history, whose antiquarious critics have successfully exposed and corrected the errors.

There yet remains the last and the greatest: the charge that Freemasonry is a Divine institution: that it was wedded to the church, and usurped from it the office of "exponent to the voice of Deity," and such declarations are worse than heresy—they are blasphemous, and calculated to degrade the institution in the estimation of every believer in the Christian religion, and to bring it into just contempt among all honourable men, of whatever name they may be called.

The institution of Freemasonry did not originate among the Jews, nor even in Asia, nor at the time nor under the circumstances so commonly, by even the moderates, assigned to its origin. It sprang, according to the best evidence attainable, in Europe, and during the so-called dark or middle ages, and originated with the architects or builders of those times. The oldest Masonic book in existence is not two centuries old, and it would be charitable to add five centuries to the oldest date or record that enlightened or persevering research has yet assigned to anything connected with the origin of the Institution of Freemasonry. And the remotest, even of these dates, fall far short of the reign of Constantine the Great, when, as has been represented, Masonry was married to the church. The bones of that great Emperor had crumbled to dust a thousand years before the world, circumscribed to atomic limits, knew of Masonry, or of that famous wedding.

When and wherever Masonry did originate, it was the work of man's hand, and although we believe it to be the oldest, if not the best of human benevolent and social institutions, it certainly commends itself to the enlightened consideration and unprejudiced judgment of men for what it is, and what it has done, as one of the conservators of human actions. It is not only wholly unnecessary to attempt to trace its origin to the fabulous ages, or what is worse, to claim for its author and founder the Creator of the Universe and of man, as all such pretensions only serve to cast ridicule upon the silly pretender, if not the institution itself. Nor did it commence its wonderful and universal mission fully developed, as we now find it, as sprang Minerva full fledged from Jupiter's brain—but it is the growth of ages, and its progress has largely adapted itself to the wants of men as the years have rolled by, notwithstanding the equally vain boast of some of its followers that it has been and is as unchangeable as were the famed laws of the Medes and Persians. It originated in the wants of man, and was created to meet the demands of an age of transition when old things were beginning to pass away, and a new light began to dawn upon the world, coming forth to a newer and a higher civilization, in which Masonry was to exert, as it as ever proved, a powerful agency for good.

Its value is inherent and is made manifest by what it as accomplished for the world as a pre-eminently social, moral, and benevolent institution. Societies in an organized form are a necessity of man's existence in a state conducive to his highest development and greatest happiness. And as the world as seen and felt the power and influence of Masonry, so have those who were not of the household of faith organized one and another of the numerous societies of the day, all offshoots in form and design of the Masonic institution, though modified to meet the particular and peculiar ideas or wants which have called them into existence. Each and all of these, no doubt, are accomplishing good in their way—some general, others local, and we bid them go on and do all the good they can, while we, their elder sister or brother—we leave the determination of the gender to the grammarians of the future—will heartily bid them rejoice. Freemasonry of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries exists under two distinct forms or rites, the York and Scotch, each having symbolic Masonry of three degrees in common—the York rites of universal diffusion has but the three degrees, while the Scotch has thirty in addition. The Scotch rite universally prevails among the English and the Latin nations of Europe and America.

In the United States and Canada, Freemasonry is practised under what is called the "American system," as such, which was largely manufactured by Thomas Smith Webb, during the closing year of the last century. Under this system, the York rite consists of Lodges, Chapters, Councils and Commanderies—though the Templars are only Masonic in name. The Royal Arch degree, which is the Chapter in fact, the Council degrees and the orders of the Temple are taken largely from the Scotch rite and moulded into the York system. The Royal Arch and the Chapter is confined wholly to England, its colonies and the United States, and originated in its English form (which is quite different from the American) about the middle of the last century. The Councils, as separate from the governing bodies of the Scotch rite, are of very recent origin and are the outgrowths of the Chapters designed and perpetuated to gratify the unholy ambition for separate organizations—and are confined wholly to the United States and Canada.

The order of the Temple exists in France where it originated about a century ago, and in England an independent form, and in the United States, where it has quasi connection with Masonry under modern nomenclature of the "American System." Our fathers, a century since, were content with the three degrees of symbolic Masonry, which are universally diffused among men—but their children fell from the state of purity through the sin of ambition, which is older than the original sin of the most orthodox theologian of the old school—for by it an archangel fell, and men and Masons have inherited the taint, and we of to-day are taxed to keep up the cumbersome machinery in order to gratify our pride and inherit the honours of official rank. Templars and Royal Arch Masons could accomplish in the Lodge all they do in the Chapter and Commandery. To-day, as ever, when these several bodies "meet upon the level," the Templars become the "observed of all observers." There is in their order a something which we dare not call "fuss and feathers," in sympathy with our nature which calls forth our admiration, and awakens our interest. It is not its universality, for Templarism, as we practise the rite, is wholly American, and the Order of the Temple is confined to England and France. It is not its antiquity, for it has not reached its centennial anniversary. It is true, however, with it, as with symbolic Masonry, that pretentious claims of remote antiquity have been advanced—many, even in this State, have been asked, "Breathes there a Knight Mason with soul so dead as not to be proud of the distinction of being, by adoption, the successors of De Molay, the martyred Grand Master, and the last of the line of the old Templars, which, as such, became extinct A.D. 1314, or more than five centuries before the modern Order of the Temple had its rise. So it may be humiliating to the pride of the Mason to learn that the boastful antiquity of the institution has no basis, in fact, upon which to stand, and that in the future the historians and anniversary orators must drop off some ten centuries before, and as many since the founding of the Christian church, to which it has been claimed our institution was wedded. All this we must do if we would perform our vows of truth, which is the first lesson taught in Masonry, and the corner stone upon which Knighthood is erected as a system and an order. In future, then, men and brothers and Sir Knights, let us be content to own the truth we profess to revere, and yield a willing allegiance to the spirit of research which is the grand characteristic of the age. The most notable event in the history of modern Masonry is the spirit of enquiry which now animates the intelligent brotherhood. The labours of such historians and antiquarians as Findel, in Germany, Lyon, in Scotland, and Hughan and Woodford in England, have done much, very much, to remove the rubbish which has so long blinded our way in our efforts to find the truth.

These men have done for Masonic history, what the Niebuhr's Masons and other historical inquirers and critics have done for profane history, eliminated the truths for the fables and myths of the past ages. Nor is the spirit of free enquiry confined to the few named above. Many Grand Lodges and individuals in this country have been imbued with the spirit which has animated the leaders, resulting in the founding of libraries or collections of books, old and new, treating of secret societies of the olden times, and of all that touches symbolism upon which they are founded. In this, our own Grand Lodge of Iowa, with an enlightened wisdom, commendable in itself, and our Grand High Priest and Past Grand Commander, your enlightened, enterprising fellow citizen, Sir Robert F. Bower, are noted and conspicuous examples. We need not fear that these researches will in the least militate against the value, utility, or interest of our ancient and honourable Institution. It is old enough to have learned the wisdom of the ages as they have proved, and honourable for the good it has done, and is still capable of doing, if directed with a wise forethought to the demand of the ages, present and to follow.

In view, then, of what is here revealed, we may affirm that Freemasonry is an Institution of man, originated by man and designed for and adapted to the wants of man. It is, as has so often been declared, a society of ceremonies, forms and symbols, by which it is distinguished and known from all other societies. It is more, much more, it is a living, moving, pervading Institution, manifesting itself in much purity and great power through the beautiful old language and material emblems, devised by man and designed to elevate his character, and bring him into a closer communion with Him in whom all wisdom, and power, and worship are centered.

"It is one thing to be a Mason by virtue of initiation into its mysteries, and another to imbibe the spirit of its sublime teachings. It has been truly said that we may know its history and traditions, its achievements and jurisprudence; we may wander through its mysterious chambers, understanding and interpreting its symbolism; we may be learned in its lectures and masters of its secret work, and yet the volume of Masonry be to us a sealed and silent book. We may know its requirements and disregard them—understand the duties it enjoins and not observe them. We may admire its spirit, and refuse that spirit a dwelling place within our souls. Its lessons may have fallen on our hearts like grateful rains upon the vast Sahara—producing no fruits, but leaving behind only the desolate waste of former years. We may have appreciated and admired the beauty, symmetry and perfections of its ceremonies, its lectures and its laws; but if we have failed to observe that these are but the avenues which lead up to the moral edifice beyond, that they are only emblems of the like qualities in the spiritual structure—Masonry itself—then indeed our lessons and our toils have been in vain. But the kindly spirit, the sentiment, the charity, the emotion of heart which leads us up with pity, tenderness and love, and prompts and commands us to do good for the love of doing it, and of being just and generous—the power which imbues with the essence of divinity—which expands and purifies, elevates and ennobles the soul, and fills it with the presence of the Infinite—which lifts us upward and onward, and assimilates our natures to the spiritual character of the Heavenly Master, and fits and prepares us for the society of the angels—this is Masonry; all else are but the agencies through which it toils and triumphs. This is the divinity which dwells within your temples; and if it dwell not also in your hearts, then you are but whited sepulchres, bearing the name but mocking the spirit and purpose of your Fraternity.

But this is the testimony of one who has practised its rites and felt its influence, hear what an outside observer has to say:—

"Although I am not (he says) a member of the ancient and honourable order which traces its origin through the annals of authentic modern history into the region of dim and misty tradition, I am not so careless of what has passed in the world, but I can recall the services which it has rendered to civilisation, to freedom, to law, to the elevation of man and the worship of God.

"Beginning at the remote period, when intercourse was infrequent, and communication difficult, when science was occult and little cultivated, when the arts were in their rude and feeble infancy, when rank and privilege asserted an inviolate ascendancy over mind, intellect and culture, too often over right and justice, this order established a general brotherhood, not recognising outward station, nor limited by political or geographical lines, getting strength as it went on, it has extended through the countries and spread over the world, not stopping for race or language or form of government. It flourishes alike on the glaciers of Switzerland and beneath the palms of Oriental despotism, in free and enlightened America and England, and in superstitious and bigoted Spain and Portugal. Wherever it has gone, if I read history aright, it has carried the principles of fraternity and the practice of charity. It has mitigated the horrors of foreign war, and ameliorated the cruelties of civil strife. Its banners have been erected between the camps of hostile armies, and men who were to meet on the morrow in the struggle of life and death, have exchanged Knightly courtesies, and have softened their personal asperities beneath the mystic symbols. It has experienced the vicissitudes that are inseparable from human institutions—it has tasted the sweets of power and has eaten the bitter bread of exile. To-day princes and nobles have been proud to wear the insignia of its officers—to-morrow its camps have been burned at the stake. Under these varying fortunes it has preserved its principles and magnanimity. It has borne prosperity with moderation, and adversity with fortitude. It has loomed loftier through the mists of error, and gleamed brighter in the fires of persecution."

Such, my friends and brothers, is the Institution of Freemasonry as portrayed by a looker-on of candid judgment and impartial views. May it ever be our lot, Companions and Sir Knights, to preserve it untarnished from the world, and yours, fellow citizens of Iowa, to commend the good, uphold the right, and prosper on their way those whose mission it is to honour God, serve the brotherhood, and benefit the world at large.

The 15 sections were worked by the undermentioned brethren of the Salisbury Lodge of Instruction (presided over by Bro. Mander W.M. 1201) at the Faith Lodge of Instruction, 2 Westminster-chambers, on 2nd inst., viz., Bros. W. T. Morphew, G. W. Reed, A. Stewart, D. M. Belfrage, J. H. C. Watts, — Tolmie, T. Cull, G. Bubb, J. Wheeler, W. S. Lee, A. Boehr, F. Honeyman, A. C. Burrell, E. Farwig. The meeting was eminently successful and satisfactory, there being eighty-five brethren present. Votes of thanks were unanimously accorded to Bro. Mander for presiding, and to the brethren who had so efficiently worked the sections. Bro. Cottebrune Preceptor, and the brethren of the Faith Lodge are to be congratulated upon the substantial addition to the Lodge funds.

With reference to the correspondence about the Boys' School and its Management, we have received a letter, inserted hereinafter, the writer of which suggests that we should only insert letters if paid for beforehand as advertisements. This to us privately, but in his public letter he expresses an opinion that the point at issue should be inquired into and settled off hand. We think something of this kind should be done. At all events, so far as our columns are concerned, we shall put an end to the controversy next week. We may possibly offer a few further remarks at the same time.

MASONIC BOYS' SCHOOL.

To the Editors of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and FREEMASON.

SIRS,—I see with very great regret a correspondence in your papers of a most un-Masonic character, in reference to the Boys' School management.

What has become of our grand principles, "Brotherly love and charity?" they appear to be converted into envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness.

The course of action now taken can never bring about a satisfactory settlement of the question. It is a most unjustifiable course on the part of Bros. Tew and Perrott to publish, as they did, an "ex parte" statement to all the outer world.

Why Brother Binckes should have been attacked so personally I cannot see, except to satisfy the spite of a disappointed clergyman. His question had been decided by the House Committee, and they, not Bro. Binckes, are the responsible parties if injustice has been done.

One or two brethren should be selected by each party to investigate and set at rest the whole question privately, and report result of their enquiries, and not, as is now being done, holding up the Craft to the ridicule of all its enemies.

I would advise Bro. Binckes to keep quiet, and not lay himself open to be "shot at" as he is now.

I think it will be quite time enough to get up a testimonial to Bro. Perrott after the Report is out, and when it is found the amount of injuries he has done to the Charities of our Order.

Yours truly,

JOHN SUTCLIFFE.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I venture to avail myself of your kind intimation that correspondents may have an opportunity of expressing their opinions in your valuable paper on the controversy now going on respecting the management of the Boys' School.

My own opinion, arrived at from a calm and impartial consideration, both of the Pamphlets issued by Bros. Tew and Perrott, and the attempted replies on the part of Bro. Binckes, is, that for the welfare of our noble Institution, the general committee should at once call a special general court for investigation, and the result be made known to the subscribers. It is only fair that we should know officially, and in a straightforward manner, whether or not these charges are true; and if it be true (as I confess it appears to me to be), that a most extravagant system of management has been in force, then by all means let it be changed, and without delay.

Freemasons want no parsimony, no contemptible sordidness in the management of this or any other of our noble charities; what we want is this, that the very best possible for the money shall be obtained, and that those dear boys, the orphans of our departed brethren, shall reap to the fullest extent the benefit of our Masonic alms.

Magna est veritas. If the statements of Bros. Tew, Perrott and others can be so easily refuted, there should be no time lost, for an impression is daily obtaining that the Institution must seriously suffer unless this be done.

On pp. 29 and 30 of Messrs. Tew and Perrott's Pamphlet, I notice that it is stated that the sum of £141 13s is "not accounted for," and "missing." If Bro. Binckes can account for the expenditure, as it is to be hoped he can, why does he not do so? He rushes to the conclusion that he is charged with misappropriation, and then goes on to indignantly deny a "foul calumny," which, to my mind, has not been even insinuated. Surely when he commits himself to print he should be more circumspect and careful of his words, for when a man repudiates a charge which has never been made, it reminds one of the adage, "A guilty conscience needeth no accuser." Qui non novit tacere, nescit loqui.

Of course Bros. Mallam, Tew and Perrott are able to take their own course and to treat Bro. Binckes's letter with every consideration it deserves, they need no champion; but I maintain there is no spirit of brotherly love, no Masonic charity in the concluding words of Bro. Binckes's effusion (borrowed from Othello, Act IV., Scene 2) in which, adopting the language of the poet, he describes his brethren in the Craft (Messrs. M., T. and P.) as "rascals," and longs for a powerful whip in the hands of honest men to "drive them naked through the world."

Have we so learnt Masonry?

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours very sincerely and fraternally,

A P.G. OFFICER OF WEST YORKSHIRE.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I had not intended to trouble you further on the matters at issue between Messrs. Tew and Perrott and myself, but there are one or two remarks yet to be made. Those microscopic investigators may detect numberless little flaws in any statement, however carefully published, and they appear to derive immense gratification from the process. Utterly failing to bring me down on the only serious charge they have urged, they attempt to magnify every casual error, however unimportant, and to expand it into a fault. This reminds me of the argument of a celebrated Theologian in reply to similar style of criticism. "If all my critics can do is to prove that I have omitted to dot my i's and to cross my t's, they, in so doing, concede the major proportions I advance." It will add to the content of my two censors to be informed that I have discovered the discrepancy of £3, and shall present to the "Special Committee" appointed at my request, to examine the "Grant, Outfits, Gratuities Accounts," a statement that must be convincing to every mind, prejudiced or unprejudiced. It will then be for Messrs. Tew and Perrott to explain their rash hardihood in asserting that of "£314 5s only £172 10s are accounted for, leaving £141 15s of which no account is rendered." Such a course may possibly commend itself to those whom you describe, but not, I think, to lovers of justice.

In the Pamphlet, p. 8, par. numbered 4, I read—"There are many apparent errors, and yet the totals are always made to come right." In the word made is intended another sting. The totals always do come right, because they have so been audited and examined that they must be right. In splitting them into details there may be mistakes, but surely £12 10s and £7 10s equally make £20, as do £10 and £10.

I conclude with an extract from the speech of the late M.W. Grand Master, when presiding at the Anniversary Festival of this Institution in March 1874. After bearing testimony to the good and economical administration of its affairs, the noble Marquis remarked: "We have no right to make any charge against those who are engaged in the management of this School, such as those we have heard on some occasions made by persons who may not possibly have considered all the circumstances of the case."

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully and fraternally

FREDERICK BINCKES.

London, 11th Nov. 1875.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

Eastfield Villa, Hanwell.

8th November 1875.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—May I trouble you to insert the following in the next issue of THE CHRONICLE?

In his letter of last week Mr. Binckes, while admitting the mistakes in reference to James Gasson, in the Report for 1865, 2nd edition, with corrections, failed to say why the second instalment of the grant of £15, paid, according to the Secretary, in 1872, did not appear in 1872 Report.

The Secretary turns the remark in the last Pamphlet as to the trying times the masters, i.e. the Head Masters (Mr. Russell, B.A., Mr. Furrian and myself) have had to experience into a charge of tyranny against me, which he does not attempt to prove; such tyranny, had it existed, would certainly have reached the ears of the House Committee, a certain number of whom, as is well known, were deputed to treat with me respecting the withdrawal of my resignation. I have just had placed in my hands a printed copy of eight letters from four of the old staff of resident Masters, and while the available space in the columns of your paper would not permit of my dealing with them as I could wish, and am in a position to do, I trust I may be allowed to make a few brief remarks concerning each one, seriatim; in none of them is there to be found a single statement to justify the Secretary's trumped-up charge of "unparalleled tyranny and persecution," whilst Mr. Benge's communication tallies exactly with our succinct narrative of his case, see last Pamphlet, p. 7. The House Committee took no notice of it, beyond expressing their dissatisfaction at Mr. Benge's short notice; the Latin and French exercises given to their Master to examine, were such as had been previously gone over with the boys, and all this Master had to do was to see that the writing was fair, and check from the "Tutor's Key" the errors which had been pointed out in class. No knowledge of either language was needed for such work. I quite admit, and often regretted, that Mr. Benge had not more evenings at his disposal, and, as he might say now, if he chose to speak, I arranged after Midsummer so that he should; to be just, however, he ought to have stated that he was free, two or three times a week, during a portion of morning or afternoon school, while the other Masters and myself were at work. The next two letters are from Mr. W. H. Taylor, the former of which called forth very strong condemnation from the House Committee, who thought proper to dismiss him; the latter charging me with issuing instructions to Mr. Blackwell, whom, on the evening of his arrival, I personally introduced to Mr. Taylor and two or three of the other Masters, to hold no communication with any of them is in direct contradiction to Mr. Blackwell's language, see letter in last Pamphlet, pp. 33 and 34, wherein this gentleman states that my advice was "to steer an independent course."

As regards the next two letters, I have been informed quite recently by one, who heard the Secretary make the admission respecting the Matron's "highly improper" letter, that he acknowledged having had a hand in these too; I had no favourites, and asked for no support, but I did, what I shall ever do, as far as lies in my power, I protected the weak against the strong. The letters from Messrs. Mansell and Blackwell (pp. 33 and 34 of last Pamphlet) give some idea of what they had to put up with. The best comment on the next letter would be, the production, did space permit, of a subsequent note from Mr. Taylor: one extract is given, and, its acknowledged impropriety being taken for granted, I would say "Crimine ab uno disce omnes:" "Mr. W. H. Taylor has to request the Head Master that he will not pester him with any further notes during his stay here. It is not the intention of Mr. W. H. Taylor to take any part in the School work, or out of School duty," &c.

This is from the Master, whom, dismissed by the House Committee, the Secretary (see last Pamphlet, letter 23, p. 39) paid in advance. The next, from Mr. Webb, may be briefly dismissed, as, from its date, the correctness of the statements in note to letter 11 (p. 35 last Pamphlet) may be tested. The noises and jealousies were the Master's own seeking, and brought condign punishment. There are two points in the last letter from the Master I wish to clear up: the first, with regard to the "long past," the request emanated from me, though claimed by the writer; the second, with regard to the atrocious charge, that I tried to "set Master against Master," when I had essayed, some months before, to reconcile this Master with Mr. Taylor, who alone of the Masters revealed to me (there is no denying it) the existence of a "clique" against himself and me. The Drawing Master, to whom the reference is made, and myself were always on the best of terms: letter 14, p. 36 of last Pamphlet, and my letter (No. 8 in Pamphlet) showed how earnestly I desired peace and mutual reconciliation. Of the next letter I know nothing, though I have in my possession correspondence, which, if published, would demolish the Secretary's arguments. As regards the last, I ask, what could Mr. Hall, from his occasional visits once or twice a week, know of the teaching going on when he was never once seen in the class-rooms during the hours of study. In no single instance did his advice interfere with the routine work of school duties; there was no serious illness in the school from January 1874 to July 1875, and I saw but little of him, having no need of his professional attendance. The statement in Pamphlet respecting the use of wind instruments, was the expression of my opinion, that Mr. Hall did not approve of them for delicate boys, as the Secretary informs us the Masonic boys are, and my conviction as to his opinion being so, I do not intend to withdraw it, while it is certain that three boys have discontinued the practice (the Secretary knows the names) I give them to the best of my memory—Sparke, Pawley and Green—and, whether it is "nonsense" or not, the fact remains the same.

Before concluding my letter, I would ask, in accordance with a suggestion from a distinguished brother, whether the "vote of censure" on the Matron's conduct was formally communicated to her as desired at the Special House Committee meeting on the 24th of November 1874, and how far the report is correct, that the Secretary this year drew up a list of those whom he desired to be on the House Committee. I am informed, and, if need be, am prepared to give the name of my authority, that, on being taxed with this most unjustifiable procedure, the Secretary justified his action on the principle of "self-preservation." There are, I need hardly say, other ways of looking at the question, and, in bringing my remarks to a close, I would observe, with reference to the wishes of Mr. Binckes, in his last letter, that the class of persons alluded to by Shakspeare, as flagellators, would hardly accept at the Secretary's hands the instruments of scourge.

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally and faithfully,

O. G. D. PRESCOTT.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

Discoveries and Inventions of the Nineteenth Century.—By ROBERT ROUTLEDGE, B.Sc., F.C.S. Assistant Examiner on Chemistry, and on Natural Philosophy, to the University of London. With numerous Illustrations. London: George Routledge & Sons, The Broadway, Ludgate; New York: 416, Broome-street, 1876.

THIS is a perfect Cyclopædia of useful knowledge, and so clearly and entertainingly written, as fully to merit the character of "a popular account," which the author claims for it. The work does not profess to deal with all the discoveries and inventions which have thus far distinguished the present century. On the contrary, selections have been made, and in making the selections, the author has been hardly less successful than in his treatment. Nor, in treating the various subjects which are contained in this volume, has Mr. Routledge confined himself wholly to Nineteenth Century progress. In order to mark the great strides that have been made in these latter days, it was incumbent on him to refer to the work and the workmen that had gone before. Thus, in treating of Steam Engines, while the bulk of the matter is devoted to the progress made since 1800, the labours of Newcomen and Watt are not only referred to, but clearly and concisely set forth, so that we virtually have a history of the Steam Engine in all its stages. So in the chapters on "Light," the experiments of Sir Isaac Newton, and other men of eminence are referred to, so that, here again, we gain some insight into the progress which the world had made in the science of optics previous to the nineteenth century. Having said this much as to the manner in which Mr. Routledge has accomplished his task, which, with the exception of the chapters on "Shells and explosive Bullets," "the Suez Canal," and "Sand Experiments," by Mr. J. H. Pepper, embraces the whole volume, we shall best indicate the character of the book by noticing the subjects that are touched upon. These are firstly, "Steam Engines," "the Locomotive," "Portable Engines," "the Steam Hammer." Then follows a long chapter on "Iron," and then others on "Tools," "Railways," and "Steam Navigation." We are next told about "Ships of War," "Fire-arms," and "Torpedoes." Mr. Pepper's papers on that marvellous achievement of M. de Lesseps, "The Suez Canal," and "Sand Experiments," follow, after which come accounts of "Iron Bridges," "Printing Machines," "Book-boring," "Light," "Electricity," "the Electric-Telegraph," "Lighthouses," "Photography," "Aquaria," "Mineral Combustibles," and finally "the greatest discovery of the age," that force, like matter, is indestructible, and that it can no more be created than can matter. Having thus briefly indicated the principal contents of the volume, and having borne most willing testimony to the admirable manner in which the author has done his work, the care that he has taken in its arrangement—a care that is noticeable throughout—and the amount of labour and research which he must have gone through before a single line was written, we must leave it to our readers to judge for themselves of the matter it contains. The work is one of those without which a general library can hardly be described as complete, and will be found especially useful to the more advanced school boy, whose ideas are sufficiently developed for him to understand popular scientific works, and who is at the same time eager in his pursuits after scientific knowledge. We predict a large amount of popularity among this class of readers for Mr. Routledge's account of the "discoveries and inventions" of this century, and as the season for the giving of gifts is distant only a few weeks, we should suggest this volume as a very choice specimen of the gift-book, containing as it does the merits of a handsome exterior, a great array of well chosen and effective illustrations, and a well nigh inexhaustible store of valuable information.

MAGAZINES OF THE MONTH.

Blackwood has an excellent programme, one or two of the articles being specially interesting. The opening contribution, on "The French War Preparations for 1870," discloses to us a state of things for which we should never have given credit to our gallant neighbours, and which shows how woefully deceived the late Emperor must have been by his war office authorities. No wonder the Germans found themselves before Paris in less than two months' time from the outbreak of hostilities, having in the meantime defeated MacMahon and Frossard, captured the Emperor and the remnant of his gallant army at Sedan, and shut up Bazaine in and around Metz, after a series of most desperate battles. We hope our military authorities will listen to the warning and be prompt in taking measures for the better organisation of our small but costly army. In Part VII. of "The Dilemma," we are brought near to the end of the Mutiny. Lucknow has fallen, and only a few scattered bands remain to be stamped out. We see but little of Mrs. Falkland, who, on the death of her husband, retired to the Hills for the sake of security, but Yorke takes a prominent part and greatly distinguishes himself. "The Dutch and their Dead Cities," as well as the "Legends and Folk-lore of North Wales," are most interesting, but the article we like best of all is the closing one, on weather. After marking certain differences as to the climate and weather, the writer pursues the subject thus:—

"All sorts of rules are applicable to climate, but none are applicable to weather. Climate is monarchy, weather is anarchy. Climate is a constitutional government, whose organisation we see and understand; latitude and altitude are its king and queen; dryness and dampness are its two houses of parliament; animal and vegetable products are its subjects; and the isothermal lines are its newspapers; but weather is a red hot radical republic, all excitements and uncertainties, a despiser of old rules, a hater of proprieties and order. Climate is a great stately sovereign, whose will determines the whole character of the lives and habits of his retainers, but whose rule is regular, and is, therefore so little felt that it seems like liberty; but weather is a capricious cruel tyrant, who changes his decrees every day, and who forces us, by his ever varying whims, to remember that we are slaves. Climate is local; weather is universal. We are indifferent to climate because we are accustomed to it, but we are dependent on weather because we never know what form it will take to-morrow. Climate is the rule; weather is the exception. Climate is dignity; weather is impudence."

A neater style of writing, which, by the way, is followed up throughout the whole article, we have rarely seen. We should greatly prefer, however, that our English climate had fewer of the characteristics which the writer ascribes to weather. We fear that, as regards this country, weather is the rule, and climate the exception, unless we regard the latter as being regular by reason of its irregularities. But, trifling objections apart, we feel sure our readers will be delighted with the article, and as it purports to be one of a series on "Various Subjects," we may confidently look forward to a like pleasure for some months to come.

Part I. of a short story by Mary Cecil May, entitled "Under Life's Key," heads the list of contents in this month's Belgravia. It is effectively written, and contains one or two mysterious incidents, for the explanation of which we must wait patiently till next month. Mr. Escott's paper on "English Journalism in 1832 and 1874," which is described as "A Criticism and a Contrast," does him very great credit. He marks the contrast between these two epochs in English journalism with admirable judgment, while the tribute of respect he pays to the late Mr. Albany de Fonblanque will be accepted as just by all people who have studied the history of journalism. Among the "People whom we Miss," Mr. Percy Boyd brings before us this month one Statesman, whose name will always be spoken of lovingly as well as respectfully, we mean the late Lord Palmerston, who, while possessing great abilities, great force of character, and unrivalled powers of work, was perhaps appreciated rather for his kindliness and geniality than for the great qualities he undoubtedly possessed. Among the other contributions we have noted a favourable criticism of Mr. Henry Irving's "Macbeth, at the Lyceum," "My Uncle," by Edward Sala, and "Peeps at Domestic Life in India." The illustrations are capitally drawn. The Belgravia Annual is announced to appear on the 10th instant, and we are promised, next month, the opening chapters of a new novel by Miss Braddon.

We have, in Temple Bar, the third and last chapter of "Basil's Faith," a story full of incident, and showing great constructive power on the part of the author; an admirable sketch of the great "Richelieu," a sensible paper on "The Pleasures and Drawbacks of Travelling," and a well written account of one of the most important of "The Campaigns of Napoleon I.," namely, the one which terminated with his hard fought victory of Wagram, and in the course of which he experienced his first serious check—at Aspern, by the Arch Duke Charles. There is further, a pleasant description of "A Spanish Hill Town."

Both the serials which have been so long current in Cassell's Family Magazine are concluded this month. We are sorry Mrs. Banks has, to use a somewhat vulgar expression, so "piled up the agony" in the closing chapters. They seem to smack somewhat of the last scene in some desperate tragedy, when a good half of the personages get killed or seriously maltreated. Aspioall junior was brute enough already, without being made to slash his wife's shoulders with his sabre, and horsewhip her times out of number, while poor Clegg had suffered already by losing Augusta's hand without its being necessary he should marry, and so soon after lose his wife and children. However, Jabez and Augusta are at length united, and after that event, of course, all goes merrily enough, especially as the former, the once despised Bluecoat, has attained a position of eminence as "A Manchester Man." Mr. Manville Fenn contributes "A Sketch with a Moral," entitled "In an Empty House." There is a domestic article or two, one on "Little Children: How to feed them," another containing the usual "Chit-Chat on Dress," while the Gatherer furnishes some capital notes on such topics as "New Houses for the Working Classes," "Cattle on a Sea Voyage," and "Storing Fruit for the Winter." The word "Winter," by the way, reminds us that we have omitted to note the very useful, homely suggestions contained in the article on "Winter Evenings: How shall we spend them?" Any of our readers who may be at a loss how to pass the long winter evenings will do well to consult this number of Cassell's Family Magazine.

The Westminster Papers contains, besides a careful review of "The Chess World" during the past month, some excellent dramatic criticism, some verses, signed Z., and entitled "My Conqueror." Chess, like Masonry, is hardly adapted to poetry, but Z. has achieved a great success. His verses are capital, and we hope, if this is his first essay, it will, at all events not be his last. We give the last stanza:—

Your Queen thinks her foes too enraptured
To harm her wherever she moves;
And coolly declines to be captured,
When daring unfortunate proves.
With triumph and victory laden,
Their efforts she treats with disdain;
Ah, say is she not like the maiden
My heart has been sning in vain?

There are three leaders—if we may so describe them—in the Canadian Masonic News, which will meet, as they certainly deserve to meet, with the approval of our readers. These are severally entitled, "The Principles of Freemasonry—Their Origin," "The Claim of Masonry to be a Moral and Social Institution," and "The Mason's Voyage after Truth." If our space permits, we hope to reproduce one, if not the whole three. We trust we shall find room for all, for it would certainly puzzle us to make a selection, so equal are their merits. Of the other contents, we can speak in the warmest praise of the address delivered by Grand Z. at the annual convocation of the Grand Chapter of Canada on 12th August last, and Bro. Jacob Norton contributes one of a series of papers on "The Successive Aims of the Masonic Fraternity," containing much valuable information.

On two previous occasions we quoted an acrostic by M. A. Baines, one from Tinsleys' and the other from Colburn's New Monthly. A third from the same pen, and exhibiting equal skill and ability, appeared in the latter magazine for October, but the pressure on our space has been far heavier than usual these last few weeks, and, moreover, the number did not reach us in time for our usual notice at the beginning of the month. Hence the delay this week in reproducing the following lines on October:—

O 'er hill and dale, now Autumn wends her way,
C areful to blend the tints with painter's skill,
T o give the landscape still a richer hue;
O r like dissolving views, which, as we gaze,
B lend each with each, till one is lost to sight:
E ach month thus follows month, and leads us on,
R egardless of our loss: in that we gain.

FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

WE refer elsewhere to the visit of the Prince of Wales to India. Beyond expressing, therefore, our satisfaction at the hearty reception he experienced at Bombay, and especially by the Brethren, we offer no comment here. The Princess of Wales is still at Sandringham, with the King and Queen of Denmark, and her sister the Princess Thyra, as her guests. Bro. H.R.H. Prince Leopold is again President of the Oxford Chess Club. The Duchess of Edinburgh and the Royal infant are progressing so favourably that the issue of further bulletins has been discontinued for some days.

The event of the week was, of course, the Lord Mayor's Show and the banquet at Guildhall in honour of the New Lord Mayor, Bro. Alderman Cotton. Some of the ancient glories of the Show were revived, while one or two new features were added, so that, in spite of the dismal, though seasonable, weather, this last 9th of November must be recorded as a great success, ominous, no doubt, of the success which will attend Alderman Cotton during the term of his Mayoralty. The men in armour were revivified, though not so numerous as we have seen them on some occasions. The bands and banners were greatly in excess of the usual number, and there was a detachment of sailor boys from the training ship Warspite, together with representatives of the Manchester Unity and Foresters, appropriately apparelled. The presence of the latter may naturally enough be connected with the successful exertions of the Corporation in preserving Epping Forest from the further depredations of the greedy land despoilers, whose carelessness as to the difference between meum and tuum was becoming too pronounced to be pleasant. Yet a little while longer and, but for the action of the Corporation, Epping Forest would have become a thing of the past. But to return to the Show. The City Marshal looked as formidable as a Field Marshal. The Lord Mayor's footmen were simply gorgeous, as were also the liveries of the Sheriffs. Moreover, the presence of the military added considerably to the splendour of the Show, which was received along the whole route to Westminster and back again with much good natured enthusiasm, so that if any doubts ever existed of the popularity of this annual pageant, they must have been dispelled on Tuesday. The unfavourable reception accorded a few years since to one Lord Mayor, who thought it prudent to curtail the extent of the procession, and considerably lessened its magnificence, shows a strong feeling of respect for the forms and ceremonies of days gone by. Be this as it may, on the return to Guildhall, the distinguished visitors poured in very rapidly, and were well received. This applies specially to the Prime Minister, who is evidently a great favourite east of Temple Bar. The banquet calls for no special comment. It passed off much as such banquets usually do. But the after dinner speeches on this occasion, and particularly under existing circumstances, were looked for with a considerable amount of interest. The Prime Minister was very guarded in what he said, however. The assurance that the prospect of a war with China had passed away was gratifying, of course, and in more senses than one. On the one hand it is to the commercial interests of both countries that peace should be maintained between them, while even in a war with the Chinese there is little honour to be gained by engaging a power so manifestly inferior to us in military strength. But it was impossible to ignore the danger that is looming in the far east of Europe, and, anent this critical subject, Mr. Disraeli could only express a hope that a peaceful solution of the difficulty may prevail. It was wise, of course, at so early a stage, to say as little as possible, but it must have been dreadfully disappointing to the political quidnuncs not to have had even a gleam of light thrown upon the matter. We echo, of course, the hope of the Prime Minister, but we cannot say the prospect is very assuring. Among the other speeches, the most noticeable were those of the Lord Chancellor, who took occasion to refer to the recent legal reforms, of Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, who followed suit, and upon whom the freedom of the City will shortly be conferred, and of Mr. Ward Hunt, who, in spite of the Vanguard disaster, spoke hopefully of the Navy. The Lord Mayor's health was gracefully proposed by Mr. Disraeli, and very well received, as also was that of the retiring Lord Mayor, whose year of office will compare most favourably with that of any of his predecessors.

We imagine there is little, if any, difference between the men who go up as Undergraduates to Oxford and Cambridge, but what are known as "Town and Gown Rows" at the latter, seem to be far more considerable, and waged with far greater bitterness of spirit than at the former. That, of all places in the world, a concert room, where harmony is expected to prevail, should have been selected as the theatre of war, speaks ill for the tone of the Cambridge students. There were ladies present, and that fact should have served to check any outburst of feeling. But if the conduct of the students, young men of high spirits, and occasionally given to a little vigorous horse play, is inexcusable, the municipal authorities appear to have acted with a lamentable want of tact. Aldermen and Town Councillors, even with the insignia of office about them, are not always awe inspiring personages, and any chaff they may have been treated to by the Undergraduates, should have been met either good-naturedly or with silent contempt. It was a gross mistake to bring the police into the affair, and the town magistracy have only themselves to thank that the row assumed the dimensions of a small riot. Let us hope the next time Cambridge men feel it imperative to give vent to any exuberance of spirits, they will select some other place than a concert room where ladies are congregated for the purpose of enjoyment. And when the next explosion takes place on the part of turbulent gownsmen, let the townsmen, or, at all events, their rulers, display tact and judgment in meeting it. Let them keep their force of police constables out of sight. Then there may be some roughness, perhaps, but at least there will arise no ill feeling.

A phase of student-life at Cambridge is a fair excuse for adverting to certain speeches recently made by two men of eminence on the subject of Education. Of these speeches, one was made by Mr. Gladstone, at Greenwich, on the occasion of his distributing the prizes to the successful students of the local science and art classes, while the other came from the lips of Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, when giving away the prizes to the students of the Birkbeck Literary and Scientific Institution. Both these men are living illustrations of what Education will enable men to achieve, for the former was Prime Minister of England for over five years, and, although he has retired into comparative privacy as a politician, is still by far the most eminent member of the Liberal Party, while the Lord Chief Justice has presided at the Court of Queen's Bench for many, many years, and is one of the greatest legal luminaries of the day. One other address must not be overlooked; though, coming from a very young man, it will not carry with it, perhaps, the same authority as the two just referred to. We mean the speech of His Royal Highness Prince Leopold, at the distribution of prizes, in the Town Hall, to the students of the Oxford School of Science and Art. The influence of the late Prince Consort, and his zeal for the advancement, not of Science and Art only, but of every branch of learning, have borne good fruit as regards his children. There is not one of the Queen's sons or daughters who is not ready, at all times, to do what in them lies for the good of Education, and this speech of Prince Leopold, himself a student at Oxford, is the latest illustration we have had of the zeal of the Royal Family in the good cause.

Now of course that Ministers have resumed their labours, we may expect to hear of frequent deputations to one or other of them. Sir Stafford Northcote and the Home Secretary are among the earliest who have been thus favoured, the former having been waited upon by a deputation from the Trades' Union Congress Parliamentary Committee on the subject of the Trades' Union Act, while the latter received the same deputation, who had certain suggestions to offer anent the Summary Jurisdiction of Magistrates. Both were courteously received, and withdrew well pleased with the attention their suggestions had experienced.

We have more than once expressed our admiration of Captain Webb's unexampled feat of swimming the English Channel between Dover and Calais, and we feel sure our readers will rejoice with us that so worthy a man will shortly become a member of our Order. Men of courage are men of kindness, and Captain Webb wears honorable evidence that he has already exerted his unrivalled swimming powers in attempting to save human life at the risk of his own. Good men and true, as he is, are certain to make good Masons. Captain Webb will be intitiated on the 25th inst., the last Thursday in the current month, in Lodge Neptune, No. 22, at Guildhall Tavern. Thus, in less than a fortnight, this son of old Father Neptune will have a Mother Neptune, and also a pretty numerous array of Brothers Neptune. We doubt not of his very hearty reception.

The fête at the Alexandra Palace on Lord Mayor's day was, unfortunately, marred by the weather. This, of course, does not apply so much to the Concert, which was the Balaklava Concert repeated, but to the grand firework competition, which came off in the dullest of November weather. However, a success was scored on Saturday, when Handel's "Esther" was produced, under the able guidance of Mr. Weist Hill. To-day will be the third of the series of Saturday Popular Concerts, when a selection from Beethoven, Rossini, and others, will be given, and there will also be a great Chrysanthemum Show, by Messrs. Cutbush, in the Grand Central Hall. At the Crystal Palace will also be given another Saturday Concert, when the programme will include Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," "A Dream of Happiness," and other pieces. On Monday will be opened the great Annual National Poultry, Pigeon, and Rabbit Show, and it will remain open till Thursday inclusive.

From France the most important news concerns the passage of the Electoral Bill, which is being got through with a considerable amount of dispatch. The most important portion of the Bill has been agreed to by the Assembly. The battle of the Scrutins has been fought fairly, and determined by secret vote in favour of the Government by a majority of 31, the numbers for the scrutin d'arrondissement, which they supported, being 357, while the scrutin de liste found favour with only 326 members. As in England, so in France, we hear of further gales and floods, so that the year, in this respect, will very probably be a most disastrous one as regards the damage done to life and property. An uneasy feeling prevails generally abroad as here as to the Turkish difficulty. It will need all the ability of diplomacy to pull Europe through without some kind of a contest. As to Spain, the news of a settlement of the Carlist war seems as far off as ever. In any other country the leading men of both parties would combine and [illegible] a settlement, but in Spain, party interests take precedence of patriotic interests.

Bro. E. P. Albert, Assistant Grand Pursuivant of the Grand Lodge of England, P.M. 188, has been appointed Grand Steward of the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

Bro. Jennings, the courteous and respected musical director of the Oxford, announces his annual benefit, on Wednesday, 24th instant, when a host of talent, in addition to the regular company, have volunteered their services.

THE BOMBAY MASONS.

AMONGST the most noteworthy events connected with the reception of the Prince of Wales at Bombay, must be mentioned the laying of the foundation stone of the new Elphinstone Wet Docks, in due Masonic form, by His Royal Highness, in his capacity of the M.W.G.M. A vast concourse of spectators was present to witness the ceremony, and, in reply to an address presented to him by the Craft, the Prince replied in the following terms:—"I have learned with great pleasure the flourishing condition of Masonry in Bombay. The fact of its annually increasing numbers and efficiency fulfils the objects of the institution in uniting together men of various creeds and races in a bond of brotherhood, affording common objects of exertion, and extending the knowledge of the English organisation for the good of mankind. It is a great pleasure to me to join you, my brethren of Bombay, in a work which will tend to the protection of life and property, the extension of trade, and the advantage and prosperity of large bodies of our fellow men."

A ball followed in the Town Hall, which was placed at the disposal of the brethren by the Government.

The regular monthly meeting of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and the Widows of Freemasons, was held on Wednesday, the 10th inst., at Freemasons' Hall, Gt. Queen-street, Bro. Lieut.-Col. Creaton in the chair. Bro. Jas. Terry, Secretary, read the minutes of the former meeting, which were confirmed. A letter was read from the Right Hon. Lord Skelmersdale D.G.M., that he had consented to preside at the Anniversary Festival on the 9th February 1876. Bro. Terry announced the death of one of the annuitants; the amount he, deceased brother, had received from the Institution, was £246. Three brethren were placed on the list of candidates. There were present, Bros. S. Rawson, J. Hogg, W. Stephens, Jas. Brett, C. A. Cottebrune, Robert Wentworth Little, R. W. Stewart. Jas. Smith, Hyde Pullen, Hilton, T. Cubitt, White and J. R. Stedwell. The meeting was then adjourned, and a special meeting, in compliance with a requisition singed in conformity with the laws, was then held, Bro. Lieut.-Col. Creaton V.P. in the chair, to take into consideration a proposed alteration of clause 19, and also any further proposition or motion which might be made to give effect to the same. Bro. John Symonds P.G.D. then proposed to add the following words:—

"Every Steward at the Anniversary Festivals who shall procure donations or subscriptions to the extent of not less than £80 in addition to his own donation, shall receive two additional votes at each election, and two further extra votes for every additional sum of not less than £50.

And to expunge the following words:—

If unaccompanied with a personal donation, but by means of his services, not less than £20 shall be paid to the funds, he shall be entitled to one additional vote for every Stewardship.

Both these motions were carried. Bro. John Symonds P.G.D. proposed, and Bro. Benjamin Head P.G.D. seconded, a vote of thanks to Bro. Lieut.-Col. Creaton for the able and efficient manner in which he has always presided over them, and congratulated him on his accession to a higher military rank; he hoped he might be spared for many years to enjoy it. This was fully endorsed by Bro. Benjamin Head. Bro. Creaton thanked the brethren for their kind expressions, and said he felt proud of having been advanced to a higher rank. He had faithfully served Her Gracious Majesty for a quarter of a century, and he thanked the brethren for their good wishes. There were present at this meeting, Bros. Erasmus Wilson, L. Stean, H. Massey, J. Newton, J. Stevens, General Ridgway, J. A. Farnfield, C. Lacey and H. M. Levy. Brethren desiring to serve as Stewards to assist this deserving charity are requested to send their names as early as possible to Bro. Jas. Terry, at the office, Freemasons' Hall.

On Thursday, the 25th inst., the 15 sections will be worked at the Vitruvian Lodge of Instruction. The 15 sections will also be worked at the St. James's Lodge of Instruction, No. 765, which meets at the New Tanners' Arms Tavern, Grange-road, Bermondsey, on Friday evening, the 26th November. Bro. Rumball, of the Faith Lodge, No 141, will preside. Bro. Pennefather is the Hon. Sec., and the attendance of brethren is requested. The Lodge will open at 7 o'clock.

The Rt. Hon. the late Lord Mayor, Bro. D. H. Stone, Junior Warden of the Grand Lodge of England, was formally admitted on Friday, 5th instant, to the Livery of the Turners' Company, and Bro. Alderman Hadley P.G.D. has received an address of congratulation from the London Coffee House Keepers' Benevolent Association on his accession to the Aldermanic gown. A special Court of Aldermen was held at the Guildhall, the last that will be held under the presidency of the ex-Lord Mayor, Bro. D. H. Stone, for the purpose of swearing in Bros. Hadley and Nottage.

Bro. T. A. Adams P.G.P., Preceptor of many Lodges, will hold his Annual Private Subscription Ball, at Willis's Rooms, on Tuesday, 5th February 1876, for members of the Craft and their friends. The tickets can be obtained of the Stewards, to admit a lady and gentleman, 21s, which will include refreshments during the evening and supper. Any brother wishing to act as Steward can do so on application to Bro. T. A. Adams, 55 Whitfield-street, Tottenham Court-road.

Bro. Jas. Weaver, P.P.G.O. Middlesex, has been selected to fill the Post of Chef d'Orchestra at the Queen's Theatre, Long Acre, which opens on the 22nd November, under the direction and leaseeship of M. Mayer.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ENQUIRER.—The Mark Degree is not recognised by the Grand Lodge of England, but it has become very popular. Noblemen and brethren very high in our Order are enrolled amongst its members, and these have contributed large amounts to our Masonic Charities. No one can join it unless he has passed the three degrees in Freemasonry.

We have received, from Messrs. JOHN HOGG and Co., Masonic Publishers, copy of a posthumous work by Dr. OLIVER, entitled The Pythagorean Triangle; or, the Science of Numbers. A review of it will appear next week.

J. E. S. 1826, 1524, 1527.—We cannot give the name of the local paper you refer to, but we are certain you will find the case reported either in the Tottenham and Edmonton Herald, or Tottenham and Edmonton Advertiser, or else in the North Middlesex Chronicle.

J. D.—Where eminent doctors disagree it is a difficult matter to give a decision which will afford general satisfaction. Our view is, that during obligations, what, apart from all Masonic meaning, is the natural sign of Fidelity should be used. Our reason for this view is, that it is contrary to our O.B. to show any sign to or before any one who has not been legally entrusted.

T. E.—1. We have consulted Bro. Lamb's Illustrated Catalogue, but fail to find any jewel requiring an explanation. 2. As to the coat of arms of the Masons: the grant, of which a verbatim et literatim copy is to be found in the "Masonic Magazine" (and an excellent representation of the arms as a frontispiece), was originally made XIIth Edward IV. (1471-2), and confirmed XIIth Henry VIII. (1520-1). Additions appear to have been made to the original grant (and alterations), and apparently more than one company existed in the seventeenth century. In "Ahiman Rezon," of 1764, a copy is given of the "Arms of the Operative or Stone Masons," the "Arms" above in the same plate being those of the "Ancients," alias "Grand Lodge of England, according to the old Constitutions," or "Athol Masons." Dermott gave these to prove that the regular Grand Lodge had made an illegitimate use of the Arms of the operative Masons. The regular Grand Lodge ("Moderns") adopted the latter Arms, a copy of which occurs in a portion of the frontispiece to Entick's Constitutions of the Freemasons of 1756. The crest, however, is changed from the castle (early grant) or the hand with trowel (later issue), to a bird (dove), but the supporters (beavers) are the same. The coin of 1794 (1790 G.M. elected) contains on the obverse the Arms of the same Grand Lodge, with the motto Amor, Honor et Justitia. The differences mentioned of course result from the fancy of the members of the Masons' Company and of the Grand Lodge, supplemented, doubtless, by competent heraldic authority. The Arms of the United Grand Lodge of England from the Union of 1813, are in reality a blending of the two Arms of the rival Grand Lodges, the history of which Bro. Hughan, has afforded the Craft in his most useful "Memorials of the Union of 1813," and the frontispiece to which contains an exact reproduction of the Arms of the "Ancients," and "Operative Masons," as published by Dermott in 1764.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Indigestion, Bronchitis, Asthma, and kindred complaints too frequently present themselves as a fierce and pitiless plague at the fall of the year, and little less deplorable is the fact that, with darkening days and changing temperatures, the digestion becomes impaired, the liver disordered, and the mind despondent, unless the cause of the irregularity be expelled from the blood and body by an alterative like these Pills—they go directly to the source of the evil, thrust out all impurities from the circulation, restore disordered organs to their natural state, and correct all defective or contaminated secretions. Such easy means of instituting health, strength and cheerfulness should be instantly available to check the first symptoms of approaching illness.

THE EARLIEST ATTACK OF THE CHURCH AGAINST SECRET SOCIETIES.

By Albert G. Mackey, M.D.

THE earliest attack of the Roman Church upon Secret Societies that I can find is the statute passed by the Council of Avignon, which met in June 1326. This statute will be found in the 7th volume (p. 1507—8) of Hardouin's "Acta Conciliorum et Epistolæ Decretales ac Constitutiones Summorum Pontificum." (Paris, 1714.) Before giving a literal translation of this document from the Latin original, it will be proper, for the better understanding of the subject, to say something briefly of the Gilds or Secret Societies against whom it was directed.

During the Middle Ages, and especially in the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, Europe was pervaded by Social Gilds, as Toulmin Smith calls them, or Fraternities for mutual help, which were, in fact, the precursors of the Craft Gilds, which in turn gave rise to the corporations of builders, which were the type of the modern Masonic Lodges. Thus there was a connection, historically, between these social Gilds of the Middle Ages, in form and organization, at least, and the institution of Speculative Masonry, and therefore the attack made upon it, in the 14th century by the bishops assembled at Avignon, was the inauguration of that spirit of ecclesiastical persecution which was afterwards developed in the bulls of Clement the Twelfth and Benedict the Fourteenth, and has at this day been renewed by Pius the Ninth.

Brentano, in his History and Development of Gilds (p. 23), thus briefly describes the organization of these Gilds, which he compares, in some respects, to our modern Benefit Societies, a comparison which, I think, might more aptly be made between them and our Modern Lodges of Freemasonry. He says: The expenses of the Gilds were defrayed by the entrance fees, contributions, gifts and legacies. There was a meeting at which officers were elected, and the members had on their entrance to declare by oath that they would fulfil their obligations. Persons of ill repute were not admitted and members were excluded for misconduct. The members had a special livery or uniform dress, which was worn on their festivals and at their meetings. Mutual assistance of the Gild Brothers was enjoined, especially in old age, in sickness, poverty and wrongful imprisonment, as well as in all losses by fire, shipwreck, &c., and finally in the burial of the dead.

It will be seen how all these characteristics are recognised in the Statute of Excommunication fulminated by the Council of Avignon, and thus we find that the opposition of the Church to all good works not performed under ecclesiastical supervision, was as vehement and unreasonable in the fourteenth century as it has been in the eighteenth and nineteenth. Pope John XXII., in the tenth year of whose pontificate this statute was enacted at Avignon, is thus placed side by side with Clement, Benedict and Pius, a sacred quaternion of bigotry and intolerance. Avignon, it will be remembered, was at that time the seat of the pontifical court, to which city it had been transferred in 1305 by Clement the Fifth. Pope John, under whose auspices the decree of excommunication was enacted, is described by Mosheim as being "crafty, insolent, weak, impudent and avaricious."

The statute is, of course, in the Latin language. It is contained in the 37th chapter of the Acts of the Council, and literally translated is in the following words:—

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Concerning the societies, unions and confederacies called confraternities which are to be utterly extirpated.

Whereas, in certain parts of our provinces, noblemen for the most part and sometimes other persons, have established unions, societies and confederacies, which are interdicted by the canon as well as by the municipal laws, who congregate in some place once a year under the name of a confraternity, and there establish assemblies and unions, and enter into a compact confirmed by an oath that they will mutually aid each other against all persons whomsoever, their own lords excepted, and in every case that each one will give to another help, counsel and favor; and sometimes all wearing a similar dress with certain curious signs or marks, they elect one of their number as a chief [majorem], to whom they swear obedience in all things; whereby justice is offended, murders and robberies ensue, peace and security are banished, the innocent and the poor are oppressed, and the churches and ecclesiastics in a town infested by such societies suffer various injuries and great damage to their persons, possessions, rights and jurisdictions. Wishing at once to check these pestiferous designs and pernicious undertakings, and to provide an appropriate remedy and to restrain from sin those who are under us, as it is the duty of the pastoral office, we do by the authority of the present Council, invalidate, dissolve and make void all assemblies, unions, societies and confederacies which are called brotherhoods or confraternities hitherto instituted by clergymen or laymen of whatsoever degree, state, dignity or condition they may be, and also the compacts, agreements and regulations established among them, and we declare them to be null and void and of no effect, decreeing that all the oaths taken for the performance of the aforesaid acts are either illegal or worthless; and we ordain that no one shall be held to the observance of them, from which oaths we provisionally absolve them; so that, however, for their heedless and idle oaths they shall receive a salutary penance from their confessors. And by the aforesaid authority we prohibit them under penalty of excommunication to make use from this time forth as formerly, of the said unions, societies, conventions and oaths; they shall not institute confraternities of this kind; one shall not give obedience nor afford assistance or favor to another; nor shall they wear clothing which exhibits the signs or marks of the condemned thing, nor call themselves brethren, priors or abbots of the aforesaid society. And we ordain that this excommunication shall be ipso facto if they act to the contrary of the present statute after it shall have been published for two Sundays in the church of which they are parishioners. But indeed let each one within ten days from the time of the said publication seek a confessor to absolve him, so far as he can, from the aforesaid oaths, and let him publicly profess his unwillingness to be any longer a member of the aforesaid society. We also forbid their forming from this time forth such confederacies, conspiracies or assemblies under the name of a confraternity, otherwise we declare such attempts de facto invalid, void and of no effect, and we subject those forming and attempting them to the sentence of excommunication, from which they shall in no way be absolved, unless by a provincial council, except in the hour of death. But by this act we do not intend to disapprove of those fraternities formerly instituted for the relief of the poor in which there are no obligations nor oaths.—The Voice of Masonry.

DO YOU TAKE THE NAME OF GOD IN VAIN?

IT is the habit of the world to judge religious systems of morality and philosophy, rather by the conduct of their professed disciples, than by the intrinsic merits of the systems themselves. If the conduct of the majority of the followers of any system of religion or morality, in their daily intercourse with mankind, is found to be marked by licentiousness or vice, perhaps the conclusion is not unreasonable that the system itself has exerted some baneful influence. If, however, it is the few who are vicious, and the many who are virtuous, the same mode of reasoning would exalt the system, and condemn the offenders against good morals, as having departed from its precepts. But the world does not always proceed through a train of logic to its conclusions. Public opinion is usually made up of a small modicum of reason intermixed with a large quantity of prejudice and passion, each alike hostile to truthful conclusions.

In this way Masonry has suffered greatly for the faithlessness of its professed votaries. Masonry has not unfrequently been charged with sacrilege, especially by its opponents. And why? For one reason—because the Masonic creed everywhere recognises the existence of a Supreme Ruler of the Universe, invokes His blessing on all her undertakings, seeks His guidance in all her difficulties, and inculcates, as the first and chief principle of the Institution, reverence and respect for the name of Deity, while some of her followers make it their aim to appear like infidels, scoffers at sectarian religion, and profaners of the Holy Name. In the Lodge they profess respect for God with lips that ever were filthy with vile and indecent oaths. This is not Masonry. Those who indulge in such practices are strangers to her true spirit, and aliens from her affections.

In all the teachings of Masonry, in its rites and ceremonies, in its traditions, if there is anything more prominent than another, if there is any duty more frequently and earnestly impressed upon the mind than another, it is an habitual, a serious and profound respect for our Creator and Preserver. The first paragraph that arrests the attention in the ancient Constitutions teaches us that a belief in the Eternal God, and the rendering to him of that worship which is due to the Great Architect and Governor of the Universe, is the foundation and corner stone of the Masonic character.

Nearly the first words which the candidate for the mysteries of Masonry hears, on being admitted within the sacred precints of the Lodge, is the voice of prayer addressed to the Eternal Throne of Grace. The first object that meets his eye in the Lodge room is the Book of God. And blind indeed he must be, if he does not discern this constant, ever living stream of reverential feeling flowing throughout the length of Masonry, fertilising, invigorating, and preserving its moral tenets.

What is there in all this which the profaner of the great merciful God's name can see but degradation in his own estimation as well as that of his neighbours and companions? What is there which promises even toleration of him? The Masonic motto in this respect is "procul este profani." When profane swearing becomes consistent with the teachings of Masonry, let us cease to clothe ourselves with lambskin; let us break the pot of incense and quench its pure flame; let us blear the All-Seeing Eye; let us remove the Book of Testimony from our midst; in short, let us knock out the foundation and supports of the Masonic edifice, and suffer it to fall to the ground a mass of shapeless ruins.

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain." If you wilfully and persistently break one of God's commandments, do you not violate the whole?

By profanity, force and effect are not added to a declamation, neither is polite swearing the mark nor the measure of a gentleman: then ask yourself, am I in the habit of using the name of God profanely, and thereby violating His express law? "By My name you shall know me."—The Hebrew Leader.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF DURHAM.

THE annual Provincial Grand Lodge for the province of Durham was held on the 26th ult. in the Freemasons' Hall, Old Elvet, Durham, and was a most successful gathering. The Lodge was opened at two o'clock, by the Provincial Grand Master, Bro. John Fawcett, assisted by Bros. Sir Hedworth Williamson, Bart., Deputy Provincial Grand Master, the Rev. Canon Tristram P.G.S.W., Henry Lawrence P.G.J.W., Rev. F. W. Bewsher P.G. Chaplain, and other officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge. The Treasurer's report having been read, the reports from the different provinces were received, all of which were of a highly satisfactory and gratifying nature. The Provincial Grand Master then addressed the brethren, and expressed great satisfaction at the favourable reports he had heard read from the different Lodges within his jurisdiction. He briefly alluded to the honour that had been conferred upon the Craft by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in having undertaken the duties of the office of Grand Master of England. The officers of the past year having been thanked for their services, the following elections took place:—Sir Hedworth Williamson Bart. D.P.G.M., Dr. S. Gourley, P.G.S.W., W. Hunter P.G.J.W., Rev. W. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were cordially given and responded to, the health of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and that of the Provincial Grand Master being enthusiastically received. The last named gentleman has discharged the duties of that office for the last 28 years, and his province stands amongst one of the highest in the estimation of the Grand Lodge officials. Bros. J. Walker P.P.G. Organist, D. Whitehead (tenor), and J. Nutton (bass), rendered excellent musical services, while Bro. Angelo Forrest P.G. Organist presided at the pianoforte.

THE DRAMA.

"Masks and Faces" at the Prince of Wales's. "Rip Van Winkle" at the Princess's.

ANY change of programme at the PRINCE OF WALES'S must inevitably excite deep interest. At no theatre, not even excepting the LYCEUM, have so much care and intelligence combined been exercised in the production of any novelties, and few managements have exhibited so much judicious enterprise. Mrs. Bancroft has apparently determined to rescue her company from the reproach of being entirely devoted to the tea-cup-and-saucer style of comedy, and to show that ability to represent the ladies and gentlemen of society in the nineteenth century does not preclude the ability of representing the men and women of any other time. To this end the revival of The Merchant of Venice contributed in some degree, and following in the same track, though perhaps with slackened footsteps, Mrs. Bancroft offers to her willing audiences a piece possessing deep humour, interest, and imbued with warmer passion and sentiment than usual in the plays produced at this theatre. Masks and Faces, which has been specially revised by its joint authors, Messrs. Charles Reade and Tom Taylor, has at various times employed the abilities of our eminent actors and actresses, and the part of Peg Woffington has always been a favourite. This part is now filled by Mrs. Bancroft, who plays with all her accustomed humour and vivacity, and also betrays the possession, hitherto almost unsuspected, of a fund of deep pathos and tenderness. In assuming the character of Triplet, Mr. Bancroft is travelling far out of the grove in which he has laboured as yet, but this actor is always an artist, and his impersonation will compare favourably with any of its predecessors. Miss Ellen Terry is the Mabel Vane, and plays the part with singular earnestness and expression. The acting of this lady, always good, has greatly improved of late, and now entitles her to a place in the foremost rank of her profession. There is hardly enough colour in Mr. Archer's rendering of Ernest Vane, but the part itself is a rather thankless one. Mr. Coghlan plays well as Sir Charles Pomander, and the minor parts are filled in a manner worthy of our most perfectly managed theatre.

After an absence of ten years, Mr. Jefferson has returned to delight all playgoers with that most genial of vagabonds, Rip Van Winkle. This wonderful piece of acting is almost as well known in England as in America, and is deservedly popular in both countries. The curious compound of humour and pathos, with the tears just behind his fun, and a joke in the midst of his misery, always ready to "swear off," and always ready to drink to the health of yourself and family, endears himself to all hearts. Mr. Jefferson's acting is, if possible, better than it was ten years ago: all who saw it then will go again to see it, or will lose a dramatic treat.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, o the London and County Bank, 112 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR SHARES.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, 27 ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

21 Portland Place, London. Yours faithfully, (Signed) EDWARD REPPS JODRELL.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THE BOY'S SCHOOL.

WE hinted last week at our intention, so far as we are concerned, to bring the painful controversy that is raging on this subject to a close this week. We gave the warning in order that none of those who have taken part in the contention might be deprived of an opportunity of saying a last word, if it so pleased them, in support of their several views. Many reasons have influenced us in arriving at this determination. We need not enumerate them all, but one or two must be specified, in order that our readers may understand why we think the prolongation in our columns of this contest undesirable. We are of opinion that an inquiry, such as has been conceded, can alone determine the merits. Two pamphlets have been published, one by Bro. Tew, the other by Bros. Tew and Rev. O. G. D. Perrott jointly. In both these pamphlets the action of the governing body in its managerial capacity is called in question; in both, the expenditure for office purposes is described as in excess of what is necessary. Other points are touched upon, but the two we have specified are, in fact, the gravamina of the case against the School management, and in support thereof Brothers Tew and Perrott have adduced what, in legal phraseology, may be described as primâ facie evidence, that such an independent tribunal should inquire into and determine the points of issue. That we were not singular in this view is proved by one of our most considerable Provinces having, in Prov. Grand Lodge assembled, formally passed a resolution demanding that a committee of inquiry be appointed, with a view to ascertaining if the School cannot be more economically administered. True we had the Secretary replying that the accusations are unjust, that everything objected to is capable of explanation, and, in truth, that as regards the case of the Rev. Bro. Perrott, the School Committees have done what is needful in the way of inquiry, and are convinced of its injustice. But as the assertions and arguments of the pamphleteers were not proofs, so the denials of the Secretary on behalf of the governing body were not disproofs. Thus inquiry was demanded in the interests of all parties. There may be, and we think there is, a tribunal already existing which is competent to settle the dispute, at all events, one has been erected for the occasion. Thus, something will be done, and that forthwith, to put an end to this bandying about of violent recriminations between the disputants. It was little good urging that the matter should be allowed to drop because the government of the School is going on smoothly now. The pamphlets had been published, the resolution of West Yorkshire had been passed. These pamphlets and this resolution referred not to the present, but to the immediate past, and they were calculated to excite, if they have not already excited, a strong feeling of distrust as to the future. A policy of inaction would not allay this feeling. On the contrary, it is in the experience of most people that it would have confirmed and even extended it. There was no denying the right of public complaint to aggrieved persons, or persons who thought themselves aggrieved. The grievance of the Rev. Bro. Perrott was that he had been ill-treated when Head Master of the Boys' School, and in being deprived of his office; the grievance of Bro. Tew was that the funds of the Boys' School were not as economically administered as they might and should be. These two brethren took upon themselves the very serious responsibility of submitting their joint and several grievances to the bar of public opinion, and it was no proof these grievances were unfounded to reply that the body they accused had inquired into the matter, and found its own conduct right. Somebody else must decide the issue, but not the disputant whose conduct had been thus publicly arraigned. We lean neither to the one side nor to the other. What we want is, that the issue raised shall be decided, and at once. Till this is done, the interests of the School must suffer, and so serious a result cannot be regarded with indifference. For these reasons we counselled immediate action, and the case being now sub judice, we must await the issue in silence. Having come to this conclusion, we have decided further that the correspondence on this subject must cease. It is painfully evident to us, as it is doubtless to our readers, that the controversy, as it proceeded, became more embittered. It had passed from the region of calm argument to that of unseemly accusation and retort. Neither side was guarded—to say nothing of being Masonic—enough in the language it used, and we have no mind to allow a series of scolding letters to appear in our columns. New charges were being made, or perhaps we should say, the same charges were being constantly repeated, but in a new form, and over each arose a fresh and, we must say, a very violent altercation. Thus the original issues stood a chance of being lost sight of. These are—(1). Is the Rev. Bro. Perrott an ill-used man, or were the Committee right in dispensing with his services? (2) Are the funds of the School disbursed with a due regard to economy, or with a lavish hand? Such are the points in the settlement of which the world of Masonry is interested. The personal part of the question is more private contention, which concerns us not.

The series of letters and extracts from letters we have received from Bro. Binckes, merely proves that, as regards that portion of the dispute to which they relate, the use of strong language was not conferred only by the Secretary.

THE MAN OF ENERGY.

HABITS of business, when they are thoroughly acquired, leave a permanent mark upon a man's mind and person. We all readily learn to distinguish the citizen from the man of leisure; we never mistake a commercial traveller for a soldier, nor do we ever fail to recognise an indescribable something in the man whose calling brings into play the highest powers of the intellect. The quick, brusque manners of the man of commerce strikingly contrast with the slow habits of the man of leisure, or the pretentious bluster of the man of the sword. The graces and charms of deportment may not be acquired east of Temple Bar, but, notwithstanding the acknowledged evils which follow in the train of commercial success, we question much if genuine charity flourishes half so vigorously anywhere as it does within the sound of Bow Bells. The hero in whose honour the following lines are written is no merchant prince, though he may have the heart of one. He is no successful trader, though he possesses in the highest perfection all the qualities which go to make a man successful in life. He is one of those men who are a peculiar feature in our commercial system, he is a prince amongst employés; he stands high in the confidence of his chief, is conversant with the throbbing, panting world around him, and is fully alive to the slightest rise or fall of that wonderful mercantile barometer which measures the citizen's confidence in the stability of both home and foreign governments. With his business engagements we have of course nothing to do. We care not though he buy or sell, in the twinkling of an eye, merchandise which would more than compensate for the losses of Antonio, or satisfy the greed and the claims of Shylock. It is as a Mason that this man interests us, and, as such, we prefer to draw his portrait. The limner's art, indeed, is not always equal to the task imposed upon it. Some men, both in feature and mind, are like the negro's pig, which would not stay to be counted; we may ask our subject to sit for his portrait, or we may prefer to draw his lineaments when he is unconscious of our presence, but our difficulty is to fix upon any one of the prominent features of his mind upon which we may dwell. Like most men of vast energy he is never willing to pose himself for any appreciable period in one attitude. Your man of action is never happy if he is not in harness. In the world Masonic, our hero will not permit himself to rest. Masonry, he believes, has peculiar claims upon him, and he does his very best to realise his ideal of what a good brother should be. We might almost venture to describe his charitable labours as colossal; and, looking merely at the results he has achieved, we might wonder how he manages to find leisure for the enjoyment of that domestic life to which he is so warmly attached, or how it is possible that he can be the prince of employés with so many cares foreign to mere business on his mind. Yet our hero is a man upon whom the holy influence of home exercises its full and legitimate power, and in the City he is, as we have already hinted, second to none of the men of action and energy by whom he is surrounded. His name has figured more prominently in our list of Charity Stewards than that of any other man with whom we are acquainted. Like most men of action he has learned to value small things. He knows that if you desire to swell the subscription lists with a long array of pounds sterling, you must begin with the shillings and pence. He has more than once startled an anxious Secretary with a princely sum, collected with untiring patience from a multitude of friends. In his last effort in this direction he has surpassed his past achievements, and if the amount subscribed did not actually reach £1000, it was because our hero took pity upon the painstaking official of the particular Charity to which the cash was devoted, and did not wish to stun him with a knock-down blow. Our hero is not less prominent in Grand Lodge than he is in the working ranks of Masonry. His name figures as often on the agenda paper as that of any of the great leaders of the Order, and he takes a peculiar pride in carrying the measures to which he is pledged. When the idea of a Life Boat Fund was broached in these columns, he was the first to move in the matter, and although he was not then successful, we are assured that he merely bides his time, and will strike again when the propitious moment arrives. But he is not less distinguished as a chronicler of the Order than as a worker for the Charities and a speaker at Grand Lodge. In his tranquil moments he has written the history of the Lodge of which he was once the honoured Master. The work is a mere sketch, but slight as it is, it shows that our energetic brother has the true instinct of the truth-seeker, and the painstaking zeal which prompts a writer to search for the gold of history amid its attendant ores. We have said that our brother, like a good and true Mason, is attached to his home, upon which he lavishes all the tender care of a husband and a father. He is a jovial companion, and shines as a vocalist and a reciter. Policeman X has found in him an able exponent, but although he likes the society of his brethren, he is too wise and too prudent to permit their fascinations to engross his leisure time. Gay without being frivolous, witty without being venemous, and a toiler who conceals his herculean labours under the careless ease of a man of the world, he would be a valuable acquisition to any section of society in which his lot might be cast. If Masonry is a vital force in the world, it is because it comprises in its ranks many such minds as his. He is an embodiment of the practical side of the English character. Our countrymen are not inclined to chase shadows, nor to sacrifice the substantial realities of life for the sake of the pure ideal. Our Order, in England, is powerful for good, because it has gathered under its banner a host of sturdy hearts, who are content to descend from the known to the unknown, who are practical first, and theoretical afterwards. We cannot but have confidence in the stability of our Order, when it numbers such energetic brethren in its ranks.

RUMOURS OF WAR.

UNPLEASANT rumours have been afloat during the past week with respect to the Eastern question, and it has even been stated that the programme of our Royal brother the Prince of Wales has been materially modified in consequence of news, bearing upon important European complications, having been transmitted to him from the Home Government. The World, usually a well-informed, if a somewhat caustic journal, has even gone so far as to urge upon Her Majesty's Ministers the expediency of strengthening our fleet in the Mediterranean, and of taking immediate steps to call a meeting of Parliament. We cannot think that our contemporary has shown its usual discretion in offering this advice, however much it may seem to have been justified by the facts of the case. In matters of peace and war, it is impossible that any newspaper can understand as well as the responsible Ministers of the Crown the exigencies of the situation, from the simple reason that they are not in possession of the entire facts. When the facts are published to the world, the press is at liberty to comment upon them, but it would be little less than a national calamity if the press in general were to acquire the habit of obtruding their advice upon the Government whilst questions are still under negociation. This has been done to a great extent in France, to the grievous injury of the nation at large.

In one particular the intimation conveyed by the World has been already falsified. Lord Salisbury has positively denied that the alteration in the programme of the Prince of Wales was occasioned by any European complications whatever. His route has been slightly altered, in consequence of the prevalence of Cholera in one of the districts through which he was to pass. And if we enquire further into the rationale of the present aspect of the Eastern question, we shall find that there is as little reason for apprehension here as there was truth in the assertion regarding our Royal Brother. It must, we think, be evident by this time that the Ottoman Government is a government that cannot govern without assistance from without. This assistance, the three powers, Russia, Prussia, and Austria, would be glad to afford. But it is, certainly, improbable that these powers should be acting in harmony in this matter, if, as has been suggested, by some writers, it is the design of Russia to obtain possession of Constantinople. We doubt if Germany would assent to such an arrangement, but, for Austria, it would simply amount to a sentence of dissolution. Whilst the present negotiations continue, there will, probably, be an abundance of rumours, but, despite the few lowering clouds that appear in the political atmosphere, we cannot think that Russia, the only power that has been suspected of bellicose intentions, is prepared "to let slip the dogs of war;" and we feel a certain confidence that Germany and Austria would endeavour to restrain any such tendency, if it actually existed. The Eastern question will have to be settled some time, but the time has not yet arrived.

THE ANTIQUITY AND OBJECTS OF MASONRY.

WE are indebted to the columns of the Weekly Bulletin of San Francisco U.S., for the following address, by Ex-Governor Haight, Grand Orator of Grand Lodge, California, at the third session of the meeting of Grand Lodge held last month. We think the sentiments to which Bro. Haight gives expression in the concluding portion, on the "Antiquity and Objects of Masonry," so admirable, that we quote them with infinite pleasure, and we are sure our readers will appreciate the extract:—

The tendency to venerate ancient institutions is doubtless one of the chief attractions of Masonry. It is not a plant of yesterday, but a tree whose mossy trunk and giant growth speak to us of past ages. Kings have participated in its ceremonies, and men greater than kings have adorned its annals. If, however, its only merit was age, its destiny would be decay. Age alone contains no principle of immortality, and if Masonry had nothing but its ancient origin to recommend it there would be no sound reason to expect that it would survive, much less that it would grow. There are talismanic words implied in its organization—"liberty, equality, fraternity"—terms grossly abused, but in the Order of Free and Accepted Masons full of real and practical significance; because one of its first lessons is resistance to despotism, both ecclesiastical and civil, and the instinctive antagonism between Masonry and ecclesiasticism is the most emphatic testimony to the spirit of personal liberty which is one of the distinguishing traits of the Order. Equality, not by lowering, but by elevating to a common platform, where all meet on the level, with equal rights and duties, and equal claims to mutual respect, if faithful to the obligations voluntarily assumed. Fraternity, in whose bonds the most ancient and inveterate prejudices are melted in the solvent of brotherly intercourse, the heirs of the most ancient civilization join hands with the missionaries of the youngest civilization, and Hebrews and Gentiles, Celt and Saxon—men of the most diverse origin and nationality—meet in the interchange of kindly offices and furnish some evidence of the possibility of the attainment of a true brotherhood of man. These are grand lessons, impressively taught by its origin and history; but they are not all. It teaches the force of associated action, the inestimable value of union in a good cause, the superiority of harmony over discord, and the power of combined benevolence. It furnishes, too, a noble and inspiring lesson of the worth and dignity of labour, because in the toil of operative Masonry, which reared in the Middle Ages some of the grandest edifices ever conceived by human genius, and in the migrations of architects and builders from place to place, where such works were to be executed, the order of Free and Accepted Masons had its growth and development, if not its origin, and the whole spirit of its precepts and ceremonies is to exalt and dignify that intelligent labour which has adorned all civilised lands with monuments of its skill, only less majestic and enduring than the granite monuments reared in the beginning by the hand of the Great Architect and Father of All—devout reverence for whose being, and filial trust in whose Providence is taught from first to last in every stage and degree of progress in the mysteries of the Order. Like all human institutions, while it has these and other uses, it is not absolutely exempt from abuse. Its obligations do not release any man from his duties of citizenship, if properly regarded. Nor can they conflict with those duties to any extent whatever. A Judge on the Bench deciding cases; a jury in the jury-box sworn to look only at the law and evidence; a witness on the witness-stand, pledged to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; a voter, bound upon his honour and conscience to cast his ballot for the most worthy candidate for his suffrage—will find no embarrassment in the discharge of these high duties from any Masonic obligation; nor will any intelligent Mason, of any creed, find in Masonry a substitute for religious faith. It is only in its perversion that these things could ever be found. Its true spirit is to incite to greater fidelity in the discharge of every duty—religious, political and social—and thereby to aid in establishing upon more lasting foundations that noble edifice of civil and religious liberty, reared by the toil and sacrifices of our fathers, and which it devolves upon us to preserve and transmit to posterity.

HOW TO OBTAIN THE MASONIC SPIRIT.

TO take the degrees of Freemasonry is one thing, and to catch, or imbibe, the spirit of Masonary is wholly another. The former many do, and then they think themselves Masons. They will tell you they are; but of what stamp are they? Have they gone up, from one step to another, in the principles of the Order, and have they learned the great philosophic secret which Masonry teaches—that truth and honour, integrity and charity, when joined with an industrious life, and a genuine spirit of sympathy for man, constitute the true Mason?

We admit that the degrees of the Craft are both instructive and beautiful, and that the lessons accompanying each degree are well calculated to awaken the mind, and to stir the thoughts of any honest heart, and yet, we are compelled to say, something more is ordinarily demanded to make a true and genuine Mason?

An uncultivated mind cannot comprehend the mystic philosophy of these degrees, for even the most learned must study them; and it may be truthfully said that, for the want of this study, the many never enter the inner temple of this grand and mystic divinity, or comprehend the beautiful practical power of its fraternal principles.

The everywhere visible defections in the practical workings of the Order is, doubtless, the primary cause of the lukewarmness, and of that anti-lodge-attending indifference, which are so much complained of in almost every jurisdiction. Men see that obligations are nothing; that principles are but playthings, and that even fraternal pretensions are only a mockery—often mere miserable abortions—and they turn away from the association with mortified convictions that, even under the most favourable circumstances, human nature is but frail at best.

Moral culture is never the offspring of a day, or the result of a single cruise. It is a life-time work, which must begin in youth, if it ever attains to any manly maturity. It is here that the foundation is laid, if pre-eminence is ever evinced in subsequent years, and it is here that we find the fruitful causes of those deficiencies and marked delinquencies which so frequently throw a devouring blight over the otherwise honourable prestige of so many of our organisations.

And even where this mental and moral training has been thus neglected, men often think they have lost no ground by it, because they claim to be men, and to have common sense; and they would like to be somebody in the world, if they only knew how, or if some one would show them.

It is right here that the great evil comes in; for, on the one hand, men are not conscious of their moral incapacity for comprehending the full bearing of moral and relative obligations; and yet, on the other, society expects as much of one man as another. And the same rule obtains also in the Fraternity—every man is expected to do his duty.

We would ask, is this expectation a reasonable one? Is it to be looked for, that the high obligations of the Masonic relationship will be carried out as fully, as perfectly, by the uneducated, the morally uncultivated, as by those who have had all the advantages of a regular moral training? We are of the conviction that it is too frequently the case that the public expects too much from some men. It is said, as a home-made apothegm, that "it is hard to get blood out of a turnip." So it is; and it is equally as difficult to bring men without moral culture to the scratch of being full-grown diplomatists into the sublime moral Order of Masonry, as it is, or would be, to develope the virtues of the Christian faith among a congregation of Mussulmen.

In former times the Craft was made more select than it is in the present day. None were initiated save those who were in every sense worthy and well qualified; but in our day it is quite different. We recommend almost anybody who can raise the spondulicks; though after all, as we admit, many are black-balled without any "rhyme or reason;" and still we receive and initiate a good many whose antecedents would have kept them out for all time if they had been fully known. The constitutional instructions in regard to initiations are too frequently ignored, and many, no doubt, are taken in who subsequently fall far behind the mark of erect Masters.

These and many other reasons may be given why many enter the mystic temple without having the spirit of Masonry. If we understand anything of the secret of Masonic affinity, it is found in the fact, that those only make Masons of "the right stripe" who are possessed of good common sense, and who have hearts capable of generous emotions. It is not to be the Master of Secrets that man were made Masons; for that of itself would only be little and contemptible. The purpose of the Craft is higher and nobler every way. Its every lesson teaches a different theory; and, where they are given by a competent Master, they cannot but impress an intelligent recipient with the conviction that Masonry aims to elevate, to humanise, to make intelligent, and to inspire with a spirit of charity every candidate it initiates.

But, even when these degrees and lessons are received, there still remains much for the brother to do for himself. He must think, read and inwardly digest the moral philosophy of these teachings. He learns that he is henceforth the builder of his own temple. The Lodge, of course, will help him, but then he must help himself. Like it is in driving the other fortunes of life, he must be cautious and prudent, thoughtful and assiduous; and, little by little, he will find himself growing in grace, and in the knowledge of the truth. The mere mechanical reception of the degrees cannot make him anything more than a Masonic automaton—a mystic novice—an additional cypher in the Fraternity—where they may count his head, but not his heart. The proud and ancient genius of the Craft will never recognise him as being anything more than a mere Grand Lodge tax-payer—"only this, and nothing more." In our travels over our own jurisdiction we have had ample opportunities of meeting with, and of becoming posted in, all the different classes of men who have been made by the manipulations of their Lodges, and those who have taken pains to make themselves.

It is well known that many make themselves scholars almost entirely without the help of masters. They go to work with the purpose of becoming such, notwithstanding their adverse circumstances, and they improve their time by cultivating whatever talent they may possess. Such men, as is frequently observed, make the best practical men of the age. They may not be polished, but they are strong. They may lack in some of the branches of a finished curriculum, but then they are solid withal, as far as they go. Just so it is in our Masonic gradations. Men learn that a spirit belongs to the fraternity, which will tell in the man, and which will be readily recognised among all worthy brothers and fellows, and tells them, like a voice of Divinity, that the bearer thereof has been truly baptised in the ancient waters of the Craft.

It is this spirit that Masons look for when they meet, and are made known as such; and, wherever they find it, the affinity of brotherhood is acknowledged, and fraternal intercourse becomes free, satisfactory and confidential.—"H.," in Masonic Advocate.

PROVINCE OF BERKS AND BUCKS.

CONSECRATION OF A NEW LODGE AT MAIDENHEAD.

ON Wednesday, the 10th inst., the inauguration of the Ellington Lodge, No. 1566, took place at the Bell Hotel, Maidenhead, the ceremony was performed by Bro. the Rev. J. Studholme Brownrigg P.G.C., Deputy Provincial Grand Master of Berks and Bucks, in the presence of a numerous and influential assemblage of the members of the various Lodges in the Province—the "Union" and "Grey Friars" of Reading, the "Etonian" and "Windsor Castle" of Windsor, the "Wycombe" and the Sister Lodge of Maidenhead, "St. John's," being well represented. In the course of the ceremonies of constitution and consecration the V.W. Rev. Brother delivered a very impressive address on the beauties of the system of the Craft, and exhorted the brethren to hold Masonry free from those political and religious strifes which were too often allowed to influence some of the Continental Lodges. At the conclusion of the consecration the Inaugurating Officer installed the first Master of the Lodge, Bro. W. B. Parr, who appointed and invested the following brethren as officers:—Bros. J. Fuller S.W., J. J. Britton J.W., H. Turner Treas., H. H. Hodges Sec., and H. H. Durrant I.G. A pretty long list of candidates for initiation followed, which closed the business of the evening; when the brethren retired for refreshment to a banquet at the Bell Hotel, where the members and their visitors sat down to enjoy a very pleasant evening, which was considerably increased by the singing and accompaniments of Bros. Tolley and Videon Harding, who also added materially to the effect of the consecration and installation ceremonies by their musical and vocal talent. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to. A very agreeable evening closed the first meeting of the Ellington Lodge.

MASONIC BOYS' SCHOOL.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR,—There is no doubt that our Boys School has obtained an unenviable notoriety among educational establishments from the very frequent changes of the Head Master, and from the unseemly contentions between the Head Masters, the Secretary, and the Matron. As one who has a considerable acquaintance with some of our large schools, will you allow me, before you close the correspondence on the subject, to make the following remarks and suggestions. And first, considering the very large number of brethren of position and ability in the kingdom, the composition of the governing body ought to be considered anything but strong, while, from the mode of its election, it is necessarily fluctuating; the consequence must be that more power is entrusted to, and more responsibility is thrown on, the Secretary than is consistent with his position. At the present time he appears to occupy the posts of Warden, Bursar and Secretary, while from his experience and ability he must, to a great extent, guide and control the governing body itself. To remedy this, I would provide that one half of the governing body should be elected for life, and the other half for at least three years, one third only retiring each year; of the Life Members every brother would hail with pleasure Lord Carnarvon, Lord Leigh, Lord Skelmersdale, Lord Sherborne, ex-Lord Mayor Stone, Rev. C. J. Martyn and others; and the whole body might be most worthily presided over by Lord Carnarvon. And let it not be said off-hand that these distinguished brethren could not find time or opportunity to fulfil their functions; if Lord Carnarvon can give his time to Winchester, and Lord Leigh to Rugby, we have every reason to suppose that they will feel an equal interest in the School of their Craft. In such a governing body the subscribers would place implicit confidence, and the Head Master would possess all necessary security. And again, the Matron and every official who has to do with the care and management of the boys at the School should be placed under the control of the Head Master, and be removable by him without any appeal. This is so clearly necessary for the smooth working of the machinery of the School that I hope the present Head Master made it a condition on his appointment, or rather, I hope the governing body, of their own accord, placed the power in his hands, in the full belief that he would only exercise it for the best interests of his pupils. Whether the Head Master should select the Matron or not, is not very material; but it is absolutely necessary that there should be no co-ordinate authority in the School, and that if the Matron cannot or will not discharge her duties in accordance with the wishes of the Head Master, that his will should be supreme.

I will not at present ask for more of your space, except to express my great pleasure at having so distinguished a scholar at the Head of our School, and my hope that under his auspices the Institution may become worthy of his great name and of our active benevolence.

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

Inner Temple. M. A.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I do not at all regret your decision that, so far as your columns are concerned, this controversy is to cease. Not that I have the slightest wish to avoid enquiry or fair argument, but I feel it to be utterly useless to contend with so pachydermatous a nature as that of my principal opponent, who unscrupulously repeats charges already investigated and disproved, indulges in reckless statements, and adheres to them with the tenacity of a limpet, utterly irrespective of the testimony adduced in opposition to them, and skilfully glosses over circumstances and occurrences so as to render them subservient to his case, when their real tendency is to weaken and destroy it. All is "false and hollow; though his tongue dropt manna, and could make the worse appear the better reason, to perplex and dash maturest counsels."

Mr. Perrott may deny my statements, as to what occurred at our interviews. I strongly asseverate—with all the binding force of an affirmation—that I have understated what passed between us, and, should the proper time arrive, shall be prepared to give a fuller account of what transpired.

The facts with reference to Mr. W. H. Taylor—his engagement by Mr. Perrot—the favour shown him, and the revelations of policy and intentions as regards Secretary and others,—with the subsequent rupture, complaint and dismissal, are too numerous for explanation here.

Mr. Perrott says, "I have been informed, quite recently, by one who heard made the admission respecting the Matron's 'highly-improper letter' (so described, be it remembered, by one member of the Committee only) that he acknowledged having had a hand in these, too." The repetition of this charge proves the value attached to it. I emphatically repeat there is not a word of truth in the accusation. I did acknowledge having suggested the Matron's reply—to "guard the weak against the strong," and save her, as a woman not versed in the subtleties of controversy, from falling into the snare so speciously laid for her in the letter of Mr. Perrott. With the Masters I had no communication on the subject.

At p. 8 of the Pamphlet is a question to which I ought to have replied earlier. "Is he" (the Secretary) "prepared to deny that he sent for Mr. Webb, the Fourth Master, to give evidence against the Head Master; or, again, that he called for the same purpose, the Matron, who had previously made a most serious statement regarding the Fifth Master?"

Now, will it be credited that any one could be guilty of so wilful a distortion of fact as is here shown. Mr. Perrott and myself were in conversation privately, in the course of which he stated that the Matron had brought a charge against a Master, in language which I felt convinced she could not use. Miss Hall was asked to attend, at my request, and at once, in the most emphatic manner, repudiated the charge. Mr. Perrott admitted her denial, and then fell back upon what she really did say. The Matron having left, Mr. Perrott continued, and then brought an accusation somewhat similar against Mr. Webb, which, I felt confident, was equally exaggerated. Mr. Webb was requested to attend; the result was exactly similar to the case of Miss Hall. Mr. Perrott and I alone were present. But what is meant to be inferred from the paragraph as worded? I say I have not a fair opponent to deal with, and the disingenuousness shown in this instance is the one distinguishing characteristic of every paragraph in the Pamphlet.

Again, great stress is laid, throughout the Pamphlet and letters, on a statement with reference to "delicate boys, as the Secretary informs us the Masonic boys are." Here is another attempt to twist to the attainment of one object that which has been urged in connection with another.

I have often remarked, orally and in print, that in considering the questions of clothing, diet, and other questions of a sanitary nature, it should not be overlooked that a very large proportion of those we receive under our care are the sons of brethren prematurely cut off by phthisis or other pulmonary diseases, and that among the young we ought to bear in mind that we have naturally-inherited delicate constitutions to deal with. This consideration has been kept in view, our administration has been in accordance therewith, the result:—deaths not exceeding five in 15 years, an infirmary rarely tenanted, and youths leaving in strong, robust health, at sixteen years of age, who, as young boys, came to us more or less fragile and delicate. No boy is allowed to join the band who is not certified as properly fitted for it, and whose parent is not a consenting party.

I really feel that in dealing with these numerous sanitarial objections I resemble Don Quixote tilting at the wind-mill, but before closing this correspondence I am anxious that these matters should be fairly placed before the Masonic world.

As regards the use of hard words and strong language, no one than myself is readier to admit how little any cause is served thereby; but it is not at all times easy, occasionally not possible, to under one's expressions within the bounds of calm propriety. In this, however, I do not think I am alone to blame; my accusers have been neither considerate nor reticent. Smarting under unmerited obloquy, combatting unfounded accusations, denounced as the enemy and destroyer of an Institution I have spent the best years of my life in commending to the support of the Craft—and that with the greatest success—is it in human nature to resent such attacks as those to which I have been exposed?

One question in conclusion—Mr. Perrott has come forward as a purist, does he come into court with clean hands? It is only recently that I have become acquainted with a deliberate and wilful breach of the agreement under which he held office; of this I shall be able to produce the proof in due course.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully and fraternally

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

Eastfield Villa, Hanwell,
15th November 1875.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As you have announced your intention to close your columns to all further correspondence on the Boys' School Controversy, will you kindly allow me, while acknowledging our indebtedness to you for the insertion of our previous letters, to make the following remarks? The Secretary informs us that the missing sum has been found; I do not see, however, from a careful examination of the statement of account said to be the one presented to the Special Committee of Investigation, that any such success has attended his efforts, for I observe, that, in order to make the totals right, for the year ending 31st December 1874 (see title page of Report for 1874), a sum of £30, said to have been spent this year, has to be introduced. With as much reason might the receipts of the present year be added to those of last year, and I feel confident no Committee, not to say professional accountant, could or would pass such a statement as the Secretary has drawn up. It will be noticed, too, that the sum assigned to 1871, has been changed three times during the last three weeks; first it was £53; then £45; and finally £72 15s, the same uncertainty exists about 1874; the expenditure for "grants and outfits" being given at £51 5s in Report for 1874, p. 41; afterwards at £47 10s, and lastly at £37 10s.

With reference to Bro. Sutcliffe's "Advertisement," in which he is pleased to style me a "disappointed clergyman;" I admit I have been disappointed, and grievously disappointed, at the way in which, as regards my hard work as Head Master and unpaid Chaplain, I have been treated by the House Committee; in my disappointment, however, I have the kind sympathy of many brethren and friends, and as to the three Charities of our Order, I have only to say, even at the risk of a charge of egotism, that my name will be found in the list of subscribers to all three, not for a princely sum, such as many have so nobly given, but in proportion to my humble ability. I will conclude by observing that all our calculations in the last Pamphlet are based on the different statements in the Reports for 1872, 1873, and 1874, which are, or ought to be, the trustworthy records of the years they represent. These Reports are either right or wrong; if wrong, the responsibility does not rest with us, we had no desire to make public the unhappy condition of the School. For years past the House Committee were urged to make an investigation, but the endeavour was as futile as is the proverbial difficulty of "coaxing a cat into a shower-bath."

I am, Dear Sir and Brother,

Yours faithfully and fraternally,

O. G. D. PERROTT.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As the writer of the letter proposing that something should be done for Bro. Perrott, and as one who has read all the correspondence, from beginning to end, I think I may claim to know something of this sad controversy.

Bro. Sutcliffe is quite right in denouncing the language as "un-Masonic," if he refers to Bro. Binckes's letter, than which nothing more abusive can be well conceived. Take, for instance, last specimen, about "three brothers being rascals." Why, it is almost incredible that Bro. Binckes should speak of three such brethren in the discreditable way he does. True, Bros. Tew and Perrott did deal blows about "suspension by the neck," the Secretary's complicity with the Matron, and his letters in Pamphlet to Mr. Goodfellow, but then Bro. Binckes has laid himself open to them, and when people begin to be strikers they must remember two can play the same game. Bro. Sutcliffe's advice about investigation is nothing more than a repetition of what you have said from the commencement, and if the committee had taken this step, the present scandal would have been avoided.

I am,

Yours truly and fraternally,

"A LOVER OF FAIR PLAY."

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters and communications must be addressed to the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, 67, Barbican, London, E.C.

T. B. W.—Many thanks. We are always pleased to hear from you.

J. S. (Nelson, N.Z.)—Glad to know the opinion of the brethren in your part. You will see the report is inserted. Let us hear from you frequently.

GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.—If Cruikshank has been the most accomplished Momus of the nineteenth century, he has been so much more, and so much that is better and greater, that one feels naturally some reluctance in so describing him. The truth is, that he has been everything as a designer that an artist could be, with the single exception that he worked, until of late years, with the etching needle and the pen and pencil point, almost to the exclusion of the canvas and the easel. As a caricaturist he would have been the very first in Europe, had he chosen so to distinguish himself; as a painter of genre pictures, he might have been no less eminent—but in either case he must have submitted to limitations which he would have found intolerable. With an imagination so rich in ideas, and a hand so ready to give them form and permanence, it was impossible for him to submit to the wearisome discipline of academical routine and the painful acquirement of technical methods; and if we may regret this when we look at the few easel pictures he has given us, we should consider how much we should lose by exchanging the multitudinous productions of George Cruikshank for the comparatively few finished performances that constitute the life-work of a Royal Academician. There is no etcher of any school with whom Cruikshank need shrink from comparison. In grouping, and in dealing with crowds of figures, he is equal to Callot, who was renowned for that special faculty, while the number of Cruikshank's works probably exceeds that of any half-score of his predecessors added together. His drawing, generally correct, is in numberless instances remarkable for beauty and for breadth. His pathos is frequently as touching as his humour is provocative and catching. Many of his pieces resemble Hogarth's in their didactic character, and, like Hogarth, he mitigates satire with playfulness, and makes his ridicule play the monitor. Some of his works have an avowed reforming and moral tendency, as, notably, his temperance series, in which the vice of drunkenness is set forth with all its terrible issues. As an illustrator of books he stands unrivalled, whether we consider the quality of the work, or the amazing amount of it which his industry and ready facility have enabled him to get through. Cruikshank, it is clear, must draw pretty much as some men write, inscribing his thoughts in pictures about as readily as they do in words. A curious spectacle would be an exhibition of his entire works. What a record would it not present of the foibles, follies, and fashions—the humours, the blunders, the vices, the delusions—and amidst all, the onward progress, of the nineteenth century.—Leisure Hour.

The Pythagorean Triangle; or, the Science of Numbers.—BY THE REV. G. OLIVER, D.D., Past M.P.S., Grand Commander S.G.I.G., 33° for England and Wales; Past D.G.M. of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts; Past D.P.G.M. for Lincolnshire; Honorary Member of numerous Lodges and Literary Societies in every quarter of the globe; author of "The Revelations of a Square," "The Book of the Lodge," "Historical Landmarks," &c., &c. With diagrams. London: John Hogg and Co., Paternoster-row. 1875.

THE name of Oliver is one that will be associated with Masonry and Masonic literature so long as there are brethren who can respect the memory of an able and worthy man, an enthusiastic Mason, and an eminent Masonic writer. The length of time the late Dr. Oliver was connected with our Order very nearly equalled what the Psalmist has proclaimed to be the allotted span of life. In breadth his reputation extended to every part of the world where Masonry is known. In point of dignity he attained a height to which few may aspire, while the love and respect in which he was held of all men was of the deepest and most profound character. The works he published during the literary portion of his career form by themselves a small library of well nigh unequalled merit, and he left behind him more than one valuable work in manuscript. These are now appearing, while our recollection of their author has lost as yet none of its freshness, and while there are yet living very many whose personal knowledge of, or friendship with the man, will ever be regarded as among the brightest features of their own career. To review one or more of these works is a privilege we esteem most highly. We feel as though the author were again among us, urging, with all that force and enthusiasm for which he was so remarkable, the meaning of the great truths of Masonry. It was in this spirit we studied the volume before us, and it is in this spirit, unmingled, however, with anything like fulsome adulation, that we offer these comments on it. In common with all who can appreciate good sound literary work, we feel a very great admiration for the author, but our admiration does not blind us to the fact that much of what he wrote will not stand the rude test of logical analysis. Having a pretty familiar acquaintance with his works, we say, without fear of contradiction, that Dr. Oliver was often carried away by his enthusiastic love of Masonry, and often assigned to its teaching a meaning and connection it never could have possessed. This, comparatively speaking, is a venial error. Most brethren will excuse the writer who seeks to glorify Masonry, even though, in doing so, he exceeds the limit of historic accuracy. The world would hardly be so agreeable a place to live in if it were governed absolutely by the inexorable logic of facts. We admire the introduction of a little fancy in describing the events of our daily life. While, then, we value all the works of Oliver we do not accept all the Oliverian fancies. We do not appreciate the Father of History the less that he himself occasionally varied the dry history of what actually happened with a little fiction. Oliver Goldsmith, of whom it was written, "Nihil tetigit, quod non ornavit," is none the less esteemed as an historian and naturalist because his histories of England, Greece, and Rome, and of the Earth, and Animated Nature, are not rigidly accurate. So with the late Dr. Oliver; oftentimes did he set down fancies as facts, and thus many of his works, while undoubtedly attractive reading, are not wholly trustworthy. To pass, however, without further digression to the Pythagorean Triangle. The contents of the volume may be described very briefly. There is a preface, admirably written; an introductory chapter, treating generally of the Science of numbers, and ten other chapters, each of which is devoted to the consideration of a number, beginning with one and ending with ten. In handling his subject the author has shown even more than his usual skill and ingenuity in dovetailing theories with facts, and we may add that he is more than usually successful in his conclusions. A summary of one of these chapters will suffice to convey an idea of the treatment.

In Chapter I. is discussed the Number One, the full title being "The Point. Monad, Unity, or the Number One." At the outset, we are told, the practice of primitive man was to count with his fingers, and this practice, how elaborated soever it may have been in the course of ages, still remains the basis of enumeration among civilised people. Thus ten is still the limit of our computation. After this we repeat the ten as two tens, three tens, ten tens or a hundred, ten hundreds or a thousand, ten thousands, then ten thousand thousands or a million, and so on. A primitive man expressed a single thing or person by holding up one finger, two by holding up two fingers, five by raising the hand with all the five fingers extended, twice five by holding up both hands similarly, or by raising the same hand twice, fifteen by raising it thrice, twenty by raising it four times, twenty-two by raising it four times and thereafter two fingers only. After a time written symbols were used to express numbers, thus the Romans expressed one in writing by a single line, or in signs by raising one finger, five by depressing the three middle fingers and raising the thumb and little finger, thus forming the written figure expressed by V. This doubled and thus written Λ or conjoined as X represented ten. By variously combining X, V, and I, all the numbers above ten and under fifty were then represented, while the latter was expressed by placing the V on its side, thus <. Hence in Roman numerals fifty is represented by an L. Then two fifties were described thus Ⅽ which in time became a C. Five hundred was expressed by IↃ, which gradually took the form of a D and a thousand by CIↃ which came to be M. Among the Greeks and Hebrews the letters of the alphabet were used to express all imaginable numbers.

Thence we pass to the stage when philosophers came to attach particular virtues to particular numbers, and among them one of the most illustrious of their number, Pythagoras, must be cited as an illustration. By him the Monad was taken to represent the T.G.A.O.T.U., and it was symbolised by the hierogram "of a point within a circle or equilateral triangle, to exemplify the unity of Divine essence, and His Eternity, there being neither beginning of years nor end of days." But we cannot do better than quote the rest of the passage; "And this deduction," continues Dr. Oliver, "appears perfectly reasonable:—

"Because the Monad or Point is the original and cause of the entire numeral system, as God is the cause of all things, being the only and great Creator on whom everything depends; for if there were more all-powerful Beings than one, none would be independent, nor would all perfections be centred in one individual, 'neither formally by reason of their distinction, nor eminently and virtually, for then one should have power to produce the other, and that nature which is producible is not divine. But all acknowledge God to be absolutely and infinitely perfect, in whom all perfections imaginable, which are simply such, must be contained formally, and all others which imply any mixture of perfection, virtually.'"

Having offered further remarks on this number, especially in connection with its interest from a Masonic point of view, Dr. Oliver proceeds to tell us that:—

"Amongst the Grecian philosophers, was a symbol of the hermaphrodite deity, or junction of the sexes, because it partakes of two natures. In a mysterious passage of the Yajur Veda, Brahma is spoken of, after his emanation from the golden egg, as experiencing fear at being alone in the universe; he therefore willed the existence of another, and instantly became masculo-feminine. The two sexes thus existing in one god were immediately, by another act of volition, divided in twain, and became man and wife. This tradition seems to have found its way into Greece; for the Androgyne of Plato is but another version of this Oriental myth. If the Monad be added to an odd number, it makes it even, and if to an even number, it makes it odd. Hence it was called Jupiter, because it stands at the head of numbers, as Jupiter is at the head of gods and men; and also Vesta or Fire, because, like the point within a circle, it is seated in the midst of the world. It was also called the Throne of Jupiter, from the great power which the centre has in the universe, being able to restrain its general circular motion, as if the custody of the Maker of all things were constituted therein."

The author further points out the meaning of the number, and what, at various times, and by various wise men, it was taken to symbolise. Thus, according to Hierocles the Pythagorean, the gods were likened to the Monad, "because there is one immutability and firmness of the virtues, which, it is reasonable to suppose, subsists transcendently with the gods, and which imparts a never-failing stability to their conceptions." Among the same sect it was regarded as the symbol of love and friendship, of the oneness of mankind as a brotherhood, knit together by the same ties of love and Charity. Again, according to the same Hierocles already quoted, One symbolized the Platonic or Pythagorean doctrine of benevolence. This sage says:—

"Each of us is, as it were, circumscribed by many concentric circles; some of which are less, but others larger, and some comprehend, but others are comprehended, according to the different and unequal habitudes with respect to each other. For the first and most proximate circle is that which every one describes about his own mind as a centre, in which circle the body, and whatever is assumed for the sake of the body, are comprehended. For this is nearly the smallest circle, and almost touches the centre itself. The second from this, and which is at a greater distance from the centre, but comprehends the first circle, is that in which parents, brothers, wife, and children are arranged. The third circle from the centre is that which contains uncles and aunts, grandfathers and grandmothers, and the children of brothers and sisters. After this is the circle which comprehends the remaining relatives. Next to this is that which contains the common people, then that which comprehends those of the same tribe, afterwards that which contains the citizens; and then two other circles follow, one being the circle of those that dwell in the vicinity of the city, and the other of those of the same province. But the outermost and greatest circle, and which comprehends all the other circles, is that of the whole human race."

As to the importance of the number, we have several authorities given, but we content ourselves with the following extract:—

"According to Euclid, in his second definition of the seventh book, numbers are formed of many units; but unity being indivisible, has no composition, nor is it a number, but the fountain and mother of all numbers. Being the cause of all numbers, they are formed by a plurality of units. Thus 2 is twice 1; 3 is three units, &c.; so that all numbers require the Monad, while it exists by itself without requiring any other. All which is to be considered of the First Cause; for as one is no number, but the cause and beginning of number, so the First Cause has no affinity to creatures, but is the cause and beginning of them; they all stand in need of Him, and He requires assistance from none. He is all in all, and all are included in Him in the most simple unity. The Jewish Rabbins agree that He is One, and there is no unity like His in the universe; the nearest idea that we can form of Him is symbolised by the unit or the figure one.

"The Pythagoreans say, 'The Monad is the principle of all things. From the Monad came the indeterminate dyad, as matters subjected to the cause, Monad; from the Monad and indeterminate dyad, Numbers: from numbers, Points; points, Lines; from lines, Superficies; from superfices, Solids; from these solid Bodies, whose elements are four, Fire, Water, Air, Earth; of all which, transmutated, and totally changed, the World consists.'"

These extracts will serve to show how elaborately, how minutely, Dr. Oliver has studied the meaning and symbolism of this number, or rather this "cause of all numbers," but we need not follow him through the few remaining pages of the chapter, which are only further and confirmatory illustrations of the value of the Monad. Similarly with the other numbers, the exposition throughout is equally interesting—amusing, we may also say, in some places, and, in nearly all cases, equally lucid. We except the following on "the Hexad:"—

"The sceptics used to amuse themselves by such arguments as these: If something be detracted from another, either an equal is detracted from an equal, a greater from a lesser, or a lesser from a greater. But none of these—therefore detraction is not possible. That detraction is not made by any of these ways is manifest. That which is detracted from another must be contained in it; but an equal is not contained in an equal, as six in six; for that which containeth ought to be greater than that which is contained. Neither is the greater contained in the lesser, as six in five; that were absurd. Neither is the lesser contained in the greater; for if five were contained in six, by the same reason, in five will be contained four; in four, three; in three, two; and in two, one. Thus six shall contain five, four, three, two, and one, which being put together make fifteen, which must be contained in six, if it be granted that the lesser is contained in the greater. In like manner, in the fifteen which is thus contained in six, will be contained thirty-five: and so by progression, infinite numbers; but it is absurd to say that infinite numbers are contained in the number six; therefore it is absurd to say that the lesser is contained in the greater."

Now here we confess to being somewhat in a fog. We presume the whole of the arguments were employed by the sceptics, but there is nothing to indicate whether this is so or not, or whether the part of the passage beginning—"That detraction is not made," to the end, is not Dr. Oliver's comment. Be this as it may, in either case we join issue as to detraction not being made in either of these ways. We hold that, mathematically, an equal is contained in an equal, and that it is contained exactly: and further, that five is contained in six, with a unit as remainder. We do not admit the theory that if six contains five, and five four, four three, &c., &c., therefore six contains fifteen—and, ultimately, that infinite numbers might be contained in six. This is obviously a fallacy, but whether of the Sceptics' or Dr. Oliver's own creation, we have no means of determining.

It is impossible, of course, within the circumscribed limits at our command to give more than a very limited idea of the volume. Suffice that each number is similarly treated as number one, that in nearly every case the treatment is as interesting, and this remark especially applies to the Triad, the Tetrad and the Ennead, some singular properties of the first and last of which are well known, no doubt, to our readers. The few remarks we intend to add refer rather to the manner of publication than to its contents. We think the publishers have exercised a wise discretion in leaving Dr. Oliver's text undisturbed: but we see no reason why the services of some competent scholar should not have been called in in order to explain the abstruser portions of the work. We may fairly reckon that the majority of those who read this work will be Masons, but not all Masons are sufficiently acquainted with Hebrew, Greek and Latin to understand the many passages and words in those languages with which the volume is interspersed. Had translations of these been added in the shape of footnotes, the value of the work would have been greatly increased, and we trust, if a new edition be called for, this oversight will be remedied. Here is another reason why some classical scholar should have been invited to peruse the manuscript before it appeared in print. We are not sure the passages are correctly given. The quotation, at p. 52, "Neque enim tanta, &c.," is punctuated wrongly. It is impossible there should be a full stop after polytheotes. As the passage stands it has no meaning whatever, but remove the objectionable point, and we see its meaning at once, namely, "It was not the number of the Gods, worshipped by different peoples that was so considerable as the titles under which they were worshipped. This is only one, but it is a conspicuous case of an error having crept in for want of due oversight. But these are points that can be remedied, and we trust they will be removed in any future issue.

The Art of Swimming. By CAPTAIN WEBB, the Channel Swimmer. (Edited by A. G. Payne.) London: Ward, Lock & Tyler, Warwick House, Paternoster-row.

NEXT week Captain Webb will be welcomed cordially into the ranks of Masonry, and his Essay on "The Art of Swimming," apart from its intrinsic value, comes very opportunely, for it will enable our readers to judge what manner of man it is who will so shortly become one of us. The story of his life is simply told. We said, last week, that brave men were men of kindness, and Captain Webb's account of his career, certainly confirms our dictum. He has worked hard and honourably in the career he chose when yet a boy of twelve. He has proved himself to be one of that class of undaunted sailors, on whose skill and courage England will have to rely chiefly in any danger that may threaten her. He possesses more than one testimonial to his unselfish daring, while the feat with which his name will ever be associated, is, as we have previously remarked, unexampled in the history of all ages and peoples. There is, absolutely, no instance on record of a man having swum for nearly twenty-two hours without a moment's respite; and great things may be expected of one who has done what no mortal man ever did before. The one feature that most strikes every one who reads the simple narration of Captain Webb's life, is his strict observance of the truth. On no occasion did he ever allow himself to swerve even a hair's breadth into the crooked path of equivocation, much less into that of wilful misrepresentation, and the man who can honestly show this is worthy the appreciation of the world.

The Essay on Swimming is capitally written. The style is unaffected. The advice it contains is sound and practical. His illustrations of the respective merits of the breast-stroke, the side-stroke, and the overhand-stroke; his instructions how to hold the body in the water, so that the swimmer may exert his powers to the best advantage; how to overcome the nervousness so many experience when in the water for the first time; his directions how to tread water: all these will be thoroughly appreciated by the expert swimmer, while to the tyro, they will prove invaluable. The plates are very serviceable in illustrating the positions of a swimmer, according to the stroke he adopts.

Of course a narrative of Captain Webb's life, and his advice to swimmers would be incomplete without a full record of his various swimming feat. It is, in keeping, therefore, with the rest of the book, that an account of his two attempts to swim the Channel should be given. But other swimming feats are also given, so that the little volume contains far more than the average amount of useful information, imparted in a style which is acceptable chiefly by reason of its extreme simplicity. We must add that Mr. Payne, as editor, has played his part extremely well. He has arranged the contents admirably. True, the duties were not very onerous, but as Captain Webb's avocations have probably not admitted of his cultivating letters to any extent, we may fairly assume that the literary credit of the work is due principally to Mr. Payne. Be this as it may, both Captain Webb and Mr. Payne deserve our thanks for having published so interesting and so useful a work, and we thank them accordingly, without stint or arrière pensée.

The Octopus; or, the "Devil-Fish" of Fiction and of Fact. By Henry Lee, F.L.S., F.G.S., F.Z.S., &c., Naturalist of the Brighton Aquarium. With Illustrations. London: Chapman and Hall, 193 Piccadilly. 1875.

THE spirit in which our esteemed Bro. Henry Lee has written this highly interesting book, or rather the series of notes, which originally appeared in Land and Water, and are here formed into one continuous narrative, may be judged from a single sentence. In answering Victor Hugo's question, "Of what are such creatures? What purpose do they serve?" Bro. Lee having mentioned certain uses to which they are applied in some countries, and before entering upon the discussion of the higher purposes they serve, says, "That this" (to serve as food, or a means of obtaining food) "is the sole object of their being I cannot for one moment suppose; and therefore I am content to believe that the Great Architect of the Universe made them and all things for Himself, and that for His pleasure they are and were created." It is thus evident that to a profound knowledge of his subject, and the enthusiasm proper to an eager Student of Nature, the author unites a deep feeling of reverence for the Supreme Being. This, indeed, was to be expected. The naturalist, by reason of his superior knowledge of created things, can better appreciate the grand works of the Deity than those who see, yet understand not. However, it follows not that a work which is written in a becoming spirit of reverence is of necessity either instructive or interesting. But these Aquarium Notes are both. We know of no one whose account of the Octopus and its habits could possibly be more instructive; for where can we find a higher authority than Bro. Lee? And the author being about as admirable a personification of geniality as is to be found anywhere in this mundane sphere of ours, it were strange, indeed, had he not infused in his narrative a considerable amount of what is the leading feature in his character. So much for the style of the book. As to its contents, we must confine ourselves to indicating their character. Though admirers of Nature, we are not, unfortunately, professed Naturalists. Even were we such, we should pause long, and probably think more than the prescribed three times of Mr. Gladstone before attempting to air our little knowledge in the presence of so great an authority. After a brief introduction, the author describes the position of the Octopus and its relatives in the animal kingdom. He then gives an account of "Octopods" he "has known." Next he examines Victor Hugo's well-known romance, Les Travailleurs de la Mer, or, rather those portions of it in which the Octopus figures, with a view to pointing out how far the great French novelist has drawn upon his imagination, how far he has adhered to facts. He then describes the Octopus out of water, and various matters relating to the habits of this animal and its relatives, the Cuttles and Squids, with which we are somewhat more familiar, and the economic value of cuttle-fishes, while, in the last chapter of all, he gives an account of gigantic cuttle-fishes, whose existence has been perfectly authenticated. It will be seen from this slight, and we fear, somewhat lame, account of the book, that, from a technical point of view, the author has omitted from his programme nothing which could throw any light upon this singular creature. One other aspect only remains in which we need consider this volume. We have shown that the spirit which animates the author is one of reverence for the G.A.O.T.U. We have indicated, sufficiently, we hope, that it is very instructive. We shall experience still less difficulty in proving it to be, in the highest degree, interesting. Those of our readers who are at all acquainted with the columns of that most edifying of journals, Land and Water, know well the singularly happy style in which Bro. Lee imparts his knowledge to the public. These are the identical notes, with the advantage of a careful revision by the author, which originally appeared in that journal. From notes thus happily written, whose publication occurred at intervals more or less regular, it is obvious that a most entertaining narrative must be made; but, as not all of our readers, perhaps, have seen them in their original form, we take leave to quote one or two extracts for their benefit. Thus, the following as to danger to bathers from the Octopus:—

"I have often been asked whether an octopus of the ordinary size can really be dangerous to bathers. Decidedly 'Yes,' in certain situations. An octopus would not seize a man for the purpose of devouring him; nor do I believe that the act would be prompted by a deliberate intention to drown him, that his dead body might become an attractive bait for crabs, which are the animal's favourite food; but rather by an instinctive desire to lay hold on anything moving within reach. The holding power of its numerous suckers is enormous. It is almost impossible forcibly to detach it from its adhesion to a rock or the flat bottom of a tank; and if a large one happened to fix one or more of its strong, tough arms on the leg of a swimmer whilst the others held firmly to a rock, I doubt if the man could disengage himself under water, by mere strength, before being exhausted. Fortunately, it can be made to relax its hold by grasping it tightly round the 'throat' (if I may so call it), and it may be well that this should be known."

Instances are given in confirmation of this view, and one of them, narrated by Major Newsome, R.E., as having occurred to him once when bathing in a deep port at East London, about 900 miles from the Cape, on the East Coast of Africa, we quote:—

"One morning I took a header into one of these pools, which was, perhaps, 20 feet long, 7 to 8 feet wide, and deep in the centre—8 or 9 feet. As I swam from one end to the other, I was hurrified at feeling something around my ancle, and made for the side as speedily as I could. I thought at first it was only sea-weed; but as I landed, and trod my foot on the rock, my disgust was heightened at feeling a fleshy and slippery substance under me. I was, I confess, alarmed, and so, apparently, was the beast on whom I trod, and whom, I suspect, I thereby discomfited, as he quickly detached himself and made again for the water. Some fellow-bathers, whom I hailed, came to my assistance, and with a boat-hook, on to which the brute clung, he was, eventually, safely landed. When extended he would have filled a hoop of five feet diameter. The grasp of an ordinary sized octopus holding to a rock would, I suppose, in lat. 30°, be not less than 40 lb. to 50 lb. The floating power of a man is between 5 lb. and 6 lb., and it takes a very strong swimmer to convey an ordinary fowling-piece, which weighs only 7 lb., across a river, dry. Had I not kept mid-channel, I believe it would have been a life-and-death struggle between myself and the beast on my ancle. In the open water I was the best man; but near the bottom or sides, which I could not have reached with my arms, but which he could have reached with his, he would, certainly, have drowned me."

In the chapter on "The Octopus out of Water," the author tells us how, in May 1870, the attendants at the Brighton Aquarium were puzzled to account for the almost regular disappearance of certain lump fish. "Almost daily there was a fresh and inexplicable vacancy in the gradually diminishing family circle, and morning after morning a handbill might have been issued:—'Missing! Lost, stolen, or strayed, a young 'lump-sucker,' rather below the middle size, and enormously stout; had on a bright blue coat, with several rows of buttons on it, and a waistcoat of lighter colour. Whoever will give such information as shall lead to the discovery of the same, or produce satisfactory evidence of his death, will relieve the troubled minds of the curators!' 'What on earth can have become of them?' 'Where can they be?' were the questions each attendant asked in vain of another." They had not died, or their bodies would have been in the tank; they had not burrowed in the shingle, for it was not deep enough, and they were too obese to have jumped out. A watch was set and the mystery was at once solved. One morning an Octopus was found in tank 27, all among the lump fish. It had got out of its own tank for the purpose of preying on the latter; but let Bro. Lee give his own version:—

"The marauding rascal had occasionally issued from the water in his tank, and clambered up the rocks, and over the wall into the next one; there he had helped himself to a young lump-fish, and, having devoured it, returned demurely to his own quarters by the same route, with well filled stomach and contented mind. This was not very difficult for him to accomplish, for the partition between the two tanks is only about a foot above the surface of the water. Having accidentally, or otherwise, discovered that there was a preserve of live stock suitable to his palate next door, he paid frequent nocturnal poaching visits to it, and, after clearing up every remnant of his meal, regularly slunk home before daylight; until, like most criminals, becoming careless by frequently escaping detection, he, on the last occasion, indulged at supper time in an inordinate gorge, and slept under his neighbour's perch, instead of going to bed."

We could go on quoting almost ad infinitum, and we should much like to do it, but considerations of space forbid us. If our readers wish to know how to settle an Octopus if embraced by one, when taking a dip in the briny, near some rocky cleft where Octopod mostly do conceal themselves; if they would study their marriage customs, their spawning, the treatment of the young by the mother Octopus; if they would know about the cuttles, their habit of, and skill in, squirting an inky secretion at those who touch them, how the late Tom Hood the younger, when fishing in Looe harbour, caught one of them, and receiving a squirt full in his face, exclaimed that, "he did not exactly know what he had on his line, but he thought he had caught a young garden engine," and how a certain Essex fisherman, known as Bill, once got a squirt of ink on his nose from another; if they would have authentic information of the monster Cuttle fishes, which are to be found in the Atlantic, off the coast of North America, and in other seas, the advice we give in all sincerity is, go and read Bro. Lee's Aquarium Notes on The Octopus; the Devil Fish of Fiction and of Fact.

It only remains that we should congratulate Bro. Lee on the re-appearance of these notes in a connected form. We thank him "muchly" for the opportunity he has afforded us of extending the circle of our knowledge, under very enjoyable circumstances.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THE Prince of Wales, when we left him last week, was in the full enjoyment of the Masonic Ball given by the Craft in Bombay, in honour of his visit. It is almost needless to add, that this passed off most successfully, and it were difficult to say which were the most pleased the hosts, or their Royal and fraternal guest. Since then His Royal Highness has done the work of sight-seeing with a vigour that is, in the highest degree, creditable. Among the marvels he has seen must be mentioned the Caves of Elephantas, which were illuminated in his honour, and in which he was served with something more substantial still in the shape of a repast. Poonah, also, has been honoured. In visiting this city the Prince had to ascend the Ghauts by rail, and descend by the other slope. His reception was, of course, a right royal one. There was a grand review of the military, a grand banquet, a grand ball, and visits to the places of interest in the immediate neighbourhood. After this he returned to Bombay, and the sounds of revelry, by night and by day, were renewed as a matter of course. Owing to the appearance of Cholera, not in isolated cases, but unhappily among well-to-do Europeans, as well as the poorer class of natives, the Prince's programme, as first sketched, will not be carried out, his visit to the Madras Presidency having been struck out. By this time, no doubt, he is on his way to Ceylon, where he will enjoy a brief experience of elephant-hunting, and visit some of the coffee plantations. The Princess of Wales, with her guests, the King and Queen of Denmark, her sister, Princess Thyra, and her children, have returned to Marlborough House from Sandringham. On Thursday evening the Gaiety was honoured with a visit by Her Royal Highness and their Majesties. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught has received the congratulations of the Craft on his arrival at Gibraltar.

The floods which have prevailed at intervals in different parts of the country have been very serious, and have been attended with very great damage to property. This is especially the case in the Thames Valley. All about Oxford, in Bucks, at Windsor, and elsewhere, the river has overflowed the neighbouring country, which has the appearance of one vast expanse of water. On the night of Sunday-Monday, the southern parts of London were deluged with water. At Nine Elms, the Thames rose far above the enclosing wall of the South Western goods depôt, and dashing through the premises swept trucks and goods right away into the Wandsworth-road. Fulham Palace was partially submerged, the ground floor in which are situated the library and other rooms, being filled with water to a considerable depth. But the worst effects were felt by the poor inhabitants of Lambeth, dwelling on the water side, who have lost what little property they possessed in the way of furniture, and it is estimated that quite 2,000 people are thus reduced to comparative poverty. Of course, a subscription was at once started to meet the more immediate requirements, and on Thursday an influential deputation, headed by Mr. Twells, one of the members for the City, waited upon Lord Mayor Cotton and urged upon his lordship that a relief fund should be started at once. Equally of course, Lord Mayor Cotton acceded to the request and a subscription was then and there started, the Corporation heading the list with the munificent sum of £500. From other parts of the country the cry, as to the floods, is "Still they come," and there can be no question but the state of things is very dreadful to contemplate. Along the coast, too, there have been terrible gales, resulting in very serious destruction of property, especially on the coasts of Kent and Sussex, and unfortunately loss of life has resulted in more than one instance. Indeed, this deluge of waters is almost without precedent, and the tide on the Thames on Monday morning is said to have been the highest ever registered. But for the foresight and energy of the Thames and Metropolitan police, who gave the inhabitants of Lambeth warning, it is terrible to think how many lives must have been sacrificed.

The power of love is certainly not illustrated in the married life of Miss Nelly Power, the actress. Though married as recently as June of last year, she finds it impossible to live happily with her husband who, in spite of repeated requests not to call at her mother's house, where she resides, will persist in calling. As a result of these domestic squabbles, a Mr. F. G. Hobson was summoned by the husband for assault, and after hearing the evidence of Mrs. Barnett, née Power, the magistrate thought the justice of the case would be met by binding Mr. Hobson over in two sureties of £25 each, and his own recognisances in £50, to be of good behaviour for six months.

The Court of Probate is, at the moment of writing, engaged in a great will case, the disputants being sundry relations of the late Lord St. Leonards, for the recovery of whose will a very large reward was offered some months ago. The evidence of the Hon. Miss Sugden is to the effect that her father, whose little handbook on wills is one of the most popular and useful legal treatises ever written, had made a will, and at different times subsequently had attached sundry codicils thereto. So thoroughly acquainted was she with its contents that she had been able to write down nearly all its most important provisions. The case is still proceeding.

At the Court of Common Council, held on Thursday, the new Lord Mayor was received with very great cordiality, that being the first occasion on which his Lordship had presided since his inauguration as chief magistrate of the City. A vote of thanks was also carried by acclamation to the late Lord Mayor, Bro. Alderman Stone, for his services to the Corporation and the citizens at large during his Mayoralty. On this occasion, also, the sum of £500 was voted to the sufferers by the recent inundations on the banks of the Thames, as referred to above.

Sir John Glover, whose exploits in Ashantee land are familiar to our readers, is reported to be lying dangerously ill in Queen's County, Ireland, owing to serious injuries received in a recent collision on the Midland line. Erysipelas is said to have set in, and threatens to attack the spine. We hope the gallant officer will survive so critical a juncture. The services of so able a man are invaluable.

An unseemly squabble has arisen in some of the papers anent the dismissal by Dr. Hornby of one of his tutors. Of course the case, like every other, has two sides to it, but it seems to us a matter of some importance that the relations between the head and subordinate masters of our greatest public school, should not needlessly be brought before the public. The governing body had not thought fit to intervene effectually in behalf of the aggrieved subordinate, and no good whatever is gained by giving such prominence to the matter. Indeed, the disciplinary arrangements of our schools must be considerably weakened if any incident in their conduct is thus publicly questioned.

Further experiments have been made at Woolwich with the 81-ton gun. On Thursday four rounds were fired with various charges, beginning with 220lbs. and rising by 10lbs. to 240lbs., the weight of the projectile being 1,200lbs. The success of this monster gun is now placed beyond doubt, and we suppose but a short time will elapse ere the next thing in Woolwich infants will be a 160-tonner.

The National Assembly at Versailles have disposed of the Electoral Bill, so that some time between now and early spring we shall see a new election in France. The Carlist war still drags its weary length along, and there is a reported defeat of the Turkish troops by the insurgents in the Herzegovina. Of other foreign news there is but little worth recording.

The regular monthly meeting of the Grand Lodge of Benevolence was held on Wednesday, the 17th inst., at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, Bro. Joshua Nunn P.G.S.B. in the chair; Bros. Jas. Brett P.G.P., and E. P. Albert Asst. G.P. occupying the vice-chairs. There was a numerous attendance of the brethren. The nomination of twelve P.M.'s to serve on the Grand Lodge of Benevolence took place; the reports of the Board of General Purposes and of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution were read, and scrutineers were appointed; Bro. John Hervey G.S. read the minutes of the former meeting, and the list of grants to the amount of £205; there were 31 new cases, these were relieved to the amount of £865. There were present Bros. J. Smith P.G.P., Wright G.P., T. Cubitt P.G.P., Ough P.G.P., W. Smith P.G.P., H. Dicketts P.G.S., C. A. Cottebrune P.G.P., S. May P.G.S., J. Boyd P.G.P., Wood, Hutton, W. C. Parsons, Hilton, Swallow, Bartlett, H. Garrod, W. Stephens, J. T. Sabine, C. Hogard, H. G. Buss, Pendlebury, Bingemann, H. Levander, Middleton, W. Mann-Wilson, Michael, H. Massey, Headon, J. Coutts P.G.P., C. Carter, &c.

Our readers who, at this dull season, find some pleasure in flowers, should pay a visit to Alexandra Palace, where the Messrs. W. Cutbush and Son have on view a capital display of Chrysanthemums. We cannot speak in sufficiently high terms of the admirable taste with which the plants are arranged. Occupying a central position in the middle of the Great Central Hall, they may be seen to very great advantage from well nigh every point. There is great variety of colour, and some of the specimens were especially fine. In particular we noticed four, which were fully as large as any we have seen. These were, the Prince of Wales, purple violet, incurved, fine; the Princess of Wales, white, tinted rose; Dr. Sharpe, magenta crimson; and Mrs. Sharpe, pinkish rose. Others there were, without number, almost equal to these in point of merit. However, as the exhibition will remain open to the public till next Saturday, our readers will do well to go and judge for themselves.

Bro. the Right Hon. the Earl of Zetland, Prov. G.M. N. and E. Yorkshire, met with an accident when out hunting, on Saturday, in the neighbourhood of Cockfield. His Lordship's horse put one of its feet into a rabbit hole, and fell, the Earl being thrown with some violence over the animal's head. A carriage was at once procured, and his Lordship conveyed to his residence at Aske Hall, where medical assistance having arrived, it was discovered he had dislocated his shoulder. By the latest accounts the Earl is progressing favourably, and we trust he will be speedily restored to health.

Bro. Griffiths Smith P.G.S., of No. 15 Furnivals Inn, Holborn, has been appointed a London commissioner to administer oaths in the supreme Court of Judicature.

The Royal Institution of Great Britain has now for its opposite neighbours the well-known firm of Messrs Feltoe and Sons, proprietors of the popular "Specialité" Sherry, whose unbounded success in the sale of this wholesome wine has compelled them to remove from Conduit-street to their present handsome, extensive and convenient premises in Albemarle-street.—Morning Post.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—We implore all who desire to regain or retain health, during cold, inclement, uncertain weather, to give heed unto this warning, and spare themselves the misery soon broadcast through the land. Turn which way you will, go where you please, persons will be found who have a ready word of praise for this Ointment. For chaps, chaps, scabs, bruises and sprains, it is an invaluable remedy; for bad legs, caused by accident or cold, it may be confidently relied upon for effecting a speedy and permanent cure. In cases of swelled ancles, erysipelas, gout, and rheumatism, Holloway's Ointment gives the greatest comfort, by relieving the inflammation, cooling the blood, soothing the nerves, adjusting the circulation, and expelling impurities.

CONSECRATION OF A NEW LODGE.

ST. John's Lodge, No. 1564, Knap Hill, Woking, in the province of Surrey, was Consecrated by R.W. the Provincial Grand Master, Lt.-General Browning, assisted by the W. Bro. the Reverend C. W. Arnold, the Grand Chaplain for the province of Surrey, on Tuesday, 9th of November. We give our readers the oration delivered by Bro. Arnold on that occasion :—

"Before the consecration of this Lodge commences let us say a few words on Masonry, and bring before you, briefly, some of its prominent features, that we may enter on our service to day with hearts and minds influenced aright.

"What is Masonry? A pure system of morality veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols. Is Masonry, then, in any way antagonistic to religion? Certainly not, Masonry is the hand-maid of religion. The volume of the Sacred Law contains all that is necessary for man's salvation, and points out to him the line of conduct which will eventually lead him to eternal bliss in the glorious realms above. But man is weak and frail, and constantly inclined to fall. Masonry, by signs and symbols, reminds him of God's teaching; and so unites his instruction with the implements of labour and the object of nature and art, that everything by which he is surrounded reiterates her lessons.

"The different degrees of Masonry represents the stages of life, reminding us of our origin and end, and point out how all we have is due to the boundless goodness of the Great Architect of the Universe. Thus are the great lessons of humility and mutual dependence inculcated, and the principle of active charity fanned into a flame that lights up the whole life of the true Mason. The development of the intellectual faculties is encouraged with due subservience to the omniscience of the Grand Geometrician of the Universe. The contemplation of the closing scene of life teaches us the great lesson of self-examination, so that, faithfully acting up to the principles we profess, we may look forward with hope and confidence to the rising of that bright morning star which will bring to us that final joy and peace for which the faithful are ever longing.

"But let us be very careful, brethren, lest we attend to mere external forms and ceremonies whilst neglecting their spiritual instruction; and whilst we adhere stedfastly to the ancient landmarks of our Order, let us remember that our symbols are only useful whilst they inculcate and keep in view some true, some vital principle, and as the building of that grand temple by King Solomon is symbolical of the building which should be reared in the heart of man, so let us build up our hearts and bodies as fit temples in which the pure spirit of the Most High may dwell.

"We are to-day engaged constituting a new Lodge. Its prosperity will depend on the conduct of its officers and members. Those who are called to rule must exercise their office with firmness and discretion, tempered with kindness, whilst those who are not yet fit to rule must practice and learn obedience, and aid and assist those above them with prompt and willing mind. All jealousies and differences must be set aside, and brotherly love flourish and prevail.

"It should be the earnest desire of every brother, testified to by his life and actions, that God may say of this Lodge as of His Temple, 'I have hallowed this house to put My name there for ever, and Mine eyes and Mine heart shall be there perpetually.'"

TRAFALGAR R.A. CHAPTER, 157 S.C., ST. HELENS, NEW ZEALAND,

THE Installation and Banquet of this prosperous Chapter took place at the Masonic Hall, Trafalgar, St. Helens, on Thursday, the 23rd September.

The Chapter was opened in due form at high noon, and M.E. Comp. Squires, in the unavoidable absence of the First Principal, conducted the installation and investiture. By common consent it seemed to be the desire, as far as possible, to retain, in the same respective positions, the services of those office bearers whose exertions, during the past year, had resulted so satisfactorily, and accordingly, after the list of Companions eligible for office was presented, the respective nominations were accepted without competition in any instance; the ballot thus being rendered unnecessary.

The following elections were declared:—W. B. Sealy M.D., Z., W. W. Squires, M.D., H., both re-elected, William Holmes J., W. M. Stanton E. (re-elected), J. Hounsell N., P. G. Bowman Treasurer (the Treasurer of last year desiring to retire), L. G. Beer 1st (late 2nd) Soj., J. C. Moutray 2nd (late 3rd) Soj., and Alfred Jackson 3rd Soj. George McDonald was appointed Janitor.

The Chapter was then adjourned for the Installation of Comp. Holmes as M.E. Third Principal.

On its re-opening, M.E. Comp. Squires administered the obligation and invested the several office bearers, during which he presented E. Comp. W. M. Stanton with a gold signet ring, bearing the Royal Arch Emblems (with a suitable inscription inside), as the gift of the Companions, in acknowledgment and appreciation of his services in the foundation and organisation of the Chapter.

Comp. Stanton, being taken by surprise at this unexpected mark of favour, assured the Companions that whilst he felt that the importance of his services were magnified by his brethren and Companions, they were at all times a self-rewarding labour of love, of which he could not readily tire.

Two Companions were, at this stage of the proceedings, affiliated to the Trafalgar Chapter.

Comp. Stanton then addressed M.E. Comp. Sealy (who had but recently arrived), to the effect that he had the pleasing task delegated to him of rendering honour to whom honour is due, by presenting the M.E. First Principal, in the name of the Chapter, with a testimonial of the respect, admiration and affection, for the many years' unflagging efforts directed to the welfare of Masonry, and for a continuous example to the world, as well as to the Craft, of a just, upright and blameless life; of admiration for the extraordinary talent and aptitude in the working of this new Chapter (to which must mainly be attributed its acknowledged high position), and of affection for the unchanging courteous and kindly bearing for which he is so distinguished.

The M.E. Comp. returned thanks in feeling terms, promising to continue to preserve the esteem of the Companions, which he so justly appreciated; at the same time he desired to offer a tribute to Scribe E., whose support and assistance in conducting the duties of his offices he valued so highly.

The Chapter was then closed in due form.

The Banquet was held on the evening of the same day, and a goodly number of the Companions and brethren (invited guests) sat down to a sumptuous repast, provided by Comp. Tregon, the Steward. After the removal of the cloth, the following toasts were drunk, with usual honours, the first four being given from the chair, which was ably filled by the M.E. First Principal.

"Her Majesty, the Queen, our Patroness, God bless her."

"H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, as first Grand Principal of England, and the Grand Principals of Scotland and Ireland."

"The Grand Superintendent and Officers of the District Grand Chapter of New Zealand."

"The Canterbury Kilwinning Chapter, coupled with the health of M.E. Companions Thiel and Booth."

Telegrams communicating the two last toasts were then transmitted to the Chapters assembled at Dunedin and at Christchurch, distant respectively 450 and 200 miles, and within twenty minutes replies congratulatory were received from each.

Comp. Hustwick proposed the "First Principal," to which the M.E. Comp. responded.

M.E. Comp. Sealey then gave the "Second and Third Principals and other Officers of the Trafalgar Chapter." M.E. Comp. Squires gave the "W.M., Officers and Brethren of the Southern Star Lodge," responded to by the W.M. Bro. Lightfoot.

M.E. Comp. Sealy proposed the health of Scribe E., for which, and for the graceful terms in which the toast was given, Companion Stanton heartily returned thanks.

The memory of the late Companion Arthur Dobb, Past J., was then drunk in solemn silence.

"Our Visitors and Guests," given by M.E. Comp. Sealy, was responded to by Comp. Millard P.S.D., and the toast "To all Poor and Distressed Masons," brought the formal proceedings to a close, and the remainder of the evening was agreeable devoted to song and chorus harmony.

The Chapter numbers at present forty-five Companions, of all grades of society, merchants, tradesmen, clergymen, and a number of various professions, and its future prospects seem as hopeful and encouraging as its beginning.

THE installation of the Worshipful Master and Officers of Prince of Wales Lodge, E.C., took place on Sept. 16, under more than usual éclat. The Lodge was opened at 6 p.m. by Bro. G. N. Brassey W.M. After the Lodge business was concluded, Bro. P. M. Leers took the chair, and delivered a very impressive charge to Bro. W. M. Skinner M.M. elect. A Board of Installed Masters was then formed, and we believe, without exception, there was the largest number of Past Masters present that have yet assembled in Auckland. The solemn and impressive ceremony was performed in a very able and efficient manner by Bro. P. M. Leers. The brethren of the various degrees having been admitted, Bro. W. M. Skinner then installed his officers as follow: Bro. Clayton S.W.; Bro. Rev. Nelson J.W.; Bro. Stoddard Treasurer; Bro. P. M. Leers Secretary; Bro. Dawson S.D.; Bro. Dyer J.D.; Bro. Rathring I.G.; Bro. Porter Tyler. The usual banquet followed. After full justice had been done to the festive board, various toasts were proposed and drank.

The ceremony of installing Bro. W. McCullough into the office of Deputy Provincial Grand Master of New Zealand, under the Scottish Constitution, took place on the 21st September, in the Lodge Room, Masonic Hotel. At 7.30 p.m., St. Andrew's Lodge, 418, S.C., was opened in the third degree by Bro. M. Nicol R.W.M. The Provincial Grand Lodge, I.C., was then announced and received in due form, and the P.G.L. Officers took the place of the Craft Officers, and opened the P.G. Lodge in ample form. Bro. McCullough was then presented to the P.G.M. of New Zealand, I.C., Bro. G. P. Pierce, for installation, Bro. Pierce having been requested by the P.G.M., S.C., who is resident at Dunedin, to do so. The D.R.G.M. elect was presented by Past Masters Hay, Dewar, Anderson, and Nicol, the last named of whom made a few appropriate remarks. Bro. McCullough was then invested and installed, Bro. Pierce conducting the ceremony in the most impressive manner, and ably assisted by the V.W.P.G. Chaplain, Dr. Kidd, and Bro. Rev. D. Bruce, Chaplain of St. Andrew's. The D.G.P.M., having been placed to the right of the P.G.M. and saluted with grand honours, Dr. Kidd then delivered a very able and instructive address, which was listened to with pleasure by the brethren, many expressing the desire that the oration might be printed. Bro. McCullough having briefly thanked the brethren, the P.G. Lodge was closed, the officers of St. Andrew's Lodge resumed their chairs and closed. The brethren afterwards sat down, to the number of about fifty, to an excellent supper provided by Host Avey, at which Bro. Nicol R.W.M. of St. Andrew's presided, supported on the right by Bro. G. P. Pierce P.G.M. of New Zealand, I.C., and on the left of Bro. McCullough D.P.G.M. of New Zealand, S.C.

The Rev. P. P. Agnew, Past Provincial Grand Chaplain of English and Scotch Constitutions, gave, on Sept. 22, according to notice, his lecture upon Freemasonry, Bro. G. P. Pierce, Provincial Grand Master in the chair. The platform was occupied by brethren of the various Lodges of the Irish, English, and Scotch Constitutions; also of the "Royal Arch," and the Rev. Bro. Nelson, and the Rev. Dr. Kidd, Chaplains; the chairman, and Masonic brethren, both on the platform and in the body of the hall, were in full regalia, according to their respective degrees.—New Zealand Herald.

Pendered S.W., John Davis J.W., Lewis Crombie Treasurer, Thos. A. Chubb Secretary, J. S. Pierce P.M. D.C., E. Stronts Steward, who acted as Deacon, and Magnus Ohren P.M. as Deacon, and Wm. Sagg as I.G., in place of those officers, who were unable to attend, and the following P.M.'s and brethren: J. E. Eachus I.P.M., John Strapp, Wm. Smith, Jno. Glaisher, F. G. Finch, G. N. Goodall and other brethren and visitors. Business—The ballot was unanimous in favour of Bros. William Battye P.M. No. 142, Wm. Robt. Woodman P.M. Grenadiers, No. 66, Charles Bennett P.M. Robert Burns, No. 25, as joining members. Bros. Hallowes and Millar were raised. Bros. Hald, Davidson and Campbell were passed. The following notice of motion, by Bro. Ohren P.M., was carried:—"That after the word 'deposit' in the Bye-Law No. 15, page 10, line 12,—the following words be added:—unless the Joining Brother be a Principal or Past Principal of the Britannic Chapter, in which case the Joining Fee for such Brother shall be Five Guineas only, including the deposit." Stewards were appointed to the three Masonic Charities for the ensuing year. All the work was performed by the W.M., who came up from the country to attend to his duties, and carried them out to the satisfaction of the Lodge. He afterwards presided at the banquet, with his usual ability. The next meeting of the Lodge is on the second Friday in February.

Strong Man Lodge of Instruction, No. 45.—This Lodge held its regular weekly meeting on the 15th of November, at the Old Jerusalem Tavern, St. John's Gate, St. John's Square, E.C. Present—Bros. Crawley W.M., Killick S.W., Pearcy J.W., Crutch S.D., Trewinnard J.D., Jones I.G., Christopher Tyler. Business—The Lodge was opened in the usual manner, and the minutes confirmed. The ceremony of raising was rehearsed, Bro. Stock candidate. Bro. Tolmie rehearsed the Traditional History, and worked the 1st, 2nd and 3rd sections of the third Lecture. Bro. Powell, 188, was elected a member, and the S.W. appointed W.M. for the ensuing week. Lodge closed punctually.

Glasgow Chapter, No. 50.—The Chapter held its regular meeting on the 11th inst., at 218 Buchanan-street, Glasgow. Comp. Miller Z. being unable to attend, Comp. Duthie Z. 67 proceeded to open a Mark Master Lodge, with G. W. Wheeler Z. 73 as Senior Warden, J. Duthie as Junior Warden. A petition for advancement being read from a brother of the Athol Lodge, at the request of the acting Z., Comp. J. Mercer, 1st S. of Chapter 87, worked the Mark Degree in excellent style, for which he received the thanks of the Lodge. A Most Excellent Lodge was then opened, when Comp. Duthie conferred that degree on the same candidate. The Chapter was then opened by J. Duthie Z., G. W. Wheeler as H., J. Louttit J., J. Morrison S.E., J. Robinson N., P. Agnew, T. C. McKenzie 1st S., and the same gentleman was entrusted with the secrets of the Arch Degree. Amongst the visitors present, besides those named above, we observed Comp. D. Anderson and Broadfoot 73, and J. Johnson J. 122.

Angel Lodge, No. 51.—The monthly meeting of this Lodge, on the 9th inst., was saddened by the recent death of the venerable Treasurer to the Lodge, Bro. William Slaney, and in respect for whose memory all the brethren appeared in Craft mourning. Bro. Slaney was looked upon as "Father" of the Lodge, the date of his initiation being so far back as 1839, and it is 33 years since he occupied the chair of K.S. Up to within a very short period Bro. Slaney continued to take a most active interest in the affairs of the Lodge, and at the time of his decease occupied the post of Treasurer. It was but natural, therefore, that deep regret should be felt at the loss of so able a member, and the following resolution was unanimously passed, and ordered to be entered on the minutes, the Secretary receiving instructions to forward a copy of the same to Mrs. Slaney.

"That the members of this Lodge have heard with deep regret of the death of Bro. William Slaney, one of the oldest Past Masters, and for many years Treasurer, and they desire to convey to his widow and family the sincerest expressions of condolence in their affliction. The long services of Bro. Slaney to this Lodge have been of a most important character, and will always be held in affectionate remembrance."

The Essex Standard thus records the funeral of Bro. Slaney, which took place on Monday, 8th November 1875:—"The funeral of the late Mr. Wm. Slaney took place on Monday, the resting spot selected for his remains being the quiet Churchyard of Loxden, where his father and brothers had been interred. As the deceased had been for very many years not only the faithful and confidential clerk of the firm of Messrs. Mills, Errington and Bawtree, of this town, bankers, but also a former Master and Treasurer of the Angel Lodge, No. 51, a number of the Masonic brethren assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to their departed brother; we say respect, because there was in Mr. Slaney a fund of geniality and amiability which endeared him to all who knew him. Not that he was a fawning sycophant, or one of those people who, at the sacrifice of strict honour, endeavour to 'make things pleasant.' He knew how to reprove where reproof was necessary, but the rebuke was always accompanied with a pleasing expression which showed as clearly as could be that nothing but a sense of duty prompted the remark. Some 30 of the Craft assembled at the Churchyard, the mourning being limited to black gloves. Forming two rows, the cortége passed between them, followed by the immediate members of the family, with our respected High Steward, and a junior member of the firm. The brethren then faced inwards, and followed the remains into the Church, where the Vicar of St. Peter's, Colchester, who had ministered to the deceased, read the impressive and beautiful Funeral Service of the Church of England. The repose and quiet of the place befitted the ceremony, and as no one had put on the trappings of woe except for sheer respect, there was a solemn reality in the proceedings. The Benediction having been pronounced over the grave, each of the brethren dropped a sprig of acacia on the coffin, as emblematic of the resurrection of the spiritual body of their departed brother, and all was over."

Egyptian Lodge of Instruction, No. 27.—This Lodge held its usual weekly meeting on Thursday, the 18th of November, at Bro. Maidwell's, the Hercules Tavern, Leadenhall-street, E.C. Present—Bros. Stead W.M., Ellis S.W., Blackall J.W., C. A. Grammer Hon. Secretary, Horsley S.D., Crane J.D., Maidwell I.G., and numerous other brethren. Business—The Lodge was opened in the 3rd degree, and the ceremony of raising was rehearsed, Bro. Parker acting as candidate. The three sections of the 3rd lecture were worked by Bro. Horsley, assisted by the brethren. The Lodge was then closed in the three degrees, according to ancient form.

Thistle and Rose Lodge, No. 78.—This Lodge held its nomination meeting on the 16th November, at 170 Buchanan-street, Glasgow, when the following brethren were unanimously chosen:—R.W.M. G. McDonald re-elected, S.W. A. McLeod, J.W. G. Handbridge, Secretary R. Richards, Treasurer J. S. Ampleford, Chaplain G. W. Wheeler, S.D. W. Kay, J.D. J. Yeaike, P.G.S. J. Kinard, S.S. J. McQuen, J.S. G. McDonald jun., B.S. A. Young, S.B. A. Smith, D.C. W. McFarlane, I.G. B. Levi, J.O.G. A. Kay. The Lodge was then raised to the third degree, when the R.W.M., in his usual careful style, raised Bro. John Wright to the sublime degree. The Lodge was then closed.

Domatic Lodge, No. 177.—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Friday, the 13th inst., at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street. Present—Bro. G. Everett W.M., Treadwell S.W., J. Willing J.W., J. Smith P.G.P. Treasurer, Williams Secretary, Palmer S.D., Buscall J.D., Clarke I.G. P.M.'s Bros. Kent I.P.M., Tims, Elmes and Walford; Bros. Jones, Willis, Hodges, Goodfellow, Purchase, Plenderleith, Smith, Allen, Richards, Potter, Gibson, Parker, Jennings, Holder, Spiller and Brown. Business—Lodge was opened, and the minutes were confirmed. Bro. Osborne was raised to the 3rd degree. Bros. Wigmore, Beverstock, Jennings, Pierpoint, Pinhey and Sherlock were passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and Messrs. Ferrier, Zoebelli, W. Friend, W. J. Bennett and J. Billinghurst were initiated into the Order. The ceremonies were ably and perfectly rendered by the W.M., who, we regret to say, was labouring under great indisposition. Bro. Jas. Willing J.W. announced his intention of serving as Steward at the next anniversary festival of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution. There being no other business, the Lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren, numbering over 100, sat down to a very excellent banquet, provided by Bro. Clemow, and superintended by Bro. Smith. The W.M. presided, and the loyal, Masonic and complimentary speeches were given and responded to. A very agreeable evening was passed.

Lodge of Tranquillity, No. 185.—A regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday, the 15th inst., at the Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, E.C. Bro. John Rort Ross W.M. occupied the chair. The officers were Bros. J. D. Barnett S.W., D. Posener J.W., John Peartree Hon. Treas., P. Levy Hon. Sec., Geo. Pare S.D., Bailey, J.D., Rawles Tyler. Bro. Croaker I.G. was unavoidably absent, owing to a death in his family, a circumstance which elicited sincere expressions of sympathy from every one in the Lodge. The usual routine business being disposed of, the W.M. passed Bros. Sadleir, Bush, Saillard, and Cohen to the degree of Fellow Craft in a manner rarely excelled. Unlike many, whose carelessness or indifference causes them to perform their duties in a thoughtless, slovenly fashion, Bro. Ross has taken pains to master his work, and is, therefore, capable most effectively to impress his candidates with the duties and obligations required on being advanced to the second step in the Order of which they have recently become members. A donation of £10 10s from the funds of the Lodge was unanimously voted to a very aged brother not a member of this Lodge. The attendance was shamefully small, undoubtedly owing to the fact of its being well known that the fourth degree would not be worked on the occasion. The Past Masters who put in an appearance were Bros. S. Solomon, S. E. Moss, L. Barnett, John Constable, N. Moss, M. Hart, N. Gluckstein and E. Gotthail.

Confidence Lodge of Instruction, No. 193.—This Lodge held its weekly meeting on Wednesday, the 17th of November, at the White Hart Tavern, Aldersgate-lane, E.C. Present—Bros. D. Posener W.M., Tarquant sen. S.W., Read J.W., J. K. Pitt Secretary, Okendon S.D., Tollis J.D., Lees I.G., Christopher Tyler. P.M. Bro. E. Gotthail Preceptor. Business—The usual preliminaries, after which the 3rd degree was rehearsed, Bro. Hollands acting as candidate. The ceremony was exceedingly well performed by the W.M. The three sections of the lecture were worked by Bro. Gotthail, assisted by the brethren. Bro Tarquant was elected to preside on the next Wednesday, and he announced his intention to work the three degrees on that occasion. It was also intimated that the ceremony of installation would be rehearsed on the third Wednesday in December, by Bro. Hickman W.M. 180.

Perseverance Lodge No. 213.—This Lodge held its monthly meeting on Tuesday, the 16th of November, at the Freemasons' Hall, Norwich. Present—Bros. J. S. Offord W.M., C. D. Ray S.W., Joshua A. Gooch J.W., W. A. Crisp Secy., Geo. Baxter Treasurer, W. Reynolds S.D., C. Fendick J.D., Jas. Dunsford P.M. S.D., Coates I.G., Morse Tyler. Business—The Lodge was opened, and the minutes confirmed. Bro. E. Baldwin P.M. and P.Z., No. 40, was elected a joining member. Two gentlemen were proposed, balloted for and duly initiated. The Bye-laws were revised and amended, after which the Lodge was closed.

Fortitude Lodge, No. 281.—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on the 10th inst., in the Athenæum, Lancaster, Bro. Airey I.P.M. occupying the W.M.'s chair, in the absence of the latter. The meeting was rendered more than usually interesting by Bro. Dr. Moore P.G.S.B. of Eng. giving a lecture on Masonic O.B. The lecture was given in a clear, terse, and easy style, and was highly interesting, the information it conveyed being thoroughly appreciated by the brethren and visitors present. At its close a hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Bro. Moore. Two candidates were proposed for initiation, and the Lodge was afterwards closed in peace and harmony.

St. George's Lodge, No. 333.—This Lodge held its regular meeting on Wednesday last, Bro. A. Thompson in the chair. The list of officers for the ensuing year, proposed by the Committee, was unanimously adopted, Bros. Thompson being reappointed as the R.W.M., Jas. Finley D.M., and A. MacIntyre Secretary. The elections will take place next month. The Lodge was then raised to the 3rd degree, when Bro. Finlay, at the request of the Master, raised a brother to the sublime degree. The Lodge was then closed in due form, and Bro. Finley thereafter, in accordance with the permission of G.L., opened the Lodge in the Mark degree, and advanced several brethren to the degree of Mark Masters. Some difference of opinion prevails as to the right of Craft Lodges to give the Mark as a distinct degree after the regular Lodge is closed.

Royal Union Lodge, No. 382.—This Lodge held its bi-monthly meeting on Monday, the 15th of November, at Chequers Hotel, Uxbridge, Middlesex. Present—Bros. B. H. Swallow I.P.M. as W.M., Davis S.W., T. Swallow J.W., Wm. Coombes P.M. P.P.G.S.B. Middlesex, Sec., Holliday S.D., Webb J.D., Stacey P.M. Organist, G. E. Cook Steward, Cobly as I.G., Longstaff Tyler, P.M. Bro. Weedon. Visitor—Bro. Kennedy, Royal Preston Lodge. Business—Lodge opened at 2.30 punctually. Minutes read and passed. Ballot unanimous for Messrs. Ward, Drinkwater, Godfrey, and Burgess, the three former initiated, Burgess not present. Bros. Cook and Lee passed; Bros. Cripps, Fowler, Holland, Perkins, Wallis, and Winkler, raised. The Secretary announced that, in consequence of the death recently of Mrs. Woodward, the W.M. (Bro. Woodward) could not attend this meeting. A letter of condolence to Bro. Woodward was moved, seconded, and carried unanimously. A letter was read by the Secretary from a Bro. of the Lodge, who was recently shipwrecked on the coast. It was moved, seconded, and carried unanimously, that the sum of three guineas be voted to our distressed Bro. At 6.30 the Lodge was closed, and the Brethren adjourned to the Railway Hotel, where an excellent banquet was provided by Mrs. Marshall, widow of the late Bro. Marshall. After the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to, the Brethren for London left by the 9 o'clock train, having passed a very enjoyable evening.

East Surrey of Concord Lodge, No. 463.—This Lodge held its meeting on Thursday, the 4th November, at the Greyhound Hotel, Croydon. Present—Bros. C. H. Woodward P.M. as W.M., T. P. Dickin S.W., W. Sharp J.W., C. H. Woodward P.M. Secretary, G. Price P.M. Treasurer, J. Close S.D., Yaxley J.D., H. A. Pocock I.G., G. Lynn Tyler. P.M.'s Bros. J. W. M. Dossel, Close, H. R. R. Podmore, W. M. Hunt, and several visitors. The three degrees were worked, and after the usual routine business the brethren adjourned to the banquet.

Benevolence Lodge, No. 489.—This Lodge held its regular meeting on Thursday, the 11th November, at the Masonic Hall, Bideford. Present—Bros. Rev. Thomas Russell, M.A. P.P.S. Oxon, G.S.W. Smale, other matters connected with furnishing the new Lodge room were discussed and settled, and the Lodge was closed in due form and order.

Polish National Lodge, No. 534.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, the 11th inst., at Freemasons' Hall. The Lodge was opened by the W.M., Bro. W. G. Moore, assisted by Bro. Edward B. Grabham P.M. Provincial Grand Steward Middlesex, acting as I.P.M. (in the absence of Bro. Cherill the Immediate Past Master of the Lodge), and the following officers:—Bros. Rath S.W., Cummings J.W., Ebner S.D., Aspinall J.D., Taylor I.G. Visitors—Bros. J. B. Sorrell W.M. 176, Seigert P.M., R. V. Hayday P.M. 157, Edward B. Grabham P.M. 1494, P.G.S. Middlesex, J. H. Dalan 1426, and several others. The minutes of the previous meeting were read by the Secretary, Bro. Wm. Paas P.M., and unanimously confirmed. Ballots were separately taken for Mr. Washington Hayday, candidate for initiation, and Bros. R. V. Hayday P.M. 157 and J. H. Dulan 1426 for joining, the result being unanimous in their favour. Bro. Barnes, as candidate to be raised, was examined and entrusted. The meeting was opened in the 3rd degree, the ceremony resumed, and most impressively rendered. The Lodge having been resumed, Mr. Washington Hayday was then introduced, and initiated by the W.M., whose careful rendering of the ceremonies was most favourably commented upon by all present. No further business offering, the Lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to a banquet, presided over by the W.M. On the cloth being removed, the usual loyal toasts were given, and that of the Grand Officers was responded to by Bro. John Boyd P.G.P. Treasurer, who proposed, in very complimentary terms, the health of the W.M., the toast being received with marked expressions of approval. The health of the Initiates was responded to by Bro. Washington Hayday, in a few well chosen sentences, in which he expressed himself highly pleased with the important ceremony he had witnessed, and his appreciation of the honour conferred upon him. The health of the Past Masters, Treasurer, and Secretary having been responded to, the W.M. proposed the health of the Officers, and thanked them for the support they had rendered him by the very satisfactory manner in which they had severally discharged their duties, and trusted they would render to his successor the same support, so necessary in the well governing the Lodge. The toast of the Visitors elicited a response from each present, all expressing the gratification they had derived from their visit. The W.M. proposed the health of their esteemed Treasurer, whose absence, through an affliction, he much regretted. The toast of the indefatigable Secretary, Bro. E. The W.M. presented a banner to the Lodge, on which his arms were emblazoned; a Masonic carpet, a kneeling stool, and a Bible cushion were also severally presented by some of the members. Oxford University Chapter, Rose Croix.—The third anniversary meeting of this Chapter was held, on the 10th November, in the University Masonic Hall, the attendance being larger than we remember to have seen upon any previous occasion, except when the Chapter was consecrated, three years ago. Four candidates were perfected by the M.W.S., the Illustrious Brother H. H. Rich, 33 degree, who then proceeded to instal his successor, the Illustrious Brother Lieut.-Col. the Hon. W. E. Sackville West, 30 degree, Bro. H.R.H. Prince Leopold, 18 degree, was appointed to the chair of First General for the ensuing year, that of Second General being conferred on Bro. J. Robertson, 18 degree, and that of High Priests upon Bro. the Rev. W. Neville, 18 degree. The two Past Most Wise Sovereign of the Chapter, the very Illustrious Bro. the Rev. A. B. Fraser, 33 degree, and the Illustrious Bro. the W. F. Short, 32 degree, were presented with the jewels of past rank which had been voted to them. We are glad to learn that this Chapter, one of the most important in the country, is in a most satisfactory position, both as regards the number of its members, and as regards its finances, and we think that if its chair is only held in the future by brethren who have its interests as much at heart as those Illustrious Brothers who have already occupied it (and we have every reason to hope this will be the case) the Chapter will be one of which the Supreme Council, 33 degree, may well be proud.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 112 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, 27 ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sail I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouqet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

A WEEKLY RECORD OF MASONIC INTELLIGENCE.

VOL. II.—No. 48. SATURDAY, 27th NOVEMBER 1875. [PRICE THREEPENCE. Registered at the G.P.O. as a Newspaper.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF NORFOLK.

SATURDAY will long be a memorable day in the history of Norfolk Masonry. Some time since, Bro. B. Bond Cabbell, one of the most eminent members of our Order, whose name will always be associated with the cause of Masonic Charity, and who had attained, some twenty years previously, the highest position in the Province of Norfolk, passed away at a ripe age, beloved of all men. Bro. the Hon. F. Walpole, M.P., on the recommendation of his brethren in the Province, having been recently nominated by the W.G.M., His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, to succeed him, a meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge was held at the Assembly Rooms, Norwich, for the purpose of installing the new Prov. G.M. The R.W.P.G.M. Designate presided. There were present the P.G. Officers, Bros. Colonel L'Estrange S.W., Colonel Duff J.W., A. M. F. Morgan Prov. G.S., H. J. Mason P.G.D C., G. Baxter A.G.D.C., and George Brittain P.G.O., together with the following brothers, namely:—Lord Waveney, P.G.M. of Suffolk, Lord Henniker, the Right Hon. E. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Sir R. J. Buxton, M.P., Sir F. Boileau, W. A. Tyssen Amherst, Rev. C. J. Martyn P.G.C., J. Bond Cabbell, R. T. Gurdon, Rev. J. Cholmeley Prov. G.C., Rev. H. Evans Lombe, J. B. Graver Browne, Colonel Bignold, Major Penrice, Rev. J. Edmund Cox P.G.C., Captain Hastings Parker, F. Binckes P.G.S., J. Terry, Prov. G.D.C. Herts, &c. Altogether there were between four hundred and five hundred present, all the Lodges in the Province, with their banners, being represented. After the transaction of the usual routine business, Deputy Grand Master Lord Skelmersdale was introduced into the Lodge by the Prov. Grand Stewards, for the purpose of performing the ceremony of Installation. His Lordship accordingly occupied the chair, vacated for that purpose by the R.W. Prov. Grand Master Designate. The latter having retired from the Lodge, was then directed to send in his patent, which was taken as read; whereupon Right Worshipful Bro. Walpole was introduced into the Lodge, and conducted, amid enthusiastic applause, to the throne. D.G.M. Lord Skelmersdale then addressed Bro. Walpole as follows:—"I have come here to-day for the purpose of installing you as Grand Master of this Province. I am sure the brethren of the Province of Norfolk, and of the adjoining Provinces, in this part of the country, feel highly gratified the choice of His Royal Highness the Grand Master has fallen upon you. I will not dilate upon the duties you will have to perform, but I am sure you will most worthily perform them. Freemasonry has now made such strides throughout the world, and has become of such importance, that every brother must recognise the paramount necessity of having good and true men high in office. That we shall have such a man in you I have no doubt, and I now call upon you to say whether you can conscientiously perform the duties of Worshipful Grand Master of this Province." Having answered in the affirmative, the P.G.M. Designate was duly invested and installed, the ceremony being very impressively performed. The P.G.M. then said:—"Right Worshipful Grand Master and brethren all: I deeply appreciate the honour that has been done me, and I am very thoroughly conscious of the responsibilities that I have taken upon myself. I will endeavour faithfully to discharge them. Grateful to you, I am also deeply grateful that His Royal Highness the Grand Master should have thought me worthy of this honour at your hands. I can only say that I will endeavour so to perform the duties of this high office that Masonry shall lose nothing by my being placed in this chair." In nominating Bro. A. M. F. Morgan as Prov. Grand Master, the G.M. stated it was only a just recognition of the eminent services he had rendered to the province of Norfolk as Prov. G.S. for many years. Bro. Morgan was then invested by D.G.M. Lord Skelmersdale. The other Grand Officers for the ensuing year were then appointed, as follows:—Bros. Colonel L'Estrange S.W., Colonel Duff J.W., J. Barwell Treasurer, Rev. J. Cholmeley Chaplain, C. Clarke Registrar, H. Barwell Secretary, J. H. Thouless S.D., J. B. Aldis J.D., H. J. Mason G.D.C., G. Baxter A.G.C.D., G. Brittain G.O., James Bond G.P., R. Gunn T.; Bros. Smart (W.M. Sondes), D. R. Fowler (Friendship), R. Baldry (Cabbell) and J. Commins (S.W. Social) Stewards. A vote of thanks was then passed to R.W.D.G.M. Lord Skelmersdale for his kindness in performing the installation ceremony, and to the visiting brethren of Suffolk and other parts, for their attendance on the occasion. Lords Skelmersdale and Waveney having briefly expressed their acknowledgments, the Provincial Grand Lodge was then closed. At 2.30 P.M. the brethren assembled at the Grammar School, whence they marched in procession to the Cathedral, for the purpose of attending divine service, the choir having been kindly set apart for their use. Service was intoned by the Dean, Precentor Medley, and Minor Canon Moore; and the lessons were read by the Dean and Canon Nisbet. The Provincial G.C., the Rev. J. Cholmeley, preached a sermon, his text being taken from Daniel vi. 23 "He believed in his God." The collection, which was devoted to local charities, amounted to £20. Great crowds of people were collected to witness the procession both to and from the Cathedral. In the evening a banquet at which some 300 of the brethren sat down, was held in St. Andrew's Hall, which had been specially decorated for the occasion, Bro. B. Aldis having rendered most valuable services. The banquet was served by Mr. Snelling, while the wines were supplied by Bro. Barwell. The P.G.M. presided, supported on his right and left by the D.G.M., Lord Skelmersdale; the Prov. G.M. Suffolk, Lord Waveney; Bros. Lord Henniker, Right Hon. E. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Sir R. J. Buxton, Bart., M.P., Sir F. Boileau, W. A. Tyssen-Amherst, Esq., Rev. H. Evans Lombe, Lieut.-Col. L'Estrange, Lieut.-Col. Duff, R. T. Gurdon, Esq., J. Bond Cabbell, Esq., Rev. J. Cholmeley, Major Penrice, J. B. Graver Browne, Esq., Lieut.-Col. Bignold, Rev. W. Vincent, Capt. Hastings Parker, Rev. Dr. Cox, P.G.C., Rev. C. J. Martyn, P.G.C., J. H. Bevan, Esq., Lieut.-Col. Boileau, G. F. Buxton, Esq., E. F. Edwards, Esq., Major J. Forster, R. Grey, Esq., J.G.D., Rev. C. Howes, Capt. Lacon, R. Kerrison, Esq., H. L'Estrange, Esq., Rev. E. J. Lockwood, Captain Oaks, &c., &c., together with the W.M.'s and most of the leading members of the Lodges in the Province. Bro. G. Baxter acted very efficiently as D.C., but it being impossible to tyle the Hall, the toasts were not given in the usual manner. We should also add that, at intervals, between the speeches, several songs and glees were sung by Bros. Minns, Smith, and Thouless, of the Cathedral Choir, and Bro. J. S. Offord, W.M. Perseverance, the P.G.O. presiding at the pianoforte. After the usual loyal toasts had been honoured, that of the D.G.M. of England was proposed, and enthusiastically received. Lord Skelmersdale, in returning thanks, said: He should always look back with pleasure to this day, and with agreeable remembrances of the great kindness with which the brethren in this Province had received him. In accepting the office to which he had had the honour of being appointed, he determined to do the duty which belonged to it; and as he told them in Lodge, this was the first instalment of it out of London. They had placed him under an obligation to them, which would be further increased if they would have the kindness of meeting him in London on the 9th of February, when he should have the honour of presiding at the festival of the Benevolent Institution. (Hear, hear, and applause.) Having expressed a warm desire for the continuance of harmony in this Province, the noble lord gave "The health of the Most Worshipful Provincial Grand Master of Norfolk," remarking that the brethren were well aware of what a good appointment it was of his friend and brother Walpole, who took so warm an interest in Masonry, and all would join him in the hope that he would long live to occupy the chair into which he had the honour of installing him this day. (Loud cheers.) The Prov. G.M. (who was received with deafening cheers), in reply, said:—"Brethren, I thank you for the kindness of this reception. It encourages me. I was wishing rather to postpone the time of returning thanks, thinking to arrange my ideas, but finding no ideas really to arrange, I get up at your call. It is very difficult to speak on an occasion of this sort. I am sure that when, nearly one-and-thirty years ago, as a midshipman in Her Majesty's Navy, I entered into Masonry, I little thought that, in the Grand Hall of Norfolk, I should be installed as a Grand Master. The most Worshipful Brother on my right hand has spoken of the harmony existing among us. Why, Sir, most of the brethren about me, except our guests, they, at least, that are of Norfolk, I have known from my boyhood upwards. They are men that I meet in daily intercourse. They have been to me "A little more of kin, if less of kind," and I feel deeply grateful to them for recommending me to His Royal Highness. Whatever His Royal Highness's wishes had been, I should have rejoiced to obey them; but when I heard that it was almost the unanimous wish of those Masons, among whom I had worked for years, that I should take this place, I could not but immediately consent to take it. (Applause.) Having accepted it, I will engage truthfully and sincerely, to the best of my power, to do my duty in the office; so that when the time comes for it to be given to another, neither those who conferred the honour upon me, nor those who by their kindness and their wish had it conferred upon me, shall regret it. (Cheers.) Having again thanked the brethren, the Prov. Grand Master said he would now proceed to a livelier theme than speaking of himself, the toast of "The Visitors." Suffolk was hardly regarded as a "stranger" or a "foreigner"—(laughter)—it was a "shire"; but it was also a friend and relation. He was grateful to the Prov. Grand Master of Suffolk for the sacrifice he had made in coming to Norwich to the installation. Lord Waveney, whose health he asked them to drink, had been a hard working Mason, and deserved the heartiest reception at their hands. He also proposed, in connection with this toast, the health of Bro. Lord Henniker. Lords Waveney and Henniker responded, the former at some length, and very heartily, the latter more briefly. Bro. Bond Cabbell proposed the toast of the Prov. G. Officers, which was acknowledged by Bro. Morgan D. Prov. G.M., and Bros. Col. L'Estrange and Col. Duff. Bro. J. B. Aldis, W.M. of Union, No. 52, the highest Lodge in the Province, responded to the toast "Prosperity to the Lodges in the Provinces." Bros. Binckes, R.M.I. for Boys, and J. Terry, R.M.B.I., severally spoke to the Masonic Charities, the latter reminding those present of the near approach of the 9th of February, the day fixed for the Anniversary Festival of the Benevolent Institution, when Lord Skelmersdale would take the Chair. The toast of the Right Hon. E. K. Knatchbull-Hugessen was greeted very heartily, and very humourously acknowledged. After a few introductory observations, the honourable gentleman said: "I will not detain you by any long speech to-night. Suffice it for me to say that an Institution like that of Masonry, founded upon the great and inimitable principles of brotherly love and universal charity, must commend itself to the regard of every man who seeks to lead a Christian life according to those principles which are found in the Book of Holy Writ. (Cheers.) Brethren, satisfied that in Masonry is to be found one of the best supports of a Christian life, I for my part support Masonry, and glad I am to see that it is so worthily supported in this county of Norfolk. (Applause.) Brethren, I am taken by surprise in being called upon my legs to-night, but I live in a county close by the sea, where we are never taken by surprise, or, if we are, we always endeavour to be equal to the emergency. Had I been called upon at an earlier part of the evening, I might, perhaps, have noticed at greater length the observations made by the Grand Master, and if I had done so, I should have reciprocated the kindly feeling which he had expressed towards myself as one of the Opposition, and also have expressed the hope that many years would not elapse before I could return the compliment—(laughter and cheers)—and recognise in friendly opposition a countenance which, whether by my side or opposite me, is always the countenance of an honest and faithful friend." (Great cheering.) The toast of "the Ladies" exhausted the list, and the brethren shortly afterwards went their several ways, highly gratified with the success of the day's proceedings.

FATHER TIME.

"SPEECH is Silvern," says the proverb, "but Silence is Golden." Many a man, who has to lament wasted opportunities and wrecked hopes, secretly blames the license of his tongue for many, if not all, the adverse strokes of fortune. Yet nothing is more difficult than to convince an impetuous and, perhaps, frank and ingenuous person, that freedom of speech, although it is conceded by our laws, is virtually interdicted by society. If a man is seeking to get on in the world, he may achieve his purpose by dint of indomitable perseverance and pluck, no matter what his opinions may be. But if he aspire to be the mouth-piece of his fellow citizens, and to rise by the aid of their suffrages, he cannot keep too close a guard upon his tongue. Sober mediocrity is usually demanded of a candidate by public opinion. A fool, who has sense enough to hide his folly, may often succeed in passing for a man of parts and judgment; but a man of ability and original thought, who gives the rein to his opinions, may rest assured that when the time comes for him to demand the support of his fellows, those opinions will rise up in judgment against him. We have known men who have made serious things a jest, who have taken pleasure in covering the opinions of the majority with ridicule; they have had their due meed of praise in the society of the gay or the light hearted, but when the grave struggle in life came for them, as it comes once for us all, they were unpleasantly confronted with the grim phantom of their wit, and met black brows or bitter smiles and speeches where they had expected cordial support.

The gentleman who is now sitting within easy reach of our literary studio might tell us, if it so pleased him, something anent the ingratitude of mankind. He is as generous as he is gay, and as eccentric as he is generous. His hand has never been withdrawn when the tale of woe has been told. He has not lacked public spirit, nor does he want talent. As a public man, he is fitted to shine, and in the House of Commons, if it should ever be his fortune to sit for a constituency, he would be popular. Yet, in the sphere where one would think he might have been understood, he has been passed by, and has learned, by bitter experience, that a prophet is without honour in his own city, if not in his own country. A very different verdict may yet be pronounced by men who have not approached near enough to mark the vagaries of his genius, and who, at a distance, see the man in all his just and admirable proportions. Some people require a large stage on which to exhibit themselves, and do not show to advantage when they are compelled to pose themselves before the audience in the full glare of the "foot-lights." Our hero, Father Time, as we choose to call him, for lack of a better name, has found mere commercial success easy of achievement. His fame, as a tradesman, has been carried to the ends of the earth, and instruments from the cunning hands of his workmen are measuring out the sands in the hour-glass of Time in every civilised country in the globe. We can remember his first attempt to take his namesake by the forelock, when the first dawning desire for a conspicuous public career entered his mind. It is some years since that early contest, in which the prize was the Shrievalty, which he failed to win. Yet right royally did he do battle for the robe and chain; gallantly, during a seven-days' contest, did he struggle against powerful opponents. Sparkling, indeed, were the wittiisms which he let fall on the day of his nomination, and not less brilliant were his words when he had to stand before his fellow citizens and acknowledge defeat. The courage and talent of the man won him many friends during that memorable week, yet it was years before his just ambition was gratified. The day, indeed, came when the honourable office which he sought was bestowed upon him with acclamation, and before he threw off its trappings and its responsibilities the Accolade of the sovereign was laid upon his neck, and Father Time retired from her presence with a handle to his name. It was honourably won, and it has been honourably worn. Some asserted that it was for his horsemanship that he was thus distinguished. It is, indeed, true that the Civic magnates did escort the Chariot of Her Majesty, when she came in state to return thanks, at the great Metropolitan Cathedral, for the life of her son. It is true also that, of all that brilliant train of Civic functionaries, Father Time alone sat his steed with the ease of an accomplished equestrian. We speak of what we know, for that brilliant State progress along Fleet Street lives in our memory, and our genial guardian of the horologe won golden opinions. He was no less famed for hospitality during his year of office, and, to use his own words, which were uttered when he resigned his gown, "he filled the poor with good things, and the rich he did not send empty away." The sterner duties of his office were no less faithfully performed. He was at home everywhere; at the Old Bailey; at Newgate, when villains were flogged for robbery and violence, or when performing the last sad duties of his office to a wretch whose life had been forfeited to appease outraged justice. It was said, indeed, that Father Time had too many press friends, and that those wretched parasites blew his trumpet rather loudly, because he filled their hungry maws with an occasional dinner. Anyhow the press were constantly sounding the praises of "the genial" Father Time, and perhaps he has now learned that it it not good for a public man to have too many friends in Fleet Street. Such fame as a journalist can give is not worth much. If a man's work is of sterling quality, it will live. but the mere lip homage of the curs who cater for the public dies with the day that gave it birth. We read the fulsome flattery in the morning, and the next day our servants light the fire with the wretched trash. Father Time, indeed, might well have dispensed with the wonderful trumpetings of the newspapers. We have spoken of his genial disposition, but only those who know him can understand how much he might do for himself if he could manage to use his gifts discreetly. As an orator, he has no mean repute, and he can make a hustings speech as effectively as the most experienced parliamentary speaker. His very gestures on the platform are effective; there is fire in the very turn of his head, hidden drollery in the very toss of his curling locks, and wit drops like manna from his fluent tongue. He can say wise as well as witty things, and as a lecturer he is popular with all classes. Father Time, indeed, usually lectures upon his own Horologe, but the history of that marvellous specimen of human ingenuity affords a theme which is worthy of the eloquence of a Demosthenes. In all the fables of ancient story—in all the wonders of the Arabian Nights—is there anything so wonderful as that reality of modern science and skill—the Chronometer Balance, and detached lever escapement? The art which enables the Mariner to find his longitude by the aid of that little glittering piece of metal, is almost akin to the Divine. Father Time need not be ashamed of his lectures, although, perhaps, they served, honourably served, the purposes of his trade. The history of the "Nuremburg Egg," from its first rudimentary form to its present perfection, is a history of the grandest achievements of the human intellect. Astronomy would still be in its infancy but for the telescope, but it could never have been raised to the dignity of a science without the aid of an accurate instrument for the measurement of time.

We have said nothing of Father Time as a Mason, because his career as a citizen has, in truth, overshadowed his Masonic achievements. Yet he is well known and greatly valued as a good and true brother, and stands high in the estimation of the Order. His ever open hand has never been restrained when the claims of charity were pressed upon his attention; his tongue has never been silent when a good cause needed an advocate. Zealous in Masonry, and careful of its good name, he has never descended to use it for the purposes of business. He cares little indeed for Masonic jewellery, or the trappings of the Order, though, like a wise man, he may indifferently wear ornaments when custom commands. At the Table he is a jovial companion, and can tell a good story with the true zest of a man of wit. A tithe of the bon mots he carelessly flings around him would make the reputation of a comic writer, and the vein of satire in his nature, if turned to account, might do good service if it were ever his fate to sit in judgment upon society and administer the lash to the shoulders of those who are the slaves of fashion. Father Time, indeed, would make a good professional satirist, if real satire were in demand in the literary market. Our comic journals are all mealy mouthed, and have not courage to say true and bitter things. A turn for satire is, however, a weakness and a temptation to a public man; he may, indeed, try to temper the vinegar and gall with honey, but the bitter things sink deep into the memory, and the garnish of sweets seldom heals the wound. If we might venture to counsel so brave a man as Father Time, we should urge him to study the humours of the public, and keep a careful guard upon his tongue. We need scarcely advise him to be of good cheer. His motto has ever been Nil desperandum, and he still looks forward to the distant future in which he sees dimly the Civic Sword flashing before his eyes, and the chair of State made vacant for him to fill. But we advise him to look yet further afield, and perhaps to a less remote future, when he may be called by his fellow subjects, though not by his fellow citizens, to take his place on the Great Council of the Nation. That day may not be far distant. The darkest hour is just before the dawn. Father Time has his fate in his own hands. Discretion and silence now may prepare him for action when the moment of conflict comes.

MASONIC STUDIES.

THERE are plenty of people in this world who consider they have satisfied all the requirements of cleanliness when they have washed their hands and faces, or so much of their bodies as is ordinarily exposed to view. Not a few there are who think they are far from indifferent French scholars when they can guess the meaning of a few sentences, or, because they have once or twice visited Paris, and contrived to expound their wants to the garçon in Anglo-French. There are even those who set themselves down as sound English scholars, nor hesitate to interpret the meaning of some obscure passage in Shakespeare or Milton, on the strength of having mastered Lindley Murray and a spelling-book or two. Similarly, there is a considerable number of what may be called Holiday masons, who fancy, when having passed with more or less—generally more than less—prompting the earlier stages of their career, they at length obtain the dignity of a full-blown M.M., that it only remains for them to rise to the position of a W.M., and the cycle of their Masonic knowledge is complete. How many M.M.'s are there who can explain a Tracing-Board? How many who can work even the first section? much less go through, unfalteringly, the first lecture? There are regular Lodges of Instruction, yet comparatively how few there are who think of attending them, and how few of those who attend who are not almost wholly dependent on the preceptor or their next door neighbour for the answers they give to the simplest question. Are there many W.M.'s who can open and close a Lodge in the three degrees without the friendly aid of a more than usually learned P.M.? We are sure it is in the experience of most of our readers that the working of our ritual is too often the reverse of perfect, and this is due principally to the fact that so many brethren are content to believe that Masonry is simply a few signs and tokens, or rather that familiar acquaintance with certain signs and words is a perfect knowledge of Masonry.

Considering we have only the good of Masonry in view, we feel sure that our readers will forgive us for drawing attention to the too prevailing carelessness in the pursuit of Masonic knowledge. What we say, we say in sorrow rather than in anger. From one point of view, the idea that brethren who have reached the sublime degree and eat so many Lodges per annum, as the Law students are said to eat their terms, are even fairly versed in the mysteries of the Craft, is very laughable; but, from a Masonic point of view, it is very much to be deplored Yet, a remedy is at hand, if only brethren will avail themthemselves of it. We have said there are regular Lodges of Instruction, where the whole of our beautiful ritual may be learnt, where there are skilful professors, able, and only too willing to explain the beauties of that ritual. Many Lodges, particularly in the country, fix one day in the week, and then resolve themselves pro temp into Lodges of Instruction, just as the House of Commons is said to resolve itself into Committee of Supply: or, to put the matter in a simple form, Lodge Excelsior, No. 20,415, held in the good old town of Rumpingford, has a Lodge of Instruction every Wednesday evening, at 7.30 P.M., when the members are invited to be present, and will learn, in a conversational kind of way, just a few scraps of knowledge, enough, perhaps, to enable them to recognise a brother, by day or by night, to salute the W.M. in due form, or, at all events, take part audibly and faultlessly in the ceremony of closing. But, if members do not attend—and there is no law to compel them—of what avail are these Lodges? As we began with a few illustrations from everyday life, let us return thither once again. Is there a single brother who, in his own private domicile, would accept a he-person or a she-person as cook, merely because the said he or she had once or twice boiled a potato inartistically, or toasted a few muffins, and burned them in the toasting? We shall be told, You are taking an absurdly extreme case. Not so: are there not brethren, unfortunately innumerable, who have never, in the whole course of their career, done more than exchange signs, salute, stand to order in this or that degree, and possibly mumble out a few words just before the Lodge adjourns to refreshment. We have attended Lodges of Instruction not unfrequently, though not as frequently as we desired. We have seldom come away without duly appreciating the learning and ability of the preceptor, or letter-perfect and heart-perfect exposition of some learned brother. Equally true is it, however, that we have never quitted a Lodge of Instruction without feeling that many, far too many, of those present were in a lamentable state of ignorance.

Masonry has made wonderful strides of late years. It numbers in its ranks the great, the good, the mighty in the land. It is universally popular—at least in the United Kingdom and the United States, where men enjoy perfect freedom of thought as of action—not only by reason of the good it does to indigent brethren, or their widows and their orphan children, but also because it is ever ready and willing to take part in works of beneficence. But Masonry is something beyond a charity organisation. Masonry is a religion, and just as the sacred truths of Christianity are not learned merely by attending periodically at Church, making the responses formally, and dozing languidly through the Sermon; so the great truths of Masonry cannot be learned by simply attending Lodge a given number of times, observing a few outward forms and ceremonies, and eating a certain number of dinners. Masonic study is necessary, if we wish to become real Masons.

CONSECRATION OF THE STOCKWELL ROYAL ARCH CHAPTER.

THE great success that has attended the Stockwell Lodge, No. 1339, has stimulated the brethren still further to make an effort to establish a Royal Arch Chapter in connection with their Lodge, and a warrant has been recently granted by Grand Chapter. A meeting of the founders was convened on the 18th September 1875, at the Tulse Hill Hotel, for the purpose of consecrating the new Chapter. There were present the following Companions, viz.:—H. E. Frances P.Z. P.M. P.G.D. for Surrey, W. G. Brighten M.E.Z. designate, C. Hammerton H. designate, C. H. Benham J. designate, Barnett, Turquand and Pullman; also visitors—Companions Nunn P.Z. 720, Brant P.Z. 514, and Jones 720. The ceremony of consecration was very ably and impressively rendered by Comp. Frances, as Installing M.E.Z., who delivered a very effective oration, setting forth the grand principles of the Order, and explaining the varied symbols employed in the ceremonies, with the various useful and important lessons taught therein, which was highly appreciated. Appropriate music was introduced at intervals, under the conduct of Comp. Turquand, who was ably assisted by Comp. Brighten.

The three principals were also installed by Comp. Frances, with his usual ability, and the M.E.Z. then appointed the officers.

A vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Comp. Frances for his valuable services on the occasion, and he was duly elected as an Hon. Member of the Chapter. The Companions adjourned to a banquet, when the usual toasts were given and responded to.

7. THE REPORT OF THE BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES.

To the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England:

The Board of General Purposes have to report that they have taken into consideration a complaint of two members of the Blackheath Lodge, No. 1420, Blackheath, to the effect that on the 17th day of June last the W.M. elect was installed without the previous confirmation of the minutes. And further, that on the 15th day of July the Lodge was opened before the time named in the summons. After a long investigation of the facts of the case, and hearing the evidence, the Board decided that the specific charges made were not proved. As however great laxity appeared to have prevailed in recording the minutes of the Lodge, the Board admonished the Master to be more careful in future in seeing that the proceedings of the Lodge were duly and properly recorded, reminding him that although the Secretary was the proper person to take the minutes, the Master was at all times responsible for their being correctly entered.

(Signed) JOHN B. MONCKTON,
President.

FREEMASONS' HALL, LONDON, W.C.,
15th November 1875.

To the Report is subjoined a statement of the Grand Lodge accounts at the last meeting of the Finance Committee, held on Friday, the 12th day of November instant, showing a balance in the hands of the Grand Treasurer of £3,436 19s 2d; and in the hands of the Grand Secretary, for petty cash, £75; and for servants' wages, £96 15s.

To add to clause 19, page 10 of the Rules and Regulations after the words "Serving the Stewardship," and as a new paragraph, the following:—

"Every Steward at the Anniversary Festival who shall procure Donations or Subscriptions to the extent of not less than £50, in addition to his personal Donation, shall receive two additional votes at each election, and two further extra votes for every additional sum of not less than £50."

And also to expunge from the same clause the following:—

"If accompanied with a personal donation, but by means of his services not less than £20 shall be paid to the funds, he shall be entitled to one additional vote for every subsequent Stewardship."

That the Law as altered now read thus:—

"A Life Governor who has served the office of Steward at the Anniversary Festival and subscribed £10 or upwards shall, on every occasion of subsequent service of such office, if accompanied with a similar donation, be entitled to four extra votes; if accompanied with a donation of £5, to two extra votes. A donor who has qualified as a Life Governor and afterwards served the office of Steward at the Anniversary Festival and qualifies again as a Life Governor, shall be entitled to the same number of votes as if he had paid both at the time of serving the Stewardship.

"Every Steward at the Anniversary Festival who shall procure Donations or Subscriptions to the extent of not less than £50, in addition to his personal Donation, shall receive two additional votes at each Election, and two further extra votes for every additional sum of not less than £50."

Retort Dignified, by a Freemason, to the Pope and his Ultramontane supporters:—

Procul o procul este, profani!

The same in English, expanded, in accordance with the well-known licence of the poet, may be expressed thus:—

Away, profane revilers of our holy rite!
The darkness of your ignorance shall n e'er avail
The ever-brilliant light of Masonry to pale.

CHARGES OF A FREEMASON.

By CORNELIUS MOORE, Editor of The Masonic Review.

WHILE the Master must be faithful both to the employer and employed, the workmen are required to discharge their duty faithfully, and "honestly finish their work." They must not only complete their work, but they must complete it agreeably to the designs laid down upon the trestle board by the Master—"honestly finish" it; and that work which is usually done by journeymen, that is, expert and well-instructed workmen, must not be entrusted to inexperienced apprentices. Each man should fill that place in the Lodge for which he is qualified, and discharge those duties only which his attainments and proficiency enable him to perform with fidelity and skill.

The reference is still to operative Masonry, and in that application is simple, plain and reasonable. Envy at the success or prosperity of another is a very foolish and very hurtful passion, and should never be indulged. Prosperity is generally the result of a judicious and energetic application of those powers with which man has been endowed by his Creator, and instead of indulging envy at the success of another, the upright and well-instructed Mason will endeavour by similar industry to realise a similar prosperity. No one should be supplanted in his work, or "put out" of it, unless he is found incompetent to perform it. It is presumed that he understands the drafts, and fully comprehends the designs, or he would not have been put in charge of the work; and, other things being equal, he is more likely to succeed than one who should take charge of it when partly finished. These directions are all practical, and have a common sense application; the intelligent Mason will see their original appropriateness, and readily apply them, where applicable, to symbolic Masonry.

The Warden, both in operative and speculative Masonry, is the assistant of the Master in the discharge of his duties as overseer of the work. In the absence of the Master, the Warden succeeds to his duties, and then incurs all the responsibilities which rested upon his superior. He stands between the lord, or proprietor, and the workmen, and must do justice to, and deal honestly with, both. He is presumed to be competent to discharge these higher duties, or he would not have been appointed as Warden, in which capacity he is liable at any time to succeed to the Master's chair. And that he may be able to discharge those duties properly the workmen are bound to render him the same prompt and willing obedience they owe to the Master when he is present and superintending in person. In the absence of the Master, the Warden fills the place, discharges the duties, exercises the prerogatives, and has a right to the same homage and obedience as the superior officer; he is then Master for the time being.

There are two important duties required in this sentence, as indicated by the use of the word "shall." 1. They shall not desert the Master until the work, on which they are engaged, is fully completed. How often, in conferring degrees, do brethren embrace an opportunity during a temporary pause in the work, perhaps at the close of a section, rise and ask leave to retire; and this is continued until scarcely enough are left to assist the Master in closing the Lodge. This practice is very objectionable; it produces "confusion among the workmen;" is uncourteous to the Master; detracts from the solemnity and impressiveness of the work; and is expressly forbidden by the supreme law of the Order. Permission to retire at such times should not be requested without an urgent necessity; and if the request is made in the absence of such necessity, it should not be granted. The Master should never give his consent for the members to disobey the law. In cities and large towns this objectionable practice is much more common than in rural districts, and much of the work is injured, if not entirely ruined, by the non-observance of this wholesome regulation.

The other duty enjoined in this sentence is this:—that Masons should "meekly receive their wages, without murmur or mutiny." Order and harmony must be preserved; and though we may not always receive the reward we conceive due our merits, yet we shall receive what was promised, and with that we must be content. We may have done more than others; we may have laboured longer; perhaps have "borne the burden and heat of the day," and conceive ourselves entitled to an extra reward. But we should never forget that we engaged "for a penny," and having received that, we should neither "murmur" nor "mutiny." We have received our "wages"—that for which we stipulated; and if the Master should bestow an equal reward upon those who have done less, we have no right to complain; he has done us no injustice, and he has a perfect right to "do what he pleases with his own."

"A younger brother shall be instructed in working" by the Master, or by some one selected for that purpose because of his competence and his aptitude in teaching. Indeed, it is the duty of every Mason to instruct, as occasion may offer, his less informed brethren. The younger members are enjoined to diligence in the study of the art, and to "improve in Masonic knowledge" by conversation with older and better informed brethren, who will be always "as ready to give as he will be to receive instruction." The best evidence that a young Mason can give of his fitness for the Order, will be his diligence in the pursuit of Masonic knowledge. If he sits down contented, as soon as his curiosity is gratified, it is a sure indication that an error was committed by admitting him. He may be a very worthy citizen, but he will add neither strength nor ornament to our mystic building.

The duty of instructing a younger brother is enjoined for two reasons:—to prevent spoiling the work, and to preserve and increase brotherly love, which is the "cement which unites the building into one common mass." These are two very important considerations, and should have their proper influence in securing the observance of this important duty.

A description of the tools—the rituals—our mystical implements

—cannot be reduced to writing, but a knowledge of their character and use must be communicated by oral instruction. The Charges, therefore, have very wisely committed this matter to the keeping of the Grand Lodge. That body is composed of the Masters and Wardens of all the subordinate Lodges — the oldest and most experienced of the workmen, as it is to be presumed, and therefore the best judges of what the tools should be, and how they should be used. If any discrepancies arise in the work, or any doubts exist as to the proper tools, the Grand Lodge is the proper tribunal to determine the matter, and the decision of that body should quiet all cavilling upon the subject.

The secrets of Masonry are the exclusive property of the Craft, and can never be communicated to one who is a mere labourer and not an accepted Mason. Hence, no "labourer," that is, one who has not been regularly initiated in a legal Lodge, must "be employed in the proper work of Masonry," or permitted to be present when and where the Craft are engaged in their peculiar labours. A sentinel is therefore placed at the door of every well governed Lodge to keep at a distance all such as are not entitled to enter it, that the secrets of Masonry may not be obtained by the "profane."

"Without an urgent necessity"—This had exclusive reference to operative Masonry in ancient times: when portions of the work had to be done outside the Lodge, and when "unaccepted Masons" were sometimes required to aid in particular portions of the work. It can have no reference to symbolic Masonry, for no necessity can arise to require the "work" to be performed in the presence of those who have not been initiated. A Mason should never forget the charges to "keep sacred and inviolable the mysteries of the Order," for by these he is to be distinguished from the rest of the community, and their preservation will convince the Craft of his integrity.

VI. "Of Behavior, viz.: I. In the Lodge while constituted.—You are not to hold private committees, or separate conversation, without leave from the Master, nor to talk of anything impertinent or unseemly, nor interrupt the Master, or Wardens, or any brother speaking to the Master; nor behave yourself indicrously or jestingly, while the Lodge is engaged in what is serious and solemn; nor use any unbecoming language upon any pretence whatsoever; but to pay due reverence to your Master, Wardens, and Fellows, and put them to worship.

If any complaint be brought, the brother found guilty shall stand to the award and determination of the Lodge, who are the proper and competent judges of all such controversies (unless you carry it by appeal to the Grand Lodge), and to whom they ought to be referred, unless a lord's work be hindered the meanwhile, in which case a particular reference may be made; but you must never go to law about what concerneth Masonry, without an absolute necessity apparent to the Lodge.

II. Behaviour after the Lodge is over, and the Brethren not gone.—You may enjoy yourselves with innocent mirth, treating one another according to ability, but avoiding all excess, or forcing any brother to eat or drink beyond his inclination, or hindering him from going when his occasion calls him, doing or saying anything offensive, or that may forbid an easy and free conversation; for that would blast our harmony, and defeat our laudable purposes. Therefore, no private piques or quarrels must be brought within the door of the Lodge, far less any quarrels about religion or nations, or state policy; we being only, as Masons, of the Catholic religion above mentioned; we are also of all nations, tongues, kindreds, and languages, and are resolved against all politics, as what never yet conduced to the welfare of the Lodge, nor ever will. This charge has been always strictly enjoined and observed; but especially ever since the Reformation in Britain, or the dissent and secession of these nations from the communion of Rome."

III. Behaviour when Brethren meet without strangers, but not in a Lodge formed.—You are to salute one another in a courteous manner, as you will be instructed, calling each other Brother; freely giving mutal instruction as shall be thought expedient, without being overseen or overheard, and without encroaching upon each other, or derogating from that respect which is due to any brother, were he not a Mason; for though all Masons are as brethren upon the same level, yet Masonry takes no honour from a man that he had before; nay, it rather adds to his honour, especially if he has deserved well of the Brotherhood, who must give honour to whom it is due, and avoid ill manners.

IV. Behaviour in presence of strangers not Masons.—You shall be cautious in your words and carriage, that the most penetrating stranger shall not be able to discover what is not proper to be intimated; and sometimes you shall divert a discourse, and manage it prudently for the honour of the worshipful Fraternity.

V. Behaviour at home and in your neighbourhood.—You are to act as becomes a moral and wise man; particularly, not to let your family, friends, and neighbours know the concerns of the Lodge, &c.; but wisely to consult your own honour, and that of the ancient brotherhood, for reasons not to be mentioned here. You must also consult your health, by not continuing together too late, or too long from home, after Lodge hours are past; and by avoiding of gluttony or drunkenness, that your families be not neglected or injured, nor you disabled from working.

VI. Behaviour toward a strange Brother.—You are cautiously to examine him in such a method as prudence shall direct you, that you may not be imposed upon by an ignorant false pretender, whom you are to reject with contempt and derision, and beware of giving him any hints or knowledge.

But if you discover him to be a true and genuine brother, you are to respect him accordingly, and if he is in want, you must relieve him if you can, or else direct him how he may be relieved: you must employ him some days, or else recommend him to be employed: but you are not charged to do beyond your ability, only to prefer a poor brother that is a good man and true, before any other poor people in the same circumstances.

Finally, all these charges you are to observe, and also those that shall be communicated to you in another way; cultivating brotherly love, the foundation and cap-stone, the cement and glory of this antient Fraternity; avoiding all wrangling and quarrelling, all slander and backbiting, nor permitting others to slander any honest brother, but defending his character, and doing him all good offices, as far as is consistent with your honour and safety, and no farther. And if any of them do you injury you must apply to your own or his Lodge; and from thence you may appeal to the Grand Lodge at the Quarterly Communication, and from thence to the annual Grand Lodge, as has been the ancient laudable conduct of our forefathers in every nation; never taking a legal course but when the case cannot be otherwise decided, and patiently listening to the honest and friendly advice of Master and Fellows, when they would prevent your going to law with strangers, or would excite you to put a speedy period to all law suits, that so you may mind the affairs of Masonry with the more alacrity and success; but with respect to brothers or fellows at law, the Master and brethren should kindly offer their mediation, which ought to be thankfully submitted to by the contending brethren; and if that submission is impractiable, they must, however, carry on their present process or law suit without wrath or rancore (not in the common way), saying or doing nothing which may hinder brotherly love, and good offices to be renewed and continued; that all may see the benign influence of Masonry, as all true Masons have done from the beginning of the world, and will do to the end of time.

AMEN, SO MOTE IT BE.

The Lodge is no place for conviviality, jesting or trifling and ludicrous conduct. We should go to the Lodge as Masons, and attend to no other business while there but Masonry. Order must be observed; the officers must not be interrupted in the discharge of their duty, nor any brother while speaking on a subject under consideration in the Lodge. A well governed Lodge should be, and is, a perfect model of order and regularity. Everything is done at the right time, in the right way, and with propriety and dignity. There should be no jesting, especially while the Lodge is engaged in the solemn labours of the Craft. When the degrees are conferred with proper solemnity, they will make an impression that will favourably affect the whole future life of the novice; but mingle our solemn rites with laughing and jesting, and the whole affair becomes ludicrous in the estimation of the candidate. Masons should never forget that the Lodge room is dedicated to the holiest principles,—that it is a temple erected to God, whose awful presence is ever there. They should also remember the reverence and respect due from each brother, however exalted his station in life may be, to the officers and brethren while engaged in the labours of the Lodge room. Quiet, order, and decorum should reign, and dignity and respect should be seen in the deportment of each individual brother. This would make the Lodge, as a place of resort, instructive and pleasant, where heart, and life, and manners, may all be improved.—The Masonic Review.

Macmillan for October, contains chapters 8-10 of Mrs. Oliphant's admirable serial story, "The Curate in Charge," Part II. of Mr. R. L. Stevenson's paper on "John Knox and his relations to women," "The American Heroine," as depicted by different authors, some pretty verses, by M. B. Smedley, on "Snowdrops," and what, perhaps, will be chiefly interesting at this moment, an account, by Dr. Anderson, of "The Exploring Expeditions to Western Yanna of 1868 and 1875." It was in the latter of these that Mr. Margary was so treacherously murdered, with the connivance, it has been reported, of the Chinese authorities. "Snowdrops" we take leave to quote:—

"O, snowdrops, do not rise,
Because the happy eyes
That loved you once, now underneath you lie;
Let not your buds appear,
Each seems a frozen tear,
That never drops, and yet is never dry.
Such useless tears they seem,
As in a heavy dream
We pour about our griefs to make them grow;
When all the lights are pale,
And all the senses fail,
And all the flowers are underneath the snow."

The Voice of Masonry contains an article, by Dr. Mackey, on the "Fate of Morgan," the man who so mysteriously disappeared many years since, and whose death was attributed to the Freemasons. He fairly meets the arguments adduced at the time in favour of this theory, pointing out the complete absence of evidence as to any murder having been committed, and, in the next place, that neither at the time referred to nor now, was any other penalty inflicted on a recreant Mason than that of expulsion from the Order. We have noticed, also, No. 1 of what we doubt not, to judge from the evidence it contains, will prove a most valuable series of papers, by Bro. W. James Hughan, on "Masonic Bibliography." We have further from the pen of the same writer an interesting account of "The Trades' Shields of Aberdeen." Of the other contributions, two deserve to be noticed. These are "Masonic Legends," by W. S. Hooper, and "What is Dropping from the Roll," by Geo. Frank Gouley.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—HEALTH'S DEFENCE.—None save the strongest can with impunity pass through the sudden transitions from wet to dry, from cold to muggy weather, so prevalent during the late autumn and early winter months. Influenza, bronchitis, cough, sore throat, diphtheria, or quinsy will attack those most watchful of their health; but they can readily arrest any of these complaints by rubbing Holloway's Ointment twice a day upon the skin, adjacent to the affected part, and by assisting its corrective action with appropriate doses of his Pills. This well-known safe and easy mode of treatment efficiently protects the invalid both from present and future danger, without weakening or even depressing the system in the slightest degree.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

The Land of the Pharaohs—Egypt and Sinai. Illustrated, by Pen and Pencil, by the Rev. Samuel Manning, LL.D. London: Religious Tract Society.

THIS is a very elegant and beautiful record of travel. The author, who can use the pencil as cleverly as the pen, has given us a very graphic description of his journey from Alexandria, up the Nile, to Nubia, with a sketch of his route through the Suez Canal, and across the great wilderness of Sinai. The book is beautifully illustrated, and most of the engravings appear to have been specially prepared from his original sketches. Some of the Egyptian wall sculptures appear to have been copied from Sir Gardiner Wilkinson's great work on the "Antiquities of Egypt," but we can scarcely expect the flying tourist to notice for himself all the details of the archæology of the land of the Nile. Dr. Manning is an enlightened traveller, and his ideas of the theology of Egypt are worthy of a cultivated mind. We notice, indeed, with some amusement, that he regards the symbol of the circle and the cross, which occurs so frequently in the sculptures, as having some prophetic reference to Christianity. A further reference to Bunsen, whose great work he quotes, will, we hope, enlighten his mind as to its true meaning. We need scarcely say that it has nothing to do with Christian philosophy, and might seem rather heathenish to those readers who are accustomed to regard Egyptian theology from the standpoint of the modern Philistine. We notice, further, that there are several vague references to the prophetic books of the Bible scattered through the work. We are glad these references are vague. Dr. Manning shows both his liberalism and his learning by refusing to dwell upon the stock quotations of ignorant commentators. Egypt was in the days of its decline and fall when the poems were written which bear the name of Isaiah, and we know enough of the Hebrew literature to be aware that the Hebrews invariably fulminated the most splenetic and impotent threats against all the nations by whom they were surrounded. One of the prophecies which is quoted as bearing upon Egypt has been shown by no less an authority than Bishop Lowth, to refer to Nebuchadnezzar. Some orthodox writers upon Egypt have expressed surprise that there is little or no reference upon the monuments to the kingdom of Judah, but the reason of this is obvious. Judah was too insignificant for notice. Dr. Manning very properly questions the dictum of those sanguine people who see in the wall sculptures evidences of the labours of the children of Israel when in captivity. It is not at all likely that the Egyptians, the proudest people on earth, would thus distinguish the men whom Manetho styles "a band of leperous slaves," besides the so-called Israelish sculptures are in the region of the Upper Nile, and we have good reason to suppose that the captives were located in a region not more than a few days' march from the Gulf of Suez. Dr. Manning finds comfort in the fact, established beyond all controversy, that the Temple of Denderah, which was once supposed to rejoice in an antiquity beyond that of the creation of man, is now proved to be comparatively modern. He does not, however, make any reference to Mr. Horner's researches in the Nile Valley, nor to the astounding conclusions which have been drawn from them. Champollion, indeed, attempted to dogmatise upon the supposed antiquity of the monuments of Egypt, but modern Egyptologers happily know more about the matter than the great French explorer. The vast antiquity of some of the monuments is conceded, but apart from, and beyond the visible evidences of the great duration of civilisation in the Nile Valley, which the architectural remains afford, Mr. Horner's researches prove that, ages prior to the colonisation of Egypt by the people we call Egyptians, primitive man, sufficiently civilised to be in possession of pottery hardened by fire, had lived on the banks of the mysterious river. We do not care to mention Mr. Horner's figures, it is sufficient for us to say that he throws this savage period back far beyond the beginning of the commonly received Biblical chronology.

Having said thus much of the slighter faults of Dr. Manning's book, we cannot speak too highly of its general tone, of its illustrations, or of the elegance of its style. It is a sign of the times when the Tract Society, which has been accustomed to place works relating to Egyptology and kindred sciences upon its own Protestant Index Expurgatorius, publishes such a volume. There are some people who dare not approach the study of ancient civilisation without the authority of the Church, and to such people the present volume will be useful, if not welcome. They may learn much from it, and it will instil no prejudices into their minds. Perhaps they may rise from its perusal convinced that the Egyptians were not such dark heathens as they had imagined. We heartily commend Dr. Manning's book to the notice of our readers.

The Royal Masonic Cyclopædia of History, Rites, Symbolism, and Biography. Edited by KENNETH R. H. MACKENZIE XI°. ("Cryptonymus"). London: Bro. John Hogg, 15A Paternoster-row, E.C.

WE have received Part II., which, from the cursory examination we have so far had time to give it, appears to bear out the impression we formed from a careful study of the first number. There can be no question the work, when complete, will be a valuable addition to every Masonic library.

The Freemason's Repository (Providence, R.I.) contains two very capital articles, one entitled "Knowledge is Power," the other, "The Ideal Mason," besides a full account of the various proceedings during the month of October.

Streaked with Gold is the title of the Christmas number of the Gentleman's. The number, which consists of a tale, or series of tales, with one connecting link, is excellently written. The incidents are very skilfully interwoven, and most, if not all, of the characters, are admirably drawn. Dr. Philip Thornfield is, indeed, very finely conceived; and, among the best writing in the book, are the three chapters, in which is described "Philip Thornfield's folly."

The Belgravia Annual opens with a well told story, entitled "Sir Luke's Return." Samuel Grynde and Walter Carlyon are very natural, and the device employed by Sir Luke to test the reality of the feelings displayed towards him by his kindred on returning to England a wealthy man, if not possessing any great degree of novelty, is very well contrived. "The Pride of the Corbyns" is also a tale that will bear reading more than once, and so too, will "The Secret of the Stair." The engravings, particularly that of "Afternoon Tea," are admirably drawn. In short, this Christmas number is a famous specimen of the art and literature usually to be found in the magazine district of Belgravia.

The serials in Tinsleys' call for no particular comment, but Dr. Davies, while giving some prominence to clerical matters, in his "Social Status Quo," is not unmindful of other matters, and discusses the weather, Mr. Irving's impersonation of Macbeth, the Railway Jubilee at Darlington, total abstinence, and Dr. Richardson's paper at the recent Social Science Congress at Brighton, in lively vein. This chatty kind of article on general questions is, in our opinion, preferable to a single theme, with even the most brilliant variations. His Troubadour Song, "Reason and Folly," is admirable. If we remember rightly, the friend of a certain Capon Cuttle was "Entrapped" in a similar, though less elaborate, fashion than is Captain Denham, in the short tale of Mrs. Alexander Fraser. However, Captain Denham fares better in the long run. We ask no apology for quoting the following stanzas on

AUTUMNTIDE.

I am pacing the lovely gardens—
Thou art not by my side,
In the blended summer and winter,
In the golden autumntide.

For the withered leaves are falling
Amid surrounding sheen;
And the long bare trunks stand naked,
With sunlight glinting between.

'Which things are an allegory,'
With beauty and wisdom rife;
Emblem of our affection,
Type of a blessed life.

Thine absence would be winter,
Mirrored in leafless bole,
But thy deathless love is the sunshine
Of summer to my soul.

67 BARBICAN, E.C.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

EARLY on Wednesday morning the Queen reached Windsor Castle, on her return from Balmoral. The Princess of Wales is still doing the honours of Marlborough House to the King and Queen of Denmark and her sister. The visits of the Royal party to the theatres are of almost daily occurrence. On Tuesday the Queen of Denmark and her daughter paid a visit to the Empress Eugénie at Chiselhurst, where they were received by the Prince Imperial and the Count de Cléry. After a short stay the Queen returned to town. The same day a visit was paid to Messrs. Phillips and Pearce's Art Pottery Galleries, 155 New Bond Street, and on Wednesday visits were paid to the French and Doré Galleries. Her Royal Highness Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, and the Marquis of Lorne have returned to Kensington Palace, from a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh.

The Prince of Wales has been visiting the Guicowar of Baroda, by whom he was received in great state. The Prince, with the Guicowar and his minister, rode the same elephant, the houdah being gold, and the animal fantastically painted, after the manner of Baroda. There were in all some fifteen elephants forming the State procession, and the reception must have been in the highest degree, satisfactory to His Royal Highness. It is, no doubt, within the recollection of our readers that, not long since, the present Guicowar was placed in power by the British Government in succession to the ex-Guicowar, whom, owing to his gross misgovernment, we dethroned. When this visit was over, the Prince returned to Bombay, and went on board the Serapis. According to the latest advices he is now on his way to Colombo in Ceylon, where it is proposed he should spend some days for the purpose of enjoying the sport for which the island is famous. The visit to the Madras Presidency appears to have been definitively struck out of the programme, owing to the prevalence of cholera. It would seem as though there had been some little hitch in reference to the newspaper correspondents, who, for a time at least, appear to have been deprived of the opportunity of recording in full detail the progress of the Prince's journey. Arrangements, however, are said to have been made of a nature entirely satisfactory to the correspondents. We trust, for the honour of English journalism, there has been no undue intrusion on His Royal Highness's privacy.

The more we hear of the extent of the recent floods, the greater appears to be the amount of damage done. It is stated that, in one district in Norfolk, three thousand acres, mostly in the occupation of small farmers, are under water.

The Mansion House Fund, for the relief of the sufferers by these terrible inundations, is already assuming very respectable dimensions, about £8,200 having been collected up to Thursday evening. No doubt the Grand Lodge will not be behindhand in voting its quota towards the relief of the sufferers.

There has been a marked change in the weather during the last few days, and things have assumed quite a wintry aspect. We know not if a severe winter, supervening on a miserable autumn and an indifferent summer, is before us. If so, the prospect for the very poorest classes is far from being encouraging. There is, however, this consolation, the wealthy section of the community never fails in its duty towards its less fortunate brethren, and least of all at Christmas tide, the period of universal rejoicing.

The great St. Leonards' Will case is nearly concluded, the Judge, Sir James Hannen, holding that the will and eight codicils had been duly executed, but he has not yet pronounced for them. Dr. Deane's theory as to the disappearance of the will was, that the late Lord St. Leonards himself destroyed it, with the intention of making a new one, and Sir H. James followed his learned friend, and adopted the same line of argument. The Lord Chief Justice has been occupied the whole of this week in the Wainwright case. One matter in connection with the case is most objectionable—that any woman of respectability should have been induced by morbid curiosity to seek admission into the court during the trial. No doubt women inherit from our common mother Eve the vice of over-curiosity, but a regard for the outward forms of decency is expected of those whom the papers describe as well dressed ladies. For ourselves, we only refer to the trial at all, because it forms a principal item in the news of the week.

"Larking" and practical "joking" are too often attended with unpleasant consequences. On Tuesday, the Maidenhead magistrates committed for trial a man named Joseph Garrett, for causing grievous bodily harm to a boy, Henry Emm. It seems the man and boy in question were both employed at the Temple Paper Mills, Bisham, and the former was carrying a basket of rags to a vat of boiling lime water. "Larking" had been going on between the two, and, at length, Emm, threw the basket from Garrett's shoulder. The latter thereupon flung the boy into the vat, but Emm, clutching to the side, got out, with one leg badly scalded. The defence offered was, that it was only meant to stop the boy's "larking." We are not in the confidence of Mr. Garrett, but we presume he is aware what usually follows when human flesh and boiling water come into contact with each other. It is evidently high time be learned that people who are dipped into boiling water, invariably suffer the most excruciating agonies. If the facts of the case, as described, are brought home to him, we trust Mr. Garrett will be duly taught that throwing boys into boiling lime water, whether for a lark, or to stop larking, cannot be done with impunity.

Our first idea, when we saw the paragraph in Thursday's papers, headed "A Spelling Bee," was that some ingenious person had found out a method of teaching bees to spell. We have all heard, of course, of the marvellous doings of sundry performing dogs, monkeys, learned pigs, as well as of the industrious flea, but a spelling bee was something quite out of the common. We not unnaturally began to think the "little busy bee" had been taught some other way of improving "each shining hour" than the one so pathetically described by Dr. Watts. It turns out, however, that "A Spelling Bee" is an American "notion," imported into London, for the first time, on Wednesday, and tested as to its merits at the Agricultural Hall under the auspices of Ex-Lord Mayor Lusk, Mr. Waddy M.P., and other gentlemen. A "Spelling Bee" is simply a "Spelling bout," in which those of the contestants who spell the most words correctly carry off the prizes. The "notion" is not a bad one, especially as a considerable number of English men and women take very great liberties with the spelling of their native language. There are many who allow themselves great latitude in describing literally the words they utter. Even words in every day use, such as "practice," "practise," "expense," "skilful," &c., &c., are too often misspelt, while the havoc that is made with words like "unparalleled" is dreadful to contemplate. We wish every success to the experiment, which cannot but be productive of good, We agree, however, with the Standard that the questioner must be careful in his orthoëpy. How can people be expected to spell properly if the words are inaudibly or improperly pronounced? Again, we quite endorse the opinion of the same journal that an American Dictionary of the English language should not be taken as the standard of correct spelling, at all events in England. It were better to take Latham than Webster, though the merits of the latter are by no means to be denied.

Mr. Peter Paul McSwiney and sundry Irish M.P.'s do not show to great advantage in the disputes that have arisen over the O'Connell Centenary Fund. When men of different shades of opinion combine to honour the memory of some eminent personage, they should sink all personal and private differences. But in this case a most undignified squabble has arisen. Could the late Dan O'Connell rise from the grave, and be present at another such Committee meeting, he would probably exclaim, with all his native vehemence, "Save me from my friends."

Archbishop Trench has met with an accident. In stepping ashore, at Kingstown, from one of the Holland steamers, his Grace fell, and severely strained the muscles of one of his legs. He was conveyed at once to an hotel, and, according to latest accounts, is progressing very favourably.

The stoppage, under orders of the Privy Council, of a number of Irish cattle, at Silloth, in Cumberland, owing to the prevalence of foot and mouth disease among the herd, has been magnified by Mr. Isaac Butt, M.P., into an Irish grievance. We are fully alive to the inconvenience and loss that must result from the stoppage of cattle, whether Irish, English, or foreign; but there is a still greater evil to be feared if, when contagious diseases are raging among our flocks and herds, the unrestricted movements of the cattle trade were permitted. The cattle plague of 1865-6 was only stamped out, at the last, by wholesale slaughter, and the most complete isolation of any stock among which the disease had broken out. Had these severe measures been adopted at the outset, instead of at the last, it is very probable Cheshire would not have had to deplore the loss of some 80,000 head of cattle. It is hard enough to bear the present high prices of meat, but were the movements of cattle wholly unrestricted, the disease might spread everywhere. However, the subject has been referred to the Royal Dublin Society, who will at once send over an influential deputation to the Duke of Richmond, President of the Council.

The Theatres and Concert Rooms are in full activity. Among the most enjoyable of the latter, are the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts, at St. James's Hall, which have now become quite an annual institution. The second Monday "Pop" came off this week, and was honoured by the presence of the Queen of Denmark, the Princess of Wales, and the Princess Thyra. Then there are the Oratorio Concerts at the Royal Albert Hall, and at the Crystal and Alexandra Palaces. The Promenade Concerts, at Covent Garden, will shortly come to an end, in view of the preparations necessary for the production of the Christmas Pantomime.

The Chrysanthemum Show of Messrs. W. Cutbush and Sons, at the Alexandra Palace, will close to-day. The attractions at Muswell Hill are now, almost of necessity, limited to the concerts and theatrical representations; and these are certainly well supported. Next month we are promised a Dog Show, on a grand scale; an Exhibition of Dolls, and on the 1st proximo, which is the anniversary of the Princess of Wales's birthday, there will be a special programme in honour of the occasion. To-day, at the Crystal Palace, the Annual Presentation of Prizes to the London Rifle Brigade will take place; the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs will attend in State, and the Lady Mayoress will perform the ceremony of distribution.

The winter meeting of the London Athletic Club was held last Saturday at Lillie Bridge. The attendance, considering the time of the year and the extreme rawness of the weather, was very considerable, there being some four thousand people present. Everything passed off well, as is usually the case at these deservedly popular meetings; the more so, that a new feature, only introduced of late, was among the principal attractions. We allude to what, in our younger days and by readers of the Boys' Own Book, is no doubt familiar to our readers as French and English. Two teams, as nearly equal weight and strength as possible, take each an end of a long rope, and the struggle is which team shall pull its opponents over a mark. On Wednesday the same club held its annual assault of arms in the big room at St. James's Hall. The events were numerous and very varied in character, consisting of bouts at single stick, and with the gloves, sabre v. bayonet, fencing, Indian club exercise, in which one of the performers handled 40 lb clubs with singular ease, Cumberland wrestling, feats of swordsmanship, such as cutting an apple in two on a man's hand, cleaving a bar of lead, &c., &c. The attendance was considerable, and the success of the meeting undoubted.

At Versailles, the third reading of the Electoral Bill makes somewhat slow progress. However, the principle of the Bill has been accepted, and, in a short time, no doubt, it will become the law of the land. M. Paul de Cassagnac, on Tuesday evening, addressed a private meeting of Buonapartists, who were present to the number of three thousand, at—of all quarters of Paris—Belleville. The meeting, according to all accounts, appears to have been very successful, and M. Paul de Cassagnac was very happy in some of the blows he delivered at the Republican party. There is a Press Bill to be discussed in the Legislative Assembly, and this, no doubt, will give rise to many exciting debates. From Vienna we hear that Cardinal Rauscher, Prince Archbishop of that See, died on Wednesday. The news from Spain resembles much the news received for some weeks past. The final campaign against the Carlists is about to be undertaken, and, of course, Carlism is on the point of being annihilated. But the event that inspires pretty general distrust throughout Europe is the critical state of things in Turkey. The insurgents in the Hersegovina appear to have gained one or two pretty substantial successes over the Turks. We hear rumours of Servia preparing for war in the coming spring, and of the assembling of six thousand Montenegrins, with a view, no doubt, of having a finger in the present troubles. No doubt the Great Powers are earnest in their endeavours to maintain the peace, and the Sultan may possibly be induced to grant the desired reforms, provided, of course, there is no appearance of external pressure having been brought to bear on His Majesty. If concerted action is taken, we may anticipate that peace will be preserved; but the present aspect of things is, to say the least, ticklish. The situation of affairs at Perak, in the Malayan Peninsula, has not materially altered. The Malays, it is true, have been driven out of one or more stockades, but the murder of the British Resident, Mr. Birch, is very far from being avenged. However, troops are being sent to the seat of disturbance, and no doubt we shall soon hear that a just retribution has overtaken the offenders. Another of those notabilities, who have played no despicable part in the world's history, has passed away. The ex-Duke of Modena, who was expelled his Duchy by the events that followed the war of 1859, died last Saturday. Up to the very last moment of his life the Duke looked forward to being restored to power, but this was not to be. He was possessed of great wealth, and it is said he supplied a great part of the money which has enabled the Carlists and the French Legitimists to play so considerable a part during the last few years. There is a talk, by the way, of the Ex-Queen of Spain returning to Madrid, but we imagine this will hardly strengthen the throne of her son, King Alphonso.

The regular meeting of the General Committee of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls was held on Thursday, the 25th instant, at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, Bro. Lieutenant Colonel Creaton, V.P., in the Chair. Bro. Robert Wentworth Little, Secretary, read the minutes of the various special reports of the several Committees, and of the General Quarterly Court, which were confirmed. Bro. Benjamin Head proposed that the special report of the House Committee be adopted, which was carried. Four petitions were accepted for children to be placed on the list of candidates, while one was deferred. A sum of £10 was collected to give Miss Giller for her outfit. The meeting was then adjourned. There were present Bros. Hyde Pullen, A. H. Tattershall, B. Head, Griffith Smith, R. B. Webster, W. Wellsman, H. Massey, W. Pass, F. Binsa, L. Ruf. Dr. Ramsey Kenyon, W. Jones, H. A. Dubois, H. Diaper, H. M. Levy.

Bro. J. L. Toole, on his return from America, has, at the Gaiety Theatre, been received nightly with a perfect ovation. His success in America is well known; there he has been received with tokens of esteem from our American friends, and also by the President of the United States. The highest officials in Canada have also accorded him the right hand of fellowship, with expressions of personal regard as a friend and talented actor. A Canadian contemporary has the following passage, "Mr. Toole, who has won such fame on both sides of the Atlantic, by his performances, has been the delight of thousands of the best classes of our citizens. Accomplished artists like Mr. Toole are not like blackberries, found in every hedge, and with this conviction, only too forcibly impressed on us, we cannot but lament the early departure of this brilliant and accomplished comedian."

We are gratified in being able to report the initiation of Capt. Matthew Webb, in the Neptune Lodge, No. 22, at Guildhall Tavern, on Thursday.

Bro. Sheriff Breffit has been elected on the Court of Assistants of the Coopers' Company.

Bro. Henry Gabb P.M. New Concord Lodge, 813, of the Rosemary Branch Tavern, Hoxton, Past Governor of the Incorporated Society of Licensed Victuallers, and Past Chairman of the Licensed Victuallers' Protection Society, has been elected as Chairman for the ensuing year of the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum.

Bro. Geo. Abbott, Past Master of the Lion and Lamb Lodge, has been presented with a very valuable gold watch and chain, and a very elegantly emblazoned testimonial, on vellum, by the members of the Railway Guards' Universal Friendly Society, as a token of respect, and also for his ability in discharging his duties as chairman for five years.

NEW FREEMASONS' HALL FOR STOCKTON.

THE usual ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of a Freemasons' Hall, in Wellington-street, almost immediately opposite the Hall at present used by that body, was conducted with Masonic honours. Not having been publicly announced, there was not a large assembly; but, nevertheless, a goodly company, of which the fair sex formed the larger portion, and they were accommodated with a platform overlooking the proceedings. The duty of laying the stone devolved upon the Worshipful Master, Bro. James Usher, assisted by the Wardens and Brethren of the Lodge of Philanthropy, No. 940; Bro. C. E. Naish W.M., and brethren of the Tees Lodge, No. 509; Bro. R. S. Hopper W.M., and brethren of the Lodge of Fraternity No. 1418; and other brethren from Lodges in the Provinces of Durham and Yorkshire. The architects are Bros. Wetherall and Moses; the builders, Bros. J. F. Craggs and Mr. Benson; the director of ceremonies, Bro. A. S. Fowler P.M. P.S.G.D.; Secretary, Bro. I. H. Hart. The procession having arrived at a proper distance from the site, it halted, the brethren opening out right and left, leaving room for the Master to pass up the centre, Preceded by the Inner Guard and brethren following in succession from the rear, thus inverting the order of procession. On the Worshipful Master arriving at the stone the upper portion was raised, whereupon the Chaplain (the Rev. Bro. Trotter, of Haverton Hill), repeated a prayer.

The Mayor of Stockton (Bro. John Hunton), Treasurer of the Lodge, then deposited in the cavity of the stone a phial, containing various coins of her Majesty the Queen Victoria's reign, copies of the newspapers of the day, and a parchment scroll containing a record of the ceremony. After making a few remarks on the necessity for the new building, the trowel was then handed to the Worshipful Master by Bro. A. C. Knowles P.M. P.P.S.G.D., and the former then spread the cement on the lower stone, when the upper one was immediately put down upon it. The stone was then adjusted by Bro. A. S. Fowler with the plumb rule, Bro. T. Bradley using the level, and Bro. Smith the square. The Worshipful Master having given the three taps with the mallet, poured the wine and oil and strewed the corn over the stone, the Chaplain repeating a prayer. The implements were next delivered by the Worshipful Master to the builder for his use, and the plan and elevation of the building being presented to the Worshipful Master for his inspection, after approving of the same, delivered them to the architect (Bro. Moses) for his guidance.—Bro. J. Usher W.M., then addressed the assembly, and three cheers were given, on the call of the Worshipful Master, for "The Queen," "The Grand Master of England," "Bro. John Fawcett, Provincial Grand Master," "The Ladies," &c. A collection, according to ancient custom, having been made for the workmen, the procession re-formed and returned to the Freemasons' Hall, and sat down to a banquet.

THE PRINCIPLES OF FREEMASONRY—THEIR ORIGIN.

From the "Canadian Masonic News."

FREEMASONRY, at this time the most permanent and widely extended association on the globe, undoubtedly had its origin in a remote antiquity, and embraces among its membership men of all classes and conditions, from the humble artisan to the very king on the throne, and men of every variety of political opinions and of every shade of religion founded upon a belief and adoration of the great I AM.

Although the origin of Freemasonry has been considered a mystery by the many, its foot-prints are visible in every age, and its records traced through all the distant past. The original basis of Freemasonry was, doubtless, a compact or solemn agreement entered into between its originators to worship the one living and true God, the Creator of all worlds, at a time when the crudest notions prevailed in regard to Deity; when a multiplicity of Gods were worshipped, and the most degraded observances in the name of religion were practised. This compact may, with a great deal of certainty, be traced to have originated with Joseph and his brethren in Egypt, as at no other period of the world's history does there appear to have existed a necessity for a mutual agreement of such a nature. The beginning of Freemasonry was the administering an obligation by Joseph to his brethren after the decease of their father, Jacob, binding them to continue stedfast in their belief in the Creator of the Universe and to deal justly with their fellow-men. The diversity of individual character, and the difference in the moral status of the human family necessitated, however, in time, additional obligations to the original compact, and also additional qualifications, and thus Freemasonry gradually developed, until it matured into a perfect organization at the building of the Temple by Solomon. As the Children of Israel were in constant intercourse with the Egyptians, some fell into their habits and customs, and in a measure departed from the faith of their fathers, and thus the moral qualifications, as an additional prerequisite to a belief in the Deity, was rendered essential, to be admitted into the covenanted brotherhood. Thus the developements of the moral elements of Freemasonry grew out of the frailty of the human heart and the desire manifested for the "flesh pots of Egypt." Moses, in early life, entered into the covenant, and while in the land of Midian, where he lived a life of seclusion for a period of forty years, inspired by divine wisdom, he elaborated his excellent code of laws, embracing every duty that man owes to God, and to his fellow-man, and every essential to his happiness in this and the future life. The Decalogue, which forms the basis of the moral law of every people, was, soon after it was promulgated, adopted as the standard of qualifications of those who sought to be, and were considered worthy of being received into the covenant; and it was during the sojourn of the Children of Israel in the wilderness that the humanising principles were adopted, which form the crowning glory of Freemasonry, exalting it for its expansive love and practical sympathy far above all other institutions. At the building of the Tabernacle, Moses arranged and classified those who were engaged in its construction according to their capacities, and there originated that symbolic instruction which Solomon, some centuries afterwards, adopted at the building of the Temple.

It was at this period that the working tools, which form a peculiar characteristic of Freemasonry, with their monitorial instructions and illustrations, were introduced. These symbols were used for a twofold purpose: one to remind the Children of Israel of the bondage from which they had just been liberated, and the other for the purpose of imparting moral instruction. The working tools with which they had become familiar were thus invested with an interest which made their labours light, and evoked thought. They were no longer the simple implements of labour, but stern, earnest, solemn teachers, speaking to the heart, and impressing on the mind lessons of the highest import. The duties of life, for the proper development of the physical man, and the intellectual faculties, were taught by these quiet instructors. They taught the government of the passions, the regulation and proper appropriation of time, the necessary observances for the preservation of health, sympathy for the poor and unfortunate, practical benevolence, charity in its most extended signification, man's duties to his family, his neighbour, his country and his God. And to render their teachings more imperative and effectual, they were first placed upon an ALTAR consecrated to Deity; a simple altar, upon which no metallic tool had been lifted, about which nothing offensive or defensive could appear, around which all in humble position bent the knee to one common Father, and there the solemn and all important lessons were communicated by authorised teachers. The fundamental principles which constitute the landmarks of Freemasonry, its moral teaching, its symbolic illustrations, were all engrafted by Moses upon the organization formed by those admitted into the covenant; and in all the course of time, the ages through which the institution has passed, no principle of moral ethics has been added to the original code; it culminated in its highest, under the Grand Mastership of Moses. The Temple of Freemasonry rests upon solemn covenants obligatory on all who have voluntarily assumed its obligations. The original covenant of a belief in Deity, imposed by Joseph upon his brethren in Egypt, forms the first requirement of Freemasonry, at this time, and ever has been a primary and necessary qualification. It is not possible to conceive of a purer, or nobler, or more stable foundation than that upon which the Temple of Freemasonry is constructed. No other institution can claim an origin so exalted.

There are some writers who absurdly claim that Freemasonry originated with the Adam of Moses, the first man; others that it originated with the priests of Egypt; some find a resemblance in the religious rites of the worship of the heathen deities; and others, again, ascribe its origin to a body of operative masons, who, for their mutual protection, established signs and symbols, by which they could recognise each other. Freemasonry had no other origin than the assuming of a covenant to continue stedfast in the belief of the only one living and true God, the Creator of Heaven and earth; and the Masonic institution could not have originated in any other way than as we have stated, as its requirements, symbolism, teachings, and ceremonials plainly prove.

As the Children of Israel had been held in a state of bondage by the Egyptians, they being originally freemen, freeborn, after their exodus from Egypt, the principle was adopted as a fundamental law of the covenanted brotherhood, that no Bondmen, only those who were freeborn, freemen, should be received into the covenant; and through all the intervening ages down to the present time, this has constituted a landmark of Freemasonry.

The physical qualifications which in later times have been regarded as relating solely to the limbs and physical senses of the outward man, had a more extended application when they were first considered necessary as prerequisites to admission into the covenant. The object was to admit those only who had not violated the laws of their own natures, those only who had lived regularly, were temperate in all things, had not indulged vitiated or depraved appetites, had not impaired their mental or physical organisms, so that the soul or spirit could act with perfect freedom in the fulfilment of its mission, in its progress onward and upward, developing fully its strength and majesty through all the eternal ages of its immortality. Thus the qualification hale and sound, not deformed or dismembered, perfect and upright, are not only based upon the soundest philosophy, but their object was the perfection of the being created in the image and likeness of God.

It may reasonably be inferred that in the early ages, when our institution first had birth, that the time devoted for the assemblies of the brotherhood was wholly taken up with solemn and serious instruction, with the labours necessary to receive the neophyte into the covenant, with teaching the fundamental principles of the association, its symbolism, &c., and for these reasons the gentler sex were excluded, as the natural endearments of husband and wife, of brother and sister, of affianced loved ones, would in a great degree attract the attention away from the high and holy purposes in which they were engaged.

The elective franchise, which is the charter of liberty, was instituted in the early organization of the covenanted brotherhood, and through all the dark ages, in all despotic governments, the brethren in their mystic associations, as well as in all the Masonic Lodges at the present time, in all countries, monarchial or otherwise, preserved and maintained the very principles of free Democratic institutions, and not only was the elective franchise exercised in the voluntary choice of officers to preside, rule, and govern, but also as to the reception of those desiring to be admitted into the fraternity.

The landmarks of Freemasonry, recognised as such at the present day, were established at the remote periods referred to, and the system, as regards its principles, philosophy, and morality, embrace the whole of man's duties to God, his neighbour, his family, himself, and his country.

The relations which Freemasons sustain toward each other render necessary that the duties illustrated in the points of fellowship, should be the rule and standard to govern the fraternity in their intercourse with each other. These duties bind in the closest friendship the members of the Masonic Society, and its obligations unite them in the chain of brotherhood. Within the mystic sanctums, brother meets brother in fond embrace, and vows of fidelity are registered on the heart which neither flint nor steel can erase.

The pulse of affection beats strong, as, hand grasped in hand, the mystery is communicated which binds in an adamantine chain the members of the mystic tie. A Mason's feet will not grow weary in a brother's cause, although the way be long and rough; the voice of a brother in distress, a brother's cry for assistance, finds a responsive echo in a Freemason's breast, and with alacrity he will fly to his relief, and cheerfully perform those duties which sympathy and humanity require.

A Freemason's duties toward his brethren do not cease with rendering those services which our common humanity demands—nay, there are others equally binding, of the most sacred nature. In the silent hour of the night, in the secret chamber, in his devotions to the Merciful Father, on bended knees, he will always remember his brethren of the mystic tie.

St. John's Lodge, Montreal, held the first meeting in its rooms on St. Catherine-street, on Monday evening, 6th June, for the purpose of formal organization and preliminary arrangements. The dues to to the Lodge were fixed as follows: initiation 50 dols.; joining fee, 25 dols.; annual subscription, 12 dols. No expense has been spared by the founders in decorating and furnishing the rooms, the expense of which, with the Lodge regalia and a year's rent, we understand will cost about 3,000 dols. The floor under the Lodge Rooms will be appropriated as a club for the members, and a billiard table is proposed to be furnished. A Janitor resides on the premises, and the arrangements are complete in every respect.

The corner stone of the new Masonic Hall in Halifax, was recently laid by J. W. Laurie, Esq., G.M., with considerable éclat. Grand Chaplain Townsend delivered the oration. About a thousand brethren formed the procession, and nearly six hundred ladies occupied seats which had been erected for their accommodation.

A Masonic Lodge in any community, if the Fraternity be true to its code of morals, and perform with fidelity the moral duties, as enjoined in the Lodge, cannot fail to prove a blessing to that community.—Freemason's Repository.

The onerous duty was performed, if not with the strictest accuracy, yet in a manner most fluently, and to the evident satisfaction of all present. Bro. Reed will preside on the next occasion. It is gratifying to perceive so many brethren crowd into a Lodge of Instruction, as it proves an eager desire to become efficient in the duties requisite for advancement. Such gatherings are not only pleasant and instructive, but tend to found and cement friendships amongst men of the most diverse opinions, political or religious, who might otherwise have never had the privilege of meeting and knowing each other. Metropolitan Lodge, No. 1507.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, the 18th inst., at the Metropolitan Club, 269 Pentonville-road, Bros. Michael W.M. in the chair, Williams S.W., Kingham J.W., Jas. Willing jun. I.P.M., Rose Treasurer, Tims P.M. 177 Secretary, J. Douglas S.D., Scales J.D., Side I.G., Stiles D.C. and Assistant Secretary, Colls W.S., Daley Tyler, and Bros. Jones, Saintsbury, Rogers, Cheek, Gilbert, Rapkin, Hatton, Dunmore, Hipton, J. R. Rogers, Baron Von Tittenborn, J. Time, Shand, Read, Cavett, Ormiston, &c. The Lodge having been opened, the Secretary read the minutes of the installation meeting, which were confirmed. The following brethren being in attendance, and having shown their proficiency, were raised to the 3rd degree, viz., Bros. Simond, Taylor, Dunmore, Levy, Erwood, Little, Rogers, and Fowler, No. 244, the latter brother by the courtesy of the W.M. Bros. H. Stiles, Solomon, G. Gilbert jun., and Swaagman were passed to the degree of Fellow Craft, and Messrs. E. J. Cave, J. F. Van Camp, H. Lovegrove, P. E. Vanderpump, and G. J. Vanderpump were initiated into the Order. Bro. E. J. Cain, No. 1475, was elected a joining member. Two gentlemen were placed on the agenda paper for initiation, but were, with others, deferred until the next meeting. Bros. Scales and Stiles were accorded votes of thanks for their zeal and assiduity in representing the committee, formed for the purpose of presenting the Lodge with a very faithful and artistic delineation of Bro. Jas. Willing's (I.P.M.) portrait, painted by Bro. Van Tittenborn. A vote of thanks was also unanimously given to Bro. Willing jun. for the very handsomely framed pictures of the Boys' and Girls' Schools he had so generously presented to the Lodge. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren sat down, in the newly enlarged room, to a very capital banquet, the W.M. presiding, and proposing the usual loyal, Masonic, and other toasts. The visitors were Bros. Walford P.M. 177, Fowler 244, Morris 177, &c., and who, with the brethren, expressed their gratification at the working displayed, and the hospitality afforded them.

Morecambe Lodge, No. 1561.—The first meeting of this newly consecrated Lodge was held on Friday, the 5th inst., at the North Western Hotel, Morecambe, Lancaster, Bro. Dr. Moore P.G.S.B. of Eng., the W.M., opening the Lodge in due form. Messrs. Ward and Bannister were initiated, the working being efficiently performed by the W.M. who was ably assisted by Bro. E. Airey the I.P.M., and Bro. H. Longman 1051 as S.W. Two joining members were proposed, and after a pleasant meeting the Lodge closed in ancient form.

CONSECRATION OF A NEW MASONIC HALL AT RUTHERGLEN.

ON Friday, 12th November, St John's Operative Lodge, 347, held high festival, to celebrate the consecration of their new Hall, the foundation stone of which had been laid with Masonic honours by Bro. Cunningham, in March last. The ceremony was performed by Colonel A. Campbell P.G.M. for Renfrewshire East. The Lodge was duly opened by the R.W.M. Bro. J. Cunningham, P. Murdoch S.W., T. Alston J.W., S. Abbot D.M., D. Smart S.M., Wm. Gardner I.P.M., A. Warnock Sec., Wm. Miller Treas., W. Young S.D., J. Brodie J.D., W. McKechnie I.G., and Bros. Abbot, Richie, Shield, Nichol, Crawford, Robertson and Smith as Stewards. The Hall was quite filled with deputations from the following Lodges: Mother Kilwinning No. 0, Glasgow Kilwinning No. 4, St. Mungo 27, Thistle and Rose 78, R.A. 116, St. Mary 117, Pollockshaws 153, Denny 176, Scotia 178, Star 319, Union 103, Thistle and Shamrock 275, Union 333, St. George 338, Paisley 370, Commercial 360, Clyde 408, Renfrew 426, St Andrews 485, and the Clydesdale 566, in all above 300 brethren were present, and many Lodges would have sent larger deputations, but the Master wisely limited the issue of tickets to the capacity of the Hall. As soon as the Lodge was opened, the deputation from the P.G.L. were received upstanding; we noticed amongst them Colonel Colin Campbell P.G.M., Lieutenant Colonel Reid as D.P.G.M., J. Caldwell P.G.S.W., J. Gilmour P.G.J.W., Rev. J. Campbell of Eastwood acting as P.G. Chaplain, Bro. Scallard the Provost.

The usual consecration service was then gone through, the hymns and chants being very effectively rendered by the choir belonging to the Lodge, led by Bros. Stibo and Garoo, while Bro. J. Miller P.G.D. of Music of the Province of Glasgow presided at the harmonium. The Oration was delivered at the close of the ceremony by the P.G.M., in which, after dwelling on the great antiquity of the Order, he spoke of the wonderful corroboration of our principles, and also of the authenticity of the early Bible records that have lately been furnished by the excavations in Egypt and Nineveh in the cuneiform chiselling impressed on the bricks, now, after the lapse of ages, brought to light. After speaking of the labours in this direction of Sir J. Smith and others, the Gallant Colonel spoke of his own researches in that direction some years ago, and also at the close of last year. Contending that science when rightly studied was not antagonistic to the truths of revealed religion, but was rather a hand-maid to it, and what was not now fully understood would all be made clear when we got to the Grand Lodge above, and to help in the cause of virtue, morality and religion. He had much pleasure in now consecrating this Hall. (Cheers.)

The R.W.M. then thanked the P.G.M. on behalf of Lodge 347 for the honour he had conferred on them in thus consecrating their Hall, he then proposed that Lieutenant Colonel Reid and the other Provincial Officers should be affiliated honorary members of St. John's. After which the Lodge was called from labour to refreshment. The Master gave the usual loyal and Masonic toasts. He then proposed the P.G.L. of Renfrewshire East, and Colonel Campbell. The Lodge had been highly honoured by their presence there on this occasion, more especially when they remember that the gallant Colonel has so lately had royalty for his guest. (Cheers.)

Colonel Campbell thanked the Lodge for the cordial way in which they had received the toast, on his own behalf and that of the P.G.L., all the officers of which he found at all times ready to support him, and it was always a source of gratification to him to attend and perform any of the duties of his office. Allusion had been made to the visit of Prince Leopold to his home, he would therefore take this opportunity of contradicting a rumour that had been spread that the visit had an ulterior view; he could assure it had nothing of the kind, but his younger brother had the honour of the Prince's friendship, and the Prince having expressed a desire to visit him at his home, when that request was made known to him, like a loyal subject, he could only give one answer, and he was glad to be able to inform them that he had the authority of Prince Leopold for saying that he was highly pleased with his visit to Renfrewshire. The next toast was "Prosperity to the Burgh of Rutherglen." Bro. Scallard, the Provost, in replying, congratulated the Lodge and especially its Master in having so successfully carried out their desire to obtain a suitable Hall of their own to meet in. He felt that Masonry was calculated to make men better citizens, and as the head of the municipals of that Burgh, as well as a brother Mason, he was glad to be able to be present to-night, as he believed the erection and consecration of that Hall was calculated to forward the prosperity of their ancient Burgh. The P.G.M. proposed prosperity to 347 and the R.W.M., on whom he passed some high but well deserved eulogiums. Bro. J. Cunningham, in reply, said he had done his best during his term of office to carry out his duties faithfully; in this he had been well seconded by his officers; true, he had had a great deal of extra work in getting shareholders in the Hall, and superintending its erection, but he felt fully repaid to-night when he saw the Hall completed and filled with so many of the most influential members of the Craft from all parts of their own Province and the neighbouring ones of Glasgow. He felt sure that the Hall, with shops below it, would not only give them a Lodge room second to none, but would also prove a financial success, his term of office was just up, but he was proud of the position in which he was able to hand it over to his successor.

Several other toasts were given, but the last train to the city compelled the departure of most of the Glasgow brethren, who returned highly pleased with the evening's proceedings.

THE DRAMA.

"Blue Beard" at the Globe.—Theatrical Changes.

AFTER an absence of some months, on their tour in the provinces, Miss Thompson and her company are once more delighting the eyes and raising the laughter of our jaded London audiences. That wonderful burlesque, with which, in September of last year, they opened a triumphant season, is still the chief item in their programme. The Heathen Chinee, with his pigeon-English, and his skilful play at euchre, is as amusing as ever in the hands of Mr. Edwin. Mr. Lionel Brough makes as much as ever out of the most terrible, and, at the same time, most contemptible despots. Miss Rachel Sanger and Miss Atherton lend the aid of their bright presence and graceful acting; and Miss Thompson, the most refined and most graceful of burlesque actresses, about whose style there is no vulgar loudness nor shadow of coarseness, is in herself a power sufficient to bear the weight of a much worse burlesque. The piece itself has been so much added to and altered since its production, that we should think very little of the original fabric can remain; but who will cavil at alterations which are for the better, or at additions which introduce the newest topics of interest—from rams and ironclads to Turkish and Egyptian bonds, or the Prince's visit to India, or Mrs. Giucometti Prodgers—there is nothing of public notoriety which escapes notice of some kind; and playgoers will not need to be told that a "topical song" is always very popular. Blue Beard is a somewhat curious piece, partly burlesque, partly extravaganza, generally undefinable; but it serves the purpose of keeping the public highly amused, and sending them away in hearty good humour.

The programme at the OLYMPIC has undergone a change during the past week. Will Mr. Neville forgive us if we express a feeling of great relief at the disappearance, we hope for a long period of time, of that eternal Ticket-of-Leave-Man? Miss Carlotta Leclercq has appeared as Madame Fontanges in Plot and Passion. On Monday next, for the benefit of the popular lessee, will be produced the play of Buckingham.

At the HAYMARKET, a new farce, entitled A Happy Medium, serves as a prelude to Mr. Byron's comedy, intended, apparently, to show how closely Mr. C. Warner can follow in the footsteps of Mr. Matthews. It has the effect of convincing us, to our sorrow, that there is but one Mr. Matthews on the stage, and that Mr. Warner has small claim to be considered even as his prophet. Mr. Everill plays a testy old gentleman with considerable breadth of humour.

The last ten nights are announced of A Nine Days' Wonder, at the COURT Theatre, and on Thursday, 9th December, will be produced Mr. Gilbert's new fancy play, in three acts, under the title of Broken Hearts. Mr. Gilbert is not only our best, but also our most promising writer of comedy; he is not afraid to bestow both time and trouble on the ideas of a mind rich in originality, and we are convinced that his best work has yet to come before the public.

Black-Eyed Susan, Mr. Bernard's best and most successful burlesque, now strengthens the programme at the OPERA COMIQUE. Fascinating Miss Oliver once more wins the affections of the most awe-inspiring of naval officers, Captain Crosstree Dewar, and Mr. Danvers exhibits his dry humour as Dame Hatley.

On Thursday next, Mr. Mayer will produce at the QUEEN'S a spectacle which was perhaps the most splendid ever seen on the Parisian stage. The White Cat, by dint of dresses, scenery, and legs, ran in Paris for over five hundred nights, and we believe that its attractions will, if possible, be augmented.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain :—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 112 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, 27 ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

MASONIC LITERATURE.

MORE than once have we drawn attention to the question whether a periodical literature is, or is not beneficial to the Craft. We return to it now, because it has been brought somewhat conspicuously before us in a work of the late Dr. Oliver, recently published, and a review of which will be found in another part of our columns. Now, there are few men to whose opinions on matters of interest to the Craft we attach greater value. We are very far from accepting all his theories, but no one ever doubted his enthusiasm, and in the case now before us, whether a Masonic press is or is not desirable, his views are entitled to the greatest respect. He, himself, was a most voluminous author, and as his love for Masonry was undoubted, it is in the last degree improbable that he would have issued any Masonic publication, had he imagined there was the slightest danger from publicity. Nor must we overlook the fact that when the Lincoln Testimonial was presented to him, the numerous works he had written were pointedly referred to as establishing his claims to the respect and love of all Freemasons. But though the most enlightened members of our Order are in favour of a Masonic press, there is, unfortunately, an immense amount of apathy on the subject among the general body of Masons, and not a few who are bigoted enough to oppose anything like the printing and publication of the most ordinary Masonic news. It is within our own experience that there are still among us brethren who follow the example, quoted in one of the works of this very Dr. Oliver, of the Mason who declared himself opposed to Masonic literature, though he confessed to never having read a single line of any Masonic work, and was, therefore, incompetent to say whether they were beneficial or baneful. Now, let us hear what Dr. Oliver says in his posthumous work, The Discrepancies of Freemasonry, on the subject of Masonic literature generally, and a Masonic press in particular. The work is written in the form of a dialogue. As in the well known work Friends in Council, by the late Sir Arthur Help, so here, a number of Masonic friends meet together at the house of one of their number, and spend a week in discussing Masonry in all its bearings, its government, organisation, and dissemination, whether any, and if so, what improvements can be safely made in its ritual, and generally by what means the cause of Masonry may be most effectually promoted. In comparing Masonry in the United States and in England, one of these "Masonic Friends in Council," Bro. Nis Petersen, known also as "The Skipper," in explaining how Masonry has made such rapid strides in the former country, mentions, among other reasons, that "their Grand Lodges encourage the dissemination from the press of general philosophy of the craft, provided the recondite secrets be not profaned," adding further, "Formal treatises, periodical works, and prize essays, abound in every State in which the genuine principles of Masonry are embodied and unfolded; and thus it becomes an accessible pursuit, and, in common with all other sciences, sustains a rank commensurate with its real value, even amongst those who have not been initiated, or who, by sex or age, are excluded from a participation in its mysteries." "The Vicar," taking up the conversation, expresses an opinion, that if the example of our American brethren were followed in this country, the Order would be doubled as regards numbers, in a quarter of a century, while its character would be raised "by the adhesion of men whose talents have already distinguished them in the walks of learning and science, and who would thus be induced to make Freemasonry their study, for the pleasure such a pursuit is certain to convey to their minds." Thereupon Bro. Gilkes, another of the friends, pursues the theme and gives utterance to the following: "Mankind now entertain a more favourable opinion of our pursuits, because the general principles of the Order are no longer a sealed book, but have been explained over and over again on scientific principles. If this course had not been pursued, it is doubtful whether Freemasonry would have been able to maintain its position. We hear no more of 'the devil dancing in a circle' during our celebrations, nor of the red-hot poker, or any other of the absurdities bequeathed to us by the cowans of the last century; and the ridicule formerly attached to the character of a Freemason is now entirely forgotten." A few pages further on we read: "And I have often wondered," said the Rector, "why Freemasonry has no authorised periodical, as an organ of the Craft, and a medium of communication for the brethren. While every other class, into which Society is divided, has its magazine, whether literary, scientific, peaceful, or warlike, how does it happen that Freemasonry should be without some such useful vehicle for the record of Masonic intelligence?" And then is, quoted in a foot-note to this passage, the following announcement which appeared in the "Freemason's Quarterly Review," 1839, which had then been established only five years: "This publication will continue to issue, in its quarterly form, provided its circulation be doubled. The manner in which this can be done is not difficult. Let every subscriber take two copies, and find a friend to take one off his hands; let every Lodge take one copy This, however, we must know beforehand. We, therefore, suggest that a note should be addressed to us, or to our publishers, stating additional subscribers, and this will finally determine our course. Should we, unfortunately, be deceived in this matter, the number for December 1840, may issue if we live, but our editorial labours will then close; and even this extension of time is only permitted in justice to our brethren in the East and West Indies, who might otherwise justly complain of a want of courtesy." However, we need hardly pursue the subject much further. Suffice it that all the guests who are assembled under the hospitable roof of "The Surgeon," and take part in this dialogue, concur in the view that a Masonic press must be beneficial to the Order, and that it should receive the hearty support of members. When this was written, the Freemason's Quarterly Review was in existence, but the support it received was evidently not such as it deserved, or we should not have had the announcement we have just quoted from its editor. That it did good service, however, admits of no doubt whatever. Many years have passed since Dr. Oliver wrote these Discrepancies of Freemasonry. The Order has vastly increased in point of numbers, and is almost universally popular. Yet the Masons in the United Kingdom, as compared with those in the United States, are hardly less apathetic in supporting the Masonic periodicals of the day now than formerly. It is estimated there are over a hundred thousand Masons ranged under the banners of the Grand Lodges of England, Ireland, and Scotland. Three periodicals exist, viz., a monthly and two weeklies, which contain the Masonic news of the day, and in which are discussed those questions principally interesting to the Craft. In the United States there are more than half a million of the brethren and, Masonically speaking, there is hardly a district presided over by a Grand Lodge, which does not support one or more Masonic magazines or newspapers, while many other papers of general interest devotes a portion of their space to Masonic intelligence. This contrast between the support accorded there and here to Masonic journalism is certainly not flattering to British Freemasonry. Our Lodges are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land, and it is well nigh impossible but some interest must be awakened as to what is going on around us. We in London must delight to hear of what is done in the provinces; those in the provinces must feel an interest in the proceedings of London Lodges. Here then is one reason why our publications should receive encouragement. Then there are innumerable questions which may safely be discussed in the columns of a newspaper or magazine. The philosophy of the Craft will be disseminated, nor is there the slightest ground for imagining that the "recondite secrets of the Order" will be "profained." Nothing of the kind has happened in America, why should there be the slightest fear that English Masons will be less mindful of their obligations, and make public what should not be revealed? Speaking generally, and without regard to any interests of our own, we say the apathetic support accorded to English Masonic literature is not creditable to English Masons.

MASONIC PORTRAITS (No. 5).

A CORNER STONE.

WE have have had occasion, in the course of our busy career, to notice the effect of popularity upon a man of ordinary mental calibre. We have watched some unknown person struggling to lift his head above the crowd around him. We have heard his strongly expressed opinion that those who are high in office in the world are puffed up with pride, too conceited to recognise an old friend, and too big to know anybody who could not in some indirect way add to their importance. We have heard, with a secret smile, the aspirant for popularity speak thus, for we were fully assured that when the time came for him to mount the ladder of fame, he would kick away those who had given him a "leg up," and act like any of the big snobs whose daily doings afford us a cheap and harmless amusement. It is only brains of the strongest fibre which can stand the fascinations of so called fame, or value at its true worth the hollow applause of the multitude. Such brains are rare. The heads of most men are turned by trifles, and he who has once been "high and lifted up," always feels that he is walking on stilts, even when cruel fate has pulled him down again to the level of common humanity. How bitterly we might laugh at these foibles if we were inclined to be cynical! What cruel but true things we might say of those "servants of the public," who are servile enough to the people en masse, but arrogant, indeed, to individuals. It is, however, useless to laugh at failings which are as old as the human race itself. The savage who is tattooed more handsomely than his followers, or who can show a larger collection of the scalps of his enemies, is doubtless just as arrogant as the civilized man who is privileged to wear a glittering bauble or a bit of ribbon, or who, for a brief period, struts across the stage of life in the character of a petty king. The day may, indeed, come when men will discard baubles, and all the outward symbols of power, but while they remain as they are, power itself, or the semblance of it, will always have its fascinations, and few will be able to resist the intoxication of its subtle influence.

The gentleman whose lineaments we are about to trace upon our canvas has known what it is to be famous; he has been a leader of his fellow men, and a Corner Stone of that great edifice which contains within it all that is best and brightest of civic life and civic tradition; he has been called by his fellow citizens to occupy that chair of state which, from the Conqueror downward, has been filled by a long list of illustrious merchants and traders; he has entertained princes and kings, and has carried the stately symbols of his office into a land where the love of state trappings is more deeply rooted than the love of democratic institutions. He has played his part well and wisely. The dignity of his great office has been nobly upheld, and he has displayed a stately courtesy to the meanest of those with whom he has been brought into contact. As a host, he has had few equals; as a magistrate, he has administered justice with rigid impartiality and as a man of business, he was and is still unrivalled. A long and honourable professional career had indeed prepared him for useful public work; and when his fellow citizens bestowed upon him the first mark of their confidence, and started him upon a career which ended in the chair of state, his modest demeanour won all hearts and captivated every eye. It was evident that there was sterling stuff in this man, who when honoured and rewarded with such distinctions as his fellow men could bestow, was content to carry himself as quietly as of old. He speedily mastered the duties of the office he was called upon to fill, and played an important and conspicuous part in the dry practical business of the great Corporation of which he was member. For years he was Chairman of the Police Committee, a body which has steadily kept the City police force at the head of all similar forces in the country. He was Sheriff at a time when no public event of any importance could have justified the sovereign in awarding special honours to the chiefs of the Corporation, but when his time came to fill the Civic chair, every one hoped he would be added to the long roll of Civic magnates who have founded great families upon the letters patent of a baronetcy. Perhaps he himself thought so. The sovereign had rewarded lesser men, for work less useful and lasting than his, and it has been admitted on all hands that his Mayoralty was magnificent beyond precedent. Right royally did he maintain the state of a Civic king in the eyes of the critical Parisians; nobly did he revive all the best traditions of Mansion House hospitality, and under his sway a brilliant and unprecedented entertainment was given at the Guildhall to the chief representatives of home and foreign municipalities. Yet our Corner Stone of civic life retires to comparative obscurity without a handle to his name, and although it is impossible not to regret the fact, we are assured that our illustrious brother is not the man to indulge in vain regrets over the proverbial fickleness of fortune. He has still a prominent career before him, and his talents will be again devoted to the service of his fellow citizens. Honours and rewards do not always fall to the lot of the worthiest, and perhaps he is better pleased with the approbation of his fellow citizens, and with the stately but cordial language in which the City has expressed its thanks than he would have been with the mere tinsel of an empty title.

His year of office was a memorable one in the annals of Masonry, and he, as a Mason, was called upon to play an important part in the ceremony of the Installation of the Prince of Wales. As a Corner Stone of the Order he has yet his reputation to win, but if he carries into the work the same capacity for business which has marked his public career, we do not doubt that he will win golden opinions from the brethren. The calls upon a public man are numerous and exacting, and our hero has had to confess that he has not hitherto devoted as much time and attention to Masonry as its importance deserves. The apology was not needed, and his election as one of the officers of Grand Lodge was received with acclamation by the brethren. His visit to the Great City Lodge was in itself an event of some importance, and marks a new point of departure in Masonic history. Henceforward distinguished public men will seek admission to our ranks, fully assured that the claims of Masonry are too important to be ignored by the busiest or the wisest. We expect much of our new Corner Stone, and we are sanguine that our anticipations will be realised. We do not indeed believe that Masonry is dependent upon the exertions or the talents of any individual. Its own grandeur and the nobility of its aims, commends it to the notice alike of the exalted and the lowly, but it has peculiar claims upon those who bring special talents within its mystic temple, and we shall expect our hero to prove a true Corner Stone, if not a buttress of the Order.

MASONIC STUDIES.

WE are minded once again to revert to this subject, for it is quite impossible to over estimate its importance. As we said last week, far too many brethren are content with knowing just so much as will prove them to be members, as, in fact, will suffice to secure their admission into a Lodge. Familiarity with the necessary forms and formulæ and signs is the sum of their Masonic knowledge. It matters little to them if the sections are worked; if they are, they condescend to exhibit just the semblance of a languid interest in what is going on, all the while, perhaps, regarding the whole thing as a nuisance and a needless delay to the banquet in store for them. They care not to have a section between the banquet and their appetites. On the other hand, if no lectures are held, no sections worked, it would never occur to them to seek more light. They are content to go on from year's end to year's end in a state of tranquil ignorance, utterly unmindful of the fact that when they joined the Craft they expressed a wish for the benefits of Masonic light, and that they virtually bound themselves to be assiduous in their Masonic duties. Not a few among these drones of Masonry have the hardihood to look forward to the day when they shall occupy the chair of the Lodge. They consider their ignorance to be no obstacle whatever to the attainment of their ambition. What is more astounding still, sundry among these audacious Craftsmen find their ambitious hopes sometimes are realised. They attain the rank of W.M., but it cannot be said they adorn it. These ambitious brethren are not particularly thin-skinned. When some initiation, or passing, or raising has to be got through, they see no degradation whatever in vacating the chair in favour of some P.M. competent to fulfil the duty. The ceremony over, they reoccupy their seat, and having asked the few formal questions prescribed by law, they close the Lodge, and the banquet follows. In one sense no great harm is done, perhaps, if these fortunate brethren are genial fellows. They secure a certain amount of popularity as chairmen. They are esteemed generally for the excellence of their personal qualities. They are seldom reproachable with a want of liberality. In fact, they have sense enough to know that something has to be done in the position in Masonry they have attained, and being utterly without Masonic knowledge, and feeling themselves, it may be, too advanced in years to bother themselves about learning, they make up for their shortcomings by a more than ordinary display of bonhomie. They have something of the gourmet in their composition, and can both eat and appreciate a good dinner. They give liberally to the Masonic Charities. They are never weary in their efforts to promote good fellowship, but no one in his senses would ever dream of setting them down as capable members of the Craft. As we strew our beds, so must we lie. The Lodge that elects such a member to be its W.M. has no reason to grumble if, during his year of office, not a single step of progress is made in Masonry. They have only themselves to blame for electing a worthy man, but incompetent Mason, to the most distinguished position in the Lodge. Considering, however, the strides that Masonry has made of late years, and is making; considering how complete a hold it has in the popular mind; considering, also, the violence of the attacks which the Ultramontanes are making in other countries on the reputability of the Order, it is more than ever incumbent on a Lodge to elect competent men to rule it. All of us know how painful it is to overlook the claims of a worthy man, or what at least he considers his claims, to promotion. His personal friends are many. He silences the waverers with the wise saw Seniores Priores, and a minority as feeble, perhaps, in intellect as in numbers, yields ignominiously, and the Lodge is saddled for twelve months with a W.M. whose Masonic knowledge, of all but a few signs and phrases, is conspicuous chiefly by its absence.

We mentioned last week a way of decreasing, if not of wholly removing this excessive amount of Masonic ignorance. We suggested frequent, and, when possible, regular attendance at Lodges of Instruction, where able and willing Preceptors attend and expound with more or less perspicuity the most abstruse points of Masonic lore. But what if the cares and anxieties of business or the incidents of time and circumstance allow not this? What if brethren can obtain instruction only in their own Lodges? What chance is there of learning in a Lodge whose rulers are themselves ignorant, or at all events whose knowledge is limited to the parrot-like delivery of a few formulæ? True, there will certainly be one or more brethren competent to instruct him, but example, in ignorance as in other matters, and especially the example of men in high places, is contagious. Brethren who are lackadaisically inclined, will say, "Why trouble ourselves to study, when Bro. A.B.C., who knows next to nothing, has already attained the chair? It is evident that a competent knowledge of Masonry is not a sine qud non in a W.M. We shall attain that rank, as he did, in due time." This ignorance in the officers begets ignorance in the members, and the strict equality of Masons—at all events, in ignorance of our beautiful ritual—is amply illustrated.

The deductions we make from these premises are these: In the first place, let none be elected to office who are incompetent to fulfil, respectably, the duties required of them. We are far from expecting that all W.M.'s should be Solons, any more than we expect all Masons to be as rich as Cresus. But we have a right to require of those who compete for office, that they shall be useful as well as ornamental. In the next place, let Lodges of Instruction be more frequently and more fully attended. It were well, indeed, if Grand Lodge warranted these Lodges directly, instead of sanctioning their erection under the warrant of other Lodges. Were this done, their status would be vastly improved, and brethren would be more eager in their pursuit after knowledge, when they realised the important fact that Grand Lodge took Masonic instruction under its direct and immediate protection. They are not skilled musicians who just know the notes of music, or skilled artists who can describe a square or circle with the aid of rule and compasses. Why then should it be assumed that dubbing a man a Mason gives him Masonic knowledge? To carry the matter a step further; who would dream of electing the man who only knew his notes, to be a professor of music, or him who could describe a square or circle as aforesaid, to be instructor in painting or sculpture? Why then should brethren be elected to the chair who barely know the A. B. C. of Masonry?

GRAND LODGE.

THE regular Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge was held on Wednesday, 1st December, at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street. There was a numerous attendance of the brethren, it being the night for the nomination of the M.W.M., the Grand Master, the appointment of President of the Grand Lodge of Benevolence, and the Senior and Junior Vice Presidents; the R.W. Bro. Lieut.-Col. Charles Lyne was the acting Grand Master. The R.W. Bro. Bagshawe P.G.M. Essex P.G.M.; Lord Tenterden as G.S.W., Col. Whitwell as J.G.W., Sir Albert Woods G.D.C., Æ. McIntyre, G. R. Fenn P.A.D.C., Alderman Hadley P.G.S., Rev. C. J. Martyn P.G.C., Rev. R. J. Simpson P.G.C., J. Clabon P.G.D., J. Nunn P.G.S.P., Hyde Pullen P.G.S.B., S. Rawson D.G.M. China, A. Sandeman Dist. G.M. Bengal, Spiers P.G.S.B., Mason P.G.S.B., Kuhe G.O., W. Ganz P.G.O., J. Symonds P.G.D., Wright G.P., E. P. Albert A.G.P., J. Boyd P.G.P., C. A. Cottebrune P.G.P., T. Cubitt P.G.P., H. G. Buss, Pendlebury, J. Hervey G.S., &c.; W. Smith, J. Constable, C. Hogard, H. Marsh, H. Massey, H. Thompson, E. M. Haigh, S. May, Jas. Terry, R. W. Little, T. Bull, T. White, Dr. Carpenter, Capt. Grand Lodge was opened, and the Grand Secretary said he had received letters of apology from the M.W. Earl of Carnarvon Pro G.M., Bro. Alderman Stone J.G.W., and several distinguished brethren. The minutes of the Quarterly Communication of the 1st September were read and confirmed. The acting G.M. said he had the sanction of the M.W.G.M. to appoint Bro. Alderman Hadley to act on the Board of Benevolence in the place of the late Bro. J. Savage. Bro. J. Clabon was appointed Senior Vice President, and J. Nunn Junior Vice President of the Board of Benevolence. Bro. Case G.S. then nominated H.R.H. the Prince of Wales as M.W.G.M. for the ensuing year. The election of twelve Past Masters, to serve on the Board of Benevolence, took place. The Report of the Lodge of Benevolence was read and confirmed, with the exception of one grant, which, on an amendment being moved, was reduced to £100. The Report of the Board of General Purposes was read and confirmed. All the business placed on the paper [as given in our last issue] was confirmed. Bro. Rev. R. J. Simpson, P.G. Chaplain, proposed the sum of 100 guineas should be granted by Grand Lodge towards the Palestine Exploration Fund. Grand Lodge was then closed in ample form. The Scrutineers had not returned with the list of the twelve Past Masters to serve on the Lodge of Benevolence before Grand Lodge was closed.

CHARGES OF A FREEMASON.

By Cornelius Moore, Editor of The Masonic Review.

MASONS are but men, and holy as are the principles deduced from our ritnals and emblems, and pure as are the designs upon our great moral trestle-board, still man may differ in opinion, in reasoning, and in conclusions. Masons are not infallible more than other men; and hence differences may arise among them which need to be investigated and adjusted. The Lodge is the proper tribunal to adjust and settle such difficulties when they arise. If either party is dissatisfied with the decision, he may appeal to the Grand Lodge, but the decision of that body is always final. Every brother must "stand to that award and determination;" for, as only Masonic matters can be considered by these tribunals, every brother is bound to submit quietly to the final award. If the difficulty be of such a peculiar character as to require a different reference—if the "Lord's work would be hindered" by waiting for the action of the Grand Lodge—in that case a special reference may be made of it by consent of parties. By the "Lord's work" is meant, in speculative Masonry, the work of the Order: if by taking the difference to the Grand Lodge for adjustment, the work of the Lodge would be arrested, the parties directly interested should consent to an amicable reference, that it may be more speedily decided and settled. Masons should "never go to law about what concerneth Masonry," unless the Lodge should be satisfied that there is an absolute necessity that legal tribunals should adjust the dispute.

The directions in this paragraph are given, not because there is frequent occasion to refer to them, but that should any arise, the mode of settlement may be plain. "Live in peace," is an injunction often repeated from the Orient, and all "know how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

The last section provided for the regulation of conduct while the Lodge is in session; the present makes some important suggestions about behaviour after the Lodge is closed, but while the members are yet together.

Formerly, there was much more conviviality among the Craft, when not at work, than at the present day. When the work of the evening was ended, feasting, sentiments, and songs, were "next in order;" but this practice is now almost entirely abandoned. Sometimes at the session of a Grand Lodge, or on a festival day, the brethren dine together, and enjoy themselves in social converse, but rarely at other times, and even at these festivals, it is now generally considered disreputable to introduce the use of intoxicating liquors. Our modern festivals are held in public, and the female friends of the members often participate with them on such pleasant occasions.

But the ancient practice was to have refreshments in the Lodge hall, and when the work of the evening was over to retire to the festive board. For such occasions the charge was prepared; and it was so plain and appropriate that it needs no exposition to be understood—no urgency to enforce it: it commends itself to every considerate Mason. No private or personal disputes must ever be brought into the Lodge room for discussion; much less any disputes about religious or political opinions or policy. As Masons, our religion is Catholic, that is, universal; and no private dogma or opinion should ever be intruded into such gatherings of friendship. We are of various nations, languages, and kindreds, and our religious and political opinions are also various. It cannot be expected, therefore, that we should all entertain the same opinions in these matters; but we "agree to differ," while we unite in the "grand design of being happy and communicating happiness."

It is added that, "this Charge has been always strictly enjoined and observed; but especially, ever since the Reformation." The reason why it has been specially enforced since that period is, that much greater diversity in religious opinions exist than formerly; and, therefore, the greater danger of introducing discord and bad feelings, where only "peace and unity" should ever exist. Masons cannot be too careful to exclude from their meetings every element of contention; and the only strife permitted there should be, "who could best work and best agree."

This section, we think, needs but little comment. It allows of certain liberties when the Craft are alone together, that should be restrained in the presence of those not Masons. They may converse on Masonry, receive and impart instruction, and keep each other advised of the condition and progress of the Order. But their communications must be courteous and respectful; for though we are enjoined to call each other brother, and meet upon the level, yet Masonry does not remove the distinctions which always exist in social life, on account of station, talents, or moral eminence. But "no station should make us forget that we are brethren; that we are descended from the same stock, partake of the same nature, and share the same hope;" and that "soon all distinctions but that of goodness shall cease." These should never be forgotten.

To "keep sacred and inviolable the mysteries of the Order," is one of the earliest and most positive injunctions laid upon the new made brother. This is a duty he may not, must not neglect. To reveal the secrets of Masonry to one not entitled to them, is the highest offence against the Order, and one, at the bare thought of which, every good Mason would shudder. But the secrets of Masonry may be revealed—unlawfully revealed—without intending to do so on the part of him who commits the offence. And though there may be no criminal intent in the act, yet the consequence would be the same. Hence the necessity of extreme caution, especially on the part of young and inexperienced brethren, when in the presence of those not Masons, or of strangers whom you do not know to be Masons.

The writer, in an extensive intercourse with the Craft for many years, and in different States, has witnessed many indiscretions in this behalf. Brethren in company presume too much—venture too far —without knowing, from legal information, that all within sight or hearing are Masons. In these matters nothing should be presumed; wait until you can legally say, I know, then speak freely.

Every Mason recognises his obligation to preserve the secrets of Masonry from those unauthorised to receive them; but it is also incumbent upon every Mason to keep secret the transactions of the Lodge. Much evil is sometimes done, when a candidate has been rejected, by some incautious brother revealing the fact either to the candidate himself, or some one not a Mason. Such conduct is highly unmasonic and dishonourable, and no one should be allowed to repeat it without meeting with a prompt rebuke. Even our families and our most intimate friends, should be kept in ignorance of those transactions which occur within the tyled recesses of the Lodge room. A Mason who will reveal these forbidden things to any one, not a Mason, is a bad man as well as a very unwise one. He has undertaken to keep them secret; hence by revealing them he violates his vow, ruins his reputation, and produces discord and confusion. "Lock up your treasure in your own breast."

Temperance is a cardinal virtue of the Order; temperance in all things, whether it be indulgence in food, drink, or pleasure, or in excessive labour. A man should not drink too much of anything, and more especially of alcoholic or stimulating liquors. Indeed, the former should not be used at all, except as a medicine; for its use as a beverage is productive of evil only. We may eat intemperately also, as well as drink; but in the latter case, intemperance consists in eating too much, not as in the former, in eating at all. Nature demands food—it revolts at alcohol. But we should eat no more than nature requires; when we go beyond this point, it becomes intemperance. We may be intemperate in going to the Lodge too often, or staying there too late at night. Every labouring man needs a certain amount of rest, as well as time for study and reflection, and evenings are almost the only hours which a labouring man can devote to these. Once or twice per month, as a general rule, is as often as a brother should attend the Lodge; the rest of his evenings should be devoted to his family, to rest, and to the cultivation of his intellectual and moral nature. Late hours at the Lodge should also be avoided; at a reasonable hour every brother should be at home with his family, for his family has the first and highest claims upon him. His health, too, should be consulted, and health cannot be preserved unless a reasonable portion of time is devoted to rest. Nature's laws were enacted by God himself, and are imperative upon all. Be temperate, then, in all things.

In the examination of strangers, either in private, or as visitors at a Lodge, great care and circumspection should be observed. As a general rule, unless there be an urgent and special reason for it, no examination should take place except at the meeting of a Lodge. Young Masons, especially, should be exceedingly careful in their intercourse with strangers professing to be Masons. Until they are well skilled in the art, and have sufficient experience to guard against the wiles and cunning of designing men, they should never attempt to examine into the Masonic qualifications of a stranger, unless an old and experienced brother be present. Great care should also be exercised at Lodges, in the selection of committees to examine strange brethren who wish to visit the Lodge. That is a work which should never be entrusted to inexperienced hands. Men in years, and eminent for their knowledge of the art, their prudence, address, and sound judgment should always be detailed for this duty. A stranger should be "cautiously" examined, and in such a manner as prudence shall dictate. The stranger should be treated kindly, courteously, and respectfully. We have frequently heard complaints about the manner in which strangers are sometimes treated on such occasions: they should be received as gentlemen, and regarded as honest and true, until they are proved to be otherwise; then it will be time enough to "reject them with contempt and derision."

If, after a proper and thorough examination, you are satisfied the stranger is a "true and genuine brother, you are to respect him accordingly." He should be no longer a stranger, but at home and among his brethren. It makes no difference whether he be rich or poor, or what his creed or country; if he be a good and true Mason he should be welcomed with open arms and sympathising hearts.

If the stranger be in want, he should be relieved if possible; if you cannot do it yourself, you should put him in the way of being relieved. If you have employment for him, give him work, and pay him his wages; if you cannot employ him, direct him to some one who can, and thus aid him in procuring work. In these cases, however, it should always be remembered, that none but worthy brethren are entitled to your regard and assistance. An unworthy Mason, like an impostor, should be treated "with contempt and derision." The old rule is as good now as ever, "he that will not work should not eat."

This final section of the Charges is of great importance, especially in its bearing upon the social duties and relations of Masons. Having settled, in clear and unmistakable terms, the great fundamental and immutable principles of the Order; having pointed out those elementary laws and usages which lie at the foundation of Masonry, and which must remain unaltered and unalterable to the end of time. The Charges next proceed to lay down rules of conduct, and define certain social duties, the observance of which are absolutely necessary to secure good order, peace, and prosperity in the great Masonic family throughout the world. The importance of these, every discerning Mason will at once discover, for they commend themselves to the judgment with a force which admits of no repulse.

"All these Charges you are to observe!"—Brother, write that sentence upon your memory, and never forget that "these Charges" are a changeless law, and of enduring obligation. And not only these, but "those that shall be communicated to you in another way," —that cannot be written, but which are in harmony with these, and equally binding.

An epitome of the social duties embraced in the Charges follow:—To cultivate brotherly love, avoid wrangling, slandering, backbiting, and to live in peace and fraternal affection—these must be observed. You are not only to avoid injuring each other's good name and character, but you are to protect the character of every "honest brother," and do him all the "good offices" you can, "as far as is consistent with your honour and safety, and no further." These rules, if strictly obeyed in the spirit in which they are given, would unite the Craft in one "indissoluble bond of sincere affection," and diffuse a spirit of peace and goodwill throughout the entire family of man.

Further than this: if disputes and differences should unfortunately arise, a wise provision is made for their adjustment. The matter should be brought before your Lodge or his for adjustment, and but few cases need go any further. If, however, it cannot be satisfactorily settled there, then an appeal may be taken to the Grand Lodge for final decision. Disputes between the members of the Order should never be taken before the legal tribunals for decision, unless they "cannot be otherwise decided." But even then, the Master and members of the Lodge should kindly offer their mediation, and try to "put a speedy period to all lawsuits," that all may be prepared to discharge their Masonic duties with "alacrity and success." Such is the advice which Masonry gives; such the kindly admonitions which her Charges breathe; and if they are heeded, as they should be by every brother, they will have a most favourable influence, not only upon the Craft, but upon society at large.

"Amen, so mote it be."—This is the crowning wish, the earnest prayer breathed from the heart, that these Charges may be heeded by the Craft, and that "the benign influence of Masonry" may be seen and felt for good in all the world, and to the end of time. So be it now, and so may it ever be. This is the spirit of the closing invocation, and every generous and manly heart must echo the sentiment.

This ends the "Old Charges." We have carefully examined them, and find nothing objectionable, but much that is wholesome in tendency, healthful in influence, and of sound, as well as great, practical importance. They bespeak a clear insight into human nature, and, as far as anything short of inspired wisdom can, meet the necessities of social life, restrain the passions of men, throw light along the dreary path in which we travel on earth, and awaken the best feelings of our nature in behalf of our brother man. They do not pretend to provide for our eternal welfare, but they are well calculated to prepare us for the reception of those higher and still more important truths which God has revealed, and which are sufficient to direct us into that path which "leads to a glorious immortality."

ROYAL ARCH MASONRY.

Exaltation of Lord Zetland.

On Wednesday last an emergency meeting of the Zetland Chapter (No. 236) was held at the Masonic Hall, Duncombe Place, York, for the purpose of exalting the Right Hon. Lawrence Dundas, Earl of Zetland, P.G.M. of the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire. The Chapter was opened in form at 4 P.M., the following Companions being present:—Comp. J. Todd P.Z. as Z., Comp. C. Smith Z. as H., Comp. T. Smarthwaite J., Comp. T. B. Whytehead S.E., Comp. Balmford S.N., Comp. W. Lawton P.Z. P.S., Comp. J. S. Walton 1st Ass., Comp. T. W. Wilson 2nd Ass., Comp. W. Cowling P.Z. Treasurer, Comp. P. S. Camidge Org., Comp. J. Redford Jan., Comp. R. W. Hallon P.D.C. England, Comp. Sir James Meek P.G. P.H., Comp. Rev. J. E. M. Young P.Z., Comp. R. Davison P.Z., Comp. Rev. H. V. Palmer, Comp. The Hon. W. P. Orde-Powlett, and a number of other Companions, members of the Chapter and visitors.

Scribe E. read the summons convening the Chapter, and a ballot was then taken for Bro. Lord Zetland, which proved successful. His Lordship being in attendance, was then duly exalted to the supreme degree of the Holy Royal Arch of Jerusalem. The Historical Lecture was delivered by Comp. Smarthwaite, the Symbolical Lecture by Comp. Sir James Meek P.Z., and the Mystical Lecture by Comp. J. Todd P.Z. The Chapter was then closed in form, and with solemn prayer.

The Companions afterwards adjourned to the banqueting-room, where they partook of a cold collation, which had been provided by Comp. C. Abbott, in his usual good style. The chair was occupied by Comp. C. Smith Z., who was supported by Companions J. Todd and T. Smarthwaite, and the rest of the P.Z.'s.

The loyal and patriotic toasts having been duly honoured, the M.E.Z. proposed the health of the newly exalted Companion, which was received with the greatest enthusiasm. He said that it was both a pleasure and an honour to the Zetland Chapter to have, that day, received into its ranks the representative of a family so long known and honoured in Yorkshire, and in the City of York, as that of Dundas. (Applause.) He was confident that the honours so nobly borne by his predecessor, the loved and respected old Earl, would be handed down by the present Earl in unsullied purity, and that, Masonically speaking, this day would be one to be remembered, both by their new Companion, and by those who were present that evening. (Continued applause.)

The Earl of Zetland said that he wished to return his most cordial thanks for the hearty manner in which the toast had been received, and also for the kind manner in which allusion had been made to the memory of his late uncle, who was indeed beloved, not only by his own family, but by all who had known him. He regretted that trains and time would not wait, and that he should be compelled to make his remarks as brief as possible, but he wished to say that he had felt it a very great pleasure to be present that evening, and he might also take the opportunity of stating that it had long been his opinion, and now it was his conviction, as he had learnt from the evening's proceedings, that the Royal Arch degree was the climax of Masonry, and that it was a degree that every good Mason should take. He thanked the Companions most cordially for their kind reception of the toast. His lordship was greeted with the greatest enthusiasm during his speech, and shortly afterwards took his departure.

The M.E.Z. then proposed the health of the G.M. of England. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, a toast which, he said, should at this time be peculiarly welcome. His Masonic brethren all watched his progress in India with an eye of especial interest, and were convinced that the journey would be fraught with great advantages both to England and her Indian Empire.

The toast was drunk enthusiastically with the Grand Honours.

Sir James Meek P.Z., who was cordially received, rose to propose the toast of the "Three Principals." He congratulated the Zetland Chapter on its present and future prospects, which, he said, were at this time especially bright. It had been, he was sure, a great satisfaction to them to have that evening exalted their P.G.M., and it could not be regarded as otherwise than an honour to the Chapter that his lordship should have elected to have been exalted through its medium. For himself he trusted that he always made a point of attending the meetings of the Chapter on all occasions when the interests of the Chapter demanded his presence, and when it was in his power to do so. To the Principals was largely owing the success of the Chapter, and the able manner in which the ceremony had been conducted that evening. He was sure that it could not fail of being gratifying to his Lordship, who would have no misgivings as to his selection of the Zetland Chapter. (Loud applause).

The toast was drunk with the honours, and was acknowledged in felicitous terms by Comps. C. Smith J. Todd and T. Smarthwaite. Comp. Smith acknowledging the great and kind assistance he had received from Comp. Todd during his term of office. Comp. Todd also returned thanks, expressing the great pleasure it had been to him to perform the duties that evening, and the hope that Lord Zetland would before long occupy an exalted position in Royal Arch Masonry in that province.

Comp. Terry proposed the toast of the P.Z's., coupling with it the names of Comps. Cowling, Sir J. Meek, Davison and Todd, a toast which was received with great éclat.

Comp. Cowling, in returning thanks, said that it could not but be regarded as a great honour for the Chapter to have had the privilege of exalting their P.G.M. In York, the name of Dundas had been honoured for many generations. Years ago a member of that family had occupied the Civic chair in York, and had represented the City in Parliament, and York had a sort of right to them. The times had now changed, but he hoped that some means would yet be found to bind once more together in a common interest the country and the City families and their interests, and he could not but regard the Institution of Freemasonry as an important means to that end. At any rate, the step taken by Lord Zetland that evening was a proof that the interests of the Dundas family in York was not altogether a thing of the past. He begged to thank the members of the Chapter for the cordial spirit of assistance and support they had always shown. This spirit had made the York Lodge a pattern to all Lodges in the country, and he hoped it would long continue to flourish and bear good fruit.

Comp. Dawson P.Z. proposed the health of the two Scribes, and a number of other toasts were duly proposed and heartily received. The proceedings were enlivened by the singing of Comp. H.S. Cumberland and others, and a pleasant evening was spent.

THE GOVERNMENT OF OUR SCHOOLS, &c.

To the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle.

Dear Sir and Bro.,—Although your columns are very properly closed for the present to further discussion of the past management of the Boys' School, I earnestly hope that that closing does not extend to a consideration of the very excellent suggestions of M. A. in your paper of 20th of November.

The constitution of the present governing bodies of our schools seems to combine the vices of unwieldiness, impermanence, and impotence! The General Committee includes several hundred Life Governors (permanent enough, this feature, but rather too big for business), and twelve subscribers annually elected. These, doubtless, are many of them annually re-elected, and are practically the managers; but they can scarcely feel strong enough to initiate and carry through any definite policy, when they may, at any meeting, be outvoted by a tithe of a tithe of the Life Governors, and are by no means sure that any one of them will be able to represent their views at their Board twelve months after deciding on any course of action.

The House Committee of the Boys' School (which one may suppose to be a sub-committee), did not, in June 1874, include even one of the elected members of the General Committee.

If you will favour me with space, I shall be glad to show, in a future letter, how among the first fruits easily gathered by a strong governing body, such as that proposed by M. A., would be an ample provision for all approved candidates for election.

Yours fraternally, HEREWARD.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

The Discrepancies of Freemasonry. Examined during a week's gossip with the late celebrated Bro. Gilkes and other eminent Masons, on sundry obscure and difficult passages in the ordinary Lodge Lectures, which, although open questions in Grand Lodge, constitute a source of doubt and perplexity to the Craft. By the Rev. G. Oliver D.D., Past M.P.S., Grand Commander S.G.I.G. 33° for England and Wales; Past D.G.M. of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts; Past D.P.G.M. for Lincolnshire; Honorary Member of numerous Lodges and Literary Societies in every quarter of the Globe. Author of "The Revelations of a Square," "The Book of the Lodge," "Historical Landmarks," &c. With numerous diagrams. London: John Hogg and Co., Paternoster-row. 1875.

It is difficult to imagine a more charming book, or one more calculated to inspire the Masonic student with enthusiasm for the Royal Art. The very style in which it is written, that of a dialogue among several members of the Craft, is alone enough to ensure the attention of the reader, but this, though a conspicuous, is very far from being its only merit. The pen of a practical, as well as a ready writer is needed in writing dialogues, and those who have read Dr. Oliver's Revelations of a Square, will be the first to concede that few writers of the day would surpass him in this particular style. The late Sir Arthur Helps is the only man of eminence who could possibly have infused more interest into such a work, or rather, be it said, into a series of subjects, handled in this particular fashion.

After a long and able Introductory Chapter, in which we are initiated into the principal points to be discussed, and which forms, in fact, a kind of general synopsis of the work, we come to the Discussions, which are held at a friend's house, and extend over the six working days of the week. To show the breadth and variety of view the reader will be sure to find in these discussions, we may as well fix the characters of the piece—to use a theatrical simile, the several dramatis personæ. There is, in the first place, the Surgeon, who though an able and hospitable man, is described as being somewhat dogmatic, not to say obstinate in his views, and whose career as a Mason cannot be pronounced a very successful one, seeing that during his occupancy of the Lodge Chair his Lodge was somewhat irregular, and was less strong when his term of office was ended than when it began. Then we have the worthy Doctor himself, and Bro. Gilkes, one of the best Masons of his day, together with the "Rev. ——, D.P.G.M. for Lincolnshire; the Rev. ——, Rector of ——; the Rev. ——, Vicar of ——, and Head Master of the Grammar School at ——; the Rev. ——, Curate of ——; a young man who was reading for honours at Cambridge, the brother of our host; a lieutenant in the Royal Navy; and Nis Petersen, an intelligent Danish skipper, who spoke the English language correctly, with a slight foreign accentuation."

It matters, of course comparatively speaking, but little, who, or how many, are the personages that take part in these discussions, or whether they are fictitious, as the "Friends in Council," of Sir Arthur Helps, or real as in the description above given. The merit of the work belongs entirely to the man who writes the book, and that merit is all the more conspicuous the more numerous they are who take part in the discussions.

The subjects are far too numerous, and we may add, far too important to be disposed of in a single notice. We shall confine ourselves, therefore, on the present occasion, to setting forth the leading features of the earlier discussions. The questions touched upon on Monday evening, are the following:—"Spurious Rituals, Origin of Freemasonry, Third Degree and the Royal Arch, The Legend, The Vesica Piscis, The Universal Language, and Masonic Ciphers." We shall refer our readers to the book itself for the different views expressed on the earlier subjects; but the Masonic application of the Vesica Piscis, being, doubtless, less familiar to the bulk of our readers, and being, moreover, a most ingenious theory, cannot fail to prove of interest. This Vesica Piscis contains, we are told, the imperfect outline of a FISH, and was so called from the Greek word Ichthuos, which is an acrostic of the Redeemer—Iesoûs Christòs Theoû Uiòs O Sotèr; whence it became an emblem of Christ, although it had been used geometrically, long before His personal advent into the world." It is added, that this same Vesica Piscis "appertained to the Platonic system, and constituted the sign of recognition amongst the Epopta, by the open hands united with the ends of the fingers, and wrists to touching each other." It also frequently "occurs in the Egyptian temples, and particularly about the throne of Osiris, in reference to the divine triads, and, geometrically represents the birth of Light, Horus, or the Sun, from the wedding of Osiris and Iris." As to its Masonic application, we cannot do better than quote Bro. Gilkes, who explains it thus:—

"We apply it thus," Bro. Gilkes answered. "Our lectures inform us that the three most perfect of all geometrical diagrams are, the equilateral triangle, the square, and the equal hexagon; the latter being a figure produced by carrying the radius of a circle six times round the circumference. And thus the hexagon, being composed of six equilateral triangles, is equal in all its relations, and retains the quality of being infinitely divisible into similar triangles, according to the geometrical projection observed in the divisions of that trilateral figure, and may therefore be considered as the most perfect of all multilateral forms. Of trilateral and quadrilateral figures it is to be observed that none can subsist into symbolical geometry but those which, in their respective lines and angles, bear the relation of equality, or such proportions as may be adequately expressed by some of the numerical terms of the Tetractys, i.e., the numbers 1, 2, 3, 4."

As to the application of the doctrine to the Vesica Piscis, we are told:—

"You shall hear," said Bro. Gilkes. "The Vesica Piscis constitutes the origin and foundation of all those figures, and enters into the composition of almost every Masonic symbol. For instance, the number three refers to the Trinity in Unity, which is represented by a figure that Hemming and Shadbolt have denominated the Pythagorean Triangle. This emblem powerfully elucidates the mystic relation between numerical and geometrical symbols. It is composed of ten points so arranged as to form one great equilateral triangle, and at the same time to divide it into nine similar triangles of smaller dimensions. The first of these is called a Monad, and represents unity, answering to the geometrical point. The next two points are called Duad, answering to the geometrical line, which consists of length without breadth, and is bounded by two extreme points. The three succeeding points are called a Triad, which embodies the idea of length and breadth as abstracted from thickness. The four points at the base of the figure are denominated Tetrad or Tetractys. They bear a similar relation to a solid, which combines the three principles of length, breadth and thickness, inasmuch as no solid can have less than four extreme points of boundary."

A discussion intervenes as to the Pythagorean interpretation of the figure, and its application to Christ, after which Bro. Gilkes resumes:—

"Having disposed of the four primary digits," Bro. Gilkes continued, "we come to number seven, which is the sum of the two last-mentioned numbers, and has evidently more than one reference, from the various ways in which it may be depicted. Thus, for instance, if it be exemplified by triangles, it produces the monogram of God-man, Jesus Christ; the apex pointing upwards denotes His divinity, and that pointing downwards, His humanity. If represented by squares, it produces the polished cubical stone, an emblem of perfection."

He is then invited to explain "the identity between the Vesica Piscis and the Pythagorean science of Numbers, as it is enunciated in our present system of Freemasonry," and accordingly offers the following solution:—

"We were speaking of the cube as a perfect figure in the abstract," Bro. Gilkes continued, "but you will observe, that if it be extended to the extreme circumference of both the circles whose segments form the Vesica, it will produce the double cube, or altar of incense, and include ten points, the sum total of the Pythagorean Triangle; being the sacred number, and denominated amongst Masons the Perfect Ashlar. The Triple Tau, and the Jerusalem Cross include, in like manner, the two circles and Vesica; and contain the dimensions of the Tabernacle and Temple, with the Most Holy naturally and scientifically separated from the Holy Place."

As to the application of Bro. Gilke's theory to the science Freemasonry, that eminent brother remarks:—

"It is allowed on all hands," Bro. Gilkes replied, "that his mysterious figure, the Vesica Piscis possessed an unbounded influence on the details of sacred architecture; and it constituted the great and enduring secret of our ancient brethren. The plans of religious buildings were determined by its use, and the proportions of length, breadth, and height were dependent on it alone."

And again:—

"You have alluded to the form of the Lodge; but this form, whatever may be its dimensions, must be determined in all its varied proportions by the Vesica Piscis. Now, there are in reality only six forms, including the square, already mentioned, that were most commonly used by our ancient brethren, which may be exemplified thus, take any line, M N, for instance, and divide it into twelve equal parts, A to L, and from any two of these, at corresponding distances from the end of a line as centres, describe segments forming the Vesica, until you arrive at the central point, which will, of course produce a perfect circle. The Points of each Vesica, being extended into equal lines parallel to M N, will form a series of oblong squares of various dimensions, with a perfect square in the middle as an elucidation of the central point and circle. Bro. Kerrich asserts, in an interesting paper read before the Society of Antiquaries a few years ago, that the rule by which our ancient brethren adjusted these proportions is a profound secret at the present day; but he thinks it was effected by writing some mysterious word of eleven letters upon it, which possibly might furnish names for them all."

"And you will further observe, that the form of the Lodge has the following properties peculiar to itself. First, that its sides are to each other as the side to the diagonal of a square; and secondly, that if it be bisected by a right line parallel to its shorter sides, the two halves will not only be precisely similar to one another, but each also precisely similar to the whole."

Here we pause for the present, contenting ourselves with remarking that part of this chapter, devoted to the language of Masonry, will be found very interesting, as is likewise the explanation of the ancient Masonic cipher.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—VIGOROUS HEALTH.—With winter comes sore trials to the soundest constitutions, while the naturally delicate and feeble find it so frequently a prolonged struggle against, or under suffering. All diseases affecting the nervous system arise from impurity in the blood, irregularity of organic action, or vitiated secretions. Holloway's Pills are invaluable for removing all poisonous elements from the body, and are famed for curing indigestion, flatulency and restlessness, as well as palpitation, pain in the side, and other morbid feelings. The remedies gain ascendant on the nervous class of diseases so as to yield to these purifying Pills. The sensations of anxiety may diminish under their use, sound sleep superseded nights of watching, and calm repose dispersed hideous dreams.

THE MASON'S VOYAGE AFTER TRUTH.

From the "Canadian Masonic News."

THERE is in every mind a tendency toward knowledge. The reasoning powers of a man are ever active and fruitful, and fitted for generous and enlarged ideas; and it should therefore be our great duty, especially as Masons, to find out our peculiar natural bias, and having discovered it, give it proper culture and polish.

It is undoubtedly the fact that arts and sciences are not, and cannot, in the nature of things, be instantaneously attained; and it is therefore by study, contemplation, diversity of conversation, and an investigation of a variety of objects, that our judgments are correctly informed, so as to enlarge our knowledge of things. These are the great channels by which knowledge is most surely and certainly conveyed, and by which the inward perception of our souls, though variously exercised, forms not only the hero and philosopher, but also the husbandman and the mechanician; and thus arise wisdom, strength and beauty, in magnificent proportions in all our designs. It has been well said, that knowledge and application, or industry, are like two parallel lines, inasmuch as they are always progressive and equi-distant: and though they are both generated by points, may and can be continued without end.

When Cadmus brought out of Phœnicia into Greece the Alphabet, it contained but sixteen letters, and some centuries elapsed before it was perfected to twenty-four; and we find, in the time of David, and part of Solomon's reign most of the Jews were so ignorant of the liberal sciences, that the building of the Temple was mainly owing to the skill and learning of Tyrian workmen, and especially to the superior knowledge and skill of one whose untimely fate we ever commemorate in our Lodges; whose mother was a woman of the daughters of Dan, and whose father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone and in timber; in purple, in blue, in fine linen and in crimson; also to engrave any matter of graving, and to find out every device which might be put to him. This man, Solomon made overseer of all the artists; and that wisest of kings was not ashamed to secure his assistance, or to seek for knowledge wherever it might be found, and to make a proper use and application of it.

This action of Solomon conveys a lesson which ought not to be lost to the observing and reflective mind, that no one should ever presume to think himself perfect in wisdom, but always endeavour to attain higher degrees by every lawful and laudable method; to go step by step in a regular manner as Masons are ever taught, and readily to avail ourselves of all those advantages which the labours and studies of others so liberally afford us.

From considerations such as these, it is apparent that man has a natural right to indulge in speculation, and make researches after truth; but he must bear in mind, the more especially if he be a Mason, that he does so under a restriction, that he does not exercise himself in any enquiries that surpass his faculties, but only in those adapted to his capacity, with an intent to improve to the best advantage whatever he is capable of knowing; by joining in the language both of heaven and earth, and of the whole universe, which, with one common voice, proclaims the glory of our Grand Master on High, who has created nothing in vain, but has established the most exact agreement between every faculty and its object. He has granted somewhat to all our passions; but as the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing; as hunger and thirst, though they are daily gratified, daily return; so this passion—this desire of knowledge—though it is delighted with the discovery of every new truth, yet still it seems to yearn after somewhat further—after a higher perfection—after a happy hereafter—that we may be then perfect in knowledge—that we may then be fully enlightened. Should we at once attempt to trangress this salutary law, we would soon find that in much wisdom is much sorrow, and that he who imprudently endeavours to increase such knowledge increases sorrow.

In nature there is evidently a regular gradation. The brute part of the creation comes nearest the human, and somewhat borders upon it, and though it is not endowed with reason, yet it possesses something approaching it called instinct, the powers of which are variously regulated; but there are certain bounds which it was never known to pass. But man is superior to all, and being endowed by our Grand Master with reasoning powers, and He having afforded us objects enough suited to the power of our faculties, whereby we may exercise all the industry and skill, and parts of the most learned and wise, they ought so to be employed as to make us more happy and contented, using the compass to mark out our ways; the square to direct us in our actions, and the plumb-line to teach us uprightness: whilst with the level we moderate our desires, and make them regular and even.

It is on principles such as these the Masonic society is established; upon regulations based upon these principles it is supported. Founded upon this strong and lasting basis, our speculations become more than a pleasing amusement, by being also a mental improvement, and a practical benefit to ourselves and others. Offices of humanity, benevolence and unanimity are not only hereby deduced, and every social pursuit, not only the justifiable, but likewise the laudable, appears among those who are good men and true; but they continually endeavour also to convince that the works of the Grand Architect of the Universe are great, and that we should know as with a full belief, that not to earth is to be confined our aspirations. In their beauties we luxuriate; with their grandeur we are overwhelmed, and the eye wanders over mountain, hill and dale to a distance still beyond, where, like Jacob in his vision, we hope to arrive by the aid of that theological ladder, extending from earth to heaven, the three principal rounds of which are Faith, Hope and Charity—that faith which admonishes us to have a belief in God—the hope in the existence of an immortality; and that charity which embraces all the human family, and of which we are Masonically taught that the last is the greatest of the three; for though our faith may be lost in sight, and our hope be terminated in fruition; yet our charity will extend beyond the grave—through the boundless realms of eternity.

This is the Mason's voyage after truth.

PROVINCIAL GRAND CHAPTER OF LANARKSHIRE.

THIS Chapter held its annual meeting on Friday, 26th November, in St. Mark's Hall, Glasgow. The Provincial Grand Superintendent, Comp. F. A. Barrow 32°, presiding as P.G.Z., assisted by the following Comps.: W. W. Smith P.G.J. as P.G.H., G. W. Wheeler Z. 73 as P.G.J., J. Halket Z. 113 P.G.T, J. Balfour P.Z. 73, 1st P.G.S., H. J. Shields Z. 143 as 2nd P.G.S., and G. McDonald P.Z. 73 as 3rd P.G.S. A letter of apology was read from the P.G.S.E., stating that, along with the P.G.S.N., he had an engagement out of town. The P.G. Superintendent expressed his hope that a greater interest might be manifested in the proceedings of that P.G.C. by the members in the Province; it looked bad when some of the principal officers were absent, but he was fully determined himself to do all that lay in his power during the coming year to push forward Royal Arch Masonry, and to enable him to devote more of his time to it, he had resigned his office of D.P.G.M. in the P.G.L. of Glasgow. According to the constitution of Scotland, the appointment of the first four officers rested with him, the others were elected by the Chapter, and he trusted only those would be elected who, by their past labours, had proved that they where able and willing to work for the good of the Order in the province, for he conceived provincial honours should not be granted as favours, but as the reward of merit. He had, since he came to the meeting, had some doubt as to the propriety of the choice he had himself made, but trusting this was an exceptional case, he would make the appointments now, reserving to himself the right of revoking them should the duties not be efficiently preformed, and he could not do better than place Comp. Smith in the office of P.G.H., the office of J. he would defer for a few days, and in the meantime re-appoint Comps. McTaggart and Fraser as the two P.G. Scribes. The representatives of the 12 Chapters present would now proceed to elect the other office bearers. The following were afterwards declared duly elected, and with the exception of two, who were unable to be present, were duly installed into their places:—Comps. T. Halket P.G.T., Jas. Balfour P.G. 1st S., G. W. Wheeler P.G. 2nd S., G. McDonald P.G. 3rd S., G. Thallon P.G.C., J. Millar P.G.S.B., J. Dothie P.G.S. of Marks, J. B. Hardie P.G. Janitor. Arrangements having been made for holding the Annual Festival in the month of February, the Provincial Grand Chapter was then closed.

NEW ZEALAND.

AT the annual convocation of the Kilwinning Otago Royal Arch Chapter, No. 116, S.C., the following office-bearers were duly installed in their various chairs:—Comps. Saunders M. Ex. Z., Court Ex. H., R. Greenfield Ex. J., Fergusson Scribe E., Moodie Scribe N., Mills Treasurer, Singer Conductor and 1st Sojourner, Seidelberg 2nd Sojourner, Kidd 3rd Sojourner, Taite R. W. Mark Master, Smith Janitor. The ceremony was ably conducted by M. Ex. Comp. Caldwell, P.G., Superintendent of Royal Arch Chapters in New Zealand, holding under the Supreme Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland, assisted by M. Ex. Comp. Saunders. Amongst the visitors present were Ex. Comps. Eldridge Z., Ex. Joyce H., and Ex. Fordyce J., all of Chapter 844, E.C. After the installation, the Comps. adjourned to the Criterion Hotel, where a pleasant evening was passed, Host Barker catering in his usual excellent style.—Otago Guardian, 29th September.

THE LAST IRISH HARPERS.—The preservation of many of the finest old Irish melodies is due to the late Mr. William Bunting, and originated in this way. The rapid decrease of performers on the Irish harp suggested the idea of assembling the remaining harpers dispersed over the different provinces of Ireland. A meeting was accordingly held at Belfast in 1792, when no more than ten could be collected, to whom liberal premiums were distributed according to their merits. Mr. Bunting was appointed to note down the airs played on the occasion, and cautioned against adding a single note to old melodies which would seem to have passed, in their present state, through a long succession of ages. Though collected from parts distant from each other, and taught from different masters, the harpers always played them in the same keys, and without variation in any essential passage or note. This circumstance seemed the more extraordinary when it was discovered that the most ancient tunes were, in this respect, the most perfect, admitting of the addition of a bass with more facility than such as were less ancient. It was remarked that the instruments used by the harpers were tuned on one uniform system, though the performers on them were ignorant of the principle. A chief motive in convening this feeble remnant of the bards, was to procure purer copies of tunes already known, and to perpetuate a number of other extremely ancient ones, of which no copies existed, and which were, therefore, the more likely to be lost. The ends proposed by this meeting, were highly successful, and given to the world in the various collections put forth by Mr. Bunting.—Leisure Hour.

READING.—The two Lodges in this ancient Town have arranged for a Masonic Ball, to take place on the 5th of January next. We hope to give further particulars in our next publication.

67 BARBICAN, E.C.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

SINCE her return to Windsor Castle, from the Highlands, the Queen has been entertaining a number of distinguished guests, the most important being the Queen of Denmark, the Princess of Wales, and the Princess Thyra. On Wednesday morning the band of the Scots Fusilier Guards serenaded under the windows of Her Royal Highness, it being the anniversary of the Princess's birthday. The town of Windsor too was gay with flags and banners, the bells ringing merrily in honour of the occasion. In the afternoon Her Majesty of Denmark, with the Princess and Prince Leopold, paid a visit to the Albert Memorial Chapel. Among the other visitors to the Castle may be mentioned the Premier, the Earl and Countess of Derby, and the Danish Minister and Madame de Bulow. Of the further progress made by the Prince of Wales in India, we must simply note that his Royal Highness visited Goa, the chief Portuguese possession on the Western coast. He was received by the Governor, who entertained him, and was entertained at a return visit on board the Serapis. He has since arrived at Colombo, Ceylon.

The principal topic of the week, one, in fact, that has almost engrossed the public mind, is the purchase, by the British Government, of the Khedive's shares in the Suez Canal, for the sum of four millions sterling. The importance of this step, whether we look at it merely commercially or from a political point of view, cannot be overrated. Our interests in India are so vast and so important that whatever is done to make them more secure is sure to meet with the approbation of the public. We do not remember a single act of any British Ministry which has been so unanimously endorsed by public opinion. Abroad, of course, there is not the same unanimity, very far from it, indeed. If foreign powers act common-sensibly, they will regard this action of the Disraeli Cabinet as a very natural, if a somewhat extraordinary, step. It is of vital importance that the road to India should be, if not British, at all events, under British influence. As England is now, or at least, when Parliament has ratified the bargain, will be, the holder of nearly one-half of the shares issued, it is clear she will exercise a commanding influence in regulating the traffic. France, of course, feels hurt, if we are to take the majority of French journals as exponents of French public opinion, but this is only natural, considering the scheme of the Suez Canal was planned by a French engineer, and carried out under his auspices. It was, in fact, one of the glories of the French Empire. The Government, however, maintain a descreet silence.

The Wainwright trial is over, and the Court at the Old Baily will no longer witness the indecent struggles of well dressed ladies to gain admission, in order to hear the details of a horrible murder. Henry Wainwright has been found guilty of murder, and sentenced to death, while Thomas Wainwright is pronounced guilty of being an accessory after the fact, and sentenced to seven years' penal servitude. Thus ends one of the most frightful chapters in the annals of English criminal history. Such is the latest illustration of the well known lines of Horace:—

Deserait pede Pœna claudo."

At the Alexandra Palace, the Princess of Wales's birthday was honoured with a special programme, there being a grand concert and an illumination of the Italian Garden. To-day will be given the Oratorio of the Messiah, while the entries for the Doll Exhibition close this week. At the Crystal Palace also, a grand Orchestral Concert was given on Wednesday, to commemorate the auspicious event referred to above, while at to-day's concert will be given Mr. Macfarren's Oratorio of St. John the Baptist. The concerts both at the St James's and the Royal Albert Halls have been likewise held as usual, and the attendance has been satisfatiory to the zealous caterers of music at those well known institutions.

Next week all London will be alive with visitors from the country to see the Cattle Show of the Smithfield Club. The show will be held at the Agricultural Hall, and will be opened on Monday next, remaining open till Friday evening inclusive. Every precaution will be taken to prevent the appearance of any diseased animals among the exhibits. We hope the show will pass off satisfactorily to its promoters.

The weather is certainly wintry. Snow, for some few days has been falling, if not continuously, at all events to a great extent, and just previous the ground, which had been in places more like a swamp, had become as hard as iron, as the saying is. There is no knowing, of course, in this variable climate of ours, for how long this state of things may last, but some one has prognosticated a severe winter. We do not profess to be weather-wise, but at least the prophets have present appearances in their favour. One thing we note, which may be set down as a metropolitan institution almost. Whenever there is a visitation of snow, the streets are invariably in the most miserable condition of slush. On Thursday and yesterday locomotion was attended with the most intense inconvenience. Hansoms, whirling along at rapid pace, sent the mud flying, and it is difficult to imagine a more wretched appearance than London presented on those days. We pride ourselves on being a practical people. Is there no way of avoiding this; no way by which the scavengering could be carried out, so as to effect the minimum of discomfort to those who are compelled, by business, to move about? Of course, when the snow is falling, the difficulty of keeping the road and pathway clear is enormous, but some preventive measures might be adopted.

The 211th Anniversary Festival of the Scottish Corporation, was held on St. Andrew's Day, at Freemasons' Tavern, the Earl of Rosebery presiding, and there being present some four hundred and fifty gentlemen. The subscriptions for the year, as announced by the Secretary, amounted to about £2,000, including contributions from the Queen and the noble Chairman to the extent of one hundred guineas each. The same evening a Scotch Ballad Concert was given at St. James's Hall, in honour of the Patron Saint of Scotland.

An accident has happened to the Duchess of Manchester, who has sustained two fractures in one of her arms. However, the limb has been set, and, according to the latest accounts, Her Grace is progressing favourably towards recovery.

The married life of Mr. John Dolby does not seem to have been a very happy one, to judge from the evidence given on Thursday, in the Divorce Court, before Sir John Hannen. Mrs. Dolby is at present undergoing a term of imprisonment with hard labour, for having assaulted Mr. Dolby, whom she appears to have at divers times and seasons likewise assailed, hurling at him brooms, mallets, and on one occasion, she chased him round the garden, flinging about forty or fifty garden pots at his head. This is by no means a good illustration of connubial bliss.

Abroad, the news that reaches us, chiefly relates to the purchase of the Suez Canal shares; the action of the British Government being variously interpreted by different Governments. The Russians have received a severe check in Central Asia, an insurrection having broken out in Khokand, and more than one detachment of their troops having been cut to pieces. General Kauffman is said to have a force at his disposal just sufficient to protect Russian interests, and no more. A Cabinet Council has been held at Madrid, at which Generals Quesada and Martinez-Campos were also present. It was determined to form two armies, each of five divisions, one in Navarre, under the latter General, and the other in the Basque Provinces, under Quesada. We wish we could see there was some chance of the decisive campaign against Carlism being commenced. There are rumours of changes in the Turkish Ministry, and it is said that the Egyptian troops have occupied a portion of the Territory on the East Coast of Africa, of right belonging to the Sultan of Zanzibar. In America, the Public Health Association has been holding its third annual session at Baltimore, Dr. Joseph M. Toner presiding. The President for the ensuing year will be Dr. Edwin M. Snow, of Providence, Rhode Island, and the Secretary, Elisha Harris, New York. Two Vice Presidents, and an Executive Committee of six members were also elected. It is announced that the next annual meeting will be held at Boston. At Berlin, a general Synod of the Evangelical Church, in the older provinces of the Prussian Monarchy, was held on the 24th ult.

His Imperial Highness Prince Rhodocanakis has been re-elected Grand Master of Greece for a further term of three years, and was installed as such, amid great pomp, on the 26th October.

During the mayoralty of the late Lord Mayor, Bro. D. H. Stone, J.G.W., the supplementary work in the cause of Charity was very heavy. Nearly 100,000 letters and circulars were issued from the Secretary's Office, and the amount collected was £33,926 16s 11d. In recognition of the services of Bro. J. R. S. Vine, the late private Secretary, the members of the Iceland Relief Committee presented him with a very elegant clock, inscribed in Icelandic characters, and he was also presented with a testimonial from the French committee.

SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS.—Shakespeare's Sonnets were first described in his own time—by Francis Meres, in 1598—as his "sugared sonnets among his private friends." They were first published in 1609, seven years before his death, and dedicated by Thomas Thorpe, the Bookseller, to "Mr. W. H.," in words that have sent critics upon many a wild-goose chase. The first description of them was the best, and the best modern editor of Shakespeare, Alexander Dyce, said in the account of Shakespeare prefixed in 1866 to a second edition of his works, "For my own part repeated perusals of the Sonnets have well nigh convinced me that most of them were composed in an assumed character, on different subjects, and at different times, for the amusement, if not at the suggestion of the author's intimate associates (hence described by Meres as his 'sugared sonnets among his private friends'); and though I would not deny that one or two of them reflect his genuine feelings, I contend that allusions scattered through the whole series are not to be hastily referred to the personal circumstances of Shakespeare." This is wholesome truth, and accords with what we have seen of the nature of the sonnet, and the original use of it. As to their structure, Shakespeare's sonnets are not technically true sonnets, but fourteen-lined poems of exquisite variety and beauty, each consisting of three quatrains of alternate rhyme, and a closing couplet.—From "Cassell's Library of English Literature," edited by Professor Henry Morley, for December.

the Royal Installation Jewel, was carried nem con. Upon the business being closed, the brethren adjourned to banquet, and regaled themselves with the good viands the Guildhall Tavern at all times supplies. The toasts of the evening, as a matter of course, were the initiate and the W.M. elect; to both the Master did ample justice, and complimented the great swimmer of the age upon his manly and daring feat. Our gallant Bro., in a brief reply, closed his remarks by saying he was pleased to hail the gentlemen around him as brethren. Bro. Partridge, in acknowledgment, promised to maintain the dignity of the Lodge and carry out the great principles of Masonry in their entirety. There was a very large number of visitors, but space precludes our giving further details, suffice it to say, the whole assembly were highly gratified with the day's proceedings.

Metropolitan Chapter of Improvement.—The regular weekly convocation was held on Tuesday, the 30th ult., under the presidency of the following officers and Companions:—J. Constable M.E.Z., J. W. Green H., J. Noehmer J., J. W. Norris Asst. Scribe E., J. Smith Scribe N., J. W. Gilbert P.S., W. Ramsay as Preceptor. The election of officers for the ensuing fortnight resulted as follow:—J. W. Green M.E.Z., J. Noehmer H., C. Seer J., J. Smith N., J. Constable P.S. The meeting was not so numerous as might be expected, knowing as we do the demand for R.A. Instruction, and the few available Chapters in the Metropolis. The Metropolitan has been in existance for many years, and numbers on its roll hundreds of Companions, as high on the Masonic list as in the social scale. We hope to see the Chapter opened punctually next week at the appointed time (6.30.), and to hear a few of the clauses in connection with the ceremony. The Chapter may be congratulated in having some able workers following the footsteps of Comp. Brett P.G.P. in the persons of Comps. Boyd, Ramsey, Gottheil, Lemann, &c., who are regular in their attendance.

Joppa Chapter, No. 188.—The regular meeting was held on Monday, the 29th ult., at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate Street. Comps. H. M. Levy M.E.Z., M. Emanuel H., M. J. Emanuel J., S. V. Abrahams P.Z. Treas., P. Dickenson S.E., and P.Z.'s E. P. Albert, E. S. Jones, W. Littaur, S. Lazarus, Pollitzer. The Chapter was opened and the minutes of the former meeting were confirmed. The Installation of Principals then took place, and Comp. M. Emanuel who is a P.Z. of the Segontium (Carnarvon), was duly inducted into the chair of Z. by Comp. E. P. Albert P.Z., and the M.E.Z. then very ably installed Comp. M. J. Emanuel into the chair of H., W. Littaur J., and S. V. Abrahams P.Z. Treas., P. Dickenson S.E., L. Lazarus S.N., L. Jacobs P.S. and Smith Janitor, who were severally invested. The newly installed M.E.Z. then showed his proficiency by exalting Bro. Buderus 1298 and Grove Ellis 188 into Royal Arch Masonry in a very perfect and impressive manner; the report of the Audit Meeting was read, it showed that after all debts were paid, there was a balance in hand, and the Treasurer's account showed that during the past year the Chapter had never been in a more flourishing condition, it being free from all liabilities. The M.E.Z. then rose, and said he had much pleasure in presenting Comp. H. M. Levy, on his retiring from the chair, with a very elegant jewel and silver goblet. It shewed their high appreciation of their M.E. P.Z., and it would be a great source of pleasure to him to view the jewels he had so worthily received in the course of his Masonic career. He had always shewn himself a good Mason, and had done good service to the Chapter, and had exerted himself in promoting its interests. It was always a pleasant thing to acknowledge a friend's worth, but it was especially so in this instance. The year had been a successful one, and he had very much pleasure in placing the jewel on Comp. Levy's breast. It might be handed down as a memento of the respect the Chapter held him in. Companion H. M. Levy, in responding, said, "he was deeply indebted to the M.E.Z. for his kind expressions, and regretted he had not done so much for the Chapter during the past year as he had wished. He, nevertheless, had exerted himself in every way in its behalf; but what he had done, he was proud to say, had won their good opinions. He had always had the interests of the Chapter at heart, and would continue to do so. The Chapter had never been in a more flourishing condition: he was sure it would remain so under the able presidency of the M.E.Z." The Chapter was then closed, and the Companions adjourned to the banqueting-room, where a sumptuous banquet was provided by the Albion Tavern Company, superintended by Companion Keeping, that gave great satisfaction. The M.E.Z. then proposed the usual loyal and Royal Arch toasts. The toast of "The newly exalted Companions" was given, and Companions Buderus and Grove Ellis returned thanks. The M.E.Z., in proposing the toast of "The Visitors," said how pleased he felt to see around him Companions whom he, as well as every member of the Chapter, were delighted to meet, and he hoped, on future occasions, they would again honour the Chapter with a visit. The Visitors were—Comps. Captain G. J. Kain M.E.Z. 766, C. Hogard J. 141, W. C. Parsons P.S. 180, H. Massey P.Z. 619, W. Musto 933, and E. M. Haigh 367, who severally returned thanks. The toasts of the M.E.Z., P.Z's, and Officers followed, and the Janitor's toast concluded a very agreeable and harmonious evening, which was contributed to by Companions J. Riley and A. Abrahams.

The first three sections of the first Lecture were worked by Bro. Hickman, who was ably assisted by the brethren, many of whom showed, by the knowledge they exhibited, that their attendances at this popular Lodge of Instruction had produced most beneficial results. The 4th section was rehearsed by Bro. Hickman, in a highly satisfactory way, the questions being asked by Bro. Gottheil. Bros. Bush 185, Sayer 1185 and James Churchward 1139 were elected members. Bro. Ockenden was appointed W.M. for the ensuing meeting, and a cordial vote of thanks to Bro. Nelson Reed, for his conduct in the chair, brought the business of the evening to a close. Smith for his services to the Lodge, not only now, but for years past, Bro. Smith replied, and then presented the Lodge with a 3rd degree maul, which he thought was necessary for the proper working of that sublime degree. The R.W.M., in accepting the gift, said it was not the first they had received from Bro. Smith, and he believed it would not be the last. The Lodge was then placed under the care of the new J.W., and the usual loyal toasts were given from the chair; Bro. G. W. Wheeler, who was called on to respond for English Freemasonry, said he was proud to be a Member under both constitutions, and also glad to own himself an honorary affiliated member of 354; Bro. Read, Master of 466, responded on behalf of the Provincial G.L. of Glasgow; Bro. McKenzie, in an excellent speech, proposed the visitors, and coupled it with the names of the Masters of 87 and 219. Bro. Burns and Morgan both suitably acknowledged the compliment, expressing the gratification they felt on being present. The "Press" was given from the chair, after which Bro. Wheeler proposed Prosperity to 354, coupled with the health of Bro. Shaw, to whom a good deal of that prosperity was attributable, and he thought the Lodge had done wisely in returning him to the chair for the 3rd time. Bro. Shaw replied, and a vote of thanks having been given to Bro. Coutts for his services at the harmonium, the Lodge was closed in peace.

The Secretary then presented the W.M. (in confirmation of a resolution passed at the last regular meeting) with an address, elegantly illuminated on vellum, congratulating him on the occasion of his marriage during his year of office. The W.M., in returning thanks, for this unexpected mark of regard from his brethren, hoped that he would be spared to see the Northern Counties Lodge increase and prosper, and that by every act of his, he would endeavour to retain and deserve the respect and esteem shown to him so practically that night. Subsequently, during refreshment, Bro. Hughes I.P.M., in proposing the health of the W.M., presented him with an elegant marble clock, as a testimonial from a few members of the Lodge, hoping that it would always mark good time and times in his house. Bro. Foulsham P.M., in a most eloquent address, congratulated the Lodge on having a W.M. who had won the goldeen pinions of all who knew him; and also the W.M. in governing a Lodge that knew so well how to appreciate true Masonic worth. Bro. Knox, in returning thanks, was quite overpowered at this further proof of kindness, and although he acknowledged that he had always done his best, still a great deal of his success was due to the zeal of his officers, and the indefatigable help of the P.M.'s. Though one of the youngest Lodges in the province, their progress would compare favourably with that of the oldest and best established, and he wished the youngest member to be entitled to the privilege of eligibility for office at the next meeting. Bro. Shaw R.W.M. of 354 was present, and wished them to pass a candidate for him. He was sure the Lodge would gladly accede to his request, and as he had a very important engagement to attend, he would place Bro. Shaw in the chair, and ask him to perform the second ceremony. Bro. Royal Oak Lodge, No. 871.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, at the White Swan Tavern, High-street, Deptford. Bro. S. C. Lewin W.M., H. J. Tuson S.W., J. J. Pakes J.W., F. Walters P.M. P.G.P. Middlesex, the Treasurer, was unavoidably absent, W. Myatt S.D., J. Baxter Langley J.D., G. T. Simon I.G., and P.M.'s G. Andrews, W. Myatt. The Lodge was opened and the minutes were confirmed. Bro. G. Andrews I.P.M. then raised Bro. J. Croot 1826, by courtesy of the W.M., in a very perfect manner. The Lodge was then closed, and the brethren separated, there being no banquet. The visitors were Bros. J. W. Baldwin W.M. 1423, W.M. Goss S.W. 176, W. T. Lover J.W. 1173, and T. W. Croot 1328.

Kingston Lodge, No. 1010.—The installation of Bro. William Hunt P.M. P. Prov. G.D.C. Devon, as Worshipful Master of the Kingston Lodge, No. 1010 of Free and Accepted Masons, took place on Wednesday afternoon, in the presence of a large assemblage of brethren, including a number of present and past officers of the Hall and other Lodges in the district. The ceremony was performed in accordance with the ancient usages of the Craft by the W. Bro. John Pearson Bell M.D., Past Grand Deacon of England, and D.P.G.M. of North and East Yorkshire, who was most heartily welcomed by the brethren on this his first appearance amongst them since his recent and severe indisposition. He was ably assisted in the delivery of the charges by Bro. E.W. Garforth, Immediate Past Master of the Lodge, and Bro. S. Walliker officiated as Director of Ceremonies, while Bro. Dr. Pybus P.M. presided at the organ. Bro. Hunt having been installed, he proceeded to invest his officers for the ensuing year, as follow:—

The annual banquet took place at the Royal Station Hotel, where a large company assembled under the presidency of the Worshipful Master, Bro. Hunt, who was supported by the W. Deputy Prov. Grand Master and installing officers, Bros. Alderman Charles Wells P.M. (ex-Mayor), Ald. J. L. Linton P.M., Lewis Heath, J. Fraser Holden P.M. P.G.S.D., T. Sissons P.M. Prov. Grand Regis., R. E. Harrison P.M., H. Haigh P.M., M. S. Moseley P.M. P.P.G.J.W., F. Summers (ex-Sheriff), Dr. Wallis, James Pybus P.M., Paul Strömer P.M., Copland P.M., R. Vivian P.M., J. Hudson P.M., John Thompson P.M., E. W. Garforth I.P.M., W.M.'s of the Humber, Minerva and Alexandra Lodges. The vice chairs were filed by the Wardens of the Lodge, and Dr. J. H. Gibson officiated as Director of Ceremonies. The customary Loyal and Craft toasts having been duly honoured, the latter being acknowledged by the W. Deputy Prov. Grand Master, the W.M., Bro. Hunt proposed the "Mayor and Corporation," which was enthusiastically received. Bro. Alderman Wells suitably responded, and in turn proposed, in eulogistic terms, "The Worshipful Master of the Kingston Lodge," the toast being received with loud and prolonged applause. Bro. W. Hunt, in acknowledging the compliment paid to him, thanked the brethren most heartily for the warm and cordial manner in which they had been pleased to receive the proposal made by his Worshipful Bro., Alderman Wells. He felt exceedingly gratified at being placed in the honourable position he now occupied. It was nearly a quarter of a century since he became a Freemason, after some little thought and enquiry into the subject; and he confessed he was more influenced in that step by an acquaintance with several good and esteemed friends, who were Masons, than by anything he could learn or preconceive as to the principles of the Craft. (Hear, hear). He knew, some good men in whose footsteps he felt he should be proud to tread: and during the period he had been a Mason, he had reason to be thoroughly satisfied with the step he then took. He had filled several offices in connection with his own Lodge in another Province, of which, 18 years ago, he was elected to fill the chair of worshipful master (spp.) He had also, he hoped, done some little service to the province to which he belonged, inasmuch as he was one of the original promoters of a fund which now maintained from 12 to 14 annuitants. In looking back upon his progress and path in life as a Mason, he did not feel that he had any great reason for regret, except that he had not attained to that excellence that he might have done, and of which a Mason was capable. He felt that, in Masonry, they had an institution worthy of admiration, for several reasons. It had been mentioned with pride and satisfaction that day, at a meeting of the Subscription Library, that that institution had existed for 100 years. Now Masonry has existed more than a century, and therefore it is to be admired on account of its age. It is also an excellent institution from its Catholicity (Hear, hear.) In this world, and in this country, men were divided into all kinds of sects and parties, both religious and political; and it really was most refreshing when they could all meet on a common platform, separated from the conflicting influences of partisanship: and where all men were equal. Not only did this grand principle prevail in this our country, but it extended universally all over the world, wherever the brethren met. (Applause.) He might briefly say, that the distinction which had been conferred upon him this day, by his brethren of the Kingston Lodge, is no occasion of personal honour to himself, inasmuch as he had been a P.M. before. But, during the twelve years he had been in Yorkshire, he had felt that he should like to take some active part in Masonry in this Province. (Applause.) Transplanted from his own beautiful county of Devonshire, into this grand and magnificent county of Yorkshire, he felt he should like to do something for the promotion of the interests of the Craft here. (Applause.) He, therefore, thanked them most heartily for the honour which they had this day conferred upon him. (Cheers.) Bro. T. Sissons, Provincial Grand Registrar, then gave the health of the Immediate Past Master, Bro. E. W. Garforth, though comparatively a young Mason, he had worked hard to qualify himself for the office he had held, with so much credit to himself and benefit to the Lodge, and his willingness, at all times, to forward the interests of the Craft entitled him to the warmest thanks of the brethren. (Applause.) Bro. E. W. Garforth I.P.M. in responding said, when the brethren selected him to fill the high and honourable position he had just vacated, he determined, so far as his ability and health would allow, to make himself efficient. He had tried to do so, and if his humble efforts had met with the approval of the brethren, and had tended in any way to the progression of the Lodge, he was amply repaid for any time and trouble he had expended in it. (Loud applause.) It is a great satisfaction to himself, being so young a Mason, to occupy the position of a Past Master of the Craft. And let him, as a word of encouragement, say to the young brethren present, that if they laboured to make themselves efficient, they must, sooner or later, reap the reward; and, by so doing, they would also promote the welfare of the Lodge to which they belonged. (Hear, hear.) He should be ungrateful, indeed, were he to pass over those who had been intimately associated with him in the conduct of the affairs of the Kingston Lodge. He had been well supported by good officers, to whom he was most thankful for the assistance and consideration they had at all times extended to him. They must pardon him if he appeared invidious, but he felt bound to single out one Past Master, Bro. Paul Strömer, who, in his unavoidable absence, had filled the principal chair, and had so ably supported him when he had been present. (Applause.) He must also give a due meed of praise to their worthy Secretary, Bro. James Kay, who had never been reluctant to give his valuable time and exertions to assist in promoting the interests of the Lodge. (Applause.) He trusted that Bro. Hunt would continue to receive the cordial and hearty support of all his officers, and that his year of office might be both an agreeable and a successful one. (Cheers.) The Worshipful Master proposed the "Sister Lodges," the toast being acknowledged by Bro. Jonathan West, W.M. of Humber Lodge, No. 57; and Bro. John Brooke, Prov. J.D., and W.M. of Minerva Lodge, No. 250. Bro. C. H. Johnson S.W. then gave "The Visiting Brethren," on whose behalf Bro. Thos. Oates, W.M. of Alexandra Lodge, No. 1511, responded. Various other toasts were given, and the proceedings were enlivened with some excellent songs, glees, &c. Bro. C. H. Hunt, presiding efficiently at the pianoforte.

A vote of thanks was then passed to the W.M., for his very able working of the fifteen sections, for which Bro. Baker replied; also to the visiting brethren, for their kind and valuable assistance, for which Bros. Coulton and Rogers returned thanks. The Lodge was then closed. We may here state that the whole of the sections were worked with great accuracy; this reflects the greatest credit on those who assisted.

description. Bros. Adams P.G.P., Willing P.M., and Stiles were unanimously re-elected Preceptor, Treasurer and Secretary respectively. A cordial vote of thanks was given to these brethren for their very efficient services during the past year. Bro. Adams P.G.P. Preceptor, in reply said, that this being a young Lodge, he congratulated the members upon the reputation in which it was held, he had frequently been complimented for the knowledge displayed by the brethren in their several offices, and that while they continued to support him by their attendance and application, his best services were at their disposal. He hoped to be able to say so for the next fifty years. Bro. Willing P.M. Treasurer, in thanking the brethren, referred to the great success the Lodge had attained. He felt sure that while the able services of Bro. Adams were so efficiently given, the Lodge must continue in its prosperity, and be recognised throughout the Craft, for its correctness of working, and for the rapid development of the genuine principles of Freemasonry. He might add, that since the foundation of the Lodge, the brethren had so harmoniously worked together, that he felt convinced many happy friendships had occurred, and that while they had the good services, practical knowledge, courteous behaviour, and unvarying attendance of their worthy Secretary, the Lodge must continue in the path of prosperity. Bro. W. M. Stiles, Secretary, said he was gratified to hear that his humble services as Secretary for the past year were so cordially approved by the brethren. He had fulfilled his duties to the best of his abilities, and they had honoured him by re-electing him. He should willingly strive to continue in their good favour by promoting the comfort and happiness of the brethren, and the interests of the Lodge. He also wished to call attention to Bro. Adams's ball, which was announced to take place at Willis's Rooms, in February next, and he hoped the Lodge, to which he was proud to belong, would be well represented there. It was then arranged that the first Anniversary Banquet of this Lodge of Instruction be held, under the presidency of Bro. Jas. Willing jun. I.P.M. 1507, and J.W. 177, on Friday, the 28th January, at 6.30 p.m., at the Metropolitan Club, Tickets 6s each. Bros. Adams, Michael, Kingham, Douglas, Soles, Side, Stand, Berrie, Rapkin, Read, and Saintsbury, were appointed Stewards, and Bro. W. M. Stiles Hon. Secretary. Lodge closed in due form, with solemn prayer.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 112 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Hall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

VANITAS VANITATUM.

IT is astonishing the perverse obstinacy which many brethren show in the matter of jewellery. We presume there is a certain littleness in the minds of some men, which, even when they become Masons, the grand principles of our Order are incapable of wholly eradicating. For the life of us, we cannot see why men should bedeck themselves with so much glittering tinsel, as though the more they wore of it the abler and more useful did they become as members. Jewellery becomes a woman; or to be more truthful, and at the same time more gallant, it is the "female form divine" which alone can set off the brilliance of the gems with which custom permits her to adorn herself. It is even questionable in the minds of many, if a woman is not more charming to the eye the more she relies for effect on her own beauty of form and face—unaided by the glitter of gold and priceless gems. It has been said that—"Beauty unadorned 'a adorned the most," but be this as it may, there cannot be a doubt, that for a man to cover his fingers with rings innumerable, and his breast with all kinds of showy stars and crosses—unless, of course, they have been conferred upon him for honourable services to his country or his kind—is an egregious folly, evincing a pettiness of mind which is little else than contemptible. And if the proposition hold good with regard to profane men, à fortiori, does it hold good of Masons, who unite in one common brotherhood for the good of man, not for individual show. We are told indeed, at the very outset of our Masonic career, that the simple badge of Masonry is more honourable than the noblest and most ancient Orders of Knighthood. This being so, the love of finery, to which so many give rein, is the more surprising. Jewels that are honourably won in the course of Masonic duty may be worn with honour. These, in truth, we have not in our mind at the moment of writing. It is the multiplication of Masonic badges and emblems to which we so strenuously object. It is the wearing of un-authorised jewels against which we protest. One of our correspondents some time since described one of these peccant brethren as having the breast of his coat covered with a mass of jewels, only three of which he was entitled to wear. The rest were, in fact, a mere trade advertisement, he being, if we remember rightly, a jeweller by trade. Again there has been a controversy raging as to the right of Master Masons, to wear the five-pointed star, this being affirmed to be the jewel emblematic of their rank. We have failed to discover any valid authority in support of this view, and we imagine, were the right established, beyond all doubt, that every brother, when raised to the third degree, would be formally decorated with this badge, just as he is with the simpler one he is indubitably entitled to wear. This, by the way, however. The point we are driving at is, not so much the wearing of a single jewel, about the propriety of wearing which there may, perhaps, be some doubt, but the far more blazing question, whether it shall be permitted brethren to bring ridicule, and, it may be, contempt, on our Order, merely in order to gratify their own inordinate vanity.

It must be in the experience of all our readers that when, in private society, a man appears with a whole array of rings and studs and links about him, he would perhaps prefer to be deaf to the comments that are made, and made not always as silently as they might be. We laugh at the ignorant savage who childishly, as we imagine, adorns himself with feathers and beads, nose-rings and anklets. Why, then, should we, as Masons, who profess to have legitimate and praiseworthy ends in view, whose aim is to promote the welfare of man, why should we give way to such silly vanities? It is not so long since Grand Lodge issued a circular against the wearing of unauthorised jewels. It rests, of course, with the W.M. of each Lodge to enforce strict obedience to this circular, and if these do their duty, there will soon be a disappearance of all such silly display. At all events, it will not be outwardly offensive to discipline and good taste.

MASONIC PORTRAITS (No. 6).

THE CRAFTSMAN.

THE architectural profession is just now passing through one of those periodical revolutions which, when they come, must sorely trouble the minds of those who have no genius to grapple with the new problems which such revolutions always present for solution. The present is a period of unparalleled activity in the building trades; London is rapidly being rebuilt in solid stone. Magnificent public buildings are rising around us, and the Cockney may fairly be proud of the grandeur of the capital. The Gothic revival has done much to improve the taste of the masses, and architects are slowly learning to understand the principles of this the most plastic of all the styles. Much has been done for architecture by such critics as Ruskin, who has made Continental Gothic familiar to the untravelled Englishman. The renaissance is falling into disrepute so far as church architecture is concerned, but for public buildings, for secular purposes, it still holds its ground. The new Foreign Office is a notable example of this style, and the great Meat and Poultry Markets, in Smithfield, are also admirable examples of the mixed Italian and Classic, adapted to strictly utilitarian purposes. If modern Freemasonry concerned itself with the practical business of the architect and the builder, it might possibly happen that the skilled handicraftsman would of necessity carry off all the highest honours of the fraternity. Many distinguished architects are Masons, but happily the great truths of speculative Masonry may be acquired by those who have not specially studied the arts of construction. We are, at this moment, thinking of a brother whose image we desire to transfer to our canvas; but, although he is an architect who has made a name for himself, we do not think that he has specially distinguished himself in Freemasonry. To many of our readers he is doubtless well-known, and if we were to describe his burly figure, or his peculiarities of manner and speech, we should not find it necessary to give any further clue to his name and titles. They would at once recognise a familiar acquaintance whose presence in the Lodge room we have of late missed. In the City he holds a position which, if his talents were less conspicuous than they are, would entitle his opinion upon any point of his profession to some weight. He has held a distinguished place in the Society of British Architects, and it has been his fortune to erect some remarkable public buildings which will hand down his name to a remote posterity. The magnificent markets in Smithfield were erected from his designs; and, although his tastes run in the direction of the Classic rather than the Gothic, he erected the Guildhall Library (a most beautiful building) in the latter style; and some years since he successfully restored the Guildhall itself, a fine example of the architecture of the thirteenth century. Such public services as these would be sufficient to render any man famous amongst his fellow citizens. Even in these days of progress and of reconstruction, it does not fall to the lot of many members of the architectural profession to build such vast national monuments as the Meat and Poultry Markets. Many a man who is obliged to hide his genius in the shade would be glad of an opportunity to try his powers upon a work of national importance, but the dreamers who build castles upon no better foundation than a drawing board, are not always the persons to make good practical architects. Architecture, indeed, is the most tentative of all the arts. A design which looks well on paper may prove a failure when it is realised in solid brick and stone, and the man who does not know how to alter and amend as the building is rising before his eyes, is not deserving of the name of an architect. Our hero is a man of practice. He possibly cares little for the theories of mere archæologists, and strives, in all his works, to adapt the means to the end. His wide studies have embraced engineering as well as architecture, and his designs for the widening of London Bridge are universally admitted to be admirable. If the Bridge must be widened, our worthy brother's plan is the best that can be conceived, but we greatly fear that the suggested alterations will not cure the evil, and we shall not be sorry if this admirable scheme is shelved, and a new channel of communication opened below the Tower. In all the various relations of life our brother is popular. He is not a diner-out, and does not care much for the festive board, but in his own home he is a genial host, and in his business relations he is thoroughly honourable and straightforward. His integrity as an official is almost proverbial, and his grasp of all the details of his duties is profound. He is much more ready with his pencil than he is with his tongue, and he would possibly much rather prepare a sketch plan of a building than make a speech, or offer a mere business explanation of his designs. It is not often that a man of action and genius can manage to shine as an orator. It is no reproach to our worthy brother to say that he does not possess the gift of speech. Nature, which has bestowed so many gifts upon him, has withheld this, the most fascinating of her treasures; but true art, which is always contemplative, does not often need the assistance of oratory, it speaks for itself, and in a language which is universally understood.

Our worthy brother naturally is not disposed to rest upon his laurels. He is fully conscious that he has further renown to win. It it will be his fortune to add a Vegetable Market to the magnificent range of buildings in Smithfield. A splendid Council Chamber for the Corporation will shortly be erected from his designs, and it may some day or other be his fate to rebuild the City of London School upon a new and more convenient site. In the execution of these new works we can only wish him God speed, and ultimate success We may, indeed, venture to express a hope that he will find time amid the serious duties of his office, to devote some attention to the claims of Freemasonry. A great architect should be ambitious to distinguish himself in the Lodge room. His practical knowledge should enable him to give point to those grand speculative truths which are the glory of our Order.

PRICES AND THEIR FLUCTUATIONS.

THE enormous advances in price of nearly every article of domestic and general use during the last quarter of a century have given rise to much discussion, and will, probably, furnish a fruitful ground of controversy and speculation for many years to come. From the earliest times, since money has been coined, prices have been subject to fluctuations, owing to the greater or less scarcity of the articles of purchase, or the greater or less scarcity of the medium of exchange. When coal is plentiful and easy of access, it is cheap, and in proportion as it becomes scarce and difficult to obtain, it becomes dear. In like manner, where gold, the principal medium of exchange, is plentiful, as at the gold diggings, it causes everything else to rise in price, and where there is but little of it in circulation, prices are low. The present almost general rise in prices is attributable to the recent remarkable gold discoveries, which have had the effect of lowering very considerably the value of the precious metals. Since the discovery of gold in California and Australia, the quantity of gold in use in the world has been nearly doubled; and this has led to readjustments of prices, both of commodities and labour, throughout the civilised world.

If we refer to past history for a parallel to this, we find at least one instance of a rise in prices as general and of even greater magnitude, The conquests of the Roman empire added so enormously to the wealth of Italy that from about the date of the accession of Augustus a most remarkable rise in prices commenced, which continued without interruption until about the end of the fourth century. A variety of other circumstances contributed to this rise, the principal being the debasement of the coinage as practised by some of the Emperors. The effect of all these circumstances was inevitable. In the reign of Domitian, prices had reached an enormous pitch. Beef was only to be had at a price equivalent to 7/ per English pound of the present day, whilst Pork and the better kinds of sea-fish fetched 10/6 per pound. The Sybarite who indulged in luxuries in those days had to pay as much as £5 or £6 for a plump goose, and £8 for a pheasant. Peas, beans, lentils and millet cost from 32/ to 64/ per English peck, and some kinds of fruit even reached very high prices. The price of citrons varied from 10/6 to 16/ each, whilst Damascus plums could only be had at the rate of about eight for half-a-crown. Melons would be about 1/, and Pomegranates about 6d a piece. A modest pint flagon of the commonest beer cost 10d, and the better class of beer, the "Bass's bitter" of those days, fetched 1/8 per pint. The cheapest wine was 1/4 per pint, the best about 10/ per pint. Clothes were not much dearer than at present, except boots, which could not be got for less than from 50/ to 80/ per pair. Of course salaries and wages were high in proportion. An agricultural labourer would earn as much as 16/ per day, a stone-mason 30/, and a wall-painter from £2 to £2 10/ per day. The lawyer's fee of those days was £6 8/8 instead of 6/8 as at present, and no advocate would attend the hearing of a case under about £30. The standard of wealth altogether must have been very much higher then than now. Seneca, the philosopher, is reported to have died worth two millions and a half sterling, and instances are given in history of single repasts for which the amount of a modern fortune was expended.

From the beginning of the fifth century, however, the tide began to turn. Mining operations had for the most part ceased, and gold began to get scarcer. The fall seems to have been as rapid and even more decided than the rise. In King Alfred's time, an entire ox could be had for 7/, a cow for 6/2, a pig for 1/10½, a sheep for 1/2, and a goat for 4½d. The three most expensive animals were horses, asses, and MEN, but one of each might be had for the sum of five GUINEAS; the price of a man being £2 16/3, of a horse £1 15/2, and of a donkey 14/1.

Tradition, of a more or less reliable character, affords us some interesting statistics as to the wages received by the various classes of operative masons in olden time. It would be interesting on some future occasion to endeavour to collect these statistics, but we fear the task would be extremely difficult. The ancient members of the Craft were, unfortunately, not much given to placing on record any facts relating to their occupation or their Order; and much even that has been recorded has been lost or destroyed.

THE HISTORICAL PICTURE.

We understand that the success of the Great Historical Engraving of the Installation of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales is now assured. The Artist, Brother E. J. Harty, has received the highest possible patronage. Amongst the latest subscribers are the King of Sweden and the Swedish Deputation of five of his Nobles, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and the Irish Deputation, the Baroness Burdett Coutts, the King of the Belgians, and the King of Greece. Other Royal and distinguished personages will shortly be added to the list. We learn that the period for the insertion of portraits of those who were present at this interesting ceremony will shortly close, the Engraver being under contract to finish the plate at an early date. Brethren who are qualified should lose no time in communicating with Bro. Harty, whose address they will find in another column. We do not doubt that the picture will prove to be the most interesting Masonic souvenir, without exception, that has ever been published.

MASONIC STUDIES.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The highly suggestive articles on this subject which appears in your last impressions, wherein many of our Masonic shortcomings are admirably and accurately sketched, and their remedies pointed out, induces me to offer a few observations on the same theme, and to venture to again lift the mirror and endeavour to "see ourselves as others see us." The truly earnest and intelligent Mason has to bear many humiliations, and often suffers a kind of martyrdom; how frequently is he doomed to sit and listen to the scandalous outrages committed upon the beautiful rituals of the Order, murdered before his very eyes, powerless to lend a helping hand, and prevented by propriety from rushing to the rescue? Is it not distressing to contemplate that, year after year, some Lodges will select a brother to take charge of affairs who possesses no sort of real Masonic knowledge, and whose claim to their suffrages consists, perhaps, in being a "decent kind of a fellow," or, which is oftener the case, is deemed qualified on account of seniority. It may safely be asserted that, as a general rule, indifference holds sway on occasions of elections, and but little thought is bestowed upon the probable abilities or fitness for the post of the one to be elected. But what is more humiliating, and worthy of the most earnest protest, is the election to the highest honour the Lodge can bestow upon any of its members of a brother who, however deserving of esteem in all other respects, has never grasped even the rudiments of education, and is consequently incapable of expressing, much less appreciating, the great and important lessons which devolve upon him, as the head of the Lodge, to teach. It is true, such men often deliver what they have to say with considerable fluency, but, parrot-like, heedless alike of common sense meanings or grammatical accuracy, and were it not for the solemn thoughts the ceremonials inspire, would often be ludicrous enough, and give plenty of exercise to the risible faculties, especially as is but too frequent in such cases where there is a redundancy in the use of the letter H, or when that most unfortunate and strangely abused member of the alphabetical family receives the "cut direct," and its existence is entirely ignored. Adjourning to the banquet table, its genial influences are productive of affectionate sentimentality, leniency in criticism, and strong inclinations to overlook the glaring faults which, but awhile ago, had been the means of calling forth torrents inexpressible. Returning thanks to the toast so kindly proposed, confidence is expressed that the prosperity of the Lodge is bound to be safe and secure under such Mastership, and boiled words of admiration are uttered in honour of the Master's performances. Now, to say nothing of the notorious untruths issuing from lips which ordinarily would scorn to speak that which was false—the practice of such transparent deceptions must eventually prove inimical to the best interests of the Craft. The reading of Lodge and Chapter reports which periodically appear in Masonic organs would lead one to imagine that skill and efficiency is the rule, and mediocrity and obtuseness the exception, whereas experience of facts prove just the opposite. There are numerous other evils with which the body Masonic is afflicted, crying aloud to be remedied. I must not, however, trespass further upon your space.

Yours fraternally,

E. GOTTHEIL.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

'The Discrepancies of Freemasonry. Examined during a week's gossip with the late celebrated Bro. Gilkes and other eminent Masons, on sundry obscure and difficult passages in the Ordinary Lodge Lectures, which, although open questions in Grand Lodge, constitute a source of doubt and perplexity to the Craft. By the Rev. G. Oliver D.D., Past M.P.S., Grand Commander S.G.I.G. 33° for England and Wales; Past D.G.M. of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts; Past D.P.G.M. for Lincolnshire; Honorary member of numerous Lodges and Literary Societies in every quarter of the Globe. Author of "The Revelations of a Square," "The Book of the Lodge," "Historical Landmarks," &c. With numerous diagrams. London: John Hogg and Co., Paternoster-row. 1875.

SECOND NOTICE.

On Tuesday the discussion is resumed, and, having regard to the progress the Order had made of late years, it is urged that improvements in the ritual, without in the slightest degree disturbing ancient landmarks, might be introduced. It is argued that during eighty years of the last century, no less than seven or eight new rituals appeared, "each being an improvement on its predecessor, with a few exceptions, and each receiving the sanction of the Grand Lodge." Since then, comparatively speaking, little has been done to improve the lectures. Here, again, a contrast is shown between the conduct of the Order in the United States and England, greatly to the advantage of the former. We read:—

"The several Grand Lodges are engaged in an amicable contest, which shall carry out with the most beneficial effect the best interests of the Order; and hence we find nothing in Masonry, as it is practised there, to condemn, but much to commend. They do not waste their time in talking; the debates upon all speculative questions being left to the several committees—what you call Boards, each of which has its own peculiar department. To one is entrusted the supervision of credentials; to another the settlement of grievances; to others the management of ways and means, of accounts, charters, and dispensations; charity; pay roll; accounts of delegates; foreign correspondence; unfinished business; and private details. The Grand Lodges have merely to determine on their reports, which are usually found to be drawn up with so much judgment and discrimination as not to be susceptible of any hostile opinion; and hence the members of Grand Lodges are seldom in collision with each other."

In reply to a question, how it is "the brethren in the United States work better than ourselves?" the Skipper, who is responsible for the foregoing exposition, explains:—

"The Grand Lodges emulate the glory of rendering the practice of Masonry worthy the patronage of serious and scientific men. The establishment of a correct method of lecturing occupies much of their time. Rituals are drawn up, examined by special committees, and published under sanction; and lecturers are nominated to visit the private Lodges under each jurisdiction, for the purpose of preserving the strictest uniformity of rites, ceremonies, and mode of working."

The other advantages which the Craft possesses in the United States, in the shape of an excellent and well-supported press, we alluded to separately last week. We need say nothing more here, but we may take this opportunity of pointing out a shortcoming we noticed in connection with the Pythagorean Triangle, a conspicuous illustration of which occurs at p. 135. In comparing Masonry in London and in Ohio, the advantage is greatly in favour of the latter. Now we expressed our opinion that the publishers had wisely decided to leave the text of Dr. Oliver untouched. At the same time we suggested it would have been better to have added explanatory foot notes, translations, &c., where desirable. In the present instance Ohio is taken as having a population of "about a million of souls, or 200,000 male adults;" and there are said to be "100 Lodges and more than 2,000 Masons, or one in every 100 males." On the other hand, London with a far greater population has "only about half the number of Lodges, which contain under 1,500 brethren." The note appended to this is as follows; "This conversation took place many years ago." Now at the expenditure of a few pence, and with a mere modicum of time devoted to statistical researches, "the publisher's note" might have given the present state of Masonry in Ohio and London; and the reader would then have known whether there was still the same difference in favour of Ohio now as when Dr. Oliver wrote this work, or whether the difference had been increased or lessened. The publishers, of course, know their own interests best, better, at all events, than we do, and if the trumpery outlay that must have been incurred were worth saving, why, it was worth saving. Had we had the publication of this work entrusted to us, we should have left Dr. Oliver's work intact. At the same time we should have thought it due to his memory, and to his eminent literary services, to incur the expense of adding a few explanatory notes wherever it seemed desirable. However, we quit this subject, and pass once again to the Discussions. The qualification questions, arranged in the form of Triads, is very ingenious. We next come to the derivation of the word "Lewis," with which, no doubt, our readers are familiar. The French ceremony of adoption or application of a Lewis, which they derive from Louvecean or Louiton, is worth quoting. The Skipper is the spokesman, and he describes it thus:

"On the birth of a male child, if the father, being a Master Mason, is desirous that it should be formally adopted by the Lodge, and received as a Lewis, he makes his request to the Venerable—what you call W. Master—by petition; and an especial Lodge is convened for the purpose of carrying the wishes of a worthy brother into effect. The Lodge-room is profusely decorated with garlands of flowers, and the censers are replenished with fresh incense. At the time appointed, the infant is brought by its nurse into the anteroom, and the Lodge is opened. After some preliminary ceremonies, the wardens, who act as sponsors for the child, are deputed, with the father, and some others, to introduce it, and when the procession arrives in the east, it halts under an arch of flowers, and the W.M. demands their business. The S.W. replies, that they have ventured to introduce to his notice the newly-born son of a brother who is a Master Mason, and pray that it may be adopted by the Lodge as a Lewis, which includes the privilege of initiation at the age of eighteen years, of which, indeed, this is the first stage. The Venerable then asks the child's name, and what Masonic appellation is intended to be conferred upon him; to which inquiry the S.W., in the character of godfather, replies, by stating the surname preceded by a Christian name, which expresses some Masonic virtue, as wisdom, fortitude, justice, &c., in the hope that it may influence the infant's future life and character. Descending the steps of the pedestal, he puts up a prayer for the welfare of the child—the incense is kindled—the O.B. of an E.A.P. is tendered to the S.W. on behalf of the Lewis, and his Masonic name is publicly proclaimed, amidst the acclamations of the brethren. A minute is made of the proceedings, and a circumstantial report, drawn up and signed in open Lodge by all the brethren, is presented to the father of the Lewis, as a certificate of the child's inauguration. And the novice, thus purified, is bound in after-life to bear the burden and heat of the day when his parent, borne down by age and infirmity, is incapable of providing for himself."

Readers of Clavel's Histoire Pittoresque will remember the description given by that eminent writer as bearing out the above.

The discussion then turns to the study of Masonry, in the course of which the author gives, at random, sundry Masonic aphorisms, and also insists on the establishment of a purely Masonic press. As we made this latter question the subject of a separate article last week, we need not refer to it at any length. We may remark, however, it is insisted that a Masonic magazine "should contain nothing but Masonry," and the very small amount of Masonic matter in the Freemason's Magazine, published in 1793, and few years following, is assigned as the reason why its career was so brief. We have often ourselves wondered how a professedly Masonic periodical should have contained so small a proportion of Masonry, and we feel that a review or magazine, appearing, it may be quarterly or monthly, should be wholly Masonic; but we see no objection to a weekly, like our own, or other journals we could name, containing a modicum of profane news. The concluding subject which is dealt with on this second evening is Freemasonry and Templarism, for the brief comments on which, we refer our readers to the book itself.

On the third evening the points discussed are, "The Cardinal Points. The North. Support of the Lodge. Charge of Son Worship. Birth of Light. Free and Accepted." It will not, of course, surprise those of our readers who are at all acquainted with Dr. Oliver's works to learn that the learned Doctor introduces a favourite theory of his, and endeavours here, as he has done elsewhere, to treat Freemasonry as a purely Christian institution. What degree of success may be said to attend his efforts on this occasion we shall leave the reader to decide for himself. It is sufficient for us to say that his arguments display a considerable amount of skill and ingenuity. Many Masons, no doubt will demur to the learned Doctor's view, but we see no objection to it from a Christian point of view, in so far at least as this. Every Christian believes that his religion will, in the fulness of time, be the one religion professed of all mankind. There will then be neither irreligion nor any difference of religion. Thus Masonry, being a morality based on religion, will rest on an essentially Christian basis. As it is, the most important requisite in every candidate for admission into the Order is, that he have faith in one Omnipotent being, whom we designate as T.G.A.O.T.U., but the fashion, so to speak, of that belief is left to the individual. Hence wisely has it been ordained that all religious disputations shall be excluded from the Lodge. Thus the floor of the Lodge is not only Holy Ground, on which none but men who believe in a God may lawfully and conscientiously assemble, but a common ground for the assemblage of religious men, whatsoever the fashion of their creed may be.

At page 200, is another illustration of that oversight to which we have already more than once referred, in not having had the text of Dr. Oliver carefully supervised. By "The Charter of Colne," we presume is meant the Charter of Cologne, or, if written as the Germans write it, "of Cöln," especially as the date given, 1535, is the date of that spurious charter. We hardly imagine a scholar, as Dr. Oliver was, would have written "Colne" for "Cologne." Had the revision of proofs been entrusted to some one who was a scholar, as well as a Mason, this egregious error would never have been passed unnoticed.

On Thursday the venue is changed, and the party assemble at the doctor's residence, and there discuss "Universality. Extent of the Lodge. Freemasonry, an open institution. Whether it be sectarian? Ground and covering of the Lodge." To the Universality of Masonry, the learned author takes exception, and his arguments are very clear and very subtle. The discussion on this point is very interesting, and is enlivened moreover, by sundry extracts from old and disused rituals. As a quotation or two would fail to convey a just idea of the merits of the argument, we must leave our readers to judge for themselves.

The remarks we intend offering on the two remaining discussions we shall reserve till next week, as we fear we have already exceeded the space at our command, and the last third of the volume is quite as full of important matter as the two-thirds we have thus far examined and commented on.

Kalender für Freimaurer auf das Schaltjahr, 1876. Bro. C. Vo

DALEN. Sechzehnter Jahrgang. Leipzig: Verlag von J. G. Findel. 1876.

THIS is a useful publication; invaluable, indeed, to our German brethren, who will not fail to appreciate the excellence of Bro. Van Dalen's work. It is capitally printed, methodically arranged, and contains the latest, and, doubtless, all the most authentic information respecting the Order in Germany. The officers of the several Grand Lodges, with the names of the representatives from foreign Grand Lodges, are given in their order. Then we have a list of the principal officers of Grand Lodges in other countries. Next is given an alphabetical list of German cities and towns, with the names of their various Lodges and the Grand Lodge in whose jurisdiction they are situate, and also the various German Lodges in foreign countries, and the system under which they work. The other contents include a record of Masonic events for the year 1874-5, an obituary of eminent native and foreign brethren, and a list of Masonic publications in Europe and America. We congratulate Bro. Van Dalen on the appearance of this useful little compilation, the result, evidently, of much well-directed labour.

MAGAZINES OF THE MONTH.

THE contents of Blackwood which we think will please our readers most are, Part VIII. of "The Dilemma," in which the relations hitherto existing between Yorke and Mrs. Falkland are materially changed, by reason of the latter's marriage with Col. Kirke; the early chapters of a new story, "Left-handed Elsa; a poem, in Elegiac measure, entitled "Elizabeth," the story of which is connected with the siege of Paris; "The Scot at Home;" Conversation No. IV. "In a Studio;" besides a most interesting essay on the subject of "Statistics," which is handled with consummate skill, while the actual dryness of the subject is kept as much as possible in the background. There are also some capital "Notes from the Crimea." In short, the number is excellent, and no single article in the whole programme should be passed over.

"Joseph Haggard's Daughter," by the editor, is the first on the list of contributions to Belgravia, and if we mistake not, it will turn out not the least successful of the serials by the gifted author of "Lady Audley's Secret." Iza Hardy contributes a neat set of verses, entitled "A Midsummer Night; or Two Starlight Vigils;" Mr. Sala an amusing sketch of "The Patent Woman. As described in the papers of the late Mr. Prometheus, C.E." Of the other contents, Mr. Marshall's "London Amusements," No. XI. of "Brighton Reminiscences," Mr. Escott's paper "Concerning Tusculums," and the sketch of "The Village Concert," are the most noteworthy. It should be added that the illustrations are excellent.

In his "Social Status Quo," in Tinsleys', Dr. Maurice Davies quotes a very formidable illustration of the thoroughness with which the Roman Catholic Church denounces its enemies or those within its own fold who run counter to its laws and tenets. The excommunication—which must certainly be the major one, for we can conceive of none more formidable—applies to the case of Rev. Mr. Hogan; is quoted from the American journals of the time (1837), and contains a greater number of choice expletives than we have ever seen, save in the well known curse with which readers of Tristram Shandy are familiar. Dr. Davies also contributes another of his Troubadour songs, and there are several other short poems, of which we quote the following, being No. VIII. of "Dreams of a German Jew:"—

My darling, we sat together,
Close in the skiff so gay;
That night it was calm still weather:
We swam o'er the sea's wide way.

The moonbeams' lustre surrounded
The Spirit Island so fair;
And lovely music sounded,
And dance of mists waved there.

The sound grew dear and dearer,
The dance waved to and fro;
The skiff comes nearer the wearer,
But sad o'er the sea we go.

We may mention also, that the serials are all concluded, and thus we have the pleasure of looking forward to a new couplet or triplet of novels to commence the new year with.

The new serials in Cassell's Family Magazine are, to judge from early evidence, not unlikely to prove worthy successors to "The Manchester Man," and "Pretty Miss Bellew." Of course, we shall be better in a position to judge of their respective merits when further progress in their development has been made. "Caught in the Briars," is the title of the first, and is by the author of "Lost in the Winning," while Beatrice Leigh Hunt contributes the other, "Two Points on View." A practical man lays down instructions how to "Build Your Own Greenhouse," and Phillis Browne, "How not to Waste." There is a paper by A. Gilbert, on "Small Traders," in which are shown the time, labour, and insignificant profit connected with some of the smallest trades in the metropolis. There are also an educational paper, entitled "Little Children: How to Teach Them;" "Chit-Chat on Dress," by our Paris correspondent; some very sensible remarks by Mr. Payne, on "Christmas Dinners," and the usual array of notes de omnibus rebus by "The Gatherer."

The new serial in Temple Bar is entitled "Vittoria Contarini; or Love, the Traitor," by the author of "Bitter Fruit." It gives promise of being a most successful story. Of the eight other contributions we may mention a paper on "Spanish Herbs and Herbalists," an account of "Cornille, and the Literary Society of his age," a most interesting narrative; a slave trade story, "The John Harris," and a well written history of "A Neglected Humourist"—the humourist in question being Foote, of whom so many quaint anecdotes are recorded. One or two of his humours we take leave to quote. "A scotch Peer, notoriously thrifty, served his wine in very small glasses, and descanted eloquently upon its spirit, age and excellence. 'It is very little of its age,' observed Foote." Again. "The Duke of Norfolk, who was rather too fond of the bottle, asked him in what new character he should go to a masquerade. 'Go Sober,' answered Foote." Here is another. "A rich contractor was holding forth upon the instability of the world. 'Can you account for it, Sir,' he asked, turning to Foote. 'Well, not very clearly,' he responded, 'unless we suppose it was built by contract.'" And here again another. "'Why are you for ever humming that air?' he asked of a gentleman who had no idea of time. 'Because it haunts me,' 'No wonder, for you are for ever murdering it.'"

There has been latterly, in "All the Year Round," a series of papers describing the lives and exploits of "Remarkable Adventurers." The last number contains an addition to the series, in the shape of a life of the Count de Bonneval, the remarkable incidents in whose career certainly entitle him to be ranked among the adventurers of distinction. He may be described as a sort of Freelance of the beginning of the last century, who so long as he had an opportunity for gaining distinction in the field, cared little for whom he fought. He first distinguished himself during the war of the Spanish Succession, in Italy, under Catinat, Villeroy, and Vendôme. In 1706 he abandoned the side of France, and entering the service of the Emperor, served under Prince Eugene. In the war between the Empire and Turkey he increased his fame as a soldier. The latter years of his life he spent in the service of Turkey, having sought refuge in Constantinople to escape the consequences of certain indiscreet utterances against Prince Eugene, and having turned Turk, to avoid extradition, at the demand of the Emperor. He was engaged in negotiating his escape from Islamism, and a return to the Church of Rome, when death closed his career in 1747. The above is a very imperfect outline of the sketch in the pages of this periodical, but it will suffice to show how well worth reading it is. The other papers are of the usual order of merit.

In the Leisure Hour, besides the conclusion of Mr. J. B. de Liefde's excellent account of the "Siege of Stralsund," and No. IX. of Dr. Rimbault's "By-paths of Musical History," in which he writes with his usual judgment and ability on "The National Melodies of Scotland," we have a short, but interesting narrative of a "Visit to Siam," a description of "Port Royal," by the Rev. Fred. Arnold, No. VIII. of "Caricatures and Caricaturists," some "Natural History Anecdotes," and a number of other highly entertaining contributions. The most noteworthy of the contents in Sunday at Home are an account of the so-called "American Evangelists," No. XV. of Dr. Edersheim's "Jewish Life in the Time of our Lord," and a paper on "Domestic Slaves in Egypt."

Among the contributions to Chambers's Journal, we have noted two by Mr. W. Chambers, which are well worth reading. These are the "Story of the Dalrymples," in which we have an account of the Massacre of Glencoe, for which the most notorious of the family—at the time Master of Stair—was responsible, and "Glencairn, a Dramatic Story in Three Acts." The paper "About Iceland," is, in fact, a review of Captain Burton's "Ultima Thule: a Summer in Iceland."

All the World Over is a new monthly magazine, devoted to "Travel, Incident, Legend, Research," edited by Mr. Edwin Hodder, F.R.G.S., and published by Messrs. Thomas Cook and Son, Ludgate Circus, and Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, Paternoster Row. The present number contains two chapters of a serial story by T. Ambrose Heath, entitled "A Love Chase; or, Autumn Manœuvres," and Chapter I. of "Field Sports in Ceylon," by Edwin Capper, the majority of the other papers being devoted to Travel, such as descriptions of Genoa, Ragusa, Alexandria, &c. There is also, a "Map to Cook's Nile Tours." The price of the magazine is Sixpence, and to judge from the contents and the neat style in which it is presented to the public, we should anticipate for it a successful career.

The Voice of Masonry, for November, opens with a valuable paper by Bro. W. J. Hughan, on "Godfrey Higgins on Freemasonry," followed by another, by Bro. Dr. Mackey, on "The Royal Arch Banners," and again another, by Bro. Geo. F. Gouley, "Can a Man be a Christian and belong to another Society?" There is also an account of the proceedings at the Thirty-Fifth Annual Communication of Grand Lodge, Illinois, and other appropriate matter, both of Masonic and family interest.

Le Monde Maçonnique contains the usual excellent programme of news, both home and foreign. Among the latter it gives, in extenso, the sentence passed upon certain Freemasons in the island of Porto Rico, for the sole crime of being Freemasons, and an account of the proceedings, together with a declaration of principles enunciated by the recent Masonic Congress at Lausanne. There is, too, a most interesting biographical sketch of M. Chatrian, who, in conjunction with M. Erckmann, enjoys so wide a reputation for his admirably written stories, "Doctor Matthias," "Waterloo," "The Invasion," &c., M. Chatrian, our readers will be gratified to hear, was initiated into Freemasonry in the Lodge "Alsace-Lorraine," on the 14th of October last.

In the New England Freemason we have noted No. 5 of that interesting series of papers on the "Old Halls in London associated with Masonry," an account of "The Irish Daughter Lodge of Mother Kilwinning, a centre of the high degrees in Ireland," and a long and most valuable paper on "The Antiquity of Masonry," being "an address delivered before the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, at the Quarterly Communication held 8th September 1875, by R.W. Charles Levi Woodbury, Past Deputy Grand Master." The last of these is so admirable that we intend quoting it at full length; only, being so long, we are unable to find space for the whole of it in a single issue.

THE CLAIM OF MASONRY TO BE A MORAL AND SOCIAL INSTITUTION.

From the "Canadian Masonic News."

MASONRY has been well described by Arnold, to be "a moral society, instituted with the praiseworthy design of recalling to our remembrance the most sublime truths, in the midst of the most innocent and social pleasures, founded on liberality, brotherly love, and charity."

With this object in view, the Masonic Lodge is made to represent the Universe; it reaches to Heaven its celestial canopy; its length extends from East to West; its breadth between North and South, thus typifying the universality of the Institution. The Sun, the glory in the centre, is emblematic of the light of the Divine Creator; the Star, the symbol of prudence; the seven stars indicate the regularity of our meetings, and initiation of candidates into our ceremonies and mysteries; the planetary border and the four tassels representing the cardinal virtues; the beautiful flooring of the Lodge portraying the vicissitudes of life, in the material or moral prosperity or adversity of the Craft; complete the first outline of the religious, moral and typical embellishments of a Masonic Lodge.

A Masonic Lodge is founded on holy ground—that ground whereon Abraham, Moses, David and Solomon have consecrated it to the Most High; and been thus founded, we open and close our Lodges in every degree with reverent invocations, and with solemn prayer to Him who declared to Abraham, that He would establish His holy name on Mount Moriah for ever. To him likewise we dedicate and consecrate our Lodges, invoking, with the reverential awe which is due from the creature to his Creator, His aid in all our laudable undertakings, and implering His protection in our labours, whether He be addressed as the Grand Architect of the Universe, the Grand Geometrician, or the Most High. It is an established and fundamental law, that no one can pass the Masonic threshold, without previously declaring disinterested motives for so doing and desiring to participate in our privileges, and pledging himself that a favourable opinion entertained of the Institution, a desire for knowledge, and a sincere wish to be serviceable to his fellow-man, influences him in so doing. Neither can he proceed further, until he has devoutly joined in prayer to the Great Architect of the Universe, and expressed his full belief in a Divine Creator, the one true and ever-living God. With these pre-requisites, a solemn covenant to preserve our secrets and maintain our ancient landmarks and usages, neither of which affects his duty to his God or his country, is exacted of him,—an ancient custom, supported by the Holy Writings, wherein the propriety of secrecy receives even the approbation of the wise Solomon. He has thus pointed out to him the volume of the Sacred Law, ever open in our assemblies, the Square and the Compasses, which are explained to him with all due solemnity. On the first, he is solemnly enjoined to place his faith, and make it the rule and guide of his life; on the second, to form his conduct with his fellows, and on the third, to keep his passions within just and proper boundaries, not only with his brethren, but with the whole universal family of man. Subsequently to these, moral, solemn appeals are made to him on the divine attribute of charity—that charity which extends beyond the grave, through the boundless realms of eternity, and under circumstances that cannot fail to leave an indelible impression on his mind, and incite him to the exercise of that pre-eminently Masonic virtue, in its most expanded sense, whenever opportunity be afforded him.

Being thus charged, he is invested or clothed with the Masonic badge, the emblem of innocence, and the bond of friendship—rich in symbolic beauty, and more ancient than the Golden Fleece or Roman Eagle, more honourable than the Star and Garter, or any other Order that could be conferred upon him, at that, or any future period, when he is exhorted in the most felicitous language upon his duty to his God, his neighbour and himself; his duty as a citizen as an individual and a brother, more especially the latter character as regards his secrecy, his fidelity, his obedience, and to omit no opportunity to extend the cultivation of his mind.

Proceeding onward, and again invoking the blessing of the Almighty, the hidden mysteries of science are explained in the second degree, and Geometry, under its comprehensive designation, as including all other arts and sciences, is presented for his study and contemplation. Again is prayer offered up in his behalf, when he is raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason, in which the beautiful legend, embodying the resurrection and regeneration is depicted in sacred and impressive form. And we would here say that no one can witness the beautiful and sublime ceremonies of this degree, without having his thoughts raised to Heaven, without being filled with the most powerful emotions, and without his heart expanding with benevolence and fraternal feeling toward the brethren united to him by the mystic tie. It is unnecessary for us to dwell upon all the tools and symbols of this degree, the gauge, apportioning employment and duties; the gavel, depicting the primitive state of man, and his enlightenment by education; and of the trowel, the emblem of divine charity, uniting all by the cement of friendship, and fraternal regard. The square of moral conduct, the level of moral equality before God and our brethren; the plummet of justice; the compasses, of the divine limits of good and evil; the pillars of wisdom, strength and beauty; the footstool of the Holy One, and his astral diadem—the moral steps of communication from the volume of Sacred Law to Heaven—the great parallels—the circle emblematising eternity, and typical of the Creator's mysterious origin and future duration, all these invest our ceremonies with surpassing interest and inspire us with sublime emotions. To these, we must not omit to add the emblems of freedom, fervency and zeal, symbolised by chalk, charcoal and clay; our instructive tracing boards and beautiful ceremonial lectures.

Our readers will at once perceive from the above, that the claim that Masonry is "a peculiar system of morality, veiled in allegory and illustrated by symbols," is no flight of the imagination. And whether we trace it from Adam to Enoch, Noah, Shem, Abraham, Jacob, Joseph, Job, Moses and Aaron, in one epoch; or from Joshua to Samuel, David and Solomon, in other epochs; or pass in review the lives of the Scribes Ezra and Nehemiah, and of the prophets down to the Christian era, the same pure principle, more or less developed, of our ancient fraternity, are continually manifest to the diligent enquirer and searcher after truth. We therefore entreat those who have entered the portals of Freemasonry to employ their leisure time so that they may add an intellectual buttress, pinnacle, or copestone to the beautiful moral structure of our society. It is in the power of all the brethren to give such direction to the Masonic labours as may dignify our profession, invest it with an enduring interest, enable it to become, in a great measure, the depository and teacher of the arts and sciences, and the bright exemplar of moral power and union throughout the civilised world.

DECEMBER.

D ark days are now proverbial, but this month
E ngages higher thoughts of holier life;
C ommuning on the past, remembrance brings
E ach deed performed, and duties left undone.
M ay next year's hope and promise be fulfilled
B efore another reck'ning comes too late.
E nable us, O God, to do Thy Will,
R epressing evil, and promoting good.

M. A. Baines, in Colburn's New Monthly.

The Foundation of the Order of Hospitallers, or Knights of St. John.—In the year A.D. 1048, some merchants from Amalfi obtained permission from the Caliph to build a hospital at Jerusalem for the protection of pilgrims. A piece of ground near to the site of the Holy Sepulchre was assigned to them for this purpose, and a chapel and hospital were built there, the first being dedicated to St. Mary, and the second to St. John the Almoner. During the siege of Jerusalem many of the sick and wounded Crusaders were brought into the hospital; and, in gratitude for the benefits they received there, they determined to dedicate their lives to charitable acts, and to enter the Monastery of St. John. They assumed as a dress a black robe, with the figure of a white cross with eight points. Pope Pascal II. bestowed many valuable privileges upon the order, and the Poor Brothers of the Hospital of St. John became a wealthy community, famed throughout Europe. During the reign of Baldwin of Bourg, the third King of Jerusalem, the Hospitallers resumed the sword, binding themselves by a vow to draw it only against the enemies of Christ. The Order of St. John was then divided into the several classes of knights, clergy, and serving brothers. The knights were highest in rank, and commanded in battle or in the hospital; the serving brothers filled the offices of esquires, or assisted the clergy in attendance upon the sick. The vows, which were taken by all, without distinction, included the duties of chastity, of obedience to the council, and of a renunciation individually of all worldly possessions. —From "Cassell's History of England," for December.

A Region of Contrasts.—It has been sarcastically, but perhaps not undeservedly, remarked, that the City of Westminster is, and has long been, the centre of dissipation of the whole empire; and such perhaps it may be, for the region to the north of Pall Mall has been, ever since the institution of "clubs," the head-quarters of luxury; while a visit to the purlieus of Westminster proper—to the south of the Abbey and Victoria Street—would serve to convince the most incredulous that dissipation does not belong to the upper classes exclusively. Here, however, as in other parts of the great metropolis, recent years have witnessed vast improvements. The building of Victoria Street, and the demolition of old buildings for the construction of the Metropolitan District Railway, necessitated the removal of some of the worst neighbourhoods of Westminster. Still, in the district bordering on the river, the general aspect of the dwellings is to a great extent unchanged.—From Cassell's "Old and New London," for December.

Courtesy.—One word more about your "bluff and honest" people I wonder who married those two words! Cannot you have polite and honest, refined and honest, gentle and honest, courteous and honest, as well as bluff, or rough, and honest? You have put the words, mark, in juxtaposition, but there is no real vital connection between them. It is as manifest as can be that honesty is one of the noblest characteristics of a good man. Without that, all acquirements are but decorations on a tomb; that is to say, they cover rottenness and corruption. For a dishonest man contravenes the first principles of peace and happiness in society. He degrades his nation, his family, and himself. A man may be dishonest in many ways, and when detected, he should be visited with the opprobrium of society—whether he picks a pocket, swindles a company, steals a reputation, or simulates what he is not. But because a flower is to be right at the root, is it to have no leaves, no flower, no fragrance? and because a man is honest, is he to have none of the finishing virtues of humanity? You must see how nonsensical such a position is.—From The Quiver, for December.

THE MASON'S SIGN.

SONG BY G. W. WHEELER.

I.

Duncan McPhie was a cannie wie chiel,
A Freemason he, quite trusty and leal,
He'd a snug country cot, and twa children young,
A braw-big wife, and she had a long tongue,
And she tried all she could his secret to know,
But she soon found out that that "was no go."
He loved her truly, and he loved her well,
But he plainly said that he could not tell.
Yet she bothered and teased him; it was really absurd,
How she bothered and teased him for the Freemason's Word.

II.

She tried all her arts, but she tried all in vain,
By no means in her power the word could she gain;
Though so often foiled, yet still she would try,
At times she would laugh, at times she would cry,
At times she would coax, and then she would glour,
Then she would sulk, nor speak for an hour;
She'd say then, "Such cruelty never was heard,
If he loved her one bit he'd soon tell her the word.
Thus she bothered and teased him; it was really absurd,
How she bothered and teased him for the Freemason's Word."

III.

But a woman, you know, will never be beat,
When she's made up her mind to accomplish a feat,
She therefore determined to try a new dodge,
The next time he was late returning from Lodge.
It happened one night, when 'twas stormy and cold,—
In the country he lived, as already I've told,—
He rapped at the door? Who's there? "Why its me."
"Well, go to your Lodge, if you have not a key.
I won't let you in, without word, grip and sign,
If you can't give me them, you're no husband of mine."

IV.

What could the man do in so sorry a case?
'Twas too late to go back, and no Inn in that place,
His wife she was there, with the door on the chain,
He was outside—in the cold and the rain.
So he thought it was better the secret to tell,
Before you blame him, see you do as well.
"The Pass word, my dear, I'll tell what it means,
The one chiel says 'Bacon,' the other says 'Greens.'"
"But the grand word and sign?—tell me them, and I'm dumb."
"Turn finger down thus, and say 'Ne'er fash your thumb.'"

V.

She opened the door, saying, "Come in, my dear,
No mortal from me these words ever shall hear;"
And, like a true woman, she kept to her word,
Those sounds, for a month at least, never were heard.
Once more it's full late, his wife; now he'd come,
Was heard to call out, "Oh, ne'er fash your thumb.
My cousins are here, they know what it means,
I soon let them know 'bout your Bacon and Greens.
Do you think I'd sit here by myself and be dumb,
While, drinking your wine, you say 'Ne'er fash your thumb.'"

VI.

The poor man was glad to escape to his bed,
His heart it was aching, as well as his head.
Here was destroyed the fond dream of his life,
The faith he had placed in the truth of his wife;
He had given that word on her pledge to be dumb,
Yet the sign she'd betrayed,—"Ne'er fash your thumb."
So he thought that on her he'd now steal a march,
And find the true word in the depth of the Arch,
For she'd bothered and teased him; it was really absurd,
How she bothered and teased him till he gave her the word.

THE DRAMA.

"Buckingham" at the Olympic—"The White Cat" at the Queen's.

MR. WILLS is, without doubt, a good dramatist, but he is an uncommonly bad historian; there is, of course, much licence allowed to a dramatic author, as to a poet, but we think that the bounds of this licence have been overstepped by Mr. Wills. Not content with having, in his play of Charles I., blackened the character of one of our most noble Englishmen, in order to exalt the memory of a deservedly reprobate king, he now endeavours still further to darken history by placing before us, as a chivalrous gentleman, a man who was a gambler, a libertine, and a blackguard. It is strange that English people can be found willing to weep over the sorrows of a Charles, and to laugh at the simulated humiliation of a Cromwell; it is to some extent a sign of a deteriorated age, but this is no excuse for Mr. Wills. If he does not know it already, he must learn that it is one thing to distort history, quite another to sully the memory of our illustrious dead. The Buckingham of his latest play, although somewhat dissolute, is an honourable gentleman, in love with Mary, daughter of Lord Fairfax; Elizabeth, daughter of Cromwell, is in love with him, and Cromwell, partly out of love for his daughter, partly wishing to find himself connected with a noble family, is anxious to make Buckingham his son-in-law. Adopting a royal mode of attaining his object, the Protector offers to Buckingham his choice between marriage with Elizabeth and execution. That nobleman chooses marriage, but, by a ruse, Mary Fairfax is enabled to occupy the place of the bride. Finding this out immediately after the ceremony, Cromwell orders the bridegroom to the Tower, for execution, a fate which is averted only by the death of the ruler. From this brief sketch of the plot it will be seen that there is room for many striking situations, which are led up to with admirable art. The dialogue is always good, some of the speeches rising to absolute poetry of expression. The fault we have to find with the play we have indicated already. We cannot expect to find at the OLYMPIC a company worthy of the piece; it is objectionable to listen to a duke who revives recollections of Bob Brierley, and a Cromwell who reminds one of a first murderer at the Victoria. The two leading ladies, who appear in London, we believe for the first time, are overweighted, and the cast generally is sadly weak. There is much in the play that is worthy of observation, but for the reasons which we have noted we must restrain our approval until we find Mr. Wills reading history with an unbiassed mind.

One of the sayings of the unfortunate man now languishing at Dartmoor will seldom remain long without an exponent, we mean that saying which applies to the connection between money and brains. Mr. Mayer has gone to almost unheard of expense in producing The White Cat, and with this effect: there are one or two scenes of dazzling splendour imbedded in a mass of sombre dulness. The combined openings of a hundred pantomimes would hardly represent fairly the chaos of which this so-called fairy play is composed. The adventures of the lady who is first a princess, then a country girl, then a warrior, then a cat, and, lastly, a wife, are utterly incomprehensible, admirably as that lady is played by Miss Rose Massey. Mr. Stoyle tries hard to extract some fun out of the most uncongenial part of King Mignonette, and a host of pretty girls do their best to brighten our eyes; but the play is past all understanding. If it is meant as a pantomime, it is prematurely born, and is without the chief attraction of a pantomime, the fooling of the clowns. In Paris The White Cat drew extremely well, by reason of its somewhat lavish display of female charms; in London it is, perhaps, worse than improper, for it is supremely dull.

67 BARBICAN, E.C.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THE reception of the Prince of Wales in the island of Ceylon has been, in the highest, gratifying. The native chiefs mustered in great numbers and welcomed him most heartily. Of course, there has been the usual amount of banqueting and merry-making, together with the proper complement of levees, &c., &c. In addition, the Prince has enjoyed some capital sport, and, according to the last telegrams, displayed great courage in quitting his post, and entering a thick bamboo jungle in the midst of a herd of wild elephants. This, no doubt, is the first time the telegraph has heard of the courage that is hereditary in our English princes. His Royal Highness, has also, it seems, met with some mishap, through the upsetting of his carriage, but the accident appears to have been greatly exaggerated, and the risk to which he was exposed must, after all, have been comparatively trifling. By the latest accounts, the Prince had returned on board the Serapis, and would sail for Tuticorin, whence he would make the journey by rail to Madras. Thus, the capitals of all our Indian presidencies, will, if this news be true, be honoured with the presence of His Royal Highness.

The Queen of Denmark has left England, viâ Dover and Paris, for her own country, whither she will shortly be followed by her daughter, the Princess of Wales, who will spend Christmas in Copenhagen, remaining with her father and mother till the early spring, when her husband, we hope, will have returned from his Indian tour. The Duke of Connaught has been enjoying some sport a short way from Gibraltar, in the interior of Spain. He met with a very courteous reception from the Spanish municipal authorities.

The visitation of snow has been attended, as far as the metropolis is concerned, with the usual amount of dirt and discomfort. The streets have been all slush, and when the cold was most intense, locomotion was a matter of some difficulty. Lovers of snow-balling and skating, are of course, disappointed at the thaw setting in. Business men gain, however, by finding it possible to move about with some degree of comfort. We notice that a considerable amount of salt was used in order to melt the snow. We think this a mistake. Sand or cinders is far preferable. Either of them remedies the slipperiness, while salt not only does this, but makes the melted snow dreadfully cold and uncomfortable to those who must trudge through it, nolentes volentes.

The Cattle Show is pronounced to be, by competent judges, a great success. There may not have been the same number of entries as in previous years, but the average quality of the exhibits is admittedly good. Of course, the neighbourhood of the Angel, Islington, has been thronged with carriages and foot passengers. The scene was not quite so brilliant as some of those depicted in our Christmas Annuals, or the Christmas number of the Graphic and other periodicals. Rather the reverse, indeed, for the horses and carriages, the omnibuses, and the foot passengers looked dingy and dirty enough. However the clerk of the weather is not that paradox of paradoxes a dry humourist. He lands such discomforts as he has in store for us London folk straight away under our very noses, without the slightest faltering. Mais revenons à nos moutons, which is more appropriate as a quotation than are the majority of such. We say this, of course, with all modesty. The sheep were the feature in the Show. The Southdowns, the Kentish, the Leicesters, the Lincolnshire, and other breeds were in considerable force, and most of the prize pens were magnificent. Among the Cattle, a shorthorn, a beautiful white cow, carried off the principal prize. The pigs were fat, and the visitors far more eager in prodding the animals than even the most enthusiastic of stock owners. The decisions of the judges appear to have given general satisfaction—save, of course, to the non-winners—and the attendance, as far as we have heard has been excellent, certainly equal to what might have been expected in not particularly genial weather. Not the least important feature in the Show were the agricultural implements and the root exhibition of Messrs. Carter and other well-known seedsmen. Among the successful exhibitors must be mentioned both the Queen and the Prince of Wales. By the way, we believe it is a fact that the classic Angel at Islington is not in the parish by whose name it is distinguished, but in Clerkenwell.

It is evident that, whether the weather will let them or no, people mean enjoying themselves this Christmas-tide. It is impossible to walk along the principal thoroughfares, especially at the West End, without being reminded that this day fortnight we are in for what the Saturday Review has described one of our emergency meetings to be, namely, a "gorge" on a large scale, in fact the greatest gorge of the whole year. Geese and Turkeys, sucking-pigs and pastry, beeves and sheep, fruits and vegetables, are visible in all the caterers' shops. The booksellers are only too happy to supply any number of seasonable books, The toy shops are over crowded with all the greatest novelties in the shape of toys. Housewives are busy with their preparations, making puddings and mincemeat by the hundredweight, and paterfamilias looks on as quietly as he can, with sundry terrible misgivings as to the bills that will pour in upon him when the bells have hardly done ringing the old year out and the new year in. Happily the old saying is true, that Christmas comes but once a year, so paterfamilias wisely gives his better half carte blanche to organise the gorge on the grandest scale imaginable, with the somewhat cynical assurance that all this eating and drinking will be of service to all the pharmaceutical chemists throughout the Kingdom. We hear much of the mighty beeves and turkeys and puddings that are consumed at this season of the year, but very little of the pills and potions that are used to counteract the excess of bile which too frequently follows.

But as last year, so this, the number of firesides that will be cheerless and desolate has been greatly increased by the occurrence of several terrible accidents. The German ship Deutschland has run aground on the Kentish Knock, and it is known that many of her passengers and crew have perished in the waters. How many lives are lost is not yet accurately ascertained, as many as fifty, and even more, being the number according to some reports. The Quartermaster Bock, the survivor of three who got adrift in a lifeboat, and who was landed at Sheerness, is in a fair state of recovery. He must have had a dreadful time of it during the six-and-thirty hours he was exposed to the inclemency of the weather. Another boat with four others in it also got adrift, so it is said, but at the time of writing nothing has been heard of it. Besides this, there have been three colliery explosions, each being attended with a fearful loss of life. In the case of the Swaithe Main explosion, near Barnsley, over a hundred bodies have already been brought to the pit's mouth, and sixty more are still said to be missing. At the New Tredegar Colliery, twenty-two lives were lost, while at the Llan Colliery, near Cardiff, twelve others have perished. Here then we have some two hundred people swept into eternity with hardly a moment's warning, and within a few days of the period set apart, of ancient custom, for festivity and rejoicing.

The Mansion House Fund for the relief of the sufferers by the recent inundations in the South of London and in other parts of the country, already exceeds the sum of £15,000, and amounts of money are being daily voted to the people of those districts which have suffered most and are most sorely distressed. As charity begins at home, it seems to us it would have been a more graceful act had Grand Lodge voted £100 to this Inundation Fund instead of voting such an amount even for so laudable an object as the further exploration of Palestine. The long hidden foundations of the Temple are in little danger of being washed away, while in far too many cases the little all of our poor and distressed brethren at home has been wholly destroyed. Our charity should be as practical as possible.

Among Ministerialist doings, we note the visit to Manchester of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, where he was welcomed heartily at a grand gathering of the Conservative party. Mr. C. S. Read has resigned his post as Vice President of the Local Board, and publicly announced his reasons for doing so. This is the first secession from the Ministry which has occurred since it came into office, now nearly two year since. The reason for this step, Mr. Read states, was his disagreement with the policy of Ministers on the subject of cattle transit, and the restrictions imposed on it by the Privy Council. There have been the usual deputations to sundry Cabinet Ministers, the most important having been to Lord Derby and the Home Secretary.

There is little, if anything, to record in the sporting world, the frost having necessarily caused the postponement of the Croydon and other steeplechase fixtures.

There are to be two grand attractions at the Alexandra Palace to-day. The great Oratorio of Esther, by Handel, will be repeated, under the conduct of Mr. H. Weist Hill, at three o'clock in the afternoon, and when the concert is over, the German Gymnastic Society will give a grand display in the Grand Central Hall, commencing punctually at 6 p.m. On Monday next, and three following days, will be held a great Dog Show, when over a thousand pounds in prizes will be given away. At the Crystal Palace the Saturday concert and dramatic performances are the principal attractions. On Saturday, the first concert of the season, by the Amateur Orchestral Society, will be given at the Royal Albert Hall, in aid of the All Saints' Convalescent Hospital, at Eastbourne. The patron of this Society is H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh. To-day, at St. James's Hall, will be held a Saturday "Pop," while the last Monday "Pop" before Christmas is fixed for Monday.

We are, it seems, to have our army organised on a satisfactory basis at last. The War Office has been a long time in labour, and for once in a way we have neither an abortion nor a puny scheme of reform, but a wide and comprehensive one. Both the late and present war ministers are to be congratulated, Lord Cardwell for having proposed, and Mr. Gathorne Hardy for having carried into execution, plans which, as regards arrangement, will give us a chance of meeting a crisis somewhat hopefully, at all events with less of that hurry and distraction which has generally characterised our efforts at the commencement of a war. Henceforth our troops will enjoy the advantage of knowing where they are and whither to go, and this is no trifling gain, when we call to mind that even in France, where, till the late war broke out, they were said to manage these things far better than here, the greatest confusion reigned, and soldiers, summoned to arms on a sudden, had not the remotest notion whither they should betake themselves. Our military authorities appear to have done their work very quietly, very methodically, and very efficiently, and there has been heard well-nigh everywhere a general chorus of approval. It must not be inferred, however, that further steps in the same direction will not be needed. There is still a great problem to solve. Given the nucleus of an army, in the shape of skeleton regiments, brigades, and divisions, to find the number of men to make it. This is a problem which will never, perhaps, be solved till a political crisis comes, and then, no doubt, the patriotism which has carried us successfully through so many contests will supply the needful flesh, blood and sinew. While on matters warlike, we may as well notice that further experiments have been made with the 81-ton gun, with a view of testing the kind of powder that will be most useful.

The purchase by the English Government of the Suez Canal Shares is still the principal topic of the day, at least on the Continent. A discussion in the French Legislative Assembly was expected to have come off, but the election of the 75 senators for life has been shown to possess too absorbing an interest. Frenchmen, however, certainly do not relish the action of our government. The Great Northern powers are very reticent on the subject, nor do their official organs give us any clue to the views they hold. On Wednesday, a balloon accident occurred in France, by which the passengers, including the celebrated aëronaut M. Godard, sustained all of them injuries of a more or less serious character. The news from America refers principally to the President's message, which, considering the rumours afloat as to serious differences between Spain and the United States, on the subject of the insurrection in Cuba, was looked forward to with some interest. However, General Grant's utterances are of a reassuring character, and there seems to be not the slightest danger of any interruption to the amicable relations prevailing between the two countries. While, on the one hand, President Grant thinks it more than probable that Spain may fail in putting down the insurrection in Cuba; he is also of opinion that the insurgents deserve not to be acknowledged as belligerents, having thus far given no evidence of their ability to establish anything like a government. The other important point in General Grant's message referred to the resumption of specie payments. The state of affairs remains unchanged in Spain. The Carlist and Alphonsist armies still confront each other, but in consequence of the weather, military operations appear to be postponed indefinitely. A Carlist court-martial has sentenced Saballs, one of his generals, to deprivation of his military and civil rank, and four years imprisonment. The annual festival in connection with the Russian Military Order of St. George has been celebrated at St. Petersburgh. The Czar presided at the banquet, and proposed the health of the Emperors of Germany and Austria, who are both members of the Order. The Czar's speech is said to have caused some excitement in French political circles, yet the speech, as reported, contains nothing which will explain the excitement. There is little to report as to the insurrection in the Herzegovina. An engagement was reported to have taken place some time since between the insurgents and the Turkish troops, under Raouf Pacha, with a loss of 10,000 to the latter. It turns out, however, the loss is only 1,000, and further news, perhaps, may still further diminish this number.

The regular monthly meeting of the Royal Masonic Institution for Aged Freemasons and the Widows of Freemasons was held on Wednesday, the 8th instant, at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street. Bro. Lieut. Col. Creaton V.P. in the chair. The Secretary, Bro. Jas. Terry, read the minutes of the former meeting, which were confirmed. The report of the House Committee and the Warden's report were read and confirmed. Six candidates were placed on the list, and one case was deferred. The meeting was then adjourned. There were present—Bros. S. Rawson, J. E. Saunders, B. Head, J. Brett, W. Stephens, Newton, T. W. White, C. Hogard, J. Constable, Richards, R. H. Giraud, A. H. Tattershall, C. Lacey, J. A. Farnfield, J. Bellerby, W. Hilton, T. Cubitt, and F. Adlard.

A Special General Court of the Governors and Subscribers of the Girls' Institution will be held this day at Freemasons' Hall, the business being:

"To consider, and, if approved, adopt the Report of the Special Committee, appointed by the Quarterly General Court, on the 9th October 1875, with reference to the subject of providing accommodation for an increased number of Girls, the scheme to be submitted having also been recommended by the General Committee, on the 25th November. And further, in the event of the adoption of the Report, to nominate a Building Committee, who shall be charged with the superintendence of the necessary works, with full power to draw cheques and perform all such duties as may appertain to their office."

The fifth annual concert in aid of the Post Office Orphan Home will take place this day, 11th December, at St. James's Hall, under the patronage of the Right Hon. Lord John Manners, M.P., Postmaster-General, on which occasion the following talented artistes have promised their services:—Madame Liebhart, Miss Marion Severn, Madame Osborne Williams, Suchet, Champion, Misses L'Estrange, Mary Davis, Penna and Pulham, and Bros. T. Lawler, Farquharson, &c. Madame Albert, a talented pupil of Sir Julius Benedict, will make her first appearance. The conductors are Sir Julius Benedict, Bro. Wilhelm Ganz P.G.O., and Herr Lohmeyer.

DIARY FOR THE WEEK.

Thomas Cochrane W.M., George Cockburn S.W., Pringle J.W., A. Loades Secretary, W. Cockburn P.M. Treasurer, John Bolam acting S.D., John Taylor J.D., William Foulsham P.M. D.C., A. R. Taylor I.G., J.Currie Tyler; P.M.'s—Bros. George Brewis I.P.M., J. Hall, J. Cocke, 481. Visitors—Bros. R. Smaile P.M. 541, Knox W.M. 406, Spearman W.M. 481, Deane Secretary 541, Rev. E. Cohen 481. Business—Lodge opened in due form, by solemn prayer. Mr. W. J. Brown balloted for, and initiated into our ancient rites, in a most impressive manner by the W.M. Bros. McPherson and Blencowe having most creditably passed their examination, were raised to the sublime degree of M.M., the ceremony being most ably performed by the W.M., and rendered additionally solemn owing to the choral service being sung by Bros. Liddell and Dewar, assisted by the Organist of 48. The Lodge then proceeded to the election of W.M. and Treasurer for the ensuing year; when Bro. George Cockburn S.W. was duly elected as W.M., and Bro. W. Cockburn unanimously re-elected as Treasurer. Bros. W. Foulsham P.M., G. Cockburn W.M. elect, Page, Carr and Bolam were elected to act as Finance Committee, and, on the motion of the W.M., Bro. J. Currie was nominated Tyler and Bro. Liddell Organist. During refreshment, Bro. Brewis I.P.M., in proposing the health of the W.M., spoke at some length, and amid great applause, as to the assiduous attention that Bro. Cochrane had paid to his official duties, and congratulated him and the brethren on the great success that had attended his year of office, and with mingled pleasure and regret called upon the brethren to drink the health of the W.M. for the last time. The toast was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The W.M. in replying, did so, to repeat the words of Bro. Brewis, with feelings of mingled pleasure and regret, his year of office had been one of great pleasure to himself, but he could not help a feeling of regret in leaving the exalted position the brethren had placed him in. In conclusion, he begged to propose the health of the W.M. elect; he had known and worked with Bro. Cockburn ever since his initiation, and he was certain that the brethren had made a wise and worthy choice in placing him in the chair for the ensuing year. Bro. Cockburn, who was received with great applause, said that he could not sufficiently thank the brethren for placing him in the proud position of W.M. elect of their old and time-honoured Lodge, the oldest on the register out of London. He would do his utmost, nay, more than his utmost, to deserve the honour conferred on him that night, and, with the assistance of the P.M.'s and his officers, he trusted to leave the Lodge in the hands of his successor in as flourishing a condition as it had been left to him by Bro. The motion having been seconded by Bro. G. G. Pye, it was carried by acclamation, two hands only being held up against it. The Secretary reported that the Board of Benevolence of Grand Lodge had granted (subject to confirmation on the 22nd of December) the sum of £20 towards the relief of the widow of a late member of the Lodge. Bro. Lewis P.M. called attention to the fact that several brethren were in arrear, and gave notice that at the next meeting he should move that Bye-law No. VI. be carried into effect. Bro. Harty, the talented artist of the great Historical Picture of the Installation of the M.W.G.M. He should always be pleased to see them, not only on this, but on any future occasion. Bro. Emanuel) was connected with an institution at Ventnor, where this dreadful complaint was specially treated, and he assured the brethren that he would undertake that a vacant bed should be placed at the disposal of the distressed sister in question. A charge of ten shillings per week was made, by the rules of the Institution, and this he would have pleasure in paying out of his own pocket; he hoped it might enable her to be properly attended to, and be the means of restoring her to health. The toast of the P.M.'s was then proposed by the W.M., who said he was gratified in following the footsteps of Bro. O. Roberts I.P.M. Bank of England Lodge, No. 263.—The regular meeting was held at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, on Thursday, the 9th inst. W. Bro. Three new portraits have been added this year to the magnificent album of this Lodge, which is believed to be without equal in the world. The earlier portraits, of 40 years' since, are priceless works of art; the binding can only be matched in the British Museum, and two stout porters are required to carry the book, which we regard it as a great privilege to have inspected. The Lodge is moreover rich in gifts of an elaborate character made to it by members of successive generations. The Bye-laws of the Lodge limiting its number to 30 members, brethren have to wait for some years after initiation before they can become subscribing members.

Yuill, having opened the Lodge, as he had been nominated for re-election, resigned his chair to the I.P.M., Bro. McNaughton. The numbers being announced, it was found that there was a majority of one in favour of Bro. Yuill, but he declined to take the chair, as he said, by mistake, he had dropped in the wrong ball, and voted for himself, instead of his opponent, he, therefore, refused to accept the chair as he had only stood again in deference to the expressed will of the Lodge. The other elections were then proceeded with, a Board of seven Installed Masters was formed, and Bro. D. Ranald was duly placed in the chair by Bro. A. Bain P.M. 103 P.G.B.B. Bro. J. Campbell P.M., of 128, then installed the following Officers of the Lodge, viz., Bros. R. Patterson Depuly Master, Hugh Mathieson Substitute Master, W. Findlay S.W., Nelson J.W., Harn Secretary, Hutchison Treasurer, W. Smith Conductor, W. Mair S.D., J. McLeish J.D., Cass I.G., Bisland P.G.S., J. Hardie J.S., J. Hardie Director of Music, Albut S.D., and J. Guthrie Tyler. Refreshment followed labour.

Union Lodge, Glasgow, No. 332.—Election of Officers. Bro. McNair, who has very worthily filled the chair three years, having declined to stand again, Bro. M. Kirdie S.W. was elected, by a majority of one, over Bro. J. Frash. The utmost good feeling was exhibited by this brother, and all the other aspirants for office, though nearly every one was contested. The following were elected, and will be installed at the next meeting. Bro. R. Mitchell P.M. as Depuly Master, J. Murray Substitute Master, J. McInnes S.W., Apperson J.W., J. Laird Treasurer, J. H. Gill Secretary, T. Findly S.D., J. Mitchell J.D., Alex McNair Provincial Grand Steward, J. Stewart S.S., T. Birrell J.S., McKenna B.B., Slamar D.C., D. S. Mirbie Architect, J. Rawbouch Jeweller, J. Stewart S.B., J. M. Laren S.B., W. J. Burns I.G., D. Ramsay Tyler. In the course of the after proceedings, Bro. R. Maryhill Lodge, No. 510.—This Lodge held its installation meeting in their own hall, Maryhill, on Wednesday, 8th of December. The Lodge was opened at eight o'clock by Bro. Lochart R.W.M., assisted by Bros. M. Carney S.W., and D. McLachland J.W. After some formal business, the Master said he had much pleasure in calling on Bro. McBride P.M. of 170, Leven St. Johns, P.G. Secretary for Dumbartonshire. Bro. McBride expressed the pleasure he felt at being asked to install the Worshipful Master elect, Bro. John McKay, who hails from the same Lodge as himself, and from his long knowledge of whom he had no doubt the Lodge will have no reason to regret its choice. The following brethren were duly installed by Bro. McBride, assisted by Bro. Wheeler, viz. :—Bros. John McKay R.W.M., Alexander Neray D.M., Malcolm Carey S.M., D. McLachland S.W., James Kay J.W., William Neil Treas., P. F. Craigie Secretary, Matthew Hart S.D., John Kirk J.D., Rev. W. S. Shanks Chaplain, George Hathcote D.M., William Atkin, S.S., L. Aitkin J.S., Andrew Gibson I.G., D. Bregan O.G. The Lodge was then placed under the care of the J.W. After the usual loyal toasts, that of the retiring office bearers was given. Bro. J. Govan, late Treasurer, in replying, said, when he took office they were largely in debt for the purchase of the hall, furniture, &c., but he was glad to say he had been able to reduce that debt by £70. (Cheers.) Bro. G. W. Wheeler, in replying for the visitors, paid a well merited compliment to Bro. McBride, for the able manner in which he had conducted the installation ceremony.

Clydesdale Lodge, No. 556.—This Lodge held its election on Monday, 6th December, in its own Hall, 106 Rose-street, Glasgow. There was a very close contest for the office of R.W.M., the candidates being Bro. Phillips, the present Master, and his Senior Warden. In declaring the poll, they were found to have 47 votes each; a brother, who had just arrived, entered the Lodge room, and tendered his vote for Bro. Phillips, who was declared duly elected, his opponent protesting, and promising to bring the protest before the Provincial Grand Lodge.

Clones Lodge, No. 881.—This Lodge held its monthly meeting on Tuesday, the 7th of December, at Thompson's Hotel, Clones. Present—Bros. Edward James Elliot W.M., J. H. Montgomery S.W., J. Taylor H., Noehmer J., Pendlebury P.Z. S.E., Hooper S.N., Musto P.S., Forge 1st Ass.; P.Z.'s Eernhaus, Forsyth, E. Gotthell, Clark, Bosworth. Visitors—Comps. J. Kelvey P.Z. 153, G. Keath 325, E. G. Hill P.S. 975, W. Trevena P.Z. 159, John Seex J. 186. Business—Chapter opened, and the minutes of former meeting read and confirmed. Report of Audit Committee read and adopted. Bros. W. C. Phillips W.M. 453, and Henry Amos 1201, presented themselves for exaltation, and having proved themselves in all respects qualified, were duly admitted into this degree. A banquet followed, after which the usual toasts were proposed and responded to with commendable brevity. The proceedings, throughout, presented a pleasing spectacle of harmony and unity, which has, indeed, been the peculiar characteristic of this Chapter from its foundation, and this tendency has, no doubt, in a great measure, contributed to produce its present flourishing condition. To judge from the happy faces of the Companions, the enjoyment of the evening was complete and unalloyed.

Perfect Ashlar Lodge, No. 1178.—The usual meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, the 2nd inst., at the Bridge House Hotel, Southwark. Bro. J. A. Smith W.M., W. Batchelor S.W., W. J. Lover J.W., F. H. Ebsworth P.M. Treasurer, F. Walters P.M. P.P.G.P. Middlesex, Secretary, F. Garbett S.D., J. Stevens J.D., J. Wootton I.G., J. Porter M.C., and Past Masters J. H. Harmsworth and C. Deakin. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes confirmed. Bros. J. Easterbrook, J. Savage, and J. H. Deakin were raised to the sublime degree of Master Masons. Bro. W. W. Young was passed to the second degree, and Messrs. Veigy and Gaurit were initiated. The Lodge was then closed, and a very good banquet followed. The visitors were Bros. P. Magee 548, J. F. Woodley, late 169, A. Morgan 254, R. Gill 1364, and W. Dyke 141.

Semper Fidelis Lodge, No. 1254.—The brethren of this Lodge assembled at the Masonic Hall, on Monday, to celebrate their seventh yearly festival; and, according to ancient custom, to instal the W.M. for the ensuing year. The choice had fallen on Bro. B. Barber, who was unanimously selected, at the previous Lodge, to fill the chair. The Lodge having been duly opened, Bro. H. W. Hooper P.P.G. Reg., presented Bro. Barber to the V.W. Installing Master, Bro. H. L. Brewster P.P.G. Reg., as the W.M. elect for 1876, and he having, in the presence of the brethren, answered the usual questions, a board of Past Masters was formed, and the ceremony of installation was most effectively gone through; Bro. Brewster duly proclaiming Bro. Barber, in the East, West, and South, as the W.M. of the Lodge for the ensuing year. The following brethren were invested with collars, to serve as his officers, viz. :—Bros. F. Horspool I.P.M., G. Huxam S.W., W. Brodie J.W., H. W. Hooper Treasurer, W. Pidsley Secretary, E. T. Fulford S.D., W. A. Gregory J.D., W. R. Commings I.G., W. Roberts O., J. Sampson C., R. Nobbs D.C., F. Sanders S.S., H. Elmore J.S., P. L. Blanchard Tyler, and Blanchard jun. Assistant Tyler. At this stage of the proceedings Bro. Barber, (after eulogising the I.P.M., Bro. Horspool, in most appropriate language, and alluding to the happy Masonic year just brought to a close, as well as the many excellent and estimable qualities of the worthy brother), in the name of the Lodge, presented him with a handsome and valuable P.M.'s jewel, which had been unanimously voted to him by the Lodge, added to which was an artistic and beautifully illuminated scroll, executed by Mr. Chas. H. Clarke; containing the names of the brethren who had subscribed thereto, and the following inscription, viz:—"This Scroll, together with a P.M.'s gold jewel, was presented to Bro. Frederick Horspool, the last of the Founders, by the officers and brethren of Semper Fidelis Lodge, No. 1254; as a mark of their fraternal respect and esteem, and in recognition of his valuable services as W.M. during the past year." The scroll was mounted in a handsome frame, decorated with Masonic emblems, by the Messrs. Rowden. The gold jewel was supplied by Bro. W A Gregory, and took the form of a Masonic square, suspended from the top bar by a gold ribbon, bearing in raised letters of solid gold the name and number of the Lodge. Unanimous and long-continued applause heartily testified to the pleasure experienced by the brethren in thus conveying to the recipient such a tangible proof of their full appreciation of the successful efforts he had made (during his year of office) towards having the beautiful and impressive Masonic ritual carried out in all its integrity.—Bro. Horspool, on stepping forward to acknowledge the receipt of the jewel and scroll, said he deeply felt the honour conferred upon him, and the handsome jewel would ever remind him of their great kindness. The beautiful scroll, hung up in his home, would be treasured by him and his. He was more than satisfied with his past year's work from the expressions of approval of those around him, and he trusted that the strings of the bond of union between Masons had been drawn more closely together, and Masonic principles had been thoroughly understood and practised during his year of office. The Lodge was then closed in peace, order, and harmony, and the brethren adjourned to Bro. C. Langdon's, Globe Hotel, and partook of the annual banquet, doing full justice to the many excellent things so admirably served up by the host and hostess, the whole of which was unanimously praised by those who sat around the table. Bro. Barber, as W.M., occupied the chair, Bro. Huxham, as Senior Warden, the vice-chair, and Bro. Brodie, as Junior Warden, sat on the south side of the table. They were supported by about forty of the brethren of Semper Fidelis and other sister Lodges, and the dessert being placed on the table, which, like the banquet, was most choice and ample, the toast-list was gone through, and the glees, songs, &c., therein set down, duly interspersed with the toasts, were most enjoyably and effectively rendered. The son of an old Exonian, Bro. J. H. Mance, of Commercial Lodge, No. 180, Scotland, responded to the toast of Visiting Brethren. Mirth and melody were spiritedly kept up during the whole of the evening, and much amusement was caused by some encore verses (to a popular song) sung by a brother, in which he cleverly punned certain names, and playfully rhymed a few matters connected with the Craft and the Exeter Lodges. This, together with several other agreeable episodes, contributed to the full enjoyment of the seventh annual banquet of Semper Fidelis Lodge.—Exeter Gazette Daily Telegram.

Star Lodge, No. 1275.—The usual monthly meeting of this Lodge was held on Friday, the 3rd inst., at the Ship Hotel, Greenwich, Bro. J. J. Limebeer W.M. in the chair, supported by Bros. H. J. Nell 1326, F. B. Williams 162, Rainman 205, &c.

M. Smith of the Caledonian Lodge was balloted for as a joining member, and was unanimously elected. During the past month information has reached the Lodge that Bro. E. C. Clitheroe, who was initiated in the Olive Union in 1870, died at Worcester, Cape Colony, on the 9th of October. Bro. Clitheroe had gone thither as a civil engineer, having been engaged by the English Government in constructing railways. A vote of condolence with the widow in her loss was unanimously agreed upon by the brethren. We also regret to notice the death of Bro. Rd. Lincoln P.M., which took place on the 18th of November, at Haltham, near Horncastle. Bro. Lincoln's name had been associated with Masonry in Lincolnshire for a long period; he was formerly in office as Master of the Shakespeare Lodge, Spilsby; he assisted at the dedication of the Olive Union Lodge in 1860, and during the first year accepted the post of Tyler to the Lodge. For many years he had been in receipt of a pension from the G.L., and died, as before stated, at the ripe age of 81 years.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—We implore all who desire to regain or retain health, during cold, inclement, uncertain weather, to give heed unto this warning, and spare themselves the misery sown broadcast through the land. Turn which way you will, go where you please, persons will be found who have a ready word of praise for this Ointment. For chaps, chafes, scalds, bruises and sprains, it is an invaluable remedy. For bad legs, caused by accident or cold, it may be confidently relied upon for effecting a sound and permanent cure. In cases of swelled knees, erysipelas, gout and rheumatism, Holloway's Ointment gives the greatest comfort, by reducing the inflammation, cooling the blood, soothing the nerves, adjusting the circulation, and expelling impurities.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 112 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgments of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

CHARITY.

THE season is at hand when the virtue of Charity is either practised or assumed. In saying this we have no wish to imply that people exhibit a lack of this virtue at other seasons, but somehow it has grown into a custom that almsgiving, and, generally speaking, goodwill towards our fellows, should be indulged in more prominently now than at other times. Never a day passes but the papers contain all kinds of appeals to the benevolent to contribute to the wants of their poorer brethren; and there is hardly a journal which does not contain lists of charitable donations to this or that Institution or person, or, it may be, to the poor-box, so that our magistrates, before whose notice so many cases of pitable distress are being continually brought, may have funds with which to relieve them. We may regard this custom as essentially Christian, because the birth of Christ inaugurated a new dispensation of love. We may associate it only with the special rigours which prevail in winter. We may regard it from a business point of view, as marking the close of one year, when we consign all unpleasant memories to oblivion, and the beginning of another, when we look forward cheerfully, and hope for continued or increased prosperity. At such a time the most selfish person can hardly avoid wishing that others may fare well likewise. However, it matters very little why we are or appear more charitable now than at other seasons. It is a subject for congratulation that, in this world of care and strife, where people are ever jostling and tripping up their neighbours, in the hope of bettering themselves at the expense of others, one period of the year should be specially set apart for the cultivation or exhibition of goodwill.

But while we are grateful for even the smallest of blessings, and the periodical dispensation of charity is a very considerable blessing, we are ofttimes disposed to ask ourselves whether charity has not grown to be more of a business than it was formerly. We cannot traverse the commercial portion of the metropolis, or even the one street of a small country village, without noting how careful, how considerate are the preparations for this Christmas charity. We see everywhere announcements of "Christmas Presents," "Presents for the Million," comprising almost every variety of article, from the penny drum or trumpet to the costliest jewellery. And too often people buy these things as a matter of course, and give and receive them as a matter of course, quite as often as for any sense of pleasure that is felt in the giving or receiving. Again, this Christmas charity is ofttimes a tax upon those whose means are limited. People give without regard to their ability, but simply because it has come to be a custom to give, just as it was the practice, if a man ate a chop in a friend's house, to give a gratuity all round to the servants. Others give from more selfish motives. It has been said that gratitude is a kindly sense of favours to come, and a good many people make presents now in the firm belief that it will be a source of profit to them in the coming year. We may almost imagine there are some people who keep a set of books in which they record their charitable, as in their business books they record their commercial transactions. Then a balance is struck, and the amount of profit and loss on charity is ascertained. We shall be told, of course, that in thus estimating the charitable deeds peculiar to this season, we are taking the lowest possible view, that we have in us no sense of charity whatever, or we should not thus analyse the motives of people in doing good. It is far pleasanter, of course, to look at things from the rosy point of view, and to believe that all the world now and at all times, is animated by the best and purest and most disinterested motives. Were it likely to do good to make this affirmation, we should not hesitate for one moment to make it. We would far rather think good than evil of other people, but thinking will not alter facts. It is true beyond question—pity 'tis, 'tis true—that people often dispense Charity from a sense of pride, because they will not be outdone by their neighbours, or of ostentation, because they love to hear themselves annexed at more than their true value, or from a still less honourable motive, because they look to profit by their good deeds. Equally true is it that Charity is far too often a tax, and people give who can ill afford it simply because it is customary. Yet good cometh of this evil, and, save in the last case mentioned, some folk benefit by the gifts that are given, be the motives of the donors what they may. Therefore it is, we have said it is matter for congratulation that one season of the year should be specially set apart for the exhibition, or it may be, the cultivation of good will.

Having exhausted, or at all events said all we care to say as to the Charity that is mere counterfeit, having noted that all that is set down as Charity must not be taken as such; let us turn for a few moments to the far pleasanter picture, and consider what is that Charity which is not counterfeit. Charity is that virtue which all Masons humbly strive to illustrate by every act and deed of their daily life. In fact, Masonic, like Christian, Charity, embraces all the other virtues. It includes, though it is not confined to, almsgiving. But this form of Charity must not be exercised either indiscriminately or inconsiderately. We must not give to our own detriment. In the bestowal of alms we must discriminate between those worthy and those unworthy to receive, giving what we can afford to give only to the former; for, as one of the greatest of ancient philosophers said, "the mis-placing of a benefit is worse than the not receiving of it; for the one is another man's fault, but the other is mine. The error of the giver does oft-times excuse the ingratitude of the receiver; for a favour ill placed is rather a profession than a benefit." Nor is this form to be measured by the extent of what is given. The widow's mite which she cast into the treasury was as acceptable as the most lavish of gifts. It is not the value of what is given that we regard, but the spirit of the giver. It by no means follows that the rich man who gives his guineas is a charitable man, yet a poor man who thoughtfully expends a shilling on some worthy object is worthy of the highest praise. But charity, as we have said, is something more than almsgiving. The man who has it is ever kind, without envy, without boastfulness, without pride. Charity delights in whatever is good and true and beautiful; it is full of pity for whatever is evil and false and ugly. And though a man possess all the other virtues, yet will they avail him not, if he possess not charity. But perhaps a brief extract from the writings of an eminent Mason of a day gone by will best illustrate this virtue. "In order to exercise this virtue," the late Bro. Hutchinson, in his Spirit of Masonry, "both in the character of Masons and in common life, with propriety, and agreeable to good principles, we must forget every obligation but affection; for otherwise it were to confound Charity with duty. The feelings of the heart ought to direct the hand of Charity. To this purpose we should be divested of every idea of superiority, and estimate ourselves as being of equality, the same rank and race of men; in this disposition of mind we may be susceptible to those sentiments which Charity delighteth in; to feel the woes and miseries of others with a genuine and true sympathy of soul. Compassion is of heavenly birth; it is one of the first characteristics of humanity. Peculiar to our race, it distinguishes us from the rest of creation." And again, "The objects of true Charity are merit and virtue in distress; persons who are incapable of extricating themselves from misfortunes which have overtaken them in old age; industrious men, from inevitable accidents and acts of Providence, rushed into ruin; widows left survivors of their husbands, by whose labour they subsisted; orphans in tender years, left naked to the world." The man who is thus animated towards those objects is indeed a charitable man.

THE GOWNSMAN.

THE legal profession is not generally popular with the mass of Englishmen. It is true that the old people, who declare that they "hate a lawyer like poison," are rapidly dying out from amongst us; but the multitude are still disposed to regard an advocate as a person who is paid to tell fibs, while the more thoughtful and the educated maintain that the superficial studies of the barrister, although they quicken the least nobler of the intellectual faculties, do not afford scope for the play of those higher powers of mind which are indispensable in the statesman. A lawyer is seldom a statesman, he is rarely a profound thinker, or a student of science. He acquires a knack, which is common enough to journalists, of quickly "getting up," as it is phrased, any subject that he may find it necessary to understand. An advocate in Court will astonish you by his apparent knowledge of medical science, by his apparent mastery of the details of architecture or engineering, or by an apparent acquaintance with the technicalities of the naval profession. All this knowledge, however, is, in nine cases out of ten, "got up" specially, and it is at once discharged from the mind, when the occasion for its use or display has passed by. The basis of the man's mind is law; he approaches every question which may be submitted to his judgment with a legal bias, and can no more forget his training than an opera dancer can lay aside her over-developed limbs with the silken hose with which she covers, but does not conceal, their abnormal proportions. The superficial quickness of the legal intellect is, no doubt, useful in the ordinary relations of life. The lawyer cannot help weighing evidence, or exposing defective logic, even when he has put off his professional harness. Perhaps he sometimes forgets that the bad logician may have a good case, or he ignores the weight of the evidence which has been clumsily presented, or made to prove too much. The practice of dialectics is not always an advantage to the cause of truth. A man who is skilled in the art of tripping up an opponent, is sometimes too much taken with the sport to think of the consequences. In overthrowing a clumsy foe, he may often forget that he sometimes gives truth an ugly fall, and ranges himself for the moment upon the side of the "father of lies."

We are glad, however, to know that we have in the ranks of Masonry many gownsmen, who use their knowledge and display their dialectic skill for the good of the Order. It is in the nature of Masonry to gather to itself all that is best and brightest in the learned professions, and we expect these specially skilled brethren to open the stores of their knowledge for us, just as the Church of Rome, in the days of its glory, expected the poets and musicians to devote their genius to the service of the Church. The man who is conversant with those principles of eternal justice which constitute the science of Equity, may often display his knowledge with advantage in the Lodge room. If, for example, he is high in office, and conversant with Masonic jurisprudence, he may help to illumine those debatable points of our law which have often exercised the minds of the brightest members of the Order. The gentleman whose portrait we are about to sketch is, we need scarcely say, a lawyer, and wears, with honour and distinction, the silk of a Queen's Counsel. His high office in the Order renders him a conspicuous person in Grand Lodge, and few who have ever seen him in his place, at the extreme end of the Dais, on the proper right hand, can forget his striking appearance, or peculiar characteristics. His natural advantages but serve to adorn those mental gifts for which he is remarkable. In the prime of life, of middle stature, and florid complexion, his handsome features are marked with those traces of thought and care which are the result of many a battle at the Bar, and much burning of the midnight oil over briefs and books of legal lore. He and that "Distinguished Mason," whose portrait we sketched some time since, might almost be termed twin brothers. He usually sits with his head resting in his hand, the fore finger extended and pressing upon the angle of the forehead. The attitude at once reminds a spectator of the famous portrait of Sterne. It is the attitude of a thinker and a wit. Beside him lies his satchel, gorgeously embroidered with the symbols of the Order, and doubtless crammed to repletion with papers. His duties, we need scarcely say, are agreeably performed. Whenever a dispute arises between any of the brethren who are under the sway of our Constitution, his profound knowledge is always called into play, and so wisely has he hitherto held the scales of justice that his decisions have never been reversed by Grand Lodge. At the last Quarterly Communication he had to decide upon an appeal by Bro. Robert Levingstone, of Poona, and so clear and so masterly was the judgment of our original upon this somewhat difficult case, that it was at once unanimously allowed. But although he can hold the scales of justice thus evenly, it has been noticed that he sometimes shows a decided bias in Grand Lodge in favour of the privileged denizens of the Dais. It is said that when any brother below ventures to bring forward a question it is not received by him with that degree of favour which he usually accords to those who immediately surround him. This partiality, if it be such, may be unconsciously exercised, or it may be that those who have suffered from his inexorable logic are not always fair judges of his conduct. An earnest man, with a good idea to develope and press upon the attention of his brethren, has, perhaps, little patience for those refinements of temperament with which the legal mind can make the worse appear the better reason. Our foregone conclusions may run in the direction of truth and justice, but it is not always possible to induce either an opponent or a judge to take our stand point, and look at the thing through our eyes. Our hero may sometimes err in favouring those whose worldly rank or Masonic importance entitle them to consideration, but no one can say that he willingly, and with his eyes open, employs either his logic or his learning to crush the least experienced Mason who may venture to address the Lodge. He is a good speaker, but perhaps exhibits a little of the manner of the Bar, and somewhat of what Dickens called the "Jury droop" when he is addressing a Masonic audience. These slight defects of oratory are, however, characteristic of lawyers, who usually regard every subject under discussion as a "case," and if they are not called upon to exercise judicial functions, they cannot help taking sides, nor can they ever realise that an audience is not a jury, sworn to give a true verdict according to the evidence. Of the social qualities of our hero, we need scarcely speak; he is genial at the table, and, like a true gentleman, he puts every one at his ease. It is not for us to say how often his talents have been exerted to support some dignitary of the Order, who, without such aid, might have made a sorry figure.

"As Æneas
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulders
The old Anchises bear"—

So has he, doubtless, oft upheld a tired or dull Cæsar of the Order, when sinking, under the weight of his Masonic harness, into a troubled Tiber of difficulty and confusion.

The brethren of the Panmure Lodge, No. 720, have it in contemplation to give a Masonic ball, under the dispensation of Grand Lodge, the proceeds to be devoted to Masonic Charities. Either of the undermentioned would be pleased to receive assistance from members of the Craft, who may desire to act as Stewards and members of a Committee, in order to carry out the scheme.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.

IN compliance with a requisition presented to Bro. Robert Westwurth Little, S.G.W. Middlesex, Sec. to the Institution, a special meeting of Governors and Subscribers was held on Saturday, at Freemason's Hall, Great Queen Street, Bro. Lieut.-Col. Creaton P.G.D. V.P. in the chair. Bro. Little read particulars of the scheme, which was recommended by the Special Committee of the General Committee, and by them passed into this Court. It provided for the erection of a large new hall, with a covered way between it and the new laundries in the grounds. The cost of these additions, which would provide for the accommodation of 94 extra children, was estimated by Bro. Mazza, the architect, to cost £30,790. The adoption of this report was proposed by Bro. T. W. White, and seconded by Bro. H. Dubois. Bro. Dr. Ramsay asked whether the sum named in the estimate would cover the whole expense. The Chairman said that, after full consideration, the Committee believed it would be much under the estimate. Bro. R. W. Stewart enquired whether the architect's commission was included in the estimate, which would amount to something like £1250. Bro. Mazza said it was not included in the estimate, but it would amount to £1200. The Chairman said the Committee were of opinion that, instead of patching it up to increase the accommodation, as had been the case for the last dozen years, at a cost of something like £16,000, they would be acting more wisely to incur a larger expenditure at once, and erect a building that was equal to their requirements. Bro. Kenyon objected to the large outlay; he said the present position of the School was not healthy, being surrounded by houses, and would shortly be hemmed in closer; by spending £21,000 they would be reducing their annual income £1,000. While they had the responsibility of providing for 94 extra girls a more healthy spot might be selected; and, as an amendment, he moved its rejection. Bro. H. Browse P.G.D. also spoke on the subject. Bro. W. Winn informed the meeting it had already been ascertained that £1,200 had not been included in the architect's commission, and a further charge would be required for the furniture of the new building. Bro. Dr. Ramsay asked the chairman as to the healthiness of the present building, and was informed by him that there had been but two deaths in seven years. Bro. Raynham W. Stewart, spoke of utilising the Infirmary, Dining Hall, &c., at a cost of £1,000, but submitted to the decision of the committee, and their adoption of the proposed scheme. Bro. Herbert Dickett P.G.S. testified to the healthy condition of the present site, and adduced as evidence that two Royal Commissions had been entrusted with enquiry for Patriotic School. The Parish had also built a district workhouse there. Col. Burdett, P.G.M. Middlesex, thought the neighbourhood was being too much built on to admit of the School being healthy, and he believed in a short time the whole place would be densely populated. After some further discussion, Bro. J. Smith P.G.P. proposed, and Bro. John Boyd P.G.P. seconded, that the whole matter, together with any further schemes, be referred back to the committee, who were nominated. The following Life Governors: Bros. Poynter Kenyon, D. Rolls, J. Smith, Roebuck, Dr. W. Ramsey, G. Kenning, Fish, and W. Stephens. A vote of thanks was accorded to the chairman. There were present—Bros. Col. Burdett P.G.M. Middlesex, J. Symonds P.G.D., H. Browse P.G.P., J. C. Parkinson D.P.G.M. Middlesex, T. J. Sabine, R. Dickett, John Boyd P.G.P., J. Smith P.G.P, H. Massey, Poynter, Berry, D. Rolls, W. Smeed, R. W. Stewart, T. W. White, S. Rawson D.G.M. China, Mazza, Tattershall, F. Binckes, H. M. Levy, G. Kenning, C. Lacey, Fish, Davage, E. H. Thiellay, Farnfield, Griffiths Smith, J. M. Vaughan, J. M. Montague.

BRO. C. DUVAL'S ENTERTAINMENT,

In Aid of the Funds of the Cheshire Educational Masonic Institution.

CHESHIRE stands well among our Provinces in the support it extends to our principal Charitable Institutions. It has, moreover, a Masonic Educational Institution of its own, in which the brethren naturally take pride, and which they strive most earnestly to make as efficient as possible. As a means to this end, an entertainment was organised in aid of the funds of this Institution, on the evenings of the 6th, 7th and 8th instant, under the patronage of Right Hon. Lord de Tabley R.W.P.G.M., Bro. George C. Legh D.P.G.M., and the Officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge, and the Masters, Wardens, and Officers of Lodges 477 and 537, Birkenhead; 606 and 1276, Seacombe; and 1289, Rock Ferry. This series of entertainments was held on the 6th inst., at the Concert Hall, Liscard; on the 7th, at the Queen's Hall, Birkenhead; and on the 8th, at the Rock Hotel Assembly Rooms, Rock Ferry. They were given solely by Bro. Charles Duval, an Irish brother, Lodge 139, Ireland, and R.A. Chapter 73, Limerick whose talents as a mimic and vocalist have been so generally and so deservedly recognised by the press, both here and in Ireland. The programme consisted of his "Odds and Ends," and included his recitation of "The Bells," and his impersonation of a variety of characters, such as "Signor Howlini," "Chawley of Oxrs," "Captain Rattlecash," "Betsy Scrubbs," "Colonel Peppard," "Miss Dashaway," "Professor Dullbore," "The Town Crier," &c. He gave, also, of his Specialities, such as "His Original Burlesque Science Lecture," "His Tragedy in Five Acts," "His Double Characters and Duetts in Two Voices," &c., &c., together with sundry from his répertoire of songs which includes "The Agony Column," "Off to Punchestun," "The Race of Life," "The Maid of All Work," "Little Bynkes," and "Barney and Mary." On each evening the Lodges mustered in considerable strength. The entertainment was admirably given, and the reception accorded to our talented brother was in the highest degree enthusiastic, worthy alike of the skill of the performer, and the purpose for which his entertainment was given. As a result, Bro. Duval handed over to the Cheshire Educational Masonic Institution the sum of £30, being one-half of the nett proceeds. We trust the example of the Birkenhead and neighbouring Lodges may be followed, not only in Cheshire, but in other of our provinces, and in the metropolis likewise. We feel sure Bro. Duval would meet with a hearty welcome everywhere, and that his great talents would be duly appreciated by the Craft throughout England. We must not be understood as suggesting that Bro. Duval's ability should be utilised for the cause of charity to his own detriment. We are aware of the heavy calls made upon him, and those similarly engaged. It is possible to enlist the services of a popular artist without trespassing on his good nature. It is a common thing to get up some dramatic, musical, or other entertainment in aid of the funds of some charity. The Committee of Management take all the risk, and if the performance is successful, the performer and the charity are alike advantaged. We merely throw out this as a hint to those zealous in the cause of charity. Many a man will purchase tickets for such an entertainment who would not otherwise heed much the divine claims of charity.

IMPROMPTU SONG.

Written and Sung at the Annual Meeting of the "Alexandra" Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, Hornsea, 15th December 1875.

I'm going to sing a little song, and do as I'm requested,
'Tis all about a gathering in which you're interested;
The noblest set of men I've known, e'er since that I was born, see,
Are the members of the "Alexandra" Lodge, that's down at Hornsea.
Attention pay,
You may depend, I'll not offend,
By what I say.

'Tis just about a year ago, you all recorded votes, Sirs,
And elevated to the East, our worthy Brother OATES, Sirs;
Right well he has performed his part, he's played no paltry pranks, Sirs,
But as the EX-MAYOR truly says, "he's deserving of our thanks," Sirs.
Attention pay, &c.

He was very soon surrounded by a lot of noble swells, Sirs,
And first and foremost in the lot, was Brother B. L. WELLS, Sirs;
He was not "up" in Masonry; but now he "guts on faster,"
And this evening you've elected him to be your future Master.
Attention pay, &c.

For another able officer you have not to look far, Sirs,
There, in the South, you will perceive our Brother WILLIAM CARR, Sirs;
I'm very sure you'll all agree that he has done his duty,
And if he glides into the West you'll see more of his beauty.
Attention pay, &c.

There, in the North East, you may see our Brother MATTHEW HOCKNEY,
I know no word to rhyme with his, except the name of Cockney;
I use this word advisedly—it does not mean disgrace, Sirs,
But it testifies he's wide-awake, whene'er he takes his place, Sirs.
Attention pay, &c.

Then COLBECK, as our "laugh and split," is really quite elated,
When he gets a candidate who wants to be, by you, initiated;
While from our worthy Secretary you often get good wiggings,
So if you don't behave yourselves I'll send for Brother LIGGINS.
Attention pay, &c.

Brother THOMPSON, as your Treasurer, has done his duty fine O!
And proved that he is competent to take care of the rhino,
His balance-sheet is gratifying; your good applause, he's won it,
The only wonder in my mind is—how the deuce he's done it.
Attention pay, &c.

Our Inner Guard a true man is, right well the work he tackles,
A very useful little man is our good Brother SHACKLES;
While in our Outer Guard we have a man who does'nt tire
In keeping off intruders—I mean our Brother CRIER.
Attention pay, &c.

Our Past Masters, to help us on, are never slow or tardy, [HARDY;
We've had friends WELLS and BROOKE to-night, and likewise Brother
We value their assistance—I'm certain you'll not doubt it,
We should not have got on so well if we had been without it.
Attention pay, &c.

Our Lodge began with thirteen men, but all were good and true, Sirs,
And at the end of our first year, we numbered forty-two, Sirs;
You'll find at end of '76, our brotherhood excels, Sirs,
For we mean to rally round our Master—Brother B. L. WELLS, Sir.
Attention pay, &c.

Then fill your glasses to the brim, and take your time from me, Sirs,
Success to "Alexandra"—the jewel of Hornsea, Sirs;
I'm sure the brethren understand the confidence I feel, Sirs,
You all will labour in the cause with "fervency and zeal," Sirs.
Attention pay, &c.

THE ANTIQUITY OF MASONRY.

REPRINTED FROM "THE NEW ENGLAND FREEMASON."

An Address delivered before the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, at the Quarterly Communication, 8th September 1875, by R.W. Charles Levi Woodbury, Past Deputy Grand Master.

A LITTLE more than a century and a half ago, Freemasonry, except for mystic purposes, suspended handicraft labours, and devoted itself to the speculative part of the art. Before that time both kinds were carried on together, surely as far back as the oldest (A.D.1599) Lodge record which has survived to our day. How much earlier Masonry included speculative subjects is a question where opinions have varied, and men have been inclined to dogmatise variously. Masonry is the oldest art whose works are extant. To the Freemason it would be interesting to know if it had, as our traditions say, always a speculative side, and also whether it has had a continuous existence as an art, or has at times been lost and again invented or rediscovered. These are the questions I propose to examine to-night. If the art of Masonry was speculative as well as practical, in ancient times, and yet was lost afterwards, our claim to antiquity could not mount higher than the period of its rediscovery; but if there has been a constant succession, all evidence of speculative opinions is of historical value.

Without troubling you with my opinions, I shall lay before you some evidence gathered on the descent and the early organisation of Masonry, not claiming that these facts are conclusive, but asking whether they do not justify further research into this interesting subject.

It will be admitted that if we find fragments of usages, designs, as well as tools and methods of work of the ancient Masons in use in the same Craft in modern times, an inference of a continuous channel of descent is presumptively established. It will not be disputed that the ancestors of modern Masons, like other men, lived in those days; that then commerce existed, people migrated, barbarians became civilised by contact with enlightened people, arts were transmitted through castes, counting a descent thus for thousands of years in some countries, and elsewhere by initiation and instruction, from generation to generation. Thus, Masonic organization, supported by successive initiation of apprentices, may have existed from the early times. Let us enquire whether Masonry has not always been a spiritual man of brains and brawny arms, uniting the best culture, learning, intellect and taste of its time with practical, hard-working art.

In the remains of the most ancient religions which have been handed down to us are found exoteric and esoteric doctrines, together with particular initiations through which the select few were gradually raised to the knowledge of the mysteries and higher thoughts included in their rituals and dogmas.

The earth is strewn with the wrecks of ancient temples, whose relics attest that all religions had recourse to the Masonic art to express their highest acts of devotion and oblation. The adepts who constructed them must have held intimate relations with the hierarchies of those creeds whose symbols and mysteries are entwined in the temples of their faith. The antiquarian draws with confidence from the forms and symbols of these ruins testimony to supplement the meagre remains handed down through literary channels, and we also may find something there of the organisation and lore of those early Freemasons that will be instructive to compare with things of to-day.

There are strong reasons for thinking that the art of Masonry was not an original discovery in each of the various ancient centres of civilization. It is probable that it was invented, cultivated and developed in some centre, and from thence was carried by its professors to other and growing countries, at the invitation of religious or political rulers, to give enduring expression to the feelings of reverence of the people, and to the exposition of dogmas, by embodying in holy and public buildings symbols and configurations designed to recall to the mind important doctrines of their theology. Such, indeed, is one of the objects of Masonry at this day.

The travelling propensities of the great master workmen of antiquity are verified by the records. We find Greeks of celebrity working in Asia Minor; and even working in Egypt under the Macedonian dynasty. Thus, Cleomanes planned the city of Alexandria; and Dinocratus not only rebuilt the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, in Asia Minor, but was long engaged in important works at Alexandria; and Sostratus, of Gnidus built the Pharos at Alexandria. We find also Hermodorus, of Salamis, and Samus and Batrachus, of Lacunia, and Appolodorus, of Damascus, erecting important temples at Rome. Four masters worked on the foundations of the Temple of Jove at Athens. Ictinius, with the aid of Callicrates and perhaps other Masters, built the Parthenon. We also read in Chronicles that King David gathered and set the strangers—Masons—to hew wrought stones to build the house of God. In Kings we find that Masons were sent from Tyre to King Solomon, and that Hiram's Masons and stone-squarers and Solomon's Masons and stone-squarers did hew the great and costly stones to lay the foundation of the Temple. In those ages it thus appears that art was not translated to another country, any more than true art now can be, by imitation, but that practical, skilled workmen themselves travelled to the place, and established the style sought for by making the moulds and plans of the details, instructing, overseeing the construction, and governing the workmen.

The Master Mason's talent is manifested in every curve and joint, and even in the very setting of the work. Plato says, in the "Eleatic Stranger," "The master workman does not work himself, but is the ruler of the workmen." "He contributes knowledge, but not manual labor, and may, therefore, be justly said to share in theoretical science. But he ought not, when he has formed a judgment, to regard his function at an end, like the calculator; he must assign to the individual workmen their appropriate task, until they have completed the work."

Plutarch says of Phidias, the celebrated sculptor, who was the chief superintendent of all the works of Pericles: "He directed all, and was chief overseer of all for Pericles." Able writers on architecture, commenting on these and other evidences, affirm that in the Greek, Egyptian and Mediæval Architecture, the architect was always a master workman, personally skilled in the manual part of the art, to whom the beauty, solidity and invention in their structures are due, and are now calling for a return to that relation, declaiming that their late separation into distinct branches is deteriorating to art itself.

The organisation thus shadowed out has three degrees: the tyro or apprentice, the trained and educated craftsman, and the Master Mason, who combined the skill of all the others with the high theoretic science and skill as a manager and overseer in architectural matters. It was his genius that gave form and style to the venerated Temple, from its foundation to its last coping stone, and compelled the warm sandstone and the cold marble to become a symbolic witness of the esoteric as well as the exoteric faith of the employers. It was he who, as the progress of kindred sciences afforded new knowledge, applied it to his art, whether in the line of strength, grace, beauty, or economy.

The ancient Master Mason, as a result of the reliance of ancient religions on monumental symbology, necessarily had intimate relations with the religious chiefs of the country where he practised his art, had perfect knowledge of their esoteric symbology, planned and executed the forms in which they were established on the monuments; his successors also were their pertinacious conservators: thus grew the conventional in religious Masonry.

One historian of Egypt (Sharp) affirms that even from the earliest times these sculptors and designers of the temples were of the priestly caste or order of society; and another celebrated investigator of Egyptian antiquities, Wilkinson, also includes "the sacred sculptors, draftsmen and Masons" in the priestly grade. They were the only Egyptian Craft, except land surveyors, elevated to this social rank.

The priestly caste had, we know, those mystic initiations which spread from ancient Egypt over the world, and of which so much has been written. Whether the Masons were initiated in all or only a part of these mysteries can only be inferred, but we may infer that higher initiations were conferred as the candidate advanced in his art.

Vitruvius defined Masonry, near 2,000 years ago, as "A science arising out of many other sciences, and adorned with much and varied learning." Plato, as we have seen, four centuries earlier, spoke of it as a science. Solomon and Hiram of Tyre, we have seen, considered the loan of Master Masons as worthy to be repaid by the concession of twenty cities; and the description of his varied talents, in King Hiram's letter, accords with the requisite talents elsewhere demanded for the grade.

Those who conceive the Mason as a mere wall-builder have need to enlarge their understanding.

An able reviewer of Fergusson's History of Architecture, in the "London Quarterly," says, "To those but little educated in the ways of art the master workman is a mystery, his influence and existence are half doubted, half denied, or wholly misconceived."

In the true antique spirit do our old Constitutions inculcate the study of the seven liberal arts. It was through these that the Fraternity advanced their art from rude beginnings until there arose a creative intellect from among them, who could embody all extant, mystical, cosmic science into one temple, symbolical and monumental of the speculative science shut within the breasts of Master Masons, open to those who held the key, but sealed to the uninitiated and profane.

Such a monument, signed astronomically with the date of its construction, was the Pyramid of Ghizeh; contrived by its initiated and learned builders not only to embody their religious mystery, but to be capable of yielding to the analysis of the future antiquarian and physicist the key to the knowledge of the state of Astronomy, Geodesy, and kindred arts at the era of its construction. Such, also, were probably the builders of the palaces of Babylon and Nineveh, whose hidden stores of knowledge are now being revealed to us.

In like organization, and possibly of like caste, were the devoted bands of more creeds than one, who, united with brotherly love, raised the first temple at Jerusalem, and those, too, who, fresh from the Chaldean plains, laboured with Nehemiah or Zerubbabel, their swords girded to their sides, to rebuild and restore the despoiled dwelling place of the God of Israel. Was there no initiation in things sacred among these Syrian builders also? Was there no hidden wisdom, no speculation on ineffable things in their Craft?

What mystery the inspired psalmist hangs about the corner-stone! How grandly the author of Job puts, in the words of the Almighty, the Masonic character of his work of creation: "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? declare if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who hath laid the corner-stone thereof? When the morning stars sang together, and the sons of Elohim shouted for joy." How, also, the prophet Amos describes the Lord standing on a true wall with the implements of the Masonic Craft, a plumb line or a trowel in his hand, declaring he will set a plumb line in Israel. Was not the Masonic artisan favoured of Heaven? Did not Aholiab and Bazaleel work on plans communicated through Moses, "with every wise-hearted man in whom the Lord had put wisdom and understanding?" Had Hiram and his craftsmen no aid from inspired kings and prophets in those works whose forms, ornaments, and structure typified occult mysteries? Have the three great creeds of this day, the Christian, the Jewish or the Mahomedan, ceased to revere, in that long perished Temple, the symbol of holy aspiration? There is no need to multiply illustrations of the speculative science.

of the early Masonic Craft. Let us consider the traces of a succession in the Craft of Masonry.

In the old Masonic MSS. of Constitutions, printed in fac-simile from manuscript No. 23,198, edited by Matthew Cook, and written probably in the 15th century, Nimrod charges (fol. 380) the Masons, whom he sends to his Cousin Assur, to build a city, that they serve Assur faithfully, but that "ye govern you against your lord" (Assur) "and among yourselves."

This Masonic tradition of the Eastern life of their Craft is curious when we reflect that to this day strangers in the East are governed by the laws and council of their own country, rather than of the nation they sojourn among. Such a system applied to sojourning Masons of one country, protected by their own country, working together in another, would naturally produce the organization of Freemasonry. In this light we find the Latin vulgate carefully distinguishes Hiram's Masons from Solomon's Masons (Kings v. "cementarii Hiram.") Early as this MS. bears date, it must be admitted that some of the organization of speculative Masonry is shown in this extract. The free spirit of self-government sheds a ray of light here of great significance.

The brother who believes there is something in Freemasonry deeper than its admirable morality and generosity, something that underlies and gives expression to its universality, something behind its symbols that has brought from antique times a flavour like the odour of Shittim wood of the tabernacle, may boldly enter on the investigation; and if his industry never slackens, his faith never tires, and he has access to the means of investigation, light from the East will break on the mysteries of that strange gem bearing the seals of the royal Solomon, and his right royal Phœnician brother which is before him.

Andrea, in A.D. 1610, in his confession of R. & C., wrote, "He who can see the great letters and characters that God wrote on the edifice of heaven and earth, and can use them to his profit, is already prepared for us, though himself unaware of it."

It is my purpose here not to enter the hidden wisdom of this royal and reverential art, nor to discourse of those mysteries of that Craft of which the same author says, "God has surrounded us with his cloud, that to us, his servants, no force can be applied or directed, so that, had he the eye of an eagle, no one could see or recognise us."

Architectural Links.

By the aid of antiquaries and archæologists, facts may be established, from which the inductions of transmission of the Masonic art necessarily follow.

Reading the stone records from the vantage ground of antiquarian investigators, you will find yet extant many bonds uniting the past with the present.

Masons' Marks are the marks the various craftsmen put upon their work to indicate to the overseer who has done the job, in order that, the quality being inspected, it may be measured and paid for.

The industry which unlocked the Egyptian hieroglyphics, and the cuneiform of the Chaldees, which has given access to the Vedas and the Zend Avesta, will aid the Masonic student in this undertaking also.

They are still in use in operative Masonry and were particularly and memorably known in speculative Masonry long before attention was directed to the subject in connection with Oriental antiquities.

These marks, many of them identical, have been traced on the stones in great religious works, in all ages of which remains exist. The Gothic Cathedral and the Roman Basilica show them. Sir Gore Ousely, sixty years ago, thought he had found the relics of an extinct and novel language on the stones at the ruined city of Persepolis; what he copied turned out, on subsequent investigation, to be Masons' marks.

The investigations of Col. Warren, under the auspices of the Topographical Engineers of England, lately made on the site of the Temple of King Solomon, at Jerusalem, have been fruitful in this particular. In the lower courses of the wall which sustains the platform whereon the Temple stood, the courses now covered fifty to ninety feet deep with broken work and other débris, he found abundance of these Masons' marks on the stones lying in the courses, and also in the vaults and tunnels under the platform. There for near three thousand years they have remained hidden from human sight. Scholars recognise many of these marks as Phœnician characters, thereby giving another confirmation to the declaration of Kings and Chronicles that the craftsmen and Art of Masonry were imported into Jerusalem from Phœnicia.

Still other researches in Palestine, since attention has been drawn to these witnesses on the state of the art, have discovered them, at the ruins of Palmyra in the desert, upon some mosques of early date, also in Hebron and many other places in Syria; and one authority says that on Egyptian temples, far earlier in date than the Temple of Solomon, the like marks are found still fresh, after thirty-five centuries. Some of these marks of Masons have another purpose, viz., to connect the stone with the plan of the building, and indicate the course in which it is to be laid and its position. Simple as this link in the chain of evidence may appear, it not only connects the antique with the modern Masonic art, but is a source of other important deductions.

In India, also, these Mason marks are found in the stones of ancient temples, and, what is remarkable, often in conjunction with several symbols of Masonic Lodges of to-day. The scholars and philologists who have gone so far in collecting evidence of Aryan origin and migration have considered all these marks with that purpose in their minds: and many are struck with the number of them which resemble or are identical with the ancient caste marks of India.

I regret I cannot reproduce here the drawings of these marks; some are to be found in Lyon's History of Masonry in Scotland, others in King's Remains of Gnostic Art; and others in Jennings' recondite work on a branch of our Craft; others are found in the Orient, unveiled, and in the recovery of Jerusalem; others doubtless exist in works to which my attention has not been called. Some I have seen in the Nabathian alphabet. In due time archæological students will collect and discourse on the teachings of the whole; forming, as they do, a chain of evidence of the progress and succession, of the Masonic art, through many peoples and many ages, we must regard the further prosecution of their labours on these simple relics with the deepest interest. It is argued by learned architects, and I believe now conceded, that the arch can be traced from the era of the Pyramid to the present time; and Wilkinson says even the pointed Gothic and Saracenic arches are deducible from the earliest Egyptian. Various columns and styles of architecture of ancient ages retaining their conventional proportions and capitals, sometimes with a few modifications, but oftener in purity, are accepted and in use to-day.

Holloway's Pills: Winter Specifics.—All can estimate the disadvantages to the human system from breathing foul air, such as must necessarily be inhaled during our winters. The safest corrective and best purifiers of the blood are Holloway's Balsamic Pills, which are too well known and too highly esteemed to require commendation here. Besides cleansing the system, they improve the appetite, render digestion perfect, admirably regulate the liver, increase the secretion of the kidneys; they mildly yet effectually act upon the bowels, without griping or causing any inconvenience. So long as human nature remains what it is, every person will now and again require regulation of organs, disordered by irregular or too generous living, and too liberal potations.

THE DRAMA.

"Broken Hearts," at the Court Theatre.

MR. GILBERT'S dramatic works have been wanting, hitherto, in one quality essential to their success, that of sympathy: whilst pointing out, with exquisite accuracy of touch, the weaknesses of mankind, and depicting, with admirable satire, its follies and petty vices, they have usually failed to rouse in the breast any feeling of tenderness or pity. His pen has been dipped in gall with no admixture of the sweet milk of human kindness: his writings have been polished as gems; they have afforded a treat to the intellect, and food for the brain, but they have failed to awaken the heart. From this reproach he has at length freed himself by the production of one of the most delicate dramatic poems to be found in our literature; a poem worthy of a place beside "Une Nuit d'Octobre," of Alfred de Musset, possessing all its dreamy passion, all its twilight tenderness, all its quiet, deep undercurrent of feeling. There is no satire here, no contemptuous mocking of the frailties of common humankind; but, in its place, a love story, exquisitely delicate in construction, and told in language worthy of its theme. To a mysterious island, unknown to mortals, have retired several maidens, with hearts broken by the deaths of their loves; amongst these are two sisters, Lady Hilda, who had secretly loved Prince Florian, and retired from the world on hearing of his drowning at sea; and Vivir, who, though heartwhole, accompanied her sister out of sympathy with her grief. The boundless capacity of loving which women possess require still some object on which to find its exercise, and Lady Hilda chooses a fountain as her substitute for Prince Florian, whilst Vavir pours out her pure adoration to a sun-dial. On this same island chance throws Prince Florian, shipwrecked, but not drowned; he possesses a veil, conferring invisibility on its wearer, and, overhearing the addresses of the maidens, responds in place of the respective objects of their love. Done out of a spirit of boyish frolic, this has the saddest effect. Hilda's love for him is returned, but Vavir is left to cherish a hopeless passion. On being told by Florian, with great tenderness, the real state of affairs, she murmurs with sad foreboding,—

"No need; I know the rest.

Hilda's attempt to save her sister, by giving up her lover, only leads us to the inevitable end. A death scene of true pathos closes the sufferings of the gentle Vavir. We have omitted the story of the dwarf monster, as it seems to us rather an episode than necessary to the framework of the plot. Mr. Gilbert was right, we think, in committing the gossamer web of his play to the tender care of supernaturals rather than to the rough handling of mortals. The emotions played on are too sensitive, the feelings too fine to bear the rude contact of a workaday world. The dialogue is admirably written, the many speeches replete with poetry of thought, and elegance of diction. The acting is worthy of the piece; Miss Bessie Hollingshead, as Vavir, gained complete hold of the sympathy of her audience; in appearance, in gesture, and in expression, she realised completely the fine and charming but luckless maiden. A performance so natural, and so full of artless beauty, has not been seen on our stage for years. Mrs. Kendal gave full effect to the greater dramatic power and more intense passion of Hilda, the two parts contrasted well; one all gentle unstudied grace, the other varied by bursts of rage, despair, and passionate love. The part of Florian is not one which makes any severe call on the resources of an actor; Mr. Kendal is all that is required, frank and free, with a certain nobility of bearing. Mr. Anson plays the part of the Dwarf Monster, hopelessly in love with Hilda, and when he has acquired sufficient boldness to give his passion full play, his rendering will be a very striking one. The play is admirably placed on the stage. On account of its literary worth, its skilful workmanship, and admirable acting, this play deserves to be more successful than any produced of late years.

"The Royal Institution of Great Britain has now for its opposite neighbours the well-known firm of Messrs. Felice and Sons, proprietors of the popular 'Specialité' Sherry, whose unbounded success in the sale of this wholesome wine has compelled them to remove from Conduit-street to their present handsome, extensive and convenient premises in Albemarle-street."—The Morning Post, 12th July 1875.

MASONIC STUDIES.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The interest I have for many years past taken in the promotion of what may with propriety be termed "Masonic Studies" will, I trust, be sufficient apology for troubling you with a few further remarks upon this truly important subject.

To dispel the darkness which, Masonically speaking, shrouds the mind of the vast majority of brethren, and to induce them to seek the light of knowledge, is a problem which has exercised the ingenuity of those who work steadily, though unostentatiously, in the cause of Masonic education, but, it must be confessed, with no appreciable success. Sundry schemes have from time to time been devised to attract attention to the places where instruction is willingly and gratuitously given, but to little purpose. The reason for this apathy is, however, not difficult to discover. To lay the foundation upon which to build a radical reform in this respect, it will have to be made clear, in the first place, that promotion in a Masonic Lodge is utterly unobtainable without the possession of such abilities as will not fail to ensure a masterly finish of the work. And secondly, brethren should be made to understand that the incapable aspirant to a dignity for which he is conspicuously unfitted will be certain to earn for himself only derision and contempt. In your able remarks upon this subject you properly advise diligent application to study, and constant, or at least frequent, attendance at Lodges of Instruction. The wisdom of this course admits of no dispute; indeed, to my mind, there is no alternative. To learn from manuscript or private verbal instruction is all very well, and no doubt affords considerable assistance to the student, but I assert that without constant practice in a Lodge of Instruction, failure, comparative or complete, is sure to be the result. This opinion will, I believe, be endorsed by all. But although the necessity of this course is universally acknowledged, yet how few there are who take the trouble to profit by the opportunities these Lodges afford, and it must be stated there are fewer still who take any steps whatever to acquire the rudimentary knowledge necessary to produce even a superficial show of fitness for the high post it is their ambition to attain. Why would they? So long as brethren are permitted to graduate in the minor offices, though lamentably inefficient; so long as they are advanced to the higher honours, until reaching the precincts of the Master's chair; and so long as elections are carried on without reference to capabilities, and merely as a matter of course, this deplorable state of things will remain uninterrupted. There are some, however, who are sufficiently conscientious, at the twelfth hour, to obtain from one source or another, a smattering of the ritual; then the aid of the Lodge of Instruction is invoked, regular attendants obligingly give up their offices to gratify the new-born enthusiasm of this eager searcher after knowledge; the Preceptor, with infinite patience, tries his best to instil some of the most necessary information into the pupil who, to attain proficiency, ought to have commenced his studies years earlier; and when everything has been done that could be accomplished within the extremely limited period at command, and all possible efforts are exhausted, in nine cases out of ten, in the end, the student proves a complete and unmitigated failure. But what of that? He has attained the summit of his desires; previous experience assures him that his incompetency will be no bar to his obtaining, at the end of the term, a handsome complimentary testimonial, in the shape of a costly glittering jewel, and being henceforth ranked amongst the rulers of the Craft. His desire for further instruction is dead, he speedily forgets the little he knew, he is complacently content, and the Lodge of Instruction beholds him no more. And from this class are recruited those who, having gatheredsuch questionable laurels it was in their power to win, and hopeless of pushing their way to higher elevations, shrink into utter insignificance, and sometimes repay the many favours bestowed upon them by heaping obloquy and scattering disparaging epithets upon a society into which they ought never to have been admitted, and whose members have ever dealt with forbearance and good natured indulgence with all their shortcomings. It is scarcely an enviable task to enumerate the evils which afflict an order of which one is proud to be a member, but it is somewhat conciliatory to reflect that he who earnestly desires its progress and prosperity must not shrink from the performance of duties, however repugnant and unpalatable. It has been too long the injudicious practice to bestow praise freely where none is deserved, and to withhold just censure where it is absolutely needed. Such a policy can scarcely be productive of any desirable result, but I look forward, with hope and confidence, that, by the aid of the Masonic press, and the influence of intelligent working brethren, the sad abuses which disgrace and disfigure our procedures, will eventually be abolished.

Yours fraternally,

E. GOTTHEIL.

BRO. DR. OLIVER'S TWO POSTHUMOUS WORKS

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Since the appearance of your Review of those valuable works, I have run through them, and would venture to offer a few remarks upon them. There are a class of Masons to whom both may be exceedingly useful, though I much question whether they can be considered perfect exponents of the subject of which they profess to treat.

There are three classes of modern Masons, who profess to make enquiries into the Pythagorean doctrine of numbers (vide Dr. Oliver's Pythagorean Triangle), viz.: the Rosicrucians, the Hermetic Philosopher of the Ancient and Primitive Rite, and the Royal Oriental Order of the Sal Bahe. Like Dr. Oliver's knowledge, that of the first is merely exoteric, for neither of them seem to perceive the gist of the matter, namely, the doctrine of the geometrical nature of the divine mind, out of which springs this exposition of numbers. This grand idea, Pythagoras gained either from the Egyptians or the Brahmins, who had it in common from a primitive source, but, in all probability, Pythagoras learned it in Egypt. The two last named Orders, of the Oriental Orders of Freemasonry, offer a general development of the esoteric idea, the one from Khamitic, the other from Aryan sources, and to those Dr. Oliver's work will be welcome, as a valuable collection of facts upon the point. The work on the Discrepancies of Freemasonry, in spite of some minor errors and slips in the relation of fact, offers most valuable information and suggestions upon the difficult points of Freemasonry; but the real nature of the vesica piscis escapes recognition, although the learned brother gives such a valuable exposition of its geometrical qualities.

Bro. John Hogg has rendered a real service to the Craft in the publication of these two works, and should the last help on the so much needed revision of the Lodge lectures, the subject of the fra cannot altogether escape recognition in the lecture of the Fellow Craft.

I remain, yours fraternally,

JOHN YARKER.

THE GOVERNMENT OF OUR SCHOOLS, &c.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In accordance with my promise, I now ask you to favour me with a space to show "how, among the first fruits easily gathered by a strong governing body, such as that proposed by M. A., would be an ample provision for all approved candidates for election."

I confine myself to this one advantage to be gained by a strong government, not merely on account of its importance, but also because I think other points will be far better handled by brethren who can describe themselves (as does M. A., in your paper of 20th November) as having "a considerable acquaintance with some of our large schools."

As regards the Boys' School:—

In October 1874 there were 45 approved candidates, of whom 11 only could be admitted.

In April 1875 there were 48, elsewhere stated 49, approved candidates, of whom 8 only could be admitted.

In October 1875 there were 58 approved candidates, of whom 9 only could be admitted.

In other words, the Managers of the Institution came before us last October with the humiliating confession, "Here are 58 boys, whom we ought to take by the hand, and want of funds will compel us to decline aid to 49 of them.

This cry of distress implies that the governing body has not felt strong enough (and, constituted as it is, I should have been astonished if it had) to call on brethren for a very small thing, from such a Fraternity as ours.

A glance at the ages of the non-elected candidates, and a comparison of page 35 of the report published in June 1874, will show that an additional £3 5s (Three pounds, five shillings) a year from each of our 1,500 Lodges would amply provide for the expenses of all these children, even if new site and buildings are required.

I imagine no one will maintain that our resources are already so heavily taxed as to make this small sum a serious addition to our expenditure.

I refrain from giving the figures, because I hope brethren will work them out for themselves, from the reports of various years, when they will, I think, be amazed to find that I have not understated the average contribution required.

Lists of approved candidates, of whom four-sixths are to be, at least for a time, rejected, are not creditable to us. They are spots in our feasts of charity which a strong government would easily remove.

Yours fraternally,

HEREWARD.

SMALL EXTRAVAGANCES.—If any who read these lines are conscious that their pockets are made of such materials that whatever money is put into them will burn a hole until it gets out, I would advise them, whenever they take the air, to leave their money at home, or, better still, to keep an exact account of every halfpenny they spend. It is astonishing how foolish small extravagances appear, when they have to be put down in black and white, after the temptation to indulge in them is over. And they must be put down in detail, and not conveniently classed together under the general heading of "sundries." The item "sundries" is never admitted into well-kept household accounts. No one who has not tried it would believe what a check it is upon personal expenditure to keep a thorough account of money spent, and not only a check, but a help; for prices may be compared, and thus lessons learned from experience.—From "Cassell's Family Magazine" for October.

REVIEWS.

All Books intended for Review should be addressed to the Editor of The Freemason's Chronicle, 67 Barbican, E.C.

The Discrepancies of Freemasonry. Examined during a week's gossip with the late celebrated Bro. Gilkes and other eminent Masons, on sundry obscure and difficult passages in the Ordinary Lodge Lectures, which, although open questions in Grand Lodge, constitute a source of doubt and perplexity to the Craft. By the Rev. G. Oliver D.D., Past M.P.S., Grand Commander S.G.I.G. 33° for England and Wales; Past D.G.M. of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts; Past D.P.G.M. for Lincolnshire; Honorary member of numerous Lodges and Literary Societies in every quarter of the Globe. Author of "The Revelations of a Square," "The Book of the Lodge," "Historical Landmarks," &c. With numerous diagrams. London: John Hogg and Co., Paternoster-row. 1875.

CONCLUDING NOTICE.

THERE remain now only two discussions on which to offer any comment. The subjects of the former of these are "The Travelling Mason. The Sacred Name. Discrepancies in the Work. Removal of Landmarks. East and West. Types of Christianity." The discussion chiefly turns on the present and former rituals, and the meaning of certain terms and phrases as used therein. Several different views are expressed, as indeed is but natural where a number of men of different temperaments, sundry of whom are predisposed to cavil at any opinion, no matter how logical, that may be set before them. For the discussion we must refer our readers to the book itself, as extracts would convey but a very imperfect idea of its character, while a summary would occupy too much space. The argument, however, be it said, is very skilfully conducted, and containing, as it does, many references to catechisms no longer in use, and of which some, no doubt, are ignorant, the chapter cannot be otherwise than interesting, especially as regards the Travelling Mason, and the various reasons assigned by various authorities for his travelling in the First and Second Degrees Eastward, and in the Third Westward.

In the last discussion, while sundry of those present at the five previous meetings are unable to attend, two new characters are present, of whom one is described as a captain, while the other is a merchant, who is anxious to be initiated, and at the same time wishful to learn, as far as it may, consistently with the vows of secrecy, be divulged to him, some idea of the art of Masonry. We cannot say we are by any means pleased at the appearance of the former of the two newcomers, who is thus described:—"Our brother, the Captain, was in reality a lieutenant on half-pay, and the superior title was accorded to him by courtesy. He resided in a neighbouring village, and occupied his leisure time in the honourable and useful employment of superintending the National School there, and leading the church psalmody, with nasal correctness, on the Sabbath Day. He was passionately fond of his glass, if obtainable at the expense of a friend; and when favoured with an opportunity, he seldom failed to improve it to his own satisfaction, if not to the gratification of the company present, to whom, after a certain period of his potations, he became rather annoying; for he would sneeze and snort and stamp, and perform a number of other antics more extraordinary than pleasing, and kept (sic) up a continual fire of nautical phrases and snatches from an old song, which, in the early part of the evening, he would persist in singing from end to end; but, fortunately, after a few glasses he became stupefied, his memory deserted him, and he generally stopped short after a single stanza. He had an inveterate habit of quoting passages, whether applicable to the subject in hand or not, from the Church Catechism which he taught the children of his school. This was often extremely offensive, although he was perfectly unconscious of it, and altogether indifferent to the convenience or comfort of any one except himself. He had a favourite dog, called Toby, an ugly, pug-nosed, vicious brute, which at such times he was in the habit of summoning, though not present."

No one will be surprised to hear that this Captain was not of much account as a Mason, but we are surprised that Dr. Oliver should have introduced such a personage into the company of gentlemen, nor are we by any means satisfied with the reasons he assigns, which are these, "I have introduced these impertinences here, not merely because they actually occurred on this occasion, and constitute the type of a character from which it is to be feared few of our Lodges are exempt, but also as a lesson to others, who may be addicted to the practice of disturbing the serious proceedings of Masonry by absurd buffoonery, wretched attempts at wit, and unmeaning exclamations." We think it was unwise to mar the general effect of the book, which, whether we agree with the opinions expressed in it or not, is certainly entertaining, simply because a boorish brother dropped in and made all but himself wretched and uncomfortable for the whole evening. Poor Bro. Gilkes was very seriously disconcerted by the Captain's numerous and inane interruptions. Of course, in the presence of a profane, the discussion is far more guarded, and is limited almost entirely to such enlightenment as Bro. Gilkes and the others feel themselves justified consistently with their obligations in offering to the intending candidate. Perhaps the most interesting part of this eminent brother's exposition relates to the Points, which at first somewhat confuses the candidate, though he afterwards remarks, "If your illustrations are all as interesting as this, I anticipate a fund both of instruction and amusement from my initiation."

We shall conclude this portion of our remarks by quoting the last two paragraphs in confirmation of certain remarks we have really felt it our duty to offer.

"You will also observe, my good friend," I said, "that the capacity of a candidate for place and power, or, in other words, for a higher office in the Lodge, can only be estimated from his antecedents, for who would back a losing horse? Experience is the touchstone of merit, and I can assure you that, unless you prove yourself zealous and attentive to the preliminary duties of the Lodge, by being constantly present, uniformly diligent and obedient, and anxious on all occasions to improve yourself in Masonry, you will never be fit for a leader, nor is it likely that your fellows will confer upon you that most unmistakable token of their confidence—the uncontrollable power of regulating their proceedings.

"'And lastly,' Bro. Gilkes concluded, 'I would impress it firmly on your mind, that whoever accepts the office of W. Master, stakes his reputation and character as a Mason on maintaining and preserving the status and prosperity of the Lodge during his term of office; and both will be grievously imperilled if, by supineness, mismanagement, or any other influential cause, the community which have entrusted their vital interests to his charge shall find reason to repent of their choice. And so, brethren, I give the right word and right point of a Mason—ADIEU.'"

Having thus gone, at considerable length, through this work, it only remains for us to say that, taken as a whole, it forms a capital addition to Masonic Literature. There are theories in it we do not approve, nor do we think they will meet with the approval of our readers. But though we dissent from certain of the propositions as laid down in these pages, we none the less admire the skill and ingenuity which the author has displayed, and the enthusiastic love of Masonry which is conspicuous in, we might almost say, every sentence.

WE have read the title-page of this book most carefully. We have only glanced at the contents. We confess we regret the time thus wasted. The work treats "of the re-organization of the Universal Church of Christ; public laws and society throughout the world, according to the New Christian Dispensation of common sense." We have never heard of any antagonism between Christianity and common sense, either in this age that is, or in the ages that have gone by. There are millions of millions of our fellow men who worship God, but not as Christians worship Him—these we respect. There are a few who profess to worship no God—such we abhor. But a Christian who describes the "New Christian Dispensation," as being that "of common sense," insults the Christianity he professes to believe in. If Christianity is only now entering, or about to enter upon the epoch of common sense, how must we describe the epoch that is, or is about to be concluded?

We are told the "book is purposely not entered at Stationers' Hall, that any of the people may be free to print it." We imagine few will evince their lack of common sense by availing themselves of the opportunity. Nay, more, we hold the publication of such a work to be highly injurious to a community which is mostly Christian, and, accordingly, we urge our friends not to waste their time in reading it.

Supreme Grand Royal Arch Chapter of Scotland.—The Quarterly Communication was held at Freemasons' Hall, Edinburgh, in the Grand Lodge Room, at 8 p.m. on Wednesday, 15th of December, in the absence of the three Grand Principals by Comps. Malcolm Hamilton Ramsay, of Carlon, as Grand Z., G. W. Wheeler Z. 73 as Grand H., D. Mitchel Grand Treasurer as Grand J., L. Mackenzy W.S. was in his place as Grand Scribe E., J. Duthie Z. 67 as Grand 1st S., Dr. Carmichel 2nd S., and H. J. Shields, 33 degree, Z., 143 as 3rd Grand Sojourner. The Grand Chapter having been duly opened by the three Acting Grand Principals, the G.S.E. read the minutes of the last quarterly meeting, which were confirmed; he also read the minutes of several committee meetings, and the Finance Committee's report, showing that the Chapter is in a very flourishing financial condition, and recommending the investment of an additional £300. Proxy commissions were read from three different Chapters, and sundry presents were received and suitably acknowledged from the Grand Chapters of Pennsylvania and Colorado. Three applications for new charters, as recommended by the committee, were then considered, and one for the town of Rothsay, to be called the St. Blane, recommended by Chapter 75, Glasgow, was granted, to be No. 163. A second Chapter for the City of Dundee was then granted as No. 164, and one for Castol, in South Africa, recommended by the District Superintendent, was also granted, to stand as No. 166. Comp. W. M. Bryce P.Z. No. 12, brought forward the motion of which he had given notice, "That in future the hour of meeting be 6 p.m.," seconded by Dr. Carmichel, and supported by Comps. Wheeler, Duthie and Shields, as it would give the Chapters in the West of Scotland an opportunity of attending the meetings and returning the same night. Comp. R. J. Brown, of Edinburgh, also supported, as he knew the Edinburgh would not wish to monopolise all the management of the Order. Comp. Murray, Edinburgh, promised to substitute five for six, seconded by Comp. Barry of Dundee. Comp. Abbot, Leith, seconded by Mitchell, promised that it be retained at 8 p.m., the original motion for six being withdrawn in favour of five o'clock, which was carried by a large majority. A correspondence was read by the G.S.E. from the Grand Chapter of Pennsylvania, in which they said they had forwarded a commission in favour of Comp. L. Mackenzy G.S.E., to represent them at the G.C., he had replied, stating that he already represented the Grand Chapter of Oregon, and suggesting that three names should be sent for them to select from. They had rejoined, still wishing to appoint him; as it was an innovation in their general practice he thought it best to lay the matter before Grand Chapter. Comp. Shields explained that in America it was quite usual for a Companion to hold two or more such appointments. It was then moved and carried, that, in deference to the wishes of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Pennsylvania, we receive Comp. Mackenzy as their representative to this Chapter. (Cheers.) The commission was then read, and Comp. Mackenzy having expressed the fraternal feelings of the G.C. of Pennsylvania, the acting G.Z. made a suitable reply, requesting their representative to convey to them how fully we appreciated and reciprocated those feelings. This having all the business, the Grand Chapter was closed in due form.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

THERE is nothing particularly exciting at home just now, so the public mind is chiefly directed towards the approaching festivities. Smithfield Market—we still retain the name, though the ancient market has long since disappeared, and but little remains to mark its site—is crammed with Christmas beef. The new Poultry Market adjoining, is a much more comfortable place to be jostled in than old Leadenhall. It is a commodious building, only lately opened to the public. East and West, and South and North, are evidences in well nigh every street that our Christmas carnival will be on as grand a scale as ever, nor is Covent Garden, with its piles of oranges and nuts, and other fruits, behind the rest of the world in preparing for the eventful period. When the proper time comes we shall make a point of wishing all our readers the compliments of the season. May they have the maximum of pleasure with the minimum of bile to follow.

The Queen is still at Windsor, and, in company with all the members of her family, paid her annual visit to the Mausoleum of the late Prince Consort, on Tuesday, the 14th instant, being the fourteenth anniversary of his death. A special service was afterwards performed in memoriam of the sad occasion. On Wednesday the infant daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh was christened, in St. George's Chapel, in the presence of the Queen, acting as sponsor for the Empress of Russia, the other sponsors being H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, H.R.H. the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha (represented by H.R.H. Princess Christian), H.I.H. the Cesarewitch (represented by the Russian Ambassador), and H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, for whom Prince Leopold stood proxy. The infant Princess was christened Marie Alexandra Victoria. The ceremony was strictly private, following, as it did, immediately on the sad anniversary of the day previous. On the evening of the same day H.R.H. the Princess of Wales, with her children, left Marlborough House, en route for Copenhagen, where she will spend Christmas, remaining there till about the time when her husband may be expected from India. The Duke of Connaught has gone on a visit to our Minister in Morocco, Sir J. Drummond Hay, in order to enjoy some boar hunting, with spears, in the interior of the country. He is expected to remain for a few days.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales has at length reached Madras. After visiting Madura, where he was received with the usual demonstrations of enthusiasm, His Royal Highness set out for Trichinopoly, which he left for Madras on the 12th, reaching the latter city the following morning. His reception was brilliant, the Governor, Commander-in-Chief, the Chief Justice, and the native Chiefs being in attendance, awaiting his arrival at the railway station. There was also a large assembly of Europeans and natives. His Royal Highness having replied to the address presented to him, set out for Government House, where quarters had been provided for him, passing through two dense lines of natives, who lined the route the whole distance, and who exhibited every mark of cordiality and respect. A levee was held at 1 p.m., and the Prince's bearing toward the Rajahs who were present is said to have produced a most favourable impression on their minds. A banquet followed in the evening, followed by fireworks, the whole town being brilliantly illuminated. The day following, being the anniversary of his father's death, His Royal Highness remained in the strictest seclusion. To-day he sails for Calcutta.

The Court of Queen's Bench has lately been the scene of a somewhat important trial, at which the Lord Chief Justice presided, and in which a Mr. Stacpoole, lately an officer in the 78th Highlanders, sought to recover damages from Lieutenant-Colonel Mackenzie, who commands that distinguished regiment, for having, by unfair treatment, driven him from the regiment. Evidence having been heard on both sides, and Counsel having severally addressed the jury, a verdict for the defendant was given, after only a few minutes' deliberation.

The Dog Show at the Alexandra Palace has proved a magnificent success. There were as many as 1,039 entries, including some 1,500 dogs, of well nigh every size and breed. There were 10 bloodhounds, in two classes, eighty-six mastiffs, in five classes—two champion, and three others, including one for puppies—some magnificent specimens of the St. Bernard, both rough and smooth-coated, Newfoundlands, Deerhounds, and Greyhounds. Then followed a tremendous array of Pointers (large, medium, and small size), Setters (English, black and tan, and Irish), Retrievers (black, and others than black), Water Spaniels, and other varieties of Spaniel, together with a few Otter Hounds. Then followed Fox Terriers, Sheep Dogs, both rough-coated and smooth, Dalmatians, Bull Dogs, large and small, Bull-terriers, large and small, with other varieties of Terrier, and also a numerous entry of fancy dogs, Pomeranians, Pugs, Maltese, King Charles's Spaniels, Blenheims, and Toy Terriers, besides nearly forty entries of puppies in two classes, sporting and non-sporting. The work of judging went on all Tuesday, and the decisions of the judges appear to have give general satisfaction, though not a few of the exhibitors imagined they ought to have received a commended, while others, no doubt, quarrelled with the places assigned them. The show was a grand one, and included among the finest specimens of almost every variety of breed. A Black Newfoundland was marked dangerous, and people properly gave him a very wide birth. Among the exhibitors were both the Prince and Princess of Wales.

On Thursday afternoon H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh laid the first stone of the new National Opera House, to be erected on the Victoria Embankment, A marquee had been erected for the accommodation of those invited to be present, being somewhere about 1500 in number, and the bands of the Coldstreams and the Honourable Artillery Company, with a guard of honour, were in attendance. The Duke, on his arrival, was received by Sir James Hogg, Chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Works, Mr. F. Fowler, the architect, and Mr. J. H. Mapleson, the director of the National Opera. An address to His Royal Highness having been read and responded to, the stone was laid with the usual forms and amid the cheers of those assembled. A luncheon was afterwards given at the St. Stephen's Club, the Duke of Edinburgh proposing the toast of the occasion, namely, "Prosperity to the Grand National Opera House." Another lunch also came off in honour of the event at Willis's Rooms. Bro. Mapleson presided, and there were present the majority of the members of the Board of Works, with a number of ladies and other guests. This, too, passed off very successfully. Bro. Mapleson certainly has our best wishes for the success of his project.

The Duke of Richmond, President of the Council, made a long speech on Wednesday, at the annual dinner of the West Sussex and Chichester Agricultural Society. In the course of his remarks his Grace defended the policy of the Government in restricting the traffic of cattle, pointing out that it was in the power of the English local authorities to stop all movements of cattle, when necessary in consequence of any outbreak of disease; that in Ireland the Orders of Council were differently carried out, there being in that portion of the Kingdom but one central authority, acting under the direction of the Irish Executive. The Ministry had not thought it wise to impose more severe restrictions on the movements of cattle. His Grace illustrated his case by quoting his own experience as one of the largest stock owners in the County of Sussex.

On Wednesday was a kind of full dress rehearsal of the annual play at Westminster. The selection this year is the Andria of Terence, and, according to the accounts published in the daily papers, the performance passed off very successfully for a first night. The dormitory where the play is acted was crowded, a considerable number of the spectators being ladies. On Thursday, the winter speeches and prize distribution came off at St. Paul's School. There were present a large number of the friends of the boys, together with a pretty strong muster of old Paulines. The speeches comprised the usual selection from the Greek, Latin, French, and English Drama, with other pieces specially adapted for recitation.

Another dreadful catastrophe has lately happened at Bremerhaven, a considerable number of people having been killed and injured by an explosion of dynamite on board the Mosel; but this is now ascertained, not to have been an accident, but a deliberate act on the part of a man named Thompson, who has since died, but who, previous to death, confessed that he had deliberately planned the destruction of the vessel. There has also occurred a terrible colliery explosion in Belgium, by which over a hundred lives have been sacrificed. Over 120 dead bodies have been recovered from the Swaithe Colliery. There appears to have been neglect somewhere in connection with the wreck of the Deutschland off the Kentish Coast. Though in the neighbourhood of two lightships, which signalled in the usual manner with rockets, and though it was known at Harwich that assistance was required, none was rendered till many hours after the vessel struck the rock, and consequently more lives were lost than would have been the case had assistance come more promptly. The loss of this vessel gave rise to a brief debate in the German Parliament, when one or two of the speakers expressed themselves somewhat bitterly.

There is news from Africa of the safe arrival, at Lounda, of the Livingstone East Coast Expedition, under the command of Lieutenant Cameron, R.N. From a telegram from that officer, to Sir H. Rawlinson, President of the Royal Geographical Society, it appears that the expedition was compelled, by adverse circumstances, to abandon the Congo route, but it followed the waterbeds lying between that river and the Zambesi.

Arrangements have been made by the Admiralty, by which Mr. Allen Young, the Arctic traveller, will communicate with Smith's Sound in the summer of 1876, in the hope of obtaining some news of the proceedings of the Arctic Expedition under Captain Nares.

At a meeting of the Common Council held on Thursday, the question of widening London Bridge came under discussion. The Bridge House Estates Committee brought up their report, in which they recommended that the bridge be widened in accordance with the plan of Bro. Horace Jones, the City Architect. A long discussion followed, the result being that the motion for the adoption of the report was lost by a majority of eight votes in a Court composed of ninety-eight members. The debate was accordingly adjourned.

The Shakers appear to have been having rather an uncomfortable time of it at Bristol, and other places. So great was the uproar in Colston Hall, when it was attempted to hold a meeting, that Mrs. Girling was not even heard, and none of the girls appear to have received any inspiration to indulge in a gay and festive dance. So vehemently was the dissatisfaction of the visitors expressed, that the Shakers abandoned the platform, and the assembly was only dispersed by extinguishing the gas.

The interest in Paris centres, for the moment, in the election, by the Legislative Assembly, of its seventy-five life members of the Senate. By a combination of the Legitimists with the Left, the latter appears to have achieved a great success. What effect this will have on the future Government of France is not yet apparent, but already there are rumours of a resignation of M. Buffet's Ministry. Telegrams have reached Constantinople from the officer in command of the Turkish forces in the Herzegovina, to the effect that the insurgents have been defeated, with very considerable loss. It also appears that the Sultan's Firman, guaranteeing certain important reforms in the Sultan's dominions, has been published, but a doubt exists whether these reforms will ever be worth much more than the paper on which they are written. It is further believed that the publication of this Firman is not particularly relished by the three great Eastern Powers of Europe, the Empires of Russia, Germany, and Austria. Very likely not, if the report be true, that the promised reforms are more extensive than those which the Powers in question were about to urge, for Turkey thus takes the wind out of her neighbours' sails. The situation of affairs in Spain remains unchanged. The Italian government, having bought up the railways, are now, it seems, about to adopt, in great part, General Garibaldi's scheme for improving the navigation of the Tiber. According to the latest advices from the Straits Settlements the Malays, variously estimated at from 400 to 800, have been utterly routed by a small detachment of English troops. If the rumours, on which the Standard, in a recent issue, contained some lengthy comments, be true, it is not unlikely we may have another Ashantee war. The King of Ashantee, and a former tributary, the King of Juabin, are at loggerheads, and the aspect of things is said to be so serious that Governor Strahan has ordered a hundred Houssas to the frontier, with a view to learning the true state of things and protecting, if necessary, the interests of the tribes which enjoy our protection.

We (New Zealand Herald) understand that the Masonic brethren of the English Constitution in this Province intend applying to the Grand Master, the Prince of Wales, for the institution of a Provincial Grand Lodge, and also to nominate for approval the name of a brother as Provincial Grand Master.

The Z., on resuming the chair, forcibly impressed on the officers the necessity of their punctuality in attending to their respective duties, as, without they set a good example, they could not hope that the Chapter could prosper. He then proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Comps. Wheeler and Balfour, as without their aid to night, as well as on many previous occasions, the work of the Chapter would have been left undone. He was thankful for their services in the past, but hoped the new officers would learn their duties so as to require less help in future. The Lodge was then duly closed.

During refreshment, and in response to the toast of the visitors, Bro. P.M. Smaile P.G.S.W. took occasion to compliment Bro. The Lodge was closed and the brethren adjourned to the banquet; the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given. Bro. Dallwood I.P.M., in proposing the health of the W.M., expressed himself highly gratified at the excellent way in which the working in Lodge had been conducted, observing that the rendering of the three degrees he had never heard surpassed. Several songs were sung, by the W.M., Bros. Knox, Dobson, &c., in excellent style, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

It was then proposed, seconded, and unanimously carried, that the banquet which takes place the first regular meeting in January be provided by Bro. King, of the Queen's Hotel. Bro. Colonel Beddek, being about to proceed to India, asked for his necessary certificate, and for his name to be retained on the list of members during his absence, which was readily complied with. Bro. Beachey P.M. announced to the brethren that, having obtained a warrant for an Arch Chapter in connection with the Devon Lodge, the consecration would take place on the 18th January 1876. The Lodge was then closed.

Hereward Lodge, No. 1332.—This Lodge held its meeting on Wednesday evening, 8th of December, at Bourn, Lincolnshire, and unanimously confirmed their previous lodge minutes, in their election of W.M. for the ensuing year, when the Rev. Daniel Aoe, D.D., P.P.G.C. for Lincolnshire, of Lodges Nos. 660,1232, and 1482, and at present Grand Chaplain of Royal Arch Chapter Provincial, and Mark Grand Lodge Provincial for Lincolnshire, was duly installed W.M. of Hereward Lodge, No. 1332, Bourn, Lincolnshire, 1875-76. The brethren were favoured with the distinguished presence of two of the Secretaries of our Masonic Charities in London, to do honour to the new W.M. One of those gentlemen attested that he had known their new W.M. for nearly twenty years, both as a clergyman in the metropolis, and as a member of the Craft; and in every relation of life he had proved their new Master as a gentleman of the highest honour and integrity. Several high officers, very eminent in the Craft, would have been present had not the weather proved extremely inclement. The brethren, however, who assembled on this auspicious occasion, spent a most enjoyable evening, not the shadow of a shade to disturb their harmony. The speeches too, delivered, were admirable, especially those of our London Secretaries on the utility of our Masonic Charities and their urgent claims for support. The Lodge at Bourn has very creditably for sometime past worked its way successfully under difficulties, and it is confidently expected that the new Master, with the Past Masters, and other honoured brethren, will fully prove that the Hereward Lodge has undeniable claims for distinction and success, to which it is entitled by charitable exertions and quiet perseverance in well doing.

The Gilbert Greenall Lodge, No. 1350.—This Lodge held its regular meeting on Tuesday, the 14th of December, at the Masonic Rooms, Sankey-street, Warrington. Present—Bros. William Richardson W.M., C. Crosier J.W., T. Auckland Secretary, T. Sutton Treasurer, J. Hannah I.G. Visitors—Bros. D. W. Finney P.M. P.Z., &c., Brierley, Woods, Mossop, and Hawkins. The business was of the ordinary routine character. One candidate was proposed for initiation. The brethren afterwards adjourned for refreshment.

Commercial Lodge, No. 1391.—This Lodge held its 70th meeting on Saturday, 11th of December, at the Masonic Hall, Leicester. Present—Bros. R. A. Barber jun. W.M., E. Mason S.W., R. Moore J.W., J. Ewing Sec., A. Chamberlin S.D., Geo. Matt J.D., C. J. McBride D.C., H. Meadows and J. W. Hunter Stewards, E. H. Butler I.G., C. Bembridge Tyler. P.M. Bro. Geo. Clifton. Visitors—Bros. S. S. Hutchinson was balloted for, unanimously elected, and initiated by the W.M.; the first lecture on the tracing board was afterwards impressively given by Bro. Ewing, Sec.; over thirty members were present, both in Lodge and at the supper table; the usual toasts were given by the W.M., and a most enjoyable evening was brought to a close shortly before eleven o'clock.

Baldwin Lodge, No. 1398.—This Lodge held its monthly meeting on Monday, the 13th December, at the Castle, Dalton-in Furness. Present—Bros. Frederick Bell S.W., John Walton J.W., Robert Blake Secretary, C. Godby J.D., Rev. J. M. Morgan P.G.C. Chaplain, William Pratt Tyler. P.M. Bro. William Whiteside. Visitor—Bro. R. Cowdery. Business—Bro. W. Whiteside P.M. conducted the Lodge during the unavoidable absence of Bro. Clarke W.M., and several matters relating to the welfare of the Lodge were brought forward.

Era Lodge, No. 1423.—The regular meeting of this Lodge was held on Saturday, the 11th inst., at the King's Arms Hotel, Hampton Court. Present—Bros. J. W. Baldwin W.M., E. H. Thiellay P.G.A.G.P. Middlesex S.W., J. Baxter Langley J.W., T. J. Sabine P.P.G.S.B. Middlesex, Treasurer, F. Walters P.P.G.P. Middlesex Secretary, E. W. Devereux S.D., S. Wolff J.D., A. Loos I.G., B. Wright D.C., and P.M.'s J. T. Moss P.P.G.R. Middlesex, H. A. Dubois P.P.A.G.D.C. Middlesex, &c. The Lodge was opened and the minutes were confirmed. Bros. A. Rumbelow, F. Henreux and F. H. Harvey were raised to the 3rd degree. The Bye-laws of the Lodge were read, and the election for W.M. then took place, which was unanimously in favour of Bro. J. Baxter Langley; J. T. Sabine was re-elected Treasurer, and F. Gilbert Tyler. The Audit Committee was appointed, and a jewel, of the value of 12 guineas, was voted to the W.M. on his retiring from the chair. A petition on behalf of a distressed brother was received and duly signed. It was then resolved that application be made for a new Chapter, entitled the "Era." The Lodge was then closed, and refreshment followed labour.

The Great City Lodge, No. 1426.—The members of this prosperous Lodge assembled in goodly array on Saturday last, the 11th inst., at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street. The Lodge was opened punctually at the time appointed on the summons, by the I.P.M., Bro. Nathan B. Headon, who was supported by Bros. J. Hamilton Townsend, the W.M. of the Lodge, James Stevens P.M., Edward Moody P.M. Secretary, John Sees S.W., Blackie S.D., J. W. Catchpole J.D., Thomas D.C., W. H. Hook Organist, Charles Taylor 1st St., W. Steadman Tyler, &c. The Lodge was opened with the usual preliminaries, after which the candidates for raising were examined as to their proficiency, which resulting satisfactorily, Bro. Headon raised Bros. Wright and Wynne. Bro. James Stevens then took the chair, and raised Bros. Evenett and Cadiot. The remaining candidates for the sublime degree, Bros. W. E. Thompson and Bertram, were then introduced, and were raised, the ceremony being performed by Bro. Thompson P.M. 177. In each case the ceremony was conducted in a most able and impressive manner. Bro. J. H. Townend now took the chair, and passed Bros. Powell, Keith Frith, Luggar and Hudd. The Lodge was resumed to the 1st degree, and a ballot was taken for Messrs. Julius J. Wyler, Robert Lawson, John March Ginders, and Clement Royd, which was unanimous. Messrs. Shore, Atkins, Wyler, Lawson and Ginders, were then severally initiated into the Order by the W.M., who performed the ceremony in a most perfect manner, Bro. Stevens describing the working tools. Bro. Moody's motion (that from the 1st January 1876 the Initiation Fee be raised to ten guineas) was then discussed, and on being put to the meeting, was unanimously carried. After the transaction of other business the Lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to supper, which was served in an ample manner. On the removal of the cloth the W.M. briefly spoke to the several Loyal and Masonic toasts. To that of Lord Skelmersdale and the rest of the Grand Officers, Bro. John Boyd P.G.P. replied: he referred to the gratification it had afforded him to be present at the Consecration of the Great City Lodge, and he now, on this, his first visit since that occasion, complimented the members on the great success they had achieved. The toast of the Visitors was replied to by Bro. Little, who was followed by Bro. Swallow, who thanked the brethren for the kind invitation which they had given him, as the W.M. of the City of Westminster Lodge, to pay them a visit; he only regretted that he had not been able to bring more of his officers with him. Bro. Swallow concluded by expressing a hope that the W.M. and Officers of the Great City Lodge would honour the City of Westminster Lodge with their company on the occasion of its next meeting. Bro. Townsend, on behalf of the Officers of his Lodge, said he should have great pleasure in paying the return visit. During the evening Bros. Stevens, Hook, Middleton, Bertram, and others, gave some capital songs, and the proceedings did not conclude till a very late hour had been reached. Amongst the visitors were Bros. John Boyd P.G.P., R.W. Little G.S.W. (Middlesex), Secretary Girls' School, J. G. Yelland G.S.B. Herts, Swallow W.M. City of Westminster, White J.W. City of Westminster, Simpson 405 Sec. Con., Ebbutt 463, Allison 186, Charles Palmer McKay 720, Marsden 205, Portway 1260, W. W. Morgan 1385, J. K. Pitt 463, Walters 1445, Dr. O'Connor 363.

Alexandra Lodge, No. 1511, Hornsea.—The annual meeting of the brethren of this Lodge was held at Hornsea, near Hull, on Wednesday afternoon, when the W.M., Bro. Thos. Oates, presided. There was a large attendance, including several past officers of rank. P.M. Bro. John Thompson felt gratified in presenting his first annual statement, as it showed such success and progress as was almost unparalleled in any young Lodge. It was started just a year ago with only 13 members, and he could now boast of 42; the Lodge had paid a very heavy sum for expenses, which was always incidental to a new Lodge, and still it completed its year with a balance in hand. The election of W.M. for the ensuing year was then proceeded with, and the choice of the brethren fell unanimously on Bro. Benjamin L. Wells, who had officiated as S.W. during the past year. P.M. Bro. John Thompson was re-elected Treasurer and Bro. Crier Tyler. A vote of thanks to the retiring Master, for his praiseworthy efforts in conducting the affairs of the Lodge, was proposed by P.M. Bro. Charles Wells (ex-Mayor of Hull), and seconded by Bro. J. Brooke Prov. S.J.D. and W.M. of the Minerva Lodge, No. 254. This was carried with acclamation, and W.M. Bro. Oates briefly acknowledged the compliment paid to him. The ceremony of installation will take place on Wednesday, the 12th of next month, when a large and influential attendance is expected. At the conclusion of the Lodge business, the usual loyal and Craft toasts were honoured, and the proceedings were enlivened with some excellent songs, one being an impromptu, written by a member of the Lodge, and was received by the brethren with hearty applause.

Addiscombe Lodge, No. 1556.—An emergency meeting of this Lodge was held on the 11th instant, at the Alma Tavern, Addiscombe. Present—Bros. S. T. Turquand W.M., T. F. Mallett S.W., J. Parsons Smith J.W., W. S. Masterman acting P.M., H. E. Frances P.G.D. Treasurer, Gray S.D., Pill J.D., L. Turquand I.G. and thirteen other brethren, including Bros. Pettitt No. 95, and Broomhall No. 778, who were visitors, when Bros. Lowrie and Wheeler were ably raised to the sublime degree of Master Masons. Bro. Foster was passed to the second degree, and Bros. Godwin, Colston and Davis were duly initiated into the Order. At the consecration of the Lodge, in August last, there were only seven members, since that period twelve brethren have been initiated, and two joining members have also been added, making the number on the roll at the present time twenty-one; this large increase in so short a period fully justifies the brethren who exerted their influence in forming this Lodge, and proves that such a step was absolutely necessary to meet the requirements of the neighbourhood. An excellent banquet was provided, to which the brethren did justice, after which the usual Masonic toasts were duly given, and responded to most heartily. Bro. Broomhall, in his reply on behalf of himself and brother visitor, expressed his pleasure and surprise, that in a country Lodge the ritual and ceremonies were worked with such accuracy, order, and solemnity, equal indeed to any working he had heard in a London Lodge. The brethren separated with general congratulations and hearty good wishes.

Duke of Connaught Lodge, 1558.—This new Lodge held its second regular meeting at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on Thursday, the 19th inst. Present—Bros. W. Snowden W.M., W. S. Cackett S.W., T. Sleap J.W., J. Dann P.M. and Secretary, W. Mitchell S.D., A. Runacres J.D., J. Kemp I.G., W. Chalk W.S., F. Geisler Tyler; also Bros. C. E. Power, T. Taylor, C. Sims, R. Pearman, W. Rowlands, J. E. Pentreath, G. Harris, J. H. Swan, J. Emins; also Visitors, Bros. C. B. Wright, Asaph 1319, S. J. Harvey, Royal Jubilee 72, C. E. Towell, Victoria 1356, J. M. Walters, Westbourne 133, T. T. Dryson, Royal Union 382. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes confirmed. The W.M. vacated the chair, and Bro. P.M. Dann officiated. Bros. Power, Taylor, Sims, Pearman and Pentreath were duly passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. A ballot was taken for Bro. W. Rowlands, of the Royal Jubilee Lodge, No. 72, as a joining member, which being unanimous, Bro. Rowlands was admitted and enrolled as a member of the Lodge. Ballots were taken for Messrs. G. Harris, J. H. Swan and J. Emins, and those gentlemen were regularly initiated. The W.M. resumed the chair. The Secretary read a copy of a communication from Grand Lodge, dated 7th December 1839. Bro. Sleap J.W. moved that the question of raising the initiation fee, from five to seven guineas, be taken into consideration. Bro. Mitchell S.D. seconded the motion, which was carried by a large majority. Bro. John Morgan Walters, of the Westbourne Lodge, No. 733, was proposed as a joining member. Candidates for initiation were proposed. All Masonic business being ended, the Lodge was closed and adjourned till the second Thursday in January next. The brethren then went to refreshment, after which the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were honoured, and the remainder of the evening was spent in a most happy and convivial manner.

Morecambe Lodge, No. 1561, Lancaster.—The monthly meeting of this Lodge was held at the North Western Hotel, Morecambe, on the 3rd inst., Bro. Dr. J. D. Moore W.M. occupying the Master's chair. There were several members present from the Lancaster Lodges. Bros. Ward and Bannister were passed from Entered Apprentices to Fellow Craftsmen, and at the close of the charge the W.M. (Bro. Dr. Moore) gave a lecture on the Second Degree, which was highly appreciated by those present. A cordial vote of thanks was passed to Bro. Storey 281, for his present to the Lodge of an oil-cloth. Two candidates were proposed for initiation, and the Lodge was closed in peace and harmony.

City of Westminster Lodge, No. 1563.—The second meeting of this Lodge, since its consecration, was held on the 9th inst., at the Café Royal, Air-street, Regent-street. The W.M. and officers were all in their respective places. Bros. Swallow W.M. (P.M. of the Royal Union Lodge, Uxbridge), the Rev. P.M. Holden S.W., White J.W., C. A. Cottebrune P.G.P. Treasurer, Scott (P.M. 749) Secretary, Phillip S.D., Turner J.D., W. C. Parsons (W.M. 180) I.G., Shand D.C., Hutchinson W.S., and Bros. Willis, Gibson, Worrell, &c. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes were confirmed. Bros. Bishop, Turner, Browning and Hart being duly qualified, were passed to the 2nd degree, and Mr. Gardner was balloted for, accepted, and initiated into the Order. The working was perfectly rendered, and with due solemnity. The bye-laws proposed were submitted to the Lodge by the Secretary, when it was proposed by Bro. W. C. Parsons I.G., and seconded by Bro. Shand D.C., "That the same should be printed, and a copy sent to every brother of the Lodge, so that they should be fully discussed at the next meeting." This was carried unanimously. The Lodge was then closed until the second Thursday in January. A very excellent banquet followed, and after the removal of the cloth the W.M. presided, giving the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, and a most enjoyable evening was passed. Bro. Lancaster S.W. 1201 was present as a visitor.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Company has been formed for the establishment of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, and for the publication of newspapers, books, pamphlets, &c., connected with Freemasonry.

The inadequate representation of the Craft in the public press of this country has long been a subject of regret, and the wish has not unfrequently been expressed that a journal might be established, in the interests of the Order, which should be owned and conducted entirely by members. This wish it is the object of the present Company to carry into effect. THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE will be the property of Freemasons, and its devotion and loyalty to their cause will thus be effectively secured. It has been decided to raise the requisite capital in shares, of a small amount, in order that a large number of the Fraternity may have the opportunity of acquiring an interest in the undertaking. As it is not proposed to call up more than 50 per cent. of the capital, it will be seen that such an interest may be obtained at an immediate outlay of £1 per share.

If only a small proportion of the Freemasons in the United Kingdom subscribe to THE CHRONICLE it will suffice to guarantee the Company from actual loss, while the more numerous the subscribers the greater will be the opportunities of the Paper for promoting the interests of the Craft.

It is intended that THE CHRONICLE shall contain:—

Leading articles on subjects of interest.
Special reports of all Masonic Meetings.
A Weekly summary of News.
Antiquarian Notes and Sketches relating to the Craft.
Reviews of Books.
Critical notices of current events of the day.

Its columns will also be open for the discussion of topics interesting to the Brotherhood.

On questions of religion and politics the new Journal will assume a position of strict neutrality.

Intending subscribers should fill up the Form of Application and forward it, together with the deposit, to the London and County Bank, 112 Aldersgate Street, London, E.C.

In conclusion, the Members of the Provisional Committee desire to express their grateful acknowledgment of the many promises of support they have already received from influential Members of the Craft, in various parts of the Country, and they earnestly appeal to all who approve of their project to labour with them to make it a brilliant and enduring success.

Prospectuses, with Forms of Application for Shares, can be obtained from the General Manager.

THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tasted the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to expose any hoax, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Professor Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink, and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per dozen, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior bouquet at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

THE

A WEEKLY RECORD OF MASONIC INTELLIGENCE.

VOL. II.—No. 52. SATURDAY, 25th DECEMBER 1875. [PRICE THREEPENCE. Registered at the G.P.O. as a Newspaper.

OUR SECOND VOLUME.

WITH the present number of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE, we close our Second Volume. Twelve months since we were just preparing to launch our projected journal. Amid much encouragement, many predictions of our ultimate success, and numerous promises of help, we ventured to put forth our programme. Some of our critics, perhaps a few of our enemies, were of opinion that, in that programme, we aimed too high, and made promises which could not be fulfilled. We were content, however, in spite of the sneers of half-hearted friends, to allow our performances to speak for themselves, and now, with the issue of our fifty-second number, we may fairly claim that we have accomplished all we intended. We promised our readers a high-class Masonic journal, which should inform them, not merely of all the current events of any importance in the Masonic world, but which should keep before their eyes the literary and antiquarian lore in connection with the Craft. We promised that while we should carefully veil from the vulgar those things which should not be discussed in a newspaper, we should approach the consideration of Masonry in no narrow or pedantic spirit. It was our ambition to be the organ of intercommunication between Masons in various parts of the globe, and in this also we have succeeded beyond our most sanguine expectations. In America and in Australia our articles have been freely quoted by the general press, as well as by journals devoted to the affairs of the Order. We have found many warm friends, and many readers, in the United States, while at home we have received cordial support from the brotherhood. Our circulation has steadily increased, and it is still increasing. The need of a respectable organ of Masonic opinion was widely felt when we stepped forward to supply the want, and, notwithstanding the apathy with which Masons have hitherto regarded the journalism of the Order, we have been gladly recognised as an authority, and welcomed as a friend. The apathetic attitude of Masons with reference to their own press has arisen, we believe, in consequence of the inferior quality of the literary menu with which that press in the past had been content to regale the brethren. Any stale odds and ends of Masonic news were considered quite good enough for the columns of a Masonic journal, and the literary matter which was served up by some of our contemporaries was generally beneath contempt. Stale platitudes and worn out truisms may, indeed, content dull minds, and furnish the material for the lucubrations of respectable stupidity, but the Order, which comprises in its ranks the culture and intelligence of the middle and upper classes, assuredly demands that its representative organs shall, at least, be on a footing of equality with the high class journals which cater for the intellectual and social wants of the public. What we have done in the past is, at least, a guarantee that, in the future, we shall not permit ourselves to fall behind our ideal. It will be our aim to make THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE still more widely representative of the opinions and the wants of the Masonic world. Many new features of interest will be added to our programme, and the Masonic Portraits, which have given such general satisfaction, will be continued from week to week. We may say, with regard to this latter feature of our journal, that our aim is to present our readers with faithful literary sketches of Masons who are widely known, or who have deserved well of the Order. Mere biographical notices of distinguished living persons are almost always unsatisfactory. They are usually written in a flattering style, and often for purposes which are anything but worthy of respectable journalists. If we have discarded the mere vulgar method of ticketing a man with his name and titles, our readers may feel assured that we have done so for excellent reasons. If our sketches prove to be faithful transcripts of the peculiarities of the persons who, figuratively speaking, will honour us with "sittings," they will speak for themselves. If they be unfaithful or inaccurate, they will, of course, miss their mark, and we, at all events, shall know when and why we have failed. We may add that, although in these papers we shall speak freely of those whose lineaments we shall attempt to draw, we shall always speak kindly, and shall never permit any feelings that are not Masonic to influence our pen. We shall chide without malice, and praise, where praise is deserved, without one thought of insincerity or flattery. Having said thus much of the past and future, we may venture with some show of reason to urge upon our brethren the task of making THE CHRONICLE yet more widely known to the Order. Every one of our readers may render us some service in this respect. They can make us known to those of the brethren who have not yet looked into our pages. They may help to disabuse the minds of some among us of those prejudices against Masonic journalism, which we are glad to know are slowly giving way before a more enlightened consideration of the scope and duties of the Order. Our brethren on the other side of the Atlantic have welcomed the Press with open arms. Nearly every district under the government of a Grand Lodge has its Masonic paper or magazine, and the general newspapers devote much of their space to Masonic intelligence. Here, while there is less apathy on the subject of Masonic journalism than existed a few years since, yet much still remains to be done before the Masonic press of England is placed upon an equality, so far as circulation and influence are concerned, with the Masonic press of the States. We leave this matter in the hands of our readers, fully assured, as we are, that they will do what is thought just and right. With the close of the year men are accustomed to review their past conduct, and make resolutions for the future. It is a wholesome custom, and one which commends itself to every mind. We trust that our friends, in their mental examination of duties but half fulfilled, or claims but tardily recognised, will give some thought to the great task on which we have laboured through the now rapidly fleeting year. Some of them could have lightened that labour had they chosen. Perhaps the idea of attempting to put a shoulder to the wheel has occurred to many a brother who now regrets that his good intentions were not realised. At this season, when the minds of Christian and Jew alike are chastened by the holiest of associations, the recollection of duties unperformed is a portion of that religious discipline which is common to every creed. To remember and to amend is the duty of the just man. We will say no more on this subject, and we now take our leave with hearty wishes that all our readers may spend a jovial Christmas, and may be blessed with a Happy New Year.

AN EASTERN STAR.

FEW of us who can only boast of average inches are able to understand or appreciate very tall men. Malignant little imps of five feet five or so, will tell you that the giant of the evening, who towers head and shoulders above the other guests, and upon whose arm the lady he takes down to dinner looks like a white camelia on a black coat, is a slow, dull creature; that his circulation must be feeble, because the heart, which is about the same size in all men, has so much additional work to do in forcing the blood to the extremities. Others will tell you that a very tall man can hardly ever put his feet down without treading upon somebody's corns; he cannot, we are informed, sit at table like other people, because of the extreme length of his legs. "He is always shaky on his pins," says a third detractor, whose nether limbs are so short that he could not sit on horseback without imminent risk of sliding from the saddle. "He talks you down, with his big, strong voice," says another; "he looks at little people with the same contempt with which a Newfoundland dog regards a terrier, and roars out his words as if it were the privilege of big men to ride rough shod over the world." Notwithstanding that these hostile opinions are very general, we confess to a liking for tall men. We have usually found them to be harmless and straightforward fellows, free from guile, and as tender hearted as the fair sex. Here, for example, is a gentleman whose great stature is his most striking personal peculiarity. He is a kindly giant, whose heart is easily touched by the tale of woe. He is not the man to take his ease by his own fire-side while duty calls him to labour for his fellows. An active philanthropist, he is always present at the elections of the Masonic Charitable Institutions, and happy, indeed, is that orphan or that aged Mason whose cause he has espoused. He is none of your roaring giants, of whom little men speak so bitterly; his comely features are grave, and his deportment is quiet and decorous. Yet, under the calm exterior is hidden a fund of humour, and he possesses histrionic ability of no mean order. The calm face is flexible enough to express all the varied emotions of humanity, and the tall form is sufficiently graceful and well balanced to assume, with ease, any attitude or contortion. Under that close cropped, stubble hair, lies a brain which possesses the rare power of imitation. Our giant has that glorious gift, which in all ages has made the Mime attractive to his fellow creatures. Men who possess these attributes are always irresistibly compelled to exhibit them. Acting and mimicry are necessary to their very existence. We do not call our brother charitable because he is always ready to display his talents for the benefit of others, we base his claim to the title upon far more sterling qualities. The tale of distress readily excites his active sympathy, and he never draws tight his purse strings when money can do aught to heal the wounds of the afflicted. Some men's philanthropy consists of mere words; they can say kind things, or express a vague pity for the unfortunate, but they do not understand the art of giving. The line of their charity is drawn at the pocket. So far as the Lodge funds can help, they are willing to hold up a hand and vote relief, but when they are pressed to contribute, they give nothing, or give reluctantly. The highest authority tells us that cheerful giving is the true test of philanthropy. Soft words may sound sweet enough to the ear, but they do not place bread upon the table, or mend the "looped and windowed raggedness" of the deserving poor. Our kindly giant, in the noble simplicity of his heart, usually pities the distressed in those plain figures which represent good and lawful money. But he is careful to remember that true charity begins at home. We have no words which will adequately express the contempt we feel for men who give for the sake of the hollow applause of the multitude, and who neglect those who are dependent upon them. The man who is zealous in the cause of charity, who is a boon companion at table, and a jolly good fellow everywhere but at his own fire-side, is so contemptible a being that we will not waste words in talking of him; his own conscience, if he has any, must bring him his fitting punishment. Our hero, like many big men, is gentle and kind to children. The youngsters, by the bye, seem to have an instinctive knowledge of character, and we are almost inclined to think that that man must have something good in him to whom an infant will open its arms. Little children approach our giant with perfect confidence, and play pranks with his tall, burly form, which remind one strongly of the playful fooling of the Lilliputians with Gulliver. At a juvenile party he looks like a tall pine, surrounded with a dense under growth of graceful ferns. This association of extreme youth and maturity is always delightful to right-thinking persons; the merriment of the youngsters, the simulation or real jollity of the grown person, the real Freemasonry of mind between guileless manhood and innocent infancy—all this to minds that are not jaded with over work, or satiated with pleasure—is like the music of angelic voices in some heavenly choir. But we are forgetting that our giant is famous for Masonic excellence, as well as for the social virtues. He has presided over one of the most influential Lodges in London, and has passed, with éclat, the first chair in a Royal Arch Chapter, and is now the Scribe. He is Secretary of one Lodge, and perpetual Director of Ceremonies in another. His Masonic duties are performed with intelligence, tact, and zeal, and he is justly regarded as a worthy pillar of the Order. So sincere a man as he is must have many friends, and his friendship wears well. Some men never can keep their friends for any length of time. They are constantly forming new acquaintances, and they wear them out rapidly. Our hero retains the hearty good will and fraternal affection of such brethren who know him. They respect and love him for his simplicity, for the firmness with which he pursues the straight and narrow path of rectitude, for his high Masonic ability, and for those talents and that strength and force of character which have contributed to raise him conspicuously above his fellows. We regret that our brother has been prostrated by a painful illness, which temporarily extinguished his mimic fires, and removed him from the sphere of active usefulness in which he delights to shine. He is, however, so far recovered as to resume those duties which are consonant with his feelings. We wish him God speed on the road to perfect health, and many years of active work and wholesome enjoyment.

> "This tall fellow, good sir, is sick,
> I pray you use him gently.
> Sir Leech, what says thy skill;
> Canst cure this mystic malady
> As readily as a broken pate,
> Or must we dub thee dunce, and seek
> Some other dabbler in the healing art?"

MANAGEMENT OF THE BOYS' SCHOOL.

WE are glad the year has not passed without a full and exhaustive report on a subject which has been greatly exercising the mind of Masonry of late, and causing, we may add, no small amount of uneasiness. In the early summer it was known that serious differences had arisen between the scholastic and managerial staffs of our Boys' School. Agreement between these at length appears to have become conspicuous by its absence, to differ being the one solitary point on which there was a community of feeling between the two. But, further than this, Bro. Tew, D.P.G.M. for West Yorkshire, published a pamphlet, in which he expressed an opinion that the School was not so economically managed as it should be, the brunt of his attack being levelled, principally, at the official expenditure, which he considered far too high under the circumstances. In the autumn, a second pamphlet appeared, from the pen, of Bros. Tew and Rev. O. Perrott, the late Head Master, in which the same opinion as to the financial management was expressed, but entering into greater detail. It contained also a mass of matter relating to the recent differences between the Secretary and the late Head Master, which ended at length in the resignation by the latter of his important office. A long discussion ensued in these columns, and in those of our contemporary, and considerable bitterness was exhibited by the disputants. At length it was determined by the governing body of the School to institute an inquiry into the merits of the charges made against the management by Bros. Tew and Perrott. This Committee devoted a considerable amount of time, and the utmost care in investigating the several matters which had formed the subject of such public denunciations, and without calling in the assistance of an accountant, for which authority had been given them, they recently presented their report, completely exonerating the school officials from the charges which had been made. As it was no business of the committee to investigate the differences which had prevailed between the Secretary and the late Head Master, of course this part of the question remains as it was. But the point which was of the most importance, has happily been settled, and henceforth we hope the course of the School will progress without further disturbance.

We can hardly find words to express the pleasure we feel at a result so satisfactory. We do not doubt for one moment that the views so strenuously urged by Bros. Tew and Perrott were urged bonâ fide, in the firm belief that the office expenditure was excessive, and that the accounts presented to the public did not appear, perhaps, as clear to the minds of the uninformed as they might have been. But it cannot be other than a matter for the heartiest congratulation to learn that the powers that be have done their duty honourably. It would have been a great blow to the Craft had any irregularities been brought home to those charged with preparing the accounts, and, we repeat, we cannot find words to express our pleasure at the result of the late rigid investigation.

Now that this unpleasant subject is at an end, we trust the career of the School may be altogether unchequered. Bro. Binckes may be, occasionally, over-zealous in his anxiety to promote the welfare of the School. He is, no doubt, a little impetuous—we trust he will pardon us for saying so—in his mode of argument, but none have ever doubted his marvellous activity in furthering the good cause. We need only compare the proceeds of each festival before he was Secretary with what was realised this year in order to gauge the measure of his zeal and its results. Accordingly, we congratulate him most heartily on the result, and we trust that Bros. Tew and Perrott, finding the charges advanced by them have no basis of fact to rest upon, will, as the men of honour and gentlemen we know them to be, drop any further antagonism, and heartily co-operate with the rest of the Masonic world in promoting the interests of this important charity.

BURIED ALIVE.

From the Keystone.

MY case is not without precedent. Others have been buried alive before me, and by good fortune, exhibited evidences of consciousness in time to secure a rescue. But I presume that I am the first Freemason ever subjected to this discipline. Will the readers of the Keystone listen to my story?

My health from boyhood has been feeble. I am not scholar enough to describe, or even name my peculiar ailment; but I was always hard to wake from sleep, sometimes had fainting fits, suffered much from swimming in the head, and the like. I became a Mason at the age of twenty-four, and found the association, in all respects, pleasing and useful. The Lodge worked carefully and well. No erring brother stood a chance of being overlooked until his sin grew chronic within him. We had no disreputable brethren among us. Yet we were social, and had high jinks whenever the Craft was "called from labour to refreshment." We sung the Masonic songs well and freely. Twice a year a bounteous banquet was spread, which, with the attendant jollabilities, was always anticipated by the members with rare relish. In brief, ours was more than an ordinary Lodge.

One afternoon I had gone into the woods to select a piece of timber for a particular work—I am a wagon maker by trade—and finding a suitable tree, I began to cut it down. While doing so a large snake came suddenly out from a hollow place near the ground, and passed directly between my feet. I always had an antipathy to snakes, and the suddenness of its appearance threw me into a fit. I fell backward to the ground as if dead. The woodchopper who was with me took me on his shoulder—I am a very light weight—and carried me directly to my boarding-house, summoning a physician, whose office we passed, to wait upon me.

All efforts to resuscitate me, however, failed. Applications of all sorts, even the most pungent vivisections, the hot bath, electricity itself, was tried upon me; but my appearance was that of a dead man, and at last the medical practitioner declared that "life was extinct."

It was about this time that my dormant senses returned to me; at least I cannot remember with distinctness anything which occurred before I heard—and, oh! how distinctly the voice fell upon my ears, "He is dead!" Some one remarking upon my florid appearance, and the warmth of my flesh, I heard the doctor explain, with quite a display of erudition, that "such phenomena were not rare in persons of my peculiar temperament; but that these were not appearances of vitality." He advised, however, that no steps should be taken for my burial until the plainest evidences of death were apparent. Then I heard the doctor leave the room, and the conversation of the two or three persons around me, expressing surprise (no one gave utterance to grief) at my sudden death. Then my body was laid out in the usual manner, but with what I thought to be unnecessary coarseness and indelicacy, and I was left, nude and alone, in a dark room.

At this time, I confess, my feelings were of rather a ludicrous nature, mingled with some indignation, than of fear. I felt so confident of reviving in a few hours that the thought of how droll would be the scene of my unexpected resuscitation was uppermost in my mind. I had that indistinct perception of passing objects common to a state of coma, yet could concentrate my ideas upon a single point with considerable force. The lines, rang in my mind. The job on which I had been engaged occupied much of my thoughts, and I computed over and over the measurements of the timber upon which I was reflecting at the moment of my attack.

The night passed rapidly enough and daylight seemed as plain to me, through my closed lids, as on any other occasion. Then I became a silent witness of a scene never to be eradicated from my memory.

A delegation from the Lodge came to the room, and, for a considerable period, stood around me in consultation. Their words were tender and sympathetic. They had telegraphed, as I learned, to my widowed mother, and the funeral would proceed as soon as she arrived. At a called meeting, the evening before, they had assumed all the expenses of my interment, together with those for a monument, which they had already ordered. They had adopted eulogistic resolutions in my honour. They had, in brief, taken prompt steps to assure my mother, my friends, and the entire community, of their respect for my memory.

Now I was laid in the coffin, and my body removed to the Masonic Hall, where a guard of brethren was detailed to stand watch over me through the second night. It must have been one or two o'clock in the morning that a final consultation was held over my body, to decide the solemn question of death. The ruddy appearance of my skin, and the high temperature of my flesh, before adverted to, had excited much surprise, and no less than four physicians, together with the coroner, several experienced undertakers, and others, stood around me to settle the question.

And now, for the first time, I began to feel some alarm. The reader will, of course, understand that my mind was not in a logical condition. In truth, it must have been in a feeble state of action, so much so, that I had not previously contemplated the possibility of premature burial, nor realised the horrible condition in which I was placed. But as one after the other tests failed, when acrid substances put under my eyelids, and sharp instruments penetrating my nerves, and great charges of galvanism, throwing my muscles into spasms, failed to elicit a single evidence of real life; when I heard the coroner and the undertakers, one and all, declare me "dead as Julius Cæsar"—in fact, when the last of the experts ceased his experiments, and retired from the Lodge-room, a horrible fear began to come over me, to which language is inadequate to give expression, a fear which continued but with ever-increasing intentness until the end of the chapter.

My life was saved by the fortuitous circumstance of a railroad accident, which prevented the arrival of my mother. This necessitated placing my body in a vault, that upon her coming she might once more look upon my face, before my remains were finally interred. In all other respects the funeral services proceeded as though I was to be placed in mother earth. The beautiful Masonic services were performed in opening a Funeral Lodge, my coffin lying near the altar in the centre. The appointment of a Marshal, his orderly arrangements for a procession, the beautiful prayer of the Chaplain, the selections of pall-bearers—how well I understand these details! Every word of the Master's eulogy fell upon my ear, and I followed him, mentally, line by line, and as he recited that funeral poem, commencing

It would be spinning out this subject unnecessarily to describe the procession and the proceedings at the Church and receiving vault. Suffice that all things were done with exceeding gravity and decorum. My body was taken first to the Methodist church, where a funeral discourse was given, in which my character was tenderly reviewed; then to the graveyard, where I was deposited, as I have said, in one of the vaults, fortunately open to the air. At the suggestion of one of those who had retained a lurking scepticism as to the fact of my death, the lid of the coffin immediately above my face was slightly loosened, to which circumstance I probably owe my life. The horrors of that night why should I relate? Consciousness fully returned. One by one my muscles yielded to my agonised will, and I moved my feet and hands, and opened my eyelids; I screamed aloud. More than once I must have fainted and recovered. And when my mother, tottering into that horrible receptacle of the dead, came to look upon my face, it was bathed with a clammy perspiration, the eyes were open, and an expression of horror overspread it, which was too much for her affectionate heart. She fell upon my coffin senseless, and was long in being revived.

I need not say that no time was lost in releasing me from my confined situation, and restoring me by the aid of hot baths and tenderest care, to strength. A handsome sum of money was made up, by which I was enabled to travel for several months in the company of my mother, and until the horrible impressions of that premature interment faded from my mind.

We have to thank Messrs. Claudius, Chant and Sheppard for two very handsome presentation copies, one plain, the other coloured, of their recently published portrait of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as M.W. Grand Master of England. The pose is easy, the likeness excellent, and the regalia quite en règle. Considering the smallness of the cost, the plain lithograph, without frame, of course, being only sixpence on ordinary paper, and one shilling on India paper, while for the coloured one, or the aquagraph—which is to water colours what the oleograph is to oil paintings—the charge is but two shillings, we think the publishers ought to have a very large sale. The price of the one, with a simple gilt frame—all the more effective for being simple—is half a guinea, and of the coloured, twelve shillings and sixpence. We should add that the frame is washable, and thus the portrait may be said, in a certain sense, to be everlasting.

THE ANTIQUITY OF MASONRY.

REPRINTED FROM "THE NEW ENGLAND FREEMASON."

Thus also of the decorations known as the egg and tongue mouldings. The tools of the ancient Egyptian artisans have been found, and resemble in shape those in use at this day. The mallet and the wedge were found in the Pyramids, and Burton also found one in a tomb, with a basket of drills, chisels, bows, &c., that had lain there perhaps twenty centuries before Cambyses invaded Egypt.

The working dress of the Egyptian Mason of the old times consisted of the apron, similar to what it now is; judging from the paintings yet extant, this, with a pair of sandals, constituted his entire working dress in hot weather.

My knowledge of Egyptian lore does not enable me to affirm with confidence the inference which may strike some of my readers; but it is singular that several of the numerous Egyptian kings, whose statues have been preserved, wear the apron without their royal robes. In the list of Egyptian antiquities in the British Museum, published by Sharpe, No. 61 is the statue of the King Ptharnes Miotiph, Son of Ramises 2nd, whose date is about 1120 B.C., whose only clothing is a short apron; this figure is given, ch. 2, sect. 46, in the history of Egypt by the same author. A cast from his tomb also shows him wearing a similar apron. No. 98, of the same list, is the statue of King Oimenepthah, 2nd, wearing no clothing but sandals and the apron. A cast from his tomb, also in the museum, shows the apron under a transparent gauze robe. Elsewhere I have seen drawings of two Royal figures at the portal of some temple or tomb wearing the apron alone; but I do not recall the place where they are found. As everything of this sort was symbolic in Egypt, we may speculate whether the apron so worn without the usual royal robes, by a king, the head of the priestly caste, did not indicate an initiation, undescribed by antiquarians, into the arcana of the sacred sculptors, draughtsmen and Masons who pertained to this caste.*

The method of work has remained much the same; the Egyptian broached work was as perfect as it is now. The chisel draft on the cyclopean stones in the Temple foundations at Jerusalem is just as on a dressed stone of to-day.

Another class of proofs of descent are found in the mystic designs of the old masters, carved on their slabs or constructed in their edifices, which are still in use. Layard, the explorer of the ruins of Nineveh and Babylon, was astonished to find the figure known as the Greek honeysuckle perfectly designed and used there; thence it passed into the architecture of ancient Greece, thence into Western Europe, and through modern church architecture to the present. It is of common use now, in its identical original form, both in Protestant and Catholic churches. What a proof of the tenacity with which the conventional clings in the Craft, where Zoroastian, Chaldee, Pagan and Christian temples, in a succession of twenty-six hundred years, inherit and transmit the same mystic symbols alike to innovators and successors! Students also have traced and written many learned works, showing how certain mystic emblems of a faith, so early as almost to be prehistorical in its origin, have been transmitted, such as dome, pinnacle, and spire, through all successive eras to the present age; and although their symbolic meaning has occulted from the general public, not merely retaining but gaining favour as new appliances render the art more capable of executing such designs with brilliancy. What traveller has not paused to gaze on the spires of Cologne and Strasburg, or to admire the domes of St. Peter, St. Sophia, St. Isaac, St. Paul, the latter the glorious work of our modern accepted Grand Master, Wren. The round towers of Ireland and the needle of Cleopatra bear witness like these to the continuity of the conventional in the Masonic art. The mystic beacon derived from the form of the church, mosque, or temple in all ages, and held esoteric, is another link.

Another curious instance of the conventional perversion of a symbol is in the brazen pillars which stood before the door of the Temple of Solomon. They are reproduced by the latter Phœnicians in the pillars of Hercules, which stood at the port of the Mediterranean; but at this day, in Phœnician-settled Spain, they are borne on the reverse of the silver dollar. Thus that which was once a symbol of life, the mystic basis of religion, has, among the profane, sunk to represent a mere dollar's worth of earth. Truly, Solomon's successors are wiser than kings.

Considering the vast and varied knowledge on antique remains gathered by modern discoverers, we are justified to anticipate that ere long it will be demonstrated that conventional Masonic art was so allied with theology in ancient times that every part of a temple taught a special lesson of its own; that form and symbol gave every stone a signification as perfect as a hieroglyphic character; and an initiate could read intelligibly the ideas embodied by the architect Mason in the building of Egyptian and Semitic temples as if they were written in the common language of the country. In those days there were sermons in stone, and the Champollin of art bearing the key is not many generations distant. Much of symbology, in the course of its long descent and many migrations, has become so conventional a part of art that the original meaning has grown very obscure. Where the religion of a country has fundamentally changed, the forms and decorations of the temples, because they are symbolic, sometimes become modified to suit the change; but still, as Masonry is one art, they largely retain the impress of the past. Of this, did time allow, I could give many illustrations. So, also, inventions in the beauty of design have occasionally modified, but I think never obliterated, the conventional aspect of religious symbology. Egypt, Greece and Rome still are three radiant lights of the Masonic state. For the burnt and buried Babylon, for the desolate Jerusalem, for the moulded Semitic architecture of Tyre, of the plains, and of the mountains, we hold our Lodge of sorrow, and cheer our longing souls with the faintest relics of their golden glory.

In putting forth my propositions, I feel that some will be appalled at the length of time included in the subject, and will hardly realize that many other parts of our civilisation can be traced clearly, descending from prototypes as distant as Greek Masonry from our era.

Modern scholars and divines readily admit that the metaphysics of Aristotle, of Plato, and of that branch of Platonism that mingled with the Chaldean and Zoroastian metaphysics in the school of Alexandria, are at the root of all present divisions and diversities in schools of theology. Modern science has reasoned its way from observation and proof, until now it declares the doctrines taught by Democritus, three centuries before our era, include the highest known expression of the cosmic theory of matter. Pythagoras, who brought into Europe from Egypt the helio-centric theory of the universe, after a long obscurity, has his merits again recognised, and Euclid is of equal authority now as when he prepared his geometry. Three of the four books religious of the world are more than seventeen centuries old. In literature, the drama and oratory, we look to the classic ages for models. In the practical arts, those which yet depend on hand-skill, rather than on machinery, had then the habitudes they now have, joined to even greater skill. The goldsmith, the metal worker, the gem engraver, the sculptor and stone cutter, the shipwright, the harness-maker and the hand-loom weaver, plied their trades and their art, descended generation by generation through their apprentices, moving from one centre of trade and wealth to another, in accordance with the laws of prosperity which govern civilisation. Figure weaving and the India shawl are older than the days of Abraham, and the hand-loom, in its pristine form, is still used to weave the latter. The potter's wheel is still unimproved. The ship of to-day bears on her stern the carved lares and symbols which her prototypes bore in the days of Pagan Rome. The fashionable jewellery of to-day is copied from Etruscan and Egyptian models. The fine arts revel in the goddesses, nymphs and Cupids of Greek design. Some of the mummies of Egypt reveal teeth plugged with gold as well as if an American dentist had tried his torturing tools on them. My limits forbid more illustrations of the conventional rule other artisans have lived and died in for more than sixty generations.

The present sum of human knowledge has been longer in accumulating than the records of history bear witness. Even the few arts which are of modern origin, with rare exceptions, lean for support on more ancient arts. What reason is there to withhold from the Craft of Masonry the same inferences of a descent from the ancient Craft which is so readily accorded to other arts? Research into architecture would furnish further illustrations of the descent of this art, important in my view because the conventional images is ever the highest evidence of its continuous transmission. We must deal with the past from such materials as time, war and fanaticism have spared to come down to us. Masonry is replete with the actual relics of its ancient work. These attest for themselves. In the vulgar sense, except a few papyri snatched from Egyptian tombs, there are now no extant no written records of those days which are original. There is no Jewish or Christian MS. extant earlier than the fourth, perhaps than the seventh, century in the date of its writing.

The conjecture as to the accuracy of a copy is sadly complicated if it is the copy of copies many times removed from the original; but if copies of various known dates agree in the text, it is held proof of an authentic line of descent, although the entire chain of copies back to the original is not produced or accounted for. The rocks last longer than parchment or paper; and chisel marks endure better than ink. The memory of man expands little over seventy years; beyond that, written records or stone records alike rest on reasonable conjecture for proof of authenticity. The dead generations cannot be gathered from the valley of dry bones and paraded as witnesses; you must interrogate the relics of their works and abide the reasonable inferences deduced from them. Eastern art did not fall with Egypt, Babylon or Rome. The light of earlier times had not faded away when the energy of the Arab followers of Mahomet revived its flickering beams for nine centuries more. Upon these sources Europe drew for knowledge and skill in art, science and philosophy—certainly till the close of the fifteenth century. Oriental philosophy again interwove its metaphysics into European theology. Even the Crusaders, poor soldiers of the cross, learned not only war and art from their adversaries, but were charged with returning with their creeds imbued with more than one emanation from Eastern mysticism. Anderson, a hundred and fifty years ago, claimed they also brought Freemasonry from the East. Masonry, which had decayed in Europe with the eclipse of Roman civilisation, became illumined by association with Saracenic skill, invented and perfected the Gothic art, and gradually, through Fraternities of trained Masons, spread it over Europe.

In the practical hands of the Master Masons it grew in grace and beauty, until it entirely superseded the debased Roman styles, and became the devotional art of mediæval times, symbolising the mystic ideas of the dominant religion in those sublime cathedrals, still the objects of religious art. The organisation of the Craft resembled that of the Egyptian and Greek of yore. The masters were practical as well as scientific in architecture; the Fellow Craft had the same manual skill, but inferior attainments, in the higher parts of the profession; the apprentice was glorious as usual over his modest progress. Their initiations and signs bound them into a close fraternity of grades. At York Minster, A.D. 1370, their contracts with the Chapter provided none should work on the chapel without the common consent of the Master and keepers of the work (Wardens?) and Master Masons. Their Mason marks are yet extant. The secrets of their art and Craft were kept by oral tradition, and protected by sacred obligations; and yet they were so free and liberal as often to admit high dignitaries of Church and State, whose taste in art they were desirous of cultivating, into the mysteries of their Fraternity, which in truth was the only school for art in Europe. Like the Masons of Hiram of yore, these were travelling bodies, moving from one scene of labour to another, and, as they chose to contract, being in the direct employ of Church or State, they were enabled to secure rare and valuable privileges indicated to the thoughtful by the name of Freemasons.

I cannot, indeed, claim for them, as for their Egyptian predecessors, that they were of priestly caste, yet they held like relations to Church and State; for kings and bishops then rejoiced to be of the Masonic Craft, and still seek their Lodges with flattering alacrity.

Let me cite some mediæval illustrations, drawn from the reviewer in the London Quarterly, before referred to:—

"Benedict Abbott, of Warmouth, in A.D. 676, crossed the ocean to Gaul, and brought back with him stone masons to make a church after the Roman fashion."

"In A.D. 1174, by the just but occult judgment of God, the church of Christ at Canterbury was consumed by fire." The monks took counsel with the English and French Masons, and finally committed the work to William of Sens, "a man active and ready, and, as a workman, skilful both in wood and stone," who "went on preparing all things needful for the work, either of himself or by the agency of others."

Thus also in the reign of Henry III., Bishop Grosstête describes the duty of the master: "In all kinds of workmanship the master of the works and workmen has the full power, as indeed it is his duty, to investigate, and examine," etc.; "and this he should do, not only through others, but when it is needful with his own hands."

Hope says, "Many ecclesiastics of the highest rank conferred additional weight on the Order of Freemasons by becoming its members."

"In 1442 King Henry VI. became a Mason. Afterwards, in conjunction with Thirske, Master Mason of the chapel of King Henry V., the king laid out the plan of his own sepulchre."

Investigations have cumulated instances of gentlemen of quality that were crafted members of Masonic Lodges in Great Britain elsewhere than at York, during more than a century prior to the London organisation of 1717. Gov. Belcher, of Massachusetts, states he was admitted in 1704; Elias Ashmole, in his diary, says he and Col. Mainwaring were so made in 1646 in England; and the records in Scotland, cited by Lyon and by Hughan, among many others, show Boswell, of Auchinleak, was present as a member in 1600, and made his Masonic mark on the record of Edinburgh Lodge. The records of Kilwinning and of the Lodge at Aberdeen show numerous earls, lords, ministers, lawyers, merchants, etc., were members in that century.*

I forbear further citations, nor shall I attempt to tell you when or how these Masons absorbed the speculative parts of their royal art, which we, their successors, yet practise under the landmarks of their Ancient Constitutions. There was something elevated in the esoteric doctrines of these travelling Lodges, that drew to them not merely the learned and generous among the great, but also the few believers in human progress, and the scattered but earnest seekers after the deep truths occulted in nature's laboratory, long before Freemasonry ceased to be a manual art.

With the renaissance, came in vogue the separation of the duties of an architect from those of a Master Mason; but we have copies of Constitutions, written earlier than this, which show that modern Freemasonry descended from the cathedral-building craft, whose Master Masons were men of science as well as of manual skill.

Conscious that I have merely begun to collect the available materials to illustrate my subject, I should apologise for presenting an unfinished labour to your attention, were my object other than to arrest hasty conclusions, by showing that candour requires this broad field for explorations should be fairly exhausted before the annalist or the Craft are entitled to sit in judgment on the question of the origin of the royal art, or to demand that this, which now rests in tradition, an open question, shall be relegated into the field of established truth. Late historians, elucidating early records, have wrought confusion on many disparagers of the early history of our organisation, and I trust to be pardoned for thinking that even traditions are capable of receiving much light, when their credibility is examined with a catholic spirit by appropriate tests. The accumulated evidence of descent of many designs, symbols, decorations, tools and usages now in use, their conventional character, the similarity of organisation of the Craft, the liberal knowledge possessed by its Masters, the broad scope of the science of Masonry from the first, and the mystic flavour it seems always to have drawn from its exterior connections, have deeply impressed my mind. The Masonic student alone can collate evidence from these sources with success. The darkness comprehended not the light, and I may conclude by quoting the language of one who seems to have known the light in the sixteenth century:—

"And though our structure should be seen by a hundred thousand men, it will ever remain untouched, uninjured, unseen, and even hidden in all eternity to the Godless world, Sub umbra alarum tuarum Jehovah, until that millennial epoch when that which is now known to few, and portrayed secretly in pictures and symbols, shall fill the whole earth, and be loudly and freely announced."

* The Statute 34 Ed. III. ch. 8, A.D. 1360, and of 3 Hy. VI., A.D. 1425, clearly show that there were three progressive degrees among the Masons; that they were self-elected, and held congregations, chapters and general assemblies, and also that the chief masters often took works by contract in gross.

MASONIC JURISPRUDENCE.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Will some of your readers, who are versed in Masonic jurisprudence, kindly give me information on the following point?

A catch motion has been passed in my Lodge by a majority whipped up for the purpose. Shall I be justified in proposing that the minutes, so far as they relate to the motion in question, be not confirmed, so as to give the Lodge an opportunity of reconsidering the question before finally committing themselves to the obnoxious resolution?

I may add that the two P.M.'s present, the W.M., J.W. and the S.D. voted against the motion. The S.W. and J.D. were unavoidably absent, or they would have voted with their brother officers.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Fraternally yours,

10th December 1875. W.M.

A SUGGESTION TO OUR JEWISH BRETHREN.

To the Editor of THE FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Whatever may have been the case at the time when our charitable institutions were first established, and before Freemasonry at last became true to its principles by deserting the ranks of sectarian prejudices, and exerted its beneficent influences in favour of justice and religious toleration, it will not be denied that, especially in these comparatively latter years of freedom of opinion and conscience, the Jewish brethren have not been behind-hand in giving large and liberal support to the Charities. It is also a fact that, hitherto, the orphan children of the Ancient Faith have been unable to participate in the benefits of either of them. Not but what the Institutions are open to them as much as to the children of any other community; they cannot, however, avail themselves of the privilege, unless certain exceptional conditions are inaugurated. The object of this letter is to ascertain the feasibility of a plan being adopted whereby Jewish children might not be prevented from entering the lists of candidates on account of religious scruples. The method once found, the discussion of details might be left to a committee especially formed for the purpose of seeing the matter carried into effect. There are, undoubtedly, difficulties in the path, and perhaps formidable obstacles bar the way, but practical men, possessing resolute will, are not generally deterred from pursuing their course by any inconvenience they may have to suffer. Now there are four Jewish Lodges in the capital, and, I believe, some in the provinces. One of the London Lodges boasts a Benevolent Fund Annuity of nearly £2,000, another nearly £700. I have no knowledge what the other Lodges possess, but the inherent benevolent disposition and naturally charitable instinct of the true Israelite warrants the conclusion that, in this respect, they have not been neglectful. From these accumulations a sufficient amount might be granted to form a nucleus for a fund, to be enlarged by subscriptions from individuals, the interest from which to cover the extra expenses arising from the additional outlay necessary to procure the attention and instruction requisite in the education of a Jewish Masonic orphan. If the matter were taken in hand by competent men, I venture to assert that not only Jewish, but many Christian brethren would cheerfully give practical aid, and exert their influence in the promotion of a work which must commend itself to the right-thinking and justice-loving mind. For there are many of our Jewish brethren who, perhaps, from no fault of their own, have left families totally unprovided for. The substantial relief and care bestowed upon them by the Jewish community is well known and proverbial. Nevertheless, I think it the duty of the Jewish members of the Craft to take some, at least, of these orphans under their especial care, and thus utilise moneys which, for any practical purpose, might as well never have been collected. The call upon these funds is unfrequent, and comparatively insignificant; twenty, thirty, or at most one hundred pounds is the amount generally bestowed; the rest remains unproductive, and is of no benefit to anybody. Trusting these remarks may elicit discussion, as the opinion of others upon the subject would be most gratifying to

Yours fraternally,

E. GOTTHEIL.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS: WINTER SPECTRES.—All can estimate the disadvantages to the human system from breathing foul air, such as must necessarily be inhaled during our winters. The safest correctives and best purifiers of the blood are Holloway's Balsamic Pills, which are too well known and too highly esteemed to require commendation here. Besides cleansing the system, they improve the appetite, render digestion perfect, admirably regulate the liver, increase the secretion of the kidneys; they mildly yet effectually act upon the bowels, without griping or causing any inconvenience. So long as human nature remains what it is, every person will now and again require some regulation of organs, disordered by irregular or too generous living, and for [illegible] persons,

THE MASONIC YEAR 1875.

A FEW days hence and 1875 will be numbered with the past. Moreover, this present issue completes not only our second volume, but the first year of our existence. Hence the occasion seems not inopportune for reviewing the twelve months so nearly completed.

The year 1875 will be a memorable one in the annals of Freemasonry. Taking the whole Order, in its distribution throughout the old and new worlds, we may safely describe the position it now occupies as one of unexampled prosperity. It is not simply that we have grown in numbers only, though such growth, provided it be accompanied by a proportionate increase in strength, is of itself matter for hearty gratulation; but above and beyond this numerical increase, which has occurred to a greater or less extent in all countries where Masonry flourishes, the Order has acquired a firmer position than ever, partly by the accession, as new members, of men eminent by their rank and position or by their talents, partly by a greater strengthening of the ruling powers, and, lastly, by greater activity among the rank and file. And as the Craft is thus stronger in itself, its influence on the profane world has grown in proportion. Some may still sneer at it as child's play. Some may still decry it as a secret society, whose aim is the overthrow of religion and order. Ultramontane bigots may still fulminate their anathemas against us. But these sneers and false accusations and curses fall innocuous at our feet, if even they do not prove, in the main, of service to our cause. There are not a few who regard it as an honour to be excommunicated by a Pope. There must be something substantially good in Masonry, they argue, when a tyrant priesthood goes out of its way to curse. But let us leave conjecture alone, and revert to facts pure and simple. The angry denunciations of the Craft, by Bishop Dupanloup, and their approval by Pio Nono, together with a slight amount of persecution in remote countries, are all our enemies can point to as a set-off to an increase in strength, wealth, and influence, which must truly be described as marvellous. Having stated the case thus generally, let us now proceed to give the details of our history during the year that is still current, English Masonry claiming, as a matter of course, our first attention.

The event which occupies the greatest prominence in the year's history is, undoubtedly, the election and installation of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales as M.W.G.M. Initiated into Freemasonry some seven years previously, by the late King of Sweden, His Royal Highness already held the honorary rank of a Past G.M., England, besides being G.M. of the Temple, and Grand Patron of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, England, as well as Patron of the Order both in Scotland and in Ireland. When, from motives that seemed good to him, the Marquis of Ripon felt called upon to resign the Grand Mastership, the Prince of Wales at once accepted the invitation to fill the vacancy thus caused: thus following in the footsteps of three of his ancestors, the Duke of Cumberland, George, Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Sussex. The formal election was held at the regular Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge, on Wednesday, the 5th March; Bro. S. G. Grady proposing, and Bro. Grey, Deputy Master of the Prince of Wales's Lodge, seconding the nomination; which was carried unanimously, amidst the most enthusiastic cheering. It was then announced that the ceremony of Installation had been arranged by His Royal Highness for Wednesday, the 28th April, the day fixed by the Constitutions for holding the Annual Grand Festival, and it was further arranged that an additional number of Stewards should be appointed, in order to assist in carrying out the ceremony, the said Stewards receiving permission to wear a special jewel commemorative of the event. At first some difficulties occurred in selecting a proper place where the Installation could be held. At length the Royal Albert Hall was chosen, and it is needless to say that a better choice could not have been made. Not only was it capable of being securely tyled against the intrusion of profanes, it was also the most commodious hall in London, or, at all events, the one which, taking the previous consideration into account, would accommodate the greatest number of brethren. Large, however, as was the available space in this magnificent hall, it was very soon found that it would be impossible to accommodate all applicants. Hence, as regards the main body of the Craft, the attendance was restricted to the W.M., Wardens, P.M.'s, and one M.M. from each Lodge. By a marvellous display of zeal and energy on the part of Bro. Sir Albert Woods G.D.C., Bros. Fenn, Monckton, and the Stewards generally, the preparations for the imposing ceremony were successfully carried out, and on the day itself the eight thousand fortunate brethren who were privileged to be present assembled, clothed themselves, and were seated without the slightest hitch. Outside the Hall the scene was animated enough as regards the continuous arrival of every description of vehicle, but it had been ordered there should be no display of Masonic clothing or emblems outside the precincts of the Hall, consequently, idlers had nothing to gaze at, beyond a few thousand gentlemen in evening dress, driving up more or less rapidly to the several points of ingress. Of the Installation itself we say but little. The eloquence of the Pro Grand Master was equal to the occasion, the heartiness of His Royal Highness in acknowledging the honour conferred upon him was unmistakable, while the enthusiastic reception accorded him by the assembly was great beyond conception, the salute being given with a precision and fervour that was quite startling. After the introduction to His Royal Highness of the representatives from the Grand Lodges of Ireland, Scotland, Sweden, and Denmark, and the appointment of the Grand Officers for the year, Grand Lodge was closed in ample form, and the assembly dispersed, highly delighted with the success of the day's proceedings. In the evening the banquet was held at Freemasons' Hall, His Royal Highness the M.W. Grand Master presiding, supported on his right by his brother the Duke of Connaught, the youngest M.M. in England, who had been raised the evening previous in the Prince of Wales's Lodge, and on his left by the D.G.M. Lord Skelmersdale. The health of the Grand Master was proposed by his brother, and it is needless to say, was most warmly responded to by the brethren present. The other toasts were drunk with great heartiness, and the evening terminated with a splendid concert, His Royal Highness remaining for a short time. Thus ended the most eventful day in the modern history of Freemasonry, a day which will ever be remembered as affording the most indubitable evidence of the firmness and stability of the Craft, as well as of the esteem and respect in which it is held by all classes. It only remains for us to add that, at the meeting of Grand Chapter, on the following Wednesday, 5th May, His Royal Highness was installed and duly obligated as Grand Z., Comp. John Havers presiding as first Principal, Comp. H. Sandeman acting as Grand H., and Comp. J. Rawson as Grand J. The Prince then invested his officers, among whom may be mentioned Comp. Earl of Carnarvon as Pro G.Z., Lord Skelmersdale as Grand H., and Lord de Tabley as Grand J.

We now record the doings in connection with our three Charitable Institutions. The annual festival of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and the Widows of Freemasons was held on Wednesday, the 28th January, the Right Hon. the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, R.W. Prov. G.M. Staffordshire, occupying the chair. His Lordship's appeal to the Craft for an increased support of this admirable Charity was a very earnest one, and when the worthy Secretary, Bro. Terry, rose to read the list of subscriptions, the guests were delighted beyond measure on hearing that a sum of £6,630 13s 6d, with eleven lists still outstanding, had been collected for the funds of the Institution, a result eminently satisfactory, and showing that those who had consented to act as Stewards of the festival had been very zealous in the performance of their duties. The full amount subscribed proved in the end to be slightly in excess of £7,000, the exact sum being stated as £7,020 16s 6d. The result of this liberality was soon apparent, and we had the pleasure of announcing, a fortnight later, that 15 widows and 22 males would be elected in the May following, instead of 3 widows and 12 males, thus bringing up the number of annuitants to 130 men and 100 widows, besides 16 widows receiving a moiety of their late husbands' annuities. The number of vacancies was subsequently increased, by deaths, to 28 men and 18 women, there being 33 candidates for the former, and 35 for the latter. The election was held on Friday, the 21st of May, the number of votes for the successful candidates ranging from 1,120 to 251 for the males, and from 867 to 490 for the females.

The indefatigable Bro. Terry is to be congratulated on the prosperous condition of the Institution, of which he is Secretary, and whose claims he so earnestly advocates whenever an opportunity is afforded him. Let us hope that the success of 1875 is only the precursor of still greater successes, and that in the coming year it may be in our power to make announcement of an addition to the number of our annuitants, as has been made in the year now ending. We should also mention, as further evidencing the kind zeal of Secretary Terry, in promoting the happiness of those under his charge, that a summer entertainment was, and a winter entertainment will be, specially organised for the amusement of our worthy "Patriarchs."

The prize day at the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, was fixed for the 8th of May, and accordingly on that day the Lord Mayor, G.J.W., who had consented to preside at the annual festival on the Wednesday following, accompanied by the Lady Mayoress, arrived early, and inspected the institution, the arrangements of which gave unlimited satisfaction to the distinguished visitors. Afterwards, in the presence of a numerous assembly, a capital programme, comprising several excellent selections of music, both instrumental and vocal, and a number of recitations, was gone through very successfully. The Lady Mayoress then distributed the three principal prizes, namely, £5 given annually by Bro. Winn, to Maria Louisa Flintoft, for taking honours in the Cambridge examination; gold medal for general proficiency, given annually by Bro. Pass, together with £5 given annually by Bro. Winn, to Leila Lucy Caparn, and silver medal for good conduct, given annually by the Institution, with £5 given annually by Bro. Winn, to Maria E. Searle. The Lord Mayor then distributed the prizes given by the Institution, the principal recipients being Maria Louisa Flintoft, for taking honours, and for German (given by Bro. Hirsch); Leila Lucy Caparn, for passing Cambridge examination, for French (given by Bro. Rev. P. de Bretto D.D.), and for drawing (given by Bro. Starkey); Maria E. Searle for needlework; Jessie M. Blair for music, and Bro. Hemsworth's prize for amiability as voted by her schoolfellows; and Mary Theresa Claisen for drawing (given by Bro. Starkey) and music (given by Bro. Moultrie). After a brief adjournment for refreshment, the girls went through the usual calisthenic exercises, in which they exhibit such marvellous proficiency. Then followed dancing, and it was not till a late hour that the company dispersed for home. On the following Wednesday, the 12th of May, the anniversary festival was held at Freemasons' Hall, under the presidency of our R.W. Bro. Lord Mayor Stone, G.J.W., supported by a numerous and influential attendance of brethren. In the course of the evening the Secretary, Bro. Little, read out the list of subscriptions, which represented an aggregate sum of £7,269 3s, with thirteen lists still outstanding. The toast of success to the Institution was very ably proposed by the Lord Mayor, and responded to by the Treasurer, Bro. S. Tompkins. Thus, Bro. Little and the Festival Stewards are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts to uphold and extend this School. Incidentally we may mention that the name of Bro. Constable figures conspicuously in the list of Stewards, he having collected no less a sum than £420 12s, of which £199 10s—or the value of nineteen life-governorships—was the result of his system of drawing, those entitled to draw or ballot being the 3,990 holders of the shilling tickets representing the aggregate value of the said governorships. This, we believe, is about double the amount collected under this system the year previous, and if a few more stewards follow the noble example of our worthy brother, our Institutions will be materially benefited. At the two elections, held on the 10th April and 9th October respectively, there were chosen, in the former case, thirteen girls out of thirty-one candidates, while at the latter six only could be elected out of thirty candidates. At the present time there are, we believe, 148 girls maintained, clothed, and educated by the liberality of the Craft. Several propositions are under consideration for the extension of the School, and as recently as the 11th inst. a special meeting of governors and subscribers was held for the purpose of receiving and deciding on the Report of the Special Sub-Committee of the General Committee, which had been nominated to consider the question. Their Report was in favour of a considerable extension of the existing premises, so as to afford increased accommodation for 94 more girls, an increase which, it was said, would involve an outlay of over £20,000. After a long discussion it was resolved to nominate a further Committee, for them to consider afresh the various schemes under proposal, and any other that may be suggested. And there for the present the matter rests.

The Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, which is unlike our two other Institutions, in possessing no invested funds, affords the greatest triumph of what energy and liberality combined will effect in the cause of Charity. The anniversary festival was held on Wednesday, the 7th July, on which occasion the Earl of Carnarvon, Pro G.M. England, and Prov. G.M. Somerset, presided, and there were present to support his Lordship, Lord Balfour of Burleigh, President of the Board of Stewards, the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, Sir Henry Edwards, with other zealous and able brethren, together with a number of Stewards from London and Provincial Lodges. The occasion will be specially memorable, as the first on which the fair sex were seated at the banquet with the members of the Craft. Hitherto the ladies have dined together, in a separate room, but the change we have mentioned was inaugurated this year, and as the result appears to have been eminently satisfactory, we doubt not the custom will be followed, not only by this, but likewise by our other Institutions, on these important occasions. There is no reason we are aware of why it should not be generally followed, and if the cause of charity is promoted by the novelty of the arrangement, there is, on the contrary, every reason why the precedent thus set should be observed in future years. At all events, the first festival at which the experiment has been tried has been an unprecedentedly successful one as regards the sum collected. Hence, we cannot withhold our acknowledgments from Bro. Binckes, or whoever suggested the idea. But to return to the festival. The various toasts were duly proposed and responded to, that of "Prosperity to the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys" being urged by the Pro Grand Master with considerable eloquence, and enthusiastically received. After this, Bro. Binckes, the Secretary of the School, having announced that Francis Dalrymple Lane had won the chief prize for good conduct, and Richard Newton Carter the prize to which he was elected by his schoolfellows, then read the list of donations, which amounted to the munificent sum of £12,704 7s 6d, with thirty-five lists yet remaining to be handed in. This means, of course, a total exceeding £13,000, and so grand a result must have far exceeded even the most sanguine anticipations. It is not a little singular that, when, a short time previous to the festival, we were urging the claims of our Masonic Charities generally, and of this School, as having no invested funds in particular, we pointed out how, by the practice of a little self-denial throughout the Craft, the annual subscription to each Charity might fall very little short of £15,000. We confess we were not a little surprised on finding the very first subscription made after these remarks were offered so well on its way towards the £15,000 we had mentioned. We hope we may be even nearer the mark as regards future subscriptions. The speeches and distribution of prizes took place on the Wednesday previous, 30th June, there being present the Right Hon. Lord Balfour of Burleigh, P.G.S.W., President of the Board of Stewards, with a large attendance of Stewards, brethren, and ladies. The programme was very successful, and was listened to with great pleasure. Between the parts of the programme the noble chairman distributed the prizes, offering a few words of hearty congratulation to each recipient. His Lordship also offered a few general remarks, thanking the Masters and Committee for the efficient manner in which they had conducted their duties, the progress the School had made, and the excellent behaviour of the boys. After a cordial vote of thanks to the Chairman had been proposed and carried unanimously, and briefly acknowledged by Lord Balfour, the company adjourned to refreshments. The School band was in attendance during the day, and played excellently well. At the half-yearly elections held in April and October respectively, eight out of a list of forty-eight candidates were chosen, while at the latter, ten were appointed out of fifty-eight. The number of boys now in the School is 178. Here, too, there has been a remodelling of the staff, Dr. Morris having been appointed Head Master vice Bro. the Rev. O. G. D. Perrott resigned, while the staff of Assistant Masters has been almost, if not entirely, changed. We need not dwell on the causes which led to these changes. A special committee of governors and subscribers was lately appointed to investigate certain questions raised by Bros. Tew and the Rev. O. G. D. Perrott, and affecting the management of the School. In common with the whole Craft, we regret any disagreements between the scholastic and managerial staffs. Nor can it be otherwise than matter for regret that questions affecting the financial management of the Institution should have been brought forward. However, it is satisfactory, in the interests of the School, to know that, after a most minute and careful inquiry, the Special Committee have reported that the financial charges of mismanagement, made, no doubt, under a misunderstanding of the Annual Reports, have not been borne out.

We gladly turn, however, from this subject, to one more pleasing, and which, like the precedent introduced at the Annual Festival of the Boys' School already referred to, stands out by itself as an even bolder and more marked departure from the usual Masonic practice. The Baroness Burdett Coutts, the daughter of a Mason, who had kindly granted permission to one of our more recently constituted Lodges to bear her name, having notified her intention of presenting three chairs to that Lodge, arrangements were made for the ceremony of presentation. A dispensation having been obtained from His Royal Highness the M.W.G.M. for the brethren to appear on the occasion in full Masonic clothing, the afternoon of the 29th July was fixed for the novel meeting, and punctually at the hour appointed, the Baroness, accompanied by several gentlemen and ladies, met the brethren of the Burdett Coutts Lodge in the Zetland Room at Freemasons' Hall, which had been specially prepared for the ceremony. The brethren having sung a hymn, her ladyship formally presented the three chairs, expressing at the same time an earnest hope that they would be occupied by as worthy men in the future as those who had preceded them. Bro. Terry, the first W.M. of the Lodge, who presided, thereupon occupied the chair of K.S., calling upon the S.W. and J.W., Bros. Crutch and Toy, to be seated in the other two. The Secretary of the Lodge, Bro. Verry, then read an address of thanks to the Baroness for having, in the first place, allowed the Lodge to bear her name, and having presented it with a copy of the volume of the Sacred Law, and now for her further act of kindness in giving these chairs. To this address, which concluded with an earnest prayer that the G.A.O.T.U. might build up for her great happiness here and hereafter, and which, handsomely engrossed, and enclosed in an album case, was presented by the Deacons, Bros. Lloyd and Crouch, the Baroness offered her warmest acknowledgments, and an equally earnest hope for the welfare, both here and hereafter, of all the brethren. It having been moved, seconded, and unanimously carried that the reply should be recorded on the minutes of the Lodge, the whole party adjourned to an elegant déjeûner, at which Baroness Burdett Coutt's health was proposed in glowing terms by Bro. Terry, and drunk with great heartiness. Her Ladyship and friends were shortly after escorted from the room by the Chairman and Stewards. Thus ended a ceremony, the first of its kind which has ever taken place in this country. We feel, moreover, a special pleasure in recording this event. The lady who thus honoured the Craft is not only the daughter of a Mason who, as a public man, had long held a high position in the world's esteem; she is eminent likewise for her great philanthropy, dispensing her charities with discrimination, but with the most open hand, and thus proving her love for that particular virtue which Masons so earnestly strive to practise.

There have, happily, been but few deaths to deplore among either the rulers or the rank and file of Masonry. The retirement, to which reference has already been made, of the Marquis of Ripon, necessitated a change in the government of West Yorkshire, and Sir Henry Edwards has been appointed to the Grand Mastership of that most considerable and influential province. By the death, last year, of R.W. Bro. Benjamin Bond Cabbell P.G.M. of Norfolk, the headship of that province became vacant, but a very worthy successor has been found in the person of Bro. the Hon. F. Walpole, M.P., who was installed in office towards the end, as Bro. Sir H. Edwards was installed towards the beginning, of the year. On both occasions there was a great gathering of the brethren, and great rejoicing at the sure progress the Order was making in public estimation, both at home and abroad. On the other hand, if our losses have been few and painful, for the most part only, to individual Lodges and friends, our accession of strength has been very considerable, while others, like the Duke of Connaught and Prince Leopold, though initiated in 1874, have risen still higher, the former having been raised to the sublime degree of M.M. the evening before the installation of his brother as M.W.G.M., while the latter was appointed S.W. in the Apollo University Lodge, Oxford, and subsequently raised. Of other public characters initiated into Masonry during the year we may mention the name of Captain Boyton, the exhibitor of the life-saving apparatus known by his name, and Captain Webb, who swam the Channel between Dover and Calais, the greatest athletic feat on record. Of new Lodges added to the roll of Grand Lodge, it appears that nineteen were constituted between the Quarterly Communications held in December 1874 and March 1875, fifteen between those of March and June in the latter, twelve between those of June and September, and seventeen between September and that in the present month, making in all an addition of sixty-three. In Royal Arch Masonry there have been added to the roll of Chapters twenty-eight new ones, while the Prov. Grand Superintendency of Herts, which had been dormant for some years, has been reconstituted, E. Comp. Halsey being appointed Prov. G. Superintendent. Prov. G.M. the Earl of Zetland has also been exalted in the Zetland Chapter. Further evidence of increase will be found in the dedication on 14th July, by Lord Skelmersdale, D.G.M., of the New Surrey Masonic Hall, of a new Masonic Hall at Bideford, of one at Barton-on-Humber, and the laying the first stone of a Masonic Hall at Great Grimsby, on the 2nd of August, Bro. Sutcliffe P.P.G.S.W., officiating on the occasion. It should also be noted that a Masonic Club is in course of formation. The locale of the Club is in Queen Victoria-street, and the premises are already being fitted up. The committee includes, among other influential Masons, Lord Skelmersdale, D.G.M., Bro. Alderman Stone G.J.W., and the Duke of Manchester. The experiment is a very laudable one, and has our best wishes for its success. Another proposal on the carpet is likewise worthy of record. The Province of Lincolnshire is trying to raise funds enough to found an Oliver scholarship in memoriam of one of the best and ablest and most respected members who have ever belonged to the Craft, one of whom it may be said, without the slightest approach to exaggerated praise,

"Nihil tetigit, quod non ornavit."

In Mark Masonry, we may mention that at the half-yearly Communication, held on Tuesday, the 30th November, the Earl of Limerick was elected M.W.G.M. for the ensuing year, while a new Lodge, entitled "the Sutcliffe Lodge," in honour of Bro. Sutcliffe, R.W.P.G.M. for Lincolnshire, was consecrated by that esteemed Mason on the 30th September.

Thus much for Masonry in England, the cause of which has been generally brilliant, while there has been nothing to give cause for even a momentary pang of regret, except in respect of one solitary detail.

In Ireland, as in England, the past year closed with a serious loss to Masonry. His Grace of Leinster, who had ruled the Craft for some threescore years, with singular gentleness, ever tempered by firmness and a due regard for the interests of the Order, died, in October 1874, full of years and honours, and beloved and respected not only by his brethren of the mystic tie, but by all classes and conditions of men. The Duke was also head of all the other Masonic bodies in the kingdom, being K. of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter, Great Prior of the Great Priory, President of the Grand Chapter of Prince Masons, and S.G.C. of the Supreme Grand Council, A. and A. Rite. It will be readily understood from this how great was his loss to Masonry. However, a not unworthy successor in the Grand Mastership of Craft Masonry was found in the person of the Duke of Abercorn, the justly popular Viceroy of Her Majesty. He accordingly was installed M.W.G.M. on 6th January. The ceremony of installation was performed by R.W.D.G.M., Bro. Shekleton, after which His Grace was duly obligated and invested with the insignia of his office. After the election of Grand Officers, the Lodge was closed in ample form. This auspicious event was celebrated on the 16th of April by a grand Masonic ball at the Exhibition Palace, Dublin, under the patronage of Grand Lodge. There was a good attendance, and the promoters had the satisfaction of feeling they had achieved a great success. At the Quarterly Communication held on the 2nd inst., His Grace was re-elected for the year 1876, the following being the Grand Officers for the same period:—The Marquis of Headfort S.G.W., Lord Dunboyne J.G.W., Arthur Bushe G.T., Viscount Bernard G.S., Rev. J. T. Macsorley G.C., and Rev. Lord Plunket G.C.; Hon. D. Plunket, Q.C., M.P., S.G.D., Alderman Jos. Manning J.G.D., G. A. Stephens G.S.W., Theo. E. St. George G.D.C., G. Myers, LL.D.

On the 20th April, the Duke of Abercorn, M.W.G.M., presided at the annual distribution of prizes to the pupils of the Masonic Female Orphan School, Dublin. His Grace congratulated the authorities on the satisfactory progress the School had made, one of the pupils at the Royal Dublin Society's Art Examination having obtained a certificate from the Council of Education, South Kensington, while two others obtained certificates from the Royal Dublin Society. There are forty girls on the establishment, four vacancies having been declared and filled up at the election held on the 7th instant, from an approved list of eight candidates. From the report for the year 1874, it appears this Institution possessed invested property to the extent of over £8,600, and that the income from all sources, and including a balance in hand to start with was over £3,100, while the expenditure was only between three and four pounds in excess of £1,900. It is in contemplation to fully extend the benefits of this School, even to doubling the number of pupils, if the finances will allow, and as soon as suitable premises have been obtained. We hope and trust our Irish brethren will be successful in their efforts to place this School on a firmer and wider footing. As regards Masonic orphan boys, the Craft maintains twenty-three such, at Bro. the Rev. S. S. Sheen's, Adelaide Hall, Merrion-square. There were two elections in the course of the year, at the first of which, held on the 13th of May, two were elected from an approved list of eleven candidates, while at the other, on the 7th of November, the same number were chosen from a like number of candidates. Among other events that marked the progress of Masonry during the year, we must mention the election of Judge Townshend as President of the Grand Chapter of Prince Masons, in succession to the late Duke of Leinster, Judge Townshend having for some time filled the office of Vice-President, and having virtually, in fact, discharged the duties of the higher office long before the death of His Grace. The address or report of the Judge on taking up his appointment contained satisfactory evidence of progress, the Order having, in point of numbers, a little more than doubled itself in the course of the last twenty years. It should also be noted that a new Masonic Hall, Parsonstown, Dublin, for the use of St. Brendon's Lodge, 163, was opened and dedicated in the month of June. The committee having obtained a house in William-street, had the top floor and all partitions removed, thus leaving available a room of considerable dimensions. Instructions were issued to, and carried out under the direction of, Mr. A. B. Milne, C.E., to make the necessary alterations for the conversion of the building into a hall suitable for holding the Lodge meetings.

In Scotland, Masonry continues to advance with a steady progress. Though the record of the year contains no such exciting event as the installation of a Royal or Vice regal G.M., the greatest activity has prevailed throughout the Craft, and sundry matters deserve a place in this chronicle of the year. First and foremost must be mentioned a proposal for establishing a Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution, which is to combine within itself all the advantages of our English Benevolent, Girls' and Boys' Institutions. The scheme originated with Bro. Capt. Geo. R. Harriott, Prov. G.M. Wigtown and Kirkcudbright, and was noticed by us at some length in one of our earliest numbers. Later on in the year we were enabled to announce that the proposal had every prospect of success, among those brethren whose support was promised being Bros. D. Murray Lyon, Ayrshire; Dr. Cowan, and J. Young, Perthshire; Dr. Pagan, Fifeshire; Col. Acheson, Dundee; J. Laurie G. Secretary, Major Ramsay, J. Murray, &c. Since the date of this latter announcement, however, we have heard nothing further of the scheme, and must content ourselves with wishing that no long time may elapse ere it assume a more tangible form. As yet there exists only in Scotland "The Fund of Scottish Benevolence," founded in 1846, so that this addition to the charitable institutions of the Craft north of the Tweed will doubtless be hailed with acclamation and cordially supported by them. On the 15th April was held a meeting at the Peacock Hotel, Newhaven, for the purpose of presenting to Bro. John Laurie, Grand Secretary, and P.R.W.M. of Canongate and Leith Lodge, No. 5, a splendid testimonial, in recognition of the valuable services he had rendered as R.W.M. of the Lodge. The testimonial took the form of a combined clock, barometer, &c., &c., together with a massive and elegant tea and coffee service for Mrs. Laurie. Bro. Officer S.S.C., P.S.G.D. and P.M. No. 1, presided, and after the usual toasts had been disposed of, proposed the health of Bro. J. Laurie in feeling and appropriate terms, expressing the pleasure it afforded him in having been the medium of conveying to his esteemed Bro. a testimonial to which the latter's eminent services as a Craftsman so justly entitled him. Bro. Laurie replied, expressing his warmest gratitude for the very substantial token of the esteem and friendship which he had received that day, and expressed himself as ready and anxious to do all in his power to promote the welfare of the Craft. Amongst other events of more than local interest may be recorded, that the foundation stone of the new public school buildings at Tarbolton was laid, under the auspices of the Tarbolton Lodge, to which the great poet, Bro. Robert Burns, was affiliated; that the laying of the foundation stone of the New Schools at Cumnock, in Ayrshire, was carried out on the 19th August, the ceremony being performed by Colonel Mure, M.P., Prov. G.M. of Ayrshire; and that the memorial stone was laid, by the same P.G. Officer, on the 25th September, of the new schools now in course of erection at Kilwinning, in the same county. On both these occasions the attendance of brethren was very numerous, especially at the latter, Kilwinning being held peculiarly sacred among Scottish Masons. At the Quarterly Communication of Grand Chapter, Comp. L. Mackensy G.S.E. was received as the representative of the Grand Chapter of Pennsylvania. In the first instance, correspondence had arisen owing to Comp. Mackensy being already a representative of the Grand Chapter of Oregon, and the matter was accordingly submitted to Grand Chapter. It having been pointed out that it was not uncommon in America for the same Companion to hold two or more such commissions, it was moved and carried, amid cheers, that, in deference to the wishes of the Supreme Grand Chapter of Pennsylvania, Comp. Mackensy be received as their representative.

Nor is the condition of Freemasonry less flourishing in the Colonies and dependencies of Great Britain. The visit of the M.W.G.M. to India has been attended, thus far at least, with one public display of Masonry. His Royal Highness accepted the invitation of the Bombay Lodges to inaugurate, with the usual Masonic ceremonial, the Elphinstone Wet Dock, and the first stone was laid accordingly, in the presence of a vast assemblage of spectators, and to the intense gratification of the brethren of that district. A Ball, also, was given by the Craft in honour of the Prince's visit, the Town Hall being used for the occasion.

No doubt, when the Prince reaches Calcutta, the capital of the Bengal Presidency, the brethren in that district, one of the oldest constituted provinces out of Great Britain, will accord to him the same hearty welcome as their fellows in Western India. It is hoped, indeed, that His Royal Highness will be able to spare the time to lay the foundation stone of the New Masonic Hall, which is about to be erected for the use of the District Grand Lodge of Bengal. In accordance with a resolution passed on 24th of June by the D.G.L., a committee was appointed, and met at Freemasons' Hall, Bentinck-street, Calcutta, on the 3rd July, when the necessary resolutions for building the new hall were agreed to, and it was arranged to form a company, called "The Bengal Freemasons' Hall Building Company," with a capital of 1.50,000 rupees, in shares of 100 rupees each, bearing interest at 6 per cent. It was expected that everything would be in readiness to commence operations by the time of His Royal Highness's arrival, and a forcible appeal to him to inaugurate the building was intended to be made. We doubt not, if time and circumstances permit, His Royal Highness will accede to the wishes of the Bengal brethren. Early in the year (on 26th February) R.W. Bro. Captain Marmaduke Ramsay was installed at Freemasons' Hall, Lahore, as D.G.M. of the District Grand Lodge of the Punjab, the R.W. officiating as D.G.M. G. Daley, P.D.D.G.M., having duly installed Bro. Ramsay, the latter addressed the brethren, briefly congratulating them on the satisfactory progress the Craft had made in the seven years since the District Grand Lodge had been constituted, there being seventeen Lodges and 483 subscribing members now, as against seven and 217 members. He further added that the Masonic Institution in the District, commenced by Lodge "Hope and Perseverance," possessed 12,800 rupees invested money, and maintained and educated four boys, two at the Bishop's School, Simla, and two at the Lahore High School.

The Grand Lodge of Canada held its twentieth annual Communication at London, Ontario, on the 14th July, under the presidency of R.W. Bro. J. K. Kerr, acting G.M. At the outset, R.W. Bro. Kerr deplored the serious losses which the Grand Lodge had sustained by the deaths of M.W.G.M. Wilson, and their Grand Secretary, R.W. Bro. T. Bird Harris. Both these eminent Masons died in harness, and their funerals, which were conducted with full Masonic honours, had been most numerously attended. During Bro. Wilson's illness, Bro. Kerr had acted as his representative at the dedication of the New Masonic Hall at Hamilton. Masonic Halls had also been dedicated at Seaforth, and for the use of the Malahide Lodge, No. 140, Aylmer, Ontario. Several dispensations had also been renewed by the late G.M., and new ones granted during Bro. Kerr's tenure of office. The auditor's report showed invested funds to the amount of 47,569 dollars. M.W. Bro. J. Kerr was then elected G.M., and the other Grand Officers having been elected, the ceremony of installing them in their several offices was duly performed by M.W. Bro. Col. A. A. Stevenson, Montreal. At the Quarterly Communication, held on 3rd March, the Grand Lodge of Quebec was acknowledged by Grand Lodge, England, as an independent Grand Lodge. On the 8th October, the Masonic Hall was the scene of a most interesting event, the retiring G.M., Bro. Wm. Dunbar, being presented with a magnificent set of Past G.M.'s jewels and regalia, in token of his long and valuable services to the Grand Lodge, and especially for the successful part he took in arranging amicably the disputes between the Grand Lodges of Canada and Quebec. There was a large attendance of brethren, and the addresses, both of R.W. Bro. Thompson, in presenting, and of R.W. Bro. Dunbar in acknowledging, the testimonial, were applauded to the echo. Nor is the Grand Lodge of New Brunswick behind its sister Grand Lodge of the Dominion of Canada. New Brunswick Masonic Hall Company, which proposes to erect a Masonic Hall in St. John, held a meeting on the 7th June, for the purpose of appointing directors. The capital of the Company will be 100,000 dollars, and the cost of ground, hall, &c., &c., is expected to reach the sum of 70,000 dollars. The new Hall will be a commodious building, four stories high, and besides offices and reception rooms for the Grand Secretary, will contain rooms for the use of Grand Lodge, Grand Chapter, and the Templar and other Masonic bodies. The Company has already purchased, for 18,000 dollars, a block of buildings 100 feet on Germain Street and 200 feet deep, and notice has been given to the several tenants that their leases will determine on 1st May of next year. Active operations will then commence at once, and it is hoped the new Temple will be complete and ready for use in about two years.

Among other colonial items may be mentioned that on 15th January a large number of the Craft attended the meeting of the Leinster Marine Lodge, New South Wales, No. 206, under the jurisdiction of Grand Lodge, Ireland, for the purpose of commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Lodge. R.W. Bro. the Hon. J. S. Farnell, P.G.M., attended, and installed the new W.M., Bro. A. S. Appleton, and his officers, after which a banquet was held, at which Bro. Appleton presided. The toast of the evening was drunk with great enthusiasm. According to the Graaf Reinet Herald a scheme has been set on foot, originating with the Jaffa Lodge, No 861, Cape Town, for the purpose of establishing an independent Grand Lodge for South Africa. The question has been submitted to all the Lodges in the Colony, and in due time, no doubt, a decision will be arrived at. On the 23rd September the Trafalgar Royal Arch Chapter, St. Helens, New Zealand, held its installation meeting. Comp. W. B. Sealy, M.D. and W. W. Squires, M.D., were re-elected M.E.Z. and H. respectively, and to the former of these, as well as to Comp. W. M. Stanton, re-elected Scribe E., testimonials were presented, in recognition of their valuable services.

If we next turn our attention to the condition of Freemasonry in foreign parts, we shall find, on the whole, very great cause for congratulation. Where attacked, the Craft has held its own most successfully. Elsewhere, unmistakable progress has been made. In France, the chief event in connection with the Order is the silly, and, beyond all question, bitter attack of Bishop Dupanloup, who, lacking occupation perhaps, has found leisure to utter a most violent denunciation of the principles we not only profess, but practise. Were there the slightest prospect of our satisfying this angry bigot of the perfect innocence of Freemasonry from the charges advanced against it, it might, perhaps, be worth our while to argue the case, in order to prove, as even the feeblest-minded Mason could not fail to do, that his violent hostility was unjust. But the most conclusive argument would avail nothing. We content ourselves, therefore, with a bare statement of facts. Without rhyme or reason, this foolish bigot, a monk of rank and station, both in Church and State, attacked Freemasonry, early in the year, denouncing it as a secret body, whose sole aim was the overthrow of religion and social order. No long time elapsed when another bigot, of even higher ecclesiastical rank, to wit, Pio Nono, gave expression to similar sentiments, and in violent and unchristian language denounced a society which numbers among its professors, kings, princes, nobles, and wise men of nearly every land. These attacks had a certain effect, as every attack has, but it was one the strikers never anticipated. Instead of overwhelming Masonry, these disturbers of the public peace have been themselves overthrown. Counterblows also were struck, among the most effective being the reply to Bishop Dupanloup's pamphlet by our esteemed Bro. Caubet, one of the Secretaries to the Council administering the Grand Orient of France. The only result, thus far then, is, ignominy to the Bishop of Orleans and his abettor, the Pope. Even the profane world laughs at them, and our Saturday Review explained the hostility of the Ultramontanes on the ground that a church which itself worked secretly, would never tolerate secret working in others. But to pass to more genial matters. Progress is made everywhere. In France, new Lodges have been constituted, and, better still, the Order has been strengthened by the accession to its ranks of such men of eminence as M. Littré, member of the Académie Française, M. Chatrian, one of the ablest and most brilliant writers of the day, and others of similar stamp. Moreover, the Grand Orient has shown itself eager in the practice of that particular virtue to which Masonry more especially devotes itself. The subscription opened under its auspices towards the relief of the sufferers by the very terrible inundations in the South-East of France amounted, on the 12th of December, to little short of sixty four thousand francs.

In the month of September a Congress assembled at Lausanne, consisting of delegates from certain Supreme Councils of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite in various countries. The Congress, before separating, issued a manifesto or declaration of principles, in which were set forth, in accordance with the ideas proper to this branch of Masonry, the aim and object of our noble institution. The several councils assembled, have entered into a treaty of alliance, establishing a "Confederation of Supreme Councils of the A. and A. Scottish Rite." It further recognised the jurisdiction of the following Supreme Councils: namely those of North America (Boston), and South America (Charleston), Central America (Costa-Rica), England, Belgium, Canada, Chili, Colon (Cuba), Scotland, States of Columbia, France, Greece, Hungary, Ireland, Italy, Mexico, Peru, Portugal, Argentine Republic, Switzerland, Uruguay, Venezuela. It was further arranged that the next Congress should be held at Rome, in 1878, and that after that, one should assemble every ten years, at such place as had been determined on at the preceding Congress. In the interval between two conventions, a tribunal of five delegates, chosen by the Confederation, will take cognisance of any difficulties that may arise among the various Councils. The interest in the proceedings of this Congress, confined, as it is, to this particular Rite, will be limited to those who recognise the high degrees, and among these, the principles enunciated will, according to Le Monde Maçonnique, be only partially accepted. As regards Masonry itself, it is held in high esteem in Switzerland. There is a Grand Lodge, "Alpina," with twenty-seven Lodges under its jurisdiction, and including not far short of two thousand members. In Italy, likewise, the Order has made wonderful progress. On the 5th of March, the New Masonic Temple, a very handsome building, was formally opened and dedicated to the purposes of the Craft. Over two hundred brethren were present, and a procession was marshalled by the Grand Master of the Ceremonies, the brethren marching in order of juniority, and after them the representatives of Foreign Grand Lodges and the officers of the Grand Orient of Italy. Having traversed the several halls, the procession at length reached the doors of the Temple itself, and, having entered, the Grand Orator, Bro. J. Macchi, delivered a long, powerful, and impressive address, in the course of which he made graceful allusion to the presence of foreign representatives, and especially to that of one from Great Britain. The proceedings were soon after closed, amid mutual congratulations. The day following, another Lodge was held, and after that a conversazione and musical entertainment. Thus terminated one of the most important ceremonials of the year, not only to our Italian brethren, who now muster over ten thousand, but to the whole world of Masonry. Now have we a Masonic Temple in the very heart of the Eternal City, within sight almost of that High Priest whose hostility to our Order is the most pronounced. Nor is this all we have to record. We believe our Grand Lodge, England, has recognised the Grand Orient of Italy, thus cementing still more closely those feelings of affection and admiration which have so long connected the peoples of the two countries. Moreover, on the occasion of the Emperor William of Germany's visit to Milan, the Italian Masons offered that monarch, who is Protector of the three Grand Lodges in Prussia, their warmest congratulations, and the wishes they expressed for his welfare and that of German Masonry were very cordially reciprocated by the Emperor. In Greece, His Imperial Highness Prince Rhodocanakis has been re-elected Grand Master for a further period of three years. As regards other countries in Europe, let it suffice if we quote the well-known adage, "No news is good news." As far as our information goes there is nothing to record save that the Royal Art is even more firmly established than ever.

It is in the United States, however, where Masonry flourishes most extensively, at all events as regards its numerical strength. There are said to be not far short of fifty Grand Lodges—apart from Coloured Grand Lodges, the recognition of which is a question not yet entirely settled—and six hundred thousand members. Here it is the labours of Masonry are most actively prosecuted, and here it is that brethren enjoy a recognition more public, perhaps, than in any other country, hardly even excepting the United Kingdom itself. Here, also, is it that Masonry enjoys the support of a zealous and intelligent press, almost every state having over one or more periodicals, which are unceasing in their support of the interests of the Craft. The greatest harmony prevails among the Grand Lodges, and every endeavour is made to establish as nearly as possible complete uniformity in the ritual. The Grand Lodges have their several committees or Boards, to each of which is allotted a special duty, and so carefully is the work entrusted to them performed, that hardly ever any change or modification is proposed by Grand Lodge in the suggestions they offer. It will be easily understood then that in the United States this Secret Society of ours is far more public in its doings than are we at home. Masonic processions through the principal thoroughfares of a city occur not unfrequently, and, whenever they occur, they are invariably received with what may almost be called an ovation. Such a procession marched through some of the leading thoroughfares in New York early in June, on the occasion of the opening and dedication of the magnificent new Masonic Temple, erected for the purposes of Masonry. About twenty-six thousand brethren, the bulk of them being Templar, Arch, and Craft Masons, marched in this procession, each division with its marshal and his staff, and a band of music; the Governor of New York, with the Grand Master and other Grand Officers of the Grand Lodge of New York, bringing up the rear of the line, which was preceded and closed by platoons of police. The line of march was thronged with spectators, who received the brethren with great cordiality, the ladies who filled the windows of the houses being specially enthusiastic. The Temple is a magnificent structure, and the appointments of the various halls are in keeping. The Temple having been opened and solemnly dedicated to purposes of Masonry, the brethren dispersed, and the rest of the day was devoted to festival and rejoicing, the New York Lodges, Chapters, and Commanderies exhibiting a truly Masonic hospitality towards their numerous guests, who had come from all quarters, North, South, East and West, to take part in the ceremonial. Later in the same month another event occurred, none other than the visit of the Richmond Commandery, No. 2. of Virginia, to the Northern States, to assist at the centennial commemoration, at Boston, of the Batule of Bunker's Hill, fought on the 17th June 1775. The Richmond Knights were the special guests of the De Molay Commandery of Boston, who met them on their arrival at Providence Depôt, and with several other Commanderies escorted them to Faneuil Hall, where a formal address of welcome was delivered, and an impromptu banquet partaken of. The procession, numbering over a thousand Templars, in full regalia, and with the bands numbering over eleven hundred, was received with acclamation as it passed along, the long column halting en route at the residence of Eminent Sir Curtis Gould, in Columbus Avenue, when each of the visiting Knights was presented, by a party of young ladies, with a splendid bouquet. On the 17th, Masonry played an imposing part in the commemoration of the fight, where Prov. G.M General Warren lost his life, in the service of the Union. On this occasion M.W.G.M. Everett, of Massachusetts, wore the original apron formerly worn by that illustrious soldier, while M.W.P.G.M. Dr. Winslow Lewis wore the apron of General the Marquis de la Fayette. The visit closed with a grand banquet, at America House, and before leaving, the Eminent Commander, Sir W. E. Tanner, of the visiting Commandery, was presented with a handsome jewel of gold, in the form of a Maltese Cross, 2¼ inches square, the gift of the ladies of Boston. They then left for Providence, R.I., where the reception they experienced was equally cordial, and afterwards visited New York, where they were met by a delegation of the Palestine Commandery, of which M.W. Bro. Ellwood E. Thorne, G.M. of the New York G. Lodge, was the Commander. Having been conducted over the New Temple, and having, during the whole of their stay, been fêted in the heartiest manner, they left for Jersey City, where they took train home again for Richmond. Such an event is worthy of being commemorated, as contributing, more than any other which has occurred in the last ten years, to cement the union between North and South, tending, as it must tend, to subdue any lingering soreness begotten of the great Civil War, ended in 1865, that may yet be felt by either section of the States. All honour to a society which is not only beneficent to individuals and bodies worthy of being succoured, but which even outvies political influences in strengthening the ties which unite the once hostile States of the Great American Union. On the 8th October the corner stone of a new Masonic Temple, at Reading, Pennsylvania, was laid, in the presence of about five hundred members of the Craft, including the M.W.G.M., Bro. A. R. Potter, and most of the Grand Officers of Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania. The ceremony having been duly performed, the M.W.P.G.M., Bro. Hon. Richard Vaux, of Philadelphia, delivered an appropriate oration, on the antiquity of the Order, and the benefits it confers upon society. From statistics published in one of our American contemporaries it appears that the Supreme Council, Ancient and Accepted Rite, of the Northern Masonic jurisdiction of the United States, which held its annual session on the 17th August, is now a corporate body of considerable proportions, both as to numbers, there being considerably over five thousand members, and financially. As regards Royal Arch Masonry, it appears from the latest report of the proceedings of the General Grand Chapter of the United States that there are no fewer than 37 Grand Chapters, 2,014 Chapters, and 123,779 R.A. Masons in the Union. On the 3rd July the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts held a special Communication, for the purpose of commemorating the day when Ill. Bro. General George Washington assumed the command of the Colonial Forces in the War of Independence, forces which, under his wise generalship, became, in a few years, the army of the United States. There were present M.W.G.M. Percival L. Everett, and a considerable number of Grand Officers. After taking part with the municipal authorities in celebrating this event, the Grand Lodge was conducted to Memorial Hall, Harvard College, where they were entertained at a banquet, under the presidency of the Mayor. As to the meetings of the various Grand Lodges throughout the States, it is impossible for us to say more than that everywhere the Communications, whether quarterly or annual, have been most numerously attended, and that only in a few instances has it been necessary to refer to anything painful as having occurred during the year. Thus the death of Dr. Winslow Lewis, a P.G.M. of Massachusetts, who had been a member for forty-five years, who had achieved distinction in almost every branch of Masonry, and who was an honorary member of Masonic bodies innumerable, was an event that could not fail to call forth the deepest sorrow, even though the distinguished gentleman died in the fulness of years, and having achieved a high reputation in his professional career. Among other brethren who have been gathered to their forefathers, and who achieved distinction in the political world, we must not pass over, without a brief tribute of respect to their memory. Bro. Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, and Bro. Wilson, President of the United States Senate and Vice-President of the Union. One other matter of interest to the student of Masonic history deserves to be recorded. In the memorial volume, published in commemoration of the opening and dedication, in the autumn of 1874, of the New Masonic Temple at Philadelphia, very strong evidence is adduced in favour of Pennsylvania being the oldest Masonic Province in the United States. It is stated that the precept issued to Bro. Daniel Cox, under date of 5th June 1730, by the Duke of Norfolk, M.W.G.M. of England, was acted upon, and that a Provincial Grand Lodge was actually constituted, contemporary evidence of a highly important character being derived from the Pennsylvania Gazette—a newspaper printed by the celebrated Benjamin Franklin—of the 8th December 1730, and the 26th June 1732. This evidence is very strong, though perhaps, the Grand Lodge of Boston may not accept it as quite conclusive.

One other item of foreign news relates to the persecution of Masons in the Island of Porto Rico. This being a colony of Spain, a Roman Catholic country, the news perhaps is not surprising. Certain worthy members of the community have been sentenced, some to four, and others to two years' imprisonment, merely for the supposed crime of being Freemasons. We have it on the authority of Le Monde Maçonnique that an appeal has been lodged against this sentence, but the result, as yet, is not known. If the sentence be confirmed, we trust the good offices of Grand Lodge of England may be brought to bear, and that our unfortunate Porto Rican brethren may be restored to liberty, even if the authorities think it wise to forbid Masonic meetings in the Island.

We have now concluded this necessarily somewhat imperfect record of the Masonic doings of the year. It remains for us to add a few words as to the progress made in literature during this period, and a few concluding remarks. As regards our literary progress, we cannot say much, but what little we have to say, is mostly favourable. It is in the United States where Masonry finds the strongest amount of literary support. Thus, as we have already said, within the jurisdiction of nearly every Grand Lodge, the interests of the Craft are strenuously advocated, by one or more periodicals. These, as far as we have been able to gather, have either made substantial progress, or at all events maintained their ground, with but one or two exceptions. Besides these, the proceedings of the several Grand Lodges are before the Masonic public, while the Dedication Memorial Volume, already referred to, in honour of the new Masonic Temple at Philadelphia, is a very valuable contribution to the history of the Craft. A new magazine, entitled The New England Freemason, made its appearance late in 1874, under the joint editorship of Bros. Sereno D. Nickerson, A.M., and Charles H. Titus, A.M. This periodical is well edited, and contains invariably a good selection of Masonic articles, with a choice selection of Masonic news. In Canada, there appeared another new magazine, The Canadian Masonic News, which, like the preceding, is both well edited, and furnished with well written and interesting matter. In Scotland, the opening of the new year witnessed the appearance of the first number of The Scottish Freemasons' Magazine, a bi-monthly, which, however, lapsed after a brief existence of a few months only. It promised well, and contained some good matter, but we imagine it must have failed through lack of support. There has also appeared a pictorial volume, prepared under the auspices of Bro. Dr. Loth, illustrating the emblems of the thirty-three degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. In England, there have appeared, quite recently, two posthumous works by the late Dr. Oliver, published by Bro. Hogg and Co., of Paternoster-row, and there is now appearing, monthly, a Masonic Cyclopædia, by Bro. Kenneth, "Cryptonymus," published by the same firm. We may also mention that the Rev. Bro. Woodford's Defence of Freemasonry was published in the early part of the year. Of this work we may say that its aim is good, but it would have been far more effective had the writer adopted a more vigorous style of writing. Of course the sale of the great Spencer Library is an item of literary news which cannot be passed by in silence. This Library contained a number of rare and valuable works, collected from such important Masonic libraries as that of the late Duke of Sussex and other eminent brethren, together with several unpublished MSS., by Dr. Oliver, and other Masonic writers. Several of the most valuable lots realised considerable prices. The last literary item concerns ourselves. We launched the frail bark of the FREEMASON'S CHRONICLE on the 2nd January 1875, and we have at least the gratification of feeling that our career has not been unworthy of the honourable ambition which has animated us from the very outset. We have striven earnestly, and to the best of our ability, to promote the highest interests of the Craft. In matters controversial, we have striven to observe a strict impartiality. We have placed our columns at the service of the Brethren for arguing moot questions, and offering new suggestions. We have striven earnestly to do our duty, and if we have not always satisfied the expectations formed of us by our friends and supporters, we at least may enjoy the pleasant sense of having left no stone unturned in order to make our journal a success. We trust we may not have a less agreeable delivery of our conscience at the end of the year 1876. However, we have referred to ourselves elsewhere at greater length, and it hardly becomes us to be egotistical in two places at once. We are thankful for the support thus far accorded us, and hope by, if possible, still greater efforts in the future, to command the respect of the Craft generally.

In the foregoing sketch we have necessarily omitted several matters, which, to many, no doubt will seem quite as interesting, and therefore noteworthy. Had we, however, attempted to introduce all the important events that have occurred, we should never have accomplished the intense task. It only remains for us now to say just a few words in conclusion, and by way of hearty congratulation, on the present condition of the Craft. In the United Kingdom, the Heir Apparent is Grand Master of the Grand Lodge, England, and Patron of Grand Lodge, both in Ireland and Scotland; in Sweden, the King is Grand Master; in Denmark, the Crown Prince is ruler; in Holland, the King's Uncle has been Grand Master for nearly sixty years; in the Empire of Germany, the foremost Mason, the protector of the three Grand Lodges in Berlin, is no less important a personage than the Emperor William himself, while his son, the Imperial Crown Prince, is second in Masonic rank only to his father. In the United States, some of the most eminent public men are either simple members or rulers in our beloved Order. In every country, in fact, in both hemispheres, wherever Masonry flourishes, there will be found some of the ablest and best members of the community enrolled in our Order. Yet, in face of these facts, which are undeniable, some laugh, some sneer, some denounce our sacred mysteries. Of course we can afford to treat the people who act thus towards us, with indifference. We doubt not, however, that in good time they will, like sensible people, see the error of their ways, and encourage instead of oppressing and denouncing the cause of Masonry. This consummation devoutly to be wished may not be realised this year, or even for some years to come, but its realisation is only a question of time. Day by day, the acts of Masonry are made public, and the quaint terror at our secret working is hardly ever felt by men of sense. Under these circumstances we can afford to wait patiently, in the firm conviction that the more that is said of us the more highly and more widely shall we be appreciated. May the year that is coming prove as prosperous as that which is now about to close! May our Grand Master return from India in health, and with increased strength to fulfil the arduous duties of his high position! May he and his ever enjoy the favour of the G.A.O.T.U.! And may the Craft render him that cheerful obedience which has ever animated all good and true brethren! Nor must we pass, without mention, the ladies, whose interest in our welfare has grown with our growth. We wish them all the happiness they can desire, both in this world and hereafter. Let them not be over-curious, but content themselves with a firm belief in the truth and honour of Masonry. Let them bear in mind the old saying, that "A good Mason must be a good man." The faith we profess, if acted up to strictly, renders it impossible he should be otherwise. Thus women are, or should be, our best friends, and as such they have our most cordial good wishes for their present and future happiness.

In fine, while cherishing with a loving care the pleasant memories of the past, may we ever keep before us a firm faith in the glorious future of our Order.

67 BARBICAN, E.C.

OUR WEEKLY BUDGET.

HER Majesty, as usual of late years, left Windsor Castle a few days since, for Osborne, where she will spend Christmas in comparative retirement. Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales has reached Copenhagen, where she was received by her father's subjects with the utmost enthusiasm. Of course, her presence in the Danish capital has been promotive of no small amount of festivity. His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh came into town a day or two since, and had an interview with the First Lord of the Admiralty. It is said His Royal Highness will take command of the Monarch, turret iron-clad, in order to complete the usual period of service afloat. The Prince of Wales has reached Calcutta, and here, no doubt, he will meet with the same hearty welcome accorded him as in the two other Presidencies. It is hoped his Royal Highness will find time to lay the foundation stone of the New Masonic Temple which the brethren in the Bengal District are about to erect. As it may not, perhaps, be generally known, we take the opportunity of mentioning that Bengal is one of the oldest Masonic provinces out of England, under the jurisdiction of our Grand Lodge, having been constituted as a province as far back as 1728.

It seldom rains but it pours. We have had during the last few weeks at least half-a-dozen very calamitous accidents—accidents which have been attended with a very serious loss of life. Early on Wednesday morning, one of the boys on board the training ship Goliath, lying a mile or so above Gravesend, off Grays, let fall a petroleum lamp in the lamp room. The consequence was that a fire broke out, which very soon spread throughout the whole vessel. At the time there was 465 persons on board, and of these, seventeen are reported as missing, and three drowned. The boys behaved with rare English pluck, and stuck by the ship till all chance of extinguishing the fire was gone, when, with difficulty, they were induced to quit. A Mr. Wheeler, one of the masters, was among the drowned, having sunk exhausted, after clinging as long as he possibly could to the bottom of a boat. Mrs. Bourchier (wife of Captain Bourchier, the officer in charge), and two of her daughters, experienced some difficulty in escaping. One of these latter descended hand over hand by means of a rope, two of which some one fortunately had taken the precaution to hang over the stern. In doing so, however she severely lacerated her hands. Mrs. Bourchier, herself had to leap from the vessel into the water, owing to the second rope having been burnt. Captain Walters, of the training ship Chichester, and his men, rendered invaluable service, the former himself rescuing one of the boys found clinging to a fender hanging from the bows, though the flames were scorching his jacket, and the foreyard was dangling over the bow, and threatening every moment to fall. It is more than possible that of those missing, sundry may never be heard of again. It is believed that several are drowned, but nearly the whole of them could swim, and it is quite possible that some may make for their homes. To us it seems strange that an oil, admittedly dangerous, unless the greatest care is taken with it, should be used on board ship, but "my Lords," perhaps, are governed by a sense of economy, and are readier to risk the loss of a ship than to grant annually a few more pounds in the purchase of a more expensive oil.

Further experiments have recently been made at Chatham with the New Flying Machines invented by Mr. Simmonds, and meant for use in military operations by an army in the field. A high wind prevailed at the time, and it was therefore impossible to obtain any trustworthy results, as one of the long poles or arms had, in working it, become injured. The experiments were made under the superintendence of Mr. Simmonds himself, by a number of Sappers and non-commissioned officers of the Royal Engineers.

The question of widening London Bridge formed the subject of a very interesting paper, by M. S. F. Walmisley, at the meeting, on Thursday evening, of the Civil and Mechanical Engineers' Society, in Westminster Chambers. Mr. Walmisley pointed out that the whole question resolved itself into one simply of expense. A new bridge could be built, a new tunnel bored, a new ferry established, or the present structure itself could be widened. There were no engineering difficulties in the way of either proposal. It was simply for the authorities whom it might concern to determine what amount of money should be laid out in affording additional transit across the Thames at this point.

The official inquiry into the loss of the Deutschland, off the Kentish Knock, is not yet completed. A mass of evidence has been taken, but the charge of wrecking has been abandoned. Of course, the excitement in Germany has not yet cooled down, but the bulk of Germans have faith in the impartiality of our English tribunals. Moreover, there have been published lately a number of statistics as regards German vessels lost, or in difficulties off our English coast, and from these it is shown that a very considerable number of lives have been saved by English life boats, tug boats, and luggers.

The charge against the directors of the London Saw Mills and Short Length Timber Company, Limited, has been dismissed by Alderman Sir R. Lusk, before when it was heard, at Guildhall. Mr. George Lewis had taken up the case out of pure charity, and had succeeded in obtaining a sum of £850 from the accused, in compensation to the thirty men, mostly retired soldiers and clerks, in a humble position, who had invested about £1,030 in the Company. Mr. Lewis did not retract any of the statements he had made on the first occasion when it had come before the court; but he thought he was acting best in the interests of his clients by accepting for them the sum offered. Under these circumstances, the worthy Alderman having complimented Mr. Lewis on his conduct of the case, had no option but to allow the case to be withdrawn. The defendants left the court, amid very strong demonstrations of ill-feeling on the part of the complainants.

The relations between acrobats and their apprentices have been recently a matter for investigation before the Lambeth Police Court. A Mr. Brown, the master, appears to have taken two youngsters, a boy and a girl, under his charge, with a view to training them as acrobats. They seem to have got on, for a time, pretty well together, but the boy was not unfrequently thrashed. It is not, perhaps, very strange that a boy of eleven or twelve should occasionally stand in need of a little corporal punishment, but it was urged that a greater amount of severity was exhibited than was proper. A considerable amount of wrangling and jingling among the several parties interested in the quarrel appears to have prevailed, and the unfortunate magistrate was apparently nonplussed as to how to deal with the matter. However, it was finally arranged that the boy should be sent to an industrial school, that the girl should still remain in the charge of the acrobat, who, however, was to send her to school for three months, and, further, that the mother, who had been in receipt of a pound per month for the use of the children, should be allowed to visit her daughter occasionally. Both the youngsters appear to have been well cared for, and well nourished by Mr. Brown, and the boy had attained a considerable degree of skill, so far, indeed, as to be able to perform on the flying trapeze blindfold. Both boy and girl evinced a strong indisposition to return to their mother, nor is this wholly surprising when we consider that they fared very indifferently at home, and that her maternal instincts could not have been very strong, or she would not have hired them out for so insignificant a sum.

A very serious charge was made on Thursday against a Mr. Henry Powell, a captain in the merchant navy, for that he, being master of the good ship Oberon, which came into collision with an Italian barque, Chiavari, did not stand by and render such assistance to the latter as was in her power, without danger to his own ship, as required by the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1873. The prosecution was conducted by Mr. Poland, under instructions from the Treasury, while Mr. Hill defended. The latter raised a preliminary objection, on the ground that the prosecution should have been instituted immediately after the occurrence in November 1873, and that so long an interval should not have been permitted to elapse. Sir Thomas Henry, however, decided against this objection. After hearing a considerable amount of evidence, the case was adjourned till yesterday.

A verdict of wilful murder has been given in the terrible tragedy at Norwich, by which the lives of three boys were taken by a lunatic, those of two others being yet in danger from the dreadful wounds inflicted by the murderer. A Miss Winifred Wales appears to have committed suicide by taking a quantity of opium, being it is said, induced to commit the fatal act through love for an actor at the Britannia Theatre. A great conflagration occurred on Thursday morning at the East of London, the steam flour mills of Messrs. Huskinson being burnt down. The flames rapidly attained a complete mastery over the building, and all the engines could do was to direct their efforts to saving the adjoining premises, which happily they succeeded in doing.

Pantomime before Christmas seems an anomaly, but at the Crystal Palace, "Jack in Wonderland; or, The Magic Beanstalk, the Great Giant, and the Merry Pranks of the Good Little People," written by Mr. Blanchard, has appeared, and given considerable satisfaction to those who have had the good fortune to witness it. Nor is this to be wondered at when we bear in mind that the acting was good, the dancing magnificent, and the dresses and appointments in the highest degree effective. But for an accident which Mr. G. Conquest experienced, the Pantomime, at the Alexandra Palace, would have appeared, as announced, on Tuesday. Owing to this circumstance its appearance was delayed till yesterday. The title is, "Harlequin and Yellow Dwarf, or the King of the Gold Mines," and it has been written expressly, by the Brothers Grinn—a very appropriate name, as it happens—for Mr. George Conquest, who, with his son, takes the most prominent part in the action. We shall defer details till next week. For Boxing Day, a great circus entertainment is announced to take place, and if the weather be at all seasonable, there is every chance of there being a very considerable attendance.

On Thursday was given, at St. James's Hall, a "Christmas Concert," though there appears to have been nothing particularly Christmas in the programme, beyond the fact of its being held two days before Christmas Day, and that a few carols were effectively sung by the Albert Hall Choral Society. However, the performance was a good one, and the attendance was in every way worthy of the entertainment afforded.

We cannot compliment the clerk of the weather on his recent conduct. He has been mighty fickle of late. We have had a dose of mud and mugginess, during the last few days, which has hardly been surpassed even within the memory of "the oldest inhabitant." Last year, we had, about this time, a very genial frost, and it is possible, of course, when these lines appear, that Father Christmas may appear in his usual seasonable toggery. At the moment of writing, however, there is nothing particular to warrant this belief. At the same time, let us hope the winter will not pass away without giving us a chance of enjoying something wintry at least. But snow or rain, mugginess or genial frost, we doubt not that, somehow, the world will contrive to enjoy itself as much as it has enjoyed itself in former years. The youngsters, in particular, if they cannot display their skill on the ice, will, we doubt not, find some means of solacing themselves with a more than usually vigorous attack on the good things. We hope they will have a thoroughly good time of it.

In France the Legislative Assembly has at length completed its task of electing its twenty-five Life Senators, among whom is our very violent friend, Bishop Dupanloup. At Rome, the Lord Mayor of Dublin, who made himself so publicly offensive at the O'Connell Festival, by proposing the health of the Pope before that of the Queen, has been received by His Holiness, who conferred upon his municipal worship the Order of Gregory the Great, and who further requested his visitor to convey his blessing to the good City of Dublin. According to Russian news, the insurrection in Khokand may be said to have been suppressed, General Kaufmann, having despatched a force which successfully stormed the insurgent positions. The leaders are said to have fled beyond the frontier, while the followers have pleaded for mercy. Further success has been gained over the Malays by the British troops, and there is every prospect of the murder of Mr. Birch being amply avenged, and that at a very early date. The Sultan has appointed a committee in order to see that the reforms authorised in his recent Firman are carried out properly. It is rumoured that the Khedive is negotiating the cession of his founder's shares in the Suez Canal. Both the British Government and a French Company or combination, with M. de Lesseps at its head, are said to be bidding for them. There is little news from Spain, the weather being unfavourable to military operations.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS.

When this number comes before our readers, the Christmas of 1875 will have been inaugurated, and our younger friends, especially, will be looking forward with an eagerness that is quite natural to enjoying the pleasures of the gay and festive board. We wish them, one and all, "a happy Christmas," or to be more en règle perhaps, the Compliments of the Season. May all success attend them in their efforts to achieve good fortune! May they, and their belongings, enjoy all happiness, both now and hereafter!

The Grand Lodge of Benevolence was held on Wednesday, the 22nd inst., at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen Street, Bro. J. M. Clabon, P.G.D., President, in the chair, the vice-chairs being occupied by Bro. J. Nunn P.G.S.B. V.P., and J. Brett P.G.P. Bro. J. The Auckland (New Zealand) Evening Star of 26th October publishes the following:—

The funeral of the late Mr. R. Gratton, of the Thames Hotel, took place this afternoon. The melancholy cortege left the deceased's private residence in Emily Place shortly after three o'clock. In front of the hearse the members of the various Masonic Lodges marched in procession. All appeared in regalia. Prominent among the insignia were the distinguishing badges of the Ara Lodge, of which Lodge Mr. Gratton was a member. Mr. Robinson, the worthy Master of this Lodge, was present. After the corpse followed the relatives and friends of the deceased and the Oddfellows in procession. A large number of the general public swelled the funeral train. Preparations for receiving the body had been made in the Protestant burying ground, and there the interment was made, the officiating minister being Dr. Kidd. As Mr. Gratton was a Roman Catholic this statement will no doubt cause some surprise, and we therefore give the following facts in explanation. On Sunday some of the Masons heard that there existed among the Catholic clergy a disinclination to perform the funeral ceremony on account of the deceased's membership among the Freemasons. Mr. Robinson waited on Father W. McDonald and now states that he was led to believe that so long as the Craft did not make a demonstration by appearing in regalia they were willing to perform the rite. A final answer was not given at 11 o'clock yesterday morning. At three in the afternoon the clergy absolutely declined to have anything to do with the obsequies. The Masons then took the matter up, and in the short time allowed them made preparations for conducting the funeral in their own state. Mr. Hayward conducted the funeral arrangements.

NOTICES OF MEETINGS.

Conclave of Sorrow.—Sir Knight John Johnson P.M. Naval, H. of Chapter No. 122, M. of St. Mungo Encampment of K.T., a member of No. 4 Conclave, Edinburgh, of the Red Cross of Constantine, E.V.E. 114, Glasgow Conclave, Deputy-Commander K.H.S., and Hon. Sovereign of Lilly of the Valley, 127, Holytown, having died after only four days' illness, the members of the two last-named bodies determined to testify their respect for departed worth by holding a Conclave of Sorrow, which was done on Saturday, 11th of December. A raised platform was constructed, suitably draped with black cloth and crape; in the West, the place of the chair of the deceased Exeellent, the East was occupied by the two Sovereigns, Sir Knights Shields and Wheeler, the former presiding, the latter acting as High Prelate, Wm. McMurdo as Sus., D. Baker S.G., J.

McMurdo J.G., and G. Read as H. The impressive service for the dead was very carefully rendered by the officiating Knights, after which Sir Knight Wheeler M.P.S., as having known him longest, delivered a short address, dwelling on his many amiable qualities, the goodness both of his head and heart. It was a touching coincidence that their departed friend was the first person in Scotland on whom he had conferred the degree of the Holy Sepulchre, and the first to be carried to his sepulchre. Bro. Johnson was unmarried, but an address of condolence to his surviving relatives was agreed to, and the Conclave was closed in solemn form.

Thistle and Rose Lodge, No. 73.—This Lodge held its regular meeting on Tuesday, 21st December, in Kilwinning Hall. Bro. G. McDonald R.W.M. presiding, assisted by Bros. J. Bannerman D.M., J. Balantyne S.M., A. McLeod S.W., J. Hanbridge J.W., G. Wheeler, C. R. Richards S., J. Ampleford T., S. Kay S.D. Bro. D. Reid, I.P.M. 405, was also on the dais. The case of a deserving widow was brought before the Lodge, and a sum voted for her immediate necessities. The Lodge was then raised to the 2nd degree, when Bro. Wheeler passed Bro. J. Candlwell to the degree of Fellow Craft. There being no further business, the Lodge was then closed.

St. Marks Lodge, No. 102.—An installation meeting was held on Monday, 20th December, when, in the presence of a large number of the brethren, Bro. T. Halket installed Bro. Smith, and his office bearers for the ensuing year, the list of whom we have already published. Bro. Halket, on Wednesday, also installed Bro. B. Prout as R.W.M. of Kilwinning, No. 4, and the remainder of his office bearers, whose names we published on the day of election.

Tranquillity Lodge, No. 185.—A general meeting of this Lodge was held on Monday, the 20th inst., at the Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, E.C. Bro. J. H. Ross W.M. in the chair, assisted by Bros. Barnett S.W., D. Posener J.W., J. Peartree Treasurer, Phil Levy Secretary, G. Pare S.D., Bailey J.D., Croaker I.G.; there were also present Bros. J. Constable I.P.M., and P.M.'s Bros. S. Solomon, E. Z. Bloomfield, N. Moss, S. Moss, Harfeld, Meyers, Gluckstein, Gotthell, and a numerous assemblage of members. The evening's proceedings commenced with the usual routine observed at Masonic meetings of this kind, after which Bros. Sadleir, Bush and Cohen were admitted to the Master's degree. Messrs. Johannes, Ernst, Schultze, Conrad, Koppleman, Lederer and Moss Davis having been ballotted for, and accepted, were duly initiated into the Order. Although the W.M. was evidently suffering from a bronchial affection, he managed to perform his duties with his accustomed ability and precision. Bro. Asher I. Meyers, of Prosperity Lodge, No. 65, a gentleman of some literary attainments, and connected with the Jewish Chronicle, was admitted a joining member. Notice of motion was given by the I.P.M., that ten guineas should be voted from the funds of the Lodge to present a Past Master's jewel to Bro. Ross, on his approaching retirement from the chair. The brethren then adjourned to refreshment. The usual toasts followed, in proposing which the W.M. truly distinguished himself. His speeches were short, that is in itself an increased advantage, but pithy and very well expressed. Bro. Constable, in a few happily chosen terms, proposed the health of the W.M., which was received with the utmost enthusiasm, for Bro. Ross is extremely popular with the brethren. The time is always pleasantly passed in this Lodge, especially when good singing forms part of the diversion. Bros. Constable, Bailey, Ross, Benjamin, and others, exerted themselves to please, and the applause, which followed their excellent singing, proved they were appreciated. Bro. Bilby presided at the harmonium in the Lodge room. The visitors were Bros. James Cox S.D. 765, C. McLean P.M. 1087, J. Smith 1257, Henry Roberts 22, H. Massey P.M. 619, J. J. Cohen S.W. 1340, Benjamin 180.

The brethren afterwards sat down to a banquet provided by Bro. Brookes, and presided over by the W.M., Bro. Ecroyd. After the usual loyal and Masonic toasts had been duly honoured, Bro. P.M. Seebohm, F.Z.S., proposed the health of the W.M., and Bro. P.M. Longden that of the visiting brethren, which was responded to by Bro. Captain Traill.

Probity and Freedom Lodge, No. 367.—The installation meeting of this Lodge was held on Thursday, the 16th instant, at the Bull's Head Hotel, Smallbridge, Rochdale, and was well attended. The Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of last meeting unanimously confirmed. A ballot took place for Mr. James Leach, and, proving favourable, he was initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry. Bro. Wm. Schofield W.M. elect was then installed into the chair of K.S. according to ancient custom, and appointed the following officers:—Bros. William J. Kinder S.W., Wm. Berwicke J.W., A. T. Shore S.D., J. Schofield J.D., C. M. Jones P.M. Treasurer, Swift Secretary, Robert Wren P.M. D.C., Henry Ashworth I.G., W. Davis Tyler. The ceremony of installation was performed by Bro. T. Baker Ashworth P.M., in a most impressive and eloquent manner. Four candidates were proposed for initiation at the next meeting, and the Lodge was then closed. An excellent banquet was served by Bro. McOwen. The usual toasts were proposed by the W.M. Responding to the toast of the "Provincial Grand Officers," Bro. Jones P.M. and Bro. Roberts P.M.—both P.P.G. officers—gave the brethren some interesting information respecting the proposed East Lancashire Systematic Masonic Educational and Benevolent Institution.

Clyde Lodge, No. 408.—This Lodge held its regular meeting on Friday, 17th December, at 170 Buchanan-street, Bro. Harper R.W.M. assisted by Bros. Downie I.P.M., J. McInnis D.M., Wm. Bisland S.W., W. No. 4, Wheeler No. 73, Patterson Treasurer No. 102, Jack R.W.M. No. 128. Bro. Prout asked the Lodge to kindly initiate two gentlemen for him, and the request being granted, Bro. Harper the R.W.M. performed the ceremony in a very careful manner. The Lodge was then opened in the 2nd degree, when Bro. Wheeler, at the request of the R.W.M., passed two Brothers for St. Mark's Lodge, and one for Clyde Lodge, to that degree. Bro. Pattison, Treasurer of St. Mark's, returned thanks on behalf of his Lodge, for their courtesy to them, and also to Bro. Wheeler for performing the ceremony. The Lodge was then opened in the 3rd degree, and Bro. Wheeler raised a Bro. to the sublime degree, the R.W.M. proposing a vote of thanks to him for his services.

Salisbury Lodge of Instruction, No. 435.—The usual weekly meeting was held on Thursday, the 16th inst., at the Union Tavern, Air-street, Regent-street, W. Present—Bros. Honeyman W.M., Gillard S.W., Lee J.W., Mander Preceptor, T. Call Secretary, Tolmie, Martin and L. Reibold. The Lodge was opened, and the minutes of the last meeting read and confirmed. The Lodge was opened in the 2nd and 3rd degrees, and the ceremony of raising ably worked by the W.M. Resumed to the 1st degree, and the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 5th and 6th sections worked by the brethren. Bro. L. Reibold, of Lodge 180, was unanimously elected a joining member, and Bro. Gillard to be the W.M. for the ensuing week. The Secretary announced that, in accordance with the rules, the ceremony of installation would be worked, by Bro. W. C. Parsons, W.M. Lodge 180, on Thursday, 30th inst., at 7.30 p.m. The Lodge was then closed in perfect harmony.

St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 465.—The installation meeting of this Lodge was held in their own hall, Garngad-road, Glasgow, on 16th of December. The Lodge was opened by Bro. David Reid R.W.M. The auditor's report was presented, from which it appears that the Lodge is in a prosperous state, rapidly clearing off the cost of their hall. A Board of Installed Masters having been duly formed, Bro. D. Gilchrist, R.W.M. elect, was presented by Bro. Wheeler to Bro. Reid, for the benefit of installation. Bro. J. Morgan, R.W.M., Star 219, afterwards proclaimed him in the Lodge, and also installed the rest of the officers, in a very masterly style. The Lodge was then called to refreshment. Bro. J. Booth R.W.M. of Thistle Lodge 87, replied on behalf of the P.G.L. of Glasgow. Bro. Reid, in proposing the new Master said, though his friends had so strongly urged him to stand again, yet as his friend Bro. Gilchrist had got two more votes than himself, he would loyally do all he could to help him in the chair to further the interests of the Mother Lodge. (Cheers.) He trusted that the office bearers who had so well assisted him would do the same for his successor. Bro. Gilchrist suitably acknowledged the toast, and proposed that of the P.M.'s. Bro. THE REV. SIR E. R. JODRELL, BART., TO MESSRS. FELTOE & SONS, ALBEMARLE STREET, W.

WHEN at Sall I received an Analytical Report of your "SPECIALITE" SHERRY, and you must forgive me for saying that at first I regarded the whole matter as a most egregious piece of humbug. Having, however, tested the Wine in question, and found it most agreeable to the palate, I determined, on my own responsibility, to have it analysed for myself, having fully also determined previously to express any hesitancy, pro bono publico, or to give you the benefit of the analysis, should it turn out in your favour. I have the pleasure to forward you Prof. Redwood's (of the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain) Analysis, which says more than I can express. I am very particular as to the wine I drink and as I have hitherto been buying every-day Sherry at 6 s per gallon, I am rejoiced to find now that I can purchase Wine of equal strength and superior flavour at half that price. This should be known to the general public, and you can make any use you deem proper of this letter, and also of Professor Redwood's most elaborate Analysis.

11 Portland Place, London. Yours faithfully, (Signed) EDWARD REPPS JODRELL.
